ANCIENT AND HISTORICAL FAMILY OF THAT NAME,

In presenting the Third Volume of this Work, nothing remains for the Author beyond again reiterating his acknowledgments of the kind and liberal assistance which he continues to receive from his literary contemporaries, as well as the courtesy universally accorded him by those with whom he finds it necessary to communicate. The Work upon which he is engaged would have been undertaken in vain, by industry no matter how persevering, or exertion however enterprising, were it not for such important aid; but in this free and flourishing empire, every thing deemed of national usefulness is secure of national protection.
ALTERATIONS AND ADDITIONS.

DENNE OF KENT AND SUSSEX.

P. 20. Although several writers state William Denne, the first of Denne Hill, to be descended from Ralph de Denne, the father of Ela, who married Sir Jordan Sackville, yet the Dorset Roll calls Ela co-heiress with her sister or niece Sybella, and she is in Collins and elsewhere mentioned as co-heiress of her brother Robert. The Dorset Roll also assigns a different coat of arms to Ralph than that borne by the Dennys of Denne Hill.

P. 99, col. I, l. 10, for “Justice Slender,” read “Justice Shallow.”

P. 116. The subjoined is a more correct engraving of the Whieldon arms than that inserted at page 116:

FERRERS OF BADDESLEY CLINTON.

P. 129, col. 1, l. 14 from bottom, for “George, Viscount Tamworth,” read “George, Earl of Leicester.”

M'KERRELL OF HILLHOUSE.

Corbet of Elsham.

P. 190, col. 2, l. 6 from bottom, for “the second son of Robert (by his wife Dorothy), Thomas Corbet acquired the estate of Nash,” read “the second son of Robert, Thomas Corbet, acquired by his wife, Dorothy, the estate of Nash.”

Seymour of Castletown.

P. 202. It is there stated that Sir Henry Seymour married Barbara, daughter of Thomas Morgan, esq. of Tredegar, a fact which admits of doubt, if not of refutation. Collins and Edmonson make Sir Henry to marry Barbara Morgan, and so does an inscription to the memory of Sir John Seymour in Great Bedwin Church, which in enumerating the issue of “the worthie knight,” says that his second surviving son, “Sir Henry Seymour, married Barbara, daughter of Thomas Morgan, Esquier.” Other authorities, however, of equal credit, call the wife of Sir Henry, “Barbara, daughter of Morgan Wolfe,” esq.” In a manuscript among the Harleian collections, No. 1529, occurs the following entry: “Henricus Seinor, Miles = Barbara, f. Morganii Wolfe.” This assertion is repeated by Sir Richard Hoare, in his History of South Wilts, thus: “Sir Henry Seymour, knighted 1546 = Barbara, dau. to Morgan Wolfe.” And in the Herald’s College, the following descent of Sir Henry’s wife is given: “Sir Henry Seymour, of Marwell, com. Southampton, knight, second son of Sir John Seymour, of Wolfhall, by Margety Wentworth, married Barbara, daughter of Morgan Wolfe, by Gwennian, daughter and heir of John de Barri. Morgan Wolfe was the son of Howell Wolfe, the son of John Wolfe, esq. the son of Sir William Wolfe, knt. by the daughter and co-heir of Sir Majo Le Sore, of St. Fagans, by the daughter and heir of Huntley.” Besides, in analysing the coat armour of Sir Henry which is set up on the monument of his father in Great Bedwyn Church, we find it to be as follows: Gules, two wings conjoined and inverted or, with a crescent of the last for the second son of Sky mour, impaling quarterly:

1. Arg. a fess between three martlets gu. on a chief sa. three wolves' heads erased arg. for Wolfe of Gwernoggotheyn.

2. Per pale sa. and az. three fleurs-de-lys or, for Wolfe-Newton.

3. Or, three wolves passant az. for Nanfan.

4. Arg. on a chev. gu. between three stags' heads caboshed sa. three bugle horns arg. stringed or, for Le Sore, of St. Fagans, Glamorganshire.

Thus the arms and the inscription on the same monument disagree. It should be observed that the said monument was erected by Edward, Earl of Hertford, fifty-four years after the death of Sir John, and twelve after that of Sir Henry, on the occasion of Sir John's body being removed to Bedwyn from the ruined church of Easton Priory.

Morrice of Betshanger.—The following is a more correct account of the early ancestry of this family than that given at pages 232 and 233:

Aethelstan or Elystan Glodrydd, Prince of Fferlech, m. Gwladys, daughter of Rhun ap Ednowain, Prince of Tegegni.

Cadwgan ap Elystan, m. Margaret, daughter of Brochwel ap Aeddan, of Powys.

Bray of Shere.

P. 244, col. 2, l. 46, for "Mary, m. to — Bluc, esq." read "Mary, m. to Edward Blewitt, esq. of Salford, in Oxfordshire." The issue of this Mary Bray, who married Edward Blewitt, was,

1. Edmund - Reginald Blewitt, whose descendant is residing at Lantarann.

1. Mary Blewitt, m. to Joseph Newton, esq.

2. Catherine Blewitt, m. to William Durham, esq. and was mother of Catherine Durham, who wedded Colonel Kingsmill Evans (see vol. ii. p. 244).

Rees of Killymaenllwyd.—The following is a more correct account of the descent of this family than that at page 265.

Urien-Rheged, Prince of Rheged in Wales, by birth a Cambro-Briton, was fifth in descent from Coel Codevog, King of the Britons. He built the castle of Carrey Cermin, in Carmarthenshire, although the erection of that edifice is ascribed by some to no earlier a date than the time of Henry I. The style of the architecture and the authority of the Golden Grove MSS. seem, however, to establish its ancient British construction. Urien, who bore for arms arg. a chev. sa. between three ravens ppr. surmounted by a crown, m. the daughter of Gwrolis, Duke of Cornwall, and was direct ancestor of

Sir Eliidir Ddu, knight of the Sepulchre, temp. Richard I, who m. the daughter of Sysyllt, lord of Cantreselyf, and had a son, Philip ap Sir Eliidir Ddu, who m. Gryffith ap Nicholas, of Newton, who had by his wife, the daughter of Meredith Donne,* of Iscoed, two sons, Thomas, father of the famed Sir Rhys ap Thomas, K.B., lineal ancestor of the present Lord Dynevor, and Owen ap Gryffith (whom some state to have been the eldest son of Gryffith, Golden Grove MSS.) He m. Alice, daughter of Henry Malyyphant, esq. of Upton, in Pembrokehire, and had, with other issue, a son and successor.

Morriss ap Owen, esq. of Llechdwnny, who m. Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Lewis, esq. of St. Pierre, and had issue, John Bowen, of Bryn y Beirdd, m. Margaret, daughter of Howell David ap Einion ap David Vrâs. Thomas, from whom descended the Upton family.

The third son,

Rees Bowen, of Llechdwnny, in Kidwelly Land, m. Jenet, daughter of Henry ap Owen ap Cadwgan of that place, and had (with two daughters, the elder, Jenet, m. to Rees ap Owen, and the younger to John Llwyd Aubrey), a son, Morriss Bowen, esq. of Llechdwnny, who m. Catherine, daughter of Thomas ap Rhydderch Gwynne, esq. of Glanbran, and had issue, Rhys, his heir.

Charles.

* This Meredith Donne, or Dwn, was paternally descended from Meiric, king of Dyved, who was one of the four kings that bore the sword before King Arthur at his coronation at Caerleon upon Usk. His descendant, Gryffith, from some jealousy, so frequent among the Welsh chieftains, and which facilitated the subjugation of the country, took part with Morris de Londres, in his attack on Kidwelly, and was commander of the army in the battle fought near that town against Gwenllian, wife of Griffith ab Rhys, Prince of South Wales, wherein herself and two sons were slain. The place where the battle was fought is called Maes Gwenllian, or Gwenllian’s Plain, to this day. Philip, the grandson of Griffith, however, seems to have taken a different course; for he fought a battle against the Angle-Normans at a place called Cragg-Cyn, near Kidwelly, in which he defeated them, and burnt that town. From these Donnes was descended Donne of Tygwynne, whose daughter Robert, brother to Hector Rees, married.

Lucy, m. to David Read, esq.

Elizabeth, m. to Henry Morgan, esq.

The elder son,

Rhys Bowen, esq. of Llechdwnny, m. Catherine, daughter of John Morgan, of Kidwelly, and had issue, Morriss, of Llechdwnny, high sheriff of Carmarthenshire in 1613. He m. Maud, daughter of Sir John Wogan, of Boulston, and had several children, one of whom, Mary, m. John Brigstock, esq. to whom Morriss, her father, passed the estate for a sum of money. Attached to the ancient property is a chapel on the south side of Kidwelly church, forming a wing to it. On the opposite side is a similar chapel, which belonged to the Mansels of Iscoed.

John, of whom presently.

Elizabeth, m. to David Lloyd, esq. of Llanstephan.

Anne.

Dorothy, m. to Thomas Philipps, esq.

The younger son,

John Bowen, esq. of Carmarthen, living in the early part of the 17th century, m. Eva, daughter of David Havard, of the same place, and was father of William Bowen, esq. whose son,

Rhys William ap Owen, esq. of Kilvertry, was father of John Rees ap William, esq. who was s. by his son,

Hector Rees, esq. b. in 1683, of Killymaenllwyd, from whom the descent down to the present proprietor is correctly given at page 266.

Family of Hughes.

Now represented by that of Rees.

Gwynfard Dyved, who lived about the year 1088, temp. Edward the Confessor, was direct ancestor of Daniel Hughes, but the intervening line is too extended to be inserted here. We must not, however, omit, that it is mentioned in the Golden Grove MSS, that one of Hughes’s ancestors, * Howell Gwr was so surnamed for his valour, having overthrown the French king’s champion (probably at Chalons, where Edward I held the field at a tournament against all comers), and obtained for his arms gu. a lion rampant, or, in a true love knot arg. inter four delisises, their stunks bending towards the centre of the escocheon of the second.* Daniel married, and had a son, Edward Hughes, esq. of Penymaes,* in Carmarthenshire, who m. Mary, daughter of

* On the Desmesne of Penymaes are the remains of a chapel, attached to the family house in Catholic times, and to which an avenue of stately fir trees led from the mansion.

   P. 523. The following is the early descent of the Trappes family.

Linage.

The family of De Trappes, or De Trappé as it is sometimes found written, possessed in the beginning of the 13th century a castle called Delle-Weige, on the borders of Germany, near the Meuse, with a manor and jurisdiction appertaining to the said castle, which is proved by a verdict on the rolls of the said court, anno Domini, 1332.

Severus De Trappé, of Delle Weige, became a Carmelite, and gave to his order at his profession a field called to this day "Pié des Carmes," part of the manor of Delle Weige, this Severus died anno 1314.

William De Trappes, knt. called Delle Weige, born arms, field argent, three caltrops sable (2 and 1), surmounted with a crown, married Gertrude D'Ordingarne, of a noble family, of the county of Cologne, had issue, William de Trappés, Stephen de Trappés, and Severus de Trappés. Stephen de Trappés became a captain in the army of Edward III. by whom he was, after his wars in France, invited to accompany him to England, and from whom he received a grant of lands in or near Theydonois, in the county of Essex, from whence has descended the family of Trappes.

The original branch of this family was still existent in the county of Liège, in the beginning of the 18th century, and was then allied to the family of Luxembourg.

CRAWFURDS OF SCOTLAND.

In support of the curious hypothesis repecting the origin of the Crawfurds, and their descent from the old EARLS OF RICH-MOND, given in vol. ii. p. xiv, we have to add the following remarks; to shew, first, that THEOBALD, the reputed ancestor of the Douglases, and BALDWIN DE BIGGAR, who married the widow of the founder of the Crawford family in Scotland, were settlers in Yorkshire under the EARLS OF RICH-MOND, previous to their removal to Scotland, to which country they emigrated by following the fortunes of Reginald, youngest son of their patron Alan, fourth Earl of Richmond, and acquired lands contiguous to his in Strath Clyde and its vicinity; secondly, to adduce the case of the Vaux arms, as illustrative of the fess being a mark of cadence from the bend: and thirdly, to confirm the preceding by the recorded relationship of John le Scott (who was nearly allied to the Earl of Richmond) with Gaillfruds de Crawford in a charter quoted by George Crawford.

On reference to Clarkson's History of Richmond, compiled chiefly from Gale's Register Honorum Richmondiæ, it appears that a charter of Alan, fourth Earl of Richmond, is witnessed in 1145, among others, by THEOBALD and by BALDWIN, and another similar charter in the subsequent year by Baldwin de Multon (Malton), in Richmond-shire, the patrimony of the Earls of Richmond. Baldwin would thus appear to have been connected with the Earls of Richmond, as holding lands under them, prior to the appearance of the name in connexion with Scottish record; and, although the occurrence of even one of those uncommon names, THEOBALD or BALDWIN, on record in England, at a period so immediately preceding its first appearance in Scotland, would lead to infer the probable identity of the individual bearing the appellation, that identity may surely be assumed as resting upon sufcient grounds when two individuals of such remarkable cognomina (from the same country) can thus be traced in mutual transactions in both kingdoms. And if the con-exion thus apparent between Baldwin and the Earl of Richmond can be shown to have extended itself more intimately on the part of Baldwin with the family of Crawford, which, in ignorance of the present adduced facts, we have already traced on entirely distinct grounds to those earls as its source, the fact of the connexion here shown between Baldwin and the Earl of Richmond, prior to Baldwin's settling in Scotland, is, with deference, submitted as a singular corroboration, as will afterwards appear, of the correctness of our hypothesis, and interesting in point of antiquarian research. But heraldry is the strong test that connects Baldwin with both countries, through the armorial bearings of his patron in the south, and of his son-in-law (his patron's kinsman) in the north.

Chalmers, in his Caledonia, under Lanarkshire, quotes a charter or grant of lands to THEOBALD FLEMATICUS (ancestor of the Douglasses), which is witnessed by BALDWIN de Biggar (this is Baldwin and Theobald's first appearance, as traced by Chalmers, in Scotland), and by his son-in-law, JOHN DE CRAWFURD, inter 1147 and 1160. He also states that this John, who is the first he has met with bearing the name of Crawfurd, is in various charters styled PRIEIPINI BALDECHI. It is thus manifest that the widow of the remote ancestor and founder of the family of Crawford in Scotland was married to Baldwin, whose connexion, as already exhibited with the Earl of Richmond, affords another singular and almost conclusive evidence as to the origin of the first settler and founder of the family of Crawford.

In our former statement we pointed out the close similarity of the arms borne by the Earls of Richmond and the Crawfurs, and there observed that the ermine whether carried in bend or fess is the same bearing, the difference being merely a brotherly distinction. We might have added as an instance in point, the existence of a similar difference in the families of Vaux of Tryermain and of Catterlen, as mentioned by Sir Walter Scott (see Notes to Triermain), and as displayed on Lord Brougham's quarterings of the arms of that family, where the fess is substituted for the bend by Catterlen, as representing a younger brother. A celebrated northern peerage writer, Crawford, speaking of two separate branches of a family carrying for distinction, one the bend and the other the chevron, gives the preference in precedence to the former; remarking, "that the chev. in heraldry generally denotes a junior branch," meaning of course to the bend, of which he had been speaking; and as is seen in above instances of the fess.

GALFRIDUS DE CRAWFURD is termed KINSMAN by John Le Scott, nephew to the king, in a charter quoted by George Crawford, along with his (John Le Scott's) two natural brothers, where they are all styled fratres; which George Crawford, in ignorance of any other probable connexion, and under the impression that Galfridus must have married one of their sisters, translates brothers, no doubt the literal translation, which, but for the recent discoveries, might never have been called in question. It is, however, submitted that such interpretation would have invalidated the deed, and that, had it been intended to describe them as his brothers, the two latter would have been styled fratres carnalis (a designation which in those days was not deemed approbrious), and the former affini. Now frater, according to Ainsworth, means, besides brother, cousin-german and kinsman, in which latter sense it is frequently used by the classics, and in the Latin translations of the sacred writings; and those deeds so frequently penned by churchmen will at once explain the sense intended, and the only interpretation which the term "fratres," as here used, will bear, namely kinsmen, which term would exactly designate their various connexion with him.

The absence of the double pressure in the armorial bearings of his descendants, of itself shows the erroneous interpretation which George Crawford gave to the connexion between the ancestor of the Crawfurs and John Le Scott; for had they been thus descended, their ensipus would, as it invariably occurs in cases of descent from the royal family of Scotland, have been so augmented.

Chalmers mentions a RADOLPHUS, styled ANGLICUS, as witness to a charter of King DAVID, in 1138, to the monks of Selkirk, at the period of the removal of their monastery to Kelso. Nisbet, Ragman's Roll, vol. ii. p. 11, makes mention of RADOLPHUS DE CRAWFURDE, and remarks, "This is the same person with REGINALD DE CRAWFURD, Viscomes de Air." If Radolphus and Reginald be, as Nisbet considers them, synonymous, here then we have, in all probability, the identical son of the Earl of Richmond, whose establishment cannot be found in England, but which all the above demonstrate to have taken place in Scotland.

In conclusion, we will draw the parallel of the present case with Chalmers's deduction of the House of Stewart, and shew that the identity of the founder of the Crawfurs in Scotland rests upon much better proof than the limited grounds on which Chalmers built a theory held as incontrovertible with respect to the origin of that royal line.

The proof of the origin of the Stewart family, as traced by Chalmers from the family of Fitzalan, rests upon the record of Walter, founder of the Abbey of Paisley, towards the end of the twelfth century, being styled in the charter of foundation filius Alanii, coupled with the circumstance of his having peopled it by monks from a religious institution at Wenlock in Shropshire, where Alan, ancestor of the great family of Fitzalan, afterwards Earl of Arundale, then resided. This (though the proof of arms be wanting) was deemed complete when the Earl of Arundel (who a century or two afterwards accompanied King Edward to Scotland) sold for a thousand marks to his master his (so called) hereditary right to the stewardship of Scotland, though, as Chalmers shows, he could have had no hereditary right thereto.

In the present case there exists the proof of arms, and the most unquestionable testimony of their antiquity. There is also, through Baldwin, an analogous connexion with the presumed root, similar to what was indicated by the source from whence Walter peopled his monastery; rendering the points of comparison parallel, if not absolutely in favour of the present case.

Considering the impossibility, in either instance, of further proof by charter, and considering the remote antiquity of the point of connexion between those settlers and their more southern ancestors, much it must be allowed has in both cases been established; sufficient it is presumed, when held conclusive in the one case, to confirm the other.

ELECTED 19 FEBRUARY, 1835.

ABERCROMBY, The Right Honourable JAMES, Speaker of the House of Commons, b. 7th November, 1776, m. 14th June, 1802, Mary-Anne, daughter of the late Egerton Leigh, esq. of West Hall, in High Leigh, and has one son, RALPH, Secretary of Legation at Berlin, b. 6th April, 1803.

Mr. Abercromby, who was formerly Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer in Scotland, and subsequently Master of the Mint, represents the city of Edinburgh in Parliament, and was elected Speaker of the House of Commons in 1835.

Lineage.

THOMAS ABERCROMBY, of Abercromby, whose line continued till the reign of CHARLES I. anno 1649, when another Thomas Abercromby sold the barony to Sir James Sandilands, who, upon his elevation to the peerage, in 1647, assumed the title of Baron Abercromby. A cadet of the Abercrombys of that Ilk,

HUMPHREY DE ABERCROMBY, obtained, about the year 1315, a charter, from Robert Bruce, of the lands of Harthill and Ardun. He was father of

ALEXANDER DE ABERCROMBY, living in the time of DAVID II. who acquired, from Patrick Hay, a half portion of the lands of Ardhuieny. To him succeeded another

ALEXANDER DE ABERCROMBY, designed of Pitmitthen, father of

ALEXANDER DE ABERCROMBY, of Pitmitthen, living in 1454. The next in succession, JAMES ABERCROMBY, of Pitmitthen, Ley, and Birkenbog, m. Margaret, daughter of

Sir James Ogilvie, of Findlater, and is supposed to have fallen at Flodden. His son and heir, George Abercromby, of Pitmitchen, left, by Christian, his wife, daughter of Barclay, of Gartlay, a son,

I. James, second baronet, of Birkenbog, great-grandfather of the present Sir Robert Abercromby, bart. of Birkenbog.

II. Alexander, of whose line we have to treat.

Sir Alexander was so zealous a partisan against King Charles I., that he is styled by an historian of the period "a main covenanter." In May, 1643, he joined Major Urry, and was at the battle of Auldearn; but Montrose retaliated, by quartering himself and some of his troops at Birkenbog. Sir Alexander was s. by his elder son, Sir James Abercromby, from whom the present baronet of Birkenbog; while the second son, Alexander Abercromby, settled at Tulibody, in the county of Clackmannan, having inherited that estate from his cousin, George Abercromby, of Skeith. Alexander was s. by his son, John Granville, of Calwich Abbey, the surname and arms of Granville. Mr. Granville is a magistrate and deputy lieutenant for the counties of Warwick and Stafford.

Lineage.

"It is a melancholy reflection," says Dr. Borlase, "to look back on so many great families who have formerly adorned the county of Cornwall, and in the male line are now no more; the Granvilles, the Carminows, the Champernownes, the Bodrugans, Mohuns, Kilegrews, Bevis, Trevanions, which had great sway and possessions in these parts. The most lasting families have only their seasons, more or less, of a certain constitutional strength. They have their spring, and summer sunshine glare, their wane, decline and death." The Granvilles claim descent from Rollo, the celebrated northern chief, who being driven from Norway by the king of Denmark, made a descent upon England, but was repulsed by Alfred. He was subsequently however more fortunate in a similar attempt upon Normandy. Invading that country in 870, he achieved its complete conquest in 912, and was invested with the ducal dignity. He married Gilberta, daughter of Charles the Simple, King of France, and had two sons. From the elder, William, descended the Conqueror, and from Robert, the younger, created earl of Cornwall, sprang two brothers, Robert Fitzhamon, who reduced Glamorganshire, (he left an only daughter, Mabel, the wife of Robert de Courcil, natural son to Henry I.) and Richard, surgiven of de Granville from one of his lordships, who came into England with Duke William, and fought at Hastings. This Richard, who, as heir male, inherited the Norman honours and estates, was earl of Cornwall and baron of Thorigny and Granville. He likewise possessed the castle of Neath, in Glamorganshire. He m. Constance, only daughter of Walter Giffard, earl of Buckinghamshire and Longueville, and at his decease, in journeying to the Holy Land, left a son and successor.

Richard Granville, who held, temp. Henry II. the lordship of Bideford by half a knight’s fee of the honour of Gloucester. He was direct and lineal ancestor of Sir Theobald Granville, who m. Joice, daughter of Sir Thomas Beaumont, knt. and had a son and successor, Theobald Granville, who wedded Margaret, daughter of Hugh Courtenay, earl of Devon, and had two sons, John and William. The elder,

Sir John Granville, received the honour of knighthood from Richard II. He espoused Margaret, daughter and heiress of Sir John Buryhurst, knt. but had no issue. Sir John, who resided at Stow, in Cornwall, and represented the county of Devon in parliament, died temp. Henry IV. and was s. by his brother, GRANVILLE, OF CALWICH ABBEY.

William Granville, of Stow, who died about the year 1450, leaving by Philippa, his second wife, daughter of William, Lord Bonville, a son and heir,

Sir Thomas Granville, knt. of Stow, high sheriff of Cornwall 21st Edward IV. He m. Elizabeth, sister of Sir Theobald Gorges, and was s. at his decease, in 1483, by his son,

Sir Thomas Granville, of Stow, who took part in an insurrection against Richard III. but was pardoned. In the 15th of the following reign, we find him an esquire of the body to the same monarch, and the next year he was made a knight of the Bath at the creation of Arthur, Prince of Wales.

He died about 6th Henry VIII. and was interred in the east end of the south aisle of Bideford church, where his effigy in armour lies extended under an arch, with the figure of a dog by his side. By Isabel, his first wife, daughter of Sir Oates Gilbert, of Compton, in Devon, he had two sons and six daughters, viz.

1. Roger, his heir.
2. Richard, sheriff of Cornwall 1st and 10th Henry VIII.
3. Jane, m. first, to John Arundel, of Ternice; and, secondly, to Sir John Charnmond.
4. Philippa, m. to Francis Harris, of Hayne.
5. Anne, m. to John Roscarrock.
6. Catherine, m. to Sir John Arundel, of Lanherne.
7. Mary, m. first, to Richard Bluet; and, secondly, to Thomas St. Aubyn.
8. Honor, m. first, to John Basset; and, secondly, to Arthur Plantagenet.

Sir Thomas wedded, secondly, Jane, widow of — Hill, and had by her one son, John, and a daughter, Jane, m. first, to — Batton; and, secondly, to — Raleigh. His eldest son,

Roger Granville, esq. of Stow, called the great housekeeper for his princely hospitality, was sheriff of Cornwall in the reign of Henry VIII. He m. Margaret, daughter and co-heiress of Richard Whitley, of Elford, and had, with seven daughters, three sons, Richard, his heir; John; and Digory, of Penheale. He died in 1524, and was s. by the eldest,

Sir Richard Granville, knt. of Stow, sheriff of Devon 24th Henry VIII. and subsequently marshal of Calais. To this Sir Richard, who was of an active and daring spirit, and who served in the wars under the earl of Hertford, the king granted, in the 33rd year of his reign, the manor of Buckland and rectory of Moor Winston, formerly belonging to the monastery of Bridgewater. He m. Matilda, second daughter and co-heiress of John Bevil, esq. of Gwarrock, and had, with three daughters, two sons, viz.

John, who died in his father's lifetime without issue.

Roger (Sir), an esquire of the body to Henry VIII. He m. Thomasine, daughter of Thomas Cole, esq. of Slade, in Devon, and had three sons, Charles (Sir), who d. s. p.

Richard (Sir), successor to his grandfather.

Sir Richard d. in 1552, and was s. by his grandson,

Sir Richard Granville, knt. of Stow, a gallant naval commander, who, at the age of sixteen, by permission of Queen Elizabeth, served in the imperial army in Hungary, and attained high reputation for his achievements against the infidels. Returning soon after to his native country, he joined the troops employed for the reduction of Ireland, and, there acquiring the confidence of the Lord Deputy Sydney, was appointed sheriff of the city of Cork. In 1571, he represented the county of Cornwall in Parliament, was subsequently high sheriff of that shire, and complimented with the honour of knighthood, but the bias of his mind, bent chiefly on the plans of foreign discovery, proposed by his relative Sir Walter Raleigh, preferred the enterprise of a naval, to the quiet of a senatorial life. He accordingly, with a squadron fitted out for the purpose, sailed for the coast of Florida in 1585, where he left a colony of one hundred men, and then returned home. Many and successful were his subsequent voyages, and in the memorable year of the Spanish invasion he was entrusted with the care of Cornwall, which prevented, for a while, his distinction in a proper sphere of action. In 1591, however, Sir Richard was dispatched as vice admiral under Lord Thomas Howard, with eight men of war, besides small vessels and tenders, to intercept a rich Spanish fleet from the West Indies. This convoy, protected by a very superior force, unexpectedly appearing, Admiral Howard, considering the great disproportion of the rival squadrons, immediately put to sea, and the rest of his ships, in some confusion, followed his example, except the Revenge, the ship commanded by Granville, who having ninety men sick out of two hundred and fifty, and many others on shore, could not weigh anchor for a considerable time, which prevented him from gaining the wind, and brought the hostile fleet on his weather bow. The Spanish admiral, with four other ships, began a close attack at three in the afternoon: the engagement lasted till break of day next morning, during which the enemy, notwithstanding their vast superiority of force, were driven off fifteen times. At length the greater part of the English crew... being either killed or wounded, and the ship reduced to a wreck, no hope of escape remained. Far, however, from thinking of a surrender, Sir Richard exorted his men rather to yield themselves to the mercy of heaven than to the Spaniards, and to blow the vessel up. But this design was frustrated by the master, who went on board the Spanish Admiral and made known their situation. As soon as the Revenge was in the power of the Spaniards, the admiral gave orders to remove Sir Richard, who was grievously wounded, to his own ship, but the gallant officer survived only three days. John Evelyn, relating this heroic action, exclaims, "Than this have we more! What can be greater!"

Admiral Granville m. Mary, daughter and co-heir of Sir John St. Leger,* of An- nery, in Devon, by Catherine, his wife, daughter of George, Lord Abergavenny, and had three sons and three daughters. The eldest son, Sir Bernard Granville, of Bideford, in Devon, and of Stow, in Cornwall, was sheriiff of the latter county in the 38th Elizabeth, served in Parliament for Bodmin in the following year, and subsequently received the honour of knighthood. He m. in 1603, Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Philip Bevil, esq. and niece and heiress of Sir William Bevil, by whom he had issue, 1. BEVIL (Sir), his heir.

ii. Richard (Sir), a cavalier commander of great celebrity. This gallant soldier, who learned the rudiments of war under Prince Maurice in Germany, attended King Charles in his expedition to Scotland, and was subsequently employed in Ireland to quell the rebellion there, having under his orders his near kinsman, the famous George Monk. On the commencement of the civil war, he proceeded to London in order to obtain some arrears due to him by the Parliament, and having effected this, he contrived, by amusing the Commons with the hope that he would accept the command of the horse under Sir William Waller, to join the king at Oxford with his whole regiment, and he thenceforward advanced the royal cause, in an especial degree, by his consummate skill and chivalrous bravery. From Oxford, Sir Richard marched on Saltash, which, with only seven hundred men, he stormed and captured, but some differences having unfortunately arisen between him and Clarendon, he was removed from his command. Retiring to Jersey, he equipped some privateers, and greatly harassed the Republicans by sea. He eventually fixed his residence in France, and dying at Ghent, was interred in the English church, where this simple inscription marks the sacred spot: "Sir Richard Granville, the king's general in the West." Sir Richard married Mary, daughter of Sir John Fitz, of Fitzford, by Gertrude Courtenay, his wife, and had one son, who was put to death by the Parliament, and one daughter, Elizabeth, m. to Col. William Lennard.

iii. John, of Lincoln's Inn.

iv. Roger, drowned in the king's service.

1. Gertrude, m. to Christopher Harris, esq. son and heir of Sir Christopher Harris.

Sir Bernard Granville was s. at his decease by his eldest son, the celebrated

Sir BEVIL GRANVILLE, kn. of Stow and Bideford, one of the boldest and most successful of the cavalier leaders. This eminent person was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, and made so rapid a progress in learning, that the degree of bachelor of arts was conferred on him in 1613, when he was but seventeen years of age. In the two last Parliaments of James I. he represented the county of Cornwall, and in all the Parliaments called by Charles I. sat either for that shire or for Launceston. In 1638, he raised, at his own expense, a troop of horse, with which he accompanied the king in his first expedition against the Scottish rebels, and on that occasion received the honour of knighthood. In 1642, on the first outbreaking of the civil wars, he joined the royal standard, and marching into Cornwall, rescued that whole county from the Parliament, attacked the partisans of the Commons, who had risen in great numbers in the West, and routed them at Bodmin, Launceston, and Stratton. His last and most brilliant action was at Lansdowne Hill, near Bath, where he fell, in the arms of victory, on the 5th July, 1643.* "On the king's part," says Clarendon, in detailing this engagement, "there were more officers and gentlemen of quality slain than common men, and more hurt than slain. That which would have clouded any victory, and made the loss of others less spoken of, was the death of Sir Bevil Granville: he was indeed an excellent person, whose activity, interest, and reputation, was the foundation of what had been done in Cornwall; and his temper and affection so public, that no accident which happened could make any impression on him, and his example kept others from taking anything ill, or at least seeming to do so. In a word, a brighter courage and a gentler disposition were never mixed together to make the most cheerful and innocent conversation.”

Sir Bevil married Grace, daughter of Sir George Smith, kn. of Exeter, sole heiress to her mother, the daughter and co-heiress of William Vvol, esq. of Trevorder, in Cornwall, and had issue,

1. Richard, b. in 1620, d. unm.

Sir Bevil’s fourth son,

Bernard Granville, esq. was master of the horse and gentleman of the bedchamber to Charles II. He wedded Anne, only daughter and heir of Cuthbert Morley, esq. of Haunby, in the county of York, and had issue,

1. Bevil (Sir), governor of Barbadoes, d. unm. in 1716.

II. George, of SLOW, in the county of Cornwall, who was elevated to the peerage in 1711, as Baron Lansdowne, of Biddeford. His lordship, a poet of considerable reputation, married the Lady Mary Villiers, daughter of Edward, earl of Jersey, and widow of Thomas Thynne, esq. of Old Windsor, in the county of Bucks. By her he had four daughters, his co-heirs, viz.

I. Mary, m. first, to Alexander Pendarves, esq. of Roscrow, in Cornwall, and, secondly, to the Very Rev. Patrick Delany, dean of Down, but d. without issue in 1788. This lady, so justly celebrated for her great literary acquisitions, was much esteemed by King George III. and Queen Charlotte, and resided constantly with their Majesties both at Kew and Windsor. Her most curious performance was the Hortus Siccus, (now in the possession of her niece, Mrs. Waddington), a work in ten volumes, folio, comprising the most admirable delineations in coloured paper of the different flowers.

Mrs. Delany was the intimate friend of Doctor Burney, the Duchess of Portland, Miss Seward, Swift, Horace Walpole, &c.

He wedded, in 1779, Harriott-Joan, second daughter of John Delabere, esq. of Cheltenham, and had one son, John, and a daughter, Harriet, who both d. unmarried. Mr. Granville died in 1826, and was succeeded by his nephew, Court D'Ewes, esq. who assumed the surname of Granville, and is the present Court Granville, esq. of Calwich Abbey.

Family of D'Ewes.

The D'Eweses of Wellesbourne, who became settled in the counties of Warwick, Gloucester, and Worcester, about the commencement of the seventeenth century, are said to be a branch of the family of D'Ewes, originally seated in Suffolk, and of which Sir Simonds D'Ewes was so distinguished a member.

William D'Ewes, of Coughton, living in 1627, married and had two sons, Richard, his heir, and William, of Long Marston, in Gloucestershire, who d. 21st November, 1717. The elder son,

GRAY, OF CARNTYNE,

Formerly of Dalmarnock.

GRAY, The Rev. JOHN HAMILTON, of Carntyne, in the county of Lanark, b. 29th December, 1800, m. at Alva House, 23rd June, 1829, Elizabeth-Caroline, eldest daughter of James Raymond Johnstone, esq. of Alva, in Clackmannanshire, (grandson of Sir James Johnstone, bart. of Westerhall, a family which, on the extinction of the male line of the Marquesses of Annandale, became chief of the ancient house of Johnstone,) by Mary his wife, sister of Sir Montague Cholmeley, bart. of Easton, in the county of Lincoln, an ancient branch of the great Cheshire family of Cholmondeley. The issue of this marriage is a dau. born at the baths of Baden-Baden, in Germany, on the 26th June, 1833, and christened there, according to the rites of the Anglican church, on the 14th September, in the same year, by the names of CAROLINE-MARIA-AGNES, to which has since been added the name of ROBINA.

Mr. Hamilton Gray is a magistrate, and, since August, 1824, a deputy lieutenant of the county of Lanark. He was educated at the universities of Göttingen and Oxford, and in the latter he was of Magdalen College, where, in 1823, he took his bachelor's, and, in 1826, his master of arts degree. In 1824, he was called to the Scottish bar; in 1829, he entered into holy orders; and, in 1833, was presented to the livings of Bolsover and Scarcliff, in the county of Derby. He succeeded his father 12th November, 1833.

Lineage.

This branch of the family of Gray has possessed estates in the county of Lanark for about three hundred years. Its ancestor, who held the lands of Tollcross towards the middle of the sixteenth century, had two sons, JOHN, his heir, and James, who was bred to the law, and is said to have distressed his brother with litigation, which necessitated a sale of the lands of Tollcross. The elder son, JOHN GRAY, of Tollcross, in Lanarkshire, lived about the close of the sixteenth century, and alienated the property of Tollcross. The name of his wife is unknown. He was father of

WILLIAM GRAY, proprietor of the lands of Carntyne, in the county of Lanark, antece-dently to the year 1595, who m. first, Margaret Craig, by whom he had a son, ARCHIBALD, his heir. He wedded, secondly, Marion, dau. of Ninian Hill, of Lambhill, in Lanarkshire, and had another son, JOHN, successor to his brother. The Hills were in possession of extensive estates more than two centuries ago, part of which were acquired by marriage with a daughter of the family of Hutchinson.* Several most respectable male descendants of the Hills, of Lambhill, still exist, though what remains of the property has passed, in the female line, to Miss Lilias Graham, the present proprie-trix. William Gray was s. by his eldest son,

ARCHIBALD GRAY, of Carntyne, who espoused Elizabeth Colquhoun, daughter of Colquhoun of Kenmure, a cadet of Colquhoun of Luss, chief of the name, but having no issue, he resigned, in 1628, the lands of Carntyne to his brother,

JOHN GRAY, who then became of Carntyne. Exactly half a century after, in 1678, he acquired part of the lands of Dalmarnock, another portion continuing in the possession of the family of Woddrop, and thenceforward, for more than a hundred years, Dalmarnock became the principal designation of his descendants. Mr. Gray began to work coal on Carnyne, which has supplied a portion of the fuel consumed in the city of Glasgow. He was a zealous covenanter, and his name is held in honour among the favourers of those principles, for having afforded the shelter of his roof to their ministers, and an occasional place of concealment to their prescribed members. He m. Janet, daughter of Anderson, of Dovehill, an ancient and opulent family in the neighbourhood of Glasgow, several successive generations of which filled the office of lord provost of the city, from 1654 until 1703. It appears now to be extinct in the direct male line, but among its descendents may be mentioned the lamented Sir John Moore. John Gray was succeeded, in 1687, by his son,

John Gray, of Dalmarnock and Carnyne, who wedded Anabella, daughter of Walter Gibson,* of Hillhead, in the county of Lanark, and had issue,

1. John, his heir.
2. Ninian, who left a son, John, for many years minister of the parish of Cannethan.
3. Andrew, who had issue,
   1. Margaret, m. to James Woddrop, a descendant of the Dalmarnock family.
   2. Anabella, m. to Peter Lowe, writer to the signet, in Edinburgh, grandson of Dr. Peter Lowe, physician in ordinary to Henry IV., King of France, and to Henry, Prince of Wales.
   3. Elizabeth, m. to Robert Finlay, merchant, in Glasgow.

John Gray died previously to the year 1715, and was s. by his son,

John Gray, of Dalmarnock and Carnyne. The mind of this gentleman being strongly tinctured with sentiments of loyalty to the exiled royal family, he openly avowed himself a partisan of the Chevalier de St. George, and prepared to join the insurgents in 1715:—the arms which he procured on that occasion are still preserved in the family. He was saved, however, from open rebellion and its probable consequence, forfeiture, by the prudence of his wife, who gave information against him, on account of which he was imprisoned until the restoration of peace. He m. Elizabeth, dau. of James Hamilton, of Newton, a scion of the family of Silverton Hill, by Elizabeth, his first wife, daughter of Gabriel Hamilton, of Westburn, cadet of Torrance, and had issue,

1. James, his heir.
2. John, s. to his father.
3. Gabriel, of Eastfield, who m. Miss Baird, of Muckcroft, and had a son, John Gray, esq. now of Eastfield.
4. Andrew, who m. Miss Cameron, daughter of a cousin of the Locheil family, and had John Gabriel, who d. s. p. Janet, and Elizabeth.

1. Elizabeth, m. John Spens, of Stonelaw, in the county of Lanark, descended from Spens, of Kames, in Bute, a scion of Spens, of Wormiston, in Fifeshire, and had two sons, Lieutenant-general John Spens, of Stonelaw, and Capt. George Spens, and two daughters.
2. Anabella, m. Henry Woddrop, of Westhorn, in Lanark, and had a daughter, m. to Capt. James Dennis- town, of Westhorn.
3. Rebecca, m. William Ross, son of Professor Ross, of the University of Glasgow, descended from the ennobled house of Ross, but had no issue.
4. Jane, m. Thomas Buchanan, of Ardoch, in the county of Dumbarton, and had issue, (see vol. ii. p. 337).

John Gray died 27th January, 1742, and was s. by his eldest son,

James Gray, of Dalmarnock and Carnyne, who m. first, Elizabeth, daughter of his cousin-german, Elizabeth Hamilton, co-heiress of Newton, by William Gray, brother to Gray of Welhouse, and secondly, Jane, daughter of John Corbett, of Tollcross, sister of Colonel James-Corbett-Porterfield, of Porterfield, and grand-niece to William, first Earl of Kilmarnock. Dying, without issue, in 1778, Mr. Gray was s. by his next brother,

John Gray, of Dalmarnock and Carnyne, born in 1715. This gentleman on his accession found the estates heavily encumbered, and had only possessed them four years when he was induced most unfortunately to expose them for sale, in 1784. At that period, the value of land being much reduced, they brought a most inadequate price, and thus the properties of Dalmarnock and Newlands, of yearly increasing value, were lost to the family. Whatever part of his once ample inheritance remained was owing to the judicious management of Mr. Gray's younger son, and ultimate successor, John Gray, who m. Isabella, dau. of John Chapman, esq. commissary of Glasgow, by Elizabeth his wife, dau. of Pollock, of

* The family of Gibson, which formerly enjoyed great wealth and influence, still exists in the male line. Walter, one of the younger sons of the family, and brother to Anabella Gray, was the most eminent merchant of his time in Scotland, and greatly contributed to improve the commerce of Glasgow, of which city he was lord provost in 1688. Another younger son was captain of the "Rising Sun," which he commanded in the Darien Expedition.

who became, in 1823, representative of the ancient family of Hamilton, of Newton, on the decease of its last heiress, Mrs. Montgomery. He m. in 1799, Mary-Anne, youngest daughter of Gabriel Hamilton, of Westburn, (representative of Hamilton of Torrance*) by Agnes his wife, daughter, and at length heiress, of George Dundas, esq. of Duddeingston, in West Lothian, dalen Lyndsay-Crawford, granddaughter of John, sixteenth Earl of Crawford, and first Earl of Lindsay, niece to James and William, first and second Dukes of Hamilton, and sister to John, Viscount Garnock.

Mr. Gray had, by Mary-Anne his wife, one son, John, his heir. Mrs. Gray died 6th January, 1800, her husband surviving until the 12th November, 1833, when he died suddenly, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. His whole life was spent in useful exertion, and in acts of disinterested benevolence. He was cool in his judgment, unwarried in his kindness, and viewed with unmoved serenity the events of a life which various causes had saddened. Though laboriously occupied in the attempt to turn to good account the wreck of his family estates, he never refused his time and his exertions to the often ungrateful task of aiding his relations and friends; and when full of years, and of respect, he was removed from this world, the unanimous voice of the poor pronounced upon him the eulogium,—"We have now lost our common good!" He was an active magistrate, and, for nearly forty years, a deputy lieutenant of the county of Lanark.
His only son and successor is the present

Family of Hamilton, of Newton.
Now represented by Gray, of Carnynte.

The family of Silverton Hill, (whence Hamilton of Newton), is a scion of the illustrious house of Hamilton.

Sir Walter de Hamilton, Lord of Cadzlow, in Lanark, in 1324, married Mary, daughter of Adam, Lord Gordon, and had two sons, David (Sir) and John (Sir), ancestors of the Hamiltons of Innerwick, and Earls of Haddingtons. The elder

Sir David de Hamilton, Lord of Cadzlow, m. a daughter of William, Earl of Ross, and had (with a younger son, Walter (Sir), ancestor of the Hamiltons of Cumberkeith and Grange) his successor,

* By Margaret Boyd his wife, daughter of James Boyd, of Trochrig, in the county of Ayr, descended from Adam Boyd, of Pinkhill, brother of Robert, third Lord Boyd. The most noted of the Trochrig family was JAMES Boyd, Archbishop of Glasgow, who died in 1381. "During the Earl of Marr's regency," says Keith in his Account of Scottish Bishops, "a new kind of epis-copacy having been set up, Mr. James Boyd, of Trochrig, a very worthy person, received the title of the see of Glasgow, and he exercised the office of particular pastor at the cathedral church, the burony of Glasgow being then the parish that pertained to that church. When the legality of the episcopal function came to be first called in question by the assembly, in the year 1578, he learnedly and solidly, both from scripture and antiquity, defended the lawfulness of his office; yet, the animosities which he then perceived to be in the hearts of a great many so far impaired his health, that he died in the month of June, 1581.

* The Hamiltons, of Torrance, descended from Thomas, second son of Thomas Hamilton, of Dargabear, by Helen his wife, daughter of Sir Henry Douglas, of Lochleven, ancestor to the Earl of Morton, which Thomas, of Dargabear, was third son of Sir John Hamilton, Lord of Cadhon, by Janet his wife, daughter of Sir James Douglas, of Dulkeith.
Sir David de Hamilton, Lord of Cadzow, who died before 1392, leaving by Janet his wife, daughter of Sir William Keith, of Galston, five sons, viz.

John (Sir), his heir.

David, whose the Hamiltons of Bouland.

William, ancestor of the Hamiltons of Brathgate.

Andrew, ancestor of the Hamiltons of Uldston.

John, ancestor of the Hamiltons of Bardowie.

The eldest son,

Sir John Hamilton, Lord of Cadzow, wedded Janet, daughter of Sir James Douglas, of Dalkeith, and had issue,

1. James (Sir), his heir.

2. David, progenitor of the Hamiltons of Dalsart.

3. Thomas, of Darngalier, from whom sprung the Hamiltons of Raplock, Barnes, Torrance, Westburn, Aitkenhead, the Earls of Clanbrassil, &c. &c.

The elder son,

Sir James Hamilton, Lord of Cadzow, wedded Janet, eldest daughter of Sir Alexander Livingston, of Callander, ancestor of the Earls of Linlithgow. Their eldest son, Sir James Hamilton, was created a peer, by the title of Lord Hamilton, and married, in 1474, Princess Mary, eldest daughter of James, second King of Scotland. Their second son,

Sir Alexander Hamilton, of Silverton Hill, became ancestor of the Hamiltons of Silverton Hill, Cubardy, Newton, and Westport. The Hamiltons of Newton were seated on a picturesque estate at the confluence of the Clyde and Calder, in Lanarkshire, which now belongs, in consequence of the will of the last heirsof the family, to Sir James Montgomery, of Stobo Castle. In 1694, the mansion house of Newton, together with the title deeds of the property and family papers, was destroyed by fire, which accident renders it difficult to trace the earlier generations of this branch of the house of Hamilton.

James Hamilton, of Newton, appears to have held his estate under his chief; for, immediately after the fire just alluded to, he obtained a charter of Novodamus of his lands from Anne, Duchess of Hamilton, the then head of the family. He m. first, Elizabeth, daughter of Gabriel Hamilton,* of Westburn, by Margaret his wife, daughter of Cunninghame, of Gilbertfield, and had by her a daughter, Elizabeth, who was educated at Westburn, by her maternal uncle. She m. John Gray, of Dalmarnock and Carntyne, and was grandmother of Robert Gray, eventual representative of Hamilton, of Newton.

James Hamilton espoused secondly, Margaret, daughter of Robert Montgomery, of Macbiehill, in the county of Peebles, (descended from Robert, second son of Sir John Montgomery, of Eglington and Ardrossan, created Lord Montgomery, in 1427,) by Jean his wife, daughter of Sir James Lockhart, of Lee, in the county of Lanark, and had two sons, viz. James and Thomas. The elder,

James Hamilton, of Newton, dying unmarried, the estates and representation of the family devolved on his brother,

Thomas Hamilton, of Newton, who m. the sister of Major Clelland, representative of the ancient family of Clelland of Clelland, in Lanark district, and by her, who died in 1733, had issue,

1. James, his heir.

2. John, successor to his nephew.

3. Dorothea, m. to Andrew Gray, of Wellhouse.

4. Elizabeth, m. William Gray, brother of Andrew Gray, of Wellhouse, and had issue, Elizabeth Gray, married to her mother's cousin-german, James Gray, of Dalmarnock and Carntyne, and d. s. p.

Janet Gray, m. to Col. Montgomery. Of this lady more hereafter, as heiress of Newton.

Thomas Hamilton was s. by his elder son,

James Hamilton, of Newton, who m. first, Anabella, third daughter of Sir Robert Pollock, bart. of Pollock, in the county of Renfrew, by Anabella his wife, daughter of Walter Stewart, of Pardovan, and had by her an only son,

James, his heir.

He wedded secondly, a daughter of Buchanan of Drummakill and Ross, in the county of Dumbarton, and had another son,

Thomas, who predeceased his elder brother.

Mr. Hamilton died in 1769, and was s. by his son,

James Hamilton, of Newton, at whose demise, unmarried, the estates and representation of the family devolved on his uncle.

John Hamilton, of Newton, who died unmarried, in 1775, and was s. by his sisters, Dorothea Hamilton, co-heiresses of Newton. The elder married Andrew Gray, of Wellhouse; the younger, William Gray, and had an only daughter to survive her, namely,

James-George Hamilton, an officer of dragoons, d. unmarried, v. m.

Elizabeth, d. unmarried, v. m.

Mrs. Montgomery survived her children many years, and died in 1823. By a deed of entail, she devised her estate of Newton to her deceased husband's cousin, Sir James Montgomery, bart. of Stobo Castle, in the county of Peebles. The representation, however, of the Hamiltons, of Newton, vested in Robert Gray, of Carnytne, in right of his grandmother, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of James Hamilton, of Newton.

Robert Gray, of Carnytne, was father of the present Rev. John Hamilton Gray, of Carnytne.

Arms—First and fourth, gu. a lion rampant between three cinquefoils, all within a bordure engrailed, arg. for Gray, of Dalmanock; second and third, gu. a crescent surmounted of a star, arg. between three cinquefoils, pierced within a bordure ermine, for Hamilton, of Newton.

Mr. Ettrick succeeded his father on the 22nd February, 1808.

Lineage.

The first of this family on record,

Anthony Ettricke,* was of Barford, or Berford, in the parish of Winborn Minster and county of Dorset. He was born about the year 1504, and was captain of horse at the siege of Boulogne, when that place surrendered in 1544 to Henry VIII. Although this gallant person is the earliest of his family in Dorsetshire, probably in England; and although of his ancestors or even the place of his birth no memorials remain, yet the station he filled in society and the place of his abode after his return from the French campaign prove that he was a gentleman of consideration. When we recollect the turbulent times which ushered in the sixteenth century, the contemporaneous reigns of the eighth Henry of England and the fifth James of Scotland, the throes of the nascent reformation in both countries, such an uncertainty regarding a man of rank's origin will not be deemed surprising, nor was it indeed an unusual course to adopt as a matter of precaution, when a man's bitterest foes were often to be found within his own household. The circumstance in the instance before us, however, adds a degree of plausibility to the tradition in the family descended from him, that he was a younger son of the Earl of Dunbarton, in Scotland, whose name was Douglas, and who enjoyed amongst his other dignities the title of Lord Ettrick, but that being implicated in some of the family feuds, and the exterminating dissensions of his times and country, he was under the necessity of expatriating himself with the greatest secrecy and expedition, unencumbered by aught save his good sword and armorial ensigns. Seeking a secure asylum in the land of his adoption, he selected the most retired and the most remote part of England; and further to remove all identity assumed the name of Ettrick, somewhat altered too in the mode of spelling. Be the narrative true or false, however, with him commences the family line, as recorded in the books of the Herald's College. He m. Lucy, daughter of — Chettle, of Blandford St. Mary's, in Dorsetshire, and dying about 1569, was s. by his son,

Anthony Ettricke, of Berford, who m. Maud, daughter of Thomas Squibb, of Shapwick, in Dorsetshire, and dying in 1605, left a son and heir,

* He is called William, by Surtees in his History of Durham, probably on the authority of Hutchins.
ETTRICK, OF HIGH BARNES.

William Ettricke, of Berford, b. in 1590. m. Anne, daughter of William Willis, of Pamphill, in the county of Dorset, and had (with two daughters, one m. to — Northover, of Somersetshire; the other to Sir William Cowthorp, of Ireland,) three sons, namely,

1. Anthony, of Holt Lodge, in the Forest, county of Dorset, b. in 1625, M.P. for Christ Church, Hants, in 1685. This gentleman, who was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, under the worthy, but singular, Dr. Kettle, was esteemed an excellent antiquarian and lawyer, and was the associate of the learned in his time. He contributed the additions to Dorsetshire in Ginson's Camden. He died in 1703, and his remains were deposited at Wimborn Minster in a coffin painted with armorial ensigns, clamped with iron, and inclosed within iron railing, being deposited under an arch excavated in the thickness of the wall of the church, under a window in the south aisle. In accounting for this curious selection of the place of his sepulture, Hutchins states, that on some dispute with the authorities of the place, Mr. Ettricke had made a vow that he would not be buried either in their church or churchyard, and the matter was thus compromised. The coffin was made in Mr. Ettricke's lifetime; for the date 1691, though partially erased, is yet visible. He obtained a license in 1692 from the official at Wimborne to make this tomb, for which he conferred upon the church a perpetual rent charge of twenty shillings, which is paid by the corporation of Poole out of the tithes of Parken, near that place, being part of a fee farm rent charge thereon. He m. in 1650, Anne, daughter of the Rev. Edward Davenant, D.D. of Gillingham, in the county of Dorset, and grandniece of John Davenant, Bishop of Salisbury; (this lady was educated by her father, and we are informed that she was "a notable algebraist;";) by whom he had issue,

He had previously represented Pool in 1685.* He m. first, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Eden Bacon, bart. of Redgrave, in the county of Suffolk, and had a daughter, Elizabeth, who m. Anthony Ettricke, esq. of High Barns,† b. 16th August, 1663. This gentleman m.

† This gentleman succeeded his father at High Barns, by a deed of settlement made upon his second marriage in 1700. Owing to the dispersion of the property of the Bowes' family, the payments of the modus for the manor of Barns and its appurtenances had fallen into confusion, and, in 1702, a suit was instituted in the court of Exchequer by Dr. Robert Grey, the rector of Bishopwearmouth, in which John Jenkyns, Anthony Ettrick, and others were made defendants. The aim of the suit was, not to invalidate the antiquity of the modus, but to obtain a higher sum in the payment than had been hitherto made by the parties concerned: the dispute was terminated by establishing the ancient amount claimed by Dr. Grey, and a form of receipt to be given by the rectors was dictated by the court in a decree dated 11th December, 1702, of a modus of £14. 15s. 4d, for "all manner of tithes whatsoever arising from the lands and manor of Barns, with the appurtenances." Notwithstanding this decree of the Exchequer, of No tithes due of any kind whatsoever, Dr. Smith, the next rector, set up a demand of "Plow penny, Rook penny, and Peter's pence," on the plea that the modus excepted the inhabitants from tithes arising from

3. It appears, by existing deeds, that the whole of the manor of Barns and Hamelden (now called Hamilton Hill), with Pallion and Clowcroft, as well as the title of corn and grain of Ryhope, remained in the family of Bowes until the decease, in 1662, of William Bowes, a minor, and without issue. The estate then descended to his cousin, Mary Bowes, who married William Haddock, which gentleman sold, in 1668, the moiety of Barns, called Low Barns, to John Jenkins, subject to a moiety of the tithe, rent, or modus payable to the church of Bishop Wearmouth, with a title to one half of the pews and burying ground within the church, belonging to the whole manor of Barns. In 1673, William Haddock conveyed the other moiety of Barns to Walter Ettrick, esq. with the other half of the right of the pews and burying ground belonging to the said manor, subject to a moiety of the modus aforesaid. In these deeds a recital is made of the lease from the Bishop of Durham to Walter Ettrick, of the Ferry over the river Wear, and of the meetage and tolls of Sunderland, dated 1st February, 1694, at a rent of forty shillings a year, for twenty-one years, renewable every seventh year with a fine.
first, Jane, daughter and heiress of Richard Starling, esq. and great niece of Sir Samuel Starling, kn.t. alderman of London, by whom he had a daughter, Elizabeth, m. first, to Musgrave Davison, esq. and secondly, to Thomas Medlycott, esq. of Venne, in Somersetshire.

He wedded, secondly, Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Coghill, esq. of Aldenham, Herts. By this lady, who wedded after his decease — Wittering, esq. he had two sons and three daughters, viz.

the land, but not from personal tithes. This demand was of course not admissible, and how the dispute was settled does not further appear, but Dr. Smith died 30th July, 1715, and no such tithe was ever paid, or even demanded by the rector who followed, Bowes, Laurence, Stillingfleet, Chandler, until the next, Dr. Henry Bland, who entered in 1733, made, in 1767, a vigorous effort to break through by a demand of "Easter offerings, oblations and obventions," yet acknowledging the ancient modus and its validity against prudential tithes, but not to the exclusion of personal. The holy war raged in the courts for two years and upwards, and ended as previously, no such tithe having ever been paid before or since, and a regular receipt for the amount of three years suspended modus in the form prescribed being now found in the bundle of receipts, signed "Henry Bland," rector, 1769.

In the year 1708 Anthony Ettrick entered into an engagement with the persons then entitled to Mr. Jenkins' moiety of Barnes, for the purchase thereof, on behalf of Lancelott Wardell, a quaker; and he therein agreed to convey to Mr. Wardell "the site of the old mansion and other parts of the property adjacent at Low Barnes," which had belonged to his own moiety. By the same agreement Wardell was exempted from his proportion of the modus, which was then laid on High Barnes; and certain lands and the other moiety of the pews and burying ground, with the portion of the modus rent, issuing out of the lands of Pallion, were conveyed to Anthony Ettrick. Notwithstanding all this, when the body of the late owner of High Barnes, thus entitled to the whole space of burying ground appropriated to both moieties of Barnes, was to be buried, there remained barely room for one coffin! the rest having been vaulted, and surreptitiously sold to another family. Thus the splendid monument, destined by the will of Mr. Ettrick, to have been erected on his burial ground, was of necessity withdrawn from the church of Bishopwearmouth.

Anthony Ettrick died 1728, was buried on the 9th December, and s. by his elder son,

By the latter she had a daughter, Jane Carter, m. to William Havelock, esq. of Ingress Park, in Kent, father of Major Have-lock, of the 11th Light Dragoons, a knight of the Royal Hanoverian Guelphic order, and aid-de-camp to Baron Alten, at Waterloo (see vol. i. p. 41).

vi. Isabella, died in 1732-3.

William Ettrick acquired, by his marriage, a considerable fortune, but following, with too much zeal, the expensive taste of improvement, became involved in difficulties, and found it necessary to recall from his seafaring life, his eldest William, a gentleman of great prudence and activity, to whom (six months previously to his decease in 1752) he resigned the whole estate, and who thereupon became

William Ettrick, esq. of High Barnes. This gentleman, b. 14th May, 1726, passed the early part of his life in the naval service of his country, and, upon his retirement from that profession to take possession of his patrimony, became an active and highly respected magistrate for the county of Durham. He enjoyed the estates for fifty-six years, and, by his excellent management, not only left them unencumbered, but accumulated likewise a large personal property, and erected in 1777-8, a handsome mansion upon the site of the former family residence.

He wedded, in 1752, Catherine, daughter of Robert Wharton, esq. of Old Park, in the palatinate, and had by her (who died in Nov. 1794) one son and one daughter, viz.

William, his heir.

Catherine, m. William Budle, of Monkwearmouth, and d. s. p. in 1821.

Mr. Ettrick died 22nd February, 1808, aged eighty-two, and was succeeded by his only son, the present Rev. William Ettrick, of High Barnes. By his last will, he left a considerable sum to be expended on a family memorial; and, in consequence, a beautiful cenotaph, which cost upwards of £500, was erected by his son, at High Barnes, with the following inscription, which himself suggested:

To the memory of William Ettrick, esq. late of High Barnes, in the county of Durham, and many years an active and upright magistrate in the said county, who departed this life on the 22nd February, 1808, in the eighty-third year of his age: and by his last will caused this sepulchral monument to be erected to perpetuate the memory of his father, William Ettrick, esq.
and his grandfather, Anthony Ettrick, esq. and his great-grandfather, Walter Ettrick, esq. all of High Barnes, in an humble but grateful acknowledgment of the kind provision they have made for their posterity.

FARQUHAR, OF GILMILNSCROFT.

FARQUHAR-GRAY, JAMES, esq. of Gilmilnscroft, in the county of Ayr, m. in 1801, Margaret-Cochrane, eldest daughter of Major James Baillie, of the 7th, or Royal Fusiliers, and fort-major of Fort St. George, by Margaret Ross, his wife, eldest daughter of Lord Anchorville, late one of the senators of the College of Justice, and has issue,

JOHN.
Margaret.
Jane.

Mr. Gray-Farquhar, who is lieutenant-colonel of the Royal Ayrshire Militia, succeeded to Gilmilnscroft upon the demise of his mother in 1809. He had inherited, in 1801, a considerable property in Northumberland on the death of Robert Farquhar, of Rothburry, lieutenant-colonel of the 81st regiment.
The family of Farquhar has enjoyed its present possessions, in Kyle Stewart, for many generations. The first proprietor on record, Robert Farquhar, must have been lord of Gilmilnscroft, in the latter end of the fourteenth century, for, in the commencement of the fifteenth, anno 1407, an indenture was granted by Agnes Wallace, wedgewife of Gilmilnscroft, and relict of Robert Farquhar, to her son, Alexander Farquhar, of Gilmilnscroft, who was s. by Thomas Farquhar, of Gilmilnscroft, who had a charter from James I, king of Scotland, in which he is styled son of Alexander Farquhar. He appears to have been father of John Farquhar, of Gilmilnscroft, who had a charter in 1445, from the commendator of the abbey of Melrose, of the lands of Castle Cavil. He wedded Margaret, dau. of the laird of Barquharrie, and was progenitor of Alexander Farquhar, of Gilmilnscroft, who married and had, with a daughter Catherine, m. about the year 1546, to John Hamilton, of Camskeith, a son and successor, Andrew Farquhar, of Gilmilnscroft, who died in 1556. He was father of Alexander Farquhar, of Gilmilnscroft, who wedded, in 1586, a daughter of Charles Campbell, of Glaisnock (of the Loudon family, in the deed of entail of Hugh, the first Lord Loudon, dated in 1613), by whom he left at his decease, in 1625, a son and successor, Robert Farquhar, of Gilmilnscroft. In 1641 Robert Farquhar of Gilmilnscroft, and George Reid, of Daldiling, had a ratification in parliament of the lands of Kylesmure, to themselves and remnant vassals; and in 1643 Farquhar was nominated by parliament among the commissioners of the county of Air, who “shall convene at the burgh of Ayr, with the whoel heritorines, lyferenteries, tacksamen, titularses, proper wad-setteres, pensionerers, conjuncteresses, ladytereresses, and utthers, in order to assess themselves towards a loan of the general sum of 1,200,000 marks Scot; together with 100,000 marks of like money, for collecting the same over the kingdom at large, for defraying the expense that had been incurred by the sending of an army of 10,000 soldiers to Ireland to suppress the rebellion there. Such have been the greate necessities and wants of that armie, as well officers as souldieres, not only through default of their ordinarie pay, but also of victual in the sparest measure.” The sum ordered thus to be lent, for Ayrshire, was £49,480. Scots; also £7,668, for the more immediate use of the army within the kingdom. The first assessment or loan to be repaid by the parliament of England. Robert Farquhar appears to have died some time in the year 1646, and was s. by his son, Robert Farquhar, of Gilmilnscroft, who under the designation of Guildmilsnscroft, Younger, was appointed one of the committee of war for Ayrshire, for the furthering of the service of the kingdom, on the 11th February, 1646. He espoused, 22nd September, 1651, Elizabeth, daughter of James Ross, of Balnheil, in the county of Wigtown, and with her received 8000 marks of tocher. The subscribing witnesses to the marriage contract were Mr. James Dalrymple, of Stair; John Macdowell, brother to Sir James Macdowell, of Garthland; and Alexander Baillie, son to John Baillie, The Mr. James Dalrymple here mentioned was subsequently raised to the peerage by the title of Viscount Stair.

Gilmilnscroft appears to have died without issue, for, in 1670, Robert Farquhar, of Lightshaw (son of Mungo Farquhar, and grandson of Farquhar of Gilmilnscroft) succeeded his cousin

* Robertson’s Ayrshire.
† James Dalrymple (Lord Stair), wedded Margaret, the eldest daughter of Ross, of Ballneil, and was thus brother-in-law to Gilmilnscroft. Of this Margaret, who was a most extraordinary woman, many singular tales are told, amongst others, the following is to be found in Law’s Memorial, “She lived to a great age, and at her death desired that she might not be put under ground, but that her coffin should stand upright on one end of it, promising that while she remained in that situation the Dalrymples should continue to flourish. It is certain her coffin stands upright in the aisle of the church of Kirkleston, the burial-place belonging to the family; and it is probable that this odd position of her corpse, and the sudden rise of so many of that name, without any very visible reason, might have given occasion to the vulgar conjecture that she was a witch.” She is also thought to have been the prototype of Lady Ashton, in the Bride of Lammermoor,—“ O'er true a tale.”
Robert Farquhar, the preceding laird. This gentleman, who lived in the reign of Charles II., and his brother James, adhered steadfastly to the principles of the covenanters, yet conducted himself with so much prudence as to avoid the resentment of the court, while he preserved the confidence of his own party. The colours which were borne by the Dalgain division at their different encounters with their opponents, were entrusted to his care in the intervals of repose, and remained concealed in the mansion of Gilmilnscoft until the revolution in 1688, when they were publicly exhibited. At that time a new device was added: a Scots thistle, surmounted with an imperial crown, splendidly emblazoned in blue, scarlet and gold, under which was written in large golden letters, “For God, the Covenant, Presbyterianism, Reformation, Crown, and Country. 1689.” The flag remains in good preservation.

Gilmilnscoft m. Julian, daughter of Nisbet, of Greenholme, and had three sons and two daughters, viz:

James, his heir.
Hugh, a colonel in the army.
George.
Sarah, m. to John Reid, of Ballochmyle.
Barbara.

The eldest son,

James Farquhar, esq. of Gilmilnscoft, succeeded his father in 1698. He wedded, in 1700, Jean, daughter of William Portefield, of that Ilk, by Annabella, his wife, daughter of Steward, of Blackhall, and had issue,

i. Robert, who predeceased his father.
ii. Alexander.

i. Annabella, m. to Andrew Brown, esq. of Water Head.
ii. Margaret, m. to Duncan Campbell, of Barbieston.
iii. Ann.
iv. Jean, m. to John Whyte, of Neuk.
v. Mary, m. to Charles Campbell, esq. brother of Barbieston.

Mr. Farquhar was succeeded by his only son,

Alexander Farquhar, esq. of Gilmilnscoft, who m. first, Agnes, eldest daughter of John Campbell, of Whitehaugh, by Catherine Ferguson, his wife, a daughter of Auchenblair, but by her had no child. He wedded, secondly, Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Wilson, of Barmuir, provost of Ayr, by Isabella, daughter of Muir, of Blairstown, and had a daughter, Jane, his heiress.

He espoused, thirdly, Jean, daughter of Alexander Cunningham, of Polquharne, which lady died without issue. Gilmilnscoft was succeeded by his only child,

Jane Farquhar, of Gilmilnscoft, who wedded, in 1777, John Gray, esq. of Kilmerdenny (see family of Gray, at foot), and had issue,

i. James, her heir.
ii. Alexander, formerly in the army.
iii. John, lieutenant, 40th regiment, who died in consequence of wounds received at Salamanca.
iv. William, a merchant in Glasgow.
v. Andrew, comptroller of the customs at Irvine, who m. in 1820, Margaret, daughter of the late Benjamin Barton, esq. late commissary-clerk of Glasgow, and has a son John, and other issue.
vi. Robert, who died in 1807.

i. Eliza, m. to John Ashburnham, M.D. of London.

The heiress of Gilmilnscoft died in 1809, and was succeeded by her eldest son, the present James Gray-Farquhar, esq. of Gilmilnscoft.

Family of Gray.

This family derives from a common progenitor with the extinct ducal houses of Suffolk and Kent, the baronial houses of Gray and Warwick, and the existing houses of Tankerville and Stamford, namely, from Anschetel de Croy, one of the companions in arms of the Conqueror. The Scottish barons sprung immediately from the Greys of Chillingham, in Northumberland. Of those,

Andrew, third lord Gray, living in 1564, married, for his second wife, the Lady Elizabeth Stewart, sister, by the mother’s side, of James II. and had several sons. The third,

Andrew Gray, of Muirton, was grandfather of

Thomas Gray, of Brighouse, whose son,

Sir William Gray, of Pittendrum, was one of the greatest merchants of his time in Scotland. Adhering to the royal cause in the civil wars, he was fined by the parliament of St. Andrews, for corresponding with Montrose, in the sum of 100,000 marks, and was imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle until the penalty was modified to 35,000, which he instantly paid. A loan of £10,000, was subsequently extorted from him, but never returned. Sir William did not long survive these hardships, but died..." in 1648. He married Egidia, sister of Sir John Smith, of Grothill and King's Cramong, lord provost of Edinburgh, by whom he had six sons and twelve daughters. Of these ten formed honourable alliances, especially Agnes, who wedded, first, Sir John Dundas, of New Liston, by whom she had an only daughter and heirress, Elizabeth Dundas, who espoused John, first Earl of Stair. Lady. Dundas married, secondly, Sir Archibald Primrose, lord register, ancestor of the noble family of Roseberry.

Of the sons of Sir William Gray,

1. William, the eldest, m. Anne, Mistress of Gray, and on his marriage had 232,000 marks from his father. He was killed in a duel with the Earl of Southesk in 1660, leaving a son,

Patrick, who succeeded his maternal grandfather as ninth Baron Gray. His lordship m. Barbara Murray, daughter of Andrew, Lord Balvaird, and had an only daughter, Marjory, Mistress of Gray, who m. her cousin, John Gray.

2. Robert, the second son, was killed at Uverkeithing, leaving a son,

John, of Crichie, who married his cousin, Marjory, Mistress of Gray, and, by a peculiarity in a new patent of peerage, became, after her death, tenth Lord Gray, even in the lifetime of his father-in-law Patrick, the ninth lord, and as such took the oaths in parliament in 1707. He was direct ancestor of Francis, present Lord Gray.

3. David, the third son, was slain at Tanterg with the Earl of Teviot.

4. Andrew, the fourth son, minister of Glasgow, was ordained when only nineteen years of age, and died before attaining his twenty-second, in 1696.

5. John, the fifth son, of whose line we are about to treat.

The youngest,

John Gray, was father of Andrew Gray, whose only son,

John Gray, was minister of the High Church of Glasgow. He m. first, Margaret, daughter of the Rev. Mr. Morton, minister of Bothwell, by his wife, a daughter of Porter, of Liviland, and had a son, Andrew, who for many years was minister of New Kilpatrick, in Dumbartonshire, in which parish he acquired the lands and manse of Kilmardenny, about five miles north-west of Glasgow. Mr. Gray wedded, secondly, Mary, daughter of Aird, of Milton, by Elizabeth, his wife, daughter of Nisbet, of Greenholme, and by her had a son.

James Gray, minister of Strathblane, the adjoining parish to that in which his half-brother Andrew was settled. He m. in 1670, Agnes, daughter of William Fogo, of Killorn, in Pertshire, by his first wife, Agnes, daughter of Campbell, of Ederline, in Argyleshire, (whose mother was a daughter of Graham, of Killearn). By this lady he had two sons and five daughters,

John, his heir.

Family of Newton, of Newton.

It does not appear, from any records now extant, at what period this ancient family and chief of the name first acquired property in Scotland. They were in possession of the estate previous to the year 1377, as shown by a charter granted by Robert II. of Scotland, at Methven, in favour of William de Newton, and his heirs, which proceeds on resignation made in his majesty's hands as superior by Robert de Swinton, a cadet of the ancient house of Swinton, of Swinton, with consent of Margaret Newton his spouse, who was heiress of Newton. How long William remained in possession, or by whom succeeded, is not distinctly ascertained. During the re-

This is a branch of the noble house of Tweeddale.

LORD WILLIAM HAY, of Newhall, third son of John, second marquess of Tweeddale, m. Margaret, only child of John Hay, esq. of Limplum, and d. in 1723, leaving, inter alios,

i. JOHN, from whom descend GEORGE, the present MARQUES OF TWEEDDALE, and the HAYS, of Newhall, who have assumed the additional surname of MACKENZIE.

ii. James, who d. in 1779, leaving issue.

iii. RICHARD, of whom presently.

The third son,

RICHARD HAY, esq. assumed the surname of Newton, on inheriting the estates of that family. He m. Anne, only daughter of John Stuart, esq. of Kincardine, by Christiana MacLeod, his second wife, and by her, who d. in 1777, had issue,

i. Richard, died unm.

ii. William, his father's heir.

iii. John, an officer in the Royal Marines, drowned in the Pomona frigate, which foundered in the West Indies in 1789.

* Sir John Stuart, count of Maida, who commanded the British army, when they gained the great and decisive victory over the French at Maida, in Calabria, was nephew to Anne Stuart, who m. Richard Hay-Newton, esq.
genev of Robert, duke of Albany, there is an Alexander de Newton named as witness to a charter granted by that nobleman.

In 1450, on the 24th September, William de Newton granted a charter of Mortification of the annual rents of Artam, subjects belonging to him situated within the burgh of Haddington, in favour of the collegiate church of Bothans, now Yester, "which for the salvation of his own soul, and the soul of Marian his spouse, his ancestors and successors, and all faithful deceased persons, he gave, granted, and confirmed to God, and the Blessed Virgin Mary, and to Cuthbert provost of the collegiate church of Bothans, and to the prebendaries of the same, the most celebrated and for ever to be celebrated for their divinity." By acceptance of this deed, the members of the said collegiate church bound themselves to say a certain number of masses annually for the souls of the said William and Marian, according to the tenure of such grants. The next proprietor of whom the records make mention is John de Newton, who was succeeded by his grandson William, who had a brother, Archibald, and one sister, married to Borthwick of Gamelston, besides a son named John, who predeceased his father, and whose widow, Janett Wolf, succeeded in life rent to the lands of Kidlaw. William, the third proprietor, was succeeded by his grandson, William Newton, of Newton, a bold and faithful adherent of the ill-fated Mary Stuart. This laird had the misfortune to kill, in a duel, his friend Hamilton, of Redhouse, under the following singular circumstances: during the invasion of Scotland by the duke of Somerset, the castle of Yester, formerly called Bothans, sustained a severe siege, and it was only by reducing the garrison to extremities that the besiegers forced it to surrender. Newton, of Newton, and the then Hamilton, of Redhouse, both officers in the garrison, while on guard, having openly expressed their sentiments on the conduct of the duke, in not the most courtly terms, his grace determined that on the capture of the castle, the blood of one of them should be shed by the hand of the other, as an atonement for the crime of disrespect they had committed. Accordingly both gentlemen, who were intimate friends, were conveyed by the duke's order to Haddington, and in his grace's presence compelled to fight a duel at the Water Haugh there, when Mr. Hamilton was killed. William Newton married, first, a daughter of Fentoun, of that ilk; and, secondly, Marion Home, relict of James Lawson. By the latter he appears to have had three sons and two daughters, viz.

1. John, who predeceased his father, leaving two daughters,

Barbara, who, for a certain sum of money, renounced to their uncle, Patrick, all right to the estate.

11. Patrick, successor to his father.

111. Thomas.

1. Janet.

11. Margaret.

In 1559, Newton was employed as a deputy for the ambitious James, earl of Bothwell, then high admiral of Scotland, as appears by an obligation granted by Bothwell to him of this date; and, in 1568, we find him devotedly attached to the cause of Mary Stuart, fighting under her banner at Langside. This procedure, incurring the pain of forfeiture, a gift of escheat of his heritable and moveable estate was issued under the privy seal, in favour of his youngest son, Thomas. The deed runs in the king's name, with consent of the regent Murray, and describes the cause of forfeiture. Whether he accompanied the queen is doubtful, but if not he went immediately afterwards, as there is a curious account of furnishings made to him and his household at the period in question: his active and heroic exploits seem to have reduced the Newton family to great emergencies. However, under a general act of pacification, granted by the king's friends in favour of those of the queen, Newton was restored to his estate, but not without certain sutties being taken for his good behaviour. Henry Ogle, of Hartramwood, and David Livingston, burgess of Edinburgh, became bound as pledges to present him before the regent and the lords of secret council upon ten days warning, and that he should remain a faithful and obedient subject to his majesty, under the pain of one thousand pounds: the regent and council shortly after, either from suspicion or actual proof of his interference in behalf of his royal mistress, charged Henry Ogle to present Newton before them, and neither making their appearance, the regent decreed that Henry Ogle had incurred the penalty, and ordained letters of "horning and poudning of his lands and goods to be decreet for uptaking the sazyan;" but Newton's son, Patrick, becoming surety for Ogle, the penalty was not exacted; and finally, James, earl of Morton, obtaining the regency, Patrick was entirely relieved from responsibility on account of his father, by a discharge granted to him in 1587, at Holyrood House, by Morton. The laird of Newton lived to a great age, and, after settling the fee of his possessions on his sons, seems to have devolved the management of his worldly matters on his son, Patrick, from whom he received an annuity. He died about the year 1590, and was succeeded by his said son,

Patrick Newton, of Newton, who m. first, Margaret, daughter of James Hamilton; and, secondly, Christian Wallace; but had issue only by the former, viz. two sons and four daughters; Archibald, William, Margaret, Shibola, Jane, and another. In 1568, a grant was made to Patrick, (previously to his succession), executed by Queen Mary subsequently to her majesty's escape from Lochleven Castle, and prior to the battle of Langside; by which certain duties which had become due and payable to the crown on the death of John, Patrick's elder brother, as well as the casualties due for the marriages of Barbara and Elizabeth, were conveyed to Patrick in these terms: "ordains aine letter to be made, under her privy seal in due form, to loved Patrick Newton, son to William Newton, of that ilk, his aires and assignes." This document is without date, and appears to have been executed in great haste. The grant seems to have been redeemed by the crown shortly after the defeat of the queen's party, and conveyed to secretary Maitland, who again reconveyed it to Patrick, on account of friendship as he expresses himself. Although Patrick's constitution was ill fitted for such exploits as those of his father, he nevertheless neglected not his parliamentary duties, and we find his own, and his ancestors' services acknowledged by the crown in a curious letter addressed to him by Adam Newton, advocate and tutor to Prince Henry. In this, Adam states, that his own and his ancestors' services to the crown of Scotland were duly appreciated by King James, is testified by a charter of confirmation and Novodamus under the great seal, dated 26th January, 1598, in favour of Patrick, of the barony of Newton, on resignation made in his majesty's hands as superior, and there is likewise a writ of exemption, under the privy seal, from future services. Patrick d. in August, 1602, and was s. by his son,

Archibald Newton, of Newton, then in minority, who at the instance of his brother-in-law, James, Lord Hay, of Yester, and Sir Robert Kerr, settled his estate on his wife Christian, third daughter of William, sixth Lord Hay, in life rent; but this settlement being subsequently renounced, another was made reserving the lands of Newton to himself in life rent and to his eldest son Patrick in fee, on which the said Patrick obtained a charter of confirmation and Novodamus from the crown, under reservation of his father's life rent. Archibald and his wife lived to a good old age, and left two sons and two daughters, viz. Patrick, John, Margaret, and Mary. The elder son,

Patrick Newton, of Newton, executed two several bonds of taillie in 1635 and 1641, which are remarkable on account of naming as a substitute one Peter Newton, who is there designed as servitor to his majesty King Charles I.* Patrick wedded Janet, daughter of Sir James Bannatyne, of Newhall, and left an only child,

Thomas Newton, of Newton, who being in minority, his uncle, John, then in the Dutch service, obtained from the crown a gift of tutury, as guardian to his nephew, but as his profession obliged him to reside in Holland, he appointed Alexander Hay,

* That the family of the great Sir Isaac Newton was a branch of this Scottish house, appears more than probable. The proprietor of the Newton estate, at the period of King James's accession to the English crown, was (as above stated) Patrick Newton, son of William, a zealous supporter of the cause of the unfortunate Queen Mary. Patrick is supposed to have accompanied the king to England, for he was a favourite of the ruling power, and a great friend of Maitland. In 1594 he applied to his majesty for an exemption in future from all personal services, on account of his divers infirmities, which request was accordingly granted by a special writ under the privy seal, dated at Holyrood House the 5th July, and produced before the sheriff of Edinburgh in the September of the same year; if he went to England, he returned again, as he died at Newton Hall.

According to Dr. Reid, there is little doubt that one of the family settled in England, either at this period or shortly afterwards, as by a bond of taillie executed by Patrick, son of Archibald, in 1635, in favour of his brother John and his heirs male, the next person called to them is designated Peter Newton, (servitor to his Majesty Charles I.), whom failing, to his heirs male. There can be no question about this person's being a cadet of the family, and if what is said of Sir Isaac's descent be true, undoubtedly the situation which this Peter seems to have held, corresponds with the account given of Sir Isaac's ancestor. He is also designed in a second bond of taillie, executed by Patrick in the same manner, in 1641. The proprietor contemporary with Sir Isaac was Sir Richard; it has been currently said that Sir Isaac and Sir Richard were not only related but corresponded; and it is easily accounted for how no documents to this effect are to be found in the charter chest at Newton. Dame Helen Livingstone survived Sir Richard her husband, and being naturally disappointed that she had no son to succeed, she carefully destroyed all the correspondence of her husband's and her own time, besides dispersing a library and all the plate. This appears the more striking as the whole correspondence, for many generations previous to this period, had been carefully preserved. Lady Newton repaired to West Quarter soon after Sir Richard's death, carrying every moveable with her, as it is said, rather than it should become the property of the heir, who seems to have incurred her displeasure by uniformly refusing to accompany her to the parish church.
of Barra, factor and chamberlain for the management of the estate, subject to the control of Lord Hay, of Yester, and Sir James Bannatyne (see a curious memorandum of the 21st September, 1649, given by John on his leaving Scotland). At this period civil commotions distracted Scotland, and the contributions levied for the numerous garrisons were severely felt by the then Newton; who was subjected to the payment of sums of money for the garrisons of Leith and Tantallon, and obliged to supply that of the castle of Bothans with money, bread, drink, and mutton, and also hay, corn, and straw, for the horses, beside having a number of troops quartered on the barony. This lard dying without issue, was buried by torch-light within the old church of Bothans, and succeeded by his uncle.

John Newton, of Newton, who married a Dutch lady named Cecilia Vandertall, by whom he acquired a considerable fortune, and had two sons and two daughters, viz. Richard, James, Margaret, and Cornelia. After John's succession he remained in the Dutch service, and seldom visited Scotland. He did not neglect his interests at home, for shortly after his nephew's death, he appointed Alexander Ogilvy his factor, with the most particular orders, and maintained a regular correspondence with Ogilvy in his absence, who appears, in all matters of importance, to be instructed to obtain the counsel and advice of Lord Hume. In this correspondence there is much curious matter, shewing the customs of the age. John Newton built large additions to the house and all the garden walls. At this time the ward or prison was so crowded with culprits, that on an application from Lord Hay of Yester's tenants for liberty to work limestone, Ogilvy thus recommends the mode of giving them a supply by a letter to the Laird of Newton: "I hear great murmurings amongst the Lord Hay's tenants for limestone, and your own complaines fare for them also, if ye pleas let the prisonor be opened, and let them have some of the prisoners for a ransom, ye may do as ye think good." In 1656, Newton came over to Scotland for the purpose of settling divers matters with Ogilvy, and he procured a passport, dated 21st August in the same year, from the famous General Monk. He d. in 1658, and was s. by his son,

Richard Newton, of Newton, who being educated under the eye of his father, inherited his feelings and prejudices, particularly in regard to a due observance of the rights of his barony (see Minutes of the Baron Court, which are truly ridiculous and very curious). This court had been held from time immemorial within the town of Newton, called Long-Newton. (from the strangling length and appearance of the village), on a green mount which lay in the middle of the village, and had a circle cut out at the top of it. Its proceedings were conducted with the greatest solemnity, under the superintendence of three different officers, with regular salaries, a baron baillie, procurator fiscal, and clerk. Gentlemen were empowered to hold a court whenever in their opinion the refractory state of the barony required it, and the decrees were generally to the discomfiture of the unfortunate culprits. This lard, who succeeded to a good deal of property in Holland, went thither with his sister Cornelia, as appears by a passport signed by Charles II. and remained abroad until the year 1667, when he returned and was employed to raise the troops required in East Lothian for the king's service. He m. in 1668, the famous Lady Julian Home, sister to Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth, created by William III. earl of Marchmont, but survived his marriage little more than a year, when he was s. by his only son,

Richard Newton, of Newton, whose affairs were conducted, during his minority,

* Sir Patrick Home, of Polwarth, first Earl of Marchmont, early distinguished himself in the cause of liberty. When the privy council passed an order, compelling the counties to pay the expense of the garrisons arbitrarily placed in them, he refused to pay his quota, and by a bill of suspension presented to the court of session, endeavoured to procure redress. The council ordered him to be imprisoned for no other crime, as it would appear, than that of having attempted to procure by a legal process, a legal decision on a point of law. After having remained in close confinement in Stirling Castle for nearly four years, he was set at liberty through the favour and interest of the duke of Monmouth. Having afterwards engaged in schemes connected with those imputed to Sidney and Russell, orders were issued for seizing him at his house of Marchmont, but having had timely notice of his danger from his relation Home, of Nine Wells, a gentleman attached to the royal cause, but whom party spirit had not rendered insensible to the ties of friendship. He found means to conceal himself for a time, and shortly after to escape beyond sea. His concealment was in the family burying place, where the means of sustaining life were brought to him by his daughter, a girl of fifteen years of age, whose duty and affection furnished her with courage to brave the terrors, to which she was exposed by any intercourse with her father. Sir Patrick returned with the earl of Argyile's expedition in favour of Monmouth, but after the result of that unfortunate invasion, he was obliged again to seek security by concealing himself some time in the house, under the protection of Lady Eleanor Dunbar, sister to the earl of Eglington, after which he found means to escape to Holland, from whence he returned and was created, first, Lord Home, of Polwarth, and then earl of Marchmont.
with great judgment by his mother, Lady Julian Newton, who died in 1692, leaving her son in full possession of his paternal estate, which had accumulated, under her guardianship, to a considerable amount. Early instructed in the principles to which his uncle was attached. This laird naturally espoused the cause of King William, and was created by that monarch a baronet, at the same time that Sir Patrick Home was raised to the peerage. Sir Richard is designed knight baronet in numerous documents, and a receipt is extant for the fees payable at his creation. He m. a daughter of Sir William Livingstone, of West Quarter, but having no issue, settled, under reservation of Lady Newton's life rent, the estate of Newton, by entail dated 18th June, 1724, on Richard Hay, esq., fourth son of Lord William Hay, and grand-father of Richard Hay-Newton, esq. present possessor of Newton.

PENNANT, OF DOWNING AND BYCHTON.

PENNANT, DAVID, esq. of Downing and Bychton, in the county of Flint, b. 8th November, 1763; m. 12th December, 1793, Louise, second daughter of Sir Henry Peyton, bart. and niece of John, earl of Stradbroke, and has one son, David, b. 22nd January, 1796, who m. first, the Lady Caroline Spencer-Churchill, only daughter of George, duke of Marlborough, and by her, who died in 1824, had an only child, Caroline, b. 8th December, 1823, who d. 22nd January, 1832. He m. secondly, the Lady Emma Brudenell, daughter of Robert, earl of Cardigan, and had by her a daughter, Louisa. Mr. Pennant died 15th February, 1835.

Mr. Pennant, who succeeded his father in 1798, served the office of high sheriff of Flintshire the following year.

Lineage.

This is another branch of the descendants of Tudor Trevor, to whom so many of the principal families of North Wales and the Marches trace their origin (see vol. ii. p. 329). Tudur Trevor was father of Luddoca, father of Llurcham Gam, father of Ednyved, whose son, Rys Sais, so called because he could speak the Saxon, or English language, possessed great estates in North Wales and Shropshire at the period of the Norman conquest, which he divided among his sons in the year 1070. The eldest, Tudur, was father of Bleddyn, the father of Owen, the father of Thomas, whose son, Meilir, was seated at Bryn, in the township of Halkerton, and parish of Hamer, Flintshire. He was father of Madoc ap Meilir, who acquired the estate of Bychton, in the parish of Whiteford, Flintshire, by marriage with Alice, the daughter and heir of Philip o Ffylchdywn (that is, in English, Philip of Bychton), son of Philip y Syydden Wyddel, or Philip, the Irish officer, one of the cavaliers who accompanied Gruffydd ap Cynan, Prince of Wales, from Ireland, to assist him in recovering his dominions, then usurped by Trahaearn ap Caradog. The great and decisive victory obtained by Gruffydd over the usurper, (and in which Trahaearn was slain), on the mountains of Carno, in the county of Montgomery, anno 1027, the valour of Philip mainly achieved, and Graffyd, thus reinstated in his principality, was not unmindful of his Milesian general, for he bestowed upon him great possessions, of which Bychton, in the parish of Whitford, formed a part. The arms, borne by his son Philip, who was seated at Bychton, were "Ar. three bars wavy az. the centre bar charged with three sheldrakes of the first." These ensigns, acquired with the Bychton estate, the descendants of Madoc and Alice have quartered down to the present day. Jer- werth (or Edward), the son of Madoc and Alice, was father of Kenrick, the father of Ithel, the father of Tudur, whose son, DAVID AP TUDUR, first adopted the cognomen of PENNANT, and from him all of the name derive their descent. This surname is truly British, derived from Pen, a head, and Nant, a dingle, the ancient mansion of Bychton being seated at the head of a very considerable dingle on the old family estate. David m. first, Janet, daughter of David, of Trefcastle, in Tegengl, and had by her a son and two daughters, viz.

Rees, his heir.
Jane, m. to John David, of Bacheurig.
Anne, m. to Griffith ap Llin ap Blethyn, of Panty Llongy.

David Pennant wedded, secondly, Anne, daughter of John Done, of Utkington, in Cheshire, by Anne his wife, daughter of Richard Heaton, of Heaton, and had

Thomas, abbot of Basingwerk, Flintshire, celebrated by Guttyn Owain, a Welsh bard of the year 1450, who records the hospitality of the abbot in a poem printed in the collection of Mr. Rhys Jones. The poet is so liberal of his praise as to say, "that he gave twice the treasure of a king in wine." Guttyn Owain and Tudor Aled, another noted bard, speak not only of the abbot's works of utility; of the water and windmills he erected; of his having enlarged and beautified the abbey: but also compliment him on his prowess in battle. Thomas Pennant, quitting his profession, became, in the law term, a monk de-raine, and m. Angharad, daughter of Gwillim ap Griffith, of the great house of Penrhyn, in Carnarvonshire, by whom he had issue,

1. Edward, of Holywell, who m. Catharine, daughter of John ap Davydd ap Ithel Vychan, and was ancestor of the PENNANTS of Bagillt. (See the end of this article).

2. Thomas, vicar of Holywell.

3. Nicholas, abbot of Basingwerk, who married and had a son,

EDWARD, of Holywell, who m. Jane, daughter and heiress of Thomas ap Howel, of Calived, and was father of Hugh, officiriaid or priest, a distinguished poet of the reign of Henry VIII. In 1573, at an Eisteddfod at Caerwys, he was secondary student in vocal song.

David Pennant's eldest son,

REES PENNANT, of Bychton, espoused Margaret, daughter of Rees ap Reinalt, of Pentre Hobyli, and was father of

HUGH PENNANT, of Bychton, who m. Jan- net, daughter of Richard ap Howel ap Ieuan Vychan, of Mostyn, sister to Thomas Mostyn, of Mostyn, and Pyers Mostyn, of Tal- acre. By this lady he had issue, Richard.

William, an eminent goldsmith of Lon- don, who lived at the Queen's Head, in Smithfield, and by the sign of his shop, and by several bequests he made to persons about the court, he probably was goldsmith and jeweller to the royal family. He purchased considerable estates, and at his de- mise left a large fortune to his ne- phew Hugh, together with a consid- erable sum in charity to Whitford parish, which still enjoys the same.

John.

May, 1580, from Robert Cooke, clarenceux king of arms.

Nicholas, who m. Catharine, daughter of Griffith ap John ap Robert, of Whitford, and had a son, John PENNANT, esq. who wedded Jane, daughter and heiress of John Lloyd ap Llewellyn ap Rees, of Downing, by whom he acquired that estate, whereon he erected a mansion in 1627. The materials were brought from Nant y bi, a dingle opposite to the house. There is a tradition that the stones were rolled along a platform from the top of the quarry, raised on an inclined plane, till they reached the building, and there were elevated as the work increased in height, till the whole was completed. The house is in the form of a Roman H, a mode of architecture very common in Wales at that period.

On the front is the pious motto, Heb Daiow heb ddimm, a Dwe a digon: that is, "Without God there is nothing, with God enough." John Pennant had, by the heiress of Downing, with two daughters, Margaret, m. to Thomas Parry, and Catharine, m. to Robert ap Edward, a son and successor,

* This lady had four husbands: she paid our country the compliment of beginning and ending with a Welshman: her first was Sir John Wynne, of Gwedir, junior; they lived unhappily together, which sent him on his travels to Italy, where he died at Lucen. She then took one of the Milesian race, for she married Sir Francis Aungier, Master of the Rolls in Ireland, afterwards created Baron Longford. Thirdly, she gave her hand to an Englishman, Sir Thomas Weman, of Oxfordshire; and, finally, she resigned her antiquated charms to our gallant major, who in the year 1656 deposited her with his ancestors, in the church of Whitford.—Thomas Pennant.

This gentleman, during the civil wars, adhered to the royal cause, and held a major's commission in that service. “He was,” says his descendant, Thomas Pennant the historian, “an officer in the garrison of Denbigh when it was besieged and taken by my maternal great great grandfather, General Mytton. My loyal ancestor suffered there a long imprisonment. Bychton was plundered, and the distress of the family so great, that he was kept from starving by force of conjugal affection, for his wife often walked with a bag of oatmeal from the parish of Whiteford to Denbigh to relieve his wants.” *He m. My father told me he was frequently taken by him to the Don Saltero Coffee House, where he used to see poor Richard Cromwell, a little and very neat old man, with a most placid countenance, the effect of his innocent and unambitious life.”

Thomas Pennant, esq. of Downing and Bychton, the celebrated naturalist and traveller. This distinguished person, who was born at Downing 14th June, 1726, studied at Queen's College, Oxford, and afterwards removed to Oriel College, in the same university, where he took the degree of D.C.L. in 1771. At twelve years of age he was inspired with a passion for natural history by a present of Wilhuffby's "Ornithology," from Mrs. Piozzl's father; and for minerals and fossils by a visit to Doctor Borlace in 1747. His first production was an account of an earthquake, felt in Flintshire, 2nd April, 1750, which appeared in the Philosophical Transactions in 1750; and the following year he was chosen a member of the Royal Society of Upsal, through the influence of the great Linnaeus, with whom he corresponded. In 1761, he commenced the folio edition of "the British Zoology," which was afterwards republished in quarto and octavo, and translated into German by C. Theop. Murr. This work was followed by his "Indian Zoology," 1769, "Synopsis of Quadrupeds," 1771, "Genera of Birds," "History of Quadrupeds," 1781, "Arctic Zoology," 1786, and "Index to Buffon's Natural History of Birds," 1787; which are his principal works relative to the department of science, which he chiefly cultivated: but he also published a number of detached essays and papers in the Philosophical Transactions on similar subjects. In 1765, Mr. Pennant travelled to the continent and visited Buffon, Haller, Pallas, and other eminent foreigners. He was admitted into the Royal Society in 1767. In 1769 he undertook a journey into Scotland, of which he published an account in 1771; and another volume appeared in 1776, relating to a second tour in the same country, and a voyage to the Hebrides. In 1778, he published a tour in Wales: to which was afterwards added, in a subsequent volume, a journey to Snowdon. He produced, in 1782, a narrative of a "Journey from Chester to London," and, in 1790, his popular "Account of London." In 1793, he professedly took leave of the public, in a piece of autobiography, which he entitled "The Literary Life of the late Thomas Pennant;" but this did not prove to be his latest production, as he afterwards committed to the press a "History of the Parishes of White-. ford and Holywell." He died 16th December, 1798, at his seat in Flintshire. After his death appeared "Outlines of the Globe;" his "Journey from London to the Isle of Wight," 1801; his "Tour from Downing to Alston Moor;" and his "Tour from Alston Moor to Harrowgate." Mr. Pennant married first, in 1759, Elizabeth, daughter of James Falconer, esq. of Chester, and by her, who died in June, 1764, had two sons and one daughter, viz., Thomas, d. an infant in 1760. He is lieutenant-colonel of the Yeomanry Cavalry, lieutenant-colonel of the Local Militia, and a magistrate and deputy lieutenant for Cheshire.

Lineage.

This branch of the Egerton family has enjoyed, for a long series of years, extensive estates and leading influence in the palatinate of Chester.

Sir Thomas Egerton, (son of Sir Richard Egerton, of Ridley), the celebrated Lord Chancellor, was born in Cheshire about the year 1540, and admitted of Brasenose College, Oxford, in 1556. The Athenae Oxonienses give an account of his early pursuits, and state his having “applied his muse to severe study in this university, where, continuing about three years, he laid a foundation whereon to build profounder learning. Afterwards, going to Lincoln’s Inn, he made a most happy progress in the municipal laws, and at length was a counsellor of note.” In 1581, Mr. Egerton’s eminent abilities were rewarded with the office of solicitor-general, and in 1592 with the attorney-generalship. In 1594, he was raised to the Rolls bench, having previously received the honour of knighthood; and, in 1596, obtained the custody of the great seal, as the title of lord keeper. To this high station he was elevated by the especial favour of his royal mistress, and the universal wish of the country, “every one,” as Camden says, “having conceived mighty hopes and expectations of his lordship.” After retaining this office during the reign of Elizabeth, he was created, by her successor, on the 21st July, 1603, Baron Ellesmere, and constituted Lord High Chancellor of England. To attempt even the most abridged epitome of the affairs in which Lord Ellesmere appears a principal actor, during his eventful and splendid career, would far exceed our limits. Among those, however, may be especially noted the treaties with the Dutch and the Danes, 40th and 42nd Elizabeth; his exertions in behalf of the ill-fated Essex; the trials of Lords Cob-ham and Grey de Wilton in 1603; the negotiations respecting the proposed union of the crowns of England and Scotland in 1604; the struggle with Lord Chief Justice Coke, in reference to the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in 1615; and the trial of the earl and countess of Somerset, in the following year, for the murder of Sir Thomas Overbury. The lord chancellor, now more than seventy-six years of age, feeling both the powers of his mind and body shrink under the pressure of age and infirmity, entreated from the king, in two pathetic letters, a discharge from his high office which he had held nearly twenty-two years. His majesty complied, and, after advancing the chancellor to the dignity of Viscount Brackley, received the seals in person from his lordship, on his death bed, with tears of respect and gratitude, and expressed the intention of adding the earldom of Bridgewater to his previous honours. His lordship died 16th March, 1617, "in a good old age, and full of virtues and fame;" and, in the words of Camden, "forte quanto propius Reipublicae mala viderat, ut integer honestum finem voluit." Hacket, in his Life of Archbishop Williams, says he was one "qui nihil in vita nisi laudandum aut fecit, aut dixit, aut sensit." His apprehension was keen and ready: his judgment deep and sound; his eloquence elegant and easy. As a lawyer, he was prudent in counsel, extensive in information, and just in principle; so that while he lived he was excelled by none: and when he died he was lamented by all. In a word, as a statesman, he was faithful and patriotic; and as a judge, impartial and incorrupt.*

His lordship m. first, Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Ravenscroft, esq. of Breton, in Flintshire; secondly, Elizabeth, Lady Wolley, sister of Sir George More, kn. of Lostey, in Surrey, lieutenant of the Tower; and, thirdly, Alice, dowager countess of Derby, daughter of Sir John Spencer, of Althorp. By the first lady only, who d. in 1688, he had issue, viz. two sons and one daughter.

* Ben Jonson has addressed several epigrams to Chancellor Egerton: one of which we subjoin;

To Thomas Lord Chancellor.

Whilst thy weigh'd judgments, Egerton, I hear,
And know thee then a judge not of one year;
Whilst I behold thee live with purest hands,
That no affection in thy voice commands;
That still thou'rt present in the better cause;
And no less wise than skilful in the laws;
Whilst thou art certain to thy words once gone,
As is thy conscience, which is always one:
The virgin long since fled from earth I see,
'T our times return'd, hath made her heaven in thee.

John Egerton, second viscount, who was advanced to the earldom of Bridgewater on the 27th May, 1617. This nobleman, distinguishing himself in Ireland under the earl of Essex in 1699, received the honour of knighthood, and, at the coronation of James I., was made a knight of the Bath. His lordship's appointment, in 1633, to the lord presidency of Wales and the Marches, gave rise to Milton's immortal Comus, and is thus recorded by Warton: "I have been informed," says that writer, "from a manuscript of Oldys, that Lord Bridgewater, being appointed lord president of Wales, entered upon his official residence at Ludlow Castle with great solemnity. Upon this occasion, he was attended by a large concourse of the neighbouring nobility and gentry. Among the rest came his children; in particular Lord Brackley, Mr. Thomas Egerton, and Lady Alice,

— to attend their father's state

And new entrusted sceptre.

They had been on a visit at a house of the Egerton family in Herefordshire; and in passing through Haywood forest were beighthed; and the Lady Alice was even lost for a short time. This accident, which in the end was attended with no bad consequences, furnished the subject for a mask for a Michaelmas festivity, and produced Comus." The earl wedded the Lady Frances Stanley,* second daughter and co-heir of Ferdinando, earl of Derby, and by her,

TATTON, OF WITHENSHAW.

TATTON, THOMAS-WILLIAM, esq. of Withenshaw, in the county of Chester, b. 2nd June, 1816, s. his father in 1827.

Lineage.

The Tattons, of Kenworthy, from whom the family before us derives, were a branch of the ancient house of Tatton, of Tatton, which was allied to the barons of Dunham Massey.

Robert Tatton, of Kenworthy, by his marriage with Alice, daughter and heiress of William de Massey, of Withenshaw, in Cheshire, acquired that estate, and was direct ancestor of Robert Tatton, of Withenshaw, who m. Alice, sister of William Massie, of Codington, living in the 3rd of Edward IV., and daughter of Hugh Massie, by Agnes his wife, daughter and heiress of Nicholas Bold, great great grandson of Sir Richard Bold, of Bold, esq. Alice Massie, Robert left four sons, viz.

Christian, daughter of John Ward, esq. of Capesthorne, but dying in 1738, without male issue, the estates and representation of this branch of the family devolved on his brother,

Samuel Egerton, esq. of Tatton Park, b. 28th December, 1711, who wedded Beatriss, youngest daughter and co-heir of the Rev. John Copley, of Battly, rector of Elmsley, in Yorkshire, and by her, who d. in April, 1755, had an only daughter, Beatriss, who m. Daniel Wilson, esq. of Dalham Tower, in Westmoreland, but predeceased her father, without surviving issue. Mr. Egerton died himself 10th February, 1780, advanced in years, being one of the representatives in that and the three preceding parliaments for the county of Chester. He devised his great estates, with divers remainders, in tail to his only sister,

Hester Egerton, who had m. in May, 1747. William Tatton, esq. of Withenshaw, but who, upon inheriting her brother's possessions, resumed, by sign manual, 8th May, 1780, her maiden name. She d. the 9th of the following July, leaving a daughter, Elizabeth Tatton, the wife of Sir Christopher Sykes, bart. of Sledmere, M.P. and a son and successor,

William-Tatton Egerton, esq. of Tatton and Withenshaw, b. 9th May, 1749. This gentleman, who, from his extensive landed possessions and great personal influence, was esteemed one of the leading commoners in the kingdom, represented the county of Chester in parliament. He m. thrice (see family of Tatton, p. 41), and dying in 1803, was s. in the Egerton estates by his eldest surviving son, the present Wilbraham Egerton, esq. of Tatton.

Motto—Sic donec.

Estates—Tatton, Roscommon, Ollerton, &c. were possessed by Sir Alen de Tatton, ancestor of the present proprietor in the earliest period of authentic history. The elder branch became extinct after a few descents; the heiress married William Massey, fourth son of Hamon de Massey, baron of Dunham Massey, whose descendants retained possession of the Tatton property without intermission until the reign of Edward IV. From the Tattons, of Tatton, the family of Withenshaw are undoubtedly a branch; it is a curious fact, that the estates should again return into the possession of the Tatton family, after so long an alienation.

Town Residence—St. James's Square.

Robert Tatton d. at Southwark, near London, in 1623, and was s. by his son, Robert Tatton, esq. of Withenshaw, b. 14th May, 1606, who served the office of sheriff for Cheshire in 1645. During the civil wars, this gentleman was a staunch supporter of the royal cause, and sustained a siege at Withenshaw against the parliamentary forces. It is thus noticed in Burghall's diary: "February 25, 1643-4, Mr. Tatton's house at Withenshaw was taken by the parliament, who had laid a long siege to it. There were in it only Mr. Tatton, some gentlemen, and but a few soldiers, who had quarter for life. The ammunition was but little." Col. Duckenfield conducted the attack, and finally effected the reduction of the mansion by bringing two pieces of ordnance from Manchester. In the last century, six skeletons were found in the garden at Withenshaw lying close together, who were supposed to be soldiers buried during the siege in the house, which was then much larger than it is at present. There is a tradition that one of the parliament officers exposed himself by sitting on a wall, and that a female domestic begged for a musket to try if "she could bring him down," and succeeded. Mr. Watson supposes this officer to have been "Captayne Adams, slayne at Withenshaw," on Sunday the 25th, who was buried at Stockport 25th February, 1643-4. Mr. Tatton compounded for his estate at £707. 13s. 4d. and appears to have been oppressed by other vexatious charges, in consequence of which he appealed against his portion of subsequent parliament levies. These disastrous consequences of loyalty must have been severely felt, as Webb, writing in 1622, speaks of the Tattons as being "much eclipsed," and "by troubles and encouragements, whereunto greatest estates are oft subject, obscured," and "places the chiefest hope of raising the house on that grandchild," upon whom these calamities subsequently fell. Mr. Tatton m. in 1628, Anne, third daughter and co-heiress of William Brereton, esq. of Ashley, and by her, who died in 1670, had four sons and two daughters, viz.

1. William, his heir.

* On this lady's monument, in the church of Northenden, are the following lines:

If e'er on earth true happiness were found,
'Twas thine, blest shade, that happiness to prove;
A father's fondest wish thy duty crown'd,
Thy softer virtues fix'd a husband's love.
Ah! when he led thee to the nuptial fane,
How smiled the morning with auspicious rays!
How triumphed youth and beauty in thy train,
And flattering health that promised length of days!

Heav'n join'd your hearts; three pledges of your joy
Were given in thrice the years revolving round;
Here, reader, pause; and own, with pitying eye,
That not on earth true happiness is found.

She died January 9th, 1777, aged twenty-six.

Lineage.

The Chutes, of Chute Hall, derive from that branch of the ancient family of Chute, which was seated in the county of Kent. The Hampshire and Norfolk lines are now represented by William-Lyde-Wiggett Chute, esq. of the Vine and of Pickenham Hall. (See vol. i. p. 632.)

The first who settled in Ireland,

George Chute, a military officer, went into that kingdom during the rebellion of Desmond, and obtained grants of land near Dingle, and in the county of Limerick, which were soon however alienated. He m. an Evans, of the county of Cork, and had a son,

Daniel Chute, who acquired, in marriage, with a daughter of McElligott, the lands of Tulligaron or Chute Hall, which were afterwards (with others since disposed of) confirmed by patent, in 1630, under which they are now held. He left (with a daughter, m. to — Crosbie, esq.) a son and successor,

Richard Chute, esq. of Tulligaron, in the county of Kerry, who wedded a daughter of Crosbie, of Tubrid, and had issue. At the restoration, in 1660, Mr. Crosbie, of Tubrid, being high sheriff of Kerry, returned Chute to parliament as member for that county, in opposition to Blemnerhasset, of Ballyseedy, who petitioned against the return and succeeded. Some curious particulars connected with this contest are set forth in the first volume of the Irish Commons' Journals, and it was probably owing to the expenses then incurred that the alienation of the grants above alluded to took place. Richard Chute was s. by his son,

Eusebius Chute, esq. of Tulligaron, who m. Mary, sister of Mr. Justice Bernard, of the court of Common Pleas in Ireland, (raised to the bench in 1726,) ancestor of the earls of Bandon. By this lady he had issue,

Mr. Massie, who is rector of Eccleston, succeeded his father in 1802.
Lineage.

The early descent of the Massies, of Coddington, has long been a matter of dispute, some of the pedigrees deriving them from a younger son of Sir John Massie, of Tatton, supposed to have been slain at Shrewsbury, whose eldest son d 8th Henry V.; and others from Hamon, son of Sir John Massie, of Puddington, who also fell at the battle of Shrewsbury. "The probabilities," says Ormerod, "are in favour of the Tatton branch, as far as can be argued from correspondence of dates, and no stress can be laid on a subsequent settlement made by John Massie in the sixteenth century, whereby he settled Coddington in remainder on the Puddington family, in the event of his issue failing, as this settlement overlooked acknowledged nearer relations, the Massies of Broxton and the Massies of Eggerley."

Hugh Massie settled at Coddington in consequence of his marriage with Agnes, daughter and heiress of Nicholas Bold, of Coddington, great grandson of John, third son of Sir John Bold, of Bold, in Lancashire. Hugh had (with four daughters, Anne, m. to David Dod, esq. of Edge; Alice, m. to Robert Tatton, esq. of Withenshaw; Maud, the wife of Thomas Cottingham, esq. of Wirral; and Margaret, of Philip Aldersey, esq. of Middle Aldersey) several sons, of whom the third, William Massie, esq. purchased, in the 18th of Henry VI. from Sir Philip Boteler, the manors of Coddington, Bechin, Eggerley, &c. subject to a rent charge of twenty-five marks per annum, which, by a deed, 8th Henry VIII. was fixed at forty marks. He married Alice, daughter and heiress of Adam Woton, of Eggerley and Chester, and by her, who m. secondly, Hugh Ball, of Coddington, had two sons, namely,

1. Morgan, of Eggerley, on whom his mother's lands were entailed. He m. Margery, daughter of John Davenport, esq. of Davenport, by Maud, his wife, daughter of Sir Andrew Brereton, knt. of Brereton, and had an only son and heir,

Robert, ancestor of the Massies, of Eggerley, in whom that manor remained vested until the time of Charles II., when it was purchased from them by Samuel Smallwood, whose lineal descendant, Thomas Smallwood, esq. was proprietor in 1759. It was shortly after sold to the Rev. Thomas Ince.

The second son,

John Massie, esq. inherited, under his father's deed of partition, 3rd Edward IV., the lands of Coddington. He m. Margaret, daughter and heiress of Holme, of Coddington, and had a son and successor,

Robert Massie, esq. of Coddington, who died before 23rd Henry VII., as appears by an award of the said manor, leaving a daughter, Anne, the wife of William Massie, of Graffon, and a son,

William Massie, esq. of Coddington, living 23rd Henry VII. who m. Alice, dau. of Edward de Crew, and had issue,

1. Robert, his heir.

II. John, of Broxton, living temp. Henry VIII. who m. Margaret, daughter and heiress of Richard Larton, esq. of Larton, and had, with a daughter, Johan, m. to John Aldersey, of Middle Aldersey, a son, Edward Massie, esq. of Larton, ancestor of the Massies of Broxton, who continued there seated to the commencement of the eighteenth century, when the estate was sold by Hugh Massie to John Dod, esq. a descendant of the Dods, of Edge. This branch of the Massie family enjoyed great respectability and extensive possessions, holding estates in eleven townships of Cheshire, and the manors of Halghton and Yele, in the county of Denbigh.

The elder son,

Robert Massie, esq. of Coddington, living temp. Henry VIII. espoused Dorothy, daughter of Sir Hugh Calveley, knt. of Lea, by Christiana his wife, daughter of Thomas Cottingham, esq. and had, with two daughters, Elizabeth, wife of Henry Holme, and Jane, of Thomas Salisbury, several sons, the eldest of whom,

Roger Massie, esq. of Coddington, held that manor, and lands in Bechin from the Lord Dacre as of his manor of Wembe, by fealty, and the render of a rose yearly. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Randle Brereton, esq. of Eccleston and Wettenbali, and had issue,

John, his heir.

Jane.

Elizabeth, who m. William Barnston, esq. of Churston, in Cheshire, and d. 13th January, 1606, leaving issue.

Roger Massie d. 20th April, 24th Henry VIII. and was s. by his son, JOHN MASSIE, esq. of Coddington, who made, temp. Edward VI. the settlement we have alluded to in the commencement of this narrative, by which his estates were entitled on the male issue of his two sons, with remainder to the Masseys, of Paddington. He m. first, Ellen, daughter of Thomas Daniels, of Tabley, by whom he had one son, Thomas, who died s.p.; secondly, Margaret, daughter of Randle Bunville, esq. of Chester; thirdly, Grace, daughter of Sir Thomas Grosvenor, of Eaton; and, fourthly, Mary, daughter and heiress of Edward Hughes, esq. of Holt, in the county of Denbigh, receiver to Queen Elizabeth for Cheshire and Flintshire. By his second and third wives John Massie had no child, but by his third he had issue two sons and four daughters, viz.

John, his heir.
William, of London.
Mary, m. to Lawrence Starkey, esq. of Wrexham.
Jane, m. to Richard Philips, esq. of Stockton.
Margaret.
Anne, m. to Edward Johnes, esq. of Grosvenor.

The elder son,

JOHN MASSIE, esq. of Coddington, wedded Anne, eldest daughter of Richard Grosvenor, esq. of Eaton, high sheriff of Cheshire in 1602, by Christiana his wife, daughter of Sir Richard Brooke, bart. of Norton, and had issue,

i. John, b. in 1601, d. s.p.

ii. Roger, his father's heir.

iii. Richard, died issueless.

iv. George, also died without issue.

v. Edward, one of the most distinguished military leaders during the civil wars of the reign of Charles I. This gallant person, who held a commission in the royal army in the expedition against Scotland, attended, on the commencement of the troubles, at York, with the intention of serving the king; but "finding himself," says Clarendon, "not enough known there, and that there would be little gotten but in the comfort of a good conscience, he went to London, where there was more money and fewer officers," and on his arrival was made lieutenant-colonel to the earl of Stamford, and appointed governor of the city of Gloucester. The same historian details, at greater length than our limits will permit, the device by which Colonel Massie inveigled the king to undertake in person the siege of Gloucester, and commemorates also the determined defence of the besieged, a defence to which, as it gave the parliament time to recover their broken spirits and forces, may be attributed "the greatness to which they afterwards aspired." In 1648, Massie obtained the rank of major-general, and in the same year his name twice occurs in official contemporary publications, the first of which is an account of his engagement with Prince Rupert's forces at Ledbury, where Massie uniformly charged in person at the head of his troops. "Prince Rupert," says Massie, in a letter descriptive of the engagement, "sent me word by my trumpeter that I sent, that in the fight he sought me, but knew me not till after, no more than I knew him. But it seems we charged each other, and he shot my horse under me, and I did as much for him. At that charge many commanders of theirs fell." The success at Ledbury was followed by the capture of Evesham, which was stormed with great gallantry in five places at once by the parliament forces under General Massie. In 1647, he was one of the officers employed by the city to enlist new forces during the differences between the army and parliament, after the seizure of the king's person. In these discussions he took an active part, and opposing the intentions now plainly manifested by Cromwell, he was, with other officers of the presbyterian party, committed to prison. Massie, however, effected his escape, fled to Holland, and had the boldness to present himself to Prince Charles as a sufferer for the king. Massie's abilities and bravery were not to be neglected, and retaining his rank, he obtained the command of a regiment of horse under the duke of Buckingham; and in the king's march to Worcester was dispatched, on account of his connexion with the presbyterians, one day's march in advance of the royal army, to give notice of his majesty's coming, and to draw the gentry to attend upon him. In this new cause Massie displayed his wonted activity and skill; but, having secured a pass in the neighbourhood of Worcester, he attempted to follow up an advantage of little importance, and received a dangerous wound, which prevented him from exerting his services in a moment of the greatest need to the king. In the flight from Worcester, General Massie rode six miles with his majesty, but not being able to keep pace any longer, the king took his leave of him, with tears trickling down his cheeks, saying, "Farewell, my dear and faithful friend, the Lord bless and preserve us both;" and so they parted. The major-general wheeled off by way of Bromsgrove, but being unable from the anguish of his wounds to journey further, he threw himself on the mercy of the countess of Stamford, and was received as a prisoner at Broadgate manor. The last effort of Massie was an unsuccessful endeavour to seize Gloucester for the king. Clarendon attributes the failure, in some degree, to the errors caused by a stormy and tempestuous night in which the attempt was made, to which circumstance however Massie was indebted for his personal safety. He had been seized by a troop of horse, and was conveyed by them towards his prison, being bound on his horse before a trooper. In the darkest part of the night, in a woody and hilly defile, he contrived to throw the soldier, and disentangling himself from his hold by means of his great strength and agility, he secured his retreat into the woods. *

Colonel Hawker succeeded his father, 6th February, 1790, and is a deputy-lieutenant for Hants. Col. Hawker’s celebrated work on Sporting has become one of the standard publications of England.

Lineage.

The representatives of this family have, without the omission of a single generation, served as officers in the army since the reign of Elizabeth, but the early commissions, prior to the year 1694, which are stated to have borne date so far back as the year 1538, having been lost by the neglect of a person to whom they were confided, the regular pedigree can be traced no higher than the time of William and Mary.

PETER Hawker, esq. captain of Queen Mary’s dragoons in 1694, was father of Richard Lyster was s. at his decease, in October, 1633, by his eldest son,

SIR THOMAS LYSER, of Rowton, who, according to the visitations, was eleven years of age in 1623. This gentleman was a devoted adherent of King Charles I., and on the appearance of that monarch at Shrewsbury, in the first campaign of the civil wars, he waited on the king, then residing in the council house, the family residence of the Lysters, and recruited the empty coffers of his majesty by the welcome present of five hundred pieces of gold. He was knighted on this occasion, and afterwards held a high command in the garrison established in Shrewsbury; on the fall of the town he was taken prisoner, but his lady gallantly held out the castle at Rowton for nearly a fortnight against all the efforts of the republican officer, Col. Mytton, nor did she surrender her post till she had obtained good terms from that commander. Sir Thomas espoused, first, Elizabeth, dau. of John Adye, of the county of Kent, and by her one son, Richard, his heir, and one daughter, Elizabeth, the wife of — Draycott, of Ireland. Mr. Lyster d. 7th March, 1701-2, and was s. by his eldest son, Richard Lyster, esq. of Rowton Castle, who represented the county of Salop for the unusual period of thirty years. The great hospitality and universal popularity of this gentleman are still very freshly remembered; he was a firm supporter of the exiled royal house, and constantly opposed the whig administrations of his day. It is related of him, that his first return to parliament was for the borough of Shrewsbury, for which place, after a strenuous contest, he was elected by a considerable majority. His opponent, however, disputed the return, and endeavoured to destroy the majority by disfranchising an extensive suburb, which, till that period, had always enjoyed the elective franchise, and as he was a supporter of the government, the whole whig party joined in the attempt, and succeeded in throwing out the successful candidate. Upon the decision being announced in the commons, Mr. Lyster, feeling very keenly the injustice of the proceeding, put on his hat, and with his back to the speaker, walked down the house; when his manner being remarked, he was called to order, and pointed out to the chair. Turning abruptly round he instantly said, “When you learn justice I will learn manners.” This drew upon him the increased wrath of the house, and probably he would have been compelled to ask pardon on his knees, or to visit the Tower, had not Sir Robert Walpole, who on all occasions knew how to throw the grace of good temper over his corruptions and tyranny, exclaimed, with a smile, “Let him go, we have served him bad enough already.”

The indignation which this ill treatment occasioned mainly contributed to securing the representation of his native county for the remainder of his life. In illustration of the manners of his day, we may add, that on his departure from Rowton to take his seat, his tenants annually escorted him the first two stages on his journey, while his London tradespeople, duly apprized of his approach, with the same punctilio, advanced two stages from town to bring him into London.

He wedded Anne, daughter of Robert Pigott, esq. of Chetwynd, and had three children, Thomas, Richard, and Anne, who all d. young. Mr. Lyster d. in 1706, aged seventy-five, and was s. in the Rowton estate by his widow, Anne, at whose demise, in 1781, it passed to her husband’s nephew,

Mr. Murray s., his brother, in 1830, and is the seventeenth generation of this family, in a direct male line.

Lineage.

The first of this family on record

Archbald de Moravia, mentioned in the chartulary of Newbottle, in 1280, was descended (the author of the critical remarks upon Ragman’s Roll presumes) from the Morays, lords of Bothwel, who, by marriage of a daughter of Sir David Olifard, got considerable possessions in the county of Selkirk. In 1296, he subscribed the oath of fealty to Edward I., and d. in the reign of Robert Bruce, leaving a son and successor,

Roger de Moravia, who obtained, in 1321, from James, Lord Douglas, superior of his lands, a charter “ terrarum de Fala,” which estate, subsequently designated Fala-hill, continued for many years to be the chief title of the family. Roger d. at an advanced age, in 1380, and was s. by his son, Alexander de Moravia, mentioned in a charter under the great seal, from Robert II. before the year 1380. He was father of

Patrick Murray, of Fala-hill, living in 1413, who d. temp. James II. and was s. by his son,

John Murray, of Fala-hill, who, upon the resignation of Thomas Hop Pringle, got a charter from King James III. Johannii de Moravia de Falahill, of part of the lands of Philiphaugh, dated 20th July, 1461. His son,

Patrick Murray, of Fala-hill, acquiring from Robert Watson several acres of land about Philiphaugh, had a charter from the said Robert, dated 20th February, 1477. He subsequently obtained charters of lands in 1480 and 1492. He m. and had one son and a daughter, namely,

John, his heir.

Margaret, who wedded James, Earl of Buchan, and had a son, James Stewart, Lord Traquair, ancestor of the Earls of Traquair.

Patrick Murray d. at the close of the fifteenth century, and was succeeded by his son,

John Murray, of Fala-hill, who upon his father’s resignation, got a charter under the great seal from James IV., “ Johanni Murray filio et heredi apparenti Patriicii Murray de Falahill terrarum de Gerfastoun,” in 1489; afterwards, in 1497, another charter dated 5th November, in that year, of the lands of Cranston, Riddel, &c. and eventually, on his own resignation, a charter, dated 10th October, 1508, of half of the lands of Philiphaugh.

This chieftain, the celebrated “Outlaw Murray,” who, with five hundred of his men, bid defiance to the king of Scotland, James IV., is immortalized by the beautiful ballad, preserved in the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, and for ages a popular song in Selkirkshire. “The tradition of Ettrick Forest," says Sir Walter Scott, "bears, that the outlaw was a man of prodigious strength, possessing a batton or club, with which he laid lee (i.e. waste) the country for many miles round; and that he was at length slain by Buccleugh, or some of his clan, at a little mount, covered with fir trees, adjoining to Newark Castle, and said to have been a part of the garden; a varying tradition bears the place of his death to have been near to the house of the Duke of Buccleugh's gamekeeper, beneath the castle, and that the fatal arrow was shot by Scott, of Haining, from the ruins of a cottage on the opposite side of the Yarrow. There was extant, within these twenty years, some verses of a song on his death. The feud between the outlaw and the Scotts may serve to explain the asperity with which the chieftain of that clan is handled in the ballad."

In Edinburgh, where that he lay,

The song relates the departure of James IV. with "full five thousand men" to suppress the insurrection of the outlaw, and subsequently the humiliating necessity to which the king of Scotland was reduced to compromise with his rebellious subject, by granting to him the heritable sheriffship of the shire of Selkirk."

Murray espoused the Lady Margaret Hepburn, daughter of Patrick, first Earl of Bothwell, and had two sons and three daughters, viz.

Estates—In Yorkshire.

Seat—Esholt Hall, or Priory, in the West Riding of Yorkshire. The priory of Essholt was founded by Simon de Ward, in the middle of the twelfth century, and dedicated to God, St. Mary, and St. Leonard; a proof of the sincere and profuse devotion of that period, for while Simon freely bestowed the fairest and most fruitful portion of his estates on strangers, he was content to reserve for himself and his posterity a mansion and domain at Guiseley, which no modern landholder, who had been possessed of both, would have been content to inhabit for twelve months. Esholt Priory fell of course with the smaller foundations, and remained vested in the crown until granted, nine years after his dissolution to Henry Thompson, one of the king's gens-d'armes at Calverley. In this family it continued somewhat more than a century, when it was transferred to the neighbouring and more distinguished house of Calverley by the marriage of Frances, daughter and heiress of Henry Thompson, esq. with Sir Walter Calverley. His son, Sir Walter Calverley, bart. built on the site of the priory, in the earliest part of the last century, a magnificent house, and planted a fine avenue of elms from Apperley Bridge, which, notwithstanding the change of taste, from the noble growth to which they have attained, reconcile the most fastidious eye to their rectilinear disposition. Along this approach the house is seen to great advantage, with two fronts of handsome white stone, beautifully backed by native oak woods, with the more distant hills of Upper Aresdale beyond. It is not improbable that till the great demoltion of the buildings by Sir Walter Calverley, much of the priory continued in its original state; now a few pointed arches in some of the offices alone remain to attest that a religious house once occupied the site. The builder of the present mansion died in 1749, and his son, of the same name, sold the manor house of Esholt to Robert Stansfield, esq. of Bradford, great uncle of the present proprietor.

MURRAY, OF TOUCHADAM AND POLMAISE.

This gentleman, who is vice-lieutenant of the county of Stirling, and lieutenant-colonel of the Yeomanry of that shire, succeeded his father in 1814.

Lineage.

This family has been seated for centuries in the county of Stirling, and is supposed to derive from the noble house of Bothwel. Its patriarch,

Sir William de Moravia, designed of Sanford, joined Robert Bruce in defence of the liberties of his country, but, being taken prisoner by the English, was sent to London in 1306, and remained in captivity there until exchanged after the battle of Bannockburn. Sir William's son and successor,

Sir Andrew de Moravia, obtained from King David Bruce two charters; the first, granting the lands of Kepmad, dated in 1365; and the second, bestowing Tulchadam, Tulchmalar, &c. in 1369. Sir William died temp. Robert II. and was s. by his son,

William de Moravia, of Touchadam, living in 1392, in which year he had a charter from King Robert III. He wedded Christian Cunninghame, and was father of Alexander de Moravia, of Touchadam, who, in 1455, upon the resignation of his father, got a charter, from James II. of the lands of Weigateschaw, in the county of Lanark; and Touchadam, Newark, &c. in the shire of Stirling; all erected into a barony. He m. — Sutherland, and had a son and successor, William Murray, of Touchadam, constable of the castle of Stirling in the reign of James III. This laird acquired, in 1459, the lands of Buchadrock, in Stirlingshire, and in 1462, in a baron court held at Dunipace concerning part of the lands of Herbertshire, of which William, earl of Orkney, was superior, William Murray, of Touchadam was, by his lordship, appointed judge.

Touchadam married a lady named Christian, and had four sons,

I. David, his heir.
II. John, father of John, of Gawamore, successor to his uncle.
III. Herbert.
IV. Patrick.

The eldest son,

David Murray, of Touchadam, having no issue, made a resignation of his whole estate to his nephew,

John Murray, of Gawamore, captain of the king's guards and lord provost of Edinburgh, who, upon the demise of his uncle about the year 1471, became "of Touchadam," and got a confirmation thereof under the great seal. This John Murray was a firm and devoted adherent of King James III. After the battle of Stirling, he was deprived of a considerable portion of his estate, and a great number of the old family writs were embezzled and lost. He espoused a daughter of — Seaton, of Winton, and had a son and heir,

William Murray, of Touchadam, living in 1507, who m. Agnes, daughter of John Cockburn, of Ormiston, and was s. at his decease, in 1514, by his son,

John Murray, of Touchadam, who had a charter under the great seal, dated 9th June, 1541, of the lands of Sandieholmes, in Lanarkshire. He wedded the Lady Janet Erskine, daughter of Robert, fourth earl of Marr, and had two sons, William and James, by the elder of whom,
William Murray, of Touchadam, he was succeeded. This lard married Agnes, dau. and co-heir of James Cunningham, of Polmais, in the county of Stirling, and dying in 1569, left, with a daughter, Agnes, a son and successor.

Sir John Murray, of Touchadam and Polmais, who got a charter, dated 26th December, 1652, to himself and Jan Cockburn his wife, of several lands in Stirlingshire, containing a new erection, in consideration of the many good services he had himself rendered to the king, as well as of the loyalty so frequently displayed by his great-great-grandfather, John Murray, of Touchadam. Sir John m. Jean, daughter of John Cockburn, of Ormiston, and was s. by his son,

Sir William Murray, of Touchadam and Polmais, who obtained from Charles I. a charter of the lands of Cowie in 1636. During the conflicts which harassed the reign of that ill-fated prince, Sir William strained every nerve in defence of the royal cause, and, in consequence, suffered severely from the enactments of the adverse party. He was in the engagement of the duke of Hamilton, and in 1654, was emerced by Cromwell in the sum of fifteen hundred pounds. He died shortly after, and left, by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Sir Alexander Gibson, of Durie, a son and successor.

In the year 1400, July 12, seeing that God had vouchsafed him to build a certain hospital at the Bridge End of Nottingham, in honour of God, and the annunitation of his mother, the blessed Virgin, for the sustenance of thirteen poor women, he proposed to ordain a chantry, and willed that it should be at the altar of the annunitation of the blessed Virgin Mary, in the chapel built beneath the said hospital, and should be of two chaplains perpetually to pray for the state of the king, of him the said John de Plumptre, and Emma, his wife, and of the whole community of Nottingham, who, with the prior of Lenton, after the death of John, the founder, were to present to it, and each of the two chaplains were, for their stipends, to have one hundred shillings yearly, paid in money, out of the said ten tenements and two tofts in Nottingham."

there interred, and succeeded by his eldest son,

Nicholas Plumptre, esq. of Nottingham, at whose decease, unmarried, 3rd April, 1614, the estates and representation of the family vested in his brother,

Huntingdon Plumptre, M.D. of Nottingham, bapt. 5th February, 1601, a gentleman of great professional reputation, who is recorded in Gervase Holles's Memoirs of the Earls of Clare, as attending the first earl in his last illness, being "accounted the best physician at Nottingham." He was likewise noted for his wit and learning, and when a young master of arts at Cambridge, published "Epigrammatum Opusculum, duobis libellis distinctum, Lond. 1629, 8vo." and subsequently "Homeri Batrachomymachia Latino carmine redita, varisque in locis aucta et illustrata." In 1650 he pulled down the hospital erected by his ancestor, rebuilt it as it now appears, and so advanced the rents that the monthly allowance to the poor became double what it was previous. Of the decay and eventual renewal of the Plumptre Hospital, Thorton gives the following account: "After the dissolution of the monasteries in the 2d Edward VI. Sir Gervase Clifton, Sir John Hersey, Sir Anthony Neville, knights, and William Bolles, esq. commissioners for the survey of colleges, chapels, &c. certified that no poor were then to be found in this hospital, and that the lands were then wholly employed to the benefit of one Sir Piers Bursdale, priest, master thereof. Afterwards both the hospital and chapel became ruinous and demolished, and the very materials embezzled, till after divers patents of the said mastership, Nicholas Plumptre, of Nottingham, 24th Elizabeth, obtained one, and with the fines he received made some reparations, and brought in some poor, but, after his decease, during the mastership of Richard Parkyns, of Boney, and Sir George, his son, who, it seems, were trusted successively, for Henry Plumptre, son and heir of the said Nicholas, in his minority, both the hospital and tenements belonging to it grew into great decay, until after Sir George's death, that Nicholas Plumptre, son and heir of Henry, last named, became master by a patent, 5th Charles I. and made some repairs and amendments, which yet were not judged sufficient by his brother and heir, Huntingdon Plumptre, doctor of physic, who succeeded him in the mastership, which he obtained in 1645."

Dr. Plumptre m. first, 18th July, 1638, Jane, youngest daughter of Richard Scott, esq. of Byshopdicke Hall, in the county of York, but that lady dying s.p. 5th June, 1641, he espoused secondly, 14th August, 1642, Christian, third daughter of Sir Richard Brooke, of Norton, in Cheshire, by Catherine, his wife, daughter of Sir Henry Neville, M.P. of Billinghore, in Berks, and had issue,

Colonel Badcock served, with distinction, in the 14th dragoons, in France, Spain, and Portugal. He succeeded his father 13th April, 1821.

Lineage:

The Rev. Benjamin Lovell, who appears, from strong presumptive evidence, to have been descended from the baronial house of Tichmarsh,* was born about the year 1600, and appointed in 1639, Parson of Preston Bagot, in the county of Warwick. He married and had three sons, viz.

1. Salathiel, named after the puritans of those days.

2. Robert, buried at Coventry.

These two were evidently named after the eldest and third sons of William Lord Lovell.

In 1658, the Rev. Benjamin Lovell buried his wife at Leckhampsted, Bucks, from which rectory he was driven, as a Roundhead, during the troubled times in which he lived;—what subsequently became of him has not been ascertained, but his eldest son,

Sir Salathiel Lovell, who entered Gray's Inn, in 1649, became eminent at the bar, and was made a sergeant at law in 1692, receiving at the same time the honor of knighthood. He was afterwards appointed recorder of London, deputy recorder of Northampton, and eventually in 1708, one of the barons of the Exchequer. John Patten, who m. a Derbyshire lady, named Revyle, and had, with a daughter, Agnes, the wife of John Segar, a son and successor,

John Patten, who wedded — Poole, of the county of Derby, and had two sons, John, his heir, and William of Wheldryk, in Yorkshire, who m. Emma Everingham, and had a son, Thomas, of Wheldryk, living in 1429, who left two daughters and co-heirs, named Agnes and Idonea. John Patten's elder son and successor,

John Patten, of Dagenham Court, in Essex, and of Waynflete, in Lincolnshire, flourished in the reign of Edward III. and was alive in 1376. He espoused the daughter and heiress of Sir Oswald Westingeroff, of Westingeroff, in Lancashire, and had a son, Nicholas Patten, of Waynflete, in the county of Lincoln, who had three sons, namely,

1. John, of Waynflete, who left an illegitimate daughter, Joan, wife of — Valence, of Kent.
2. Nicholas, Lord of Dagenham, who left a daughter, Margaret, m. to — Bostock, of Cheshire, and a son, Robert, of Dagenham, living temp. Henry IV., who married and had daughters only. Juliana, one of these co-heirs, marrying Richard Churchstyle, of Essex, conveyed to him the manor of Dagenham.
The third son, Richard Patten, alias Waynflete, of Waynflete, sometime in the reigns of the fifth or sixth Henry, wedded Margery, daughter of Sir William Brereton, knt. of Brereton, in Cheshire, (who d. 4th Henry VI., by Anylla, his wife, daughter of Hugh Venables), and had issue,

1. William Patten, alias Waynflete, the illustrious founder of Magdalen College, Oxford, who was born at Waynflete, (whence, as was the custom of those times, he derived his surname,) but the exact period of his birth has never yet been ascertained. He was educated at Winchester school, and studied afterwards at Oxford, but in what college is uncertain. The historian of Winchester is inclined to prefer New College, which is most consistent with the progress of education at Wykeham's school. Wood acknowledges that although his name does not occur among the fellows of New College, nor among those of Merton, where Holinshed places him, unless he was a chaplain or postmaster, yet "the general vogue is for the college of William of Wykeham." Wherever he studied, his proficiency in the literature of the times, and in philosophy and divinity, in which last he took the degree of bachelor, is said to have been great, and the fame he acquired as schoolmaster, at Winchester, with the classical library he formed, is a proof that he surpassed in such learning as was then attainable.

Of his preferments in the church we have no account that can be relied upon. Wood says he was rector of Wraxall in 1433, which is barely possible, and that he was rector of Chedsey in 1469, which is highly improbable, for he had then been twenty years Bishop of Winchester. It is, however, more clearly ascertained that, about 1420, he was appointed head master of Winchester school. In 1438 he was master of St. Mary Magdalen Hospital, near Winchester, which is supposed to have suggested to him the name and patroness of his foundation at Oxford. In 1440, when Henry VI. visited Winchester, for the purpose of inspecting the discipline, constitution, and progress of Wykeham's school, on the model of which he had begun to found one at Eton, he procured the consent of Waynflete to remove thither with thirty-five of his scholars and five fellows, whose education Waynflete superintended until 1442, when he was appointed provost of that celebrated seminary. On the demise of Cardinal Beaufort, in 1447, he was advanced to the see of Winchester, which he held for the long space of thirty-nine years, during which he amply justified the recommendation of the king, being distinguished for "piety, learning, and prudence." His acknowledged talents and political sagacity procured him the unreserved confidence of his royal master, who appears to have treated him with condescending familiarity, employed him in affairs of critical importance, and received throughout the whole of his turbulent reign abundant proofs of his invaluable loyalty and attachment. In October, 1456, he was constituted Lord High Chancellor in the room of Bourchier, Archbishop of Canterbury, and held the seals of office nearly four years, resigning in the month of July, 1460, about which time he accompanied the king to Northampton, and was with him a few days before the fatal battle near that place, in which the Lancastrians were defeated. Waynflete's attachment to Henry's cause had been uniform and decided, yet his high character appears to have protected him. Edward IV. treated him not only with respect, but with some degree of magnanimity, as he twice issued a special pardon in his favour, and condescended to visit his newly founded college at Oxford. The evening of the bishop's life was passed free from political strife and danger, and he lived to witness the quiet union of the rival roses, in the nuptials of Henry of Richmond and Elizabeth of York. This learned prelate, celebrated by historians for piety, temper, and humanity, died 11th August, 1486, and was interred, with great funeral pomp, in Winchester cathedral, in a magnificent sepulchral chapel, which is kept in the finest preservation by the society of Magdalen College. (See Chalmers, Chandler, &c. &c.)

* Thomas Wilson, the pious and venerable bishop of Sodor and Man, was born at Burton, in Cheshire, anno 1663, and was fifth son of Nathaniel Wilson, of Burton, by Alice his wife, sister of Dr. Sherlock. His education was completed at Trinity College, Dublin, on leaving which, in 1686, he was licensed to the curacy of New Church, in Winwick parish, of which his uncle, Dr. Sherlock, was rector. To this circumstance he was indebted for his introduction to the Stanley family, from whom, in 1697, he received the bishopric of Sodor and Man. The annual receipts of his new prebendary did not exceed £300, in money, out of which small stipend and the produce of his demesnes he contrived to maintain his house, to relieve distressed mariners, and feed and clothe the poor of the island. His life was, in fact, one uniform display of the most genuine and active benevolence, considering hin-
The Rev. Thomas Wilson, D.D., prebendary of Westminster, chaplain and sub-almoner to King George II., b. 24th August, 1703, married at Whitehall chapel, 4th February, 1733, his cousin-german, Mary, only dau. of the steward, not the proprietor, of the revenues of the bishopric, he devoted his income to what he esteemed its proper use. The poor who could spin or weave found the best market at Bishop's Court, where they bartered the produce of their labour for corn. Tailors and shoemakers were kept in the house constantly employed, to make into garments or shoes the cloth or leather which his corn had purchased; and the aged and infirm were supplied according to their several wants. At the same time he kept an open, hospitable table, covered with the produce of his own domains, and to which all sects and parties were alike welcome. To the duties of his sacred function he applied himself with the utmost zeal, and endeavoured by his exhortations and example to animate the clergy of the island to a regular and faithful discharge of their pastoral office. So great indeed was his perseverance, and so successful his endeavours, that Lord Chancellor King used to declare that, "if the ancient discipline of the church were everywhere lost, it might still be found in all its purity in the Isle of Man." In 1707, the degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by the universities of Oxford and Cambridge; and in the same year he printed the church catechism in Manks and English, for the use of the schools which he had established in various parts of his diocese, and which he superintended with the greatest care. About the year 1722, the orthodoxy of his spirit seems to have involved him in alternations and difficulties. Mrs. Horne, the wife of the governor of the island, had defamed Mrs. Puller and Sir Robert Pool, and in consequence being contumacious, and refusing to ask pardon of the persons injured, was interdicted by the bishop from the holy communion. But his archdeacon, Mr. Horribin, who was chaplain to Captain Horne, received the lady, and incurred suspension in consequence at the hands of his lordship. The governor conceiving this to be a stretch of power beyond the law fixed the bishop in the sum of £30. and his two vicars-general in that of £20. each; and on their refusing to discharge those arbitrary penalties, committed them all to Castle Rushin, a damp and gloomy prison, where Dr. Wilson was treated with the utmost rigour. The bishop appealed to the lords justices, when the proceedings of the governor were declared extrajudicial and irregular, and the fines were ordered to be restored. His lordship survived until his ninety-third year, when he expired on the 7th March, 1753, universally esteemed and lamented. His attachment to his flock had been so sincere, that no temptation (he had been offered the valuable see of Exeter) could seduce him from the services of his little diocese.

His works, consisting of religious tracts and sermons, were collected by his son, and published in 1730.

Family of Bold.

The Bolds were seated, it is affirmed, before the Conquest at Bold, in the county of Lancaster; and in the reign of Henry III. we find in Testa de Norm that Matthew de Bolde, the grandson of William de Bolde, of Bolde, was employed on an inquisition to make a return of the "Nomina villarum, serjeantes et knights fees," in the hundred of West Derby. They have ever since maintained the highest place among the great landed proprietors of the north of England, have constantly received the honour of knighthood, have represented their native shire in parliament, and have allied with its most distinguished families.

Sir Richard Bold, knt. of Bold, living in the time of Richard II. Mary-Anne, m. in 1825, to Robert-Darwin Vaughton, esq. of Whitchurch, in the county of Shropshire.

This gentleman, a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for the county of Flint, and formerly major in the West Shropshire local militia, succeeded his father in 1784.
Lineage.

Here we have another branch of the numerous descendants of Tudur Trevor. (see family of Vaughan, of Burton Hall, p. 239), to whom so many of the principal families of North Wales, and the marches thereof, trace their origin.

Ry Sansais, so called because he could speak the Saxon or English language, possessed great estates in North Wales and Shropshire at the period of the Norman conquest, which he divided among his sons in the year 1070. His eldest son, Tudur, was father of Bleddyn, the father of Owen, who had several children: one of these, Thomas, was father of Meirion, who resided at Bryn, in Halkerton, in the parish of Hanmer, and was ancestor of the Pennants, of Downing, Bichton, &c. Another son of Owen ap Bleddyn was Owen Vychan, father of Cadwgan, the father of Ririd, whose son, Madoc ap Ririd, espoused Margaret, daughter of Ithel Anwyl, a chieftain of Tegengl, (as most of Flintshire was at that period called by the Welsh), and had a son and successor.

David ap Madoc, who, according to the mode of address then used in Wales, was called “Dai Madoc;” for David ap Madoc would thus be spoken, Dai being the diminutive of David. He m. Margaret, daughter and heir of Tudur ap Ririd, of Penley, by whom he acquired that estate, and had a son and heir, David ap Dai Madoc, whose name, by mutation of address, was David Dai Madoc, that is David, the son of Dai (David) Madoc, and from the mode of expression then customary David Dai Madoc became David Damoc, or Dymock, for it is written both ways in ancient manuscripts. Henceforward Damoc or Dymock became the adopted surname of the family.

David Dai Madoc, who lived at Willington, in the county of Flint, wedded Margaret, daughter of David Voel, of Hanmer, (son of David, one of the sons of Sir John Hopton, or Upton, of Bettisfield, in Hanmer, lineal male ancestor of the Hanners, of Hanmer, now represented by Sir John Hanmer, bart., and had a son, Ieuon Dymock, of Penley and Willington, in the county of Flint, father, by Lucy his wife, daughter of Richard ap Madoc ap Llewelyn, of Halkerton, in the same shire, of

By the second, Magdalen, dau. of Roger Puleston, esq. as appears by a deed dated in 1622, he had another son, William, who succeeded to the estates. The third wife, Catherine, daughter of William Mostyn, esq. died without issue; and the fourth, Margaret, daughter of Thomas Kynaston, esq. left one son, Thomas, and a daughter, Anne. He was s. by his elder surviving son, WENTWORTH, OF WOOLLEY.

Lineage.

This is a distinguished and powerful branch of the ancient stock of Wentworth Woodhouse, in the county of York, a family which has been rooted there from the earliest period to which the genealogist can usually ascend in his investigations. Of the orthography of the lands, whence originated the name, Domesday Book, and all the old charters have it Wintworth, and such is still the pronunciation of the common people, who do not easily fall into new modes of speech. As to its derivation, Mr. Hunter, "in his History of Doncaster," makes the following remarks: "The latter half of the name (worth), is one of the most frequent local terminals, and appears to denote some degree of cultivation. The former half affords room for conjecture. It has been suggested that it may be the word girint, preserved in the Breton language, which is a dialect of the Celtic, where it denotes elevation. This sense would undoubtedly apply well to Wentworth, which stands high, as does also another place of the same name, in the isle of Ely, relatively to the fens around it. Celtic etymologies are, however, to be admitted with great caution in investigating the names of places cultivated or populated; and perhaps the scribe of Domesday, who, in one of the five instances in which the word occurs, has written it thus, Wintervorde, may have presented us with an ancient and expiring orthography from whence we may conclude that the name of Wentworth is to be classed with Winterton, Winterburn, Winteredge, and other places which have obtained those names from their high exposed or cold situations."

While the lands of Wentworth Woodhouse continued to be the seat of the chiefs, and descended from sire to son, in an unbroken series, till the succession of male heirs failed with William, the second earl of Strafford, the junior scions of the family founded, in several instances, houses of rank and influence, the Wentworths of Woolley, of North and South Elmsal,* of Bretton,† of Wentworth Castle,‡ of Netleton,§ &c.

Thomas Wentworth, of Wentworth Woodhouse, son of William Wentworth, by Isabel, his wife, daughter of Sir Richard Fitzwilliam, of Aldwark, succeeded to the estates and representation of the family, in the 23rd of Henry VII. He wedded Beatrice, daughter of Sir Richard Woodruffe, kn. of Woolley, whose house was then in the plenitude of its prosperity, and had issue,

1. William, of Wentworth Woodhouse, who enjoyed the estates only a few months, dying 4th July, 1549. He m. Catherine, daughter of Ralph Beeston, of Beeston, and was s. by his son,

Thomas Wentworth, esq. of Wentworth Woodhouse, high

* The Wentworths of North Elmsal acquired that estate temp. Edward III. in marriage with Alice, daughter and heiress of John Bissett, and continued there for several centuries, until the year 1741, when their male line expired with Sir Butler Cavendish Wentworth, bart. The estates devolving on that gentleman's half sister, Catherine Wentworth, who wedded Hugh Cholmley, esq. of Whithy, in the county of York, M.P. for Hedon, and sheriff of that shire in 1724. The Wentworths of South Elmsal sprung from a younger son of Thomas Wentworth, of North Elmsal, are also now extinct.

† The Wentworths of Breton, deriving from Richard Wentworth, of Everton, in the county of Nottingham, third son of John Wentworth, of Elmsal, by Agnes, his wife, sister and co-heir of Sir William Dronfield, of Breton, became extinct in the male line upon the demise of Sir Thomas Wentworth Blackett, bart. 9th July, 1792. The estates of Breton, &c. are now enjoyed by the Beaumont family, (see vol. ii. p. 583).

‡ The Wentworths of Wentworth Castle were founded by Sir William Wentworth, of Ashby, in Lincolnshire, slain at Marston Moor, who was a younger son of Sir William Wentworth, bart. of Wentworth Woodhouse, and brother to Thomas, first earl of Strafford. They became extinct in the male line in 1799. The estates are now possessed by Frederic Thomas William Vernon Wentworth, esq. of Wentworth Castle, (see vol. ii. p. 81).

§ For an account of the Wentworths of Netleton, earls of Cleveland, and barons Wentworth, now represented by Anna Isabella, Dowager Lady Byron, and the Hon. Nathaniel Curzon, between whom the barony of Wentworth is in abeyance, refer to Burke's Extinct and Dormant Peerage.
sheriff for Yorkshire in the 21st Elizabeth. This gentleman augmented in a great degree his inheritance by his marriage with Margaret, daughter of William Gascoigne, esq. of Gawthorpe, long one of the principal families of the West Riding, and whose pedigree boasted of the name of chief justice Gascoigne.
By this lady, Mr. Wentworth left at his decease, in 1587, one son and four daughters, namely, 1. William (Sir), of Wentworth Woodhouse, created a Baronet in 1611, father of Thomas Wentworth, the ill-fated Earl of Straf-ford, and grandfather of the Lady Anne Wentworth, who wedded Edward Watson, second Lord Rockingham. The great grand-daughter and eventual heiress of this marriage, Lady Anne Wentworth, esposed in 1744, William, third Earl Fitzwilliam, and was grandmother of Charles-William, present Earl Fitzwilliam. See Burke's Peerage.

ichael, son and heir of John Lord D'Arcy; and secondly, to Jasper Blitheman, esq. of New Latres.
4. Catherine, m. in 1596, to the unfortunate Thomas Gargrave,* esq. of Nostel.

* Few names are of more frequent occurrence in the affairs of the West Riding of Yorkshire, than that of Gargrave, derived, it is presumed, from a village so called, in Craven. The first recorded ancestor of the family of Sir John Gar-grave, who was tutor to Richard, duke of York, and a warrior as well as scholar, served under Henry V. as master of the ordnance in France.
He was direct progenitor of Sir Thomas Gar-grave, speaker of the house of Commons, who purchaseing in the 9th Elizabeth, Nostel, with other estates in the county of York, established his family there. His son and heir, Sir Cotton Gargrave, knt. of Nostel, wedded first, Bridget, daughter of Sir William Fairfax, of Steeton, and by her had to survive himself, an only son, Thomas, of Nostel, who married, as in the text, Catherine, daughter of Thomas Wentworth, and was executed for murder at York.

esq. of Greensbrooke, in Yorkshire.

of Loverall, in Yorkshire.
Thomas Wentworth d. 5th December, 1548, and was buried at Wentworth. His second son,
Michael Wentworth, esq. of Mendam Priory, in the county of Suffolk, living in the 38th of Henry VIII. was cofficer to the king and comptroller to the queen. He
m. Isabel, daughter and heir of Percival Whitley, esq. of Whitley, in Yorkshire, and had by her, who died in 1560, three sons and three daughters. He died 13th October, 1558, and in the inquisition taken the 30th of the following April, it is found that his son and heir,
Thomas Wentworth, esq. of Mendam Priory, in Suffolk, and of Whitley, in the county of York, was then aged seventeen years and two months. This gentleman es-sposed Susan, dau. of Christopher Hopton, esq. of Arnaley Hall, in the latter shire, and had (with two daughters, Beatrix, m. to John Green, esq. of Dean Grange, in Hors-forth, and Mary, the wife of Robert Con-

Sir Cotton espoused secondly, Agnes, daughter of Thomas Waterton, esq. of Walton, and had (with other issue, of whom one daughter, Elizabeth, m. William Fenwick, esq. of Stanton, and another, Frances, m. Stephen Tempest, esq. of Broughton), a son,
Sir Richard Gargrave, knt. of Kinsley and Nostel, sheriff of Yorkshire, 3rd James I. who,
by a course of extravagant and wanton expenditure, was forced to sell his estates, and became so reduced in circumstances, that Dodsworth, writing in 1634, speaking of him says, "that he now lyeth in the Temple for Sanctuary, having consumed his whole estate, to the value of £3500 per annum, at the least, and hath not a penny to maintain himself, but what the purchasers of some part of his lands, in reversion after his mother's death, allow him, in hope he will survive his mother, who hath not consented to the sale."

Beyond this (says Mr. Hunter) I have not ever been able to trace him. The memory of his extravagance and his vices yet lingers about Kinsley. The rustic moralist still points his counsel with the story of Sir Richard Gargrave, who could once ride on his own land from Wakefield to Doncaster, and had horses innumerable at his command, but was at last reduced to travel with the pack-horses to London, and was found dead in an old ostolry with his head upon a pack-saddle.

Michael Wentworth, who enjoyed his purchase of Woolley more than forty years, died just at the commencement of the civil war, and by the inquisition taken 9th September, 1642, it was found that he had died successor, and by his next brother, Sir George Wentworth, knt. of Woolley, who, on the breaking out of the civil war, zealously followed the example of the whole race of Wentworth, espoused the course of the king. Amongst other acts of devotion he raised for his majesty a regiment

as colonel, commanded it himself. He m.

LUCY, OF CHARLECOTE.

LUCY, GEORGE, esq. of Charlecote, in the county of Warwick, b. 8th June, 1789, m. 2nd December, 1823, Mary-Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Williams, bart. of Bodelwydden, in Flintshire, and has issue, William-Fulk, b. 10th September, 1824.

Henry-Spenser, b. 28th November, 1830.
Mary-Emily, b. 2nd February, 1826.
Caroline, b. 13th January, 1829.

Mr. Lucy succeeded his father on the 12th January, 1823. He was M.P. for the borough of Fowey, Cornwall, from 1820 to 1830, and sheriff of the county of Warwick in 1831.

Lineage.

Thurstane de Charlecote, supposed to have been a younger son of Thurstane de Montfort,* of Beldeesert, in the county of Warwick, temp. Richard I. was father of

Sir Walter de Charlecote, upon whom Henry de Montfort conferred the village of Charlecote, and the grant was confirmed by Richard I. who added divers immunities and privileges, which were all ratified by King John in the fifth year of that monarch’s reign (1203). Sir Walter left a son,

Sir William de Lucy, the first of the Charlecotes who bore that surname, and Sir William Dugdale surmises that he did so because his mother might have been the heir of some branch of the great baronial family of Lucy, which had derived its designation from a place in Normandy. Of this house was Henry de Lucy, governor of Falais, so distinguished during the conflict between King Stephen and the Empress Maud, who was afterwards, in the time of Henry II. justiciary of England; and at one period, in the temporary absence of the king beyond sea, lieutenant of the kingdom.

Sir William de Lucy had a confirmation of the lordship of Charlecote from Thurston de Montfort, son and successor of the Thurstone de Montfort above specified. He took up arms with the barons against King John, when his lands were all seized by the crown; but returning to his allegiance, he had a full restoration in the first year of the ensuing monarch. In the 20th of Henry III. Sir William had the custody of the counties of Warwick and Leicester, with the castle of Kenilworth. He married, first, Isabel, daughter of Absalom de Aldersmgonstone; and secondly, Maud, sister and one of the co-heirs of John Cotele. He founded the monastery of Thelsford, and dying about the 32nd Henry III. (1247) was succeeded by the son of his second marriage.

Sir William Lucy, knt. of Charlecote, who wedded Amicia, daughter and heiress of William de Furches, and heiress likewise of William Fitz-Warine, by whom he had a son and heir,

Foul de Lucy, of Charlecote (in the immediate retinue of the celebrated Peter de Montfort), who, after the battle of Lewes, temp. Henry III. was constituted one of the nine governors of the kingdom. De Lucy acquired so much reputation by his gallantry in the Baron’s war, that being indebted to one Elyas de Blund, a Jew, of London, in a large amount, he obtained a special mandate, dated 49th Henry III. (1264) and directed to the commissioners in whose hands the estates of the Jews then seized upon were entrusted, to deliver up to him all his bonds, and to cancel the debt. Subsequently, however, the royal cause having attained the ascendancy by the victorious arms of Prince Edward, De Lucy and his associates were glad to compromise for their estates under the Dictam de Kenilworth. "This Folk," says Durand, "was a special plier of good horses, as it would seem, for in the 11th of Edward I. he gave forty marks to two Londoners that were mercenaries of horses, for a black charger, about which time a fat ox was sold for sixteen shillings." He died in the 31st of Edward I. (1302) and was s. by his son.

Sir William Lucy, of Charlecote, a person of celebrity in his generation, and representative in several parliaments for the county of Warwick. He was succeeded by his son,

Sir William Lucy, of Charlecote, who received a military summons in the 19th of Edward III. to attend the king into France, but being then joined in commission with the sheriff to array one hundred and sixty archers in Warwickshire for the king's service, his attendance was dispensed with, and he was thereby deprived of sharing in the glory of Cressy. He died in three years afterwards (22nd Edward III. 1348) and was s. by his son,

Thomas Lucy, of Charlecote, who was s. at his decease by his son,

Sir William Lucy, of Charlecote, who being a knight was retained in the 5th Richard II. (1381) to serve John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster and King of Castile, for life, with one esquire, in times of war and peace. In the first year of the next king he represented the county of Warwick in parliament. His son and successor,

Sir Thomas Lucy, of Charlecote, was also in the return of John of Gaunt. In the 7th of Henry IV. (1405) he was member of parliament for Warwickshire, and the next year sheriff for the counties of Warwick and Leicester. He wedded Alice, daughter, and eventually heiress, of Sir William Hugford, and acquired by that lady a fair inheritance in the counties of Bedford and Salop. He died 28th July, 3rd Henry V. (1415), leaving by the said Alice (who married, in eight weeks after his decease, Richard Archer, of Tamworth) a son and successor,

William Lucy, of Charlecote, who during his minority was in ward to John Boteler, of Warrington. Upon the decease of Elizabeth Lady Clinton, in the 2nd of Henry VI. (1423) he was found to be her cousin and next heir. In the war of the Roses, William Lucy arrayed himself under the banner of the house of York. He wedded Elizabeth, daughter of Reginald, Lord Grey de Ruthyn, and dying in the 6th Edward IV. (1466) was succeeded by his son,

Sir William Lucy, of Charlecote, created a knight of the Bath at the coronation of Henry the Seventh's queen. He espoused, first, Margaret, daughter of John Brecknock, treasurer to King Henry VI.; and secondly, Alice, daughter of William Hanbury. He died in 1492, and was succeeded by his eldest son by his first wife,

Edmund Lucy, esq. of Charlecote, born in 1464, who appears to have been a soldier of high repute in the reign of Henry VII. for we find him in command of a division of the royal army at the battle of Stoke, and afterwards retained to serve the king in his French wars, with two men at arms. He was summoned, 10th Henry VII. (1494), with other persons of rank, to attend at the creation of the king's son, the Duke of York, to be made a knight of the Bath; but it seems he did not appear, for in the April following (1495) 11th Henry VII. his testament bears date, and in that he is styled esquire. He wedded Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Walter Trasmington, by whom he had no issue; and secondly, Jane, daughter of Richard Ludlow, and was succeeded at his decease (the probate of his testament being 19th May, 1498, 11th Henry VII.) by his eldest son,

Sir Thomas Lucy, knt. of Charlecote, one of the servers to King Henry VIII. who wedded Elizabeth, relict of George Catesby, esq. of Ashby-Legers, in the county of Northampton, and daughter of Sir Richard Empson, knt. by whom he had issue,

William, his heir. Thomas, upon whom his father settled the manor of Cleybrooke, in Leicestershire.

Edmund, who inherited the manors of Beeckering and Sharpenho.

Anne, m. to Thomas Herbert, esq.

Radigund, m. to — Betts, esq.

Barbara, m. to Richard Tracy, esq. of Stanway, in Gloucestershire.

Sir Thomas Lucy died in 1525, and was s. by his eldest son,

William Lucy, esq. of Charlecote, who m. Anne, daughter of Richard Ferrer, esq. of East Neston, in Northamptonshire, and was succeeded, in the 5th of Edward VI. 1551, by his eldest son,

Sir Thomas Lucy, of Charlecote, who, in the 1st of Queen Elizabeth, rebuilt the manor-house with brick, as it now stands. He was knighted a few years afterwards, and he subsequently represented the county of Warwick in parliament. His remarkable prosecution of Shakspeare, for deer-stealing, in Fulbroke-park, has attached, however, more celebrity to his name than any of the honours which he had enjoyed. This prosecution was conducted with much bitterness, in consequence of a lampoon, written by the poet on Sir Thomas, who at length compelled him, about the year 1585-6, to fly from his native place. The great dramatist subsequently avenged himself, by delineating his prosecutor under the character of Justice Slippery. Sir Thomas Lucy wedded Joice, daughter and heiress of Thomas Acton, esq. of Sutton, in Worcestershire, and had a daughter, Anne, married to Sir Edward Aston, kn. of Tixhall, and dying in 1600, was s. by his only son, Sir Thomas Lucy, of Charlecote, who wedded, first, Dorothy, daughter of Nicholas Arnold, esq. by whom he had a son, Thomas, who died young; and a daughter, Joyce, the wife of Sir William Cook, kn. of Highnam. Sir Thomas m. secondly, Constance, daughter and heir of Sir Richard Kingsmill, of High Clere, Hants, and had by that lady six sons and several daughters, viz.

1. Thomas, his heir.

ii. Richard, who received the honour of knighthood 8th January, 1617, and was created a baronet 11th March following. He m. first, Elizabeth, daughter and co-heiress of Sir Henry Cock, of Broxburn, in Herts, and relict of the hon. Robert West, by whom he had (with a daughter, Constancia, m. to Henry, Lord Colerain) an only son and successor, Sir Kingsmill Lucy, second baronet of Facombe, in Hampshire, who m. Lady Theophila Berkeley, and left a son and two daughters, viz.

1. Berkeley (Sir), third baronet, who wedded Catherine, daughter of Charles Cotton, esq. of Beresford, and left at his decease an only daughter and heiress, Mary, m. to the hon. Charles Compton.

2. Theophila, married to Sir William Ingoldsby, bart.

3. Mary, d. unm.

III. George, slain in France.

iv. William, in holy orders, D. D. rector of Burgh-Clerc and High-Clerc, in Hampshire, m. Martha, daughter of William Angell, of London, esq. Dr. Lucy was an eminent divine, and a staunch supporter of the royal cause. Having suffered great persecution, he survived to witness the restoration of the monarchy, and was consecrated bishop of St. David's in 1660, wherein he continued until his decease. "He was a person," says Wood, in the Athenae Oxonienses, "of signal candour and virtues requisite in a clergyman, which in the very worst of times gained him great esteem from the very enemies of his cause and faction." His lordship d. 4th October, 1677, and was buried in the collegiate church of Brecknock, in Wales. He was grandfather of William Lucy, esq. of Castle Carey, in Somersetsshire, and of George Lucy, esq. of Pembroke.

vi. Francis, of the city of Westminster, living 1682, married and had a son, Richard, who m. Rebecca, daughter and heiress of Thomas Chapman, esq. of Wormley, and relict of Sir Thomas Playters.

2. Anne.

Sir Thomas Lucy died in 1605, and lies buried in a chapel on the north side of the church of Charlecote, where a splendid monument has been erected to his memory by Dame Constance, his widow. He was s. by his eldest son, Sir Thomas Lucy, of Charlecote, member for Warwickshire in six successive parliaments, who espoused Alice, daughter and heiress of Thomas Spencer, esq. of Claverden, in Warwickshire, and had issue,

1. George, who both became William, 2. Charlecote. Fulk, m. to Elizabeth Mason, of London, and was father of Thomas Lucy, who succeeded his uncle, the Rev. William Lucy, D. D. at Charlecote in February, 1723-4, and of George Lucy, who inherited from his brother.

This Thomas d. in 1634, leaving no male issue, and was s. by (the eldest son of Sir Fulk Lucy, sixth son of the last Sir Thomas Lucy aforesaid and Isabella Davenport) his first cousin,

Colonel Irwin is in the commission of the peace since 1793, was formerly a governor of the county, and served the office of high sheriff in 1822.

Lineage.

The Irwins of Tanragoe have maintained a position of great respectability amongst the gentry of the county of Sligo, since their settlement in Ireland, but from which branch of the Scottish Irwins or Irvings, they descend has not been ascertained. The peculiar name of Crinus, borne by members of the family, is traditionally derived from Kynain Abtime, the second husband of the mother of Duncan, king of Scotland, to whom and his descendants that monarch granted the privilege of bearing the thistle as a crest.

John Irwin, esq. who wedded a daughter of Colonel Lewis Jones, of Ardaghlass, held a command in the parliamentary army, in which his father-in-law also served, and accompanied Cromwell into Ireland, settled in the county of Sligo. He was father of Alexander Irwin, esq. of the county of Sligo, who married the sister of — Griffith, esq. of Ballinear, and aunt of Colonel Griffith, father of Anne, countess of Harrington, and of Lady Rich. By this lady Mr. Irwin had six sons, who all died without issue, excepting the eldest,

Lineage.

This family claims to be descended from the Moores, or Mures, of Rowallan, but tradition alone confirms the assumption.

Charles Moore, esq. a captain in the army, who served in the wars of William III. espoused Miss Hay, of the family of the earls of Kinnoull, and was father of

The Rev. Charles Moore, minister of Stirling, who m. Marion, daughter of John Anderson, esq. of Dovehill, an old and respected family, and was s. by his only surviving son,

This eminent person maintained for many years a distinguished place in the literary world, and his works have been universally read and admired. The principal are “Zeluco,” “Edward,” and “Mordaunt.” Dr. Moore wedded Jane, youngest daughter of the Rev. John Simson, 8 professor of divinity in the university of Glasgow, and had issue, energy and exemplary assiduity to the duties of that station. Having risen to command, he early signalized his name in the West Indies, in Holland, and in Egypt. The unremitting attention, with which he devoted himself to the duties of every branch of his profession, obtained him the confidence, and he became the companion in arms of that illustrious officer, Sir Ralph Abercromby, who fell at the head of his victorious troops in an action which maintained our national superiority over the arms of France. In that engagement General Moore was wounded, when leading on the reserve with his usual gallantry; and on his return his majesty conferred upon him the honour of knighthood, and the order of the Bath. His subsequent career, the battle of Corunna, and the death of the gallant commander, in the arms of victory, are too well known to require more than the bare mention here."

"Like the immortal Wolfe," says Sir John Hope, in his dispatch to government, "he was snatched from his country at an early period of a life spent in her service; like Wolfe, his last moments were gilded by the prospect of success, and cheered by the acclamations of victory; like Wolfe, also his memory will for ever remain sacred in that country which he sincerely loved, and which he had so faithfully served." The interment of Sir John Moore took place early on the morning succeeding his death. A grave only three feet deep was dug by his officers on the bastion of Corunna, and there were deposited, unconfined, the mortal remains of the lamented hero.* In the cathedral church of St. Paul, however, a grateful nation has reared a monument to his memory. Sir John, who at the period of his decease in 1809, was commander in chief of the British forces in Spain, a lieutenant-general in the army, and colonel of the 52nd regiment of foot, being unmarried, was succeeded in the representation of the family by his next brother, the present James Carrick-Moore, esq. of Corstwol.

Alexander Dundas was slain at Pinkie, and succeeded by his eldest son, Archibald Dundas, of Fingask, served heir to his father in 1518, William Lord Ruthven being then sheriff. This Archibald was a man of much influence in the time of James VI. as appears by a letter of that monarch, dated in 1579, to Alexander Blair, of Balfyock, relative to the affairs of the county of Perth, he recommending him to consult with Archibald Dundas, of Fingask, as a person in whom he (the king) placed the greatest confidence. He was succeeded at his decease by his son, William Dundas, of Fingask, who wedded, in 1582, Margaret, eldest daughter and heir of Sir David Carnegie, of Cloutie, but having no issue, was succeeded by his brother;
Archibald Dundas, who, upon his own resignation, got a charter of confirmation of the lands and barony of Fingask, in favour of himself and his heirs male, anno 1609. He married first, Jane, daughter of Sir David Carnegie, by Eupham, his second wife, daughter of Sir David Wemyss, of Wemyss, and had a son, John, his heir; and a daughter, Nicholas, m. to Fairlie, of Braid. Archibald wedded secondly, Giles, daughter of Lawrence Mercer, of Aldie, and had a son, Lawrence, professor of humanity at Edinburgh. The eldest son,
Sir John Dundas, of Fingask, returned heir to his father in 1624, received the honour of knighthood from Charles I. at Dunfermline in 1633. Enthusiastically attached to the unfortunate monarch, and nearly related by his mother to the great and gallant marquis of Montrose, he devoted his energies and fortune to the royal cause, and ruined his estate,—the transmitted inheritance of so long a line of ancestry. He espoused first, Anne, daughter of Sir William Moncrief, of that ilk, but had no issue; and secondly, Margaret, daughter of George Dundas, of Dundas, by whom he had an only son, his successor in 1670, John Dundas, of Fingask, who m. Magdalen, daughter of Thomas Allardyce, son of Allardyce, of that ilk, and was succeeded in 1724, by his son,

He espoused first, Ann, daughter and sole heiress of Ralph Whitley, esq. of Aston Hall, in Flintshire, and had by her an only daughter,

Fifth in descent from Richard Whitley, and Margaret, his wife, was

Thomas Whitley, esq. who served the office of sheriff for Flintshire in 1638. He was one of the most devoted adherents of King Charles I. and was fined £125. by the parliament for his exertions in the royal cause. He was twice married, by his first wife, Dorothy, daughter of Thomas Ravenscroft, esq. he had one son, Robert Whitley, esq. afterwards of Aston, and two daughters. By the second wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Roger Brereton, of Stoke, he had five sons and five daughters. Lineage.

Owing, it is stated, to the destruction of the parish registry of Ennis, in the county of Clare, there is no possibility of now ascertaining the actual founder of this family in Ireland. He is presumed to have been THOMAS WESTBY, son of Major Westby, of Rawcliffe, in the county of Lancaster, who settled at Clonmel. (See vol. i. page 399.) Of this Thomas little is known, neither the name of his wife nor the time of his death: he is supposed, however, to have left the following issue,

His son, Arthur Jones, assumed the name and arms of Neville on inheriting the Furnace estates. He was great-grandfather of Henrietta Neville, who married, first, Edward, eldest son of Sir Edward Dering, of Surrenden, in Kent; and secondly, Sir William Geary, of Oxenheath.

Sir David Graham, third laird of Fintry, who m. a daughter of William, first Earl of Montrose, by Annabella his wife, daughter of John, first Lord Drummond, and left a son and successor,

* "This lady, maid of honour to Joanna queen of James I. of Scotland, was in the royal apartment when it was attacked by the assassins of that king, in 1437; on the first alarm she went to secure the door, but the bar having been removed she thrust her arm into its place, in the hopes of keeping them out; they broke her arm in forcing open the door and finished their bloody tragedy."—Douglas.

† In the marriage contract, dated 1476, failing Elizabeth, her sisters, Margaret, Lilias, and Elyson, are successively betrothed to the said Robert Graham.
WILLIAM GRAHAM, fourth of Fintry, who obtained, in 1529 and 1541, charters from James V., constituting his extensive lands in Forfarshire, Stirlingshire, and Perthshire, into "two free baronies, to be held bannock of the crown, to be called the baronies of Strathdickly, Comitis, in Forfarshire, and Buchlivy Graham, in Monteith." He appears to have been a man of literature, and a Latin poet by him is printed on the reverse of the title page of the second edition of a very rare book, "Discipulum in Morali Philosophia Opusculum: ex varis auctorum per Magistrum Guilielmum Manderston Scotiam superiore Collectum. Parisiis, 1523." Fintry married Catharine, daughter of John Beaton, of Balfour, and sister of Cardinal Beaton, Archbishop of St. Andrews and Chancellor of Scotland, and was succeeded by his son,

Sir DAVID GRAHAM, fifth of Fintry, who received the honour of knighthood from James VI. He m. Margaret, daughter of James, Lord Ogilvy, ancestor of the Earls of Airlie, and had three sons and one daughter, Alyson, m. to John Creighton, of Innermyile. His eldest son and successor, DAVID GRAHAM, sixth of Fintry, married Barbara, daughter of Sir James Scott, of Balwarie, (lineal descendant of the celebrated Sir Michael Scott) and had two sons, viz.

DAVID, his heir.

James, who possessed the lands of Monorgan and Craigo.

Fintry was beheaded at Edinburgh, in 1592, for his participation with the Earls of Huntly and Erroll in the popish plot, and was s. by his son,

DAVID GRAHAM, seventh of Fintry, who married Mary, daughter of Sir James Haliburton, of Picur, by Margaret his wife, daughter of Sir James Scrymgeour, of Dudhope, first Viscount Dudhope, and left two sons and one daughter, m. to Mackintosh, of Mackintosh.

This laird spent a great portion of the family estates in that royal cause during the civil wars, and his second son, James, left the college of Saint Andrews to join the standard of their chief, the gallant Marquis of Montrose; in the account of whose public funeral, A.D. 1661, by Bishop Wishart, the father and son are thus mentioned:—"The parish caryed by David Graham, of Fintry; this noble gentleman's predecessor was the son of the Lord Graham, then head of the house of Montrose, who, upon a second marriage on King James the First his sister, got the first baron of Fintry, which, in a direct male line, hath continued to this baron; and as their birth was high, so their qualifications have in every respect been great, for in all ages since their rise, nothing unbecoming loyal subjects or persons of honour could be laid to their charge, and he who possesses it now can claim as large a share as any of his ancestors.

"The arms of the defunct in mourning, by James Graham, of Bucklevy, son to the Baron of Fintry, a gentleman which nothing could ever startle from his majesty's service, and that he was a favourite of the deceased, and accompanied his son in the late Highland war, is sufficient to speak his praises." David Graham was succeeded by his son,

John Graham, eighth of Fintry, who espoused the Lady Margaret Scrymgeour, only child of James, Earl of Dundee, by the Lady Margaret Ramsey his wife, daughter of the Earl of Dalhousie, and had one son, who died young. He was s. at his decease by his brother,

James Graham, ninth of Fintry, who had previously inherited from his uncle the estates of Monorgan, Craigo, and Bucklevy, which lands he entirely expended in the service of his royal master. In 1679 he was lieu.-colonel of the Angus regiment, and had the offer of a baronetcy from Charles II. but declined the professed honour. He m. Ann, daughter of Col. Hay, of Killour,* by the daughter and heiress of Whitelaw, of Whitson and Whitlaw. The issue of this marriage were, with the Austrian army. Returning from that service, he received the appointment of aid-de-camp to the Earl of Chatham, and proceeded with his lordship, in 1799, to the Helder. Subsequently, having raised one hundred men for the 93rd Highlanders, he obtained a majority in the regiment, and acted with it at the capture of the Cape of command of the rifle corps until 1812, when he returned to England on leave of ab-

Graham, of Claverhouse.

John Graham, second son of Sir Robert Graham, the first of Fintry, obtained from Archibald, earl of Angus, a charter of the lands of Balargus, in Forfarshire. He m. Matilda, daughter of Sir James Scrimgeour, constable of Dunure, and was succeeded by his son, John Graham, of Balargus, who acquired in 1530, the lands of Kirkton, and subsequently those of Claverhouse. He m. Margaret, daughter of John Bethune, of Balfour, and had a son and successor.

John Graham, of Claverhouse, living in 1541, who m. Anne, daughter of Robert Lamlin, of Balgonie, in Fife, and was s. at his decease, about 1560, by his elder son,

Sir William Graham, of Claverhouse, who, by Marian, his wife, daughter of Thomas Fotheringham, of Powie, had two sons,

George, his heir.

Walter, ancestor of the Grahams of Dunrobin.

Sir William died in October, 1642, and was s. by his son,

George Graham, of Claverhouse, who died in April, 1645, leaving two sons, by the elder,

Sir William Graham, of Claverhouse, he was succeeded. This laird augmented considerably the family estates, and obtained by charter, under the great seal, the lands and barony of Ogilvie. He m. the Lady Jean Carnegie, fourth daughter of John, first earl of Northesk, and had two sons, John and David; and two daughters, Margaret, m. to Sir Robert Graham, of Morphy; and Anne, m. to Robert Young, of Auldbar. Sir William was succeeded by his elder son, John Graham, of Claverhouse, a distinguished, perhaps the most distinguished soldier of the era in which he lived. Animated from his earliest years by the study of the poets and orators of antiquity, as well as by the traditionary songs of the highland bards, Claverhouse entered, at a very youthful age, on a military life, and served in the low countries against the French in the war of 1672, eminently signalizing himself at the battle of Steepl. Shortly afterward he returned home, and obtained a regiment from Charles II, for the especial purpose of forcing the non-conformists into communion with the established church.

During the progress of the war which ensued, his success was varied. In 1679, he attacked a conventicle on Loudoun Hill, in Ayrshire, and after a close and furious engagement at Drumelg, suffered defeat, but retrieved his fortune in the well known action of Bothwell Bridge: the acts of cruelty, however, which followed, and which procured for Graham the appellation of Bloody Clavers, have indelibly tarnished his gallantry and reputation. In palliation, he justified the course he had adopted by the allegation that "terror was true mercy, if it put an end to, or prevented war." After the flight of James II, by whom he had been created Viscount Dundee, and during the consequent proceedings in Scotland, Claverhouse became chiefly conspicuous. When the ill-fated king withdrew to Rochester, he endeavoured to dissuade his departure from the kingdom: "Give me your majesty's commission to raise ten thousand of the disbanded soldiers," said the gallant and sanguine Dundee, "and marching through England with the royal standard at our head, we will drive the Dutch invader at the point of the sword into the sea." This counsel proving ineffective, Graham proceeded with his dragoons to Stirling, and there called a parliament of the friends of the abdicated monarch. The convention sent a party to apprehend him; but he retired into Lockabar, and summoning a general rendezvous of the clans, raised upwards of two thousand men. With these he marched to Blair, in Atholl, and Mackay, King William's general, advancing with four thousand foot and two troops of horse, they met at the pass of Killiecrankie, on the 17th June, 1689. Mackay drew up his men in order of battle, and wished to bring on the engagement without delay; but the Scottish commander well knowing that night would be of advantage to the highlanders, whether successful or defeated, delayed the attack until half an hour before sunset; at that moment he ordered his troops to rush down from their station and begin the conflict in a series of small columns on the wings of the enemy, calculating that this onset was most likely to bring on an action hand to hand, in which he was certain of the superiority of his clansmen. Such had been the disposition of Dundee's kinsman and model, the gallant Marquis of Montrose, at the battle of Alderney. The enthusiastic and impetuous charge of the

* At a subsequent period, Dundee unsuccess-fully conjured his royal master, who was wasting time and means in Ireland, to embark, with a part of his army for Scotland, where his presence would fix the wavering, and intimidate the timid, and where hosts of shepherds would start up warriors at the first wave of his banner on their mountains.
Scotch proved irresistible; Mackay fled, defeated with the loss of two thousand men, and escaped to Stirling, apprehensive of the pursuit of Dundee. But the gallant Graham was no more. After a desperate conflict with the enemy's artillery, he returned to cut off the retreat, but at the moment that his arm was extended to his troops, he received a shot through an opening in his armour,* and dropped from horseback as he attempted to ride off the field. He survived, however, to write a concise and dignified account of his success to James.† Had he lived to improve this important victory, little doubt can be entertained that he would have recovered the whole of Scotland beyond the Forth. But his death was fatal to his party, by whom his memory has been cherished, almost to adoration, and a poet thus pathetically addresses his shade, and bewails the loss sustained by Scotland:

Ulimte Scotorum, potuit quo sospite sole Libertas patriae salva fuisset tua.
Te moriente novos accepit Scotia cives Acceptique novos te moriente Deos.
Ilia tibi superesse negat, tu non potes illi, Ergo Caledonia, nonem inane, vale.
Tuque vale gentis priscæ fortissime ductor, Optime Scotorum, atque ultime, Grame, vale.

"Graham of Claverhouse," says Sir Walter Scott, "was low of stature, and slightly, though elegantly formed, his gesture, language, and manners were those of one whose life had been spent among the noble and the gay. His features exhibited even feminine regularity, an oval face, a straight and well formed nose, dark hazel eyes, a complexion just sufficiently tinged with brown to save it from the charge of effeminacy, a short upper lip curved like that of a Grecian statue, and slightly shaded by small mustachios of light brown, joined to a profusion of long curled locks of the same colour which fell down on each side of his face, contributed to form such a countenance as limners like to paint, and ladies to look upon. The severity of his character, as well as the higher attributes of undaunted and enterprising valour which even his enemies were compelled to admit, lay concealed under an exterior which seemed adapted to the court or the saloon, rather than to the field. The same gentleness and gaiety of expression which reigned in his features seemed to inspire his actions and gestures; and, on the whole he was generally esteemed, at first sight, rather qualified to the votary of pleasure than ambition. But under this soft exterior was hidden a spirit unbounded in daring, and in aspiring, yet cautious and prudent as that of Machiavel himself. Profound in politics, and imbued of course with that disregard for individual rights which its intrigues usually generate, this leader was cool and collected in danger, fierce and ardent in pursuing success, careless of death himself, and ruthless in inflicting it upon others.* Such are the characters formed in times of civil discord, when the highest qualities, perverted by party spirit, and inflamed by habitual opposition, are too often combined with vices and excesses which deprive them at once of their merit and of their lustre."

Lord Dundee m. Jean, youngest daughter of William Lord Cochrane, and by her (who wedded secondly), William, third Lord Kilsyth, had a son,

James, second Viscount Dundee, who died young, in December, 1689, and was succeeded by his uncle, David, third Viscount Dundee, who fought at Killiecrankie, and was outlawed. He died without issue in 1700.

* The buff coat Dundee wore at Killiecrankie is still preserved at Pencuckie House, the seat of Sir George Clerk, bart. and the fatal shot hole is under the arm pit. — Minstrelsy of the Border.
† King William hearing that the express dispatched to Edinburgh with the account of the defeat had been detained a day on the road, exclaimed, "Dundee must certainly have fallen, otherwise he would have been there before it could have arrived." At a later period, William being urged to reinforce the troops in Scotland, replied, "It is needless: the war died with Dundee."

* All other punishments save death disgraced, he said, a gentleman, and all who were with him were of that rank, but that death was a relief from the consciousness of crime. It is reported, that having seen a youth fly in his first action, Dundee pretended he had sent him to the rear on a message; the youth fled a second time;—he brought him to the front of the army, and declaring that "a gentleman's son ought not to fall by the hands of a common executioner," shot him with his own pistol.

Lineage.

This family is directly descended from Sir William Graham, of Kincardine, ancestor of the ducal house of Montrose, through a princess of the royal line of Scotland.

The first who appears on record is William de Graham, who settled in Scotland under King David I. He obtained from that monarch a grant of the lands of Abercorn and Dalkeith, and witnessed the charter to the monks of Holyroodhouse in 1128. Directly descended from him was Sir William Graham, of Kincardine, styled in the charters, "Willielmus dominus de Grame de Kincardin." He was commissioner to treat with the English, 11th December, 1406; had a safe conduct into England, 15th May, 1412, and another from thence to Scotland about the release of James I., 10th April, 1413. A charter was granted 4th August, 1420, "Willielmo Domino de Grame militi et Mariote Stewart, Sorori Roberti Duci Albanie Sponsae dicti Willielmi," of the lands of Auld Montrose, Kinnaber, and Charleton, in the county of Forfar.

By his first marriage Sir William Graham had two sons, from the elder of whom descends the family of Montrose. He m. secondly, the Lady Mary Stuart, second daughter of King Robert III., relict of George, Earl of Angus, and Sir James Kennedy, of Dunmure, and subsequently the wife of Sir Archibald Edmondstone, of Duntreith, and by her he had several sons, of whom,

1. Sir Robert Graham, of Strathcarron, was ancestor of Grahams, of Fintry, of Claverhouse, Viscounts of Dundee, and the Grahams of Dunrobin (see p. 120).
2. Patrick, was consecrated Bishop of Brechin, 1463, translated to the episcopal see of St. Andrews, 1466.
3. William, was the Gæreme, of Garvock, and direct ancestor of the present family. He was a soldier, and for his faithful services to King James I. his uncle, obtained, in early life, a grant of the lands and barony of Garvock, which was afterwards confirmed in 1473, and from him the estate has descended in the direct line, from father to son, to the present time, as appears from documents in the family charter chest. He lived to an advanced age, and left a son,

Matthew le Gæreme, of Garvock, who succeeded to William in 1502, but died soon afterwards, being advanced in years before his father's death. He was succeeded by his son,

Archibald Gæreme, who fell at the disastrous battle of Flodden, on 9th September, 1513, leaving a son and successor,

John Gæreme, of Garvock, who married first, Mirabell Whyte, daughter of John Whyte, of Lambany; and secondly, Kathariage Arnot, daughter of Walter Arnot, of that Ilk, in 1545. He left two sons,
1. James, who succeeded him.
2. John, of Balgowan, ancestor of the Grahams, of Balgowan, and of the gallant Lord Lyndock, the hero of Barrosa. Among the sheriff records at Perth, anno 1586, there exist several contracts entered into betwixt "John Graham, of Garvock, and John Graham, of Balgourre his sone." In the same record and year, there is also mention made of "John Graham, of Balgourre, and Marjorie Rollock his spouse," designed "Lady Inchbraikie." She was eldest daughter of Andrew Rollo, of Duncrub, and widow of George Greme, of Inchbraco.

James Greme, of Garvock, succeeded to his father, John, and married Janet Bonar, daughter of Bonar, of Kelty, in 1571, by whom he had issue. He was succeeded by his eldest son, Ninian Greme, who m. Elizabeth Oliphant, daughter of Laurence Oliphant, of Frerandenny, in 1606, and by her he was father of John Greme, of Garvock, who m. Agnes Drummond, daughter of George Drummond, of Balloch, in 1638. This lady had only one brother, who was of weak intellect, and sold the estate of Balloch to the Earl of Perth, for the trifling sum of a bodle (a small Scotch coin) per day during his lifetime. Her son, James Greme, of Garvock, afterwards disputed the validity of the sale, claiming the estate through his mother, but the cause was tried before the earl himself, who was then chancellor of Scotland, and he decided in his own favour.

James Greme, of Garvock, succeeded to his father, John, and on the 14th December, 1677, he was served heir-in-general of John Graham, of Balgowan, (the second of that family) by a return of that date upon record, wherein the latter is designed the son of the brother of his great grandfather, "Jacobus Grahame de Garvock hæres Ioannis Grahame de Balgown filii fratis pro-at." He purchased from Haldane, of Gleneagles, the lands of Kippen, a property in Strathern, about two miles distant from Garvock, which is still in the family. He married Anne Stewart, daughter of John Stewart, of Arntulie and Cardneys, in 1678, and was s. by his eldest son,

James Greme, who married, first, Amelia, daughter of Sir Robert Moray, of Abercairney, by whom he had three sons, James, John, and Robert, and two daughters, Anna and Elizabeth. He married, secondly, in 1720, Betty Bell, sister of Charles Bell, of Craigfovelie, but by her he had no issue. He was s. by his youngest and only surviving son,

Robert Greme, who married, in 1736, Katherine, daughter of James Oliphant, esq. of Gask, by whom he had four sons, James, Lawrence, Charles, James Stewart, and Robert, with two daughters, Amelia-Anna Sophia and Margaret. This lady was involved in the rising of 1745, after which he escaped to France, and entered into the French service, where he remained for several years, leaving his estate to his eldest son. He returned, however, afterwards, and died in his native country. He was s. by his son, James Greme, of Garvock, who married, first, in 1764, Mary, daughter of the Rev. Henry Nicet, of the family of Dean, by Miss Graham, of Duchray; and secondly, Mary, daughter of Captain Robertson, of the British army. By his first wife he had five sons and three daughters, viz.

FERRERS, OF BADDESLEY CLINTON.

FERRERS, MARMION-EDWARD, esq. of Baddesley Clinton, in the county of Warwick. b. 13th October, 1813, inherited the estates and representation of this, the only remaining branch of the once potent name of Ferrers, upon the demise of his father, 10th August, 1830.

Lineage.

Edward - Sacheverell - Chandos Pole, esq. of Radbourne Hall, in the county of Derby. (See that family.)

Ermitude, m. to Sir William de Stafford.

The eldest son.

Robert de Ferrers, having contributed, at the head of the Derbyshire men, to King Stephen's victory over David of Scotland at Northallerton, was created by that monarch Earl of Derby. He was lineal ancestor of William de Ferrers, seventh earl of Derby, who married, for his second wife, Margaret, daughter and co-heir of Roger de Quincie, earl of Winchester, and had two sons,

1. Robert, eighth earl of Derby, (for detail, see Burke's Extinct and Dormant Peerage), whose eldest son, John de Ferrers, inherited Chartley Castle, and was summoned to parliament 27th Edward I. as Baron Ferrers, of Chartley.

His last male descendant,

William de Ferrers, sixth Baron Ferrers, of Chartley, left at his decease, 28th Henry VI. an only son,

Anne Ferrers, who wedded Walter Devereux, who was summoned to parliament, jure uxoriae, as seventh Baron Ferrers, of Chartley. His lordship fell at Bosworth, adhering to the side of Richard, and was s. by his son,

Sir John Devereux, eighth Baron Ferrers, of Chartley, who m. Cicely, sister and sole heiress of Henry Bourchier, earl of Ewe and Essex, and Baroness Bourchier in her own right, (maternally descended from Thomas Plantagenet, son of Edward III.), and had a son and successor,

This ancient family, than which few can claim a higher or more illustrious descent, derives from Walchelin, a Norman, whose son,

Henry Ferrers, assumed the name from Ferrers, a small town of Gastinois, in France, otherwise called Ferrieres from the iron mines, with which that country abounded, and in allusion to the circumstance, he bore for his arms "six horses' shoes," either from the similitude of his cognomen to the French Ferrier, or because the seigneurie produced iron, so essential to the soldier and cavalier in those rude times, when war was esteemed the chief business of life, and the adroit management of the steed, even amongst the nobility, the first of accomplishments. Henry de Ferrers came into England with The Conqueror, and obtained a grant of Tutbury Castle, in the county of Stafford. He m. Bertha ——, and had issue,

Dorothy Devereux, who wedded Sir Henry Shirley, bart. of Stanton, and their grandson,

Sir Robert Shirley, on the failure of the male line of the elder co-heir, having the abeyance terminated in his favour by Charles II, in 1677, was summoned as thirteenth Baron Ferrers, of Chartley. His lordship, who was created Earl Ferrers and Viscount Tamworth in 1711, was father of Estate—Baddesley Clinton, in the Hemlingford Hundred of the county of Warwick.

Seat—Baddesley Clinton Hall, eight miles from Warwick. This ancient mansion received its first name from Bade, a Saxon, who held it in the time of Edward the Confessor, and its second from Sir Thomas de Clinton, of Coshill, who obtained the estate temp. Henry III. in right of his wife Margery, daughter and heiress of James de Bescie, whence, after various transmissions, it passed by purchase, in the reign of Henry IV. to John Brone, a wealthy lawyer of Warwick, who resided in a house at the north end of the bridge, which long retained the name of Brome Place: at his decease, in consequence of a wound received in a dispute with one John Hearthill, the manor of Baddesley devolved on his son, Nicholas Brone, and subsequently by the marriage of his daughter, Constance, on Sir Edward Ferrers, grandson of Sir Thomas Ferrers, of Tamworth Castle. The hall is a structure of very ancient date, though the time of its erection is not exactly known; it is a stone building of low elevation, but of considerable extent; forming three sides of a square, of which the fourth, if it ever existed, has long since disappeared: a moat surrounds the mansion, and a bridge conducts to the entrance, leading through the lofty arch of an embattled gateway into the inner court.

The History of Baddesley Clinton,

By Henry Ferrers, esq. the Antiquary,

This seat and soyle from Saxon, Bade, a man of honest fame,
Who held it in the Saxon's tyme, of Baddesley took the name,
When Edward King the Confessor did weare the English crown,
The same was then possesst by —— a man of some renowne;
And England being conquer'd in lot it did alyghte
To Giffry Wirie, of noble birth, an Andegavian knight,
A member Hamlet all this whyle, of Hampton here at hand,
With Hampton so to Moulbray went as all the wive's land
To Bisege, in that name it runs alyhtly, and then is gone
To Clinton as his heyre who leaves it to a younger son,
And in that time the name of Baddesley Clinton was begun.
From them agayne by wedding of their heyre at first it came To Conisby, and after him to Fonkes, who weds the same.
From Fonkes to Dudley by a Sales, and so to Burdet past,
To Mitley Neat, by Mitley's will it came to Brone at last,
Brome honours much the place, and after some descents of Brones,
To Ferrers for a daughter's part of heyres in match it comes.
In this last name it lasteth still, and so long—As God shall please who is the Lord and King and God of all.
REVELEY, OF BRYN Y GWIN.

REVELEY, HUGH, esq. of Bryn y gwin, in the county of Merioneth, b. 15th July, 1772; m. 11th January, 1803, Jane, only daughter and heiress of Robert-Hartley Owen, esq. of Bryn y gwin, and has had issue, Hugh-John, b. 15th March, 1812.

Jane-Frances, d. 16th March, 1830.

This gentleman, who is a B. C. L. of Christ Church, Oxford, was secretary to Sir John Mitford while Speaker of the House of Commons, and afterwards, when that learned person was constituted Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and created Baron Redesdale, filled the office of purse bearer to his lordship.

Mr. Reveley is a magistrate and deputy lieutenant for the county of Merioneth, and was high sheriff in 1811.

Lineage.

The Reveleys, who trace their descent to the reign of Edward II. were originally seated in the manor house of Reveley, on the northern bank of the river Breamish, at the south eastern foot of Cheviot, and subsequently at Ancroft, in Northumberland, (for a detailed account, see vol. ii. p. 287). Their possessions, it would appear, were at one time considerable. In the reign of James I. George Reveley, of Ancroft, purchased from the last Lord Eure, the manors of Newton, Underwood, and Throp-hill, which Sir Simon Eure had acquired, temp. Henry III. from Lord Bertram, of Mitford. During the civil wars, William Reveley, of Ancroft (who had married a niece of the earl of Stafford), with a body of troops raised by himself, fought for King Charles, at the fatal field of Marston Moor; and was slain, having attained the rank of major, at the decisive battle of Naseby.

The father of this stout cavalier lies interred in the chancel of Mitford church, were a large mural monument, decorated with arms, bears the following inscription:

"Here lyeth interred, with,
in, this, kind, a, generous, and,
Virtuous, Wight, whose,

who deceased the 7th October, anno domini 1622.

On the marriage of William Reveley, esq. of Newton Underwood, (who was born in 1662,) with Margery, daughter and heiress of Robert Willey, esq. of Newby Wiske, the seat of the family was removed from Northumberland to Yorkshire, and the Hall House of Newby Wiske erected. By the heiress of Willey, Mr. Reveley had issue,

Lineage.

The family of Balfour, which derived its name from its patrimony of Balor, or Balfour, in Fifeshire, long enjoyed the hereditary office of sheriff of that county, in which there were more freeholders of the name than of any other, even so late as the reign of Charles II. Besides many illustrious descendants in the female line, it has been ennobled by three peerages, viz. Burleigh and Kilwinning, in Scotland, and Balfour of Clonavley, in Ireland. Although the pedigree goes back to the time of Duncan I. (1033—1039), the first mentioned in the public records is

Sir Michael de Balfour, who obtained a charter from William the Lion, dated at Forfar, about the year 1196. His son, Langdale Smithson, esq. second son of Sir Hugh Smithson, bart, and had an only son, Sir Hugh Smithson, b. at Newby Wiske, who was created Duke of Northumberland.

Margery, b. in 1689, m. to — Crohair. Barbara, died unmarried.

Mr. Reveley died 24th February, 1725. His second son,

He was the author himself of a volume entitled "Notices of the drawings of the most distinguished masters," edited by his son, in 1826. Mr. Reveley wedded in 1771, Jane, sister of Sir Claude Champion de Crespigny, bart, and daughter of Philip Champion de Crespigny, esq. of Camberrwell, by Miss Fournereau, his wife, and by her, who died 4th February, 1829, aged eighty-six, had issue.

The Countess Isabella, daughter of Earl Duncan, also bestowed many grants upon her "cousin" Sir Michael, who, at her death, without issue, should have succeeded as her nearest heir, all the descendants of Earl Colbane failing in her; but the Regent Albany, who claimed the earldom, was a competitor too powerful to be lightly opposed, and Sir Michael seems to have waved his rights. Lineage.

The family of De Aracy ranks with the most eminent established in England by the Norman Conquest, and amongst the peerages of past times, there are two baronies in abeyance, one forfeited barony, and three extinct baronies, all of which had been conferred upon members of the house of D'Arcy, beside the extinct Earldom of Holderness. When the general survey was made, Norman de Aracy enjoyed not fewer than thirty-three lordships in the county of Lincoln, which he derived directly from the Conqueror, and of which Nocton became the chief residence of himself and his descendants for several generations. He was s. by his son, Robert D'Arcy, who founded a priory of Augustin monks at Nocton, and was otherwise a bountiful benefactor to the church. He was s. by his son,

Thomas D'Arcy, who, in the 12th of Henry II., on the assessment in aid of marrying that king's daughter, certified that he then held twenty knights' fees de vetei feoffamento, with half a knight's fee, and a fourth part de novo, for which he paid £13. 6s. 8d. He d. in 1180, and was s. by his son,

The second son,

John D'Arcy, an eminent soldier and statesman in the reigns of the first, second, and third Edward, filled some of the highest offices of the government, and was eventually summoned to parliament in the 6th year of Edward III. In the time of Edward II. he was governor of Norman Castle, sheriff of the counties of Nottingham, Derby, and Lancaster, and Justice of Ireland. On the accession of Edward III., he was made sheriff of Yorkshire and governor of York Castle, and re-constituted Justice of Ireland, to which high office and the government of the country he was re-appointed in the next year. While in Ireland, Lord D'Arcy at the head of an army marched into the province of Ulster to avenge the death of his wife's nephew, William de Burgh, third Earl of Ulster, but before his arrival the country people had already taken ample revenge, by destroying no less than three hundred persons in one day. The lord justice thereupon changed his course, and leaving Thomas Burke, his lieutenant, in Ireland, joined the king in Scotland, who was then pursuing the vic-

By an order of the house, a speech of his was subsequently published, under the title of "An Argument, delivered by Patrick D'Arcy, esq. in the parliament of Ireland, the 9th of June, 1641." This argument was made at a conference of the house of commons with a committee of the lords, in the castle of Dublin, upon certain questions propounded to the judges of Ireland, in full parliament, and upon the answers of the judges to the said interrogatories. Himself and his nephew, Geoffrey Browne, were amongst the commissioners appointed by the general assembly of confederate catholics, held at Kilkenny in the time of the grand rebellion, to conclude a peace with the Marquess of Ormonde, the king's lieutenant; and "the drawing up of the articles was left to the said Mr. Patrick D'Arcy and Mr. Geoffrey Browne, and by them performed according to the sense of the assembly." These articles were signed and sealed 28th March, 1646, by the lord lieutenant, on the king's behalf; and by the Lord Muskery, Sir Robert Talbot, John Dillon, Patrick D'Arcy, and Geoffrey Browne, on the part of the confederates, in the presence of the marquess of Clanricarde, the Lord Digby, Sir Maurice Eastace, and Doctor Gerald Tеннell." Lineage.

The family of Dayrell or Darell was established in England by one of the companions in arms of the Conqueror, and the name of its founder appears on the roll of Battel Abbey. Numerous divergent branches were planted in various counties, and for centuries flourished in all; the principal were those of Calehill and Scotney* in Kent; of Sesay† in Yorkshire; of Littlecote‡ in Wilts; of Pageham in Sussex;

* See vol. i. p. 133.
† The last male heir of Sesay, Sir George Darell, died in 1466, leaving a daughter and heiress, Joan, who married Sir Guy Dawney, of Cowick, in the county of York.
‡ The Littlecote line was founded by Wil-and of Treworvan's in Cornwall. The Dayrells of Lillingston Dayrell derive from a common ancestor with the Calehill family, and have possessed the broad lands which they now hold ever since the Conquest.

Richard Dayrell, brother of Elias Dayrell, was seised in fee of a messuage in Lillingston Dayrell, in the county of Buckingham, temp. Richard I. or John, and was father of a daughter, Alice, the wife of Peter Credon. The next possessor on record.

— Dairell, of Lillingston Dairell, in Bucks, and of Hanworth, in Middlesex, had two sons, Ralph, his heir; and Lawrence, the first rector of Lillingston, living in 1255, who had a son, Richard. The elder son,

Ralph Dairell, of Lillingston Dairell

Iam Dairell, sub-treasurer of England, temp. Richard II. who married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Thomas Calston, esq. lord of Littlecote, in Wiltshire, and acquired with her that estate. He had issue,

William, who acquired the lands of Pageham, in Sussex, by marriage with Joan, daughter and heiress of William Knottsworth. He was father of

4. Marmaduke (Sir), kn. of Fulmore, Bucks (cofferer to James I. and Charles I.), who m. Anne, daughter of John Lennard, esq. of Knoll, and Hanworth, living in 10th Henry III. married, it is supposed, an heiress named Juliana de Barre, and had three sons, viz.

Henry, his heir.

Richard, who gave donations to Suffield Abbey in 1253.

Robert, also a benefactor to the same abbey, as was his son, Ralph.

The eldest son and heir.

Henry Dairell, of Hanworth and Lillingston, who flourished in the reigns of Henry III. and Edward I. wedded twice.

By his second wife, Alicia, whose mother, Christian, was daughter and heiress of Alexander Hampden, he appears to have had no issue. By his first, Joanna, daughter and co-heiress of Roger de Samford, and first cousin to Alicia de Samford, wife of William Dairell, esq. of Littlecote, living in 1587, who alienated to Sir John Popham the estate of Littlecote. For the curious tradition of the supposed murder at Littlecote House, and of the consequent ruin of this branch of the family, refer to vol. ii. p. xii.

Robert de Vere, Earl of Oxford, he had a daughter, Emma, m. to Richard de Grussel, and a son, Sir Ralph Dairell, of Lillingston Dairell, alive in 1282, who married and had one son, Henry, and a daughter, the wife of John de Beckhampton. Sir Ralph was s. by his son,

Henry Dairell, of Lillingston, in 1300, who married a lady named Emma, but of what family is not recorded. He was succeeded by John Dairell, Lord of Lillingston Dairell, in 1338, who is presumed to have been son of his predecessor. This John was father of Roger Dairell, of Lillingston Dairell, who represented Buckinghamshire in several parliaments during the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV. and presented to Hanworth rectory in 1362. He m. (see the seat of the ancient family De Hairell, vulgarly Dairell,) was honored with his birth, but this town is trusted with the treasure of his bones. His worth claims Fame for his trumpet, and Memory itself for his monument. In the famous university of Oxford he was hopeful,—in the Innes of Court compleat,—the barr found him not merely tongue-deep, or a verbal lawyer, for he was eminent, as well for soundness of judgement as flourish of speech. His law was not opposite to the Gospel; the advancement of the clergy being his joy, and the beauty of God's House his delight. He was a man of an even temper, abhoring the licentious libertine, and yet not encouraging the undisciplined disciplinarian. His wife was Alice, the daughter of Thomas Mayot, gent. of Abingdon, with whom he perfected the circle of 20 yeares marriage so happily, that no division was known betwixt them but his death. The issue he had by her was three sons and three daughters, the lively models of himself, in whom he yet outlives mortality. COSBY, OF STRADBALLY.

COSBY, THOMAS-PHILLIPS, esq. of Stradbally Hall, in the Queen's County, b. 20th September, 1803; inherited, on the demise of his father, on the 22nd January, 1832.

This gentleman was sheriff of his native county in 1834, and one of the governors thereof prior to the alteration recently made by parliament in the local jurisdiction of Ireland. He continues in the commission of the peace, and is beside a deputy lieutenant.
In the time of Queen Mary, this family, originally of the counties of Leicester and Lincoln, settled in Ireland, and it has since moved in the first grade of country gentlemen.

Robert Cossebye, of Hermaston, in Lincolnshire, living in 1516, m. Isabel, dau. and heir of Ralph Pare, esq. of Great Leake, Notts. (by Isabel, his wife, daughter and heir of John Blake, of Hermaston), and had a son and heir,

John Cosbie, who wedded Mable, daughter of—Agard, of Foston, in Nottinghamshire, and had two sons, namely, Richard Cosbie, of Great Leake (whose only daughter and heiress, Bridget, became the wife of William Towers, gent. of Thunnocko), and

Francis Cosbie, the patriarch of the family in Ireland, a man famed for personal courage, as well as civil and military talents. When young he served in the wars of Henry VIII. in the Low Countries, and was not undistinguished. His abandonment of his native soil arose from the downfall of the Protector Somerset, whose daughter Mary, widow of Sir Henry Payton, knt. he had married. Deeming the disgrace and death of that once potent nobleman a sentence of exclusion from place and preferment in England, against his immediate connections at least, Cosbie, Mary Seymour, his first wife, being then dead, emigrated to Ireland, taking with him his second wife, Elizabeth Paulmes, and the two surviving sons of the first. Here, in the land of his adoption, he soon found the opportunity of establishing a reputation, which he despised of effecting in the land of his birth. He became an active defender of the Pale against the inroads of the Irish; and his vigilance, zeal and success attracting the observation of government, he was appointed by Queen Mary, under her majesty's sign manual, dated 14th February, 1558, General of the Kern, a post of great trust and importance in those times. In 1559 he represented the borough of Thomastown in parliament, when he was constituted by Queen Elizabeth sheriff of the county of Kildare, being denominated in his patent, (dated 24th January, in the first year of her majesty's reign), "of Evan," now "Munster Evan," which place he held under an old grant from the crown, and was invested at the same time with the extraordinary and unenviable privilege of exercising martial law under his own authority solely, and of dealing out such punishments, even the most penal, as he should deem meet. Arbitrary power has rarely consorted with justice or mercy, and few have passed through the fiery ordeal of its unhallowed possession with reputation uncathed, for few have been found virtuous or firm enough to withstand the temptation of persecuting their fellows. Unhappily for the memory of Francis Cosbie, his name may not be written down amongst the merciful; but in his day, and in the wretched land over which he became a ruler, oppression and cruelty were of such frequent occurrence as to become familiar to men's minds, and to be stripped of more than a moiety of the horror that tyranny usually inspires. Cosbie, in furtherance of his commission, caused a gallows to be erected in the immediate vicinity of his own residence, on a spot still bearing the name of Gallows-hill, and there he is accused of having committed the most atrocious excesses. One practice is recorded, that of hanging his victim alive in chains, and placing within view a loaf of bread, in order to aggravate the excreting tortures of hunger; his conduct, however, received the high commendation of the lord-deputy, Sidney, who, in the state papers, represents the district over which General Cosbie so ruthlessly presided to be in such profound tranquillity, under that officer's government, that it was almost useless to make the country shire ground. Cosbie eventually fell at the battle of Clondillough, at the head of the Kern which he valiantly led to the charge, although then seventy years of age. Of this action, and the general's death, Camden gives the following narrative: "When Arthur, Lord Grey, landed in Ireland to assume the lieutenancy, before he had been invested with the sword and the other insignia of office, learning that some rebels, under the command of Fitz-Eustace, and Phelim McHugh, a chief of the numerous septs of the O'Byrnes, who had their retreat in Glandilough, twenty-five miles south of Dublin, were devastating the adjacent country, commanded the leaders of the band, assembled from all quarters to welcome his arrival, to take the field with himself against the insurgents, who, upon being apprised of the movement, retreated into the valley of Glandilough, a grassy spot, fit for feeding sheep, but so full of marshy ground, rocky precipices, and thick shrubbery woods, by which the vale was entirely encompassed, that the paths and passes were hardly known to its own inhabitants. On the army's reaching this place, Cosby, general of the light Irish foot, denominated Kerns, aware of the many advantages it afforded the enemy, described to the other leaders the danger to be encountered in attacking him there, but at the same time exhorted them with the utmost intrepidity to brave all peril; and putting himself at once, although seventy years of age, at the head of his men, led them to the charge. The instant, however, the royal army had entered the valley, it was overwhelmed with a shower of arrows like hailstones from the rebels, who lay concealed on every side amongst the bushes and underwood, so that they could not even be discovered. The greater part of the invaders fell, and the remainder, struggling through the most perilous passages amongst the precipices, escaped with difficulty to the lord-lieutenant, who awaited the event on the brow of the hill, with the Earl of Kildare, and James Wingfield, engineer-general, who well knowing the risk encountered, kept one of his nephews, George Carew, jun. with him against his will. There were lost in this attack Peter Carew the younger, George Moore Audley, and Cosby himself, a man flourishing in military glory."

By his first wife, Mary, the Duke of Somerset's daughter, and Sir Henry Peyton's widow, Francis Cosby had three sons, viz.

Alexander Cosbie, esq. of Stradbally Abbey, who seems to have been engaged during the whole of his time in warfare with the O'Moores. Camden in his life of Elizabeth, recounts his being once taken by treachery during a conference with Rory, _Oge_, near Leighlin, and that he was rescued when bound to a tree, by Harpole, but not before he had received a wound from a knife, inflicted by Rory. This Francis possessed the same arbitrary power over the lives and limbs of his countrymen that was conferred upon his father, and seems to have abused it quite as barbarously. The tradition of the country records, that he was wont to hang multitudes of his enemies upon a sallow tree near the abbey; and he was accustomed to remark, that his sallow looked melancholy and demured, whenever he observed it without the appendage of one or two of his feunans dangling from its branches: hence the sobriquet of _Sillage_, or the "_Sallow_" conferred upon the family. His excesses were, however, so unjustifiable, notwithstanding the latitude of his commission, that he found it necessary to solicit

Elizabeth in consideration of his good services, a pension of three shillings per day on the Irish establishment, until he should be otherwise provided for in the army of that kingdom. Notwithstanding this apparent protection of the court, he suffered, in two years afterwards, the utmost penalty of the criminal law, for killing the Lord Bourke, of Castle Connell, in a duel on Finchley Common, the queen peremptorily refusing to extend to him her royal mercy.

By his second wife, Elizabeth Paulmes, General Cosby had an only child, Catherine, _m_. to Archibald Moor, esq. but _d_. issueless.

Although the active service in which General Cosby was constantly engaged seldom permitted him to have a fixed place of abode, he seems to have considered and used the Abbey of Stradbally as the seat of his family; it was then, evidently from the ruins which remained until the year 1722, an extensive and handsome pile of building; but Colonel Cosby having let the ground in that year to Colonel Nathaniel Mitchel, he pulled down the greater part of those venerable remains of antiquity for materials to build his mansion-house, leaving nothing standing but part of an old chapel, which is still visible. Francis Cosby was _s_. by his eldest son, and obtain a patent of indemnity from the queen, which her majesty styles "her pardon to Alexander Cosby for the cruelties that happened during his wars with the O'Moorees." This instrument is dated 6th December, 1593.

He married Dorcas, daughter of William Sydney, esq. of Orford, in Kent, and had fifteen children. This lady, who had been one of the maids of honour to Queen Elizabeth, obtained, through her influential connexion at court, grants in Ireland (in Leix) so extensive, that at one period the family were the territorial lords of more than a moiety of the Queen's County. Amongst other estates thus acquired, the towns of Ballynakil, Ballyroan, and Mountanagh, with a considerable portion of Maryborough, beside the lordships of Gallin, Rushhall, and Trimahoe may be enumerated; but of that splendid inheritance all that now remains to the Cosbies is Trimahoe.† The grantee, herself, alienated the town of Ballynakil and the lordship of Gallin for one hundred pounds, which she received in silver shillings—of so little value did she regard the possession of lands which her husband and sons were so frequently obliged to defend with their swords. It is worthy of remark that in all grants, and even in private writings, Dorcas continued to use the name of Sydney, and never assumed that of her husband. With the exception of intervals passed at Penshurst in visiting their distinguished relatives there, Alexander Cosby and his wife resided entirely at the Abbey of Stradbally, and enjoyed high reputation amongst the English settlers. The feud with the O'Moorees, enduring however in all its lawless violence, came at length to an end in 1595, and proved fatal to Cosby and his eldest son. In that year Anthony O'Moore, the chief of the insurgent clans, bearing his name, sent to demand a passage over Stradbally bridge, but the requisition being deemed by Cosby a challenge, was promptly and peremptorily denied, and preparations were commenced without loss of time to defend the pass, should the enemy attempt to force it. That attempt being made by O'Moore, on the 19th of May, the Lord of Stradbally, at the head of his Kern, accompanied by his son and heir, Francis, who had married, about a year previously, Hellen, daughter of Thomas Harpole, esq. of Shrule, and had born to him a son, William, but nine weeks before, met his fate in deadly combat on the bridge, while the conflict was witnessed from a window in the abbey by Dorecas Sydney and her daughter-in-law. For some time the value of the Cosbies was irresistible, and the fortune of the day appeared to be theirs. Alexander, however, pursuing his advantage with extraordinary impetuosity, received a wound which proved at once mortal, and instantly turned the tide of battle. The Kern, with melancholy howling for the fate of their leader, began to give way, when Francis Cosby, fearing that he should be entirely abandoned, leaped over the bridge in the hope of making good his retreat to the abbey; but the instant that he had cleared the battlements, he was mortally wounded, and fell dead into the river. These scenes, one should have imagined, would have appalled the now widowed ladies who had witnessed them; yet it is recorded that Hellen Harpole, with the closest presence of mind, cautioned her mother-in-law to retain in her recollection how the elder Cosby fell before his son, her husband, who had, by thus inheriting the estates even for a few minutes, entitled her to her thirds, or dowry. It is not known how the ladies eventually escaped; but the infant, William Cosby, was carried off and preserved by his nurse. O'Moore, pursuing his victory, took possession of the abbey, and, after sacking, committed it to the flames, when many of the patents, and other valuable documents of the family, were destroyed in the conflagration.

The issue of Alexander Cosby and Dorcas Sydney, were

1. Francis, b. 1st January, 1571, and baptized with much ceremony in St. Patrick's Church, Dublin, the lord deputy standing god-father. He was captain of the Kern, and fell, as already stated, immediately after his father, at the battle of Stradbally Bridge, on the 19th of May, 1590, leaving by his wife, Hellen Harpole, (who wedded secondly, Sir Thomas Loftus, of Killian, in the King's County), an infant child, William, b. in 1596, who succeeded him.

V. Mary, b. 16th July, 1590.

VI. Anne.

The melancholy catastrophe of Alexander Cosby and his son appears to have created a strong public feeling at the time, and the queen taking the state of the family into her gracious consideration, was pleased to grant, by letters patent, in which the circumstances of the battle of the bridge are recited, to Dorcas Sydney and Hellen Harpole, the wardship of the infant, William Cosby, besides conferring upon them pensions, in considerations of the many essential services rendered by their husbands to the crown. Alexander Cosby was succeeded, although for a few minutes only, by his eldest son, Francis Cosby, esq. of Stradbally Abbey, who being slain, as stated above, never enjoyed the inheritance, but left it to his infant child, William Cosby, esq. of Stradbally Abbey, who died young, when the estates reverted to his uncle.

Richard Cosby, esq. who thus became "of Stradbally Abbey," and in order to repair the loss occasioned by the destruction of the family records, at the time of the burning of the abbey, obtained under the commission of King James I. for the remedy of defective titles, a new patent, of the same import as the old one, which is still extant. This Richard, who was captain of the Kerne, and esteemed of great martial courage and ability, eagerly solicitous on becoming chief of his line, to avenge the death of his father and brother, dared the O'Moore's to a pitched battle, and the challenge being accepted, the contending clans met once more (A.D. 1606), in the glyn of Augnamully, under the rock of Dunamaunce, when a most bloody conflict ensued, terminating in the triumph of Cosby, and the total defeat of his foes, who were never afterwards able to make head against him. Capt. Cosby himself displayed great personal boldness, and received as many dangerous wounds in the action, that he could not be removed from the field to Stradbally, but was carried to Dysert House, then the seat of Sir Robert Pigot, where he remained a considerable time before he was so far recovered as to be enabled to return home. During his confinement, Elizabeth Pigot, one of the daughters of his hospitable host, attended him with so much kindness and care, that he subsequently solicited her hand, and she became his wife soon after his re-establishment at Stradbally. This union, although in every other point unexceptionable, proved in a high degree pre-judicial to the fortunes of the family, for his mother, Dorcas Sydney, * who entertained a deep rooted antipathy to the Pigots, taking offence at the alliance, immediately went over to England, where she married a second husband, Sir Thomas Zouch, and left all her estates in Ireland, excepting Tinahoe, to the Zouches, while she leased that for a long term to Sir Thomas Loftus, who had become, in 1615, the second husband of her daughter-in-law, Hellen, the widow of Francis Cosby. Richard Cosby had, by Elizabeth Pigot, who died in 1609, four sons and a daughter, viz.

1. Alexander, his heir.

II. Francis, b. 5th July, 1612, member of parliament for Carisford, m. Anne, daughter of Sir Thomas Loftus, of Killian, by whom (who d. in 1673), he had issue, Pole Cosby, esq. of Stradbally Hall, who wedded Mary, daughter and co-heir of Henry Dodwell, esq. of Manor Dodwell, in the county of Rosscomnon, and left by her, who died 9th January, 1742, at his decease, 20th May, 1766, a daughter, Sarah, born in 1730, married first, to the Right Hon. Arthur Upton, of Castle Upton, and secondly, to Robert, Earl of Farnham, (his lordship's second wife, see Burke's Peerage and Baronetage,) with a son, his successor, Dudley-Alexander-Sydney Cosby, esq. of Stradbally Hall, who was created, in 1768, a peer of Ireland, under the title of Baron Sydney, of Leix, in the Queen's County. His lordship held no military employment, but was minister plenipotentiary to the court of Denmark. He espoused, in December, 1773, the Lady Isabella St. Lawrence, dau. of Thomas, first Earl of Howth, and aunt of the present earl, but died in the ensuing month, 17th January, 1774, without issue, leaving the estate burdened with the enormous debt of £360,000, arising from his own imprudent expenditure. His peerage became of course extinct, while the inheritance reverted to (the only surviving son of Lieut.-Colonel Alexander Cosby, governor of Nova Scotia, by his wife, Anne Winney, of Annapolis, and grandson of Alexander Cosby, of Stradbally Hall, and his wife, Elizabeth L'Estrange) his lordship's cousin.

Phillips Cosby, esq. then a captain in the royal navy. This gentleman, to relieve himself from the embarrassment left by his predecessor, was obliged to alienate a moiety of the Stradbally estate, but he had previously to establish his right by the issue of a suit at law of four years' endurance against the claim of the Earl of Farnham, founded upon the alleged heirship of Sarah, Lord Sydney's sister, and his lordship's second countess; but Lord Sydney, having made a will in his (Cosby's) favour, and republished it when his lordship married Lady Isabella St. Lawrence, the jury, without leaving the box, decided that the property was Captain Cosby's. In his professional career Captain Cosby, before and after his accession to the family estates, was actively engaged, and established the reputation of a gallant and experienced officer. In 1760, he was appointed commander of his majesty's sloop, the Laurel. In 1761, he was made a post captain; the next year he commanded the Isis, of fifty guns and three hundred and fifty men, in the Mediterranean, under the flag of Vice-admiral Sir Charles Saunders. From 1765 to 1770 (years of peace) he was captain of the Montreal frigate, of thirty-two guns and two hundred and forty men, in the same sea. In 1769 he brought home the remains of his Royal Highness the Duke of York, brother of King George III, who had died abroad, and having docked his ship, sailed back to his station in the Mediterranean, where he soon after had the honour of entertaining on board his Imperial Majesty, Joseph II, Emperor of Germany, and a numerous train of nobility, the emperor presenting him with a gold enamelled snuff box, of great value, in acknowledgment of his politeness and hospitality. He had afterwards the honour to receive, as a passenger, his Serene Highness, the hereditary Prince of Brunswick, (brother-in-law to his own illustrious sovereign, George III.) and landed the prince at the Gulf of Frejus, on his way to Persia, who rewarded him with a splendid diamond ring. In 1770, he was called home, and reached Spithead in July, when he was appointed, within a brief interval, collector of Basse-terra, in the Island of St. Christopher's, to which post he immediately repaired, but did not remain long abroad. In January, 1774, he came, as already stated, into the possession of the family estate, and resided at Stradbally Hall for the next four years, but the war then breaking out, he resumed his professional duties, and being appointed to the command of the Centaur, of seventy-four guns and six hundred and fifty men, was second in the van division in the action of the 27th July, 1778, off Ushant, under Admiral Kepple, (afterwards Lord Kepple,) against the French fleet. From that period, until nearly the close of the American war, Captain Cosby was constantly employed in the Atlantic, in command of the Robust, of seventy-four guns and six hundred men, and on the 16th March, 1781, led the English fleet, on both tacks, against the French off the Cape of Virginia. In this action the Robust sustained the fire of three ships, until she became a complete wreck, and was taken in tow by the America of sixty-four guns. The vice-admiral, (Arbuthnot) in his communication with the admiralty, bore honourable testimony to Cosby's gallant conduct, as well as in a letter*

Mr. Blount is a magistrate and deputy lieutenant for Oxfordshire, and served the office of sheriff in 1832. He inherited the estates at the decease of his father, 29th October, 1821.
The origin and history of this most ancient and distinguished family has been elaborately investigated by Sir Alexander Croke, Knt. LL.D. of Studley Priory, in Oxfordshire, (see vol. i. p. 364,) who traces it from the Counts of Guisnes, in Picardy, a race of nobles, descended themselves from the Scandinavian rulers of Denmark. Rodolph, third count of Guisnes, had three sons, by his wife, Rosetta, daughter of the Count de St. Pol, all of whom accompanied the Norman in his expedition against England, in 1066, and contributing to the triumph of their chief, shared amply in the spoils of conquest. One of the brothers returned to his native country; the other two adopted that which they had so gallantly helped to win, and abided there; of these, Sir William le Blount, the younger, was a general of foot, at Hastings, and was rewarded by grants of seven lordships in Lincolnshire; his son was seated at Saxlingham, in Norfolk, and the great-grand-daughter of that gentleman, sole heiress of her line, Maria le Blount, marrying in the next century, Sir Stephen le Blount, the descendant and representative of her great-great-great uncle, Sir Robert le Blount, united the families of the two brothers.

The elder brother,

Sir Robert le Blount, had the command of the Conqueror's ships of war, and is styled "Dux Naviwm Militarum." His portion of the Spolia opima embraced thirteen manors in Suffolk, in which county he was the first feudal Baron of Ixworth, (the place of his residence,) and lord of Orford Castle. He m. Gundreda, youngest daughter of Henry, Earl Ferrers, and had a son and heir,

Gilbert le Blount, second baron of Ixworth, who came into England with his father. This feudal lord founded a priory of black canons, at Ixworth, and marrying Alicia de Colekirke, was s. by his son,

William le Blount, third lord of Ixworth, temp. Henry II. who rebuilt the priory of Ixworth, which had been destroyed during the contest between the Empress Maud and King Stephen. By his wife, Sarah, daughter of Hubert de Monchensi, he was father of

Gilbert or Hubert le Blount, fourth baron, living 20th Henry II. 1173, who wedded Agnes de L'Ise (de Insulâ), who was alive 10th Richard I. (1198), he had two sons, namely,

William, b. in 1153, who inherited as fifth Lord of Ixworth, and marrying Cecilia de Vere, had issue,

William, his successor.

Agnes, m. to Sir William de Chiketot.

Roisia, m. to Robert de Valoings, lord of Orford, in Suffolk.

This baron d. at the age of thirty-two, in 1185, and was s. by his son, William le Blount, sixth lord of Ixworth, who was standard bearer to Simon de Montford, earl of Leicester, and fell at Lewes, on the 14th May, 1264. He was afterwards attainted in parliament, when the barony of Ixworth became forfeited. He had married Alicia de Capella, (who lived to the 10th Edward I. anno 1281,) but having no issue, his sisters became his heirs.

Stephen (Sir).

The chief branch of the family, the barons of Ixworth having, as above stated, expired with the sixth feudal lord, at the battle of Lewes, the representation devolved upon the line of the younger son of Gilbert, by Agnes de L'Ise.

Sir Stephen le Blount, who was living in the 10th Richard I. anno 1198. He espoused his kinswoman, Maria le Blount, sole daughter and heiress of Sir William le Blount, the descendant and representative of Sir William le Blount, of Saxlingham, in Suffolk, one of the brothers who came over with the Conqueror, and thus the lines of the two brothers merging formed the parent stock, whence have since sprung the different families of the name. Of this marriage there were two sons, Sir John Blount (the younger, who m. Constance, one of the sisters and co-heirs of Sir Richard de Wrotham, justice of the common pleas), and the son and heir,

Sir Robert le Blount, who was a witness to the charter of Hilton Abbey, in Staffordshire, in the 8th Henry III. anno 1223. He wedded Isabel, daughter and co-heir of the feudal lord of Odinsels, and acquired the manor of Belton, in the county of Rutland, as a part of the lady's portion. He died in the 17th Edward I. anno 1288, leaving two sons, viz.

1. Ralph (Sir), lord of Belton, who recovered lands, 14th Edward I. anno 1285, in Saxlingham, which had been his grandfather's. He m. Cecilia, or Alicia, daughter and co-heir of Sir John Lovet, of Hampton
BLØUNT, OF MAPLE-DURHAM.

Løvet, in the county of Worcestershire, and was grandfather of Sir John Blount, summoned to parliament as Baron Blount, of Belton, in the Ist Edward III. anno 1327; and of Nicholas de Blount, who adopted the surname of Croke, and was ancestor of the Crookes, of Studley Priory, (see vol. i. p. 354.)

II. William (Sir).

Upon the extinction of the noble house of Blount of Belton, the representation devolved on the descendant of Nicholas le Blount, and now vested de jure in Sir Alexander Croke; but the name surviving in the descendants of the younger son, Sir William le Blount, they may certainly claim, without urging any unwarrantable pretension, to be de facto chiefs. Sir William espoused the Lady Isabel de Beauchamp, daughter of William, first Earl of Warwick, and widow of Henry Lovet, of Elmley Lovet, in the county of Worcester. He d. in the 9th or 10th of Edward II. (1315 or 1316), having had issue, Peter, one of the chamberlains in 1313 to King Edward II. died issueless.

Walter.

The second son, Sir Walter le Blount, of the Rock, in the county of Worcestershire, married Johanna, third sister and co-heir of Sir William de Sondon (who died 30th Edward I. anno 1301), and thus became proprietor of the manor of Sodington, in the county of Worcestershire. He d. in 1322, and was s. by his son, Sir William le Blount, who had a command in Scotland in 1335. He m. Margaret, third daughter and co-heir of Theobald de Verdon, Lord of Alton Castle, in the county of Stafford, lord justice of Ireland. The lady was born in 1310; there were no issue of the marriage, and Sir William dying 11th Edward III. anno 1337, seised of the Castle of Weobly, in Herefordshire; Baterby, and lands in Fenton, Romsore, and Biddulph, in the county of Stafford; Sodington and Timberlake, in Worcestershire, was s. by his brother, Sir John le Blount, then thirty-nine years of age, who was in the service of the Earl of Lancaster, and had obtained from that nobleman a grant for life of the manor of Pasingham, in the county of Northampton; he had also lands from the earl in Holland and Duffield, in the county of Derby, and at Tiberton, in Gloucestershire. He m. two wives; first, Isolda, daughter and heir of Sir Thomas de Mountjoy, by whom he acquired a large accession of estates, and had issue, John (Sir), who wedded twice; first, Juliana, daughter of — Foulhurst; and secondly, Isabella, daughter and heir of Sir Bryan Cornwall, of Kinlet.

By the second he was ancestor of the Blounts of Kinlet, now represented by William Laxon Childes, esq. By the first he had a son, John Blount, of Sodington, aged fourteen at the decease of his grandfather in 1358. From this gentleman we pass to his lineal descendant, Sir Walter Blount, bart. of Sodington, who was created a baronet, 5th October, 1642 (see Burke's Peerage and Baronetage). The fifth in succession from this gentleman, Sir William Blount, sixth baronet, m. in 1766, Mary, elder daughter and co-heir of James, Lord Aston, of Forfar, and one of the representatives of the elder branch of the family of Sir Ralph Sadler (see vol. ii. p. 562). The present Sir Edward Blount, bart. of Sodington, only son of the late Sir Walter Blount, and nephew of Edward Blount, esq. of Bryanstone-square, member in the late parliament for Horsham, is grandson of this marriage.

Walter, who d. s. p.

His second wife was Eleanor, second daughter of John Beauchamp, of Hache, in the county of Somerset, and widow of John Meriet, of Meriet, in the same shire; by this lady he left at his decease in the 32nd of Edward III. anno 1538,* a son, the hero Sir Walter Blount, so celebrated for his martial prowess in the warlike times of Edward III. Richard II. and Henry IV., and immortalized by the muse of Shakespeare for his devotion, even unto death, to King Henry. Sir Walter fell at the battle of Shrewsbury on the 22nd June, 1403, wherein, being standard-bearer, he was arrayed in the same armour as his royal master, and was slain, according to the poet, in single combat by the Earl of Douglas, who had supposed he was contending with the king himself.

Blanc. What is thy name, that in the battle thus Thou crossest me? what honour dost thou seek Upon my head?

Doug. Know then, my name is Douglas;
And I do haunt thee in battle thus,
Because some tell me thou art a king.
Blunt. They tell thee true.

* About this time the family began to omit the prefix Le to their name, calling themselves Blount only.
In 1385 he obtained a charter for a fair and free warren in his demesne lands at Barton, and other manors in Derbyshire. In 1390 he was warden of Needwood forest, and knight of the shire for the county of Derby. By his wife, Donna Sancha, who survived him, and lived until 1418, he left issue,

Teresa, b. at Paris, 15th October, 1688. These two ladies were Martha, b. 15th June, 1690. the intimate friends of Pope, and their friendship is frequently reverted to in his works. They first became acquainted with the poet at White Knights, near Reading, the house of their grandfather, a great lover of poetry and admirer of Pope. The close vicinity of White Knights, Maple Durham, and Binfield, and the marked attention paid to the author's rising reputation, created an intimacy between the families, which was cemented by the conformity of their religious and political sentiments. "Their acquaintance," says Dr. Johnson, "began early, the life of each was pictured on the other's mind, their conversation was therefore endearing, for when they met there was an immediate coalition of congenial notions." When Pope needed more than the common offices of friendship, and when the gentle attentions of female kindness could alone soothe his continued infirmities, those consoling services in his hour of weakness and pain he experienced from the Misses Blount. He and they were constantly together, and if at any time absent they carried on a continued correspondence. By his will, dated a few months before his death, the poet bequeathed to the younger Miss Blount £100, the furniture of the grotto, the urns in his garden, and the interest of his whole property for her life. Miss Martha Blount, the Parthenia of Pope, died in 1763, Miss Teresa Blount (who assumed the name of Zephyrina in her correspondence with Mr. Moore, who styled himself Alexis,) died in 1759.

SCOTT, OF MALLENY.

SCOTT, THOMAS, esq. of Malleney, in the shire of Midlothian, b. 25th December, 1745, a deputy lieutenant for that county.

This gentleman, a general in the army, and, with one exception, the oldest officer in the British service, obtained an ensigncy in the 24th regiment 20th May, 1761, and his career has since been highly distinguished. He served under Prince Ferdinand during the whole of the campaign of 1762, and carried the colours of his regiment at the battle of Wellemstall, and at the attack of the British picquets on the Fulda. In 1763, returning home, he was stationed in Ireland, and obtained his lieutenancy in 1765. In 1776, he accompanied his regiment to America, served two campaigns under General Burgoyne, with a company of marksmen attached to a large body of Indians, and acquitted himself so much to the satisfaction of his commanding officer, Brigadier Fraser, that he twice received thanks in public orders. After the battle of the 19th September, 1777, the critical situation of Burgoyne rendering it indispensably necessary to communicate with Sir Henry Clinton, the commander-in-chief, two officers were selected, who should take different routes, to apprize Sir Henry of the perilous position of the British forces. Captain Scott, who was well known as an excellent pedestrian, was chosen as one of the envys, and accomplished his journey with great address and courage. In 1788, he returned to Europe; in 1791, served, during the Spanish armament, with a detachment of the 53rd regiment, for six months on board his majesty's ship Hannibal, commanded by Sir John Colpoys, and proceeding, in 1793, to the continent with Sir Ralph Abercomby, assisted at the sieges of Valenciennes and Dunkirk, and in the attack in which the Austrian General D'Alton was killed. He was also at the siege of Niewport, and received the commission of major for his exertions in its defence.

During the three days that Prince William of Gloucester commanded the brigade, which consisted of the 14th, 37th, and 53rd regiments, Major Scott was attached to the staff of his royal highness, was present at the attack of the village of Premont, and participated in the action of the 24th May, being wounded that day in the inside of the right thigh by a musket ball. In 1794, he was appointed lieutenant-colonel of one of the battalions of the 94th, and in the following year proceeded with it to Gibraltar, and in 1796 to the Cape of Good Hope. He served the whole of the campaign of 1799, in the Mysore country, and was at the capture of Seringapatam. In 1800, Colonel Scott, in consequence of ill health, deemed it expedient to return to Europe, and left Hindostan. The Indianman, however, in which he was a passenger, being boarded and taken by a French privateer, in the British Channel, close to the Isle of Wight, Colonel Scott was detained some weeks at Cherbourg until exchanged, in consequence of an application to the French government by the desire of the Duke of York. In 1801, he was appointed colonel by brevet; in 1802, inspecting field officer of the Edinburgh recruiting district; in 1803, deputy inspector-general of the recruiting service in North Britain; in 1804, brigadier-general; in 1808, major-general on the staff; and, in 1813, lieutenant-general. It is a remarkable circumstance in the history of General Scott's life, that from the time he was appointed ensign to his promotion to the rank of general, a period of no less than fifty-two years, he had served without ever being on half pay or unemployed. Since his retirement from his staff appointment, the general has chiefly resided at Malleny, where, after a long and severe military career, he enjoys a well-earned repose, alike distinguished for his benevolence, hospitality, and kindness to his tenants.

Lineage.

The Scotts of Malleny, an ancient branch of Buccleugh, appears to have separated from the parent stock during its residence in Lanarkshire. The first of the family that settled in Midlothian was

James Scott, of Scotsloch, who lived in the reigns of Queen Mary and James VI. He was father of Laurence Scott, of Clerkington, a distinguished person in the time of Charles I. who was appointed clerk to the privy council, and one of the principal clerks of session. From several charters under the great seal, it appears that his possessions were extensive in Edinburghshire. He m. Elizabeth, daughter of Hop Pringle, of Torrance, and had, with two daughters, one

m. to Lauder, of Hatton, and the other to Houstoun, three sons, viz.

William, his heir.

James, who received from his father the lands of Bonnytoun, in West Lothian.

Laurence, ancestor of the Scotts of Bavelaw.

The eldest son,

Sir William Scott, of Clerkington, received the honor of knighthood from Charles I. and was appointed in 1642, one of the senators of the college of justice. He married first, a daughter of Morrison, of Preston Grange, and had a son, Lawrence, his heir. He married secondly, Barbara, daughter of Sir John Dalmahoy, of that Ilk, and had by her, three sons and three daughters, viz.

1. John, successor to his brother.
2. James, of Scotsloch.
4. Barbara, m. first, to a son of Stewart, of Blackhall; and secondly, to Sir William Drummond, of Hathornden.
5. Agnes, m. to Sir John Home, of Renton.
6. ——, m. to Ogilvie, of Muckle, in Angus.
Sir William Scott was succeeded by his son,

LAURENCE SCOTT, esq. of Clerkington, who married a daughter of Sir John Dalhoy, and had two daughters only, the elder, the wife of George Winram, esq. of Egemouth, and the younger, of Robert Kennedy, esq. comptroller of the customs, at Borrowstones. Dying thus without male issue, he was succeeded by his brother, JOHN SCOTT, esq. who received from his father in patrimony, the lands and barony of Malleny, in Midlothian, which has ever since been the chief title of the family. He m. Anne, daughter of Sir Thomas Nicolson, of Cockburnspath, and had, with two daughters, the elder m. to Sir William Calderwood, of Polton, one of the senators of the college of justice; and the younger, to her cousin, Laurence Scott, of Bevelaw, two sons, viz.

1. THOMAS, his heir.
2. William, an advocate at the Scottish bar, who married, first, Magdalen, daughter and heiress of William Blair, esq. of Blair, and had one son, viz.
   1. William, who inherited the estate and assumed the surname of Blair. He died without issue, in 1732, when he settled his lands upon the children of his father's second marriage.

William Scott (the elder), wedded secondly, Catherine, only daughter of Alexander Tait, merchant, in Edinburgh, and had five sons and six daughters, who all assumed the surname of Blair, viz.

2. HAMILTON BLAIR, esq. of Blair, major in the Scots Greys, who m. Jane, youngest daughter of Sydenham Williams, esq. of Herrington, in the county of Dorset (see vol. i. p. 617), and dying in 1782, left, with two daughters, Agatha, m. to Lieutenant-General Avarne; and Jane, to Robert Williams, esq. of Cerne Abbas, in Dorsetshire, a son and successor,

   WILLIAM BLAIR, esq. of Blair, colonel of the Ayrshire regiment of Fencible Cavalry, who m. Magdalen, eldest daughter of the late John Fordyce, esq. of Ayton, in Berwickshire, and had five sons, and seven daughters. Of the latter, the eldest, Catherine, married Matthew Fortescue, esq. of Stephens-town, in the county of Louth; and the third, Jane Louisa, was wife of Colonel Jackson, of Enniscoe, in the county of Mayo.

3. Alexander Blair, surveyor of the customs, at Port Glasgow, who m. Elizabeth, only daughter of John Hamilton, esq. of Grange, in Ayrshire, and had issue.

4. John Blair, captain of foot, who fell at Minden, in 1759.
5. Thomas Blair, a cornet in the Scots Greys, killed at the battle of Vald, in 1747.
6. William Blair, a lieutenant of foot, killed at Oswego, in India, in 1756.

1. Anne Blair, m. to David Blair, esq. of Adamton, and had a daughter, Catherine, the wife of Sir William Maxwell, bart. of Monreith.
2. Magdalen Blair, m. to Sir William Maxwell, bart. of Monreith, and had, with other issue, a daughter, Jane, wife of Alexander, duke of Gordon.
3. Janet Blair, m. to Alexander Tait, esq. one of the principal clerks of session, and had issue.
4. Barbara Blair, m. to William Fullarton, esq. of that ilk, and had issue.
5. Catherine Blair, died unm.
6. Mary Blair, m. to Sir John Sinclair, bart. of Stevenston, and had issue.

John Scott died in 1709, and was succeeded by his son,

THOMAS SCOTT, esq. of Malleny, who m. Isabel, daughter of Sir John Lauder, bart. of Fountain Hall, one of the senators of the college of justice, and had four sons and six daughters, viz.

1. JOHN, who entered the Portuguese military service, wherein he remained several years, and having returned to Scotland, died at Malleny, 20th September, 1791.
2. THOMAS, the present General Scott, of Malleny.
3. James, who commanded a ship in India, and died there.
4. Alexander, who served in the Scots Brigade, in Holland, and attained the rank of major in the British army. He now resides at Lymphoy, on the estate of Malleny.
5. Archibald, who was in the military service of the East India Company, and fell in action.
6. Francis Carteret, who went in 1774, collector of customs, to Montego Bay, in Jamaica, and returned in 1800. He m. in 1801, Charlotte-Elizabeth, eldest daughter of the late Major General George Cunningham, of the Scots Brigade and had six sons and five daughters, viz.

1. Thomas, b. at Ravelrig, in the county of Midlothian, in 1802, and died in 1832.
2. Carteret-George, captain in the hon. East India company's service m. first, in 1830, Charlotte, daughter of the late Colonel M'Dougal, and granddaughter of George, marquis of Tweeddale. This lady died in 1831, and Capt. Scott wedded secondly, in 1833, Emily, daughter of Capt. Frederick Holmes Coffin, R.N.

M'KERRELL, OF HILLHOUSE.

M'KERRELL, JOHN, esq. of Hillhouse, in the county of Ayr, late master of the Mint at Madras, succeeded his father in 1820.

Lineage.

The M'Kerrells have flourished, from a remote period, in the shire of Ayr, but, with many other Caledonian families, have to deplore, that by the spoliation of the first Edward, in the thirteenth century, and the destruction by fire of the herald's archives at Edinburgh, in the seventeenth, they are deprived of direct evidence in tracing their origin, and can now deduce it on presumptive proof alone. The tradition from sire to son bears that they came out of Ireland, and it carries back the possession of the estate of Hillhouse full five hundred years, to the glorious era of Robert the Bruce, a period when vast changes occurred in the proprietary of the soil, and when the chiefs of numerous houses, still in a high state of prosperity, were endowed by that illustrious prince.

The name Kirrell appears on the roll of Battle Abbey; hence the family is presumed to be of Norman descent, its advent from Ireland rather upholding than up setting the presumption, if the swarm of Anglo-Norman adventurers who joined the banner of Earl Strongbow, and invaded that country in 1170, be taken into consideration. " Of the Norman barons," says Sir Walter Scott, "Scotland received from time to time such numerous accessions, that they may be said, with few exceptions, to form the ancestors of the Scottish nobility, and of many of the most distinguished families amongst the gentry; a fact so well known, that it were useless to bring proof of it here."

KIRIEL, KIREL, KIRREL, OR KERRELL, as at various times spelt), is a surname now very rarely to be met with. It is said to exist in Sweden, another proof of Norma-nic origin: in Scotland, the family of Hillhouse alone bears it.

The first of the name, and the most remote now on Scottish record, Sir John M'KIREL,* distinguished himself at the celebrated battle of Otterburn, 10th August, 1388, by wounding and wounding Raoul de Percie, who held the second command in the English host, and whose brother, the renowned Hotspur, was made prisoner by Sir John Montgomery;† (from whom spring the earls of Eglington), in the same sanguinary conflict. That this Sir John M'Kirel was an ancestor of the Hillhouse family, the circumstance of the latter bearing the arms which he acquired by his prowess in that celebrated battle appears conclusive, al-

* MAC, or " Son of," was a common pre-fixature in both Scotland and Ireland.
† The death of Sir John Montgomery's son, Hugh, in this bloody raid has been commemorated in the old and popular ballad of Chevy Chase:

Against Sir Hugh Montgomery
So straight his shaft he set,
The grey goose wing that was thereon,
In his heart's blood was wet.

If heraldry may be trusted, and for long after its institution its purity as a science, and its utility still in restoring the severed links of affinity when broken asunder, through loss of documentary evidence, are manifest, the arms of this family must have been those of Sir John M'Kerel, for they are founded on the Percie coat, which was az. three fusils in fess or. The arms of M'Kerell being az. three fusils gu., on a fess or, within a bordure ensigned for distinction, leaving no question but that in consequence of the capture of Percie, this formed one of those cases described by heralds of arms by conquest: for as M'Kerel was then a knight, (chevalier, in Froissart), and no other honour or reward being recorded of him, it follows that this augmentation to, or grant of arms, was his reward; and their inheritance, cou-piled, with Froissart's record, is the best of all proofs of the descent of the present family of Hillhouse from Sir John, and also of the correctness of one part of the tradition above.

though a chasm of nearly two centuries occurs in the pedigree.

The following is Froissart's account of the battle of Otterburn, and the mention of M'Kirel:

" De tous les besognes, batailles et rencontres qui sont cez dessous en ceste historie (dont je traitte et ay traitte) grandes, moy-ennes et petites, ceste cy, dont je parle pour le present, en fut l'une des plus dures, et des mieux combattues sans feintise, car il n'y avoit homme, chevalier, nescuyer qui ne s'acquitstast et fit son devoir, et tout main a main. Cette bataille fut quasi pareille a la bataille de Becherel; car aussi elle fut moult bien combattue e longuemang. Les enfans au Compte de Northomberlande, Messire Henry et Messire Raoul de Persy (qui l'estoient soueraines capitaines) s'ac-quitterent loyaument par bien combattre:
at quasi pareil party, que celui, par qui le Comte de Douglas fut arreste, auint et cheut a Messire Raoul de Persy; car il se bousa si avant entre ses enemis, qu'il fut enclous, durement naure, mis a la grosse haine, pris et fiancé d'un Chevalier, lequel estoit de la charge et du meme hostel de Moray, and l'appelot en Johan Makirel. En le prenant et fiançant, le Chevalier Escoçois de-manda a Messire Raoul de Persy, qu'il l'estoit, (car il estoit si muiet que point ne le cognoissoit) et Messire Raoul (qui estoit si outre que plus ne pouuait, et luy couloit le sang tout aual, qui l'aoifflosse) luy dit; je suis Messire Raoul de Persy.
Adonc dit l'Escoçois, Messire Raoul ré-coux ou no récoux, ie vous fionce mon prisonnier. Je suis Makirel. Bien dit Messire Raoul, je le veieil, mais entandez a mois, car ie suis trop durement naure, et mes chausses et mes greues sont la toutes emples de sang. A ces mots estoit le chevaliere Escoçois ententif, quand delez luy il ouyt crier Moray et au compte; et reçoit le compte et sa barriere droit deiez a luy. Si luy dit Messire Johan Makirel, Monsieur, tenez. Je vous baillle Missrie Raoul de Persy pour prisonnier; mais faites entendre a luy, car il est durement naure. Le Comte de Moray de ceste parole fut reioy mould grandement: et dit, Makirel, tu as bien gagnez les esperons.
Adonc fit il venir ses gens, et leur charger Messire Raoul de Persy: lesquels luy ban-derent et etancherent ces playes. Si se tantoit la bataille fort et dure et ne sauroit on encore lesquels en maroient le meilleur; car le vous de qu'il y eut la plus plus prises et recousses faites, qui toutes ne vindrent pas a cognaisance."

there were six intermediate links at least,

Caradog Vreicherus, or Caradog with the brawny arm, a prince of the Cornish Britons at the close of the fifth and in the early part of the sixth centuries, one of the knights of King Arthur’s Round Table, and in the Welsh Triads styled one of the three celebrated commanders of cavalry, was direct ancestor of

Maenyrch, Lord of Brecon, whose son,

Bleddyn ap Maenyrch, was Lord of Brecon in the reign of William Rufus of England, at which period the lordship was invaded by Bernard Newmarch, a Norman adventurer, who, with his followers, defeated the forces of Bleddyn. The unfortunate chieftain being slain in the battle, was by his sons conveyed to the abbey of Strata Florida, in Cardiganshire, and there buried. His extensive domains were, however, seized upon by Newmarch, and for the most part divided between himself and his Norman followers. Nevertheless, Bleddyn’s sons still retained a portion of their father’s patrimony, and from one of them, named Blegwryd, descended, in the fifth degree,

Einion, who dwelt in Llywel, in the county of Brecon, and was called Einion Seis, because he could speak the English language. Third in descent from Einion was

Llewelyn, who wedded Matilda, daughter of Ieuan ap Rys ap Ivor, of Elvel, and had two sons, Howel, ancestor of the

This is a branch of the ancient stock of Dundas of Dundas (see vol i. p. 643).

David Dundas, of Duddingstoun, who Catherine's mother was Susanal Colville, daughter of Sir A. Colville, commendator of Culross, by Nicolas, daughter of Dundas of Fingask, by a daughter of Bruce of Clackmannan. George Dundas died in 1684, and his wife, Catherine Moneypenny, in 1694. They had twelve children, of whom, John, the eldest surviving son, born in 1641, succeeded his father, and became

John Dundas, of Duddingston. He married, in 1670, Anne, daughter of Sir David Carmichael, of Balmede, descended from the ancient family of Carmichael of Carmichael, by the Hon. The son and successor,

They had no issue; and on the death of John Dundas, the Duddingston estates passed for a few years to the heir male, David Dundas, of Newhalls, son of John, younger son of John Dundas, of Duddingston; but on his death they reverted to the daughter of George Dundas and Magdalen Lindsay-Craufurd, Families of Lindsay and Crawford.

On the death of Lady Mary Lindsay Crawford, in 1833, the representation of these distinguished families devolved on her nearest relatives the Earl of Glasgow and Mr. Hamilton Dundas.

Family of Lindsay.

William de Lindsay, lived in the reign of David I. of Scotland. He is mentioned in 1145. His descendant, david de Lindsay, who died 1230, w. the daughter and co-heir of John de Craufurd, and with her acquired the barony of Craufurd. His descendant,

Sir David Lindsay, of Craufurd, married, in 1325, Mary, daughter and co-heir of the great house of Abernethy, and had three sons, founders of the great branches of the family of Lindsay,

I. Sir James Lindsay, of Craufurd, ancestor to the first branch, the Earls of Craufurd.

II. Sir Alexander Lindsay, of Glessnes, ancestor to the Earls of Balcarres.

III. Sir William Lindsay, of Byres, ancestor to the Lords Lindsay, of the Byres who became Earls of Craufurd, of the second branch, the second subdivision of which branch is represented by Mr. Hamilton Dundas conjointly with the Earl of Glasgow.

The last descendant of the elder brother, (Sir James Lindsay, of Craufurd), was Ludovic, fourteenth Earl of Craufurd, who died about 1646. He resigned his titles to the crown, and obtained a new patent in favour of John, Lord Lindsay, of the Byres.

This John, Lord Lindsay, was the representative of the third of the above mentioned brothers. He was lord high treasurer of Scotland, and had been created, 1641, Earl of Lindsay, and on the death of Earl Ludovic became fifteenth Earl of Crauford. He married Lady Margaret Hamilton, daughter to James, second marquis, and sister to James and William, first and second Dukes of Hamilton. By her he had,

I. William, his heir.

II. Patrick, of whom hereafter.

III. Anne, wife of John, Duke of Rothes.

IV. Christian, wife of John, Earl of Haddington.

V. Helen, wife of Sir Robert Sinclair, of Hevenson, bart.

VI. Elizabeth, wife of David, Earl of Northeck.

The eldest son,

William, sixteenth Earl of Crauford and second Earl of Lindsay, was ancestor of the first subdivision of the second branch of the Earls of Craufurd, which failed in the person of General John Craufurd, eighteenth earl, in 1749, when the titles and estates devolved on the descendants of Patrick, second son of the fifteenth earl, and nephew of the Duke of Hamilton; which

Patrick Lindsay, married, in 1654, Margaret Craufurd, daughter and heiress of Sir John Craufurd, of Kilbirney, and assumed the surname and arms of Craufurd. By her he had,

I. John.

1. Margaret, wife of David, Earl of Glasgow, great grandmother of the present earl.

II. Anne, wife of Hon. Henry Maule, son of the Earl of Panmure. Her son, Lord Maule, d. without issue.

III. Magdalen, wife of George Dundas, of Duddingstoun, great grandmother of Mr. Hamilton Dundas.

The Hon. P. Lindsay Craufurd was s. by his son,

John Lindsay Crawford, who was created, in 1703, Viscount of Garnock. His grandson,

George, fourth Viscount Garnock, succeeded to the earldoms of Crawford and Lindsay on the death of General John Craufurd, the eighteenth earl, in 1749, and became nineteenth earl of the second subdivision of the second branch. His son,

George Lindsay Crawford, twentieth earl, died without issue, in 1808, when the honours of the family became dormant, as they continue. His lordship's sister,

Lady Mary Lindsay Crawford, d. um. in 1833, and was succeeded in the estates, both of the Crawford and Garnock families, by the Earl of Glasgow, as heir of entail, while the honour of representing these two distinguished families is divided between his lordship and Mr. Hamilton Dundas, as the descendants of two sisters, co-heiresses of line.

Family of Craufurd, of Kilbirney.

Galfridus de Crawford lived in the reign of King William the Lion, in the latter part of the twelfth century; and is supposed (from strong presumptive evidence, see vol. ii. p. xiv.) to have sprung from a younger son of the old Earls of Richmond.

Sir John Crawford, of Crawford, his successor, d. in 1248, in the reign of Alexander II., and left two daughters, his co-heirs, the elder was wife of Hugh de Douglas, progenitor of the family of Douglas, and the younger was wife of David de Lindsay, ancestor of the first and second branches of the Earls of Crawford, and of the Earls of Balcarres.

But besides this family, which was accounted the chief of the name, another branch of the Crawfurs was settled in Ayrshire. Sir Reginald Crawfurd lived about the year 1220, and married Margaret, heiress of James, Lord of Loudon; their descendants were the powerful family of Crawfurd, of Loudon, which ended in an heiress, Susannah, married to Sir Duncan Campbell, and hence sprang the Earls of Loudon. (See vol. i. p. 551.)

Malcolm Crawfurd, of the Loudon family, married the dau. and co-heiress of Galbraith, Lord of Greenock, by whom he had

Malcolm Crawfurd, who in the reign of James III. married Marjory, daughter and heiress of John Barclay, of Kilbirney, the last of the male line of the distinguished race of Barclay, Lords of Ardrossan. By her he had

Malcolm Crawfurd, of Kilbirney, who obtained a charter of the lands of Kilbirney, in 1499. He married Marion Crichton, daughter to Robert, Lord Sanquhar, and dying in 1500, was s. b. by Robert Crawfurd, of Kilbirney, who m. Margaret, sister to the first Lord Semple, and had a son,

Lawrence Crawfurd, of Kilbirney. It appears that a portion of the ancient lordship of Crawfurd, in Lanarkshire, (the greater part of which had passed to the Lindsays, Earls of Crawford, by marriage,) still continued in the possession of the house of Kilbirney, as descended from the ancient stock. These remnants of the barony of Crawfurd, this Lawrence exchanged with Sir James Hamilton, of Finnart, for the lands of Drumray, in Dumbartonshire. He also made a pious and charitable donation in 1547, the year of his death. He m. Helen Campbell, daughter of Sir Hugh Campbell, of Loudon, by whom he had,

i. Hugh.

ii. John, of Easter Greenock.

iii. Thomas, ancestor to the Crawfurds, bars. of Jordanhill, and the Crawfurds, of Cartsburn.

The eldest son and heir,

Hugh Crawfurd, of Kilbirney, a zealous adherent of Queen Mary, had by Margaret his wife, daughter of Sir John Colquhoun, of Seep, a son and successor, Malcolm Crawfurd, of Kilbirney, who m. Margaret, daughter of John Cunningham, of Glengarnock, by whom he left at his decease, in 1595, a son and heir,

John Crawfurd, of Kilbirney, who m. Margaret, daughter of John Blair, of Blair, and dying in 1622, was succeeded by his son,

John Crawfurd, of Kilbirney. He m. Mary, daughter of James, Earl of Glencairn, and died in 1629. His son,

Sir John Crawfurd, of Kilbirney, created a baronet in 1642, died in 1661. He m. first, Margaret Balfour, daughter of Robert Lord Burleigh, and secondly, Magdalen, daughter of David, Lord Carnegie, son and heir of David, first Earl of Southesk, by the latter he left at his decease, in 1661, two daughters,

1. Anne, wife of Sir Archibald Stewart, bart. of Blackhall and Ardgowan.

ii. Margaret, on whom her father settled his estate, obliging her heirs to bear the name of Crawfurd. This lady,

Margaret Crawfurd, of Kilbirney, m. Patrick Lindsay, second son of John, fifteenth Earl of Crawford and first Earl of Lindsay. The issue of this marriage were only three,

1. John, great grandfather of the late and twentieth Earl of Crawford, and of Lady Mary Lindsay Crawfurd.

ii. Margaret, wife of David, Earl of Glasgow. Her ladyship was great-grandmother to the present Earl of Glasgow.

ii. Magdalen, m. to George Dundas, of Duddingston, and was great-grandmother of Gabriel Hamilton Dundas, esq. of Duddingston.

RATTRAY-CLERK, ROBERT, esq. of Craighall Rattray, in the shire of Perth, b. in December, 1796; m. in February, 1824, Christina, daughter of the late J. Richardson, esq. of Pitfour, and has issue,

Mr. Clerk-Rattray, who is a magistrate and deputy lieutenant for Perthshire, s. his father, the late James Clerk-Rattray, one of the barons of the Exchequer in Scotland, 29th August, 1831.

Lineage.

The surname of Rattray is derived from the barony of the same name in the county of Perth, and was assumed at a very remote era. The first of the family upon record, Alanus de Rateriff, who lived in the reign of William the Lion and Alexander II, was father of Sir Thomas de Rattray, who received the honour of knighthood from Alexander III. By Christian his wife, he acquired part of the lands of Glencavery and Kincaldrum, in Forfarshire, as appears from an agreement, "super controversia inter dominum Thomam de Ratcrey militem, actorem nomine Christiane uxoris sue, ex parte unam, et viros religiosos abbat. et convent. de Aberbrotich ex altera; super limitibus terrarum de Glencavery et Kincaldrum; &c." This deed, to which the seals of the earl of Buchan, the bishops of St. Andrews and Brechin, the earl of Marr, Sir Thomas Rattray and his spouse, are appended, bears date in 1253. In 1267, Sir Thomas witnessed a donation to the priory of St. Andrew, and in 1272 obtained from Simon, abbot of Dunfermline, the lands of Bendathen. He died shortly after, leaving Eustatus his heir, and John, witness to a deed in the time of Alexander III.

The elder,

Eustatus de Ratref, designed "Dominus de eodem," temp. Alexander III. was father of Sir Adam Ratref, of Ratref, who is styled in Prynne's Collections, "Nobilis vir dominus de Ratref, anno 1291," and in Rymer's Fed. Angl. when Sir Adam, with many others, was compelled to submit to King Edward I. it is stated, "Nobilis vir Adam de Retrefe et Williebmus de Maule fecerunt fidelitatem dicto regi, anno 1292." He testified a charter in Macfalone's Collections, wherein he is designed, "Dominus Adam de Retrefe miles," 4th October, 1294, and in 1296 was again compelled to swear allegiance to Edward of England. Sir Adam died before the year 1315, and was s. by his son, Alexander de Ratref, of that Ilk, one of the barons of the parliament held at Ayr in 1315 by Robert Bruce, to arrange the deed of succession to the crown. He died s. p. and was s. by his brother, Eustatus de Ratref, of that Ilk, who was tried for a conspiracy against Robert I. in August, 1320, but acquitted. His son and successor,

John de Ratref, of that Ilk, living in the reign of David Bruce, had, with a daughter, Margaret, wife of John de Meghull, of Meghull, a son and successor,

John de Ratref, of that Ilk, who is witness in a confirmation granted by Sir William Scot, of Balweary, "dilecto consanguineo suo Johanni de Lindsay, filio Alexandri Lindsay de Cavill et Fife," dated at Balweary, "in festo sancte Margaretae Reginae," 10th June, 1399. He died at the close of the reign of James I. and was s. by his son, Patrick Ratref, of that Ilk, mentioned in a charter of Sir Walter Haliburton, 24th July, 1453, and in one to the monastery of Aberbrotich in 1456. He was father of.

Sir Silvester Rattray, of that ilk, who was appointed one of the ambassadors extraordinary to treat with the court of England, for which he obtained a safe conduct, dated 12th June, 1463, and is then designated "Dominus Silvester de Rattray miles." He was a person of great influence at the Scottish Court, possessed an ample inheritance, and sat in the parliament of 1481. He m. Alison Hepburn, and had a son and successor, Sir John Rattray, of that ilk, who was knighted by James IV. He m. Elizabeth, daughter of James, second Lord Kennedy, and had three sons and one daughter, viz.

1. John, a military officer, who wedded Margaret Abercrombie, but died in Holland before his father, without issue.
2. Patrick, \( ^{\text{J}} \) successively heirs.
3. Silvester, \( ^{\text{J}} \) Silvester, to.

Grizel, m. to John Stewart, third earl of Athol.

After the decease of Sir John, a calamitous and almost ruinous contest arose between his younger sons, and their brother-in-law the earl of Athol. Tradition affirms that the earl, having married Sir John's only daughter, deemed himself entitled to a portion at least of the Rattray estates, and being a person of great power and authority, came, with a considerable body of men, took possession of the castle of Rattray, and carried off the family writs; while Patrick Rattray, the second son, totally unable to resist so potent a nobleman, retired to the castle of Craighall, which he gallantly defended, and succeeded in holding together with the lands of Craighall and Kynballoch; the Athol family continuing to possess the greater part of the lands of Rattray, until they were evicted from them by an appraising at the instance of Sir Robert Crichton, of Clunie, about the beginning of the seventeenth century. The said

Patrick Rattray, dying unmarried, the representation of the family devolved upon his brother,

Silvester Rattray, who endeavoured to serve himself heir to his father and brothers at Perth, in which county his lands lay, but found it impossible, because (as the writ bears) the earl of Athol and his friends are "magne potestatis et fortitudinis" in that town. Rattray applied in consequence to King James V. and obtained from his majesty a commission under the great seal to have service done at Dundee. In this commission it is narrated that Patrick, his brother, had been "postpositus et impeditus" for the space of twelve years by the said earl, from getting himself served in the lands that fell to him by the death of his father and brother John; and that, post lites magnasque expensas per dictum Patrium in prefata materia, prefatus comes misit

Walterum Leslie, Johannem Stewart, alias John of Lorn, Thomas Laing, David Stewart, suos servitores, et eorum complices, et dictum Patrium in sua capella ipsius loci de Kynballoch interiicere causavit: et idem Silvester informator, spod dictus comes, et sui complices, sibi similiter facere intendant, si sua brevia de hujusmodi terris prosequi voleat." This extraordinary commis-ion is dated at Edinburgh 17th October, 1533, to which the great seal is appended, and in consequence Silvester Rattray was served heir to his father Sir John, and to his brothers John and Patrick, in the barony of Craighall and Kynballoch, and infelt therein in Dundee in 1534. He m. Mary, daughter of Andrew, third Lord Gray, (relict of Kemenenmouth, of that ilk,) and had, with a daughter, Elizabeth, m. to John Blair, of Ard Blair, a son and successor,

David Rattray, of Craighall and Kynballoch, who was served heir to his father before the sheriff of Perth, in the lands of Kynballoch, and certain others lying within the barony of Rattray, anno 1554. He wedded Isabel, daughter of Alexander Ramsay, of Bannf, and had two sons,

George, his heir.

Silvester, minister at Auchtergean, ancestor of Rattray, of Dalnoon.

David Rattray, who got a charter in 1566, from Richard Livingstone and John Spens, the commissioners for receiving resignations and granting new infeftments of church-lands, of the estate of Chapletoun, died in the commencement of the reign of James VI. and was succeeded by his eldest son,

George Rattray, of Craighall, served heir to his father before the sheriff of Perth, 6th August, 1586. He m. Janet, daughter of George Drummond, of Blair, and had a son and successor, Silvester Rattray, of Craighall, infelt in all his father's lands by a charter under the great seal, dated 26th October, 1604. He m. Agnes, daughter of Lambie, of Dunkenie, and had two sons, viz.

David, his heir.

Silvester, bred to the church, progenitors of the Rattrays of Persie.

The elder son,

David Rattray, of Craighall, served heir to his father 22nd June, 1613, obtained from Charles I. a charter of the lands and barony of Myretown, Herries, the four merk land of Skeith, the forty shilling land of Mel-tone, Kirkinner, &c. in the shire of Wigtown, dated 2nd February, 1629, and subsequently (in 1640) from the same monarch, of the lands and barony of Saltoun, in the counties of East and Midlothian. He died soon after, and by Agnes Hay, his wife, left a son, CORBETT, OF ELSHAM AND DARNHALL.

CORBETT, THOMAS-GEORGE, esq. of Elsham, in the county of Lincoln, and of Darnhall, in Cheshire, succeeded his father 8th February, 1832. Mr. Corbett represents the Northern Division of Lincolnshire in parliament.

PATRICK RATTRAY, of Craighall, who, upon his own resignation, got a charter under the great seal from CHARLES I. dated 28th February, 1648, of the lands of Craighall, Kynballock, &c. containing a Novodamus, and erecting them into a free barony, to be called Craighall Rattray, in all time coming. He m. Anne Drummond, daughter of John, second Lord Maderty, and had, with a daughter, m. to Ogilvie, of Balfour, a son and successor.

JAMES RATTRAY, of Craighall, who had a charter under the great seal, dated 30th April, 1672, of the lands of Chapleton, &c. containing a Novodamus. He was afterwards served heir in general before the sheriff of Perth, to Sir John Rattray, of that Ilk, who was "tritaevus patris Jacobi Rattray, de Craighall, latoris praesentiam;" and at the same time, heir in special to Patrick, his father. He wedded Elizabeth, daughter of Sir George Hay, of Meginich, and had a son,

DR. THOMAS RATTRAY, of Craighall, a man of singular piety and learning, who was served heir to his father before the sheriff of Perth, on the 13th July, 1692. He espoused Margaret Galloway, daughter of Thomas, Lord Dunkeld, and had two sons and three daughters, viz.

1. JAMES, of Craighall, who m. Marjory, daughter of John Graham, esq. of Baigowan, and had issue.
2. JOHN, an eminent surgeon in Edinburgh, who m. first, Christian, daughter of George Main, esq. of that city; and secondly, Mary, daughter of George Lockhart, esq. of Carnwath. By both wives he had issue.

2. JEAN, m. first, to Sir James Elphinstone, bart. and secondly, to Colonel George Mure, a brother of Caldwell.

He purchased the lands of Listonshiel and Spittal, in Midlothian, and got a charter under the great seal. By Margaret, his wife, Dr. Clerk had five sons and one daughter, viz.

He m. in January, 1791, Jane, daughter of Admiral Duff, of Fetteresso, and dying in 1831, left, with one daughter, Jane, a son and successor, the present ROBERT CLERK-RATTRAY, esq. of Craighall Rattray.

This is a junior branch of one of the most noble and ancient families, whose descent can be traced, by authentic records, to a period preceding the Norman Conquest.

Corbet (to whom Le Carpentier, in his Histoire du Cambray, gives the surname of Hugh), was a man of considerable importance in the Pays de Caux, in Normandy. He had four sons, Hugh, Roger, Renaud, and Robert. Hugh, the eldest son, was like his father, a knight, and from him descended the Corbets of France. Renaud, the third son, was the ancestor of the Corbets of Flanders. Roger and Robert, the second and fourth sons, accompanied their father in the expedition of the Conqueror, and obtained from that monarch large possessions, chiefly in Shropshire, where their relation, Roger de Montgomery, earl of Shrewsbury, was their patron and lord paramount.

Robert Corbet, the fourth son, and younger of the two brothers who came with their father to England, held fifteen manors in Shropshire, under Earl Roger de Montgomery; his male line ended with his son, Robert Corbet, lord of Alcester, who left no issue, though many genealogists (See Burke's Extinct Peerage, &c.) have erroneously described him as the ancestor of the Barons Corbet, of Caus, of whom hereafter.

Roger Corbet, the second son of Corbet, and elder of the two brothers who served under the Norman, held twenty-four manors in Shropshire, and one in Montgomeryshire, from his kinsman, Earl Roger de Montgomery, and was also highly in the confidence of Robert de Belesme, the third Earl of Shrewsbury. This Roger Corbet, the progenitor of all the Shropshire Corbets and their various branches, had three sons, William, Ebraid, and Simon.

William Corbet, the eldest son, was seated at Wattlesborough, in the county of Salop, and had three sons, viz.

1. Thomas.

2. Robert (Sir), of Caus, knt. whose younger son, Richard, accompanied King Richard I. to the siege of Acre. The eldest son, Sir Robert Corbet, was lord of Caus, in the 22nd Henry II. and was ancestor of the Barons Corbet, of Caus, now extinct, (see Burke's Extinct Peerage), and of the Corbets, formerly of Leigh, but now of Sundorne Castle, near Shrewsbury.

3. Philip.

The eldest son,

Thomas Corbet, succeeded his father, at Wattlesborough, and had two sons,

1. Roger, his heir.

2. Thomas, ancestor of the Corbets of Hadley, and King's Bromley, which line ended in an heiress, married to John Grevile, in the reign of Henry V.

The elder son,

Roger Corbet, succeeded at Wattlesborough, and was father of Sir Richard Corbet, knt. who married Joan, daughter and heiress of Bartholomew Thoret, of Moreton, otherwise Moreton Thoret, in the county of Salop, now called Moreton Corbet, and still in the possession of the lineal descendants of this marriage. Sir Richard removed from Wattlesborough to Moreton, where he was succeeded by his son,

Richard Corbet, father of

Sir Robert Corbet, knt. of Moreton Corbet, sheriff of Shropshire in 1288, who, by his wife, Matilda, was father of

Sir Thomas Corbet, knt. of Moreton Corbet, whose son,

Sir Robert Corbet, knt. of Moreton Corbet, died in the 49th Edward III. and was succeeded by his son,

Sir Roger Corbet, knt. of Moreton Corbet, who acquired the estate of Shawbury, in the county of Salop, (now the property of his descendant, Sir Andrew Corbet, bart.) by marriage with Margaret de Erdington, the heiress of that place. Their son, Robert Corbet, of Moreton Corbet, was sheriff of Shropshire in 1419, and married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Mallory, knt. Their son, Sir Roger Corbet, knt. of Moreton Corbet, married Elizabeth, daughter and sole heir of Thomas Hopton, of Hopton.

Castle, in the county of Salop, by whom he was father of

Sir Richard Corbet, knt. of Moreton Corbet, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Walter, Lord Ferrers, of Chartley; and their son,

Sir Robert Corbet, knt. of Moreton Corbet, sheriff of Shropshire in 1507, married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Henry Vernon, knt. of Nether Haddon. She survived her husband fifty years, and was called "the old Lady Corbet, of Shrewsbury." She had by Sir Robert Corbet, with three daughters, three sons, viz.

1. Roger (Sir), his heir.
2. Richard, sheriff of Shropshire in 1561.
3. Reginald, who married Alice, sister and co-heir of William Gratwood, of Adderley and Stoke-upon-Tern, in the county of Salop, whose father, John Gratwood, became possessed of those estates by marriage with Jane, sister and co-heir of Sir Rowland Hill, knt. lord mayor of London. This Reginald Corbet was a judge in the North Wales circuit, and a justice of the queen's bench, and was ancestor of the line of Corbet, of Stoke and Adderley, baronets, now extinct.

The eldest son.

Sir Roger Corbet, succeeded his father at Moreton Corbet. He was sheriff of Shropshire in 1530, and married Ann, daughter of Andrew Lord Windsor, by which lady he had issue,

9. Margaret, married Thomas Harley, esq. of Brampton Bryan.
10. Mary.

The eldest son,

Robert Corbet, succeeded his father in 1578, and received the honour of knighthood. He married Ann, daughter of Oliver, Lord St. John, of Bletsoe, by whom he had two daughters, who conveyed large estates to their husbands, viz. Elizabeth, wife of Sir Henry Wallop, knt. (ancestor of the Earl of Portsmouth), and Anne, wife of Sir Adolphus Carew, knt. In the Moreton Corbet estates, however, he was succeeded by his brother,

Sir Richard Corbet, knight of the Bath, who died without issue, in 1606, and was succeeded by his eldest surviving brother,

Sir Vincent Corbet, knt. of Moreton Corbet, who married Frances, daughter and heir of William Humfreston, esq. of Humfreston, in the county of Salop, and had issue,

Mr. Pigott s. his father in 1811.
Lineage.

In an elaborate MS. compiled and emblazoned in the College of Arms, containing "Sundrie Ancient Remembrances of Arms, Genealogies, and other Notes of Gentility belonging to the Worshipfull Name and Families of Pigot or Picot," it is stated that "In the first reign of the Normans there flourished in this land two noble familys of the surname of Pigot; and that they were of the like noble lineage or offspring in the Duthy of Normandy before the Norman conquest of England, appeareth by the reverend testimonies of our ancient Heralds books and chronicles: the first whereof being named otherwiles Pigot and Picot, was Viscount Hereditary of Cambridge Sheer or Granbridge, and Baron of Boorne or Brune in the said County in the reign of King William the Conqueror. After his death, Robert Pigot, his son, succeeded in the Baronie, and he forfeited the same by taking part with Robert, Duke of Normandy, against William Rufus; and King Henry the First gave the same to Payne Peverell. This Peverell married the sister of the said Lord Robert Pigot, as Mr. Camblen notes in his description of Cambridgeshire."

"The other family of the Pigots that is said to have been of noble title about the Conqueror's time, did flourish in the west parts of the realm, namely, in Wales, on the Marches thereof, as it seemeth. For Humphrey Lloyd and Doctor Powell in their Chronicles of Wales, p. 167, affirm that in the reign of King Henry the First, anno 1109, Cadocan ap Blethin, Lord of Powes, married the daughter of the Lord Pigot, of Say, a nobleman of Normandie, and had divers townes and lordships in that countrie by gift of the said Pigot, and a son also, by his daughter, named Henry, to whom the King gave a portion of his uncle Jerworth's ransome, which Jerworth ap Blethin was the said King's prisoner."

"It is supposed from a branch of this Pigot are lineally descended those Pigotts, which have many ages since continued at Chetwcynd, in Shropshire, their arms being 3 fusills or millpecks as aforesaid, likewise in Flintshire, Cheshire, Herefordshire, &c. whereof there are many gentlemen remaining in Wales to this day, as is reported and known."

Of the Cheshire branch of Pigot, it is known by authentic records that Gilbert Pigot or Pichot, was mesne lord of Broxton, at a period approximating to the Norman conquest. Robert Pigot, and William, his son, by charter, granted to the monks of St. Werberg, in Chester, the town of Chelford; and another, Gilbert Pigot, was a benefactor to the abbey of Pulton, in that county, in the year 1210.

Richard Pigot, "of Cheshire," presumed to have been of the family of Pigot, of Butley, in that county, and to have been descended from Gilbert, lord of Broxton, before mentioned, married the daughter and co-heiress of Sir Richard de Peshale, of Chetwynd, in the county of Salop, and with her obtained that fine estate. His grandson,

Robert Pigot, of Chetwynd, was sheriff of Shropshire in 1517, and he (as also did several of his descendants) bore for arms, azure, a chevron between three mullets or, on a chief ermine, three fusils sable. The chevron and mullets were borne by the Peshales of Chetwynd, in consequence of the marriage of Sir Richard de Peshale, sheriff of Shropshire in 1333, with Joan, daughter and heir of Reginald, son of Sir John de Chetwynd, by which marriage the Chetwynd estate was obtained by the Peshale family. Robert Pigott, esq. married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Blunt, knt. of Kinlet, by whom he had issue,

Thomas Pigott, esq. of Chetwynd, whose son,

Robert Pigott, esq. of Chetwynd, was sheriff of Shropshire in 1574. By Elizabeth, his wife, daughter of William Gatacre, esq. of Gatacre, in the county of Salop, he had numerous issue, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

Thomas Pigott, esq. of Chetwynd, sheriff of Shropshire in 1615, he married Dorothy, daughter of Thomas Eyton, esq. of Eyton, in the county of Salop, and dying in 1620, was succeeded in his estates by his son,
WALTER PIGOTT, esq. of Chetwynd, sheriff of Shropshire in 1624, who married Katherine, daughter of Sir Richard Leveson, kni., and had a son,

THOMAS PIGOTT, esq. of Chetwynd, who married Anne, daughter of Ralph Sneyd, esq. of Keble, in the county of Stafford, and dying in 1665, was succeeded by his son,

WALTER PIGOTT, esq. of Chetwynd, who married Anne, daughter of Sir John Dryden, bart. of Canons Ashby, in the county of Northampton, and had issue,

1. Robert, his heir.
2. Dryden, rector of Edgmond, in the county of Salop.

Mary.

Walter Pigott died in 1669, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

Robert Pigott, esq. of Chetwynd, sheriff of Shropshire in 1697, who married Frances, daughter of William Ward, esq. of Wilmingsworth, in the county of Stafford, (brother of Edward, Lord Dudley and Ward), by whom he had issue,

1. Robert, his heir, born 21st November, 1699.
2. John.
3. Thomas.
4. William, rector of Edgmond and Chetwynd, in the county of Salop, ancestor of Colonel Pigott, of Doddershall Park. (See that family.)
5. Benjamin.
6. Francis.

i. Honor, married to John Harvey, esq.
ii. Ann, married to Richard Lyster, esq. of Rowton, in the county of Salop.

Mr. Pigott was succeeded in his extensive estates by his eldest son,

Robert Pigott, esq. of Chetwynd Park, in the county of Salop, and of Chesterton Hall, in the county of Huntingdon. This gentleman married, first, Diana, dau. and co-heir of Richard Rocke, esq. of Shrewsbury, but had no issue. He married, secondly, Anne, daughter of — Peers, esq. of Criggion, in the county of Montgomery, by whom he had

1. Robert, his heir.
2. Thomas.

i. Frances.
ii. Honor.
iii. Ann.
iv. Rebecca, married John Mytton, esq. of Halston.

The date of Mr. Pigott's death is known by the remarkable wager recorded in Burrows' Reports, under the title of "The Earl of March versus Pigott," in which Lord Mansfield decided, that the impossibility of a contingency is no bar to its becoming the subject of a wager, provided the impossibility is unknown to both the parties at the time of laying it. The case was this: Mr. R. Pigott and Mr. Codrington agreed to run their fathers' lives one against the other. Sir William Codrington being a little turned of fifty; Mr. Pigott, senior, upwards of seventy; but the latter was already dead. He died in Shropshire, (150 miles from London), at two o'clock in the morning of the day on which the bet was made at Newmarket, after dinner. This circumstance was at the time unknown to, and not even suspected by either party; but hence Mr. Pigott was induced to resist payment of the five hundred guineas, for which the wager was laid; and Lord March, afterwards the well-known Duke of Queensberry, who had taken Mr. Codrington's bet, was compelled to bring his action, in which he succeeded. Dying thus, in May, 1770, Mr. Pigott was succeeded at Chetwynd, by his eldest son, Robert Pigott, esq. who served the office of sheriff for Shropshire, in 1774, soon after which, becoming alarmed (as it is said) at the gloomy aspect of affairs in this country, consequent upon the commencement of the American war, he sold the ancient inheritance of Chetwynd, which had been in his name for twelve generations, and hastened to rescue seventy thousand pounds, the inadequate consideration which he had received for it, from his anticipated wreck of the kingdom, by retiring to the continent, and there lost a considerable part of this property, on the failure of those to whom he had entrusted it. He lived for some time at Geneva, married abroad, and had a son, who died before him. His own death happened at Toulouse, on the 7th July, 1794.

Thus terminated the principal line of the family of Pigott, of Chetwynd, but the family itself was continued by

The Rev. William Pigott, rector of Chetwynd and Edgmond, brother of the last Robert Pigott, of Chetwynd. He married Arabella, daughter of John Mytton, esq. of Halston, in the county of Salop, by whom he had issue,

1. William, who was a captain in the 82nd regiment of Foot, and died at Gibraltar, in 1795.
3. Arabella.
4. Anne, married John Corbet, esq. of Sundorne Castle, in the county of Salop.
5. Mary.

The Rev. William Pigott died 9th March, 1811, in his seventieth year, and was succeed in his estates by his son, the present Rev. John—Dyden Pigott, rector of Edgmond and Habberley, in the county of Salop.

Lineage.

The patronymic of this ancient family was BALDWIN; and the unwarried research of the late Rev. John-Briekdale Blakeway, of Shrewsbury, as evinced, in his account of the "Sheriffs of Shropshire," has proved, almost beyond a doubt, that these Baldwyns derive their descent from BAWDEWYN, who occurs in the roll of Batell Abbey, as one of the companions of WILLIAM the Conqueror, who was afterwards castellan of Montgomery under that monarch, and from whom that town acquires its Welsh appellation Tre-Faldwin, or The Town of Baldwin. That this family of BAWDEWIN, Baldwyn, or Baldwin, for the name has been written in these and many other ways, was seated at Dodelebury, or Diddlebury, (more recently denominated Delbury), in Corvedale, in Shropshire, from a very remote period, is beyond all question. A pedigree, drawn up with great care, commences with an undoubted progenitor, BAWDEWIN de Brugge, (i.e. Bawdewin of Bridgenorth), whose son, GEORGE FITZ BAWDEWIN, had the manor of Kingsmear, in Yorkshire, the stewardship of Montgomery Castle, and lands in Hope Bowdler and Smethcoate, in the county of Salop. The fact of George Fitz Bawdewin holding the stewardship of Montgomery Castle, strongly indicates a connexion between him and Bawdewin, the Norman castellan, of the same castle. Two centuries, however, must have elapsed between any contemporary of the Conqueror and Bawdewin de Brugge: for ROGER BALDWIN, grandson of the aforesaid George, is known to have died in, or not long before, the year 1398. This Roger is presumed to be the first of the family who obtained Dodelebury, for his wife Jane was daughter and heiress of William de Wigley, by Alice le Childe, whose great grandfather, John L'Enfant, or the Child, is stated to have married Emblema, the daughter and co-heir of Richard Acheley, the younger, of that place, a descendant of William Achilles, as the name is there written, who is found in the Testa de Nevill of the reign of HENRY III, to hold the tenth part of a knight's fee in Dodelebury, of the barony of Walter de Clifford.

WILLIAM BALDWIN, of Diddlebury, grandson of Roger, had passed the middle age of life in 1458, for he then bestowed his lands in Manslow upon his son,

JOHN BALDWIN, and Elizabeth his wife. Their son,

JOHN BAWDYN, yeoman of the crown, occurs in the roll for the collection of a benevolence (as it was called) in Shropshire, in the year 1491. This gentleman, by his situation about the royal person, had the opportunity of introducing at court his eldest son,

WILLIAM BAWDEWIN, who during the reign of QUEEN MARY, enjoyed the confidential office of cupbearer to her majesty, and was still living in 1576, when Sir Henry Compton, knt. Lord Compton, granted to him, by the name of William Baldwyn, of Diddlebury, gentleman, the manor and advowson of Kyre Wyard, in Worcestershire. He d. without issue, and was s. in estate by his brother,

RICHARD BALDWIN, who married at Shipton, in the county of Salop, on the 7th November, 1545, Margery, daughter of Lawrence Ludlow, of Moore House, in Corvedale, and was s. by his eldest son,

THOMAS BALDWIN, b. in 1546, who, like his grandfather and uncle, spent many of his years within the circuit of a court, as agent to the Earl of Shrewsbury, then engaged in the dangerous office of guarding the Scottish queen. In LODGE'S Illustrations, vol. ii. p. 234, is a letter signed "T. Bawdewin," and directed to the earl of Shrewsbury, 1st July, 1580. It informs his lordship that ELIZABETH is resolute against his going to Chatsworth with Queen MARY. A letter of the earl's to Mr. Baldwyn (ib. 257) proves the great confidence that nobleman placed in him, and expresses an anxiety to be permitted to resign his burdensome charge of guarding the queen, adding, "I have too many spies in my house already, and mind to make choice of others I may trust." Hunter's History of Hallamshire contains a letter directed to Mr. Baldwyn, by the name of "my loving friend Mr. Thomas Bawdewine, at Could Harbar in London," dated April, 1581, and proving that he was not unknown to the ministers of Elizabeth; and in the same work "one Baldwin" is mentioned as a confidential agent of the earl of Shrewsbury. In a room in Beauchamp's Tower, in the Tower of London, anciently the place of confinement for state prisoners, were discovered, some years ago, a number of inscriptions, chiefly made with nails, and all of them the autographs of the unfortunate individuals who thus endeavoured to beguile for a time the tedious hours of confinement. They have been published in the thirteenth volume of the Archaeologia, and since, in Mr. Brayley's history of that fortress. Among them is one which runs thus:

1585. THOMAS BAWDEWIN. JULI. AS VIRTUE MAETH LIFE. SO SIN CAWSETHE DEATH.
To which is added a representation of a pair of scales, evidently intimating the writer's confidence in his own integrity, and desire to obtain justice. Mr. Brand, who has written an elaborate dissertation on these inscriptions, not finding, as he says, either in "the State Papers, Rymer's Federia, Strype, Dod, nor Howe," any mention of this person, "suspects he had been imprisoned here for counterfeiting the queen's coin." But there is not a shadow of doubt that he was the Thomas Baldwyn above-mentioned, and the suspicion of the learned commentator is, consequently, unjust to his memory. His epitaph, still remaining at Diddlebury, records his escape from the "sea, the sword, and the cruel tower."

which, of course, it would not have done if the allusion had been calculated to awaken so disgraceful a recollection; but his imprisonment had a higher and more honourable origin. The trembling anxiety of Elizabeth and her ministers, respecting the safe custody of their most important captive, the queen of Scots, and the ungrateful and harassing task imposed upon the earl of Shrewsbury, as her keeper, are alike matter of history. Perhaps, when Elizabeth's illegitimacy in the eyes of the other sovereigns of Europe, and Mary's pertinacious claim to her crown, supported, as it was ready to be, by every state and almost every individual of the Catholic faith, be taken into fair consideration, the vexatious treatment of that illustrious prisoner will lose somewhat of the character of tyranny and cruelty ascribed to it; but, in the mean time, it is notorious that every avenue of escape, possible or impossible, was guarded with the narrowest scrutiny, and every precaution adopted which the most experienced gaoler could suggest. It has been shewn that Thomas Bawdewin was connected with the earl of Shrewsbury, and in the State Papers of Sir Ralph Sadlier is a letter from Carle, the Scottish queen's secretary, to the same gentleman; much cannot be collected from it, for it is written in a kind of cypher; but this, under the circumstances, would make it more alarming and of greater apparent importance; it evidently relates to some business of the royal captive, and, from the repository in which it was found, it must have reached the hands of government. All this was quite sufficient in those days to warrant the apprehension of any one to whom so suspicious a paper was addressed; it bears date September, 1584, the year preceding the inscription that has been quoted, and must inspire a wish to learn the issue of its author's confinement; and this is supplied by a passage in the pedigree already mentioned; but whether Mr. Bawdewin was re-appointed, after his release, to his former official station, and thus obtained an entire vindication of his character, or whether the appointment preceded his imprisonment, is not stated in this document, the passage from which is as follows:—"Thomas Bawdewin,* esq. of Diddlebury, by the privie counsell of Queen Elizabeth, appoynted as . . . (here is a blank) for the alayres of Mary, queen of Scots, and George, earl of Salop, after three years imprisonment in the Tower, married Bertran, (this should be Gertrude), daugher of Robert Corbett, esq. of Stanwardine." After this liberation, he adopted a motto from the psalmist, piously ascribing the event to a merciful Providence: Per Deum meum transito marum. He had reason, indeed, to congratulate himself upon his escape; for it was seldom, in those golden days, that any one could do so, who had once attracted the sinister notice of the state. Upon the whole it seems most probable, that, when released, he quitted the dangerous vortex of a court, and retired to his paternal estate in Covedale, where he died at a good old age, in October, 1614, and where his posterity continued, for five generations, until Richard Bawdewin sold the Diddlebury estate to Frederick Cornewall, esq. captain R. N, father of the late bishop Worcester, whose son is the present proprietor.

William Baldwin, second brother of Thomas Bawdewin, the preceding, was of Elisch, in the chappelry of Cerfton and the parish of Diddlebury. The family name had been hitherto written indiscriminately; but from this point of divergence, the two branches chose to distinguish themselves by a different mode of spelling. William's son,

Charles Baldwin, esq. was born in

* John Bawdewin, second son of this Thomas, was servant, in 1616, to Edward Talbot, soon afterwards Earl of Shrewsbury, and son to Earl George, in whose service Mr. Bawdewin, the father, was so long continued. In those days, a gentleman's son was not considered as submitting to any degradation by serving a nobleman, or even a knight, in a menial capacity. Mr. Talbot, in a letter published in the Strafford Letters, (page 3), uses the phrase "John Bawdewin, my man." and so in some curious depositions preserved in the History of Whalley, p. 292, touching a right of pews in the parish church, Sir John Towneley is represented as saying (it was in the reign of Henry VIII.) "my man, Shuttleworth, made this form, and here will I sit when I come." The gentleman whom the knight blithely calls "my man," was, however, (says Dr. Whitaker,) a person of property, and was probably his principal agent, or perhaps one of his esquires.
1693, and in the troubles which marked the earlier part of the ensuing century, strenuously supported the royal cause. He represented the town of Ludlow, in the long parliament, until he was disabled, (February 5, 1643,) for deserting (as the term was) the service of the house, being in the king's quarters, and adhering to that party. He married, in 1617, one of the daughters and co-heirs of Francis Holland, of Burwarton, in Shropshire, and either his estate or delinquency was greater than those of his cousin, Edward Bawdewin, of Diddlebury, for while the latter was admitted to compound for £245. Mr. Baldwin was obliged to pay nearly double that sum. He had two sons, who both rose to the honour of knighthood, and to great eminence in different departments of the law.

Samuel (Sir), his heir.

Timothy (Sir), who was admitted of Balliol College, Oxford, in 1634, (being then fifteen years of age,) of the Inner Temple in the following year, became a fellow of All Souls, and had obtained so high a character for knowledge, intrepidity, and loyalty, as to be selected by the university to be one of its council on the occasion of the parliamentary visitation. He was ejected from his fellowship, but was afterwards restored, and enjoyed it in 1663, when, by the name of Dr. Timothy Baldwin, he published Zouch's Tract on the Admiralty. He became also a master in Chancery, and chancellor of the diocese of Chester. In "Wood's Athenæ" a more extensive account of his history may be found. He m. first, Ellen, daughter of Sir William Owen, knt. of Condover, and relict of Sir George Norton, knt. of Abbots Leigh, near Bristol, and secondly, Mary, daughter of Gerard Skrymshire, esq. of Aqualate, a very distinguished royalist, relict of Nicholas Acton, esq. of Brockleton, in the county of Worcesters, but left no issue.

The elder son,

Sir Samuel Baldwin, born in 1618, pursued the study of the common law, was admitted of Balliol College and of the Inner Temple, at the same time, with his brother, was made a serjeant in 1669, king's serjeant in 1672, and deceasing in 1683, was buried in the Temple church, being styled on his monument, "of Stoke Castle," an estate which he rented, on a long lease, from the Earl of Craven, and of which place his brother, Sir Timothy was sometimes called. Sir Samuel married the daughter of Richard Walcot, esq. of London, merchant, and was succeeded at his decease in 1683, by his eldest surviving son,

Charles Baldwin, esq. of Elsich and Stoke Castle, who m. Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Nicholas Acton, esq. by Mary, his wife, sister and co-heir of Edwin Skrymshier, esq. of Aqualate, and had issue,

1. Edwin, died unm.
2. Acton, who m. Elinor, daughter of Sir Charles Skrymshier, knt. of Norbury, but d. s. p.
3. Charles, heir.
4. Samuel, who m. Katherine, daughter of Thomas Lamphugh, D.D.
5. Elizabeth.

Mr. Baldwin d. 4th January, 1706, aged fifty-five, and was s. by his son,

Charles Baldwin, esq. who m. first, Elizabeth, daughter of John Allgood, esq. of Newcastle, and widow of Sir Patrick Strahan, of Glenkindy, Aberdeenshire, and had two sons and two daughters, Charles, his heir, Samuel, who d. s. p., Elizabeth, and Barbara. He wedded, secondly, Anne, daughter of Robert Gayer, esq. of Stoke, Bucks, and widow of Francis Annesley, LL.D. but by her had no issue. His son and successor,

Charles Baldwin, esq. of Aqualate, represented the county of Salop for many years in parliament. He wedded Catherine, elder daughter and co-heir of William Lacon Childe, esq. of Kinlet, by Catherine his wife, daughter of Samuel Pytts, esq. of Kyre, and had issue,

1. William, his heir.
2. Charles, b. 26th February, 1758, and d. 18th September, 1811.
3. Catherine.

Mr. Baldwin was s. at his decease by his eldest son,

William Baldwin, esq. who, inheriting the estates of his maternal ancestors, assumed the surname and arms of Childe only. He espoused, 20th November, 1775, Annabella, second daughter of Sir Charlton Leighton, bart. and by her, who died 21st January, 1816, had one son and one daughter, viz.

William-Lacon, his heir.

Annabella, who m. Samuel-Richard Alleyne, esq. and has three daughters, viz. Annabella-Matilda, Caroline-Charity, and Harriet.

Mr. (Baldwyn) Childe died 3rd February, 1824, and was s. by his son, the present William-Lacon Childe, esq. of Kinlet.

Families of Lacon and Childe.

The very ancient family of Lacon, whose name has at various periods been written Laken, Lakyn, Lakin, and Lacon, was seated at Lacon, in the county of Salop, at a remote era. Fourth in descent from John Laken, lord of the manor of Laken, or Laken, in the 21st year of Edward III., who was fifth in descent from Sir Robert de Laky, also lord of the same manor, was

Sir Richard Laky, knt. sheriff of Salop, in 1415, who witnessed the Earl of Arundel's charter to Oswestry, 8th Henry IV., married Elizabeth, heiress of Sir Hamond Peshale, of Willey, knt. and was father of

Sir William Laken, knt. of Willey, sheriff of Salop, in 1452, whose son, Richard Laken, of Willey, served the same office in 1477. He was father, by Joan his wife, daughter of Thomas Hoorde, of Sir Thomas Laken, of Willey, who received the honour of knighthood, and was sheriff in 1510. He m. Mary, daughter of Sir Richard Corbet, of Morton Corbett, and had four sons and five daughters, viz.

1. Richard (Sir), his heir.
2. Edward, d. s. p.
4. Lauuncelot, m. Elizabeth Gray, and was father of Christopher Laken of Kenley.
5. Alice, m. to John Corbett.
6. Agnes, m. to Robert Berington, of Salop.
7. Dorothy, m. to Sir Richard Walwyn, knt.
8. Mary, married to Thomas Acton, of Sutton.
9. Jane, m. first, to George Bromley, and secondly, to William Egerton.

The eldest son and successor,

Richard Laken, esq. of Willey, sheriff in 1540, wedded Agnes, daughter of Sir John Blount, of Kinlet, and was s. by his son,

* The Blounts of Kinlet were a junior branch of the ancient family seated at Sodington, in the county of Worcester.

Sir John Blount, knt. of Sodington, descended from the Lords of Guisnes (refer to family of Blount of Maple Durham) m. first, Julianna Foulhurst, by whom he had a son, John, progenitor of the present Sodington family, and secondly, Isabella, daughter and heir of Sir Bryan Cornwall, of Kinlet, son of Sir Edmund Cornwall, by Elizabeth his wife, and co-heir of Sir Bryan Brampton, of Kinlet. By his second wife, Sir John Blount left at his decease, in 1424, a son,

John Blount, of Dodington, who m. Alice, daughter of Kynard Delabere, of Herefordshire, and was s. at his demise in 1449, by his son,

Humphrey Blount, of Dodington, who inherited, from his maternal ancestors, the estate of Kinlet, in the county of Salop, and served the office of sheriff for that shire in 1461. He wedded Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Robert Wimington, knt., and widow of John Delves, esq. of Delves Hall, and had a son and successor,

Rowland Lacon, esq. of Willey, high sheriff in 1571, who obtained the Kinlet estate by the devise of his uncle, Sir George Blount, and was father, by Ellen his wife, daughter of William Briggs, of

Sir Francis Lacon, knt. of Willey and Kinlet, high sheriff in 1612. This gentleman, who sold considerable portions of the family property, m. Jane, youngest daughter of Anthony Browne, first Viscount Mountagu (by his second wife, Magdalen, daughter of William, Lord Dacre, of Gilsland), and was s. by his son,

Rowland Lacon, esq. of Kinlet, whose devotion and services to King Charles I. caused a further dismemberment of the estates: the remnant fell, at his decease, to his only daughter,

Sir Thomas Blount, of Kinlet, aged twenty-one years, at his father's decease, in 1477. This gentleman was high sheriff of Salop in 1490, and received the honour of knighthood. He m. Anne, daughter of Sir Richard Croft, of Croft Castle, and had no fewer than twenty children. The eldest,

Sir John Blount, of Kinlet, b. in 1514, succeeded his father in the 10th of Henry VIII. He m. Catherine, daughter and heir of Sir Hugh Pershall, of Knightly, in Staffordshire, and had issue,

1. George (Sir), his heir.
2. Henry, of Bewdley.
3. William.
4. Elizabeth, mother, by Henry VIII., of Henry Fitzroy, Duke of Richmond. This lady, "who was thought," says Lord Herbert, of Cherbury, "for her rare ornaments of nature and education, to be the beauty and mistress-piece of her time," wedded first, Sir Gilbert Talboys, Lord Talboys, and secondly, Edward, Lord Clifton.
5. Rosa, m. to William Grisling, of Lincolnshire.
6. Albarn.
7. Agnes, m. as in the text, to Richard Laken, esq. of Willey.
8. Isabella, m. to William Read.

Sir John Blount was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir George Blount, knt. of Kinlet, who, according to the fashion of the day, served while a youth with distinction in the French and Scottish campaigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., and was high in favour at the court of the former monarch. He served the office of high sheriff for Shropshire in 1564, and, marrying Christiana, or Constance, daughter of Sir John Talbot, of Grafton, had an only daughter, Dorothy, m. first, to John Purslow, esq. of Sidbury, and secondly, to Edward Bullock, esq. of Bradley. Sir George Blount died in 1582, and, for some cause unknown, devised his estates to his nephew, Roland Laken, esq. of Willey, "whom," says Mr. Blakeley, "he probably selected as being equally with himself descended from the Bramptons, the ancient Lords of Kinlet."
SEYMOUR, OF CASTLETOWN.

SEYMOUR, AARON-CROSSLEY, esq. of Castletown House, in the Queen's County, b. 19th December, 1789, m. at Cheltenham, 3rd April, 1818, Anne, only daughter and heiress of John Geale, esq.* of Mount Geale, in the county of Kilkenny, by whom (who d. 28th February, 1825) he had issue,

JOHN-CROSSLEY-GEALE, b. 11th Nov. 1819.

Catherine-Elizabeth-Frances.
Emilia-Olivia-Anne, ☋ both died young.

Mr. Seymour inherited from his father on the 19th of May, 1831.

* By Anne, his wife, daughter of C. Jackson, esq. of Nottinghamshire, Mr. Geale was her second husband; her first, Mr. Kelly, an eminent barrister, fell in a duel with Col. Whaley, and left, (by the said Anne Jackson) an only daughter and heiress, Frances Kelly, who married Richard Drought, esq. of the Queen's County, and had several children.

The family of Geale originally came from Lancashire, and settled in Ireland some considerable number of years back. John Geale, esq. of Mount Geale, in the county of Kilkenny, is the first we have any account of; and he appears to have made a slight alteration in the spelling of the name, which is usually written Gale by the Lancashire, and all other branches of the family. He had several sons, one of whom emigrated to America, and was grandfather of Susanna Geale, who married Alan, first Lord Gardiner, by whom she had a numerous issue.

Benjamin Geale succeeded at Mount Geale. He was alderman and lord mayor of Dublin; and was twice the unsuccessful candidate in two sharply-contested elections for the representation of that city. He married Anne, eldest daughter of Frederick Falkiner, esq. of Abbot's-town, county of Dublin, by Elizabeth, daughter of James Hamilton, esq. of Balliborough, in the county of Cavan, by whom he had three sons and two daughters, viz.

1. John Geale, who succeeded at Mount Geale, and whose only daughter and heir, Anne, married Aaron Crossley-Seymour, esq. He died July 23, 1820.
2. Frederick, deceased, who married Letitia, daughter of P. Brady, esq. and had five sons and three daughters, viz.
   1. Benjamin, married Catherine, daughter of Charles Wild, esq. (by Mary, daughter of Thomas Tipping, of Beaulieu, esq. and sister of Sophia, who married Charles, eighth Lord Blaney) and by her, who died in 1819, left issue.
   2. John, died in 1815.
   3. Frederick, married Ann, daughter of Benjamin Dibbick, esq., of Bristol.
3. Daniel, married Anne, daughter of Benjamin Dibbick, esq., of Bristol.
4. Henry, died in 1818.
Lineage.

This family, now settled for nearly three hundred years in Ireland, claims to be a branch of the great house of Seymour, so memorable in the eventful times of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., for the rapidity of its rise, the vastness of its power, and the depth of its fall.

Sir John Seymour, eldest son and heir of Sir Henry Seymour, by his first wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir George Darell, of Littlecote in Wilts, married Margery, second daughter of Sir Henry Wentworth, K.B., of Nettlested, in the county of Suffolk, and dying in 1536,† left issue,

1. John, who died unm. 15th July, 1520.
2. Edward, Duke of Somerset, one day the proud and potent Protector, ruling without rivalry, and without control, the next a convicted and decapitated traitor, despoiled and attainted. From this unfortunate nobleman the extant ducal family of Somerset, and the Marquesses of Hertford, directly derive.

4. Letitia, married, the Rev. William Bushe, rector of St. George's, Dublin, and of Temple-pont, in the county of Cavan (son of Jervas Parker Bushe, esq. of Kilfin, by Miss Grattan, sister of the Right Hon. Henry Grattan, of Tinnyhinch, in the county of Wicklow) younger brother of Jervas Bushe, who married Miss Latham, sister to the Countess of Listowel and daughter of John Latham, esq. of Meldrum, county of Tipperary; and by her, who died at Clifton, in 1819, left issue two daughters, Isabella, and Letitia.
5. Daniel, who left a numerous issue, of whom Piers Geale, esq. the eldest son, married Miss Crofton, cousin to Sir Edward Crofton, bart. of Moate, in the county of Roscommon, and had issue Elizabeth, married to Sir Marcus Somerville, bart. of Somerville, county of Meath.
6. Anne, died at Montab, in France, unm.
7. Elizabeth, d. unmarried.

† The remains of Sir John Seymour were interred in the church of Easton Priory, but that building falling into ruin, they were removed to the church of Great Bedwin, in Wilts, where a monument stands erected to his memory by his grandson, Edward, Earl of Hertford.

iii. Henry, (Sir) of whom presently.
iv. Thomas, Lord High Admiral of England, who became the second husband of the Queen Dowager, Katharine Parr, and was raised to the peerage as Baron Seymour, of Sudley. This nobleman was beheaded on Tower Hill, 10th March, 1548-9, under the authority of his brother, the Protector Somerset, (refer to Burke's Extinct and Dormant Peerage).

iii. Margaret, d. young.
iv. Dorothy, the wife, first, of Sir Clement Smith, knt. of Little Baddow, in Essex, and after his decease, of Thomas Leventhorpe, esq. of Shingey Hall, in Hertfordshire.

Lady Seymour survived her husband, and died in the year 1550. By her last will she bequeathed divers legacies of plate, jewels, &c. to her relations, and mentions Edward and Henry Seymour, sons of the Duke of Somerset, as her godsons. The sole executorship she confers on her second son,

Sir Henry Seymour, who received the honor of knighthood at the coronation of his nephew, King Edward VI., being one of the forty in substitution of knights of the Bath, who were not created for want of time to perform the ceremony. In 1551, then in the king's service, he obtained a grant of lands; amongst which were the Henry Grattan, of Tinnyhinch, in the county of Wicklow) younger brother of Jervas Bushe, who married Miss Latham, sister to the Countess of Listowel and daughter of John Latham, esq. of Meldrum, county of Tipperary; and by her, who died at Clifton, in 1819, left issue two daughters, Isabella, and Letitia.

2. Isabella, married, 1819, to James Thorpe, esq. of Dublin, brother of the Rev. Dr. Thorpe, who married, May, 1834, Anabel-Elizabeth, Countess of Pomfret, eldest daughter of Sir Richard Borough, bart.
3. Elizabeth, married to her cousin, William Richardson, esq. an officer in the Horse Guards, and died in 1820, without surviving issue.
4. Daniel, who left a numerous issue, of whom Piers Geale, esq. the eldest son, married Miss Crofton, cousin to Sir Edward Crofton, bart. of Moate, in the county of Roscommon, and had issue Elizabeth, married to Sir Marcus Somerville, bart. of Somerville, county of Meath.

large manors of Marvell and Twyford, in the county of Southampton, with the parks and house of Marvell, which had constituted a portion of the estates of the bishopric of Winchester; and the next year he had a further mark of royal favor, in the acquisition for life, through the generosity of the crown, of the manors of Somerford and Hurm, in the same county, with other lands, to the yearly value of £202. 6s. 9d. Sir Henry represented the county of Wilts in the parliament called by his nephew, and served the office of sheriff for the county of Southampton in 1568. Leading the retired life of a country gentleman, far removed from the turmoils of the court, and not taking any part in the politics of the period, these grants alone appear to be the extent of Sir Henry's participation in the fortunes of his family. He m. Barbara, daughter of Thomas Morgan, esq. of Tredregar, and left one son, Jonx (Sir), with several daughters.* Speaking of Sir Henry Seymour, in his History of the Reformation, Haylin has the following singular narrative: "There goes a story that the priest officiating at Oneslebury (of which parish Marvell was a part) after the mass had been abolished by the king's authority, was violently dragged thence by this Sir Henry, beaten and most reproachfully handled by him, his servants universally refusing to serve him as the instruments of his rage and fury; and that the poor priest, having after an opportunity to get into the church, did openly curse the said Sir Henry and his posterity, with hell, book, and candle, according to the use observed in the church of Rome, which, whether it was so, or that the main foundation

* Of whom Jane became the wife of Sir Edward Rodney, of Stoke Rodney, and Pelton, in Somersetshire, the heiress of which family married Sir Thomas Bridges, of Kinsham, a younger branch of the Bridgeses, Dukes of Chandos. Lady Rodney had seventeen children, but her sons having no issue male, the honors in this branch became extinct. It was this Lady Rodney who, in conjunction with her son-in-law, Sir Theodore Newton, of Bilton, in the county of Gloucester, bestowed the choir organ (which now stands on the north side) upon the abbey church at Bath. Her eldest son married a daughter of Sir Robert Southwell, of Woodrising, in Norfolk. George Rodney, the second son, wedded Anne, daughter of Sir Thomas Lake, of Cannons, in Middlesex. She was widow of William Cecil, Lord Ros, who d. s. p. in 1618, and was involved with her mother, Lady Lake, (daughter of Sir William Ryder, lord mayor of London) in fomenting disputes between his lordship and his grandmother, the old Countess of Exeter, which eventually became so serious as to deprive Sir Thomas Lake, then Secretary of State, of the king's favor, and of all his offices of emolument and honor. (For this extraordinary affair, see Burke's Extinct Peerage.) of their estate being laid on sacriilege, could promise no long blessing to it, certain it is, that his posterity was brought beneath a degree of poverty." Sir Henry dying in 1578, was s. by his son,

Sir John Seymour, bart. of Marvell, who had served the office of sheriff for Southampton, in 1568. This gentleman m. Susan, youngest daughter of Lord Chidock Powlett, third son of William, Marquess of Winchester, (by his first wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Capel, progenitor of the extinct Earls of Essex) and left at his decease three sons,

Edward, upon whom the downfall of Henry, their family appears to have Thomas, entailed the most woeful consequences, lowering the unfortunate brothers not only from their grade in society, but reducing them to actual poverty, until, to quote Heylin again, "There remained not to any one of them one foot of land, or so much as a penny of money to supply their necessities, but what they have from the charity of the Marquis of Hertford, and the charity of the well disposed people which have affection or relation to them." Having alienated their paternal property, the three brothers emigrated to Ireland, and established themselves at Limerick, thence frequently by settlers from England: the two younger, Henry and Thomas, dying without issue, the line of Edward, therefore, alone remains.

Edward Seymour, the eldest son of Sir John Seymour and Susan Powlett, representative of the Seymours of Marvell, espoused, prior to his settlement in Ireland, a daughter of Edward Ousey, esq. of Catesby, in Northamptonshire, and having several children, was s. at his decease by his eldest son.

Edward Seymour, who wedded a daughter of William Hartwell, esq. an alderman of Limerick, and Mayor in 1659, and left an only son,

* Mr. Crossley was the son of Abraham Crossley, esq. a younger son of John Crossley, esq. of Scaytheliffe, near Todmorden, in Lancashire. He published “a Peerage,” in folio, above one hundred and twenty years ago, which is now so scarce, that a copy is rarely to be met with. It was published in Dublin in 1710, at which period the author held a situation of some importance in the Herald’s office there, and was esteemed learned in antiquities. In the preface, he has preserved much of the history of the Irish branch of the Seymours, to whose representative his eldest daughter was then united, and upon his authority their descent from the family of the Protector, as we have now detailed, is chiefly founded. Mr. Crossley further mentions, that Mrs. Seymour, the great grandmother of his son-in-law, was then very far advanced in life, having endured all the horrors of the siege of Limerick, and that from her he ascertained that her husband had come from “Marvell,” in Hampshire, with many of the other particulars which he had embodied in his work.

Susanna, the other daughter and co-heir of Aaron Crossley, married Clichtwood Eustace, who succeeded to the dignity of Lord Portlester, of Harriottown, in the county of Kildare, and left, with two daughters, Elizabeth and Abigail, who both died unm. a son, William Eustace, successor to his father in the barony of Portlester, who m. Elizabeth, daughter of — Dalton, esq. but leaving no issue, the peerage at his decease became extinct.

† By his wife, Madamoiselle Gabrielle Fonnerau, of the city of La Rochelle, sister of Zacharie Fonnerau, who fled on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, and settling in London, became the founder of the family of Fonnerau of Christ Church Park, in Suffolk. Madamoiselle Gabrielle abandoned La Belle France for a similar cause, and sought an asylum in Ireland, at the time that the La Touche’s and other families of respectability took refuge in that country. She was naturalized at the Court of Queen’s Bench in Dublin, on the 10th February, 1710, upon taking the necessary oaths.

* The Rev. John Seymour was a man of exemplary piety, of most amiable disposition, and of great learning. He was one of the domestic chaplains of Dr. Michial Cox, Archbishop of Cashel, and at the time of his decease, July, 1793, held the rectory of Abington, with the chancellorship of Emily.

† Two years before his death, Captain Seymour made an extraordinary escape from the French prison ship, at Point a Petre, in Guadaloupe, by swimming from her in the evening, in company with the master of a Bermuda vessel. Having reached the beach, and finding a canoe, they pushed off; and were taken up the next day at noon, off the Saints Isles, by the Bellona, Man-of-War.

tioned by that author, of their alliance to the Preux family, is in some degree supported by the close resemblance of the coat of arms (the coat of Preux being sa. semée of cross crosses, or, 3 lions rampant argent) while the descents bear out the statement of Leland. However this may be, it is clear that they were of some repute as early as the time of Henry IV. and a monument of about that date in the church of Wraxall, sufficiently attests the respectability of one of their first alliances, the bearings on it being Long, impaling Berkley, quartering Seymour. Tradition begins the pedigree with a Long, married to a Stourtone, to whom succeeded his son, married to a Berkley, of Beverstone, who was again succeeded by his son, Roger Long, or le Long, married to a Seymour, or St. Maur. Without dismissing these personages as altogether fabulous, (for there really are some grounds for a portion at least of the theory), we shall begin with the first known possessor of Wraxall, namely, Robert Long, or Longe, who was in the commission of the peace in 1426, and was M. P. for Wiltshire in 1433. He m. Alice, daughter and heiress of Reginald Popham,* of North Bradley, in the county of Wilts, and had issue, 1. Henry, his heir. 2. John, m. Margaret, daughter of Edward Wayte, by the heiress of Draycot Cerne,† and sister and co-heir of Thomas Wayte, of the Temple, and of Draycot, and had issue, 1. Thomas, afterwards Sir Thomas. 2. Richard, (Sir). 3. William.

III. Reginald, died before 1490.

Robert Long died subsequently to 1459, (when we find him mentioned in the will of Robert, Lord Hungerford, son of the Lord Treasurer) and was succeeded by his son, Henry Long, of Wraxall, who was sheriff of Wilts in 1457, 1476 and 1483. He m. first, Joan, daughter of — Ernleigh, but by her, who died 1468, had no issue; secondly, Margaret daughter of John Newburgh, of Lullworth, in the county of Dorset, by whom also he had no issue, and thirdly, another Joan, who survived him, and had likewise no issue. We find him mentioned in the will of Margaret Lady Hungerford, the relict of Robert before mentioned, in 1479. He died October 20, 1490, and was buried in the chancel of the Church of Wraxall, being succeeded in his estates by his nephew, Sir Thomas Long, of Wraxall and Draycot, kt. Sheriff of Wilts in 1501, who was among the "great compagnye of noble men," who served under Edward, Duke of Buckingham, against Perkin Warbeck (see Hardung's Chronicles). He received the honour of knighthood at the marriage of Prince Arthur, and married Mary, daughter of Sir George Darell, of Littlecote,† in the county of Wilts, and had issue,

"The original setting up of the House of the Longes, came (as I learned from Mr. Boneham) by these means. One Long Thomas, a stoute felaw, was sette up by one of the old Lordes Hungerfords; and after by cause this Thomas was caullid long Thomas, Long after was usurped for the name of the family. This Long Thomas master had sum lande by Hungerford's procuration. Then succeeded hym Robert and Henry. Then came one Thomas Long, descending of a younger brother, and good skille of the lawe, and had the inheritions of the aforesaid Longes. Syr Henry and Syr Richard Longe, were sunnes to this Thomas."

Camden, in his Remains, says:

"In respect of stature, I could reicte to you other examples; but I will only add this, which I have read, that a young gentleman of the house of Preux, being of tall stature, attending on the Lord Hungerford, Lord Treasurer of England, was among his fellows called Long H., who after preferred to a good marriage by his Lord, was called H. Long, that name continued to his posterity, knights and men of greate worship."

The name of Preux occurs in the roll of Battle Abbey, and the family was seated at Gidley Castle, in Devonshire, soon after the conquest. William le Preux was member for Wilton, in Wiltshire, 26th of Edward I.

* The connection of this family of Popham, with that of the Judge, does not distinctly appear. There is, however, but little doubt of the affinity. A moiety of the manor of Barton Stacey, in Hants, was held by Robert Long, in the 25th of Henry VI. and by his son, John, in the 18th of Edward IV, which manor was held by Sir Philip Popham, and Elizabeth, his wife, in the 21st of Richard II.† The Cernes were Lords of Melcombe, in the county of Dorset, in the time of Richard I. and Galfridus de Cerne was Lord of Draycot, in the time of Henry III. The property, and with it the advowson, has descended, therefore, without alienation to the present possessor through six centuries, of which it was in the Long family for nearly four years. The last of the Cernes, Lords of Draycot, (Richard de Cerne) died in the 8th of Henry VI. and was succeeded by John de Herriegre, from whom the property passed, through the Waytes, to the Longs; but by what intermarriage is not exactly known. The other sister and co-heiress of Thomas Wayte, married Sir John Chalers, knt. who was sheriff of Berks in 1449. Draycot was held by the service of being marshal at the coronation.‡ The Darells were settled in Wiltshire, by the marriage of William Darell, a younger son of Darell, of Sesay, in Yorkshire, with Elizabeth Calston, the heiress of Littlecote. The Calstons had previously intermarried with a co-heiress of St. Martin. One of the daughters of Sir George

Margaret, daughter and heir of John Donnington, esq. and relict of Sir Thomas Kitson, of Hengrave, in the county of Suffolk, knt. She died in 1561, aged 52, having remarried John Bourchier, Earl of Bath. Sir Richard had issue, HENRY, b. March 22, 1534. Catharine, m. Edward Fisher, esq. of Ickington, in the county of Warwick.

Sir Richard died 1545, and was succeeded by his son, Henry Long, esq. of Shengay, M. Mr. Long died in 1573, and was s. by his only surviving daughter and heir, Elizabeth, m. to William, Lord Russell, of Thornhaugh, ancestor to the Duke of Bedford. She died in 1611, and was buried at Watford.

Sir Henry was one of the attendants of Henry VIII. at the field of the Cloth of Gold, and was knighted for making a gallant charge at Theresonne in Picardy, in the sight of Henry, when he received the grant of a new crest, viz. the lion's head with the hand in its mouth. His next heir was Thomas, his brother, who was of Hungerford, and was father to Sir John DARELL, of West Woodhay, Berks, created a baronet, 13th of June, 1622.

Sir Bourchier Wrey is the representative of Henry Long of Melksham, and Walter Long, esq. now M. P. for Wilts (the son of Mr. R. G. Mr. Long of Rowd Ashton is the present possessor of Wraxall, which he inherited under the will of Walter Long, grandson of Catharine, sister of Hope Long.
† The story of the separation of the two properties of Wraxall and Draycot, by the machinations of this lady, who had endeavoured to secure both for her son Walter, is thus related by Aubrey in his miscellanies:
"Sir Walter Long, of Draycot, (grandfather of Sir James Long) had two wives; the first a dau. of Sir—Packington, in Worcestershire, by whom he had a son. His second wife was a daughter of Sir John Thynne, of Long-Leat, by whom he had several sons and daughters. The second wife did use much artifice to render the son by the first wife (who had not much Promethean fire) odious to his father; she would get her acquaintance to make him drunk, and then expose him in that condition to his father: in fine she never left off her attempts, till she got Sir Walter to disun-

He left five children, viz., Sir John, who succeeded to Draycot, and four daughters, Mary, Elizabeth, Anne, and Dorothy, all of whom were buried in the church of Draycot, and were interred under the pews in the church of Cerne. The eldest daughter, Dorothy, was married to Sir Edward Leech, Bart., of Shipton, Wiltshire, and had issue.

* He was the friend of Aubrey, who writes, 'I should be both orator and soldier to give this honoured friend of mine, a gentleman absolute in all numbers, his due character.' He says that he was of Westminster School, and afterwards of Magdalen College, Oxford, that his wife was a 'most elegant beautie and wit,' and that he commanded a regiment of horse during the civil wars. In this character, although the worthy antiquary would have him dedicated 'tam martyrum quam mercurio,' he does not appear to have been fortunate, his whole regiment having been captured by Waller and Cromwell, near Devizes, in 1645. Clarendon says, 'by reason of his great defect of courage and conduct,' but Clarendon had a quarrel with his uncle the secretary, as appears in various parts of his history, and other accounts exonerate Sir James from blame.

Aubrey continues the summing up of his friend's character as follows. 'Good sword-man; admirable extempore orator; great memorie; great historian and romancier; great falconer and for horsemanship. For insects exceedingly curious, and searching long since in natural things. Oliver, Protector, hawking at Hounslohe beath, discoursing with him, fell in love with his company, and commanded him to wear his sword, and to meet him hawking, which made the strict cavaliers look on him with an evil eye.'

His love of 'natural things' seems to have been inherited from his grandfather, who, 'about the beginning of King James, digged for silver,' at Draycot, 'through blue clay, and got £20 worth, but at £60 charge or better!'

† His daughter Anne, who died unmarried 22nd December, 1711, was a distinguished person in the fashionable world, both for her beauty and her accomplishments. She figures in 'The British Court,' a poem published in 1707. Lord Wharton wrote the following verses round one of the glasses at the Kit-cat club in compliment to her:

'Fill the glass; let the haut-boys sound
While bright Longy's health goes round,
With eternal beauty blest,
Drink your glass, and think the rest.'

BETTON, OF GREAT BERWICK.

BETTON, RICHARD, esq. b. 3rd October, 1808; m. on the 13th October, 1831, Charlotte-Margaretta, youngest daughter of the late Richard Salwey, esq. of Moor Park, near Ludlow, county of Salop.

Lineage.

This family is one of the most ancient in the county of Salop, and is presumed to have been originally seated at Betton Strange, near Shrewsbury.

By deed, dated the 2nd of Richard II. (1378), we learn that John de Betton was then dead, having left Margaret, his widow, and Richard de Betton, his son and heir. This Richard was father of William Betton, of Great Berwick, near Shrewsbury, whose residence there in the year 1403 is proved by the records in the Exchequer of the town of Shrewsbury. The celebrated battle of Shrewsbury was fought close to his estate on the 20th of July in that year; and on the evening preceding the battle, the renowned Henry Hotspur took possession of the house of William Betton, and made it his head quarters, to the great loss and annoyance of the proprietor, who suffered much by the contributions levied upon him by that impetuous young nobleman and his followers. An anecdote in accordance with the superstition of that period is connected with Hotspur's sojourn here. In the morning previous to the battle, his forces having moved about a mile from Great Berwick towards the scene of action, and Hotspur having placed himself at their head, he perceived that an engagement was unavoidable, on which he called for his favourite sword. His attendants informed him that it was left behind at Berwick, of which village it does not appear that he had till then learned the name. At these words he turned pale, and said, "I perceive that my plough is drawing to its last furrow; for a wizard told me in Northumberland, that I should perish at Berwick, which I vainly interpreted of that town in the north." The result of the battle is matter of history, and universally known. William Betton was succeeded at Great Berwick by his son, also named

William Betton, who was living there in 1470, and was succeeded by his son,

Richard Betton, who was of Great Berwick in 1494. He was father of Thomas Betton, of Great Berwick, living in 1543, whose son and heir, LYSONS, OF HEMPSTED.

Alice-Elizabeth.

Mr. Lysons succeeded his father 3rd January, 1834. He is rector of Rodmarton, and in the commission of the peace for Gloucestershire,

Lineage.

This family, which has been established for nearly three centuries in the county of Gloucester, is traditionally said to have migrated thither from Wales. Leland, in his Itinerary, makes mention of the Lysons as inhabiting the town of Neath, in Glamorganshire, temp. Henry VIII. then in reduced circumstances. "One Lysan, a gentleman of mansion stok but mene landes about XL li by the yere dwelth in the towne of Nethe. The Lysans say that their family was there in fame before the conquest of the Normans." And in the cathedral church of Llandaff one of the stalls is entitled Sancti Dulbritii sive Doctoris Lysons, founded temp. Henry VIII. Lewis Leysance, or Lysons, was sheriff of Gloucester 4th Edward VI. and master of Margaret's Hospital in that city, 2nd and 3rd Mary.

In the register of burials for Westbury upon Severn, where the family settled about the year 1550, occur the names of John Lysons, interred 3rd January, 1587, and Alice, his wife, buried 2nd May, 1598.

William Leysone, Lison, or Lysons (for the name is written in several different ways in the registers), supposed to have been a son of John and Alice, bought an estate called Netherlay, or the Lower Lay, in the parish of Westbury on Severn, in the year 1606. He m. a lady named Anne, and had issue,

1. John, his heir.
3. Thomas, of Worcester, mayor of that city in 1651, who proclaimed, in conjunction with Mr. James Bridges, the sheriff, on the 23rd August, 1651, Charles the Second, king of Great Britain, for which he was prosecuted by the parliament, and confined in Warwick Castle, whence he was sent, with Major-general Massey, the Earl of Traquair, and other prisoners, to London to take his trial. On the restoration, King Charles II. granted, by letters patent, to Thomas Lysons, second son of this loyal citizen, certain customs arising out of the port of Kingston upon Hull.
4. Daniel, of whom presently.

The fourth son,

Daniel Lysons, esq. born in November, 1604, m. Sarah, daughter of Clutterbuck, esq. of King's Stanley, and died in 1674, leaving a son and successor,

Daniel Lysons, esq. born in 1643, who wedded Anne, daughter of Nicholas Webb, esq. and was succeeded at his decease, in 1681, by his son,

Daniel Lysons, esq. of Hempsted, born in 1672, who rebuilt the manor-house there. He m. in 1693, Elizabeth, daughter and co-heir of Thomas Ridler, esq. and left, with seven other children, who died s. p.

The elder son and successor,

Daniel Lysons, M.D. of Hempsted Court, fellow of All Souls college, Oxford, born 21st March, 1727, m. 6th December, 1768, Mary, daughter of Richard Rogers, esq. of Dowdeswell, in the county of Gloucester, but dying without issue was succeeded by his brother.

The Rev. Samuel Lysons, M.A. born 28th December, 1730, rector of Rodmarton and Cherington, who m. Mary, daughter of Sammel Peach, esq. of Chalford, in Gloucestershire, and had issue,

1. Daniel, his heir.

2. Samuel, born 17th May, 1763, the eminent writer on British topography and antiquities. In 1784, having previously become a member of the Inner Temple, Mr. Lysons came to London, and there practised as a special pleader until 1788, when he was called to the bar. In 1786 he was elected a member of the Society of Antiquaries, and it may be justly said that no individual ever more zealously or more successfully supported its character and usefulness. During eleven years he held the honorary office of director, and was eventually appointed one of its vice-presidents. In 1797 he became a member of the Royal Society; and in 1810 was selected for its vice-president and director. "Till the beginning of the year 1804," says Mr. Jordan, in his interesting account of this distinguished antiquary, "Mr. Lysons continued to practise with considerable success at the bar, and went the Oxford circuit, notwithstanding his increasing distaste to what he often forcibly termed, 'brawling in a court of justice.' At that period, however, an event occurred which led him to the uninterrupted pursuit of those objects for which his mind was so peculiarly framed. At the close of the preceding year, the office of keeper of the records in the Tower had become vacant, and was conferred upon him." This appointment he held until his death, in 1819. The works of Mr. Lysons relate principally to the Roman antiquities of Britain, including "Reliquiae Britannicae-Romanae;" "Roman Remains discovered at Woodchester," &c. He also published a volume of Miscellaneous Antiquities of Gloucestershire; and, in conjunction with his brother, the Rev. Daniel Lysons, the earlier volumes of that great topographical work, the "Magna Britannia." There were but few eminent men of his day, either as literary characters or patrons of literature, that Mr. Lysons did not number among his friends and acquaintance. On a short visit to London in the summer of 1784, to enter at the Temple, he was the hearer of an introductory letter from Mrs. Thrale to Dr. Johnson, who in his reply, dated the 26th June, says, "this morning I saw Mr. Lysons; he is an agreeable young man, and likely enough to do all he designs. I received him as one sent by you ought to be received, and I hope he will tell you he was satisfied." In the first week that he came to settle in London he was introduced to Sir Joseph Banks, with whom he continued on terms of intimate friendship till his death. His introduction to Horace Walpole occurred about the same time, and with Sir Thomas Lawrence he continued ever in cordial friendship. To his profound knowledge of history and antiquities Mr. Lysons united great classical learning; and the comprehensive powers of his memory assisted him in his labours, and gave peculiar charms to his conversation. He died unmarried in 1819, esteemed and respected as a son, a brother, and a friend.

1. Mary, born in 1675, m. to Charles Brandon Trye, esq., F. R. S. of Leckhampton Court, in the county of Gloucester. (See vol. i. p. 604.)

Ievan Morice, youngest son of Moris ap Morgan, and brother to William Moris, the progenitor of the Kentish family, was fellow of All Souls, Oxford, doctor of laws, and chancellor of Exeter, in 1594. He m. Mary, daughter of John Castle, esq. of Ashbury, in Devon, and by her (who wedded, secondly, Sir Nicholas Prideaux, kn. of Souldon) left at his decease, in 1605, a son,

Sir William Morice, born in the parish of St. Martin, Exeter, 6th November, 1602, who was left under the guardianship of his mother. At the age of eighteen, he was entered a fellow commoner of Exeter College, Oxford, and there pursued his studies with such diligence and success, that Dr. Prideaux, at that time rector of Exeter, would frequently say that though Morice was but little in stature, yet in time he would come to be great in the state. Soon after his return home, he was married to one of the grand-daughters of Sir Nicholas Prideaux; and in the year 1640 his name was inserted in the commission of the peace for Devon. In 1658, he was chosen a burgess for Newport, in Cornwall, and being related, by his wife, to General Monk, he contracted an acquaintance with him, and so far recommended himself to the general's esteem, that, on his coming to England, he made choice of him for his chief, if not only, confidant in the management of the great affair of the king's restoration, whereof, in February, 1660, Morice received from his majesty, by the hands of Sir John Granville, the signet of secretary of state; and, in 1660, on the king's landing, was honoured with knighthood. In 1661, Sir William became M. P. for Plymouth; and, in 1668, having continued in the no less laborious than honourable office of principal secretary of state, for more than seven years, being also well stricken in years, and knowing, that between the bustles of life and the business of death there ought to be allowed a certain space of time, fully satiated with the delights and glories of the court, prudently craved his majesty's leave that he might withdraw from thence; and, so, with the king's gracious consent, he resigned his secretarship, and was succeeded therein by Sir John Trevor. Which done, Sir William retreated into his own country, and passed the remainder of his days in a quiet retirement, at his house at Werrington, where he erected a fair library, valued at £1200: nor was he wanting in works of charity, for he built and endowed an almshouse for six poor people, in the parish of Holdsworth, near Holdsworthy, where each of the occupans hath two fair rooms, and two shillings a week duly paid them. There was one thing singular in this honourable

This is a junior branch of the house of Crofton Hall, in Cumberland, now represented by Sir Wastell Briscoe, bart. BRAY, OF SHERE.

BRAY, EDWARD, esq. of Shere, in the county of Surrey, b. 20th July, 1793, succeeded his grandfather, WILLIAM BRAY, the county historian, at the decease of that gentleman in 1812.
Lineage.

The name of the Sieur de Bray occurs in the Roll of Battle Abbey, amongst the associates in arms of the Conqueror, and although the authenticity of that celebrated record has in many instances been questioned, in this the statement is confirmed by the fact of William de Bray being one of the subscribing witnesses to the charter of the year 1088, conferred by the Norman on the Abbey he had founded in commemoration of his triumph at Hastings. No grant of lands appears however in Domesday Book to the Brays; but that the family supplied sheriffs to Northamptonshire, Bedfordshire, Bucks, and some other counties between 1202 and 1273, is fully established.

William de Bray witnessed the charter to Battle Abbey in 1088.

Ralph de Bray was sheriff of the counties of Northampton, Southampton, Somerset, Dorset, Oxford, Leicester, Bedford, and Bucks, in the reigns of the Kings John and Henry III, that is between the years 1202 and 1234. In the 17th of the latter monarch, in the great quarrel between the King and Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent, Hubert having taken sanctuary, in the chapel of Brentwood, in Essex, belonging to the Abbot of Waltham, Henry appointed Ralph de Bray and Ralph de Norwich (justiciarios nostros) to receive from the earl an abjuration of the king's realm, if he would not go out of sanctuary, and appear in the king's courts and abide the judgment there; or to do him justice in the king's court if he would quit sanctuary, and appear therein according to the agreement between the king and him.

In the 44th of Henry III, 1260, William de Bray was possessed of two knights' fees in Wollaston, and obtained a weekly market on Thursday at his manor there, and a fair every year on the eve of the invention of the Holy Cross and two days following. He was succeeded by Sir Robert de Bray, one of the knights returning as having £10 a year in land, in the county of Northampton, summoned to attend King Edward I. in his war in Scotland, and again by King Edward II. This Sir Robert, under the designation of Sir Robert de Bray, of Wollaston, attended the sheriff of Northampton, in 1304, to arrest Nicholas, Lord Seagrave, on his lordship's return from the Continent, he having left England without the king's license, to settle a dispute in the court of the King of France between himself and John de Cornwall. Sir Robert de Bray, amongst his other trusts, was ranger of Sancy Forest, in Northamptonshire. He was s. by his son, Sir James de Bray, living temp. Richard I. and of King John, whose son, Anselm de Bray, was s. by his son,

* The sheriff of a county is an officer of high rank and importance in the present day, but was of still higher at the time when much of the revenues of the Crown arose from escheats, the levy of which required the assistance of the sheriff, who was responsible to the king for the produce.

† From the time of the Saxon kings, churches and churchyards, under certain modifications, afforded sanctuary to offenders, with the exception of those guilty of sacrilege or treason. The criminal within forty days was obliged to clothe himself in sackcloth, confess his crime before the coroner, solemnly abjure the realm, and taking a cross in his hand repair to an appointed port, embark and depart the country. If apprehended, or brought back in his way thither within forty days, he had a right to plead privilege of sanctuary, and to demand a free passage. Should the offender neglect this appeal to the coroner, and remained in the sanctuary, when the forty days limited had expired, it became an act of felony in any one to afford him sustenance. The coroner was to take the abjuration of the criminal at the church in the following form:

"This hear thou, Sir Coroner, that I am a murderer of one or more, a stealing of sheep, (or any thing else), and because I have done many such evils and robberies in this land, I do abjure the realm of our Edward, King of England, and I shall hasten me towards the port of which thou hast given me; and that I shall not go out of the highway, and if I do I will that I be taken as a robber and a felon of our lord the king, and that at such a place I will diligently seek for passage, and that I will tarry there but one flood or ebb, if I can have passage; and unless I can have it in such a place I will go every day into the sea up to my knees assaying to pass over; and unless I can do this, within forty days, I will put myself again into the church, as a robber and felon of our lord the king, so God me help and his holy judgment."
William de Bray, whose son,
Thomas de Bray, married for his second wife the daughter of — Brayhby, and left a son.

William Bray, father of Edmund Bray, whose son,

Sir Richard Bray, is said by some to have been of the privy council to Henry VI.; by others he is called the King's Physician: the former is the more probable, as he was buried in Worcester cathedral. He had two wives; by the first, Margaret, dau. of John Sandes, esq. of Furnes Felles, in Lancashire, he had an only son,

John (Sir), whose only daughter and heir,

Margaret Bray, espoused Sir William Sandys, summoned to parliament in 1529, as Baron Sandys, of the Vine, and conveyed to his lordship a considerable estate.* The barony of Sandys fell into abeyance, on the decease of the eighth lord, about the year 1700, and it so continues. *(See Burke's Extinct Peerage).

By the second, Joan, Sir Richard had two other sons, namely,

1. Reginald (Sir), who being in the service of Margaret, Countess of Richmond, † was confidentially employed in the negotiations preceding the enterprise of her son, the earl, which placed that prince on the throne as Henry VII. Sir Reginald was made a knight banneret at Bosworth, and afterwards one of the knights of the body to the new king, who further rewarded his fidelity and zeal

* There is an old room at the Vine wainscotted, on which Margaret Bray's arms with those of Sandys appear carved in several places; they remain also on some stones of the now ruined chapel of the Holy Ghost, near Basingstoke, and on a wall in Basingstoke church. On the subject of Lord Sandys' alliance with the heiress of Bray, tradition preserves the following distich:

My Lord Sandys, my Lord Sandys,
Lift up both your hands,
And down on your knees and pray,
That when you come from France,
You may lead up the dance.
With good Mistress Margery Bray.

† Reginald Bray was receiver-general to Sir Henry Stafford, the second husband of the Countess, (see Tudor, Earl of Richmond, Burke's Extinct Peerage), who by his will bequeathed to him (Reginald) his grissel courser. Bray continued after the death of Sir Henry, in the service of the noble widow, and on her subsequent marriage with Lord Stanley, was put in trust for her dower of five hundred marks per annum.

§ The manor of Shere, Vachery, and Cranley, in Surrey, had long been in possession of the earls of Ormonde, but reverting to the Crown on the attainder of James the fifth earl, who was likewise Earl of Wiltshire, in 1461, Edward IV. granted this manor to John Touchet, Lord Audley, who died 20th November, 1491, and was buried in the chancel of the church at Shere. Notwithstanding the attainder of the Earl of Ormonde and Wiltz, and the grant of the manor to Lord Audley, the earl's brother attempted at least to recover the estate; for by his deed dated 28th January, in the 1st of Henry VII, he granted to Sir Reginald Bray, knt. the manor of Shere, and the manor and lordship of Vachery, in Cranley, reserving the liberty of hunting, and taking beasts of chase in the park of Vachery, at his pleasure; also liberty of lodging in the manor-house of Shere, for himself, servants, and horses, whenever he pleased. To hold to Sir Reginald and his assigns for life, he finding a chaplain, and a chantry priest yearly to celebrate divine service in the chapel of the manor of Vachery, and not cutting any great timber except for building repairs. Sir Reginald does not however appear at any time to have had the actual possession of the manor, as we find Lord Audley enjoying it after the attainder of Ormonde, and his son James, Lord Audley inheriting these lands with his title. This James was the Lord Audley so notorious as the leader of the Cornish rebels, defeated by King Henry at Blackheath, and subsequently beheaded and attainted. We further find his son, by his second wife, Sir James Audley, suffering a recovery in the Hilary Term next following the attainer of his father, and selling the estate to Sir Reginald Bray.

of Windsor, which he had new made with that intent, and also in honour of Almighty God.*

II. JOHN.

The younger son,

John Bray, esq. who was buried in the chancel of the church at Chelsea, m. ——, and had, with a daughter, the wife of Sir John Norris, three sons,

1. EDMUND (Sir), who inherited a large portion of his uncle Sir Reginald Bray's property, which was confirmed under a deed of settlement, made between himself and Sir William Sandys and his wife Dame Margaret Sandys, in adjustment of a dispute between the parties regarding the lands of the deceased. This Edmund was about the age of eighteen at the death of Sir Reginald, who had acted as his guardian and took care of his education. He m. Jane,† daughter and heir of Richard Halywell, esq. and had John, his heir, with several daughters. In the 6th of Henry VIII. (1515) he was sheriff of the county of Bedford, and was summoned to parliament as Baron Bray, of Eaton-Bray, in that county, on the 3rd November, 21st of the same monarch. (See Burke's Extinct and Dormant Peerage.)

Edward (Sir), of whom presently.

* That the chapel of St. George, at Windsor, owes much to the skill as well as to the liberality and magnificence of Sir Reginald there can be little doubt. His arms, sometimes singly, sometimes impaling those of Hussey (the family of his wife), his device of a flax or hemp breaker, the initials of his name, and those of his wife, in so many parts of the ceiling and windows, could not have been so placed without a more than ordinary claim to the distinction. His will that his executors should finish the chapel, according to the form and intention of the foundation, would seem to refer to a planned drawing in his possession, and shows that the work had been carried on at his own expense.

† Sir Reginald Bray purchased the wardship of this young lady, that she might become the wife of his nephew, as appears by deed dated 12th February, 1497, made between the said Sir Reginald and Sir John Norbury, her grandfather, in contemplation of "a marriage to be had between Edmund Bray, son of John Bray, brother of the same Sir Reginald, and Jane Halywell, daughter and heir presumptive of Richard Halywell, esq. cousin and heir apparent of Sir John Norbury, (that is to say), daughter of Anne, who was the daughter of the said Sir John Norbury." In consideration of three hundred marks paid by Sir Reginald, Sir John settled immense estates upon his said heir, in the counties of Warwick, Worcester, Surrey, and Hants.

The second son of John Bray,
SIR EDWARD BRAY, knt. of Vachery Park, in Cranley, Surrey, was sheriff of Surrey and Sussex in the 30th of Henry VIII., and represented the former county in the two parliaments of Queen Mary. Sir Edward, who appears to have been bred a soldier, was one of the knights appointed to accompany King Henry to Calais to meet the French monarch; and he is stated to have been Master of the Ordnance in the time of Queen Mary, and to have marched at the head of some troops to Charing-cross to attack Wyatt in the insurrection which he had fomented against her majesty. He m. first, Elizabeth, daughter and co-heir of Henry Lovell, esq. of Sussex, but by that lady, from whom he was divorced, and who espoused, secondly, Sir Anthony Windsor, he had no issue. He wedded, secondly, Beatrice, daughter of R. Shirley, esq. of Wiston, in Sussex, and had two sons and one daughter, viz:

1. Edward (Sir), his heir.

Dorothy, m. to Thomas Stamp, of Berkshire.
Frances, m. to Captain John Lattin.
Ann, m. to Thomas Dolman, of Shaw, Berks.
1. Beatrice, m. to Thomas Elrington, esq.
Sir Edward survived his second wife, and married, thirdly, Jane, daughter of Sir Matthew Browne, of Betchworth Castle, in the parish of Dorking, but had no more issue. He died in 1558, and by his will, dated in that year, directed that his body should be buried in the parish church of Cranley, and that all the poor folks for whom he had made houses should carry his body to the church, and have for their reward twelvemecnse each. The will then proceeds, after some minor legacies, to affirm the settlement of divers manors and lands for his wife's jointure, and to state that “she should quietly enjoy the same without interruption of his son Edward.” It further provides, in case the said Edward, or his heirs, should attempt to disturb the quiet possession of his step-mother, that that lady should have all the testator's fee-simple lands, tenements, rents, reversions, and hereditaments whatsoever. Lady Bray survived for several years, and resided at the mansion-house at Vachery, where she carried on the iron forge which had been established there, and soon took occasion to quarrel with Sir Edward, her step-son. Amongst other things, she wrote to William More, of Loseley, that he, Sir Edward, had summoned her workmen there to her great damage, and she desired Mr. More's favour. At another period she complained that he had broken down the head of her pond, and at other times had been guilty of such like disturbances; under cover of which she availed herself of the power so improperly given by her husband's will, and sold great part of the estate in Cranley and Ewhurst for little more than nominal considerations, as appears by several deeds, in many of which were conveyances to her own relatives and dependents. What remained of Sir Edward Bray's great estates at the decease of his widow, devolved on his son.

SIR EDWARD BRAY, knt. M.P. for Heston in the 13th Elizabeth, who m. first, Mary, daughter of Simon Elrington, esq. of Northampton, and had by her an only son, Reginald, described as heir-apparent, and of the Inner Temple in 1557, being then of age, who appears to have died issueless. Sir Edward wedded, secondly, Elizabeth, daughter of William Roper, esq. of Eltham, in Kent, by Margaret, his wife, daughter of Sir Thomas More, and had another son, also named Reginald. He m. thirdly, Magdalene, daughter of Sir Thomas Cotton, of Kent, by whom, who died in 1563, he had no issue: and fourthly, a lady named Mary, by whom (who wedded, secondly, Sir Edmund Tyln ey, master of the revels to Queen Elizabeth) he had three daughters,

1. Mary, baptized at Shere, 8th October, 1564, m. to Sir George Chowne, thony Duncomb, esq.

CLOSE, OF ELM PARK, NOW OF DRUMBANAGHER.

CLOSE, MAXWELL, esq. of Drumbanagher, in the county of Armagh, a lieutenant-colonel in the army, b. in March, 1783, m. in 1820, Anna—Elizabeth, second daughter of Charles Brownlow, esq. of Lurgan, son of the Right Honourable William Brownlow, and has issue, MAXWELL, b. 25th June, 1827.

Barry, b. 22nd June, 1833.

Colonel Close, who is a magistrate and deputy lieutenant for the county of Armagh, succeeded his father, the Rev. Samuel Close, in 1817, and served the office of sheriff during the following year.

Lineage.

Richard Close, the first of the family who settled in Ireland, was the younger son of a respectable house in Yorkshire, and held a commission in the army, sent from England, in the reign of Charles I., into that kingdom, where he remained after the termination of the civil wars, and became one of the lords of the soil, as we find him seised of four tates, or townlands, in the county of Monaghan, temp. Charles II. After the restoration he fixed himself at Lissnegarvey, (now Lisburn), in the county of Antrim, where a Protestant colony had been located under the protection of the then Lord Conway. There he lived and died, leaving a son and heir,

Richard Close, esq. who inherited the Monaghan estates. He married the sister of Samuel Waring, esq. of Waringstown, in the county of Down, M.P. for Hillsborough, and received from that gentleman a grant of lands contiguous to Waringstown, on which he built a good house and resided. He considerably enlarged the family estate by purchasing a tract of land on the river Ban, between Rathfriland and Castlwellan, in Downshire, and after the disturbances in 1688, which obliged him to leave his home and join the Protestants, then united at Lisburn, under the Lord Conway and Sir Arthur Rawdon, he returned (subsequently to the battle of Boyne), having suffered great losses during the harassing conflicts of the times. He left at his decease (with three daughters, the eldest m. to the Rev. Dean Welch, the second to — Jones, esq. and the third to John Peirse, esq.) five sons, viz.

1. Richard, who succeeded to the estates in Down and Monaghan. This gentleman m. the dau. of Toby Hall, esq. of Narrow-water, and dying about the year 1720, at Warings-town, where he was buried, left a dau. m. to Davys Wilson, esq. of Carrickfergus, and two sons, viz.

1. Samuel, who inherited his father's landed property in Monaghan and Down, and served the office of sheriff for both those counties on attaining majority. He wedded the daughter of — Stewart, esq. of Ballintoy, in Antrim, and had one son, Samuel, who was drowned, when a schoolboy, at Ringsend, near Dublin, by venturing upon icer not sufficiently strong to bear him. His death was an unfortunate event to the family, for it enabled his father to levy fines and dock the estates, which he did, and having sold all his landed possessions, he retired to England, where he resided for several years, and died in or about 1781, leaving no issue.
Close, of Elm Park, now of Drumbanagher.

2. Toby, a captain in the corps of invalids in England, died unm.

iii. Henry, who resided at Warings-town, and married the daughter of Meredyth Workman, esq. of Mahon, in the county of Armagh, by whom he left issue, Meredyth, Mary, and Rachael, who all died unmarrried.

iv. John, a captain in the army, who was killed at the siege of Gibraltar.

v. William, who m. the daughter of — Tuberg, esq. and left a son, Samuel, who died unmarrried.

The second son, (in whose descendant the representation of the Close family is now vested),

The Rev. Samuel Close, who was presented to the rectory of Donaghhenry, or Stewardstown, in the county of Tyrone, anno 1721, married Catharine, daughter of Captain James Butler, of Ringhaddy, in Downshire, by Dame Margaret Maxwell, of Mullatinny, (now Elm Park), in the county of Armagh, relict of Sir Robert Maxwell, bart. of Ballycastle, in the county of Derry. This Dame Margaret Maxwell was the daughter and heiress of Henry Maxwell, esq. of Mullatinny, who was the son of James Maxwell, the third son of Robert Maxwell, Dean of Armagh, (a younger son of the house of Calderwood, in Scotland), who, after building the house of Mullatinny in 1626, was murdered in 1641, by Sir Phelim O'Neill, at College Hall, the seat of his elder brother, Dr. Robert Maxwell, afterwards Bishop of Kilmore, and founder of the Ferram family. Captain James Butler, who was of the Ormonde branch of the Butlers, resided with the Lady Maxwell his wife, at Mullatinny, and died there, having first bequeathed, by his will, made in 1713, his own estates, Cloghabeg and Knockabultoge, in the parish of Gowran, in the city of Kilkenny; with all his freehold estates in that county and lease of Bramblestown, and all his personal estate there and arrears due out of the house in Patrick Street, city of Kilkenny, and inhabited by Mr. Edward Butler, treasurer to the Duke of Ormonde, to his eldest son, James Butler, esq. by a former wife; and the estate of Ballycastle, in the county of Derry, which he enjoyed in right of Lady Maxwell his wife, to whom it had been bequeathed by her first husband, Sir Robert Maxwell, to his daughter Catharine, after the death of her mother, by whom it was afterwards settled on the Rev. Samuel Close and his issue, on the marriage of that gentleman with Catharine Butler, her daughter; but they both died before her at Mullatinny, leaving one son and four daughters, namely,

1. Maxwell.

i. Margaret, m. to Captain Charles Woolly, and had a daughter, Mary-Anne, the wife of Captain Amos Vequerque, of the county of Limerick.

ii. Mary, died unm.

iii. Catharine, died unm.

iv. Elizabeth, m. to Peter Gervais, esq. and had one son, the Rev. Francis Gervais, of Cecil, in the county of Tyrone, rector of Carlingford, and two daughters, Mary-Anne Gervais, m. to the Rev. Daniel Kelly, rector of Killeshel, and Elizabeth Gervais, m. to John Windsor, esq. capt. R. A.

The son and successor,

Maxwell Close, esq. succeeded his grandmother, Lady Maxwell, who d. in 1758, in the possession of Elm Park, and the lands settled upon him. He d. in 1748, Mary, eldest dau. of Captain Robert Maxwell, of Fellows Hall, in the county of Armagh, brother of John, Lord Ferram, and had issue,

1. Samuel, his heir.

2. Robert, died unm.

iii. Barry, b. in December, 1756, a major-general in the army,* who was

* Barry Close entered into the military service of the East India Company, and soon attracted by his great talents the notice of his superior officers. After serving at Tanjore, Pondicherry, &c, he had the honour to act in staff situations at the two memorable sieges of Seringapatam, in the Mysore, the first under Marquis Cornwallis, and the second under General Lord Harris, when by the capture of that city, and the fall of Tipoo Satt, a very considerable addition was made to the territorial possessions of the Company; and the interests of the British nation in India.

On this occasion his merits were acknowledged in a letter, dated Seringapatam, 13th May, 1799, from General Lord Harris to the Governor-general, published by his direction in general orders, at Madras, on the 24th of May, 1799, of which created a baronet in 1812. He died in April, 1813, when the title expired.

Farnham, died in the island of Gaudaloupe in 1794, lieutenant-colonel of the 65th regiment, unman.

Grace, b. in January, 1750, m. to the Rev. Dr. St. John Blacker.

Lieutenant-colonel Close, at the peshwa's court, your honourable committee will remark with satisfaction the unabated continuance of those able, honest, and indefatigable exertions which furnished the most effectual aid in the conquest and settlement of the Mysore, and which have since contributed to establish through the rajah's government a system of internal administration calculated to augment and secure the happiness and prosperity of that flourishing country.

After Marquess Wellesley returned to Europe, Colonel Close remained at Poona, until summoned by the government of Madras to afford his assistance in reconciling some unhappy disputes and jealousies which had taken place among the military on the Madras establishment, and which threatened serious consequences. In this difficult situation of affairs, (says the writer of an account of that transaction, published in London in 1810) "the government thought proper to call into action the service of Colonel Close, an officer of the greatest talents, and possessing a mind distinguished by vigour and enterprise, and whose whole life had been devoted to the service of his country." "They knew him (said another writer in the Quarterly Review) to be of a skill equally approved and a courage equally clear in action and in council. They knew that by a native elevation of mind and intellect he had risen above the prejudices natural to the members of a numerous provincial army. They knew that a long residence amidst the effeminacy of Eastern courts, and the chicanery of Eastern cabinets, while it had inured him to a perfect acquaintance with their native character, had yet left unimpaired the purity of his patriotic ardour and the correctness of his military principles. They knew that his high qualifications and eminence services, political and warlike, had rendered his name not more respectable in the eyes of his compatriots than venerable to the native soldiery. And they were not disappointed in the use he made of such influence, which was proved by his exertions to restore peace and harmony among his brother officers and the troops they commanded, which however required all his prudence and courage when attended with no inconsiderable share of personal danger, and in the end were not without effect, as appeared by the account of that affair, published in London (as before mentioned)."

He was soon afterwards sent with the subsidiary force of 12,000 men to repress the depredations of Meer Khan, an Indian chief, who had made inroads into the territories of the Company; and having succeeded in that affair, he resumed his station at Poona. But having now resided in India nearly thirty-five years, and his health requiring a change of climate, he applied for permission to return to grandmother, Lady Maxwell, and s. by his eldest son.

1. Maxwell, his heir.

2. Robert, a major in the East India Company’s service, who m. Caroline, sister of the late Sir Thomas Palmer, bart. of Northamptonshire, and has issue.

England, which was granted, and declared by the Governor of Madras in general orders, published on the 15th September, 1810, in the following terms: “Colonel Close is permitted to proceed to Europe on furlough. The important services rendered by Colonel Close in the high and confidential situation which he has held under the government of this presidency have so frequently received the testimony of public approbation, that it would be superfluous to recapitulate them. The governor in council, however, cannot allow that officer to depart, without again expressing the high sense which this government must ever entertain of services so eminent and distinguished, which have contributed so essentially to the prosperity of the British interests in the Deccan, and which so justly entitle him to the strongest expressions of public gratitude and applause.” At this time he returned to England, having succeeded to the rank of major-general; and shortly afterwards his royal highness the Prince Regent, in the name and behalf of His Majesty, was graciously pleased to confer on him the dignity of a baronet of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, by letters patent, dated the 12th day of December, 1812.

PLOWDEN, OF PLOWDEN.

PLOWDEN, EDMUND, esq. of Plowden, in the county of Salop, and of Aston, in Northamptonshire, m. Anna-Maria, daughter of Robert Burton, esq. of Logner, in Salop, and had an only child, Maria, m. to the Rev. John Eyton, vicar of Willington, and rector of Eyton, by whom, who died 10th January, 1823, she left at her decease, in October, 1825, several sons and daughters.

Mr. Plowden succeeded his father in 1766.
Lineage.

The family of Plowden has been seated at Plowden, in Salop, from a period antecedent to the earliest records extant in the vicinity.

Roger Plowden, of Plowden, who was a crusader under Cœur de Lion, is stated to have been present at the siege of Acre in 1194, and to have received for his gallant services there augmentations of the fleurs de lys borne ever since by his descendants. He was father of

Philip Plowden, of Plowden, whose son, John Plowden, of Plowden, was father of another

John Plowden, of Plowden, who was s. by his son,

John Plowden, of Plowden, who m. Joan, daughter of John Salter, by Anne his wife, daughter of Sir Adam de Montgomery, knt. and was father of John Plowden, of Plowden, who, left by his wife Maud, one of the daughters of Sir John Barley, knt. a son and heir,

Edmund Plowden, of Plowden. This gentleman m. Jane, daughter of Edmund Cloebury, esq. and was s. by his son,

John Plowden, of Plowden, who wedded Margaret, daughter of John Blayney, esq. and had a son and successor, Humphrey Plowden, esq. of Plowden, who m. Elizabeth, daughter of John Sturry, esq. of Rossall, near Shrewsbury, and relict of William Wollascoat, esq. and had issue, Edmund, his heir.

Edward, m. Mary, daughter of Thomas Lee, esq. of Langley, in Salop, and had a son, Humphrey.

Mary, m. to Thomas Lee, esq. of Langley.

Anchoret, m. to Rowland Eyton, esq. of Eyton, in Salop.

Margaret, m. to Richard Sandford, esq.

of the Isle, Salop. (See vol. ii. p. 671.)

Jane, m. to Richard Blunden, esq. of Burghfield, Berks.

He d. 21st March, 1557, and was s. by his elder son,

Edmund Plowden, esq. of Plowden, sergeant-at-law, one of the most eminent lawyers of his day, whom Wood, in the Athenae, says, ‘was accounted the oracle of the law,’ and that ‘his commentaries or reports of divers law cases in the reigns of Edward VI., Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth, were highly esteemed.’ To the early and active patronage however (added to his own abilities and learning) of Sir Francis Englefield, he was indebted chiefly for his advancement in life. Of that statesman’s Shropshire estates he was entrusted with the administration, and there is a curious detail connected with a promise he had obtained, from Sir Francis’s nephew and heir, of a lease of the Isle of Up Rossall, one of those wherein he had placed his brother-in-law, Richard Sandford, to his nephew, Humphrey Sandford, and which Englefield most ungratefully violated. This, considering the great services he had rendered the family, was no very extraordinary favour; for independently of adhering to Sir Francis when, on the demise of Mary, he sought voluntary exile on account of his religion Plowden, who had acquired the wardship of the young Englefield, instead of disposing of his ward either by marrying him to one of his own daughters, or selling the trust, as he was fully empowered to do, and as others did every day under the feudal system, made a free gift of his authority to the ward himself. As the particulars of this transaction tend to illustrate the state of society and manners at the period, the following extracts from a manuscript written by Mr. Andrew Plowden, of Burghfield, Berks, nephew of Sergeant Plowden, may not prove uninteresting:—

‘Mr. John Englefield (brother to Sir Francis) died, [April 1, 1567] Francis Englefield, his son and heir, being a child of the age of about v or vi yeares, and fell in ward, by reason of a tenure in capite, to the Queen. Mr. Plowden then being at London, having intelligence thereof in the morning very early, upon the news, presently rose out of bed, and went to the court, he then being of counsel with William, the Earl of Pembroke, one of her Majesties privie counsell: which earle had often times before prade Mr. Plowden to espie out some suit to the Queene worth five hundred pounds, and promised he would obtain it, have for your wardship and marriage, and my owd Lord Montagne hath offered for you two thousand pounds: and as for Sir Francis Englefield, he is farre more bounde and beholdinge to me than I to him: and there is noe privye or secrett matter but I may make my best of you." The Englefields acknowledge his goodness, and Mr.
Plowden gives the heir his marriage; "and take it (says he) for a guift of two thousand pounds, and in recompence of it I crave noe benifitt for myselfe or my owne children.
But here I have in my house my cozen,6 Humfrey Sandford, my sister's sonne, and his wife, and some of their children. He hath served your uncle, Sir Francis, in the partes beyond the seas many yeres att my charge: for I gave him every yere xxtie markes standing to serve Sir Francis, besides many other wants I supplied to him; and his fathere alsoe gave him some what;
all of which he spent in your uncle's service. . . . In consideracon of this ser-done to your uncle, and for this my liberality towards you, I only praye you, when such things as be in his fathere's hands shall come to your disposition, that you will make a lease thereof to him, his wife, and sonne, for theire three lives, att the old rente; and this I do not accompte past two hundred pounds." The promise was of course made, but after Mr. Plow-den's death forgotten, and Mr. Englefield not only refused to fulfil his engagement to the son, but even proceeded to dispossess the father. The whole of this curious affair is too long for transcription, but the fatal effect upon the elder Mr. Sandford is related with much feeling by Mr. Blunden:
"When all would not serve, he presently fell sicker, called his wife and family to him, and thus complayned: 'Howe I bestowed my sonne's service to my intollerable charges see many yeres upon his uncle beyond the seas? Have I adventured my sonne and heyre upon him soe longe, always in hazzard of the Queene's displeasure, and redly always to be attainted, my bloud and house to be corrupted for doing his uncle service? And is this the reward I have? Wife! carry me to Plowden. He hath killed me, he hath killed me! Lett me not dye on his gronde. I will not dye on his gronde.' And with all speede caused himselfe to be carried to Plowden, where, with these continuall wordes in his mouth, 'he hath killed me, he hath killed me!' he languished about a moneth, and then, of very sorrowe and concyte, died."†

This gentleman, who held the rank of colonel in the life-guards of King James II., adhered to the fortunes of that prince both in Ireland and France; but after a short residence at the court of St. Germain, obtained, through the interest of his wife's uncle the Duke of Shrewsbury, and the Countess of Sunderland, permission to return to England, and to take possession of the family estates, his three elder brothers having died issueless. From his presumed attachment to the countess originated the song of Plowden, of Plowden Hall, by the comic poet Wycherley. He rebuilt the manor house at Aston, and lived there a few years, but being a Catholic, he became obnoxious to the violent Whigs of the neighbourhood; and not having sworn the oath of allegiance to King William, his six coach horses, by virtue of an act recently passed against non-jurors, were seized on entering Banbury and impounded by a magistrate, being worth above five pounds each. He immediately quitted Aston in disgust, and it has since been deserted by the family. Mr. Canning succeeded to Foxcote upon the demise of his brother in 1831. He is a magistrate and deputy lieutenant for the county of Gloucester, and served the office of high sheriff for that shire in 1832.

Lineage.

The lands of Foxcote have been in the family of Canning now more than four centuries: they came with an heir-female in the time of Henry VI. and have descended since uninterruptedly through heirs-male.²

John Le Marshall, of Foxcote, was father of Jeffrey Le Marshall, who married Mary, daughter and heir of John Bridport, of Bridport, in the county of Dorset, and had Gilbert Le Marshall, whose only daughter and heir, Eustatia Le Marshall, wedded John Salmon, son and heir of Thomas Salmon, of Chelle, and left two daughters, co-heirs,viz. Agnes Salmon, who became the wife of Thomas Canninge, esq., and Matilda Salmon, married to Edmund Dalby, esq.

In the partition of the property of Salmon, Foxcote became the sole inheritance of Agnes. Thomas Canninge, her husband, was the son of John, the son of another John Canninge, brother to Jeffrey Cannyge, the father of Sir Thomas Canninge, lord mayor of London in 1456, and of William Cannyge, whom Henry VI. in a letter to the magistrate of Dantzic, calls “his beloved and eminent merchant of Bristol,” celebrated also for re-edifying and repairing the church of St. Mary Redcliff, in that city. (see Rymer’s Foedera, p. 236.)

Thomas Canninge and Agnes, his wife, were succeeded by their son.

Richard Canninge, of Foxcote, who married Mary, daughter of Humphrey Crompton, and had two sons,

REES, OF KILLYMAENLWYD.

REES, JOHN, esq. of Killymaenllwyd, in the county of Carmarthen, b. 4th September, 1781, m. 19th May, 1803, Anne-Catherine, third daughter of the late Elias VanderHorst,* esq. American consul at Bristol, and has issue,

1. John-Hughes, a magistrate for Carmarthenshire, b. 3rd November, 1806, m. 15th October, 1832, Isabella, only dau. of the late Thomas Rutson, esq. of Colham Green House, in the county of Middlesex, and has one son, Myson-John VanderHorst, b. 5th May, 1834.
2. Charles-Courtney, m. in 1832, Rosa, second daughter of Henry Llwen, esq. commander R.N. of Thistlebloom, in the county of Glamorgan.
   1. Harriot-Cooper, d. unm.
   2. Anna-Mansel, m. in 1834, to Charles David Williams, esq. commander R.N. of Stamford Hill, only son of the late Colonel Sir Daniel Williams.
   3. Frances-Mansel, m. in 1833, to Miles Smith, esq. second son of the late --- Smith, esq. of Gwernllynweth, in Glamorganshire.
4. Helen.

Mr. Rees, who succeeded his father 14th December, 1802, is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for the county of Carmarthen, and was formerly lieutenant-colonel of the local militia. He served nearly six years in the navy as midshipman, and was discharged at the peace of Amiens, when he married, and did not re-enter the service. He was present at the capture of the Dutch fleet in the Helder, and participated in the battles of Camperdown and Copenhagen, serving, during the latter engagement, in the Ardent, the second ship that led into action.

* Elias VanderHorst was maternally descended from a noble French family, named "Toisson," which fled, on the revocation of the edict of Nantes, from their native land to South Carolina, as an asylum, leaving very considerable property, with a chateau in the country, and the mansion in Paris, now well known as Menrie's Hotel, in the Rue St. Honoré, to their Catholic relatives, who enjoyed it until the French revolution, when all property underwent a change. The last direct descendant, Madame de Sangeant, when at a very advanced age, sought in vain (unfortunately for the family) for that Protestant branch which had emigrated to North America, and of which Elias VanderHorst was then the representative. He did not, however, hear of the enquiry, until too late to profit by it, though a more distant relative, the late Lord Lyttleton, did to a very considerable amount. Paternally, Elias VanderHorst was the immediate lineal descendant of Baron VanderHorst, of Holland, (whose portrait by Sir Peter Lely is now in the possession of Elias's daughter, Miss VanderHorst, of Royal York Crescent, Clifton). The VanderHorts accompanied the Prince of Orange when he was called to the English throne, and the then chief of the family received from the hand of that monarch a medal in commemoration of the event, together with an autograph letter from his majesty. Subsequently they emigrated to America, and acquired considerable property there. Elias VanderHorst was born in that part of the world, and commanded a company in the British army at the age of nineteen; but, coming to England for change of climate, the war with America broke out, which cut off, for the time, the resources from his transatlantic property. He was offered a pension as a refugee, by his connexion George Lord Lyttleton, then one of the treasury lords, but declined it, preferring to embark the capital he had brought with him in trade (by entering into partnership with some merchants at Bristol), for the maintenance of his family whilst his pecuniary resources were locked up by the war, to becoming a burden on his country. His only son, Thomas Cooper VanderHorst, has succeeded in recovering most of the property thus left. In America, the adopted country of the VanderHorts, one nephew of Elias VanderHorst, filled the office of Governor of South Carolina, another that of Secretary of State, and a third that of General.
Lineage.

This family, long resident in the county of Carmarthen, claims descent from a common ancestor with the noble house of Dynevor. Urien Reged, so styled from his having large possessions in the district of Reged, South Wales, which comprised a portion of the present counties of Carmarthen, Glamorgan, and Pembroke, was ancestor of Sir Eliud Du (or Sir Elimr the Black, from the darkness of his complexion) a crusader, who received the honour of knighthood, as a Knight of the Sepulchre, at the shrine of our Saviour, in the Holy City. The seventh son of Sir Eliud, PHILIP, had himself many children, of whom Nicholas, the eldest son, was grandfather of Thomas, whose son, Sir Rhys ap Thomas, was created a knight of the garter by Henry VII, and obtained from that monarch other proofs of the king's recollection of his efforts to place him on the throne. Sir Griffith Rhys, eldest son of Sir Rhys ap Thomas, was the lineal ancestor of George, present Lord Dynevor.

Gwilym, founded the Killymaenllwyd family.

The second son,

Gwilym ap Philip, was of Llandilo Vawr, in the county of Carmarthen, and his son, Rys, was father of Meredith, who seated himself at Cilymaenllwyd, which appears to have remained with his descendants for several generations, but was for a short time alienated, though subsequently regained by marriage. Meredith was direct ancestor of * Evan Lloyd ap Ryderch, who married Gwenllian, daughter of John ap Harry, living in 1595, and had four sons, viz.

John, of Tre Castell, in Llandilo Vawr. Hom. Jane, daughter of David Lloyd ap Morgan, but was living without issue in 1595.

William, of whom presently.

Thomas, both living unmarried Morgan, in 1595.

The second son,

William ap Evan Lloyd, was of Cilymaenllwyd in 1595. He did not marry until after that year. His son and successor, Philip ap William, of Cilymaenllwyd, temp. Charles I, was father of John ap Philip, of Cilymaenllwyd, who is supposed, from strong presumptive evidence, to have been brother or father of Ἰ

Rhys, who lived on his own estate at Kilverly, in the parish of Llanelly, Carmarthenshire. He married, and had one son,

John Rees, who also resided at Kilverly. This gentleman appears to have been the first of the family who spelt the name as it is now written. His eldest son and successor,

Hector Rees, Esq. born in 1683, a magistrate for the county of Carmarthen, served the office of sheriff for that shire in 1745, the year of Prince Charles's insurrection, and was offered knighthood for his conduct during that eventful period, but declined the honour. † Another account says that Hector Rees was sixth in descent from Rhys ap Owen, of Llechdwyny, in the parish of Llangendine, Carmarthenshire, from whom also descended Morris Bowen, of Llechdwyny, high sheriff in 1615. It appears by this statement that one branch took the name of Bowen, from Ap Owen, and the other, retaining the Welsh custom for some years, ultimately continued that of Rees or Rhys.

‡ His younger son, Robert Rees, married the daughter of Robert Donne, of Ty Gwyn, in the parish of Penabrey, Carmarthenshire.

II. ROBERT, b. 8th February, 1576, the celebrated author of the Anatomy of Melancholy. This learned and eminent person was educated at Oxford, and there took the degree of bachelor in divinity. He embraced subsequently the ecclesiastical profession, and became rector of Legram, in Leicestershire. His literary acquirements, which were various and diffuse, are fully displayed in the remarkable work which he wrote, entitled "The Anatomy of Melancholy, by Democritus, junior." This treatise, which was published in 1621, has been repeatedly reprinted. Burton died in January, 1639-40, at Oxford, and was buried at Christchurch.

The personal character of Robert Burton was very peculiar. He was a man of integrity and benevolence, but subject to strange fits of hypochondriac melancholy, which rendered his conduct flighty and inconsistent. Sometimes he was an agreeable and lively companion, delighting those around him with perpetual sallies of wit and humour; while at other times he would be devoured with spleen and ennui, from which he sought relief and diversion by the composition of his Anatomy of Melancholy. Whatever effect, however, the work may have had on its author, it seems to have been most beneficial to others, for we are informed by Anthony Wood that the bookseller who first published it acquired an estate by the speculation.

As to its literary merits, Archbishop Herring describes "Burton upon Melancholy" as an author the pleasantest, the most learned, and most full of sterling sense. He adds, that "the wits of Queen Anne's reign, and the beginning of George I. were not a little beholden to him."

In recent times Lord Byron contributes his high opinion to Burton's reputation.

WALLACE, OF KELLY.

WALLACE, ROBERT, esq. of Kelly, in the county of Ayr, M.P. for Greenock, m. Margaret, second daughter of Sir William Forbes, bart. of Craigievar, and granddaughter (maternally) of Robert, twelfth Lord Sempill. Mr. Wallace succeeded his father in 1805, and became representative of the ancient house of Ellerslie.

Lineage.

This family claims, rightfully it is believed, the representation of that from which sprang the renowned Scottish hero, William Wallace,* one of the most illustrious characters in the pages of history, ancient or modern, whether regarded as a patriot, rousing the dormant energies of his country—a statesman, concentrating those energies for action—or a soldier, directing them to victory. "When the nobility," says Buchanan, "had neither strength or courage to undertake great matters, there presently started up one William Wallace, a man of an ancient and noble race, but having himself little or no estate, yet this man performed in this war not only beyond expectation, but almost beyond belief." Wallace hurled defiance at the royal agressor, braved the tyrant's power, baffled it, and would have saved his country, but for the treachery of a base, rude, and jealous aristocracy: he did not however fight and fall in vain—

For Freedom's battle once begun,
Bequeathed by bleeding sire to son,
Tho' baffled oft is ever won.

—in after ages his reputation again nerved

This is corroborated by his other historians; all representing him of extraordinary height, and great bodily strength. "Hollishness" says, he was "a young gentleman of so large a stature, and notable strength of bodie, with such skill and knowledge in warlike enterprises, and of such hardiness in attempting all manner of exploits, that his match was not anywhere lightlie to be found." "There is an anecdote," says Robertson, (Ayrshire Families) "in confirmation of the uncommon strength ascribed to Wallace, related by Hector Bois, which, in another respect, is curious, as it affords an example of longevity, not unsimilar to that of the Irish Countess of Desmond, who attained to a still more advanced age. The date is the year 1430. At that time James I. was in Perth, and perhaps having heard Henry, the Minstral, recite some of Wallace's ex-the right arm of his country, and served as a talisman to burst the shackles with which another despot sought to bind her; it now shines the brightest luminary in her national glory.

Sir Malcolm Wallace, of Ellerslie, second son of Adam Wallace, of Riccarton, and younger brother of Adam, progenitor of the Wallaces of Craige, appears to have been married twice. By his first wife, whose name is not mentioned, he had a son, Malcolm, who along with himself was killed by the English in 1295, as thus recorded by Blind Harry, the Minstrel.

"The knyght Fenwick, that cruel was and keyne;
He had at dede of Wallace faidy beyne:
And his brodyr, that doughty was and der."

He is said also to have had two daughters: the elder married to the father of Thomas Halliday, a celebrated patriot, who had considerable property in Annandale: the younger, to the father of Edward Little, another of the band of patriots. Sir Malcolm,plots, found his curiosity excited to visit a noble lady, of great age, who was able to inform him of many ancient matters. She lived in the castle of Kimmoul, on the opposite side of the river, and was probably a widow of one of the Lords of Erskine, a branch of whose family continued to be denominated from the barony of Kimmoul, till about the year 1440. It was then "Ben's" way to relate an event as circumstantially as if he had been one of the parties present, and engaged in it. I shall therefore give the anecdote in his own manner, by translating his own words:

"In consequence of her extreme old age, she had lost her sight; but all her other senses were entire, and her body was yet firm, and lively. She had seen William Wallace and Robert Bruce, and frequently told particulars concerning them. The king, who entertained a love and veneration for greatness, resolved to visit the old lady, that he might hear her describe the manners and strength of the two heroes, who were admired in his time, as they now are in ours. He therefore sent a message, acquainting her that he was to come to her next day.

"She received the message gratefully, and gave immediate orders to her handmaids to prepare every thing for his reception, in the best manner; particularly that they should display her pieces of tapestry, some of which were uncommonly rich and beautiful.

"All her servants became busily employed, for their work was in some degree unusual, as she had not of a long time been accustomed to receive princely visitors.

"The next day, when told the king was approaching, she went down into the hall of her castle, dressed with as much elegance and finery, as her old age and the fashion of the time would permit, attended by a train of matrons, many of whom were her own descendants, of which number some appeared much more altered and disfigured by age than she herself was.

"One of her matrons having informed her that the king was entering the hall, she arose from her seat and advanced to meet him, so easily and gracefully, that he doubted of her being wholly blind. At his desire she embraced and kissed him.

"Her attendant assured him that she was wholly blind, but that, from long custom, she had acquired these easy movements.

"He took her by the hand, and sat down, desiring her to sit on the seat next to him; and then, in long conference, he interrogated her about ancient matters.

"He was much delighted with her conversation. Among other things, he asked her to tell him what sort of a man William Wallace was; what his personal figure; what his courage; and what degree of strength he was endowed. He put the same questions to her concerning Robert Bruce.

"'Robert,' said she, 'was a man beautiful, and of a fine appearance. His strength was so great, that he could easily have overcome any mortal man of his time; but in so far as he excelled other men, he was excelled by Wallace, both in stature and bodily strength; for in wrestling, Wallace could have overcome two such men as Robert was.'

"The king made some inquiries concerning his own immediate parents, and his other ancestors; and, having heard her relate many things, returned to Perth, well pleased with the visit he had made. This lady could not have been less than 150 years old. The Countess of Desmond alluded to was 110 at her death."

Sir Walter Scott, in his History of Scotland, after describing the natural construction of the Scottish nobility, and accounting thus for their base submission to a foreign conqueror, proceeds — "If the Sooto-nobles had lightly transferred their allegiance to Edward, it was otherwise with the middle and lower proprietors. . . . . As soon as Edward with his army had crossed the frontiers, they broke out into a number of petty fly, leaving a considerable booty in the hands of the victor. The subsequent glorious career of the patriot has been so frequently recorded by historian, bard, and minstrel, that it were vain to enlarge upon it here. Of the fatal battle that terminated it, Lord Haines gives the following account. "He (King Edward) established his head quarters at Temple Liston, between Edinburgh and Linlithgow . . . at that moment intelligence arrived, that the Scots were at Falkirk. Edward instantly marched against them. His army lay that night in the fields. At break of day the Scottish army was described forming on a stony plain, at the side of a small eminence in the neighbourhood of Falkirk. Wallace ranged his infantry in four bodies of a circular form. The archers, commanded by Sir John Stewart, were placed in the intervals. The horse, amounting to no more than one thousand, were at some distance in the rear; on the front of the Scots lay a morass. Having drawn up his troops in this order, Wallace pleasantly said, 'Now I have brought you to the ring, dance according to your skill.' Edward placed his chief confidence in the numerous and formidable body of horsemen, whom he had selected for the Scottish expedition. He ranged them in three lines. (No mention is made of the disposition of the infantry.) The shock of the English cavalry on each side was violent, and gallantly withstood by the Scottish infantry. But the Scottish cavalry, dismayed at the number and force of the English men at arms, immediately quitted the field. Stewart, while giving orders to his archers, was thrown from his horse and slain. His archers crowded round his body and perished with him. Often did the English strive to force the Scottish circle: 'they could not penetrate into that wood of spears,' as one of their historians speaks. By repeated charges the outermost ranks were brought to the ground. The English infantry incessantly galled the Scots with showers of stones and arrows. Macduff insurrections, unconnected indeed, but sufficiently numerous to indicate a disposition for hostilities, which wanted but a leader to render it general. They found one in Sir William Wallace. This champion of his country was of Anglo-Norman descent, but not so distinguished by birth and fortune as to enjoy high rank, great wealth, or participate in that chilling indifference to the public honour and interest which these advantages were apt to create in their possessor. He was born in Renfrewshire, a district of the ancient kingdom of Strath-Clyde, and his nurse may have soothed him with tales and songs of the Welch bards, as there is room to suppose that the British language was still lingering in remote corners of the country, where it had been once universal. At any rate, Wallace was bred up free from the egotistic and selfish principles which are but too natural to the air of a court, and peculiarly unfavourable to the character of a patriot. Popular Scottish tradition, which delight to dwell upon the beloved champion of the people, describes William Wallace as of dignified stature, unequalled strength and dexterity, and so brave, that only on one occasion, and that under the influence of a supernatural power, is he allowed by tradition to have experienced the sensation of fear . . . . The nature of Wallace was fierce, but not inaccessible to pity or remorse. As his unruly soldiers pillaged the church of Hexham, he took the canons under his immediate protection. 'Abide with me,' he said, 'holy men; for my people are evil doers, and I may not correct them.' . . . Sir Walter's account of the fatal battle of Falkirk is substantially the same as that of Lord Hailes, but in a more spirited and chivalrous strain. "The Scottish archers, under command of Sir John Stewart, brother of the steward of Scotland, were drawn up in the intervals between the masses of infantry. They were chiefly brought from the wooded districts of Selkirk. We hear of no Highland bowman amongst them. . . . The English cavalry began the action.

The marshal of England led half of the men-at-arms straight upon the Scottish front, but, in doing so, involved them in the morass. The bishop of Durham, who commanded the other division of the English cavalry, was wheeling round the morass on the east, and, perceiving that his fortune, became disposed to wait for support. 'To mass, Bishop!' said Ralph Basset, of Drayton, and charged with the whole body. The Scottish men-at-arms went off without clothing their lances; but the infantry stood their ground firmly. In the turmoil that followed, Sir John Stewart fell from his horse, and was slain among the archers of Ettrick, who died in defending or avenging him. . . . But what Edward prized more than the surrender of the last fortress which resisted his arms in Scotland, was the captivity of her last patriot. He had found in a Scottish nobleman, Sir John Monteith, a person willing to become his agent in searching for Wallace among the wilds, where he was driven to find refuge. Wallace was finally betrayed to the English by his unworthy and sparsely countryman, who obtained an opportunity of seizing him at Robroyston, near Glasgow, by the treachery of a servant. Sir William Wallace was instantly transferred to London, where he was brought to trial in Westminster Hall, with as much apparatus of infamy as the ingenuity of his enemies could devise. He was crowned with a garland of oak, to intimate that he had been king of outlaws. The arraignment charged him with high treason, in respect that he had stormed and taken towns and castles, and shed much blood. 'Traitor,' said Wallace, 'was I never.' The rest of the charges he confessed, and proceeded to justify them. He was condemned and executed by decapitation. His head was placed on a pinnacle on London Bridge, and his quarters were distributed over the kingdom. Thus died this courageous patriot, leaving a remembrance which will be immortal in the hearts of his countrymen." and Sir John Graham fell. At length the Scots were broken by the number and weight of the English cavalry, and the rout became universal.—22nd July, 1298." In the course of a few years the whole country, with the exception of Stirling Castle, was re-subdued by the English. This was in 1303. Lord Hailes continues—"Amid this wreck of the national liberties, Wallace despaired not: he had lived a freeman—a freeman he resolved to die. Frazer, who had too oft complied with the times, now caught the same heroic sentiments. But their endeavours to arouse their countrymen were in vain. The season of resistance was past. Wallace perceived that there remained no more hope, and sought out a place of concealment, where, eluding the vengeance of Edward, he might silently lament over his fallen country." According to Henry, the Minstrel, Wallace subsequently retired into France, whence he had only a short time returned before he was betrayed into the hands of his foes, in the July of 1305: most accounts say by Sir John Monteith; but Lord Hailes vindicates the knight from so infamous an act of treachery to his friend. Wallace was immediately conveyed to London, and there suffered a cruel death in the September following, by the command of Edward, who had his limbs, as Buchanan expresses it, "for the terror of others, hanged up in the most noted places of London and of Scotland." There are contending opinions regarding the marriage of Wallace. The Minstrel and Blair declare for it. The following passage from the latter is given by Nisbet, in his account of the family of Baillie of Lamingtoun:—"So far as the history of Sir William Wallace can be depended on, it vouches this marriage and alliance; for the author, Mr. Blair, tells us expressly, that Sir William's daughter was married to a squire of the Baillie blood, and that way got the barony of Lamingtoun, which had formerly belonged to those of the surname of Braidfoot, whose heiress-guardian of that name was married to Sir William Wallace." While Dr. Chalmers, commenting on this statement, says, that "it is unsupported by any recorded authority, and is certainly erroneous. Sir William had no legitimate issue, but he left a natural daughter, who is said to have married Sir William Baillie, of Stoprig, the progenitor of the Baillies of Lamingtoun.

Here there is a chasm in the line of Ellerslie. Craufurd says, "the lands of Ellerly returned to the family of Craigie, and a younger son of that ancient family obtained them in patrimony about the beginning of the reign of Robert the Third, anno 1390." In the account of the family of Craigie, by Robertson, it is stated that this younger son obtained these lands by marrying the heiress of Wallace of Ellerslie, about the same period. Both statements evidently refer to one individual.

James Wallace, third son of John Wallace, of Riccardon, by the heiress of Lindsay, of Craigie, who married the heiress of Wallace, of Ellerslie, and by her he acquired that property, in the county of Renfrew, which had for more than a century preceding been held by a younger branch of the Riccardon or Craigie family. According to Craufurd he had two sons, John, Thomas, to whom his father, in 1398, resigned the lands of Auchinbothy, in the barony parish of Paisley. From him, in after times, descended the Wallaces of Johnston by mar-

Sir Alexander Baillie, of Cavers, uncle to John Baillie, King of Scots, was great chamberlain of Scotland in 1298. He married Isabel, daughter and heiress of Richard de Chellam, and widow of David de Strathbogie, Earl of Athol, and had two sons, Andrew, his successor, and William de Baillie, who had the lands of Penmav and Stoprig, in East Lothian and Carnbrue, in Clydesdale. This William, it would appear, is the same who married the heiress of Lamingtoun (mentioned by Blair) and his son,

Sir William Baillie, of Lamingtoun, (living in 1308) was the husband of Sir William Wallace's daughter, and by her, father of William Baillie, of Lamingtoun, who was s. by his son and heir,

Sir William Baillie, of Lamingtoun and Stoprig, of which latter he is designated at the time he became a hostage in England for the ransom of James the First, in 1432, when he was exchanged for David Leslie of that ilk. He was s. by his son,

Sir William Baillie, of Lamingtoun, whose son and successor,

Sir William Baillie, of Lamingtoun, was father of William Baillie, of Lamingtoun, who married his cousin Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Douglas, of Lochleven, and was s. by his son,

Sir William Baillie, of Lamingtoun, who was appointed principal Master of the Wardrobe to Queen Mary in 1542. He married Lady Janet Hamilton, daughter of James, Earl of Arran, and widow of David Boswell, of Auchinleck, and by her he had two sons, viz.

1. William (Sir), who inherited Lamingtoun, and bought on the side of Mary, at Langside, which caused his estates to undergo a temporary sequestration. The male line of this Laird terminated with William riage of an heiress of the name of Nisbet, and which family failed in the person of William Wallace, of Johnston, in the reign of Charles I., and the lands were then acquired by Sir Ludovick Howston of that Ilk, and still remain with his descendants.

The next that is mentioned by Craufurd is John Wallace, of Ellerslie, who is to be found in the chartulary of Paisley, in 1432. Probably the son of the preceding, though Craufurd does not mention the affinity, neither does he state the connexion of the next on his list,

George Wallace, of Ellerslie, living in 1468, who is said to have been father of

Patrick Wallace, of Ellerslie, a person of consideration in the time of James IV., between the years 1488 and 1513, who was s. by his son,

William Wallace, of Ellerslie, father of John Wallace, of Ellerslie, who wedded a daughter of Cunningham, of Craigends. He acquired the lands of Ellenton, of which himself and his wife obtained a charter in 1530. His son and heir,

William Wallace, of Ellerslie, m. Catherine, daughter of Hugh Cranford, of Kilbirnie, and had a son, William, his successor. He obtained a charter of his lands in 1554, and was s. by his son, William Wallace, of Ellerslie, who, in 1556, obtained a precept of Clare Constat from his superior, William of Craiqie, as heir to his father William. In 1583 he had a charter of confirmation of the lands to Helinton, or Elilenton, and, in 1597, the lands of Ryreswaeths and Windyhill. He m. Jean, daughter of James Chalmers, of Gardgirth, and had three sons.

1. William, his successor.

Wallace, of Lamingtoun, whose daughter and heiress,

Margaret Ballie, m. Sir James Carmichael, of Bonnyton, and left at her decease, in 1739, an only daub. and eventual heiress, Henrietta Ballie, of Lamingtoun, who m. in 1741, Robert Dundas, of Arniston, Lord President of the Court of Session, and had issue, Elizabeth, heiress to her brother, m. Admiral Sir John Lockhart Ross, of Balmagowan.

Henrietta, m. to Visc. Duncan, Margaret, m. to General John Scott, and was mother of the Duchess of Portland, Lady Doun, and Lady Canning.

ii. John, who m. Margaret, daughter and heiress of John Hamilton, of Ferguslee, of the family of Orbistoun, and thereby acquired that property in the vicinity of Paisley. This marriage must have taken place before the 27th July, 1624, as under that date there is mention made, in the index to the records, of a charter "to John Wallace, of Ferguslee," although the charter itself is not to be found. But there is a charter on record, dated 9th July, 1647, granted by the crown, in favour of John Wallace, who married Margaret Hamilton, bearing to be an implement of their contract of marriage, and referring to a former charter granted to him by Lord Aberdeen, of which the date is not legible. This John Wallace had issue, James, designed of Lora Bank,* who died unmarried.

The second son,

Sir Edward Baillie, created a baronet of Ireland in 1730, and s. by his eldest son,

Sir Nicholas Baillie, second baronet, who m. Caroline, daughter and sole heiress of the Hon. Thomas Paget, and was s. by his second son, Henry Baillie, who assumed the surname of Paget alone, was created Earl of Uxbridge, and was father of the present Marquis of Anglesey.

* Ferguslee was alienated about this time to Col. Hugh Cochrane, brother of the Earl of Dundonald, Hugh Wallace, of Ellerslie, who, in 1637, was served heir to his grandfather in the lands of Windyhill, and other estates. This laird, in 1678, alienated Ellerslie to Sir Thomas Wallace, of Craigie, who conveyed it to his own second son, Thomas, afterwards Sir Thomas Wallace, of Craigie, which latter, in 1700, transferred the estate to John Wallace, eldest son of William Wallace, merchant in Glasgow, brother of John Wallace, of Neilstonside. Hugh Wallace, m. the Hon. Isabel Sandilands, sister of James, second Lord Torphichen, but leaving no surviving issue at his decease, the representation of the family devolved upon his kinsman,

John Wallace, of Neilstonside* (refer to John, second son of William Wallace and Jean Chalmers), who left three daughters, his co-heirs, who sold Neilston, in 1713, to Alexander Finlayson. At his decease the representation fell to his brother,

William Wallace, of Glasgow, who had acquired the lands of Overkirkton and others, in the parish of Neilston. He had two sons, John and Thomas. The elder,

John Wallace, having purchased the estate of Ellerslie from Sir Thomas Wallace, of Craigie, became "of Ellerslie." He m. Jean, daughter of Dr. Thomas Kennedy, a physician in Glasgow, and had an only daughter and heiress, Helen, who m. Archibald Campbell, of Succoth, and was mother of Sir Ilay Campbell, bart. lord president of the Court of Session in Scotland, as Lord Succoth.

At his decease, the old family estate of Ellerslie passed to his daughter, who, with the consent of her husband, alienated it to — Spiers. The male representation then devolved upon his brother,

Thomas Wallace, of Cairnhill, in Kyle Stewart, near Kilmarnock, which property he acquired from a family of the same name, that had been in possession of it for more than two centuries. He m. in 1710, Lillias, daughter of William Cunningham, of Craignords, and had three sons and a daughter, namely,

The second son,

John Wallace, became, on the failure of the male issue of his brother William, representative of the family. This gentleman acquired the estate of Cessnock, which he subsequently sold, and purchased, in 1792, the lands of Kelly from the representative of the old family of Bannatyne, which had enjoyed it for ages. He m. Janet, daughter of Robert Colquhoun, esq. and left two sons and three daughters, viz.

Mr. Wallace died in 1805, and was s. by his elder son, the present Robert Wallace, esq. of Kelly, "who (says Robertson) is the undisputed male representative of the family of Wallace, of Ellerslie, as descended from a younger son of Craige-Wallace, in the reign of Robert III, there can be no question; and this, whether that son obtained these lands, according to Craufurd, as a patrimony from the Craige family, or whether he obtained them through marriage with the heiress of Wallace of Ellerslie, according to the annals of the Craige family, as otherwise stated. That this latter house too of Ellerslie, was of the same family as Sir William Wallace, there is every reason to believe, but how nearly connected, does not precisely appear."

BIDDULPH, OF BIDDULPH.

BIDDULPH, JOHN, esq. of Biddulph, in the county of Stafford, and of Burton Park, in the county of Sussex, succeeded his father May, 1784.

This gentleman is the head of the ancient family of Biddulph, and in uninterrupted lineal male descent of the elder branch, to which all others are traced.

Lineage.

This name and family claims a Saxon origin and derivation such as few now extant in England can boast.

BIDDULPH, variously written Bydulf, Bradulf, &c. is a word purely Saxon, compounded of Bid, Biedw, and ulf, or wulf, literally the wolf-killer. The latter entered into the composition of a vast number of names during the Heptarch, as Ethelwulf, Ceolwulf, &c. when skill and courage in the chase of the bords of this ferocious animal must have been held in high estimation.*

That a family of this name existed in the Saxon times in the northern parts, we have evidence in the early chronicles, in which we find "A.D. 790, Beadulfus, or Baldulf, consecrated Bishop of Whitern, on the 16th day before the Calends of August, by Archbishop Eanbald, of York, and Bishop Ethelbert. Whitern was the capital of the kingdom of Galloway, on the other side of the Solway Frith, then recently subdued from the Strath-cluyd Britons, under Walwein, nephew of the great Arthur, and becoming a province of the potent Northumbrian kingdom of the Heptarchy, received both its civil and spiritual governors from York. The date of Bishop Beadulf's death is not recorded, but it appears that he visited his native province on solemn occasions, as we find him on the death of Ethelred, assisting Archbishop Eanbald, and other bishops, by whom Erdulf, the successor in the Northumbrian kingdom, " was consecrated and raised to his throne at York, on the seventh day before the Calends of June, A.D. 795."

Biddulph (Bidulf, or Beadulf according to the old Saxon orthography) is a village and lordship in the north part of the county of Stafford, or "the Moorlands," on the very borders of Cheshire, which either acquired its name from its possessors, or conferred it on them. It had fallen to the crown by their resistance to the Norman invasion, like the greater part of the lands in England, and, not having been granted out, was recorded among the "Terra regis," in the Domesday Survey, and unlike the most part of it, appears to have been restored, through a female representative, to the line of its ancient owners.

"The Biddulphs do derive themselves (says Erdeswick) from one Ormus le Guidon, the son of Ricardus Forestarius" of Norman race, who held, as appears by Domesday, ten lordships in the county of Stafford, which were conferred upon him in reward of his services. Biddulph, and other large possessions were not included in these.

The tradition is that Richard the Forester was only sixteen years of age when he came in, and that subsequently, having the Saxon heiress given to him in marriage, these latter were restored either to him or to his son, in whose possession we find them in the succeeding reign. A great part of these estates lay in a wild country bordered by the river Trent, and much covered with wood,—he thence probably derived the designation of Forestarius, for, he may have held such an appointment under his Sovereign.—Surnames had not been generally adopted, but men were distinguished by their birth as Fitz—; by personal or mental qualities, as Rufus, Beaucrere; or by their office or employment, as Forestarius, and his neighbour de Ferrarvis, or Ferrers. Thus Ormus “le Guidon” must have been a Standard-bearer to the king, or to one of the great barons de Toni, (Stafford) Ferrers, Chester, or Shrewsbury, whose territories lay in the same neighbourhood as his own, and with whom it seems Richard and his son were joined, when the chivalry of Cheshire and Stafford were led against the Welch in the reigns of William the First, and William Rufus, to the end of which latter, the Forrester, having survived his master the Conqueror, seems to have lived.

* A different origin of the name is suggested in our Baronetage, but as this is confirmed by the arms, and was adopted by the late learned antiquary, the Rev. John Whitaker, a connexion of the family, it is probably correct. We trace the same in other languages, as Hugh Lupus, Cante-loupe, &c. and even in the heroic ages we have 'mēthben ὦκοφίκης, in the Catalogue of Homer's Chieftains.

Ormus le Guidon, his only son, succeeded him in all his possessions. He was also called de Darleston, from a Lordship near Stone, the seat of his principal residence. He wedded — the daughter of Nicolas de Beauchamp,† Vice Com. de Stafford, by Emmeline, daughter and heir of Urso de Abitot, both great and powerful nobles. Ormus, it should seem, lived through the reigns of the William II. Henry I. and Stephen. What part he took in the affairs of those stirring times is not precisely stated, nor under whose banner he acquired his honourable cognomen. As large possessions were conferred upon him, in addition to those which he inherited from his father Richard the Forrester, and those he held as predatory to the church of Burton,† there seems no doubt but he served his sovereigns with valour and fidelity.

There is documentary evidence of connection with Ranulph, Earl of Chester, one of the most accomplished nobles of his time, and son-in-law to Robert Earl of Gloucester, which probably determined the line which Ormus and his son Robert took in the contest for the succession between Stephen and the Empress Maud, and her son Henry II. into whose reign a comparison of the dates in the Burton Abbey Register, leads us to suppose that he lived to see the establishment of the line of Plantagenet on the throne.

Ormus had four sons by the daughter of Nicholas Beauchamp, Vice com. de Stafford; Robert, Edward, Thomas, and Alured. His eldest son, Robert, succeeded him at Darleston, as predatory to the Abbey of Burton, as well as to the greater part of his lands. The said Robert's son, Ralph de Darleston, dying s.p. his sister Alina, m. to Inguenuus de Gresley, is his heir. She divided the family possessions as follows:—

Darleston, Fenton, and part of Biddulph, to Avisia, her daughter, the wife of Henry de Verdon, which, after three descents came to Alicia de Verdon, who m. Edward Manwaring, third brother of Sir Ranulf Manwaring, kut. of Pever, in Cheshire, in which family part of Biddulph remains to this day. Tunstall, Chattersley, and Chell, to her other daughter Petronella, m. to Henry de Audley (Aldithelge) founder of the ancient and noble line of Audley. To Roger, the son of Edward, her uncle, Middle-Biddulph. To Thomas, her other uncle, she gave Over-Biddulph, and Normanseate. And to Alured, her third uncle, Knipersly; his descendants taking their name from the place from temp. Hen. III. till 2nd Rich. II. when Katherine, the heiress of Knipersly, carried the estate into the family of Bowyer, in which a Baronetcy (since extinct) was created in

* In a later age, there has been another intermarriage between one branch of the Biddulphs, and the female representative of one line of the Beauchamps.

† A series of documents is extant, taken from the Registers of Burton Abbey, exhibiting the nature of the connexion between the convent, and successive heads of this powerful family, and not only establishing several points of its history, but curious, as throwing light upon the manners and habits of the age.

The first of these is a “Convention” made between Godfrey Abbot, of Burton, and Ormus de Darlaweston (as he is called) done in a chapter held of the monks, who were assenting to the grant. “The abbot granted Darlaweston to Ormus, himself, and to his son Robert, born of the dau. of Nicholas, the Vicount, for nineyearly rent. The said Ormus, and his son, on their part, were to entertain hospitably the abbots, whenever he would, and to aid and assist him, with his followers and vassals, whenever he had need; and, upon their death, their bodies were to be carried to Burton, to be buried, where they were to be very honorably received by the monks. And, with them was to be brought the whole of their chattels, whatever they had in all places. In like manner concerning the wife of Ormus, when she died; her body was to be received with great honour, and buried at Burton.” Other similar “conventions” with their descendants appear.

Such was the nature of the relations established in those times between the church and the great land-owners, involving on the part of the latter, protection and aid of the strong arm, for the weaker party, whose lands they held at an easy rate; hospitality and mutual good offices on the part of both; and, on that of the church, what might best tend to soften the rude habits and dispositions of these military tenants, and their followers—a kindly provision of the offices of religion, following them, as we have seen, to the last solemn rites of the tomb.
1660. The male line of the Bowyers, however, failed, and the representation passed, through female heirs, to Sir Nigel Bowyer Gresley, bart. and Charles Bowyer Adderly, esq. of Hans, in the county of Warwick.

Of the descendants of Ormus, the descent is thus shortly traced, of the female elder branch, through the Verdons, Man-warnings, and Audleys, and of his fourth son, Altered, to the Bowyers, &c.

The descendants of Thomas, the third son, took the name of Overton, from inheriting Over-Biddulph, and after five descents merged in the second branch, by the marriage of Cicily, the daughter and heir of Thomas Overton, with John de Biddulph.

But the lineal male representative of Ormus le Guidon (on failure of the male line of Robert de Darleston, his eldest son) and the direct line of Biddulph come from Edward, his second son, who first took the name of Biddulph from that part of the family possessions, which has continued in the same line in direct uninterrupted descent for twenty generations, during a period of more than seven hundred years.

The seat of their residence was on or near the same site on which the noble edifice, now in ruins, was afterwards erected; but, like the Norman buildings in general, of far different character, rude and massive, affording little accommodation, but a strong hold, such as the times required, and to which its situation, placed high, and on the very verge of the Moorlands, must have greatly contributed.

Edward's son, Roger de Biddulph, succeeded to these possessions in the division made of the great estates of his grandfather Ormus, between his male representatives and the Audleys and Verdons, in right of the female branches.

It is stated from that the whole kindred adhered to King John, being of the number of "those Lords who (as the Chronicle says) were constant to him with all his faults."

17 Henry III., A.D. 1223, Henry de Audley, founded Hilton Abbey, near his Castle of Heleagh, and endowed it with lands in purum, et perpet. eleemosynam. Of these, Normanscote was derived from the gift or confirmation of his cousin, Sir Henry Biddulph, knt., son of Thomas de Overton, or Over-Biddulph, it having been part of the family possessions from the Conquest. It appears that other parts of the territories of the Barons of Audley were derived from the same stock, as in the Charter of Confirmation of King Henry III. in addition to those by grant from the great Randulf, Earl of Chester, and Hugh de Lacy, Constable of Chester (with both of whom all this Staffordshire kindred seem to have been strictly allied) there are comprised,

"Ex dono Nic. de Verdon, Aldithleigh cum omnibus pertinent, et libert. suis."
"Ex. dono Eugenulph de Gresley, et Alivae ux. cjs Tunstall, &c." And lands "Ex dono Margaretae de extraneo, filiae Guidonis extranei;" a dau. it is presumed of Ormus.

Hilton Abbey was, according to the custom of those times, the burial-place of the founders and their kindred, but its ruins afford no trace of their tombs.

The family which had been thus "constant to the father, were more tender of the son," and continued their devotion to the race of Plantagenet, in the person of Henry III. They were particularly attached to his brother Richard, Earl of Cornwall, whom James de Audley attended when he was crowned King of the Romans, at Aix la Chapelle, in 1257.

In the great Barons' wars, headed by the powerful Simon de Montfort, the Earl of Leicester, they were loyal to their king, (the Earl of Cornwall, and many of the northern lords, being drawn over to his side,) and aided Prince Edward in the battle of Evesham, where the defeat and death of Mountfort ultimately broke the power of the confederate Barons. An ancient seal, bearing the impress of the Arms of Biddulph, was lately dug up in the neighbourhood.

The race of Ormus, however, became allied to that powerful family, and through that connection to Llewellyn, the last and gallant Prince of Wales, Felicita, fourth in descent from the founder of the Biddulphs, having married Robert, youngest son of Simon de Montfort, who, after the discomfiture and death of the Earl, remained privately in England, and changed his name to Wellesborne, while his elder brothers, Simon and Grey, being banished, became the respective founders of the foreign lines of Mountfort, Earl of Bigorre, in France, and then of the Mountfords, of Tuscany, and the Earls of Campo-Bacchi in Naples.

In the 54th Henry III. 1270, it seems that Thomas de Biddulph, with his kinsman James de Audley, attended Prince Edward in the Crusade to the Holy Land, which he undertook, accompanied by Elinor, afterwards his Queen, when Acon was gallantly rescued from the infidels. There is a tradition to this day in the neighbourhood of Biddulph, that certain families, whose lineaments betray their Eastern origin, are descendants of some Saracen followers, who attended their master on his return from this crusade.

Robert de Biddulph was, with his kinsman, James de Audley, at the battle of Poictiers, when the French king was taken under Edward III.

The Staffordshire vassals of the forester and his descendants, furnished some of those bands of bold yeomen, whose clothyard arrows contributed so much to the glory of the English arms.

They formed the right wing of the English army under Henry V., and particulars are given of a skirmish near Amiens, some days before the battle of Agincourt, when, being charged by the French, they recovered the Standard of Hugh Stafford, Lord Bouchier, and completely routed their assailants.

In the wars between the Houses of York and Lancaster, this Staffordshire kindred adhered to the fortunes of the latter, and fought under the cognizance of the Red Rose. They suffered severely early in this lamentable contest at the battle of Blore-heath, A.D. 1450, in their own neighbourhood, at which Lord Audley, who commanded, with most of the gentlemen who gallantly fought in that cause, were slain.

In the reign of Henry VIII. the family of Biddulph became divided into two branches. The elder line, represented by Sir Richard Biddulph, Kt., who succeeded to the estates, adhered steadfastly to the principles and faith of their ancestors during all the religious revolutions of that and the succeeding reigns, with many of the ancient families in the northern parts of England.

Richard Biddulph, of Biddulph, son of William of Biddulph, and the direct descendant of Ormus le Guidon, had two sons,

1. Richard (Sir), his heir.
2. Symon, who settled at Elmhurst, embraced the established forms of the Protestant faith, and married Joyce, dau. of Sir Robert Weston, sprung from a common ancestor with the Earls of Portland. Being the father of a numerous offspring, the hive sent forth its swarms, and has been often the case in the cadets of ancient houses, some of them devoting themselves to the higher branches of commerce, laid the foundations of future opulence, and became the parent stocks of flourishing branches, destined to carry on, and maintain the family name, when, after many generations, the elder line should become gradually extinct. Symon was father of another

6. William, in holy orders: this gentleman seems likewise to have been no way deficient in spirit and talents. He was Chaplain to the English Factory, at Aleppo, in the reign of James I. Of his travels there is a most curious account in "the Collection of Voyages from the library of the Earl of Oxford."‡

† We may here mention an anecdote relative to the Baronet’s line—that Farquhar, who wrote his "Beaux Stratagem," at Litchfield, took the character of his Lady Bonniform from Lady Biddulph, then residing at the Palace there, as he did his Boniface from the Landlord of the George, and Cherry, from his daughter.

Sir Richard Biddulph, knt., succeeded to the family estates, temp. Henry VIII. He m. Petronilla, dau. of Sir Robert Aston, of an ancient family, seated in the counties of Stafford and Chester, and had a son and successor,

Richard Biddulph, of Biddulph, who wedded Margaret, dau. and co-heir of Sir John Salvey, by Margaret, his wife, dau. of Hugh Erdeswick, (see vol. i. p. 153,) and was succeeded by his son,

Francis Biddulph, esq. of Biddulph, who m. Isabel, dau. of Sir Thomas Giffard, of Chillington, and had a son Richard, his heir. The reign of Elizabeth was distinguished by the noble mansions which the representatives of the ancient families erected on their domains, in the style which is called the "Tudor architecture." The house which Francis Biddulph built at Biddulph, appears, from the noble ruins still extant, to have all the best features of this style.† The son and successor, Richard Biddulph, esq. of Biddulph, born in 1559, married Anne, daughter of — Draycott, esq. of Paynsley, and had issue, John, his heir.

The son and heir.

John Biddulph, esq. of Biddulph, lived in the troubled times of the first Charles, when both branches of the family, the Catholic and the Protestant, espoused with zeal the royal cause, and suffered severely for their devotion. John Biddulph, of Biddulph, contributed men and money, with the other Catholics of Staffordshire, to the formation of the king’s first army; that which fought at Edgehill. Biddulph-Hall was soon after garrisoned, and made a strong and important post in keeping up the communications with Chester, &c. A younger brother of the family was one of the gentlemen of Staffordshire, who seized, and kept the Close of Litchfield, until it was retaken by the Parliamentary forces under Lord Brook, who, during the siege took possession of, and occupied as quarters, the house of Mr. Michael Biddulph, of Elmhurst, then M. P. for the city. In the subsequent fight at Hopton Heath, this “Cap- tain Biddulph” fell at the head of his troop, gallantly seconding the charge of the Earl of Northampton, with whose family the Biddulphs were now, or shortly after connected, by the marriage of Mary, daughter of Francis Biddulph, esq. of Biddulph, with George Compton, esq. of Brambley-house. Biddulph-hall, as it was one of the first of the posts garrisoned for the king, was one of the last to surrender. We find a garri- son to have been there even after the disastrous battle of Marston Moor; and early in 1645, the king, in person, visited all those quarters, in his way to Chester, shortly before his last fight at Naseby, after which Biddulph-Hall was plundered and laid in ruins, except the

† Its date A.D. 1558, appears on the arched entrance which, opening in the southern front, is enriched with pilasters and other ornaments, well carved and modelled in the Italian style, then blended (by the encouragement given to Italian architects) with the features of English architecture, which, borrowed both from the ecclesiastical and castellated style, mixed with a revival of Roman forms. The pilasters and ornaments are renewed on the second story, accompanying a gallery, or balcony, over the gate, surmounted by a sort of battlemented pyramid, while the principal apartments on this side end in two noble bays, or oriels, also carried up to the same height. On the other side are similar bays, of noble proportions, and on the north rises a lofty tower, ending in a dome, which is vaulted with stone, moulded into the shape of scales, in a singular, but most effective manner. The whole is of beautiful grey stone, and does credit to the spirit and magnificence of the founder, who little thought that an edifice, calculated to be the residence of his family for ages, would, within less than a century, fall a sacrifice to democratic and puritanical violence.

Charles II. being Aunt to Jane, jewel, presented to her by the Queen of Bohemia, which, with a noble pic-

EYRE, OF WILTSHIRE.

EYRE, HENRY-SAMUEL, esq. of St. John's Wood, in the county of Middlesex, a Colonel in the Army, succeeded his father, and is male representative of the ancient Wiltshire family of Eyre.

Lineage.

The old Wiltshire family of Eyre enjoyed, for several centuries, the highest distinction within its native county, and was of consideration in the state,—most of its chiefs having had seats in parliament, and two of them, learned in the law—upon the bench—one as lord-chief-justice of the Common Pleas; a branch, too, which emigrated to Ireland, attained the peerage of that kingdom.

Humphrey le Heyr, of Bromham, in Wilts, married Gilycia, and was father of Nicholas le Heyr, whose son,
Galfredus le Heyr, of Bromham, had three sons,

1. Galfredus le Eyr, of Bromham, in the time of Edward II. His immediate descendants, the Eyres of Bromham, continued to the 17th century. (Visitation of Wilts, 1623.)

2. Stephen le Eyr, living in the time of Edward II.

Lovat succeeded his father in 1803.

Lineage.

The clan Fraser, of which Lovat is the chief, are of Norman descent. The name of Frisell, their original designation, occurs in the roll of Battle Abbey, and establishes their advent under the standard of the Conqueror.

From East Lothian, their earliest resting place in Scotland, the Frasers diverged into Tweeddale in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, and subsequently into the shires of Inverness and Aberdeen. Oliver Fraser, the chief of the clan, built and gave his name to Oliver Castle, which continued in after times their principal feudal hold.

In the reign of Alexander, the second of the name, and his son, Alexander, the third, we trace

Sir Gilbert Fraser, of Oliver Castle exercising the office of sheriff of Traquair or Tweeddale. He was father of three sons,

1. Simon (Sir), who succeeded to the sheriffdom, and who was one of the most eminent characters of his day. His name occurs repeatedly among the "barones regni Scoletiae" assembled to regulate the succession to the Scottish crown. He was designed in the records of the time pater, to distinguish him from his son and successor,

Sir Simon Fraser, styled filius, and not inaptly commemorated as "the flower of chivalrie." He was the friend and faithful associate of William Wallace, and with that illustrious patriot excepted from the conditions* granted by their haughty conqueror to the Scots after the fatal battle of Falkirk. He subsequently joined the standard of Bruce, and was at the battle of Methven; where, after thrice rescuing his chief, he was himself made prisoner. From this likewise fatal field he was conveyed to London, and there put to death under circumstances of extreme barbarity on the 8th September, 1306. Sir Simon Fraser leaving no male issue, his two daughters divided his extensive estates between them: the elder married the ancestor of the noble family of Yester or Tweeddale; the younger, the progenitor of the Lords Fleming and Ears of Wigtown.

II. Andrew (Sir), of Caithness.

III. William, Bishop of St. Andrew's, and Chancellor.

The direct male line of the principal south country family of Fraser, after being the most conspicuous surname in Peeblesshire, during the Scoto-Saxon period, from 1097 to 1306, having thus expired in the person of the gallant Sir Simon, the male representation of the clan devolved of course upon the next male heir, in the person of his uncle.

Sir Andrew Fraser, who independently of the figure which he made in history, claims special attention as the first of the name who established an interest for himself and his descendants in the northern parts of Scotland; more particularly in the shire of Inverness, where they have flourished ever since. He courted, won, and wed an heiress of Caithness, a district, then and for many centuries afterwards, comprehended within the sheriffdom of Inverness. By this lady Sir Andrew left four sons, viz.

* "All resources but their own courage had failed them; that last resource had failed them now. They hastened to conciliate the favour of the conqueror. Previous to this, Bruce had surrendered. They stipulated for their lives, liberties, and estates; reserving for Edward the power of inflicting fines as he should see fit. From these conditions were excepted Wishart, Bishop of Glasgow; the Stewart; Sir John Souls; David de Graham; Alexander de Lindsay; Simon Fraser; Thomas Lois; and Wallace. As for William Wallace, it is agreed that he shall render himself up at the will and mercy of our sovereign lord the king."—Lord Hailes.
mily designed in legal writings "of Ard and of Lovet," lands which still remain in the possession of his descendants. Under this title he figures in the year 1367. The precise period when the Frasers of Lovat came to the peerage is not ascertained: there is no patent of the honour; and, indeed, prior to the reign of James VI. patents having reference to dignities alone were unknown; but there are strong reasons for believing that the chiefs of the clan sate as parliamentary barons in the reign of James I. And it is certain that since the time of Hugh or Hutcheon Frisel, "Lord of the Lovet," (who is so styled in his marriage articles with the Lord Fenton's sister, 3rd March, 1416, confirmed by the sovereign in September, 1431,) the family has ranked amongst the Scottish nobility, for in the decree of ranking given out by King James VI. (5th March, 1606,) establishing the order of precedence of the various nobles, there is an entry of this very deed as the Lord Lovat's proof of creation and precedence as a lord of parliament, and the king assigns him a place between the Lords Oliphant and Ogilvy. Hugh, first Lord Lovat, died in 1440, and was interred at Beauty, leaving by Janet Fenton, his wife,

Hugh Fraser, second Lord Lovat, who m. a sister of David of the Wemyss, Lord of that Ilk, and died in 1450, at an early age, when he was s. by his son,

Hugh Fraser, third Lord Lovat. This nobleman espoused the Lady Margaret Lyon, daughter of the Earl of Glammis, who bore him four sons and three daughters. The second daughter married Sir Kenneth Mackenzie, eighth Laird of Kintail, and from that alliance descend the numerous race of the Mackenzies. This Hugh occurs for the first time in record in 1471, and then by the style of Hugh, Lord Fraser.* An indenture is entered into, 3rd March, 1472, between this nobleman and the town of Nairn, whereby the latter becomes bound to his lordship, in land and tenements of his service, and he undertakes to be a good lord, maintainer, protector, and defender in all their rightful causes and quarrels. He was s. at his decease by his son,

Thomas Fraser, fourth Lord Lovat, who was served heir to his father, 22nd May, 1501. His lordship wedded, first, Janet, daughter of Sir Alexander Gordon, of Achindown and Midmorn; by this lady he had three sons. He married, secondly, Janet, daughter of Andrew, third Lord

Gray, and reliet of Alexander Blair, of Bathyeck, and by her had three other sons and two daughters; one of the latter died unmarried; Janet, the other, became the wife of John Crichton, of Ruthven. From this nobleman's sons sprang many of the most respectable branches of the clan. His lordship, who had numerous grants of land from the crown, was s. at his decease by his son,

Hugh Fraser, fifth Lord Lovat, who, in the year 1539, resigned his castle, lands, and baronies into King James the Fifth's own hands at Linlithgow, and obtained from that prince a charter, uniting and erecting the various lands and baronies so resigned into one free and entire barony, to be called in all time coming, the barony of Lovat, in favour of himself and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten, whom failing, to his lawful and nearest heirs male whatsoever, bearing the arms, crest, and surname of Fraser, in fee and heritage and free barony for ever. The charter is dated 26th March, 1539. This lord fell in the bloody battle fought by his clan with the Macdonalds at Lochlochy, 15th July, 1544. The Frasers stript to their shirts, whence the combat is called that of Blairanlelin. Their chief, his eldest son, and eighty gentlemen of the Frasers were killed; and, if tradition may be credited, every one of them left his wife pregnant of a male child.

His lordship m. first, Anne, daughter of Grant of Grant, and had an only son, who fell with himself in battle. He espoused secondly, Janet, daughter of Ross of Balnagowan, and by her had two sons and two daughters, viz.

Alexander, his heir.
Andrew or William, of Stray.
Ann, m. first, to Macleod of Macleod, and secondly to Bain of Tulloch.
Catherine, m. to Rose of Kilravock.

He was s. by his son,

Alexander Fraser, sixth Lord Lovat, who espoused Janet, daughter of Campbell of Calder, and had, with one daughter, the wife of Fraser of Dalcross, three sons, namely,

Hugh, his successor.
Thomas, of Knockie and Strichen; of whom at the conclusion, as immediate ancestor of the present Fraser of Lovat.
James, ancestor of the Frasers of Ardchay, represented by General Hastings Fraser.

His lordship died in December, 1557, and his eldest son,

Hugh Fraser, inherited as seventh Lord Lovat. This nobleman married Elizabeth, daughter of the Earl of Athol, and had issue, Simon, his heir.

Margaret, m. to James Cumming, of Altyre.
Anne, m. to Hector Munro, of Fowlis.

He was s. by his son,

Margaret, m. first, to Arbuthnot of Arbuthnott; and secondly, to Sir James Haldane, of Gleneagles.

His lordship was s. by his eldest son,

Hugh Fraser, ninth Lord Lovat, who espoused Isabel, daughter of Sir John Wemyss, of Wemyss, and had issue, Simon, Master of Lovat, who d. unm. in 1640.
Hugh, Master of Lovat after the decease of his elder brother, m. Lady Anne Leslie, eldest daughter of Alexander, Earl of Leven, by whom (who wedded, secondly, Sir Ralph Delaval) he left at his decease, in 1643, a son, Hugh, who succeeded his grandfather as tenth lord.
Thomas, of Beaufort, who inherited as eleventh lord.

Anne, m. in 1639, to John, thirteenth Earl of Sutherland (his lordship's second wife), but died issueless.
Mary, m. to David Ross, of Balnagowan.

Catherine, m. first, to Sir John Sinclair, of Dunbeath; secondly, to Robert, first Viscount Arbuthnot; and thirdly, to Andrew, third Lord Fraser.

His lordship d. in 1646, and was s. by his grandson,

Hugh Fraser, tenth Lord Lovat, b. in 1643, m. in 1659, when at college, Anne, second daughter of Sir John M'Kenzie, bart. of Tarbat, and had one son and three daughters, viz.

Hugh, his heir.

Anne, b. in 1661, m. to Patrick, second Lord Kinnard, and was mother of the Patrick, third lord.
Isabel, m. to Alexander Macdonald, of Glengarry.
Margaret, m. to Colonel Andrew Munro.

This nobleman d. in 1672, and was s. by his son,

Hugh Fraser, eleventh Lord Lovat, who married the Lady Amelia Murray, only daughter of John, first Marquess of Atholl, and had four daughters, viz.

1. Amelia, m. to Alexander M'Kenzie, son of Roderick M'Kenzie, of Prestonhall, one of the senators of the College of Justice, as Lord Prestonhall, which Alexander assumed the surname of Fraser, and was designated "of Fraserdale," and by him had a son, Hugh Fraser, who was styled by his parents Master of Lovat, but his pretensions were eventually set aside by the heir male.

ii. Anne, m. first, to Norman Macleod, of Macleod; secondly, to Peter Fotheringham, of Powrie; and thirdly, to John, second Lord Cromartie.

iii. Catherine, m. to Sir William Murray, bart. of Auchtertyre.

iv. Margaret, d. unm.

His lordship died at Perth, 4th September, 1696, and thus leaving no male issue, the title and estates reverted to his great uncle,

Thomas Fraser, of Beaufort, as twelfth Lord Lovat. He had m. a dau. of M'Loud of MLeod, by whom he had several children; and, as his claim was incontestible, his then eldest surviving son, Captain Simon Fraser, assumed the designation of "Master of Lovat." But the Earl of Tullibardine, eldest son of the Marquess of Atholl, and Secretary of State, conceived the design of having his niece, Amelia, eldest daughter of the deceased Lord Lovat, declared heirless to her father, and married to one of his own sons. This project was subsequently in part given up; the family of Atholl resolving on uniting her to Mr. Fraser, the Lord of Salkum's son. Young Simon, of Beaufort, fancied the lady himself, but his suit miscarrying, he conceived the idea of forcing her mother, the Dowager Lady Lovat, (who held a considerable portion of the estate in right of her jointure) to espouse him; and, after a series of adventures, revolting to humanity, got possession of her person. Such unparalleled proceedings excited the utmost vigilance of the government. Troops were despatched against Simon, and the Clan Fraser, with orders to exterminate them without mercy. Simon was tried in his absence, and outlawed for treason and rape. His father escaped to the Isle of Skye, where he died in May, 1698-9. The delinquent, himself, was forced to fly into France, where his restless spirit was for a while doomed to inactivity, in the Bastile. His withdrawal enabled the family of Atholl to complete their plans for the total ruin of his house; and to adjudge his honours and estates; which were settled by entail on the heirs of Amelia Fraser's marriage with young Prestonhall, who, as stated, under the eleventh Lord, had assumed the name and designation of "Fraser, of Fraserdale."

The Rebellion of 1715, changing, however, the face of affairs,

SIMON FRASER, Lord Lovat, as he was styled, re-appeared in his native country, on behalf of government, and was highly instrumental in quelling the insurrection. He regained his title and paternal estates, and eventually terminated a varied career on Tower-hill, in April 1747. In 1740, he signed the association to join CHARLES-EDWARD, from whom he accepted the commission of Lieutenant-General, and General of the Highlands, with a patent, creating him DUKE OF FRASER. On the breaking out of the rebellion, five years afterwards, 1745, he sent his eldest son and his clansmen to join the standard of the Chevalier, but remained at home himself; when all was over he was taken into custody, 1746, conveyed to London, and put upon his trial for high treason, before the House of Lords, on the 7th of March, 1747, convicted on the 10th of the same month, and decapitated on Tower-hill, the 9th of April following, in the 80th year of his age. The proceedings against his lordship began in Westminster Hall, on Monday, the 9th of May, and continued on the 10th, 11th, 13th, 16th, 18th, and 19th days of the same month, when the doom of a traitor was pronounced upon him. His lordship called no witnesses, but spoke at considerable length in defence, making a great merit of his exertions, in 1715, and grievous complaints for the disbanding of his company. From the moment of his condemnation, the unhappy nobleman behaved with dignified composure. When the warrant came down for his execution, he cheerfully exclaimed, "God's will be done!" and, taking the messenger by the hand, drank his health, and thanked him kindly for the favour, as he called it, assuring him he would not change places with any prince in Europe. His last care was to write a letter to his son, replete with the tenderest sentiments. When the hour of execution approached, he conversed in a cheerful and easy tone with those about him, saying, he died "as a Highland chieftain should die—not in his bed." On mounting the steps of the scaffold, the vast crowd extorted an expression of surprise: "God save us! what a hustle there is about taking off an old grey head, that cannot get up three steps without two men to support it." He then kneeled down to the block, and his head, at one blow was severed from his body.*

Beside the compulsory alliance Lord Lovat forced upon the Dowager Lady Lovat, he entered into two other marriages. First, with Margaret, fourth daughter of Ludovick Grant, of Grant; and, secondly, with Primrose, fifth daughter of John Campbell, of Mamore, and sister of John, fourth Duke of Argyle. He left two sons, SIMON, his heir, and Alexander, who d. in 1762, with one daughter, Janet, married to Macpherson, of Culnec. By Primrose, his lordship had an only child, ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL, of whom presently. The eldest son, the gallant

GENERAL SIMON FRASER, was at the University of St. Andrew when the rebellion broke out in 1745, and was sent for from thence by his father, to head the clan in support of the Chevalier, which the Master most unwillingly did. In 1746, he joined CHARLES-EDWARD, with six hundred of his father's vassals, and thenceforward was most zealous in the discharge of his duties. His clan was one of the few who effected a junction with the Prince on the morning of the engagement at Culloden, and fresh auxiliaries from the tribe were hastening up at the very moment of that ill-judged action. "It were to no purpose at this period (says Mr. Anderson, in his interesting account of the Frasers) to comment on the rashness of an army, exhausted by a night march, in want of food and repose, and thinned by desertion, giving battle to another superior in numbers, animated with the hope of victory, and complete in material. In justice to the brave men who contended under such disadvantages, be it enough to say that, by their gallant demeanour, they shed a partial light among the expiring hopes of an unfortunate race." On that dreadful day, the clan Fraser behaved with their wonted resolution, and were permitted to march off unattacked, their pipes playing and colours flying. The Master of Lovat surrendered himself in 1746, was confined in the castle of Edinburgh until August, 1747, when he proceeded to Glasgow, there to remain during the king's pleasure. In 1750, however, a full and free pardon passed the seals for him, and every act of his future life justified the favour of government. An offer of a regiment in the French service was soon after made to Fraser, but refused: he desired leave to be employed in the British army: raised, in 1757, a regiment of eighteen hundred men, of which he was constituted colonel, 5th of Jan. 1757, went at their head to America, and highly distinguished himself at Louisbourg and Quebec, where the regiment suffered much. He was a brigadier-general in the forces sent to Portugal, in 1762, to defend that kingdom against the Spaniards, and was eventually appointed colonel of the 71st regiment, and lieutenantgeneral in the army. In 1761 he was chosen member of parliament for the county of Inverness, and was constantly rechosen until his death. He died without issue in 1782, and was succeeded in his estate, (to which he had been restored for his distinguished military services) by his half brother,

Colonel Archibald-Campbell Fraser, of Lovat. This gentleman had by his wife, Jacoba, sister of Sir William Fraser, bart. of Leaddune, five sons, all of whom he survived: and, by his demise, in December, 1815, the male descendants of Hugh, ninth Lord Lovat, becoming extinct, the male representation of the family, as well as the right to its extensive entailed estates, devolved upon the junior descendant of Alexander, sixth Lord, whose line is thus deduced,

The Hon. Thomas Fraser, second son of the sixth lord, was of Knockie, in Inverness-shire, in 1557, as appears by the original charter of Alexander Lord Lovat, "filio nostro Thomas Fraser," bearing that date. In 1576 he was retoured tutor at law to Simon, Lord Lovat, and subsequently wedded* Isabel, daughter of Forbes, of Corfurdie, and widow of William Chalmers, of Strichen, by whom (who died 30th Nov. 1611, and was buried at Beauly) he left at his decease 2d Oct. 1612, aged sixty-six, a son and successor,

Thomas Fraser, who was served heir to his father, in the estate of Strichen, 31st Oct. 1612, infed in the barony of Strichen, on precept from Chancery 10th of the following November, and had precept of clare constat from Simon, Lord Lovat, as heir to his father in the lands of Ballicherno, Knockie, &c. on the 10th of December. He 1st, 24th, Christian, dau. of William Forbes, of Tolquhon, and secondly, Lady Margaret M'Leod, Lady Cargach, relict of Sir Rory M'Kenzie. He d. in March 1645, and was succeeded by his son, Thomas Fraser, of Strichen, and Moniack, who m. Christian, dau. of John Forbes, of Pitligo, and left (with a dau. Christian, m. to Alexander Burnet of Craigmill) a son and successor,

Thomas Fraser, of Strichen, who wedded (contract of marriage dated in 1655) Marion, daughter of Robert Irvine, of Fedderat, and was father of

i. James, his heir.

ii. Alexander, successor to his brother.

iii. Thomas.

1. Marion, m. in 1715, to James Craig, advocate, professor of civil law in the college of Edinburgh.

The eldest son,

James Fraser, of Strichen, was served heir in general to his father on 16th April, 1702. He died, however, without issue, and was s. by his brother,

Alexander Fraser, of Strichen, retoured heir in 1725, who, adopting the profession of the law, was admitted a lord of session 5th June, 1730, and appointed a lord of justiciary in 1736. He held, likewise, the honourable office of general of the Scottish

* Thomas Fraser, of Knockie, was in the active discharge of his duties as tutor to his nephew, Simon Lord Lovat, when the widow of Thomas Fraser, son of Philorth, entreated his assistance against the family of Gordon. The widow, by name Isabel, daughter of Forbes, of Corfurie, had taken as her first husband William Chalmers, of Strichen. This person's elder brother, George Chalmers, had been long abroad, and there was little chance of his returning. William died in the possession of the estate. His widow sometime after married Thomas Fraser, son of Philorth, who assumed the title of "Strichen." But the old proprietors, unwilling to part with their inheritance, threatened to dispossess him; and their disputes led to several fruitless conferences. The Chalmers, in their necessity, had recourse to Gordon, of Gight. He and Fraser met at Old Deer, in the hopes of effecting a compromise, but the overtures of either party meeting with contempt, Gordon, in a rage, followed after Fraser, and coming behind him at the Bridge of Dee, laid him dead with one blow of his two-handed sword.

To avenge her cause, Isabel Forbes, now for the second time a widow, detailed her woes to Thomas Fraser, of Knocky. He listened to her complaints, used all his interest in her behalf, and in spite of the opposition of the Earl of Huntly himself, had Gight, his kinsman, condemned; but ultimately released him on paying 5000 merks as an atonement for the murder. Gight was afterwards killed at the battle of Glenlivat. It was Knockie's turn to play the suitor, and the lady, in gratitude for his services, became again a wife. Her husband, to prevent further disputes, bought up the claims of the family of Chalmers. His next business was to arrange matters with the daughters of his wife's former husband, Thomas Fraser. On his death, which happened 24th December, 1576, his widow enjoyed the life-rent of his estate, the fee being provided to the children of the marriage, as appears by a crown charter, "Thomas Fraser de Strichen et Isabella Forbes, ejsus conjugi," dated 8th October, 1573, on which seizin passes 5th November, 1573.
mint. Lord Strichen was remarkable for having sat the unusually long period of forty-five years on the bench. At the time of the Douglas cause (1768) he was the oldest Scottish judge, being of no less than twenty-four years longer standing than any of his brethren. Sī liceat ludere (says a late collector of olden memoirs) he must have been one of the judges who sat on the famous case of Ellie Deans, anno 1736. In the year of his appointment to a seat in the justiciary court, he travelled the autumn circuit to Inverness, and was met by his kinsman, Simon Lord Lovat, a few miles from the town, attended by a great retinue, eager to honour and congratulate him on his new dignity. His Lordship m. in 1731, Ann, Countess of Bute, and dying 15th Feb. 1775, left an only son, Alexander Fraser, of Strichen, who m. in 1764, Jean, only daughter of William Menzies, esq., of the parish of St. Ann's, Jamaica, brother of James Menzies, of Caldares, and had four sons and four daughters, viz.

Strichen was s. by his eldest son, Alexander Fraser, of Strichen, captain of the 1st regiment of dragoon guards, who had previously, in 1794, obtained the estate by virtue of his father's disposition thereof. He wedded (marriage contract dated 10th May, 1800) Amelia, daughter of John Leslie, esq. of Balquhain, and dying 28th Apr. 1803, was s. by his son, the present

That prelate was no sycoophant who durst preach before a court on the instability of kingdoms and the change of dynasties, and durst ring in Elizabeth's ears the funeral knell of a succession. HUTTON, of Houghton le Spring.

1. Robert, his heir.

II. Robert, of Lynn, in Norfolk, d.s.p.

Mary, married in 1690, Ralph Robinson, esq. second son of Ralph Robinson, esq. of Herrington.

Catherine, married in 1696 to the Rev. Edward Weddell, Curate of Houghton le Spring.

V. Mary, married to John Mason, of Notts.

VI. Frances, married to Captain George Mason.

IV. Anne, married to William Levinge, of Leicestershire.

V. Eleanor, married to John Gore, of Dublin.

VI. Joan, died unmarried.

Robert Hutton died about the year 1643, and was succeeded by his son,

ROBERT HUTTON, esq. of Houghton le Spring, who, in the command of a troop of horse-guards in Cromwell's army, served throughout the whole of the Scottish campaign; and was with Monk at the storming and plunder of Dundee. After the restoration he remained zealously attached to the Puritans; which may probably account for his being buried in his own orchard, where an altar tomb still bears the following inscription: "Hic jacet Robertvs Hvtton Armiger qui obit, Avg. die nono, 1689. Et moriendo vivit." To this gentleman, the theme of much village tradition, the erection of the family mansion is generally attributed; and, if the same tradition be credited, with the plunder obtained at the sacking of Dundee; but "the building itself," says Mr. Surtees, "affords strong evidence of an earlier date, and may, more probably be ascribed to the Rector of Houghton, the founder of the family, between the years 1589 and 1623." Its external structure is an oblong square, the corresponding sides exactly uniform, and the chief front to the west equally plain with the rest, without façade, or ornamented door-ways. The windows are regular, divided into five, or into three lights, by stone mullions; and the leads are surmounted by a plain pediment. The mansion has undergone little either of repair or alteration; and, as it has been built with a massy solidity, calculated to resist the injuries of time and neglect, it presents, perhaps, at this day, one of the most perfect specimens extant, of the plain durable style of architecture, which distinguished the Old Hall House, the residence of the middling gentry in the reign of James, or Elizabeth.

The choice of Captain Hutton's burial-place is assigned, by tradition, to another cause than puritanical feeling. On the death of his favourite charger, he requested permission, it is stated, from the rector of Houghton, to inter the animal within the church-yard, near to his own intended future place of rest; but, on being refused, buried the horse in his orchard, and determined to repose himself close to the remains of his faithful servant.

Albert Hutton married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Shadforth, esq. of Eppleton, in Durham, by Margaret, his wife, daughter of Marmaduke Blakiston, Prebendary of Durham, and left a son and successor,

Robert Hutton, esq. of Houghton le Spring, baptized 3rd February, 1606, who wedded Jane, daughter of John Garshell, gentleman, of Newcastle, and was father of

BANKES, OF KINGSTON HALL.

BANKES, WILLIAM JOHN, esq. M.A. of Kingston Hall, in the county of Dorset, and of Soughton Hall, in Flintshire, succeeded to the former at the decease of his father in 1834, having previously inherited the latter on the demise of his great-uncle, the Right Hon. Sir William Wynne, in 1815.

Mr. Bankes, as lord of Corfe Castle, is lord lieutenant and admiral of the Isle of Purbeck, and lord of the hundred of Robarrow and Hasilor. He was elected, in 1821, M. P. for the University of Cambridge, and for the county of Dorset in 1831.

Mr. Bankes is known in the literary world by his Travels in the East.
not surrendered eventually, until betrayed. The name of this distinguished woman was Mary Hawtrey, only daughter of Robert Hawtrey, esq. of Riselip.

The lord chief justice having joined the king at York in Easter term 1642, Lady Bankes, with her children and family, retired to Corfe Castle, and remained in peace there until May, 1643, when the rebels, commanded by Sir Walter Erle and Sir Thomas Treunchard, and already in possession of all the towns on the sea coast, resolving to make themselves masters of this Castle, attacked it with a body of between two and three hundred horse and foot, but were forced to retire. On the 23rd of the succeeding month, however, Sir Walter Erle, with Captains Sydenham, Jarvis, and Scott, and five or six hundred men, renewed the siege, and brought several pieces of ordnance to bear upon the Castle. They obliged the soldiers by oath to give no quarter in case of a resistance, and endeavoured by all means to corrupt the defendants. To render their approach to the walls more secure, they constructed two engines, one called the Bear, the other the Cow, framed of boards lined with wool to deaden the shot. When the cow moved forward, the besieged aimed at the legs of the bearers which were not covered, killed one, and compelled the rapid flight of the others. The bear dared not advance. After the loss of much time and ammunition, the Earl of Warwick sent Sir Walter one hundred and fifty manners, besides several cartloads of petards, grenades, &c. for an assault; £20 were offered to the first man that would scale the wall, but as this order had no effect, the commanders made the men drunk with strong waters, and thus excited, stormed the castle on all sides. The besiegers divided their forces into two parties; one assaulted the middle ward, defended by Capt. Lawrence, and the greater part of the garrison; the other attacked the upper ward, which Lady Bankes, her daughters, women, and five soldiers protected, and, to her eternal honour, bravely saved it; for by rolling over stones and hot embers, they repulsed the assailants, and killed and wounded above one hundred men. Sir Walter Erle, hearing that the king's forces, under the Earl of Caernarvon, were advancing, retired in great haste, to London, and left Sydenham to bring off the ordnance, ammunition, and remainder of the soldiers, who retired into the church, intending to march off in the night; but, just as supper was set on the table, an alarm was given that the royal army approached: whereupon Sydenham quitted his supper, artillery, and ammu-

The family of Bankes, now for more than two hundred years one of the most influential in the county of Dorset, is deemed by Fuller to have been of antiquity; its elevation is, however, to be traced to the learned professor of the law.

Sir John Bankes, lord chief justice of the common pleas in the time of Charles I. This eminent person, the son of John Bankes, a merchant, by his wife Elizabeth Hassell, was born towards the close of the sixteenth century, and admitted a commoner of Queen's College, Oxford, in 1604. He retired, however, from the University, without taking a degree, and settled at a very early age in Gray's Inn, by the society of which he was called to the bar, and in a brief period attained the reputation of a sound lawyer and able advocate. After graduating through minor offices, he was appointed attorney-general in 1634, and in that capacity appeared for the Crown in the celebrated cause instituted in the Exchequer against the patriot Hampden for his refusal to pay the arbitrary imposition of shipmoney. This cause was argued twelve days in the Exchequer Chamber before the assembled judges of England, and decided in favour of the Crown. Sir John Bankes was soon afterwards (1640) constituted Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas. Through the subsequent perils that encompassed his royal master, the chief justice adhered with unshaken fidelity to his cause, and attaching himself personally to the king, followed his majesty to York. In his absence, Corfe Castle, the place of his abode, was invested by the rebels, but gallantly defended by his heroic wife, and nition, and took boat for Poole, leaving one hundred horses on the shore, which the besieged made their prize. Thus, after six weeks' strict siege, Corfe Castle, the key of Dorsetshire, was, by the resolution of Lady Bankes, and the valour of Capt. Laurence and about eighty soldiers, with the loss of only two men, preserved. In the years 1645 and 1646 it was again blockaded by the Parliament forces, and at length betrayed by Lieut.-colonel Pitman, an officer of the garrison. When it was delivered up, the Commons ordered Corfe Castle to be blown up with gunpowder, and thus that ancient and magnificent fabric was reduced to a heap of ruins, and remains a lasting memorial of the destructive wars of the reign of the unhappy Charles.

Sir John Bankes d. in 1644, universally esteemed for his integrity as a judge, his devotion as a subject, and admitted by all parties to have been one of the brightest ornaments of the eventful era in which he lived. He was s. by his eldest surviving son.

This gentleman represented Corfe Castle from 1780 to 1826, and the county of Dorset from that time until 1831, when, after a spirited struggle, he was defeated at the general election by the supporters of the great measure of parliamentary reform then pending. Upon that occasion the independent and manly deportment of the staunch and venerable Tory (for to that political party Mr. Bankes had always attached himself) extorted commendation from the most determined of his political opponents. of which he was generally regarded as the organ and advocate in the House of Commons. His public life was marked by firmness in principle, a peculiar disinterestedness and undeviating adherence to conscientiously-formed opinions. He was the author of "The Civil and Constitutional History of Rome, from the Foundation to the Age of Augustus," published in 1818, in two volumes, 8vo. PIPER, OF CULLITON.

England, being destined at an early age for the military profession, was sent to Berlin for education, and in the year 1757, having completed his course of study, entered the Prussian service as a volunteer. He subsequently obtained a commission in the English army. He was present at the battle of Minden, where he was severely wounded through both legs, and afterwards served in the West Indies, participating in the capture of Martinique. Hostilities commencing soon after with America, he proceeded, about the year 1769, to that country with the 25th regiment, and being appointed to the staff, continued to act there until 1782. He then returned to England, retired entirely from active life in 1788, and purchased the property of Culliton, in Devonshire, from Sir John De la Pole, bart. of Shute, on which he resided until his decease in 1802, in the sixty-second year of his age. The surname of Vere is of great antiquity, and in ancient records was variously written, de Vere, Veyr, Were, and Weir. The family had large possessions in lands in the south of Scotland in very early times, and was known in history more than five hundred years ago.

King William died. He confirmed his father’s donation to the monastery of Kelso, and died in the end of the reign of Alexander II., leaving issue a son,

Thomas de Vere, who succeeded him, and is witness in a charter of a donation to the monastery of Kelso, by Henricus de Sto. Claro, anno 1266. This Thomas and his father, Radulphus de Vere, are mentioned by the learned antiquary, Sir James Dalrymple, as progenitors of the Weirs of Blackwood. He was s. by his son, Ricardus de Vere, who is mentioned in a donation to the monastery of Kelso, anno 1294. He left a son and successor,

Thomas de Vere, who is witness in a donation to the said monastery of Kelso, anno 1316. He was the proprietor of the lands and barony of Blackwood, in the shire of Lanark, of which the abbott and convent of Kelso were superiors. He d. in the reign of David Bruce, leaving a son, — Were, whose Christian name is not known. He died in the beginning of the reign of King Robert III., and left a son,

Rotaldus Were, of Blackwood, who succeeded him, and, as heir to his grandfather Thomas, got a charter from Patrick, abbot of Kelso, directo et fideli suo Rotalde de Were, terrarum de Blackwood et Derwoodstone jacen. in baronie de Lesmahagow et vice comitatu de Lanark, &c., dated in 1404. This Rotaldus was designed by the title of Blackwood above 360 years ago, and his posterity have uninterruptedly enjoyed it ever since. He died in the reign of King James II. leaving issue a son,

Thomas Were, of Blackwood, of whom we have nothing remarkable upon record. He was father of,

Robert Veyr, of Blackwood, who got a charter of confirmation from Robert, abbot of Kelso (as heir to Rotaldus, his grandfather), directo et fideli suo Roberto de Veyr, terras de Rogershall, Brownhill, &c. in dominio de Blackwood et vice comitatu de Lanark, dated anno 1479. He died soon after, leaving a son,

Thomas Were, of Blackwood, who married Aegidia, daughter of John, third Lord Somerville, instructed by a sasine to “Aegidia Somerville, now spouse to Thomas Were, of Blackwood, of the five merk lands of Broughton, with their pertinents lying in the shire of Peebles; also of the lands of Mossmenning, in the barony of Lesmahagow, and shire of Lanark; in lieu of the tocher given with her by her said father, at the time of solemnizing the marriage;” dated 12th October, 1483. This Thomas had sasine of the lands of Burnetland, in the county of Peebles, proceeding upon a precept from King James V., dated 10th May, 1524. He got also a charter of the whole lands and barony of Blackwood, Kyprside, Rogershall, Mossmenning, &c., from Thomas, abbot, of Kelso, superior thereof, dated 31st January, 1526-7. He acquired some other lands in the barony of Lesmahagow, from James Wallace, by his resignation, dated the last day of October, 1530. By the above it appears, that this Thomas had vast possessions in lands; and, as patron of St. Mary’s church, of Lesmahagow, gave a presentation to Sir George Ker, to be chaplain there, 7th May, 1539. He died in the beginning of the reign of Queen Mary, and left a son,

James Were, of Blackwood, who, upon his father’s resignation, got a charter from Thomas, abbot of Kelso, “to and in favour of James Weir, eldest lawful son and apparent heir of Thomas Weir of Blackwood, and his heirs male, of all and the whole 20 merk land of old extent of Blackwood, the lands of Dorminston, Kyprside, the tenth merk land of Mossmenning,” &c.; dated 20th May, 1531. There is a precept from James, commissary of Kelso and Melrose, for infesting James Weir, of Blackwood, and Eupham Hamilton, his spouse, in the lands of Kyprside, &c. The sasine following thereon is dated 19th February, 1531. Also a charter of alienation from Hugh Wallace, of Cairnhill, honorabilo viro Jacobo Weir de Blackwood et Euphamie Hamilton ejus sponsae, terrarum de Blackwood-gards, Kyprside, Dormonside, &c. lying in the barony of Lesmahagow, and shire of Lanark, dated 28th September, 1537, which were confirmed to them by a charter from William, commendator of Kelso, 9th February, 1561. He was proprietor, likewise, of the lands of Powneil, in Lanarkshire, which appears, by the discharge of 1000 merks, as part of the price thereof, anno 1564. He lived to a great age, died in the year 1595, and by the Eupham Hamilton had two sons,

1. James, who m. Mariette Ramsay, daughter of George, Lord Dalhousie, and was father of George, successor to his grandson,

2. William, who is mentioned in a charter narrated in the sequel. He was s. by his grandson,

George Weir, of Blackwood, who first, Margaret, eldest lawful daughter of William Vere, of Staneyres, which is instructed by a charter from James Weir, of Blackwood, “to and in favour of George Weir, his grandson and apparent heir, son of the deceased James Weir, younger, of Blackwood, and Mariette Ramsay, his spouse, with consent of George Ramsay, of Dalhousie, &c. to the said George and Margaret, his future spouse, and the heirs-male of their bodies; which, failing to William Weir, second son of the said James, and uncle of the said George, and the heirs-male of his body; which, failing to the heirs-mail and of entail of the said James whateomver, &c. They, so succeeding, being obliged to carry the name and arms of Weir, of Blackwood; — of all and hail the 20 merk land of Blackwood, the ten merk land of Mossmening, the two merk land of Nether Blackwood.” &c. &c. dated in August, 1691: and the sasine following thereon, in favour of the said George and Marganet, his spouse, is dated 1st December thereafter. All which is confirmed by a charter under the great seal, to George Weir, of Blackwood, his heirs, &c. dated 10th June, 1595. By the said Margaret Vere he had only one daughter, Marjottie, his heir.
He m. secondly, Barbara Johnston, but by her he had no issue; and, dying about the year 1646, was s. by his only surviving child, Marjottie Weir, heiress of Blackwood, who married first, Major James Bannatyne, which appears by a charter, granted “to the said Major James Bannatyne, brother german to John Bannatyne, of Corehouse, proceeding upon a contract of marriage between him and the said Marriotte Weir, of the whole lands and barony of Blackwood, &c. to and in favour of them, and the heirs procreate, or to be procreate, betwixt them of this marriage; which, failing, to the heirs whateomver of the body of the said Major Bannatyne by any other spouse,” &c. &c. whoever, so succeeding, being obliged to carry the name and arms of Blackwood; and at the same time reserving the life-rent of all the said lands to George Weir, of Blackwood, and Barbara Johnston, his spouse, &c. &c. The charter is dated the 2nd, and sasine following thereon, the 9th April, 1642. But Major Bannatyne dying soon after, without issue, the said Marriotte married, secondly, William Lowrie, esq. who was thereupon designated tutor of Blackwood, and by him she had a son, George, who, in consequence of the settlements of the estate above recited, was designed George Weir, of Blackwood, particularly in a charter of several lands, dated 18th August, 1668. There is a sasine of all and hail the lands and barony of Blackwood, &c. in favour of William Lowrie, esq. tutor of Blackwood, and Marriotte Weir, his spouse, daughter and heiress of unquhile George Weir, of Blackwood, in life-rent, and to George Weir, their eldest lawful son, and apparent heir, in fee and heritage, dated 16th March, 1672. Also a resignation from William Lowrie and Marriotte Weir, in favour of the said George Weir, of Blackwood, and the heirs-male of his body; which, failing, to the eldest heir-female, &c. &c. of all and hail the lands of Brown-castle, and others, in the barony of Blackwood, dated 10th July, 1674. He m. first, Anne, daughter of George Cleland, of Gentness, esq. by Margaret, his wife, daughter of — Hamilton, of Wishaw, and by her he had a son and daughter, viz.
George (Sir), his heir.
Margaret, who d. young.
He m. secondly, Helen, daughter of Mr. Robert Bruce, of Broom Hall, progenitor of the Earls of Elgin and Kincardine, by whom he had a second son, William, advocate, who m. Elizabeth, daughter of John Stewart, esq. of Ascog, and had two daughters.
George was s. by his eldest son,
Sir George Weir, of Blackwood, who was created a baronet by King William III. 28th November, 1691. He m. Catherine, daughter of Sir John Jardine, of Applegirth, by Lady Margaret Douglas, his wife, daughter of James, Earl of Queens- bury, and had two sons, and two daughters.

1. William (Sir), his heir.
2. George (Sir), who, upon the death of his brother without issue-male, succeeded to his title, and was third baronet. He was a captain in the Scots Royal regiment of foot, but dying unm. anno 1735, the baronetcy became extinct.
4. Catherine, m. to John Lockhart, of Cleghorn, esq. and had issue.
Sir George d. in February 1716, and was s. by his eldest son,
Sir William Weir, second baronet of Blackwood, who m. Rachael, daughter of James Hamilton, of Pencaitland, one of the senators of the College of Justice, by Catherine Denholm, his wife, a daughter of Westshielis. By her he had one daughter, Catherine, who carried on the line of this family.
He m. secondly, Christian, daughter of Sir Philip Anstruther, of Anstruther-field, but had no other issue. Sir William died in 1722, (his widow m. John, sixth Earl of Tragair, and was grandmother of the present earl) when the baronetship devolved upon his brother, Sir George, as before observed, and he was succeeded by his only child.
Catherine Weir, who m. in 1733, the Hon. Charles Hope, of Craigie Hall, second son of Charles, second Earl of Hopetoun, by Lady Henrietta Johnston, only daughter of William, first Marquis of Annandale, and had four sons and two daughters, DENNISTOUN, OF DENNISTOUN.

DENNISTOUN, JAMES, esq. of Dennistoun, born in 1803, a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant, and Member of the faculty of Advocates, succeeded his father on the 1st of June, 1834, married in 1835, Isabella-Katharina, eldest daughter of the Honourable James Wolfe Murray, of Cringletie, one of the Senators of the College of Justice in Scotland.
All the peerage writers, and genealogical antiquaries of Scotland, are agreed, that this ancient family ranks with the most eminent in the western districts of that kingdom. Leaving the doubtful authority of Buchanan, of Auchmar, who asserts it to be a younger branch of the proud Earls of Lennox, and to have had large possessions on the Endrick, in 1016, it appears from a charter of Malcolm IV. who died in 1165, that the Dennistouns held lands on the Gryfe, in Renfrewshire, in that monarch's reign. Here, it would seem, that one Daniel, or Daniel, probably of Norman extraction, settled himself, and, calling the estate Danziefontoune, assumed therefrom his surname. After passing through various changes, this orthography took its present shape about the end of the sixteenth century. Confining our details rigidly to the evidence of authentic documents, we deduce the genealogy from

Sir Hugh de Danziefontoun, of that ilk, who flourished during the fatal wars of the Scottish succession, and with other patriotic barons of his country, accorded a reluctant submission to the victorious Edward, in 1296. He had issue,

John, (Sir) his successor.

Joanna, or Janet, who married Sir Adam More, of Rowallan, and was mother of Elizabeth More, whose marriage with King Robert II. became a fruitful ground of controversy among historians. From this union, in 1347, sprang the long line of the Stuart monarchs, through whom the Imperial crown has passed to the reigning dynasty. In reference to this circumstance, the proud proverb has been preserved by the Dennistouns, "Kings came of us, not we of kings."

Sir Hugh was succeeded by his son,

Sir John de Danziefontoun, of that ilk, who, during the reign of David the Second, was the constant associate in arms of his illustrious father-in-law, the Earl of Wigtoun, and of the brave Sir Robert Erskine. Through life, himself and his son Sir Robert maintained a devoted loyalty, with a steadiness as exemplary as it was rare, in an age when the haughty nobles of Scotland often sought to extend their individual influence by trampling on the prerogatives of the crown. Offices of high trust were conferred upon him, and the accession of his relation, Robert the Second, was followed by new honours, and by grants of many splendid baronies in various counties. He was for many years High Sheriff of Dunbartonshire, and Governor of Dunbarton Castle, the strongest fortress in the kingdom, and was one of the lords of parliament who concurred in the settlement of the crown upon the descendants of his niece Elizabeth More. He married Mary, daughter of Malcolm, first earl of Wigtoun, who is linearly represented by the heir of this marriage, and had five sons and a daughter, viz.

1. Robert, his heir.
2. Walter, (Mr.) a bold and turbulent churchman. On the death of his elder brother, in 1399, he asserted a right to the castle of Dunbarton, as an appendage of his family, and, assembling the numerous vassals of his house, seized and defended the fortress. Robert the Third, deeming "discretion a victor's better part," offered his rebellious relative the See of St. Andrew's, as a bribe for the surrender of the castle. The terms were accepted, and the bishop was duly inducted; but contumacious to the last, he held out the castle to his death, in 1402.
3. William, (Sir) of Colgrain.
4. Hugh, who had various grants of land from Robert the Second, and Robert the Third.
5. Janet, married to her cousin, Sir Adam More, of Rowallan—ancestor, through the female line, of the Marquess of Hastings. (See Burke's Peerage, Countess of Loudoun.)

The eldest son and heir,

Sir Robert de Danziefontoun, of that ilk, was one of the youths selected from the chief families in Scotland in 1357, as hostages for the ransom of King David the Second; and, in 1370, was commissioner for a treaty of peace with England. Identified with his distinguished father in loyalty and valour, he enjoyed a like portion of royal favour, and succeeded him in the high trusts of Sheriff of the county, and Keeper of the Castle of Dunbarton, which he held to his death. Having no son, his daughters divided his noble baronies of Dennistoun, Finlasytown, and Stainly, in Renfrewshire; Kilmarnock, in Lennox; Mauldsley, Law, Kilkadzow, and Trepwood, in Lanarkshire; Glencairn, in Dunfrieshire; Blackburn and Torbain, in Linlithgowshire; and Collington and Redhill, county of Edinburgh. Of these ladies,

1. Margaret, married Sir William de Cunninghame, of Kilmours, and hence sprang the earls of Glencairn.

2. Elizabeth, married Sir Robert Maxwell, of Calderwood; and from her sprang the baronets of Calderwood and Pollock, and the earls of Farham.

After the decease of Sir Robert, the male line of the family was carried on by his brother,

Sir William de Danzielstoun, of Colgrain, in the county of Dunbarton, which estate, and that of Camis Eskau, in the same shire, he acquired before 1377, and had several other grants from the crown. From these we learn that he held prefernent in the household of Robert III. and of that monarch's eldest son, the unfortunate Earl of Carrick, and on his death, in 1393, his widow, the Lady Marjory, had a pension from the king's chamberlain. He seems to have been s. by his son,

— de Danzielstoun, of Colgrain, who was a minor in 1399, and d. before 1450, leaving, by his wife, Margaret, a son and successor,

William de Danzielstoun, of Colgrain, who appears to have left two sons, Robert, the younger, from whom descended the Dennistouns, of Dalnair and Tallichawen, now extinct; and his heir,

Charles Danzielstoun, of Colgrain, who d. seised in Auchindennan and Cameron, before 1481, and was s. by his son,

Robert Danzielstoun, of Colgrain, who wedded Elizabeth, daughter of John Napier, of Merchiston, ancestor of the Lords Napier, and had two sons and a daughter, viz. Patrick, his heir; Andrew, from whom sprang the Dennistouns of Ferrylands and Auchendeneurie, now extinct, and Janet, the wife of John Darleith, of that Ilk. The elder son,

Patrick Danzielstoun, of Colgrain, m. thrice; his first wife was Giles Colquhoun; the second, Giles, daughter of Scumpill, of Fulwood; the third, Matilda, daughter of Sir Humphrey Cunninghame, of Glengarnock. His son and heir,

Robert Danzielstoun, of Colgrain, associated himself with William, fourth earl of Glencairn, in his machinations and correspondence with Henry VIII. of England. For this he was attainted; but in 1546 had a remission, under the Great Seal, for all treasons and crimes committed by him, along with the Earl. The same active and turbulent spirit led him afterwards to take part in the raids then frequent amongst the border clans of the Highlands, in which he seems to have been both an actor and a sufferer. His wife was Katharine, dau. of David Semple, of Noblestoun, by Marion, daughter of Sir William Edmonston, of Duntreath. They left, with other issue,

1. Robert, heir.

II. John, living in 1599, was father, by his wife, Euphemia Bontyne, of Walter Danzielstoun, who, like his predecessor, resided at Colgrain. He d. in 1618, leaving, with several younger children,

John Dennistoun, who, by Margaret, daughter and eventual heiress of the ancient family of Spreunl, of Dalchurne, had two sons,

1. Mr. Archibald.

2. Mr. William, of Ferrylands, episcopal minister of Glassford. This gentleman was deposed at the Revolution for nonconformity.

The elder son,

Mr. Archibald Dennistoun, of Dalchurne, was minister of Campsie, and lost his living by his devotion to episcopacy. He m. first, Jane, daughter of Humphry Noble, of Farne and Ardland, and secondly, Katharine, dau. of James Stirling, of Auchyle: by the former he had

1. William, of whom in the sequel as heir male of the family, and husband of the HEIRESS OF COLGRAIN.

2. Archibald.

The son and heir,

Robert Dennistoun, of Colgrain, m. Margaret, daughter of John Hamilton, of Ferguslie, and among other children, who left no issue, had Elizabeth, the wife of John Colquhoun, of Canstraddan; Catherine m. to John Macgregor, of Ardencounal; and his successor.

James Dennistoun, of Colgrain, who, being a person of facile and extravagant disposition, impaired and involved the family inheritance to a considerable extent. His son and heir,

WALTER DENNISTOUN, of Colgrain, in consequence of these involvements, was obliged to alienate Auchencairn, Cameron, and other portions of the estate. He m. first, Sarah, daughter of Sir Patrick Houston, of Houston, by the Lady Janet Cunningham; and secondly, Grace, daughter of John Brisbane, of Brisbane; by the former he had James, who d. unm. and an elder son, his successor,

JOHN DENNISTOUN, of Colgrain, who, during the wars of the Commonwealth, continued a zealous and steady adherent of the royal cause, and ultimately crowned his exertions by the sacrifice of his life. The last effort of the cavaliers in Scotland was made under the Earl of Glencaine, who was constituted commander-in-chief by CHARLES II. in 1653. By him the following commission was given to Colgrain:—

"Whereas I, William, Earl of Glencaine, by virtue of his Ma. commission, and empowered to levy horse and foot within the kingdom of Scotland for his Ma. service; and I, being well assured of the loyal, brave, and staunch affection of John Dennistoun, of Colgrain, does hereby warrande and appoint him to levy the third man of all the feble persons within the Lennox, and to reduce them in foot companies, and to place officars over them, and to command the foresaid foote, and to bring them up to joyne with his Majesties forces now on foot: for the which this shall be unto him ane sufficiand warrand. Given under my hand the 20th day of November, 1653.

"GLENCAIRNE."

After a short but romantic campaign, the little army thus assembled was disbanded in the next autumn, when John Dennistoun was specially included in the treaty of surrender, and his real and personal estates were exempted from attainer. This benefit he did not long enjoy, but died the ensuing year, after lingering sufferings from a wound received in the Highland expedition. He m. Jean, daughter of William Semple, of Fulwood, and had three daughters, viz.

1. MARGARET, who succeeded to the estates in virtue of an entail made by her father, under condition of marrying the heir male of the family.

2. Jean.

On the decease of Col. Dennistoun, the male representation devolved upon the elder son and heir of Mr. Archibald Dennistoun, of Dalchurne, minister of Campsie, (whose line we have traced), WILLIAM DENNISTOUN, who, under the settlement of Col. Dennistoun, became the husband of his eldest daughter, MARGARET, heiress of Colgrain. Small, however, was the heritage thus re-united to the representation of this ancient house. The embarrassments which had gradually increased during the civil wars, in which the laird was on the losing side, were fatally augmented by the selfish mismanagement during the minority of the heiress: a long life of prudent economy was inadequate to retrieve the estate, and William's patrimony of Dalchurne was entirely lost. In one respect this was fortunate, as it perhaps prevented his taking the active part in politics which his Jacobite zeal might in other circumstances have suggested. Of sixteen children, one only survived their parents, viz.

JOHN DENNISTOUN, of Colgrain, who freed the property from debt, and by Jane, heiress of Moses Buchanan, of Glen, had, beside several daughters,

JAMES DENNISTOUN, of Colgrain. This laird m. first, Janet, daughter of John Baird, of Craigton, and by her left,

1. James, his successor.

2. Jean, m. to Andrew Buchanan, of Ardenconnal, and had issue.

He wedded, secondly, Mary, daughter of John Lyon, of Parklee, and had three other children, viz.

3. Robert, m. to Anne-Penelope, dau. of Archibald Campbell, of Jura, and had issue.

4. Richard, who purchased KELVIN GROVE, in the county of Lanark,*

Lineage.

William Purves, of Abbey Hill, near Edinburgh, living in the beginning of the seventeenth century, was father of

Robert Purves, of Abbey Hill, burgess of Edinburgh, who wedded Anne Douglas, and left at his decease in 1655, with a daughter, Sybilla, a son and successor,

William Purves, of Abbey Hill, who was bred to the Scottish bar. Before the usurpation he held an office in the Court of Session, and was one of the clerks to the committees of parliament; but taking an active part in favour of King Charles during the civil wars, suffered severely both in person and estate. For several years he was compelled to conceal himself, and in 1656, when peace was restored under the Protector, he accepted, through necessity, a small office in the Exchequer. In this situation, although he never swerved from his fidelity as a public officer, he availed himself of the opportunity he had of rendering service to the persecuted royalists. After the Restoration, he was appointed solicitor-general for Scotland, knighted, and eventually, in 1665, created a Baronet. Sir William married Marjory, daughter of Robert Fleming, of Restalrig, and had four sons, viz.

1. Alexander (Sir), second baronet, appointed his father's successor as solicitor-general for Scotland. He was grandfather of Sir William Purves, fourth baronet, who m. Lady Anne Hume-Campbell, eldest daughter of Alexander, second Earl of Marchmont, and left a son and successor,

Sir Alexander Purves, fifth baronet, father of the present

Sir William Purves-Hume-Campbell, sixth baronet, who assumed his additional surnames upon inheriting the estates of his maternal family.

II. John, of Abbey Hill.

III. James, of Purves Vale, of whom presently.

1. Anne, m. to Charles, Earl of Home.
2. Margery, m. to Sir Mungo Stirling, of Glovate.
3. Rosina, m. to Dean, of Woodhouse.

The third son,
JAMES PURVES, esq. of Purves Vale, died in Scotland, leaving by his wife, a daughter of Pringle of Torsounce, six sons, one of whom is supposed to have been

GEORGE PURVIS, esq. who settled in England, and became a captain in the royal navy. He m. at Stepney, 15th September, 1679, Margaret Berry, and by her, who was buried at Darsham 16th March, 1717, had issue,

1. GEORGE, his heir.

* One of this Richard’s direct descendants was Laurence Bulkeley, consecrated Archbishop of Dublin, in 1619. He married Alice, daughter of Rowland Bulkeley, esq. of Beaumaris, a lady whose love of lamb remains upon record. The commissioners of government having published an order to prohibit the killing of lambs, owing to the great decay and scarcity of sheep, under the penalty of 10s. for each lamb, to be paid as well by the killer as the consumer. Mrs. Bulkeley petitioned for license to eat lamb, by reason of her great age, and weakness of body: in consideration whereof, her petition was granted, and she had a license, 17th March, 1662, to kill and dress so much as should be necessary for her own use and eating, not to exceed, however, three lambs in the whole of that year.

* The following is a recorded account of this gentleman's baptism:—

On the 12th July, 1744, was christened, at Whittington, near Chesterfield, Thomas Ashton Bulkeley, the following persons, by their representatives standing sponsors, Edward Downs, esq. of Worth, in Cheshire, the infant's great-great-great-great-great-uncle.

Mr. Ashton, Master of Jesus College, Cambridge, and his brother, Mr. Joseph Ashton, of Surrey-street, in the Strand, the infant's great-great-great-uncle.

Mrs. Elizabeth Wood, of Barnsley, in Yorkshire, the infant's great-great-great-great-aunt.

Mrs. Jane Wainwright, of Middlewood Hall, in Yorkshire, the infant's great-great-grandmother.

Mrs. Dorothy Green, of the same place, the infant's great-grandmother.

The infant has a mother, grandmother, great-grandmother, and great-great-grandmother now living, and Mrs. Wainwright, the great-great-grandmother, who is now eighty-nine, although she cannot say, "Rise up, daughter, and go to thy daughter, for thy daughter's daughter has a daughter:" she can say, what is in equal degree to it, "Rise up, daughter, &c. thy daughter's daughter has a son." The infant, by the mother's side, is lineally descended from Robert Ashton, esq. of Bradway, in Derbyshire, and Dorothy, his wife, who were the said Mrs. Wainwrights, Dr. Ashton and Mr. Joseph Ashton's father and mother, and of whom some remarkable circumstances may be related, viz.

That during their whole lives they were eminent for all Christian virtues, that they never had more than twelve children, eight sons and four daughters, who were all nursed by her, and lived to be men and women, that they were as good parents in every respect to all their children, without partiality to any of them, as ever children were blessed with. "That they lived in the same house at Bradway above fifty years, and they had near twenty in family great part of the time. No person whatever died in the house during the first fifty years, they lived together sixty-four years after their marriage, but it must be owned that they were tied together with a double knot, for being married in Oliver's time, the ceremony was twice performed, once by a justice of the peace, according to the law of that time, and again by a clergyman according to the rites of the Church of England, of which they were both worthy members."

Warin Busel, seated at Penwortham, one of the barons under Roger de Poictou, in the time of the Conqueror, held, among his ample demesnes, the parish of Leland, and was a considerable benefactor to the Abbey of Evesham, in Worcestershire, to which he gave the Priory of Penwortham. His son,

Warin Busel, was father of John de Farrington, and Avis, his wife, in the 7th Edward I. (1279), had a process directed to William Walton to deliver up his lands in Leyland, and John Croft, and Emma, his wife, and W., the son of Adam de Walton, were required to do the like, "which lands, John, the son of W. de Meles, had in free marriage with Alica, the daughter of Robert Busel, and which were to descend after the death of John and Avicia, and William, their son, according to the form of donation." From this John de farrington lineally derived.*

This gentleman, a staunch cavalier, valiantly assisted the Countess of Derby in her gallant defence of Lathom, against the parlia-mentarians, and, in consequence, had his estate sequestered. His sufferings and services were, however, highly appreciated by his royal master, and the name of his son, William Farington, appears among those who were to have been rewarded with the knighthood of the royal oak, had that order been established. This noted cavalier married Margaret Worral, and left, at his decease, his will is dated 1657, (with two younger sons, and four daughters, Margaret, the wife of Edward Fleetwood, of Penwortham; Anne, of Clayton, of Clayton, Elizabeth, of Charnocke, of Charnocke; and Alice, of Banister, of Bank) a son and successor,

HEREFORD, OF SUFTON COURT.

HEREFORD, RICHARD, esq. of Sutfon Court, in the county of Hereford, b. 6th July, 1803, m. 5th June, 1828, Harriot-Arabella, daughter of the late Capt. Sir Robert Mends, kn.t. R.N. and has issue, Richard-James, b. 1st April, 1833.

Harriot-Mary.

Mr. Hereford succeeded his father, 2d February, 1823. He is in the commission of the peace.

Lineage.

The family of Hereford, one of very great antiquity, derived its surname, according to an old manuscript, from "the name of a city on the borders of the principality of Wales, formerly very well fortify'd, and the ordinary residence of the ancient earls of Hereford. The ancestors of the family liv'd there a long while, to secure themselves from the incursions of ye people of that country, till at last that nation, falling under the government of the English, in the time of Edward, the first, and the ancient quarrels between the two nations being at an end, they came and liv'd in a land (aula) call'd Sutfon Hall, or Sutfon Castle, under the Lord Mordiford, three miles from Hereford, towards the south; and their posterity remain there to this day, and are lords thereof, as of many other inheritances and lands situated in the province."

Of the elder branch were the earls of Hereford, who were likewise high constables of England. Their line terminated in heiresses, daughters of Milo de Gloucester, earl of Hereford, the eldest of whom, Marget, married Humphrey de Bohun; and her son, Humphrey de Bohun, became earl of Hereford, and constable of England.

Contemporaneous with those potent feudal lords, there resided in the city of Hereford, in the time of Henry II. A.D. 1170, Roger Hereford, "a famous philosopher (says the same manuscript), who published, during the period that Henry of Hereford, and Mabel, his brother, enjoyed the county of Hereford, the books quoted by John Pits. This Roger," the philosopher, "was born on the borders of Wales, and was probably a student of Cambridge, as most part of his works were, it is reported, preserved a long time there. He was very much esteemed by the great men of his time, as well for his excellent qualities, as for the extraordinariness of his progress in all sorts of learning. He was of a sharp wit; and was so great a lover of the sciences, that if one ask'd him, with were the things, whereof the desire is never satisfy'd in never so great plenty, he would answer, not as a covetous man, that they were riches, but as a philosopher, that it was learning. He never lost a moment, but always spent in study all the time could be spar'd from his employments, to whch his was obliged to attend. His works were—A Book of Judiciary Astrology, Quoniam Regulae artis Astronomia; of the Theory of Planets; Divers Astronomers, according to the different manuscripts of the Public Library at Oxford; a Book of Collections of the Years of Planets; a Book of the setting and rising of Constellations; a Book of the Horizon and the Circle; a Book of Metals."

This eminent man flourished about the year 1170, in the reign of the second Henry, and sixteen years after the death of Roger.

* John Pits, an Englishman, doctor of divinity at Liverdun, in Lorrain, author of an Historical Account of England, in which, vol. i. p. 237, Roger Hereford's works are (according to the above expression) quoted.
EARL OF Hereford, one of the brothers of the heiresses who divided the great estates of these earls; so that he seems to have been born at the close of Henry the First's time. He left at his decease a son,

HENRY DE HEREFO RD, of whom there is an entry in the Pipe Roll, in the eighth of John, anno 1201, "that Master Henry of Hereford owes a palfrey, for a fief of the king, to William of Braieuse, for the land of Witton." This appears to have been the first estate in the family. Henry had two sons, Roger, his successor.

Thomas, who was sheriff of the county of Hereford, in the 7th of Henry III.; for in that year we find him receiving an order from the Crown to deliver up, in his official capacity, up to William Canteloup, the city of Penbridge, with every thing thereto belonging, of which the said William was appointed governor during pleasure.

Roger de Hereford, the elder son, held lands in Breinton, anno 1222, under the dean and chapter of Hereford; he left a son and heir,

Henry de Hereford, who, being a minor, was placed under the care of Thomas Dansey, in the 7th of Henry III. He was lord of the manors of Sutton and Mordiford, in which he was s. at his decease, in 1304, by his son,

John de Hereford, lord of the manors of Sutton and Mordiford, born in 1272, who, by his wife, Matilda, had (with probably other) issue,

Henry (Sir) his heir.

John, successor to his elder brother.

Nicholas, heir to his nephew, Thomas, the son of John.

By the inquisition made at Hereford, 10th year of Edward III. after the decease of this John de Hereford, it appears that, with sundry other lands, he held in quality of immediate feudatory to the king, the land of Mordiford, in the county of Hereford, with the homage of a pair of gilt spurs for all services. He died in the 64th year of his age, and was s. by his eldest son,

Sir Henry de Hereford, of Sutton and Mordiford, who, embracing the profession of arms, distinguished himself in the Scottish wars, and received the honour of knighthood from King Edward III. with a general pardon for all offences committed by him against the state. In 1322, he was present in the parliament held at Westminster, as one of the representatives of the county of Hereford; and the same year he was a second time summoned to the great parliament which was to be held at the same place. He died unmarried, in 1361, and was s. by his brother,

John de Hereford, of Sutton and Mordiford, b. in 1321, m. Margaret, and had an only child, Thomas, his successor, at his decease, in 1357. (His wife outlived him, and her son.)

Thomas de Hereford, of Sutton and Mordiford, b. 1365, and dying, in 1390, without issue, was s. by his uncle,

Nicholas de Hereford, of Sutton and Mordiford, b. in 1330, m. and had two sons, viz.

Roger, his heir.

John, of Bodenham, married, but his wife's name is unknown.

After the decease of his wife, this gentleman became a priest, and was a D.D. and fellow of Queen's College. Of him the following details are given in the manuscript to which we have before referred:—"Nicholas de Hereford, born in 1330, his father being already old, twenty-six years after his eldest brother Henry, and nine years after his brother John, married a very young woman, and had two children, Roger and John. It appears that he took orders, his wife being dead; and he seems to be, as far as one can conjecture, the same as Nicholas Hereford, Professor of Divinity, and of the Society of Queen's College at Oxford. For the name and surname, and age, and conformity of the time, all agree in proving it. In 1381, Nicholas Hereford and Philip Repingham, prebendary of Leicester, since chancellor of the University of Oxford, bishop of Lincoln, and cardinal, were accused of heresie, with many other divines of the said University, and of favouring and keeping up Wicliff's doctrine." This affair caused considerable agitation amongst the clergy; and there is a Protestation of Innocence and Submission to the Church, upon vellum, from Hereford and Repingham, preserved in the Bodleian land, Lord of Ireland, and Duke of Guiseonne, to all his Bailiffs and Trustees who shall see these present letters, sends greeting. Know ye, that of our special grace, and that for the good services that Henry of Hereford has done us in the Scotch war, we have granted him the pardon of all manslaughter, felonies, robberies, thefts, and trespassions whatsoever he has committed, in our kingdom, before the 10th of July last, as well to the prejudice of the immunities granted by our father, Edward, heretofore king of England, as by us, for which he was called up, &c. and we grant him our royal protection.... Witness myself, at Berwick, the 9th of October, in the 9th year of our reign.

* Contemporaneous with this Henry, were Elias de Hereford, recorder of the Royal Exchequer, and William de Hereford, sheriff of London, in the 16th of Edward I.

LLOYD, OF ASTON.

EDWARD HARVEY.
Richard.
Louisa-Eliza.
Charlotte.

Mr. Lloyd succeeded his father in 1803. He is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant of Shropshire, and was sheriff in 1810.
The patronymic of this ancient family was Rosindale; but, on their settling in Wales, they adopted, with Welsh connexions, the surname of Lloyd; and are sometimes written Lloyd—Rosindale, and sometimes Rosindale—Lloyd. The original House of Aston deduced lineally from Emmon Euell, lord of Cynlheeth and Mochnant, in the county of Denbigh, the common ancestor of many families in Salop and Denbigh, of whom, and his descendants, we have already treated in detail (Vol. ii. page 78), under Edwards, of Ness—Strange.

Meredith ap Howell, of Oswestry and Glasscoed, ninth in descent from Emion Euell, married Thomasine, dau. and heir of Richard Ireland, esq., and had (with an elder son, Richard, and two daughters) Evan Lloyd, of Park—Promise, who married Joan, dau. of Richard Stanney, of Oswestry, and was father of Robert Lloyd, who m. Gwenhwyvar dau. of Wm. Edwards, esq. of Chirk Hall, Denbighshire, and was succeeded by his son,

Robert Lloyd, of Aston, who married a daughter of Thomas Charlton, esq. of Apley, in Slop, and left a son,

Andrew Lloyd, esq. of Aston. This gentleman, like his neighbour, Mytton, of Haiston, adopted the cause of the parliament, against King Charles I., and held a captain’s commission in the army. Prestwich, in his “Respublica,” describes the banner of “Captain Andrewe Lloyd,” of Aston—Abbot, thus: “Argent, in base, a label or scroll of three folds, its points enuled in argent, shaded crimson, lined or; in writing, ‘Ora at pugna—jovi et jubavi—Jehova,’ in fesse, near the sinister side; a book in pale, closed argent, clasped and bound or; from the dexter chief angle, white, blue, and crimson clouds, from which a naked arm and hand, grasping a broad-sword, held as in bend sinister, ppr. hilted or fringed argent and sable,” Capt. Lloyd m. Margaret, dau. of Thomas Powell, esq. of Whittington Park, and had (with other issue)

Thomas, his heir,

Richard (Sir), chancellor of Durham, and judge of the Admiralty Court. Sir Richard, who died in 1686, was father of Sir Nathaniel Lloyd, knt. remembered as a liberal benefactor to the colleges of Trinity Hall and All Souls, Oxford. In the chapel of the former there is a monument to his memory.

The elder son,

Thomas Lloyd, esq. of Aston, acquired, by marriage with Sarah, dau. and co-heir of Francis Albany, esq. the lordship and estate of Whittington, in Shropshire, and had, inter alios,

Robert, his heir.

Elizabeth, m. to Foulk Lloyd, esq. of Foxhall, in the county of Derby, (see family of Rosindale Lloyd in conclusion), and had three sons, viz.

Thomas Lloyd, esq. of Aston, at whose decease, unm. in 1754, the estates passed to his nephew,

The Rev. William Lloyd, of Aston. This gentleman m. Elizabeth, dau. of William Sneyd, esq. of Bishton, in the county of Stafford, and had an only son and heir,

The Rev. John—Robert Lloyd, of Aston, who wedded Martha, fourth dau. of John Shakespeare, esq. of London, and had issue, Family of Rosindale-Lloyd.

Henry Rosindale, of Rosindale, near Clithero, in the county of Lancaster, served under Henry de Lacy, earl of Lincoln, who had a grant of the lordship of Denbigh, and who, in the 16th year of Edward the First's reign, granted to the said Henry Rosindale certain lands, parcel of the said lordship, on condition that he and his heirs should serve with a certain number of horsemen, for a period in the said grant specified, in the castle of Denbigh, in all wars that should occur between the King of England and the Prince of Wales, at his own charges and cost. The grandson of this Henry,

William Rosindale adopted the surname of Lloyd, and m. Ermine, dau. and heir of Robert Pigott, esq. Fourth in descent from this marriage, was Piers, successor to his grandfather.

2. Thomas, father of Robert, of Denbigh, father of Humphrey Lloyd, the celebrated antiquary and historian. This eminent man was born at Denbigh, but in what house of learning at Oxford he first applied himself to academic studies, Anthony Wood is unable to determine; "sure it is (saith he), that after he had taken the degree of bachelor of arts, which was in 1547, I find him by the name of Humphrey Lloyd to be a commoner in Brazennose College, and in the year 1551 to proceed in arts as a member of that house, at which time, it seems, he studied physic, being then ripe in years; afterwards retiring to his own country he lived mostly within the walls of Denbigh Castle, practised his faculty, and sometimes that of music for diversion sake, being then esteemed a well-bred gentleman. He was a person of great eloquence, an excellent rhetorician, a sound philosopher, a most noted antiquary, and of great skill and knowledge in British affairs." Camden styles him "a learned Briton, for knowledge of antiquities reputed by our countrymen to carry, after a sort, all the credit and renown." Humphrey Lloyd was author of many works illustrative of British history; amongst others, he wrote De Morti Druidum insula Antiquata sue restituta 1568; Chronicon Walliae; and the History of Cambria. He represented his native city some years in parliament, and died about the year 1570, and was buried in the church of Whittington. He m. Barbara, daughter of the Hon. George Lumley,* attained and executed in the 20th of Henry VIII. and was great-great-grandfather of the Rev. Dr. Robert Lloyd, who claimed unsuccessfully the Barony of Lumley in 1723 (see Burke's Extinct Peerage).

John Lloyd was s. by his grandson,

Piers Lloyd, esq. of Henllan, who married Margaret, daughter of Robert Salusbury, esq. of Laucryst, and was s. by his son, Foulk Lloyd, esq. who was sheriff of Denbighshire in the years 1555 and 1568. He m. Mary, daughter and heir of William Dacre, esq. and had issue,

Foulk Lloyd, esq. of Foxhall, near Denbigh, was s. by his son,

Hugh Lloyd, esq. of Foxhall, who was sheriff of Denbighshire in 1639. He married Margaret, daughter of William Glynn, esq. of Glynnlivon, in the county of Carnarvon, and was s. by his son, Foulk Lloyd, esq. of Foxhall, who m. Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Lloyd, esq. and thus his descendants became of Aston.

* Lumley Lloyd, the eldest dau. of Humphrey Lloyd, the antiquary, m. Robert Coytmore, esq. of Coytmore, and was progenitor of

In the Vault of this Chancel pertaining to the Manor are deposited the remains of Robert Shedden, Esq.

of Paulerspury Park, (and of Hardmead, Bucks), Son of William, the youngest son of Robert Shedden, of Roughwood, (and of Coalburn), in the county of Ayr, North Britain.

He married Agatha Wells, daughter of John Goodrich, Esq.
of Nansemond Plantation, in the province of Virginia, where he was residing as a merchant prior to the American Rebellion, in which contest, adhering to the cause of Loyalty, his possessions were confiscated, and his flattering prospects in the Colony sacrificed; but being blessed with prudence and with energy of Character, on his return to Great Britain he amply redeemed, during forty years of activity and perseverance, the cost of Loyalty and Fidelity.

In the eventful struggles which convulsed Europe he continued a steady and consistent supporter of the Constitution and Established Religion, and was distinguished as a Patron and Guardian of Patriotic Institutions which befriended the Widows and Orphans of those who fell in battle, universally respected for Probity and Liberality as a Merchant, and pre-eminently for his judgment and enterprise in Marine Insurance, Mild, Charitable, and Generous, beloved by his numerous Family and Descendants, Devout and Humble, This Monument will but feebly convey That general affection and regard which greeted his Virtues, and cherishes his Memory.

He died in 1630, and was s. by his elder son,

SIR WILLIAM BROCKMAN, knt. of Beachborough. This gentleman, amongst the most devoted adherents of King Charles I. distinguished himself by a courageous defence of the town of Maidstone against Fairfax and a considerable body of the parliament's forces. He was appointed in the eighteenth of his majesty's reign, by the king, then in arms at Oxford, sheriff of Kent, but was superseded in his office by the parliament, and Sir John Honeywood constituted sheriff in his stead. The defence of Maidstone occurred in 1648, when Fairfax, with the elite of his division, marched upon that place, at the time garrisoned by probably a thousand royalist horse and foot, under the command of Sir John Mayney. The republican general passing the river at Farleigh Bridge, which had been but feebly guarded, attacked the town with a corps of ten thousand men at least; carrying without difficulty some slight fortifications which were thrown up at the entrance. The assault, about seven o'clock in the evening, became general, and the fighting fierce and sanguinary in every street, which with the houses were lined by the royalists, whose strength had been augmented by Sir William Brockman, who brought in a reinforcement of eight hundred men during the preliminary skirmishing. The resistance of the townsmen was so determined and gallant, that Fairfax had literally to contend for every inch of ground; the conflict had already been prolonged to midnight, when the royalists, overpowered by numbers, were driven into the church-yard, and thence taking shelter in the church, continued to resist with unabated ardour, until eventually reduced to surrender upon conditions securing their personal safety. Few actions displayed more of that chivalric courage and devoted resolve which characterized the adherents of the king during the civil wars than this. Lord Clarendon terms it "a sharp encounter very bravely fought with the general's whole strength." Sir William m. at Newington, 28th May, 1616, Anne,

Anne, m. to Charles Baille, esq.

Mr. Scott succeeded his father in 1793. He is a justice of the peace and deputy lieutenant in the counties of Berwick, Roxburgh, and Selkirk, and was representative in parliament for Berwickshire.

Lineage.

The family of Scott derives from Uchred Fitz Scott, who flourished at the court of King David I. and was ancestor of Sir Michael Scott, of Murthockstone, (which territory came to the Scotts with the heirress of Murthockstone, of that Ilk), from whose eldest son sprang, in the female line, the present Ducal Family of Buccleuch,

* The Hon. Almeria Carpenter, only daughter of George, second Lord Carpenter, espoused, first, Charles, second earl of Egremont, by whom she had George-O'Brien, the present earl, and other children. Her ladyship m. secondly, Count Bruhl, and by him was mother of Mrs. Scott, of Harden.
SCOTT, OF HARDEN.

William Scott, first Laird of Harden, was the second son of the Laird of Sinton. He was a fierce and gallant warrior, and was commonly called "Willy with the Boltfoot." He was the Laird of Ferniehirst, and was s. by his son, Walter, second Laird of Harden, surnamed "Auld Wat." Of this chief, his illustrious descendant, Sir Walter Scott, thus speaks. * "We may form some idea of the style of life maintained by the border warriors, from the anecdotes, handed down by tradition, concerning Walter Scott of Harden, who flourished towards the middle of the sixteenth century. This ancient laird was a renowned freebooter, and used to ride with a numerous band of followers. The spoil, which they carried off from England, or from their neighbours, was concealed in a deep and impervious glen, on the brink of which the Old Tower of Harden was situated. From thence the cattle were brought out, one by one, as they were wanted, to supply the rude and plentiful table of the laird. When the last bullock was killed and devoured, it was the lady's custom to place on the table a dish, which, on being uncovered, was found to contain a pair of clean spurs; a hint to the riders, that they must shift for their next meal. Upon one occasion, when the village herd was driving out the cattle to pasture, the old laird heard him call loudly to drive out Harden's cow. "Harden's cow!" echoed the affronted chief, "Is it come to that pass!" by my faith they shall soon say Harden's kye (cows)." Accordingly, he sounded his bugle, mounted his horse, and rode out with his followers, and returned next day with "a bow of kye and a bason'd (brindled) bull." On his return with this gallant prey, he passed a very large hay-stack. It occurred to the provident laird, that this would be extremely convenient to fodder his new stock of cattle; but as no means of transporting it occurred, he was fain to take leave of it with this apostrophe, now proverbial: "By my soul, had ye but four feet, ye should not stand lang there." The laird spread his arms, and Mary Scott, celebrated in song by the title of the Flower of Yarrow. By their marriage contract, the father-in-law, Philip Scott, of Dryhope, was to find Harden in horse meat, and man's meat, at his Tower of Dryhope, for a year and a day; but five barons pledge themselves, that, at the expiry of that period, the son-in-law should remove, without attempting to continue in possession by force! A notary public signed for all the parties to the deed, none of whom could write their names. The original is still in the charter room of the present Mr. Scott, of Harden. By the Flower of Yarrow, the Laird of Harden had, with daughters, four sons, namely,

William (Sir), his heir.

Walter, who m. a daughter of John Hay, of Huyston, in Peebles. This gentleman was killed in a fray, at a fishing, by one of the Scotts of Gilmainscleugh; his brothers flew in arms; but the old laird secured them in the dungeon of his Tower, hurried to Edinburgh, stated the crime, and obtained a gift of the land of the offenders from the Crown. He returned to Harden with equal speed, released his sons, and shewed them the charter. "To horse, lads!" cried the savage warrior, "and let us take possession! the lands of Gilmainscleugh are well worth a dead son." The property, thus obtained, continued in the family till the beginning of the last century, when it was sold by John Scott, of Harden, to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch.

Hugh, from whom the Scotts of Gala.

Francis, ancestor of the Scotts now of Sinton.

Harden wedded, secondly, Margaret, daughter of Edgar, of Wedderlie, and relict of William Spotswood, of that Ilk, by whom he had a daughter, Margaret, m. first, to David Pringle, the younger, of Gallasheils, and, secondly, to Sir William Macdougall, of Mackerston. He was s. at his decease in 1629, by his eldest son, Sir William Scott, third Laird of Harden, who enjoyed, in a high degree, the favour of King James VI. This chief being made prisoner by Sir Gideon Murray, of Elibank, in a bloody border feud, was condemned to lose his head, or to marry Agnes, a daughter of his captor, known by the descriptive appellation of "Muckle-mouthed Meg." To the latter alternative he consented, but not before he had ascended the scaffold; he lived with the lady, however, long and happily, and had by her eight children, namely,

1. William (Sir), his successor.
2. Gideon (Sir), m. Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Hamilton, of Preston, and dying in 1672, left issue, 1. Walter, of Highheather, who wedded, in his fourteenth year, at Wemyss Castle, 5th February, 1659, Mary, Countess of Buccleuch, then eleven years of age, and one of the greatest heiresses in Scotland. This affair made considerable noise, and became matter of discussion before the provincial Synod of Fife, upon an accusation against the presbytery for granting a warrant for the marriage without proclamation. The presbytery was however absolved, because the order was grounded upon an act of the general assembly, allowing such marriages in case of necessity, or fear of rape. The countess died in two years afterwards, s.p. and Mr. Scott, who had been created (in consequence of the marriage) Earl of Tarras for life, by patent dated 4th September, 1660; m. secondly, 31st December, 1677, Helen, eldest daughter of Thomas Hepburn, of Humbie, by whom his lordship had issue,

BETHUNE, OF BALFOUR.

BETHUNE, GILBERT, esq. of Balfour, in the county of Fife, b. in 1765, succeeded his brother, in 1798. This gentleman, formerly in the army, and afterwards lieutenant-colonel of the Fifeshire Fencible Corps of Infantry, is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for Fifeshire.

Lineage.

Original from France, in some of the later ages; but the cause or period of their advent has not been yet determined with certainty.

Mr. Peter Victor Cayer, author of the Funeral Panegyric on James Bethune, Archbishop of Glasgow, nephew of the seventh laird of Balfour, who died in 1603, tells us that, amongst other considerable gentlemen of quality who came to Scotland in 1449, in the retinue of Mary, princess of Gueldres, then married to James the Second, was one Monsieur de Bethune, for whom the king conceived a singular partiality, and, to engage him to live in Scotland, gave him in marriage the daughter and sole heirress of the baron of Balfour, in Fife, which gave rise to the family of BethuneBalfour, and the Bethunes of Scotland.

This indefinite and uncircumstantiated account, Monsieur de Chesne, author of the Genealogy of the House of Bethune, in France, illustrates, by endeavouring to determine the arms and person of this Monsieur de Bethune, who had the good fortune to gain the favour of the king, and marry the heiress of Balfour. From a great many probabilities and conjectures, Monsieur de Chesne concludes that it was James (Jacotine) de Bethune, fourth son of John de Bethune, lord of Barc, &c. and of Isabella d'Estouteville, his wife, and younger brother of Robert de Bethune, lord of Barc, &c. whose lineal descendant is the present duke of Sully, in France.

This conjecture of Mr. Cayer, though sufficiently plausible, is not founded upon solid proof. None of our ancient historians mention any of the name of Bethune in the Princess of Gueldre's retinue; and as to Monsieur de Chesne's suppositions, though Jacotin de Bethune lived at the time mentioned, there is not the least evidence of his ever being in Scotland.

Enguerran de Monstrelet, a contemporary writer, who speaks at large of John de Bethune, and others of his kindred, makes no mention of the arrival of Jacotine de Bethune, nor of his ever leaving the Low Countries.

However well disposed Mr. Cayer and Monsieur de Chesne might be to do justice to the House of Bethune-Balfour, it is reasonable to conclude that neither of them were sufficiently acquainted with the subject they had chosen to treat upon. There can be no doubt that the family of Bethune, Beton, or Beaton, in which different ways the name is found to be spelt in various records, was of considerable note in Scotland many generations before it became united with that of Balfour, and the union with that family happened long before the Princess of Gueldres or Jacotine de Bethune were born. Bishop Leslie, and other Scotch historians, state that the Bethunes came from France into Scotland in the time of King Malcolm the Third, who began to reign 1057, and died 1093. We know not now upon what grounds these statements are founded; and at this distance of time, when most of the old family papers are lost or destroyed, we must be contented with whatever evidence can be now obtained of these early transactions. About the period above quoted, it was customary for gentlemen to give their writs and securities, in presence of some of their neighbours, whose names were accordingly inserted as witnesses, in all their grants and charters.

In the reign of William (who, succeeded to the crown in 1165, only seventy-five years after the death of Malcolm III.) Robertus de Bethune is witness to a charter of Rogerus de Quincey, Earl of Wigton, to Seyerus de Seton, of an annuity out of the Miln and Miln lands of Trantin.

David de Bethune, and Joannes de Betun, are witnesses to a royal charter by Alexander II. (who began his reign 1214, and d. 1249) to the abbey of Aberbrothick "de Terris, in territorio de Kermuir, in the county of Angus." It was in that county the family of the Bethunes was then most considerable. The chief of them was the Laird of Westhall, of whom the rest are descended. Again, in that neighbourhood we find in the beginning of the reign of Alexander III. about 1250, Dominus David de Betun and Robertus de Betun, are with several other honourable gentlemen, witnesses to a charter of Christiana de Valoidy, Lady Panmure, to John Lydell, of the lands of Balbain, and Panatline. But a stronger evidence of the high station of the family of Betune in those early times, is that both Mr. Pryne and Mr. Rymer mention Robert de Betune as swearing fealty to, and being present with Edward I. King of England, at the discussion of the pleas for the crown of Scotland, betwixt John Balliol and Robert Bruce, which is confirmed beyond all doubt, by some of the seals, yet preserved, that are appended to King Edward's decision, 1292, amongst which is sigillum Roberti de Betune de Scotia, which is a fesse, and on a chief a file of three pendants.

David de Betun, (Miles) and Alexander de Betun, were at the parliament of Cambus-kenneth, 1314; and, to the act of forfeiture passed in that parliament, is appended one of their seals, which is the same coat of arms that is upon the forementioned seal of Robert de Betune. Alexander, continuing loyal to the royal family of Bruce, was knighted for his valour, and is mentioned, amongst other great men, by Hector Bruce, as one of the chiefs who were killed in the great battle of Dumplin, 12th August, 1332.

Robert de Betune, Familiaris Regis, a younger son of Sir Alexander, m. Janet Balfour, daughter of Sir Michael de Balfour, of that ilk, in Fife, who had also a son John de Balfour, but the son dying without issue, Janet became heiress to the Balfour property.* By the heiress of Balfour, Robert left a son,

* There is a charter in the rolls by King Robert II. ratifying a deed and grant, "Quo Dun canus Comes de Fife, dedit et concessit Johanni Beaton, de totia et integris terris de Balfour et de Newton, et de Caliel in vicecomitatu de Fife jacetibus." "Apud Edinburgh, 18 Maii, Anno Regni Nostri septimo."
property of Balfour, in Fifé, on the death, issuesless, of his uncle, and was the first laird of Balfour, of the name of Bethune. The Bethune and Balfour properties being united in John Bethune, he quartered the arms of Balfour with those of Bethune. The arms of Bethune, which John bore, were argent, the fesse (common to all the Bethune family), betwixt three maselis, or; those of Balfour were argent a chevron, sable, charged with an otter's head, erased, of the first; which armorial blazoning, with the motto "Debonnaire," and two otters proper for supporters, the family of Bethune of Balfour have preserved ever since. JOHN BETUNE acquired from Duncan M'Duff, Earl of Fifé, the lands of Holkettle, the king's charter of confirmation of the Earl of Fifé's disposition is still extant; and some time after that earl's death, which happened in 15. John got, by a charter, from Isabella, Countess of Fifé, Earl Duncan's daughter, which is yet preserved, the lands of Sollybicks "pro bono et fideli servitio." He m. Katharine Stewart, daughter of the laird of Innermay, whose original sasine of life-rent, anno 1586, is still extant, and was s. by his son.

JOHN BETUNE, the second laird of Balfour, who m. the daughter of Stewart, of Rosaith. There is still existing a service relating to him. This John, it is understood, built the east part of the present house of Balfour. His son, ARCHIBALD BETUNE, became the third laird. His charter from Duke Murdoch, the governor of Scotland, dated 1421, is yet preserved, wherein he is designed "dilecto nostro consanguineo Archibaldo Betoun," for he was related to the royal family both by his mother Rosaith's daughter, and by his grandmother, daughter of Innermay. Archibald was succeeded by his son.

JOHN BETUNE, the fourth laird of Balfour, who m. Katharine Stirling, daughter to the laird of Keir, and got "in tocher" with her the eighth part of the lands of Kennoway, which was the beginning of the Bethune interest in that barony, an interest the family possesses at this day. The papers relating to John Betune are lost, but he is mentioned as witness in several writs of the neighbourhood that may be yet seen. He was s. by his son.

JOHN BETUNE, the fifth laird, who, marrying Margary Boswell, daughter to the laird of Balmuto, had by her six sons and five daughters,

1. JOHN, who succeeded him in the estate.
2. David, who was comptroller and the treasurer to King James IV. and the founder of the family of BETUNE OF CREICH, which for many generations made a good figure in Scotland. A daughter of this David was MARY BETUNE, one of the four Maries, (celebrated in an old song., published in the "Border Minstrelsy," and supposed to be sung by Mary Fleming at the day of her death), who were maids of honour to Queen Mary. She m. Lord Viscount Stormont.

iii. Robert, who was abbot of Coupar, in Angus, and afterwards abbot of Melrose and Glenlus.
iv. Archibald Laird of Pitlochie, and of Kapeldrau, whose line became long since extinct.
v. Andrew, prior of St. Andrews.
vi. James, who was abbot of Dunfermline, Kelwining, and Aberbrothick, then archbishop of Glasgow, and afterwards archbishop of St. Andrew's, and chancellor of Scotland. James was in high estimation as a wise and good man. He began the new college at St. Andrew's, and executed many useful public works, such as Bridges, &c. the benefit of which is felt at this day. James bore his patrimonial arms of Bethune-Balfour, which are yet to be seen on his public buildings. He died in 1539.

1. Janet, married to Dury of that Ilk.
2. Margaret, m. Andrew Sibbald, of Letholme.
iv. Elizabeth, m. Alexander Reid, provost of Inverness.

JOHN BETUNE, the eldest son, became the sixth Laird, and m. Elizabeth Moneypenny, daughter of the Laird of Kinkell, by whom he had six sons, and five daughters,

1. JOHN, who succeeded him.
2. James, who became Laird of Balfarne, and was the father of

JAMES BETUNE, who was archbishop of Glasgow, at the time of the reformation. He was also ambassador of Queen Mary, and after her death, of her son James VI. at the court of France. The archbishop was noted for his great honour and hospitality, and for his piety and worth. Amongst other pious and generous acts, he founded the Scotch College at Paris, and d. there, aged eighty-six, in the year 1603.*

III. DAVID, embraced the profession of the church, and had the management of his uncle, the Chancellor Betun's affairs, in the latter part of the life of that prelate. At the death of the chancellor, David succeeded his uncle in the abbacy of Aberbrothick, and also in the archbishopric of St. Andrew's. He was likewise bishop of Mirepoix, in France and eventually Cardinalis St. Stephani, in Monte Caelio. He was the Pope's Legatus natus, and Legatus a latere; and was twice appointed ambassador to the court of France. Cardinal Betun, or Beaton, as the name is frequently spelt, is represented in very different lights according to the feelings and views of different historians, and of the party they embraced. He possessed great property and influence; and exerted himself, perhaps with more zeal than discretion, in asserting and maintaining the religion by law established; and the authority of the see of Rome. He lived in most troubled times, and as at such periods, especially when religion has a share in the ferment, men are often excited to extraordinary and violent measures, a conspiracy was formed against the Cardinal, headed by one Norman, Lesley, who, having, with his followers, effected an entrance into the castle of St. Andrews, murdered the prelate in cold blood. This daring outrage was perpetrated in the year 1545 (29th May). The Cardinal had, it is asserted, many children. All that is now known of his male issue, is that Thomas Betune, formerly of Nether Tarvet, latterly of Kilkonquhar, in Fife, considers his family to be descended from Archibald, the Cardinal's second son. The Cardinal's eldest daughter was married, with great pomp and solemnity, to the Earl of Crawford. Another daughter, it is said, married Scott, Earl of Bucleuch; a third the Earl of Murray; and a fourth, Murray, of Blackbarronie, Pechtshire. The great Duke of Lauderdale used to say, that there was more of the Cardinal's blood running in the veins of the Scotch nobility, than of any single man since his time. The Cardinal's armorial blazon only differed from his paternal coat, in that he took for his crest a croisier, with the motto "Intentio." The ornaments of the Cardinal's Hall, at Rome, were removed from Italy to the family residence of Balfour, in Fife, where they now are to be seen, occupying the entire end of the dining room, and forming a curious specimen of the taste and workmanship of his period. His Eminence feued out the lands of Kelhinnie to his nephew, John Betune, of Balfour; and repaired the hall at Balfour, where his coat of arms is exhibited.

Failing in that measure, he escaped to the continent, and died at Rheims, in France, in 1719. At his decease, the property of Balfour would have descended to his niece, Rachel Campbell, daughter to his eldest sister, Katharine, but his cousin, David Bethune, son of Bethune of Bandon (who married James's second sister, Anne), having, through the pecuniary aid of his brother, Henry Bethune, of Bandon, induced Rachel, then married to John Patullo, to forego her claims, gained possession of the estate and became

MOSTYN, OF KIDDINGTON.

MOSTYN-BROWNE, GEORGE, esq. of Kiddington, in the county of Oxford, b. at Bath, 7th March, 1804, m. in July, 1828, Caroline, dau. of Colonel Arthur Vansittart, of Shottesbroke, in Berkshire, and granddaughter, maternally, of William, late Lord Aulcland, by whom he has a son,

GEORGE-CHARLES, b. 3rd April, 1830.

Mr. Mostyn succeeded his father on the 11th March, 1821.
This family derives, through a female descent, from the ancient and honourable house of Brown, Viscounts Montague, it represents a branch of that noble stock, and thus establishes them kindred to the most illustrious names in our history. At the coronation of King Richard II,

Sir Anthony Brown was amongst those persons of distinction who were made Knights of the Bath. He had two sons, Sir Robert and Sir Stephen: the younger filled the civic chair of London, in 1439, and, during his mayoralty, a scarcity of wheat occurring, he imported large cargoes of rye from Prussia, and distributed them gratuitously amongst the poorer classes of people. The elder son,

Sir Robert Brown, was father of Sir Thomas Brown, who was Treasurer of the Household to King Henry VI. He espoused Eleanor, daughter and co-heir of Sir Thomas Fitz Alan, and niece of John, thirteenth earl of Arundel, by whom he acquired the Castle of Beechworth, in Surrey, which his eldest son, Sir George Brown, inherited. Sir Thomas's third son,

Sir Anthony Brown, was appointed by King Henry VII, in the first year of that monarch's reign, standard-bearer for the whole realm of England, and elsewhere. He m. Lucy, one of the daughters, and co-heirs of Sir John Nevill, created Marquess of Montagu, and widow of Sir Thomas Fitz Williams, knt. of Aldwarke, in the county of York, and was s. at his decease, in 1506, by his only son,

Sir Anthony Brown, who made a distinguished figure in the reign of Henry VIII. He was a knight of the garter, standard-bearer to the king, and one of the executors of the will of his royal master. He m. first, Alice, daughter of Sir John Gage, of Firle, and, secondly, Elizabeth, second daughter of Gerald, earl of Kil- dare; by the latter he had no surviving issue. He d. in 1548, and was s. by his elder son,

Sir Anthony Brown, knt. who was sheriff of Surrey and Sussex, in the last year of King Edward VI. and was raised to the peerage by Queen Mary, as Viscount Montagu, on the 2nd of September, 1554. This elevation appears to be preparatory to his mission to the Pope, with Thomas Thurlby, bishop of Ely, by order of parliament, for the purpose of re-uniting the realm of England with the holy see. He was afterwards made a knight of the garter, but, upon the accession of Elizabeth, his name was left out of the privy council, and he voted, soon after, in his place in parliament, with the Earl of Shrewsbury, against abolishing the Pope's supremacy. Yet he contrived, Camden states, to get into favour with the queen; "Elizabeth, (says that learned author,) having experienced his loyalty, had great esteem for him, (though he was a stiff Romanist,) and paid him a visit some time before his death; for, she was sensible that his regard for that religion was owing to his cradle and education, and proceeded rather from principle than faction, as some people's did. His lordship's first wife, was the Lady Jane Ratcliff, daughter of Robert, Earl of Sussex; in his issue, by whom (she died 20th July, 1555), the Viscountcy of Montague vested, until the year 1797, when the dignity is supposed to have become extinct. (See Burke's Extinct Peerage.) He married, secondly, Margdalen, daughter of William, Lord Dacre, of Gillesland, and had, by that lady, (with three daughters,) two sons, Sir George Brown, of the county of Kent, and Sir Henry Browne, knight, who purchased, in the year 1613, the manors of Upper and Lower Kiddington, manor of Asterley, with the advowson of the church of Kiddington, in the county of Oxford, from the family of Babington. He m. first, Anne, daughter of Sir William Catesby, knt. of Ashley Legers, in Northamptonshire, and had two daughters, both nuns at Graveline. He wedded, secondly, Mary, daughter of Sir William Huguate, bart. of Saxton, in Yorkshire, and widow of Sir Marmaduke Grimston, knt. of Holderness, in the same county, by whom he left, at his decease in 1638, a son and heir.

Sir Peter Browne, of Kiddington, a distinguished royalist, who died at Oxford in the year 1643 of wounds received at the battle of Naseby. Sir Peter left issue, by Margaret, daughter of Sir Henry Knollys, knt. of Grove Place, in Hampshire, two sons, Henry and Francis; of those, the elder, Henry Browne, esq. of Kiddington, in consideration of the bravery and devotion so recently evinced by the family in the royal cause, was created a baronet by letters patent of King Charles II., dated at Brussels, 1st July, 1659. He m. Florence, third daughter and co-heir of Sir Charles Somerset, of Troy, in Monmouthshire (made a knight of the Bath at the creation of Prince Henry in 1610), sixth son of Edward, Earl of Worcester, ancestor of the Dukes of Beaufort, and was s. by his eldest son.

Sir Charles Browne, second baronet, of Kiddington. This gentleman married thrice. His first wife was Lady Barbara Lee, widow of Colonel Lee, and youngest daughter of Edward Lee, first Earl of Lichfield;* the second, Mrs. Holman, of Warkworth, near Banbury, daughter of Mr. Wells; a Hampshire gentleman; and the third, Frances Sheldon, sister of William Sheldon, of Beeley, in the county of Worcester, and widow of Henry Ferrmor, esq. of Tunsmore, in the county of Oxford. By the second and third ladies he had no issue, but by the first he left at his decease in 1751 an only daughter and heiress.

Barbara (Browne), of Kiddington, then the wife of Sir Edward Mostyn, bart. of Talacre, whom she married in 1748 (for the family of Mostyn, refer to Burke’s Peerage and Baronetage). By him she had two sons, Piers and Charles Mostyn. She wedded, secondly, Edward Gore, esq. of Barrow Court, in Somersetshire, and by that gentleman had several children, of whom, William Gore, the eldest son, on marrying the heiress of the Langton family in 1783, assumed the additional name of Langton (see vol. i. page 145). Lady Mostyn’s elder son by her first husband, succeeding his father in 1755, became Sir Piers Mostyn. The younger, in pursuance of the will of his grandfather, assumed the additional surname and arms of “Browne,” and inheriting on the death of her ladyship in 1801 the Browne property, became

Charles Browne-Mostyn, esq. of Kiddington. He m. first, in 1775, Elizabeth, fourth daughter of Henry Witham, esq. of Cliffe (see vol. ii. page 7), by whom he had a son, Edward, who d. young, and a daughter, Catherine, who d. in 1809. He wedded, secondly, Anne, daughter of — Tucker, esq. and had a son and heir, Charles Browne-Mostyn, esq. of Kiddington, b. at Aix, in Provence, in 1780, who married on the 17th May, 1801, Maria, only daughter of George Butler, esq. of Ballyragget, by whom (who d. 30th January, 1813,) he left at his decease on the 11th March, 1821, a son, the present George Browne-Mostyn, esq. of Kiddington.

Lineage.

This family traces its descent to the most remote period of British history, and through a line of ancestors, whose names are conspicuous in all the records of the ancient Britons.

Descended from the line of the ancient British princes was TON, who, at the close of his life, in the fifth century, became a member of the college of St. Illtyd, and was, first, bishop of Caer Loew (now called Gloucester), and afterwards bishop of London, from whence he was driven by the Pagan Saxons. The patrimony of this Teon is presumed to have been in that part of Britain now called Shropshire, as a range of hills in that county are to this day called, after him, by the Welsh, Carmeddan Tevon, that is the Stone Heaps of Tevon: to the English inhabitants they are known by the name of the Stiperstones Hills.

Twelfth in descent from Tevon was Gwaethvoed, whose father Gwilydd, commonly called Clodden, had married Morffydd, daughter and sole heir to Owain ap Teithwach, lord of Cardigan, by whom he acquired large possessions in South Wales.

Gwaethvoed was contemporary with Edgar, king of the Saxons, and was, in conformity with the vassalage of those periods, summoned, with other Welsh chiefians, by Edgar, to meet him at Chester, to row him, in his royal barge, on the river Dee, in proof of fealty. Gwaethvoed, in answer to this summons, said he could not row, and that he would not, if he could, except it were to save a person's life, whether king or vassal. Edgar sent a second and very imperious message, which Gwaethvoed did not seem at all to notice, until the messenger begged to know what reply he should deliver to the king; when Gwaethvoed, in the Welsh language, answered thus: "Say to him, Fear him who fears not death."—(Ofne na ofne angau.) This stern reply, discovering at once to Edgar the fearless unbending character he had to deal with, he prudently changed his autocratic decree into a desire of mutual friendship, and going to Gwaethvoed, gave the chief his hand in pledge of his sincerity. Gwaethvoed married Morffydd, one of the daughters and co-heirs of Ivor, king or lord of Gwent, by whom he was father of Cedrych, who is stated to have married Nest, daughter of Tangno ap Cadwal, lord of Aradaw, in North Wales.

Cedivor, son of Cedrych, was lord of Llancaeyn, in Morganwy (Glamorgan-shire), and married Myfanwy, daughter of Gwrgant, lord of Glamorgan. His son, Meurig ap Cedivor, married Gwladys, daughter of Arthen, king or lord of Gwent, by whom he was father of Ivor ap Meurig, known in Welsh history as Ivor Bach (that is Ivor Petit or Little Ivor), who, though a man of low stature, was of high mind and courage: he married Nest, daughter of Madoc ap Cra-duc, with whom he obtained the lordship of Saifhenydd (St. Kenrith's), in Glamorgan-shire, and in the time of Henry II, disputes took place between him and William Consul, earl of Gloucester (then lord of Glamorgan), because the earl's predecessor had built the castle of Cardiff upon some part of Ivor's lordship, besides dispossessing him of other lands: whereupon Ivor, having gathered his forces together, took the castle of Cardiff by escalade, killing 120 soldiers, and making the earl, his countess, and their son prisoners: these prisoners, with the spoils of the castle, he conveyed to the mountains of Saifhenydd, nor did he release them until he had compensation for the rents of which he had been deprived: it was also agreed further, that Griffith, eldest son of Ivor, should receive in marriage the earl's daughter, in consideration of which Ivor and Griffith should quit claim to the lands on which Cardiff Castle was erected. In one of the feuds so common in those days Ivor was eventually slain, and the valley which was the scene of his last action is still called Pont Caed Ivor.

Griffith ap Ivor, by the daughter of William Consul, had, with other issue, a son, Howel Melyn ap Griffith, who m. Sarah, daughter of Sir Mayo le Soer, knt. lord of St. Fagan's, and was father of Madoc ap Howel Melyn, of Merthyr, who m. Ewerydd, daughter and co-heir of Lewis ap Rys ap Rossier, (descended from Myrnych), and had a son,

Llewelyn ap Madoc, of Merthyr, father, by Joan his wife, daughter of Rys ap Grono, lord of Glym Nedd, of

HUME, OF HUMEWOOD.

HUME, WILLIAM-WENTWORTH-FITZWILLIAM, esq. of Humewood, in the county of Wicklow, b. 28th October, 1805; m. 8th June, 1829, Margaret-Bruce, eldest daughter of Robert Chaloner, esq. of Gisboro', in Yorkshire, by the Hon. Frances-Laura Dundas, his wife, daughter of the late Lord Dundas, and has issue, William-Howard, b. 16th February, 1834.

Charlotte-Anna.

Mr. Hume, who is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for the county of Wicklow, succeeded his father in November, 1815.
Hume, of Humewood.

Sir Thomas Hume, dominus de codem, the seventh generation of that ancient family in a direct male line, flourished in the reign of King Robert II. and III. He m. Nichola Pepdie, heiress of Dunglass, and had two sons, Alexander (Sir), his successor, ancestor to the Earls of Home, and Sir David Hume, from whom descended Alexander Hume, third Baron of Polworth. This nobleman m. first, Margaret, daughter of Robert, second Lord Crichton, of Sanquhar, ancestor of the Earl of Dumfries, and got a charter under the great seal: "Alexandro Hume de Polworth et Margarettae Crichton ejus sponsae terrarum de Bregamshieils, etc." dated 26th July, 1511: by her he had three sons, viz.

1. Patrick, his heir.

The third son, Gavin Hume, afterwards styled "Captain of Tantallon," espoused the cause of Queen Mary, and served as lieutenant under James, Earl of Arran, Duke of Chatelherault. Subsequently, an officer in the Gens d'Armes, he took part in the famous battle of St. Quintins in the year 1557, and his military skill and bravery on that occasion are recorded by many French and other historians: Thoumen, (vol. i. lib. xix. p. 638), giving an account of this engagement, says that "the second breach was given to be defended by Hume, the lieutenant of the Earl of Arran:" and that Colgni, in his Commentaries, attributes to him the chief praise of the military skill displayed on the occasion; in page 659 of the same volume, he mentions that Hume with several other Scotch were taken prisoners. Ide Serres also, in his History of France, Lond. 1611, p. 716, makes mention of the capture of Hume at St. Quintins. Gavin m. a French lady, and had a son and successor, Andrew Hume, who returned to Scotland and purchased the estate of the Rhodes, near to the lands of his cousin, the first Sir John Hume, of North Berwick. He m. Mosca Seaton, dau. of Seaton, of Barnes, and niece to the Earl of Winton, by whom he had, with a daughter, supposed to have wedded George Hume, of Pinkerton, four sons, viz.

1. Robert, his heir.
2. Thomas, who became the confidential favourite of Sir John Preston, Earl of Desmond, and through the influence of that nobleman's daughter, Elizabeth, Duchess of Ormonde, obtained the hand of Miss French, a great heiress, her grace's ward, in marriage. In consequence of which he settled in Ireland, and after the Restoration acquired large tracts of land in the county of Tipperary, under grant from the Crown, dated in February, 1665. In the same year he was presented with the freedom of the city of Dublin in a silver box, and subsequently had the honour of knighthood from the Duke of Ormond, then lord lieutenant of Ireland. Sir Thomas died at an advanced age, 4th July, 1688, as appears from a registry of his death in the office of Arms, Dublin. He had no issue, and some time before his demise, he induced his nephew, Thomas, the eldest son of his elder brother Robert to come from Scotland, under the promise of making him his sole heir. Dying, however, intestate, a considerable portion of his property devolved upon his widow, Lady Anne Hume, who obtained administration, as appears from an entry in the Prerogative Office in Dublin, dated in August, 1688. Her ladyship afterwards compromised with Thomas, the nephew, for a sum of money, and married for her second husband Captain George Mathews, half-brother to the old Duke of Ormond, whereby the lands in Tipperary merged in the Landaff estate. Lady Anne survived Captain Mathews, and died in the beginning of March, 1701. By her last will, which was duly registered and proved the 13th of that month, she bequeathed, after some legacies, all the estate, arrears of rent, and of dower, goods and chattels, to Sir Henry Wemyss and Thomas Hume, by the description of Thomas Hume, nephew of her first husband, and appointed them her executors.

By his first wife, Magdalene, daughter and heiress of Thomas Berkeley, of the city of Worcester, John Watts had a son and heir,

Thomas Watts, esq. of Beby, who was aged twenty-four, the 27th Henry VIII. A. D. 1535. In the 2nd year of Elizabeth, A. D. 1560, upon the final suppression of the religious houses in England, this Thomas had a grant of the lands and lordship of Blakesley, in the county of Northampton, together with the rectory and advowson of the vicarage, all which had been part and parcel of the possessions of the order of knights-hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, of which possessions he levied a fine in the 9th year of the same reign. This gentleman was twice married. By his first wife, the daughter of — Crouch, he had a son and heir, William. His second wife was Catharine, daughter of — Sulyard, of the county of Essex. Mr. Watts died the 35th of Elizabeth, A. D. 1593, aged eighty-two, and was succeeded by his son, William Watts, esq. of Blakesley. This gentleman added to his patrimonial property of Blakesley the neighbouring lordship, called Zouch's manor, which he purchased of Nicholas Baynton, to whom it had been sold by the Lord de la Zouch. He also acquired by purchase part of the hamlet of "Wodende," within the lordship of Blakesley. Mr. Watts departed this life the 16th of June, A. D. 1614, and was buried in the parish church of Blakesley, where there was a monument with the following quaint epitaph, in Roman capitals:

"An Epitaph upon the death of that worthy Gentleman, Mr. W. Watts, of Bluxley, who dyed An. Dom. MDCXIV. XVI. of June.

"It is no marble monument must grace His worthy corps, who lies within this place; The many graces which did him adorn In youth, in years, these weaker helps doe scarce. Upright he was, and zealous in his life; Kind to his children, loving to his wife."

This gentleman espoused Mary, daughter of the famous Lord Chief Justice Sir

* By this match Mr. Watts' posterity are founder's kin to All Souls' College, Oxford, thus: William Chicheley, brother to Archbishop Chicheley, the founder, by his wife Beatrix, daughter of John Barret, had Sir John Chicheley, kt. who espousing Margaret, daughter of William Knollys, had by her a daughter, Agnes Chicheley, the wife of John Tattershall, esq. of Eltham, in the county of Kent, and had issue Margery Tattershall, co-heir to her father, who conveyed the estate of Eltham to her husband, John Roper, esq. of Sawcliff, in the same county [ancestor of the Lords Teynham]. The issue of this marriage, John Roper, esq. of Eltham, attorney-general to Henry VIII. wedded Jane, daughter and co-heir to Sir John Fineaux, chief justice of the King's Bench, and had, inter alia, a daughter, Helen, wife of Sir Edward Montagu, of Boughton, kt. father by her of Mary Montagu, the wife of William Watts, esq. of Blakesley, as in the text.
Edward Montagu, *knt. of Boughton, in the county of Northampton, [ancestor of the dukes of Montagu and Manchester, the earls of Halifax, Sandwich, &c.]; by which lady he had issue,

1. Edward, his heir.
2. Montagu, barrister-at-law, of Lincoln’s Inn, who espoused Dorothy, daughter of Sir George Paule, of Lambeth, in Surrey, and had issue.

The elder son and heir,

Edward Watts, esq. of Blakesley, wedged Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Ralph Coningsby, knt. of North-Mynnns, in the county of Hertford. This gentleman was summoned by the heralds in their Visitation of the county of Northampton, A.D. 1615, and attended accordingly to certify his descent. By his lady above-mentioned he had

1. William.
2. Edward, who was engaged in the Royalist Army during the civil war, left by his wife, Elizabeth Rudd, an only daughter, Mary, who conveyed the estate and manor of Blakesley to her husband, the Rev. John Pettyfer. Their only surviving child, Marin—Penelope-Watts Pettyfer, espoused William Wight, esq. of Little Hford, in the county of Essex, by whom she had William, Henry, and Elizabeth, (the wife of Sir James Harrington, of Burton or Burford), all of whom died s. p. William Wight, esq. the last possessor of Blakesley, dying without issue in 1739, bequeathed all his property, by will, to his nearest relatives, with remainder to a perfect stranger, with whom he was not even personally acquainted, merely because he bore the same name and arms; into whose possession accordingly Blakesley, and the other property of the said William Wight, passed about the close of the last century.

3. Coningsby, of whom presently.
4. Amphilas.
5. Ralph.
6. Mary.
7. Elizabeth.

The third son,

Coningsby Watts, early embarked in the royal cause, and suffered in consequence both in person and property. By his wife, Barbara, daughter and eventually sole heir of George Danet, esq. of the city of London, he had

1. Montagu, who died young.
2. John, from whom descended a family of the name of Watts, in the county of Leicester, which became extinct at the close of the last century.
3. George, of whom hereafter.
4. Barbara, wife of George Bentley, esq. of Monmouth.

The third but second surviving son,

George Watts, a Turkey merchant in the city of Bristol, having a strong predilection for antiquarian researches, accumulated at great cost and labour many documents concerning his own family. He made himself remarkable by his zeal for a Protestant succession, which brought him into difficulty during the Duke of Monmouth’s rebellion. He was the first of his family who bore his coat of arms quartered as at present borne. By his first wife, Mary, daughter of George Dennis, esq. of Bideford, he had a daughter, Mary, who m. Andrew Nethorpe, esq. By his second wife, Miss Anne Harrington, he had

1. Edward, who died an infant.
2. Charles.
3. Montagu, who inherited the greater part of his father’s fortune, which he lost by embarking in that ruinous scheme, the South Sea Bubble. He m. Miss Jane Seymour, and left issue.
5. Florence, died young.
6. Anne, wife of Captain Frazer.

The eldest son,

Charles Watts, who was an officer in the army, and died abroad in 1745, offended his father and was disinherited. He married Katherine, * daughter of Robert Scrope, esq. (by his wife Katherine Middleton), and had

5. Katherine, d. young.

The youngest son,

The Rev. William Watts, A. M. of Queen’s College, Oxford, was presented to the rectory of Moresby, in the county of

* This lady had two brothers, who emigrated to America in the beginning of the last century; since which nothing is known of them; so it is presumed that in her posterity she was their heir.

* Sir Edward Montagu was lineally descended from the royal blood of Plantagenet; his immediate ancestor, Sir John Montagu, having married Margaret de Mowthermer, grand-daughter of Ralph de Mowthermer, Earl of Gloucester, by Jean Plantagenet, called D’Acre, daughter of King Edward I. of England.
WATTS, OF HAWKESDALE HALL.

Cumberland, by Sir James Lowther, bart. A.D. 1754. This gentleman, inheriting from his grandfather a taste for antiquities, made many valuable collections, principally concerning the county of Cumberland, and mainly assisted Joseph Nicolson, esq. of Hawkesdale Hall, in that county, [whose niece he married], in his arduous undertaking of compiling the History of his native county; of which Mr. Watts was for many years an active magistrate. He married Mary, daughter of John Nicolson,* esq. and sister [and in her issue] sole heir of John Nicolson, esq. of Hawkesdale Hall, in Cumberland, and great niece of Dr. William Nicolson,† Bishop of Carlisle, afterwards of Londonderry, and eventually Archbishop of Cashel; by which lady he left issue a daughter, Mary, wife of the Rev. William Brisco, of Langrigg, in the county of Cumberland, [descended from a younger branch of the house of Crofton], whose widow she died, without issue, 1826, and a son,

The Rev. Clement Watts, M.A. of Queen's College, Oxford, who was presented by that college to the vicarage of Holm Cultram, in the county of Cumberland. He was in the commission of the peace for the county, and wedded Mary, daughter of William Benn, esq. of More Row, and only sister of Sir John-Benn Walsh, bart. of Ormthwaite Hall, in the same county, by whom [who survived him till 1818] he had

1. John-Nicolson, his heir.
2. William, who died young.
3. Thomas, who was in the Madras civil service, m. Miss Catherine Garland, and died in 1812, without issue.
4. Mary, wife of John Brocklebank,

Although the family of Watts, of Hawkesdale, descend from the royal house of Plantagenet through other matches, yet the following line from King Edward III. is selected as being almost entirely through families of, or connected with the county of Cumberland.

King Edward III by his wife Philippa, of Hainault, had Lionel, of Antwerp, Duke of Clarence, who by his wife Elizabeth, daughter and heir to John de Bruges, Earl of Ulster, left an only daughter, Philippa, wife to Edmond Mortimer, Earl of March. Their daughter, Elizabeth, espoused the famous Harry Hotspur, Lord Percy. Of this illustrious couple was born a daughter, Elizabeth Percy, the wife of John, Lord Clifford, Knight of the Garter, by whom she was mother to Thomas, Lord Clifford, who by his wife Joan, daughter of Thomas, Lord Dacre, of the North, K.C. G. had issue, 3: 1. a daughter, Joan de Clifford, wife of Sir Richard Musgrave, of Musgrave and Eden Hall. A daughter of this marriage espoused John Martindal, esq. of Newton, whose grand-daughter conveyed that property in marriage to William Musgrave, esq. of Hayton Castle, the representative of another branch of the famous and knightly family of Musgrave. They had issue, Anne Musgrave, the wife of John Brisco, esq. of Crofton, whose son, William Brisco, esq. by his wife Jane, daughter of William Orpheur, of Plumland, had issue John Brisco, of Crofton, who by Mary, daughter of Sir Thomas Braithwaite, of Barneshead, was father of Mary Brisco, the wife of the Rev. Joseph Nicolson, rector of Plumland and Torpenhaw, father by her of William Nicolson, Bishop of Carlisle, and John Nicolson, esq. of Hawkesdale, whose granddaughter, Mary Nicolson, [viz. daughter of John, his son, and niece of Joseph, of Hawkesdale, historian of the county], married, as in the text, the Rev. William Watts.

† The family of Nicolson were of note in the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland for the best part of three centuries, and matched with some of the most distinguished houses of those and the neighbouring counties, as with the Currwens, of Poulton, county of Lancaster; the Gilpins, of Kentmere; the Senhouses, of Netherhall; the Scotts of the Park-broom; the Featherstonebaughs, of Kirkoswald; the Kynarsleys, of Kendal, [by an heiress of a younger son of the Salkelds, of Whitehall]; the Briscos, of Crofton, &c. &c. They were members of the corporation of Carlisle, and served the office of mayor of that ancient city. The Hawkesdale branch of the family, by the death of the Rev. Clement Nicolson, in 1627, became totally extinct in the male line.

Of one branch, descended from Robert, brother to Joseph Nicolson, of Park-broom, (the grandfather of the Bishop Nicolson), the last representative was the memorable Margery Jackson, so famous in Cumbrian song, the recollection of whose eccentricities yet survives among the aged inhabitants of the city of Carlisle.

Dr. Nicholson, Archbishop of Cashel, who for his transcendent learning, was called the "Star of the North," was born in 1655; and at the age of fifteen, was admitted of Queen's College, Oxford. In 1679, he was elected Fellow of Queen's College, having first completed his degree of M.A. In 1681, he was collated to a prebendal stall in the cathedral church of Carlisle, and also into the vicarage of Torpenhaw, and in the year following to the archdeaconry of Carlisle. In 1696-97 and 99, he published his English Historical Library, and in 1705, his Leges Marchiarum, or Border Laws. In 1702, he was elected Bishop of Carlisle, and in 1715, appointed by the King Lord Almoner. In 1718, he was translated to the see of London-derry; and, in 1726, he was promoted to the archbishoprick of Cashel, but died suddenly a few days after, and was buried in the cathedral church of Londonderry. He left to the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle many folio vols. of MSS. consisting of copies and extracts from various books, MSS. registers, records, and charters, relating to the diocese of Carlisle. By his wife, Elizabeth, daughter of John Archer, of Oxenhombe, in the county of Westmoreland, he had a numerous family.— Vide Nicolson's Cumberland, vol. ii.

O'DONOVAN, OF THE COUNTY OF CORK.

O'DONOVAN, The Rev. Morgan, chieftain of the ancient Irish Sept of O'Donovan, rector of Dundurrow, in the diocese of Cork, b. April, 1769; succeeded as chief on the death of his kinsman, Lieutenant-general Richard O'Donovan, of the 6th Dragoons, of Banlaghan, in the county of Cork, in November, 1829; m. November, 1795, Alicia, eldest daughter of William Jones, esq. of the city of Cork, by Elinor Winthrop his wife, and has issue, Morgan-William, b. August, 1796, barrister-at-law.

Henry-Winthrop, b. December, 1811, A. B. Melian.
Eleanor.
This family and sept is one of the most ancient among the aboriginal Irish, and in old times possessed an extensive territory called the Cantred of Hy Donobhan, situated between the present towns of Bantry, Dunmanway, and Skibbereen, in the south west of the county of Cork, of portions of which the estates of the late and present chieftains consist. Keatinge traces its descent from the oldest branches of his Hibernian genealogy, and places their escutcheon as thirteenth in his armorial table. Mr. Gough, in his edition of Camden’s Britannia, following the account given by Smith, the historian of the county of Cork, says, “The Irish antiquarians allow but eight families of royal extraction in Munster, of which they place four in Carbery, which comprehended all the south-west part of this county (Cork), and these were, beside the Mac Cartrys, O’Mahony, or Mahown, O’Donovan, and O’Driscoll. The family of O’Donovan is allowed to be of royal extraction. Their territory in this county went formerly by the name of Clancahill, a part of West Carbery, comprehending the large and mountainous parish of Dromaleague and other tracts, in which parish they had their chief residence at Castle Donovan. This family came hither from a barony in the county of Limerick called Cashma, where they built the famous castle of Crom, which afterwards fell to the Kildare family, and from which the motto ‘Crom-a-booo’, still used by that noble house, was taken. The representative of this ancient family has his seat at Banlaghan, in West Carbery.” Besides Castle Donovan, he says, the castles of Banduff and of Rahine also belonged to them.

The male line of the family branch of Banlaghan expired on the death of Lieutenant-general Richard O’Donovan in 1829.

Donell or Danill, chieftain of the sept, who died about the year 1618, left six sons and one daughter, viz.

1. Donell, from whom descended Daniel O’Donovan, of Banlaghan, who m. first, Miss Kearny, daughter of Francis Kearny, esq. of Garrettstown, in the county of Cork, but by her had no issue; and, secondly, Jane, daughter of Richard Becher, esq. of Hollybrook, by whom he had Richard, of Banlaghan, a lieutenant-general in the army, who m. Miss Powell, but had no issue. He died in 1829.
   John, killed in 1796, in the Maroon war in Jamaica.

Jane, died in 1832.
   Helen, m. to John, son of Sir Robert Warren, bart.
   Daniel O’Donovan, by his last will, dated in 1770, devised a remainder in his estates; on failure of the male issue of his two sons, Richard and John, “to his kinsman, Morgan Donovan, esq. of the city of Cork,” father of the present chief of the family. He did so in fulfilment of a mutual agreement between him and this Morgan’s father, that on the failure of male issue of either branch, the survivor should inherit in order to unite the family estates. The branch of Banlaghan has been allied by marriage with the houses of Tonson, Lords Riversdale, Kearney, Hungerford, Becher, and many other eminent ones in the county of Cork. It also for nearly two centuries frequently represented the borough of Baltimore in the Irish parliament.

This gentleman was very remarkable for his strength and courage, and it is related of him that, being at Antwerp, and seeing a prize fight, wherein the combatants did not acquit themselves to the satisfaction of the spectators, he was so offended thereat, that he got upon the stage, and challenging them, encountered no less than five, one after another, whom he entirely disabled, whereby he gained very great applause; and, being of a comely personage and stature, a lady of quality and fortune, who was present at the fight, fell so much in love with him, that she sent him word, “She was at his service, if he were disposed to marry,” and he, embracing the offer, settled at Antwerp, served the king of Spain in his armies, and his son was afterwards a colonel in the emperor’s service, and governor of Liere in Brabant, where he is buried in the chapel of Ter Cluyse, under a monument, with the following inscription: “Cyst gisit Messire Thomas Hartopp, d’ancienne et noble fortune d’Engleterre, en son vivant colonel d’un regiment d’infanterie au service de S. HARWOOD, OF HAGBOURN AND STREATLEY.

HARWOOD, The Reverend Thomas, D.D., F.S.A., of Lichfield, b. 18th May, 1767; educated at Eton and at University College, Oxford; m. 7th January, 1793, at Aston, county of Warwick, Maria, daughter of Charles Woodward, esq. and has had by her, who d. 21st October, 1829, four sons and six daughters, viz.

1. Thomas. b. 6th January, 1796. m. 19th October, 1820, Mary-Anne, daughter of Thomas Hardy, esq. and has issue, Thomas, and three other children.
The name of Harwood is of Saxon origin, and was anciently spelt Herward, Horwode, and Whorwood. According to Domesday, Hereward had lands in the counties of Lincoln and Warwick previous to the conquest. He was son of Leofric, Earl of Mercia, and Lord of Brune, in Lincolnshire, and the marshes adjoining, and was chosen by the prelates and nobility, who retired to the Isle of Ely after the Conqueror's invasion, to be the general of their forces. In the Saxon period he was called "The Mirror of Knighthood," and Ingulphus dwells minutely on the incidents of his life. Hereward was the last Earl of Mercia, who resided at Bourne, and was buried in the abbey there. Hume, in speaking of the Conqueror's subjugation of the Isle of Ely, says, "Hereward alone forced his way, sword in hand through the enemy, and still continued his hostilities by sea against the Normans, till at last William, charmed with his bravery, received him into favour, and restored him to his estate." And Camden states that "Hordland, in Lincolnshire, was granted by William I. to Joy Talbois, of Anjou, whose insolence Herward, a hopeful and spirited Englishman, son of Leofric, lord of Brune or Bourn, not being able to brook, as his own and his family's safety was now concerned, having obtained knighthood from Brens, abbot of Peterborough, whose avarice to the Normans had already shewn itself, made war against him, and after giving him several overthrows, at last took him prisoner, and allowed him to ransom himself, on condition that he himself should be restored to the king's favour, and, in his allegiance and protection: such was the effect of merit even in an enemy."

Camen also states, under the title "Cambridgeshire," A.D. 1071, "many English, unable to bear the Conqueror's oppressions, came hither, under the conduct of the Earl Edwin, of Chester, Morchar, and Siward, and of Esgider, bishop of Durham, ravaged the adjacent country under the command of Hereward, an English nobleman, and built here in the marshes a woode castle, called Hereward's Castle in Matthew Paris's time. William having this, besieged the island, made roads of great length in the marshes, built many bridges over the bogs, and erected a castle at a place called Wipberum, on which all but Hereward, and his followers, submitted."

In the time of Edward I. in the "Noumina Nobilium Equitum, &c., de Northfolk." Sir Robert Herward is mentioned as bearing the following arms, "d'azur a une fesse gueonne de goules et de vert iij hewtes d'argent." This family continued in the county of Lincoln and in the immediate vicinity of Bourne, for many centuries. One of the last of this line was George Harwood, a merchant, of London, who entered his pedigree in the visitation for Cornhill, in 1634. He was son of William Harwood, of Thurlby, near Bourn, in the county of Lincoln, and was brother of Sir Edward Harwood, knight, of whom Fuller says, "his birth was gentle, and from a root fit to engraft his future education and excellency." Sir Edward was one of the four standing colonels in the low countries in the long war, in support of the King of Bohem-nia, and was killed at the siege of Mástricht, in 1632. In the visitation of London, in 1634, this George Harwood is recorded as bearing the same arms as were borne by the above Sir Robert Herward, and in the "Nomina nobilium, equitumque &c." temp. Edward I., Sir Robert Herward de Cantebregesir is mentioned as bearing "Che' ker de or et d'azure a une bende, de goules iij Egles d'Argent." * Families, of this line, were settled in the counties of Stafford and Oxford, spelling their names Horewode, Whorwood, and Harwood, and bore for their arms "arg. a chevron between three stags' heads caboshed sa." and were of Compton, Sandwell, and Stourton castle, in the former county, and of Holton, in the latter.

Of the Staffordshire family was Sir William Whorwood, knight, Attorney-general to King Henry VIII., whose only daughter and co-heiress by his first wife (a daughter of Edward Grey, esq. of Envile) married Ambrose Dudley, Earl of Warwick, and whose only daughter and co-heiress by his second wife (Margaret, daughter of Lord Chief Baron Brooke) married the eldest son of Sir Robert Throgmorton, knight. The name of Whorwood is extinct in Staffordshire, and the Sandwell estate is now the property and residence of the Earl of Dartmouth, and Stourton Castle, passed by purchase, to the Foleys.—In the 16th of Elizabeth, William Thomas Harwood, arm, in the 17th of Elizabeth, William Harwood arm. and in the 16th of James I., Thomas Horwood arm. were sheriffs of Staffordshire.

Willis de Horwode, another descendant of the Herwards, of Lincolnshire, held the Manors of Steevenby, Preston Candover, Fremanet, and Polhamburger, in the county of Hants, and of Bradfield, in the neighbouring county of Berks, in the time of King Edward III., and the family of Horwode and Harwood continued in possession of these manors for many generations.

There is a family of Harwood (descended from these lHorwodes) living in Hampshire, and at this time possessed of estates in the neighbourhood of Preston and Fremanet. And a branch of the Hampshire Herwards (descended from Robertus Herward, of the counties of Lincoln and Cambridge who, temp. Edward I., bore for their arms 'chi' ker d'or et d'azure une bende de gules iij egles d'argent,"') resided at Nicholas-Pres, near Whitchurch, county of Salop, temp. Henry VI., and continued there for six generations, when they returned to Odiam, county of Hants, and they bore, during the whole of the time they were in Shropshire, the ancient coat of Sir Robert Herward, of Cambbridgesh.]"

But the branch of this family, of which we shall have chiefly to treat, settled themselves at a very early period in the county of Berks, bearing the Staffordshire coat, but distinguished by a different colour, the Berkshire branch having the bearings gules instead of sable.] They were of Hagbourne, in that shire, and were settled there

Arms—Chequy or and az. on a bend gu. three eagles displayed.

† The exact period when the Staffordshire and Berkshire Harwoods first used stags' heads for their armorial bearings, has not been ascertained. Previous to Charles I. and II. they used indiscriminately the bearings of eagles' and stags' heads; but since that period they have borne the stags' four or five hundred years from the time of King Edward III, if not from an earlier period. About 1314, John Hereward was a juror on an Inquisition touching some land at Chesterton, (juxta Goring), which was decided in favour of the abbey of Oseney.* In 1332, Robert Herward was archdeacon of Taunton, and prebendary of Lincoln; and in 1330, Robert of Ely, and Thomas Harwoode or Whorwode, were sheriffs of London.

William Hereward was Abbot of Cirencester, anno 1346, and Robertus Her-ward gave by grant, dated in the 19th of King Edward III., (1345), certain lands in East Hackbourne, county of Berks, to the Abbey of Cirencester, to which Abbey the church and rectorial tithes of Hackbourne belonged.† From him descended Johhannes Horwode, (whose name was returned amongst the gentry of Berkshire by the commissioners for the preservation of the peace, for the year 1453, 12th Henry VI.)

John Harwood, the elder, of East Hag-of Cambridgeshire, temp. Edward I., namely,

457, the arms borne by “Samuel Harware or Harward of Stoke and Coventry” were “a bend

* In the reign of Edward II. (about 1314) an Inquisition was directed by the escheator of Oxfordshire to inquire how the abbey of Osney had appropriated to its house two virgates of land in Chesterton, nigh adjoining Osney, by the gift of Bardulf de Chesterton, without the king’s license, and contrary to the statute of 7th Edward I. and amongst the jury of the neighbouring inhabitants were John Hereward and Richard Alleyn, who, with the other jurors, made a return under their oaths and seals, that William Abbot, of Osney, predecessor of the then Abbot, in the 4th year of Edward I. had purchased to himself and his successors, two virgates of land in Chesterton, one

* The family of Allen is of great antiquity in Berks. It appears from the Roll of Inquisition, post mortem or escheats, that there was in that county a Ric’us Alein and a Rob’tus Alein in the 9th and 12th Henry IV., and a Wautus Aleyen in 9th Edward II. Their arms are “arg. two bars az., surmounted by an anchor in pale, proper.”

† Griffithus Higgs, S. T. P., of this family, made Dean of Lichfield in 1636, was born at South Stoke, near Streteley, educated at Reading school and St. John’s College, Oxford; became Fellow of Merton College and Proctor of that University in 1662. In 1667 he went to the Hague as Chaplain to the Queen of Bohemia. On his return to England he obtained the rich rectory of Cliff, near Dover, he was also chanter of St. David’s, and chaplain to the King. He was at great expense in adorning Lichfield cathedral, and was a man of learning and a benefactor to his college. He suffered much in the rebellion, and retired to the place of his nativity, where he died December 13th, 1659, aged seventy, and was buried in the chancel of that church, in which there is a long Latin inscription to his memory, written by himself. He bequeathed his library to Merton College, in Oxford, but his books having been plundered in the time of the rebellion and lodged in the library at Stafford, the College could never recover them. ‡ Griffithus Higgs, S. T. P., of this family, made Dean of Lichfield in 1636, was born at South Stoke, near Streteley, educated at Reading school and St. John’s College, Oxford; became Fellow of Merton College and Proctor of that University in 1662. In 1667 he went to the Hague as Chaplain to the Queen of Bohemia. On his return to England he obtained the rich rectory of Cliff, near Dover, he was also chanter of St. David’s, and chaplain to the King. He was at great expense in adorning Lichfield cathedral, and was a man of learning and a benefactor to his college. He suffered much in the rebellion, and retired to the place of his nativity, where he died December 13th, 1659, aged seventy, and was buried in the chancel of that church, in which there is a long Latin inscription to his memory, written by himself. He bequeathed his library to Merton College, in Oxford, but his books having been plundered in the time of the rebellion and lodged in the library at Stafford, the College could never recover them. * The Right Hon. Richard Hill was an eminent statesman in the reign of King William and the two subsequent reigns, and, refusing the highest honours for himself, received from George I., a baronetcy for Rowland Hill, his nephew and heir at law, with remainder to Samuel Barbour Hill, of Shenstone, who married the Lady Elizabeth, sister of Philip, the celebrated Earl of Chesterfield, but he died without issue, leaving a sister and heiress, who married Egerton of Tatton. Upon his death, however, the Shenstone and other entailed estates devolved to Noel Hill. The next limitations in remainder of the baronetcy were to his nephews Thomas Harwood and Rowland Harwood.

† This Thomas Harwood (afterwards Hill) was offered an Irish peerage during the Newcastle Administration, which he declined from the most honourable motives.

His first wife was Anne, daughter of Richard Powys, esq. and aunt of Lady Sydney, Lady Dynver, and Lady Courtown, and great aunt of Lady Chatham, and the late Duchess of Buccleugh. By that wife, besides other children who died young, he had two daughters, Margaret, wife of Bennett Sherard, Earl of Harborough (by whom he had Lord Sherard and another child, who died in their infancy), and Anne, who married Robert Burton, esq. of Longner, county of Salop, whose numerous descendants still survive; and from this family are descended the Burton Conynghams of Ireland, now represented by the Marquis Conyngham, the lord chamberlain. Thomas Harwood Hill, married secondly, Susanna Maria, eldest daughter and co-heir with her sister Lucy, Countess of Harborough, of the Hon. William Noel, Justice of the Common Pleas, and uncle of the first Viscount Wentworth, grandson of Lord Lovelace, and the Earl of Cleveland, by whom he had, besides Samuel and Susan who died young, Noel Hill and Maria, married, firstly, Sir Bryan Dighton Delvies, bart., and, secondly, to Henry Errington, esq. half brother of the Earl of Sefton.

Thomas Harwood Hill was in many parliaments and to a late period in life M. P. for Shrewsbury, which seat he resigned in favour of his son Noel, afterwards member for the county of Salop. Noel Hill, m. Anne, daughter of Henry Vernon (by the Lady Henrietta Wentworth, daughter of Thomas, Earl of Strafford, and co-heir with her sisters Lady Anne Conolly and Lady Lucy Howard, to William, Earl of Strafford), whose eldest daughter, the Lady Henrietta, (sister of this Anne), was late Countess of Grosvenor, mother of the Marquis of Westminster.

The patent of peerage for Noel Hill was to have been made out for one of the above titles of Cleveland or Lovelace; the former was abandoned out of compliment to Viscount Wentworth, then living, and the second was actually inserted in the patent, but afterwards suddenly changed to Berwick.

† John Kynaston (their grandson) was also M. P. for Shropshire, and afterwards took the name of Powell. They both claimed the ancient barony of Powys or Grey, or Clarnton de Powis. The grandson was created a baronet with remainder to his brother, the present Sir Edward Kynaston.

§ His mother was a Wrottesley, of Wrottesley. The heiress of Prince married an Astley, whose sole heiress carried their great estates in Shropshire to the Earl of Tankerville.

Having thus detailed the senior branch, we proceed to that of Streatley:

THOMAS HARWOOD, sheriff of Berks in 1665, of Streatley, the third son of John Harwood, of Hagbourne, was brought up in the navy. He was lieutenant of the Henry, in which ship, at the commencement of the Dutch war, he fought in the memorable battle of the 3rd June, 1664. In 1665, he was commander of the Return. He was lieutenant of the Royal Prince, of 100 guns, the heaviest and largest ship of the whole fleet, engaged in the great battle of the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd of June, 1666. On the third day of the battle, while his admiral, Sir George Ayscough, was endeavouring to form a junction with Prince Rupert and his squadron, who was hastening to the assistance of the English fleet, then hard pressed by the Dutch, the Royal Prince struck on a sand called the Galloper, when, after having for a considerable time defended the ship with the utmost bravery against a host of enemies, the admiral was compelled to surrender the ship; and the Dutch being unable to get their conquest off, after having removed the men, set her on fire. He was, with his admiral, impris-

Lineage.

"It appears, by a considerable number of very ancient deeds, that this family flourished before and in the reign of Edward III. at Wollaston, in Staffordshire, that it took the name from that place; that Henry, John, and William de Wollaston, were at that time lords of that manor; and that in all those old deeds, or most of them, the name is spelt, as this part of the family spell their name now (viz. Wollaston), and only they, until very lately, when others, from example, have spelt it in the same manner. In Richard II.'s reign they parted with the said manor to the Aston family; and then dispersed into other parts of that county. Some went to Trescot, and some to Perton, in the parish of Tettenhall, Staffordshire, of which last the present family of Shenton in Leicestershire, and of Great Finborough in Suffolk, is descended (as appears by a genealogy now in the hands of William Wollaston, and a gift of loaves of bread every Sunday to the poor of Tettenhall, which is still given by the said William Wollaston as a memorial of their residence there). At that time, it is probable, they left out of their name the de, and were no longer called de Wollaston, but Wollaston. They were gentle- men: always lived upon their estates, seemingly with the same disposition and character as at present; contented and without ambition so as to make much noise in the world, or to much enlarge their fortunes, until, in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign, one of the younger sons of the family at Perton was sent up to London, and there, by assiduity, and living to the age of ninety-three, he became very rich. His money he laid out in the purchase of those very estates which are now in the family; first in Staffordshire (the county in which he was born, and his ancestors and relations lived), by purchasing Oneote Hall, &c. in the parish of Eccleshall, where he and his son resided; after, by repurchasing, in the very beginning of the reign of James I. the manor of Wollaston, and the estate there of the Lord Aston, in whose family it had been ever since the reign of Richard II."

William Wollaston, an eminent writer on ethics and theology, b. at Coton Clunford, in Staffordshire, in 1659. He studied at Sidney College, Cambridge, and having proceeded M.A. in 1681, entered into holy orders. His first settlement was as preceptor at a free school at Birmingham, to which he was annexed a small lectureship; and he afterwards became second master in the same school. In 1688 the death of his cousin put him in possession of considerable landed property, when he removed to London, and resided in Charter House Square. His marriage shortly after with a lady of large fortune having rendered him independent, he relinquished all thoughts of rising in the church, and devoted his whole time to literary researches. In 1691 he published "The designs of the Book of Ecclesiastes represented in an English poem," 8vo, but this he would afterwards have suppressed, from a conviction that he had no talents for poetry. He printed in 1722, for private distribution only, a work entitled "The Religion of Nature delineated," which he afterwards revised for more extensive circulation. This treatise, in which the author advances some ingenious speculations concerning the principles of ethical science, notwithstanding the abstract nature of the subject, attracted the notice of the learned, and procured the writer a distinguished station among the philosophers of the last century. The family of Drinkwater, of which that branch appears to have been settled at a remote period in the county of Chester. The name is said by some to be a derivation from Derwentwater, but the assertion is unsupported by authority, nor does it seem at all probable; for we find a similar surname in every kingdom of modern Europe, in France, Spain, Italy, and Germany. One part of the family enjoyed considerable property at Bent, and another at Massey Green, in the parish of Warburton, and in the immediate vicinity. In the court rolls of that parish the name of Arnold Drinkwater occurs as early as the reign of Henry VII., and that of Richard Drinkwater, of Bent, in March, 1587. The antique stone font, (still existing 1835) in Warburton church, bears the inscription of "William Drinkwater, the Keeper, 1595."

In 1629, Richard Drinkwater, son of the above mentioned Richard, erected a considerable mansion on the family estate at Bent, to which his son,

Arnold Drinkwater, made additions in 1633, part of which, bearing the date of 1659, remained to a very recent period. This Arnold's son,

Richard Drinkwater, m. in 1666, Is-
Peter, daughter of Peter Drinkwater, of Massey Green, in the same parish of Warburton, and had a numerous progeny, no less than fifteen children, from whom descend the Drinkwaters, whose names appear in the parochial registers of Warburton, from the earliest time mentioned to the present; a handsome cenotaph in the churchyard of Warburton covers the remains of Arnold Drinkwater, who is stated to have died so recently as 1819. Isabella Drinkwater died in 1729, her father,

Peter Drinkwater, of Massey Green, descended from a younger branch of the Bent family, had, beside that lady, a son and heir,

Peter Drinkwater, esq. of Massey Green and Thelwall, both in the county of Chester. This gentleman, m. Elizabeth, daughter of John Leigh, of Outrington, and left a son, Nathaniel Drinkwater, esq. who fixed his residence at Latchford, near Warrington. He married several times, and lived to a great age; his last wife survived him. By her he left two sons and a daughter, viz,

1. John, who lived at Wooley Green, on an estate given him by his father. He married and had three sons,

   John, who d. unmarried.

   George, whose descendants removed to Liverpool.

   Nathaniel, who entered into the merchants service. He m. and left issue.

II. Peter, of whom presently.

1. Mary.

The second son,

Peter Drinkwater was educated for the church, became a fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford, and was afterwards incumbent of two livings in Northamptonshire, Raunds and Oundle. He was also chaplain to the Duke of Manchester, and resided much at Kimbolton. He m. Anne Iretton, of Higham Ferrers (a descendant of the celebrated Sir Henry Iretton), and had two sons, John and Peter. At the decease of Mr. Drinkwater, his widow removed from Northamptonshire to Lancashire, and upon her demise the family property, which was considerable, was divided between her two sons—the elder, John, taking the real, and the younger, Peter, the personal.

John Drinkwater, the elder son, b. in 1717-8, at Latchford, m. Mary Barton, of Barton, near Northwich, a relation of the Barrys, of Belmont, and had issue,

1. Peter, who having an ingenious turn and some knowledge of mechanics, repaired to London, and established himself in business. He m. Miss Hawes, and had a large family, but only one daughter, Mary-Anne, survived him.

II. John, of whom presently.

1. Mary-Anne, m. to — Walworth, esq. and d. s. p. in 1800.

This John Drinkwater who inherited considerable property in the counties of Chester, Lancaster, and Northampton, wasted the whole of it, and entailed great embarrassments on his family. He d. in 1759-60. His second son,

John Drinkwater, b. in 1740, entered the royal navy, and served during the war of 1758-9 in the West Indies, where as surgeon of the Ripon of sixty guns, he was at the capture of Guadaloupe, &c. In 1761, he m. first, Elizabeth Andrews, of Salford, in Lancashire, and soon after established his residence in that town, where he lived many years. He wedded, secondly, in 1779, Elizabeth Ford. By the first lady he had issue, viz,

1. John, his heir.

II. Thomas, b. in 1705, entered the army, and obtaining the majority of the 62nd foot, distinguished himself in the first campaigns in St. Domingo, in 1793-4. His regiment at length was so reduced by losses as to be sent home to recruit the battalion. They were embarked with a number of sick officers and invalids (returning to England) in an armed freight ship of some force. Approaching the Channel, the ship was warned by the British cruisers of many of the enemies' ships being at sea. With the troops the freight ship had on board, it was decided that she was equal to cope with any opponent of a moderate class; and the military on board were regularly exercised and stationed to make the best defence. Major Drinkwater had, of course, the command of the troops, and had been superintending the exercise of musketry with a party of them stationed in the main top, when a squall came on which obliged them to descend. The major, after remaining in the top to direct his men, was in the act of coming down, when a ratline gave way under him and he was precipitated into the sea, the ship then going at the rate of eight or nine knots an hour. He was an excellent swimmer, and so long as he was seen was observed to bear up manfully.
Boats were of course hoisted out and the ship rounded to, in the hope of recovering him, but although the remainder of the day was given to search. Major Drinkwater was never seen afterwards.

Mr. Drinkwater obtained in 1783 the diploma of M.D., and dying in 1797 was succceeded by his son, the present Colonel John Drinkwater. This gentleman entered the army in 1777, as an ensign in the royal Manchester volunteers, a corps of 1000 men raised by the town in three months, in support of Government in the American war after the convention of Saratoga. With this regiment he proceeded to Gibraltar, in the summer of 1778, and served with it during the memorable blockade, bombardment, and sieg of that garrison.

At the peace of 1783, the 72nd regiment was disbanded, but before that event, Col.
Drinkwater purchased a company; on being placed on half-pay, he published a history of the Siege of Gibraltar, which His Majesty George III. was pleased to receive under his immediate patronage, and, ever afterwards, graciously honoured Colonel Drinkwater by his particular notice. Having completed this work, Colonel Drinkwater paid the regulated price to return on active service, and in 1787 joined the 2nd battalion of the first or royal regiment of foot, then quartered in his old garrison at Gibraltar.

During his second residence at Gibraltar Colonel Drinkwater suggested and carried into effect measures necessary for the es-ablishment of a garrison library, which was followed up with such spirit and good judgment, as very soon to include a numerous and highly valuable collection of literature, on all subjects and in most languages; and which has since become the model for forming similar establishments in many British garrisons, at home and abroad.

Hostilities with revolutionary France taking place in 1793, the royal regiment was detached with other troops to reinforce Toulon, recently occupied by Admiral Lord Hood and the coalesced powers; and General O'Hara being appointed governor of that fortress, the General selected Colonel Drinkwater as his military secretary, and when General O'Hara was taken prisoner, he continued to occupy that situation under General O'Hara's successor, Sir David Dundas.

On the evacuation of Toulon in December, having discovered in these claims, much imposition and fraud, Colonel Drinkwater took such steps as eventually saved to the British Government the payment of those demands. On Colonel Drinkwater's arrival in England, he was strongly urged to superintend the arrangement and settlement of the public accounts of the general expedi-diture in Corsica, to which he ultimately assented, and, in consequence, went on half-pay.

On the renewal of hostilities with France in 1803, Colonel Drinkwater deemed it his duty to take charge of the volunteer corps of his parish (Ealing, Middlesex), and he had afterwards the local rank of colonel given him with the command of a brigade, embracing the corps of Kensington, and those of the intermediate parishes between London and Twickenham.

In 1805, Colonel Drinkwater was named with General Sir Hildebrand Oakes, &c. to be a Member of the Parliamentary Commission of Military Enquiry; and on Sir Hildebrand's being appointed Governor of Malta, succeeded that distinguished officer in the chair of the board, which Colonel Drinkwater occupied for upwards of five years. On the change of Administration in 1807, Colonel Drinkwater was offered the situation of Under Secretary of State in the War and Colonial Department, which he thought proper to decline; as he did also the offer of knighthood.

Colonel Drinkwater continued to preside at the Military Board of Enquiry until 1811, when His late Majesty King George IV., then Prince Regent, was graciously pleased to select him as a fit person to succeed Sir Willoughby Gordon, in the charge of the Commissariat Department. This, however, was finally entrusted to Mr. J. C. Herries, the private secretary of the then Prime Minister (Mr. Percival), and Colonel Drinkwater was appointed to the patent office of one of the comptrollers of the army accounts.

In 1834 Colonel Drinkwater had completed fifty-seven years of public service in offices of more variety, labour, and responssibility than perhaps it had fallen to the lot of any other officer then in active employ to occupy, and on the 31st of March following the department of the Comptrollers of Army Accounts was abolished, on which occasion the Lords of the Treasury were pleased to record on their official minutes, "that the services of Colonel Drinkwater entitled him from their long continuance, responsibility, and importance, and the constant regard to the public interests with which they have been executed to their most favorable consideration."

When the Comptrollers' Office was abolished, 31st of March, 1835, Colonel Drinkwater was within a few months of completing his seventy-third year.

MEREDITH, OF PENTREBYCHAN.

MEREDITH-WARTER, HENRY, esq. of Pentrebychan, in the county of Denbigh, succeeded his uncle, Thomas Meredith, in 1802, and assumed, by royal license in 1824, the surname and arms of Meredith. He m. in 1821, Elizabeth Lowry, only daughter of the celebrated African traveller, Mungo Park, and has one son, Henry, and a daughter, Marion.

Lineage.

This ancient family traces its descent to Eunydd, usually styled Eunydd Gwernwy, a chieftain of North Wales, and head of one of the fifteenth tribes. This Eunydd served with much distinction under David, the son of Owen Gwynedd, Prince of North Wales, in the 12th century, in the wars between the Welsh and English, for which he received considerable grants of land in addition to his patrimonial estate.

Meredith ap David, of Alington, was eighth in descent from Eunydd, and father of Rowland Meredith, of Alington, who assumed the family surname. He m. Elizabeth, daughter of Edward Brecon, of Borsham, and was s. by his son, JOHN MEREDITH, of Alington, who m. Catherine, daughter of John ap Iolyn ap Madoc, gent. and had two sons, John and Richard. The elder was ancestor of the line of Meredith, of Alington, now extinct, while the younger,

RICHARD MEREDITH, seated at Pentrebychan, founded the family before us. He wedded Jane, daughter and heir of Morgan ap David ap Robert, gent. and had issue,

1. William, (Sir) knt. of Stansly, in the county of Denbigh, and of Leeds Abbey, in Kent. This gentleman was treasurer and paymaster of the army in the reign of Elizabeth, and James I.

4. He m. Jane, daughter of Sir Thomas Palmer, of Wingham, and left, with two daughters, Anne, m. to Francis, Lord Cottington, and Jane, to Sir Peter Wyche, a son and successor.

William, of Stansly, who was created a Baronet in 1622. He m. first, Susanna, daughter of — Barker, esq. of London, by whom he had six sons and six daughters; and, secondly, a sister of Sir Henry Goring and relict of Thomas Aynscombe, esq. by whom he had no issue. Of his sons, four died unmarried, the sixth, Roger, a master in Chancery, married Anne, daughter of Sir Brocket Spencer, bart. but d. s. p. Of the daughters, the only one married, Elizabeth, who became the wife of Sir Henry Oxenden, bart. Sir William's son and heir,

Sir Richard Meredith, second bart. of Stansly, m. Susanna, daughter of Philip Skippen, esq. of Topsham, in Norfolk, and had six sons and five daughters. He was s. by his eldest son,

Sir William Meredith, third bart. of Stansly, was s. by his decease unmarried the title and estates passed to his next brother,

Sir Richard Meredith, fourth bart. of Stansly, who also d. unmarried in August, 1733, and was s. by his only surviving brother,

Sir Roger Meredith, fifth bart. at whose demise s. p. in 1738, the Baronetcy expired.

1. Richard, his heir.

11. Thomas, M.D. successor to his brother.

1. Margaret, m. Joseph Warter, esq. of Sibberscott, in Shropshire, and was mother of Henry Warter, who inherited Pentrebychan from his uncle.

RICHARD MEREDITH, esq. of Pentrebychan, dying issueless in 1800, was s. by his brother,

THOMAS MEREDITH, M.D. of Pentrebychan, who also died without issue in 1802, and bequeathed his estate to his nephew, Henry Warter, who, having assumed the surname and arms of Meredith, is the present Henry Warter Meredith, esq. of Pentrebychan.

ELLIS MEREDITH, esq. of Pentrebychan, who m. Anne, daughter of Roger Myddleton, esq. of Cadwgan, in the county of Denbigh, and had two sons, Hugh and William, and two daughters, Anne and Elizabeth. The elder son,

MORE, OF LINLEY.

MORE, ROBERT BRIDGEMAN, esq. of Linley, in Salop, b. 29th April, 1788, succeeded his father 12th January, 1818. Mr. More was sheriff of Shropshire, in 1822.

Lineage.

John More, of Larden, who flourished in the reign of Henry VII, wedded Joyce Aston, and had two sons, William, his heir, and Richard, ancestor of the Mores, formerly of Millichope, in Salop. The elder, William More, esq. of Larden, in 1491, m. Elizabeth, daughter of John Berkeley, and had two sons, viz.

1. Edward, his heir.
2. Thomas, of Nedsam, in Suffolk, whose son,

Robert, returned into Shropshire and was of Linley; he was buried at the More 20th March, 1603-4, leaving a son,

Richard, of whom presently.

The elder son,

Edward More, esq. of Larden, 8 Henry VIII. m. Elizabeth, daughter of Edward Cludde, esq. of Orleton, (for an account of that ancient Saxo family, see vol. i. p. 483), and had three sons, viz.

1. Thomas, his heir.
2. John, clerk of the exchequer, father of Sir Edward More, kn. of Odilham, in Hampshire, who left five sons and two daughters, viz. Edward (Sir), of Odilham;* Adrian, d. s. p.; John, d. unm.; William, left a son; Thomas, d. young; Elizabeth, m. to Sir Thomas Drew, of Broadhembury, Devon; and Frances, the wife of William, Lord Stourton.

III. Eustace.

The eldest son,

Thomas More, esq. who succeeded his father at Larden, married, and left at his decease a son and successor,

Jasper More, esq. of Larden, who died in 1613, leaving three daughters only (one of whom married Samuel More, the parliamentarian). The More and Larden estates passed to his cousin,

Richard More, esq. of Linley, who thus reunited the ancient estates of the family, being styled of More, Linley, and Larden;

* Sir Edward's son, Edward More, esq. m. Frances, daughter of Sir John Lenthall, but died without surviving issue.
he married a sister of Sir Thomas Harris, of Boreatton, bart.; was sheriff in 1619, and represented the town of Bishop's Castle in the Long or Fatal Parliament of Charles I. The part he took was decidedly anti-monarchical, and he appears early among the most active partizans of the Parliament within the county: but he died 6th December, 1643, before the triumph of his party, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

SAMUEL MORE, esq. of More, Linley, and Larden, then forty-nine years of age, who inherited his father's principles, or perhaps influenced them, and took a leading part in the civil commotions of Shropshire. While yet but an heir-apparent, he was a member of what was called the Committee of Parliament for Shropshire, whose business it was to raise money for the good cause, to seize the property of delinquents, &c., and whose proceedings are forcibly described by Sir Robert Howard (colleague of Richard More, in the representation of Bishop's Castle) in his comedy of 'The Committee.' He had scarcely paid the last rites to his father, when he was called upon to take the command of Hopton Castle, one of the few fortresses in Shropshire which were at that time in the interest of the Parliament; its owner, Mr. Wallop, the heir of the Corbetts, as they of the Hoptons, being one of the fiercest of the republican faction. The situation of this castle, in a singularly sequestered valley entirely commanded by the surrounding hills, seemed to render the defence of it hopeless; yet such was the spirit and vigilance, and so great were the resources of Mr. More's military talent, or so low was the art of war at that time, that, with at the most but thirty-one men, he was able to hold out this little fortress for more than a month, against all the forces which the garrison of Ludlow could bring against it, though these were sometimes not fewer than five hundred horse and foot. For this stubborn resistance, however, the men, with the exception of their commander, paid the forfeit of their lives; and though it is impossible, upon such an incident, not to excite the horrors of civil warfare, and deplore the untimely fate of the gallant little band, yet Mr. More (whose journal of this siege, still preserved, is a most curious document) does not venture to deny that the surrender was wholly unconditional: and it is a known provision of military law, instituted to prevent the unnecessary effusion of human blood, that the defence of a forfeited place with numbers so entirely disproportioned as in the present instance entitles the captors to punish the garrison with death. Subsequent events crowned with success the party espoused by Colonel More, as he is generally called; and he took a leading part throughout the Interregnum, in the internal regulations of Shropshire, of which he was returned to be one of the four representatives to the parliament, summoned by Cromwell for September, 1656. Usurpers are invariably found to infringe that liberty which they were raised to guard, and the Protector, upon this occasion, adopted the extraordinary expedient of excluding by force, from his House of Commons, all those who were disapproved by him, or who refused to receive a ticket of approbation. Colonel More had the honour to be of this number; and, having witnessed the tyranny of unlawful sway, he was, perhaps, disposed the better to acquiesce in the restoration of the monarchy, which he survived two years. Notwithstanding his civil and military occupations, he found time for letters, and, in 1650, published a translation of "Mede's Clavis Apocalyptica." His first wife, a daughter of his kinsman Jasper More, brought him three children. By a second marriage he had three sons and four daughters, one of whom, Anne, married Sir John Turton, a puisne judge of the King's Bench; an union recommended, perhaps, by the cognate principles of the two families, for Mr. Turton, the father, was a warm opposer of Charles I. The sons were,

1. Richard, his heir.
2. Thomas, M.D. died unmarried in 1637, aged 69.
3. Robert of Linley, who m. Sarah, daughter of John Walcot, of Walcot, in Salop, and had an only son, Robert, successor to his cousin, Thomas More, of More and Larden.

The eldest son,

RICHARD MORE, esq. of More and Larden, born in 1627, admitted of Gray's-Inn in 1646, and Member of Parliament for Bishop's Castle from 1688 to his death, ten years after; m. in 1659, Anne, daughter of Isaac Pennington, whose factious conduct, as a trumpet of sedition, when Lord Mayor of London, in 1643, no reader of our history can forget; by this lady, from whom he was divorced, he had no issue. He married, secondly, Dorcas Owen, and had, with a younger son, Richard, slain in battle in 1709, a successor, THOMAS MORE, esq. of More and Larden, at whose decease, s. p. in 1731, his estates passed to his cousin-German, only son of Robert More, of Linley (third son of Colonel More).

ROBERT MORE, esq. who thus became seated at Linley. He was a person of considerable attainments, and of a character far above the common level. He was born in May, 1703, and in his youth visited many parts of the continent with improvement and profit. In the Parliament of 1727 and 1734, he sat in the House of Commons for Bishop's Castle. In 1751 he was elected member for the town of Shrewsbury; but his name does not occur as ever having spoken in the House of Commons, in which he did not retain his seat after the dissolution of parliament. On retiring into private life, he again embarked for the continent, traversed Sweden and Denmark, having previously explored the interior of Spain, of which country he saw the capabilities, and lamented the destiny. From conversations on these subjects, at the table of Sir Benjamin Neave, the English resident, he attracted the notice of the Spanish ministry, who offered him a guard to protect him from insult in the course of his researches; but this, after some experience of the attendant trouble and expense, he found it expedient to decline. He had, however, the satisfaction of laying the foundation of some of the most valuable improvements introduced into that country previously to the French revolution. The obligations of Spain to Mr. More are distinctly acknowledged by Baron Dillon. Mr. More was an inflexible whig, and was proud of the exploits of his grandfather, the defender of Hopton Castle. His correspondence with a celebrated orator of the last age is said to have been extremely characteristic, and proves that his talents would have shone conspicuously on the stage of the Great World; but he cultivated retirement, and the sententious pregnancy of his works was confined to the narrow scene of local politics.* Mr. More was a fellow of the Royal Society. He m. first, in 1750, Miss Wilson, daughter of Robert Wilson, esq. of Shrewsbury, and had by her,

1. Thomas, of Larden Hall, who m. in 1795, Harriott, daughter of Thomas Myttton, esq. of Shipton, in Salop, by Mary, his wife, daughter of Sir Henry Edwards, bart. and dying in 1804, left issue,

Robert-Henry-Gayer More, in holy orders, now of Larden Hall, b. in 1798.

Harriott-Mary, m. to her cousin, the Rev. Thomas Frederick More.

2. Robert, of whom presently.

Mr. More married, secondly, Catherine, daughter of Thomas More, esq. of Mille-cope, which lady died without issue in 1792. He died himself, 5th January, 1780, and was succeeded, at Larden, by his eldest son, Thomas, and at Linley, &c. by his second son, Robert More, esq. of More, Linley, and Shelfe, who was high sheriff of Salop in 1785. He m. 4th August, 1781, Eliza Taylor, of Hadham, Herts, and had issue,

1. Robert-Bridgeeman, his heir.

2. Harriott-Lousia.

3. Caroline-Elizabeth White, deceased.

4. Olivia.

Mr. More died 12th January, 1818, and was s. by his eldest son, the present Robert-Bridgeeman More, esq. of Linley.

MACDOUGAL-HAY, ANNA-MARIA, of Mackerston, in the county of Roxburgh, inherited the estates under an entail, at the decease of her father, 13th April, 1825; m. in November, 1819, Lieutenant-General Sir Thomas Brisbane, K.C.B.* and has issue,

THOMAS-AUSTRALIA-MACDOUGAL-BRISBANE, Isabella-Maria Macdougal-Brisbane, Eleanora-Australia Macdougal-Brisbane.

Lineage.

The tradition and belief have long prevailed that the Macdowals† (for the "Macdougals of Mackerston" seem of the same stock, and formerly spelt their surname in the same manner) are descended from the old lords or princes of Galloway, who were almost sovereigns in their own districts, although acknowledging fealty to the crown of Scotland. This impression received countenance from the exact coincidence of their arms (a lion rampant) and the christian names of their respective progenitors. Fergus was the first Lord of Galloway, and not long after we hear of Uchtred of Galloway, and Duncan, Earl of Carrick their kinsman, and these are the very Christian names of the earlier Macdowals. But be the tradition as it may, it is now impossible properly to connect the latter with the former, and ascertain the particular line of descent.

Fergus Macdowell and Dowgal Macdowall swore fealty to King Edward III. among the barons of the shire of Dumfries, and there are grants not very long after to persons of the name of Dougall Macdowel.

Duncan Macdowell was a powerful chief in Galloway and a person of great celebrity about the middle of the fourteenth century. Hostile generally to the Bruce, he inclined towards the English, on Baliol's interest, probably with the view of rendering himself independent in a country which still venerated its ancient line of princes, and ill submitted to foreign domination. In the year 1342 he maintained his fortress of Estholm, on the coast of Galloway, against the Scotch, being furnished by the English king (Edward III.) with ships of war and the other requisite means of defence;‡ but in 1353 William Douglas, the knight of Liddesdale, having at the head of a strong force advanced to that quarter, contrived by dexterous negotiation to detach the chief, and with him the whole of Galloway from the English cause, and eventually to induce them to swear fealty to King David II.§

† Amongst the Rotuli Scotiae the following orders of Edward III. are extant: — 10th April, 1342, to dispatch a great ship of war "cum d lecto et fidei nostro Duncano Maydowell ad partes de Galeweye" with merchandise, &c. for his fortress there: 15th April, same year, to his lieutenant to succour him if besieged; and 1st December, also in that year, commanding virtuals to be sent speedily "ad insulam de Estholm in Scotia, pro munitione ejusdem, et sustentatione dicit et fidelis nostri Duncani Maydowell custodi dis insule predictae."

‡ Hailes' Ann. vol. ii. p. 250. Fordun, to whom Lord Hailes refers, says that Douglas brought him "et totam terram Galeweice ad fidem Regis."

* For the family of Brisbane, refer to vol. ii. p. 332.

† Occasionally all the Macdowals substituted "Macdugal" for "Macdowal," but the latter is by far the more prevalent, and appears the more correct orthography, and may possibly have been preferred in distinction from the "Macdougals" of the Highlands, who are a perfectly separate race.
This Duncan (or Dowgald as Winton styles him) there is every reason to believe was the progenitor of the "Macdowells of Mackerston," as that family, it is admitted upon all hands, was the only one of the name known to have settled in Roxburghshire, and the English monarch in the year 1353, as well as subsequently to Douglas's expedition, commands* the sheriff of Roxburghshire to seize the lands, tenements, goods, chattels, and so forth of this very Duncan and his wife, which are specifically stated to be situated within that county, and were thus attempted to be wrested from him in consequence of his descent. This notice of his wife is besides important, as it will be immediately seen that it was by an heiress of the name of Margaret, at that very time that the Macdowells acquired Mackerston. The direct and more immediate ancestor however of the family is

Fergus Macdowell, of Mackerston, who figures after the middle of the fourteenth century, a man of rank and condition, being designated "nobilis vir," and who certainly possessed ample estates in the county of Roxburgh. King Robert II. confirms, 3d May, 1374, "Fergusio Macdowyllie† to-tam Baronian de Malcastorne cum pertinentiis infra vicecomitatum de Roxburghie que fuit Margarete Fraser matris ipsius Fergusii et quam ipsa Margareti nobis sum reddidit," &c. And there is another charter of the same date confirming to him the entire baronies of Ybelthone and Crip-ton (Clifton) also on the resignation of Margaret Fraser, his mother, and to be held "in liberas integras et distinctas Baronias faciendo inde servitia dicta et consuetudinem." In this manner Fergus inherited from his mother three separate baronies.\n
* Order dated 18th August, 1353. The motive for the seizure is thus assigned:—"Quia Duncaucus Macdowallia contra fideltatem et suamentum nobis per ipsum præstita, Scottis inimicis nostris contra nos jum adiunxit," &c.—Rob. Scot.
† This is the first notice of the surname of the Mackerston family.
‡ Two important inferences may be drawn from these deeds, First, That the Macdowals of Mackerston had a better right to be considered the eldest, and perhaps, principal stock of the Macdowals, as they were not only originally baronial, and independent, but became distinguished earlier than any of the three families who contended for the chiefship of the last century: these were the Macdowals (Macdowals) of Garthland, Logan, and French. The Macdowals of Garthland could not condescend upon any written evidence prior to 1413, when they first appear, only as vassals to the Douglas, from whom at the time they acquired Garthland; and the other two were obliged to resort to proof of no retrospective effect of a much later date. Second, That the Macdowals acquired Mackerston, &c.

This Fergus left two sons, namely Ughtred, (the younger), to whom and his heirs he granted an annual rent of twenty marks "de villa de Mackerston," which was confirmed by Robert II. on the 3rd March, 1384; and the elder, his heir, Sir Dingal Macdowell, of Mackerston.

In an old inventory at Mackerston there is mention of "one charter be Robert, King of Scotland, to Dougall Macdougall, some of ye said Fergus of the baronie of Mackerston, dated 24 June, et reguni sui 12." It is not practicable to fix the precise date of this charter, owing to the omission by what Robert the grant was made: it was probably, however, by the second of the name, in which event the time would be in 1384.

Sir Dingal left a son and heir,

Sir Archibald Macdowell, of Mackerston, in the person of the father of Fergus — whose surname at least must have been Macdowell — by his marriage with Margaret Fraser, an heiress, who brought the baronies of Mackerston, Ybelthone and Clifton, in Roxburghshire. The Frazeras were of old standing in the south, where they first figured before proceeding to the north; and it is in virtue of this alliance that the Macdowals of Mackerston conjoin the "frais," or the arms of Fraser, with their paternal cost, "the lion of Galloway."

In Robertson's Index, containing entries of many old and authentic charters formerly existing, but now lost, there is one by David II. (who reigned from 1329 to 1371) to Margaret Corbet, Lady of Mackerston, of an annual rent due out of Mackerston forfeited by William Beaton. This proves that Margaret Corbet was, at that time, heiress of Mackerston; and we have an entry previously about a Margaret Corbet, who complains to Robert the Bruce of the murder of Sir Gilbert Fraser, her husband. Combining, therefore, these various circumstances, the existence before the middle of the fourteenth century, of Margaret Corbet, heiress of Mackerston, the marriage then of Margaret Corbet with Sir Gilbert Fraser, and the subsequent appearance of a Margaret Fraser, heiress of Mackerston, we may be led to the ancestry of the latter, who was the mother of Fergus Macdowell, and conclude that she was no other than the child of Sir Gilbert Fraser by Margaret Corbet, of Mackerston, and that she succeeded in her right to the property. Some time after the death of Sir Gilbert Fraser, Margaret Corbet, "Domina de Malkerston," as she is expressly designed in the Royal Scotia, married Patrick Charteris; and in 1384 Edward III. issues an order for restoring both to their estates in terms of certain conditions that had been entered into between Edward Bohaw, David, Earl of Athol, and Patrick, relative to the surrender of Lochmaben Castle. The connection of Margaret in this manner through her said husband, with Gal-loway (that county then comprising great part of Dunfries), and influence of the family of Charteris in that quarter may possibly have led to the marriage of her daughter, Margaret Fraser, with a Macdowell.
ston, who obtained from Robert III. (who reigned from 1390 to 1406) a confirmation of the family estates, consisting of the lands of Mackerston, Yetholme and Elistone (Clifton) in Roxburghshire. And on the 17th March, 1430, there is the continuation of a charter (dated 14th November, 1411) by Sir Archibald to Ughtred Macdowell, younger son ofergus, in which he is designed Patricio Archibald Macdowell militis," of twenty husband lands in the village of Mackerston, in lieu of the twenty merks of annual rent which are stated to have been granted him "per nobilern virum Fergusion Macdowell patrem predicti Uchtredi, et dominum Dungallum patrem predicti Archibaldi, dominos quondam de Malcasteron." In this charter there are some curious allusions to localities. The limits of the husband lands are defined from the western part of the cemetery of the church of St. Peter of Mackerston towards Abbothill in the southern part of the village. The village of Mackerston was formerly more populous than at present; the monks of Kelso alone had there twelve cottages, each having a tuft and half an acre of land, &c., and they had at the same time a brew-house. On this Chalmers remarks,
"Those ancient establishments (the religious houses) raised and maintained a more efficient population than our modern system." Sir Archibald Macdowell aggrandized his family by another baronial alliance, having married Euphemia Gifford, one of the daughters and coheirs of Sir Hew Gifford, of Yester, by whom he left Dungall Macdowall, of Mackerston,
Yester, &c., to whom and his heirs, Robert Duke of Albany confirms, on the 11th March, 1409, the baronies of Yester, Duncaulan, Morham, Teline, and Polganie, in the shires of Edinburgh, Forfar, and Perth, upon the resignation of "Euphemia Giffart filie quondam Hugonis Giffart militis unus heridis ejusdem matris dicti Douglall," and under reservation of her life rent. Dungall was s. by his son, Duncan Macdowall, who obtained 11th April, 1441, upon the resignation of his father, "Dungall Macdowall, of Mackerston," (of whom he is designated the eldest son), a royal charter of Yester Duncanlu and Morham, in East Lothian, to him and Elizabeth Hay, his wife, and their heirs.
He left, by this lady, a son and successor.
Dungall Macdowall, sixth laird of Mackerston, Yester, Giffordgate, Teyling, Polgavie, &c, who obtained, 12th August 1463, from his cousin, William Maxwell, of Tey-ling, (descended of another Gifford, co-heirress), his fourth part of the baronies of Yester, Duncanlu, Morham, and Gifford-gate, and that in exchange for those portions of the Gifford inheritance, Teyling and Polgavie, which are said in the deed of con-voyance to have been the property "quondam Dungallu avi sui." There are various notices of this Dungal or Dougual (which are the same) upon record, and he appears to have had litigations with the Hays of Yester and the Kerrs of Cessford, ancestors of the dukes of Roxburghe, after the middle of the fourteenth century. Sir David Hay, of Yester, pursued him the 20th May, 1474, for maintaining possession of the Castle of Morham, in East Lothian, and it was decided Dungal should deliver it to Sir William, the Hay of Morham, (evidently Sir William, of Folla), and receive in return the lands of Limplum Barro, and Duncanlu. This arangement, however, never took place.
Dungal's plea may be easily discovered.
He was entitled, as a Gifford co-heir, and probably as the second, to the next principal castle and mansion after Yester, and therefore to Mornings*, which, however, it was the interest of the Hays to secure, who accordingly offered him certain lands in exchange for it, and the neighbouring property.
Walter Ker, of Covertone, afterwards Cessford, 8th March, 1478, summoned "Dougall Macdowall, of Makarston," as a party in a civil suit. Dungal, who was alive in 1498, left at his decease, a son and heir,
Andrew Macdowall, of Mackerston,
Yester, Duncanlu, &c, who on the 3rd Feb.
1477, as "son and apparent heir of Dougall Macdowall, of Mackerston," was put in the fee "Baroniarum" of the estates of his family, He m. Euphemia Hepburn, daughter of Patrick, then Lord Hailes, but afterwards raised to the dignity of Earl of Bothwell, great grandfather of the notorious James, Earl of Bothwell. This lady he survived; for before the year 1498, he was engaged in another matrimonial affair, which ended un-towardly. In that year, Walter Ker, of Cessford, pursues Dougall Macdowall, of Mackarston, "for the payment of a hundred pounds, in ye quhilk Dougall Macdowall was bound, after ye forme of contract of ane indenture maid betwixt him and ye said Walter for non-fulfilling of certaine appon-tments after ye forme of ye said indenture."
Walter is ordered by the court to prove what costs he had incurred in the matter,
"except ye availe of ye marriage of Andro Macdowall, ye son and apperande are to ye said Dougall, quhilk suld haife been completed between him and Elizabeth Ker, eldest daughter to ye said Walter, quhilk suld not be." This is all that has been trans-mited of the matter. Andrew had been in possession of the estates as successor to his father, before the 28th May, 1505; for under that date, as laird of Mackerston, he is witness to a deed upon record. About the close of the fifteenth century, it would appear that the Macdowels of Mackerston had attained the height of their grandeur, being then proprietors of a great estate, well allied, and of baronial rank: but on the 26th Feb. 1490, they ceased to possess the baronies in East Lothian, for on that date, Andrew, who, as we have seen, had been put in possession of the fee, alienated these lands to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, his father-in-law, who afterwards made them over to the Hays of Yester.* Andrew Macdowell continued to live down to the 26th August, 1508, as appears by a royal charter upon record, but the time of his death has not been ascertained. The next heir and chief of the family, who can be traced, is Thomas Macdougal, of Mackerston, who flourished before and after the middle of the sixteenth century. He is mentioned in the acts of parliament in 1545. There is every reason to believe he was the son and heir of Andrew; at least his heir, although it must be admitted, that in no legal authority yet found is he so designed. Still, however, nothing militates against the conceived relationship. He m. Janet, daughter and heir of Walter Scot, of Howfaslet, a distinguished family, from whom Lord Napier, the Scots of Thirlstane, and others of note, are descended, and had three sons and a daughter, viz.

He made his will at Mackerston, 24th April, 1571, wherein he directs his "corps to be buried in the queir of Mackerston;" appoints James Macdowell, and Thomas Macdowell, ("my sons") executors: and Sir John Edmonstone, of that ilk, Gilbert Ker, Andro Ker, son and heir of Gilbert Ker, of Primeisdolch, &c. their overmen, and enjoins Thomas and Richard to renounce and gif the kirkland of Mackerston "to James, my eldest son, to remain with the hons," that is, house or family of Mackerston. This will was confirmed by the commissioners of Edinburgh, 27th Feb. 1575. The will contains a long and curious list of his effects and moveables, as well as of his debts. The only lands allotted to are those of Mackerston, and Lugarlaw, which latter estate he may have acquired with the heiress of Howfaslet, but there is no mention of the old family possession of Yetholme, Clifton, or the East Lothian properties. He was s. by his eldest son.

James Macdowell, of Mackerston, who entered into a contract, 10th July, 1572, with Sir John Stuart, of Traquair, relative to the mill of Mackerston, which is witnessed by his brother, Thomas Macdowell. He d. before the 20th Feb. 1585, leaving, with a younger son, James, his successor, Thomas Macdowell, tenth laird of Mackerston, who obtained, 20th February, 1585, a ratification of a tack (there said to have been granted, 23rd Oct. 1583, by Francis, Earl of Bothwell, to "Umquhiile James Macdowell, of Mackerston, his airis and assignis, &c." under the description of "Thomas Macdowell, now of Maccarston, sone and ainre to ye said Umquhill James Macdougall, his faeder." He m. Margaret Hume, who survived him. She being declared in a revision, 24th Nov. 1609, "relict of Umquhill Thomas Macdowall," and dying before 15th December, 1604, left issue,

From any thing yet discovered there was no issue of this marriage, and not very long after, on the 28th January, 1613, the laird despoined the barony of Mackerston and family estate to Sir William Macdowell, his brother-german, and the heirs male of his body; whom failing, to Thomas Macdowell, his brother-german, and the heirs male of his body; and failing, to the younger brothers, George and Robert; upon which conveyance his eldest brother was infest 4th February, 1613, as

This family sprang originally from the Hays of Falla or Limplum, who may be regarded as the eldest collateral branch of the noble house of Tweeddale.

Sir William Hay, of Locherwort and Yester, who lived early in the fifteenth century, left, by Alicia Hay his wife, two sons, viz.

1. David (Sir), who inherited Yester,* and was ancestor of the Lords Hay, of Yester, and of the Earls and Marquesses of Tweeddale.

2. Edmund, founder of the branches of Falla and Limplum.

The younger son,

Edmund Hay, of Falla and Limplum, is frequently to be traced upon record. He had, 12th August, 1429, a grant from Sir David Hay, of Yester, of the lands of Thalek (Falla), in the barony of Oliver Castle and county of Peebles, wherein he is designed "Brother German of Sir David."
He had also a charter, 4th February, 1438-9, from Isabella de Forresta or Forrester, with consent of James de Wedesale, her son, of half of the lands of Wadrows (part of Dun-canalaw), and another, 15th May, 1439 under the discretion of "Edmund Hay, of Falla,"

The genealogists of Scotland, Douglas, Wood, and Crawford, are manifestly in error regarding the pedigree of the Hays, of Yester. They affirm that Sir William Hay married, first, Johanna Gifford, eldest daughter and co-heir of Sir Hew Gifford, of Yester, and by that lady, was father of Sir David, and that Edmund was the offspring
of a second marriage with Alicia Hay. And fur-

* The genealogists of Scotland, Douglas, Wood,
and Crawford, are manifestly in error regarding the pedigree of the Hays, of Yester. They affirm that Sir William Hay married, first, Johanna Gifford, eldest daughter and co-heir of Sir Hew Gifford, of Yester, and by that lady, was father of Sir David, and that Edmund was the offspring
of a second marriage with Alicia Hay. And furthermore, they make Sir William himself the son of Sir Thomas Hay, of Locherwort, by Christian, the sister of Cardinal Wardlaw. But that they are quite incorrect is evident, from an act of parliament in 1601 narrating various ancient writs, and among others the following: "A confirmation granted by Johanna Hay, spouse, of inac-thill Sir Thomas Hay, of Lowcularant, eldest dughter and one of the airs of inac-thill Hew Gifford. Domini de Yester William Hay, of Louchquervart, her sonne and heir, &c. of certain infeftments, &c. Sasine granted by Johanna Gifford in her lawfull viduuitie to Sir Robert Maitland, knt. of the lands of Lettington, conform to the chartar granted be the said Hew to the said inac-thill Sir Robert Maitland, &c. dated at Had-dington, first Decembris, 1399."

Hence, so far from Sir William Hay having espoused Johanna Gifford, she was the wife of a totally different person, and indeed he could not have done so, the lady being his mother; neither did Johanna, as they pretend, predecease her lord of Locherwort to make room for Alicia Hay, for she is now proved to have survived him. Again, not content with marrying Johanna to her son Sir William, instead of Sir Thomas, his father.
plum, filio meo," and it also bears especial mention of Sir David Hay, of Yester, as the son of Alicia. The name of Edmund's wife was Annabella, according to Father Hay, a distinguished antiquarian and descendant of the family, sister of the aspiring but unfortunate Thomas Boyd, Earl of Arran. "Edmund de la Haye, of Fallow, and Annabell his wife, had a grant, 9th December, 1449, of the marriage of William Maxwell, son and heir of the deceased William Maxwell, of Tayling." Edmund left a son and heir, Sir William Hay, of Tallo and Limpum. This laird pursued, 13th October, 1466, Sir David Hay, of Yester, for withholding from him the lands of Morham, called Boyd's quarter and Limpum," and the lords' auditors of parliament decided that he should possess these lands in terms of the tack made, "be Robert Lord Boyde to unquishlist Edmund ye Hay, of Tallo, and his aieris ye farder of ye saide Wilizaume." It may be here observed, that beside Johanna and Euphemia Gifford, who have been noticed, there were two other co-heirs of Gifford, one of whom is stated to have married Robert Boyd, of Kilmarnock, which accounts for the latter having had a quarter of Morham, called "Boyd's Quarter," and an interest in the rest of the Gifford succession, who was her real husband, they have had the cruelty to deprive the former of his genuine parent altogether, and to substitute in her place one Catherine Wardlaw, sister of a cardinal, but whatever lustre the reflected dignity of his eminence might have shed upon the family of Hay, of Yester, this Catherine was not only an utter stranger to them, but there is every reason to believe was a mere nonentity. Both Edmund and his eldest brother David therefore were sprung from their grandmother Johanna, eldest daughter and co-heir of Sir Hew Gifford, of Yester, from the ancient Norman family of that name, which produced the noted magician, and possessed the baronies of Yester, Morham, and Duncanlaw, in East Lothian and Tayling and Poldame, in the county of Perth and Forfar. It was by means of this alliance that the Hays, of Locherwart and Oliver Castle, acquired part of Yester, and it is not a little remarkable that by the marriage of Sir George Hay Macdouall, bart. (descended of the above Edmund), in the last century, with the heiress of Makkdouall, of Makerston, the blood of the two sisters became united, as the latter family were lineal heirs of Euphemia Gifford, younger sister of Johanna, and a co-heir in the same inheritance.

† Every one is acquainted with this chief of the house of Gifford since the appearance of Marion. Fordun thus speaks of him in noting his death in 1267: "Hugo Gifford, de Yester, moritur cujus castrum vel saltem caveam et dongo-nem arte demoniacula antiquae relationes fuerunt fabricatas," &c. vol. ii. p. 103.

William Hay, of Tallo and Limpum, who had been infente into the latter estate prior to the 23rd October, 1490. His wife was Margaret Cockburn, whom Father Hay states to have been of the Cockburns of Henderland. The next chief of the family, William Hay, of Tallo, was probably the son and heir of that marriage. He figures as head upon record in 1528, when, on the 3rd April in that year, George Hay of Menzlane, brought an action before the official of St. Andrews against "an honourable man, William Hay, the laird of Tallo." This chief wedded Janet Spottiswoode, who, according to Father Hay, was daughter of the Laird of Spottiswoode, and had issue, John, of Tallo, his successor, whose line it is not requisite to trace further, our object being confined to the descendants of his youngest brother, William. It may be interesting however to state that he married Janet Hepburn, and had two sons, John and William; John was the unfortunate person who, allied in blood to the Hepburns and their chief the Earl of Bothwell, was employed by that unprincipled nobleman as a tool in the perpetration of the murder of Darnley, and was the person who lighted the match which caused the explosion. His death in 1568, before that of his father and grandfather, saved the estates from the penalties of his treason, and the succession eventually opened to his younger brother, William, who, in 1586, is designed "William Hay, of Limpum, son and heir of unquishlist John Hay, of Tallo." Not long after this the principal branch lost their estates, and gradually dwindling away, fell into such obscurity that no trace of them in the male line can be discovered.

After these events Sir John remained quiet until Montrose came south, when he joined him, and was taken prisoner at the battle of Philiphaugh, when his life was placed in jeopardy, but a bribe to the Earl of Lanark averted the danger. 1. Andrew, a Catholic priest, b. 24th March, and baptized the following day, 1623. Of this Andrew, Father Hay gives a singular account. He says that he was called "Grave Andrew" by Charles II., and became "a charitable assistant to my Lady Drummond, relict of the conservator with whom it was thought he was married," and gained so much influence over her that she bequeathed him her whole estate. Andrew Hay, who suffered severely during the spoliation of the Catholics by the mob, eventually retired to the Scotch seminary at Paris, where he lost his sight, and died 20th November, 1702.

Mr. Chadwick succeeded his father 29th July, 1829.
The representation and lands of the Malveysins, being now in the family of Chadwick, we shall commence with that ancient family. "For the origin of the name and family of Malvoisin," says Shaw, in his History of Staffordshire, "we must refer to the puissant host of our Norman conqueror, to the splendid genealogies of the ancient French nobility, and the formidable works of war in remote ages of chivalry and romance. Our old historians inform us, that when a besieging army erected a tower or castle near the place besieged, such castle was called, in French, a Malvoisin; signifying that it was a dangerous neighbour to the enemy, because it threatened to cut him off from all possibility of relief. In the northern but fruitful district of the Isle of France, situated in the confines of the Gastinois, and not very far from the banks of the Seine, some time stood one of these awful bulwarks, from which it is presumed the neighbouring and illustrious Lords of Rosny first assumed the name of Malvoisin; a name standing proudly conspicuous in the ancient French records of feudal grandeur, and which may be traced amongst the nations of Europe, in succeeding ages, by various acts of manful piety and romantic valour. Of this family was Sampson Malveysin, Archbishop of Rheims, and the renowned Sir Guy Malveysin, who fought under the banner of St. Louis against the Saracens of Egypt; but the head of this house, in the eleventh century, was that venerable chief Raoul Malveysin, surnamed Le Baron, living, in 1080, at the seigniory of Rosny, near the city of Mantes, and ranking amongst the principal seigniors of the county. The names of his sons, Robert and Hugo, and his grandson, William, who fell in battle, may remind us of the same favourite and distinguished names, so familiar in the pedigree of our Anglo-Norman line at Ridware; and it is natural to expect that some individual of this powerful race would, on that memorable day when the Normans invaded England, be ambitious to draw his sword at the call of Duke William, his neighbour, and probably his feudal lord; accordingly, it appears, by the roll of Battle Abbey, that Malveysin was one of those 'two hundred and sixty knights, famous in the Conqueror's army,' who fought in his cause at Hastings, and by whose means he won the crown of England, the name being thus recorded among the rest of those bold adventurers—

* Danvey et Devesyn, Malure et Malveysyn.*

Having braved all the dangers, and, therefore, having a right to share the spoils of victory, Malveysin would be eager to fix his residence on some of the conquered lands; and we are assured, by uniform tradition, that his valor was rewarded with a grant of the lordship of Ridware; which was held, probably by this Norman knight, under the Montgomerics, Norman Earls of Shrewsbury, by the knightly tenure of bearing arms against the Welsh. But there were other lands of which he got possession, seemingly at the same early period, and which were likewise held under the same barony, by the same military service; amongst which was the lordship of Berewicke (Juxta Allingham), in Shropshire; and as the leading branch of this family gave their name to the seigniory of Malveysin Rosny, in France, so these two younger branches communicated the same name to their respective lordships of Malveysin Ridware and Malveysin Berewick, in England; which became their principal places of abode, and where they long continued to flourish, in the days of our Henrys and the Edwards, a knightly gallant race in the age of gallantry; foremost, like their Norman kindred, in deeds of arms and works of piety. Indeed, these Lords of Ridware and Berewicke may be said to have lived in arms; each stationed near the borders of Wales, and holding his domains under the same Baron Marcher, by the hardly tenure of border service, they would find it no easy task to defend what their common ancestor had won by the sword."

HENRY MALVEYSIN, son probably of the Norman, must have been born in the Conqueror's reign, being of sufficient age in the year 1100 to attest the foundation grant of William Fitzalan to the Abbey of Haghton, in Shropshire. He is presumed to have been father of Hugo de Malveysin, of Ridware, living in the times of Henry I. and Stephen. He died early in the succeeding reign, and was buried, according to tradition, under an arch in the north wall of his monastical church, where his bones, stone coffin, and effigy still remain. He left issue,

1. Hugo, who is supposed to have put on the cowl and to have died a monk.

2. William (Sir), his father's heir.

3. Hugo, first parson of Rideware church.

The second son,

SIR WILLIAM MALVEYSIN, Lord of Rideware in the reigns of Henry II., Richard, and John, seems to have had three sons and one daughter, viz.

1. Hugo, of whom nothing is known.
2. Henry, successor to his father.
3. William, Rector of Rideware Mauveysyn. There is no proof that this William was the William Malvoisin, Bishop of Glasgow, translated thence to St. Andrew’s, 4th John, holding a council at Perth, to promote a crusade, in the 13th of the same reign, attending a grand council at Rome four years after this, and dying temp. Henry III, after having governed his church with great wisdom and felicity.

1. Sarah, m. to Sir William de Kileby, of Kileby, in Leicestershire.

Sir William was succeeded by his son,

Sir Henry Malveysyn, Kt., Lord of Rideware, living in the reigns of Richard I. John, and Henry III. who also possessed lands in Great Casterton, in the county of Rutland. He m. a lady named Matilda, and, dying before the 42nd of Henry III, was succeeded by his son,

Sir Robert Malveysyn, of Rideware-Malveysyn and Great Casterton, whom, in the 40th Henry III. we find recorded by the name of “Robus de Redware,” amongst those gentry of Staffordshire who were possessed of one knight’s fee, or more, but were not created knights; he then compounding, for half a mark, to have respite from knighthood. But though he was not “miles gladio cinctus,” an honour which became a burthen to the military tenants, yet, being possessed of an entire knight’s fee, he was by hereditary succession a knight by tenure, bound to perform knight’s service, by serving in the wars, well arrayed, and furnished in all points.

As far as it can be judged from deeds, S. D. Sir Robert died before 51 Henry III. in those days when much blood was spilled in Wales, and in the barons’ wars. He left a son, Henry, Lord of Rideware-Mavesyn; and, as I take it, a second son, Roger, who had lands in Rideware-Mavesyn in 1291 and 1306; in which he was succeeded by his son William, living in 1337, who had a son John, not named after 1399.

Sir Henry Malveysyn, knt. (the croisader), eldest son and heir of Sir Robert, “fil & here’s Roberti Malveisin,” lived in the reigns of Henry III. Edward I. and Edward II. and was Lord of Rideware-Mauveysyn; but being under age at his father’s death, he and his lands there were, for a time, under the wardship of Sir John Fitz-Alan.

Sir Henry began his career at a turbulent period, when the rebellious barons were up in arms, and when Fitz-Alan, with whom he was bound to serve, fought alternately for Leicester and the King. By the tenure of his lands, also, he must have toiled amongst the mountains of Wales when Llewellyn was subdued. That he was a knight in the reign of Edward I. using three bendlets as his seal of arms, and that he was a knight-croisader, who bore in battle three bendlets on his shield, in the Scottish wars, and in a glorious croisade, is proved by record and by his monumental effigy. His eldest son and heir,

Sir Robert Malveysyn, knt. (the Forestier) “filius p’nogenitus,” lived in the reigns of Edward I. II. and III. and was Lord of Rideware-Malveysyn and Shipley, having some manorial rights, as well as lands in Great Casterton and Exton, and lands also in Parva Rideware, Colton, Rugeley, Handsacre, and Heynton. By his second wife, a daughter of Sir John de Freford, he had several children, and was succeeded by his third son, Thomas Mauveysyn, the two elder sons having predeceased their father, s. p. This Thomas was Lord of Rideware-Mauveysyn in the reign of Edward III. but was not a knight. He was succeeded by his only son and heir,

Sir Robert Mauveysyn, knt. Lord of Rideware-Mauveysyn and Shippeley, who lived in the reigns of Edward III. Richard II. and the beginning of Henry IV. Temp. Richard II. this Robert alienated considerable lands, by deed of gift, to his uncle, Rene Mauveysyn, on payment of one red rose annually. It does not appear for what purpose this was done, though the lands of Bragge Casterton are never after mentioned in the Mauveysyn Rideware deeds. Sir Robert was thrice appointed sheriff for the county.

“In relating the fatal contest (says Shaw) between Mauveysyn and his neighbour Handsacre, it must not be forgotten that great animosities are said to have prevailed in former times between the inhabitants of the parts lying north and south of the Trent; but it was in a dispute concerning the privileges of their adjoining royalties that the seeds of discord seem to have been sown; which being encouraged by the fierce manners of a barbarous age, the rancour of party, and the fury of rebellion, was to be terminated only by fire and sword, bloodshed and death. We find that in 5 Richard II. Sir Robert Mauveysyn leased to one John Hamond, fisherman, for life, all that part of his fishery in the Trent called Brygge watir, between Hondscar and Oxenhallome Pole, at the annual rent of 12s. with liberty to use all sorts of nets, except a codden-net. But that this was any annoyance, or gave any umbrage to Handsacre does not appear, though it is likely the fisherman and the miller might disagree; and Robert Muller, of this very mill, the Briggenhuil, appears afterwards at the Court of Rideware Mauveyseyn. The middle of the southern stream, on which this mill and dam were situated, was and is, by the testimony of the oldest inhabitants of Mauveyseyn Ridware, and their ancient and accustomed perambulations, the true boundaries of the two parishes and royalties; such part, therefore, of the premises, whether mill, dam, or floodgate, as projected beyond the middle of the stream, must abut upon the manor of Ridware Mauveyseyn. But a mill and fishery were in those days the necessary appendages of such manors; and their privileges in such a situation were likely to affect in some degrees the two adjoining royalties. Accordingly, it appears that a dispute arose, which ended in an open rupture; for in 1 Henry IV. there was a violent affray, when Mauveysin's adherents burnt and destroyed the mill; Lawrence de Frodeley, one of Handsacre's people, being slain in the tumult.

But it seems their animosity was mutually inflamed by civil war and the great national cause. This affray having happened about the time when Henry of Bolingbroke landed in England to claim the crown, in whose retinue came Malveysin's superior, Fitz-Allan, earl of Arundel,—it is likely, therefore, that Sir Robert Malveysin, having armed to join Henry, thought this a favourable moment for attacking Handsacre, who favoured the opposite side; and though the latter was obliged to give way after the ruin of his party, when Henry IV. mounted the throne, yet he gladly obeyed the first signal of revolt, confident of success in the cause of Hotspur.

The oldest account we have seen of this deadly feud, is one in Latin, in the British Museum, from which the following is taken:

"The river Trent flows with a clear stream, by Mauveyseyn—Ridware, so called because on its northern bank is situated the ancient inheritance of the Mauveysins. The inhabitants say that a jealousy subsisting between the families of Mauveyseyn and Handsacre, it so happened when Henry IV. had obtained the crown of England from Richard II. and it was rumoured that Percy, earl of Northumberland, was in arms against the King, Mauveysin had ridden forth, with six or seven of his vassals, on the part of King Henry; it chanced also that Handsacre, who espoused the opposite cause, had left home the same day, with an equal number of attendants, to join Percy. These rivals met, and, inflamed with rage, rushed furiously to battle.

Handsacre was slain; and the victorious Mauveyseyn, proud of his conquest, marching forward to Shrewsbury, there lost his life, fighting valiantly for the King. Thus fell Sir Robert Malveysin, July 22nd, 1403, bleeding in his sovereign's cause, and breathing in his last efforts the undaunted spirit of his Norman ancestors. Thus conquering fell the last representative of an ancient valiant race, which first entered England in arms, ranged under the Conqueror's banner; and, after toiling in the paths of glory for more than three centuries, honourably finished his career on the field of victory. His body being conveyed to Mauveysin-Ridware, was there interred, in the cemetery of his ancestors, and over it was erected an altar-tomb in the middle of the chapel, decorated with his effigy, with a suitable inscription, which still remains.

By his wife Johanna, (presumed to be) a daughter of Chetwynd, of Ingestrie, he left two daughters, Elizabeth, aged fourteen years, and Margaret, aged eleven years. The younger became the wife of Sir William Handsacre, knt. (descended from the kings of Scotland), "to whom she brought her purparty, as a recompense for the death of his father, slain by hers." "And what a picture is this of the manners of the age!" Thus joyfully terminated an unhappy feud, in a manner which might have been no less agreeable to the dead than it was to the living; for Sir Robert might have exclaimed to the vanquished Handsacre:

"This earth which bears the dead, Bears not alive a better gentleman."

And we shall find hereafter that the representatives of these once rival houses were united by marriage a second time.

Elizabeth Malveysin, the eldest daughter, espoused first, in 18th Richard II. Roger, the son and heir of Sir William de Chetwynd, of Ingestrie, knt. (by Alina St. Paul, his wife); but this Roger died soon after, without issue; when his widow married Sir John Cawarden, knt. of an ancient Cheshire family, and they had, with other issue, a son,

John Cawarden, esq., who lived in the reign of Henry VI. and Edward IV. and succeeded to his mother's lands at Mauveyseyn—Rideware, being also lord of Shipley, and having other lands in Pipe Rideware and Haynton. He married Katharine, the daughter of Sir John Gresley, of Drakelow and Colton, knt. of the Bath, by Mary, his wife, dau. of Sir Thomas Clarell. This lady predeceased her husband, leaving issue, and he wedded secondly Margaret, dau. of Sir William Boteler, knt. by whom he had no children. He died 7th July, fifteenth Edward IV. and was s. by his son, John Cawarden, esq. who was of age in 17th Edward IV. He married Elizabeth, dau. of John Massey, esq. of Grafton, in the county of Chester, and they had issue, seven children, viz. Robert, his heir, who is designated "son of John, son of John, son of Elizabeth Mavesyn," two other sons, and four daughters. Dying on the Feast of the Pentecost, 2nd Richard III. he was s. by his son.

Robert Cawarden, esq. "father of Thomas, and grandfather of David." He was born in 12 Edward IV. and, being a minor at his father's death, became the ward of his mother. He m. Eleonora, the daughter of Sir John Bagot, of Blithefield, kn. and had issue several children. The eldest son, Thomas Cawarden, esq. succeeded his father in Mavesyn-Ridware, and had, in 33 Henry VIII. a grant of Abbey lands. He m. Elizabeth the dau. of Thomas Purefoy, gent. by whom he had three sons, viz.

1. David.
2. Richard, living 1st and 2nd Philip and Mary.
3. Thomas (Sir) who was knighted by the king at the memorable siege of Boulogne, in France, in 36th Henry VIII. This Sir Thomas married Bridget, the eldest daughter and co-heir of Arthur Plantagenet, Viscount Lisle, natural son of King Edward IV. by Lady Elizabeth Lucy, and therefore she bore the royal arms, with a due difference.

The eldest son, David Cawarden, esq. of Mavesyn-Ridware, s. his father. He married about 2nd Edward VI. Maude, dau. of his kinsman, William Westcote, esq. of Handsacre, (descended, through the female line, from the family of Handsacre), by whom he had issue, with other children.

Thomas Cawarden, esq. of Mavesyn-Ridware, which he held under Queen Elizabeth, by knight's service, as of her manor of Oswestry. He was allied in blood as well to Sir William Handsacre as to Sir Robert Malveysin, those once rival houses having been united in marriage a second time, in the persons of his father and mother. By Anne, his wife, who m. secondly Henry Burwey, gent. he left at his decease, in 1592, four surviving daughters and co-heirs, viz.

1. Elizabeth, b. in 1577, married Gerard Stanley, of Harlaston, and had, with three sons, who all d. s. p. one dau. Anne, the wife of William Pargiter, whose descendant, Philip Pargiter, bequeathed, in the year 1773, his property in Mavesyn-Ridware, to the late Mr. Cobb, of Lichfield.
3. Joyce, b. in 1579, the wife of John Chadwicke, esq. of whom presently.
4. Mary, b. in 1588, married to Henry Sewal, esq. mayor of Coventry.

The third daughter, Joyce Cawarden, m. first, in 1594, John Chadwicke, esq. who in her right became possessed of the ancient manor hall, with five parts in the right of the manor of Mavesyn-Ridware, and the whole of the fishery; and, secondly, John Birkenhead, gent. of Burton-upon-Trent. By the first husband, the heiress of Mavesyn-Ridware, left, inter alia, a son and successor.

Lewis Chadwicke, esq. of Mavesyn-Ridware, b. in 1596, who also possessed lands in Lichfield and Stafford, and at Edingale, in Derbyshire. At the breaking out of the civil wars, he took up arms in the service of the Parliament, being lieu.-colonel of horse at the battle of Stafford, in 1642, of which place he became governor, and was president of the Committee of Sequestration there, being one who signed the order for the demolition of the castle. In 1644, he was on the Committee at Stafford, with Basil Fielding, earl of Denbigh, by whom he was appointed governor of Caverswall Castle, and afterwards to the command of the garrison at Biddulph House. We find him at Uxbridge during the treaty for peace, whence Lord Denbigh granted him a pass through his guard to London, on 21st February, the very day preceding that on which the treaty was broken off; after which we hear no more of him in the wars. He was, however, afterwards in possession of St. Lucia, in the West Indies, by purchase, and was commonly styled Governor thereof; having, on the 20th November, 1650, a grant of the whole of the island, from John Hay, earl of Carlisle, to whom it had been given by Charles I. Colonel Chadwicke m. Mary, dau. and heir of Anthony Bagot, esq. of Colton, (second son of Richard Bagot, of Blithefield, esq.) by Katherine, his wife, dau. and co-heir of Michael Love, esq. of Tynemore, and, dying in 1655, left an only surviving daughter and heiress.

Katharine Chadwicke, of Mavesyn-Ridware, born about the year 1620, who m. first John Chadwicke, esq. of Healey; secondly, in 1670, Jonathan Chadwicke, esq. of Chadwicke; and thirdly, George Halstead, esq. of Manchester, where she d. in June, 1697, and was buried in the south aisle of the collegiate church. John Chadwick, esq. of Healey Hall, b. at Ridware, 22nd January, 1720, lieutenant-colonel of the Royal Lancashire Militia, a magistrate for the counties of Lancaster, Stafford and York, and a deputy lieutenant for the first named. On the 1st August, 1791, by grant and exemplification from Sir Isaac Heard, Garter, he assumed the ancient crest of Malveysin, with variations, viz. a talbot's head gu. having the arms of Handsacre on the collar, and pierced through the neck with an arrow; alluding to Handsacre slain by Malveysin, and to Malveysin himself killed at the battle of Shrewsbury. Colonel Chadwick m. 24th September, 1743, at Norley, in Cheshire, Susannah, youngest daughter of Robert Holt, esq. of Shevington, descended from the Holts of Grizzlehurst, by Loveday, his wife, daughter of Edward Herle, esq. of Wigan, sprung from the Cornish Herles. Family of Chadwick.

Previous to its alliance with the heiress of Mavesyn Ridware.

William de Chadwyke, the first of the name on record, was born probably about the year 1355, as he was living in 1413, being then styled Senior, and having a son, William, of age. William de Chadwyke, son of William de Chadwyke, sen. had a grant from Adam de Bamford, in 1413, of certain messuages, lands and tenements, in the vill of Bury; but, though the elder William is expressly styled De Chadwyke, and had this grant in the adjoining manor of Bury, and though it is very probable that he was of Chadwyke Hall, still no proof exists to identify him with that family.

The first of the line named in the original deeds still preserved at Healey, Nicholas de Chadwyk, born in the time of Edward III. died, in or before the 23rd Henry VI. leaving by Maud, his wife, daughter and heir of Thomas de Paris, with whom he acquired lands in Spotland, Hornersfield, and Castleton, two sons, and two daughters, viz.

The second son,

John de Chadwyk, died in the lifetime of his elder brother, Robert, in or about the year 1445, leaving three sons, namely, 1. Henry, of Chadwyk, living 25th March, 1470, ancestor of the Chadwicke, of Chadwick. Jonathan Chadwick, M. D. of Chadwick, aged forty-five, in 1664. m. first, Maria, daughter of Thomas Chetham, esq. of Nuthurst, and secondly, in 1670, Catherine, daughter and heiress of Col. Lewis Chadwicke, of Mavesin Ridware, and widow of Lieutenant-colonel John Chadwicke, of Healey Hall. Dr. Chadwick left issue only by his first wife, viz.

* This gentleman was the direct descendant and heir at law of the heiresses of Redshaw, of Ripon and Radcliffe, of Wakefield.
Thomas Chadwick died about the year 1556, and was s. by his son, ter of Thomas Cawse, esq. and by her, who was living in 1466, had four sons and four daughters, viz.

This family, originally of France, assumed its surname from the town of GUISE, near Calais. It probably came into England with the Conqueror; for Bloomfield states that proprietors of the name of DE GISNETO, DE GINNE, or GYNEY, were soon after the Conquest possessed of the Manor of Haverland, in Norfolk, and that they held it until the time of Henry V. From that house it would appear that the one before us branched, and that the name in process of time changed from Gyney to Jenny, the mode in which it has been spelt since the beginning of the fifteenth century at least.

In the 9th of Richard II. (1385), Thomas, son of Sir Thomas de Gyney, kn. en-

MORE, OF BARNBOROUGH.

MORE, THOMAS-PETER, esq. of Barnborough, in the county of York, b. 23rd April, 1704, assumed, by sign manual, 24th June, 1797, upon succeeding to the estates of his grandmother, the surname and arms of More, in place of his patronymic Metcalfe.

Lineage.

The Mores of Barnborough derived immediately from

Sir John More, knight, born about the year 1440. He was one of the justices of the court of King's Bench in the time of Henry VIII. whose family is represented as old and respectable, and himself described as "homo civilis, suavis, innocens, mitis, misericors, aequus, et integer; annis quidem gravis, sed corpore plusquam pro estate vivido." Camlen, in his remains, relates a bon mot of the learned judge's, which says more for his wit than his gallantry, and will not, we fear, prepossess the fair sex much in his favour. His lordship is said to have compared a man choosing a wife to one who dipped his hand into a bag, which contained twenty snakes and one eel; it was twenty to one he caught the eel. After this, it is not a little surprising to find that he had the resolution to take three dpps himself; for we learn that he was thrice married. The maiden name of his first wife was Handcombe, of Holywell, in Bedfordshire. The age of portents was not yet gone by; and Dr. Clement, a famous physician of the time, reported of this lady, that, on the night after her marriage, she saw, in a dream, engraven on her wedding ring, the number and characters of her children, the face of one shining with superior brightness. Those children were Jane, married to Richard Stafferton, esq.; Elizabeth, wife of John Rastell, the father of Judge Rastell; and Thomas, the celebrated Chancellor Sir Thomas More. Of Sir John's other wives, we only know that the christian name of the last was Alice, that she outlived her step-son, and that, being deprived of her possessions in Henry's fury, a little before her death, she d. at Northal, in Herts. The only son of Sir John,

Thomas More, was born at his father's usual residence in Milk-street, London, in 1480, and educated, first, at a school at St. Anthony's, in Threadneedle-street, and afterwards at Oxford, where he soon acquired a considerable proficiency in classical learning. Being destined for the profession of the law, he came to New Inn, in London, whence, after some time, he removed to Lincoln's Inn, of which his father was a member.

In his twenty-second year he was returned to the parliament called by Henry VIII. for the purpose of demanding an aid for the marriage of his eldest daughter to the king of Scotland. The Commons, in general, thought the demand exorbitant; but no one had courage to oppose it, till Mr. More set the example, and by his powerful eloquence the motion was rejected.

The king was so greatly offended at this opposition, that in revenge, he sent Mr. More's father, on a frivolous pretence, to the Tower; and obliged him to pay £100 for his liberty. After being called to the bar, young More was appointed law reader at Furnival's Inn, which place he held about three years; and he also read a public lecture in the church of St. Lawrence, Old Jewry, upon St. Austin's treatise De civeitate Dei. At one time it seems to have formed the design of becoming a Franciscan friar; but he was afterwards dissuaded from it, and married Jane, the eldest daughter of John Colt, esq. of Newhall, in Essex. In the year 1508 he was appointed judge of the sheriffs' court, in the city of London, was made a justice of the peace, and attained great eminence at the bar. In 1516, he went to Flanders in the retinue of Bishop Tonstal and Dr. Knight, who were sent by King Henry VIII. to renew the alliance with the Archduke of Austria, afterwards Charles V. On his return to England, Cardinal Wolsey wished to engage Mr. More in the service of the crown, and offered him a pension, which he declined. It was not long, however, before he accepted the place of master of the requests. He was also created a knight, admitted a member of the privy council, and, in 1520, made treasurer of the exchequer.

About this time he built a house on the banks of the Thames, at Chelsea, and married a second wife. In the 14th year of Henry VIII. Sir Thomas More was appointed Speaker of the House of Commons, in which capacity he had the courage to oppose Wolsey in his demand of an oppressive subsidy. Soon afterwards, however, he was made chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, and treated with great familiarity by the king.

In the year 1526, he was sent, with Cardinal Wolsey and others, on a joint embassy to France, and in 1529, with Bishop Tonstal, to Cambray. Notwithstanding his opposition to the measures of the court, he was appointed chancellor in the year following the disgrace of Wolsey; but in 1533, he resigned the seals, probably to avoid the danger of refusing his sanction to the king's divorce. He now retired to his house at Chelsea; dismissed many of his servants; sent his children, with their families, whom he seems to have maintained in his own house, to their respective homes; and spent his time in study and devotion. He was not long, however, permitted to enjoy tranquility. Though now reduced to a private station, and even to indigence, his opinion of the legality of the king's marriage with Anne Boleyn, was deemed of so much importance, that various attempts were made to procure his approbation, but these proving ineffectual, he was, along with some others, included in a bill of attainder in the House of Lords, for misprision of treason, by encouraging Elizabeth Barton, the Nun of Kent, to treasonable practices. His innocence in this affair, however, appeared so clearly, that they were obliged to strike his name out of the bill. He was then accused of other crimes, but with the same effect; until, upon refusing to take the oath enjoined by the act of supremacy, he was committed to the Tower; and, after fifteen months' imprisonment, was tried at the bar of the King's Bench for high treason. The proof rested upon the single evidence of Rich, the solicitor-general, whom Sir Thomas, in his defence, sufficiently discredited. The jury, however, brought him in guilty; he was condemned to suffer as a traitor, and was accordingly beheaded on Tower-hill on the 30th July, 1535. His body was first interred in the Tower, but was afterwards begged and obtained by his daughter Margaret, and deposited in the chancel of the church at Chelsea, where a monument, with an inscription written by himself, had been some time before erected, and is still to be seen. The same daughter also procured his head, after it had remained fourteen days upon London bridge, and placed it in a vault belonging to the Roper family, under a chapel adjoining to St. Dunstan's church, in Canterbury.

Sir Thomas More was a man of considerable learning, eminent talents, and inflexible integrity. When only twenty years old, he was so devoted to monkish discipline, that he wore a hair shirt next his skin, frequently fasted, and slept upon a plank. Yet his disposition was cheerful, and he had an affection of wit, which he could not restrain even upon the most serious occasions. He was the author of various books, chiefly of a polemical nature. His Utopia is the only performance that has survived in the esteem.
of the world. Hume says, that of all the writers of that age in England, Sir Thomas More seems to come nearest to the character of a classic author. His English works were collected, and published by order of Queen Mary, in 1557; his Latin at Basil, in 1563; and at Louvain, in 1566. A life of Sir Thomas More, by his son-in-law, Mr. Rooper, of Wellhall, in Kent, was published by Mr. Hearne, at Oxford, in 1716.

FAMILY OF CRESACRE.

The Cresacres were resident lords of Barnborough, from the thirteenth century until their extinction in the reign of Henry VIII.

John Cresacre, lord of Barnborough, 12th and 21st Edward I. was father of Thomas Cresacre, of Barnborough, 17th Edward III. who m. and left a son,

John Cresacre, of Barnborough, 24th Edward III. who m. Alice, or Sibil, daughter of Robert Wasteney, of Headon, and was father of John Cresacre, of Barnborough, 20th Richard H. who m. a daughter of — Cranbull.

Their son,

James Cresacre, of Barnborough, 21st Henry VI. married Elizabeth, daughter of John Woodrove, left a son, Percival Cresacre, of Barnborough, who espoused Alice, daughter of Thomas Montuney, and by her (who d. in 1450, and was buried at Barnborough) had issue,

1. John, his heir.

2. James, d. unmarr. ed.

4. Ambrose, living 8th Edward IV.

1. Isabel, m. first, to John Bosville, of Amsley, and secondly, to Henry Langton.

This Percival Cresacre was living as late as 1453, when he was a feoffee of his dian. Isabel Langton, for the foundation of the Bosville chantry in the church of Cawthorne. The date of his decease has not been ascertained. Respecting the manner of his death there is a romantic tradition, firmly believed at Barnborough, and the figure of the lion couchant at the foot of the oaken statue, is appealed to in confirmation of it; as is also a rubiginous stone in the pavement of the porch. The tradition is, that he was attacked by a wild cat, from one of the little woods of Barnborough, and that there was a running fight, till they reached the porch of the church, where the mortal combat ended in the death of both.

Whatever portion of truth there may be in the story, it is evident that it derives no support from the image of the lion in the monument, or the tincture of the stone in the porch, which is only one of many such found near Barnborough. That some such incident did occur in the family of Cresacre, is rendered, however, in some degree, probable, by the adoption of the cat-on-a-mountain for their crest, which may be seen over their arms on the tower of the church. On the other hand, it may have been that the accidental adoption of the crest may have laid the foundation of the story.
That the cat was anciently considered as a beast of chase, is evident from many proofs, going back to the age of the Conqueror, in one of whose charters, supposing it to be genuine, there is given, with the forest of Chaloner, and Dancing, in Essex, of ward de Arderne, Matilda, Ellen those presentative Chalnier, one going-

Margaret, daughter of Sir Hugh Hastings, of Fenwick, and was father of EDWARD CRESCACE, of Barnborough, who m. and obtained by this alliance a grant of the lands of Hanley, now Lymn, in Macclesfield. From his eldest son, PETER (Sir), knt.-bannereet, who accompanying King Henry to France, distinguished himself in the wars of that valiant prince, and was slain at Azincourt, descended the Leghs, of Lyme; for an account of whom, refer to vol. ii. p. 686.

The elder son, SIR ROBERT LEGH, knt. of Adlington, sheriff of Cheshire, 17 and 22 RICHARD II. married Isabella, daughter and heiress of Sir Thomas Belgrave, knt. by Joan, his wife, dau. and heiress of Sir Robert Pulford, and left with a dau. Joanna, m. first, to Ralph Davenport, of Davenport; and, secondly, to John Legh, of High Legh, a son and successor, ROBERT LEGH, of Adlington. It being deemed necessary that this gentleman should give up his claims to the estates of the Pulford family, in favour of Sir Thomas Grosvenor, relinquishment thereof was made with the following unusual ceremonies, devised, probably, from a wish to add to its impressiveness and notoriety. " On the 24th of April, 1412, Sir Thomas le Grosvenor, knt. Robert, son of Sir Robert Legh, knt. and Henry de Bithelos, counsel of Sir Thomas le Grosvenor, read, in Macclesfield chapel, a series of deeds relating to successive settlements, by the Pul-

Robert de Legh, second son of John Legh, of Booths, (see vol. ii. p. 43), by Ellen his wife, dau. and heiress of Thomas de Corona, of Adlington, living temp. Edward II. wedded Matilda, dau. and heiress of Adam de Norley, and was father of ROBERT LEGH, of Adlington, who m. Matilda, dau. and co-heiress of Sir John de Arderne, knt. of Alford and Alvanley, representative of one of the most ancient of those knightly families of which the county of Chester may so justly boast, and had two sons, viz.

1. Robert (Sir), his heir.
2. Piers (Sir), who m. in Nov. 1388, Margaret, only dau. and heiress of Sir Thomas Danyers, knt. of Bradley.
ford family, of the manors of Buerton _juxta_ Salghoton, Claverton, and Pulford, the advowson of Pulford, lands in Middle Aldesey, Crooke Aldesey, and Cawrthyn, the fourth part of the manor of Chollege, and the eighth part of the manor of Broxton. By these settlements, it appears that the said estates were settled on John, son of Robert de Pulford; remainder for life to Johanna, his mother; remainder to Robert his son, and his wife Isabella; remainder to their issue; remainder, in default of issue, to the right heirs of John.

After the reading of these deeds, it was stated, that Sir Robert Legh, and Isabella his wife, and their son Robert Legh, pretended a right to these estates, under a settlement by Thomas de Belgrave and Joan his wife (daugther of Robert, and sister and heir of Joan de Pulford); and, to settle family differences, that it had been agreed that Sir Thomas Grosvenor should take a solemn oath on the body of Christ, in the presence of twenty-four gentlemen, or as many as he wished.

Accordingly, Robert del Birches, chaplain, whom Robert de Legh had brought with him, celebrated a mass of the Holy Trinity, and consecrated the Host, and after the mass (albo cum amico, stola, et manipulo indutum) held forth the Host before the altar, whereupon Sir Thomas Grosvenor knelt before him, whilst the settlements were again read by James Holt, counsel of Robert de Legh, and then swore upon the Lord's body, that he believed in the truth of these charters. Immediately after this, Sir Laurence Merbury, knt. sheriff, and fifty-seven of the principal knights and gentlemen of Cheshire, affirmed themselves singly to be witnesses of the oath, all elevating their hands at the same time towards the Host. This first part of the ceremony concluded with Sir Thomas Grosvenor receiving the sacrament, and Robert Legh and Sir Thomas kissing each other, "in affirmationem concordiae predicata." Immediately after this, Robert Legh acknowledged the right of all the said lands to be vested in Sir Thomas Grosvenor and his heirs, and an instrument to that effect was accordingly drawn up by the notary, Roger Salghall, in the presence of several of the clergy, and attested by the seals and signatures of fifty-eight knights and gentlemen. Seldom will the reader find a more godly group collected together, nor will he easily devise a ceremony which would assort better with the romantic spirit of the time, and which thus turned a dry legal conveyance into an exhibition of chivalrous pageantry.

Robert Legh left, at his decease (inq. p. m. 18 Edward IV.) by Matilda, his wife, (remarried to William de Honford), four sons and one daughter, viz. ROBERT; James, Rector of Rosthorne, in 1456; William; Peter; and Ellen, the wife of Roger Legh, of Ridge. The eldest son,

ROBERT LEGH, esq. of Adlington, wedded, first, Isabella, daughter of John Savage, of Clifton, by whom he had no issue; and, secondly, Isabella, daughter of Sir William Stanley, knt. of Hooton; by whom he had,

Sir Urian Leigh, kn. of Adlington, aged thirty-five, 44 Elizabeth, who received the honour of knighthood from the Earl of Essex at the siege of Cadiz, and during that expedition is traditionally said to have been engaged in an adventure which gave rise to the well known ballad of "The Spanish Lady's Love." Another gallant knight, Sir John Bolle, however, is asserted in vol. ii. p. 390, to have been the hero of that romantic tradition. A fine original portrait of Sir Urian, in a Spanish dress, is preserved at Bramall, which has been copied for the family at Adlington. He was sheriff of Cheshire in the year of Sir Richard George's Visitation of the county in 1613, and survived until the 3rd of Charles I. when his inquisition was taken. He m. SUCKLING, OF WOODTON HALL.

SUCKLING, The Reverend ALFRED-INIGO, I.L. B. of Woodton Hall, in the county of Norfolk, b. 31st January, 1796, m. 31st January, 1816, Lucy-Clementina, eldest daughter of Samuel Clarke, esq. and has issue,

i. Robert-Alfred, R. N. b. 18th July, 1818.
ii. Maurice-Shelton, b. 10th June, 1819.
iii. Charles-Richard, b. 8th April, 1825.
iv. Henry-Edward, b. 7th January, 1827.

i. Lucy. iv. Margaret-Anne.

This gentleman, formerly of Pembroke College, Cambridge, and now a magistrate for Norfolk, succeeded his uncle, Lieutenant Maurice William Suckling, in 1820, and assumed, in compliance with the testamentary injunction of his maternal grandfather, the surname and arms of Suckling, instead of his patronymic, Fox.

Lineage.

THOMAS SUCKLING, who was admitted in the year 1348 to a messuage, and several acres of land held of the manor of Woodton cum Langhall, in Norfolk, was father of

JOHN SUCKLING, living in 1353, whose grandson, (it is presumed),

PHILIP SUCKLING, possessed the messuage and lands above alluded to, and d. in 1430, leaving, by Johanna, his wife, a son and successor.

STEPHEN SUCKLING, living in 1479, whose son,

JOHN SUCKLING, who was appointed trustee to certain church lands in Woodton, was the first of the family who bore the surname of Suckling only, previously they had called themselves Suckling alias Esthawe. He wedded a lady named Alice, but of what family is not recorded, and, dying about the year 1515, was buried at Woodton, and s. by his son,

ROBERT SUCKLING, who d. in 1530, and was interred at Norwich. He left three sons, RICHARD, John, and Nicholas: the eldest of whom,

RICHARD Suckling, succeeded him. He m. Jane, daughter of—Swaney, of the county of York, and had issue, ROBERT, his heir; John; Johanna, m. to—Ling, of Norwich; Elizabeth, m. to Thomas Rochester; Cicely, and Fanny, the wife of—Markes, of Burford. He died in 1551, was buried at Norwich, and succeeded by his eldest son,

ROBERT Suckling, who m. first, Elizabeth, daughter of William Barwick, esq. of Westhorpe, by whom he had issue,
1. Edmond, D. D. dean of Norwich, who gave the communion plate to the cathedral of that city. They bear the arms of Suckling, impaling the deanery, with a Latin inscription. By Amie, his wife, he left two daughters, one married to the Rev. Thomas Spedullove, prebendary of Norwich Cathedral, and the other Lucy Suckling, to Thomas Marsham, of Stratton Strawless. (See vol i. p. 418.)

11. John (Sir), of whom presently.

1. Anne, m. to Thomas Layer, esq. of Norwich.

11. Mary, m. to — Hassel, esq. of London.

11. Elizabeth, m. to Charles Cardinal, esq. of Dedham, in Essex.

1. Maud, m. to Sir Peter Gleane, knpt.

Robert Suckling wedded, secondly, Johanna, daughter of William Cardinall, esq. of Bromley, and by her had

1. Charles, of whom hereafter, as successor to the representation of the family, upon the demise of Sir John Suckling, the poet.

11. Christopher, of Wix, in Essex.

Mr. Suckling served as representative in parliament for the city of Norwich in the years 1570 and 1585. He was a member of the company of Merchant Adventurers, and his arms, impaled with those of that community, are still in the spandrils of the Old Hall at Woodton, which he erected, having purchased the manor and advowson thereof from Sir Christopher Haydon for about £300. He possessed, previously, almost all the land in the parish, but, as the manor was only then acquired, Blomfield, the historian of Norfolk, commences with this gentleman, thus accounting for the mistake Nelson’s biographers have all committed in saying that “his lordship’s maternal ancestors, the Sucklings, have been resident at Woodton for three centuries,” whereas five would be nearer the truth. Robert Suckling’s third son, but eldest to leave male issue,

Sir John Suckling, knpt, privy councillor to James I. m. first, Martha, sister to Lionel Cranfield, esq. of Middlesex, and secondly, a daughter of — Reeve, of Bury St. Edmunds, in the county of Suffolk. By the first only he had issue, viz.

1. John (Sir), his heir.

11. Lionel, died s. p.

1. Anne, m. to Sir John Davis, of Pangbourne, and d. in 1659.

11. Mary, d. unmarried, 1658.

Sir John d. in 1627, and was s. by his son, Sir John Suckling, the celebrated poet. This distinguished person early displayed an extraordinary facility of acquiring every branch of education. He spoke Latin at an almost incredibly youthful period, and could write in that language at the age of nine. It is probable that he was taught more languages than one at the same time, and, by practising frequently with men of education who kept company with his father, soon acquired an ease and elegance of address which qualified him for the court as well as for foreign travel. His father is represented as a man of a serious turn and grave manners; the son volatile, good-tempered, and thoughtless, characteristics which he seems to have preserved throughout life. It does not appear that he was sent to either university, yet a perusal of his prose works can leave no doubt that he laid a very solid and extensive foundation for various learning, and studied, not only such authors as were suitable to the vivacity of his disposition, but made himself acquainted with those of a political and religious nature.

After continuing for some years under his father’s tutorage, he travelled over the kingdom, and then went to the continent, where, his biographer informs us, “he made an honourable collection of the virtues of each nation, without any tincture of their defects, unless it were a little too much of the French air, which was, indeed, the fault of his complexion, rather than his person.” It was about this time, probably in his twentieth year, that he joined the standard of Gustavus Adolphus, and was present at five battles and three sieges, besides minor engagements, within the space of six months.

On his return, he spent his time, and expended his fortune, among the wits of his age, to whom he was recommended, not only by generous and social habits, but by a solid sense in argument and conversation far beyond what might be expected from his years, and the apparent lightness of his disposition. Among his principal associates we find the names of Lord Falkland, Davenant, Ben Jonson, Digby, Carew, Sir Toby Matthews, and the “ever memorable”, Hales of Eton, to whom he addresses a lively invitation to come to town. His plays, “Aglaura,” “Bennoralt,” “The Gobblins,” and an unfinished piece, entitled “The Sad One,” added considerably to his fame, although they have not been able to perpetuate it. The first only was printed in his life-time. All his plays, we are told, were acted with applause, and he spared no expense in costly dresses and decorations.

While thus seemingly devoted to pleasure only, the unfortunate aspect of public affairs roused him to a sense of duty, and induced him to offer his services, and devote his life and fortune, to the cause of royalty. How properly he could contemplate the unjust dispute between the court and the nation appears in his letter to Mr. Germaine (afterwards Lord Albermarle), a composition almost unrivalled in that age for elegance of style and depth of observation. It was, however, too much the practice with those who made voluntary offers of soldiers, to equip them in an expensive and useless manner. Suckling, who was magnificent in all his expenses, was not to be outdone in an article which he had studied more than became a soldier, and which he might suppose would afford unquestionable proof of his attachment to the royal cause; and, having been permitted to raise a troop of horse, consisting of an hundred men, he equipped them so richly, that they are said to have cost him the sum of twelve thousand pounds.

This exposed him to some degree of ridicule, a weapon which the republicans often wielded with successful dexterity, and which, in this instance, was sharpened by the misconduct of his gaudy troopers. It appears, too, that in 1639, the royal army, of which his corps formed a part, was defeated by the Scotch, and that Sir John’s men behaved remarkably ill. All this is possible, without any imputation on the courage of their commander; but it afforded his enemies an opportunity of turning the expedition into ridicule with an effect that it is still remembered. The lines in Dr. Percy’s collection, by Sir John Mennis, are not the only specimen of the wit of the times at our author’s expense.

This unhappy affair is said by Lloyd to have contributed to shorten the poet’s days; but Lord Oxford informed Oldys, on the authority of Dean Chethwood, who said he had it from Lord Roscommon, that Sir John Suckling, in his way to France, was robbed of a casket of gold and jewels, by his valet, who gave him poison, and besides, stuck the blade of a penknife into his boot, in such a manner that Sir John was disabled from pursuing the villain, and was wounded incurably in the heel. Dr. Warton, in his note to an Essay on Pope, relates the story somewhat differently: “Sir John Suckling was robbed by his valet-de-chambre; the moment he discovered it, he clapped on his boots in a passionate hurry, and perceived not a large rusty nail that was concealed at the bottom, which pierced his heel, and brought on a mortification.” He died May 7th, 1641, in the thirty-second year of his age. That he was on his way to France when he met with the occasion of his death, seems to be confirmed by a ludicrous poem, lately re-printed in the “Censura Literaria,” entitled “A Letter sent by Sir John Suckling from France, deploring his sad estate and flight: with a discovery of the plot and conspiracy, intended by him and his adherents against England. Imprinted at London, 1641.” This poem is dated Paris, June 16, 1641, at which time the author probably had not learned that the object of his satire was beyond his reach.

As a poet, he wrote for amusement, and was not stimulated by ambition, or anxious for fame. His pieces were sent loose to the world; and not having been collected until after his death, they are probably less correct than he left them. Many of his verses are as rugged and unharmonious as those of Donne; but his songs and ballads are elegant and graceful. He was particularly happy and original in expressing the feelings of artificial love, disdain, or disappointment. The “Session of the Poets,” the “Lines to a Rival,” the “Honest Lover,” and the “Ballad upon a Wedding,” are sufficient to entitle him to the honours of poetry, which the author of the Lives published under the name of Cibber is extremely anxious to wrest from him.

His works have been often reprinted; first in 1646, 8vo.; again, in 1659 and 1676; very correctly, by Tonson, in 1719; and elegantly, but incorrectly, by Davies, in 1770. The edition of Tonson has been followed in the late edition of the “English Poets,” with the omission of such pieces as were thought degrading to his memory, and insulting to public decency. But whatever opinion is entertained of Suckling as a poet, it may be doubted whether his prose writings are not calculated to raise a yet higher opinion of his talents. His Letters, with a dash of gallantry more free than modern times will admit, are shrewd in observation, and often elegant in style. That addressed to Mr. Germaine has already been noticed, and his “Account of Religion by Reason” is remarkable for soundness of argument and purity of expression, far exceeding the controversial productions of that age. This piece affords a presumption that he was even now no stranger to those reflections which elevate the human character, and that, if his life had been spared, it would have been probably devoted to more honourable objects than those in which he had employed his youthful days. At Sir John’s decease, issueless, in 1641, the representation of the family passed to his uncle, Charles Suckling, esq. of Woodton, who m. first, Mary, dau. and co-heir of Stephen Drury, esq. of Aylsham, and by her had an only son, Robert, his heir; he wedded secondly, Dorothy, dau. of Anthony Drury, esq. of Beesthorpe, and had with other issue, a son, Charles, of Bracondale, who m. This gentleman, the early patron of Nelson, fought, on the 21st Oct. 1757, a naval action, off Cape Francois, paralleled only by his nephew's achievements: with three ships, carrying 184 guns, and 1232 men, he defeated a French squadron of much heavier metal, bearing 366 guns and 3440 men. He was subsequently returned to Parliament for Portsmouth, made comptroller of the Navy, and one of the elder brethren of the Trinity House. It is not a little singular that the great action of Trafalgar was fought on the same day of the month, the 21st October, and to the circumstance Nelson alluded at the commencement of that memorable engagement.

MACPHERSON, OF CLUNY-MACPHERSON.

MACPHERSON, EWEN, of Cluny-Macpherson, in Inverness-shire, Chief of the Macphersons, and lineal descendant, in the male line, of the chiefs of the Clan Chattan, b. 24th April, 1804, m. 20th December, 1832, Sarah Justina, youngest daughter of the late Henry Davidson, esq. of Tulloch Castle, in the shire of Ross, and has a son,

Duncan.

Cluny-Macpherson, a captain on half-pay, 42nd Royal Highlanders, succeeded his father, 1st August, 1817, and is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for the county of Inverness.

Lineage.

1. Diarmid,
2. Muriach,

and was succeeded by the elder,

Diarmid, captain of the clan Chattan, who did not long survive his father, and dying without issue, anno 1153, was s. by his brother,

Muriach or Murdoch, who, being a younger son, was bred to the church, and was parson of Kingonsie, then a large and honourable benefice; but, upon the death of his elder brother without issue, he became head of his family, and captain of the clan Chattan. He then obtained a dispensation from the pope, in 1173, and married a daughter of the Thane of Calder, by whom he had five sons,

1. Gillicattan, his heir.
2. Ewan, or Eugine, called Buon, from the fairness of his complexion. He lived in the reign of Alexander II. and, surnames about this time becoming hereditary, he obtained that of Macparson, or son of the Parson. He m. and left three sons,

1. Kenneth, of whom presently, as continuator of the male line upon the demise of his cousin, Dougal Phaoil.

2. John, living temp. Alexander III. designed of Pitmean. He m. and had two sons, from whom descended many families of the name, viz. the MacPhersons of Pitmean, Strathmashie, Ferfordoun, Kenlochlagan, Invertromeny, Pitchen, Clune, Pitgowan, Garvamore, Balladmore, Balladbeg, Inneraven, Carnbeg, Craegarnell, &c. &c.

3. Gillies, progenitor of the MacPhersons, of Inneressie.

iii. Neill, called Cramb, from his stooping and round shoulders. "He had," says Douglas, "a rare mechanical genius, applied himself to the business of a smith, and made and contrived several utensils of iron, of very curious workmanship." He is stated to have taken a surname from his trade, and to have been ancestor of the Scottish families of Smith.

iv. Ferquhard, Gillerich, the Swift, from whom sprung the Macgillivrays of Drumnaglash, in Inverness-shire, and those of Pennygoit, in the Isle of Mull.

v. David, Doug, or the Black, from whom the old Davidsons of Invernahaven are said to be descended.

Muriach d. towards the close of the reign of William the Lion, and was s. by his eldest son,

Gillicattan, third of the name, captain of the clan Chattan, whose only son, Dougal Phaoil, or, according to Nisbet, Dougal Daol, succeeded, and was captain of the clan Chattan. He d. in the reign of Alexander III. leaving an only daughter,

Eva, who, in 1291 or 1292, became the wife of Angus Macintosh of that ilk, chieftain of the clan Macintosh, and conveyed to her husband a considerable portion of the clan Chattan estate. See Macintosh, of Macintoshs.

Dougal dying thus, without male issue, the dignity of captain of the clan Chattan has ever since been the subject of contention between the families of Macintosh, of Macintosh, (claiming the honour as representatives, of the senior line, through the above-mentioned, Eva, the daughter and heiress of Dougal), and the Macphersons of Clunie, (founding their pretensions on their unbroken male filiation and representing Ewan, the next brother of Dougal). The Macintoshs obtaining, with Eva, the daughter of Dougal, the Lochaber estate, the inhabitants thereof followed the chief of Macintosh as their superior and master, who was therefore designed captain of the clan Chattan. The rest of the clan, however, adhering to Kenneth, as the heir male, retired to Badenoch, where they settled, and where they soon acquired large possessions, and have been always styled the clan Macpherson, and likewise captains of the clan Chattan. We venture not an opinion on the merits of the rival houses, but merely give, without note or comment, the pretensions of each. Dougal's cousin-german (the son of his uncle Ewan),

Kenneth Macpherson, became, at Dougal's decease, undoubted male representative of the family. He was living in the reign of Alexander III. and m. Isabel, daughter of Ferquhard Macintosh, of Macintosh, by whom he had two sons,

i. Duncan, his heir.

ii. Bean, or Benjamin, ancestor of the Macphersons of Brin, &c.

The elder son,

Duncan Macpherson, of Clunie, lived in the reign of Robert Bruce; and, being a man of a noble spirit, a steady loyalist, and particularly known to the king, obtained a commission (as head of his clan) from that great prince to reduce the Cumings, and others his rebel subjects in Badenoch, to obedience, which he performed so effectually, that he got a grant of large territorial tracts; and he had also, for his special services against the Cumings, a band and dagger added to his armorial bearing, &c.

He was succeeded by his son,

Donald Phaoil Macpherson, of Clunie, called Donald Moir.

In the beginning of the reign of Robert II. there happened a bloody conflict between the Macphersons and the clan Cameron, at Invernahaven, in Badenoch, where the greatest part of the clan Cameron were killed on the spot; those who survived were taken prisoners, but Donald generously gave them all their liberty.

In this Donald's time the dissensions between the clan Chattan, and the clan Kay, ran so very high, that they took up the attention of the whole court. The king and the Duke of Albany sent the Earls of Crawford and of Murray (then two of the greatest men in the kingdom) to try to settle their differences, and, if possible, to effect a reconciliation, but all to no purpose. It was at last proposed that each clan should choose thirty of their own number to fight in the North Inch of Perth, with their broad-swords only, and thereby put an end to their disputes. The combat was cheerfully agreed to by both parties. They met accordingly on the day appointed: the king and an incredible number of the nobility and gentry being spectators. Prompted by old malice and invertebrate hatred, they fought with inexpressive resolution and fury. Twenty-nine of the clan Kay were killed on the spot; the one who remained unhurt, made his escape by swimming over the river Tay, and, it is said, was put to death by his own clan when he came home, for not choosing to die in the field of honour with his companions, rather than save his life by flying.

Of the clan Chattan nineteen were killed in the field, and the other eleven so much wounded that none of them were able to pursue their single antagonist who fled. This happened on the Monday before the feast of St. Michael, anno 1396; and the victory was adjudged in favour of the clan Chattan.

We must here observe, that the family of Clunie contend that the thirty combatants of the clan Chattan were all Macphersons; "because," say they, "their antagonists, the clan Kay, were followers of the Cunnings of Badenoch, and envied the Macphersons the possession of their lands, which was the cause of their constant feuds."

The Macintoshes also allege, that these thirty were of their party of the clan Chattan, and all Macintoshes.

Donald Moir m. a daughter of Macintosh, of Mammore, in Lochaber, by whom he had two sons,

1. Donald, his heir.
2. Gillicattan-Beg, or Little Malcolm, of whom the Macphersons of Effich, Breakachie, &c. &c. are descended.

In October of the same year, he was with the Earl of Huntly, at the battle of Glenlivet, where the king's troops were defeated under the command of the Earl of Argyle; but he suffered nothing on that account, for Huntly and all his adherents were soon after received into the king's favour.

He married a daughter of Gordon, of Auchanassie, and died about the year 1600, leaving a son,

John Macpherson, of Clunie, &c. who succeeded him, and got a charter under the great seal; "Johanni Macpherson, filio Johannis, &c. terrarum de Tullich, Elrick, &c. in Invernesshire," dated 1613. He was succeeded by his son,

Sir Richard was succeeded, about 1651, by his eldest son,

Sir Richard Pryse, second baronet of Gogerthal; to whom succeeded his brother,

Sir Thomas Pryse, third baronet of Gogerthans, at whose decease, without issue, May 1662, the title and estates devolved on his nephew,

Sir Carberry Pryse, fourth baronet of Gogerthans, during whose lifetime, anno 1650, mines were discovered on the estate at Gogerthans, which, in their time, were not exceeded by any in the kingdom for riches, and obtained the appellation of the Welsh Potosi. By virtue of an act of parliament passed in the 1st of William and Mary, Sir Carbery, in the year 1660, took in several partners, and divided his waste into four thousand shares; got Mr. Waller, a miner from the north, to be his agent, at the salary of £200 per annum, and began to work mines on his own land. The Society of Miners Royal, finding them rich, laid claim to them by their patents, the act not being sufficiently clear. Upon this, a lawsuit ensued, in 1662, between Sir Carbery, and Mr. Sheppard on behalf of the company, whereupon the former and his partners, among whom were several noblemen, the Duke of Leeds, the Marquis of Carmarthen, &c. taking advantage of the times, procured, in the year 1693, a most glorious act, which empowered all the subjects of the crown of England to enjoy and work their own mines, in England and Wales, notwithstanding they contained gold and silver, provided the king and those that claimed under him may have the ore, paying the proprietors for it upon the bank within thirty days after it is raised, and before it is removed for lead: lead, nine pounds per ton; copper, ten pounds, &c. On his success, Sir Carbery is said to have rode on horseback (having relays of horses on the road) from London to Escair-hir within forty-eight hours; so that, in so short a time, the happy news was spread among the inhabitants of that part of Wales. Sir Carbery died without issue, about the year 1695, when the baronetcy expired, while the estates eventually passed to his kinsman,

Thomas Pryse, esq. of Gogerthans, M.P. for Cardigan, 1743, who married Maria Charlotte, daughter and heir of Rowland Pugh, esq. of Mathravine, in Montgomeryshire; and had an only son, John Pugh, who dying issueless, the Gogerthans estates ultimately devolved on his relative,

Lewis Pryse, esq. who wedded Margaret, daughter and co-heiress of Edward Ryves, esq. of Woodstock; and had by her, who died 23rd January, 1798, aged 74, one son and one daughter, viz.

Lewis, who died unmarried, 25th Sept. 1776, aged 25.

Margaret, on whose son the estates eventually devolved.

Mr. Pryse died, 12th March, 1798, aged 62. His only child to leave issue,

Margaret Pryse, wedded Edward-Loveden Loveden. esq. of Bushot,* in the county

* The manor of Buscot was possessed by the Stonors, in 1479, and probably at a much earlier period. In 1597, it was purchased of Sir Francis Stonor by Walter Loveden. The first of the Lovedens who resided in Berkshire, came from Creden, in Bucks, where the family was of consiof Berks, and dying, 30th January, 1784, left issue,

 Pryse Loveden, heir.

 Margaret Loveden, married to the Rev. Samuel Warneford, D. D., brother of Colonel Warneford, of Warneford Place, Wilts.

 Jane Loveden.

 Mr. Loveden, surviving his wife, married, derable antiquity, and settled at Lambourn, having married an heiress of the Earls, of that place. They afterwards removed to Fishfield and Buscot. Edward Loveden, the last male heir of the family, died unmarried, in 1749. His estates eventually passed to his great-nephew, Edward Loveden Townsend, esq. (son of Thomas Townsend, esq. of Cirencester, who died 1st January, 1767, aged 44); and that gentleman assumed, in consequence, the surname and arms of Loveden. He married, as in the text, the heiress of the Pryses, of Gogerddan.

Lineage.

The family of Martyn is of Norman descent, and of considerable antiquity, in the county of Leicester.

In 1221, Robert Martyn was a priest at Ashby Folville; but in early times the family resided at Leicester, and frequently held the highest offices in that ancient and important borough. In the years 1333, 1338, and 1364, John Martyn was mayor of Leicester, and was also (temp. Edward III.) returned member of parliament twice for the borough. Shortly afterwards the family

* James Richards, esq. served the office of sheriff for Leicestershire in 1796.
held possessions at Anstey, anciently called Hanstigle, or Anstige, in the county of Leicester, which they have ever since possessed, and where they have resided to the present time.

25th Henry VI. A.D. 1417, John Martyn held the estate at Anstey, and was witness to a grant of certain lands lying in the fields of Anstey, "in Wolfdale," by John de Leverich, of Leicester, for the repair of the church, bridges, &c. of Anstey, and of which land the family of Martyn, with others, have ever since been the trustees.

He was succeeded by his son, Thomas Martyn, who, about the year 1490, in conjunction with William Haket, (they being the wardens of the chapel of Anstey,) gave and demised the "Breveyard" in Anstey aforesaid to the same purposes as the above bequest, of which they were trustees. He left a son, Thomas Martyn, who resided at Anstey, and was the father of Robert Martyn, who married, in 1588, Bridget Marshall. He purchased part of the property of the abbots and convent of St. Mary de Pratis, at Leicester, lying in Anstey, which remained in the Crown till 1st July, 1609, when it was conveyed in fee simple to the above Robert Martyn, and others. He had one brother, Thomas Martyn, who, with others, had a lease of thirty-one years of "Anstey pastures," an extra-parochial liberty, situate near Anstey, from Queen Elizabeth. This estate, formerly parcel of the "Frith of Leicester," and of the ancient duchy of Lancaster, was, after the expiration of the lease, purchased, in the 4th of James I. (from Robert, earl of Salisbury, lord-treasurer of England), by Robert Martyn of Anstey, on payment of a chief rent. In the ancient grant, the boundaries are described as extending "from the middle of y^o furlonge, by y^o old pale beyond Anstie gate, alias Cowegate, towards Leicester, following y^o same old pale of y^o Frith of Leicester to Groby gate, and from thence eastward by ye newe ditches there, in length two furlongs and three pachens; from thence towards y^o north, unto y^o poole there called Woodcocke-well, and goinge from y^o same poole to the middle of the furlonge near Cowegate, where the boundaries aforesaid doe beginne," The present seat of the family is at Anstey Pastures, the old residence, an ancient house in the village of Anstey, being rendered unfit from age.

This gentleman, the intimate friend of Horace Walpole, was, it is said, to have been created Lord Carnarvon, but his death occurred previous to the intended elevation. Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother, The Reverend Thomas Thistlethwayte, D.D. of Southwick, b. in 1720, who m. Estates—in Hampshire.

Seat—Southwick Park. This seat was formerly a priory of black canons, which became of historical celebrity, from its having been the scene of the marriage of Henry VI. with Margaret of Anjou. The priory was originally built at Porchester, by Henry I. in the year 1133, but was shortly afterwards removed to Southwick, where it continued to flourish till the period of the dissolution. Its privileges were extensive, and in 1233 the canons procured the grant of a market and a fair to be held, but the former has been long disused; they also obtained liberty of free warren in 1281. At the dissolution, the site and demesnes of the priory were granted to John White, esquire of the body to Henry VIII. This gentleman, who died in 1567, left a son, Edward White, esq. of Southwick, high sheriff for Hampshire in 1573, who married Mary, sister and co-heir (with her sister, Honora, Countess of Sussex) of Richard Pondye, esq. of Drayton, and had, with other issue, a son and successor, John White, esq. of Southwick, high sheriff in 1598, whose daughter, Honora, wedded Daniel Norton, son of Sir Richard Norton, knt. of Rotherfield, in Hampshire, the representative of a most ancient and eminent family in that county, and thus the Nortons acquired the Southwick estate. Colonel Daniel Norton was a staunch parliamentarian, and signalized himself in behalf of the Commons during the civil wars. His descendant, Richard Norton, esq. of Southwick, was the last male heir of the family, and bequeathed, by a most extraordinary will, his great landed and personal property to the parliament of Great Britain, in trust for the use "of the poor, hungry, thirsty, naked strangers, sick, wounded, and prisoners, to the end of the world." This singular disposition, however, was set aside, and the estate eventually devolved on the Thistlethwaytes. The present Mr. Thistlethwayte pulled down the fine old house of Southwick, and erected, about twenty years ago, a very handsome new mansion, on a more elevated situation. The estate of Norman Court was sold in 1807 to the present Charles Baring Wall, esq. M.P.

MACLEOD, OF MACLEOD.

MACLEOD, NORMAN, esq. of Macleod, b. 18th July, 1812; succeeded his father 25th of March, 1835.

Lineage.

The genealogy of this very eminent Scotch clan cannot be more interestingly commenced than by an extract from a manuscript memoir of his own life by the late General Macleod, to which we shall have, in the details, other occasions to refer.

"My family," says the general, "is derived from the ancient royal stock of Denmark. In those unhappy times when heroism was little better than piracy, and when the Danes first infested and then subdued England, my ancestor was invested with the tributary sovereignty of the Isle of Man. His history, the succession, or the share these princes of Man had in the predatory wars of that rude age, are lost in dark and vague tradition. The first fact which seems clearly ascertained is, that Leod, the son of the King of Man, in the conquest of that island by the English under the Earl of Derby, fled with his followers to the Hebrides. He there probably found his countrymen, and, either by conquest, agreement, or alliance, possessed himself of that part of those isles now called Lewes and Harries. Leod had two sons, Tormod and Torquil. The first married the daughter of a powerful chief in the Isle of Skye; he was a warrior of great prowess. His father gave or left to him Harries, and, by dint of his valour and by marriage, he possessed himself of a large dominion in Skye, which, together with Harries, I, his lineal successor, inherit. Torquil and his posterity possessed Lewis, which, with other acquisitions, they have since lost, and the family is now represented by Macleod of Rasay. From Leod, whose name is held in high traditional veneration, all his descendants and many of his followers have taken the patronymic of Macleod. My ancestors, whose family seat has always been at Dunvegan, seem to have lived for some centuries, as might be expected, from men who had gained their lands by their swords, and were placed in islands of no easy access. They had frequent wars and alliances with their neighbours in Skye, by which, it appears, they neither gained nor lost: they frequently attacked or assisted the petty kings in Ireland or the chiefs on the coast of Scotland; but they neither increased nor diminished their own possessions. In the reign of King David of Scotland they at last took a charter for their lands, from which time they seem long to have practised the patriarch's life; beloved by their people, unconnected with the government of Scotland, and undisturbed by it."

Olave Olois, King of Man and the isles,

* On the demise of his father, Godred, this prince being no more than ten years of age, his bastard brother, Reginald, was made king by the people, and he, Olave, was allotted the Isle of Lewis, but endeavouring as he advanced in life to recover his patrimony, he was seized by the usurper and delivered to William, King of Scotland, who detained him a captive for seven years; he was released, however, on the death of William, and put into possession of the Isle of Lewis, and being then divorced from his wife by the Pope's legate, on the ground of consanguinity, he married Christina, daughter of Farquhar, Earl of Ross. This led Reginald, the bastard's queen, sister of the repudiated lady, to instigate her own son, Godred Don, to murder Olave: but the plot being discovered, Olave fled to his father-in-law, the Earl of Ross, who furnished him with ships and men, and being likewise assisted by Pol, or Paul, the son of Broke, at the time sheriff of Sky, he surprised Godred (anno 1223) in an island on a fresh water loch in Trotterness, in which there was a chapel and monastery, dedicated to St. Columba. In 1294, Olave and the Bastard divided Man between them, and he subsequently became sole monarch, having subdued all his foes.
MACLEOD, OF MACLEOD.

Olave, by his third wife, Christina, daughter of Farquhar, Earl of Ross, had three sons, Guin or Gunn, of whom the Guins in Sutherland; LEOD, LOYD or LEOD, of whom the clan MACLEOD; and Leonndrishe, of whom the clan Lean

King of Mann and the isles, by the Earl of Ross's daughter, having been fostered in the house of Pol, obtained from him the Herries, from which he (Leod) and his descendants taking their designation, were, in former times, styled of Glenelg and Dunvegan. He married the daughter of Maeradill Armine, a Danish knight, and by her acquired the lands of Menginish, Brac cadale, Dunrinish, Lindale, Vaterness and a part of Trotterness, and had two sons— TORMODE, who succeeded him, and Tor quhil, ancestor of the Macleods of Lewis, whose successors were possessed of a great estate when forfeited in the reign of King JAMES VI. Both the families had the sur name or patronymic of Macleod, but were distinguished by the appellation of Shiel Tormoid, or the descendants of Tormoid, and Shiel Torquhil, or the descendants of Torquhil, and by the designations of "Macleod of Herries," and "Macleod of Lewis.

The elder son and heir, TORMODE MACLEOD, was father of MALCOLM MACLEOD, known by the name of Caishriur, or Thick-legg суд, who obtained a charter, before the year 1360, from King DA

Soon after his accession to the estate he raised a spread out of that part of Lovat's lands called Aird, in revenge of an injury he had received in that country in his youth, brought the cattle to Skye, and slaughtered them in Hearlosh, in a place from that incident yet called Baniscaneigh, or field of Off

HIS property being at one time invaded by enemies, chiefly followers of Macdonald, Lord of the Isles, he came up with the aggressors at Lochsligiehan, and, by a stratagem evincing no ordinary military genius, gave them a total overthrow. The plunder of this exploit he hidled at a rock, which, from the circumstance, retains to this day the name of Creggan ni feavigh, or Rock of the Spoil.

He married a daughter of the Ogilvies, and had two sons, John, his successor, and Tor mod, from whom are descended the branches of the Macleods, called the Mac Vielims, of whom Borline, &c. and the Macvie alister Roys, of whom Balmillie, St. Kilda, &c. The elder son and heir, JOHN MACLEOD, who was remarkable for great bodily strength and personal courage, distinguished himself amongst the compa nions of Donald, Lord of the Isles, at the battle of Haarlaw. He married a daughter of the family of Douglas, and had WILLIAM, his heir, and Tormod, whose male heir was the William of Meidle, mentioned in the destination of the estate made by Sir Rory Macleod, to be hereafter specified, but that branch is now extinct. The elder son,

WILLIAM MACLEOD, alias William Nim bristigh, or the Skirmisher, went by order of King JAMES II. to aid John, Earl of Ross, against his bastard son, and was lost in a naval engagement in Cammisveraiger Bloody-bay, in the sound of Mull. He was married to a daughter of Maclean of Loch prietary of a considerable estate in Jamaica.

nald, and from this chief’s bad treatment of her arose the feuds between MacLeod and Clancaanald; her third husband was M’Donald, of Keppoch. Alexander Crottshe obtained a charter from King James IV., which probably was the first granted to the family of any lands they possessed in the Æbude, or the Western Isles, by the kings of Scotland. The charter is dated 15th June, 1498, and it grants and confirms “Dilecto nostro Alexandro Macloyd filio et heredi quondam Willichei Johannis Macloyd, son de Dunvegan terras quas vulgariter munupantar Ardmianach in Herage de Lewis cum suis pertinentibus omnibus minutis insulis adiectis Ardmianach pertinentibus:” and of the lands of Duriness, Mengiess, Bracadale, and Lyndale, and Twopenny lands of Trotterness, with the office of bailiffy of the whole lands of Trotterness, with the pertinents being within the lordship of the isles, which were held formerly of John, lord of the Isles, and came by his forfeiture to be held of the crown; to be held of the king ward and holding one ship of twenty-six oars, and two ships of sixteen oars, in readiness for the king’s service, as well in time of peace as of war, whenever they should be required so to do, and reserving to the king and his successors the airies or nests of falcons within the said bounds. Hugh, Lord Fraser, of Lovat, obtained two decrees of appraising of the barony of Glenelg, against the said Alexander MacLeod, on the 13th January, 1532, and 3rd March, 1534, on which he was infert in virtue of a charter under the great seal, and on the 13th February, 1539, the said Alexander obtained, on Lord Lovat’s resignation, a charter of that barony from King James V. on which he was infert in the same year, and thus he was regularly invested in the whole family estate. This lard rebuilt the monastery of Rowadale, in Harris. He was s. by his eldest son,

William MacLeod, who was served heir in special to his father, and in virtue of a precept from the chancery was, on the 15th May, 1548, infert in the whole family estate. By his wife, Anne or Agnes Fraser, daughter of Hugh, fifth Lord Fraser, of Lovat, he had an only daughter, Mary, m. first, to Duncan Campbell, of Castlewyne, younger son of Auchinbreek; and, secondly, to M’Niel, of Barra. He was s. at his decease, having thus no son, by his next brother,

Donald MacLeod, who enjoyed the inheritance but a brief period, being murdered in Kingsborrow, in Trotterness, then a part of the estate. He was s. by his brother, Tormod MacLeod, of MacLeod, who in July, 1580, was infert in the whole estate. This lard m. first, Giles, daughter of Heceffect was produced;—Macleod knocked M’Kenzie immediately down, and thus subjected himself to capital punishment; at this period too his country was invaded by the Macdonalds of Slate, while himself and a large number of his clan were in the island of Mull; and although the invaders were gallantly opposed by Alexander Macleod, of Minginish, with so many of the clan as he could collect together, the Macdonalds, after a bloody skirmish in Cuilenn, carried away a spear; in retaliation, when Sir Roderick returned, he made an inroad into Trotterness, and burned and destroyed the whole country. He had also at this time deadly feuds with the family of Clakanald. He was however long and greatly befriended by the Earl of Argyll, and, on the 7th July, 1606, engaged himself by contract to resign his barony of Glenelg into the king’s hands in favour of that nobleman, on his lordship’s becoming bound to grant to him (Sir Roderick) and his heirs male a charter of that barony, to be held of Argyll and his heirs by service of ward, marriage, and relief; he subsequently accommodated matters with Sir Roderick M’Kenzie, and entered into bonds of friendship with Macdonald, of Slate, Macdonald, of Clakanald, and Mackinnon; and at length, on the 4th May, 1610, obtained from James a remission. On the 18th July, in the same year, he purchased from Kenneth, Lord Mackenzie, of Kintail, the barony of Vaterness, disposing to Kintail of the Twopenny land of Trotterness, and the office of bailiwick of the whole lands of Trotterness. On the 19th of the same month he obtained from George Hay, Viscount Duplin, a disposition of the whole estate, and on these titles, with his own resignation, he acquired from the crown a new charter, dated 4th April, 1611, of Vaterness and his other estates, containing a novodamus taxing the ward, and erecting the whole into a barony, to be called the barony of Dunvegan, in favour of himself and the heirs male of his body, remainder to his brother german, Alexander Macleod, of Minginess, remainder to William Macleod, alias Macwilliam Macleod, of Middie, the heir male of Tormod, second son of John, sixth laird of Macleod, remainder to his own nearest and lawful heirs male whatsoever; and upon this charter he was invested 22nd October, 1611. On the 16th September, 1613, he was served heir in special to William Macleod, his uncle, in the lands of Trotterness, Slate, and North Uist, and was invested on 11th February, 1614. Those lands he despoiled of, in February, 1618, to Sir Donald Macdonald, of Slate. Sir Roderick became a great favourite with King James VI. who, on the 18th May, 1610, wrote to him a letter requiring his assistance in an affair to be communicated to him by the Earl of Dunbar, which his majesty says, “he shall not fail to remember, when any occasion fit for your good shall be offered.” In 1613 the king conferred the honour of knighthood on him, and in the June of that year he wrote three several letters from Greenwich, recommending Macleod and his affairs, in the strongest terms, to the privy council of Scotland. On the 16th June, 1616, his majesty granted to Sir Roderick a license, under his hand and seal, to come out of Scotland to court whenever he should think convenient, without being liable to any challenge or pursuit for so doing. Sir Roderick died in the beginning of 1626, leaving issue by his wife, Isabella, daughter of Macdonald, of Glengary, five sons and five daughters, viz.

1. John, his successor.
2. Roderick, of Talliskir.

* This gentleman, Roderick Macleod, of Talliskir, on the death of his elder brother, John, who succeeded his father, and became fourteenth laird of Macleod, was appointed tutor to his nephew, Roderick Macleod, the fifteenth laird, John’s son and heir, then in minority. On the arrival of Charles II. in Scotland, in 1650, and the issue of his Majesty’s proclamation, commanding all his subjects to repair to the Royal Standard with as many men as they could levy, Roderick immediately raised a regiment, seven hundred strong, of his clan and followers, and appointed his brother Norman, of Echma, lieutenant-colonel, who cheerfully obeyed the royal summons, and after remaining some time with the king’s army, received orders to complete his corps by a levy of three hundred men more. This he accomplished; but being in want of arms, he obtained an order on John Dunkle, then commissary, to supply him. The commissary, however, refused to comply, unless Talliskir would pass his bond for the value, which, rather than prejudice the service, was passed. This bond was afterwards assigned to William McCalloch, who used utmost diligence upon it against Talliskir, during the usurpation. These proceedings were at last suspended; and Colonel Macleod relieved from the claim by act of parliament, in 1661. At the head of this regiment, himself and his brother attended the King to the fatal field of Worcester, where almost every man of the corps was either killed, or taken prisoner, and transported to the plantations. The colonel had a narrow escape, and after concealing himself a short time in England, got in disguise to Scotland, where he became active in encouraging a spirit of loyalty among the Highland clans; the best affected of whom met at Glenelg on the 21st April, 1653, and agreed on raising a body of two thousand men for the King’s service, and to apprise his Majesty of Great Britain, the King of Denmark, the Princess Royal, and the States of Holland, with their resolution. This mission was entrusted to Lieutenant-Col. Normand Macleod, to be carried to King Charles, who conveyed in return a most flattering letter from the exiled monarch to his brother.
John More, from his great size, was infeft in the whole family estate, 9th November, 1626, on a precept from the Chancery, and was subsequently under a decree of the Privy Council of Scotland, compelled to resign his barony of Glenelg in the king's hands, in favour of the Earl of Argyll, (son of the nobleman with whom his father had entered into the contract,) and to take a charter of it, holding of his lordship, paying twenty thousand merks for taxing the ward, marriage and relief, by which tenure it is yet held of the house of Argyll. This lard was a staunch Royalist, and opposed the measures of the Covenanters from the commencement, for which conduct he received a letter of thanks from King Charles I. dated at Durham 2nd May, 1639. He continued firm in his allegiance, to the hour of his death, which happened in September, 1649. He was remarkable for his goodness and piety, and took so much pains to civilize the country, that he acquired the appellation of Lot in Sodor. He m. Sibella, lands, attended the council of war already mentioned, and was deputed to convey the result of the proceedings to King Charles. He was afterwards active in the many attempts made to re-establish the King's affairs in Scotland, and when General Middleton was no longer able to keep the field, but obliged to retire to the Western Isles, Lieut.-colonel Macleod conducted him to his own house at Berneray, where he remained in security, until provided with means, by his gallant host, to make his escape beyond sea. After the Restoration, he received, with his brother, the honour of knighthood, but got no other reward, except through the Earl of Middleton he obtained the forfeited estate of a certain Highland family, which took place in consequence of a correspondence discovered between its chief and the usurpers. Sir Normand m. first, Margaret, only child of John M'Kenzie, of Lochin, second son of Kenneth, Lord Kintail, by whom he had an only son, John Macleod, of Cantulich, who wedded Isabella, eldest daughter of Kenneth M'Kenzie, of Scotwell, and had a numerous issue, of whom the eldest son, John Macleod, of Muiravanse, was father of Alexander Macleod, advocate, and Elizabeth, the wife of John Macdonald, of Largie, and the second son, Donald Macleod, of Bernera, had, by his first marriage, Norman Macleod, of Unish, and Captain Alexander Macleod, of the Lord Mainsfield Indianan, with several daughters; and by his second marriage, John Macleod. Sir Normand espoused, secondly, Catherine, eldest daughter of Sir James Macdonald, of Slate, by whom he had

William, of Laskindir, father of Alexander, of Laskindir, of Roderick, clerk to the signet; of Margaret, m. to Ronald Macdonald, of Cluakkland, and Alice, the wife of Roderick M'Neill.

daughter of Kenneth, Lord M'Kenzie, of Kintail, and has issue,

Roderick, 7 successive lairds.

John,

Mary, m. first, to Sir James Macdonald, of Slate, and secondly, to Muir, of Rowallan.

Marion, m. to Donald Macdonald, captain of Clanhuala, and was mother of Allan, captain of Clanhuala, who fell at Sheriff Muir.

Giles, m. first, to Sir Allan M'Lean, of Duart, and secondly, to Campbell, of Glendaruel.

Sibella, m. to Thomas Fraser, of Beaufort, and was mother of Simon Fraser, the last Lord Lovat, (see p. 297).

Margaret, m. to Sir James Campbell, of Lairs.

The eldest son,

Roderick MacLeod, fifteenth laird of Macleod, was served heir in special to his father 22nd November, 1653, and on the 24th February in the next year infet in the whole estate, except the barony of Glenelg, in which he was infet 19th October, 1677. This chief being under age until the close of the great rebellion, his uncles, Sir Roderick and Sir Normand MacLeod, with their clans and followers, having adhered to the royal cause, the estate of Macleod was sequestered, but when all Scotland submitted, the laird at length capitulated, 30th May, 1655, and was admitted by General Monk, to Oliver's protection, on his finding security for his peaceable deportment under the penalty of £6000, and paying a fine of £2500; his uncles were, however, so obnoxious, that they were expressly excepted in the capitulation, and were obliged to live ever after in seclusion. He married Margaret, eldest daughter of Sir John M'Kenzie, of Tarbat, but dying in January, 1664, without issue, was s. by his brother.

John MacLeod, of Macleod, who was served heir on the 11th August, 1664, and infet in the whole estate held of the crown, on a precept from the chancery, and in Glenelg, on a precept of "clare constat" from the subject superior. He m. Florence, second daughter of Sir James Macdonald, of Slate, and had issue,

1. Roderick, 7 successive lairds.
2. Normand, 3

4. Isabella, m. to Stuart, of Appin.
5. Janet, m. to Sir James Campbell, of Auchinbreck.

He died in August, 1693, and was s. by his eldest son,

Roderick MacLeod, of Macleod, who wedded, in February, 1694, Lady Isabella 3.

M'Kenzie, third daughter of Kenneth, Earl of Seaforth, and dying in August, 1693, without issue, was s. by his brother,

Normand MacLeod, of Macleod, who m. in September, 1703, Anne, daughter of Hugh Fraser, eleventh Lord Lovat, and was s. by his posthumous son, Normand MacLeod, nineteenth Laird of Macleod, who, on the 10th November, 1731, was infet as heir to his father in the barony of Glenelg, and on the 11th May, 1732, as heir to his grandfather in the remainder of the estate.

Of this gentleman, his grandson, General MacLeod, thus speaks: "My grandfather Normand was an only and posthumous son. By the frugality of his ancestors, and the savings of his minority, he found an ancient inheritance in the most prosperous condition. With a body singularly well made, and active, he possessed very lively parts; the circumstance of the times introduced him to the public with great advantage; and till the unfortunate 1745 he was much considered. An attachment to the race of Stuart then prevailed in Scotland, and many of the leading men in England still favoured it. His independent fortune and promising character early obtained him the representation in parliament of Inverness-shire, his native county. The number and fidelity of his clan, and his influence with his neighbours, were known, and there is reason to believe that many allurements were held out to seduce him into engagements which were then considered only dangerous, but not guilty or dishonourable. It would be neither pleasing nor useful to inquire how deeply he was concerned in the preludes to the Rebellion, nor indeed have I been able to learn; it is certain that in the year 1746, he raised a company of his vassals to serve under my father, his only son, in Lord Loudon's regiment, and afterwards appeared, with six hundred of his clan, in defence of the present royal family. From this period he was unfortunate: the Jacobites treated him as an apostate, and the successful party did not reward his loyalty. The former course of his life had been expensive: his temper was convivial and hospitable, and he continued to impair his fortune until his death, in 1772. He was the first of our family who was led, by the change of manners, to leave the patriarchal government of his clan, and to mix in the pursuits and ambition of the world. It was not then common to see the representatives of the Highland tribes endeavouring to raise themselves to eminence in the nation, by the arts of eloquence, or regular military gradation; they were contented with their private opulence, and local dignity; or trusted their rank in the state to the antiquity of their families, or their provincial influence. Had Norman felt, in his youth, the necessity of professional or parliamentary exertions, and had he received a suitable education, he would not have left his family in distress; but the excellence of his parts, and the vigour of his mind would have attained a station more advantageous for the flight of his successors."

The laird married, first, Janet, daughter of Sir Donald Macdonald, of Slate, and had one son, John, his successor. He espoused, secondly, Anne, daughter of William Martin, of Inchture, and by her had three daughters, Elizabeth, Anne, and Rich-Mary. His only son, John, m. Emilia, only daughter of Brodie, of Brodie, lord Lyon king of arms, and dying 7th January, 1767, left, with five daughters, an only son, Norman, successor to his grand-father.

Macleod died, as already stated, in 1772, and was succeeded by his grandson.

Norman Macleod, twentieth laird of Macleod, of whom the most interesting details which can be furnished are those given by himself in the manuscript memoir to which we have already referred.

"I was born on the fourth day of March, 1754, at Brodie House, the seat of my maternal grandfather, Brodie, of Brodie, Lyon king of arms. During my boyhood, my father, with his family, went to reside at Beverley, in Yorkshire, where he died, and was buried in the Minster. I was placed under the care of Mr. George Stuart, one of the professors in the College of Edinburgh; and the abilities, care, and maternal love of my surviving parent, left me no other reason to regret my father than that which nature dictates for a brave, worthy, and so near relation.

"In the year 1771, a strange passion for emigrating to America seized many of the middling and poorer sort of Highlanders. The change of manners in their chieftains, since 1745, produced effects which were evidently the proximate cause of this unnatural dereliction of their own, and appetite for a foreign, country. The laws which deprived the Highlanders of their arms and garb, would certainly have destroyed the feudal military power of the chieftains; but the fond attachment of the people to their patriarchs would have yielded to no laws. They were themselves the destroyers of that pleasing influence. Sucked into the vortex of the nation, and allure to the capitals, they degenerated from patriarchs and chieftains to landlords; and they became as auxiliary for increase of rent, as the newly made lairds, the novi homines, the mercantile purchasers of the lowlands. Many tenants, whose fathers for generations had enjoyed their little spots, were removed for higher bidders; those who agreed at any price for their ancient lavs—their patrie domi—were forced to pay an increased rent, without being taught any new method to increase their produce. In the Hebrides, especially, this change was not gradual, but sudden; and sudden and baleful were its effects. The people, freed by the laws from the power of the chieftains, and loosened by the chieftains themselves from the bonds of affection, turned their eyes and their hearts to new scenes. America seemed to open its arms to receive every discontented Briton. To those possessed of very small sums of money, it offered large possessions of uncultivated but excellent land, in a preferable climate; to the poor, it held out high wages for labour; to all, it promised property and independence. Many artful emissaries, who had an interest in the transportation or settlement of emigrants, industriously displayed these temptations; and the desire of leaving their country for the new land of promise became furious and epidemic. Like all other popular furies, it infected not only those who had reason to complain of their situation or injuries, but those who were most favoured, and most comfortably settled. In the beginning of 1772, my grandfather, who had always been a most beneficial and beloved chieftain, but whose necessities had lately induced him to raise his rents, became much alarmed by this new spirit, which had reached his clan. Aged and infirm, he was unable to apply the remedy in person; he devolved the task on me; and gave me for an assistant our nearest male relation, Colonel Macleod, of Talisker. The duty imposed on us was difficult: the estate was loaded with debt; incumbered with a numerous issue from himself and my father, and loaded with some jointures; his tenants had lost, in that severe winter, a third of their cattle, which constituted their substance; their spirits were soured by their losses, and the late augmentations of rent; and their ideas of America were inflamed by the strongest representations, and the example of their neighbouring clans. My friend and I were empowered to grant such deductions in the rents as might seem necessary and reasonable; but we found it terrible to decide between the justice to creditors, the necessities of an ancient family, which we ourselves represented, and the claims and distresses of an impoverished tenantry. To God I owe, and I trust will ever pay, the most fervent thanks, that this terrible task enabled us to lay the foundation of circumstances, though then unlooked for, that I hope will prove the means, not only of the rescue, but of the aggrandizement of our family. I was young, and had the warmth of the liberal passions natural to that age; I called the people of the different districts of our estate together; I laid before them the situation of our family—its debts, its burdens, its distress; I acknowledged the hardships under which they laboured; I described and reminded them of the manner in which they and their ancestors had lived with mine; I combated their passion for America, by a real account of the dangers and hardships they might encounter there; I besought them to love their young chief, and to renew with him the ancient manners; I promised to live among them; I threw myself upon them; I recalled to their remembrance an ancestor who had also found his estate in ruin, and whose memory was held in the highest veneration; I desired every district to point out some of their oldest and most respected men, to settle with me every claim, and I promised to do every thing for their relief which in reason I could. My worthy relation ably seconded me, and our labour was not in vain. We gave considerable abatements in the rents: few emigrated; and the clan conceived the most lively attachment to me, which they most effectually manifested. When we were engaged in these affairs, my grandfather died, and was buried at St. Andrews. I returned to Hampshire, and easily prevailed with my excellent mother and sisters to repair, in performance of my promise to my clan, to Dunvegan. In my first visit to Skye, Mr. Dennant arrived there; and he had kindly noticed in his Tour the exertions we then made.

"I remained at home with my family and clan till the end of 1774; but I confess that I consider this as the most gloomy period of my life. Educated in a liberal manner, fired with ambition, fond of society, I found myself in confinement in a remote corner of the world, without any hope of extinguishing the debts of my family, or of ever emerging from poverty and obscurity. A long life of painful economy seemed my only method to perform the duty I owed to my ancestors and posterity; and the burden was so heavy, that only partial relief could be hoped even from that melancholy sacrifice. I had also the torment of seeing my mother and sisters, who were fitted for better scenes, immured with me; and their affectionate patience only added to my sufferings. In 1774, Dr. Samuel Johnson, with his companion, Mr. Boswell, visited our dreary regions: it was my good fortune to be enabled to practise the virtue of hospitality on this occasion. The learned traveller spent a fortnight at Dunvegan, and indeed amply repaid our cares to please him, by the most instructive and entertaining conversation. I procured for him the company of the most learned clergymen and sagacious inhabitants of the Islands, and every other assistance within our power to the inquiries he wished to make."

Thus abruptly terminates General Macleod's own narrative. It has, however, been continued by his son and successor, the late Laird; from whose papers it appears, that, wearied with the inactivity, and disgusted with the obscurity of the Isle of Skye, he at length determined upon adopting the profession of arms, and obtained leave to raise an independent company, with the rank of captain. "It was about this time," says his son, "that being thrown from his horse, near Inverness, he was carried to Snedle House, where he first became acquainted with his future wife, who nursed him while confined by the accident. They were soon after married, and embarked for America, but were taken prisoners on the voyage, and very kindly treated by Washington, of whom I have often heard him speak in terms of the greatest affection." Soon after his return to Britain, on the 21st March, 1780, he was advanced to the rank of lieutenant-colonel, having raised a second battalion for the 42nd regiment. This he accompanied to India, and there acquired high reputation in the war against Tipoo Sahib. In a correspondence which took place between the Sultan and General Macleod (at this time he had the command of a division of the Indian army, although but twenty-nine years of age), the following spirited passage occurs in one of the general's despatches: "You, or your interpreter, have, said, in your letter to me, that I have lied, or made a mensonge. Permit me to inform you, prince, that this language is not good for you to give, or me to receive; and if I were alone with you in the desert you would not dare to say these words to me. An Englishman scorns to lie; an English general who would dare to lie would be crushed to pieces by the just rage of our magnanimous king. You have said that I lied, or made a mensonge. This is an irreparable affront to an English warrior. I tell you our customs; if you have courage enough to meet me, take a hundred of your bravest men on foot, meet me on the seashore, I will fight you, and a hundred men of mine will fight with yours." Mr. John Norman Macleod continues: "At the time my father got the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and went to India in 1782 or 1783 (I believe the former), Mrs. Macleod (his first wife) went with his mother and children to France, where she died, leaving a son and daughter, He m. shortly after, my mother, Saral, dau. of N. Stackhouse, esq. second in council, at Bombay; she was then in her seventeenth year, and he just thirty. They had been but a short time acquainted, but long enough for a man of his warm passions to form the strongest attachment to her. I know at this moment but little of the public history of my father at that period. From subsequent misfortunes that befel him, my mother has never willingly talked of his career in India; all I know is, that he, a very young lieutenant-colonel in the king’s service, commanded the army on the Malabar coast, taking rank according to the regulation of those days of all Company’s officers of the same rank, though of older standing; he served with great success, and made a good deal of money, about £100,000; but I believe, although not addicted to play, he suffered himself to comply with the custom of his associates, and lost all, or nearly all of his savings. In consequence of a new order, that Company’s officers should hold rank according to the dates of their commissions, my father found himself under the necessity of resigning his command to those who had formerly obeyed him; and remaining in this situation not being consistent with his ideas of military propriety, he returned to England in the year 1789. My mother, with his children, followed him to Britain in 1790; and he was shortly afterwards unanimously returned at the general election for the county of Inverness.” We are subsequently told that, owing to some misunderstanding with Henry Dundas, afterwards Lord Melville, he joined the opposition, and became one of the most strenuous opponents of Mr. Pitt’s administration. “His military prospects (we continue to quote from his son) were now closed for ever, and from the early age of thirty-five till forty-seven, when he died, was to him a constant scene of disappointment, misfortune, and remorse. His income was far from being competent to his rank in life. I suspect it did not amount to more than two thousand a year; and while he was in America and India, his commissioners had sold large tracts of his estate (Harris and Loch Snizort Side), for less than half their value. As he was the first of the family who parted with his inheritance, he was doubly grieved to find that he had impoverished his heirs, without materially benefiting himself.” At the general election which followed the dissolution in 1796, General M’Leod stood a contest against the Paget family for the borough of Milburn Port, and was defeated, at an expense of £15,000; to meet which, he was obliged to dispose of a very large tract of his estate, Vaternish, which brought exactly that sum, although a few years after it sold for £30,000. He subsequently resided at Edinburgh, and in 1801 removed to a small country house he had hired at Newhaven. His health, which had long been declining, now began rapidly to decay. He accepted in this year an invitation from Captain Murray, of the Prince of Wales Excise yacht, to take a trip to Guernsey, in hope that a change of air might be of service; but he hardly arrived there, when his family received an account of his death. By his first wife (Mary Mackenzie, Saddie), General M’Leod had a son, Norman, who died young, and a daughter, Mary, who m. Captain Norman Ramsay, and died shortly after. By the second (Sarah Stackhouse) he had surviving issue,

Lineage.

This family, originally Saxon, took its surname from the barony of Swinton, in Berwickshire.

EDULF DE SWINTON, of Swinton, who appears to have flourished in the reigns of MACBETH and MALCOLM CANMORE, left a son,

LULPH or LULF, living in the beginning of King Edgar, (whose reign terminated in 1107,) and was father of UDARD, sheriff of the county of Berwick temp. Alexander I. who was succeeded by

HERNULF or A'LNULF, who obtained a charter from David I. in which the three preceding proprietors of the lands and barony are named "David rex Scotorum, et Henricus suis filius omnibus vicecomitibus suis, cunctisque baronibus Franciis et Anglis salutem, scitatis quod dedi et concessi huic meo militi Hernalfo Swinto infeodo, sibi et heredi suo; cum omnibus hominibus suisque pecuniiis tenere bene et liberre et honorifice, sicut ullos ex meis baronibus, melius ac liberrius tenet, et quicquid ad eam pertinent per casdem consuetudines, per quaus Lulfus filius Edulf, et Uardus filius suus tenuerunt, tenere de Sancto Cuthberto et de me, xl solidos reddente monachis de Dunelmia, sine omnibus aliis servitiis, Testibus, Willielmo filio Duncani et Madue consule et comite Duncano, et Radulo Luelde Marmion Mar-
HENRY DE SWINTON (Alan's successor) was, with many others of his countrymen, compelled to submit to King Edward I. of England, when he had overrun Scotland, anno 1296. This Henry was s. by

HENRY DE SWINTON, who is witness in a charter by Isabella Senescalca, domina de Fife, to Michael Balfour, of an annuity of eight merks sterling out of the lands of Easterferry. He was s. by

Sir John Swinton, a distinguished soldier and statesman, and high in favour with the Second and Third Roberts. His military achievements are recorded by the ancient Scottish writers. At the battle of Otterburn, 31st July, 1388, he had a chief command, and to his intrepidity the Scots were indebted for the great victory obtained over the English (although with the loss of Douglas) on that memorable field. It is related of Sir John, that in the wars with the English, he visited the enemy's camp, and gave a general challenge to fight any of their army. He was appointed one of the ambassadors extraordinary by King Robert III. to negotiate a treaty with the court of England, for which they got a safe conduct from King Richard II. for themselves and sixty knights in their retinue, 4th July, 1392. He was afterwards employed upon another negotiation, and obtained a safe conduct from King Henry IV. to go to England, with twenty horsemen in his retinue, 7th July, 1400. The gallant bearing and heroic death of the Lord of Swinton, at the fatal battle of Homildon, have afforded a subject for the poetical genius of Scott, and are the materials on which he founded the drama of "Haledon Hill." Pinkerton thus records Swinton's fall: "The English advanced to the assault, and Henry Percy was about to lead them up the hill, when March caught his bridle, and advised him to advance no farther, but to pour the dreadful shower of English arrows into the enemy. This advice was followed with the usual fortune; for in all ages the bow was the English weapon of victory, and though the Scots, and perhaps the French, were superior in the use of the spear, yet this weapon was useless after the distant bow had decided the combat. Robert the Great, sensible of this at the battle of Bannockburn, ordered a prepared detachment of cavalry to rush among the English archers at the commencement, totally to disperse them, and stop the deadly effusion. But Douglas now used no such precaution; and the consequence was, that his people, drawn up on the face of the hill, presented one general mark to the enemy, none of whose arrows descended in vain. The Scots fell without fight and unrevenge, till a spirited knight, Swinton, exclaimed aloud, 'O my brave countrymen! what fascination has seized you to-day, that you stand like deer to be shot, instead of indulging your ancient courage, and meeting your enemies hand to hand? Let those who will, descend with me, that we may gain victory, and life, or fall like men.' This being heard by Adam Gordon, between whom and Swinton there existed a deadly feud, 'attended with the mutual slaughter of many followers, he instantly fell on his knees before Swinton, begged his pardon, and desired to be dubbed a knight by him whom he must now regard as the wisest and boldest of that order in Britain. The ceremony performed, Swinton and Gordon descended the hill, accompanied by only one hundred men, and a desperate valour led the whole body to death. Had a similar spirit been shewn by the Scottish army, it is probable that the event of that day would have been different." He m. first, Margaret, Countess of Douglas and Marr, widow of William, first Earl of Douglas, but by that lady had no issue; and secondly, Lady Margaret Stewart, daughter of King Robert II. by whom he had a son,

Sir John Swinton, of that ilk, who succeeded him, a man of singular merit, and a soldier of as undaunted valour. At the battle of Beauge, in France, in 1420, Swinton unhorsed the Duke of Clarence, the English general, brother of King Henry V., whom he distinguished by a coronet set with precious stones, which the duke wore around his helmet, and wounded him so grievously in the face with his lance that he immediately expired. Sir John afterwards fell at the battle of Vernoi, where the Scots' auxiliaries were commanded by the gallant Earl of Buchan, constable of France, son of Robert, Duke of Albany, governor of Scotland in 1424. Swinton m. first, Lady Marjory Dunbar, daughter of George, Earl of March; but she died without issue. He espoused, secondly, his cousin-german, Lady Marjory Stewart, daughter of Robert, Duke of Albany. He was s. by his son,

Sir John Swinton, who, being an infant at his father's death, was left under the care of William de Wedderburn, scutifer. Sir John died about the year 1493, leaving (with a daughter, Margaret, who m. John Falside, and in her widowhood was prioress of the monastery of Elcho) a son and successor,

Lineage.

William Penn, of Minety, in the county of Gloucester, and of Penn's Lodge, in Wiltshire, died in 1591, and lies buried before the altar in the church of Minety; in which parish he inherited a patrimonial estate, long possessed by his ancestors, but which, soon after his death, was alienated to a branch of the family of Pleydell. His son,

William Penn, who predeceased his father, married a Gloucestershire lady named Rastall, and left two sons, William, whose line is extinct, and

Giles Penn, Captain R.N. who held for some time the office of English consul in the Mediterranean. He m. into the family of Gilbert (which came originally from Yorkshire, but which, soon after his death, was alienated to a branch of the family of Pleydell). He was then settled in Somersetshire, and had two sons, George, envoy to Spain, who died unmarried, and

Sir William Penn, b. at Bristol in 1621, who adopting the gallant profession of his father, became a distinguished naval officer, Admiral of England, and was one of the commanders at the taking of Jamaica. He was passionately attached from his youth to maritime affairs, and, before he had reached his thirty-second year, had gone through the various promotions of captain, rear-admiral of Ireland, vice-admiral of England, general in the first Dutch war, and commander-in-chief under the Duke of York, in the signal victory over the Dutch in 1665, on which occasion he was knighted. On his return he was sent to parliament by the borough of Weymouth: in 1660 he was made a commissioner of the admiralty and navy, governor of the fort and town of Kinsale, vice-admiral of Munster, and a member of that provincial council. He then took leave of the sea, but still continued his other employments till 1669, when, through bodily infirmities, he withdrew to Wanstead in Essex, and there died in 1670. Although he was thus engaged, both under the parliament and king, he took no part in the civil war, but adhered to the duties of his profession. Beside the reputation of a great and patriotic officer, he acquired credit for having improved the navy in several important departments. He was the author of many little tracts on this subject, some of which are preserved in the British Museum. The monument erected to his memory, by his wife, in Redcliffe church, Bristol, contains a short account of his life and promotions; but in Thurloe's State Papers there are minutes of his proceedings in America, not mentioned on the monument, which he delivered to Oliver Cromwell's council in September, 1655. He arrived at Portsmouth in August, and thence wrote to Cromwell, but receiving no answer, he appeared before the council, and was committed to the tower, for leaving his command without permission, to the hazard of the army, but soon after discharged.† Sir William m. Their only child, William, dying unmarried in 1756, his estates passed by will to the noble house of Cavendish.

Sir William Penn died in 1670, and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM PEnn, who was born in the parish of St. Catherine, near the Tower of London, 14th October, 1644. This eminent man entered as a commoner at Christchurch, Oxford, in 1660, and remained at the university two years, where he formed an intimacy with Robert Spencer and John Locke. Though fond at this time of youthful sports, he had given his attention to the preaching of one Thomas Loe, a quaker, and thence imbibed strong religious impressions. He withdrew, with some other students, from the national worship, and held private meetings, where they preached and prayed among themselves. This line of conduct giving great offence to the heads of the college, Mr. Penn, though but sixteen years of age, was fined for non-conformity, and, continuing his religious exercises, was at length expelled the university. On his return home, his father, who was highly incensed, sent him to France, in company with some persons of rank; and he continued abroad a considerable period, returning not only well skilled in the French language, but a polite and accomplished gentleman. He was subsequently entered as a student of law, at Lincoln's Inn, but his sojourn there was of short duration; for in 1666, having been entrusted by his father with the management of a considerable estate in Ireland, he was at Cork, where he met with a person whom he had known at Oxford, who had become a proselyte to quakerism; and he found the principles of his friend so congenial to his enthusiastic feelings, that he immediately adopted them. This step produced an open breach with his father * on his return to England; but he was too zealous a professor to be reconciled by harsh treatment, and in 1668 he was committed to the Tower for preaching against the Established Church. While in confinement he composed a tract entitled, "No Cross, no Crown; a discourse showing the nature and discipline of the Holy Cross of Christ," which is the most esteemed of his writings. He was no sooner released than he recommenced preaching, and, being in consequence arrested, together with his companion William Mead, was indicted at the Old Bailey Sessions for illegally holding forth, and although acquitted by the verdict of the jury, they were arbitrarily imprisoned in Newgate by order of the court. On obtaining his liberty, Penn visited Holland and Germany as a missionary, but he hastily returned to England, owing to the illness of his father, whom he found on his death-bed, and with whom he effected a reconciliation previous to the old gentleman's decease, which happened shortly after.†

In 1681, King Charles II. in consideration of the services of Mr. Penn's father, and several debts due to him from the crown at the period of his demise, granted to William Penn and his heirs the province lying on the west side of the river Delaware, in North America, which thence obtained the name of Pennsylvania. Mr. Penn immediately published a brief account of the province, proposing an easy purchase of land, and good terms of settlement for such as were inclined to remove thither. A great number of purchasers came forward, and formed a company, called, "The Free Society of Traders in Pennsylvania." Shortly after, the enlightened and beneficent proprietor sailed to colonize his newly-acquired territories, with a band of persecuted Quakers, who followed his fortune; and having entered into a treaty with the Indian natives;‡ founded the city of Philadelphia.

He abolished negro slavery in his dominions, and established a code of laws for their internal government, which contributed much to the prosperity of the colony. On the accession of King James II. Penn became a great favourite at court, and was one of the most zealous advisers of the measures for allowing liberty of conscience which then appeared. The Revolution placed the Quakers, in common with other dissenters, under the protection of the laws in the exercise of their religion, and Penn, having witnessed this favourable change in their situation, returned to America, where he was joyfully received, and found the affairs of his settlement in a prosperous condition. After residing in Pennsylvania a few years, he came home to negotiate some matters with the British Government, relative to the commerce of the colony, whither he did not again return, dying at his seat at Ruscombe, in Berkshire, in 1718. Beside the tract already mentioned, Penn was the author of "The Province of Penn," "The True Work of the Faith and Practice of the People called Quakers," "A Brief Account of the Rise and Progress of the Quakers;" "A Treatise on Oaths," &c. &c.

"William Penn, the great legislator of the Quakers," says Father O'Leary, "had the success of a conqueror in establishing and defending his colony, among savage tribes, without ever drawing the sword; the goodness of the most benevolent rulers, in treating his subjects as his own children; and the tenderness of an universal father, who opened his arms to all mankind without distinction of sect or party. In his republic, it was not the religious creed, but personal merit, that entitled every member of society to the protection and emoluments of the state." With respect to the settlement, it has been supposed that, during the seventy years while William Penn's principles prevailed, or the Quakers had the principal share in the government, there was no spot on the globe where, number for number, there was so much virtue or so much true happiness as among the inhabitants of Pennsylvania; and that, during the time it exhibited (setting aside could command them with a wish, for the annals of life are greater than the fear of death . . . . Three things I command unto you. First, let nothing in this world tempt you to wrong your conscience; so you will keep peace at home, which will be a feast to you in a day of trouble. Secondly, whatever you design to do, lay it justly and time it seasonably, for that gives security and dispatch. Lastly, be not troubled at disappointments; for if they may be recovered, do it; if they can't, trouble is vain."‡ Penn's friendly and pacific manner of treating the Indians, produced in them an extraordinary love for him and his people; so that they have maintained a perfect amity with the Anglo-Americans in Pennsylvania ever since.
the difficulties of a new colony) a kind of little paradise upon earth. Hence the period from 1682 to 1754, with the same exception, has been denominated the golden age of Pennsylvania. Nor has this name been improperly bestowed upon it, if we examine into facts; for in a constitution where merit only was publicly rewarded, there must have been a constant growth of virtue, and, of course happiness with it. In a constitution, also, where every man had free scope for his exertions, and the power of enjoying the fruits of his own labour, there must have been the constant opportunity of improving his temporal condition.

William Penn, m. first, Guilielma Maria, daughter of Sir William Springett, and had by her a son, William, to whom his father left his estates in Ireland. This William was father of another William Penn, whose daughter, Christiana, marrying -- Gaskell, esq. of Gloucestershire, was mother of Alexander-Forbes Gaskell, esq. of Shannagarry, in the county of Cork.

He wedded, secondly, Hannah, daughter of Thomas Callowhill, of Bristol, and had by her three sons, viz.

John, who died unm. in 1740, and bequeathed his moiety of the province of Pennsylvania to his brother Thomas.

Thomas, of whom presently.

Mary Masters, of the same place, and had issue two sons and two daughters, viz. William, Richard, Hannah, and Mary, the wife of Samuel Paynter, esq. of Richmond, Surrey.

William Penn died in 1718, and was interred in the Quakers’ burial ground at Jordans, near Beaconsfield. His second son by his second marriage,

Thomas Penn, esq. of Stoke Pogies, in the county of Buckingham, espoused, in 1751, Lady Juliana Fermor, fourth daughter of Thomas, first Earl of Pomfret, and by her, who was born in 1729, and died in 1801, had issue,

I. William, died an infant in 1753.
II. William, also died in infancy.
III. Thomas, died an infant.
IV. John, heir to his father.
V. Granville, successor to his brother.

I. Juliana, m. to William Baker, esq. of Bayfordbury, Herts, and died leaving a daughter, Sophia-Margaret, relict of the Hon. and Most Rev.

II. Louisa, died young.

Mr. Penn died in 1725, and his demise is thus recorded in the Pennsylvania Gazette. “By the last ships from London we have an account that, on the 21st March last, died the Hon. Thomas Penn, esq. one of the proprietors of this province, and last survivor of all the children of its illustrious founder, William Penn, whose virtues, as well as abilities, he inherited in an eminent degree. He was born 8th March, 1701-2, being a few months younger than our present charter of privileges, which he constantly declared himself desirous of preserving inviolable, as the great fundamental compact by which all ought to be bound. He had the principal direction of the affairs of this government for half a century, and saw such an increase of population, arts, and improvement in it, as during the like period, perhaps, no man before him ever beheld in a country of his own. He rejoiced at the sight; was a kind landlord, and gave a liberal, often a magnificent, encouragement to our various public institutions. The hospital, the college, our different libraries, and religious societies, can witness the truth of this. For he did not confine himself to sect or party; but, as became his station, and the genius of his father’s benevolent policy, he professed himself a friend to universal liberty, and extended his bounty to all. In short, the grave, which generally stops the tongue of flattery, should open the mouth of justice. We may be permitted to conclude his character by saying, that he was both a great and a good man.”

He was interred in his family vault at Stoke Pogies, and a. by his son,

John Penn, esq. of Stoke Pogies, b. 22nd February, 1760, a justice of the peace for Buckinghamshire, and governor of Portland Castle, in the county of Dorset. He died unmarried, 21st June, 1831, the last proprietary and hereditary governor of the heretofore province (now state) of Pennsylvania, and was a. by his brother, the present Granville Penn, esq. of Stoke Park.

SEYMER-KER, HENRY, esq. of Hanford, in the county of Dorset, succeeded his father in 1834. Mr. Seymer was elected fellow of All Souls’s College, Oxford, in 1831.

Lineage.

This family, resident for several centuries at Hanford, in Dorsetshire, claims a common progenitor with the ducal house of Somerset. In Collins’s Peerage, under that dukedom, there is a conjecture as to the descent of the Seymers of Hanford, from Humphrey Seymer, of Even Swindon. The conjecture arose probably from the coincidence of date, similarity of arms, and the spelling of the name. It appears in the early part of the pedigree of the ducal family the termination was er.

This gentleman, from his early years, pursued the study of natural history, and attained a degree of excellence in entomology, conchology, and mineralogy, particularly in the investigation of extraneous fossils. His cabinets of shells were very rich, as he never lost an opportunity of procuring the finest offered for sale; and although residing at so great a distance from the metropolis, he was always able to secure, through his agents in town, any collections brought from abroad. Martin, in his great work on shells, mentions Mr. Seymer’s collection with high commendation; and to Mr. Seymer the “Hortus Europae Americanus” was dedicated. With the naturalists of his time, Edwards, Fothergill, Pennant, Foster, Drury, and Francillon, he maintained an uninterrupted correspondence. The well known Dr. Pulteney, residing no more than five miles distant from him, much of their time was passed together, and the Doctor has frequently declared that some of the happiest hours of his life were spent in Mr. Seymer’s society. Although botany was less his study than other parts of the system of nature, yet

Nature he loved; with her he spent his hours, And stored his garden with her fairest flowers.

LEEKE, OF LONGFORD HALL.

LEEKE, THOMAS, esq. of Longford Hall, in the county of Salop, barrister-at-law, b. 21st November, 1788, m. first, 13th November, 1812, Louisa, youngest daughter of the late Brigadier General Robert Shawe, a distinguished officer, descended from an ancient family in the county of Galway, and by her, who died 16th April, 1816, had two sons and one daughter,
viz.

Ralph-Merrick, b. 4th September, 1813.
Egerton, b. 23rd March, 1816.
Charlotte.

Mr. Leeke married, secondly, 21st January, 1822, Anna-Shawe, only daughter of the late Honorable Matthew Plunkett, brother to the 10th Lord Louth. He succeeded his father in the representation of the family and as high steward of the corporation of Newport, 30th September, 1829, and is a magistrate for the counties of Salop and Stafford.
Lineage.

This family has, for several centuries, been of importance in the county of Salop. The immediate ancestor of the present line, Ralph Leeke, of Ludlow, was living in 1334. His seal is represented in a pedigree of the family, which is attested by Sir William Segar, as bearing his shield of arms, the same as now used with the legend, “Si-gill. Rad Leeke Armigeri.” The contract for the marriage of his son,

Ralph Leeke, with the daughter of Philip de Middleton, ancestor of the Myddletons, of Chirk Castle, bears date in 1334. Fourth in descent from this Ralph, was

Richard Leeke, who m. in 1539, Alice Outley, of Pitchford, and was great grandfather of

Ralph Leeke, who m. and had three sons, viz.

1. Thomas, who attained great eminence in the profession of the law, and was appointed a baron of the Exchequer, 25th November, 1642. On the 6th December, 1644, a commission of the peace for the county of Salop was renewed, in order to place him therein. It has not been ascertained whether this commission proceeded from the authority of the king, or from that of the parliament; but as Shropshire was still chiefly in the obedience of Charles, it seems most probable that the baron espoused the royal party, especially as he is said to have lost upwards of £7000 in the civil wars. After the fall of the monarchy, however, he submitted, in common with Sir Matthew Hale, and others, to the ruling powers. He was in office in 1654, and probably continued so until the Restoration, when he was not re-appointed. He died without issue, in 1662, having on the 1st February, in that year, devised an estate at Trevanny, in the county of Montgomery, to trustees (Sir John Weld the younger, Sir Richard Oateley, Samuel Baldwin, esq. of the Inner Temple, Thomas Jones, esq. of Shrewbury, John Stanier, esq. of Shropshire, and Richard Jenkins, esq. of Eaton) for the erection and maintenance of a free grammar school at High Ercal, of which the present Thomas Leeke, esq. of Longford, is a trustee and visitor.

2. William, of whose line we have to treat.

3. Humphrey.

The second son,

William Leeke, continued the line of the family. His fourth descendant, Thomas Leeke, esq. of the Vineyard, near Wellington, m. Elizabeth Henshaw, and had four sons, viz.

1. Thomas, who d. in India.
2. Ralph, of whom presently.
3. Egerton, who resided on his patrimonial estate at the Vineyard, and m. Sarah Henshaw.
4. Stephen, an eminent solicitor in Chester, where he realized a considerable fortune.

The second son,

Ralph Leeke, esq. at the age of sixteen, embarked as cadet in the Hon. East India Company’s service, for the presidency of Bengal, from which, through the patronage of his relation, Mr. Cartier, then governor of Calcutta, he was transferred to the civil service, and resided for a considerable time as collector in the province of Typerah, where he realized a large fortune. Returning to England in 1786, he purchased, the following year, from the Earl of Shrewsbury, the manors and estates of Longford* and Church Aston, in Shropshire, and erected upon the former an elegant mansion, of white stone, after the design of Bonomi, the architect, where he resided for the remaining forty years of his life. He m. 13th December, 1757, Honoria Frances, only daughter of Walter Harvey Thursby, esq. (younger brother of John Harvey Thursby, esq. of Abington Abbey, Northamptonshire) by Dorothy, his wife, eldest daughter of the late Rev. William Pigott, rector of Edge- mond,† and had issue,

1. Thomas, his heir.
2. Ralph Harvey, rector of Longford, b. 4th October, 1794.

1. Augusta.
2. Caroline, m. 7th September, 1824, to the Hon. and Rev. William Ne-vill, second son of the Earl of Aber-gavenny, and has issue.
3. Emily-Frances-Anne.

Mr. Leeke, who was the friend and contemporaneous Sir Hugh Inglis, Warren Hastings, Sir T. Metcalfe, Lord Teignmouth, &c.

* The beautiful residence, Longford Hall, was recently destroyed by fire.
† By Dorothy, his wife, daughter of John Cotes, esq. of Woodcote, who m. Lady Dorothy Shirley, daughter of the Earl of Ferrars.
served the office of high sheriff of Salop, in 1796, and acted for several years as a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for that county.* He was also a munificent patron of various improvements in the town of Newport, and high steward of that corporation. He d. at Longford Hall, 30th September, 1829, and was s. in the representation of the family by his elder son, the present Thomas Leeke, esq. By will, he devised the estates and manors of Longford and Aston to trustees, who are to pay three-fifths of the rental to his widow. At her demise, Thomas Leeke, the eldest son, becomes tenant for life, with remainder to his eldest son in tail.

* At the time of Napoleon's threatened invasion, Mr. Leeke raised a corps of infantry, consisting of three hundred and twenty men, which obtained a high state of discipline under his command as lieutenant-colonel.

PHILIPPS, OF DALE CASTLE.

PHILIPPS-LLOYD, JOHN-PHILIPPS-ALLEN, esq. of Dale Castle, in the county of Pembroke, and of Foes-y-bleiddiaid, Cardiganshire, b. 26th January, 1802, m. 9th December, 1823, Charlotte-Caroline, youngest daughter of Captain Bartlet, of the royal engineers, and has surviving issue.

This gentleman, whose patronymic is Lloyd, assumed the surname of Philipps, upon the demise of Lord Milford, under the will of James Philipps, esq. of Penty Park, brother of Mary-Lloyd, his great-great-grandmother. He is in the commission of the peace for the counties of Cardigan and Pembroke, major in the royal Cardigan militia, and a deputy-lieutenant for the former shire, as well as for the town and county of Haverford-west.

Lineage.

The paternal line of this ancient family is that of Lloyd, and its early history ascends to the most remote period of the authentic British annals.

Rhodri Mawr, (or Roderick the Great), lord paramount of Wales, and sovereign of the Isle of Man, was slain in a battle with the Saxons, in the Isle of Anglesey, in the year 877. He had, with other children, a son, Tudwal, called Tudwal gloss, or the lame, having been wounded in the knee, in the battle fought against the Saxons and Danes, near Conway, and which is recorded in Welsh history as "Dial Rodri," or the "Revenge of Roderick;" it was fought in the year 878; and the Saxons and Danes being defeated, the death of Roderick was assumed to be avenged, and thus the event became recorded with the above appellation.
The arms borne by Tudwal Gloff were, azure, a wolf salient argent, langued and armed argent. Eighth in descent from Tudwal gloff was, Cedivir, the son of Dinawal. He served under Prince Rhys, usually styled "The Lord Rhys," of South Wales, and distinguished himself on various occasions. In the eleventh year of the reign of Henry II. Cedivir, at the head of a detachment of the forces of Prince Rhys, took, by escalade, the castle of Cardigan, then held by the Earl of Clare and a body of Flemings for the English monarch. For this service he was rewarded by the grant of various extensive tracts of land in Cardiganshire, the gift of Prince Rhys, who also bestowed upon him his daughter in marriage; and his descendants have, to the present day, ranked among the principal landed proprietors and gentry of Cardiganshire.

Lineally descended from Cedivir ap Dinawal is the family of whom we are about to treat, as also many others in Cardiganshire, Caermarthenshire, and Pembroke-shire. For the bravery displayed by him in the assault and taking of Cardigan castle, Cedivir received from Prince Rhys a grant of the following arms: "Sa. a spear's head arg. imbrued gu. between three scaling ladders of the second (2 and 1); on a chief of the third, a castle triple-towered ppr." Of the numerous descendants of Cedivir who retained their patrimonial estates in Cardiganshire was,

Lineage.

This family, as its name and arms* imply, is of Norman origin, and deduces from the Lords of Rohan, in the dukedom. Its first settlement in England appears by an ancient deed from Whalley Cartulary, bearing date in 1315 to have been in the northern counties. In Wales, the first settler on record was,

RICHARD CLOUGH, commonly called Hen, or the old, from having lived during the

* Cloven, according to Dr. Johnson, and other lexicographers, is a Norman word signifying a valley between high hills, and the masques in the first quartering of the shield are peculiar to the duchy of Rohan, and borne by the lords thereof, and their descendants, as stated by Colombriere, author of La Science Heraldique. He says, “I am of opinion that the Lords of Rohan, who I believe are the first that bore these figures on their arms, though descended from the ancient kings or princes of Bretagne, assumed them, because, in the most ancient viscountcy of Rohan, afterwards erected into a duchy, there are abundance of small flints, which, being cut in two, this figure appears on the inside of them; the carp, too, which are found in the fish-ponds, exhibit a similar mark on their scales. These circumstances, so very peculiar to the country, and at the same time so extraordinary, the ancient lords adopted the figures for their arms, and transmitted them to their posterity, giving them the name of masques, from the Latin word, mascula, whence some of the house have taken for their motto, "Sine mascula mascula"—a masculine without a spot."

Lineage.

The origin of the family of Shuttleworth, and its settlement at Gawthorp, in the county of Lancaster, appears to have arisen from the intermarriage of Henry Shuttleworth with Agnes, daughter and heiress of WILLIAM DE HACKING,—their son, Ughtred Shuttleworth, being the first of Gawthorp. The proof of the fact was extracted, by Christopher Townley, from the old court rolls at Clitheroe, which are now lost:

Hugh Shuttleworth was father of

LAWRENCE SHUTTLEWORTH, of Gawthorp, living in 1464, who m. Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Worsley, of Mearley, and was s. by his son, Family of Burley.

The Burleys, who formerly wrote themselves Boerley, derived the name from Burley, in Herefordshire, which they held under their superior lords, the Mortimers, and made a considerable figure for several generations. Walter Burley, one of the first fellows of Merton College, was a younger son or grandson of Sir Simon de Burley, knight, who appears a subscribing witness to a deed of Ralph de Mortimer, who died in 1217. In an age when learned men prided themselves upon abstruseness and subtility, Walter Burley obtained the honourable appellation of "plain and the perspicuous Doctor"—qualities which eminently fitted him for the instruction of youth, and procured for him the important office of preceptor to the Prince of Wales, afterwards Edward III. wherein he conducted himself so meritoriously, that the King selected him to superintend the education of his son, the Black Prince. This probably enabled him to introduce at court his relation, another Sir Simon de Burley, esteemed one of the most accomplished men of his age, and as such appointed governor of the young prince, afterwards King Richard II. Sir Simon de Burley, and his two brothers, Sir Richard and Sir John, "men of worth and valour," are mentioned amongst the officers despatched by the Black Prince in 1366 to escort Don Pedro the cruel, the deposed King of Castile, from his asylum at Cornuna to Bordeaux. He is also mentioned, on the same authority, as one of the gallant cavaliers who volunteered their services to accompany Sir Thomas Felton on his adventurous exploit to gain intelligence in the enemies' quarters, which terminated in the death or captivity of them all. Sir Simon must have been of the number of those made prisoners on this occasion, so characteristic of the chivalrous spirit of the age. He was a younger son, and therefore what the historian, Knighton, says, that his patrimony did not exceed twenty marks, may possibly have been true, as the family estates were enjoyed by his elder brother: but, by the favour of his sovereign, wealth and honours were lavishly poured upon him. In the first year of Richard II. being already a knight, he was appointed keeper of Windsor castle for life. In the next year, Laustephan castle was confirmed to him. In 1380, Simon de Burley, chamberlain, was one of the King's commissioners to treat with the German Princes. In 1382, when he is styled Under-Chamberlain of the King, he was constituted master of the falcons, and keeper of the royal mews at Charing, with a fee of elevepence a day, and received grants of the manor of Parrock, in Kent, and castle Emlyn, in Kermerdin; next year, of Leyborne castle, in Kent, late Juliana's de Leyborne; and the year after, that of liberties at his castle of Lennalx, in Herefordshire. In 1385, he was one of the executors of Joan, Princess of Wales, the King's mother. In 1386, he had a grant of Castle Frome, in the same county, forfeited by the felony of Lady Deveros. He was also warden of the Cinque Ports, constable of Dover castle, privy counsellor, knight banneret, and knight of the garter.
In so turbulent a reign as that in which Sir Simon de Burley flourished, he could not be neutral, or hope to escape uninjured. Walsingham represents him and Richard Styry as two of those who prejudiced the King against the Earl of Arundel, but Walsingham writes with a manifest leaning to the "Opposition." On the other hand, Carte, the perpetual advocate of the legitimate Sovereign, represents him as a victim to his affection for the King, and attachment to the constitution.

The truth seems to be, that the King was weak, with a strong desire for despotic power; his uncles, imperious and factious. Amongst them all, Sir Simon was brought to the block, May 5th, 1388; and in the same year, the Archbishop of Canterbury had a grant of the parks of Langley and Elmham, in Kent, which accrued to the Crown by virtue of his attainder. The judgment against him was reversed in the following reign—a fair presumption, says Mr. Hallam, of his injustice. Sir Simon's brother, John, was also a knight of the garter, and, besides his eldest son, William, who was seated at Burley, had two other sons, Richard, an eminent man in his day, K.G. marshall of the field, and privy counsellor to John of Gaunt, whom he accompanied into Spain, and died there the same year his uncle was beheaded; and Sir Roger, father of John Burley, of Bromcroft Castle, sheriff of Salop in 1409, whose daughter, Joyce, became the wife of John de Gatacre, of Gatacre.

His son, William Burley, of Bromcroft, sheriff, in 1426, M.P. for Salop, and speaker of the House of Commons, left two daughters, his heirs,

Joan, m. first, to Sir Philip Chetwynd, of Ingestre, and secondly, to Sir Thomas Lyttleton, the celebrated author of the "Tenures."

Mr. Frewen-Turner succeeded his father 1st February, 1829, and is knight of the shire for Leicester.

Lineage.

The Frewens, a family of considerable antiquity, were seated, at a very remote period, in the county of Worcester: in 1473, we find Richard Frewen, one of the bailiffs of Worcester, and another Richard Frewen, prior of Great Malvern. A third Richard Frewen and his wife are represented in stained glass in one of the abbey windows, and were great benefactors to the monastery. In the church at Hailey Castle there is, likewise, a monument to Richard Frewen, who was buried in 1584, and his son, Francis, in 1606.

The immediate ancestor of the present family of the Frewens,

John Frewen, came out of Worcestershire, where he was born about the year 1550: he settled at Northiam, in Sussex, of which place he was rector more than fifty years: he was a puritan, and author of several works against the Catholics. He d. in 1628, leaving, with other issue,

1. Accepted, who was born in Kent, educated in the free school at Canterbury, became a student, and soon after, about the beginning of 1604, in his sixteenth year, a deny of Magdalen College; where, making great proficiency in logic and philosophy, he was elected probate, fellow of that house, about St. Mary Magdalen's day, anno 1612, being then master of arts. At that time he entered into the sacred function, and became a frequent preacher, being puritanically inclined. In 1622, he attended in the court of Prince Charles, while he was in Spain courting the infanta; and, in 1625, he was made chaplain in ordinary to the king. In 1626, he was elected president of his college, and in the next year proceeded in divinity. In 1628 and 1629, he executed the office of vice-chancellor of the university of Oxford; and, on the 13th September, 1631, being then, or about that time, prebendary of Canterbury, was installed dean of Gloucester, upon the removal of Dr. George Warburton thence to the deanery of Wells. In 1638 and 1639, upon the solicitations of Dr. Land, archbishop of Canterbury and chancellor of this university, Dr. Frewen again served the office of vice-chancellor; and, on the 17th of August, 1643, he was chosen by his majesty to succeed Dr. Wright in the see of Lichfield and Coventry; but the times being then much disturbed, he was not consecrated until the next year, when the solemnity was performed in the chapel of Magdalen College by the archbishop of York, and the bishops of Worcester, Oxford, Salisbury, and Peterborough. This preferment being then however but little better than titular, the hierarchy having been about that time silenced, he retired to London, and lived there, and elsewhere, among his relations for several years. At length, after the restoration of King Charles II. he was elected to the see of York on the 22nd September, translated 4th October, and enthronized in the person of Tob. Wickham, prebendary of that church on the 11th of the same month, anno 1660. The see of Lichfield being also vacant for about a year, in expectation that Mr. Richard Baxter would take it, (for the king intended it for him conditionally he would conform), Dr. Frewen had the benefit of that too, all the fines for renewing, and for the filling up lives, to his very great profit, beside what he got from York. At length Mr. Baxter, the eponymous of the presbyterian party, refusing it, lest he, in a high manner, should displease the brethren, it was offered to Dr. Richard Baylie, president of St. John's College, and dean of Sarum, who had been a very great sufferer for the king's cause; but he refusing it, because Dr. Frewen had skimmed it, it was conferred on Dr. John Hacket, of Cambridge. Dr. Frewen, who was accounted a general scholar, and a good orator, but hath nothing extant, only a Latin oration, with certain verses on the death of Prince Henry (for his Moral Philosophy Lectures are not yet made public), died at his manor of Bishops Thorp, near York, on the 28th of March, in sixteen hundred sixty and four, and was buried on the third day of May following, under the great east window of the cathedral church of St. Peter, in York.

It is related of Dr. Accepted Frewen, that, when chaplain to the Earl of Bristol, ambassador at the Spanish court, he was introduced to Prince Charles, who had arrived at Madrid to visit the infanta, and that he preached a sermon before his royal highness, from the text 1 Kings, xiii. 21st verse, which is still extant, and which is said to have had such an effect on the prince that he broke off the intended match.

ii. Thankful, secretary to the Lord Keeper Coventry, d. unm. 30th November, 1656.

iii. John, who succeeded his father in the rectory of Northiam, where he died in 1653, leaving issue. “The Rev. Thankful Frewen, one of his grandsons,” says Nicholls' History of Leicestershire, “was rector of Northiam above fifty-six years, and died 9th September, 1749. Of this branch of the Frewen family was Charles Frewen, esq. of Clewer, near Windsor, only son of Charles Frewen, esq. deputy clerk of the crown, and Branswick herald. He was b. 23rd January, 1733, and d. without issue, 12th October, 1791. Of the same branch also was Edward Frewen, D.D. of St. John's College, Cambridge.”

Lineage.

Nial the Great, called Nial of the Nine Hostages, monarch of Ireland in the latter part of the fourth century, had eight sons; the four elder were princes in Ulster, and were called, from their great ancestor, the Northern Hii Nials; the four younger were chieftains in Leinster, and were called the Southern Hii Nials. From the time of Nial to the accession of Brian the Great, in 1002, the throne of Ireland was exclusively possessed by the descendants of Nial. Ergan, his eldest son, was progenitor of the house of O’Neill, so distinguished in the history of Ireland, which continued in enjoyment of the principality of Ulster until the reign of James I. Henry VIII. induced Conn, the then prince, to surrender his name of O’Neill, and created him, in lieu thereof, Earl of Tyrone. His grandson, Hugh, resumed that princely title; and, as the O’Neill, carried on a successful war against the English crown during the entire reign of Queen Elizabeth. The principal line of this branch of the Niall family became extinct in the time of Charles I. Connel, the second son of Nial the Great, was ancestor of the O’Donnells, who were, under the O’Neills, chieftains of Tyrconnel, until James I. made Rorie, the then chieftain, Earl of Tyrconnel. He was afterwards attainted and fled to Spain, where he was created Condé of Tyrconnel, by Philip III. He and his descendants enjoyed the highest rank in that kingdom until the family became extinct, about the year 1693. Fiacha, the fifth son of Nial the Great, was ancestor of the McGeoghegans, who were heads of the Southern Hii Nials, and chieftains of Moycashell, or Kinelagh, a district, now comprising the western part of the county of Westmeath, and many adjoining lands. Geraldus Cambrensis states, that the McGeoghegans were princes of Moycashell, on the invasion of the English in the time of Henry II. Their vicinity to the pale brought them into constant collision with the English authorities in Ireland, and they are frequently proclaimed as the king’s Irish enemies, and frequently summoned to his assistance as his friends. The McGeoghegans are included in most of the royal writs for military aid, or of credence to officers; and in that of 9th Edward III. the then McGeoghegan is ranked amongst the chief of the Irish who were requested to join the king in an expedition against Scotland. O’Neill, of Ulster, O’Conor, of Connaught, O’Maghlaghian, of Meath, and eight other native princes, are named with McGeoghegan in this writ.

In the time of Henry VIII.

Rosse McGeoghegan, the then McGeoghegan, and chieftain of Kinelagh, or Moycashell, entered into a treaty with Lord Leonard Grey, Viscount Granney, the king’s deputy in Ireland, by which, as chieftain of his nation and territory, he agreed to bear allegiance to the King of England, to serve him against all his enemies, and to aid him with certain forces when called upon. This treaty bears date 28th November, 29th Henry VIII. Rosse was s. by his son,

Connor, the McGeoghegan and chieftain of Moycashell. He had two legitimate sons,

1. Conlagh, his successor.
2. Hugh, who became heir to his brother, and an illegitimate son, called Rosse McGeoghegan.

On the death of Connor, the territory was divided; Conlagh succeeded to Moycashell, and Hugh obtained Castletown. Conlagh had no issue, and surrendered his estates to Queen Elizabeth, on condition that she would re-grant them, with a limitation, in default of male issue to himself, to his nephew, Niël, the son of the illegitimate Rosse. This re-grant passed, and Hugh was thereby deprived of his inheritance. On the death of his brother, however, he became chief of his nation and head of his branch of the family of Nial the great. He m. Ellnor, daughter of Walter Tirrel, of Clunmeagh, in Westmeath, and dying 10th June, 1622, left issue by her, besides other children,

Arthur, his successor, the last M'Geoghegan and chieftain of the family. During the civil war, he rendered himself conspicuous for his zeal and fidelity in the cause of Charles I. for which, on the reduction of Ireland by Cromwell, he was deprived of all his estates, the inheritance of his ancestors for so many centuries, which were granted to adventurers of the Cromwellian party, to whom they were confirmed on the restoration. His wife, during the war, saved some soldiers of Cromwell's army, who had been defeated in an engagement with her husband's troops, from the fury of her own people; and, in gratitude for this service, a grant was made to her of the Bunowen estate, in the county of Galway, which had been taken from the O'Flaherties; and thus were the M'Geoghegans transplanted from Westmeath into Connaught. Arthur married Julia, called in Irish, Giles, daughter of James M'Cochlhan, of the Hill, in the King's County, esq. by whom he had

1. Hugh, who died during the war, leaving a son, Edward, who died s. p.
2. Edward, to whom, and to the heirs male of whose body, the Bunowen estate was limited, upon the death of Julia.

Arthur was killed in battle, and was s. by his son,

Edward Geoghegan, esq. of Bunowen, who m. Margaret, daughter of James Dillon, esq. of Ballymoly, in Westmeath, by whom he had,

Charles Geoghegan, esq. of Bunowen Castle, who, by Mary, daughter of Valentine Blake, esq. of Drum, in the county of Galway, had a son,

Edward Geoghegan, esq. of Bunowen, who intermarried with Cecilia, daughter of Richard Blake, esq. of Ardfry, in the county of Galway. Mr. Blake was descended from Richard Blake, speaker of the Supreme Council of Kilkenny from 1642 to 1651, and, by his son, was grandfather of Joseph, first Lord Wallscourt, and by his daughter, of the Countesses of Kerry and Louth, and the Viscountess Kingsland. Edward Geoghegan d. 9th September, 1765, leaving issue,

Richard Geoghegan, esq. of Bunowen, a gentleman celebrated for his literary attainments, and as the first person who devoted himself to the reclamation of the waste lands in the remote districts of Connemara.

Mr. Geoghegan m. Mary-Anne, daughter of John Bodkin, esq. of Auna, in the county of Galway, and had,

1. John David, his successor.
2. Connolly, an officer in foreign service, who died s. p.

Richard died in July, 1800, and was s. by his son,

John David Geoghegan, esq. of Bunowen Castle, b. 4th December, 1750. Mr. Geoghegan was member in the Irish Parliament until 1799, and was one of the delegates of the celebrated Irish volunteers. From the time of the extinction of the senior branch of the O'Neills, in the reign of Charles I. it had been the anxious desire of the successive representatives of the M'Geoghegan family, as the undoubted heads of the Southern Hii Nials, and the descendants of Fiacha, son of the great Niall, to assume the family name of O'Neill; but the attainers and forfeitures against them, and the persecutions which th-y, in common with the greater portion of the ancient nobility and gentry of Ireland, suffered for so many generations, rendered any attempt to effectuate their desire as fruitless as it would have been dangerous. Times, however, changed: Mr. Geoghegan held a high and confidential office under the Crown, that of accountant-general of the Court of Exchequer, and had been the chosen representative of the people; he was, therefore, no longer debarr'd from making the application; he accordingly petitioned King George III.; and his majesty being satisfied, as he states in his privy-seal letter, dated at Whitehall, February 13, 1808, that Mr. Geoghegan was paternally descended from Nial, of the nine hostages, granted him his royal licence and authority to take and use the surname of O'Neill. Mr. Geoghegan, who thus became O'Neill, married Gertrude, daughter and co-heir of Robert Fetherstone, esq. of White Rock House, in the county of Longford, and had surviving issue,

1. Augustus-John, his heir.
2. Charles-Fetherstone, b. December, 1802.

Gertrude, married to Thomas Fleetwood Walker, esq. of Elm Hall, in the county of Kildare, by whom she had one son and one daughter.

Mr. O'Neill died 8th April, 1830, and was s. by his elder son, Augustus John O'Neill, esq. now of Bunowen.

Lineage.

This is a branch of an ancient Devonshire family, Walter de Lega having, as appears by Sir William Pole’s collections towards a description of Devon, held lands therein in the reign of Henry II. Lysons, in the sixth volume of his Magna Britannia, in his account of families extinct since 1620, or removed out of the county, states, that “Leigh, of Ridge, in Bishop’s Marochard, married the heiress of Ridge. Ten descents are described in the visitation of 1620, when there was male issue.”

ROBERT LEIGH, a scion of the Leigs of Ridge, removed out of Devonshire, and settled at Bardon, in Somersetshire, anno 1595. His great grandson,

ROBERT LEIGH, of Bardon, married in 1674, Margaret, daughter of John Collard, of Spaxton, in the county of Somerset, a gentleman of good estate, to whom arms had been granted for his loyalty, after the restoration in 1666. Their eldest son,

Mr. Mauleverer is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for the North Riding. On the passing of the Reform Bill, he stood for the borough of South Shields, and although the defeated candidate, was chaired by the inhabitants and presented with a diamond ring, as a mark of their esteem and regret. In this year (1835) a subscription has been raised by some of his neighbours to present him with a piece of plate, for his exertions at the recent election for the North Riding.

Lineage.

The name of this family in ancient writings is called Malus-Leporarius (Mallevorer), the bad hare-hunter, and tradition says, that a gentleman of Yorkshire, being to let slip a brace of greyhounds, to run for a considerable wager, so held them in swing that they were more likely to strangle themselves than kill the hare, when: the designation was fixed upon the unskilful sportsman, and transmitted to his posterity. But Peter le Neve, Norroy, supposes it to be Malus-operarius, or the bad-worker; because that in Domesday Book is found, (title Essex, page 94) "terra Adami, filii Durandi de Malis operibus, in French Malouverer, which is easily varied to Mauleverer.

BLACKSTONE, WILLIAM-SEYMOUR, esq. of Castle Priory, in the county of Berks, b. 30th October, 1809, M.P. for Wallingford. Mr. Blackstone is a magistrate for Berkshire and Oxfordshire, and a deputy-lieutenant for the former.
Charles Blackstone, esq. of Cheapside, London, married, in 1718, Mary, eldest daughter of Lovelace Bigg, esq. of Chilton Follyatt, in Wilts, by Dorothy, his wife, eldest dau. of William Wither, esq. of Man:down (see vol. ii. p. 401), and had issue, iii. William (Sir).

The third son,

Sir William Blackstone, the learned and popular commentator on the constitution and laws of England, was born in 1723, and at the age of seven commenced his education in the Charter-house, on the foundation of which he was admitted in 1735. In this seminary he applied himself to every branch of useful education, with the same assiduity which accompanied his studies through after-life. His talents and industry rendered him the favourite of his masters, who encouraged and assisted him with the utmost attention, so that at fifteen he was at the head of the school, and, although so young, was thought well qualified to be removed to the university. He was accordingly entered a commoner at Pem-broke College, in Oxford, on the 30th of November, 1738, and was the next day matriculated. At this time he was elected to one of the Charter-house exhibitions, by the governors, to commence from the Michaelmas preceding; but was permitted to continue a scholar there till after the 12th of December, being the anniversary commoration of the founder, to give him an opportunity of speaking the customary oration, which he had prepared, and which did him great credit. About this time, also, he obtained Mr. Benson's gold prize-medal of Milton, for verses on that illustrious poet. Thus, before he quitted school, did his genius begin to appear, and to receive public marks of approbation and reward; and so well pleased were the Society of Pembroke College with their young pupil, that, in February following, they unanimously elected him to one of Lady Holcroft's exhibitions for Charter-house scholars in that house. At the university he prosecuted his studies with unremitting ardour; and although the classics, and particularly the Greek and Roman poets, were his favourites, they did not entirely engross his attention; logic, mathematics, and the other sciences, were not neglected. From the first of these, studied rationally, and abstracted from the jargon of the schools, he laid the foundation of that close method of reasoning for which he was so remarkable; and from the mathematics, he not only acquired the habit of accustomed his mind to a close investigation of every subject that occurred to him, till he arrived at the degree of demonstration of which the nature of it would admit, but he converted that dry study, as it is usually esteemed, into an amusement, by pursuing the branch of it which relates to architecture. This science he was peculiarly fond of, and made himself so far master of it, that, at the early age of twenty, he compiled a treatise, entitled Elements of Architecture, intended for his own use only, and not for publication, but which was esteemed, by those judges who have perused it, in no respect unworthy of his maturer judgment.

Having determined to embrace the profession of the law, he entered himself of the Middle Temple; and, in 1744, he quitted Oxford, and those classical pursuits which were so congenial to his taste. This transition to studies of a less pleasing nature, he very feelingly commemorated in an elegant poem, entitled, The Lawyer's Farewell to his Muse, which was afterwards printed in the fourth volume of Dodsley's Collection, and which is allowed to display a very early maturity of taste and judgment. He now applied himself with great assiduity to the study of his profession, dividing his residence between the Temple and the University, a place to which he always retained his youthful attachment. He had been elected a fellow of All Souls College in 1743, and on the 28th of November, 1746, he was called to the bar. As he was very deficient in elocution, and possessed none of the popular talents of an advocate, his progress in the profession was extremely slow; and being without any avocations of business, the active turn of his mind displayed itself in the office of bursar, or steward, of All Souls. In this situation he is said to have merited great praise for his skill and diligence in arranging the records, and improving the revenues, of the College, and in expediting the necessary measures for completing the magnificent structure of the Codrington Library. In 1749, he was appointed, through the interest of a relation, recorder of Wallingford, in Berkshire; and in the following year, probably with a view to more constant residence at Oxford, he took the degree of doctor of laws. Having now attended the courts of law at Westminster for seven years, without success, he determined to quit the practice of his profession, and retire to his fellowship at Oxford. The system of education in the English universities supplying no provision for teaching the laws and constitution of the country, Dr. Blackstone undertook to remedy this defect, by a course of lectures on that important subject; and the manner in which he executed the task has conferred a lasting distinction on Oxford. His first course was delivered in 1753, and was repeated for a series of years, with increasing effect and reputation. These lectures doubtless suggested to Mr. Viner the idea of founding, by his will, a liberal establishment in the University of Oxford for the study of the common law; and Dr. Blackstone was, with great propriety, chosen the first Vinerian professor. The reputation which he had acquired by his lectures induced him, in the year 1759, to return to the Temple, and resume his attendance at Westminster-hall; and he now advanced with great rapidity in the career of his profession. In 1761, he was chosen member of Parliament for Hindon, and received a patent of procedure to rank as King's counsel, having previously declined the office of chief justice of Ireland. On the establishment of the Queen's household, in 1763, he was appointed solicitor-general to her majesty.

The first volume of his Commentaries on the Laws of England was published at Oxford, in 4to. in the year 1765, and the other three volumes followed soon afterwards. This work, to which he is indebted for the permanence of his reputation, comprehends the substance of his academical prelections, and is by far the most elegant and popular book on the municipal laws of England which has yet appeared. Before the publication of Blackstone's Commentaries the study was generally considered as extremely repulsive, but he has treated it with a degree of elegance and interest which may recommend it to every inquisitive reader.

On the resignation of Mr. Dunning, in 1770, he was offered the situation of solicitor-general, which naturally leads to the highest offices of the law; and on his declining it, he was appointed one of the justices of the Court of Common Pleas. In this honourable and tranquil station he continued till the time of his death, which happened in consequence of a dropsey, on the 14th of February, 1780. His health, which had been considerably impaired by the labours of his early years, by an unfortunate aversion from exercise, and perhaps by some habits of excess, had been declining for some time, but it had begun seriously to fail towards the latter end of the preceding year.

The private character of Blackstone seems to have been highly estimable for mildness, benevolence, and every social and domestic virtue. A love of business, and useful employment, was one of the ruling passions of his life; and the leisure which he employed during his latter years was devoted to schemes of social improvement in the neighbourhood where he resided, or to great public undertakings.

Sir William Blackstone married Sarah, eldest daughter of James Clitheroe, esq. of Boston House, in the county of Middlesex, and had issue, DOD, OF EDGE.

DOD, CHARLOTTE, of Edge Hall, in the county of Chester, succeeded her father in 1829.

Lineage.

HOVA, son of Cadwgan Dot, the founder of this family, about the time of Henry II. settled at Edge, in Cheshire, in consequence of his marriage with the daughter and heiress of the Lord of Edge, with whom he had a fourth of the manor. The name of the proprietor whose daughter Hova married does not appear, but it is probable that he was the son of Edwin, a Saxon thane, who was allowed, after the Norman conquest, to retain possession of his lands at Edge, in Cheshire. "Presuming this descent," says Ormerod, "it is impossible to overlook the following particulars:—Dot, the Saxon lord of sixteen manors, either exclusively, or of a considerable proportion thereof, was joint lord of Cholmondeley, Hampton, Gropenhall, and two-thirds of Bickerton, with this very Edwin. Dot was ejected from all his manors, and the circumstance of the heiress of the relics of Edwin's lands matching herself with a man who bore the name of one so closely connected with her apparent ancestor (prefixing thereto the addition of a name derived from the land to which that friend of her ancestor would be most likely to fly for shelter), seems to make this marriage the result of old family friendship and alliance, and to lead to a deduction of Cadwgan Dot, from the Dot of Domesday. A descent in the male line from a Saxon, noticed in that record, would be unique in the county of Chester." The Dod pedigree entered, by Baron Dod, in the visitation of 1613, gives four descents after Cadwgan, and again commences with Hova Dod, after which it proceeds in a clear descent.

The last named

HOVA DOD, had two sons; the younger, John of Smith's Pentrely, in Broxton, married Margery, daughter of Hugh le Byrd, of Broxton, and the elder,

THOMAS DOD, of Edge, temp. Edward III. wedded Mabel, daughter of David Mere, and had two sons, namely,

THOMAS, his heir.

John, of Farndon, living temp. Richard II. who m. Johanna, daughter and heiress of John Warren, of Ightfield, in Shropshire, and was ancestor of the Dods of Cloverley, now represented by John-Whitehall Dod, esq. of Cloverley. (See vol. i. p. 297.)

The elder son,

THOMAS DOD, of Edge, m. Mary, or Matilda, daughter of David Bird, of Broxton, and left a son and successor,

DAVID DOD, of Edge, who espoused Cecilia, daughter and co-heiress of William de Bickerton, and was father of

SIR ANTHONY DOD, of Edge, one of the heroes of Agincourt, knighted by King Henry on that memorable field. He died on his return homewards, and was interred in the cathedral of Canterbury. His son and heir,

DAVID DOD, of Edge, was one of the Cheshire gentlemen who signed the supplication to Henry VI. respecting the liberties of the palatinate. He m. first, a daughter of the ancient family of Downes, of Shrigley, and, secondly, a daughter of Piers Stanley, of Ewloe. By the former, he left at his decease a son and successor,

STEPHEN DOD, of Edge, omitted in the visitation and in the pedigrees by Sir Richard St. George. He was living 24th Henry VI. and married Beatrix, daughter and heiress of Thomas Willaston, of Willaston, in the county of Salop, by whom he had a son, David Dod, of Edge, living in the 3rd and 14th Edward IV. who m. Anne, daughter of Hugh Massey, esq. of Coddington, in Cheshire, and had two sons, namely, John, his heir.

David, who founded the family of Dod, of Shucklach, which gave a dignitary to the cathedral of Chester, in Thomas Dod, who was possessed of the family estate, and was archdeacon of Richmond, dean of Rippon, and rector of Ashbury and Malpas. Of the Shucklach line, was also John Dod, the decalogist, uncle to Dr. Dod, whom we have just mentioned. This eminent man, who was born in 1547, associating much with Drs. Fulke, Chaderton, and Whitaker, imbied the principles and strictness for which they were famous, and conceived an early dislike to some of the ceremonies or discipline of the church, but to which we are not told. After taking orders, he first preached a weekly lecture at Ely, until invited by Sir Anthony Cope to be minister of Hanwell in Oxfordshire, in 1577, where he became a constant and diligent preacher, and highly popular. Nor was his hospitality less conspicuous, as he kept an open table on Sundays and Wednesdays, lecture days, generally entertaining on these occasions from eight to twelve persons at dinner. At Hanwell he remained twenty years, in the course of which he married, and had a large family; but, owing to his non-conformity in some points, he was suspended by Dr. Bridges, Bishop of Oxford. After this he preached for some time at Penny-Compton, in Warwickshire, and from thence was called to Cannons Ashby, in Northamptonshire, where he was patronised by Sir Erasmus Dryden; and here again he was silenced, in consequence of a complaint made by Bishop Neale to King James, who commanded Archbishop Abbott to pronounce that sentence. During this suspension of his public services, he appears to have written his Commentary on the Decalogue and Proverbs, which he published in conjunction with one Robert Cleaver, probably another silenced puritan, of whom we can find no account. At length, by the interest of the family of Knightley, of Northamptonshire, after the death of King James, he was presented in 1624 to the living of Fawsley, in that county. Here he recommended himself as before, not more by his earnest and affectionate services in the pulpit, than by his charity and hospitality, and particularly by his frequent visits and advice, which last he delivered in a manner peculiarly striking. A great many of his sayings became almost proverbial, and remained so for above a century, being, as may yet he remembered, frequently printed in a small tract and suspended in every cottage. At the breaking out of the rebellion he was a considerable sufferer, his house being plundered, as the house of a puritan, although he was a decided enemy to the proceedings of the republicans. When they were about to abolish the order of bishops, &c. Dr. Browning sent to Mr. Dod for his opinion, who answered, "that he had been scandalised with the proud and tyrannical practices of the Marian bishops; but now, after more than sixty years' experience of many protestant bishops, who had been worthy preachers, learned and orthodox writers, great champions for the protestant cause, he wished all his friends not to be any impediment to them, and exhorted all men not to take up arms against the king, which was his doctrine, he said, upon the fifth commandment, and he would never depart from it." He died in August, 1645, at the very advanced age of ninety-seven, and was buried at Fawsley. Fuller says, "with him the old puritan seemed to expire, and in his grave to be interred. Humble, meek, patient, as in his censures of, so in his alms to others." The celebrated Dr. Wilkins was his grandson.

The elder son,

John Dod, esq. of Edge, married Emma, daughter and heiress of Humphrey Breton, third son of Bartholomew Breton, of Grafton, and had two sons and two daughters, viz.

Motto—In copia cantus.

Estates—In the county of Chester, &c.

Seat—Edge Hall. Near one extremity of the Dod estate in Edge, in a place called the Hall Heys, are vestiges of a mansion, which was most probably the earliest residence of the family. The present seat is of considerable antiquity, but has been so repeatedly altered in various styles, that no date can be inferred from its architecture. This house has also been moated, and stands very low, the ground sloping to it in almost every direction; at the back is a parklike enclosure, ascending gently to a terrace, on the summit of a rocky eminence well planted with trees, through the interstices of which the eye commands the higher Broxton and Bickerton hills behind, and in front, the Chwydian range, with loftier mountains above them, seen over the broad vale of Chester. On the right the estuaries appear in the distance, and on the left is a boundless continuation of the magnificent vale below, broken in some places by the Montgomeryshire hills, and completely losing itself in the vista.

In 1813, he was appointed chief justice of Chester; in 1814, one of the barons of the exchequer; and, in 1817, chief baron upon the demise of Sir A. Thompson. “In the whole circle of his profession,” says a writer in the Gentleman’s Magazine, “no man stood higher in private estimation or public respect than Sir Richard Richards. His peculiar urbanity and benevolence, which pervaded every action of his life, gained for him the affectionate attachment of all who had the happiness to share his acquaintance: his whole time was spent, when free from the cares of his judicial duties, in the exercise of philanthropy, and the offices of social life. As a lawyer and a judge, his decisions, particularly in exchequer cases, were sound, and built upon the firm basis of deep penetration. Lineage.

The Halfords of Kent derive either from the son or brother of Sir Richard Halford, the first baronet of Wistow, but, owing to the loss of some family documents at the time of the revolution, the precise fact cannot now be ascertained. The house of Halford, one of great antiquity, was, originally seated in Warwickshire, at a place called Halford, where one branch of the family continued to reside until a century and a half ago. Dugdale, in his history of that county, mentions a Robert de Halford, of Halford, who held half a knight's fee under the Earl of Warwick, temp. Henry III. The senior branch, the Halfords, of Wistow, maintained for several generations a leading position in the county of Leicester, until the decease of Sir Charles Halford, in 1780, when Wistow passed, under his will to his widow, who bequeathed the estate to her nephew, Dr. Vaughan who was subsequently created a Baronet, and assuming in 1815 the surname of Halford, is the present Sir Henry Halford.

Richard Halford, esq. son of the Rev. Richard Halford, who held the living of Lyminge, in Kent, a scion of the Wistow family, married Mary Creed, niece of Sir James Creed, M.P. for the city of Canterbury, about the year 1760, and left, with two daughters, Mary and Sarah, a son,

1. Annabella-Mary-Elizabeth.
2. Frederica-Mary-Adeliza.

Mr. Drummond succeeded his father in 1833.

Lineage.

The family of Drummond derives, according to Scotch genealogists, from Maurice, an Hungarian, who accompanied Edgar-Atheling, and his sister Margaret, into Scotland, where he was appointed by Malcolm III. Seneschal or Steward, of Lennox.

The Drummonds of Cadlands spring immediately from a younger son of the noble house of Strathallan, which itself descended from a scion of the Lords Drummond.

William Drummond, 4th Viscount Strathallan, elder brother of Andrew Drummond, ancestor of the Drummonds of Stannmore, having personally espoused the fortunes of the Chevalier in 1745, was slain at the battle of Culloden, and his name included in the bill of attainder passed the following year. His lordship wedded the Hon. Margaret Murray, daughter of William, Lord Nairne, and had issue, James, attainted with his father. His line is extinct.

William, whose son, James-Andrew, was restored to the ancient honours of his family by act of parliament in 1824, and is the present Viscount Strathallan. (See Burke's Peerage.)

Henry, of the Grange, in Hampshire. m. in 1761, Elizabeth, daughter of the Honorable Charles Compton, and d. in 1795, leaving one son, RODES, OF BARLBOROUGH.

RODES-REASTON, The Reverend Cornelius-Heathcote, M.A. of Barlborough, in the county of Derby, b. 3rd March, 1792, m. at St. George’s, Hanover-square, 18th June, 1825, Anna-Maria-Harriet, youngest daughter of William Gossip, esq. of Hatfield House, in Yorkshire.

This gentleman, whose patronymic is Reaston, assumed by sign manual, 20th April, 1825, the additional surname and arms of Rodes, upon succeeding to the estates of his uncle, Cornelius Heathcote Rodes, esq.
Linage.

The first settler in England of this family, on genealogical record, is "Gerard de Rodes, a feudal baron, the capital seat of whose barony was Horn Castle, in Lincolnshire: he lived in the reigns of Henry II., Richard I., John, and Henry III., from all of whom he received great favours; and by King John was sent ambassador to foreign parts 29th March, in the 9th year of his reign."

It is probable that Gerard de Rodes was one of the family of the Counts d'Armagnac and Rodes, or Rhodes, mentioned by Froissart, vol. x. p. 354, who came over with Henry II. and Margaret his mother, from Normandy; but as these Counts seem designated by the first title, D'Armagnac, it is equally, and perhaps more probable, that his ancestor was a De Rhodes, hereditary knight* of Flanders, mentioned in Froissart, (vol. i. p. 121, and elsewhere), among the nobility of Flanders, who came over with the Earl of Flanders and Toffi, Harold's brother, to assist William the Conqueror.

As we find in Camden that the barony of Horn Castle was a soke, or seigniory of thirteen lordships, Gerard de Rodes was consequently a greater baron; and as ambassador he attained a still higher rank; his absence in that capacity will account for his name not occurring on the Roll of Magna Charta: there is no genealogical account of the extinction of the baronial title; but we find in Camden that the barony itself was given by Richard II. to the Bishop of Carlisle and his successors.†

* From Gerard de Rodes lineally descended

William de Rhodes, (the son of Thomas, of Thorp, juncta Rotherham, in Yorkshire), who m. Anne, daughter and heirress of John Cachehorse, of Stavely Woodthorpe, in Derbyshire, and had a son and successor,

John Rodes, of Stavely Woodthorpe, whose son,

John Rodes, of Rhodes, of Stavely Woodthorpe, was father of Robert Rodes, of Stavely Woodthorpe, who m. Elizabeth, daughter of — Wasse, and had

John Rodes, of Stavely Woodthorpe, high sheriff for Derbyshire in 1591, who left, by his first wife, Aetelina, daughter of Thomas Hewit, of Wallis, or Wales, in Yorkshire, a son and successor,

Francis Rodes, of Stavely Woodthorpe, one of the justices of the Common Pleas in the time of Elizabeth. This gentleman built Barlborough Hall in 1583, but died at his residence at Stavely Woodthorpe a few years after its completion. He m. first Elizabeth, daughter of Brian Sandford, esq. of Thorp Selvine, in Yorkshire, and had, with daughters, two sons,

1. John, his heir, b. 1562.
2. Peter, of Hickleton.

The judge m. secondly, Mary, daughter of Francis Charlton, esq. of Appley, in Shropshire, by whom he had, with other issue, a son,

Godfrey (Sir), of Great Houghton, knighted at Havering, 13th July, 1615, who married four wives, and left, with other issue, a daughter, Elizabeth, the third wife and widow of the ill-fated Earl of Strafford, and a son and successor,

Sir Edward Rodes, bart. of Great Houghton," from whom descended

* Flanders was at that period generally in alliance with England. We find in Froissart a Sir John de Rhodes, among other knights, coming over to Yorkshire to serve in Edward's army against Bruce, vol. i. p. 40. We, however, see subsequently, p. 125, the same knight, or his descendants, Sir John de Rhodes, laying down his life for his legitimate sovereign in the island of Ladsant, against a low usurper supported by the English.—Hume.
† Camden's Britannia, Lincolnshire, p. 418.
‡ Of Sir Edward Rhodes, of Great Houghton, the following account is extracted from "Hunter's History of Doncaster."
"Notwithstanding the near connection which subsisted between Sir Edward Rhodes and the William Rodes, esq. of Great Houghton, the last male heir of this branch of the family, who died unmarried in 1740, leaving his two sisters, his co-heirs, viz. Mary, who d. unm. and Martha, who wedded Hans Busk, esq. of Leeds, and had, with other children, who died issueless, a daughter, Rachael Busk, the wife of Richard Slater Milnes, esq. M.P. of Preston.

Judge Rodes's eldest son,

Sir John Rodes, knighted at the Tower, 15th March, 1693, high sheriff of Derbyshire 36 Elizabeth, sold Stavely Woodthorpe, now attached to Bolsover, the Duke of Portland's, and resided at Barlborough: he had three wives; the first was Anne, daughter of George Benson, of Westmoreland, by whom he had no issue; the second, Dorothy, daughter of George Savile, esq. of Wakefield, in Yorkshire, grandson of Sir John Savile, of Thornhill, by whom he had one son, John Rhodes, of Horbury, supposed, from presumptive evidence, to have been ancestor of the Devonshire family of Rhodes (see Rhodes, of Bellair); and the third was Frances, daughter of Marmaduke Constable, of Holderness, by whom he left, at his decease in 1639, with other children, who appear to have died unmarried, two daughters, Lennox, m. to Sir Marmaduke Langdale, first Lord Langdale, and Catherine, the wife of Sir George Hotham, and a son and successor.

Sir Francis Rodes, of Barlborough, in Derbyshire, knighted at Whitehall, 9th August, 1641, and created a Baronet the 14th of the same month, who m. Elizabeth, daughter and sole heiress of Sir George Lassells, knt. of Stonrton and Gateford, Notts. and by her, (who wedded, secondly, Allan Lockhart, and died in 1666,) had with several daughters, five sons, viz.

1. Lassells, died during his father's lifetime, in infancy.
2. Francis, heir.
3. Peter, a divine, slain at Winfield Manor.
4. Clifton, who m. first, Lettice, fourth daughter of Sir Gervase Clifton, of Clifton, by the Lady Frances Clifford his wife, daughter of the Right Hon. Francis, Earl of Cumberland, and, secondly, Elizabeth, daughter of John Skirnshire, of Cottgrave, by whom he had a son John.*
5. John, of Sturton, who m. Elizabeth, daughter of Simon Jessop, esq. and had, with two other sons, who married in America, a successor, John, who m. Mary, daughter of William Tigh, of London, son of T. of Carly, in Lincolnshire, and had issue.

Earl of Strafford, there was a wide difference in the political views of each. Few persons entered more eagerly into the objects contemplated by the parliament, when affairs were advancing to a crisis; and it was for the most part to Sir Edward Rhodes, and his two friends the Hothams, that the scheme for maintaining the peace of Yorkshire, arranged by the two great parties at Rothwell before the war began, was frustrated: his zeal might be quickened by personal injury; for in the beginning of September, 1642, an attack was made on his house at Great Houghton, by a party of royalists under the command of Captain Grey, when, according to the diurnals of the time, all the outhouses were burnt, his goods plundered to the amount of £600, his lady uncivilly treated, some of his servants wounded, and one slain. One of the stipulations at the treaty of Rothwell was that reparation should be made to Sir Edward Rodes for the injury done him."

"Of all the gentry of Yorkshire," says Clarendon, "there were only two dissenters, on the parliament side, to that engagement of neutrality, young Hotham and Sir Edward Rodes who, although of better quality, was not so much known or considered as the other; but they quickly found seconds enough when the parliament refused to ratify the treaty, and declared it to be injurious to the common cause."—History of the Rebellion.

His name is not prominent in the history of the military affairs of the time; he served under Cromwell at the battle of Preston, and was sent in pursuit of the Duke of Hamilton: he had a colonel's commission from Cromwell in 1654, and was one of his privy council; it would seem that he was much in Scotland during the protectorate, for he was returned member to one of Cromwell's parliaments for the shire of Perth, at the same time that his son was returned for Lisburne, Stirling, and Clackmannan. At the restoration he was allowed to retire quietly to his house at Great Houghton, where he was living at Sir William Dugdale's visitation, but died soon after.

* This John is stated in a pedigree drawn up by Robert Dale, Blanche Lion, in 1693, to have been cast away at sea. There appears however to be considerable doubt as to the fact, which most probably refers to John, of Horbury, the brother of the first bart.

1 It would appear, from the following quotations of Sir Walter Scott from Old Ballads, that the family had a seat either in Scotland, or somewhere on the borders nearer than Horncastle, Lincolnshire.

"The house of the Rhodes on the hill."—Old Ballad.

RHODES, GEORGE AMBROSE, esq. of Bellaire and Shapwick, both in the county of Devon, Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, and a Doctor of Medicine; inherited the estates at the decease of his cousin, Ambrose Andrew Rhodes, esq. one of the gentlemen of the privy chamber to his Majesty King George III. in November, 1800.*

Lineage.

John Rhodes, of Horbury, is so designated in Wotton, and in the pedigree at the herald's college, where it is added, "that he was disinherited." This exact coincidence with the family tradition, together with an oral communication between one of the Barlborough family and the grandfather of the present Mr. Rhodes in 1755, appears to identify John Rhodes, of Horbury, with John Rhodes, the first settler at Modbury, in Devon, whose marriage to Blanche Hamlyn, in 1610, is on the Modbury register. As none of the name occur again on the register, until 1663, this omission also corresponds with another part of the family tradition, as will appear hereafter.

We are thus enabled, by tradition, confirmed by correspondence of name, time, and place; by the credibility of witnesses; by presumptive and collateral evidence; and an examination of contemporaneous public records, to follow the fortunes, and trace the family history of this gentleman and his descendants, for two generations without having had access to any other account of him but the two brief notices above mentioned.

Following these guides, it will appear

John Rhodes, of Horbury, the eldest son of Sir John Rhodes, knt. of Barlborough, is supposed to have been the first settler in Devonshire, where, by the professional industry, talent, and integrity of his posterity, one of them, in the person of Ambrose Rhodes, esq. of Buckland House, Buckland, Tonsaunt, was restored to that rank in society from which his progenitor had been displaced.

* Mr. Rhodes, in right of his mother, is representative of the family of Sleet, of Sussex, now extinct in name, and, through his maternal grandmother has become, by the recent death of John Burridge Cholwich, esq. of Faringdon House, and Cholwich Town, the lineal representative of that ancient Saxon family. He is descended both paternally and maternally from the Earls of Devon and the Plantagenets.

† None of the name of Rhodes were, previously to 1610, to be found in Devonshire, nor indeed, at the present period, is there another family of the name in any of the three western counties.

‡ Recently examined, 1834.

§ The result of this interview, as communicated by Mrs. Bridget Hartwell, a near relative of the present proprietor, who was at it, was briefly as follows: "That the armorial bearings of the parties were found, on comparison, to be similar; that the first settler at Modbury was the eldest son of a knight, who, finding himself disinherited by his father, sailed from Yorkshire to Germany; and returning shortly after, was shipwrecked in Bigbury Bay; landed at Marlborough, and purchased property at Modbury."

¶ We find him, however, alluded to in Betham's Baronetage, Art. Milnes, "Sir John Rodes, whose second son, Francis, was created a baronet, 1644."

1 Confirmed to Ambrose Rhodes, esq. of Buckland in 1726, on his marriage, with those of Andrew: arms of Rhodes emblazoning Andrew.
that John Rhodes, being educated by his maternal grandfather, Mr. Savile, of Wakefield, and commercially established at Horbury, a manufacturing town in the parish of Wakefield, on finding, when he came of age, that his younger brother was heir elect to his father’s domain, freighted a ship for Germany, with a view to a commercial speculation, and also to visit some relatives in Saxony, and to fix his residence there; and that, returning shortly after, either repentant, or in the course of traffic, he was, by stress of weather, driven into Bigbury Bay, on the south coast of Devon; that his vessel was saved by the precautions of the then Sir Philip Courtenay, lord of the manors adjacent; that he landed near a small town called Marlborough, and dated a letter to his friends from that place, giving an account of his disaster; but not receiving any answer, (as it subsequently appeared from a misapprehension, they knowing only one Marlborough inland), he purchased property at Modbury, and married there; and shortly after his marriage returned with his wife to Germany, where a son was born to him, who was named Ambrose, after his relative, Ambrosius Rhodius, a celebrated professor of astronomy at Wittenberg, which name has been cherished by his descendants for six subsequent generations.

Ambrose Rhodes, the son of John Rhodes and Blanche Hamlyn, was educated at the University of Wittenberg, and took the degree of doctor of medicine. He married, according to the date on an old piece of plate, a wedding present, in 1638. His wife was, traditionally, one of the daughters of Ambrosius Rhodius, his godfather. He practised at Christiana, in Norway, and was professor of natural philosophy at the college there; but, according to Morei (Supplement), interfering imprudently in political affairs, he was confined in the fortress of Wardenhus, in 1660, and died a year or two after in imprisonment. He wrote “De Astrorum Indicibus,” 1642, “De Transmutatione Animarum Pythagoræa,” and sundry medical treatises.

His son and successor, Ambrose Rhodes, b. 1610, having received a medical education at Christiana, came, after the death of his father, under such unfortunate circumstances, to England, and took possession of the small patrimonial property at Modbury, in Devon, to which he made some additions, and practised as a physician in that town until the time of his death, in 1680. He married first, 1663, of Melchior Justel, he went to Prague to assist Tycho Braye in his observations; he there obtained the friendship of the celebrated Kepler.

On his return to Wittenberg, after a tour through Moravia and Syria, he gave lectures in mathematics, and was elected mathematical professor in 1609, with a stipend from the Elector of Saxony; and became doctor of medicine in 1610. In 1612 he married Catherine, daughter of John Tanger, his predecessor in office, and had a large family. He brought water, at his own expense, into the city of Wittenberg, which water was called the Aqua Rhodis. After attaining other university honours and preferments, he died of apoplexy, at the age of fifty-six, in 1635. He wrote on the Comet, in 1618: on Twilight: on the use of Learning in a Republic. The following anagram was added to his epitaph, by Augustus Buckingham.

“IO MUSIS DAS ROBUR.”

It will appear, from the above anagram, that this celebrated man was also a poet, or critic. Being also classed by Freherus among the archaeists, or good Earl of Warwick, older brother of the Earl of Leicester, who, at the probable time of his birth, in 1552, was serving in the Spanish armies in the low countries; and subsequently patronised commerce, and was said to have speculated in the wooden trade, which was not thought at that period beneath the dignity of a nobleman. In the time of Froissart, that branch of commerce was of such importance, that we see a delegate of the staple sent to Flanders, with the arbitration of peace or war.

The only son,

Ambrose Rhodes, followed his father's profession, and purchased sundry estates in Little Modbury, together with the great tithes, all which have descended to the present family. He m. in 1703, Elizabeth, daughter of George Prestwood, esq. of Whitford and Baterford, mentioned as follows, in Prince's Worthies of Devon: 'George Prestwood, esq. who was sheriff of the county in 1692, whose ancestor, several generations back, transplanted himself from Worcestershire, where the present gentleman possesses still a fair paternal estate.' Rhodes, also, speaking of Baterford, says, "William Gibbs, of Fenton, sold the same physicians to kings, and being a privy counsellor of the Elector, and professor more than twenty years, he ranked, by German law, as a nobleman, and was a member of the Upper Diet. Family tradition has always spoken of him as also an astrologer, and practicer of legerdemain, which is highly probable, as astrology was in those days almost invariably connected with astronomy; and he, no doubt, caught his conjuring propensities from Tycho Braue, who is said by Cox, in his Memoirs, to have entertained James I., who visited him at Prague, with various feats of jugglery. Much matter of curious investigation is afforded by the connexion in those days of the abstruse sciences with magic, of astronomy with prophecy, the fate of nations and of princes, which has been turned to a poor account by some late writers on these subjects.—Tour in Denmark, &c.

2 There is now at Bellair a picture, or copy of a picture, of Ambrosius Rhodius, worked in worsted, habit as a knight, performing tricks of legerdemain before knights and ladies. Underneath the picture we find the initials C. T. 1740. The initials are those of Lady Charity Treby, wife of the Hon. Sir George Treby, secretary at war, of Plympton House, a near relative and neighbour of Mr. Rhodes, of Buckland; this web was probably, therefore, her workmanship. (See Descent of Prestwood.) The combination in this picture of characters so little apparently congruous, would seem a playful performance of the lady above mentioned, if biography did not inform us that not only Tycho Braue, but Cornelius Agrippa, was philosopher, knight, and conjurer.

"Whilst leading the storming party to the breach, his right arm was shattered to pieces by a musket ball; notwithstanding which, he mounted the breach, waved his hat, and fell, pierced by eleven balls."

"If ever honour, courtesy and truth,
Deck’d the fair forehead of ingenuous youth,
If wisdom, stamp’d on manhood’s early pride,
And inborn courage, ah! too nobly tried!
If snatch’d untimely from this nether sphere,
Accomplish’d worth might ever claim a tear;
Such tribute, O lamented shade! is thine;
O, formed alike in camps or courts to shine,
The chieftain’s mirror, and the soldier’s friend.
Pure was thy life, and glorious was its end:
Sons of Iberia, scatter round his tomb
Such flowers as soonest fade and earliest bloom;
Call the first fragrance of the opening year;
New plant thy vine and nurse thine olive there.
For in thy deadliest breach he foremost stood,
And seal’d thy country’s freedom with his blood:
Yes, I had hoped, when hush’d the voice of strife,
To walk with him, what yet remain’d of life;
—Just as we thought to greet him, he was gone;—
Father of heav’n and earth, thy will be done."

Ambrose Rhodes died in 1739, aged seventy-one, and was s. by his son, Ambrose Rhodes, esq. of Buckland House, Buckland Tonsaiant, who married in 1726, Sarah Andrew, sole daughter and heiress of Solomon Andrew, esq. of Lyme Regis, Dorset. This lady is supposed to have been the original from which Fielding drew his portrait of Sophia Western.

Henry Fielding, the son of General Fielding, and Miss Gould, daughter of Judge Gould, of Sharpham Park, Somerset, and grandson of the Earl of Denbigh, had probably been in the habits of intimacy with his cousin, Miss Andrew, from their earliest years. At his return from his studies at Leyden, when he was one-and-twenty, their acquaintance seems to have been renewed, after her father's death, at the residence of one of her guardians and uncles, Andrew Tucker, esq. of Lyme Regis; and the attentions of Mr. Fielding were so marked and assiduous,[] that it was thought prudent to remove the young lady to the residence and care of another of her guardians and near relatives, Ambrose Rhodes, esq. of Modbury, to whose eldest son, then an Oxonian, she was shortly after married. Mr. Rhodes resided for thirty years at Buckland House, Buckland Tonsaiant. He is the same gentleman mentioned in the Memoirs of Rambouilete More Carew as having been imposed on by that hero in two different disguises, at his seat near Kingsbridge, and a third time, in the same day, at Modbury. Upon the sale of Buckland by his relative, Mr. Southcot, he purchased, and resided at Bellair. By Sarah, his wife, Mr. Rhodes had a daughter, Mary, who d. aged twenty-four, and a son, Ambrose-Andrew Rhodes, esq. of Bellair, who succeeded his father in 1777, and became possessed of considerable landed property in the parish of Modbury, together with the great tithes; also, in right of his mother, of divers estates and manors in Devon, Dorset, and Somersetshire. He was appointed gentleman of the privy chamber to His Majesty George III. in 1786, and dying unmarried in 1800, was s. by his cousin, the present George-Ambrose Rhodes, esq. of Bellair.

§ Fielding is reported to have subsequently composed part of his Tom Jones in the Tennis Court at Sharpham, in the intervals of the games. Pliny the younger found hunting favourable to composition: Addison, the stimulus of wine; Fielding, that of tennis.

[] It is reported that he made an unsuccessful attempt at abduction.

The marriage of this gentleman seems a quicker step than he was at that time accustomed to, if we may judge from the following epitaph made for him, when at Oxford, he having inherited somewhat of a German phlegmatic temperament, and always walking very slow.

"Here lies old Rhodes, quite out of breath; He walk'd too slow, to outwalk Death."

He was, however, a gentleman of by no means inactive benevolence; and although he bore no resemblance to Fielding's character of Squire...

Family of Sleech.

Of the remote ‡ origin of this family, now extinct in name, nothing is at present accurately known; they were formerly settled in Kent at Eton Bridge, and in Sussex about Little Hampton, bearing for arms, as appears in Camden's Regus, "checkers, or and gules; a canton sinister, argent." Of those in Sussex, Captain Richard Sleech, the last male, had a grandson by a daughter, Edward Sleech, esq. of the Kent branch, who first settled at Windsor about 1660-70, and m. Anne Saunders, by whom (who re-married after his death, in 1681, the Rev. John Newbrough, master of Eton college) he had a daughter, Lucy, married to the Rev. Stephen Weston, fellow of Eton, and afterwards Bishop of Exeter; and The Rev. Richard Sleech, fellow of Eton, prebendary of Windsor, and rector of Highham and Farnham, who m. Elizabeth, daughter of the Rev. Mr. Upman, fellow of Eton, and had issue, Western (who is said to have been a caricature of one of the former proprietors of Montacute, Somersetshire), yet the following incident is characteristic of the journey to London of the country squire in those days, and may remind us of Squire Western and Mrs. Honour:—"Shortly after Mr. Rhodes's arrival in London, one of his men servants, walking out into the street, lost his way; and the housekeeper, in great trouble, suggested his being cried. Robin, however, a lad of more than Devonian acuteness, in his perplexity, saw a razor-grinder passing by, and gave the man a shilling to add his name to his cry. Razors to grind!—Squire Rhodes's man Robin, &c. It so happened that the razor-grinder passed near the house where Mr. R. resided, and where the housekeeper was at the door, on the look-out for Robin. On hearing the above cry, she exclaimed, in great joy, "Here's our Robin cried, sure enough; and here he is himself," &c.

† Poës épreus ouós "the house of the Rhodes on the hill."—Old Ballad. This estate, (adjacent to Shapwick), an occasional residence, unrivalled perhaps in natural beauties, was purchased thirty years since, and adorned by the present proprietor.

‡ Traditionally from Germany: the name is very uncommon; and only one occurrence of it suggests itself in Sleech Wood, in the parish of Up Lyme, Devon, belonging to—Henley, esq. The tenancy would probably explain the appellation: if held under the college of Eton, it evidently was so called after one of the Sleeches, provosts and masters of that college and school; an additional coincidence, apparently a casual one, is worthy of remark; Sleech Wood, a very fine and extensive one, in the back ground of the old residence of the Henleys, forms a beautiful feature in the prospect from Rhode, the seat of Sir John Talbot, and from Wodehouse, that of Mr. Rhodes, situated on two parallel hills. Rhode was called after Rhode Horn, a promontory adjacent; both were part of the Drake property of Ash.

Paulina, m. in 1817, to Alexander Mansfield, esq. of Yeomanstown, in the county of Kildare.

Mr. Lattin succeeded his father in 1773.

Lineage.

The family of Lattin claims descent from that of Estouteville, in Normandy, of which was

William de Stuteville, who obtained a cardinal's hat in 1439 from Pope Eugenius IV. The Stutevilles, subsequently to the Conquest, were barons of Lydésdale Castle, in Cumberland, and in feudal times were men of great power, as well through their warlike habits, as their vast territorial possessions. Their estates lay in the counties of Rutland, Cumberland, Lincoln, and Warwick. Of the Warwickshire lands, those at Monk's Kirby were eventually granted by John de Stuteville to the monks of Pipwell, in North Hants. Camden, in his Remarks, establishes that surnames were first adopted for distinction sake, and descended to the eldest son only, the others deriving their apppellations from the lands allotted as their patrimony. It is at least probable, therefore, that Walter de Lattin (who appears, from unquestionable records, to have been at a very early era in North Wiltz) assumed his from his residence, retaining still his paternal (the Stuteville) arms. From the Lattins of Lattin diverged several branches, seated in various parts of England, and enjoying high respectability,—the Lattins of Upton, in Berks; of Esher, in Surrey, &c. &c.; as well as the family which obtaining from King John considerable grants of land in Ireland, settled there, and became seated at Morristown Lattin, in Kildare.

William Lattin, esq. of Morristown Lattin, chief of the Irish branch at the commencement of the seventeenth century, sat in parliament for the borough of Nais, (in 1621), and founded in that town an asylum for the support of four poor women, which has been endowed and kept up, agreeably to the intention of the founder, by the family, to the present time. Mr. Jenyns succeeded his cousin, SOAME JENYNS, who died s.p. in 1787, under the will of that eminent person, after the decease of his widow, to whom he left a life interest in the estates.

Lineage.

In the year 1563, Sir William St. Loe, knt. released all his right in the Manor of Churchill, in Somersetshire, to RALPH JENYNS,* of Islington, in Middlesex, whose descendant, Richard Jenyns, sold it to John Churchill, esq. of Lincoln’s Inn.

SIR JOHN JENYNS, knighted in 1603, the representative of Ralph, married, first, Anne, daughter of Sir William Brounker, and had, by her, one son,

JOHN (Sir), who was made K.B. at the creation of Charles, Prince of Wales, served as sheriff of Herts in 1626, and was M.P. for St. Albans. He m. Alice, third daughter of Sir Richard Spencer, and had several children, of whom RICHARD, of Sandridge, in Herts, d. in 1744, leaving by his wife, Frances, daughter and co-heir of Sir Gifford Thornhurst, bart. three daughters.

1. FRANCES, m. Richard, Duke of Tyrconnel. Of the beauty and character of the “Belle Jenyns” a contemporary thus speaks: “She had the fairest and brightest complexioin that ever was seen; her hair a most beauteous flaxen, her countenance extremely animated, though, generally, persons so exquisitely fair have an insipidity; her whole person was fine, particularly her neck and bosom. The charms of her person, and the unaffected sprightliness of her wit, gained her the general admiration of the whole court; in these fascinating qualities she had there (Charles’s court) other competitors; but scarcely one, except Miss Jenyns, maintained throughout the cha-

* Of the Duchess of Tyreconell we have a most interesting account in Mrs. Jameson’s “Beauties of the Court of CHARLES II.” “Last came,” says that accomplished writer, “the heroi-
-ine of our last memoir, the fair, the elegant, the -fascinating Frances Jennings; who she moved -through the glittering court in unblenched ma-jesty, who robbed the men of their hearts, the -women of their lovers, and never lost herself.
The very model of an intellectual coquette;
-perhaps a little too wilful, a little too wary for a -perfect woman; but in the flush and bloom of -early youth, and in the dangerous situation in -which she was now placed, the first of these quita-
-lienties was only an additional charm, the last a -necessary safeguard. As to hearts, and such -things, to bring them to Charles’s court was mere -work of supererogation; it was like trading to -the south sea islands with diamonds and ingots of -gold, where glass beads and tinfoil bear just the -same value and answered just as well. Frances
-Jennings was the eldest of the three daughters,
-co-heirs of Richard Jennings, esq. of Sandridge,
-near St. Albans. If we may give any credit whatever to the ondits of that time, the mother of -Miss Jennings was more remarkable for her -beauty than her discretion. Of the two other daughters, Barbara became the wife of Mr. Grif-thiths, a man of large fortune, and of her we hear
-no more. Sarah, who was younger than Frances
-by twelve or fourteen years, became the famous
-Duchess of Marlborough.

“Miss Jennings was about sixteen when she was appointed Maid of Honour to the Duchess of York. She had no sooner made her appearance -in the court circle, than she was at once proclaimed ‘Oltre le belle, bella!’ Over Miss Hamilton and Miss Stuart she had the advantage of -youth and novelty; and over the others every ad-vantage of mind and person. Her form was that -of a young Aurora, newly descended to the earth;
-she never moved without discovering some new -charm, or developing some new grace. Her eyes and hair were light, and her complexion transcendentally fair; but the rich profusion of her long -tresses, the animated bloom upon her cheek, and

-the varying expression of her countenance and -smile, left her nothing of that fadeur which often
-accompanies exceeding fairness of complexion.
Her mouth, as Hamilton tells us, was not perhaps -the smallest, but was certainly the loveliest in the -world. But nature, in forming this exquisite -chef d’œuvre, had in mercy to mankind left part -of her handy-work imperfect. Some critics declared that the tip of her nose was not ‘de la -dernière délicatesse,’ that her hands and arms were -not quite worthy of the small foot and delicate -ankle; and it was admitted that her eyes were -not quite as perfect as her mouth. To her external attractions, Miss Jennings added what -was rarely met with in the court of Charles, all
-the witchery of mind and all the dignity of virtue.
Her conversation and deportment were alike irresistible, from a just and delightful mixture of -sofness and sprightliness. A little petulance -and caprice of temper; a little heedlessness of -manner; a good deal of her sex’s pride; yet
-more vanity; a quickness of imagination, which -sometimes hurried her to the verge of an imprudence, and a natural unceaseness and readiness of -wit which as often extricated her:—

“Yielding by nature, stubborn but for fame.”

II. Roger (Sir), of whom presently.

III. Thomas, d. unmarried.

1. Sarah, d. in infancy.

Roger Jenyns d. in 1693. His second son, Sir Roger Jenyns, bart. born in 1663, purchased the estate of Bottisham, in the county of Cambridge, and became an active magistrate of that shire. He married first, Martha, widow of John Mingay, by whom, who died in 1701, he had two sons and a daughter, Roger, Venere, and Sarah. He wedded, secondly, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Peter Soame, of Heyden, in Essex, and by her, who d. in 1723, left at his decease in 1740, a son and successor, Soame Jenyns, esq. of Bottisham Hall, b. in 1704. This eminent person was chosen in 1742 one of the representatives for the county of Cambridge, from which time he sat in parliament until the year 1780, representing, during these thirty-eight years, either the county or the borough of Cambridge, excepting four years only, when on the call of a new parliament, in the year 1754, he was returned for the borough of Dunwich. He began his political career by supporting the declining influence of Sir Robert Walpole, and obtained from that minister, the situation of a Lord of the Board of Trade, which he retained until its abolition in 1780. As a country gentleman, Mr. Jenyns appeared to greater advantage than as a politician, ably and impartially fulfilling the magisterial duties, and exercising the rights of hospitality in his neighbourhood. It is, however, as an author and wit that his reputation stands on the highest ground. In 1757, appeared his well-known "Free Enquiry into the Nature and Origin of Evil;" in 1760, his celebrated "View of the Internal Evidences of the Christian Religion;" and in 1782, his "Disquisitions on various Subjects," which are marked with his usual wit and shrewd observation. His last production was "Thoughts on Parliamentary Reform," which he wholly opposed. Soame Jenyns's works have been published in four volumes, 12mo, with a life by Cole. He m. first, Mary, only daughter of Colonel Soame, of Dereham, in Norfolk, and secondly, Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Grey, esq. of Hackney, but d. s. p. 18th December, 1787.

"In private life," says Mr. Cole, "he was a man of great mildness, gentleness, and sweetness of temper. His earnest desire was, as far as possible, never to offend any person." This is confirmed by the Reverend Mr. Cole, of Milton, who is not remarkable for the lenity of his opinions respecting his contemporaries. "Mr. Jenyns was a man of lively fancy and pleasant turn of wit, very sparkling in conversation, and full of merry conceits and agreeable drollery, which was heightened by his inarticulate manner of speaking through his broken teeth, and all this mixed with the utmost humanity and good-nature, having hardly ever heard him severe upon any one, and by no means satirical in his mirth and good-humour."

Mr. Cumberland, in his memoirs of his own life, gives us some characteristic traits of Mr. Jenyns, which correspond with the above: "A disagreement about a name or a date will mar the best story that was ever put together. Sir Joshua Reynolds luckily could not hear an interrupter of this sort." Johnson would not hear, or if he heard him would not heed him. Soame Jenyns heard him, heeded him, set him right, and took up his tale where he had left it, without any diminution of its humour, adding only a few more twists to his snuff-box, a few more taps upon the lid of it, with a preparatory grunt or two, the invariable forerunners of the amenity that was at the heels of them. He was the man who bore his part in all societies with the most even temper and undisturbed hilarity of all the good companions whom I ever knew. He came into your house at the very moment you had put upon your card: he dressed himself, to do your party honour, in all the colours of the jay; his lace indeed had long since lost its lustre, but his coat had faithfully retained its cut since the days when gentlemen wore embroidered figured velvets with short sleeves, boot cuffs, and buckram skirts. As nature cast him in the exact mould of an ill-made pair of stilts, he followed her so close in the fashion of his coat, that it was doubted if he did not wear them: because he had a proteranter wen just under his pole, he wore a wig, that did not cover above half his head. His eyes were protruded like the eyes of the lobster, who wears them at the end of his feelers, and yet there was room between one of these and his nose for another wen that added nothing to his beauty: yet I heard this good man very innocently remark, when Gibbon published his history, 'that he wondered any body so ugly could write a book.'

"Such was the exterior of a man, who was the charm of the circle, and gave a zest to every company he came into. His pleasantry was of a sort peculiar to himself, it harmonized with every thing, it was like the bread to your dinner, you did not perhaps make it the whole, or principal part of your meal, but it was an admirable and wholesome auxiliary to your other viands. Soame Jenyns told you no long stories, engrossed not much of your attention, and was not angry with those that did. His thoughts were original, and were apt to have a very whimsical affinity to the paradox in them."
He wrote verses upon dancing, and prose upon the origin of evil; yet he was a very indifferent metaphysician, and a worse dancer. Ill nature and personality, with the single exception of his lines upon Johnson, I never heard fall from his lips; those lines I have forgotten, though I believe I was the first person to whom he recited them; they were very bad, but he had been told that Johnson ridiculed his metaphysics, and some of us had just then been making extempore epitaphs upon each other. Though his wit was harmless, the general cast of it was ironical; there was a terseness in his repartees that had a play of words as well as of thought; as when speaking of the difference between laying out money upon lands or purchasing into the funds, he said, 'one was principal without interest, and the other interest without principal.' Certain it is, he had a brevity of expression that never hung upon the ear, and you felt the point in the very moment he made the push."

Dying issueless, Mr. Jenyns devised his estates, after the demise of his widow, to his cousin, the Reverend George Leonard Jenyns, their present possessor.

Martha, b. at Burr House, buried at Longstone, 17th August, 1830.

Elizabeth, b. at Longstone.
Maria, b. at Longstone.

Major Carlell, who succeeded his father in 1800, was appointed in 1797, a deputy-lieutenant for the county of Derby, and obtained, in 1803, the command of the South High Peak volunteers, with the rank of major.

Lineage.

"The surname of Carleill or Carlisle," says Mr. Nicholas Carlisle, in his interesting account of the family, "which is of great antiquity, is evidently local, and was unquestionably assumed from the city of Carlisle. Prior to the Conquest the barony of Carlisle, on which the city of Carlisle is erected, and the Manor of Cumwhinton in the parish of Wetheral, belonged to Hildred, thence styled Hildredus de Carlile, a cognomen which descened to his posterity, who were successively knights till the invasion of Scotland by Edward I., when Sir William de Carleill, then chief of the family, sold most of his lands in England, and removing into Scotland, seated himself at Kinmount.

The following descent of the Carleills, of Sewerby, is deduced from the parish registers of Bridlington, which commence in 1561, from a visitation of the county of York, taken at Kelham, in 1665, by William Dugdale, and from Hopkinson's manuscripts.

John Carleill, of Sewerby, who d. 20th January, 1578-9, must have been a person of considerable importance from the large possessions which he left to his son, and his ancestors had, doubtless, been long established at Sewerby, though the previous pedigree cannot be traced. He had issue,

1. Tristram, his heir.
   1. Anne, m. at Bridlington, 28th August, 1576, to Robert Hunter, esq. of Thornton.
   2. Margaret, m. 6th October, 1582, to Matthew Martin, esq.
   3. Grace, m. 12th November, 1583, to Thomas Peacock, esq.
   4. Katherine, m. 3rd February, 1584-5, to William Strycland, esq.

The only son and successor, Tristram Carleill, esq. of Sewerby, m. first, Mary Readshaw, and secondly, Catherine, daughter of Randolph Rode, of Cheshire, by the latter of whom, who d. in 1635, he had issue,

1. Randolph, his heir.
   1. Robert, baptized at Bridlington, 9th July, 1592, a merchant at Kingston-upon-Hull, m. Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Crowther, esq. of Eland, in Halifax, and was father of two sons and two daughters. The elder of the latter, Dorothy, was the second wife of Thomas Fairfax, esq. of Manton, eldest son of the Hon. Col. Charles Fairfax. She d. in 1728, aged ninety, and was buried in the old church at Leeds, where a handsome monument is erected to her memory.

iii. John, d. unmarried before 1659.

1. Anne, m. in 1606, to Richard Burgess, merchant of Hull.
2. Catherine, m. to Richard Milner, esq. of Sutton, in Holderness.
3. Jane, m. first, to — Grimston, esq. and, secondly, to Walter Hawksworth, esq. of Godmantham, in Yorkshire.

Tristram Carleill d. in 1618, and by an inquisition taken at Agnes Burton, in the county of York, 24th May, 1620, appears to have d. seized of the Manor of Sewerby, and of the chapel of Buckton, late parcel of the possessions of the dissolved monastery of Bridlington. He was succeeded by his eldest son, Randolf Carleil, esq. of Sewerby, who had two wives: the first, Frances Legard, d. s. p.; by the second, Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Knowsley, of North Burton, in Yorkshire, he had a numerous issue, viz.

1. Robert, his heir.
2. John, baptized at Bridlington, 4th December, 1630, m. Jane Hardy, of Hilston, in Holderness, and had sons and daughters.
3. Thomas, d. unmarried in 1680.

1. Elizabeth, m. first, to Sir Theodore Herring, of York, and, secondly, to Henry Beale, esq. of Knottingley; but there seems to be some contradiction in Dugdale's statement, for in the same visitation, taken at Barnsley, 15th September, 1665, he says, that Henry Beale, of Woodhouse, in the parish of Drax, m. Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Randolph Carleill, of Sewerby, "widow of Samuel Heron, Clk."

2. Mary, m. in 1656, to the Reverend James Fisher. It was to this gentleman, the ejected vicar of Sheffield, in 1662, that the formation of the first society of Dissenters in that town is owing. He was a man of great piety and worth, and suffered great afflictions by fines and imprisonment from the violent spirit of the times.

3. Hannah, m. in 1660, to Timothy Preston, of Bridlington.
4. Dorothy, m. in 1664, to Robert Carleill, merchant of Kingston-upon-Hull.
5. Amie, m. in 1672, to Gregory Creyke, esq. of Marton, in Sewerby, one of the most ancient families in the East Riding, now represented by Colonel Creyke.
7. Ruth.

Randolph Carleill d. in 1659, was buried in the south choir in Bridlington Church, and s. by his son, Robert Carleill, esq. of Sewerby, baptized at Bridlington, 28th January, 1622-3, who m. Anne, daughter and co-heir of Henry Vickerman, of Fraysthorpe, in Yorkshire, and by her, who d. in 1698, had two sons and ten daughters, viz.

1. Henry, his heir.
2. Timothy, baptized 6th January, 1667-8, m. and had issue.

BRODIE, OF BRODIE.

BRODIE, WILLIAM, esq. of Brodie, in Morayshire, b. 2nd July, 1799, succeeded his grandfather 17th January, 1824, and is lord-lieutenant of Nairnshire.

Lineage.

This surname, a local one, was taken from a hollow, in Gaelic, Brothie, situated near Dyke, in the province of Moray. The old writings of the family were mostly carried away or destroyed, when Lord Leurs Gordon, afterwards (third) Marquis of Huntly, burnt Brodie House, in 1645. It can however be traced very far back, and of old it held the rank of Thane, which seems equivalent to that of Baron.

Malcolm, was Thane of Brodie, temp. King Alexander III. who d. 1285, and had a son, Michael, Thane of Brodie and Dyke, who had a charter from King Robert Bruce, as his father's heir, in 1311, he is mentioned in the evidents of the Priory of Urquhart.

John de Brothie, in 1376, in attendance on the Earl of Mar, lieutenant of the North, is mentioned in the Chartulary of Moray, 11th October, 1380.

Thomas de Brothie, also appears in the Chartulary of Moray, with his elder and younger sons, in a negotiation regarding the vicarage of Dyke, 4th December, 1386. He had two sons,

1. John.

John de Brothie was heir apparent in the above transaction, 4th December, 1386.

Richard de Brothie and his wife were buried 16th September, 1446, in the churchyard at Dyke, where the tombstone yet remains.

Alexander Brothie, of that ilk, having been chief of the jury who served William Sutherland, heir to Duffus, was summoned before the lords of council to answer for his verdict, 26th January, 1484. He d. 1491.

John, Thane of Brothie, repeatedly occurred in the Chartulary of Moray, as an arbiter, 10th April, ult. April, and 21st May, 1492, and from him the succession of the family is distinctly proved. He assisted the Mackenzies against the Macdonalds at the battle of Blair-na-park, and d. before 1511, leaving two sons,

1. Alexander.
2. John.

The elder,

Alexander Brodie, of Brodie, had a charter from William Hay, of Lochloy, to himself and Janet Douglas, his spouse, to which his brother John is a witness, 7th May, 1511. He was one of the jury who served Elizabeth, Countess of Sutherland, heir to her brother, 3rd October, 1514. He died before 1540, leaving a son, Thomas Brodie, of Brodie, who binds his lands to the mill of Grange-green, belonging to Alexander Prior, of Pluscarden, 17th March, 1540. He had a gift from the Queen Regent of the Nonentries of the lands, since the decease of John Brodie, of that ilk, his guid sir, and of Umquhile Alexander Brodie, of that ilk, his father, 6th June, 1545. He had a charter under the great seal 23rd March, 1547, to himself and Agnes Schaw, his spouse, and d. before 1550.

Alexander Brodie, of Brodie, his son and heir, was denounced a rebel for not submitting to the law, his feud with Alexander Cumming, of Alter, 14th November, 1550. He was first married before 1553, to Marjory, daughter of Robert Dunbar, of Durres, a branch of the hereditary sheriffs of Moray, and they had a charter from Patrick, bishop of Moray, 31st October, 1566, which was confirmed under the great seal, 22nd April, 1577. She died before 1569, leaving a son, David. He obtained a decree of suspension against his said father-in-law, 4th July, 1573, regarding the mutilations of the lands of Brodie and Dyke, ascribed to the Mill of Grangegreen, by the deceased, Thomas Brodie, of that ilk, his father. He married, secondly, (contract 15th March, 1569,) Margaret, widow of Dunbar, of Benagefield, and eldest daughter of John Hay, of Lochloy. They had a charter, 27th January, 1570, and there was an attempt made by her relations to disinherit David, in favor of her son, George, as appears by a charter of the whole estate, from Alexander Hay, director of the Chancery, 4th March, 1576. In his will, made 28th June, 1583, he leaves his eldest son, David, to the care of his mother’s brother, David Dunbar, of Grangehill. He mentions his wife, Margaret Hay, and his children, George, Henry, John, Alexander, Thomas, Andrew, Marjory, Elspeth, Janet, Catherine, and Margaret. He d. in August following, and his widow married, thirdly, Mr. William Douglas, the suraur of Moray, made her will and died 14th February, 1609.

David Brodie, of Brodie, on his father's death lost no time in making out the succession. He had letters of regression under the seal, 23rd November, 1583, and secured the interest of the Hays for five months after his father's death, 23rd January, 1583-4. He was contracted to Janet, the youngest sister of his stepmother, daughter of John Hay, of Lochloy, and Park, heir male of the baronial family of Tullybody, Fonch, the Forest of Boyne, &c. Her mother, Janet, was daughter of William Sutherland, of Duffus, descended from the Earls of Sutherland, and ancestor to Lord Duffus. The charter to himself and Janet Hay, his future spouse of the above date, was confirmed 8th February, 1583-4. He had a charter from his brother George, of the dominical lands of Brodie, 29th May, 1596, and his estate was erected into the Barony of Brodie, 22nd July, 1597. His wife made her will and d. on the 17th June, 1607, and according to the diary of his grandson, he was born in 1553, and d. in May, 1626, aged seventy-four. Colin Campbell, second son of Sir

John Campbell, of Calder, and was ancestor of the Earl of Cawdor.

The eldest son,

ALEXANDER BRODIE, of Brodie, styled

Lord Brodie as a senator of the College of Justice, was born 25th July, 1617, was sent into England in 1628, and returned in 1632, when he succeeded and was served heir to his father David, 19th May, 1636, being of age by dispensation of the Lords of Council. He wrote the famous diary which gives a very full and curious account of his life, and shows him to have been a man of piety and talent.

He represented the county of Elgin in the parliaments of 1643, and following years of

CHARLES I. and, from the many parliamentary committees of which he was a member, appears to have been greatly in the confidence of the estates. He accompanied George

Winram, Lord Libberton, to Holland, in March, 1649, and was appointed an ordinary

Lord of Session, on 22nd June, that year. He accepted the situation and gave his oath de fidei administratione in presence of parliament, on the 23rd July, but did not take his seat on the bench till the 1st November, 1649.

He shortly afterwards proceeded to Breda, to treat with CHARLES II. as to the conditions of his return to Scotland. He was a member of the various committees of estates appointed to rule the country during the intervals of parliament, and was elected Commissary General to the army, in October,

1650. Lord Brodie was one of those cited to London, by Cromwell, in June, 1653, to treat of a union between the two kingdoms, but according to the words of his own diary,

"resolved and determined in the strength of the Lord, to eschew and avoid employment under Cromwell." He accordingly resisted all the requests made to him, to accept of office as a commissioner for the administration of justice, until after the death of the Protector; but shortly after that event, took his seat on the 3rd December, 1658. He was fined 4,800£. Scots, after the restoration, although the monies disbursed by him at Breda had not been yet repaid. He m.

of John Urquhart, of Craigston, tutor of JAMES BRODIE, of Brodie, b. 15th September, 1637, succeeded in 1679 and was served heir to his father, 7th October, 1680. His father contracted him 16th July, 1659, to Lady Mary Ker, sister of Robert, first

Marquis of Lothian, daughter of William, third Earl of Lothian, by Ann Ker, Countess of Lothian, eldest daughter and heiress of

Robert, second Earl of Lothian, by Lady

Annabella Campbell, sister of the Marquis of Argyll. Lord Brodie records the event thus, "28th July, My son was married with

Lady Mary Ker, and on the 31st July, 1659, she did subscribe her covenant to and with God, and became his, and gave herself up to him." The Laird of Brodie was fined

24,000£. in 1685. He made his will 25th

September, 1704, and d. in March, 1708, leaving his wife surviving. He had no son,

but nine daughters, viz.

* Few families can boast a more ancient descent than that of Hookes. So far back as the time of Henry III. we find John Hookes, residing at Hookes, in the county of Lancaster, and his descendants continued seated at Conway until the decease in 1701, of Robert Hookes, whose only daughter and heiress, Elizabeth, married, as stated in the text, John Hoare, esq. During their residence at Conway, the Hookeses intermarried with several of the most distinguished families in the principality, including those of Conway, of Botraven; Rixton, of Conway; Puleston, of Berse; Conway, of Brynyrune, &c., &c. and through their alliance with the Pulestons, lineally descended from Edward I. STEPHENS, OF TREGENNA.

STEPHENS, SAMUEL-WALLIS, esq. of Tregenna Castle, in the county of Cornwall, succeeded his father in 1834.

Lineage.

This family has possessed estates in Cornwall for four centuries at least. In the reign of Edward IV. John Stepyn settled as a merchant in the borough of St. Ives, and acquired considerable possessions there, still enjoyed by his descendants. At a subsequent period, John Stephens, of St. Ives, in common with others holding a certain quantity of land, was summoned to the coronation of Charles I. there to receive knighthood, and pay the fees, but like many situated so remotely from the capital, he preferred to transmit the fine for refusal, amounting to £6, which was levied to recruit the exhausted treasury. The original receipt for the sum, signed by the treasurer Godolphin, is still preserved in the family.

John Stephens, esq. who purchased the ancient manor of Killigrew, in the county of Cornwall, and died in 1764, was the lineal descendant of John Stepyn, the first settled at St. Ives. He married Mary, eldest dan. of Samuel Phillips, esq. of Pendrea, in the county of Cornwall, and had several sons and daughters, who all died young, with the exception of a daughter Anne, and a son, Samuel Stephens, esq. M.P. for St. Ives, first returned in 1752, who wedded in June, 1762, Anne, only child and heiress of Richard Seaborne, esq. of the county of Hereford, and dying in March, 1794, was succeeded by his son,

In 1806 he was first returned to parliament by St. Ives, and continued to represent that borough for several years. GORDON, OF CULVENNAN.

GORDON, JAMES, esq. of Culvennan, in the county of Wigton, lieutenant-colonel commandant of the Kirkcudbrightshire yeomanry cavalry, and a deputy-lieutenant; born 2nd December, 1771; succeeded his father, Sir Alexander Gordon, 21st October, 1830, m. 17th September, 1816, Janet, eldest daughter and co-heir of Johnstone Hannay, of Balcary, esq. but has no issue.

Lineage.

This is a branch of the noble house of Kenmure and Lochinvar, which traces its descent from Richard de Gordoun, in 1120, and from the valiant Sir Adam de Gordoun, one of the "Scots whom Bruce hath aften led."

The Culvennan tree can be surpassed by few in the country; it exhibits descent in many ways from the sovereign of the realm, including Duncan I. and Robert Bruce, as well as from the flower of chivalry and of nobility in England, Scotland, and Ireland.

Sir John Gordon, of Lochinvar, who d. in 1517, (for details of whom see Viscount Kenmure, in Burke's Peerage,) left two sons, Sir Robert, his successor, and William. His estate of Craichlaw, in the county of Wigton, he settled on his second son, William Gordon, of Craichlaw, who d. in 1545, and was s. by his son,

William Gordon, of Craichlaw. This gentleman died in 1570, and was succeeded by his son,

John Gordon, of Craichlaw, whose name we find attached to the bond by the Scottish nobility, for the establishment of James VI. on the Scottish throne. He died in 1580, and was s. by his son,

William Gordon, of Craichlaw. This gentleman purchased the estate of Culvennan, and dying in 1636, was s. therein by his son,

Alexander Gordon, of Culvennan, who died in 1679, and was s. by his son,

William Gordon, of Culvennan, an enthusiastic presbyterian, suffering, with his kinsman Sir Alexander Gordon, of Earlston, bart. and others of the Scottish nobility and gentry, every species of persecution, their estates forfeited, and their mansions converted into barracks for the soldiery. Mr. Gordon's estates were however restored to him by act of parliament, after the revolution, and dying in 1703, he was s. by his son,

William Gordon, of Culvennan, to whom succeeded,

Sir Alexander Gordon, of Culvennan, lieutenant-colonel of the Kirkcudbrightshire local militia, and successively sheriff of the counties of Wigton and Kirkcudbright. Sir Alexander's pride in his great ancestor Sir Adam, induced him to visit Dumbarton Castle, for the purpose of seeing the sword of Sir Adam's companion in arms, the patriot Wallace. Finding it neglected and almost as he thought forgotten, he represented the case to the Duke of Wellington, then at the head of the ordnance department. The consequence was, he received a letter of thanks for his suggestions, the sword which made "tyrants fall at every blow" was sent to the Tower, and when properly mounted and furnished, returned to Dumbarton Castle, where it now forms a most interesting object to visitors. Sir Alexander, who was knighted in 1800, m. 17th July, 1769, Grace, only sister of Sir John Dalrymple Hay, of Glenluce, bart. and had, with other children who died young,

1. James, the present representative of the family.

‡ The name of Rolland is of very ancient date in the north of Scotland. Thomas Rolland appears in a jury at Elgin anno 1398; but the immediate ancestor of the Disblair family was William Rolland, descended in the female line from the first Earls of Athol. He m. Betsy Ancrul, granddaughter of Crawford of Lochmorris. His grandson, John Rolland, had a daughter, Catharine, who wedded, in 1610, the celebrated Dr. William Guild, principal of King's College, Aberdeen. She founded several bursaries in Marischal College, and the deed of mortification is recorded in the Town Book, Aberdeen. After the death of her husband, she made a mortification to supply a certain annual sum, which was directed to be given, "in all time coming," as a support to any of the family of Rolland who might become reduced in circumstances. James Rolland was served heir to Catherine, his aunt, 1661.

Lineage.

The earliest ancestor of this ancient family on record

WILLIAM COCUS DE WOMBURN, was engaged in the Crusades anno 1193, under the lion-hearted RICHARD, and thence the arms borne by his descendants were assumed. From him lineally sprang

BENEDICT WODEHOUSE, living 20th Henry VIII. who married, first, in 1554, Catharine, widow of John Foxall, and, secondly, 6th ELIZABETH, Elizabeth, widow of William Keeling. By the former he left at his de-

v. Jonathan.

The third son, John Woodhouse, born in 1627, was in one of our universities preparing for holy orders, when he took his part in the schism of the Presbyterians, which preceded the civil wars, and separated himself from his family. Endowed with considerable merit, learning, and ability, he opened an academy at Sheriff Hales, Shropshire, for the education of young men, whose principles excluded them from the Universities. Many of his scholars became able speakers, and prominent actors in both houses of Parliament, in particular Harley, Earl of Oxford. His latter years Mr. Woodhouse passed in London, and was an eminent preacher at Salters' Hall. He married the daughter and heiress of Major Hubbard, of Rearsey Hall, in Leicestershire, and dying in 1701, left three sons, namely,

1. William, who succeeded to his mother's estate at Rearsey, in Leicestershire, which is now in the possession of John Woodhouse Simpson, esq. only son of the heiress of this branch of the family.

h. George, died unm.

ii. John.

The youngest son, John Woodhouse, esq. born in 1677, m. Hannah Sully, and dying in 1733, left, with three daughters, Anne, who died in 1783, Elizabeth, m. to Ward, esq. and Hannah, m. to Close, esq. a son and successor, William Woodhouse, esq. born in 1710, who m. Mary Mompesson, granddaughter and heiress of William Chappel, esq. and by her who died in 1802, had issue,

1. Hannah, twins, who died young.

ii. Margaret.

iii. Elizabeth, who died in 1817.

iv. Mary, died young.

v. Anne, m. to William Holbach, esq. of Farnborough, in the county of Warwick, (see vol. i. p. 661.)

Mr. Woodhouse died in 1755, and was succeeded by his son,

The very Reverend John-Chappel Woodhouse, D.D. Dean of Lichfield, b. in 1749. This eminent divine was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, and upon taking holy orders was presented by the late Duke of Sutherland, then Marquis of Stafford, to the living of Donnington, in the county of Salop. In 1805 he published "Woodhouse's Anno-tations on the Apocalypse," which he re-edited at the request of the Rev. Dr. Van Mildert, Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford, now Bishop of Durham. The following testimony to the excellence of the work may be seen in a copy of the book preserved in the library of Hatfield Castle, which Hurd, Bishop of Worcester, bequeathed to his successors in the see, and is thus written in his lordship's own hand-writing: "This is the best book of its kind that I have seen; it owes its superiority chiefly to two things, 1. The author's understanding for the most parts the Apocalyptic symbols in a spiritual, not a literal sense. 2. To the care he has taken to fix the precise import of those symbols, from the use made of them by the old prophetic and other writers of the Old and New Testament. Still many difficulties remain, and will remain, to the time of the end. R.W. 15th March, 1806." Dr. Woodhouse was appointed to the Deanship of Lichfield, in 1807, where he resided during the remainder of his life. He was a great benefactor to the cathedral, and presented it with the painted window in the north transept. He died sincerely lamented 17th November, 1833. He m. Mercy Peate, a co-heiress, and by her, who died in 1826, had issue, Chappel, born in 1780, who m. Amelia, daughter of Sir Charles Oakley, bart. and dying in 1815, was buried in St. James's Church, Westminster, leaving issue,

John-Chappel, b. in 1814, died in 1821.

William-Herbert, successor to his grandfather.

Ellen-Jane, m. first, to the Rev. William Robinson, Rector of Swinnerton, and by him, who died in 1812, had two daughters, who both died young,* She m. secondly, Hugh Dyke Acland, esq. who died in 1834, leaving a son, Hugh-Woodhouse Acland. She wedded, thirdly, in 1835, Richard Hinckley, esq.

Mary-Anne.

Dean Woodhouse was succeeded at his decease by his grandson, the present William-Herbert-Woodhouse, esq.

MONEY, OF MUCH MARCLE.

MONEY KYRLE, JAMES, esq. of Much Marcle, in Herefordshire, of Whetham, in Wiltshire, and of Pitsford, in Northamptonshire, colonel in the army, and a justice of the peace for Herefordshire, m. 27th December, 1811, Caroline-Anne, eldest daughter of Robert Taylor, esq. of Gloucester Place, Portman Square.

Colonel Money, who succeeded his father in 1808, assumed, by royal warrant, dated April 26th, 1809, the surname of Kyrle, in addition to his patronymic, together with the arms of that family.

Lineage.

The Moneys having inherited the representation of various highly distinguished divisions of the ancient families of Kyrle, Ernle, Washbourne, and Stoughton, we shall proceed with details of those descents, until each merges in the immediate line of Money.

In the oldest writings relative to the Kyrles, the name is variously written Crul, Crull, and Crulle; afterwards Cryll, and sometimes Curl, until at last it was universally spelt Kyrle. The first of the family on record, Robert Crul, of Altone, or Old Town, near Ross, resided in 1295 at Homme, now Hom Green, in the same neighbourhood. From his son,

William Crul, of the Hulle, or Hill, in Herefordshire, whose name occurs first in 1318, and finally in 1339, descended

WALTER KYRLE, of the Hill, living in 1489, who m. and had two sons, 1. Walter, of the Hill, whose only dau. and heirress, Alice, wedded Christopher Clarke, esq. and was represented by the late Mrs. Jane Clarke, whose devisee is the present Kingsmill Evans, esq. of the Hill, (see vol. ii. p. 212).

ii. James, of whose descendants we are about to treat.

This

JAMES KYRLE,† inherited Walford Court,‡ and was father of Thomas Kyrle, living about the year 1500, who m. Johan, daughter and heir of Hugh Abrahall, esq. by Alice, his wife, dau. of John Rudhall, esq. of Rudhall, and had, with four daughters (one of whom, Bridget, m. Roger Pye, esq. of Mynde, see vol. i. p. 350), nine sons,

1. Walter, of Walford Court, who m. Joan, daughter of Richard Warncombe, esq. and had, with several other sons, who d. s. p. a son and successor,

ROBERT KYRLE, esq. of Walford Court, high sheriff of Herefordshire, who m. Jane, daughter of E. Evans, alias Bithell, esq. and had with four daughters, (one of whom, Penelope, married Roger Hereford, esq. of Priors Court,) two sons, namely,

1. James, his heir.
2. Walter, of Ross, barrister-

† There were many families in various parts of England, in the middle of the sixteenth century, possessing names and arms, each nearly approaching those of Kyrle, who were probably connected with this family.

‡ Walford Court, or Manor House, still exists. From a battery here Captain Kyrle is reported by tradition to have bombarded Goodrich Castle, which, from the relative position of the two places, is not improbable. The estate passed, as hereafter shewn, from the Kyrles to the Gwillyms, and was sold by them to John Clarke, esq. of the Hill, about the year 1757. It is now, under the will of the late Mrs. Clarke, the property of K. Evans, esq.
at-law, and justice of the peace, m. Alice, dau. and sole heir of John Mallett, of Berkeley, in the county of Gloucester, and dying in February, 1650, left two sons, viz.

John, "The Man of Ross," born at the Whitehouse Dymock, in May, 1637, d. at Ross, s. p. 7th November, 1724.* Walter, living in 1683.

Robert Kyrlé was s. by his eldest son,

James Kyrlé, esq. of Walford Court, justice of the peace and high sheriff for Herefordshire.

He m. Anne,† daughter of Robert Waller, esq. of Beaconsfield, in Bucks, by Anne, his wife, sister of John Hampden, the patriot, and by her, who d. 19th September, 1642, had, with four daughters, seven sons, viz.

1. Robert, his heir.
2. James,
3. John,
4. William,
5. Richard, (Sir), knt. of the kingdom of Ireland, living in 1638, married two wives, and had issue by both.
6. Edward, d. unm.
7. Thomas, m. in Ireland, and had a son, Vandervort, who was devisee of "The Man of Ross." James Kyrlé died 1st February, 1646, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

Robert Kyrlé, esq. of Walford Court. Inheriting the republican principles of his mother's connections, he was a distinguished military officer under Cromwell, holding the commission of captain of troopers, and is styled "a stony hearted Rebel," in the narrative of the plundering of Master Swift's house at Goodrich. He married, first, Mildred, daughter of Sir William Maxey, of Bradwell Hall, Essex, and secondly, Elizabeth, daughter of John Brayn, gent. of Little Dean, in Gloucestershire. By the latter, who d. 5th September, 1668, he had issue,

1. James, aged sixteen in 1683, d. before June, 1689.
2. Mary, m. to — Yates, of Bristol.
3. Elizabeth, m. to William Gwillym,§ esq. of Langston, in Herefordshire, and died 12th December, 1714, leaving a son, Robert.

Robert Kyrlé d. in 1669, aged fifty-one, and was buried in the family chapel in Walford Church, on the 2nd October, in that year.

* The character of this amiable man is so well delineated by general description, that to dwell here on his merits would be superfluous. Suffice it to say that many a tradition of Ross and its vicinity still bears ample testimony to the truth of Pope's beautiful encomium, and that the memory of "The Man of Ross" is still and ever will be warmly cherished among the scenes of his benevolence. Of his ancestry is here, for the first time, presented a full account: of his heirs, we would add that Vandervort Kyrlé, his devisee, had two sons and a daughter, Robert, Walter, and Elizabeth, After the death of their father, the property was bequeathed to Robert, the elder son, and his heirs male; he failing issue, it was to have reverted to Walter, the second son, and his heirs male; Walter dying without male issue, then to Elizabeth the daughter (afterwards Mrs. Weale), and her heirs, male or female: but, from a flaw in the will, Robert Kyrlé cut off the entail and devised it to his wife and daughter, whose descendants now enjoy the same. The Man of Ross is buried in the chancel of Ross Church, where a handsome monument was erected in 1776, by Lieut. Col. James Money, in consequence of a bequest of £200 for that purpose by Constantia, Lady Dupplin, of whom the colonel was executor; and thus the reproach of Pope, "And what! no monument, inscription, stone!" is deservedly done away. Lady Dupplin, in her will, styles Mr. Kyrlé her "cousen," and desires that when the monument was erected, "the character of him by the late Mr. Pope, collected, as his Executors should think proper, from his writings, should be inscribed thereon by way of epitaph." This, however, being left wholly to the discretion of the executors, was not done; and the inscription is simply —

"This Monument was erected in memory of Mr. John Kyrlé, commonly called The Man of Ross."

† Sister of the poet Waller.

‡ This narrative is entitled "Master Swift, Parson of Goodrich, Herefordshire, his wife and tenne children most inhumanely dealt with by Captain Kyrlé, a stoney hearted Rebel;" and is found in a scarce and curious work, "England's Complaint against the Sectaries." "Master Swift" was grandfather to the celebrated Dean Swift.

† Sir John, in 1628, founded a chapel adjoining the church of Much Marcle, wherein, during his lifetime, he erected a monument in memory of himself and his wife. The effigies of the Baronet and the Lady Sibyll are beautifully executed, and being quite fresh and perfect, present an excellent specimen of the state of the arts at the commencement of the 17th century.

Ernle, of Ernle and Whetham.

This family derives its name from the village of Earnle, or Ernle, in Sussex, so called from the Saxon words "Earn," and "Lege," the place or habitation of eagles; in allusion to which, three eagles were borne on the shield of Ernle.

In the reign of Henry III., Richard de Earnle was seated at Ernle. His second son, John de Earnle, knight of the shire for Sussex, in 1331, m. Isabel, daughter and heir of his uncle, William de Earnle, widow of Fulco Paulin, and acquired with her in dower the manor of Earnle, together with a large mansion house, moated and castellated, vestiges of which are still to be traced near the church of Earnle.

Sir Henry Ernle, knt. lineal descendant and representative of this John, lived in the middle of the fifteenth century, and had a son and successor,

* "Cackham Manor Place, situated in the parish of West Wittering, was the occasional residence of the Bishops of Chichester, from the thirteenth to the sixteenth century, when it was transferred to William Ernle, and inhabited by his descendants. It was a spacious mansion, calculated to receive the episcopal retinue, with a hall, chapel, and large apartments. Bishop Sherburne greatly frequented it, and induced by the singularly magnificent sea view, bounded by the Isle of Wight, erected a lofty tower of brick, hexagonal, with labelled windows, whence the commanding prospect might be seen with greatest advantage. The tower is still standing. Of the refectory no traces are left, and of the chapel only a single perforated wall." — Dallaway's Western Sussex, vol. i. p. 14.

‡ From a younger son, Thomas, who was buried in Westbury Church, Wilts, 3rd September, 1593, descended the Ernles of Brembridge.

§ The Finnamores traced their descent from the year 1300, and had long enjoyed the estate of Whet-ham. The mansion, which was built apparently about the end of the sixteenth century, was originally a remarkably large and handsome edifice, and was surrounded with ornamental grounds of the most curious and costly description. A royal visit was paid at Whetham in the time of John Kyre Ernle, by Anne, and a highly wrought ebony cabinet is still preserved here, said to have been presented by the King on that occasion. The state bed was till latterly in existence, and in a part of the house, now pulled down, tradition pointed to a dark and secret recess, called “King Charles’s Hole,” as one of the places of concealment sought by Charles during the Civil War. Michael Ernle was succeeded at his decease by his eldest son,

Sir John Ernle, knt. of Whetham, bapt. at Calne, 1st May, 1561, who m. (settlement dated 8th November, 1593), Margaret, dau. and co-heir of Thomas Haydock, esq. of Burytown, in Wiltshire, and by her, who d. in 1646, had, with several younger sons¶ and daughters,

II. Michael, (Sir) Governor of Shrewsbarn Castle, slain in 1645.* The death of this gallant knight is thus described by Clarendon: "Whilst the king's commissioners entertained some hope that this loss (of Weymouth) might have the more disposed the Parliament to a just peace, they received advertisement of a much greater loss sustained by the king, and which was more like to exalt the other side. Colonels Langham and Mitton, two very active officers in the parliament service, about Shropshire and North Wales, bcorresponded with some townsman, and some soldiers in the garrison of Shrewsbury, from whence too many of that garrison were unhappily drawn out two or three days before on some expedition, seized upon that town in the night, and by the same treachery likewise, entered the castle where Sir Michael Earuly, the Governor, had been long sick, and rising upon the alarm out of his bed, was killed in his shirt: whilst he behaved himself as well as was possible, and refused quarter, which did not shorten his life many days, he being even at the point of death of a consumption, which kept him from performing all those offices of vigilance he was accustomed to, being a gallant gentleman, who understood the duty of a soldier by long experience and diligent observation.

Burghb's Journal also mentions a Sir Michael Ernle, "Captain of the Queen's Troop," who was taken prisoner at Rowton Heath, near Chester, "with a scarf which the Queen." (the beautiful Henrietta-Maria.) "gave him from about her neck, for his colours."

Sir John was buried 4th February, 1648, and succeeded by his eldest son.

John Ernle, esq. of Whetham, baptized at Calne, 18th January, 1598, m. (settlement dated 21st May, 1616,) Philadelphia, daughter of Arthur Hopton, esq. and dying in 1685, left, with two daughters, a son and successor,

Sir John Ernle, kn. of Whetham, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and a Member of the Privy Council, temp. Charles II. and James II. The adherence of the Ernles to the cause of the Stuarts is testified by the circumstance of Sir John's name occurring in the list of those who were to have been invested, at the Restoration, with the order of the Royal Oak, (see vol. i. p. 692,) as well as by the grant of the baronetcy, at the same period, to the Echilhampton branch. Washbourne, of Washbourne and Pyltley.

The Washbournes, of Washbourne, were generation after generation of knightly degree, previously to the reign of Edward III., and ranked in point of descent with the most ancient families in the kingdom. Shortly after the Conquest, they derived their name from Wasseborne, or Washbourne, in Worcestershire,‡ and at a very early period, quartered the arms of Zouch, Corbet, Wysham, Wash and Blount, as also those of the Earl of Warwick's second son,§ About the time of Edward III. John Washbourne, of Washbourne, (the grandson of Sir Roger Washbourne, who was himself the grandson of another Sir Roger Washbourne, with whom the pedigree || in the visitations commences) married two wives: by the first, Joan, daughter and heir of Sir John Musard, kn. he had an only daughter, Isolda, who became the wife of John Salwey, of Kanke, (see vol i. p. 152) and by the

The direct male line of the family eventually expired with William Washbourne, esq. of Wichenford, in Worcestershire, and of Pytchley, in the county of Northampton, the lineal descendant of Norman Washbourne, of Wichenford, and consequently the full male representative of the Washbournes, of Washbourne. He married Hester, daughter of Sir John Erne, knt. of Whetham, and his only child, who left issue, married Francis Money, esq. Stoughton, of Stoughton, and St. John’s.

This family derived its name from Stuche, or Stoke, in Surrey, and tun, the Saxon word for “enclosure.” In the time of Stephen,†

* The Pohers came into England with the Conqueror, and John Le Pohers is said, 43 Edward III., and 8 Richard II. to have held of the bishop half the manor of Wichenford, and was styled Lord of the Manor.—Nash, vol. ii. p. 438.
† A pedigree of the Stoughtons in the College of Arms, mentioned by Gwillym, places him here “Tempore Conqueroris.”

Godwin de Stoctun resided at Stoctun, and in the 3rd of Edward III. Henry de Stoctun had royal license to empark there 160 acres of land. In the early part of the sixteenth century, the family became divided into two branches. The elder division continued at Stoughton, and obtained a baronetcy, 29th Jan. 1660-1, which in 1691 became extinct on the death of Sir Laurence Stoughton, of Stoughton.‡ The younger branch, seating itself at St. John’s, Warwick, a large and ancient mansion, originally the Hospital of St. John the Baptist,§ remained there for a series of years, maintaining a leading position in the county, until the male line expired with George Stoughton, esq. of St. John’s, who left an elder daughter and heiress, Eugenia, who m. James Money, esq. and thus the representation of the Stoughtons, of St. Johns, has merged in the Moneys.

‡ The mansion, called Stoughton Place, was situated on a delightful eminence near the middle of the manor. On the death of the last baronet, it was pulled down: the site is now a ploughed field of about six acres, with part of the ancient moats remaining, and is known by the name of the “Stoughton Gardens.” In the church of Stoke, at the east end of the north aisle, is the Stoughton Chapel. There are many ancient monuments to the family, with quaint and interesting inscriptions.—Manning’s Survey.
§ The Hospital of St. John was founded temp. Henry II. by William, Earl of Warwick, for the reception of the houseless poor, and wandering stranger. It had, however, ceased to exist even prior to the general dissolution.—Field’s Hist. of Warwick, p. 55.

CORBET, OF SUNDORNE.

CORBET, ANDREW-WILLIAM, esq. of Sundorne Castle, in the county of Salop, b. 22nd September, 1801, m. 14th June, 1823, Mary-Emma, daughter of John Hill, esq. and sister of Sir Rowland Hill, bart. of Hawkestone. Mr. Corbett succeeded his father 19th May, 1817.

Lineage.

Norman family, whose ancestor, Roger Corbet, accompanied William I. to the Conquest of England, and of whose earlier descendants an account is given at page 189 of the second volume of this work, in treating of Corbett, of Elsham.

It is there stated that Roger Corbet, the companion of the Conqueror, held twenty-four manors in Shropshire, and one in Montgomeryshire, under his kinsman Roger de Montgomery, Earl of Shrewsbury. His extensive possessions comprised, in the above manors, that of Worthen, and his descendants, in the line of which we are now about to treat, continued to possess a considerable estate at Leigh, in the manor of Worthen, down to the eighteenth century.

William Corbet, the eldest son of Roger, was seated at Wattlesborough. His second son, Sir Robert Corbet, knt. had for his inheritance the castle and estates of Caus, with a large portion of his father's domains. He was father of Robert Corbet, also of Caus Castle, who accompanied Richard I. to the siege of Acre, and then bore for arms (according to an old roll, which, in 1563, was in the possession of Hugh Fitzwilliam, esq. of Sprottsburgh, an eminent antiquary,) the two ravens, as now borne by all his descendants.

In 1223, Thomas Corbet, son of the last-named Robert, made an agreement with King Henry II. to pay £100. (a sum equal to about 3000l. of modern currency,) for his relief, according to the feudal tenures of that period, for the lands descended to him from his father. This Thomas Corbet was sheriff of Shropshire in 1234; in 1270 he was a donor to the abbey of Shrewsbury, and in 1272 he founded the chapel of St. Margaret, in Caus. He married Isabel, sister and co-heir of Reginald de Valletort, Baron of Trematon Castle, in Cornwall, and widow of Alan de Dunstanville, by whom he had issue, Peter, his only son, and two daughters, Alice, married to Robert de Stafford, Baron of Stafford, and Emme, wife of Sir Brian de Brampton, of Brampton. * He died in 1274, and was s. by his son,

Peter Corbet, who, it appears, was "a mighty hunter," for, in the ninth year of King Edward I. he obtained letters patent from the sovereign, authorizing him to take wolves in all the royal forests in various counties, a proof of the falsehood of the common belief that our island is indebted to the exertions of King Edgar for the extirpation of that savage beast of prey. This Peter Corbet, of Caus, had summons to Parliament, as one of the barons of the realm, from the 22nd of Edward I. to his death in 1300. By Alice, his wife, he had three sons, Thomas, Peter, and John. Thomas Corbet, the eldest son, married Joan, daughter of Alan Plukenet, and died in the lifetime of his father, without issue.

Peter Corbet, the second son, succeeding his father in the estates of his family, joined with Harry de la Pomeroy, in petitioning Parliament for the dominions of the Valletort family, to which estates they were now become the heirs; but, as King Edward II. had himself been found, by inquisition, to be heir to the Earl of Cornwall, the grantee of "Roger de Vauter," the last of the Valletorts who possessed the estates, the petitioners did not find favour in their suit. This Peter Corbet had also summons to Parliament, as Baron Corbet, of Caus, until his death on the 26th May, 1322. He died without issue, and the line of his family was continued by the youngest of the three brothers,

John Corbet, who, by one inquisition, was found to succeed his brother in the Baronry of Caus, being then forty-two years of age, and, as soon as Edward II. mounted the throne, in 1327, he and Pomeroy revived the suit respecting the Valletort estates, but without success: indeed, John Corbet appears, owing to some circumstances at this distant date not to be ascertained, to have been deprived of a large portion of his family inheritance, for the demesne of Caus, with other estates, became the possessions of the heirs of his aunts Stafford and Brampton. The estates of Leigh, otherwise "Leighton in Walcheria," being on the confines of Powis Land, in the Marches of Wales, with the chief bailiwick of all his forest, had, however, been granted to John, by Peter, his father, and Peter, brother of John, also granted to Roger, his nephew (son of John), the forestership which his father previously held. In the Leigh estate, John Corbet was s. by his son,

Roger Corbet, who, by the name of Roger Corbet, of "Leigh juxta Caus," was returned as one of the Knights of the shire for the county of Salop, in the seventeenth year of Edward II. his father being then living. This Roger Corbet was s. at Leigh by his son,

Roger Corbet, who appears to have received the honour of knighthood, for in the inquisition taken on his death in the nineteenth year of Richard II. 1396, he is styled "Sir Roger Corbet," of Leigh, and the title "knight," is there added. His son,

Peter Corbet, esq. of Leigh, was father of Thomas Corbet, esq. of Leigh, sheriff of Shropshire in the year 1427, whose son,

Thomas Corbet, esq. succeeded to the Leigh estate, and was father of Roger Corbet, esq. of Leigh, who, by his wife, Maria, had issue,

Thomas Corbet, esq. of Leigh. He m.

* Relict (his second wife) of Nicholas, fourteenth Lord Trimlestown.
Lineage.

This family lineally descends from ELYSTAN GLODRIYDD, a powerful British chieftain, who derived his name Elystan, (or Athelstan) from the Saxon King Athelstan, who was his godfather. The appellation of Glodrydd (or the illustrious) was bestowed upon him, not so much for his rank or possessions (which were very extensive, including nearly all the lands between the rivers Severn and Wye) as for his liberality and praiseworthy acts. Elystan died in the early part of the eleventh century, and his eldest son, CADWGAN, Lord of Builth and Radnor, was the ancestor of numerous families, still extant, in the counties of Brecon, Radnor, and Montgomery, as also of many others scattered throughout the principality.

Twelfth in descent from Cadwgan was THOMAS LLOYD ap MEREDITH, the first of his line who adopted the surname of Lloyd. He was a firm and zealous partisan of Henry VII. and was one of those who led a body of his countrymen to the battle of Bosworth. After Henry obtained the throne, he appointed Thomas Lloyd his lieutenant of the county of Brecon, and bestowed upon him other and more substantial marks of favour.

JOHN LLOYD, of Portherys, a younger son of Thomas Lloyd, was an esquire of the body to Queen Elizabeth. From Rees Lloyd, the eldest son, descended the Lloyds of Aberanell, in the county of Brecon, of which family was Evan Lloyd, esq. who left, by his wife, a lady named Jones, a son and successor, Evan Lloyd, esq. who was seated at Cefndyrrys, which beautiful residence on the Wye, now called Welfield House, was sold by the present General Lloyd to his uncle, David Thomas, esq. Evan Lloyd m. Miss Thomas, of Llwynturridor, in the county of Brecon, and had issue,

HERRICK, OF BEAUMANOR.

Herrick, William, esq. of Beaumanor, in the county of Leicester, born in 1794, succeeded his uncle 18th February, 1832. Mr. Herrick is a barrister-at-law, and M.A. of University College, Oxford.

Lineage.

"There is a tradition," says Dean Swift,* "that the most ancient family of the Ericks derive their lineage from Erick, the Forrester, a great commander, who raised an army to oppose the invasion of William the Conqueror, by whom he was vanquished; but afterwards employed to command that Prince's forces, and in his old age retired to his house in Leicestershire, where his family hath continued ever since." Though the earliest ancestor of the family is only recorded by tradition, we learn from ancient writings of unquestionable authority, that the Ericks were seated at a very remote period, at Great Stratton, in Leicestershire, in that respectable line of life, so justly the pride of an Englishman, free tenants of their own lands, two virgates of which they held under the Abbey of Leicester, on the payment of an annual quit rent to the King of a pound of pepper. These virgates had been given to the Abbey by Ralph Friday, Lord of Wibtoft, and were successively held by Roger

* The Dean's father married Mrs. Abigail Erick, of Leicestershire, descended from this family.
Herrick, of Beaumanor.

Trott, Sir Ralph Neville, Alan and Henry Eyrick, and Robert Eyrick, the son of Alan.

Henry Eyrick (the above named) was grandfather of Robert Eyrick, of Stratton, who by Joanna, his wife, had three sons, viz.

William, (Sir) his heir.

Robert, known by the name of Robert de Stratton, who entering into holy orders, obtained the degree of LL.D., was appointed chaplain to Edward the Black Prince, and eventually consecrated Bishop of Lichfield. His lordship died in 1385.

John, of Stratton.

From the eldest son,

Sir William Eyrick, knt. of Stratton, descended.

Robert Eyrick, of Houghton on the hill, living about 1450, who left by Agnes, his wife, two sons, Robert, who died s.p. and

Thomas Eyrick, of Houghton, who settled at Leicester, and is the first of the name that appears in the corporation books, where he is mentioned as a member of that body, in 1511. He died about six years after, leaving two sons and a daughter, namely,

Nicholas, who was Mayor of Leicester in 1552. He married and had issue.

John, of whom presently.

Elizabeth, mentioned in her father’s will, which bears date in 1517.

The second son,

John Eyrick, or Heyrick, of Leicester, b. in 1513, was twice mayor of that corporation, in 1559 and 1572. He m. Mary, dau. of John Bond, esq. of Wardend, in Warwickshire, and by her, who died 5th December, 1611, aged ninety-seven, had issue,

1. Robert, who was thrice Mayor of Leicester, and representative of the Borough in Parliament. He died in 1618, leaving a numerous family. He is now represented by the Reverend Samuel Heyrick, rector of Brampston, in Northamptonshire.

ii. Nicholas, of London, who m. in 1582, Julian, daughter of William Stone, esq. of Segenhoe, in Bedfordshire, and dying in 1592, left issue,

1. William, b. in 1585, d. s.p.

2. Thomas, b. in 1588, who m. and has issue. He is presumed to have been grandfather of Thomas Heyrick, curate of Harborough, who published some sermons and poems.

3. Nicholas, of London, merchant, living in 1604, aged seventy-five, m. Susanna, daughter of William Salter, and had issue.

4. Robert, b. in 1591, a poet of considerable merit. This distinguished person, who received his education at St. John’s College, Cambridge, entering into holy orders, and obtaining the patronage of the Earl of Exeter, was presented by Charles I. to the vicarage of Dean Prior, in Devonshire, 1st October, 1629, and soon afterwards acquired the reputation of a wit and a poet. During the prevalence of the Parliamentary influence, he was ejected from his living and resided in London until the Restoration, when he regained his vicarage. The period of his decease has not been ascertained. His literary efforts are comprised in a scarce volume, entitled, “Hesperides,” or the Works both Human and Divine, of Robert Herrick, esq. London, 1648.” 8vo. To this volume was appended his “Noble Numbers or his Pious Pieces,” in which, says Wood, “he sings the birth of Christ, and sighs for his Saviour’s sufferings on the cross.” These two books made him much admired in the time they were published, and especially by the generous and boon loyalists, who commiserated his sufferings.”

In 1810, Dr. Nott, of Bristol, published a selection from the “Hesperides,” which may probably contribute to revive the memory of Herrick as a poet, who certainly in vigour of fancy, feeling, and ease of versification, is entitled to a superior rank among the bards of the age in which he lived.

5. William, b. in 1593.

1. Mercie. 2. Anne.

iii. Thomas, died in 1623, s.p.

iv. John, Alderman of Leicester, died 1613, leaving issue.

ii. Agnes, m. to William Davie.

iii. Mary, m. to Sir Thomas Bennet, Lord Mayor of London in 1603.

iv. Elizabeth, m. to John Stanford, esq. Recorder of Leicester.

v. Helen, m. to --- Holden, esq.

vi. Christiana, m. to George Brookes, esq.

vii. Alice, m. to --- Hinde.

The fifth son,

Sir William Heyrick, who was born at Leicester about the year 1557, removing to London, in 1574, to reside with his brother Nicholas, then an eminent banker in Cheaps side, attached himself to the court, and for a considerable time "resided constantly there." He was a man of great abilities and address; remarkably handsome, as appears by a small picture still preserved of him in his younger days; was high in the confidence of Queen Elizabeth, as well as of King James, and by honourable service to both, acquired large property. In the reign of the former sovereign he was despatched on an embassy to the Ottoman Porte, and on his return rewarded with a lucrative appointment in the Exchequer. In 1594-5, he purchased from the agents of Robert, Earl of Essex, that nobleman's estate and interest at Beaumanor, and soon after selecting that delightful spot for his residence, bought in all the different outstanding leases, and, in 1598, obtained from Queen Elizabeth, by letters patent under the great seal, a grant of the manor of Beaumanor. In 1601, he was returned to parliament by the borough of Leicester, but retired upon the demise of her majesty. In 1605 he received the honour of knighthood, was appointed a teller of the Exchequer, and chosen alderman of Farringdon Without; from the civic office he was excused however, on agreeing to pay a fine of 300/. Shortly after, Sir William was a second time elected M.P. for Leicester, and for many years devoted his time and abilities to the promotion of the interests of his constituents. During the civil wars he suffered severely, and his fortune was much impaired in that calamitous season. He died 2nd March, 1652-3, and was buried on the 8th in St. Martin's Church, at Leicester, where against the north wall of the choir his gravestone still remains. His picture at Beaumanor exhibits him with a picked beard, a large ruff, and in a white satin doublet, which he used on Christmas day, attending Queen Elizabeth. He wears a sword, and over his dress hangs loosely a large black cloak. His plaited ruffles are closely turned back over his sleeves. In one hand are his gloves, the other, elevated to his breast, holds the stump and tassels of his ruff. On one side, within a wreath, is the motto "Sola supereminet virtus." On the other, "Anno Dom. 1628, etatis suae 60." Lady Herrick is dressed in a close black gown richly ornamented with lace and fine ruffles turned up close over the sleeves; a watch in one hand, in the other a prayer book, and at her side a feathered fan. This portrait is dated "July 27th, 1632, etatis suae fifty-four.

"Art may hir outsid thus present to view, How faire within no art or tongue can show."

Lineage.

From the exact coincidence of name, arms, and dates, there can exist but little doubt that this is a junior branch of the Herricks of Beaumanor, in Leicestershire.

JOHN HERRICK, esq. born in 1612, was probably the seventh son of the celebrated Sir William Herrick, of Beaumanor, as Sir William had a son, named John, who was born in that very year. John Herrick married twice, and died August 1689, leaving, by the first wife, a son Gershom, and by the second, two sons and a daughter, viz. John, Francis, and Mary. To his second son, John, he bequeathed an estate in the barony of Ihane, which is still possessed by his descendants, who reside at Bellmont, in the county of Cork. To his eldest son,

ROSS, OF CRAIGIE AND INNERNETHIE.

ROSS, SIR PATRICK, major-general in the army, a knight commander of the order of St. Michael and St. George and of the Royal Hanoverian Guelphic order, and late governor of Antigua, Montserrat, and Barbuda: married 14th April, 1805, Amelia, youngest daughter of General William Sydenham, of the ancient family of that name and place, in the county of Devon, and has issue,

1. Patrick-William-Sydenham, b. 22nd November, 1821.
2. Charles-Douglas, b. 1st December, 1822, died 3rd March, 1824.
   1. Amelia, married to Major S. Holmes, K.H. military secretary at Malta, and has issue two sons and two daughters.
   2. Clara-Susanna, m. to Rowland-Edward-Louis-Charles Williams, esq. of Weston Grove, Surrey, and Claremont, Antigua, descended from the ancient family of Williams, of Penrhy, in the county of Carmarthen, and has issue two surviving sons.
5. Georgina-Fanny.

We have no certain record how or from whom this family had its beginning; but that it was great and flourishing in the time of Kings Robert and David Bruce, admits of not the slightest doubt.* In the latter of these reigns a daughter of the family was married to Sir John Drummond of Conraig, predecessor of the Earls of Perth, and Drummond of Balloch, afterwards married another daughter of Ross of Craigie, who was mother of John Drummond, Laird of Milnab, as in the genealogical history of the family of Perth, written by William Drummond, Viscount of Strathallan.

ROSS, OF CRAIGIE AND INNERNETHIE.

The family of Ross continued eminent till about the middle of the reign of King James VI. (I. of England), when it began to decline, and was entirely ruined, and its estates carried off by many creditors in the beginning of the reign of King Charles I. John Ross, Laird of Craigie, was a principal favourite with King James V. (Knox’s History) and was taken prisoner by the English at Solway Moss; he is also mentioned in Baker’s Chronicle, by an easy mistake, John Ross, Lord of Grey, instead of Laird of Craigie. The Rosses of Craigie had a great estate near the town of Perth, and had intermarriages with several honourable families in that country, as Drummond of Conergy, Drummond of Balloch, Murray of Balvaird (now Viscount Stormont), Seton of Lathrisk, Ogilvy of Inchmarin, and many others. They were hereditary governors of the Spey Castle, in Perth, which office continued in the family till the Reformation, when the keys of the fortress were surrendered under a protestation, to the provost and council, by John Ross of Craigie. Among the records of the city is one, dated the 30th June, 1461, in which Robert the Rosse of Craigie is one of the witnesses to a warrant, remitting a fine imposed upon the provost and magistrates of Perth, for the destruction of the houses of Dupline and Aberdalgie; and there is another remission, by warrant under the great seal, dated 5th February, 1526, to the town of Perth, for having burnt the Castle of Craigie. The town of Perth was one of the strongest fortifications in the kingdom, surrounded with castles, the residences of powerful barons, who were often at war with one another, and with the magistrates of Perth. Ruthven, now Hunttingower, was the seat and fortress of the Ruthvens, Aberdalgie and Dupline of the Oliphants, Craigie of the Rosses, Kinfauns of the Charteris, Gascon Hall and Fingash of the Bruces, &c. &c.

From the Craigie line descended Patrick Ross,† of Innernethie, whose great-grandfather, Patrick Ross, sheriff-clerk of Perth, the grandson of Alexander Ross, second son to the Laird of Craigie, purchased these lands. The branch of Innernethie has always carried the arms of Craigie, as appears from their seals, and over the funeral monument of the above Patrick Ross, in the Grey Friars of Perth. They are allied in this and the preceding generations, since their descent from the house of Craigie, with the families of Norie of Noristoun, in Monteith, Moncrief of Easton Moncrief, Clark of Pittencher, Lindsay of Evelueck, Seton of Lathrisk, Lindsay of Kilspindie, Pitcairn of Pitions, Osborn of Peppermill, Sinclair of BalCraigie, Douglas of Strathendrie, Balfour of Dennmil, &c.

Patrick Ross of Innernethie married, in 1754, Susanna Douglas, of Strathendrie, in the county of Fife, a branch of the Earls of Morton, and had, with other issue, a second son.

Patrick Ross, a general officer in the army, who married, in 1777, Mary Clara Matile, descended from the family of Pau-mure, and had issue,

Lineage.

This is a branch of the ancient and distinguished families of Buchanan, of Buchanan, or that ilk, and of Buchanan, of Lenny, now representative of that house, and chief of the clan Buchanan.

Anselan O'Kyan, the reputed progenitor of the surname, and the first Laird of Buchanan, was Prince of South-Munster, but having been driven from his possessions by the Danes, in an attempt to free his country from their bondage, removed from Ireland into Scotland about the year 1016, and for important services rendered to King Malcolm II. was rewarded with the estate of Buchanan, and other lands of considerable value. As was customary at that period, he assumed the name or designation which attached to his possessions.

John Buchanan, eldest son of Sir Walter Buchanan, eleventh Laird of Buchanan, married the heiress of Lenny, as appears by a charter of King Robert III. in the year 1383, in favour of John De Buchanan, and Janet De Leny, of the barony of Pitwhanied, but dying before his father, his son John, on the death of his grandfather, became the twelfth Laird of Buchanan.

This John, Laird of Buchanan and Lenny, who flourished upwards of 400 years ago, and was common ancestor of the great George Buchanan and this family, had three sons:

1. Alexander, (Sir) who, in 1421, killed the Duke of Clarence, at the battle of Beaucé, and was himself slain at the battle of Vernueil, 1424, unm.*

2. Walter, (Sir) who succeeded to the estate of Buchanan.

3. John, of whose line we have to treat.

The third son,

John Buchanan, during his father’s lifetime designed of Ballachondachy, s. after his father’s death, to the estate of Lenny, and was father of Andrew Buchanan, as appears by a charter, penes Buchanan De Lenny, granted by James II. in the year 1458, in favour of the said Andrew Buchanan, of Lenny, of the barony of Pitwhanied and other lands.

Andrew, of Lenny, had five sons,

1. John, who succeeded him.

2. Archibald.

3. Walter.

4. George.

5. Gilbert.

The third son,

Walter Buchanan, was the first cadet of the family of Lenny. He possessed Mochastel, in the parish of Callender, and was s. by his son,

Andrew Buchanan, father of Patrick Buchanan, whose son,

Alexander Buchanan, had two sons, John, his successor at Mochastel, and Walter Buchanan, of Glenly, whose grandson, Captain James Buchanan, succeeded to the estate of Glenly, but dying in France without issue, his uncle, the second son of Walter, of Glenly, Alexander Buchanan, became heir to his nephew, the Laird of Glenly. He had two sons, Andrew and George. The elder, Andrew Buchanan, purchased Gartcharan from Lord Napier. He had two sons, Alexander, his successor, and George Buchanan, a magistrate and merchant in Glasgow, who had four sons and one daughter, viz.

1. George, a merchant, who with his brothers Andrew, Niel, and Archibald, were the original promoters of the Buchanan Society, in that city,

* As no genealogical account of the family of Lenny has yet been published, further than appears in the history of the Buchanans, it may be here remarked, having been there omitted, that Gillispie Moir De Leny, first of Buchanan, of Lenny, is mentioned in a charter, A. D. 1297, as having obtained his lands from King Culemus, about 960. It is also mentioned in a genealogical account of the family, composed early in the sixteenth century, and which has been likewise omitted, that “Robert Maccan” was killed in the thirteenth century, in England, having been sent thither on a special mission by the king; and that “John Macandra” was killed at the head of his followers by the English, at the battle of Pinkie, in the year 1547, when gallantly endeavouring to turn the fortune of the day. In the martial, urban, and political achievements of the progenitors of this family, reference must be had to the genealogical accounts of the families of Buchanan, of Buchanan, and of Lenny.

Oswald, Bishop of Raphoe, and Marion, the third, became the wife of Oliphant of Rossie, in Perthshire, postmaster-general for Scotland.

1. Mary, m. to George Buchanan, of Auchintoshan, in the county of Dumbarton.

The third son, Archibald Buchanan, esq. purchased Auchintorlie and other lands, in Dumbartonshire, from his brother Andrew, as also the lands of Hillington, in Renfrewshire, upon the death of his brother Niel. He married Martha, daughter of Peter Murdoch, esq. of Glasgow, Lord Provost or chief magistrate of that city, by whom he had issue,

1. Peter, 2 successively of Auchintorlie.

2. George, 3 of Auchintorlie.

3. Andrew, of Airdinconnal, and heir of destination of Auchintorlie, of whom above.

Mr. Buchanan was s. by his brother, George Buchanan, esq. of Auchintorlie, who was twice married but had no issue. He left the family estates of Auchintorlie and others in the county of Dumbarton, and Hillington, in the county of Renfrew, as before mentioned, to his nephew Archibald, eldest son of his brother Andrew of Airdinconnal, having the consent thereto of his brother, the heir of destination. Andrew of Auchintorlie, eldest son of Archibald, a minor, as before mentioned, now represents the family, and is resident at Auchintorlie House, Dumbartonshire.

GIBSON, OF QUERNMORE PARK.

GIBSON, JOHN, of Quernmore Park, in the county of Lancaster, a minor; succeeded to the family estates on the death of his father, in 1832.

Lineage.

The surname of Gibson is of great antiquity both in England and Scotland. In both kingdoms it is met with at a period not long subsequent to the Norman Conquest; and in both, but especially in the latter, have been many eminent men of the name. In Scotland are families of the name which ranked amongst the free barons, or lesser nobility, of that kingdom more than five hundred years ago; and no less than five Scotch families of Gibson, or rather branches of one and the same ancient and widespread house, have been raised to the baronetage of Scotland. In 1628, upwards of two hundred years ago, Sir Alexander Gibson, of Durie, knight, was created a baronet; and not long subsequently the GIBSONS of Pentland and the GIBSONS of Kierhill had the like dignity conferred upon them; and in modern times the GIBSONS of Clifton Hall and the GIBSONS of Riccarton have been raised to a similar rank. The baronetcy of the Kierhill branch has been extinct, that of the Pentland branch has merged in that of the GIBSONS of Durie, and upon the death, without issue, of Sir Robert Gibson, the eighth baronet of Durie, the baronetcy, or rather the two baronetcies of that branch devolved upon the GIBSONS of Skyrling, a younger branch of the GIBSONS of Pentland. The GIBSONS of Skyrling, representing the noble family of CAMERON of CAMERON, extinct Earls of Hyndford, have, in compliance with the will of the last Earl of Hyndford, assumed the surname of CAMERON in addition to their own; and the present Sir James Gibson-CARMICHAEL, baronet, of Skyrling, is the representative of the CAMERON family, and also of the Durie and Pentland branches of the GIBSON family. The baronetcies of the Clifton Hall and Riccarton branches are existing ones and Sir Charles MAITLAND GIBSON, and Sir James Gibson-CRAIG, are the present baronets of these branches: the latter gentleman representing the ancient family of the Craigs, of Riccarton, has assumed the surname of Craig in addition to his own. The GIBSONS of Scotland have married either into, or into distinguished branches of, the noble families of CRANSTON, MURRAY, FLEMING, HAMILTON, HAY, SETON, SOMERVILLE, PRIMROSE, CAMERON, MAITLAND and DUNDAS (into some of them twice or oftener), and into many other ancient and distinguished families of that kingdom. Playfair, in his account of the Scotch family of GIBSON (see his "British Family Antiquity"), says, they were "possessed of high antiquity; were free barons at a very early period; were ancient land owners of great importance in the country and of great service to the state, and had produced several able statesmen as well as individuals remarkable for their learning and patriotism;} and in another place he continues, "throughout the pages of Scottish History we frequently find members of the GIBSON family employed in the most important negotiations, and entrusted with some of the highest offices in the state." Sir Robert Douglas's account of the family, in his Scotch Baronage, is very similar to that given by Playfair, and proves the ancient consequence and importance of the family. We have given this brief account of this ancient and wide-spread northern race, by reason that the LANCASHIRE family of the same name (the subject of the present article) is traditionally descended from it; and circumstances exist which corroborate the tradition. The LANCASHIRE GIBSONS have been settled in that county nearly two centuries and a half, (since the time of JAMES I.), and during the greatest part of that time have possessed considerable property in the county. They have at different periods been high sheriffs, and are allied to several ancient and distinguished families. They were formerly Lords of Yelland, in Lancashire, but the Yelland and other extensive estates which they once held of the value of three thousand pounds a year or upwards have been alienated. The Yelland branch of the family terminated in females on the death, unmarried, of George Gibson, esq. of Yelland hall. Upon his decease his Yelland and other estates devolved upon Sarah Gibson and Anne Gibson. These ladies were the daughters and eventually co-heirs of Robert Gibson, esq. by Sarah, daughter of the Very Reverend Dean William Coxe, D. D. Mr. Gibson was a barrister-at-law, and recorder of Lancaster. He died suddenly, when on the northern circuit, in the prime of life. He was a very learned and able lawyer, and at the time of his death was rising rapidly in his profession; and had he lived, doubtless, there is little doubt he would have attained great eminence in it. Of his two daughters, and eventually co-heirs, Anne m. William Wickham, esq. of Yorkshire, (of the family of the celebrated William, of Wickham, and ancestor of the Right Honourable William Wickham, who was secretary for Ireland during a part of Mr. Pitt's administration), and the other, Sarah, d. unmarried. She died seized of estates in the parishes and townships of Yelland, Lancaster, Dalton, Furness, Plain-Furness, Stenton, Adgarley, Muchland, Skerton, Nether-Skerton, and Scotforth, all in the county of Lancaster, and Preston-Patrick, and Mansergh, in the county of Westmorland, all of which went, under her will, to the Gibsons of Myerscough, in the county of Lancaster. This lady's munificence and benevolence of disposition rendered her worthy of the handsome fortune she possessed, and procured for her universal respect and esteem. The Gibsons of Myerscough, to whom she left her landed property, and of whom we have to treat, spring from Charles Gibson, a younger son of Edmund Gibson, of Roos-court, in the parish of Dalton, in the county of Lancaster, where he possessed a good estate. Mr. Charles Gibson settled at Preston in the profession of the law, and acquired a fortune with the highest reputation for integrity and honour. He purchased the Myerscough estate, on which he settled previous to his death. He married Frances, daughter of Ralph Assheton, esq. of Laylam, in the county of Lancaster, and great grand-daughter of Sir Ralph Assheton, knt. chief of the ancient and eminent knightly family of the Asshetons, (afterwards baronets), of Assheton-under-lyne, and Middleton, in the county of Lancaster; the principal branch of which terminated, on the death of Sir Ralph Assheton, bart. in two co-heiresses; one of whom married an ancestor of the Earls of Wilton, and the other, an ancestor of the Lords Suffield. Mr. Gibson had issue by his wife,

1. Robert, his heir.

ii. Ralph-Assheton, who d. young.

iii. John, M.A. in holy orders, rector of Roaldkirk, in the county of York, and successor to his brother.

1. Elizabeth, d. an infant.

ii. Mary, m. William Parke, esq. of Whitbeck-hall, of a very respectable Cumberland family, allied to the Hudelestons of Hutton-John, Stanleys of Ponsonby, &c.

Robert Gibson, esq. of Myerscough, s. as heir. He served the office of high sheriff for Lancashire and was a magistrate for the county. He died, unmarried, at an advanced age. Previous to his death, the estates of the elder branch of the family had come by will to his younger brother.

The Rev. John Gibson, M.A. rector of Roaldkirk, in the county of York. This gentleman m. Anne, daughter and eventually sole heiress (who had a considerable fortune) of William Philip Fulford, esq. a merchant in London, and a near branch of the ancient and eminent knightly family of the Fulfords, of Fulford, in the county of Devon; one of whom, Sir Baldwin Fulford, was a distinguished commander in the wars between the houses of York and Lancaster. Mr. Gibson was a gentleman of considerable erudition, and extensive acquirements in various branches of literature. Though he came into possession of a large property on the extinction of the elder branch of his family, yet he continued to reside on his rectory, and to do the duties of it up to the time of his decease. He died at the rectory house of Roaldkirk, and his remains were interred (as were those of his wife, who survived him only a month) in the family vault in Lancaster church. He had issue,

1. Charles, who s. as heir, and who afterwards s. to the Myerscough property.

ii. Robert, L.L.B. in holy orders, rector of Fifield, in the county of Essex. He m. Charlotte, one of the daughters and co-heiresses of William Bullock, esq. of Shelly House, in Essex; of the ancient family of the Bullocks of Faulkburn hall, in that county; being first cousin of Colonel Bullock, who represented the county in parliament nearly half a century.* Mrs. Gibson's family being related to the Tynney family, and next in the entail of the Tynney estates, her husband was presented by Lady Katherine Tynney Long, out of regard for his wife's family, to the valuable living

2. Jane, m. her cousin, Charles Parke, esq. a major in the army.
3. Sarah, d. unmarried.

Charles Gibson, esq. of Quernmore Park and Myerscough House, eldest son of the Rev. John Gibson, and Anne Fulford, succeeded as heir both to the estates of his own and the elder branch of the family. He m. Charlotte, daughter of Edward Wilson, esq. of Dallam tower, in Westmorland (who for many years represented the county in parliament), by Dorothy, one of three daughters and co-heiresses of Sir William Fleming, bart. of Rydal Hall, in the same county; a family of great eminence and distinction ever since the Conquest, and descended from Sir Michael le Fleming, kn. who was a near kinsman of William the Conqueror, and one of the commanders of the victorious army at the battle of Hastings. Mr. Gibson served the office of high sheriff for the county of Lancaster, was a deputy lieutenant, in the commission of the peace, and colonel commandant of the Lancaster regiment of volunteers. He was a skilful and spirited agriculturist, and was for many years president of the Lancaster Agricultural Society. He had issue,

1. Charles, his heir.
2. John, of Gray's Inn.
3. Edward, a lieutenant in the rifle brigade, d. at an early age, m. Mary, daughter of William Croker, esq. of the city of Dublin, and grand daughter of John Croker, esq. of Ballinguard, in the county of Limerick.

* Mrs. Gibson's only married sister was the wife of the celebrated bishop of Llandaff (bishop Watson) a man alike distinguished for learning, liberality, integrity and independance of principle; and her eldest brother married the greatest heiress in the kingdom, Miss Egerton of Tatton, (of the family of the Dukes of Bridgewater), but this lady having died without leaving surviving issue, the very large estates of her family went to an ancestor of the present Mr. Egerton of Tatton.

Mr. Hunter’s more immediate ancestor was Dr. Alexander Hunter, who about a century ago settled in England as a physician, and had considerable practice. Dr. Hunter was well known for his literary and scientific pursuits, and acquired considerable fame by his Georgical Essays, and as the annotator of Evelyn’s Sylva. He married one of the three daughters and co-heiresses (who amongst them inherited a large property) of William Dealtry, esq. of Gainborough, in the county of Lincoln, who was the elder branch of the Dealtrys of Lothhouse Hall, in the county of York (see Dealtry, of Lothhouse Hall, vol. i. p. 232). Of Mr. Dealtry’s other co-heirs one married the Archbishop of Dublin (father of the present Countess of Kilkenny and the Bishop of Ossory) and the other married Godfrey Meynell, esq. of Langley, in the county of Derby.

Edmond Gibson-Atherley, esq. who by royal license assumed his mother's surname. He married Jane, daughter of George Edward Stanley, esq. of Ponsonby Hall,* in the county of Cumberland (a branch of the Stanleys, Earls of Derby), and sister of Edward Stanley, esq. of Ponsonby Hall (one of the representatives in parliament for that county), and by her has issue an only daughter.

WALWYN, OF LONGWORTH.

WALWYN, JAMES, esq. b. in 1768, succeeded his father, John Walwyn, esq. M. P.

Lineage.

The Welsh genealogists, according to their custom, have carried the antiquity of the Walwyn family very high, deriving the descent of Sir Philip ap David, Lord of Walwyn's Castle, in Pembrokeshire, from Gwalain, sister's son to King Arthur, the British hero, and therein they have been followed by William of Malmesbury, Robert of Gloucester, Camden, and several others. "Tunc (anno 1086) in Provincia Wallarum que Ros vocat armavit inventum est sepalchram Walwoni, qui fuit hand deneger Artar ex Sorore Nepos, regnavitque in ea parte Britanniae quae adhuc Walwertha vocatur. Miles virtute nominatisimus, sed a Fratre et Nepote Hengristii Regno pulsus," &c. Camden also mentions the same person, as may be seen under the name of Walwin, which he says "some have interpreted out of the German tongue, which signifies a conqueror, but we now use Gwyn instead of Walwyn; but if Walwin was a Britan, and King Arthur's nephew, as William of Malmesbury noteth, when he speaketh of his gyant-like bones found in Wales, I refer the signification to the Britains." The name is composed of two British words, Gwal, which signifies a wall, and Gwynne or Wynne, white; to which the family crest, a wyvern upon an embattled wall or tower argent, refers. It is also local, and the ruins of Walwyn Castle, or the castle with white walls, are yet, or lately were, to be seen in Pembrokeshire, where it gives name to a parish near Haverfordwest.

In the manuscripts of Doctor Blount, of the city of Hereford, we find under the article of Marcelli Magna, "These Walways are of ancient descent from Gwallain, or Walwyn Castle, in Pembrokeshire, of which family was Sir Philip Walwyn, who being engaged in King William Rufus's time, under Bernard de Newmarch, the Norman, in the conquest of Brecknockshire, * had Sir Reginald Aubrey, of Abercunnrice and Slough.

Sir Peter Gunter, of Gunterstone.
Sir Humphrey Irvingill, of Crickhowell.
Sir Miles Piegard, of Ischergrog.
Sir John Waltonbeie, of Llanfairfogl.
Sir Humphrey Sollers, of Treduston.
Sir Richard de Boyes, of Trefboyes.
Sir Walter Hayard, of Pontwilliam.
Sir Hugh Surdman, of Aberiskir.

Sir Philip Walwin, of the Hay.
Sir Richard Paglin, of Peytyns.
certain lands assigned to him at the Hay, in that county, which are at this day called Walwyn's Rents, of which thus Leland: "One bowed in the town of Hay (co. Henry VIII.) the ruins of a gentleman's place (I think his name was Elias), called Waulwine, by whose means Prince Llewelin's seat was suddenly taken at Bueth Castle, and there beheaded, and his hidde sent to the king."

Sir Philip de Walwynne, in consequence of the new territory assigned him at the Hay, quitted his ancient possessions, and took up his abode there; but being desirous of preserving the remembrance of the seat of his ancestors, assumed it as his surname, after the Norman custom. He was father of

John ap Philip de Walwayne, of the Hay, who inherited in 14 Henry I. and was s. in 6 Stephen by

Sir John de Walwayne, father of Thomas de Walwayne, who married the daughter of Leonard Hackluyt, of Marele Magnus, one of whose family bought the estate of Longeford, which was afterwards disposed of, but which his descendants by the female side repurchased. This marriage appears to have given the first establishment to the family in Herefordshire, and must have occurred, in all probability, early in Richard the First's reign. "By a French indenture, dated 7 Richard I. 1150, Thomas Fitznichol, knt. steward of Nichol de Stafford, did set to Thomas Walwayne, of Magnus Marele all the manor of Marele which belonged to Monsr. N. De Stafford, for 18 marks per ann. except Halewode."

The grandson of this Thomas,

Sir Ely or Helias Walwayne, was the knight by whose activity and courage Llewelin, the bravest and last Prince of Wales, was taken and beheaded. "Being sent with a detachment by Sir Edmund Mortimer, he passed over a ford of the river Wye, fell upon Llewelin's troops and put them to flight, in consequence of which that prince was taken and slain." Sir Ely married Maud, daughter and heir of Sir Philip de Grandour, knt. the representative of a very ancient family, and had two sons,

Richard, his heir.

John, a clerk, who was one of the king's council and treasurer of the Exchequer 12 Edward II. a trust which he discharged with singular credit, as was attested by the king himself.

Sir Ely died in 1286, and was buried at the Hay, being the last of the family who resided at that place. His elder son and successor,

Richard Walwayne, of Walwayne, represented the county of Hereford in nine parliaments of the reign of Edward III. and served as high sheriff during seven successive years from 1335 to 1342. He m. Joan, daughter and heir of Walter de Helion, of Helion or Hellins, in Marele Magna, by whom he acquired that estate, where he fixed his residence, and had a son and successor,

Thomas Walwayne, who was sheriff of Herefordshire in 1389 and 1392, and was appointed, in the ensuing year, inspector of the ports of London.* His name also appears as a witness to a deed between Thomas Tyler de Webley, Richard Nasch, and others, for release of lands in Longeford, Lugwardyn, and Hampton. He m. Catherine, daughter and heir of Sir John Grenon, knt. of Clearwell, in Gloucestershire, and was succeeded by his son,

Richard Walwayne, who m. Catherine, daughter and heir of Ralph Bromwich, and was father of Thomas Walwayne, esq. knight of the shire for Hereford in the 1, 5 and 6 of Henry IV. who purchased the estate of Hagley, near Stourbridge, in Worcestershire, now in the possession of the Lyttleton family. "In the year 1411, 13 Henry IV. says Nash, "Henry de Haggeley sold the manor and advowson of Haggeley, together with Cowbatch, to Thomas Walwayne, esq. who soon after alienated it to Jane Beauchamp, Lady Bergavenny." From that lady he soon after purchased the manor of Longford, which appears by her release to William Walwayne, his son (to whom he bequeathed that estate), to which her own seal is affixed. He m. Isabella, said to be a daughter of the ancient family of Baskerville, and had issue,

1. Richard, of Hellins, who m. Clementia, daughter and heir of Stephen Write, and acquired with her two parts of the manor of Sutton Frene, which had been purchased from Sir John Talbot, of Swannont. In 8 Henry V. this Richard Walwayne conveyed two parts of his manor of Marcey Andeley, or Great Mareley, in trust. He had, beside, the manors of Marden, King's Pawn, Billinsland Ruwarden, in Gloucestershire, Aylton, &c. and one hundred pounds in money for his inheritance. He was s. at his decease by his son.

Thomas Walwayne, esq. who m. Alice, daughter of Sir Leonard Hackluyt, knt. and was direct ancestor of Thomas Walwayne, esq. of Hellins, who m. Ann, dau.

LANDOR, OF IPSLEY COURT.

LANDOR, WALTER-SAVAGE, esq. of Ipsley Court, in the county of Warwick, and of Lanthony Abbey, in Monmouthshire, b. in January, 1775, m. in May, 1811, Julia Thuillier, of Bath, a lady of Swiss extraction, and has Charles-Savage.

Julia-Elizabeth-Savage.

This gentleman is known in the world of letters as the author of "Imaginary Conversations of Literary Men and Statesmen" and several other productions. He has long resided in Italy, chiefly on his estate at Fiesco, near Florence.

Lineage.

The Landors descend from the De la Laundes, a knightly race of Norman origin, who for a long period enjoyed large estates in the county of Lincoln, comprising the manors of Wispinton, Wyurdeby, and many others. They had also considerable possessions in Leicestershire, in which county is a village called Launde to this day: great part, however, of the Leicestershire estates passed, as Camden notices, by an heiress to the Berkeleys of Wymondham. In the middle ages, when lands could not be disposed of by will, vast estates were frequently conveyed by heiresses into the families of strangers: thus in the reign of Edward III. Sybilla, daughter of Sir John de la Launde, carried large estates in Warwickshire to her husband, Roger de Aston, progenitor of the Astons of Tixall; and Goditha, her sister, another daughter of Sir John, brought all her father's lands in Derbyshire, in marriage, to Sir Richard de Statham (Tower Rolls, 51 Edward III.) The family of De la Launde continued to flourish in great opulence and esteem until the wars of the Roses; when, after having fought on the side of King Henry, they were stripped of all their possessions by the victorious Edward, and never again restored to their former importance. This circumstance is recorded by one of the rolls in the Tower (15 Edward IV.), which states that "the king granted to Richard, Duke of Gloucester, in special tail, namely, to his heirs male all the manors and hereditaments (in several counties) which lately belonged to John, Earl of Oxford, and all the manors in the county of Lincoln and other counties which belonged to De la Launde, Miles, (to be held) by the accustomed services." Upon the death of this Richard, Duke of Gloucester (then Richard III.) these estates were of course forfeited to Henry VII., but the employer of Empson and Dudley has never been accused of one act of generosity or justice, and it is probable that a very small portion (if any) of the patrimony of the house of De la Launde was ever rescued from the rapacious grasp of the monarch.

In the reigns of Henry VII. and Henry VIII., when money becoming more abundant, the race of merchants grew into importance, and began a rivalry with the landed proprietors, it became the custom to drop the preposition which used to precede the name, and distinguished the man of birth, who was generally recognized by the place of his residence. In accordance with this custom, the family now before us, which had been settled in Staffordshire on the wreck of their fortunes, were designated indiscriminately Launde and Launer. In the reign of Charles I., John Lauder, of Rugeley, was a captain in the royal army, while Michael Noble, the representative of an old Staffordshire family, which afterwards merged in those of Landor and Cotton, was the friend of Cromwell, and member for Lichfield during the long parliament. In the reign of Charles II. the name began to be spelt as it now appears, and under William and Mary, Walter Landor, esq. of Rugeley, was high sheriff for Staffordshire. The head of the family at the close of the seventeenth century,

Robert Landor, esq. of Rugeley, in Staffordshire, b. 6th June, 1680, 1st. Elizabeth, only daughter and heir of the Rev. John Taylor, rector of Cotton, and dying 15th May, 1711, left a son and successor,

This gentleman, who is lieutenant-colonel-commandant of the 1st regiment of Ayrshire Local Militia, and a deputy-lieutenant, and justice of the peace, succeeded his father in 1796. His designation, as chief of the clan, is “The Macalester;” but, by the entail of the Kennox estate, the heir who succeeds to it is obliged to take the name and bear the arms of Somerville.

Lineage.

The Macalesters of Loup are descended, according to some authorities, from Alexander, second son of Dovenaldus, filius Reginaldi, filius Somerledi, Thane of Argyll, who acquired the Western Isles by his marriage with Effrica, daughter of Olavus the Swarthy, King of Man, and granddaughter of Harald Harfager, King of Denmark, and is probably the same Alexander de Ergadia, one of the Scottish nobles who, in 1284, became bound to receive Margaret of Norway as their sovereign. Other pedigrees, however, deduce the Macalesters from Alexander, third son of John, Lord of the Isles, by his second wife, the Princess Margaret, daughter of Robert II. King of Scotland; and Buchanma, in his work upon Surnames, mentions the Loup family as the earliest branch of the Macdonalds. For centuries the Macalesters have maintained a leading position in the North, and the “Laird of Lowip” occurs in the “Roll of Lairdships and Barons,” published by authority of parliament temp. James VI. anno 1587.

Alexander Macalester, of Loup, chief of the clan at the close of the seventeenth century, married a daughter of Sir Robert Montgomerie, bart. of Skelmorlie, in Ayrshire, and had, with other issue, two sons, Godfrey, his heir.

Duncan, who settled in Holland, where he married, in 1717, Johanna, daughter of Arnold Luchetemaker, burggraaf at Meurs, and his eldest son, Robert, attained the rank of general in the Dutch service, and was commandant of the Scots Brigade. His descendants are still settled in Holland.

The eldest son,

Godfrey Macalester, of Loup, married Grace, daughter of Sir James Campbell, bart. of Auchinbreck, in Argyllshire, and had two sons, Hector, who d. s. p. and Charles Macalester, of Loup, who m. a daughter of Lamont of Lamont, in Argyllshire, and had two sons, namely, Angus, his heir.

Archibald, who for many years commanded the 35th regiment. He m. an English lady, and died a lieutenant-general, leaving a large family. His eldest son until recently was lieutenant-colonel of the Ceylon Rifle Regiment.

Macalester was succeeded by his elder son, Angus Macalester, of Loup, who was wedded, in 1764, his cousin Jane, widow of John Dun, esq. daughter of John Macdonald, esq., of Arndarcross (brother to Macdonald of Kingsburgh, in Skye), by Grace, his wife, daughter of Godfrey Macalester, of Loup, and had issue,

Charles, his heir.
Joanna, m. to John Macalester, of Balinakill, in Argyllshire, and had three sons and two daughters: the eldest son is the present Angus Macalester, of Balinakill.
Grace, m. to Alexander Alexander, of Carlung, in Ayrshire, late major of the 4th regiment of foot, and has two daughters and one son, Archibald Alexander.
Macalester died in 1796, and was s. by his son, the present Charles Somerville Macalester, of Loup and Kennox.

Ardpatrick was sold about thirty years since to Walter Campbell, esq. of Islay, and Loup soon afterwards passed by sale into the possession of another family of the name of Macalester, unconnected with the present. Since then Kennox has been the family seat.

CROMPTON, OF MILFORD HOUSE.

CROMPTON, JOHN BELL, esq. of Milford House, in the county of Derby,
b. 12th January, 1785, m. 8th September, 1810, Jane, third daughter of Edward Sacheverell Sitwell, esq. of Stainsby, and had a daughter, esq. of Holly Bush, in Staffordshire, and died 28th January, 1835.

Mr. Crompton, who succeeded his father 20th May, 1834, is a magistrate and deputy lieutenant for the county of Derby.

Lineage.

The first of this family who settled in Derbyshire was

The Rev. JOHN CROMPTON, M. A. of Em-nuel College, Cambridge, born in 1611, of religious parents at Brightmet, a hamlet in the parish of Bolton, Lancashire. On his return from college, he was appointed lecturer to Dr. Wilmot, at All Hallows, in Derby, and acquired much respect as well for his piety as by his arduous exertions during a raging pestilence, which so desolated that town that grass literally grew in the market place.
From Derby he removed to Brailsford, a sequestered living, five miles distant, where he gave the fifth of the whole rents to Mr.
Greaves, his sequestered predecessor. He was a firm adherent of royalty, and during King Charles’s exile was narrowly watched, though not molested, by those who were then in authority. On the rising of Sir George Booth, in Lancashire, and Colonel White, at Nottingham, to promote the king’s return, Mr. Crompton proceeded, with his neighbours, to assist at Derby, but the project failing, he suffered for a period, several soldiers having been quartered in his house.
At the Restoration he was obliged to give up his living to Mr. Edward Love, and removed to Arnold, a small viceage near Nottingham, which the act of Uniformity soon after dispossessed him of. He died deeply regretted at Mapperley, 9th January, 1668-9, leaving issue. Of his sons,

SCROPE, OF CASTLE COMBE.

SCROPE, WILLIAM, esq. of Castle Combe, Wilts, and of Cockerington, in Lincolnshire, b. in 1772, m. in 1793, Emma, sole daughter and heiress of Charles Long, esq. of Grittleton, in the county of Wilts, second son of Sir Robert Long, bart. of Draycot, M.P. for Wilts, by Emma, daughter and heiress of Richard, Earl Tynel, and has issue, Emma, only child and heir apparent, m. in 1821, to George Poulett Thomson, who thereupon assumed the name and arms of Scrope, in lieu of those of Thomson, by royal sign manual dated 22nd March, 1821, and is at present M.P. for Stroud, F.R.S. F.G.S. &c.

Mr. Scrope inherited the Wiltshire estates on the death of his father in 1787, and those of North and South Cockerington, &c. in Lincolnshire, in 1795, at the decease without issue of Mrs. Peart Scrope, only child of Mary, Countess of Deloraine, sister and heiress to Frederick Scrope, esq. of Cockerington, in virtue of the entail created in the will of the said Frederick Scrope, who died in 1780 s. p. the last of that branch of the Scrope family, which had settled in Lincolnshire at the close of the sixteenth century.

Lineage.

The Scropes of Castle Combe descend in the direct male line from Sir Richard Le Scrope, knt. first Baron Scrope of Bolton, lord high treasurer and chancellor to both Kings Edward III. and Richard II. We were therefore wrong on a former occasion in describing the Scropes of Danby as the only remaining branch of this ancient and eminent family.

Among the numerous baronial families which formerly possessed great influence in England, that of Le Scrope or Scrope stands conspicuous. Though some of their titles are now dormant, and others extinct, few persons were more distinguished in the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries; and Shakespeare has given immortality to no less than three individuals of that name.* The house of Scrope was ennobled in two branches, Scrope of Bolton and Scrope of Masham and Upsall, and its members shared the glory of all the great victories of the middle ages. An unbroken male descent from the Conquest, if not from the time of Edward the Confessor, and the emphatic declaration of the Earl of Armuedel, given in 1386 as a witness in the celebrated controversy between Sir Richard Scrope and Sir Robert Grosvenor for the right of bearing the coat, azure, a bend or, as well as of numerous other deponents in that cause, that the representative of this family "was descended from noble and generous blood of gentry and ancient ancestry, who had always preserved their name and estate in dignity and honour,"† as well as their alliances and property, sufficiently attest their antiquity and importance; whilst the mere enumeration of the dignities which they attained between the reigns of Edward II. and Charles I. proves the high rank they enjoyed. In this period of three hundred years, the house of Scrope produced two earls and twenty barons, one chancellor, four treasurers, and two chief justices of England, one archbishop and two bishops, five knights of the Garter, and numerous bannerets, the highest military order in the days of chivalry.

Richard Scrope held various manors in Worcestershire, Herefordshire, and Shrop-

† See the depositions in Sir Harris Nicolas's splendid work on the Scrope and Grosvenor Controshire, in the time of Edward the Confessor, as appears on the authority of Domesday Book, at the compilation of which they were possessed by his son, Osborn Fitz-Richard, of Fitz-Scrope, who in 1067, whilst William the Conqueror and the greater part of his nobles were in Normandy, assisted the castellan of Her-ford in subduing the rebel Edric. It was most probably his son or grandson, Hugh le Scrope, who is recorded as owing services to Gilbert de Gant, Earl of Lincoln, in 1149, for certain lands given to the Priory of Bridlington, in Yorkshire.
His son,
Robert le Scrope, likewise granted lands to the same priory. He left issue two sons, Philip and Simon.

Philip le Scrope was employed in the 6 Rich. I. 1195, to render an account to the king of the revenues of the Archbishop of York. He left only two daughters, Alice and Maud, who both died without issue, and were succeeded in their inheritance by their uncle, Simon le Scrope, of Flotmanby, in the county of York. He was buried in the church at Wensley, and was succeeded by his son,
Henry le Scrope, who gave divers lands in Flotmanby, in the reign of King John, to the Priory of Bridlington, the Abbey of St. Mary of Rivaux, and other religious communities. He m. Julian, daughter of Roger Brune, of Thornton, and left a son, William le Scrope, living 39 Hen. III.
1254, who, as well as his father, was buried with his ancestors at Wensley. His eldest son, Richard le Scrope, who served against the Welsh in 1263, was succeeded by his brother,
Sir William le Scrope, who possessed lands in Bolton, in Yorkshire, for which he obtained a grant of free warren in the 24 Edward I. 1296. Several deponents in the Scrope and Grosvenor Controversy report him to have been celebrated for his conduct in the field, and “the best knight of the whole country at jousts and tournaments.”
He left issue,
1. Henry le Scrope, his heir.

11. Geoffrey le Scrope, of Masham, knight baronet, and chief justice to both Edward II. and Edward III.; with the latter of whom he also served in a military capacity throughout his French and Scotch wars. He was likewise celebrated for his achievements in the lists of tournaments, and many interesting anecdotes are given concerning him by the deponents in the Scrope and Grosvenor Contro-verse. He was the progenitor of the line of the Lords Scrope of Masham.
(See Burke’s Extinct Peerage).

Sir Henry le Scrope, eldest son of Sir William le Scrope, became a judge of the Court of King’s Bench in the 2 Edward II.
He was a trier of petitions in the parliament which met at Lincoln in the 9 Edward II.
1316, and in the following year was made chief justice of his court, which high jurdicial office he filled for seven years. He was summoned to parliament throughout the greater part of the reign of Edward II. and was employed in various situations of high trust. On the accession of Edward III. he was re-appointed chief justice of the King’s Bench, and subsequently made chief baron of the Exchequer. He obtained charters of free warren for his manors of Bolton and others in Yorkshire; and for his large benedictions was considered the founder of the wealthy Abbey of St. Agatha of Richmond.
He died in 1336, and left issue by his wife,
Margaret, daughter of Lord Roos,
1. William le Scrope.

III. Richard le Scrope, who became heir to his brother William.

Sir William le Scrope accompanied King Edward III. in several of his French and Scotch expeditions. He was at the battle of Virofoss, in Picardy, in 1339, at the siege of Tournay in 1340, and at that of Vannes in 1342. He died of a wound received at the siege of Marlax in 1344, and was buried in the Abbey of St. Agatha. He was succeeded by his brother,

Sir Richard Scrope, first Baron Scrope of Bolton, b. in 1328. This gallant soldier was knighted by Edward III. at the battle of Durham, where the Scotch were defeated, in 1346, and was present at the siege of Calais in the same year. Without attempting to follow this nobleman through all his martial exploits, which, however, stand recorded by their eye-witnesses, the several royal, noble, and knightly deponents in the celebrated controversy sustained by him with Sir Richard Grosvenor, for the right of bearing his family coat of arms, it is enough to say, that between 1346 and 1385, a period of forty years, there was scarcely a battle of note in England, France, Spain, or Scotland, where the English forces were engaged, in which Scrope did not gain honour. But as a statesman he was still more distinguished. He was lord high treasurer to Edward III. and twice lord chancellor of England in the reign of Richard II. by both which sovereigns he was intrusted with many other employments of honour and confidence. Walsingham states him to have been remarkable for his extraordinary wisdom and integrity, and

SCROPE, OF CASTLE COMBE.
records his firmness in refusing to put the great seal as chancellor to the profuse grants made by Richard II. to his favourites. When Richard, incensed at this, sent messenger after messenger to Scrope, “desiring him forthwith to return the great seal, he refused to deliver it to any other person than to the king himself.” Lord Scrope was summoned to parliament continuously during the reigns of Edward III. and Richard II. and was a trier of petitions on many occasions. In 1385 he challenged the right of Sir Robert Grosvenor to bear the arms “Azure, a bend or;” and the memorable suit, instituted for the decision of this heraldic controversy, lasted upwards of four years, and was at length decided in his favour, Scrope having established by the evidence of a vast number of deponents, consisting of the most distinguished men of the day, from John of Gaunt, the king’s uncle, to Chancer the poet, who was then a squire at arms, that “his ancestors had continually borne the contested coat from the Conquest.” Lord Scrope built the stately castle of Bolton, in Richmondshire, and died full of honours at the age of seventy-three, in the 4 Henry IV. 1403. His name is among those of the peers who assented to the deposition of Richard II.; but his peer was a squire, the Earl of Wilts, sacrificed his life in the service of that unfortunate sovereign; and his younger son, Sir Stephen Scrope, adhered to the deposed monarch with admirable fidelity. Lord Scrope m. Blanch, daughter of Sir William de la Pole, by whom he had four sons,

1. Sir William Scrope, K.G. created Earl of Wiltshire, and appointed treasurer of England, in the reign of Richard II., by which sovereign he was greatly esteemed, and employed in numerous important services. He purchased the sovereignty of the Isle of Man from the Earl of Salisbury; and in 1394, when the truce was confirmed with France, “Guilliam le Scrop” is recorded to have assented to it “pour le seigneurie de Man,” as one of the “allies” of the King of England. He is the person of whom Shakespeare makes the Lord Roos to say,

“The Earl of Wiltshire hath the realm in farm.” Rict. II. act 2, sc. 1.

On the invasion of Lancaster, the Earl of Wilts defended the castle of Bristol for the king, but was taken by the usurper’s troops, and beheaded in 1399, in the lifetime of his father.

2. Roger, second Lord Scrope of Bolton, who succeeded his father in the title and estates, and was the conterminator of the family of Scropes, Barons of Bolton."

iii. Stephen (Sir), of whom we have to treat.

The third son, Sir Stephen Scrope, Lord of Bentley, in the county of York, and of Castle Combe, in Wilts, was the lineal ancestor of the present owner of Castle Combe. This eminent person appears to have inherited much of the talent, valour, and integrity of his father, and to have almost equally distinguished himself both in a civil and military capacity. By Richard II. he was appointed lord justice of Ireland, and by Henry IV. was made governor of Roxburgh Castle in 1400. In the next year he returned to Ireland as lord deputy to Thomas of Lancaster,

* The direct line of the Lords Scrope, Barons of Bolton, terminated in the person of Sir Emmanuel Scrope, eleventh baron, lord president of the king’s council, 1619, and created Earl of Sunderland by Charles I. who dying s.p.l. the barony became extinct, or at least his remaining unclaimed to the present day, though said to be vested in Charles Jones, esq. late captain in the 1st regt. Dragoon Guards (see Burke’s Extinct and Dormant Peerage). The immense estates of the Earl of Sunderland were divided between his three natural daughters, of whom the eldest,

1. Mary, m. Charles Powlett, sixth Marquis of Winchester, created first Duke of Bolton, from whom the estate of Bolton Castle and Bolton Hall has descended to the present William Orde Powlett, Baron Bolton (see Peerage).

2. Lady Annabella, m. John Grubham Howe, esq. She obtained the royal license June, 1663, to bear the title as if she had been legitimate. From her the present Earl Howe inherits his title and the estate of Langer, Notts.

3. Elizabeth, m. Thomas Savage, third Earl of Rivers, ancestor of the Earls of Rivers and Rochfort (see Peerage).

The Scropes of Spenthorne, Danby, and Cockerington (qu. vid.) branched off from the line of the Lords Scropes of Bolton, in the reign of Henry VIII. through

John Scrope, esq. of Spenthorne, in the county of York, and of Hambledon, in the county of Bucks, second son of Sir Henry Scrope, sixth Barons Scrope of Bolton. He m. Phillis, daughter of Ralph Rokeby, esq. of Rokeby, in the county of York, and had, with other issue, Henry (afterwards of Spenthorne and Danby), who m. Margaret, daughter and heiress of Simon Conyers, of Danby (see pedigree of Scrope, of Danby).

Ralph (of Hambledon, Bucks), who m. Elizabeth, daughter of William Lord Windsor, and relict of Sir George Powlett, kn., and had by her a son, Sir Adrian Scrope, kn. who settled at Cockerington, in the county of Lincoln, and was progenitor of the Scropes of Cockerington.

the king's son, and died at Tristrel Dermot in that country in 1408. He was faithful to his sovereign and benefactor, Richard II., to the last, and accompanying him to Conway Castle upon Lancaster's invasion, was present at the conference there between that usurper and the king, bearing the sword of state. He was likewise with King Richard on occasion of that melancholy scene in the castle of Flint, which is described with so much pathos by Shakespeare, and scarcely less so by contemporary historians. Shakespeare represents Percy as informing the Duke of Lancaster of the king's concealment in Flint Castle,

"And with him Lord Aumerle, Lord Salisbury, Sir Stephen Scroop, besides a clergyman of holy reverence."

Rich. II. act 2, sc. 4.

Sir Stephen Scrope married Milicent, daughter and co-heir of Robert, Lord Tiptoft or Tibetot, whose wardship, together with that of her two sisters, had been granted by Edward III. to his father, Lord Scrope of Bolton. By his marriage with this lady he obtained the manors and lordships of Castle Combe, in the county of Wilts, and Oxendon, in Gloucestershire, which had been held by his father, Sir Richard Scrope, from the year 1388, in right of his wards, and had descended to the Tiptofts from the Barons Badlesmere, whose representatives they were. Sir Stephen Scrope dying in 1408, was s. by his only son,

Stephen Scrope, esq. of Castle Combe, who did not, however, enter into possession of his maternal estates until after the death of Lady Scrope's second husband, the celebrated Sir John Fastolf, K.G. by whom they were enjoyed (by the courtesy of England) for nearly fifty years. At length, at his death in 1460, Stephen Scrope, who was still alive, but at an advanced age, succeeded to the estates, and possessed them till his death in the year 1472. He was married to Jane, daughter of Sir John Bingham, knt. by whom he had one son,

Sir John Scrope of Castle Combe, knt. who, on his father's death, succeeded to the Wiltshire and Gloucestershire estates. He was high sheriff of Wilts in the 7th year of Henry VIII. and married, first, Isabel, daughter of John Newburgh, esq. by whom he had no issue, and secondly, Margaret, daughter of Sir John Wrottesley, of Wrottesley, in the county of Stafford, by whom he had

The ancient family of Fogarty, now represented by the Lenigans of Castle Fogarty, was of importance in Ireland antecedently to the descent of the English in the reign of Henry II. "That part of Ossory," says Gough, in his continuation of Camden, "which appertains to the county of Tipperary, has in the north the ancient Cantred of Eile ni Bhogartagh, containing the present baronies of Eliogarty and Kilnelongarty; the chiefs of which were the O’Fogartys, some of which still remain with considerable landed properties in their paternal country."
