ceased to afford sufficient revenue to provide necessary repairs, and its use for markets was finally discontinued. At present the only borough property worthy of mention is a small brick "lockup," but its tenants are very few, perhaps because local prohibition has been in force since 1872.

The business and other features of the town are thus summarized by Harris in 1836, two years after the municipal government was established:

Three steamboat-yards, Samuel Walker, 2, G. Stephens, 1; 2 steam sawmills, Samuel Walker; 1 steam merchant-mill, Samuel Walker; 1 water sawmill, J. Walker & Craighead; 1 green glass manufactory, B. Johnston; 1 woollen factory, I. L. Morris; 1 distillery, G. W. Trimble; 1 tannery, Hugh Fergus; 6 blacksmith-shops; 3 hotels, John Holmes and W. Loomis; 1 inn, James Reynolds; 3 English dayschools; 1 Sabbath-school, with 100 scholars; 3 churches, 1 Methodist, Rev. Mr. Reed; 1 Baptist, Dr. J. Estep; 1 Covenanter, Rev. Mr. Crozier; 7 merchants, Samuel Walker, John Walker, Jr., & Co., John McDonough, F. C. Flannegan, James Craighead, Baker Johnson, Frederick Kinkerly; 1 attorney at law, Samuel Frew, Esq.; 3 doctors, James Estep, William A. Penniman, J. W. Biddle; 2 justices of the peace, J. Craighead, J. F. Richards; population, about 1,100.

The population was 1,196 in 1870, and 1,810 in 1880, and at the present time it is probably 3,000, including the closely built section just outside the borough lines, but properly a part of the town. The mineral resources of the surrounding country have been developed rapidly since the decline of the boatbuilding industry. Eight of the largest mines in the bituminous coal-regions are situated within a radius of three miles from the town; and were the population thus employed concentrated, its business would be measurably increased.
Such a result can hardly be anticipated while the "company store" continues to be a cherished institution, however. Improved railway facilities would doubtless confer a great advantage upon the place. The Pittsburgh, Virginia & Charleston railroad was opened through West Elizabeth November 11, 1872. The Elizabeth packet-line was established in 1849, and the steam ferry in 1873. The projected route of the Pittsburgh, Chartiers & Youghiogheny, and of an extension of the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie system, pass through the town. A bridge project is now under discussion.

The earliest journalistic effort in the Monongahela valley above Pittsburgh was made in June, 1828, when Samuel Frew published at Elizabeth the Pensylvaniaian and Jackson Free Press. It was purely a campaign sheet, and did not survive the influences under which it originated. Mr. Frew established the Monongahela Valley Messenger several years later, which shared the fate of its predecessor. The Advertiser was first issued January 28, 1871, by P.
T. B. Shaffer, and appeared at irregular intervals until December 23, 1871, when, having acquired citizenship, it became the Elizabeth Advertiser, and thereafter was published semi-monthly until March 22, 1873. P. T. B. Shaffer and W. L. Penney established the Monongahela Valley Messenger August 2, 1873, and from that time a weekly paper has been published continuously. January 1, 1874, the name was changed to Black Diamond, which was retained for one year, when the present style, the Elizabeth Herald, was adopted. J. T. Weddell became proprietor September 12, 1874, and McGin-ley & Wiley, the present owners, in May, 1879. A most interesting feature of the paper during the last two years has been “Dr. Shaffer’s Reminiscences,” from the pen of John E. Shaffer, M. D., a resident of the borough since 1845, and one of the oldest physicians of the county. November 4, 1887, a centennial edition of the Herald was issued, in honor of the hundredth anniversary of the founding of the town, replete with valuable information relating to the history of the borough and surrounding country, and of great assistance in facilitating the preparation of this chapter.

The first schoolhouse of the borough was a brick building, erected in 1818 on the east side of Second street. The first teacher was Washington Robison. The first effort to establish a school of high grade was made in 1848 by a Miss McFarland, of Cannonsburg. She was followed by —— Williams, J. T. Power, I. H. Campbell and Miss S. S. Ingles. The latter was a lady of good administrative ability, and projected a school of more than local influence. The early public schools were conducted in the houses occupied by A. G. Lewis and George W. Wright. In June, 1849, there were 77 females and 78 males in District No. 1; 74 females and 65 males in District No. 2; 60 females and 55 males in District No. 3; a total of 404. The construction of a new schoolhouse was begun in that year, and a second was erected several years since.

The secret societies of the town were organized in the following order: Old Monongahela Lodge, No. 209, I. O. O. F., February 27, 1847; Monongahela Encampment, No. 109, I. O. O. F., October 19, 1851; Stephen Bayard Lodge, F. & A. M., September 3, 1872; Elizabeth Lodge, No. 444, K. of P., September 9, 1875; G. A. R. Post, December 16, 1878; O. U. A. M., December 10, 1881; R. A., June 8, 1885.

Round Hill Presbyterian Church was organized in 1778, by Rev. James Finley, who visited this region as early as 1772, and became pastor in 1785, continuing until his death in 1795. Rev. James Smith was pastor from 1797 to 1803; William Wylie, 1805-17; Robert Johnston, 1818-31; N. H. Gillett, 1834-41; William Eaton, 1841-44; A. Calhoun, 1845-48; Joseph Smith, 1851-55; James Martin, 1857-63; J. L. Sample, 1864-66; W. L. Boyd, 1867-71; J. B. Dickey, 1871-79; B. T. DeWitt, 1880-. The second church was built in 1819, and the third was dedicated June 24, 1885. The church at Elizabeth was built in 1851. Mount Vernon church was built in 1860.

Bethesda United Presbyterian Church was organized in 1780. Rev. Mathew
Henderson was installed as its first pastor November 24, 1785, and continued until April 29, 1829; Matthew McKinstry succeeded him in 1836, and resigned in 1845; Samuel Jamison was pastor from 1848 to 1866, and D. H. Pollock, at present in charge, was installed in 1869. The second church, a brick building, was erected in 1818, and the church at Elizabeth in 1851.

A Methodist church was built in 1838, and is still standing, in marked contrast with the beautiful structure recently built on the adjoining lot as its successor. Philip Smith was active in the first enterprise. In 1845 Elizabeth was part of a circuit which also included Fell's, Dravo and Concord. The present church-edifice was dedicated May 10, 1855.

The First Baptist Church of Elizabeth was constituted September 17, 1842, with sixty-five members. Rev. James Estep was the first pastor, and was followed by Isaac Wynn in April, 1843; Milton Sutton, in 1844; J. R. Hornish, in 1847; S. W. Foljambe, Richard R. Sutton, William Whitehead, J. K. Cramer, John Burke, J. W. Scott, I. C. Tuttle and A. B. Whitney, the present incumbent. The first place of worship was built in 1833, and that occupied at present was secured by purchase in 1863.

St. Michael's Roman Catholic church was built in 1851, largely through the efforts of William Lambert, a devoted member of that communion, whose residence had been the place of worship for visiting clergymen for some years. The following clergymen have officiated at St. Michael's: R. Phelan, P. M. Garvey, 1855–60; Thomas Quinn, 1860–61; Dennis Kearney, 1861–67; W. F. Hayes, 1867–71; Martin J. Brezill, 1871–73; P. M. Garvey, 1873–77; Francis McCourt, 1877–.

The Monongahela Covenant congregation was originally composed of a membership residing at the preaching-places of Redstone, Mifflin, Long run and Miller's run. The brick church in Elizabeth township, half a mile from the borough, was built in 1838, when Rev. John Crozier was pastor. The church at Elizabeth was built in 1865.

The Methodist Protestant Church was organized in 1863, and the church-edifice was built in 1864. The African Methodist church was dedicated July 16, 1871, after remaining unfurnished for many years. Rev. J. J. Jones has recently organized a colored Baptist society.

LINCOLN TOWNSHIP.

Lincoln township comprises the narrow peninsula at the junction of the Monongahela and Youghiogheny, bordering on the former seven miles and on the latter five, and ranging in breadth from eighty or a hundred rods on the north to two or three miles on the south. The name had previously been suggested for a township to be formed from Ross and Ohio, and on the failure of that project it was appropriated by the admirers of the "martyr president" in the "Forks."

The farm of the late Andrew McClure was surveyed on a warrant applied for in the name of Mary Creigh, June 14, 1767. James Gray settled here as early as 1782, and in 1784 sold land to William Johnson, George Fockler, prior to 1788, and David Pollock in 1792. The lists of early settlers in Elizabeth township include those of Lincoln, as the territory of the latter was embraced within the limits of the former.

Many archaeological specimens have been found in this township, as well as in Elizabeth and Forward. At one place was an Indian cemetery, which gave evidence of having been used as a place of sepulture in widely different periods, for implements belonging to both the stone and iron ages were found in the graves. Tradition relates that in the years following 1780 immense droves of wild hogs were found in the forests of this and the other townships in the peninsula between the Monongahela and the Youghiogheny. They differed in some respects from domestic breeds, but it is a well-known fact that swine will in one or two generations lose the characteristics that they have acquired by domestication, and become, both in appearance and habits, wild. There were no native breeds, and these were probably the descendants of those that had been brought to this region, and, with the fecundity characteristic of these animals, had multiplied till the region was stocked with them. The mast which abounded in the forests here afforded them abundant subsistence. Their ferocity and courage rendered them formidable foes when aroused.

Bellevue, a town of one hundred and fifty or two hundred inhabitants on the Monongahela river, is so named from the fine view commanded from a hill in the vicinity. There is one church, of the Methodist Protestant denomination, built in 1873, in the town. The coalworks here were first operated by William McCaslin. He sold the property about 1847 to James W. Edgar, who was succeeded by George Bradshaw. The works subsequently passed into possession of Hon. Thomas Mellon and Peter Binkey, and then to Farrow, Gumbert & Huey. Mr. Thomas Farrow died May 13, 1873, and the surviving partners have since operated the works under the style of Gumbert & Huey. The coal-lands of Capt. John Pollock, a short distance below, were first developed by Pollock, Dunseth & Co. Along the Youghiogheny river the Lynch Coal company, successors to J. Penney & Co., operate the Lynch Coalworks. The population of the township was 1,399 in 1870, and 1,646 in 1880.

Reynoldston Borough.—This borough was incorporated December 11, 1886. The name is derived from that of its founder, Thomas Reynolds, by whom a portion of the town plot was laid out about twenty years ago. Few indications of growth were apparent for some time. The place received an impetus in the prosperity of McKeesport, but, with no means of convenient communication, its improvement was necessarily retarded. The opening of the Pittsburgh, McKeesport & Youghiogheny railroad and of the Youghiogheny suspension bridge in 1883 completely obviated this disadvantage, and the growth of the town from that time has been rapid. It is pleasantly located on a gentle slope at the foot of the river hills; the streets are regularly laid out, and in many respects it is a desirable place of residence for persons engaged in business in the adjoining city. The only industrial establishment is a brickyard.

A Methodist Episcopal society was formed in 1884, in connection with the First Methodist Episcopal Church of McKeensport. A separate organization was effected in 1886, with Rev. W. S. Davis as pastor. The church-building, a frame structure, on Sinclair street between Ann and Dale, was built in 1884–85. This is the only religious body in the town. Several secret societies are represented here. Hero postoffice was established December 29, 1886, with Michael Gross as postmaster.

CHAPTER IX.
TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHS (Continued).
VERSAILLES—NORTH VERSAILLES—SOUTH VERSAILLES.

VERSAILLES TOWNSHIP.

The boundaries of Versailles township are thus described in the order of court for its erection: “Beginning at the mouth of the Youghiogheny river, thence up said river to the mouth of Crawford’s run, thence by the line of the county to the mouth of Brush creek, thence down Turtle creek to the mouth thereof, thence up the Monongahela river to the place of beginning.” Of the original subdivisions of the county, it was probably the smallest. The name is one of a very few French words that possess political significance in a region which has been rendered historic by the resistance and final defeat of that people.

The following-named persons were residents of Versailles at the respective dates given:

The population was but sparse, and the settlements often very remote one from the other, exposing the inhabitants to all the hardships and deprivations of pioneer life. It is not easy to appreciate the difficulties of those times amid the innumerable comforts and conveniences of the present. The region was separated from the Atlantic coast by vast mountain ranges. Salt, iron and all kinds of merchandise were transported from the east by the rudest manner of conveyance. No railroad, canal, turnpike or even carriage-road could be traced, and the bridle-paths were in many places rough and precipitous. The products of the country were abundant, but it was with the greatest difficulty that the surplus could be disposed of to advantage. Money was exceedingly scarce, business was limited to exchange and barter on a very small scale, and even some of the necessaries of life could be procured only with the greatest difficulty. Besides the moral courage necessary in removing so far from the nearest settlements on the eastern slope of the mountains, the settlers were subjected to many annoyances from the hostile savages of the western country. The sudden invasions of this barbarous enemy were frequent sources of alarm and apprehension. It was not an unusual occurrence for the people to repair to the accustomed place of worship on the Sabbath armed with the rifle and other appendages as necessary as the Bible or Psalter, prepared to defend, if necessary, their pastor and fellow-worshipers.

A family by the name of Keyser resided near the present borough of McKeesport. They were attacked by the Indians, and of eight all were killed but one, who escaped by swimming the river. A man named McNulty, two brothers Neal and a Mr. Cozens were, at different times, killed by the savages. No Indian outrages were committed subsequent to 1780.

The population of that part of the county east of the Monongahela river between Turtle creek and the Youghiogheny was 5,293 by the census of 1860.

The immediate cause of the division of Versailles was the growth of two villages, Port Perry and Coultersville, at the opposite extremes of its territory. In a petition for division presented at the April sessions, 1869, the following line was suggested: "Beginning on Westmoreland county line near the house of John Ludwig, and running thence by the cross-roads near James Black's to the Monongahela river above Saltsburg." Robert Clugston, Thomas McMasters and Thomas Penney, to whom the matter was referred, reported favorably; and at the election, September 4, 1869, the measure received popular sanction by a vote of one hundred and eighteen to sixty-eight. The division was consummated finally by decree of court in September, 1869, erecting North and South Versailles, and for sixteen years the name of the original township was obliterated from the map of the county.

July 3, 1875, by decree of court, the second precinct of South Versailles was erected into the township of Versailles. The sentiment in favor of separate municipal organization in this precinct seems to have been practically unanimous. James D. Hilands, John B. Kelly and Levi Edmundson constituted the commission by whom the proceedings were conducted under the court. The population in 1880 was 727.
HISTORY OF ALLEGHENY COUNTY.

The Baltimore & Ohio railroad passes through the southern part of the township, and at several places along this line villages have sprung up, notably Christy Park and Ellrod's. There are valuable coal-deposits, amply compensating for the rugged nature of the country and the unsatisfactory returns realized from agriculture. Natural gas has been developed to some extent. The streams are Long, Still and Jack's runs.

There are no churches. The schools are five in number, and were sustained in 1885–86 at a cost of about eighteen hundred dollars.

NORTH VERSAILLES TOWNSHIP.

This township is bounded on the north by Turtle creek, on the west by the Monongahela river, on the south by South Versailles, and on the east by Westmoreland county. It is traversed diagonally from northwest to southeast by the Pittsburgh & Greensburg turnpike, an important route of travel before the era of railroads. Its construction was completed in 1818. The Pennsylvania railroad was opened in 1851, the Pittsburgh & Connellsville in 1857, and the Pittsburgh, McKeesport & Younghiogheny in 1883. Village growth, however, received its early impetus in the development of the mineral resources of the region adjacent to the Monongahela river. Port Perry is situated at the mouth of Turtle creek, and is a comparatively old town. Its appearance has not improved with age. There is a fine Methodist church, built in 1888, a schoolhouse, and a population of several hundred. A postoffice was established there in 1850. Saltsburg, midway between Port Perry and Demmler, is a straggling village of perhaps half a dozen houses. Wall, on the Pennsylvania railroad, fourteen miles from Pittsburgh, is the eastern terminus of suburban accommodation trains. The first postmaster, James Dempsey, was appointed February 19, 1885. There are also stations on this road at Turtle Creek, Wilmerding and Moss Side. The village of Turtle Creek is in Patton township. At Wilmerding, near Turtle Creek, very extensive works for the manufacture of the Westinghouse air-brake are in process of erection. When these are completed and placed in operation, a thrifty manufacturing village, with its necessary adjuncts, will come into existence there. Moss Side became a postoffice under the name of Mossbank February 11, 1884, and William M. Jeffrey is postmaster. The main line of the Pennsylvania road is connected with the Monongahela division by a bridge across the river, the approaches on the eastern side passing over the town of Port Perry from the mouth of a tunnel, and following Turtle creek to the station of that name. There is an old Methodist church in the extreme eastern part of the township, on the turnpike, commonly referred to as "Miller's church." The population in 1870 was 2,461; in 1880, 3,051.
SOUTH VERSAILLES TOWNSHIP.

This is the smallest township in the county. It comprises a peninsula nearly surrounded by the Youghiogheny river, with the county line as the eastern boundary. The population in 1880 was 882; in 1870 (including Versailles), 2,194.

There are three villages, Coultersville, Osceola and Alpsville. Coultersville was laid out for Miss Margaret Coulter, owner of the property, by Col. Richard Coulter, of Greensburg, about 1852, and reached its present proportions before the panic of 1873. The population is composed almost entirely of miners. Greenock Lodge, No. 284, K. of P., was instituted January 16, 1871; Youghiogheny Valley Lodge, No. 555, I. O. O. F., November 15, 1859; Coöperative Assembly, No. 6128, K. of L., August 5, 1886. The Baptist Church was organized in 1863, and the place of worship erected in 1873. Union chapel (Methodist Episcopal) was formerly a schoolhouse. The postoffice is known as Duncan. Postmasters: R. R. McQuistion, appointed 1864; George W. Roberts, Jr., 1869; Samuel Foster, 1870; J. K. Howell, 1872; J. C. Love, 1873; F. J. Penney, 1874; J. L. Penney, 1875; George Thompson, 1876; C. Shaner, 1878; Joseph Snyder, 1884; John McElure, 1885.

Osceola and Alpsville are virtually one village, and not very large even when so considered. There are important coal- and coke-works in the vicinity. St. Patrick’s Catholic church was dedicated September 1, 1867, the cornerstone having been laid September 23d of the previous year. Pastors: Revs. P. M. Ward, Peter May, John Staub, James McTighe, Thomas McEurne, H. P. Connery.

CHAPTER X.

TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHS (CONTINUED).

WILKINS—STERRETT (WILKINSBURG)—BRADDOCK (BRADDOCK).

WILKINS TOWNSHIP.

December 16, 1788, at the first session of the court of quarter sessions for Allegheny county, Justice George Wallace presiding, the county was divided into seven townships, the most important of which received the name of Pitt, and was bounded as follows: “Beginning at the mouth of the Poke-ty’s creek, thence up the Allegheny river and by the line of the county to the mouth of Flaherty’s run, thence up the Ohio river to the mouth of the Monongahela river, thence up said river to the mouth of Turtle creek, thence up Turtle creek to the mouth of Brush creek, thence by the line of Plum township to the place of beginning.” September 6, 1792: “According to a petition made by a number of the inhabitants of Pittsburgh, read at June sessions, 1792, and laid over till September:

"Ordered, That so much of Pitt township as lies within the following boundaries, that is to say, beginning at the point or confluence of the rivers Monongahela and Allegheny, and turning up the margin of Monongahela to the Two-Mile run, thence up said run to the head thereof, thence by a due north course to strike the Two-Mile run that empties into Allegheny river, thence down the said Allegheny to the place of beginning, be and the same is erected into a new township called Pittsburgh township."

This is the earliest mention of a reduction in the original area of Pitt township. In 1796, by the erection of Pine and Deer, its territory was restricted to the triangle between the Monongahela and Allegheny rivers. Pittsburgh became a city in 1816, when a still farther encroachment was made upon the western border of Pitt; and five years later Wilkins was formed from its eastern portion. Other subdivisions of its territory were made from time to time, until Pitt township, which once embraced half a score of counties, was obliterated from the map of Allegheny county. That part of its territory in 1796 not included in the city limits at the present time was erected into Wilkins township November 10, 1821, by decree of court confirming a line of division viewed by Robert Beatty, Joseph Reed and Dunning McNair. Of its present boundaries, that on the east was established in June, 1789, when Thompson's run instead of Brush creek became the line of division between Pitt and Plum; that on the north in 1850, when Penn was erected; that on the west in 1879, by the erection of Sterrett; and that on the south in 1885, by the erection of Braddock.

Among the early families of this township the following are remembered: Charles T. Johnson, Nathaniel Montgomery and his son Nathaniel, Elliott Davis, Henry Chalfant, Christian Linheart, William Clark (three generations of the same name), Rev. James Graham, James McKelvy, John McKelvy, Robert Milligan, James Gilmore, James Swishhelm, John Henning and his son Samuel, Thomas Dickson, Peter Pechment, John Kelly and his sons James, John, Archibald, Thomas, William and Benjamin, Ephraim Smith, Adam Dougherty, James B. Linheart.

James Kelly, long a citizen of Wilkins, was born in the eastern part of Allegheny county, on the 31st of October, 1794. His father, John Kelly, was a native of Ireland, and his mother, whose maiden name was Mary Johnson, was born in Pennsylvania. His childhood and youth were passed on his father's farm in what is now Penn township, in this county. Like most of the youths of this region, he received only a common-school education, but his acuteness of observation, his industry and his large fund of common-sense rendered this education available beyond that of many of the men of his time. When he was seventeen years of age his father died, and, being the eldest son, the care of the farm devolved on him. He continued in charge of this farm till 1825, when he was married. He soon afterward engaged in the manufacture of lime, which he continued during many years.

Early in his business career he commenced the purchase of real estate. From time to time he added tract after tract to his purchases, till he came to be the owner of many hundreds of acres in what are now the townships of Wilkins, Penn and Sterrett, and the borough of Wilkinsburg. His revenues were derived from his lime business, from the mines that were opened on his lands and from the rents of his farms. He took a lively interest in the development of the Pennsylvania railroad, and was the contractor for a division of this road, which he sublet in sections. He also furnished many ties for this road. His distinguishing characteristics were benevolence and kindness, and so strong were these feelings that he was often imposed on by designing and unscrupulous persons. He donated freely of his real estate to churches and benevolent institutions in this vicinity, and many victims of adverse fortune are now enjoying the results of his benefactions. He thus erected to his memory monuments more enduring than marble.

During his entire life he was a consistent Christian, and was strictly conscientious in all his transactions. He was firm in the maintenance of what he believed to be his rights, and thus became involved in expensive litigations. As age crept on him, advantage was taken of his failing judgment, and the result was that he died a comparatively poor man, but his memory is not tarnished by a single dishonorable action. His death occurred in 1832, at the age of eighty-eight. He had six children, of whom three are now living.

Of Hon. William Wilkins, from whom the township was named, mention is made in the chapter on Bench and Bar, at page 253, Part I, this work.

The township is crossed from east to west by the Northern turnpike and by the Pittsburgh & Greensburg turnpike. December 7, 1817, Patrick Campbell, a contractor, was murdered by John Tiernan, a workman in his employ, at a cabin near Turtle creek, in this township. After robbing his victim, Tiernan fled with his horse, and several days later appeared upon the streets of Pittsburgh. He was at once arrested. At the trial, Judges Samuel Roberts and Francis McClure presiding, the commonwealth was represented by William Wilkins and Richard Biddle, the prisoner by Walter Forward and Charles Shaler. The execution occurred at Boyd’s hill. This event was among the most important in the early criminal annals of the county.

The coal interests of the township are important. The Hampton Coal company and the New York & Cleveland Gas Coal company are the principal miners and shippers. Lateral railroads connect the mines with the main line, Pennsylvania railroad. The population of Wilkins in 1860 was 2,260; in 1870, 3,435; in 1880, 4,426.

Beulah Presbyterian Church, one of the oldest of that denomination in the county, received supplies as early as 1795, when it is referred to in the minutes of Redstone presbytery as “Pitt Township.” The first pastor, Rev.
James Graham, was installed in 1804. There are also Roman Catholic and Lutheran churches, the latter being known as Mount Carmel. Churchdale cemetery is in the eastern part of the township.

STERRETT TOWNSHIP.

Sterrett Township was formed from Wilkins, by decree of court, September 13, 1879. The proceedings in this case were begun November 18, 1876. Under the act of 1871, the Pittsburgh city council admitted a portion of Wilkins township into the city, as the Thirty-seventh ward, by ordinance of May 2, 1873. After protracted litigation the courts annulled this proceeding, and the annexed district again became part of Wilkins township, so continuing until erected into a separate township. The name was conferred in honor of James P. Sterrett, eighth president judge of the common pleas court of the county, to which position he was appointed January 4, 1862, upon the death of Judge McClure. He was elected in 1862, re-elected in 1872, and resigned in 1877 to accept an appointment to the supreme court.

Wilkinsburg Borough.—Under the earlier names of McNairsville and Rippeysville, Wilkinsburg is one of the oldest towns in the county. Its early importance was derived from the location on the turnpike leading to Pittsburgh, one of the great arteries of travel between the east and west before the age of railroads. The oldest houses in the town are situated along Penn avenue and Nine-Mile run, indicating that village growth was restricted to the immediate vicinity of the turnpike. James Kelly became proprietor of a large tract of land adjoining the railroad station, and being of a conservative disposition, the growth of the village was not so rapid as that of other suburban points. There has been a rapid expansion and improvement within the last few years. The place is distinctively suburban in its character.

At Wilkinsburg is located the Western Pennsylvania Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, an account of which will be found on page 416, Part I. The Women’s Christian Association of Pittsburgh has established two charitable institutions at Wilkinsburg, a “Home for Aged Protestant Women” and a similar home for men. The former was organized June 10, 1869, and incorporated March 25, 1871. The latter was opened in 1872, as “The Sheltering Arms.” The buildings in both instances are brick, and five acres for each were donated by James Kelly.

The Wilkinsburg Presbyterian Church was organized in May, 1866. Rev. S. M. Henderson was installed as first pastor in 1867. The church edifice was built in 1869 and rebuilt in 1887. Rev. Samuel H. Moore is the present pastor.

St. James’ Roman Catholic Church was dedicated November 29, 1869. The membership had previously been connected with SS. Peter and Paul congregation, East Liberty. Rev. Joseph Suhr was appointed pastor of Wilkinsburg and Verona in 1870. A. A. Lambing, the well-known historian, is the present pastor. The United Presbyterian Church was organized November 21, 1882, and Rev. M. M. Patterson became pastor in 1882. The church was built in 1883. The Reformed Presbyterian church was built in 1845; the Methodist, in 1843, and rebuilt in 1878. There are also Reformed, Lutheran and United Brethren churches.

The Wilkinsburg Call, a local newspaper established February 3, 1887, is published weekly by A. H. Silvey. The East Ender was started some years ago, by W. Eisenbise, but suspended after a brief career.

Wilkinsburg was incorporated December 2, 1887, by decree of court.

Brushton, the first station on the Pennsylvania railroad beyond the city limits, is a small suburban town. The works of the Phoenix Glass-Pot manufactory are located here.

BRADDOCK TOWNSHIP.

This township was erected March 9, 1885. August 29, 1884, upon petition of a number of citizens of Wilkins for the division of that township, the court appointed as viewers of the proposed line Charles Davis, J. G. Weir and R. S. P. McCall, who reported favorably. When the question was submitted to popular vote, March 9, 1885, it was decided affirmatively by a majority of one hundred and four, and the name Braddock was given the preference by a plurality of one hundred and four.

This region is pre-eminently rich in historic associations. The circumstances of its settlement possess an interest not merely local, but important in the history of the county. The first white settler in the lower valley of the Monongahela, Lieut. John Frazier, was living at the mouth of Turtle creek in 1753, engaged in trading with the Indians. Washington remained with him over night, November 21, 1753, on his journey to the French posts of Venango and Logstown. The locality was known as "Frazier's Fields," and the house in which Frazier lived was still intact as late as 1804. He was the only resident of the township for many years.

It is upon the memorable defeat of Braddock, however, rather than the experiences of the frontier trader, that public interest centers.

The trader Frazier is not again mentioned after this; and for some years no remarkable happening disturbed the quiet seclusion of the locality. After the Revolution, when the state militia organization was completed, the annual brigade muster was held here. A muster of an unusual character occurred August 1, 1794; it marked the culminating point in the progress of the "whisky insurrection," and in the far-reaching possibilities of its results takes equal rank with the memorable defeat of Braddock forty years before.

The national excise law of 1791 was regarded with much disfavor by the people of Western Pennsylvania. Their opposition to its enforcement was expressed in unequivocal terms by the burning of Gen. Neville’s house in July, 1794, the meetings of the populace at Mingo creek and Parkinson’s ferry, and the robbery of the United States mail. The information obtained from the latter source was the immediate reason for the assemblage at Braddock's Fields. The intercepted letters were found to contain opinions of the leaders of the popular party not agreeable to them, and a self-constituted committee of six, among whom were Parkinson and Bradford, forthwith issued at Cannonsburg a summons to the different colonels of militia throughout the survey to appear at the accustomed place of rendezvous with their respective commands. Their avowed purpose was the seizure of the magazine and fort, the capture of the offensive individuals and the United States marshal, and, if necessary, an attack upon the town of Pittsburgh. On Friday, August 1, 1794, the militia assembled to the number of several thousand. Bradford and Parkinson were there; the brother of James McFarlane, who had been killed in the attack on Neville's house; James Ross, United States senator, and subsequently one of the commissioners appointed by the president to offer amnesty to the insurgents; John Scull, the pioneer journalist of the west; Gen. John Wilkins, Alexander McNickle, John McMasters and other prominent citizens of Pittsburgh at that period; George Wallace, the first president judge of Allegheny county, and H. H. Brackenridge, the diplomat of the occasion, whose skill and tact, and his intricate knowledge of the men with whom he had to deal, performed their greatest triumph in diverting the strong current of popular indignation from expending the force of its unrestrained and misdirected energy in acts of violence. The fort was not attacked; the town was not burned; the persons of those who had rendered themselves obnoxious were not molested—they had fled; the "army" marched through the town, and, after having been regaled with whisky and refreshments, dispersed. A little less of tact on the part of certain individuals, and of moderation on the part of others, might have precipitated a sanguinary civil conflict; but the threatened crisis had been averted, although the magnitude of its importance was not generally recognized. The pacification of the western country was not finally effected until the following year, and disorder was frequently manifested; but at no other period in the course of the insurrection was the gravity of the situation so apparent as during the few days that Braddock's Fields were the encampment of seven thousand undisciplined men, patriotic at heart, but under control of a reckless and irresponsible leadership.

It is worthy of note that the battle-ground was owned, at this time, by George Wallace, president judge at the first session of the courts after the erection of Allegheny county, December 16, 1788. He continued in that capacity until the reorganization of the judiciary, in 1790, and continued as associate lay judge until his death, in 1814. He was first appointed a justice of the peace for Westmoreland county in 1784.

The next noteworthy occurrence was the visit of Lafayette, in June, 1825. After being sumptuously entertained at the house of Maj. John Walker, at Elizabeth, the marquis and his suite left that place in two batteaux, and thus proceeded to Braddock's Field, where they were met by a delegation from Pittsburgh. The general was accompanied on this occasion by his son, Gabriel Peterson, Joseph Markle, John Walker, James A. Stewart, James Pollock, Harvey Peterson and R. C. Stephens; Henry Stewart, Walter Loomis, Laban Turner, boatmen.

Two years after this event the locality became the seat of Edgeworth Seminary, the first ladies' seminary west of the Allegheny mountains. This institution was organized at Pittsburgh in 1825, by Mrs. Mary Gould Oliver. The property in which the school was conducted at Braddock's Fields, a large stone building near the Pennsylvania railroad depot, is yet standing. It was leased for ten years, and at the expiration of that period the seminary was removed to Sewickley, where it was continued under various auspices until 1865. Its patronage under Mrs. Oliver's administration was derived from Cincinnati, Marietta and other cities of the west, as well as Pittsburgh and the immediate vicinity.

The opening of the Pennsylvania railroad in October, 1851, and of the Pittsburgh & Connellsville (B. & O.) several years later, with the improved navigation of the Monongahela river, conferred upon this locality unequaled advantages for manufacturing purposes, to which its present importance in this respect is directly traceable. The Edgar Thomson Steel-works rank first in importance among the present industrial establishments. The construction of these works was begun by Carnegie, McCandless & Co., Andrew Carnegie, William Coleman, John Scott, David A. Stewart, Thomas M. Carnegie, Andrew Kloman, William P. Shinn, David McCandless and Henry Phipps, Jr., constituting the firm, which was organized January 18, 1873. The Edgar Thomson Steel company, limited, was formed June 2, 1874, by the same parties, and the works were operated under this name until April 1, 1881, when the firm of Carnegie Brothers & Co., limited, assumed control. Henry Phipps, Jr., is chairman of this association; D. A. Stewart, vice-chairman and treasurer; S. E. Moore, secretary; the board of managers including, also, John Walker, George Lauder, Henry M. Curry, William L. Abbott and William H. Singer.

The first purchase of ground, one hundred and six acres, was made from Robert and John McKinney. Ground was broken April 15, 1873, and the work of construction began five days later. Owing to delays incident to the panic, more than two years elapsed before the final completion. August 28, 1875, at a quarter past 5 o'clock in the afternoon, the first "blow" was made; and the first rail was rolled at five minutes of 1 o'clock in the afternoon of September 1st. Capt. William R. Jones has been general superintendent of the works throughout their history, the different superintendents being as follows: James Gayley, blast-furnace department; John Rinard, converting-works; Thomas Lapsley, nailmill; Thomas James, machinery; F. L. Bridges, transportation; S. A. Ford is chemist, and C. C. Teeter, chief clerk.

West of the borough are the Braddock Firebrick works; the nailmill of Chess, Cooke & Co., erected in 1887, and previously operated in Pittsburgh;
Duquesne forge, owned and operated by the Miller Forge company; a glass-factory, recently placed in operation, with a ten-pot furnace and full complement of other appliances necessary in producing pressed ware; the tannery of Owen Sheeky & Co.; the works of the Braddock Wire company, William Edenborn, president, Wallace H. Rowe, secretary and treasurer, Thomas W.
Fitch, superintendent, removed from St. Louis in 1885–86, and comprising four trains of rolls, with an annual capacity of twenty thousand net tons No.
5 iron and steel wire rods; Carrie furnace, operated by the Carrie Furnace company, James S. Brown, president, E. L. Clark, secretary, H. C. Fownes, treasurer, and W. C. Fownes, manager, removed from Ohio in 1883, and blown in February 29, 1884, there being one stack, eighty feet high and eighteen feet bosh, with a capacity of fifty thousand net tons mill, foundry and Bessemer pig-iron annually. The Union Switch & Signal company’s works at Swissvale, and the recently abandoned carworks at that place, complete the industrial features of the township.

The villages are Swissvale, eight miles from Pittsburgh, on the Pennsylvania railroad; Copeland, North Braddock and Rankin, suburbs of Braddock borough; Brinton, Bessemer and Hawkins, stations on the Pennsylvania railroad.

The Swissvale Presbyterian Church was organized in 1870, and received as its first pastor Rev. Samuel J. Fisher. Sole’s chapel, United Brethren, of North Braddock, was built in 1875. The other places of worship are Wesley chapel and Mount Olive church. There are three cemeteries, Monongahela, Union and Braddock, a noticeable feature of the latter being the monument to deceased soldiers of the late war, dedicated in September, 1887.

Braddock Borough.—This borough was incorporated June 8, 1867, by decree of court, from the southern part of what was then Wilkins township.

Mining was the principal occupation at the time of incorporation, and for some years thereafter. The industries previously described employ the principal part of the inhabitants, while others are engaged in various pursuits in the city and at other points. There are no manufactories of importance within the borough limits. The business interests are important, there being many local stores and two flourishing monetary institutions. The First National bank was organized October 19, 1882, with a capital of fifty thousand dollars, since increased by half that sum. Jesse H. Lippincott is president; R. M.
Holland, vice-president; W. H. Watt, cashier; H. C. Shallenberger, teller.
Braddock National bank, R. E. Stewart, president; John G. Kelly, cashier; E. M. Brackemeyer, assistant cashier; U. G. Williams, bookkeeper; S. D.
Hamilton, teller; George A. Todd, collection clerk; was organized November 29, 1882, with a capital of one hundred thousand dollars. A surplus fund equal to one-third of that sum has since accumulated. This institution is the successor of the Braddock Trust company, organized in 1873.

The earliest journalistic venture was the Herald, published for several months in 1876 by Frederick Penney. The first issue of the Sun appeared in December, 1877, its projectors being F. E. Lewis and Alexander Hall, but the former withdrew before the second number was published. J. A. Wynne was proprietor from 1878 to 1881, and during 1880 a daily edition was issued, with F. E. Lewis as local editor. This was the first daily published in the town. T. J. Louis succeeded Mr. Wynne in 1881, and continued as publisher until April 22, 1887, when F. E. Louis became sole proprietor. The politics of the paper has changed with its successive managements, but it is now a consistent expounder of orthodox democracy. The Herald, a seven-column quarto, was established July 8, 1880, by A. H. Silvey, the present proprietor, a gentleman of republican proclivities. The Daily News, Charles Mills, publisher, first appeared February 12, 1887, and in the following month absorbed the Evening Times, successor to the Daily Journal, originally established by Charles Lawry. This is the only daily in existence at present. The Tribune, Daniel McCarthy, proprietor, made its debut July 26, 1887.

The various secret, benevolent and other organizations number forty-two. Among the most important may be mentioned Braddock's Field Lodge, No. 510, A. Y. M; Braddock's Field Lodge, No. 529, I. O. O. F; McMasters Encampment, No. 239, I. O. O. F.; Oak Hall Lodge, No. 34, K. of P.; Monongahela Council, No. 122, Jr. O. U. A. M.; Edgar Thomson Council, No. 51, R. A.

The various religious denominations are nearly all represented. The first Methodist Episcopal society was organized in 1855 by B. F. Sawhill, whose circuit also included Port Perry and Wilkinsburg. The first services were held in a schoolhouse in North Braddock, and in 1859 Sellers chapel, the present place of worship, was erected, Rev. William H. Lauck being pastor at that time. Rev. T. N. Boyle is the present pastor. St. Thomas' Roman Catholic Church was organized by Rev. Thomas O'Farrel. The cornerstone was laid April 22, 1860; services were first held in the basement October 14, 1860, and the completed building was dedicated October 28, 1862. A large and commodious school-building was erected in 1883 by Very Rev. J. Hickey, the present pastor. St. Joseph's German Catholic Church was organized by Rev. Anthony Fisher in 1877. The Presbyterian Church was organized in 1873, with Rev. William F. Kean as its first pastor. The church- edifice was built in 1875. Rev. J. B. Dickey is at present in charge. The United Presbyterian Church was organized July 27, 1864. Pastors: J. S. Easton, 1869-76; W. S. Fulton, 1877-78; S. J. Shaw, 1879-. The Church of Christ (Disciples), Rev. A. S. Bosworth, pastor, was built in 1874. It is a fine brick edifice. The Baptist Church, Rev. T. R. Taylor, pastor, was constituted in 1881.

In addition to these there are African Methodist, English Lutheran, Congregational and Protestant Episcopal missions.

The population at the first census after the formation of the borough (1870) was 1,290; in 1880, 3,310.
CHAPTER XI.
TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHS (CONTINUED).

PLUM—PATTON—PENN (VERONA).

PLUM TOWNSHIP.

PLUM.—"Beginning at the mouth of Brush creek, thence by a straight line to the mouth of Plum creek, on the Allegheny river, thence up the said river to the county line, thence by the said line to the place of beginning."

The above is extracted from the minutes of the court of quarter sessions at its first session in 1788, and the township thus described was one of the original subdivisions of the county. In June, 1789, the boundary between Pitt and Plum was established as follows: "Beginning at the mouth of Thompson's run, thence up the said run to the Lick fork, thence up said fork to the head thereof, thence by a direct line to the mouth of Plum creek." Plum at this time was one of those regularly organized townships on the eastern border of the county. It extended from Versailles to the Allegheny river; below Versailles was Elizabeth, and north of the Allegheny was a section of country as yet unmarked by the influence of civilization.

The following is a partial list of residents in the original territory of Plum in 1808:

Of the above-named persons, William MeJunkin is said to have been one of the earliest settlers within the present limits of Plum. The land upon which he lived was surveyed in 1773, under the name of "Greenfield," and is described as being "two miles north of Forbes' old road."

Plum had a population of 1,446 in 1860; 1,300 in 1870; 1,721 in 1880. Antrim, the first postoffice, was discontinued April 22, 1857, having existed since 1840 (except a short period of suspension), with the following appointments: Samuel Ross, 1840; Robert Ross, 1843; Robert Mehaffey, 1845; Robert M. Ross, 1848; Henry Reister, 1856. There are no villages of importance. New Texas is a hamlet situated about the geographical center of the township, comprising the usual mechanics, local stores, etc. The first postmaster, John A. Conner, was appointed in 1856. Henry R. Toner succeeded him in 1862; John A. Conner, 1866; James Dunn, 1868; Joseph D. Clark, 1869; James B. Duff, 1878; John Lamont, 1881.

Logan's Ferry, on the Allegheny river and Allegheny Valley railroad, in the northeastern part of the township, derives its name from the Logan family. The earliest representative was Alexander Logan, mentioned in the foregoing list of residents. Gov. Mifflin commissioned him a captain of militia in 1793, and for some years he was justice of the peace. Hugh Logan was appointed postmaster June 10, 1844, and Hugh I. Logan April 11, 1871.

In 1870 William Coleman, the Messrs. Carnegie and others purchased large tracts of coal-lands in Plum township, and by consolidating their interests with those of other individual owners formed the New York & Cleveland Gas Coal company, one of the largest mining corporations in Western Pennsylvania. Its lands embrace several thousand acres, extending from the Pennsylvania to the Allegheny Valley railroad, with shipping facilities upon both, the Plum Creek branch of the latter extending a distance of seven miles from Verona inland.

The township sustains nine schools. There are five churches, of which the oldest is Plum Creek Presbyterian. Originally known as Ebenezer, this name was early relinquished in favor of Puckety, under which title it became part of Rev. Francis Laird's charge in June, 1800, this relation continuing until 1831. Supplies were obtained as early as 1791. During the ministry of Rev. J. D. Moorhead (1865-72), the place of worship was transferred to New Texas, where a church and parsonage were built; but ten years later (April 18, 1876) a reorganization under the name of Laird's Church was effected, the dedication of the place of worship having occurred June 20, 1876. Unity United Presbyterian Church was organized April 2, 1833, with eleven members. A church-building was begun in 1834, and finished in 1836, and during this period services were conducted in private houses, barns, schoolhouses, and in the open air when the weather permitted. Pastors: William Conner, 1837-49; James Kelso, 1852-72; E. Z. Thomas, 1873- . The church has constituted a separate pastorate since 1864, and was connected with Bethel and Puckety and Tarentum prior to that date. There is a Presbyterian church at Parnassus (Logan's Ferry), organized in 1842, and a Methodist church (Davidson chapel) in the southwestern part of the township.

PATTON TOWNSHIP.

At the April sessions, 1807, a number of the inhabitants of the upper end of Plum petitioned for a division of that township, "by a line running east from where the Frankstown road enters said township on the west side, across the township, or nearly that direction." It seems that a new apportionment of militia was about to be made, and this was intended to facilitate the formation of companies. At the August sessions, 1808, a counter petition was filed, representing that the township was only eight or ten miles long and from three to five miles in breadth. The following graphic summary of local affairs is given: "Esquire Hall is living about two miles from the Allegheny river and Puckety creek, the line of Westmoreland county, on the north side of the Frankstown road; and Esquire McKee is living some distance on the south side of the Frankstown road. The election is held at the house of John Little, who lives on the Frankstown road as nearly in the center of the township as possible, so that there need be no complaint for the inconvenience of justice. The number of inhabitants north of the Frankstown road on their own lands are but few in number, and having selected two justices of the peace, two constables, two supervisors of the highways, two overseers of the poor, auditors for settling the township accounts, and appraisers of fences, . . . there need not be a second election." Thomas Sampson, John Johnston and Alexander Thompson, commissioners, reported that a division at that time was "improper and unnecessary," and for nearly forty years thereafter the question was not again agitated.

At the March term, 1847, a petition for the division of Plum was referred to the customary number of viewers, but for some reason they failed to give the matter any consideration. A second petition was filed at the June sessions, representing that the township was thirteen miles long and six miles wide; that the places of election were remote from many of the inhabitants; that there was not that identity of interest which should exist among the people of the same township; and praying the court to appoint a second commission for its division. August 26, 1848, R. E. McGowen, N. Patterson and G. W. Hawkins were appointed for that service. A favorable report was filed November 4, 1848. March 4, 1849, by decree of court, Plum township was divided by a line "beginning where the Frankstown road crosses the division line of Wilkins township and said township [Plum], and following said road by its courses and distances until it strikes the division line of Westmoreland county," the southern part receiving the name of Patton.

This part of the county was popularly known at an early period by no other name than "Turtle Creek," and there is reason to believe its settlement occurred at a comparatively early date. Between 1765 and 1785 the following were settlers in Patton township: William McElroy, William and Robert Johnson, Charles Duke, Christopher Striker, Joseph McClintock, Robert Beatty, Thomas McMullen, Robert Duff, John Irwin, William Scott, Robert Clugston, William Clugston, John McNulty, George Ellis.

The oldest patent in the county is for land in this township. The tract is called the "Widow's Dower," and it was owned by Mrs. Martha Myers. Little is known of the history of this woman, but it is believed that she and her family were the first in Patton township. They probably settled soon after the English established their jurisdiction here. The following appears in Washington's journal of his tour in November, 1770: "23d. After settling with the Indians and the people that attended me down the river, and defraying sundry expenses accruing at Pittsburgh, I set off on my return home; and after dining at the Widow Mier's, on Turtle creek, reached Mr. John Stephenson's in the night."

Near the line between Patton and Wilkins townships once stood a mill, in the wall of which was a stone marked "James Mires, 1783." The old mill has ceased to exist, but the stone was placed in the wall of another mill on the same site. This "James Mires" is supposed to have been a son of Mrs. Martha Myers. The following are known to have been residents of Patton township prior to 1830: Thomas Chalfant, Henry Chalfant, John McMaster, John Meyers, Eli Meyers, John McCully and sons John and Robert, Samuel Snodgrass, Samuel Shaw, Michael Walls; John, Robert and James McElroy; William Johnson and sons Robert and John; Robert Johnson and son John; Robert Beatty and sons William, Robert, Samuel, John and others; —— Hall and sons John, Samuel and James; Robert Clugston and sons William, Robert, Ebenezer and Calhoun; —— Caldwell, Daniel Spangler, James McGinley, James Jordan and son James; John McClellan, John Thompson, —— Aber and sons Zephaniah and John; Charles Carothers and sons Robert, Joseph, James, William and Charles; David Maxwell; Henry Dinsmore and son James; Ross Dinsmore.

The northern turnpike crosses the township from east to west, and upon this thoroughfare, about six miles from Wilkinsburg, is situated the village of Monroeville. The name has no reference to President Monroe, however, as would naturally be inferred, but was conferred in honor of Joel Monroe, the first postmaster, appointed January 23, 1851. The village is merely a straggling hamlet, and possesses no importance.

Turtle Creek, on the opposite side of the creek from the station of that name, on the Pennsylvania railroad, is an attractive suburban village. It is the terminus of a coal-railroad leading up Thompson's run. A portion of the town is in Wilkins township. The town came into existence after the construction of the Greensburg turnpike. This was the first postoffice in this section of country.
Turtle Creek United Presbyterian Church was organized in June, 1829, by Rev. James Brown, with about thirty members, Samuel E. Shaw, David Drennon and George Gray constituting the first session. The first communion was held at the house of John McMaster, Revs. Young and Mungo Dick officiating. Services had been conducted in a grove in this vicinity as early as 1820, by Rev. James Walker, pastor of Bethel Church, Westmoreland county. The first church-edifice was built in 1831, the second in 1858, the third in 1867. Pastors: Revs. Dick, Henderson, Kerr and Pressley were supplies from 1820 to 1835; Joseph Osborne, 1836–51; J. G. Fulton, 1852–59; D. H. Pollock, 1860–69; S. A. Taggart, 1870–71; A. I. Young, 1872–85; R. A. Gilfillan, 1886. Four district congregations have been formed from the membership of this church in whole or in part—McKeesport, 1820; Braddock, 1864; Monroe, Iowa, 186–; Westmoreland, 1869. Three presbyterial organizations have been effected here—Blairsville (A. R.), 1840; Westmoreland (A. R.), 1855; and 1858, Westmoreland (U. P.), the Associate and A. R. Presbyterian churches having been united in May, 1858, as the United Presbyterian Church.

A Presbyterian church was organized in Turtle Creek in May, 1887, with Rev. Dr. Wightman as pastor. Its membership is about fifty. Bethel United Presbyterian Church was organized in 1801 within the bounds of Chartiers Associate presbytery, and formed the pastorate of Rev. Ebenezer Henderson (with Pittsburgh and Turtle Creek) from 1802 to 1804. A church was built in 1803, but there was no regular pastor until 1820, when Hugh Kirkland was called. John B. Dickey was in charge, 1834–35; William Galbraith, 1836–47; James Kelso, 1852–65; T. F. Boyd, 1867–74. Cross Roads Presbyterian Church was organized in 1836. Rev. S. M. McClung was the first pastor. There are also Methodist and Reformed organizations at Turtle Creek.

The population in 1860 was 957; in 1870, 1,193; in 1880, 1,730.

PENN TOWNSHIP.

January 16, 1850, Robert Logan, Thomas Davison and Daniel Beeber were appointed by the court to view the boundaries of a new township to be formed from the northern part of Wilkins. July 8, 1850, by decree of court, a division of the latter was confirmed agreeably to their report, and the territory adjoining the Allegheny river erected into Adams township, the other portion retaining the name of Wilkins. August 31, 1850, the action of the court was reconsidered, and the name changed to McNair, but the records are silent as to the time when the present name was adopted. How often the name may have been changed in the meantime is matter of conjecture.

Among the settlers here prior to the Revolution was Thomas Wilson. He secured a patent for four hundred acres under the name of Wilson’s mount in 1788, but had made his first residence here in 1770, removing to Fort Pitt in 1776. Other early settlers were:
TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHS.

Thomas Sampson and sons John, James, William, Thomas, David and Alexander: John Johnson and son James; John Duff and sons James, William, John, Alexander, David, George and Samuel (the last now living at the age of eighty-one): William Parks and sons James, John, David, William, Robert and Thomas; Alexander Damster and son James; William McQuay and sons John, Samuel and Thomas; Charles Johnson and sons John, James, William and Andrew; Henry Morrow and sons John, James, Henry and Hugh; Robert Donaldson and son Hugh; Samuel Ferguson and sons Enoch, Samuel, Isaac and James; Christ Snively and sons Henry and Emanuel; Frederick Stoner and sons Christ, John, David, Abraham, Jacob, Joseph and Frederick; Samuel Ewart and son Samuel; James McGregor and sons William, Robert and John; John McGill and sons Alexander and James; Christ Hershey and sons John and Christ; Jacob Hershey; Thomas Wilson, father of George, Francis and James; George Wilson and sons Francis, Morrow and Thomas; Francis Wilson (brother of George) and sons Thomas, Dr. John, George and Francis; James Wilson (another brother of George) and son Thomas; Rev. James Graham and sons Robert and James; Mrs. Stotler and sons Emanuel, Henry and Jacob, and grandsons Jacob, Henry B., David, Emanuel and Andrew.

Christ Snively had a carding-mill, the power for which was known as a "tramp-wheel." With the growth of woolen-factories and the decline of domestic manufactures, it went down.

The population in 1860 was 1,821; in 1870, 2,085; in 1880, 3,291. The village of Wildwood was laid out by James Boyd, on an elaborate plan, and it numbers about one hundred inhabitants.

The coal interests of the township are extensive, and roads several miles in length lead from the Allegheny Valley railroad to the mines on Quigley's run and Sandy creek. There is a village upon the latter known as a postoffice under the name of White Ash. Negley postoffice was established in 1874, and Wildwood in 1880. Milltown is a hamlet on the Plum Creek branch of the Allegheny Valley railroad. There is a church at this point.

Hebron United Presbyterian Church was organized August 30, 1860. Pastors: H. C. McFarland, 1858—64; D. Barelay, 1837—. The chapel of the Sacred Heart was built in 1873. Mount Hope Baptist Church, Sandy Creek Methodist Church and a German Lutheran church complete the number of religious organizations.

Verona Borough.—Verona was incorporated May 10, 1871, by act of assembly, from Penn and Plum townships. It borders on the Allegheny river a distance of two and one-half miles, extending inland a mile in the precinct north of Plum creek. The streets are wide and regular. There is no large part of the population below the railroad; that part of the town has been overflowed by river freshets several times within the last score of years, and is consequently regarded with a degree of disfavor. The avenue above the railroad is lined with beautiful residences, while the ascending slope in the rear presents many specimens of tasteful suburban architecture. Taken as a whole, the town and its surroundings can not fail to impress the visitor favorably.

The Allegheny Valley railroad was opened to Kittanning January 30, 1856, and the history of the town as such practically dates from that event. There are five stations within the borough limits: Hulton, Oakmont, Edgewater, Verona and Iona.

In 1769 George Croghan patented three hundred acres in the upper part of the borough. In 1776 he transferred the land to Thomas Girty, and he, in 1800, to Col. Pressly Neville. In 1813 Neville conveyed it to Robert Elliott, and from him it was transferred to Michael Bright in 1816. It has since been divided and subdivided. Oakmont was the name by which a tract of six hundred acres, embracing much of that part of the borough above Plum creek, was patented to David Greer more than a hundred years ago. Jonathan Hulton settled very early in that part of the borough which bears his name.

Caleb Lee, Sr., was an early owner of about eleven hundred acres. Richard Jones, Arthur Speer, Samuel Gray and —— Parker had tracts within what is now the borough.

Very early James Verner laid out part of the land about Verona station, which was formerly known as Verner. This part of the town received an impetus when the railroad-shops were located here, soon after the road was opened. The Verona Tool-works, Metcalf, Paul & Co., proprietors, were established in 1873, burned and rebuilt in 1881, with largely increased capacity. The product consists of railway supplies exclusively. The Dexter Spring company manufactures the well-known “Dexter” spring, the “Fairy Fifth Wheel” for each vehicles, and other supplies used in the carriage trade. W. W. Grier is sole proprietor of the works, which were erected in 1874. Agnew & Co.’s glassworks were placed in operation June 13, 1870. There are two postoffices, Hulton and Verona. The population in 1880 was 1,599.

There was no established place of worship in what is now Verona borough prior to 1857. The nearest regular preaching-points were the Associate Reformed churches of Hebron and Unity, the former six and the latter five miles distant. The Associate Reformed congregation of Logan’s Ferry was organized in the year mentioned. North of the Allegheny river and a mile and a half distant from the ferry was the old Associate Reformed congregation of Deer creek, but the river prevented many from attending service there. The various denominations represented were the Associate Reformed, Baptist, Lutheran, Methodist and Presbyterian. There was a boat called the Christian Friend, which was used to transport the devoutly inclined across the river, and clergymen of the different denominations occasionally conducted services in the schoolhouse.

The United Presbyterian Church was organized with eleven members in 1857, as the “Valley Church.” The church-edifice was built in 1858–59. Pastors: Rev. H. K. Lusk (S. S.), 1858–61; R. H. Boyd, 1864–69; J. D. Irons, 1873–87. The Presbyterian Church was organized in February, 1871, and the church-edifice was built in 1876. Rev. John Kerr was the first pastor. St. Joseph’s Roman Catholic Church originated in the bequest of Adam Wirtz of certain property for an orphan asylum. A chapel was built thereon, the cornerstone being laid July 23, 1866. It was replaced by a more pretentious brick edifice in 1887. Rev. Joseph Suhr was the first pastor. There are also Methodist and Protestant Episcopal societies.

The following orders and societies were instituted on the respective dates: Iona Lodge, No. 141, K. of P., September 22, 1886; Bright Post, No. 360, G. A. R., July 18, 1883; Emerald Beneficial Association, No. 65, October 12, 1878; Loyal Orange Institute, No. 33, December 8, 1880; K. of M., Tent No. 40, April 27, 1887; John A. Emrick Lodge, No. 123, I. O. O. F., August 17, 1886.

CHAPTER XII.

TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHS (continued).

WEST DEER—RICHLAND—HAMPTON.

That part of Allegheny county north of the Ohio and Allegheny rivers was included in the comprehensive limits of Pitt township by action of the court of quarter sessions in 1788, and so continued for eight years. Two townships were formed from this territory in 1796, known, respectively, as Deer and Pine, the line of Jones’ and Cunningham’s districts forming a mutual boundary. They were about equal in area, the difference, if any, being in favor of Pine.

Deer, as thus erected, comprised the whole of Indiana, O’Hara, Harmar, Springdale, Fawn, Harrison, East and West Deer, and the larger portions of Shaler, Hampton and Richland. The population was sparse for years after other portions of the county were comparatively thickly settled. This may be explained from the fact that this territory was not opened to purchase and settlement until 1792, at which time that part of the county south of the Ohio and Allegheny rivers was already marked by many of the indications of prosperous and aggressive frontier life. It has been found impossible to ascertain the names of all the early residents, but the following list has been compiled from such sources as are now available:

WEST DEER TOWNSHIP.

This township was formed in 1836, by the division of Deer. Its area had previously been considerably curtailed by the formation of Indiana in 1805. As thus reduced, Deer was a narrow, rectangular township extending about sixteen miles along the Butler county line, and about six miles wide. West Deer received the larger part of this territory, and its limits included portions of Hampton and Richland in addition to its present area. Within the territory now comprised in its limits, the first settler was Benjamin Paul, a "squatter," who made a clearing, built a cabin and planted an orchard prior to 1800, on land subsequently owned by the Hazletts, who came before 1800. There were two brothers, James and William Hazlett, from Ireland, as were many of the settlers in this region. The sons of James were William, George, James, John and Alexander; of William, James, John and William. Their descendants are still on the ancestral estates.

Jeremiah Smith was the original owner of some of the land purchased by the Hazletts. He removed to Butler county. John Carnahan came prior to 1800, and settled in the northeast part of the township, about a mile from the line of Butler county. He remained here till his death, in 1830. His sons were George, Samuel and John, the last still living on the old place. George was a soldier under Gen. Harrison in the war of 1812. David Ferguson came at about the same time, and settled near Mr. Carnahan, where he also remained till his death. His sons were Samuel and William, both dead. Thomas Stewart was also a settler prior to the commencement of the present century, and passed his life here. His son William removed to the west, where he died. James Jack and his brother Andrew were also original settlers. The sons of Andrew were James, John, Leslie and Samuel. Robert Glasgow, the first blacksmith in the township, was an early settler. The property which he owned is still in possession of his descendants. Thomas McConnell, the first tavern-keeper, was here early, and had his hostelry on the Harmarville road. His sons were Hugh, George, John, Thomas and James. Nehemiah Bell was an early settler. His son Samuel is still on the place which he settled. William Leslie was an original settler. He had several sons, and his grandson James resides on the old homestead. Henry Kissick had sons James, Joseph, Samuel, Moses and Clark. His descendants are on the old place.

In addition to these the following were early residents: William McClelland, Elias Thomas, Robert Porter, Robert Norris, John McCool, Robert Hemphill, Thomas Love, Alexander Black, Robert Caldwell, Henry Hultz, Robert and Hugh Cunningham. Michael Carlisle, John Donaldson, John McGowan, Robert Hague, James Fleming, James Boyd, Robert Thompson, John Thompson, James and Thomas Hamilton, William McAllister.

Robert Thompson was an early owner, and probably the builder, of a grist-mill on Deer creek, in the southwest part of the township. It long since went to decay. There were in the township several small mills, driven by horsepower.
TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHS.

141

Deer creek, Little Deer creek, Bull creek and the Connoquenessing have their sources in this township, which is the largest in the northern part of the county, being about five miles square; and it is also one of the most fertile and wealthy. The population in 1860 was 1,865; in 1870, 1,299; in 1880, 1,438. Oil and gas have recently been discovered in West Deer, and prosppecting is in active progress. Visions of great wealth in the near future arise in the imaginations of many, and the price of real estate is consequently enhanced. It is still too early for confident predictions.

Of the three postoffices, Rural Ridge was first established in 1853. Culmerville dates from January, 1854. Lewis was so named from Jane Lewis, who was appointed to the office in 1853. With the possible exception of Culmerville, there is no village in the township. A murder was once committed near this place, which was afterward popularly called "Brimstone Corners," a name which is not yet quite obsolete.

The first schoolhouse, on land of John Hazlett, was built prior to 1800.
Six schools are now in operation.

Bull Creek Presbyterian Church was organized in 1796. Rev. William
A. Boyd was pastor in 1802–33. Revs. Samuel Caldwell, J. Johnston and Thomas W. Kerr were also among the earlier pastors. East Union United Presbyterian Church was organized June 3, 1850. Pastors: J. Given, 1854–57;
W. Weir, 1866–69; J. A. Brandon, 1871–76; J. M. Witherspoon, 1877–82;
W. F. Miller, 1884–. Deer Creek United Presbyterian Church was organized Hood, 1870–. There is also an old Covenanter church in the northeastern part of the township.

RICHLAND TOWNSHIP.

This township was erected June 7, 1860, by decree of court, from West Deer and Pine. The proceedings in this case were begun at March term, 1859, when William McKendry, Thomas M. Shaw and Col. John Brown were appointed as viewers. Their report was filed July 16, 1859, and the election, held May 22, 1860, resulted in its indorsement by a unanimous vote.
The name was suggested in the following manner: Charles Gibson was one of those most strongly in favor of the new township, and his father, Thomas Gibson, was equally strenuous in opposing the measure. While arguing the question on one occasion, the father asserted that all the rich land and rich men in both Pine and West Deer would be included in the proposed new district, and that its erection would be greatly to their detriment. The son acknowledged the compliment to the section of country for which he was endeavoring to secure political autonomy, and by his influence the name of "Richland" was conferred on it.

The township is three miles five furlongs and eighteen perches wide, and varies in length from three miles seven furlongs and twenty perches on the east to four miles and thirty perches on the west. The area is about eight thousand acres. Both Deer creek and Pine creek, the principal affluents of the Allegheny river in this county, have their sources here. The resources of the township are of an exclusively agricultural character. The population in 1870 was 707; in 1880, 760.

This part of the county was one of the last to receive attention from actual settlers. The land was originally secured in large tracts by eastern capitalists for speculative purposes. John Crawford is usually regarded as the first permanent settler, and is supposed to have arrived about 1800. His first neighbors began to appear about 1820, but there was only a sparse population several decades after that. William Waddle, who kept a tavern on the Butler plank-road, John Ewalt, Isaac Grubbs and John Dickey may also properly be classed as early settlers.

Other pioneers were Richard Morrow (many of whose descendants are still here), William and Robert Dickey, Hughey Douglass, J. W. Bougher, Dr. S. H. Allen, James Harbison, Thomas Waddle (a blacksmith), Jacob, William and John Waddle, John Dickson (his sons Samuel and David are still residents), John Sterling, Rev. James McConnell, Rev. Thomas Guthrie, Archibald and Robert Glasgow, William Bricker, Thomas Baker, David Crummey, Thomas Richards, James Jones.

The Pittsburgh & Western railroad crosses the township from north to south, with stations at Valencia, Bakerstown and Gibsonia. The latter is a postoffice, which was established in 1880, and the present name was adopted in 1882.

The village of Bakerstown, two miles from the station of that name, is a place of some local importance, derived from its position on the Butler plank-road. It was named from Thomas Baker, and in 1830 was nearly as large as at present. Its population is estimated at 130. It has three stores, a hotel, and the usual mechanic-shops. The Methodist church was built in 1838. The Presbyterian Church was organized in 1870, by Rev. William G. Stewart, the first pastor.

Recently, oil has been "struck" in Richland township, and several wells have since been drilled. One of these proved to be one of the most productive gas-wells that has been discovered. It is near the line between Richland and West Deer. Some of the wells that have been sunk have yielded no oil, and but little gas.

HAMPION TOWNSHIP.

This township comprises territory originally included in McCandless, Indiana and West Deer. It is regular in outline, and nearly a perfect square, being in length about four miles and forty perches, and in breadth three miles and two hundred and eighteen perches. The movement for its erection began at the June term, 1860, when a petition with this end in view was referred to the consideration of John Dickey, James Taylor and C. Sniveley. They surveyed the boundaries of the proposed territory, and made return thereof to the court under date of November 13, 1860. June 19, 1861, the question was submitted to popular vote, when the action of the commissioners was ratified by a majority of one hundred and one, there being but twelve dissenting votes. The final decree of court erecting Hampton was issued February 16, 1861. The present eastern boundary was established at the April sessions, 1862, by the annexation of a narrow strip of territory from Indiana. Of Hon. Moses Hampton, LL. D., in whose honor the township is named, an account is given in the chapter on Bench and Bar, pages 259, 260.

John McCaslin is generally thought to have been the first settler. In 1794 he secured the title to land still in possession of his descendants, but as a hunter the region was well known to him some years before. His fondness for the chase did not cease as the country became more thickly settled, and he often made long excursions to the wilds of what are now known as the oil-regions.

Alexander McDonald was the first settler near Hardie's station. It is said of him that he was many years a farmer and never owned a wagon. Frank Black was a settler near Mr. McDonald. None of their descendants are here. Jacob Burkhardt and his son-in-law John McDonald were settlers in the southeast part of the township. Other early settlers (though the times of their settlement can not be learned) were Philip Mowry, Robert McCurdy, George Whitesell, Robert A. Sample, Robert Hardie, —- Miller, Henry Weaver, Samuel Hutchman, Samuel Brown, David and William Williams, William and Henry McCully, Charles Anderson, Samuel McCaslin, James and John Herron, John McNeal, Joseph Hart, George Somerwell, William Green, David Patton, Ephraim Morrow.

The first mill was built in 1808, by Philip Mowry. It was in the southwestern part of the township, on Pine creek.

The population of Hampton in 1870 was 938; in 1880, 1,003. The principal streams of the township are Pine creek and its branches, Gourhead run, McCaslin's run, Crouse's run, Willow run and Montour's run. "Gourhead Knob," at the confluence of the stream of that name and a smaller tributary, is a striking feature of the topography. The old Butler turnpike and the Allegheny and Butler plank-road were among the first highways opened through this section of country. The village of Talley Cavey is situated upon the latter, about the center of the township. The name is that of a locality in the north of Ireland, and was suggested by one of the early settlers from that place. The usual stores and local mechanics are represented, while a Reformed Presbyterian church adds to the attractiveness of the town. Its population is probably fifty or seventy-five persons. Unsuccessful search has been made in the township for oil. Some of the wells have yielded gas in considerable quantities.
The stations on the Pittsburgh & Western railroad in this township are Hardie’s, Wildwood, Semple, Bryant and Eberhardt. John Cress became postmaster at Herron March 31, 1880; Peter Heisel, November 2, 1882; Mary Heisel, December 10, 1883; Daniel K. Murray, at Wildwood, November 18, 1880, and James Kelley, September 27, 1887.

Pine Creek United Presbyterian Church originated about 1805 as a Reformed Presbyterian church, and as such was served by Rev. M. Williams as pastor until 1825; T. C. Guthrie, 1827-56, and T. Johnston, 1860-73. It became a United Presbyterian church in 1874, and Rev. N. E. Wade was pastor until 1884, when R. H. Park succeeded him. St. Mary’s Roman Catholic Church is the second German congregation in the county, being the first formed from St. Philomena’s. A church-edifice was built in 1841. The cornerstone of its successor was laid April 22, 1867, and its dedication occurred November 28th of that year. There are two other churches, Pine Creek Presbyterian and a United Brethren, in the western part of the township.

CHAPTER XIII.
TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHS (Continued).

EAST DEER (TARENTUM)—FAWN—HARRISON.

EAST DEER TOWNSHIP.

The erection of Deer in 1796 has been spoken of. As formed in 1805 the northern boundary of Indiana extended eastward to the mouth of Bull creek. The territory of Deer, as thus reduced, was divided in 1836, under the respective names of East and West Deer. Later in the same year the former was enlarged by the annexation of that part of the present area south of the northern line of Indiana extended, including Springdale township. Fawn and Harrison were also comprised within its limits.

It is believed that the first settler in East Deer was Ezekiel Day. He probably came in 1792, and in 1793 built a cabin and made some improvements. Day’s run was named from him. Prior to 1804 Rev. Abraham Boyd purchased a tract from Mr. Day, and resided there many years. He was pastor of several churches in the vicinity.

Joseph Crawford lived near the mouth of Crawford’s run, which took its name from him. Of his descendants Mrs. Robert Kennedy still resides in the township. Robert Bailey settled on what is now known as Bailey’s run, then called Day’s run. Mr. Bailey, at the age of eighty-four, still resides on the place where he settled, surrounded by his children. James Humes was a settler.
near the present line between East Deer and Tarentum. The place is still known as the Humes farm, and several of the descendants reside in this vicinity. His wife was a daughter of Mr. Negley. Samuel and James Powell were squatters on adjoining farms near Crawford’s run; none of their descendants are here. Lesley Hazlett and his son George were squatters near the Allegheny river. They were boatmen, and the father was drowned. Solomon Kelsey came prior to 1840, and settled near the Bailey property. James Robertson came to the same place soon afterward. Elias Davis and —— Stark resided some two miles up Bailey’s run. They were followed by John Ross. Fred. Christ lived on a farm adjoining Mr. Bailey. The widow of his son Fred. now resides in Pown township. Jesse Brown resided two miles up Bailey’s run, on a portion of the stream which still retains the name of Day’s run. The place is now owned by James Wilson. J. C. Brown, a son of Jesse, was prothonotary of Allegheny county during two terms. He now occupies a prominent position in the municipal government of the city.

Derrick Peterson, a Virginian, was one of the original settlers in East Deer township. He took up large quantities of land here, for which he received patents from the state. Of his children the names are remembered of Lewis, Sr., Peter, Ann (still living), Lydia, wife of Col. James Hite, of Jefferson county, Va., and mother of P. Y. Hite, now of this township; Lewis Peterson, Jr., was a mayor of Allegheny City. —— Sprole settled in the upper part of East Deer township, where he died. Samuel Kier succeeded Sprole on the same property. It is worthy of remark that the first petroleum in this region was discovered while drilling for salt on this property, and was accordingly called "Kier’s Petroleum or Rock-Oil."

P. Y. Hite, from whom the village of Hite is named, became a resident of this township in 1857, and engaged extensively in coal-mining and manufacturing salt. His saltworks, which were burned in 1857, were located at the village of Hite. Mr. Hite was also a pioneer oil producer and refiner. Hite is a station on the West Pennsylvania railroad, about one mile from Creighton, and two miles from Tarentum. Prior to 1806 it was only a small hamlet. On the completion of the Pennsylvania railroad it assumed more importance, and now it has, probably, a population of 500. Mining was its principal industry, but since the discovery and utilization of natural gas this has declined. There is a Methodist Episcopal church here. McFetridge Brothers have a brickyard at this place.

Creighton station was established on ground that was a part of the original Peterson estate. It owes its existence to the erection of the plate-glass works there. Kennedy is a station at the lower end of Hite. It was the site of the Central Oil-refinery. The property was purchased from John Kennedy, Sr., in 1872, by a company in Pittsburgh. An extensive refinery was established there and conducted for several years. It was purchased by the Standard Oil company, and discontinued.
In 1860 the population of East Deer was 1,134; in 1870, 1,390; in 1880, 1,253.

Tarentum Borough.—This ranks third among the boroughs of the county in order of organization. To describe the location in precise mathematical terms, it is in latitude forty degrees thirty-seven seconds north, and in longitude four degrees thirty-nine seconds west, of the meridian of Philadelphia. The following description appears in an early prospectus of the town, and may convey a more intelligible idea to the ordinary reader: "The town is situated on the Allegheny river and Pennsylvania canal, at the aqueduct and locks near the mouth of Bull creek. It is distant from Pittsburgh twenty-one miles; from Kittanning, twenty-two miles; from Greensburg, twenty-three miles; from Butler, nineteen miles; and on the cross-roads leading from the above places."

The principal features of the place are thus enumerated: "The neighboring hills abound in coal. There is a steam gristmill, a sawmill and fulling-mills adjoining the town, also a valuable water-power at the locks. The situation is favorable for the development of manufactures, and well suited for mechanics."

Felix Negley was the first settler in Tarentum. He was of German origin, and arrived in 1796. In 1797 he erected a log cabin about forty rods below the mouth of Bull creek. He was then engaged in building a dam across the creek, and making preparations for building a sawmill and a gristmill. These were soon completed. Three or four years later he erected a larger log house a short distance from the first, on the opposite side of what is now Negley street. In 1812 James Lisley built a log house near where James Ashler's drugstore stands, on North Canal street, near the railroad station. This has been weather-boarded, and it still stands there. These were the only original houses of the olden time within the limits of the borough. Several log cabins stood near the mouth of the creek as early as 1800. They were occupied by Mr. Negley’s laborers, who were also hunters and fishermen. These were the principal dwellings in the place for the first twenty or thirty years, and the village had no importance beyond what Mr. Negley's mills gave it. In 1821 Mr. Negley built a carding-mill, and in 1824 placed it in operation, with Alexander McAllister as a partner.

In 1828 water was first let into the canal here, and the place received an impetus. In that year James Miller built a steam sawmill at the mouth of the creek. He had built a house two years before, and he occupied it as a store and tavern during the construction of the canal. In 1828 John Kennedy (now living) built a house near where the viaduct crosses the creek. It was to other persons than these, however, that the town owes its origin.

Hon. Henry M. Brackenridge, the founder of Tarentum, an account of whom will be found elsewhere in this work, was one of the most eminent lawyers of his day in this section of the country. The last years of his life were passed at his residence in Allegheny county. He acquired by marriage a landed estate of several thousand acres, including the site of Tarentum.

The town was surveyed, under the direction of Mr. Brackenridge, by W. Martin in November, 1829. The following streets are indicated upon the original plan: Canal, Randolph, Third and Fourth, above the canal and parallel with it, crossed at right angles by Wood and Lock streets and by Ross street parallel with Bull creek; southeast of the canal and parallel with it, Kennedy and Water streets. The location of the public square is shown at the intersection of Wood street with Third and Fourth, and a school-lot between Wood and Lock above Fourth. The width of Ross is given as fifty feet, that of Wood forty-nine and one-half feet, and of the others about forty feet. In 1857 the borough was regularly laid out between Kittanning street and the Allegheny river, eastward to Porter street. Below the railroad, in order from Bull creek, the streets extending northwest and southeast are known as Brackenridge, Ferry, Boyd, Adams, Wood, Lock, McKee, Worth and Gaines; above the railroad, in the same order, the names are Short, Butler, Ross, Mill, Wood, Lock, Dickey, Laworth, Corbet and Porter. Parallel with the railroad the streets north of it are known as Canal, Randolph, Third, Fourth and Kittanning; south of the railroad and extending in the same direction the names are South Canal, Kennedy, Vance and Water, the last-named three extending only to Lock, beyond which their continuations are known as Water, Taylor and Oberly streets. Within recent years the town plot has been extended east and west, within and beyond the borough limits. The population in 1860 was 711; in 1870, 944; in 1880, 1,245; in 1884, 6,200.

The rapid expansion noticeable in the last few years has resulted from the development of the natural gas of the immediate vicinity. Although known to exist as early as 1845, no attempt to utilize it as fuel was made until 1857, when Messrs. Irwin & Peterson applied it at their saltworks. In 1876 James E. Karns employed gas from old salt-wells in reducing ores, and in 1877 located the well of Graff, Bennett & Co., in West Tarentum. The advantage of a location at the source of supply has influenced a number of manufacturers to establish themselves here, the most important being the Pittsburgh Plate Glass company, Challinor, Taylor & Co., limited, Richards & Hartley Glass company and C. L. Flaccus. . . . The first plate glass made in the United States was in 1848, at Lenox, Mass., but the enterprise was not a success. Some years since, about 1870–71, works were built at New Albany, Ind., by Messrs. Ford & De Pauw. In 1875 Mr. Ford withdrew and established works at Louisville. Attracted by the natural facilities of this section, he removed to Creighton in 1882–83. The works here comprise sixteen acres, and employ a thousand operatives, many of whom are Belgians. The works at Tarentum comprise twelve acres under roof, and were placed in operation in 1886. . . . Tarentum Glass-works, C. L. Flaccus, proprietors, H. C. Barr, superintendent, were the first of the big manufacturing establishments that located at Tarentum. They were established in 1879, beginning with one seven pot furnace, but the increased demand for their line of goods has necessitated an enlargement of the works, and they have now increased to two twelve-pot furnaces, giving employment to three hundred men and boys. These works make a specialty of manufacturing flint-glass bottles, jars and perfumers' stoppers, and make their own pots, boxes and molds in their factory. . . . The works of the Richards & Hartley Glass company, comprising a fourteen-pot furnace, were established at Pride and Locust streets, Pittsburgh, in 1861, and removed to Tarentum in 1884. One hundred and sixty-five operatives are employed, the product consisting of pressed goods. . . . The works of Challinor, Taylor & Co., limited, were established in 1884. There are two furnaces, sixteen and eighteen pots respectively, and three hundred and fifty men are employed. Pressed ware is manufactured. . . . The paper-mills of Godfrey & Clark employ one hundred operatives. These works were formerly situated in Forward township, on the Monongahela river. Frederick Stevener is the proprietor of the Tarentum foundry, and Kennedy & Sons of the planing-mills.

The Allegheny Valley Times was established by J. L. Bosh and P. F. Voight, the first number appearing April 1, 1881. S. G. Barnes became proprietor in 1883, William Kennedy in 1884 and W. E. Kennedy in 1887. The Sun was established in 1884, by E. L. Thompson, publisher, and James H. Jack, editor.

Methodism was planted in this section at an early period. A class of six members met at the house of Thomas Horton in 1810, with Henry Summerville as leader. The society numbered twenty members in 1834. The place of worship was often changed for many years; the first church- edifice, begun in 1842, was dedicated October 27, 1844. The cornerstone of the present church- edifice was laid June 5, 1885, and the dedication occurred May 22, 1887. The Presbyterian Church was organized in 1832, with sixty members.

The Lutheran Church was organized August 1, 1886, with sixteen members. Rev. — Scheffer conducted the first services March 21, 1886. The Roman Catholic pastor is Rev. A. H. Farini. This is also a recent organization.

The Tarentum Banking company, organized several years since, greatly facilitates local business transactions. It is a well-established financial institution.

FAWN TOWNSHIP.

Fawn township was erected March 28, 1858, by decree of court. The proceedings in this case were begun at the October term, 1856, when C. Snively, Henry Chalfant and George G. Negley were appointed to report upon the advisability of dividing East Deer, which then extended a distance of fourteen miles along the Allegheny river. The division was confirmed agreeably to their recommendation.

The earliest settler was Ezekiel Miller, a native of Cumberland county, who, in 1794, built a cabin at the village which bears his name. He was a lame man, and always traveled on horseback, to which circumstance he owed the preservation of his life when attacked by the Indians. He fled to Crawford's fort, a stockade on the south side of the Allegheny river above the mouth of Puckety creek, built by Col. William Crawford. In 1796 he returned to his former residence with his family. Three other settlers arrived in the same year—John Harbison, Daniel Howe and Benjamin Coe. They had previously served as spies in St. Clair's army, and in return for this service were allowed four hundred acres each from the "depreciation lands." Harbison entered the army in March, 1792, and was wounded at St. Clair's defeat. His family was also subjected to a most barbarous experience at the hands of the Indians. His wife and three children were living at the time near Freeport, Armstrong county. On the morning of May 22d, only two months after the departure of her husband, Mrs. Harbison was roused from sleep by the forcible entrance into her house of a party of savages, said to have been thirty-two in number. She was forcibly dragged from her bed, and compelled to leave the house with scarcely time to provide the necessary clothing: She carried the youngest child in her arms, and the eldest was placed upon a horse; but the other, a little boy of three years, cried and resisted, whereupon he was killed in a most inhuman manner before the eyes of his mother. The other child fell from his horse in descending the bank of the river, and when the party had crossed to the island upon which Freeport is built, his cries were speedily terminated by a blow from a tomahawk. The next day, as the brave was stretching the scalp over a hoop, Mrs. Harbison, horrified at the sight, attempted to kill him with his own tomahawk; but failing in the effort, she was severely punished. A favorable opportunity of escape was presented on the third day of her captivity. The party were all out hunting, leaving but one Indian to guard the prisoners. While he was asleep she removed the thongs from her wrists and ankles, and, taking her one remaining child in her arms, fled. After three days of wandering she was at length rescued.

Of early families in what is now Fawn township the names are remembered of Painter, Martin, Gibson, McGoldrick, Gravatt, Donald, Smith, Maizland, Jillett, Hill, Thompson, Hunter, Young, McCall, Critchlow.

Fawn is an exclusively agricultural township. There is a small hamlet in the western part, on Bull creek, which bears the name of Millerstown, but no villages of importance. Fawn postoffice existed from February, 1877, to July, 1879.
There are three churches—Cumberland Presbyterian and Methodist in the western part of the township, and Center Methodist Episcopal. The population in 1860 was 1,654; in 1870, 681, and in 1880, 636.

HARRISON TOWNSHIP.

This township was formed from Fawn in 1863. "Mellen" was suggested as the name in a petition presented at the June sessions, 1862. C.
Snively, Caleb Lee and Jacob Alter constituted the commission by which the proposed territory was surveyed. Popular sentiment was strongly in favor of the measure, and when the question was submitted at the polls, February 28, 1863, there were but two dissenting votes in a total of one hundred and fifty-two. This action by the people was formally confirmed by decree of court, February 7, 1863. A noticeable occurrence in this connection was the payment of two hundred and fifty dollars by the tax-collectors of the new subdivision to the court for disbursement to the supervisors of Fawn, in lieu of an equal amount expended upon the opening of a road in the former just prior to the division.

James Kerns, whose mother was one of the Jack family, was an early settler in Harrison township. He resided on the river bank about three miles above Tarentum. Several of his descendants are residents here. John Miller was also an early resident, about one mile from Freeport, near the Butler county line, on what was then called the Kittanning and Pittsburgh road. His son Nathaniel was a lifelong resident of the township. Asa Rowley settled early on the same road, about four miles from Tarentum, where he remained till his death. Philip Burkner settled on Little Bull creek, about a mile from the Allegheny river, and there he died. His granddaughter, Mrs. Huey, resides on the place where he settled. William Owns, a Portuguese, was a squatter on the bottom-lands near where the Natrona Chemical works now are. He was on quite intimate terms with the Indians, and was an expert hunter. He died at that place many years since.

A man named Derry was also a squatter at the same place, and a neighbor of Owns, with whom he was not on good terms. Just prior to the commencement of the present century the Indians surprised and murdered the family and burned their house. A son, named Jacob Derry, escaped by hiding in a hollow which the river had excavated under a beech stump. A grandson of Jacob now resides near Oil City. It was believed that this murder was instigated by Owns.

In 1807 John and William Kennedy located in what is now Tarentum. In 1810 they removed to what were known as the "Bottoms," where they remained till 1817, when they removed to a place across the river. Many of their descendants are residents of this vicinity. John Kennedy, a son of William, and the father of John and James Kennedy, bankers in Tarentum, is still living at the age of eighty-four. The descendants of the original John have removed from this region.
Jacob Krom came about 1807, and settled near John Miller, a mile from Freeport, on a place now owned by Henry Boyd. He and several of his children died at the place where he settled. About a year since his son, Isaac Krom, died, at the age of eighty-seven, in Tarentum. Several of the descendants reside in this vicinity. Near to Mr. Krom, and at about the same time, Mr. Washington Bale settled. His daughter, Mrs. Altor, still resides on the old place. Andrew McGinnis settled on the bottom about 1810, and remained some ten years.

After the first decade of this century the region along the Allegheny river was rapidly settled. During twenty or thirty years, or till about 1835, the country back from the river was a wilderness.

Natrona.—About 1853 the manufacture of salt was commenced at this place. At that time there was no village here. Several wells were sunk from which brine was obtained, and salt was made to some extent. This of itself had, however, no great importance. Works were at once erected for the manufacture of various chemical substances, and these works have since been steadily increased to the present day. The company which is engaged in these manufactures is chartered as the Pennsylvania Salt company, but the manufacture of salt is only a small item.

One of the first articles made here was caustic soda, from which concentrated lye was prepared. To this were added bromine, chloroform, various acids, pure soda and its salts, aluminum and various other chemical substances. The products of these works are sold in all parts of the United States and Canada. The cryolite from which soda and aluminum are largely produced here is brought from Greenland, the only known place where deposits of it exist. The pyrites from which sulphuric acid is produced are brought from Spain. Copper as well as silver and gold is extracted from the materials used in the manufacture of chemicals here.

The village of Natrona owes its existence to the establishment of these works. About six hundred operatives are employed by the company, and the village has a population of about fifteen hundred. There are five church organizations in the place, viz.: Methodist, Catholic, German Lutheran, Presbyterian and English Lutheran. All except the last have tasteful and convenient houses of worship.

The population of the township in 1870 was 1,870; in 1880, 2,352. There are small hamlets at Sligo and Karns stations.
CHAPTER XIV.

TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHS (Continued).

INDIANA—O'HARA (Sharpsburg).

INDIANA TOWNSHIP.

INDIANA was the fourth township formed in the county north of the Ohio and Allegheny rivers. Its organization was preceded by that of Pine and Deer in 1796, and Ohio in 1803, all of which were originally included in Pitt township. At the June sessions, 1805, on petition of a number of citizens of Deer, praying for the formation of a new township from its territory to be described as follows: "Beginning at the mouth of Pine creek, on Allegheny river, upon the line dividing Jones' district from Cunningham's district (which is also the division line between Deer and Pine townships), and extending along the line of Cunningham's district due north to the seven-mile tree in the said line, thence due east through Cunningham's district to Bull creek, thence down said creek to Allegheny river, thence down the Allegheny river to the place of beginning," the court appointed as commissioners James Semple, Samuel Scott and James Robinson. December 26, 1805, their report, in which the bounds above described were recommended, was confirmed by the court, and the name of Indiana conferred upon the new district. The township was triangular in shape. The political significance of "the line dividing Jones' district from Cunningham's district" has been obliterated by the formation of Hampton and Shaler, of which the former derived one-half and the latter one-third of its area from Indiana. Its area had previously been curtailed by the erection of East Deer, when the present eastern boundary was established; and in 1875, by the formation of O'Hara and Harmar, the township was deprived of its former extended frontage upon the river. It is thus seen that as originally formed Indiana received fully one-half of the previous territory of Deer, and included within its limits, in addition to its present area, the whole of three townships and portions of an equal number of others.

The earliest settlers were Jacob Huddle and Henry Strohm, brothers-in-law and native Germans. They are supposed to have arrived in 1798, although their deeds for lands transferred from Benjamin Herr are dated August 21, 1805. The first birth occurred in the family of Henry Strohm, but the child, a boy named Peter, died before attaining his majority. These two families are still numerously represented. Peter Weaver, Jacob Bave and Daniel Sweeney were also early settlers.
William Marshall, Robert Black, John McKee, James Patterson, Samuel McClellan, James Quinett, Peter Neff, John Eward, George Snyder, Elijah Brooks, James Powell, David Stewart and Thomas McWilliams were residents prior to 1820.

A grist- and saw-mill was built on Deer creek more than half a century since by Robert McCaslin. It has been torn away. Another gristmill was erected farther down the same stream, about forty years since, by Peter Wise. It is now owned and operated by Michael Yonker, who has added to it a sawmill. A grist- and saw-mill was built more recently by Henry Strohm. The population in 1860 was 2,505; in 1870, 2,808; in 1880, 1,189.

The Kittanning road passes through the township. Deer, Little Deer and Cummings creeks are the principal streams. Dorseyville is a small hamlet which took its name from a man named Dorsey. It is the only village in the township. It has a postoffice, and some stores and mechanic-shops. Montooth postoffice was established in 1882. The township has three churches—Walter chapel (Methodist Episcopal) in the northern part, a United Brethren society near Dorseyville, and a German Lutheran church in the same vicinity.

O'HARA TOWNSHIP.

This township was erected June 8, 1875, by decree of court. Its formation was first agitated in 1872. The preliminary measures were successfully accomplished, but the project failed to receive popular sanction at the polls. When, two years later, the agitation was resumed, with the added feature of two additional subdivisions instead of one, it was considered in a more favorable manner, with the result as above stated.

Col. James O'Hara, from whom the township is named, was the pioneer glass manufacturer of Western Pennsylvania. In conjunction with Maj. Isaac Craig he established the first glasshouse at Pittsburgh in 1798. As a soldier he participated in the various Indian expeditions terminating in Wayne's victories. He owned a large tract of land in this township.

James Powers was the earliest settler, and purchased land in 1796, in partnership with his brother Thomas, near Powers run, which took its name from him. He was probably a resident some time before he and his brother made their purchase. The tract which they bought was a part of lands appropriated for the redemption of depreciated certificates. It had been patented in 1789 to Joseph Mercier, but it had never been occupied. Mr. Powers came before the Indians had left this region, and it is said that he was often compelled to take his rifle with him to his work, and that on several occasions he was driven by the savages across the river. His nephew, Ashley Powers, was also an early resident, and many of his descendants still reside here.

William Preston, a Scotchman, settled in 1798 on Little Pine creek. Strohm and Huddle had preceded him in that vicinity in what is now Indiana township. The descendants of Mr. Preston were in the war of 1812, the Mexican war, and on both sides in the late civil war.

The Ross tract, the purchase of James Ross, included about 2,150 acres, lying along the river and extending about a mile and a half back. None of this land has been sold, but it is now the property of Mrs. Aspinwall and Mrs. Delafield, cousins of Mr. Ross. It is rented in parcels to different individuals.

William Hawkins, Esq., was an early settler on Squaw run, where he died at the age of ninety-five. His grandson, John R. Hawkins, still resides on a part of the old farm. John Weichel, a German, settled on the Ross estate, not far from Ross station, about 1808. He remained on the farm which he cleared up till his death, about 1858, at the age of ninety-three. His son, Henry Weichel, now seventy-six years of age, occupies the same farm. Francis Beatty came in 1809, and settled at Claremont, where his grandson, John B. Beatty, now a resident of O'Hara township, resided till 1887.

John Neff was a resident of O'Hara township previous to 1812. He removed to what is now Indiana township, and died there. David Gable was a very early settler and his son Philip, now an octogenarian, resides in the township.

The Galbraiths, the Jessups, Boyds, Cables, Cooks, Nobles, Millers, Wibles, Campbells, Crawford, Barns, Lapsleys, Speerses, Loves and others were residents early in the present century. Peter Wolf, several by the name of Staley, — Bliss and many others were squatters along the river.

The village of Montrose was laid out in 1872 by the "Modern Life Insurance and Improvement Trust Company," of Pittsburgh and Hoboken, by the "Hoboken Land Company." The former has not materialized to any extent. The latter is nine miles from Allegheny City by way of the Pennsylvania railroad. The other stations are Powers run, Claremont, Ross, Guaysuta and Sumner. The Kittanning road crosses the northwestern part of the township.

The population in 1880 was 2,498.

Several islands in the Allegheny river form part of this township.

There is in the township one postoffice, Hoboken. The first postoffice, however, was Houston, which was suspended from October 17 to November 27, 1865; changed to Claremont March 28, 1871, and discontinued April 8, 1881.

Pine Creek Presbyterian Church received supplies as early as 1802, Revs. Abraham Boyd, Robert Patterson and James Graham being among the first. Rev. Joseph Stockton, the first regular pastor, assumed charge in 1814, and in the following year an organization was effected with seven members. Hoboken Presbyterian Church was organized July 29, 1879, with thirty-three members, by Revs. E. E. Swift, D. D., and J. M. Shields. Pastors: Revs. D. V. Mays, May 17, 1887. Supplies: G. M. Potter, 1880; O. H. Miller, 1881; George Scott, 1882; G. W. Hazlett, 1882–83; G. W. Shaiffer, 1883–86. The Hoboken Methodist church was built in 1881.
Allegheny County Workhouse and the Allegheny City Home are both in this township, and an account of them will be found, of the former at page 422, Part I, and of the latter at page 703, Part I.

Sharpsburg Borough.—This place derives its name from that of the founder, James Sharp. Born near Chambersburg, Franklin county, Pa., February 10, 1784, he removed to Pittsburgh at the early age of thirteen years, and to the region about the mouth of Pine creek in 1826. There were two log structures on the ground he purchased, both of which were unoccupied at the time, and had probably been erected years before as dwelling-houses. The new proprietor built for himself a one-story-and-a-half log house, still standing at the side of the hill, and visible from Penn street, between Tenth and Clay. This is the oldest building in the borough. The second building was used for school and church purposes. It stood at the corner of Fifteenth and South Canal streets. Another school-building was erected on the Coyle property, and both were sustained by the public-spirited proprietor. He also built and managed a temperance hotel, and was active in promoting the interests of the town in every way. The various religious bodies of the town were each in turn the recipients of his benefactions. His death occurred March 12, 1861. He was "essentially a gentleman of the old school, courteous in manner, affable in disposition, and generous in hospitality. He was a man whom to know was to esteem. Ever indulgent to those who were under obligations to him; faithful and prudent in all trusts confided to his care; in commercial intercourse always just; the soul of honor—a man in whom integrity might see reflected her own image, undimmed by the breath of calumny, untainted by the base slanders of the age. His moral character was above reproach."

The town received its first impetus in 1829, when the canal was opened, Philip Miller being the contractor for the locks at Pine creek and about a mile of the excavations above that point. About this time the first ironworks in Etna were established, and in the growth incident to the expansion of this industry in the adjoining borough Sharpsburg has largely shared.

The Vesuvius Iron- and Nail-works, Moorhead, Brother & Co., proprietors, are the only manufactures in the borough at present. The original predecessor of the present firm was that of Lewis, O’Hara & Lewis, George Lewis, James O’Hara and J.C. Lewis, constituent members. Mr. O’Hara retired in 1847 in favor of Robert Dalzell, when the style of the firm became Lewis, Dalzell & Co., so continuing until 1878, when the works passed into possession of John Moorhead, Sr. Upon his death, in the following year, the firm of Moorhead, Brother & Co. was formed. The works were erected in 1846, the lumber being obtained some miles up the river and transported by ox-team and canal-boat. Operations were begun under the name of Guyasuta Iron-works, with six puddling-furnaces and three trains of rolls. The works were under the management of Lewis W. Lewis until 1878, when his son, George T. Lewis, succeeded him. The works have been successively enlarged and adapted to the changes which the industry has experienced. As reported to the American Iron and Steel Directory for 1886, the plant consists of twenty-eight single puddling-furnaces, ten heating-furnaces, seven trains of rolls (two eight, one fifteen, two eighteen, one twenty and one twenty-four inch), and fifty nail-machines; product, bar, skelp, sheet and plate iron and nails; annual capacity, one hundred and five thousand kegs of nails and twenty thousand net tons of rolled products.

A short distance beyond the borough limits on the east are the works of Tibby Brothers, glass manufacturers, established in 1866, and comprising three furnaces. Twin City Steam forge, McKim & Smith, proprietors, and the Guyasuta Clay-Pot factory, Duff, Walter & Co., may also be mentioned with propriety in this connection.

There are two financial institutions, the Sharpsburg & Etna Savings bank and the Farmers' & Mechanics' bank; the former was incorporated in 1868, the latter in 1879, with George A. Chalfant, president; W. A. Gildenfenny, vice-president; Robert M. Coyle, cashier. The general business interests are well-sustained.

Joseph A. Rattigan issued the first number of the Sharpsburg Herald December 16, 1878, and has continued as its editor and publisher from that time. Under his enterprising management this journal has become a valuable property, and an able advocate of borough interests. The Weekly Observer was established April 1, 1886, by Goshorn & Henry, who were succeeded by the Observer Publishing company November 1, 1887. H. Robison is managing editor.

There are a number of secret and beneficiary societies, among the oldest being Sharpsburg Lodge, No. 752, I. O. O. F.; Zeredatha Lodge, No. 448, F. & A. M.; Guyasuta Council, No. 847, R. A.; Vesuvius Council, No. 116, Jr. O. U. A. M.

The Sharpsburg Presbyterian Church was organized in 1838, with about sixty members. Pastors: Revs. James Campbell, 1838-41; J. W. Murray, 1841-53; Alexander Shand, 1853-56; Alexander Sinclair, 1856-58; S. J. Wilson, 1858-61; J. M. Smith, 1861-67; T. M. Wilson, 1867-70; W. C. Falconer, 1870-72; Thomas Lawrence, 1872-79; Joseph T. Gibson, 1880-.

St. Joseph's Catholic church, Sharpsburg, was dedicated April 29, 1849, the cornerstone having been laid June 25th of the previous year. The first baptism in the parish was performed by Father Gibbs November 21, 1847. The cornerstone of the present structure was laid May 4, 1873, and its dedication occurred July 9, 1874. Pastors: Revs. —— Gibbs, W. A. Nolan, P. Kerr, Dennis Kearney, G. S. Grace.

St. Mary's (German) Catholic Church was organized by the Redemptorist Fathers of St. Philomena's parish, Pittsburgh, by whom the work was undertaken January 1, 1853. It was dedicated by the bishop June 18, 1854. It was completely destroyed by fire January 4, 1866. The cornerstone of the present edifice was laid May 27, 1866; it was dedicated June 16, 1867.
Union Centenary Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1866. Rev. L. McGuire is pastor. The (German) Lutheran church, Rev. K. Walz, pastor, was built in 1863. The First Regular Baptist church was built in 1860. Rev. Alexander MacArthur is at present in charge. Congregational and (English) Lutheran organizations have recently been formed.

The borough was incorporated December 14, 1841, and is the oldest in the county with a single exception. The population in 1860 was 1,426; in 1870, 2,126; in 1880, 3,466.

CHAPTER XV.

TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHS (Continued).

HARMAR—SPRINGDALE.

HARMAR TOWNSHIP.

The territory of Indiana, after being successively reduced by the erection of East Deer in 1836, Shaler in 1847 and Hampton in 1862, was divided into three separate townships in 1875, one of which received the name of Harmar from Harmar Denny. The commissioners in this case, J. B. Stilley, Jacob Coorde and Edward Saint, were appointed December 26, 1874; they reported under date of January 26, 1875; the election was held March 27, 1875, when three hundred and fourteen votes were cast in favor of division and one hundred and eighty-nine against, and the final decree of court was issued June 8, 1875.

Daniel Sweeney, who settled on Barton’s island in 1794, and removed to the northern bank of the river several years later, is generally regarded as the first settler. Mr. Sweeney was a squatter, who lived in a blockhouse on the south side of the river. He cultivated the island by day and retired to his blockhouse at night. An Indian town then occupied the present site of Harmarville. Although these Indians were then friendly, it was not always thought safe to trust them.

About 1798 Mr. Sweeney sold his claim on the island to B. F. Brewster, Esq., who made his residence on it, and received for it a patent from the state. It is related that during his residence there, or about 1802, his ignorant neighbors brought a charge of witchcraft against a woman, and insisted on having her tried before Esquire Brewster. Mr. Brewster, who was an educated man, was, of course, not a believer in witchcraft, but pretended to try the woman in order to appease the clamors of the ignorant and excited crowd, not supposing any evidence against her could be adduced. Contrary to his expectations, many witnesses came forward and testified, positively, that she was a witch, and related what to their ignorant minds were convincing proofs of the fact, and the crowd clamored for her death. Mr. Brewster affected ignorance of the law, and asked for time to inform himself. This was reluctantly granted, and in this time the woman was "spirited" away, so that when the time for passing judgment came she could not be produced. The indignation of the crowd was furious, and threats of violence to Mr. Brewster were freely uttered. Mr. Brewster afterward went to Texas, and there an account which he wrote of the affair was read, some years since, by a citizen of Harmar.

In 1835 Mr. Brewster sold the island to Robert Barton, and thus it acquired the name of Barton's island, though it is known to river-men as Twelve-Mile island. The ownership of the island is still in the Barton family. Fourteen-Mile island is also a part of the township. Its ownership has changed many times.

Joseph and James Davis owned a large area of land at a very early day. Thomas Enoch, an Englishman, was an early owner of a large tract in the upper part of Harmar township. John Pillow was also a large landowner. James Henderson lived and died on a tract east of the Denny property. His sons William and John succeeded him in the ownership of this land, and also died there. Ebenezer Denny owned the land just above Harmar station, and his son Harmar, who was a son-in-law of James O'Hara, succeeded his father as owner of this tract.

The land where Harmarville station now is was originally owned by Judge Young, of Westmoreland county, and afterward by his son-in-law, Henry W. Foster. Judge Young also owned a large tract in Harmar township, back from the river. Samuel Alexander was the owner of a tract below Harmarville. On the hills back from the river was land owned by Thomas Fairman, and sold by him to Alexander Campbell. William Gwynn was an early tenant on this land. Among other early settlers on the high lands back from the river were John McAfee and William McKee, brothers-in-law; Peter and Robert Barton, who purchased from William Arthur; John Clowes and William Hare.

Squire — Martin was the owner of a large tract in the northeastern corner of the township. Philip Huddle, Jacob Wise and Sampson Harrison are the present owners of this land. John, James and Ralph Nixon purchased and settled on a large tract. James and Ralph and the heirs of John still reside there.

About half a century since, James Carson purchased and settled on land which is now owned by his son William. Robert Wilson, James Barton and Joseph Barton are lifelong residents of the township.

The only mill in the township is the old Denny grist- and saw-mill. It is going to decay. The canal passed through the township, and its course can still be traced, though the construction of the railroad has nearly obliterated this early waterway.

Harmarville, thirteen miles above the mouth of the Allegheny river, came into existence during the prosperous period of the canal, and has not materially changed. It comprises about a dozen houses, scattered over a considerable area. One Hummel, an Irishman, built the first house, and John Speer opened the first tavern, in 1832. Deer creek, a large and important stream, empties into the river at this place. Guy's run empties into Deer creek just opposite Harmarville station. It was named from the Indian chief, Guyasutha, who had a residence excavated in the bank near the mouth of this run. It is said by some that he died and was buried here. In 1880 the population was 490.

There are two churches, Reformed Presbyterian and United Presbyterian. The former is situated in the northeastern part of the township, the latter on Deer creek, near Denny station. Rev. James Boyd preached in a log barn on the Denny farm as early as 1817, and a church was built in 1818, but no organization occurred until 1838.

SPRINGDALE TOWNSHIP.

This township was included in Pitt from 1788 to 1796, in Deer from 1796 to 1805, in Indiana from 1805 to 1836, in East Deer from 1836 to 1875. It has experienced a greater number of changes than any other subdivision of the county. The erection of Springdale precinct into a township was favorably considered by commissioners to whom a petition for such action was referred at the December sessions, 1870, but the project failed to receive popular sanction at the following election. Four years later the agitation was resumed. The village of Springdale had meanwhile increased in population, and the assessed valuation of the precinct was nearly half a million dollars, more than that of the remaining portion of East Deer township, although the area was much smaller. The advantages of separate municipal organization had also become more apparent. J. B. Stilley, William F. Evans and Joseph Miller were appointed commissioners at the June sessions, 1875, to consider a petition for the division of East Deer, and they reported in favor of the proposed change. The result of the previous election was reversed, and the division received final confirmation at the following term of court.

The village of Springdale is situated at a great bend of the Allegheny river, sixteen and one-half miles from Allegheny City, by the Western Pennsylvania railroad. The site was originally patented by Edmund J. Hollingshead of Philadelphia. In 1820 John Keen purchased from Mr. Hollingshead a tract of three hundred and seventy acres. The village of Springdale is now on this tract. It was named Springdale Farm, about 1825, by Sarah A. Keen, a daughter of the owner. She selected this name because of the existence of several excellent springs on the farm.

The Pennsylvania canal was completed in 1832. Prior to its completion Gen. Abner Lacock, chief engineer of the western division, had his office here. This conferred a temporary activity upon this neighborhood, after which it relapsed into the usual quiet which pervades a rural community, and for many years there was no disturbing element.

In 1874 the proprietors of Franklin Glue-works removed their plant from Butcher run, Allegheny City, to Bouquet station, a short distance above Springdale, the alleged offensive odor produced by this manufacture having prompted the city authorities to compel their removal. In February, 1884, the No. 2 works at Springdale were placed in operation. This is the only glue-factory within a radius of six hundred miles. It was originally established by E. Hoeveler & Co., to whom the W. A. Hoeveler company, limited, succeeded; this name is still retained, although the Hoevelers are no longer interested in the business. The officers of the company are S. H. Keller, chairman; L. C. Haughey, general manager; S. McMann, treasurer. The general office is at Pine street, Allegheny; 110 operators are employed.

The town received quite an impetus from the location of this enterprise in its midst, and has improved rapidly. There is now a population of five to six hundred. The local business interests are prosperous, and property is appreciating in value. The public-school building is a handsome and commodious structure. The Methodist church, a substantial brick building, was erected in 1881; the Roman Catholic, in 1887. The United Presbyterian Church was organized in November, 1873, and received Rev. W. G. Reed as first pastor. Rev. J. Welfby is pastor of St. Mark’s Lutheran Church. There is also a Methodist Protestant organization.

Acmetonia (Cheswick), a town of recent origin, is finely situated on the line of Harmar and Springdale townships, principally within the latter. The Acme Tanning company, C. Mardorf, president; S. J. Mack, vice-president; W. H. Walter, secretary; J. G. Brant, treasurer, established an extensive factory here several years since for the manufacture of leather by an improved process. The works, a three-story brick building, two hundred and fifty feet long and eighty feet wide, were destroyed by fire November 27, 1887, involving a loss of about ninety thousand dollars. The work of rebuilding was at once begun, and work has been resumed. The works of H. G. Hugus, manufacturer of patent steel hollow-ware, were placed in operation in 1887. This is another of the specialties for which the line of the Western Pennsylvania road has become noticeable.

The postoffice was established in 1880 as Armstrong, and changed to Acmetonia in 1887.

Springdale Presbyterian Church, near the village, was organized April 24, 1873, with eleven members. The church-edifice was dedicated March 1, 1874. Pastors: Revs. Aaron Williams, D. D., 1874–78; George Scott (S. S.), 1878–79; G. M. Potter, 1885–86; D. V. Mays, 1887–. This church is the successor of the old Deer Creek Church, of which Rev. Abraham Boyd was pastor for many years.

The Springdale Record was established in September, 1887, by W. S. Hosick. It is a well-conducted seven-column weekly, Republican in politics.
CHAPTER XVI.

TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHS (CONTINUED).

PINE—McCANDLESS.

PINE TOWNSHIP.

PINE township was erected in 1796, and included that part of the county north of the Ohio and Allegheny rivers and west of the boundary between Jones' and Cunningham's districts. Its original limits comprised the whole of eleven townships and parts of three others. After the erection of Ohio, in 1803, it included so much of Jones' and Douglass' districts as were situated in Allegheny county, or the whole of Ross, Reserve, McCandless, Pine and Allegheny City, and parts of Richland, Hampton and Shaler.

Among the residents upon this territory in 1808 were the following-named persons:

Thomas Rodgers has been generally regarded as the first settler within the present limits of Pine, and 1796 is given as the year of his arrival. His son was William, and his grandsons were George, William and Thomas Rodgers. All these died here except the grandson, Thomas. Samuel Beatty was also a settler in this township.
John McCord came in 1801, and settled near the present line of Butler county. He purchased the land that had been taken up by Samuel Beatty, who had settled several years previously and built a log cabin. Mr. McCord died here at the age of ninety-one. He reared three sons: James, Archibald and Andrew J. The two latter are still living on the old place, at the ages of eighty-eight and eighty-three, respectively. William Roseberry preceded Mr. McCord a few years in the same neighborhood. Edmund Purvis was an early resident of the township, and died here. He had sons Oliver, Alexander, Samuel, Robert and William. All these are dead except William, who still resides on the old homestead. George Wallace had been a revolutionary soldier, and settled here prior to the commencement of the present century. He had sons George, John and Thomas, all of whom died on the old farm. None of their descendants are here. William Longhead was one of the first settlers. His sons were John, Thomas, William and Oliver; all are dead, and the family is not represented here. John Anderson was also one of the first settlers. His sons were John and James. His grandson John was the third of the same name in direct succession. The three Johns died on the old place. James removed west, where he died.

Thomas Gibson, Esq., was also an early resident. His sons were James, who died here, and Charles, now living at Gibsonia station, Richland township. Samuel Marshall was an uncle of 'Squire Gibson, and resided near him. He had sons James, Samuel, Thomas, Henry, John and Abraham. None are left in the township. John Hilman lived near Mr. Marshall. His sons were John, Joseph, Ezekiel, James and Mitchell. All have passed away. Near Hilman and Marshall was John Emmett. He had sons Alexander, John, William, Samuel, James, Hugh and Andrew. All died on the old farm except Samuel and Andrew, who still reside there. Robert Kidd was another early settler in the same vicinity. His sons were John, Robert, William, Hugh and James, all deceased. Hardie Reynolds had Reuben, John and James, all of whom died on the old homestead.

William McKinney kept a tavern in the township, on the old Harmony road, during the war of 1812. His sons were Joseph, William and John. The last removed to Kentucky; the others died on the old place. John Logan settled very early. He had five sons, James, John, Thomas, Samuel and William, all of whom have passed away. William McMarlan came early. His sons were William, John and David. These are all deceased, but the family is still represented in the township. John Crawford had sons Thomas, John and Joseph, all deceased. His grandsons still reside here. Thomas Mattison was one of the first settlers. He had sons Thomas and Elijah, both gone. John Graham came in 1820, and settled in the northwest part of the township. Of his six sons, Speaker and Thomas are living on the place settled by their father.

The old Franklin road was opened through the township at an early date, and gave the first impetus to settlement. Wexford, one of the oldest post-villages in this part of the county, was established in 1828.

Pine creek, Little Pine creek and several branches of the Connoquenessing rise in the township. The farming land is of fair quality, and farming is the sole occupation. In 1860 the population was 1,021; in 1870, 718; in 1880, 773. The extent of territory since the excision of McCandless is four miles square.

Of the six churches of the township, Cross Roads Presbyterian, organized in 1827, is the oldest. Rev. John Moore was pastor from that time until 1834; L. R. McAboy, 1837–71; James D. Shanks, 1872–74; John W. Little, 1875–, and Robert B. Porter is the present incumbent.

The first house of worship was a log building. A brick church was erected about 1843, and rebuilt prior to 1860.

West Union United Presbyterian Church was organized in 1842. Pastors: J. Given, 1854–57; J. G. Barnes, 1862–70; N. E. Wade, 1875–84; R. H. Park, 1855–. Far View Baptist Church was organized October 21, 1879. Rev. Isaac Banks was pastor from 1879 to 1881; Gideon Seymour, 1882; A. J. Adams, 1883; Samuel Mills, 1884; E. M. Pralert, 1885–86. The property is owned individually by Conrad Emrick, an active member. St. Alphonsius’ Roman Catholic parish, Wexford, has existed as such since 1864, when Rev. S. T. Mollinger became resident pastor. J. Steger and A. Holdaffel have been among his successors. Salem Methodist Episcopal church and Mount Pleasant Presbyterian church are also in this township, the former in the southern and the latter in the extreme northwestern part of its territory.

Francis Deery was the first schoolteacher. The school was opened in 1800, in his dwelling. There are four schools at present.

McCandless Township.

Proceedings for the erection of McCandless were first instituted August 4, 1849, when a petition for the division of Pine was presented to the court of quarter sessions, and viewers were appointed for its consideration. A strong feeling of opposition was at once aroused. September 7, 1849, a public meeting was held at the house of Daniel Vogel, on the evening of the township election, Robert Wallace, Esq., presiding. Resolutions were passed expressive of determined hostility to the measure, and a remonstrance was signed by three hundred and twenty-one citizens before the adjournment of the meeting. The number of townships at this time was twenty-eight, and in the entire county there were fifty-two election districts. In view of the increased expense incident to the formation of new election districts and other attendant circumstances, the court, in an opinion on this case, pronounced further subdivision a matter of questionable utility; and although the commission returned a favorable report, it was not confirmed, and for the time the opposition triumphed. But owing to some informality in the proceedings of the commissioners, it was urged that their report was not properly a subject of judicial action; and on motion of counsel for the petitioners, November 19, 1849, leave was granted by the court for the filing of additional testimony. In a second petition for division (September term, 1850), it is stated that the township (Pine) was eight miles long and six miles wide, with a voting population of three hundred. C. Snively, John Magill and John K. Foster were appointed as viewers, October 7, 1850; December 10th following they reported in favor of a division, the portion adjoining Ross township to be called Taylor, and that adjoining Butler county to retain the name of Pine; the former to comprise 16,105 acres, the latter 16,208 acres. March 22, 1851, by decree of court, the division was confirmed, the name of McCandless being substituted for that of Taylor as applied to the new township.

Wilson McCandless, LL. D., of whom mention is made in the chapter on Bench and Bar, page 261, died in Pittsburgh June 30, 1882. In his sketch of "The Judiciary of Allegheny County," Judge White thus speaks of his life and character:

Judge McCandless was a remarkable man. He was a natural orator; with a robust form and commanding personnel, he had a clear, musical voice, and fine flow of language, quick, brilliant, witty, and admirable in repartee. He was often called on by his fellow-citizens as the speaker for great public occasions, and on such occasions his addresses sparkled with the rarest gems of oratory. Few men equaled him in power before a jury in a criminal case. As the champion of the democracy of Western Pennsylvania his voice was always heard in the thickest of the fight, cheering his comrades on to victory, or rallying them, in defeat, for another battle. He never held a political office, but was frequently in state and national conventions, helping to choose the standard-bearers of his party, and then entering the campaign with all his energies to secure their election. In private life he was genial, sympathetic, sprightly and humorous; on the bench he maintained the dignity of his station with such unaffected urbanity that all the bar respected and loved him.

Of the persons named in the preceding list, John Deer came to McCandless township in 1792, and remained on the farm where he settled till his death. His sons were John, George, Henry, Daniel, David and Jacob; all dead. John C. Deer, a son of Daniel, resides on a part of the old homestead. William Willoughby, James Duff and James Amberson were settlers prior to 1800. Henry Moon came in 1796. He reared a large family, and three of his sons, John, Joseph and Murdock, still reside on the old homestead. Robert Wallace came about 1797. His son Robert died in 1881, in his eighty-eighth year. James and John Wallace, sons of Robert (2d), are residents on the old place. George and Wible Grubbs came about the first of this century. Both reared families, nearly all of whom have passed away. William, the youngest son of George, still lives where his father settled. Philip Sarver was an immigrant prior to 1800. By two wives he had twenty-four children, but one of whom, a daughter, survives. John Campbell came in 1809, and settled at the place where his son John now lives. Of his other sons that grew to manhood, Joseph died in 1845 and Samuel in 1880. —— Stout was here soon after the commencement of the present century. His sons were Daniel and John. William Hutchman came in 1811. His sons were Hanse, Samuel, Josiah and William, of whom Samuel only is living. William Huggins came prior to 1820. His son Jacob resided here till his death. George Cubbitt was here about 1807.
His son George succeeded him on the farm where he settled, but removed in 1864.

Germans were numerous among the early population. Provision for religious services was made as early as 1795, when a plot of ground was set apart for the purpose. St. John’s German Lutheran Church was incorporated in 1830, and a log church was built many years prior to that date. The English Lutheran Church, in the southern part of the township, is of more recent origin.

There is neither postoffice nor village. The population in 1860 was 1,482; in 1870, 957; in 1880, 1,010. The area is about ten thousand acres.

CHAPTER XVII.
TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHS (CONTINUED).

Ross (Bellevue)—Reserve (Spring Garden)—Shaler (Etna—Millvale).

Ross Township.

After the township of Ohio, Pine was sixteen miles in length and disproportionately narrow. It comprised Jones’ and Douglass’ districts, exten-sing from the Ohio and Allegheny rivers to the Butler county line. Under date of November 15, 1808, about thirty of the residents in this territory petitioned the court to divide it for township purposes, “by a line from the eighth mile tree on the Franklin road, running due east and west.” John McKnight, Benjamin Powers and George Brickle were appointed viewers. June 26, 1809, their report was filed, recommending a division by a line “beginning on the west side of said township between the lands of John Mason, Esq., and William Willoughby, running east between the lands of Baltzer Good and James and Robert Tackaberry, and running through John Hastings’ and through James Keeps’ land and through Robert Wallace’s land, and between Andrew Gruber’s and Robert Campbell’s land, and between John Carson’s and Alexander Morrow’s land to the east side of said township, six miles in length.”

This line was confirmed at the November term, 1809, and the name Ross was conferred upon the new division, in honor of James Ross, an eminent lawyer of Pittsburgh. He was admitted to the bar at the first session of the courts for Allegheny county, and for half a century was its acknowledged head. He was twice elected to the United States senate, was a member of the constitut-onal convention of 1790, and was three times candidate for governor of Pennsylvania.

The original area of Ross has been greatly curtailed by the erection of Reserve, Allegheny City and Bellevue. In 1860 the population was 1,798; in 1870, 1,623; in 1880, 1,976.

The Perrysville plank-road passes through some of the most beautiful scenery of the county. The Evergreen railway, a narrow-gauge road, extends from Bennett to Brookfield, a distance of four miles.

Perrysville is one of the oldest post-villages in that part of Allegheny county north of the Ohio river. The first postmaster was Conrad Reel, but the date of his appointment is unknown.

Casper Reel, mentioned in the list of early residents given in the preceding chapter, was the first permanent settler in the township, and built a cabin at the present location of Perrysville in 1794. He removed his family thither in the spring of the following year. He took a prominent part in the early affairs of the county. His sons were Casper, William, Conrad and David.
Barnabas Hilands came from the lower side of the Allegheny in 1795, but died the same year. Robert Hilands had sons William, John, Alexander, James, Joseph, Robert and David. — Kellar was a settler on the run that bears his name. Richard Morrow secured Kellar’s claim in 1796. Thomas Morrow had sons George, James, John, Samuel and Jefferson. John Morrow had sons Richard, Hilands and Robert.

Baltzer Good opened a tavern near Perrysville in 1797. His sons were Baltzer, Henry, Anthony, Nicholas and John. His grandson, William Keown, still keeps a hotel at the old stand. Other early settlers and families were John Mason, the first justice of the peace; William Cooper, Jacob Huggins and sons Asa, William, Jacob, Richard and John; James Keep and sons Rich-and James; — Cable and sons John, Henry and William; Jacob White-sell and sons Jacob and George; Archibald Hazlet and sons Robert, John, Archibald and James; John McCrum and sons John and Samuel; Samuel Scott and son Samuel; John McKnight, Joseph McKnight and son John; Jacob Sangree and sons John, James and Peter; Robert Anderson and sons James, Robert, John, William, Joseph, David, Charles and Irving.

The town of Perrysville comprised three houses in 1815, and received its first merchant, at a somewhat later date, in the person of Alexander McElwaine.
There is a driving-park near by, and among other attractions of the village are two churches, German Lutheran and Roman Catholic. The latter, known as St. Theresa’s, was dedicated October 6, 1866, the cornerstone having been laid July 4th preceding. Rev. S. T. Hollinger was pastor at that time.

Evergreen is a village on the railway leading from Bennett, in the eastern part of the township. Timothy Davis settled here in 1801. The town was founded in 1853, by William Shinn, a Pittsburgh lawyer. Matthew Cridge subsequently became proprietor. The locality is noted for its picturesque scenery. The only religious feature is a Methodist church. The postoffice is known as Ross. West View is a small village on the Perryville road, near the city line. It has existed as a postoffice since July 9, 1866.

Hilands Presbyterian Church was organized in 1803, by Rev. N. R. Snowden. Rev. Robert Patterson was also an early supply; his successor, Rev. Joseph Reed, took charge in 1836, as the first regular pastor.

Bellevue Borough.—Bellevue was formed from the southwestern part of Ross township, September 7, 1867. It is separated from Allegheny City by Jack's run, and is about four miles from the business part of the city by the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago railway. The most thickly settled part of the borough is along the Beaver road, and is connected with the railway station by an electric road. The site combines healthfulness, accessibility and beautiful natural scenery. There are no manufactures, and the local business is very limited. It is a suburban village to the full extent of the term, and more convenient to the two cities than any other possessing equal advantages.

The Methodist Episcopal church is one of the oldest outside of Pittsburgh, ground for the site having been deeded by Zachariah Blackburn June 10, 1811. Rev. J. H. Miller is the present pastor. The Methodist Protestant Church was organized by Revs. J. Robison and V. Lucas, with nine members, all of whom had previously been connected with the East Common Church, Allegheny. Pastors: W. Reeves, 1866-69; E. McGregor, 1869-71;—— McCracken, 1871-73; W. R. Cowel, 1877-82; C. E. Wilber, 1882-83; S. G. Applegate, 1883-85; C. F. Swift, 1885-. The church- edifice was built in 1866; enlarged and re-dedicated December 17, 1886. The Presbyterian Church was organized, with seven members, January 25, 1871, the first services having been held September 18, 1870. The church- edifice was built in 1872-73. Pastors: R. T. Price, 1873-74; S. H. Holliday, 1875-77; Newton Donaldson, 1887-. The United Presbyterian Church was organized May 21, 1872. Rev. S. H. Graham has been pastor since 1874.

The original settlers upon the town site were Samuel Dilworth, Andrew Jack, Zachariah Blackburn and Erasmus Cooper. Jack was the proprietor of a ferry, hotel and mill, and a prominent man in his day in this locality. The schools of the borough are well sustained. A postoffice under the name of Bellevue has existed since April 16, 1887, having previously been known as Robella. The population was 384 in 1870; in 1880, 915.

RESERVE TOWNSHIP.

It is not known who was the first settler within the present limits of Reserve. A man named George Brickle was captured by the Indians here, while looking after his cows, prior to the commencement of this century. John Tom was a settler before 1800. John Wilson and George Myers, a deaf mute, were also early settlers.

The township was erected at the October sessions, 1835. At the December sessions, 1834, a "memorial from the citizens of that part of the reserved tract embraced in the township of Ross" was presented to the court, praying for a division of Ross by the north line of the reserved lands. Thomas Temple, James Anderson and William Lecky were appointed commissioners to inquire into the propriety of making the proposed change. A favorable report was filed in March, 1835; it was "confirmed absolutely" in October following; the new division with great propriety receiving the name of Reserve. Its original territory has been encroached upon from time to time by the city limits, and corresponding changes in the line of Ross township have been made in its favor.

The act of assembly of March 12, 1783, providing for the disposition of public lands in the northwestern part of the state, contained, among other restrictions, a clause "reserving to the use of the state three thousand acres in an oblong of not less than one mile in depth from the Allegheny and Ohio rivers, and extending up and down the said rivers from opposite Fort Pitt so far as may be necessary to include the same." Alexander McClean made the survey in April, 1785. The northern boundary began on the right bank of the Ohio river opposite the mouth of Chartiers creek; thence "east 972 perches to a hickory-tree; north 80 perches to a sassafras; east 229 3/4 perches to a mulberry; north 26 perches to a post and stones on the bank of Girty's run," and down the several courses thereof to the Allegheny river. David Redick was employed to subdivide the tract prior to its sale by the state, and in a letter to Benjamin Franklin, president of the supreme executive council, under date of February 19, 1788, makes mention of its characteristics, as they appeared to him, in the following terms:

There is some pretty low ground on the rivers Ohio and Alleghenia, but there is but a small proportion of dry land which appears anywhere valuable either for timber or soil, but especially for soil; it abounds with high hills, deep hollows, almost inaccessible to a surveyor. I am of opinion that if the inhabitants of the moon are capable of receiving the same advantages from the earth which we do from their world—I say, if it be so—this same far-famed tract of land would afford a variety of beautiful lunar spots not unworthy the eye of a philosopher.

Although the undulating character of the township is undeniable, German thrift has done much to surmount the natural obstacles to successful farming, and market-gardening is pursued with better returns and more extensively than in any other part of the county. The population in 1860 was 3,030; in 1870, 1,600; in 1880, 1,780.

Spring Garden Borough. —This borough was incorporated May 19, 1883. The village enjoys street-railway facilities in reaching the cities. There are several local manufactures, and the usual business features. The borough and township will in time, probably, be absorbed by the city of Allegheny.
TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHS.

SHALER TOWNSHIP.

Shaler township comprises portions of Jones' and Cunningham's districts. January 20, 1845, a petition for the erection of a new township from parts of Ross and Indiana was presented to the court of quarter sessions, whereupon Col. James A. Gibson, Alexander V. Brackenridge and John Murray were appointed as viewers. Under date of June 10, 1845, they reported in favor of the change proposed. March 20, 1847, the new township as thus recommended was confirmed by decree of court under the name of Marion; but on the same day the name was changed to Shaler. The individual thus honored was Judge Charles Shaler, of whom mention is made in the chapter on Bench and Bar, page 253. We quote:

He was a wit, a scholar, an able judge, and an accomplished gentleman; probably the most industrious student ever at the bar. He rose about 4 o'clock in the morning, and devoted his time until court opened to carefully overhauling his cases, and was always ready at all points. When he resigned his judgeship, which he did on several occasions, he would be found the next morning at his office, and ready for all kinds of professional business. He retained his vivacity up to the age of seventy-five, when he became blind and had to retire from the bar. He died at the age of eighty-one.

The earliest settler was James Sample, of Irish descent, born in the Cumberland valley, Pennsylvania, March 25, 1756. He was a soldier in the revolutionary war, and at its close received payment for his services in land. His tract was located near the mouth of Girty's run, and he settled here in 1789 or 1790. The following with reference to his son appeared in a newspaper some years since:

Thomas Sample, son of James Sample, was born on Girty's run, Allegheny county, on the 7th of January, 1791, and was nearly eighty-six years old at the time of his death. He was the second male child born north and west of the Allegheny river, the late Gen. Robinson, of Allegheny, being the first, and born about one year before him. The mother of Mr. Sample and all her family were taken prisoners by the Indians two weeks after his birth, his father, who was captain of a company of minutemen, being out on a scout at the time. The entire family was rescued from captivity the same night, through the assistance of a squaw to whom Mr. Sample's mother had furnished clothing and other comforts the winter before. While the Indians were engaged in a war-dance around the scalps taken the day before, the squaw procured a light canoe, only large enough to carry one person safely, and taking the three oldest children, ferried them across the river through the floating ice one at a time; she then gave the canoe to the mother, who paddled to the other side, carrying her two-weeks-old babe. That night the family staid with Mr. Ewalt, who owned the farm where the arsenal now stands, and the next day they were put in Fort Duquesne.

Not long after the arrival of the Samples a family of Dicks settled on the run since known by that name. The Indian party that took the Sample family captive stopped at their house on the same day. A man named Chapman, who worked for Mr. James Sample, had stopped for dinner with the Dicks on his return from a visit to a relative living with Esley Powers at the present site of Sharpsburg; he had just seated himself at the table when the Indians entered, and he was at once killed. The entire family were taken prisoners, and they were not so fortunate in making their escape as the Samples had been. After accompanying the Indians to their tribe in Ohio, they were exchanged at Detroit, and returned in about two years. So stealthy had the approach and departure of the savages been that the absence of the Dick family was not discovered until two days afterward. A party from the vicinity of Pittsburgh started in pursuit, but turned back after reaching the borders of the Indian country, to attempt to penetrate which would have been perilous at that time.

John Shaw settled on Pine creek in 1803. He died in 1844, on the place where he first made his residence. His son, Thomas Wilson Shaw, now ninety-four years of age, lives on the old place. James Miller, a neighbor of Mr. Shaw, came afterward. James Sample settled early near the mouth of Girty's run. Benjamin Powers settled near the present borough of Etna. Jacob, Daniel and John Wise and Andrew Wible settled near the central part of the township. Jacob Huggins and —— Anderson settled in the same vicinity. Thomas Swords settled not far from Pine creek, near Glenshaw. Gen. Wilkins owned a large tract of land in the township, and many of these settlers purchased their farms from him.

The first mill in the township, and probably the first north of the Allegheny river, was built by James Sample, and rebuilt in 1797.

Girty's run, upon which it was situated, is so named from Simon Girty,

The outlawed white man by Ohio's flood,
Whose vengeance shamed the Indian's thirst for blood;
Whose hellish arts surpassed the red man's far;
Whose hate enkindled many a border war,
Of which each grandame hath a tale,
At which man's bosom burns and childhood's cheek grows pale.

Born in one of the middle counties of Pennsylvania, he removed to the west at an early age. He was one of two spies intrusted with important duty by Gov. Dunmore in his western campaign, and early became familiar with Indian life. Upon the commencement of the Revolution he espoused the American cause with zeal and earnestness, but he was both ambitious and jealous, and tired of duty as a common soldier when others of less ability were promoted to positions of responsibility. Chafing under the consciousness of injury, he deserted to the British, and in the high position to which he was at once promoted the vindictiveness of his spirit found ample opportunity to effect a fearful retribution. In 1778 he appeared before Wheeling in command of a force of Indians, and demanded its surrender from Col. Zane; the attack was unsuccessful, as was also another, two years later, upon Col. Clarke at Chillicothe. This was fully compensated in 1782, when he had the satisfaction of opposing Col. William Crawford's expedition against the Sandusky Indians. Crawford was taken prisoner, and burned at the stake with all the elements of torture the ferocity of his captors could inflict. The conduct of Girty upon this occasion was the masterpiece in a career of unparalleled infamy. His influence among the Indians was such that the melancholy event might have been averted by timely intervention; instead, he addressed the prisoner with a coarse jest, and in the same vein informed Dr. Knight that a similar fate was also in store for him. He led numerous expeditions against the settlements of Kentucky and Western Pennsylvania, in one of which Hannastown was burned and plundered; on the march through what is now Allegheny county, he encamped at the stream which bears his name. He was among the victors at St. Clair's defeat in 1791, and was at the battle of Fallen Timbers in 1794, and met his death in 1814, by the side of Tecumseh, in Proctor's defeat.

The township is traversed by the Butler plank-road, the Western Pennsylvania, Evergreen and Pittsburgh & Western railroads. The stations on the latter are known as Undercliff, Witmer, Glenshaw, Coaldale and Elfenwild. Glenshaw was formerly known as Shaw's Mills. The ironworks at Etna were formerly supplied with coal from this place, and the population thus attracted forms a small village. A Presbyterian mission was established here in 1879. In 1886 a church was organized, and a tasteful house of worship has been erected. Bowerstown, a hamlet on the Evergreen railway, derives its name from that of the first settler, Jacob Bower. The only place of worship is a Lutheran church. There is also a church at Sample Farm, a thickly settled neighborhood adjoining Millvale borough on the north. The population in 1860 was 2,474; in 1870, 1,473; in 1880, 1,928.

Etna Borough.—Gen. Wilkins was the original owner of a large tract of land at the mouth of Pine creek, embracing the present site of Etna. His residence, a large frame structure, was the first house in what afterward became the town. David Anderson purchased the land from him, and laid it off in streets and lots. It early received the name of Stewartstown, from David Stewart, an active citizen, and one of the first after Wilkins.

The manufacture of scythes and sickles was begun in 1820 upon the present site of Spang, Chalfant & Co.'s works. H. S. Spang purchased this primitive establishment in 1828, and adapted it to the rolling of bar-iron from blooms, employing fifty men. The present open-hearth steelworks were placed in operation in August, 1882. The plant consists of two twelve-gross-ton Siemens open-hearth furnaces; one twelve-pot crucible furnace, started in May, 1885; product, steel castings; annual capacity, eighteen thousand net tons.

The Spang Steel & Iron company, limited, operates works built at Etna in 1880–81, consisting of three ten-gross-ton Siemens-Martind open-hearth furnaces, seven heating-furnaces, one hammer and four trains of rolls. The product consists of steel plates, and machinery and spring-steel, to the amount of eighteen thousand net tons annually. The Isabella furnaces were erected in 1872. The larger is seventy-five feet high and twenty feet bosh, the smaller sixty-five feet high and nineteen feet bosh, the combined annual capacity being one hundred and thirty thousand net tons.

The borough had a population in 1870 of 1,447; in 1880, 2,334. Daniel Hieber, born in Wurtemburg in 1788, started the first wagon-maker’s shop in 1835, having removed to Philadelphia in 1833. The borough was incorporated September 16, 1868. Henry Ochse, the first burgess, was born in Hesse-Cassel in 1820, and became a resident in 1841. The Etna Valley Record was first issued April 1, 1887, by H. H. Sallade, and is published weekly. The Labor Voice, established by A. L. Weihe in June, 1887, expired in the following September.

The United Presbyterian Church was organized February 13, 1868. The pastor, Rev. A. H. Calvert, was installed in 1898. The German Evangelical Church, Rev. P. Korn, pastor, is the only other religious organization.

Millvale Borough.—This place was incorporated by act of assembly February 13, 1868, from a part of Shaler township and that part of the borough of Duquesne not included in the limits of Allegheny City by the act of consolidation of March 12, 1867. The latter was created by act of the legislature from Reserve township, April 5, 1849.

The site of the town was originally owned by John Sample. September 23, 1844, he sold one hundred and sixty-four acres twenty-eight perches of land to the poor-directors of Allegheny City, by whom it was converted into a farm for the care of the poor of the city. The necessity of providing accommodations for the increasing class of persons intended to be benefited influenced the directors to secure a location farther distant from the city, for which legislative sanction was secured in 1867. The farm was accordingly laid out into streets and lots, the first sale of which occurred September 4, 1867. The amount realized in this way has been about three hundred thousand dollars, the fact that the investment was judicious being sufficiently indicated by reference to the price paid, which was a trifle less than twelve thousand dollars. The population in 1870 was 668; in 1880, 1,824.

The Millvale Rolling-mills, Graff, Bennett & Co., proprietors, were erected in 1863, burned December 11, 1881, rebuilt in 1882, and enlarged in 1887. As reported to the American Iron and Steel Directory for 1886, the plant comprises ten Danks rotary puddling-furnaces, one double, one double-double and twenty-one single puddling-furnaces, eight trains of rolls and one hammer, the product consisting of bars, sheets, plates and nails, to the amount of thirty-five thousand net tons annually. These works employ the larger part of the working people of Millvale, and form the basis of its prosperity.

The Bennett Star, W. S. Scott and G. R. Dorman, editors and proprietors, has entered upon its fifth volume. It is a six-column quarto, published weekly. The town enjoys railroad facilities by the Western Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh & Western and Evergreen railways; it is known as a station under the name of Bennett, which is also the postoffice designation.

The Presbyterian Church was organized in August, 1869. Rev. W. H. Knipe and W. R. Moore served as supplies until 1872. Pastors: McNary, Forsythe, J. M. Shields, A. D. Light. St. Anne's Roman Catholic church originated in the labors of Father Gibbs. The cornerstone was laid September 24, 1874, and the dedication occurred May 2, 1875.

St. Aubray's (German) Catholic church was dedicated November 6, 1887, Bishop Phelan presiding. The German school was opened in 1876.

CHAPTER XVIII.

TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHS (Continued).

OHIO—KILBUCK—ALEPPO (GLENFIELD—OSBURN).

OHIO was the third township to be formed in Allegheny county north of the Ohio river, and the first subdivision of Pine township. Its erection was agitated in December, 1802, when a petition was filed in the court of quarter sessions, representing that Pine extended twenty-three miles along the Ohio and Allegheny rivers, adjoining Butler and Beaver counties. The line of Nicholson's and Douglass' districts was suggested as the line of division, the western portion to include Neville's island and be called Ohio township. Gen. John Neville signed this petition. At the June sessions, 1803, a division was petitioned for by the Jack's ferry and Franklin roads. At this time there were but forty-seven miles of road in the whole of Pine township. It was averred that if the eastern boundary of Nicholson's district were made the line of division, thirteen miles of road would be included in the portion east of that line, and thirty-four miles in the portion west of it; but if the Franklin road were made the dividing line, the eastern division would include twenty-seven miles of road and the western division twenty. It was thought that the roads should be apportioned as equally as possible, as their repair was imposed upon each township separately; but it was also urged that the roads were an advantage to the territory they traversed, and that consideration seems to have contributed but little to the final result. At the September term, 1803, the court confirmed absolutely a division by the line of Nicholson's and Douglass' districts, erecting the territory west of that line into Ohio township. It then included in addition to its present area the townships of Marshall, Franklin, Sewickley, Leet, Kilbuck and Aleppo.
The taxable inhabitants of this territory in 1814 were as follows:

Practically, Ohio has been reduced to its present limits by the erection of Franklin in 1823, Sewickley in 1854, and Kilbuck in 1869. No event of remarkable interest signalized its early settlement. Being situated on the "Indian side" of the river, the first white inhabitants did not appear more than a few years prior to 1800, as this section of country was not open to settlement until 1792. Henry Wilson, a squatter, is said to have been the first settler. Of William Ritchey, who settled permanently in 1801, the following story is told: "He had been a soldier in Wayne's expedition. While the army was lying at Legionville, he was sent on some commission to Fort Pitt. When a short distance from camp he heard a wild turkey gobble near by. The sounds were repeated, and he followed them, but cautiously and behind the trees. At length, upon exposing a part of his body, he observed an Indian in the act of taking aim at him over a clump of bushes. He was standing on tiptoe to obtain a fair view, but Richey was too quick for him, and before the savage could fire he planted a bullet between his eyes. He then took his gun and tomahawk, hid them in a hollow tree, and went on. Years afterward he returned to the place and found the gun where he had left it; the barrel is still in possession of one of the family.' The Duff family was first represented by James Duff and his two sons, who crossed the Ohio river in 1799 and located near that stream, removing farther inland in 1805. James Moore immigrated from Northumberland county with a large family about the same time. He owned a large tract of land.

In addition to these, the Crawfords, who settled on Lowrie's run, and have been numerously represented by their descendants, the Gillilands, the Ritchies, Shannons and others are remembered.

Ohio is an agricultural township. Its farms and forests constitute its only resources. Within a recent time search has been prosecuted for oil, and gas has been discovered, though not in such quantities as in some other fields. There are in the township no manufactories and no villages. The population is sparse. In 1860 it was 1,350; in 1870, 685; in 1880, 737. There are two election precincts. The principal streams are Kilbuck run and Lowrie's run.

Methodism was introduced into the township by Rev. Thomas McClelland, a local preacher, who became a resident of Sewickley valley in 1808 or 1809. In 1811, through John Way, Sr., Mr. McClelland, Matthew Ingram and Charles Hamilton purchased farms some distance inland from the river, and removed thither. He organized a Methodist society at his own home, which was also the place of worship. He also organized a class at the home of Mrs. Elizabeth Frazier. The place of preaching was removed to the schoolhouse on the farm of Jacob Fry some years later, and subsequently to the residence of Thomas Hamilton. A log church-building was erected on his farm prior to 1834, upon the site of the present 'Blackburn chapel.'

Mount Nebo United Presbyterian Church was organized in 1838. A church-building was erected two years later. The pastors have been as follows: W. Burnett, 1845–50; J. Greer, 1852–55; J. L. Fairley, 1856–69; D. R. Imbrie, 1870–72; W. J. Cooper, 1874–77; D. R. Imbrie, 1878–. The first school-house was built in 1806, in the western part of the township. Four schools are sustained at this time.

KILBUCK TOWNSHIP.

This township was erected by a decree of court March 9, 1839. At that time Ohio township bordered upon the Ohio river a distance of nine miles, extending five miles inland, and its voting population was estimated at four hundred. At the September term, 1838, Moses Chess, Thomas M. Shaw and T. H. Nevin were constituted a commission to take the matter of its division into consideration, and the proceedings thus begun were concluded at the March term in the following year. Two voting precincts had previously been established in Ohio, and their boundary, a line running south sixty-five degrees east eighteen hundred and seven perches was made the northern limit of Kilbuck.

There were several Indian chiefs of this name. One of them received a liberal education at Princeton College. An earlier member of the family, otherwise known as William Henry, is probably the personage honored in having the name attached to Kilbuck run and the township. While a resident of Washington county, Ohio, in 1803, he sold an island in the Ohio river, opposite "the Point," John Heckewelder, the Indian antiquary and missionary, being among the witnesses to the deed.

Of old families resident in what is now Kilbuck township the names are remembered of William Dickson, who came in 1796, and was probably the first settler. His sons were John, Joseph and David. William and David Courtney settled here in 1803. The sons of William were Thomas, Dickson and John. John Cheney settled near Emsworth prior to 1802, and built there the first mill in the township. His successor was John Wilkin. William and Barnard Jackman were early settlers. William had sons Andrew, John, William and Thomas. John Taylor was also an early resident, and his sons were James, John, David, Alexander and Wilson. Hugh Duff, James Duff, Harvey and Bruce Backhouse and John Moore were also early citizens.

The Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago railroad passes through the township, with stations at Laurel, Emsworth, Clifton and Dixmont. The line of this road and of Beaver road is a continuous succession of villages and fine residences. Emsworth, at the mouth of Lowrie's run, was first known as Courtneyville, from David and William Courtney, who settled in the vicinity in 1803. The first settler, however, was John Cheney, by whom the first mill was built. The town has grown rapidly within the last few years.

The Presbyterian Church, of which Rev. Aaron Williams was the first pastor, was organized in 1860. The United Presbyterian Church was organized November, 1869. Rev. D. R. Imbrie became pastor in 1869, D. M. Thorn in 1873, J. H. Veazey in 1877, D. R. Imbrie in 1884.

Courtneyville postoffice existed from March, 1852, to March, 1860. John W. Moore was appointed postmaster March, 1852; William Courtney, July, 1852; James Gilliland, June, 1858. Emsworth was established April, 1872, with John Shannon, postmaster.

Clifton occupies an elevated situation eight miles from the city by rail. Its growth has occurred entirely within recent years. An electric railway gives easy access to the railroad station. There is an acid manufactory on Lowrie's run, in the rear of the town.

The Western Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane at Dixmont, in this township, is a branch of the Western Pennsylvania hospital, the history of which will be found at page 416, Part I.

Dixmont postoffice was established January 30, 1861; it was discontinued from April 14 to April 27, 1863, and has received the following appointments:
TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHS.

191

Thomas Chess, January 30, 1861; Joseph Dean, March 15, 1869; John Steele, March 24, 1874; Joseph T. Richey, April 6, 1874; John Whitehead, January 13, 1882; Martha J. Kunkel, March 28, 1882.

The population of Kilbuck was 1,919 in 1870; in 1880, 1,432.

West Bellevue Borough.—This place was incorporated from the eastern part of Kilbuck December 9, 1874, and had a population of 326 by the census of 1880. The station is known as Birmingham, and the postoffice as Myler Noble J. Black, the first postmaster, was appointed in May, 1883, and John F. Niehaus, in August, 1887. There are two churches, Methodist Episcopal and Presbyterian. The population is principally made up of clerks and others engaged in the city, and their families. The Davis island dam is an object of interest.

ALEPPO TOWNSHIP.

This township was erected June 7, 1876, from the western part of Kilbuck. The proceedings in this case were begun at the December term, 1875, when George R. Stewart, H. Nevin and John Way, Jr., were appointed to the usual service of viewing the line proposed, and, upon the return of a favorable report, the confirmatory degree of court was granted. The population at the following census was 657. This is one of the smallest subdivisions of the county. Solomon Veal was the first settler. His cabin, which stood on the bank of the river, was long since washed away. John M. Wood and William Dawson are remembered as early residents in what is now this township. The Merri- mans, the Whites, the Parks and other families, the names of which are not recalled, were also here at an early day. Haysville, nine miles from the city by rail, is the only village, and is principally included in Glenfield borough. St. Mary's German Catholic church, built in 1853 by Father Stiebel, is the only religious body. In recent years it has usually been placed in charge of students from the diocesan college at Pittsburgh.

Glenfield Borough.—This borough was incorporated December 4, 1875, from the southeastern part of Aleppo, under the name of Camden, which was changed to the present style March 9, 1876, by decree of court. The town proper occupies a narrow valley at the mouth of Kilbuck run, and was built up between 1868 and 1872, with the occasional addition of a building since that time. The population was 538 in 1880. The churches are Thorn chapel, Methodist Episcopal, built in 1874, and the Presbyterian, organized in 1876. William Raffley was appointed postmaster at Glenfield in January, 1876, and John A. Stewart at Burgunda (Haysville) in February, 1885. The original predecessor of the latter was Kilbuck, to which Patrick Slater was appointed in December, 1877, and Patrick Slattery in January, 1878. The name was changed to Haysville May 24, 1880, but the office was discontinued December 26, 1882.

Osborn Borough.—This borough was formed from the western part of Aleppo March 10, 1883, after a legal contest, in the course of which the authority of the supreme court was invoked. The population is smaller than that of any other borough in the county. It adjoins Sewickley on the west, and in common with that place it is made up almost entirely of suburban residences.

CHAPTER XIX.

TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHHS (CONTINUED).

FRANKLIN—MARSHALL.

FRANKLIN TOWNSHIP.

PROCEEDINGS for the division of Ohio township were instituted at the January sessions, 1823, when Col. Dunning McNair, John Dickson and Richard Robinson were appointed commissioners to take the usual measures for ascertaining in what way the best interests of the people would be promoted. In the following August they reported in favor of division by a line running "south from Big Sewickley creek [fifty degrees east twenty-two hundred and fourteen perches] to a point on the line of the eastern boundary of Ohio; that portion south of this line and adjoining the Ohio river to retain the name of Ohio township, and that portion back from the river and north of the line to be called Franklin township." It may fairly be presumed that this action on the part of the commission was prompted by a desire to ingraft upon the political nomenclature of the county the name of the first electrician of America, the author of "Poor Richard's Almanac," the originator of union among the colonies by a general congress, the wit, sage, statesman and diplomat of the American republic in the struggle to establish its existence—Benjamin Franklin. So common has this application of the name become, however, that its mention seldom suggests the worth and public services of him whom it is meant to honor.

As originally formed, the township extended along the line of Nicholson’s district a little less than thirteen miles (4,142 perches), adjoining Butler county a distance of 1,286 perches, and Beaver 1,316 perches. The area was 19,414 acres 2 roods and 16 perches. The final decree of court erecting Franklin was issued in August, 1823. By the formation of Marshall, in 1863, its area has been reduced to about nine thousand acres. The shape is that of a triangle. The principal streams are Rippling and Fish runs, branches, respectively, of Big Sewickley and Pine creeks. The course of the former is westward and of the latter eastward, the line of Alexander’s and Nicholson’s districts coinciding with the watershed that defines their respective basins. Lowrie’s run and Kilbuck run also rise in this township. The surface, though hilly, is better adapted to farming than that of the country southward to the river. The population was 1,891 in 1860, 760 in 1870, and 793 in 1880.

The first settlers were William Jones and his brother-in-law, a German named Holman, who arrived about 1800. Benjamin Jones, the father of William, was a soldier in the Revolution and in Wayne’s expedition. Upon his return from the latter, he settled opposite Pittsburgh, within the limits of "Allegheny Town." Here he undertook to build a house, and, as the custom was, the neighbors assembled to assist. As usual on such occasions, whisky was freely imbibed, and a member of the party became embroiled with an Indian who happened to be present. In the struggle that ensued, Jones and several others, among them an officer of the garrison at Fort Pitt, lost their lives; but the Indian by whom the tragedy was begun was found drunk in his tent, dragged with a rope around his neck past the scene of the murder, and hanged in front of the fort across the river.

John Fowler became a resident in 1808. He was of Irish descent. David Duff purchased land in 1805, and removed thither from Westmoreland county in 1812. He built the first mill in 1813, and in 1825 he was commissioned first justice of the peace. In 1811, through John Way, Sr., of Sewickley, Thomas McClelland, Matthew Ingram and Charles Hamilton purchased farms in the western part of the township. The names of other early settlers are given in the list in the preceding chapter.

Fairmount Presbyterian church is the oldest in the township. The first church was built on a branch of Rippling run in 1822. The organization was effected in the same year by Rev. John Andrews, and the first entry in the session records occurs under date of September 8th. The last record of Mr. Andrews’ labors is his administration of the Lord’s supper in June, 1831. Rev. John Moore labored here in connection with Plains and Cross Roads from 1833 to 1836; Daniel E. Nevin, from 1837 to 1846; Robert McPherson, from 1847 to 1850; George W. Shaiffer, from 1852 to 1855; Henry R. Wilson, from 1855 to 1859; Aaron Williams, in 1859 and 1863; Edward Swift, in 1862; John W. Potter, from 1864 to 1866; Samuel R. Kerr was installed July 1, 1869, and Levi Risher July 2, 1870.

Thomas McClelland, who settled in the township in 1811, was a local Methodist preacher, and introduced Methodism into this section of country. He died in 1820. He organized a society at his home, and his house was the place of worship. This was the origin of the church formerly known as "Ingram’s," now as "Hopkins’ Chapel." It is situated in the extreme western part of the township. There is also a Methodist church of more recent date near the McCandless township line. Trinity Lutheran Church is a large and flourishing organization. The Franklin Baptist Church and Mount Union United Brethren Church complete the religious representation of the township.

There are no villages, and but one postoffice, Bayne, established March 26, 1884, with Henderson Sarver as postmaster.
MARSHALL TOWNSHIP.

This township is an almost perfect square, the length from east to west being 1,280 perches and from north to south 1,265 perches. The area is 10,120 acres. Its existence as a township dates from June 3, 1863. This territory had previously been formed into an election precinct as part of Franklin township. The name is that of T. M. Marshall, the attorney by whom the proceedings before the court were conducted.

Big Sewickley creek and Brush creek, a branch of the Conoquenessing, rise in this township. The former flows south, the latter north. Being remote from the larger streams of which they are the affluents, this section of country is distinguished by the absence of hills of the height and prominence which add so much to the beauty of the river valleys, detracting, however, from their agricultural value in corresponding ratio. The northern part of Marshall is probably the largest extent of level country in the county. Farming is the exclusive occupation, and the region is not thickly settled. The population was 705 in 1870, and 748 in 1880. The German element predominates.

It is generally supposed that John Curry was the first settler. John Fowler succeeded to his improvements on Brush creek about 1792. He had three sons, William, Robert M. and John D., all of whom are dead. John H., Esq., Joseph D. and William were sons of Robert. Joseph D. was killed in the battle of the Wilderness; John H. and William are still residing in the township.

Joseph Compton located on a tract near the Butler county line in 1805. Samuel Neely settled in the central part of the township near the beginning of this century. His sons were Isaac, William, George and James, of whom the two latter still reside on portions of the old homestead. Robert Peters became a resident about 1815, and settled near the Fowlers, on Brush creek. He had no sons, and the family is not represented here. —— Pollock became a resident about 1816; none of his family are here. Elijah Boyee came about 1820, and located in the vicinity of the Fowlers. His sons were Stephen, John, George, Robert, Elijah, Thomas and James; all dead but Robert and James, who reside in the west. Robert Forsythe settled prior to 1820 in the vicinity of Boyee. He reared four sons—David, James, Robert and Alexander—all still living. Joseph Stinson came about 1826, and purchased land on Brush creek, near the line of Butler county. He is dead, but his family is still represented here in the female line.

George W. Warren was apprenticed to the elder Fowler in 1826. He continued a resident of the township to the time of his death, in 1879. He was during many years the keeper of the hotel at Brush creek. At the time of his death he was a large landholder. Three sons and three daughters of Mr. W. still reside in this vicinity. David Caldwell came to this township prior to 1830, and passed the balance of his life here. His sons were Alexander, John, William, David, Lewis and Charles; all dead. Some of his grandchildren are now residents here. William Ewart also came before 1830. His sons were William and David, both dead. John Eakin settled near the center of the township before 1820, and died there. His son David is also dead.

The first gristmill in the township was built by David Caldwell, on Brush creek, not far from the Butler county line, between 1820 and 1830. It has gone down. Some years later another was erected on the same stream by John Fowler, Sr. It has also fallen into disuse. A sawmill was also built by Mr. Caldwell near his gristmill. A distillery was conducted by Elijah Boyce, but it has long since gone to decay.

A hotel was established in 1845, by Jonathan Ransom, at Brush creek. It is still kept, but there have been many changes of landlords.

The first search for oil was made in the valley of Brush creek, on the Warren property, by an association of farmers, in 1861. The drill was worked by horse-power, and a leaning tree was utilized for a derrick. After penetrating to the depth of 190 feet the experiment was abandoned. The next attempt was made by the Thornhill Oil company, in 1884, also in the valley of Brush creek. Oil was found at a depth of 1,700 feet, but its mixture with brine rendered it valueless. No further attempts were made till 1887. On the 7th of October in that year oil was found by William Munhall and others at a depth of 1,455 feet. There are now (October, 1888) eight producing wells in the valley of this creek and its branches. It is worthy of remark that the best of these wells is within a few rods of the place where search was first made. Sufficient gas has been found here to run the engines at these wells.

John Coulter established the first store in 1809. The Indian trail from Pittsburgh to the lakes passes diagonally across the township from southeast to northwest. Its route is clearly indicated by arrowheads and other evidences of former Indian travel.

There is one church in the township, a Methodist Episcopal society, organized by Rev. Joshua Monroe. The place of worship is situated contiguous to the Butler county line, and was built in 1853. Blair postoffice was in existence from February 23, 1864, to August 16, 1867. Thornhill was established March 29, 1872.
CHAPTER XX.

TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHS (Concluded).

SEWICKLEY—LEET (SEWICKLEY).

SEWICKLEY TOWNSHIP.

The township of Sewickley was erected January 28, 1854, by decree of the court, from that part of Ohio township west of the line of Alexander's and Nicholson's districts. The name is of Indian origin, and is said to signify "sweet water." It occurs in the dialect of the Delawares, by whom this region was formerly occupied, and who conferred it upon various localities in the western part of Pennsylvania, notably Beaver and Westmoreland counties, where, as in the valleys of Big and Little Sewickley creeks, the sugar-maple abounds. The surface of the township is exceedingly hilly, and hence it was not settled until the surrounding territory was well populated. Its early settlement presents little of interest.

The "McKean tract," comprising Nos. 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 114 and 115 of Breading's district of depreciation lands, known respectively as "Richland," "Walnut Bottom," "The Meadow Land," "Belle-View," "Buck Hollow," "Turkey Range," "Sewickley Farm" and "Cascade," and containing an aggregate area of 2,480.8 acres, was originally patented to Thomas McKean and Francis Johnson, under date of June 14, 1786. This tract comprised the southeastern part of Sewickley township, extending into the adjoining portions of Leet and Ohio. The fact that the first governor of the state was interested in its ownership is sufficient reason for this mention; but its after history is equally worthy of being chronicled. April 7, 1804, Johnson relinquished his moiety in favor of Gov. McKea, and the latter conferred the property upon his daughter, Sarah Maria Theresa, Marchioness de Casa Yrujo, wife of the Marquis de Casa Yrujo, minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary from Spain to the United States at the close of the Revolution. The marchioness bequeathed the property to her daughter, Narcisa Maria Louisa Martinez de Yrujo de Pierrard, the wife of Gen. Blas Santiago de Pierrard y Alcedar; and upon her death, in 1874, it was inherited by her nephews and nieces, from whom it was purchased in 1881 by Cochran Fleming, Esq. It is probably the largest individual holding in the county, and thus, after nearly a century of ownership by the descendants of Gov. McKea in the family of De Casa Yrujo, the title to the property is again vested in an American citizen.
TOWNSHIPS AND BOROUGHS.

There is neither postoffice, village nor church within the geographical limits of the township.

The first settler is believed to have been Frederick Merriman, who located in the northeast part of the township about 1808. He reared a family of sons, of whom the names of Frederick, Abraham, David, William, Ezekiel, Samuel and Davis are remembered. At about the same time, or soon afterward, came David and James Wilkin, Samuel Gunsalius, John Crees, Adam and Arthur Scott, William Riley and John Gillen. In addition to these the following were early residents, and reared families in the township, though the precise time of their coming can not be ascertained: Thomas Hamilton, whose sons were William and Thomas; Robert Lynn and sons Hugh, Thomas and Robert; Nathan McPherson, who reared sons named Nathan, James, John and others; John Means and sons Whiteson, Wiley and Joseph; Zachariah McPherson, who had two sons; —— Logan and his sons Samuel and John; and John Mitchell, who reared sons John, Wilson and Patterson.

In proportion to the area the population is probably less than in any other part of the county. In 1860, at the first census after its formation, and while it included Leet and Sewickley borough, the population was 1,586; in 1870, 443, and in 1880, 392. Farming is the sole occupation. Natural gas and petroleum have been discovered, and their development will doubtless effect material changes in the general condition of this region.

LEET TOWNSHIP.

This township was erected June 26, 1869, by decree of court, upon petition for a division of Sewickley by a line "beginning at the northwest corner of tract numbered eleven in Leet's district of depreciation lands, and thence along the back line of the river tracts in said district to the northeast corner of tract numbered four, and thence to a point where the public road crosses the Ohio township line." The line thus described was confirmed, and does not pursue a direct course, as is usually indicated upon the map. An effort to have it changed in this respect was made in 1871, but without success.

Jonathan Leet, for whom the township is named, was a surveyor in the employ of the state, and in that capacity he laid out the town of Beaver Falls. A portion of the depreciation lands was assigned to him, and bears the name of "Leet's district." It adjoins the Ohio river in Beaver county, extending northeasterly many miles. His brother, Maj. Daniel Leet, secured the rich and fertile Sewickley "bottom," comprising a large part of the township. This tract appears in history for the first time in 1779, when the chiefs of the Delaware Indians sought to confer it upon Col. George Morgan in appreciation of his services in their behalf while Indian agent at Fort Pitt during the Revolution. They thus described it: "It begins at the mouth of the run opposite the foot of Montour's island (in mean the lower end of the island), and extending down the river Ohio to the run next to Logstown—bounded by the said two runs and the river Ohio, and extending back from the river Ohio to the tops of the highest hills—being, we suppose, about three miles in general in a direct line from the river to the tops of the said hills, and about six miles from run to run.’ But Col. Morgan, foreseeing the consequences of such action on his part, declined the generous offer of his Indian friends, and nearly a score of years later Daniel Leet became the first owner of the tract under the land regulations of the state. A large portion of this estate is still in possession of his descendants. There is reason to believe that the Indians did not leave this section of country until some time after 1800, and in 1796 it is said that there was a village comprising fourteen huts at the mouth of Little Sewickley creek. The English population at that time was of the class known as ‘squatters,’ and followed the occupation of ‘keelboatmen,’ making long voyages to the lower waters of the Mississippi. Among the permanent settlers was William Leet, a brother of those of that name previously mentioned, who occupied the Leet estate as a tenant. His brother-in-law, John Bean, was also a settler as early as 1796, and his primitive cabin, which stood on the bank of the river near Leets-dale, was long since washed away. His son John survived him. John Way located near the river at a very early day. His house is also gone. His sons were Nicholas, Abisha and James. Mr. Thomas Hoey was also an early settler.
William Vickry and sons Philip and others; James Mann and sons Robert, James and William, and John Jackson and his sons John and James are remembered as early residents.

A gristmill was in operation on Little Sewickley creek in 1797. Maj.
William Leet did not remove to this region until 1827, three years before his death.

The military road opened by Gen. Wayne in 1798 from Pittsburgh to Legionville was the first in this section of country. It was the principal highway of travel until the opening of the Beaver road, some years later.
Both were largely instrumental in developing the agricultural resources of the region; but its present character is suburban rather than agricultural. Few localities in the vicinity of Pittsburgh present equal advantages in this respect.
The region is famous for the beauty of its natural scenery, its healthfulness and salubrity, while the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago railroad renders it accessible from all parts of the country. The stations of Fair Oaks, Leets-dale, Shields, Edgeworth, Quaker Valley, Roseburg and Sewickley are all within the limits of Leet township, and at each there is a village, while the Beaver road is virtually lined with handsome residences. Fair Oaks, at the western extremity of the township, is the location of a Baptist church, constituted in 1877. The Leetsdale Presbyterian Church was organized August 1, 1864, at Edgeworth Seminary. A chapel was erected by Mrs. Eliza Shields in 1865, and the cornerstone of the church was laid June 23, 1868. Its dedication occurred November 14, 1869. Mrs. Shields contributed eighteen thousand dollars toward this enterprise. Rev. James M. Platt was pastor of this church from April 15, 1867, to August 9, 1869; Rev. R. S. Van Cleve, from May, 1870, to 1886, and Rev. Johnston, the present pastor, was installed in 1887.

The population of Leet township in 1870 was 629; in 1880, 890. The only postoffice of the township, Leetsdale, was established July 30, 1873.

Sewickley Borough.—This borough was incorporated July 6, 1853. The first house within the present borough limits was situated between Park Place hotel and the river, and was owned by George Ulery. When the railroad was opened there was also a group of houses along the Beaver road, several of which were used as hotels. Thomas Hoey owned a farm of three hundred acres, the eastern boundary of which was the present Division street of the borough, then known as "Graveyard lane." The triangular portion of this farm inclosed by Beaver, Division and Fife streets was sold to John R. Garrison, the first merchant of the borough, in 1837. He built several houses, and laid off that part of his land adjoining the Beaver road into lots, the sale of which was not rapid; but thus the growth of the town began. The Hoey estate was divided among the three children of Mr. Thomas Hoey—John Hoey, Mrs. Fife, and Mrs. Thorn, the wife of Rev. Charles Thorn. Messrs. Gray and Chadwick laid out the principal streets of the borough on that part of the property which came into possession of Mrs. Thorn (south of Beaver street and east of a small stream which flows through the borough). Their purchase from Thorn resulted in legal complications, and was finally set aside, but the streets as laid out were confirmed. That portion of the town south of Beaver street and west of the stream referred to was sold by John Hoey to John H. Little, by whom it was subdivided. East of Division street the land was originally owned by a Mr. Peebles, from whom it passed to Rev. Robert Hopkins, by whom it was laid out and subdivided into lots. It is not often that clergy-men have been identified with the interests of a town to the extent apparent in this instance.

The growth of the town has been influenced solely by its advantages as a place of residence, it being one of the most delightful suburban localities in the country. No effort has ever been made to introduce manufactures, and the local business interests are not extensive. A large proportion of the population do business in the city, and during the day the town appears almost deserted. A different aspect is presented as the evening trains arrive. The general appearance of the town and its residences is indicative of wealth and culture. Many of the streets are wide, well shaded and macadamized, and the dwellings are generally of a character fitted to bear the closest scrutiny as to design, finish and surroundings. The hills in the background greatly enhance the attractiveness of the town as a whole.

The comfort and convenience of the residents has been provided for in various ways. The question of an adequate water-supply began to be agitated in 1872. A public meeting was held in the schoolhouse in May of that year to consider the advantages of Peebles' run as a source of supply, but no definite action was taken. June 15, 1872, a second meeting was held, George H. Christy, Esq., presiding. The sense of the meeting was expressed in a series of resolutions, in which it was urged that water-works should be established under the auspices of the borough, and controlled by a "water commission," invested with full powers to provide the proposed system and regulate its operation. One hundred and eighty-eight citizens, a majority of the property-holders of the borough, indorsed this action. Thus fortified and encouraged by public sentiment, the town council, June 24, 1872, passed an ordinance appointing Theodore H. Nevin, D. N. White, Robert Watson, J. W. F. White and William Harbaugh commissioners for the erection of the Sewickley water-works, authorizing them to take such measures as their judgment should approve. The commission organized July 6, 1872, with D. N. White as chairman. It became an incorporated body by act of the legislature February 21, 1873. No other source of supply was at first contemplated than the Ohio river. This was strongly objected to on account of alleged impurities from the cities above, and finally abandoned in favor of Peebles' run. Mr. John Birkenbine, a hydraulic engineer of some celebrity, was consulted in deciding upon a site for the reservoir, which was constructed agreeably to plans furnished by Messrs. Edeburn & Cooper, of Pittsburgh. The works were completed and placed in operation in October, 1873. The rapid growth of the town has rendered the supply from Peebles' run inadequate during the summer months, and recourse to the river is thus rendered necessary, but the system is otherwise entirely satisfactory.

The Sewickley Gas company was incorporated in 1871, and organized September 23, 1872, with Robert Watson, president, and William Harbaugh, treasurer. Gas was supplied to consumers for the first time May 4, 1873. The "Ohio Valley Gas Company" was incorporated December 15, 1885, and organized with W. L. Standish, president; E. P. Young, secretary and treasurer. This company supplies natural gas for heating purposes. The general office is at Sewickley, but its operations are not restricted to that locality.

David Shields was commissioned postmaster at "Sewickley Bottom" January 9, 1824, continuing until September 1, 1857, when the postoffice was discontinued. Meanwhile, August 26, 1851, John Way was appointed first postmaster at Sewickleyville, the name of which was changed to Sewickley April 14, 1871. Watson More was appointed April 2, 1857; William A. Ellis, March 1, 1859; James Ellis, December 24, 1860; Baldwin Gray, March 19, 1861; John Agne, August 24, 1869; John Thomas, September 25, 1871: Andrew W. Woods, August 6, 1883; Charles T. Cooper, October 13, 1886.

The educational interests of the borough are well sustained. The first schoolhouse in Leet township was built in 1824 by David Shields, and was attended from this locality for some years. The borough schools rank among the best in this section of the state. The grounds extend from Broad to Chestnut street, fronting upon Thorn, and the school-building, a brick structure of ample dimensions, is exceptionally well adapted to its requirements. The Sewickley academy was originally organized in 1838, by Prof. William Nevin and John B. Champ, and conducted by them about two years, when it suspended from lack of patronage. It was reopened in 1843, under the management of Rev. Joseph S. Travelli, and conducted with success for a number of years in the building now known as Park Place hotel. Under Mr. Travelli’s management it was conducted as a boarding-school. Rev. S. G. Norcross succeeded him, and continued the seminary as a day school. After his departure the institution experienced a succession of unfortunate changes, and was finally suspended in 1875. The present academy building was erected in 1877 by Mr. John Way, Jr., who has since conducted the school. It is largely attended, and may well be regarded as a most valuable feature of the town. Edgeworth Seminary was established by Mrs. Mary Olver in 1836, and destroyed by fire in 1865.

With a population of 1,472 in 1870, and 2,053 in 1880, Sewickley has been a favorable point for the organization of secret societies. Sewickley Valley Lodge, No. 692, I. O. O. F., was instituted January 1, 1870, with John M. Cooper, N. G., and James Douglass, V. G. The name originally was J. Sharpe McDowell, which was superseded by the present in 1875. Sewickley Lodge, No. 426, K. of P., was organized May 5, 1874, with F. A. Myer, P. C., G. M. Gray, C. C., and J. Robinson, V. C. Sewickley Lodge, No. 1105, K. of H., was instituted September 17, 1879. The order of United American Mechanics is also represented.

The first religious services by regular appointment in Sewickley valley were conducted by Rev. Francis Reno, an Episcopal clergyman. For the year beginning May 1, 1798, his support was provided by subscriptions from John Bean, John Way, John Griffith, William Leet, James Fletcher, William McGlahlen, Arthur Frampton, John Stairs, William Laudimore, Joseph Oliver, John Vail, Sam Thomas Olliver, Hannah Heigus, William Cheney, Patrick Bolden, Jeremiah Wright, James Hutchinson, Solomon Vail, David Vail, George Harris, Benjamin Gunsalus, Samuel English, Joseph Fisher, John Olliver, Hugh Laudimore, John Bales, Sr., Christian Martin, Jesse Fisher, Samuel Merriman, Frederick Merriman, Samuel Smith, H. Lee, Henry Ulery, Adam Patterson and William Sutton. This may be regarded as a fair index to the population of the vicinity. The aggregate amount subscribed was twenty-nine dollars and three cents, thirty-six and one-half bushels of corn, one bushel of wheat and an equal quantity of rye, the latter to be delivered at Daniel Leet’s mill. The place of worship was the barn of John Way, Sr., on Lot No. 2 in Leet’s district. There is reason to believe that Mr. Reno continued to preach here until 1808 or 1809, but no organization of the Protestant Episcopal Church resulted in consequence.

The history of Sewickley Presbyterian Church begins with the close of Mr.
Reno's efforts. In 1808 "Sewickley Bottom" was reported to the synod of Pittsburgh as a vacant church and unable to support a pastor. August 22, 1810, Rev. Andrew McDonald was installed as pastor of the church of "White Oak Flats," Beaver county, and served as pastor at Sewickley in connection with that place until 1818. In 1812 the congregation was transferred from the presbytery of Erie to that of Ohio. June 1, 1822, Rev. John Andrews became stated supply at Sewickley and Duff's. The elders in 1821 were James McLaughlin and Thomas Backhouse, and the membership numbered eleven. It was thirty-two in 1826. After the retirement of Mr. Andrews, occasional services were conducted by Rev. S. C. Jennings for some time, but the organization seems to have become extinct. In 1837 Rev. Daniel E. Nevin preached at Edgeworth Seminary, and through the efforts of the principal, Mrs. Mary P. Olver, the church was reorganized February 17, 1838, with twenty members. Rev. Daniel Eagle Nevin was ordained and installed as first pastor in 1838, and resigned in 1847; his successor, Rev. James Allison, D. D., was pastor 1849-64; Rev Joseph B. Bittinger, D. D., 1864-85, and Rev. William O. Campbell, D. D., the present incumbent, 1885-. At an early period in its history this congregation worshiped in barns and houses, and in the woods when the weather permitted. A church was built in 1818 near a spring on the land of a Mr. Beers, now or lately owned by Mr. Robert Watson. The logs were roughly hewn and covered with clapboards, and the interior furnished with puncheon floor and seats. The first sermon in this church was preached by Rev. Michael Law, pastor of the church at Montours. A new church-edifice was necessitated by the reorganization of 1838, and formal action in that direction was taken February 1, 1839, at a meeting over which David Shields presided. Two years elapsed before the church-building was completed. It was a brick structure, in the gothic style of architecture. The present church-edifice was dedicated December 15, 1861. It is a stone structure, fronting on Beaver street, and highly attractive in its appearance and surroundings.

The first Methodist society in Sewickley valley was formed in 1809 by Thomas McClelland, a local preacher, who lived in a log cabin on the farm of John Way, Sr., and preached at the house of Jesse Fisher, a tenant of Daniel Leet. A frame building for religious meetings was built a few years later on a hill near the "Shields mill," and still later, a brick house in the same neighborhood was occupied as a preaching-place. A Methodist society was formed at Sewickley in 1837 or 1838, John R. Garrison being the leader in this movement. In 1839, during the pastorate of Rev. John White, a frame church was built on the site of the present place of worship. The latter, a brick structure of imposing appearance, is situated on Broad street, and was built in 1880-84, mainly through the munificence of Rev. Charles Thorn. The chapel was dedicated November 20, 1881, and the main edifice June 20, 1884. The chapel is forty by fifty-five feet; the main audience-room, sixty-two and one-

The United Presbyterian Church of Sewickley was organized May 3, 1864. Rev. W. A. McKenzie was pastor 1865-71; D. S. Kennedy, 1872-78; W. L. Wallace, D. D., 1879-86; A. M. Campbell, 1888-89. The church-edifice is a frame structure on Broad street.

Two services agreeably to the ritual of the Protestant Episcopal Church were held at Sewickley in 1861, by Rev. Joseph P. Taylor, rector of Kennard School for Boys, New Brighton. In the following year Rev. William P. Tenbrook began to conduct regular services, and in 1863 he was regularly appointed to that duty by the diocesan convention. Rev. William Wilson officiated for the first time, as his successor, in 1865, and resigned in 1868. Rev. Samuel Earp was pastor 1869-70; S. B. Moore, 1871-73; George W. Easter, 1873-76; N. W. Camp, 1877-82; Edmund Burke, 1882-85; and Robert A. Benton, April 3, 1885-88.

The cornerstone of St. Stephen’s church was laid October 10, 1863, Rev. David Cook Page, D. D., officiating. The completed structure was consecrated May 20, 1864, Bishops Alonzo Potter and William B. Stevens, with seventeen clergymen, participating in the ceremonies. Messrs. George W. Cass and George Colhoun, and their families, were among those prominently identified with the history of this parish.

St. James’ Roman Catholic Church originated in the labors of Rev. James S. Reed, of Beaver, whose field embraced the territory now comprised in nine parishes. He traveled on horseback, and had a wide acquaintance. He possessed in a remarkable degree the faculty of making converts and of gaining the cooperation of those beyond the pale of his church. He continued as pastor of Sewickley mission until his death, and was succeeded by Rev. J. D. Zwickert and J. Kunkle, when Sewickley and Glenfield were constituted a parish under the care of Father Zwickert. Rev. C. J. Coyne, the present pastor, assumed charge in 1884. A log church was built on Walnut street by Father Reed, and the present edifice, a brick structure, some years later. It had scarcely been accepted from the contractor’s hands when the roof collapsed, and the entire building was re-erected.

The Sewickley cemetery is one of the most beautiful burial-grounds in all this section of country. The cemetery association was incorporated by act of the legislature approved April 11, 1859. The first interment took place October 12, 1860, and the formal dedication occurred November 1, 1860. The earliest place of burial in the community was a plot of ground about half an acre in extent on what is now known as Division street, set apart for the purpose by the owners of adjoining farms. There was also a burial-ground in the rear of the Presbyterian Church. In 1867 and 1876, respectively, the bodies of persons buried here were disinterred and removed to the cemetery. No effort has been spared to render the cemetery an appropriate "last resting-place."
GENEALOGY AND BIOGRAPHY.

DR. FELIX BRUROT. Among the early physicians of Pittsburgh who are entitled to a special notice in this work, because of the close relation which they sustained to the development of affairs, and on account of their high professional standing, was Dr. Felix Brunot. Born in the parish of Morey, France, January 9, 1793, member of an old Huguenot family, and a foster-brother of Gen. Lafayette, he was originally designed by his uncle, a Catholic bishop, for orders in the church, but, experiencing an aversion to this calling, he was permitted to enter upon the study of medicine. After graduation he joined Gen. Lafayette in his noble espousal of the patriot cause in America, and coming to this country in 1777 served as a surgeon in the army of the Revolution. He participated in the battle of Brandywine and other important engagements, and after the close of that eventful struggle, which established the independence of this nation, he located in the practice of his profession at Annapolis, Md., subsequently removing to Philadelphia, and finally, in 1797, settled in Pittsburgh, where he passed the remainder of his days, dying May 23, 1888, at the age of eighty-six years and five months. He resided on what is now known as Brunot’s island, where he entertained Lafayette, Blennerhassett and other celebrated men. Later on he disposed of the island by sale, and resided on Liberty avenue, Pittsburgh, in a house which one of his sons, who died, had the building of. He was one of the noted physicians of his day, and enjoyed an extensive practice for many years, having an especial faith in the therapeutic properties of electricity. As a public-spirited citizen he was always deeply interested in the development of the city. He was a man of integrity and uprightness of character, and his life was devoted to the performance of good deeds. The doctor was first married at Annapolis, by which union he had one child, who married, but died without issue. His second wife, whom he married December 17, 1789, was Miss Elizabeth Krieder, of Philadelphia, by whom were born the following-named children, six sons: Britain, Casper, Felix, Hilary, James M. and Sanson, and one daughter, Louisa. Mrs. Brunot died September 5, 1845, aged seventy-eight years. Two of the sons were educated as physicians, while others entered the legal profession, settling in different portions of the south. Sanson became a clergyman of the Episcopal Church, organized and officiated at a small church which his father built for him, on land which he also donated, and from which Christ Church, Allegheny, ultimately sprang. Afterward he had a parish at Greensburg, and later at Blairsville. His health failing, he went to Florida, organized an Episcopal church in Key West, which is now in a flourishing condition.

HILARY BRUROT, son of Dr. Felix Brunot, was born in the city of Philadelphia, July 14, 1795, in a house that is still standing on the banks of the Schuylkill. At an early age he entered the military academy at West Point, graduating in one of the first classes emanating from that institution, and passing thence into the regular army. He served in the war of 1812, was wounded in the sortie at Port Erie, and was afterward stationed at Fort Snelling, Mackinaw, Green Bay and Newport, Ky., and later in the arsenal at Pittsburgh. He resigned his position in the army in 1823, and engaged successfully for many years in the manufacture of white lead, occupying the whole square now covered by the Union depot, Pittsburgh. He retired from active business in 1850, and died March 26, 1872. Mr. Brunot was a man of great force of character, an earnest Christian, one who led a blameless, upright life. He was prominent in religious and political circles, and served for many years as a member of council. Mr. Brunot married, May 6, 1819, Ann Tankard, daughter of Randall and Margaret Reville, of Newport, Ky., a family that early settled in Somerset county, Md.

Mrs. Brunot was born Dec. 14, 1798, and died April 18, 1873. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Brunot, viz.: Felix R., Elizabeth M., Hilary J., Louisa, Ann, Melusina, Sophia and John. Of these Elizabeth M. became the wife of George Morgan, of Pittsburgh; Felix R. resides in Pittsburgh, and Hilary J. in Greensburg; all the others died in early life.

FELIX R. BRUROT. In the van of prominent citizens in Pittsburgh stands this widely known, large-hearted philanthropist, whose name for over forty years has been intimately associated with the steel industry of that city. He was born Feb. 7, 1820, at the United States arsenal, Newport, Ky., and when an infant was brought up by his parents to Pittsburgh. When fourteen years of age, he entered Jefferson College, at Cannonsburg, and at the close of his collegiate curriculum he took up the profession of a civil engineer, which he followed until 1842. In that year he became interested in the milling business at Rock Island, Ill., whither he removed, and in connection with the same he dealt in wheat and grain at Camden, on Rock river. Having accumulated a comfortable competence, he returned in 1847 to Pittsburgh, where he permanently established himself, investing a portion of his wealth in the steel-works founded in the following year by the firm of Singer, Hartmann & Co., in which he became a silent partner, and he has continued in connection with the same concern to the present day. An enthusiastic believer in the great value of education, and the importance of reading as a means of enlarging knowledge and strengthening character, Mr. Brunot became one of the chief movers in the work of founding the Mercantile library in Pittsburg, an institution that, in an educational way, has accomplished a vast amount of good. During many years he was its president, and, apart from his labors in founding it, has always, without another deed, contributed during his long connection with its affairs. He was the projector of Library hall, and is still one of its managers.

Mr. Brunot found more or less scope for the exercise of wise philanthropic effort, and at the opening of the war of the rebellion he had already made for himself a name and fame, which, without another deed, would have long survived him. Though offered rank and military command soon after the breaking out of hostilities, he declined the high honor tendered him, being conscious that he could accomplish the greatest amount of good in the work of relieving the sick and wounded, a duty for which he was admirably fitted by nature and the training of his life, and the bloody battle of Shiloh became his first opportunity. From Pittsburgh to the field of carnage two relief-boats, laden with medicines and supplies, were sent, Mr. Brunot being placed in command, a small army of nurses and surgeons accompanying him. At Pittsburgh Landing he began his noble work, and after rendering all possible aid returned with the boats to Pittsburgh, having on board nearly four hundred sick and wounded. On this return trip he was himself taken ill, being prostrated by his arduous labors, and suffering from blood-poisoning, which necessitated confinement to his home for several weeks. He was no sooner recovered, however, than he resumed with all his soul and energy his self-appointed task. Wherever his services were in demand, thither with zeal and alacrity he betook himself with danger and indifferent to personal inconvenience. Early in the summer of 1862 Mr. Brunot was placed at the head of a small corps of volunteer surgeons, medical cadets and others, some twenty-five persons in all, and with them he remained to the end. For several weeks they were engaged in their work of humanity at Savage station, when the battle of Gaines' Mills was fought. About this time McClellan's change of base had commenced. The Union troops, with which were Mr. Brunot and his little band, were ordered to retreat; and such was the suffering among the wounded who had to be left behind, that Mr. Brunot had not the heart to abandon them, and so, with eleven of his faithful comrades, he remained and continued in his noble task. When the Union forces withdrew, the confederates took possession of the point where they were located at Savage station, and shortly afterward the entire party were sent to Libby prison. Here Mr. Brunot was treated rather better than the others who were thrust into that awful pen, being permitted, as a physician, to sleep in a room set aside for that class of prisoners. After an incarceration of some eight days he was exchanged at Savage station. During the remainder of the war his course was marked by unwavering devotion to the Union cause, and the termination of the struggle found him so debilitated by the arduous character of his services, and the effect of malarial disease, that he remained for many months in a weak condition, during which time he betook himself to Europe as the only chance of recovery. After traveling several months, attended by his devoted wife, he so far recovered as to be able to return in the fall of 1865 to his native land.

In 1868, when President Grant, attempting to ameliorate the condition of the Indians, appointed the various boards of Indian commissioners, he named Dr. Brunot first in the list, and he was chosen chairman of the board. Great good resulted from the investigations of the board, in the prosecution of which eminently philanthropic work Mr. Brunot took the most intense interest, and in spite of the many obstacles he had to contend against, brought about by conflicting interests at Washington, he was ever active, in season and out of season, in advocating the cause of the Indians, and appealing for justice for them. He visited the Indians in their homes, in Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Oregon and Washington territories, counseling them the course to pursue for their best good, which advice the Indians were more disposed to follow when they found he was serving without compensation, and simply in the interest of their welfare.

Although working in such broad fields of philanthropy as those mentioned, Mr. Brunot has never been insensible to his obligations as a citizen of Pittsburgh, as is manifested by the hearty interest he has always taken in its affairs, and in the many valuable services he has rendered to the people and to the municipality of his adopted city, as he was two decades ago, and holds directorship and trusteeship in several leading corporations, including the Bank of Pittsburgh, the Safe Deposit company, the Monongahela Navigation company and the Allegheny Cemetery Association. He is a prominent director of the Western Pennsylvania hospital and of the General Hospital of Allegheny; one of the managers of the Western University, and for many years has been an active member of St. Andrew's P. E. Church of Pittsburgh, of which he is senior warder.

JAMES BROWN (deceased) was born at Cootehill, County Cavan, Ireland, Feb. 10, 1780. When seventeen years old, having made three hundred pounds by trading in linen, he set out for America to purchase land for a home for his father's family. He was attacked with ship fever on the way, and was put ashore on the Delaware, where he lay ill for some time. By the time he recovered his means were exhausted, and he proceeded to Brooklyn, N. Y., where he found employment in a confectionery-store. In 1803 he came with his employer to Pittsburgh, and became manager of the business to which he succeeded. His brothers having followed to America, they went into partership in the dry-goods business, which grew to be extensive, and was carried on by his sons in a wholesale way after his retirement. For fifty years Mr. Brown was a partner with James Varner (see his biogography) in brewing ale. With George Mil-tenberger, the firm being Miltenberger & Brown, he purchased the Wayn Ironworks, which were afterward operated by his sons, John H. and Joseph S., and now by sons of the former, J. Stewart and Henry.
Mr. Brown was a large investor in real estate, much of which is still owned by his descendants. The borough of Mansfield stands on land which was owned by Mr. Brown, it being his summer home. He was one of the incorporators of the Bank of Pittsburgh, and was identified with numerous financial interests, where his shrewd foresight came in demand. For nearly fifty years he dwelt on a lot purchased in Allegheny City in 1835, and here he died in November, 1874, in his ninetieth year. He was a member of the First Presbyterian Church of that city, and served in the borough and city councils. Although of a retiring disposition, he took great interest in the national welfare, and was an active supporter of the whig and subsequient republican party. His wife, Mary, was a daughter of Mansfield Banton, a very early resident of Pittsburgh, and they had six sons: John, William, James, Mansfield, Henry and Joseph S., and several daughters,
most of whom are now deceased.

JAMES E. BREADING (deceased), son of Judge Nathaniel and Mary (Ewing) Breading, was born on Tower Hill farm, Luzerne township, Fayette county, Pa., Oct. 19, 1789.
When quite young he entered upon his long career as a merchant, at New Haven, in his native county, then the center of the largest and almost only iron interest west of the mountains. He then removed to Brownsville, where he pursued the same business until the death of his father made it necessary for him to take charge of the Tower Hill farm, in 1821. In 1829 he removed to Pittsburgh, where, in connection with his brother-in-law, George Hogg, and William Hogg (the uncle of George Hogg, both of Brown-sville), he embarked as a pioneer in the wholesale trade in dry goods and groceries. This was the beginning in this county of a life of usefulness in the business enterprises of Pittsburgh and vicinity. Here, by his recognized character for honesty and integrity, and his remarkable business capacity, he was eminently successful, securing the confidence and respect of a large community with which he had business relations. He was for many years connected with a large mercantile establishment at St. Louis, as silent partner, holding the leading position in the house.

Mr. Breading assisted Mr. Robert Dalzell in establishing the first iron-works at Sharps-burg, Pa., and was more or less connected with the iron trade here for many years.
In connection with William and George Hogg he established Dalzell, Taylor & Co., in the grocery business, in 1836, an enterprise that was successfully conducted for many years. In his earlier years Mr. Breading engaged in merchandising at New Haven, his partner being James Blaine, grandfather of James G. Blaine. He retired some years before his death to enjoy that rest in the evening of his days to which a long life of activity entitled him. He was connected with the commissary department during Gen. (afterward President) William H. Harson's campaign against Tecumseh and his braves.

He was married in 1826, and died without issue, in Allegheny City, Nov. 19, 1863, leaving to his wife his whole estate, which was quite large. His wife was Elizabeth Ewing, a daughter of William and Mary (Conwell) Ewing, natives of Luzerne township, Fayette county. Mrs. Breading was born July 9, 1799, and now resides at Emsworth, near Pittsburgh, passing her years in domestic quiet, her life being now given, as her earlier days were, in a great measure, to literally doing good to others and proving herself a good Samaritan, providing a home for the poor of her household, and commanding the respect and affections of all who know her.
Her father and her husband's father were gentlemen of great force of character, very prominent in the growth and common welfare of the country in their days.

Mrs. Breading was one of the originators of the Home of the Friendless in Allegheny City, Pa., which institution has been of great service in relieving the poor and friendless and providing a refuge for the many unfortuunate and homeless children, and those of our soldiers of the late war in particular.

THOMAS SHIELDS CLARKE, the subject of this sketch, was born at Cannonsburg, Pa., Jan. 15, 1801, and passed away at his home in Oakland, Pittsburgh, Oct. 19, 1867. Thomas Clarke, his grandfather, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, and came to America in 1771, settling on a farm on Brandywine creek, near Chadsford, and about six miles from Wilmington, Del. Here he resided during the revolutionary war. At the battle of the Brandywine in 1777, which was so disastrous to the cause of American patriots, a brigade under the command of Gen. Proctor encamped on his farm, and Gen. Lafayette made his headquarters at his house for some weeks. Having joined Gen. Proctor's command, he was made a prisoner by the British and held till after the retreat of the Americans, when he was released. Soon after the war closed he sold his farm, taking contingent money in payment, much of which afterward became worthless, and is still in the possession of his descendants. A few years after the road was opened to chartiers Presbyterian Church, Cannonsburg, Pa. His wife, née Martha Stuart, a native of Lanarkshire, Scotland, whom he married before coming to this country, preceded him to the same resting-place by a few years. Before coming to Western Pennsylvania they had adhered to the Established Church of England, but joined the Presbyterian Church, under Rev. John McMillan, D. D., soon after making their home at Washington. Of their numerous children William, father of Thomas S., settled at Cannonsburg, where he engaged in mercantile business and was the "village squire." His wife, née Agnes Shields, was a daughter of Mathew Shields, of Chambersburg, Pa. In 1804 they removed to Beaver, Pa.

After Thomas S. Clarke had completed his education at Jefferson College (Cannonsburg), he spent a short period as clerk with his uncle Robert at Brownsville, Pa., and in 1819 went to Wheeling, Va., where he was employed in the forwarding-house of Knox & M. Clarke on the great commercial highway of the olden time (the "National Pike") for transportation to the west, which held its supremacy over Pittsburgh until the completion of the Pennsylvania state works. He was sent with a barge load of produce to New Orleans in 1824, and sailed thence to New York, arriving in time to learn that John Quincy Adams had been elected president by Congress. In 1825 he came to Pittsburgh and opened a branch house of Knox, McKee & Co., the style of firm being McKee, Clarke & Co. Soon after the opening of the canal, in 1832, Mr. Clarke became a member of the firm of D. Leech & Co., the first to operate through freight and passenger lines on the state works. In 1834, with Capt. John Vandergrift, he put in operation the first stern-wheel steamer on the Ohio river, named the Beaver, and made daily trips between the village of that name and Pittsburgh. This line was subsequently extended to Wellsville, and a steamer bearing the name of that village was added. Mr. Clarke also became interested in a line of freight-boats to New Castle before the completion of the canal to Erie, thus reaching out for the northwest trade. In 1842, with his brother-in-law, William Thaw, he formed the firm of Clarke & Thaw, and in 1843 resumed operations on the canal, establishing the Pennsylvania & Ohio line with boats and cars on the state works. This enterprise was profitable up to the year 1853, when the Pennsylvania railroad made inroads on the business. Mr. Clarke associated himself with a new firm under the old name of Leech & Co., his Pittsburgh associate being George Black and his Philadelphia associates W. F. Leech and George W. Harris. At this period the Pennsylvania railroad secured the services of this firm, with their vast transportation experience, to enable them to challenge the most important being the palatial daily line of sidewheel boats between Pittsburgh and Cincinnati, extending to Louisville, St. Louis and New Orleans. The books of the firm contained the names of one hundred steamers in which the firm owned a partial or total interest. Through those interests Mr. Clarke made a comfortable fortune.

While accumulating a competency, Mr. Clarke found means and time for many unostentatious acts of charity. He contributed liberally to the churches and to charitable societies, his gifts being freely offered; and when civil war swept over the land his heart and purse were at the service of his country. His kindly nature revealed itself to all with whom he came in social contact, and the duties of an active and lifelong business were never chilled or made indifferent his warm heart. To this rare trait were added quick perception, decision, integrity and untiring energy. On July 5, 1881, Mr. Clarke married Eliza, daughter of John Thaw, a woman whose life-companionship was an ideal one in all the relations of wife and mother. Much to his sorrow she was called away, Aug. 11, 1884. Two children survive him: Charles J., who was many years his father's partner, and Agnes Shields, wife of Elias D. Kennedy, of Philadelphia.

HON. HARMAK DENNY. Mr. Denny was born at Pittsburgh, Pa., May 13, 1794. He was the eldest son of Maj. Ebenezer Denny, a revolutionary patriot and first mayor of Pittsburgh. His mother, Nancy (Wilkins) Denny, was a daughter of Capt. John Wilkins, also of revolutionary fame, and a sister of William Wilkins, United States senator, minister to Russia, and secretary of war. He was named for Gen. Harnar, a bosom friend and brother officer of the father. He was educated at Dickinson College, where he graduated in 1815, and read law and was admitted to the bar in November, 1816. He was subsequently taken into partnership with Henry Baldwin, with whom he had studied, and who afterward became a judge of the United States supreme court. Mr. Denny soon attained a high rank as a lawyer, and was intrusted with responsible positions in state and nation. He was elected to the state legislature, where he exercised a commanding influence. He was elected a member of the national Congress, in which body he served from Dec. 7, 1839, to March 3, 1837. In 1837 he was elected a member of the convention called to revise the constitution of Pennsylvania, and in that body, composed, as it was, of the ablest men in the state, he labored with untiring zeal and industry, and was gratified with seeing many of the provisions which he advocated incorporated in that instrument. Perceiving the necessity to the prosperity of his native city for enlarged means of communication with the seaboard, he strongly advocated the construction of the Pennsylvania railroad, and subsequently became president of the Pittsburgh & Steubenville railroad. He encouraged the importation and improvement of farm-stock and the use of improved implements in agriculture. The cause of education found in him an unswerving friend. He was a trustee of the Western University of Pennsylvania, and one of the board of examiners, as also a director of the Western Theological Seminary in Allegheny City. He was elected in 1848 a member of the American Philosophical society. In 1850 he was nominated to fill the unexpired term in Congress caused by the resignation of Moses Hampton, but declined. He was a member of the convention which elected Governor Harrison president in 1834. In early life he became a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh, during the ministry of Rev. Dr. Herron, and being possessed of an ample fortune in addition to his eminent talents and piety, it rendered his church relation one of great usefulness. On April 12, 1839, he was ordained a ruling elder, which position he held till the close of his life. In the church sessions and higher courts his deliverances, though modestly given, commanded great respect. At the inauguration of the Allegheny county auxiliary of the American Bible society, in 1818, he was elected its first president. While a member of Congress he was an active member of the congressional prayer-meeting.

He married, Nov. 25, 1817, Miss Elizabeth F. O'Hara, daughter of Gen. James and Mary (Carson) O'Hara, and their children and several of their grandchildren have followed in the pious footsteps of their parents. Mr. Denny's life was not a long one, but an eminently active and useful one. After a lingering and painful illness he died, Jan. 29, 1853, in the fifty-eighth year of his age.

The following paragraph from the "Presbyterian Encyclopedia," from which many of the facts contained in this memoir have been drawn, may with propriety close this sketch: "His character was well established and symmetrical. No one ever questioned his rigid integrity, his profound sense of honor and honesty, the moral purity of his life or the perfect sincerity of his religious professions. He was a person, too, of very prepossessing features, whose appearance, however, had become prematurely venerable. He was erect and gentlemanly in his bearing, and though somewhat reserved and dignified, yet a man of genuine modesty and amiability, entirely free from all pretension and eminently kind and affable. In the several spheres of life—domestic, social, civil and ecclesiastical—he was truly and impressively a good man, and his life was without reproach."

Maj. Ebenezer Denny. Ebenezer Denny, an officer in the revolutionary war, in the expeditions of Harmar and St. Clair against the western Indians, and in the war of 1812, was born at Carlisle, Cumberland county, Pa., on the 11th of March, 1761, being the eldest son of William Denny and Agnes (Parker) Denny. The mother was possessed of marked energy and intelligence, and a devout Christian. She was accustomed to attribute the preservation of her son amid perils by sea and in the hour of battle to a gracious providence, but her friends, to the fervent prayers of that pious mother. At the early age of thirteen he was intrusted with dispatches for the commandant at Fort Pitt, crossing the Alleghany mountains alone, lying out in the woods at night. He was described at this time as "a slender, fair, blue-eyed, red-haired boy." In two of these expeditions across the mountains he was chased into Fort Loudon by the Indians. For a time he was assistant at the Carlisle store at Carlisle, but learning that a letter of marque was about to sail from Philadelphia for the West Indies, he shipped as a volunteer. In the stirring encounters with the enemy he was always so brave and trustworthy that he was promoted to command the quarter-deck. He was about to ship for a second voyage when he received a commission as ensign in the 1st Pennsylvania regiment in the continental army, which he promptly accepted, abandoning his purpose of further following the sea. The army was now on the march to shut up Cornwallis at Yorktown and work the beginning of the end of the Revolution. Near Williamsburg his regiment had an encounter with the British partisan Simcoe. In his journal Denny says: "There the first time saw wounded men; the sight sickened me." As the American army closes around the British, he says: "Army encamped on the bank of the James; part of French fleet in full view." On the 14th of September he says: "Gen. Washington arrived; our brigade was paraded to receive him. Officers all pay their respects. He stands in the door, takes every man by the hand; the officers all pass in receiving his salute and shake. This the first time I had seen the general." Siege-operations were at once commenced; the fighting became very warm on all sides, and the siegeworks were pushed with great vigor. "Easy digging," he says; "light sandy ground. A shelf from one of the French mortars set fire to a British frigate; she burned to the water's edge and blew up; made the earth shake." On the 17th, he says: "Had the British of the parapet dropped one grenade, it would have mounted the enemy's parapet, and beat a parley, and immediately an officer, holding up a white handkerchief, made his appearance. An officer from our lines ran and met the other, and tied the handkerchief over his eyes," and thus was that great event, the surrender of Cornwallis, soon accomplished. When the terms of capitulation were definitively settled, Capt. Le Beuf, on account of the first American flag upon the British parapet. He was subsequently with Gen. St. Clair in the Carolinas, and at Charleston during its investment and after its evacuation; but hostilities were now substantially over, and the long, dreary revolutionary war was at an end. In the subsequent campaigns against the western Indians, conducted by Clark, Harmar and St. Clair, Maj. Denny bore a conspicuous and at times confidential part, being adjutant to Harmar and aid-de-camp to St. Clair. In the signal and disastrous defeat of the army under Gen. St. Clair on the 4th of November, 1791, Maj. Denny was everywhere in the midst of danger and death, but escaped unharmed. When all was over and the surviving remnants of the army had been brought off, Maj. Denny was dispatched to carry intelligence of the great disaster to Gen. Washington, then president. The general was entertaining a party at dinner that evening, and sent his secretary to receive the dispatch, but the aid refused to deliver it to the hands of any but Washington in person, such being his order. When the president had read far enough to discover the nature of the bad news he broke into a violent passion, and it is asserted that some very bad words escaped the lips of our Washington. In 1794 Denny was commissioned captain, and dispatched in command of a detachment, to protect the commissioners in laying out the town of Presque Isle, now Erie: but he was turned back on a journey to the Seneca nation, at the instance of objections by representatives of the Six Nations to having this point occupied at that time. Maj. Denny had married, on the 1st of July, 1793, Miss Nancy Wilkins, a daughter of Capt. John Wilkins, Sr., originally of Carlisle, but now of Pittsburgh. During the years 1793-96 he resided with his family on his farm, six miles from the city up the Monongahela river. While here he was a candidate for the legislature, but was defeated. In 1796 he was elected one of the commissioners of Allegheny county, when he returned to Pittsburgh, having disposed of his farm. In 1803 he was elected as the first treasurer of the county, and again in 1808. In 1804 he was appointed a director of the branch of the Bank of Pennsylvania, established that year at Pittsburgh, the first bank west of the mountains. He was one of the original members of the Society of the Cincinnati. Maj. Denny was a prominent member of the First Presbyterian Church of Pitts- burgh, was one of its trustees, was the first president of the "Moral Society," formed in 1806, was influential in securing the establishment of the Western Theological school in Allegheny City, and Mrs. Eichbaum remembers Mr. Denny and her father, Mr. Johnston, sitting at the door of the church to receive the contributions of the worshippers as they entered, an old Scotch custom. On the 1st of May, 1806, Mrs. Denny died, in her thirty-first year, leaving three sons, Harmar, William, and St. Clair. Maj. Denny, the youngest an infant, which survived but a few days. In the war of 1812 Maj. Denny was commissary of purchases for troops on the Erie and Niagara frontier, pushing forward supplies in emergencies, though at great personal pecuniary sacrifice, waiving the thirty days' limit allowed him by his contract. When the city of Pittsburgh was incorporated, on the 18th of March, 1816, he was elected its first mayor. In the summer of 1823, while on a visit with his only daughter to Niagara, he was taken ill, and with difficulty reached his home, where he died on the 21st of July, 1822, in the sixty-first year of his age.

WILLIAM EICHBAUM. William Eichbaum, one of the most prominent of the early citi- zens of Pittsburgh, was born at Monte Cenis, Burgundy, June 25, 1757, and died at his residence, 139 Wylie street, on Sabbath morning, Dec. 30, 1806, in his eightieth year. His father, William Peter Eichbaum, came to the United States just before the French revolution. His life had been an eventful one. Born at Altenach, Saxony, his wife an Englishwoman, having secured the farm to them, he had immigrated to Burgundy, at the invitation of Louis XVI, to assist in establishing glass-manufactories in that province. Having immigrated to Philadelphia in 1793, he crossed the Allegheny mountains in 1797, and became a resident of Pittsburgh and manager of the glassworks just then erected by O'Hara & Craig below Jones' ferry; on the south bank of the Monongahela river, thus standing among the foremost of the pioneers, and notably of the German pio- neers of the immense business now carried on in Pittsburgh and vicinity in the manufacture of glass. The son, William, from being the first apprentice to the bookbinding business in Pittsburgh, in the establishment of Cramer & Spear, became a partner in the firm. Before steamboats were invented he voyaged with Mr. Cramer to Louisville in an open boat. The firm connected printing and book-publishing with the bindery, thus furnishing reading-matter to the new settlements. Tales, religious works and books of travel were among their publications, copies being still occasionally met with. Mr. Eichbaum was deeply concerned for the business prosperity of his adopted city, and freely invested his means in enterprises which would bring to it commercial advantages, in the commission business with S. P. Von Bonnhorst, in the Point Steam Mill Cracker Bakery, and in the foundry business with Mr. McNairy. He was also a stockholder in fire-insurance companies in Pittsburgh.

But beyond question the most important of the business enterprises in which he was engaged was that of securing the slackwater navigation of the Monongahela river. Without it, Pittsburgh could never have made such rapid strides in growth and business prosperity as it has. It is in part the realization of that dream which Washington fondly indulged in, of uniting the navigation of the Potomac with that of the Ohio. As early as March 24, 1817, an act was passed authorizing the incorporation of a company. But the majority of the citizens, at that early day, was skeptical as to the feasibility of such a scheme as little short of lunatics. But Mr. Eichbaum was one of those who never yielded, in his devotion to an enterprise which he regarded as feasible, and which would prove useful to the public. Hence, he allowed no discouragement to daunt him in his efforts, and with his associates, Thomas and John P. Bakewell, Morgan Robertson and Alfred Curling, he was unceasing in studying the methods of procedure, and in preparing for the public press skillfully devised paragraphs which should lead the minds of his fellow-citizens in its favor. Finally, after the lapse of twelve years, in 1839, a survey of the project was authorized, and seven years later, in 1836, the final act of incorporation was passed, and what at the outset had been regarded as a wild and visionary idea became a reality, leading in its train prosperity and riches untold. In recognition of his valuable services in bringing the enterprise to a successful issue he was honored with the position of the first president of the company after its permanent organization.

Mr. Eichbaum enjoyed the confidence and esteem of the public in a remarkable degree. He was of the committee appointed by the citizens for the reception of Lafayette on his visit to Pittsburgh in 1824. For many years he was the efficient head of the fire department. On the occasion of the centennial celebration of the birth of Washington he was made chairman of the committee to conduct it. From 1823 to 1833 he held the position of postmaster of Pittsburgh, and it was while holding this office that his generous and accommodating disposition won for him that endearing esteem which he continued to enjoy through life, and which has been the theme of extravagant panegyric among those who recall his goodness of heart since his death. He was elected to and retained in each branch of the city council as long as eligible, and then transferred, by the votes of the people, alternately for twenty-two consecutive years. In 1858 he was elected city treasurer, and held the office until his decease, in 1866, a period of eight years. To return to his business relations, in the great fire of April 10, 1845, Mr. Eichbaum, who was now possessed of an ample fortune, was stricken with almost overpowering force, losing nearly everything he had. "He met the consequences, however," says a writer of the public press at the time of his death, "with fewer regrets than would be possible to most men. He had large resources in his conscious honor, in the esteem of his fellow-citizens, the companionship of his thoughts, books and friends, a mind stored with principles and facts, and trained to reflection and large and practical views of divine providence, which enabled him to discern blessings in the disguise of adversities. His experiences of Christianity were, though private, eminently devout. Accustomed to private devotion, and expressing his freedom from the fear of death, since Christ was such a Savior, he had been long accustomed to look on his dissolution with composure."

Mr. Eichbaum displayed marked inventive genius. To his active brain is due the machine that supplied faint-ruled letter-paper in the west. At first he was unable to prepare his ink properly to take the right effect. Befriending an expert bookbinder from the old world on his way to Louisville, who knew the secret, but who was bound by his profession to guard the knowledge, or only to impart it on payment of a stipulated extravagant price, he said to Mr. Eichbaum: "I can not reveal the secret, and you have not the money to pay for it; but you have acted the good Samaritan by me, and I will give you a hint. Mix with your ink a certain small part of a very large animal." For many days his brain was employed to find out what that "small part of a very large animal" could be. Passing through the market one day he beheld him of oxgall. Procuring one and incorporating it with his ink, it caused it to fly and be diffused over the paper. He finally had the secret. Mr. Eichbaum also discovered the secret of manufacturing Russia sheet-iron, and held the patent-right of the planished rolls, but, owing to his advanced age, never made use of the invention. In conjunction with Henry McCarthy, he introduced the exceedingly useful invention of patent locks, used in the Sault Ste. Marie ship-canal, the Monongahela slackwater, and the dams of Green and Duck rivers, Ky.

In closing this brief notice we quote, from the writer above referred to, the following paragraph: "His venerable form has long been a landmark in our community to a younger generation of citizens that have grown up around him, while so many of those who were his contemporaries, and who with him helped to create the history of these two cities, have passed away before him. For sixty years of active manhood he has been identifying with the wonderful developments of Pittsburgh and its vicinity. He lived here, as boy and man, seventy years. He came when ten years old, when Port Pitt was a small outpost of civilization, containing but ninety-seven houses. He saw it expand into a great and populous mart of civilization, commerce and manufactures, and was among the foremost of the men of his generation who helped by their intelligence and enterprise to make it such, and to create the wealth that employs and feeds these hundreds of thousands. Looking back over this long and eventful history, he could have said, with Aeneas, "Omnia vidii, pars fui."

Josiah Copley was the fourth child of Samuel and Jane (Sibbet) Copley, and was born in Shippensburg, Pa., Sept. 20, 1803. His grandfather was a woolen-manufacturer in Leeds, England, and a man of broad views of sympathizing with the colonists in their struggle against the mother-country. His four sons settled in this country while young, the elder two, John and Samuel, arriving in 1792. Samuel did business for a short time in Massachusetts, and went from there to Pittsburgh, Pa., purchasing property which is now in the heart of the city. Desiring to return to England, he sold out, but, changing his mind, he entered into the manufacture of textile fabrics with his brother John, in Shippensburg, Pa., where he was married, his wife being a North-of-Ireland Presbyterian, and a woman of strong character, to whose teachings and example Josiah attributed much of his own religious nature. Shortly after the birth of Josiah his father engaged in the woolen-manufacture in Blairsville, in which he was unsuccessful. This fact preyed upon his mind, and he died in 1813, in poverty.

Josiah, in 1818, was bound out to John McCahan, of Indiana, Pa., who printed and published a small weekly journal called the American. The boy was at this time in his fifteenth year, and was bound to serve until he was twenty-one. For the first three years he was engaged to spend one-half his time in carrying the mail on horseback, his employer being a mail-contractor as well as a printer. This work was sometimes dangerous, often disagreeable, owing to the furious storms, high water and similar characteristics of a wild country. The experience, however, was valuable to the young man, as it induced much of the meditative habit of thought and power of close observation which were marked characteristics of Mr. Copley. In 1825 the young printer entered into business in Kittanning in partnership with John Croll, publishing the Kittanning Gazette. This he continued for eight years, the last four alone. During this period, in 1830, he was married to Mrs. Margaret Chadwick Haas, daughter of his uncle, Mr. Sibbet, and physicians of Philadelphia. The Kittanning paper was a success from the start, and determined Mr. Copley's career, and for the remainder of his life he was always connected with newspapers, both secular and religious. He gained most prominence from his connection with the Pittsburgh Gazette, which began in 1838 and lasted two years, when his health failed and he removed to Appleby Manor. Here he superintended a farm and a manufacturing establishment, but continued to write for various newspapers, and also issued a number of pamphlets. At this time he made a collection of his religious writings, under the title of "Thoughts of Favored Hours." From 1850 to 1852 he was again on the staff of the Pittsburgh Gazette, but ill health again compelled him to retire. In 1860 he again removed to Pittsburgh.

The rebellion now broke out, and Mr. Copley had four sons in the Union army. One, John Sibbet, fell at the battle of South Mountain, Md., in September, 1863; another son, Albert, was wounded at the battle of Stone river, Tennessee, taken prisoner, and died from exposure and privation during captivity, and now lies in an unknown grave; yet another son was taken prisoner at Chickamauga in 1863, and went through the untold horrors of Libby prison and Castle Thunder, Danville and Andersonville, as well as prisons in North and South Carolina.

Meanwhile Mr. Copley had again begun work upon the Pittsburgh Gazette staff, winning a wide reputation as a clear and strong writer. He remained in this position until advancing years compelled his retirement, but even afterward he continued his contributions to the Gazette, as the spirit moved him. He became better known, however, as a contributor to the religious press, writing much for the Presbyterian Banner, United Presbyterian and other papers. He possessed a wonderful command of language, and though slow of speech could write rapidly and without needing correction, always employing the purest English. In politics, Mr. Copley was a conservative abolitionist before the war, and afterward a republican; he also took a strong interest in the temperance cause. In religious belief he was a Presbyterian, uniting with that church in early life. He was not bigoted, however, but recognized the several evangelical denominations as only other divisions of one grand army.

So late as Christmas, 1884, Mr. Copley published in the United Presbyterian a paper entitled "A Crippled Translation," in which he set forth his belief that the 71st and 73rd Psalms were revelations of both the resurrection of the body and the consciousness of the everlasting existence of the soul. In 1878 he published a volume entitled "Gatherings in Beulah." Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" seems to have been, next to the Bible, the book that Mr. Copley most loved and read.

In November, 1884, after a life of more than fourscore years, it was seen that the end was near. As his body failed his spirit seemed to grow stronger and his intelligence to shine brighter. He died in the evening of March 2, 1885, his only fear being that he was too anxious for his release and for his entrance into that better world he habitually contemplated as his final home. In 1886 a collection from Mr. Copley's writings was made, with an introduction by Rev. S. H. Kellogg, D. D., and published by A. D. F. Randolph, under the title "Gathered Sheaves." There are sixty-nine different articles in this work, most of them being of a religious character. Among those of a secular character is one entitled "Recollections of Boyhood," in which Mr. Copley sets forth many of his peculiar experiences, going back as far as 1810. Other papers in the volume are somewhat singular for speculations and investigations into primeval and ancient history. An article on "Scriptural Revision," giving a history of the English Bible and of the work of translation in different hands, is important as setting forth his judgment concerning the great value of the ancient interpretation of the Bible. Mr. Copley's mind was broad enough to entertain ideas upon a great variety of different subjects, and his intelligence shrewd enough to make his views on the subjects he chose of importance to the reading community. Taking him all in all, not many general writers for the press have gained so high a reputation for dignified, conscientious and noble work as Josiah Copley.

Hon. Thomas Mellon. Thomas Mellon, one of the oldest and best-known citizens of Pittsburgh, was born Feb. 3, 1813, in the Parish Cappagh, County Tyrone, Ireland. His ancestors on the father's side were from Scotland, and on the mother's side they were Hollanders, farmers on both sides, who emigrated to the north of Ireland in the times of Cromwell and the Prince of Orange. They were noteworthy only for their thrift, industry and intelligence. Mr. Mellon's parents left Ireland and arrived in the United States in 1818, when he was but five years of age, and settled on a farm near Murrysville, Westmoreland county, Pa. He learned to read at his mother's knee, and to her affectionate care and wise counsels he attributes in great measure whatever success in life he has achieved. Until he reached the age of thirteen the only schooling he had was about four months each winter in the country school, as was the custom of that day in the rural districts. In his thirteenth year, however, his father allowed him a session at the Westmoreland county academy. Every county at that time had its academy, which then held the same relation to the common schools which the high-schools do now. The principal of the academy, Thomas Will, was a fine classical scholar, and instilled into his pupil higher aspirations than comported with the drudgery of the farm. And it was at the critical time when the important question—vitality important to every boy—pressed on him, the question of occupation for life.

His father was decidedly in favor of farming. He considered it the occupation of all others most honorable and independent, as well as most useful, and prided himself on being able to give each of his children a farm when the time should come for starting them out for themselves. It was therefore painful to him to find his oldest son averse to his favorite theory. The son was loth to disappoint his father, however, and it was not until in his seventeenth year that a fixed determination was arrived at.

In 1833 he entered the Latin school of Rev. Jonathan Gill, in his own neighborhood, his father having removed to Allegheny county. Here he prepared himself for college, but his time was divided between farm-labor and Latin grammar, committing to memory the rules of syntax while following the plow. And to this promiscuous kind of rugged mental and muscular training, which he received from childhood till nearly twenty-five years of age, he attributes his uniform good health through life and vigor of body and mind now in his old age. In 1834 he entered the Western University of Pennsylvania, then in the imposing stone edifice on Fourth avenue which was destroyed by the great fire of 1845. The institution was in its prime, under the government of the celebrated scholar and educator, Robert Bruce, D. D. Here he soon found it so easy to keep up with his class that in order to gain time he entered as a law student in the office of Hon. Charles Shaler, the leading lawyer of the Pittsburgh bar at the time, and he was admitted to the practice of law shortly after he graduated from the college with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He graduated in September, 1837, and was admitted to the bar in December, 1838. His rise at the bar was rapid, and the character of his practice of the best and most lucrative sort. The best evidence of this was the staying qualities of his clients. When he went on the bench twenty years afterward nearly all those of the business-men of the city who had become his clients were still such.

In 1843 he was united in marriage with Miss Sarah J. Negley, the daughter of one of the early pioneers of the East End, and with her acquired an important addition to his increasing wealth; but the far more valuable fortune which she brought him were the sterling qualities of a good wife and mother. To union with her he attributes his great share of domestic happiness. The fruit of the marriage was eight children, four of whom are surviving, and among the most energetic and prosperous business-men of the city.

In 1859 Mr. Mellon's law practice had become so onerous as to threaten his health, and his friends advised him to accept the nomination for judge of the common pleas court No. 1. He was nominated and elected, and took his seat on the bench on the 29th of December of that year. He filled the position with great satisfaction to the bar and the public to the end of the judicial term of ten years, and was urged to become a candidate for re-election, but he considered that to continue in office for another term would be too great a sacrifice of his private interests. Possessed of considerable estate, acquired by care and industry and judicious investments while at the bar, and the estate derived by his wife, he could not give his property the care and attention which it demanded so long as he remained on the bench, and besides he had now two sons fresh from school and verging into manhood who were urgent for employment in some regular business, and he desired to be with them. "Their Mentor and Telemachus and ever-faithful friend." So he declined a renomination, and left the bench Dec. 29, 1869. Upon his retirement, the bar treated him to a sumptuous banquet, an honor before that time not conferred on a retiring judge of the lower courts. He did not go back to the bar, though he occasionally joined in the trial of suits where his interest or the interests of his particular friends were involved; and in 1870 he established the banking-house of T. Mellon & Sons, which is now one of the most substantial private banks of the city, and is under the management of his sons Andrew and Dick.

It is said of Judge Mellon, what can be said of few others, that throughout his long life he has never failed of success in any enterprise he ever seriously undertook. There are others who became suddenly possessed of greater wealth, but his fortune is the slow and steady growth of well-directed enterprise. In politics he was a republican, but never a zealous partisan, always voting for the candidates he deemed most deserving, and ever a vigorous opposer of bossism or ring-rule. In religion a Presbyterian, according to the faith of his fathers, but of rather more liberal views, holding the Bible in its present state to be incomplete; that the great first volume, the book of nature, is wanting and should be restored to its proper place in the estimation of the religious world; that nature was the first and always present and infallible revelation of God to man.

Notwithstanding his burdensome professional and private labors, he was at all times a great reader, and keeps abreast of the times in philosophy and literature of every substantial variety, and now, in his seventy-seventh year, is believed to be as energetic and vigorous mentally and physically and as sound of judgment as at any former period of his life.

RICHARD EDWARDS. A well-known and prominent figure among the business-men of Pittsburgh subsequent to 1830 was Richard Edwards, who was born Jan. I, 1803, at Binghamton, N. Y., where he spent his youth. He came to Pittsburgh in June, 1824, and entered, as a clerk, the dry-goods house of William Bell, whose wife was a distant relative. His energy, good address and business tact brought him rapid advancement, and in 1838 he became a partner in the house. The firm did a large and successful business in Western Pennsylvania, and after fourteen years, in 1842, he withdrew, to engage in the manufacture of iron and nails with James Wood and William and James McKnight, under firm name of Wood, Edwards & McKnights. After six years of prosperous business the firm was dissolved, and Mr. Edwards engaged in the manufacture of locks, latches and platform scales with David A. Morris, under firm name of Edwards & Morris. He continued in this business, with some change of partners, until 1856, when he removed with his family to Dubuque, Iowa, where he became a member of the firm of Chislett, Buckley & Co., who carried on an extensive business in hardware and iron throughout Northern Iowa. In 1862 he returned to Pittsburgh, and embarked in the insurance business, securing the agency of several of the largest companies of the country. In conjunction with his son, Ogden M. Edwards, under firm name of R. Edwards & Son, a large business was built up, in which he continued till his death. Mr. Edwards was universally respected for his energy, good business capacity, sound judgment and unwavering integrity. He had, in a remarkable degree, the confidence of all who knew him.

But it was through the religious side of his character that his influence was most strongly felt. Descended from a long line of devout ancestors, being a great-grandson of Jonathan Edwards, the renowned theologian, the religious element in his character was the controlling force in his life. He was one of the original members of the Third Presbyterian Church, organized in 1833, and its first officer, having been elected a ruling elder before a pastor had been chosen. He was for many years superintendent of the Sunday-school, labored energetically in the church work, and contributed most liberally to its pecuniary support. Probably no one, except the pastor, did more than he to make this church the power which it speedily became. On settling in Dubuque he took an active part in organizing and building the Second Presbyterian Church there, and was chosen an elder. On his return to Pittsburgh in 1862 he resumed his connection with the Third Presbyterian Church, and was again chosen an elder. In May, 1873, on changing his residence to the suburbs of the city, he became a member of the Shady Side Presbyterian Church, and continued in that relation to his death. As a Christian man Mr. Edwards was marked by the unwavering steadfastness of his belief in the vital doctrines of Christianity; by the governing of his life and conduct by its principles; by uniting energy in its service; by an unusual liberality in money subscriptions, guided not by impulse but by principle; and by a cheerful readiness to obey the call of duty at whatever cost. One who knew him well said: "I never knew him to hesitate in the-performance of duty, however hard. He never seemed to think of himself."

In 1838 he married Catharine Pond May, a sister of the wife of William Bell, his partner in business. In her he had a helpmeet worthy, as wife, mother and Christian, of all the affection and honor which husband and children could bestow. They reared a family of seven children, all of whom became members of the Presbyterian Church, and one, Maurice Wright Edwards, entered the ministry. Naturally a leader, he was often appealed to for advice and assistance, and never in vain. Although profoundly religious, he was no ascetic, but enjoyed keenly all the innocent pleasures of life. Especially did he delight in social gatherings, where his frank, cordial manner, strong sense of humor, and warm human sympathies made his presence a joy. The bare facts of his life give very little idea of the influence for good which he exercised over others, due to an assemblage of qualities unusual in one person, combined with an intense earnestness, which affected powerfully all who knew him. Some of Pittsburgh's most successful men of a later generation could cheerfully acknowledge how much they owe to the stimulus of his example. He died on the 18th of September, 1884, in the eighty-second year of his age, leaving a memory fragrant with Christian faith and righteous living.

Rev. Francis Herron, D. D. Francis Herron was born near Shippensburg, Cumberland county, Pa., June 28, 1774. He was of Scotch-Irish descent, and received his early training from his pious parents and in the schools of the period. In due course he entered Dickinson College, then under the presidency of Rev. Dr. Nisbet, and graduated May 5, 1794. His heart had already been touched by the grace of God. Accordingly studied theology under his pastor, Rev. Robert Cooper, and was licensed to preach by the Carlow presbytery Oct. 4, 1797. Ordained service for his divine Master was performed while on a tour into the then western wilds of Pennsylvania and Ohio, which extended as far as Chillicothe, Ohio. Stopping for the night at a tavern at Six-Mile run, and it being known that he was a clergyman, he was prevailed on to tarry till the Sabbath. This he consented to do, and here, under the shadow of an elm tree, the young disciple dispensed the word of life to the few scattered pioneers and their families who could be gathered in. Two nights he encamped with the Indians, who had quite a numerous settlement at Marietta and vicinity. On his return he preached at Pittsburgh to a congregation of eighteen persons in a log structure which occupied the identical ground where the First Presbyterian church now stands, and so primitive was the house that the swallows, which had built in the eaves, invaded the premises, and sailed about the heads of his hearers. He assisted Rev. John McMillan at Chartiers and Buffalo churches in revival services. At the latter the people would have prevailed upon him to become their pastor, but he declined. Returning to the Cumberland valley, he was settled over the Rocky Spring Church, having been ordained and installed April 9, 1800. His services among the pioneers of the west, and in the revival services in conjunction with that devoted servant, Dr. McMillan, proved eminently useful to him. He systematized his labors, holding regular prayer-meetings, establishing a bible-class and giving catechetical instruction. For ten years he labored here. In the meantime, by the death of Rev. Robert Steel, the pulpit of the First Church had become vacant. On the occasion of a visit to Pittsburgh Mr. Herron was invited to conduct the services here. His fervent style of preaching pleased the people, and they gave him a unanimous call to their pastorate, which he accepted, and was admitted to the Redstone Presbytery on June 18, 1811.

Pittsburgh at this period was beginning to assume great commercial and manufacturing prosperity, but the spiritual life of its people was at a low ebb. The young pastor attempted to establish a prayer-meeting, but, strange as it may seem, some of his congregation opposed it. To avoid seeming to disregard their wishes, the meetings were not held in the church, but in a schoolhouse. But this did not satisfy them, and he was finally waited on and told that these meetings must stop. His reply was characteristic of the godly man. He said: "Gentlemen, these meetings will not stop; you are at liberty to go as you please, but I also have the liberty to worship God according to the dictates of my conscience, none daring to molest or make me afraid." From that day a greater degree of zeal and devotion marked the daily living of pastor and people.

Mr. Herron was not only a devoted man, but a common-sense man of affairs. A heavy debt, for those days, hung over the church property. Finally, on December, 1813, it was sold by the sheriff. The young pastor bid it in, on his own account, for $2,819. He then sold a portion of the lot to the Bank of Pittsburgh for $8,000, and after paying the purchase-money turned over the balance, $189, to the church treasury. In 1825 the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church resolved on establishing a theological seminary somewhere in the west. Dr. Herron advocated its location in Allegheny City, and was successful in his efforts. For its establishment and successful operation a vast amount of labor and judiciously directed effort had to be endured. From this he did not shrink, and to none more than to him is the success of this enterprise due. In 1827 Dr. Herron was elected moderator of the general assembly at its session in Philadelphia, an honor well deserved, for he was now in the full maturity of his powers and in the development of manly strength and beauty. And now, more than ever before, were his ministrations blessed, as the revivals of 1832 and 1835 amply attest. Until 1850 he continued to labor; but now, having attained the age of seventy-six, he felt that he should be relieved, and accordingly pressed his resignation upon his people. This they consented to grant, provided he would accept of one thousand dollars yearly as long as he lived. He died on Dec. 6, 1850, in the eighty-sixth year of his life.

In the centennial volume of the church he so long served is the following summing up of his character, with which this sketch may properly be closed: 'As preacher, careful in preparation, biblical, experimental and always impressive. As pastor, affectionate, accessible, persuasive and progressive in methods. A presbyter, a born leader in presbytery and synod, and moderator of the general assembly in 1827. As president, directing the board of directors of the Western Theological Seminary from its first meeting till his death. As citizen, devoted to the city's interest, jealous of its morals, helpful in extending its churches, founding the first Moral Association, and holding the first temperance meetings. Dr. Herron's piety was marked. It was early, tender, strong, equable, yet stimulated by revivals, characterized no less by prayer than by active zeal. He was pre-eminent a man to mold the times. There are but two things in Pittsburgh,' was once said, 'Dr. Herron and the devil, and the doctor seems to be getting the advantage.' In personal majesty of presence unequaled, in influence commanding and magnetic. Equal to emergencies in church or city, with pronounced convictions and well-matured opinions, sound judgment and warm sympathies, of remarkable courage, and great practical wisdom. When he died all mourned as for a father. Business and even the courts were suspended in his honor. Tributes of every description were paid to his worth. The tablet erected by a grateful people in 1874, the centennial of his birth, bears these closing words: 'Revered by the church he served and the city he adored.'

WILLIAM McCULLY. Prominent among the old business-men of Pittsburgh, whose careers of usefulness and honor have now been brought to a close by death, appears the name of William McCully. He was born near Shane's Castle, County Antrim, Ireland, about the year 1800. When a mere child he was brought to America by his parents, who settled in Chartiers township, near the house of Robert Woods. Shortly after the family removed to Jack's run, where his father, Thomas McCully, died, and was buried in Trinity churchyard. His tombstone is still standing.

William McCully received only the rudiments of an ordinary common-school education, and first began to learn the trade of a glass-blower with Thomas Bakewell, on the site of the present B. & O. R. R. depot, at the foot of Grant street, blowing flint-glass only. He learned to blow window-glass at the O'Hara works on the South Side, opposite the Point. In connection with Capt. John Hay, he erected a flint-glass factory at the foot of Nineteenth street, on Railroad street, and continued there until the works were submerged in the flood of 1839, when he withdrew, and Capt. Hay continued to operate them alone. In 1838 he built the factory now standing at the corner of Sixteenth and Liberty streets, where he made green and black bottles. In 1834 he became interested with William Johnsen in a window-glass factory at Monongahela City, and in 1836 the firm of William McCully & Co. was founded, consisting of William McCully and F. Lorenz, Thomas Wightman being admitted as a partner two years later. Subsequently a dissolution took place, and in 1850 Mr. McCully bought of F. Lorenz the stone factory known as the Sligo works, and in 1851 he tore it down and erected the first brick factory in Pittsburgh. The second was built in 1854. After the erection of the new factory Mr. McCully admitted his only son, John F. McCully, to partnership with him, under firm name of William McCully & Co. In 1852 Mark W. Watson became a member of the firm. John M. King joined the concern as a partner in 1855. In 1869 Mr. McCully died, and the business has since been successfully conducted by Messrs. Watson and King under the old firm name.

Mr. McCully was one of the fathers of the glass interest, and to the development of that industry devoted all of his energies. He was the first one to build a seven-stone wheel oven, for flattening glass, west of the Alleghany mountains. It was put up by a man named Klein, who was brought from New Jersey for the purpose. Mr. McCully was possessed of a strong character, a decided individuality, and was a man of unblemished integrity. He was interested in many of the institutions of his city, and was director, but took an especial interest in the Farmers' Deposit & Exchange Bank. His kindly disposition endeared him to all with whom he came in contact, and the news of his demise inspired many hearts with the feeling of a personal loss. In his domestic relations he was peculiarly happy, and he did all that he could to make his home life cheerful and lovable. He married Martha Zelley, a native of Mt. Holly, N. J., and a representative of the good old Quaker families of Burlington county. Eight children were born to this union, of whom only four attained to years of maturity: John F. was the only son; Margaret became the wife of Mark W. Watson; Jane L. is the wife of John M. King; Lavinia married Herbert Newton, of Newport, R. I.; Mrs. King alone survives.

WILLIAM FREW, only son of Samuel and Elizabeth (McCully) Frew, was born Jan. 10, 1826, in a house that stood until 1880 on the corner of Liberty and Wood streets, Pittsburgh. He completed his education at the Western University of Pennsylvania, at Pittsburgh, and was afterward employed in the wholesale grocery-house of his uncle, James McCully, located on Wood street, between Liberty and Sixth avenue. Later he was taken into partnership and formed one of the firms of James McCully & Co. Aug. 4, 1853, he married Martha Elliott, second daughter of Joseph and Sarah A. Long, and niece of Reuben Miller, Jr. In 1859, when petroleum oil was first discovered in paying quantities, he and Charles Lockhart, also connected with the McCully house, formed the partnership known for the next twenty-one years as Lockhart & Frew. This firm was among the pioneers in the production and refining of petroleum, and built the first Pittsburgh refinery, the Brilliant Oil-works. A successful business was done was for seventeen years, and when, in 1876, the Standard Oil company was formed, the firm of Lockhart & Frew became part of that organization, Charles Lockhart being elected president of the Standard Oil company, of Pittsburgh, and William Frew vice-president. After a sickness of five weeks he died March 9, 1880, leaving a widow and one son, William Frew.

At the time of his death he was a member of the firms of Lockhart & Frew, Warden, Frew & Co., Philadelphia, and Hubbard Bakewell & Co., Pittsburgh, besides being connected with many other business enterprises. He was one of the earliest believers, in Pittsburgh, in the homeopathic method of treating disease, and for a number of years prior to his death had served as president of the board of trustees of the homeopathic hospital. In 1870, much against his will, he was nominated by the better class of citizens on a Reform Platform for Congress, but, declining to secure his election by what seemed to him questionable and undignified methods, was defeated by his opponent, Gen. James S. Negley. Prior to 1890 he was captain of the Keystone Rifles, a military organization of Pittsburgh, and, during the war was connected as major with the 15th regiment Pennsylvania state troops, into which the smaller organization had been merged. He was an exceedingly liberal and philanthropic man, giving freely to many religious, charitable and educational objects; a valued supporter of the Christian and sanitary commissions during the war; a firm friend of the Y. M. C. A.; a prominent member of the board of trustees of the Pennsylvania Female College of Pittsburgh, and chairman of the investing committee of the Western University of Pennsylvania. In business he was regarded as a man of excellent judgment and sterling integrity; in the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, of which he was a member, his advice and counsel were always recognized as carrying with them great weight. He was of good address, a pleasing public speaker, and thoroughly posted on all the questions of the day. He was a great lover of literature and art, had traveled extensively in the pauses of his busy life, in Europe and the far east, and had but just settled down to the enjoyment of well-earned rest when he was called away. As was said at the time, his death was a loss to his friends, to the city of Pittsburgh, and to the causes of charity, religion and education.

George Hogg, only son of John and Mary (Crisp) Hogg, was born June 22, 1854, in Cramlington, in the county of Northumberland, England. When twenty years of age (in 1864) he came to Brownsville, Pa., at the request of his uncle, William Hogg, where he established his home, and as a merchant created a very large and lucrative business.

On March 7, 1871, he married Mary A., eldest daughter of Judge Nathaniel Breeding, of Tower Hill farm, Luzerne township, Fayette county, Pa. To this marriage were born the following children: Mary, William, George Ewing, Nathaniel Breeding, John Thomas, Mary Ann (who married Felix R. Brunot), Elizabeth Ewing (Mrs. William S. Bissell), and James Breeding (lost Sept. 27, 1854, near Cape Race, by the foundering of the steamer Arctic, which collided with a French vessel).

By the integrity of his character and strict attention to business, George Hogg was eminently successful, and secured the esteem of the communities in which he lived. Though a great lover of his adopted country, he did not cease to be an Englishman, and always looked back with pleasure to the good old laws and institutions of his native land. In April, 1849, he removed to Allegheny City, Pa., and died there Dec. 5, 1859, from the sixty-fifth year of his age, on the property and in the house which he had purchased in an unfinished state of Alexander Brackenridge, Esq., which he completed, and wherein he spent the remainder of his years.

During his business career he, with his uncle, William Hogg, of Brownsville, Pa., established large business-houses in Pittsburgh as Breading & Hogg, in wholesale dry goods, and Dalzell, Taylor & Co., in wholesale groceries, and fifteen different establishments of merchandise and commission-houses in Ohio, together with a forwarding-house at Sandusky City, that state, with which was connected a number of vessels running on Lake Erie, and also a line of boats on the Ohio canal connected with their business houses at Newark, Ohio. Mr. Hogg, with the cooperation of others, aided materially in the building of the bridge over the Monongahela river at Brownsville and Bridgeport, and was one of the original stockholders and managers of the Monongahela Navigation company (slackwater), through whose enterprise the great body of the coal which is mined along the Monongahela river and exported finds its way to the southern cities, New Orleans in particular. In 1828 he erected the Brownsville Glassworks, and supervised their operations for some years, ultimately disposing of them.

He was one of the original corporators establishing the Allegheny Cemetery company, and a director in the Bank of Pittsburgh, an institution in which his uncle, William Hogg, was one of the original movers, established in 1810-14. Mr. Hogg was confirmed in his youth according to the usage of the Established Church of England, and through life was a consistent, devout and liberal member of that communion. By the record of Christ Church, Brownsville, we find the following:

In the year 1829 Rev. Mr. Clay succeeded Rev. Mr. Hogg as overseer of the congregation, as missionary of the Advance Society in Western Pennsylvania. He assisted to build a church upon the lot of ground which they already had in possession. July 27, 1830, twelve trustees were appointed: James Bowman, William Hogg, George Hogg, Robert Clarke, Charles Wheeler, John Wise, Basil Brasheer, Basil Brown, Charles Ford, Henry Stoop, Thomas Brown and Henry E. Gee. The secretary chosen upon this occasion was George Hogg. In 1833 the church-building was completed, and 1835 was caused to be erected a parsonage. Mr. Hogg was warden of this church until he left Brownsville, in 1843. When he came to Pittsburgh he and his family were connected with St. Andrew’s Church, where he was warden until his death. He was one of the incorporators of the Western Pennsylvania hospital, and his portrait, with that of his coadjutor in the establishment, is in the entrance hall.

A monument to his memory, executed jointly by the sculptor Henry K. Brown, of New York city, and the sculptor Piatti, a lofty plinth, mounted by a life-size figure of the Angel of the Resurrection, was erected in 1851 by his family in Allegheny cemetery, now in the city of Pittsburgh. Located near by is a cenotaph by Piatti, memorial of James B. Hogg, the son of George Hogg, who was lost on the ocean steamer Arctic.

Mr. Hogg, together with his uncle, and his successors, were instrumental in establishing seventy-six business-houses in Pennsylvania, Ohio and New York city.

The successful business side of Mr. Hogg’s character was not what impressed all who came in daily contact with him, but his beautiful, consistent Christian walk and conversation.

He seemed always to realize the omniscience and omnipresence of his God, and every action of his life indicated how gladly he chose to acknowledge the Lord in all his ways, and to give cheerfully back to him of that over which the Lord had made him the overseer.

The poor were sure to find in him a ready helper. At his death the universal feeling was one of holy and good man, that he had called from us to enter into a heavenly inheritance.

William H. Brown, for many years the leading and most successful coal-operator in Western Pennsylvania, was born in North Huntington township, Westmoreland county, Pa., Jan. 15, 1815. At an early age he started out in life for himself. He was first employed on the canal; worked for a time on a farm that is now in the corporate limits of Pittsburgh; dug coal in the winter; rose in a short time to the ownership of a horse and wagon, with which he delivered coal to his customers, and before long was employing a number of men and teams for the supplying of coal to Pittsburgh furnaces. In 1845 or 1846, when the roads were in a bad condition between Pittsburgh and his source of supplies at Minersville, the thought came to him that coal might be floated down the Monongahela at less cost and toil than to carry it in wagons. Not having the funds necessary to buy a boat, he borrowed the money and purchased a flat on credit. In a short time he was able to make a still greater venture, and in company with other parties purchased a mine in the second pool of the Monongahela river. A subsequent disagreement with his more conservative partners as to the management of the business caused an early dissolution, Mr. Brown selling out his interest in the enterprise. A local paper said of him:

In 1846 Mr. Brown formed a connection with Messrs. Lloyd & Brown, and the firm of Hogg, Brown & Cochran, was located in Pittsburgh, on the Monongahela. They began mining and operating in coal at the Nine-Mile run on the Mon. In 1847, Bishop Brown, Mr. Brown’s brother, was appointed a bishop, and the firm was dissolved. A short time after Mr. Brown’s brother’s departure, the business was transferred to Mrs. Brown, and the parties made a joint effort to start up still another business in the coal region, and secured the whole of it at Brownsville and Cincinnati, and reaping a large success in that line of trade. His business and reputation grew apace, and by steady progress in his chosen line of activity he soon found himself in the very front rank thereof, and he was recognized as one of the master-spirits of the trade. In 1850 Mr. Brown ventured on still another experiment that he would have been the chief in any of the coal-means were, in advance, moved to declare would be a failure. His new purpose was to send a tow of flats from Louisville to New Orleans. "Punish this dog," says one of the partners. "No coal had been floated to New Orleans instead of towed by steamers, but it was done with barge, a class of large keelboats, and the expense of the trips did away with the profits. Toward was accordingly in no favor among shippers of coal to the lower ports, even with the most substantial boats; and when Mr. Brown was about to send a tow of flatboats, or rather boxers, of light and shallow construction, he was considered to be wild." His "wildness" was that of successful inventors and pioneers in new paths of usefulness since the world began. He made the venture, it proved a success, and others were hasted to crowd into the new way he had opened. He sent twelve boats, carrying about 30,000 bushels of coal, with the steamer Grampus on one side and the General Larimer on the other. His son, Capt. San Brown, was in charge. The question was a stupendous one. The coal was disposed of at remunerative rates, and there was no loss to the cargo. Capt. Brown disposed of the flats, loaded his steamers with sugar and molasses, and came home in triumph. The keen vision of William H. Brown had been justified by the results, and a new outlet to the growing coal trade of Pittsburgh was opened.

With the widening of his business, Mr. Brown was compelled to increase his facilities. At first he hired his towing, but afterward purchased the General Larimer, which was the first towboat he ever owned. The first steamer built by him was the W. H. B., and he afterward built the Bee consisting of a boiler built over on her journeys up and down the river. At a later date he purchased the Collier and the Shark, which were added to his busy fleet. Every year that passed saw an increase in his operations. He soon became the acknowledged head of his department of the coal business, and his judgments were accepted in all matters connected with the trade. On the breaking out of the war he secured important contracts for the supplying of the government at Cairo and Memphis with coal. As the Mississippi was not navigable at this time he began to supply St. Louis with coal for her gasworks. It was not only a task of the most intense business activity with him, but one of close watchfulness and severe responsibility.

While delivering a cargo of coal for the use of Gen. Grant at Louisville, he was captured by Federal forces while on his way back, and came near being executed as a confederate spy. A dispatch from Gen. Buell, then in command at Louisville, Ky., saved him.
The exciting times of the war, the dangers of traffic in supplying fuel to the government forces within the lines of the enemy a considerable part of the time; supplying markets during a period of depression in which every cargo especially liable to capture, confiscation and destruction by armed forces, not only regular but guerrilla as well, to say nothing of the increasing dangers of navigation itself, were a state of affairs entirely congenial to his spirit of enterprise. It was attended with risks that other men did not dare to venture. The profit to be derived proportionate to the risks. He was successful. “Lucky” was the verdict of some, but those who were closest to his confidence are not backward in their testimony that there was something more than mere luck in such success. He knew the dangers, he faced them with nerve, handled his affairs with skill and in accordance with the ever-varying phases of the times; originator of his own plans, a copyist of none.

So extensive did his business become during the war that the impression gained some foothold that all his wealth was made by supplying the government. That by reason of his excellent management, tireless exertion and executive ability he made money from his government contracts can not be doubted—and these contracts were open to all persons in the business to bid for. It is true, there was nothing either disreputable or dishonorable in it. But it is not true. He was prosperous before the war. As an evidence of this it may be said that when Frey and Rees and Berger bought the rolling-mill at New Castle, Pa., a venture to which he paid no personal attention, he gave his check in payment for $100,000. Such an amount in one outside venture leaves no room to question that at this period, 1858 and 1859, he was justly accounted a wealthy man in the ordinary sense of that term, although of limited means compared with the accumulations he left at the time of his death, on October 12, 1875.

That William H. Brown was a remarkable man is well proven in the works he performed; and the great wealth of which he died possessed was the result of his own labor, sagacity and courage. He made the coal business a specialty, although in later years his capital was invested in worthy enterprises devoted to the development of the resources of Western Pennsylvania. Among the strong traits of his character were industry, untiring energy and a far-seeing business vision. That he had the nerve to take great risks is well demonstrated in what has gone before. His perseverance was a marvel, and his capacity for work seemed almost endless.

Mr. Brown was married in Pittsburgh to a daughter of Mr. Samuel Smith, of Minersville, a lady of high education, refinement and culture. She was a noble helper all through life, aiding him in many practical ways in his early struggles, and sharing with him in after years the fruits of their mutual toil. She passed away prior to her husband. Four sons and two daughters were the fruits of the marriage. Capt. James B. Brown died in July, 1882, and Samuel and Harry bought out the interest of Charles S., the other brother, and now carry on the business under firm name of W. H. Brown Sons. We quote:

As an indication that the business has suffered no decline in the hands of the present firm, it may be noted that in the years from 1852 to 1874, the later years of the life of W. H. Brown, were about 6,000,000 to 7,000,000 bushels per annum; whereas in 1879, or sixty years after, the shipment made was over 9,000,000, and in 1880 were over 12,000,000 bushels. These figures are not as large as those of 1858, which were the largest in the history of the house.

The present firm has five tugs and fourteen steamboats to furnish the motive power for its fleet of over one thousand boats, barges and flats, instead of the small number owned and controlled by the founder of the house. Instead of the few rods of track running from a mine in the second condition, by which the late W. H. Brown began business, the present firm owns no less than five coal-roads, all thoroughly equipped.

John Thaw. John Thaw, late of Pittsburgh, Pa., was born March 11, 1779, and died Sept. 3, 1866. The grandfather, John Thaw, was born in Philadelphia in 1710, where he lived to a ripe old age, dying in 1765. His bones now lie buried near Philadelphia, in Abingdon churchyard.

Benjamin, next in the line of succession, was born in Philadelphia in 1753, and married Hannah, daughter of Joseph Engle, whose parents, Benjamin and Deborah Engle, were English Quakers who settled in Philadelphia late in the seventeenth century. Of the children of Benjamin and Hannah Thaw, the subject of this sketch, John Thaw, was the second son. On July 2, 1802, he married Elizabeth Thomas, daughter of a sea captain lost at sea some years previously.

His early manhood was as adventurous and unsettled as his long subsequent career was eventful and serene. Apprenticed early in life to Paul Beck, a Philadelphia shipping merchant, and from his calling having much to do with those that “did business in great waters,” he acquired a fondness for a seafaring life, which he soon was offered the opportunity to gratify. He was appointed supercargo of a vessel, which, upon its first West Indian voyage, was seized (under Napoleon’s Milan decree) and taken into Guadeloupe, whence, when at length released, he managed to return, only to be overtaken on the way, however, by a more serious distress, the yellow fever, that fell disease breaking out and striking down his crew, he, almost alone of all on board, escaping.

Afterward, undertaking to trade on his own account, he sent a ship laden with such wares as were merchantable there to Senegal, Africa. The captain of the vessel, reaching his destination, disposed of his cargo to the slaves on his own account, and, returning, sold them in the West Indies and ran away with the proceeds. (A curious memorial of this adventure is preserved in the office of Mr. W. L. Jones, agent of the Insurance Company of North America in Pittsburgh, being the policy of insurance issued to John Thaw in 1851 for this voyage to Africa, which was presented to Mr. Jones more than sixty years afterward, and is valued by him as an interesting evidence of the venerable standing of his company.) The loss resulted in financial ruin to Mr. Thaw. He next sought and found service in the Bank of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia; was one of two sent out shortly after to establish a branch at Pittsburgh, in 1804, which, in 1817, was transferred to the old United States Bank, he shifting with it to serve as its cashier until the doom decreed by President Jackson brought it to an end Dec. 31, 1836.

Having acquired a comfortable competency, he then retired from active business,
He forty-eight broken death just methods marked.

Mr. Thaw's characteristics were marked. His straightforward business methods were not the result of the conditions of the work of his age, but at heart he had a broad and comprehensive tolerance, and a practical regard for the welfare of all that made his daily life that of a good and kind as well as just man.

His extremely systematic habits are curiously illustrated by a continuous set of books of account found in his private desk after his death, and never before seen by his family, in which his entire private business was conducted in the most precise forms of double-entry bookkeeping, balanced regularly every year, and covering the whole period from March 11, 1800, to March, 1864—two years before his death. These books open with an account of stock taken the day he was twenty-one, when little more than his personal outfit constituted the items of this first entry in a set of books destined to have such a prolonged, unbroken life. It is, however, as the pioneer banker that Mr. Thaw's biography appears in this publication, his career in that capacity, though a long one, having ended more than fifty years ago.

William Thaw, One of the most important factors in the prosperity of Pittsburgh and Allegheny county has been the rapid and thorough development of transportation facilities connecting them with distant points, thereby furnishing markets for the immense natural wealth which has made Pittsburgh one of the foremost manufacturing cities in the country, if not in the world. If the establishment of Port Pitt at the confluence of the Allegheny and Monongahela was a military necessity in the infancy of our country, the erection of manufacturing establishments was no less a necessity in times of peace. The manufacturer, however, would be limited but for the facilities afforded for carrying the products of the mill and of the furnace and the forge to other parts of the country. The first medium of transportation, of course, was by wagon, soon to be followed by the stagecoach, the canal-boat and the flatboat, and later by the railway, which could climb the mountains and descend to the valleys, almost annihilating distance, and bringing the producer and the consumer near together. Many have been witnesses to this development, though but few have been permitted to take part in it through its various stages. A prominent figure among these few is Mr. William Thaw, second vice-president of the Pennsylvania company, and manager of one of the great lines that go to make up that immense organization. His experience is an illustration of the rapidity of the evolution from the wagon-train and stagecoach to the palace car and lightning express train.

William Thaw was born in Pittsburgh, Oct. 12, 1818. He is of Scotch-Irish descent, tracing his lineage back to the time of Cromwell, with whom his ancestors, stern Cove-nanters, were in hearty sympathy. His great-grandfather, John Thaw, was born in Philadelphia in 1710, died in 1765, and now lies buried in Abingdon churchyard. Benjamin, grandfather, who died in 1753, married Hannah, daughter of Joseph Engle, whose parents, Benjamin and Deborah Engle, were of an old Philadelphia Quaker family, and died in 1811. Of their children was John Thaw, a sketch of whom appears above.

William Thaw was born fourteen years after his parents removed to Pittsburgh. His education began at the common schools and was finished in the Western University of Pennsylvania. He began business in 1831, as clerk in his father's bank, and Feb. 9, 1835, he entered the service of McKee, Clarke & Co., forwarding and commission merchants, as a clerk. In 1840 he formed a partnership with Thomas S. Clarke, as Clarke & Thaw, transporters and owners of steam- and canal-boats, which they continued until 1855. During these years the canal system was the great channel of communication between the east and the west. This had been suggested as early as 1792, but the links in the chain were not connected until the fall of 1834, when the Philadelphia and Columbia road and the Allegheny Portage road were completed, making, with the canal, through a line between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. This gave a wonderful impetus to the latter city, and the business of furnishing transportation became one of the most important lines of enterprise. Clarke & Thaw owned and controlled the Pennsylvania & Ohio line, and held their own. The advent of steam worked a revolution in trade and commerce, The Pennsylvania railroad train, beginning April 13, 1846. The work of construction began at Harrisburg in July, 1847. The last division was opened Feb. 15, 1854, and the subsequent purchase of the Philadelphia & Columbia road gave the Pennsylvania Railroad company through rail connection from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, and, of course, put an end to the canals. The history of the subsequent growth of this great corporation is familiar to everyone. By successive purchasess or leases it has acquired control of and operates 3,211.2 miles of railway. As the railroad system of the country grew, the waterway lines gradually went out of exist-
ene. Recognizing the inevitable result of the contest, Mr. Thaw gave himself to the task of disposing of his transportation lines with the least possible loss, and then turned his attention to the new system. In 1856 he joined his former partner, Thomas S. Clarke, who had the previous year undertaken the conduct of the freight traffic of the Pennsylvania railroad between Pittsburgh and all points west. At this time there was no system of through bills of lading and through cars as now prevails, and each road worked "upon its own hook." The whole business of freight transportation was in an almost chaotic state, and the expenses were tremendous. About 1864 the Pennsylvania Railroad company devised a system of through transportation over different lines, and the Star Union Line was the result. Of this Mr. Thaw had charge until 1873. Mr. Thaw receives and is entitled to a large share of the credit of evolving this system, but he, with characteristic sincerity and modesty, disdains any special credit, and says that his labor was shared by many others, and that the invention was that of itself, and one of the necessities of the situation. The Pennsylvania company was chartered April 7, 1870, for the purpose of managing, in the interest of the Pennsylvania Railroad company, which owns all the stock of the former company, the roads controlled by the latter west of Pittsburgh. The importance of this company may be estimated when one looks at the list of lines concentrated under its system. Among them are the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago, the Erie & Pittsburgh, the Cleveland & Pittsburgh and its branches, the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati & St. Louis (Pan Handle), the Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburgh, the Cincinnati & Muskingum Valley, the Little Miami, the St. Louis, Vandalia & Terre Haute, the Grand Rapids & Indiana, and many others. Mr. Thaw was president of the Pennsylvania Railroad company, second vice-president of the Pennsylvania company, and second vice-president of the P., C. & St. L. Ry., included in the above lines. Since 1873 he has been relieved of most of the duties connected with the transportation department, and gives his attention to the internal and financial affairs of the company.

Mr. Thaw has for many years been a member of the Third Presbyterian Church. He is a director in the Allegheny cemetery. He has been an earnest and generous friend of the Allegheny observatory, and to his liberality that institution is largely indebted for the financial help that has enabled it to prosecute its work. It was through his aid that the expedition of Prof. Langley to Mt. Whitney, in Southern California, some years ago was made possible.

Mr. Thaw has been twice married, and has a large family of children and grandchildren. Six sons and four daughters are living, of whom three are married. In his personal relations Mr. Thaw is one of the most estimable men in Pittsburgh. His large fortune is used for the noblest of purposes. His donations to his alma mater, the Western University of Pennsylvania, for which he cherishes a warm affection, aggregate three or four hundred thousand dollars, while he has given liberally to other educational institutions, as Hanover, Oberlin, Wooster University, Geneva, Carroll (Wisconsin), the college at Maryville, Tenn., the Western Theological Seminary and others. Charitable institutions of all kinds find in him a liberal and generous contributor.

Mentally he is among the foremost men of the state, gifted with a high order of intellect, strengthened by liberal culture and years of study and observation. He is an excellent judge of men, and quick to detect any shams or pretenses. His reasonings, based upon his convictions of right and duty, are never degraded to the service of expediency or mendacity. Impetuous and persistent, he is yet cautious in all that he does. Broad in his views, buoyant in disposition, honest, sincere and self-reliant, strictly upright in all his transactions, he has worthily won and holds a high position in the esteem and affection of all who know him. His sympathies and benefactions are bounded by no narrow lines of creed or prejudice, and his large benefactions go in every direction in which good may be accomplished. When he shall have passed to his last account, it will be said of him that the world is better for his having lived.

Casper Reel, Sr. (deceased), the pioneer of Ross township, was born May 11, 1749, in Frankfort, Germany. Emigrating to America, he made his home in Lancaster county, Pa., and served in the Revolution under Gen. Washington, participating in the battle of Brandywine and other engagements. His old watch and other interesting relics are yet in possession of his granddaughter, Almata Reel Hare. His Reel House at Almata was built in 1783, and was the first white settler in Ross township, where he built a cabin in 1792, and the same year planted many fruit seeds. The Indians, with whom he had many adventures, becoming too troublesome, he abandoned his place, but returned with his family in 1795. He had taken up one thousand acres of the choicest land in Ross township, where he was a central figure until his death, which occurred Oct. 10, 1824. He was an extensive trapper on Beaver river, and an expert in dressing skins, thus making considerable money, even in those days. Once, upon returning from his traps on the Beaver river, in company with his brother-in-law, John Wise, he was accosted by a white man standing on the shore, who asked for something to eat. Suspicious of his new acquaintance, he gradually headed his canoe toward the opposite shore and at the same time kept up a conversation by inquiring if there were any Indians about. Upon receiving the answer, "no, they are all gone to hell," his brother-in-law began to insist that they should go to his relief; but he was ordered to-lie down flat in the canoe. The Indians, now perceiving their device about spoiled, arose from their ambush and fired upon the canoe, but fortunately the occupants escaped unharmed, though the canoe was hit in several places. It was Simon Girty. Previous to 1755 there was a gathering of a number of the settlers in what was then known as the Winebiddle farm, the object being the raising of a building, and among the number was an Indian who pretended to be friendly to the settlers, but when he became somewhat under the influence of "fire-water" his Indian proclivities began to show themselves in such a manner that he became obnoxious. His bragging about the number of white scalps he had taken so exasperated Casper Reel and the young Mr. Redskin and with one slash of his knife cut off the Indian's ear so quickly that he could recognize nothing but the man with the red jacket. He was also a good husbandman, and his love for horticultural pursuits has descended to his grandchildren, the old homestead bearing evidence of their thrift. He was the first collector north of Allegheny river, his territory extending to the lakes. March 2, 1784, he married Elizabeth Wise, who was born Oct. 2, 1760, in Lancaster, Pa., and died Aug. 20, 1843. They had ten children: Mary, Jacob, John, Daniel, Conrad, Casper, Jr., and David (twins), William and a twin sister, and Elizabeth. The order of their deaths is as follows: In their younger ages—Daniel, Jacob, John (who died in the war of 1812, at Port Maumee rapids, April 6, 1813, aged twenty-three years), and William who was killed by being thrown from a fractioned horse. The more recent deaths have been those of David, in his seventieth year; Conrad, in his seventy-sixth year; Mary (Mrs. Johnston), in her ninety-fifth year, and Casper, Jr. (or second), who was born Jan. 22, 1798, and died April 25, 1887. He was an enterprising farmer, a member and liberal supporter of the Presbyterian Church and most honorable in all transactions. Politically he was a life-long democrat, casting his first presidential vote, in 1820, for Monroe, and his last, in 1884, for Cleveland. In 1839 there were forty-three votes polled in Ross township, which then extended to the Allegheny river, including what is now part of Allegheny county. Elizabeth Quailli, is still living, and is near the close of her eighty-sixth year. Her mind and memory are remarkably bright and retentive. Her jollity of temperament and affability of manner make her the most precious jewel to be found in the homes of her children. She is the last link that connects the long past with the present, and to converse with her is to be carried back, as it were, to the living past, into all its varied steps of progress, from the departure of the savage and his rude customs up the rugged road to the higher and grander times in which we now live and flourish as a nation and a people.

The members of the old Reel family were strict Presbyterians. The older members were formerly of the Church of England, and were one of late most prominent located on Smithfield street, Pittsburgh. This is corroborated by a Bible and common-prayer book of the Church of England (now in the possession of Jacob G. Reel), which the old gentleman carried in his pocket throughout the revolutionary war, and which was once the means of saving his life by warding off a bullet that otherwise would have killed him. The book was published by Susannah Collins, in 1724, for the Company of Stationers, London. The Hildon Presbyterian Church near Perrysville was located by Casper Reel, Sr., and it was here the family subsequently became Presbyterians, and remained such until separated by marriage, when three of them afterward became Methodists. The location of the Hildon Presbyterian Church proved in after years to be a most central one, as it became a numerous body, and notwithstanding its passage by time into the third generation it is still a stanch body. A large burial-ground attached to the church was the common burial-place for all, and in it shows where most of the former worshipers lie.

The first marriage that occurred in Ross township was at the farm residence of Casper Reel. It was the union of his employers, Christopher Rinemian and Charlotte Zimmerman, in June, 1795. The ceremony was performed by Squire Robinson, father of the late Gen. William Robinson, of Allegheny City. The presents were a panfull of cherries.

ORLANDO METCALF (deceased), in his lifetime one of the most influential members of the Pittsburgh bar, honored and respected in both public and private life as a lawyer, scholar and gentleman, was a lineal descendant of Michael Metcalf, a citizen of Norwich, England, born in 1586, who emigrated, with his wife, children and dependents, to America in April, 1637, settling at Dedham, Mass., in July, same year. Another descendant, Robert Williams, also a native of England, born in 1598, came in above-named year from Norwich to Boston, Mass.; and still another English emigrant, William Hyde, from whom the subject of this memoir descended, landed at Newton, Mass., in 1640, becoming in course of time the founder of Norwich, Conn. He was also a descend-
He is now a manufacturer of fine steel, and one of the owners of the Crescent Steel works, of Pittsburgh. He was married Dec. 1, 1864, to Christiana Dager Fries, and by her has six children living. He is a gentleman of great skill and ability in the branch of business which engages his time and talents, and he has recently written a treatise on steel, published by "The American Society of Civil Engineers," which took the annual prize for its merit.

Orlando, born July 11, 1840. He married, Nov. 5, 1863, Agnes, daughter of James McElroy, of Pennsylvania, and has seven children; six of these were born at Pittsburgh, and one, the youngest, at Colorado Springs. He is a successful manufacturer in Pittsburgh, but resides at Colorado Springs, Colo., where he is a leading citizen and greatly respected.

Mary C., born Aug. 23, 1829, married, in April, 1865, Mr. Robert Bruce, a worthy merchant of Pittsburgh, and they have one son, Robert O. M., born July 7, 1871.

Miss Emeline Eliza, born June 15, 1832, in Pittsburgh, where she resided until her marriage. Mr. Joseph H. Eliza, president of the Bank of Pittsburgh, is remotely of English descent. From the reign of James I till the death of Robert Harper, the great-grandfather of John, in 1780, his ancestors were the owners of one of the townlands in County Tyrone, Ireland, and were men of high character. John Harper was born in County Donegal, Ireland, Dec. 5, 1811. At the age of nine (or in 1820) he came with his parents to Washington, D. C., where he received a thorough practical education under the superintendence of a relative, Alexander McCormick, Esq., who is still living at the age of ninety. In his boyhood he was distinguished for the strength of his memory, as well as for his domestic tastes and habits. His father, Hugh Harper, died in 1821, and in 1826 his mother, with her children, moved to Jefferson county, Ohio (his brother, Lecky Harper, still living, has been a newspaper editor for more than fifty years, and is an ex-senator in that state). When fifteen years of age he took a subordinate position in a mercantile house at Steubenville, and four years later he had become bookkeeper and confidential clerk. During his clerkship he was noted for his studious habits and the scholarly attainments he thus acquired. At this time Edwin M. Stanton was employed in a neighboring store, and between the two young men an intimacy sprang up that terminated only with the life of Mr. Stanton. In 1831 Mr. Harper became a bookkeeper in the house of M. & A. Leech, of Pittsburgh, and on Sept. 19, 1832, he was chosen, without his solicitation, to a position in the Bank of Pittsburgh, where he became principal clerk. In 1837 he was sent to Beaver as cashier in the branch bank at that place, but was soon recalled to become assistant cashier in the Bank of Pittsburgh. He was chosen cashier on the resignation of that office by Mr. John Snyder, and subsequently succeeded Mr. John Graham as president of the bank, which position he still occupies. It is proper to remark here that during his service of more than half a century the bank has passed safely through all the financial crises that have occurred; that there was never a defalcation in its accounts, or a misdemeanor by any of its officers involving the loss of a dollar. It has never repudiated its obligations, and never failed to pay a semi-annual dividend. Mr. Harper has occupied many other responsible positions in Pittsburgh Clearing-house ever since its organization; is president of the Western Pennsylvania hospital, of which he is one of the founders; president of the Pittsburgh & Allegheny Suspension Bridge Co.; a director in the Monongahela Navigation Co.; a trustee in the Western University of Pennsylvania; a corporator and director of the Allegheny River Canal; a member of the sinking fund of Allegheny county, and a member of other useful associations.

Mr. Harper married, in June, 1836, Miss Lydia Electa, a daughter of Nathan W. Metcalf, of Otsego county, N. Y. Mrs. Harper's genealogy runs through an honored line to Michael Metcalf, who came from Norwich, England, to the colony of Massachusetts, in 1637, because of the religious tyranny of Bishop Wren, of Norwich. They have had five sons and one daughter, and to all these who survived their childhood were given a collegiate education. The family record might end here, but a few words more may not be amiss. The issue of the subject of this sketch might suggest inquiry as to the quality of their fruit. Maj. Har- per, whose life-history follows this sketch, died unmarried. The only daughter, Lydia, married George B. Mallory, civil engineer, of New York, and died at the residence of her parents, Oct. 4, 1884, leaving a son, John Harper Mallory. John A. Harper, born June 29, 1839, in Pittsburgh, married, May 30, 1882, Flora, daughter of Col. Edward Warn- ton Sherburne, of St. Louis, Mo., and they have three daughters. Orlando M. Harper, born Sept. 17, 1846, in Pittsburgh, married, Nov. 22, 1887, Kathleen Theodora, daughter of John Livingston Ludlow, M. D., of Philadelphia, Pa. They have two daughters, and reside in New York. Charles S. Har- per, born March 5, 1853, in Pittsburgh, married, Oct. 26, 1882, Julia, daughter of Gardner Bower Murfey, of Cleveland, Ohio; they have one daughter, and reside in New York. The subjects of this sketch, John Harper and Lydia Electa, his wife, celebrated their "golden wedding," June 4, 1886, with mental powers unimpaired. Both are able to look back without regrets on long and well-spent lives.

Albert Metcalf Harper was born in Allegheny county, Pa., on April 22, 1843. He was the second son of John and Lydia Electa (Metcalf) Harper. On his father's side, the subject of this sketch was of Irish descent, and on that of his mother he was an American of ten generations of New England ancestry, inheriting from both parents a strong, vigorous constitution. During his childhood he developed those manly qualities which in after years rendered him distinguished among his comrades at school, college, and in the army. His preparatory studies were pursued at Kenwood school, near New Brighton, Pa.; and at the age of eighteen years he passed the examination and entered into the regular course of study at the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Troy, N. Y. He spent his summer vacation, in 1862, the second battle of Bull Run was fought and lost, which was followed by President Lincoln's call for more troops. Active, strong and healthy as he was, the appeal went straight to his heart and determined his action, which was to abandon his collegiate course and enter the army. He secured the consent of his parents, immediately enlisted, and was ordered into service Aug. 25, 1862, joining the 139th P. V., just organized in Pittsburgh, and was chosen its adjutant. The regiment was ordered to the front, and arriving at Washington was assigned to the sad and trying duty of burying the bodies of the slain that still lay exposed on the disastrous battlefield of second Bull Run. Thus began his initiation with the severest of trials that could be imposed upon a young soldier fresh from home and a loving mother's arms. At the battle of Antietam he received his "baptism of fire," and subsequently passed unscathed through all the campaigns and battles his regiment was engaged in, until stricken down in the dreadful carnage at the battle of the Wilderness. So severely was he wounded in this engagement that at first his life was despaired of and the surgeons considering his case beyond their power to relieve; but comprehending his condition, he demanded their assistance at the appearance of a favorable symptom, and by sheer force of will, aided by the surgeon's skill, his life was saved. Still no hopes were entertained of his ever being able to render further active service in this engagement, but he was removed to Fredericksburg, and from there to Washington to the residence of a friend, where, with careful nursing and skillful treatment, his wounds began to heal, and he was enabled to proceed to his home. Having recovered sufficiently, by the fall of 1864, to resume fresh duties, he was promoted, Aug. 17, 1864, to the rank of Captain and Assistant Adjutant-General of U. S. volunteers by the President, and assigned to the Department of the Monongahela; was detailed by Gen. Couch to take charge of a force of infantry, cavalry and artillery, in the mountains near Uniontown, during a threatened invasion of Pennsylvania. Still unfit for field duty, in January, 1865, he was assigned to the staff of Gen. Cadwalader, Department of Pennsylvania, headquarters in Philadelphia, and was one of the guard of honor to President Lincoln, while his remains were in that city. May 21, 1865, he was breveted Major and Assistant Adjutant-General of U. S. voluteers "for faithful and meritorious services and gallantry during the war." He was afterward transferred to the staff of Maj.-Gen. Weitzel, when about to proceed to Texas with his command; but was recalled by Secretary of War Stanton upon receiving a petition from his parents to allow their son to retire from the army, the war being practically over, if, in the secretary's opinion, his services were no longer actually required. When he reported to the War Department he was tendered a commission in the regular army of the United States, but he declined, and was honorably discharged at his own request, and mustered out June 27, 1865, by special orders.

Upon leaving the army, Maj. Harper returned to his home, and, after a brief visit, re-entered the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, in Troy, N. Y., and resumed his studies where he had left them off three years before, and graduated with honor in the class of 1867, & Civil Engineering and Mathematics. Meanwhile, pursuing his attention, he assisted in establishing the firm of Dilworth, Harper & Co., continuing a member of the house till his death from typhoid fever, Dec. 10, 1871. His loss was an irreparable one to his family, who will continue to miss till the end of life's journey the beloved, affectionate son and brother; to his country, who lost a true, ardent, zealous patriot; to his community, who bear testimony to his brave soldierly qualities in camp and field; and to society, who recognize in him a perfect gentleman and citizen, exemplifying always those traits of morality and rectitude which mark the perfect man. On the ground where Gen. Braddock met his defeat in 1751, and where Gen. Washington engaged in his first battle, there was erected in 1886 a noble granite shaft, overlooking that memorable field of bloody massacre, by the G. A. R. Post. No. 181, in memory of comrades who have died; this column bears in letters of bold relief the name of their patron hero, Major A. M. Harper. But to those who knew and admired him no granite monolith is needed to impress upon their minds and hearts the memory of the one they loved. Yearly, on Decoration Day, his comrades of the post gather at his grave, and with solemn ceremony strew upon it rare and fragrant flowers emblematic of his character.

Benjamin Franklin Jones, of Pittsburgh, whose influence upon the progress not only of his native state but of the country, has been none the less marked and determining because, in the main, it has been quietly exerted, was born at Claysville, Washington county, Pa., Aug. 8, 1826. His ancestors for several generations were also of Pennsylvania birth. On his father's side he is of Welsh descent, his great-great-grandfather having emigrated to this country from London near the close of the seventeenth century, landing in Philadelphia the same year as Penn. His mother was from those sturdy people that have impressed themselves so decidedly upon the fortunes of this state—the Pennsylvania Dutch and the Scotch. His father, Jacob A. Jones, who died at Rochester, Pa., at the age of ninety-six, was born in Philadelphia in the same year that gave birth to the Declaration of Independence, and was by profession a surveyor. His mother, Elizabeth Goshorn, was born in Franklin county, Pa., and married there in 1813. In 1837, when eleven years old, the subject of this sketch removed with his father's family to New Brighton, Pa., where he remained until his seventeenth year, securing in the meantime a good academic education at the New Brighton Academy, much better, in fact, than boys at that date not specially designed for one of the so-called learned professions usually received. Young Jones was indeed offered a liberal education, and such are some of his mental characteristics that, had he chosen a professional career, he would have been eminently successful, but with a knowledge of his own abilities and particularly his vocation as a lawyer, he wisely chose the life in which he has been so successful, a success due to no sudden freak of fortune following speculative ventures, but wrought out by the strength of his brain, the industry of his hands and his steady clearness of vision. In 1843, when but seventeen years old, Mr. Jones left his home and came to Pittsburgh to begin life on his own account. Pittsburgh was then, as it has been successful since the adventurously French descended the Allegheny to establish trade with the Indians and to secure control of the wonderful region that forms the great Mississippi valley, on the trail along which the commerce between the east and west came and went. The pack-train, the Conestoga wagon, the canal-boat and the railway-train have all in turn climbed the mountains and descended again into the valley, and deposited at Pittsburgh in ever-increasing amount and ever-growing value their burden of freight, either to be transformed into higher forms by that magic we call production, or to be passed onward to meet the demands of that magnificent empire that stretches westward.

When young Jones, full of ambition, energy and determination, came to Pittsburgh, it was the era of canal-boat transportation. The entire line of the Pennsylvania canal had been opened from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh nine years before, in 1834. The era of the railroad had not come, though even then it was fast approaching, and some of the pressing problems of that day concerned the relation of the canal-boat and the railway-car. Mr. Jones' first employment was as assistant shipping-clerk, or perhaps better, as receiving-clerk, at no salary, in the Pittsburgh office of the Mechanics' line of boats, which ran on the canal between Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, with a tidewater branch to Havre de Grace, Md. Mr. Samuel M. Kler, the chief owner in this line, took a great interest in the young shipping-clerk, and encouraged him in every way. The agitation at this time in favor of a continuous line of railroad between the east and west was widespread, and April 13, 1846, the Pennsylvania railroad was chartered, and the problem of the relation of the canal and railway became a present one to those who, through the canal, controlled the traffic between the east and west. Mr. Kier, nothing daunted, set about devising plans for utilizing both methods of internal communication, and established the Independent Line of section-boats, one of the first of this class to be run between Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Baltimore, and so constructed as to be adapted to both rail and canal. Within three years of his first appointment Mr. Jones, not yet twenty-one years of age, became manager of both lines of boats, at a salary at that time almost unprecedented. The canal-boat business also included a general commission and forwarding business. In 1847, shortly after the purchase of the furnace-property referred to below, Mr. Jones became in partnership with Mr. Kier in the Independent Line and operated it until 1854, when the Pennsylvania railroad superseded the old system of state canals and railroads. Mr. Jones has never ceased to be connected with the transportation interest which furnished his first employment. For many years he has been identified with the railroad interests of Western Pennsylvania, and relative to railroad matters his advice is frequently sought and his judgment relied upon. At its first inception he was made a director of the Pittsburgh & Connellsville railroad. He has for many years (twenty at least) been a director of the Cleveland & Pittsburgh, and for a long period held a similar relation to the Allegheny Valley railroad. For some time, also, he was the president of what was formerly known as the Pittsburgh, Virginia & Charleston railroad, now styled the Monongahela division of the Pennsylvania railroad.

His training in these early years was admirably adapted to develop those traits of character which have marked his whole business-life. The successful prosecution of the canal business demanded a combination of gifts that are somewhat rare, and it has more than once been remarked that those who were successful transporters in the old Pennsylvania canal days have been among our most successful business-men in later years. The canal business demanded great energy and push, prompt action, good judgment. The successful canal-transporter must be a merchant, a transporter, a good judge of men, wise to plan, quick to inspire his subordinates to action, and able to guide their acts. All of these traits Mr. Jones possesses in the highest degree, and has manifested all through his business-life.

It was in 1847, while still acting as manager of the canal-transportation line, that Mr. Jones became connected with the great industry to whose development he has devoted so large a portion of his life. In this year he purchased, in connection with Mr. Kier, an iron furnace and forges in the Allegheny mountains, near Armaugh, in Westmoreland county. The time was not propitious. Under the influence of the tariff of 1842, prosperity had become general throughout the United States, and Pennsylvania had shared it with others, but the fatal tariff of 1846, forced upon the country by the traitorous vote of a Pennsylvania vice-president, wrought disaster, and the furnace had shared the fate of so many others, and was idle at the time of its purchase by Mr. Jones and Mr. Kier. It is indicative of Mr. Jones' business ability that the furnace operation while under his management was without loss. In 1851 he became connected with the works with which his name has since been identified, and to whose upbuilding and extension he has devoted more than thirty-five of the best years of his life. In that year he took an interest in the American Iron Works, which were being built by Mr. Bernard Laughlin, the firm name being Jones, Laugh & Co. It was not until 1852, however, that Mr. Jones became actively engaged in the management of the works. In 1854 Mr. James Laughlin came into the firm. The firm name was changed to Jones & Laughlin in 1857, Mr. Lauth retiring. The interests in this firm remain to-day as at first, the only change having resulted from the death of partners. In 1858 the Monongahela Iron Works at Brownsville were purchased. These were run for a year and then dismantled, part of the machinery being removed to Pittsburgh.

In the forty years that have passed since his first connection with Pittsburgh's iron trade, Mr. Jones has witnessed a marvelous growth. At that date there was not a blast-furnace in Allegheny county, and consequently not a pound of pig-iron made, most of the pig-iron for the mills coming from the wooded regions of the Alleghany mountains and the banks of the Allegheny and Monongahela. In 1888 there were produced in Pittsburgh 890,569 tons, more than the entire product of the country in 1851. Indeed it was not until 1890 that the production of the United States reached 900,000 tons. In every other branch of the iron business there has been a corresponding increase. Rolling-mills turning out 4,000 tons a year have given place to those of 100,000 tons capacity, the blister-steel and small cast-steel works to the steel-mill turning out 1,000 tons a day. The coke-product of the Connellsville region has grown from nothing to 5,000,000 tons annually, and the coal output from a small product to 500,000,000 bushels annually. In this growth Mr. Jones has had a notable part. The building of the Eliza Furnaces in 1860, at that time the best of their style, gave an impetus to the building of coke blast-furnaces in the west. These furnaces were among the first to use Lake Superior ores. His firm was also among the first, if not the actual pioneers in buying coal-lands and making coke in the Connellsville region. When coal was used as a fuel in the Pittsburgh mills they had one of the most extensive mining operations in the neighborhood of Pittsburgh, and it is probable that the coal beds along their own wells and laid their own pipe-lines.

The center of Mr. Jones' iron operations is his American Iron Works, situated on the south bank of the Monongahela, a works of sufficient importance to receive special and very complimentary mention in the ninth edition of the 'Encyclopedia Britannica.' These include not only one of the most extensive iron-rolling-mills and merchant Bessemer-steel works in the country, but in connection with these are extensive operations which are usually conducted as separate enterprises. Not only are there the necessary chemical and physical laboratories, as well as a mechanical engineering and mining staff, but machine-shops, brass- and iron-foundries, and various branches of business in which they re-work their own product. Their cold-rolled iron, especially shafting, is known throughout the world; their machine-shops and foundries are among the best appointed in the west. On the opposite side of the Monongahela from the rolling-mill, and connected with them by a railroad and railroad bridge of their own, are the four Eliza Furnaces, which are part of their plant, which also includes cokeworks in the Connellsville region and in Pittsburgh, iron-ore beds in Western Pennsylvania and Lake Superior, their natural-gas wells and the coalworks near the rolling-mills for fuel, and limestone quarries for the supply of the furnaces. In a word, from the mines to the rolls the raw material used is largely from their own mines and works. In connection with their business they also at an early date, 1857, established a large warehouse in Chicago, and the firm of Jones & Laughlins, as jobbers of heavy iron and hardware, is among the best known and most extensive in the northwest. In all of these enterprises some five thousand people are given employment, and there are no works in the country that run with greater regularity. It is almost needless to say that the policy of protection to which this great growth is due has had in all of these years no more ardent supporter, no more intelligent and influential advocate, than Mr. Jones. His advocacy of this principle, however, is based on broader grounds than those of mere personal advantage. His belief is that the whole country and all classes are benefited by protective tariffs, the lawyer and the doctor equally with the manufacturer; the farmer as well as the laborer. He has no sympathy with those so-called protectionists who desire protection for their products and low duties or free trade for their raw materials; and has always advocated and defended the interests and safety of the weakest as well as of those industries that have grown strong.

In personal appearance Mr. Jones is five feet eleven inches in height, somewhat inclined to embonpoint, but well knit, with a somewhat massive head, and with a brilliant, piercing eye. His whole appearance is that of a quiet, reserved man of great force. As he comes of a long-lived race, preserving its vigor to the close of life, it may be taken for granted that he is in his prime. The combination of traits of character which have contributed so much to his success as a business-man and manufacturer is remarkable. Though he has no mechanical education, either theoretical or practical, except such as he would naturally acquire in his business, he is a mechanic of no mean order. His organizing power—and it is upon a perfectly balanced organization, working without friction or waste, that the success of large manufacturing operations mainly depend—is of the highest, while his abilities as a merchant to dispose of his product, and as a financier to conserve his credit, all unite to form a combination of characteristics rarely met with. His chief mental characteristics are his saving common sense, and his rare judgment. He approaches a conclusion only after a careful consideration of all phases of the question before him. While deliberate, his mental processes are by no means sluggish, but on the other hand he is active, alert, and quick to grasp a subject presented. So well convinced are his associates of his good judgment and unswerving integrity and fairness, that he is often asked to serve as a referee or arbitrator in disputes involving immense interests, and is almost uniformly selected by both sides. While Mr. Jones has been all his life, except the first few months of his Pittsburgh experience, an employer of labor and not an employer, no Pittsburgh manufacturer stands higher in the esteem of all Pittsburgh men, and there is no one whose words as to the present, and whose forecast as to the future, is more eagerly listened to by the iron-workers, than his. His remarkable foresight has made his opinion as to the future, at times, almost a prophecy. He has brought to the consideration of the relations of employer and employed a wealth of experience, a soundness of judgment and a broadness of view that few men possess. It is to his far-seeing wisdom and initiative that Pittsburgh and the world owe the sliding-scale, a method of paying wages that recognizes the true basis of wages, viz.: that wages are paid out of product, and should bear a certain relation to selling-price. It was Mr. Jones' foresight that recognized this at a time when almost the entire world held to the wage-fund theory, viz., that wages were paid out of capital.

While, as it has been stated, Mr. Jones did not secure a liberal education, he has a natural taste for literature, and in conversation displays a wide acquaintance with the best writers of the age. While not a writer or speaker in the sense these terms are usually understood, he is by no means a tyro in these respects, as his article on "Protection" in the North American Review and his speech in calling to order the republican national convention at Richmond. His object was to build up the expense of rival works. He has always been ready, even at some sacrifice, to join with his fellow manufacturers in adopting plans that promised to benefit the trade at large, even though the methods suggested did not always commend themselves to his judgment. To his debtors he has been lenient, while there is no manufacturer in the country, certainly not in the iron trade, who has the respect and confidence of his employees in a higher degree than he. His workmen look up to him as a friend and freely seek his advice, which is as freely given.

Prior to the war Mr. Jones was a democrat, but its first utterings found him unflinchingly on the side of the Union. His influence and his writings, which appeared as editorials and communications in certain Pittsburgh papers without a knowledge as to their authorship, did much to influence public sentiment at a vital formative period. In the organization and enrollment of troops he was especially active. The Pittsburg Subtreasurers Committee, which gained such an enviable reputation during the war, was largely indebted to him for its early impetus and much of its success. He saw far more clearly than most of those in places of power, even, the great demand the war would make upon our resources, and had a clearer perception than most men of what those resources and the basis of credit were. In 1861 and early in 1862 he advocated, by formal letters to congressmen and anonymously through the press, the issuance of legal-tender treasury notes convertible into bonds. These letters on finance were admirable for their sensible, practical suggestions, the outgrowth of his own business experience. The close of the national republican convention of 1864 found Mr. Jones the member of the national committee from Pennsylvania, and upon its formal organization, much against his own wishes, he was elected chairman. It is doubtful if any other incumbent of this trying position ever had a tithe of the complications to contend with that confronted Mr. Jones—the open defection of valued party leaders; the lukewarmness or indifference of others; a large popular defection in the previous state elections against the party he was expected to lead to victory; the candidate he was to defeat, the chief executive of the pivotal state, elected but a short time previous by nearly 200,000 majority, and yet his unchallenging energy, so wise the methods, so skillful the management Mr. Jones brought to this task that when the votes were counted, the magnificent majority of 193,000 given the governor had fallen to a paltry thousand given the president, which but for an accident for which he was in no way responsible and could not have averted, would have been changed into a triumphant majority for the candidate he favored. After the campaign was ended his position brought him no end of labor. There was much consideration to be given to the future, many delicate questions of party policy to decide. Largely by his tact and shrewdness during this period, animosities were allayed, breaches closed up, the issues at stake clearly defined and when the contest was again joined the victory that was deified him was assured.

In December, 1884, the American Iron and Steel Association elected Mr. Jones as its president, to succeed Hon. D. J. Morrell. This selection was pre-eminently a fit one. Not only had Mr. Jones come to be recognized as the leading iron-manufacturer of the country, but his efforts, sometimes known, more frequently not seen by the general public, in behalf of all measures that would prove in the interest of the industry of which this association is the organized head, pointed him out as the one man to be its recognized leader. Mr. Jones was married on May 21, 1859, to Miss Mary McMaster, daughter of John McMaster, Sr., one of the best-known citizens of Allegheny county. In his domestic relations he has been as fortunate and happy as in his business career, which has been successful. In his personal relations with men he has been approachable, helpful and kindly to all. His life is an inspiration, and at the same time an example to young men. Without any of the adventitious circumstances in early life that promise success, he has achieved a large measure of it, and with his fame and wealth has also come a reputation for honor and uprightness that, after all, is the highest attainable in any human career.

THOMAS VARNER (deceased) was born on a farm in Baldwin (then St. Clair) township, Aug. 12, 1799, and died on the same farm Aug. 22, 1888. His autobiography, accompanying his portrait, to be found in this work, was written three days before his demise. His father, John Varner, came from Lancaster county, Pa. He was a soldier in the Revolution, and a gunsmith by trade, which fact saved his life during the whisky insurrection. When the insurgents burned Neville's house, being opposed to them, Mr. Varner feared similar treatment; so, sending his family away, he loaded all his guns and awaited the attack, which never came, his services and life being valued by the insurgents. He married Mary Free, and four children were born to them: Thomas, Sarah, Christina and Phoebe. John Varner died at
A. McClurg and Mrs. M. Varner (see sketch of Thos. Varner), who reside on the estate, and are known for their deeds of quiet charity. Mrs. McClurg died before her husband, in July, 1845. The other children were Thomas B., Joseph, James, Margaret (Mrs. Millard), and Elizabeth J. (Mrs. Laferty).

THOMAS BARTHOLOMEW McCURG (deceased), eldest son of Joseph McClurg, was born in Pittsburgh, Nov. 6, 1819. His entire life was passed amid the advantages which wealth affords, and his education was received in the schools of his native city. On reaching manhood he relieved his father of the cares of his large estate, which he managed many years with the aid of his younger brother, Joseph. On the death of the latter he became sole trustee, and so well did he manage matters that after his decease no error was found in the accounts. He died March 15, 1873, leaving no male descendant of his father, two sisters and a grand-niece being the only near relatives that survive him. Because of his great influence little known in the city; but the few who were so privileged prize his memory. He never married, and therefore leaves no widow to mourn his loss. When he found his heavenly home, Pittsburgh lost an estimable citizen and upright Christian.

OLIVER EVANS, Sr. (deceased), McKeensport, was born in McKeensport Nov. 16, 1816, and is a son of James and Emily (Alexander) Evans. James Evans was born near Wilmington, Del., where he was reared and educated. He was a hatter by trade, settled in McKeensport in 1798, and later opened a store with a hatshop in connection. He was for many years magistrate, by appointment from the governor of the state, until the office became elective. He died in 1846. His wife was a daughter of William Alexander, of the Cumberland valley, and they had eight children: Ann M., Mrs. Dr. George Huey; John; Emily, Mrs. Dr. Robt. McClellan; James; Hannah, Mrs. Hugh Roland; Harriet, Mrs. David King; Oliver and George. Oliver, the subject of this memoir, was reared and educated in McKeensport and studied the higher languages with his brother-in-law, Dr. Robert McClellan, of Mercer, Pa., with a view of taking up medicine as a profession, but on account of ill health abandoned it and was all his life a farmer.

He married, Nov. 24, 1839, Mary A., daughter of Thomas and Anu (Kuhn) Sampson, of Versalles township, by whom he had five children: James, Thomas S. (who died), Cadwallader, Anna M. (Mrs. J. W. Baille), and Oliver, Jr. Mr. Evans was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and was a democrat of the old school. He died at his residence on Capitol hill, Dec. 7, 1888.

Although living in comparative retirement, he was known to all as a man of strong convictions, of strict integrity and decided views on all public questions. Of great energy and tireless activity in his daily pursuits, he was no less active mentally, and always found time to indulge his early love for literature and to gratify his desire for information on current events. Of a pioneer family, he saw the hamlet of his youth in a few years become a busy manufacturing city of twenty thousand people, and, with full faith in its future, he passed to his rest, after a long life, well spent, supported by the Christian’s confident trust in his Savior and honored by all who knew him.

Cadwallader Evans, M. D., general superintendent H. B. Scutt & Co., and member of the Oliver & Roberts Wire company, Pittsburgh, was born in McKeesport, this county, July 23, 1843, son of Oliver and Mary A. (Sampson) Evans. He attended school at McKeesport, and graduated at Washington and Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Pa., in 1866, and studied medicine, graduating at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Pa., in 1868. He first located at Braddock; then, in 1869, in Hazelwood, Pittsburgh, where he successfully followed his profession until 1872. In that year, he accepted the position of medical director of the Oliver & Roberts Wire Co., he abandoned the practice of medicine, and has since been actively engaged in the wire-manufacturing industry. Dr. Evans has been prominent in political as well as in business and medical circles. For the past fifteen years he has continuously represented his ward in the city council, as member of the select branch.

Dr. Evans was united in marriage, Oct. 1, 1872, with Miss Maggie B. Oliver, a native of the city of Allegheny, second daughter of H. W., Sr., and Margaret (Brown) Oliver, and to this union were born eight children: Harry W., George, David O. (deceased), Bern, Cadwallader, Jr., Mary, Margie and Dorothy. Dr. and Mrs. Evans are members of Hazelwood Christian Church. The family have a beautiful residence in Hazelwood.

Dr. John Dickson (deceased) was born in Cecil county, Md., April 24, 1812, the fifth John Dickson in line. Some of his ancestry fought with Wallace and Bruce in Scotland, and this was the cause of the family’s removal to America. His life had been an example and a benediction. He was happy in the two factors which our later sciences have largely determine the course of human life, race and environment. Of Scotch-Irish descent, the traditions and history of his family were connected with the records of his native state for more than five generations, and he was reared in that atmosphere of intellectual vigor and devout morality and pietz characteristic of the race from which he sprang. His father and family removed to Clinton, Allegheny county, in 1821. At the age of sixteen young Dickson taught in the public school at Clinton while engaged in his own studies; for the purpose of reciting he walked to Cannonsburg every Friday evening, and acquired a reputation for his knowledge of the classical course scarcely second to the best in the state. The keen eyes of the venerable Rev. Matthew Brown, D. D., early recognized his ability, and he said to Mr. Boyd Emery (pointing to the young student): “There goes the most promising young man I know; if he lives he will make a great name for himself.” He began the study of medicine when seventeen years of age, reciting to Dr. Leathem (at that time a leading physician of Cannonsburg), and subsequently attended lectures at the University of New York, from which institution he received his degree. He was not twenty years old when he began to practice. He located at first in Sewickley, where he was well known; and so marked was the favorable impression which his early life and attainments had made upon the entire community, that in spite of the great drawback of youth, he entered at once upon a large and most respectable connection. In 1837, together with Mr. John Shilds, Dr. Dickson made a trip to Europe for the purpose of attending lectures in Edinburgh, Scotland, and Dublin, Ireland. The two young men then made a pedestrian tour of the route which Dr. Dickson afterward describes in his “Travels.” When the two arrived at Rome, they found the cholera epidemic raging there, and without hesitation the young physician went to work to aid the sufferers.

In 1838 he was married to Miss May Ann Way, and a family of eight children were born to them, all well known and greatly respected in this community. In 1843 Dr. Dickson removed to Allegheny, where he opened an office on the Diamond, afterward on Federal street, and finally on the corner of Penn and Ninth streets, Pittsburgh. He had previously, in 1851, established his residence again in Sewickley. From his entrance upon the work of his profession to the close of his life his ability and attainments commanded as large a clientele as perhaps any physician in this portion of the state. His profession was his idol, and being a great reader of medical works, he was never weary of perfecting his knowledge in medicine and surgery. He kept in close fellowship with the leading physicians of his time, with all of whom he was on friendly terms or in friendly correspondence.

Dr. John D. Dickson removed to McCook, after the battle of Pittsburg Landing, took charge of the two hospital-boats and with their respective staffs went down to transport the wounded to the hospitals here. Dr. Dickson’s activity during the war closed with his services at Gettysburg, where he was one of the most diligent and respected surgeons.

In the earnest desire to strengthen his own knowledge and encourage the study of medicine, he established, when first settled in Allegheny, a dissecting room, and had a large class of young men, among whom were Dr. James B. Herron and Dr. A. M. Pollock. No new remedy or mechanical invention promising help and healing to the sick and injured escaped his notice, and it is no disparagement to others to say that he had no superior to-day as an anatomist and surgeon. His eye was as bright as the sunlight, his hand as... steadily as a rock, and his knowledge and courage were at all times equal to any operation, capital ones being performed with distinguished success. Dr. Gross, than whom there was no higher authority, said of him:

He performed the operation of lithotomy, as far as he could learn, more frequently and with better results than any man in Pennsylvania. In 1860 he performed it eleven times, all the subjects recovering. The sciences adjunct to his profession especially he made himself familiar with, and in the judgment of competent persons there were few better chemists or botanists in this state. He added to the four thousand plants within our floral region as to familiar friends, and called them by their names as be would the members of his own family. In one word, he had set before himself the highest ideal of his profession, and made it the work of his life to realize it in himself, with what splendid success and with what boundless blessing to his fellow-men this whole community can attest. Our sketch of Dr. Dickson as a medical man would be imperfect without recalling two qualities not so common among men as suc- cessful and distinguished as we could desire, namely, his unfailing promptness and punctuality in all ap- pointments, whether to his high or low, and his friendship and almost fatherly help and kindness to young and struggling members of the profession. His powerful frame, personal health and commanding presence were environed with such an atmosphere of tenderness and gentleness as made the sick-room take on an air of geniality and comfort even when he departed. From the absorbing duties of his life he al- lowed himself but one relaxation. He was an ardent sportsman, a capital shot and a bold rider. It was not uncommon to hear the baying of his hounds, the herald of his approach on his daily rounds, and to see him sweep by in the glee and excitement of a boy. No doubt his long life and the hunting habits of the old Maryland laid the foundation of this taste; at any rate it never left him. He was one of the original members of the Kanakee club, and a regular visitor during the season, till age and increasing infirmities forbade any longer such enjoyments.

Dr. Dickson, at the time of his death, was nearly seventy-four years of age, and for nearly fifty-five years had been actively engaged in practice. Except when prevented by illness, he was in his office every day until near his death. Up to the time of his death there were no signs of mental disability to mar his long and useful life. The enjoyments of a laborious life had passed over him. Amid the cares and hourly demands of his large prac- tice he found time to take a warm and active interest in every matter relating to the general welfare of his profession, and paid the most diligent attention to all new discoveries in his own and kindred sciences, and with such diligence, joined to an exceedingly re- lentive memory, it was not strange that he should have made a national reputation for his knowledge in all branches of science. Dr. Dickson could name and describe the life, growth and characteristics of the four thousand species of plants found in Pennsylvania, and was equally versed in zoology. He was a passionate sportsman, and during the early days of his practice, when he was compelled to make his visits through this and the neighboring counties, he was at all times accompanied by his dog, Pieces, and followed by a pack of thoroughbred hounds. Col. Mc Kelvey, in relating his first meeting with the deceased, in 1834, said he had never seen a more handsome man, under more fa- vorable circumstances. The doctor was espe- cially well known for his never being without resource in any operation. He was an expert in devising instruments for special occasions, and some stories of his surgical feats are among the medical records of the nation.

Dr. John Dickson enjoyed, to a remarkable degree, the affectionate regard of all who knew him. Both socially and professionally he was venerated for his extensive knowl- edge, his eminent abilities, his long and val- uable services, his earnest integrity and the spotless purity of his moral character.

Eight children who lived to maturity were born to Dr. John and Mary (Way) Dickson (seven of whom survive their father), all well known and greatly respected in the com- munity. Their names are as follows: Mary W., wife of Alexander M. Watson, a leading attorney of Pittsburgh; Elizabeth S. Dickson; Agnes C., wife of T. J. Graff, iron- and steel-manufacturer, Pittsburgh; John S., M. D.; Joseph N., M. D., married to Hannah Wat- son; Sarah O., deceased wife of B. H. L. Dabb, photographer, Pittsburgh; Birdie, wife of Herbert Johns, journalist on the Pitts- burgh Dispatch; Laura, wife of Edward M. Godfrey, paper manufacturer, Pittsburgh.

John Shields Dickson, a leading and highly popular physician and surgeon of Pittsburgh, was born in the city of Alle- gheny, Pa., April 11, 1844, eldest son and fourth child of Dr. John and Mary (Way) Dickson. He was educated at Jefferson Col- lege, Washington county, Pa., until the out- break of the rebellion, when he enlisted in Co. G, 28th P. V., Col. Geary commanding. For sixteen months he was with the regiment in all its engagements, was then discharged on account of disability, and following winter resumed his studies. Entering Jeffer- son Medical College at Philadelphia, from there he graduated in 1868. For one year he practiced medicine with his father, and in June, 1869, he entered into laborious life. He has since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession. The doctor was married, Nov. 23, 1872, to Miss Sarah H. Caldwell, a native of Pittsburgh, daughter of James and Mary (Hannah) Caldwell, and by her has one child, Agnes Caldwell Dickson, born March 10, 1874.

Bishop Whitehead. Rt. Rev. Cort- landt Whitehead, D. D., second bishop of Pittsburgh (P. E. Church), was born in New York city, Oct. 30, 1842. He graduated from Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., in 1869, from Yale College in 1863, and from the Philadelphia Divinity School in 1867. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Odenheimer, of New Jersey, June 21, 1867, and during three years following was a missionary at Black Hawk and Georgetown, Colo. He was ordained priest Aug. 7, 1868. From November, 1870, to his elevation to the episcopate, he was rector of the Church of the Nativity, South Bethlehem, Pa. In 1890 he received the degree of D. D. from Union College, and in 1888 that of S. T. D. from Hobart College. He was consecrated second bishop of Pittsburgh in Trinity church of that city, Jan. 25, 1888.

Rev. Edmund Belfour, D. D., was born in Alsted, a suburb of Copenhagen, Denmark, Aug. 9, 1833. His father, who was well educated, came to this country in 1839, and the family followed two years later in the sailing-vessel Isabella, which made the voyage to New York in nine weeks. Here the family settled. The boy Edmund was the youngest of seven children, and at the end of one year's residence in New York he began to work in order to aid in supporting the family. It was not until his sixteenth year that he entered school, beginning at the very foundation. He expected to learn the machinist's trade, but his pastor, Rev. Dr. C. Martin, who confirmed him at this time in St. James' Lutheran Church, on Mulberry street, advised him and urged him to study for the ministry. By studying day and night he succeeded at the end of nine months in passing the examination for admission to the College of the City of New York. He completed his course in the summer of 1854, and received medals for proficiency in moral science and oratory. In the fall of the same year he entered the Lutheran Theological Seminary at Gettysburg, Pa. In the spring of 1857 he became the pastor of St. Paul's Lutheran Church in Schoharie, N. Y., and the Associated Lutheran Church at Central Bridge, also serving the parish successfully for eleven years. At the end of that time he became pastor of St. John's Lutheran Church in Easton, Pa., where he lived happily for nearly forty years, then he was asked by the general council to go to Chicago to organize English Lutheran churches. He entered on this work Feb. 1, 1874, and succeeded in founding two congregations, Trinity on the north side and Wicker Park on the west side. But the climate bringing on a serious sickness, he accepted a call to the First English Evangelical Lutheran Church in Pittsburgh, and began his labors there Feb. 1, 1880, having now held the position nine years.

During his ministry the congregation built its magnificent church and chapel on Grant street. Dr. Belfour's ministry has been marked by persevering, conservative and successful labors, and has been singularly peaceful and happy. In his library are found books in eight or nine different languages. Twelve years ago he translated from the Danish 'Pontoppidan's Explanation of Luther's Catechism,' which is now in its tenth edition.

Rev. Dr. Reid. William James Reid, D. D., was born Aug. 17, 1834, in South Argyle, Washington county, N. Y. He graduated from Union in 1855, and studied theology at Allegheny. He was licensed April 2, 1861, ordained April 7, 1862, and has been pastor of the First U. P. Church in Pittsburgh since his ordination. He was secretary of the Board of Home Missions from 1865 to 1873, on the committee to prepare the digest in 1876, principal clerk of the U. P. General Assembly since 1875, and delegate to the Presbyterian council of 1884. His publications are: 'Unseen Battles of Youth,' a sermon; 'Lectures on the Revelation,' and 'United Presbyterianism.' He is editor of the United Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. Woodburn. B. F. Woodburn is a descendant of early settlers in Allegheny county. James Woodburn, his grandfather, was the first permanent settler in Crescent township, of which he and James O'Hara owned at one time nearly all the land. James Woodburn came to a tract adjoining Shoustown in 1794. B. F. Woodburn was born at the old homestead on the bank of the Ohio river, March 23, 1833. In the adjoining village many of the famous steamers of the olden time were built, and a river life had great attraction for the boys of that day. Young Woodburn, having secured a clerkship, embarked on a steamer for Fort Smith, Ark., and in that capacity, and as captain, he spent eight years on various steamers plying the Ohio, Mississippi, Cumberland and other rivers. At the age of twenty-six years, having made a profession of religion, he entered on a seven years' course of study, graduated at Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, in 1862, and at the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny, in 1865. He became pastor of the Mount Pleasant Baptist Church immediately after completing his studies, and after four and one-half years' service accepted a call to the Sandusky Street Baptist Church, Allegheny, March 1, 1870. He has been intimately associated with the work of the denomination, especially in the western part of the state, and in 1881 he received the degree of D. D. from Lewisburg University. He has also been interested in the educational and philanthropic enterprises of this region. He has served for a number of years as a member of the board of controllers of Allegheny City, and has been president of the Allegheny General hospital since its establishment in 1886. He is the author of the history of the Baptist denomination published in this work.

James K. Moorhead. Gen. James Kennedy Moorhead was born in Dauphin county, Pa., in 1806, and was the son of William Moorhead, who emigrated from the north of Ireland to this country in 1798, settling in Lancaster county, Pa., where he was married. In 1806 the senior Mr. Moorhead purchased a farm on the Susquehanna, twenty miles above Harrisburg, long known as Moorhead's Ferry, where his son, James K., was born. Mr. Moorhead was not only an enthusiastic and successful farmer, but also a cultivated and intelligent man. He was active in politics, and was by President Madison appointed a collector of internal revenue. In 1813 he removed to Harrisburg, where he died two years later, leaving his widow and six children nearly penniless. They removed to the old farm at Moorhead’s Ferry.

James K. Moorhead had no educational advantages, in the way of schools, after he was eleven years of age. At fourteen he had charge of the farm, and won quite a reputation in that capacity. He was apprenticed to a tanner in Lancaster county, completing his apprenticeship in September, 1826. He worked at his trade some time, and two years later took the contract to build the Susquehanna division of the Pennsylvania canal, in which he was successful, and saved therefrom a capital of three or four hundred dollars.

In December, 1829, he was married to Miss Jane Logan, and removed to Huntingdon, Pa. For the next ten years he was engaged in work connected with the canal, especially the laying of locks, which proved a greater success than had been anticipated. In 1836 he removed to Pittsburgh, and three years later he became connected with the Monongahela Navigation company, organized to construct dams and locks on the Monongahela river. This work was completed in 1841. In May, 1846, Mr. Moorhead was elected president of the company, and held the position for thirty-eight years consecutively. He was engaged in the construction of locks, dams, bridges, reservoirs and similar work in Pennsylvania, Indiana and Kentucky, and won a wide reputation for this class of work. In 1840 he united with others in establishing the Union Cotton-factory in Allegheny City, of which he was chosen manager, and he settled with his family in that locality. He held the position of manager until the spring of 1849, when the factory was destroyed by fire, as was Gen. Moorhead’s residence. The next year he became a partner in the Novelty works, at Pittsburgh, and built himself a new house, which was burned to the ground in 1853.

Gen. Moorhead was among the first to become interested in telegraphic communication, and largely directed the construction of lines between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh and between Pittsburgh and Louisville, and was for some years president of the companies owning these lines. He was one of the leading spirits in telegraphic enterprises in this country. From the beginning of his residence in Pittsburgh, Gen. Moorhead took rank as a leading and public-spirited citizen. In early life he was a democrat, but added in the formation of the republican party, being a strong protectionist. In 1858 he was elected on the republican ticket member of the XXXVth Congress. So well satisfied were his constituents that he was four times re-elected, and would have been chosen for the sixth term but for his positive declination. His large experience in business affairs, his thorough knowledge of public interests, his unswerving integrity, and his sterling good sense made Gen. Moorhead a valuable representative. He served three years as chairman of the committee on manufactures, and was a member of the committees on ways and means and naval affairs. Much of the complexion of our present tariff is due to what was known as the Moorhead tariff bill.

Gen. Moorhead was at one time postmaster at Pittsburgh and at another time state adjutant-general. Jeremiah S. Black owed his first appointment to the friendship of Gen. Moorhead, whose influence with Gov. Porter was very great. During the rebellion Gen. Moorhead’s advice was frequently sought by Secretary Stanton, and even by President Lincoln. It is said that Mr. Moorhead personally prevented the removal of arms from the Pittsburgh armory by Secretary Floyd. He took an active and influential part in politics, and in 1806 and in 1890 was a prominent candidate for United States senator, and was also strongly recommended for an appointment to the Senate by Gen. Grant.

He was chairman of the republican county committee in the Garfield campaign of 1880. Early in 1882, after a short visit to Washington, Gen. Moorhead began to show signs of failing health, and took a brief trip to Old Point Comfort. He started in May, to attend the meeting of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church at Saratoga, to which he had been a chosen delegate. He was unable to proceed farther than Philadelphia, when his physician ordered his return home. Here his health was very poor, confirming him to his house the greater part of the time. The end gradually approached, and on the 6th of March, 1884, Gen. Moorhead breathed his last, in the seventy-eighth year of his age.

At the time of his death he was president of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, president of the Monongahela Navigation company, chairman of the executive committee of the Western Pennsylvania Hospital, trustee in the Western University and in the Western Theological Seminary, president of the Ohio River Commission, member of the board of trustees of the Pennsylvania Institute for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, trustee in the People’s Savings Bank, etc. Gen. Moorhead was as prominent in religious as in temporal affairs, and for many years was a ruling elder in the Third Presbyterian Church. His death was felt to be a great loss to the entire community. All the corporations and institutions with which he has been connected passed resolutions of regret and condolence upon the event. His monument is found in many of the leading business industries of Pittsburgh with which he was identified. The Monongahela Republican said of him:

The breadth of his mind was only equalled by the breadth of his charity; the strength of his judgment by the tenderness of his emotions; the earnestness of his zeal by the warmth of his sympathies; the energy of his will by the gentleness of his spirit; the faithfulness with which he adhered to his own convictions by the tolerance which he accorded to those of others.
Oren Winslow Sadler, M. D., of Pittsburgh, though comparatively a young man, is one of the most prominent and successful practitioners in his line of practice in the United States. Born of New England stock, in Brewerton, Onondaga county, N. Y., Jan. 2, 1843, he traces his ancestry to John Sadler, who emigrated from England and settled in Massachusetts early in the last century, while other members of the family came still earlier. Dr. Sadler has in his possession a number of heirlooms in which he takes considerable pride, some of them dating back to the Mayflower. Dr. Sadler's grandfather, William Sadler, with three brothers, Scott, Giles and Arteus, settled in 1820 near Onondaga lake, near the city of Syracuse, then a small village, while the surrounding country was a wilderness. Of a sturdy and resolute race, they were not dismayed at the labors and hardships before them, but built for themselves homes in the new country. Dr. Sadler's father, William Dexter Sadler, grew up amid the surroundings usual to pioneer homes, yet, through the efforts of his noble mother, he was enabled to secure a fair education. When he was twenty-five years old he was married to Miss Nancy Spire, daughter of a neighboring farmer. William D. Sadler was not content to remain in the home of his birth, but, when his son, Oren W., was three years old, removed to Millburn, Lake county, Ill., going via the Erie canal and the lakes to Kenosha, Wis. Here Mr. Sadler, by dint of persevering labor, built him a new home and secured a competency which enabled him to send his two sons, Oren Winslow and Alphonso S., to college. Mr. Sadler, with his good wife, is still living in Marshalltown, Iowa.

The oldest son, Oren Winslow, spent his boyhood on the home farm and in the public schools, developing not alone in body and mind, but in an ambition to make the best possible use of the powers God had given him. He tried one year of business life, but that did not suit the bent of his inclinations. Believing that the medical profession was best suited to his tastes and abilities, he entered, April 1, 1863, the office of D. B. Taylor, M. D., in whom he found a skilful practitioner and faithful instructor. Here the young man devoted from fourteen to sixteen hours of each day to study, and laid broad and deep the foundation of his future success. After a thorough summer's work he entered the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where he attended every lecture, taking a full course of analytical chemistry in the laboratory, and receiving his diploma. After another year of office study he entered Chauncey College, and there he undertook to carry out his own principles as to thoroughness. At the same time he attended a course of clinical lectures on ophthalmology at the Cook County hospital. This course was optional, and Dr. Sadler, though not neglecting other branches, gave many extra hours to the study of the eye, passing a successful examination, and receiving, in addition to his regular M. D. diploma, one from the chartered eye and ear infirmary. After his graduation Dr. Sadler settled in Dodge county, Minn., and was successful from the outset. He became a member of the Minnesota State Medical society, and of the Dodge County Medical society, being chosen secretary of the latter body. He at once took front rank in his profession, and here he won his first honors in surgery. After a difficult and dangerous operation, in which he was assisted by a physician who had retired from active practice, the latter remarked, "he dare do anything." Dr. Sadler kept in practice his knowledge of eye surgery, which was more to his taste than any other branch of his profession. Being ambitious to find a larger field for his chosen specialties and growing powers, he removed to the east in 1872, and settled at Titusville, Pa., then the center of the great oil-regions. Being a stranger among strangers, the question how to obtain a practice recurrent. A friend (Dr. Sibbet) suggested the use of the public press. The suggestion was acted upon, and modest and truthful announcements of his specialty appeared in the daily papers, resulting in the immediate building up of a large and lucrative practice. After two and a half years of successful labor in Titusville, and when the oil-fields began to decline, Dr. Sadler, determining on a still larger scope of usefulness, removed to Pittsburgh, Feb. 18, 1874, and has since made that city his home. Here he won an almost unparalleled success. He has erected an eye and ear infirmary in connection with his residence, in order to increase his facilities for doing business, and the better to accommodate his patients, who come from nearly every part of the United States, so widespread is his fame.

Dr. Sadler was married at the age of twenty-four to Miss Josephine E., daughter of George W. Slocum, the latter now resident of Mantorville, Minn. Her father's family were among the first settlers of Rhode Island, and with her grandparents were pioneers of Western Pennsylvania, settling near Conneautville, Crawford county. She has proven a helpmeet in every sense of the word, and her husband invariably consults her before entering upon any new project, and to her judgment he attributes much of his success. Dr. Sadler is yet a young man, but has achieved a success seldom met with by those of nearly twice his years. He is old in experience, a close student and an untiring worker, and thousands owe to his skill their redemption from suffering lives of blindness or deafness.

Willard H. Erwin Schmertz, president Third National Bank of Pittsburgh, was born in Dreiburg, Westphalia, Prussia, May 24, 1896. His father, John Christian Schmertz, was collector of revenues for Baron von Sierstof, and his mother, Caroline (von Westphalen) was descended from a Saxon to whom Charlemagne granted the province of Westphalia in 1803. In 1832 William E. came with his parents to America, and his father carried on business in Pittsburgh, to which he retired in 1846, dying in 1850; his widow died in 1885. W.
E. Schmertz attended the public schools of Pittsburgh until he was twelve years old, when he entered the shoestore of H. P.
Cain. In 1848 he opened a retail shoestore, and within a few years embarked in the wholesale trade. In 1860 he became a trustee in the Dollar Savings Bank, of which he is now vice-president. He was one of the organizers of the Third National Bank in 1863, and was elected president the following year.
He has served as president of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, is a director of Braddock National Bank, and chairman of the finance committee of the Chartiers Valley Gas Co. In 1883, Mr. Schmertz was placed by the Chamber of Commerce at the head of the committee, which, after a three years' fight, succeeded in obtaining the "bond syndicate," whereby the city was saved nearly $2,000,000. Mr. Schmertz was also prominent in other reform measures for the good of the city. Politically, he is a republican. Dec.
4, 1849, he married Amelia A., daughter of Rev. David Kammerer, who was fourteen years pastor of the Smithfield Street (Pittsburgh) Evangelical Church.
Rev. Dr. Boyd. John Carnahan Boyd,
D. D., was born in Westmoreland county, Pa., Jan. 16, 1832. He graduated from Jeffessen in 1854, and studied theology at Allegheny. He was licensed April 4, 1857, and was ordained April 14, 1858. He has been pastor of St. Clair, this county, ever since his ordination, and is corresponding secretary of the board of publication. He was a delegate to the first Pan Presbyterian Council in 1877, a professor and editor of the Evangelical Repository in 1881-85, and is now associate editor of the United Presbyterian. His publications have been: "An Anniversary Discourse," "The History of the Synod of Pittsburgh," and the "History of the Second Associate Reformed Presbytery of Pennsyl-van ia." He is the author of the history of the U. P. Church in Allegheny county published in this work.
Rev. E. M. Wood, A. M., D. D., has been a resident of Allegheny county the greater part of the past twenty-five years. He was born at Alliance, Ohio, Oct. 11, 1838. His father was an upright and intelligent farmer, highly respected wherever known. Dr.
Wood is one of fourteen children and one of six brothers, all of whom grew up to honorable manhood. He received such an education as was usually obtained in the common schools of his time, but as he grew up he realized the need of more advanced training to fit him for the great work for which he believed himself called. He entered Mount Union College, Alliance, Ohio, in 1858, and after working his way through a five years' course, mainly by teaching in the winter and laboring during the summer, he was graduated in the classical course in 1863 with second highest honor in his class. As a minister he entered the Pittsburgh Conference of the M. E. Church in the year of his graduation.
His fidelity and ability were quickly recognized, and hence he has, during the twenty-six years of his ministry, filled some of the most prominent churches of his denomination, and his labors have been attended with remarkable success. He has been a most ardent student all his life. He is widely recognized as a fine Hebrew, Greek and Latin scholar, and his reading is extensive, yet combined with natural science, mathematics and general literature. As an orator, especially in the domain of theology, and on great public occasions, he has but few superiors in the country. His carefully prepared public lectures on various themes are often sought after and heard with great interest and profit.
Dr. Wood has made a reputation both in the United States and Europe as a writer and author. His prominence is characterized by his learning, conciseness and an attractive imagery which holds the attention of the reader. It is known that he did most of the work on the "Cyclopedia of Methodism," in personal association with Bishop Simpson (1877). His other works are "Methodism and the Centenial of American Independence" (1876);
"How the Bible was Made" (1884); a poetical work entitled "A Splendid Wreck, and Other Poems" (1888). Besides these he has also other works of great interest about ready for the press. In 1885 Dr. Wood was elected professor in Curry University, Pittsburgh, and since that time he has been at the head of the department of natural science and logic.
John Dalzell, member of Congress Pittsburgh, is an example of the success which attends well and intelligently directed industry. His parents, Samuel and Mary (Mc-Donnell) Dalzell, came from County Down, Ireland, to America about 1840. John Dalzell was born in New York city April 19, 1845, and came with his parents to Pittsburgh in 1847. He attended the common school and the University of Western Pennsylvania, and graduated from Yale College at the age of twenty. He read law with John H.
Hampton, and was admitted to the bar in 1867, at once beginning practice as partner with his preceptor. For twenty years he acted with him as attorney for the Pennsylvania Railway company and its western leased lines, and was also solicitor for numerous corporations, among others for those in which George Westinghouse, Jr., was a moving spirit. Through an extensive practice, to which he gave his earnest attention and his best talents, he accumulated what is considered a large fortune for a young attorney.
He is a director of the Braddock National Bank, and is interested in other progressive and profitable institutions of the county.
In 1890 he was elected a member of the L1th Congress by the republicans, having previously taken no active part in politics. He at once distinguished himself in that body, and in 1888 was returned to the List Congress by a large majority.

In 1867 Mr. Dalzell married Miss Mary L., daughter of Peter Duff, the founder of the well-known Duff's Business College. Mrs. Dalzell is a native of Pittsburgh, and is the mother of four living children: William S., Bessee M., Samuel and Robert D. Mr. Dalzell resides with his family at Swissville, where they attend the Presbyterian church. A flourishing social and political club, called the Dalzell Republican club, is established in handsome quarters at this pleasant suburb of Pittsburgh.

Hon. Russell Errett was born in the city of New York, Nov. 10, 1817. His father was a native of Wicklow, near Dublin, in Ireland, who came to this country in or about 1819, shortly before the outbreak of the war of 1812. His mother was a native of Portsmouth, England. His father served as clerk for Messrs. R. & A. Stewart, who had large interests in real estate in New York city, and he was in their service when he died in 1825, at the early age of thirty-seven. His mother remarried in 1827, with Robert Souter, a native of Scotland.

There were no public schools in New York then, and Mr. Errett had been at a private school kept by Henry Edmunds for about two years when the necessities of the family, caused by the death of his father, drove him to serve as an errand-boy with Holmes & Samo, who carried on the business of gilding hat- linings. In 1837 his step-father removed to a farm in Washington Valley, Somerset county, N. J., where the family lived till 1839, when Mr. Souter came to Pittsburgh and went in partnership with his brother-in-law, Robert M. Laren, who was then running the mill formerly belonging to West Elliott, in what is now Temperanceville, or the Thirty-sixth ward of the city. In 1835 Mr. Souter purchased a farm in Robinson township, two-thirds of which is now embraced in the borough of Chartiers, where he remained till 1857, when he removed to Hancock county, W. Va.

In 1832 Mr. Errett was apprenticed to Andrew Easton, a baker on Scotch Hill, for three years. When his time had expired he went to Louisville, Ky., and thence to Tuscalight, Ala., where he worked for a time at his trade. He then returned to Louisville, and worked for two years with a Mr. Woolford, formerly of Pittsburgh. The panic of 1837 having paralyzed business in Louisville, he engaged in work on the slackwatering of Green river. Here he contracted the fever and ague, and was compelled to return home, arriving at the time when shipplasters were first issued in the hard time of 1837. He taught school for a while in Lower St. Clair (now Chartiers township) and in Robinson the Pennsylvania, then taught during nine months, in 1838, in Findlay township. In 1839 he obtained a clerkship with John M. Snowden, Jr., then in the coal business at the mouth of Saw-Mill run. He remained till 1842, when he was appointed mayor's clerk by Alexander Hay, mayor of Pittsburgh, and continued till 1845. Prior to engaging in this service, or in November, 1841, Mr. Errett was married. During 1842, '43 and '44 he edited the Daily Sun, a small penny journal, issued in the days before the telegraph was known. In 1845 Dr. Lemoyne and other abolitionists of Washington county established an anti-slavery weekly paper in Washington, Pa., and Mr. Errett became its editor and publisher. His family that had remained in Pittsburgh were burned out in the great fire in 1845, and he removed them to Washington, where he resided till 1852. His anti-slavery paper, the Washington Patriot, was published four years, when it died. From 1848 to 1852 he worked at the printing business, first with Seth T. Hurd, on the Commonwealth, and afterward with White & Baasman on the Reporter. In December, 1852, he accepted the place of mercantile reporter on the Pittsburgh Gazette, and he has remained in and about the city ever since. From mercantile reporter he was promoted to assistant editor, and in 1856 he united with Samuel Riddle and D. L. Eaton in purchasing the Gazette from D. N. White. In 1863 the paper was sold to N. P. Reed & Co., the present owners.

In 1856 he took an active part in forming the republican party, and that party having carried the lower house of the state legislature in 1858, he became, on its meeting in 1859, a candidate for clerk of the house, but was unsuccessful. In 1859 the same party carried the state senate, and he was elected clerk of that body when it met, in January, 1860. In December, 1859, he had been nominated for city controller, having served for four years as member of the common council from the old Sixth ward, and having been for two years president of that council; but the republican party having been in a distracted state when he was nominated for city controller, he concluded that he would not be elected, and went to Harrisburg to press his election as clerk of the senate. The election in Pittsburgh took place on the same day that the senate was organized, and it so happened that he was elected to both offices, contrary to his expectation. He was re-elected clerk of the senate in 1861, and the war of the rebellion breaking out soon afterward, he was, in October, 1861, appointed paymaster in the U. S. army, in which capacity he served till July, 1866, when he was mustered out.

In 1866 he bought a third interest in the job-printing business of Anderson, Errett & Co. In 1867 he offered himself as a candidate for the state senate against Thomas J. Bigham, Esq., and was nominated and elected; his democratic opponent being James P. Barton. East of the Roads. He resigned after two years' service, in 1869, and was in that year appointed U. S. assessor of internal revenue by President Grant, in which position he served till the office was abolished.
In 1871, '72 and '73 and in 1874, he served as chairman of the republican state committee. In January, 1872, he was again chosen clerk of the state senate, and served till the close of the session of 1873.

In 1876 he entered into an active struggle for the congressional nomination with Gen. James S. Negley, and was successful. He was elected in November of that year by 1,590 majority over Hon. James H. Hopkins. He was re-elected in 1878 by 1,560 majority over David Kirk, greenbacker, the democratic candidate being J. K. P. Duft, Esq. In 1880 he was elected a third time by about 5,000 majority. He was a candidate a fourth time, in 1882, but that was the year of the "independent republican" revolt, and the independent republicans having given their votes to Hopkins, the latter was elected. In 1883, at the close of his congressional career, President Arthur appointed him U. S. pension-agent at Pittsburgh, which place he filled until May, 1887.

Mr. Errett is now in his seventy-second year, but hale, stout and hearty. He had five brothers and one sister. Of these three of the brothers, Henry, Joseph and John, are dead; the oldest, William, is still living at Fort Laramie, Wyoming, and a younger brother, Isaac, editor of the Christian Standard, at Cincinnati, died last year. His sister, married to Joseph Johnson, is still living at Hazelwood. His mother died at the advanced age of eighty-three in 1877.

The long editorial experience of Mr. Errett has enabled him to wield a ready pen, as is attested by his compilation of the history of Pittsburgh in this volume.

John B. Larkin, postmaster, Pittsburgh, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 23, 1838, a son of Michael and Margaret Larkin, natives of County Derry, Ireland, who came to Allegheny county in 1833, former of whom was a carpenter and builder. Like a majority of our prominent men, John B. Larkin is self-made. While quite young he was employed as errand-boy with Messrs. Keen & Keller, tin and sheet-iron manufacturers, remaining with them eleven years. In 1862 he located in Ironton, Ohio, and was elected clerk of that city in 1867, succeeding Hon. C. B. Edgerton, judge of probate court. His first report of the financial condition of the city was instructive, and a comprehensive document, opening up to the people of the city and county a book that had been sealed to them. The report attracted the attention of the business interests and he was offered the clerkship of the Olive Furnace company, an extensive iron firm, whose senior member is one of the wealthiest men in Southern Ohio. While in their employ Mr. Larkin received the unsolicited nomination for auditor of the county, and on his election he was appointed as his position and led the party in its forlorn hope. Gen. Grant was making his first fight for the presidency that year, sweeping the country, and Mr. Larkin, although leading his ticket, was beaten by about three hundred votes. His old position was immediately offered him, but, declining it, he turned his face homeward and engaged in business for himself at 22 Diamond square. The place was abandoned, owing to a dispute about the lease of the property, and Mr. Larkin was employed by Fleming, Agnew & Co. Subsequently he became junior member of the firm of McCandless & Co. This firm and that of Graff, Hughes & Co. had a common interest, and Mr. Larkin traveled for both, only ceasing his connection at the death of Mr. McCandless. He then accepted an office from Weldon & Kelly, resigning in 1883; was then appointed member of the Natural Gas company by Judge Stowe.

April 5, 1885, he was appointed postmaster of Pittsburgh. Mr. Larkin has given his entire attention to the postoffice department, and the result is appreciated by the general public. He has over one hundred letters from leading citizens and business-men testifying to their appreciation of his improvements in facilitating the more perfect and prompt delivery of mail. This result has been obtained by careful study, careful observation and hard work. Mr. Larkin devotes thirteen hours a day to his position, and is continually adding improvements that hasten the delivery of mail. He is well known all over the state through service to his party in the past twenty-five years. He began at the bottom, working his way up through the conventions, and represented Pittsburgh in the national convention that nominated Hancock in 1880. Owing to his knowledge of gases and mechanics he was appointed one of the five persons selected by Judge Stowe to form a gas commission to determine the best and safest means for controlling and transporting natural gas, which proved a success, no serious explosions having occurred since.

Mr. Larkin was united in marriage, May 9, 1873, to Miss Rose Cannevin, at Pittsburgh, daughter of Thomas Cannevin, and a sister of Rev. Rev. Joseph Cannevin. Mr. and Mrs. Larkin have four children: Alice, John C., Regina and Naomi.

Reuben Miller, Jr. Briefly narrating the life of this highly honored old citizen of Pittsburgh is as the unrolling of a panorama of the present century's growth, and disclosing the changes that have been wrought in more than fourscore years of steady development.

Reuben Miller, Jr., was born near Franklin, Pa., June 24, 1805, a son of Reuben and Hannah Miller, natives of Chester county, same state. In the fall of 1805 the family moved to Pittsburgh, and here young Reuben received his education. At the age of thirteen he commenced work in his father's iron business. In 1821 he made a trading trip to far-off England, and continued to 1824 in his father's employ, when he opened a general provision-store in Pittsburgh. In course of time his business extended into Blair, Huntingdon and Centre counties. In another year he became interested in a tobacco factory. At this stage of life he married, the lady of his choice being Ann F. Miller, the youngest daughter of Peter and Sarah Harry. In 1836 Mr. Miller bought out his partners, and continued the entire business alone. In the same year he and others commenced and successfully carried on a foundry on the south side of the Monongahela river. In 1839 the firm of which Mr. Miller was a part built the first and only iron boat, the Valley Forge, that ever navigated the western rivers. For fourteen years, commencing in 1840, Mr. Miller confined himself exclusively to his steamboat interests, and in 1854 he retired from the concern, transferring his interests to his sons. Of many public institutions in both city and country he has been director, president or manager, and has always kept his heart and hand interested in everything tending to the public good.

Five sons and two daughters were born to him, both the latter of whom died in early childhood; one son was drowned in 1860 at the age of fifteen; the next youngest gave his services to his country, and on the third day at Gettysburg received his death-wound.

John H. Flagler, Esq. Among the originators and foremost leaders of the various vast industries of this country, no one occupies a more prominent position than the subject of this brief sketch, and Pennsylvania is especially proud in having had his energies more particularly devoted to her welfare in the iron-manufacturing business. Mr. Flagler was born at Cold Spring, N. Y., which is on the Hudson river opposite West Point, in 1836. The famous West Point Foundry and Machine-shops are located at Cold Spring, and were in those days the largest in this country. It was a question as to whether Mr. Flagler should be schooled for West Point or take an engineering course; his natural tastes favored the latter. He was therefore sent to the Patterson (N. Y.) Academy, where he graduated. He then was taken into the iron business with his uncles, Messrs. John & James H. Haldane, who owned and operated the Greenwich Iron-works of Connecticut. After gaining practical knowledge there, he was taken to their extensive iron-stores in New York city, where he remained for a period of years. He was then sent to Europe by the firm, for the purpose of studying the detailed methods of iron-tube making as pursued there, for the purpose of introducing the foreign system in this country; there being but two concerns in the United States then manufacturing pipe and tubes, large quantities being brought from abroad, of which the firm of Messrs. John & James H. Haldane were the largest importers. In 1860 Mr. Flagler was given the Boston branch of this iron firm as his interest, and in 1862, when the war broke out, his knowledge of the question of heavy armor-plates for our monitor service, and his experience and ability in iron matters, enabled him to obtain the iron contracts for several of the monitors which were built in the New England waters; a portion of the iron which came under his direction was also furnished to the Monitor which fought the Merrimac. In 1867 Mr. Flagler conceived the idea of making pipe and tubes in this country, on his own account, by improved processes over those used in Europe, and he consequently built his wrought-iron pipe and tube works, operating it under the firm name of J. H. Flagler & Co., afterward merging it into that of the National Tube-works company at East Boston, Mass. The National Tube-works company was, therefore, incorporated in 1869. In that year 125 men were employed at the East Boston works. In 1872 he went to McKeesport, Pa., and built additional works for the company, where to-day 5,800 men are employed. Mr. Flagler's energy and keen foresight, therefore, have produced an establishment of such gigantic proportions that it can be properly called the Krupp's of America; it is now the largest pipe and tube-works in the world, recognized as such throughout this country and Europe.

Mr. Flagler's opinion on mercantile and political questions is prominently recognized throughout Pennsylvania and New York, and his many duties connected with his interests have forced him to refuse many offers of political offices. As a friend and promoter of the working-men's best interests, the feeling toward him was strongly evidenced a short time ago upon his return from a European trip, at which time over five thousand of his employés turned out in a parade of welcome, and the event was celebrated as a holiday in McKeesport. The great success of the National Tube-works company, and the close attachment between employer and employé evidence Mr. Flagler's ability and worth. Mr. Flagler to-day not only occupies the position as general managing director of the National Tube-works company, but is also president of other organizations representing, in the aggregate, over $70,000,000 of capital.

George H. Meyer, president of the German-American Insurance company of Pittsburgh, was born near Osnavrück, Hanover, Prussia, Sept. 5, 1829, and is a son of Christian and Katrina (Schumacher) Meyer. He was reared on a farm, and received an ordinary German education. When seventeen years old he came to Pittsburgh, and immediately commenced work, in order to earn a livelihood. After a time he learned the builder's trade, and meantime attended night school for four years. For twenty-five years he was engaged in contracting and building, and was ten years a partner, with six others, in the manufacture of glass. He also invested some of his means in an iron-manufacturing concern. Mr. Meyer was one of the original incorporators of the German-American Insurance company, in 1875, taking the position of president from the start, and to his efforts is largely due the success of the institution. He is a stockholder in the Fifth avenue and Duquesne banks and the German Insurance company. He has represented the Sixth ward three times in the city council, and in the school board, and was several years a trustee in the G. L. Church, with which his family is associated. He is a republican.

Mr. Meyer was married, in 1832, to Eliza Gustvogel, who was born in the same locality as himself, and they have five living children: George, a builder; Frederick F., a glass-presser; Elizabeth; William F., member of a wholesale grocery firm, and Margaret M.

Rev. W. J. Holland, D. D., Ph. D. On the paternal side, Dr. Holland is descended from Philemon Holland, the celebrated English translator and author. His father, Rev. F. R. Holland, a North Carolinian by birth, has built a prominent place in the ministry of the Unitas Fratrum; on the maternal side he is a descendant of Rev. Francis Doughty, a Presbyterian clergyman, who, in 1643, preached the first sermon in the English language on Manhattan Island. He afterward preached to the Puritans in Maryland, of which colony his brother-in-law, Capt. William Stone, was governor, and there he died. His great-granddaughter, Mary Doughty, married Col. Timothy Horsfield, of Staten Island, one of the founders of the Moravian Church in New York, who subsequently removed to Northampton county, Pa., and became an active colonial officer. His son, Joseph Horsfield, who was a member of the first Constitutional Convention of Pennsylvania, married a daughter of Daniel Benezet, and was the father of Eliza Horsfield, who married Jacob Wolle, the son of a Moravian missionary in the West Indies.

Jacob was sent when a child to be educated in the United States, and made his home in Bethlehem, Pa., occupying his time during the latter half of his life mainly in the study of botany. It is through the Horsfields and the Horsfields, as well as from his father, who is a well-known conchologist, that Dr. Holland inherits his strong predilection for natural science. Dr. Thomas Horsfield, a descendant of Col. Timothy, was the naturalist of Sir Stamford Raffles' expedition to the east, and for many years the Curator of the British East India Company's Museum in London, and a recognized authority on botany and zoology of the Indo-Malayan region. Rev. Francis Wolle, of Bethlehem, a cousin of Dr. Holland, is the highest living authority in America on microscopic botany. Dr. Holland's mother's maiden name was Augusta Wolle.

The doctor was born Aug. 16, 1848, at Bethany, a mission station of the Moravian Church on the island of Jamaica, where his father was then a missionary. He graduated at the Moravian College and Theological Seminary at Bethlehem in 1867, and at Amherst College in 1869. After two years' experience as a teacher in Massachusetts, he entered the Princeton Theological Seminary, whence he graduated in course in 1874. He immediately entered on the pastorate of Bellefield Presbyterian Church in Pittsburgh, where he has since remained.

Dr. Holland was married in January, 1879, to Carrie, the youngest daughter of the late John Moorhead, of Pittsburgh. In 1877 he visited Europe as a delegate to the first Pan-Presbyterian Council, which met in Edinburgh, and in 1879 he again visited Europe as a delegate to the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance at Basle. In 1887 he went to Japan as the naturalist of the expedition sent by the National Academy of Science and the United States Navy Department to observe the total eclipse of the sun of that year. Several of his occasional lectures and discourses have been published; he has been a frequent contributor to the dailies, and has contributed many papers to the scientific journals, himself drawing and engraving most of the illustrations which accompany them.

Dr. Holland is a member of the Academy of Natural Sciences in Philadelphia, and of various other learned societies in this country. He is also a member of the Entomological Societies of London and France; is a member of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, and has been led to make lengthy researches into local history; and at the request of the Presbytery of Pittsburgh is engaged in the preparation of a history of that venerable body, of which, for many years, he was the clerk. He is one of the trustees of the Pennsylvania Female College, and of the School of Design for Women, Vice-President of the Board of Trustees of the Western Theological Seminary, and President of the Iron City Microscopical Society. He is also the historian of the Presbyterian Churches of Allegheny county in this work.

Abraham Marcy, senior member of the firm of A. R. Marcy and Company, under whose management the Pittsburgh foundry has won a national if not a world-wide reputation, was born in Orange county, N. Y., March 4, 1804. His paternal ancestors, who were of English descent, settled in what is now Putnam county, N. Y., in 1686. His father had property on the Hudson near West Point, and was owner and captain of a sloop which sailed between Albany and New York. The mother of Abraham was Catherine Kingsland, of English ancestry, who were among the early settlers of New Jersey. From the age of fourteen Mr. Marcy assisted his father in the navigation of his sloop, Gen. Pike, on the Hudson, and long before his twenty-first birthday he was captain of her. On reaching his majority, he, for a year, carried on business on the island of Jamaica, where his father was then a missionary. He graduated at the Moravian College and Theological Seminary at Bethlehem in 1867, and at Amherst College in 1869. After two years' experience as a teacher in Massachusetts, he entered the Princeton Theological Seminary, In 1836 he obtained an interest in the business, which was carried on under various firm names until in 1883, when it developed into its present style, our subject being in all these years an active partner.

Mr. Garrison was married, Aug. 1, 1830, in Albany, N. Y., to Mary Clement. He is president of the Diamond National bank, the Safe Deposit company, of Pittsburgh, and the Birmingham Bridge company, as well as director in several other institutions. He has been a generous though unostentatious giver to the varied charities of Allegheny county, and to St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, of which he was an original projector.

EDMUND COGSWELL CONVERSE. One of the most brilliant and deservedly successful iron-masters in this great district is Assistant General Manager E. C. Converse, of the National Tube-works company. Mr. Converse was born Nov. 7, 1849, at No. 5 McLean street, Boston, Mass. His father was James C. Converse, Esq, now in good health at the age of eighty-two years, and president of the National Tube-works company, having preserved his faculties to a wonderful degree. His mother, who died some years ago, was Sarah Ann Peabody, of the New England branch of the Peabody family, the original members of which settled in America during the early period in the history of the country. On the Converse side his ancestors came over in the Mayflower with Miles Standish, and settled at Woburn, Mass. The family were of Norman origin, the name being spelled Conieres, then changed to Convers, and then finally changed with the new class of family spelling to Converse. During the progress of the colonial days the family were always identified with military affairs, and during the Revolution took an active and prominent part.

Mr. Converse was educated at and graduated from the Latin school of Boston, and afterward finished by an English course at the Boston English high-school, the mathematical branches of the latter being ranked with the best of colleges. He entered his father's dry-goods business in 1866, working for nothing as errand-boy. The firm name of the concern was then J. C. Converse, Blagden & Co. He was afterward transferred to their New York branch office, and put in charge of the receiving department in 1867. He remained there until 1872, at which time he applied to his brother-in-law, J. H. Fagler, the general manager, and to his father, the president of the National Tube-works company, for a position at the new works of this concern then being located at McKeesport, Pa. Mr. Converse still has his letter of appointment, which offers him the position of storekeeper at $450 per year, and which he accepted, entering the service of the company in August, 1872. He inaugurated the system of rigid inspection of skelp-iron, which has ever since existed at this company's works, and by close application made himself valuable in all mill departments. He rapidly gained detail knowledge of the business by the study of metallurgy and kindred matters pertaining to improved iron-working, oftentimes spending his evenings in welding, heating, and performing other operations of work for pleasure, and to obtain a thorough practical knowledge of the business in all its intricate branches. From the position of storekeeper he was promoted to that of iron inspector, thence to general receiving clerk, thence to job clerk, thence to assistant correspondent, thence to correspondent, thence to order department, thence to cost clerk, thence to assistant superintendent, thence to private secretary to manager, thence to assistant manager, thence to assistant general manager, and now he is one of the directors of the company. Mr. Converse is also chairman of the Republic Iron-works, limited, of Pittsburgh; president of the Edith Furnace company, vice-chairman of the American Water Works & Guarantee company, limited, as well as a director in the American Bank Note company, several banks and other large organizations.

As a young man Mr. Converse was noted for being the most successful pipe salesman in the United States, his ability in this direction no doubt being the result of his thorough practical knowledge of his business and the different processes through which the material had to go, from the ore to the finished product. This knowledge, coupled with his keen mercantile experience and foresight, is shown by the very great success his company enjoys under his management of the sales of the National Tube-works company, the present tonnage of finished pipe, tubes, etc., amounting to from eight hundred to twelve hundred tons daily. It is a very rare exception to find, in the iron business especially, a master so thoroughly competent in both practical and mercantile knowledge as is Mr. Converse. He possesses a clear and original mechanical mind, with that of a shrewd business-man. His inventions are numerous, the most important of which is his Converse patent leak joint water and gas works system, the first patent of which were taken out by him about 1889. Up to that time a perfect connection for wrought-iron pipe, without cutting threads, was unknown. After inventing the joint he perfected the system in all its details, and at this writing it is the only wrought-iron water and gas works system in the world. The sales from this department alone have amounted to millions of dollars, and thousands of miles of the pipe with this joint have been laid throughout this country during the past few years.

The great development of the National Tube-works company has rendered it necessary for Mr. Converse to take up his headquarters in New York city, where he is now permanently located, and from which point he manages the entire sales of the company, as well as conducting the operations of the New York branch house.
Dr. Jesse Spahr, physician, Woodville, Pa., one of the oldest physicians in Allegheny county, was born in Cumberland county, Pa., Dec. 16, 1812. He is the son of Peter and Mary Elizabeth (Longsdorf) Spahr, who were both born in Cumberland county, Pa. Peter was by trade a wagon-builder, also a farmer; was born in 1784, and died in 1858. His wife was possessed of more than ordinary intellect, speaking fluently the German and English languages, and died in 1865, aged seventy-eight years. Jesse was educated in the public schools, and at the Western University, Pittsburgh. He commenced the study of medicine when a young man, and since 1855 has practiced his profession in Washington county, Bridgeville, and at his present home. He married, in 1838, Abigail Green, daughter of Obed Green, of Brooke county, West Va. (formerly of Baltimore, Md.). Five children, three of whom are now living, were born to Dr. Spahr, with whom he resided in Alliance, O., for fifteen years, with his father; Edward, a farmer, and Cornelia (Mrs. McRaehead). The farm on which Dr. Spahr resides is of historic interest, being near the site of the fighting-ground of the great whisky insurrection, and the remains of an ancient fort could, until recently, be seen on the farm. Dr. Spahr is conservative in politics.

Rev. Andrew Arnold Lambing, son of Michael A. and Anne Lambing (nee Shields) was born at Manorville, Armstrong county, Pa., Feb. 1, 1842. His father was descended from an Alsatian family that emigrated to this country about a century and a half ago, and his mother from one that came over from County Donegal, Ireland, a few years later. His early life was spent on a farm and in public works, until he attained the years of manhood, when he entered St. Michael's Preparatory and Theological Seminary, Glenwood, Pittsburg, where he made his course in the classics and divinity, and was ordained to the priesthood Aug. 4, 1869. After laboring on the mission in Cambria, Blair, Indiana and Armstrong counties he came to Pittsburg in the summer of 1873, and soon after took charge of the congregation of St. Mary of Mercy, at the Point, from which he was transferred to Wilkinsburg in October, 1885, where he still remains.

He is the author of “The Orphan's Friend” (1873), “The Sunday-school Teacher's Manual” (1877), “A History of the Catholic Church in the Dioceses of Pittsburg and Allegheny” (1880), “The Register of Fort Duquesne” (1883), besides a number of religious pamphlets. He is a regular contributor to religious and historical periodicals, and for the past year has devoted his attention almost exclusively to local and religious history. In the summer of 1884 he started “The Catholic Historical Researches,” a quarterly periodical, and the first of its kind devoted to Catholic history in the United States. It was afterward transferred to a Philadelphia publisher, by whom it is still continued. In June, 1886, the University of Notre Dame, Indiana, conferred on Mr. Lambing the degree of Doctor of Laws.

William Sample, retired, Sharpsburg, the oldest citizen in the town, was born in Ross township, Allegheny county, Pa., July 28, 1800. James Sample, his father, a native of Cumberland county, came to Allegheny county in 1790. He was a farmer and miller, and purchased four hundred acres of land in Ross township, which he owned until his death. This pioneer married Christine Taggart, of Northumberland county, Pa., and by her had fourteen children, eight of whom grew to be men and women. William was the youngest of this family. James was a prominent citizen in his day, being the second sheriff elected in the county. He died aged seventy-six years. Our subject is now the only surviving member of the family. He owned two hundred acres (which he sold in 1871) of the original tract of land purchased by his father, and for fifty years he was engaged in farming. He married Jane, daughter of Robert Anderson, of this county, and eight children were born to their union, six of whom are living: James, Martha, William Hays, Margaret, David and Elizabeth. Since 1872 Mr. Sample has resided in Sharpsburg, where he is a highly respected citizen. For twenty-one years he was school director of his township. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is a republican and voted for both the Harrison’s for the presidency.

Rev. William F. Cowden. William F. Cowden, A. M., was born June 22, 1834, at New Bedford, Lawrence county, Pa. At the age of seventeen he commenced his academic education, which he continued, teaching at intervals till 1856. In the autumn of that year he entered Jefferson College at Cannonsburg, Pa., whence he graduated in 1858. He then resumed teaching at Athens, Ky., which he continued until 1861, when the civil war closed his school. While teaching he studied law during two years, but in 1860 he became a member of the Baptist Church, and abandoned his purpose of entering the legal profession. In the summer of 1862 he entered the theological department of the University at Lewisburg, Pa., whence he graduated with the degree of A. M. in 1864. In that year he was ordained pastor of the Baptist Church at Jersey Shore, Lycoming county, Pa., and in 1871 he was called to the pastorate of the Baptist Church at New Castle, Pa. In 1871 a majority of his church withdrew and formed a union with the Disciples, or Christian Church, of New Castle, and Mr. Cowden was made pastor of the United Church. He remained in that relation till 1881, when he was called to the pastorate of the Main Street Christian Church at Lexington, Ky. Dec. 1, 1884, he became pastor of the First Christian Church in Allegheny, a position he still occupies. In his ministry he has always been successful.

He was married June 29, 1859, to Miss Mary J. Rice, of Poland, Ohio, and they have two sons and two daughters, all of whom have attained to manhood and womanhood. He is the historian in this work of the Christian Church in Allegheny county.

Rt. Rev. Richard Phelan, D. D., bishop of Cibyra and coadjutor of the bishop of Pittsburgh, was born in County Kilkenny, Ireland, Jan. 1, 1828, the eldest of nine children, four of whom are dedicated to the service of God. His parents were Michael and Mary (Keogh) Phelan, natives of the neighborhood of his birthplace. He received his early instruction in the schools of his native place and from private tutors. He pursued his classical studies in St. Kyran's College, in the city of Kilkenny. In December, 1849, in response to an invitation of Rt. Rev. Dr. O'Connor, first bishop of Pittsburgh, for students for the then growing diocese, he sailed from Ireland and arrived in Pittsburgh the following month. He entered St. Michael's Seminary in that city, but after a short time proceeded to St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore, where he completed the study of theology, holy scripture, etc. Returning to Pittsburgh, he was ordained priest May 4, 1854, by Bishop O'Connor, and was immediately appointed to the charge of a congregation in Allegheny county. He remained there for thirty years, being the oldest merchant in Western Pennsylvania. His many good traits of Scotch character have rewarded him a multitude of friends, who cheer the evening of his life. His wife, Helen (Grant), a native of Aberdeenshire, Scotland, was possessed of great force of character, having those rare qualities of head and heart that make influence for good far reaching; and her son, Capt. J. W. Porter, attributes much of his success in business to the teachings and precepts of this noble woman. He died Feb. 24, 1888, aged eighty-eight years. Of her nine children, six reached maturity: Mrs. Ann F. Dickson, Capt. J. W. Porter, Capt. Robert Porter, Mrs. Margaret J. McClelland, David R. and Mary E. Porter.

Of these Capt. J. W. Porter, whose name heads this biographical memoir, is a native of Allegheny county when he was eight years old, and at the age of twenty entered upon a successful career as riverman. He began at the bottom of the ladder, and soon became clerk and then captain. His first boat was the J. W. Hallman. He has furrowed all the principal rivers in the Mississippi valley, and has led a stirring and eventful life, his knowledge of men and business being proverbial. He has been a successful man, and in the space of fifteen years of river life amassed a fortune. He was in the government employ in the civil war, carrying troops, ammunition, transport, etc. He was present at the battle of Pittsburgh Landing, capture of Fort Donelson, Belmont, Island No. 10 and other engagements. At one time he carried Gen. Buckner (the present governor of Kentucky), with his stuff and two hundred rebel prisoners, from Fort Donelson, where they were captured, to Louisville, Ky., on their way to Fort Delaware, near Philadelphia. With his boat he ran many rebel batteries, and had many narrow escapes.

Since the war Capt. Porter has engaged extensively in the iron business, the firm bearing his name, Capt. J. W. Porter & Co. The captain was married, in 1865, to Miss Martha L. Ebbert, who died Nov. 25, 1879, and this union was blessed with two sons, John E. and J. W., and two daughters, Mary Cre and Martha A. The sons are associated with him in business. It is but just to say of Capt. Porter that he is a self-made man in every respect, and has been the mainstay and support of his aged parents for many years. He has been identified with Allegheny county for half a century, and few of its business-men are better or more favorably known than he. He is a director of banks and insurance companies, and one of the executive managers of the Western Pennsylvania Hospital.

Judge Edwin H. Stowe was born Jan. 2, 1836, in the town of Beaver, the eldest son of Hiram Stowe and Martha Darragh, a daughter of Maj. Robert Darragh, who at one time represented Beaver county in the state senate. The wife of Maj. Darragh was Deborah Hart, a granddaughter of John Hart, of New Jersey, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. The grandfather of Hiram Stowe was a soldier of the Revolution from Connecticut, and his father, having purchased a farm near Warren, Ohio, engaged in raising cattle for a few years, and then removed to Beaver, with his family in 1808. Hiram being a man of enterprise and having a taste for mercantile pursuits, when quite young left his father's home and removed to Beaver county, where, in 1823, he embarked in business in the town of Beaver. In 1827 he removed to a village on the west side of the Beaver river, now known as Bridgewater, and entered into partnership with Mr. Darragh, then engaged in merchandising at that place, the firm becoming H. Stowe & Co. The business, which prospered, was continued until 1836, when Mr. Stowe, having been elected cashier of the Branch Bank of Pittsburgh, located in Beaver, retained that position until 1839, when the branch was withdrawn. He was after that date not actively engaged in any business of his own, in a number of enterprises, and at his death, in 1877, was a director of the Western Insurance company, and the People's Savings Bank, of Pittsburgh, as also of the Little Saw-Mill Run R. R. Co. He was at one time director of the Cleveland & Pittsburgh R. R. Co. His widow still resides at New Brighton, at the ripe age of eighty-four years. Edwin H. Stowe was carefully nurtured, and enjoyed every advantage of education at command. For a time he was a pupil of the academy at Beaver, but, becoming dissatisfied, withdrew from it and recited to Samuel B. Coulter, a graduate of Jefferson College, and an accomplished scholar. In 1843 he entered Washington College, from which he was graduated in 1849. Removing to Pittsburgh in the fall of 1846, he entered the office of the late Judge Hampton, then a member of Congress from Allegheny county, as a student of law. He was admitted to the bar in 1849, and soon after opened an office as an attorney at law. Of a retiring disposition, he formed few acquaintances outside the profession, but upon the students and members of the bar he made a favorable impression. His progress was at first slow and discouraging; indeed, so much so, that at times he bitterly regretted his choice of a profession. But there was no retreat without disgrace, and he resolved by patience and assiduous study to prepare for better days. In 1855 he entered into partnership with John H. Hampton, Esq., a former schoolmate and the son of his preceptor. Soon business came with unstinted measure to the new firm, and the success of Stowe & Hampton was assured. In 1859 Judge Stowe's name was first mentioned for a judicial position among the members of the bar, and in 1862 he was nominated by the republican party and elected judge of the common pleas court of Allegheny county. It required but a brief time to gain the confidence of the public as a judge both "competent and honest." In 1864 Judge Stowe married Miss Emma Vick, youngest daughter of Charles Vick, Esq., an English gentleman of culture and means, who came to this country and settled in Allegheny City. Their three sons were Charles H., who died in 1881 in his fifteenth year; Edwin William, and Percival, the latter, born in 1870 and 1874, respectively. In 1872 Judge Stowe was unanimously re-elected a judge of the common pleas court, and in 1882 the same flattering distinction was shown him. His experience on the bench for twenty-five years has extended through all branches of criminal and civil law, and his judicial career has met with public approval. One of the leading Pittsburgh journals thus speaks of him:

A number of the most important cases recently tried in our courts have been tried before him. In the majority of these, of course, the most delicate questions were of a character to be appreciated only by those learned in the law. A few of these are interesting even to a lay mind, however. In the famous Clarke-McCully "Bond of Friendship," the doctrine was a potent witness, after upon re-argument affirmed by the supreme court, by a divided court, won the case for him. What is known as the "Rising Main Cases" is a leading case on the law of freedom of the press to discriminate between bidders for public work and award a contract to a bidder other than the lowest. In the Ortwon mummer case, which was tried before Judge Stowe, the doctrine was laid down, for the first time in this state, that where the defense of insanity was set up against the charge of murder, the insanity must be proved to the satisfaction of the jury. It was not sufficient to merely raise a reasonable doubt in their minds. In this he was sustained by the supreme court, and it is now settled as law. He also presided at the trial of Lane, the poisoner, and Lenker, who murdered his partner. More recently he has held the scales in the contest of the rivermen with the Hostetter Smithfield Bridge company, the protracted Oak Alley church wrangle, and the Lawrencerville graveyard case.

To these may be added the case against James Nutt for the murder of Nicholas Lyman Dukes, who had killed Nutt's father shortly before and been acquitted by a jury, and in retaliation for which Nutt killed him, sent from Fayette county, and in which "impulsive insanity" was relied upon as a defense; and the Commonwealth vs. Riddle et. al., president and director of the Penn Bank of Pittsburgh, for embezzlement.

Thomas Wightman. Prominent among the leading glass-manufacturers of Pittsburgh appears the name of Thomas Wightman. He was one of the earliest of those now living to engage in this important industry, and is recognized as one of the fathers of the business. In 1840, in connection with the late William McCully and Frederick Lorenz, he engaged in operating the Sligo Window-Glass works, established in 1834, and also the old O'Hara works, on South Side or West End. Subsequently the firm separated, and in 1831 Messrs. Lorenz and Wightman organized another firm, under the style of Lorenz & Wightman, retaining the O'Hara works. After the death of F. Lorenz Mr. Wightman withdrew, and the works were operated by F. Lorenz, Jr., for a few years. After his death they passed into possession, as lessees, of Falnestock, Albree & Co., who operated them for about two years in 1869, 1861 or 1862. Later on Mr. A. Lorenz, Thomas Wightman and Nimick & Co. carried on the works under the name and style of Lorenz & Wightman until the demise of Mr. Lorenz, when the firm became Thomas Wightman & Co., and afterward put into a limited company, in 1863, which is the present business name. Mr. Wightman is engaged in the manufacture of window-glass and bottles, and is one of the leading manufacturers of Pittsburgh.

John Fleming Dravo was born at West Newton, Westmoreland county, Pa., Oct. 29, 1819, and was reared near Elizabeth, in this county. He is the eldest of three children born to Michael and Mary (Fleming) Dravo, former of whom was for many years engaged in the coal business near McKeesport, this county; latter was of Scotch-Irish extraction. Anthony Dravo, grandfather of John F., and a native of France, settled at Pittsburgh very early in the history of that place.

The subject of this biographical sketch was educated at the common schools and Allegheny College, Meadville, Pa., but was obliged, through ill health, to abandon the course at Meadville before its completion. He engaged in teaching school; and, being gifted with a ready flow of language, became a local preacher in the Methodist Church, with which he has been identified since early youth. Being employed as his father's assistant, he became familiar with the details of the coal business, and embarked on his own account in 1846. He founded the village of Dravosburg, on the Monongahela, and continued to operate in coal till 1858, when he sold out to engage in the coke business. He became treasurer and general manager of the Pittsburgh Gas-Coal & Coke Co., operating in the Connellsville region, and when he retired, in 1888, from its presidency the company was operating three hundred ovens, having begun with forty. For many years Mr. Dravo was president of the Pittsburgh Coal Exchange; and, as president of the Chamber of Commerce (of which he is a charter member) he has often appeared before committees of Congress in the interest of measures affecting trade. He was appointed collector and surveyor of the port of Pittsburgh by President Garfield in 1881, a position he held for four years.

Mr. Dravo is a director of the Tradesmen's National Bank and of the People's Insurance company; he is a trustee of Allegheny College, and president of the board of trustees of Beaver College, to which he has contributed liberally. Indeed, it is said by those who know him best that he has given away more for charitable purposes than he now owns. While a resident of Allegheny county Mr. Dravo was four years a director and vice-president of the Pennsylvania Reform school; also served eight years as director of the Allegheny County Home. He purchased a fine home on the banks of the Ohio, in Beaver borough, where he has dwelt since 1865. Mr. Dravo has ever been identified with movements tending to reform, being an earnest temperance was of and abolitionist. He commenced political life as a Henry Clay whig, and in 1848 was a candidate for legislature on the free-soil ticket. Since the republican organization he has given his efforts toward its success, stumping Western Pennsylvania for all its presidential candidates, and was a delegate in the convention that nominated Abraham Lincoln. As an orator Capt. Dravo often rises to sublime eloquence. His address at the memorial services in Beaver Falls on the occasion of Gen. Grant's death is one of the finest and most beautiful contributions to a literature made rich by thousands of talented eulogists. In his political addresses he has given much attention to the tariff and financial questions, and his speeches are so interspersed with flashes of genial humor and convincing logic that his services are in constant demand during political campaigns. His public addresses on various topics and for many objects have been made in the midst of an active business career, an evidence of a well-balanced and vigorous mind. In 1886 the people of Beaver elected him as their representative in the legislature, which position he continues to fill to their entire satisfaction, and was at once made secretary of the committee on ways and means. As chairman of the committee on constitutional reform he introduced the prohibitory amendment, and during the session placed in nomination Senator M. S. Quay.

Mr. Dravo is an original and independent thinker. In the realm of scientific inquiry he is fully up to modern thought. While steadfastly holding to essential religious doctrines he refuses to accept much of former teachings. As a republican he seeks the best methods, stoutly contending for moral and political reform within the lines of party organization, to which he is ardently attached.

Mr. Dravo married, Nov. 23, 1849, Eliza J., daughter of Robert and Margaret Clark, and of their nine children five survive, viz: Margaret (widow of Robert Wilson), Josephine (wife of J. H. McCreey), John S. (a Pittsburgh merchant), Lida and Ettie (at home).
HON. THOMAS PENNEY, McKeesport, Pa., is now seventy-four years of age. He was born across the river, in the "Jersey settlement." His father's family came from the north of Ireland, and his mother's family from Scotland. His father's people moved here from New Jersey. His wife was a Miss Sill, and her people, coming to this valley, settled near Turtle Creek. His father moved from the Forks to McKeesport when Thomas was but two years of age and where he has lived off and on at least fifty-six years of his life. Of his family all are dead save Mrs. Houghton. Three of his brothers practiced medicine, one was a lawyer, and served a term at Harrisburg as president of the senate; one was an officer in the regular army, and one died a few days after graduating at Jefferson College.

Mr. Penney learned the tailor trade, tramped it awhile out west, but returned to McKeesport. He was one of those who formed the republican party, and has served the state as representative to the legislature from Allegheny county. He was one of the first burgesses of McKeesport; he assisted to organize the First National Bank in that place, and was its first cashier. He now lives in an elegant home on Walnut street, and devotes much of his time to the interests and beautification of Versailles cemetery, being president of its board. He has no active business interest, but lives to enjoy the fruits of a well-spent life.

HON. HENRY I. GOURLEY, Mr. Gourley was born Oct. 3, 1838, at Thompontown, Juniata county, Pa. His father, Joseph Gourley, was a farmer, but in the prime of life was removed by death in 1843, leaving a widow, two sons and one daughter, the children aged, respectively, three, five and seven years. The family soon after removed to Pittsburgh, and Henry was placed under the care of a farmer in Pine township, Allegheny county, where for twelve years he labored diligently, and formed those habits of industry which have proven the groundwork of his success in life. Desirous of securing something more of intellectual training than that afforded by the brief winter months of a country school, at the age of eighteen he earned by cutting cordwood, and by day labor upon the farm, sufficient funds to carry him through several months in Witherspoon Institute, at Butler, Pa., and he subsequently completed a course at Duff's Commercial College, Pittsburgh, graduating in January, 1857.

Believing that a fortune was in store for him in the great west, he went to Dubuque, and subsequently to Davenport, Iowa; but the business misfortunes of his young age and after a few months of bitter experience he returned to Pittsburgh. For a period of four years, from 1857 to 1861, Mr. Gourley gave himself to teaching and to study. At the end of this time he was elected principal of Troy Hill, now Thirteenth ward, Allegheny, public school. After two years of faithful and successful labor here he was promoted to the principalship of the Third ward Grant school, of Pittsburgh, where he remained four years, conducting with eminent success an institution of sixteen hundred pupils, having a corps of sixteen teachers. For a time he presided over private schools at Shadyside, a suburb, and in the city of Pittsburgh; but failing health induced him to seek more active employment, and for a period of five years he represented the great publishing-house of Charles Scribner & Co. in Western Pennsylvania. Again he became principal of the Grant school, Pittsburgh, but at the end of two years he was induced to accept the superintendence of the agency department of the publishing-house of A. H. English & Co., Pittsburgh. The unfortunate failure of this house after two years of successful labor brought financial disaster to Mr. Gourley, as he was a creditor to a considerable amount. In 1879 he assumed the management of the publishing business of Messrs Taintor Bros., Merrill & Co., of New York, which business he still continues to hold, and in 1876-77 assisted Prof. M. B. Goff in the preparation of a series of arithmetics, which have been extensively used in Western Pennsylvania. In conjunction with Mr. J. N. Hunt he prepared, in 1881-82, "The Modern Series of Readers and Spellers," which are already widely circulated. In 1884-85 Mr. Gourley commenced the study of the law, for which he had aptitude and special talent, and it has always been to him a source of regret that he did not follow up the practice. Of late he has taken an active and very prominent part in the government of the city. He was elected in 1876 to represent the Seventh ward in the select council, which position he held till April, 1888, receiving at three of these elections the unanimous vote of the ward. In 1888 he was chosen to represent the Seventh ward in the select council, which position he held until he retired from the council. In but one decision was he ever overruled by the board, and in that the body subsequently reversed its own authority. Among the subjects of great importance to the city which have been legislated on during his administration have been the new water-works and the paving of the streets. Though involving a vast outlay, the expenditures have been judiciously ordered. At present the introduction of natural gas into the city for heating purposes, and electricity, not only for public but for private illumination, is engaging the attention of the city government. In politics he is a republican, and has taken an active part in the canvass for several years past, doing yeoman's service in several elections.

Mr. Gourley was married in 1867 to Miss Jennie Brencman, of Pittsburgh. In an elaborate article published in the Magazine of Western History for June, 1886, it is said of Mr. Gourley that "even while deep in the cares of business he finds time to keep up with the current thought and literature of the day. All educational matters lie close to his heart, and any measure which has for its pur\purchasing purposes, he always finds in him an earnest friend. Viewed from all sides Mr. Gourley furnishes us with as fine a specimen as could be found of the successful and self-made representative American.”
HISTORY OF ALLEGHENY COUNTY.

DR. CURTIS G. HUSSEY. Any history of Allegheny county would be incomplete without mention of Dr. Hussey, one of its well-known and honored citizens. He has won success in all the fields of labor the hand of destiny has opened so much as a business-man, manufacturer and developer of new fields of public wealth, that it would be difficult within these limits to enter into a detailed record of his life. In any mention, however, of industrial Pittsburgh, the name of Dr. Hussey stands prominent, for as the acknowledged pioneer of the Lake Superior copper region and as the first successful manufacturer in this country of fine qualities of crucible cast-steel, Pittsburgh owes much to him, and to his efforts and perseverance may be accorded the successful establishment of two of her great branches of industry, copper and steel.

Dr. Hussey was born on a farm near York, Pa., in August, 1802, and is a descendant of Christopher Hussey, one of the early settlers of Massachusetts. Christopher was born in Dorking, county of Surrey, England, about 1597, and came to America in 1622, having married in England a daughter of Rev. Stephen Batcheller, who also came to America. Christopher Hussey was a resident of Hampton, Mass., which town he represented in the general assembly for several years. He was also counselor of the province, and was active in the settlement of Haverhill. He was one of an association of ten persons, all Quakers, who during the winter of 1658-59 purchased the island of Nantucket, and soon after made it their home. This step was forced upon them by the persecutions of the Puritans, and in consequence of a protest signed by Christopher Hussey and others, against an act of the general court of Massachusetts which made it a "misdemeanor for anyone to preach to the people on the Sabbath who was not a regularly ordained minister of the church." The court regarded this action as a grave insult to its dignity and authority, and threatened severe measures to all concerned. Many of the offenders came forward and made open apology, but not so Christopher Hussey and his companions, who were contending for a principle of vital importance to their individual well-being and happiness, as well as for the liberties of those who should come after them. The persecutions of the Quakers were more or less actively continued, and in 1638 a new and stringent law was passed against them, and several were executed. For these reasons Christopher Hussey and his company took up their abode among the Indians of Nantucket, and about a century and a half later we find his descendant, the father of the subject of this sketch, settled near York, Pa., where, as before stated, Dr. Hussey was born. Soon after the family moved to Littleton, Pa., and in 1813 to a farm in the vicinity of Mount Pleasant, Jefferson county, Ohio. The parents of Dr. Hussey were Christopher and Lydia (Grubb) Hussey. The mother was also a Quaker, descended from a well-known English family. Her father, John Grubb, was a member of the Society of Friends in England, and came to this country before the revolutionary war, settling near the town of Wilmington, Del., and where many of his descendants remain to the present day.

The early years of Dr. Hussey were spent on the farm in Ohio, going to school as opportunity allowed, and making the most of the educational advantages the day and neighborhood afforded. His choice was the medical profession, and he was fortunate in being able to study with a physician of prominence, then located at Mount Pleasant. After completing his course he removed to Morgan county, Ind., where he soon secured a successful and lucrative practice. He remained here for several years, giving close attention to his profession, and winning the respect and confidence of the general public. So large and remunerative had his practice become that in a few years he accumulated sufficient capital for embarking in mercantile pursuits, which he did in establishing several stores in adjoining counties, over all of which he exercised a general supervision as he traveled the country in following his professional calling. With keen insight and business ability of a high order, his ventures became large and his enterprises extended. He became a heavy shipper of produce to New Orleans, and his business transactions at that place proved very profitable. With all of his cares and duties he ever had at heart the development and prosperity of his adopted state, and at twenty-seven years of age, in 1829, he was elected to the legislature, serving one term, but declined a re-election on account of his varied business interests, which required his close personal attention. Possessing natural intelligence of a high order, and a strong and well-balanced mind, it seems hardly possible for him to have failed in any undertaking or in any calling. As a professional and business man he was eminently successful, but it is as a miner and manufacturer that he stands preeminent, his reputation as such being well known throughout the country.

In 1839 he married Rebecca, daughter of James and Susana (Jackson) Updegraff, of the well-known Ohio family of that name. James Updegraff, a man of enterprise and perseverance, was one of the pioneers of Jefferson county, settling at Mount Pleasant, and making for himself a home in what was at that time almost a forest wilderness, and contributed greatly by his energy and influence, particularly in the educational line, toward the growth of that flourishing town. Mrs. Hussey, a woman of high principle and more than ordinary mental attainments, is still living, and has been to her husband throughout their long married life not only an efficient helpmate but a truly congenial companion. They have had five children, two sons and three daughters. The youngest daughter (Mrs. E. B. Alsop) is the only one living, she and her husband residing at the present time with Dr. and Mrs. Hussey at their beautiful home—Shadyside—in the suburbs of the city. Upon occasion, however, the doctor and his wife can gather around them a goodly number of descendants—one daughter and nine grandchildren. Shortly after his marriage Dr. Hussey settled in Pittsburgh, and soon after engaged in those copper and steel enterprises which have not only contributed much to the prosperity of that city but have given him almost a national reputation.

From various sources came rumors of the existence of copper in the Lake Superior regions, but no effort to explore or develop was made until Dr. Hussey took steps in this direction. In 1843 he sent Mr. John Hays, of the "Old Cliff," to prospect for copper. During his trip he purchased for Dr. Hussey a one-sixth interest in the first three permits for mining in that region ever granted by the United States. These permits were three miles square. One was located at Copper Harbor, one at Eagle River, and the other about three miles west of the latter. Based upon this and subsequent purchases, in the winter of 1843-44 the Pittsburgh & Boston Mining company was organized. Dr. Hussey being a large stockholder, and afterward its president until its winding up. In September, 1844, Dr. Hussey made a visit to these wild and unexplored regions, and joined at Copper Harbor Mr. Hays, Alfred Rudolph (a geologist) and the party of eight miners, all of whom he had sent out in the spring; the entire party consisting of such a character that he at once stopped all work at that place. The following year, 1845, he transferred operations to Eagle River, where was soon discovered a wonderfully rich vein of mass copper, which soon became known as the "Cliff Mine." This was the first mine opened in the Lake Superior country, and the first to yield pure or metallic copper, not only in this country, but probably in the world. Masses weighing from one to eighty tons were found. This mine, the famous "Cliff," cost its owners in assessments $110,000, produced nearly $8,000,000 worth of copper, and paid them in dividends $2,580,000, truly a valuable as well as wonderful discovery. In this connection we quote from a publication of some years back:

"The "Cliff" was a great mine, and once found, here was a great opportunity—the first of its kind. How many are there who have the wisdom to make the most of their opportunities? Only a favored and gifted few. It might, perhaps, be claimed that almost any man of average good business capacity, or any company made up of such men, having once found a cliff deposit, would have conducted it through a similar splendid and satisfactory career; but that by no means follows. Mining so strongly stimulates the fancy, and so powerfully appeals to the imagination, that many engaging in it lose a large share of the common sense and prudence they are accustomed to exercise in their regular and daily employments, especially when their ventures give early and flattering promise. The company was fortunate in its first great discovery, but still more so in having at its head such a man as Dr. Hussey, who, by his careful and conservative management, secured such brilliant results. As before mentioned, the product was found in huge masses, and the question arose how to smelt such masses. To cut them up would not pay. The furnaces of Boston, Baltimore and Detroit all failed and gave it up. It looked dark for Lake Superior copper. At this juncture Dr. Hussey solved the problem. It occurred to him to build a furnace with a movable top, and in spite of the incredulity of those around him, he had such a furnace built. The cover was lifted to one side, the masses of copper hoisted by a crane and let down into their bed upon the bottom. It was a success, and the first ingots cast were as good as those now made. This same principle is in use at the present day. The only market for the copper mined and smelted was through a commission-house in New York. The copper, as before mentioned, was done in the east. This did not suit Dr. Hussey, so in 1848 he conceived the idea of erecting a mill for the manufacture of sheet copper, brass, etc., but met with no encouragement for a long time. All who were approached held back. The scheme, however, was too clearly developed and too firmly lodged in his mind to be in any danger of abandonment. After much persuasion he finally secured a partner to join him in the enterprise, and the firm of C. G. Hussey & Co. was formed, a mill erected in 1849-50, and on July 1, 1850, manufacturing was commenced, and a warehouse opened for the sale of its products. It will be interesting in this connection to quote the following extract from a contribution to "A History of American Manufacturers," by J. Leander Bishop, Vol. III, 1867:

"As the Pittsburgh Copper and Brass works was the first establishment projected for working exclusively American copper, and as the senior partner was one of the first successful explorers and adventurers in the copper regions of Lake Superior, his history is that of a pioneer in the development of what has become an important element in the wealth of the state. The attention of Dr. C. G. Hussey was attracted to the Lake Superior region in the summer of 1843, immediately following the mineral wealth of Lake Superior would have been everywhere regarded as a punctured bubble.

The "Cliff" was a great mine, and once found, here was a great opportunity—the first of its kind. How many are there who have the wisdom to make the most of their opportunities? Only a favored and gifted few. It might, perhaps, be claimed that almost any man of average good business capacity, or any company made up of such men, having once found a cliff deposit, would have conducted it through a similar splendid and satisfactory career; but that by no means follows. Mining so strongly stimulates the fancy, and so powerfully appeals to the imagination, that many engaging in it lose a large share of the common sense and prudence they are accustomed to exercise in their regular and daily employments, especially when their ventures give early and flattering promise. The company was fortunate in its first great discovery, but still more so in having at its head such a man as Dr. Hussey, who, by his careful and conservative management, secured such brilliant results. As before mentioned, the product was found in huge masses, and the question arose how to smelt such masses. To cut them up would not pay. The furnaces of Boston, Baltimore and Detroit all failed and gave it up. It looked dark for Lake Superior copper. At this juncture Dr. Hussey solved the problem. It occurred to him to build a furnace with a movable top, and in spite of the incredulity of those around him, he had such a furnace built. The cover was lifted to one side, the masses of copper hoisted by a crane and let down into their bed upon the bottom. It was a success, and the first ingots cast were as good as those now made. This same principle is in use at the present day. The only market for the copper mined and smelted was through a commission-house in New York. The copper, as before mentioned, was done in the east. This did not suit Dr. Hussey, so in 1848 he conceived the idea of erecting a mill for the manufacture of sheet copper, brass, etc., but met with no encouragement for a long time. All who were approached held back. The scheme, however, was too clearly developed and too firmly lodged in his mind to be in any danger of abandonment. After much persuasion he finally secured a partner to join him in the enterprise, and the firm of C. G. Hussey & Co. was formed, a mill erected in 1849-50, and on July 1, 1850, manufacturing was commenced, and a warehouse opened for the sale of its products. It will be interesting in this connection to quote the following extract from a contribution to "A History of American Manufacturers," by J. Leander Bishop, Vol. III, 1867:

"As the Pittsburgh Copper and Brass works was the first establishment projected for working exclusively American copper, and as the senior partner was one of the first successful explorers and adventurers in the copper regions of Lake Superior, his history is that of a pioneer in the development of what has become an important element in the wealth of the state. The attention of Dr. C. G. Hussey was attracted to the Lake Superior region in the summer of 1843, immediately following the consummation of the Chippewa treaty, which extinguished the possessory claims of the numerous tribes of Indians known by that name, and he dispatched thereto, during the same season, a small party to make necessary examinations preliminary to the organization of a regular mining force, if their report should prove favorable. In the summer of 1844 he visited the region himself, and under his direction was commenced the first mining shaft, which was sunk in the vicinity of what is now known as Copper Harbor, on a tract selected in pursuance of the power previously granted to locate mining-claims by the United States government. In the following summer, regular mining operations were commenced by the company organized by Dr. Hussey and known as the Pittsburgh & Boston Mining company of which he is now (1857) the president, on the second tract selected in that region, and upon which is located the celebrated Cliff mine. This mine was the first to give character to the section as a reliable and remunerative copper-producing district, and up to this time it has produced more than seven millions of dollars' worth of copper, and paid to its stockholders a sum exceeding two millions of dollars. The Pittsburgh Copper-works, it will thus be perceived, are the legitimate outgrowth of the extensive and profitable mining enterprises with which its proprietors have been long and intimately associated.

The "Pittsburgh Copper and Brass Rolling-Mills," as they are called, and the smelting-works, are located on the Monongahela river, a mile above town, and of these Dr. Hussey is now, and has been for several years, the sole owner. The mills have lately been largely increased in capacity, and are among the most active industries of Pittsburgh. They used most of the product of the Cliff mine until that property gave out, and since then have bought their stock from the mines still in operation. The products are put into market by the house of C. G. Hussey & Co., which has continued the business without intermission under the old firm name. In 1838-39 the present warehouse, at 49 Fifth avenue, was erected, and in the spring of 1859 they removed to it, and have continued to occupy it ever since. As already stated, Dr. Hussey was the first man in this country to successfully make crucible cast-steel in large quantities, and of the best quality. It seemed to him a reproach that in this great and growing country, with its large resources, all the steel should go to the exclusion of foreign make. He knew the experiment had been tried by others and had failed. He also had evidence in abundance that the public had no faith in the attempt, and that, if he undertook it, it would be in the face of open and active hostility. His steel project was received even by his immediate friends with much the same doubt and coldness, amounting to positive opposition, that met his plans for a copper-mill ten years before. After many objections, and finding that he was fully determined to try the experiment of manufacturing cast-steel, his partner finally consented that the firm of C. G. Hussey & Co. might engage in it. He could not, however, refrain from accompanying his consent with the warning that several companies in Pittsburgh, and many others in the United States, had utterly failed in the attempt. Of all the failures alluded to the doctor was well aware, but with a firm faith in himself, and indomitable energy, he persevered without a halt. All opposition, warnings and prognostications of evil only served to stimulate him, and as difficulties arose his inflexible purpose only mounted the higher. With such conviction, faith and purpose, but one result was possible—success. He decided to allow the experiment a fair trial up to the expenditure of $100,000, and began in 1859 with the purchase of the old steel plant of Blair & Co. The difficulties he had looked for did not fail him. England had, in her own interest, educated this country in the belief that the article could not be produced here. Men laughed at the pioneer endeavor. At first the blacksmiths would not use the new material; the public had no faith in it. But he kept on; he threw his Anglo-Saxon grit into the balance, and determined not to give up until every resource of courage and skill had been exhausted. He would never have undertaken to make cast-steel by the old English methods; he developed and perfected what is known as "the direct process," totally different from the English and all other known methods. This "direct process" was attacked bitterly by the agents of English steel in New York and elsewhere, who declared that good steel could not be made in any such way. Nevertheless, after the Hussey Steel-works had been running for two or three years, it was discovered that good steel could be made, and was being made in this country, and other works were started, they adopting, however, the old English cementation process. They all raised the hue and cry that Dr. Hussey could not make good steel by his direct process, which, of course, had its influence in prejudicing the people against the Hussey make of steel; but in the face of all this opposition he meanwhile built up a good business, and established the success of his process, which has been universally adopted in this country and to a large extent in England. In 1862, feeling the need of rest after his three years' fight in establishing the crucible-steel business, he made a trip to Europe. It appeared that his reputation in the steel business had already reached England, for while in that country he met Mr. Morgan, of the house of Peabody & Co., who solicited him to take an interest in the Bessemer patent for America, and asked him to go to Sheffield to see a "blow," which he did. He felt that the process had a great future, and so expressed himself to Mr. Bessemer's partner. He saw, however, that it was far from being perfect, and foresaw that its development would involve more risk and labor than he cared to assume, so the proposition was declined.

Besides his original developments, Dr. Hussey made other valuable improvements in the manufacture of steel, the details of which will be found in another publication referring to Dr. Hussey and his steel enterprise, we quote: "The outcome of a small beginning and that to which it has led is best shown by a visit to the great steelworks founded by Dr. Hussey, which cover over five acres of Pittsburgh's most valuable land, which is filled with massive and costly machinery, which employs a large number of men, which sends its products throughout all the country, and which has a name for good work and honorable dealing that is excelled by none.

We cannot close our mention of the steel business without mentioning the name of one of the staff most intimately connected with the founder—his son, C. Curtis Hussey. He inherited great business ability, and gradually rose to the chief management of the business. This he retained with distinguished success for many years, up to 1884, when his honorable and useful life ended. He was held in great respect and affection by all who knew him, and his loss was regarded as a calamity to the manufacturing enterprises of Pittsburgh.

In addition to the copper and steel Dr. Hussey has also been at the head of several other successful manufacturing enterprises, but upon these we will not enlarge. We thus plainly see that Dr. Hussey was the pioneer of the copper and steel industries of Pittsburgh—industries for which the city has a world-wide reputation. Through many dark and depressing times, his good judgment, tact and business ability served to stimulate and encourage those around him. In all of the extensive and successful mining and manufacturing enterprises with which his name has been associated Dr. Hussey was the originator, and permanently controlled and sustained them throughout their continuance; and while most of those connected with him have done well their part, and have been useful in their spheres, yet there has been one source, one head from which the force and power have come. The history of the majority of similar successful undertakings always has been and always will be the history of one man, or of a limited number of men, possessing mental abilities and endowments far above the average inheritance of their fellow-creatures.

Dr. Hussey's efforts and interests have not been confined to the concerns with which he was originally identified. He was a leading factor in the development of the Aztec, Adventure, North American, Medora, Mass., Northwestern, National and other copper-mines. He was early in securing extensive tracts of iron-lands in the Michigan peninsula. His explorations were among the first, in 1849, in California. Gold, silver and copper in Georgia, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, British Columbia, Mexico and elsewhere have received his active attention and have been sought for with free expenditure. His knowledge of mines and mining had become so well known and his opinions so valuable, that his advice was constantly sought, and his active cooperation in various schemes often solicited; his office was the first place, for several years, to which these schemes were brought. Of course every man's mine was a "big thing," but he never took hold without a thorough examination by an expert, and if the mine was worth attention the doctor was ready to take hold and spend enough to ascertain the probable true character of the property. The expert referred to made at least a hundred such examinations. These dangerous traps were set for years, and great care and judgment were required to keep out of unworthy schemes, and considerable money was expended, but it was a satisfaction to gratify his pioneering taste, and at the same time to assist in developing the wealth and resources of the country. Here it is worthy of remark that no man is of more patriotic nature, or appreciates and enjoys the institutions of his country and its innumerable benefits more than he does. He has always been zealous and active in whatever may have been conducive to its prosperity. From early life to the present time Dr. Hussey has been a firm believer in, and an ardent advocate for, the doctrine of a protective tariff, steadily throwing the weight of his strong influence in its favor, and contributing liberally of his means for the wide dissemination of protection literature. He has a remarkable faculty for divining the course of events. He forecasts the improbable and anticipates the unexpected with an accuracy that is sometimes wonderful; but his conclusions are all arrived at only through the closest reasoning and most thorough analysis. If his lot had been cast in Wall street he would have been one of its kings. Dr. Hussey's business policy since coming to Pittsburgh has been somewhat unusual in one respect, which is, that in his mining and manufacturing enterprises, and investments in property, he has never borrowed any money, and it has always been his custom to keep large cash reserves in his different concerns. If all business-men would follow the same policy we should have no money inflations, depressions, panics, or widespread suffering, and business friction would be greatly reduced.

Not alone in business and manufactures is Dr. Hussey known in Pittsburgh and vicinity. He has been prominent in charitable, benevolent and educational undertakings. In Allegheny he, in 1860, took an active part in founding an observatory, purchasing a tract of land now very valuable, and contributing liberally of his means and personal attention, and he became its president. It was erected and equipped with a fine telescope, and a good assortment of appurtenant instruments. For seven years he retained this official relation, when the entire property was consolidated with the Western University, of which latter he is one of the trustees. The observatory has a world-wide reputation, being headquarters of the well-known astronomer, Prof. S. P. Langley. Another noted Pittsburgh institution claims him among its founders—the School of Design for Women. The position and needs of women have engaged his profound sympathies, and he has ever been on the alert to give such sympathies practical expression. In 1864 Mr. Thomas W. Braidwood, principal of the School of Design at Philadelphia, came to Pittsburgh for the purpose of establishing a similar institution in that city. He at once sought out Dr. Hussey, and soon enlisted his sympathies and active cooperation. Their plans were made and presented to others, and they were afterward joined by William Thaw, Charles J. Clarke, and a number of other liberal-minded gentlemen. In January, 1895, the organization was effected and work begun.

Dr. Hussey was the first president, and Miss Mary J. Greig, who had been Mr. Braidwood's first assistant in Philadelphia, was the first principal, and remained such until her marriage with Mr. Nicholas Veedcr in 1896. After Miss Greig's resignation Dr. Hussey went to Philadelphia to secure her successor, and made arrangements for the coming of Miss Esther K. Hayhurst, a lady of rare qualifications, who occupied the position until her death, about four years later. About this time Dr. Hussey resigned the presidency, but though severing his active official connection he has always remained a liberal contributor. The school has always been a useful institution and has continued to flourish, and its patrons have the satisfaction of knowing that their efforts are yielding good and lasting results.

Dr. Hussey, as previously stated, is of Quaker descent, and in religion, politics and social matters his views agree in the main with those of the Society of Friends. He is a strong opponent of war, and in accordance with the teachings of that body of Christians, believing that wars are entirely unnecessary and that the principles of true Christianity, if applied in practice, would cause them to be avoided. He is also a strong anti-slavery man—a friend of the negro, and before the war of the rebellion was outspoken in his views in regard to slavery. In regard to temperance, he is a strong advocate of total abstinence, and has done much to promote that cause, and his good health, and the perfect preservation of his mental faculties at an advanced age attest the practical benefits arising from temperance in all things. He is thoroughly kind-hearted and sympathetic, and no one is more ready than he to extend a hand to alleviate the suffering and distress of his fellows. His charities, while numerous and large, are always unobtrusive, and are generally bestowed in such a way as to be known to few except the recipients. His interests and sympathies are largely in the line of educational efforts, and many a struggling institution owes to him its existence and support. His benefactions in this line have been liberal and widely extended; schools in Tennessee, in North Carolina, in Indian Territory, and not a few in the District of Columbia, School for Girls at Matamoras, built, equipped and largely supported by him, between one and two hundred young girls are being educated) attest the practical interest felt by him in this line of philanthropy. The Wesleyan College for Women, at Cincinnati, Ohio, and Earlham College, in Indiana, have largely to his generous gifts their continuance and prosperity. An intelligent gentleman who has had a long, intimate personal acquaintance with him says:

In person Dr. Hussey is tall and of fine appearance, and would be marked in any assembly as a distinguished-looking man. In disposition he is quiet and retiring, and although so widely known through his enterprises, he is seen and known but little in a social way. His seclusion is more of a loss to others than to himself, as the few who meet him socially are well aware. Many of his quiet home hours have been given to the shaping of his enterprises; also many to the diligent perusal of the best authors, of whose choicest treasures his retentive memory has secured a rich supply. With such stores of ripe thought within himself, he is never less alone than when alone. His very modesty and diffidence sometimes give an impression of austerity which a more intimate acquaintance would remove, for he is affable, considerate and easily approached. Though a good talker, and having an abundance of valuable information and sound views to impart, he is nevertheless a good listener, and he will hear with rapt attention what the humblest individual may have to say. One might think that a man who has achieved such large success and reaped for so long a time the consideration and respect arising from it would have become somewhat affected by such influences, but, though dignified in his demeanor, there is no trace of hauteur in his personal intercourse with people, of any class. His sympathies are on the side of the humble, the poor and the oppressed, and by those with whom he is in daily and familiar intercourse, this feeling, business associates and employés—he is regarded with veneration and affection, and well may this be, for now in the evening of life, upon having back over a long and laborious business career of more than sixty years, he can safely say that while he has benefited many he has injured none.

Although advanced in years, and now at a period where most men who brave the storms and rigors of life feel the need of perfect rest and absolute freedom from business cares, he still fills an important place in the world, giving daily attention to his immense interests, watching the progress of events with keen vision, giving aid and encouragement to those about him, and looking over a long life that, although full of labor, has been crowned with splendid returns. He is held in the highest respect and esteem by the community in which he has produced such ample results, and his name will always hold a high place in the list of the pioneer manufacturers of the west.

General Alexander Hays (deceased) was born in Franklin, Pa., July 8, 1819. He entered Allegheny College, Meadville, and later was appointed a cadet at West Point Military Academy. He was the fellow-student of Grant and Hancock, and graduated in 1844. As a brevet second lieutenant he was assigned to the 4th infantry. This regiment was among the first to enter Mexican territory, and Lieut. Hays, in conjunction with Lieut. Woods, captured the first gun at the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma. In this engagement he received a wound in the leg, and for gallant services was promoted to first lieutenant in being transferred to the 8th infantry. While recovering from his injury, he recruited a band of five hundred men from Western Pennsylvania, and rejoined the army at Vera Cruz. He was in twenty battles, ending at Zacualtitan. He resigned when peace was restored, and engaged in civil engineering.

When Fort Sumter was attacked, he dropped his bridgework on the Allegheny Valley railroad, and joined a Pittsburgh military company called the City Guard, being chosen its captain. When this company joined a three-months regiment he was commissioned major. At the close of this service, having declined a captaincy in the 16th U. S. infantry, he set about recruiting a regiment for the war. His companions of the City Guard, whom he had made real soldiers, joined him, and the regiment, of which he was made colonel, was designated the 63d Pennsylvania. The history of this regiment is a bloody one. At the second battle of Bull Run Col. Hays had a limb shattered while leading his regiment up a steep embankment. Before he had recovered from this injury he was assigned to the command of the 3d brigade of Casey’s division, having been appointed and confirmed brigadier-general of volunteers and lieutenant-colonel in the regular army. For some time he had charge of the defenses about Washington. On the third day of the battle at Gettysburg Gen. Hays was opposed to his West Point classmates Hill and Pickett, whose charges he repelled and saved the day. Two horses were killed under him, and his brigade captured twenty banners and battle-flags, suffering fearful loss. In the subsequent engagements of the Army of the Potomac, Gen. Hays acted a no less brilliant part until the fatal 5th of May, 1864, the third day’s fight in the Wilderness, when he was struck down by a bullet while leading his men in a desperate charge.

At the time of his death he was commissioned brevet major-general. The following is a list of his battles in the great conflicts of Yorktown, Williamsburg, Fair Oaks, The Orchard, Glendale, Malvern, Bristoe (August, 1862), Bull run, Groveton, Gettysburg, Auburn, Bristoe (October, 1863), Locust Grove, Mine run, Morton’s Ford, Wilderness.

Gen. Hays’ father, Samuel Hays, came from the north of Ireland to America in 1765, being then a boy, and became a general, commanding Pennsylvania troops in the war of 1812. He married Agnes Broadfoot. Their son, Gen. Alexander Hays, married Annie A., daughter of John B. McCfadden, in 1846. Mrs. Hays’ ancestry is traced in a direct line from John and Priscilla Alden, of the Plymouth colony. She still survives her husband, as do their seven children: Agnes (wife of George A. Gormly), Aiden F., Rachel (Mrs. J. S. Sullivan), Gertie A., Martha (Mrs. R. B. Black), Alfred Pearson and James McCfadden.

J. H. McClelland, M. D. Foremost in the van of the noble army of able, honored and successful medical men of Western Pennsylvania stands Dr. J. H. McClelland, of Pittsburgh, than whom no one has accomplished greater works in the same time, nor reached a higher position in the medical world at so early a period in life. He is a native of the city in which he resides, born May 20, 1845. His father, J. H. McClelland, Sr., who came of sturdy Scotch-Irish stock, emigrated in 1816 from the north of Ireland to this country, when his vigorous intellect soon made him famous as a writer of and speaker on several subjects of public interest, and as architect and contractor he erected many public buildings in Pittsburgh and vicinity. From 1867 to 1871 he served as postmaster of his adopted city. The mother of the subject of this memoir was a daughter of Rev. John Black, D. D., of whom mention is made in the chapter on churches elsewhere in this work.

Dr. McClelland at the age of seventeen had received an appointment to Annapolis, but was induced by the family physician, Dr. J. P. Dake, to take up the study of medicine. This he did, graduating from Hahnemann Medical College, of Philadelphia, in 1867, and on returning to Pittsburgh became identified with the Homeopathic Medical and Surgical hospital then being established. His aptitude for surgical work giving him an enviable prominence, he was at once appointed to a position on the surgical staff of the new hospital, and performed the first capital operation in that institution, on the surgical staff of which he has ever since served. The doctor was for fifteen years secretary of the board of trustees, and for some years has been its chairman.

Dr. McClelland achieved success in the line of his chosen profession from the very outset, and rapidly built up an extensive practice, the constantly increasing demands of which have not kept his pen in idleness. He has contributed from time to time many able papers on surgery to various journals, and of national and international reputation, as member of the surgical bureau of the American Institute of Homeopathy he has prepared many papers on a variety of surgical subjects. The doctor organized the Anatomical Society of Allegheny County, of which he has been demonstrator and president, has also been president of the Allegheny County Medical society, and was president of the state medical society in 1881. At the world’s convention of 1876, at Philadelphia, he, by special appointment, presented a paper on one of the surgical diseases, and at the world’s convention of 1881, at London, he was by appointment one of the debaters. In 1876 and 1877 he filled the professor’s chair of surgery in the Hahnemann Medical College of Philadelphia, his alma mater, and was president of the college for the year 1886-87. Many other honors have been offered Dr. McClelland outside his native city, but he has invariably declined to leave his home. While he has already won eminence in his profession, the doctor has still found time to cultivate and enjoy the graces of social life, and has won a large circle of friends. He was married in 1884 to Miss Rachel May, daughter of the late John P. Pears, of Pittsburgh.

David Hostetter, a distinguished business man, financier and railroad projector, of Pittsburgh, was born in Lancaster county, Pa., Jan. 29, 1819. His father was a cultivated physician of extensive practice, widely known and highly esteemed in that portion of the state. The boyhood of Mr. Hostetter was spent upon a farm owned and cultivated by his father, where the boy was free to devote his time to reading and study. He obtained a thorough English education. At the age of sixteen, having completed his studies, he set out to "make his way in the world." His first employment away from home was in a dry-goods store in Lancaster, with Christopher Hager, where he remained seven years, beginning as a "boy" and ending as "chief clerk and manager." On leaving Mr. Hager's employ he entered into business for himself in Lancaster, and was engaged in that when the gold fever broke out in California, and he, like many others, became possessed of the desire to seek his fortune in the new El Dorado; so in 1850 he sold out his stock, and on the 15th of April left New York for California. He reached the isthmus, crossed it on a mule, and after a dreary three months' wait at Panama for the steamer on which his passage was engaged, was carried to San Francisco. The trip to San Francisco occupied three weeks, and was made memorable by the death of seven of the passengers from the terrible isthmus fever. On his arrival at San Francisco Mr. Hostetter invested his capital in the grocery business. Here the prospect for the achievement of fortune seemed excellent, but within a month all that he possessed was swept away by one of those conflagrations for which San Francisco was then noted, and to which, from the combustible nature of its buildings, it was constantly exposed. Though left absolutely penniless, he did not despair. Failing to find a suitable opening in California, he determined to return to his native state. With him to decide was to act, and within a month from making the determination he was in Pennsylvania, returning by the way of the isthmus. He soon found employment as paymaster with McEvoy & Clark, contractors of the Pennsylvania railroad at Horseshoe Bend.

Two years later he determined to put in operation a project he had long entertained, but had delayed for lack of capital. This was no less than the manufacture of the world-famed "Hostetter's bitters," an article which has now become a staple in the trade. Mr. Hostetter obtained the formula for this tonic from his father, who had satisfied himself of its excellent qualities during a long practice. Mr. Hostetter determined to put the article upon the market, and associated with him Mr. George W. Smith, a former resident of Lancaster, and who had been with him at Horseshoe Bend. They removed to Pittsburgh and founded the firm of Hostetter & Smith. The two made an excellent "team" for such an enterprise. Mr. Hostetter's tireless energy and push were just the elements necessary to lift it from the usual rut, and they were successful from the start. Within four years the business outgrew its original location, and new and enlarged quarters were found. Every legitimate means was employed to extend the sales of their product, and the firm became widely known as among the most extensive advertisers in the country. Hardly a newspaper could be found anywhere in the country that did not contain announcements of the virtues of "Hostetter's bitters," while millions of almanacs were annually scattered broadcast to extol the tonic. The partnership continued until the death of Mr. Smith, in 1884, when the firm was succeeded by Hostetter & Co., the present organization.

The manufacturing business was not sufficient to absorb all Mr. Hostetter's energies, and he gave his attention to numerous enterprises calculated to foster and promote the trade of Pittsburgh. He was one of the founders of the Fort Pitt National Bank, and for fourteen years or more was its president. For sixteen years or over he was one of the directors of the Farmers' Deposit National Bank. He likewise took a prominent part in the inception and promotion of railroad enterprises. It was largely through his efforts, backed by subscription to its capital, that the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie railroad was built, forming, with its connections, an air line to Cleveland, and a direct line to New York, Chicago and St. Louis. Mr. Hostetter was one of the directors of the company from its organization, and for many years held its vice-presidency. He was also president of the Pittsburgh, McKeesport & Youghiogheny Railroad company, and was one of the prime movers and promoters for the building of the South Pennsylvania road, in which company he was a director. He was always ready, with capital, experience and personal influence, to aid in forwarding any railroad enterprise that promised to be of any benefit to the trade of Pittsburgh. Mr. Hostetter was one of the first to take hold of the natural-gas problem, and invest freely of his money to aid in the development of this great source of wealth. For several years he had been president of the Pittsburgh Gas company; was interested in the Allegheny Gasworks, and was a director in the East End Gas company, and Consolidated Gas company, of Pittsburgh. He subscribed forty per cent of the stock of the Fuel Gas company, of Allegheny county, and later became interested in the Penn Fuel company, afterward becoming proprietor of both companies, which he sold to the "Philadelphia company," of Pittsburgh, in which he owned one-fourth of the stock, and in which he was a director. In common with many others, Mr. Hostetter was early interested in the oil business. In 1889 he made a venture in this direction which involved him in loss and litigation. In 1875 he engaged in the building of a pipe-line from Pittsburgh to Millerstown, a distance of thirty miles. In opening his line for business he encountered the opposition of the Pennsylvania Railroad company, then all-powerful in the legislature and the courts, and later of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad company. Becoming disgusted, after a long struggle, Mr. Hostetter sold his interests to the Standard Oil company of Cleveland, in 1877, receiving therefor enough to make good his previous losses in the oil business. Many more details might be given, if space would permit, to show Mr. Hostetter's intense energy and activity. He was a gentleman of strong brain and will-power, possessing excellent administrative talent, and was a tireless worker and close thinker. His success in life was due to no accident, but was the result of his own energy and clear-sightedness. He was a republican and a believer in a protective tariff, and took a deep and abiding interest in the city of Pittsburgh and its prosperity.

Mr. Hostetter was married July 13, 1854, to Miss Rosetta, daughter of Randall Rickey, of Cincinnati, and four sons and one daughter were born to this union. His eldest son, Harry Hostetter, entered Yale College in 1874, but went to Europe in the following year to study the modern languages. In 1876 he entered Heidelberg University, from which he graduated the following year. His father thought that a year of travel might be beneficial to him, and in company with his mother, sister and a younger brother, he visited many points of interest in England, France and Germany, and finally went to Rome. At Florence the sister was seized with Roman fever. When she became convalescent Harry was stricken with the same disease. He died en route to Paris, whither he was being carried on a special car. Mr. Hostetter had not understood how irrevocably his son had lost the battle of his life before his death. This blow was a terribly sad one to him, one of whose dominant traits of character was a deep love for his family. The loss of his third son a few years later was another great bereavement. During his active business life he enjoyed unusually good health, but within two years of his death he was suddenly stricken with a malady which caused him intense suffering. He traveled in Colorado and California, and visited various hot springs in other localities, seeking relief from his trouble, and finally, in the latter part of October, 1888, he went to New York for treatment. An operation was performed which promised good results for a time, but the reaction was too much for his strength, which had been worn out by constant suffering, and on the afternoon of Nov. 6, 1888, he passed peacefully away, surrounded by his stricken family. In the death of Dr. Hostetter the city of Pittsburgh lost one of its most influential citizens, and one who had ever sought for its welfare and prosperity. His acts of charity were many, and those in distress who sought him never left empty-handed. Though he made no display of his good works he was identified with any movement looking to the relief of suffering humanity, and his name will ever stand on record with his fellow-citizens as a bright and shining example.

Calvin Wells was born in Genesee county, N. Y., Dec. 29, 1827. He came of sturdy New England stock, from which he derived those sterling qualities which have distinguished him through life. His father and mother were both of New England birth. His maternal grandfather, Rev. Samuel Taggart, a Presbyterian minister, was a man of mark in his day, wielding a strong influence upon the political as well as the religious affairs of the community. He represented the western district of Massachusetts in Congress for thirteen years. Mr. Wells' father's family was very prominent in Greenfield. His grandfather was Col. Daniel Wells, one of whose sons, Calvin Wells, father of the subject of this sketch, settled in Western New York, and bought a half interest in a mill, and also engaged in farming. Calvin Wells, Sr., was a justice of the peace for many years, and was an elder in the Congregational Church, and afterward of the Presbyterian Church. His wife was a woman of strong mental powers and deep religious convictions, and her teachings and influence did much to shape the future of her children. She died when her son Calvin was but fourteen years of age. In 1842 the latter entered the store of his brother-in-law, P. S. Church, a Detroit merchant, and two years later he went back to Batavia, N. Y., where he remained until 1847. He had always wished for a better education than had been afforded him, and for this reason wrote to a brother in Pittsburgh, Rev. Samuel Taggart Wells, a Presbyterian clergyman, who responded with an invitation to come hither, and make a home forthwith him and attend the Western University. This invitation he gladly accepted, and, packing his goods in a pine box, took a boat to Erie, Pa., going thence by canal to Beaver, and then by boat to Pittsburgh. Here he landed Nov. 19, 1847, his worldly possessions being worth, probably, twenty-five dollars.

Mr. Wells entered the Western University and remained there until the winter of 1848-49. Early in the latter year he entered the dry-goods store of Benjamin Glyde as bookkeeper. The next year (1850) Mr. Wells was thrown into connection with Dr. C. G. Hussey, who had then commenced the copper business, having a mill and warehouse in Pittsburgh. Mr. Wells continued in this line until 1852, when Dr. Hussey started him in a bacon and pork business, the firm name being Hussey & Wells. This was continued until 1858 or 1859, when the firm became Hussey, Wells & Co., engaged in the manufacture of steel, and thus was laid the foundation of one of the great industries that have done so much to build up the city of Pittsburgh. Mr. Wells was made manager of the new business, and went east to learn all he could regarding the manufacture of steel. On his return he gave his entire attention to the enterprise, which grew rapidly, receiving a wonderful impetus during the rebellion, and demonstrated that England had at last found a competitor in the manufacture of steel. Mr. Wells sold out his interest in this concern in 1876, and thus ended his long connection with Dr. Hussey. In 1863 Mr. Wells became interested in railway elliptic springs, and owned a half interest in the firm of A. French & Co., then engaged in their manufacture. This business was a success and grew to large proportions. On leaving the firm of Hussey, Wells & Co. Mr. Wells gave his entire attention for a year or two to the spring company. In January, 1875, he was chosen president and treasurer of the Pittsburg Forge & Iron company, and yet holds these positions. In 1884 he sold out his interest in the firm of A. French & Co. In 1877 Mr. Wells was induced to join in the purchase of the Philadelphia Press, founded by the late John W. Forney. At first he expected that his associates would manage the affairs of the concern, but a couple of years' experience convinced him of the necessity for a change, and he took hold of the paper with the same good judgment, business tact and energy that have distinguished him in other enterprises. The result is that the Press is now not only one of the ablest but one of the strongest and most influential newspapers in the country. It is especially noteworthy for its advocacy of a protective tariff, for Mr. Wells is thoroughly convinced that protection is a great blessing to all parts of the country as well as to Pennsylvania.

He has other interests engaging his attention. In 1868 he was led to investigate the subject of spelter. His practical knowledge of metals and his study of this branch of metallurgy led him to unite with some friends in the establishment of the Illinois Zinc company, at Peru, La Salle county, Ill., with a capital of $50,000. From the inception of the enterprise Mr. Wells has been president and treasurer of the company, the capital of which has grown to $400,000. He has been for a number of years, and is now, a director in the Exchange National Bank of Pittsburgh. He was at one time a director in the Consolidated Gas company, and was also connected with the Charter Gas company. All that Mr. Wells has and is are the product of his natural forces. He possesses special skill as an organizer, in systematic management, and in his ability to read and understand men and to put the right man in the right place. He is a man of strong will, resolute courage, and great tenacity of purpose, fertile in resources, alert to take advantage of circumstances as they occur. With all these advantages in business life, he has proven himself of kindly disposition and generous purposes. Though keeping himself posted upon political questions, he has been too busy to take an active part in partisan politics or enter public life. His father was a Henry Clay whig, and the son is a consistent republican.

Mr. Wells was married July 5, 1854, to Annie Glyde, daughter of Benjamin Glyde. She died in 1859, and in 1861 he was married to Mary Chaffey, a sister of his first wife. Two sons and two daughters have been born to him. His eldest son was born in 1866, and died in the same year. His two daughters are married, leaving him, his wife and his youngest son to constitute the family. Mr. Wells is a member of the Third Presbyterian Church, of which he has been a trustee for a number of years.

Thomas M. Howe. Hon. Thomas M. Howe, one of the "strong men" who have done so much to advance the interests of Pittsburgh, where he was a leading business man, financier and capitalist, was born in Williamstown, Vt., in 1808. He was the sixth in descent from John Howe, of Sudbury, Mass., one of the earliest immigrants from England to that colony, arriving previous to 1638. His father, a merchant, removed to Trumbull county, Ohio, in 1817, and settled on a tract of land in Bloomfield township. Thomas left the farm before he reached his majority, and went to Pittsburgh, where he engaged as a clerk in the dry-goods store of Mason & McDonough. Afterward he went to work, in the same line for S. Baird & Co. In 1830 he became a partner in the new firm of Leavitt & Co., hardware dealers. From this time on he made rapid advance. In 1839 he was made cashier of the Exchange Bank, of Pittsburgh. Here he showed that he possessed exceptional ability as a financier, and in the crises of 1843 and 1845 he showed more than ordinary courage. These brought him into active participation in politics, though his inclinations were against a political career. He was a firm believer in and advocate of a protective tariff, deeming it to be for the benefit of the manufacturers of the country at large. Being an enthusiastic whig, he labored zealously in the "log-cabin-and-hard-cider campaign" of 1840 for the election of Gen. Harrison to the presidency. He became thoroughly conversant with the bearings of legislation upon the interests of his adopted state, and exercised a large influence in this direction. In 1850 he was elected to Congress from the Pittsburgh district, and was re-elected in 1852. He impressed his views upon his colleagues, and much of the tariff legislation of the period was shaped by his efforts. He was an earnest advocate of the principles which have since been embodied in the tariff acts of the country.

In 1854 Mr. Howe was elected president of the Exchange Bank, and held that position until other duties compelled him to relinquish it. Upon the organization of the Chamber of Commerce, in which he took an active part, Mr. Howe was elected its president, and held the office continuously until his death in 1877. To him much of the success of that institution is due. As early as 1867 he was prominently identified with the Superior copper-regions and their development, and visited the fields in person. Upon his representations, and through his efforts, the Pittsburgh & Boston Mining company was formed, of which he became secretary and treasurer. This proved a very profitable enterprise, in which Mr. Howe retained his interest until the transfer of the company to Boston parties, about 1871. He helped to organize the firm of C. G. Hussey & Co., extensive copper-manufacturers of Pittsburgh, and remained a member of it until his death. He was also one of the original members of the firm of Hussey, Wells & Co., afterward, on the retirement of Mr. Wells, Hussey, Howe & Co., one of the heaviest steel-manufacturing firms in Pittsburgh. Mr. Howe contributed freely of his capital to these enterprises, and to his championship of the now gigantic steel industry is due much of its wonderful advance. In 1859 he was importuned to allow his name to be presented to the republican state convention for the gubernatorial nomination. To this he reluctantly consented. When the convention met, in 1860, Andrew G. Curtin was nominated, to the great relief of Mr. Howe, who cordially supported Mr. Curtin for election. When the great struggle of the rebellion began, Mr. Howe entered strongly into the support of the government. He was appointed assistant adjutant-general, on Gov. Curtin’s staff, and rendered right loyal and efficient service, refusing all compensation therefor.

Mr. Howe was always ready to contribute of his capital and services in any enterprise tending to forward the interests of Pittsburgh. He was largely instrumental in the building of the Cleveland & Pittsburgh railway. He was one of the founders of the Allegheny cemetery, serving as president of its board of managers for thirty years. He was a presidential elector in 1860, casting his vote for Lincoln and Hamlin. In 1864 he was urged to accept the office of state treasurer, but positively declined. In 1874 he was prominently mentioned for secretary of the treasury, but promptly withdrew his name. These declinations of public trusts arose from no selfish motives, but because of Mr. Howe’s dislike of the turmoil and methods of the political campaigning of that period. In civil life he labored unceasingly and ungrudgingly in enterprises that were largely beneficial to the city, state and nation. In his religious life he was active and conscientious. He was for thirty years a vestryman in Trinity Church, and took an active part in the establishment of Calvary Church, of which he became a warden and vestryman. He was for a number of years a member of the Mission standing committee, and was twice elected a deputy to the general convention. In his business affairs he was the soul of honor, carrying into his dealings the teachings of the golden rule. In an unostentatious manner, not seeking the applause of men, he was a large contributor to charitable and benevolent work.

Mr. Howe’s death occurred on the 20th of July, 1877. It was everywhere regarded as a public calamity, and was widely expressed not only by individuals but by numerous bodies and corporations with which Mr. Howe had been connected. His memory was perpetuated by the Chamber of Commerce by having his portrait given on the walls of its building. Notwithstanding the years that have elapsed since his decease, he is still held in grateful remembrance as a model citizen.

Hugh S. Fleming, late of Allegheny City, was born in a small frame house which stood on what is now Federal street, at the base of the hill, March 26, 1820. He was reared by his uncle, after whom he was named, and through whom he was afforded opportunities for securing a fair English education. When fifteen years of age he entered the drugstore of H. P. Schwartz, on Federal street, with a view to learning the business. He remained there three years, and then embarked in the drug business on his own account, on Market street, Pittsburgh. He continued in active trade until 1841, when his store was burned out. By the death of his uncle, to whom he was deeply attached, he came into possession of quite an estate, and thenceforth devoted his attention to public affairs, and to various private enterprises in which he was interested. When he had just reached his majority he was elected to represent the Third ward of Allegheny in the common council, and subsequently, in 1842, and in 1859, served two other terms as representative from the same portion of the city, in the latter year being president of the common council. In 1850 he was elected mayor of Allegheny, and held the office three terms. In 1853 he was elected treasurer of Allegheny county. In 1861 he recruited Co. K, 58th regiment, 9th P. R., and on May 4 was mustered into service and given a commission as captain. He was forced to resign after one year’s service, on account of poor health.

Mr. Fleming was a member of Post 128, G. A. R., to which body he presented the first stand of colors it ever received. In 1870 he was elected sheriff of Allegheny county to succeed S. B. Cudely. In 1873, upon the death of Mayor A. P. Callon, of Allegheny City, Mr. Fleming was elected to serve the unexpired term, and generously donated the proceeds of the office to the widow of that gentleman. By his courage in enforcing city ordinances, and the integrity and good judgment with which he administered municipal affairs, he secured a strong hold on the hearts of the people, and was uniformly respected and admired by all. His interest in all movements tending to beautify and develop the city of Allegheny, or that would in any way contribute to its material prosperity. In 1877 he was elected president of the Third National Bank of Allegheny, and filled that position at his death, July 5, 1887. He was also a member of select council at the same time. By fortunate investments in real estate and other judicious speculations Mr. Fleming greatly enlarged his original estate, and left his family in very comfortable circumstances. He married Miss Julia H., daughter of Louis Bollman, who survives him with three children.

NATHANIEL HOMES, founder of the banking-house of N. Holmes & Sons, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, in March, 1782. He married Eleanor Kerr, who was reared in the same locality, and together they came to Pittsburgh in 1807. After engaging in mercantile pursuits Mr. Holmes, in 1829, bought out an exchange-broker named Gilmore, and continued to transact a banking business till his death, in 1849; his wife died two years previously. They had three sons—Thomas Ridgway, Nathaniel and John Kerr; and two daughters, Mary (wife of W. Wallace), who died before her father, and Jane (widow of W. B. Pusey), who is still living. The two eldest sons became his associates in business, but the first retired in 1857, and died soon after without issue. John K. gave some attention to literature and painting; he died in 1874, leaving no offspring. Mr. Holmes was a member of the M. E. Church, and an opponent of the M. P. seceders. He was a staunch whig.

Nathaniel, second son of the above, was born July 22, 1820, in Pittsburgh, and carried on the business established by his father until his death, in March, 1866. He was one of the incorporators of the Citizens’ Passenger railway, the Pittsburgh & Birmingham railway and Western Insurance Company. With his elder brother he continued the cotton-manufacturing firm of Blackstock, Bell & Co., and later became head of the firm of Holmes, Bell & Co. (this being part of his father’s estate). He married Susan, daughter of John and Mary Grier. Nathaniel, Jr., had three sons and two daughters, who reside with their widowed mother in Pittsburgh. Their names are John G., William R., Nathaniel, Mary G., and Eleanor K.

WILLIAM McCREEERY, capitalist, is a grandson of Hugh and Isabella (Graham) McCreeery, who emigrated from Ireland to Washington county, Pa., before the opening of this century. His father, John McCreeery, married Mary, daughter of Hugh and Rachel McCoy, also early settlers of that region. Hugh McCoy was born in the north of Ireland and his wife in Carlisle, Pa. All were descended from Scotch ancestors. William, John and David Hoge, uncles of Mrs. Rachel (Reddick) McCoy, settled in Washington about 1760, and William was at the head of that village for many years after its incorporation. Their descent is traced from David Hume, who lived and died three hundred years ago.

William, eldest child of John and Mary McCreeery, was born in Washington county in 1828. His father died when our subject was a child, and he was reared by a good mother, who survived till Dec. 5, 1858. Soon after reaching his majority Mr. McCreeery became a clerk in the Pittsburgh commission-house of Springer, Hrabuck & Co. Two years later he went to Philadelphia and engaged as a wholesale dry-goods salesman for two years. In 1856 he became a member of the grain and commission firm of Hitchcock, McCreeery & Co., continuing until 1883. In 1860 he became president of a company organized to build a grain elevator. This structure, which cost $240,000, was destroyed in the riot of 1877. From the beginning of his grain business Mr. McCreeery became a member of the Board of Trade, and has been a director of the Citizens’ Bank since 1858. For seven years he was managing partner of the firm of McCreeery, Bailey & Co., which purchased and operated the Mahoning Ironworks. About this time he raised money for building the Lawrence railroad—now a part of the Pennsylvania system—and was set four years president of the corporation. He also organized the P., Y. & A. R. R. Co., of which he was president until its absorption by the Pennsylvania system. In 1874 he secured the cooperation of a few capitalists in organizing an independent company, and the construction of the P. & L. E. R. R., a strong competitor of the Pennsylvania in the lake trade, is the result. In 1878 Mr. McCreeery built the Montour Run railroad, a branch of the P. & L. E. R. R., and is president of that company, as well as of the Imperial Coal company. In 1874 he built and equipped the P., C. & T. R. R., now operated by the P. & W., and has built two street railways in Pittsburgh and Allegheny.

While thus contributing to the material advancement of his home city, Mr. McCreeery has built up a substantial fortune for himself, and has not spared of his time and means in charitable works. During the civil war he was chairman of the purchasing committee of the Pittsburgh Sanitary Commission, which raised large sums for the relief of the sick and wounded. In 1861 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Rev. Dr. Rogers, of Allegheny, and she was his most active cooperator in visiting and ministering to the soldiers at the front. At the close of the war the funds in the hands of Mr. McCreeery’s committee amounted to $300,000, which were invested for the benefit of disabled soldiers in the Western Pennsylvania hospital. For thirty-five years Mr. McCreeery has been a member of the Second Presbyterian Church, and is a democrat.

ROBERT PITCAIRN, general agent and superintendent of the Pittsburgh division of the Pennsylvania railroad, was born May 6, 1836, in the village of Johnstone, near Paisley, Scotland, the son of John (now deceased) and Agnes Pitcairn. His father and mother early in their married life immigrated to America, but returned to Scotland. In 1846 they again came to America, settling in Pittsburgh. Robert received the usual common-school education, partly in Scotland and partly in America. With these advantages, and from circumstances where he was obliged to earn his own living from almost his start in life, his first regular position was in a variety-store, in 1848. Afterward he secured the position of messenger-boy in the office of the Atlantic & Ohio Telegraph company, at Pittsburgh, where, taking advantage of the opportunity, he began the study of telegraphy, and, being associated with other bright, ambitious boys, put forth extra exertion to keep pace with them. Soon perfecting himself as an operator, he became one of the first to read by sound. When the railroad west of Steubenville, Ohio, was started, he was sent to that place as assistant operator and telegraph-line repair-man. He was next promoted to operator at Pittsburgh on the Cleveland line, when the Ohio & Pennsylvania (now the Pennsylvania, Fort Wayne & Chicago) railway was started, and afterward as operator at Pittsburgh on the Atlantic & Ohio (a line from Pittsburgh to Philadelphia) when the Pennsylvania railroad was nearing completion. The railroad business having an attraction for him, and desiring to become connected with it, in 1852 or 1853 he secured a position with the Pennsylvania Railroad company as telegraph operator and assistant ticket-agent at the Mountain House, near Hollidaysburg, while the road was still using the old Portage road, with its inclined planes over the mountains. In February, 1854, the company completed its own track over the mountain, and Mr. Pitcairn was transferred to the general superintendent's office at Altoona, where he remained, filling different positions, until 1861, excepting for about a year, when he was sent by the Pennsylvania railroad to the Western division of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago, while the road was being completed between Plymouth and Chicago. In 1861, Mr. Pitcairn, having served as acting division superintendent in previous years, was regularly appointed superintendent of the Middle division, embracing that part of the line between Conemaugh and Mifflin. Soon after his appointment the road was divided into three instead of four divisions, and Mr. Pitcairn, being the last appointed, was left without a division. A new department, however, was created and he was put in charge with the title of "Superintendent of Transportation," and while filling this position organized the car-record, a system of car-mileage and other matters pertaining to that department as they are now conducted. After the outbreak of the war of the rebellion, in addition to the extra labor necessitated by the transportation of large bodies of troops and supplies, particularly in 1862, he had charge as superintendent of the Middle division, between Altoona and Altona, and superintendent of the Pittsburg division, between Altoona and Pittsburgh. Though as superintendent of transportation his chances of promotion were better, yet his early ambition and desire were so strong that in 1865 he sought and received the object of his highest ambition—that of superintendent of the Pittsburg division, returning to Pittsburgh. In 1875 the general agency of the road at Pittsburgh was added to the position Mr. Pitcairn was holding.

July 26, 1856, he was married to Miss Elizabeth E., daughter of John Rigg, a resident of Altoona, formerly of Lewiston, Pa., and of this marriage there have been born three daughters and one son.

While in no sense a politician, Mr. Pitcairn has been a stanch and unwavering republican from the organization of the party. In religion he is a Presbyterian. He has long been a member of the Masonic fraternity, and is past grand commander of the Knights Templar of Pennsylvania. In addition to his railroad duties, Mr. Pitcairn is active in other fields, being interested in many of the leading industries of the country. He has been a director of the Masonic Bank since its organization; is now a director of the Citizens' National Bank, of Pittsburgh; director of the First National Bank of Greensburg; director of the Western Pennsylvania Exposition, and resident vice-president and director of the American Surety company. Becoming acquainted with George Westinghouse, Jr., years ago, when that gentleman started his world-known and celebrated air-brake, Mr. Pitcairn assisted in the organization and introduction of the same, and is now vice-president and director of the company; is also a director in the Philadelphia Natural Gas company, as well as other companies known as the Westinghouse plants, together with other institutions of Pittsburgh, both local and general.

Thomas Doremus Messler was born at Somerville, Somerset county, N. J., May 9, 1833. His father, Rev. Abraham Messler, D. D., was the beloved pastor of the first Dutch Reformed Church of that place from 1839 until 1879, and was recognized throughout the state as one of the most successful and influential clergymen in that wealthy and popular denomination. He manifested a warm interest in the local history of New Jersey, and contributed to the archives of the State Historical society much valuable material on the early history of the Hollanders in New Jersey, and of the Dutch Reformed Church, and kindred topics. Mr. Messler's mother was Elma Doremus, daughter of Cornelius T. and Eleanor (Mandeville) Doremus, and a representative of one of the oldest and most highly respectable families of New York and New Jersey. Prof. R. Ogden Doremus is one of the principal representatives in New York.

The genealogy of the Messler family can be traced to an early period in the history of our country. The name was originally spelled de Metselaer, and so it appears in the early records at Albany, N. Y. The original ancestor in this country was Teunis Teunissen Metselaer, who emigrated from Holland and landed in New York in 1641, and afterward settled on the manor lands of the Patentee, Van Rensselaer, near Albany, N. Y., and the site of old Fort Orange. Since that remote period of time the family can be accurately traced for eight generations down to the present time. About the year 1700, Johannes Metselaer, the great-great-grandfather of our subject, removed from New York to New Jersey, and from him descended the present family of that state.

Mr. Thomas D. Messler has recently become, by virtue of his ancient lineage, a member of the Holland society of New York, one of the conditions precedent to membership in that body being that the applicant shall be able to trace his ancestry, in the direct male line, back to a Hollander, or a son of a Hollander, who was a resident of New York, or one of the other American colonies, prior to 1650. The Dolreaus family were also of Holland extraction, the ancestor in this country having emigrated from Holland to New York about the middle of the seventeenth century, and settled in Passaic county, N. J. Mr. Messler's maternal grandmother, Eleonor Mandeville, was of French descent. Giles Jansen de Mandeville, her ancestor, who introduced the name into this country, was a Huguenot, who fled from Normandy to Holland as a refugee in 1640, in the days of Roman Catholic persecution, whence he immigrated to New York in 1659, in the same ship with the famous Gov. Stuyvesant, who afterward became much interested in his welfare. De Mandeville also settled in Passaic county, N. J., where many of his descendants still reside. Mr. Messner's paternal grandmother was Maria Stryker, a descendant of Jan Van Stryker, who was born in Holland and immigrated to New York in 1652, remaining there a little more than a year, and settling in 1654 at what is now known as Flatbush, L. I. He was a man of prudence and influence in secular and religious matters, and died in 1697, full of the honors which the early American colonies could bestow. Pieter Stryker, born in 1670, his great-grandson, and great-grandfather of Maria Stryker, removed to Somerset county, N. J., in 1730. He was the ancestor of the New Jersey families of that name. The Stryker family is of remote antiquity in Holland, and has become very numerous and of extended influence in New York and New Jersey.

The early education of Mr. Messler was received at the Somerville (N. J.) Academy, and at comparatively an early age (1852) he entered into the employ of the old New York & Erie Railroad company, in New York city. In 1856 he came to Pittsburgh, at the request of Moran Brothers, prominent bankers of New York, and became the secretary and auditor of the R. C. R. & G. B. R. Co., which had been organized in that year by the consolidation of the O. & P., O. & I. and Ft. W. & C. R. R. Cos. In 1863 Mr. Messler became comptroller of the company, and in 1866 assistant to the president. The road was afterward leased to the Pennsylvania company, which was organized in 1871 in the interest of the Pennsylvania Railroad company. He was also at this time made comptroller of the P. & C. R. R. Co., which is controlled by the Pennsylvania company. In May, 1876, he was elected third vice-president of these two corporations; also in that year president of the St. L., V. & T. H. R. R., and from time to time afterward, president of the C. & M. V. RY. Co., N. W. O. Ry. Co., E. St. L. & C. Ry. Co., C. & R. R. R. Co., Ohio Connecting Railroad company, W. & W. R. R. Co., Newport & Cincinnati Bridge company, and chairman of the executive committee of the G. R. & I. R. R. Co. All these companies being auxiliary corporations of the Pennsylvania company. He has passed rapidly through all these various grades of advancement because of his aptitude in the direction of railroad science and special genius for the successful solution of such financial questions as naturally arise in so vast and extensive a railway system as the Pennsylvania; and he is recognized as one of the most valuable officials in the employ of the company. He is a gentleman of fine literary and artistic tastes, and also takes an active part in social, financial and educational matters; is a director of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' National Bank, of Pittsburgh, and of other corporations of that city in which he is interested, and is one of the trustees of Shadyside Academy, an institution which is having a most successful career, designed to prepare pupils for admission to any of the first-class colleges in the country. He has acquired wealth, and occupies a fine residence at Shadyside, in the east end of the city, where, with his estimable wife, Miss Maria Remsen Varick, a descendant of the old Knickerbocker family of that name in New York, he entertains his friends in a hospitable and elegant manner. His son, Mr. Remsen Varick Messler, is one of the rising younger members of the Allegheny county bar. His only other child—Genevieve Lawrence Messler—is a student at the Shadyside Academy, and will enter Yale College in another year.

Samuel R. Johnston was born in Pittsburgh July 26, 1797, in a house on Front street, now First avenue, which his father erected two years previously, and which was the third brick edifice built in the borough. He was of Scotch-Irish descent, his ancestors having been driven by the persecutions of Charles II from Scotland into the north of Ireland. His grandfather, Robert Johnston, came to America from Castle Derg, County Antrim, Ireland, in 1769, and settled in the Cumberland valley, near Shippensburg, Pa. He was a cotton factor. When the breaking out of the revolutionary war he entered the army as a surgeon, and served for three years, when he died in an army hospital. An elder son, Robert, and a son-in-law, Benson Lecky, also enlisted in the same army, and served throughout the war. The son, Robert, was among those who suffered such cruelty in the British prison-ships in New York harbor after the battle of Long Island, and at a later period was connected with the ill-starred expedition against the Indians in which Col Crawford and other prisoners were massacred. He, too, was a prisoner, but effected his escape to Detroit, and returned to Fort Pitt.

The third and youngest of the sons of Robert Johnston, Sr., was John Johnston, the father of Samuel R. Johnston. John was in his fourth year when, with his father's family, he came to America. Upon the death of his father the family removed to Chambersburg, where the children could secure proper education. Here John learned the business of watch- and clock-making. His employer, a Mr. Scott, was a superior mechanic, and his apprentices were taught by him in the intricacies of the art. While yet a journeyman, John and his skillful employer erected a paper-mill; they also built machinery for making wire.

In 1787 John Johnston married Mary Reed, in Chambersburg, and in the same year they removed to and established their home in Pittsburg. A number of the near relatives of John's wife participated in the revolutionary war; one was an officer of distinction. In his new home, in all matters of public interest John Johnston became identified. The records of the First Presbyterian Church mention him as among its earliest trustees. The oldest minutes preserved bear date "Meeting-house, April 27, 1801," and the trustees are thus mentioned: "Isaac Craig, John Johnston, John Wilkins, Ebenezer Denny, James R. Green, Alexander Addison, George Stevenson, Andrew McIntyre and John Reed." It was during his trusteeship that the old brick church which succeeded the log house was built; and when the legislature authorized the congregation to establish a lottery to pay the debts of the church he was associated with John Wilkins in the commission to control the drawing. With Ebenezer Denny's coöperation he established in 1809 a Sabbath-school in the courthouse on Market street. It was solely for the benefit of the poor, particularly for the children of Roman Catholic families who were found running at large on the streets. In 1813 he was among the promoters of a "Human society," established to relieve the necessities of the poor. These were war times, and much distress prevailed. For eighteen years he was postmaster, having been appointed by Jefferson in 1804, and serving also through the administration of Madison and Monroe. He died in 1837, his widow in 1839. Their children were Rebecca, who became the wife of William Eichbaum, and Samuel R. Johnston, the subject of this sketch.

Samuel R. received an excellent academic education, and then acquired a knowledge of the printing business in the house of Cramer & Spear. In 1818 this pioneer establishment passed into the control of Mr. Johnston and his brother-in-law, the firm being Eichbaum & Johnston. From 1819 until 1822 they were the publishers of the Pittsburgh Gazette, then a weekly paper. About the same period they established a newspaper in St. Louis, Mo., called the St. Louis Register. Subsequently its place of publication was changed to Kaskaskia, then the capital of Illinois, when its title was the Republican Advocate. From these adventures they obtained more experience than profit. In 1824 the interest of Mr. Eichbaum was transferred to Mr. R. C. Stockton, the firm name changing to Johnston & Stockton. This house did a large business, extending over the west and south. They published books extensively, both school and miscellaneous, their catalog comprising many hundreds of volumes. The first power-press west of the Alleghanies was set up in these presses, and they issued the "California Republic," the first newspaper published in San Francisco. They also for many years manufactured paper at Fallston, Beaver county, Pa. Among other enterprises outside of his regular business, Mr. Johnston was the principal owner of a line of stage-coaches running between Pittsburgh and Philadelphia.

In 1839 and the year following Mr. Johnston was treasurer of the city. In 1841, he was elected treasurer of Allegheny county, and served the term of two years. Again in 1846 he was city treasurer, and, excepting for a few months in 1847, he held this position continually until the close of 1851. At the first organization of public schools (1835) he became a director of the First ward schools, and held the position many years, serving as secretary most of the time. He declined a nomination for re-creation in 1843, when his election was well assured, the position being altogether unsuited to his taste. In politics he was a whig; in 1824 he voted for John Quincy Adams, while his father, an old-time democrat, espoused the cause of Jackson. When, in 1829, his brother-in-law, Mr. Eichbaum, took an active part with Harman Denny, Edward Simpson and others in forming the anti-masonic party, Mr. Johnston also fell in with this movement, and it was as a candidate of this party that he was elected treasurer in 1841. Commissioned in 1821 captain of the Pittsburgh Blues, he for a number of years was associated with that historic company. During the last twelve years of his life he was a trustee of the First Presbyterian Church, and in much of this time he occupied the pulpit, the position of secretary and treasurer. During the erection of the present church-edifice he was treasurer of the building fund, and was among its liberal contributors.

He married, in 1834, Mary Nelson, a niece of the late Maj. William Graham, Jr., in whose residence from childhood she had been an inmate. His wife died April 24, 1839: his death occurred Sept. 17, 1854. Their children are two daughters, Valeria Collins and Mary Oliver, and one son, William Graham, who, as the head of the printing- and stationery-house of William G. Johnston & Co., has since 1857 conducted that business, while he has also filled numerous other positions of prominence, among them president of the Citizens’ Insurance company, president of the Duquesne National Bank, president of the Pittsburgh Steel Casting company, and president of the Pennsylvania Steel company.

WILLIAM ANDERSON, grandfather of William A. Herron, and one of the pioneers of the notable Pittsburgh family, was born in Ireland about the middle of the eighteenth century. He came to America when the cry of liberty had lately arisen among the colonists, and with all a young man’s ardor he entered heartily into the revolutionary spirit of the age. It was between 1775 and 1780 when he first put his foot upon the soil of the country that was so soon to shake off the thrall of the tyrant of the old world. He first settled in Carlisle, Pa., but soon joined the army under Gen. Washington, taking the rank of major, and serving with distinction throughout the war. At its close he was awarded the contract for building the president’s official residence (the White House). The structure, still in splendid condition after a hundred years of use, is a lasting monument to the excellence of Mr. Anderson’s material and the judgment with which it was employed. The brick- and stone-work will to-day bear the closest inspection. He was a living example of a sound mind in a sound body. Stout, hearty and vigorous, he possessed remarkable executive ability, and was honored with the friendship of some of the greatest men of his time, including Washington himself. As an instance of his physical strength as well as his determined will, it is related that at one time, on account of sickness in his family, he walked from Washington to Carlisle in twenty-four hours. In 1785 he left Carlisle, purchasing several months in Huntingdon and Bedford, Pa., putting up public buildings in both places, he arrived in Pittsburgh in 1797. His first place of residence was on the north side of Penn street, between Fourth street (formerly Pitt street) and Evans alley, about where J. H. Shoenerberger’s residence now stands. The house was built of logs. The orchard was between the house and the Allegheny river, and the horse- and cow-pasture between Penn and Liberty streets.

Mr. Anderson built the first steam saw-mill and grist-mill west of the Allegheny mountains. He bought his logs of the Indians, and did a large business in lumber. His grist-mill was the second one erected in Pittsburgh, and during a part of each year was running day and night, to supply the demands made on it. In dry seasons farmers, who came in from many miles around, were often compelled to wait several days for their turn to get their grain through the mill. He also owned a large brickyard, and built a number of public edifices, besides business-houses and residences, employing a large number of workmen. Among the more notable buildings erected by him may be mentioned the First Presbyterian church, on Wood street. The new church was built over the old log edifice, the logs being taken out of the windows of the new church. In 1810 he built a two-story brick residence on the corner of Penn street and Irwin’s alley (now Eighth street) for himself and family, which is still standing, immediately in front of his sawmill. John Herron afterward purchased this property on Penn street, with the house and mills, from Maj. Anderson (his father-in-law) between Maddock’s alley and McCormick’s alley, where he carried on the business for many years, but afterward confined himself entirely to his coal operations.

Mr. Anderson was a close friend of Col. O’Hara, and was very active in all public enterprises in Pittsburgh’s early days.

He united with the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, bringing his certificate of membership and good standing with him to America. On his arrival in this country he joined a church at or near Carlisle, and later he and his wife became members of the First Presbyterian Church in Pittsburgh. He was a prominent member thereof until 1820, when he removed to Mercer county, near Mercer city, where he owned a fine tract of land that he intended to improve. He was not able to carry out his intentions, however, for in 1821 he was attacked by an illness that proved fatal within a few days. His body was taken to Pittsburgh and buried in the First Presbyterian churchyard, beside that of his wife, who had passed away about 1816. She was Mary Ann Cann, born in Carlisle, Pa., and, becoming an orphan, lived in the family of her guardian, Rev. Dr. Duffield, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Carlisle, of which she was a member.

JOHN HERRON, who did so much in his lifetime for improving business and religious sentiments of the early and pioneer days of Pittsburgh that he will always be a prominent figure in the city’s history, descended from Scotch-Irish Presbyterian stock. He came of good stock physically, intellectually, morally and religiously, and he showed the excellence of his breeding in every act of his life. His grandfather, Francis Herron, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, and came to this country in 1734, settling eleven years thereafter on a creek now known as Herron’s branch, in Franklin county, Pa. He had two sons: John, father of Rev. Francis Herron, D. D., of the First Presbyterian Church, Pittsburgh, and James, father of John, the subject proper of this sketch. Maj. James Herron was born in 1754, married Nancy Johnson, and died April 24, 1889, at Shippen’sburg, Pa. He was a man of fine physique, and was honored for his consistent and active Christian life and his many charitable works. He had four sons and two daughters:
John, Nancy (wife of John Criswell), William, James, Sarah (wife of Robert McIntyre) and Samuel D.

John Herron was born April 3, 1792, on Herron's branch. He received as good an education as was obtainable in those days, and in 1812 went to Pittsburgh. Here he started his business life on the lowest rung of the financial ladder, but his natural abilities proved a fountain of wealth that never ran dry. His first position was as clerk for Ephraim Blaine in the lumber business. In a few years the young man bought Mr. Blaine's interest and ran it for a time with great success. Afterward he and Col. James Anderson purchased the steam saw- and grist-mill of Maj. William Anderson, on what is now Eighth street, below Penn street, putting therein what was said to be the second steam engine west of the mountains. Later Mr. Herron bought out Col. Anderson. To his other interests he added a brickyard, and conducted an extensive business in containing building. He then purchased a large farm of coal-land at Minersville (now a part of Pittsburgh), and engaged in coal-mining and farming. Besides using some of the coal for his own works he supplied large quantities of it to other consumers, the combined business requiring the employment of a great number of men and horses. His next purchase was a large sawmill and property, an entire square, of John Irish, the mill being on the opposite square from his grist- and saw-mill. Mr. Herron gave his personal attention to all of his ventures, and particularly interested himself in the welfare of his army of employes. He knew most of the children in Minersville by name, and he was loved and respected equally by them and by their parents. His charities were numerable and unostentatious, and his hand was ever ready to succor the needy and unfortunate.

In 1817 Mr. Herron married Clarissa, daughter of Maj. William and Nancy (Cann) Anderson. To this union were born nine children: James A. (deceased July 4, 1842, in his twenty-fifth year), William A. (sketch of whom follows), John D. (married to Emma, daughter of Samuel Thompson), Richard G. (a colonel in the war of the rebellion, married to Annette Tomlinson), Francis J. (the youngest general in the Union service during the civil war), David R. (lieutenant of an Iowa battery), Mary Ann (married to Rev. George A. Lyon, D. D., of Erie, Pa.), Eliza (married to Richard Sill, also of Erie) and Margaret D. (married to William C. Friend, of Pittsburgh).

The family moved from Pittsburgh, where Mr. Herron owned a great deal of property, to Minersville in 1883, on account of his health. Here he built a Presbyterian church, taking the active interest in all religious work that he had in Pittsburgh. He was an elder in the church, and was a zealous promoter of the interests of the Sunday-school. He brought an honored and useful life to a close at his home in Minersville in May, 1863, regretted by thousands of people who had profited by his benevolence and admired his exemplary career throughout Western Pennsylvania. His wife died in May, 1873.

William Anderson Herron, son of John Herron, comes of old revolutionary stock, and is to-day one of Pittsburgh's most honored citizens. Within gunshot of the handsome residence in which he now lives he was born, on the 7th of August, 1821. The house in which he first saw the light still stands at the corner of Eighth street and Penn avenue. He received a good education, principally in the Western University. He commenced his business career in the dry-goods store of A. Way & Co., but the confinement did not agree with him and he soon joined his father in his extensive coal interests, which embraced a number of mines in what is now the Thirteenth ward of Pittsburgh, but which is still called Minersville. It was a very productive tract, and though coal has been mined in large quantities for many years, it is not yet exhausted. In 1846 he and his father, with W. H. Brown, purchased a coal-farm on the Monongahela river at Turtle Creek, with which they did a large business under the firm name of Herron, Brown & Co. They floated their coal in flatboats to Cincinnati, Louisville, Cairo and New Orleans. They supplied the iron- and gas-works in Pittsburgh. Mr. Herron's health failing and at this period, he sold out his interest in the business and devoted two years to traveling, etc., until he regained his usual robust condition. Then he went into the lumber trade with his brother-in-law, Richard Sill. At the same time Mr. Herron was a partner in a brass-foundry, and had an interest in a cotton-spinning factory and in gasworks, but bestowed only a small part of his attention upon the practical management of these establishments. He was also part owner of a large tract of coal-land on Pine run on the Monongahela, the firm being Herron, Blackburn & Co. They built a coal-railroad and did a large business. Mr. Herron and Mr. Hercules O'Connor, under the firm name of Herron & O'Connor, now purchased the steamboat George Albree and some model barges. Then they took a contract to supply the gasworks at St. Louis by running the coal to Cairo in flatboats and reloading in model barges to tow up to St. Louis. In 1855 Mr. Herron opened a banking-office at the corner of Wood and Sixth streets, continuing in the business until 1866, when he assisted in the establishment of the German Bank. He was also one of the founders of the Iron City Trust company (now the Second National Bank), and was one of the original stockholders of the Third National Bank and the Mechanics' Bank.

In 1860 he was elected, by a large majority, clerk of the courts of Allegheny county, serving until 1866 with credit to himself and satisfaction to his fellow-citizens. His health compelled him to relinquish the office after six years' service, though he could have been easily re-elected had he desired it. In 1863 he, with two others, secured a charter for the People's Savings Bank, and organized it under the laws of the state, Mr. Herron being the first president. The bank is now one of the most successful savings institutions in the city. On leaving the clerk of courts' office he went into the real-estate business, which is now conducted by his sons, Rufus H. and John W., who are bright young business men, the latter being vice-president of the Commercial National Bank.

Mr. Herron united with the Presbyterian Church in 1836, when only fifteen years of age, and has been a consistent member ever since. He has held the offices of elder and trustee for many years, besides taking an active part in Sabbath-school work. He was superintendent of the school at Minersville for some years. He has always been prominent in philanthropic enterprises. He was elected a director in the Western Pennsylvania hospital in 1863, and is one of the most energetic members of the board. He is a member of the executive committee of Dixmont Asylum for the Insane, vice-president of the Homeopathic hospital, a director of the Blind Asylum of Western Pennsylvania, a director of the Young Men's Home, and a member of the Young Men's Christian Association. He was a delegate to the Centennial General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, held in Philadelphia in 1868, and has been delegate to synod and presbytery from the Third Presbyterian Church, of Pittsburgh.

Mrs. Herron has always taken an active part in charitable work in Pittsburgh, and is known throughout the state as a lady of great executive ability, as well as of a benevolent disposition. She was elected the first president of the Woman's Christian Association of Pittsburgh, after assisting in its organization. To her must be credited the conception of the present system of management of the Association for the Improvement of the Poor. By her own indefatigable energy and the assistance of a few friends she was enabled to carry out her plan, and the society is now rendering assistance to thousands of unfortunate people annually. She has been its president since 1875. She is the personal friend of every needy family in the city.

Mr. Herron is in the full vigor of ripe manhood. His sixty-odd years sit lightly upon him, and have not yet succeeded in bending his shoulders or weakening his sturdy frame. He is as straight as an arrow, and though he leaves his large real-estate business partially in the hands of his sons, he can be found in his private office throughout the long business days, attending to the many interests that he yet retains. He has the kindly manners characteristic of the Herron family, and has probably more friends to the square mile than any other man in Western Pennsylvania. He is proud of Pittsburgh and Pittsburgh is proud of him.

William A. Herron was married Oct. 23, 1843, to Miss Louisa J. Hills, daughter of Rufus Hills, of Erie, Pa. She is a native of Amesbury, Mass., where she lived until she was thirteen years of age. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Herron, of whom four are living: James A. (married in 1867 to Isida Green, and both now deceased), Rufus II. (married in 1872 to Jennie Shugart, of Titusville, Pa.), Sarah (married in 1868 to Ogden M. Edwards); John W. (living), Louisa J., Fannie D. and William (deceased).

William Backhouse Negley, attorney, Pittsburgh. The first Negley of which we have record settled at or near Frankfort, Germany, having fled from Switzerland after the death of the reformed Zwingle, whose firm supporter he was. As layman and deacon, he labored to disseminate the new doctrine in Germany. The record is next found in 1734, when Jacob Negley married. Five years later he set out for America with his wife, Elizabeth, and three children—Alexander, Casper and Elizabeth. He died at sea; his family settled in Bucks county, Pa. Alexander, the eldest, born in 1735, married Mary Ann Burkstresser in 1762, and had ten children. He was a blacksmith and came to Pittsburgh in 1778, settling as a farmer where the Hilland avenue reservoir now is, where he died Nov. 3, 1809; his widow, born in Bucks county, June 20, 1741, died June 17, 1829. With forty-one others Alexander Negley established the First German U. E. Church congregation, the first church in Pittsburgh, in 1782. Felix, his eldest child, settled on the present site of Tarentum, and married Ruth Horton in 1798. Jacob, the second son, born Aug. 28, 1766, married June 19, 1795, Barbara Ann, daughter of Conrad Winebiddle. She was born Sept. 15, 1775, and died May 10, 1867. Jacob Negley was a farmer, and founder of the East Liberty Presbyterian Church. He died March 18, 1827. His twelve children were named, in order of birth, John, Elizabeth, Jacob, Daniel, Mary Ann, George G., Catharine R., Margaret, William, Sarah Jane, Alexander and Isabella M. Daniel married, Jan. 15, 1824, Jane, daughter of James and Jane (Moore) Backhouse. Jane Negley's father was a cabinet-maker, and was an elder in the East Liberty Presbyterian Church. She died Feb. 21, 1834, and Mr. Negley afterward married Keziah Peesles Cox. His first wife bore him six children and the second seven. Daniel Negley was a merchant, and a large property-holder in East End. He was a Presbyterian, and was elected to the state legislature in 1838 by the republican party. He died Dec. 4, 1867. But four of his children are now living.

William B., the third and only living child of Jane Negley, was born in Pittsburgh, June 5, 1838. He was educated in Western Pennsylvania, read law with Hon. Thomas Mellon, and graduated from the law college of Princeton University, with the degree of LL. B., in June, 1849, and following November he was admitted to the bar. From 1851 to 1855 he was a member of the law firm of Mellon & Negley, and from 1857 to 1866 he was associated with D. D. Bruce, as junior of Bruce & Negley. At the outbreak of the civil war he was appointed chief of staff of Gen. James S. Negley, with rank of major, and served in that capacity during the service of that general with the Army of the Potomac. In 1864 he was a delegate to the national republican convention at Baltimore. He was elected to the lower branch of the city council in 1870, and served in that body twelve years, being its president half the time. In 1877 he was appointed trustee in bankruptcy, without bonds, of the famous "Nation Trust Co. Bank;" became a director in the Western Theological Seminary in 1883, and two years later, in the Citizens' National Bank, which positions he now holds. Since May, 1884, he has been president of the Allegheny Bar association. Mr. Goff has five children: Rev. Albertus D. of the Shadyside Presbyterian Church, in which he is a ruling elder; was a delegate from the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. to the general assembly of the Reformed churches holding the presbyterian form of government, at Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1877, and again to a like assembly in London, England, 1889, and was a commissioner to the general assembly in 1888, from the presbytery of Pittsburgh. May 17, 1853, he married Joanna, daughter of the late Rev. Robert Bruce, D. D.

Milton Browning Goff, chancellor of the University of Western Pennsylvania, is a native of Pittsburgh, born Dec. 17, 1831, to Philo and Prudence (Brown) Goff. His paternal ancestor, Joshua McGoff, lived at Downpatrick, County Down, Ireland, prior to 1801, and from that date to 1807 at Dublin, where he died in 1817 or 1818. In 1801 John, son of Joshua McGoff, set sail for America, and, dropping the Mc in his name, located in that year six miles north of Portland, Me., at a place now called Goffstown; but removed thence, with his six sons, to Allegheny county in 1820. He soon after located at Sewickley, where he died May 11, 1837. Philo, his son, a carpenter by trade, was married in Allegheny (his wife being a native of Virginia and sister of Benj. N. Brown, of the Baltimore Conference), removed to Sewickley in 1855, and was accidentally killed there in 1853. Up to twelve years of age Milton B. Goff remained in Sewickley, attending the public school and Rev. J. S. Travell's academy. He took his degree of A. B. in 1855, from Allegheny College, at Meadville, and was elected the same year professor of mathematics and natural science at Madison College, Uniontown, where he remained two years; was principal of the North Illinois University, at Henry, Ill., for three years, and principal of the academy at Sharpsburg, Pa., and of the Third ward school, Allegheny, four years all together. Jan. 1, 1865, he took the chair of mathematics at the Western University of Pennsylvania, and held this position seventeen years, being pro tem. chancellor in 1881. In 1883 he went to Allegheny College as professor of mathematics and astronomy, remaining two years, and since 1884 has held his present position. Prof. Goff has published six text-books on arithmetic, and frequently contributes essays on astronomy and kindred topics to the periodicals. He has received the following degrees from his alma mater: A. M., in 1858; Ph. D., in 1881; LL. D., in 1884. He is now preparing to add new technical features to the course of the university, and otherwise enlarge its scope. He is a thorough republican. His only civil service was as school director and burgess of Sewickley, where he dwelt from 1867 to 1888 In the M. E. Church Prof. Goff has filled every office. In 1856 he married Emily Virginia, daughter of Nathaniel and Mary Ann Locke, of Baltimore, and they have following named children: Frederick D., of Sewickley, Allegheny County, and Virginia. Mrs. Goff is a sister to Rev. W. H. Locke, D. D., whose grandfather, Nathaniel Locke, was for many years a merchant in the Barbados.

Charles Frederick Spang, the subject of this sketch, was born in Berkeley, Pa., in 1809. His great-grandfather, the progenitor of the family in this country, was Hans George Spang, who emigrated in 1751 from Rotterdam, Holland, to America, and settled in Greenwich township, Berks county, Pa. Of Hans' six sons, Leonard and George served in the war of independence: the former died a prisoner of war in Trenton, N. J.; the other went to Europe with Gen. Kuyphausen, who had commanded the Hessians, and became a resident of Bremen, where he acquired a large fortune and died with his immediate heirs, in 1826. A portion of his distant relations in America are now claimants of the estate. Another son, Frederick Spang, became the owner of the Oley furnaces at Semple, Pa., one of the oldest works of the kind in the United States, having been erected in 1773. He left this property to his son, Henry S. Spang, the father of the gentleman whose name heads this article. Mr. Spang's father, Henry S. Spang, afterward removed to Huntingdon county, Pa., where he established iron-works. The Pennsylvania canal was opened about this time to Huntingdon, thus offering a market in Pittsburgh for their products.

Charles Frederick Spang, the junior member of the firm, came with his father to Huntingdon, and was an active assistant in the conduct of the business. In the prosecution of this he visited Pittsburgh frequently, and with characteristic intelligence and forethought discovered the advantages its location afforded, and its prospective importance as a manufacturing center. The result was the formation of the firm of H. S. Spang & Son, and the erection of the Etna Iron-works.
on the site of a sicle-factory that had been built at Etna in 1817. The firm was destined to take a prominent place among the manufacturers of the west. The son, now nineteen years of age, became the business-manager and a resident here. On the death of H. S. Spang, the firm became Spang & Co. (Charles F. Spang and James McAuley). The business was conducted under this style till 1858, when the present firm of Spang, Chalfant & Co. was formed, consisting of Charles H. Spang, John W. Chalfant, C. B. Herron and George A. Chalfant. In 1878 the Spang Steel & Iron company (limited) was organized as a branch of the above. Its officers are Campbell B. Herron, president; John C. Porter, treasurer, and George A. Chalfant, general manager.

In the year 1858 Mr. Spang removed to Nice, France, where he has since resided, making annual visits to his native country. He was a pioneer in the iron business here, and was the first manufacturer of iron tubing west of the Allegheny mountains. He was one of the early directors of the Bank of Pittsburgh, one of the founders of the Western Pennsylvania hospital, a corporator of the Allegheny cemetery, and a vestryman of Trinity Church.

Charles H. Spang, son of C. F. Spang, and a member of the firm of Spang, Chalfant & Co., was born in Pittsburgh. He was educated in this city, and succeeded his father in the business. Norman Spang, the second son, who is connected with the business, resides in Pittsburgh.

Thomas Liggett was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, Jan. 17, 1779, one of a family of two boys and four girls. The family immigrated to America in 1791, and settled in Carlisle, Pa., where the father died one year later. Thomas was then apprenticed to learn the carpenter's trade, which he mastered, and in 1802 moved to Pittsburgh, where he began building operations. Aug. 31, 1809, he married Elizabeth McPherson, and to them were born eight children: James, Thomas, William G., Sarah, John and Joseph (twins), James and Joseph. The first James and both Josephs died in childhood; Thomas practiced law at the Allegheny county bar, and died Nov. 8, 1851, aged thirty-nine years; William G. died at Pensacola, Fla., Jan. 4, 1837, aged twenty-one; James the second died June 4, 1843, aged twenty-five years, leaving as survivors John and Sarah, who are still residents of Pittsburgh.

Thomas Liggett continued actively in the contracting business for many years. In the meantime, having faith in the future of Pittsburgh, he invested his savings in realty, most of which yet remains in the family, notably the block on Smithfield street from Fifth avenue to Diamond alley, partly occupied by the Kaufmann building. This Thomas Liggett bought in 1897, from Alexander Miller and John Thaw for $3,800, being about $15 per foot front, and afterward used as a lumber-yard. In 1836 he bought of Joseph McFarland twenty acres in Wilkins township (now Twentieth ward of Pittsburgh). He called the place "Springwood," built a country residence and moved there in 1839. The old homestead is still occupied by John Liggett, having been his home for fifty years. Thomas Liggett served as prothonotary of this county, and died at Springwood, Dec. 13, 1854, aged seventy-five years. His wife survived him (living with John at the old homestead) until Nov. 10, 1861. The only then surviving members of the family were Sarah and John. The former is the wife of L. P. Hitchcock, and she is now living on Fayette street, Allegheny.

John Liggett married, June 7, 1803, Frances B., daughter of John Kelly, for many years the most prominent mathematician and corporator of the county. (See sketch of R. H. Kelly.) Mr. and Mrs. Liggett took up their residence at Springwood, where they still live. Owing to an infirmity in his hearing, he has never engaged in active business. To them were born six sons and two daughters, two of whom—one son and one daughter—died in infancy, and all the rest, save one, reside with their parents.

Their names are Elizabeth, Thomas (who has been prominently identified with the real-estate business of Pittsburgh for the last ten years, married to Anna G. Say, of Oil City, Pa., and with their three children, Thomas, Lawrence S. and Dorothy F., are living within a short distance of the old homestead), John, Jr., and Frank R. (associated with Thomas in the real-estate business), Augustus G. (fitting himself to become an architect) and William G. (attending Shadeyside Academy in preparation for a collegiate course).

James Verner, retired, was born Aug. 30, 1818, at Monongahela City (then called Williamsport), Pa., and is the youngest child and only son of James and Elizabeth (Doyle) Verner. His grandfather died at Verner's Bridge, County Armagh, Ireland, where she lived nearly a hundred years, and where her husband had died many years before her. Their ancestors were of Scotch origin. James and Elizabeth Verner came from Ireland to Pennsylvania in 1806, and after a brief stay at Pittsburgh moved to Williamsport. About 1830 they settled permanently in Pittsburgh, where Mr. Verner engaged in the brewing and lumber business with James Brown, the firm being known as Brown & Verner. He died in 1854, aged seventy-one; his wife survived him and died two years later at the same age. The family consisted of three daughters and one son. Their eldest daughter, Elizabeth (Mrs. Samuel Morrison) died in 1837, aged eighty-two. Ellen Holmes, widow of Bishop Simpson of the M. E. Church, now resides in Philadelphia; Mary died many years since, unmarried.

James Verner has lived nearly all his life in the Fourth ward of Pittsburgh. He attended a private school kept by John Kelly in Allegheny, and Allegheny College, Meadville, Pa. He married Anna, a daughter of Gen. James Murry, of Murrysville, Pa., and settled on a farm of four hundred acres at the site of the present borough of Verona, which was formerly called Verner's Station. Mr. Verner cleared and fenced the farm and added to it. After the completion of the Allegheny Valley railroad he formed a company to lay out a village, which now constitutes the First ward of Verona borough, and secured the location of the A. V. R. R. shops there. Returning to Pittsburgh, Mr. Verner became a partner in the brewing firm of George W. Smith & Co., in which he continued several years. He then became interested in and operated the Excelsior omnibus company, which transferred passengers and baggage from the Pennsylvania railroad to the Ft. Wayne railroad. Selling out this, Mr. Verner applied for and obtained a charter for the Citizens' Passenger Railway company, which was put in operation in 1859, the first street railway operated west of the Alleghany mountains. This road is now consolidated with the Transverse road in the Citizens' Traction railway. Mr. Verner afterward organized the Pittsburgh Forge and Iron company, of which he was for four years its president, and is still a director.

He served several years as member of council from the Fourth ward, and has always been a whig and republican. He has always been noted for his love of field sports, and has the reputation of being the oldest "wingshot" in Western Pennsylvania. He was one of the first to interest himself and others in the improvement in the breeding of hunting-dogs, and was one of the organizers of the Sportmen's Association of Western Pennsylvania, an association organized for the protection of game and fish, and now numbering over three hundred membership of the best citizens. Many years ago he purchased the ground, organized a company and laid out what now comprises the larger portion of what constitutes the present Ninth ward, Allegheny; the railroad station was then and is still called Verner's Station, on the P., Ft. W. & C. R. R. He attends the M. E. Church, in which his mother was an active member. In April, 1851, Mr. Verner was deprived by death of his faithful helper, her age being fifty-seven years. There were five sons and five daughters, one-half of whom grew to maturity: Priscilla, Mrs. Charles C. Scaife, of Pittsburgh; Amelia, Mrs. Arthur Malcom, of Philadelphia; James K., secretary Pittsburgh Forge and Iron company; Murry, superintendent of the Citizens' Traction railway, and M. Scott, mechanical engineer.

Andrew Brown Stevenson, banker, Pittsburgh, was born in Peebles township (now part of the Twenty-third ward of Pittsburgh), Dec. 30, 1817. His grandfather, Andrew Stevenson, died at Wilmington, Del., while in pursuit of a person for whom he stood bail in Ireland. James, son of Andrew, born in County Donegal, Ireland, eloped with and married Elizabeth Jane, a daughter of William Erskine, of County Down, Ireland. Mr. Erskine pursued and found them when about to sail for America, and finding they were married, he threw one hundred guineas in his daughter's lap, bidding her farewell. They arrived in Pittsburgh in 1817, and Mr. Stevenson became a postoffice clerk under David Lynch. He was tax-collector for the South (now Second ward) at the time of his death, which occurred June 15, 1836. He had five sons and three daughters, as follows: Andrew B.; William Erskine, who, after serving in the Pennsylvania house of representatives, went to Virginia and helped organize the state of West Virginia; he served in both houses of the legislature of that state, and was elected governor; for many years he edited the State Journal, a leading paper of that state, and is now deceased; he was a member of the convention which first nominated Lincoln for president, and was persecuted for his opinions on settling in Virginia; John Armstrong, residing near Iowa City, Iowa; Elizabeth Jane, widow of Alexander Cummings, residing at New Brighton, Pa.; James Hammil, who died in Pittsburgh; Thomas J., residing in Pittsburgh; Ruth, widow of Robert H. Beatty, in Coultersville, Ill., and Margaret, deceased, wife of Robert Brewer.

Andrew B. Stevenson was educated in private schools, and when about fourteen years old was apprenticed for seven years to a cabinet-maker. He carried on pattern-making, served fifteen years as justice of the peace, and was twenty years in the insurance business. For many years he has been a director of the First National Bank of Birmingham, and for part of the time president. He was an abolitionist, and is now an independent republican. Before the incorporation of Birmingham borough with Pittsburgh he served as burgess of the town. He is a Royal Arch Mason, a member of the I. O. O. F., and supports the Presbyterian Church. In 1842 he married Catherine Cameron, who died leaving four children: John C., Elizabeth C., wife of D. C. Ripley; Ruth Emma, Mrs. Geo. Barker; and Matilda A., living at home. For his second wife, Mr. Stevenson married Cynthia, widow of Thomas H. Douglass.

John F. Jennings. The men who laid the foundations of manufacturing and commercial strength on which Pittsburgh was built are rapidly passing away, and those who remain should be made to feel that the new generation has an appreciation of the past, and is willing to give a full meed of praise when it is due. John Flenniken Jennings was one of this hard-working body of pioneers, and he well earned the comfort and ease in which his declining years were spent. His life was a useful and busy one. He was born in Waynesburg, Greene county, Pa.,
Oct. 28, 1807, his ancestors coming originally from New Jersey. His maternal grandfather, John Fleniniken, while a native of Pennsylvania, was for many years a citizen of North Carolina, where he remained all through the revolutionary war, serving gallantly as a member of that band that has passed into history as Gen. Marion's minutemen. He was a delegate to the Mechenburg convention, which adopted the famous Mechenburg declaration of independence in 1775, and was one of the signers of that immortal paper. He was a man of high standing and great influence in the south. When the war was over, his wife having in the meantime died, he returned to Pennsylvania, bringing with him two children, a son and daughter, the latter becoming afterward the wife of Belt two tlene houses, a portion of the subject of this sketch. On Mr. Fleniniken's return to the north, he was appointed one of the first associate judges of Greene county, and served with honor in that position.

Mr. Jennings' paternal grandfather, Jacob Jennings, was a resident of Morris county, N. J., and came to Pennsylvania, settling on a farm on the west side of the Monongahela river, in Greene county. His son, Benjamin Jennings, learned the trade of a carpenter, and went to Waynesburg, the county seat of Greene county, which had previously been taken from Washington county. The town at that time did not contain a dozen houses. He assisted in building the first courthouse of that county, which was constructed of logs, and within it court was held until replaced with a new brick building. In this all the offices necessary for public business were included, and connected therewith was that very necessary appendage for a backwoods town— a county jail. This county was named for Gen. Greene, the bosom friend and military companion of Gen. Washington and Lafayette, and thus Western Pennsylvania honors those three heroes of the revolutionary war by naming for them the three adjoining counties of Washington, Fayette and Greene. When Benjamin Jennings married Dorcas Fleniniken he could find no house in Waynesburg in which to live save a small one of logs that stood on the farm from which the town was laid out. He purchased two lots on Main street and built his house in the rear of the town, the left half being cut from the main street of the town and the remainder from what is now called the Park, then known as the "Common."

The subject of this sketch was born during the progress of the above, in the little log house that stood on what is now Greene street. This building was demolished only a few years since to make room for the progress of improvements in that enterprising town. Mr. Jennings' opportunities for education were very limited. When about fifteen years of age he served for a time in a village store, but in a few months entered a printing-office to learn the trade of a printer. He earnestly applied himself to study, attending a grammar class at night, and soon became an expert in that difficult science. After completing his apprenticeship he was offered a position in the largest general store of the town, which he accepted, and remained there almost three years, receiving the rudiments of a business education which served him well in after life. By reason of close confinement his health began to fail, and he decided to leave the store and resume his trade as a printer. In 1830 he went to Ohio, and in St. Clairsville found an old office-mate who had learned his trade at the side of Mr. Jennings; this was Col. W. Manypenny, who afterward became a distinguished citizen of Ohio, and held many important positions, both state and national; he is at present a resident of Washington, D. C. Col. Manypenny purchased a newspaper and desired Mr. Jennings to remain with him until the paper was established; this he did and remained for one year, when he went to Columbus, devoting part of his time to his trade and part to reporting the proceedings of the general assembly. There were no steam presses at that time and there were but two men in the office who could publish a newspaper; Mr. Jennings was one of the two, and being an expert in all branches was soon materially advanced in the matter of wages. He had made himself useful in so many ways and worked with such industry and intelligent understanding of what was required of him that when he decided to leave he was offered the foremanship if he would remain; but having other purposes in view he declined. He returned to St. Clairsville, where he remained until the following spring, and in 1833 removed to Pittsburgh, with forty-five dollars in his pocket, the sum total of his worldly wealth. Here he followed his trade, and in 1835 became foreman of one of the offices. In March, 1837 Mr. Jennings was offered the position of printer and general manager of the Eagle Cotton-works, one of the largest in that line in Allegheny, where all the factories of that section were located and doing an immense business. To-day there is not one in operation. The machinery and business were sold a few years since and removed to Madison, Ind. Mr. Jennings remained with the Eagle Cotton-works six years, and on the removal of the factory from the town Hailman formed the firm of Hailman, Jennings & Co., for the conduct of the grocery business, their store being on Wood street, between First and Second streets (now First and Second avenues).

April 10, 1845, occurred the disastrous fire which destroyed the greater portion of the business section of the city. Their store, together with a large stock of groceries, was burned, and they were left several thousand dollars in debt. Jan. 1, 1846, Mr. Jennings, in connection with William Coleman and his former partner, James W. Hailman, formed the partnership of Coleman, Hailman & Co., for the purpose of manufacturing springs and axles for carriages and wagons; also steel. (This was one of the very first attempts at steel-making in Pittsburgh.) And while they exercised the best judgment, their methods were to some extent crude, and their machinery ill adapted for the work required. Some matters connected with the conduct of the business were not congenial, and Mr. Jennings offered his interest for sale, which was purchased by the then banking firm of Krahmer & Rahm. After the business had been in operation about one year, Mr. Jennings became impressed so strongly with the prospects for the steel business that he at once set about to organize a new firm, in which after a time he was successful, and resulted in establishing the Sheffield Steelworks, which to-day is the largest merchant steel-manufacturing establishment in Pittsburgh, and possibly in the United States. This firm, as originally organized, was composed of the following gentlemen: John F. Jennings, A. M. Wallingford, John F. Singer, Abraham S. Nicholson, Alexander Nimick and William K. Nimick, the firm name being Singer, Nicholson & Co. Before the works were completed and ready for operation, Hon. Felix R. Brunot was admitted to partnership in the firm, which was organized for the purpose of manufacture and sale of "steel, anvils, vises, springs, axes, and such other articles of similar character as may be deemed advisable." Mr. Nicholson remained in the business but a short time, and his interest was purchased by Mr. Samuel H. Hartman, the firm name being then changed to Singer, Hartman & Co. One of the principal articles of manufacture at the start was "German" plowsteel slabs, being rolled from cemented or blister-bar. A large demand having arisen for steel plows, a new mill having been constructed with an especial view to rolling such steel of a good quality, it met with a ready sale at remunerative prices, and for over two years they had a monopoly of the business. At the present time they hold the largest trade in plow-steel in this country. The method used in making steel was the old English one of cementation or conversion, since which time the whole method of manufacture of steel has changed, and comparatively little blister-bar is made, plow-steel now being of a different character and made by other methods.

Mr. Jennings was the originator of a system that is now universally adopted by the steel-manufacturers, i. e., of cutting for plow-makers their shares, moldboards, etc., to shape, thus saving to the plow-makers the expense of cutting these shapes by hand as was the custom at that time. The Sheffield Steelworks being provided with power shears could cut the shapes and make an additional profit for themselves and save a good percentage of expense to the consumer of the steel. Aug. 1, 1892, Mr. Jennings sold his interest in these enterprises and retired from active business pursuits, but remained connected with banking and insurance companies, being elected vice-president of the Cash Insurance company on its organization, a position he retained until his death.

No record of his life, however much in outline, would be complete without mention of his patriotic course during the war of the rebellion. His heart and soul were in the Union cause, and he was not 'the man to stand by and see all the work done and the burdens borne by others. He turned with all his indomitable energy to aid in sending soldiers into the field, and his services in that direction were successful in a high degree. His eldest son, Benjamin F., then twenty-three years of age, and at that time employed in the office of the Sheffield works, was determined to enlist. With the assistance and encouragement of his father he recruited a number of men, and by uniting with others who were recruiting was formed a full company which was known during the service as Co. B, 155th P. V. I. Benjamin F. Jennings was elected and commissioned second lieutenant, and before his term of service expired won the captaincy of the company. When Lee invaded Maryland the governor of Pennsylvania called for 50,000 emergency-men; with other patriotic citizens all through the state, Mr. Jennings went to work and promptly raised a company in Allegheny City. Many of the citizens had allowed their sons to enlist expecting Mr. Jennings to take command, and in order to make this misunderstanding good he decided to unofficially accompany the boys to the front. They arrived at Hagerstown immediately after the battle of Antietam, where they remained for two weeks until all danger of further invasion of the north was at an end. Mr. Jennings devoted his entire time in aid of the Union cause, and was prominent in keeping Western Pennsylvania fully alive to her duty in those trying hours. He was constantly in correspondence with the military authorities in Washington, and was frequently called to that city on business connected with military affairs. He was a prominent member of the city, state and national Union League, and one of its foremost workers. Mr. Jennings was an honored and consistent member of the Second Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh for more than forty years, and served for a number of years on the board of trustees. On several occasions when elections were held for elders of the church he was requested to serve in that position, but always declined.

He was married March 29, 1856, to Elizabeth B. Fitzgerald, youngest daughter of Michael Fitzgerald, at that time a prominent silversmith of Pittsburgh. There were born to this union three sons and two daughters, all of whom, with the exception of the youngest daughter, who died in infancy, are still living. The mother died Feb. 5, 1888. Mr. Jennings died peacefully at his home in Allegheny City, having passed fourscore years of an honorable and useful life, leaving to his children the proud
The Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette of March 9, 1888, says:

In the death of John F. Jennerone family loses a kind and thoughtful father, the community one of the most enterprising and intelligent men who ever aided in its development, and the national government one of the most unifying patriots who ever stood by it in its hour of need.

In politics he was a republican, and was one of the founders of that party, it having its origin in Lafayette Hall in Pittsburgh, and although several times tendered public office, both state and national, and on two separate occasions being tendered the unanimous nomination for state senator, he steadily declined and never held an office.

Prof. John Davis, minister, educator, author, inventor and manufacturer, sprang from a Welsh and Irish ancestry, whose sympathies and services were identified with those of the father of our country in securing the liberty. He and his brother, William, enjoyed the advantages of a liberal education with his brother, William Johnston, his paternal and maternal grandfathers, were Presbyterians by birth and profession, and entered the colonial army in the early history of the American Revolution, serving officially therein till peace was declared, after which they settled in Western Pennsylvania, where the former died, aged eighty-five years, and the latter aged one hundred and five, and Isabella Scott, wife of the former, aged seventy-five years, and Mary McClelland, wife of the latter, at the age of eighty-five. Henry Davis, the eldest son of William, and father of John, was born in 1787, and acquired early in life a classical and mathematical education. With the spirit and loyalty of his father to our flag he entered the American army in 1812, and remained as an officer therein till the troops were disbanded. He was for many years eminent in his profession as land-surveyor and civil engineer, and at various times held offices of public interest in both church and state. He was a man of vigorous intellect, stern integrity and unfaltering fidelity in the discharge of both private and public duties. At the age of twenty-four he married Jane Johnston, a lady of sterling qualities, and resident of Beaver county, Pa., where the subject of this sketch, John Davis, was born in 1821, and where his father died, aged seventy-four years, and his mother, aged eighty.

The mental traits of the father being inherited by the son, he was put early in life under the tuition of a private instructor. Having advanced in his studies sufficiently to enter regular academic classes, he enjoyed the advantages of several of the best educational institutions of our country.

Minister. Choosing the gospel ministry as a profession, he was graduated from the Western Theological Seminary in 1848, and while a post-graduate, the following year, in Princeton Theological Seminary, was unani- mously elected pastor of a large and flourishing congregation in West Virginia. But his health being somewhat impaired by a long course of study, he declined this pastorate, and by medical advice retired from public duty for a time to recuperate. In this interim two pastorate were tendered him, one of which he accepted, and was ordained in 1851. The strain incident to public speaking in a few months induced him to resign his charge and enter upon the teacher's profession, in which he labored for about thirty years. In 1858 he was married to Emeline Hays, a lady of culture and refinement, and fourth daughter of James H. Hays, many years identified with the coal interests of Pittsburgh. Resulting from this marriage was one daughter, Eva Hays Davis, a lady of liberal attainments and wife of William S. Huselton, M. D., one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Allegheny City.

Educator. Marked success crowned the efforts of Prof. Davis as an organizer, administrator and instructor in the higher departments of education and in the management and supervision of public instruction in Allegheny City, and the imprint of his scholarly attainments and tact is reflected by many of her citizens and others who now adorn the learned professions and other honorable pursuits.

Author. Eminent as he was as an educator, he was equally so as an author. Being a zealous student of the natural sciences, their rich treasures were unfolded to his view, which took both form and expression in the various works which fell from his pen. They are fundamental in their character, dealing more with principle than with detail, and are used mainly as students' textbooks in our educational institutions, and also in similar institutions of some foreign countries. In acquiring a knowledge of mathematical geography and astronomy.

Inventor. And to economize both time and labor, in acquiring a knowledge of mathematical geography and astronomy, he invented a series of instruments, now in practical use, whereby these sciences are illustrated with fidelity, and may be comprehended by the youthful mind at a glance. The largest of the series represents more than eighty movements of the principal bodies belonging to the solar system, and is the only one of its kind in existence.

Besides these educational improvements he has made many others, by applying science to the industries, which are now being manufactured under patent protection with profit, in various localities of our country, and several more of equal or still greater utility will ere long be brought into public use.

Capt. Charles W. Batchelor was born in Steubenville, Ohio, in 1823, and received his early education at private schools in his native town. His father was Joseph S. Batchelor, who moved from Philadelphia to Steuben-ville, in 1810, and engaged in the manufacture of furniture. In 1841 Capt. Batchelor apprenticed himself to Capt. Henry Mason, of Wheeling, on steamer Tioga, to learn to be a pilot. In 1845 he became a full pilot, and in 1849 he bought the interest of Capt. John Klinefelter in the steamer Hibernia No. 2, of the Pittsburgh and Cincinnati Packet Company. In 1853 he took command of the famous Allegheny, in the same line. In 1854 he sold his interest in the Allegheny, and built the Americus for the Pittsburgh and Nashville trade. In 1865 the Americus burned, and he left the river to become the active vice-president of the Eureka Insurance company, of Pittsburgh, and he acted as the general agent in settling marine losses. In 1861 he was appointed by President Lincoln surveyor of the port and United States depository at Pittsburgh, where he remained until September, 1866, when he was removed by President Johnson because he would not become a Johnson man. During his connection with the latter office he disbursed over one hundred million dollars, and wound up with the government in his debt. In 1867 he became president of the Eagle Cotton Mills company of Pittsburgh, in which he continued until 1873. In 1868 he was made president of the Masonic Bank of Pittsburgh, where he continued until 1884, when he resigned to become acting vice-president of the Keystone Bank and president of the Pittsburgh Petroleum Exchange. He continues his connection with the Keystone Bank, but resigned the presidency of the Oil Exchange. He is now president of the Manufacturers' & Merchants' Insurance company, and the Natural Gas company of West Virginia, furnishing gas to the city of Wheeling; and secretary and treasurer of the Natural Gas company, limited, of Pittsburgh, the first gas company that ever handled natural gas for manufacturing purposes, which was in 1873. During his steamboat career he owned in and built the most of the following steamers: Hibernia No. 2, Allegheny, Americus, W. I. Maclay, Eunice, Lucy Gwin, Paragon, Mary E. Forsyth, George W. Graham, W. R. Arthur, Emma Duncan, Darling, Norman, Guildon, F. Y. Batchelor, and the Lac La Belle, of Cleveland, Ohio.

In 1885 he was made chairman of the committee of arrangements, and commodore of the fleet, for the celebration of the opening of Davis Island dam, at Pittsburgh. Capt. Batchelor has been a prominent Mason for years, he having received the highest degree that can be conferred, and was grand commander of Knights Templar of Pennsylvania. He is one of nature's noblemen, and is respected far and wide.—Marine Journal, New York, Jan. 22, 1887.

WILLIAM B. SCAIFE (deceased) was born in the First ward, Pittsburgh, Sept. 5, 1813. His parents, Jeffery and Lydia (Barrett) Scaife, came from Yorkshire, England, to Pittsburgh about the beginning of the present century, and in 1802 Jeffery Scaife engaged in the manufacture of tin and sheet-iron ware. The latter died in 1846. William B., his only surviving son, succeeded to the business. Jeffery Scaife's father was a tea-merchant, who died and was buried at Barbados. The family is of Danish origin, and has been traced back to the year 1633.

In 1838 the founder of these lines organized the firm of W. B. Scaife & Co., which engaged quite extensively in the manufacture of tin, sheet-iron and copper ware, and five years later he became sole proprietor. In 1867 the firm became William B. Scaife & Sons. Mr. Scaife died in 1876. He was a lifelong member of the M. E. Church, and was a whig and republican. His wife, Mary, was a daughter of Ephraim Frisbee, of Schenectady County, N. Y., and was born in Pittsburgh. They have six sons: Oliver P., Charles C., Laureston L., William Lucien, Marvin F. and Walter B. Oliver P. is a civil engineer, member of the firm, and identified with a number of Pittsburgh enterprises. Charles Cooke was educated at the Pittsburgh high-school, and entered his father's office when seventeen years of age. Laureston graduated at the Pittsburgh high-school in 1866, at Yale in 1870 and Harvard Law School in 1872. He was admitted to the Boston bar, where he now resides and practices his profession. William L. graduated at Pittsburgh high-school, 1888; Yale, 1872, and at the Freiburg School of Mines, Saxony, Germany, 1875. Two years later he became an honorary member of the Paris Schools of Mining and Engineering. He is a chairman of the Scaife Foundry & Machine Co., in which all the brothers are interested. Walter B., the youngest member of the family, received the appointment to Vienna, Austria, of United States vice consul-general, where he has since resided.

Rev. JOHN B. DUFFNER, rector of St. Peter's German Catholic Church, Pittsburgh (South Side), was born June 19, 1843, at Schoenenbach, Baden, Germany. He commenced his studies in Switzerland, and came to the United States in October, 1867, where he completed them. He was ordained for the diocese of Pittsburgh Jan. 25, 1868, and is the founder of St. Peter's (South Side) congregation, which he has tended eighteen years—ever since the first mass was celebrated.

The German Catholic St. Peter's (South Side) congregation is in that part of the city of Pittsburgh of which is said the houses grow out of the soil as by magic. In November, 1871, the present rector of the church, Rev. John B. Duffner, was ordered by Rt. Rev. Bishop Domener to this, that time, thinly settled place, then known by the name of Ormsby borough, to see if a congregation could be started. A storeroom called Wolf's hall was engaged and fitted out for church and school purposes as could best be done. The number of the families was then fifty, scholars twenty-eight. This room was only for temporary use. In 1872 a larger church was built, large enough to accommodate two hundred families, and a separate school-building, in which two hundred children could be instructed. The school was then under the direction of Stephen Schmill, teacher, and who is still with the congregation as organist. But soon these buildings proved too small, and in 1873 another church edifice was commenced and was finished and dedicated in November following year. The building is 175 feet long by 72 wide; at the same time the old church was changed into a two-story school-building, with four large schoolrooms. Two large additions have been built since to the schoolhouse, also a fine residence of twelve rooms for the priest; a convent for the sisters has also been completed. Lately the congregation bought a tract of land, six acres, which serves as a cemetery and is nicely laid out in lots. This congregation is at present in the southeast part of the city of Pittsburgh (South Side), has over seven hundred families, five hundred pupils at school and nine teachers.

Adam Mercer Brown, attorney, is a grandson of Adam Brown, of Cumberland county, Pa., a soldier in Washington's army in the revolutionary war. About the beginning of the century his grandfather removed to Butler county, Pa., where he built the first gristmill, in the vicinity of what has since been known as Brownsdale. His progenitors were among the early residents of Eastern Pennsylvania.

Joseph Brown, the third son of Adam Brown, married Mary, a daughter of James Marshall, who, with his family, had come from Londonderry, Ireland, to Pittsburgh, in 1822, whence he soon removed to Butler county. James Marshall was also the father of Judge Marshall, of Butler county; Hon. Thomas M. Marshall, and A. M. Marshall, of Pittsburgh. Joseph Brown spent most of his life on a farm near Brownsdale, where he died, in 1883: Mary Marshall, his wife, died in 1877, at the age of seventy-nine years. Of their children, Adam Mercer (the subject of this sketch), Jane, Esther, William and Sarah are yet living.

Adam Mercer Brown, their second child, was born Aug. 3, 1830. He received the most liberal training afforded by the schools of his native county, and finished his education at private schools in Pittsburgh. He read law with his uncle, Thomas M. Marshall, being admitted to the bar in 1858. For twelve years he was a member of the firm of Marshall & Brown, but since 1868 he has practiced for himself. He is recognized as a leading member of the Allegheny county bar, and has achieved many forensic triumphs. Although his practice is almost entirely in the civil courts, he occasionally, and for special causes, consents to appear in important criminal cases, in the trial of which he exhibits the same conspicuous energy and ability which have invariably characterized his professional work in all other courts and cases. Among his many celebrated cases his successful defense and acquittal of James Nutt, in the famous trial for the murder of Capt. Dukes, in 1884, added no little to his professional reputation, and won popular favor.

Mr. Brown has been a lifelong supporter of the republican party. He was a member of the select council of Pittsburgh for three years; a delegate to the national convention that nominated Abraham Lincoln for president, in 1864, and to that which nominated Grant and Colfax, in 1868. He has never sought or desired public office, although often urged to become a candidate for high official positions. Enterprising and efficient upon all occasions of public emergency, disinterested and public-spirited, he enjoys the thorough respect and confidence of all who know him. He is an active member of the First U. P. Church, of Pittsburgh. He was prominent in the organization of the Anchor Savings Bank in 1873, of which he has ever since been president. He is also a director in the Cash Insurance company and Odd Fellows' Savings Bank.

In 1851 Mr. Brown was married to Lucette, the daughter of Adam Turney, of Greensburg, Westmoreland county, Pa. Mr. Turney was of Scotch-Irish lineage, and his wife, Hannah, was a daughter of Rev. John William Weber, founder of the G. R. U. E. Church, at the corner of Sixth avenue and Smithfield street, the earliest church in Pittsburgh. The following are the children of Mr. Brown, in the order of birth: Marshall (a Pittsburgh attorney), Sarah M. (wife of Dr. T. G. Herron, of Allegheny), Carrie A. (Mrs. John H. Herron), William John, Thomas M. and John Dean.

H. H. Hofmann, M. D. Prominent among the physicians of Pittsburgh is the subject of this sketch. He was born at Roetha, near Leipsic, Germany, Dec. 21, 1821, his father being a physician of that town. When he was about twelve years old his father died, leaving a large family in very moderate circumstances. Of this family six were sons, who all became physicians. Herman, the fourth son, after completing a common-school education, entered the Gymnasium of St. Thomas, and was corresponding here to a literary college. After finishing here he received his medical education at the University at Leipsic, and came to the United States in 1849. Although he had seen the application of the principles of homeopathy in Leipsic, he was not convinced as to its merits. After coming to Pittsburgh he was induced to investigate homeopathy by Dr. Reichhelm, the first homeopathic physician west of the Alleghany mountains. The success of this school of practice in the treatment of cholera in 1849 finally convinced him, and he became a firm adherent to it. Appreciating the need of a homeopathic hospital, he, with Dr. M. Cote, now deceased, and Dr. J. C. Burgher, in 1866 purchased a building, and soon after the Homeopathic hospital of Pittsburgh was incorporated. This old building was torn down some years ago to make room for a new hospital, the finest institution of its class in the city. He has not for some time been actively engaged in hospital work, but is consulting member of the obstetrical staff of the Homeopathic Medical and Surgical Hospital and Dispensary of Pittsburgh, and is the oldest homeopathic physician in Pittsburgh. D. T. Hoffman was married at Leip-sic, Germany, in 1848, to Miss Mary Erdmann, and their children are Eliza (wife of C. P. Seip, M. D., of Pittsburgh), William F. (now deceased, of the firm of Heeren Bros. & Co., wholesale jewelers, of Pittsburgh), Adella (wife of Otto Heeren, of the same firm) and Charles H., M. D., Pittsburgh. He is a graduate of Pittsburgh high-school and the Western University. In 1874 he graduated from the Pulte Medical College, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and graduated from the New York City in 1879, and then spent one year in Ward's Island Homeopathic College, when he went to Europe, and spent two years in Leipsic, Vienna and Berlin. He is a member of the Homeopathic Medical Society of Pennsylvania and Alle-geneisy. Among the ancestors of the McClure family, and one of the surgeons of the Homeopathic College, Pittsburgh. Charles H. married, in 1887, Miss Mary Robin-Abdiel McClure, Esq. (deceased). Among the prominent citizens of Allegheny county there is none more worthy of mention than the subject of this sketch. He was descended from that hardy Scotch-Irish Presbyterian stock so prominent in the history of Pennsylvania. The McClure family first settled east of the mountains. John McClure, Sr., grandfather of our subject, was one of the early settlers of Allegheny county, and he located on and purchased the land where Homestead now stands, which tract of land was called “Amity,” and consisted of 3,200 acres. The original patents, granted to him May 19, 1786, are still in the possession of his descendants, and it is a fact worthy of mention that this land has continued in their uninterrupted possession for four generations, covering a period of more than a century. John McClure, Sr., was fond of the chase, and kept a pack of hounds. He traveled over Western Pennsylvania, but found no land that suited him so well as his “Homestead.” He married Martha Denny. His son, John McClure, lived a life resembling that of his father. He took great interest in politics and was a prominent whig. He married Agnes Topping, a native of Westmoreland county, Pa. They were members of the Lebanon Presbyterian Church, and reared a family of ten children: John, Robert, James, Matthew, William, Abdiel, Mrs. Martha McCrea, Mrs. Jane Whitaker, Mrs. Nancy D. Risher and Polly McClure. Of these, Abdiel married Anne W., a daughter of Daniel and Sarah C. (Creedy) Risher. Mrs. McClure was born in this county, Dec. 14, 1818, and is the mother of eight children, five now living, viz.: Sarah R., wife of C. W. Taylor, of Taylor & Elylock; Mary Syrett, Pittsburgh; Matthew L.; Miss Martha D., residing at Homestead with her mother; Daniel R. and J. Henry.

Abdiel McClure was a man of unusual ability. His influence was felt in religious and business matters, and he was universally loved and respected. In political circles he was recognized as an upright, honest gentleman. He was a republican, and held the office of county recorder from 1863 to 1866. In the latter part of his life he became identified with temperance reform and was an earnest worker and supporter of that cause. After his term of office as recorder expired, he farmed the “Homestead,” and also became interested in a wholesale business in Pittsburgh. When he sold 113 acres of land to the Homestead Bank and Life Insurance company, of which he was a mem-er, he very wisely set apart building-lots for churches and schools. He was a contractor and builder, and established the Homestead planing-mill, which he conducted until his death. His life was an example worthy of emulation. He was a quiet, thoughtful man, of a just and peaceful disposition, honest and equitable in the extreme. He was justice of the peace a number of times, and he was often chosen to settle estates. He was an earnest Christian and a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church.

Matthew L. McClure was born at Homestead, Dec. 24, 1841, where he received his education and learned the trade of carpenter. In September, 1862, he enlisted in Co. H, 14th P. C., and served with his regiment under Gens. Hunter, Averill and Sheridan in the Army of Western Virginia. At the close of the war he returned home, and was clerk for his father in the county recorder’s office; then engaged in the lumber business in Pittsburgh some three years; then worked at his trade in Erie county until 1874, when he returned to Pittsburgh and kept books for a wholesale grocery until 1879, and since then has been engaged at his trade, and in the planing-mill at Homestead. He was married Sept. 13, 1866, to Miss Hannah S., a daughter of Rev. James F., Read, of Union City, Erie county, Pa. Mr. and Mrs. McClure are members of the First Presbyterarian Church, Homestead, and have two children, Abdiel R. and Florence L. Mr. Mc-Clure is one of the administrators of his father’s estate, and has been councilman and assessor of Homestead.

Daniel R. McClure was born at Homestead, Oct. 17, 1846; is a graduate of Duff’s College. He also attended the Penn Institute. He was deputy county recorder two years. After traveling for his health he accepted the position of bookkeeper for the old Fort Pitt Bank. He ranks among the leading business-men of Homestead, has taken an active interest in anything that is of benefit to that town, and has been councilman four years. Mr. McClure is a director of the First National Bank, and president of the Homestead Building & Loan association. He was also appointed one of the adminis-rators of his father's estate. He was married to Miss Mary E. Gleadall, Feb. 22, 1876, and this union has been blessed with three children: Daniel R., Mary G. and Robert M. Mr. and Mrs. McClure are members of the Presbyterian Church.

J. H. McClure, bookkeeper, Homestead, was born Jan. 29, 1852, on the old homestead, a son of Squire Abdiel McClure. He was reared in Homestead, and educated in his native county. He clerked for his father in Pittsburgh for a number of years, and has been more or less identified with his father's business. He has been twice married; first to Jennie, daughter of Joseph Ramsey, and granddaughter of Maj. N. Patterson. She was born in Allegheny county. Thus in 1861, he had a family of three children: Daniel, Mary and Joseph R. His present wife is Mary H., daughter of Aaron M. Work, and they have one child, Mary Ada. Mr. and Mrs. McClure are members of the Presbyterian Church. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. and A. O. U. W., and is a republican.

B. L. H. Dabbs, whose name now has such a familiar sound in Pennsylvania, was born in London in 1839, while he was still a child his parents came to this country. His father, George Dabbs, was one of the pioneers of the trade in photographic materials in America, being first a member of the firm of L. Chapman & Co., of New York city, and in 1856 moved to Philadelphia, where he manufactured photographic goods under the name of George Dabbs & Co. Thus young B. L. H. Dabbs early became conversant with the details of the business in which he has since taken such a high place. Mr. Dabbs came to Pittsburgh in April, 1861, and opened a store for the sale of ambrotype and photographic supplies. It did not take long for Mr. Dabbs to build up a larger establishment in this line than Pittsburgh had ever seen before. In the same year, 1861, he became interested in the taking of photographs, by the purchase of the gallery of a Mr. Rorah, Nos. 30 and 92 Federal street, Allegheny City. From this day Mr. Dabbs gradually abandoned the purely mercantile, and attached himself to the artistic side of the photographic business. His work was a revelation to Pittsburgh and the adjoining country and his success was immediate, and at first it was heartily appreciated. In 1864 Mr. Dabbs found that his standing as an artistic photographer necessitated his removal to Pittsburgh, and accordingly, in 1864, he established the largest photographic gallery in the city, at 46 and 48 Sixth street. So rapidly did the demand for his photographs increase that in 1889 he sold out his business as a dealer in photographic materials. Since then he has devoted all his time and talents to the taking of portraits, and the development of the science of photography.

In 1876 he removed to his present quarters, 602 Liberty street, and around him he has gathered a corps of operators and auxiliary artists which has no superior in the country to-day, and has always enabled Mr. Dabbs to turn out more striking, truthful and singularly artistic pictures than can be made elsewhere in the two cities. His reputation has had a steady and substantial growth from the first. Mr. Dabbs has always been eager to adopt the latest inventions, and experimental study has always received his closest attention. Among photographers, as with the public, Mr. Dabbs stands in excellent repute, and as his energy is unabated, even better results may be expected from his studio; and his business, already large, is steadily increasing.

Mr. Dabbs resides with his family in a handsome residence on Hiland avenue, East Side, where he has one of the finest art libraries in the city.

Thomas M. Morrow, proprietor of livery, Allegheny, was born in Richland township, this county, in 1831, a son of Richard and Mary(Miller) Morrow, and has always resided in the county. He was married in 1872, to Margaret B., daughter of James and Margaret Kendall, of Fulton county, Pa. He is a farmer, but has been in the livery business since 1861 in Allegheny.

Thomas Reynolds (deceased), late of Reynoldston, this county, was born in County Derry, Ireland, Aug. 22, 1806, and was descended from the Reynoldses of Cornwall, England. He was a son of George and Isabella (Leslie) Reynolds, Presbyterians, some of whose kindred was a farmer, and died in Ireland. In 1836 Thomas Reynolds, with his mother, three brothers and two sisters, came to Pittsburgh, Pa., and, three years later, Thomas, with his mother and two sisters, went to New Lisbon, Ohio. Here Thomas, in partnership with James Star, engaged in the manufacture of thrashing-machines, farmmills and general farm implements, until 1848, when he purchased a large tract of land where Reynoldston, this county now is, and which town he founded. He was a natural mechanic, and a man of more than ordinary ability. He was a great reader, plain and unassuming in his manner, one who made hosts of friends, and enjoyed the confidence and respect of all. He was a member of the M. E. Church; was elected justice of the peace, and was a prominent member of Reynoldsburg. He died in November, 1887.

In 1874 he sent for his nephew, Thomas Reynolds, Jr., to assist him in his business, and in 1882 conveyed all his land to his nephew.

Thomas Reynolds, Jr., was born in Galena, Ill., Jan. 29, 1854, son of Robert and Martha J. (Fugh) Reynolds, the former of whom was born in County Derry, Ireland, and the latter in Virginia. They are members of the Disciples' Church. Soon after coming to Pittsburgh from Ireland, Robert Reynolds went to New Orleans, thence to Davenport, Iowa, thence to Galena, Ill., where he engaged in the manufacture of brick. In 1869 he moved to Missouri, where he carried on farming until 1882, in which year he came to McKeesport, where he and his wife still
Mr. Robert Reynolds is president and half owner of the McKeesport and Youghiogheny bridge and owner of real estate. Thomas Reynolds, Jr., laid out the town of Reynoldtson, and was the first burgess. It was he who suggested the building of the McKeesport and Youghiogheny bridge, in the construction of which he was the principal mover, and was president of the bridge company and chief stockholder until April, 1888. He is still a member of the bridge company, stockholder and director in the People's Bank, McKeesport Gas company, and McKeesport Light company; he is school director and councilman of Reynoldtson, and is a member of the M. E. Church. Mr. Reynolds was united in marriage, Oct. 4, 1888, with Miss Anna B. Woods, a native of McKeesport, daughter of Theodore Woods, civil engineer and a prominent citizen of McKeesport.

John Bernard Lutz, bank president, Pittsburgh, was born in Herolz, now in Prussia, May 11, 1822. His father, Valentine Lutz, was an architect and builder in the government employ. John B. attended school till sixteen years of age, when he came to America and located in Pittsburgh, Pa. Here he attended private schools and prepared himself for the profession of civil engineer. In 1841 he became attached to the United States engineer corps, and was employed on surveys in Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota. On the outbreak of the Mexican war he went with his corps to the front, and received a shot in the arm at the battle of Cerro Gordo, which caused his discharge, and he still carries the bullet in his arm. After his recovery he was employed on the construction of the P. & O. R. R., now a part of the P., Ft. W. & C. road, and on its completion he settled in what is now the South Side of Pittsburgh. He laid out the borough of Ormsby, and was its first burgess. For many years he kept hotel. He was one of the organizers of the German Savings and Deposit Bank, and has been for four years its president; is a director of the Birmingham Insurance company, and president of the German Roman Catholic Press company. He is a member of St. Peter's R. C. Church, and has always been a democrat. In October, 1847, Mr. Lutz married Katharine Keeling, a native of Youngstown, Pa., daughter of Joseph Keeling, of Prussia, and following are the names of their children: Mary (wife of William Trimble, of Niles, Ohio), John, Frank J., Maggie (widow of John May), William and Henry. All save the eldest are residents of Pittsburgh, the last two named being with their parents.

James J. Booth, contractor, Pittsburgh, was born in Duckinfield, Cheshire, England, in June, 1836, and is a son of Jonathan and Ellen Booth, who were also born in the same locality. In early life he was placed to work in a cotton-mill, but his ambition was not satisfied with this sort of life. Being anxious to become a bricklayer, and being denied the privilege of learning the trade, he ran away from home in 1854, and came to Pittsburgh. He first found employment on the river, but soon found an opportunity to gratify his long-cherished wish. After working independently and as a journeyman bricklayer, he began, in 1869, to take contracts for street construction and buildings. In 1878, the firm of Booth & Finn was established, and five years later they began the manufacture of brick. Many of the finest streets in Pittsburgh were built by this firm, such as Washington, Linden and Simon avenues, and McPherson and Barton streets. They also paved Penn, Liberty and Second avenues with Belgian blocks. In 1888, they built the Citizens' Traction company, and following year the Central.

Mr. Booth is a useful member of Trinity P. E. Church; is identified with the I. O. O. F., and is a Past Master of Franciscans and a Knight Templar. Politically he is a republican. In 1861 he married Priscilla Jane, daughter of Samuel Turbot, of Irish extraction, and following are the names of their children: Ellen (widow of Harry E. Bray), Ulrich Dahlgren, Carrie, Ethel May and Blanche Olive.

John B. Ingham, contractor and builder, Allegheny, was born in Dublin, Ireland, Jan. 15, 1813, a son of Humphrey J. and Mary (Borbridge) Ingham. He came with his parents to America in 1816, and they first located in Philadelphia, Pa. After a residence of seven years there, they moved to Luzerne county, Pa., where the mother died in 1826, at the age of forty-five years. The father remained in Luzerne county until 1834, when he came to live with his son, John B., in Allegheny City, only for two years, however, as he departed this life Oct. 15, 1866, at the age of eighty-five. He had been twice married; by first marriage there were seven daughters and two sons, of whom John B. and Charles F. are the only ones now living; by second marriage there were three children, Emily, now Mrs. Davenport, residing in Luzerne county, Pa., being the survivor.

John B. Ingham, the subject of this sketch, came to this county Jan. 24, 1822, and has since resided in Allegheny. His first marriage occurred July 3, 1835, with Mary McClure, and by this union there was one child, which died in infancy, its mother only surviving its birth a few days, dying Jan. 1, 1837. Mr. Ingham's second marriage occurred June 12, 1838, with Mary Hobson, by whom there were four children, two yet living: Charles F., present partner with his father in business, and Emma, wife of George Vance, of Connells ville, Pa. This wife died Feb. 26, 1848, and Mr. Ingham next married, March 6, 1849, Anna C. Neeb, who bore him eight children: William K.; Martha E., wife of Newman Hobson; and three in Iowa; Mary C. (deceased); Jean E. and Florence A. (twins); John B., Jr.; Ida M., wife of Frank Neeb, of Lancaster, Ohio, and Louis N. Mrs. Ingham died, Aug. 1, 1871.
aged forty-eight years, and Jan. 31, 1872, Mr. Ingham married Mrs. Elizabeth McBride, nee Hobson, of Newark, N. J., sister of his second wife; she had five sons by Mr. McBride, two of whom are ministers in the M. E. Church.

Mr. Ingham has been a contractor and builder in Allegheny for over fifty years, and has erected some of the most substantial structures in this county, among them, in Allegheny, being the old Arch Street M. E. church, the North Avenue M. E. church, the Avery institute for colored people and Arbuckle's block on Liberty avenue, Pittsburgh. He has been a member of the M. E. Church for over fifty years.

James Clark Williams, A. M., president of Curry University, is a native of Allegheny county. He was born and spent the first seventeen years of his life on the old homestead farm, near Bakerstown, where his grandfather, Rev. Matthew Williams, one of the first Covenanters preachers in Western Pennsylvania, settled about the year 1800. The four years after leaving the farm were spent in collegiate studies, which he commenced under the private tuition of the great astronomer and teacher, Prof. Bradley (the founder of the Allegheny Observatory), and were continued at Westminster College, Lawrence county, Pa. In 1872 he became the junior member of the firm of Garber & Williams, successors to Higby Cust & Co., importers and dealers in queensware and fine china, 139 Liberty street, Pittsburgh. In 1874, having disposed of his interests in that firm to advantage, he embarked in the real estate business. Shortly after he purchased large flouring-mill interests, which, by energy and good business management, were made very profitable.

Five years later, the mills having been destroyed by fire, he associated himself with Currie Institute, after which he became principal in 1880, and with his brother, the late Harmon D. Williams, built up the institution in the face of most discouraging circumstances, attaining an almost unparalleled success.

The September term of 1880 was begun with less than a dozen pupils, while the enrollment last year (1889) was 1,405 students, under a faculty of thirty teachers who are giving instruction in the full course of university studies. In recognition of his scholarly attainments the degree of Master of Arts was conferred upon him by Lafayette College, Easton, Pa., in 1883.

He has been careful to have associated with him in the faculty of the university only Christian ladies and gentlemen. And while the university is thoroughly non-sectarian, yet it is also known as a thoroughly Christian institution, where a high standard of morality and Christian influence is always recognized.

Mr. Williams is a regular attendant at the Third Presbyterian Church, where he has been a member for about sixteen years, and devotes much of his time to helping young people in needy circumstances to better their condition.

President Williams is a man of tireless energy, of abundant resources in management, strict, yet kind in discipline, and the large institution which he has built up in so short a time is both an honor to himself and to the county in which he was born.

Simon Beymer, white lead manufacturer, Pittsburgh, was born near Somerset, Perry county, Ohio, in April, 1829. His grandfather, Simon Beymer, was born in Somerset county, Pa., in 1782, and was descended from the early German settlers of Eastern Pennsylvania. His wife, Ann Clark, was born in the same locality (top of Laurel hill) in 1779, and came of Scotch lineage. In 1805 this couple went to Guernsey county, Ohio, and founded Beymerstown (now Washington), where Simon Beymer and his brother Henry were the first settlers. Simon built a hotel which was called the "Black Bear," in 1805, and lived there till his death, in 1848. He raised a company for the war of 1812, and was elected captain. After the war he was made a general of militia. His widow continued to conduct the hotel with the aid of her son John, and after the death of the latter he was succeeded by another son, Conrad. Mrs. Beymer died in 1874. The family, which included seven sons and two daughters, associated with the Lutheran Church.

The third son, George, married Nancy A. Clark, a native of Washington county, Pa., and settled on a farm in Perry county, Ohio. He died in Williamsburg, Ohio, in 1844, aged forty-two years. Nancy Beymer's parents were of Scotch descent, and were born on the same day and died in the same building on the same day, making her an orphan at an early age. She is now living, in her eighty-fourth year. Her children number fourteen and are the name of the third heading this sketch.

The early education of the subject of this memoir was secured at the public school, and was finished by a private tutor. He began life when seventeen years old, as a drug clerk. While thus employed he made a thorough study of the science of medicine, but never took up its practice. In 1852 he came to Pittsburgh, and took employment with the wholesale drughouse of B. A. Fahnstock & Co., which firm was engaged in the manufacture of white-lead. At the end of five years he became a partner with B. L. Fahnstock in the wholesale drug business, and later engaged in the manufacture of white-lead. In 1867 the firm of Beymer Bauman & Co. was formed, and established white-lead works, and on the death of Reuben F. Bauman, in December, 1885, Mr. Beymer bought the interest of his estate, and organized the Beymer-Bauman Lead company, of which he is president, his eldest son, Hervey W. Beymer, being manager. Mr. Beymer sustains the church of his parents and family, the Presbyterian, and follows the political precedents of his ancestry, whig and republican. He is an active member of the Masonic fraternity, having attained the thirty-second degree. In 1855 Mr. Beymer married Annie C., daughter of George and Fanny L. Fracker, all of Massachusetts birth. Mrs. Beymer passed from earth Dec. 30, 1882, in her forty-eighth year. Of her seven children the eldest three are associated in business with their father, and the fourth is a bookkeeper in the Keystone National Bank. Following are their names in order of birth: Hervey W., George H., Charles F., Albert S., Clara, Helen and Harry C.

Graham Scott. The parents of Graham Scott, James and Mary (Graham) Scott, were born in County Tyrone, Ireland. They removed to this country about 1802, and located in Lancaster county, Pa., for a few years; then removed to near the town of Mercer, Mercer county, same state, where the subject of this notice, Graham Scott, was born. While he was quite young they removed to a farm adjoining Smith's Ferry, Beaver county, Pa. The house afforded a splendid view of the Ohio river and the village of Georgetown, on the opposite side. Mr. Scott's mother died Feb. 11, 1832, and his father, March 25, 1838, leaving six sons and two daughters, three sons having preceded them to the better land, Graham being the youngest but one. These, all but the subject of this notice, have since gone to that bourne whence no traveler returns, he being left the last of eleven.

Graham Scott attended such schools as were to be found in those days, until he secured a fair common-school education. He lived among his friends in Beaver county until April, 1836, when he came to Pittsburgh, where he has ever since resided. He first engaged in the house- and sign-painting trade, having entered in apprenticeship in 1838 with William Oram. After some sixteen years spent in this business, on account of its not agreeing with him, he abandoned it, and took a situation with William Dilworth, Jr., in the lumber business, planing-mill and sash and door factory. Upon the death of Mr. Dilworth, in 1857 (he being appointed to settle up his estate), he turned his attention to settling estates, notary public, real-estate and insurance business, and may be found at 151 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, almost any time during business hours. His residence for the last twenty-five years has been Craft avenue, Oakland, Fourteenth ward, Pittsburgh. He was married Feb. 1, 1844, to Miss Anna T., daughter of James and Eleanor Jane Brown, who was born in County Tyrone, Ireland. They lived together happily thirty-six years. She died April 16, 1880, leaving no children. Graham Scott has been a member of the Second U. P. Church of Pittsburgh, for near fifty years; has filled the office of school director for some sixteen years; has never taken any special partisan-ship in politics, but has been a consistent member of the republican party since its formation.

William Richard Jones. Capt. William Richard Jones, now manager of the Edgar Thomson Steel-works, was born in Luzerne county, Pa., Feb. 28, 1839. He is of Welsh descent, his father, Rev. John G. Jones, having, with his wife and two children, emigrated from Wales to America in 1832, and first settled in Pittsburgh, Pa. The family removed from Pittsburgh to Scranton, Pa., and later to Hazelton and Wilkesbarre, and finally to Catasaqua, Pa. Owing to his father's ill health, he was compelled to commence work when quite young, and hence was deprived of any but the most limited early educational advantages. When at the age of only ten, he was apprenticed to the Crane Iron company, of Catasaqua, Pa., in the foundry department, and later was placed in the machine-shop of that company, then under the supervision of Mr. Hopkins Thomas, whom Capt. Jones considers one of the brightest mechanics of his day. Hopkins Thomas was noted for his development of youthful minds, and it was his boast that he never produced a bad mechanic, and in the later years of his life, pointed with pride to the men who occupied leading positions in the mechanical and metallurgical world, who were formerly apprentices under his direction. In the list we find Philip Hop- facher, master mechanic Lehigh Valley railroad, at Waverly, Pa.; William Thomas, superintendent Crane Iron-works, Catasaqua, Pa.; James Thomas and George Davis, founders and machinists, Catasaqua; Owen Leibert, assistant superintendent Bethlehem Iron-works; Samuel Davis, superintendent Port Oram mines, Dover, N. J.; Daniel N. Jones, general superintendent Colorado Coal & Iron company, Pueblo, Colo.

By the time he arrived at the age of fourteen he had made such progress that he was receiving the full wages of a regular journeyman machinist. About this time he entered the employment of William Millens, and went to work in his machine-shop at Janesville, Luzerne county, Pa. In 1856 he moved to Philadelphia, and worked at his trade as a machinist in the shops of I. P. Morris & Co. The panic of 1857 deprived him of work, and compelled him to endure many privations. In the search for employment he reached Tyrone, Pa., where he engaged himself to a lumberman by the name of Evans, and went with him to Clearfield county, Pa. He remained with Mr. Evans, as a farm hand, lumberman and craftsman, until the spring of 1858, when he entered the employ of a farmer named Ricketts. He then was employed as an Engineer by the firm of Gibson Bros., near Glen Hope, Clearfield county, Pa., and later in the same capacity for William Lewis, at Beccaria Mills. In the spring of 1859 he removed to Johnstown, Pa., and worked as machinist for the Cambria Iron company, un-under John Fritz, then general superintendent of that company. After working there three months he was offered the position of master-mechanic by Giles Edwards, who was engaged to build a blast-furnace at Chattanooga, Tenn. He accepted the offer and removed to Chattanooga, where he remained until the breaking out of the war, when he was compelled to fly north with his young bride having been married April 14, 1861, to Miss Harriet Lloyd, leaving Chattanooga the night that Lieut. Jones burned and destroyed the government works at Harper's Ferry.

Returning to Johnstown, Pa., in 1861, he was again employed by the Cambria Iron company as a machinist. In the following year, July 31, he enlisted as a private in Co. A, 133d P. V., and was promoted to corporal. The regiment was hurried forward to the seat of war, and was placed in the defense of Washington during the second Bull run campaign, when it was incorporated into the 5th army corps, and served with the Army of the Potomac until it was mustered out of service, a few weeks before the Gettysburg campaign. At the battle of Fredericksburg the 133d and 155th P. V. formed the first assaulting column of Gen. A. A. Humphreys' 3d division, 5th army corps, and the famous assault on St. Mary's Heights was made about 4.30 P. M. The regiments were formed in front of the canal, the 133d having the right, and after slinging knapsacks, the column moved forward with great determination and loud cheers, as they approached the stone wall under a perfect storm of shell and bullets; the officer of the 2d army corps ordered them to stop and lie down. What had been a compact column had by the enemy's terrific fire been badly broken, and although a desultory fire was maintained for some time, the charge had been bloodily repulsed. Company F, of the 133d regiment, was almost annihilated. This company for a time refused to listen to the order to cease firing and lie down, but continued to fight with great gallantry, and kept pouring a galling fire at the stone wall, and there is no doubt that the heavy and steady fire of this brave body of men resulted in the death of the rebel, Gen. Cobb, who was in command of the rebel forces defending the stone wall. Company F started with the assaulting column with fifty-two men, rank and file, and lost fifty-five per cent of its numbers, having thirteen men killed outright and sixteen wounded.

At the battle of Chancellorsville these same regiments performed gallant service under the command of that efficient and brave officer, Col. Peter Allabach, who was ordered to send two regiments to cover the withdrawal of the army to the new line being formed near Bullock's clearing, which duty they performed in the face of a superior and exultant enemy. In both of these engagements Corporal Jones distinguished himself by personal bravery. Prior to the battle he was badly injured at the crossing of the Rapidan, but refused to leave the regiment, and maintained his place in line, although suffering severely. Upon the expiration of his term of service he returned to Johnstown, and, as skilled workmen were becoming very scarce, was induced by George Fritz, the general superintendent of the works, to again enter the employ of the Cambria Iron company. Becoming dissatisfied with remaining at home, and impelled by his patriotic impulses, he organized Co. F, 194th P. V., and was mustered in as captain of this company July 20, 1864. In accordance with circular order No. 58, adjutant-general's office, he was mustered out as captain of that organization and remustered as captain of an independent company, which was formed of members of the 133d and 194th P. V. Capt. Jones' company was assigned to provost duty in Baltimore, Md., under Col. J. W. Thompson as well as the city being in the middle department, commanded by Maj Gen Lew. Wallace, whose headquarters were in Baltimore.

While acting as commander of the provost guard of Baltimore, Capt. Jones was called upon to perform many duties requiring both tact and personal courage, as well as to exert the qualities of a strict disciplinarian. So well did he and his command acquit themselves that they not only possessed the confidence of their superior officers but were publicly complimented by Gen. Wallace. Capt. Jones was honorably mustered out June 17, 1863, following the close of the war, when he returned to Johnstown, Pa., and again entered the employ of the Cambria Iron company as assistant to George Fritz, the company's general superintendent and chief engineer, and as such assisted in the construction of the Cambria Iron company's Bessemer steel-converting and blooming-mill plants. Upon the death of George Fritz, in August, 1873, he resigned his position at the Cambria Iron-works, and was soon afterward engaged as master-mechanic by the Edgar Thomson Steel company, of Pittsburgh, to help erect their steelworks and railmill, then building at Bessemer, Allegheny county, and which were designed from plans by that eminent American engineer, A. L. Holly.

Upon the completion of the works, Capt. Jones was made the general superintendent, and afterward given the full charge of the engineering department, as well as the general management of the establishment. Although this plant, when erected, was perhaps the most perfect one in the United States, the rapid advances in the art of steel-making soon made it desirable to completely remodel it, which was done under his direction, a new blooming-mill being built in 1881, and the converting-works rebuilt in 1888. The blooming-mill is one of the most perfect mills yet designed, and after eight years' constant service, it remains a perfect mill, and as Capt. Jones says, "I can't improve it," Herbert Spencer, who visited the works a few years ago, was astounded when he saw the mill working, and expressed himself as being greatly pleased. This mill was adopted and is now used by the Roane Iron company, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Lackawanna Iron and Steel company, Scranton, Pa.; Union Iron and Steel company, Chicago, Ill., and the Joliet Steel company, Joliet, Ill. The main features of the mill embody the inventions of the late George Fritz, perfected by Capt. Jones. The company also decided to build blast-furnaces, completing furnace “A,” fifteen feet five inches bosh by sixty-five feet high, in 1879, and furnaces “B” and “C,” each twenty-one feet bosh by eighty feet high, in 1880. These were so successful under Capt. Jones’ management that he was authorized to build two more, whereupon he completed furnaces “D” and “E,” each twenty-two feet bosh by eighty feet high, in 1881, and then added furnaces “F” and “G,” each of the same dimensions as “D” and “E,” in 1886 and 1887, respectively. Furnaces “F” and “G” constitute, without exception, the finest furnace-plant in the world, and have exacted general commendation from metalurgists and engineers from all parts of the world. They have exceeded in output all previous records of any furnaces in the world. In 1885 he attached automatic tables to the railmill, thereby doing away with a large number of skilled workmen and effecting a large saving in the operating expenses. These tables were covered by his own and Robt. W. Hunt’s patents. The works were so successful that in 1887 Capt. Jones received permission to build an entirely new railmill, in the construction of which he departed from all precedent, following ideas of his own, and the result more than fulfilled his most sanguine anticipation, and it is generally conceded, by those competent to judge, to be the most complete railmill in the world.

The buildings of the Edgar Thomson Steel works, under Capt. Jones’ management, now cover nearly eleven acres, while the whole area of ground attached to the plant is 133 acres. The capacity of the furnaces now running is fifteen hundred tons of pig-metal, and of the steel department twelve hundred tons of ingots and one thousand tons of rails per twenty-four hours. At present natural gas is used throughout all the heating-furnaces. There are twenty-eight miles of railroad track on the grounds, mostly of standard gauge, and twenty-three locomotives are required to do the yard transportation. The works employ 2,500 hands.

Capt. Jones has been an industrious inventor and has covered many of his improvements by patents. The first of them was “A device for operating Lines in Bessemer Process,” and the second “Improvements in Hose Couplings,” patented Dec. 13, 1876. These were followed by “Fastenings for Bessemer Converters,” patented Dec. 26, 1876; improvements in “Washers for Ingot Molds,” June 12, 1876; “Hot Bed for Bend-pioneer of Westmoreland county, Pa. The subject of this sketch received a commonschool education, and at the age of fifteen he assisted his father, the late Joseph Wampler, Esq., at repairing watches and jewelry, and in the preparation of deeds, bonds, mortggages, and other legal documents. At the early age of seventeen years, Aug. 19, 1861, he enlisted in Co. I, 63d P. V.; was present for duty at all the engagements participated in by his regiment, from the siege of Yorktown to the bombardment of Petersburg. In September, 1864, he was honorably discharged. Having the confidence of his superior officers, he was called upon to prepare the muster-out rolls of his company, and was made the bearer of them to headquarters for official approval. Returning to his home, Mr. Wampler engaged in taking care of coal raft, and, in company with others, he floated and towed coal upon the Youghiogheny, Monongahela, Ohio and Mississippi rivers.
In 1867 he was employed about the lumberyard of James Neel.
June 27, same year, he was married to Jane, daughter of David and Mary Davis, and soon after he began to establish the comfortable and beautiful home, corner of Eighth and Walnut streets, still enjoyed by himself and family. He has two sons, Frank Cook and Ralph Davis, the elder of whom is assisting his father in conducting a now large lumber and real-estate business. In 1888 Mr.
Wampler was advanced to the position of salesman and bookkeeper, and in 1872 he was taken into partnership, and the present firm of Neel & Wampler, proprietors of the "Original McKeesport planing-mill and lumberyard" was established.
He was elected chief burgess of the borough of McKeesport the same year, and was re-elected in 1875. In April, 1876, he retired with a vote of thanks from the council, over which he presided. He was director and treasurer in the reunion of the 3d brigade, McCall's division, held July 28, 1875, dubbed the "soldiers' dinner on the diamond," at which fifteen hundred plates were laid for veterans and their families on tables erected on the public square. Mr. Wampler was chairman and treasurer of the successful centennial celebration July 4, 1876, McKee-sport's greatest gala day, on which occasion five thousand strangers visited and participated. In 1877-78 he was a director in the People's Saving Bank, but, retiring, he soon became identified with one of McKeesport's valued and prosperous institutions, the First National Bank of McKeesport, in which he is to-day a stockholder and director. In 1880 he was elected a member of the borough board of education. In 1881, when the borough was a defendant in a legal difficulty, James H. McCreery Esq. was elected to the board, No. 455, October term, Mr. Wampler was called upon to aid in adjusting the matter, and on Jan. 9, 1880, with his associates, he was enabled to report all matters at variance between the parties settled and forever dismissed. In 1881 he was elected a member of council from the Second ward, and served upon all important committees; was a supporter and advocate of the erection of waterworks by the borough, and before the expiration of his term he witnessed carved upon a slab at the pumping station his name as one of the committee having in charge the erection of the McKeesport water-works.
In 1886, at a meeting of citizens, Mr.
Wampler was chosen one of a committee to compile the industrial pamphlet, "McKee-port, its industries, advantages, resources and prospects," a valuable public document.
During the great strike of employés of the National Tube-works in March, 1886, he was one of five prominent citizens who by request attended a meeting of workingmen, then at the Opera-house, and met the management of the National Tube-works at their offices, "that both sides of this labor question may be thoroughly understood." His conduct and speech upon these occasions marked him the man he has always been—fearless in the expression of his convictions, a friend of honest, reasonable workingmen, and careful of the interests of those having capital invested. Occupying, as he has at different times in his life, the position of employer and employé, Mr. Wampler was deemed a competent and just judge, and as such acquitted himself.
Mr. Wampler is a Freemason, and holds a certificate of life membership in the fraternity.
He is connected with Encampment No. 1, Union Veteran Legion, with headquarters at Pittsburgh. Although not connected by membership with any religious organization, he has been a contributor to the support of the church, through all the local denominations, from time to time. Politically he is a democrat, with an aversion to campaign fuss;
which seldom falls at the polls on election day;
but never fails at the polls on election day;
there was one Mr. Wampler for four years, who waited at President Arthur, at Washington, D. C., in connection with the contest for position of postmaster here some years ago. He is a member of the McKeesport Board of Trade, and is treasurer for the same body. In 1888, when the democracy of the Twenty-fourth district desired a standard-bearer, a convention of county chairmen at Washington, Pa., Oct. 8, nominated W. P. Wampler for Congress, and the next day the candidate, with characteristic energy, began his canvass, and in the short time, less than one month preceding the election, he employed speakers and with them visited and addressed meetgings at Washington, Midway, Lucyville, Coal Centre, Allenport, Shireoaks and Monongaella City, in Washington county; at Uniontown, Brownsville, Fairchance, Connellsville, Fayette City, and Dunbar, in Fayette county;
and at Duquesne, Homestead, Mansfield, Mount Oliver, Industry and McKeesport, in Allegheny county. Mr. Wampler aided in the equipment of nearly all the marching clubs in the district, half a dozen of which bore his name, and the expense of the entire contest was defrayed by himself. Though he made a gallant effort in the conducting of a public feature in the town, he was running ahead of the ticket, the district, which had been Republican, continued so, and Mr. Wampler was not elected. He bore his rejection with calmness and fortitude, neither his friends nor his enemies discovering in his demeanor any indications of regret, thus proving himself to be as able to sustain defeat as he had been capable of accepting success and prosperity. The day after his rejection Mr. Wampler was at his desk, where he has since remained, conducting the business of his choice, lumber and real estate, which, under his able management, daily increases in financial and industrial importance.

Martin F. Ryan, hardware merchant, McKeesport, was born in that city, Aug. 21, 1854, a son of James F. and Mary (McCloskey) Ryan. His paternal grandfather, William Ryan, a native of County Clare, Ireland, emigrated to Canada in 1826, and in 1836 located in Pottsville, Pa., where he ran canal-boats to Philadelphia. His children were James E., William, a Catholic priest; Stephen V., bishop of the diocese of Buffalo, N. Y., and Kate, wife of Capt. Henry McCloskey. Of these James F. learned the tin trade and located in McKeesport in that business in 1848, to which he added hardware in 1853, and successfully continued up to 1875, when his eldest son, Martin F., became associated with him. In 1853 he (James F.) married Mary, daughter of Michael and Rose McCloskey, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and to them were born seven children: Martin F., Rose, Alice, Stephen, Willie, Katie and Maggie, the two last being dead. Among the first companies recruited in 1861 was Co. I, 63d P. V., by James F. Ryan, who became its captain, and in 1863 he was promoted to major of the regiment and held his commission until the expiration of the war. He was a prominent member of St. Peter's Catholic Church, and for fifteen years was marshal of St. Joseph's Benevolent association. He was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of McKeesport, of which he was a stockholder and director for many years, and vice-president at the time of his death, April 19, 1887. He was for several years an active member of the council and of the school board, and served three terms as burgess, positively refusing a re-election for a fourth term. His funeral was the largest ever known in the city. His business is still continued under the firm name of James S. Ryan & Son, our subject being the manager.

Martin F. Ryan was educated at the public schools of this city, St. Joseph's College, Buffalo, N. Y., and Duff's Business College, Pittsburgh, Pa., graduating in 1873. He is a public-spirited citizen and prominent in many of McKeesport's social organizations. He has been secretary of the Library association since 1877; is secretary and treasurer of St. Joseph's Cemetery association; vice-president of the McKeesport & Youghiquienn Bridge company; charter member and director of Mc- Keesport & Duquesne Bridge company; treasurer of McKeesport Electric Light company, and McKeesport Driving Park association; director Enterprise Building and Loan association; president of Sir Godfrey Branch Catholic Knights of America, and chairman of the transportation committee, Board of Trade. He married, Jan. 24, 1881, Emma H., daughter of Michael and Ann Skelley, of Latrobe, Pa., by whom he had five children: Marie, Hugh, Emma, James F. and Stella, the last two being dead. Mr. Ryan is a member of the Catholic Church, of which he is one of the advisory committee, and he is a democrat.

William Hartman, retired, McKeesport, was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, June 8, 1822, a son of Philip and Elizabeth (Boelinder) Hartman. He was raised and educated in his native town, and at the age of fourteen was apprenticed for four years to the shoemaker's trade, after which he worked as a journeyman until twenty-four years of age. In 1846 he was married to Catherine Steinman and sailed for America, locating for a short time in New York city. He continued his journey until he arrived among his friends in Lincoln (then Elizabeth) township, where he opened and carried on a small shoeshop until 1858, when he removed to McKeesport, and here invested in some property. Finally he embarked in the retail boot and shoe business, which he carried on very successfully until 1885, when he retired. In the year 1886 he had erected the large brick building known as the Franklin Hall building, which was destroyed by fire Feb. 3, 1877. In the year following he erected the present large business block known as Hartman's block, one of the finest and best in the city. He has been for many years one of the leading and most substantial citizens of McKeesport. He is a member of the G. L. Church, the I. O. O. F. Encampment, A. O. U. W. and R. A. Mr. Hartman has ten children living, three sons and seven daughters; his sons are Henry, John N. and William E. Hartman, all well-known and prosperous business-men. Politically Mr. Hartman is a democrat.

John W. Stewart, insurance-agent, McKeesport, was born in Versailles township, Allegheny county, Sept. 8, 1834, a son of Hamilton and Nancy S. (Dinsmore) Stewart. His paternal grandfather, Samuel Stewart, a native of County Derry, Ireland, and a farmer by occupation, settled in McKeesport about 1785, and there resided until his death. He had seven children, who grew to maturity: Nancy (Mrs. Robert Whigham), John, Hamilton, Margery (Mrs. James Carroll), Elizabeth, Samuel and Robert. The maternal grandfather of our subject was Henry Dinsmore, whose father as well as himself was a native of County Derry, Ireland, and among the pioneers of what is now Patton township.
Hamilton Stewart was born in what is now McKeesport in 1799. He was a carpenter by trade, though the latter part of his life was spent in farming; was an elder in the Presbyterian Church upward of forty years. He had nine children, who grew to maturity: Sarah J. (Mrs. Col. William Douglass), Samuel H., Henry, John W., Margaret, Martha T. (Mrs. R. A. Scott), Eliza (Mrs. Joseph Fiddler), Mary A. (Mrs. A. Y. Shaw) and Nancy J.

John W. Stewart was reared on a farm, where he remained until thirty years of age. He was a carpenter by trade, which he followed many years, and since 1889 he has been engaged in his present business. In 1863 he married Lizzie, a daughter of John and Fannie (Stewart) Gamble, of Armstrong county, and has three children living: M. Wilson, J. Boyd D. and Scott M. Mr. Stewart is a member of the First Presbyterian Church, of the board of trustees of which he has been secretary fifteen years; is also a member of the board of education. Politically, he is a democrat.

John Kennedy, Jr., banker, Tarentum, a son of John and Sarah Me. (Woods) Kennedy, was born in the village of Tarentum, Sept. 16, 1830. His grandfather, William Kennedy, was formerly a resident of Butler county, and in 1807 removed to what is now East Deer township, Allegheny county, where he and his brother contracted to clear eighty acres of land about a mile above the village of Tarentum, to which place they came, remaining until the spring of 1817, when they removed to Westmoreland county. Here they and their families continued to live until 1852, when William died, and in 1861 his widow, Mrs. Elizabeth Kennedy, also died. Their children were Catherine, John, William, Elizabeth, Mary Ann, James and Margaret.

John Kennedy, Sr., remained with his parents until, in 1826, he secured a contract to build a section of the Pennsylvania canal, which he completed in 1827, and during that year he married and settled at Tarentum. He was principally engaged in the lumber trade. In 1875 he retired from active business life, and is still a resident of that place; his wife died Dec. 3, 1884. Their children were James, John, William and Jane K.

John Kennedy, Jr., the subject of our sketch, married, in 1855, Amarilla Jane, daughter of James Pneumon, of Freeport, Pa., and settled in Tarentum, in the growth and prosperity of which place Mr. Kennedy has been prominently identified. In 1852 he was elected county surveyor of Allegheny county, which office he filled for three years. He was engaged in the oil business in Smith's Ferry, Beaver county, Pa., in 1861. In 1862 he enlisted in Co. F, 133d P. V.; was wounded in the battle of Fredericksburg. From 1863 until 1866 he was engaged in the oil business at Rouseville, Venango county, Pa. With the exception of these brief periods he has constantly remained in Tarentum. Being a surveyor, he laid out into lots nearly the whole of the territory upon which Tarentum is now built, including both East and West Tarentum. He was largely instrumental in securing the location of the glass-works at this place; in fact, he has been an important factor in gaining for Tarentum the high position which she holds among her sister boroughs of the state. In 1873, associated with his father and his brother James, they built the planing-mill now operated by them, and in 1887 he erected the Tarentum Bank building; indeed, all enterprises having for their object the improvement of Tarentum find in him a substantial helper. Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy's children are Richard A., an attorney at Pittsburgh, Pa.; Sarah A., now Mrs. Dr. G. M. Getze, of Tarentum; James W., mining at Gilman, Colo.; Henry Herbert, Charles G., cashiers in Tarentum Bank; Phoebe, a graduate of Beaver Female College; Frank and Walter. The parents are members of the M. E. Church.

T. W. Sharp, burgess of Braddock, and merchant, is a native of Allegheny City, born in 1837, a son of Thomas and Barbara (Bone) Sharp, who were the parents of four sons and five daughters, T. W. being the eldest. Thomas Sharp came from England to America when nine years of age, and in after life followed mining; he died at the age of seventy-three years. The subject of this memoir was educated at the public schools, and when ten years of age commenced assisting his father in the mines, in which work he continued until thirty-one years of age. He then, in 1869, opened a grocery business in Braddock, which he still carries on. Mr. Sharp married, in 1869, Maria, daughter of David and Rebecca Mansfield, of this county, and six children were born to them, four now living. Our subject has been school director several years, and was elected burgess in 1879 and again in 1885. He is a member of the F. & A. M. and O. U. A. M., Washington Camp, No. 203; has been for many years an elder in the Methodist Church, of which he has been treasurer fourteen years. Politically he is a republican.

Rev. D. H. Pollock, Elizabeth, is a grandson of David Pollock, a native of Ireland, who first settled in Greensburg, Pa., and in or about 1792 purchased a farm near Elizabeth, where he lived until his death, by accident, in about 1800. He left three daughters and three sons. John Pollock, father of the subject of this memoir, was the eldest son, and inherited the farm on which he lived until his death, in 1872, at the age of eighty years. He never engaged in any other business except farming. For many years he was captain of a military company, which gave him quite a prominence in the surrounding country. He was a devout member of the U. P. Church, in which he was elder for a number of years. In 1837 he married Eliza, daughter of John Gormley, of this county, who lived to be eighty-two years of age. They reared a family of eleven children, one daughter dying at the age of thirteen years; the other ten are still living, viz: Martha J. (Mrs. O. A. Lee, of Atchison, Kansas), Elizabeth A. (Mrs. P. P. Marvin, of Andover, Ohio), Rev. D. H., J. A. (of Oregon), Esther C. (Mrs. John Patterson, of Elizabeth, this county), Nancy J. (Mrs. Rev. P. H. Drennan, of Pawnee City, Neb.), Samuel G. (on the homestead), H. G. (of Elizabeth), W. C. (farmer, of McKeesport), and Rev. M. M. (of Fairfax, Iowa).

The subject of this sketch was born on the homestead, Sept. 6, 1828, and is the third child. He was educated at the Western University, of Pittsburgh, and graduated from the Theological Seminary, of Allegheny, in 1846. He received license to preach in 1846, has since followed the profession, and has had charge of churches in Fayette and Westmoreland counties, and for the last twenty years of the U. P. Church, of Elizabeth. He married, in 1850, Elizabeth, daughter of John and Margaret (Espey) McMillan, of Fayette county, who died in 1853, leaving one child, Elizabeth C., now Mrs. Alexander Sharrard, of Fayette county. He next married, in 1861, Kate, daughter of Rev. David Kirkpatrick, D. D., and a sister of Judge Kirkpatrick. She died in 1867, leaving three children: D. Kirn Pollock, now owner of a ranch in Kansas; John F., a clerk in Omaha, Neb., and Mary C., at present attending the Conservatory of Music, at Boston.

John Taggart, retired, Allegheny, son of Andrew and Sarah (Wilson) Taggart, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, in March, 1799, and came with his parents to this country and county in 1819. His father, who was a farmer, purchased one hundred acres of land in West Deer township, on which he settled and resided until a short time prior to his decease, which occurred at the home of his son, John, Jan. 9, 1849, when he was eighty years and seven years old. His widow died March 8, 1855, at the age of eighty-seven years; they were members of the Seceders’ Church. They had a family of eight children: Elizabeth (wife of Francis Hare, both deceased), John, Matthew (deceased), Agnes (a widow), Mary (wife of William Hare), Margaret (wife of Alexander Hare), Sarah (wife of Alexander Glasow, of Iowa) and Andrew (deceased). John Taggart, the subject of this sketch, was twice married, first in 1824 to Anna Hare, whom, after an absence of about five years, he returned to Ireland to wed. She died at the birth of their first child, about eighteen months after their marriage, the child surviving its mother only one day. Mr. Taggart’s second marriage was March 14, 1828, with Jane, daughter of Robert and Elizabeth Porter, of this county, and the fruit of this union were: Elizabeth A. (widow of John Brown, Jr.), Andrew C., Robert, Sarah A. (wife of John Hopkins), Jane M. (widow of Alexander Brown), John and Joseph. Mr. Taggart’s first effort in life was to clear his father’s farm of a mortgage of $123, which he succeeded in doing by hard work at very small pay. Soon after his first marriage he formed a partnership with his brother-in-law and embarked in a butchering business in Pittsburgh. Finding it difficult to dispose of his hides, he took another partner, a Mr. McClure, and commenced a tannery, which he carried on many years in connection with numerous other interests. His first purchase of real estate was about 1825, when he bought a lot in Pittsburgh for $200, on which he built a house. This he sold in 1829 for $1,300, and he then purchased two and one-half acres of land, and here erected the house in which he now resides, on Irwin avenue, Allegheny. From that time forward he became an extensive and successful dealer in real estate. Mr. Taggart’s life has been a long and earnest one of successful labor, and still, at the age of fourscore and ten years, he is hale and hearty. His wife was spared to share his labor and success for about threescore years, having departed this life Jan. 12, 1888, in her ninetieth year. They were both members of the U. P. Church for many years, and cherished an abiding trust in him who is “the resurrection and the life.”

George W. Roberts, Sr., coal-operator, postoffice Elizabeth, was born in Wales, Feb. 4, 1811; he emigrated to America in 1830, taking passage on the ship Cambridge, and was eight weeks in crossing the ocean. He located in Pottsville, Schuylkill county. He was a carpenter by trade, which he followed for a number of years. In 1832 he moved to Philadelphia, and helped to build the hospital and asylum at West Philadelphia. In 1835 he moved to Pittsburgh, and built many of the inclined planes used in the surrounding mines. He also acted as general superintendent of the mines owned by Kirk Lewis. In 1859 he formed a copartnership with Simpson Horner, of Pittsburgh, and engaged in mining coal, locating their mines at Elizabeth and adjoining country. This partnership still exists, and the firm of Horner & Roberts is one of the largest and most prosperous, as well as one of the pioneer, coal firms of the county. They ship the most of their coal to New Orleans by the river on barges, which they built for that purpose. They own and operate large sawmills in connection with their coal interests, and also have a large general store at Elizabeth, which was established in 1877 and is under the supervision of Samuel S. Roberts, the junior member of the firm.

George W. Roberts, Sr., was married in 1832 to Ruth, daughter of Samuel Toms, a native of England, who settled in Pottsville, Pa., in 1890. He was a Baptist minister, and afterward supplied churches in Pittsburgh and surrounding towns. They have had eight children: Edwin, the eldest son, killed at Saw-Mill run at the age of ten years; Mary, Mrs. Noah Pangburn, who died in 1873; two others who died in infancy; the living are: S. Ann, Mrs. J. Redman; Samuel S.; Sarah J., Mrs. Edwin Lewis; and George W., Jr., who all live in Elizabeth. Mrs. Ruth (Toms) Roberts died in 1879. Mr. Roberts has held several borough offices. He and family are members of the Baptist Church, in which he held the office of deacon for for about thirty years. In 1874 he, in company with his daughter, Mrs. Redman, paid a visit to his native country, remaining several months, and visiting the principal cities in England, Scotland and Wales.

Samuel S. Roberts, the eldest son of G. W. Roberts, Sr., was born at Saw-Mill run in 1838, and was raised in that vicinity. He was educated at the public schools and graduated at the Commercial College of Pittsburgh. In 1871 he purchased an interest in the firm of Horner & Roberts, at Elizabeth, where he has since remained. In 1860 he married Belinda, daughter of Samuel Donley, of Pittsburgh, and they have four children: Anna Ida, Samuel and Linnie (twins). George W. Roberts, the youngest son of G. W. Roberts, Sr., was born at Saw-Mill run, in 1846, where he was reared. He received his education at the Baptist University of Lewisburg, and is a graduate of Iron City Commercial College. Since 1863 he has been engaged as general superintendent of the loading and shipping of the coal for Horner & Roberts. In 1888 he married Anna M., daughter of Dr. Jesse Penney, of Elizabeth, and he has two sons, George P. and Jesse G. He is a member in good standing of the F. & A. M., K. of P., O. U. A. M., and several other societies; also holds the office of the city of Elizabeth.

Col. Joseph Brown (deceased), a native of Ireland, was brought to Pittsburgh when a child, and there received the benefits of the public schools. At the age of fourteen he was clerk in a hardware-store, attending night schools, and later Duff's Business College. At the age of twenty years (1850) he went to Australia, where he won the esteem and confidence of distinguished people, serving on the queen's bench, and in the employ of the government, carrying gold from Bendigo to Melbourne. In 1852 he returned to Pittsburgh, via South America, in which country he traveled extensively. In Pittsburgh he engaged in the transportation business, and later on in the oil trade in Lawrence county. At the breaking out of the war he recruited Co. C, of the old 13th regiment, as first lieutenant Co. E, now 103d; was promoted to adjutant, then to major; was wounded at Fair Oaks; resigned, but rejoined In. Artillery as captain of Battery B, which was for three months' service, and after, as lieutenant-colonel of the 5th, serving till the close of the war, when he was brevetted brigadier-general. On his return to Allegheny county the people honored him by electing him clerk of the court, which office he filled with ability three years. He was also commander of a brigade of National Guards for three years. Col. Brown was at one time a popular druggist, and later was in the hardware business. He died July 25, 1886, aged fifty-seven years, at the home of his devoted sister, Mrs. W. C. Gray. Col. Brown's military career was a brilliant one, and Gen. J. L. Peck makes special and honorable mention of him in his official report. Col. Brown was a man of sterling soldierly qualities. He would never push himself forward, hence did not receive the reward and promotions due him. He was a lover of humanity and justice.

Peter Prager, Sharpsburg, Allegheny county, Pa., is a native of Hersbruck, Bavaria, Germany, born in 1822. His father, John George Prager, was a soldier under Bonaparte, participated in the expedition to Russia, the hardships and intense suffering of which are too well known in history to call for mention here. He was a farmer and married Elizabeth Wild, who bore him eight children. In 1848 he immigrated to America, landing in Philadelphia, coming thence to Pittsburgh, and purchased a farm in O'Hara township, where he resided until his death, which occurred when he was eighty-three years old. Only three of his sons now survive.

Peter Prager, the subject of this sketch, followed farming for many years, and was also engaged at other occupations. He married, in 1852, Elizabeth, daughter of Jacob Judy, who was an early settler in this county and for many years a gardener on what is now the site of Allegheny City. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Prager: G. H., Lizzie B., William J., Carrie L., George J., Louisa, Herman Ed., Charles and Emma M. Mr. Prager and family are members of the German Lutheran Church; politically he is a republican.

H. J. Heinz. Among the prominent business-men of Pittsburgh is Mr. Henry J. Heinz, who was born in that city Oct. 11, 1844, the eldest of nine children. At the early age of eight years he was engaged in selling the surplus products of his parents' garden in the village of Sharpsburg; when only sixteen he was practically managing the brick business in which his father was engaged, keeping the accounts, making contracts and looking after the trade generally; and when nineteen his father sent him away from home to represent him in the ice business, continuing, however, the manufacture of pickles and the preserving of fruits and vegetables. He started the business in a small way about 1867, and soon recognized the fact that it was possible to improve the pickles and the other condiments that they might attain to a higher standard, and be equal if not superior to any furnished anywhere. To excel in whatever he undertook was his motto, and having patience, energy, perseverance and faithfulness, he never wearied of his work, and has been recognized for some time as the founder of this great industry in Pittsburgh.

His energy and usefulness as a business-man have been recognized in many departments of interest in that city. He is one of the founders of the Exposition Society of Western Pennsylvania, and is connected with many commercial, educational and charitable institutions. In his moral and religious life he has been recognized as a useful and upright man. There is no position in the church, in which he has been long a member, which he has not filled with fidelity and success. His principal qualities as a business-man are a quick perception, promptness of action and an inexhaustible store of energy, never yielding to difficulties, which, under ordinary circumstances, would overmaster other men. Having faith in the triumph of right principles, he has steadily pursued an even way through panic and disasters, winning his way into the confidence and support of the men with whom he has been associated.

Mr. Heinz is very fortunate in his social and home life. He was married Sept. 28, 1869, to Miss Selbie Sloan Young, a very estimable lady. Mr. Heinz considers all time and money spent in the care and improvement of his home, in the comfort and interest of his family, as money well spent, and while his discipline is decided, it is always tempered with a sincere love and good will; hence his home is always a place of pleasure, not only for his family but for his friends. Mr. Heinz has added to his native ability as a business-man by his extensive travels and observations, both in this country and in Europe, having an eye to business as well as to pleasure. It is but a part of his biography to give a brief outline of the channels in which his energy has been at work, and the lines in which his industry have been extended.

The firm of which he is the recognized founder and head use the annual product of over two thousand acres of land in the manufacture of their products, five hundred acres of which they cultivate themselves, while they grow and furnish seed to farmers who grow the stock for pickles for them near their salting-houses. They employ regularly from six hundred to one thousand hands, while during the picking and preserving season a large additional force is required, and own and work ninety-three draft horses. They have agencies or branch houses in all the principal cities in this country. The skill, taste and energy of Mr. Heinz have been often rewarded by the reception of numerous medals in the various exhibitions where their goods have been displayed. Among these was the reception of four gold medals at the world’s exposition at New Orleans in 1884–85, where their industries came in competition with similar ones from England and all parts of the world.

WILLIAM ADDISON TOMLINSON, retired, postoffice Hillsboro, was born in December, 1838, in Pittsburgh, Pa., a son of Joseph and Jane (Wherry) Tomlinson, natives of Philadelphia. Joseph came to Pittsburgh in 1816, with his father, Enoch, who built the stone-work of the first bridge across the Monongahela river at Pittsburgh. Enoch Tomlinson’s wife was Rachel G. Joseph Tomlinson was the father of four boys and four girls, and died in February, 1887; his widow still lives in Pittsburgh. The children were Ann R., Mary Jane, William A., Sarah, Albert (deceased), Rachel G., Alexander S. and Harry H.

William A. received his education in the Pittsburgh schools and Pittsburgh University, from which he graduated in 1850. In 1854 he joined his father in the machine and foundry business, under firm name of J. Tomlinson & Son, continuing until 1871. For the next five years he was president of the Pittsburgh common council. For four years he was treasurer of the Allegheny Valley railroad; then moved to Verona, became first burgess and has served as such seven years, though not continuously. In April, 1861, he enlisted in Co. G, 13th P. V. I., in which he served four months. He is a member of Tancred Commandery, No. 48, K. T., and the G. A. R. In 1856 he was united in marriage with Lizzie H. Bell, of Bridgeport, Pa., daughter of Thomas and Charlotte H. (Harvey) Bell, the former a well-known commission-merchant of Pittsburgh. Two children were born to this union: Lotta, who died in 1871, and William Arthur, at home. The family are members of Verona Episcopal Church.

WILLIAM HARBAUGH, retired, Sewickley, was born March 23, 1818, in New Lisbon, Ohio, son of William and Sarah (Springer) Harbaugh, old settlers of Uniontown, Fayette county, Pa. He was reared in New Lisbon, Ohio, and followed farming up to his twenty-seventh year, when he came to Pittsburgh and here entered upon the produce and commission business; subsequently he embarked in the pork and wool business. He now lives retired; is a republican, and has served frequently as councilman and afterward as burgess. Mr. and Mrs. Harbaugh are the parents of six children: Charles Thorn, Mrs. Caroline Moore (deceased), Mrs. Sophronia Nevin, Sarah Springer, Roxa B. and Mrs. Annie Strobel. The Harbaugh family are all members of the Presbyterian Church.

Mrs. Harbaugh (Sophia Thorn) is the granddaughter of Thomas Hoey, who moved in 1810 to a farm of 330 acres on the Ohio river where Sewickley now stands. The Indians at that time often robbed his cornfield. Thomas Hoey was a native of Ireland, of Scotch descent, born in County Down, where he was reared and became a merchant. He married there, and was the father of two daughters and one son, when he came to America in 1800 and settled on a farm near Brownsville, Pa. Mr. Hoey died in 1836, aged seventy-four years. The Hoey family were Episcopalian. His daughter, Sophronia, married Charles Thorn, a M. E. minister and missionary worker, who, traveling for many years, settled in Sewickley with his wife and two daughters, Mrs. Harbaugh and Mrs. White.

Andrew Burns, retired, Sewickley, was born Oct. 18, 1818, on Montour's run, at Headwaters, Pa. Grandfather Alexander Burns, a native of Scotland, came to America at an early day and settled on Montour's run, where he subsequently owned a large tract of land. He was the father of ten children: John, George, William, Thomas, James, Robert, and Mrs. Harbaugh, Mrs. Crooks and Mrs. John Byers. The sons were all farmers except Samuel, who was a saddler; all reared large families and were members of the Presbyterian Church. John Burns was born Oct. 30, 1776, and died March 29, 1854, on the old homestead; he was a farmer and an elder in the Presbyterian Church. His wife, Jane Crooks, was born May 4, 1781, in Washington county, Pa., and died Sept. 29, 1865. They were the parents of ten children: Alexander, Henry, John, William, Andrew, George, Nancy, Jane, Polly and Margaret. Of these Nancy, Polly, Margaret and Andrew and George (the youngest in the family) are living, Mrs. Nancy Nichols being ninety years old.

Andrew was reared on the farm and followed farming some ten years. He then removed to New Cumberland, W. Va., where he operated a sawmill two years and subsequently traded for a large country store, which he removed into Washington county. In the spring of 1855 he came to Pittsburgh, where he engaged in real estate business. He became vice-president of the Smithfield National Bank. In the spring of 1855 he came to Whiteley, where he now resides. Mr. Burns was married Nov. 3, 1842, to Miss Sarah A., daughter of Josiah and Margaret (Stewart) Guy, of Findlay township, this county. Mrs. Burns is a lady of considerable ability.

Gen. George W. Cass, the third in the line of presidents of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, Ohio, was born in Muskingum county, Ohio, March 12, 1810, of New England parents. Owing to the schools in that then new region being of the most elementary character, he was sent to Detroit, in 1824, for the purpose of being educated at the Detroit Academy, a most excellent school, then under the charge of Rev. Ashbel Wells. During his residence in Detroit (1824–27), he was a member of the family of his uncle, Gen. Lewis Cass, at that time governor of the territory of Michigan. Having obtained an appointment from his native state, he entered as a cadet the United States Military Academy, at West Point, N. Y., where he graduated in 1822 with such honor that he was appointed to the department of topographical engineers. After serving in this department six months he was transferred to the department of military engineers. He resigned from the army in 1836, and was then appointed by President Jackson civil engineer on the National road, in which capacity he continued until the completion of the road in the states of Maryland, Pennsylvania and Virginia, and its reception by the governors of those states, respectively. During this service he erected the first cast-iron bridge ever built in the United States, over Dunlap's creek, a tributary of the Monongahela river. As engineer for the improvement of this river he made the survey and located and superintended the construction of Locks Nos. 3 and 4.

On the completion of the Monongahela improvement to Brownsville, Pa., he organized the first steamboat line, and also the first fast transportation line across the mountains, by relays of teams similar to stage lines, thus building up a great carrying-trade between the east and west via the Monongahela river and Pittsburgh. In 1849 he established the Adams Express across the mountains from Baltimore; effected the consolidation of all the Adams Express lines between Boston and St. Louis, and south to Richmond, in 1854, and the year following was elected president of the consolidated company. Having moved his home from Brownsville to Pittsburgh, Mr. Cass was elected, in January, 1856, president of the Ohio & Pennsylvania Railroad company, which was afterward consolidated with the Ohio & Indiana and Ft. Wayne & Chicago Railroad companies, which is now known as the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago Railway company. Mr. Cass became the first president of the consolidated company and held the position until 1851, when he resigned the office of president, though he continued to be a director and trustee of the company until the time of his death. He also became in 1867, largely interested in the Northern Pacific enterprise, and in 1872 succeeded to the presidency of that company, resigning in 1875 to accept the office of receiver of the same, to which he was appointed by the United States circuit court. In connection with Benjamin F. Cheney, of Boston, Mr. Cass opened the large pioneer wheat-farm near Casselton, in the Red River valley, Dakota, known from the name of its manager as the Dalrymple farm. Mr. Cass, after resigning the presidency of the Ft. Wayne company, retired from active pursuits. From 1852 to 1863, he lived in Allegheny, Pa., and from 1863 to 1873, in the borough of Osborn, where he built a fine residence. He lived the latter years of his life in New York city, where he died, March 21, 1888. He was always a stanch democrat. At the time of his death, and for some years prior, he was senior warden of Christ Church, New York city. Mr. Cass leaves a wife, one son, and six daughters, one of them, Sophia, being the widow of the late F. M. Hutchinson, of Sewickley, a sketch of whom appears below.

F. M. Hutchinson (deceased) was born in Philadelphia June 19, 1837. His parents, Francis Martin and Mary (Neely) Hutchinson, were of Scotch and Scotch-Irish descent, Episcopalians and Presbyterians. The subject of this memoir was educated in Philadelphia. His first employment was as an assistant to Gen. Dan Tyler in the enlargement of the Morris Canal; this position he left to take that of engineer, under Maj. Moor, on the N. Y. & E. R. R., on the completion of which he served a short time on the Central Railroad of New Jersey. In 1850, then in his twenty-third year, he became assistant engineer of the O. & P. R. R., under Solomon W. Robert, remaining with that company until 1857. At the instance of prominent democratic leaders he became assistant clerk of the state senate, a position he filled from 1858 to 1861, "winning golden opinions by his devotion to his arduous duties, and the ability and accuracy with which he performed them. He was always at his post, and no more competent officer ever filled it or enjoyed a larger share of confidence and popularity among the senators, without regard to parties." In 1859 he was appointed engineer of the Lawrenceville Passenger railway. After completing that with speed and satisfaction he was appointed engineer for the Manchester Passenger railway, between Pittsburgh and Allegheny.

In 1862 he entered the service of the P., Ft. W. & C. Railroad company. In 1865 the board appointed him secretary and treasurer of the company; was also secretary and treasurer of the M. & C. R. R. from its organization until his death (thirteen years), and of the Lawrence R. R. Co. Each one sent a handsome memorial, stamped with the company’s seal, to his family as a testimony of their appreciation of his services. His health began to fail during the winter of 1858. The board of directors, at their annual meeting, voted him a leave of absence for three months, hoping that a trip to Europe would restore it. He left New York on the City of Rome, July 2, but finding the weather cold and damp, and that he was growing worse instead of better, returned, reaching New York August 18, and with his family around him, passed to the rest of Paradise on the morning of the 29th. The funeral services were held in the Church of the Beloved Disciple, Philadelphia, the impressive service of the church being read by his own rector, Dr. N. W. Camp, and Dr. Newlin, and he was laid to rest beside his parents, in Laurel Hill.

Mr. Hutchinson had many fine qualities of head and heart; was open, frank and generous. Although engrossed with the affairs of the railroad companies, he still found time to live. He was a loving husband and father, a sympathetic and kind neighbor. A churchman from conviction, as well as inheritance, he ever considered it his privilege to contribute toward her support. He was senior warden of St. Stephen’s for some years before his death; politically he was a stanch democrat, taking an active part in the conventions. In 1873 he was a candidate for state treasurer, and though defeated by Robert W. Mackey (republican), the close vote showed his popularity.

Mr. Hutchinson was married at “Cassella” (near Sewickley), Feb. 9, 1856, to Sophia Lord, eldest child of Gen. George W. Cass, and four children blessed this union: Mary Louise, Francis Martin, George Cass and Ella Dawson. Mr. Hutchinson bought a comfortable home and settled in Sewickley the following June, where his widow and three remaining children continue to live.

Joseph Kerr Cass, paper manufacturer and dealer, was born Oct. 10, 1848, in Coshocton, Ohio. His great-grandfather, Maj. Jonathan Cass, located after the Revolution on what is now known as the Cass section, in Muskingum county, Ohio, where he left a large property. He came from Exeter, N. H., the family being originally from the south of England. Jonathan Cass had three sons: Lewis, Charles and George W. The first named was the democratic opponent of Gen. Taylor in the presidential contest of 1848. The youngest passed his days on his inheritance, and had four sons and two daughters. The eldest of these was Gen. George W. Cass, whose sketch appears above. The fourth, Abner L., graduated at Jefferson Medical University of Philadelphia, and practiced his profession for twenty-five years in Coshocton. He came to Pittsburgh in 1873 and soon after went to Chicago, where he died in 1886. His wife, Margaret, was a daughter of Rev. Joseph Kerr, one of the founders of the U. P. Seminary in Allegheny. They had five children, three of whom grew up. The name of the eldest heads this sketch; George W., the second, is an attorney in Chicago; Mary Agnes resides with her brother in Pittsburgh.

Joseph K. Cass graduated from Kenyon College at Gambier, Ohio, in 1868, and commenced engineering. He was employed in locating various western railroads till 1874, when he came to Pittsburgh and took employment in the offices of the Pan Handle railroad. Two years later he became interested in his present business in the firm of Morrison, Bare & Cass, now Morrison, Cass & Co. The paper-mills at Tyrone are the property of Morrison & Cass. Mr. Cass is a trustee in Point Breeze Presbyterian Church; in politics he is independent. In 1878 he married Sarah M., daughter of Dr. John and Annie (Stevenson) Anderson, of Scotch-Irish and English extraction. Mr. and Mrs. Cass have the following children: Charles Anderson, Margaret Kerr, Joseph K. and Annie.

Hon. John F. Cox, attorney, Homestead, was born Oct. 6, 1832, in Mifflin township, a son of William and Ann Cox. He spent his early life on a farm, and received a commonschool education. In 1870 he entered Westminster College, New Wilmington, Pa., where he was a student for four years; then entered Union College, Alliance, Ohio, where he graduated in the class of 1875, and for three years he taught school at Homestead and Camden, in his native township. He read law with Maj. W. C. Moreland and John H. Kerr, of Pittsburgh, and was admitted to the bar in 1880.

Mr. Cox has his office in Pittsburgh and resides in Homestead, where he has served as burgess for two terms, and has taken an active part in promoting the prosperity of the town. He is an ardent republican, and in 1884 was elected to the legislature, and re-elected in 1886. He served in the committees of judiciary, general and local, and was chairman of the committee on refrenchment and repairs. While in the legislature Mr. Cox devoted himself specially to legislation in the interest of the laboring classes. His bill to modify the conspiracy laws of Pennsylvania was one of the most important measures before that body in the interest of the workingmen. He secured its passage in the house without a dissenting vote, but it was defeated in the senate by a tie vote. Mr. Cox has a very large and growing practice as a lawyer, especially for one so young in the practice of that profession, and bids fair to become a prominent figure at the Allegheny county bar.

Lowry H. West, Homestead. This gentleman was born on the old home farm of his father and grandfather, in what is now Homestead borough, Feb. 19, 1826. His great-grandfather, Edward West, came from Virginia and settled in Washington county. His son, Joseph, married Mrs. Mary Hay, a widow with two sons, Lowry and John Hay, who went west and purchased a large stock farm, on which they laid out the town of Shawnee-town, Ill., and where Lowry was killed. Joseph and Mary (Hay) West had the following-named children: Alexander, Edward, Joseph and Matthew. Joseph married Sarah Whittaker (both were natives of Mifflin township, Allegheny county), and had ten children: Martha, Mary A., Aaron, Lowry H., Joseph, Sarah, Margaret, Matthew, Alexander and Edward. Lowry H. and three brothers inherited the old homestead, which they farmed until 1870, when they sold the farm to the Homestead Improvement Company.

Lowry H. West married, Oct. 30, 1851, Miss Eliza J. Snyder, who was born in Pittsburgh, a daughter of Jacob and Jane (Wilson) Snyder, the former of whom was born in Switzerland, and came, in August, 1807, with his parents to America, where they purchased a farm in Mifflin township, this county. Jacob Snyder was a great reader, and was well educated; he and his wife were Presbyterians. Mr. and Mrs. Lowry H. West have four sons and three daughters: North West, of N. West & Co., paper manufacturers, 114 and 115 Water street, ranks among the leading business-men of Pittsburgh; was married to Miss Martha Walker, June 1, 1876; and they have one daughter, Marguerite Allison West. They are members of the North Presbyterian Church, Allegheny City, and Mr. West of the Americus club and the R. A. C. Lowry H. West, Jr., married Miss Anna Ballard, of Lake City, Minn. He is engaged in fruit-growing at San Buenaventura, Cal. Joseph Aaron West, brick-manufacturer; dealer in real estate, coal, hay, grain and flour; mortgage-broker and insurance; Homestead, married Miss Ada B. Henevay of Latrobe, Pa. Jacob S. West, born Jan. 24, 1858, dealer in hay, grain and cattle, married Miss Fannie Evans, of Ohio; Laura West, wife of Rev. Wm. Evans, of Grand Junction, Iowa; Ida B. West died in infancy; Miss Martha E., residing at home with her parents.

Mr. West was named after his relative, Col. Alexander Lowry, who came from the north of Ireland to Lancaster county, Pa., in 1729. As senior colonel he commanded the Lancaster militia company at the battle of Brandywine; for 1775, 1776, 1778, 1779, 1780, 1785, 1787 and 1788 he was a member of the general assembly, and in 1791 was elected state senator. He died Jan. 31, 1806, one of the greatest men Pennsylvania ever produced. Mr. Lowry H. West ranks among the leading citizens as an upright, honorable gentleman and a descendant of prominent old families of Allegheny county. He is an elder in the Presbyterian Church, of which he and his wife are members. He is president of the Homestead cemetery, and engaged in real estate, owning considerable property in Homestead and the western states.

Thomas J. Kenny, retired, Homestead, was born Nov. 8, 1803, in Chester county, Pa. His father, Charles Henry, was born Nov. 1, 1760, in County Donegal, Ireland; immigrated to America in 1791 and settled in Chester county, Pa. With nothing but native energy he raised himself in a short time to an enviable position as merchant and county official, being justice of the peace for a long term and register and recorder nine years. He died July 29, 1845. He married Mary, a daughter of Michael Jenkins, of Welsh descent, whose ancestors came to America with Lord Baltimore. The progenitor of the Jenkins family was Ap Jenkins, whose son William, born in 1634, married Mary, daughter of Lieut. Thomas Courtenay of the English navy, both families having a coat of arms. Mrs. Mary Kenny was the mother of five children: Anthony H. (a Catholic priest), Thomas J., Charity A., Charles W. and Mary. Of these Charity A. was the wife of William B. Conway, who organized Iowa as a territory and became its first secretary of state; Charles W. joined the Jesuits at St. Stanislaus, Mo., where he is superintendent.

In 1818 Thomas J. walked from his native county to Mifflin township, where his father bought two hundred and seventy-five acres of land, which is still in possession of our subject. For thirty years he has been engaged in mining coal under his own and other farms, and as a farmer and coal-merchant has been one of the most successful men in that business. Since 1888 he has resided in Homestead. Mr. Kenny married twice, his first wife, Hannah Curran, dying young. His second wife, Ann Maginn, died Aug. 11, 1885. aged seventy-eight years; they had ten children, of whom six are yet living: Charles, Antony H., Thomas J., Ann E. (now Mother Bernard, of Cincinnati, where she is super-riores), Agnes G. (wife of J. G. Kelly, cashier at Braddock), and William F. Mr. Kenny is a member of the Catholic Church, for which he has done much, and has built a brick church on his farm himself.

ALEXANDER McCLURG. The name of McIlvaine is prominent and honored one in the early history of Pittsburgh. The most widely known representative of that name was Alexander McIlvaine, the subject of this sketch. He was closely identified with the earliest movements of the manufacturing industries of Western Penn-yslyvania, and later to place them on a firm and sure foundation. Like many of the leading men and families of Pittsburgh, Mr. McIlvaine sprang from a Scotch-Irish source. His father was Joseph McIlvaine, of Colerain, in the north of Ireland, where Alexander was born in 1788. Joseph McIl-vaine, the father, was filled with that love of liberty and progress which was just then awaking in the hearts of men, and he became one of the ardent and active patriots of his time and country. He was a leader in the movement of the "United Irishmen" in 1798, and like so many other Irishmen who have loved their country, he incurred the bitter hatred of the English government. On the failure of the efforts of the patriots, his arrest was ordered, and he was compelled hastily to fly from the country he loved. He sought concealment on a small vessel which was about to sail for the United States, and though the vessel was twice searched for him before she put to sea, he escaped, and finally arrived safely, but alone, in Philadelphia. He immediately made arrangements for his young wife and children to join him there, but when they arrived the yellow fever was raging so severely in that city that he pushed on farther west with them, and settled in the then young city of Pittsburgh.

It is interesting now to think what a beautiful spot this region must have been, situated as it was at the junction of two mighty and beautiful rivers, and surrounded with lofty hills which were still clad with primeval forests. Used to the life of a country gentleman, Mr. McIlvaine selected for his home a beautiful spot on the south bank of the Moongahela, at some distance from the then small city, a site now shorn of its rural beauties, and embraced in the Twenty-fourth ward of Pittsburgh. Here Joseph McIlvaine built what was at that time a spacious and comfortable old-style mansion, and, true to his love of the freedom in whose cause he had suffered, he named it "Liberty Hall." Some of the older citizens will still recall it as it stood in its later days, fallen into ruin and neglect, and surrounded by mills and furnaces. It was not finally swept away until about 1845.

Before his death, which occurred in 1825, Joseph McIlvaine, in connection with his enterprising young son, Alexander, had erected and operated the first foundry built in Pittsburgh, and indeed the first foundry west of the Alleghany mountains. This foundry stood upon the ground now occupied by the postoffice building, and may properly be considered to have been the first step in founding the important industry which has since given wealth and prosperity to a great city, and indeed to all of Western Pennsylvania.

Joseph McIlvaine was the active spirit of this enterprise, and from this start he rapidly pushed forward in the development of all industries connected with the manufacture of iron, until before many years he was the owner and operator of the largest rolling-mills and blast-furnaces in the vicinity of what was rapidly becoming known as the "Smoky City." Perhaps the best known of these industries was the great "Fort Pitt Works." This noted establishment was founded by Alexander McIlvaine. It grew to great proportions, and afterward, as will be remembered, during our civil war it supplied to the government great quantities of ord-ance-stores and guns of the very largest dimensions.

In 1817 Alexander McIlvaine was married to Miss Sarah Trevor, daughter of an English gentleman who had settled at Connells-ville, Fayette county, Pa., and in 1825 the rapid development of his many manufacturing and commercial enterprises caused him to remove to Philadelphia, where he was already largely interested in the wholesale dry-goods business. The next ten years were, with him, years of great activity. He not only carried on his many enterprises connected with the manufacture of iron, but he established branches of his Philadelphia dry-goods house in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Louisville, and also carried on very extensively the wholesale hardware business. He was the leading spirit in many firms, such as McIlvaine, Denny & Co., McIlvaine, Wade & Co., McClurg, Trevor & Co., McClurg, Darlington & Co. and others, and for years his business enterprises everywhere were aggressive and successful. When, however, the financial crisis of 1837 came, owing rather to misplaced confidence in some of his partners than to want of business skill and prudence, many of his ventures were overtaken with disaster, and once more he returned to Pittsburgh to save what he could from the wreck of his fortune, and here he spent the remainder of his very active life.

Mr. McIlvaine's first wife died in Allegheny City in 1840, and in 1845 he was again mar-rried to Margaret Caskey, who survived him. He died in Allegheny City April 6, 1873, leaving six children by his first wife. Alexander McClurg was always a public-spirited citizen, and an ardent and fearless champion of the political opinions which he espoused. He was one of the early advocates of the abolition of human slavery, and it was a matter of great pride with him that he erected and owned Lafayette hall, at the corner of Wood and Fourth streets, in the City of Pittsburgh, where, on the 29th of February, 1856, the national convention was held which inaugurated the republican party, a party which was so soon to carry the country through a great civil war, and finally to free it from the curse of negro slavery.

Mr. McClurg was until his death a strong supporter of republican principles, and an opponent of every form of public wrong and tyranny; but it would be as a far-sighted and enterprising business man that he will be chiefly remembered. It is not a little distinction to have been the first to found and foster, as it is believed he was, the industry by which the city of Pittsburgh has grown into its great prosperity. The projector and builder of the first foundry in Pittsburgh is entitled to a lasting place in the memory of its citizens.

Of the six children left by Mr. McClurg, Trevor, the eldest, became an artist of considerable distinction, living abroad for many years, and now residing in Philadelphia; Sarah Anne, the eldest daughter, became the wife of George Hogg, Esq., of Tower Hill, near Brownsville, Pa.; William A., who married a daughter of the late Chief Justice Walter H. Lowrie, was for many years prominent in business affairs in Pittsburgh, and now lives in Meadville, Pa.; Caroline M., married Hon. E. F. Drake, formerly speaker of the Ohio house of representatives and now an influential citizen of St. Paul, Minn.; Mary Frances remained unmarried, and lives with her sister, Mrs. Drake, in St. Paul; while Alexander C., the youngest, served with distinction in the war of the rebellion, rising to the grade of a general officer, and is now a successful bookseller and publisher in Chicago.

John McRoberts, retired, postoffice Homestead, was born May 12, 1806, near Lebanon church, in Mifflin township, a son of James McRoberts. The latter was born in Franklin county, Pa., where his parents were pioneers, and where his two brothers and three sisters were captured by Indians, in a schoolhouse; the girls were murdered, but the boys were held prisoners, and, having been adopted into the tribes, they refused all inducements to return to their parents. James McRoberts, who was a farmer, came to this county in 1799, and married Nancy Wishart, of Scotch descent, by whom he had six children: James, John Jane, Ann, Mary and Elizabeth. John learned the blacksmith’s trade with his uncle, Henry Baird, a brother of Rev. Thomas Baird, and later in life farmed successfully. In the fall of 1874 he came to Homestead, where he has lived a retired life. He married Jane, daughter of Samuel McCutchen, who was captured by the Indians and fled to Franklin county, where he became a blacksmith. Mr. McRoberts is the father of the following-named children: James H. (a civil engineer), William (a farmer), Mrs. Nancy A. Smith, Mrs. Mary Willock, Mrs. Gussie Nolan, Emily and Margaret. Mrs. McRoberts died over thirty years ago. The old people were members of the Presbyterian Church, and were stanch democrats.

Rev. Levi Risher, postoffice Dravosburg, was born May 18, 1836, near the old Risher homestead. The family is of German descent and his ancestors settled in the Cumberland valley, being among the pioneers. One of their descendants, Daniel Risher, born near Chambersburg, was a playmate of Simon Henry Baird, the latter turned Sene-gade, and who afterward saved his life by warning him of an Indian attack. Risher in turn warned the settlers, and thus saved their lives. He was also in Braddock’s army in 1755. He was twice married, and reared a large family. He at one time owned land at Cochran Station. His son, John Risher, settled near Whitehall, in Baldwin township, this county, but went to Missouri later in life, and died there. His son, Daniel, the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born June 21, 1793, in Baldwin township, where he died Dec. 31, 1880. He owned about seven hundred acres of land, and did much to develop the resources of this county. He was a miller and distiller, and his brand of flour commanded a special price in Philadelphia for many years. He was a man of iron will and constitution; was a whig, but voted for Gen. Jackson, and later was a republican. He was a United Presbyterian in early life, but later a Presbyterian; his ancestors were Lutherans. His wife, Sarah Cready (formerly spelled Kräte), was of Lutheran parentage, and was a thorough German home woman, earnest and strict, teaching the catechism to her children. She died May 11, 1875, aged eighty-four years and four days. Her children are John C., Maria, Ann, Susan, Elizabeth, Sarah, Amanda, Louisa and Ithamar D. Of these John C. was born Sept. 14, 1815, in Mifflin township. He married Nancy D., daughter of John McClure, and they had five children: Levi, Mrs. Agnes M. Cramp, Daniel M., Mrs. Sarah C. Snodgrass and John M. John C. Risher developed his father’s coal-land at Dravosburg, which had been leased, and was one of the leading coal-men on the river, and died in Allegheny City, Jan. 29, 1889. The capacity of J. C. Risher & Co.’s works is sixteen thousand bushels per day. They build their own boats and barges and ship to New Orleans and other points.

Levi Risher graduated at the Jefferson College in 1859, and at the Theological Seminary in 1863, and was pastor of Montour’s Run church for two years. From 1865 to 1869
GAMBLE Weir, Pittsburg, born Aug. 12, 1849, in County Derry, Ireland, came to this country in 1865, and settled in Pittsburgh, where he learned the blacksmith business, and then went into the manufacture of wagons, trucks, etc., with his brother, James G. Weir, under the firm name of James G. Weir & Brothers. In that business he remained until the fall of 1880, when he entered the Allegheny county sheriff's office, under Sheriff William McCallin, remaining during that sheriff's time of office, and also the next two years, and was subsequently the sheriff's deputy, and after the resignation of John Gray. Retiring from that office, Mr. Weir associated himself with Mayor William McCallin as chief of the detective service, and continued in that capacity until the organization of the city government under the new city charter, when he was called by J. O. Brown, chief of the department of public safety, to the superintendency of the bureau of police, which position he has filled with credit to himself and satisfaction of the city. Mr. Weir has served three successive terms in the common council, representing the Fourth ward of Pittsburgh, where he was on important committees, being chairman of some of them. Mr. Weir has been an active politician in the city since 1872, and has at all times and under all circumstances been an ardent republican.

Harvey B. Cochran, retired farmer, Duquesne, was born in March, 1821, in Mifflin township. His grandfather, Samuel Cochran, a native of Ireland and of Scotch descent, first settled in Dauphin county, Pa.; and then came to Mifflin township, this county, where he bought 330 acres of land, which property has been in the possession of his family until lately. He married Mary Shearer, a native of Chester county, Pa. John Cochran, the last of the children, died in 1873, after dividing the farm, giving a part to Robert Patterson and a part to Joseph Keneday. Each one sold a part of the land on which is now erected Allegheny Bessemer Steel-works, a monster building constructed of iron, erected partly on historical ground, being that of the military road over which Braddock, Col. Washington and the ill-fated army passed on the 9th of July, 1755. They are now filling a ravine through which the troops defiled on their way to the crossing, which is (or was before the dams were built), known as Braddock's Lower Ripple. His Upper Ripple is a short distance above the Cochran farm, the lower one just opposite the Edgar Thomson Steel-works, through which the army passed, marching into an Indian ambuscade. Frazier afterward came in possession of the battlefield, and before tilling the soil gathered up the bleached bones and buried them. When Mr. H. B. Cochran built here, in sinking a foundation for one of the stacks, a mason came upon a mass of human bones which no doubt were the bones of the slaughtered soldiers, which were dumped into the filling. The father of Col. John Neel crossed the mountains in 1779 or 1780, and settled on a farm, back of McKeensport some three or four miles, in Versailles township, the same farm now occupied by John Muse. In 1781 two uncles of Mr. Cochran's mother, Adam and William Neel, followed him, on horseback, armed with rifles. They landed at the brother's in the evening and turned their horses into the woods. In the morning, being warned of the Indians, they took their rifles and started on the hunt for their horses, intending to cross the Monongahela river at Braddock's Upper Ripple, in order to look at some land bought by his uncle the Hon. John Neel, and only proceeded a few rods from the log cabin, however, when the brother, who was with his family eating breakfast, heard the report of two rifles. Taking his own, he went up a little rise in the ground and saw Indians taking the scalps off the brothers. Turning toward the cabin he shouted: "Come on boys, here's the yellow d——a!" and then raised his rifle (which was a flintlock) to shoot, but one of the savages was quicker of the two, and fired first, the ball knocking the pan off Neel's gun. The Indians then fled into the wilderness, and it was the last raid they ever made along the Monongahela river. Samuel Cochran died aged eighty years; his wife when aged fifty-one. They had twelve children: Robert, Samuel, Joseph, John, William, Mary, Sarah, Jane, Elizabeth, Margaret, Rachel and Ann. Of the sons, Samuel bought a farm and married Grizella, daughter of James and Rachel (McClure) Neel. Samuel Cochran, Jr. and Sr., were elders in Lebanon Presbyterian Church; Samuel, Jr., died in 1845, aged sixty years; his widow Jan. 10, 1875, aged eighty-seven years. They had five children: Louisa, Myra, Harvey Byron, Melissa and Theresa.

The subject of this memoir has been a farmer all his life, and has inherited many of the sterling qualities of his parents. He yet owns 170 acres of the old homestead. In 1886 he built a handsome residence in Duquesne, where he now resides. He has always taken a deep interest in political matters; has been identified with the democratic party, and has filled various offices in his township.

William Cox, retired farmer, Homestead, was born in 1807, in Northamptonshire, England, a son of William and Catharine Cox. At the age of twenty-one years Mr. Cox married, in England, Hannah Ford, and soon after they immigrated to America with a view of bettering their condition. In Allegheny county, Pa., Mr. Cox found suitable land for saltworks, and located opposite Homestead, where he operated several years. He then came to Mifflin township, and by industry and frugality became a wealthy man. Since 1878 he has resided in Homestead, where he lives a retired life. He has five farms, four of which are located in Lawrence county and one near Homestead, on all of which his children reside. His first wife died many years ago, leaving eight children: Sarah, Catharine, Joseph, Thomas, Elizabeth, William, George and Asa. Mr. Cox married for his second wife Mrs. Anna Whitaker, a daughter of Christian and Anna (Forney) Dellenbaugh, all natives of Switzerland, Mrs. Cox being eleven years old when she came to America. She is the mother of the following children by her first husband: Mrs. Martha Hope, Christopher, Mrs. Eliza West, Elijah, Mrs. Fannie Adams and Wilber Whitaker. By her last marriage she has one child, Hon. John F. Cox. The subject of this sketch is a republican: is a member of the M. E. Church, in which he was steward and class-leader for many years.

Capt. William B. Anderson, retired captain and boat-owner, postoffice Shoustown, was born in Washington county, Pa., Oct. 10, 1832, a son of Hon. Robert and Jemima (Taylor) Anderson. Hon. Robert Anderson was a native of Pennsylvania, a gold-and silver-beater by trade, and while a young man established a pack-line to carry salt from Philadelphia to Washington, Pa. He purchased land adjoining the town of Washington, and later engaged in farming. He represented Allegheny county in the legislature, and died at the age of sixty-three years. He was twice married; first to a Miss Agnew, of Washington county, Pa., who bore him four children, all now deceased: Samuel A., Robert S.; Eliza, wife of Samuel C. Cole (also deceased), and Brice Clark. After his first wife's death Mr. Anderson married Widow Swearingen, of Washington county, Pa., who had one son, Joseph C. (now deceased). By this marriage Mr. Anderson became the father of eight children: Margaret (widow of Samuel C. Young), James (deceased), who married Elizabeth Oustott; Julia, who married Nathan Porter (both deceased); Hettie Ann (who died unmarried), Capt. William B., David S., John C., married to Rosa Hintou; and Mary Jane, who married Rev. James Allison, publisher of the Presbyterian Banner. (They had one daughter, and afterward Mrs. Allison died; the daughter, Lizzie Taylor, still lives, and is married to a Mr. Rinchart.)

William B. Anderson, at the age of eleven years, went to live with his brother Robert S. and go to school, and did attend school six months, and then went in his store, and continued clerking until April, 1848; then started a grocery himself in Pittsburgh, and continued it until the fire of 1845, and after the great fire of April 10, 1845, he was left penniless. He next took a position as clerk on the steamer Lake Erie, under Gen. Charles M. Reed, of Erie, Pa.; clerked on that boat and on the Michigan No. 2 and the Beaver, three years. Next he took a clerkship on the Clipper No. 2, one of the seven daily packets making weekly trips between Pittsburgh and Cincinnati, Ohio, making 188 round trips on that boat. Then he formed a partnership with Capt. Samuel C. Young and others and built various passenger and freight boats to run on low water between Pittsburgh and Cincinnati; they built some twenty passenger and freight boats, and generally sold them to run on small rivers in the south. In 1860 Capt. Young died. At that time they were running four packets from Pittsburgh to Memphis, Tenn. In the spring of 1862 Capt. Anderson built a light-water packet, the Glide, a very fast boat, and was that fall employed by the government to carry dispatches to the several gunboats in and about Cincinnati, and towed all the barges for the pontoon bridge at Cincinnati, the time Kirby Smith was expected to attack that city. Sept. 37, 1862, Capt. Anderson sold his boat and crew, a cannon crew, cannon and sharpshooters, to Augusta, Ky., to defend that town. Subsequently he was again employed carrying soldiers, dispatches and government supplies for Cox's army on the Big Kanawha river, until winter, when the government bought this boat. He immediately had Glide No. 2 built at Murphysville, W. Va., and carried iron from Portsmouth to Eads' shipyard, St. Louis, Mo., a few trips; then carried government and sutlers' supplies from Cincinnati to Nashville, Tenn., until just before the fight between Hood and Thomas, when the government took charge of the boat, and soon after purchased it. Capt. Anderson then contracted at Freedom, Beaver county, Pa., and built Glide No. 3, a full-cabin passenger boat, which he ran on the Ohio until the close of the war, and afterward between Memphis and Little Rock, Ark., and from New Orleans up the Red river, where the vessel was sunk. Having wrecked her and rebuilt, for the machinery, the steamer R. C. Gray, he four years later sold her at Louisville, Ky. At one time he was in partnership with Capt. R. C. Gray, and together they built the steamer Denmark, the first packet for the Northern Line company, from St. Louis to St. Paul.

September 15, 1853, at Cincinnati, Ohio, Capt. Anderson married Louisa Fischgens, a native of Pittsburgh and a daughter of Joseph L. and Ann (Woolslayer) Fischgens. Her father was born in Cologne, Prussia, and her mother in Pittsburgh. Capt. and Mrs. Anderson have five children: William Y., married to Nancy C. McKinley and residing in Shoustown; Anna M., married July 3, 1888, to Edward A. Hart, of Shoustown, Pa.; John L., Robert and Harry C. reside on the homestead. The homestead is where the family still reside and have resided since Aug. 1, 1853.

The length of time employed by Capt.
W. B. Anderson in the boating business was twenty-five years, and during all that time there never was an accident of any kind causing loss of life happened, although he made many narrow escapes. On the last trip of the Kenton, the McPhis packet that he was on, he had presented to him a pass from Memphis to Charleston with a view of going from Charleston to New York by coast, and from there to Pittsburgh by rail and be at Pittsburgh in time to meet his boat, but through the persuasion of Capt. Crooks and other personal friends, of Memphis, he did not take that route, but continued on the boat, and that very day commenced the firing into Fort Sumter, and as they went up the river things began to appear lively, but they made the trip safely and concluded to lay up at Pittsburgh till they saw more about what was to happen, and they did see a great deal of it before it was all over.

A. Inskpee, lumberman, McKeeseport, is a native of Belmont county, Ohio, where he was reared and educated. He was a soldier in the civil war, enlisting in May, 1861, in Co. H, 7th O. V. I., and participating in the first battle of Winchester, Port Republic, Cedar Mountain and other engagements; at the battle of Cedar Mountain, Aug. 9, 1862, he lost his right arm. He was honorably discharged Oct. 28, same year. After the war he located in Pittsburgh, but later moved to Monongahela City. He settled in McKeeseport in 1870, engaged in the lumber business, and since 1876 has been in partnership with John Shoup, of Allegheny, under firm name of John Shoup & Co.

In 1866 he married Anna A., daughter of Capt. C. Harvey, of Monongahela City, and has five children, one son and four daughters. Mr. Inskee is a director of the Yoougheney Ice company. He has served four terms as a member of the borough council, and three terms as burgess; in politics he is a stanch republican.

DOMINICK C. CUNNINGHAM, glass-manufacturer, Pittsburgh. The successful glass-manufacturing business of which the subject of this sketch is the head was originally established in 1849 as the Pittsburgh Glassworks by Wilson Cunningham, his two brothers and George Duncan. In 1865 the firm became Cunningham & Ihmsen, and in 1878 the interest of Dominick Ihmsen was purchased, and the firm became Cunningham & Co., composed of Messrs. Wilson, Robert and D. O. Cunningham. Two years later D. O. Cunningham, son of Wilson Cunningham, became the sole owner of the business. This embraced two extensive plants for the manufacture of window glass, bottles and fruitjars, one at Twenty-second and the other at Twenty-sixth street, on Jane street, South Side. The firm was recognized as among the representatives in the city.

D. O. Cunningham was born in Allegheny county, in 1834, was educated in the glass business from his youth, and is a thoroughly practical and experienced glassmaker. He is also the senior member of the large lumber firm of Schnette & Co., a member of the Chamber of Commerce, a director of the City Insurance company, and is identified with all improvements tending to develop the best interests of the city. His political affiliations are with the protection wing of the democratic party, and he is strongly opposed to all legislation having a tendency to control the individual in his rights to utilize as food or drink those blessings which nature has so bountifully provided.

DANIEL BUSHNELL. The career of this gentleman, one of the most enterprising representative business-men of the county, and substantial citizens of Pittsburgh, affords a typical illustration of the manner in which success may be achieved almost purely by individual exertion. He is a native of New York city, born in 1808. His grandfather Bushnell was born in Hartland, Conn., early in the last century, and about the year 1796 he and his large family of married children removed to Ohio, on the Western Reserve, called New Connecticut. The father of Daniel Bushnell was the only member of the family who did not proceed to Ohio, he having wandered off in his younger days, for a short time living on the east end of Long Island, N. Y. Here he married Sarah Wells, a native of that part of the island, and commenced the trade of a ship-carpen ter. His family consisted of five sons and five daughters, all now deceased except two sons—John, aged eighty-four, a resident of Indianapolis, Ind., and Daniel, the subject of this biographical memoir, now eighty-one years old. After a few years' residence on Long Island the father removed with his family to New York city, and here found employment at his trade in the same shipyards where Robert Fulton built his first steamboats. Early in 1813, when Daniel Bushnell (who well remembers the occurrence) was five years old, Fulton sent several ship-carpenters to Pittsburgh for the purpose of building steamboats for transporting business on the western waters, and Mr. Bushnell, being one of the party, conveyed his family to their new home on the first day of May, 1813.

Mr. Daniel Bushnell was twice married: first in December, 1832, to Eleanor Gray, who died in July, 1854, the mother of fourteen children; and in 1856 Mr. Bushnell took, for his second wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Hill, widow of Rev. T. Hill, and by her had one son, Charles C., and two daughters, Maggie and Mary, both now deceased.

Some time in 1839 Mr. Bushnell decided to embark in the coal business on the Monongahela river, some six miles above Pittsburgh, with the idea of supplying coal to the city; and the trials and experiences of the pioneer coaloperators are graphically described by Mr. Bushnell. It was manifest to him that the old coalbanks around the city were nearly exhausted, and that coal-dealers would soon be obliged to go up the Monongahela river. Mr.
Bushnell, therefore, selected a tract in the first pool of the Monongahela improvement, containing one hundred acres of coal, and took a contract to furnish coal to the Pittsburgh Water-works and Anderson’s Iron-works, now Zugg’s mill. The old coal-dealers said it might succeed in mild weather but not in winter. The first winter gave the enterprise a fair trial. On Nov. 28 of that year the pools froze up, and stopped all business on the river. Mr. Bushnell’s party then went to work to break the ice with their towboat, which they succeeded in doing, and after getting one boat through the locks, they, on the following morning, went on the ice, which they found to be four inches thick, and strong enough to carry the largest horse in the county. They went to work, however, and in about four hours had a track made up to their landing-place. They then eat their boat out and got it into the track, and with little trouble proceeded down to the lock. Next morning they took their boat into the track, which they widened, cracked up the ice, took hold of two flats of coal, and got down to the locks all right, depositing the coal the following morning at the place of delivery. From that on they worked in this manner until the latter part of January, when the ice broke up, and they got to their work in the regular way. This struggle did them a great deal of good, as it proved not only that they could get coal down at any time, but that the wisest plan for consumers was to lay in enough coal in the fall to carry them through the winter. However, it silenced all arguments against the feasibility of getting coal through the “pools” in the winter, if necessary. About this time Mr. Bushnell began to look into the matter of towing coal down to ports on the Ohio river. He suggested that it might be done by steamboats, but nobody would approve of the scheme. They argued that “it would take all the coal you could take down to bring you back,” etc. Nothing daunted, however, Mr. Bushnell made up his mind to try the experiment on a small scale, and in the month of June, 1845, he prepared three coal-flats by putting an extra gunwale on the boats, so that the three flats could carry about ten thousand bushels of coal. He took the old towboat Walter Forward, went on board himself, and started for Cincinnati, got through all right, had the coal unloaded in one day and started back. This trip at least proved that it did not take all the coal they took down to bring the boats back; and at the same time it convinced him that some day coal would be towed to ports below. Not long more than a year had passed when Mr. Bushnell built the towboat Black Diamond, and Smith & Sons bought the old Wheeling packet Erie, which company were enabled to make two trips before Mr. Bushnell got his new boat ready. Few persons have any idea of the trouble the pioneers in towing had in getting into full operation. One difficulty they encountered was the getting pilots to think it safe to put boats ahead, in front of the towboats, and Mr. Bushnell was the first to succeed in this matter. The Lake Erie company could not be prevailed on to do it, but would take two boats on each side with nothing in front. Capt. J. J. Vandergrift was the first one to take the lead in the matter of putting boats in ahead. In their first trip with the Black Diamond the captain, N. J. Bigley, was an interested party in the company, and after making one trip it was found necessary to have him take charge of their new coal-yard in Cincinnati, and then the important question came up as to who should take his place as captain of the Black Diamond. The captain told Mr. Bushnell he knew a young man who had been on the river for a long time, and had advanced from one step to another until he was at that time mate of a steamboat. The “young man” was soon found, and on trial was given the responsible position. He is now an honored, valuable citizen of Pittsburgh, and well known in the business world—Capt. J. J. Vandergrift.

In 1851 Mr. Bushnell abandoned coal operations, and embarked in the oil trade on the Allegheny river. In connection with Capt. J. J. Vandergrift he commenced trading in crude oil, buying it at the Venango wells, and boating it in bulkboats, under deck, and floating or towing it down to market. The scheme worked wonderfully well, and resulted in their making a good deal of money, and Mr. Bushnell has since then stuck to the oil trade, though he does not give it his time, as old age admonishes him to leave the management to younger hands.

Capt. Jacob Jay Vandergrift, a well-known name in the history of Pittsburgh, one of the pioneers in the development of the great petroleum and natural-gas interests of Pennsylvania and neighboring states, with which he has been actively and prominently identified since their discovery, and to-day probably the foremost man in the broad and prolific region of natural wealth known as the “oil country,” was born in the city named, April 10, 1837. He is a grandson of the late Jacob Vandergrift, of Frankford, Philadelphia county, Pa., who married, Dec. 29, 1791, Mary Hart, of the same township. The children of Jacob and Mary Vandergrift were Samuel, born in 1794; John, born in 1796; Benjamin B., born in 1798; Sarah, born in 1801; Joseph, born in 1803; William K., born in 1805; George, born in 1807; Elizabeth, born in 1809; James, born in 1811; Martha, born in 1813, and Jacob M., born in 1816. William K. Vandergrift, the father of the subject of this sketch, married, in April, 1825, Miss Sophia Sarver, born July 5, 1804, near Perryville, about seven miles from Pittsburgh. The children of this marriage were Elizabeth (now Mrs. Kelly), Jacob Jay (the subject of this sketch), Rachel (who died in infancy), William Knowles (who died at Jamestown, N. Y., in 1888), Rachel (now Mrs. Blackstone), Benjamin (who held the position of superintendent) occurred at Cairo, Ill., in 1862-63, while in the service of the United States as commander of the steamboat Red Fox), Caroline (now Mrs. Bishop), George (who was drowned in the Allegheny river) and Theophilus J. (who is a producer of oil and lives at Jamestown, N. Y.). Mr. Vandergrift's parents spent the first six months of their wedded life at Wood's run, and from there removed to Manchester, now part of Allegheny City, where they were living when the great flood of 1882 occurred. In April, 1883, they removed to Pittsburgh, and resided about five years on Water street, between Wood and Smithfield streets, and also for five years near what is now the head of Fourth avenue, where they were when the great fire of 1845 worked such terrible devastation. Driven from their homes by this calamity, they removed to Birmingham, now South Side, Pittsburgh, where they lived thereafter. The subject of this sketch began his education at the age of six years in a school conducted by Mrs. Demars, on Third avenue, near the site of the Dollar Savings bank. A year later he was sent to the Second Ward school, conducted by Mr. J. B. Meeds. This was the first public school opened in Pittsburgh, and was in the old cotton-factory on the bank of the Monongahela river, on the site now occupied by the Monongahela House. At the age of thirteen the young pupil was placed in a school on Fourth avenue (where the front of the Dollar Savings bank now stands), the principal of which was "Squire Thomas Steele, familiarly called "Tommie Steel"—a man peculiar in his day, and quite a "character," under whose tuition he sat two years. He then entered upon the career in which he subsequently achieved both fame and fortune, as cabin-boy aboard the steamboat Bridgewater, commanded by Capt. Washington Ebbert. At the end of the season he engaged as cabin-boy with his uncle, John Vandergrift, who was a boat-builder and owner of the small steamer Pinta, which ran between Pittsburgh and Sunfish, Ohio. In 1844 he made several trips down the river on coalboats, which were floated like a raft, and in 1845 engaged on the steamboat Herald, running from Pittsburgh to St. Louis, Mo. He reached Pittsburgh on his return from this trip a few days after the disastrous fire of that year, and had great difficulty to find his people, who, as previously stated, had been driven from their home by the conflagration.

Jacob's next engagement was as mate of his uncle John Vandergrift's steamboat Prairie Bird, which was shortly afterward sold to Levi Miller, of Wheeling, W. Va., in whose employment he continued as his mate for about two years. From this vessel he went to the steamboat Rhode Island (under Capt. David Green), which he rebuilt and renamed Hail Columbia. After running this boat for some time between Pittsburgh and Lafayette, on the Wabash river, he sold her for her owner, Capt. Green, and then accepted the position of executive engineer of a new steamboat, commanded by Capt. Jabez Smith, plying between Pittsburgh and St. Louis. After leaving this boat he served in the same capacity on several others, and then went into the packet trade on the steamboat Allegheny, under Capt C. W. Batchelor, who had married his cousin, a daughter of his uncle John Vandergrift. He left this vessel in 1858 to take command of the steamboat Black Diamond, a sidewheeler, 150 feet long, built at New Albany, Ind., the year previous, by Messrs. Daniel Bushnell and N. J. Bigley, exclusively to tow coal to Cincinnati, Ohio, being the first constructed solely for that purpose. This boat had been run by Capt. Bigley the first year, Mr. Bushnell attending to the mines; but the firm's business grew so large that Capt. Vandergrift was, at length, compelled to go to Cincinnati to live, in order to give it the attention it required. Until this time coal-barges in tow were placed only on both sides of the towboat, the space at the front not being utilized. Finally it occurred to Mr. Bushnell that this space could be advantageously occupied by coal-barges, with additional safety to the fleet and a decrease in the cost of transportation of coal. To test his theory he built six barges to be towed ahead of the boat exclusively. Although this method is common now—in fact the only one used in transporting coal down the river—it was unknown then, and when the idea was mentioned it was characterized as "absurd," "impossible," etc. There were not lacking mathematicians capable of demonstrating the utter impossibility of carrying out this plan, but then, as ever, pushing, practical men paid little heed to mere theorists, and the attempt was made, although without opposition and delay. Many old steamboat captains, prudent and conservative, regarded the idea as a "crazy notion," and no one among them could be found to risk his reputation in attempting to put it into execution. At last Capt. Bigley recommended Mr. Bushnell to engage Vandergrift, assuring him that the young captain would carry out his orders to the letter even if it sunk the fleet. Barges at the present day generally hold about ten thousand bushels of coal, but at that time the usual load was from five to six thousand bushels. Capt. Vandergrift, being engaged for the service, assumed command of the Black Diamond, and on the initial trip took four barges of coal down the river. At first only a small amount of coal was taken, but afterward the quantity was increased to 150,000 bushels each trip. On the second trip an ugly smashup occurred at Beaver Shools, and two barges were lost; but it is worthy of record that in the following seven years the fleet lost only one more. This progressive method of transporting coal proved a complete success, and to Mr. Bushnell belongs the great credit of having conceived it, while Capt. Vandergrift enjoys the distinction of being the first one with sufficient courage and address to put it in practice. As an example of the success of the young Vandergrift, then but twenty-five years of age, added to his duties those of pilot, and in this double capacity served for several years. In 1858 he purchased one-third interest in the steamboat Red Fox, and shortly afterward one-quarter interest in the steamboat Conestoga, of which Mr. D. Bushnell was part owner. Placing Capt. Briggs in charge of the former, he himself took command of the latter, which until the opening of the civil war was engaged in towing coal from Pittsburgh to New Orleans.

At the close of about two years' service on the Conestoga, his interest in the oil business was awakened by the glowing newspaper accounts which fell under his notice, and, hiring a competent person to act as captain in his place, he went into West Virginia and began operations in the petroleum district. He had been thus engaged but a short time when his plant fell a prey to the military operations of the confederate forces, causing him to abandon the field. He then returned to Pittsburgh and sold the Conestoga and his barges to the national government. After its sale he took the steamboat to Cincinnati, Ohio, and superintended her transformation into a gunboat. He then took her to New Albany, Ind., where he put armor aboard of her and turned her over to Commodore Foote, U. S. navy. Returning again to Pittsburgh, he bought out the other owners of the Red Fox and put the vessel into the oil trade between that city and Oil City. This steamboat's first work in the oil trade was in November, 1861, towing two large coalboat bottoms from Pittsburgh to Oil City, with four thousand empty barrels in them as freight, consigned to various oil-operators. When delivering these barrels to the consignees Capt. Vandergrift bought five thousand barrels of crude oil from the Maple Grove Oil company, on Blood farm, to be delivered at buyer's option by July 1st following. The problem which presented itself was how to get the oil to Pittsburgh. Capt. Vandergrift returned home and formed a connection with Mr. Daniel Bushnell. While the two partners were figuring to get barrels to bring the oil to market, the first bulkboat ever run (owned by Richard Glyde) arrived from Oil City. Inspection at Allegheny City convinced the partners that this was the cheapest and most feasible method of transporting oil, as it had all to come by water at that time. Capt. Vandergrift then explained the plan to an intimate friend, a boatbuilder named John Redman, and the latter agreed to build for the partners twelve of the "flats" or "bulk-boats," eighty feet long, fourteen feet wide and three feet deep, with an individual capacity of about four hundred barrels, at a cost approximating to two hundred dollars each. After construction, in the spring of 1861, these boats were taken up to Oil City, and by July of the same year they had more than paid for themselves, and proved to be the beginning of a very profitable business. As the example of the captain, as captured at the point of production in 1863 at one dollar per barrel was sold a little later in the same year at Pittsburgh for twelve dollars per barrel, at a profit of seventy thousand dollars. After running the Red Fox to Oil City for a year Capt. Vandergrift put his brother Benjamin aboard of her as captain, and sent him with a tow of coal to Nashville, Tenn. As the Red Fox was returning to Pittsburgh the United States quartermaster at Smithfield pressed the vessel into the government service, and directed her commander to report with boat and crew to the quartermaster at Paducah, Ky., for orders. Arriving at this point, the vessel was placed at work for two months towing forage and provisions to Pittsburg Landing, and was then ordered to Cairo, where the post quartermaster employed her in towing coal to the fleet of gunboats at Island No. 10. After making several trips to the fleet, the boat was ordered back to Cairo, and Capt. Benjamin Vandergrift and his crew, being mustered out of the service, returned to Pittsburgh. Shortly after this the government authorities again took possession of the Red Fox, and manned her with an independent crew. On her second trip, while making a landing, the vessel struck a sunken barge in the river at Cairo, and sank, becoming a total loss. Up to this writing no indemnity has been awarded the owners for her loss. About this time Capt. Vandergrift began to acquire interests in oil-producing "up Oil Creek." As his partner, Mr. Bushnell, preferred to confine his operations to the less hazardous business of transportation, the two separated, Mr. Bushnell then taking as associate his son Joseph. Capt. Vandergrift now took up his residence at Oil City, and threw himself with vigor into the work of producing oil, and developing the oil country. Associated with Mr. W. H. Ewing, of Pittsburgh, in 1863 and 1864 he formed one or two companies for producing oil, which met with moderate success. His next important enterprizes were in connection with a railroad and a pipe-line. The first pipe-line for oil transportation was laid in 1865 by an operator named Van Sickle, and extended between Pitt Hole and Shafer farm, a distance of about six miles. The Oil City & Pitt Hole railroad, organized in 1869 by a number of capitalists in Oil City and Pittsburgh, proved unsuccessful by the Pennsylvania railroad taking possession of the road-bed from Oil City to Oleanopolis, and was placed in the hands of Mr. George V. Forman, as receiver. In partnership with this gentleman Capt. Vandergrift equipped and ran a line of tank-cars, called the Star Tank-line, carrying oil from Pitt Hole to Oil City, in order to secure business for the road, in which Capt. Vandergrift was a heavy stockholder, the firm of Vandergrift & Forman laid a pipe-line from West Pitt Hole to Pitt Hole, a distance of about four miles. This line, which was named the Star Pipe-line, was the real commencement of the gigantic system which now prevails in the United Transit company. In 1871 the firm of Vandergrift & Forman, of which Mr. John Pitcairn, Jr., of Philadelphia, had recently become a member, laid another pipe-line, four miles in length, from Fagundas to the Warren & Franklin railroad, on Allegheny river, at a point named Trunkeyville. This line, first known as the Trunkeyville, was afterward named the Commonwealth Pipe-line. The firm next laid the Sandy Pipe-line, twelve miles in length, from Oil City to East Sandy, and followed it by the Milton Pipe-line, four miles long, from the Milton farm, or Bredensburg, to Oil City. Later constructions by the firm were the Western Pipe-line, from Shaw farm to the new Imperial refinery above Oil City about three miles; and also the Franklin Pipe-line, for collecting oil from the district around Franklin. The Imperial refinery, having a capacity of two thousand barrels per day, and considered a huge enterprise at that time, was built by Capt. Vandergrift and his partners. Another enterprise which Capt. Vandergrift was prominent in organizing was the Oil City Trust company, the capital of which was $120,000. Mr. Forman was president of this company, which had its bank and offices in Love's block, Centre street, Oil City, and Mr. Vandergrift and a number of other leading oil-men and merchants were directors and stockholders. The next enterprise of Capt. Vandergrift was the organization of pipe-line systems in Butler and Venango counties, severally named the Fairview Pipe-line, Raymilton Pipe-line, Cleveland Pipe-line, and Millertown Pipe-line, all controlled by Vandergrift, Forman & Co. When perfected these lines were united as one general system under the name of the "United Pipe-Lines of Vandergrift, Forman & Co.," and this system was, in April, 1887, consolidated with sundry other pipe-lines, and incorporated under the title of the United Pipe-lines. This company gradually absorbed all the remaining competing lines in the lower oil-regions, and shortly after the first development of oil at Bradford entered that district also, and became its great system. A recent writer on the subject refers to Capt. Vandergrift's connection with this company in the following words:

"Of the United Pipe-lines Capt. Vandergrift has always been president, and to him, therefore, is attributable a very large share of the unbounded and well-merited confidence the company has always possessed, from not only the producers and holders of oil, but also the banking institutions of the country. The latter are accustomed to accept its certificates for revenue as readily as government bonds. In fact, the United Pipe-lines have been considered as "above suspicion," with the demand of the most scrupulous producers, on two occasions, 'the doors were flung wide open" for investigation; the affair and every one of the conditions were most scrupulously examined by these opponents and their agents, without restriction of any kind, and from the inquiry the reputation of the company came, if possible, even more untarnished than ever. To illustrate the unsullied integrity of this company in its trust as storers of oil it is sufficient to add that at its own original suggestion, in order that the storing of oil should always be set about with the utmost safeguards to the public, and to prevent unscrupulous persons from appropriating it as an act of assembly in Pennsylvania, that at the instance of any holder of certificates for ten thousand barrels of oil, any pipe-line company's affairs can be at any time thoroughly investigated and every tank of oil gauged, to ascertain the exact quantity on hand."

At the incorporation of the company, Mr. John R. Campbell, of Oil City, became its treasurer, and in that capacity has continued to the present time, proving a most efficient assistant to the president in the company's affairs. To his remarkable skill as an accountant the company owes its present admirable system of records, checks and counter-checks, which may be said to render fraud impossible. The vice-president of the company is Mr. Daniel O'Day, of Buffalo, N. Y., a gentleman whose wonderful administrative and executive abilities have been exerted in its service with the best results. Although still maintaining its own organization, the United Pipe-line company was, in 1884, merged into and made a division of the enormous system represented by the National Transit company, the capital of which is $80,000,000. At the time this union was effected the reasons for it were fully and satisfactorily explained. In the producing of petroleum, "now the third staple of the world," Capt. Vandergrift has for many years been specially prominent. In 1872 he was one of several capitalists organizing the firm of H. L. Taylor & Co., for the development of oil-lands in Butler and Armstrong counties, Pa., and also the Argyle Savings bank, at Petrolia, Butler county. Both these enterprises were highly successful. The firm named eventually gave birth to the Union Oil Company, with its immense business interests. The bank, during its existence, was honored by the public confidence to an extent which was truly remarkable, at the same time extremely complimentary to its incorporators, for notwithstanding that its capital was but $50,000 its deposits at times reached the enormous aggregate of a million and a half. In 1876 the firm of Vandergrift, Forman & Co. was dissolved, Mr. Forman withdrawing. Its successor, organized at once, was the firm of Vandergrift, Pitcairn & Co., of which Messrs. Edward Hopkins, J. R. Campbell and W. J. Young (the last named now president of the Oil City Trust Co.) constituted the "company." Mr. Pitcairn withdrew subsequently, and the remaining members of the firm re-organized under the style of Vandergrift, Young & Co. Capt. Vandergrift was the prime mover in the organization of the Forest Oil company (capital $1,200,000), of which he has been president since its incorporation. His associates in the management of this great oil-producing corporation are Mr. W. J. Young, vice-president, Mr. J. R. Campbell, treasurer, who, with Mr. J. O. Bushnell and the executive committee. Prominent among other companies in which he is heavily interested are the Anchor Oil company and the Associated Producers' company, each with a capital of one million dollars. He is also a large individual producer of oil.

In 1881 Capt. Vandergrift removed from Oil City, where he had lived many years, to his present large and beautiful property on the bluff skirting Fifth avenue extension, East Liberty, about five miles from the business portion of Pittsburgh. This removal was the result of his growing manufacturing interests. He was among the first to develop the natural gas, fraught with such astounding changes and benefits to the industrial world of Pittsburgh, Capt. Vandergrift is entitled to rank as a pioneer and arch promoter. As early as 1875, in association with John Pitcairn, Jr., and Capt. C. W. Batchelor, of Pittsburgh, and others, under the name of the Natural Gas company, limited, he laid the first natural-gas line of any importance, connecting the city by a six-inch pipe, gas-wells near Saxboung with the great iron-mills of Spang, Chalfant & Co. and Graff, Bennett & Co., thus practically demonstrating to the manufacturing world the great value of this wonderful natural product. About the same time, in association with Mr. Pitcairn and Mr. A. C. Beeson, he constructed and operated successfully the Butler Gas lines. With his removal to Pittsburgh his interest in natural gas received additional impetus, for, perceiving at once the magnificent possibilities of this wonderful product, he then became one of the foremost advocates of its general employment for industrial and fuel purposes, and proceeded in a more effective manner to place it conveniently at the disposal of the public. Through his active initiative or cooperation, two of the largest oil-refining companies in the United States. The Pennsylvania Tube-works, capital $1,200,000. Having been a member of the oil exchanges at Oil City and Titusville, he quite naturally joined that at Pittsburgh. With rare business perception he saw that this organization was weak, and therefore resolved to strengthen it. Meeting with no assistance from the members, he concluded to found a new exchange, and in 1883 he obtained a charter for one from the local court. He then selected a site on Fourth avenue, opposite the Dollar Savings bank, and erected thereon a magnificent building, which cost, together with the site, $150,000. While it was being constructed he organized the Pittsburgh Petroleum Exchange, and in spite of the most virulent opposition and abuse from interested members, of whom he said to have grappled with the task. In April, 1884, the new exchange went into operation, by purchasing the new building, paying Mr. Vandergrift for it in cash. Besides the banking institutions already named, Capt. Vandergrift has aided in founding and organizing others, including the Seaboard National Bank of New York and the Keystone Bank of Pittsburgh. He is president of the last named. In the Allegheny National Bank of Pittsburgh, also, he was at one time a director. His name is likewise connected with various iron enterprises in Pittsburgh, and of course is intimately associated with the Standard Oil company, of which he early became a member by taking stock in the company for his Imperial refinery near Oil City, and for several years was a director. In natural gas, in addition to companies named, he has been the promoting spirit in organizing the United Oil and Gas trust, of which he is president; the Toledo Natural Gas company, capital $3,000,000, and the Washington Oil company, and in extending the Pennsylvania Tube-works and the Apollo Iron and Steel company, equipping the latter with open-hearth furnaces and extensive galvanizing-wrks, and increasing the general capacity to rank with the largest sheet-iron manufacturers in the United States. As may be inferred from this account, Capt. Vandergrift is a man of extraordinary vigor and energy. In physique being rather short and stout, he shows his capacity for hard work and concentrated thought. He may be said to have grappled successfully with nearly every problem that has confronted him. His shrewdness and good judgment in business transactions are exceptionally excellent, and they have been so carefully and efficiently called into play that almost every enterprise their possessor has entered upon seems to have yielded golden returns. In all his business relations Capt. Vandergrift is a model of upright:ness and honor. His kindness of heart is something remarkable, and to those who know him intimately it seems as if he would never weary of doing good, although the greater number of his philanthropic and kindly acts have, through his natural modesty, never been heralded to the public. It may be said that no really deserving applicants for assistance have ever been dismissed unaided. The claims of strangers as well as friends are一律 deemed valid, and neither race nor creed debarhs from his sympathy. In the cause of religion he is and always has been generous to a fault. Some of his acts in aid of the church have been princely. One, the gift of a number of thousand dollars (over half its cost) to the First Presbyterian Church of Oil City, toward the construction of the edifice in which it now worships, was of this character. Through Mr. Vandergrift's munificence the congregation is out of debt, and worships God in a free church, to which all, rich and poor alike, are welcome. Capt. Vandergrift is generally somewhat reserved in manner, but in the company of friends or in society he is most agreeable and entertaining, more especially when interested, and at times “jojial and the life of the party.” He is a good friend, but, like most men of positive character, is strong in his dislikes.

Capt. Vandergrift has been singularly happy in his home life. He has been twice married. His first wife, to whom he was united Dec. 29, 1853, was Miss Henrietta Virginia Morrow. The following children were born to this marriage: Kate Virginia, now Mrs. Bingham, of New York city; Benjamin Wallace, a resident of Pittsburgh; Rebecca Blanche, who died in childhood; Jacob Jay, who died in 1887; Daniel Bushnell, who died in childhood; Henrietta Virginia, now Mrs. Johnston, of West Point, N. Y.; Margaret Frances, now Mrs. T. E. Murphy; Samuel Henry and Joseph Bushnell, both residents of Pittsburgh. Mrs. Vandergrift was either of casual or conversational habits and conversation. A sincere Christian, she delighted in doing good both in “season and out of season,” and in reflecting upon others who stood in need of a generous share of the prosperity she enjoyed, and which she administered with a full consciousness of the responsibility its possession entailed. Her interest in the young was marked. At Oil City the many young men who had left their homes for employment, and who were exposed there to the excitments and temptations which beset life in all newly opened fields of enterprise, were objects of the deepest solicitude to her. A profound believer in the saving influence of home life, she unhesitatingly opened her home to them, and gave them at all times a kindly and maternal welcome. Her moral influence over them was very great and the effect still remains. Mrs. Vandergrift died at Pittsburgh Dec. 25, 1881. She was profoundly esteemed during life, and sincerely mourned at death. On Dec. 4, 1883, Capt. Vandergrift married Mrs. Frances G. Hartley, nee Anshutz, who is now the sharer of his busy career, and in every sense of the term a worthy helpmeet. —En cyclopaedia of Contemporary Biography of Pennsylvania.

Theophilus J. Vandergrift. In the very front rank of pioneer oil-producers and well-known, enterprising business-men of the country, stands the gentleman whose name heads this brief memoir. Born Nov. 22, 1846, in Pittsburgh, Pa., he is the youngest in the family of five sons and five daughters born to William K. and Sophia (Sawyer) Vandergrift, former a native of Frankford, Philadelphia county, Pa., and latter of Allegheny county. He was educated in his native city, and early in life embarked in the oil-producing industry, in which his sagacity, reliability, practical knowledge and study of the oil-rocks have caused him to be regarded as high authority on the production of oil and natural gas, and placed him second to none among successful producers. He is engaged at present in the production of oil and gas in Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia, and in the manufacturing business at James-town, N. Y., where he now resides.

Mr. Vandergrift was united in marriage, Dec. 28, 1869, with Miss Ellen, daughter of James and Mary O'Donnell, of Pittsburgh, and by her has three sons and one daughter. Mr. Vandergrift has given much time and study to the science of geology and topography. The chapter on the geology and topography of Allegheny county, together with the “Columnar Section” accompanying it, in Part I of this work, is from the pen of Mr. T. J. Vandergrift.

Benjamin B. Coursin, McKeesport, was born in East Elizabeth, Allegheny county, Pa., Feb. 22, 1837, a son of Benjamin and Christian (Rhodes) Coursin. His paternal grandparents were Peter and Hannah (Wynn) Coursin. The former was a native of New Jersey, and with his parents came to this county shortly after the Revolution. Benjamin B. removed with his parents to Reynoldston, opposite McKeesport, in 1849. He received a common-school education and spent two terms at Waynesburg College. After leaving college he served two years’ apprenticeship at the printing trade, and for four years thereafter followed the occupation of a steamboat engineer on western rivers. He then embarked in the coal business, and was the proprietor of and operated the Alliquippa mines for five years. In 1864 he located in McKeesport, after disposing of his coal interests, and for the succeeding seven years was engaged in buying and improving property within the borough and building dwelling-houses. For several years he was proprietor of a steam, job-printing office, the best appointed job-printing office ever in McKeesport, furnishing all the jobwork for Allegheny county for three years in addition to the local work for the borough. He was the founder of the McKeesport Times, which for a time he successfully conducted. In 1875 he was appointed one of the commissioners on the enlargement of McKeesport borough, to establish lines and procure a charter from the legislature for and to extend the borough limits to the present boundaries. He was a charter member and procured the charter at Harrisburg for the P. V. & O. R. Co., and has always taken an active part in everything tending to promote the growth and development of McKeesport. In 1886 he formed the McKeesport & Youngohgeen Ice company, of which he was the manager the first year. In the fall of 1887 he erected the Crystal Ice-house, with a capacity of 4,500 tons, which he is at present managing. He has erected over one hundred dwelling-houses and three business blocks in McKeesport.

June 1, 1859, Mr. Cousin married Sarah P., daughter of John and Sarah (Lewis) Haney, of McKeesport, and by her has seven children living; Virginia M., Benjamin, Edward S., Charles E., Blanche, Clyde C. and Nellie. Mr. Cousin deserves much credit for his assistance in securing the borough water-works as a borough investment at a time when a private company had secured a charter and was attempting to supersede the borough in owning and erecting the water-works. He has served two terms as councilman of the borough, and two terms as burgess. He is a Royal Arch Mason, a member of the I. O. O. F. K. of H. and Ioptasophs. In politics he is a republican.

John Nixon O'Neill. We seek to record in brief words the history of one who acted so well his part in the drama of life as to make that life a benediction to all who were fortunate enough to have personal knowledge of his nobility of character or felt the inspiring touch of his personality. Allegheny county is noted for marvelous activities, gigantic enterprises and boundless resources. Within its boundaries giants in the numerous industrial avocations struggle for the mastery; brains and skill crowd the arena of competition for the victor's crown. A young man, ill equipped by the fortunes of the luckily born, seeking for a place to commence the race of active life, might well shrink from such a contest. Not so, however, the subject of these lines. Master of stern material, with endowments and equipments not born of college or wealth, he accepted the challenge of these mighty forces, entered the arena of heroic toilers, and came out winner.

John Nixon O'Neill was born on Aug. 6, 1828, at Six-Mile Ferry, Allegheny county, Pa. His ancestry may be traced far back in the generations of the past. The traditional and historical records show that the O'Neill family not only sprang from the Emerald Isle, but that they descended from the illustrious family of that isle, their founder, the Earl of Tyrone, the brave Hugh O'Neill, ruling in Ireland in its palmiest days. The story of the active life of John N. O'Neill is well told in the "Pittsburgh Coal Exchange," of which he was the president, in the following appreciative words:

At the age of twelve years, cast upon his own resources, he began his business career as a miner of coal, which occupation he followed until the twenty-eighth year, when he adopted the business of piloting floating vessels from Pittsburgh to Louisville, Ky. In 1856 he formed a partnership with W. O'Neill, for the purpose of mining and shipping coal, which firm purchased the Enterprise Coal-works, opposite Elizabeth, Pa., and operated the same until 1888, when the present firm of O'Neill, constructed of the brothers J. N. and W. W. O'Neill, and S. F. and J. N. Large, was constituted.

The history of J. N. O'Neill is the history of the coal trade of the Monongahela valley. Filling the humble position of a miner in 1840, when the business was in its infancy, he grew with its growth and strength, and with his strength to the day when cut down by the inevitable hand of death. He stood a giant in a business which in some of its features has no parallel in the annals of commerce, the proud possessor of a name loved and honored from the Monongahela to the gulf. At the time of his death Mr. O'Neill was, and for some eighteen months prior thereto had been, the acting president of this exchange, and no man among its members was more worthy, by reason of his mental and physical devotion to the general interests of the trade, to stand at the head of an association devoted to its advancement. He at all times came to the support, with his talent, of his associates in any measure toward the furtherance of the general interests of the trade. Mr. O'Neill was twice married. His first wife was Blanche, daughter of Lewis Nixon, and married Aug. 19, 1852, by whom he had two children, one of whom is now living. His second wife, to whom he was married Oct. 25, 1860, and have born to them six children, five of whom are living. As a husband and father he was affectionate and tender, though not weakly indulgent; his home was a sanctuary where the cares and vexations of business were not permitted to cast their shadows. As to his personal characteristics, Mr. O'Neill was noted for his simple and unassuming manner, a remarkable modesty; he never vacillated or temporized, but followed the place he had chosen to the end. He was firm and consistent in the maintenance of his rights, but just and tolerant toward others. He never sought to attain an end or accomplish a purpose by indirect or crooked methods. He faced danger and difficulty without shrinking, and stood ready to do what he deemed his duty, and to be right at any risk of consequences to himself, adhering firmly to the post of duty, even though it was the post of danger. The friends he had tried, and the business methods he had proven, cling to with singular tenacity. In looking at what he achieved, it may be said he has left a monument of his industry and genius of which his friends may well be proud. He went down to the mansions of the dead, not from the standpoint of age, but from the standpoint of achievements when his faculties were unimpaired and the triumphs of his life fresh upon him.

Of like high testimony, more enduring than pillars of marble, were the personal letters of numerous associates in commercial and social circles. Mr. O'Neill at the time of his death was superintendent of the Elizabeth M. E. Sabbath-school, president of the Elizabeth school board, and an active worker in temperance societies, all of which organizations passed resolutions expressive of their warm appreciation of services rendered, and their profound sense of loss sustained by his death. He was a accomplished gentleman, honored and respected by all, his death occurring April 29, 1884, caused by being thrown from a buggy while out driving with one of his daughters.

William D. O'Neill, coal-dealer, Elizabeth, is a son of J. N. and Harrict R. (Stevenson) O'Neill, of Elizabeth, and was born in 1894 in that borough. He was educated at the public schools, the Western University, and a mercantile college in Pittsburgh. He has been in the office of O'Neill & Co., at Pittsburgh, for the past six years. He was married, in 1856, to Miss Martha, daughter of Thomas and the second of Elizabeth. Mr. and Mrs. O’Neil are members of the M. E. Church of Elizabeth.

E. M. Hukill. If “history is philosophy teaching by example,” then that branch of history which we call biography, which records the efforts and achievements of the individual, is the best teacher of the majority of young men who are mapping out their plans for the future. Our object in the present instance is to give the reader a picture of Mr. Hukill. This brief sketch is not to eulogize one who, less than fifty years of age, is still making history, and who would shrink from mere personal adulation, but rather to encourage that large class of young men who, in the midst of apparently untoward circumstances, are longing to build characters and achieve results which will honor the communities in which they live, and benefit their fellows.

Many of the best men of to-day—men richly endowed by nature and capable of grand achievements in almost any position—have never filled the chair of state, or occupied a seat in legislative halls. They have preferred less conspicuous but equally honorables positions. As scientists, or merchants, or manufacturers, or developers of the resources of the state, they have given evidence of both strength and grasp of intellect, and accomplished results of far greater benefit to the country at large than nineteen-twentieths of the men who have devoted their time to schemes for personal notoriety and the attainment of mere official position. One of the encouraging signs of the times is found in the fact that these real benefactors of their race are held in increasingly higher esteem, and are becoming more and more the models after which the most intelligent young men are seeking to pattern. With all the scramble for office and greed for gain that characterize too many to-day, there is a growing regard for those whose characters, acquirements and achievements would confer honor on official positions.

Mr. Hukill lacks a year of the time of celebrating his fiftieth birthday, and, owing to his active mental and physical life, both of which are essential to the greatest longevity, and his temperate habits, looks as though he had a fair lease of many years to come. He was born in New Castle county, Del., in 1849, and is one of a family of ten children, sons and daughters of Odeon E. and Susanna (McMurrary) Hukill. The first 10 years of his life was spent on the paternal homestead, a large farm, where pure air and daily exercise aided in building up a vigorous constitution.

At the early age of sixteen, owing to the death of his father in 1856, there devolved on him, in conjunction with his mother and the other members of the household, the duty of overseeing the farm and caring for his mother and the other members of the household. Notwithstanding all these cares he found time for study and improvement, and began to long for wider fields of effort and emolument than those afforded by the quiet life of a farmer. In 1874, eight years after the death of his father, he removed his mother and her family to the neighboring village of Odessa, and then started out into the world to carve fame and fortune for himself. Philadelphia, the largest city in the neighboring state of Pennsylvania, naturally attracted his attention, and thither he went in search of employment. Not content to remain idle, and without the means to embark in business for himself, he accepted a position with a merchant largely engaged in the commission business. But the routine character of his new-found occupation was no more compatible with his active temperament and his laudable ambition than was the farm life recently left behind. While faithfully meeting his daily duties he was on the alert for information which would open up a broader field and bring better financial results than were possible to one occupying a mere clerical position.

The existence of petroleum, or “rock oil,” was known for many years in Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia and other localities, but, as in the case of many other articles of great commercial value, its real worth was for a long time hidden from the eyes of men. The history of the methods of its production in large quantities, its utilization, the fortunes often made in an hour and as quickly lost, and the important place it holds in the home and foreign trade of the country, reads more like pages from Aladdin and his lamp than a sober record of actual facts. For a time it was sold in bottles as a medicine, but late in the 50’s Mr. Samuel M. Kier, of Pittsburgh, learned the art of refining it so that it could be used as an illuminant. About the same time Drake’s patience and perseverance in boring for it were rewarded with success, and the result was an interest and excitement unequalled in the history of Pennsylvania. The “find” was on Oil creek, in Venango county. Thousands of men in every pursuit and position in life, young men and old men as well, capitalists and laborers, were attracted to the new and wonderful El Dorado. Young Hukill saw his opportunity, and with faith in himself and his future, though possessed of scarcely more than enough money to pay his way thither, resigned his position and turned his face toward the western part of the state. Early in November, 1854, he found him in Venango county, the first without a claim in the oil business. His scant capital of seven and a half dollars allowed no time for delay, and he first found and accepted a position as a day-laborer, and later on as an attache of a surveyor's corps, but employing his spare time in the search of oil in the available ventures, so that within a month of his arrival in the new country he had established himself as a dealer in lumber and oil in a small way. He gradually but steadily increased his ventures, and soon became known as one of the largest and boldest operators in the region. From dealing to production was but a short step for a man possessing the nerve, energy, and the wind energy of Mr. Hukill; and, the transition completed, it was not long before he ranked as one of the most adventurous and successful producers of the entire region, which reputation he has always maintained, and does to-day in all his operations. The year 1869 marked an important epoch in his history. During that year he was married to Mattie E. Lyday, a native of Washington county, Md., but at the time of her marriage a resident of Jasper county, Iowa. Four children—Edwin M., Jr., Lyday May, Ralph Vincent and Grace Watkins—blessed their union, and still live to share the comforts and pleasures of a Christian home.

During 1870 and 1871 Mr. Hukill continued his producing operations, but in the latter year removed to Oil City, and, with J. B. Reynolds and S. H. Lamberton as partners, established the banking-house of Reynolds, Hukill & Co. Banking business, always more or less hazardous, was especially so at that time, owing to the downward tendency in the price of oil, the depression in all branches of business—and which finally culminated in the terrible panic of 1873—and the large risks so common among men in the oil business. To bank successfully required keen insight, prompt decision, a knowledge of men and a knowledge of "affairs in general" as well. Mr. Hukill's versatility made him equally at home in the role of a banker as in that of a farmer, a clerk, a day-laborer, or a producer of oil and general dealer, and he continued an active partner until 1876. Though successful as a banker, the duties and requirements of the position were of such a nature as to repress and hold in subjection his innate spirit of activity, and he accordingly abandoned banking for the more congenial and active life of a prospector for and producer of oil.

Five years more were spent in this way, 1877 and 1878 in the neighborhood of Oil City, and 1879, 1880 and 1881 in the Bradford field, which had attracted wide attention.

One of Mr. Hukill's marked characteristics is his keen perception of the "utilities" of everything with which he is brought into contact, and his independence in making investigations and marking out lines of action. While not rash, he is progressive. With him to determine is to act. Once convinced that a given course will bring good results to himself and others, he throws into it the arduous of his whole being, and spares neither time nor effort nor expense until a demonstration is reached on the one side or the other. And this remark suggests another field of inquiry in which Hukill has figuring very prominently. Natural gas had been found in larger or smaller amount in nearly every oil-field, and as a matter of curiosity or a necessary economy, owing to the decreasing price of oil, had been utilized as a fuel for pumping the wells, and, to a limited extent, for household purposes. Could it not be found in larger quantities and be made more extensively introduced? Was it not pre-eminently the fuel for the manufacture of iron, steel and glass? Mr. Hukill answered these questions to himself affirmatively, and with the conviction that all this was possible came schemes for its production and utilization on a large scale. As the solving of this problem has had so much to do with the industries in which natural gas is now used as a fuel, and has added so much to the wealth of Pittsburgh and other localities, Mr. Hukill's part in solving the problem can not well be omitted. This part of his history is so well told by another* that we incorporate it in this sketch.

Since the discovery of petroleum the oil-men had not failed to appreciate the value of natural gas as a fuel, and it was continually utilized by them in their developing and production of oil, as also for domestic and general use in the towns and sections of country where it was produced; but as gas-wells obtained contiguous to oil-wells and were subject to the same law of rapid decline and short life as the oil-wells, it deterred capital from any attempt to pipe it to larger markets. The Haymaker brothers, with the aid of others, after an arduous task drilling in search of oil at Murrysville, in Franklin township, Westmoreland county, obtained instead of oil, a monstrous gas-well, in November, 1878; this well was allowed to flow into the air and waste for years, until the public became impressed that that was peculiarly a gas district, and of permanence to warrant piping it a distance of eighteen miles to the great fuel mart of Pittsburgh; but it required the adventurous oil-man to carry the belief into execution. Mr. Hukill was among the first, in 1881, while sitting in the office of a friend in the city of Bradford perusing the report of the late geological survey of Pennsylvania, Mr. Hukill discovered a chart representing the center of a large number of the natural gas wells. Coupling the theory then slightly prevalent among oil-producers, that territory covering anticlines was more likely to produce gas than oil, with the fact that gas existed in immense quantities eighteen miles from Pittsburgh, the result was a faith in the possibility of finding gas nearer the city, and the conception of a scheme to prospect by drilling these anticlines with such purpose in view. Pursuant he, with others, made publication in December of that year of their intention to apply to the governor (Hoyt) on the twenty-first day of January, 1882, or as soon thereafter as the department would hear them, for a charter to engage in the business of supplying gas—either manufactured or natural—for fuel in the city of Pittsburgh, the first regularly legal publication for such a purpose made by anyone, a copy of which was sent to the department of state. But Mr. Hukill was surprised by an announcement in the Pittsburgh papers of the twenty-second of January that a charter had been granted the day previous to other parties for the purpose of supplying natural gas for fuel in the city of Pittsburgh; how a rival publication made the statement six months anterior could be modified and polished up to meet the requirements of the granting power has never been explained to Mr. Hukill, but remains the potent source of much speculation.

Evidently the move on the part of Mr. Hukill and his associates had aroused the dormant spirits of Pittsburgh, for notwithstanding the intense desire for natural-gas fuel and the immense waste from the Haymaker well, Pittsburgh capital could not be induced to add in bringing it in; and with the exception of a small pipeline laid in the valley by Spang in 1874, from the Saxonburg gas well, in Beaver county, to the Spang, Chanfont & Company Iron-works at Sharpsburg, the first well of consequence was the result of the campaign in Harrisburg and Washington in 1878, which resulted in the charter being granted January 21, and the charter found its level with similar grants subsequently obtained, for the doctrine thus held by some hundred thousand acres as the flexible right, the very right of the gas within the period of the charter, was exploded by the higher courts. The charter applied for by Mr. Hukill and his associates was obtained within reasonable time, but was never used by them, and expired by limitation, owing to the indisposition on the part of the associates to cooperate in carrying on the proposed scheme. Most of the year 1883 was consumed by Mr. Hukill in an attempt to introduce the "strong process" of manufacturing gas for fuel into the iron manufactories of Pittsburgh, on the proposition that the capital requisite for piping the gas from a distance would much more than build the Strong plants, locating them wherever needed and rendering the subject profitable. A well-laid-down plan, but the result of this year's labor was to discover that manufacturers were very loth to give up the use of coal and coke for the process laid down, and the matter was stated beyond a question. But their faith was easy in the economy and utility of natural gas, and he became convinced that the gas should ultimately prevail, but not when and where natural gas abounded. Hence the abandonment by him of further effort in that direction, and the turning of attention to development of natural gas. In the meantime, and by the end of the year 1882, others, to wit, Hew and Emerson, had entered this promising field, had drilled a gas well between Pittsburgh and Monongahela, and had laid a pipeline from the latter point to Pittsburgh, which they claimed was the first such undertaking in the United States; and this enterprise was carried on, the universal eager demand, and King Coal must seek another market.

---

* F. A. Layman.

In March, 1883, Mr. Hukill took up his abode in Pittsburgh, and through the services of Prof. John F. Carl, of the geological survey of the state, began the work of ascertaining for his own guidance the definite location of the anticlines on either side of the city. There is but little reason to doubt that this was the first enterprise conducted on the anticlinal theory, though such a search for gas on this principle had been made by different persons for years, and two following, and more stress was laid upon it then than in recent years. Owing to Mr. Hukill's reticence, however, the details of the work are little, yet what follows, will show that his action supported his belief. He located three test-wells, the first near the town of McConnellsport, approximately midway between the city and the Monongahela river, Allegheny county, west of the city; the second on the Wyanseburg anticlinal, east of the city, on the line of the Pennsylvania railroad at Carpenter (now Adarra) Station; the third on the same anticlinal about two miles north of No. 2 well. The first and second wells proved to be, instead of gas, large water-wells in the stratum that should have produced gas, owing to the rapid dip of the rock toward the south, which placed it below the water-level and into the water-well. The third well was far enough north to keep its stratum above the water-level and was a good gasser. This and other gas-wells drilled near it by him fixed the south limit of the gas-belt Mifflin's point. Mifflin himself, while he assumed the probable course of the gas-belt yet to be developed, sympathizing with the course of the gas-belt being north and south would not lease for the purpose, about ten miles north and thirty degrees east of north from the original Haymaker well, which was located in the anticlinal directly below the limit of said Murrysville belt, in length about fifteen miles, and at the time of this writing contains over two hundred-wells, supplying gas for Pittsburgh and adjoining towns.

Apropos, let us remark that as some may chance to read this who are unfamiliar with oil and gas phraseology, oil and gas are not confounded, but the oil is a hydrocarbon, and that which is used in boilers is gas. The fixed limit and dimensions of oil and gas districts they are found to lie in a northeast and southwest direction, varying from a north and south line, from twenty degrees to forty-seven degrees, and in the great majority of cases the length is several times the width, so that the term belt is usually applied to a producing district. In the vast outcrop of natural gas developments have proved it to be about fifteen miles in length and varying in width from perhaps two thousand feet to the gas-gas belt in the state of Pennsylvania, where the length is about thirty degrees east of north and west of south from a north and south line. The limits and bearings of the gas-belt are exactly ascertained by the use of many holes, the process being that by the use of the most accurate rig, the gas was brought to the surface, and the first prospectors—who are commonly called "wild-catters"—in any section taking up land and opening up a line of developments must assume a certain area, usually one mile. It is then they can be guided by the results of drilling.

As the subject of this sketch has figured prominently as a pioneer or "wild-catter," his mode of procedure has been to assume a bearing upon conclusions arrived at in various ways, survey an air line for a distance across the country, and lease land on either side of that line and follow with the drill. Several thousand acres of land thus acquired and tested by Mr. Hukill on the Murrysville belt, was leased in October, 1884, into the possession of the Carpenter Natural-Gas company, the organization of which company was at that time consummated under a charter granted January, 1884, to Mr. Hukill and associates. Mr. Hukill was the general manager, and its capital of $250,000 was a few months later increased to $500,000. This company in the field of the Pittsburgh and north, and thence to the Monogahela river field to the city of Pittsburgh, with a branch line running into McKeesport, on the Monongahela river. The enterprise, says Mr. Hukill, was started on Sept. 1, 1885, when it passed into the possession of George Westlinghouse, Jr., Robert Pitcairn et al., and Mr. Hukill retired from the company. The next enterprise which engaged the attention and services of Mr. Hukill exceeds, in many respects, anything in the history of petroleum developments, and is notorious as "Hukill's Great Ohio County scheme." In the month of August, 1885 he discovered that one of his subordinates in the Carpenter Natural-Gas company, Mr. J. F. Thompson, was a pioneer in the use of the "water well," or the wide field that had never given much return for the labor and money expended, and at this time had been abandoned by all operators. Sundry consultations about the inducements this now neglected field offered resulted in the forming of a trio of E. M. and George F. Hukill and W. H. Schaeckelson, and assigning Mr. Thompson the duty of taking up a considerable body of land there, and putting down one or more wells a little outside of former developments.

Accordingly, Mr. Thompson, within a month or two reported to his employers the successful completion of a good well. This well caused a ripple of excitement and brought him a number of subscribers to whom he sold the stock. Several wells were started, and Greene county was once more the point of attraction for two or three months; but by this time they were struck upon the theory of the belief that good wells were scarce in that delusive region, and they were reshipping their machinery to other and more promising fields, while Mr. Hukill had bought the interests of both his partners that they might escape the hazard of further venture. *Up to this time the only oil-producing rock in Greene county was known as the Dinkard sand, owing to the fact, doubtless, that the first discovery of this stratum was in a well drilled near Dunkard creek, a stream that flows through that valley and empties into the Monogahela river. This stratum lies about seven hundred feet below the surface, varies greatly in thickness and quality of sand, and is very liable to be a re-producer so much so that it does not justify operators in drilling it. After the stampede of operators in 1885, and Mr. Hukill was left to hoe the ground, he resolved upon doing all in his power, if possible, to ascertain what producing strata there might be below, and upon a wider range of development. Accordingly, he began the production of the rock, something like thirty degrees west of south, through Greene county, crossing the state line into West Virginia, across Monongahela county, thence across Marion county, and to the borders of Harrison county. He was there the first to drill a nominally forty-five miles, and leased land on either side of this line until forty or fifty thousand acres had been acquired. Development operations were prosecuted with great success, and two hundred feet, to prove what sand-rocks existed, their position, their character and which was the probable oil-sand. This was the work of something like two and a half years, and ordinarily a work of six months, an extremely difficult task, attended with unnumbered mishaps and delays, and aggregating a very heavy expenditure, all before there was any return in the way of production. But the net was finally secured, and was permitted to taste the sweets of the kernel, finding the oil in a lower stratum. A victory had now been achieved, so all the difficult work with the strata of sand-rock there are, and which one produces oil. And this, the most extensive individual enterprise in the line of production, bids fair to be a rather prolific one. The perseverance and tenacity of purpose displayed in this scheme of prospectingastonishes the boldest operator, for the faith that has prompted this undertaking and devoting effort has received no sympathy or encouragement whenever during the tedious ordeal, from either the scientific or practical observer. The latest enterprise undertaken by Mr. Hukill has proven equally successful and profitable with his previous undertakings. Early in the year 1869 Mr. Hukill secured a natural gas well on Forty-fourth Street, Natrona, highest point of the town, and undertook the gas and water enterprise, including the manufacture of chemical and acid works—thus a prosperous and growing institution, yielding large dividends to its stockholders.

Though the limits allowed to this sketch will not permit fuller detail, the sketch itself would be incomplete without at least a brief reference to those high moral traits which have marked Mr. Hukill's personal life, his home, and all his business transactions with his fellow-men. Carrying with him through all the years of his life, and in all his dealings with others, the wholesome lessons instilled in his childhood, his record has been indicative of the Pennsylvania Salt-Manufacturing company—chemical and acid works—and the Pine Run Gas company is now a prosperous and growing institution, yielding large dividends to its stockholders.

They are never hidden away to secure some end, or for some time-serving purpose. These deep religious principles, supplemented by a strong will, great physical vitality, thorough system and marked punctuality in meeting all engagements, account for the success that has crowned his efforts in all his undertakings. Apropos, we may add that while Mr. Hukill is an adept in originating broad plans, and has the ability to execute rapidly, he has a dislike for the small economies of everyday life. To use his own words—"they seem to dwarf every element of his nature." All benevolent objects, and all the interests of the M. E. Church, of which for many years he has been an honored member, lie near his heart, and the open hand which has so often laid large offerings upon the altar, testifies that the interest of the Master's kingdom lie not only near to his heart but deep down in its very core.—J. C. Pershing.

ABRAHAM PATTISON (deceased) was born in Ireland in 1809, a son of David and Mary Patterson, and came with his parents to America in 1829. They settled in Mercer county, Pa., but in 1829 came to Allegheny county, where they afterward resided. Abraham Patterson was married Nov. 21, 1837, to Elizabeth Y., daughter of Alexander and Elizabeth Young, of Allegheny county (she was a native of Scotland), and to them were born thirteen children, eight now living: Alexander P., David L., Elizabeth (wife of John G. Stephenson), Agnes M. (wife of A. McClure), Isaac N., Thomas H., Lillian and Frank P. Mr. Patterson was a contractor and builder; he and his brother Isaac, under firm name of I. & A. Patterson, were for many years among the most prominent contractors and builders in Allegheny county. Abraham Patterson died July 14, 1865, aged fifty-seven years. He was a member of the U. P. Church, and was highly esteemed by all who knew him, a man of prominent and useful character, and in excellent health, at the advanced age of seventy-two years. Their son, Alexander P., was married Dec. 20, 1870, to Isabel Clark, of Fremont, Ohio, and they had one child, a daughter, who died at the age of eleven years. David L. Patterson was married Sept. 26, 1866, to Dunnie, daughter of Samuel and Sophia (Stevens) Dunn, and they have had seven children: Samuel D. (deceased), Alexander A., Mary S., David L., Edna E., Agnes and Stewart Y.

ALEXANDER KING STEVENSON, lawyer, was born March 14, 1847, in Pittsburgh. He was reared a jeweler, and was educated in the public schools of his native city, and at the Western University. At the age of twenty-eight he commenced the study of law in the office of John Barton, Pittsburgh, and on the completion of his studies he became his partner, continuing until Mr. Barton's death, in February, 1888. He is now in practice alone. Mr. Stevenson was married, in 1869, to Ada A., daughter of John Barton, and they have two children, Rebie and John Barton Stevenson.
CAPT. WILLIAM DUNSHARE, retired coal-dealer, McKeesport, was born near Pittsburgh, August 22, 1820, a son of Andrew T. and Margaret (Short) Dunshare. His paternal grandfather, William Dunshare, a native of County Down, Ireland, was a pioneer farmer of Allegheny county, where he resided many years. His children were William, Andrew T. and Jane. Of these Andrew T. was a coal-merchant and contractor, and resided in Millin township, Allegheny county, for many years. His children were William, Margaret, Joseph, Sarah J., Susan, Benjamin and Joan. Our subject removed with his parents to Millin township in 1838, and in 1850 located in McKeesport, where he has since resided. In 1842 he succeeded his father in the coal business, in which he was interested up to 1874, when he retired. He operated the first incline on which flanged wheels were used, and in 1856 built the first marine-was on the Monongahela river. He was quick to catch the steamboat idea, and was interested in the building of several steamers. Just before the war he built the twins V. F. and Ronu, born ten years earlier were employed by the government to bring the navy out of the Mississippi river, were used as dispatch-boats, and afterward as supply-boats, by the United States. In 1848 Capt. Dunshare married Mary A., daughter of Benjamin Adams, of Pittsburgh, and had seven children: William A., Margaret L., Johnson F., Louise K., Virginia V., Marshall P. and Edith. Capt. Dunshare is a prominent citizen. In politics he is a republican.

JOHN SPENCER, architect, postoffice Verona, was born on the River St. Lawrence July 8, 1843, and was reared on a farm near Toronto, Upper Canada. His grandfather, John Spencer, emigrated from the Scotch Highlands to Ireland, where his parents, John and Ellen (Glendon) Spencer, were born. His father and mother were our subject, emigrated to the United States in the summer of 1835, where he worked through Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island, for seven years and seven months, going back to Ireland in the fall of 1843, where he married Ellen Glendon, and then returned the spring after and settled on a farm near Toronto, Ontario, where he still resides. Our subject received a limited education, and went to learn the carpenter's trade of house-building and framing when he was seventeen. Remaining only a short time at the trade, and wishing to better himself, he spent two years rambling through a portion of Canada and three or four of our western states, working at whatever came in his way, landing in Pittsburgh in the fall of 1863. Here he finished his trade, and then followed house-building in Pittsburgh, Allegheny City, Birmingham and the suburbs until 1869, when he became a resident in the vicinity of Verona, and erected buildings by contract in and about the borough for eleven years. In 1890 he was employed as engine-carpenter, and the following year became cab-builder in the Allegheny Valley shops. In March, 1887, he lost his thumb and the forefinger of his left hand on a circular-saw. He is now an engine-carpenter, and gives his leisure time to the planning and superintending of buildings. He purchased ground and erected his present residence on First avenue in 1873, where he still resides. Mr. Spencer is now serving his fourth year as First Ward principal assessor. He is also one of the board of directors of the Verona Building & Loan association. He is a republican, and a member of the Roman Catholic Church. In 1869 he married Caroline Augusta Schumacher, born in Pittsburgh in 1851. Her parents, William August and Julia Caroline (Fees) Schumacher, were of German birth. Following are the names of the living children of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer: Celila Eleanor, Ellen Loretta, Elizabeth Augusta, Mary Marce- deus and John Glendon. Caroline and Magbie B. died in infancy.

James Sharp (deceased) was born in Franklin county, Pa., in 1784, of Scotch-Irish descent, the youngest of the three children born to Rev. Jno. Sharp and Eliza Sharp. As early as 1794, or when James was but ten years old, he left home in Franklin county, and came to Pittsburgh, where for many years he lived with his half-sister, Mrs. Hancock. In 1826 he purchased nearly a thousand acres of land, in two tracts, on the Allegheny river, originally the property of Gen. Wilkes. Not until the building of a canal through this tract of land did Mr. Sharp conceive the idea of building a town, for the land was valuable, part being a beautiful sugar-camp and the balance well adapted to farming. With an enterprising spirit, however, he commenced to build the town which is now honored by his name. He was liberal, and the ground-space on which nearly all the churches and schools in the town were erected. The building of the town was a life work, and the poor of Allegheny county are not too. great is his generosity. He built and paid for the first two schools erected in the borough, and paid the salaries of the teachers. He married Isabella L. Stockman, a kind and noble lady of great energy and perseverance, a daughter of Nathan Stockman and granddaughter of Rev. John Roan, a very prominent minister of Harrisburg, Pa. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Sharp, of whom only Mrs. Eliza Lindsay Clark now remains. These children were named as follows: James S., who died at Cannonsburg, Pa., the bright particular star of the family; Mary Roan (Mrs. Lloyd), Annie (who died in infancy), Jane B., John Roan Stockman, a promising young man of high character and intellect, who died in his twenty-second year, at Cannonsburg, Pa., while in his junior year at Jefferson College, and of whom Prof. Orr said, "To a clear and vigorous intellect he united a fine imagination and elegant taste." and Mrs. Clerk. The last mentioned, an intelligent and refined lady, resides at the homestead, and looks with pride on the old home and the great achievements of her kind and noble father. Mr. Sharp died in 1861, and his widow in 1873, aged seventy-five years. The family are all members of the Presbyterian Church.

Ezra P. Younks, Sewickley, is a great-grandson of Samuel C. and Dorcas Clarke, of Clarkesville, Greene county, Pa. Samuel C., the grandson of Samuel Clarke, came to Shousetown when a lad, and was apprenticed to old Peter Shouse to learn the boat-builder’s trade, soon earning a wide reputation as an excellent mechanic. He built the following boats: Clipper No. 2, Rescue. Advance, Reliance, Sam Young, Challenge, Denmark, Hawkeye State, Keiton, etc. He built many light boats for the southern trade. Later in life he went to West Virginia and drilled for oil.

He died November 13, 1861, aged forty-six years. He took an active interest in church work, and helped to build the Union church at Shousetown. He married Margaret C. Anderson, daughter of Squire Robert Anderson, an old settler of Sewickley valley, who survives him. Of their children, Ezra P. was born in Shousetown, and educated in a private school and at the university at Pittsburgh. At an early age he was assistant teller in the Citizens’ National bank of Pittsburgh, then styled Citizens’ bank, after which he followed the river for seven years as clerk, and in the last year of the civil war was in the United States government employ, on the steamer John S. Hall, on the Tennessee and Cumberland rivers. Afterward he was clerk on the steamer R. C. Gray. From 1869 to 1877 he was cashier of the People’s Savings bank of Allegheny. Then was cashier and general manager of the Pittsburgh exposition till 1883, when the exposition buildings burned. Since then he has had charge of three large “Thomas concerts,” and helped to establish the Ohio Valley Gas company, of which he is now treasurer, and has been secretary and general manager. He is also interested in the coal and steamboat business in Pittsburgh. Since 1860 he has resided in Edgeworth, Leet township, near Sewickley, where he has considerable land, and has done much to further the interest and beauty of that town by building houses.

William M. Brinker, merchant, Wilkinsburg, was born in Limestone township, Clarion county, Pa., June 17, 1843. His grandfather, John Brinker, was one of the earliest settlers of Clarion county, and a very extensive farmer, coming from the eastern part of the state; he died since the civil war. His son Jacob married Sarah Mohney, and settled on a farm in Limestone township, Clarion county, where his son William was reared. During the civil war, and while his son William was in the service, he bought the Mohney homestead, in Red Bank township, where he now resides. William M. attended the common schools and Rimersburg Collegiate Institute. August 29, 1861, he enlisted in Company C, Seventy-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and for nearly two years was private orderly to Gen. Negley. He served all through the term of that regiment in the Army of the Cumberland, and participated in every battle and march. After leaving the army he took a course at Iron City Commercial College, and went into business in Armstrong county. In 1877 he came to Pittsburgh and took charge of the business interests of the State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, in Western Pennsylvania. This he continued several years, and the connection is not yet wholly severed. For some time he was engaged in the wholesale grocery trade in Pittsburgh, but removed to Wilkinsburg in 1883, erected the three-story brick building which he occupies, doing a large wholesale and retail business, and he is now building a handsome residence adjoining. He also has a large interest in the milling business of Messrs. Brinker & Sloan, Millville, Clarion county, Pa.; also owns part of the Mohney homestead. Is one of the original charter members of the Penn Water company, and was one of the five men in the incorporation of the borough and the improvement and progress of the town. Mr. Brinker was reared in the Reformed Church; politically he is a democrat. In March, 1873, he wedded Mary Scott, who was born in Clearfield county, a daughter of John and Sarah (Draucker) Scott, of Scotch and German descent. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Brinker, Luke Blanche, Sarah Labelle, William Earle and Elizabeth.

W. S. Abbott, editor and proprietor of the McKeesport Times, was born on Third avenue, McKeesport, just east of Market street, in 1855. His parents, John C. and Jane (Thomas) Abbott, settled in that city in 1853. His father was a member of the firm of Patton & Abbott, who kept the largest general store in the county at that time. At the age of fifteen W. S. entered the office of the McKeesport Paragon to learn the printing business, and on the completion of his trade went to Pittsburgh, expecting to follow printing, but secured a position in the Pittsburgh branch of R. G. Dun & Co.’s mercantile agency, in whose employ he remained fourteen years. He opened a branch of that establishment in Wheeling, W. Va., April 1, 1886, and remained there until July 1, 1887. His penchant for newspaper-work led him to keep up a newspaper connection all these years, which schooled his natural inclinations, and in July, 1887, he deserted the agency for the journalistic field, having purchased the plant and good-will of the McKeesport Times. Since his advent that paper has made wonderful progress, and today it stands at the head of McKeesport journalism. It is the official paper of McKeesport and the borough of Reynoldston, and under Mr. Abbott’s management is constantly growing in influence and circulation. The job-printing annex of the Times, also owned by Mr. Abbott, has a national reputation for its extra fine work, ranking with the very best offices in the largest cities of the United States. The Times building is an imposing three-story pressed-brick edifice, Nos. 622 and 624 Walnut street, and the plant is the most extensive and perfect in the county outside of Pittsburgh.

Mr. Abbott is well and favorably known in the community, publishes a clean, bright, local newspaper, is alive to the best interests of the city, possesses the confidence of the business public to a remarkable degree, and is recognized as one of the live, pushing and enterprising young men of the city. He has filled the offices of president of the McKeesport Press Club and second vice-president of the Mendelsohn Club, and is one of the charter members of the original McKeesport Library; is an A. F. & A. M., and politically is an uncompromising staiitist republican.

JAMES L. DEVENNY, editor and proprietor of the McKeesport Daily News, is a native of Washington county, Pa. At the age of eight he came to McKeesport, and was educated in the high-school of that city, from which he graduated in 1876 with the medal of his class. The succeeding eight years he was resident of Pittsburgh store, but in 1884 he returned to McKeesport, and became local editor of the News, a position which he creditably filled until 1886. He then purchased the newspaper-plant from Dravo Brothers, becoming its editor and proprietor, since when the News, under his management, has had a wonderful increase in circulation and patronage. Mr. Devenny, though but twenty-two years old, and probably the youngest editor in the state, has proved his ability to conduct a first-class newspaper, and has made the News one of the brightest and newesiest dailies in Western Pennsylvania.

FRANKLIN OSBURN, retired, Sewickley, is a native of Loudoun county, Va. The Osburn family are descended from an old English family, who came to America long before the rebellion was afoot, and probably the earliest ancestor of the Virginia branch, John and Nicholas Osburn, emigrated from Chester county, Pa., about 1730, and settled in the Shenandoah valley, Va., in the present county of Clarke, but were driven across the Blue Ridge in 1756, by the French and Indians, locating at the foot of the mountain on the east side. Here and in the adjacent country the name has been continuous since, and has been honorably known in the legislative halls of the state and in state conventions, notably that which passed the ordinance of secession on the 17th day of April, 1861. It is proper to note that the member from Jefferson county resisted the secession movement throughout. Richard Osburn, the grandfather of our subject, and the latter’s parents, were born in Loudoun county, Va. Franklin Osburn was educated in his native state, and early engaged in teaching; was then in mercantile line; then in lumber business in Allegheny, and also in farming in the Shenandoah valley, in Virginia, the latter twenty years, and in cotton-manufacturing in Steubenville, Ohio, three years. He married Henrietta W., a daughter of Griswald E. Warner, a citizen of this county, better known as Judge Warner. Ten children have blessed this union, eight of whom are now living: James W., Frank C., Jennie M. Olmsted, Mary E., Harry G., Robert D., William W. and Chara Louise W. Politically Mr. Osburn was a whig before the reconstruction policy of the dominant party after the war became known. Has since been an independent democrat. The adjoining borough of Osborn was named after our subject.

JOHN WAY, JR., superintendent of Se-wickeley Academy. His grandfather, John Way, came to Allegheny county in 1797, from Chester county, this state, where his parents and grandparents had lived and were farmers, to occupy a tract of land purblished by his father, Caleb Way, from the state in 1785. This tract is called in the patent “Way’s Desire,” and contained two hundred acres. He built and occupied a log house on the bank of the Ohio river, and aftward, in 1810, a brick house on the Pittsburgh and Beaver road. This brick house was, for many years, the only dwelling that still stands, and is in good condition. John Way was a surveyor and agent for several eastern land-owners. He was the first justice of the peace in Allegheny county, west of Pittsburgh, holding the office for some twenty years, until his death, in 1825, in his fifty-ninth year. He had a wife, Mary Clark, and four children: Abishai, Rebekah, Nicholas and James.

Abishai Way was born in Chester county, received a business education in Philadelphia, and became a wholesale and retail merchant in Pittsburgh. He was for years agent for the Harmony society at Economy, Pa., handling large quantities of wool and other produce for that community. He was a prominent and highly respected citizen, closely identified with many public measures and improvements that marked the early history of Pittsburgh. He died in 1837, aged forty-four, leaving a wife, Mary Anderson, who died in 1881, and several children, of whom three are now living: Mary, Anne and John. On Abishai’s death his family removed to the Way farm in Sewickley valley, where they have since remained. John Way, Jr., was educated at Sewickley Academy, and engaged in managing the farm and in various business enterprises till 1877, when he reorganized the Sewickley Academy, built a large and handsome house for its use on his own property, and by years of persistent effort and self-denial, and large pecuniary outlay, made it one of the best academic institutions in the state. He has been promiinent in other movements that have advanced the welfare of the community, notably the passage of a special legislative enactment assuring this and adjacent townships a prohibitory liquor law, and another doing away with the running at large of cattle upon the public roads. His interest in public education is attested by nineteen years’ service on the township school board. He has been for Some forty years connected with the Sewickley Presbyterian Church, doing much for its interest and advancement, it being largely due to his exertions that its handsome stone edifice was secured. He was for some years a trustee of this church, and is now and has been for some twenty years an elder in it. He has been several times re-elected justice of the peace in Westmoreland township. He has a wife, Catherine Wilson, and three sons: William, Frederick and John.

Barrie L. Calhoun, M. D., Verona, is a grandson of William Calhoun, who was born in Lancaster county, Pa. The father of William Calhoun was a soldier in the revolutionary army, and lived for many years with a silver plate in his skull, where he was injured in battle during that war. The family is of Irish descent. James, son of William Calhoun, married Nancy, daughter of John Robinson, of Scotch descent, an early resident of Indiana county. James Calhoun was born August 16, 1801, and still resides on his farm in Indiana county. For over fifty years he has been an elder in the United Presbyterian Church, and one of his sons, J. Smith, now fills the same position. He was one of the original whigs, and has been a republican since the organization of that party. Nancy Calhoun died in 1890, aged seventy-one. B. L. Calhoun is her seventh and youngest son, and was born April 21, 1844. He was reared on his native farm and received an academic education. After attending a course of medical lectures in Cleveland, he graduated in 1876 from the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery. On account of weakness of the eyes he has not been able to practice all of the time. He practiced for some time at Sharpsburg and Unity, and about seven years at Parnassus, where he established a drug-store. He opened a similar store at Verona in 1886, and employs a competent druggist, giving his attention chiefly to his patients. He is an active member of the United Presbyterian Church, and a republican in politics. In 1860 Dr. Calhoun was united in marriage to Mary N. McClain, born in Westmoreland county, daughter of David and Rebecca (Anderson) McClain, of Scotch descent. Of their children the following five are living: Amelia Fanny, William Magee, Mary Lillian, Jessic Rebecca and Nellie Elnora. Harvey Johnson and Robert Bruce died in infancy.

Dr. S. W. Dinsmore, physician and surgeon, Sharpsburg, was born in Armstrong county, Pa., in 1850, a son of Robert and Mary Reed (Johnson) Dinsmore, the former a prominent merchant. Our subject received an academic education at Reed's Institute, Clarion county, Pa., and the University of Lewisburg. He commenced the study of medicine in 1872, and after graduating practiced one year in Camden, N. J., but since 1877 has resided in Sharpsburg. He graduated at the Homeopathic College, Philadelphia, in 1876, and holds a diploma from the General hospital of Vienna, Austria, where he was a student three months; also a paper showing his ability in the treatment of diseases of the nose and throat. He married, in 1878, Emma, daughter of W. Lewis, who was a prominent citizen of Sharpsburg, and two children have been born to this union: Winfield C. and Marion H. Dr. Dinsmore is a Mason, a member of the Baptist Church, and politically a republican.

George Lucky Lee, real-estate dealer, postoffice Hulton, a son of Caleb and Margaret (Skelton) Lee, was born in Pittsburgh in June, 1837. He is the youngest living son, and received his early education while attending the Pittsburgh schools until fifteen years of age. After marriage, however, he continued to study privately, and completed a collegiate course. His father bought a large farm at the time George L. was born, and when the latter was fifteen years old he began work thereon, and afterward became manager of the farm. He held the plow upon this farm until he was thirty-five years of age. After his father's death he left the large farm, which was divided up among the heirs, but he continued to work his own farm four years longer. In 1884 he engaged in the real-estate business in Pittsburgh, under the firm name of Alexander & Lee, which has become one of the leading firms of the city. Mr. Lee enlisted in July, 1863, in Company E, First Battalion Pennsylvania Cavalry, served as second sergeant, and did scouting duty on the Cumberland boundary most of the time, and was mustered out December 28, 1865. He was in delicate health at the time of enlistment, but in six months was in perfect condition. He was the first Justice of Verona, and served five years; was first assessor and second clerk of the council, serving in that capacity seven years.

He married, in 1858, Rebecca G. McClung, daughter of Rev. S. M. McClung, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Plum township, where Mrs. Lee was born in 1838. Her father died in August, 1869, and her mother, Nancy C. Gilchrist, December 5, 1878. Ten children have been born to our subject and Mrs. Lee, as follows: Ida (Mrs. Dr. J. M. Hamilton); Caleb C., a graduate of Pittsburgh High-school of the class of 1879, studied law in the office of Robb & McClung, of Pittsburgh, and was admitted to the bar in January, 1885; Elizabeth R., at home; Samuel McC., telegraph-operator and clerk at the Luty Furnace; Anna, a teacher in the Verona schools; Cora, Alfred McC.; Nancy M., Margaret S. and Rebecca McC. The family are all members of the Presbyterian Church of Verona, where Mr. Lee has been ruling elder for many years. He is a member of the G. A. R., and politically a republican.

Thomas Tilbrook, real-estate auctioneer, McKeesport, was born in Allegheny county, June 9, 1839. He was educated in the schools of Westmoreland county, and spent his boyhood on the farm. Arriving at the years of maturity, he became a stock-dealer, in which business he came into that knowledge of the world which has since made him so effective in whatever he undertook. August 9, 1802, he enlisted in Company H, One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and served until the close of his term of enlistment as sergeant, participating in the battle of Fredericksburg, in the five-day battle at Chancellorsville, and in other contests. In 1864 he first came to McKeesport, and his occupation since that time has for the most part been that of a real-estate auctioneer. May 1, 1881, he was elected alderman, in which office he served the people with satisfaction until May 1, 1886. In 1883 he was elected chief magistrate of McKeesport, and was re-elected in 1884, serving the people two successive terms with honor, and refusing to be a candidate for the third term. Mr. Tilbrook has always been interested in questions of public import, and naturally political questions attracted his attention. Believing from the first that the principles of the republican party are fundamental to a republican form of government, he cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln for president, and during his life he has been consistently and ardently republican.

Robert Patterson, of the Presbyterian Banner, Pittsburgh, was born in Pittsburgh, October 17, 1851. His grandfather, Joseph Patterson, was born in Ireland, March 30, 1759; was married there to Jane Moak, March 27, 1773. They emigrated to America, arriving at Philadelphia early in 1773, and settled in Saratoga county, N. Y., where their son Robert was born April 1, 1773. Returning to Philadelphia, Mr. Patterson taught school near Germantown; was present at the first public reading of the Declaration of Independence, at the door of the Statehouse where he dismissed his school and served as a private soldier during the campaigns of 1776-77, part of the time under Lafayette, who, upon visiting Pittsburgh in 1825, recognized his old companion in arms. In 1777 he removed to York county, Pa., resuming the occupation of a teacher; in 1779 removed to Washington county and engaged in teaching and farming; in 1785 commenced a course of studies for the ministry under the direction of Rev. Joseph Smith; was licensed August 12, 1788; ordained and installed pastor of Racoon and Montour's Run churches November 10, 1789; in 1816 he resigned his pastoral charge on account of infirm health, and removed to Pittsburgh, where he continued to preach his opportunity off ered and strength permitted, laboring also as a Bible and tract distributor until his death, February 4, 1839.

Robert Patterson, Sr., son of the above, was born not far from where the battles of Stillwater were fought four years later. He entered the Cannonsburg Academy at its commencement in 1799, reciting the first lesson under the shade of some trees, no building having yet been obtained. In 1794 he entered the junior class of the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, where his uncle, Robert Patterson, was the professor of mathematics. He graduated there in 1796, and remained as a tutor four years longer, at the same time studying theology. He was licensed in 1801, and August 27, 1801, was married to Jane Canon, daughter of Col. John Canon, the founder of Cannonsburg. Mr. Patterson was pastor of two churches near Erie, Pa., for six years; in 1807 removed to Pittsburgh, and took charge of the Pittsburgh Academy (now the Western University of Pennsylvania) until 1810. From that date until 1806 he was engaged in bookselling, and part of the time in publishing and in the manufacture of paper. He also supplied the pulpit of Hilland Church, seven miles north of Pittsburgh, from 1807 to 1833. In 1840 he removed to the country, about three miles south of Pittsburgh, where he died September 5, 1854. Mrs. Patterson died in 1856.

Robert Patterson, son of the above, graduated at Allegheny College, Pennsylvania, in September, 1840; read law for three years in the office of Hon. Thomas H. Baird; was admitted to the bar of Allegheny county in October, 1843; practiced with Judge Baird until 1845; was engaged in teaching in different academies until August, 1850, when he was elected to the professorship of mathematics in Jefferson College, Pennsylvania, from which he was chosen to the same chair in Oakland College, Mississippi, in November, 1854; from this to the same chair in Centre College, Danville, Ky., in 1858, which last position he left in 1864 to become associated with Rev. Dr. James Allison in conducting the Presbyterian Banner. He was married, August 27, 1851, to Eliza, daughter of Hon. T. H. Baird. They have one son, Thomas, a member of the Pittsburgh bar, and two daughters, Jane and Elizabeth.

James S. Kuhn, cashier First National bank, McKeesport, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., October 3, 1853, a son of Dr. John S. and Mary E. (Speer) Kuhn. His paternal grandfather, Adam Kuhn, a native of Eastern Pennsylvania, was a pioneer of Versailles township, Allegheny county, where he built a flour mill, and carried on the business of a miller and a farmer. The first coal ever run on the Youghiogheny river was said to have been mined on his farm. The maternal grandfather of James S. was Dr. James R. Speer, the well-known oculist of Pittsburgh. Dr. John S. Kuhn was a prominent physician of his day, for many years practiced his profession in McKeesport and Pittsburgh, and was one of the pioneer coal operators on the Youghiogheny river. The subject of this sketch was reared in Pittsburgh and McKeesport, and educated in the public schools. At the age of fifteen he was employed in the First National bank of Pittsburgh, where he remained for seven years, and has now passed twenty-one years in the banking business. In 1874 he came to McKeesport, and for the past fourteen years has been in the service of the First National bank of this city in various capacities, his present position being that of cashier, to which he was appointed in 1884. His experience has enabled him to recognize and seize upon every circumstance that might contribute to the advancement of the interests in his charge, and the First National has now very few superiors in Western Pennsylvania, and much of its success can be attributed to the energetic efforts of Mr.
Kuhn. He has been a director of the bank five years, is secretary and treasurer of the American Water-works company, of McKeesport an organization with a paid-up capital of half a million dollars. He is president of the Russell Manufacturing company, and was one of the projectors of the Younghgheny bridge, of which he is half-owner, and is secretary and treasurer of the company.
He is vice-president of the New Enterprise Building & Loan association, and for several years has been city treasurer.
He has the reputation of being a successful and wide-awake business man. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church; politically a republican.
Mr. Kuhn married, in 1880, Ella, daughter of James and Eliza (Berry) O'Neil, of this city.

THOMAS A. MILLAR, broker, McKeesport, was born in Baltimore, M'd., February 5, 1832, son of Alexander and Amelia L. (Coal-Millar. His paternal grandfather, Alexander Millar, a native of Ireland, settled in Philadelphia at an early day, and was a son of Alexander Millar, whose father came from the Netherlands to Ireland with the Prince of Ormouge. On his maternal side Mr. Millar is of Scotch descent. His parents settled in Pittsburgh in 1849, where for a time his father was engaged as clerk for Robert Galloway, a grocerman, and later for Robinson & Minis; he was for ten years alderman in that city. In 1848 he came to McKeesport, and engaged in the coal business, and was one of the largest coal-operators in the city until the outbreak of the war. He served two terms in the Pennsylvania legislature, and was a director of the first railroad built in McKeesport, now the Baltimore & Ohio.
He was father of five children: Alexander, William J., Samuel A., Thomas A., and Alfred B., who died in infancy. Our subject was reared and educated in Pittsburgh, settled in McKeesport in 1843, and embarked in the coal business, with which he was connected ten years, and twelve years afterward was engaged in stock-farming in Missouri, since when he has resided at McKeesport, and for two years has followed his present business. Mr. Millar married, in 1859, Olie F., daughter of Hiram B. and Sarah J. (Cunningham) Sinclair, of McKeesport, and by her has six children: Harry S., (Virgiliu M. (Mrs. N. G. Russow), Sarah J.
Mrs. S. G. Miller, Anna M., Charles A. and Alfred B. Mr. Millar has held many local offices in the borough; in politics he is a democrat.

REV. CHARLES W. SMITH, A. M., D. D., Wilkinsburg, is a native of Fayette county, Pa., born Jan. 33, 1810. His father, Rev. Wesley Smith, was for fifty-five years a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Eastern Ohio, and a resident of Allegheny county for twenty-six years, until his death, which occurred at Sharpsburg the last of October, 1888. Dr. Smith spent his youth in school until he approached the years of manhood, when he went into business for one year.
In October, 1858, he received license to preach.
and the following April (1859) he was admitted into the Pittsburgh conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His first appointment was to Centerville, Somerset county, Pa., and his second to Carmichael's, Greene County, Pa. He served, subsequently, three churches in Fayette county: Bridgeport, Connellsville and Uniontown. All the remainder of his ministerial life has been spent in Pittsburgh and Allegheny City, except one term in Canton, Ohio, and one in McKeesport, Allegheny county. In these cities he served Carson Street, Arch Street and Smithfield Street churches, and four years as presiding elder of the Pittsburgh district. During his service in the district a great work was accomplished, through an organization called the Pittsburgh Church Union, in freeing certain churches from old and troublesome debts.
The union was organized for this purpose, and, through the encouragement and assistance it gave, five churches were relieved and Methodism thus practically freed from debt in the entire city. When but thirty-six years of age he was elected a delegate to the general conference (1870), an unusual honor for one so young. Four years later he was the first reserve delegate, and in 1884 was elected a delegate again. During this conference he was elected editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, and entered upon the duties of that office the 1st of June in that year. In 1888 he was again elected a delegate to the general conference, and by that body was re-elected editor of the Advocate. He received the degree of Master of Arts from Alleghany College in 1871, and that of Doctor of Divinity from Scio College, in 1880. The doctor has spent a very busy life in the ministry. Since he was appointed to the pastorate of the Arch Street Church, in 1870, his charges have been large and responsible, requiring both hard labor and great skill. But he has met the requirements in every case, and by fidelity in one station has won promotion to another.
In 1855 he was united in marriage with Miss Carrie L., daughter of Dr. Lutellus Lindsey, of Connellsville, Pa., and they have three children, the eldest, Charles Lindsey, being a minister, just admitted to the Pittsburgh conference; the others are Edna Miller and Lutellus Wesley.

WILLIAM W. ARSON GRIER, manufacturer, postoffice Hutton, the only living child of John Feenuel and Isabella (Watson) Grier, was born in Pittsburgh in 1834. His grandfather, David Grier, of Irish descent, very early secured a tract of six hundred acres in what is the Second ward of Verona, lying on the Monongahela river. He died in 1856, and on the day of his death destroyed his will, leaving one-sixteenth of his estate to our subject. He had been twice married; his first wife left ten children and his second six. John F., the eldest son, born in Pittsburgh, engaged in the manufacture of engines where the Monongahela House now stands, and afterward changed his product to hollowware, but lost everything by the sudden closing of the United States Bank. He borrowed eight hundred dollars of an uncle, with which he built a canal-boat and engaged in transportation on the Allegheny and Kiskiminetas rivers. In the spring of 1855, being then twenty-six years old, he was drowned at Blairsville dam by a freshet, leaving his widow and infant son with a debt and no resources. William Watson, father of Isabella Grier, was born in Scotland in 1777, and died in Pittsburgh at the age of fifty. He kept a stoneyard on Water street, and engaged in mason-building.

W. W. Grier attended the Second Ward school and a private school taught by Dr. Holmes, of Pittsburgh, and Joseph S. Travelli's academy at Sewickley. On reaching manhood he engaged in farming on his patrimony at Verona. Having a mechanical turn of mind, he made improvements on a buggy spring known as the "Dexter." and began its manufacture in 1875. The Dexter Spring-works, of which Mr. Grier is sole owner, is a successful institution, employing many people. He was one of the first refiners of petroleum oil, engaging, with partners, near Verona. During the war he sunk an oil-well in West Virginia, which proved to be a bounteous one, but his machinery and other property were destroyed by rebel raiders, and he sold out at a great sacrifice. Notwithstanding this and other misfortunes, he persevered, and is now in comfortable circumstances. He was formerly a republican, but for the last sixteen years has voted the prohibition ticket, voting that ticket alone for five years. Through the efforts of Mr. Grier and his mother a United Presbyterian church was established here, in which he is a member of sessions. In 1855 he married Susan V., daughter of William Miller, of Mercer county. She died in 1881, leaving two daughters—Mary Eva and Jean B. The first born, Watson Miller, died when five years old. In 1889 Mr. Grier wedded Fanny Swartwood, of Waverly, N. Y.

Dr. G. R. B. Robison, physician and surgeon, and the oldest member of the medical profession in Sharpsburg, was born in Morgantown, W. Va., in 1852, the youngest of the twelve children of James Robison, a prominent farmer of West Virginia. He received his early education in the public schools of his native town. In 1875 he commenced the study of medicine; entered the College of Medicine and Surgery, Ohio, in 1881, graduated in 1883, and at once commenced the practice of his profession. In 1889 he located in Sharpsburg, where he has since resided, taking the entire charge of his profession, and as a consequence of his service during the war, for two years he was associate surgeon for the Seventy-first Pennsylvania regiment and at Herwood hospital. He married Anna W., daughter of Hebron Robinson, of Lawrenceburg, Pa., and three children blessed their union, two of whom are living; Hebron and Mary. Mrs. Robison died in 1873, and the doctor afterward married Virginia H., daughter of Jonathan Hagan, of Allegheny county. Dr. Robison has a large and lucrative practice in town and surrounding country. He and family are members of the Presbyterian Church; politically he is a republican.

J. W. Boisot, dentist, Sharpsburg, was born in Allegheny county, Pa., October 26, 1858, a son of Dr. Daniel Boisot, a native of Allegheny City, and a prominent dentist of the county. Daniel married Elizabeth S. Welsh, of Pittsburgh, and they became the parents of one child, the subject of this memoir. In 1882 Dr. Boisot enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Twenty-third regiment, and served as captain; was wounded at the battle of Fredericksburg, December 13th, and died in the hospital at Georgetown, December 23, 1863. Joseph W. was educated at the Western University, and commenced the study of dentistry in 1874, graduating from the Pennsylvania College of Dental Surgery, Philadelphia, February 28, 1877. He commenced the practice of his profession in Ohio, where he remained until 1888, at which date he located at Sharpsburg, and where he has since resided, being the only dentist in the town. He is a member of the Episcopal Church, of the J. O. A. M., Sons of Veterans and Knights of Pythias. Politically he is a republican.

Thomas C. Jones, attorney at law, McKeesport, was born in Pittsburgh, September 2, 1860, a son of David and Elizabeth J. (Conway) Jones. His paternal grandfather was William Jones, a native of Wales, and his maternal grandfather was Thomas Conway, a native of Ireland, both of whom were among the pioneers of Pittsburgh. Thomas C. Jones was reared in McKeesport, and educated at the academy and Waynesburg College. He began the study of law in 1882, at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, and graduated in March, 1888. He then studied one year in the office of James Evam, Esq., of McKeesport; was admitted to the bar April 20, 1889, and has since been in active practice, with offices in McKeesport and Pittsburgh. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; was elected a member of the city council in February, 1888; politically he is a republican.

Sylvester C. Ritchey, merchant, Sewickley. Abraham Ritchey, the great-grandfather of Sylvester C., and a native of Germany, came to America, settling in Allegheny county, in an early day, and died there, aged one hundred and seven years. He participated in the revolutionary war. His son, William Ritchey, who was born east of the mountains, came to this county and joined Gen. Anthony Wayne in his campaign against the Indians, camping at Logstown. He was married to Mary, a daughter of Col. A. Greg Pinkerton, of revolutionary fame, who died aged one hundred and five years. William Ritchey and wife farmed in this county, and died aged ninety-two and ninety-eight years, respectively. Her brother John attained the age of one hundred and three years. Mr. and Mrs. William Ritchey were the parents of twelve children, all of whom attained maturity except one.

A. G. P. Ritchey, the father of S. C., was a carpenter, following farming at the same time, and in 1885 retired from active life. He was married to Mahala J. Holdingsinger, and they had seven children. The subject of this sketch was born and educated in this county, and his early life was spent on a farm in Sewickley township. In 1871 he entered as clerk with Chamberlin & Co., remaining with them until 1885, when he commenced business for himself. He keeps a general store, except dry goods, and has built up a good business. Politically he is a republican, and is a member of the K. of P. and K. of H., and of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Peter Patterson, general superintendant National Tube-works company, McKeesport, is a native of Jedburgh, Roxburghshire, Scotland. At an early age his mechanical tastes induced him to learn the trade of machinist, and the thorough training of his country, coupled with unusual genius in mechanical and engineering matters, soon placed him at the head of his trade. He came to this country in May, 1866, and found employment in various machine companies, and later with the firm of Campbell, Hall & Co., Norwich, Conn. He moved to New York in December of the same year, where he accepted a position at the Secor Ironworks. In 1869 he went to the extensive machine-shops of James L. Jackson & Brother, where he remained until December, 1871. At that time the National Tube-works company, at East Boston, Mass., with a view to securing the best skill to carry on the work of designing and constructing the special machinery for the erection of their projected McKeesport mill, secured the services of Mr. Patterson as constructing-engineer. In this capacity, and as assistant engineer, he came to McKeesport in June, 1872, and took charge of erecting the mills which have grown under his supervision to such magnitude. In 1880 the company appointed him general superintendant, which position he has since filled. Mr. Patterson is a thoroughly practical man, a systematic, cool-headed mill-manager, possessed of rare inventive talent. He has invented several important patents which are in constant and successful operation. He takes a deep interest in local matters, and is a representative citizen. He is a member of the United Presbyterian Church, in politics a stanch republican.

Robert C. McKee, retired, Wilkinsburg, was born near Newry, Ireland, in 1831. His parents, Joseph and Sarah (McCullough) McKee, emigrated to America in 1838, and settled on a farm in Westmoreland county, one mile from Freeport. There the father died in 1862, aged seventy, and the mother soon thereafter, at about the same age. They had seven sons and six daughters, Robert C. being the fourth son. He passed his early life on the farm, attending the common school; taught school several terms, and then opened a store on the Greensburg road, near Freeport. He soon removed to Pittsburgh, and later to Londonderry, Ohio, where he continued in business six years. In 1864 he came to Wilkinsburg, and soon afterward moved his store to Elizabeth, where he remained three years, and then to Beaver Falls for a like period. He was successful in business, and sold out to return to Wilkinsburg for family reasons. He subsequently came to Pittsburgh and Allegheny City, and came again to Wilkinsburg in 1878. He now resides in the third house he has built here. After leaving the store he became interested in a stove-foundry at Beaver Falls, and traveled several years, selling its output. He also represented the Beaver Falls cutlery for a time, and at various periods sold goods for three hardware firms in Pittsburgh. While at Beaver Falls he originated the movement which led to the organization of a Covenanters' church. Mr. McKee has been twice married, first in 1849, to Rachel Jane, daughter of Samuel Henry, of Ireland, who passed his last days at Wilkinsburg. Mrs. McKee was born in Pittsburgh, and died September 30, 1886, aged fifty-nine, the mother of two children: Myra, who died in Allentown, while at Beulah Falls, and her husband, Rev. William McKinney, in missionary work among the negroes, and Samuel Henry, a resident here. In April, 1888, Mr. McKee married Martha J., daughter of Robert McKnight, of Pittsburgh.

Charles E. Manby, chemist, National Tube-works company, McKeesport, was born in 1853, at Morecambe, Lancashire, England, the second son of the late Rev. E. F. Manby, B. A., of Cambridge University, and vicar of Morecambe parish for thirty-three years. He was educated at Lancaster and Barrow, was a student of chemistry with Prof. Richards, F. I. C., and after completing his course was appointed chemist to the steel- and wagon-works, Barrow. In 1880 he was appointed manager of the Lincolnshire Iron-Smelting company, near Brigg, Lincolnshire. He came to America in 1882, with letters of introduction to Prof. Eggleston, of Columbia College, New York, and others; to Mr. Swank, of Philadelphia, Capt. Jones, of Braddock Steel-works, W. D. Weeks, of Pittsburgh, and several others. During his connection with the National Tube-works company, as chemist, he has taken out several patents for coating:
iron pipe, one of which is familiarly known as Silvertin Kalamein, and which durable coating has proved a great success, and in 1888 he introduced a new method for reducing the wasted oxides of the Kalamein metallic alloy, and secured a patent for the same.

In 1837 he was made secretary to the Barrow Naturalists' Field Club, during which time he had the honor of introducing a new mineral, which he discovered in some kind of granite rock found in certain clay-beds on Walney island, and which he named vermicellite mica. In 1886 Mr. Manby married Miss Master, of Norwich, daughter of Dr. Master, F. R. C. S., London. Mr. Manby has three brothers in New Mexico, proprietors of a very successful cattle ranch near Naton. Mr. Manby is interested in a new enterprise with the Union Encaustic Tile company, limited, and of which he is the chairman.

Stanley Gardner, mill secretary National Tube works company, McKeesport, was born in Llewellyn Park, Orange, Essex county, N. J., February 6, 1839, a son of Edward and Miriam (Bloomfield) Gardner. His paternal grandfather was Edward Gardner, a member of the firm of Gardner Brothers, the famous ship-builders of England, who settled in New York in the present century. The first of our subject's maternal ancestors to come to America was one of the early Dutch settlers, and the first governor of the colonies now constituting the state of New Jersey. Edward Gardner, father of Stanley, is an eastern journalist of prominence, having founded and owned the Orange Journal, which he conducted over eighteen years; also the Brooklyn Daily News; owned the Washington County (N. Y.) Post, Bayonne Times, and others, and was for a long time on the editorial staff of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle. He served many times as president of both the New York and New Jersey state editorial associations, and has now been in the newspaper business for nearly fifty-two years.

Stanley Gardner, at an early age, graduated from the Ashton High-school at Orange, N. J., and in addition took first prize at the competitive declamation exercises; also graduated from Thompson's Business College at New York city. He learned the trade of a printer in his father's offices, and then took a position as reporter on the Jersey City Argus, Jersey City Journal and New York Times, respectively. In the meantime he mastered the art of shorthand writing, so necessary for city newspaper work, and, after working as special reporter in New York, received the appointment of United States court reporter in New York city. The close application of a court-stenographer prompted him to adopt mercantile business, and he accepted a position with the Valentine Varnish company, and later, when but nineteen years old, purchased the Cornwall Mirror, at Cornwall-on-Hudson, N. Y., which he edited for a time, and afterward sold to advantage. He then became teller for the Corbin Banking company, of New York city, and later was private secretary to Austin Corbin, Esq., the railroad magnate. January 26, 1880, he entered the employ of the National Tube works company, McKeesport, as stenographer and correspondent, in which position he has become expert in all matters pertaining to the business, and now holds a responsible position at their McKeesport works. He has been secretary of the Wrought-Iron Pipe association of the United States, and treasurer of the Giant Hydraulic Jack company (limited), of which he owned the majority of stock, and sold the patents and business some time ago.

In his capacity of newspaper correspondent he witnessed the execution of Charles J. Guiteau at Washington, D. C., January 30, 1882, and signed his death-warrant, as one of the death-warrant jury, and has interesting relics of the execution. Mr. Gardner is a shrewd pipe salesman and able correspondent. He takes great interest in local politics, and is a quiet but effective worker, regardless of party difference; otherwise is a strict protective-tariff republican. He married, October 16, 1884, Virginia V., daughter of Capt. William and Mary (Adams) Dumshee, of McKeesport, and has one daughter, Miriam B.

Henry Morrow Johnston, surveyor, and former correspondent of the Wilkinsburg Register and Daily Western News, was born in Wilkinsburg, March 8, 1828. His grandfather, Charles Johnston (whose biography appears elsewhere), came from Ireland, and settled in the southern part of this county, in the latter part of the eighteenth century, moving to Wilkins some twenty years later. Henry M. Johnston lived nearly all his life in what is now Penn township; attended the common school, and studied civil engineering with Dr. Stilley, of Cannonsburg. When seventeen years old he was apprenticed to the carpenter's trade, at which he worked for thirteen years; then was engaged in filling the farm which he still owns, in Penn township. In October, 1861, he joined Company A, One Hundred and First Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and served through McClellan's peninsular campaign, taking part in the battles of Yorktown, Fair Oaks, Williamsburg, etc. The regiment was then sent to North Carolina, and Company A remained for a year on Roanoke island. April 20, 1864, they were made prisoners at Plymouth, and kept in Andersonville and Florence prisons till March 1, 1865. Since the war Mr. Johnston has engaged in surveying, taking up his residence at Wilkinsburg in 1884. He is a member of the G. A. R., and is a F. & A. M. He is a member of the United Presbyterian Church; politically a democrat. January 13, 1870, he married Sarah, daughter of John and Sarah (Brown) Long, of English descent, and they had a son who died at the age of five years.

Rev. George S. Grace, clergyman, Sharpsburg, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., November 12, 1845, a son of Capt. R. J. Grace, a native of Maryland, and who came to Allegheny county at an early day. Capt. Grace, who was a prominent river and in-
James B. Murray, chief of order department National Tube-works company, McKeesport, is a native of Scotland, born in 1842, and was reared and educated in Glasgow, graduating from the high-school of that city. In 1871 he came to America, located in Boston, Mass, and entered the employ of the National Tube-works company as storekeeper; came to McKeesport in 1874, where he accepted the position of receiving-clerk for same company; was promoted assistant to J. B. Converse, then chief of order department, and at the death of the latter, in 1882, Mr. Murray became his successor. He was one of the organizers of Union Savings Fund & Loan association, Union Savings Fund & Loan association No. 2, and Home Security Building & Loan association, and is the vice-president of three corporations; is also a director of the Bank of McKeesport, and a stockholder in the Republic Iron-works, Pittsburgh. He is a member of the K. of P. and of the Methodist Episcopal Church; in politics he is a republican.

William Fisher, proprietor of machine-shops and foundry, was born December 22, 1821, in Paisley, Scotland, son of David and Janet (Gregg) Fisher, natives of above-named place. William was educated in his native land, and there learned the satin-picker's trade. Coming to America in the spring of 1845, he spent one year in Canton, Ohio, and then came to Pittsburgh, where he learned the machinist's trade with James Reese & Co. and, having served his time, he was promoted to the position of foreman. In 1857 he bought one-fourth interest in a concern, and soon monopolized the entire business, which he has successfully conducted. He employs over fifty men, some of whom he has reared over twenty years, and the industry is one of the largest machine-shops and foundries in the city. Mr. Fisher came to the United States almost penniless, but he soon made for himself a place in the business world of Pittsburgh. Of his sons, one is in Australia, and is an able mechanic. Another son, Andrew, is an attorney in Pittsburgh. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher are members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he is an elder and a pillar. He is an uncompromising prohibitionist.

Richard Bibby, jeweler, Wilkinsburg, son of John and Mary (Yates) Bibby, was born in 1837, in Over-Darwen, Lancashire, England, and reared in Chorley, same county. When seven years old he was put to work in the coal-mines, and his education has been obtained by his individual effort and perseverance. In 1859 he began to devote his leisure hours to watchmaking, and left the mines to give his entire time to that occupation. He married Elizabeth Southworth, who was reared in the same village as himself, and they set sail for America in 1869. For eight years they dwelt at Swissvale, Mr. Bibby being foreman of the Swissvale mines most of the time. In 1876 he began the study of medicine with a homopathic physician at Braddock, but was obliged to abandon it.
on account of the ill-health of his wife. By his careful nursing the life of the latter was prolonged, but she died of Bright's disease, April 30, 1888, aged forty-seven. Mr. Bibby established his residence and present business in Wilkinsburg in 1877, and has a large trade. He is associated with the United Brethren Church, and is a republican, with prohibition sympathies.

WILLIAM A. ILES, andator National Tube-works, McKeepsoport, was born in the Isle of Wight, England, in 1830, a son of William Huford and Luemy Iles. His father was an officer in the imperial eustomi-house, first in Halifax, Nova Scotia, and afterward at Jamaica, West Indies. William A. attended the public schools of Halifax, and at the age of thirteen entered the office of a merchant of that city. When fifteen years old he went to Jamaica, West Indies, and there spent three years on a sugar plantation, and eight years in a mercantile house in Kingston. In 1856 he left Jamaica, and was employed by a Boston, Mass., business-house until 1882, in the meantime traveling a year in Europe for the house; was in business on his own account in Boston until 1872. Later, business called him to Cuba for a time. In 1876 he came to McKeepsoport, and accepted the position of chief clerk of the National Tube-works company, and steadily and satisfactorily discharged the duties of that responsible situation until 1887, when he was appointed auditor of the company, which position he still holds. Mr. Iles has manifested much interest in McKeepsoport Free Library, of which he is president, and to him much of the credit is due for making it and the reading-room what they are. He is much interested in church-work, and is senior warden of St.
Stephen's Episcopal Church of the city.

SAMUEL McELROY, druggist, Wilkinsburgh, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., September 25, 1834. His parents, Samuel and Anna (Beamish) McElroy, natives of the North of Ireland, were married and lived afterward in that city.
The father, who was a tailor by trade, and started the first nail-machine in Western Pennsylvania, at Shoenberger's mill, died in 1876, aged eighty-three years; his wife died in 1878, aged eighty-two years. The subject of this memoir attended the public schools of the city till sixteen years of age, and then commenced the machinist's trade. During the war he was night foreman of McInntosh & Hemphill's mills, engaged in easting cannon. For eight years he dealt in sand (for building purposes) which was found on his proper. He made a study of pharmacy, and in 1878 bought his present drugstore in Wilkinsburgh, and in March, 1888, he received a degree from the Pittsburgh College of Pharmacy. He is a Freemason and member of K. of P. While in Pittsburgh he was twice elected by his fellow-republicans to represent them in the state legislature, and has been six years school director of Wilkinsburgh. Mr.
McElroy has been twice married, first in 1861, to Martha A., daughter of James and Mary (Allen) Kerr, and second, in 1867, to Maggie G., daughter of David Duff, of Penn township, all being of Irish descent. The first wife died in 1865, leaving three children, of whom Samuel, the second born, died soon after his mother; the others are Anna Mary and Martha Ann, at home. Three children were born to Mr. McElroy's second marriage:
Elizabeth Hastings, David D., and Oliver Duff.
The family are members of the Presbyterian Church.

JAMES L. DE LONG, real-estate dealer, and vice-president of the Board of Underwriters, McKeepsoport, was born at Maeksburg, Washington county, Ohio, January 10, 1845. He worked at home with his father, Isaac H. De Long, who was a farmer and tanner, until the age of eighteen years, when he enlisted in Company B, Seventy-seventh Ohio Veteran
Volunteer Infantry, and served his country for two years, until the close of the war, when returning home, he found his father and mother both dead and the farm gone. At Lowell, Ohio, he worked in a flourmill, and
October 4, 1866, was married to Miss Mary E.
Hendricks. In 1886 he went into merchandising with Henry Wolf. In 1871 they closed out the store, and Mr. Wolf having bought an interest in a flourmill and farm near Winchester, Va., Mr. De Long migrated with him to that place, and managed the mill for one year, when on account of ill-health he was compelled to abandon the business. The mill was sold, and the two friends removed to Baltimore, where they engaged in the mercantile business on Pennsylvania avenue. In 1873,
at the suggestion of J. G. Leezer, Mr. Wolf
came to McKeepsoport, and, as before, Mr. De Long came with him. They bought the stock of goods of John McConnell, and opened their store in the Hartman block, corner of Fifth and Walnut streets. They continued in busi-ess under the firm name of Wolf & De Long until October 2, 1877, at which time they were baptized out; and the business that followed in the "Red Front," on Market street. In 1878
they moved to their own building on Fifth avenue, where they continued in business
until September 15, 1884, when they sold out.
In November of the same year Mr. De Long opened a real-estate and insurance office in the People's Bank building, and there, up to the present time, has conducted a very successful business. He has served a three-years
term as school director; has been notable pub-lie since 1877; is a director of the People's bank; is an Odd-Fellow, and politically a democrat.

JAMES L. DE LONG, real-estate dealer, and vice-president of the Board of Underwriters,
McKeepsoport, was born at Maeksburg, Washington county, Ohio, January 10, 1845. He worked at home with his father, Isaac H. De Long, who was a farmer and tanner, until the age of eighteen years, when he enlisted in Company B, Seventy-seventh Ohio Veteran
Volunteer Infantry, and served his country for two years, until the close of the war, when returning home, he found his father and mother both dead and the farm gone. At Lowell, Ohio, he worked in a flourmill, and
October 4, 1866, was married to Miss Mary E.
Hendricks. In 1886 he went into merchandising with Henry Wolf. In 1871 they closed out the store, and Mr. Wolf having bought
an interest in a flourmill and farm near Winchester, Va., Mr. De Long migrated with him
to that place, and managed the mill for one year, when on account of ill-health he was compelled to abandon the business. The mill
was sold, and the two friends removed to Baltimore, where they engaged in the mercantile business on Pennsylvania avenue. In 1873,
at the suggestion of J. G. Leezer, Mr. Wolf
came to McKeepsoport, and, as before, Mr. De Long came with him. They bought the stock of goods of John McConnell, and opened their
store in the Hartman block, corner of Fifth
and Walnut streets. They continued in busi-
ess under the firm name of Wolf & De Long
until October 2, 1877, at which time they were baptized out; and the business that followed
in the "Red Front," on Market street. In 1878
they moved to their own building on Fifth
avenue, where they continued in business
until September 15, 1884, when they sold out.
In November of the same year Mr. De Long opened a real-estate and insurance office in the People's Bank building, and there, up to the present time, has conducted a very successful business. He has served a three-years
term as school director; has been notable pub-
lie since 1877; is a director of the People's bank; is an Odd-Fellow, and politically a democrat.

HIGH KENNEDY, superintendent Isabella Furnace company, Sharpsburg, was born in Ohio in 1838. He is a grandson of Joseph and Jane (Reed) Kennedy, two of the early pioneers of Mahoning county, Ohio. Among their ten children was T. W. Kennedy, born in Ohio, who married Margaret Trusdale, who bore him eight children. He was a practical iron-man, being a designer and builder of furnaces. Hugh, his third son, in 1881 entered upon the duties of his present position as superintendent of the Isabella furnace company. He married, in 1859, Lizzie, daughter of George Smith, of Ohio, and they have five children: Roy G., Julia T., George W., Margaret and Paul R. Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy are members of the United Presbyterian Church; politically he is a republican.

James Evans, attorney and real-estate dealer, McKeesport, was born in that city November 24, 1840, a son of Oliver and Mary A. (Sampson) Evans. He was reared in McKeesport, and educated in Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Pa., from which he graduated in 1861. He began the study of law in 1863, with James I. Kuhn, of Pittsburgh; was admitted to the bar in 1865, and has since had an office in McKeesport. In 1887 he was instrumental in starting the Bank of McKeesport, of which he is president, since when he has given his attention to his banking and real-estate interests, and is not now actively engaged in the practice of law. In 1886, with other parties, he purchased the McKeesport Glass Co., and the McKeesport Glass and Iron-works; and, made extensive improvements in the property by enlarging it and fitting the same with all modern improvements in machinery, etc., and increasing its capacity from fifty to two hundred barrels per day. The mill is successfully conducted by this company until December 9, 1887, when they were completely destroyed by fire. Mr. Evans has always taken an active interest in the improvement of McKeesport real estate, and, in connection with the many improvements he has made, has recently laid out a tract of fifty-six acres in lots in the Third ward, known as East Park, which lots are now on the market, being considered as being among the most valuable allotments in the city. He married, in January, 1874, Rebecca E., daughter of John and Eleanor (Mellon) Stoller, of Penn township, this county, and has five children: Thomas M., John K., Alan S., James and Eleanor. Mr. Evans is a member of the First Presbyterian Church; in politics, a republican.

John Dick McCune, real-estate agent, Wilkinsburg, was born near Glenarm, in County Antrim, Ireland, October 11, 1858, a son of James and Agnes (Peters) McCune, former of whom died in February, 1854, aged fifty-six years. In the fall of 1854 the widow set out for America with her eight children, and she now resides in Hampton township, this county. John was early put to work on the canal, and attended school in Indiana county for a few months during winter. Resolved to secure an education, he applied to the Iron City Commercial College in 1859, and having but ten dollars in money, the treasurer accepted his note for the remainder (twenty-five dollars) to complete the tuition fee. He graduated in 1860, and paid the note out of his earnings as salesman with A. Lyons & Co. For nearly twenty years he was employed as bookkeeper by James Marshall & Co., and in 1889 he established a real-estate business in company with A. C. Coulter, in Pittsburgh. Mr. McCune built a fine brick residence, corner of Ross and West streets, in 1887, and now occupies it. He is a member of the Reformed Presbyterian Church; in politics, a republican. His wife, who was Miss Elizabeth, daughter of John and Margaret Lindsay, was born in Allegheny City. The family are of Scotch descent. She was wedded to Mr. McCune February 2, 1871, and is the mother of four children: James, Margaret Smith and Samuel R. W., living, and Sarah Agnes, who died when eight months old.

George L. Good, of the firm of Good & Edie, druggists, McKeesport, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., June 28, 1847, son of Louis N. and Kate (Kircher) Good, natives of Strasbourg, France, who came to America about 1890, and settled in Allegheny City, where the father (who was a stonemason) lived until 1850, when he removed to Pittsburgh, and there resided until his death. Louis N. Good had ten children: Louis, Andrew, John, Mary (Mrs. John Snyder), Philomena (Mrs. Charles Engle), Joseph, George L., Albert, Barbara (Mrs. Louis Irler) and Albert R. Of these George L. was reared and educated in Pittsburgh, and learned his trade, that of a heatier, in Line & Shone's iron-works; served an apprenticeship of two years, and has worked as a journeyman since. He came to McKeesport in 1876, and for five years was in the employ of W. D. Wood & Co.; since 1881 he has been in the employ of the N. T. W. Co. He is the senior member of the firm of Good & Edie, druggists, which house was established in 1886. Mr. Good married, in 1871, Alice A., daughter of Michael and Betty (O'Neil) Ward, of Pittsburgh, and has five children living: Michael W., Nellie, Mercedez, George and Bessie. Mr. Good has several dwellings in McKeesport, as well as the business block now occupied by Good & Edie. He is a member of the Catholic Church; in politics, a democrat.

W. C. Meyer, of Sharpsburg, was born March 28, 1844, on Chestnut street, Allegheny City, where his father lived. His father, William Meyer, emigrated from Germany to Allegheny, where our subject lived until 1851, when his parents moved to McCandless township, near Pine Creek. There his father died in 1856. The family then moved back to Allegheny, and W. C. went to work in the Banner Cotton-factory; from there to the old Hope and Penn Cotton-mills; from there to McCully's glass-house, corner of Sixteenth and Liberty streets, Pittsburgh; from there to McClintock's keg-factory, on Sixteenth street, and from there to Hide's cotton-factory, in the lower part of Allegheny. In the latter part of the year 1858 our subject went to Knapp & Wood's nut- and bolt-factory, on the south side of Pittsburgh, and worked there until 1860 under Robert Lewis, afterward firm of Lewis, Oliver & Phillips. Then went to learn the carpenter's trade with Mr.
Happy, of Lawrenceville, and was working at the corner of Thirty-eighth street and Penn avenue, on the round-corner building, laying for the carpet, when the charge exploded. Mr. Meyer witnessed the last two explosions. From there he went to McKinney's sash and door-factory, remaining from 1862 to 1864; then did carpenter jobwork until the day of Lincoln's assassination. During this entire time he lived in Allegheny, and was a member of the old Columbia Hose company, then located on River avenue. From there he went to learn the dry-goods business with his brother H. H., at 164 East Ohio street, Allegheny. Mr. Meyer was married June 6, 1867, and in December following moved to Sharpsburg, where he started a dry-goods store in the building on corner of Main and Eighth streets; moved from there in 1872 to the house across the street, owned by P. Prager. In the same year he organized the Sharpsburg Hook and Ladder company. In 1877 he built the storehouse corner of South Main and Fifth streets. In 1881 purchased the plot of ground opposite his store, and built a large dwelling. In 1878 Mr. Meyer was elected to council and school board, and in 1879 was elected burgess; in 1886 he was elected chief of the Sharpsburg volunteer fire-department, and became a member of the National Association of Fire Engineers of the United States.

ZACHARIAH WICKHAM CARMACK, steamboat agent, Wilkinsburg, was born in St. Clair, Bedford county, Pa., September 25, 1823, and is a son of Abraham and Susanah (Wickham) Carmack, of Maryland. His grandfather, Peter Carmack, was a native of Frederick county, Md., of Scotch and Irish ancestry. Abraham Carmack, who came to Bedford county early in this century, was a blacksmith, and later followed bricklaying. Zachariah W. passed his early years there, and attended the common school. For eleven years he was associated with his father and brother in a foundry at Monongahela City, under firm name A. Carmack & Sons. In 1856 he went to Brownsville, where he engaged in the tobacco trade, and in 1859 he entered the employ of the Brownsville Packet company as chief clerk on the steamer Telegraph. He afterward became captain, and in 1877 was appointed agent of the company at Pittsburgh. In 1884 he opened a feed-store in the city. In 1889 he took up his residence at Wilkinsburg, and next year built his home on Rebeca street. In June, 1861, Mr. Carmack was married to Mary Wall, of Elizabeth township, this county, daughter of Garrett and Mary (Watson) Wall, early residents of Elizabeth, and of English and Irish extraction. Mr. Wall was justice of the peace for forty years. Anneti, the first-born of Mr. and Mrs. Carmack, died at the age of seventeen; the others are Ida May and Nora, at home; Frank Sidney, a bookkeeper in National Bank. Employed in the interior department, Washington, D. C. Mr. Carmack attends the Presbyterian Church, of which his wife and daughters are members. Politically he is a democrat, and at one time his father's family included seven democrats.

REV. GEORGE ROGERS, rector of St. Thomas' Episcopal Church, Verona, was born in 1851, in London, England, eldest son of George and Phyllis (Shakespeare) Rogers. His father was born on the family estate, in Western England, and in early life was taken to London, where he now resides. His mother, now deceased, was the daughter of Joseph Shakespeare, a prominent London designer of artistic iron and wood-work. According to the custom, Mr. Rogers was taken from school at the age of fourteen, and began his legal education. For several years he applied himself closely to the study of law, and for the greater part of his time was in the law-office of the well-known firm of Skilbeck & Griffith. In 1873, having a desire since a change and rest, he came to America. He traveled in the United States until 1878, when he decided to study for the ministry. and entered the theological seminary at Gambier, Ohio. In June, 1879, he was ordained a deacon in the Episcopal Church. Leaving the seminary in March, 1880, he went into the diocese of Kentucky, and in May following was ordained a presbyter in Grace Church, Louisville, Ky. He labored two years in missionary work, and in 1889, was called to the rectorsip of Grace Church at Paducah, Ky., where he labored very hard for three years. Owing to the climate his health failed, and, being desirous of rest, he took a small charge in Mercer, Pa., from May, 1885, to April, 1886. He was then called to St. John's, Episcopal Church, Pittsburgh. In May, 1887, he was called to St. Thomas' Church at Verona, taking charge May 22d. June 21, 1887, he was united in marriage with Capitola Edna Wilson, a lady of culture and refinement, educated in Pittsburgh Central high-school. She is a daughter of the late James P. Wilson, a native of Pittsburgh, who was a carriage-manufacturer there in early days. He retired from business in 1867, and died November 11, 1886. Mrs. Rogers' mother is a descendant of Gen. Gates, and her great-grandfather was associated with the first glasshouse of Pittsburgh.

CAPT. WILLIAM C. GRAY, retired, Sewickley, was born October 4, 1839, in Belmont county, Ohio, son of Francis and Anna (Carroll) Gray, who were both Pennsylvanians and farmers. Francis Gray was born near Carlisle, Pa., and came to Allegheny county when a boy, eventually becoming a stone-contractor, and helped to build the old penitentiary; he died in 1847, aged forty-seven years. The paternal grandparents of Capt. W. C. Gray, Samuel and Elizabeth Gray, were natives of Ireland and Scotland, respectively. Mrs. Anna (Carroll) Gray was a granddaughter of Capt. Carroll, of Carrollton, Ireland, of English descent, and one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence; his son William
(Mrs. Gray’s father) took part in the revolutionary war, and her brother John was in the war of 1812. Capt. William C. Gray, the subject of this memoir, was reared on the farm; at the age of sixteen he learned blacksmithing. In 1849 he went on the river, and ran on the Upper Mississippi as engineer ten years. Subsequently he superintended the building of a number of towboats, the Iron Mountain, Ironside and Rover. Subsequently he ran on the Lower Mississippi and Ohio rivers.

J. O. S. A., A. M., C. W. and a retired life. Capt. Gray was married to Miss Rosalie M. Browne, a sister of Col. Joseph Browne. The captain is identified with the republican party; he is a member of the A. F. & A. M., 32d degree.

John Sheldon Stevenson, merchant, Wilkinsburg, was born in Worthington, Armstrong county, Pa., September 26, 1831. His parents were William and Mary (Sheldon) Stevenson, natives of Pennsylvania, and of Scotch and German descent, located on a farm near Tarentum in 1837. John S. passed his early years on the farm there, and when thirty-eight years old took employment at the Duquesne Coal-works, where he was superintendant for over a year. In 1891 he enlisted, serving three months in the “Scotch Legion.” He then joined Company B, Sixty-third Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and was discharged at the end of three years’ service as first lieutenant. He served with the Army of the Potomac in the battles of Yorktown, Williamsburg, the seven days’ fight, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor and around Petersburg. After leaving the army he returned to the coal-mines, and in 1897 began his present business. He afterward bought the store he occupies, and does the largest retail business in the borough. Mr. Stevenson is now serving his thirteenth year as school director. Politically he is a republican. He is a Thirty-second degree Freemason, and a member of the L.O. O. M., C. W. and a prominent member of the family he is associated with the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1867 Mr. Stevenson married Miss Zelous Pogue, sister of Mrs. S. Creelman. Their living children are Mary Lottie, Harry Sheldon and John Wilbur. William Walter died when six years old and Charles Hollister when four.

Joseph Douglas, retired, McKeesport, was born in Williamson township, October 29, 1811, a son of William and Martha (Crawford) Douglas. His parents, natives of Ireland, settled in Pittsburgh in 1806; soon after removed to Ohio township, and thence to Franklin township, where they resided until their deaths. Their children were Mary A., Joseph, William and John. Joseph was reared in Ohio township; at sixteen years of age was apprenticed at the blacksmith’s trade, and for several years worked as a journeyman in Pittsburgh and Allegheny. In 1833 he started a shop of his own in Franklin township, and in 1835 located in Baldwin, where he conducted a shop for nine years.

In 1846 he located in Mifflin township, remaining there until 1867, when he removed to McKeesport, went into the livery business with W. W. Hunter, and remained three years. He married, in 1833, Eliza, daughter of John and Sarah Miller, of Baldwin, Allegheny county, and to them were born twelve children, of whom six grew to maturity: William, John (killed at the battle of Look-out Mountain in the civil war), Joseph C., Samuel, Mary A. and Sarah J., (Mrs. W. W. Hunter, now deceased). Mr. Douglas is a member of the Presbyterian Church, in politics a republican.

Robert P. Nevin, writer, Sewickley, belongs to a family whose ancestors were Scotch. Grandfather Daniel Nevin was born August 28, 1744, in Cumberland county, Pa. In 1770 he married Margaret Williamson, a sister of John Williamson, esq., of Pensylvania, a prominent member of the constitutional (federal) convention, and, with other works, author of the well-known history of South Carolina. The parents of our subject were John and Martha Nevin, by occupation farmers, but the father had a classical education, and the mother was talented, and assisted in the education of her children. Robert P. was educated in Caledonia, Ohio, Sewickley Academy, and Jefferson College, where he graduated in the class of 1842. He then came to Pittsburgh, Pa., where he, in partnership with his brother, Theodore H., conducted a drug business till 1870, when he sold his interest to his brother. In the meantime, having a taste for literary pursuits, he wrote for his personal friend, Robert M. Biddle, editor of the Pittsburgh Commercial Journal, and others. Also wrote for the Knickerbocker, Atlantic and Lippincott magazines. He bought the Sunday Leader, and established in connection with it the Evening Leader (daily), which has been a very successful paper. In 1880 he started the Pittsburgh Times, which he sold out after four years to Mr. A. M. Veith, and the family with him. Robert P. Nevin, the elder, was born in Scotland; his wife, Miss Sarah Douglas, was born in Ireland. Mr. Nevin has been associated with every page of his manuscript gives the reader a glimpse of the author’s unselfish soul.

Alexander Christy Duncan was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., April 19, 1845. His grandfather, John Duncan, was an Irishman of Scotch descent, who narrowly escaped being beheaded during the Irish rebellion. Thomas John, son of the latter, enlisted as a private in the British army, in which he served eighteen years, the greater part of the time in the East Indies, rising to the rank of captain of the Royal Scots. His adventures were many and interesting. A sword which is still preserved in the family was presented to him by Donna Isabella, queen of Spain. On one occasion, at the age of thirty-five, his company was quartered in the barracks at Edinburgh Castle. There he met the youngest daughter of Col. Alex. C. Dingwall, who had been major of the Scots Greys at the battle of Waterloo, and was at that time keeper of the crown of Scotland. Capt. John Duncan and Clarinda Dingwall were married, and after years of travel they came to America in 1837. Capt. Duncan was for years a well-known merchant of Pittsburgh, where he died in 1882, aged eighty years. His widow died at the home of her son Alexander, in Wilkinsburg, in July, 1888, aged seventy-three. They left five sons and one daughter. Alexander C. Duncan was reared and educated in the city; served eight years as a law clerk for the well-known attorneys, Kennedy & Dow; established the Merchants' Law and Collection Bureau in 1875, afterward known as Duncan Bros., and in 1887 sold an interest to Henry King, the firm being now Duncan & King. The Merchants' Law and Collection Bureau is now a well-known institution of Pittsburgh, and has a worldwide reputation for its efficiency. In 1887 Mr. Duncan bought a residence in Wilkinsburg. The family is identified with the Episcopal Church, and Mr. Duncan is a member of the Masonic fraternity. In May, 1866, he married Miss Hattie V. Kennedy, of Allegheny, a daughter of Samuel Kennedy, a Baltimorean, and Elenore Kennedy, of Irish birth. Mr. and Mrs. Duncan are parents of four children: Alexander C., Nellie B., Donald Dingwall and Hattie V. Mr. Duncan was a member of the One Hundred and Thirty-sixth regiment during its nine months' service under Col. Thomas Bayne, and took part in the battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville.

Samuel Fields, justice of the peace, McKeesport, was born in Cambria county, Pa., May 15, 1832, a son of Felix and Sarah (McBride) Fields. Felix was a native of Ireland, a blacksmith by trade, and settled in Pittsburgh in 1824, where he worked at his trade as a journeyman in the first glasshouse erected in Birmingham, and resided there until his death. He had ten children: Margaret, Hannah, Mary, Robert, John, George, George (second), William, Samuel and Ellen. Our subject was reared in Pittsburgh from two years of age, and was a carpenter by trade, and for a number of years was a member of the carpenter firm of McKee & Fields, and had a shop on Diamond street, near the old courthouse. He came to McKeesport in 1853, where he carried on a shop until the breaking out of the war of the rebellion. In 1861 he enlisted in Company I, Sixty-third Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, participated in several engagements, and was honorably discharged on account of disability after two years' service. After his return home he resumed business, in which he was engaged until 1881, when he was elected justice of the peace, and is now serving his second term. He was married, in 1849, to Anna Bell, daughter of William (Muse) Harrison, of McKeesport, and has seven children living: William, Harry, Sarah E., Martha, Anna Bell, Etta and Sterling. Mr. Fields has served as justice of the peace of McKeesport, and one term as burgess. He is a member of Samuel Black Post, No. 59, G. A. R., and the I. O. O. F.; in politics he is a republican.

James O'Neil, retired, McKeesport, was born in Mifflin township, this county, September 15, 1815, a son of John and Sarah (Robinson) O'Neil. His paternal grandfather, Charles O'Neil, a native of Ireland, a pioneer of Carlisle, Pa., was a farmer, and settled in Mifflin township, Allegheny county, prior to the Revolution. His maternal grandfather was Samuel Robinson, also a native of Ireland, and after the Revolution, went into the iron business, who paid for three farms in that township by packing iron on horses over the mountains to Pittsburgh. He had three daughters, and at his death left each of them a farm. John O'Neil, a farmer, father of the subject of this sketch, and a native of Carlisle, Pa., was drafted from this county, in the Revolution, and while on his way to join the Federal forces was dismissed, as the war had closed. He reared a family of six children: Denny, Elizabeth (Mrs. William Rapp), Polly (Mrs. Samuel Hamilton), Samuel, James and John. Of these James was reared in Mifflin township, and began work in the coal-mines when twelve years of age. Soon after attaining his majority he managed mines for Robert McLure. In 1847 he embarked in business for himself at Fort Perry, later at Dravosburg, and located in McKeesport in 1850, where he was actively engaged in the coal business until 1888, when he retired. He married, in 1849, Eliza J., daughter of Daniel Berry, of Mifflin township, this county, and had seven children: Melissa J. (Mrs. Marcks Murphey, deceased), Harvey, John, Ella (Mrs. J. S. Kuhn), Anna, Chroline and James. Mr. O'Neil is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics he is a republican.

J. Renwick Smith, Sewickley, was born in the city of Allegheny, Pa., son of Thomas Smith, a native of Ireland, who came to America at the age of nineteen years. In Allegheny he engaged in the coal business with different partners, having previously worked at his trade. He was director of the National Bank of Pittsburgh, also director of several insurance companies, and was esteemed and valued as a keen and enterprising business-man. Politically he was identified with the republican party; was a member of the common and select councils and school boards, serving six years in each, and was an active member of the Reformed Presbyterian Church.

Daniel Carhart, teacher, Wilkinsburg, was born in Clinton, Hunterdon county, N. J., January 28, 1839. His earliest known ancestor was Thomas Carhurta, mentioned in records of 1420 as of Saxou origin, and residing in Cornwall. The earliest of the family in America was Thomas Carhart, who came in 1868 as secretary to Col. Thomas Dougan, an English colonial governor. This Thomas was a son of Anthony Carhart, a Cornwall gentleman, who used a crest and coat of arms.
A pedigree of the family from 1530 is said to be in possession of a Cornwall clergyman.
In 1691 Thomas Carhart married Mary Lord.
Their son Robert had a son Cornelius who was a major in the revolutionary war, and a son of the latter, born in New Jersey, and bearing the same name, was the grandfather of the subject of this sketch. His wife was Sarah Dunham. His son Charles, born in Clinton, married Christiana (see Bird), widow of his brother Daniel, and settled on a farm of 345 acres opposite his father's homestead, which he brought to a high state of cultura tion. He was active in the Presbyterian Church, and died in 1868, in his seventy-seventh year; his widow survived until 1881, dying in her eighty-fourth year. They had seven children, of whom Daniel is the youngest. Another son, Samuel, commanded a company in a New Jersey regiment during the civil war. Prof. Carhart was rearmed on a farm, and graduated from the Philadelphia Polytechnic College in 1859. For some years he was employed in civil engineering, part of his labors being in the construction of the Union Pacific railroad. In 1868 he took a position as teacher of civil engineering in the college from which he graduated, and remained there nine years. In 1882 he took the same professorship in the Western University, where he has since remained, his home being in Wilkinsburg, where he built a handsome residence in 1888.

Prof. Carhart supports republican principles; in religion he is a Presbyterian; he is a member of the Masonic fraternity. In 1867 he married Josephine Mills, a native of New Jersey, daughter of Charles and Eleanor (Reeves) Stoy, of Welsh and French extraction, respectively. By this marriage there were five children, of whom the third, Helen Josephine, died when five years old. The others are Charles Forest, Elmore Christine, Anna Florence and Thomas Chase. In 1888 a college text-book on plane surveying from the pen of Prof. Carhart was published, and is now used in the Western University, and highly recommended by prominent educational institutions.

John B. Edie, druggist, McKeensport, is a native of Warren county, Ill., and a son of Rev. Joseph A. and Sarah A. (Hodgeus) Edie, former of whom was a native of Allegheny county, and a son of Guyan Edie, a pioneer of Pittsburgh. John B. was reared and educated in Monmouth and Quincy, Ill., and studied his profession at Hot Springs, Ark., and Allegheny, Pa. In 1888 he embarked in the drug business in Allegheny City, which he continued for three years. In April, 1886, he came to McKeensport, managed the market-house drugstore one year, and in April, 1887, embarked in business on South Walnut street, which has filled a want occasioned by the rapid growth of that section of the city. Mr.
Edie is among the prominent young businessmen of the city, and this business venture has been a success from the start, the trade contantly increasing. January 1, 1889, a branch store was started at Christy Park, one of Mc-Keensport's lovely suburbs, and Mr. Edie received the appointment of postmaster. The office was established December 21, 1888.

William Anderson, editor, Wilkinsburg, was born in Moon township, March 6, 1828.
His ancestors removed about A. D. 1700 from Scotland to County Down, Ireland, where his great-grandfather, William, was born in 1722. William's son, Andrew, was a manufacturer of and dealer in linen cloth, and owned a small farm, whereon he lived, and died in 1821. He married Elizabeth Glass, and became the father of eleven children.
The sixth of these, William, born in 1784, mARRIED Margaret Hadden, who bore him two children, and died of consumption, the younger child soon following. The other, Mary Ann (Cornelius), came with her father from Ballykelly to America in 1816. They were three weeks traveling from Baltimore to Pittsburgh by wagon. William Anderson settled on a farm in Moon township, and married Nancy Arnold, a native of the same locality as himself. They had eight children, of whom William Anderson, our subject, is the fourth and only son. In 1859 the family moved to Allegheny City, where the father died in 1858. He was a democrat, and an active worker in the Washingtonian temperance movement, also in the Associate Reformed (now the United Presbyterian) Church. Nancy Anderson died in 1842, aged forty-nine years.

When twelve years old the subject of this sketch was employed as a roll boy in the office of the Conference Journal, and two years later went into the Gazette office, where he remained seven years. He was employed as compositor on the Christian Advocate and other papers, and again on the Gazette. After twelve years at the case he began reporting on the Gazette. He was on the writing staff of the Daily Union and True Press, and returned to the Gazette as reporter, and then became city editor. After reporting a year for the Dispatch he took the position of city editor on the Commercial in 1867, and so continued until its consolidation with the Gazette in 1877. After doing special work for a year he was employed as editor-in-chief, which position he now holds. For several years he was part owner of the Gazette job office. He built a residence in Edgewood, and in 1888 erected his present residence in Wilkinsburg. The family is identified with the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Anderson has been twice married, the first time in 1856, the bride being Malazena, daughter of Robert Wallace, Esq., of Lawrenceville, where she was born.
She died in 1877, aged forty-three years, the mother of eight children, all of whom reside within a mile of the parental home. Their names are as follows: William Wallace, Adam (Mrs. R. W. Haven), James B., Edwin C., Anna Cora (wife of B. F. Haven), Joseph Kerr, Jennie Glass and Grace Woods. The last two and Edwin are at home. Mr. Anderson's second wife is Caroline A., daughter of John Nimon, deceased.

JAMES B. ANDERSON, plumber, Wilkinsburg, son of William Anderson (whose sketch appears above), was born in Allegheny City November 2, 1856. He attended the city schools until fifteen years of age, and then began carpenter-work. At the end of two years he abandoned this trade, and engaged in the study of civil engineering for three years. He then went on the Pennsylvania railroad as fireman, and after four years' service was given a locomotive, which he ran for three years. At one time, while running through " Packsaddle Hollow," his locomotive struck a rock that had fallen on the track, and, "jumping," miraculously alighted on the rails, thus escaping a fall of one hundred feet into the river below. In 1884 Mr. Anderson came to Wilkinsburg and engaged in the hardware trade with a brother; they have since turned their attention to plumbing, and are doing a successful business. Mr. Anderson attends the service of the Presbyterian Church; in politics he is a republican, and he is a member of the I. O. O. F. In January, 1880, he married Miss M. J. McKelvey, a native of Allegheny City, and daughter of Ephraim Wallace and Eliza (Anderson) McKelvey, both of Irish descent. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson have the following-named children: Florence Martha, Lou McKelvey and Mary Semple.

ROBERT WARDROP, manufacturer, Pittsburg, is a son of James Wardrop, who was born June 11, 1811, in Ayrshire, Scotland, near Louden Castle, son of William and Mary Wardrop. James Wardrop was educated in his native home, and there learned horticulture. He came to America in 1839, and spent one year with his brother, Capt. Wardrop, on a vessel. He came to Pittsburgh, Pa., the following year, and here followed his vocation. He had the first greenhouse at Manchester (now Allegheny), in partnership with Ben. Bakewell, of glasshouse fame. In 1859 Mr. Wardrop came to Sewickley, subsequently took a trip to Europe, where he had procured a stock for a new and large nursery to be conducted in company with Thomas L. Shields. Mr. Wardrop retired from business in 1885. Robert Wardrop was born and educated in this county. He was initiated into his father's business, but did not pursue it long. At the age of nineteen he engaged in the banking business with the firm of Ira B. McVay & Co.; remained with them four years, and five years with the Traders' National bank as paying-teller. During the last eleven years has been treasurer of the Pennsylvania Lead company, of Pittsburgh, Pa. Has also been connected with the Charter Block Coal company, Pittsburgh, Chartiers & Youghiogheny railroad and the Miller Forge company of Pittsburgh. He has been a resident of Sewickley for thirty years.

J. SHARP MCDONALD, oil and gas producer, Sewickley. Rev. McDonald, grandfather of J. S. McDonald, was one of the pioneers at Logstown, Pa. A century ago he preached as a local Presbyterian minister near Sewickley valley and at Logstown, whisky and corn chiefly constituting his salary. His son, Capt. John McDonald, was a native of the well township, Beaver county, Pa., and was one of the early keelboatmen who took boats from New Orleans to Pittsburgh; afterward he was a pilot, and captain of several boats. He also built and owned the Pickaway, Sligo and Palo Alto, passenger packets, later the Youghiogheny, doing a large towing business from the Beaver canal to Pittsburgh, where he later engaged in the coal business. His wife, see Rachel Oliver, was the mother of the following-named children: Capt. John V., Josiah David A., Marshall, William, Joseph, J. Sharp, Elizabeth, Phoebe, Anna and Mattie. At the age of seventeen years he engaged in the coal business, and during the war furnished coal to the government at New Orleans, Vicksburg and other points. He also was one of the contractors who furnished the stones for the jetties. He was formerly interested in the railroad business, but is now engaged in the production of natural gas. His wife, a daughter of William Colville, an ex-soldier, is one of the most noted singers in the state, her style of music being oratorical and dramatic. She has been identified with every good cause in Pittsburgh and vicinity, and has aided by the music of her voice and talent many churches, the poor and many benevolent societies, being a great favorite with the G. A. R. all over the country, the G. A. R. Post No. 3, of Pittsburgh, in recognition of her many kind acts, having elected her unanimously, and made her by a special act of the commander a member of the post, August 29, 1891, and presented her with a gold badge, being the only one in existence in the United States.

SAMUEL HAYS THOMPSON, assistant trainmaster, Wilkinsburg, was born in North Huntingdon (now Penn) township, Westmoreland county, Pa., June 28, 1844. His father, John Thompson, left his native county, Armagh, Ireland, in 1811, and remained for some years in Buckingham county, Pa., where he married Lucinda Hays. He settled on a farm in Westmoreland county, on which he was instantly killed in 1857, in his sixty-fifth year, by his clothing catching on the tumbling-shaft of a thrashing-machine; his widow died ten years later, at the same age. They had six sons and three daughters, of whom Samuel is the youngest. John Thompson was a prominent democrat, and attended the United Presbyterian Church, of which his wife was a consistent member. Samuel H. Thompson was reared on a farm and attended the common schools. When nineteen years old he became a freight brakeman on the Pittsburgh division of the Pennsylvania railroad, and continued fourteen months, leaving the road to take a course in Iron City Commercial College of Pittsburgh, from which he graduated. In 1865 he returned to his former position, and was soon given charge of a train. On the 1st of May, 1874, he became train-dispatcher, and May 16, 1883, was appointed assistant trainmaster in charge of the passenger-train service of the Pittsburgh division, headquarters at Union station, Pittsburgh. He took up his residence in Wilkinsburg in June, 1874, and ten years after built his present residence, corner of Hay and Rebecca streets. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, the I. O. F., R. A., A. O. U., and the Free and Independent Order of Industry; politically he is a democrat. November 16, 1869, Mr. Thompson married Anna M. Hebrank, who was born in Adamsburg, Westmoreland county, Pa., April 6, 1847, daughter of Benjamin E. Hebrank, a native of Hesse Cassel, Germany. Mrs. Thompson died April 11, 1878, leaving three children: Mildred M., Morris L., and Benjamin E. Mr. Thompson married for his second wife, June 5, 1883, Julia E. Hebrank, half sister of his first wife, and who died in her twenty-seventh year.

WILLIAM MCLEAN, lumber-dealer, Wilkinsburg, was born in Peters township, Washington county, Pa., in 1814, son of William John and Margaret Jane (McWhinney) McLean, who were natives of the Counties Donegal and Derry, Ireland, respectively. They married in 1842, and at once set sail for America. The father, who was a carpenter, worked for a few days after his arrival in Pittsburgh, but finally settled permanently on his land in Peters township in 1845. He died in 1856, at the age of sixty-six, and at the time was owner of two farms. He was identified with the United Presbyterian Church; in politics he was a democrat; and when fourteen years old began work with his father, thus acquiring his trade. He went to Pittsburgh in 1867, and worked as journeyman till the end of 1871, when he came to Wilkinsburg and established himself as contractor. In 1886 he bought out a lumber-yard on Penn avenue, and has since confined himself exclusively to the sale of lumber. He is a member of the United Presbyterian Church in Wilkinsburg, of the R. A., and in politics is independent. In 1868 Mr. McLean married Annie McNary, who was born on the same farm where her father, who now resides in Nottingham township, adjoining Peters, was born. Her grandfather, James McNary, came from Ireland, and was an early settler there. Her parents, James and Belle McNary, were born in that township and West Virginia, respectively. Mr. and Mrs. McLean's eldest child, Fanny Belle, is the wife of Dr. J. R. Vincent, residing in Wilkinsburg; William Wilson, the third, died when three years old; the others, Ida Jane, Minnie May, Frank Wilson, Samuel Oliver, Sadie Burchfield and James Clyde, are at home.

Benjamin E. Pritchard, druggist, McKeesport, was born in Pittsburgh, November 30, 1848, a son of Arthur and Ann (Pickett) Pritchard, natives respectively of Georgetown, D. C., and Meadville, Pa. Arthur Pritchard was reared in his native city, and was a carpenter and pattern-maker by trade. In early life he located in Warren, Ohio, where he embarked in business for himself, and was a prominent Mason, and for fifteen years was the efficient officer of the masonic building at Pittsburgh. He died in 1866, at the age of sixty-four years. Benjamin E. was reared in his native city, and educated in the old Third Ward public school. In 1861 he became an office-boy in the employ of Judge J. M. Kirkpatrick, and in October, 1863, was apprenticed to the drug business, every department of which he thoroughly learned. For eight years of his early life he spent a part of each day as a newsboy. In 1867 he came to McKeesport, and was clerk in the drugstores of that city until April 1, 1880, when he embarked in business for himself, which he has since successfully continued. June 12, 1879, he married Malinda, daughter of Charles and Abigail (Good) Rice, of Green ville, Pa. Mr. Pritchard is one of the live and enterprising young business-men of McKeesport; is an active member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is secretary. He is a prominent Royal Arcanum man; is on the lecture platform, and is a good reader.

William Stanton, retired, Sewickley, was born in Salem, Ohio. His father, Dr. Benjamin Stanton, was one of the pioneers and a prominent citizen of that place, and was uncle to Hon. Edwin M. Stanton. Mr. Stanton practiced law in Cincinnati for sixteen years, and was one of the representatives from that city in the Ohio legislature from 1829 to 1838. He retired from the practice of law in 1875, and removed to the vicinity of Pittsburgh. Mrs. Stanton's grandfather was Capt. Nathaniel Irish, who was well known in the early days of Pittsburgh. He was a son of Nathaniel Irish, Sr., a native of the Island of Montserrat, West Indies, who died in 1748 at Union Furnace, Hunterdon county, N. J. Capt. Irish was born May 8, 1737, in Sancun, Bucks county, Pa., and served in the revolutionary war as quartermaster, with rank of captain, rendering valuable service, in recognition of which he received a land-grant of five hundred acres near New Castle, Pa. He bought property in Pittsburgh of the Penn heirs in 1786, which is still in the possession of his descendants. He was one of the first councilmen of the borough of Pittsburgh, in 1792; he died there September 11, 1816. His son, William B., was born August 23, 1793, in Philadelphia. He came to Pittsburgh with his father.
He was deputy marshal of the United States during the administration of President Monroe, and as such was often employed in carrying specie across the mountains. He was a fearless officer, ever ready to do his duty.
He finally moved to Ohio, where he died March 26, 1859.

WILLIAM LLOYD STANDISH, manufacturer, Pittsburgh. Miles Standish, the grandfather of William Lloyd, whose name heads this sketch, was one of the pioneers of the South Side, in Beaver county, not far from Frankfort Springs, Pa. He was a direct descendant of Capt. Miles Standish, captain of the colony of Plymouth, and the hero of the “Courtship of Miles Standish” immortalized by Longfellow. His son, William Lloyd Standish, Sr., was a native of Beaver county, Pa., and a millwright by occupation. William Lloyd Standish, Jr., learned his father’s occupation, and followed it about seven years, traveling over a greater portion of the western and southern states. When he relinquished his trade he became interested in the firm of Armstrong, Brother & Co., Pittsburgh, Pa., of which he is a member; he manufacture machine-cut corks and compressed poplar bungs, and do a large business, employing over seven hundred hands, having agencies in Spain and Portugal, where the raw material is prepared. Mr. Standish is also interested in other large enterprises.

WILLIAM RICHARDS STEPHENS, physician,
Wilkinsburg, was born in Armstrong county,
Pa., December 17, 1858. He was the grandson, Paul Stephens, came from England to this state about 1840, and at once contracted to construct the Spruce creek and other tunnels on the Pennsylvania railroad. He commanded a Pennsylvania regiment during the civil war, as did also his stepson, L. R.
Davis, and died in 1875, aged eighty-six years. His son, William Paul Stephens, born in Cornwall, England, married Sarah A.
Williams, of Swansea, Wales. He was identified with the Brady’s Bend Iron-works, in which he lost his capital, and is now en-aged in iron and steel manufacturing at Bellaire, Ohio. When eight years old our subject went with his parents to Alliance, Ohio, where he attended the public schools, and also took a course at the Iron City Commercial College. When eighteen he entered a drugstore, where he remained eleven years, and read medicine under the allopathic school. In 1866 he graduated from the Hahnemann Medical College of Chicago, and at once began the practice of homoeopathic medicine in Wilkinsburg, where he has been successful. In 1887 he built his present residence and office of four stories, and added 20 feet and a story at top in 1888, and added nine feet and a story on one side in 1889.
He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and of the Mystic Chain, and I. O. H.; politically he is a republican. September 29, 1881, he married Angélique, daughter of Cyrus Riley, of Johnstown. Mrs. Stephens was of German descent, and died in September, 1898, leaving two children, Ada and Claude. The latter died eight months after his mother, that period representing his age. The doctor was again married, August 28, 1888, to Lanra G. O’Rourke, a lady of Irish-German parentage, and born in Columbiana county, Ohio, in 1861.

NOBLE GERWIN MILLER, clergyman, postoffice Wilkinsburg, a son of Martin L. and Hannah Miller, of Western Pennsylvania, was born in Blairsville, Indiana county, in April, 1837. His grandfather, Samuel G.
Miller, came from County Antrim, Ireland, with his wife and two children, to Western Pennsylvania in 1798. He was a farmer, and resided most of the time in Indiana county.
He had eight sons and five daughters, and died about 1850, aged eighty years. Andrew Simpson, maternal grandfather of our subject, was another early settler of Indiana county, and was of Irish descent. He was many years engaged in freighting by wagon to Baltimore and Cumberland, and then retired to a farm, dying at the age of seventy-eight.
Martin L. Miller learned the weaver’s trade, then taught school in Blairsville, opened a general store there, and later went into the drug business, which led him to study medicine. He graduated from Franklin Medical College, and began practice at Blairsville, where he still remains. He has two sons;
the eldest, James Simpson, is now practicing medicine at Derry.

Rev. N. G. Miller was reared in Blairsville, attended Elder’s Ridge Academy, and later a similar institution at home, which was established largely through the influence of his father. He entered the sophomore class at Allegheny College, Meadville, and graduated in 1861. He began preaching in the Methodist Episcopal Church as supply on the Mechanicsburg circuit, within fourteen miles from home. He was admitted to conference on trial in 1863, and next year was located at Marchand. He has since preached at Redstone, Irwin, Kittanning, Mansfield, Sharps-burg, again at Irwin, Oakland and Wilkinsburg. For the last four years he has been presiding elder of McKeesport district, continuing his residence here. He was a member of the general conference of 1888, one of the most noteworthy in the history of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Miller is a straight republican in politics. In 1864 he married Sarah Jane, daughter of Robert and Maria (Rahn) Johnston, of Pittsburgh, of Scotch-Irish and German descent. Three children bless the home of Mr. Miller: Maria Louise, James Francis and Robert Johnston.

WILLIAM GALAIRETH STEWART, attorney,
Wilkinsburg, was born in West Middletown,
Washington county, Pa., January 5, 1856.
His grandfather, Galbraith Stewart, of Scotch ancestry, came from Carlisle to West Middletown over a hundred years ago. His son, bearing the same name, married Phoebe McKeever, and engaged in farming in early life. Afterward he dealt in wool, and did a private banking business at West Middletown. He moved in June, 1874, to Washington, Pa., where he resided at the time of his death; he died September 13, 1877, aged sixty-four years; his widow now resides in Washington. Four of their children grew up and one died in infancy. The eldest, Jamie (Acheson), resides in Washington, Pa., W. G. is the second; Elizabeth Scott is unmarried, and resides in Washington, and Thomas A. is unmarried, and resides in Toronto, Ohio. William G. Stewart was educated at Washington and Jefferson College, and admitted to the bar of Washington county in September, 1880. He soon came to Pittsburgh, and was admitted to the Allegheny county bar in January, 1881. With Mr. T. S. Brown he formed the firm of Brown & Stewart. He is an adherent of the republican party, and a member of the Presbyterian Church in Wilkinsburg, where he has dwelt for the past four years.
HISTORY OF ALLEGHENY COUNTY.

Martin Horn, furniture-dealer and undertaker, McKeepsport, was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, June 10, 1835, a son of Michael and Laura (Wolf) Horn. He was reared and educated in his native place, where he served an apprenticeship of three years at the cabinet-maker’s trade. In 1853 he came to America, and located at Baltimore, Md., where he worked at his trade as a journeyman until 1859. He then came to McKeesport, and in 1860 embarked in business at Dravosburg, Allegheny county, where he remained two years. In 1862 he purchased the site in McKeesport where he is now located, and where he has been in active business since. September 2, 1862, he married Louisa, daughter of William and Catherine (Shaler) Nichols, natives of Germany, who settled in McKeesport in 1846. Mr. and Mrs. Horn are members of the German Lutheran Church. He was one of the active promoters in building the McKeesport street railway, and is one of its directors and charter members. He is an F. and A. M.; in politics a republican.

William W. Hunter, funeral director and liveryman, McKeepsport, was born in this county December 12, 1836, a son of James and Jane (Wilson) Hunter. His paternal grandfather, James Hunter, a native of Ireland, was a pioneer farmer near Library, Allegheny county, but in later life removed to Ohio, and died there. He had ten children: Thomas, James, John, William George, Sally, Mary, Nancy, Jane and Eliza. Of these James, a native of this county, and a blacksmith by trade, died in 1837. Of his four children two survive: Ann (Mrs. George Phillips) and William W. William and Sarah (Carr) Wilson, the maternal grandparents of William W., were pioneers of Snowdon township in this county. The subject of this sketch was reared and educated in Snowdon township, and at the age of seventeen years went to Library, where he served an apprenticeship of three years at the cabinet-maker’s trade, after which he worked as a journeyman one year. He then embarked in business in Library, but after five years removed to Mifflin township, where, for a period, he carried on farming and undertaking. In 1866 he came to McKeepsport, and embarked in his present business, in which he has since successfully continued. His only son, O. M. Hunter, was admitted as a partner in 1885. Mr. Hunter has been three times married; his first wife, Sarah A., daughter of Thomas and Jane (Woods) Kiddoo, of Snowden township, bore him two children—Orinda M. and Sarah A. (died in infancy); his second wife was Sarah J. Douglass, and his present wife Susan N. Findley. Mr. Hunter is one of the leading and prominent citizens of McKeepsport; is a director and stockholder of the People’s bank, and a member of the McKeepsport Building & Loan association. He has served as Burgess of McKeepsport one term; is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; in politics a republican.

J. F. J. ALLISON, broker, Sewickley post-office, was born in Beaver county, Pa., and was educated in Beaver. He came to Pittsburgh in 1850, and clerked a few years with the firm of George P. Smith & Co., later with Wilson, McElroy & Co. In 1857 he left the city; returning in 1866, engaged with Shacklett, McLain & Co., wholesale dry-goods merchants. In 1868 the firm was changed to McLain, Anday & Allison; later it was again changed to Anday, Myler & Allison, and eventually the firm became Anday & Allison. In 1875 the firm retired from business, and Mr. Allison was employed as general bookkeeper in the People’s National Bank of Pittsburgh, till November, 1887, when he resigned; since then he has been a broker. His paternal grandfather, James Allison, was an eminent lawyer, and one of the organizers of the Beaver county bar, of which he was an honored member for fifty years, at the end of which time he retired from the practice of his profession.

Henry M. Long, broker, Pittsburgh, is a native of that city, born in 1836. His paternal grandfather was a native of Chambersburg, Pa., of Scotch-Irish descent, and in 1742 he located near Cannonsburg, Washington county, Pa. From that date until about A. D. 1800 he farmed the “Long farm,” now known as a part of the Morgantown farm. His son Joseph, father of Henry M., was born in 1790, and was the youngest of thirteen children. He had only six months’ schooling, and worked on the farm until sixteen years of age; then was apprenticed to a country smith till twenty-one years of age, when he entered the United States army in the war of 1812, serving in the Pittsburgh Blues, Second company, Capt. Cooper; after the war he became a machinist, and carried on a large establishment in Pittsburgh repairing out ships and steamboats, and supplying heavy iron-work for the Sault Ste. Marie canal, connecting Lake Superior and Lake Michigan, and other public improvements. He did the largest business in the western part of the state in his line, and from 1890 to 1890 he was an extensive steamboat owner. He died from injuries sustained by a fall January 17, 1862. He was a whig, abolitionist, republican and a Presbyterian. He was married in 1815 to Sarah, daughter of Reuben Miller, an old pioneer, a native of Philadelphia, Pa., descended from a family of English Quakers, who came to America in 1712 and settled in New Garden township, Chester county, Pa.

Henry M. Long, who is one of nine children, was educated in Chester county, Pa., and Morgantown, W. Va. In 1856, at the age of twenty years, he went west, steam-boated on the western rivers till 1861, when he returned to Pittsburgh, Pa., where he engaged principally in the oil business, producing and manufacturing. Eventually he became one of the editors and proprietors of the Pittsburgh Gazette, continuing from 1870 to 1876, and has been doing more or less newspaper-work up to the present time. Politically he is a republican. In 1874 and 1880 he was elected to the legislature, serving as speaker of the house for two years. Mr. Long is at present a broker in stocks, and contributes to the home papers and New York periodicals.

John Edwin Rigg, physician, Wilkinsburg, was born in Washington county, Pa., October 13, 1855. His father, Newton Rigg, was born and reared in Washington county, where he engaged in farming, and died in 1859, aged sixty-eight years. He was a very active supporter of the government during the civil war. He was twice married, and had three children by his first wife. His second wife, mother of Dr. Rigg, was Margaret Jennings, née Wmnetz, and also had three children by her first husband. She now resides in Washington county. They had two sons and two daughters: Ella, John E., Laura and Mark Allison. The last named is a Methodist Episcopal clergyman, now in Jamestown, N. Y. Mrs. Rigg is a granddaughter of William Wallace, who deserted the British army to join the American, and distinguished himself in the latter service. Gens. Lew and W. H. Wallace, who were prominent figures in the war of the rebellion, were his grandsons. When thirteen years old John E. Rigg went with his father to Illinois; after spending nearly a year there, entered a store at New Salem, Fayette county, Pa. In 1874 he secured a small interest in a drugstore at Belle Vernon, which he managed, and became interested in the study of medicine. After pursuing a course at Long Island Medical College and at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Baltimore, he began practice in 1879 at Stoneville, Westmoreland county. He located in Wilkinsburg in October, 1886, immediately after taking a post-graduate course under the Polyclinic College in the Philadelphia hospitals. In 1888 he built a handsome residence and office on Wood street which he occupies. He is a member of the county, state and American Medical associations, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, I. O. O. F., R. A. and O. C. F., and is a thorough republican.

James Alexander Wilson, builder, Wilkinsburg, was born at Glade Mills, Butler county, Pa., January 25, 1832. His grandfather, John Wilson, of County Donegal, Ireland, visited America when a young man, returned home, married Rose Gibson, and remained there until all his children, one daughter and six sons, were born. In 1832 he settled on a farm within a mile of Centreville, Butler county, where he died at the age of seventy-five. His children were Bethia (who died unmarried), Charles, Ezekiel, Samuel, William, Joseph and John. Joseph, who was born in 1814, kept a store at Glade Mills, and bought a farm near there, which he cultivated several years. When a young man he worked ten years on the canal, and was four years employed as driver and clerk by a Pittsburgh merchant. Since 1886 he has dwelt in Wilkinsburg. He has always been in religion a Methodist, and in politics a democrat. In 1849 he married Sarah Umstead, who was born near Harrisonburg, Dutch descent. She died in November, 1884, aged fifty-two years. Alfred, the eldest child, resides in Butler, and the others, J. A., Margaret (Mrs. James Wike), Maria, Joseph and Samuel D., in Wilkinsburg. James A. Wilson was reared on a farm, and received a common-school education. When seventeen years old he began work as a carpenter, and in 1876 began contracting at Butler. Three years later he came to Wilkinsburg, and in 1885 opened a lumberyard, and deals in all kinds of carpenter's supplies. He is now a member of the borough council. He is a republican, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. December 30, 1873, he married Samantha Ada, daughter of Malcom Graham, of Scotch descent. Mrs. Wilson died in December, 1887, at the age of thirty-two, leaving a daughter. Luella May, born May 9, 1876. In 1889, Mr. Wilson married Miss Margaret J., daughter of John Hamnett, Jr., a prominent leather-dealer of Pittsburgh, Pa.

Capt. D. S. H. Gilmore. Among the early pioneers leaving their homes in Massachusetts to settle on the frontier, as Ohio was then considered, was the father of D. S. H. Gilmore. In making his selection of a home, his choice rested on a portion of Meigs county, near the village of Pomory. Here he located, and the subject of our sketch was born August 18, 1818. Capt. Gilmore was educated in Marietta, Ohio. When quite a young man he concluded to commence business on the river, as he was not very robust, thinking his life upon the rivers would be most conducive to his health. Coming to Pittsburgh, he was introduced to the firm of Scaife, Atkinson & Oakley, by his friend J. B. Horton, Esq., one of the most prominent business-men of Allegheny county. One of the boats owned by this firm was commanded by Capt. Charles Fiske, with whom Capt. Gilmore took charge of the office. In a few years, by his sterling qualities, fine business capacity, undaunted courage and unquestionable integrity, he made for himself a name and place in the great work of transportation. He built a number of boats, among them two New Yorks, Salem, Rochester, Hudson, Arkansas, J. R. Gilmore and several others. Later he was largely interested in the Missouri Transportation company, and was a member of the firm of Evans, Dallas & Gilmore, of Pittsburgh.

In 1873 Capt. Gilmore moved from Allegheny to the beautiful suburb of Sewickley, situated about twelve miles below the city on the Ohio river, having retired from active business some twenty-five years previously. He enjoyed his home life, had the sincere respect of the community, and passed quietly away on December 28, 1887, deeply lamented by all who knew him.

R. T. Carothers, proprietor of the National House, McKeesport, is a native of Sewickley township, Westmoreland county, Pa., and was born and reared on a farm. He followed agricultural pursuits until 1882, when he embarked in the livery business in McKeesport. In May, 1883, he purchased the leading livery establishment in the borough, and has since done a large and successful business in that line. In February, 1884, he leased the National House, the principal hotel in the city, which he has since successfully conducted, and which he has made the most popular hostelry in McKeesport. The uniform courtesy with which Mr. Carothers entertains his guests has placed him in high esteem with the traveling public, and the hearty welcome the weary traveler always receives at the National makes him at once feel at home. Mr. Carothers is an active, public-spirited and enterprising citizen, and is identified with various other business interests besides the above mentioned. Politically he is a stanch republican.

James Gardiner Coffin (deceased) was born February 16, 1816, in New Lisbon, Ohio, son of Nathan Emery and Eunice (Coffin) Coffin, natives of Nantucket, R. I., and descendants of Tristam Coffin, one of the oldest families in New England. The Coffin family is one of the ancient aristocratic families of England. Mr. Coffin came to Pittsburgh when a young man, and filled the position of bookkeeper for McVey & Co. for a number of years. After that he accepted the agency of the Franklin Fire Insurance company, of Philadelphia, which he retained until his death. He was appointed general agent of the same company in Philadelphia for several years following the Chicago fire; during that time he temporarily resided in Philadelphia. In 1853 he built a beautiful home on Bidwell street, Allegheny City, now occupied by Joseph Horne, Esq., where he lived with his family until 1870. In that year he built the headstead at Leetsdale, "Elmridge," where he lived until his death, which occurred January 5, 1887. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and was a man of sound judgment and strict integrity of character. Mr. Coffin was married to Isabella C. Anderson, of Somerset, Pa., by whom he had six children.

Rev. Samuel Henderson Moore, Wilkinsburg, son of John C. and Abigail Moore, was born near Butler, October 5, 1855. His mother was born in the same house as himself, and his father near by. Samuel N. Moore, grandfather of Samuel H., was a schoolteacher, and came from Westmoreland county to Butler county in 1823; he was an abolitionist, and did all in his power to aid fleeing slaves, as did his son. The United Presbyterian Church represents their religious associations. Mrs. Abigail Moore was a daughter of Col. William Meigs, and died in 1890 at the age of twenty-four years, Samuel H. being her only child. John C. has since married, and has four daughters and a son by his second wife. He taught twenty-four terms in one schoolhouse, and has always lived on the same farm. Samuel H. Moore attended the public schools and spent three years under the tutelage of Prof. W. I. Brugh and Rev. J. W. Hamilton, at Witherspoon Institute in Butler. He entered the sophomore class of Westminster College at New Wilmington in 1872, and graduated three years later. He then took a three years' course at Allegheny United Presbyterian Theological Seminary, graduating in 1878, and during the second year taught the Greenville High-school, keeping up with his studies.

He was licensed by the U. P. Presbyterian to preach, but preferring the ordinances of the Presbyterian Church, he was ordained in 1879 by the Mahoning presbytery of that church, and took charge of a church at Poland, Ohio, October 1, 1879. He went from there to Imperial, and from that church came to Wilkinsburg, February 1, 1885. During one year of his labor at Poland he received over ninety members, and since coming to this place the church has grown from 180 to 420 communicants. This is partly owing to the rapid growth of the borough, and to the strength and labors of the pastor. He is a worker for prohibition, but still gives his political allegiance to the republican party. May 17, 1877, he wedded Carrie S., daughter of D. F. and Zenesta McCreadie, of New Wilaugton, and they have three daughters: Abigail and Zenesta, born May 27, 1878, and Mary, born January 21, 1886. All the people mentioned in this sketch are of Scotch-Irish descent.

Robert M. Coyle, cashier of the Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, Sharpsburg, was born in that town, August 1, 1839. His father, Samuel Coyle, a native of Logan's Ferry, of Irish extraction, was a tanner by trade, and as early as 1832 came to Sharpsburg. Here he built a small place on North Canal and Fifteenth streets and carried on business for many years. He married Nancy McElheny, a native of Allegheny county, who bore him two children, Robert being the eldest. He received his education at the first public school of Sharpsburg, and at an early age learned the trade of tanner and currier. This he followed until 1857, when he was employed as clerk by Lewis, Dalzell & Co., and in 1857 he was appointed manager of the company's store until 1878, when he resigned to accept his present position. Mr. Coyle is a Republican; was burgess of the town in 1882 and has held other positions of trust. He married, in 1832, Sarah McMasters, who died in 1873, the mother of four children, three of whom are living: Mary, Sarah and Robert, Jr. Mr. Coyle's second wife is Annie, daughter of Eph. Love, an early settler in this community. Mr. and Mrs. Coyle have one child, George. They are members of the Presbyterian church.

A B. STARR, superintendent Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago railroad, Sewickley, is a native of New York city, where his father, Henry B. Starr, was a prominent merchant. Mr. Starr was educated in the New Haven schools till his seventeenth year, when he entered the Polytechnic Institute at Troy, and here graduated at the age of twenty-one, in the class of 1869. For a short time he was employed on the New York city survey. In February, 1870, he went to Erie, where he was assistant engineer of the Philadelphia and Erie division of the Pennsylvania railroad. He was soon promoted to the position of engineer, and finally to superintendent of the Sunbury division. December 1, 1881, he was appointed superintendent of the Eastern division of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago railroad, which position he now occupies with ability.

FRANK SEMPLE, private secretary, Sewickley. William Semple, grandfather of our subject, was born in 1771, near Dublin, Ireland, came to America in 1796, and at Trenton, N. J., learned architecture. He came to Pittsburgh in 1800, and worked on the old courthouse on the Diamond. He followed his trade till the latter part of his life, when he kept a hardware store. He died in 1829. He married Anna, daughter of Charles Bonner, who fought in all the principal battles of the Revolution, and they had nine children: Nancy, Alexander B., William M., Samuel W., Mary C., Charles, Ellen, John B. and Frank. Of these, Samuel W. was a retail dry-goods merchant in Louisville, and later was in the iron business in the Pennsylvania mountains. Another son, John B. Semple, the father of Frank, was born in Pittsburgh, where he was in the wholesale dry goods business, and afterward, and at the time of his death, a member of the firm of Semple & Jones, bankers. He married Mary J. Blair, of Washington, Pa., and they became the parents of three children: Mrs. Louisa Clarke, Frank and Mrs. Mary Sharpe. At his death, in 1873, his son Frank continued the banking business, and in 1881 his partner, John B. Jones, sold his interest, the firm then being known as Semple & Thompson, who conducted the business till 1888, when our subject sold his interest to Mr. Thompson, and has since then been engaged in the railroad and coal business. He was educated in Pittsburgh, clerked in a dry-goods store, and later in a bank, after which he entered Yale College. Later he accompanied Prof. Benj. Silliman, of Yale College, as private secretary, inspecting the mines of California. At present he is attending to the private business of William Thaw.

FRANK S. PERSHING, physician, Wilkinsburg, was born in Wheatfield township, Indiana county, Pa., July 20, 1854. His paternal great-grandfather came from Alsace, Germany, in 1748. His grandfather Frederic settled in Indiana county about 1775. He died in 1843. Daniel, his oldest son, now in his eighty-fourth year, has always lived on the farm where his father settled. In 1835 he married Eliza Hice, who became the mother of ten children; she died in 1848. In 1850 he married Martha Fisher, and she was the mother of three sons. The eldest is a Methodist Episcopal clergyman, now located in Mount Pleasant, Pa., and Daniel, the youngest, is a prosperous merchant at New Florence, Pa. Two sons of the first family, Joseph N. and H. H., are Methodist ministers. Dr. Pershing was reared on the farm, and attended Mount Union College, Ohio. He graduated from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in the class of 1878-79, and at once began to practice at Wilkinsburg. He came here without means, and by his skill and energy has achieved uncommon success. He is now building a fine brick residence on Penn avenue, and owns other property in the borough. He is chairman of Barnes Brothers Laundry company, limited, which employs over a hundred people in Pittsburgh. He is a republican in politics and a Methodist in churchmanship. September 3, 1885, he wedded Kate Lillian, daughter of Adam Ently, of Mansfield, Ohio.

REV. JESSE FRANKLIN CORE, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Wilkinsburg, was born at Scenery Hill, Washington county, Pa., September 15, 1846. His grandfather, John Christian Core, was a native of Maryland, and a pioneer of Monongalia county, that state. His father, Christian, was of German descent, and lived in the old red hotel on the National Pike, just outside Hagerstown. He hauled in the liberty-pole that was set up in Hagerstown at the outbreak of the Revolution, and served as a soldier in that struggle. Jesse, son of J. C. Core, was born in Virginia, and married Mary Michael, of the same state. David, father of Mary Michael, was a soldier in the war of 1812, as was also David, son of J. C. Core. Jesse P. Core settled in Washington county, where his son, Rev. Jesse F., was born. In early life the latter worked on a farm and attended the common schools. In 1863 he raised children: Elisha P., Mary E., Sarah J. (Mrs. J. B. Billick), James D. (deceased) and David P. Elisha P. Douglass was reared in Elizabeth township, and educated at the University of Wooster, Ohio. He began the study of law in November, 1878, with Maj. R. E. Stewart, of Pittsburgh; was admitted to the Allegheny county bar February 20, 1889, and in November of the same year located in McKeesport, where he has since resided, with offices both in that borough and Pittsburgh. Mr. Douglass married, August 24, 1889, Elvira P., daughter of Peter and Elizabeth (McClellan) Weddell, of Elizabeth township, and has two sons, Howard Weddell and Earle Le Roy. Mr. Douglass is a member of the United Presbyterian Church; has just served a term as chairman of his ward in McKeesport, of which body he was elected chairman in 1888. He is a member of the board of directors of the People's bank of McKeesport; is solicitor for that institution, and also assistant solicitor for the McKeesport & Belle Vernon Railroad company. In politics he is a democrat.

Hiram B. Sinclair, president of the First National bank, McKeesport, was born in Elizabeth township, Allegheny county, August 8, 1815, a son of Samuel and Elizabeth (McKee) Sinclair. His paternal grandfather, Samuel Sinclair, a native of Maryland, and of Irish descent, settled in Elizabeth soon after the Revolution, and cleared and improved a farm where Reynoldston now stands, and there died. He had but one child, Samuel, who succeeded to the homestead, residing there until his death. The wife of the latter was Elizabeth, a daughter of Robert McKe, a native of Ireland, and a pioneer of Versailles township, whose father, Robert McKe, built the first courthouse in Allegheny county, on the site of the present market-house in Pittsburgh. Samuel and Elizabeth Sinclair had children as follows: Jane (Mrs. William Edmundson), Rebecca (Mrs. Isaac Edmundson), Mary (Mrs. John Peoples), Nancy (Mrs. John A. Robinson), Robert, Louisa (Mrs. Samuel M. Rose), Elizabeth (Mrs. J. W. Edgar), Presley and Hiram B., who is the only survivor of the family.

Hiram B. Sinclair was reared on his father's farm, and is now the only survivor of the family. At the age of twenty-one he located in McKeesport, and embarked in steamboating and the coal trade, in which he was engaged until 1865. For upward of fifty years he has owned the ferry between McKeesport and Elizabeth (now Lincoln township). He was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of McKeesport, and is now (1888) serving his third year as president of the same. He married Sarah J., daughter of John and Eliza (Work) Cunningham, of Mifflin township, by whom he-has one daughter, Olean F. (Mrs. T. A. Miller). Mr. Sinclair is a prominent and enterprising citizen, and has held various local offices. In politics he is a democrat.

T. D. GARDNER, assistant cashier People's bank, McKeesport, was born in that city, March 10, 1857, a son of Fred J. and Ellen (Hughes) Gardner. His father was a native of Manchester, England, and his mother of Dublin, Ireland. They came to America early in the '50's and located in Pittsburgh, and soon after in McKeesport, where his father, a baker by trade, carried on a bakery until his death, in 1863, and which was afterward carried on by his widow in 1872. Their children were Sadie (Mrs. A. M. Kennedy), Carrie (Mrs. Isaac Reager), Mary (Mrs. Benjamin Shellenberger), Fred J. and Thomas D., our subject. The last named was reared and educated in McKeesport; at the age of sixteen entered the office of the National Tube-works company as office-boy, and later worked at the carpenter's trade three years. He then served as a clerk in the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad office and a half years, and in July, 1880, was appointed teller of the People's bank; in 1882 was elected assistant cashier of the same, which position he has since creditably filled. In June, 1881, he married Nellie, daughter of Isaac N. and Jennie (Thompson) Downs, of West Newton, Pa., and has two children, Edmund R. and Harry C. Mr. Gardner is a member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is a steward. He is treasurer of the Royal Arcanum; politically he is a republican.

R. J. MURRAY, M. D., Sewickley, was born June 13, 1845, in Pittsburgh, Pa. His paternal grandfather, John Murray, was of Scotch descent, and a merchant of County Armagh, Ireland, his native county; he married a Mrs. Campbell, and they reared a large family, of which Capt. John Murray was one of the oldest, in 1810. He died early in the year 1889. He came to America in 1828, and settled in this county; lived in Pittsburgh many years. When still a boy he went on the river as a steward on the Home during a great flood; he steambombed about thirty years; was employed by the firm of Stone & Bros. twenty-five years as engineer. He owns two hundred acres of land in Ohio township, where he resides. He was married to Miss Eliza, daughter of James Graham, and they have five children: Dr. Robert J. (our subject), Albert W., William G., Rev. John F. and Mrs. Millie J. Watson. Mr. Murray has been an active member of the Blackburn Methodist Episcopal Church for thirty years; politically he is a republican; he is a member of the I. O. O. F. The subject of this memoir was educated at the Pittsburgh and Sewickley academies; subsequently read medicine with Dr. McCready, of Sewickley, and Dr. F. Maury, of Philadelphia. He graduated from Jefferson Medical College in class of 1867, and located at Sewickley, where he has an extensive practice. He was married to Miss Ellen S., youngest daughter of Rev. Rob-father in business; Eulalia Anna, the eldest (wife of Jonas Johnston), resides in Wilkinsburg, and Lillian Margaret is with her parents.

Dr. CYRUS R. STUCKSLAGER, cashier People's bank, McKeesport, was born in Fayette county, Pa., February 27, 1829, a son of Charles and Susan (Robinson) Stuckslager, natives of Lancaster county, Pa., and pioneers of Fayette county. He was reared on a farm in his native county, and his early education was acquired in the common schools. In 1852 he graduated with honors of the Greek salutatory from Allegheny College, Meadville, Pa.; the same year went south, and taught school in Southern and Middle Tennessee, and in the meantime studied medicine, and attended his first course and lectured and the University of Nashville in 1854. He took a second course at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Pa., and graduated from that institution in 1856. That year he began the practice of his profession in Fayette City, Pa., and in 1857 married Martha C., daughter of Jacob and Delilah (Corson) Strawn, of Pennsylvania, and removed to Kansas, where he was in active practice until 1862. He then entered the United States army as surgeon, serving until the close of the war, and during that time was captured and held a prisoner two months. When the struggle was ended he located in McKeesport, and in 1863 was located in McKeesport, and in 1863 was elected justice of the peace of that town, which office he has held for twenty-five years.
His wife was Jane, a daughter of Robert and Anna (Crawford) Morrow, of Robinson township, Allegheny county, by whom he has two children, Anna E. (Mrs. E. F. Woods) and Jennie M. (Mrs. J. C. Smith). Mr. Berry has been burgess of McKeesport one term.
He is a member of the Presbyterian Church;
politically a republican.

J. C. ANDERSON, farmer, Sewickley, is a son of Hon. Robert Anderson, who was born March 23, 1776, in Lancaster county, Pa., where his ancestors were counted among the pioneers, being of Scotch-Irish extraction.
Early in life he went to Washington county, where he farmed, and latterly he turned to this leading spirit in every good enterprise. In 1809 he was elected sheriff of that county, and served three years. In 1811 he was elected to the house of representatives, and re-elected the following year. He took an active part in the work at home during the war of 1812.
He was identified with the democratic party,
and was its recognized leader in his county.
In 1825 he came to Leet township, Allegheny county, and was justice of the peace here for many years, residing on the old Leet farm. He afterward bought the farm where our subject now resides, and on which he met his death by accident, November 11, 1838, while doing an act of charity, hauling a load of wood to a poor widow, and on going down hill the ox-cart upset with him and broke his neck. Hon. Robert Anderson was twice married. His first wife, see Elizabeth Agnew, died, leaving four children: Samuel, Robert, Eliza and Bryce C. His second wife, see Jemima Taylor, was born February 4, 1878;
she died September 4, 1864. Eight children blessed this union: Margaret, James, Julia, Hattie, William, David, John and Mary. Of these, David has lived on the homestead since 1851.

Our subject was born in 1828 in Leetsdale.
He farmed till 1849, when he joined Capt.
Ancrum's Pittsburgh and California Enterprise company, numbering over three hundred persons. They crossed the plains, and he mined for gold a short time in California, where he afterward owned a large stock-yard. In 1857 he turned to this leading spirit in business for a number of years. In 1859 he

James H. BERRY, justice of the peace,
McKeesport, was born in Mifflin township, Allegheny county, Pa., August 3, 1815, a son of Daniel and Ellen (McNeeland) Berry. His father, a native of Mrs. of, and a tailor, settled, about 1812, in Mifflin township, where he worked at his trade a number of years, and in 1848 located in McKeesport, residing there until his death, in 1854. He (Daniel) had seven children: James H., Caroline (deceased), Eliza J. (Mrs. James O'Neil), Mary
A. (Mrs. Robert Healey), Oliver P. (deceased), Ellen M. (Mrs. S. P. Ludwick, deceased) and Daniel W. (deceased), born in this county, in 1790, a daughter of William McNeeland, a native of Ireland, and a pioneer of Mifflin township, this county.
James H. was reared in Mifflin township, and worked at the tailor's trade until thirty-five years of age. He then engaged in the grocery business for a number of years. In 1859 he

336 HISTORY OF ALLEGHENY COUNTY.
drug business and devoted his entire attention to the patent medicine, which is still carried on by Cochran Fleming, a brother, under the firm of Fleming Brothers, 24 Wood street, Pittsburgh. John Fleming exhibited tact and enterprise, and has been eminently successful in business. Mr. Fleming came to Sewickley in 1833, making it his home, and became identified with the growth of the place. Politically he was a Whig and a Republican. He died November 2, 1870.

John Semple, physician, Wilkinsburg, was born in McCandless (then Pine) township, February 16, 1823. His grandfather, James Semple, a native of Cumberland county, came to Allegheny county in 1789, and owned a large tract, now the site of Hoboken, where he lived and died. He was the second sheriff of Allegheny county, and was twice a member of the assembly. Soon after locating he was obliged to leave his land on account of the Indians, and while a resident at East Liberty a son was born and named Robert A. The latter married Mary Simpson, a native of Chester county, and settled in 1816 on the farm where he died, near Wildwood station. He passed away in 1836, aged ninety-three years, his helpmate having preceded him by one year, in her eighty-eighth year. They had lived together sixty years. For sixty years he was an elder in the Cross Roads Presbyterian Church, and during fifty-four years was never absent from session. He was an anti-masonic whig, afterward a Republican. Of his eight children, seven grew to maturity: James, John, Eliza (Huchman, deceased), Mary (deceased at the age of eighteen), Robert, Sarah (Ferguson) and Silas. Dr. Semple was reared on the farm, and at the age of eighteen commenced under the instruction of Rev. Dr. Guthrie at Bakers-town; afterward he attended a boarding-school at Mt. Pleasant, Washington county, and Jefferson College, Cannonsburg. He read medicine with Drs. Speer and Brooks in Pittsburgh, and afterward studied at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia.

After practicing a year in Allegheny City, Dr. Semple located in Wilkinsburg, where he has since remained, and has built up an extensive practice; he has given free attention to the County farm, Old Ladies' home and Mute school. He is a member of the County, State, American and International Medical societies, the Masonic fraternity and the Presbyterian Church, in which he has been thirty-eight years a member of session. He is active in supporting schools, and sustains the Republican party. In 1848 he married Isabella Russell Smith, who died in 1852, leaving a daughter, Mary I. R. S., now resident with her father. In 1854 the doctor married Nancy Thompson, whose only child, Maggie Jane Sibley, died in 1858, the daughter of Dr. J. W. Sibley.

Dr. James E. Huey (deceased) was born in McKeesport, May 9, 1823, a son of George and Maria (Evans) Huey. His paternal grandfather, Samuel Huey, a native of Ireland, settled in McKeesport in 1804, and was a prominent physician in his day. George, father of James E., born in the United States in 1789, was a physician of prominence, and practiced his profession in McKeesport all his life. James E. Huey graduated from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1846, and practiced his profession in McKeesport until his death, in 1878. He never took part in political affairs, but was public spirited, and was interested in all matters tending toward the growth and development of his native town. He married, in 1843, Isabella, daughter of John and Catherine (Gordon) Frich, of Somersett, Pa., and had eight children, of whom three survive: James, Anna M. (Mrs. J. P. Coursin) and Rosalind W., the latter of whom married, in 1877, D. George, son of Henry and Ruth (Hill) Becket, of Wolverhampton, England. Mr. Becket was reared and educated in his native town, came to America in 1872 and settled in McKeesport in 1875, where he has since been in the employ of the National Tube-works company. He is a member of the K. of H. and Heptasophs; in politics a Republican. Mr. and Mrs. Becket have one son, Charles F., and both are members of the Episcopal Church.

Michael Bright, Sr., was born September 10, 1762, in Lancaster county, Pa. He located in the vicinity of Pittsburgh in the year 1814, on what was then known as Coal hill. Here he lived two years, and then moved twenty miles up the Allegheny river, where he purchased a tract of land composed of about three hundred acres, running from the river back three-quarters of a mile. There were no improvements when he came here, except a log house. Mr. Bright built a new and comfortable log house at once, and afterward a small brick residence, in which he lived until the time of his death; this little brick house is still standing and in good repair. He married Barbara Winters, of Lancaster county, Pa., and the following-named child was born to them: Jacob, Catherine, Margaret, Michael, Jr., Henry, Sarah Elizabeth, Barbara, George, David, Samuel, William, Mary, Peter, Adam. Mrs. Bright died August 28, 1833, and Mr. Bright's second wife was Mrs. Margaret Beamer. He died in March, 1847. They were by profession Lutherans. At the death of his father Peter took the farm.

Peter Bright, born in Lancaster county, Pa., January 6, 1805. He was a potter by trade, having served his apprenticeship in Greensburg, Pa., but made a business of farming after the death of his father. He always took an active part in township affairs; was a member of school board, and held other offices in the township. He gave the lot on which the United Presbyterian church is built. He resided on the bank of the river, where his daughters now reside. He was married to Margaret V. Par- sell, of Plum township, this county, and to them were born eleven children, as follows: Harriet (Mrs. McNickle, deceased), Margaret
(Mrs. Samuel Fullerton), Adam (married to Elizabeth Hulton; he died at Andersonville in 1863, having served two years in the army), Charles R. (enlisted in the army in October, 1861, passed through the battle of Gettysburg, and was killed July 10, 1863, near Boonesboro, Mo.), Sarah B. (Mrs. Kernaly), Michael (who died in infancy), Sally (Mrs. William Anderson), Peter Winters (who died in March, 1868), Rachel K., Eliza A., Mary J., at the old home. Peter Bright died November 10, 1858; his wife Margaret died July 2, 1872; she was a member of the United Presbyterian Church.

George E. Huey, receiving clerk National Rolling-mill, McKeesport, was born in that city August 25, 1843, a son of Samuel C. and Susan (Craighead) Huey, and a grandson of George Huey. Samuel C. Huey was a Scotch-Irishman, who came to America in 1784, and located in Gettysburg, removing in 1796 to Westmoreland county, and in 1894 to McKeesport; he was a prominent physician of his day, and reared a family of three sons—Samuel, George and Daniel—and three daughters. Of the sons George was a physician, and practiced in McKeesport for many years; was a surgeon in the war of 1812, in which his brother Daniel participated as a soldier. His children were Samuel C., James, George, Coleman, Alexander, Eleanor (Mrs. Robert Sampson), Anna (Mrs. Theodore Marvin) and Emily. Of these, Samuel C., who was a tanner, established the first tannery in McKeesport, and for many years kept a general store. His wife was a daughter of John Craighead, a native of Elizabeth, Allegheny county, and their children were George E. and Olivecetta (deceased). The subject of this sketch was reared in McKeesport; is a druggist by profession, and carried on a drugstore in McKeesport many years. He married Leonora, daughter of Samuel and Isabella (Cook) Meinert, of McKeesport, and has four children: Samuel, George, John and Robert. Mr. Huey has been in the employ of the National Tube-works company in his present capacity six years. In politics he is a democrat.

James C. Campbell, farmer, postoffice Sharpburg, was born in O'Hara (then Indiana) township in 1832, a son of Thomas and Mary (Crawford) Campbell, Thomas, who was a native of County Derry, Ireland, immigrated to America about 1828, and two years after his arrival he married. Four children were born to him, two of whom are living. Thomas was always a farmer, and died in 1848, aged forty-two years; his widow lived to the ripe age of eighty-six years. James C. was born and reared on the farm where he now resides. He married Mary, daughter of Samuel Borland, to whom were born four children, whose names are Annie E., Crawford, Mary C. and Sadie M. The mother of these children died, and Mr. Campbell then married Isabella, daughter of Alexander and Isabella Marshall. Three children are the result of this marriage: William O., Laura B. and Martha Jane. The only members of Mr. Campbell's family not at home are Annie E. (married to Thomas E. Miller, and they have one son, Howard, and one daughter, Edna Bell) and Crawford (married to Anna Mary Wragg, and they have one son, George C.). Mr. Campbell has always followed farming and now owns one-half of the 120 acres purchased by his great-grandfather, James Crawford. He has held many township offices and positions of trust. He and family are members of the Presbyterian Church; politically he is a republican.

The Meinert Family. Since 1846 this family has been represented in Allegheny county, Pa. In that year John Meinert, a native of Prussia, came to America and located in Allegheny county. He purchased, in 1860, fifty acres of land in Indiana township (now O'Hara), afterward making additional purchases of sixty acres. He married Frances Lengler, of Bavaria, Germany, and eight children were born to them, seven of whom are living, three sons and four daughters. John died in 1881, aged sixty-three years; his widow survives him. John Adam, who now resides on part of the homestead tract, was born in Sharpsburg in 1850, and when two years of age was brought by his parents to O'Hara township. He now owns thirty acres of his father's farm. In 1876 he married Kate, daughter of Henry Myers, and six children have blessed their union: Mary, Annie, Rosa, Birdie, John and Michael.

M. G. Meinert was born in O'Hara township in 1854, the fourth child of John and Frances (Leungler) Meinert. He was educated at the public schools and the school of the German Catholics at Sharpsburg, and has always been a farmer. He now resides on the homestead, and owns forty acres of the old homestead farm. He married, in 1878, Annie, daughter of George Gloss, and four sons and two daughters having been born to them. His sons are: J. Ambrosius, N. Edward, C. Rachel, M. Martha, L. Henry and M. George. Mr. Meinert is a member of St. Mary's Church in Sharpsburg; politically he is a democrat.

James P. Learn, dry-goods merchant, McKeesport, was born in Bell township, Westmoreland county, Pa., in 1815, a son of Andrew and Fanny (Piper) Learn, his parents having been among the pioneers of Westmoreland county. Our subject was reared on a farm and educated in the common schools. He settled, in 1858, in McKeesport, where for six years he served as clerk in a general store. In 1864 he embarked in trade for himself at Camden station, and soon thereafter engaged in business in McKeesport, in partnership with several others, continuing in business until 1883, since which time he has been conducting a successful dry-goods business by himself. His wife was Rachel King, daughter of James King, a prominent coal-dealer of this county in his day. Mr. Learn is an active member of the First Presbyterian Church, and has been superintendent of the Sabbath-school seventeen years.
He is a member of the McKeesport school board and a director of the People's bank; in politics he is a republican.

Andrew Howard, glass-manufacturer, Wilkinsburg, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., September 5, 1837, the eldest child of John and Eliza (Kelly) Howard. His grandfather, John Howard, came from the north of Ireland to Pittsburgh when our subject's father was a child. The latter died there in 1885, aged seventy-nine; his widow now resides in Wilkinsburg, aged seventy. They had seven children, all yet living, and all save one, Joseph, who lives in Chicago, residents of within fifty miles of Pittsburgh. Andrew attended the city schools, and was also instructed by a private tutor. When eighteen years old he was a bookkeeper in a grocery-store; later he was employed by Clarke & Co., being at the same time their assistant cashier, agent of the Allentown Fast Freight line and assistant treasurer of the Star Union line. He afterward became cashier of the Union Line railroad. In 1881 he organized the Phoenix Glass company, at Pittsburgh, of which he has been president ever since. In 1872 Mr. Howard became a resident of Wilkinsburg, having purchased a home on South street. February 9, 1882, he married Margaret, daughter of Amos and Elizabeth (Sampey) Potter, residents of Fayette county, where all were born. The family are of Irish descent. Mr. and Mrs. Howard have five children: Annie, Bessie, Charles E., Josephine and Thomas. The family attend the Presbyterian Church. In politics Mr. Howard is a republican.

Matthew C. Crawford, farmer, postoffice Sharpsburg. This family dates its connection with Pennsylvania as far back as 1784, when James Crawford emigrated from his home in County Derry, Ireland, and settled in Indiana county, Pa., and purchased or took up a tract of land. He married Sarah Good and they had eight children born to them. In 1808 James purchased 120 acres of land in O'Hara township, originally the property of Judge Young, of Greensburg, Westmoreland county, Pa.; in the spring of 1809 moved with his family to this property, where he remained until his death. Matthew, the only one of his sons who grew to maturity, was born in Blairsville, Indiana county, Pa., in 1827, and at the death of his father he became owner of the land. He married Catherine Beham, of Westmoreland county, and five children blessed their union, three of whom grew to be men and women. Matthew followed farming all his life, and died December 26, 1888. His wife died in 1879, aged about seventy-eight years. The old homestead is now owned by Matthew C., our subject, and a maiden sister who resides together on the property. All of the 120 acres are yet in the family, one-half being now owned by a married sister, Mrs. James Campbell. The family have always been faithful members of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics whigs and republicans.

Chris. H. Wernke, carriage-manufacturer, McKeesport, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 5, 1858, a son of John F. and Anna M. (Bonnin) Wernke, natives of Germany, who have been residents of Allegheny county upward of forty years. John F., a stone-mason by trade, has been a resident of Pittsburgh since he first settled in the county; was employed in one planing-mill twenty-eight years, and retired from business in 1878. He has three children living: Mary E. (Mrs. H. W. Wilker), F. William and Christian H. The last named was reared in Pittsburgh, and educated in the public schools and Western University. He served an apprenticeship of three years at carriage-painting, which trade he has followed since fourteen years of age. He located in McKeesport in 1878, and in May, 1885, embarked in carriage-manufacturing with his brother, F. William, under firm name of Wernke Brothers. Mr. Wernke was married in 1882 to Emma C., daughter of George W. and Mary (Henry) Byerly, of McKeesport, and they have three children: Mame, Fred and Erma. Mr. Wernke is known as the pioneer musician of McKeesport. He is business-manager and director of the Electric orchestra. Politically he is a republican.

Rev. Joseph S. TraveUli (deceased) was a native of Philadelphia, Pa., born April 21, 1809, to Francis and Abigail (Munday) Travelli, former a native of Genoa, Italy, and latter of England. His early school-training was meager, and at the age of eleven he was apprenticed to a scrivener and lawyer, whose death, after a time, released the lad from a calling distasteful to him. At the age of fifteen he made a confession of faith in the Second Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia. Afterward he attended school at Abingdon, near Philadelphia; taught an academy at Churchville, Md., and in 1831 entered Jefferson College, of Pennsylvania, from which he graduated in the fall of 1835. The latter part of that year he entered the Western Theological Seminary, and soon thereafter was superintendent of the Sabbath-school of the First Presbyterian Church of Allegheny, and in 1834 of the Sunday-school of the Third Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh. He was licensed by the presbytery of Philadelphia in October, 1835, and ordained by the same presbytery in April, 1836. In 1836 he was married to Susan, daughter of John Irwin, of Allegheny, and the same year sailed for Singapore, where both he and his wife entered upon their labors. In a few years they returned home with impaired health, and in 1843 they revived the academy at Sewickley, where they devoted themselves assiduously to the instruction and care of the many committed to their charge. After retiring from this academy Mr. Travelli devoted himself to works of philanthropy. Several years after the death of his first wife, he married Miss Jane Irwin. He died, leaving two daughters and two sons. One son, James D., gave his life for his country at the battle of Antietam.
Charles Schoeller, real-estate dealer, McKeesport, was born in Elizabeth township, Allegheny county, June 26, 1847, a son of Michael and Caroline (Weitzel) Schoeller, natives of Frankfort, Germany, who settled in Elizabeth township in 1845. There Michael, who was a farmer, resided until his death, which occurred February 22, 1851. He was a prominent citizen, a stockholder in the Youghiogheny Navigation company, and was a successful farmer and business man. His children were J. Frederick, John L. (killed at second battle of Bull run), A. Ernest, J. William, J. Michael (deceased), Caroline F. (deceased), Charles and Henry L., all of whom were born in Germany except the last two. The subject of this sketch was reared in McKeesport from four years of age, and was educated in the public schools. In 1867 he embarked in business as a book and news dealer on Market street, in which he was successfully engaged until 1884, since which time he has been attending to his real-estate business. October 4, 1883, he married Agnes I. Immonen, daughter of Augustus and Dorcas (Bennett) Imsen, who were descendants of pioneers in the window-glass manufacture of Allegheny county. By this union there are two children, H. Paul and Lulu. Mr. Schoeller is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; in politics he is independent.

Robert Watson, retired, Sewickley, was born January 25, 1814, in Pittsburgh, Pa., son of William and Hannah (Baldwin) Watson. The father was a native of Dumbartonshire, Scotland, and came to America in 1800, settling in Pittsburgh. In the year following his arrival he started in the stone-cutting business for himself, next door to the Monongahela House. He made two trips to his native home for the benefit of his health, and died in 1837, politically he was a Whig. The mother died aged eighty-four years; she was a native of this county, and daughter of John and Jane (West) Baldwin. They were the parents of three children: Mrs. Isabella Grier, Robert and Mrs. Jean Birmingham. Robert Watson learned the marble-cutter's trade in Allegheny, and followed it with marked success till within twenty-five years ago, when he retired from business, and has lived a quiet life in Sewickley. Politically he is a republican. He married Margaret Arbuckle, a native of Scotland, who died October 15, 1881, aged seventy years. This union was blessed with seven children.

Isaac Terrell, superintendent of the Allegheny City farm, postoffice Hoboken, was born in Allegheny county, Pa., in 1851, a son of John and Anna J. (Sain) Terrell, of England, who settled in Western Pennsylvania at an early day. Isaac was reared on a farm, and received his education in the common schools of O'Hara township and the high-schools of Pittsburgh and Allegheny. He married, in 1883, Eliza, daughter of Andrew Morton, ex-justice of the peace of Sharpsburg, and an old resident. Mr. Terrell has followed farming as an occupation, and in February, 1887, was appointed superintendent of the farm of the Allegheny City Poorhouse; was re-appointed in 1888, and now holds the position. He and family are members of the Presbyterian Church. Politically he is a republican.

Edward Cable, farmer, postoffice Hoboken, was born in England in 1821, and with his parents emigrated to America in 1831. John Cable, his father, who was a farmer, purchased 266 acres of land in what is now O'Hara township, Allegheny county. He married Sarah Swain, who bore him six children, Edward being the fifth. John Cable died in 1856. Since twelve years of age Edward has resided on the farm, and has followed agricultural pursuits. He received his education at the log schoolhouse, and in 1846 married Sophia Kane, who bore him twelve children, six of whom are now living. Of the original tract of land purchased by John Cable, our subject now owns 133 acres, and the present town of Hoboken stands on the tract of land purchased by John Cable, the early pioneer of Indiana township. Like his father before him, Mr. Cable is a democrat.

Jerome B. Anjer, Sewickley, was born in Ontario county, N. Y., son of Lyman and Ruth (Wheelock) Anjer. The Anjer family were French Huguenots, and a leading family in New England. The subject of this sketch was educated at Erie, Pa., early in life becoming a clerk in the mining district of Allegheny county. Subsequently he engaged in the transportation business with Clarke & Thaw; later he was in the flour, grain, commission and produce trade, in which he continued twenty-one years, when he embarked in a stone-foundry in Pittsburgh. Since 1886 he has resided in Sewickley, and not in public business. Mr. Anjer married Matilda, daughter of Joseph Marlatt, an old Pittsburgh business-man, and they have one daughter. They are members of the Presbyterian Church; politically Mr. Anjer is a republican.

George M. Leppig, proprietor of the Fifth Avenue hotel, McKeesport, was born in Bavaria, Germany, September 29, 1849, a son of George and Barbara (Bleuffer) Leppig, and was reared and educated in his native land. He there served three years' apprenticeship at the cabinet-maker's trade and two years in Pittsburgh, where he settled in 1871. In 1873 he became connected with the music-house of Mellor & Hone, of Pittsburgh, with whom he was engaged ten years. In 1888 he embarked in the liquor business in Pittsburgh, and March 16, 1887, located in McKeesport, where he became proprietor of the Fifth Avenue hotel, which he has successfully conducted since. In 1873 he married Frederica M., daughter of Frederick Abel of Pittsburgh, and has two children living: Katie and Minnie. Mr. Leppig is a prominent member of the German Catholic Church, St. Mary's Catholic association, the Liederkranz, Turners and the Central Liquor association, of Pittsburgh; in politics he is independent.

W. T. MILLER, physician, McKeesport, was born in Indiana county, Pa., August 1, 1854, a son of William and Elizabeth (Coleman) Miller. He was educated at the Normal school and Memorial Institute of his native county, and began the study of medicine in 1877, with Dr. M. R. Banks, of Livermore, Westmoreland county, Pa. He entered Wooster Medical College, Cleveland, Ohio, in 1878; was graduated in 1881, and immediately began the practice of his profession at Burgettstown, Washington county, Pa.; and in 1884 he located at McKeesport, where he has since had a large and successful practice. In October, 1881, he married Mary E. McCormick, a graduate of Beaver College, and a daughter of the late William McCormick, of Washington county, Pa., a victim of Andersonville prison during the civil war. Dr. Miller is one of the prominent physicians of McKeesport; politically he is a republican.

GEORGE KINZENBACH, retired, McKeesport, was born in Prussia, May 10, 1816, son of Anton and Elizabeth (Arnold) Kinzenbach. He was reared in his native country, and served an apprenticeship at the stone-mason's trade, though he never followed the business. In 1837, he came to America, and settled in McKeesport, where he worked in the coal-mines eleven years. In 1849 he went to California, where he mined for gold fourteen months, with varied success; then returned to McKeesport and engaged in butchering a year and a half; revisited California in 1853, and came back in 1858 to McKeesport, where he has since resided. In 1858 he embarked in the lumber business, in which he was successfully engaged until 1885, having accumulated sufficient to invest in considerable real estate, from which he derives a handsome income. Mr. Kinzenbach was married in 1844, to native cousin, daughter of John and Margarettta (Hach) Allenbrand, of Pittsburgh, and by her has three children: Mary (Mrs. Henry Hartman), Matilda F. (Mrs. Gustave Smith) and Annie. Mr. Kinzenbach is a member of the German Lutheran Church and the I. O. O. F. He has served one term as a member of the council; in politics he is a democrat.

D. P. WHITE (deceased) was born in Boston, Mass. He resided in Philadelphia, Pa., where he was engaged in the iron business for other parties. A Pittsburgh firm buying out his interest, Mr. White removed to Pittsburgh, where he became identified with the firm of Smith & Co. for a number of years; eventually, on account of impaired health, he retired from business, removed to Sewickley in 1857, and purchased property there which is still largely in the possession of his widow. Mr. White died January 8, 1877, in the east, much beloved and esteemed. He was an attendant of the Baptist Church, and one whom nature had endowed with fine, generous qualities of head and heart. He was married to Miss Mary Jane Davis Ricker, a native of Pittsburgh, but reared and educated in Philadelphia.

CHARLES CHAUNCEY MELLOR, music-dealer, Pittsburgh, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., September 26, 1836, and is a grandson of James Mellor, who came from near Manchester, England, in 1818. John H., son of James Mellor, settled in Pittsburgh in 1829, and in 1831 he established the music business now conducted by his son, the oldest of the kind in the city, and was organist of Trinity Church for twenty-seven years. He died in 1863, aged fifty-six; his widow still resides in Pittsburgh, aged eighty. Her eldest daughter, Louise F., resides with her, and the second, Mrs. Annie M. Sheib, is in Canton, Ohio. Charles C. has always been a student of music, and a leader in musical enterprises in the city, and for twenty-one years was organist of the First Presbyterian Church, of Pittsburgh. In 1867 he married Laura Reinhart, a native of Pittsburgh, daughter of Aaron G. and Catherine Reinhart. Mrs. Mellor is one of the leading local singers, and sang many years in the choir of the First Presbyterian Church. Mr. Mellor has been for four years president of the Microscopical society, and is identified with the musical, botanical and photographic societies of Pittsburgh. Politically he is a republican. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Mellor are Walter Chauncey, George Edward and Arthur Dudley. Mr. and Mrs. Mellor are members of the First Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh.

THOMSON LYSLE, coal-operator (deceased), was born in Pittsburgh, a son of George and Margaret (McElwain) Lysle, early settlers of that city. He was reared and educated in Pittsburgh, and for many years was a member of the firm of George Lysle & Sons, coal-operators at Camden, Allegheny county. October 6, 1863, he married Salina, daughter of William and Mary A. (Shields) Whigham, of McKeesport, and by her has three children: Mary (Mrs. Henry Hartman), Matilda F. (Mrs. Gustave Smith) and Annie. Mr. Kinzenbach is a member of the German Lutheran Church and the I. O. O. F. He has served one term as a member of the council; in politics he is a democrat.

SIR R. WELSH (deceased) was born in Philadelphia, April 13, 1816, and is of American extraction. When twelve years of age, he joined, as a juggler and tumbler, Raymond & Waring's circus, with which and other principal shows he traveled in this country until 1848. He then went to South America as clown for the circus of Banks, Archer & Rockwell, returning by way of the West Indies. Archer died at Matanzas, Cuba, May 24, 1850, and the show disbanded in Charleston, S. C., soon afterward. The same year Mr. Welser joined Dan Rice's show, as clown, traveling with him from July, 1850, until March, 1851. He was afterward engaged with various leading companies until 1864, his last two seasons being with S. O. Wheeler & Co., Boston. In 1860 Mr. Welser was the first and only man to drive four geese hitched to a common tub three feet in diameter down the Monongahela river from Brownsville to McKeesport. In 1854 he came to McKeesport to train horses for Taylor & Wolf's circus, and in 1857 he here married Mrs. Julia Stacy, a widow of means, who died February 7, 1886, leaving our subject all her fortune, which included cash, bank-stock and eight houses on Diamond square and Market street. Mr. Welser retired from the circus-ring in 1864, and has been a resident of McKeesport since 1854. He is a prominent member of the I. O. O. F. and encampment, with which he has been identified thirty years; politically he is a republican.

JOHN McELWAIN, of the firm of John McElwain & Co., merchants, Sewickley, was born October 4, 1810, in Bakerstown, Butler county, Pa., son of Alex. McElwain, a native of Philadelphia. The paternal grandfather, who was a Scotch Presbyterian and a native of Ireland, came to America in 1809. The father, Alex. McElwain, taught school in Bakerstown, to which place he came in an early day. Some time afterward he was a merchant in Perrysville, and later removed to Zelienople, where he engaged in business. Coming to Sewickley in 1851, he here carried on merchandising until his death, which occurred September 7, 1865. He was one of the original members of the United Presbyterian Church, and was an earnest and energetic churchman. Politically he was a republican, and for many years school director. Mr. Alex. McElwain was married to Mary A. Ague, and by her had five children; of these John and William A. are conducting an extensive general store in Sewickley.

WILLIAM FRANKLIN GARDNER, secretary and treasurer People's Insurance company, Pittsburgh, is a native of Baltimore, Md., born August 1, 1833. His grandfather, Isaac Gardner, came from Ireland to Philadelphia county, afterward went to Kent county, Md., where Isaac D., the father of our subject, was born. The latter married Susannah Marshall, whose father, Israel Marshall, was born in Dorchester county, Md., where his daughter Susannah was born. This couple now reside in the Thirteenth ward of Pittsburgh, both being seventy-seven years of age. I. D. Gardner followed shoemaking till old age compelled him to retire. They had two sons and one daughter (Marietta Stauffer) all residing near their parents. William F., the eldest, was a year old when the family came to Pittsburgh, and received his education in the public schools. When thirteen years old he was employed in a hatstore, where he remained three years; then entered the employ of the Citizens' Insurance company, and remained with that institution fifteen years, rising to the position of bookkeeper. In 1862 he organized the People's Insurance company, of which he has ever since been secretary and treasurer. In 1867 he purchased his present home at Edgewood. September 6, 1859, Mr. Gardner married Anna Margaret Hastings, a native of Pittsburgh, born February 8, 1840, daughter of Abel and Margaret (Lee) Hastings, of Irish and English descent. Mr. Hastings, now aged eighty-six, is still a resident of the Thirteenth ward, Pittsburgh, where he was engaged in the tailoring business for many years. Mr. and Mrs. Gardner are members of Shady Avenue Baptist Church, Pittsburgh, and he is identified with the republican party. Their children yet living are: William M., a resident of Allegheny City (he married a Miss Bertha Schneider); Maggie Lee (Mrs. Walter N. Haslett), in Allegheny; Elizabeth Howard, John Semple and Henry Black, at home. Hastings (the first-born), James Miller (the fourth), Tempy Copper (the fifth), Fulton Arbuckle (the eighth), Hattie Farrell (the ninth), Bertha May (the tenth), and an infant daughter unnamed are deceased.

JOHN N. HARTMAN, merchant, McKeesport, was born in Elizabeth township, this county, October 19, 1847, a son of William and Catherine (Steinman) Hartman. He was reared in McKeesport, educated in the public schools, and learned shoemaking with his father, which trade he followed until twenty-four years of age. He then opened a billiard parlor in McKeesport, which, with Charles Caldabaugh, he conducted for six years. For two years thereafter he was employed in the National Tube-works, and in 1880 he embarked in his present general hardware business with his brother William E., under the firm name of J. N. & W. E. Hartman. The members of this firm are live band progressive business men, and from a small beginning have built up a large and constantly increasing trade. Our subject was married October 24, 1877, to Anna, daughter of Joseph and Eliza (Miller) Douglas, of McKeesport, and by her has had six children, all boys. Three children are living: Harry B. (twin), Willie P. and John N. (triplet). Mr. Hartman is a member of the German Lutheran Church, of the A. O. U. W. and McKeesport Board of Trade; in politics he is a democrat.

CHARLES I. WADE, bank cashier, Pittsburgh, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., February 9, 1838. His earliest ancestor in this country was Samuel Wade, who, with his wife Ann, left North Britain in 1833, and settled in New Jersey. His eldest son, Robert, had a son Robert who was killed in the defense of Oswego in 1756, and was captured by Montcalm. His son Nehemiah had a son Isaac, born in 1763, who married Lois Osborne in 1786. Their youngest son, Isaac E., born in 1807 in New Jersey, married Susan Ann Okely, a native of Baltimore, and living at that time in Harmony, Butler county, Pa. Isaac E. Wade engaged in business in Pittsburgh in 1835, being a member of the firm of McClurg, Wade & Co., one of the earliest iron-founders of that city. He died in Texas at the early age of forty-one, having gone there for his health. Maj. William Wade, of Pittsburgh, was a brother of the deceased. Mrs. Susan Ann Wadie, who was born in 1814, resides with her daughter, Lois Amelia, at New Brighton, Charles I. and Isaac E. Wades, are in business in Pittsburgh. The eldest was educated at Irvington Institute, New Jersey, and entered the employ of George E. Arnold, banker, at an early age. For a short time he took charge of a branch banking-house of John T. Hogg at Brownsville, and then engaged with S. Jones & Co., Pittsburgh. On the organization of the Pittsburgh National Bank of Commerce, 1864, he was elected his teller, and was promoted to the tellership, and for the past ten years has been its cashier. In 1885 he took up his residence in the mansion built by him at Edgewood. Politically he is a republican.

June 26, 1864, Mr. Wade married Miss Elizabeth Angus Wilkinson, a native of Northumberland county, England. In 1836 John Angus, ancestor of Mrs. Wade, left Scotland and settled in Northumberland county. The line of descent includes many famous writers, such as Robert Hall, John Forster and Dr. Joseph Angus, of Regent’s College, London. Mrs. Wade’s parents, John and Jane (Wallies) Wilkinson, emigrated to America when she was a child. In 1876 she was employed as assistant principal of the Ralston School in Pittsburgh and afterward became principal. For a few years she was editor of the Educational Voicé of that city; was one of the founders, and is president of the Woman’s Club. Since 1871 she has been a regular contributor to the Leader, and frequently writes for the Dispatch, Chronicle and other publications, over the nom de plume of “Bessie Bramble.” Mrs. Wade is the mother of two children, the eldest of whom, Charles Wilkinson, is employed in the business office of the Dispatch. The daughter, Elizabeth Lois, graduated in 1888, at the head of her class, from the normal department of the Pittsburgh High-school.

Robert B. McMaster, P. O. Sewickley, was born August 20, 1851, in Pittsburgh. His grandfather, Hugh, was a native of County Antrim, Ireland, and came to America in 1811, settling in Pittsburgh with his wife, seen Eleanor Barr, and their three children: Margaret, John and James; two other children were born to them in Pittsburgh, Hugh and Andrew. Hugh McMaster, Sr., kept a grocery-store, and owned property where the Adams Express company’s building now stands. He died in 1842, his wife in 1859. Politically he was a Whig. Andrew McMaster, the father of Robert B., was born December 25, 1818, in Pittsburgh; graduated from the Western University in the class of 1837. Andrew was a lawyer and alderman; represented the Third ward; politically a republican. He died December 4, 1865. His wife was Grace, daughter of Andrew and Margaret (Barr) Barclay, and their two sons were Robert B. and Joseph R. The former graduated from the Western University; class of 1872, and engaged in fruit-growing on the farm. He married Mary I. Cotton, and they have one son, Hugh A.

Samuel Creelman was a justice of the peace, Wilkinsburg, is a native of that borough, born February 14, 1842. His father, William Creelman, was a native of County Donegal, Ireland, and came to this country when a young man. He married Pethena Demmett, a native of Plum township, this county, who bore him six children, Samuel being the second. For many years the father kept a store in Wilkinsburg, and died in 1870, aged sixty-eight; his widow lived in Wilkinsburg at ages of sixty-five. William Creelman was a wood by trade; a zealous whig and republican, thus being barred out of the Covenanters Church, of which his wife was a member. Samuel Creelman has spent all his life here. In 1861 he joined the 101st regiment P. V., Company A. This regiment served with the Army of the Potomac, participating in its marches and engagements till the evacuation of the Peninsula, when it was detached for duty along the North Carolina coast. Mr. Creelman was a prisoner at Plymouth April 20, 1864, and remained nearly a year at Andersonville and other southern prisons. He was discharged in 1865, and afterward took a course at Duff’s Business College at Pittsburgh. For eight years he kept a store, and is now in real estate and hotel business. He has served as town clerk, etc.; was elected justice of the peace in 1884, and re-elected February 19, 1889, for a term of five years. Politically he is a republican. March 11, 1869, Mr. Creelman married Isabella Fogle, a native of Wilkinsburg, and daughter of Louis and Betsey Fogle, who were of German extraction. Following are the names of Mr. and Mrs. Creelman’s children: Calvin L., Mary Agnes, Edwin Page and Leonidas J. Mr. Creelman brought the first printing-press to Wilkinsburg, and taught himself the printing business. He is an ardent admirer of natural law, and, having stored his mind with ancient history, finds delight in comparing and contrasting the present with the past.

John Irwin (deceased) was born July 1, 1837, in the city of Pittsburgh. His father, Maj. John Irwin, was a native of Ireland, and in 1776, when a young man, he emigrated to America; enlisted in the colonial forces, fought under Gen. Wayne, and was in the Paoli massacre, where he was nearly killed. He was under Maj. Arnold in the expedition to Quebec; participated in Gen. Wayne’s campaign, and was with Gen. Washington at the taking of Yorktown. He was lieutenant and captain, and later was breveted major.
Subsequent to the war he lived in Pittsburgh, where he died in 1808. Mr. Irwin was married to Mary Pattinson, who became the mother of four children: Mrs. Margaret George, Mrs. Eliza Semple, Dr. W. F. Irwin and John, who was a rope-manufacturer, and made the rigging for Perry's fleet in the war of 1812. He married Hannah, daughter of Rev. John Taylor, the first rector of Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, and this union was blessed with twelve children. Mr. Irwin died in 1863, aged seventy-six years. He had identified himself with the growth of the city generally, and at one time he owned ten acres of ground near West Park. He was a member of the First Presbyterian Church; was first burgess of the borough of Allegheny, and held various offices of trust and responsibility.

James L. Penney, physician, McKeesport, was born at Library, Allegheny county, Pa., March 7, 1838, a son of William and Sarah (Lowrey) Penney. His paternal grandparents were James and Jane (Sill) Penney, the former a son of John Penney, a native of County Down, Ireland, and one of the first settlers of Elizabeth. William Penney was reared on a farm in Versailles; was a clergyman in the Baptist Church, also a prominent physician, and practiced his profession in McKeesport for many years; he was an ardent supporter of the republican party, and died in 1863, aged fifty-one years. He had three children, Flavius J., James L. and Irene J., by his first wife, and by his second wife, née Elizabeth Gilbert, also three children: William H., Sarah J. and Josephine F. William H. was an engineer of a gunboat during the rebellion, and enlisted in the service at the age of seventeen.

James L. was reared in McKeesport. In 1856 he began the study of medicine in the office of his father; attended Cleveland Medical College in 1859, and 1862, completed his course in his profession in McKeesport. In April, 1861, he was commissioned by Gov. Curtis assistant surgeon of Pennsylvania volunteers; was sent from the army at Harrison's landing, after the seven days' fight before Richmond, to Washington city in charge of five hundred sick and wounded, and thence to Baptist Church hospital at Alexandria. He resigned in 1863 on account of ill health, and returned to McKeesport, where he has been in active practice since. He married, in 1860, Sarah J., daughter of David and Minerva Allen, of Green Oak, this county, and has two children, Luella J. and James L. He is a member of Allegheny County Medical society, is a P. & A. M.; in politics a republican.

Flavius Ewing Speer, attorney at law, 137 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, McKeesport, was born in San Francisco, Cal., February 23, 1833, a son of Rev. William and Elizabeth B. (Ewing) Speer. His paternal grandfather, James R. Speer, was a prominent physician of Pittsburgh, and also secretary and treasurer of the Allegheny cemetery of Pittsburgh. Our subject's great-great-grandfather, James Speer, a farmer, was a native of Ireland, and immigrated to America in 1760, settling in the Peach Bottom, in Cumberland valley, Pa., where he lived and died. Several of his sons participated in the Revolution. Another son, William, was a distinguished divine of the Presbyterian Church, and was pastor of the first Presbyterian church organized at Greensburg, one hundred years ago. The maternal grandfather of subject was Hon. John H. Ewing, of Washington, Pa., a son of William Ewing, one of the earliest Scotch-Irish settlers in Fayette county, three of whose descendants have been judges of county courts. Rev. William Speer was one of the early missionaries of the Presbyterian Church to China, and the first missionary to the Chinese of the Pacific coast, and was afterward secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Education of Philadelphia; is now engaged in literary work at Washington, Pa., and is the author of "The Oldest and Newest Empire, or China and the United States."

The subject of this memoir was educated at the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, and Princeton College, graduating from the latter in 1873. In that year he began the study of law in Philadelphia, and took a partial course at the university law school of that city. In 1875 he removed to Pittsburgh, and was admitted to the Allegheny county bar in March, 1876. He was associated for more than two years in business with Malcolm Hay, late assistant postmaster-general. On September 1, 1876, he took up his residence in McKeesport, but still retains his office in Pittsburgh, where he has a large and growing practice. He has taken some interest in politics; was secretary of the state convention in 1874, and is a staunch high-tariff republican.

Robert R. Riggs, real-estate dealer, McKeesport, was born August 26, 1888, a son of John and Mary (Phillips) Riggs. His paternal grandfather, Edward Riggs, a native of New Jersey, of German and Welsh descent, was a pioneer of Snowden township, where he cleared and improved a farm, on which he lived and died. He had four children: Edward, John, Joseph and Mary (Mrs. Elijah Townsend). The maternal grandfather was Joseph Phillips, the first Baptist minister to locate in Western Pennsylvania; he organized the first Baptist Church at Peters Corner, Pa., the centennial anniversary of which was celebrated in 1875. John Riggs, father of our subject, was a native of Snowden township, and at his father's death succeeded to the homestead, and resided there until his death. His children were David, Sarah (Mrs. Samuel Moore), Edward, Josiah, Lewis, Joseph, John, Robert L., William, Obadiah and Isaac. Of these, John served three years in the rebellion and David occupies the old Riggs homestead.

Robert L. Riggs was reared in Snowden, and was educated in the common schools and Bethel Academy. He began life as a teacher in the public schools of Jefferson and Mifflin townships, came to McKeesport in 1864, and was principal of the public schools two years. He then embarked in the drug business with Jesse Sill, the partnership existing until the death of Mr. Sill, in 1878, when our subject succeeded to the business, which he conducted until 1880. He then engaged in the lumber and planing-mill business with James R. Gemmill and J. A. Lucas for five years, and since 1885 has been engaged in the real-estate business. He married, April 19, 1864, Cordelia C. B., daughter of John and Margaret (Cunningham) Whigham, of Mifflin township, and has six children: Ellie W., Jessie J., Thomas A., Viola, Clifford and Walter. Mr. Biggs is president of the board of education, of which he has been a member most of the time since 1867. He is a member of the Baptist Church; in politics a republican.

Rev. Joseph Hunter, A. M. (deceased), was born August 25, 1816, in Freeport, Armstrong county, Pa., and died January 6, 1884. His father, Alexander Hunter, came from Richmond, Virginia, in 1810 and married Elizabeth Anderson, of Franklin county, and settled on a farm in Burrell, Westmoreland county; they were earnest Covenanters. Joseph Hunter was a studious youth, and engaged early in teaching. After taking a course in the Western University he studied theology under Dr. Wilson at Cincinnati. After ordination he spent a year in mission work, and became the first pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian Church at Wilkinsburg in 1852. For a time he preached alternately at Deer Creek and New Texas. He continued in charge at Wilkinsburg till about a year before his death, and preached a sermon three weeks previous to that event. He enjoyed the confidence of all the brethren of his denomination. His large heart and kindly nature enabled him to make converts although beginning with a very small band of worshipers, by faithful and zealous work he succeeded in building up a large and prosperous church. He left a widow and two daughters, Elizabeth and Letitia, the latter being the wife of Prof. Alex. S. Hunter, Ph. D., a Presbyterian clergyman now residing in Hanover, Ind., where he fills the chair of physics and astronomy in Hanover College. June 27, 1859, were united in marriage Rev. J. Hunter and Mary A. Denison, a native of Uniontown, Pa., and daughter of Samuel and Letitia Denison, the former a native of Greencastle and the latter of Pittsburgh, both of Irish descent. Jeremiah Sturgeon, the father of Mrs. Letitia Denison, and who was a revolutionary soldier of York, Pa., came to Pittsburgh with the army. Being well pleased with the location, he brought his bride there at the close of the war.

George Bossart, city clerk, McKeesport, was born in Youngstown, Pa., December 29, 1859, a son of John and Susan (Shirey) Bossart, and is of German descent. He was reared in his native town and educated at Ligonier and Greensburg academies; also took a commercial course at the Iron City Business College, Pittsburgh, thus fitting himself thoroughly for positions of responsibility. He taught school for a period of three years, beginning at seventeen years of age. In the fall of 1881 he located in McKeesport, and for five years was bookkeeper for the hardware firm of J. F. Ryan & Son, in which position his ability to fill positions was so admirably shown that in 1885 he was elected borough clerk and clerk of the water department, and is now (1888) serving his third consecutive term in that capacity. He married, November 15, 1887, Lizzie, daughter of Wendal and Mary Daub, of Pittsburgh. Mrs. Bossart is one of the proprietors of the leading millinery establishment of McKeesport. Mr. Bossart is a stockholder in the New Enterprise Building & Loan association, of which he has been secretary since its organization in August, 1887. He is an enterprising and public-spirited citizen; in politics he is a republican.

H. J. Murdoch, one of the proprietors and business men of the United Presbyterian, has been a resident of Sewickley, Allegheny county, Pa., for over twenty years; is a native of Belfast, in the north of Ireland, of Scotch-Irish parentage; received an academic education and acquired an limited knowledge of the printing business before leaving his native land, which, however, was afterward completed in the printing and publishing establishment of W. S. Young, Esq., Philadelphia, Pa., where he had for his companions and fellow-workmen such distinguished journalists and printers as John Russell Young, John Blakely, proprietor of the Evening Star, and James M. and George S. Ferguson, all of Philadelphia. Mr. Murdoch came to this country when a mere boy, and after spending a few years with relatives and friends in Boston, the latter gave him a liberal fund which he induced to go to Westminster College, New Wilmington, Pa., with the intention of studying for the ministry, but was so infatuated with journalism that he soon abandoned his original intention, and became connected with the Westminster Herald, a religious newspaper, as its publisher. Under his able and efficient management this paper was very successful, but was soon afterward consolidated with the United Presbyterian, as was, also, at a later period, mainly through his influence, the Presbyterian Witness, of Cincinnati, Ohio. With these additions, which gave the paper a much greater influence and largely increased circulation, his aim and purpose now being to make it, if possible, one of the ablest and best religious newspapers in the country, and ably assisted by Rev. D. R. Kerr, D. D., as editor-in-chief, its financial success and prosperity are largely due to the shrewd and careful management of Mr. Murdoch, who now has the proud satisfaction of being one of the proprietors of a paper that can justly claim to have the largest circulation of any paper outside of New York city.
The printing of the paper is done by Mur-doch, Kerr & Co., book and job printers, who also print the Christian Advocate, Methodist Recorder, Evangelical Repository, The Workman, all religious periodicals; American Manufacturer, Labor Tribune, East End Bulletin, American, and all the publications of the boards of the United Presbyterian and Methodist Protestant churches, besides carrying on a very extensive and general printing business. He was also at one time, and for many years, associated with Ferguson Brothers & Co., one of the largest and most complete electrotyping establishments in Philadelphia. Though Mr. Murdoch has been for many years, and is still, a laborious and hard-working man, he has lost none of his vigor, being still in the prime of life. He is highly esteemed in the United Presbyterian Church, being a consistent member of it since the union in 1858, and in the community where he resides, as a man of undeviating probity and uprightness of character. In all transactions he is prompt and decided, and has the peculiar knack of making many friends, and, when once made, has the happy faculty of knowing how to retain them.

Robert C. Rankin, attorney, was born in Elizabeth township, Allegheny county, September 25, 1854, a son of Samuel C. and Rebecca (Williamson) Rankin. His paternal grandparents, Robert and Margaret (Culbert) Rankin, natives of Loudounury, Ireland, emigrated to America in 1839, settled in Elizabeth township, this county, and engaged in farming; they reared eight children: John, Jr., Alexander, Samuel C., David, William, Catherine (Mrs. Andrew Kelley), Eliza (Mrs. J. K. Graham) and Margaret. Of these Samuel C. is a farmer and well-known citizen of Elizabeth township, and has served one term as director of the poor of this county. His wife, Rebecca, was a daughter of Samuel and Martha (McCombs) Williamson, of Washington county. By her he had five children: Robert C., John W., Mary, Samuel H. and Maggie. Of these Robert C. was reared on his father's farm and was prepared for college at Elizabeth Academy, after which he entered the University of Wooster, from which he was graduated in 1878. For two years thereafter he was principal of the public schools at Orrville, Ohio. He then registered with R. E. Stewart, of Pittsburgh, as a law student, and was admitted to practice at the Allegheny county bar, in October, 1882. In December, 1883, he came to McKeesport, where he has since been known as an able attorney, and has held the office of borough solicitor since May, 1886, his term expiring April 1, 1891. Mr. Rankin married in July, 1884, Jennie F., daughter of Rev. J. K. and Belle (Hill) Melhorn, of Pittsburgh, and has one son, Raymond S.

William Boyd, retired, Wilkinsburg, was born in the County Down, near Belfast, Ireland, November 23, 1816. Six years later his parents, David and Mary (Bryson) Boyd, came to America, and settled on a farm in that part of Indiana township which now constitutes O'Hara. There the father died at the age of seventy-seven, and the mother when eighty-six. They had six sons and one daughter: John, Alex., David, Hugh, James, William and Jane (Mrs. Dr. John Wadsworth). William, who is the youngest and only one living, remained on the home farm till eighteen years old, when he went to Pittsburgh and learned the molder's trade. With two partners he started a foundry at Johnstown in 1836, and continued to operate it nine years. He came to Wilkinsburg in 1845, and dealt in cattle and stock fourteen years; bought a farm in Indiana township, which he cultivated till 1873, when he returned to Wilkinsburg, and is here extensively interested in real estate. He and his family are connected with the Covenanters' Church, of which his parents were members. Mr. Boyd is an active democrat, and came within a few votes of being made burgess in 1888, although the borough is of less than ten years' growth. In 1859, he married Louise M., daughter of William and Mary (Markle) Miller, of Westmoreland county, Pa., of German descent. Mrs. Louise M. Boyd is a niece of the late Gen. Joseph Markle, of Mill Grove. Mr. and Mrs. Boyd have two daughters, Mary and Jennie, at home.

Capt. A. B. Campbell, general insurance agent, McKeesport, was born in New Lisbon, Ohio, October 23, 1837, a son of Jacob and Eliza (Allen) Campbell. Jacob was a native of Chester county, Pa., of Scotch descent, a captain in the war of 1812, and one of the early settlers of Pittsburgh. He was a carpenter, and helped construct the first bridge across the Allegheny river between Pittsburgh and Allegheny; also assisted in building the first inclined coal-road on the Monongahela river, and assisted in erecting Schoenberger Iron-works, one of the first iron-mills in Pittsburgh. He afterward engaged in business in Cincinnati, Ohio, as a contractor for a number of years; thence went to Wheeling (now in West Virginia), where he formed the acquaintance of Eliza Allen, his second wife, a daughter of David Allen, one of the first settlers of Elizabeth township, Allegheny county. He then removed to New Lisbon, Ohio, where he followed contracting and building for several years. In 1843 he settled permanently in Elizabeth township, Allegheny county, and carried on farming until his death.

The subject of this memoir was reared in Elizabeth township from the age of eight years, and received a common-school education. On the breaking out of the rebellion, in 1861, he joined Company M, 100th (Roundhead) regiment P. V. I., as second lieutenant, and was elected captain of the company after three months' service. He accompanied the first expedition that went south under Gen. Sherman to Hilton Head, participating in the taking of Port Walker and Beauregard, and was among the first troops to occupy Beaufort, S. C. He was in the battle of Port Royal Ferry, S. C., and from Beaufort went to James island, and participated in the battle of Secessionville fort. He was taken prisoner by the enemy and sent to New Point Comfort, Va., and from there to Slaughter's Mountain as reinforcement to Gen. Pope. Soon after he took part in the battles of second Bull Run and Chantilly, and was there driven back to Washington city by the enemy; afterward was engaged in the battles of South Mountain, Antietam and Fredericksburg, and was honorably discharged from the service in January, 1863. In 1864, with a party of five, he visited Virginia City, and in the fall of the same year (1864), with a party of sixty-five, proceeded from there to the headwaters of the Yellowstone river (they being the first party known to make the trip), thence to the mouth of the Yellowstone at Fort Union, where it empties into the Missouri river. In 1865 he returned to his father's farm, in Elizabeth township, Allegheny county, and in 1866 married Eliza, daughter of Asher and Eliza (Manown) Van Kirk, of Elizabeth township, by whom he has five children living: Hattie M., Lillian, William, Maggie and Anson. In 1866 Mr. Campbell engaged in the general insurance business. He has served as a member of the school board thirteen consecutive terms and two terms in the legislature, 1879-80, 1881-82. He is a member of the G. A. R.; in politics is a republican.

James Thomson, son of Archibald Thomson, was born in Franklin county, Pa., in December, 1790. His grandfather, Alexander Thomson, of Glasgow, Scotland, came to this country with his family in 1771, and settled in the Cumberland valley in the neighborhood of Chambersburg, Pa., and many of his descendants still reside. The subject of this sketch came west in 1812, at the age of twenty-two, and settled in Pittsburgh, where he continued to reside during the remainder of his life. He married Elizabeth Watson, a native of Pittsburgh, daughter of William Watson. From 1812 until 1825 he carried on the watchmaking and jewelry business on Market street. He then entered into partnership with Samuel Stackhouse in the business of engine-building, which they carried on on Short street, under the name of Stackhouse & Thomson, until the dissolution of the firm in 1839 or 1840. In 1840 he was elected mayor of Pittsburgh, which office he filled during the year 1841, the official term being limited to one year.

After the expiration of his term of office he entered into partnership with Joseph Tomlinson, and for some time they carried on the business of engine-building on property adjoining the old Pittsburgh Gasworks, now occupied by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad company, where they built several iron steamships for the United States. They afterward moved their shops to Duquesne way, in the Fourth ward, Pittsburgh, and were engaged on the manufacture of railroad freight-cars for some time. After the dissolution of the firm of Tomlinson & Co. he was, in 1853, elected engineer of the Pittsburgh Gas company, which position he held until 1871, when failing health compelled him to resign. The Pittsburgh Gas company, however, continued him as consulting engineer until the spring of 1875. He died in August, 1876, in the eighty-sixth year of his age, respected and esteemed by his fellow-citizens.

Joseph Ecoff, superintendent of water-works, McKeesport, was born in East Fairchild township, Columbiana county, Ohio, February 20, 1838, a son of William and Maria (Boughman) Ecoff, natives of Chester county, Pa., who settled in Columbiana county, Ohio, in 1837, and who, in 1847, removed to New Castle county, Del. After attaining the age of fourteen he, for a period of nine years, employed himself in the various branches of sheet-iron manufacture for C. & J. Marshall & Co., extensive sheet-iron manufacturers of Wilmington, Del., and Philadelphia. In 1866 he located in McKeesport, and was in the employ of W. D. Wood & Co., as a roller of fine Russia iron, from April 5, 1866, until September 13, 1882, and was then elected superintendent of the McKeesport water-works, in which position he has satisfactorily served the public six years. Mr. Ecoff married, July 3, 1865, Susan B., daughter of Ephraim and Elizabeth (Springer) Yarnall, of Wilmington, Del., and has four children: Anna (Mrs. William England), William, George and Elizabeth. In 1877 Mr. Ecoff was elected a member of the borough council, and took an active part in the establishment of the water-works, and during his five years of service in the council gave complete satisfaction to his constituents. He has been vice-president of the Mutual Building & Loan association and president of the Enterprise Building & Loan association, and is now president of the New Enterprise Building & Loan association. He is a member of the Royal Arcanum; in politics an independent democrat.

William Heakes, Episcopal clergyman, Wilkinsburg, was born September 29, 1831, in Toronto, Canada. His parents, Samuel and Martha Louisa (Payn) Heakes, were born and bred in London, England, where Mr. Heakes was a member of the choir in Rowland Hill's church, both during and after its connection with the mother Church of England. In 1848 they visited Pittsburgh, and after spending a short time in New Orleans, settled at Toronto, where the mother died in October, 1851. The father afterward married again. He was engaged in a mercantile business, from which he has recently retired. William Heakes attended private schools on Staten island and Trinity Church school, New York city. He graduated, from St. Stephen's College at Annandale, N. Y., in 1877, and entered the General Theological Seminary of New York city. After two years of successful study he abandoned the course on account of failing health. A year's rest enabled him to engaged in teaching at St. John’s Military Academy at Haddonfield, N. J., and while there he finished his course in theology, and was ordained in 1892; was rector of Trinity Church, Cranford, N. J., for five years, during the last three of which he also ministered to the parish of Westfield. He went to Trenton in January, 1887, and remained a year, taking charge, in 1888, of St. Stephen’s chapel, under the auspices of Calvary Protestant Episcopal Church, East Liberty.

George W. Eagye, wholesale grocer, Wilkinsburg, was born in Fallowfield township, Washington county, Pa., February 16, 1843. His grandfather, who was of German birth, and the son of a Frenchman, came and settled in Washington county in the latter part of the eighteenth century. He had sixteen children, all born here, the youngest of whom, Simon, married Catharine, daughter of Peter Yohe, who settled in what is now Somerset township, Washington county, Pa., in 1791. They had eight sons (of whom George W. is the fourth) and seven daughters. Simon Eagye was killed by a runaway team in 1860, in his sixtieth year; his widow died in 1886, aged seventy-five. The early years of our subject were passed on the home farm, and August 19, 1861, he enlisted in an independent cavalry company attached to the Ringgold cavalry, which afterward became Company D of the Twenty-fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry. He served with Sheridan till the close of the war, participating in all the engagements and raids of that general. At Lost River Gap, W. Va., his horse was shot from under him, but he never received a wound. For two years after the war Mr. Eagye kept a store at Upper Middletown, Fayette county, Pa., and in 1867 he engaged in the wholesale grocery trade at Pittsburgh, the firm being known as Smith, Johnson & Colvin. It is now Johnson, Eagye & Earl, and the annual sales have grown from $140,000 to a million. December 14, 1865, Mr. Eagye married Eliza M. Winnett, a native of Washington county, and daughter of Rev. Hiram and Nancy (Mitchell) Winnett, of English descent, and the result of this union are the following-named children: Leet M., Luthella B., Perie Almaeda, Nellie C. and Edna J.; Charles Sullivan and Gertrude died in infancy. The family are identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church. In April, 1884, Mr. Eagye brought his family to Wilkinsburg, occupying the handsome house he had built on Franklin street. He is a member of the borough council, and is a republican with strong prohibition sympathies; is a member of the I. O. O. F. and I.O.O.F.

Edward P. Murphey, music-dealer, McKeesport, was born in Connellsville, Pa., February 17, 1859, a son of Ross M. and Margaret A. (McCormick) Murphey, natives of Fayette county, and of Irish descent. He came with his mother to McKeesport in 1866, and was there reared and educated. At the age of fourteen he entered the office of the McKeesport Times (when Bartley Campbell was editor), where he was employed two and a half years. At eighteen years of age he entered the employ of the National Tube works, being one of the first clerks employed by that company, and remained until 1888. He then embarked in the music business, his tastes having led him in that direction, and his leisure hours from early youth having been devoted to the study and practice of music. It was, therefore, natural to expect that he would become the manager of the largest music-house in the city, doing an immense business, and that he would be at the head of all musical events of merit. He was the director of the choral union for three years, giving fine musical festivals of mammoth proportions, and in each case every detail was considered with such care and executed with such consummate ability that the quality of the performance was in every respect equal to the quantity, three hundred well-trained voices composing the chorus. Mr. Murphey is an accomplished organist, and is the possessor of a bass voice of wonderful depth and power. He is a member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, and is the financial secretary of this immense congregation. His prominence and activity in business circles have made him a member of the McKeesport Board of Trade, of which he is the present efficient secretary. He is a member of the Royal Templars of Temperance, Royal Arcanum and I. O. O. F.; in politics he is a republican. Six years ago Mr. Murphey married one of McKeesport’s popular society ladies, Anna M. Fehr, and two children were the result of their marriage relation, one having died, the other, a promising boy, Edward P., Jr., still living. Mr. Murphey resides in a beautiful suburban residence, on the banks of the Monongahela river, one mile above McKeesport.

John F. Davitt, secretary and treasurer McKeesport Gas company, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., February 2, 1845, a son of John C. and Mary C. (Carothers) Davitt. His grandparents, James Davitt and Mary (Carnahan) Davitt, natives, respectively, of Ireland and of Westmoreland county, Pa., were among the pioneers of Mercer county, Pa. John C. Davitt was a native of Mercer, Pa., where he was reared and educated; in early life he settled in Pittsburgh, and for many years engaged in the furniture business, from which he retired in 1858. He was treasurer of Pittsburgh two terms. He reared a family of five children: James W., Thomas C., Alfred B., John F. and Elizabeth H. (Mrs. Samuel S. Holbrand). His three youngest sons participated in the rebellion, and Thomas C. died of starvation in the rebel prison at Millen, Ga.

Our subject was reared and educated in Pittsburgh; located in McKeesport in 1866, and entered the employ of W. D. Wood & Co., as shipping-clerk; in 1869 was appointed chief clerk, and has held that position to the present time. He was one of the projectors of the McKeesport Gas company, organized in 1871, and since 1873 has been its efficient secretary and treasurer. In 1878 he married Emma, daughter of Rev. Edward Small, of Mercer, Pa. Mr. Davitt is a member of the First Presbyterian Church; was borough treasurer one year, and member of council one year. He is a prominent Knight Templar; in politics he is a stanch republican.

Alfred G. Loyd, paymaster of the Spang Steel & Iron company, Sharpsburg, was born in Etna, Allegheny county, Pa., January 19, 1860, a son of Alfred G. Loyd, who was a practical iron-man, and for many years superintendent of the Etna Iron-works, now known as Spang, Chalfant & Co. Alfred Sr., entered the employ of that company in the capacity of clerk, and rose to the position of superintendent by his knowledge of the iron business. He married Julia Fitzgerald, who bore him two sons and two daughters. No man in his day was probably more widely known in Allegheny county than Mr. Loyd. He was for a number of years revenue collector for Sharpsburg, and was elected to the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Pennsylvania regiment. Alfred G., 3d, was educated at the schools of Massachusetts, and took up a preparatory course at Harvard, but on account of ill-health abandoned his studies. In 1881 he entered the employ of the Spang Steel & Iron company at Sharpsburg, as clerk at the works at that place, which position he now holds. He married, in 1884, Bertha A. Petereins, and has one daughter and one son. Mr. Loyd is a member of St. Peter’s Episcopal Church; is a member of the J. O. U. A. M., S. V., A. O. K. of M. C. and K. O. T. M. He was elected school director in 1888; politically he is a democrat.

Augustus W. Smith, carriage-manufacturer, of McKeesport, is a native of Butler county, Pa., where he was born and educated. He served four years’ apprenticeship at the carriage-maker’s trade in Pittsburgh, and in 1871 embarked in business in McKeesport, at the corner of Fourth avenue and Walnut street. Thoroughly posted in all the details of his business, his trade increased so rapidly that he was compelled to enlarge his facilities in 1872, and in 1874 he erected the large three-story building which was purchased by the Pittsburgh, McKeesport & Youghiogheny Railroad company in 1884, and is now occupied by that corporation as a freight depot. In 1889 he added the manufacture of harness to his already extensive business, and in 1884 erected his present complete mammoth works, at Nos. 561, 563, 565, 567 and 569 Fifth avenue, which he now occupies, and which are conceded to be one of the finest and most complete carriage-works in Western Pennsylvania. The works are one of McKeesport’s reliable industries, and turn out any style of vehicle desired. Mr. Smith gives personal supervision to his custom-made work, and connected with his establishment is a large repository, which is constantly kept filled with his own work and that of other manufacturers, of different grades, and his harness department is one of the most complete in the city. It is particularly worthy of note that his establishment has never been idle a day since it was started, seventeen years ago.

Mr. Smith has been vice-president of the McKeesport Building & Loan association since its organization, which position he has filled with credit to himself and profit to the association. He is a prominent member of the Board of Trade, and takes a lively interest in all matters of public interest. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church; of the I. O. O. F. and K. of P.; in politics he is a republican, and a stanch advocate of protection to American industries. He is a director of the McKeesport Oil company, of McKeesport Board of Trade and McK. & B. Bridge company.

Jacob B. Shale, postmaster, McKeesport, was born in Ligonier valley, July 9, 1855, a son of John F. (deceased) and Rebecca Shale, who still lives at the old homoestead, in Keesport, Allegheny county, Pa. He was reared on the farm of his father until the death of his father in 1866, when he and John P., his brother, and his mother and sister moved to a farm on Chestnut ridge left to them by the father. Here he remained until June, 1872, when he accepted an agency with the Grover & Baker Sewing-Machine company. This business he followed until the panic of 1873, when he closed out his stock, settled with the company and resigned his position. Afterward he turned his attention to the carpenter’s trade, which he followed until December 18, 1877, when he came to McKeesport and embarked in the grocery business, at No. 21 Market street. Here he remained one year and three months, and then bought the grocery-store of John Rex, No. 50 Market street, at which stand he carried on business for six months. Then buying the dry-goods and grocery business and stock of J. B. Manning, in the Bowman block, he took his brother, John P., into partnership. Under the name of Shale Bros. they worked together one year, when John P. sold his interest to J. B. and returned to the farm. J. B. then managed the business for himself until October, 1882, when he again sold a half-interest, this time to W. J. Sharples, who at present continues to be his partner, and Mr. Shale erected the Second Ward planing-mill, which he operated up to the date of his appointment as postmaster of McKeesport, December 4, 1885, since which time he has given his time and attention to the postal service, and has made a good record as a public man. When he took charge of the office the revenue was about $8,000 per year, the office assigned to the third class, the salary only $1,900 with $300 allowance for rent, light, fuel and furniture. At present writing, the revenue is about $15,000 per year, the office assigned to the second class, the salary $2,300 with $575 allowance for rent, light, fuel and furniture, and $1,300 for clerk hire. The office had been moved to more convenient quarters, and on the 1st of April, 1888, after a long struggle, the postmaster succeeded in having the free delivery of mail established at this office.

Mr. Shade, at the age of fourteen, connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and has been a consistent member since, and also one of the trustees of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of the borough for many years. He has dealt considerably in real estate, and is at present president of the McKeesport Building & Loan association. He is a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, the Board of Trade, the board of directors of Versailles Cemetery, and the board of directors of the Young Men's Christian association. In politics he is a democrat, and was prominently mentioned as a candidate for Congress in 1888 from the twenty-fourth district.

Alexander Watson Cadman, manufacturer, Pittsburgh, and with one exception the oldest established brass-founder in the city, was born in Allegheny, Pa., Feb. 16, 1847. His father, Samson Cadman, a native of Manchester, England, came to Pittsburgh when nineteen years old; he was a machinist, and for several years was engineer on the Ohio river; later he became captain, and commanded the Lutrobo, Mansfield and Clara Dean. At the outbreak of the civil war he was in the government transport service; in 1862 he was in the Mississippi squadron. Afterward he established a brass-foundry on Duquesne way, Pittsburgh, which he operated until his death; he died in 1877. He was a democrat. He was married to Mary Watson of Highland Scotch birth, and their only living children are Alexander and Josephine (wife of James H. Orr, of Edgewood). This wife dying in 1854, Mr. Cadman afterward married Mrs. Matilda Sprott, who survives him. A. W. Cadman attended the public schools of Allegheny and Prof. Davis' academy. When sixteen years old he was employed by his uncle in a boiler-yard, and soon went into his father's office, succeeding to the business. Mr. Cadman is the second oldest resident of Edgewood. Samson Cadman bought land and built a house here in 1868, and brought his family, and A. W. Cadman built his present residence, adjoining his father's, in 1876. He was married in 1874 to Henrietta McWhinney, a native of the city of Allegheny, daughter of Matthew and Sarah McWhinney, of Ireland, and their children are Matthew McW., Ralph Watson and Mary Emma. The family attend the Wilkinsburg Presbyterian Church. Mr. Cadman is a F. & A. M. He was a democrat until 1884, and then became a republican.

George Hetzel, artist, Pittsburgh, was born in the village of Hangviller, Alsace, Germany, January 17, 1836. His parents, George and Susanna (Singratt) Hetzel, came to America in 1828, and settled at Pittsburgh, where the father worked at tailoring for some time, and was twenty-five years tollkeeper at Mechanic street bridge. George attended the public school until sixteen years of age, when he was apprenticed to a sign painter. This he followed till age, and then proceeded to Dusseldorf, Germany, where he studied the art of painting over two years. Ever since then his brush has been his capital. For a few years he gave attention to portrait-work, but now devotes his entire time to landscape-painting, and finds a ready sale for his productions in New York, Philadelphia, Wilmington and other eastern cities, as well as at home. In 1870 he took up his residence at Edgewood, where he built his present home. In 1888, Mr. Hetzel established the Pittsburgh Art school, in company with Mr. John Beatty, and is still connected with that institution as teacher. He is a member of the Stockton Avenue Lutheran Church, Allegheny City, and in politics is a republican. In 1890 Mr. Hetzel married Miss Louise Siegrist, who was born in Mifflin, Juniata county, Pa., daughter of George and Mary Magdalene (Kaetzel) Siegrist, who came from the same locality as Mr. Hetzel. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Hetzel were James, Charles, Ella, Frank and Lila. The eldest three were in the Twenty-eighth street railroad accident in 1880, in which Charles and Ella were killed.

William N. Romani, co-operative, McKeesport, was born in North Huntingdon township, Westmoreland county, Pa., June 30, 1828, a son of Moses and Rebecca (Woods) Robbins. His paternal grandfather was Britnell Robbins, a native of Connecticut, who served as lieutenant and commander of a company throughout the Revolution, and afterward engaged in commerce between New London, Conn., and the West Indies and Cuba. After being engaged in that business several years he lost his vessel and cargo off Cape Hatteras, and to retrieve his fortunes emigrated with an ox-team and cart over the mountains to Connellsville, Westmoreland county, Pa., in 1790, where for a time he worked for the first furnace west of the mountains, on Jacob's creek, as a digger of ore, and later as a teamster. The furnace company failed, owing him considerable money, and he took his pay in pots and kettles, which he afterward exchanged as part payment for a farm near Port Royal. From there he removed to Long run, Allegheny county, where he operated a mill on the property now known as Sampson's mills, where he remained one year. In 1793 he purchased a farm of 390 acres in Westmoreland county, and moved to it; with the assistance of his neighbors, cut the timber, erected a house, and danced in it the same night. He increased his farm to 700 acres by purchasing adjoining lands.

He moved to Pittsburgh in 1803 or 1804, and purchased a large tract of land on Plum creek, where he built two ships, one of which he loaded with St. Louis wheat, and whithered it to New Orleans. She sailed for Cuba under the Spanish flag, and was never heard of afterward; the other was stranded on Wheeling island, and was sold. He built the boats for carrying Gen. Scott's troops across the Niagara into Canada during the war of 1812, and failed to recover payment for his services. He was an active business-man, pushing and enterprising, and a slave-owner. In later life he returned to his farm in Westmoreland county, which he afterward disposed of to his sons, and died near Greensburg, Pa., in 1837. His children were Archibald, Hezekiah, Moses, David, William, Polly, Keziah, Rachel and Elizabeth. Of these Moses always lived in Westmoreland county, engaged in farming, milling and distilling, and was one of the early pioneers in running coal on flatboats from the coal-region to Louisville. His wife was a daughter of James Woods, a pioneer of Westmoreland county, by whom he had six children: Mary J., Rachel, Loren, James, William and Elizabeth. Our subject was reared on the old homestead in Westmoreland county, and engaged in business as a coal-operator in 1856, which he has since followed. He has been a resident of McKeesport since 1856 (Mr. Now deceased) was Flavia Clara, a daughter of Rev. Leroy Woods, of Tennessee, and of Puritan stock. Mr. Robbins has four children; Elizabeth Mosetta, William, Loren and Lutuluss.

H. C. Brakeen, president of Duquesne Tube-works company, and vice-president of People's bank, McKeesport, was born in York county, Pa., in 1839, where he was reared and educated. In 1868 he moved to Cleveland, Ohio, and there worked at the machinist's trade for four years. From 1872 to 1874 he was in Boston, Mass., then came to McKeesport, and entered the employ of the National Tube-works company as foreman of their welding department, which position he held for thirteen years. May 30, 1887, he resigned his position, and became one of the organizers of the Duquesne Tube-works company, of which he is president, and which commenced business January 1, 1888, under favorable auspices. He has been connected with the People's bank of McKeesport since 1876; was a director for several years, and was elected vice-president of the same in 1882, which office he has since held continuously. He has been a member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church five years, and is one of its trustees; is a F. & A. M.; in politics he has always been a republican.

Edward J. Taylor, civil and mining-engineer, McKeesport, was born in Mifflin township, Allegheny county, in July, 1834, a son of Edward and Elizabeth J. (Calhoun) Taylor. His father was a native of Yorkshire, England, a geologist by profession; came to America in 1820, was the pioneer geologist of the copper and iron regions in Marquette and Houghton counties, Mich. He settled in Mifflin township, Allegheny county, Pa., about 1850, and in 1863 removed to what is now the Twenty-second ward, Pittsburgh, where he resided until his death, in 1884. He reared a family of four sons: Charles Z., Edward J., John G. and William K. The maternal grandfather of our subject was of Scotch-Irish descent, and a pioneer of Mifflin township. Mr. Taylor was reared in Mifflin township, and was educated at the Western University of Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh, from which he was graduated in 1876 as a civil and mining engineer. In August, of the same year, he located in McKeesport, where he has since resided, and since 1877, with the exception of one year, has held the position of city engineer; from 1877 to 1885 Mr. S. J. Hatch was associated in business with him, under the firm name of Hatch & Taylor. Since 1885 the firm has been Taylor & Romine.

The first public improvement in McKeesport was the sewerage system, designed and constructed by Hatch & Taylor, the first sewer being constructed in 1878; the next was the designing and construction of the borough water-works, and the next the street improvements, Walnut street being paved with Belgian block for one mile, under the supervision of Mr. Taylor, and he has thus far superintended over five million dollars' worth of work on public improvements for the borough. In his capacity of mining engineer, Mr. Taylor, with his partners, has also superintended the opening of many of the coal-mines of this region, and also designed and superintended the erection of several coke-plants in the Connellsville region. In 1882 he married Lavrie O., daughter of Ernest and Anna (Peder) Succop, of Pittsburgh, and has two children, Charles E. and Ernest S.

Col. Archibald Blakeley, of Quaker Valley, was born July 24, 1827, on the farm now owned by his brother Andrew, on Glade run, in Butler county, Pa. His father, Lewis, was born at the "Forks of Yough," in Allegheny county. His grandfather, Joseph, removed from Chester county to the "Forks of Yough" in 1790, and engaged in distilling, but owing to the disturbance known as the Whisky Boy Insurrection, he removed to what is now Forward township, Butler county, in the latter part of the last century. His great-grandfather, a brother of Commodore Johnston Blakely, of the United States navy, emigrated from Ireland to Chester county before the revolutionary war, and was killed at the battle of Brandywine. His mother, Jane McAllister, was a daughter of Archibald and Hannah McAllister, early settlers on the south side of Connoquenessing, in Forward township, Butler county. Lewis Blakeley spent the greater part of his life in distilling, but died comparatively young, leaving a wife and twelve children in limited circumstances. Archibald was the sixth, and early set out to get an education which he completed at Marshall Academy, Virginia. He then read law with Hon. George W. Smith, of Butler, Pa., and was admitted to the Butler county bar the 9th of November, 1852. In 1853 was elected district attorney of Butler county on the whig ticket, and served three years. In the war of the rebellion five of the brothers entered the service in the Union army, Archibald being commissioned lieutenant-colonel of the Seventy-eighth regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; went with his regiment to Kentucky in the fall of 1861, and was assigned to the organization afterward known as the Army of the Cumberland.

After the battle of Pittsburg Landing he was deputed by Governor Donelson to organize the department of the Cumberland, to serve as the president of a general court-martial and military commission ordered to sit in the state capitol at Nashville. He was engaged in this service when the retreat of Buell in August, 1862, left Nashville in a state of siege, and he and other detached officers and soldiers were organized by Andrew Johnson, then governor of Tennessee, to aid the regular military forces in the defense of the capitol. This force mostly spent the night at the capitol, ready for quick movement to any threatened point. A historian of and participant in that siege has written:

While besieged in this city affairs wore a gloomy aspect. Shut out from the world, with no news for months from the army or from home, surrounded by a vindictive enemy resolutely determined to capture the capitol with the executive members of the government, compelled to fight for every mouthful of food we ate, the condition of the garrison became every day more critical. Yet no one was discouraged, and all were determined to stand by the city, with full faith that under the gallant Gen. Palmer and Negley it would be successfully held. Our expectations were not disappointed, and on the morning of the 29th of October we saw from our fortifications the victorious regiments of Kosciusko approaching the city.

Soon after the battle of Stone river, Col. Blakeley was placed in charge of his regiment, and commanded it with marked skill and courage through the campaigns of Tullahoma and Chickamauga, with their engagements and battles. In the night movement from Chickamauga to Chattanooga he commanded Gen. Thomas, and broke the first battle-line for the defense of Chattanooga. The siege and investment of Chattanooga lasted two months, when the great battles of Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge drove the enemy from his strongholds around Chattanooga. On the day after these battles Col. Blakeley was placed in command of the forces on the mountain. Being several hours from the field of battle, he essayed to construct a line of earthworks across the mountain, and maintained the position in security until the following spring, when, on account of sickness in his family, expected to be fatal, his resignation was reluctantly accepted by Gen. Thomas, and he returned home. On his departure from Lookout Mountain the officers of his regiment adopted and tendered him a series of complimentary resolutions.

Since the war he has devoted himself to the practice of his profession, principally in Pittsburgh. President Andrew Johnson nominated him brevet brigadier-general of volunteers for gallant and incorruptible services in Tennessee, but owing to a disagreement between the president and the senate, this nomination, with many others, was "hung up" and not acted on. When Gen. John W. Geary was elected governor of Pennsylvania in 1866, he tendered Col. Blakeley the office of adjutant-general of the state, which he declined because of important business engagements then on hand. In 1854 he was married to Miss Susan Drum, daughter of Hon. Jacob Mechling and Jane (Thompson) Mechling, at Butler, Pa. Three sons constitute the family: Frederick Jacob, of Toledo, Ohio; Archibald Mechling, of the city of New York, and William Augustus, a student at law in the home at Quaker Valley.

W. E. Koch, superintendent Spang Steel & Iron company, Sharpsburg, was born in London, England, in 1848, the eldest son of Edward Koch, a banker of that city. He was educated at the University of Cambridge, England, at the school of mines in Freiberg, Saxony, Germany, and since the age of twenty has been prominently identified with the manufacture of steel. He emigrated to America in 1888, and traveled through all parts of the United States, having previously traveled through Europe and Australia. In 1886 he entered the employ of the Spang Steel & Iron company, as superintendent of the works at Sharpsburg, which position he still holds. Mr. Koch is a member of the Presbyterian Church and of the Y. M. C. A. of Sharpsburg; politically he is a republican.

Col. J. L. Loyd, clerk of Isabella furnace, P. O. Sharpsburg, is a native of Allegheny county, Pa., and was born in 1826, a son of Alfred G. Loyd, of New York, who came to Pittsburgh in an early day. The pioneer was by occupation a saddler, and was the father of eight children, of whom Col. J. L. is among the youngest. The subject of this sketch was educated in the public schools of this county, was for many years employed by Spang, Chalfant & Co., and for nine years has been employed as clerk in the office of the Isabella furnace company. Since 1842 Mr. Loyd has been a resident of Etna and Sharpsburg. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., Mystic Chain and K. of P. fraternities; politically he is a republican.

James K. Spangler, J. P., McKeesport, was born in Somerset county, Pa., December 4, 1844, a son of Lewis and Mary (Shank) Spangler, and is of English and German extraction. His grandfather, Maj. Stoy, a pioneer of Somerset county, Pa., and the founder of Stoystown, was a celebrated Indian fighter, and participated in the war of 1812. James K. Spangler was reared in his native county, and was a soldier in the civil war, enlisting September 15, 1861, for three years, in Company B, 54th P. V.; was captured three times, and retained two months in Libby prison as a hostage. He re-enlisted as a veteran in 1864, was a prisoner of Gen. Lee at the time of his surrender, and was honorably discharged June 15, 1865. He then located in McKeesport, where he worked as spannerman and heater in Wood's rolling-mill (Russian department), graduated from Mount Union College, Ohio, June, 1870, and for eight years thereafter taught music. He was elected justice of the peace in 1884. He is a member of the Second Methodist Episcopal Church, and leader of the choir; is a member of the G. A. R., Royal Templars of Temperance and K. of P.; politically he is an advocate of prohibition.

Frank Semple Bissell, manufacturer, Pittsburgh, was born in that city, January 28, 1833. His father, John Bissell, was a native of Connecticut, and a pioneer in the rolling-mill business in Pittsburgh; his mother, Nancy Semple, was born in that city. Frank S. graduated at Williams College, Massachusetts, in 1854, and two years later embarked in the manufacture of stoves, in company with his brother Charles, now of Cleveland, as successors of Paine, Lee & Co., on the rolling-mill site, Allegheny City. For the last twenty years he has been sole proprietor, and the business is largely conducted by his eldest son. In 1884 he bought the house in Wilkinsburg built by Henry Harbaugh in 1843, and now resides here. The grounds extend on Penn avenue from West to Alfred streets. Mr. Bissell is a vestryman in St. Andrew's Protestant Episcopal Church of Pittsburgh; a member of the executive committee of Dixmont hospital, and one of the board of managers of the Exchange National bank, Pittsburgh; politically he is a republican. His first wife, Martha H., daughter of Dr. Thomas Miller, bore him one son, Harry M. His present wife, Annie M., daughter of George W. Jackson, of Pittsburgh, is the mother of two sons, George W. J. and John B.

John Gemmill Brown, D. D., Wilkinsburg, was born in Pittsburgh, January 14, 1824. His earliest paternal ancestor in this country came from Scotland in 1707. His grandfather, John Brown (who when a lad was with his father at the battle of Brandywine), passed most of his life on the Juniata, in Huntingdon county. He came to Plum township, this county, early in the present century. Allen, his son, operated a tannery for a time near East Liberty. He married Mrs. Catharine (Kellar) Whiteside, and in 1828 moved his tannery to the site now occupied by the Homeopathic hospital. Four years later he came to Wilkinsburg, and engaged in burning lime; afterward kept a store at East Liberty. For many years he kept one of the largest and most popular hotels in the city of Pittsburgh. He died in 1868.

John G. Brown graduated from the Western University in 1842, and then for four years attended the United Presbyterian Theological Seminary in Allegheny City. In 1845 he was licensed to preach, and the following year became pastor of the congregation now known as the Third United Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh, with which he remained twenty-five years, the present church-edifice being erected during his pastorate. He was then elected corresponding secretary of the board of home missions of the United Presbyterian Church, being the real executive officer of that body for fourteen years. In 1884 the Western University conferred on him the degree of D. D., and in 1874 he was moderator of the general assembly at Monmouth, Ill. In 1889 he organized a day school for deaf-mutes in Pittsburgh, which afterward became, by his efforts, the Western Pennsylvania Institute for the Deaf and Dumb. By his individual efforts he obtained in subscriptions $76,000 for this object, and with the aid of others secured its organization in 1876, when he was made president of the board of trustees and chairman of the executive committee. On the resignation of the principal in 1885, Dr. Brown was unanimously elected by his colleagues to the head of this institution. Dr. Brown was married in 1847 to Caroline E. Fisk, a native of Lawrenceville, and daughter of Alba and Fanny (Kleveland) Fisk, of New England stock. All of their children reside in Lawrenceville; Fanny F. (Murphy), Alba Fisk, general manager Keystone Bridge works, and Caroline F. (Graham). The fourth child, a daughter, died when two years old. Dr. Brown is a republican in politics.

Edward C. Kearney, physician, McKeesport, was born in Monongahela City, Pa., April 30, 1844, and is a son of Edward and Jane (Fleming) Kearney. His father was a native of Berkeley county, now West Virginia, a farmer by occupation, and about 1816 settled with his parents, James and Margaret Kearney, in Monongahela City. His wife was a daughter of David Fleming, a pioneer of Washington county, Pa. Our subject was reared in his native city, and graduated from Monongahela City academy. In 1860 he began the study of medicine with Dr. William H. King, and later with Dr. C. R. Stuckslager, and graduated from Western Reserve college, Cleveland, Ohio. He began the practice of his profession in 1866, in his native city. In 1868 he located at Dravos burg, Allegheny county, where he had a large and successful practice for seventeen years. In 1885 he came to McKeesport, where he has been in active practice since. He recently erected a fine residence on Shaw avenue, and in 1887-88 built the fine building known as the Kearney block, corner of Walnut street and Shaw avenue, one of the finest business blocks in the city. Dr. Kearney married, in 1873, Mary, daughter of William Stone, of Dravosburg; and has three children: Edward, William A. and Charles W.

Samuel F. Finley, dry-goods merchant, McKeesport, was born in Elizabeth, this county, May 23, 1856, a son of Abraham and Jane C. (Seamon) Finley, who settled in Elizabeth about 1842. His father, a boat-builder by trade, followed that vocation for years, and during the civil war was in the HISTORY

wholesale
In
director

James A. Ekin. Shortly after the close of the war he died at his home in Elizabeth. His family consisted of seven children: Lidie S. (Mrs. Charles A. Smith), Mary A. (Mrs. John W. Overena), Lizzie J., Lottie B., Robert S., Samuel F. and Annie C. (Mrs. Rev. R. C. Wolf). Samuel F. was reared and educated in Elizabeth, and also took a course at Dufl's Business College, Pittsburgh. After reaching his majority he engaged as a clerk in the store of W. K. Hobson, near Parker City, for two years, and later was with James A. Reed, Allegheny, for over a year. In September, 1879, he came to McKeesport, and was one year a clerk in the grocery-store of W. G. Gleason. In September, 1880, he embarked in the dry-goods trade, in which he has since continued, and has built up a large and prosperous business, to his growing benefit every year, and he is conceded to be one of McKeesport's most successful merchants. He married, March 23, 1884, Sonoma S., daughter of Rev. Dr. J. A. and Sarah A. (Archibald) Swaney, of this county, and by her has two children, Phoebe L. and Paul K. Mr. Finley is an active member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, and a strong advocate of prohibition.

Captive William Cunningham (deceased) was born in the city of Pittsburgh, June 3, 1837, near the spot where the county courthouse is now located. Early in life he became engaged in the coal business, and assumed command of a steamer plying the Monongahela. He became widely known as a capable and efficient commander. Later in life he commanded several of the largest steamers running between Pittsburgh and Louisville, in which capacity he was engaged up to the time of his death, which occurred March 11, 1878. From 1871 to the time of his death he was a resident of Sewickley, Pa., and during those years a worthy and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife, see Miss Eliza J. McIntosh, was a native of Pittsburgh. They were the parents of eight children, of whom Samuel R. was educated in this county, and is now a corresponding clerk in the Marine National bank, a position he has held since October, 1884.

Charles Atwell, railroad president, Sewickley, was born February 8, 1831, in County Fermanagh, Ireland. His ancestors were English people who moved to Ireland during the revolution of 1690, when they were soldiers in the Protestant army. They received land-grants as bounties for their services, some of which yet remain with the family. Charles Atwell, accompanied by his parents, John and Jane (Fawcett) Atwell, came to America in 1857, and settled in Carroll county, Ohio, where the parents died. On his arrival in Ohio Charles became a clerk in a mercantile establishment in Columbiana county, where he secured many friends. Beginning in 1841, he carried on business for himself until 1855, when he came to Pitts-Spring, N. Y., and after locating in East Boston took charge of the choir of the First Presbyterian Church, and was the organizer and director of the Maverick Male quartet, which ranked among the first in that vicinity. He was director of the East Boston chorus, which took such a prominent part in the World's Peace Jubilee at Boston, Mass., in 1872, and conducted rehearsals for that occasion in the First Presbyterian church of East Boston, having, at that time, the direction of over seven hundred voices.

After locating in McKeesport, he had charge of the First Presbyterian church, and afterward had charge of St. Peter's choir for seven years. He was celebrated as a manager of concerts, and many such entertainments were prepared by him and brought successfully before the public. He was organizer and director at different times of the Apollo club, McKeesport Operatic company, Aliquippa quartet, and, at the time of his death, was leader and director of the Alpine quartet. He was also the organizer and conductor of Blue Ribbon choral union, composed of one hundred members, by whom he had produced one successful concert, and died on the eve of the culmination of one of his most cherished hopes, a concert to be given by the "Union" on March 10, 1888 (his fifty-second birthday). He died March 5, 1888, honored and respected by all who knew him.

THOMAS WILSON MCCUNE, retired, Wilkinsburg, was born in Elizabeth township of this county, in 1827, the eldest of eight children born to John B. and Mary (Wilson) McCune, of Pennsylvania. His grandfather, Thomas McCune, was of Scotch-Irish parentage; settled on a farm near Buena Vista, where he died. He had seven sons and two daughters, of whom John B. was the second. He was a boat-builder and afterward a farmer; he served several years as a road commissioner. Mary Wilson McCune died in the forty-fourth year, and Mr. McCune afterward married Mary Weddle, who bore him seven children. He died in 1876.

T. W. McCune was educated in the common schools, and when nineteen years old became associated with an uncle, supplying timber to the Youghiogheny Blackwack Navigation company. He continued in the lumber business for six years, and then kept a general store at Buena Vista till the outbreak of the civil war. In July, 1861, he enlisted in Company F, 28th P. V. I., and served in the Army of the Potomac nearly two years, becoming sergeant-major. After leaving the military service he followed contracting, and for one year he was mine-manager for Hagner & Co. and seven years manager of the Eliza furnaces. In 1873, he went to Scottsdale, and managed a furnace there seven years, at the end of which time he removed to Wheeling. After rebuilding the Belmont furnace, he removed to Huntington, Huntington county, and took charge of R. H. Powell's plant at Saxton as general manager, and later was general superintend-
CHRISTIAN ROTT, glass-manufacturer. Wilkinsburg, was born in the village of Baden Hausen, Brunswick, Germany, October 29, 1833. His grandfather was Christian Rott. In 1850 his parents, Christian (a blacksmith by trade) and Elizabeth (Hausenck) Rott, came to America and settled at Pittsburgh. The father died in 1875; the mother is still living. There were three sons, of whom Frederick, the eldest, resides at Pittsburgh, and Louis, the youngest, at Homestead. Christian attended the common and high schools of the city till sixteen years old; then spent two years in a shoveling factory. By a fall through a skylight both his arms were broken, and the right never recovered its strength. Later he kept books for a soap-factory, and afterward he took the place of the foreman, and made soap for four years. In 1878 he became a partner in the firm of George A. McBeath & Co., the largest manufacturers of lamp-chimneys in the world. In March, 1898, he retired from business, which he had built in Wilkinsburg, and commenced to beautify the grounds. He is quite as successful at horticulture as in his other undertakings. He frequently visits Europe, and gets all the points on glass-manufacture that are obtainable. He is a member of the Swedenborgian Church in Allegheny City, and of the L. of H., R. A. and A. O. U. W. He is a republican with free-trade tendencies; was a member of the Pittsburgh city council one year, and was active in procuring a borough organization for Wilkinsburg; is now secretary of three building and loan associations. In June, 1871, he married Sarah, daughter of C. C. Johnson, of Monongahela City, and she has borne him three children: William Frederick, Corna and Walter Christian.

WESLEY C. SOLES, real-estate broker. McKeesport, was born in that city March 30, 1848, a son of Lewis and Catherine (Caven) Soles. His paternal grandparents were George and Margaret (Ritchie) Soles, the former a son of Jacob Soles, a pioneer of McKeesport. Lewis Soles was a native of McKeesport, a carpenter by trade, which he followed all his life, and died in 1878, aged sixty-four years. His wife, Catherine (Caven), was a daughter of Benjamin and Fanny (Wilson), of Irish descent, who were among the early settlers of this county. Lewis was the father of eleven children, eight of whom survive: Margaret (Mrs. Thomas Mulholland), Martha (Mrs. Andrew Hunter), George, Eveline (Mrs. Wilton Miller), Mary A. (Mrs. William Stewart), Wesley C., Edwin and Howard. Wesley C. was reared in McKeesport, and educated in the public schools. He learned the trade of house-carpenter, and later became a contractor, a calling that gave him every opportunity to acquire a full knowledge of land, houses, buildings of all kinds, and fitted him for the real-estate business, which has had his time and attention for many years, and which he still carries on. He has been twice married; first to Jennie Miller, and second to Emma, daughter of Thomas and Cynthia (McGraw) Smith, by whom he has three children: Frank, Evaline and Scott A. For three years Mr. Soles was a member of McKeesport’s city council, and was one of the committee on water-works construction. He is a director of the Bank of McKeesport, and of three building and loan associations. He is a member of the F. & A. M.; politically a republican.

JOHN F. PRAGER, farmer, postoffice Sharpsburg, was born in Germany, in 1821, the third of seven children of John and Barbara (Wilt) Prager. In 1846 he immigrated to America, and for a time worked at cabinet-making in Philadelphia; came to Allegheny county in 1848, and purchased his present farm in O’Hara township in 1852. He married, in 1848, Catherine Samstag, who is the mother of five children, three sons and two daughters. Mr. Prager has through his own hard work succeeded in a financial way, owning now about 100 acres of land in the township where he resides. He has served as school director, is a member of the Catholic Church, and politically a republican.

LUXBER B. DAVISON, retired, Wilkinsburg, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., October 29, 1819. His father, Thomas Davison, was a native of County Down, Ireland, and married Ann Babe, of the city of Belfast. He was a teacher, and after spending a few weeks in Pittsburgh settled in the fall of 1819 in Wilkins township, where he taught school; shortly afterward he opened a store, which his wife attended, and later he abandoned teaching to give his entire attention to the store. His wife died in 1828, and Mr. Davison soon after sold out and moved to East Liberty, where he served twenty-seven years as justice of the peace. In 1833 he married Rebecca Turner, who now resides in East Liberty, and she bore him two sons and five daughters. Mr. Davison was a stanch republican, and for many years was an elder in the Presbyterian Church. He died May 1877. Mrs. Davison was the only child left by his mother. He attended the common schools at Wilkinsburg and East Liberty, and spent two years at the Western University. When fifteen years old he began work in his father’s store, and there remained till he was twenty-eight, when he bought out the business. During President Fillmore’s administration he was postmaster there, and was for thirteen years school director. He came to Wilkinsburg in 1858, and continued business; he is a republican; was postmaster four years from 1861; was three years school director, fifteen years justice of the peace (elected without party nomination), and notary public six years. He is one of the seven original members of the Presbyterian church. He is now a resident here. December 12, 1850, Mr. Davison married Nancy Jane McCosh, a native of Washington county, and a daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Allison) McCosh, who were of Scotch and English descent, respectively. Three children of Mr. and Mrs. Davison survive: John Milton, Mary Elizabeth and Clara Carey. Thomas, the eldest, and Samuel McCosh, the youngest, died in infancy.

WILLIAM WOODS, M. D. (deceased), was born in 1804 in this county, and died in 1885. He was the son of William Woods, a native of America, of Scotch descent, and a clergyman of the Presbyterian Church of Lebanon district. The subject of this memoir read medicine with Dr. William Church, of Pittsburgh, and graduated from the Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia. He located in Pittsburgh, and distinguished himself during the epidemic of cholera in 1832. In 1858 he removed to Sewickley and continued his practice. Dr. Woods was married twice, his first wife being Mary, daughter of William Sample, and by her he had three sons. After the death of the second wife, see Sarah Wilson, by whom he had three sons and one daughter, Dr. Woods retired from his profession and removed to the home of his daughter, Mrs. Mary F. McDonald, in Beaver county, Pa., where he died. He was a good physician, highly esteemed, and trusted; diseases of children were his specialty. Of his children, William S. Woods, M. D., was a surgeon in the army during the late war, and had charge of a hospital in Harrisburg, Pa., also of the Benton barracks, at St. Louis, Mo. He died while in the service among the Indians. He was a distinguished surgeon in his day. Previous to the war he was located in Birmingham, where he had a practice to the extent of $10,000 per annum.

R. D. JONES, grocer, McKeesport, was born in Newtown, Montgomeryshire, North Wales, and is a son of Rowland D. and Mary (Henry) Jones. He was reared in Wales, England and Scotland, and is an iron-worker by trade. He came to America in 1858, located in Pittsburgh, and for twenty-one years worked at his trade in that vicinity and elsewhere. For five years he was foreman of Eversen & Preston’s mills. In 1870 he became a member of the firm of Wright, Griffitt & Co., and meditated the galvanized-iron works on Gist street, Pittsburgh, several years, and superintended the construction of their new works at Irondale. When the latter were completed our subject sold his interest, after five years’ connection with the firm, and managed the mills of Harbaugh, Mathias & Owen, at Wood River, five years. He was also manager of a mill at Paducah, Ky., for six months, and for two years was foreman of the Lochiel Iron-works, at Harrisburg, Pa. In 1874 he settled at Demmler, now a part of McKeesport, erected the first dwelling at that place, and was one of the original stockholders of the U. S. Tin-Plate works. He has been in the mercantile business since 1874. In 1892 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Jones, of South Wayne, and has one son, Isaac L. Mr. Jones is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of the I. O. O. F. and K. of P. He held the office of justice of the peace five years, and politically a republican. He was president of the school board for two years in the Ninth ward, Allegheny City, when the new schoolhouse was built; also a member of the board of health from said ward; and represented the Eighth ward, Pittsburgh, in council one year.

William Brown, farmer, postoffice Sharpsburg, a prominent and successful farmer of O’Harmon township, is a native of Gallowayshire, Scotland, born in 1827. His father, John Brown, a farmer, immigrated to America in 1834, located first in Washington Township, Pa., but later to Allegheny county, where he lived on a farm in Indiana township until his death. John married Mary Houston, a native of Scotland. They became the parents of nine children, and died, he in 1870, aged seventy years, and his wife in 1883, aged fifty-four years. William Brown was reared and educated in Indiana township, and followed farming through life. In 1851 he married, in Allegheny county, Miss Elizabeth Hodil, a member of one of the earliest families in the township. Five children, all of whom are living, have blessed this union: Homer, William R., Alfred, Walter and Minnie. It can be said, in justice to the subject of this sketch, that by his own personal efforts and fair dealings he ranks among O’Hara’s most well-to-do and respected citizens. He served his township for a number of years as member of the school board, and has also filled other positions. He and family are members of the United Brethren Church; politically he is a democrat.

Franklin J. Phillips, grocer, McKeesport, was born in what is now Lincoln township, this county, December 29, 1839, a son of John and Mary (Edmundson) Phillips. His paternal grandfather, John Phillips, and maternal grandfather, William Edmundson, were pioneers of Lincoln township. John Phillips, Sr., had four children: John, Rebecca (Mrs. James Leech), Ezra and Jause (Mrs. Abel Walker). Of these John was a farmer, and lived and died in Lincoln township, in the house in which he was born and reared. He had four children: Eliza J., Franklin J., Adeline (Mrs. Zera McGrew) and William P., of whom the last mentioned was reared on the old homestead. Franklin J. was reared and educated in his native township, and in early life followed farming, later conducting a dairy business for ten years. He located in McKeesport in 1884, and since 1886 has been engaged in the grocery trade. In 1865 he married Deborah A., daughter of Nathaniel and Phebe C. (Hayden) McGrew, and has four children: Katie M., Mary J., Bertie B. and Nathan F. Mr. Phillips is a member of the Baptist Church and Royal Arcanum; politically he is a prohibitionist.

John B. Beatty, retired, postoffice Hobart, was born in Allegheny county, Pa., in 1821. The original spelling of the family name was Beattie. Francis Beatty, the pioneer of the family, as early as 1808 left his native home in the eastern part of New York state, and came to Allegheny county. He was a farmer, and purchased three hundred acres of land in Indiana township, where he remained until his death. He married Miss Beswick, a native of the state of New York, and they became the parents of four sons and three daughters. Of these Francis, Jr., was among the youngest. He was born in 1795, and at an early date learned the hatter’s trade, which, however, he abandoned on account of ill-health, and commenced farming. He married Sarah Black, of Scotch-Irish parentage, but a native of South Carolina, and five sons and four daughters were the result of this union, John B. being the eldest. Francis Beatty, Jr., died in 1871, aged seventy-six years, his wife in 1853, aged fifty-four years. John B. Beatty was educated at the common schools, and has followed farming, but taught school in his younger days. He married, in 1845, Sarah, daughter of Andrew and Mary (Stewart) Erwin, aged five years, daughter of Jacob Hodil, a member of one of the earliest families in the township. Five children, all of whom are living, have blessed this union: Homer, William R., Alfred, Walter and Minnie. It can be said, in justice to the subject of this sketch, that by his own personal efforts and fair dealings he ranks among O’Hara’s most well-to-do and respected citizens. He served his township for a number of years as member of the school board, and has also filled other positions. He and family are members of the United Brethren Church; politically he is a democrat.

Franklin J. Phillips, grocer, McKeesport, was born in what is now Lincoln township, this county, December 29, 1839, a son of John and Mary (Edmundson) Phillips. His paternal grandfather, John Phillips, and maternal grandfather, William Edmundson, were pioneers of Lincoln township. John Phillips, Sr., had four children: John, Rebecca (Mrs. James Leech), Ezra and Jause (Mrs. Abel Walker). Of these John was a farmer, and lived and died in Lincoln township, in the house in which he was born and reared. He had four children: Eliza J., Franklin J., Adeline (Mrs. Zera McGrew) and William P., of whom the last mentioned was reared on the old homestead. Franklin J. was reared and educated in his native township, and in early life followed farming, later conducting a dairy business for ten years. He located in McKeesport in 1884, and since 1886 has been engaged in the grocery trade. In 1865 he married Deborah A., daughter of Nathaniel and Phebe C. (Hayden) McGrew, and has four children: Katie M., Mary J., Bertie B. and Nathan F. Mr. Phillips is a member of the Baptist Church and Royal Arcanum; politically he is a prohibitionist.

John B. Beatty, retired, postoffice Hobart, was born in Allegheny county, Pa., in 1821. The original spelling of the family name was Beattie. Francis Beatty, the pioneer of the family, as early as 1808 left his native home in the eastern part of New York state, and came to Allegheny county. He was a farmer, and purchased three hundred acres of land in Indiana township, where he remained until his death. He married Miss Beswick, a native of the state of New York, and they became the parents of four sons and three daughters. Of these Francis, Jr., was among the youngest. He was born in 1795, and at an early date learned the hatter’s trade, which, however, he abandoned on account of ill-health, and commenced farming. He married Sarah Black, of Scotch-Irish parentage, but a native of South Carolina, and five sons and four daughters were the result of this union, John B. being the eldest. Francis Beatty, Jr., died in 1871, aged seventy-six years, his wife in 1853, aged fifty-four years. John B. Beatty was educated at the common schools, and has followed farming, but taught school in his younger days. He married, in 1845, Sarah, daughter of Andrew and Mary (Stewart) Erwin, aged five years, daughter of Jacob Hodil, a member of one of the earliest families in the township. Five children, all of whom are living, have blessed this union: Homer, William R., Alfred, Walter and Minnie. It can be said, in justice to the subject of this sketch, that by his own personal efforts and fair dealings he ranks among O’Hara’s most well-to-do and respected citizens. He served his township for a number of years as member of the school board, and has also filled other positions. He and family are members of the United Brethren Church; politically he is a democrat.
and the only son living, his only brother having been drowned when five years old. Our subject received a common-school training, and went to Philadelphia when sixteen years old, to earn his living. After being variously employed for five years, he became clerk for an uncle who was furnishing supplies to contractors on the construction of the Pennsylvania railroad over the Allegheny mountains. In 1855 he came to Pittsburgh, and drove for a time a wagon for the Adams Express company; subsequently he became messenger, was made route-agent in 1865, later general route-agent, and since March, 1885, has filled his present position. He attends the Presbyterian Church, of which his wife is a member, and has been an ardent republican since the outbreak of the civil war. Mr. Stoner was married June 6, 1866, to Miss Elizabeth Maquila, a native of Union county, and daughter of Widmore and Theresa Maquila, both natives of Fayette county, of Scotch and Quaker descent, respectively. In 1888 Mr. Stoner built his handsome residence on Rebecca street, where reside with him his three children: Belle Therese, Edward H. and Elizabeth Rheaem. Guy Christian, the second child, died when three years old.

Wesley J. Walker, wholesale grocer, McKeesport, was born in that city, October 24, 1809, a son of A. E. and Jane (Phillips) Walker. His father, a native of Carlisle, Pa., settled in McKeesport in 1848, where he has since resided. He is a carpenter by trade, but kept a grocery for a time in that city. The maternal grandfather of subject was John Phillips, a pioneer of what is now Lincoln township. Wesley J. was reared and educated in McKeesport, and during the last twenty years has most of the time been engaged in the grocery line. In 1885 he embarked in the wholesale grocery business in that city, and has built up a successful trade. In 1875 he married Ellen A., daughter of Rev. P. H. Thomas, of Frederick county, Md., and has two children living: Jesse A. and Daisy H. Mr. Walker is a prominent business-man, is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in politics is an advocate of prohibition.

F. McK. White, physician and surgeon, postoffice Hoboken, Pa., was born in Sewickley, Allegheny county, Pa., in 1858, a son of Judge White, of that county. He was educated in the common schools and academies of Allegheny county, and at Allegheny College, Meadville, Pa., and in 1881 commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Lashell, of Crawford county, graduating at the Western Reserve University at Cleveland, Ohio, February 27, 1883, and taking a post-graduate course at the University of Pennsylvania in June, 1884. He commenced the practice of his profession in Allegheny City on May 19, 1885; was elected by the managers of the Allegheny County Workhouse physician and surgeon of that institution, which position he now holds. The doctor is numbered among the rising young men of his profession in the county. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. and J. O. U. A. M. In religion he is a Methodist, in politics a republican.

Louis Adam Raisig, architect, Wilkinsburg, son of Rev. John and Catharine (Graf) Raisig, was born in Clarion county, Pa., May 9, 1858. His father, now pastor of the Lutheran Church at Plumer, Venango county, was born at Heilbronn, Wurtemberg, Germany, and his mother is a native of Mannstadt, Germany. Louis A. was reared in Plumer, attending the public schools till twenty years old; then went to Olean, N. Y., to learn the carpenter’s trade, and while following this occupation he made a study of architectural drawing. He came to Wilkinsburg in 1883, and three years later became head of the contracting firm of L. A. Raisig & Co. They have built up an extensive business; have rebuilt shops destroyed by fire on Penn avenue, adjoining the railroad, and have added a stock of lumber for retail trade. The designing is under the charge of Mr. Raisig. He is a supporter of the Presbyterian Church, in politics a democrat.

John Nash, retired, Sewickley, was born July 1, 1817, in Wiltshire, England, son of John and Mary (Pierce) Nash, who descended from an old family, and were farmers. John, their son, worked on the London & Birmingham and Great Western railroads, also on the Lancashire & Yorkshire railroad in England, and in 1851 he came to America, locating on the Big Kanawha for a time, but afterward removed to New Brighton, Pa., where he secured work on the Pittsburgh & Ft. Wayne railroad. Afterward he came to Sewickley, continuing in the employment of the same company for many years, and never had an accident on his section. He now lives retired in Sewickley, a member of the Episcopal Church. He was married in England to Sarah Green, who died leaving three children: Mary McPherson, Henry and Allen. Mr. Nash’s present wife was Margaret Buckle, a native of Berwick county, Pa., and she is the mother of three children: John F., Anna and Laura M. Politically Mr. Nash is a democrat, and was councilman three years.

Joseph Williams, manufacturing chemist, Sharpsburg, was born in Worcestershire, England, in 1834, a son of Richard and Hannah (Holloway) Williams, the latter a native of Tipton, England. To these parents nine children were born, of whom Joseph is the fourth child. He was educated at the public schools of his native land, and since early youth has made the study of chemicals a specialty, and was, until twenty-eight years of age, employed in some of the large chemical works of England. At that age he came to America, and located in Pittsburgh, where he was engaged as agent and machinist for a number of iron manufacturers, as well as in Ohio. He was sent for, to superintend the erection of large chemical works in New Jersey, returned to Pittsburgh.
in 1869, and two years later introduced his first compound chemical preparation, "Tallowine," a hot and cold neck rolling-mill grease. In 1870 he brought before the public "Williams' Soluble Thymol," an invaluable deodorizer and disinfectant. Mr. Williams married, in 1856, Mary Ann, daughter of James Waterhouse, of Worcestershire, England, and eleven children were born to them, five of whom are now living: George H., Joseph M., William H., and Edwin R. Mr. Williams is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the Legion of Honor; politically he is a republican.

William O'Bryon, insurance agent, McKeesport, was born in Garrett county, Md., March 26, 1853, of Irish and German descent. At the age of ten he was thrown on his own resources, and became an errand-boy In 1855, he went to work in a hardware store, to which he was sent by his father, and engaged as a scrap-pounder in an iron-mill, at twenty-five cents per day. In 1867 he entered the store of J. P. Learn & Co., in a subordinate capacity. In 1869 he became a salesman in this store, and remained until 1871, when he began business as a merchant on his own account. In 1874 he left the mercantile business and became an insurance agent in McKeesport. In 1876 he became the general manager, in Pittsburgh, of an eastern life- and accident-insurance company, which position he still occupies. Mr. O'Bryon married, June 22, 1870, Minnie Van Kirk, of McKeesport, and they have had five children, of whom four are living.

S. Y. Anderson, machinist, Sewickley, is a native of this county, born March 5, 1845, and is a grandson of Robert Anderson, Esq. His father, James Anderson, was born in Washington county, brought to this county when a boy, and was educated here. He was a farmer, and one of the first members of the Presbyterian Church; politically he was a democrat. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry and Rebecca (Davis) Omdott, and they had one son, Samuel Y. The father died June 2, 1850, when thirty seven years of age. The subject of this sketch was a machinist with Hartup & Co., and subsequently for the Pennsylvania company in the Pitts Locomotive-works. He afterward engaged with the Morgan Engineering company, of Alliance, Ohio. In 1881 he returned to Sewickley, and erected the Roseburg mills, which he has conducted successfully.

James H. Arnold, hardware-merchant, McKeesport, was born near Olivet, Armstrong county, Pa., April 8, 1857, a son of R. J. and Mary (Shirley) Arnold. His father is a native of Devonshire, England, a son of William Arnold, and a tinner by trade, but is now engaged in farming in Indiana county, Pa. The maternal grandfather of James H. was Joseph Shirley, a pioneer of Armstrong county, who lived to the great age of one hundred and three years. The subject of these lines was reared in Indiana county, where he received a common-school education, learned the tinner's trade under his father, and for a number of years worked as a journeyman. He came to McKeesport in the spring of 1884, and was in the employ of J. N. & W. E. Hartman one year. In the spring of 1885 he embarked in the hardware business at 1216 Walnut street, where he has built up a successful trade. In 1881 he married Carrie Keppel, of Armstrong county, Pa., and has two children living: Earl J. and Mary. Mr. Arnold is a member of the U. P. Church, the Royal Arcanum and the R. T. of T.; politically he is a democrat.

Albert Oscar Laufman, druggist, Wilkinsburg, was born near Chambersburg, Pa., December 27, 1833. His grandfather, Philip Laufman, resided in Cumberland county, where David, father of Albert Oscar, was born. He (David) married Susan Harrington, of Chambersburg, and they had two children: Philip, who married and moved to Allegheny county, Pa., in 1834; he filled the office of sheriff and other public positions; he had four sons, and one daughter who died in infancy. Philip Harrington, the eldest, came to Pittsburgh in 1840; William resides at Apollo, and David near St. Paul, Minn.; Albert O., the youngest, came to Pittsburgh when thirteen years old, and took employment in his brother's hardware-store. Mr. Laufman crossed the plains with Gen. Floyd's army in 1858, when that army was sent out to fight the Mormons; from there he made his way westward to California. He was a reporter on the San Joaquin Republican, and in 1860 joined a surveying party occupied in locating the eastern boundary of the state. Following year he returned to Pittsburgh, and enlisted in Company A, 63d Pa. V. I., serving nearly two years with the Army of the Potomac; he was discharged on account of injured eyesight, being at time of his discharge first lieutenant in command of his company. Returning to Pittsburgh, he here engaged in the drug business, and later at McKeesport. In 1883 he built three stores in Wilkinsburg, which were burned down three years later, but he at once rebuilt. Mr. Laufman is identified with the M. E. Church, is a Freemason, a member of the G. A. R. and R. A., and in politics is a republican. In 1865 he married Julia Forsyth, widow of James T. Brown, a sister-in-law of Gov. Porter, of Indianapolis, Ind., and daughter of William and Margaret (Foster) Forsyth, of Pittsburgh, Pa. Three children are living: Susan H., wife of C. H. Hamilton; Margaret Adelaide and Albert Walker Laufman.

J. L. Rolshouste, superintendent of Allegheny City Home, at Claremont, postoffice Hoboken, was born February 5, 1841, in Allegheny City. His father, J. G. Rolshouse, came from Germany to America when seventeen years of age, located in Allegheny City, Pa., and engaged in farming and other business. He is still living. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Frazier, of Gettysburg, Pa., and ten children were born to them. J. L., the eldest, was educated in the public schools, and engaged in farming and merchandising. He has been identified with the Allegheny City Home since 1881, at which time he was superintendent of the farming, and was appointed to his present position in 1886. Mr. Rolshouse married, in 1866, Isabella Heaslet, and six children have been born to them; Amelia, Jennie, John, Annie, Tillie and Maggie. Mr. Rolshouse enlisted in 1864, in Company L, 61st P. V., and served until the close of the war. He is a member of the A. O. U. W. and of the Presbyterian Church; politically he is a republican.

HENRY WARNER, superintendent of Allegheny County Workhouse, postoffice Hoboken, was born in Allegheny county, in 1838, a son of Henry Warner, Sr., who immigrated to America from his native city, Dublin, Ireland, about 1828. Henry, Sr., was a bookkeeper, an occupation he followed in America. His wife was Mary Riddle, also of Ireland, and they were the parents of four children, of whom Henry, Jr., is the youngest. Having attended the public schools of Allegheny City until fifteen years of age, our subject was employed for three years as clerk, and then engaged one year as bookkeeper in a flouring-mill. At the end of that time he became a partner in the firm of John Taggart & Co. In 1862 he enlisted as private in Independent Battery G; was promoted September 1, 1862, to duty-sergeant; to quartermaster-sergeant in December, 1862; April, 1863, to first sergeant; September, 1863, to junior second lieutenant; October, 1864, to post-adjudant at Fort Delaware. In December, 1864, he commanded a ten-gu battery at Reedy Point, and was discharged in 1865 at the close of the war. After the war he located in Oil City and engaged in a general merchandising business under the firm name of Warner, Lewis & Co., a partnership which lasted one year. He then returned to Allegheny City, and for four years was employed as bookkeeper in Mr. Amy's bank, which he left during which time he was elected member of the common council of that city; was re-elected in 1868, 1869 and 1870, and elected president of the council in January of that year. In 1870 he was nominated by the republicans and elected to the legislature. In 1871 he was elected comptroller of Allegheny county, entering upon the duties of his office in 1872; was re-elected to that position and served until 1878, in which year he was defeated for renomination. During the first years of his term in office he was manager of the Morgaana Reform school. In 1879 he was elected general manager and first vice-president of the Pittsburgh & Southern Railroad company, which position he filled until April 15 of the same year, when he resigned, having been elected by common pleas, Nos. 1 and 2, county commissioner to settle the losses incurred by the railroad riot of 1877. He was nominated and elected by the people in 1881 to the office of county commissioner, but never served, being appointed superintendent of the Allegheny County Workhouse, which position he fills at date.

Mr. Warner married, in 1866, Annie L. Little, daughter of John H. Little, of Sewickley, Allegheny county. Five children have blessed this union, three of whom are living: Elizabeth Patterson (now at Pennsylvania Female College), Edward Little and Anna Isabella. During the public career of Mr. Warner he has filled fifty-four offices, and the high esteem in which he is held by those who know him is the best guarantee of the ability and honesty of the man. He is a member of the G. A. K., also of the Sixth U. P. Church, of Allegheny City; politically he is a republican.

DANIEL S. DUNCAN, superintendent of Sharpsburg water-works, was born in Ashbula county, Ohio, in 1861, a son of Warren Duncan, a prominent contract carpenter of Cleveland, Ohio. Daniel was educated in the public schools of Painesville, Ohio, and followed the machinist's trade several years, in which he was successful, having had charge of several places. In 1886 he came to Pennsylvania, and followed a commercial life. In 1887 he took charge of Sharpsburg water-works, which he has done successfully. In 1888 he married Miss Swindells, a teacher in the public school, and a daughter of William Swindells, an old resident of Sharpsburg. Mr. Duncan, in all his undertakings in life, has met with success.

JAMES HENDERSON DUFF, M. D., died at his residence in Pittsburgh, Dec. 29, 1884. He was a native of Franklin township, Westmoreland county, born in 1824, and was of Scotch-Irish descent. Both he and his father, John, were born on the farm where his grandfather, John Duff, had settled, shortly after the revolutionary war. Dr. Duff attended school near his father's home, and finished his preparatory education under various private instructors, his brother, Rev. John Duff, once the master of Mr. Duff's school. He afterwards entered Mr. Duff minister College, being among the number. After the completion of his medical studies at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1848, he passed an examination for the United States navy, and began the practice of his profession at his native home, where he at once entered upon a large practice. He removed to Pittsburgh, South Side, in 1866, where he very soon acquired a large and lucrative practice, and took a front rank among her leading physicians. He was a strong abolitionist, and was among the first to offer his services to the government in the late civil war. He served for a time in the hospitals about Washington, and afterward organized a company of emergency-men, which he refused to leave for the colony of a regiment which was later called the National Home Guards. Duff was a man of large build and commanding appearance, modest and unassuming, of sound, deliberative judgment, and quiet but forcible dignity. He was the friend of all who knew him, and his professional skill, as well as his purse, were always ready to meet the case of the needy. In 1848 he married Susan T., daughter of Joseph and Mary Miller, of Newlnsburg, Westmoreland county. His family consisted of six children: Dr. John Milton Duff, a physician of Pittsburgh, and professor of obstetrics in the Western Pennsylvania Medical College; Anna M., deceased in 1883, married to Rev. J. C. Ely; Rev. Joseph M., pastor of Mansfield Presbyterian Church; Rev. Albert James, deceased in 1886, then pastor of Knoxville Presbyterian Church; Alfred William, an attorney at the Pittsburgh bar, and Sue T., at home with her mother in Wilkinsburg.

W. W. Waters, manager Presbyterian bookstcire, Pittsburgh, was born in 1838, in Allegheny county, Pa. His paternal great-grandfather was a native of England, and came to America in an early day, settling in Stoughton, Mass. Asa Waters, grandfather of W. W., was a captain in the revolutionary war. (A brave woman, who was a near relative, served also in the army, and was pensioned.) His son, Oren Waters, the father of W. W., was a manufacturer in Massachusetts. He came to Pittsburgh in 1824, opened a shop in partnership with his brother Asa, and manufactured the first shovels and axes made in Pittsburgh. Later he removed to Chartiers creek, where he established himself, and subsequently removed to New Brighton. His wife was Juliet Harris, of an old Butler family. The subject of this sketch received his education in New Brighton, and came to Pittsburgh in 1851, where he was employed in an office. In 1856 he engaged as clerk with J. S. Davison, a dealer in books, and in 1857 he took charge of the Presbyterian bookstcire, of which he is now the manager. He has resided in Sewickley since 1875. Mr. Waters married a daughter of Rev. John Cook, of the Presbyterian Church, pastor of the New Brighton Church for thirty-three years. Mr. and Mrs. Waters are members of the Presbyterian Church of Sewickley, of which he is an elder; politically he is a republican.

Theophilus R. Van Kirk, physician, McKeesport, was born in Elizabeth township, Allegheny county, July 11, 1840, a son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Hutchinson) Van Kirk. His grandfather, Joseph Van Kirk, a native of New Jersey, and a son of William Van Kirk, of Holland-Dutch descent, had seven sons and two daughters. Fifteen members of the Van Kirk family participated in the revolutionary war. The widow of William Van Kirk married a Mr. Canann, and settled in Elizabeth township in 1789, with her children. Joseph Van Kirk was engaged by occupation, and lived and died in Elizabeth township. He was the father of eight children, of whom Joseph Jr., father of our subject, was the fourth child and second son. He was a farmer, and now resides in Elizabeth township, in his eighty-seventh year. He had eight children who grew to maturity: Joel K. (a physician of Elizabeth). Ann (Mrs. B. H. Newlin), Isaac, Mary J. (Mrs. Samuel Beazell), Theophilus R., Bennett H. (a physician of West Newton), William K. (a physician of McKeesport) and Hannah (Mrs. Jonas Ray, deceased). Theophilus R. was reared in this and Westmoreland counties, and began the study of medicine in 1860, in the office of his brother, J. K. Van Kirk, of Elizabeth. April 19, 1861, he enlisted in the 12th P. V., and was honorably discharged after three months' service. In the fall of 1862 he entered Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, from which he graduated in the spring of 1881. September 1, same year, he joined the 290th regiment P. V., as assistant surgeon, and served until June 1, 1865, and was honorably discharged. He located in McKeesport in 1867, where he has since resided, in the active practice of his profession. He married in October, 1871, Virginia, daughter of William and Mary A. (Shields) Whigham, of McKeesport, and by her had three children: Corinne, Herbert S. and Virginia. Dr. Van Kirk, with one exception, is the oldest established physician in McKeesport. He is a member of the Allegheny County Medical society, Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania and American Medical association. In politics he is a republican.

H. S. Newlin, physician, McKeesport, is a native of Westmoreland county, Pa., and was reared and educated from seven years of age in Elizabeth, Allegheny county. He began the study of medicine in 1879, with Drs. J. K. and T. R. Van Kirk, of this county; entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore, Md., in the fall of 1881, and graduated in the spring of 1883. He immediately began the practice of his profession in Elizabeth, and in November of the same year located in McKeesport. His son, Robert, W., of the manufacturer, McKeesport, son of Robert and Susan (Mackay) Gordon, natives of Aberdeen, Scotland, is a native of Canada, born near Montreal, where he was reared and educated. In 1889, when twenty-one years of age, he located at Montpelier, Vt., where after a short time he became assistant manager of the stock-farm of J. H. Flagler and remained three years. In 1872 he came to McKeesport, and has since had charge of the stock and teaming department of the National Tube-works company. During his long service with this firm he applied himself diligently to his occupation, soon became an efficient veterinary surgeon and an excellent judge in treating the ailments so common to horses and cattle, and during the sixteen years he has been here has lost but one case out of hundreds that have been under his care. For several years Mr. Gordon has been using remedies of his own manufacture, and so great has been the demand for his horse and cattle powder and hoof ointment that he has been obliged to give his almost exclusive attention to the manufacture and shipment of his remedies. His business is destined to become one of the leading members of McKeesport. Mr. Gordon married, in 1875, Mattie A., daughter of Daniel Gould, of McKeesport, and has four children: Nellie, Robert, Edith and Earl H. He is a member of the C. P. Church; also a member of the A. O. U. W. and Heptasophs, and in politics is a republican.

W. H. Smith, secretary Duquesne Forge company, Pittsburgh, is a native of Allegheny county, born in 1834. Thomas Smith, his father, came to America in 1799, and in 1812 located in Allegheny City. He was a silversmith by occupation, and previous to his death lived retired. He married Margaret H., daughter of Robert Stewart, who came from Juniata county to Allegheny county in 1810. Mr. Stewart married Mary Wilson, and was for many years ferryman where the Sixth street bridge now stands. Born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith were six children, five of whom are now living. W. H. was educated at the common schools in Allegheny City, and for many years was employed as bookkeeper, and afterward was in the banking business. He married Eliza W. Burford, and has two children, Llewellyn M. and Fred E. For the past two and a half years Mr. Smith has been connected with the Twin City forge. He is a member of the U. P. Church; politically he is a republican.

H. W. Hitzrot, physician, McKeesport, is a native of Prussia, and received a classical education at the University of Berlin. In 1867 he came to America, and located in Johnstown, Pa., where he secured a position as clerk in a drugstore, and was afterward employed in the offices of the Cambria Iron company. In the fall of 1871 he located in McKeesport, where he engaged in the drug business, in which he continued up to 1878. In the meantime he had read medicine, and in 1880 graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore, Md. In the spring of the same year he began the practice of his profession in McKeesport, where he has built up a large and lucrative practice. Dr. Hitzrot has always taken an active interest in the advancement of McKeesport and its citizens. He is president of the Union Savings Fund & Loan association, of which he was the founder, and is also a director of the Bank of McKeesport. He is surgeon of the National Tuberculosis and Ring-mills, a member of the American Medical association and Allegheny County Medical society. In politics he is a democrat.

Louis D. Radzinsky, physician, McKeesport, was born in Geneva, Switzerland, April 12, 1835, a son of Alexander Julius and Charlotte (De Lisle) Radzinsky, former of whom is a grandson of Gen. Count Johannes Paul Radzinsky (originally, in 1633, spelled Ratshintsky, and modified to Radzinsky during the general's exile), of Poland, one of the national leaders with Kosciusko. The parents of Louis D. emigrated to America in 1848, located in New York city, and in 1856 removed to Orange, N. J. The subject of this sketch received a classical education at St. Anthony's College, Geneva, and after a thorough course of instruction in medicine in New York city, graduated from the medical department of the University of the City of New York in 1859. He immediately began the practice of his profession in the same city. At the outbreak of the rebellion he was appointed assistant surgeon to the Thirty-sixth regiment N. Y. V., and resigning in December, 1861, passed the medical examination for regular army corps. He was A. A. surgeon U. S. Army from 1862 to 1864, and assistant surgeon of the Fifty-fourth Massachusetts Volunteers from 1864 to 1865; was surgeon of the 104th U. S. Colored regiment, 1865-66; A. A. surgeon U. S. Army 186S, and city physician of health district, No. 4, Charleston, S. C., in 1869, and was in practice in that city until 1870. In 1871 he began practice in Brooklyn, N. Y., and has been a member of the Kings County (N. Y.) Medical society since 1873. He located in McKeesport in 1875, where he has since been in active practice. He has been a member of the O. A. R. since 1868; in politics he is a democrat.

Charles Riethmiller, grocer, Shapburg, was born in Allegheny county, Pa., in 1857, a son of Conrad Riethmiller, Sr., a prominent business-man of Shapburg. Charles was educated at the public schools, and has followed the grocery business all his life. He married, in 1881, Miss Wagener, daughter of Adam Wagener, an old resident of Pittsburgh, and three children have been born to them: Mary Elizabeth, Charles C. and Walter John. In 1880 Mr. Riethmiller established his present business on the corner of Eighteenth and Main streets, and in 1886 erected his present building, a three-story brick, 20x72, the largest and most commodious storeoom in the borough. Mr. Riethmiller has been very successful in his business career, which is mainly due to his energy and perseverance. He and family are members of St. John's German Evangelical Lutheran Church, of which he is a trustee. He was elected to a three-years term in borough council in February of the year 1888, and has served one year at present. Politically he is a republican.

Nicholas J. H. Gerwig, merchant, Wilkinsburg, was born in Ross township, this county, November 14, 1846. His parents, Henry and Mary (Voegtly) Gerwig, now reside in the city of Allegheny; the former was born in Alsace, Germany, in 1822, and the latter in Allegheny in 1836. Henry Gerwig came to this county in 1856, and established a rope-factory in Pittsburgh, which is now succeeded by Bentley & Gerwig, of New Brighton, Beaver county, in which he is still interested. Nicholas J. H. Gerwig was reared in the city, attended the German Evangelical school three years, and the public school four years. After a course at Penn Institute, he, in 1861, set about learning the trade of rope-making, at which he labored five years. He was then employed in his father's warehouse as bookkeeper and salesman, and Jan. 1, 1871, became a partner in the business. The firm is now H. Gerwig & Sons, dealing extensively in ropes and cordage; our subject is also interested in the New Brighton factory. He owns sixteen houses in Wilkinsburg, four in Pittsburgh and four in Mansfield. He attends the Presbyterian Church, and in politics is a republican. Jan. 8, 1874, he married Anna Mary, daughter of Frederick and Elizabeth (Hul) Beckert, natives of Alsace, now residing in Reserve township, where Mrs. Gerwig was born. Mr. and Mrs. Beckert were married Nov. 7, 1836. Mr. and Mrs. Gerwig's living children are Frederick H. N., Clara Mary, Alma, Theodore Charles and Lucy Anna; three died in infancy.

Alexander McKim, manufacturer, P. O. Sharpsburg, is a native of Scotland, born in 1845. His parents, James and Elizabeth (Cahoon) McKim, had a family of six sons and one daughter, of whom Alexander is the third child. At nine years of age he was left an orphan by the death of his father, and in 1862 came with his mother and brother to America. He commenced to work in iron at an early age, learning the trade of hammerman, which he followed for twenty-six years. In 1885 he came to Sharpsburg and commenced his present business, being engaged in the manufacture of iron and steel forgings. He married, in 1871, Jennie McKinney, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and six children have blessed their union: Robert, Matthew, Samuel J., James Henry, Mary Jane and Elizabeth L. Mr. McKim has been a successful operator in the iron business. He is a member of the U. P. Church at Braddock, in which he is an elder; politically he is a republican.

John Porter, Jr., M. D., 614 Market street, McKeesport. No more active and trying a life, in the cause of the welfare of his fellow-man, can be referred to than that of the physician. Toil of the most arduous nature to mind and body is his lot; and, although frequently unrequited, we find him always ready and willing to risk his own health and life for others. The subject of this sketch is the second son of the late John and Eliza J. Porter, of Penn township, born in Allegheny City Aug. 3, 1855. When about four years of age the family removed to Penn township, where a part still reside. During his boyhood days John was sent to the district school (Quincy) and the Fifth Ward and high-schools of Pittsburgh. Having chosen Dr. D. Alter, of Parrauss, Pa., his medical preceptor, he afterward attended the scientific and medical college at Keokuk, Iowa, graduating in June, 1877, being also a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and of the eye, ear and throat department of the Philadelphia Polyclinic, located in this city in January, 1891. Commissioned by Gov. Pattison, in April, 1884, second lieutenant, and in December, 1885, first lieutenant of Co. K, Eighteenth regiment N. G. P. Afterward, finding that the duties of the soldier conflicted with those of the physician, he resigned his commission. On Dec. 23, 1884, he married Miss Maggie F. Moreland, daughter of Mr. Thomas B. Moreland, of East End, Pittsburgh. This union has been blessed by a little lad called Thomas B. Moreland, Jr. Dr. Porter was the only McKeesport member of the ninth international medical congress, convened in Washington, D. C., in September, 1887; is also a director of the Union Savings Fund & Loan association, and a member of the Allegheny County Medical Society. By close application the doctor has built up a successful practice, and is now giving a part of his time to the treatment of the eye, ear, nose and throat, being the first McKeesport physician to perform Von Grafe's cataract operation.

E. R. Kramer, cashier, First National Bank of Allegheny, is a son of John P. Kramer, and was born in Greensboro, Greene county, Pa. His paternal grandfather, Balthzer Kramer, came from Germany, settled in Greensboro, Greene county, where he built a glassworks, the earliest establishment west of the mountains. John P. Kramer, father of E. R., came here about 1840, and commenced in the general grocery business in Sewickley, which he conducted successfully for some years, after which he engaged in the banking business in the employ of the banking-house of Kramer & Rahm, as bookkeeper, remaining twenty-five years. In 1864 he was elected cashier of the First National Bank of Allegheny where he remained until his resignation, in 1878. He died Dec. 1, 1894. Politically he was identified with the republican party. E. R. Kramer was educated in Sewickley, and became an employee of the above-named bank in 1878; subsequently he was promoted to the position of cashier. He had previously been employed for two years by the first collector in the Twenty-third Revenue district.

George H. Christy, attorney, Pittsburgh, is a native of Trumbull county, Ohio, and was educated in Western Reserve College, where he graduated in the class of 1859. The same year he came to Pittsburgh, where subsequently he read law with Judge Veech. Shortly after the breaking out of the war he volunteered in the three-months service, and was quartermaster sergeant in Knapp's battalion, P. V. Afterward he re-enlisted, and became lieutenant and adjutant of the 29th regiment U. S. colored troops, serving in the 18th and later in the 25th Army Corps. Previous to the war Mr. Christy was assistant editor of the Evening Chronicle, and later was one of the proprietors and editors of the Commercial Journal. For six months he was clerk in the postoffice at Pittsburgh, and for two years was professor of mathematics in the Western University of Pennsylvania. In 1886 Mr. Christy was admitted to the Allegheny county bar, and for ten years was a member of the law tirm of Bakewell, Christy & Kerr, in patent-law practice, and in which latter branch of the law he has been engaged ever since.

J. M. Thorne, physician and surgeon, McKeesport, is a native of Hastings, Minn., where he was reared and educated, and for five years was engaged in the drug business. He began the study of medicine in 1882, with his uncle, Dr. William Thorne, of Hastings; entered Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in the fall of 1888, and graduated in the spring of 1886. He was then appointed resident physician at West Pennsylvania hospital, Pittsburgh, Pa., where he remained one year. In the spring of 1887 he located in McKeesport, where he has a lucrative practice, and is the surgeon of the B. & O. R. R. Co. Pittsburgh division. Dr. Thorne is a member of the American Medical association, the Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania, the Allegheny County Medical society and the National Association of Railroad Surgeons.

S. L. Wiggins, physician, McKeesport, is a native of Indiana county, Pa., where he was reared and educated. In 1870 he began the study of medicine with Dr. T. J. Marlin, of Indiana, Pa.; entered Jefferson College, Philadelphia, in October, 1871, and graduated in March, 1873. He began the practice of his profession in Livermore, Westmoreland county; in 1875 located in Black Lick, Indiana county, and in 1885 was pension examining surgeon for that county. He attended a course of lectures in Philadelphia same year, and in 1886 located in McKeesport, where he has since had a large and successful practice. He is a member of the Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania.

Elliott Davis, retired, Wilkinsburg, was born in Elizabeth township, this county, April 15, 1803, the youngest of twelve children born to Francis Davis, and the sixth child by Sarah Elliott, his father's second wife. There was a natural offspring of the marriage of Pennsylvania, both being of Scotch-Irish extraction. The father of Francis Davis settled in this county before the beginning of this century, and died here when over one hundred years old. With the exception of six years spent in Pittsburgh, Francis Davis lived in Wilkins township after the birth of our subject, and died in 1838, aged seventy-two; his widow passed away soon after, at the same age. Elliott Davis has always been a farmer, and settled on the place which he still owns, in Wilkins township, in 1839. He attends the M. E. Church, and in politics is a republican. He was twice married, the first wife being Elizabeth Stager, who became the mother of three children, viz.: John (deceased), Francis (a resident of Bloomfield), Sarah (Mrs. John Mitchell, in Wilkinsburg). The second wife, Ruth, daughter of Arthur and Elizabeth Cleveland, died in 1888. Thomas, her first child, is deceased, and David, the third, died in the army. The others reside as follows: Rachel, widow of Peter Kenyon, in Turtle Creek; Elliott, on the homestead; Theodore, in Braddock; John, in Washington territory. Since his wife's decease Mr. Davis has been boarding in Wilkinsburg.

Sanford C. Clark, coal-operator, McKeesport, was born in Mifflin township, Allegheny county, Pa., Sept. 3, 1835, a son of Robert Clark and Margaret (Moore) Clark, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Ireland. They located in Pittsburgh about the year 1818, and resided in different sections of Allegheny county for many years. Robert Clark was a prominent coal-operator of his time, and among the first to float coal from the Pittsburgh coal-fields to Cincinnati and Louisville. He reared a family of seven children: Samuel, Thomas, Eliza (Mrs. John P. Dravo), David, Oliver, Margaret (Mrs. Augustus Leonard) and Sanford C. The last named was reared in or near McKeesport, and in the year 1857 and up to 1864 acted as agent for different parties, selling coal at Cincinnati, Louisville, Vicksburg and New Orleans. In the year 1865-66 was shipping oil from Oil City to Pittsburgh in bulk-boats, and in 1867 embarked in the coal business as shipper. In 1869 he began operating a coal-works opposite McKeesport, and since 1875 has been operating a coal-works at Coal Valley. Mr. Clark married, in September, 1870, Harriet D., daughter of James and Margaret M. Clark, of McKeesport, and has six children: Milton P., Edgar I., Maggie E., Effie M., George N. and Samuel W. Mr. Clark has been a permanent resident of McKeesport since 1865. In politics he is a republican.

M. J. Schramm, grocer, postoffice Sharpsburg, was born in Allegheny county, Pa., in 1854, a son of Michael Schramm, now a prominent farmer of O'Hara township. He was educated at St. Mary's school of Sharpsburg, and until eighteen years of age resided with his father on the farm. Three years afterward he was employed in the dairy business, and then clerked, and in a grocery for some time. Subsequently he was a student in the Iron City College, from which, after graduating, he came to Sharpsburg in 1878, and commenced his present business. He married, in 1878, Catherine, daughter of Lawrence Winschol, of this county, and five children bless their union: Mamie, Laura, Edward, Clarence and William. Mrs. Schramm died in 1888. Mr. Schramm is a highly respected citizen; is a member of St. Mary's Catholic Church, and politically is a democarat.

W. V. M. Taylor, physician, McKeesport, was born in East Bethlehem township, Washington county, Pa., June 10, 1849, a son of Caleb and Mary (Gillis) Taylor. His paternal grandfather, Bryah Taylor, a native of New Jersey, and a blacksmith by trade, was first lieutenant of a company of volunteers (1812); settled in McKeesport in 1816, and there died at the age of eighty-eight years. He was a son of Bryah Taylor, a pioneer of Fayette county, Pa. The maternal grandfather of our subject was Robert Gillis, a native of Ireland, and a pioneer of Washington county, Pa. Dr. W. V. M. Taylor was reared in his native township and educated at the Millboro Normal school. In 1869 he read medicine with Dr. William G. Cotton, of East Bethlehem; entered Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1871, and graduated in 1873. In April of the same year he located in McKeesport, where he has since been in active practice. Dr. Taylor is a prominent member of the medical fraternity. He is serving a second term as member of the school board; politically he is a democrat.

John K. Hammit, merchant, McKeesport, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 30, 1828, a son of Isaac and Mary (Augustine) Hammit, who were among the early settlers of Allegheny county, coming from Philadelphia. Isaac was a ship-builder, served an apprenticeship of eleven years in Philadelphia, and was among the pioneer ship-builders of the county; for many years resided in Pittsburgh and Elizabeth, though the last twenty years of his life were passed in Belle Vernon, Pa. His children were Samuel, Isaac, Jackson, John K., Richard, Jane and Mary. John K. was reared in Elizabeth, this county, and settled in McKeesport in 1853. For many years he followed his occupation of Sawyer, and for nineteen years has been engaged in the mercantile business. He married, Dec. 25, 1853, Rebecca W., daughter of John and Sarah (Lewis) Haney, early settlers of McKeesport, and has had four children: Courtney C. (deceased), J. Lewis, Sadie (deceased) and Eva C. Of these Courtney C., who married Mellie Hemingray, left one son, Courtney C. Mr. Hammit has for many years been an active member of the Baptist Church, of which he is a deacon. He has held the offices of councilman and school director of the borough; in politics he is a republican.

James Stephenson, broker, Pittsburgh, was born in Burgettstown, Pa., March 6, 1836. His parents were Benjamin and Laura Berkeley, and settled in the historical "Bucks Skin" region. His grandfather, James Stephenson, received from the government a grant of one thousand acres in Cherry Valley, Pa., on which he settled immediately after the Revolution. He died there in 1814, and the land is now mostly in the possession of his descendants. He was the half-brother of Col. Crawford, who was killed by Indians at the battle of Sandusky. He was a Freemason, and a member of the Episcopal Church, though united with the Seceder's of Washington county. His son John, born in 1803, married Susan, daughter of Edward Shipley, a soldier of 1812, whose ancestors came over with Lord Baltimore. For thirty years he kept a store and shop in Burgettstown, and later a hotel on the Steubenville Pike, and now resides at George station, on the Pennsylvania railroad. His wife died in 1857, the mother of eleven children. James being the eldest; nine reached maturity, and six are now living.

When of age, James Stephenson traveled considerably in the west. In 1861 he enlisted at Pittsburgh, in the Duquesne Greys, and afterward helped to organize Battery C, Thompson's independent artillery. He rose to the rank of senior first lieutenant, commanding for some time Hampton's battery, which was attached to his own after the death of its brave commander. He served in all the engagements of the Army of the Potomac till 1864, when he resigned. At the second battle of Bull run he was twice shot through the right leg, at Chancellorsville the drum of his left ear was broken by concussion, and at Gettysburg he was slightly wounded. After leaving the service he established what is now the Excelsior Collin-factory, which he sold after operating it a year. For eight years he was president of the Pittsburgh & Allegheny county, coming of the Central Transportation company, and since 1889 has been a partner in the merchandise brokerage firm of R. S. Stephenson & Co. Mr. Stephenson was married in 1869 to Margaret Read Taylor, and came to reside at Edgewood five years later. Mrs. Stephenson is a daughter of Edward and Sarah (Robinson) Taylor, of English and Irish ancestry, respectively, and her children are Charles E., Bird, Maud, India and Don. Mr. Stephenson is a democrat.

William Craig, grocer, McKeesport, was born in Westmoreland county, Pa., Nov. 10, 1823, a son of George and Mary (Thomas) Craig, the former a native of Ireland and the latter of Chester county, Pa. They settled in North Versailles township, this county, in 1827, and removed to Butler county, Pa., in 1844, where they resided until their deaths. They reared a family of twelve children: Joseph, Matilda (Mrs. John Ludwick), Louisa (Mrs. William Taylor), John, Mary (Mrs. Andrew Haffer), Martha (Mrs. Thomas McGill), Julia A. (Mrs. David McKee), William, Rachel, Stacy, Eliza J. (Mrs. John Boyle) and Emily (Mrs. Thomas Chandler). Our subject married in Westmoreland and Allegheny counties, and removed with his parents to Butler county in 1844, where he was engaged in farming until 1871. He then came to McKeesport, where he has since resided, and for a number of years has been engaged in the dairy business. In the spring of 1885 he embarked in the grocery business, in which he is still engaged. He married, in 1872, Ruth, daughter of Samuel Elliott, of McKeesport, and has five children: William, Charles, Clifford, Linnie and Mary. Mr. Craig is a member of the M. E. Church; politically he is a democrat.

G. D. McMorran, assistant teller in the Merchants' & Manufacturers' National Bank of Pittsburgh, residence Sharpsburg, was born in Allegheny county in 1834, a son of Alexander McMorran, latter of whom immigrated to America from County Down, Ireland, at an early day. He was a farmer by occupation and married Catherine Moore, who became the mother of eight children. Among the youngest of these was our subject, who was educated at the public schools in the county. and an academy. He was employed at teaching school for some time, but for the past seven years has been connected with the bank, part of the time in his present position.

Mr. McMorran married, in 1822, Sadie M. Brickell, of Allegheny county, Pa., and one child has blessed their union, named Eva. For the past seven years Mr. McMorran has resided in Sharpsburg. He is a member of the U. P. Church; politically he is a republican.

John Serena, coal-operator, McKeensport, was born in Westmoreland county, Pa., Jan. 13, 1850, a son of Jacob and Mary (Norris) Serena. Jacob Serena for some years conducted a sawmill, and lived and died in Westmoreland county. His family consisted of twelve children: George (deceased), Sophia (Mrs. Robert Snyder), David, Barbara (Mrs. David McRoberts), Eliza J. (Mrs. James Means), John, Samuel (deceased), Mary A. (Mrs. William F. Mullen), Archibald, Jacob, Sarah (Mrs. K. Long) and Joseph. John Serena was reared in Westmoreland county until he was sixteen years of age, when he came to McKeensport with his widowed mother in 1849, and was the mainstay of the family. He was in the employ of William Neel, a large coal-operator, for twenty-five years. Beginning at the foot of the ladder as a miner, he worked his way until he became superintendent of the works, which position he held for many years. In 1878 he embarked in business for himself as a coal merchant and operator in McKeensport, and has succeeded in building up a large and growing business. He married, in 1854, Maria J., daughter of James and Isabella White, of Plum township, this county, and has five children living: Isabella, Anna V., J. Franklin, J. Elmer E. and Ida (Mrs. F. M. Rhodes). Mr. Serena is a member of the C. P. Church and K. of P.; in politics a republican.

David O. Shaver, master mechanic, Pittsburgh, was born in 1831 in Herkimer county, N. Y. His father, George Shaver, was descended from the early residents of Albany, as was also his mother, Nancy, daughter of Thomas Zielley. Both parents were natives of Herkimer county. In 1833 they removed to Geneva, N. Y., and five years after to the vicinity of Aurora, Ill., where Mrs. Shaver and the youngest son died in 1842. They had nine children, David O. being the sixth, and with them the father returned to Geneva. He died in Detroit, Mich., in 1849. Maria, Margaret, Catherine and Eleanor died in 1846. Archibald G., an artist, who was the eldest son, died in Geneva in 1896. Elizabeth N. (McDonald) resides at Adrian, Mich., and Martin V. B., near Lakeview, same state. David O., early in life worked on a farm, drove team and carried the hod. September 29, 1848, he was apprenticed to John Daggett & Son, manufacturers of woolen machinery, at Newark, N. Y. After serving three years with them, he worked nearly a year in a stationary-engine factory at Penn Yan. He then perfected himself in locomotive-building, and worked for short periods in the Rochester & Syracuse, New York & Erie, Michigan Central and Galena & Chicago Union shops. In 1854 he went into the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern shops at Adrian, Mich., and was foreman of an erecting gang for four years. For three years he was foreman of the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago shops at New Albany, Ind., and resigned to take the same position with the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis at North Madison.

March 1, 1867, he resigned and took his present position with the Pennsylvania railroad. Since 1869 he has resided at Edgewood station. He is a republican; attends the Presbyterian Church. In 1856 Mr. Shaver married Harriet S. Wadsworth, of Adrian, Mich., who was born in Springfield, Ohio, in 1835. Her father, Walter M., son of Joseph and Dorcas Wadsworth, was born in Hartford, Conn., in 1801, and died in 1875. Her mother, Sarah (Guy), was born of French and English ancestry in Dunham, Canada, in 1810, and died in 1894. William Wadsworth came from Wales over two hundred years ago, and located in New England. George Walter, only son of David O. Shaver, born in Adrian, in 1837, is farming near Burlington, Kan. Frank Gray, the daughter, was born Feb. 14, 1874.

Daniel Fell, street commissioner, McKeensport, was born in Wurttemberg, Germany, Jan. 11, 1822, a son of Michael and Dorothea (Feltz) Fell, who came to America in 1849 and settled in Pittsburgh. His father, a wagon-maker by trade, died in August, 1884, at the age of eighty-four years; his wife died in 1879. Their children were Christiana (Mrs. William Breitenriether), Caroline (Mrs. John Raymond), Daniel, Magdalena (Mrs. Jacob Feltz) and Dorothea (Mrs. John Wyant). Our subject is the second son. He was born in 1849, and most of his life has been engaged in farming. He settled in McKeensport in 1872, and has held the office of street commissioner seven years. He married, in 1856, Eliza Frazer, a native of Ireland, and daughter of Robert and Eliza (Robinson) Frazer, by whom he has six children: Caroline (Mrs. W. G. Gray), Anna, Charles, Daniel, William B. and Jennie. Mr. Fell is a member of the German Lutheran Church; in politics he is a democrat.

Lyman Thayer Childs (deceased) was born in Upton, Mass., July 14, 1809. His ancestors emigrated with the Plymouth colony to New England, and his parents, Col. Asa and Clarissa (Partridge) Childs, came to Pittsburgh when he was eleven years old, and here he passed the balance of his life. Col. Asa Childs was engaged in the manufacture of shoes in Pittsburgh, and continued in same till his retirement on account of old age. He died Jan. 9, 1850, in his eighty-third year, his wife having preceded him on the 4th of November previous, in her seventy-fifth year. Both were Congregationalists, and united with the Second Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh. On the retirement of Col. Asa Childs his sons, Harvey, Asa and Lyman T., established the wholesale shoe business, now continued by his grandson, Harvey. Lyman Thayer retired on account of ill-health in 1851, and bought fifty-two acres where Homestead now is. Here he died Nov. 3, 1856, a Presbyterian in faith. All the family were whigs and republicans.

In 1839 Mr. Childs married Annie, daughter of Evan and Gwen Langher, and born in 1821, near Swansea, Wales. In 1837, his wife having died, Mr. Langher came to Pittsburgh, where he started the first coke-ovens established there, and continued the manufacture many years. He died in Iowa, at the residence of his son David, in his eighty-fifth year.

Charles M. Bailey, river pilot, McKeesport, was born in that city Nov. 24, 1836, son of Joseph M. and Nancy (Whigham) Bailey. His father, a native of Norristown, Pa., a shoemaker by trade, was among the early settlers of McKeesport, where he embarked in business as a coal-operator with his brother, Madison Bailey, and William Whigham, in which he successfully continued until his death, in December, 1850. He had following-named children: William M., Charles M., Caroline (Mrs. James Whitaker), Thomas Melvin (who died Sept. 30, 1849), Orphaleena V. and Sarah A. (Mrs. Oliver P. Fritz). The maternal grandfather of our subject was Thomas Whigham, a pioneer farmer of Mifflin township. Charles M. Bailey was reared in McKeesport, and received a limited education in the common schools. At the age of fourteen he went on the river as a deck-hand, and worked his way up to the positions of mate, captain and pilot, and in 1854 has followed towing in those capacities between Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Louisville, New Orleans and other points. In October, 1860, he married Elizabeth, daughter of Andrew Coleman, of Mifflin township, and has one son, William McClelan. During the civil war Mr. Bailey was of considerable service to the United States government in towing boats through southern rivers. He has been identified with the First National Bank of McKeesport since its organization; is a member of the C. P. Church, and one of the charter members of Allequippa Lodge, F. & A. M., No. 375; is a member of the Steamboat Officers' Protective association, and has served one term as member of the city council. Politically he is a democrat.

Vankirk Scott, civil engineer, McKeesport, was born in Elizabeth township, this county, Jan. 2, 1861. His father was John W., son of Joseph and Ruth (Vankirk) Scott, and grandson of James and Mary (Pearson) Scott on paternal side, and Samuel and Mary (Price) Vankirk on maternal side. His mother was Rachel (Humphreys) Scott, daughter of Thomas, and Frances (Clendenning) Humphreys, of Upper St. Clair township, this county, and granddaughter of William and Leah (Gamble) Humphreys on paternal side, and Charles and Frances (Hamilton) Clendenning on maternal side. James Scott, great-grandfather of subject, emigrated from Londonderry, Ireland, to America in 1798, settled in Elizabeth township, Allegheny county, in 1786, and married Mary Pearson, who had escaped the Indian massacre at Hanastown. He had three sons: James, Zaccheus and Joseph, who served through the war of 1812. He died in 1823. Samuel Vankirk, great-grandfather of subject, came from New Jersey to this county shortly after the Revolution, and settled in Elizabeth township. He served through the revolutionary war, carried the colors at the battle of Long Island, was present at the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown. His wife was Mary Price, of New Jersey. Both died in 1834. Joseph Scott, grandfather of subject, was a farmer by occupation, and lived and died on the farm settled by his father. His son John W. Scott, and many of our subject, was born in Elizabeth township, May 31, 1819. He is a stair-builder by occupation, and re-ides in McKeesport. He was for many years a member of the board of education, chairman of that body, also treasurer of the school fund. He has been a member of council, borough treasurer, justice of the peace, and served two terms as burgess. The subject of this sketch was reared in McKeesport, received his education in the common schools, and follows the occupation of a civil engineer.

George Harrison Deeds, contractor, Allegheny, was born in the Quaker settlement, Westmoreland county, Pa., Oct. 10, 1840. His ancestors were German, and his parents, George and Drusilla, and his grandfather, John Overholt (a son of Jacob Deeds), were born in Pennsylvania. George Kesler, father of Drusilla Deeds, was also of German extraction. His wife, nee Elizabeth McMillen, came of a Scotch-Irish family that settled in Donegal, Pa., about the close of the Revolution. George Deeds was killed in 1846 by the kick of a horse. George H. is the fourth of seven children, was reared in a farm by Enoch Stall, and when eighteen years old began the carpenter's trade. In 1861 he joined Company B, 28th P. V. I., serving over three years. Previous to the battle of Gettysburg, this body was with the Army of the Potomac, and then joined the Western army. Mr. Deeds was in the battles of Antietam, Chancellorsville, Lookout Mountain, and many minor engagements. Returning to Pittsburgh, he finished his trade at McKeesport. In 1871 he came to Wilkinsburg and began contracting. Since 1880 he has operated in Pittsburgh in partnership with his brother, James A. Mr. Deeds erected his present residence at Edgewood in 1876; also built the following: McCandless building, Wood street; Duquesne Bank building, Smithfield street; Singer building, Fourth avenue; Hofstatt building, Liberty street; J. E. Schwartz's residence, Pennsylvania avenue; John Caldwell's residence, Edgewood, Pennsylvania Railroad; Safe Deposits building, Fourth avenue, and many other fine buildings. Mr. Deeds is a member of the Veteran Legion, G. A. R., and I. O. O. F. In August, 1873, he married Minnie Borland, a native of Port Perry, Pa., daughter of Henry and Jane (Kier) Borland, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and to this union have been born five children: Jennie May, William Henry, Thomas A., Martha I., and an infant, died unnamed.

Thomas H. Gallagher, burgess, Sharpsburg, is a native of Pittsburgh, born in 1843. His father, James Gallagher, a native of County Tyrone, Ireland, immigrated to America at an early period, located in Baltimore, and in 1855 came to Pittsburgh. He was an apothecary and druggist, and married Mary Drum, also of Ireland, who bore him nine children; among the older children was educated at the public schools of the county and under private instructors, and learned the glass-blowing trade, which he followed. Since 1873 he has held the position of manager of the glassworks of Tippay Bros., of Sharpsburg. Mr. Gallagher married, in 1877, Miss Jones, of Maryland, and two children bless their union: Laura T. Bell and Mary Alabama. Mr. Gallagher has always been a public-spirited citizen; was six years in the town council, and in January, 1888, was elected burgess of Sharpsburg. He is a member of the Catholic Church, politically a democrat.

J. C. George, architect, Sharpsburg, was born in Plum township, Allegheny county, Pa., in 1890, a son of John and Sarah (Cochran) George, both of Irish extraction. J. C. was reared in Plum township until nineteen years of age. He then learned the trade of carpenter, which he has since followed, but for the last few years has been engaged in drawing and architectural work, and has resided in Sharpsburg since 1851. His wife is Margaret, née Nesbitt, of Kittanning, and they have had five children; two living: William and Sara. Mr. George and family are members of the Presbyterian Church; politically he is a republican.

Daniel B. Brown, contractor and builder, McKeesport, was born near Reading, Berks county, England, April 25, 1816, a son of George and Maria (Bailey) Brown. He was reared in his native county, educated at the "Blue-Clay School," and served an apprenticeship at the carpenter's and joiner's trade in the city of London, during which time he attended, in the evening, the art drawing-school attached to South Kensington Museum, where he made a special study of architectural drawing. He then engaged in business in Hertfordshire two years. In 1837 he came to America, and settled in McKeesport, where he has since been actively and successfully engaged as a contractor and builder. In 1858, at St. Jude's church, Chelsea, London, he was married to Emily, daughter of Henry and Amelia (Grey) God-the issue of this marriage was two children, Anton and William; Margaret, born Nov. 4, 1863, died Sept. 30, 1879; John Nicholas, born Dec. 19, 1860, died Aug. 10, 1863. Mr. Herold and wife are members of the German Protestant Church. He is an Odd-Fellow: politically a democrat.

Hugh C. Skelley, of the firm of H. C. & J. K. Skelley, dry-goods merchants, and Skelley Brothers, Books and stationery, McKeesport, was born in Latrobe, Pa., Dec. 35, 1859, a son of Michael and Mary A. (Henry) Skelley. His paternal grandfather was Hugh Skelley, a native of Cambria county, and his maternal grandfather was Conrad Henry, a native of Berks county, Pa., and a veteran of the war of 1812. Our subject was reared in his native town and educated in the common schools. He settled in McKeesport in 1871, and for a number of years served in the capacity of clerk of the principal stores of the city. In 1878 he embarked in the book and stationery business; in 1880 he took his brother into partnership, and the firm until 1886 was known as H. C. Skelley & Brother, and since as Skelley Brothers. In 1886 he embarked in the dry-goods business under the firm name of Skelley & Reiber, and in January, 1887, he and his brother bought out Reiber's interest, and the firm has since been known as H. C. & J. K. Skelley, and is the leading dry-goods house in the city. Hugh C. Skelley married, April 28, 1885, Mary J., daughter of Edward and Ann (Holmes) Manley, of Alleghany county, Md., and by this union there is one son, Hugh J. Mr. Skelley is one of the directors of the Building & Loan association; is a member of the Board of Trade, of which he is on the executive and printing committees; is vice-president of the McKeesport & Duquesne Bridge company, and a director in the McKeesport Light company. In religion he is a Roman Catholic; in politics a democrat.

Mr. Skelley, a son of the firm of Skelley Bros. and H. C. & J. K. Skelley, McKeesport, was born in Latrobe, Pa., April 9, 1862, and is a son of Michael and Mary A. (Henry) Skelley. He was reared and educated in his native town, and began his business career in McKeesport in 1871, where he acted as a clerk in different stores in the city for five years. In 1876 he embarked in the book and stationery business with his brother, H. C. Skelley, in which he since has been engaged, and in 1886 became a partner with his brother, Hugh C., in the dry-goods business, and has one of the leading establishments of its kind in the city. He married, Oct. 18, 1887, Lizzie, daughter of James M. and Mary (Crow) Kane, of Ft. Wayne, Ind. Mr. Skelley is a wide-awake, sterling young business-man. He is a member of the Catholic Church; politically he is a democrat.

Joseph A. Skelley, real-estate and insurance agent, McKeesport, was born near Latrobe, Pa., March 28, 1852, and is a son of Michael and Mary A. (Henry) Skelley. He was educated at the public and normal schools of Latrobe, learned telegraphy, and in 1871 went to Ohioopyle, on the Pittsburgh, Washington & Baltimore railroad, as agent and operator for that road. In 1872 he located in McKeesport, and was freight, baggage and ticket agent for a number of years at that place, where he has since resided, and was for two terms city clerk. In 1884 he was unanimously nominated (without solicitation) for clerk of court of Allegheny county; his party being in the minority, however, he was defeated, but his popularity in his party was shown by the fact that he polled 2,000 votes more than the Cleveland electors did in the same county. He has always been an active democrat, and prominent in the councils of his party. He formerly conducted a drug-store in McKeesport, and later was with Skelley Bros. In the spring of 1888 he embarked in business as a real-estate and insurance agent. In 1881 he married Miss Ella Lane, of Ft. Wayne, Ind. Mr. Skelley is one of the auditors of the New Enterprise Building & Loan association, a member of the Board of Trade, on the executive and transportation committees, and one of the trustees of the grand council of the Catholic Mutual Benefit association, and district deputy of the same.

James Allison, D. D., Pittsburgh, is a native of Pittsburgh, Pa., born Sept. 27, 1833. James Allison, Sr., his father, was born in 1793, in the Cumberland valley, and was of old Scotch Presbyterian stock. He came to Pittsburgh in 1811, and was married there to Elizabeth, daughter of George and Lydia Brickell. The Brickell family settled in Pittsburgh in 1760, and owned and farmed a large amount of property in Birmingham. James Allison was a tanner, and later in life a farmer in Deer (now Richland) township, Allegheny county, Pa., where he died aged seventy-five years. Politically he was identified with the whig and afterward with the republican party. Dr. Allison graduated at Jefferson College, class of 1843, and at the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny, in 1848, after which he was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Sewickley for sixteen years, and for several years was connected with the late Rev. Dr. McKinney as editor of the Presbyterian Banner. Dr. Allison, in 1864, along with Robert Patterson, bought the Presbyterian Banner, which they have published and edited ever since, and its circulation has been quadrupled under their management. Dr. Allison is a director of the Western Theological Seminary; trustee of Washington and Jefferson College; one of the managers of the Pennsylvania Reform School at Morgantown, which position he has filled fourteen years. He has been a member of the Presbyterian General Assembly seven times; from 1865 to the present time he has been a member of the Presbyterian Board of Missions for Freedmen; has been a member of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce for several years, and has always taken an active part in public movements in church and state.
He has been twice married; first, Aug. 20, 1851, to Miss Mary Anderson, of Sewickley, Pa., and second, Nov. 6, 1856, to Miss Caroline Snowden, of Pittsburgh. His only son, John M. S. Allison, seven years connected with him in the Banner, a young man of great ability and high promise, died of typhoid fever Dec. 27, 1887. His only daughter now resides in Boston, the wife of S. W. Reinhart, general auditor of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad.

A. M. Barton, M. D., the first physician who permanently located in Homestead, was born in Bedford county, Pa., March 5, 1849. His ancestors were early settlers in the state of New Jersey, several of whom were soldiers in the Revolution. His great-grandparents removed from New Jersey to Bedford county shortly after the Revolution, where he resided until his death. He died at an extreme age. His grandfather also died at the age of ninety-four. The doctor was educated in his native county, where he taught school several years. Studied medicine with Drs. Schenck, Steel, and Rock and attended lectures in Louisville, Ky. He located in Homestead in 1875, where he has since practiced medicine successfully. The doctor married Mary E., daughter of Matthew and Ann West, of Homestead, and they have one child, Matthew Claude. Dr. Barton has been a member of the school board for a number of years; politically he is a democrat.

Rev. Robert Addison Gilfillan, P. O. Turtle Creek, is of Scotch-Irish descent. John Gilfillan and Robert Brewster, his grandfathers, came from Ireland to this country. James G., son of John Gilfillan, was prominently identified with the U. P. Church, and was among the first abolitionists and prohibitionists. He married Mary A. Brewster, and settled on a farm in Liberty township, Mercer county, Pa., where, in January, 1844, Robert Addison was born. The latter was educated at the common schools, and before the age of nineteen joined Company K, 100th P. V. V., and participated in nineteen battles. This regiment was part of the Ninth Army Corps, was with the Army of the Potomac, and took part in the siege of Vicksburg and battles of Jackson, Knoxville, Campbell Farm and Raytown. Mr. Gilfillan never lost an hour through sickness or wounds, his only injury being a slight cut in the cheek by a minie-ball. Returning home after his discharge in June, 1865, his first active temperance work was to oust a liquor-seller who was operating in his native town in defiance of law. After attending New Castle College, he entered Westminster College, at Wilming- ton, Pa., whence he graduated in 1874. His final preparation for the ministry was made at the U. P. Theological Seminary in Allegheny, and his first charge was near North Washington, Butler county, Pa. After two years at Calcutta and one at Wooster, Ohio, he came to Turtle Creek in 1886. Here he is president of the school board, and his influence is powerfully felt in the cause of temperance. In 1879 Mr. Gilfillan married Lucy, daughter of Charles and Lucinda (Folino) Rogers. Mrs. Gilfillan was for ten years a teacher in the Fifth Ward school of Allegheny, in which city she was reared. Mr. Gilfillan was also a teacher, having put in sixty months of service while perfecting his education. One child has been born to them, Charles Addison.

Richard Brankstone, manager of glass-works, P. O. Crafton, is a son of Richard and Ellen Brankstone, and was born in Cambridge, near Boston, Mass., June 15, 1841. He came with his parents from New York city in 1852, and settled in Pittsburgh, Pa., where he was engaged as a glass-worker. His parents had six children: James (deceased), Robert (deceased), William (deceased), George (deceased), Jenett (wife of R. T. McClure, who is engaged in the woolenwear business at Erie, Pa.) and Richard. Richard, Sr., died of cholera in 1858; his widow is still living in the city of Erie, Pa., at the age of seventy-three years.

One of the subjects of the following is Jennie A., daughter of Hugh and Elizabeth Hamilton Adams, and they have two children living—Robert and Hugh. Mr. Brankstone, like his father, has devoted his life to the glass business, and is at present managing for Maing, Hart & Co. Glass-works, at Leasdale station, on the Pan Handle railroad. He is a member of the society of United Workmen; politically he is a republican, and voted for Harrison and Morton.

Thomas Chalmers Robinson, physician, postoffice Turtle Creek, is a native of Westmoreland county, Pa., born Sept. 20, 1836. His parents, James and Eliza (Curry) Robinson, were born respectively in Elizabeth and Wilkins townships, Allegheny county, John, father of James, was also a native of Western Pennsylvania, and educated at the Pottsville Seminary. When Thomas C. was twelve years old his father moved to a farm in Patton township. The classical education of the future physician was completed in Franklin College, New Athens, Ohio, and after reading medicine with Dr. James H. Duff he entered Jefferson Medical College, at Philadelphia, from which he graduated in 1868, and after graduation became the successor in practice of his former preceptor, Dr. Duff. Four years later he moved to Turtle Creek, where a successful practice fully occupies his time. The doctor possesses some fine property, which includes two dwellings, and he is reckoned among the progressive citizens of the village. In November, 1870, he married Mary Jane, daughter of William and Mary (Eakin) Skinner, members of one of the oldest families of Franklin county, Pa. She is the mother of seven children, named as follows: Wilberforce Howard, William, Irene, Annie Eakin, James Rush, Adelia Helena and Edward Doyle. Dr. Robinson is a member of the county medical society, and, with his family, of the U. P. Church. Politically he was a republican, but is now a prohibitionist.
He enlisted, in 1862, in Company E, 133d P. V., and took part in the battles of Antietam, Chancellorsville and Fredericksburg. At the close of his term of enlistment, nine months, he remained, but returned for a short time to contribute to the 15th Pennsylva nia Cavalry, known as the Anderson Troop, with which he served in the Army of the South, being active in the battles of Nashville, Chickamauga and Knoxville; was one of 120 that captured 1,500 of Hood's men, destroyed their arms and marched them into Huntsville. After sharing in Sherman's raid and destroying railroads to prevent Lee's retreat from Richmond, they were sent to pursue Jeff Davis and other refugees, and spent three months in the mountain regions of Tennessee, the Carolinas and Georgia, living off the country as they traveled, and were discharged at Nashville, in June, 1865.

William Moore, farmer, postoffice Surgeon's Hall, was born May 23, 1819, on the old homestead. His father, William Moore, a native of County Antrim, Ireland, farmed in America during the government troubles in 1790, which induced many to emigrate to America, and settled first in Lebanon, Del., but later removed to Pennsylvania. In his native home he had been steward on a nobleman's estate, and on coming to America he found employment in Allegheny county, and here married Nancy, daughter of Samuel Wilson, a farmer. They had three children; and his wife at the age of seventy-two, both members of the U. P. Church; politically he was a democrat and whig. His children were Hannah, James, Mary, Jane, Samuel, Eliza, William and Sarah. Of these William is self-educated, and now owns over fifty acres of the old homestead. He has been twice married; first to Mrs. Martha Wilson, and after her death to Mary Gutielius, a worthy lady, a daughter of Rev. Gutielius, of Philadelphia. Politically Mr. Moore has been a whig and republican, but now votes only for the most worthy men. He has been school director for fifteen years, and has held other offices.

Robert B. and George S. Carnahan.

The representative offices of this family now living in Allegheny county are descendants of the Lowland Scotch on the paternal side, and the Highland Scotch on the maternal. The original pioneer of the family who came to America was David Carnahan, who was born near Shane's Castle, County Antrim, Ireland, of Scotch descent. It was about 1770, or earlier, that he migrated to America. David was in the revolutionary army, in the light artillery, in those days known as the "Flying Artillery," and was present at the battle of Brandywine and in other engagements. An older brother, James, was a midshipman in the British navy during that war, and his descendants now reside in different parts of the United States. Tradition has it that a private interview was once held between these two brothers during the war, permitted by an American officer on one side, and a British officer on the other. David married Agnes McGahay, and to them were born a numerous family of children. Two of these children were born in Carlisle, Pa., where David had first settled. David came to Allegheny (then Washington) county, and purchased a tract of 400 acres of land, called "The Experiment," which was located three and one-half miles south of Pittsburgh, on the waters of Saw-Mill run. This purchase was made in 1784 from Isaac Sellers. David was a farmer by occupation, and having sold some of his land, at the time of his death the remaining 250 acres were divided between his three sons, William, Alexander and Joseph. William was born in 1785, and was twice married. His first wife was Massey Cain, of New Hampshire ancestry. His second wife was Mary Brown, of Pittsburgh. William was a farmer, an occupation he followed during his life.

Robert B., his youngest surviving son, was born near Pittsburgh, April 23, 1826; was reared on a farm, and received his education at the public schools at Pittsburgh, and graduated from the Western University of Pennsylvania in 1845. He commenced the study of law with Hon. Walter Forward, ex-secretary of the treasury under President Tyler, and in 1848 he was admitted to the bar in Allegheny county, since which time he has practiced his profession continuously in Pittsburgh, ranking among the leading lawyers of the county. Mr. Carnahan has been twice married; first to Eliza Dowington, who bore him three children: Thomas D. (now practicing law with his father), Agnes and Eliza. His second marriage was with Mrs. Kate A. Butler, a lady from Ohio, and they have two children, Kate and Robert. In the latter, a student at the Western University, Mr. Carnahan has always been a public-spirited man; was for nine years U. S. District attorney, appointed in 1861 by President Lincoln, and served under Johnson and Gen. Grant. He has been solicitor for Allegheny county, member of the common council, and served on the school board for twenty-one years. His family are members of the U. P. Church; politically Mr. Carnahan is a firm believer in the principles of the republican party.

George S. Carnahan was born in Union township (now West Liberty borough) in 1817, son of Alexander Carnahan, who was the third son born to David, in 1789. Alexander was a farmer, and inherited one hundred acres of the four hundred purchased by his father. He married Nancy Smith, daughter of George Smith, of Westmoreland county, Pa., and to them were born four sons, of whom but two remain. His wife died in 1847, aged fifty-six years. His second wife, Mrs. Bauks, still survives. Alexander died in 1879 at the homestead farm, where he had always lived. George S., our subject, was educated at the common schools of his township, and has always been a farmer. He married Jane, daughter of Andrew Gilfillan.
GENEALOGY AND BIOGRAPHY.

and they have two daughters and one son: A. S. (now a resident of Kansas City, engaged in real estate), E. M. (Mrs. Dr. McCaslin, of Allegheny) and Miss Agnes (an accomplished lady, at home). Mr. Carnahan now owns over seventy acres of land, all of which is part of the tract purchased by his grandfather. He and his family are members of the U. P. Church, and politically he is a strong democrat, as were his father and grandfather.

Maj. James Postlethwaite Speer, retired, postoffice Pittsburgh, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1835, and is a grandson of Rev. William Speer, a Presbyterian clergyman, who came from Chambersburg to Westmoreland county, Pa., whence he removed to Chillicothe, Ohio. The father of our subject, Dr. James Ramsay Speer, who was born in Chambersburg, and is now living in Pittsburgh at the age of ninety-two, has been prominently identified with the medical fraternity of Allegheny county. He married Hettie, daughter of Paul Morrow (first prothonotary of Armstrong county, Pa.), and she died in 1887; at the age of eighty-five, the mother of eight children, of whom Maj. Speer is the third in order of birth. President James Buchanan's mother was a sister of Rev. William Speer. The subject of this memoir, preferring a business life to a professional one, instead of attending college, as his father desired, entered, when sixteen years old, the office of a rolling-mill, at Portsmouth, Ohio. After mastering the iron business he became interested in a furnace in Westmoreland county, which he left in 1849 to try his fortune in the California goldfields. After many failures and successes, including a trip to Australia, he returned in 1859 to Pennsylvania, and became one of the incorporators of the Kiskiminetas Iron company, in Armstrong county. At the outbreak of the civil war he raised a company which was attached under his command to the 11th P. R., and became part of the Army of the Potomac. At the battle of Gaines' Mills Capt. Speer was shot through the left shoulder (the ball grazing the jugular vein) and right thigh (the femoral artery narrowly escaping), and was left on the field for dead. Being picked up by the enemy, he was sent to Libby prison, but at once paroled for exchange. In the course of three months he so far recovered from his wounds as to be able to rejoin his regiment, and was shortly promoted to major. At the battle of Fredericksburg he received a bullet-wound in the arm. On recovering from this he was made assistant inspector-general on Gen. Crawford's staff. After the battle of Gettysburg he participated in the principal engagements of the Army of the Potomac, and was the subject of the service account of disability. On his return to Pittsburgh he was associated with Hannah, Hart & Co. in the banking business. After spending two years in the Idaho gold region, he became, in 1870, one of the organizers of the Freehold bank, of which he is vice-president, beginning as cashier. In 1880 he took up a permanent residence on his farm of eighty acres at Edgewater station, and now gives his attention largely to the breeding of Jersey cattle, etc. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, the G. A. R., and is a Freemason. He has always been a republican, and served several years in the Allegheny City councils. In 1872 Maj. Speer was married to Anna, daughter of Gen. William Robinson, J. R., and widow of Mr. J. C. Blair, by whom she has one son and one daughter, W. R. Blair, attorney, and Mrs. Mary Burgwin, of Pittsburgh.

J. B. McDonough, postoffice Castle Shannon, was born June 3, 1854, in this county. His grandfather, Patrick McDonough, a native of Ireland, came to the United States with his two brothers, one of whom settled in Maryland and the other in Louisiana. Patrick took out his naturalization papers in October, 1807, and settled in Snowden township, this county, on the Brownsville road. He married Mary McClelland, and they were members of the Seceder's Church. Their children were James, Harvey, John, Mary and Mrs. Sarah Kern. Of these Harvey, born in 1802, was a farmer, and died April 2, 1884. He was a justice of the peace, and a well-known and highly esteemed man. He married Ann, daughter of Leonard Boyer, and their children are Mrs. Mary J. Hughey, James B., Hiram H. and William H. James B. was educated here, and reared on the farm. Twelve years ago he was appointed deputy sheriff, and served for three years under R. H. Fife; later he had charge of an office at the East Liberty stockyards, and spent three years with the Berkshire Life Insurance company. He was appointed deputy sheriff under Col. Joseph Gray, and is at present clerk with County Treasurer William Hill. He married, in this county, Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Shaw. Mr. and Mrs. McDonough are members of the U. P. Church. He is a member of the I. O. O. F.; politically a republican.

John F. McNenulty, oil-producer, residence at Crafton, a son of Joseph and Elizabeth McNenulty, was born in Huntingdon county, Pa., in 1845. He came to this county with his parents in 1854, and settled in Pittsburgh. They had seven children: Helen (deceased), Charles, Joseph, John F., Thomas J., William B. and Jennie (deceased). Their father was a cabinet-maker, but spent eighteen years of his life in the English navy, and died in 1859, at the age of fifty-four years. His widow is still living, at the age of sixty-nine years. John F. McNenulty married, in 1873, Annie, daughter of George R. and Mary Pearson, and by this union there are two children, Jennie and John Peter. McNenulty has been bookkeeper in the American Bank of Pittsburgh for eighteen years, but has recently engaged in the oil-producing business. He has built an elegant residence in the beautiful village of Crafton. His brother Charles served over three years in the civil war; was in the One Hundred and Second regiment, and was in nearly all the hard-fought battles of the war in the east.

William Ambrose Diamond, lumber-dealer, postoffice Hulton, was born in Pittsburgh in 1834, son of Henry and Bridget (Sweeney) Diamond. His father was born in Lawrence county, Pa.; was a railroad engineer, and employed for seven years on the Pittsburgh & Ft. Wayne railroad; he was a molder by trade; he enlisted in Co. K, 7th Iowa Cav., from McGregor, Iowa, and served during the war. Mr. Diamond was educated at McGregor, Iowa, where his parents moved when he was four years old, and returned to this county about fifteen years later. In the fall of 1873 Mr. Diamond came to Verona borough and engaged in the timber business in Allegheny, Westmoreland and Armstrong counties, handling railroad ties and coal-bank timber. In 1883, in partnership with George and Thomas Heilman, he started a sawmill in Jefferson county. Mr. Diamond having charge of the sales. Hulton has a yard at Hulton, and carries a full supply of lumber, sash, doors, etc. He was appointed postmaster of Hulton in February, 1887. Mr. Diamond was married in 1879 to Maggie Morrison, of Erie, Pa., and four children were born to them: William A., Mary Agnes, Margaret Annie and Clarra Regina, all at home. Mr. Diamond is a democrat, and the family, as well as his parents, are members of the Catholic Church.

Jacob Haudenshield (deceased) was born in 1805, son of Samuel Haudenshield. Jacob was one of the representative farmers of Green Tree borough, and, starting in life comparatively poor, rose to comfortable circumstances, simply through his own personal industry and ingenuity. He married Louisa, daughter of John and Catharine (Tressler) Gesswein, and to him were born the following seven children: Caroline, Emma, Laura, Matilda, Annie, Bertha and Charles. Mr. Haudenshield, at the time of his death, owned 200 acres of rich farming and mineral land, beautifully located. In this elegant home his widow and children still reside, feeling keenly the death of a kind husband and father.

John J. McCormick, steamship and railroad agent, postoffice Bonny, Pa., a son of Thomas and Elizabeth McCormick, was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1834. Thomas was born in Ireland, came to this country in 1829, and settled in New York, where he married Elizabeth Grogan, by whom he had nine children: John J., Mary (deceased), James, Julia (wife of Laurence Brown), Elizabeth (wife of John W. Hawkins, of Connecticut), Catherine, Margaret, Thomas F. and Mary. John J. came to this county in 1865, and here he has since resided. In 1864 he married, in Covington, Ky., Martha E. Vandergrift, formerly of this county, and five children have been born to them; Sarah E. (wife of James P. Dunlevey), John V., William P., Edward C. and Mary E. (deceased). Mr. McCormick, in addition to other educational advantages, spent six years in college, but at the age of twenty-seven enlisted in the U. S. navy, where he remained four years and held the position of assistant purchasing paymaster. At the expiration of his service in the navy he came to Pittsburgh, Pa., and was two years in the coal trade, but for the past twenty years has been in his present business of steamship, exchange and railroad agent, having the agency of thirty-two companies, which have steamers plying between this country and Europe. He is also the city agent for the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie railroad, and order agent for the Pennsylvania railroad. He is said to be the leading steamship agent in the United States.

William Drayton Houghtelin, justice of the peace, Hulton, was born in Penn township, this county, Aug. 5, 1842, a son of Hezekiah and Mary Magdalen (Headgrass) Houghtelin, both of whom were of German descent, and natives of Adams county, Pa., and Columbiana county, Ohio, respectively. Hezekiah Houghtelin, who was thirty years a teacher in this and Westmoreland counties, Pa., died Sept. 3, 1874. He lived in Verona (then Penn township) after his marriage, and later on a farm in Penn township, where our subject received his education, and worked until he enlisted, Sept. 20, 1861, in Company B, 77th regiment P. V. I. This command was sent to Louisville, Ky., and participated in the battles of Shiloh, siege of Corinth, the invasion of Kentucky, battle of Liberty Gap, Stone river, Chickamauga and other engagements. Mr. Houghtelin re-enlisted as a veteran Jan. 4, 1864, and was promoted to sergeant. He participated in the battles of Resaca, Adairsville, Cassville, Newhope Church, Kennesaw, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Lovejoy station, Franklin (Tenn.) and Nashville (Tenn.). He also participated in the rest of his company Dec. 6, 1863, at Victoria, Lavaca county, Tex., and paid off in Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 18, 1866. Returning to Penn township, our subject learned the wagon-maker's trade, carried on a shop in Sandy Creek in 1871-72, and moved to Verona in April, 1873, and carried on a shop there until he was burned out in 1889. Politically he is a republican, always voting the straight ticket. He was elected justice of the peace March 11, 1876, serving continuously; has also been school director, assessor for twelve years, and has held many other town offices. He is a member of the G. A. R., being past commander, and of the I. O. O. F., being the oldest past grand of Verona; is also a P. C. in the K. of P. of Anna Lodge No. 1; also belongs to Encampment No. 1, Union Veteran Legion. Our subject was married in 1872 to Hannah H., daughter of John H. and Margaret (Bell) Pollitt, natives of Pittsburgh and Baltimore, Md., her father, who is a gunsmith in the Thirty-first ward, Pittsburgh, is a native of Derbyshire, England, and came here when seven years old. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hougheinel, two of whom are living: Atlanta Sherman, aged fifteen years, and Elmer Ellsworth, aged ten years. Those deceased are Mary L., James Garfield, who died at the age of eighteen months; Percival Drayton, who died when aged seven months, and John Morton, when nine years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Hougheinel are members of the Baptist Church.

EDWARD D. SMITH, division passenger agent Baltimore & Ohio railroad, P. O. Bonney, a son of John C. and Eliza A. Smith, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., April 11, 1852. John C. was born in Westmoreland county, Pa., in 1809, and came from Greensburg to this county in 1829. He married, in 1832, Eliza A. Day, and they were blessed with ten children, of whom the living are William, Percy, Ella, Lyda, Catherine (wife of W. P. Fullmer), and Edward D. John C. had learned the trade of tinner, and for three or four years he earned his living with the soldering-iron. When the mayor's court was started in the old city hall he was appointed watchman, and from that day until now he has been actively identified with the courts of Pittsburgh, and is probably the oldest official in the state, if not in the United States. He is blessed with a wonderful memory, and can give the details of all the noted trials that have come up in the courts of Pittsburgh during the past fifty-six years. He remembers well how disheartened the people were in this county in 1853 when Jackson vetoed the United States bank bill, and in 1845 when the great fire nearly wiped the city out of existence, and again in 1854 during the cholera scourge. It was feared the city would never recover from these terrible disasters, but in the language of the old gentleman, "the city came up all right, and to-day I guess it's hard to beat." Mr. Smith was one of the number invited to the opening of the Penn- sylvania railroad to Greensburg, July 15, 1853, which he represents as a big event in the history of Pittsburgh. Among the positions he held in Pittsburgh in an early day was that of councilman when there were only five wards in the city. He is still hale and hearty.

Edward D. Smith, the subject of this memoir, married, Dec. 6, 1877, Anna N., daughter of Rev. L. R. and Sarah, Morton, Pittsburgh, Pa., and their children are Lilian F., Helen N. and Lindsay N. (deceased). Mr. Smith has been in the employ of the Burlington & Ohio railroad for twenty years, and for many years has held the position of division passenger agent.

WILLIAM J. and JOHN SHEDDEN, residents of Green Tree borough, are the surviving sons of Capt. Thomas Shedden, who was born in the town of Beith, Scotland, and who entered the English army at the breaking out of the war between that country and France. He was sent to Spain, where he remained until the close of the war, having followed the fortunes of the "Iron Duke" from Corunna to Toulouse. After the battle of Waterloo, when peace was declared, his regiment, the 68th, was ordered on home duty, and during his stay at home he became acquainted with Miss Mary Doolan, of the County Down, Ireland, whom he married. The chances of promotion in the army after the war being small, he sold his commission and retired from the army. Shortly after he emigrated to Upper Canada, and purchased a farm near Toronto, where he died. He was buried at Oakville, on the shore of Lake Ontario, with military honors, and in charge of the Masonic fraternity, having been a Master Mason and a member of St. John's Lodge, No. 209, in the Grand Lodge of Scotland. After his death his widow and family emigrated to Pennsylvania, and settled in Allegheny county. Mrs. Shedden was a lady of superior education, and maintained her family by giving lessons in the French and Italian languages. She was on the widows' pension-list of the British army for over half a century.

W. J. Shedden, the eldest son, learned the trade of machinist and steamboat engineer, which he followed on the western rivers for over forty years. He retired from active service in 1886. In 1851 he was married to Ann Ford, daughter of John Ford, of Allegheny City. John Shedden, the second son, like his brother, also learned the trade of engineer, and for over twenty years followed the river as clerk and engineer, when he retired and devoted his attention to the cultivation of fruit. John was married twice: first to Hannah, eldest daughter of Peter Bates, of Troy Hill, by whom he had seven children; the second time, in 1867, to Sarah, second daughter of James Carter, who emigrated from England about eighty years ago, and built one of the first brick houses on the south side of the river, in which John Shedden and family still continue to reside.

JOHN A. MARTIN, farmer, postoffice Castle Shannon, was born Sept. 20, 1824, on the Martin homestead, a son of John Martin, a native of County Down, Ireland, and of Scotch descent. In 1823 the father emigrated to America, and settled in Allegheny county, where he purchased the old David Kennedy farm of fifty acres, now consisting of one hundred acres. In many improvements. He married, in Ireland, Mary Chambers, also a native of that county. They were Presby- terians, and became members of the Union Church in this county, and afterward of the U.P. Church. John Martin died in 1847, aged nearly seventy years; his widow died March 16, 1896, aged seventy-five years. Politically he was a whig. His children are: Samuel, James, Robert, Mary J., John A., Sarah, and Margaret. Of these only James and John A. are now living. The latter was educated in this county, and married here Adaline Irwin, who died leaving two children, Charley and Ella. His present wife is Martha J., daughter of Alexander Long, a pioneer of Allegheny county. She is the mother of three children: Maggie M. (wife of William B. Benton, of Knoxville), John C. and Robert Alexander. Mr. Martin has been a successful man; is popular and esteemed. He and his wife are members of the U. P. Church. He has been identified with the republican party, but is now, with his son, a staunch prohibitionist.

WILLIAM CROUCH, farmer, postoffice Castle Shaunou, was born August 18, 1828, in the city of Allegheny. The family is of French descent. William Crouch was born in 1776 in Nottingham township, Washington county, Pa., where his father had been a pioneer. He married Elizabeth McMillain, and reared a large family, as follows: George, Sarah, Robert, John, Eliza, Joseph, Watson, Mary and Dr. Daniel. The parents were members of old Dr. McMillain’s church. Of their children George, Robert and John came to Allegheny county. George, who still lives in Ohio, was born January 2, 1804, and was a schoolteacher and farmer; he married Mary Van Wye, who died in 1848 in Washington county, and their children were Arthur V., William, Elizabeth, Mary, John, Adaline, Katie and Anna. His second wife, see Rachel Hamilton, was the mother of three children. William Crouch, the subject of this sketch, married Ellen Cooley, and their children were Samuel C. (who died aged twenty-six), Mary E., George and Nancy (who died at the age of eight years). Mr. and Mrs. Cooley and daughter are members of Mount Washington Presbyterian Church. He is a democrat; a member of the L. O. O. F., Castle Shannon Lodge, which he joined in 1849.

CAPT. JOHN A. WOOD, coal-merchant, Pittsburgh, a son of Jonathan H. and Wilhelmina Wood, was born in Allegheny county, Pa., in 1831. His grandfather, Abina Wood, came from New Jersey and settled in Allegheny county, Pa., in 1822. He and his wife were parents of fourteen children, three of whom are living: Elizabeth (Folk), Susan (Aisworth) and William. Their father died in 1853, aged seventy-four years, and their mother in 1856, at the age of seventy-three years. Jonathan H. Wood was born in 1809, and learned the trade of ship-carpenter, which he followed through life. He married Wilhelmina Ihmsen, and became the father of nine children: John A., Fredrick (deceased), Catherine (deceased), Burrows D., David, Jonathan, Mina (wife of Alexander McDav[ident]), William M. and James. The father of this family died of cholera in 1849; the mother is still living, aged seventy-three years. John A. very early in life commenced to work with his father constructing boats, and at the age of thirteen years was engaged as a full boat-hand on a trip to Louisville, Ky., since when he has been engaged in boating in some capacity or other. He owns at this time fifteen or sixteen steamboats and tugs, which are used in his coal business between Pittsburgh and New Orleans. In 1850 he married Lydia Gildersleeve, daughter of John and Ellison Gildersleeve, of Washington county, Pa., and their children are Samuel L., Ella (wife of Rev. R. T. Miller, of the M. E. Church), Mina (wife of Rev. Charles E. Locke, of the M. E. Church), Lydia (wife of Homer S. Bodley), John A., Jr., James B., Simpson H., Lula M., and an adopted daughter, Millie Wood. Mr. Wood owns about one thousand acres of coal-land, works three extensive coal-mines and employs about twelve hundred men in his business. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, the I. O. O. F., and of the M. E. Church.

WILLIAM H. HAMILTON (deceased) was born in Pittsburgh in 1834, the son of Samuel and Esther (Morrow) Hamilton, who came to Pittsburgh in 1812 from County Down, Ireland. His father was born in 1806 and his mother in 1810, and they died at the ages of seventy-six and seventy-two years, respectively. Samuel Hamilton was a stone-contractor here in the early days, and one of the most prominent at that time. He was a member of the Associate Reform Church, and later of the United Presbyterian, and in politics was a supporter of the Whig and Republican parties. William H. was educated at the Pittsburgh common schools and the Western University, and began life as a glass-blower. In 1863 he established the glass-works which are still operated under style of W. H. Hamilton & Co. He was very successful in the management of these works, and built up a good business. In 1870 he married Ellen J., daughter of Elias and Susanna (Wallace) Radcliffe, of Pittsburgh, who were members of the U. P. Church. Three children have blessed this union, viz.: Francis Albert, Emma and Elmer Wallace. Mr. Hamilton moved to Bellevue in 1873, where he erected a home. He and Mrs. Hamilton were members of the U. P. Church, of which he was an elder for about thirty years. SAMUEL COoley, farmer, postoffice Castle Shannon, was born July 16, 1807, on the old homestead in Baldwin township, where his father, Francis Cooley, settled in 1805. His grandfather, William Cooley, a native of England, settled in New York state before the revolutionary war, and took an active part in the struggles for liberty. He was a deacon under Gen. Wayne; participated in many battles and minor engagements, and was a noted man in his day. His home was ransacked by the British at various times. He reared a family of three sons: William, Rev. Joseph and Francis. The last named was born in New York, where he learned to be a silversmith. He married Eleanor Vandivort, who became the mother of eight children: Robert, John, William, Francis, Samuel, Harrison, Elizabeth and Mary. Francis Cooley was a prosperous farmer; took a lively interest in church-work, hauling the timber for the first church built in his neighborhood. In politics he was a democrat. For many years he conducted a store. He died at the home of our subject, May 21, 1842, and there his widow also died, Feb. 19, 1893.
Samuel is also a prosperous farmer, owning 130 acres. He married, in this county, Mrs. Nancy Kennedy, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Bell) Beltzhoover, old settlers. Her grandfather, John Bell, was the first civilized settler on Chartiers creek. Mrs. Cooley died Sept. 29, 1883, aged eighty-one years, the mother of two children, Mrs. Eleanor Crouch and Sam B. She was a member of the Seceders’ Church, of which her husband is also a member. He is a democrat, and was one of the grand jurors who voted for the erection of the new courthouse. His son, Samuel B., married Jane Hultz, daughter of Preston and Jane (Williams) Hultz, and they have five children: Etta M., Mary E., Francis, James J. and William B.

Martin Pfeiffer, retired, P. O. Hulton, was born in Germany in 1824, a son of Joseph and Catherine (Reidensberger) Pfeiffer, who emigrated to Pittsburgh May 1, 1847. His father was a wine-gardener and farmer, and died in 1854; his mother died in Pittsburgh in 1877. Martin was educated in Germany, and after coming to Pittsburgh he carried brick for twenty-two brick houses. In 1849 he entered the rolling-mills at seventy-five cents per day. The mills shut down, and he began farming in Lower St. Clair township. He was married in June, 1848, to Juditha Ackerman, a native of Germany, a daughter of Aloeis and Elizabeth (Wealbuyer) Ackerman. After remaining on the farm for five years Mr. Pfeiffer returned to Pittsburgh, where he opened a flour- and feed-store, which he continued successfully from 1853 till 1862. He then moved to Verona, where he bought property, and built a house in 1857. Politically he is a democrat. The family are members of the Verona Catholic Church.

S. L. Boggs, coal-operator, postoffice Pittsburgh, Pa., is descended from an old family of Allegheny county. Two brothers, David and William Boggs, natives of Ireland, immigrated to Pennsylvania in 1837 and located in Allegheny county, Pa., where they became very successful business-men, and owned over 2,600 acres of land where the towns of Boggsville, Mt. Washington and a portion of the city of Pittsburgh now stand; they also owned a large tract of land in Washington county, Pa. Together they operated coal-mines and worked at the sawmill and grist-mill business and farming, and made their labors very profitable. William was a bachelor, and at his death left his property to David’s children. David married Mary Morton, who came to this country from Ireland with her parents when seven years old. Ten children were born to David and his wife, nine of whom grew to be men and women, four sons and five daughters: William, Agnes (Mrs. Harvey Chess), Margaret (Mrs. Samuel Giffin), Emily (Mrs. David Smith), David, Maria (Mrs. Caleb Foster) Harriet (Mrs. William Peeples), John and Samuel S. William was a farmer and real-estate dealer, and was an associate judge of the county. He was married three times; his first wife, Margaret Magee, was a sister of Christian Magee; his second wife was Mary Ann Benton, and his third was Elizabeth Holmes. John was for a number of years engaged in farming, and has also dealt in real estate. He married Elizabeth Wilson, and to him were born three children: Mary, Samuel W. and George C.

Samuel S., the youngest child of David and Mary (Morton) Boggs, was born in 1817, and was for a number of years extensively engaged in the coal and land business; he was twice married, his first wife being Elizabeth Bennett, daughter of William Bennett of Franklin, Pa. To Samuel S. and his wife four children were born, three sons and one daughter, two of whom reached their majority. James B. was born in 1834, and S. L. in 1862. James B. now resides in Denver, Col., and is extensively engaged in the mining business. S. L. resides in Pittsburgh, Pa., and is engaged in the coal business, and also deals in real estate. Samuel S. Boggs married his second wife, Sarah, in 1867, who was a daughter of Benjamin Bennett, of Meadville, Pa., who was a prominent man in his time. Mr. Boggs died Jan. 3, 1879, and his widow now resides with her son, S. L., a bright young man, engaged in the coal business. The family are members of the Methodist and Episcopal churches, and are republicans.

James Madison Balph, architect, of the city of Allegheny, Pa., the third child of George and Mary (Shaner) Balph, was born in Sharpsburg, Allegheny county, Pa., Jan. 23, 1839. His father and mother were both born in Butler county, Pa., the former in 1809 and the latter in 1808, where they were married, and resided until 1836, when they moved to Sharpsburg, and removed to Allegheny in 1843, when our subject was four years old. His grandfather, James Balph, was a farmer, and he and his grandmother, Mary (King) Balph, were also born in Butler county, where they lived to an advanced age. Mr. Balph’s parents and grandparents were members of the U., P., formerly the A. R. Church, and in politics were whig and republican. His father was, for many years, a contractor and builder, and, in his time, erected a large number of the best buildings in Pittsburgh and Allegheny. He died at the age of seventy-one years, and his mother a few years later, aged eighty years. J. M. Balph received his education mainly in the Third Ward public schools of Allegheny, and evincing as a boy some aptitude in the direction of architecture, he afterward spent four or five years with his father in acquiring a practical knowledge of building, which was invaluable in after life, and then devoted almost four years to the study of architecture with Charles Bartholomew Sr., architect, of Pittsburgh, one of the most eminent in his profession. He opened an office for himself in Allegheny in 1860, and has practiced ever since, nearly thirty years, in but two different locations, having occupied his present office since 1867, over twenty-two years. During his practice he has designed and constructed many of the finest public and private buildings in Pittsburgh, Allegheny and vicinity, comprising churches of all denominations, school-buildings, theaters, hotels, store-buildings, manufactories, city and country residences, etc. He was married in October, 1870, to Amanda M. A. Bayne, daughter of Andrew and Mary A. (Mathews) Bayne, of Bellefonte, where he built a home and has resided since. His wife’s father, Hon. Andrew Bayne, was born in 1794, in Fayette county, Pa., was a member of the legislature of Pennsylvania for two terms, and sheriff of Allegheny county one term, and died in 1881, aged eighty-seven years. Her brother, Hon. T. M. Bayne, one of the ablest lawyers of Allegheny county, is now, as is well known, filling his several terms in the House of Representatives at Washington, from the Twenty-third district of Pennsylvania. In politics Mr. Ralph has always been a republican.

Jacob Hays (deceased) was born Jan. 3, 1812, in York county, Pa., and died in this county, April 30, 1874. At the age of ten years he went to Westmoreland county, where he grew to manhood. After a few attempts at several trades, he finally decided to learn carpentering, and, finding it more to his taste, followed it the greater part of his life. He was a member of the firm of J. & A. Hays, lumbermen of South Side, at the time of his death. He was a Baptist, but after moving to Baldwin township attended the Presbyterian Church. He was twice married. His first wife, Jane Udegraff, was the mother of four children: Mrs. Jennie H. Reamer, Albert C., Milton D., and Minerva (wife of Dr. George G. Ranhauser). Mrs. Jennie H. Reamer’s husband, Josiah Reamer, came to this county in 1845. For some years he was a dry-goods merchant, afterward an iron-broker in Pittsburgh, but later in life was interested in western stock-ranches. He was a man of sterling qualities, and a friend in the hour of affliction. He died June 17, 1887. Milton D. Hays married Miss Laura V. Redman, daughter of John Redman, and she died in March, 1886, leaving two daughters, Harriet R. and Florence M. Milton D. Hays has been an active business-man in this county. He and J. Reamer organized the Castle Shannon Rail-Road company, and laid out the town of Castle Shannon. At present he is a ranchman in the west.

Robert Hamerton Kelley, Sr., retired, postoffice Hulton, was born in Franklin, Venango county, Pa., Feb. 13, 1832, a son of John and Frances (Hamerton) Kelley, natives of County Derry, Ireland, born in 1789 and 1793, and died at the ages of eighty-three and ninety years, respectively. They came to America in 1816, settling in Erie county, Pa., and two years later moved to Waterford, Crawford county, and later on, down the French creek in an Indian canoe. Here John Kelley became professor of the Franklin schools. Before the commencement of public schools he had taught private schools. In 1838, at the solicitation of Rev. Joseph Stockton, he moved to Allegheny City, and began teaching in the academy, boarding at the same time with Esquire Hannon, who was warden of the penitentiary. In 1855 he withdrew from the public schools. He was an advanced professor of his age, and after teaching thirty years in the Allegheny schools he moved to Mississippi, and later to St. Louis, where he died March 27, 1867. The subject of these lines received his education from his father in Allegheny City, and in 1833 he embarked for himself as clerk on the steamer Ontario, running from Pittsburgh to St. Louis, and also on the steamer Oswego, serving three years on each boat. In 1841 he began teaching in this county, and taught school continuously until 1888, except during the time he served in the Mexican and civil wars. In the spring of 1846 he was elected assistant principal in the Third Ward school, Allegheny City, where he taught until the breaking out of the Mexican war. In January, 1847, he enlisted in Company I, 2d regiment P. I., served all through the war, and was discharged in July, 1848. On returning home he was at once appointed teacher in what is now the Thirty-sixth ward of Pittsburgh, continuing in the same until 1852. He was then elected principal of the Eighth Ward school, Pittsburgh, filling the incumbency five years. In 1857 he moved to Temperanceville, where he taught until 1861, when he again enlisted, July 1, 1861, in Company G, Twenty-eighth regiment P. I. In October the regiment was transferred to Knapp’s Pennsylvania battery, and served at the battles of Cedar Mountain, Chancellorsville, Fredericksburg, Gettysburg and many others. In September, 1863, he was transferred from the Army of the Potomac to the Army of the Southwest. Afterward he participated in the battles of Lookout Mountain and Ringgold. Mr. Kelley continued to teach and was at Vicksburg in the same company, and, after a month’s leave of absence, he rejoined his regiment, and was with Sherman in the remainder of his campaign, and in the march to the sea. Our subject was never wounded. He was discharged at Goldsboro April 5, 1865, and returning home was again appointed principal of the Washington school, filling this position three years he moved to Woodville, where he built a normal school, which he conducted ten years. In 1878 he was appointed principal of the Twenty-third Ward school of Pittsburgh, and two months later a committee of the schools requested him to take charge of the Bayard school, which he accepted. Here he labored for nine years, and then resigned, his health not permitting of his taking charge of three large schools.

Mr. Kelley was married May 22, 1845, to Elizabeth Gamble, a native of Pittsburgh, and a daughter of William and Mary (McPherson) Gamble, and two children have been born to them: Edward and Robert H. (see sketch following). Edward enlisted in Company K, Sixth in the 145th Pennsylvania, and was killed at the battle of Yorktown, May 7, 1862. The mother died March 11, 1884. They were members of the M. E. Church. Mr. Kelley is a republican; a member of the teachers' institute, the academy of teachers of Pittsburgh, and the Academic guild. He received from the state of Pennsylvania a permanent certificate for teaching, and was also a member of the committee for granting such certificates. He was the best bugler in the army, and was highly recommended by Gen. John W. Geary, with whom he had been through both wars. In June, 1877, Mr. Kelley went to Harrisburg with Francis Murphy, and labored nearly a year and a half at that and other places in the temperance-work.

Robert Hamilton Kelley, Jr., decorator and paper-hanger, P. O. Hulton, one of Verona's stirring young business-men, is a son of R. H. Kelley, Sr. (whose sketch appears above), and was born September 25, 1847, in Pittsburgh. His father was desirous of giving him a good education, but when a young boy he paid his aunt in St. Louis a visit, and while there he took a liking to his present business, so in 1866, instead of returning home, he commenced his first year at his trade. In 1867, the firm he was with failing to come to agreement, he went to New York city, and was given a good situation by a former member of the firm. In 1870 he returned to his home in Pittsburgh, and was six months in the employ of W. P. Marshall; since then he has been identified with Joseph R. Hughes, of Pittsburgh. Mr. Kelley was married Aug. 7, 1881, to Margaret Winston, a native of Woodville, Pa., and a daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Dedolph) Winston, who were born, the former in France in 1801, and the latter in Germany in 1823. Six children grace the home circle of our subject and wife: William, Margaret, Kate, Thomas, Isabella and Elizabeth. Mr. Kelley was two years a member of the Verona council; is a member of the Royal Arcanum, and trustee of the Presbyterian Church, where his wife is a member; in politics he is a republican. Mr. Kelley since coming to Verona has built up a nice home and a large business, and has won the respect of all who know him.

Hughes. Prominent among the remaining pioneer families of Allegheny county are the Hughesys, who now reside at the old homestead, a valuable property purchased by their grandfather, Ephraim Hughes, as early as 1785. This tract originally contained 700 acres, and was at the time of its purchase the property of Joseph McDermott, a revolutionary soldier, the price paid being $20 per acre. Ephraim, with his wife and two children, came from France, after the Revolutionary War, to Allegheny, then Washington, county. His wife was Dorcas Niced, and they had seven children, all of whom grew to maturity: Joseph, the eldest, born in 1780; Jane (Mrs. Hayes); John, who died in Mercer county; Willison, who was a physician, and met his death on a steamship; Rachel (Mrs. Shy); Washington, who was drowned in the Gulf of Mexico, and Joseph, the mechanic of the family, who remained with his father on the farm, and at the death of the former the farm of 100 acres was equally divided between him and John, the former finally purchasing the share of the latter. Joseph was born in 1790; he married Jane, daughter of William and Ann (Strowbridge) Kennedy, and a family of children were born to them: Mary, Ephraim, William, Dorcas, Joseph, David, Willison, Ann (Mrs. Edwards, of Virginia) and George W., of whom four sons and two daughters remain. Joseph, the father, was sixty-four years old when he died; his wife died in 1842, aged forty-nine years.

Joseph Hughes was born in 1833, and now resides near the farm where his early childhood was spent. He was educated at the common schools, and when seventeen years of age learned the trade of wagon-making, which he has followed through life. He was married in 1852 to Mary Jane, daughter of Harvey McDonough, of this county, and they have three children: H. Julia, Charles H. and George W.

Charles King (deceased) was born in Westmoreland county, Pa., in 1804, second eldest son of John King, a farmer of that county. Charles for a time was employed on the farm, then went on the river as an engineer, which business he followed for thirty years. He was married in 1831 to Barbara, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth King, and they had no children of their own, but adopted four daughters, all of whom are now married. Their names are Harriet, Mary Elizabeth, Harriet Levi and Barbara Fleming. Mr. King died in 1887; he had many years before retired from river life, and was enjoying his declining years at his home farm, which he had purchased as early as 1831. Mrs. King survives him, now a lady of bright intellect, in the eighty-fifth year of her age. The family are members of the Methodist Church; politically Mr. King was a democrat. Mrs. King's grandfathers fought under Gen. Washington in the revolutionary war, and were paid with continental money. Mr. King's father fought in the war of 1812, under Gen. Harrison, and suffered a long time from the effects of that war, receiving a small pittance of six dollars a month.

Thomas Dawson, retired, Bellevue, was born in Ohio township, Beaver county, Pa., Dec. 29, 1815, and is the son of Michael and Rachel (Porter) Dawson, former of whom was born in Maryland, and became one of the first settlers in Ohio township, where large tracts of land were taken up by the Dawsons. The mother died in 1818, and the father about two years later. Thomas four hundred acres of land along Island run, supposed to be of little value, but afterward sold at high prices for oil-wells, thus leaving
Mr. Dawson wealthy. Our subject passed his early life on Island run, and from 1845 until 1864 carried on farming there. He then moved to Glasgow, and two years later to Rochester, retiring from business altogether and leaving the remaining part of the farm in charge of his son George B. He moved from Rochester to Allegheny City, and five years later exchanged property there for his present home at West Bellevue, where he has lived since 1872. He married in 1843, and his wife, Mrs. Nancy Dawson, had three children, now living, viz.: Elizabeth, George B. and Nicholas. She died in 1856, and in 1867 he married a native of this county. Mr. and Mrs. Elizabeth Dawson have five children living, viz.: Thomas, Edith, Catherine, Porter and Elmer Ellsworth. The family are members of the M. E. Church.

James H. Graham, justice of the peace, Elizabeth, is a son of Jesse and Eliza (Burnnett) Graham, of Westmoreland county, Pa. In 1836 his father moved to Elizabeth borough. He was a ship-carpen ter, and at one time the part owner of a trading-boat, which he plied on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. He died in 1872, but his widow is still living. They had six children: Martha J., wife of George W. Wiley, of Pittsburgh; David P., who was killed at the battle of Antietam Sept. 17, 1862; Mary E., wife of David Kimes, of Elizabeth; Electra, who died at the age of three years; Thomas W., of Elizabeth borough, and James H., who was born in Elizabeth borough Aug. 11, 1843. He was educated at the public schools here and at college in Washington, D. C. In 1858 he engaged in steamboating, which he followed for two years. In 1861 he enlisted in Co. I, 9th P. R., and was honorably discharged in 1863. After that he was engaged in the quartermaster's department under Gen. James A. Ekin, at Washington, D. C., and Louisville, Ky., and served until 1865. In 1872 he was married to Amanda, daughter of David and Charlotte Morgan, of West Elizabeth, Pa. They have eight children living: Jessie, James, Lottie, Martha, Nettie, Harry, David, and Amanda, an infant. In 1883 Mr. Graham was elected a member of the school board of the borough, and has since acted as secretary of the board; has been clerk of the council for the past three years; has also been clerk, inspector and judge of elections for ten years. Mr. Graham is a republican, and is the representative of his party at all conventions. He was elected justice of the peace Feb. 21, 1888, for a term of five years. He is a member of J. W. Stephens Post, No. 111, G. A. R. The family are members of the M. E. Church.

Capt. Alfred Brauff, retired, Elizabeth, is a son of Jacob Brauff, a native of Virginia, who came to this state very early on, and settled near Brownsville, Fayette county. His wife was Rebecca Nixon, of Virginia, and survived him many years. Capt. Brauff was born March 3, 1814, at Brownsville, and was but one year old when his father died. As soon as he was old enough, he assisted in caring for the family, and worked at various occupations, but the principal one was following the river. He was captain of the Davy Crockett, the first towboat ever placed upon the Monongahela. He afterward built and was the owner of several boats plying on the river, among them the Hunter, Robert Lee, Alfred Raub, etc. In 1870 he retired from boating, and purchased a home in this borough, where he has since resided. The captain was never married, and his widowed sister, Mrs. O'Neill, lives with him. He has held various borough offices, and is a member of the M. E. Church.

Samuel A. Duff, ice-merchant, postoffice Chartiers, was born in 1834 on the place where he now resides, in Chartiers township, this county, and is a son of Samuel and Isabella L. Duff. The father was born in Ireland, immigrated to this country in 1818, and located in Philadelphia, where he remained until 1832, following the business of carpenter and contractor. In 1831 he came to this county, where he purchased 175 acres of land in Chartiers township at eighteen dollars per acre, and the following year moved from Philadelphia in a covered wagon to his new home in Chartiers township, where he resided the remainder of his life, improving his farm. The tract of land he purchased in 1831 is said to be worth at the present time $1,500 per acre. He married Isabella, daughter of Joseph and Agnes Calderwood Lawson, and their children were Matilda (Mrs. Scully), Mary, Joseph L., John L., Samuel A., William G., Thomas McKee (deceased), James K. P. and Thomas L. (deceased). The father died in 1863, at the age of sixty-eight years, and the mother in 1856, at the age of eighty-four years, both members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Duff received his naturalization papers in 1825, which are still in possession of his son Samuel A. He was assessor in 1844, before Chartiers township was divided.

Samuel A., whose name heads this sketch, married, in 1863, Matilda M., daughter of Rev. Samuel Lawson, of Westmoreland county, Pa., and their children were William H. (deceased), Edward E. (in the People's Savings Bank of Pittsburgh), James K. (holding a position in the same bank), Catherine, Samuel L., Matilda S. and Mary D. (twins), Ella, Henry D. and Clara. Mr. Duff has been assessor and school director six years, and has held various offices in Chartiers township. He owns twenty acres of the old homestead, and is engaged in the ice business in Washington county, where he has an ice-plant with stowing capacity of 20,000 tons.

William Linweaver Douglas, Esq., real estate dealer, Boston, is a son of Col. William and Mary Nixon Douglas. Col. William Douglas was the second son of Thomas Douglass, a native of Elizabeth township. He was a farmer and a public man, being a prominent leader in the republican party, and represented his county in the legislature. He died Feb. 6, 1876, and his wife in 1857. They had ten children, seven of whom are living: Thomas C., on the homestead; Philip H., of Wellsville, Mo.; Frances, now Mrs. David Rankin, of this township; Mary C., now Mrs. William McClure, of Ellrod’s; Helen M., Mrs. James Mansfield, of this township; Nancy, Mrs. William Weddle, of Buena Vista, and William L., who was born May 19, 1849, on the homestead. He was educated at the common schools, attended the Elder’s Ridge Academy, and subsequently graduated from the law department of the Chicago University. Mr. Douglass is also a civil engineer, and has been engaged in that business for some years. He was married, in 1879, to Kate I., daughter of Andrew and Jane (Cornell) Werling, of this township, and by their marriage they have one child, Jane W., who resides with her parents. In 1882 Mr. Douglass was appointed justice of the peace by Gov. Henry M. Hoyt, and in 1883 was elected by the people, and still holds the office. In 1864 he enlisted in Co. E, 6th P. H. A., at the age of fifteen years, and served until the close of the war. He and Mrs. Douglass are members of the Presbyterian Church of Mount Vernon. He is a member of Rankin Post, No. 127, department of Pennsylvania, G. A. R., and was instrumental in forming the association that erected the magnificent Grand Army hall at Boston, Pa., which is located on the fort field, where his ancestors battled with the American Indians. He is active, energetic and determined; is of Scotch descent, and is as spirited as the name is historical.

Robert Snodgrass. One of the first settlers in Allegheny county was Robert Snodgrass. He was born in Lancaster county, Pa., in 1758, of Scotch-Irish parentage, and remained under the parental roof until he attained his majority, when he came to Allegheny county in 1776. During 1779, he bought of John Penn, Sr., and John Penn, Jr., for £813 gold or silver, five hundred acres of land in said Allegheny county, lying south of Coal Hill, principally between what are now known as Saw-Mill run and Little Saw-Mill run, and adjoining farms of William Boggs, Abraham Kirkpatrick, John Wood and George Wallace. After having cleared a small space and erected a rude log cabin, he returned to visit the home of his childhood, where, Sept. 12, 1780, he married Miss Jean White. In company with his newly chosen companion he now turned his face toward his log cabin in the forest across the mountains, which he had left the previous year, to begin the life of a pioneer. His attitude toward the Indians was that of brother toward brother. The Indians ate at his table, and brought his game from the forest, terming small baskets and trinkets of their own handiwork; they smoked the pipe of peace, and he thus secured for himself and family safety from the tomahawk and scalping-knife, and many other advantages.

Robert Snodgrass was a man of industrious habits, sterling honesty and unusual mechanical ability. He built his own wagons, plows and other farming implements, besides manufacturing many household articles. He cleared the land during the winter and spring, and farmed during the summer, while every fall he made a trip east over the mountains, on horseback, for salt to use during the coming year, the trip requiring from one to two months. He was without greed or any desire to retain what belonged to another, as the following incident will show: During his last illness he reminded two friends who were standing at his bedside that he owed a neighbor two shillings ninepence, and directed them to pay it. Among other good traits of his character was his benevolence to the “fatherless and widows,” as was shown by his maintaining a widowed sister, and also making provision for the children of other widowed sisters. Surely some will “rise up and call him blessed!” After a brief illness he passed away Aug. 26, 1796, leaving eight children, the eldest fifteen years old. His remains were laid to rest in Bethel churchyard. His widow, Jean Snodgrass, with the help of the eldest boy, continued the cultivation of the farm, and succeeded in making the final payment. After five years she was called home July 28, 1802, having been a faithful wife and mother, a generous friend, and a true Christian. Each of their children had a share of the farm, and for the most part lived and died on their portion. The youngest son, bearing his father’s name, built a lumber-mill, and was for many years a prosperous and respected citizen. The only descendants now owning parts of the original tract are Mrs. Bulford, Mrs. Simmons, Mrs. Hubbard and M. E. Crane, grandchildren, and H. J. Milholland, great-grandson.

Daniel Bulford, farmer, postoffice Banksville, is a native of Pittsburgh, where he was born Oct. 18, 1777. He was brought here by his parents, John and Hannah Snodgrass in 1807, and to them were born five children, of whom but two sons are now living, Robert S. and Ralph Emerson. Sarah Elmira, the eldest daughter, was born in 1817, and died in 1884, her death being a sad loss to her parents. The family are members of the Presbyterian Church; politically, formerly whigs, now republicans.

William M. Black, M. D., Boston, is a grandson of James Black, one of the early settlers of Allegheny county, who located at Crooked Run, where he still resides. Six of his children are yet living. William Black, Sr., the father of our subject, was the oldest, and was born where the grandfather now lives. He followed farming and mining, and died April 10, 1873. He was the first settler up the Youghiogheny river, and finally located in Cambria county, where his wife was Hannah, daughter of James Brown, of this county, and is still living. They reared ten children: James B., M. D., of Coulterville; Jennie, wife of Alexander Thompson, of Milleville; Sarah, wife of Richard Snedew, of Coultersville; Mary, at home; Victoria, wife of James Thomas, of Coultersville; A. L., M. D., of Pittsburgh; Caroline C. and Hannah, both registered druggists of Coultersville, and Margaret A. and our subject, who was born in 1860, at Coultersville, and educated at the public schools. He graduated from Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia in 1884, and located at Boston, and opened a drugstore in connection with his practice. At the present time he is assistant postmaster at Boston.

Addison H. Simmons, postoffice Banksville. This family are originally from Eastern New York state. Samuel married Elizabeth Matthews, and by her had three children, one son and two daughters. William, the second child, and a carpenter, was born in 1887, to Margaret, daughter of James Henry, one of the oldest families in this part of the county. They had seven children, Addison H. being the second son. He was married, in 1870, to Hannah G. Snodgrass, and they have had three children (two living): Walter Glenn, Lizzie Alma and Emma Edna. The family are members of the Presbyterian Church; Mr. Simmons is a republican.

Zaccheus Scott, farmer, postoffice Blythedale, is a descendant of James Scott, Sr. His father was Zaccheus, the second son of James, and was born on the place now owned by our subject, in 1787. He was a farmer by occupation, a soldier in the war of 1812, held the commission of captain of his company, and was the officer in charge of prisoners at Fort Duquesne. After the close of the war he returned to farming, and in 1828 married Catherine, daughter of Jeremiah Andrews, of Burgettstown, Washington county. They both died in 1870. They had four daughters: Mary, now Mrs. James L. Guffy, of Forward township; Eliza Jane, now Mrs. Alexander Thompson, of Westmoreland county; Catherine, now Mrs. Allen Williams, of Westmoreland county; all living and Lucinda, who was the wife of Josiah P. Johnson, and died in 1888. Zaccheus Scott was the only son, and was born May 12, 1840, on his present farm, and received his education at the schools of his township and at Elizabeth Academy. After finishing his education he engaged in teaching schools in this, Fayette and Westmoreland counties for six years, and since that time has followed farming as an occupation. In 1871 he was married to Eliza Jane, daughter of Joseph and Jane (Ncel) Hutchinson, of this township. They have four children living: Catherine, Maud, Jessie May, Milton and Zaccheus Roscoe, all living at home. Mr. Scott and his wife are members of the U. P. Church of Bethesda.

James M. Esler, druggist, Tarentum, son of John and Martha J. Esler, was born in Fawn township, Allegheny county, Pa., in 1854. His grandfather, James Esler, came from Washington county, Pa., and located in Fawn township in 1836, on the farm now owned by his heirs. The father of our subject died in November, 1882; the mother is now a resident of Tarentum. They reared a family of eight children, five of whom are living: James M., Robert, Harry, Annie and John; Elizabeth, W. Scott and George are deceased. James M., after pursuing a course of study at the public schools, attended school at Oakdale, becoming a graduate of California Normal school, and taught several terms. In 1881 he became established in his present drug business at Tarentum, and in 1882 he married Katie R., daughter of James Thompson, of Hawkins, Allegheny county, Pa. By this union have been born three children: Alice M. and Mabel S. (both deceased), and John R. Mr. and Mrs. Esler are members of the Presbyterian Church.

E. L. Thompson is publisher and proprietor of the Weekly Sun of Tarentum, a paper established Sept. 5, 1884, having a circulation of eleven hundred, and constantly growing. It contains four pages, is 26x40 inches in size, and is printed on the only steam-power printing-press in Tarentum. The paper is all home print, and as such is said to be the only one outside of the city. Mr. James H. Jack is editor.

John Mackin, retired, postoffice Ingram, a son of James and Margaret Mackin, was born in Ireland April 2, 1812, and came to this country in 1825, locating in New York, where he remained until 1836. He then came to Pittsburgh, and here followed the bakery business until 1850, during which time he was appointed flour-inspector, first by Gov. Porter and later by Gov. Pack. After 1850 he became a contractor, taking large contracts on the Chartiers Valley railroad, and continued in that connection until 1876. He built the Pennsylvania Railroad office in Pittsburgh, the retaining-wall along the Allegheny river on Tenth street, for the railroad; the Pan Handle railroad bridge, the Pittsburgh city hall, and other public works so numerous to mention. In 1876 he accidentally broke his hip, which caused him to give up contracting. He has been for several years a partner in the Franklin Glue-factory, in Pittsburgh. About 1866 he purchased eighty-five acres of land in Chartiers township, upon which he has since resided. He has been twice married; first in New York, in 1838, to Ann McDonald, who bore him ten children, of whom the living are James, Charles, Lizzie (wife of Bernard Bannon) and Mary A. (wife of William Colbert). Mrs. Mackin died March 9, 1882, at the age of seventy-one years, and Mr. Mackin married, March 10, 1883, Mary L. Harper. He has been a member of both the common and select councils for several years. During the civil war, although not a soldier, he was present at the battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville. His son John enlisted in Co. F, 155th P. V., for three years, and was wounded in the battle of the Wilderness, which resulted in his death some time afterward at Washington, D. C. Mr. Mackin has one of the most beautiful homes in Chartiers township, and a large amount of other valuable property in that and Robinson townships, and in Pittsburgh.

William Butler Clement, teller of the Real Estate Savings Bank of Pittsburgh, was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, in May, 1817, a son of Ephraim S. and Sarah Clement, and grandson of William Butler. His parents moved to Cincinnati in 1806, and opened the first grocery on Fifth street, that city. Ephraim P. Clement died in 1827, aged forty-one years; his widow in 1829, aged forty; both were natives of Massachusetts. In 1876 the subject of this memoir came to Verona, Allegheny county, Pa., where his family had moved five years before, and has since been teller of the Real Estate Savings Bank of Pittsburgh. He married, in 1839, Eliza Jane Meads, a native of Baltimore, Md. They have one son living—Stephen B. Mr. and Mrs. Clement are members of the First M. P. Church, Pittsburgh, Pa.

James J. East, merchant, Bellevue, was born in Birmingham, England, in 1836. His father was a glass-manufacturer in Birmingham, owning, with a partner, three furnaces, twenty-seven pots, known as the Phœnix Glass-works. His mother was a niece of Dr. Davenport, rector of Stratford-on-Avon. His paternal ancestors left France with a party of Huguenots about the middle of the seventeenth century, and on their settlement in England affiliated with the Puritans; his maternal ancestors belonged to the tory or high-church party. During the latter part of his ninth year, after passing a successful examination, he was admitted a student of the Latin and commercial departments in King Edward VI Collegiate Institution in Birmingham, England. Here he remained until Mr. R. Cooper, his brother-in-law, opened an academy or high-school in a village named Smethwick, near Birmingham, and was a diligent student for two years. At the end of that time, however, circumstances required that his scholastic career should close, and that he should mingle in the "battle of life." In the fall of 1848 he came to this country, locating in Allegheny, where for several years he contributed under the nom de plume of "Excelsior" to Mrs. Swisshelm's Weekly Visitor, Purviance's News and the Allegheny Enterprise. In 1852 he opened with a small capital a book- and wallpaper-store in Allegheny. By close application to business and by strict integrity the venture was made an eminently successful one, and his career as a tradesman was pleasant and profitable. At the commencement of his business enterprise he married Miss Rose T. Hughes, daughter of Mr. Hughes, a confectioner of Pittsburgh. The happiness which this marriage brought over offset the gloom of his heart, and his gentle and lovely wife was soon to pass away. The grim destroyer, consumption, had early marked her for one of his victims, and within two years from the wedding-day the gentle mother with her two babes was borne in solemn sadness to the cold embrace of the tomb.

In 1855 the young merchant was again married, this time to Miss Annie Hunnings, sister of Marsh Hunnings, now cashier of the Pittsburgh Central Bank, and Frank Hunnings, of the firm of Hunnings & Wilson, surveyors, Pittsburgh. Toward the close of the war, business continuing to prosper and the health declining, he removed his residence from Allegheny City to the southern part of Ross township. Being near to the city and a very healthy locality, there were many citizens from Pittsburgh and Allegheny in the settlement, who, finding the local government was crude and inefficient, desired that a borough be organized. A meeting of the leading taxpayers, among whom was Hon. T. M. Bayne, W. Roseburgh, cashier of the Bank of Pittsburgh, Hugh and Samuel Clancy and many others, was held in the parlors of J. J. East, a committee was appointed and the necessary measures were adopted, and as a result the organization of a borough named Bellevue was effected, and a large and handsome school-building was erected. Since that period, as his health would permit, for five terms (fifteen years) he has been elected a school director; has also served as secretary of the board and treasurer of the borough and school district. The surviving children (two having died in their infancy) of J. J. East and Annie East are Fred A. East, bookkeeper and organist; George G. and James M., partners in the store in Allegheny; Will J., architect with J. Anglin, Esq.; Frank T., engraver at the jewelry establishment of Roberts & Sons, and Florence C., the only daughter, who is now and for several years has been a student at the Pittsburgh School of Design.

During the agitation on the slavery question J. J. East published two pamphlets, "The Signs of the Times" and "Shall Kansas be a Free or a Slave State?" both of which, in Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, had a large circulation. At the formation of the Republican party he gave it his indorsement, and has ever since been one of its most ardent adherents. At the recent election connected with "constitutional prohibition," his vote was given against the influence of the saloon. His religious proclivities may be inferred from the fact that since its organization, twenty-one years ago, he has been a member and trustee of the M. P. Church of Bellevue. He believes that God is not only the author but that he is also the ruler of the universe, and that "in him we live and move and have our being."

Samuel Lock Riddle, farmer, postoffice Hulton, was born in 1814, in Pittsburgh, a son of Charles R. and Elizabeth (Lock) Riddle. His parents were natives of Baltimore, Md. He was born in the year about 1810. Charles Riddle was a chairmaker and painter on Smithfield street, Pittsburgh, but sold out and bought property in Indiana township, opposite Hulton station. When Samuel L. was quite small his father died, and the family was left with but little of this world’s goods. Or the property learned to till, has built up a fine property and enjoys a good home. His mother died in 1870, in her eighty-fifth year. In 1835 he started for himself on a farm in Lower St. Clair township, and in 1843 came to Plum township. After eleven years he moved to Fairview, Butler county, and remained twenty-one years, in which time he bought three good farms. He then sold two of them, and, coming again to Plum township, purchased ten acres just outside of the borough of Verona, east of Hulton station, where he has a fine home in which to spend his latter days. He married, in 1835, Mary Ann Schroder, born May 3, 1816, in Maryland, daughter of Henry and Katherine (Falk) Schroder, natives, respectively, of Holland and Little York, Pa. Her mother died in 1852; her father came to this country before the Revolution; was a tailor, and died in this county about 1832. Three boys and one girl have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Riddle: William Henry Harrison, an attorney in Butler county, Pa.; Samuel L., in Lawrence county; Ovington, in Lawrence county, and Margaret (now married). Mr. Riddle is a republican, and he and his wife are members of the U. P. Church.

Peter D. Devlin, a native of County Tyrone, Ireland, came to America shortly after his marriage with Martha McClarning, and settled in Baldwin township, where he farmed until his death in November, 1866, when he was seventy-three years of age. His wife died later, at about the same age. They were prominent members of the Catholic Church, and were the parents of fourteen children, viz.: Ellen (who was born in Ireland and died on the ocean), James (who was at New Orleans during the rebellion, but has never been heard from since, and is supposed to have been killed), John F. (who still survives), Isabella (who died in 1864), Mary (known in religion as Sister Philomena, was the founder of the house of the Sisters of Mercy, Buffalo, N. Y.), Theresa (known in religion as Sister Regina, and still resides in Buffalo, N. Y.), Peter (who is deceased), Joseph F. (who married Selina, daughter of James Bennett; she died in May, 1872, aged twenty-seven years, and of whom five children survived, viz.: William V., Mark P., Martha M., Mary A., Mary Pauline, deceased), Peter C. (a civil engineer, who died aged about forty years, had explored in the west with geological expedition, and was very popular), Annie M., Daniel (who was educated at St. Charles College, Maryland) and Mark (who was educated at St. Michael's Seminary, Pa.); both Daniel and Mark were ordained priests and attached to the diocese of Pittsburgh; Luke and Martha.

William Henry Semmens, merchant, postoffice Turtle Creek, was born at St. Just, Cornwall, England, June 4, 1854, and came with his parents to America the next year. His grandfather and father, both named William, were copper-miners, and located among the mines of that metal in Northern Michigan. William Sr. died in 1867, leaving his widow, Grace, nee Ancell, died in April, 1888. William Jr., now resides near his son. His wife, Elizabeth, born in Anguinn, died in 1884, at the age of fifty-three years. When eight years old William H. was set to work in a stampmill, picking particles of silver from the copper ore. When twelve years old he was placed at school for a year, and then returned to the mill. In the spring of 1889 he came to this county with his parents, and was employed for some time in the coal-mines and a steelmill. In 1889, in company with another, he established the mercantile firm of Morgan & Semmens at Turtle Creek, and five years later became the sole owner. He owns several houses and carries a large stock of goods. On the day he was twenty-nine years old he was appointed justice of the peace by Gov. Pattison, and the next year was elected to that position for five years. He is an active republican. In 1879 he married Nannie Colgan, who died ten months after, leaving an infant, since deceased. On the 21st of December, 1886, Mr. Semmens wedded Jennie Hunter, a native of Allegheny City, daughter of Samuel and Rebecca Hunter, of Ireland. Mrs. Semmens taught school three years in Patton and Wilkins. They have one son, William Henry. Mr. Semmens is a prominent member of the M. E. Church.

Hugh Forrester, late of Bellevue, was born in Scotland, where he received his education, and on reaching manhood he sailed to America, residing two years in Baltimore. In 1826 he came to Allegheny county, via the B. & O. R. R. as far as it was built, walking hence to Pittsburgh, where he soon formed a partnership with his brothers, John, Robert and James, in stone-contracting. A few years later they dissolved partnership, and he, with his brother James, continued the business until the death of the latter, about 1850, when Mr. Forrester took John Megraw into partnership, which continued until the retirement of the former in 1871. Mr. Forrester was one of the heaviest contractors at that time, and constructed many large buildings, among which were St. Andrew's church, and the stonework of the first bridge over the Allegheny river, and the old penitentiary. In 1859 he moved to Bellevue and bought twenty acres of land, being the first sold off in town lots. Here he resided until his death, which occurred Dec. 26, 1885, when he was seventy-nine years of age, having amassed a large fortune. He was married, in 1854, to Nancy Ferguson, of Armstrong county, and to them were born six children. She died in 1883, and two years later Mr. Forrester married Mary Rodgers, who bore him ten children, eight of whom are yet living. She died in 1871, and he then married, in 1873, Ellen Henry, of Ohio, who now resides on the old homestead at Bellevue. Mr. Forrester was a member of the Sixth U. P. Church of Allegheny; he was well known and highly respected throughout the country.

Thomas Hartley, superintendent of the Little Saw-Mill Run railroad, was born in England in 1846, son of William Hartley, now a resident of Banksville, a brother of Roger Hartley. William came to this county from England in 1854, with his wife and two children, and located in Banksville. He was a stonemason, and during the building of the Little Saw-Mill Run railroad he found a steady and lucrative position at his trade. He was for some time engaged in the construction of the First Presbyterian church of Pittsburgh; from 1857 to 1894 he resided in Illinois. He was a school warden and was overseer of a coalpit for Hartley & Marshall. William married Mary Hazen, and to them were born four children, three of whom are still living. Thomas was eight years of age when he came to America with his parents, and he left school at an early year to engage in the practical pursuits of life, and his many years' association with the coal business has made him a practical operator in that line. He was for ten years employed as clerk for the L. S. M. R. R. company, and in 1882 was appointed to his present position. He married Miss Frances A. Stevens, and to them have been born seven children, five of whom are living: William S., Myra May, Amanda, Charlotte Hazen and Frances Irene. Mr. Hartley is a Republican, a Freemason, member of the R. of P., Sons of St. George and the Methodist Church.

Roger Hartley, coal-operator, postoffice Banksville, was born in 1839 in the county of Durham, England, son of Richard Hartley, a native of Lancashire, England, who married Ann Gray, of the county of Durham, and by her had five children, of whom Roger is the youngest. Roger received his education at the schools and academies, and in 1851 immigrated to America, immediately coming to Saw-Mill run, where he was employed as assistant engineer; this was during the building of the Little Saw-Mill Run railroad, after which he was locomotive-engineer for some time afterward, working for the Pittsburgh & Fort Wayne road until 1859, when he moved to Madison county, Ill., and there superintended the coal-mines and railroads of the Madison County Coal company, continuing in same six years. At the expiration of that time he returned east, and leased the coal-lands of his present works, then owned by the Saw-Mill Run Coal company, where up to the present time he has been actively engaged. He was a partner with the late George Marshall. Mr. Hartley was married in 1855 to Miss Margaret, daughter of Robert Marshall, of England, and following-named five children were born to them: Beecher M., now assistant superintendent of the coal-works; Charles, employed in his father's office in the city; Sadie, at home, and Lillie and Maggie, at school. Few men in the county have been more successful in business than Mr. Hartley. He and family are members of the Methodist Church; he is a republican.

William Conner Shaw, physician and surgeon, Pittsburgh, was born in Versailles township, this county, Feb. 7, 1846, son of William A. and Sarah Y. (Conner) Shaw, former of whom was born on the same farm July 6, 1809, the latter in Washington county, Pa. David and Jane Shaw, the grandparents of our subject, were natives of County Antrim, Ireland, and York county, Pa., respectively. David came to America when twelve years old with his parents, Samuel and Sarah (Lowery) Shaw, settling in Versailles township on a farm; here David and his wife lived and died, the former in 1844, aged seventy-two years, and the latter in 1866, aged one hundred and two years and twelve days. William A. Shaw was the youngest of six boys and three girls, and he and Mrs. Robert Carothers, of Patton township, are the only ones surviving. Rev. William, a United Presbyterian minister, and Margaret (Murdock) Conner were the maternal grandparents of Dr. Shaw. The subject of this memoir attended school in Versailles township and at Newell Institute. He then entered the sophomore class at Washington and Jefferson College in September, 1866, graduating in 1869; then read medicine with Dr. W. R. Hamilton, and entered Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City, where he graduated in 1872; then studied six months with a private tutor, passed the competitive examination, and entered Bellevue hospital as ambulance-surgeon, being advanced each six months until he became house-surgeon of the hospital. Leaving there in 1874, he accepted the position of clinical assistant to Prof. Stephen Smith, of the medical department of the University of New York, but changing his plans he resigned the hospital position Nov. 3, 1874, on Wylly avenue, Pittsburgh, where he has built up a large practice. He was physician to the Pittsburgh Free Dispensary from 1876 to 1882, becoming thereby a life member; physician to Mercy hospital from 1876 to 1878, inclusive; surgeon alternate to the Pennsylvania railroad from Jan. 1, 1877, to Jan. 1, 1880, and the same to the P., C. & St. L. R. 1876 to 1881; surgeon to Mercy hospital, 1878 to 1887, and at present is examining physician for six insurance companies, carries seventy-two thousand dollars life and ten thousand accident insurance. Dr. Shaw is a member of the Allegheny County and State Medical societies, and a fellow of the American Academy of Medicine and Society of Alumni of Bellevue hospital, of New York. Is a member of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, and has two life memberships in the Western Pennsylvania Exposition society.

Dr. Shaw married. Nov. 1, 1877, Martha M., daughter of J. C. Lewis (whose sketch appears elsewhere), and they had three children: Sadie L., Jennie E., and James Lewis, who died Oct. 11, 1883. Mrs. Shaw died suddenly of heart disease Oct. 24, 1887; her ailment was due to a severe attack of rheumatism when a schoolgirl, caused by falling through the ice on the old canal at Sharpsburg, then going to school with her wet clothes on and remaining there all day. She was a member of the First U. P. Church of Pittsburgh. The doctor is a member of the same church, and of its session since 1878. He is a republican, very active and useful to the party. He has written many articles for medical journals and local papers. Dr. Shaw, in an article to the Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette, dated May 19, and published May 29, 1887, first called public attention to the propriety of celebrating the centennial of the county, which was in September of the following year, and a few months later (October, 1887) the idea was advanced in the Chamber of Commerce by Mr. Morrison Foster, and adopted by the chamber.

Charles Schmitt, postmaster and merchant, Homestead, was born Jan. 15, 1858, in Baldwin township, this county, a son of Fred and Frances Schmitt. His parents were natives of Hessen, Germany, and had a family of seven children: John F., Rev. Joseph J., Charles, Frank, Ferdinand, Peter J. and Mary E. The family came to Homestead in 1879. Charles was reared and educated in Baldwin township, and early in life worked at mining, being for a short time employed in the Homestead steel mill. Later he engaged in the grocery business with Albert Mahler, whom he bought out in 1885, and has since conducted the business successfully. In January, 1886, he was appointed postmaster at Homestead, and he fills the office with ability. Politically he is a democrat. Mr. Schmitt married, in May, 1888, Sophia Schmid, a sister to Mark Schmid, a highly educated attorney at law of Pittsburgh.

James J. Shaw, of Bellevue, was born in that borough March 14, 1814, a son of James and Margaret (Pollock) Jack, who were born in Butler and Westmoreland counties, respectively. Andrew Jack, grandfather of James P., came from east of the mountains during the early part of the present century, settling at Jack's run, which was named after him, and here he built a gristmill and a store of goods. He was skipper of the steamer New Orleans (the first steamer on the Ohio, or built at Pittsburgh), which made her first voyage to New Orleans in 1811; he continued on the river for many years, making many trips to New Orleans and returning on foot. He died at Natchez, Miss., of yellow fever. James Jack, Sr., was in the dry-goods business for many years in Pittsburgh with Judge Davis. On one of his trips to New Orleans to buy goods he took his wife and child (our subject being then one year old) with him on a keelboat, but on arriving at New Orleans, just after the battle of Jan. 8, 1815, the English fleet held the river mouth and he was obliged to return to Pittsburgh. He, too, died of yellow fever on the lower Mississippi, when James P. was about five years old. The subject of these lines received a common-school education, and in 1832 went on the river as ship-carpenter. He then learned piloting and followed the river from Pittsburgh to St. Louis for twenty-four years. He was married to Sarah Kerr Graham, of Allegheny. Mr. Jack was a whig, voting for William Henry Harrison, and has since been a republican: he is a member of Kinley Lodge, No. 318, F. & A. M., R. B. Robert's Lodge, No. 530, I. O. O. F., and represented them at the grand lodge for about six years. Mr. Jack has a fine home and property, and is the oldest settler in Bellevue borough.

David Gilmore and W. Ross Foster, physicians, sons of David and Elizabeth Foster. Their grandfather, Alexander Foster, came from Ireland in 1790, locating in Washington county, Pa., and in 1832 came to this county, settling near McKeesport, where he resided until his death, which occurred in 1844. His widow survived him ten years. They had six sons and one daughter. The living are Alexander, Walter, William and David. David Foster was born in Washington county, Pa., in 1820, and came with his parents to this county in 1832. He was a carpenter by trade, which he followed until 1850, when he purchased a farm and turned his attention to agriculture. In 1887 he sold his entire real estate, and retired from active business. He married, in 1843, Elizabeth, daughter of Capt. Peter Ross (who was a son of Phillip Ross, a captain in Washington's army in the Revolution and first settler of Mansfield, Pa.) and Matilda (Elliott) Ross, and their children are Ross, who died in infancy; Matilda, wife of John A. Bell; David G.; George W. M.; Sarah E., wife of Rev. Cyrus W. Hatch; Maudeline, wife of W. H. Bailey; Carey Alexander, Walter Ross, and Mary E., wife of John S. Robb, Jr. Their parents are Dr. David and Matilda (Shaw) Foster. Their children are Dr. David Gilmore Foster was born in this county in 1852. He attended the Mansfield and Tuscawora academies, and is a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia, Pa. He received his diploma in 1875, settled in Crafton the same year and has since been a successful practitioner. He has been twice married; first in 1874 to Phoebe, daughter of Thaddeus and Phoebe Paul. By this union there was one child, Gilmore David, now fourteen years of age. Mrs. Foster died in 1879 at the age of twenty-six years. The doctor married, in 1881, Harriet, daughter of George R. and Mary Elliott Pearson, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and by this marriage two children have been born. Annie Elliott and Elizabeth Ross, who died Jan. 1, 1889. Dr. Foster has been a member of the Masonic fraternity since 1875; is a member of Allegheny County Medical society; has been a member of the Allegheny county republican committee for fifteen years, and was a delegate to the state convention that nominated Gen. Beaver for governor; has been member of the republican state. his wife, Sarah, is a descendant of Judge James Risher, and is a delegate to the national convention, held in New York in 1887, that formed the republican clubs of the National League; delegate to the national republican convention at Chicago, 1888; is a member of the R. A., the Golden Chain, the A. O. U. W., Heptasophs, the Jr. O. U. A. M., the Young Men's Tariff club of Pittsburgh, the Americus club of Pittsburgh, the Edwin Stanton club of Mansfield, and is surgeon for the Philadelphia Gas company, and consulting physician and surgeon of the Allegheny County Home; surgeon to 14th regiment N. G. Pa. He is a member of the Episcopal Church. His brother, Dr. W. Ross Foster, is a graduate of Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia, and is a partner with his brother in the practice of medicine.

He is a member of the Allegheny County Medical society, Golden Chain, Heptasophs, Jr. O. U. A. M., Young Men's Tariff club, the Americus Republican club. He is a very promising young physician.

J. B. NEEL, assistant cashier and teller First National Bank, Homestead; was born Dec. 11, 1837, in Mifflin township, a son of John F. Neel, whose grandfather, James, was a Scotchman, and one of the pioneers of this county, and who and his wife Rachel (McCulle) were members of Lebanon Presbyterian Church, and parents of nine children, viz.: Dorcas (born in 1775), John F., Jane, Thomas, Harvey J., Grizella, Reuben, Rachel and Hiram (born in 1789). Of these Harvey J., the grandfather of James B., was born Sept. 30, 1755, and was well known as a farmer, boatman, merchant and stockman. He was a staunch democrat, and was postmaster in Mifflin township for twenty-five years. He married Elizabeth Brierly, who became the mother of the following-named children: Jane J., John F., Robert B. and Hiram M. Of these John F. married Susannah K. Fosythe, who became the mother of James B. and died young. The subject of this sketch was educated in the public schools, attended St. Vincent's College a short time, and graduated at Duff's Commercial College in the class of 1878. He was teller in the First National Bank of McKeesport, for five years, and since Jan. 1, 1888, has been assistant cashier and teller in the First National Bank, Homestead. He married Sarah C. Risher, and has one child, S. Rebecca.

CHRISTIAN TRUNICK was born in Germany about 1770, and came to America at the age of twenty, settling in Allegheny county, Pa. Here he married Elizabeth Benny, and by her had eleven children: Elizabeth, Henry, James, Jane Eichbaum, Benny, William, John, Joseph, Nancy, Margaret, Mary. He continued to reside near Pittsburgh during his entire life, and died July 16, 1844, a man of quiet disposition and gentle manners. He was in early life employed at glassmaking, and was one of the first in that business at the O'Hara Glass-works, at south end of Point bridge. His children were examples of industry and frugality, and are yet living and active, all ranging between eighty and ninety-two years of age. Their mother was of Scotch-Irish parentage, and was endowed with great energy and force of will. She was the daughter of an officer in the English army, came to America in her youth, and received but little education. Her mother dying, her father again married and had a large family. One of his daughters married John Obey, a gentleman who was noted as a keeper of a popular house of entertainment at south end of Smithfield street bridge. She became the mother of the well-known Obey family. Mrs. Trunick, in her girlhood days, took au x and cleared five acres of timber-land, and received as pay for this work two tow-linen aprons and Robinson's map, where her father took up some land, and continued to reside until his death, as did also Mrs. Trunick. The latter's account of men and manners in those early days of deprivation and self-denial were very interesting. One of her daughters, Jane, married a gentleman named Reese, and by this union a large number of children were born, two of whom, James and Reuben, married two sisters, daughters of Mrs. John Obey, and reside at this date upon the old homestead of the Obey family, and are noted as men of force, energy and enterprise.

The descendants of these Trunicks are generous and hospitable, and as a family their lives have been even balanced and useful in the community, exceptionally free from criminality and viciousness, not one of them having ever been incarcerated for crime, or rendered himself a nuisance to the community. In the language of scripture, the descendants of the Trunick family rise up and call their grandmother and mother blessed—a tribute alike to her sterling integrity, moral worth, common sense and kindness of heart.

JAMES R. MULLETT, captain and editor, Homestead, was born in Kent, England, the son of William and Charlotte (Harvey) Mullett, natives of the above-named county. They removed to Adelaide, Australia, and there James R. was reared. He had no educational advantages, and began his business career by selling newspapers, then clerked for four years, and at the age of eighteen went to sea, coasting near Australia; then sailed between England and Australia, and later went to San Francisco, where he located in 1877. There he bought a vessel and began the capture of marine and other animals for show purposes, at which he was very successful. In 1882 he went to Manitoba, where he speculated in land, embarked in the hotel business and lost a fortune. In 1884 he came to Allegheny City, where he attempted to establish a zoological garden, which, however, proved a failure. The following year he built three skating-rinks, two in Pittsburgh and one in Allegheny City, and engaged also in auctioneering. Through his untiring efforts a postoffice was established on the South Side, Pittsburgh, and one in Temperanceville, Pittsburgh, and also nu-erous stamp sale stations, which are a great accommodation to the public. In July, 1886, he came to Homestead, where he engaged extensively in the real-estate business, and now edits the Eagle, a spicy weekly. Capt.
Mullet married, in Pittsburgh, Mrs. Margaret Foulkes, nee Tweddle, a native of England.
He is a member of the I. O. H., and was forermly an active member of many other friendly societies, including the Freemasons, Odd-Fellows and Foresters.

THOMAS H. HALEY, retired, postoffice Chapman's, son of Thomas H. Haley, Sr., was born in Ireland in 1819, came with his parents to America in 1829, and they settled in this county. His parents had eleven children, two of whom died in Ireland; his mother died on the way to this country. The children that came to this country were Patience (deceased), William O., Jane (deceased),
George (deceased), Mary, Catharine, Francis, Amelia, Elizabeth and Thomas H. The father of these children died in 1854 on the place where Thomas H. and his three maiden sisters reside, in Stowe township. They have a very desirable home, having seven and a half acres of land. Their parents were memers of the Episcopal Church, but the family are at this time members of the Presbyterian Church, in which Thomas H. is an elder.

D. R. JONES, Esq., postoffice Homestead, Pa., was born on a farm, near the city of Swanse, Wales, on March 17, 1833. He came to this county when a mere lad, worked in and about the anthracite mines at Wilkes-barre, Pa., first as laborer, then as underground hoisting engineer. In 1874 he left the mines and entered Mount Union College, Stark county, Ohio, supporting himself there with what money he had saved from his earnings, and by teaching school in winter.
He graduated in 1878, came to Pittsburgh to study law; served four years as the chief executive officer of the Pittsburgh Miners' association; was admitted to the Allegheny county (Pa.) bar in 1883, and has since been practicing law there. He was elected burgess of Homestead two terms, and on Nov.
6, 1888, was elected a member of the house of representatives of Pennsylvania from the Sixth district of Allegheny county.

BOYD PATTERSON, farmer, postoffice Dravosburg, is a great-grandson of Nathaniel Patterson, of Scotch-Irish descent, who came from Campbell county, Va., married Elizabeth Bell, and, removing to this county, settled in Millfin township. They attended Lebanon church, and there both died. Their children are Andrew, Thomas B., Hon.
James, and Ellen, who married Samuel Cunningham, the father of "Squire Cunningham.
Of these Hon. James Patterson was born in Virginia, and married Catharine, a daughter of Joseph and Mary A. (McConneley) Livington, natives of Ireland. He came to Allegheny county, where he farmed, but returned to Virginia on account of the Indians. He was a prohibitionist and a democrat; was revenue collector of the Seventeenth district from 1814 to 1825. In 1826 was a member of the legislature; in 1828 was re-elected, and for several years was colonel of the militia; was justice of the peace, and filled other township offices, and was a member of Lebaon Church. His children were James T., Hon. Livingston B., Cornelius D., Mary, Eliza (who died young) and Elinor, wife of Dr. J. F. Wilson, who was a native of this county, but is now deceased. Hon. Livingston B. was educated here, and became civil engineer. In the winter of 1855-56 he was elected to the legislature, and filled the office of justice of the peace for thirty years, until his death. He was a member of Lebaon Presbyterian Church. His wife was Mary J., daughter of Benjamin Butler, and their union was blessed with one son, Boyd Patterson, who was born Dec. 25, 1856. He was educated at the State Normal school, and married Emma, daughter of William Butler.
They have two children, Robert and Mary J.
Mr. and Mrs. Patterson are members of the Presbyterian Church; he is a democrat. He now occupies the old farm.

LOUIS LENKNER, retired, Brushton station, was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1816.
He learned ropemaking, and when twenty-four years old came to Pittsburgh. Some time thereafter his parents, George and Margaret (Hut) Lenkner, followed him to that city, where they died. Two years after his arrival Mr. Lenkner established a rope-factory in Pittsburgh, which he operated successfully for thirty years, but had to abandon it in 1872, owing to a stroke of paralysis which disabled his left hand. He took up his residence at Brushton, where he put up a house, before the Pennsylvania railroad was built, and thus seen a small village grow up around him. He is a member of the Lutheran Church at East Liberty; politically a republican. Mr. Lenkner has been twice married.
His first wife, nee Jeanette Obermaw, was the mother of six children, three of whom are living: George, living near Allegheny City; Sophie (Mrs. John Rabb), in Pittsburgh; and Josephine. The second wife, nee Karina Vockel, is also the mother of six children: Annie (wife of Max Rasch), and Mina (Mrs. Charles Paul), who reside in the east end of Pittsburgh, and Charles, Louise, Her-am and Katie, at home. Charles is established at Brushton in the grocery business, which he opened out Aug. 1, 1888.

THOMAS H.: DRENKEN, retired, postoffice
Elizabeth, is a grandson of Thomas Drencken, a native of Germany, who came to America about 1770, and settled in what is now Elizabeth township, in this county. His wife was Isabella Moore, a native of Southern Pennsylvania. He followed agricultural pursuits, and lived on the farm where he first settled.
until his death, in 1840. He left a family of two sons and five daughters, all of whom are dead. William Moore Drenn was the youngest of the family and the father of our subject. He was born in the homestead, which he inherited at his father's death, and where he reared and lived the life of a farmer until his death, in 1857. In 1827 he was married to Margaret, daughter of David and Martha (Wiseby) Pollock, of this township, who died Oct. 7, 1882. They left four daughters and one son: Martha, Isabella J. (Mrs. Thomas Ferguson) of this town; Esther M. (Mrs. David Pierce), of Crawford county; Emily D., a maiden lady living on the homestead, and Thomas H., who was the second child, and who was born Dec. 17, 1830, on the homestead, where he was reared and where he received the benefit of the public schools. Mr. Drennan has always lived at the homestead until about three years ago, when he purchased the gristmill in the borough, and after being engaged there about two years, he sold the same and retired to this life still retaining his farm, which he manages. In 1876 he was married to Miss Elizabeth J., daughter of John and Isabella (Lisle) White, of Washington county. He is a member of the U. P. Church of this borough, and his wife is a member of the O. S. P. Church. They have no children.

James West, retired, East Liberty, is a native of Killaloe, County Offalcon, Ireland, and came to Allegheny county when seventeen years old. His parents, Thomas and Jane (Dunn) West, lived on a farm, and gave the son a good common-school education. Three brothers besides himself are residents of this county, and all are prosperous. Another brother is a resident of Liverpool, England. The subject of this memoir was employed for a time at farm labor, and kept store two years in Allegheny City. He then bought a farm near Latrobe, and tilled it for eighteen years with marked success. In April, 1876, he took up his residence at Brushton, where by building and purchasing he has become the owner of twelve houses and other property. In 1833 Mr. West married Mary Jane Fleming, who died in 1860, leaving a daughter, Mary Jane, now wife of Albert Herron, a dairyman near Bucyrus, Ohio. In 1833 Mr. West married Susan, nee Porbes, who is also the mother of one daughter, Maggie, wife of Oscar Mowery, a ticket-examiner, Union station, Pittsburgh, and a resident of Brushton. Mr. and Mrs. West attend the M. E. Church at Homewood; he is a republican.

Andrew Fife (deceased) was born in Upper St. Clair township, in this county, July 1, 1790. His ancestors were among the early pioneers of the county. The grandfather settled on the farm where Andrew and his father were born. Andrew was a soldier in the war of 1812. In 1814 he was married to Sarah Henry, who died a few years later, leaving two children—William and Sarah, both of whom are dead. His second marriage occurred in 1819, with Sarah, daughter of Thomas and Margaret (Patterson) Robinson, of Westmoreland county. He died October 8, 1879, and his widow on Christmas day, 1880. Their children are: (1) Margaret, whose name is known; (2) Elizabeth, who married James Humes; (3) Samuel, who married Sarah, daughter of Thomas, and Margaret (Patterson) Robinson, of Westmoreland county; (4) Andrew, who married Margaret (Mrs. William Peterson), of West Elizabeth township; (5) Martha (Mrs. Andrew McKinley), of this township; (6) Mary (Mrs. Levi Edmondson), of Lincoln township; (7) John and Matthew D. The living are Andrew, of California; Samuel R., M. D., of West Elizabeth; Rev. N. H. G., of Sterling, Ill.; Margaret (Mrs. Joseph Pearis), of this township, and Clara, who has lived in the borough since the death of her father. Mr. Fife held the office of elder in the Presbyterian Church over sixty years.

Andrew McKinley, farmer, postoffice Elizabeth, is a son of Andrew and Barbara (Reed) McKinley, natives of Ireland, who immigrated to this country in 1792, and first settled in Chester county, Md. After two years' residence there they removed to this county, locating near the mouth of the Kentucky river, and from there removed to what is now Lincoln township, near McKeeplesport. In 1817 they purchased the farm now owned by our subject, where they lived until their deaths. The mother died in 1842, and the father in 1844. They had six daughters and three sons, all of whom are dead except Andrew, Jr., who was the youngest of the family, and who was born in 1811, on what is now known as the Calhoun farm, above McKeeplesport. He was educated at the public schools of the county. In 1837 he was married to Maria, daughter of Zachary Wilson, of this county. She died in 1847, leaving four children, one of whom is still living, Andrew, of Forward township. Mr. McKinley's second wife was Martha J., daughter of Andrew Fife, of Elizabeth township. She died May 10, 1863, leaving four children: John G., a merchant of Monongahela City; George, at home; Clara M., now Mrs. Frank Haney, of McKeeplesport; Noah F.; Belle, now Mrs. Charles Wiley, of McKeeplesport. The third wife of Mr. McKinley is Mary E., daughter of Michael Ventress, of Elizabeth. Mr. McKinley held the office of auditor of the township for many years, and was engaged as general agent for D. M. Osborne & Co., of Auburn, N. Y., for Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia for many years; also for George L. Squiers & Co., of Buffalo, N. Y. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church of West Elizabeth.

F. N. Humes, gas-driller, Tarentum, a son of James and Mary (Negley) Humes, was born in what is now West Tarentum, in 1834. His grandfather Humes was a resident of Westmoreland county, Pa., and a soldier in the war of the Revolution. His grandfather Negley was one of the first settlers in this part of Allegheny county. James Humes, father of F. N., was a native of Westmoreland county, and Mary Humes, the mother of our subject, of Allegheny county. After their marriage the parents located on second farm below Bull creek, in what is now Tarentum borough. They, however, sold the farm and purchased a place on the hillside above the creek, where they both died. James was twice married, and his first wife died leaving two children: John V. of West Tarentum, and Mary, the late Mrs. Powers. The children of James and Mary (Negley) Humes were: F., S. Christian, now Mrs. Welling Marvin, of Tarentum; Thomas and Alexander (twins), the latter now deceased; James, now in Iowa; George, near New Castle; Robert, at West Newton; William H., in West Tarentum; Ruth E., now Mrs. McConnell, of Allegheny City; Nancy Jane, now Mrs. E. C. Miller, of Ohio; Frank V., of Allegheny City, and Smith K., of Beaver Falls. The father's house was near the fault of the place left there and settled in this county. He purchased 350 acres of land from Gen. Hand, which has remained in the Scully family since, and upon which is the quite noted Scully mineral spring. He married Mary Donivan, by whom he had fifteen children, of whom Cornelius is the only survivor. Mr. Scully was a member of the peace over thirty years, and died in 1837, at the age of seventy years, a member of the Episcopal Church; his widow died in 1839, at the age of sixty-eight years, a member of the Catholic Church. Cornelius Scully married, Oct. 28, 1842, Matilda, daughter of Samuel and Isabella Duff, of this county, and to them were born John S., now cashier of the Diamond National Bank, Pittsburgh; William J., Mary (wife of Amos Petrie). Samuel D., Isabella (wife of John T. Negley), Henry D., Almira, Cornelius, Julia (deceased), Louisa and James B. Mr. Scully owns seventy-five acres of the old homestead, which is in a very high state of cultivation, some twenty acres being in choice fruit. He has a very fine collection of Indian relics found on his farm. He has served as school director over thirty years, and is one of Chartiers township's most respected citizens.

Rev. George N. Johnston, postoffice Camden, was born March 31, 1855, in Hancock county, W. Va. The Johnston family are descended from Oliver Cromwell, "The Protector." John, his grandfather, was a captain in the Revolutionary War, and his father, Robert, was a colonel in the War of 1812. He married Bridget, wife of Gen. Fleetwood, and from that country the great-great-grandfather Johnston emigrated to New Jersey, afterward settling in the Juniata valley. In 1792 the family came to the vicinity of Pittsburgh, eight years later removed to Beaver county, and in 1828 they settled in West Virginia. James Johnston, a son of Robert, and grandfather of our subject, the eldest, served as justice of the peace over thirty years, and became the father of eight children: Isabel, Jane, Smiley, George B., Rev. Robert, Eliza, Margaret and Rev. Mervin. Of these George B. married Evelyn Shannon, and they had ten children, viz.: Caroline, Sarah, Watson, Rev. George N., Col. Robert, Eliza, Harriet, Laurinda, Minerva and Ella.

Rev. George N. Johnston was educated in the academy ofWheeling, and taught school at Marietta, Ohio, graduated at Washington College in 1858, attended the Northwestern Seminary, Chicago, and Western Theological Seminary, graduating from the latter in the class of 1861. He was ordained by the Beaver presbytery (now Mahoning), and preached with marked success at Knoxville, Ill., New Lis-Evelyn, the son of Mrs. Esteemed, his son where Pennsylvania, which John, and Ann children, he members and these ains, again James and Emma, and Nathan, and the father, Nathan, located in 1809. The latter, who was a son of John and Martha (Ramsey) Means, was born in Dauphin county, Pa., in 1784; came to Allegheny county with his mother, and died in 1881. John Means died at Paxton, Dauphin county, and his widow, a woman of much ability, and of Scotch-Irish descent, came west with her six children—Nancy, Jane, Nathan, John, James and Joseph M. Mrs. Means died in 1851, aged sixty-nine years. Her son Nathan learned the tanner's trade east of the mountains, and followed it until 1833, since when he has farmed. He married Elizabeth Cochran, and to them were born seven children, viz.: John A., Samuel C., Andrew S., Elvira A., Martha M., James and Robert S. Of these James married Margaret G., daughter of Henry Fulton, and they have six children—George K., Nathan A., William C., Martha J. and Nannie E. and Maggie L. (twins). Henry F. graduated at Washington College and Allegheny Seminary in the class of 1887, and is now preaching in West Fairfield, Pa. Nathan A. graduated at Washington College in the class of 1885, and is now practicing law in Pittsburgh. Mr. and Mrs. Means are members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he is a member of session; politically he is a republican.

Robert L. Kirkwood, merchant, McKee's Rocks, son of Robert and Hannah E. Kirkwood, was born in Iowa in 1858. His grandfather, Andrew Kirkwood, came from Paisley, Scotland, to America in 1817. He was the first Kirkwood to cross the mountains of Pennsylvania, and settled in Pittsburgh, where he resided the rest of his life, engaged in keeping a boatstore. He died in 1864, at the age of seventy-seven years, leaving nine children, only one of whom is now living, Ann Kirkwood. His son Robert was born Aug. 25, 1824, in Pittsburgh; was educated for an artist and followed that profession through life, painting portraits and landscapes. He married, in 1851, Hannah E. Betker, of Baltimore, Md., and their children were Andrew B. (deceased), John McClelland, William J., Robert L., Eliza T. (wife of R. H. Brown) and Annie R. The father died March 28, 1892, aged fifty-eight years; the mother in 1890 at the age of thirty-eight. Their son Robert L., was married Feb. 28, 1885, to Marie E., daughter of Robert and Eleanor Thompson, of Allegheny City, and two children have been born to them—Elinor S. and Robert B. Mr. Kirkwood has always been in the hardware business, and in April, 1888, he commenced in that line for himself at McKee's Rocks, where he has a full stock of hardware and house-furnishing goods.

Miles Bryan, justice of the peace, post-office McKee's Rocks, son of James and Mary A. Bryan, was born in 1858, in Stowe township, this county. His father, a native of Ireland, came to this country in 1850, and engaged in peddling in Allegheny and Beaver counties for four years. During that time he saved sufficient to purchase a little home and start a grocery and country tavern, in which business he continued until his death in 1877, when he was fifty-six years of age; his widow still continues the business and keeps the Chartiers postoffice. His first stock of goods was stolen from him almost as soon as he put it in the store, by robbers, who, at night, loaded up the goods and hauled them away without ever being detected; but he borrowed money, laid in a new stock, and went on with the business. At that time his was the only store and tavern between Pittsburgh and Beaver. Mr. and Mrs. Bryan were parents of ten children, of whom those living are Miles, John, Frank, Thomas, Mary, Laurence and Jane. Miles Bryan was married May 12, 1887, to Laura Kirch, of Ross township. He was elected justice of the peace in 1888, and re-elected in 1887, and was the youngest Justice in the county. He also holds a position in the office of the clerk of courts.

Caleb Lee, Jr., retired, post-office Plum, a son of Caleb and Margaret W. (Skelton) Lee, was born in Pittsburgh in 1827. He attended the public schools and the old university of his native city, and at the age of fifteen entered his father's store and learned the tailor's trade. He was then employed in the store until his father retired, in 1851, at which time he and his brother John succeeded him in the business under the firm name of John S. & C. Lee, Jr. Five years later, owing to Mr. Lee's falling health, he was obliged to move to the country, and came to Plum township, where he farmed fifteen years. He then removed to his present home at Fulton Station. He has been a member of the Verona council, but his health prevents his taking part in any active business life. In 1852 he wedded Mary, daughter of Robert Knox, the well-known confectioner of Pittsburgh, who died a few months after marriage. Mrs. Lee was born in 1832, in Pittsburgh, and lived most of the time on Fourth avenue. Two children blessed this union—Robert Knox, who died in 1876, and Jennie, wife of Harry Paul, of Hulton station.

James Graham (deceased). It was prior to the Revolution that the Graham family emigrated from Ireland and settled in Eastern and Southern Pennsylvania. Rev. James Graham, a graduate of Dickinson College, came to Allegheny county in 1804, and became the owner of 290 acres of land. He succeeded Rev. Samuel Barr, who was the first pastor of the Beulah Presbyterian Church, in Wilkins township, and the first church in Pittsburgh. Rev. Graham continued in charge of Beulah Church forty years. He married Elizabeth Martin, of Juniata county, Pa., and six children were born to them. She died when her children were young, and he married Rebecca Graham, of Turtle Creek, who had two daughters. James was among the youngest of this family, and was born in 1812 on the farm purchased by his father, and where he lived and died. James, Jr., was a farmer, and the property, being richly underlaid with limestone, was called and is now known as Lime hill. For six years he was engaged in burning lime, which was a profitable occupation. He owned 200 acres of the original tract. He married Eliza Macfarlane, daughter of John F. Macfarlane, of Adams county, Pa., and great-granddaughter of Andrew Macfarlane, who died in the revolutionary war. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. James Graham, whose names are Margaret, Elizabeth, Evaline, and Margaretta. In politics Mr. Graham was a Whig. He died seven years after he was married, and for forty years his widow has managed the farm and business to the best advantage for her family. They have been lifelong members of the Presbyterian Church.

Elmer E. Briggs, M. D., postoffice Pittsburgh, was born June 11, 1861. His grandparents, William and Ann (Indie) Briggs, were natives of Yorkshire, England, and came to America in an early day. William was a man of means and education, and of a well-known family in England. He crossed the Atlantic seven times. He owned the old McClung farm at Brownstown, and died at Webster, aged over eighty years. He was the father of five children: Thomas, Charles, John, Frederick and Martin. Of these John and Charles were pilots, and both were drowned. Martin Briggs was a carpenter by trade, but engaged in the coal business, and represented the southern coal trade in New Orleans. He married Caroline S., daughter of Nicholas Snyder, a native of Germany. She was born in Wilkesbarre, Pa., and has borne her husband four children: Mrs. Julia A. Painter, of San Francisco, Cal.; William H., Elmer E., M. D., and Herron G., M. D. Elmer E. received his primary education in the schools of Pittsburgh, graduated at the Western University, and took the degree of Ph. M. He read medicine with Dr. John C. Brewer, and attended one course of lectures in the medical department at the University of Michigan, and two courses of lectures at the homeopathic college, New York, graduating in the class of 1883. He located in Pittsburgh, and practiced one year; then for one year was resident physician and surgeon of the homeopathic hospital of that city, where he has since practiced. Dr. Briggs married, in the year 1885, Florence Taylor, only daughter of Col. S. B. Taylor, of 62d regiment Ohio Volunteers, who was killed during the late rebellion, and they have one daughter, Hazel Frances, born June 22, 1887.

Dr. Herron G. Briggs was born Nov. 11, 1864, received the degree of Ph. M. at Western University, and afterward took a course in medicine at Marshall College, Chicago; then entered the homeopathic hospital at Pittsburgh as resident physician and surgeon, where he remained one year; afterward, in fall of 1888, he located in the Thirty-second ward, Pittsburgh, Pa.

William M. Grace, retired, 194 Steuben street, Thirty-sixth ward, Pittsburgh, is a son of Nimrod B. and Mary A. (McCulley) Grace, born in 1819, in Pittsburgh, Pa. His grandfather, John Grace, came from Maryland to this county about the year 1800, and settled at Squirrel Hill. His children were as follows: Nimrod B., born Feb. 9, 1789; William, born Jan. 7, 1791; John, born July 12, 1793; Nancy, born Oct. 5, 1796; Bennett, born Nov. 17, 1797; Elizabeth, born April 14, 1800; Priscilla, born July 4, 1802; Burchfield, born Dec. 1, 1804; Aquilla, born Aug. 18, 1807, and Mileah, born Oct. 8, 1809, all deceased except Elizabeth, who now resides in Mercer county, Pa. Nimrod B. Grace and Mary A. McCulley were married Nov. 11, 1813, and were blessed with following named children: Rebecca, John B., Priscilla B., William M., Mary A., Ellen B., Martha Z., James B., George E., Catherine M., Nelson K., Charles W. and Samuel H. The father died Nov. 1, 1851, and the mother July 7, 1877. He served in the war of 1812 under Gen. Harrison; was wounded, and drew a pension from 1836 until his decease. William M. Grace has been twice married; first, Nov. 3, 1853, to Olivia Daft, who bore him one child, which died in infancy; this wife died Nov. 26, 1854, and Mr. Grace next married, March 29, 1859, Mrs. Mary E. Lorenz, who also bore him one child, Mary Frances, who died at the age of fifteen months.

Mr. Grace learned glassblowing, which he followed seven years. In 1844 he took charge of the glass firm of William McCulley & Co., and from 1851 to 1860 was with the firm (McCulley) at the Silgo Glass Works. In the fall of 1860 he became a partner of B. L. Palmstock and Robert C. Albree, in which he con-continued until 1872. In 1874 he went to St. Louis, built a glass-factory for the St. Louis French Window-Glass Co., and with them he remained one year, when, in consequence of ill health, he retired from business and returned to the old Lorenz homestead, in Chartiers township, which he had purchased in 1863. He served as school director and secretary of the school board, and is now justice of the peace. Mr. Grace's father and grandmother McCulley came from Ireland to this country in 1800. They crossed the mountains in an ox-cart, and on the journey, one of the oxen dying, they put a cow in its place and came on. The grandmother was noted as a spinner of flax and maker of linen, and by her industry and economy saved money enough to purchase five hundred acres of land, at Jack's run, called the Three Bullets, and they hold the patent.

John Schmid, retired, postoffice McKee's Rocks, son of George and Barbara Schmid, was born in Germany in 1828; came to this country in 1831, locating in Allegheny, but in 1833 a removal was made. In 1854 returned to Allegheny. He was twice married; first, in Germany, in 1850, to Mary Petzer, and their children were Margaret and Mary; this wife died in 1854, and in 1855 Mr. Schmid married Mary Brown, of Allegheny City, and by this marriage there have been born thirteen children: William G., John George, Annie (deceased), Paulina (wife of James Calp), John, Albert, Mary, Henry, Katie, Charlie (deceased), Daniel, Edward (deceased) and Carrie (deceased). Mr. Schmid came to this country with a little fortune of twenty-four hundred dollars, but the years 1853 and 1854 were times of trial and financial loss, on account of sickness in his family and the death of his wife, his removal to Ohio and his subsequent return to Allegheny, and in these years his second wife he started without a dollar, but by the most rigid economy soon secured a home, paying the first ten dollars he could possibly spare on a lot, on which he soon erected a house. One of his friends owning a lot adjoining proposed to trade a part of his for a part of Mr. Schmid's. The latter, seeing it would give a better place to erect another building, was willing to trade, but his friend also wanted some money, which Mr. Schmid did not have. After some parley he traded, giving a loaf of bread to boot. Mr. Schmid is now the owner of one hundred acres of valuable land in Stowe township and eight acres at McKee's Rocks, for which he paid twelve thousand dollars; is selling some of his building-lots. On this property he has a very fine stone-quarry. He also owns a business-house on Chartiers avenue, Stowe township, and seven dwellings-houses in Chartiers township.

Hon. Henry Large, retired, postoffice Cosgrove, was born Dec. 26, 1798, in St. Clair township, Allegheny county, Pa. His paternal grandfather, a native of New Jersey, and of French descent, was an enthusiastic patriot, and aided the colonies. He was a shoemaker, but also owned a farm, which he sold for four thousand dollars in continental money, which was worthless. He had three children: Jonathan, John and Mrs. Tracy. He located in Elizabeth township, and died there; his widow then came to her son, John Large, and died there aged one hundred and two years. John Large married Nancy, daughter of Henry Low, and in 1810 came to Milftin township, where he bought a farm which now contains 167 acres. He and his wife had eight children, viz.: Jonathan, Samuel, Henry, Isaac, Thomas, Mrs. Hannah Livingston, Mrs. Nancy Livingston and Mrs. Margaret Patterson. Of these Henry, who now owns the farm, married Jane, daughter of Col. Joel Ferree, who fought under Gen. Harrison in the war of 1812. Mrs. Large died March 28, 1885, aged over eighty years, the mother of seven children: John (who was captain in Co. C, 102d P. V., and was killed at the battle of Shielin Heights), Mrs. Christina Hay, Joel P., Mrs. Amanda, Col. Mrs. Nancy J. Forseyre, Henry L. and Elizabeth (widow of John Gordon, who died March 30, 1888). Mrs. Gordon has six children: Mrs. Jennie McGowan, David B., John L., Willie H., Ella H. and Charlie A. The subject of this memoir learned the sickle- and scythe-maker's trade with Adam Coon, and in 1854 he had 225 dozen on hand, which were of little value, yet constituted all his wealth. He is a natural mechanic, and made boilers, engines for distilleries and mills, in Williamsport and Milftin township. Politically he is a republcan; for two years he was justice of the peace, and was elected to the house of representatives in 1848. He passed several important measures through the house, and won distinction for his able addresses. In 1848 he was re-elected, and in his time was on the committee of claims. For fourteen years he was captain of the Union Artillery company. He has been an elder of the Lebanon Presbyterian Church for many years.

Samuel Henning, farmer, postoffice Wil-kingsburg, was born in Allegheny county, in 1811. His father, John Henning, came to Allegheny county from Ireland in 1801, purchased 147 acres of land in Wilkins township, and there resided until his death, in 1813, at the age of seventy-two. He was by trade a linen-weaver, which he followed in Ireland. This pioneer married Matilda Gill, and two children blessed their union. Mrs. Henning died April 8, 1813. Our subject is the only member of the family now living, was educated at the common schools, and has always followed farming. He married, in 1841, Elizabeth Ann Dodds, of Butler county, Pa. Ten children, nine living, were born to Mr. and Mrs. Henning: Matilda Jane, John D., Ann E., Matthew Henry, Mary Margaret, Josiah Francis, Melissa Bell (married), Olivia Martha and EmaLINE. Of these John D. is married and has two children; Ann E., marmied, has five children, and Matthew Henry, married, has three children. The family are members of the R. P. Church; Mr. Henning is a republican.

P. S. Pollock, retired, postoffice Carrick, was born in February, 1836, in Pittsburgh, Pa. His paternal grandfather, a native of New Jersey, settled on Beaver river, in Beaver county, Pa., and became a wealthy farmer. Here David Pollock, the father of P. S., was born; he was a gunsmith by trade, but later in life a miller for forty years in the John Brawdy mill, on Saw-Mill run. When his children had grown to maturity he sold the property; he died in New Castle, Pa., a leading member of the Concord Church, politically a Whig. His wife, nee Elizabeth Barkley, bore him six children: Joseph, John, Peter S., Silas, Alvey and Mary. P. S. Pollock learned the millwright's trade, and followed it for fifteen years. He married Mrs. Agnes Brawdy, nee Aber, a daughter of Jacob Aber, an old settler. Mr. and Mrs. Pollock are members of the Presbyterian Church. He was a leading member of the Concord Church, politically a Whig.

ROBERT S. STEWART, M. D., Buena Vista, is a native of Washington county, Pa. His parents were John W. and Jane (McCall) Stewart. He was born in 1857, reared in Washington county, and received his education at Ann Arbor University, and graduated from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania in 1880. He commenced the practice of his profession at West Middletown, Washington county, and in 1871 located at Buena Vista, where he has since resided. His wife was Harriet A., daughter of Ezekiel and Elizabeth (Wiley) Davis, of Washington county. They have no children. In 1865 he enlisted in the 23d P. C., Co. C., and served until the close of the war. He has held several local offices. He and wife are members of the U. P. Church of Buena Vista.

A. H. BURKET, physician, postoffice McKee's Rocks, son of David and Elizabeth Burkett, was born in Washington county, Pa., in 1847. In that county David passed most of his life in farming, teaching and surveying. He married Elizabeth Hess, of that county, and their children were John H. (a physician of twenty years' practice), A. H., Lydia (who married, in 1870, James Provost, of this county; she died in 1873, her husband about two years afterward), Mary A., wife of Harvey Williams; she died leaving a son, who resides in Monongahela City, Pa., and a daughter, Lizzie Rose Etta, who died at the age of four years, and an infant daughter unnamed. The father of this family died Nov. 29, 1883, at the age of eighty years; his widow now resides with Dr. Burkett, in Stowe township, aged seventy-eight years. Dr. Burkett was reared on a farm, but determined early in life to obtain an education. In addition to the common schools he attended Hoge's Summit and other academies, studied medicine and graduated at the Miami Medical College of Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1877. He thence came to Stowe township, where he has since continued to practice his profession, and has made an enviable reputation as a practitioner. He married, Oct. 11, 1878, Mary J., daughter of Henry and Martha Bruce, of this county, and they have one child—Blanche E. The doctor is a member of the Allegheny County Medical Society; he is an adherent of the M. E. Church.

WILLIAM WILCOX, mining engineer, P. O. Putnam, was born in England in 1830, a son of John and Margaret (Bailey) Wilcox, also of England. John Wilcox, who was a railroad laborer, died in 1832, aged twenty-eight years. Born to him and his wife were seven children, of whom William is the youngest. He was educated at the common schools of England, and in 1858 came to America and located in Kentucky, where he remained two years as superintendent of the Reverdy Coal company. In 1860 he came to Pittsburgh, and same year returned to England, where he remained three years, engaged as mine superintendent. Mr. Wilcox is a practical miner, being thoroughly familiar with bituminous coal-fields. He has been for many years employed by the government as mine inspector for seven counties in Pennsylvania. His whole life has been spent in this work, and the many prominent positions of trust held by him from the many important coal and coke companies indicate conclusively that he is competent and skilled in that capacity. He has resided in Chartiers borough for several years, and has held many of the borough offices. He is a Mason, a member of the Sovereigns of Industry, also of the Presbyterian Church; he is a republican.

JOHN M. BYERS, civil engineer, P. O. Pittsburgh, was born in Selin's Grove, Snyder county, Pa. His father, Joseph Byers, was born at Lewes, Del., in 1808, and was the son of John and Harriet (Webb) Byers, of Lewes, Del., and grandson of Dr. John and (Edwards) Byers, of Pennsylvania. John A. Byers, brother of Joseph Byers, was born at Lewes, Del., Sept. 15, 1806. John A. Byers and Joseph Byers were civil engineers, and were engaged as early as 1826 in the most important inland navigation works in Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia. The last work of importance performed by Joseph A. Byers was the surveys of the James River and Kanawha canal. The books which contained his surveys of this improvement were so remarkably accurate that copies of them were purchased after his death by the U. S. government, for the further prosecution of the work. Joseph Byers, for a number of years, was in charge of important engineering work on the Pennsylvania railroad; died Dec. 16, 1854. Sons of Joseph Byers were as follows:

John M. Byers, since 1848, has been connected with railroad building in Pennsylvania. In April, 1871, he was appointed chief engineer of the Pittsburgh, Virlgilia & Charleston railway, and was engineer and superintendent of the line until completed, in 1881. Since then he has been in charge of locating and constructing work for the Pennsylvania railroad up to this time. Charles E. Byers was the valued chief engineer of the Reading railroad until his death. Joseph Byers, Jr., was an engineer of much experience; died in the United States of Colombia, S. A. Ellwood Byers is in the service of the Reading railroad; Robert Byers died in the three-months service of the Union army; Walter P. Byers is in the service of the Reading railroad; Henry W. Byers is engineer of maintenance of road - Pennsylvania company, at Lawrence Junction.

Our subject married Carrie Mann Lewis, who has borne him three children, viz.: Mortou Lewis Byers, Mary F. and Maxwell. Of these the eldest is a graduate of Lehigh University, class of 1885, and is now an assistant engineer in the service of the Pennsylvania company. The mother of John M. Byers Jane (Peplow) Byers, died Oct. 13, 1888, in her seventy-sixth year.

John F. Humes, real-estate and collection agent, Tarentum, a son of John and Elizabeth Humes, was born in Westmoreland county, Pa., in 1831, of which county his parents were also natives. Their children were William P. (deceased), James G., John F., Thomas M., Mary Jane and Jeremiah W. (deceased). John F. remained at home until nearly fifteen years of age, when he became engaged as teacher at Riddle's schoolhouse, on the northern turnpike, one and a half miles west of New Salem, Westmoreland county. He taught during summers and attended school winters for a time, eventually reversing the order by teaching in winter and studying in summer. He received his education at Elder's Ridge, New Derry and Latrobe academies, finally graduating at Duff's Commercial College. In 1863 Mr. Humes married Rachel M. Shields, of New Salem, Westmoreland county, who died in 1884, after a lingering illness of ten years. Mr. Humes, after his marriage, came to Tarentum, where he engaged in the drug trade for a period of ten years, and upon the organization of the Tarentum bank, in 1871, he was chosen its cashier, and also cashier of the First National Bank of Tarentum until 1885, in which year it went into voluntary liquidation. He then became identified with the business interests of the borough as real-estate and collection agent, which he still follows. Mr. Humes enjoys the confidence of the citizens of Tarentum, and has, from time to time, been called upon to accept positions of honor and trust. In 1886 he married Jennie W. Woodrow, of Fawn township. He has an adopted son named Harry S.

Leonard Kearns, retired, postoffice Mansfield Valley, was born in Temperanceville borough, Allegheny county, Pa., in 1815. His grandfather, James Kearns, came from Ireland to America about 1780, locating in Allegheny county, Pa., purchased two hundred acres of land, and followed farming. He had eleven children, three sons and eight daughters. Thomas, the second son, was born in 1788, and died in 1867. He married Rebecca Calley, and by her had fifteen children. He was a farmer, and owned a part of the property which his father purchased. Leonard Kearns, his eldest child, was born and reared on a farm. At the age of seventeen years he learned the trade of blacksmith, which he followed all his life. He came to Mansfield, and worked at one place for thirty-three years. In 1843 he married Roseanna, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Farley) Bol and they have two children: Elizaboth, now Mrs. S. H. Patterson, and Thomas J., who married Lizzie Walker, of Ireland. Mr. Kearns has retired from active work at the anvil, and his son now takes charge of the place where his father labored for thirty three years. Mr. Kearns is a member of the town council; of the Presbyterian Church; politically a republican.

Thomas McCoy, farmer, postoffice Chartiers, son of Thomas and Elizabeth McCoy, was born in 1841, on a part of the old family homestead, formerly owned by his grandfather, John McCoy, who came to Allegheny county, Pa., pior to 1800; owned and left to his children at his death 700 acres of land; was married to Sarah King, by whom he had five children—Mary, Elizabeth, William, Sarah and Thomas (all now deceased), and died from the effects of a kick of a horse; his widow died in 1831. Their son, Thomas, Sr., was born on the homestead in Stowe township, in 1808. He inherited one share of the farm, and followed agricultural pursuits all his life. He married, in 1827, Elizabeth (daughter of John and Mary Wilson), of this county, and they had eight children: Sarah K., John W., Robert, Nancy, William, Mary, Thomas and Jane; all living except Robert and Jane. William was in the 1st Maryland Cavalry during the civil war. Thomas McCoy, Jr., assisted in building the Union U. P. Church, of which he and his wife were members. He died in 1890, at the age of forty-two years; his widow is living with her son Thomas, still active and vigorous, at the advanced age of eighty-six years. Thomas McCoy, Jr., was reared on the old homestead, and received a good common-school education. He was married in 1875, to Isabella Cornwith, of Cincinnati, Ohio, daughter of Andrew and Margaret Cornwith, and he and his wife are members of the U. P. Church, Rev. J. A. Douthet, minister. They have four children: Bessie A., William J., Sarah J. (deceased) and Thomas W. Mr. McCoy has been school director fifteen years; was elected justice of the peace in 1884, for five years, and is at present assessor of Stowe township. He owns sixty-two acres of the old homestead, a house and lot at Chartiers, and some stock in Point bridge. He is a republican.

W. B. McCrea, farmer, postoffice Wilkinsburg, was born in 1840. His great-grandfather, William McCrea, in 1769 purchased some 400 acres of land in Allegheny county, and his son settled on it about 1780. He was of Irish parentage, a farmer, and erected.
in 1807, the stone house which is yet standing in a good state of preservation. He married Susan Bryson, of Cumberland Valley, and became the father of eight children. William, among the eldest, was born, in 1793, on the farm purchased by his father, where he was reared. Like his father, he was a farmer and general merchant. He married Liberty McKinney, of Franklin county, Pa., daughter of David McKinney, and three children were born to them, two of whom grew to maturity: Eleanor (Mrs. John W. Chalfant) and W. B. The latter was educated at Wilkinsburg Academy. He married, in 1867, Elizabeth Beatty, daughter of Samuel Beatty, of Washington county, Pa., and six children bless their union, four living: William B., Jr., Samuel B., Liberty McKinney and Nellie Chalfant. Our subject has always followed farming as an occupation. All the family are Presbyterians, and Mr. McCrea is a republican.

R. Woodford, retired, postoffice Carrick, was born July 20, 1835. His father, William Woodford, a native of England, was born March 23, 1792, and died May 13, 1877. He emigrated to America in 1822, and settled in Baldwin township, this county, where he farmed. He married Mrs. Jane Carr, neé Hockenberry, who died in 1871. He was an elder in the Concord Presbyterian Church; politically a republican. R. Woodford was educated in this county, and Dec. 10, 1858, married Mary A., daughter of George Burgess, a native of England. They have four children: George B., Walter L., Harvey E. and Laura L. Mr. and Mrs. Woodford are members of the Presbyterian Church.

William Osborne, M. D., Frank, is a son of John and Sarah (Abernathy) Osborne, of England. The father came to this country in 1851, and settled near Irwin station, in Westmoreland county, and remained until 1882, when he removed to Homestead, and has since resided there, retiring from the coal and mercantile business. Dr. Osborne was born in England in 1847, came to this country in 1862, and first worked as a coalminer, but afterward entered the Bennett Medical College, of Chicago, from which he graduated in 1882, and commenced the practice of his profession at Turtle Creek, but in the same year moved to his present location, and now enjoys a very lucrative practice. In 1868 he was married to Mary J. Percy, daughter of John and Margaret (Miller) Percy, natives of England, who located in Westmoreland county. They have six children living: Sara, Maggie, Francis A., Lizzie G., William and Elgar J. Dr. Osborne and family are members of the M. E. Church at Scott Haven. He is a member of Alleghopla Lodge, No. 375, F. & A. M.

Matthew T. McFadden, farmer, postoffice Chartiers, is a son of John and Rachel McFadden, and was born in 1852 on his father's homestead, in Stowe township. John McFadden was born in 1822, and married, Dec. 19, 1837, Rachel, daughter of William McCormick, of Allegheny county. He inherited his father's farm of four hundred acres, and at his death willed it to his widow, and at her death it was divided among the children. John and Rachel McFadden had ten children, six of whom are now living, viz.: William M., Mary A. (wife of Rev. Jonathan Tombes), Lewis A., John W., Matthew T. and Sarah J. (wife of Alexis Pendleton), now a resident of California. John McFadden died in 1879, at the age of fifty-six years, a member of the U. P. Church, as was also his wife. Matthew T. McFadden was married May 29, 1879, to Luella, daughter of Ackley A. and Orilla Johnson, of Mason county, W. Va., and they have five children, viz.: Walter T., Charles W., Ada M., Orn R. and Joseph W. Joseph D. McFadden, a brother of Matthew T., was killed in the railroad disaster at Chatsworth, Ill., Aug. 10, 1887, at the age of forty-six years.

Robert A. Ewing, farmer, postoffice Mc Kee's Rocks, son of Daniel and Jane Ewing, was born in 1856, on the farm where he now resides, in Stowe township. His grandfather, Moses Ewing, came from east of the mountains and settled in this county about 1794. He (Moses) and his wife, Sophia, had the following names: James, Samuel, Henry, John, Daniel, Leah and Ellen. Mosc died about 1831. His wife was robbed and then murdered, because she assured the robber she would know him if she ever saw him again. Daniel Ewing was born on the old homestead, in Stowe township, in 1807; was a farmer, and married Jane, daughter of James and Mary Speer. They had four children: Elvilda M., James H., L. O. (deceased) and Robert A. Daniel died Sept. 20, 1880, at the age of seventy-three years; his widow died January 3, 1886, at the age of sixty-eight years. They were members of the U. P. Church; he was a republican. Robert A. married, in June, 1887, Ida L., daughter of John and Elizabeth Fulton, of Washington county, Pa.

John M. Risher, coal merchant and producer, Dravosburg, was born Sept. 16, 1849, at Six-Mile Ferry, this county, a son of John C. Risher. He was educated at the Western University, and the Polytechnic Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y. After leaving school he was clerk in the banking-house of S. McLean & Co., Fourth street, Pittsburgh, for one year, and then went to a position with the Fort Pitt Banking company. Pittsburgh, filling the same with ability three years, when he resigned to accept the position of bookkeeper and superintendnat in the coal business of J. C. Risher & Co., retaining his residence in Dravosburg. In the fall of 1879, in partnership with James H. Gamble, he bought the coalfield at White Mills, in Washington county, known as the Pennsy tract, and which he operated successfully. In February, 1884, he purchased Mr. Gamble's interest, and has now in operation two coalbanks, with a capacity of 15,000 bushels per day
His dealings with the miners have been such as to benefit them, and good feeling exists between employer and employed. Mr. Risher married Mary J., daughter of Robert and Priscilla Patterson, and five children have blessed them: Robert F., Eva A., Bessie G., who died aged seven years; Mary J., and Fannie M. Mr. and Mrs. Risher are members of the Presbyterian Church. He is a member of the Jr. O. U. A. M., and a republican.

William M. Galbraith, attorney at law, residence Chartiers borough, was born in Coshocton county, Ohio, in March, 1856, to Matthew W. and Phoebe (Keys) Galbraith. William Galbraith, his grandfather, emigrated from County Antrim, Ireland, to America in 1818, and located on Raccoon creek, near Burgettstown, Washington county, Pa. He followed farming, and was one of the most prominent men in the community. William M. received a common-school education, supplemented by a few terms at the Sewickley Academy. He was associate principal of the public schools in McKeesport; principal of Oakdale Academy four years; of the Pittsburgh Academy two years, and recently principal of Chartiers borough public schools two years. He studied law under Judge Magee and Henry A. Davis, and was admitted to the Allegheny county bar June 30, 1886. He is a member of the Royal Arcanum; politically a republican.

Matthew Gill Euwer, merchant, post-office Verona, was born at New Texas, Plum township, Allegheny county, in 1841, and is a grandson of John Euwer, a native of Ireland, who settled in Plum township about the beginning of the present century. The latter was a descendant of the Scotch Covenanters, and an active worker in that sect. His son, Archibald, was born in Plum township, and married Mary Gill, a native of what was then called Pottown. They had four sons, all of whom are living. Archibald, the youngest, who was a posthumous child, and went into the army when eighteen years old and served throughout the civil war, now resides near Washington, Iowa. The others, John, Ebenezer and Matthew, reside in Parnassus, Westmoreland county, Pa. Archibald Euwer Sr., died in 1843, aged forty-five, and his widow passed away in 1856, at the age of fifty-three. Matthew Euwer was reared on a farm, and when sixteen years old began teaching school, which profession he followed five years. For many years he was engaged in mercantile business in Allegheny City, and in 1886 he opened a store in partnership with his brother at Verona. May 1, 1888, James B. Euwer became a partner, and the firm is now Euwer Brothers & Co. Mr. Euwer, as is the entire family, is a tireless worker in the church of the Covenanters, and was one of the organizers of the Eighth Street Church, Pittsburgh, in which he was the first deacon elected. Since engaging in business here, he has taken up his residence in Parnassus in order to rear his family in the church of his fathers.

March 5, 1868, Mr. Euwer was united in marriage with Mary Elizabeth Logan, a granddaughter of James Logan, first prothonotary of Allegheny county. Her parents, Robert Fulton and Nancy (Stotler) Logan, were born in Plum and Penn townships, respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Euwer's first-born child died in infancy. The others are named, in order of age, William Fulton, Mary Wilson, Bertha Stotler, Theodosia Helen, Norman Logan and Nancy Catharine.

Capt. A. D. Reno, post-office Putnam, captain and pilot on the Ohio, is of French origin, his ancestors having left their native land and settled in Virginia about the year 1710. Three brothers were the pioneers of this family in America, and from one of these, Louis Reno, the subject of this sketch is descended. Louis Reno had a son named John, who had a son named Benjamin. Benjamin came to Allegheny county about the year 1765, and settled on the right bank of Chartiers creek, opposite to what is now called Bower hill, where he took up one four hundred acres of land, on which he lived until his death, which occurred about the year 1803. There were born to Benjamin and his wife Jane (nee Bell) six sons and one daughter, viz.: William, Robert, Zachariah, Benjamin, Charles, Louis and Susannah, who married Benjamin Jackson. The third son, Zachariah, was born on the farm, on the banks of Chartiers creek, in the year 1776, and became a coal-dealer, having had some land underlaid with rich coal-veins. Born to Zachariah and his wife, Martha, were seven sons—Louis, Benjamin, John, Francis, Samuel, Henry and Alfred, and two daughters—Amanda (married to Christopher L. Magee, who for many years was engaged in the hat and fur trade, and during the war was sutler in the army) and Minerva (married to Samuel Clark, who burned his land in the Ohio river). Louis the oldest son of Zachariah and father of the subject of this memoir, was also born near the banks of Chartiers creek, in the year 1798.

He married Anna E. Frisbee, daughter of Ephraim Frisbee, who started, in 1808, the first boatyard at what is called the Point, in Pittsburgh. Louis, like his father Zachariah, was also engaged in the coal business, they being the first parties engaged in running coal in boats to Cincinnati and Louisville. There were born to Louis and Anna E. eleven children, six of whom are living, viz.: Amanda J. (wife of Capt. R. M. Boles), Cornelia B. (wife of Col. W. L. Foulk, of the United States army), Capt. John L., Louis A., Alfred D. and William S. Alfred D., the fifth son of Louis, was born in Allegheny City, and is now living in Chartiers borough, near Mansfield, Allegheny county, Pa.; was educated under the tutorship of John Kelley, of Allegheny City, and at Duff's College, Pittsburgh, Pa. From early life he has been steamboating, having been a pilot for twenty-one years. He married, in 1899, Alice Wilson, daughter of James P. Wilson.
of Pittsburgh, and they have a family of four children: Alice, Charles, Stella and James. Capt. Reno is a member of the R. A., of the A. O. U. W., and of the Presbyterian Church. He is a republican.

Matthew P. Schooley, editor of the Local News, Homestead. The ancestors of the old Schooley family came from Lorraine, France (now Germany), and spelled their name De Scholie. They settled in New Jersey, near Schooley's mountain. One of their descendants, Isaac Schooley, moved to Loudoun county, Va., and was a cabinet-maker near Leesburg. He married Rachel Crossen, and had four sons—Augustus, John, Thomas and Samuel. Samuel was also a cabinet-maker and furniture-dealer, and died in 1862 in Everett, Bedford county, Pa. He married Harriet Hedges, who bore him five children: Mrs. Florence Nuzum, Matthew P., John R., Jennie C. and James C. Of these Matthew P. and John R. are editors of the Local News, a bright and newsy weekly, clear and simple, the champion of every good virtue, reflecting the character of its master-spirits, the editors.

Rev. Cyrus B. Hatch, postoffice Dravosburg, was born April 25, 1848, near Franklin, Venango county, Pa. The progenitor of this family was Col. Joseph Hatch, from the county of Kent, England, who came with Gov. Winthrop and the one thousand families and settled the city of Boston, Mass. His descendants are to be found in many states of the Union, and many of them have won distinction in political, commercial or military life. His great-grandson, Ebenezer, a mechanic, resided at Falmouth, Mass., and married Statira Blanchard. The progenitor of the Blanchard family was Thomas, a native of England, who settled in North Yarmouth, Mass., where his large progeny became wealthy shipbuilders and commanders of vessels. Of his three sons—Solomon, John and David—Solomon married Elizabeth Loring and had four sons; Solomon, Nathaniel, David and Joseph. Of these Nathaniel was the father of Statira, who was a remarkably intelligent woman. She had three sisters: Mrs. Mary True, Mrs. Betty Buxton and Mrs. Alice Kenny. Statira Hatch had five children; Eunice, Elizabeth, Joseph, Davis P. and Nathaniel. The last named married Jane L. Kingan, a daughter of John Kingan, of County Down, Ireland. Nathaniel was an esteemed member of the Pittsburgh bar, and died April 25, 1879, aged sixty-three years. His widow died May 3, 1885, aged seventy-eight years. Their only son, the subject of this sketch, is a graduate of the Western University, class of 1869, also of the Allegheny U. P. Theological Seminary, class of 1872. For a period of three years each was pastor of the Millfin U. P. Church, Mansfield and Irwin station. His talent as an organizer was recognized by the U. P. Board of Missions, who sent him to Denver, Colo., where in less than two years he secured a valuable church property and an organization of seventy members, besides a flourishing Sabbath-school. Returning to Dravosburg, he took charge of the church there of forty-five members; his work was blessed abundantly, and within a year the church numbered two hundred members. Mr. Hatch married Agnes S., daughter of Hezekiah and Rosannah (Frew) Nixon, former of whom was one of the first elders of the First U. P. Church of Allegheny, also first mayor of that city, serving two terms, and afterward was recorder of the county; his daughter, who was remarkably well qualified for the position of a pastor's wife, died March 29, 1875. Mr. Hatch's present wife is Bessie S., a daughter of David and Elizabeth (Ross) Foster, of Mansfield, Pa. To her devoted and untiring cooperation is to be attributed much of Mr. Hatch's success in later years. Of Mr. Hatch's children only two survive: Blanchard Ross Foster, born June 5, 1881, and Bessie Eunice, born June 27, 1888.

Thomas Barrett, retired, Emsworth, was born in Cork, Ireland, a native of Edmond and Mary (Clark) Barrett, natives of County Kerry and the suburbs of Cork, respectively. The father died in 1863, the mother in 1865. At the age of fifteen Thomas Barrett visited France, and about five months later sailed for New York, landing in 1847; his voyage was continued to New Orleans, where he arrived in 1848, and there heard the cannon salute in honor of Taylor's election to the presidency. Mr. Barrett learned shoemaking, and in 1850 came to Pittsburgh, where he followed his trade for about thirteen years. In 1865 he embarked in the coal business on the Allegheny river. In 1869 he moved to Kilbuck township and purchased ten acres of land, where he built two fine houses and has since lived. He has valuable property in Pittsburgh, which he rents. Mr. Barrett returned to Ireland in 1874, and while there married Maria Teresa, daughter of Valentine Griffin McSwiney, Esq., and Kathrine Savage McSwiney, of Church View, Killarney, County Kerry. Mr. and Mrs. Barrett have three children, viz.: Mary, Edward Valentine and Thomas. The family are members of the Catholic Church. A. W. Loomis, who was a resident of Pittsburgh in its early history, was educated at Union College, New York, and became an attorney of great ability. He was a partner in the practice of his profession with Mr. Metcalf. In 1837 he was a representative to Congress.

George M. Getze, physician, Tarentum, son of J. M. Getze, a pioneer resident of Tarentum, and at present engaged in the boot and shoe trade, was born in Tarentum in 1855, and received his literary education in Pittsburgh and at Mount Union College, Ohio. He is a graduate of the Hahnemann Medical College, of Philadelphia, and he began the practice of medicine in Tarentum in 1877. In 1878 he married Sadie, daughter of John Kennedy, Esq., of Tarentum, and three children were born to them: Limmie, their first-born (deceased), Amarilla L. and George Wilbur. The doctor is a Mason, member of Lodge No. 502 of Tarentum, of the R. A., No. 910, and of the A. O. H. He is a member of the borough council, of the Methodist Church, of the Homeopathic State Medical Society of Pennsylvania, and Allegheny County Medical society.

Mary and Hodkinson, for many years a resident of Pittsburgh in early times, came from England about 1830, and settled in Bedford county, Pa., on a farm. About the year 1835 he came to Pittsburgh, where he engaged in the queensware business, and in the great fire there, in 1843, he was burned out. During the oil excitement Mr. Hodkinson moved to Zanesville, Ohio.

John Speer, farmer, postoffice Chartiers, a son of James and Mary Speer, was born on the homestead of his father and grandfather, in Stowe township. His grandfather, James Speer, Sr., came from Scotland about 1750, and located in Maryland, and about 1764 came to what is now Allegheny county. Pa., where he bought the above-mentioned farm. He died leaving four sons and three daughters, all living in this county except one son, who settled in Kentucky. James, Jr., son of James, Sr., was born in Maryland in 1854, and came with his parents to this county when about ten years old. He married Mary, daughter of Roly and Nancy Boyd, and by her had thirteen children, only three of whom are now living: Agnes (wife of John Richie), Robert (who married Sarah K. Sampson) and John. The parents were members of the Presbyterian Church; the father died in 1847 at the age of eighty-two, and the mother in 1859 at the age of eighty-four. John Speer was married June 9, 1833, to Sarah K., daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth McCoy, of this county, and their children are Vianna M. (wife of George Magness), Elvader K. and Wilson B. Mr. Speer has held positions of trust and responsibility. He and his family are members and earnest supporters of the Presbyterian Church.

James B. Linhart, farmer, postoffice Turtle Creek. His grandfather, Christian Linhart, immigrated to America at a very early day, settled in Wilkins township, and purchased some three hundred or four hundred acres of land. He was a farmer by occupation, and had a family of six sons and five daughters. Of these Michael was among the oldest, being born in the township in 1770. Like his father, he was a farmer, and died in the township where he was born. He married Juliana Hawk, of Westmoreland county, Pa., who bore him four sons and three daughters, of whom James B. is the only survivor. Mrs. Linhart lived to a ripe old age, and died in 1870, aged ninety-four years. James B. was born and reared on the farm he now owns, and on which he has always resided. He was educated at the common schools, and has followed farming through life; he is a republican.

John V. Scott, farmer, postoffice Elizabeth, is the son of James Scott, Jr., and Mary (Van Kirk) Scott. James Scott, Sr., the grandfather of our subject, was a native of Ireland, and was among the earliest settlers of this county, being identified with the Indian troubles in those times. The father of John V. Scott was born in this township, on the farm now owned by Zaccheus Scott. He participated in the war of 1812, and held a commission as captain, and was afterward colonel of a militia regiment. In 1832-34 he represented this county in the house of representatives. He died in 1868, and his wife in 1863. Nine of their children are still living, as follows: Diana, Mrs. James Wycoff, of Uniontown; Susan, living with John V.; Mary, Mrs. Samuel Van Kirk; Sarah, Mrs. Matthew Taylor; Samuel and Joseph, of Indiana; Harvey, of Iowa; William and John V., of this town. John V. Scott was born in 1829, on his present farm. In 1850 he was married to Nancy A., daughter of James and Rebecca (Devore) Nicholls, of this county. They have seven children living, as follows: James H., an attorney in Burlington, Iowa; Joel F., a physician in Coal Valley; Lizzie R., Mary J., William D., Nannie L and John K., all at home. Mr. Scott and family are members of the Presbyterian Church of Round Hill, he having been an elder in that church for thirty-four years.

Abijah Hays, Jr., retired, postoffice Carrick, was born Aug. 6, 1818, in Franklin county, Pa., a grandson of James Hays and a son of Abijah Hays, Sr., a stonemason and bricklayer by trade. The last named married Margaret Updegraff, a fine specimen of the womau of that period, and to them were born eleven children: Rebecca, Jacob, William B., Mary, Abijah, Maria, Eliza, Catherine, James, Ann and George. The family settled in this county in 1839, in Plum Creek township, but finally went to Westmoreland county, where the parents died. Abijah Hays, Jr., whose name heads this sketch, returned to this county, where he married Elizabeth Fagg, who bore him two children. Both sons, Cyrus and Charles. His second wife, née Jane A. Sands, was the mother of three children: James, Mary and Edward. His present wife, née Juliette A. Steek, is the mother of following-named children: Grant W., Lizzie, Walter L. and Howard. Mr. Hays has led an active life. He was a carpenter and builder, and had a planing-mill on the South Side for over twenty years. He is a republican, and cast his first vote for W. H. Harrison.

William Pierce (deceased) was a son of John and Margaret (Scott) Pierce, of this county. John Pierce, Sr., grandfather of William, was a native of Ireland, came to this country over one hundred years ago, and settled on the farm now occupied by Mrs. William Pierce, purchasing 350 acres for twenty-three dollars. The father of William was born on this farm, reared a family of eleven children, and died in 1852. The subject of this memoir, the next to the youngest in the family, was born in 1816, on the homestead, where he always lived. Feb. 12, 1856, he was married to Hannah J. Yaw, of Ohio, and their family consists of five children, as follows: John (on the homestead), David (a physician in McKeesport), Mattie E. (Mrs. Frank G. Cope- land, in Irvin, Westmoreland county), Maggie (widow of Charles Craighead, in Elizabeth borough) and Josie R. (at home). The family are members of the U. P. Church of Elizabeth. William Pierce died in 1881.

Andrew Soles (deceased) was born in Brownsville, Pa., in 1797, a son of Peter and Mary (Anderson) Soles. His father, a shoe-maker by trade, and a native of Germany, settled in McKeesport in 1798, where he followed his trade, and was also engaged in business as a riverman, storekeeper and farmer. He was twice married, his first wife being Sarah Sinclair, by whom he had one daughter, Mary A. (deceased), who married Joel Crawford; his second wife was Mrs. Catherine Moffett, née Dunn, daughter of Walter and Ellen (Brownlee) Dunn, of Beaver county, Pa., formerly of Scotland, by whom he had eight children: Anderson, Nellie, Sarah A., William, John, Robert, David and Catherine. Mr. Soles was one of the prominent citizens of McKeesport. He was street commissioner of the borough for several years, and superintended the grading of its first streets. He was a member of the First M. E. Church; in politics a democrat.

J. W. Lea (deceased) was born in Allegheny county, Pa., in 1841, a grandson of Daniel Lea, who came to this country with the family of William Lea, married Lizzie Simecox, and by her had five sons and five daughters, of whom J. W. was the youngest. He was born and reared on a farm, and educated at the public schools of the county. Later he engaged in mercantile business, which he successfully pursued until his death. He married, in 1869, Miss S. Belinda, daughter of Jacob Doollittle, of an old and respected family of the county. Two children were born to them: Jacob D. (deceased) and F. Eugene, who was educated at Duff’s College, and is now a traveling salesman for a Pittsburgh firm. Mrs. Lea survives his husband, mourning his loss, but comforted by a loving son, who makes his home with her. They are members of the Methodist Church.

Samuel Moses Raymond, attorney at law, Pittsburgh, was born in Hampshire county, Va. (now West Virginia), Aug. 18, 1841, son of Moses and Sarah (Walker) Raymond. His father was born in Connecticut in 1799, and died at the age of seventy-six years; he was educated at Yale College, and for forty years was pastor of Presbyterian churches at Springfield, Va., and other towns near there; his wife was born the same year in Virginia, and died at the age of seventy-eight years. Samuel M. Raymond was educated at Washington College, Washington, Pa., graduating in 1861, and went to Altoona, Pa., where he taught school for a short time. Soon afterward he entered the quartermaster’s department at Columbus, Ohio, where he remained till the close of the war. In 1866 he came to Pittsburgh, studied law with David Reed, and was admitted to the bar in 1867. March 9, 1863, Mr. Raymond married Lucy Clark, of Washington, Pa., daughter of David and Adeline (Adams) Clark, natives of that county, and two daughters—Grace Clark and Addie Burr—gave blessed to John and Jane McKeight, connected with the Presbyterian Church at Emsworth, where they have resided since 1880.

W. H. McCullough, M. D., Tarentum, was born at Fairview, Butler county, Pa., in 1849. He received his school-training at Wittenburg College. Springfield, Ohio, and his medical education at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Cincinnati, Ohio, of which institution he is a graduate. He also attended two full courses of lectures at Cleveland, Ohio, and one course at Cincinnati. In 1876 he married Miss L. J. Black, of Millerstown, Butler county, Pa., and in 1878 located at Tarentum, where he practiced medicine with marked success. Dr. and Mrs. McCullough have two children—Vivian D. Miles and William Roy. The doctor was elected to the Pennsylvania State legislature in 1888-89.

John Carothers Haymaker, attorney at law, Pittsburgh, son of William N. and Mary Haymaker, of Turtle Creek (see his sketch), was born September 2, 1853, in Put- ton township, this county. He remained at home on the farm of his birth, attended Latrobe Academy at Murrysville, Pa., until he began to read law with his brother, J. S. Haymaker, in 1872. He was admitted to the bar of Pittsburgh in 1875, and was elected assistant district attorney by the republican party in the fall of 1887, taking his seat January 1, 1888. Mr. Haymaker was married November 18, 1880, to Anna M. Mc Knight, of Allegheny county, Pa., the daughter of Rev. James Mc Knight, and three children have been born to them: Margarette Mc Knight, Mary Simpson and Louise Bell. Mr. and Mrs. Haymaker are members of the Presbyterian Church.

John Munhall, coal-operator, postoffice Munhall, Pa., was born Nov. 16, 1833, in Schuylkill county, Pa., and came to Pitts- burgh in 1834. His early life was one of hardship and toil, but by honest labor he raised himself to his present position. Left an orphan at the age of ten years, he found work in the coal-mines, and saved one hundred dollars the last year. At the age of seventeen years he began a mercantile business at Elizabeth, which he followed six years, but the panic of 1857 found him stranded, his entire capital, and much more, being trusted to the miners. In 1858, with his brothers Michael and William, he built the steamboat J. S. Cosgrove, with his brother William cutting and hauling the timber out of the forest a few miles back from the Monongahela river, and loaned to him by a friend as part of his capital. After several reverses, the fall found him with a fully equipped steamboat, and ready to do anything that was offered. By never taking advantage of persons in distress, he soon had the confidence of the public as well as a full share of the work, and in two years he was able to pay his mercantile debts with interest; his creditors were very lenient, never doubting his intentions to pay their claims. The year 1861 found him with the steamboat Grey Eagle plying on the Allegheny river, connected with King & Pen-nock, and shortly afterward he and his brothers joined with Maj. William Frew and Charles Lockhart, of Pittsburgh, built the steamboats Brilliant and Albion, which proved a great success in the oil-carrying trade: he also engaged largely in the production of oil on Ohio river, and afterward in Butler county. Retiring in 1876, Mr. Munhall removed to Munhall from Oil City, where he had resided eight years; he again, with his brothers, embarked in the coal business in 1890, being the owner of a large coal-tract, known as the Bellwood mines, at Munhall, where he resides. Having sold part of his farm and river-front to Carnegie, Philips & Co., they have erected on it a large steel-plate mill and other mills, and are about erecting the largest beam-mill here in the United States. The land has proved to be one of the finest locations in the valley, being situated twenty-five feet above high-water mark. Mr. Munhall has had many hundred men in his employ, and the kindest of feeling have been expressed between employers and employed. He has always encouraged and assisted his employes to save part of their earnings and secure homes for themselves and families—always ready to help those who help themselves. He has been twice married; his first wife, Hettie Cunningham, died, leaving six children: William, George, Harry, Albert, Otis, and Essie. His present wife, see Maggie McKelvy, is the mother of Lida R., Llewella E. and John R. Mr. Munhall is a member of the Presbyterian Church, of the Royal Arcanum; politically he is a republican.

William Knoderer, superintendent of farm of the West Pennsylvania Hospital for Insane, at Dixaontown, was born in Alsace, France (now Germany), and came here with his parents, Christian and Margaret S. (Wagner) Knoderer, when young. His father was captain in Napoleon's army for seventeen years, and in the Russian campaign he went in with 386 men, and came out with five besides himself. He was an able swordsman, and was severely wounded in a hand-to-hand contest with three men armed with sabers. He came to this county in 1844, and purchased a farm of 106 acres in Ohio Township, where his widow, who was born in 1804, still resides. He was born in 1792, and died at the age of eighty-five years. William Knoderer attended the schools of the township. He was married, at the age of twenty-one, to Margaret A. Merriman, of Ohio Township, this county, daughter of Samuel and Sarah (Merriman) Merriman, and they had four children, two of whom died when small. Those living are Emma, now transcriber in recorder's office, Pittsburgh, and Margaret Sarah, at home. After marriage, Mr. Knoderer followed the Ohio River a short time, but gave most of his time to the farm. In 1884 he began work at the Dixaontown Hospital for the Insane, as general carpenter, and in eight years was made superintendent of the farm and all outside building. Mr. Knoderer has been delegate to county conventions and member of the county executive committee. He served two terms as street commissioner, and is now filling his second term as justice of the peace of Kibuck township. Mr. Knoderer is a 32° Mason, and a K. T.; he is a republican.

James Gilmore, Sr., retired farmer, post-office Turtle Creek, is probably one of the oldest citizens in Wilkins township. He was born in County Down, Ireland, in 1807, a son of James and Mary (McKee) Gilmore, also natives of Ireland, who were the parents of seven children, our subject being the only survivor. In 1838 five of this family with their widowed mother emigrated to America, and settled in Pittsburgh, where they remained one year. James was the oldest son; in 1834 purchased the farm where he now resides, at that time containing one hundred acres, and the property of John McKelvy. Mr. Gilmore married, in 1839, Ann Jane Waugh, also a native of Ireland. Seven children have been born and are living; David W., James, William John and Flora (Mrs. Demster). Mr. Gilmore is a respected citizen, and has always taken an active interest in the welfare of his township. He was nine years school director, and his son is now a member of the board. They are members of the U. P. Church, Turtle Creek, and republicans.

Walter Esly Clendenen, postmaster. Turtle Creek, is a native of Fayette county, born Feb. 2, 1848. His parents, James and Ann Jane (McMichael) Clendenen, were of Scotch and Irish descent, and the former now resides in Mount Pleasant, Westmoreland county, aged eighty-six. The latter died in 1870. William, father of James, settled on a farm at Mendon, Westmoreland county. James was a carpenter and millwright, and built many mills "from the woods." He had seven children, six of whom are living, viz.: Mary Jane (Myers), W. E., Elizabeth (Shaffer), Ann H. (Patterson), Joseph H. and Florence L. (Rahli). Both the sons reside here. Maggie, the younger child, died when three years old. Walter E., was reared in Mount Lebanon and attended the public school there. He assisted his father at carpenter-work, and when eighteen years old began blacksmithing. This occupied him until his appointment as postmaster, in January, 1885. In 1873 he began business for himself in Braddock, and two years later came to Turtle Creek. He still owns a shop and two dwellings on the Wilkins side of the village. Being a very strong man, he was a famous horseshoer, and once, in Oil City, carried five hundred pounds of iron on his back, as a test. In 1878 Mr. Clendenen married Lydia M. McGuire, a native of Derry township, Westmoreland county. Her parents, John and Eliza Jane McGuire, were born in Unity township, Westmoreland county, of Irish parentage. Mr. Clendenen has always been a democrat. Their children are: Harry James, Albert Marshall and Frank Roy. The family are associated with the Presbyterian Church.

Henry Richard Chalfant (deceased) was descended from French ancestry. At an early period two brothers left France and came to Eastern Pennsylvania, where they settled and reared families. Henry Chalfant, a son of one of these brothers, came with his brother to Allegheny county, Pa., in 1827, and settled in Turtle Creek, where he purchased a few acres. Henry married Isabella C. Weakley, daughter of Samuel and Hester Weakley, of Cumberland county, Pa. Ten children were born to this union, eight of whom grew to maturity, and seven are now living: John W., Sidney A., Anna R., James T., George A., William L., Albert M. Our subject, the third child, was born in 1837 on the farm in Wilkins township, and was educated at the common schools and academy. He married, in 1868, Evaline R. Graham, a daughter of James Graham, and granddaughter of Rev. James Graham. Born to Mr. and Mrs. Chalfant were eight children, seven living: James Graham, Mary, Maud, Sidney, Henry R., Frederick B. and Eva M. Mr. Chalfant was a highly respected citizen of Wilkins township, and his occupation was that of a farmer. He was director of the county poor of Allegheny county, and director and vice-president of the Braddock National Bank. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, of which his family are members, and politically was a republican. He died Sept. 8th, 1887.

August Miller, contractor, Homestead, was born May 15, 1845, in Godehausen, Bavaria, Germany, a son of Conrad and Mary Miller. He came to America at the age of thirteen years, and his first work was in the glass-factory of Fred McKee & Brothers, of Pittsburgh, Pa., working four days a week for much less wages than his board cost, but working at carpentering the other two days to make both ends meet. Before he was eight lad, he was soon promoted, and earned fair wages. Afterward he learned the wagon-maker's trade. In 1864 he went to Springfield, Tenn., to work for the United States government, and was promoted to foreman before he reached his twentieth year. After returning to Pittsburgh he learned the carpenter's and builder's trade, which he has followed successfully ever since. In 1871 he built the first house in Homestead, in the midst of a cornfield. Since that time he has been identified with Homestead, where he has erected many fine structures. Mr. Miller spent time and money to learn his trade thoroughly, hence his success. In 1870 he was married to Mary F. Young, a Pittsburgh lady, and they had three sons and one daughter, Adele V. being the only child living. Mr. and Mrs. Miller are both Presbyterians.

Capt. J. H. Williams, manufacturer, post-office Homestead, was born July 21, 1839, in Boston, Mass., a descendant of one of the old New England families. His father, John Williams, a wholesale clothier of Boston, married Elizabeth R., daughter of Joshua Griffin, whose wife was a descendant of the old Le Bosquet family, so well known in Boston, and six children were born to them: J. Harry, Mary E., Carrie O., Jessie S., Howard B. and Charles M. J. H. Williams was educated in Boston, and for many years was a clerk in the old Suffolk bank. He belonged to the militia, and when Fort Sumter was fired upon was among the first troops to reach Washington; later he became second lieutenant of a company, which he recruited for the 33d M. V. I., and after a service of two years and nine months resigned on account of disability. He fought at Gettysburg and Antietam; was promoted to first lieutenant at Chancellorsville, and was wounded at Resaca, Ga. He recruited another company for the 62d M. V. I., of which he became captain. After the war Capt. Williams engaged in the brick business in and near Pittsburgh, and since Homestead was established has been connected therewith. He married, in Boston, in 1864, Rebecca L., daughter of Herman and Mary E. (Le Bosquet) Rolfe, and they have four children: Jessie H., Edward R., Fannie and Harry L. Williams. The captain is a member of the F. & A. M. and G. A. R.; he is a republican.

Rev. John J. Bullion, Homestead, was born in 1856, in Sharpsburg, Pa. His parents, John and Catharine (Ruttinger) Bullion, natives of Bavaria, in their youth immigrated to America, and are now living in Sharpsburg, where the former is employed in the iron-mill. The subject of this sketch entered St. Michael's Seminary in 1869, at the age of thirteen years, and after seven years of diligent study entered the Grand Seminary at Montreal, where two years later he was ordained with forty-five others to the priesthood by Bishop Fabre. He was first stationed at Dudley, Pa., but soon afterward became assistant in St. Peter's pro-cathedral, Allegheny City. In February, 1881, he came to Homestead, where he held services for nearly one year in Schuchman's hall. In the fall of the same year the first church was dedicated, the seating capacity being 300. Owing to the growth of the town and the earnest, diligent efforts of Father Bullion, the congregation soon grew beyond the capacity of the little church, and in 1888 a building was erected with a seating capacity of 700, the lower part of which is occupied as a parochial school, and will be used as a church until a handsome brick structure can be erected. The congregation has increased from twenty-five to two hundred families.

JOHN HUSTON, merchant, Tarentum, son of William and Betty Huston, was born in County Derry, Ireland, in 1826, and immigrated to this country, locating in Allegheny City June 9, 1848. He learned the trade of chairmaking in Pittsburgh, and with the exception of about five years his time was passed in those two cities until his removal, in 1874, to Tarentum. Mr. Huston married, Nov. 4, 1851, Mary Hawlks, of Pittsburgh, of which city she was a native, and their children were Lizzie H., Nancy J., William C. and Johnston F. (deceased), and Joseph W., Emma J., Johnston C. and John D. (living). Johnston C. married Clara Marshall, and resides in Ford City. Mrs. Huston died, and Mr. Huston next married, Nov. 4, 1869, Esther English, of Allegheny City, who bore him two children, William E. and Maggie E. In 1874 Mr. Huston established a chair-factory in Tarentum, which he continued for six or seven years, his goods being sold in this portion of the state. Deciding to discontinue his factory in Tarentum, he is now solely dealing in household furniture.

ARCHIBALD DICKEY, retired, Tarentum, is a son of Archibald and Isabella (Magrew) Dickey, and was born in Armstrong county, near Kittanning, Pa., in 1817. He remained with his parents on their farm until 1855, when he removed to Tarentum, where he learned the trade of carpenter, and afterward engaged in business as a builder and contractor. He put up many of the residences of Tarentum, and the corner building by him built on Market and Kennedy streets, was the first house built on Wood street. In 1872 Mr. Dickey married Catherine Ferguson, a native of Brookfield, Pa., who, after a lingering sickness, died in 1876, leaving one child, Thomas S., now receiving his education in Tarentum. Mr. Dickey has witnessed the growth and prosperity of Tarentum, and in his old age is enjoying the fruits of his earlier labors.

JOHN S. WALKER. The first of the Walker family to settle in this county was Samuel, with his wife, Elizabeth (Springer) Walker. They were natives of Wilmington, Del., and assisted in bringing the first printing-press west of the Alleghentees, which was used in the office of the Pittsburgh Gazette. Their eldest son was Maj. John, who was a young man when his parents came with them to this borough, where he spent the remainder of his life, and died at the age of eighty-six years. He was a boat-builder, and constructed many of the first boats used on the river. He built the piroges used in the Lewis and Clarke expedition to the northwest, and also the first steamboat built west of the Allegheny mountains. He also was engaged in hotel-keeping for many years. His wife was Diana, daughter of Robert and Mary (Davidson) Craighead; the former was born in Virginia, the latter in this borough. John Walker participated in the war of 1812, and gained the rank of major. His family consisted of three sons and five daughters, only two of whom are living: John, of Denver, Col., and Maj. Robert C. Walker, of Helena, Montana, who married a sister of Hon. James G. Blaine. The deceased are Samuel, Mary (Mrs. Solomon Speers), of Belle Vernon; Matilda (Mrs. William K. Van Kirk), of this borough; Diana (Mrs. Samuel Frew), Sarah (Mrs. William Penniman) and Julia B. (Mrs. John McDonough). Samuel, the eldest son of Maj. John Walker, was born in 1798, in this town, and engaged in mercantile business, and also built many boats (over three hundred), among the number being the celebrated J. M. White. He was also the first postmaster in Elizabeth. In 1819 he was married to Nancy, daughter of Noah and Nancy (Frey) Speer, of Belle Vernon, and in 1816 they celebrated their golden wedding. They reared ten children, seven of whom are living: Lucinda (Mrs. R. P. Voorhees), of California; William B., of Missouri; Diana (Mrs. Gen. Ekin), of Louisville, Ky.; Noah, of Colorado, Tex.; Samuel, Jr., a merchant of this borough; Nancy L. (Mrs. Pope), of Macon City, Mo.; Mary (Mrs. Barnes), of East End. The deceased are Thomas P., James S. and John S., all of whom were natives of this borough. Mr. Walker died in 1876.

John S. Walker, a son of Samuel, Sr., was born in the Mansion House, of Elizabeth, Sept. 90, 1829. He was reared here, and educated at the public schools. He was a merchant here until 1857, when he removed to Minneapolis, Minn., and engaged in the boot and shoe business, and there remained until his death, in 1874. He was treasurer of Hennepin county, Minn., two terms. He was married, in 1850, to Angeline G., daughter of William K. and Matilda (Walker) Van Kirk. They have one son, by adoption—Albert J., an attorney at law in the law-office of Miller & McBride, of Pittsburgh. John S. was a member of the Masonic fraternity, I. O. O. F. and of K. of P., and his funeral was conducted by these societies. After his death his widow and son returned here, where they have since resided.

Dr. Andrew Smith, postoffice Putnam, was born in Allegheny county, in 1838. His father, Robert Smith, a farmer, came from Ireland to America in 1832. He married Catherine McFarland, and Dr. Andrew is now the only remaining member of his family. Robert Smith died in 1875, aged eighty-two years; his widow died in 1881, aged seventy-six years. The subject of these lines was educated at the public schools in this county, and at the Curry Institute of Pittsburgh. In 1866 he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. J. H. Dick, of Indiana county, Pa., received his medical education at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and began practice at Walker's Mill in 1870, where he remained four years. In 1874 he came to Chartiers borough, where he has since remained engaged in successful practice. Dr. Smith was married, in 1882, to Lizzie M. Hoffman, daughter of Daniel Hoffman, of Washington county, Pa., and they have had one child, Clyde, now deceased. Dr. Smith is a democrat.

Alexander Patterson, postoffice Putnam, was born in 1829, of Scotch-Irish descent, in Carroll county, Ohio. His grandfather, Samuel, was born in Washington county, Pa., where he followed farming. Alexander was reared on a farm in Carroll county, and was educated at Richmond College, where he graduated in classics. From early life he has been identified with coal-mining. In 1857 he married Elizabeth Benner. In 1869 he came to Allegheny county, where, since 1872, he has been constantly connected with his present business, and has met with success. He enlisted in 1862 in the 136th O. V. I., and was lieutenant on the quartermaster's staff, serving three years. Of his family of four children—three sons and a daughter—his wife and two oldest sons are deceased. Mr. Patterson is one of Chartiers borough's most prominent citizens, unassuming in manner and respected by all who know him. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church; politically a republican.

James Wallace, justice of the peace and farmer, postoffice Carrick, was born Jan. 1, 1806, in Baldwin township. His parents, Samuel and Mary (Barton) Wallace, were natives of County Antrim, Ireland, and were of the same family as Sir William Wallace. They came to America with their daughter Nancy; their other children, Robert, John, Martha, William and David (twins), Samuel, Margaret, Betsy, Rosannah and James, were born in this county. The subject of this memoir has been a farmer all his life, and owns the homestead of two hundred acres. He married, Feb. 15, 1838, Jane, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Huey) Irwin, whose father, Joseph Irwin, was twice driven back by Indians from his settlement. Squire Wallace has three children, two sons, Samuel and John L., both farmers, and both living on the homestead, and one daughter, Leliza J., married to Alexander Speer, of Cannonsburg, Washington county, Pa., where they reside. Of these Samuel was educated in this county, and married, Nov. 18, 1873, Margaret McGibbeny, daughter of Capt. James and Sarah (Stewart) McGibbeny; they have three children: James E., Jennie and Sadie J. John I. Wallace married Jane M., daughter of James Rath, and they have five children: Harry J., Lillie B., Melvin E., John D. and Rachel A. Squire Wallace and his sons are republicans. He has been a justice of the peace for ten years, and has filled other offices. In his younger days he was lieutenant of a volunteer company of cavalry for many years.

Jesse Cunningham (deceased) was born July 29, 1809, in Baldwin township, and died, after a useful and well-spent life, Jan. 25, 1887. His father, George Cunningham, was born east of the mountains, and after coming west lived a short time in Beaver county, Pa., but as early as 1804 came to this county, where he bought 218 acres of land. He married Jane Moore (who died in 1844), and they were the parents of twelve children: Daniel, Jane, Eliza, William, Margaret, Jesse, Ruth, George, David, Sarah, John and Maria. Of these, Jesse farmed the home place, and early in life evinced those traits of manhood and Christian character which made him so universally esteemed wherever he was known, his sense of honor and justice being one of his leading characteristics. Oct. 29, 1837, he married Rachel, daughter of David and Margaret (Thompson) Cowan, and seven children blessed this union, viz.: Mrs. Mary J. Bryant, Mrs. Rachel L. Rhodes, George H., Robert P., Mrs. Caroline Hays. Mrs. Salina L. Doyle and Melissa M. (wife of Dr. C. Stilley). In religious matters the Cunningham family have always identified themselves with the Presbyterian Church.

John T. Penney, McKeensport, was born Sept. 4, 1856. William Penney, his grandfather, was born March 20, 1772. He was a brother of James, the father of Thomas Penney, whose sketch appears elsewhere. William's wife was Martha, daughter of Jesse Gill, and their son John, the father of John T., was born March 30, 1808. He was married first to Ruth Carothers, who bore him William, Samuel E. and James E.; then to Rebecca Culler, the mother of his sons John T. and Adam C. John Penney, Sr., was a mine operator, which business he followed successfully until the panic of 1873. After passing through the junior year at college, John T. Penney went (in 1879) to Florida and engaged in the lumber business. On the failure of his health, in 1882, he returned to McKeensport, and was a bookkeeper in a manufacturing-house in Pittsburgh till 1885, when he became one of the firm of Penney, Milholland & Co., founders and machinists. In November of that year he and his brother, A. C. Penney, purchased Milholland's interest in the firm, and they are still engaged in the business.

J. D. O'Neil, merchant, McKeensport, was born in Elizabeth, this county, May 15, 1867, a son of Alfred B. and Fanny (Stephens) O'Neil. His paternal grandparents were Denny and Sarah (Brauff) O'Neil, former of whom was a native of this county, and most of his life was engaged as superintendent of coalworks; he was a son of John and Sarah (Robinson) O'Neil, and John was a son of Charles O'Neil, a native of Ireland, a farmer by occupation, and a pioneer of Mifflin township, this county. The maternal grandfather of the subject of this sketch was R. C. Stephens, Esq., of Elizabeth. Alfred B. O'Neil is a native of Mifflin township, where he was reared and educated. He followed the river for twenty-five years as boatman, pilot and captain. For a number of years he was in mercantile business at Elizabeth, and since 1885 has been a resident of McKeesport, where he has large real-estate interests, and where he has contributed much to the growth and development of the city by erecting several substantial business blocks and numerous dwellings. The subject of this sketch removed to McKeesport in 1884, and same year opened a department-store, stocked with novelties of every description, which he has since successfully conducted. In January of the present year, in partnership with his brother, he also embarked in the dry-goods trade, and at present is doing a very nice business. He is a public-spirited and enterprising young merchant, and worthy of the confidence of the public and of the esteem in which he is held.

Frederick Schuchman, merchant, Homestead, was born Aug. 10, 1848, in Pittsburgh. His father, Frederick Schuchman, Sr., was born and educated near Darmstadt, Germany, served for six years in the German army, and was a man of nerve and courage. He emigrated to America, and in Allegheny, Pa., married Elizabeth Mycr, also a native of Germany, who became the mother of five children. In Pittsburgh he became a well-known business man, and died in 1885. Mrs. Elizabeth Schuchman secured an education for her children, and our subject believes that in a great measure his success is due to her early teaching. He graduated at the Iron City Business College, and immediately took charge of a set of books for F. Schild. At the age of twenty he opened a grocery-store with his elder brother as partner, but after three years he became sole owner of the business. In 1890 he came to Homestead, where he built a large, handsomely furnished residence and store, in which he carries on a general grocery business, dealing also in builders' hardware, feed, etc., and employing fifteen assistants. He has also an extensive ice-house and livery-stable. Mr. Schuchman married Virginia C., daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Roth, and three children have been born to them: Walter R., Bertram F. and an infant daughter. Mr. Schuchman is a republican, and has filled the office of councilman. He is a member of the R. A., Orion Council 244, of Pittsburgh.

Jacob Doolittle was born in Monongalia county, W. Va., in 1809. Moses, his grandfather, by trade a hatter, removed from New England to Brownsville, Pa., at an early date. On a farm at this place Moses, Jr., was born, who afterwards removed to West Virginia, where he married a Miss Susan Miller, and by her had eleven children, four sons and seven daughters, of whom Jacob was the third son. He was a captain of militia, and followed farming for a great many years. Susan, his wife, dying when aged forty-five, he married a Miss Riggs, by whom he had one child (now deceased). He died in 1845. Jacob, the subject of this sketch, received his education in a log schoolhouse, and at the age of fifteen years learned the trade of bricklaying, served an apprenticeship of three years, after which he removed to Birmingham, Pittsburgh, where he followed his occupation for eight years, mostly in the line of contracting, etc. In the summer of 1845 he came to what is now Mansfield, in Chartiers borough, Allegheny county, and being on the line of P., C. & St. L. R. R. Mr. Doolittle, upon his arrival at the above-named place, purchased sixty-seven acres of the Cubbage property, which was originally a portion of the tract of Col. John Campbell, of Kentucky, who in 1764 laid out the ground around Fort Duquesne, the embryo of the present city of Pittsburgh. After the original purchase, Mr. Doolittle continued buying and selling property, and has owned the land where Chartiers borough proper is now located. He married, in 1834, a Miss Sarah Cubbage, daughter of George and Nancy Cubbage, of this county, and eight children were born to them, three of whom are dead. The living are Susan Belinda (now Mrs. J. W. Lea), Martha E. (now Mrs. W. J. Glenn), Augusta (now Mrs. A. S. Rowland), Sadie (now Mrs. W. M. Kirby). Mrs. Sarah Doolittle died in 1851, and Mr. Doolittle married, in 1864, Mary E., daughter of Peter Spahr, originally from Carlisle, Pa. The second Mrs. Doolittle died Aug. 3, 1880, aged fifty-four years, one child surviving her.—Jacob Miller. Mr. Doolittle has retired from active life, although he still manages his own business affairs. He is a republican.

John Scott Robb, attorney, Pittsburgh, was born April 30, 1839, in North Fayette township, this county, son of Mark and Jane (Donaldson) Robb, who were born in this and Washington counties, respectively, and by profession, respectively; they celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage May 31, 1888; they are members of the U. P. Church. Mr. Robb's great-grandfather, John Robb, came from Lancaster county, in 1777, to Fayette township, where he lived. Mark Robb's father came here in 1775, and served in the revolutionary war in 1776. John S. Robb graduated at Jefferson College in 1864; studied law under James I. Kuhn, and was admitted to the bar of Pittsburgh in 1866. He served in the legislature in the session of 1869-70, and was district attorney from 1878 until 1884. In 1879 he prosecuted Samuel McClain for the murder of little Samuel Hunter. In 1882 he prosecuted John Gordon, James Geary and Albert Crusan for robbery of people called Big Tree or Turtle Creek; the first, named was sentenced to twenty-five years, and the other two to twenty years each. Two other prominent cases were the prosecution of Ward McConkey for murder (convicted and hanged).
and that of Thomas Whittaker for libel (sentenced to eight years, the longest sentence given for libel). Mr. Robb was married, April 7, 1859, to Mary A. A. Hemingray, of this county, daughter of William and Jane (O'Harra) Hemingray (both deceased). Nine children have blessed this union, viz.: John S., Jr. (who was admitted to the bar in March, 1888), Jane Donaldson, Elizabeth B., Maggie A. Y. Mary Evans, Mark Andrew, Camilla Styne, Joseph Allen and Grace Belle. The family attend Emsworth U. P. Church. Mr. Robb is a Freemason, and member of the I. O. O. F., K. of P., Jr. O. U. A. M. and A. O. U. W., also college society Kappa Phi Lambda. He has resided at Emsworth for seventeen years, and owns one of the prettest and best places in that village, which is known as "The Turkey-foot Rock" property.

J. S. McCartney, M. D., Tarentum, is a son of Jacob McCartney, and was born in Apollo, Armstrong county, Pa., in 1832. He received his literary training at different academic institutions, and his medical education at Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, graduating in 1856, and commencing the practice of medicine at Tarentum in December, 1857. Dr. McCartney has practiced continuously at Tarentum since locating there, and has been prominently identified with many of the local enterprises of the place. The first bank started here was an individual concern, but it soon developed into a national bank, in which the doctor was president and largely interested, and was one of the three trustees who started the first glassworks there. The doctor invested largely in real estate in Tarentum, and holds considerable interests in Chicago and Cook county, Ill. His real and personal estate amounts to over one hundred thousand dollars. His principal business now is of a financial character—investing in bonds, and loaning money on mortgages and real estate and collateral securities, and carrying on general real estate interests.

Thomas Galbraith, M. D., Tarentum, son of George and Isabel (Gilkerson) Galbraith, was born at Barnet, Vt., in 1816. His parents, who were natives of Scotland, came from there to Vermont, where they lived and died. Thomas received his literary education in Vermont and his medical training in Pennsylvania, having studied with Dr. David Allen, of Freeport, Armstrong county, Pa., and graduated at Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia, in 1853. He attended the first course during the winter of 1847-48, and in 1849 he with others went to California, where he engaged in mining until his return in 1852. His success there enabled him to complete his education, purchase a library, instruments, horse, etc., and immediately following his graduation he began the practice of his profession in Tarentum, where he has since been identified with many of its local enterprises. In 1860 Dr. Galbraith married Martha Jane, daughter of Robert and Nancy Gilliford, of Tarentum, and their children were Nannie Belle (deceased), Margaret Marion, Helen Maria, Annie Martha, Josephine Mary (now Mrs. O. C. Camp, of Tarentum), Emily May, Genie Elizabeth, Almaira Gilliford, Caroline Stewart, Thomas Edward, Missouri Hague, Dr. and Mrs. Galbraith are members of the U. P. Church.

FIFE. The Fife family is numbered among the oldest and most prominent families of Upper St. Clair township. In 1756 John Fife, a native of Ireland, immigrated to America and settled at Winchester, Va., where for ten years he was engaged in tailoring; later he came west, and took up one thousand acres of land in what is now Upper St. Clair township, Allegheny county. His brother William came to America in 1770, located in the vicinity of Philadelphia, and six years later joined his brother in Allegheny county, taking up a tract of 386 acres. A large number of descendants of these two brothers is scattered all over the United States. John Fife married Margaret Wright, also of Ireland, and by her had five children. John, the eldest child, was born in 1756, and was ten years of age when his parents came to Allegheny county. He married Isabella Thompson, who bore him three sons and five daughters. Maj. John Fife, now living, being the eldest son of this family. William Fife, brother of the pioneer, married and became the father of six children, three of whom were sons. James, the second son, married Jane McCown, and by her had eleven children.

Maj. John Fife was born in this county in 1801. He is a son of John and Isabella (Thompson) Fife, the former of whom died in 1814, aged fifty-eight years, and the latter in 1854, aged ninety-two years. Maj. Fife was born and reared on the farm where he now resides. He has followed agricultural pursuits through life, and owns one hundred and ten acres of the original one-thousand-acre tract purchased by his grandfather. Maj. Fife married, in 1834, Isabella, who became the mother of seven children, as follows: Sarah Ann (deceased), Isabella (deceased), Elizabeth, Margaret, Hannah, John T. and Mary Jane. John T. was born in 1857 on his father’s farm; was educated at the public schools, and, like his ancestors, has followed farming. He enlisted in 1861 in Co. H, 62d P. R., and served three years, the last two years as third sergeant; was wounded at Spottsylvania May 12, 1864, and soon afterward returned home. He married, in 1866, Jane, daughter of William and Ruth Morton, and five children were born to them: Maggie E., Lula A., Anna R., J. Pearl and John M., all living. This family are members of the Presbyterian Church. Politically John T. is a Republican.

Thomas Fife, son of James and Margaret Jane (McCown) Fife, and grandson of William Fife, was born in this county in 1805, and is the last member of his generation living. He was born and reared on his present farm, which was formerly his father’s part of the tract purchased by his grandfather, William. He married, in 1836, Jane McCown, and had five children by their union: James, Robert and Thomas M. Thomas Fife owns 110 acres of land, and has long since retired from active work, but his wishes are respected in the management of the farm. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and, like his father before him, voting the democratic ticket.

NATHANIEL FIFE, a son of Nathaniel and Isabella Fife, and grandson of William and Margaret (Bovd) Fife, and a direct descendant from John Fife, the pioneer, was born in 1837. He was educated in the public schools, and has always been a farmer. He married, in October, 1864, Elizabeth Ann Jordan, daughter of Jacob and Ann (Hickman) Jordan, and four children were born to them, of whom but one son now remains. Mr. Fife has always followed farming; is a member of the Presbyterian Church; politically a republican.

WILLIAM T. FIFE was born on his present farm in 1842, the third son and fifth child of Thompson and Margaret (Espy) Fife, and grandson of John Fife. Thompson has always been a farmer, and died in 1860, aged fifty-four years. William T. was educated at the public schools in his township, and has always followed farming. He first married, in 1864, Caroline, daughter of Robert Fife, and two children were born to them: Thompson J. E. and Robert Howard. His second marriage was with Belle E., daughter of William Sterrett, M. D., of Butler county, and four children were the result of this union, three now living: Carrie M., William S. and Sarah E. Mr. Fife is a republican, and has held township offices; he is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM J. FIFE was born in this county in 1841, the son of John Fife, who is a direct descendant of William Fife, the pioneer. John Fife married Mary P. Adams, daughter of Johnson Adams, of this county, and of the eleven children born to this union nine are living. John was born in 1815, a son of William and Elizabeth McCormick. William J., the eldest son born to his parents, was educated at the public schools, and has followed the pursuits of the farm, with the exception of the time passed in the service of his country. He enlisted, in 1861, in Co. H, 63d regiment, and served three years. He married, in 1867, Mary C., daughter of William and Rebecca (McMillan) Caldwell, and granddaughter of John McMillan, the founder of Jefferson College. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Fife are as follows: J. Frank, William C., Samuel M., Rebecca and Alice. Mr. Fife has lived for eight years on his present farm, which was formerly the Caldwell property. He has been elder of the Presbyterian Church for twelve years.

JAMES FIFE, the former a son of James and Mary (McCown) Fife. Robert Fife was father of five children, from thirty to sixty-seven years; his widow died in 1881, aged seventy-three years. Robert, at his death, owned one hundred acres of land. James Fife, Jr., was educated at the common schools and Bethel Academy, and was married, in 1870, to Miss Margaret Ann, daughter of James and Eliza (Hudman) Morgan. Three children, Mary E., Sadie Mabel and James Morgan, have blessed their union. Mr. Fife is a member of the Presbyterian Church; in politics a democrat.

Dr. S. R. Kiddoo, Bridgeville, is a native of this county, born in 1850. His father, Samuel Kiddoo, a farmer, was born and reared in this county, and married to Margaret, daughter of Rev. Samuel Ralston, of Washington county, Pa., and by her had seven children; he died in 1850, aged forty-five years. The subject of this memoir is the youngest of the family, received a public-school education, and was a student at Bethel Academy and at Friendship, N. Y. He commenced the study of medicine under Dr. Wilson, of Mount Washington, in 1873, and entered Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia, in 1874, graduating in 1876. He commenced the practice of his profession at Hill's station, Washington county, and there remained until 1884, when he removed to Bridgeville, and has since practiced here. Dr. Kiddoo married, in 1874, Miss Champlain, of New York, and two children bless their union: Carrie B. and Maggie R. The doctor is a member of the R. A., and of the Presbyterian Church; he is a republican.

C. B. SCHREINER, M. D., Mount Lebanon, was born in this county in 1832. His parents, Dr. Samuel and Lucinda (McClurkin) Schreiner, had a family of five children, two of whom are now living. Dr. Samuel was for twenty-two years a practicing physician in Plum township. He was born in Lawrenceville, graduated at the University of Pittsburgh, and died in 1865, aged forty-seven years. The subject of this memoir was educated at the public schools and academy, and was a student at Jefferson College. He commenced the study of medicine in 1874 at Philadelphia, Dr. Stewart being his preceptor, and graduated in 1877 at Long Island College hospital, and immediately commenced the practice of his profession in Mount Lebanon. He married, in 1878, Myrtle, daughter of G. P. Reed, of Indiana, Indiana county, Pa., and five children were born to them, all of whom are living: Hallie, Samuel, Carrie, Adella and an infant. The doctor is a member of the U. P. Church; politically a republican.

W. A. HERIOTT, farmer, postoffice Federal, was born in this county in 1836. His great-grandfather, Thomas Herriott, came to America from Ireland in 1785, some time prior to the revolutionary war, and settled in Maryland. He was a sickle-maker by trade, a good mechanic, and in 1786 came to Allegheny county with his son James, then eight years old, settled on Chartiers creek, and purchased a small tract of land. James grew to manhood and learned the milling trade, but later in life followed farming. In 1812 he purchased a farm in South Fayette township known as "Hunter's camp." He married a daughter of David Gilmore, and by her had six sons and two daughters. Of these, David, the second son, born in 1809, married Isabella Fryer, and to them seven children were born, six of whom grew to manhood. David was a carpenter by trade; was also an extensive farmer, owning some 275 acres of land at his death, which occurred in 1853. W. A., the subject of this sketch, a son of David and Isabella Herriott, received a common-school education in Smith's bridge and was reared on his parents' farm at Huntersburg, on November 21, 1825. He married Rebecca Gilmore, January 20, 1850. Of their issue five sons and five daughters. The eldest, George, was born at Huntersburg, October 18, 1851; moved to Bridgeville, Pennsylvania, in 1876, and was educated there. The next, Lillie E., was born at Bridgeville, Pennsylvania, January 10, 1853; married William Coulter, of Washington county, and was educated in Allegheny county. The next, Maggie C., was born at Bridgeville, Pennsylvania, January 10, 1853; was educated in Washington county, and married David Coulter, of Washington county, in 1883. The next, Joseph, was born at Bridgeville, Pennsylvania, October 20, 1854; was educated in Allegheny county; was married to Mary Coulter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Coulter, of Washington county, in 1883. The next, Liram, was born at Bridgeville, Pennsylvania, January 10, 1856; was educated in Allegheny county; was married to Margaret (Crumpston) Latham, of Manchester, Connecticut, in 1883. The father of the above-named persons was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

James Latham, physician, postoffice White Ash, was born near the center of Penn township, June 12, 1849, and is the son of Abraham (a gardener) and Margaret (Crumpton) Latham, who came from Lancashire, England, to Pennsylvania in 1838. The father took an active interest in politics, and espoused the cause of the republican party; he died in 1887, aged seventy-six years, a member of Beulah Presbyterian Church; his widow, aged seventy-four, resides in Penn township. Their children are: Anna, wife of Mr. Stoner, of Beulah; James, a member of the Presbyterian Church; in politics a republican. On Christmas day, 1878, he married Elvina, daughter of James Aber, of Penn township, and they have one son, James Leondus, born May 1, 1883.

Joseph Stoner, farmer, postoffice White Ash, was born on the farm he now occupies in 1807. His parents, Frederick and Barbara (Whitmore) Stoner, were of German stock, born in Lancaster and Franklin counties, respectively. In 1796 Frederick bought this farm, and the following year settled thereon. He brought here two children, Christian and John, now deceased. Those born in Penn township were: Martha (Stotler), now deceased; Jacob, who died in Mercer county; Joseph; David, deceased; Susan (Bush), who died in Wooster, Ohio; Abram, who resides in Wilkinsburg; Frederick (the third) died in Franklin county. The parents were Mennonites. Frederick Stoner was a blacksmith, but gave up that trade after settling here. He died in 1853, aged sixty-six years, his widow in 1861, aged eighty-six. Joseph Stoner married, in 1841, Nancy, daughter of Rudolph Stotler, a revolutionary soldier, who settled here before the Stoners. She was born in Penn township, and died of cancer in 1861, aged fifty-six years. Rudolph, her second child, died of typhoid fever within three months of joining the 136th P. V. The other children are Frederick Whitmore and Joseph, on the home farm; Frances (Mrs. Emanuel Snively), at Iola, Kan.; and Ella (Mrs. Hugh Wilson), in Allegheny City. Mr. Stoner has served as school director and supervisor, and is a republican. Joseph W. Nesbit, surveyor and farmer, postoffice Beechmont, was born Jan. 7, 1842, in Allegheny county, Pa., a son of James and Eliza (Wood) Nesbit. He received his education at the public schools in Collier township, and was interested in the idea of becoming a surveyor. His grandfather having been familiar with that art, Mr. Nesbit learned it, and has followed it in connection with farming since 1860. He has been a teacher in the public schools of his township, and has been school director for twelve years; politically he is a republican. He owns over one hundred acres of land, which was the property of his father.

Dr. J. L. Srodes, physician, postoffice Woodville, is a native of Allegheny county, Pa., born in 1862, a son of Capt. William Q. and Caroline (Scott) Srodes. John M., grandfather of Dr. Srodes, came from Beaver county, Pa., and was for many years a steamboat captain; he died in 1883, aged fifty-two; his wife died in 1878, aged forty-five. They were the parents of seven children, of whom Dr. J. L., the third son, was educated at the public schools, Woodlawn Academy and the Indiana State Normal, and was a teacher for two years. He commenced the study of medicine when seventeen years of age, under Dr. S. Jennings, entered the Kentucky School of Medicine in 1886, and graduated from Western Pennsylvania Medical College in 1887. He is a member of the I. O. O. F.; in religion a Presbyterian, in politics a republican.

J. W. Sykes, M. D., residence at Osborn borough, was born in Clinton, N. Y., son of Orrin and Nancy (Catlin) Sykes, the latter of whom was descended from an old New England family. Mr. Sykes' ancestors came to America in 1630 with Gov. Winthrop. Dr. J. W. Sykes graduated in 1850 at Hamilton College, Clinton, N. Y. He read medicine in New York city with Dr. Fitch, and attended lectures in the New York University. In 1855 he graduated from the Hahnemann College of Philadelphia, and located in Buffalo; then after four years practice there he removed to Chicago, I11., and the following year (1858) located in Pittsburgh, where he has since been established. His specialty is chronic diseases, in the treatment of which he has been successful.

GENEALOGY AND BIOGRAPHY.

James Dawson, farmer, postoffice Glenfield, was born June 21, 1811, in Pittsburgh, Pa., son of James Dawson, who was born in 1777, in the barracks of Fort Duquesne, of Scotch descent. The paternal grandfather was a specially commissioned spy, with the rank of captain, in company with Sam Smith and Sam Brady. James Dawson, Sr., was reared in the fort; he learned the trade of stonecutter, and followed it all of his life. He was foreman in the quarry and setting department of the old penitentiary, now torn down. He was married to Faithie Reed, of Ireland, and to them were born seven children: James B., Martha H., Isabella S., James, John, Harry and Eliza. James Dawson was a Seceder, died in Ohio township. James Dawson, Jr., is the only one now living. He is a carpenter by trade, and followed it until 1851, when he was taken ill, and has been an invalid ever since. He was elected supervisor and collector in 1855, and held the office off and on until 1858. He was married to Fannie Barr, of Huntingdon county, Pa., and she died in 1861, aged forty-nine years. She was the mother of the following named children: James, a soldier in the late war, who died about four years ago; John, who was three years in the army as second lieutenant; Harry, William, Thomas, who died aged twenty-four years; Mrs. Eliza Morrow, Mrs. Mary Woods and Jennie. Mr. Dawson owns seventy-three acres of land in Ohio township, where he has lived since 1847. Politically he is a republican. He walked sixteen miles to vote for Henry Clay, and dined with him afterward.

Alexander Calhoun, farmer, P. O. Elizabeth, a son of John and Margaret Calhoun, was born on the farm he now owns, in Lincoln (then Elizabeth) township, in 1859. His grandfather, Adly Calhoun, a native of Ireland, emigrated to Pennsylvania, and about the year 1775 settled in Elizabeth township. He took out a patent for a large tract of land, and lived thereon until his death. His children were Jane, Nancy, Mary, Margaret and John. John was reared and educated in Elizabeth township; married Margaret Calhoun, a second cousin, and to them were born eight children: Adly, Mary A., John, Nancy and James (deceased), and Thomas, Moses and Alexander (living). Alexander was reared at home, and received his education in the schools of the county. In 1862 he married Sarah, daughter of Francis McClure, of Elizabeth township, located on the old family homestead and engaged in farming. They reared a family of five children: John Fraucis, Edward Alexander, Robert Calvin, Joseph Walter and Sarah Bell. Mr. Calhoun has been officially identified with Lincoln township since its formation from Elizabeth township, and has been secretary of the school board for twenty years.

He is a democrat. He and Mrs. Calhoun are members of the Presbyterian Church of Elizabeth.

Samuel Davidson, farmer, P. O. New Texas, was born in Plum township, this county, in April, 1831, a son of Elias and Martha (Meanor) Davidson, natives of Franklin county, Pa. Elias settled here about one hundred years ago, and died when Samuel was about twelve years of age. His grandfather, Col. Hugh Davidson, settled at the same place about ten years later with his wife, Katharine. He served in the Revolution, and was a trader when he came to Plum township. Samuel Davidson received a common-school education, and about 1864 began farming for himself. He enlisted Aug. 4, 1861, in Co. G, 136th P. V. I., assigned to the Army of the Potomac. At the battle of Fredericksburg he was wounded by a shell in the foot, and was in hospital one month. He then obtained a sixty days' furlough at home, and was discharged May 30, 1862. He married, in September, 1874, Susanna Wright, born in Franklin township, this county, May 29, 1835, a daughter of William and Eva (Sarver) Wright, also natives of this county. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Davidson: Eva Anna, Samuel James, Abram Garfield and Elias Bedford. They are members of the M. E. Church, Mr. Davidson of the G. A. R. He has been very successful and has a fine farm.

William Collingwood, insurance agent, postoffice Swissvale, is a native of Somerset county, Pa., born in 1812, a son of Thomas (a contractor) and Jane (Robinson) Collingwood, both natives of Londonderry, Ireland, former of whom emigrated to America in 1813, going first to Somerset, thence to Pittsburg, where he died. They had eight children, seven of whom were born in America. The subject of this memoir was educated at the common schools, and for the most part was engaged in commercial pursuits, as bookkeeper, etc., and for the past thirty-six years has been prominently identified with the insurance business. He served as director in Franklin school, Seventh ward, Pittsburg, and was chief engineer of the Pittsburg volunteer fire department. Mr. Collingwood has been married four times: first, in 1845, to Miss Sarah, daughter of John White, who bore him one child, now deceased; second, to Miss Sarah A. Hall, who bore him two children, Ella J. and Sarah E.; third, to Miss Harriet Wilson, by whom there are no children; fourth, to Maria L. daughter of David A. Foulk, and ten children were born to this union. viz.: David F., Louis W., Fannie R., Robert L., Clemens B., George J., Anna Duff, Mary Louisa, Howard Drucks and Loy Hartman. Of these Louis W. married E. B. Haslett, and Fannie R. married W. W. Cotton, attorney for the U. P. R. R. at Omaha. Mr. Collingwood lost one child by each of his first three wives. He was one of the thirteen original founders of the Presbyterian Church at Swissvale; was chosen elder of the same at the time, and he is now a member of the Wilkinsburg Presbyterian Church. In politics he is a republican.

Christopher M. Graham, retired farmer, postoffice Stewart's station, was born near Belfast, Ireland, in January, 1808, a son of John Graham, who came to America in 1828, bringing four sons with him. James, the eldest, died in Pittsburgh; William, John and Christopher became citizens of Patton township, this county. John, Stewart, who was pre-sessed of a tract of land in that township, on which he settled in 1830, and died during the same year at the age of fifty-five. His wife, Ann (Morrow) Graham, lived to the age of seventy-five. Christopher Graham was employed in an iron-foundry at Pittsburgh, and took charge of his father's estate at the death of the latter. In 1833 he married Susannah Shaw, who was born within two miles of his birthplace, October, 1819, daughter of Patrick Shaw, who died in Penn township, Westmoreland county, Pa. The family is connected with the U. P. Church; Mr. Graham has always been a democrat, and was active in support of the government during the civil war, and in establishing the free schools. The following are the names of his children: Susannah, deceased wife of Samuel Ramsey; Nancy, deceased wife of George Brown; John C., in Patton township; Belle, with her father; Mary M., deceased; Christopher, an infant, deceased; Christopher M., residing at Wall, in North Versailles; Elizabeth, wife of Robert Shaw, in Bloomfield, and David P., on his father's farm.

Robert E. Stewart, president Braddock National Bank, and attorney at law, North Braddock, was born in Westmoreland county, at the place now known as Stewart's station, in 1841, the youngest of nine children, seven of whom grew to maturity, born to John and Margaret (Shaw) Stewart. The family is of Scotch-Irish descent, the great-grandfather, John Stewart, having come from Ireland to America at an early date, and settled in Elizabeth township, Allegheny county, Pa. David Shaw, maternal grandfather of Robert E. Stewart, was an early settler and prominent farmer in Versailles township, this county, and John Stewart, father of Robert E., was a farmer, and died in 1865, aged sixty-nine years; his wife died in 1858, aged fifty-nine years. The subject of this memoir was reared on a farm, educated at the common schools, and attended an academy at Turtle Creek two and a half years, five months at Madison College, Ohio, one year at Jacksonville, Indiana county, and entered the junior class of Jefferson College in 1858, graduating in 1860. In 1862 he enlisted in Co. E, 133d P. V., and was mustered out at the expiration of the term of enlistment, with rank of first lieutenant. He was afterward commissioned major, and assigned to the 133d regiment, the S. colored troops, and was in command of the regiment when mustered out, in 1865. In that year he commenced the study of law under Hon. J. P. Sterrett, and in 1886 entered the office of Hon. W. G. Hawkins, Jr., and the late Hon. W. A. Penn, as a student, and was admitted to the bar May 9, 1867. Since then he has practiced his profession at the several courts of Allegheny county. In 1873 the Braddock Trust company was organized, and Mr. Stewart was elected vice-president. This organization existed until 1882, when a majority of its stockholders organized the Braddock National Bank, of which Mr. Stewart was elected president.

Our subject married, in 1868, Caroline Markle McMasters, daughter of John and Leonora (Markle) McMasters, and eight children were born to them: Margaret, John McMasters, Harry, Robert E., Jr., Leonora, James Sterrett, Caroline and David, all of whom are living except David, who died in infancy. Since 1875 Mr. Stewart has resided at North Braddock. He has always taken an active part in the public welfare of the community, being a leader in all educational and religious work. He is president of the Allegheny County School Directors' association. He and his family are members of the U. P. Church; politically he is a republican.

Frank F. Sneathen, attorney at law, Braddock. John B. Sneathen, father of this gentleman, is a native of Dauphin county, Pa., born in 1802, his parents having come from Scotland at an early date to Eastern Pennsylvania. When twelve years of age he accompanied his mother to Allegheny county for the purpose of acquiring a thorough education, and on attaining manhood's estate became engaged in various business enterprises, prominently those of commission merchant and coal-slipper on the Ohio. He married a Miss Keefer, an Ohio lady, who bore him five sons and four daughters; Frank F., the second son, was educated at the Pennsylvania Military Academy at Chester, and became lieutenant-colonel of the 18th regiment; entered Harvard College in 1877, graduating in 1879; commenced the study of law under the preceptorship of Marcus W. Acheson, and was admitted to the bar in 1880, since when he has practiced his profession at the bar of Allegheny county. In 1885 he removed to Braddock. He married, in 1886, Emma C., daughter of George A. Kim, a prominent glass-manufacturer of Pittsburgh. Mr. Sneathen is a member of the Methodist Church; in politics he is a republican.

W. E. Johnston, M. D., Etna, was born Aug. 6, 1834, in Butler county, Pa., where his grandfather, Ben. Johnston, a farmer, of Scotch-Irish descent, settled. The parents of W. E., William and Sarah A. (Pierro) Johnston are natives of Butler county, and now reside in Etna with Dr. Johnston. The primary education of this gentleman was received at the academy and normal school of his native county. He read medicine with Dr. E. Cramp, and attended lectures at Starling Medical College, Columbus, Ohio, graduating in the class of 1882. He located at once in Etna, and entered into partnership with William I. Purvis, the leading physician of Etna and Sharpsburg, which partnership lasted until the death of Dr. Purvis. Dr. Johnston has built up an excellent practice in the Allegheny County Medical society, the American Medical association and the ninth International Medical Congress. He is a Freemason.

DAVID S. DICKSON, justice of the peace and farmer, postoffice Bakerstown, is a son of John and Elizabeth (Smith) Dickson. John Dickson, a native of County Down, Ireland, came to America about 1814, first locating in Pittsburgh, where he engaged in the manufacture of brick on the Monongahela river, and here remained fourteen years. He then moved to Richland township, located on the farm now owned by David S., and here lived until his death, in 1867; his widow died in 1888. Five of their children still live: Samuel, a farmer in Richland township; John, in Hoboken, Allegheny county; Mary, wife of Robert Dickey, in Richland township; Nancy B., wife of George Wallace, in Pine township, and David S. The last named was born on the homestead in 1845, educated at the public schools of the township, and has always followed farming. In 1868 he married Mary, daughter of James S. and Mary Jane (Wallace) Crawford, and they have two living children—Andrew L. and George S. Mr. Dickson was elected justice of the peace of Richland township in 1881, which office he still holds; has also held all the important offices of the township, and at present is president of the Bakerstown Mutual Fire Insurance company. He and family are members of the U. P. Church of West Union.

JAMES L. GARDNER, merchant, postoffice Bennett, was born March 4, 1858, in Butler county, Pa., son of George and Mary Gardner, the former a native of Pennsylvania, the latter of England. James L. was reared on the farm in Butler county. In 1875 he came to Pittsburgh, where he clerked four years for C. W. Roberts. In 1880 his old employer opened a small grocery-store in Millvale, which James conducted eight months; then bought the store and enlarged it, starting with one clerk, and now employing ten. The business is in a flourishing condition, and is the largest store in Millvale; he has started a branch store in the upper part of the town; also has half interest in the shoe store, under firm name of F. C. & J. L. Gardner, former being his brother. Mr. Gardner married Minnie Breiner, of Millvale. They are both members of the Presbyterian Church; Mr. Gardner is a republican.

SILAS SAMPLE, farmer, postoffice Wildwood, is a son of Robert A. and Mary (Simpson) Sample. James Sample, the grandfather, was a native of Northumberland county, Pa., and located on Girty run, in what is now Shaler township, this county, sometime previous to 1780. There he resided until his death, in 1830. He was the father of eight children, all of whom are deceased except William, who resides at Sharpsburg. Robert, the father of Silas, was the fifth child, and was born Dec. 10, 1793, at East Liberty. In 1819 he located on the farm now owned by James Sample, and lived there until his death, in 1856. His wife died July 12, 1855. They had nine children, five of whom are still living: James, a farmer of McCandless township; John, a physician of Wilkinsburg; Sarah, wife of Robert Ferguson, of Hampton township; Robert and Silas, on the homestead. Our subject was born January 5, 1839, and has always resided on the homestead. In 1862 he enlisted in Co. D, 139th P. V., and was wounded in May, 1863, at the second battle of Fredericksburg, after which he was honorably discharged. In 1869 he married Eliza J., daughter of Andrew C. and Mary Ann (Steen) Stewart, of Butler county, and they have seven children living: David A., Robert F., Mary E., Susannah S., William G., Harriet G. and an infant, all at home. Mr. Sample has held the office of auditor of the township, and is a member of Col. Clarke Post, No. 162, G. A. R., of Allegheny. He and his wife are members of Cross Roads Presbyterian Church, of which he is an elder.

ROBERT SAMPLE, farmer, postoffice Wildwood, is the fourth living son of Robert A. and Mary (Simpson) Sample, and was born July 14, 1833. At an early age he learned the carpenter-trade, and at present is engaged in farming a part of the homestead, which he inherited at the death of his father. In 1864 he enlisted in Co. C, 213th P. V., and served until the close of the war. In 1855 he married Harriet, daughter of Jacob and Catherine (Shaefer) Meyers, of this county. They have six children living: Isabella, wife of David J. Baden, of Harrison township; Catherine A., wife of Thomas Morrow, of Richland township; Robert M., Jacob, William Wade and John S., at home.

SAMUEL G. POLLOCK, farmer, postoffice McKeipsport, a son of John and Eliza (Gormley) Pollock, was born on the farm he now owns, in Lincoln township, this county, in 1832. His paternal grandfather was one of the first settlers of what is now Lincoln township, and was killed in 1809 while felling a tree on the place now owned by Samuel G.; he built the first courthouse at Greensburg. His parents lived and died in Lincoln township. Their children were Martha Jane (Mrs. Lee), Elizabeth A. (Mrs. Marvin), David H., John A., Esther C. (Mrs. Patterson), Nancy I. (Mrs. Dramon), Sarah G., Henry G., Violet (deceased), William C. and Matthew M. Samuel G. lived with his parents until their death, his father having died March 16, 1871, and his mother in April, 1881. Oct. 22, 1863, Samuel G. married Nannie R., daughter of John Sill, of Versailles township, and located on the old homestead in Lincoln, engaged in farming. He has three children living: Ella L., Emma M. and Susie F.; and had three deceased: Maggie S., Harry and Samuel T. Mr. and Mrs. Pollock are members. of the U. P. Church of McKeensport; he is a republican.

William King Armstrong, farmer, post-office New Texas, was born in Plum township, in 1828, a son of Thomas and Nancy (King) Armstrong. Thomas was born in 1796; was one of the first in Plum township to support religion and temperance; was a strong abolitionist, and was for many years elder in the Presbyterian Church; he died at the age of seventy-six years; his wife died in 1840, aged thirty-six years. Seven children were born to them: William K., Elizabeth, John, Robert, Nancy, James and Newton (deceased when aged nineteen years). Of these William K. received his schooling here and in Summit county, Ohio, and at twenty-eight years of age started for himself on a rented farm. In 1862 he bought his present farm at orphans’ court sale, and has placed it in fine condition. He married, in 1858, Susan Alter, a daughter of Jacob and Jane Alter, natives of Plum township. They died, the former in 1888, aged eighty-two years, the mother in 1880, aged seventy-seven years. Eight children, five of whom are living, were born to Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong: Emma (Mrs. Harry Reiter, residing at East End), Jennie: Newton, a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College, class of 1888, is preparing for the Presbyterian ministry; Samuel, now a student at Duff’s Mercantile College, Pittsburgh, Pa., and Lucinda, at home; Hugh died when aged fourteen years, Allen at the age of two years, and one died in infancy. The family are members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Armstrong was a republican, but is now a prohibitionist. His grandfather, James Armstrong, was of Scotch-Irish descent, and his maternal grandfather, Robert King, was an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and died in 1843, aged eighty years; his wife was Nancy Davidson.

John Hughley, farmer, post-office Monroeville, is the only son living of William and Jane Ann (Cavett) Hughley, and was born on his present farm in 1837, a grandson of John Hughley, who was born in February, 1752, in Lancaster county, Pa., and came to the farm above mentioned about 1780. William Hughley was born on the same farm in 1792, and died there May 26, 1859. His wife was a native of Westmoreland county, and died in 1859, aged fifty-one years. John, the subject of this sketch, received his education in the common schools of Patton township, and remained on the farm with his father until the latter died, when he became owner of the farm. In 1870 he married Mary Jane Katz, born in 1846 in Patton township, a daughter of Prestley and Margaret (McDowell) Katz. Her grandfather, Alexander McDowell, was a very early settler here, and was in the war of 1812. Three children bless the union of Mr. and Mrs Hughley: Margaret Ann, Lavina Lucinda and Harriet Cavett. The family are members of the Murrysville Presbyterian Church. Mr. Hughley had one brother, William, who died in 1843.

George T. Miller, retired, post-office Port Perry, a son of Col. William L. and Jane (Torrence) Miller, was born in Fayette county, Pa., in 1833. The Millers are descendants of revolutionary stock on both sides. Col. Miller was born in New Jersey in 1738, and moved in 1800 to Fayette county, where he was brought up as a carpenter and builder. There he married, and was largely interested in the iron business, having built the Breakneck Furnace near Connellsville. In 1837, having made an advantageous disposition of his interests, he removed to Port Perry, where he purchased an extensive tract of coal-land. Port Perry was laid out and platted in 1798, by John Perry, its founder, from whom it derives its name, but on completion of Philadelphia pike the village was deserted. Col. Miller resurveyed it and laid it out anew in 1848. This was at one time the head of navigation, and an old Indian trail led to the mouth of Turtle creek, where stood the former house where to the colonel’s purchase was taken out by John Frazier, who lived near, on the ground afterward Braddock’s battle-ground, and was with the English in the fight. Washington stopped and rested with Frazier when on a secret mission to French creek. Col. Miller was one of the prominent men of the state, and in addition to his furnace near Connellsville had a lumber-mill, paper-mill and saw-mill, and found leisure to serve his constituency in the convention held to revise the state constitution, and was one of the youngest members of that body. His children were George T., Mary P., now Mrs. Dr. Knox, of McKeensport; Phoebe Ann, now Mrs. Daniel F. Cooper, of McKeensport, and Albert G., who occupies and owns the old homestead. George T. Miller married, in 1853, Mary Jane, daughter of Samuel Craig, of Washington county. Mr. Miller has been extensively engaged in business, owning valuable lumber- and flouring-mills for thirty-five years, and also valuable coal properties. He resides on the banks of the Monongahela river, a delightful location, at Port Perry. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have four children: William S., a clergyman at Washington, D.C.; Mortimer C., at Turtle Creek, a member of the Pittsburgh bar; John T., at Edgewood, with the Philadelphia Gas company, and Joseph T., now being educated. Mr. Miller is one of the representative men of this portion of Allegheny county, but having sold out his coal and lumber interests is not actively engaged at the present.

William McKinney. About the year 1832, this pioneer emigrated to America from County Derry, Ireland, and for a time resided in Pittsburgh, Pa., whence he removed to Braddock, and purchased 200 acres and its allowances, originally the Frazier property, bounded by the Monongahela river and Turtle creek, a spot rendered historic as having been the retreat of Gen. Wash-
HISTORY OF ALLEGHENY COUNTY.

W. H. Leary.

McKinney and Braddock after the defeat of the latter. Mr. McKinney was married in Ireland, and became the father of five children: John, Robert, Sarah, Mary and Nancy. The father, who was by occupation a farmer at time of his death, owned a large tract of land, which was then divided between his two sons, Robert and John. Robert McKinney was born in 1812; was a farmer by occupation; was married to Mary Dick, who died leaving him one child, W. J. McKinney; was afterward married to Catherine Lannon, who bore him nine children, five of whom are living: Samuel, Harvey, Catherine, Sarah and Eleanor A. He departed this life July 14, 1887, aged seventy-four.

Samuel Neely (deceased) was born in what is now Robinson township, Allegheny county, Pa. In early life he was engaged in the manufacture of salt, but afterward in the manufacture of plows at Pittsburgh, Pa. In 1823 he purchased a farm of 170 acres, which is now in the borough of Coraopolis. He married Sarah McCormick, who was born in Westmoreland county, Pa., a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Wilkinson) McCormick. He died Feb. 7, 1875, aged eighty-three, and she in 1885, aged seventy-eight years; both members of the Presbyterian Church. William McCormick was born in Ireland, and was but five years old when he came with his parents to Pennsylvania. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and for several years kept a public house; also owned a farm on the Steubenville road, about six miles from Pittsburgh. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Neely had six children. One of his daughters, Martha Neely, resides at Coraopolis, on the old farm; another daughter, Mrs. E. J. Riter, who died recently at her residence in Coraopolis, was the widow of the late James M. Riter, manufacturer, of Pittsburgh. Mrs. Riter had one son, Samuel N., residing at Coraopolis.

William Ewing, Jr., miller and postmaster at Ewing’s Mills, was born where he now resides, July 15, 1839. His paternal grandfather, William Ewing, came to what is now Ewing’s Mills, Moon and Robinson townships, and purchased six hundred acres on both sides of Montour creek. He was a millwright, and built a grist- and saw-mill near where the present mill stands. He afterward put up and operated a woolen-and saw-mill on the present site of the coke works. He married Elizabeth Kirkpatrick, and both were members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he was an elder. He died aged eighty-five years. They had four sons and two daughters, who lived to be men and women. Their eldest son, David K., born at Ewing’s Mills in 1795, died of cholera in 1845. He built the present mill at Ewing’s Mills postoffice; was married to Frances M. Woods, daughter of Rev. William Woods, and had four sons, of whom William is the only one living. The latter married, May 22, 1838, Elizabeth, daughter of Capt. John and Hannah (Scott) Young, of Robinson township. Mr. and Mrs. William Ewing have seven children living: David K., married to Laura Allen, and residing in Denver, Colo.; J. X., who owns the store at Ewing’s Mills, married to Jennie Harbison; Sarah W., wife of Matthew Phillips, of Moon township; Hannah, wife of Frank Woods, in Bethel township; T. M. and Lizzie, at home, and Edwin E., assistant miller with his father. The parents are members of the Forest Grove Presbyterian Church. But two of them were prominent leaders.

John Vance, retired, postoffice West Elizabeth, a son of Isaac and Nancy (Thompson) Vance, was born in Washington county, in 1821. His parents were also natives of that county, his mother having been born in 1797 and his father in 1800. Aug. 26, 1846, the subject of these lines married Hannah Grimes, who died in 1884, and their children are Jane, now Mrs. Jemmy Moran, of West Elizabeth; Ann, now wife of John Carney, of Allegheny county; Katherine, married, and a resident of Kentucky; Caroline, now Mrs. Angelo Houseman, in Dravosburg; Tillie, now Mrs. Charles Penn, in West Elizabeth; William P., who was killed in Walton’s pit, and Joseph P., a clerk in Walton’s store. Mr. Vance has been an extensive traveler, especially through the southern states. He is a republican, and has been prominently identified with his township officially.

Hickman Family. This family is one of the oldest in South Fayette township. About the year 1750 Nicholas Hickman came from Germany to America, and located at Frederick, Md. He was the father of three children: Adam, Elizabeth and Peter. Peter was the only member of the family who came to this county, moving here in 1772. He married Abigail Faucitt, and to them seven sons and three daughters were born, viz.: Joseph, in 1797; John, in 1799; Benjamin, in 1801; Daniel, in 1803; Stewart, in 1805; Moses, in 1807; Elizabeth (Mrs. Espey), in 1809; Nicholas, in 1811; Anna (Mrs. Jordan), in 1814; and Abigail, in 1818. But two of his family now remain, Mrs. Espey and Mrs. Jordan. Peter Hickman followed farming all his life; was a hard-working and industrious man, with a remarkable constitution. He started in life in humble circumstances, and by his own industry and perseverance became the owner of a vast amount of land, besides other wealth.

Moses Hickman, farmer, postoffice Cecil, Washington county, is a son of Stewart Hickman, Sr., who was born in 1805, the fifth son of Peter and Abigail (Faucitt) Hickman. Stewart, Sr., married, in 1844, Nancy Alexander, daughter of Samuel and Margaret (Eife) Alexander, and they became the parents of five children, four of whom are living: Moses, Abigail, Isabella and John Alexander. Stewart was a farmer, and died in 1871, aged sixty-six years. His widow, now sixty-eight years old, resides with her son Moses. Moses Hickman was born in 1845; educated at the common schools, and, like his ancestors, has followed farming. He married, in 1880, Esther McNary, an estimable lady, and a daughter of Joseph and Jennie (Allison) McNary. Mr. Hickman now owns 170 acres of the tract left him by his father. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, in politics a republican.

John Alexander Hickman, farmer, post-office Herriottsville, was born in 1853, the youngest child born to Stewart, Sr., and Nancy (Alexander) Hickman. He lives on the farm adjoining the one he was reared on, and was educated at the common schools of his district. He married, in 1887, Rebecca Lesnett, daughter of Francis and Christina (Neil) Lesnett, of this county. Mr. Hickman is now serving as auditor of South Fayette township. In politics he is a republican, and he and Mrs. Hickman are members of the Presbyterian Church.

Mrs. Mary E. Smith, druggist, West Elizabeth, daughter of William Bradford and Sarah A. (McQuaid) Sprague, was born in Jacksonville, Westmoreland county, Pa. Her father, a native of Vermont, came to Westmoreland county when about twenty-two years of age, and engaged in business as a tailor. There he married Sarah A., daughter of James McQuaid, one of the old families of Westmoreland county. They removed to Saltsburg, Indiana county, Pa., where they remained for some years, but eventually returned to Elizabeth, where he embarked in the drug trade, and afterward came to West Elizabeth, where he continued the business of druggist. They reared a family of four children: James M. (in Pittsburgh), Nannie E. (now Mrs. McKeever, of Glenfield, Allegheny county), Ida (now Mrs. G. W. Conrad, of Uniontown, Fayette county) and Mary E., who, in 1870, married John H. Smith, of Elizabeth township; at first they resided in Allegheny, but soon on account of ill health Mr. Smith was obliged to travel. He received no permanent benefit, however, and died in 1874. Mrs. Smith returned to West Elizabeth, and in 1879 married a second time, entering the drug business. Mr. Smith left one child, now the wife of R. L. Roller, of West Elizabeth.

David Collins, farmer, P. O. Wilkinsburg, was born in Lower Chanceford, York county, Pa., in 1805, the fourth son of David and Dorcas (Neel) Collins, of Lancaster county, of Scotch-Irish descent. The father was a blacksmith, and a member of the light-horse company in the war of 1812; in early life was a member of the U. P. Church and later an elder in the Presbyterian; he died in York county, aged sixty-two, and his widow in Lancaster county at the age of ninety-eight. David when nineteen years old began work as a stonemason, which trade he followed four years. He came to Allegheny county in 1835, and ran coal to New Orleans sixteen years. In 1850 he left the trade on which he resides, built a house and barn, and moved thereon the same fall, and has always been successful as a farmer. Since the age of eighteen he has been connected with the Presbyterian Church, as are all his family except the youngest son. Politically Mr. Collins was an abolitionist, and is now a republican; was county commissioner three years during the civil war. In 1836 he married Mary Manifold, a native of Hopewell, York county, and a daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Turner) Manifold. Joseph, father of Henry Manifold, was a Presbyterian elder, and his wife, Eleanor Cogle, was a Quaker preacher, who walked forty miles to Baltimore to yearly meeting when she was eighty years old. Mr. Collins' four eldest sons were in Co. A, 101st P. V., during the war, the youngest running away to join when sixteen. David Henry died of disease contracted in the service, at the age of twenty-one; George Washington died in Florence prison in his twenty-first year. The other children are Dorcas Roselma (Mrs. J. L. McDowell), Elizabeth Grizelda, Cassius Clay, Joseph, Mary Emma, Ralph, Helen Manifold (Mrs. S. M. Britton) and Robert Arthurs.

Rev. Jonas K. Cramer, pastor Thirty-seventh Street Baptist Church, Pittsburgh, was born July 8, 1835, in Hagerstown, Md., a son of Peter and Elizabeth (Keller) Cramer, natives of Germany. Peter was a school-teacher in early life, but later a farmer, and died in West Virginia at the age of seventy-one years; his wife died at the age of eighty years. Jonas K. attended school at Peters burg, Md., and the academy at Connellsville, Pa. His father moved to Preston county, W. Va., when our subject was a year old, and there the latter lived twenty-four years. In 1850 he went to Connellsville, resided five years, and then removed to Westmoreland county, Pa. He was licensed to preach by Big Crossing Church, in Maryland, and ordained at Connellsville, Pa., in May, 1853. His first charge was at what is now Fayette City, and later he went to Salem Church, Westmoreland county, where he spent twelve years. His next charge was at Elizabeth, this county, where he remained twelve and a half years; then moved to Westmoreland county, and was pastor of Peter's Creek Church from Feb ruary, 1879, till his recent appointment to the Thirty-seventh Street Baptist Church, Pittsburgh. Mr. Cramer married, Dec. 20, 1843, Susanna Hampstead, who was born Sept. 18, 1826, in Preston county, W. Va., a daughter of Jeremiah and Elizabeth (King) Hampstead, natives, respectively, of Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Twelve children have blessed this union: Amelia Elizabeth, married to Charles Oliver, in Elizabeth; Corbin Amos Gilbert, in Ohio; William King, in Kansas; Mary Ann, married to Hays Bell, in Finleyville; Francis Wayland, a Baptist minister at Mount Gilead, Ohio; Caroline A., who died Aug. 26, 1861; Sallie Marie, married to Isaac Wall, living near Elizabeth, Pa.; Harry Eli m, married, and residing in Elizabeth; Emma Troth, wife of Thomas Battey, proprietor of Keystone House, Pittsburgh; Lorena Blanch, Linnie May and Ida Bell are at home. While at Library Mr. Cramer's house was destroyed by fire, but fortunately all his effects were saved.

James Aber (deceased) was born in 1817, in Jefferson township, Allegheny county, Pa., a son of Jacob and Jane (Elliott) Aber. His parents settled here about the beginning of the nineteenth century, living for some time in a log hut. Our subject was educated at the schools of Jefferson township, and in 1839 married Kezia, daughter of John and Betsy (Beam) McMullen, who was born June 29, 1818, in Snowden township, of which her mother was a native. Seven sons and one daughter were born to Mr. and Mrs. Aber, viz.: William, now residing at Homestead, in this county; Hythamen, in Cambria county; Elliott, in Jefferson township; John (deceased); Samuel, in Washington county; Jacob, at home; and Elizabeth, wife of William Brogan, residing a short distance from the old homestead, in Snowden township; they have two children, Charles and Nanny. The seventh boy died in infancy. Mr. Aber settled on his farm in Snowden township about 1868, and built up a comfortable home. His death occurred Dec. 29, 1887. Jacob Aber, the younger living son, was born in Jefferson township in 1850, and is one of the sturdy and industrious young men of Snowden. He had charge of his father's farm for some years before his death, and continues to successfully conduct the old homestead.

Dr. G. R. Griffith, physician, postoffice Federal, is a native of West Virginia, born in 1847, a son of Benjamin, of Welsh ancestry, who settled in West Virginia at an early date, and was married to Margaret Knox. Their eldest son, Dr. G. R. Griffith, was educated at the public schools, and reared on a farm. He commenced the study of medicine in 1869, Dr. Bradley, of Burgettstown, Pa., being his preceptor. He attended medical lectures at Columbus, Ohio, and has practiced his profession since 1871. On coming to this county he located at Oakdale, where he remained four years; thence he went to Venice, Washington county, but again returned to Oakdale, remaining two years and a half, and in 1886 he located in his present place. In 1874 the doctor married Mollie J. Turner, who died in 1877, the mother of one child, Charles R., and he next married, Sept. 19, 1880, Ella R., daughter of John Anderson, of this township; and they have one child, Lena. His union: J. B., G. M. and M. E. Dr. and Mrs. Griffith are members of the Presbyterian Church. He is a democrat.

Goodman Y. Coulter, retired farmer, postoffice Bridgeville, one of the oldest citizens of South Fayette township, was born in 1804, the third youngest of eight children born to Moses and Margery (Pauict) Coulter and now the only survivor of the family. Moses Coulter settled in Fayette township in an early day, and was during active life among the most prominent of his citizens; was an extensive farmer, and erected a mill, which he successfully operated for many years. He was a religious man, and took a prominent part in the founding of Bethany Church. He died in 1835, at the age of sixty years, owning at his death some four hundred acres of land, which was equally divided among his children. Goodman Y. was born and reared on a farm, and educated at a log school. His first business venture was the management of his father's gristmill, which he successfully carried on for over twenty-five years, also in the meantime farming. Mr. Coulter was first married, in 1825, to Euphemia Middleswath, daughter of Moses Middleswath, an early pioneer of Allegheny county, and to this union were born eight children, viz.: Olivia (Mrs. Hay), Moses, Goodman, Elizabeth (Mrs. Roach), Margery, Cynthia, Mary Jane and John; all deceased except Elizabeth (Mrs. Roach), who is now living in the same township. His second marriage was with Julia, daughter of Samuel McKown, one of the earliest settlers of this part of Allegheny county. To this second union three children were born: Maggie (Mrs. Nesbitt), Euphemia (Mrs. Herriott) and Anna (Mrs. Fryer). Mr. Coulter was elected to the office of treasurer of the county by the republican party; served also as director of the county poor, and was director of a prominent bank in Pittsburgh. He is not a member of any religious denomination, but has always been a liberal supporter of the Presbyterian Church. He now owns three hundred acres of land, which is worked under his management. He has been afflicted for some years with failing sight, and has become nearly blind. Politically he is a prohibitionist.

John Stoner Stotler, farmer, postoffice Negley, was born on the farm where he now resides, in 1814. His parents, Andrew and Elizabeth (Bush) Stotler, were also born in Penn township; his father on the same farm. Henry, father of Andrew, came from Franklin county in 1790, and died in 1822, in his seventy-third year. Abram Bush, father of Elizabeth, also arrived on the farm. He lived on Creek. Andrew Stotler died in February, 1859, aged fifty years, and his widow in 1886, aged nearly seventy-three. They had following-named children, all save two being residents of Penn: Henry H., killed at the first battle of Fredericksburg; Abra- ham B., John S., Levina Anna (Wilson), Samuel R., Andrew P., Martha E. (Palmam), David, George B. Arcy, bald L., Alexander S. J. S. Stotler received a common-school education, and has always been a farmer. In December, 1882, he married Fanny Rebecca Lerenalvistler, who was born in 1862 in Westmoreland county, a daughter of Samuel and Eve Susannah Kistler, of German descent. Two children bless the home of Mr. Stotler: Olive May and James Edwin. The family is united with the U. P. Church. Mr. Stot- ler, like all of that name, is a republican, and has been school director and supervisor.

Andrew Perkins Stotler, farmer, postoffice Negley, was born on the farm where J. S. Stotler resides, Jan. 11, 1848, which has always been his home. March 28, 1882, he was united in marriage with Margaret E. Pahlman, and they have one child, Alice Barbara. They have also taken a child from the Allegheny Orphan Asylum to rear, named Mary Grossman. Mr. and Mrs. Stotler are members of the Unity U. P. Church.

Joseph Higbee Maits, farmer, postoffice Broughton, was born Dec. 28, 1833, on his present farm, a son of John and Elizabeth (Higbee) Maits, former farmer, born on the same place March 14, 1806, and died June 26, 1876; latter born one mile west of her son's present place, Feb. 14, 1810. His grandfather, Casper Maits, was born east of the mountain, and settled here in the beginning of the eighteenth century; his wife was Catherine Ann Spesserd. Joseph H. spent his early youth with his father on the farm, and attended the public schools. In 1856 he began farming for himself; in 1874, with his brother, erected a sawmill, and two years later they added a gristmill to it, which they operated five years, when Joseph H. sold out. May 14, 1857, he married Rebecca Jane Phillips, born Nov. 29, 1840, in Butler county, Pa., a daughter of John C. and Elizabeth (Smith) Phillips; former born Dec. 7, 1812, and died Nov. 9, 1856; latter died when Mrs. Maits was very young. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Maits: John William (married Nov. 9, 1882, to Sadie Buckley, of Pittsburgh; they have one child, Charles Buckley; live at home and work the place), Sarah E. (died March 29, 1885) and Milton Howard (at home). All are members of the Baptist Church. In September, 1887, Mr. Maits had his leg amputated, and was a great sufferer for several months.

Charles Washington Clendenning, farmer, Bakerstown, is supposed to be the oldest resident of Allegheny county, and having celebrated his centennial anniversary in May, 1888, was invited by the board of county commissioners to attend the anniversary of his birthday. He was born May 30, 1788, in County Westmeath, Ireland, son of Arthur and Margaret (Watson) Clendenning, natives of County Donegal, Ireland. Mr. Clendenning was the oldest of eight children, and at the age of twenty-two he moved to Meadville, Crawford county, Pa., where he threshed buckwheat. He was a weaver in the old country, and did some work in that line in Meadville during his first winter here. Six months later he came to this county, and for six years distilled whisky for Robert Porter. Mr. Clendenning married, Dec. 30, 1822, Martha Ross Porter, who was born in York county, April 7, 1795, and died aged sixty-seven years. Her parents, Robert and Elizabeth Porter, came here in an early day from Eastern Pennsylvania. Mr. Clendenning had six children: John, Robert Porter, William Ross, Eliza Jane, Arthur, and Margaret Ellen, who died Aug. 4, 1852, aged seventeen. John and Robert manage the old home farm. Robert was married March 12, 1866, to Catherine Bomin, a native of Germany, who came to this country when three years of age. Their children are Martha Ann, Charles Watson, William John, Margaret Ellen, Ross Porter, Andrew Harper and Robert Hood, all at home. The family are members of Hood's M. P. Church, and all of the Clendennings are republicans. Mr. Clendenning settled on his present farm in 1836, clearing it from woods. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and for four years was town supervisor. He is a great lover of bees, and at his advanced age of one hundred years continues to care for them. He still retains an excellent memory. He is respected by all who know him, and has ever striven to maintain the right, and to uphold the true dignity of labor.

William Reese, retired, Etna, was born May 23, 1821, in Allegheny county, Pa., a son of William and Jane (Trunick) Reese, former of whom was a native of Wales, and by trade an iron-refiner; the latter was a native of this county, of Scotch and German descent. The subject of these lines was employed for fifty years in the iron-mills in Etna (now Spang's mill), beginning in the old sheet-mill at ten years of age, but since 1834 he has retired from business. His wife is Sarah A., daughter of Benjamin and Ann (Crawford) Powers. Benjamin Powers' father came to this county from Greenbriar settlement, Va., at the close of the Revolution. He had been a soldier in that struggle, and was paid in continental money. He purchased two hundred acres near Etna, and paid for it with farm produce. His five brothers were also soldiers in the Revolution, and all settled in this county except one. The family were among the oldest settlers in the county. Mr. Reese is in possession of sixteen acres of the old home farm. He has a family of six children: Anderson, Benjamin F., Wesley J., Francis, Annie E. and Jennie. Mr. and Mrs. Reese and family are members of the Methodist Church; he is a republican.

S. H. Allen, M. D., postoffice Bakertown, is a son of Rev. Moses and Catherine (McMillan) Allen, of New Jersey, who settled in Washington county, Pa., in 1815. They had ten children, two of whom, besides S. H., still live, viz.: Moses Coe, of Jefferson county, Ohio, and Catherine, widow of Thomas Morgan, of Belmont county, Ohio. S. H. is the fifth child, and was born in Greene county, Pa., Feb. 6, 1815; was taken to Washington county when an infant, and was there reared and educated at the public schools. He then attended Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Pa., graduating from the medical department in 1838. He commenced the practice of his profession in Moon township, Allegheny county, where he remained seven years, and in 1846 came to his present location. April 26, 1838, the doctor married Mary, daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Hankins) Wallace, of this county, and they have three children living: Eliza Jane, widow of Thomas Gibson; Kate A. and Leeland M., at home, the latter a lawyer, of Allegheny. Dr. Allen has held the offices of school director and auditor of the township. He and family are members of the Presbyterian Church of Barnesville.

THOMAS M. FIFE, physician, postoffice Bennett, was born March 24, 1849, in Upper St. Clair township, son of Thomas and Jane (McGoun) Fife, latter of whom is of Scotch birth. The progenitors of the Fife family in America were William and John, natives of Ireland, who in an early day came to this country. The paternal grandfather, James Fife, was a native of Ireland, coming to America when he was three years old. They were all farmers by occupation, and Presbyterians. James farmed and married here, and reared a family of eleven children. Of these, Thomas, aged now eighty-four years, is the only one living; his wife is also living, and they are the parents of three children: James, Robert and Thomas M. The subject of this sketch was educated at Bethel Academy and subsequently attended Washington and Jefferson College; after the division in the college, in 1868, he read medicine with Dr. D. Donaldson, and in the spring of 1871 graduated from the Cleveland College, located in Noblestown, Pa. After five years he came to Millvale, where he has a fine practice. The doctor was married Sept. 4, 1873, to Isabella Elliott, and they are the parents of four children: Morgan E., Jessie I., Thomas M. and Walter G. Dr. Fife is a democrat, and is a member of the A. O. U. W.

S. HARPER SMITH, physician and surgeon, Reynolds, P. O. Hero, a son of John M. and Mary (Moore) Smith, was born in 1833, in Cannonsburg, Washington county, Pa., where he lived until he was nine years of age. From that time until the age of seventeen his home was on the farm. By his own efforts he acquired a scientific education, read medicine with Dr. J. W. Alexander, of Cannonsburg, and graduated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore, Md., in 1851. He first began the practice of his profession at Greensloak, Pa., April 18, 1851, and June 2d of same year married Mary N., daughter of John W. Westhay, of Elizabeth, Pa., and continued to practice at Greensloak until 1887. He then removed to Reynolds, this county, where he established the first drugstore. He was the first resident physician of the borough, and with his nephew, A. Clark Smith, he established the first printing-office there.

JAMES B. McCURDY, farmer, P. O. Talley Cavey, is a son of Robert and Rosanna (Bolz) McCurdy. John McCurdy, his grandfather, who was a native of Ireland, emigrated to America some time before the Revolution, located in the eastern part of the state, and afterward returned to Ireland. Some years later he again came to America, and settled in this county, on what is known as the Scott farm in Shaler township, and finally settled in Hampton township, on the farm now owned by Frank Poff, where he lived until his death, in 1833. Robert, the father of James B., was born in Ireland in 1783, and was brought by his parents when an infant to this country, where he was reared and followed farming. He died in 1864. He was father of four children, all of whom are deceased except James B., who was born Oct. 31, 1833, and received his education in the schools of the township. In February, 1865, he enlisted in Co. I, 61st P. V., and served until the close of the war, after which he engaged in mercantile business at Talley Cavey for fourteen years, and has since followed farming. In 1898 he married Mary A., daughter of John and Grace (Holmes) Porter, of this county, and they have seven children living: William, of Tarentum; Harry, of Butler county; James A. and Ida G., keepers of the tollgate in Hampton township; M. Blanche, wife of Charles A. Smith, of Sharpsburg; Robert P. and Walter F., at home. At present Mr. McCurdy is one of the supervisors of this township, and was a member of the members of the U. P. Church of Talley Cavey.

HUGH DAVIDSON, retired, postoffice Sardis, was born on his present farm Jan. 27, 1820, a son of Elias and Martha Davidson. His parents were born in Franklin county, Pa., and died in 1840, aged fifty-eight and forty-eight years, respectively. Mr. Davidson's grandfather, Hugh Davidson, was judge of Franklin county, and held many offices in Plum township after coming to Plum. He died in 1821, aged sixty-six years, his wife, Katharine, having preceded him. Elias Davidson bought the old farm in Plum township about 1813, and then his father came to live with him from Franklin county. The subject of this memoir received his schooling here, worked on the farm, and at his father's death he and his brother carried it on for some time. He now owns 123 acres of the old homestead. He has been assessor; is a member of the M. E. Church.

ABRAHAM OVERTOLT TINSTMAN, dealer in coke and coal-lands, postoffice Turtle Creek, was born Sept. 13, 1834, in East Huntingdon township, Westmoreland county, and was reared on the farm where the Emma Mines coke-works are now located. He received a common-school education, and remained on the farm until twenty-five years of age, when he went to Broad Ford, Fayette county, to take charge of the mill, distillery and lands of his maternal grandfather, Abraham Overtolt. The latter was of German descent, born in Bucks county, in 1794, and about 1800 settled on a farm where the village of West Overton is now located, in East Huntingdon. His wife was Maria Stauffer, of Fayette county. Their daughter Anna, born in 1812, married John Tinstman in 1830, and died in 1866. She was the mother of ten children, of whom our subject is the third. John Tinstman was the fourth of ten children, and was born in 1807, in East Huntingdon, where he died at the age of seventy years. His father, Jacob, was born in Bucks county in 1773, and the mother, Anna Fox, was a native of Chester county. The father of Jacob was a German, who settled in Bucks county and removed to Westmoreland very early in the history of the latter region. In 1804, A. O. Tinstman became a partner with his grandfather, and continued to manage the business until the death of the latter, in 1870. Five years previous to this event, Mr. Tinstman and Joseph Rist had bought six hundred acres of coal-land near Broad Ford, and in 1868, in partnership with A. S. M. Morgan, they opened what is now called the "Morgan Mines" and engaged extensively in making coke. Morgan & Co. then controlled almost the entire coke business of this region, and built a mile of railroad to secure an outlet for their product. Mr. Tinstman was among the organizers of the Mt. Pleasant & Broad Ford Railroad Company in 1870, and remained its president until the line was sold to the R. & O. six years later. In 1871, he became associated with Messrs. Frick and Rist (as H. C. Frick & Co.), and this firm built two hundred coke-ovens, now known as the "Novelty" and "Henry Clay" works. In 1879, Morgan & Co. bought four hundred acres of coal-lands at Latrobe, and Mr. Tinstman also made extensive purchases of other coal-tracts, which led to the loss of his entire possessions in the panic of 1873. He bravely worked to retrieve his losses, and in 1878 and 1880 was enabled to purchase options on coal-lands in the Connellsville region. In the last-named year he sold thirty-five hundred acres at a good profit, and soon bought a half interest in the "Rising Sun" Coke-works. About this time he established the firm of A. O. Tinstman & Co. in Pittsburgh, and was highly successful in his operations. In 1881 he acquired Mt. Braddock & Pennsylvania Coke-works, and three years after sold all his coke interests. For the last four years he has engaged in the purchase and sale of coal-lands, and has made some large deals.

In January, 1876, Mr. Tinstman began housekeeping in Turtle Creek, having been married on the 1st of July to Harriet Cornelia, daughter of Gen. C. P. Markle, of Westmoreland county. They have one son, Cyrus Painter Markle. The family is connected with the Presbyterian Church of Turtle Creek. In 1879, was built the fine mansion which Mr. Tinstman and family now occupy. The grounds include the site of a pioneer cabin, once the home of George Washington after his raft had capsized in the Allegheny on one of his exploring expeditions.

J. S. McKelvy, farmer, postoffice Wilkinsburg. Among the early settlers of Wilkins township, Allegheny county, was James McKelvy, who emigrated to Western Pennsylvania from County Down, Ireland, and settled near the present town of Wilkinsburg, where he lived the rest of his days. He had seven children, of whom James, Jr., the eldest, born in 1800, came to Wilkinsburg with his father, and always lived there; followed agriculture, being owner of some five hundred acres of valuable farm and coal-lands situated in Braddock township. He married Rosanna, daughter of John Swisshelm, of this county, and four sons and two daughters have blessed their union, five of whom are living: John S., W. H., W. F., Elizabeth (Mrs. Hager) and Martha J. (Mrs. Wintersmith). The father died in May, 1888, being at the time the oldest citizen of Braddock township. The subject of this sketch was educated at the public schools, Wilkinsburg Academy and Allegheny College, and has made farming his livelihood. He married, in 1864, Ella, daughter of John Horner, and by her had seven children, six of whom are now living: James, Rose, Elizabeth, Mary, Ella and John.

Col. Joseph McCullough Kinkade, station agent, postoffice Turtle Creek, was born in Pittsburgh, May 7, 1825. His maternal great-grandfather, John McCullough, located on the land now including Turtle Creek station when it was still held in reserve for the benefit of the Indians, and the consideration mentioned in the patent for 200 acres is five pounds sterling. The estate was called "Armagh," after his native county in Ireland. His son of the same name succeeded him in its possession, and his youngest son, Joseph, a carpenter, engaged in house-building at Pittsburgh, where he died in 1841, being upward of ninety years old. Joseph was a member of the First Presbyterian Church of that city, and he and his wife helped organize the Second, in which he was an elder. Their daughter, Jane, married David Kinkade, a native of Huntingdon county, a son of Robert Kinkade, of Irish stock. Both Joseph McCullough and Robert Kinkade were members of the 4th regiment of the Pennsylvania Line during the Revolution. Joseph McC. Kinkade is the eldest of six children, and the only one now living, born to David Kinkade. He was reared in Pittsburgh, and finished his education at the Western University of Pennsylvania. He learned the trade of printer, which he followed until 1876. He was a member of an independent military company, on whose roll his name is still carried, known as the "Duquesne Greys," and with other members joined the 1st regiment P. V., in 1846, and entered the Mexican war as corporal. After assisting in the bombardment of Vera Cruz, he was prostrated by the climate on the march toward Cerro Gordo, and remained in hospital at Vera Cruz until July, 1847, when he was sent to New Orleans, and there discharged in December of the same year. In 1861 he again responded to the call of his country, going out with the first body of men from Pittsburgh; was made adjutant of the 13th P. V., with "Patterson's Column." This body marched from Chambersburg to oppose Gen. Joseph Johnston, crossed the Potomac at Williamsport, Md., and took part in skirmishes at Falling Waters and Bunker Hill. After Bull run they retreated and crossed at Harper’s Ferry in the night. By that time the three-months enlistment of the regiment expired, and Adjt. Kinkead helped to reorganize it, going out as lieutenant-colonel, its number now being 102d. Serving in the Army of the Potomac, the regiment participated in the battles of Yorktown, Williamsburg, Fair Oaks, seven days’ fight, Antietam, Malvern Hill and both engagements at Fredericksburg. In January, 1863, Mr. Kinkead became colonel, and led the regiment until his resignation in May of that year.

In 1860 our subject bought a part of the “Armagh” estate, which has since been his home. In 1876 he became the agent of the Pennsylvania railroad at Turtle Creek, which position he continues to fill to the satisfaction of the company and the people. He assisted at the organization of the republican party in La Fayette Hall, Pittsburgh, and has never changed his allegiance to its principles. In 1851 he married Catherine Neeper, a native of Pittsburgh, and daughter of William and Catherine Neeper, natives of Ireland. Three daughters have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kinkead: Mary Jane (wife of John S. Stewart, weighmaster at Hampton Coal-works, North Versailles), Belle Rowlley (wife of Homer L. Castle, attorney, Pittsburgh), and Nellie (Mrs. Thomas Reniers, of Pittsburgh).

W. A. SANDLES, M. D., Braddock, is a native of Saltsburg, Pa., born in 1846, a son of William and Maria (Marshall) Sandles, former a farmer, latter a daughter of Scott Marshall, a native of Scotland. William Sandles carried on a general store in Saltsburg, Indiana county, Pa., for a time, and finally followed farming. The subject of these lines was educated at Saltsburg and Elder’s Ridge academies. In 1865 he commenced the study of medicine in Wm. moreland county, Pa., and entered Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia, in 1866, graduating from same in 1868. He at once commenced the practice of his profession in Braddock, where, with the exception of two years, he has since continued. In 1862 the doctor enlisted in Co. C, 4th P. C., and for three years was in active service with his regiment. He is a member of the G. A. R.; in politics a republican.

John SWISSHELM, retired, P. 0. Monroeville, was born at Swissvale, in 1820, a son of John and Matilda (Swallow) Swisshelel, the latter of Welsh parentage. His grandfather, John Swisshelel, came from Germany, and secured a large tract of land in Wilkins township, Swisshelel being named after him. His son, the second John, sold out his interest in the estate in 1856, and moved to Stark county, Ohio, where he died in 1875, aged about seventy-five years. He had five children: John, Eliza, Mrs. Thomas Smith, of Anthony, Kan.; Jeremiah, in Swissvale; Isalia, in New Philadelphia, Ohio, and Joseph, in Malvern, Ohio. When small our subject was bound out until he was sixteen years old, when he learned the blacksmith’s trade. He bought a farm in Penn township, but later sold out and purchased one hundred acres where he resides, in Patton. Here he carried on wagon-work until he received a stroke of paralysis which disabled his right side. He has always been a democrat. He married, in 1843, Jane, a native of Philadelphia, and a daughter of Robert and Mary (M'Clellan) Hasley, of Irish birth. Of the twelve children born to Mr. and Mrs. Swisshelel, eight are living: Mary Jane (Cyphers), in East Liberty; Robert Hasley, in Penu township; Sarah Jeannetta, first married to a Mr. Gill, secondly to a Mr. Porter, in East Liberty; Jeremiah DeKnight; Harry Walker, at home; John Morrow Wilson, at Turtle Creek; Eva Minnie, Luella Matilda, with parents. William John, the first-born, died at the age of five years; Laura, at seventeen, and two in infancy. The family are united with Hebron U. P. Church.

Benjamin Crowther, retired, Etna, was born Sept. 29, 1826, in Staffordshire, England, where he was educated. He emigrated to the United States in 1844, with his parents and brothers, and they settled in Morgan-town, W. Va., where they purchased a furnace property. In the course of two years his father, brothers and himself removed to Brady’s Bend, Pa., where he erected the furnace for the Brady’s Bend Iron-works. In 1848 his father went to Lowell, Ohio, where he “blowed” the Lowell furnace, the first furnace in the United States to use the raw bituminous coal. In the same year our subject took charge of this furnace, and remained there ten years. In 1861 he went to Pittsburgh, and erected two furnaces at Manchester. At this point he continued until 1871, when he took charge of the construction of the Isabella furnace at Etna, of which he was superintendent until 1875, when he removed to Greensboro, Pa. Since then he has retained his interest with the firm, and attends to some little business, but lives a quiet and retired life most of the time. He married, in 1846, Mary J. Hill, of Staffordshire, England, and their children are Mrs. Mary J. Stanton, Harperless, Mrs. Ada C. Shupe, Mrs. Isabella Ranso and Benjamin H. Mr. and Mrs. Crowther are members of the Baptist Church; politically he is a republican; he is a member of the A. F. & A. M.

Dr. W. B. Kroesen, Etna, was born Aug. 17, 1839, in Allegheny City, Pa. His father, John Kroesen, a native of Martinsburg, Va., came to this county with his father, Isalia Kroesen, when he was but fifteen years old. John, a cooper by trade, married Anna Otterson, and they reared in Allegheny City six children. The subject of this memoir was educated in his native town; read medicine with Dr. Oldshoe and Dr. Jacoby, and took his first course of lectures at the Eclectic Pennsylvania Medical College, graduating in 1865. After practicing at Talley Cavey a number of years, he took a post-graduate course in the Medical College of Physicians and Surgeons, Cincinnati, graduating in the class of 1873. He then located in Etua, where he now enjoys a liberal patronage. He married Mary Dania, and has a large family: Cora J. and George T. Dr. Kroeseen enlisted in April, 1861, in the three-months service, and on the expiration of his term re-enlisted in Co. D, 103rd regiment, for three years. He was promoted to second lieutenant of Co. K, and participated in all the engagements of his regiment until wounded at the battle of Fair Oaks. He served three terms as school director, and in 1888 organized the fire department, of which he is chief. He organized G. A. R. Post No. 38, and is past medical director of the G. A. R. of Pennsylvania. He is also a member of the A. F. & A. M., A. O. O. W., I. O. O. F., G. A. R., U. V. L., A. O. of H, and R. A.; he has represented the I. O. O. F., R. A. and G. A. R. in national encampments, and erected two councils of the R. A.

Rev. John C. Price, Natrona, was born of Irish parents, in New York city, July 2, 1852. In 1854 his family removed to Allegheny county, Pa., and in 1854 he commenced study in the public school in Williamsburg, a suburb of Pittsburgh. In 1869 he entered St. Michael's Seminary, Glenwood, Pa., completed preparatory course, and began philosophy and theology in 1874. He received the first tonsure May 30, 1874. Upon the closing up of St. Michael's Seminary he was sent to Baltimore, where he finished his divinities in St. Mary's of St. Sulpice. He was ordained to the priesthood Aug. 17, 1877, and spent two years as assistant pastor of St. Mary's, Forty-fifth street, Pittsburgh, Pa. He was then transferred to the pastorate of St. James' Church, Sewickley, Pa., which office he held five years, and in June, 1884, was appointed in charge of St. Joseph's Church, Natrona, his present mission. During his four years' administration of an extensive and nationally diversified parish he has erected St. Alphius Church, Springdale, Pa., and St. Peter's, Tarentum, Pa. A fine tract of land has also been purchased for church purposes in Natrona, and a beautiful pastoral residence has been erected thereon.

Rev. Constantine M. Hegerich, rector of St. Joseph's R. C. Church, Verona, was born in Lancaster, Pa., in 1837. His parents, Michael and Magdalen Hegerich, came from Germany in 1844, and settled in Lancaster six years later, and are now deceased. The father was a weaver and tailor, and plied his trades for six years in Philadelphia. Father Hegerich was educated at St. Vincent's College and Seminary at Latrobe, whence he graduated in 1851. After nearly a year as assistant pastor of St. Peter's Church at McKeesport, he was appointed to the charge of St. Joseph's in September, 1852. Under his ministry the debt of the parish has been decreased $2,000, and a fine new brick church 80 by 40 ft. was erected and dedicated in 1855, which, when debt is completed, will cost $12,000. The school under his personal care is flourishing, and has an average attendance of sixty pupils. He is a young man of energy and ability, and in him the church has a faithful servant.

William Thomas Stotler, postoffice Turtle Creek, was born Feb. 8, 1844, and is a grandson of Samuel Hunter, whose father was a pioneer settler in Unity township, Westmoreland county, Pa. Samuel, his son James and the subject of this sketch were born on the same farm. James married Annice Lightcap, a lady of Scotch descent, as are also the Hunters. After attending the academy at Elder's Ridge, his subject read medicine with Dr. James McConaughy at Mt. Pleasant, and at the age of twenty-four entered on a course in chemistry and toxicology at Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York. After completing that course he attended Dr. Richardson's school of pharmacy in Philadelphia, and then entered Jefferson Medical College of the latter city, from which he graduated in 1868. In the spring of the same year he began to practice in Turtle Creek, and now has a large and lucrative patronage. The doctor has also recently established a fine livery-stable for the benefit of his townsmen. With his family he is associated with the U. P. Church. Politically he is a republican. In 1870 Dr. Hunter was united in marriage with Rachel, daughter of John and Leonora McMasters. Her father owned and kept the Eagle hotel in Pittsburgh. Dr. Hunter's children are Leonora and Annice Gale.

E. W. Dean, M. D., Braddock, is a native of Ohio, born in 1849, oldest son of Henry and Ellen (Armour) Dean, who were the parents of two children, five of whom are deceased. Henry Dean was a well-known merchant, doing an extensive business in St. Louis and Pitts- burgh. Our subject was educated until fifteen years of age by Miss Sarah Wallace, as private tutor, in St. Louis, graduated at Wilkinsburg (Pa.) Academy and studied at Greeneville College, Pennsylvania. In 1869 he commenced the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. David Cowley, and in 1873 entered the Hahnemann Medical College, where he graduated in 1875. The doctor has practiced his profession continuously in Braddock since 1876, and has secured the confidence of the general public. In 1876 he married Helen D., daughter of James Anderson, of Pittsburgh, and they have had six children, five of whom are living: Cecil, Howard, Charles, Nettie and Harvey. Clifford (third child) died, aged four and one-half years. Dr. Dean is a Freemason, a member of the I. O. O. F.; in politics a republican.

Emanuel Stotler, farmer, postoffice Negley, was born on the farm where he now resides, June 6, 1819. His grandfather, Jacob Stotler, probably from Germany, died in Franklin county, Pa. His widow came to Penn township in 1790 with four sons and five daughters, Emanuel, Henry, John, Jacob, Elizabeth (Reamer) and Martha (Coon). Of these Emanuel was thirteen years old when they came here. He married Elizabeth Bowman, of Lancaster county, and was a minister, passed over in 1808. His wife died four years prior, in her eighty-seventh year. Her parents, Henry and Barbara (Hockman) Bowman, were early settlers here, and came of German blood. Emanuel and Elizabeth Stotler had thirteen children: Jacob, Mary (Snively), Elizabeth (Stoner), Barbara (Bright), Henry B., David, Ann (Alter), Martha (deceased), Margaret (Hoover), Emanuel (Shepherd), Henry (Alter), Eva (Alter) and Catherine (Cook). Of these Emanuel always remained on the home farm: served as school director, assessor and collector, and politically was a republican, as was his father, who was first a whig. Mr. Stotler’s family is associated with Plum Creek Presbyterian Church, but his ancestors were connected with the German Reformed. In 1851 Emanuel Stotler married Nancy Alter, a daughter of Robert Lawhead, a wealthy farmer of Lancaster county, and soon after marriage, which was against the wishes of Mr. Lawhead. Mr. and Mrs. Stotler’s children are David R., Elizabeth Jane, Theodosia Emma (Mrs. T. B. DeArmit), Lucinda Alter, Sarah Minerva, Ada B. and Harvey K. Mary Elvira (the fifth) and Lily Eve (the youngest) are deceased. David Gilmore, retired, postmaster Bridgeville, was born in Fayette (now South Fayette) township, in 1819. James Gilmore, his grandfather, came from the north of Ireland to America previous to the revolutionary war, and settled in Chester county, Pa.; he married Elizabeth Lawhead, daughter of Robert Lawhead, a wealthy farmer of Lancaster county, and soon after marriage, which was against the wishes of Mr. Lawhead. Mr. and Mrs. Gilmore came to Fayette township, this county, and purchased three hundred acres of land, here remaining until his death, which occurred when he was eighty years of age. Three sons and five daughters were born to him. William, the eldest, was born in 1788, and died about 1826. He was a miller, and owned a whisky distillery, which he success- fully operated until 1812, when he purchased a farm of one hundred and eighty acres. He married Mary, daughter of William Denniston, of Ireland, and five sons and two daughters were born to them. David, the fourth child, is now the only surviving member of this family. He was educated at the common schools, and remained on his father’s farm until he was twenty-one years old, when he purchased the home farm from his father’s heirs, and afterward engaged in the milling business, which he successfully carried on for twenty years, operating the Allegheny City Flouring-mills from 1861 to 1877. For five years of that period he was also extensively engaged in the brewing business in Allegheny City. Mr. Gilmore married, in 1866, Sarah Johnson, daughter of John and Jane (Moody) Johnson. Mr. Gilmore returned to Bridgeville in 1878, and purchased his present home, where he and his wife have since resided. He was a director and vice-president of the Anchor Savings Bank, of Pittsburgh, for several years was a member, or wealthy, and select councils of that city; was a director of the Armenia Insurance company, Allegheny City; justice of the peace in South Fayette township; treasurer of school board, and is a member of the Second U. P. Church of Allegheny.

Dr. William J. Gilmore, Bridgeville, is a native of this county, born in 1828. He is the second in the family of James and Mary (Cook) Gilmore, who had six children, two of whom are now living. James was a farmer, and owned 280 acres of land in South Fayette township. He died at the age of forty-one years, his wife at the age of thirty-eight. The grandfather, James, a farmer, came from Europe to America at an early date, settled in this county, and purchased the tract of land afterward owned by his son James. The subject of this sketch was educated at the common schools, in the high school at Duquesne and Jefferson colleges. He commenced the study of medicine in 1847, under Drs. Hays and Hickman, of this county. He then entered Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, from which he graduated in 1850, since which date he has been a practicing physician at Bridgeville. He married, in 1852, Jane, daughter of Thomas Alexander, of this county. The doctor has taken an active part in the movements of the republican party, and has been a delegate to its conventions on several occasions. He was for eight years pension examiner.

Prof. James Dickson, Ph. D., ex-county superintendent of public schools and late professor of Pittsburgh Academy, postoffice Clinton, was born in Findlay township, Allegheny county, Pa., Sept. 29, 1834, a son of Joseph and Mary (Moody) Dickson, of Cecil county, Md., and Washington county, Pa., respectively. Joseph was a carpenter, and a son of John and Catherine (Moody)
Dickson, the latter a native of Ireland.
John Dickson was a native of Cecil county, Md., and a son of John and Nancy (Thomson) Dickson, who were born and married in Ireland, and came to Maryland prior to the Revolution. They had but one child, John, Jo. Joseph Dickson came to Allegheny county when a young man, and reared a family of five daughters and one son. The latter, the subject of this biography, received his early education at the public schools, and at thirteen began the study of Latin, with George Jardine, a graduate of Belfast College, Ireland. Later he entered the academy at Murdockville, Washington county, Pa., and was graduated at Mount Union College, near Alliance, Ohio. During that time he also taught in the public schools of Allegheny and Washington counties. In 1866 he associated with James A. Dunbar, and established the Linnamonca Seminary and Normal Seminary at Clinton, which, for want of suitable buildings, was removed in 1867 to Mansfield, Pa. In 1869 he and Mr. Dunbar were elected principals of the Cannonsburg Academy, Washington county, Pa., and in 1872 Prof. Dickson was elected principal of the Sewickley (Pa.) Academy. In 1885 he was elected county superintendent of public schools of Allegheny county, served six years and refused a re-election. At the solicitation of the leading citizens of Allegheny City and Pittsburgh, and realizing the importance of a high-grade academy, he associated with him Prof. J. W. Caldwell, A. M., LL. B., and organized the Pittsburgh Academy Nov. 1, 1880. Owing to ill health, Prof. Dickson was compelled to resign in 1883 and remove to his farm in Findlay township, where he has since resided. He was united in marriage, July 2, 1866, at Creagerstown, Md., to Martha C. Zimmerman, A. M., a graduate of Mount Union College, class of 1862, and daughter of John and Miranda (Myers) Zimmerman. She taught in Illinois and Mary- land prior to her marriage, and since that event has been closely associated with her husband as an assistant teacher. They have one child, Joseph Z., born at Mansfield, Pa., Feb. 3, 1868; he attended school in Washing- ton county, Pa., and was admitted as a student to the Western University of Penn- sylvania. Prof. and Mrs. Dickson are members of the U. P. Church.

John R. Marshall, postmaster, and manager of Montour store, Imperial, was born in Guernsey county, Ohio, March 5, 1856, a son of William and Dorcas (Reed) Marshall, former of whom was a son of Robert and Eleanor (Hayes) Marshall, of Washington county, Pa. Dorcas (Reed) Marshall was born in Allegheny county, Pa., a daughter of John and Lilly (McCraneker) Reed, both Pennsyl- vanians, and members of the Presbyterian Church. John Reed was a native of Westmoreland county, Pa., and died in Mercer county, Pa., aged fifty-eight years; Lilly (McCraneker) Reed was a native of Lancaster county, Pa., and died at West Salem, Wis. of Crosse county, Wis., aged ninety-six years; she was a daughter of Alexander and Marg- aret (Marshall) McCraneker, of County Arm- magh, Ireland, who came to America in 1780, and settled in Allegheny county, Pa.; he died in Guernsey county, Ohio, at the advanced age of one hundred years, his wife in Montg-omery county, Ohio, when sixty-five years old. William and Dorcas (Reed) Marshall were members of the Presbyterian Church; they had one child, John R. In 1856 the father died, at the age of fifty-seven, and the moth- er then came to Allegheny City, where she joined her sisters; she died in West Salem, Wis., at the age of sixty-six. The subject of this sketch attended school in Allegheny until ten years of age, when he commenced for himself. He worked in the bookstore of Mrs. M. J. Arnold, Allegheny City, three years; then clerked for a like period for a merchant tailor at Pittsburgh, and in 1872, with his mother, opened a grocery-store in Allegheny, Pa. Two years later he sold out and took a course in telegraphy and book-} keeping in Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio. Subsequently he returned to Allegheny City and clerked in a grocery-store until December, 1879, when he came to Imperial as clerk in the Montour store, of which he was appoint- ed manager in 1881. That same year he was appointed postmaster by Postmaster-General James. Mr. Marshall married, Oct. 6, 1881, Mary E. Crawford, a native of Allegheny City, and a daughter of Andrew L. and Mar- tha J. E. (Knox) Crawford, natives, respect- ively, of Allegheny and Juniata counties. Mr. Marshall is a member of Royal Arcanum Lodge 100, Allegheny City, and he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Imperial. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall have two children, Ethel M. and John K.

Gilbert M. McMaster, attorney, post- office Broughton, was born in 1833 at Schenectady, N.Y., a son of Rev. John McMaster, D. D., and Joannette Maria McMaster. His father was born in County Antrim, Ireland, March 1, 1808, the eldest son of Hugh and Ellen (Barr) McMaster, and came with his father to Pittsburgh in 1811. He graduated from the Western University of Pennsylvania in 1827; following year began to study for the ministry, and was licensed to preach April 8, 1830. He died June 11, 1864. The mother of our subject died Jan. 28, 1840, aged twenty-seven years; she was a daugh- ter of Rev. Gilbert McMaster, D. D., a Cov- enanter minister, a native of Ireland, and one of the early graduates of Jefferson Col- lege; he married Jane Brown, of Cannons- burg, and a daughter of Benjamin Brown, who was ordained an elder Feb. 24, 1771, at Paxton, Pa. Gilbert M. McMaster attended Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, at the time his uncle, the late E. D. McMaster, D. D., LL. D., was president of that institution; came to Pittsburgh in 1853, studied law with David Reed, late United States district at- torney, was admitted to the bar in 1857, and practiced in Pittsburgh until 1877. He married Mary H. Mc- herry, Nov. 30, 1865, Margaret Thompson, who was born June 17, 1832, near Pittsburgh, a daughter of Robert and Margaret (McMaster) Thompson. Her mother was a daughter of Hugh and Eleanor McMaster, and died Feb. 21, 1877. Her father, Robert, was born in County Down, Ireland, Sept. 7, 1808, and came to this country in 1831. In 1841 he settled on the farm where Mr. McMaster now lives, and died Dec. 16, 1877, leaving the farm to Mrs. McMaster and her sister, Miss Ellen Thompson.

Mr. and Mrs. McMaster have five sons and two daughters: Erasmus Darwin and Robert Thompson (twins), born Oct. 11, 1866, former deceased; John M., a clerk in Pitts- burgh; Margaret Thompson, Andrew Bar- clay, Gilbert Clement and Joannette Maria. Mr. McMaster retired from active practice of the law in 1876, and has since spent the greater part of his time lecturing on temper- ance in various states of the Union, and was one of the early advocates of "constitutional amendment" as the best means of destroying the power of the "liquor crime." He was led to this view of the subject by the very able arguments of the late distinguished lawyer and statesman, B. Gutz Brown, of Missouri.

JOHN H. ALEXANDER, P. O. Bridgeville, was born in Allegheny county, Pa., in 1821, and is descended from Irish ancestry. Thomas Alexander came from Maryland to Allegheny county with his mother and brother, and was a teamster in the army during the Revolution. He and his brother purchased 400 acres of land on Miller's run, followed farming and remained on this property until their deaths. Thomas married Mary Murray and became the father of six children, and died aged eighty-six years. His wife died at the age of ninety-six. Thomas, Jr., was born in 1795 on the 400 acres of land purchased by his father and uncle. He mar-rried Elizabeth Hanna, daughter of John Hanna, and four sons and four daughters were born to them. Thomas died in 1886, aged 86. He was preceded in death by his children, John H., our subject, was born and reared on a farm, the pursuits of which he has followed on this place for thirty years. He learned the trade of a carpenter, which he followed for thirteen years. He married, in 1856, Mary Nesbitt, daughter of Ebenezer and Margaret Nesbitt, and twelve children were born to them, nine of whom are living: Maggie J. (Mrs. Poelet), Lizzie H. (Mrs.
Vance), George M., Sadie, Levina Mary
(now Mrs. Moore), Matilda B., Annie C., Salina F. and Ella C. Mr. Alexander is a school director; is a member of the M. E.
Church, in politics a republican.

THOMAS ALEXANDER, P. O. Bridgeville, was born in 1823, the second son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Hannah) Alexander. He was born and reared on a farm and educated at the public schools. He married Elizabeth Jane Morrison, daughter of Benjamin Parkinson and Rebecca (Rea) Morrison, of Washington county, and six children have been born to them (five now living): Laura (deceased), William Gilmore, Laura Mary, Minnette Belle, Carrie Lizzie and Joseph Morrison. Mr. Alexander followed railroading for a number of years; was employed as clerk in the county treasurer's office, but has lived on his present farm since 1873. He and family are members of the M. E. Church; politically he is a republican.

SAMUEL ALEXANDER, P. O. Bridgeville, was born in 1828, the youngest son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Hannah) Alexander, and named in honor of his uncle. He was born and reared on a farm, and received his education at the public schools and at the normal school of Mansfield. From Aug. 22, 1862, until the close of the rebellion, Mr. Alexander was a soldier in the service of his country.
He enlisted in Co. D, 148th P. V. L., and was in the principal battles in which his regiment participated, among which may be mentioned Gettysburg, Chancellorsville, the Wilderness, etc. Mr. Alexander married, in 1866, Martha L., daughter of Ebenezer and Margaret (Brown) Nesbitt. Mr. Alexander is recognized as one of South Fayette's representative citizens. He has been a lifelong member of the Presbyterian Church; politically he is a republican.

HON. ALEXANDER H. BURNS, farmer, P. O.
Imperial, was born on the old homestead of his father and grandfather, near Imperial, Findlay township, this county, Aug. 15, 1813,
a son of Thomas and Catherine (Bevington) Burns, the latter a native of Washington county, Pa. Thomas Burns was born in Findlay township, Allegheny county, a son of Alexander and Nancy (Burns) Burns, former of whom, a native of Scotland, and by trade a cooper, settled on the old farm in Findlay township prior to the Revolution;
he was one of the earliest settlers of what is now Findlay township, and was a great hunter. His wife was born in Maryland.
Thomas and Catherine Burns settled on the old farm in Findlay township, where they both died in the faith of the Presbyterian Church, in which they had lived. They had three sons and four daughters. Alexander
H. married, in 1840, Jane Jeffery, of North Fayette township, a daughter of Samuel and Margaret (Jordan) Jeffery. Mrs. Burns died in 1844, the mother of one daughter, Louisa J., now the wife of Mark Gregg, of Findlay township. In May, 1848, Mrs. Burns married Nancy Armor, of Findlay township, daughter of William and Nancy (McClellan) Armor.
Mrs. Burns died in May, 1851, the mother of two children: Charles A., who died aged ten years, and Maria, at home. Mr. Burns mar-rried, in 1854, Mrs. Mary King, of Findlay township, a daughter of Nicholas Swearingen.
Mrs. Burns is a member of the U. P. Church at Clinton. Mr. Burns has held various local offices of trust in his township. In 1859 he was elected representative to the legislature of Pennsylvania on the republican ticket.
He is a leading farmer and citizen, respected by all.

WILLIAM HILL, county treasurer, P. O.
Mansfield Valley, is a native of County Down, Ireland, born Dec. 3, 1837. His father, David, came to America in 1841, and settled in Allegheny county. He was a schoolteacher, a profession he followed in his native country, but after teaching several years in this county he became a traveling merchant. He married Elizabeth Dickson, who bore him four children: William, Margaret A. (at home), Elizabeth (now Mrs.
David S. Given) and Ellen (now Mrs. A. W.
Ewing). The father died in 1856, aged sixty-two years, and the mother survived him until 1870, when she died, aged sixty-five years.
William Hill was educated at the public schools, leaving them to embark in the practical concerns of life. Up to 1867 he was principally engaged in farming, after that in contracting and lumbering, and was also interested in the manufacture of brick, which he still carries on. He was elected to the legislature from this county, serving the people from 1876 to 1880. He was elected count treasurer by the republican party, and is the present incumbent. In 1887 he married Lizzie A., daughter of William Boyd, of an old and prominent family of Allegheny county. Mr. Hill has held many positions of trust, serving his constituents faithfully, and is one of the prominent citizens of the county. He is a member of the U. P. Church; politically a republican.

SAMUEL D. JENNINGS, M. D., postoffice Beers, was born in the Thirty-sixth ward, Pittsburgh, Pa., June 11, 1844, a son of Rev. Samuel C. and Emma Marie (Passavant) Jennings. He attended school in Moon township and Shousetown Academy, and at sixteen entered Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Pa., from which he graduated in 1864. He read medicine with Dr. Porter at Rostraver, Pa., one year, and in the fall of 1865 entered Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, where he graduated in March, 1868. He practiced at Perrysville, Pa., until November, 1870, when he located in Moon township, where he has a large practice. Dr. J. married May 26, 1870 Juliet E. McAbey, a daughter of Rev. Leland R. and Mary A. (Christy) McAbey. Her father was a Presbyterian minister, a native of Virginia, and a son of Rev. James McAbey, who in early life was a noted evangelist in the Baptist Church, but in later years became a Presbyterian minister. Dr. Jennings and wife have had seven children, four of whom are living: Samuel D., Jr., Juliet McA., Emma M. and Virginia P. The parents are members of the Presbyterian Church at Sharon. The doctor is a member of Dexter Lodge, No. 723, I. O. O. F., and of the Jr. O. U. A. M.

JAMES McCORMICK, retired farmer, postoffice Ewing's Mills, was born in Moon township, Feb. 15, 1818, on the old homestead farm, the home of the prominent citizens of the son of Hugh and Margaret (Nichle) McCormick. The former was born in Maryland, and when a boy came with his parents to what is now Moon township, Allegheny county. He was a son of Benjamin and Ann (Brown) McCormick, Scotch-Irish Presbyterians, who were among the first settlers of Moon township. Hugh McCormick died on the homestead in 1852, aged eighty-six years. He and his wife had four sons and one daughter: Benjamin (deceased), John (deceased), Mary (widow of Joseph Scott), James and Hugh. James married, March 24, 1845, Mary, daughter of John and Rachel (Shaffer) Stonecipher. Mr. and Mrs. McCormick had ten children: A. Margaret, wife of Henry Knopf; Rachel A., wife of Nathaniel Mulholland; Mary E., wife of John P. Clinton; Eliza J., wife of John Wilson; John married Anna Knopf; Joseph Scott manages the farm for his father; Emma M., at home; Kate L. M., wife of Joseph A. McCurdy; James I., deceased at twenty-two, and Elmer A., at home. Mrs. McCormick died July 29, 1886, aged sixty-four years. She and her husband early united with the U. P. Church. Our subject is one of the oldest residents in the township. He has always voted the whig and republican tickets.

SUSAN PAYNE, retired, West Elizabeth, is a daughter of James and Hannah (Allison) Payne, and was born in Jefferson township, this county, in 1821. Her grandparents were among the pioneers of Western Pennsylvania. Her parents owned a large tract of land, and reared a family of five children: William A., Joseph A. and James, farmers in Jefferson township; Eliza, who died Sept. 2, 1851, at the age of nineteen, and Susan. The father died Jan. 27, 1848, and the mother Feb. 28, 1874. Susan Payne is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

SAMUEL R. FIFE, physician, postoffice West Elizabeth, is a son of Andrew and Sarah (Robinson) Fife; was born in Elizabeth township, in 1838. John Fife and his brother at a very early date settled in Upper St. Clair township, where they purchased a tract of land from the Indians. Upon this place the grandfather of S. R. Fife was born, and there also the death of his wife occurred, in 1790. Andrew died in 1879, and his wife, who was born in 1795, died in 1881. They had a family of eleven children: John (deceased), Margaret, Thomas (deceased), Martha (deceased), Mary (deceased), Andrew, Elizabeth (deceased), Clara, Matthew (deceased), Noah H. G. and Samuel R.

Samuel R. received his early education in the schools of Allegheny and Washington counties, and his medical education at the Cleveland (Ohio) Medical School, from which he graduated in 1869. He began the practice of his profession in West Elizabeth, in 1868, and during that year married Amanda, daughter of William Linn, of West Newton, Washington county, Pa. They have six children, all of whom reside with their parents: Martha who is actively engaged in the discharge of his duties as postmaster; George L., Lizzie, Grace, Ollie and Earl.

WILLIAM F. KNOX, physician, McKeesport, was born at Connellsville, Pa., March 30, 1831, a son of David S. and Sarah B. (Francis) Knox. His paternal grandfather, Rev. William Knox, a native of County Tyrone, Ireland, emigrated to America in 1797; was received into the Baltimore conference in 1800, and, settling in Ohio, was successively a member of the Baltimore, Ohio and Pittsburgh conferences. He died June 16, 1851. The maternal grandfather of our subject, James Francis, a native of the north of Ireland, was a physician; served in the Revolution, and was a pioneer of Connellsville, Pa., David S. Knox, father of William P. Knox, a native of Connellsville, Fayette county, Pa., a printer by trade, and early in life followed teaching, mercantile and manufacturing pursuits, and later engaged in banking business for thirty-six years. He was an officer of the Monongahela bank of Brownsville, Pa.; was six years teller and thirty years cashier. This bank was famous as one of the few that never suspended. David S. Knox died Oct. 17, 1872, aged sixty-seven years. The subject of this sketch was reared in Brownsville and educated in the public schools of that town, and Allegheny College, Meadville, Pa. He read medicine with Dr. W. L. Lafferty, of Brownsville, and in October, 1832, entered the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, graduating April 3, 1834. In July of the same year he began the practice of medicine in Snowden township, Allegheny county, and in December, 1855, located in McKeesport, where he has since been in active practice. The doctor has been twice married. His first wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas and Jane (Wood) Kiddoo, of Snowden township, bore him six children, three of whom, Jennie, William J., and Sarah F., are living. His present wife, Mary Paull, is a daughter of Col. William L. and Jane (Torrence) Miller, of Port Perry, this county. Dr. Knox is a successful physician, and the oldest practitioner in McKeesport. He is a member of the American Medical association, the Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania, and the Allegheny County Medical society. He is a member of the First M. E. Church; politically, he was formerly a republican, and is now a prohibitionist.

David Foster, farmer, postoffice Mansfield Valley, was born in Washington county, Pa., in 1839. In 1791 his father, Alexander Foster, immigrated to America from Ireland, and soon after his arrival came to Pittsburgh; but later moved to Washington county, where he engaged in farming. He married Sarah Davis, and by her had ten children, of whom the above is the youngest. Alexander died in 1849, aged seventy-six years; his wife died at the age of eighty-four years. David, whose name heads this sketch, was educated at the common schools and reared on a farm. At the age of fifteen he commenced to learn the carpenter's trade, which he followed for forty years. He married, in 1845, Elisabeth Ross, daughter of Peter and granddaughter of Philip Ross. Born to this union were ten children, one of whom, Peter Ross, is deceased; the living are Matilda (Mrs. John A. Bell), Dr. David Gilmore, George, Bessie (Mrs. Rev. Cyrus B. Hatch), Casey Alexander, Maudaline (now Mrs. W. F. Bailey), Emmaline and Dr. Ross (twins), former of whom is intermarried with John S. Robb, Jr., Esq. Mr. and Mrs. Foster now reside on the farm purchased by Philip Ross, and are highly respected by all their acquaintances. They have both for many years been faithful members of the U. P. Church. Mr. Foster is a republican, and was a very warm supporter of Gen. Benjamin Harrison.

Daniel Shawhan, (deceased) was born near Pittsburgh in 1797, and died in 1881. He married, in 1833, Margaret, daughter of William and Martha (Montgomery) Caldwell, and they had eight children, of whom four daughters are now living, viz.: Imogene, Georgia, Willie and Robbie. The Shawhan family originally came from Kentucky; Daniel, the pioneer, took up a section of land near where Mount Lebanon Church now stands. His son Robert married Mary Williams, and by her had four daughters and five sons. Robert was a farmer, and owned the land purchased by his father; he died aged sixty-seven years. Daniel, the subject of this sketch, was the oldest son born to Robert and Mary Shawhan. He followed farming, but was at one time engaged in the coal business, having had coal on his land. Mrs. Shawhan, now aged seventy-five years, resides on the homestead with her youngest daughter, Robbie; both are members of the Presbyterian Church.

Hezekiah Houghtelin (deceased) was born July 27, 1806, near Gettysburg, a son of Hezekiah and Charity Foster, his mother's father. He is of Dutch and Huguenot descent, respectively. For about thirty years he taught school in this and Westmoreland counties, coming here when twenty years of age. Sept. 15, 1840, he married Mary Magdalen Hedgrod, who was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, May 16, 1821, and is a daughter of Henry and Catherine (Baker) Hedgrod. In 1843 Mr. Houghtelin bought the farm in Pennsylvania now occupied by his widow, where he died Sept. 3, 1874. He served as school director and supervisor, and politically was a republican. He was a member of the U. P. Church; his widow is connected with the Baptist Church. Their children are William D., Mattie (Walters), Elizabeth (Donholm), Annie (Hodel), Louise (Richey), Henry Lott, Charles Sumner, John, Milton, Sadie Eleanor, Alfred; James Hammel (the third) died when eighteen years old at Nashville, Tenn., while a member of Co. B, 77th P. V. I.

Andrew McMillan, farmer, P. O. White Ash, was born in the parish of Ballaroma, County Down, Ireland, in 1851. His parents, Andrew and Margaret (Hart) McMillan, are still living there. They reared a family of nine sons, all of whom received a good education. Two are in Ireland, one of whom is practicing medicine in Belfast; two reside in Australia, three in America, and two are deceased. Andrew is the third son, and in 1899, being then eighteen years old, he emigrated to America to make his fortune, and by working his own way has nearly accomplished the mission. In 1895 he weighed coal at the Armstrong mines, spent a year in a commission-store at Pittsburgh, and a year with the N. Y. & C. Gas-coal company. He managed a store for Armstrong, Dickson & Co., and after a visit to his native home, in 1877, conducted a store three years for the Standard Oil company. In 1892 he bought a farm of 100 acres situated near the Pittsburgh line, in which he is engaged in managing. He has always been a republican, and in religion favors the U. P. Church. In 1882 he married Emma Kane, an ambitious young lady, who won her education mainly through her own efforts, preparatory to teaching school, previous to her marriage, her mother having died when she was but three years old. She was the daughter of Charles and Catharine (Kemal) Kane, of Allegheny county, Pa., now residing in Plum, where Mrs. McMillan was born. Mr. and Mrs. McMillan's children are William Eugene, John Andrew and Floyd Othello.

William R. Justus, retired, postoffice Mansfield Valley, was born in Washington county, Pa., in 1807. The first of the family to come to America was Justus, a native of Ireland. He was for a number of years engaged in transporting goods over the mountains by means of "pack-saddles," but later in life was a farmer. He married a daughter of William Reddick, who, it is said, kept the first public house in Pittsburgh. Isaac was the father of fifteen children, of whom James, born in 1780, was among the eldest. Isaac died aged sixty-one years. James Justus was by profession a school-teacher, which he followed for nineteen years. He was also a trader, carrying goods by boat down the Allegheny river, and disposing of them in exchange for other products. He married, in 1840, Christiana McLeod, and by her had seven children, viz.: William R., Mary, Daniel, James Madison, Joseph M., John Ross and Isaac Newton. The father died in 1898, and the mother in 1831, aged fifty-one years.

The subject of this memoir remained in Washington county until he was sixteen years of age; then came to Allegheny county, learned the millwright's trade, serving an apprenticeship of four years, and has built in his time some seventeen flourmills, sawmills, etc. In 1862 he was employed in the iron rolling-mills, where he remained until 1881, when he retired. He married, in 1846, Mary Jane Bell, daughter of James and Elizabeth Bell, of this county. Three children were born to this union: Elizabeth Anna, Mary Amanda and Agnes Morrow, all at home. Washington Bell married, in 1867, Catherine Kibe, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Kibe, of Germany, and one child was born to this union—Robert Henry. Washington died in 1869 and his wife in 1867. Robert Henry Bell (Justus) has been with Mr. Justus and family since he was two weeks old. Mr. Justus is the patentee of a horseshoe-machine that has been a success, and has netted him profitable returns. He is an elder in the Presbyterian Church; politically he is a republican.

John C. Morrow (deceased) was born in Lancaster county, Pa., in 1799, and died at Mansfield in 1886. He was the eldest of the six children of Robert and Ann (Crawford) Morrow, former of whom, a farmer, came to Allegheny county in 1806, settling in Robinson township, and purchasing 150 acres of land, where he remained until his death. John C. was reared on the farm and educated at the public schools. He married Agnes M. Bell, eldest daughter of James and Elizabeth (Fairly) Bell. Mr. Morrow retired from active life in 1881. His widow is still living, enjoying good health, in his home.

George McKee, county commissioner and farmer, is a son of George McKee, a farmer, who came from the north of Ireland to America about 1799, and located for a few months in Cumberland county, Pa.; then immigrated to Allegheny county, and on the north branch of Robinson's run, now North Fayette township, by purchase and entry acquired a tract of land, where he remained until his death, in 1889. He married, in Ireland, Jane Ball, who bore him eight children; all of whom save one grew to maturity. His second wife was Deborah McKee, whom he married in 1828, a daughter of James McKee, who resided at Logstown, Beaver county, Pa. To this marriage two sons were born: George Y. and James Y. The latter, a graduate of Jefferson College, is now a professor in Pennsylvania State College. George Y. was born and reared on the farm where he now resides, and owns 163 of the original four hundred acres. He was educated at the public schools. Farming was in early life his principal occupation, and during the last twenty years he has been engaged in farming and business pursuits. He has taken an active part in the politics of the country, and was three times elected to the legislature, serving in the sessions of 1885, 1866 and 1867. In 1881 he was appointed to the office of commissioner of the county to fill a vacancy; was elected to that office in 1884, and re-elected in 1887. During his term as commissioner a new courthouse and county prison has been erected, which, for its kind, is not excelled in the state, and, in justice to the men who shared the responsibility, it can be said that the people's money has always been carefully guarded in awarding contracts. Mr. McKee married, in 1852, Elizabeth A., daughter of Andrew Johnston, of Jeffreys-town, Allegheny county, Pa., and two children blessed their union: Charles H., attorney at law, Pittsburgh, and Louisa C. (Mrs. Dr. R. Morrison). Mr. McKee and family are members of the Presbyterian Church; politically he is a republican.

William T. Philips, M. D., postoffice Library, was born on the old Philips homestead, near Library, July 16, 1842, a son of Nelson Philips, born in Bethel township, this county, April 7, 1814, and Elizabeth (Dixon) Philips, born in Washington county, in October, 1824. Nelson Philips was a son of David and Nancy (Jenney) Philips, and was a carpenter by trade, but followed farming. David was a farmer, and came to this place with his father, Rev. David Philips, in 1789, settling in what is now Bethel township.
Revd. David Philips was born March 26, 1742; was a captain in the Revolution, a son of Joseph Philips, who was born in Wales, in 1716, and married to a Welsh lady who was born in 1710. Joseph came to America in 1755 with his three sons, David, John, and Josiah. Revd. David Philips had a great gift of pulpit and pastoral work. He was called to Peter's Creek Baptist Church, at Library, April 7, 1781, ordained May 1st of the same year, and there labored forty years. Revd. David Philips was a true patriot as well as a Christian. When the whisky rebellion was at its height, he mounted a stump, amid cries of "Shoot him!" and urged the payment of the excise, while his friends expected every moment to see him fall. He died March 5, 1829, and his widow, Mary Thomas, Oct. 31, 1840. Our subject received his schooling at Bethel Academy and Curry Institute, from which he graduated in 1817. He afterward spent three years at Michigan University, at Ann Arbor; graduating from the medical department in 1844. He enlisted Oct. 17, 1861, in Co. G, 101st P. V. I., and was discharged in March, 1863; re-enlisted in August, 1863, in Co. G, 2d N. J. C.; was promoted to second lieutenant, and at a battle south of Nashville, in December, 1864, was wounded and taken prisoner. The commanding officer in his report made honorable mention of his gallantry in action. He was mustered out May 15, 1865. He then taught school near home until 1880. Since returning from the medical college he has practiced medicine at Library. The doctor married, Nov. 4, 1869, Olivia M. Boyer, born Feb. 24, 1849, a daughter of James and Emily (Ivans) Boyer, and four children have blessed the union of Lucie E., Harry B., James H. and Rosette M. Mr. and Mrs. Philips are members of the Baptist Church, of which he is a deacon, and was for seven years superintendent of the Sunday-school.

James Gailey Murray was born June 22, 1821, in Peters township, Washington county, Pa. His grandfather, George Murray, although of Scotch parentage and birth, was reared in Ireland, and intermarried with Sarah Ray, by whom he had three sons. About 1798 he came to America, locating in Lancaster county, Pa., where he remained for ten years, and thence removed to Pittsburgh, where he spent the remainder of his life. William, the eldest of his three sons, although by trade a carpenter, followed, later in life, farming in Washington county. He married Jane Gailey, of Easton; their family of four children are all now living. William died in Snowden township, Allegheny county, in 1871. Of his children James G. is the eldest. He was born in Peters township, Washington county, June 22, 1821, but, his parents removing to Allegheny City while he was a lad, was educated at the public and other schools and academias. Having some education, he assisted his father, who was then in the bakery business, and drove the first bread-wagon in Allegheny City. In 1848 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Jacob Boyer, of Snowden township, and seven children, two deceased, were born to them. Mrs. Murray died April 18, 1855. Of the five children surviving her, Albert B. is a merchant at Bridgeville; J. Frank is a broker, and resides in Oakland, Pittsburgh; George Piersol is a member of Allegheny county bar; Annie M. resides with her father, and Ulysses Grant is an iron and steel inspector. Mr. Murray has been active in politics, being intimately connected with the management of the republican party of Western Pennsylvania. He has held office continuously since 1853; in greater part, however, offices of confidence and honor. Mr. Murray was, when a young man, postmaster at Upper St. Clair, one of the largest distributing country offices in the state; he then filled, successively, the offices of director of the poor of Allegheny county, for fourteen years; member of the prison board of Allegheny county; member of the board of managers of the Western Pennsylvania Reform School; commissioner of the county of Allegheny for two terms; treasurer of Allegheny county, while for years he has been justice of the peace and school director of his township. While not a church member, Mr. Murray attends the Presbyterian Church, of which his family are members.

The Boyce family is Richard Boyce, a Quaker, and a native of Ireland, a farmer by occupation, emigrated to America, landing in Philadelphia, afterward locating in Virginia for a short time. He then moved to Kentucky, where he engaged in farming, but later returned to Virginia and settled in the Shenandoah valley. It is supposed that his constant change of place was due partly to his religious views, not wishing to oppose the Indians. In 1793 he came to Allegheny county, and purchased from one Joseph Shipper, Jr., four hundred acres of land on the west side of Cartiers creek, where he remained until his death, which occurred when he was one hundred and four years old. He married Margaret Lesnett, whose people were early settlers in this county.

Capt. William Boyce, postoffice Herriottsville, was born in Allegheny county, Pa., in 1822, a son of Isaac Boyce, who was the eldest child born to Richard and Margaret (Lesnett) Boyce. Isaac was a farmer and miller, and married Sarah, daughter of William Denniston, of Allegheny county, and eight children were born to this union, six of whom are living. Isaac owned 135 acres of land; he died at the age of ninety-three years. Capt. William Boyce was born and reared near his present home; has followed farming all his life, and for twenty-one years operated a gristmill formerly carried on by his father. He married, in 1851, Mary, daughter of Andrew Griffin, and eight children have been born to them, of whom are living: Margaret, Isaac L., William J., Thomas S., Mary M., Sarah and Bessie. In 1861 Mr. Boyce raised a company for the 1st P. R. C., and was made captain of the same, serving five months. He is a member of the G. A. R., and politically he is a republican.

ROBERT BOYCE, postoffice Herriottsville, was born in 1830, and is the eldest son now living born to John and Nancy (McCabe) Boyce, and grandson of Richard Boyce. John Boyce was born in 1796, and died in 1884. Mary McCabe was born in 1804, and died in 1832. John was a farmer; was justice of the peace for many years, and at his death owned 250 acres of land. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church. Robert, our subject, now owns 192 acres of the original purchase made by his grandfather, and resides on the old homestead. He married, in 1880, Gertrude Ross, who has borne him two children, John Richard and Eva Mabel. Mr. Boyce was a soldier in the rebellion for three years; enlisted in 1861 in Co. K, 1st P. C., returned home in 1864, and by the exception of a year and a half spent in California, has always lived on his present farm. He is a republican.

JOSEPH BOYCE, farmer, postoffice Herriottsville, was born in South Fayette township, in 1828, and was reared on the farm. For twenty years he followed carpentering, having learned the trade in early life. He is a son of Isaac and Sarah (Dennison) Boyce. Joseph was educated in the schools of his township, and married, in 1847, Sarah J. Young, daughter of William Young, of this county. Seven children, five living, were born to Mr. and Mrs. Boyce: Isaac, a missionary to Mexico; James Y., William, Jennett S. and Annie S. Mr. Boyce enlisted in 1861, in Co. K, 1st P. C., and was honorably discharged in February, 1862. He owns a pleasant home and farm of 120 acres, forty of which he received from his father; the balance he earned by his own exertions, and assisted by a faithful wife and sons. He and family are members of the Presbyterian Church. He is a republican, and a member of the G. A. R.

HOSIBA BOYCE, postoffice Herriottsville, born in South Fayette township in 1841, is a grandson of Richard Boyce, the original pioneer of this family, and the youngest son born to John and Mary (McCabe) Boyce. Mr. Boyce was educated at the public schools and at Bethel Academy, and for some time was a student at Jefferson College. Like his ancestors he has made farming his principal occupation. In 1861 he enlisted in Co. K, 1st P. C., and served for three years and six months. He received a severe wound in the thigh, near New Hope Church; was taken prisoner near Richmond, and was retained for five months at Libby, Belle Isle, Lynchburg, Andersonville and Miller prisons. He was exchanged Nov. 21, 1864, and honorably discharged in 1865. In 1866 he married Emma S. Wallace, daughter of David Wallace, of this county, and six children, all living, were born to them: Edna L., Harry B., Jessie May, Margaret, John F. and Bayard D. With the exception of twelve years' residence in Washington county and three years and half in the service of this country, Mr. Boyce has always resided in Allegheny county. In 1860 he was elected to the legislature from Washington county by the republican party, of which he is a member and served two years, or one term. Since 1884 he has resided on his present farm of one hundred acres. He is school director for Upper St. Clair township. He is a member of the Masonic and G. A. R. fraternities, and of the Presbyterian Church.

Rev. F. A. Hutchison, postoffice Nobletown, is a native of Chester county, Pa., born in 1820. Fulton Hutchinson, his father, married Ellen Fulton, and by her had eleven children. F. A., the subject of this sketch, the third son, was born and reared in Chester county, and educated at the common schools and New London Academy. When twenty-one years of age he came to Washington county and entered Washington College, from which he graduated in 1844. He was licensed at Smyrna, Lancaster county, in 1848, and ordained to the full office of the ministry in the State of Indiana in 1849. There he remained one year, and in 1850 was installed minister of the U. P. Church at Nobletown, of which he was pastor nineteen years; after that he was engaged in general services for the church in New York and Philadelphia, and was two years at Dayton, Ohio. Since that time he has been engaged in missionary work as afforded by general vacancies throughout the church. He married, in 1856, Martha, daughter of Nathaniel Buchanan, Esq., to them were born six children, three yet living: Ellen C. N. L. Mary and Fulton. Mr. Hutchinson has, during his pastoral duties, been actively engaged in literary work, and most prominent among his writings may be mentioned "Work of the Ministry," "Necessity for Literary Culture," "Instrumental Music in Worship." He has been correspondent for various religious journals, and has also been engaged as public lecturer, his principal subjects being "Woman Suffrage and its Various Aspects," "The Model Farmer," and various other subjects of public interest.

HENRY MORROW, farmer, postoffice White Ash, was born Oct. 17, 1819, near the residence of C. J. Morrow. When eighteen years old he went to live with a childless uncle, whose name he bears, in what is now Penn township, and remained with him until his death, becoming his heir. His uncle was born in 1739, and died in 1806: he married Mary Johnston, who died in 1872, aged seventy-seven. In 1867 Mr. Morrow bought his present residence, near Hebron church. He is an elder in Beulah Presbyterian Church, and has always been a democrat. In 1864 he married Caroline Roberts, born in Wilkins township, daughter of John and Mary Robinson, of Connecticut and Ireland, respectively. They have one son, Harry Semple, born in March, 1865. When twenty-three years old he graduated from the Lehigh University, founded by Asa Packer, at South Bethlehem, Pa.

Charles Johnston Morrow, farmer, postoffice White Ash, was born Oct. 18, 1839, on the farm where he now resides, a grandson of Henry Morrow, who came from Ireland, and settled in Penn township about 1795. He died in his eighty-fourth year, the father of ten children: Ann (Fisher), Mary (Wilson), William, Elizabeth (Morrow), Henry, John, James, Hugh, Sarah (Johnston) and Jane (Duff). The fifth child, John, born in 1791 in Franklin county, married Jane Johnston, born in Wilkins in 1797. He died in 1873, his widow in her seventy-ninth year. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and afterward an elder in Hebron U. P. Church; an anti-masonic whig, and a republican; served as school director and overseer of the poor. He had three sons and three daughters: Henry, Eliza Jane (Mrs. Benjamin Kelley), Sarah B. (wife of John Duff), Mary M. (Wilson), Charles J. and John Hanna. The second and sixth are deceased, and the others dwell in Penn township. On his death Mr. Morrow left his farm to his two youngest sons. Charles' portion consists of ninety-five acres, on which he has always resided. In 1871 he married Isabella Miller, born in Wilkins, a daughter of William and Sarah Miller, of Ireland. Three of Mr. Morrow's children died in infancy, and he has one son living, named Hugh Wilson. Mr. Morrow is an elder in the U. P. Church; politically a republican with prohibition tendencies. In October, 1885, he had a cancer successfully removed from the left side of his upper lip.

Henry McDowell Morrow, farmer, postoffice Wilkinsburg, is a grandson of Henry Morrow, who came from Ireland and settled in Penn township in 1793. James, a son of Henry, was born in 1793 in Cumberland and settled in Penn township Morrow, and a native of this county, and remained on his father's farm, where John Morrow now lives, and here Henry McDowell was born Feb. 14, 1824. Henry Morrow died in 1841 and James in 1874; the latter's wife died in 1890 in her sixtieth year. Their children were H. Mc. E., Sarah Hannah, Mary Jane, James, John and Harriet. Elizabeth died in infancy, and all the daughters are now deceased. The sons reside in Penn township. James Morrow was an elder in Beulah Presbyterian Church, and helped establish Hebron U. P. Church, in which he was an elder until his death. He was a republican, and collected the taxes when Wilkins included Penn. Henry McDowell Morrow remained at home until 1854, when he bought a farm whereon he now resides; he has seventy acres, and follows general farming. In 1854 he married Rebecca Long, who was born in Penn, a daughter of John and Sarah (Brown) Long, of English parentage. The family is connected with Hebron U. P. Church. Mr. Morrow is a republican, and was school director nine years. His children are Sarah Anna, at home; Elizabeth Emma (Telford), in Penn township; James L., in Chicago; Mary H., Lavinia Ella and John H., at home.

John Morrow, farmer, postoffice White Ash, was born March 25, 1839, on the farm where he now dwells, and is a brother of H. McDowell Morrow. In 1871 he married Sarah Mitchell, a native of Ireland, and a daughter of William and Elizabeth Mitchell, who came to America when she was a small child. Their living children are Harriet Leslie, Elizabeth Ida, James Albert, Henry Wilson, Norman Lee, John Nelson and Floyd Mitchell. Marion Frances, Eva Jane and Susannah Mary died in infancy. Mr. Morrow is a member of the U. P. Church; he is a republican, and was treasurer of the school board three years.

Prof. John Scott Johnston (deceased) was born in Fayetteville, Allegheny county, Pa., Aug. 13, 1851, and was the second son of John L. and Rebecca (Scott) Johnston. His father was a native of Allegheny county, and was by occupation a farmer. At the age of seventeen the subject of this sketch bade adieu to farm life, and became a student in the normal school at Lebanon, Ohio. After remaining in this school for some time he entered Adrian College, Michigan. Having completed his school course, he became a teacher in the public schools of Fayette county, and served as assistant principal in the schools of Connellsville, Pa. In 1876 he was elected principal of the schools of Braddock, Pa., which position he filled for five years. In June, 1877, he married Alice E., daughter of Daniel and Maria (Veazey) McCaill, and three children were born to them: Carrie L., J. Linville and Guy Scott. In 1881 Mr. Johnston was elected superintendent of the public schools of Allegheny county, which position he occupied for almost six years, when he resigned to engage in other pursuits. He died at Turtle Creek, March 23, 1888, an earnest Christian and an active member in the First Presbyterian Church of Braddock.

William Johnston, farmer, postoffice box 235, Turtle Creek, is a grandson of William Johnston, who came to what is now Patton township prior to the Revolution. He was of Scotch descent, and reared in Franklin county, Pa.; served under Anthony Wayne at Stony Point, and through the Revolution, returning here at the close; he died in 1825, and had been all his life a wheelwright and farmer; his wife, Polly (Clugston) Johnston, died in 1796. Capt. Robert Johnston, a brother of William, also served in the Revolution under Gen. Greene, and settled in Patton township, where he died in 1828. William Scott, maternal grandfather of our subject, was reared in Pennsylvania, and served as an Indian scout during the Revolution. He died in Patton, in 1888, aged over eighty years. At one time he owned part of the present site of Allegheny City, and afterward part of Cincinnati, but was not satisfied with either for farming purposes, and came to Patton. Robert, son of William Johnston, married Martha Scott, was always a resident of Patton, filling many local offices; he was a whig and later a republican, and a member of the U. P. Church. He reared four sons and three daughters. William, the eldest, was born in 1825, and married Sarah Jane McCully, in 1851, who died in 1871, aged thirty-nine. Mrs. Johnston’s parents, Robert and Sarah (Young) McCully, were early residents of Patton township, and were of Irish descent. Mr. McCully’s father, John McCully, bought the farm now occupied by Mr. Johnston, in 1790. Of the ten children of Mr. and Mrs. Johnston, six are now living, three with their father: Sarah Ann (wife of Alexander McGuire, in Newtown), Matilda Emma (wife of W. H. Beswick, at Northfield, Kan.), William A. (in Patton township), George C., John F. and Minnie J. The family are associated with the U. P. Church. Mr. Johnston is a republican, and has served as assessor and school director.

WILLIAM GIFFIN, miller and farmer, P. O. Clinton, was born near Cannonsburg, Washington county, Pa., July 24, 1831, son of Andrew and Mary (Young) Giffin. Andrew was born in Washington county, Pa.; was in early life a carpenter, but later a miller, and now resides in Scott township, this county. He is a son of William and Esther (Wilson) Giffin, natives, respectively, of Washington county, Pa., and Ireland. Andrew and Mary (Young) Giffin had but one child, William. The latter when five years old was brought by his parents to Pittsburgh, where his father worked putting cabins on steamboats. William learned milling, at which he worked in Washington and Allegheny counties until 1860, when he purchased a flourmill in Venice, Washington county, but sold out three years later and bought another at North Star, Robinson township, Washington county; two years later he again sold out and opened a store in Allegheny City, where he remained until 1868, when he purchased the Clinton mill, at Clinton, Allegheny county, which he still owns, and now resides on his farm near Clinton. He married, May 16, 1854, Nancy J. Thompson, a native of Fairhaven, Allegheny county, and daughter of John and Jane (McCormick) Thompson, natives of Ireland, and Scotch Presbyterians. Mr. and Mrs. Giffin have two sons and two daughters: Mary J., wife of Washington Jackson, residing on their farm in Moon township; Adeline, at home; William G., learning milling at Stevenson’s mills, Moon, and Edwin S., assisting his father on the farm. Mrs. Giffin is a member of the U. P. Church at Clinton.

WILLIAM CRAIG CHAPLIN (deceased) was born June 16, 1810, in Pittsburgh, Pa., son of John Huntington and Harriet (Craig) Chaplin. William was one of Pittsburgh’s illustrious men, and belongs to a family whose ancestry upon both sides were of the army and navy and among men of marked ability. His father, John H. Chaplin, was a prominent attorney, admitted to the bar of Pittsburgh, Allegheny and Washington counties in 1808. He went to Florida and was appointed judge of the supreme bench there, where he died of yellow fever. His great-uncle, Samuel Huntington, was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. William Craig Chaplin’s mother was a sister of the well-known Neville B. Craig, born Dec. 26, 1785, and died May 6, 1867. His sister, Amelia Neville Chaplin, was born Dec. 1, 1812, and married Thomas L. Shields, Oct. 8, 1833, a prominent attorney of Sewickley—a beautiful suburb near Pittsburgh—who died March 9, 1879. Mr. Chaplin’s maternal grandfather, Major Isaac Craig, was in the U. S. army. William graduated at Annapolis, Md., and entered the service of the U. S. navy Nov. 1, 1826. He was married to Sarah J. Crossan, born in Pittsburgh Jan. 14, 1813, daughter of James and Nancy (Morrow) Crossan. Her father was a dry-goods merchant in Pittsburgh, and afterward proprietor of the Moungahela House. To Mr. and Mrs. Chaplin were born six boys and two girls: James Crossan, Amelia Neville (deceased), Annie C., William Huntington, Presley Neville, John M., Melchior B. and William Wilson. James was a graduate of Annapolis, Md., and during the rebellion was lieutenant-commander of the sloop of war Monocacy. He entered the service of the naval department in 1850, and was one of the most gallant officers, receiving many compliments from the department at Washington for his bravery. He died soon after the close of the war.

William H. Chaplin is employed in the office of the Pennsylvania Railroad company. John M. Chaplin was born Jan. 5, 1849. He received his education under private tutors in Pittsburgh and at the academy at Tuscarora, Academia, Pa., graduating in 1867. He then became confidential clerk for Col. James M. Cooper, and, leaving his employment three years later became discount and bills-of-exchange clerk in the Bank of Pittsburgh. After ten years of successful work here he attained to his present position, manager of the Pittsburgh clearing-house, where he has been for nine years. His mother lives with him in his beautiful home on Neville island, where he has a fine house, greenhouses and beautiful grounds. He is a member of the Episcopal Church; politically a republican. M. B. Chaplin is of the firm of Chaplin & Fulton, brass-founders, of Pittsburgh; William Wilson Chaplin is manager of the Petroleum Exchange Clearing-House.

GEORGE SPRINGER, farmer and stock-raiser, postoffice Moon, was born on the old homestead of his father, in Findlay township, June 28, 1841, son of Joseph and Nancy (McMurtry) Springer, former of whom was born on the old homestead farm where his father settled in 1795, and died in 1861; his widow died in 1887, aged eighty-two years; both were members of the U. P.
Church at Clifton. She was a daughter of John McMurtry, who married, in Philadelphia, Miss Shippen. John McMurtry was a hotelkeeper in Philadelphia, and settled on a farm in Findlay township, Allegheny county, where he and his wife died. They were members of the U. F. church. Joseph Springer was a son of Matthias Springer, a native of Germany, who became one of the pioneers of what is now Findlay township. Joseph Springer and wife had six sons and four daughters, all of whom lived to be men and women. Of these, George, the fourth son and seventh child, is now living on the farm adjoining the old homestead in Findlay township. He was united in marriage, June 24, 1866, with Eliza J. Bruce, who was born near Sheffield, Beaver county, Pa., daughter of Jacob and Jane (Johnson) Bruce. Mr. and Mrs. Springer are members of the Presbyterian church at Sharon. They have had six children, four sons living: J. Bruce, Charles A., Alonso G. and Sidney C., all of whom reside on the farm with their parents except Charles A., who is a telegraph operator at Los Angeles, Cal. Mr. Springer ranks among the leading farmers, and is a representative of two of the oldest families in Allegheny county.

Rev. Cornelius William Wycoff, pastor of Bethel Presbyterian church, postoffice Upper St. Clair, was born Oct. 14, 1837, in Carroll county, Ohio, a son of Isaac and Katherine (Frye) Wycoff, born, respectively, Dec. 7, 1814, in West Virginia, and March 3, 1818, in Maryland. His paternal grandfather, Cornelius Wycoff, was born in New Jersey, Dec. 16, 1787, a descendant of Cornelissin Wycoff, who came from Holland in 1636, and settled on Manhattan Island. His paternal grandmother, Leah (Crister) Wycoff, was born March 1, 1789; his maternal grandparent, John and Elizabeth Frye, were Germans. The subject of this sketch spent his youth in Ohio, and attended the New Hagerstown Academy. In 1861 he entered Washington College of Washington county, Pa., and graduated in 1862. The September following he entered the Western Theological Seminary at Allegheny, graduating in 1865. In May of that year he took charge of the Bacon Ridge and East Springfield churches, Ohio, and remained until November, 1873, when he resigned to take his present charge at Bethel, being the fourth pastor of that church, which was one hundred years old in 1878. He married, Dec. 19, 1865, Martha B. Morrison, born Nov. 23, 1839, at New Hagerstown, Ohio, daughter of Alexander and Sarah (Johnson) Morrison, born, respectively, in Pennsylvania, in 1808 and in Ireland September 9, 1811. Rev. and Mrs. Wycoff had following-named children: Mary K., John (died Jan. 16, 1876), William Alexander, Anna, Harry E. and Frank Isaac.

Andrew Tidball, farmer, postoffice Remington, a well-to-do citizen of Robinson township, was born in 1838. His grandfather, Thomas Tidball, a native of Maryland and a blacksmith by trade, came to Snowden township and purchased three hundred acres of land about 1776. (Bethel Presbyterian church and cemetery grounds are located on this property.) Of his five sons, William, the youngest, was born in 1796, and married Elizabeth Nicholson, of Washington county, who bore him fourteen children. William purchased one hundred acres of land, in 1835, from Samuel Scott, Sr., and resided on that place until he died, in 1884. Andrew, the ninth child, was born and reared on this place, and inherited the property after his father's death. He has always been a farmer. He married, in 1861, Anna Eliza, daughter of James and Amelia (McMichael) Neely, and seven children were born to them, four living: James E., Carrie Emma, William F. and Maud Estella. Mr. Tidball and family are members of the Presbyterian Church, and are highly respected; he is a republican.

F. W. Kelly was born in Westmoreland county, Pa., in 1866, a son of I. M. Kelly, a native of Fayette county, Pa., now a resident of Washington territory. Our subject was educated at the public schools of Westmoreland county, and for eight years was identified with the Imperial Coal & Coke company, in Allegheny county, one year and a half of which time he was superintendent of their cokeworks. Sept. 29, 1888, Mr. Kelly moved from Robinson township to Wilkeson, W. T., where he is engaged in hotel business. He married, in 1887, Maggie L., daughter of William B. Phillips, a prominent citizen of Moon township, Allegheny county, and they had one child, which died Sept. 6, 1888. Mr. Kelly is a member of the Jr. O. U. A. M., in religion a Presbyterian, politically a democrat.

William H. Guy, farmer and director of the county poor-farm, was born on the homestead of his father, in Findlay township, Sept. 11, 1829. His parents, Josiah and Margaret (Stewart) Guy, also natives of Findlay township, were married March 17, 1814. Mrs. Guy was a daughter of James and Margaret (McCune) Stewart, who were early settlers of Findlay township. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart were John, James, Richard, Thomas, Joseph, Jane, Ellen, Mary, Margaret, Ann and Sarah. Josiah Guy was born July 31, 1786, a son of William and Martha (Peoples) Guy, natives of Cumberland county, Pa., where they were married, coming to Findlay township soon after; they were Presbyterians, as were also Josiah and Margaret (Stewart) Guy, former having been an elder in old Montour Church. The last-named couple had ten children: in (deceased wife of Rev. John K. Cunningham), Margaret (wife of Dr. McCandless), Rebecca J. (deceased wife of John McCandless), Sarah (wife of Andrew Burns), William H., Eleanor (wife of Morris Duncan), James (deceased in infancy), Josiah (married to Tarza Wiley), Mary E. (widow of Joseph Duncan) and Jacob J. William H. Guy finished his education at Frankfort Springs Academy, and, Oct. 29, 1844, married Mary Jane Duncan, who was born at Uniontown, Fayette county, Pa., Aug. 5, 1826, a daughter of Elisha and Anna (Hay) Duncan natives, respectively, of Washington and Fayette counties, Pa. Mr. and Mrs. Guy had nine children, six of whom are living: Anna M., wife of John S. Burns, of Findlay township; Mary A., widow of Samuel J. Ewing; William E., manager for Colby & Co., Pittsburgh, married to Pauline Dye; Samuel J., M. D., married to Janette Parry, and residing at Windfall, Kan.; Nettie, wife of Rev.
John J. Srodes, Corapoli's, and Alexander D., a merchant at Corapoli's, married to Maggie L. Neely. Mr. and Mrs. Guy are members of the Presbyterian Church at Sharon, in which he served as deacon several years, and is now elder and trustee. In 1852 he went to California, mined and kept hotel and merchandised two years. He has held various offices of trust, a member of the district, justice of the peace, etc., and in November, 1888, was elected county director of the poor, being re-elected in 1887.

Henry Aten (deceased) was born Sept.
23, 1813, in Moon township, on the farm now owned by his son, Henry A. Aten, and died here April 11, 1887. He married Jane Hillis Stewart, who was born Nov. 5, 1816, on the farm now owned by R. M. Stewart, in Findlay township, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Glass) Stewart. Her father was born on June 4, 1780, in Pennsylvania. His par-cents settled on Potato Garden run, Findlay township, at an early date. Elizabeth (Glass)
Stewart was born in Washington county,
Pa., daughter of Robert and Jane (Hillis)
Glass, both Presbyterians, from Ireland.
Henry Aten (deceased) was a son of Richard and Nancy (McMurtrie) Aten, both born near Belvidere, N. J. Richard was born Feb. 4, 1766, and married Feb. 22, 1791. He was an early settler in Moon township, and patented
the farm which his grandson, Henry A.
Aten, now owns. Henry and Jane (Hillis)
Stewart Aten early united with the Presbyterian Church at Sharon, in which he served as an elder a number of years. He and his wife had four children, three living: John S., born July 10, 1814, married Ella Wilson, and resides in Findlay township, and had three children: Henry A., Jennie A. and Charles Mc.; Richard J., born Oct. 24, 1846, moved Margaret Sill, resides in Ashland county, Ohio, and Henry Albert. The last named was born Oct. 18, 1845, married Olivia
M. Stewart, June 21, 1876. She was born in Findlay township, a daughter of Joseph and Hannah (Glass) Stewart. Mr. and Mrs. Aten have five children: Della J. (deceased), Joseph H., Henry S., Mary H. and Ernest J.

Samuel L. Heath, farmer, postoffice West Elizabeth, was born in 1809 on the farm now owned by him in Jefferson township, a son of Samuel and Elizabeth Heath, former of whom was born at Port Put, latter in New Jersey. His grandfather, Samuel, a native of Irland, came from Wilmington, Va. The Heath family have occupied prominent positions in the history of the country. Brig-Gen. Heath was appointed one of a number to receive Gen. McMurtrie whom he landed in this country. John Heath was an officer in the Revolution, and commanded the garrison at Fort Waterford. Henry Heath was in the war of 1812. The meeting held for the purpose of perfecting the organization of Allegehny county was held at the residence of Andrew Heath, now the residence of Samson Stilly, of Jefferson township, and the Virginia courthouse stood near the graveyard on Lobb's farm, where justice in Alleghenecounty was first dispensed. The father of Samuel L. was in the whisky insurrection, and was a rebel, and the origin of the cemetery on Lobb's farm can be attributed to the fact that the federal soldiers encamped there and used it as a burial-place. The Heath family descended from three brothers who went from Ireland to England and from there to Virginia, where one of them made a permanent settlement, and the remaining two settled in Western Pennsylvania, where they married and reared families.

Samuel Heath, grandfather of Samuel L., reared a family of ten children: Robert Heath (born Nov. 5, 1762), Margaret (Oct. 1, 1764), Susanna (Sept. 27, 1766), Henry (Sept. 29, 1768), Elizabeth (March, 1770), Samuel (Aug.
1, 1773), Ruth (Oct. 30, 1775), Orpah (June 8, 1780), Adamson (Sept. 23, 1784), Naomi (Sept.
26, 1787). The farm now owned by Samuel
L. Heath has descended from father to son for three generations, each time being owned by one of the family named Samuel. Samuel L. is one of a family of seven children, but two of whom are yet living, the other-being Elizabeth, now Mrs. Harvey Hankins of Sabina, Ohio. Our subject married, in 1870,
Mrs. Amanda Martin, widow of John W.
Martin, by whom she had one child, Mary,
now Mrs. William B. Elliot, of Forward township. Mr. Heath was a member of the Jefferson Guards, and with them was present at the reception of Gen. Lafayette at Pittsburgh.

Joseph Pierce, farmer, postoffice Gill Hall, son of Amos and Deborah Pierce, was born in Jefferson township, in 1824, on the farm now owned by him. His great-grandfather, Andrew Pierce, came into Allegheny county with the Walls and Applegates, from New Jersey, and he (Andrew) built the first mill on the Monongahela river. Louis Pierce, subject's grandfather, and Amos Pierce, his father, were both natives of Forward township, this county, and were born on the place now owned by David Pierce. Amos Pierce was born April 17, 1796, died February 20, 1867; Deborah Pierce, born December 8, 1790, died April 12, 1875; Lewis, born February 3, 1822, died Aug. 29, 1860; Mary A., born July 17, 1833, died Nov. 1, 1869; Jane C., born Sept.
14, 1826, died Jan. 29, 1879; James McK., born Aug. 12, 1830, died June 4, 1883; April 29, 1871, the subject of this memoir married.
Henrietta, daughter of David and Emeline (Mackey) Torrence, of Pittsburgh, whose parents were among the old families of the city. Mr. and Mrs. Pierce have three children: William T., born March 27, 1872; Joseph A., born August 31, 1874, and Andrew C., born May 21, 1884. The parents are members of the U. P. Church. In 1854 Mr. Pierce went west and purchased a farm near Davenport, Iowa, moving onto the same in 1857. Here he remained until the spring of 1860, when he went to the gold-diggers on the Blue river, but, not being as successful as he had anticipated, he returned to the old farm in Allegheny county, and has since here remained.

William Silk, retired, postoffice Putnam, is the oldest citizen of Scott township, and was born June 15, 1804. He is the son of Thomas Silk, of New Jersey, who, when only two and a half years old, came to Allegheny county with his mother, he being the youngest of three children. Being in destitute circumstances, Mrs. Silk was obliged to leave her children in the hands of the overseers of the poor, and Thomas was bound out to one Jacob Bowman, at that time a coal- and ferry-boatman of Pittsburgh. He remained with Mr. Bowman until he was twenty-one years of age, and soon after engaged in the distilling business. He married Margaret Dickson, who bore him nine children. Thomas, later in life, purchased one hundred acres of land from the Bells, near the present borough of Green Tree, and there resided until his death, which occurred in 1854, when he was seventy-five years of age. Our subject was born on a farm in Upper St. Clair township, and was educated in a log school. He was married in 1827 to Lucinda Toe, daughter of Joseph and Barbara (Steen) Toe, and eleven children were born to this union: Margaret (Mrs. Dunlap), John, William (who died in California), Thomas (died in Libby prison), Rebecca Jane (Mrs. Hope), Joseph (died at Chattanooga, Tenn.), Charles and Lucia (twins, the former deceased and the latter at home), George W., Elizabeth (at home), and Daniel. Mr. Silk came to his present farm in 1856, the original purchase being 114 acres. He and his estimable wife are highly respected by all who know them. They have for many years been members of the Methodist Church.

Allan B. Angney, principal of public schools, postoffice Mansfield Valley is a native of this county, born in 1864, a son of Isaac A. Angney, a contractor, now deceased, who came from Carlisle, Pa., to Allegheny county. He (Isaac A.) married Margaret Beham, and Allan B. is their youngest child. He was educated at the high-school and Iron City College, and graduated at Indiana State Normal School. He commenced teaching soon after in the school where he later graduated, mathematics the first year and English branches the second. He came to Mansfield in 1887, and was elected by the board of directors principal of public schools here, which position he ably fills. In politics he is independent.

Joseph C. Bailiff, retired, Eina, was born Feb. 21, 1838, on the Isle of Man, Great Britain. He descends from an old family of science in England, who have the honor of being mentioned in the writings of Baron Von Humboldt. Joseph C. is the son of Abraham and Catharine (Brown) Bailiff, the latter of Scotch descent. They had three children, viz.: Mrs. Catharine Rome, of Ontario; Joseph C., and John, the latter living in California. Joseph was reared and received his education in Liverpool, where he also served an apprenticeship of seven years, and learned the plumbing, steam- and gas-fitting trade. Subsequently, in 1849, he came to America, and worked in several of the principal cities of the United States. In 1850 he located in Pittsburgh, where he followed his trade in company with different partners. The last partnership was known as Bailiff & Brown, and continued successfully for twenty-five years. Mr. Bailiff was married to Rebecca M., daughter of Rodger Miller, of an old pioneer family, and they have one child, Addison P., who married Sarah Blanche Bagaley, by whom he has three children: Joseph C., Caroline B., and an infant daughter, Birdie Beulah. Politically Joseph C. is a republican.

John Farmerie, the grandfather of John A. Farmerie, the subject of this sketch, was a native of France; emigrated to this country in 1828, and settled in Ross township, Allegheny county, Pa., as a farmer. He had seven children, viz.: George, James, Nicholas, Christopher, Catherine, Mary and Elizabeth. His sons George, James and Nicholas married, in the old St. Patrick's R. C. Church, the three daughters of Anthony Yerkins, who was a native of Célun, on the Rhine, Germany, and came to this country in 1820, settling in Allegheny Town, running a ferry-boat from Allegheny to Pittsburgh, poled by hand and used for transporting passengers and marketing horses, and cattle. George and Elizabeth Farmerie, the parents of John A. Farmerie, were married in 1887; they followed farming and kept a public house on the old Butler and Freeport pike. Mr. Farmerie also ran a boat, called the church boat, in 1848, on the old canal, from Pine creek to Pittsburgh. He and his wife had eight children, viz.: Elizabeth, John A., Barbara, George, Nicholas, Charles, Victor, and John H., Catherine and Andrew. Politically the father was a democrat.

John A. Farmerie, eldest son of George and Elizabeth Farmerie, was born in 1840, and married Anna M., the third daughter of Lawrence and Mary Ann Winschell. Lawrence Winschell was born in Bavaria, and immigrated to this country in 1830, finally settling in Sharmsburg, where he later became an extensive property-holder. He was a devout Catholic and an uncompromising democrat. Mr. and Mrs. John A. Farmerie were married in 1869, at St. Mary's R. C. Church, Sharpsburg, by Rev. Father Shell, and their union was blessed with five children, viz.: John L., Rachel M., Lovina A., Rozella E., and Emma P. John A. Farmerie, in 1860, entered into partnership with R. T. Graham, in buying lumber and oil, and in 1863 and 1864 ran a steam ferry at Sharpsburg, on the Allegheny river, where the first bridge erected at this point had been destroyed by fire, and until the bridge was rebuilt they continued in partnership. They, in 1869, built a sawmill at the mouth or junction of Pine creek and the Allegheny river, and Mr. Farmerie still retains a half interest in the sawmill. He is also engaged in the gas-fitting and plumbing business in Etta. He is a natural mechanic and a practical millwright. He is a strict Catholic and a sturdy democrat.

Peter Ivory, farmer, and postmaster at West View, was born Feb. 1, 1819, in Pittsburgh, a native of the parish of Street, County Westmeath, Ireland. Peter, Sr., was a mechanic, having worked eleven years for the English government during the reign of George III. He fought in two battles during the rebellion of 1789, was taken prisoner, but released shortly after on account of his extreme youth. He married, in Ireland, Catharine Rogers. Not liking nor caring to be subject to the English government, and being in fair circumstances, he resolved to seek a country whose form of government was more congenial to his mind, and with this object in view, and with his wife and only child, Mary, he immigrated to America in 1817. They arrived in Pittsburgh, and in 1819 purchased the farm on which he died Nov. 11, 1849, and on which the thriving village of West View is built. He was always an industrious, honest and prosperous man. Politically he was a democrat, and in religion a member of the Catholic Church. One son was born to him in Pittsburgh, Peter, Jr. (our subject), who has been engaged in farming and in different pursuits, such as contracting for the government; also was a stockman for twelve years. In 1869 he married Miss Johanna Conway, of Conway, Beaver county, Pa. He has bought and sold a great deal of property, owning at the present time two hundred acres of land. His marriage was blessed with two sons and three daughters: Peter, Conway, Minnie, Katharine Theresa and Ellie. Mr. Ivory has been justice of the peace for twenty-five years, has been president of the Pine creek and Wexford plank-road, director of the Allegheney and Perryville plank-road, of which he has been secretary. Politically he is a democrat, and in religion he is a stanch member of the Roman Catholic Church.

Henry Herr, retired, postoffice Bennett, was born June 4, 1806, in Pittsburgh, Pa., son of Benjamin Herr, a native of Lancaster county, Pa., where his grandfather, who was a native of Germany, had settled. Benjamin Herr came to Pittsburgh, and built the third brick house in the city. About 1808 he removed to his farm, on the north side of Allegheny river, which he had purchased in 1797 from George Wallace and Ann Wilson. He was a fruit- and hop-grower, and lived on his farm until his death, which occurred April 9, 1846, when he was eighty-five years of age. He was also the owner of Herr’s island. Henry Herr was reared on the farm, and is a blacksmith by trade. For a number of years he was employed as finisher with the firm of Knapp, Wade & Totter, who manufactured cannon, etc. Eventually he moved to Millvale, where he now resides. Here he was married to Mary P., daughter of Daniel Mathias; she died on her birthday, March 30, 1884, aged eighty-five years. They were the parents of two children, one of whom, Samuel, enlisted in Co. A, 63d regiment, and was killed in the battle of the Wilderness. Politically Mr. Herr is a republican.

Joseph Barton, farmer, postoffice Har- marville, was born in Pittsburgh, Jan. 6, 1818, a son of Robert and Mary (Percial) Barton. His parents, natives, respectively, of Scotland and England, were married in England, and came to Pittsburgh in 1816, moving in 1824 to what is now Harmar township, where the father died in 1848, aged seventy years, and the mother in 1860, aged seventy-three years. When twenty-three years of age, Mr. Barton married Ruth Ann Cready, of Six Mile Ferry, daughter of John and Sarah (Hickey) Cready. He is father of a large family, six of whom are still living, one son and five daughters. In politics he is a democrat.

William McKinney, Jr. (deceased), the eldest son of John McKinney, was born Nov. 23, 1843, and lived with his father on the homestead, March 4, 1867, he married Miss J. C., daughter of Thomas West, a native of his county, and seven children were born to them, three now living: Charles, William and Martha Elizabeth. Their father died May 8, 1884, and his widow and children now live on the old homestead.

John McKinney, the eldest son of William McKinney, was born Aug. 1, 1802, in the County Donegal, Ireland, and came to this country with his parents when he was eighteen years old. His father, with his family, after coming to this country, first settled in Pittsburgh for a short time. Then removing to Braddock (then called Braddock’s Field), with his wife and five children, two sons and three daughters, he purchased a farm, then called Frazier’s field. In June, 1837, John married a Miss Rebecca McGlimn, of Albany, N. Y., and by her had three sons and four daughters, of whom three are living: Mrs. William Curry, of Lawrence county; Mrs. L.C. Brinton, of Beaver county, Pa.; and Mrs. Dr. Matlock, of Braddock, Pa. John McKinney died at the old homestead, Sept. 25, 1857; his wife died Sept. 23, 1872.

Dr. Samuel Dale Clarke, of Verona, was born near Mount Jackson, Lawrence county, Pa., June 1, 1831, of six grandchildren, grandfather, Walter Clarke, came from Lewisburg, Pa., in 1802, and bought farms for his sons in North Beaver township. John Clarke, the great-grandfather, was born in Lewisburg, in 1775, and was one of the first settlers in North Beaver. Samuel D. Clarke, his grandfather, was born New Year’s day, 1802. He was a man of more than ordinary ability, and held various offices in both church and state. In 1871 he was elected to represent Lawrence county in the state legislature. Clement Clarke, the oldest son of Samuel D., lives on a part of the original tract occupied by four generations of the family. He was married Oct. 17, 1859, to Emily, a daughter of James Adair, one of the pioneers of Poland township, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Clarke are the parents of four children: the doctor, the subject of this sketch, and three daughters.

Dr. Clarke, like most of our successful professional men, was reared on a farm. He was educated at Poland Union Seminary, Poland, Ohio. He passed his medical studies at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Keokuk, Iowa, where he graduated in 1879. March 25 of the same year he located at Verona. The doctor was highly esteemed in the community where his early life was spent. In his professional life he has made many friends, and has succeeded in building up a large and lucrative practice. He is a member of several societies—the F. & A. M., K. T., Jr. O. U. A. M. and I. O. O. F.; politically he is a republican; religiously he is a Presbyterian.

George Kenngott, retired, residing near Etwa, was born Jan. 6, 1836, in Reutlingen, kingdom of Württemberg, Germany, a son of Johan G. and Mary (Messinger) Kenngott. He came to America Sept. 30, 1854, and in Pittsburgh learned the tinner’s trade; later he established, in Lawrenceville (now Fifteenth ward, Pittsburgh), a prosperous tin, stove and house-furnishing business, which he conducted about twenty years, and then sold out to his brother, H. Edward. He resided in Sharpsburg ten years, but since 1884 has been living in Shaler township. His wife Elizabeth is a daughter of Archibald and Mary (Wood) Dunn. The latter died young. Mrs. Kenngott came from Berwickshire, near Kelso, Scotland, to America at the age of sixteen; she is the mother of one son, George F., born Feb. 8, 1864. He graduated from the Pittsburgh High-school in 1882, and from Amherst in 1886, and is a student in Andover Theological Seminary in the class of 1889.

John English, merchant, Perrysville, was born Sept. 14, 1831, in Evergreen, Ross township, a son of Alexander English, of County Tyrone, Ireland. Alexander came to America in 1825 with his parents, Samuel and Elizabeth English (who were Protetants) and settled in Evergreen. Here Alexander married Elizabeth Thompson, and became the father of five children: John, Samuel, William, James and Elizabeth E. Alexander died here in 1879, aged eighty-three years; his widow survives him. John English received his education in this county, where he farmed until 1858, when he left the plow to engage in mercantile business in Perryville, and, although he had no previous training in that line, he has been very successful. He married Sarah, daughter of William McDonald, an old settler, and they were blessed with five children: Eliza B., William A., Anna M., John T. and Austin T. Mr. and Mrs. English are members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he has been treasurer thirty years.

A. C. Milliken, manufacturer, Pittsburgh. James Foster Milliken, the grandfather of A. C. Milliken, was a pioneer of Mifflin county, Pa., and one of the first ironmanufacturers of Pennsylvania. The father, Samuel Milliken, was also in the iron business, but more extensively dealt in lumber, supplying the railroad demand. A. C. Milliken received his education at the Pennsylvania Military Academy; also at Prof. Hastings’ Mantua Academy and Lafayette College, Easton, Pa., graduating at the latter place in the class of 1869. Thus equipped he entered mercantile career in the lumber business with his father in Clearfield county, Pa. After the great fire at Oscella, in 1873, he came to Pittsburgh, where his business abilities were soon recognized, and he became the manager of the Millvale Iron & Steel works; engaged in the manufacture of boilers and tanks with Messrs. S. B. Rheam & Co., which firm he was the founder of. He is also identified with the Pennsylvania Manufacturing, Mining & Supply company; Granite Roofing company and T. H. Nevin company; was also founder of the Penn Foundry company. In Millvale Mr. Milliken was a councilman for a number of years, and in 1885 was elected burgess of the borough, which office he still holds.

H. M. Brackenridge was the only son of Benjamin Morgan Brackenridge, who was the only son of H. M. Brackenridge, and was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 5, 1828. He received his education in Philadelphia, New York and Washington, and inherited a very extensive tract of land from his mother, Caroline Marie Brackenridge, located in Harrison township, Allegheny county, Pa. He was a scientist, an artist and a fine chemist, but his health was too delicate to permit him to follow his inclinations. He married, Feb. 10, 1853, Miss Phillippine, daughter of Edward Siler, a young lady educated, refined and accomplished, whose father was a doctor of philosophy and chemistry, he having been one-fifth owner of a celebrated chemical works in Germany, but owing to unexpected financial reverses removed to America and accepted the position of first chemist for the Pennsylvania Salt-Manufacturing company, whose works are located at Natrona. Mrs. Brackenridge was called upon to mourn the loss of her husband, who, in his thirty-fourth year, became a victim to that fell destroyer, consumption. Keenly feeling her great loss and realizing fully the responsibility now devolving upon her (being left with a son, H. M., and a daughter, Cornelia Caroline), she assumed, with the GRACE characteristic of a lady, all the duties and cares of superintending the proper management of a vast estate, and the education of her children. Knowing that by inheritance her children's tastes would incline to literature and art, she sought to guide them in that direction. H. M. received his education partly at the University of Pittsburgh and Cornelia C. at the Bingham Institute. Then Mrs. Brackenridge, desirous of affording all advantages their tastes and position required, visited Europe, and for three years remained with her children, where they enjoyed all the advantages afforded by the universities of Dresden, and traveled extensively through Europe during the summer. They all, however, returned to the old Brackenridge homestead, and Cornelia C. was united in marriage with Erastus J. McKelvey, a prominent member of the Pittsburgh bar. She was doomed to an early death, and died, leaving two children, Cornelia Brackenridge and Caroline Marie Brackenridge McKelvey, now members of their grandmother's household. They have a governess, receiving an education, and are being fitted to properly fill the social positions a delicate and refined taste requires and wealth affords. H. M. Brackenridge married Madge, daughter of William Richards, of Philadelphia, former superintendent of the Pennsylvania Salt-Manufacturing company of Natrona, and now prominently identified with railroad interests. To them have been born two children, Helen and Cornelia. All are at the Brackenridge homestead, known as "The Grove," located just below Natrona, on the Allegheny river, their residence being conspicuous in a lawn descending gently to the river, and in the summer-time surrounded and bathed by the sweet perfume of rare plants and shrubs; in the colder season enlivened with wit and humor, and the graces which center there would, all combined, almost make the "Verde rest of the world is Volte flore.

JAMES MCCLURE, farmer, postoffice Elk- horn, is a descendant of William McClure, who was one of three brothers who came from Carlisle, Pa., and settled in the Monongahela valley. William located in what is now Forward township, below Monongahela City, on lands now owned by James Patrick and Mrs. Lewis Wallace. John settled on the present site of Homestead borough, and Alexander midway between Elizabeth borough and McKeesport, on the old McClure farm. James, the father of our subject, was born on the farm now owned by Mrs. Lewis Wallace Aug. 6, 1781, and married Elizabeth Applegate, who was born Feb. 3, 1788, and was a descendant of one of the pioneers of Forward township. The members of his family were Maria, Eliza, Andrew, James, Jane and Harvey. Maria, now deceased, married Elijah Hollcroft; Eliza, now deceased, married William Gaston; Jane died unmarried, and Aaron, also deceased, married Lydia Hollcroft; William is a resident of Forward township; Harvey is a druggist in Elizabeth borough, and James is also a resident of Forward township. James remained with his father until he married, Nov. 19, 1846, Nancy Pangborn, daughter of Isaac Pangborn, born Feb. 19, 1828. They settled on the farm now owned by him, and neither of them was ever seventy miles from home. Their children are Cicero, Elizabeth, Rebecca, Mary and Frank; born, respectively, Nov. 6, 1847; May 1, 1850; July 9, 1853: Dec. 16, 1864: March 13, 1870. Rebecca died when she was two years old. The remainder are at home, except Elizabeth, who married Mr. Yohe and resides in Monongahela City. Mr. and Mrs. McClure united with the Baptist Church of Elizabeth during the winter of 1844-45. He is a republican, and was a school director for three years.

CHARLES REINHARD, merchant, Verona, is a native of the city of Allegheny, born Nov. 10, 1840, son of Louis and Barbara (Franz) Reinhard, who were born, respectively, in Hamburg and Meinz, Germany. The mother died in 1851, before reaching the age of thirty, but the father is yet living, at the age of eighty-four, and resides at Newport, Lawrence county, Pa. For many years he kept the William Tell hotel at Pittsburgh, and was one of the defenders of his adopted country, enlisting in 1861 in the 101st P. V., and serving in the Army of the Potomac until discharged on account of injuries received at the battle of Fair Oaks. He and his wife had three children: Mrs. Mary Miller, now a resident of Decatur, Ind., Charles and a daughter who died in infancy. As soon as Fort Sumter was fired upon Charles Reinhard joined a company of troops enlisted for three months, and when that term expired re-enlisted in the 9th regiment P. V., reserve corps, and remained until his term expired, in 1864. He took part in nineteen battles and skirmishes and was wounded by a exploding shell at Charles City cross roads. After six weeks' rest at home he again enlisted in the 6th P. H. A., with which he was stationed on the Orange & Alexandria railroad, seeing only light skirmishing, and was discharged in the summer of 1865 because his services were no longer required. After leaving the army he engaged in brickmaking in Allegheny, and came to Verona in 1873 to work in the yards of S. M. Kier. Three years later he was elected justice of the peace, which office he resigned after serving four years to accept the appointment of postmaster, resigning the latter office on the inauguration of President Cleveland. He has served ten years as tax-collector and three years as clerk of the borough council, and is an ardent republican. In 1889, with a partner, he built the fine store opposite Verona station, of which he is now the sole owner, and carries a general stock of merchandise. Mr. Reinhard is associated with the G. A. R., K. of P., K. of the M. and I. O. O. F. In 1877 he married Sarah A. Cunliffe, and they have one child, Jessie May. Robert Cunliffe, the grandfather of Mrs. Reinhard, was of English descent, and an early resident of Pittsburgh. Her parents were Charles and Elizabeth (Wilson) Cunningham, the latter of Irish descent. Mrs. Reinhard was born in Penn township in 1837. The paternal grandfather of Mr. Reinhard was colonel of a regiment in the English-German legion at the battle of Waterloo, at which he lost a leg. The maternal grandfather of Mr. Reinhard was one of Napoleon's Old Guard, and was engaged in the same battle, but escaped unharmed.

William Cunningham, retired farmer, P. O. Monroeville, was born in Patton township, Jan. 6, 1817, a son of Robert and Susanah (McElroy) Cunningham, of Irish and Scotch descent, respectively, the former of whom, a native of Eastern Pennsylvania, died here in 1822, at the age of sixty-two years; he was an elder in the Presbyterian Church, served in the revolution, farm and afterward was colonel of militia. William McElroy, father of Mrs. Susannah Cunningham, settled very early on the farm where Mr. Cunningham now resides, and was forced to remain away from it seven years on account of the hostility of the Indians. Mr. Cunningham's father died before the subject of this sketch was five and one-half years old, and he has since resided on this farm. In July, 1880, he married Caroline R. Bowser, of Armstrong county, and one child was born, now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham are connected with the Presbyterian Church. He is a republican, and has served as township treasurer and justice of the peace.

Col. Samuel McKelvy was born May 1, 1814, in Pittsburgh, Pa., son of Hugh McKelvy, Jr. The grandparents of our subject, Hugh and Elizabeth McKelvy, came to America in 1796, and brought with them a large family of children: James, John, David, William, Hugh (the father of our subject), Mrs. Betsey McCracken, Mrs. Strain and another daughter who came to America earlier. The grandfather came to Pittsburgh in 1796, and rented the farm (where Twenty-eighth street now is) of Col. James O'Hara. The father of our subject was by trade a brickmaker: was a colonel in the militia, and eventually became a councilman; was also a coal-merchant; politically he was a democrat. He died in May, 1855, aged fifty-five years; his wife, "see Nancy McGowan, died aged eighty-four years. Samuel succeeded his father in business, became the founder of the cast-steel business in Pittsburgh, and started the McKelvy & Blair Cast-steel and File Manufacturing company. He was largely interested in other business enterprises, and was prominently identified with all movements tending to the material progress and development of his native city. In 1855 he had a tract of land in Pridavile, W. Va., of 33,000 acres, on which he had three blast-furnaces in operation. When he broke out he abandoned business and volunteered for the service. He was early connected with the Duquesne Greys, of which organization he was for a time captain. He was appointed to the commissary department, and eventually was made commissary of the third army corps, on the staff of Gen. Heintzelman. After the second battle of Bull run he was placed in charge of the convalescent camp near Washington, D. C., where he did duty until toward the close of the war, when he was appointed chief commissary of cavalry under Gen. Sheridan. He resigned, but Secretary Stanton declined his resignation. After the war Col. McKelvy was appointed United States marshal for the western district of Pennsylvania and took an active part in politics. He was a pronounced democrat, and always took a prominent part in the committees and conventions of that party, at one time being chairman of the county committee. He died somewhat suddenly, March 24, 1859, having been in ill health for some years.

Col. McKelvy married Anna B. Pride, who was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 3, 1819, a daughter of David Pride, one of Pittsburgh's oldest and best-known citizens, and who was a contractor and builder and large property-owner; he came to Pittsburgh when a lad, in 1785, with his mother and two sisters, Sarah and Marion. Mrs. McKelvy preceded her husband to the grave about two weeks. They left behind them three daughters and four sons: daughters—Mrs. Charles G. Wood, of Sewickley; Mrs. J. A. Quay, wife of the superintendent of Morganza, and Miss Anna P.; and sons—Dr. W. A. McKelvy, of Kansas; W. H.S., of Sewickley, and James and Roden, of Pittsburgh.

James C. Lewis, manufacturer, Emsworth, a suburb of Pittsburgh, was born Feb. 22, 1822, and is the fifth son of George Lewis, Sr., and Susannah (Hunt) Lewis, who were the parents of ten children. George Lewis, Sr., was born in Merthyr Tydvill, South Wales, Jan. 12, 1788. He was the pioneer in the manufacture of rolled iron in America. After serving an apprenticeship to the iron trade in his native country, he immigrated to America in 1819, and joined his brother, Thomas C. Lewis (who had crossed the ocean the year before), in erecting a rolling-mill for Isaac Mason, in Fayette county, Pa. Previous to this time bar-iron was made by the slow, imperfect and expensive process of forging under a forge-hammer. As in other new enterprises, failure was predicted, but the operation was successfully performed, and a complete revolution in the manufacture of iron was inaugurated in this country. In starting these works Thomas C. Lewis was engineer, George Lewis, Sr., roller and roll-turner, Samuel Lewis, heater, and James Lewis, catcher (all brothers), and Samuel C., son of Thomas C., heavy-up. George Lewis, Sr., continued in the management of the mechanical department of these works till 1819, when he went to go to Pittsburgh to take charge of the rolling and turning departments of the Union Rolling-mills, then being erected. In 1823 he went to Maryland to complete the Gunpowder Iron-works of Mr. Ridgeley. In 1824 he returned to Pittsburgh, formed a company and erected the Dowlaís Iron-works, now known as the Kensington Iron-works. He was regarded as one of the best mecanics of his day, and was applied to whenever there was to be a new mill erected, either to take charge or to furnish plans of the same. He died April 6, 1841, leaving a widow and seven children, of whom James C. Lewis alone survives.

James C. Lewis received his education in private schools and the Western University of Pennsylvania. In boyhood he learned the iron trade, and in 1845, with his brother George and James O'Hara, formed the firm of Lewis, O'Hara & Lewis, and erected the Vesuvius Iron-works at Sharpsburg, Pa., which in 1847 was changed to Lewis, Dalzell & Co.
In 1863 George Lewis died and Lewis W., his brother, was taken into the firm. In 1878 the firm was dissolved, and in 1880 Mr. Lewis went to Portsmouth, Ohio, where he organized the Portsmouth Iron & Steel company, of which he was elected president and general superintendent, and his sons, George Sargent, secretary-treasurer, and Frank C., assistant superintendent. Some three years after, Mr. Lewis disposed of his interest in this company and returned to Pittsburgh.
He was also connected with the Isabella furnaces at Etna for many years, and was actively engaged in various other kinds of business. Mr. Lewis was married March 7, 1848, to Miss Sarah M., daughter of Dr. John Sargent, of the city of Allegheny, and ten children have been born to them, viz.: Martha M., deceased wife of Dr. W. C. Shaw, of Pittsburgh; George S., who died in November, 1888; Florence E., wife of Charles Lin-ford, artist in Philadelphia; Frank C., superintendent of the cold-die department of Carnegie, Phipps & Co., Beaver Falls, Pa.; Sarah B., wife of John E. Jones, of Portsmouth, Ohio; Alice, Lily and James S., at home, and William and John, who died when children. Mr. Lewis and family are Presbyterians, of which church he has been a ruling erlder for some thirty-two years. Politically he is a strong republican, and was a member of the first county, state and national conventions held at Pittsburgh to organize the republican party.

James M. Nevin, attorney at law, Elizaabeth and Pittsburgh, is a grandson of James Nevin, of Scotch ancestry, who emigrated from Ireland with his parents shortly after the Revolution, and settled on Peter's creek, in Mifflin township. The grandfather of our subject removed to Columbiana county, Ohio, in 1833, where James M. Nevin was born in 1849, his father being Abraham S.
Nevin, son of James, and his mother being Mary J. (Campbell) Nevin. Mr. Nevin received his early education at the common schools, graduated from Monmout College in 1879, and also graduated from the law department of the State University of Iowa in 1881, and also from the law department of the Washington University of St. Louis in 1882. He is a member of the Iowa, Missouri and Pennsylvania bars, and commenced the practice of his profession in the fall of 1883 at Pittsburgh and Elizabeth. In 1884 he was married to Lucile, daughter of Rev. John A.
and Elizabeth (Fisher) Gordon, of Southern Ohio. They have two children, James G. and Lucile. Mr. Nevin and his wife are members of the U. P. Church of Elizabeth.

The Wall family. The ancestry of this family in America dates from an early period in the history of the country. In 1640 Lady Deborah Moody, the widow of a Wiltshire baronet, organized an association of some fifty persons who came to America, and among them was Walter Wall. This association first established at Lynn, Mass., remaining there until 1643, when they removed to Gravesend, on Long Island. In the latter part of 1657 Walter Wall and others emigrated to New Jersey with their families, where they made a purchase embracing the present county of Middlesex and part of the county of Monmouth. Walter Wall purchased a large tract of land in the neighborhood of Middletown, on a portion of which, known as Wall's Mill, and afterward as Van Meeter's Mill, was born Gen. Garret D. Wall, who served for several years as a member of the United States senate, and, in the several divisions of town lots and outlands of Middletown, Walter Wall found himself the possessor of much valuable land. Here his son Garret became a man of some prominence in public affairs, his name being mentioned in Middletown town-book as receiver of taxes, and his son Jarat, or Jarrett, was among the leading citizens who resisted the unjust demands of the proprietary in 1700-01.

James Wall, son of Humphrey Wall, and grandson of Jarrett Wall, above mentioned, together with his brother Walter, moved from their Jersey homes in 1766 to find greater freedom and change of scene in the then "western wilds," west of the mountains.
Arriving at the forks of the "Yough," as it was then called (which included that portion of the counties of Allegheny and Westmoreland now lying between the Youghioghney and Monongahela rivers, comprising the townships of Lincoln, Elizabeth and Forward in Allegheny, and Rostraver township in Westmoreland), they built cabins, cleared the land and commenced the cultivation of the frontier land, surrounded by Indians and the wild animals of the forest. In the spring of 1769 they revisited New Jersey, and in the fall of same year returned to their own homes with their families. Several other New Jersey families came with them, among them the Applegates, Pierses, Ketch-umps, Johnsons, Imlays, Smiths and others, some of whose descendants still reside in the district. The region known as Yohogania and Rostraver being mainly settled by emigrants from New Jersey caused it to be called the New Jersey settlement at an early day, a name still familiar to the present generation.
Owing to the land controversy which existed for a period of over thirty years between the authorities of Pennsylvania on the one hand and those of Virginia on the other, titles to lands could not be obtained with any degree of certainty until after the year 1784. Warrants were granted by the land department of Pennsylvania to James Wall and Walter Wall for 332 acres 64 perches and allowance, each, under date of July 10, 1786, and the farm on which James Wall settled is now owned by William Caldwell and Stephen Applegate. He (James Wall) married Catherine Van Eman, a sister of George Van Eman, the grandfather of Hon. George Van Eman Lawrence, of Monongahela City, Pa., and had eight children: Walter, William, Garret, Nicholas, Andrew, Naomi, Mary and Hannah. James Wall died on the homestead farm May 20, 1811, and his widow a few years later. He was noted for his hospitality and genial disposition; was a strict observer of the laws of God and of man, honest in business, and kind to his family and good to the poor. He took considerable part in public affairs.

Garret Wall was born July 13, 1778, married Feb. 16, 1800, Mary Sparks, a daughter of Col. Richard Sparks of the U. S. army, and resided on the farm given his wife by her father. Here the late Col. Brisben Wall, son of Garret, was born, and this property he owned up to the time of his decease. Garret Wall was a man of sterling character and ability; was possessed of considerable literary taste and a good knowledge of common law, and was an uncompromising adherent of the principles of virtue and morality. He served in the war of 1812 as quartermaster of Col. Ferree's regiment, P. V. I., and filled the office of justice of the peace for many years, up to the time of his decease. He built a sawmill on his farm in 1829, run by water-power, which was operated by him during his lifetime, and afterward by his son Brisben until 1852, and then abandoned. His children by his first wife, see Mary Sparks, were Milo, Sparks, William, Jesse S., Joseph, Gideon, Charity E. and Brisben. The mother of these children dying in 1821, Mr. Wall took for his second wife, March 16, 1824, Mary Watson, who bore him the following-named children: Sidney M., Mary, Elizabeth, Catherine, Jane Amanda, who his widow, and their brother died Jan. 3, 1848, and the mother in 1881.

Jesse S. Wall was born July 13, 1806, married Sarah Devore March 5, 1829, and lived on the farm now owned by James Wall, adjoining the old homestead, until 1868, when he moved to Washington county, where he remained until 1844, in which year he removed to Guernsey county, Ohio, where he and his wife now reside. The names of their children are Andrew, William, Samuel, David, Lucinda, Sarah, Sparks and Ella.

Joseph Wall was born Nov. 17, 1811, married Frances, daughter of the late David Allen, and resided on the farm given his wife by her father, near Sunny Side, in Allegheny county, Pa. He held the office of justice of the peace for fifteen years. He was treasurer of the Forward township school board for several years, and for some time was a deacon in the Presbyterian Church. He possessed the confidence of all who knew him for strict honesty and truthfulness. The following named were his children: Mary Jane, Emeline, Josephine, Flora, Sidney M. (all deceased, unmarried); Henrietta, Harriet, Letitia (deceased), Arabella (deceased), Adaline and Frances (twins) and Allen, all married. Mrs. Frances (Allen) Wall, the mother of these children, was born Aug. 18, 1811, and died March 11, 1853. Joseph Wall married, for his second wife, Sept. 6, 1860, Susan Gilkeson, and died July 13, 1881; his widow subsequently moved to Monongahela City, Pa., where she still resides.

Col. Brisben Wall was born March 23, 1819, on the old homestead, and entered the schools of the neighborhood at an early age. The death of his mother while he was scarcely two years old deprived him of the influences which a mother alone possesses and can impart. She was a lady of much taste and refinement, and was highly respected and esteemed by all her neighbors and acquaintances. His father possessed many commendable traits of character which the youthful Brisben inherited in a very large degree and retained through life. The boy made excellent progress in all his studies at school, especially in the natural sciences and mathematics, and was considered one of the best mathematicians in his part of the country. He commenced land surveying, civil and mining engineering in 1850, which he continued to practice in connection with the management of his farm almost to the close of his life. In politics he was a Whig until the formation of the republican party, to which he firmly adhered through life. When the war of the rebellion broke out Mr. Wall entered the Union service, Sept. 28, 1861, as first lieutenant of Co. D, 97th Pa. I., Col. H. A. Hambright, Seventeenth brigade, commanded by Brig.-Gen. S. Negley. Lieut. Wall remained with his company on the march of the army from Louisville to Murfordsville, and at the last-named place he was prostrated with fever, from which he never fully recovered. While convalescing at Murfordsville he was detailed to act as chief of a corps of pioneers and sappers under command of Col. Innes, 1st regiment Michigan Engineers. Ill health, however, compelled him to resign his commission April 25, 1863, at Nashville, and return home. He still retained an active interest in the success of the Union arms, and during the Confederate raid into Pennsylvania, which brought about the battle of Gettysburg, he accompanied Rev. Capt. J. C. Brown's company of Home Guards to Harrisburg. Col. Wall married, May 27, 1847, Hannah Sutton, daughter of the late John Sutton, of Elizabeth (now Forward) township, Allegheny county, Pa., and sister of Dr. Lewis Sutton, of West Newton.
and resided on the homestead farm, to which he succeeded after the death of his father, until 1873, at which time he purchased a portion of the farm owned by the late Squire Jesse Applegate, including the mansion-house thereon, which he moved into with his family and occupied until his decease. His widow and four sons remain to mourn his early departure from life. His eldest son, John Sutton, is married and resides in Monongahela City; George W., Jesse S. and Lewis Briscoe, together with their widowed mother, remain on the farm where he died.

Col. Briscoe Wall was conscientious, truthful and honest in business, and took an active interest in all public enterprises and improvements. He was a genial friend, an honorable gentleman, a useful citizen, and a loyal soldier descended from patriotic blood.

GEORGE W. WALL, farmer, postoffice Monongahela City, is a son of Col. Briscoe and Hannah (Sutton) Wall. John, father of Hannah, was one of the early pioneers, and reared a family of four children: Joseph, Lewis, Susan and Hannah. Lewis is married and settled at West Newton, where he is prominently identified with the medical profession. He and Hannah are the only ones now living. Col. Briscoe Wall was a prominent citizen of the county; he held various official positions, and was one of those who aided in suppressing the rebellion. His children were John Sutton, George W., Jesse S. and Lewis Wall. The latter, recently married, is now living on a farm.

Dr. JOSIAH MCCORMICK (deceased) was born in this county, in 1819, third son in the family of six children born to James and Jane (Dennis) McCormick, of this county. He was educated at the public schools, and was an apt scholar and ready student. He commenced the study of medicine under Dr. Thompson, of Washington county, Pa., and graduated at Jefferson Medical College, in Philadelphia, in 1838. He immediately commenced the practice of his profession in Upper St. Clair township, and came to Mount Lebanon in 1837, where he followed his profession until his death, in 1864. He was married, in 1840, to Mary Espey, daughter of James Espey, of this county, and nine children (eight of whom are living) were born to them: James Espey (deceased), John C., Joseph D., Thomas M., Jane, Anna Margaret, William Espey, Mary Ida and Martha Elizabeth. Mrs. McCormick, a highly respected lady, still resides at Mount Lebanon, and, with her family, is a member of the U. P. Church. The doctor was a republican.

WILLIAM CHESS was born in 1825, and was educated at the common schools. He has followed agricultural pursuits through life, having moved, in 1833, to his present farm, on the old homestead property, eighteen of the sixty-three acres having been purchased by his father. He was married, in 1857, to Mary Ann, daughter of Samuel and Margaret (Gillmore) Lewis, and to them were born four children: Margaret G., William G., Samuel L. and John Findley. Mr. Chess is among the highly respected citizens of Green Tree borough, and has been a member of its council and on its school board. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church; politically a republican.

G. Y. C. CHESS, farmer, was born in Union township, now Green Tree borough, in 1842. He was educated at the public schools, and has followed farming and gardening through life. He owns sixty-two acres of land, part of which was left by his father. He was married in 1864 to Rachel Sterrett, daughter of Robert Sterrett, of Chartiers township, this county, and they have one child, Grace M. Mr. Chess enlisted, in 1861, in Co. A, 9th P. R., and for two years and ten months served as a private. He is a republican: has been school director for Green Tree borough, and is highly esteemed by all who know him.

BENJAMIN ALPHEUS JOBE, builder, postoffice Turtle Creek, was born May 15, 1848, a son of Robert and Sarah (Martz) Jobe, the latter of German descent. John Johnston Jobe, grandfather of Benjamin A., was a native of Ireland, settled near Greensburg, Pa., and took up five hundred acres of land. He married a German lady. Their son, Robert, was born at Ligonier, and lived the life of a quiet farmer. Benjamin A. was reared on a farm, and when eighteen years old joined Co. H of the 11th P. R., and saw hard service with the Army of the Potomac, participating in every battle from Bull run to Cold Harbor. He received a gunshot at Gaines Mill, which destroyed the sight of his left eye, and was taken prisoner, but exchanged in time to share in the battles of Antietam and South Mountain. He was stunned by a fragment of a shell at Gettysburg, and after that battle was promoted from first sergeant to captain. At the battle of Cold Harbor he was struck by a timber from the breastworks, knocked insensible and taken prisoner. For nine months he was kept on the move, most of the time to prevent rescue, and was exposed for three weeks to the fire of the Union army at the siege of Charleston, S. C. In April, 1863, he was discharged, and took up carpenter-work, which he had followed a year before entering the army. In 1867 he came to Turtle Creek, where he has since been engaged in contracting. He built a saw- and planing-mill, which was burned in 1866, entailing a loss of $12,000, but during the following winter he rebuilt, and is rapidly recovering his loss. In 1866 Mr. Jobe married Sarah Agnes, a native of Patton township, and a daughter of John and Margaret McClellan, of Irish descent. The family is associated with the Presbyterian Church, and includes four children, viz.: William John, Elmer Alpheus, Sarah Margaret and Royal Reece. The elder two are carpenters, the first with his father and the second in Colorado. Three sons, Robert Rudy, Francis Meade and Albert Irwin, died at an early age.
Christopher C. Lobingier was born at Laurelville, Pa., June 7, 1840. He is the son of Jacob Lobingier, and the grandson of Judge John Lobingier, of Westmoreland county. He settled in Braddock’s Field in 1858, and attended the “Farmers’ High-school,” in Centre county. He enlisted for three years, in 1862, in Co. A, 100th (Roundhead) P. V., and participated in the following battles: James Island, second Bull run, Chantilly, Fredericksburg, siege of Vicksburg and Jackson, Miss. The Roundhead regiment was raised by Dr. Leasure, under authority from the war department. For many months the officers served without commissions. The name Roundhead was given the regiment by Simon Cameron, secretary of war. Mr. Lobingier was married Jan. 10, 1863, to Helena E. Mills, daughter of Isaac Mills, Sr., one of the earliest settlers of Braddock’s Field. They have five children, named J. Everett, Judson, Jason, Mary E. and Ida L.

Charles Knepper, publisher, postoffice Mansfield Valley, Allegheny county, Pa., was born Dec. 3, 1834, in Albany, Berks county, Pa., a son of Christian and Anna Mary (Lutz) Knepper. His grandfather, John Knepper, was born in Württemberg, Germany. Charles, the subject of these lines, spent his early life on his father’s farm, and attended the select and public schools; later he entered the Susquehanna Collegiate Institute, and graduated at Jefferson College, Canonsburg, Pa. Aug. 3, 1864, he entered Princeton Theological Seminary, remaining two years; then attended Mercersburg Theological Seminary a portion of one year. Aug. 8, 1866, he married Maria M. Crouch, and their children are Esther Mary, John B., Lillie Auna, Rosc Bell and Flora Jenette. Mr. Knepper taught an academy at Steiinsville, Pa., in 1866 and 1867, and preached in connection therewith. He received a call from the Reformed Church of Forreston, Ill., in 1867, which he accepted, and served that congregation for three years. He was then called to the principalship of Clarion Collegiate Institute, but, his health failing, he resigned in 1871. He then moved to Mansfield Valley, Allegheny county, and began the printing and publishing business in 1872, but in 1876 his office was destroyed by fire. He started up again, however, and has been very successful. Politically he is a republican.

Rev. J. M. McJunkin, postoffice Oakdale Station, is a native of Washington county, Pa., born in September, 1847. William McJunkin, his grandfather, came from County Down, Ireland, when a child, locating with his parents in York county, Pa., and he and his two brothers, after arriving at manhood, emigrated to Western Pennsylvania, and settled in Washington county. There they purchased a tract of land, and William followed farming. He married Martha Hanna, of York county, to whom were born eight children. Alexander, the sixth child, was born in September, 1819, was a farmer also, and came to Allegheny county in 1848, where he remained until his death. In 1844 he married Margaret Patterson, daughter of William and Hannah (Crawford) Patterson, of Fayette county, Pa., and eight children were born to them, three yet living: William P., Rev. J. M. and Prof. G. C. The father died in 1887; his widow survives him. The subject of this sketch was born and reared on a farm; was educated at the public schools and Washington and Jefferson College, from which he graduated with high honors in the class of 1876. He immediately entered the Western Theological Seminary; Allegheny City, and graduated in 1879. He was licensed to preach in the spring of 1878 by the Blairsville presbytery, and was called to Oakdale Church, presbytery of Pittsburgh, in 1879. Rev. McJunkin and his brother are principals of the Oakdale Classical and Normal Academy. Mr. McJunkin married, in 1871, Lizzie Alter, daughter of George Alter, of Plum township, Allegheny county. Mr. McJunkin takes an active part in all religious and educational work. Politically he is a republican.

W. P. TAYLOR, M. D., postoffice Nobles-town, a leading physician of North Fayette township, is a native of Washington county, one of seven sons born to David S. and Sarah (Olliver) Taylor, the former a prominent farmer in Washington county. He commenced the study of medicine under Dr. Bradley, graduated at Columbus Medical College, Ohio, in 1866, and at once commenced the practice of his profession. He married, in 1867, J. A., daughter of John L. Proudfoot, of Washington county, who is of Scotch-Irish descent. Born to Dr. and Mrs. Taylor are two children, David S. and John P. The doctor has a large practice in the township and surrounding county. He is a K. T.; politically a democrat.

Dr. H. W. ARTHUR, Pittsburgh, was born in the city of Allegheny, the second of nine children born to William C. and Mary J. (Long) Arthur. The father was born in Baltimore in 1814, and came to this county about 1838. Our subject received his education at Baltimore, where his father removed when he was quite young; was educated in the common schools, including three years in the Baltimore College; studied dentistry at the Baltimore College of Dentistry, graduating in 1867. In 1868 he came to Allegheny City, where he practiced for a number of years; has practiced in Pittsburgh for the past six years, having built up a first-class practice. Dr. Arthur was married, in 1873, to Anna W. W. Watkins. He is a member of national, state and local dental associations, having been presiding officer of all but the national association.

ROBERT BEATTY, Esq. The father of this gentleman, William Beatty, of Franklin county, Pa., was among the earliest land-claimants of Patton township. In the border war with the French and Indian allies he commanded a company in Bouquet's division of Forbes' army, and accompanied the troops on the march through this region en route to Fort Duquesne, in the campaign of 1758. Being pleased with the country, he located a large tract of land in the vicinity of what is now Monongahela also a similar tract in Westmoreland county. He never settled on the lands, but died in Franklin county at an advanced age, and his sons, Robert, Thomas and Samuel, subsequently removed thereon and there remained permanently. Robert, the subject of this sketch, was born in Cononochiche valley, Franklin county, Pa., in 1789. After receiving a liberal education he adopted the vocation of civil engineer and surveyor. In 1783 he received a commission from Gov. Mifflin to survey unappropriated lands in the state, and was afterward frequently employed in surveying for the state. He finally resolved to enter a commercial life, and accordingly commenced business in Alexandria, Pa. He married Rebecah, daughter of Eli Coulter, Esq., of Greensburg, Pa., and by her had fourteen children, all of whom attained to years of maturity. After his marriage he opened a general store in Greensburg, where he remained in business some years, when he disposed of it, and was again employed in surveying for the state. In 1804 he was appointed attorney and agent for the Holland Land company, which office he filled for some years. In the meantime he removed his family to Kittanning, Pa., where he invested in real estate, upon which much of the town is now located. At this place he erected a flouring-mill, and engaged in the milling business. In 1808 Gov. McKean appointed him justice of the peace for Kittanning, and commissioned him to survey and establish the boundary-lines of different counties in the state. He was at this time the militia at this time, attaining the rank of major, and Gov. McKean appointed him an inspector of the militia. He removed to this county in 1812, where he resided permanently during the remainder of his life. President Madison appointed him collector of internal revenue for Allegheny county in 1813; in 1815–16 he was further engaged in surveying for the state. In 1819 Gov. Findlay appointed him justice of the peace for the district now composed of the townships of Patton and Plum, and he was the incumbent of that office until 1888; he was a presiding justice for a long series of years. Surveyor Gen. Cochran appointed him surveyor of Allegheny county in 1891. In 1837 he was appointed agent for the state board of property, and afterward surveyor for the land department. In the meantime he conducted extensive farming operations for many years on the farm where he resided. Mr. Beatty was possessed of efficient business qualifications, and was a man of culture and literary tastes, and an earnest, sincere Christian. In politics he was an adherent of the principles of the progressive party, and was well known in political circles; in religion he was a Presbyterian. He died in the year 1839, when sixty-nine years of age, while his consort, who survived him, died in 1854, aged seventy-three.

E. O. ANDERSON, M. D., Braddock, was born in the city of Pittsburgh, Allegheny county, Pa., in 1847, to James and Sarah (Rowatt) Anderson, who were the parents of one son and one daughter. James Anderson, who was a native of Ireland, and who came to America in an early day, owned a farm near Pittsburgh, where he died. E. O. Anderson was reared on a farm, on which he spent the greater part of his life, and was educated at the high-school of Pittsburgh. In 1877 he commenced the study of medicine, graduating in 1880 from the Philadelphia College of Homeopathy. In 1876 the doctor married Anna, daughter of Samuel Henning, of this county, and four sons and one daughter have been born to them. Since 1875 Dr. Anderson has been a resident of Braddock, and since 1890 has practiced his profession in town and vicinity. He is a member of the Coveaner's Church; in politics a republican.

REV. MARTIN LUTHER WORTMAN, retired, Allegheny, was born near St. John, New Brunswick, in 1837, son of Martin and Nancy (Kane) Wortman, who were born in the same place in 1792 and 1791, and died at the age of seventy-four and seventy-seven, respectively. His father was a farmer, and on coming to the United States settled in Carroll county, Ohio, in 1832, where he died. His grandparents were Jacob and — (Clinton) Wortman, who came to the United States in 1827, settling in Scioto, then called New Market. Martin Luther attended the common school in Carroll county, Ohio, then the New Hagerstown Academy one term, and then Richwood College, in Jefferson county, Ohio, for three years. He spent two years at Jefferson College, Washington county, Pa., graduating from there in 1833, then took a three years course at the Western Theological Seminary of Allegheny. He was licensed to preach during his second year here, and during his senior year preached at the Hiland Presbyterian Church at Perrysville. After graduating, in 1837, he was one year at Crawfordsville, Washington county, Iowa.

Returning to this county in 1838, he supplied the Hiland Church and the Long Island Church on Neville island for eight years, at the same time starting a mission at Emsworth, Pa., and three years later, after its organization as a church, he supplied this with his other two, residing at Perrysville. At the end of eight years he gave up the Long Island and the Emsworth churches, and continued at Hiland until 1869. In the spring of that year, owing to the death of his wife, he moved to Rochester, and took charge of the church of Industry, Beaver county, and the Emsworth church for three years. Giving up Emsworth, he moved to Freedom until 1874, when he returned to Neville, but continued to supply the former church for seven years.

In the fall of 1880 he accepted a call to the Hiland Church, where he remained until the spring of 1886, when he returned for the third time to Neville. In the spring of 1888 he sold his home on the island, and owing to failing health, retired from the regular pastorate, moving to Allegheny, where he built himself a home. Mr. Wortman was married, Oct. 9, 1860, to Amanda J. Woods, of Rochester, Pa., daughter of Henry and Sarah J. (Jones) Woods, and a niece of B. F. Jones, of Pittsburgh. Two children, Henry Martin and Amanda Emma, were born to them. The mother died in August, 1889, and Mr. Wortman was afterward married, in December, 1877, to Mrs. Lucinda M. Young, of Beaver. She has two children, Emma and Jennie Young. Mr. Wortman is a Knight Templar, Allegheny Commandery, No. 35; politically he is a republican.

JOHN MUSE, farmer, P. O. McKeesport, was born in Wilkins township, Allegheny county, Pa., March 9, 1827, a son of John J. and Rebecca (Edmundson) Muse. His paternal grandfather, Fauntley Muse, a native of Virginia, came in 1766 with his mother and stepfather (whose name was Elrod) to Elizabeth township, this county, where he was reared from eleven years of age. He was a farmer all his life, and died at the residence of his son, Fauntley, in Versailles township, in 1839. Fauntley, Sr., was a soldier of the Revolution, and his son, Fauntley, Jr., of the war of 1812. John J. Muse was a farmer, and purchased the property now occupied by the subject of our sketch, in Versailles township, in 1832. He was a prominent citizen, and represented Allegheny county in the legislature in 1854-55, and was county treasurer in 1855.

John Muse was reared and reared in Versailles township from five years of age, and educated in the common schools. He has been a farmer all his life, and owns and occupies the old homestead of his father, known as the Galilee farm, which was patented in 1783 by a man named Rayburn, and who erected a blockhouse thereon for protection from the Indians. In 1792 his (Rayburn's) hired man, Robert Cousius, was shot dead by the Indians while cultivating corn, and his two daughters reached the blockhouse barely in time to escape the same fate. Rayburn sold the farm to Anthony Rollins, grand-uncle of James Rollins, of Missouri (deceased), who deeded it to Dr. Rollins, from whom it was purchased by John J. Muse, in 1882. Mr. Muse occupies one of the best farms in the township, comprising 156 acres. He is a director of the People's Bank of McKeesport; politically he is a staunch republican.

REV. A. H. CALVERT, Etna borough, was born March 16, 1837, on the old Calvert homestead in Beaver county, Pa., a son of James Calvert. He received his primary education at the Beaver Academy, and subsequently entered Westminster College, where he graduated in 1856. He then taught at the Hookstown academy two years, studying theology the while, and after teaching a select school in New Sheffield one year entered the United Presbyterian Seminary at Allegheny, where he graduated in 1868. He preached in Michigan a short time, and in the winter of 1868 came to Etna, where he took charge of a mission, which he organized and built up into a U. P. church. The church is now in a flourishing condition, has its own property, and a thriving congregation of two hundred members. Mr. Calvert married, July 9, 1868, Jennie A., daughter of Judge John Scott, one of the prominent pioneers of Beaver county. They have four children: Harry S., George H., Joseph Edward and John Lloyd R. Rev. A. H. Calvert has taken an active part in building up the town of Etna, of which he has been burgess one term and president of the school board fifteen years. Politically he is an ardent republican.

E. J. Pugh, merchant, Tarentum, was born in Clinton township, Butler county, Pa., in 1835; his mother died in Butler county in 1888, and his father removed to Allegheny county, where he died. They left six children: John, Aaron, E. J., Eliza, Martha and Nancy. E. J., at the age of six years, on account of ill treatment, left his home and lived with his brother until twelve years old. In 1854 he married Miss Kezia Fox, of Butler county, Pa., and then became engaged in mining. In 1861 he enlisted in Co. K, 78th P. V. I., and remained in the army until 1864, when he returned and located in Fawn township, this county. In 1868 he came to Harrison township, where he is now engaged in farming, mining coal, burning lime, and carries on a general country store, located at Pleasantville.

Francis N. McClure, farmer, postoffice Chase, son of Robert and Elizabeth McClure, was born in Mifflin township, this county, in 1832. Judge Francis McClure, one of the pioneers of Allegheny county, was a native of Ireland, emigrated to America and located in this county, and was one of its able and prominent citizens. He was a member of the state legislature and an associate judge of the county. John McClure, paternal grandfather of Francis N., was American born. Robert, father of Francis N., was born in Mifflin township, in 1793, and married, in 1811, Elizabeth, daughter of Judge Francis McClure, located in Mifflin township, and engaged in farming, and there he reared his family. Their children were Alexander P. (deceased), Nancy D. (deceased), Francis M., John A. (deceased), Margaret (the late Mrs. James B. Hill), James, Samuel (deceased), Martha (deceased) and Robert T. Robert McClure was a contractor and builder, also a coal operator, having mines at Green Spring. The last years of his life were passed in Pittsburgh, where he died, and Elizabeth, his wife, died at Braddock. Francis N. McClure married, in 1870, Margaret M., daughter of Francis McClure and granddaughter of the judge, and they located in Mifflin township, where he engaged in farming. Their children were Charles S. (deceased), Richard H., Anna E. (now Mrs. A. Verner), Martha A. (now Mrs. John Kelly), Margaret H., Catherine J. and James H. They remained in Mifflin township until he purchased, in 1873, the farm he now owns in Versailles township, to which they removed, and which is now their present residence. They are both members of the U. P. Church. He is a republican, and has been a recipient of political honors in both Mifflin and Versailles townships.

John V. Irwin, justice of the peace, postoffice Homestead, was born June 6, 1837, in Elizabeth, Pa. The progenitor of this family in America was Joseph, a civil engineer, and a native of Scotland. He settled in White Oak Levels, Pa., in 1767, and three years later Joseph returned to his native country to bring his family and that of his brother-in-law. During his absence the settlers were driven off by the Indians to the vicinity of Fort Duquesne for protection. The Irwius located in Mifflin township. An old ledger, dated 1784, is yet in the possession of the subject of these lines. In 1824 Joseph died, leaving three sons and two daughters. His estate was inherited by his sons, James and John, who farmed and died on the homestead. John married Elizabeth Hucy of Dauphin county, Pa., and lived near Six-Mile Ferry, where he died aged eighty years. His children were Joseph, Jane, James, Nancy, Presley, John and William.

James Samuel Power, justice of the peace, postoffice Turtle Creek, is a grandson of James Power, the first settler in O'Hara (then Indiana) township, Allegheny county. The exact date of this settlement is not known, but it is certain that it was previous to the Revolution. James Power was the only one of a group of settlers on Herr's island, at the mouth of Pine creek, who escaped a massacre by the Indians. Wandering in the wilderness, he came upon a deserted Indian wigwam (on what is now known as Power's hill), of which he took possession, and after serving in the revolutionary war returned to this site, and remained until his death, in 1847, at the age of ninety-eight years. He was a slim, wiry man, and at the age of ninety-six could ride spirited colts of the farm which his son or grandson were not overly anxious to mount. The deed of his land (from Joseph Mercier, who patented it in 1789) bears date May 27, 1796, and when he settled there at the close of the Revolution his nearest neighbor was at Bull Creek. James B., son of James Power, passed all his life on the farm, where he died in 1873, aged sixty-seven years. His wife, Margaret, was a daughter of Samuel Hulings, who kept the Eddy House, on the Allegheny river at Hulings' Eddy. They reared eight children.

The eldest, James Samuel, was born Aug. 6, 1839, and received his education at the school of a country boy. In August, 1861, he was enrolled in Co. B, 63d P. V. I., and joined the Arm of the Potomac: took part in the battles of Yorktown, Williamsburg, Fair Oaks, and on the sixth of the seventh days' flight, June 30, 1862, on the Peninsula, was shot through the left lung, and taken prisoner. After nineteen days in Libby prison he was exchanged and discharged. He lay in Bellevue hospital, New York, from July, 1862, to March, 1863, being paralyzed in the right side for many weeks (from effects of his wound), and still carries the ball which maimed him in the region of his right scapula. He held the rank of first lieutenant, and was shot while in command of his company. After leaving the hospital Mr. Power superintended the proving-ground on the Allegheny Valley railroad, for testing heavy ordnance made at Fort Pitt foundry, Pittsburgh, Pa., for a year, then entered the Veteran Reserve Corps; was stationed for some time at Gieseboro Point (near Washington, D. C.), and while there was called out in command of Co. K, 16th Regt. V. R. C., to oppose a rebel raid on Washington, in 1864; went to Harrisburg, thence to Fishing creek to quell a draft insurrection; thence to Chambersburg, to York, and again to Harrisburg. At the last place he was ordered by Secretary Stanton to arrest Laura Reece and her troupe, consisting of Harry Hawk and a Mr. Diott, on suspicion of complicity in President Lincoln's assassination, which he did, and detained them at Harrisburg, Pa., for a week. In December, 1865, he was appointed assistant commissioner of the Sea islands, on the coast of South Carolina, with headquarters at Beaufort; remained two years, and returning north settled at Turtle Creek. For the last fifteen years he has held his present official position, although an avowed democrat in a strong republican district. He is a member of the H. B. Hayes Post, G. A. R., 199. In 1862 he married Eleanor Jane, daughter of Joseph and Jane (Dixon) Marshall, of Ireland. Mrs. Power was born in Pittsburgh, and is the mother of seven children, viz.: Jennie, wife of Ezekiel Gordon, residents of Lawrenceville; William C., born in Beaufort, S. C.; Lou, Joseph M., James E., Charles Wilber and Clarence; three children died in infancy.

John Routt, grain-merchant, Braddock, was born in Carlisle, Cumberland county, Pa., in 1826, a son of Nicholas and Elizabeth (Dasher) Routt, who were the parents of eight children, two yet living. The father, a native of Hesse-Darmstadt, came to America about 1820, and in 1836 located in Pittsburgh, Pa., where he was a cattle-dealer up to his death. John Routt was educated in Cumberland county, and as early as five years of age rode as postilion; for several years he was employed as a driver on different stage-routes. In 1852 he entered the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad company, in the capacity of freight agent; at which he continued until 1860, when he was promoted to passenger conductor. This position he held for twenty years, and then, in 1880, retired from railroad life and commenced his present business at Braddock. Mr. Routt has been twice married: first to Mrs. Nichols, and after her decease to Mrs. Jennie M. Bates. He stands high in Freemasonry; is a member of the M. E. Church; in politics a democrat.

Zephaniah Williams Aber, farmer, post-office Monroeville, is a grandson of Matthew Aber, who came from New Jersey to Allegheny county before the Indians were subdued, and was obliged to leave his land for a time on account of their depredations. John Aber, father of Matthew, was also born in New Jersey, and the family is probably of German extraction. Matthew had a son named Matthew, who was born in this county and married Prudence Bryan, also a native of the county, and to them was born in 1821 the gentleman whose name heads this sketch. Zephaniah Bryan, father of Prudence, came to this county about the same time as Matthew Aber. The former reared sixteen children and the latter nine. Mr. Bryan was a revolutionary soldier, and helped defend Fort Moultrie from the attack of the British at Charleston, S. C. Mrs. Bryan, nee De Vosse, was of French extraction. Z. W. Aber was reared on the home place, and settled after his marriage on his present farm, which he cleared and improved. His first vote was cast for the liberty party, with which he remained until the republicans adopted its principles, and he has served his township as assessor, collector and school director. He is an elder in the Presbyterian Church, with which all the members of the family are associated. In 1844 he married Elizabeth Linn, a native of Patton, and a daughter of John and Eleanor Linn, of Ireland and Eastern Pennsylvania, respectively, and following are the names of their children: Eleanor, wife of R. A. Kent, of Oskaloosa, Iowa; Matthew, shot near Petersburg, Va., while serving in the 1st P. V. R. Cav.; John, in Oskaloosa, Iowa; Jane and Mary M., at home; Emily Wilson, wife of Prof. J. A. Wesco, of Portland, Ore.; William George, in Bingham, Wy., T.; Seth P., who died on the Rocky mountains at the age of twenty-three; Matthew, Charles L., at home, and an adopted daughter, Margretta De Vosse.

D. Martin Miller, attorney at law, Glenshaw, was born Dec. 23, 1800, in Shaler. His grandfather, Adam Miller, who was a native of Alsace, France (now Germany), emigrated to America with his wife and children, and located in Allegheny county, where he followed the wagon-maker's trade, which he had learned in France. Eventually he purchased a farm of one hundred acres of Shaw, Bradford & Co., in Indiana township, where he lived with his family until his death, when he was seventy-eight years of age. He was a member of the legislature; County of Allegheny. His wife, Magdalena (Munck), died at the age of seventy-three years. Of their children, three were sons, Adam J. and George being now residents of Ohio. The daughters all settled in this vicinity except Mrs. Rachel Nerbhas, who went to Nebraska. The other daughters are Mrs. Charlotte Metz, Mrs. Sophia Hieber, Mrs. Lena Schuetz, Mrs. Carolina Schuetz and Mrs. Margaret Siebert. The third son, Charles, the father of D. Martin, was born in France; came to America at the age of nine; married Rachel Grim, who died young, leaving two sons and one daughter: John F., Callie S. and D. Martin, who is an attorney at law. The father married for his second wife Catharine Daly. He died Dec. 10, 1881, leaving her and her four children, viz.: Mary, Rachel, Harry and Sadie.

W. B. Salt, merchant, postoffice Bennett, was born Aug. 13, 1850, in Staffordshire, England, where he was educated. In 1886 he came to America with his parents, W. H. and Jane (Rhoden) Salt, and settled in Pittsburgh, where he learned the machinist business. He was employed in the Crescent Steel-works eighteen years, being a roller-turner by trade. While pursuing this vocation he invented a special process, known only to himself, of manufacturing piston-rings, and his product now supplies a home demand, the rings having formerly been imported to this country from Europe. His "rambottom piston-rings" are the only successful ones used in steam hammers, which are now manufactured in Millvale, where he has kept a hardware-store since Aug. 23, 1883. Mr. Salt has been an active business man, and besides his own business is a partner in the firm of Wible & Co., dealers in coal, lime and builders' supplies. He married Miss Margretta, daughter of Henry Jorden, and they have three children: Henry J., Jennie R. and William B., Jr.

Samuel Anderson, farmer, postoffice Talley Cavey, is a son of Charles and Sarah (Thompson) Anderson. His parents were natives of Ireland, emigrated to this country in 1823, located in Baltimore, Md., for a few years, and then moved to Pittsburgh, where they engaged in the grocery business. In 1837 they moved to Hampton township, this county, and settled on the farm now occupied by Hugh Anderson, where the mother still resides; the father died Feb. 14, 1878. They had following-named children: Samuel, Hugh, Sarah E. (wife of John A. Forsythe, of Butler county) and Mary A. (wife of Thomas Hamilton, of West Deer township), living; one that died in infancy and Margaret J., deceased wife of John Crowe (she died in 1879). Our subject was born in Pittsburgh Sept. 17, 1836, and was brought to this township by his parents when he was in infancy, and here he has always resided. In 1864 he enlisted in Co. H, 6th H. A., and served until the close of the war. He then returned home and engaged in general mercantile business, Talley Cavey, for one year. In 1860 he purchased his present farm, which he has since managed. Mr. Anderson married, Nov. 21, 1859, Charlotte, daughter of H. B. and Jane (Sangree) Hutchman, of Richland township. They have two children living: Ida E., wife of James Leland Allison, a farmer of Richland township, and Charles, living at home. Samuel Anderson and family are members of the R. P. Church at Talley Cavey, of which Mr. Anderson is an elder.

Hugh Anderson, farmer, postoffice Talley Cavey, is the second living son of Charles and Sarah (Thompson) Anderson, and was born in 1839 on the homestead, which he now owns. In 1864 he enlisted in Co. I, 5th P. H. A., and served until the close of the war. He married, in 1869, Mattie, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Criswell) Plummer, of Richland township, and they have six children living: Sarah E., Charles P., Samuel J., Margaret J., Hugh R. and Ada M. Mr. Anderson is a member of the R. P. Church of Talley Cavey.

Benjamin Avery Groah, contractor and builder, Bellevue, was born in West Virginia in 1862, a son of William and Susan (Thorpe) Groah, natives of the same place, and now aged forty-nine and forty-two years, respectively. William Groah moved to Allegheny county when Benjamin was three years of age. Here he followed contracting, and about 1878 moved his family to Bellevue. They are members of the Presbyterian Church. The subject of this sketch received a common-school education, and started life on the Ohio river, and one year later began bridge-building, which he followed for two years. He then commenced shopwork and house-building, and, in 1884 began contracting at Bellevue, buying his lumber by the carload from Youngstown, Ohio. He has been a very successful builder, and in 1888 erected a fine home for himself. He was married in 1882 to Emma I. Falcik, of Bellevue, daughter of Charles Falck, and to them has been born one child, Florence. Mr. Groah is a republican, a member of the A. O. U. W., Select Knights and Jr. O. U. A. M.

David Roads, farmer, postoffice McKeep, a son of Frederick and Elizabeth Roads, was born in what is now Lincoln township, in 1813. His paternal grandfather was a pioneer of Allegheny county, and a resident of McKeep, where he was a brewer. Frederick Roads was a native of Germany, was educated and married there, and, immigrating to America, located in Lincoln township, this county, on the place now owned by L. Franz. He built the stone house which still remains, and there lived and died. His surviving children are Frederick, John, Louisa, and David, who married, in 1848, Jane, daughter of William McRoberts. She died in 1854, leaving two children—Orlando and Everella— and in 1856 Mr. Roads married Pheby, daughter of Jonathan Bell, and located in Lincoln township, where he followed farming and other industries. Mr. Roads died about a year, and in 1868 Mr. Roads married Mrs. Lydia Barclay, and they still reside on the farm above McKeep, on the Monongahela river. Both are members of the Presbyterian Church at McKeesport.
HISTORY OF ALLEGHENY COUNTY.

Josiah Brinker Kistler, farmer, post-office New Texas, was born in Westmoreland county, Pa., Dec. 31, 1827, a son of Samuel and Katherine (Fink) Kistler. Samuel was a farmer in Westmoreland county, and died in 1863, aged eighty-five years, a member of the R. P. Church; his wife died in 1853, aged fifty-two years; both were natives of Pennsylvania. Josiah was educated in the common schools, and at the age of twenty-one began farming in this county. In 1865 he bought the place where he now resides, containing ninety-one acres. Deciding to make this his future home, he erected a fine dwelling at the cost of $5,000, and made other improvements to correspond. He married, in 1855, Margaret Jane Elliott, a native of Plum township, born Sept. 5, 1828, a daughter of Robert and Margaret (Fryer) Elliott, of Plum township. Six children, three of whom are living, were born to Mr. and Mrs. Kistler: Anna Maria (Mrs. Reed Stewart), Florence Ida (deceased wife of George Reiter), John Clinton (a United Presbyterian clergyman at Buena Vista, Pa., married to Maggie Alter, of Plum township), Maggie Elliott (Mrs. James Clements, of Plum township), Lizzie Luella (died September 28, 1887, aged twenty years), Alice May (died aged thirteen days). The family are connected with the Unity U. P. Church.

A. B. Stevenson, attorney at law, Braddock, is a native of Allegheny county, Pa., born in 1832, of Scotch-Irish descent. John Stevenson, his grandfather, was a native of Western Pennsylvania. Levi Stevenson, his father, was a prominent farmer in this county, and married Jane, daughter of David Scott, by whom he had six children, all yet living, of whom A. B. is the eldest. The subject of this memoir was born aged twenty-one on a farm, and educated at the public schools of Moon township. In 1877 he entered Westminster College, in Lawrence county, graduating therefrom in 1882, and then commenced studying law with Hon. C. S. Fetterman. June 27, 1885, he was admitted to the bar of Allegheny county, and he at once commenced the practice of his profession. Mr. Stevenson was married in 1863 to Eliza S. Wilson, daughter of Marmaduke and Lucinda (Henry) Wilson, of Beaver county, Pa., and two sons were born to them—Frank Wilson and Philip Henry. Mr. Stevenson came to Braddock in 1886, and has already been solicitor for the borough. He is a Mason, a member of the Presbyterian Church; in politics a democrat.

John Kiskadden, superintendent of schools, is descended from an old Scotch-Irish family. His father, Samuel, was a farmer of Washington county, Pa., born in 1809; he married Mary Patterson, and by her had eight children, Samuel being the third son and fourth child. The father died in 1865, aged fifty-six years; the mother is now a resident of Allegheny county. Our subject was born in Washington county, Pa., and reared on a farm in Plum township, Allegheny county, and at sixteen years of age became a student at the Laird Institute, Murrysville, Westmoreland county, where he graduated in 1876. He taught in the district schools for a time; then for three years he filled the position of principal of the graded schools at Chartiers, this county, and for four years was superintendent of the public schools in Braddock. In 1886 he was appointed by State Superintendent Highbee county superintendent of schools of Allegheny county, and was elected to that position in 1887. Prof. Hamilton was married, in 1886, to Miss Minnie M., daughter of John McCune, of Braddock, and by her has one child, Paul Holland. Mrs. Hamilton died in 1887. Prof. Hamilton is a member of the Presbyterian Church; in politics a republican.

Frank Hickman Matlack, physician, Turtle Creek, was born in East Brandywine, Chester county, Pa., Nov. 7, 1845, a son of Thomas Matlack, and one of a family of six sons and one daughter; four of the sons studied medicine, and followed the profession for a livelihood. His grandfather, George Matlack, was an English Quaker, who settled near West Chester, on a farm. Thomas Matlack was born there, and married Eliza McFarland, a native of East Brandywine, where he engaged in farming. He was a republican, and served for many years as supervisor of his township. James, one of his sons, was a well-known physician of Turtle Creek, and is now deceased. Frank was reared on the farm, and after leaving the common schools attended the Millserville State Normal School. In April, 1866, he entered the Freedman's hospital at Macon, Ga., and two years later graduated from the Augusta Medical College in that state. After studying and engaging in the drug business with his brother, Turtle Creek, he entered the University of Pennsylvania, from which he graduated in 1872. He then settled down to practice in Turtle Creek, where he has been successful. He is the owner of a farm in Patton township, a double house at Brinton, and a residence at Turtle Creek. Dr. Matlack is a member of the Allegheny County Medical society, and of the U. P. Church. Jan. 25, 1888, he married Isabella, daughter of the late William Oliver, a coal-operator of Mifflin township, this county.

John Kiskadden, retired, Etna, was born June 18, 1818, in Guernsey county, Ohio, a son of George and Sarah (Russel) Kiskadden, the former a native of the above-named county, the latter of Ireland. They came to Allegheny county when John was eight years of age. They were the parents of six children, and were members of the Presbyterian Church. The mother died in Pittsburgh, Jan. 29, 1869, in her seventy-seventh year; the father died in Shaler township, Jan. 18, 1853, in his sixty-third year. The subject of these lines was a farmer until his twenty-second year, when he became a stage-driver.
and mail-carrier on the Butler road for many years. Of late he has lived a retired life. He married Miss Susannah Miller, who died Oct. 17, 1876, leaving five children: William J. and Everett E. (who have conducted a drugstore since 1881), Wardail (deceased, was also in same store), Mary E. and Sarah. Politically he has always been a republican.

Andrew Kelly, P. O. Perryville, is one of Pine township’s most successful farmers, and one of the few who started by working at monthly wages and mounted the ladder of success without the assistance of relatives. He was born March 5, 1835, at Brush creek (near New Brighton), Beaver county, Pa., and is the son of Margaret and George Kelly. His father was born in Butler county, where he received his education; after marriage he moved to the above-mentioned place in Beaver county, which was the birthplace of his wife. They subsequently moved to Pine township, where they resided the remainder of their lives.

Andrew Kelly received a common-school education in Beaver county, and when a young man came to Pine township, where he worked for five years for farmers by the month and year. In 1857 he was married to Lena, daughter of Daniel and Catherine Fogle, of Pine township, and natives of Germany; her parents are both deceased. Six children were born to Andrew and Lena Kelly, viz.: Margaret (Mrs. Coman), Charity Ann (Mrs. Jessie Robinson), Mary Olive (Mrs. William McKinney), Sarah Jane (Mrs. Arthur), John Neviu and Lizzie. Andrew’s wife died Jan. 15, 1876, and he was again married March 13, 1889, to May, daughter of David and Eliza (Wilson) Crosskey, of Richland township, and natives of Ireland. Two children blessed this union—Ethen and Edna. The parents are members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Kelly has been school director for several years, and is now supervisor. For eleven years after Mr. Kelly was married he lived on a rented farm by the Salo church. He then bought a part of the old Kidd farm, which, after seven years, he sold, and then purchased, for $16,000, his present farm, which had no buildings on it. The history of his advancement by fair dealings with all men, and honest toil, is well known by all his neighbors. He has erected fine buildings on his farm on the main road, and has skillfully filled his present position. He does fine dairy work, and has many thoroughbred horses on his farm, varying in weight from 1,000 to 1,700 pounds.

Frederick Burki, florist, Bellevue, was born in Canton Berne, Switzerland, in 1858, the son of John and Catherine (Reber) Burki, natives of the same place; the father died when Frederick was but nine years of age, and the mother two years later. Frederick received his education in his native town, and learned the trade of florist. In 1872 he came to Pittsburgh, where he was employed at his trade; was also engaged in same work in Mercer county, and returning to the city of Allegheny he was employed by C. M. Selbert. In 1874 he went into business for himself as florist at Wood’s Run, continuing four years. In 1877 he married Mena Pfeifer, of Bavaria, Germany, who came to America when four years old with her parents, Adam and Catherine (Workley) Pfeifer, who now reside with Mr. Burki. In 1878 Mr. Burki moved to Bellevue, on George W. Smith’s place, where he carried on a florist’s and market-garden business. In 1884 he purchased his present farm, where he has built a house, barn and greenhouses on a large scale, having in use 14,000 feet of glass, and growing many cut flowers and plants, employing five hands the year round. Mr. and Mrs. Burki are members of the Lutheran Church of the city of Allegheny; he is a republican, and a member of the A. O. U. W. and Legion of Selection.

Joseph Mellon was born Sept. 1, 1805, son of Michael and Christine Mellon, of Westmoreland county. His grandfather, Hughley Mellon, came from Ireland to America prior to the revolutionary war. He died leaving but one son, Michael, who was married in Westmoreland county, Pa., and died in 1899, leaving three children: Joseph, Andrew and Catherine (since deceased). Joseph, the subject of this sketch, was reared on a farm, but followed the occupation of fisherman for thirty years. He was married in 1829 to Mary, daughter of Jonah Halstead, of Allegheny county, and they have eight children, all of whom are living: James, Jonah, Samuel, Joseph, John, Thomas, Sarah E. (wife of James Wilson) and Mary M. (widow of Michael Goldinger). Of these, Joseph was a volunteer in the 77th P. L., three-years service, but was discharged for disability after serving about fifteen months. Mr. Mellon has followed boating on the canal, having owned and run as many as four boats at one time, and was well known on the Allegheny river. He has by industry and economy accumulated considerable property, now owning one hundred acres in Springdale township and two hundred acres in Fayette county, Pa. He and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church; his children belong to the U. P. Church.

Andrew and Harrison Wible, the subjects of this sketch, farmers of Shaler township, were born on the old Wible homestead, this county, the former in 1810, and the latter March 3, 1818. Their parents were Andrew and Mary (Smith) Wible, who were born in Lancaster county, Pa. (Andrew) was born about the year 1766, came to East Liberty when a young man, where he was a teamster; later he went to Pittsburgh, where he hauled the pickets used in building the blockhouse at Fort Pitt, James Sample and Robert Anderson hewing the logs. In 1804 he came to the north side of the Allegheny river, where he bought a government tract of 288 acres, and settled down to the pursuit of farming. Andrew Wible reared a family of twelve children, viz.: John, Susan, George,
Adam, Katie, Andrew, Sally, Harrison, Mary Ann, William, Eliza Jane and James, of whom but six are now (1889) living, three boys and three girls. He was one of the first settlers on the north side of the river, when Indians and wild animals were still plentiful.

At one time he was employed laying out roads and stopped with some Indians to get his dinner, which consisted of hominy. He relished his meal very much until he found a piece of bear's paw with the hair on it in the hominy, which spoiled his appetite for that meal. Wolves were plentiful, also deer, of which he shot a great many. He and his son John were once chased by a panther, and it came so close behind them before reaching the house they could hear its teeth snapping together. He was quite a prominent man in those days, and was for some years a director of the county poor. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and politically was a democrat, taking quite an active part in politics. He and his wife were Presbyterians, and he was noted for his honesty and integrity. Of the three sons now surviving him, Andrew and Harrison each occupy a part of the old homestead, the part on which the first buildings stood being occupied by Charlotte, the widow of James. Andrew married, Dec. 20, 1838, Mary, daughter of John and Ellen (Davis) Thompson, and they had six children: John, Mary J., Ellen, James A., Sarah B. and Andrew. John died in infancy, and Sarah B. (Voegtly) in her thirty-fourth year. Mrs. Wible died July 7, 1871, aged fifty-nine years. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church, of which her husband and children are also members. Mr. Wible is still living, in the enjoyment of a hale and hearty old age. Politically he is a democrat. Harrison Wible was married, March 14, 1843, to Rachel, daughter of William and Jane Wilson, and they had eight children, viz.: Mary (deceased), William W., James A., Lucinda Jane (deceased), Rachel, Harry, Charlotte, Jennie E. Mrs. Wible died Dec. 26, 1881, aged sixty-two years. Mr. Wible is a robust man, and still takes an active part in the pursuit of farming. He and his family are all members of the Presbyterian Church; politically he is a republican.

John A. Titzel,chemist, Glenshaw, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., a son of John and Elmina J. (Baker) Titzel. The family are of German and Scotch-Irish descent, and lived near Baltimore before the Revolution. After the war they removed to Juniata county, Pa., where they farmed. John, the father, learned the trade of mechanic; he came to Pittsburgh before the fire of 1845, where he is interested in the iron business, and has been a master mechanic for many years; he is now with Howe, Brown & Co. John A. Titzel learned the druggist's trade, and followed it nine years. He eventually engaged in the varnish business, and is now foreman of the Eagle Paint & Varnish Works of Pittsburgh. He has invented a process to utilize vulcanized rubber, and has made other inventions; has taken out three patents, which produce him a good royalty. He married Mary M. Seibert, and four children have blessed this union: John A., Jr., Sadie E., Mary E., and Mansfield B. Mr. Titzel is a member of Jr. O. U. A. M., a charter member of the Jacksonsonian Club and Garfield Lodge of Sovereigns of Industry.

J. Q. A. Irvine, superintendent of schools, Etna, was born Sept. 9, 1851, in Butler county, Pa., a son of John and Angeline (Johnson) Irvine. Their grandparents settled in the above-named place shortly after the Revolution. James Irvine, grandfather of John, was a native of the north of Ireland, and his son, Samuel Irvine, grandfather of J. Q. A., was in the American army in the war of 1812. J. Q. A. Irvine was reared on a farm, and educated at Westminster College, from which he graduated in 1873, and since then he has been a successful teacher. He has taught in the Jamestown Academy, Utica, Pa., and in Butler county. In 1880 he taught in the Etna school, of which he has been principal since 1884, giving general satisfaction. He married Miss Alta Duncan; and they have three children: Florence V., Ralph E. and Henrietta. Mr. and Mrs. Irvine are members of the U. P. Church. He is identified with the republican party.

Aaron McClintock, farmer, postoffice Valencia, one of the most extensive farmers of Allegheny county, was born in Pine township Jan. 25, 1826. He is the son of John and Margaret (Morrow) McClintock. His father was born in County Donegal, Ireland, and came to the city of Allegheny in 1822, where he was superintendent of a stonequarry, furnishing the stone for the penitentiary. His wife was born in the same county, and in 1824 they moved to Pine township, where he purchased two hundred acres of land. Here he followed farming with great success, and in 1856 retired from active life, selling off most of his personal property and farming-land. He was raised an Episcopalian in Ireland, but united with the M. E. church here. He died Sept. 1, 1872, aged eighty-two years; his widow died in 1886, aged ninety-eight years.

Aaron McClintock was the fifth child of a family of eight children, received a common-school education in Pine township, and in 1850 began business for himself, having given his father many years of useful service. He bought his first farm in 1850 and his second in 1853. In 1854 he took to himself a helperate, who has materially assisted him. She was the daughter of George and Mary (Cubbage) Whitesell, and was born Aug. 11, 1822. Her father was born at Braddock’s Field, of German descent; her mother was born in Ireland. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. McClintock, viz.: Margaret M. (now Mrs. Frank Anderson), of Valencia; Mary C. (Mrs. Samuel English), this township; Sarah J. (Mrs. Alfred Brinker), Pittsburgh; Ella E. (Mrs. A. Thompson), Allegheny; Katherine W. (Mrs. J. W. Whittenbaugh), Allegheny;
Clara C. and Anna P., at home, and Willetta W. (deceased). Mrs. McClintock is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. McClintock was elected justice of the peace in 1873, and has since held the office; he is a stanch democrat, and has held offices of school director and assessor three terms; also other offices of public trust. He has four farms, aggregating 680 acres, and until recently he has done the farming himself, but now rents a large portion of it. His farms are supplied with fine houses and barns, and all necessary plant.

James Witherow, farmer, postoffice Elizabeth, son of William and Dinah (Boyd) Witherow, was born in what is now Lincoln township in 1850. His grandfather, William Witherow, was one of the first settlers of Lincoln township, and purchased a large tract of land, on which was the farm now owned by James Witherow, and lived and died there. He left five children: William, Hannah, Dinah, Rachel and Mary. William Witherow became the father of six children: Rachel, Andrew, John, James, Joseph and Sarah, all deceased but James. The subject of this memoir was reared and educated in Lincoln township, and there married Isabella W., daughter of Andrew Boyd, located on the farm he now owns, and engaged in farming. Their children were Martha Jane (Mrs Robert J. Sharpe), Samuel W. (married to Carrie A. Nichol), James M. (deceased), Jeremiah M. (deceased), James Melvin (married to Lizzie L. Capron), Mary (Mrs. John Rhoads), William Joseph (deceased), Andrew B., John B. (married Laura B. Harrison, now deceased), and Laura Belle (deceased). Mr. Witherow is a descendant of one of the oldest families of the county, and is now living quietly, enjoying the fruits of his early labors.

Moses Collins, farmer, postoffice Bridgeville, was born in South Fayette township in 1831, son of Samuel and Susanna Collins, and grandson of Daniel Collins, who came to America at an early date. Daniel married a Craton, and became the father of five sons and four daughters. He was a farmer, and for a number of years resided in Washington, but later moved to Allegheny county, where he died. Of his children, Samuel, the second son, married in 1821, Ann Coulter, daughter of John Coulter, and eight children were born to their union, Moses, the subject of this sketch, being now the only survivor. Samuel purchased the property, containing ninety-four acres, now owned by our subject, in 1815. He died in 1884, aged eighty-seven years; his wife died in 1840, aged thirty-seven years. Moses Collins, our subject, has always followed farming. He married, in 1836, Miss Mary Jordon, daughter of Jacob and Ann (Hickman) Jordon, of this county, and five children, four living, have blessed their union: John, Jacob, Howard and Harry, all of whom are at home. Mr. Collins is a republican, and has served his township officially.

Archibald Kuhn, farmer, postoffice New Texas, was born near his present farm, Sept. 2, 1805, a son of Archibald and Martha (Stotler) Kuhn. His father was born in the Susquehanna valley in 1771, came to Plum township with his father and was married here. He was a cavalry soldier at the time of the whiskey rebellion; was a surveyor on the frontier; was justice of the peace from 1809 till 1815; a member of the legislature, and in 1815 refused a second term. He was father of eight children: Michael, Jacob, Nancy, Archibald, David, Katharine, John Morgan and William Henry Harrison. The eldest three are deceased. Our subject’s great-great-grandfather was coming with other emigrants from Germany to America, but the vessel they were coming in was taken by a British privateer into the port of Boston, and during their stay there his great-grandfather, Adam Kuhn, was born, and after awhile the emigrant vessel was allowed to proceed on its voyage to America, and landed at New Holland—now New York city. There the family remained until Adam was grown to manhood and was married to a young lady who shortly before this time had come from Holland. Her Christian name was Eve, her surname not being known. This couple had three sons, viz.: Nicholas, Michael and Mansfield. After these were grown to manhood and two of them were married he (Adam) came to Western Pennsylvania, about 1768, to what is Allegheny county and what is now Patton township, made an improvement and planted an orchard. After remaining here a few years he sold out and moved to what is now West Virginia, where Eve, his wife, was killed by the Indians, and where he remained during the rest of his life. His grandfather, Michael Kuhn, married Catharine McClarty, a Scotch lady, and lived in the Susquehanna valley for a number of years. The Indians being very troublesome there at this time, he moved into the wilderness. After remaining there some time he moved down the valley past where Harrisburg now stands some ten or fifteen miles, and settled near a stream called Swatara. Here he remained until about 1792 or 1788, and then came to Western Pennsylvania and located near Eilrod’s fording on the Youghiogheny river until 1788, when he came to what is now Plum township, and bought a farm, on which he and his family lived during the rest of their lives. He was by occupation a weaver. He had five sons and three daughters. In faith he was a Presbyterian and all his children belonged to some branch of the Presbyterian church. Samuel McMahon now owns the farm which Michael Kuhn owned and where he died at the age of seventy-five years. The subject of this memoir, at the age of eighteen, began to learn the scythe- and sickle-making trade, at which he remained five years. Machinery then took the place of hand labor, and he returned home and worked at rough carpenter-work, and later on he built a sawmill, which he operated about forty years.
He then rented the mill, built his present home and has since superintended his farm.

He married, Nov. 17, 1836, Mary Craig King, of Plum township, born in 1813, a daughter of Robert and Nancy (Davidson) King. Mr. Kuhn has seven children living and three deceased. The living are Nancy B. (Mrs. Joseph McCready), Martha S. (Mrs. Logan Stotler), Jacob, Anna (now Mrs. Austin Dildine), Susan (Mrs. Immanuel Alter); Mary Loisa and David Brainard reside on the place. The deceased are William W., killed in the army; James King, who died aged thirty-two years, and Robert, who died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Kuhn are members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Kuhn has been supervisor, school director, auditor and treasurer of the county money. He was the first republican in the township, and was sent to the first republican convention. He and Mrs. Kuhn have celebrated their golden wedding.

Joseph Hickman, farmer, postoffice Herricksville, was born in this county in 1839, a son of John and Sarah (Park) Hickman, and grandson of Peter Hickman. Joseph was born and reared on a farm; was educated at the public schools of this township, and has followed agricultural pursuits through life. He was married, in 1871, to Mary A., daughter of Gabriel and Mary Ann (Ross) Rowley, of this county, and five children have been born to them: Sarah Park, John Rowley, Eva Abigail, Mary Anna and S. Heber. In 1885 Mr. Hickman purchased his present farm of 220 acres, a valuable tract of land under a high state of cultivation, and underlaid with coal. Mr. Hickman is a member of the Presbyterian Church; politically a republican.

William Newlen Haymaker, retired farmer, postoffice Turtle Creek, was born in Franklin township, Westmoreland county, in 1822, on the farm where his father, John Haymaker, was born. Mr. Haymaker, who died in 1876, was reared on the site of Allegheny City, and lies buried (with his grandfather Stofel) in Plum township. John Haymaker was one of the few whigs in Franklin, and was nominated frequently for office, but was in a hopeless minority. He died in his eighty-sixth year, and is buried at Murrysville; his widow, Ann Newlen (born in 1800), passed away in 1887. John, brother of Thomas, was a whig. Mr. Haymaker had two children, both dead.

Mr. Haymaker was a companion of Brady, the famous Indian scout, and measured the famous leap of the latter at Brady's Run, Beaver county. Mary, wife of Jacob, was captured by Indians when a child, together with her parents and an infant brother, near Murrysville, and all were taken to Canada and kept by different tribes. The father, Michael Rugh, escaped to Quebec, and succeeded in finding his wife by the help of English military officers. Two years later the mother discovered her daughter among some Indians who came to trade. The child's face and arms had been stained to conceal her white nativity. The sum of ten dollars was exacted by the aborigines in each case for the release of their prisoners. Mr. Rugh returned to Franklin, and was several times elected to the legislature, making his trips to Harrisburg on horseback. W. N. Haymaker was reared in Franklin, and attended the common schools. In 1846 he married Mary, daughter of Joseph and Sarah (McCullough) Simpson, of Irish descent, and following year settled in Patton township, on the farm which he still owns, where Matthew Simpson, grandfather of Mrs. Haymaker, settled very early. In August, 1861, Mr. Haymaker joined the 63d regiment P. V., going out as second lieutenant of Company A, attached to the Army of the Potomac. During the three years that followed he took part in all the battles of that army from Williamsburg to Cold Harbor; at Savage Station he was shot through the leg by a rifle-ball; at Yorktown he was promoted to first lieutenant and made regimental quartermaster. On the day that Mr. Haymaker left the army his eldest son, Joseph, then seventeen years old, ran away from school and joined the 4th P. C., serving until the close of the war in the same army, part of the time as orderly on Gen. Warren's staff. He died of consumption, at the age of thirty-one, while practicing law in Pittsburgh. Two brothers of Quartermaster Haymaker served in the same regiment, one in the 4th cavalry and one in the western army. Mr. Haymaker was present at the first national meeting of the republican party, to whose principles he has always adhered. He was justice of the peace several years, and has filled all the town offices. He was reared in the Presbyterian faith, to which he still adheres. He is a member of the G. A. R., Veteran Legion, McCandless Lodge, F. & A. M., Pittsburgh. John C., second son of Mr. Haymaker, is assistant district attorney, and resides in Pittsburgh; Anna S. (Mrs. Alex. H.) and Ida, youngest daughter, are deceased children, and Ida, wife of W. B. Brush, is the only living daughter. William Seward Haymaker, youngest son, graduates at Washington and Jefferson College this coming spring, 1889.

Solomon Schoyer, Jr., attorney at law, Swissvale, a native of this county, was born Aug. 10, 1832, and was one of six children who grew up on a farm. Tilden, manhood and womanhood, Solomon, Jr., being among the eldest. Our subject was reared and educated in Pittsburgh, and at the age of fourteen entered Allegheny College at Meadville, where he graduated in 1850. He then found employment on the Pittsburgh Gazette, at that time under the directorship of D. N. White, and when twenty years old commenced the study of law (while still continuing his connection with the Gazette), completing his studies under Hon. A. W. Loomis. He was admitted to the bar in 1858, and at once opened a law-office at 139 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, where he has since practiced. From 1860 to 1866 Mr. Schoyer was solicitor for Allegheny, during which time the celebrated Bond case and others of importance were tried. He was instrumental in securing the public parks of Allegheny city, drawing up the general legal schemes therefor, which were adopted. He has on several occasions been a delegate to the county and state conventions, and reported for the Pittsburgh Gazette the first republican convention which met in that city; he has for four years been president of the Duquesne Club, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church. In 1860 Mr. Schoyer married Frances Palmer, daughter of James Madison Balkman, of Washington county, and by her had nine children, seven of whom are yet living: Samuel B., Robert Palmer, Weld Allen, Lucy N., Harriet Alden, Catharine R. and George S.

J. G. KELLY, cashier Braddock National Bank, Braddock, a native of Lyon county, Ky., born Sept. 10, 1847. He is a son of William Kelly, who was born in Pittsburgh in 1811, and was in his day one of America's greatest iron-masters. His connection with the manufacture of iron, the circumstances by which he was surrounded, and the difficulties he overcame, can be found on the pages of the Iron Age, Vol. xii. No. 8, Feb. 26, 1888; also in Appleton's Cyclopedia. His wife was Mildred A., daughter of James N. Gracey, who was a descendant of an old Kentucky family, originally of New England. J. G. Kelly was educated at the common schools in his native town until fifteen years of age, when he entered college and remained until he was twenty. His first engagement in business was as bookkeeper for his father, a position he filled for three years. In 1870 he came to Pittsburgh and entered the First National Bank as bookkeeper, remaining until 1873. Afterward he located in Braddock, and was cashier for the Braddock Trust company until 1883, when that corporation was changed to the Braddock National Bank, and Mr. Kelly was retained as cashier, being a stockholder in the organization. Mr. Kelly married, in 1870, Agnes, daughter of Thomas J. Kenny, a highly respected citizen of Allegheny county. Mr. and Mrs. Kelly have had two children, one being now deceased. They are members of the Catholic Church; politically he is a republican.

JOSEPH Hosick, Springdale, was born in 1828, on the place where he now resides, and is the son of Samuel and Catherine Hosick. His grandfather, George Hosick, came from Ireland to this county in about 1800, and was a soldier in the war of 1812. He at one time owned 100 acres in what is now the city of Allegheny; he leased it for ninety-nine years, and the lease will expire in about five years, when it will probably revert to his descendants. He died in 1850, at the advanced age of eighty-five years. His son, Samuel Hosick, was born in Allegheny county, Feb. 2, 1812, and followed blacksmithing, and is now residing at Springdale, this county. He married Catharine, daughter of Thomas Mellon, of Westmoreland county. He was a farmer by oc- cupation, and was frequently called upon to aid in defending the early settlers of this locality against Indian assaults, being at one time wounded by them. Mr. and Mrs. Hosick were the parents of five children: Joseph, Christina (deceased), Hannah M., Samuel W. (deceased) and Sarah C. Mr. Hosick died June 29, 1842. Joseph Hosick, son of Samuel, followed boiling and rafting from the time he was sixteen years old till 1866, when he changed his occupation to that of railroading, in which business he is still engaged. He was married in April, 1861, to Mary, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Couch, and to them were born eleven children (seven of whom are now living): Samuel H. (deceased), Joseph Oliver (deceased), William S., Charles N. (deceased), James L., John G., Maggie E., Mary F., Elizabeth C., Nannie M. and Ada McKee (deceased). Of these William S. is engaged in publishing the Springdale Record, an enterprise in which he has recently embarked.

J. L. Elsesser, justice of the peace, Etna, was born March 27, 1828, in Brumath, Alsace, France (now Germany), a son of Jacob and Salome Elsesser, who emigrated to America when J. L. was three months old. They settled in Philadelphia, where Jacob L. was educated at the common school. Jacob, Sr., was a city commissioner, and his wife a midwife, she having received her diploma in Europe. The subject of these lines removed to Etna in 1849, where his mother died. Here he followed shoemaking, which trade he had learned in Philadelphia. May 1, 1861, he enlisted in Co. B, 9th P. R., and served three years. He fought in many of the most noted battles, among them Dranesville, Va., Fredericksburg, the seven days' fight, Antietam, South Mountain and at Gettysburg, and was wounded at Mine run. After the war he returned to Etna, where he was elected magistrate, his wound preventing him from resuming his trade. He received his first commission from Gov. Bigler, and has now his seventh commission, having served nearly thirty-five years, being three times re-elected without opposition. He married, in Etna, Mary, daughter of Daniel and Salome (Schr rospy) Hieier, and they have four children: Mary Sandrock, Mrs. Caroline Schultz, John D. and Mrs. Amelia Mell. Mr. and Mrs. Elsesser are members of the G. L. Church. He is a member of the G. A. R., and has been commander two years and adjutant of his post eight years: is also a member of the U. V. L. and the A. F. & A. M., Pittsburgh. He is a republican.

GEORGE Hodil, Sharpsburg. Jacob Hodil, the original member of this family, came to America when he was twenty years of age, in company with his wife, Susan. This couple were the parents of eight children, six sons and two daughters, of whom George was the second son. Jacob purchased 130 acres of land in Indiana township, where he remained until his death. He was a farmer by occupation through life. George Hodil, one of the oldest citizens of Indiana township, was born in 1803, and has always lived on the farm purchased by his father. In 1855 he married Martha Grubbs, and to them were born six children, three of whom are living: Robert Wilson, Rachel (Mrs. Federkeil) and Catherine (Mrs. Stoner), the latter of whom has been the favorite of the family, and now cares for her father in his declining years. Mr. Hodil is a member of the Presbyterian Church, of which he was for a long time an elder; politically he is a republican.

JOHN GUFFEY, farmer, postoffice Elizabeth, a son of John and Isabella (Campbell) Guffey, was born in Westmoreland county, Jan. 18, 1825. He is a descendant of the Scottish family of Guffey occupying the shire of Lanark in the lowlands of Scotland. His great-great-grandfather, William Guffey, came to this country in the year 1738, and first settled near Lancaster, Pa. In 1758 he, with a few other hardy spirits, followed the Forbes expedition against Fort Duquesne, into the then unbroken forests of the west, until they reached the Loyalhanna creek, where they decided to locate, this being the first permanent English settlement in Westmoreland county, and the second west of the Alleghenies. About the year 1783 James, the son of William, bought a large tract of land near what is now West Newton, and the larger portion of his descendants are living in Westmoreland county at present. Quite a number of the ancestors of the Guffeys and Campbells were killed or taken captive by the Indians in their incursions on the settlements. They were among the pioneers of the present great Monongahela river coal trade, the manufacture of salt and distilling. On Sept. 16, 1886, at a reunion of the Guffey family, there were five generations present, aggregating 290 persons. John Guffey was married in Feb. 1826, to Eliza Stoner, daughter of Henry Stoner, of Forward township, and they began their married life on this farm. They have three children: Francis Henry, now an attorney in Pittsburgh; Edward and John, both at home. Mr. Guffey is a farmer and stockdealer and has surrounded himself with many of the luxuries which wealth purchases.

Joseph Bruce Hezlep, merchant, postoffice Turtle Creek, was born in County Down, Ireland, in 1821. His grandfather, George Hezlep, married Esther Bruce (a descendant of the celebrated Robert Bruce), and emigrated from Scotland to Ireland. Their son Samuel, with his wife Jane Walker and son Joseph Bruce Hezlep, came to America in 1841, and settled near New Wilmingston, Mercer county, Pa., where he died. When twenty years old Joseph B. began linen-weaving, which he followed four years, and became so proficient that the premiums he earned sufficed to keep him in clothing. On arriving in this country he followed farming for a time, then spent two years at blacksmithing, but becoming satisfied that he could not make a skillful mechanic, began peddling goods through the country about Pittsburgh. In 1846 he married Martha Rath, a native of this county, and a daughter of Adam and Mary Rath, natives of Ireland. After his marriage Mr. Hezlep opened a small store in Snowden township, which was attended by his wife while he bought up produce for the Pittsburgh market. Beginning with one horse, he gradually extended his operations until he kept four horses busy, and so continued eight years. In 1857 he came to Turtle Creek and bought out a mercantile stock worth over $5,000. This was steadily increased till it reached $60,000 in 1863, when the whole was destroyed by fire. Unfortunately, there was only $11,000 insurance, with which he made a new beginning. Four years later his dwelling, which was erected at a cost of over $3,000, was also burned. Besides the usual goods found in a general country store, Mr. Hezlep carries stoves and furniture, and under present low values his stock is rated at $18,000. Both he and wife are members of the M. E. Church. Mr. Hezlep has served as judge of election, and for three years as school director. While a republican in principle, he has recently acted with the prohibitionists. His four sons are all deceased; three died in infancy, and Samuel Adam at the age of thirty-five years; the latter married Eliza Curry and became the father of four children, only one of whom, William, is living, residing with his widowed mother at Turtle Creek.

Mr. Hezlep was postmaster over five years, getting his appointment in 1861. The rebellion commenced about that time, and lasted for four years, and as he was postmaster he did not have to go to war; but when Abraham Lincoln asked for 300,000 more soldiers he put his name down in a company of cavalry when he was 17 years of age. Each member had to take his own horse, but it so happened just about that time that Lee surrendered, and peace was declared, so the services of him and his company were not required. He lives in the center of the village; is doing the largest business and has the finest stores in the place. His real estate is worth over $50,000, besides his personal property, and he feels very thankful for the very liberal patronage and the many friends he has in and around the village of Turtle Creek.

B. FRANK PRICE, M. D., Braddock, was born in Meigs county, Ohio, in 1845, fifth son in the family of twelve children of Charles and Sarah (Sisson) Price, former a native of Virginia, of Welsh and German ancestry, and by occupation the same. The subject of this memoir was educated at the public schools and Nelson's College, Cincinnati, Ohio, and in 1866 commenced the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. Hayworth, of Ohio; entered the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery in 1869, graduating thereat in 1872. The doctor then commenced the practice of his profession in West Virginia, where he remained ten years, and then, in 1883, moved to Braddock. He was married in 1865 to Mary F. Kerrigan, a native of Indiana, and two children (one now deceased) were born to them. In 1862 Dr. Price enlisted in the 7th Ohio battery and served three years in the civil war. He and family are members of the M. E. Church; politically he is a republican.

Henry L. Anderson, farmer, P. O. Leechdale, was born Sept. 2, 1834, in the Sixth ward, Pittsburgh, son of James Anderson, a native of Carlisle, Pa., and of old Scotch Protestant stock. The ancestors had to flee from Scotland to Ireland. The paternal grandfather was a soldier in the revolutionary war in the Pennsylvania line troops. He lived in Chester county, Pa.; was originally in the stone business in Allegheny, and built the old United States office. In 1792 the father of Henry L. was in the brick business on Anderson street, and later in the iron business. He was a manager of the Western Pennsylvania hospital, one of the board of directors of the house of refuge, now the reform school, and was inspector of the penitentiary until his death; he died March 11, 1861, aged seventy-seven. Politically he was a republican. He was married to Anna Miller, the daughter of old settlers, and by her had three children: William, Isabella and Henry L. The last named, who was educated in Allegheny and at Franklin College, Chambersburg, Pa., followed bookkeeping, and subsequently enlisted in Co. K of 12th P. V., and was later in detached service. After the war he again engaged in bookkeeping, and subsequently embarked in the oil business. Of late years he has been a farmer, and since 1873 has owned a farm in Sewickley township. He was married to Maggie A. Brown, and they have three children: Harry M., Alma E. and Louise A. Politically Mr. Anderson is a republican, and has filled various township offices; he is a member of A. F. & A. M. and A. O. U. W.

William Patterson, farmer, postoffice Herriottsville, was born in this county in 1828, the eldest son in the family of six children born to James and Abigail (Dennis- ton) Patterson. John Patterson, his grandfather, came from Ireland to America about 1810, and settled in Maryland. He married Mary Miller, also of Ireland, and by her had five children, of whom James was among the youngest. John was a weaver by trade, but later in life was a farmer, and owned land in Washington and Allegheny counties; he died aged eighty-seven years. James Patterson was born Dec. 1, 1790. He was a miller by trade, but followed farming, and in 1850 purchased one hundred acres of land, which is now owned by the subject of this sketch, where he remained until his death, in 1872, when he was eighty-two years of age; his wife died in 1845. William was reared on a farm, was educated at the public schools, and has always followed farming. He married, in 1876, Annie E. daughter of James Black, of this county, and four children were born to them, two now living: William James and Walter Gilmore. Mr. Patterson is a member of the U. P. Church; politically he is a republican.

Dr. F. R. McGrew, postoffice Mansfield Valley, was born in Allegheny county, Pa., in 1855, to Nathan and Thebe C. (Hayden) McGrew, of Westmoreland county, Pa., who were the parents of seven children, five of whom are yet living. Dr. F. R. being the youngest son. Nathan McGrew, by occupation a farmer, resided in Westmoreland county until his death, which occurred when he was seventy-one years old; his wife died at the age of sixty-five years. The subject of this biographical memoir commenced the study of medicine under Dr. B. H. Vankirk, of West Newton, Westmoreland county, Pa., attended medical college in Decatur one year, after which he practiced in West Virginia one year. He entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, graduated in 1880, and June 10, same year, he came to Mansfield, since when he has been actively engaged in his profession in this town and vicinity, where he enjoys a lucrative patronage. The doctor married, March 10, 1877, D. C. Snyder, daughter of Henry Snyder, of Fayette county, and they have a family of three children: Grace Pearl, Hazel May and Mattie Evans. Dr. McGrew is a republican.

John Baldrige, Jr., Braddock. His great-great-grandfather, a Scotchman, who moved to County Cavan, Ireland, married, June 16, 1714, Jeannette, daughter of Sir James Holmes, and by her had three sons and three daughters. They came to America and settled in Lancaster county, Pa., in 1745. Of these children, John, great-grandfather of our subject, married Rebecca Clark, a native of Ireland, and had sixteen children. He died July 31, 1766. Of his children, Joseph (a twin), grandfather of our subject, was born in 1702. This Joseph married Jane Gibb, about 1788, and moved from Lancaster county, Pa., to Westmoreland county. They had two children—John and Samuel. This wife dying, Joseph then married Mary Todd, who bore him four children: William T., Rebecca. Joseph (father of our subject) and David H. Joseph, the grandfather, bought a large tract of land on Loyaihanna creek, built a flouring-mill and engaged in milling and farming. He died May 5, 1809, aged seventy-seven. His son Joseph was born Jan. 1, 1802, and died when aged sixty-seven; he married Elizabeth Nichols, who bore him four children, of whom the subject of this sketch is one.

John Baldrige, Jr., was born Dec. 26, 1831, and was educated at the public schools of Westmoreland county, Pa., and at Centre College, Danville, Ky. He married L. C., daughter of Alfred Corey, of Allegheny county, and have seven children, of whom he commenced business first at Latrobe, Westmoreland county, Pa., in 1853. Became the first telegraph-operator at Latrobe, and was for ten years in the employ of the P. R. R. Co. and the P. & E. R. R. Co. Leaving the railway, he embarked in the coal and real-estate business in Braddock. He has been an elder in the First Presbyterian Church at Braddock since its organization in 1872. He is a republican.

William J. Wallace, farmer, postoffice Bridgeville, is a grandson of John Wallace, a farmer, who came to this county from Ireland about 1790, and purchased 163 acres of land in South Fayette township, formerly the property of Christian Lesnett, making, in 1816, an additional purchase of 163 acres. He married Elizabeth McKee, daughter of David McKee, an early pioneer in this county, and two sons and two daughters were born to them: William, the eldest son, also a farmer, was born in 1798, in what is now North Fayette township, this county. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Gilfillan, and her had nine children three yet living. William Wallace died in 1882, aged eighty-four years, his widow in 1886, aged eighty-six years. Of their children, William J., born in 1842, is the youngest. He was reared on the farm, and at the death of his father inherited the homestead. He married, in 1864, R. L. Skiles, daughter of James P. Skiles, of Washington county, and eight children have blessed his home: viz., Jane S., Lizzie B., C. G., Edwin S., W. E., S. J. K. and R. I. Mr. Wallace is a ruling elder in the U. P. Church of Robinson's run; he is a republican.

William S. Wallace, farmer, postoffice Bridgeville, was born in 1840, a son of David and Margaret (Cubbage) Wallace, latter of whom was the daughter of James Cubbage. David Wallace was born in 1760, the younger of the two sons of John and Elizabeth (McKee) Wallace. He inherited one-half of the 336 acres of land owned by his father, and always followed farming. He died in 1879; his wife died in 1877, aged seventy-two years. They had a family of nine children, of whom William S. is the third. He was born and reared on the farm and educated at the public schools and Mt. Union College, and in 1861 enlisted in Co. II, 63d regiment P. V., remained in the service three years, and was wounded at Gettysburg July 2. Mr. Wallace married, in 1871, Estella Leeper, of Beaver county, Pa., and four children, all living, were born to them: Chessie Eleclare, Nettie Sarissa, James Luther and Lora Mabel. Mr. Wallace is the only representative of his family residing in Allegheny county; is a member of the Presbyterian Church and a republican.

H. R. O'Connor, M. D., Mount Oliver, was born Dec. 27, 1832, in Pittsburgh, S. S. Grandfather Thomas O'Connor was a well-known and esteemed character in Pittsburgh, a true type of the Irish gentleman. He was implicated in the Irish insurrection, and fought for the cause of liberty, but was compelled to leave for America, sending afterward for his only child. His son Thomas O'Connor, Jr., married Christiana Kinsley, and they became the parents of the following named children: Christian I., Kinsley T., Harry R. and Catherine G. (wife of Col. S. W. Hill). Of these Harry R. was educated at the Western University, read medicine with Dr. E. A. Wood, and graduated at Jefferson Medical College, class of 1875; he located at Mount Oliver, where he built up a good practice. He is a member of the R. A. and A. O. U. W., also of the county medical society, and is assistant professor of genital and urinary diseases at the Western Pennsylvania Medical College. Dr. O'Connor is a democrat.

Reese Davis, farmer, postoffice Carrick, was born Jan. 6, 1814, in Breconsire, South Wales, a son of Thomas and Jane (Biven) Davis. He was a puddler in a rolling-mill, and, coming to America in August, 1845, followed his trade in Phoenlxville, Pa., until the following March. He then came to Pittsburgh, where he remained for several years working in various iron-shops. Mr. Davis married, in August, 1851, Mrs. Mary Wigley, nee Goodwin, and same year moved to Baldwin township, where he now resides. They have four children: Mary A., Thomas G., Margaret and Caroline. By perseverance and energy Mr. Davis has become a successful man. He is a republican, and voted for Franklin.

Robert McCartney, retired farmer, postoffice Shoutstown, was born at Masseyburg, Pa., Feb. 25, 1814, a son of John and Phoebe (Massey) McCartney, former of whom, a farmer by occupation, was born near Masseyburg, a son of George McCartney. Phoebe (Massey) McCartney was born at Masseyburg, and was a daughter of Mordecal Massey, who purchased a large tract of land at that place. In 1839 John and Phoebe McCartney moved to Findlay township, Allegheny county, and settled on a farm near Hebron. At that time Robert was but nine years old, and at sixteen he began to learn wagon-making. Soon after completing his trade he and a cousin went to Philadelphia, walking to Lancaster, to which point the railroad was completed, and they finished their journey by rail. On their return trip they stopped at Robert's uncle's, in Huntingdon county, where Robert followed his trade a short time. He then worked at Frankfort, Beaver county, Pa., two years, during which time his father purchased a farm near Stevenson Mills, Moon township, and there Robert opened his first shop in a log building. Three years later he built a shop and residence at Scottsville, Beaver county, Pa. He married, July 11, 1839, Mary Morrow, of Hopewell township, Beaver county, a daughter of Hugh and Sarah (Wallace) Morrow. April 10, 1845, Mr. McCartney sold out and purchased his present farm in Findlay township, where he built a log cabin, and worked at his trade until 1858. Since then he has farmed. In 1859 Mrs. McCartney died here July 3, 1869, the mother of seven children, four sons yet living: Alexander and John, farmers in Moon township; Mordecai, in Beaver Falls, Pa.; Washington, a farmer in Findlay township. Hugh, the third son, graduated at New Wilmington June 30, 1859; commenced reading law April 1, 1874, under Lawyer Woods, of Pittsburgh bar, and died Feb. 26, 1875. Robert, the fourth son, died in September, 1876, being a member of the senior class in Edinboro normal school. Nov. 29, 1870, Mr. McCartney married Susannah McConnell, who was born in Independence township, Beaver county, Pa., a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Wallace) McConnell. Mr. and Mrs. McCartney have two daughters, Mary S. and Minu O., who with their mother are members of the U. P. Church. Mr. McCartney may be termed a self-made, practical man. Starting in life dependent on his own resources for a living, he went bravely to work, and through good business principles his efforts have been successful. He owns 100 acres of land in Findlay township and 323 acres in Independence and Hopewell townships. Punjab county. There are eight large oil wells. He also owns a residence and four lots at Coraopolis and two residences and store-building on Beaver street, Sewickley, Pa.

Hon. William Barton, farmer, postoffice Clinton, was born on the same farm and in the house where he now resides, Oct. 3, 1859. His father, Hugh Barton, was born near Belfast, County Down, Ireland, in 1788, a son of John and Mary (Kyle) Barton, who emigrated to America when Hugh was but six years old. They located near Cannonsburg, Washington county, Pa., but afterward purchased a farm near Burgettstown. Hugh taught school in Washington county, and there married Mary A. Brimmer, a native of that county, and a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Barnett) Brimmer. William Brimmer came from Scotland, and his wife from England, and both were Presbyterians. In 1835 Hugh Barton came to Allegheny county and settled on the farm now owned by Hon. William Barton, where he died in August, 1864. He and wife were members of the Presbyterian Church, and had seven children, four living: Mary; Elizabeth, widow of A. M. Stewart, who was sergeant of the 149th P. V. L., and was killed at Gettysburg, July 1, 1864; John, who resides in Rock Island county, Ill., and Hon. William Barton. The last named enlisted in Co. D, 149th P. V. I., Aug. 22, 1863, and remained in the service until the close of the war; was in the battles of Chancellorsville, Wilderness and Gettysburg, and other important engagements and skirmishes. He married, Nov. 17, 1881, Margaret McNell, who was born in Scotland, a daughter of John McNell, who was a member of the township, a daughter of George and Sarah (Wilson) McNell. Mr. and Mrs. Barton have two children: Hugh A. and Annie. Mrs. Barton is a member of the U. P. Church. In 1884 Mr. Barton was nominated and elected by the republican party representative in the state legislature, and he is deservedly popular in his community. He is a member of the G. A. R. He owns a fine farm of 300 acres; is engaged in the dairy business and general farming.

Samuel Scott (deceased) was born in Robinson township, Allegheny county. Since a short time before 1800 this family name has been connected with Robinson township. In 1795 the government granted to John Bayles 395 acres of land in Washington county, Pa. (now Robinson township, Allegheny county), in consideration of three pounds and five shillings. This tract of land was purchased in 1800 for $3,500, by Samuel Scott, the original pioneer of the family, who emigrated to America at an early day. Samuel, a son of this pioneer, married Sarah Hall, and by her had three children. She dying, he married Elizabeth McMillen, who bore him five children, viz: Beckie, Sarah, William, Joseph and James. Samuel, the eldest son and second child, was born in 1812, and married Eliza- beth Nickel, to whom he was born four children: Sarah Ann and Mary Jane, deceased, and Evan and Samuel, still living. Mrs. Scott died, and later Samuel Scott married, in 1832, Elizabeth, daughter of Samuel and Priscilla (McFadden) Phillips, and five children were born to them: Leander (deceased), Priscilla (at home), Mrs. Eliza Jane Bell, Mrs. Hannah Hadden and John P. (living). Mr. Scott, in his day, was among the most highly respected and well-to-do farmers of Robinson township. He died in 1889. His widow, an estimable lady, resides with her son on the home farm. She is a member of the U. P. Church, of which he was an elder for twenty years. Politically he was a republican.

Samuel Scott, only living child of Samuel and Elizabeth (Nickel) Scott, was born in Robinson township, in 1851. He was educated at the public schools, and has followed farming all his life. He married, in 1878, Agnes Young, and three children have been born to them: Manie C. (deceased), William Hall and Hays Bell. Mr. Scott now owns 186 acres of valuable farming land left him by his father. He is industrious and successful, is a member of the U. P. Church, and a republican.

Hon. Nicholas Hogue, farmer, postoffice Fairhaven, was born June 4, 1843, in this county, the son of Nicholas Hogue, Sr., a native of Bavaria, Germany, who came to America in 1831, at the age of twenty-two years. He worked twenty years in the rolling-mill in Pittsburgh, and then removed to Baldwin township, where he bought a farm of sixty acres, on which the subject of these lines now resides. The father died April 19, 1863, at the age of forty-two years. He was an active member of the German Lutheran Church, of which he was trustee for many years. He married Catherine, daughter of Jacob Keifer, of German descent, and she died May 2, 1886, the mother of three children who attained maturity: Jacob, Mrs. Catherine Simon and Nicholas. Our subject was educated in this county, and graduated at Duff's College in the class of 1865. He mar-married Philoena Simon, of Germany, and they have four children: Catherine, Jacob N., Elizabeth and Louise. Mr. and Mrs. Hogue are members of the German Lutheran church, in which he has always taken an active interest. Early in life Mr. Hogue was a teacher, but later a farmer. He has filled the offices of assessor, auditor and justice of the peace, being re-elected to the last-named position in 1888. He is a republican, and was by that party elected to the legislature in 1888. He served on the committee of agriculture, mining, retrenchment and reform, and also on the committee of geological survey.

William Hall (deceased) was descended from a prominent family of Robinson township. In the early history of the township, John Hall, of Scotch-Irish descent, by occupation a farmer, purchased and settled upon a large tract of land, subsequent to the public sale. His wife, nee Lillie Young, bore him five children, who grew to be men and women. William, one of their elder children, was born in 1795, in Robinson township, and spent his life upon the farm purchased by his father. He married, in 1821, Jane, daughter of John and Mary (McMichael) McFadden, and nine children were born to them, of whom three survive: Mary A. (Mrs. Kelope), Eliza Jane (Mrs. Dr. Rutledge) and James (a resident of Iowa). The father owned 300 acres of land at his death, which occurred in 1870. His estimable widow resides on the farm, aged ninety years, bright in her intellect and in good health. The family are all members of the U. P. Church; politically, whigs and republicans.

Thompson F. McCabe, retired postoffice Woodville, is a native of this county, born in 1823, of Scotch-Irish descent. William, the pioneer of this family, came to America about 1775, but later moved to Allegheny county, where he purchased some 300 acres in what is now Collier and Robinson townships, and carried on farming. He had born to him nine children, of whom Joseph E., one of the youngest, in early life learned the carpenter's trade, but later became a farmer. He married Margaret, daughter of John Fife and sister of Maj. Fife, and seven children, five of whom are now living, were born to them. Joseph E. died in 1870, aged eighty years, his wife in 1892, aged about forty years. Among the youngest of their children is Thompson F., now educated at the public schools and reared on the farm where he was born, and which he now owns. He married, in 1853, Mary Jane, daughter of James Richardson, and has five children: Howard L., Maggie, Jennie (Mrs, Harrison), Lizzie (a teacher in the high-school at Pittsburgh) and Joseph E. (at home). The mother of these children died in 1873, aged thirty-nine years. Mr. McCabe has retired from active business life. He takes a deep interest in politics, and like his father before him is a staunch democrat. He has held many positions of trust, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Mansfield.

Howard L. McCabe, lumber merchant, was born in 1853, the eldest son born to Thompson F. and Mary Jane (Richardson) McCabe. He was educated at the public schools, and in 1879 engaged in the lumber business under the firm name of Cuggabe & McCabe, dealers in lumber and planing-mill supplies. Mr. McCabe married, in 1881, Alice, daughter of D. C. Hultz, of Allegheny City, and three children, two of whom are living, have been born to them. Mr. McCabe has been a resident of Mansfield since 1881. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and of the Presbyterian Church; he is a democrat.

Lewis Clark, farmer, postoffice House-town, was born on the farm where he now resides and owns, March 1, 1835, a grandson of James and Mary (Gray) Clark. His father, James Clark, was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, in December, 1798. In 1819 he immigrated to Montreal, Canada, soon thereafter locating in Pittsburgh, and in 1827 he purchased the homestead in Moon township, where he died May 23, 1874. He married, in 1839, Ellen Stoddard, who was born five miles west of Pittsburgh, a daughter of James and Nancy (Riley) Stoddard, Presbyterians and natives of Ireland. James Clark and wife had six children: Nancy, wife of Samuel Davidson, in Moon township; James, married to Elizabeth Scott, and residing in Clark county, Iowa; Lewis; Mary, wife of Joseph McKnight, residing in Rochester, Beaver county, Pa.; Margaret, married to John McClenger, a merchant of Huntsville, Ohio, and Emily, who resides with her brother Lewis. The subject of this memoir visited, in 1869, England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales, and while in Ireland saw the house in County Tyrone where his father, grandfather and great-grandfather were born. In February, 1877, he made a trip to Liverpool and London, and, joining the World Tourist party, went to Paris (and other parts of France), Naples, Rome, Alexandria, Cairo, Old Cairo, through the Suez canal, to Port Said, Jaffa, Jerusalem and vicinity, Bethlehem, Jericho and the Dead sea; bathed in the waters of Jordan, visited the mummy-pits, obelisks and catacombs, Pompey's Pillar, Cleopatra's Needle, and ascended the great pyramid of Cheops; also visited the celebrated Greek convent near Saba, the broken city of Memphis, the ruins of Horconium and Pompeii and other points of interest. In 1878 Mr. Clark visited New Orleans, thence through the West Indies to New York, and in 1885 attended the World's Exposition at New Orleans.

Alfred B. Huffman, mechanic, postoffice Gill Hall, son of Jacob and Hester (Beam) Huffman, was born in Jefferson township, this county, July 29, 1838. His grandfather, Lewis Huffman, came from Germany and settled in this county at an early time, where he reared a family of twelve children; he was in the war of 1812. Jacob Huffman was born in Jefferson township, where he died
Nov. 21, 1865. His children were Catherine (now Mrs. S. M. Peterson, of Tyler county, W. Va.), Elijah (who died when a child), John B. (deceased), Sarah, Margaret (now Mrs. J. W. Sne, of Jefferson township) and Alfred B. The last named married Mary J., daughter of Smith Gaston, of Washington county, and settled on the place owned by his parents, remaining with them until their deaths, when he removed to Gill Hall, and engaged in business as dealer in general merchandise. He subsequently retired, and his son John G. is now the merchant of Gill Hall. Mr. and Mrs. Huffman had four children: John G. (who married a daughter of Jackson Stilley), Ella May (wife of D. B. Blackburn, of Jefferson township), Hester Jane and Joseph E. Mrs. Huffman died Oct. 9, 1888. Mr. Huffman has held several official positions in the township, and at the present time is an acting justice of the peace. He has been a member of the Methodist Church for thirty years, and is a democrat.

J. S. Wicks, farmer, postoffice Gill Hall, son of Silas Wicks, who died in Pittsburgh, was born near Jones ferry, below Pittsburgh, in 1821. In 1848 he married Sarah J., daughter of John Sne, of Jefferson township, and their children are Rhoda J. (now Mrs. Boyer, (in California), Lizzie (now Mrs. Barkley, in Washington county), Silas M. (married, in Santa Barbara, Cal.), John (married, and a resident of Jefferson township), Charles W. (married, and the owner of an adjoining farm), James A. and Jessie I. (a twin). John Sne came with his parents to Jefferson township when he was fifteen years old, and in 1823 he married Sarah, daughter of Col. Ferree, of Peters Creek. He bought the Gill Hall farm in 1824. His children were Sarah J., Thomas and Joel P., latter two being now deceased. John Sne died in 1872, aged seventy-nine, his widow, in 1875, aged seventy-seven. Mr. and Mrs. Wicks are members of the Methodist Church. Mrs. Wicks' father came with his parents to Jefferson township when he was fifteen years old, and they purchased the farm now owned by our subject.

Rev. J. C. Boyd, D. D., postoffice Mt. Lebanon, was born in Westmoreland county, Pa., in 1832. He is the fourth of nine children born to William Boyd, a farmer of Westmoreland county. He received his academic education at Jacksonville, Indiana county, Pa., and Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Pa., and entered the Theological Seminary of Allegheny in 1854, graduating in 1858. He was called to the St. Clair congregation in the same year, and since that date has been its pastor. He married, in 1859, Mattie McFarland, who died in 1869. She was the third daughter of Col. John McFarland. But one son of this marriage is living, William M., now a resident of Newton, Kan. Mr. Boyd next married Miss Maggie A. Lindsay, of this county, only daughter of James Lindsay, Esq., and they have five children: Myra L., Jay Calvin, James Howard, Jane and Lois Edith. Dr. Boyd has always taken an active part in all religious work connected with his church, and was for years editor of the Evangelical Repository, the oldest religious monthly in the church, first published in 1824. He is now one of the editors and publishers of the Evangelical Repository, and associate editor of the United Presbyterian. He was one of the delegates to the Pan-Presbyterian council, which met at Edinburgh, Scotland (for the first time), in 1877, and in many other religious movements he has taken an active part.

J. H. Robb (deceased) was born in this county, in 1818. His father was Joseph Robb, a farmer of the county for many years, who married Sarah Fletcher, by whom he had thirteen children, J. H. being among the youngest. At the death of his father our subject purchased the farm which he owned for a number of years. He retired from agricultural pursuits in 1855 to Mt. Lebanon, where he remained until his death, in 1880. He married, in 1838, Miss Margaret, daughter of William and Margaret (Herdman) Glenn, of an old family of the county. Mrs. Robb, now in her seventy-second year, resides at her pleasant home in Mt. Lebanon, highly respected by all who know her. She is a member of the U. P. Church, of which Mr. Robb was also a member; politically he was a republican.

Howard Rowley, farmer, postoffice Bridgeville, was born in this county in 1858. His father, Francis Rowley, was twice married, and by his first wife, Betsy (Gillmore), had three children; by his second wife, Mary (Winters), he had also three, Howard being one of them. Francis was always a farmer, and about 1860 purchased three hundred acres of land in South Fayette township. He died in 1873, aged eighty-eight years. Howard was educated at the common schools in the township, and has always followed farming. He married, in 1884, Annie M., daughter of John Dripps, of Allegheny, and two children have blessed their union: Mary Elizabeth and Anna Jeanette. Mr. Rowley now owns fifty acres of the three hundred purchased by his father. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church; politically a republican.

A. M. Pierce, M. D., West Elizabeth, son of James McK. and Mary (Kiddoo) Pierce, was born in Marietta, Washington county, Ohio, and is a descendant of the family of that name who came to the county about 1764. His grandfather's name was Dr. Amos Pierce, who came from Monmouth county, N. J., and was known as a very successful cancer-doctor. His father was born in Jefferson township in 1821; married, June 31, 1848, Mary, daughter of Thomas Kiddoo, a native of Snowden township, and removed to Ohio, where he carried on business about three years. He then returned to what is now Lincoln township. Their children were Mary A., James E. and A. M., all now residents of West Elizabeth borough and Jefferson township. When A. M. Pierce was but a child his mother died, Sept. 24, 1854, and in course of time his father married Sarah, daughter of Andrew Boyd, of what is now Lincoln township, and by her were born John B. Joseph L. and M'attie D. A. M. Pierce, after his mother's death, made his home with his grandfather, Dr. Amos Pierce, and after completing a preparatory course began the study of medicine with Dr. J. K. Van Kirk, of Elizabeth, remaining with him two years. He then entered Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia, graduating during the centennial year, 1876; then located in West Elizabeth and engaged in the practice of his profession; is also interested in the manufacture of brick. Jan. 3, 1882, he married Mary Eleanor, daughter of Squire Henry and Sarah A. (Parkinson) Heath, and they have one child, Glenn M., born April 10, 1886.

Watson Provost, miller, post-office Fair haven, was born May 31, 1813, in Lincolnshire, England, a son of James and Ann (Bluhlen) Provost, who died in England, and whose father was a farmer, and reared a family of eight children: James, Thomas, Ann, Matilda, David, Watson, John and Louise. Of these Thomas, Watson and Matilda came to America. Watson was educated at Peterborough, and was married at Wiscbeach, St. Mary's, in England, to Mary, daughter of Robert and Maria (Mayne) Watkins. Their children were William, Mrs. Amos P. Phillips, James and Robert (deceased), Maria (wife of Dr. J. H. Burkett), C. Wright and Samuel P. David Provost, grandfather of Watson Provost, was of French descent. His ancestors, who were Huguenots, came with others to the Duke of Bedford, owner of some extensive swamps. These, Provost and others, being skilful engineers, drained, becoming thereby a free and wealthy people. Watson Provost emigrated to America in May, 1838, and coming to Allegheny county farmed on the Brownsville road. In the autumn after his arrival in the United States he returned to England for his wife and son, and then worked for Preacher Jones in the first brickyard in Birmingham, but unfortunately was cheated out of his wages. He later turned his attention to farming, subsequently purchasing the William Wilson mill on Six-Mill run, which, however, was destroyed by fire, and he then bought Pollock's mill. Mr. Provost started in life poor, but his indomitable energy has been amply repaid, and he now has a handsome competence, owning over eighty acres of land, upon which many houses are built. Mr. and Mrs. Provost are Episcopalians; he is a republican.

David Patton, farmer, post-office Bakers town, is a son of Benjamin and Mary (Kilbrath) Patton, and was born on the homestead, April 24, 1831. David Patton, Sr., the grandfather of our subject, who was a native of Scotland, came to America during the Revolution, joined the Americans and fought through the war. He afterward settled in Hampton township, Allegheny county, and died about 1842, leaving eleven children, all of whom are since deceased. His fourth child was born in Hampton township, where he lived and followed farming until his death, in 1865. He was father of nine children, two of whom still live: James, a farmer of Hampton township, and David, the subject of these lines. The latter, at an early age, learned the wagon-maker's trade, but has chiefly followed farming. In 1862 he moved to his present farm. He married, in 1844, Sophia, daughter of Frederick Olinum, a native of Germany, and an early settler in Hampton township. Mr. and Mrs. Patton have seven children living: Josephine, at home; Henrietta, wife of August Ahlstrom, of Massachusetts; Johann, wife of James Brown, of West Deer township; Louisa, in Cleveland, Ohio; Margaret, wife of Howard G. Glasgow, of Allegheny; David J. and Ross Williams, at home. Mr. Patton has held the offices of supervisor, assessor and town clerk. He has a family are members of the Presbyterian Church of Bakers town.

Dr. J. N. Miller, Dorseyville, is a native of Washington county, Pa., where he was born. His father, Andrew Miller, was of Irish parentage, and a farmer of that county. Mr. Miller was educated at Hickory Academy, in his native county, and in 1890 commenced the study of medicine under Drs. McKarl & McBride. In 1881 he entered Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, graduating from that institution in 1884. He commenced the practice of his profession at Hilldale, Washington county, Pa., where he continued until 1885, when he came to Dorseyville. In 1885 he married Miss Maggie L., daughter of George Weber, a highly respected citizen of Indiana township. The doctor has been very successful in his profession a large, lucrative practice having rewarded his efforts. He and his wife are members of the U. P. Church; politically he is a republican.

Perry A. Lytle, farmer, P. O. Monongahela City, a son of Isaac and Martha (Penry) Lytle, was born May 27, 1821, in Forward township, on the farm now owned by him. His grandfather, Robert Lytle, emigrated to this country and settled on the line of Allegheny and Washington counties. His family consisted of seven children: David, George, Joseph, Samuel, Abraham, Robert and Isaac. The corn-crop was the important one in early days, and it is related of Robert Lytle that during a year when the crop had been a general failure he fortunately had an immense yield, which was eagerly sought for by the speculators of that vicinity, but he resolutely declined all proposals from them and reserved it for the benefit of his less fortunate neighbors, and when they called for corn they were supplied, with or without money. Isaac, father of Perry A., was born in 1783, on the place where, Robert, his father, settled, and remained there until his marriage, May 11, 1807, with Miss Penny, daughter of John Penny, a native of Ireland, when he removed to the farm now owned by Perry A. Their children were: Eliza, born Aug. 25, 1808; Ruth, born Feb. 1, 1811; Isham, Mar. 5, 1812; Margaret, born Aug. 11, 1814; Icephena and Perry A. (twins), born May 27, 1821; Samuel, born Jan. 27, 1827. Only three of these are now living: Margaret, now Mrs. James Craighead, of Beaver Falls; Icephena, now Mrs. William Kerr, of Brown county, Ohio; Perry A., who owns the old homestead, and who, in 1846, married Sarah C., daughter of Isaac and Gertrude (Van Kirk) Wycoff, of Elizabeth township. Their children were Hannah, Joseph, William (deceased), George E., James P. and Gertie W. Hannah, now Mrs. F. F. Pierce, is a resident of Gallatin, Tenn.; Joseph is on the farm adjoining his father's; George E. is a practicing physician in Monongahela City; James P. resides with his father; Gertie W. is now Mrs. Guy Fitzgerald, of Ginniss, Allegheny; and Hannah, daughter of Icephena, lives at the Lytle, for a period of years, occupied various official positions, and died May 24, 1854; his widow died Nov. 26, 1854.

Perry A. Lytle has been officially identified with state, county and township, and is at present a director of the insurance board. When about twenty years of age he, with one of his brothers, met with a peculiar accident. His mother, foreseeing the approach of a storm, told them to prepare matters in the springhouse to avoid injury. They did so, and when about to return were met by a solid sheet of water rushing with irresistible force, which precipitated them with the springhouse over the falls, twelve feet high. Perry A. escaped, but his brother was carried a distance of one-half mile below, where he escaped only to die three days later of lockjaw.

W. T. Hall, physician, Avenue, was born in Butler county, Pa., Oct. 27, 1856, his parents having removed from Huntingdon county, Pa. His father, who was a soldier in the civil war, was captured and taken to Andersonville prison, and died on his return from there; his mother makes her home with the doctor. W. T. Hall received his preliminary education at the academy at Worthington, Pa., taught school a portion of the time, and studied medicine with Drs. Robinson and Miller; graduated in medicine at the University of New York, and began practice in the city of Allegheny, but returned to New York city in 1884, where he practiced until the spring of 1885, when, after his marriage with Miss Annie M. Neumes, he removed to his present place of residence, Avenue, Harrison township.

John Gill McDowell, farmer, postoffice New Texas, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., in August, 1839, a son of John and Jane (Gill) McDowell, former of whom, a native of Mifflin township, was a schoolteacher, and taught for some years in Pittsburgh; then returned to Versailles, township, Mercer county, where he died in 1842, aged sixty-six years. Our subject's great-grandfather came from Ireland and settled in Mifflin township, where he owned a large plantation and many slaves; his son, Archibald, was a man of leisure, and with his horse and colored servant spent his time in hunting. Our subject's maternal grandfather, John Gill, came from Ireland. John G. McDowell attended school in Pittsburgh, and also in Patton and Versailles townships. At the age of twenty-one he began teaching in Patton township, and so continued four years. He then took life easy for a few years, living on the income of his father's estate, but his marriage, in 1863, with Catherine Boyd, a sister of Eli Boyd of Turtle Creek, changed the course of his life, she being the main factor of his success in business. Mrs. McDowell was born in Westmoreland county, Jan. 15, 1833, a daughter of Thomas and Sarah (Wilson) Boyd, who were born in Westmoreland county, Nov. 9, 1795, and near Elizabeth, Allegheny county, Aug. 12, 1806; Eli died here April 6, 1869, and May 17, 1859, respectively. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. McDowell, three of whom are living: Edward Howard, of Turtle Creek; George Wilson and Sarah Jane, at home. The deceased are Caroline, who died aged eight years; Maggie, when aged three, and Anna when aged eight. After marriage Mr. McDowell bought a small place in Patton township, but three years later he sold it and bought his present farm, where he has lived twenty-two years. He and family are members of the Unity U. P. Church; he was a democrat, but is now a prohibitionist. Mrs. McDowell's sister, Elizabeth, married Rev. James Kelzo, for twenty-one years pastor of Unity Church.

WILLIAM RAMSEY MCGINNIS, farmer, postoffice Stewart's Station, was born in Wilkins township, in 1833, a grandson of Jasper McGinniss, who came from McShane Castle, Ireland, and was of Scotch descent. John, son of Jasper McGinniss, came to Pittsburgh when it contained only seven houses, and engaged in steamboating between there and New Orleans. He was extensively interested in the tobacco trade, made money and bought a large farm on the Monongahela, which he sold in 1887, and then removed to Patton. Here he bought 700 acres of land from the Bank of Pittsburgh, and died in 1874, aged seventy-seven; his widow, Eleanor (Ramsey) McGinniss, is yet living, in her eightieth year. William R. McGinniss has passed most of his life in Patton township, and received his schooling in Wilkinsburg. He has engaged in stockdealing, in which he has been successful, and besides 207 acres of land here he has tracts in Ford and Champaign counties, Ill. In 1857 he married Mary Lang, a native of Patton, daughter of George and Eleanor (Roach) Lang, who were born in this county, of Scotch and Irish descent. Mr. and Mrs. McGinniss have seven children: Eleanor Jane, married to John Hoey; Margaret (Ramsey) Attorney for the State, of Meadville, Wills Mary (wife of William C. Down- ing, in Mackey's Ferry, N. C.), Nancy Agnes,
John, Edward, William and George L., at home.

Alexander Gordon, Swissvale, was born in Baltimore, Md., in 1813, and when five years of age moved with his parents to York county, Pa. John Gordon, a native of Cumberland county, Pa., and of Scotch descent, married Marie, daughter of Jacob and granddaughter of Peter Gardner. The latter, a native of Germany, was among the first settlers of York county, Pa., and an extensive landowner. John Gordon was a merchant in Baltimore, and an extensive trader to the West Indies and South America. He was father of seven children, and died when comparatively young. His widow died in Allegheny City at a ripe age. Alexander Gordon was educated at the schools of York county. In 1832 he came to Pittsburgh, where for a number of years he was engaged in the commission and forwarding business. He was then connected with the coal business for thirteen years, being one-fourth owner of a 700-acre tract which he successfully operated, and was known as the Duquesne Coal company, he being president and treasurer of the association. In 1880 Mr. Gordon retired from active business, and has since resided at Swissvale. He married, in 1849, Miss Edwards, daughter of Matthias Ogden Edwards, who was a descendant of Jonathan Edwards, president of Princeton College. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Gordon: Rev. John Gordon, Orra Edwards, Alexander, Jr., George B. (solicitor for the P. R. R. Co.), and William G. Mr. Gordon was quartermaster during the Mexican war for a short period. He has always taken an active part in politics, and was prominently identified with the organization of the republican party, being one of seven delegates to the Buffalo convention. He and family are members of the Presbyte-er Board.

Samuel Jarvis, retired, postoffice Oakdale Station, is a son of David Jarvis, an iron-worker, of English birth. Samuel was born in what was known as Kensington, now a part of the Sixth ward, Pittsburgh; was educated at the public schools; was employed at the Novelty Works, Pittsburgh, where he remained five years, leaving there to learn the plumbing business, at which he served three and one-half years, and from 1858 to 1878 he was profitably engaged in the work of his trade. In 1867 he came to South Fayette township and purchased a farm; he resides near the present village of Oakdale. Mr. Jarvis started in life without any great advantages, and has by his own personal ability been able to make life a success. He has retired from active business, living happily with his sister, and looks after his farm and other interests. Politically he is a republican.

John Shaw, miller, Glenshaw. His grandfather, John Shaw, was one of the pioneer millers in this county, and died Aug. 17, 1889, aged eighty years; his wife, Elizabeth Shaw, died Jan. 31, 1842, aged seventy years. Their son, John Shaw, was born Feb. 21, 1800, and died Oct. 31, 1882. He was reared on the old Shaw homestead, and was a miller by trade. He built the brick mill on Pine creek, which superseded the old log saw and grist-mill built by his father. His sons, William and John, Jr., operated the mill the last twenty-five years of its usefulness. John Shaw was a stirring man, and one well known far and wide. He opened a number of coal-mines, among others the Sandy creek mines, which he operated for many years. He also opened the mines at Glenshaw, and built the tramway for Spank, Chaifant & Co., on which coal was hauled to their mill. He married Matilda, daughter of an old settler, William Courtney; she was born July 23, 1805; she died Sept. 13, 1879. Their union was blessed with the following named children: William C.; Mrs. Dr. Hopper, of Canton, China; Mrs. John L. George, John, Jr., Nancy, James, Dickson C, Alexander, Sarah C., Thomas W. and Walter L. T. M. Edwards, co. of the Business College, No. 1 Sixth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., is a son of D. P. Williams, who was born on the homestead now occupied by his mother, in 1815. Rev. Matthew Williams, father of D. P., was a native of Ireland, came to America about 1797, and settled on four hundred acres in what is now Richland township. He was one of the early Cov- enanter ministers. He had eleven children, eight of whom still live, viz.; Joseph in McKeensport; Rev. John B., at White Lake, N. Y.; William, in Pittsburgh; Matthew, in Butler county; Mary, in Allegheny; Nancy Jane, and Annie, in Braddock. D. P. Williams always followed farming, and died in 1883. He had ten living children, of whom James C. and Harry are proprietors of Curry University, Pittsburgh; J. T., Lizzie J., and Annie M. are in health, Maggie A. David F., Jr., Joseph D. and Gertrude C. are at home. T. M. Williams is president of the actual Business College of Pittsburgh, co-author of the Actual Business Accountant, 586 pages, and of a new and original system of rapid business writing. He is without a superior as a penman and teacher. He married Ida M., daughter of Capt. H. C. Richmond, late superintendent of water-works and afterward of poor-farm of Allegheny, and has two children, Vernon Richmond and Percy Howard.

Ephraim Morrow, farmer, postoffice Talley Cavey, is a son of Richard and Mary (Miller) Morrow. His grandfather was a native of County Cavan, Ireland, emigrated to America in 1790, and settled in Washington county, Pa. The father of Ephraim was born in 1804. He was a laborer, and in 1831 moved to this township and settled upon the farm where he resided until his death in 1886. He held many township offices, and was justice of the peace for many years. His widow is still living. They had nine children, seven of whom are now living: Ephraim (our subject); Thomas, a liveryman in Allegheny; Samuel Washington, a farmer of Richland township; Lot L., a farmer of Richland township; Margaret, Mrs. James Kendall, of Fulton county, Pa.; Jane, Mrs. Walker Johnson, of same county; Daniel Webster, a farmer near Bakerstown; Richard Morrow, the youngest, took part on the Union side in the late rebellion, and was killed in the seven days' fight, May 6, 1864.

Ephraim Morrow was born near Perrysville, in Ross township, in 1830, and was brought to this township by his parents when an infant. He has always lived here and has followed farming as an occupation. In 1854 he married Esther, daughter of Hugh and Esther (Ross) Douglass, of Bakerstown, and they have five children: Samuel D., of Richland township; Thomas M., of Richland township; Margaret J., Esther D. and Richard H. are at home. Our subject has held different township offices, and he and his family are members of the Presbyterian Church of Pine Creek, of which he is an elder.

Joseph Ruettiger, postmaster and merchant, Etna, was born March 30, 1857, in Etna, Pa., a son of Michael and Agatha (Rettig) Ruettiger, natives of Germany. He was educated in Etna, and at the age of thirteen entered the Etna Iron-works. Fifteen years later, in 1885, he went into business, and same year was appointed postmaster, which office he has since filled with ability. Mr. Ruettiger is a member of the Catholic Church; politically he is a democrat.

William McClure, farmer, Monongahela City, is a descendant of Abdiel McClure, his great-grandfather, who came from Lycoming county, Pa., about 1770, and settled nine miles above Pittsburgh, on lands now occupied by Homestead and the city poor-farm. James, the fourth son, remained in Lycoming county. Elizabeth, his only daughter, married John Hoge, and settled in Washington, Washington county, Pa. Abdiel, with his three sons, William, John and Denny, settled in the Monongahela valley. Of these, William settled in what is now Forward township, on lands now owned by James Patrick and Mrs. Louisa Wallace; John on the present site of Homestead borough, and Denny near Wheeling. Our subject's grandfather, William, was a justice of the peace, and did an immense business as an official, being held in high esteem by all; having received a liberal education, and such advantages not being as accessible as at present, he became deservedly prominent in his section. James, father of William, was born where the family first settled, Aug. 6, 1785, and married Elizabeth Applegate. They had seven children: Maria, Eliza, Jane and Aaron (all deceased), Harvey, a druggist in Elizabeth; James and William, both residing in Forward township.

William was born on his grandfather's old farm, May 30, 1811, and Sept. 29, 1836, married Jane, daughter of John and Jane Storer, of what is now Forward township. To them were born five children, only two of whom are living: Sarah, now Mrs. John K. Long, and Joseph A., who was in the army throughout the war, and is at present in South Carolina. Mrs. McClure's death occurred Aug. 14, 1848, and Mr. McClure next married Harriet N. Lyle, of Cross Creek, Washington county. Their only living child, Clarence, resides on the farm adjoining his father. Mr. McClure's present wife is Sarah, daughter of James and Hannah (Mason) Kerr, of Washington county, and natives of Northampton county. There are but two of her parents' children living: Rev. John Kerr, of Monongahela City, and Sarah, wife of William McClure, both of whom are members of the Presbyterian Church of Monongahela City. Mr. McClure came to his farm when it was a forest, made all the improvements, erected the present buildings, and has made of what was once a wild wood a delightful suburban residence, known as Evergreen farm.

James Wallace, farmer, postoffice Sturgeon, was born in County Down, Ireland, in 1838. In 1848 Charles Wallace, who followed weaving in his native country, came to America and purchased a farm in South Fayette township, on Battle ridge, known as the Dunlevy farm, and there resided for twenty years; he married Mary Gamble, and by her had nine children, all of whom are dead but two; he died in 1873, aged seventy-two years. James, whose name heads this sketch, was educated at the common schools in this country, and has always been a farmer. He married, in 1864, Mary A., daughter of Hugh and Mary (Bell) Sproul, of this county, and six children have been born to them, four living: Minnie B., Joseph F., Nettie J. and Ralph S. Mrs. Wallace died in 1886, aged forty-six years. Mr. Wallace and family are members of the U. P. Church.

Hugh Sproul (deceased), father of Mrs. Wallace, was a descendant of one of the pioneers of South Fayette township, also named Hugh, who took up and settled on four hundred acres of land, at that time a vast wood tract. He married Ann Hambleton, who bore him a large family, among whom was Hugh, Jr., the father of Mrs. Wallace. He was born in 1797 and died in 1873. Hugh, Jr., married Mary, daughter of John and Mary (Jackson) Bell, and became the father of two children: Mary A. (Mrs. Wallace) and Sarah Jane (Mrs. Sterling). His widow, now in her seventy-eighth year, resides on the home farm, and is remarkably active and well preserved for a lady of her advanced age.

James Gray, farmer, postoffice Negley, was born in Allegheny county, Feb. 10, 1815, a son of George and Jane (Hope) Gray, who were born in Washington county, Pa., June 25, 1791, and August 3, 1791, respectively. His grandparents were William and Mary (Borland) Gray, who came from east of the mountains and settled here at a very early day, the former born in 1762 and died in 1794;
the latter died in 1838, aged seventy-two years. His maternal grandparents were James and Jane (McPherson) Hope, former of whom was born Jan. 22, 1758, and died in 1828, aged seventy years; the latter died in 1839, aged seventy-six years. George Gray, father of our subject, learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed about twenty-five years, and then began farming. He was the father of six sons and two daughters and celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of his marriage, all the children being present. He died in 1876, his wife in 1878. James Gray, on leaving school, learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed for fifteen years two miles east of Turtle Creek, on the Pittsburg & Greensburg turnpike-road. In 1850 he bought and in 1851 moved to his present farm, on which he erected all the buildings. He sold fifty acres of coal-land at $100 to $300 per acre, and through his influence and energy the New York Coal-works were started, and the branch of the Allegheny road was built. He was a reared a democrat, but adopted the republican platform, taking a strong stand for abolition, and in the cause of temperance. His name was on the first ticket of the liberty party in this county.

Mr. Gray married, March 31, 1836. Rachel Hughey, who was born at Turtle Creek in 1817, a daughter of Joseph and Eleanor (Stewart) Hughey, and six children were born to them, three of whom are living: Col. Joseph H., ex-sheriff of this county; Cyrus S., clerk of the orphans' court, and Jennie H. (Mrs. Joel Monroe), who carries on Mr. Gray's farm. The deceased are Oliver P., who died at the age of four years; James, at the age of sixteen years, and Ella, at the age of eight years. Mr. and Mrs. Gray are members of the Presbyterian Church. They have lived to celebrate their golden wedding. Every year they travel considerably.

Joshua Stephenson, retired, postoffice Mansfield Valley, was born in the county of Durham, England, in 1816. In 1818 his father, Joseph Stephenson, with his wife and four children, came to America, and soon after their arrival settled in Pittsburgh, then a town of eight thousand people. Joseph was a butcher in America, and his high appreciation of our American government and the advantages offered to willing people were ably set forth in his letters to friends across the ocean. He died in Pittsburgh in 1822. His widow later became the wife of Charles J. Naylor, who had been a slaveholder in Jamaica, West Indies, later in life a farmer, and who came to America in 1821. He was proficient in several languages. Joshua Stephenson, the subject of this memoir, was but seven years old when his father died. He received most of his education at home under the able instruction of his stepfather, and at eighteen he learned the trade of blacksmith, which he followed for ten years. He then engaged in farming in Scott township, and since 1850 has led a retired life. Mr. Stephenson married Ellen Bell, and by her he had two children, one yet living, John W. His second marriage was with Mary E. Hoffman, daughter of P. N. and Elizabeth Hoffman, of Martinsburg, Va., and one daughter, Adele H., has blessed their union. Mr. Stephenson is independent in politics, but upon national issues he supports the republican candidate.

John H. Oliver, Mansfield, was born in Washington, Pa., in 1820. William L. Oliver, his father, was born in Washington, and was a son of David, who came there from New Jersey at an early date. David was a shoemaker by trade, and later in life a farmer. William L. was a hatter, which trade he successfully carried on in Washington, Pa., having a branch business in Pittsburgh. He married Mrs. Eliza B. Husty, who is now living, aged eighty-six years. William L. died in 1838, aged thirty-five years. Born to these parents were three children, two of whom are living, John H. (the eldest) and Elizabeth (Mrs. Hart). John H. was educated at the common schools, and at fifteen years of age went to Pittsburgh, where he learned the tinsmith's trade, serving an apprenticeship of four years. He followed that business through life, and was for thirteen years extensively engaged for himself in Pittsburgh. Mr. Oliver married, in 1850, Matilda Lenfestey, daughter of John Lenfestey, originally of France. Two children were born to their union: John L. (deceased) and Mary E., at home. Since 1873 Mr. Oliver has been a resident of Mansfield. He has to a great extent retired from business, but has a store, where he finds pleasure in spending his time. He owns a country-seat, and is content to take the world as it comes. He has served on the school board and in the town council, and is a member of the M. E. Church.

Robert W. Glenn, farmer, postoffice Noblestown. About the year 1790 William Glenn, with his family and four brothers, emigrated to America from Ireland and settled in New York. Robert, a son, was then but two years old, and when quite a boy commenced the study of medicine, graduating in New York city when eighteen years old. He came to Allegheny county in 1810, commenced the practice of his profession, and was the first, and at that time the only, physician in that section. He married Margaret, daughter of John McDonald, Sr., an old pioneer in Pennsylvania. Born to Dr. and Mrs. Glenn were six children, three of whom are now living: John, M. D., Martha N., Mary M. (deceased), Robert W., James, M. D. (deceased) and William (deceased). The doctor purchased seventy-five acres of land near Noblestown, which is still lived on by his sons. The house erected on the lot purchased at Noblestown is still standing in a good state of preservation. Dr. Glenn died in 1837, aged fifty-two years, and his widow in 1860, aged seventy-five years.
John and Robert W. now reside on the homestead. The Glenn family are among the most prominent in this section of Allegheny county, are members of the Presbyterian Church, and republicans.

WILLIAM C. HERRON, farmer, postoffice Noblestown, was born in Pittsburgh, in 1820. In May, 1811, John and Martha (Anderson) Herron left Ireland, being then just two weeks married, and after a voyage of six months arrived at Norfolk, Va., Nov. 8, 1811. They came to Baltimore, Md., where, after a stay of one month, Mr. Herron, in company with his wife, commenced his journey to Pittsburgh. His mode of travel was with six horses and a heavy wagon, and after twenty-one days they arrived at their destination. There he resided until 1837, when he moved to Noblestown, purchased 325 acres of land, and there remained until his death, which occurred when he was seventy-seven years of age. Six children were born to him and Mrs. Herron, the eldest child being the fifth child. He was educated at the common schools, and since sixteen years of age has resided on his present farm. He is a member of the U. P. Church.

SAMUEL MORGAN (deceased) was a son of John Morgan, who came to this county about 1780, and settled upon three hundred acres of land on Miller's run. There he erected a mill which he operated in connection with farming. He married a Miss Ewing, who bore him two children. Of these, Samuel, the elder, at the death of his father came into possession of the property. His first wife, nee Margaret Murry, bore him six children, all of whom are dead. His second wife, nee Margaret McGrew, of Westmoreland county, bore him six children, three of whom are living: Alexander, Elizabeth and Lydia (Mrs. Stilley). Samuel was a millwright, a trade he followed all his life. Alexander and his sister now reside on the property which their father purchased, and which they own. Mr. Morgan was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

THE GILFILLAN FAMILY. Squire Alexander Gilfillan, the pioneer of this family, came from Scotland in 1780, settled in Allegheny county, and took up four hundred acres of land on Chartiers creek, where he remained until his death. He married Margaret Boyd, who bore him ten children. He was the first justice of the peace in his township (then St. Clair), and filled the office for forty years. He was an elder in the U. P. Church of Mt. Lebanon, was always a farmer, and was a prominent man in his day. John, the second son, born on this tract in 1785, married Margaret Fife, who bore him four children, all of whom died when young with the exception of a son, John, who was the third child, born in 1826. He was born and reared on the farm purchased by his grandfather, Alexander, and educated at public schools and Bethel Academy. He was elected to the legislature in 1863 and 1872, and in 1876 represented Allegheny county in the senate. He was a public-spirited man, taking an active part in politics and all public enterprises. He married Eleanor, daughter of Samuel Ewing, of South Fayette township, and five children were born to them, four now living: Maggie, Loretta, Ella and Alexander, the only son, who was educated at Western University and graduated in 1879. He commenced the study of law in 1881, under John G. Bryant, and was admitted to the bar in 1883, since when he has practiced his profession in Pittsburgh. This family are members of the U. P. Church; politically he is a republican.

ALEXANDER GILFILLAN, SR., was born in this county in 1821. His father, Andrew B., the third child born to Alexander and Margaret Boyd, a farmer by occupation, married Ann Caldwell, who became the mother of eight children, Alexander, our subject, being the eldest son. Andrew settled on the farm now owned by Alexander and reared his children, aged eighty-three years. Alexander was born and reared on his present farm, and owns two hundred of the four hundred acres purchased by his father. He was educated at the common schools, and married, in 1857, Margaret, daughter of George Alken, of Pittsburgh. Seven children were born to this union, all of whom are living: Mr. Gilfillan is recognized as one of the most prominent citizens of Upper St. Clair township. He is a member of the U. P. Church; politically a republican.

WILLIAM GILFILLAN (deceased) was born in 1839 and died March 7, 1879. He was a son of Andrew and Ann (Caldwell) Gilfillan, and grandson of Alexander and Margaret (Boyd) Gilfillan; was born and reared on the farm, and followed agricultural pursuits through life. He was a student at Bethel Academy. At the time of his death he owned 135 acres of land, where his widow and children now reside. Mr. Gilfillan was married in 1865 to Martha J., daughter of James and Martha (Cubbage) Vincent, and by her had two children: James V. and Ann Caldwell. The family are members of the U. P. Church; politically he was a republican.

JOHN PORTER, Esq., "In the scarlet splendor of the summer morn, July 12, 1825, he was born," near old Drumore, Ireland.

Early in life the family emigrated to America, and after a perilous voyage over sea and mountains took up their residence in Robinson township, this county. At the death of the father, they removed to Pittsburgh, then, compared with the present city, a small place. At the early age of twelve the subject of this sketch entered the employment of Jones & Coleman as a carriagespring apprentice, afterward becoming foreman of that department of the mill, and the acknowledged leader of car- and carriagespring-makers in the city. He remained with this industry about thirty years. On October 9, 1847, he married Miss Eliza Jane Dunseath, a worthy Christian lady, also a resident of Pittsburgh. This happy couple were blessed with two sons and two daughters, James Oscar, superintendent of the Ironont (Ohio) Nail-work; Ida, now Mrs. Samuel J. Brown, who resides on a part of the old homestead, in Penn township; John, a practicing physician of McKeensport, this county; Eva, the youngest, at home. Always possessed of a keen taste for nature, in 1859 Mr. Porter's ambition to own a country home was gratified. This he named Salem Hights, and, on a beautiful eminence overlooking the picturesque Allegheny valley, in after years he built his mansion home, which he surrounded by fruit and shade trees, vines and flowers of the choicest varieties. In this lovely home the beloved wife of his youth and daughter Eva now live.

In politics Squire Porter was clean and honest, acting mostly of his life with the republican party, only stepping aside when he thought them in the wrong. His religious belief was always clear and generous, hating hypocrisy, and dwelling with pleasure upon the immortality of the soul. An active and respected member of Mount Hope Lodge, I. O. O. F., serving them many years as representative in the grand lodge, also of the Verona Lodge, No. 548, F. & A. M., having been a charter member of both, they followed him in their respective bodies to his last resting-place. Having not yet reached on life's highway the stone that marks the highest point, he became weary, and in the wintry hush of the eventide, Feb. 26, 1884, he died at his home, Penn township. In the family burial-lot, on a lovely sloping mound, in the Allegheny cemetery, while the setting sun threw a splendor of glistening shadows over the beautiful snow, beside his dear old mother, loving hearts bade him "good night."

Dead? No!
There is no death that seems so to transition:
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life etysian,
Whose portal we call death!

WILLIAM WILSON, Sr., farmer, postoffice Broughton, was born July 3, 1820, on the farm he now owns, a son of William and Sarah (Morrow) Wilson, also natives of this county, born Jan. 8, 1792, and Aug. 19, 1796, respectively, and parents of five sons and two daughters, four of whom are now living. William Wilson, grandfather of our subject, came from Ireland. The subject of this sketch married, in 1848, Mary R. Williams, born in Washington county March 8, 1823, a daughter of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Reed) Williams. Her father was a ruling elder in the church of Mingo, and trustee of Jefferson College; also a director of the Western Theological Seminary of Allegheny; he was born in Washington county Feb. 3, 1783, and died Sept. 2, 1860; his wife was born near Winchester, Va., and died Nov. 26, 1835. Mrs. Wilson's grandfather, Aaron Williams, was born in Wales May 2, 1753, and his wife, Elizabeth Coe, was born in New Jersey March 9, 1761. Her great-grandfather, Josiah Williams, married Phebe Rodgers. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson: Lewis William Benjamin, principal of the public schools at San Jose, Cal., married to Alice Blyth, of the same place; Sarah L., married to James Esby, of Upper St. Clair township; Ada Mary Jane, married to Robert Warnock, of Princeton, Ind; Fremont Samuel, at home with his father. Mr. Wilson is one of the oldest residents of Snowden township. He bought his present place from his father in 1850, began farming for himself, and has been very successful. He is an eldest in Bethel Church, of which his wife is also a member. He is a republican.

WILLIAM E. EDMUNDSON, farmer, postoffice Remington, was born in 1857, a son of James Edmundson, whose father, Joseph Edmundson, was born near McKeensport, and in 1828 came to Robinson township, where he purchased 250 acres of land; he married Sarah Muse, and they had five children, three of whom, John, Sarah and James, grew to maturity. James was the third son, and was born in 1828; he married Eliza Ann Robinson, and to them were born eleven children, four of whom are now living: William E., George R., Ida E. and James A. James, Sr., was killed in 1871 by a kick from a horse. His widow now resides at her home, part of a valuable tract of land left her by her husband. William, our subject, was educated at the public schools in the township; he married Lida J., daughter of John Harbison, and they have two children: Mary Ethel and Jessie Eliza. Mr. Edmundson now owns one hundred acres of land, which is part of the 250 acres purchased by his grandfather. His grandparents and his parents, until 1870, were members of the Presbyterian Church, since which time the family have been active members of the Presbyterian Church.

Politically Mr. Edmundson is a republican.

JOHN HOLMES, farmer, postoffice Putnam, was born in Findlayville, Allegheny county, in 1836, eldest son of William Holmes, and grandson of Andrew Holmes, the former a native of Allegheny county; the latter came to Wheeling, W. Va., in 1777, his ancestors being from the north of Ireland. Some time previous to the year 1800 Andrew came to Allegheny county, where he followed the pursuit of farming. He married Fannie Wells, and to them were born seven children, four daughters and three sons. William, the youngest son, married Abigail, daughter of Benjamin Highy, and to them were born two sons and six daughters. William was a farmer, and died in Ohio. Grandmother Holmes and Andrew Morgan were first cousins. Her mother and Morgan's mother were brother and sister. Morgan's mother's maiden name was Wells. Sarah Mitchner. Morgan's daughter, informs the writer that she was a second cousin to Morgan the rebel general. John Holmes, the subject of this memoir, was educated at the public schools in the county, and has always followed farming. He was married in 1853 to Delilah Registers, of Washington county, and ten children were born to them, of whom the following-named seven are living: Catharine, Sadie, Florence, Ella, Nancy, Hannah and John. In 1854 Mr. Holmes came to his present farm, and purchased thirty-five acres, afterward ninety, and now owns one hundred and twenty-five. He is a republican.

Capt. Jacob Lashell (deceased), steamboat owner, captain, boat-builder, manufacturer and farmer, was born in Adams county, Pa., July 18, 1812, a son of Jacob and Mary E. (Clark) Lashell, natives of Adams county. The grandfather of the subject of this sketch was George Lashell, of Adams county, who had a stage-line and a hotel. Capt. Lashell came to Allegheny county in 1836 with Robert Cochran, and located at what is now Lashell's Ferry. They cut wood for steamboats the first winter, and Lashell went on the river. He soon became captain, then owner of the Caroline, Beulah and Market Boy, and was part owner of the Melnotte. He made seventy trips to New Orleans, and was an able and intelligent man. He was united in marriage Jan. 9, 1839, with Sarah A. Boley, who was born on her father's homestead, near Lashell's Ferry, Moon township, Allegheny county, Pa., Dec. 27, 1823, a daughter of John and Mary (Downard) Boley, natives of Washington county, Pa. Mr. Boley served in the war of 1812. To Capt. and Mrs. Lashell were born four children: Mary, drowned at the age of ten years; George A., married to Margaret McElheren, and residing in Allegheny, Pa.; John R., married to Elizabeth Unstott, and residing near Sharon Moon township, and Leonora L., wife of William McKown, in Robinson township. Capt. Lashell was county commissioner one term; was a delegate to the democratic convention, and was county supervisor many years. He was also justice of the peace for fifteen years. He died April 11, 1886. Mrs. Lashell and family are members of the Presbyterian Church. She still owns the old place and ferry.

John A. Newton, druggist, West Elizabeth, a son of William and Mary Jane (McElhenny) Newton, was born in West Elizabeth borough in 1850. His father was a native of Baltimore, Md., and when a boy became a sailor and followed the seas until he arrived at maturity. He came here and readily found employment as ship-carpenter. His wife was a descendant of one of the pioneer families of Western Pennsylvania, and to them were born two children—John A. and C. A. William Newton died in 1854; his widow afterward married Louis Jester, and they are now residents of West Elizabeth borough. John A. made his home with his step-grandfather, Willey, until thirteen years of age, when he returned to his birthplace. His mother remained with her until 1878. He married Sarah, daughter of A. W. and Rebecca Bedell, of West Elizabeth, after which he engaged in the drug trade, which he still follows. During the epidemic of scarlet fever which prevailed here in 1880 they lost their first three children—Walter S., Mary E. and Washington O. They now have two children—Ada L. and Emma B.

A. W. Bedell, retired, West Elizabeth, son of Andrew and Rebecca (Ferree) Bedell, was born in Jefferson township in 1821. His grandfather, Abner, came here from New Jersey, was a soldier in the Revolution, and assisted Lafayette from the field when wounded. He located at Horse-Shoe bottom, above Monongahela City, in Washington county. Upon this place Andrew, father of A. W., was born, about 1794. In 1809 Abner purchased a farm (of which John Wright was patentee) in Jefferson township, where they resided until 1824, when they removed to Elizabeth township, where they lived and died, Abner in 1874, his wife in 1878. In 1820 Andrew married Rebecca, daughter of Joel and Christian (Kerkendall) Ferree, of Jefferson township, and their children were Mary (the late Mrs. Lewis Hoffman, of Jefferson township), Joel (now in Charleston, W. Va.), Calvin (in Jefferson township), Amanda (now Mrs. James McKown, of Elizabeth), William (who resides at the old homestead), Sarah (now Mrs. Frederick Rhodes, of South Side), Andrew and Rebecca (both deceased) and A. W. Bedell (of West Elizabeth). In the spring of 1828 the father bought and removed to a farm in Jefferson township (of which Z. Wright was patentee).

May 14, 1846, the subject of this memoir married Rebecca, daughter of Jacob and Jane Aber, of Jefferson township, and settled on the farm adjoining his old home, where he remained until the spring of 1866, when he purchased a farm still owned by him, and upon which they resided until four years ago. He then removed to his present place of residence in West Elizabeth. Their children were Eliza J. (deceased wife of Joseph Lytle, of Washington county), Amanda (wife of William Lytle, of Washington county), Sarah (now Mrs. John A. Newton, of West Elizabeth), Agnes (now Mrs. Florence Shepfer, of Beaver county), Mary (now Mrs. George Cochran, of Jefferson township) and Emma (now Mrs. Dora Moffatt, of Waynesburg, Greene county). Mr. Bedell has never sought political distinction, but has been identified with his township officially, and is known as a sturdy democrat.

George Richet, retired farmer, post-office Verona, was born in County Down, Ireland, in 1805, and was reared on a farm. He married Mary Cherry, came to America about 1847, and rented in Penn township, being eighteen years on one place at Vernon (now Verona) station. About fifteen years ago he purchased twenty-one acres near Verona, and made his home there ever since. His faithful helpmeet passed away in 1886, aged seventy-six years. The family is associated with the U. P. Church, and includes nine children, now living: Will-IAN M., Mary (Osborne), George, Maggie (Hearn), Nancy, James, Jennie, Thomas and Priscilla (Scott): Frank, the eighth born, died at the age of twenty-seven.

WILLIAM McCAMMON RICHEY, farmer, postoffice Verona, was born in County Down, Ireland, July 9, 1830. He received a limited education, but is a reader and keeps abreast of the times. Since coming to America he has earned his own living, attending to the farm. In 1867 he purchased the farm of thirty-six acres on which he dwells, and with rented ground now tills about one hundred acres. He is an elder in the U. P. Church; politically a republican. He has served as school director, was collector eight years, and is now register assessor. In September, 1856, he married Jane (Hearn), from Stewart, daughter of Priscilla (Hearn), who in 1888, a daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Rose) Staley, and a native of Allegheny County. Of her fourteen children nine survive her: Mary Elizabeth, William G., Sadie, Maggie, James, Ida, Harry, Raymond and Clifford.

JOHN DOOLITTLE, retired, postoffice Mansfield Valley, was born in West Virginia in 1812, one of a family of eleven children, of whom Jacob and John survive. (See sketch of Jacob Doolittle.) John received his primary education in an old log schoolhouse situated in the woods near his father's farm, which comprised some two or three hundred acres; and after he had learned his trade, bricklaying, in Waynesburg, Greene county, he attended school again three winters. In 1831 he came to Pittsburgh (which place he had visited with his brother in 1828), and here worked at his trade for a time; then with his brother moved to Birmingham, now known as South Side, and here resided twenty-five years, engaged in bricklaying. Here he served two terms in the town council, one term as school director, and a term as judge. Also when the store, where the market-house now is, Mr. Grier being judge. Moving to the Brownsville road, in Baldwinton township, Mr. Doolittle lived there six years, serving as school director three years; then came to near Mansfield, in Scott township, where he also served as school director three years (war period). He now resides in Mansfield, retired from active life but busy, wheeling his farm, which he had carried on several years. Mr. Doolittle has been twice married, first in 1836 to Anna Eliza Noble, and second, in 1840, to Elizabeth Duncan. He has had twelve children, four being now deceased. He is a member of the M. E. Church; politically a republican.

JOHN S. STEWART, farmer, postoffice White Ash, was born at Stewart's station, Westmoreland county, Jan. 5, 1827. His great-grandfather, John Stewart, born in Ireland, of Scotch blood, was a strict Presbyterian, as are his descendants. John Stewart, son of the latter, very early came from the eastern part of the state, and settled in Elizabeth township, this county. He was an officer of the state militia. His son John, born in Elizabeth, married Margaret Shaw, a native of this county, and had six sons and one daughter: Jean (Mrs. William Shaw), John S., David S., Samuel S., M. D., Thomas S., William S., M. D., and Robert E., an attorney. Robert E. went out as a soldier in the 26th regiment (was promoted to major, brevet colonel) and William in the 3rd. John S. read most of the Latin course, took the sophomore course at Washington College, and taught school several winters. He had a farm at Logan's Ferry, where he dwelt several years. In 1867 he bought a farm near Unity, and twenty years later purchased the farm of sixty-eight acres on which he now resides, near Sandy creek, and sold the first farm to a son who sold it to Mrs. Martha Jane Clark, a native of Penn township, who died in 1887. She was a daughter of Robert and Ann Jane (Matthews) Clark, of Irish birth. On the first day of 1884 Mr. Stewart's second marriage took place, the bride being Viola N. Boyd. The family is identified with the United Presbyterian Church at Verona. Mr. Stewart is president of the township school board, and is a staunch republican. His eldest son, Samuel E., an attorney, served in the legislature of 1886, and was re-elected in 1888, on the republican ticket; his other son, William S., graduated from a medical college of Philadelphia in 1887, and took the first honor.

JOSEPH CAMPBELL, farmer, postoffice Noblestown, was born in County Down, Ireland, in 1826, a son of William and Nancy Jane (Summerville) Campbell, who were the parents of six children. The parents came with five children to America and immediately settled in Fayette (now South Fayette) township, this county. The father rented a farm, on which they resided five years, at the end of which time he purchased 130 acres of land, and lived with his sons, James and Joseph. The land on which Joseph resides is part of a tract owned by Mr. Dunlevy, an old pioneer of Allegheny County. William Campbell died in 1881, aged eighty-five years. He was three times married; his first wife died in 1857, and by his last two marriages there were no children. Joseph, the subject of this sketch, was educated at the old school, in South Fayette township, and has always been a farmer; he purchased eighty acres of land in 1861, and is now the owner of a handsome home and a fine farm of 150 acres. He married, in 1852, Margaret, daughter of John Johnson, of Fayette township, and three children were born to this marriage, two living: J. J. (assisting on the farm) and Izzie J. Mrs. Campbell died in 1887, aged fifty-three years.

THOMAS CAMPBELL (deceased) was the youngest of nine children born to John Campbell, who emigrated to America about 1840, and settled in Allegheny County. Thomas married, in 1858, Elizabeth, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Barclay) Hopper, of this county. Their union was blessed with one son, Samuel John, born in 1860, in South Fayette township. He was educated at the public schools, at Oakland Academy, and graduated at Iron City College in 1881. Samuel now resides with his mother on the farm purchased in 1867. Thomas died in 1874, aged fifty-three years. The family are members of the U. P. Church.

The Ross Family. Among the first settlers of the part of Allegheny county where Mansfield lies was the pioneer of this family, Philip Ross, who came from Maryland about 1778. He was born in Dorchester county, Md., in 1732, and died in Mansfield Valley in 1813. He married Elizabeth Casey, a daughter of Peter and Maudaline Casey, of Hampshire county, Va.; she was born in 1745 and died in 1813. To this union were born five sons and three daughters. Philip took up some eight hundred acres of land from the government, which was divided equally between his sons, Capt. Peter and Col. John. Capt. Peter married Matilda South, a lady from New Jersey, and two sons and four daughters were born to them. Peter was educated at Jefferson College, but always followed the occupation of farming. The names of his children were: Casey, Euphemia, Peter, Matilda, Elizabeth and Emaline. The last mentioned is now the only surviving member of the family, and is the wife of David Foster.

J. Nelson Ewing, farmer, postoffice Oakdale Station, was born in Allegheny county, Pa., April 29, 1821, a son of William and grandson of Alexander Ewing. He was reared on a farm in Robinson township, and educated at the common schools. In 1844 he came to North Fayette township and purchased ninety acres of his present home. He married Margaret, daughter of Parker Lorain and granddaughter of Mrs. Steiert, who was a Miss Walker, and with her sister and brother was captured by the Indians. To Mr. and Mrs. Ewing three children have been born: Eliza Jane (Mrs. Bell), Anna (Mrs. Glass) and Amice M., attending school. Mr. Ewing is a highly respected citizen, has filled township offices and was justice of the peace ten years. He is a member of the U. P. Church; politically, a stanch democrat.

John Hershey, farmer, postoffice Negley, is the largest real-estate holder in Penn township, was born in 1816. His father, Christian Hershey, was born in York county, Pa., of German blood, and married Nancy N. Stoner, of Fulton (then Bedford) county. They came to Penn township between 1810 and 1815, and settled where John Hershey resides. Christian was a whig, and was elected supervisor and tax-collector. His father bore the same name, and probably came from Germany. He was the father of six children. John was born to Christian and Nancy Hershey, former of whom died in 1859, and latter in 1865, each aged about seventy-five years. Their children are Mary (Stotler), Ann (Adair), deceased; Betsey (Newcomer), John, Christian and Susan (Soles). John Hershey inherited the homestead, to which he has added by industry and shrewd management. He now owns five hundred acres in the township, besides a farm in Wilkins and property in the East End, and gives his whole attention to stock-raising; also owns a half interest in a first-class roller flouring-mill in Saltsburg, Pa. In 1856 he married Elizabeth Coniffe, born in Soho, daughter of Charles and Elizabeth Coniffe, of this county, of English descent. Mr. Hershey's children are Kate, Elizabeth Jane, Mary, Daisy and Harry Walter.

Joseph Hughey, farmer, postoffice Negley, is a grandson of John Hughey, a revolutionary soldier. His father, Joseph, was born in Potom, and his mother, Eleanor (Stewart), in Westmoreland county. Joseph Hughey was born in Patton, July 5, 1823, and was reared on a farm, attending the free schools from sixteen until twenty-one. In the spring of 1888 he took up his residence on his present farm. In 1852 he married Mary M. Johnston, born in Penn (then Wilkins) township, a daughter of William and Sarah Johnston, natives of this county. Mrs. Hughey died in 1887, aged fifty-five years. The family is associated with the U. P. Church. Mr. Hughey is a republican, served as justice of the peace ten years, and has filled other offices. He has eight children living: William Francis, an attorney in Verona; Charles, Morrow, at home; Sarah, wife of George Reiter, in East Liberty; Joseph G., in Kansas City; Ella, Harry J., John K. and Thomas J., at home. Rachel G. (the first-born) died the wife of John Aber, of Patton; Olivia Jane (the eighth) died when three years old.

David Riggs, farmer, postoffice Library, was born May 3, 1822, in Washington county, Pa., a son of John and Mary (Phillips) Riggs. John was born March 13, 1800, in Washington county, on the farm now owned by his son David, on which he passed his entire life save a few years; he died Feb. 28, 1848. His wife was born in Washington county, Pa., April 13, 1800, and died Jan. 25, 1882. David's grandfather, Edward Riggs, a native of New Jersey, settled on the Riggs farm Dec. 25, 1801, and died in September, 1844; his wife, Mrs. Riggs, died in May, 1853. David Riggs was six years old when his father returned to the old farm in Washington county. He is the eldest of eleven children, and at the death of his father took charge of the family. His brothers and sisters are as follows: Sarah (Mrs. Murray, in Ohio), Edward R. (in Illinois), Josiah (in Leadville, Colo.), Lewis (died Oct. 20, 1884), Joseph (in Leadville, Colo.), John P. (at Mt. Washington, Pittsburg—he served three years in the civil war), Robert L. (in McKeesport, Pa.), William J., M. D. (at Fifteenth Street, Pittsburgh), Oliver H. (just graduated at Brooklyn Medical College), and Isaac W., M. D. (at Fifteenth street, Pittsburgh).

David married, in 1850, Elizabeth Bates, born July 23, 1832, in Guernsey county, Ohio, daughter of William and Ellen (Stewart) Bates, latter of whom was born in Washington county, Pa., in 1810. Her father was born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1804, and came to the United States in 1833. She was three years of age, located in Winchester, Ohio, and always followed teaching; died in 1858. Her paternal grandfather, John Stewart, also a native of Ireland, was a farmer in Washington county, Pa. Ten children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Riggs: John S. (in California), William Bates (in Bellville, Canada), Mary E. (now Mrs. James T. Douglas, in Pittsburgh), Sarah J. (wife of Rev. F. W. Cramer, in Ohio), Emma C. (at school in Pittsburgh), David Elmer (died April 29, 1887), Edmonia F. (married to Loyal Cheesman, in Kansas), Elizabeth R., Ida Bell and Alta May (at home). Mr. Riggs has always been a member of the Baptist Church at Library.

James Duff, farmer, postoffice White Ash, was born near his present residence Sept. 30, 1815. His grandfather, John Duff, came from Ireland at the commencement of the Revolution, and joined the American army. At the battle of Brandywine his whiskers were cut off by a bullet. At the close of the Revolution he bought land in Westmoreland county, Pa., where he dwelt for some time, and where his son James, the subject of our history, was born. Before the beginning of this century he moved to Penn township, where he died about 1812. James, his son, bought the adjoining farm, married Catherine Fisher, a native of Ireland, and died in March, 1854, aged seventy-two years; her widow died in 1898. Five of their children grew to maturity: Mary (McGahy), now a resident of Lavenworth, Kan.; Isabel, Catherine (Turner), in Wilkinsburg; James and Ann: two sons, John and William, died in infancy. James has always lived on the same farm; has served as supervisor, collector, school director and justice of the peace. Although receiving but a limited education in the subscription schools, he has made his way in life and is a useful citizen. He was formerly a whig and abolitionist, and is a republican. In 1841 he married Betsey McClurken, who was born in Plum township, and they have two children: Catharine Ann (Mrs. John Sampson) and Cyrus B. Mrs. Duff's parents, S. B. and Betsey (Speer) McClurken, were of Scotch and Irish descent, respectively. Mr. Duff's family are connected with the Hebron U. P. Church.

Jeremiah Wade McLaughlin, farmer, postoffice Negley, was born July 21, 1825, on the farm where he now resides. His grandfather, Edward McLaughlin, came from Ireland when twelve years old, and settled on the farm previous to 1775. Before that date he lived in Pittsburgh, but preferred the farm to the site of the then unforeseen city. His son James, who was born in New England, was, being born March 28, 1775, before the battle of Lexington; James, John, Mary, Thomas, Robert, Nancy, Elizabeth and Edward. The last named remained on the farm all his life, and was married to Mary Speer, of Westmoreland county; she was a member of the Presbyterian Church, as were most of the family. Edward was born Oct. 24, 1795, and died Dec. 15, 1856. The children were Jane Ann, Nancy, J. W., Zephaniah and Zachariah. J. W. and Mrs. Jane Black and Mrs. Nancy Davidson are now living, J. W. having always resided on the farm. May 4, 1859, he married Amelia, daughter of Jonathan, of English, and Catherine Rigby, of German descent. Their children are Cassius Milton, Mary, Annie, Francis, Nelson Wade and Catherine Amelia. Mr. McLaughlin is independent in politics, and has been school director and town treasurer. The family is associated with Unity U. P. Church.

James Miskimans Johnston, a retired farmer, postoffice White Ash, was born Aug. 29, 1806, on the farm where he now resides. His father, John Johnston, Esq., was born in Ireland, in 1745, of Scotch descent. He received a thorough education, and at the age of seventeen came to America, where he found employment in Harrisburg in the land-office. On the outbreak of the Revolution he joined the American army and was detailed as Washington's private secretary, which position he held for some years. On account of the poverty of the colonies he accepted 620 acres of land in Wilkins township in part payment for his services. Of this tract 300 acres were in what is now Penn township, and constituted the homestead on which he settled. For some time he was so harassed by Indians that he could not occupy it steadily, but during their absence farmed the Two Mile landing, where Pittsburgh now stands. He was a whig, was appointed justice of the peace of Pitt township, a position he held until his death, in July, 1810. He was an elder in Beulah Presbyterian Church, to which he called the first pastor. His wife was Martha, born at Carlisle, a daughter of William and Jane Miskimans, who came from Ireland. The subject of this sketch is the only son born to this marriage; his twin sister, Nancy (Park), died in 1887; Jane, a younger sister, is the wife of Francis S. Gilmore. James M. Johnston has passed his life on the home farm, and for forty-five years has been an elder in Beulah Presbyterian Church. Politically he is a republican. When eighteen years old he was commissioned, by Gov. Woff, captain of a militia rifle company called the Lafayette Blues, which position he held seven years. Jan. 6, 1831, he married Mary Holmes Hamilton, born in Hamilton county, Ohio, a daughter of George and Elizabeth (Irwin) Hamilton, of Ireland. Mrs. Johnston passed from earth in January, 1886, leaving two daughters, Mrs. Martha Forney and Lizzie H., and two sons, Edward and Newton, at home. His eldest son, James M., was first lieutenant in Co. A, 1st P. V., and served as provost-marshall at Edisto Island some years; he was killed at the coalworks in Penn township, by a runaway car. George H., also a member of Co. A, died of disease contracted in the army. John and Robert died of scarlet fever in 1855, and Alexander died in 1840.

Phillips. Some time previous to the revolutionary war two brothers emigrated from their native country, Ireland, to America, accompanied by a sister, who was afterward married and became the mother of a large family of children. These brothers, both farmers, were Jonathan and Samuel Phillips, former of whom purchased four hundred acres and latter about five hundred acres from the government, the property being in what was then Washington county, now Robinson township. Jonathan married a Miss Owen, who bore him four sons and four daughters, Samuel, born in 1799, being among the youngest. He married Priscilla McFadden, and they had nine children, all of whom grew to maturity; at his father's death he inherited the homestead farm of over one hundred and fifty acres. Samuel died in 1868. Jonathan, born in 1809, resides on the farm where his grandfather first settled. He was educated at the public schools, and has always followed farming. In 1850 he married Margaret Glass, daughter of Samuel Glass, an old pioneer in the county, and to them were born seven children, five of whom are now living: Samuel, Milton S., William J., Calvin K. and Everett N. Jonathan Phillips occupies the farm purchased from the government and patented by Margaret McCoy May 14, 1789, containing 207 acres, bought from her by Jonathan Phillips, Sr., April 4, 1804, and who, at his death, willed the same to be divided between William and Samuel Phillips. Samuel's part containing 107 acres (willed to Jonathan by Samuel) and William's one hundred acres. Mr. Phillips has been school director three years, supervisor thirteen years, and is a member of the U. P. Church; politically he is a Republican.

William S. Phillips, son of Alexander and Mary (Sharp) Phillips, was born in 1831. He is a farmer by occupation, and owns a farm of eighty-four acres, part of a tract of land purchased from the government and patented by his grandfather, Samuel Phillips, on March 21, 1888. He was educated in the public schools, and was married in 1854 to Hannah Young. To them was born one child, Blan-tha Jane, now wife of D. K. Ewing, now living. The wife and mother died. In 1861 Mr. Phillips married Emeline Phillips, and four children were born to them, three of whom, John W., Clara B. and Lillie M., are living. Mr. Phillips is a member of the U. P. Church; in politics a Republican.

William H. Phillips, son of William Phillips, Sr. was born in 1858, and was reared on the farm willed to his father by his grandfather, Jonathan Phillips, consisting of one hundred acres of land. He married Anna Eliza McCready, and to them were born the following named children: Maggie (Mrs. Cunningham), William A., Robert J., Jonathan S. Mr. Phillips died in 1880, and his widow now resides on the home farm with her sons Robert J. and William A., latter of whom superintends the farm work. He married Miss McCabe, and they have two children: William R. and Alfred Deen. The family are members of the U. P. Church, and are republicans.

McCormick. The McCormick family was one among the earliest settlers. Benjamin McCormick was one of two brothers who came to this country at the same time from Ireland, in the seventeenth century. He purchased a farm in Moon township, Allegheny county, Pa., where he settled as a farmer. The farm is owned at present by Nicholas Nolte. Unto him were born two sons—James and Hugh, they receiving their father's property at his death. Hugh becoming the owner of about 300 acres of land. He was unfortunate at the raising of a barn, where a falling timber drove his leg into the ground, making him a cripple and fracturing his leg so that it never got entirely well, and was a source of severe suffering to him for a period of about fifty years, till in 1852, when he died at the age of eighty-three. In 1804 he was married to Miss Margaret Nichol, daughter of John Nichol, of Robinson township, and to them were born four sons and one daughter, Benjamin being the eldest. When a young man he came to Robinson township and settled on one hundred acres of land as a farmer, of which his father purchased fifty acres, and his mother inheriting fifty acres beside, as her part of a four-hundred-acre tract divided by her father, John Nichol, between his eight children. In 1835 he was married to Miss Eleanor Deemer. He lived on this farm until his death. He died June 1, 1888, at the age of eighty-three, being the owner of 160 acres of land. His widow lives on the old homestead. Unto them were born eight children, of whom five sons and two daughters are now living.

Benjamin N. McCormick, his fourth son, was born in 1841, and was educated at the public schools in Allegheny county. He has always followed farming with the exception of the period he was in the war. He enlisted in 1863 in Battery G. 7th I, P. B., and was in the United States service eighteen months at Fort Delaware, until the close of the war. In 1880 he was married to Miss Letitia J., daughter of William Glass, and to them have been born three children, viz.: Benjamin Franklin, William Alvin and Roxie Etta. Mr. McCormick now owns eighty-two acres of land, which he inherits from his father, where he now resides. The family are members of Union U. P. Church; politically he is a Republican.
and removed with her father's family into the state of Ohio in 1806. Mr. Dillon's parents were of the Quaker persuasion. James Yates, one of the parties employed by Thomas Penn in 1732 to walk for the land purchased from the Indian sachem, Tedy- usking, was Mr. Dillon's paternal great-grandfather. In 1828 our subject's family removed to Wheeling. Mr. Dillon first attended an academy in Parkersburg, afterward a classical academy in Wheeling. He was received into the Pittsburgh conference in June, 1844, and filled various appointments in Western Virginia, Eastern Ohio and Western Pennsylvania until 1858, when ill health compelled him to ask for a supernumerated relation. He removed from the town of Beaver, where he was then stationed, to the city of Wheeling, where he was employed as clerk in his brother's establishment, and during the eight years he was with his brother he was interested in steamboats. When he came to Coraopolis (then Middletown), in 1869, he found a few Methodists, to whom he preached five years, and worked with a zeal that resulted in the restoration of the charge to conference, the removal of one church edifice to a more eligible site and the erection of a new church in Shousetown. In 1887 he supplied Chapline Street station in the city of Wheeling. Mr. Dillon's first wife was a daughter of Mark and Eleanor Watson, and was born in Middletown, Durham, England, March 23, 1822. They were united in marriage Sept. 10, 1849, in Middletown, this county, where she died May 1, 1858. He had by her four children, two of whom died in infancy; two, F. B. and W. B., grew up to manhood, the latter dying Dec. 29, 1887. Feb. 5, 1862, he was united in marriage with his present wife, Mrs. L. V. Burns, nee Laidley, who was born in West Virginia, and by born had four children: one died in infancy, and Robert, Irene and Henry Harman, now living. Mr. Dillon served two terms as Burgess of Coraopolis. He has been interested in various journals, and is the author of several works (theological and metaphysical), as well as numerous sermons and reviews on different subjects.

Andrew Shane, farmer, postoffice Surgeon, was born in South Fayette township, in 1827. Samuel Shane, Sr., a native of County Down, Ireland, married Elizabeth Campbell, and had two children born to them in Ireland: Catharine and Andrew; they immigrated to America in 1801, their son Andrew dying on the ocean. In this country they had born two more sons: Henry, in 1803, and Samuel, Jr., in 1807. They settled first on Brice's farm, one mile south of Miller's run, purchasing seventy-eight acres of land from David Winters, situated between Miller's and Robinson's runs. Of above named, Samuel, Jr., married Mary Patterson, and died in 1873, the father of four children, Andrew, the subject of this memoir, being the eldest. He was reared in South Fayette township, and educated at the common schools. He has always been a farmer, and now owns one hundred acres of land, acquired by his own industry. He married, in 1851, Elizabeth, daughter of Richard and Mary Ann (Ramsey) Miller, and five children have been born to them, viz.: Richard M., Samuel, Thomas R., John P. and Anna Mary. Mr. Shane is a member of the U. P. Church; politically he is a republican.

John P. Shane, postoffice Nobletown, was born in this county in 1831, on the farm where he now resides, being the original tract of land purchased by his grandfather. With the exception of two and a half years. Mr. Shane has always resided on his present place, engaged in farming. He was married in 1858 to Anna Jane, daughter of Robert and Agnes (Corbett) Campbell, of County Down, Ireland, and by her had seven children, five yet living: Mary Lizzie (a twin of Agnes Jane, who died at the age of twenty-five years), William C., Anna Martha, Maggie L. and Nettie C. Mr. Shane is a member of the U. P. Church; politically a prohibitionist; formerly a republican.

Robert Thompson (deceased) was born in this county, and died here. His father, James, at the close of the revolutionary war, bought one hundred acres of land in Ross township, which he improved and left to his descendants. The Thompsons were of Scotch descent, and democratic in their political views; in religious matters they were strong Presbyterians. James Thompson married Isabella Gilbraith, and seven sons and four daughters were born to them: John, Hugh, James, William, Robert, Andrew, David, Betsey, Mary, Isabella and Margaret J. Of these children Robert Thompson was well known in Shaler township, although a quiet man. He has lived close to nature, and resides on the old homestead. Her parents, James and Catherine (Shaffer) Stewart, were married in 1850, the same year Grandfather James Thompson was married. Mrs. Catherine Thompson had six children: Mary J., James, Alfred, Robert M., Milton (who died in the army) and Adeline V.

Robert Bole, retired, Bellevue, brother of Alexander Bole (whose sketch appears elsewhere), was born Sept. 23, 1817, in County Down, Ireland, son of John and Rose Ann (McWhirk) Bole, who were the parents of ten children, three of whom, Robert, Alexander and Hugh M., came to America. Robert served his apprenticeship in Belfast at the cooper's trade, and on coming to Pittsburgh, in 1849, worked six years for William Teese, whom he bought out at the end of that time. He then carried on large barrel-works on Duquesne way for about twenty years, when he retired from active business, as the Standard Oil company and the county workhouse had nearly ruined his trade. He married, in 1848, Euphemia Kirkpatrick, sister of Allen Kirkpatrick, and four children have been born to them, viz.: Joseph K., in the iron and steel business at Cleveland, Ohio; Robert A., John C. and Mary E. Mr. Bole and family, excepting Mary E., who is a Covenanter, are members of the U. P. Church, of which he has been an elder since 1860. He resided in Allegheny City until 1890, when he moved to his fine home in Bellevue.

William Woods, Jr., undertaker, auctioneer and farmer, Upper St. Clair, was born April 6, 1839, near his present farm; a son of John and Sarah (Robb) Woods, natives of this county, born in 1816 and Nov. 7, 1817, respectively, latter of whom died May 23, 1848. His paternal grandparents were Rev. William and Frances Woods; former born March 6, 1771, ordained pastor of Bethel Church June 28, 1797, continuing until April, 1834, and died Oct. 17, 1834. The subject of this memoir married, Oct. 30, 1863, Mary Agnes Morrow, born in Snowden township Aug. 17, 1839, a daughter of Thomas and Ann (Eshby) Morrow, who were born respectively in Snowden and Upper St. Clair townships. Her father died Oct. 24, 1871, aged sixty-four years, and her mother July 26, 1849, aged thirty-seven years. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Woods: One died in infancy; John E., born Feb. 16, 1872, died March 28, 1875, and William Robb, born June 14, 1868, now in business with his father. For nineteen years after Mr. Woods was married he leased his present farm from his father, but in 1886 his father deeded the place to him. In 1886 he began auctioneering, at which he has been very successful; in 1874 he added the undertaking business, also carrying on the farm, his son assisting him in all his business. Mr. Woods was elected justice of the peace in 1888, and re-elected in 1888. Mr. Woods' father is still living on the old farm near the Bethel Academy. His only brothers, Samuel T. Woods, a very promising young man, served in Co. D, 149th P. V., and was killed at the battle of the Wilderness, May 7, 1864, aged twenty-two years. His body was never recovered, but a monument is erected to his memory in Bethel cemetery bearing the inscription: "I shall appear on the morning of the resurrection."

Sarah F., only sister of the present subject, married Rev. R. I. Evans about the year 1859, and left for Olympia, W. T., as a missionary. In 1862 he died of consumption, leaving her far from home with a little boy, without a single relative; but she in her day of trial took hold of the many promises in behalf of the widow and orphans, and started for home, landing in the fall of 1863. April 24, 1864, her little son, Elliott W. Evans, died, and she was again left to mourn as none but a mother can mourn; but this time she was surrounded by many kind friends. About two years later she married Rev. M. L. Anderson and settled in Orrville, Ohio, where she died at the age of thirty years and six months. "Blessed are they who die in the Lord."

John Hamilton, merchant and druggist, Shousetown, Pa., was born near Wilkinsburg, Allegheny county, Pa., Nov. 30, 1815, a son of George, a farmer, and Eliza (Erwin) Hamilton, natives of Bedford county, Pa. Mrs. Hamilton was a member of the M. E. Church. They had seven children, two living: Alexander Hamilton, who resides at Wilkinsburg, Pa., retired farmer and property-owner, and John. The latter attended school in Pittsburg, and finished his education under the tutelage of the late Hon. Walter H. Lowry. When sixteen years old he began to learn the steamboat-joiner business, serving an apprenticeship of three and a half years; then worked for about a year at journey-work, when he began for himself putting cabins on vessels; later, for five years he was engaged in building houses. In 1846 he opened a general store in Shousetown, which he has since continued. He was first appointed postmaster under the administration of Millard Fillmore, re-appointed under Lincoln, and served for thirty years, until removed by Grover Cleveland. Mr. Hamilton married, in Washington county, in May, 1886, a daughter of John and Angus Donaldson. Mrs. Hamilton died in August, 1871, a member of the Presbyterian Church, and the mother of eight children, five living: Lidee, wife of John W. Cooper, residing at Milledgeville, Pa.; Mary H., wife of Wesley Batenjam, of Pittsburgh; George E., married to Lucinda Chattley, in Milledgeville, Pa.; Sarah A., wife of L. C. McCormack, in Shousetown; John D., married to Mary McBrier, residing at Coropolis. Mr. Hamilton has the leading dry-goods and notion store in Shousetown, and carries some $5,000 worth of stock. He is a member of the M. E. Church; was first a whig, later a republican.

F. Mankedick, farmer, Sturgeon, was born in Prussia in 1834, the youngest of the nine children of William Mankedick. In 1852 he came to Allegheny county, where he was joined in 1854 by his father and the rest of his brothers and sisters. For eighteen years he was engaged in mining and mercantile business in Pittsburgh; for thirteen years he followed huckstering; in 1872 he came to his present location and opened up what is now known as the Star coal-mines. He is recognized as one of the successful business men of Allegheny county. In 1856 Mr. Mankedick married Caroline Kennaug, and has four children living: William, Edward, Matilda and Clara. He superintends the work in his mines and store, and ships his coal to Chicago and Columbus. He is a democrat, and has been postmaster at Sturgeon since 1855.

W. J. Morgan, Glenwood Springs, Colo., was born in Wales, in 1849. His parents, John and Sarah (Hughes) Morgan, had a family of four children, W. J. being the only son. He received his education at the public and engineering schools of Wales, and since early life has been identified with the coal-mining interests, bituminous and anti-bituminous. For six years he was employed by the Great Western Railroad company of Wales, but with that exception has been connected with the coal business since he was nine years old. Ill health caused him to come to America in 1874, and his first experience with the coal-fields here was in the Slope mines in South Fayette township, Allegheny county, Pa. He superintended the opening of these mines to the public, and continued in the capacity of superintendent for five years, and since 1882 has been part owner. He opened and put in operation the Buffalo mines for the Young-hogleny Coal company, limited (being part owner, also, of this company), for two years, and was president of the Pennsylvania Coal company. Mr. Morgan is a practical coal-man, being perfectly familiar with the nature of anthracite coal-mining. Mr. Morgan moved to Bridgeville, Allegheny county, Pa., in 1882, and there resided until June, 1888, when he left for Glenwood Springs, Colo., to fill the position of general superintendent of the Grand River Coal & Coke company. He was married in 1880 to Ella S., daughter of John Nish, of this county, originally from Scotland, and they have two children, Arthur and Mabel. He is a republican.

David Steen, coal-merchant, Putnam, was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1815, a son of William Steen (a farmer) and Rachel (Mickman) Steen. He was left an orphan at the age of three years, but was cared for by an uncle, with whom he remained until twelve years of age. At that time, accompanied by an older sister, he came to America, landing in Philadelphia, where they remained two years. From the Quaker City David came direct to Pittsburgh, in 1829, then to a town having but two principal streets, and here for three years he was employed driving a dray. He then commenced mercantile business at the corner of Washington and Webster streets, where he remained eighteen years. After that he opened a general merchandise store in the country, and continued same four years; was three years engaged in the coal business at Oseola, and in 1857 came to Mansfield and purchased his present house and ten acres of land. He still continues in the business, and by his strict attention and long experience has become a successful operator. He ships direct to the markets on his own cars. Mr. Steen married, in 1840, Mary Dickson, daughter of Thomas Dickson, of Ireland, and seven children were the result of this marriage, five yet living: William, John, Thomas D., James B., Margaret (Mrs. Walker), Rachel (Mrs. Blackmore). Mr. Steen superintends the coal business, ably assisted by his sons. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church; politically a republican.

William John Steen, eldest son of David and Mary (Dickson) Steen, was born Sept. 6, 1841; was educated at the common schools, and was a student at Iron City College, graduating at that institute in 1860. On leaving school he assisted his father in the coal business, taking charge of the books. In 1862 he enlisted in Co. G, 136th P. R., and was in the service of the Union ten months. He returned to Pittsburgh and continued an employee of his father. He married, in 1863, Miss Sarah, daughter of Thomas and Jane Ireland, and five children were born to them, three yet living: Stella, David L. and Wella J. Mr. Steen is now engaged in coal-mining on the property he owns. He employs on an average one hundred men, finding a market for his product at Chicago and the lakes. He has been a resident of Mansfield since 1865; has been burgess, a member of the town council and director of the county poor. He is a Freemason, a member of the G. A. R. and of the Presbyterian Church; politically he is a republican.

Thomas Dickson Steen, second son of David and Mary (Dickson) Steen, was born in 1846, in Pittsburgh. He was married, in 1868, to Amelia Porter Ochener, and five children were born to them: Ella Blanche Steen (deceased), Mary Elizabeth Steen, Thomas Dickson Steen, Jr., James Prestley Steen (deceased) and David Cameron Steen. Mr. Steen is now superintendent of his father's mines, which position he faithfully fills, and is familiar with all the details of the work. He served as justice of the peace for five years, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church; politically he is a republican.

James B. Steen, third son of David and Mary (Dickson) Steen, was born in 1850, in Pittsburgh. He was educated at the public schools and the Iron City Business College, from which he graduated in 1865. Like his father, he has been prominently identified with the coal business, and was for eighteen months in Canada with Maj. J. H. Dickson, engaged in smelting. His office is now in Pittsburgh, where he finds a market for coal coming from his father's mines. Mr. Steen has been twice married; first in 1872, to Emma Lapp, daughter of James C. Lapp, who bore him one child—Edna. His second marriage was with Jennie Callahan, by whom he has two children—Mary and Martetta. Mr. Steen is a Freemason and a member of the Elks.

B. B. McDowell, merchant, Mansfield Valley, was born in the town of Mansfield, Allegheny county, Pa., in 1833. His father, Robert, by trade a carpenter, came from Lancaster county, Pa., at an early day, and settled in Allegheny county, afterward locating in Mansfield. He married Frances Lee, and by her had three sons and three daughters, of whom B. B. is the eldest son. The father died in 1849, aged fifty-five years. The subject of this memoir was educated at the common schools, and in 1861 enlisted in Company E, 61st Pennsylvania regiment, serving for three years; was in the fiercest battles of the war. He returned to Mansfield in 1864, and soon afterward went to the oil-country, where he remained two years.
HE AGAIN RETURNED TO ALLEGHENY COUNTY, AND FOR TWENTY-ONE YEARS WAS EMPLOYED AS MINEBOSS FOR THE MANSFIELD COAL & COKE COMPANY. HE MARRIED, IN 1868, ADALINE REMMEL, DAUGHTER OF PETER REMMEL, OF THIS COUNTY, AND THEY HAVE FOUR CHILDREN: ELLA BELL (BORN JAN. 22, 1870), MAGGIE JANE (BORN JULY 27, 1871), KATE (BORN AUG. 11, 1873) AND NATHAN HOBURD (BORN DEC. 14, 1888). MR. MCDOWELL HAS ALSO BEEN ENGAGED IN MERCANTILE BUSINESS SINCE 1883, AND SINCE HIS RETIREMENT FROM THE MINERS HAS GIVEN THE STORE HIS UNDIVIDED ATTENTION. HE IS A MEMBER OF THE METHODIST CHURCH, AND OF THE LOYAL LEGION; HE IS A REPUBLICAN.

JOHN C. MICHAEL. THE MICHAEL FAMILY MAY BE MENTIONED AMONG THE EARLY SETTLERS OF ALLEGHENY COUNTY. THE PIONEER WAS JOHN MICHAEL, WHO CAME FROM MARYLAND, AND WAS THE FATHER OF TWO SONS AND FOUR Daughters, OF WHOM JOHN, THE YOUNGEST, BORN IN 1769, WAS EIGHTEEN YEARS OF AGE WHEN HE CAME TO ALLEGHENY COUNTY. HE WAS MARRIED TO MARY MURPHY; SHE DIED IN 1800. HE MARRIED NANCY WALKER, DAUGHTER OF WILLIAM WALKER, OF THIS COUNTY, AND TO THEM WERE BORN TWO SONS AND SEVEN Daughters. JOHN SETTLED IN ROBINSON TOWNSHIP, WHERE HE TOOK UP A LARGE TRACT OF LAND, AND REMAINED UNTIL HIS DEATH. JOHN, NOW LIVING IN NORTH FAYETTE TOWNSHIP, OWNS 156 ACRES OF LAND, ONE-HALF OF A TRACT ORIGINALLY BOUGHT BY WILLIAM WALKER. JOHN WAS MARRIED IN 1849 TO ELIZA JANE, DAUGHTER OF JOSEPH CALHOUN, OF BEAVER COUNTY, AND FOUR CHILDREN, ALL LIVING, WERE BORN TO THEM: NANCY (MRS. LOGAN), FLORA (MRS. STURGEON), MAUD AND JOHN C., AT HOME. JOHN C., THE ONLY SON BORN TO HIS PARENTS, IS NOW SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BEECHMONT COAL-MINES, A VALUABLE PROPERTY SITUATED ON THE PITTSBURG, CHARTERS & YOUGHLIN RAILROAD, AND WAS FIRST OPERATED IN 1882. AFTER CHANGING HANDS, AND HAVING BEEN UNSUCCESSFULLY OPERATED, MR. MICHAEL AND HIS BROTHER-IN-LAW TOOK CHARGE OF THE WORKS, WHICH NOW BID FAIR TO BECOME A SUCCESS. MR. MICHAEL IS A MEMBER OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH; POLITICALLY A DEMOCRAT.

JOHN MICHAEL, POSTOFFICE IMPERIAL, WAS BORN IN 1842, A SON OF JOHN AND ANN (MCMILLIN) MICHAEL. HE WAS EDUCATED AT THE COMMON SCHOOLS, HAS FOLLOWED FARMING AND STOCK-DEALING, AND EXCEPT ONE YEAR SPENT IN CALIFORNIA HAS ALWAYS RESIDED IN ALLEGHENY COUNTY. HE MARRIED, IN 1863, ANNA ELIZABETH WOOD, DAUGHTER OF CAPT. SAMUEL WOOD, A PROMINENT CITIZEN OF THIS COUNTY, AND SEVEN CHILDREN HAVE BLESSED THEIR UNION: NORA (MRS. ARMOUR), SAMUEL, JOHN, IDA, MAUD, BLANCHE AND ELIZA. MR. MICHAEL PURCHASED HIS PRESENT FARM OF 192 ACRES IN 1872, NEARLY ALL OF WHICH IS UNDER CULTIVATION. HE HAS BEEN SCHOOL DIRECTOR SIX YEARS, AND HAS SERVED AS SUPERVISOR. HE WAS THE FIRST REPUBLICAN IN THE MICHAEL FAMILY.

JAMES ROBINSON, FARMER, POSTOFFICE IMPERIAL, WAS BORN IN ROBINSON TOWNSHIP, THIS COUNTY, IN 1828. HIS FATHER, GEORGE ROBINSON, A FARMER, MARRIED SUSAN BROWN, A NATIVE OF NEW YORK, WHO BECAME THE MOTHER OF THREE SONS AND THREE Daughters. JAMES ROBINSON WAS EDUCATED IN HIS NATIVE TOWNSHIP, WHERE HE REMAINED UNTIL 1875, THEN CAME TO NORTH FAYETTE TOWNSHIP AND PURCHASED HIS PRESENT FARM OF 145 ACRES. HE MARRIED, IN 1870, SARAH ANNA, DAUGHTER OF JOHN MCMICHAEL, OF THIS COUNTY, AND FOUR CHILDREN, SARAH ANNA, JAMES CLARE, SYLVIA EDNA AND ZULU MADGE, HAVE BLESSED THEIR UNION. MR. ROBINSON AND FAMILY ARE MEMBERS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH; HE IS A DEMOCRAT.

HENRY POELLOT, WAGON-MAUNUFACTURER, BRIDGEVILLE, IS A NATIVE OF IRELAND, BORN IN 1830, THE YOUNGEST SON OF THE NINE CHILDREN OF JOHN S. AND BARBARA (SCHMIDT) POELLOT. AT THE AGE OF THIRTEEN HE LEARNED THE WAGONMAKER'S TRADE, SERVING AN APPRENTICESHIP OF THREE YEARS, AND IN COMPANY WITH A BROTHER CAME TO AMERICA IN 1847. SOON AFTER HIS ARRIVAL HE LOCATED IN PITTSBURGH, AND THERE REMAINED UNTIL 1852; HE CAME TO BRIDGEVILLE IN 1852, WHERE HE Has BEEN ENGAGED IN BUSINESS FOR MANY YEARS. HE MARRIED LOUISA, DAUGHTER OF LOUIS AND ELIZABETH (ASS) TRAX, AND TEN CHILDREN WERE BORN TO THEM, EIGHT LIVING: JOHN LEWIS, WILLIAM H., GEORGE W., MARY BELLA, LOUISA DELLA (MRS. PATTON), WALTER T., NELLIE ELNORA AND CORDELIA IRENE. MR. POELLOT SUPERINTENDS THE WORK IN HIS SHOPS, IS輔 BY HIS SONS, AND HAS THROUGH HIS OWN PERSONAL AMBITION SECURED WHAT HE OWNS TO-DAY. HE HAS BEEN SCHOOL DIRECTOR FIFTEEN YEARS, AND HAS BEEN AN ELDER IN THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH ALONG THE SAME TIME OF TIME; HE IS A PROHIBITIONIST.

C. P. MAYER, MERCHANT, BRIDGEVILLE, WAS BORN IN THIS COUNTY IN 1857, FOURTH SON OF THE NINE CHILDREN OF CASPER AND CATHERINE (DECKER) MAYER. CASPER MAYER, A COAL-MINER, CAME TO AMERICA IN 1852, FOLLOWED HIS OCCUPATION FOR MANY YEARS, BUT HAS NOW RETIRED FROM ACTIVE LABOR, AND WITH HIS WIFE RESIDES IN MILLIN TOWNSHIP. THE SUBJECT OF THIS SKETCH WORKED IN THE MINES FROM THE AGE OF TWELVE YEARS, AND IS, AND HAS BEEN SINCE 1880, SUPERINTENDENT OF THE MINES FOR HIS FATHER-IN-LAW, MR. SCHURTE. HE LOCATED AT BRIDGEVILLE IN 1879, AND IN 1880 MARRIED PHILOMENA, DAUGHTER OF A. J. SCHURTE, A SUCCESSFUL COAL-DEALER OF THIS COUNTY, AND TWO CHILDREN HAVE BEEN BORN TO THEM: FRANK C. AND CHARLES M. MR. MAYER HAS BEEN IN HIS PRESENT BUSINESS SINCE 1886, UNDER THE FIRM NAME OF MAYER & SCHURTE. HE WAS APPOINTED POSTMASTER IN 1887; IS A MEMBER OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH; POLITICALLY A DEMOCRAT.

ROBERT DAVID ELWOOD, MERCHANT, VERONA, WAS BORN IN APOLLO, ARMSTRONG COUNTY, PA., APRIL 17, 1836. HIS GRANDFATHER, WILLIAM ELWOOD, OF IRISH DESCENT, WAS AN EARLY SETTLER ON TURTLE CREEK, WESTMORELAND COUNTY. JOHN, SON OF WILLIAM, AND A BUILDER BY TRADE, MARRIED MARY PATTISON, A NATIVE OF PHILADELPHIA, AND SETTLED IN APOLLO, WHERE HE DIED IN 1872, AT THE AGE OF SEVENTY-SEVEN; HIS WIDOW DIED IN 1853, AT THE AGE OF SEVENTY-FIVE. ALTHOUGH HIS ANCESTORS WERE PRESBYTERIANS, JOHN ELWOOD ASSOCIATED WITH THE METHODIST CHURCH.
R. D. Elwood was reared in his native village, and received a common-school education. At the age of twenty he went west, and spent two years in Kansas; and, returning, ran a packet three years on the Pennsylvania canal. Sept. 16, 1861, he was enrolled in Co. 1, 78th P. V., and was elected second lieutenant. Before the company was mustered into the United States service he was promoted to captain. This regiment was attached to the Army of the Cumberland, and among other engagements took part in the battle of Stone river. After being mustered out of service at the close of the war, Capt. Elwood became a member of the firm of Elwood Brothers, merchants at Apollo, and flour-manufacturers at Leechburg. On the dissolution of the firm, in 1872, the grain-dealing firm of Elwood & McCracken was established in Pittsburgh, known since 1889 as R. D. Elwood & Co. Capt. Elwood is also interested in the Iron City mills. He was the first president of the Pittsburgh Grain and Flour Exchange. In 1873 Capt. Elwood purchased property adjoining Verona borough, in Penn township, where he has since resided. He married, in 1866, Mary Lewellyn, who was born in Apollo, daughter of John and Rebecca (Hawkins) Lewellyn, and they have three sons: Thomas Jefferson, John Franklin and Robert David. The parents are both active members of the M. E. Church.

Michael O’Keefe, merchant, Putnam, was born in County Kerry, Ireland, in 1833, the eldest of the six children of John and Mary (Dillon) O’Keefe, also natives of that county. John O’Keefe, who was a farmer, immigrated to America with his family in 1852, landing in New York; thence came to Pittsburgh, and died at a ripe old age, in 1889; his wife died in 1846. Michael O’Keefe was educated under the national school system of Ireland. Being born on a farm, it was his desire to follow agricultural pursuits, as his father had done, but owing to circumstances he never engaged in the occupation of his choice. For many years he was employed in Pittsburgh, and by industry and application won the confidence of his employers. He was several times promoted, and held positions of trust. He came to Mansfield in 1872 for the purpose of buying a farm, but failing in this purchase, he purchased the Chartiers hotel. In 1884 he erected a brick block in Chartiers with a frontage of 106 feet by 60 deep, three stories high, the finest set of buildings in the borough. Mr. O’Keefe married, in 1858, Mary O’Donnell, daughter of Patrick O’Donnell, of Ireland, and seven children have been born to them, all of whom are living: Mary, Kate, John, Patrick, Maggie, Ellen and Michael, Jr. Mr. O’Keefe has been a member of the council, and has served in many other official positions. In religion he is Catholic; in politics a democrat.

James R. Byers, farmer, postoffice Mechanic, Bridgeville, was born in this county in 1831, a son of Simon and Elizabeth (Kerr) Couch, to whom were born ten children, two of whom are living. William, the grandfather of Joseph, also a native of this county, married Elizabeth Whitmore, of German descent, and they had twelve children, of whom Simon was the second son. William was the son of Joseph, and Joseph the son of Nathaniel, the pioneer of the family in Allegheny county, who took up one hundred acres of land in what is now known as Snowden township. He thence built a fort, and resided until his death. The family have been mechanics and farmers. Joseph died in 1857, aged eighty-eight years; William in 1841, aged seventy, and Simon in 1878, Alexander and Nancy (Barnes) Burns, early settlers of Findlay township. John Byers was a son of John Byers, who settled with his family in Findlay township, and whose father was a soldier in wars anterior to the Revolution. John and Nancy (Burns) Byers were Presbyterians. They had nine children, six now living: Nancy (widow of Andrew Vance), Margaret, John D., Mary (wife of William Burns), James R. and Amanda (wife of George McMinn). James R. married, Nov. 4, 1852, Margaret Wilson, a daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Swearingen) Wilson. Mrs. Byers died July 14, 1863, the mother of two children—Agnes and John W. (who married Ida Burns). Mr. Byers ranks among our leading citizens, has held various local offices. In 1885 he was elected justice of the peace, and was re-elected in 1888. He owns a fine farm of 140 acres.

James Meloney, farmer, postoffice Industrial, was born on the farm where he now resides Dec. 8, 1848, a son of Samuel and Jane (Eaton) Meloney, natives of Findlay township. Latter daughter of George Eaton, and Margaret (wife of Samuel) Meloney was a son of Samuel, Sr., and Nancy (Berry) Meloney, early settlers and landowners of Findlay township, and natives, respectively, of Ireland and New Jersey. Samuel, Sr., a weaver by trade, and who was a man of meaus, purchased a large tract of land in Findlay township. He and his wife were Presbyterians. Samuel and Jane (Eaton) Meloney settled on the farm now owned by their son James, and there lived and died in the faith of the Presbyterian Church. They had nine children, two of whom are yet living: Amanda (wife of R. N. Planean, residing at Homestead, Allegheny county) and James. The latter has been twice married, first in August, 1899, to Mary J. Morrison, a native of Washington county. Paul, a daughter, of David and Emma Meloney, died in 1876, a member of the Presbyterian Church, and the mother of two daughters: Ora B. and Susie A. Mr. Meloney married, in November, 1881, Lou Morrison, a sister of his first wife. He owns a farm of 122 acres, and has in his possession the old deed given to his grandfather by one Charles Morgan, and which included this farm and a part of the one now owned by M. V. Hays.

Joseph Couch, mechanic, Bridgeville, was born in this county in 1831, a son of John and Nancy (Burns) Byers. The latter was a daughter of aged seventy-two. Since the first settlement in this county by Nathaniel Couch, his descendants have all been born and reared and have lived within a radius of five miles. They were all imbued with a spirit of patriotism; Nathaniel fought with Braddock at the latter's defeat; he was in the Virginia Rifles under Washington. William was in the war of 1812 under Gen. W. H. Harrison, and participated in his Canada campaign. The subject of this memoir, named in honor of his great-grandfather, was born near his present home in Upper St. Clair township, learned the millwright's trade of his father, and has followed it through life. He married, in 1850, Sarah, daughter of John Rankin, of Ireland, and ten children were born to them, seven yet living: Harriet, Sallie (Mrs. McMillin), Simon, Josephine (Mrs. Reed), Harry F., Wesley and Charles G. Mr. Couch enlisted in 1861 in Co. H, 62d P. V., serving for three years; was with the Army of the Potomac, participating in all its battles, and was honorably discharged at Pittsburgh. He is a member of the G. A. R.; politically a republican.

Johnston A. Conner, farmer, postoffice Upper St. Clair, was born in Upper St. Clair township in 1830. His grandfather, John Conner, who was of Irish parentage, purchased, about 1794, from the government 256 acres of land for $13. 2s. 6d., the tract being then in Washington county, now in Upper St. Clair township. He married Elizabeth Adams, and by her had nine children. John, the fourth son, born in 1798 and died in 1873, married Sarah Ann, daughter of William Adams, and became the father of eleven children, six of whom are now living. John was a carpenter by trade, but later in life was a schoolteacher. Johnston A., the subject of this sketch, was reared on the farm he now owns, and has devoted his time chiefly to agriculture. He married, in 1857, Nancy, daughter of William Ramsey, of this county, and five children blessed their union: William W., Josiah A., Sarah A., Mary Emma and George M. Mr. Conner now owns forty-two acres of land, part of the tract purchased by his grandfather. He has served on the school board; is a member of the Presbyterian Church; politically a republican. He enlisted, in 1863, in Co. K, 76th P. V., and May 7, 1864, he received a severe wound in his left foot, confining him to hospital for one year and thirteen days.

James W. Stewart, farmer, postoffice Library, was born Jan. 29, 1843, on the farm where he now resides, a son of William and Frances (Rowland) Stewart. His father was born on the same farm in 1798, and on reaching maturity started a gristmill, which he operated about fifty years personally, afterward employing a miller. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and died at his home at the age of seventy, unmarried. His mother, Frances, was born at Castle Shannon in 1810, and died in February, 1888. James W. received his education in the common schools here and at Bethel Academy, and graduated from Duff's College, Pittsburgh, Feb. 3, 1865. He married, Dec. 23, 1869, Sarah, daughter of Josiah and Abigail (Hanna) Woods, and born in Snowden (now Bethel) township. She was a granddaughter of Rev. William Woods, of Snowden township. Her father was a native of Bethel township and her mother of Bridgeville, this county. The father of our subject bought land here when it was worth about ten to thirty dollars per acre, securing about four hundred acres. After his marriage, in 1869, James W. began farming for himself, and has since carried on the old place with good success. Six children have been born to them, as follows: Willis Woods, William Joseph, Sarah Frances, Birdie A., Edna E., and James Lester. All the family save the three last named are members of the Baptist Church. Mr. Stewart's uncle on his mother's side, James Rowland, was a minister, and died at Mansfield, Ohio. Another uncle, Varner Rowland, was treasurer of Allegheny county.

Mr. Stewart had seven brothers and sisters, he being next to the youngest. The eldest, Fannie, died at the age of three years; Jordan graduated at Washington College and at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, practiced medicine near Pittsburgh and Norristown, then in Western New York, returned home in 1860, and shortly after died, at the age of thirty-four years; Rowland graduated at Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Pa., about 1848, went to Natchez, Miss., became a teacher in the public schools, and died of yellow fever in 1850, at the age of twenty-one years; Elizabeth G. was the wife of the late Alfred C. Wilson, of Hazelwood, this county; Marie L. married Frederick W. Cooper, and died about 1864; Caroline died in 1869; Josephine resides in Allegheny, and Willis Fremont died at Pittsburgh in 1871.

Jacob F. Ferree, retired farmer, postoffice Coraopolis, was born Feb. 24, 1824, on the old homestead at Coraopolis. His grandfather, Jacob Ferree, a Huguenot, born in France, came to Lancaster county, Pa., he was twice married, and by his first wife, whom he married in France, he had three sons: Joel, a colonel in the war of 1812; Benjamin and Jacob; and two daughters, who died young. After the death of his first wife he married Alice Powell, by whom he had four sons and three daughters: Isaac, Mary, Lavina, Jacob, Olive and William P. Jacob Ferree, Sr., moved from Lancaster county to the mouth of Peters creek, Allegheny county, and in 1800 purchased 330 acres of land where Coraopolis now stands. In the fall of that year he, with his sons, built a house, and following spring his family moved here. On the day after their arrival Joel Ferree, a brother of Jacob, Sr., came here and went up on the hill back of the house to kill a deer, and soon called to his brother to bring up a horse, saying that he had killed a deer. On arriving with the horse, a few moments later, Jacob found the dead body of his brother, who had in the meantime been killed and scalped by the Indians. Jacob Ferree died here in 1807, aged fifty-seven years. He was a powder manufacturer and gunsmith, and it is said was the first to manufacture powder east of the Alleghenies. William F. Ferree, youngest son of Jacob, Sr., and Alice (Powell) Ferree, was born at the mouth of Peters creek, and was but four years old when his parents moved to the old farm at Coraopolis, where he lived and died. He married Mary Stoddard, and they had five sons and two daughters: Jacob F.; Margaret E., wife of Andrew Shafer; Robert S., George M., William K. (deceased), who was a soldier in the civil war and died from exposure; Sanford H., of New Bedford, Pa., and Mary O., married to R. B. Young. Jacob F. Ferree married, March 29, 1849, Nancy Phillips, who was born in Robinson township, daughter of William and Susannah (Neely) Phillips. He settled on a part of the old farm, where he has since remained. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church. They have following named children: John W., a merchant in Allegheny Pa.; Mary J., wife of James McCague; William A., farmer, at Coraopolis; Robert B., M. D., in Allegheny, Pa.; Sarah L. and Lily E., at home. Mr. Ferree has held various local offices of trust, was elected justice of the peace in 1854, and is now auditor for the borough of Coraopolis; has also been school director and supervisor.

Robert S. Ferree, farmer, postoffice Coraopolis, was born in the house in which he now resides, in January, 1829, the second son of William P. and Mary (Stoddard) Ferree. He married, December 4, 1862, Elizabeth Woods, who was born in Snowden township, daughter of Joseph and Abigail (Hannah) Woods. Mr. and Mrs. Ferree are members of Forest Grove Presbyterian Church. They had a family of six children, four yet living, residing in Allegheny and Allegheny county.

William Orr, farmer, postoffice Upper St. Clair, was born in Allegheny county in 1826. His father, William Orr, came to America from County Antrim, Ireland, in 1819, and settled in Westmoreland county, where he remained a short time; then moved to Upper St. Clair township, this county, where he remained many years; then moved to Lee county, Iowa, and there he died. He was always a farmer. He married Isabella Wallace, also a native of Ireland, and by her had six children, three of whom are now living. Our subject was born and reared in Upper St. Clair township, his father disposing all his life, and since 1857 has resided on his present farm, which contains 130 acres. William Orr married, in 1857, Harriet Myers, and seven children were born to them, six now living: Margarette Isabella, at home; Eliza Jane, now Mrs. R. F. Means, of Summit county, Ohio; Robert Elmer, Ella Lo- retta, James Albert and Ida Mary, at home. William Orr is a member of Bethel Presbyterian Church; has been school director seven years; politically he is a republican.

Michael Mitchell (deceased) was born in this country, in 1795, and died in 1846. He was the son of Amos and Mary (Heelman) Mitchell, who had five sons and two daughters. Amos was a soldier in the Revolution, and at the memorable defeat of Bradock received a musket-ball in his wrist. After the war he moved to Ohio, where he purchased a farm and resided until his death. Michael Mitchell married, in 1814, in Pittsburgh (then a town of log huts), Margaret, daughter of Thomas and Diana (Piatt) Thornberg. The Thornberg family were among the earliest settlers in Collier township, and Mr. Mitchell resided on the farm inherited by his wife, and which originally contained four hundred acres. Born to Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell were fifteen children, seven of whom are now living: Amos, Joseph, Samuel, Rebecca, Margaret, Elizabeth and Lewis D. Mrs. Mitchell is yet living, a lady of ninety-two years. The family are members of the U. P. Church.

Joseph McKown, retired, Woodsville, was born in 1824, seventh of the nine children born to Samuel McKown. He was educated in the public schools, and reared on a farm, the pursuits of which he has followed all his life. In 1872 he married Elizabeth Chess, daughter of John and Mary (Middleworth) Chess. Mr. McKown is numbered among the leading citizens of Collier township. He was two years clerk in the county treasurer's office, and is now school director. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church; politically a democrat.

Joseph E. Hanna, farmer, postoffice Bridgeville, was born in Allegheny county, Pa., in 1842. In 1801 John Hanna, a native of Chester county, Pennsylvania, came to Allegheny county and took up a quarter-section of land at the mouth of Miller's run, and followed farming until his death, in 1850. He married Jane Guthery, of Lancaster county, Pa., and by her had four children. William, their only son, married Mary Ann McCready, who bore him six children, of whom Joseph E. is the youngest. The father died in 1876, aged sixty-five years. Joseph E. was educated at the common schools, and has always been a farmer. He married, in 1879, Mary, daughter of James and Eliza Davis, of this county, and five children have been born to them: Edwin, Edith Mary, Joseph, Alice and Della. Mr. Hanna now resides on the farm which was originally the property of Mr. Stewart; it is richly underlaid with coal, and is in a high state of cultivation. Mr. Hanna is a republican, has served as school director, and is at present justice of the peace.

Samuel Fry (deceased) was born in Franklin township, Westmoreland county, a son of Jacob Fry, who came from Holland to Pennsylvania about ninety years ago. Jacob, who was a baker, settled on a farm in Franklin, where Samuel was reared. The latter married Susannah, daughter of Jacob and Catherine Cline, of Eastern Pennsylvania, and to them were born Jacob C., Zephaniah, Mary M. (Lewis), James (a mute), Samuel Z., John M., Annie E., Sarah Alice and Joseph H. In 1853 Mr. Fry located in Penn township, where he died in 1881, in his sixty-first year. His widow and most of his children reside on the farm where he located when he came here. He and his wife formerly belonged to the Reformed Church, but afterward joined the Presbyterian, in which faith they reared their children. Mrs. Fry was sixty-one years old June 22, 1888.

William Francis Johnston (deceased) was born March 8, 1830, in what was then Wilkins (now Penn) township. His grandfather, Charles Johnston, came from Ireland, and about 1815 bought a large tract of land along the northern turnpike. His son, William, born in Ireland, married Sarah Morrow, a native of Penn, and to them was born the subject of this sketch. William Johnston was a member of Beulah Presbyterian Church, and served as justice of the peace by appointment. He died of cancer in the stomach April 5, 1887, aged forty years. His widow died of cancer in the breast when a little over fifty years of age. William F. Johnston was reared on the farm, and attended Jefferson school. Nov. 1, 1866, he married Angeline Wilson, born in Penn, daughter of George and Mary (Morrow) Wilson, also natives of Penn township. He remained on the farm inherited from his father until 1886, when he opened a store between Mt. Hope and Hebron. He had formerly been employed largely at civil engineering, but was forced to give up active labor through the effects of a fever, which injured his constitution. He died of consumption March 3, 1887, a member of Hebron U. P. Church. He was a democrat, and served three years as assessor.

Michael McDermott, retailed, Mansfield Valley, is a native of Ireland, and came to America in 1843. He was a blacksmith by trade and followed it during life. He married Julia Norton and reared a family of five children: Michael, Mary, Bridget, Bernard and Patrick. Bernard, the second son, has been engaged in the dry-goods and grocery business since youth, which he still successfully carries on under the firm name of McDermott Brothers, the firm consisting of Michael, Bernard and Patrick. Michael and Patrick are engaged in the livery and undertaking business, the firm name P. McDermott.

Bridget, the second daughter, married, in 1877, Henry Henney, of Allegheny City, and they have five children: Bernard, Julia, Michael, Patrick and Mary. Bernard, the second son, married, in 1896, Mary Jane Portman, daughter of Peter Portman of Green Tree borough, and they have two children: Patrick Laurence and Mary Agness. The McDermott brothers rank among the leading business people of the place. The family are members of the Catholic Church. The brothers are democrats.

Robert Christy, druggist, postoffice Mansfield Valley, was born in Allegheny county, Pa., in 1844. Robert Christy, his grandfather, was for many years an alderman (who were then appointed by the governor) in the city of Pittsburgh. He married Anna Gilchrist, and six daughters and two sons were born to them. Of these James Monroe was the eldest, born in 1818; at twenty-one he commenced the study of law, and was admitted to the bar in 1842. From that age up to the present time he has been a member of the Allegheny county bar. He was elected city treasurer in January, 1847, which office he resigned in August, 1847, to become treasurer of the Pittsburgh Gas company, which office he resigned in 1865. He married Miss E. E. Jones, of Pittsburgh, and they became the parents of ten children, six of whom are living, Robert, whose name heads this sketch, being the only son. He was educated at the common schools and Western University. In 1858 he commenced the study of pharmacy, and since that date has followed the drug business. In 1871 he came to Mansfield, where he is now living. Mr. Christy married, in 1869, Lydia S. Brown, daughter of Mansfield B. and Jane Brown, and eight children (seven of whom are living) blessed their union: Jennie B., Ella E., Robert (deceased), Lydia B., Mary Hays, Mansfield B., Melzina and James Monroe. Mr. Christy is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and of the Presbyterian Church; he is a republican.

H. Elliott McBride, farmer, postoffice Cliff Mine. Henry McBride, in company with Samuel Jeffry, a neighbor, immigrated to Western Pennsylvania, and took up from the government a large tract of land now located in North Fayette township. This pioneer was a native of Pennsylvania, and remained in Allegheny county until his death. One son and two daughters were born to him. Archibald, the son, was born in Maryland, and was quite young when his parents came to Allegheny county. He married Nancy Elliott, and by her had six sons and three daughters. Henry, the eldest son, was born in 1801, and became a farmer. He married Jane, daughter of James Elliott and granddaughter of George Elliott, an early pioneer and a native of Scotland. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. McBride, of whom two sons are now living. H. Elliott McBride was born and reared on the farm he now owns, and which was formerly the property of his great-grandfather, George Elliott, who purchased it in 1783. He married, in 1874, Christiana, daughter of Matthew and Christiana (Allison) Johnston (both deceased), natives of Scotland, and two children, Clara Augusta and Alexander Elliott, were born to them. Mr. McBride is a stockholder in the Oakdale Academy, a member of the Presbyterian Church, politically a republican. Although a farmer, he devotes a considerable... portion of his time to literary work. He is a contributor to several papers and magazines and has written a number of dialog books and amateur plays.

Jacob Johnston (deceased) was born in 1816, a son of Andrew and Elizabeth (Guy) Johnston, of Allegheny county. Mr. Johnston was reared on a farm, educated at the common schools, and became a prominent and well-to-do farmer, owning two tracts of land. He married, in 1847, Mary Guy, daughter of Josiah and Margaret (Stewart) Guy, and four children blessed their union, three of whom are now living: Maggie E., Lizzie and William Guy. Mr. Johnston died in 1886. The Johnston and Guy families have long been connected with the Presbyterian Church, and have always taken a prominent part in that denomination, as elders, etc.

Charles Bauer (deceased) was born at Boedingen, Frankfort, Germany, in 1820. He married, in 1847, Dorothea Nauman (who was born at the same place in 1827), and at once set out for America. Mr. Bauer was the son of a large farmer, and always followed agriculture. For several years he dwelt at Roux, but in 1866 purchased the property now occupied by his widow. Before the house thereon was finished he passed away from earth. He early became a citizen, and always supported the republican party. The family is associated with the E. L. Church. The children are Charles, in East Liberty; Henry, in East Liverpool, Ohio; Frederick, in Wilkinsburg; Minnie (Mrs. William Schwere), in Penn; Louis, at home; Mary (wife of John Kipp, in Verona); Dora, at home; John, in Pittsburgh. Henry and Louis had each a twin brother who died in infancy. The name is usually spelled Bower by the sons.

Francis Wilson, farmer, postoffice White Ash, is a grandson of Thomas Wilson, who emigrated from Ireland to America in 1767 and three years later built the first cabin in Penn—then part of Pitt—township. Here he cleared land, but was obliged to leave it on account of Indian hostilities about the time of the Declaration of Independence. For seven years he remained at Pittsburgh without seeing his land, and while there his son George, father of Francis, was born, in 1779. After peace was proclaimed with Great Britain he returned to his farm, and remained until his death, in 1825, when he was eighty-four years old. He was an elder in Beulah Presbyterian Church, and collected the tax when Penn was a part of Pitt township, Westmoreland county. His widow died in 1832, aged ninety-eight. They had seven children, three of whom were born in Ireland: Mary (Wakefield), Betsey (Shaw), James, William (deceased) and George. Thomas was killed by a runaway team when a boy, but the others lived to good ages. George remained on the home farm, and was a member of the same church as his father. He was a democrat, and served as overseer of the poor. He married Mary Morrow, born in Baltimore, a daughter of Henry Morrow. George Wilson died July 14, 1850; his widow in 1865, at the age of eighty. Their children are Elizabeth (Brennan), Francis, Henry Morrow, Nancy (Swallow), Jane (Duff), Sarah (Donaldson), Mary (deceased) and Thomas. Francis Wilson was born in October, 1812, and like his father has always lived on the home farm. In 1858 he built the brick residence he now occupies, on the site of the original log cabin. In 1860 he married Elizabeth May, born in Fairview, a daughter of Robert and Mary M. (Duff) May, the former a native of Ireland, the latter of this county. Mr. Wilson has two sons: Francis Mirvin and George Ellis. He is a member of Hebron U. P. Church; politically he has always been a democrat, has held every township office except constable, and has been justice of the peace twenty-one years.

P. H. Stevenson, wool-buyer and farmer, postoffice Moon, was born on the old homestead in Moon township, April 4, 1823, a son of John and Nancy (Hooper) Stevenson, members of the Presbyterian Church. The former built the first mill at Moon, in 1826, and at his death, in 1854, at the age of seventy-two years, he and his sons owned and operated four steam grist- and saw-mills. He was also a large landowner, was justice of the peace for over forty years, and was also postmaster a number of years. He and his wife had six sons and three daughters: Jane, married to Samuel Scott; Sarah, married to James Montgomery; Samuel, married to Maria Linton; John, married to Jane Ewing; Elizabeth never married; Philip H.; Levi, married to Jane Scott; Andrew, married to Maria Roberts, and Alexander, married to Angeline Finley. Philip H. learned the miller's trade, which he followed until 1851, when he opened the first general store in Moon township, at Moon; five years later he sold out. He has since engaged in buying and shipping wool and looking after his farms. He has been twice married; first to Elizabeth Morgan, daughter of James and Hannah (Strouse) Morgan, and to them was born one child, now deceased. Mrs. Stevenson died in June, 1853, and in March, 1855, Mr. Stevenson married Elizabeth McCormick, a native of Moon township, a daughter of John D. and Nancy (Meeks) McCormick. Mr. and Mrs. Stevenson have two sons—Charles L., attending school, and William J. H., at home—and one daughter, Emma L., wife of J. H. Hamilton, farmer and sheepbreeder in Washington county, Pa. Mr. Stevenson has been twice nominated by the democrats for the state legislature. He was one of the Greeley electors, and was a delegate to the convention of 1888 at St. Louis. He has held the office of justice of the peace for five years and that of school director eighteen years. He and family are members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Stevenson's grandfather, John Stevenson, a Scotch-Irish Presbyterian, was born in Ireland, married Sarah Nye in Scotland, and settled on Mingo creek, Washington county, Pa. The maternal grandparents of Mr. Stevenson were P. H. and Mary (Hill) Hooper, Presbyterians, who came from Scotland and settled at Cross Roads, Washington county, Pa. Mr. Hooper was a tanner and farmer, and one of the first settlers in Washington county; also one of the first settlers in Moon township. He took up six hundred acres of land here, then sent for an old friend, who had come from Scotland, and sold him 160 acres, so as to have him for a neighbor.

George McNall, farmer and breeder of fine stock, postoffice Imperial, was born on the farm where he now resides and which he owns, in Findlay township, this county, July 6, 1814, and is a son of Joseph and Jane (McCullough) McNall, latter of whom was born in Washington county, Pa., daughter of George and Agnes (Gibson) McCullough, who came from Ireland and settled in Wash- ington county. Joseph McNall was born in County Derry, Ireland, a son of James and Eleanor (Wells) McNall, who located near Washington and afterward came to Findlay township, Allegheny county, Pa., where Joseph was a child, and settled on the farm where James H. McNall now resides. Joseph and Jane McNall had two sons and two daughters. The sons, George and James O., reside twelve miles south of Gilman, Ill. George McNall married, May 17, 1843, Sarah Wilson, a daughter of Rev. William and Margaret (Ralston) Wilson, old settlers of Findlay township, and members of the Asso- ciate Church. Mrs. George McNall died in December, 1873, a member of the U. P. Church, and the mother of one son and three daughters: William Wilson (who re- sides with his father, married, in 1870, to Cassie Crawford, of Washington county), Margaret J. (wife of Hon. William Barton, of Findlay township), Lizzie (wife of A. J. Jardine, a merchant of North Star, this county) and Mary (wife of David Crawford, of Washington county). Mr. McNall and family are members of the U. P. Church. He owns 910 acres of land in Findlay town- ship.

William S. Linton, farmer, postoffice Moon, was born on his farm in Findlay town- ship, Jan. 13, 1826, son of John and Nancy (Wright) Linton, natives of Carlisle, Cum- berland county, Pa., and members of the Presbyterian Church. They settled on the farm where their son William S. now resides, in Findlay township, and had a family of six children, of whom William S. is the only one now living. He married, July 1, 1862, Sarah Seaton, who was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., a daughter of John and Jane (Murray) Seaton, former of whom was born in Moon township, this county, a son of John, Sr., and Elizabeth (Hanlon) Seaton. John Seaton, Sr., was born in Wyoming county, Pa., and fled from the Indians with his parents to Moon township at an early date.

Elizabeth (Hanlon) Seaton was born in Ireland, and was a niece of Admiral Hull. Jane (Murray) Seaton was a daughter of John and Fanny (Davis) Murray, natives of Albany, N. Y. Mr. and Mrs. William S. Linton have three children living: William W., Enola S. and L. Orr, all at home. The parents are members of the Presbyterian Church at Sharon. Mr. Linton ranks among the leading farmers and landowners of the county, owning between four hundred and five hundred acres of land in Findlay township. He raises grain and stock, and owns and operates an extensive dairy. He has held various local offices of trust.

John Espy, farmer, postoffice Upper St. Clair, was born in this county in 1826. Thomas Espy, his grandfather, a farmer by occupation and a native of Ireland, emigrated to America, settling in Cumberland county, Pa., where he remained until his death. His son James, about 1805, came to this county, where his two sisters, Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Dunlop, having previously settled, and it was after repeated requests on their part that he consented to come and visit them. Being favorably impressed with Allegheny county, he located on a farm, purchased fifty-six acres in 1806, and for twenty-five years followed agricultural pursuits, at which he was successful, owning at his death some three hundred acres. He married Jane, daughter of William Fife, and nine children were born to them, two of whom now live: John, our subject, and Mrs. McCormick. James died in 1857, aged seventy-seven years; he was for many years a justice of the peace in his township; his wife died in 1851, aged seventy years.

John Espy, whose name heads this sketch, the youngest son born to his parents, was educated at the common schools and Bethel Academy, and has always resided on his present place, engaged in farming. He now owns 110 acres of the original property pur- chased by his father. He married, in 1848, Margaret, daughter of John Smith, of Scott township, who was originally from England, and six children, all now living, were born to them: Maggie S., James M., at home; John S., a physician in Pittsburgh; Glenn H., a druggist in New York; William, a druggist in Pittsburgh, and George M., at home. Mr. Espy has retired from active labor on the farm, the work being success- fully operated under his supervision. He has served as school director fifteen years, and as trustee of the Presbyterian Church twenty-four years; politically he is a repub- lican.

Capt. Thomas Espy (deceased) was born in this county in 1827, the eldest son of James and Jane (Fife) Espy; he was educated at the public schools and followed farming; also successfully operated a gristmill for many years. In 1861, at the breaking out of the rebellion, he formed Co. H of the 63d regi- ment, of which he was made captain. He was mortally wounded at Gaines' Mills, June 27, 1861, was taken prisoner, and died July 6, 1862. His remains were never recovered by his relatives and friends. Capt. Espy married, in 1831, Elizabeth, daughter of Peter and Abigail (Faeut) Hickman, the former an old pioneer of this county; eight children were born to this union: Jane (Mrs. Bowers), Abigail (Mrs. Hultz), Lizzie (Mrs. Santers), Sarah (Mrs. Phillips), Mary A., James, Susan (at home with their mother) and Thomas. James and Thomas died of typhoid fever in 1883. The mother, who is an estimable lady, now seventy-nine years old, has borne heroically the loss of a kind husband, and has always resided on the farm which he owned. She and family are members of the Presbyterian Church.

John Curry, farmer, postoffice Stoops, was born at Middletown, Fayette county, Pa., Aug. 29, 1811, a son of John and Elizabeth (Adams) Curry, farmer, of whom was born in Ireland, was a Scotch-Irish Presbyterian, and went over the year of age to America. The family settled in Chester county, Pa. After he grew up John Curry, Sr., went to Pittsburgh and worked as a foreman in a rolling-mill. He afterward moved to Moon township and purchased the farm now owned by his son. He died at the age of fifty-two years, his wife at the age of ninety. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and the mother of six children, three of whom lived to be men and women: Sarah, who married Andrew McKinley; John, and William, who married Mary McCormick. John Curry, whose name heads this sketch, was two years old when his parents came to Pittsburgh, and fifteen when they moved to Moon township. He was united in marriage Dec. 27, 1838, with Anna Oustott, and they have had six children, four living: Elizabeth, wife of James McCormick, farmer in Moon township; Mary A., widow of John Nickel, and residing near Mansfield, this county; Rachel O., who married George M. Ferris, and resides at Coraopolis, and Jennie M., at home. Mr. and Mrs. Curry are members of the Presbyterian Church at Sharon. They celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding Dec. 27, 1886.

Anthony Henger (deceased) was born April 26, 1824, near Hohenzollern, Germany, and died Aug. 26, 1886, on his farm in Lower St. Clair township. He came to America at the age of nine years with his parents, Clement Henger, a cooper by trade, and Martha (Rabide) Henger, who both died here, aged seventy-six years, respectively. Anthony Henger followed farming, and, although a man of limited education, he was very successful. He was a self-made man, and became one of the leading men in the community where he lived, ever ready to promote educational and church interests. It was he who purchased the ground for St. Joseph's church, and was one of the main workers in building it. He was an officer in the church for many years. He married Ottilia, a native of Germany, daughter of Christian and Ernestine (Hornfech) Goldbach, the latter of whom was a sister of the noted revolutionist, Fred Hornfech. Mrs. Henger is the mother of six children: Mary, Elizabeth, Louise, John, Joseph, and Mrs. Maggie Ward (deceased). Mr. Henger was a democrat.

George Walker, farmer, postoffice Walker's Mills, was born in Franklin county, Pa., in 1819. This family has been connected with Allegheny county since 1836. James Walker came to Collier township in 1838 and settled on his wife's property, now owned by the subject of this sketch. He married Mary, daughter of James and Mary (Walker) Stewart. Robert Walker, grandfather of our subject, by occupation a farmer and fuller, came from Ireland about 1788, and settled in Franklin county, where he died. He married Jane Miller, also of Ireland, by whom he had three sons and five daughters. James, the oldest son, was eight years of age when his parents came to America, and died in 1850, aged seventy years; his wife, Mary, aged fifty-five years. James was a farmer, mechanic and fuller. George Walker, whose name heads this memoir, came to Pittsburgh in 1836, and served an apprenticeship of four years at the hatter's trade, which he never followed, however. He came to his present farm in 1842, and has since resided there. Dec. 15, 1852, he married Margaret Stephen- son, daughter of Johnstion and Catherine Stephenson, and six children were born to them, two of whom are now living: William S. and Margaret Jane. Mr. Walker is assisted in his work on the farm by his son. He has been school director eight years, and is now auditor of the township. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church; politically a republican.

John Crockett Thompson, merchant, Allegheny, was born June 14, 1844, in Donegal, Ireland, son of Rev. Samuel and Fannie (Huston) Thompson. Mrs. Thompson's father, Rev. William Huston, was pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Donegal for forty years, and at his death Rev. Samuel Thompson took charge of that church and one at Ballyshannon for several years, afterward occupying the pulpit at Donegal for forty-four years. He was also superintendent of the national schools of the district, having spent seven years at Glasgow University, where he received the degree of B. A. The grandparents of J. C. Thompson were reared at Belfast, and his grandfather was a stock-broker. Mr. Thompson received his education at home under private tutors, and then served an apprenticeship to the grocery business at Londonderry. At the age of seventeen he went to Wales, and was two years engaged in railroad-building. He then spent five years at the same employment in Belgium and France. In 1868 he came to Allegheny, and carried on a grain and flour business for eight years. He was next in the coal business for the next two years. In 1886 he entered the firm of Edward Klotz & Co., manufacturers and wholesale jobbers in
Mr. Thompson was married in September, 1875, to Sarah E. McIlwain, of Saltsburg, Pa., daughter of William and Nancy (Kerr) McIlwain, and three children, Samuel H., William H. and Mary Helen, have blessed this union. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson are members of Emsworth Presbyterian Church, of which he is a trustee. In 1885 he purchased his present fine residence at Emsworth. He is a member of Tancred Commandery, No. 48, K. T., also of the A. O. U. W. His brother, Rev. Samuel H. Thompson, is a Presbyterian minister at St. Paul, Minn.

J. J. Walker, thoroughbred-stock breeder, P. O. Walker's Mills, is a great-grandson of Gabriel Walker, one of four brothers who emigrated from Scotland to Allegheny county at an early date. He is a son of James Walker, born in 1835. who married, June 24, 1858, Minnie Flinner, daughter of John and Minnie (Shield) Flinner, of Germany. Two children died in infancy. In theWalker family J. J. is the only survivor. He was born and reared on his present farm, which he owns. He has been successful in the dairy business, and keeps only the finest stock. His cows are partly imported, and are of the Holstein-Frisian breed; he also was the first breeder to introduce this famous breed of cattle in this county. He resides on the farm with his mother. He is a member of the First Presbyterian Church, of Noblestown, Pa., and is a democrat.

Joseph Payne, farmer, postoffice Coal Valley, son of James and Hannah (Allison) Payne, was born in Jefferson township, this county, in 1825. His grandfather, Joseph Payne, and his grandmother, Susan (Brown) Payne, were both natives of Fawn township, York county, Pa. The family left York county with the intention of going to Kentucky, but on visiting a cousin in Snowden township, Allegheny county, he was persuaded to locate in the latter county. Previous to his departure from York county he married Susan Brown, and they located in 1795 on the farm now owned by William Lemuel and Milo Curry, in Jefferson township, on Lick run, near Cochran's Mill, a station on the Baltimore railroad. While in York county they had two children born: Easter (the late Mrs. George Cochran, Sr.) and Mary (the late Mrs. Peter Shepler). Benjamin, John, Jane and James were born in Jefferson township. Benjamin married Margaret Cunningham, lived here some years and then removed to Iowa, where they both died; John married Margaret Gass, who survives him; Jane married Jonathan Walker; James married Hannah Allison, and they reared a family of five children: Susan (now a resident of West Elizabeth), William A. (of Jefferson township), Joseph, James and Eliza (who died in 1852). Joseph married, in 1853, Dorcas Theresa, daughter of Samuel Cochran, of Millin township, this county, and located on the farm adjoining the place where he was born and where they still reside. Their children are James H. (who married Eliza Bradshaw, of Jefferson township, their home now being at McKeesport), and Samuel V., Charles B., William W., Hannah G., Susan A., all at home. Mr. and Mrs. Payne are members of the Donegal Presbyterian Church. He has the patent to his place, which dates back to 1785 for one portion, and the other to 1787.

William James Kiddoo, farmer, postoffice Broughton, was born in February, 1839, on the farm he now owns, a son of Samuel and Margaret (Ralston) Kiddoo, former of whom was born on the same farm in 1803, died in January, 1850; latter born in 1810, in Washington county, died in December, 1877. His grandfather, James Kiddoo, who was of Scotch-Irish descent, born in Ireland, located on the same farm in 1797. William's paternal grandfather, Rev. Samuel Ralston, D.D., was pastor of the Monongahela and Mingo churches. He was born in Donegal, Ireland. In 1796, came to this country about 1796, and died in 1851. He married, May 30, 1798, Miss Rachel Furgeson, who was born near Chambersburg, Franklin county, Pa., in 1764, and died in 1827. W. J. Kiddoo was eleven years of age when his father died, and when about sixteen began work for himself. He married, Nov. 18, 1809, Sarah A. Marshall, born at Bethel, June 24, 1843, daughter of Rev. George and Mary (Lee) Marshall, who were born in Union county, Dec. 23, 1806, and Washington county, Nov. 3, 1805, respectively. Rev. George Marshall, D. D., was pastor of Bethel Church, and preached his first sermon there the first Sunday in June, 1822. In 1836 he opened an academy at Bethel, which proved a useful educational institution. He was trustee of Jefferson College and director of the Western Theological Seminary of Allegany.

He died, after forty years of continuous pastorate of Bethel Church, April 30, 1872; his widow died Jan. 15, 1888. Mrs. William J. Kiddoo is a member of Bethel Church. Mr. Kiddoo now owns 120 acres, and carries on general farming.

Robert Lea, retired, Woodville, was born in Scott township, this county, in 1818. His grandfather, William, was a major in the English army, came to America from England about 1775, and died in Upper St. Clair township in 1802. He married Dorothea Nelson, and to them were born four daughters and three sons. Robert, the second son, was born in 1786, and died in 1858. He married, in 1807, Mary Allison, and by her had six sons and two daughters. None of this family are now living, the subject of this memoir being the second son. Robert, Sr., was a millwright and a farmer, owning one hundred acres of land in Scott township, which was a part of the four hundred acres purchased by his father, William. Our subject was born and reared on a farm, educated at the common schools, and at seventeen years of age he entered the millwright's trade. He married, in 1847, Isabella Cunningham, and to them were born four daugh-
HISTORY OF ALLEGHENY COUNTY.

The old Lesnett men were large, powerful and fearless. Frank Stofle, John Vance and two of the old Bricker private men, went to fight five Pittsburgh bullies. They sat down to wait for their men, who came and looked at them, but crossed back, not making themselves known, so there was no fight.

Harry C. Myers, merchant, Pittsburgh, was born in that city July 5, 1854, a son of Henry and Margret Myers, who came from Germany and settled in Pittsburgh, where they died when Harry was four years old. He received his education at the Orphan's Farm school at Zelienople, Butler county, Pa., graduating in 1866. He then came to Pittsburgh and for three years clerked in a grocery-store; was next employed by A. Bricker & Son, commission merchants, for about eight years, and was two years in the same business with Thomas Tate & Co. In 1883, he went into partnership with Mr. Craig, opened a commission-house, and at the end of three years he withdrew from the firm, and was partner and manager for the Pittsburgh Produce Commission company, limited, principal owners being Charles and John Arbuckle. In 1886 H. C. Myers and Thomas Tate bought out the Pittsburgh Produce Commission company, limited, the style of the firm being Pittsburgh Produce Company, Myers & Tate, proprietors. They do a general commission business to the amount of $200,000 per year, handling foreign fruits of all kinds. Mr. Myers married, Feb. 27, 1879, Emma, daughter of Samuel Grove, an old resident of Allegheny City, and two children have blessed this union: Harry Grove and Bessie Laura. Mr. and Mrs. Myers are members of the U. P. Church of Bellevue, in which town he built his home in 1888.

J. Charles Bedell, merchant, Mansfield Valley, is a native of Allegheny county, Pa., born in 1839. His parents, Daniel, a farmer, and Elizabeth (Jacobs) Bedell, had a family of ten children, seven of whom are living, and of these J. Charles is among the youngest. The father died in 1861, aged seventy-six years; the mother, when aged sixty-two years. The grandfather, Abner Bedell, who was a farmer, came to America from France with Gen. Lafayette, and the original spelling of the name was B'Dell. The subject of this sketch was educated at the common schools, and also attended night school. Early in life he became a compositor, and was employed in a publishing-house in Pittsburgh for several years. Soon afterward he went to Dakota territory, where he edited the first paper, remaining three years, after which he was employed by the P. & Ft. W. R. R., and was four years paymaster. In 1886 he came to Mansfield and engaged in mercantile business until 1877. Then, in company with his father-in-law, Mr. Kennedy, he organized the Mansfield State & Deposit Bank. This partnership continued until 1879, but since that date Mr. Bedell has been successfully carrying on mercantile business. He married, in 1865, Dell, daughter of Samuel Kennedy, of Mansfield, Pa., and they have three children: Winifred, Violet and Idyl. Mr. Bedell has been a member of the school board and town council. He is a member of the M. E. Church, and is a republican.

...

PHILIP MCCANDLESS, farmer, postoffice Oakdale Station. In 1772 Alexander McCandless, the pioneer of this family, emigrated from Glasgow, Scotland, to America. He located for a year in Philadelphia, and coming thence to Western Pennsylvania, to what is now Findlay township, Allegheny county, took up 450 acres of land. He followed farming through life, and died in 1817, aged sixty-seven years. He was the father of four children, Alexander being the youngest, born in Turner's fort, North Fayette township, in 1782, and died in 1848. Alexander, Jr., married Margaret Record, daughter of Philip Record, and eight children were born to them, three of whom are living. Philip, the subject of this memoir, now owns the 240 acres of land purchased by his father. He received a common-school education. He married, in 1850, Margaret, daughter of John and Rachel Stonesipher, and five children blessed their union, three of whom are living—George, John and Margaret Elizabeth (Mrs. Magill). Mr. McCandless has been a successful farmer. The name is highly respected in this county, being borne by prominent and intelligent citizens. Mr. McCandless is a democrat, and has held many township offices; he is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

FRANCIS STEWART GILMORE, retired farmer, postoffice Wilkinsburg, was born in the parish of St. Andrew's, County Down, Ireland, March 30, 1801. In 1833, with his parents, John and Ann (McCune) Gilmore, he started for America. The mother died on the sea, and the father and son settled and rented land in Wilkins township, where the father died in 1840. In 1843 Francis S. bought the farm where he resides, containing forty-six acres, which he cleared and improved, and on which there is no waste land. In 1844 he married Jane, sister of J. M. Johnston, and has two children living: John Hastings, born May 28, 1846; and Martha Ann, both at home; two children, James and Margaret, died in infancy. The father and son are republicans. Mr. Gilmore was an elder in Hebron U. P. Church until forced to resign on account of deafness. He has never lost any time through illness, and is still seen frequently at work in the fields.

W. H. CLARK, farmer, postoffice Oakdale Station, was born in Findlay township, in 1826. His father, James Clark, was a native of County Down, Ireland, immigrated to America about 1810, and purchased a farm in Upper St. Clair township, this county. He married Jane Herdman, daughter of William Herdman, also a native of County Down, Ireland, and who settled in South Fayette township about 1780. James Clark died in 1870, aged eighty-one years; his widow died three years later, aged eighty-five years. W. H. Clark was born and reared near his present home, and with the exception of four years has always resided in Allegheny county. He was educated at the public schools, and married, in 1859, Kate, daughter of William and Sarah (Wolfe) Fritz, the former a native of Perry county, and the latter of Centre county, Pa. Twelve children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Clark, eight of whom are now living: James Campbell, at home assisting on the farm; Harry Elmer, a physician; Mary Lizzie, a student at an academy; Fannie M. and Minnie M. (twins), Denny C., Elsie B. and Howard Fritz. Mr. Clark was doorkeeper, in 1869, in the house of representatives. He is a director of the insurance company at Oakdale, director of schools, and for seventeen years has been a trustee of Oakdale Church, formerly a trustee of the Union church; he is a republican.

JOSEPH MCCONNELL, farmer and coal-dealer, postoffice Walker's Mills, was born in South Fayette township, in 1828, son of William and Agnes (Reed) McConnell, of Lancaster county. William came from County Down, Ireland, in 1807, to Lancaster county. He worked at his trade (blacksmith) for three years. He and his wife rode across the mountains on horses. In 1810 he purchased a farm in South Fayette township, where he died. He was the father of nine children, of whom Joseph is the seventh. He was educated at the public schools, and in 1864 purchased the property where he now resides. He married, in 1857, Mary Ann Gladden, of Allegheny county, and by her he had four children: Nannie J., William G., Mary Belle and Mary Ann. By his second wife, Mary Jane, daughter of Walker and Ann (Boyd) Herriott, he has six children: Maggie L., Nellie Irene, Joseph R., Nettie A., Bessie R. and John W. Joseph McConnell carries on in connection with farming the coal business, which he has successfully conducted for nine years. He finds a market for his productions at Cleveland, Ohio, and Pittsburgh, Pa. He is a member of the U. P. Church, and is a republican.

THOMAS BURNS, farmer, postoffice Clin- ton, was born in Findlay township, Jan. 15, 1825, a son of Alexander and Susan (White) Burns, also natives of that township. Alexander Burns was born May 27, 1800, and died May 27, 1832; his wife was born June 15, 1797, and died Sept. 5, 1887; she was a daughter of Thomas and Jane (McCleaster) White. Thomas White was born in Ireland, a prominent Presbyterian, and builder of Hopewell and Saxon Churches. Alexander Burns was a son of John and Jane (Crooks) Burns, who were among the earliest settlers of Findlay township. Alexander and Susan (White) Burns were Presbyterians, and had five sons: John, James, Thomas, Alexander and Henry. The third named married, April 28, 1833, Mary J. Stevenson, who was born in Findlay township, a daughter of Robert and Nancy (Lewis) Stevenson. Mr. and Mrs. Burns are members of the Hebron Presbyterian Church, and have had eight children: Margaret M. (married to John Kirk), Susan A. (deceased wife of Dickson Morrison), Cyrus McC. (married to Emma Best), Thomas R. L. (married to Jennie McGinnis), Nancy J. S. (deceased wife of John W. Byers), George B. McC. and Lulu L. Mr. Burns is a leading farmer, and owns 340 acres of land. He has held various local offices of trust, and has the respect and confidence of all.

George Burns, farmer, postoffice Clinton, was born on his present farm, in Findlay township, April 11, 1832, a son of John Burns, who was born in Findlay township, Oct. 30, 1774, his parents, James, son of John Burns, a yeoman and farmer; an elder in Hopewell Presbyterian Church a number of years. John Burns married, March 15, 1798, Jane Crooks, also a Presbyterian, and they had ten children: George, Nancy (widow of Samuel Nichol), Alexander, Jane (married Robert Eaton), Henry, John, Polly (married to John White), William, Peggy (widow of James Hoo), and Andrew, of whom Nancy, Polly, Peggy, Andrew and George are living. George has been twice married; first, Aug. 24, 1843, to Jane Burns, who died Sept. 30, 1853, the mother of one son, Alfred M., born March 28, 1846, and married to Mary Jane Forsythe, and residing in Findlay township. George Burns married, July 4, 1854, Nancy, a sister of his first wife, and a daughter of Robert and Jane Burns. Mr. and Mrs. George Burns are members of the Valley Presbyterian Church. He owns 233 acres of land, a part of the old Hopewell tract, purchased and patented by his grandfather, John Burns, April 28, 1785. The latter, who was a relative of the poet Burns, came here prior to the Revolution, and was the pioneer of the Burns family in Findlay township.

He purchased a large body of land near Imperial. John, the father of the subject of this memoir, was his eldest son.

Isaac Blackadore, farmer, postoffice Wilkinsburg and Pittsburgh, East End, residence Maple Valley, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, November 20, 1819. When he was two years old his parents, George and Mary (Alexander) Blackadore, came to America. In 1821 they settled in Wilkins(part of which is now Penn) township, beginning the land and built a house. His family died in 1861, aged eighty years, and his mother ten years later, aged ninety years. They had three sons and four daughters: Eleanor (Fitzsimmons), in Patton township; Isaac, Mary (Grierson), in Patton, and Elizabeth (Grierson), in East Liberty; Jane (Biggs) and John, in Canton, Ill., and William (deceased). The father was a member of Beulah Presbyterian Church; was at first a democrat, but afterward joined the republican party on account of slavery issues. Isaac Blackadore has always lived on this farm. He had little opportunity for acquiring an education, but is an extensive reader, and has a fine library in the brick residence which he erected in 1860. In 1867 he married Nancy Cochran, born in Franklin township, daughter of John and Mary (Alexander) Cochran, of Ireland, and their living children are Mary, Elizabeth, George, John, Annie and Frances; three died in infancy. Mrs. Blackadore is a member of the Presbyterian Church, to which faith he also adheres; politically is a republican.

Samuel A. Jordan, retired, Federal, was born in Allegheny county, Pa., March 25, 1807. In 1801 Stewart Jordan, with his wife and four children, left Chester county, Pa., and after a long, tedious journey of three weeks arrived in Pittsburgh. They moved into a log cabin, and afterward married, in 1803, Alexander, where they remained until the spring of 1802. Stewart Jordan here bought a small farm, and thereon erected a log house, the lumber for which was on this tract of land. It was made of round logs, with clapboard roof, and weightpoles to keep clapboards in place; had paper windows, and no nails were used, except what were made by the neighboring blacksmith. He made subsequent purchases, and owned at his death 135 acres. He was always a farmer, was highly respected by his neighbors, being a kind and good Christian. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Hanna, was an estimable lady. She was baptized by the same minister, Rev. Michel, who afterward, Sept. 5, 1793, in Chester county, pronounced her the wife of Mr. Jordan. He died in 1813, in his eighty-third year; his wife died April 6, 1863, when ninety-six years old. They were the parents of nine children, fifty-seven grandchildren and thirty-one great-grandchildren. Their forefathers came to America in the sixteenth century, and were of Scotch-Irish blood.

Samuel A. Jordan, the subject of this sketch, and the son of Stewart Jordan, was born in McKeesport township, and reared on the farm, the performances of which he has always followed. He received his education in the primitive log schoolhouse, with its greased-paper windows, slab benches, earthen floor and hardheaded "dominie" wielding the ever-ready "wattles." He was for a number of years engaged in the sawmill business in Washington county. It was there he married Margaret, daughter of Nicholas and Anna (White) Edgar. Her uncle, Mathew Taylor, was the first white child born in Washington county, Pa. Nine children were born to them: John M. (who died in 1864 at Andersonville prison, after serving in the war two years), Nicholas W. (who died in 1884), Mary Jane (now Mrs. Miller), Ann Elizabeth, Samuel Stewart (married to Sarah F. Phillip), Sarah, Francis Phillip, Isaac Newton and Jacob Lea. Mr. Jordan bought, in 1855, 155 acres of land in South Fayette township (now Collier) at sixty dollars per acre, and moved to it in 1856; this land is now assessed at $120 per acre. He has retired from active has improved and has now under a good state of cultivation. Politically he has always been a republican. He is a brother of the late Prof. John Scott Johnston, who was for six years superintendent of the public schools of this county.

John McIntosh, retired, Wilkinsburg, was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, July 29, 1822. His parents, James and Nancy McIntosh, natives of the highlands of Scotland, came to this country and dwelt on a farm in Ohio, where our subject received a common-school education. He left home when twenty years old, and was employed at carpenter-work for several years, but up till lately, for twenty-eight years, has been superintending coal-mines, the last fifteen at Turtle Creek, for the New York & Cleveland Gas Coal company, and prior to that for eleven years on the Monongahela river. When Mr. McIntosh took charge of these mines there were sixteen saloons in the immediate vicinity of the works, but he soon rooted them out, and now there are none in Patton township. For two years his life was threatened, but he pursued his duty without fear, and has since had the gratification of receiving the thanks of men who then imagined that he was encroaching on their liberties. The company now employs three hundred men who are noted among miners for their sobriety, and largely own their homes; the latter fact is mostly due to the kindly interest and encouragement of their superintendent. In 1859 Mr. McIntosh was united in marriage to Elizabeth R., daughter of John and Eliza (Rankin) Barkley, of Irish descent. She was born in Indiana county, Pa., and is the mother of the following-named children: Norman C. (at Turtle Creek), Laura V. (wife of William Montgomery, a druggist in Leechburg, Pa.), Alice B. and Harry W. (at home). Politically Mr. McIntosh is a strong prohibitionist; he and Mrs. McIntosh are among the active workers of the M. E. Church.

Dr. A. W. Schooley, Braddock, was born in Bedford county, Pa., in 1848, the second of the three children of Dr. J. D. and Malinda (Barton) Schooley. His father was a graduate of a dental college in Ohio, and from 1861 to 1880 a physician in Braddock; his mother was a daughter of William Barton, a prominent farmer of Brush Creek township, Bedford county, Pa. The subject of this sketch is of French and German parentage, his ancestors, both paternal and maternal, having emigrated to America at an early day. His preliminary education was obtained at the public and high schools, and in 1866 he commenced the study of medicine, his father being his preceptor. He entered Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia in 1869, graduating at that institution in 1871. Since that time he has had a large and lucrative practice at Braddock and surrounding country. In 1879 he married Mary May, daughter of James Howard, a prominent citizen of Cadiz, Ohio, and two children have blessed their union: Mary M. and A. W., Jr. Dr. Schooley is a member of Allegheny County Medical society, and among the members of his profession is ranked in the first class as a physician and surgeon, and by all the community as a hospitable gentleman. He and Mrs. Schooley are members of the Episcopal Church; he is a republican.

John C. Sloan, M. D., Bakerstown, is a son of James and Mary A. (Campbell) Sloan, natives of Ireland and McCandless township, this county, respectively. His maternal grandfather, John Campbell, was a native of Ireland, immigrated to America in 1806, and died in 1866. Mr. and Mrs. James Sloan are parents of four children: Nancy, wife of Matthew McMillan, in Fayette county; Robert, in Kansas; Joseph and John C. The last named is the eldest, and was born in McCandless township in 1839. He received his early education at the public schools of the township, and graduated from Ohio Medical College, Cincinnati, in 1869. He then engaged for two years in the practice of his profession in Allegheny, moving thence to Charlotte county, Va.; but after three years he again came to Allegheny, and since 1885 has resided at his present location. In 1863 the doctor enlisted for three months in Co. C, 53d P. V., re-enlisted in 1865 in Co. H, 78th P. V., and served until the close of the war. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of John Fulton, of Allegheny, and four children have been born to them: Anna M., Emma, Howard Renwick and Luella Elizabeth. Dr. and Mrs. Sloan are members of the R. P. Church, of which he is elder.

John Alexander Conner, justice of the peace, New Texas, was born in County Derry, Ireland, in March, 1836, a son of John and Jane (Selfridge) Conner. His father died in 1841, aged forty-five years, and was buried in Scotland. The subject of this sketch came to America in 1843, spent two years in Indiana, and then served an apprenticeship at the shoe business in Philadelphia. He then passed one winter in Pittsburgh, and after traveling through Ohio and Indiana, returned to that city. Feb. 22, 1849, he married Elizabeth Fleming Arburs, also a native of County Derry, Ireland, born December, 1828, a daughter of James and Jane (Conner) Arburs, former of whom died in Pittsburgh in 1847, and latter, who was born in 1805, lives with Mrs. Conner. To Mr. and Mrs. John A. Conner eleven children were born, seven of whom are deceased. The living are Alexander A. (conductor on the Pennsylvania railroad), Lida Jane (Mrs. J. H. McGinnis), Anna M. (Mrs. William Davidson) and Jennie (at home). After marriage Mr. Conner carried on the boot and shoe business at Xenia, Ohio, under firm name of Allen & Conner, for five years, employing several men. In 1894 he settled at New Texas in the same business; was instrumental in starting a postoffice there in 1896, and was assigned to the postmastership and served as such until December, 1899; was again appointed postmaster in December, 1899, and served until Oct. 1, 1898, when he resigned to take the office of justice of the peace, which he has held since that time. He and Mrs. Conner are members of Plum Creek Presbyterian Church. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. and A. O. U. W.; he is a democrat.

William Huey, coal-operator, Elizabeth, a son of John and Susie (Crothers) Huey, was born in Pittsburgh in 1816. His father was of Irish and his mother of Scotch descent. After marriage they made their home in Pittsburgh, where they reared a family of five children, of whom only two are living, Margaret and William Jr. of whom Margaret is Mrs. Elsie and Susie, William remained at home until the death of his parents, and in 1841 married Sarah Fuston, and located in Minersville. In 1850 he moved to California, and returning in 1857, he with Mr. Gumbert, purchased the Bellevue coal-mines, the firm being Gumbert & Huey. The mines had been operated previous to the purchase, but the new firm made great changes and now own a miniature village, inhabited by their employés, of whom there are about one hundred and fifty. The mines have a daily capacity of from ten to twelve thousand bushels. Mr. Huey superintends the interests of the firm at the mines, and Mr. Gumbert attends to the office in Pittsburgh. Mr. and Mrs. Huey have had eight children, three deceased—John, Mary and Eliza, and five living—Hannah, Susie, Sadie, William H. and Kate. Mrs. Huey is a member of the M. E. Church.

Eli Myers, merchant, Monroeville, was born in Patton township, October 6, 1839. The family name is evidently of German origin, and is a historic one in that township. It was at the house of Mr. McElroy, Mrs. Myers' grandfather, that Gen. Washington found shelter after an involuntary bath in the Allegheny. Eli Myers, grandfather of our subject, at one time owned the mill in Wilkins township, on Thompson's run, in Turtle Creek village. His son, William, married Jane Carr, a native of Patton, and died when the subject of our sketch was small. When seven years old Eli was bound out to Robert Beatty, and reared and educated on a farm in Patton township. For many years he worked Mr. Beatty's farm, and in 1889 he opened a store at Monroeville. Next year he was appointed postmaster, and has held the office ever since. He is a republican, and has served eight years as township supervisor and two years as tax-collector. The family is associated with the Presbyterian Church. August 8, 1854, Mr. Myers married Maria, a daughter of Robert McElroy, and they had a family of eight children: Robert E. (at home), Mary (wife of Robert Swishelm, in Wilkins), Sarah G. and James (in Penn township), Lizzie H. (assistant postmaster), Rachel A., Magrie, S. K. and Virginia Etta (at home). The second child, Fulton McElroy, died in infancy.

William M. Watson, attorney at law, Swissvale, was born in Washington county, Pa., in 1855, to James and Maria (Morgan) Watson, latter a daughter of George Morgan and granddaughter of Col. George Morgan, of Princeton, N. J., whose name has become historic through his exposure of the treachery of Aaron Burr. James Watson was for many years a prominent attorney of Washington county. He was the father of ten children, seven now living, our subject being the youngest born. William M. Watson was reared and educated in his native county, graduated from Washington College in 1875, and at once commenced the study of law. After reading one year he entered the Harvard law-school, from which he graduated in 1878, and the same year was admitted to the bar of both Washington and Allegheny counties. He was married in 1884, to Sarah Ormsby, daughter of William McKnight, a prominent iron-merchant of Pittsburgh. Mr. Watson is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is a republican.

James M. Matlack, M. D. (deceased), for many years a prominent physician of Braddock, was born in Chester county in 1833. In 1868 he married Mary, daughter of John and Rebecca (McGhinn) McKinney, former of this county, latter of New York, and two children were born to them, Lidia and Maggie, both yet living. The parents are members of the U. P. Church. The doctor died in 1877, at Turtle Creek, Pa., and after his death Mrs. Matlack, with her two daughters, moved back to Braddock, where they now reside.

Martin Loeffler, retired, Etna, was born Feb. 25, 1814, in Kurhessen, Germany, a son of Conrad and Catharine (Gerhard) Loeffler, who had their children born in Etna. Martin was a miner all his life. Martin was educated in Germany, where he mined; he served five years in the army and was twice promoted in the artillery. He came to America in 1839, and engaged in mining in this county. In 1840 he came to Shaler township, and subsequently became pit-boss for Spang, Chalfant & Co. He was also captain of a canal-boat, and conducted a successful business in Etna for fifteen years. He here married Matilda, daughter of Butler Myers, and they have three children living: Mrs. Rebecca Cunningham, Mrs. Caroline Ingham and Maggie. Mr. Loeffler has been a member of the I. O. O. F. and temperance lodge since 1838. He is a republican, and has been a member of the school board and council.

William Beadling, coal-operator, Essen, was born in this county in 1845, and is descended from Robert Beadling, an Englishman by birth, who came to Allegheny county some fifty-five years ago and settled on Saw-Mill run; he was a shoemaker, and for many years a miner. Among the progressive coalmen of this section of Allegheny county, no firm, with the opportunities afforded, has been more successful than that of Beadling Brothers, of which William is a member. Their mines are on the P., C. & Y. R. R., and the market for their product is at Cleveland and Chicago. They own some 250 acres of land in Upper St. Clair and Scott townships, employ 125 hands, and their "slopes" are operated by a twenty-horse-power engine. Our subject was educated at the common schools, and was engaged in and about coal-mines from the age of nine years until 1880, since when he has been in the coal business. Mr. Beadling married, in 1866, Elizabeth, daughter of John Dillon, and six children have been born to them: William H., bookkeeper for the firm; Thomas, Robert, Dorothy, John and James.

Ernest Luft (deceased) was born June 29, 1833, in Geis Nidda, Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany. He came to America in 1853, and resided in Pittsburgh, Pa., till 1867, when he removed to Cincinnati, where he followed his trade of printer and publisher, which he had previously learned in the office of the Kreisblatt, in Nidda, Germany. In 1871 he removed to Millvale, where he built a home, following his trade in Pittsburgh. He was a popular and highly esteemed man, of fine physique, being seven feet in height, well proportioned, and was a bold, fearless speaker. He died Dec. 22, 1879. His wife and widow, née Charlotte Richter, is a native of Trefurt, Saxony, daughter of August J. and Wilhelmina (Falk) Richter. She is the mother of four children: Mrs. Louise Palmer, Charlotte, Ernest and August. Mr. Luft was a member of the G. R. Church, as is his widow. He was a republican.

Hugh James Logan, merchant, Logan's Ferry, is a descendant of one of the pioneers of Plum township, and was born at Logan's Ferry Dec. 19, 1841, a son of Hugh and Elizabeth (Ferry) Logan. Hugh was born in Springdale, this county, Dec. 3, 1788, a son of Alexander Logan, and was a merchant, justice of the peace and postmaster for about thirty years. He was major in the state militia, also an officer in the Indian war, and died June 29, 1875. His first child died in Pittsburgh, was buried in the old Trinity churchyard, and he was one of the first white children born in this county north of the Ohio river. His wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Logan, was born April 24, 1798, and died Nov. 3, 1878. Alexander Logan settled at Springdale in 1786; was a merchant, and took up a large tract of land at Springdale and Logan's Ferry, extending two or three miles along the river. He died Dec. 15, 1836, aged seventy-nine years. His father, the great-grandfather of Hugh James James Logan, a native of Ireland, of Scotch-Irish blood, immigrated first to Chester county, Pa. The subject of this memoir received his education at the public schools and Elder's Ridge Academy, and in August, 1862, enlisted in Co. F, 15th P. V. C., serving until the close of the war. On account of sickness he was in the hospital for some time, and also did detached duty at Nashville. He was mustered out June 30, 1865. In 1869 he engaged in a general mercantile business at his present place, and has been very successful.

In 1873 Mr. Logan married Malinda Gallaher, who was born in Plum township about 1843, a daughter of John and Jane (Mulligan) Gallaher, former a contractor and farmer, and four children have been born to them: Hugh J., Jr., Mabel G., Jane Elizabeth and Emily C., all at home. In 1870 Mr. Logan was appointed postmaster, and has since filled that office. He has two sisters living near him—Mrs. M. L. Flack and Mrs. Fred Knowland. His grandfather, Parry, was an architect and builder. Mr. and Mrs. Logan are members of the Presbyterian Church; he is a member of the G. A. R. In 1884 he began the erection of a fine brick residence near his store, overlooking the Allegheny river, completing the same in 1886.

John S. Coe, farmer, postoffice Tarentum, a son of Benjamin and Nancy (Shields) Coe, was born in 1827 on the farm now owned by him, in Fawn township. His grandfather, Benjamin Coe, a soldier in the war of 1812, came from New Jersey and settled in Fawn township at the time when a blockhouse was erected at what is now Springdale, to protect the white settlers from the Indians. Springdale was formerly Coe station, being named in honor of Benjamin Coe, the first settler of Fawn township. Here he and his wife died, leaving six children: Daniel, James, Margaret, Moses, Benjamin and Phebe. Benjamin Coe and Nancy shields married and located on the farm formerly owned by his father, and reared eight children: Rebeccca (deceased), Margaret, Joseph, Benjamin (deceased), Eliza, John S., James (deceased) and Sarah, and here lived and died the second generation of this family. John S. Coe married, in 1853, daughter of James Boyd, of West Deer township. He located on the old homestead, engaged in farming, and the improvements are evidences of his success. He has frequently filled positions of trust and emolument in Fawn township. Mr. and Mrs. Coe are members of the Presbyterian Church. They have two children, by adoption: Benjamin F. and Sadie E.

John G. Graham, farmer, postoffice Stewart's Station, was born in Penn township, Westmoreland county, Pa., in 1833, a son of William and Nancy (McChesney) Graham. William was a brother of Christopher, and died here in 1883, aged eighty-two years. His wife, born in Ireland, died at the same age, in 1883. With the exception of one year spent in Westmoreland county, William Graham lived from 1839 in Patton. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church; politically a democrat. John G. Graham has always been a hard worker, and had little opportunity for education, but is giving his children the benefit of the best educational institutions. He married, in 1883, Susannah Errett, born in Hempfield, Westmoreland county, a daughter of Adam and Sarah (Ash-and learned the fulling and dyeing business at Stehenville, and afterward engaged at it in Mifflin. He married Margaret Abrams, a native of Stehenville. During the latter part of his life he followed farming, and died in 1858, in his sixty-first year. He had six children: F. C., Sarah (Kelley), Alexander McKim, Andrew William, Margaret (Rhodes) and Susan (Abrams). Francis C. McClure attended subscription schools. When eighteen years old he began to work at the carpenter's trade, and helped build the first free schoolhouse in Mifflin township. He engaged in farming in that township for nineteen years, and for a short time in Westmoreland county. In 1864 he came to Patton and purchased 126 acres near Murrysville, on which several gas-wells have been recently sunk. Mr. McClure has been school director eleven years; also collector and supervisor. He is a republican, and with his family is associated with the Murrysville Presbyterian Church.

Mr. McClure was married, in 1843, to Catharine Ann, a daughter of George and Mary (Gregory) Lang. Their five living children are Elizabeth (McWilliams) in Penn, Westmoreland county, Pa.; Francis Samuel, at home; William Matthew, in Franklin, Westmoreland county; Alexander Winfield, in Penn, Westmoreland county; Melissa Bollo, at home. George A., the second child, was murdered by robbers near McKeesport, while in search of goods stolen from his store at that place; Amanda Ellen, the youngest, died at the age of twenty-two; Sarah Agnes, Margaret and Mary Susan died when small. Winfield's daughter, Mary Rebecca, resides with her grandparents, her mother being deceased. Mr. McClure has seen the fifth generation of Francis McClures, and voted twelve times for president, on the whig and republican tickets.

S. W. Spencer, coal-operator, Glenshaw, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1837. His paternal ancestors were inside the city during the siege of Ireland, Ireland, in 1706, and came to America at the age of eighteen and located in Philadelphia. In 1821 he was sent (as a partner) to Pittsburgh with a stock of goods by George McClelland, a merchant of Philadelphia, and in a short time became a well-known merchant of Pittsburgh. For many years he was a director of the Bank of Pittsburgh, and a member of session of the First Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh, of which church he was treasurer. He died March 12, 1858. His second wife was Mary J. Condell, of Philadelphia, who died in 1840, leaving two children, Thomas and Sam. W. The latter was educated in Pittsburgh, and after the war he became general manager of William Sample's dry-goods house, Allegheny, and later for McCrum, Glyde & Co., of Pittsburgh. Previous to the war he was a merchant in Zanesville, Ohio, ten years. He volunteered under President Lincoln's first call for troops at the opening of the war, was captain of Co. C, 78th Ohio regiment, under Gen. Grant, at Port Donelson, but resigned after losing his health; he volunteered again under call of the governor of Ohio in raids of Kirby Smith and Morgan. Mr. Spencer has been twice married; his first wife was Elizabeth Peters, daughter of Adam Peters, of Zanesville, Ohio, and she died, leaving one child, Elizabeth, now the wife of Rev. F. S. Brush, of Ohio. Mr. Spencer's present wife is Mary S., daughter of T. W. Shaw, of Glenshaw, and they have two children, Sarah S. and Charles A. Mr. and Mrs. Spencer and daughter are members of the Presbyterian Church of Glenshaw, in the organization of which he was elected a member of session. He is a republican. During the last five years he has been manager of the Glenshaw Coal company, employing from thirty to forty men, and giving steady work to the miners throughout the entire year.

Philip Beckert, gardener, postoffice Ross, was born July 19, 1828, in Alsace, Germany, the son of Philip and Mary (Kirchendoerfer) Beckert. He was educated in his native country, which he left in 1845, and, coming to America, settled in Allegheny county, where he learned the ropemaker's trade, working for forty dollars a year. He followed his trade ten years, and then turned his attention to gardening, which he has since followed successfully. He is a self-made man, is highly respected, and is in possession of twenty-six acres of land laid out in gardens in "Gardener's Home;" also a farm of forty-five acres in the same township, and four houses in the city of Allegheny. He married, in Reserve township, Lena, daughter of Jacob Huy, and eight children have been born to them: Philip, George, Edward, Elias, Elizabeth, Sophia, Anna and Bertha. Mr. and Mrs. Beckert are members of the G. P. Church at Girty's Run; he is a republican.

J. B. Davis, proprietor of Davis View general store, Elizabeth, is a son of Francis and Mary A. (Wilson) Davis, and was born in what is now Lincoln township, this county, in 1839. In 1706 his great-grandfather, Francis Davis, moved from Maryland to Big Swickley creek, near West Newton, Pa., where for many years he owned a farm, and reared a large family, chiefly boys. Of these Ephraim (grandfather of our subject) for many years lived at the mouth of Turtle creek, on the Monongahela river, the place being now known as Port Perry. His sons were William, a farmer and doctor; Samuel, a farmer; John, a Baptist minister and doctor, and Francis (father of John B.), who was a farmer, a manufacturer of barrels and general merchant. The daughters of Ephraim Davis were Nancy, Polly and Hannah, all married well. Hannah became the wife of the youngest son of Judge Wallace of the superior court in Pittsburgh, owning then the greater part of Braddock as a farm.

Francis Davis was born on the farm now owned by Wilson Wall, near Elizabeth, and lived many years near West Newton. He was married to Mary Ann Wilson, whose mother was a daughter of Col. Louder, of Philadelphia, and witnessed Washington’s grand reception in that city. Mr. and Mrs. Francis Davis lived many years at what is now called Davis View, one and a half miles below Elizabeth, on the Monongahela river, in Lincoln township. The father died Aug. 15, 1853, aged eighty-two; the mother, April 28, 1864. Of their sons, John B. (unmarried) and E. A. survive (datter of whom was for eight years postmaster at Elizabeth, and also a merchant there and in Allegheny), and of their daughters there are yet living Mrs. McNaught, a widow, residing on the old homestead at Davis View, and Mrs. R. A. Tower, also a widow, now living in Allegheny.

John Lendrum, carpenter, Ross, was born in December, 1822, in County Tyrone, Ireland. His parents, George and Rebecca (McFarland) Lendrum, natives of the above-named place, had seven children, and these emigrated to America in 1836. The father worked in a foundry in Allegheny, and died at the home of his son James, at the age of eighty-two years. James was educated in this county, and learned the carpenter’s trade, which he followed twenty-five years. Subsequently he turned his attention to agriculture, and now owns a farm of twenty acres. He married Jane, daughter of John Nelson, one of the oldest settlers in Ross township, who came here shortly after the Revolution. Mr. and Mrs. Lendrum have five children: John, Anna, Rebecca, Adeline, and George. Mr. Lendrum was formerly a whig, now a republican.

G. T. Seif, gardener, Ross, was born Feb. 2, 1831, in Peters burg, Ohio, a son of Gotlieb Seif, of Baden, Germany, who came to America in 1828, located in Ohio, and in 1831 removed to Allegheny City, subsequently to Lawrenceville, Pa., where he was one of the first settlers. He was a potter, his trade followed for a number of years, but later in life kept a dairy on Troy Hill. His wife, see Margaret Reid, of Germany, was the mother of nine children, of whom G. T. is the eldest. Our subject learned the potter’s trade and followed it early in life; then farmed for a brief period, and during the last seventeen years has gardened very successfully. He married Anna M. Frederick, a native of Germany, who has borne him seven children: Margaret, Catherine, John, Christine, Gotlieb, Mary and Lydia. Mr. and Mrs. Seif are members of the G. L. Church. He is a democrat.

John Shannon, general merchant, Emsworth, was born in 1814 in Rockland county, N. Y., son of Oliver and Sarah Ann (Hollmes) Shannon, who were born in Ireland in 1822 and 1826, respectively; they came to America in 1850, resided for two years in Rockland county, N. Y., and then moved to Pittsburgh. In 1859 the father rented a farm in Ohio township, which he carried on till 1867, when he bought sixteen acres where he now resides, built a store and carried on a grocery business, which afterward developed into a general store, now owned by his son John. He was married in 1845, and seven children were born to him: James A. (deceased), John, Maggie, Sarah (Mrs. Samuel Crawford), Robert W. (in California), Agnes (Mrs. John H. Dean), David R. (merchant in Ohio). The family are Presbyterians and republicans. Mr. Shannon was two years supervisor of the town. He owns two houses and lots in Allegheny. John Shannon was appointed postmaster in 1873, and has been treasurer of Kilbuck township since its organization. He has lately moved into a new store beside the old stand, and built a fine residence, where he owns five acres. He is a member of Allegheny Lodge, No. 223, F. & A. M.

Joseph Brooker, farmer and hotelkeeper, Wexford, was born in 1837, and is a son of Ignatious and Mary (Snyder) Brooker, former of whom was born in Baden, Germany, latter in Holland, in February, 1814. Ignatious Brooker came to Pittsburgh about 1835, and in 1840 came to Pine township; about 1850 he purchased a farm of one hundred acres in Franklin township, which he sold in 1860, and purchased three hundred acres in Pine township, where he resided until his death, Aug. 28, 1884, aged eighty-two years. Joseph received his education in Allegheny county, and worked on the farm with his father until the latter’s death. The farm was willed to Joseph and his brother Henry; former also has one hundred acres in Butler county. Pa. Joseph was married, Aug. 18, 1869, to Elizabeth Beaser, a native of Germany, who came here with her parents when she was but six months old. Her parents died shortly after coming to this country. Mr. and Mrs. Brooker have one child deceased and eight living, viz.: Mary Elizabeth, Henry, Ignatious, William Pius, Matilda Catherine (deceased), Alphonse Albert, Emma Margaret, Mary Stella, Joseph Francis and Sarah L. M. All of the family are members of the Catholic Church.

John McKinney, farmer, postoffice Elizabeth. Matthew McKinney, with his wife, Elizabeth Lard McKinney, came to Pennsylvania and settled on land now owned by John and Robert McKinney and Mr. Warren. To them were born six children, viz.: Nancy, Matthew, John, James, Henry and Polly. James married Mary Wallace Blee, of County Donegal, Ireland, and reared a family of eight children, viz.: Elizabeth, born Sept. 29, 1817, died Jan. 29, 1873; Nancy, born Jan. 28, 1820; Margaret, born Dec. 21, 1820; Anna, born Dec. 21, 1823; Robert, born May 7, 1823; John, born Nov. 27, 1826; Matthew, born May 10, 1822; died Sept. 10, 1822; Mary, born Sept. 3, 1829, died April 18, 1838. Nancy McKinney married Peter Reasoner, of New Concord, Ohio, and lives there with her husband, by whom following-named children were born: James, Elizabeth, Mary, John, Sarah, Margaret, Samuel and Robert, all of whom are living except James and Robert. Anna married Solomon Speers, and lives with her husband at Elizabeth, Pa., to whom following-named children were born: Mary, Jane, James, Kate, Irene, Saul, Charles, John, Ardella and Elizabeth; all are living except Mary, Jane, Charles and Elizabeth. Anna and boys all live in Reynolds ville, Jefferson county, Pa.; Kate lives in Harrisburg, Pa.; Irene, in Dayton, Ky.; Ardella, in Elizabeth, Pa. Nancy’s children all live in Ohio except John, who lives in Brooke county, W. Va. Mary married Lewis Snee, and to them was born one child, Mary E. Snee, who lives with John McKinney at the old homestead. Robert married Nancy, daughter of Robert Marshall, of Guernsey county, Ohio, and to them were born four children, viz.: Robert Marshall, James Wallas, Mary Jane and Maggie E. John married Mary Jane, daughter of Robert Marshall, of Guernsey county, and to them five children were born: Robert Biddle, Anna Martha, James Lard, Lydia W. and John Q.; the eldest child is married; the others are single and live at home.

Matthew McKinney, Sr. died Oct. 29, 1809; Elizabeth Lard, wife of Matthew McKinney, died in 1778. James McKinney, son of Matthew McKinney, died Oct. 18, 1863. Mary Wallas, wife of James Wallas, died March 24, 1873. John and Robert McKinney, sons of James McKinney, own and live on the old home farm. Mr. McKinney is a member of Round Hill Presbyterian Church, and has always been identified as one of the democratic party.

William Carson, farmer, postoffice Harmarville, was born in Washington county, Pa., in 1829, a son of James and Catharine (Allingham) Carson. James was born in County Fermanagh, Ireland, emigrated to Washington county in 1819, and later moved to Pittsburgh, where he kept a store for two years. In 1830 he moved to the farm Mr. Carson now owns, and here he died in 1869, aged eighty-three years; his widow died in March, 1887, at the advanced age of ninety-eight years; they were members of the M. E. Church. Mr. Carson received his schooling in Harmar township, and after his father’s death took charge of the farm. He married, in 1869, Maria B. Peeples, of South Side, Pittsburgh, daughter of William and Henrietta (Boggis) Peeples. Mrs. Carson died in 1894, the mother of one child—James A. Mr. Carson’s second marriage took place in 1870, with Jennie Smith, a native of Ireland, and reared in Allegheny City, Pa., daughter of Squire David and Jenn Smith, of that place. One child, William S., has been born to this second union. Mrs. Carson is a member of the R. P. Church. Mr. Carson owns two hundred acres of land and fine buildings. He is a republican.

H. H. Lyon, master-mechanic, Bennett, was born March 14, 1846, in Butler county, Pa. His grandfather, Thomas Lyon, was born April 11, 1779, and was married to Mary Kerr, by whom he had seven children. Their son Henry B. was born June 10, 1819, died Nov. 21, 1879. He was reared in Butler county, where his father was an old settler. In 1858 he came to this county, where he was a teacher for twenty-six years, highly esteemed and honored: was also a measurer of weights and measures of Allegheny county, and clerk in the provost-marshal’s office during the rebellion. He held the office of justice of the peace, was a Presbyterian, in politics a republican. He married Mary A. White, who was born Jan. 20, 1829, and survives him. Their son, H. H. Lyon, the subject of this memoir, worked in the Etna mills as early as 1857. He is a machinist and engineer by trade, and is at present machinist of the Carbon Iron-works, of Pittsburgh. He married Emma, daughter of Richard Danver, one of the first councilmen of Allegheny, and they have three children: Frank K., Harry D. and Richard A.

James McRoberts, farmer, postoffice Harmarville, of Scotch-Irish parentage, came to Pittsburgh June 22, 1830. He married in 1854, Margaret Barton, of this place, daughter of Peter and Catharine (Craig) Barton, who came here from Scotland in 1818. They have four children. Mr. McRoberts is a successful farmer, a republican, and the family are of the United Presbyterian faith.

Andrew Voegtly, farmer, postoffice Harmarville, was born Nov. 11, 1840, in Allegheny City, Pa., a son of Jacob G. Voegtly, a native of Canton Basel, Switzerland. He came to America when a young man and engaged in farming and gardening, at which he was successful. His wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Boyer, bore him six children, who attained maturity: John, Andrew, Matthias, Elizabeth, Maria and Esther. Andrew enlisted in July, 1869, in Co. K, 61st P. V., and served until the close of the struggle, participating in many battles, and was wounded at Cold Harbor. After the war he engaged in farming, which he has continued up to the present time. He married Susannah Kennedy, who bore him four children: Sarah E., Anna M., Mary E. and Andrewewa. The old Voegtly family were members of the G. E. Church (Reformed); Mr. Voegtly is a republican.

John F. McDonald, farmer, postoffice Ross, was born May 25, 1824, in Fayette county, Pa., a son of James McDonald, a native of Fayette county, where the family were old pioneers. James was a shoemaker by trade, was highly respected, and attained to the venerable age of eighty two years; he died in Allegheny City. His wife, Margaret McGinley, died in 1835 in the 60th year of her age. John received sixty-seven years. They reared a family of twelve children, of whom John F. is the youngest. He received a common-school education in his native county, and April 10, 1845, removed to Pittsburgh, where he learned the bricklayer's trade. In March, 1865, he raised a company in the Second ward. Allegheny City, was elected captain and served until the close of the war. In 1866 he came to Ross township, purchased a farm of ninety-eight acres, and engaged at his trade as well as farming. He married Hannah, daughter of Joseph and Hannah (George) Brown, old settlers of Plum township, and by her has children as follows: Hannah B., Ollie N., Jennie M., John F., Jr., Mary L., Eva S., Anna M., Ada B., Edith R., Susie B. Mr. McDonald is a republican, and has been school director for nine years, and secretary of the board for the last six years. He and wife are members of Hilland Presbyterian Church, of which he is an elder.

John Dean, farmer, postoffice Wexford, was born in County Derry, Ireland, in 1824, and is a son of Hans and Esther (Forsyth) Dean. He was born in the county, and emigrated to Butler county, Pa., in 1835. In 1847 Mr. Dean purchased the farm now owned by John, his son, the former dying in 1848, aged sixty-three years, leaving John to pay for the farm. His widow died in 1879, aged eighty-nine years. John received a common-school education in Butler county, and took charge, at his father's death, of the farm of 148 acres, which he now owns. He was first married, in 1856, to Margaret Wallace, of Pine township, daughter of George and Jane (Reynolds) Wallace, and four children were born to them, two of whom, James and Louella, are living. The mother died in 1866, and Mr. Dean was again married, in 1868, to Ellen, daughter of William and Hannah (Reynolds) Parks, of Middlesex, and three children were born to them, one of whom, Hannah Mary, is still living. Mr. and Mrs. Dean are members of the U. P. Church. He is a republican, and has held the offices of assessor and school director.

Theodore Koering, wagon-maker, Wexford, was born in Prussia Oct. 1, 1831, son of John and Mary Ann (Gievers) Koering. His father was born in 1801 in Prussia, and died in 1848; and his mother was born in 1806 in Borgholz, Kreis Warburg, Province of Westphalia, Germany, and died in 1871. Our subject attended the public schools of Germany, and there learned the wagon-maker's trade, serving two years; then served four years in the artillery of the standing army of Germany, being promoted to corporal in second year. He came to Westmoreland county, Pa., in 1861, where he attended St. Vincent College, from which he graduated in 1864. He then located at Wexford, began wagon-making and carpenter-work, and has since continued with good success, as he is well liked by all, and the neighboring public give him extensive patronage. In 1868 he purchased his present property, and erected his wagon- and blacksmith-shop. He is a faithful worker in the Catholic Church, and a member of the democratic party. For a number of years he has given private instruc-

1879, was born March 22, 1835, in Ohio township. His grandfather, Edward O'Neill, a native of Ireland, settled in this country in 1818, where he took up a tract of four hundred acres of land. He died in 1857, aged eighty-four years. His wife, Mary Dulin, was the mother of six children. Of these John, who was born in Ireland in 1800, married Margaret McGee, who survived him, he dying in 1858. They had five children: Edward, James, Mary, Catherine (deceased) and Thomas, who died Feb. 12, 1889. James O'Neill has a fine farm, which he cultivates successfully. He married Miss Elizabeth Miller, and she is the mother of six children: John, Charlie, George, Ella, Willie and Clara. Politically he has identified himself with the democratic party.

Edward Owens, farmer, postoffice Emsworth, was born in 1838, near Northrup, North Wales, where his parents, Robert and Catherine (Lewis) Owens, were industrious farmers. Edward desired to know more of America, and in 1853 came to the United States, where he has since lived. After he first came here he teamed for others, but soon had teams of his own, and hauled coal to the Kensington Mill and Pittsburgh Gas-works. He married Miss Helen McInnell, of Edinburgh, Scotland, and six children have blessed their union, viz.: Elizabeth, Mary, David, Harry, Robert and George. In April, 1882, Mr. Owens came to Ohio township, where he has a fine farm of one hundred acres. He is a self-made man in every respect; he is a republican.

Martha Burtner, farmer, postoffice Natrona, daughter of Jacob and Susan Byerly, was born at Sugar Creek, Venango county, Pa. Her parents afterward removed to Butler county, Pa. June 22, 1841, Martha was married to Jacob Burtner, and they located on the place now owned by her in Harrison township. Following are the names of their ten children: Susan (deceased), John, Margaret J., Isaac P., Jacob H., George H., May L., Martha W., Lewis A. (deceased) and Martin L. Mrs. Burtner has been a widow for twenty-six years; she is a member of the Lutheran Church.

Harry Pearce, hotel-keeper, Acmetonia, was born in Nottinghamshire, England, Dec. 27, 1838, a son of Samuel and Sarah (Slack) Pearce. His father was a weighman at coal-mines, and died in 1844, and his mother in 1845. Harry, who was only six years old when his father died, went to work in the coal-mines, where he remained until 1873. After his mother's death he resided with his grandmother Pearce until he was ten years of age. His grandfather, Harry Pearce, is said to have been a general in the British army, and was twenty years in the West Indies, but deserted and returned to England, where he was killed in a coal-mine in 1838. Our subject's maternal grandparents, Isaac and Susan Slack, natives of Mansfield, England, were silk-weavers. Mr. Pearce is wholly a self-educated man, never having attended school, but is a good reader and writer, and has a fine library. He came to America in 1865, located at McKeesport, but soon after moved to Elk county, where he opened a canal coal-mine. Two years later he went to Wyoming territory, in company with seventeen others, to open mines for the U. P. R. R., and only five of the seventeen returned, the others taking up land there, several being killed by the Indians. In 1873 Mr. Pearce came to Harmarville and conducted a hotel for nine years. He was two years in the same business at Springdale, and built his present hotel at Acme town in 1886. He married, Sept. 20, 1857, Mary Williams, a native of England, and a daughter of Peter and Ann Williams. Thirteen children have been born to this union, seven of whom are deceased. The living are Samuel C., a clerk in county treasurer's office; Sarah H., widow of Harmar D. Wensel; Harry Albert, Thomas A., Joseph C. and Rhoda. Mr. Pearce has two adopted children, James and Jane Haugh. His wife is a member of the Campbellite Baptist Church. He is a republican.

Henry Cessna Foreman, cooper, Harmarville, was born in Allegheny City, Feb. 12, 1845, and is a son of Jacob and Sarah Jane (Allison) Foreman. His father was born in Huntingdon county, Pa., May 21, 1812; in his younger days was a contractor, and is now a carpenter. His mother was born in Pittsburgh Feb. 29, 1820. They now reside in Allegheny, and are members of the Presbyterian church. The paternal grandparents of Henry C., Henry and Mary (Harnish) Foreman, were natives of Huntingdon county, Pa., and our subject's maternal grandparents, John and Jane (Cessna) Allison, were natives of Chambersburg, Pa.; Jane (Cessna) Allison and her husband, were of Virginia descent, walked to Pittsburgh in 1800. Henry C. Foreman, at the age of sixteen, learned the cooper's trade, which he has since followed. In 1871 he took the position, which he still holds, of foreman-cooper at the Allegheny county workhouse. He resided at Claremont until 1884, when he bought his present hotel at Acme town. He married, in 1868, Sarah Ann Covalt, of West Virginia, daughter of James B. and Matilda (Rice) Covalt, former of whom, a mate on the Ohio river, was born in 1822 and died in 1888; latter died when Mrs. Foreman was an infant. Mr. Foreman's grandfather was a soldier in the Revolution, and his wife had several brothers in the civil war, one of whom spent ten months in the Cumberland prison. Mr. and Mrs. Foreman have two sons: Harry Allison and Frank Jacob. The eldest, who is eighteen years of age, is in the employ of the Westinghouse Air-brake Works; is a member of the K. of C. C. of G. E., and several other societies. Mrs. Foreman is a member of the Campbellite Church; also a member of the Knights and Ladies of Honor. Mr. Foreman is a democrat, and a justice of the peace, and is a member of the A. F. & A. M.

Fred Klussmann, brewer, Bennett, was born Sept. 16, 1840, near Bremen, Germany, son of H. Frederick Klussmann, a native of Goslar, in the Hartz mountains, where he was reared. While traveling he (H. Frederick) met the lady who afterward became his wife, Christiana Steile, a native of Hamburg. They settled in Bremen, where he followed the coopersmith's trade. They had seven children: Fred, Charles, Edward, Henry, Annie, Katie and Mary. When the gold fever broke out Mr. Klussmann left on the first vessel for California, and worked successfully in the gold-mines four years. In 1853 he returned to Germany, and returned to this country with his family, settling in Cook county, Ill., where he still resides, engaged in farming. The subject of this memoir was reared and educated in Germany, and at the age of twenty came to Pittsburgh, where he was employed by Adam Baeuerlein, as driver, later as brewer, five years. After a time he moved to Cincinnati, Ohio, and here worked in the largest brewery in the place. Returning to Pittsburgh, he became a partner in the Star Brewery, now the C. Baeuerlein Brewing company, of which Mr. Klussmann is president. He was married twice; his first wife, née Christine Bauer, died leaving one child, Frederick C.; his present wife, née Elizabeth Bauer, is the mother of one son, William C. Mr. Klussmann is a member of the I. O. O. F. and R. A.; he is a republican.

Firmar K. Duff, Allegheny, was born in Huntingdon county, Pa., son of Samuel Duff, of Philadelphia. He received a public-school education, and in 1856 came to Allegheny, where he engaged in the lumber business. He is now in the lime business, being general manager and bookkeeper for the firm of James H. DuBois & Co. He has always had the confidence and esteem of his employers. Mr. Duff was married to Anna, daughter of Samuel Garrison. Of Mr. Duff's posterity only one grandson survives, Hays Junken, who lives with his grandfather.

L. Mason, merchant, Homestead, was born April 7, 1844, in Fairfield county, Ohio. His father, David Mason, the youngest of eight children, was brought to Ohio when two years old. There he reared a family, was a farmer and a good mechanic. The subject of this memoir went to work at an early age on the farm, and when twenty years old enlisted in Co. E, 178th O. V. I., serving in the Army of the Cumberland. After the war he worked a short time for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad company then for the Pan Handle Railroad company ten years and eight months, and while in their employ he was crippled. In February, 1881, he came to Homestead, where he engaged in the grocery business, and for four years was assistant postmaster. He still keeps a grocery- and produce-store. He has been three times married: His first wife, née Rebecca, Barton (deceased), bore him one son, D. F.; his second wife, nee Mary Swisher (deceased), bore him one child, Catharine, and his third wife, nee Maggie Kelle (deceased), bore him three children: Myron E., Martie B. and Edith Mason. Mr. Mason is a member of the I. O. O. F., G. A. R., and is a trustee of the M. E. Church. He has always taken a deep interest in educational and religious matters.

Capt. Samuel W. Ewing, retired, Oakdale, was born in Robinson (now Collier) township in 1818. In or about the year 1775 James Ewing, known in early days as "Squire Ewing," came to Pittsburgh, and soon thereafter moved to Robinson township, to near the present town of Walker's Mills. He purchased a tract of land on Robinson's run, extending on the east and west side of the creek from the present town of Mansfield to Walker's Mills. In this tract were some ninety acres, to which he afterward made additional purchases, owning at one time about two thousand acres. This pioneer farmer and millwright married Mary McKown, who bore him five sons and four daughters. At the death of their father the sons inherited the land. He left five sons—William, Alexander, Samuel, John and James—and four daughters, all of whom reared large families. Samuel, called "Major Sam," married a Miss Letty McCurdy, who lived to the age of one hundred and seven years, and died but three or four years ago. The daughters were married, respectively, to a Mr. Boyd, a Maj. Walker, a Mr. Kelso and a Mr. Fryor. All of old Squire Ewing's children are dead, but he has left many grand and great-grandchildren, dispersed, it is believed, over many of the states and territories; one of them preaches in New Jersey; some of his descendants are in Oregon and in Washington territory. Some three years after the settlement of 'Squire Ewing in Allegheny county, his cousin, Alexander Ewing, came from Eastern Pennsylvania and located near the present town of Oakdale. There he rented a farm and remained four years. He then purchased one hundred acres of land on the Steubenville pike, near what was then the North Star hotel. He married Jane Anderson, and to them were born four children, of whom William was the youngest. Alexander died about 1795.

William was reared on the farm purchased by his father, moved to his wife's property on Pinkerton's run about 1810, built a saw and grist mill and bought several farms. He married Jane, daughter of Isaac Walker, who was the pioneer of the family, and there were born to them seven children, five of whom grew to manhood and womanhood. William died in 1865, aged eighty-two years, and his wife aged sixty-two years. Samuel W., the second son born to William and Jane Ewing, was reared on the farm, and with the exception of a few years he was engaged in carpentering; has always led a farmer's life. In October, 1899, he married Mary Lorane, daughter of Parker Lorane, of an old family of this county. Eight children, six yet living, were born to this union: Margaret, Anna, Emily, Melissa, Martha, Kate, William and Edith. Mr. Ewing has resided on his present farm since 1885. It consists of eighty-one acres, beautifully located. He was captain of militia fifteen years; has held township offices, and is a member of the U. P. Church. In politics he has always adhered strongly to the principles of the democratic party.

Isaac Ewing, the eldest son of William and Jane (Walker) Ewing, was born in 1811, and reared on a farm, the pursuits of which he has always followed. He was educated at a log school, and has been hardworking and industrious. He married, in 1834, Margaret Drake, daughter of Jacob and Ann (Barkley) Drake. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Ewing, five of whom are yet living: Jane (Mrs. Williams), Margaret, Joseph, Mary and Melinda. The parents are members of the U. P. Church; he is a democrat. Mr. Ewing has lived on his present farm since 1838, eighty-six acres of which was the property inherited by his mother, and part of the original land of Isaac Walker.

Ernest J. Salt, contractor, Bennett, was born Nov. 21, 1833, in Staffordshire, England, son of William H. and Jane (Roden) Salt, the former of whom came to America in 1865, settling in this county, and following year sent for his family to join him. Their children are William, Sarah and Ernest J. The subject of this memoir is a butcher by trade, which he followed for thirteen years. Since 1879 he has been engaged with Miller, Metcalf & Parkins, of the Pittsburgh steel company, being the contractor for the last four years. Mr. Salt was married Nov. 29, 1872, to Miss Mary J. Hepplewhite, a native of England, and they are the parents of four children: William E., Edith, Ella M. and Garfield. Mr. Salt is a republican, and a member of the Masonic fraternity.

James Large, farmer, postoffice Gill Hall, son of Jonathan and Easter (Finney) Large, was born in Milfillin township, in March, 1831, on the place called Blue Ball, and now owned by Henry Large. His grandfather, John Large, located on Ginger hill, then removed to Coal hill, and later bought a farm near Lebanon church, which he sold to Jonathan. John Large has but two surviving children, Henry (of Milfillin township) and Margaret (of Crawford county, Iowa). When James was two years old, his parents moved to Jefferson township, and located on Ferry's purchase. Here James remained, and in 1853 married Margaret C., daughter of John and Margaret (Gap) Payne, of Milfillin (now Jefferson) township. Previous to the rebellion Mr. Large was identified with the state militia, having served as major on the staff of Brig.-Gen. James S. Negley, and was also a member of a company of artillery for a period of nine years. In 1862 he visited Venango county, then the center of the oil interest, and cultivated in Co. G, 11th P. V.
was wounded in battle of second Bull Run; was sent to hospital, received a sixty-days furlough, which was extended for sixty days more, then returned to the hospital, and received his discharge in 1863. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Large are John P. (a graduate of Wilmington College, who returned to his home an invalid, and afterward died), James B., Cyrus B., Levi B. F. Mr. and Mrs. Large are members of Jefferson U. P. Church. He has held various positions in his township; was democratic, and is now a prohibitionist. He has an elegant home, and surrounds himself with the luxuries that wealth can procure.

Thomas W. Shaw was born May 1, 1796, in Pittsburgh, Pa., where his father, John Shaw, had a nursery. The genealogy of the Shaw family dates back to four brothers—George, a cabinet-maker, of Philadelphia; Peter, a tanner, of Meadville, Pa.; Alexander and John, who settled in Pittsburgh. They were natives of Glasgow, Scotland, where they all learned their trades. Alexander and John being blacksmiths. Just after the revolutionary war they came to America, where they all married and had children. John Shaw lived in Wilkinsburg several years, and then came to Pittsburgh, where he followed the blacksmith’s trade, and ironed the first cannon cast in Pittsburgh. He made a great many hoes for plantation use in the south. In 1803 he moved to Glenshaw, where he followed his trade; also had a flour- and saw-mill on Pine Creek; here he died in August, 1839. He was a whig, and an elder of the Presbyterian Church.

Thomas W., the subject of this sketch, was eldest of a family of seven children, learned the sickle-maker’s trade with Colonel Mcllhaney, and followed the business for forty years, making as many as one thousand dozen per year. The old factory is still standing, and was afterward used as a meeting-house.

He married Sarah, daughter of Samuel Scott, and to them were born eight children: Thomas W., Elizabeth, Margaret, Sarah Jane (deceased), Martha, Mary Scott, Ellen K., Catherine Louisa (died in infancy). Since the war he has lived a retired life. He was a whig and is now republican. He has always been a Presbyterian.

John Graham Armstrong, merchant, Acmetonia, was born at Harmarville, Sept. 24, 1859, a son of James and Eleanor Armstrong. He attended school until thirteen years of age, and then began to work his own way in the world. During the first two years he worked on a farm, and at fifteen was employed by the Montrose Land company, for whom he worked one year. He then learned the trade of plasterer and paper-hanger, and worked with his father four years. He next entered public life, and for about three years was an officer at the Allegheny county workhouse under John L. Kendall. Married to Miss Angeline Armstrong Brothers’ store at Acmetonia, being one of three partners. They carry a large and general stock, and have a trade of about one thousand dollars per month. Mr. Armstrong married, Sept. 22, 1887, Mary Ida Denny, of Hite, Pa., daughter of George Denny, an early settler at that place. One child, Fanny Fern, has been born to this union. Mrs. Armstrong is a member of the M. E. Church. Mr. Armstrong is a republican, has been judge of election, also inspector; he is a Freemason.

William W. Donald, farmer, postoffice Essen, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, in 1835. His father, Thomas, came to America with his wife, née Jane Boyd, and three children, in 1854. He was a farmer and purchased two farms, one in Allegheny and one in Armstrong county. He died in 1865, aged fifty-one years. William W. was educated in the schools of his native land; has always followed farming, and since 1866 has resided at his present home. He has never married, but lives with his aunt, Mrs. Mary (widow of James C. May), who has resided at the homestead for a number of years. Mr. Donald is a member of the U. P. Church, and is a democrat.

John A. Chambers, farmer, postoffice Coal Valley, a son of William and Lydia Chambers, was born on the farm which he now owns, in Jefferson township. His grandfather, John Chambers, was born in Ireland, and came to America. He enlisted in the revolutionary war, serving one year, and was wounded. He located in Maryland for a short time, afterward came to Allegheny county, Pa., and settled where John A. Chambers now lives. Upon this place William, father of John A., was born, and remained here with the exception of two years until he was married. During that time he purchased a farm in Greene county, but returned to his old home and married Lydia Clark, of West Virginia. Their children are Easter A. (now Mrs. Henry Dusenberry, of Jefferson township), Sarah B. (now Mrs. Samuel Morrison, of Jefferson township) and John A. (married to Ellen Shepela, of Jefferson township). The children of our subject are William H., George, John C. and Harry. The farm of John A. Chambers is now in possession of the third generation.

Samuel C. Rankin, farmer, postoffice Buena Vista, is a grand-nephew of William Rankin, one of the early settlers of Allegheny county, who emigrated from Ireland in the latter part of the last century, and settled upon what now forms a part of the present home of the subject of this sketch. The father of Samuel C. was Robert Rankin, a native of Ireland, who came to this country in 1839, and engaged in farming with Maj. John Rankin, a soldier of the war of 1812, and a son of William Rankin. The mother of our subject was Margaret Culbert, a daughter of Thomas Culbert, a prominent citizen of Donegal, Ireland. Samuel C. Rankin was born in Ireland, and emigrated to America three miles from Londonderry, Aug. 4, 1839, and was partly educated in his native land, completing his educipation in the public schools of Allegheny county. He early engaged in farming, which he still follows. He was elected poor-director of his county in 1883, serving two years, and is at present treasurer of his township, a position he has filled for many years. Mr. Rankin married, in 1853, Rebecca, daughter of Samuel and Martha Williamson, of Elizabeth township, and by her has had five children: Robert C., an attorney in McKeesport, engaged in the practice of his profession; John W., Mary M., Samuel H. and Maggie J.

George Gladden, M. D., Homestead, was born in Washington county, Pa. The progenitor of the Gladden family in America was William W. Gladden, who came from England and settled east of the mountains in Pennsylvania. He was a soldier in the Revolution, fighting for freedom and his adopted country. He reared a family of eight children. His son Richard married Mary Kelso, and both died in Washington county, where Richard was a stockman. Our subject received his literary education at Washington and Jefferson College, and his medical education at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, graduating in the class of 1875. Dr. Gladden married Francis Virginia Williams, of Richmond, Va., a member of one of the best old Virginia families. In 1881 the doctor located in Homestead, where he rapidly built up a good practice, and has been surgeon for the Carnegie, Phipps & Co. steel-mills. Dr. Gladden is a leading member of many societies, among which are the A. F. & A. M., I. O. O. F., R. A., American Mechanics and Heptasophas, having been a past officer in several of the orders.

Alexander Hughes, farmer, postoffice Lewis, was born in Pittsburg in 1837, son of Johnston and Martha (Wallace) Hughes, natives of County Donegal, Ireland. His father died July 7, 1873, aged ninety-seven years, and his mother April 16, 1858, aged sixty-five years. Johnston Hughes was twice married; first in Donegal, Ireland, to a Miss Shaw, and came to America in 1818, settling in Washington county, Pa., where she died, leaving two children, Samuel and Thomas, former of whom was a farmer, and he is now living retired with his daughter in Ohio; Thomas died some time ago. The father married, in 1822, for second wife, Martha Wallace, who bore him five children: Benjamin, James, Alexander, John and Mary. Benjamin was a soldier in the Mexican war, and his body lies buried near the Rio Grande; John died in West Deer township, in his twenty-second year; James lives on part of the old homestead; Mary moved to East Liberty in 1868, where she bought property. The father owned a distillery and farm for some time in Washington county, and moving to Pittsburgh was there employed in the iron-works for some years. Later he moved his family to East Liberty, and in 1838 to Pine township, where he remained eleven years. In 1849 he came to West Deer township, where his sons James and Alexander bought a large tract of land, which remained in their father's name until his death, when it was divided between the two sons.

Alexander was married to Annie Jane Wilson, a native of County Monaghan, Ireland, and daughter of William and Mary (Henry) Wilson, who came to this county in 1849, settling in Middlesex township, Butler county, where the father died, in 1851; the mother, now (1880) in her eighty-third year, lives with her daughter, Mrs. Hughes. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Hughes are Annie Mary, Lydia Martha and John Alexander. The family are members of Bakers-town Presbyterian Church, of which Mr. Hughes has been an elder for several years. He is a democrat, and was school director two years. He owns a farm of 120 acres, with good buildings.

William J. Fryer, farmer, postoffice Woodville, was born in this county in 1859, the eldest son in a family of four children born to William and Elizabeth (McMillen) Fryer. Two of their children are now living. The grandfather, William Fryer, the pioneer of the family, purchased 450 acres of land in Scott township, where he died, and the house situated on this property was erected on the old foundation-walls where the memorable whisky insurrection took place. William married Annie Middleswort, and they had six children: Moses and Leonard (twins), William, Elizabeth, Liza and Jonathan. William, Jr., died April 3, 1866, aged thirty years; his widow, Elizabeth, died in 1873, aged thirty-five years. They had four sons: William, Jr., Jonathan, Sydney and Dallas, of whom William J. and Sydney are now living. William J. was reared on the farm which he owns, containing 160 acres, part of what his grandfather had purchased. He married, in 1880, Annie Coulter, daughter of Goodman Y. Coulter, of this county, and is the father of four children: Elizabeth, William Goodman, Joseph Chess and Julia Adella. Mr. Fryer is a member of the M. E. Church; politically he is a prohibitionist.

Samuel Hindman, farmer, postoffice Monongahela City, is a son of Robert and Hannah (Pollock) Hindman, and was born on the farm now owned by him, in Forward township. His father was born in Washington county, and died in 1849. His mother, who is still living, was born in what was Mercer (now Lawrence) county. John Hindman, his grandfather, came from Maryland, and settled in Washington county, about the year 1800. Robert's family consisted of Margaret J., John, William S., Robert P., Sarah J. and Samuel. All are deceased but Samuel, who married, in 1866, Mary, daughter of Col. David A. and Elizabeth J. Lecky. This family figured prominently in the rebellion, David A. being a lieutenant-colonel of the 100th (Roundhead) regiment P. V., and William S., a member of Co. E, 155th P. V., lost his life from the effects of a wound received at North Anna river, Va., May 23, 1864, amputation being necessary, resulting in his death. The children of Mr. Hindman are Lillie Deane, William S. and Marion L.; Lillie D. is deceased. Mr. Hindman is a republican, and has been the servant of an appreciative constituency on various occasions. He and wife are members of the Presbyterian Church.

SAMUEL NIXON, who resides in the vicinity of Mansfield Valley, is a native of this county, born in 1811, the youngest of the six children of Thomas and Jane (Lee) Nixon. Thomas Nixon was a native of New Jersey, and when a boy came with his mother to this county. Early in life he learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed for some time, but later engaged in farming. He married Jane Lee, born in 1774, and daughter of Maj. William Lee; she was the first white child born in Chartiers valley. Thomas Nixon died in 1813, aged forty years; his widow in 1859, aged eighty-five years. The subject of this sketch, the only surviving member of this family, was but two years old when his father died, and he was reared in a log cabin on a farm. He was a natural mechanic, having been in his day ready at carpentering and all kinds of work in wood. He married, in 1839, Jane, daughter of Thomas G. and Elizabeth (Russell) Steel, and granddaughter of Capt. David Steel, who was an officer in the Revolution for six years, serving his country with distinction and honor. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Nixon, of whom three sons and five daughters are now living, viz.: Thomas S., William W., S. Smith, D. Ada Nixon, Harriet Holland, Jane Silk, Maria Carnahan and Lizzie Oliver. Mr. Nixon has resided in his present home for thirty-four years. He has always been a hardworking man, and has acquired his possessions by his own exertions. He is a devout and faithful Christian, a member of the M. E. Church, in which he has held the office of trustee and steward for forty years. In politics he was first a federalist, then a whig and anti-mason, and lastly a republican.

DANIEL BENNETT, glass manufacturer, Carrick, was born April 12, 1815, at Staplehill, England, a son of Daniel and Martha (Webster) Bennett, former of whom was a local minister of the M. E. Church for more than fifty years, and exerted a powerful influence for good. Daniel Bennett, whose name heads this memoir, emigrated to America in 1841 with his wife, Catherine Bates, and two children, Mark J. and Ely. He had learned the potter's trade in England, and shortly after his arrival here, in partnership with his brothers, James, Edwin and William, he operated the last successful pottery in East Liverpool, Ohio. In 1844 the same firm started a second pottery on the South Side, and conducted it successfully until it finally became converted into the Crystal Glass company, of which Mr. Bennett is president. After the death of his first wife he married Ann Burgess, and their children are Howard and Albert D.; his third marriage was with Phoebe Burgess. Mr. Bennett is a member of the M. E. Church, and has been an active worker in both church and Sabbath-school, having been superintendent of the latter. Mrs. Bennett is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

JACOB W. COOK (deceased) was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1819, son of George H. and Rachel (Hoffman) Cook, latter of whom was a native of New York, and a daughter of Judge Hoffman. At the age of thirteen Jacob W. came to Pittsburgh and entered the banking-house of his brother, George A. Cook, in 1822. Upon the death of his brother he opened a book- and periodical-store at No. 55 Fourth avenue, but on April 10, 1845, in the great fire of that date, his place was destroyed, and he lost all. Tuesday, May 21, 1844, Mr. Cook married Elveril H. McKown, eldest daughter of Maj. Thomas McKown, and to them were born six children, as follows: E. S., residing with his mother at Mansfield, and who has held prominent positions in the borough, such as burgess, councilman and school director; Lillie R., wife of D. B. Stewart, who is connected with the Northwestern Ohio Gas company; George A., who entered the Allegheny National Bank at the age of fourteen, holding the office of cashier at the time of his death, Oct. 4, 1857; Annie W., wife of Samuel D. Culbertson, local freight agent for the Junction railroad; Jacob Wallace, and Thomas McKown, a member of the firm of Chess, Cook & Co., who married the eldest daughter of Joseph Walton, the coal-man, and is now residing in Allegheny City.

In 1847 Jacob W. Cook engaged in the banking business, being the senior partner in the firm of Cook & Harris. He continued in this firm until 1852, when the partnership was dissolved, and in the year following he entered the banking-house of N. Holmes, on Market street, where he remained until Sept. 9, 1857, when he was elected cashier of the Allegheny Bank, then on Federal street, Allegheny City. He held the position of cashier until the time the bank became the Allegheny National, when he was elected its president, a position he held until his death. In 1856 Mr. Cook moved to Mansfield (in that spring the Pittsburgh & Steubenville railroad was to have been finished), and for nearly nine years he drove from Mansfield to his place of business in Pittsburgh, during which time, although his health was not good, he missed but very few days. So regular was he in his journey back and forth that people were in the habit of setting their clocks by him as he passed their doors. In 1865, in company with Robert J. Anderson and William Wood, he bought out the firm of Jones, Boyd & Co., and started the Pittsburgh Steel-works, under the firm name of Anderson, Cook & Co., at the corner of Ross and Grant streets. After the dissolution of this partnership he became a member of the firm of Chess, Cook & Co., manufacturers of nails and tacks, and was a member of that firm at the time of his death. He died at his home in Mansfield borough, Jan. 25, 1883, leaving a widow and five children.

Hugh Lee (deceased) was born in Washington county, Pa., Nov. 14, 1816, a son of Hugh Lee, Sr., and died May 5, 1885. Hugh Lee, Sr., came to Washington county, Pa., from Ireland about 1798, and purchased two hundred acres of land, then known as "Holmes' Victory," named in honor of James Holmes, who settled it in 1774. Hugh, Sr., married in 1804, and became the father of eleven children, three of whom grew to maturity. Hugh, Jr., came in 1840 to Allegheny county, and engaged in the wool trade, at which he was successful. He afterward embarked in the oil and coal business, but over-confidence in trusted friends caused him to lose considerable money. He married, Feb. 3, 1840, Phoebe Genevieve Averill, daughter of Thomas and Mary Averill, of New York. One son, William H., born in 1860, blessed their union; he was educated at the Western University of Pennsylvania, and was married in 1887 to Martha J. Davis, daughter of David and Fannie Davis. They have one child, Phoebe Genevieve.

The subject of this sketch removed to Mansfield in 1854, and from that time until his death resided here. He joined the Second Presbyterian Church of Allegheny City, and, on removing to Mansfield, connected himself with the newly organized Presbyterian Church here, of which he was elected ruling elder in 1855. On Aug. 8, 1857, he was appointed aid-de-camp on the staff of Gov. Pollock, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel. In 1856 he purchased a ranch in Texas, and was one of the first to import fine wool sheep into that state. When the rebellion broke out, the confederacy confiscated the property and all on it, four thousand head of sheep and one hundred head of horses and cattle. Mr. Lee was a man of great force of character, wise in counsel, intense in purpose, and a strong supporter of his church in its days of greatest need. One of the oldest residents of the community, widely known and influential, his death was deeply regretted. His widow and son survive him.

Gabriel Walker, farmer, postoffice Noblestown, was born in Allegheny county, Pa., in 1828. At an early date four brothers named Walker came to Allegheny county from Lancaster county, Joseph and Gabriel being the names of two of them. Gabriel purchased a large tract of land on Robinson's creek. His son Gabriel, born in 1833, was reared on this tract, became a farmer, and married Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Walker. Of their children, Gabriel, whose name heads this sketch, is now the only surviving member of the family. For a number of years he has followed sheep-raising and dairy business, and has been very successful. He married Levina Hastings, daughter of John Hastings, of Washington county, and seven children have been born to them, six of whom are living, viz.: Ida J., Clara, H. P., Newton, Lawrence S. and Wilder J. Mr. Walker has served as school director. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church; politically a republican.

Josiah Walker is a direct descendant of Joseph Walker, one of the four pioneer brothers who took up large tracts of land on Robinson's creek. The pioneer, Joseph, had a family of seven children, of whom the eldest, Joseph, born in 1777, died in 1860. He married Mary Glenn, to whom were born eleven children, of whom seven are yet living: Joseph, John, James, Josiah, Mary (Mrs. Elliott), Rebecca and Letitia J. Of these, Josiah and two sisters live on the old homestead, which contains two hundred acres, and is part of the tract purchased by his grandfather. Ezekiel, a brother, died in March, 1888.

George Z. Hosack, superintendent of store and coalworks, Putnam, is a native of Mercer county, Pa., born in 1858, and is a son of Dr. J. P. Hosack, who was for many years a practicing physician of Mercer county. George Z. was educated at Westminster College, in Lawrence county, Pa., which institution he left in 1890 to take the position he is so very ably filling. He was elected, in 1887, burgess of Chartiers, by the largest majority ever given in the borough. Mr. Hosack married, in 1888, Miss Sadie E., daughter of Joseph K. Cubbage, of an old and representative family in this section of Allegheny county, and two children, Joseph K. and Margaret F., have been born to them. Mr. Hosack is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and senior warden of his lodge. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church; he is a former elder.

Wrenshall Family. John Wrenshall, son of Thomas and Margaret Wrenshall, was born in Preston, England, Dec. 27, 1761. He was married Oct. 6, 1783, to Mary, daughter of Mathew and Sarah Bennington, of Halifax, Yorkshire, England. July 22, 1794, he, in company with his wife and three daughters, Margaret Sarah, Mary Bennington and Julia, embarked from Liverpool, England, and Oct. 15, 1794, landed in Philadelphia. There were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wrenshall, in America, the following-named children: Fannie Emily, Sarah and John Fletcher. The last named was born in Pittsburgh, Feb. 18, 1835. John Wrenshall, the pioneer of this family in America, settled at an early day in Pittsburgh. He was an extensive merchant, and for some years was engaged in business in Philadelphia. He died in Pittsburgh, Sept. 25, 1821. At Woodville, Pa., Sept. 19, 1832, John Fletcher Wrenshall married Mary Ann, a daughter of Christopher and Eliza M. (Kirkpatrick) Cowan. There were born to Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Wrenshall eight children, as follows: John Cowan (now of Baltimore, Md.), Eliza M. (deceased), Charles Christopher (a resident of Alabama), Edward (of Washington), Mary Bennington (at home), Bessie (Mrs. A. G. Barnett, a resident of Woodville), Richard Cowan (of Sewickley, Allegheny county, Pa.), William Ebb's (at home).

John F. Wrenshall was for many years prominently identified with the manufacturing business of Pittsburgh. In 1882 he removed with his family to Woodville farm, his wife's estate, a farm of two hundred acres, which was part of a one-thousand-acre tract owned by his father-in-law, Christopher Cowan, who got the land from his uncle, Gen. Neville. On Woodville farm still stands the old mansion erected by Gen. Neville, now occupied by the Wrenshall family. This mansion is still in a good state of preservation; it was erected before the whisky insurrection, and in many of the windows the glass bears the names of members of the Neville family, which dates as far back as 1811. The Wrenshall family are among the most prominent of the county. They are members of the M. E. Church.

J. L. Robertson, superintendent of company store, Etna, was born in Steubenville, Ohio, and educated there. He moved to Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1849, and engaged as clerk with McCandless, Jamison & Co., and B. C. Shacklel & Co. He came to Etna in 1854, and took charge of the Spang, Chaliant & Co. store. He began with two clerks, but the business has steadily increased, and he now has ten clerks employed. He has the entire control of the store.

William Cooper, Shoustown, was born in Findlay township, this county, Oct. 23, 1822, a son of Robert and Elizabeth (Gaunce) Cooper, also natives of Findlay township. His grandfather, Robert Cooper, a Presbyterian from the north of Ireland, settled in Findlay township; he married, in Ireland, Nancy Bell. William Cooper's maternal grandfather, Benjamin Gaunce, a native of Germany, also settled in Findlay township. Robert Cooper was a blacksmith and owner of a farm; his wife was a member of the Presbyterian Church. They had a family of six sons and three daughters—Jane, who married Andrew Read; John; Mary A., married to George Eaton; Adeline, married to Edward McGinnis; William, Benjamin, James, Richard and Nicholas. William remained at home with his father until he was sixteen years old. The latter then moving to Portage county, Ohio, William went to live with his grandmother on the farm. He married, Sept. 19, 1851, Agnes Gaunce, who was born in Findlay township, this county, a daughter of Benjamin and Agnes (Cooper) Gaunce. After his marriage Mr. Cooper farmed in Findlay township until 1860, when he moved to Shoustown and teamed until boat-building ceased, since when he has been engaged in various pursuits. He and his wife have had five children: Kate [at home; Agnes M., wife of William Hahn, in Shoustown; Lizzie M., with her uncle and aunt in Moon township; Emma B. and Della E., at home with their parents. Mr. and Mrs. Cooper are members of the Presbyterian Church. He was first a whig, and a republican since the organization of that party.

Joseph P. Higbee, farmer, postoffice Upper St. Clair, was born in this county in 1812, a grandson of Obadiah Higbee, who, in 1784, came to Allegheny county, purchased 150 acres, and here remained until his death. He married Annie Brown, who bore him nine children. His son, Obadiah, was born Feb. 12, 1782, in the present town of New Brunswick, N. J., and married Sarah, daughter of Squire Joseph Phillips. To them were born eleven children, Joseph P. being the third son. Obadiah, Jr., always followed farming, and died in 1866. Joseph P. was born and reared on the present farm in Upper St. Clair township, and with the exception of a couple of years has always resided there. He married, in 1841, Abigail, daughter of Joseph Higbee, and four children have blessed their union: J. B., a member of the firm of Bryce, Higbee & Co., glass-manufacturers, Homestead, Pa.; Elizabeth C., who died in 1878; Sarah L., living with her father, the widow of George H. Kelso and the mother of four children; Clarinda C., married to William W. Lesnett, a farmer near Bridgeville, this county. Mr. Higbee has retired from work on the farm, and has been successful; he is a republican. Mr. Higbee is descended from Peter Higbee, who, with his brother Elisha, settled in New Jersey; they were sons of an Englishman who came to this country in the beginning of the eighteenth century. On his mother's side Mr. Higbee is of Welsh descent. Her grandparents, Joseph and Mary Phillips, emigrated from Wales about the middle of the eighteenth century and settled in Lancaster county, Pa., where they died in prosperous circumstances, leaving their offspring well off.

Matthew J. Taylor, farmer, postoffice Wilkinsburg, is a grandson of Samuel Taylor, who came from the eastern part of Pennsylvania some time previous to 1736, that being the date of the land-patent. He was of Scotch descent; served in the American army during the Revolution, and died early in this century, at an advanced age. Mr. McCown, maternal grandfather of Matthew J., came here from Ireland soon after Samuel Taylor. Hugh Taylor, son of Samuel, married Nancy, daughter of Mr. McCown, and to them was born, in 1883, the subject of this sketch. Mrs. Jamieson, mother of Samuel Taylor's wife, was killed and scalped by the Indians in this county. Hugh Taylor remained all his life on this farm, and died in 1863, aged seventy-seven years. He was a Covenanter, a whig, an abolitionist and a republican. He had sons and daughters, as follows, all of whom but one grew to maturity: Samuel J., an architect, who died in 1886, at Wilkinsburg; James H., a farmer, residing at Athens, Mo.; John, a plasterer, at East Liberty; William M., a plasterer, killed on the P. B. B., Aug. 28, 1888; Matthew J.; Charles C., an attorney, who died in Pittsburgh; Eliza J., who died unmarried; Sarah N., at home. Samuel J., William M., Charles C., James H. and John were Union soldiers during the civil war. Matthew J. has always remained on the home farm. He married, in 1869, Sarah J. Scott, born in Elizabeth township, a daughter of Col. James and Mary (Kirk) Scott, of Irish and Scotch descent, and they have three children: Corninne M., James Marshall and Mary Agnes. The family are associated with Beulah Presbyterian Church; Mr. Taylor is a republican.

Levi J. Stewart, farmer, postoffice Imperial, was born on the old homestead of his grandfather, in Findlay township, March 10, 1848, a son of John Mc. and Margaret (Armor) Stewart, latter of whom was born in Findlay township. John Mc. Stewart was a son of John and Elizabeth (Glass) Stewart, who were members of the Presbyterian Church and early settlers of Findlay township. John Mc. and Margaret (Armor) Stewart settled on their farm in Findlay township, where they died, members of the Presbyterian Church. They had four children: William A. (who died aged eighteen), Levi J., Matilda J. (wife of Thomas Nichol, of Beaver county) and Agnes M. (wife of John Moody, in Robinson township, this county). The mother of these children died in 1856, and Mr. Stewart married Sarah McBride, of Burgettstown, who had one son, George B. Stewart, who died March 10, 1877.

Levi J. Stewart married, Oct. 12, 1876, Allie J. Hays, who was born at Hays' Crossing, Allegheny county, daughter of William V. and Emily (Loraine) Hays. Mr. and Mrs. Levi J. Stewart have four children: Myrtle E., John H., Jay V. and Emily W. The parents are members of the Presbyterian Church.

Jonathan Akin (original spelling, Aitkin), farmer, postoffice Remington. William Akin, the early pioneer of this family, came to Allegheny county from Ireland at an early period, and purchased a large tract of land near the present town of Mansfield. His wife's maiden name was McKinnis, and to them were born two sons and four daughters, William, born in 1799, being the elder of the sons. He married Hanna, daughter of John Phillips, and two sons and one daughter were born to them. William died in 1829. Jonathan Akin was born in 1829, and received his education at the common schools of the township. He married Eavine Nickle, daughter of John Nickle, and to them were born the following named children: James, Agnes Ellen (Mrs. Bell) Lillie (at home), and John Albert (a student at Westminster College, Lawrence county, Pa.). Mr. Akin now owns over one hundred acres of land, all except a few acres of which was originally the property of his grandfather Phillips. With the exception of two years spent in California, he has lived continuously on his present farm. He is an elder in the U. P. Church, and is a republican.

Aaron M. Work, retired, Beamville, son of John and Mary (Stewart) Work, was born July 16, 1818, in Jefferson township, on the farm he recently sold to J. W. Snee. Aaron Work, his grandfather, first settled in Bethel (formerly Upper St. Clair) township, where he lived about one year. He then purchased the farm above mentioned, in 1796, but died, however, before taking possession. Aaron M. Work's grandfather on his mother's side, George Stewart, was originally from the state of New Jersey; on coming to this state he bought and settled on a large tract of land at or near what is now known as McDonald's station, on the line of the P. & C. & St. L. R. After a residence in this place of about four years he removed to Brooke county, W. Va., where he resided until his death. He was a colonel in the revolutionary war. John Work came here when eight years of age with his parents. He married and became the father of the following named children: Susan, now Mrs. Snodgrass, of Columbiana county, Ohio; Sarah, now Mrs. George Snee; Margaret, the late Mrs. Wilson, of Jefferson township; Jane, the late Mrs. J. M. Broady of Westmoreland county; Mary, deceased; Aaron M., of Jefferson township; Eliza, now Mrs. Ramsey, of Columbiana county, Ohio, and John, deceased. The father died in April, 1867, and the mother on May 28, 1898.

Aaron M. married, March 17, 1842, Mary, daughter of Jacob and Susan Andres, the latter still living at the age of eighty-eight years; the former is deceased. After marriage our subject and wife settled in Westmoreland county, but the death of a brother compelled his return to the old homestead, where he resided until he sold it. Their children were Wilson S., now in Cincinnati, Ohio; John C., of Baldwin township; S. A., of Philadelphia; Alfred A., of Washington county; K. S., of Tuscola county, Mich.; Mary H., now Mrs. J. H. McClure, of Homestead; Sue A., now Mrs. W. E. Kelly, of New York. Mr. and Mrs. Work are members of the Presbyterian Church.

David H. Walker, Option, the son of Jonathan and Jane (Payne) Walker, was born in his present home, Pleasant Hill, Jefferson township, Jan. 28, 1855. His great-great-grandfather, William Walker, was a native of England. He served as lieutenant in Queen Anne's army during her war with Germany, and came to this country in 1710. He was married to Elizabeth Curry, who was of English parentage. His great-grandfather, William Walker, was born in Lancaster county, Pa., in 1721. He married Elizabeth Hoge, who was born in Chester county, Pa., in 1729; she was of Scottish parentage. His grandfather, William Walker, was born in Cumberland county, Pa. He came to Western Pennsylvania in 1795. His brother-in-law, John Reed, took out a patent called Reedsburg, in 1778, which William Walker bought in 1796 for $1,089 10s. The farm is still in the possession of the family, being occupied by the fourth generation. He married Mary Reed June 9, 1777. "In the revolutionary struggle he voluntarily stepped forward as one of the defenders of his country, and was in battles of the Brandywine and Gulf Mills. On the retreat of the Americans from Philadelphia he had his sword-scabbard shot from his side." He died in the eightieth year of his age. His family were William, David, John, Jonathan, Hannah, Mary and Eliza. William removed to Cincinnati, where he died. David married and had his home in Washington county, Pa., where he died. John died at home. Hannah married William McDowell, and died in Braddock, Pa. Mary married Charles McCready, of Fairfield, Westmoreland county, Pa., where she died. Eliza married John Morton, of Mingo, Washington county, Pa., where she died.

Jonathan, father of D. H., was born in 1797; he married, May 29, 1821, Jane Payne. She was born in York county, Pa., in 1794, of English parentage. Their children were William (whose home is still with D. H.), Joseph P. (deceased), Mary R. (now Mrs. D. C. Hultz, of Allegheny City), Susan B. (wife of W. N. Miller, M. D., South Pittsburgh, died 1870), Eliza J. (married to F. G. Schiebler, of Pittsburgh, died in 1875). The father died June 22, 1840, the mother June 27, 1851.

In 1865 D. H. married Anna, daughter of James Blair, of Ravensvale, Jefferson township. Mr. Blair was born on the island of Jamaica in 1799. He and Mrs. Blair were of Scotch-Irish descent. William, D. H. and wife still reside in the old home with their four sons: James Blair, William Hultz, Thomas Holmes and David Harold. The connection mentioned were all Presbyterians. D. H. and family are members of Lebanon Presbyterian Church.

James Martin, retired, Mount Lebanon, was born in the northern part of Scotland, in 1813, and came to America in 1832. He is the eldest son of James and Jennett (Urquhart) Martin, who were the parents of six children. James, Sr., was a farmer, emigrated to America, and settled in Jefferson county, Ohio, where he died in 1839. The subject of this sketch was educated at the public schools in Scotland, and his principal occupation has been contracting, at which he has been very successful. He was twice married; first in 1838, to Nancy Elliott, and second, to Nancy, daughter of John McKnight. Mr. Martin has a farm in Scott township, the work on which he superintends. He has lived at Mount Lebanon since 1874, retired from all active pursuits, enjoying the benefits of a successful business life. He and Mrs. Martin are members of the U. P. Church; he is a prohibitionist.

John Mueller, farmer, postoffice Natrona, was born in Alsace, Germany, in 1846, and came to America in 1867, settling in Allegheny City, where he was variously employed. In 1889 he married Theresa Her-since when he has continued practice in Pittsburgh and Mansfield, having an office at each place. Mr. Cooke was married in 1874 to Kate E. McClusky, also of Washington county, and one child, Mary Gertrude, was born to them. Mr. Cooke is solicitor for the town of Mansfield and Chartiers borough. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and a republican.

John Hardy (deceased) was born in County Armagh, Ireland, in 1828. His father, George Hardy, married Rose Mains, who bore him eight children. George was a merchant in Ireland, and died in 1888, aged forty-five years; his widow died at the age of seventy-three years. The subject of this note was educated at the academy in his native town, and from early life was engaged in mercantile business, in which he was successful. He married, in 1852, Sarah Woodhouse, also a native of Ireland; and six children (one deceased) were born to them: Mary, Elizabeth, Jessie Rose, Annie W., George and Robert J. Mr. Hardy came to America in 1883, and purchased property in Mansfield. His two sons are engaged in business, R. J. Hardy being a druggist in Mansfield and part owner of the Shamrock Fertilizer-works near Mansfield. George Hardy is also in the drug business at Crafton, a few miles from Mansfield. All the family are members of the Episcopal Church.

Mark Robb, farmer, postoffice McDonald. John Robb, a farmer, the pioneer of this family, came to Allegheny county from Lancaster county, Pa., about 1774, and purchased 333 acres of land in Fayette (now North Fayette) township. He was the father of eight sons and two daughters. John, the second son, was born in Lancaster county in 1758, and died in 1848. He married Jane, daughter of George Kelso, of Bucks county, a native of Scotland, and the many adventures of these families in their homes in Western Pennsylvania would prove interesting. Two only of this family now remain. Mark, the youngest living, was born in 1807, was reared on or near his present home, and owns 175 acres of the original purchase of his grandfather. He married, in 1888, Jane S. Donaldson, daughter of Andrew Donaldson, to whom he bore four children, two now living: John S., attorney at law, and James, at home. Mr. and Mrs. Robb celebrated their golden wedding on the 31st of May, 1888. Mr. Robb has followed farming principally through life, but now lives retired. He is a member of the U. P. Church, and is a republican.

Hon. Vincent Miller, farmer, postoffice McDonald, was born in Mt. Pleasant, Washington county, Pa., in 1850. The original member of the family who came to this part of Pennsylvania was Jacob Miller, a native of Virginia, born in 1770. He married, in 1795, Jane Filson, who was born in 1778, and became the father of three sons and nine daughters, of whom Samuel, the eldest son, was born in 1800. Jacob came to Washing-saddler's trade, at the termination of which he followed the business two years; then traveled for a New York house three years. In 1849 he located in Pittsburgh, when he resumed his trade for nine months, and then entered the employ of the Exchange (afterward known as St. Clair) hotel, in which he remained until 1858. From that year until 1858 Mr. Anderson represented the Perry House, then returned to the St. Clair, and in 1874 purchased the property, continuing the business until 1884, in which year he built the Hotel Anderson, in every way conceded to be the most complete house of entertainment in the city. In 1838 Mr. Anderson married Miss A. E., daughter of George H. Bell, of Allegheny, and is an excellent citizen of Allegheny county, and to this union were born six sons and one daughter: George B., Charles A., James Grant. Joseph N., Allen Kirkpatrick, Willie and Margret R. Mr. Anderson is a member of the U. P. Church, and is a republican.

D. S. Elliott, retired, Braddock, is a native of this county, born in December, 1841, to Matthew and Maria (Soles) Elliott, of Braddock (formerly Wilkins) township, who were the parents of two children, D. S. and Mrs. Elizabeth Campbell. The father, who was a carpenter by trade, died in 1854, aged thirty-eight years. The subject of these lines was born and reared in McKeesport, Pa., and educated at the public schools. In 1867 he married Agnes J., daughter of Samuel and Eliza (Stewart) McCutcheon, and by her has four children: D. T., Jennie F., Clarence C. and Lester L. Mr. Elliott has followed agricultural pursuits all his life, and is now owner of 180 acres of land in Braddock township, the working of which he superintends. He came to North Braddock in 1884, and here built his present handsome residence. He is a democrat.

Charles Mehaffey, farmer, postoffice McKeesport, a son of Alexander and Mary M. Mehaffey, was born in North Versailles township in 1814. His grandfather, Robert Mehaffey, came from Ireland, and located in this township at a very early day, where he and his wife died. Alexander, his son, married, and reared a family of following named children: William, James (deceased), Charles, Ann, Emma and Jane (both deceased). Alexander Mehaffey died in 1886, and his wife in 1852. They located on the place now occupied by the tinsplate-works of McKeesport, and removed from there to a farm now owned by our subject. The latter married, in 1870, Elizabeth Hendricks, and to them have been born eight children: Sarah, James, Frank, Robert John, Charles, Joseph and Clyde. Mr. Mehaffey is a democrat.

Thomas Rankin, real-estate dealer, postoffice Rankin, is a native of Carroll county, Ohio, born Nov. 11, 1834. His father, John Rankin, a cabinet-maker by trade, was a native of Washington county, Pa. It was some time previous to the Revolution that two brothers named Rankin came to America and settled in Washington county, Pa. John, the son of one of the above, named Thomas, a farmer, married Charlotte Lytle, in Pittsburgh, in the year 1818, and was the father of eight children, two of whom are deceased. Thomas, the youngest member of his family, was educated in Ohio, and early in life commenced his business career, first as a clerk, and in 1859 embarked in business for himself, and so continued until 1867. He then formed a partnership with his brother in the wholesale grocery business for twelve years, under the firm name of M. W. Rankin & Brother. In 1871 Mr. Rankin came to what is now known as Rankin station and purchased five acres of land, which has since been used for building purposes. He married, Jan. 1, 1861, Abby J., daughter of Charles C. Olmsted, of Rome, Ohio, and one daughter, Clara Lois Rankin, has blessed their union. Politically Mr. Rankin is a republican.

John Black, retired, postoffice Brinton, was born in County Donegal, Ireland, in 1818, only son of John and Martha (Grier) Black, former of whom was a farmer in Ireland. Our subject was educated in schools of his native county, and in 1837 immigrated to America, locating in Philadelphia for one year. He then came to Pittsburgh, and was here employed for eight years as a clerk; thence came to Wilkins (now Braddock) township, and was here engaged in mercantile business till 1858, when he purchased 180 acres of valuable land and carried on farming till 1887, in which year he sold the farm and retired from active life. Mr. Black married, in 1844, Ellen, daughter of William Bailey, a farmer, and five children were born to them: Sarah (Mrs. Gilliland), and George, Elizabeth, Ella and Belle, at home. Our subject has held several township offices; is a member of the U. P. Church, and is a republican.

Isaac Good, railroad supervisor, Wall, was born in Westmoreland county, Pa., in 1838, a son of Isaac and Catherine (Sumney) Good, who were parents of eleven children. The former is now deceased, the latter is living. The subject of this sketch was educated at the schools of Westmoreland county, and at the age of fourteen became a railroad employee, located at first in Allegheny, and later at Cambria and Fayette. In 1860 he married Sarah, daughter of William Walker, of Pittsburgh, after which they located at Braddock, and subsequently resided for a time at East Liberty, Shady Side, and in Cambria county for five years. He returned to Allegheny county, and in 1881 located at Wall, which derives its name from Frank [Wall], now a resident of Kentucky, who was the owner of the first two houses erected here, and by occupation an engineer on river boats. Wall is now the headquarters of this division of the Pennsylvania railroad. The roundhouses and machine-shops are to be removed from Pittsburgh, and Wall will be the distributing point for west and southwest. Mr. and Mrs. Good have a family of six children, viz.: William E., George G., C. B., Carrie E., Albert and Hellen May. Mr. Good's grandfather, Isaac Good, was a pioneer of Western Pennsylvania.

John Allebrand, farmer, postoffice McKeesport, a son of John and Margaret Allebrand, was born at Chorhesen, Steinau, Germany, in 1833, and with his parents emigrated to America and located at McKeesport in 1843. They had four sons: Conrad, Nicklous, John, Philip; and one daughter, Elizabeth. Philip enlisted in the army, Co. I, 63d P. V., and during three years' service was promoted to first corporal. He was killed at the battle of Petersburg. His father died during that year, and his mother in 1861. In 1854 our subject went to California, where he was engaged in butchering, and was part owner of a good producing gold-mine. After six years he returned to McKeesport, and in 1860 married Rachel, daughter of William Nicholas, and engaged in butchering until 1878, but in 1889 removed to a farm which he now owns in North Versailles township, and has since been engaged in agricultural pursuits. Mr. and Mrs. Allebrand have six children: Charles W., Margaret, John N., Louisa, Fredericka and George A. Charles W. married Lida, daughter of James Michaels, and located in Colorado, where he is engaged in mining. Mr. Allebrand is a member of the F. & A. M., Aliquippa Lodge, No. 375. He is a Presbyterian and a republican.

William H. Rodenbaugh, farmer, postoffice West View, was born Dec. 19, 1840. His great-grandfather, Joseph Rodenbaugh, came from Bucks county, Pa., to Allegheny county in 1807, and died on the farm where William H. now resides. The old farm was known as Mount Pleasant, and contained 330 acres. It was first owned by George Wallace, who bought it in 1799, and was subsequently sold to Thomas Reed, who sold it to John Stewart, who sold it to John Rodenbaugh in 1880. Our subject's great-grandmother, whose maiden name was Hannah Walker, was a Quaker, and died at the home of her grandson. The grandfather Rodenbaugh was a class-leader at the age of seventeen years; his house was the home of the old-time itinerant preacher. He married Elizabeth Foss, and became the father of eight children: Joseph, John, Samuel, Mary, William, Hannah, Henry and Charles. Of these William was born Sept. 27, 1814, and died in 1847. He married Catharine Moore, born Dec. 25, 1819, in Pine township, Allegheny county, Pa., and three children were born to them: Eliza J., W. H. and John. The old family were members of the M. E. Church; politically they were whigs. William H. is a cooper by trade, but farms principally. He married Emma Pean, of this county, and they have two children: John W. and Kate M. John Rodenbaugh married Lillie Schlots, and has one child, Jeannette.

William C. Shaw, farmer, Glenshaw, was born Oct. 12, 1828, on the old mansion farm in Shaler township. His parents, John and Matilda (Courtney) Shaw, were also natives of this county, the latter being a daughter of William Courtney, an old settler at Lowry's run. John Shaw was a miller by trade, and operated the old mill at Glenshaw. He was an active business-man, and in addition to milling was engaged in the coal business, supplying Spang's mill with fuel. The old Shaw family were active members of the Presbyterian Church. William C. Shaw is a miller by trade, which he followed in early life. Later on he helped his father in the coal business, and now is a farmer and gardener. He married Eliza J. Mathews, and four children have blessed their union: Mrs. Matilda Watts, Edward D., Clara and Lyda C.

N. J. Black, contractor and builder, Avalon, was born near Six-Mile Ferry, Allegheny county, Feb. 9, 1831, the son of John and Mary (Coleman) Black, both of whom were natives of this county. John Black was a carpenter, and his parents came from Ireland. The subject of this sketch attended the country schools, and at the age of fourteen he was in the service of Rev. McAboy. He next learned the carpenter's trade, and after working eight years for Mullon, Steen & Co. he moved to Belleuve, where he continued his trade for two years. For the next five years he was in the grocery business at West Belleuve, but his health failing him, he again took up the hammer and saw, this time contracting for himself, and has erected nearly all the houses at West Belleuve since he engaged in the business. At the age of twenty-one he married Mary S. Davis, a granddaughter of Bassell Davis, he being the first white settler that side of the river. Her parents were James S. and Mary J. (Beem) Davis, both natives of this county. Her father was a farmer and an extensive sheep-raiser. Mr. and Mrs. Black have one child, Birdie D. They are members of the Belleuve M. P. Church, of which he is a steward. Mr. Black is a member of Jr. O. U. A. M. When he first moved to West Belleuve he was elected assessor and councilman, serving three years. He was then appointed first postmaster, the office then being called Myler, now changed to Avalon. He was elected burgess in 1888, and re-elected in 1889.

John Rush Montgomery, merchant, Turtle Creek, was born in North Versailles, July 17, 1853. His father, John McCullough Montgomery, was born in Ohio and reared by his uncle, Perry McCullough, in Versailles, on the farm where his widow and children now reside. He married Elizabeth McMasters Lewis, a native of Jacksonville, Westmoreland county, and they had three sons and one daughter: Joseph M., Samuel Perry, Rebecca M. and John R. Mr. Montgomery joined the 63d P. V., and served about a year. He died of disease contracted in the army, April 2, 1864, aged thirty-three years. He was a member of the U. P. Church, as were all the members of his family, and was a republican, as are his sons. Joseph Montgomery, father of John M., was a stock-grower in the state of Ohio, and elder in the Presbyterian Church. His wife was Rebecca McCullough, a member of one of the earliest families in Versailles.

HUGH CUNNINGHAM, farmer, postoffice Bakerstown, was born Dec. 20, 1835, on his present farm in West Deer township, son of Abraham and Nancy (Glasgow) Cunningham, who were born in Ireland, and came here when they were eight and ten years of age, residing in West Deer township until their deaths. They were members of the old Sederer Church. Hugh Cunningham was married at the age of nineteen to Eliza McNeil, of West Deer township, and seven children were born to them, two of whom at Vining. Of these Abraham married, in 1867, Catharine, daughter of Robert and Kate (Scott) Harbison, of Butler county; they have four children: Eliza, Lloyd, Dean, and Mary. The other son, Robert John, is a Presbyterian minister in Indiana. Mrs. Cunningham died in May, 1864, and Mr. Cunningham was afterward married July 4, 1865, to Jane Park, of Butler county, daughter of William and Hannah (Rundles) Park. Her father was born in Franklin county, Feb. 9, 1791, and died Dec. 20, 1888. Her mother was born Aug. 9, 1800, and died Feb. 24, 1885. Two children were born to this second marriage: William and Ellen. Mr. Cunningham has a farm of 160 acres near Bakers-town and is one of the oldest settlers of the township.

JOHN MCMASTERS LARIMER, general merchant, Turtle Creek, was born in the same house as his father, in North Huntingdon township, Westmoreland county, in 1844. His parents were James Irwin and Nancy (McMasters) Larimer, the latter a native of Allegheny county. William Larimer, father of James, was among the early settlers of Westmoreland. In 1857 the subject of this memoir came with his parents to a farm in Versailles, this county. While attending New Wilmington College, before completing his eighteenth year, he joined Co. E, 105th P. V. I., and entered the Army of the Potomac under Col. A. A. McKnight. Besides some preliminary skirmishes in the peninsula campaign, he participated in the battles of Williamsburg and Fair Oaks, and although his hat and blouse were pierced with bullets in the latter engagement, he escaped without a scratch, but was taken prisoner while trying to remove his wounded friend, now Col. Gray, of this county, from the field. After fifteen weeks in Salisbury, Libby and Belle Isle prisons, and narrowly escaping death from starvation, he was exchanged and soon discharged on account of disability. In 1868 he re- cruited a part of Co. F, 14th Regt., S. V., and participated in the capture of Gen. Morgan.

In this company he held the rank of first lieutenant under Capt. Taggart, had command most of the time, and the distribution of the captured horses was also placed in his charge. In the fall of 1864 he recruited eighteen men, whom he accompanied as private and joined the 6th P. H. A., under Col. Barnes, and was at once made first lieutenant. For a time the company did guard-duty on the Orange & Alexandria railroad, after which Lieut. Larimer was made ordnance-officer on Col. Barnes' staff, in charge of the fortifications about Washing- ton. Here he remained until discharged in 1865, his services being no longer required, and participated in the grand review by Gen. Grant. Thus at the age of twenty-one years Mr. Larimer was possessed of three honorable discharges from the United States service, and one from the State of Pennsylvania.

After a year in mercantile business at Leavenworth, Kan., our subject opened in the same line at Turtle Creek, where he has continued ever since. He carries on a lumber and livery business in addition to a general store, and is also engaged in farming and stock-breeding, giving special attention to registered Jersey and Holstein cattle. In 1868 Mr. Larimer married Emily, second daughter of Gen. C. P. Markle, of Westmoreland county, and they have had eight children, four yet living: Cyrus Markle, Thomas McMasters, John M., Jr., and Paul Wilfred; the only daughter, Nannie, died at the age of seven years. Mr. and Mrs. Larimer were among the charter members of the First Presbyterian Church of Braddock, of which he is an elder. He is among the most active workers of the republican party.

WILLIAM GEORGE LANE, merchant, Turtle Creek, a native of Wilkins township, was born Nov. 23, 1854. His parents, Henry and Mary (McKeg) Lane, came from Ireland, and now reside in Newtown, a part of Turtle Creek village. The father is a coal-miner, and at the age of nine years William G. also began that business. He has been industrious and provident, and in 1880 began selling goods from a wagon; three years later he built a store, which was soon after destroyed by fire, inflicting a loss of eight hundred dollars over insurance. With characteristic energy he at once rebuilt and now carries a stock worth about two thousand dollars, and owns, besides his store and residence in Newtown, a house in Wilkins township. In 1876 he married Mary Ellen Leonard, a native of Canada and daughter of Matthew and Catherine Leonard, of Ireland, and they have two children, Henry and Anna Arville. Mr. Lane is still occupied in the mines, and the store is managed by his wife. He has served as supervisor of Patton township, being elected on the republican ticket. The family is associated with the E. L. Church.

SHIELDS FAMILY. The progenitor of the family was James Shields, of English descent and Quaker proclivities, native of Ireland, who settled in Chester county, Pa., at the latter part of the seventeenth century. His grandson, Thomas, was a goldsmith in Philadelphia, and Thomas' son, David, was a merchant in the West India trade. He settled in Little Washington about 1809, and shortly after married Eliza, only child of Maj. Dan Lect. David Shields was born Aug. 16, 1780, and died Nov. 2, 1837; his widow died March 21, 1872, aged eighty-eight years. His children were: Mrs. Maria Wilson, Daniel Leet, Thomas L., Misses R. B. and Hannah Shields, Eliza Susannah (wife of Rev. Isaac Cook). Thomas L. Shields was born in April, 1819, in Little Washington, Pa.; he died in the Sewickley valley in 1879. He was a member of the Philadelphia bar, also practiced in this and surrounding counties. He was a fine speaker and an able attorney. He was a whig, and one of the original organizers of the republican party, at Lafayette hall. He was a good agriculturist and horticulturist, and a keen sportsman. He married Amelia, daughter of John and Harriet (Craig) Chaplin, the latter of whom was a daughter of Mayor Isaac and Amelia (Neville) Craig. Mrs. Craig was a daughter of Gen. John and Winnifred (Conway) Neville, and a sister of Gen. Presley Neville, serving on Gen. Lafayette's staff during the revolutionary war.

The children of Thomas Shields were: Eliza S., William C., David, Amelia (wife of James B. Oliver), Lydia H. (wife of William L. Jones), Wilhelmina, Rebecca and Thomas L. Shields. Of these William C. was first lieutenant of Co. G, 28th P. V. L., and was killed in front of his company at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, 1863. David Shields enlisted in Co. F, 36th P. V. I. He participated in many battles, and was promoted to captain. The last two years of service he was a personal aide-de-camp of Gen. Alexander Huys; was honorably discharged before he was twenty years old. He was received in Little Washington.

Maj. Dan Lect was of English descent; he was a brigade-major in the revolutionary war, and second in command at Crawford's defeat. He removed to Washington county in 1775. He was a surveyor, and under the direction of David Reddick, Esq., vice-president of Pennsylvania, he surveyed the internal survey of the Allegheny reserve; and, under the directions of the supreme executive council, surveyed the depreciation lands of the second district, a part of which is in the Sewickley valley. It was made in 1782-86. He and Reynolds surveyed Gen. Washington's lands in Kentucky. He died June 18, 1830.

John Graham, farmer, postoffice Stewart's Station, was born in 1831, a son of John and Annabella (Moat) Graham, the latter a native of County Down, Ireland. John Graham was many years a farmer in Patton township, where he died, and was succeeded by the son whose name heads this sketch. The latter was reared here, has always followed farming, and came into possession of his present property in 1888. In August, 1864, he joined Co. F, 6th P. H. A., and served on garrison duty until June, 1865. He is the only republican among the Gravahs. The family attends the U. P. Church at Stewart's Station. Mrs. Graham is Ann, daughter of William and Christina McCane, natives of Westmoreland county, and she is the mother of two sons, Charles Elmer, born Sept. 18, 1862, and James McCane, born March 23, 1865, both residing at home.

Jacob Maurer (deceased) was born near Strasburg, Alsace-Lorraine, June 24, 1805, a son of Jacob L. and Catherine (Deutsch) Maurer. He immigrated to America, in June, 1837, and in September of the same year located in Columbus, Ohio, where he followed the occupation of a gardener and dairyman until 1855. He then settled in McKeesport, and embarked in the tannery business with his son-in-law, W. B. Junker, under firm name of Junker & Co., in which he continued six years, when he retired. Before locating in McKeesport he had purchased the valuable property at corner of Fifth avenue and Walnut street, now owned by his heirs, a fine brick block, two stories high, facing Fifth avenue. After his retirement from business he gave his entire attention to his property interests until his death, which occurred Sept. 17, 1882, when he was seventy-seven years of age. He was married in 1834 to Christina Fischer, who died June 2, 1888. He had three daughters who grew to maturity: Catherine (deceased wife of W. B. Junker), Caroline and Amelia (Mrs. Julius Beiler, of Pittsburgh).

Of these Caroline, who resides in McKeesport, married, Oct. 19, 1865, Louis Brecht, a native of Heidelberg, Germany, by whom she has four children living: Eleanor H., Amelia L., Louis J. and Henry W. Mr. Brecht came to America in 1850, and settled in Pittsburgh, where he finished his education. He learned the glover's trade. He served three years in the civil war as first lieutenant, participated in twenty-two engagements, and was honorably discharged at expiration of his term of service. For a number of years he was engaged in the picture-frame business in Pittsburgh, and was a successful business man. He died Oct. 16, 1890. He was an attendant of Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, and sang in the choir fourteen years. He was a member of the G. A. R., and was a staunch democrat.

William J. Miller, retired, Gill Hall, is a son of Peter and Mary A. (Cunningham) Miller, and was born in Ireland in 1801. His parents came to this country about 1808, and located in Jefferson township, this county, where the father proceeded to work at his trade of shoemaking, but later bought a farm. William J. is the only surviving member of his father's family. May 20, 1836, he married Sarah, daughter of Michael Snee, of Jefferson township. He worked the old homestead and at the carpenter's trade until he sold the farm, when he removed to Gill Hall. His children are Andrew, married to Anna Carlisle, of Jefferson township; Harry H., married to Lettie Duff, of Jefferson township; Caroline, now Mrs. Reed, of Jefferson township; Ella, now Mrs. W. F. Waterman, of West Elizabeth, and Fannie. Mrs. Miller died in 1875. Our subject was a successful merchant for thirty years. He is a member of the U. P. Church, and is a republican.

Melanchthon W. McMillan, general bookkeeper, Bank of Pittsburgh. The paternal great-grandfather of this gentleman was a native of the highlands of Scotland, and immigrated to America, settling in Maryland. His sons, Rev. Samuel and William, were soldiers in the revolutionary war. Of these, the first named, a minister of the Baptist Church, located in Westmoreland county, and later in Tennessee and Ohio. He died in Beaver county, Pa. His son, Thomas L., was born in Westmoreland county, and came to Pittsburgh at the age of sixteen years. He enlisted later in the war of 1812, but his services were not required in the field. After the war he returned to Pittsburgh, and clerked for George Milneburger, finally embarking in the house-furnishing business on his own account. He was subsequently appointed by Gov. Ritner clerk of the mayor's court in the old courthouse, and afterward elected clerk of court of quarter sessions. After that he was appointed associate judge with Judge McClure. He died in 1853, aged sixty years. Politically he was a strong whig, and worked nobly to promote the success of the anti-slavery bill. He was married to Jane, daughter of John Gormly, and of their twelve children, nine attained maturity. Of these, John G. was clerk in the office of the Clarion-Telegram; Samuel J. X. read law with Judge Shaler and Edwin M. Stanton, late secretary of war. He was admitted to the Allegheny county bar, and became a member of the law firm of Stowe & McMillan; later he went to Minnesota. He was elected district judge, and subsequently elected judge of the supreme bench, and afterward United States senator. Melanchthon W., the subject of this sketch, was born and reared in Allegheny City, and came to Sewickley in 1871. He has been identified with the Bank of Pittsburgh for thirty years, and is now general bookkeeper. He is also a member of session of the Sewickley Presbyterian Church, and is treasurer. Mr. McMillan's mother died at his home in Sewickley, June 7, 1879, aged eighty-four years.

John Euwer, merchant, Parnassus, was born in Plum township, July 8, 1832, a son of Archie and Mary (Gill) Euwer, the latter a daughter of Ebenezer Gill, who was a son of John Gill, a native of Ireland. Mr. Archie Euwer was born in Plum township, Mary (Gill) Euwer in Patton township, in 1799 and 1804, respectively. The grandfather, John Euwer, came from Ireland, and in 1796 settled in Plum township, on the present site of New Texas, buying 270 acres there. In 1798 he married Nancy McMullen at Ligonier Valley, and became the father of five sons and five daughters. His brother, Samuel Euwer, settled on Sandy creek, and was one hundred years old when he died, leaving a very large posterny, who held annual reunions at Jacob Walter's, Springdale. Our subject attended school in Plum township, and when sixteen years old took charge of his father's farm, under the direction of his mother. In January, 1855, he married Isabella Allen, a native of Westmoreland county, born in 1833, a daughter of Robert and Anna (Leslie) Allen, natives of Scotland, the former an elder in the Covenanter Church. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Euwer: Anna (Mrs. McKee Swank), Amelia J. (milliner and dressmaker), Margaret G. (who died aged three years), Robert Allen, Archa Nelson (in father's store), Ida, Bell, Florence Clyde and Lizzie Emma. Mr. Euwer was on the farm until 1866, and shortly after bought the Walnut Hill farm, in Westmoreland county, on which he lived twelve years. In 1879 he bought a farm in Plum township, on Puckey creek, and six years later sold and moved to Parnassus, where he has since remained, keeping a general store. Mr. Euwer has three brothers living: E. G., a merchant in Jeanette, Westmoreland county, Pa.; M. G., a merchant in Verona, Pa.; and the youngest, Archie N., is a farmer, living near Washington, Iowa. He served three years in the Union army; fought in all the battles of the Army of the Potomac from Fredericksburg to the surrender of Lee's army at Appomattox, belonging to Co. C, 155th P. V., Col. Pearson.

David Clements, farmer, postoffice New Texas, was born in Plum township July 30, 1854, a son of David and Maria (Anderson) Clements. His father was a farmer and carpenter, a native of Pennsylvania, and his mother of Ireland, coming to America at three years of age. William Clements, grandfather of the subject of this biography, bought a farm on the east side of the township, which he sold to his son, and he to our subject, who was educated here, and remained with his father until twenty-seven years of age. He then began farming the old homestead, which he still owns, and seventeen years later bought his present farm, the Euwer place. He married, in 1861, Eliza Stewart, of Westmoreland county, born in June, 1837, a daughter of Andrew and Priscilla (Beal) Stewart, and seven children were born to them, six now living: James Alexander, in Pittsburgh; Andrew, Lizzie M., Harry D., Prillie J. and Mary Myrtle; John Anderson died aged three years. The family are members of the U. P. Church.

W. W. Reeves, proprietor of the "Reeves Patent Stone" manufactory, Braddock, is a native of New Jersey, born in 1818. Henry Reeves, the original pioneer of the family of this name in the eastern states, and a native of England, and came to New Jersey in 1754, settled in New Jersey, to escape religious persecution; he was a Quaker, and Isaiah Reeves, father of W. W., born in New Jersey, was enrolled in the continental army at the age of sixteen, about the time Cornwallis surrendered at Yorktown. Our subject was educated at the public schools of Burlington county, N. J., and at the age of seventeen learned the plastering trade in Philadelphia, which he has followed for fifty years as a contractor, etc. In 1862 he came to Braddock, where he has since introduced the manufacture of the "Reeves Patent Stone," a durable composition used extensively for fine building purposes. In 1849 Mr. Reeves married Elizabeth, daughter of Isaac Young, a brick-contractor of Philadelphia, and a son of a revolutionary soldier, Capt. Young, who served under Washington, and eight children were born to them, three of whom are now living: Amanda (Mrs. McFarland), William Wallace and Howard C. The family are members of the Methodist Church; Mr. Reeves is a republican. In 1881 he invented a rifled cannon and an explosive shell, which were tested at Fort Monroe, and proved to be a success and adopted as a government piece of ordnance. He claims it to be the first rifled cannon made in this country or any other.

William Jackson, farmer, P. O. Negley, was born in the county of Durham, England, Oct. 9, 1809, a son of Robert and Margaret (West) Jackson, former of whom was killed when William was nine years old; the mother lived to the age of eighty-seven years. William Jackson, paternal grandfather of William, was a mason, and John West, the maternal grandfather, was captain of an English merchant-ship; was taken prisoner by the French, and served twenty-one years in French prisons. Mr. Jackson came to New York city in 1833, and following year to Pittsburgh, where he worked four or five years at the West Point forge, and then went to the rolling-mills, remaining there fifteen years. He enlisted in February, 1864, in Co. I, 61st P. V. I., which was consigned to the Sixth corps. Army of the Potomac, and was discharged in June, 1864. He then worked in the Pittsburgh mills until 1872, when he moved to his present farm, which he had bought in 1867. In 1851 he married Sarah Pescot, a native of Newcastl, England, a daughter of Thomas and Sarah Pescot. Ten children were born to them: Isabella Ann, Thomas P., Mary (Mrs. Samuel Anderson), Robert (married to Ann Bryan and Ives on the farm), Sarah (Mrs. George King), William, Margaret, John, Henry and Charles. The family are members of the Episcopal Church, but there being no church of that denomination here, they joined the U. P. Church. Mr. Jackson owns 120 acres of land.

John Pyle, postoffice Hulton, was born in Erie county, Pa., July 20, 1838. His parents, John and Mary Margaret Pyle, were natives of Lancaster county, Pa., and came to Pittsburgh when our subject was very small, but afterward moved to Penn township, where the father engaged in the coal-mines, and died March 3, 1860, of dropsy and heart disease. The mother died ten months later, of paralysis. John, the subject of this sketch, received a common-school education in this county, and when about nine years old entered the coal-mines with his father, in Wilkins township. At the age of twenty-one he began for himself in the mines of Penn township, continuing until he was thirty years of age, at which time he began farming in the same township for a firm of coal-merchants; he also spent two years in Plum township, four years for Frank and Harry Johnson of Wilkins township, and has since been on the Lee farms of Plum township, the last four years conducting a dairy-farm near the Verona borough limits. In 1864 he purchased two acres of land in Penn township, and in 1867 built a house; in 1878 he built another house on the same two acres. In 1885 he purchased two lots and a house in Verona, and in the spring of 1888 bought four lots and a house at Oakmont. He married, in his twenty-ninth year, Anna Mary Smeltz, of Plum township, a daughter of Lewis Smeltz. They have had six children: Sarah E., Jacob L., Harry L. and Frank E., all at home. The deceased are Mary M., who died at age of three years, and Nettie M., when aged ten years. Mr. Pyle is a republican.

Mrs. Mary Jane King, postoffice Sunny Side, youngest daughter of Robert S. and Dorcas (Allen) Lecky, was born in Pitts- burgh in 1837. Her father removed from Martinsburg, Va., and located at the corner of Virgin alley and Wood street, where he and his brother William manufactured coaches. He had the honor of establishing the first reading-school in Pittsburgh. Though held on Sundays, it was not of the nature of a Sunday-school, as no religious services were held; but the children were gathered in an upper room and taught to read. Complaint was made regarding the school, but it was decided that it was not dangerous to the children, and he was permitted to continue. Dorcas Allen was the eldest daughter of David Allen, who was a son of John Allen. The latter was one of the pioneers of Fayette county, and of Allegheny county. David Allen was born May 10, 1770; his wife, Mary Warne, Sept. 11, 1770. They were married Dec. 24, 1793, and were blest with eleven children, of whom Dorcas was the second; she was born April 8, 1796, and died Feb. 6, 1884. She was married to Robert S. Lecky Sept. 35, 1821; he died Dec. 7, 1828. There were born to them three children: David Allen Lecky, Letitia S. Lecky and Mary Jane Lecky. Dorcas Allen's grandmother was Mary Power, sister of Rev. James Power, the pioneer clergyman of Western Pennsylvania. Her husband's brother, William Lecky, was formerly sheriff of the county. Our subject was married in 1858 to Samuel J. King, and in 1875 removed to Monongahela City, and to her present home in 1885. Mr. King, after a successful and profitable life, died in 1873, leaving one child, Lizzie L., whose home is with her mother.

JENNINGS P. AULD, farmer, postoffice McKeesport, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 25, 1843, a son of David and Rhoda (Jennings) Auld. His paternal grandfather, James Auld, was a native of Long Island, N. Y., a cabinet-maker by trade, and among the pioneers of Fayette county, Pa. His maternal grandfather, David Jennings, was of English parentage, an early settler in Fayette county, Pa. David Auld, father of Jennings P., was born in Fayette county, and in early manhood located in Pittsburgh, where he worked as a glass-picker for fourteen years; in 1849 he located in Versailles township and engaged in farming. He was twenty years president of Versailles cemetery, which, under his supervision, has been made one of the finest in the state. He was the father of four children: Jennings P., Vincent (deceased), Amanda (Mrs. A. D. Foster) and Hannah (deceased). David Auld died April 1, 1887, aged sixty-six years.

Jennings P. Auld was reared in Versailles township, and from six years of age was educated at the common schools, and with the exception of seven years, during which he resided in Illinois, has lived on the old home stead, to which he succeeded on the death of his father. Sept. 1, 1864, he enlisted in Co. F, 5th P. A., and served until the close of the war. In February, 1868, he married Eliza, daughter of Victor and Eliza (McNulty) Arthur, of Versailles township, by whom he has three sons: David W., Victor A. and Vincent. Mr. Auld is a republican, and has held many local offices of trust.

Mrs. HANNAH MANOWN, retired, Monongahela City, daughter of George and Elizabeth Linn, was born in 1829, in the township and county of Butler, where her father was prominently identified with the medical profession. Her father's family consisted of three children: Alonso, now a professor in Washington and Jefferson College; George A., practicing medicine in Monongahela City, and Hannah. Her father was one of the pioneers of Western Pennsylvania, and when Gen. Lafayette was in Butler he had the honor of dining with him; he died at the age of forty-four, at his old home. Hannah married, in 1854, Thomas Manown, son of John and Martha Manown, whose family were among the early settlers of Forward township. Mr. Manown died Oct. 25, 1867, on the farm now owned by his wife and sister.

MICHAEL GROSS, merchant, Hero, a son of Peter Gross, was born in Mifflin township in 1849. His parents were among the old German families of that township, where his mother died in 1877, and his father in February, 1888, with Michael, in the borough of Reynoldton. They had thirteen children, viz.: Jacob, Kate (Mrs. Sidel, deceased), Barbara (Mrs. Zimmerman), Margaret (Mrs. Kurtz), John, Frank, Peter, Michael, Gertrude (deceased), Crist, Anna (Mrs. O'Hanlon, deceased), Mary (Mrs. Weischer) and Matt (deceased). Michael married, in 1873, Margaret Elizabeth Elsner, and located in Mifflin township, became engaged on the river and in steamboating. In 1888, having received the appointment of postmaster at Reynoldton, he established himself there in business as a dealer in general merchandise, on the main street, and in the center of the borough. Mr. and Mrs. Gross have five children; Minnie, Freddie, Lizzie, Georgie and Henry.

GEORGE GOLDBACH (deceased) was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 1, 1837. He was of German parentage, his parents coming to this country in 1836. After the death of his mother he made his home with an uncle, Anthony Henger, who resided in Mt. Oliver. In 1861 he was married to Miss Catherine Broduer, whose parents were among the first settlers in Mt. Oliver. They were married at Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1837, settling in the neighborhood of the old homestead, which at present is one of the old landmarks of Lower St. Clair township. Mr. Goldbach in 1861 engaged actively in the grocery and feed business, and in 1863 opened a hotel. He died April 1, 1874, leaving a widow, two sons and four daughters: Margaret, who is a Sister of Mercy; Anthony G., teller in the City Savings Bank at Pittsburgh; Annie C., Mary M. and Sadie G., all at home, and George L. D. J., attending school at St. Vincent's College. Mr. Goldbach was intimately identified with the growth of the community in which he resided, being elected justice of the peace for one term; was the originator of the Mt. Oliver fire company, and was its captain when he died; also was instrumental in the building of St. Joseph's church, being one of the original trustees until the time of his death.

C. S. NEGLEY, farmer, postoffice Tarentum, a son of Casper and Elizabeth Negley, was born at East Liberty, Pa., in 1838. His grandparents were among the pioneers of Allegheny county, and his father was born in East Liberty. Casper S. married Sarah J., daughter of J. J. Bunting, of Butler county, Pa., and located at Natrona, where he was employed at the soda-works. He and his wife afterward resided in Butler county, later in East Liberty, and in 1871 came to Fawn township, locating on the farm which they now own. Mr. Negley has held several official positions in the township. He and his wife have six children: Mary E., Clara B., James C., Charles S., Frank J. and Harry C. The parents are members of the Methodist Church.

A. W. NEGLEY, farmer, postoffice Tarentum, a son of Casper and Elizabeth Negley, was born in East Liberty township, Allegheny county, in 1837. In 1849 he married Mary, daughter of John Mohler, of East Liberty, and to them were born three children: John, Matilda (Mrs. Hegel) and Clara (Mrs. Negley). Mrs. Negley died in 1865, and Mr. Negley afterward married Eliza J., a daughter of Andrew Ashbaugh, of LEECHBURG.
Armstrong county, Pa. To them have been born the following-named children: William, James, Edward, Laura, Minnie, Bertha and Alexander. Mr. and Mrs. Neglen are members of the Lutheran Church. He located, in 1850, on the farm which he now owns, in Fawn township.

JAMES GRUBBS, farmer, postoffice Talley Cavey, is a son of John and Isabella (Reed) Grubbs. Andrew Grubbs, his grandfather, who was a native of Germany, emigrated to America in or about 1780, married Rhoda Powell, located in Pittsburgh, and afterward on the Walter farm, in what is now Hampton township, where most of their children were born, and in 1817 he removed to Indiana township. They reared a family of eleven children, Rachel, now Mrs. Philip Hodil, of Ross township, being the only one now living. Andrew was a soldier in the war of 1812, and died in 1859; his widow in 1855. John, who was the eldest son, was born on the homestead in Westmoreland county; and James, who is the third son, and was born in Indiana township in 1835. He was reared and educated in West Deer township, in 1849 moved to what is now Hampton township, and in 1847 to his present farm. In 1865 he married Violet Jane, daughter of John and Eliza Jane (McBride) Trimble, of this county. She died in 1873, leaving two children: Henry A. and Lydia J., both at home; he next married, in 1875, Maggie A. Trimble, a sister of his former wife. They have no children. In 1877 Mr. Grubbs was elected justice of the peace of the township, which office he still holds, and has also been assessor and supervisor of the township; also served nine years on the board of school directors. He and family are members of the Second Presbyterian Church of Pine Creek, he being an elder in same.

LEVI LUDWIC (deceased) was born near Sardis, Westmoreland county, Pa., Feb. 27, 1839, son of Abraham and Mary Magdalena Ludwick, natives of Pennsylvania, and of German descent. While he was young his parents moved to Jefferson county, where he assisted to clear a farm. At the age of twenty-one he left the farm and became a contractor and builder. He took the contract and built the first house in Irwin: also a great many others in same town. In 1856 he came to Allegheny county, and took the contract and built the inclined-plane trestles and houses at the Coleman mines, now in the city limits. In 1860 he purchased the Wilkins gristmill, which he operated till his death, Sept. 21, 1887. He remodeled and re-built parts of the mill twice. He was a member, and many years a trustee and steward, of the M. E. Church, and was a school director while Wilkins borough formed part of the city. His political sentiments Mr. Ludwick was a republican. He is survived by a widow and two daughters—Mary Letitia and Blanche. His widow, Mrs. Nancy Jane Ludwick, is a daughter of John and Letitia (Morrow) Anderson, and was born in Wilkins township, this county. Her father was a native of Westmoreland county, of Irish descent, and her mother was a daughter of James Morrow, an Irishman, who settled in Pennsylvania.

JOHN JAMES, machine draftsman, post-office Verona, Pa., was born in Caermarthen, South Wales, Nov. 4, 1841. His grandfather, Evan James, was a brightsmith, as was his father, Hugh James, likewise a No. 1 practical engineer, as was said by all who knew him. Hugh James was born in Breckon, and acquired a thorough knowledge of his trade. He established himself at Caermarthen, whence he went to Bristol, England, and worked at Acraman & Jones' engineers, he being one of the parties who worked on the first Atlantic steamer from Bristol, called the Great Britain. Mr. James now has a model of the propeller of this vessel, which was six-bladed. Mr. James married Miss Eleanor George, daughter of John and Elizabeth George, from Cardiganshire. She was born at Caermarthen, and died there, as did Hugh James, being buried at St. David's church, Lamas street. John James was reared in his native town, where he had access to excellent schools, and made a special study of drawing. When twelve years of age he went into a machine-shop and acquired a mastery of his trade. In 1870 he came to Pittsburgh, and was for a time employed by the Keystone No. 1 Bridge company, then engaged in building the famous St. Louis bridge. In September, 1871, he engaged as a machinist with the A. V. R. R. Co., and for two or three years has been engaged in making drawings. He became a resident of Verona in 1876, and owns two houses on Penn street. Mr. James has a sister, Elizabeth Bower, now a widow, having buried her husband, Henry Bower, July 17, 1888, and is now residing with her two sons, David and Henry Bower. Both are members of the Masonic fraternity, and reside at South Side, Pittsburgh. David is a blacksmith, as was his father, and Henry is a machinist. The mother was born at Caermarthen, and is now (1889) fifty-six years old. Of her two sons, David was born at East St. Louis, Ill., and Henry at Llanelly, Caermarthenshire, Wales.

Mr. James is a member of the Episcopal Church, of the Masonic fraternity and of the I. O. O. F. In 1886 he was married to Miss Diana Jones, daughter of Evan and Mary Jones, and a native of Wales. Of seven children born to this couple, six survive as follows: Jane Eleanor, Elizabeth, John Hugh, Mary, William David and Nelly.
Margaretta, the third child, died when less than two years old and was buried at Allegheny cemetery. Mrs. James has one brother, Thomas Jones, in Illinois, and also a nephew and a niece near Peoria, Ill., they having buried their father and mother some eleven or twelve years ago; their names are Peter and Mary Davies. Her brother, John Jones, is at present at New Tredegar, Monmouthshire, England.

Henry Large, distiller, West Elizabeth, son of Jonathan and Easter (Finney) Large, was born July 4, 1836, on the place now owned by him, in Jefferson township. His grandfather, John Large, a soldier in the Revolution, and a native of New Jersey, came to this county about 1796, locating on the Boggs farm, Upper St. Clair township; later moved to Jefferson township, purchased the farm adjoining that owned by Henry Large, and built a distillery. His family consisted of seven children: Jonathan, Samuel, Margaret, Henry, Isaac, Nancy and Thomas, all of whom are deceased, excepting Henry, now a resident of Mifflin township, aged ninety-two years; and Margaret, now of Crawford county, Iowa. Jonathan Large was born in New Jersey, and came here when young. He married Easter, daughter of Andrew Finney, of Mifflin township; bought a farm near Lebanon church, built a distillery and tram-mill, which later he disposed of and purchased the place now owned by Henry Large, Jr., on Peters creek, Jefferson township, and known as the Ferree purchase. The Ferrees were in the war of 1812, and Col. Ferree was identified in the whisky insurrection. Peters creek derives its name from an old Indian trapper called Peter. It was on this farm that a fort was built, in a field known as "fortfield," only accessible from one point, being a natural fortification and affording a view of nearly eight miles up and down the creek. Jonathan Large's children were Jane, John, Andrew, Levi, Samuel, Nancy (deceased), Harriet, Jonathan, James, Isaac and Llewellyn (twins) and Henry, the youngest of the family. In 1861 Henry, the subject of this memoir, married Anna H. Greenly, and in 1863 bought the property he now owns. He is engaged in the manufacture of Monongahela rye whisky, the brand having been established by his grandfather, and has a national reputation for excellence.

M. Robbins Smith, superintendent of Robbins & Co.'s mines, McKeesport, a son of Samuel I., and Mary Jane (Robbins) Smith, was born in Cumberland county, Pa., in 1849, and came to this county Oct. 13, 1872, locating in Lincoln township. Samuel I. died in Cumberland county, and his widow removed to Lincoln township in 1880, where she died Dec. 8, 1887. Their children were Will H., of Stroudsburg, Pa.; Albert, of Stroudsburg; Annie M. (Mrs. Nimmo); and M. R. The last named has been superintendent of mines in Lincoln township, now owned by W. N. Robbins & Co., of McKeesport, since 1880. These mines were established in 1846 by Pollock & Dunseth, who were succeeded by Pollock & Lee, and they by Stone & Phillips, following whom Mr. Stone became sole owner. In 1870 they were purchased by Robbins & Jenkins, and in 1880 the firm changed to W. N. Robbins & Co., present owners. The mines afford employment to 150 men, have a daily capacity of 10,000 bushels of coal, are among the oldest on the river, and contain the last coal between Monongahela and Youghiogheny rivers west of Murrysville anticlinal.

C. C. Teeter, chief clerk for the Edgar Thomson Steel-works, Braddock, was born in Cambria county, Pa., in 1846, a son of Major Isaac Teeter, of Bedford county, Pa., a builder and contractor by occupation. He was reared and educated in Cambria county, and early in life commenced his business career in the capacity of clerk for the Cambria Iron company of Johnstown, Pa., where he remained until 1875, since when he has filled his present position. In 1862 Mr. Teeter enlisted in Capt. William Palmer's independent company of "Silver Greys," re-enlisted in Co. F, 21st P. O., and for two years and one day served with the company in all the engagements in which it was present, and was wounded in the side Dec. 27, 1863, at Harper's Ferry, Va. Mr. Teeter is a F. & A. M., and a republican.

R. D. Bowman, one of the superintendents in the Edgar Thomson Steel-works, Braddock, was born in Carbon county, Pa., in 1847, third of the nine children born to Henry and Lovina (Peters) Bowman, of Eastern Pennsylvania. The subject of this sketch received a common-school education, and was for many years engaged in the paint-manufacturing business, until entering the employ of the Edgar Thomson Steel Manufacturing company. Mr. Bowman was married in 1868 to Miss Sarah M., daughter of Rev. John G. Jones, and sister of Capt. William R. Jones, general manager of the Edgar Thomson Steel-works, and to this union one son, Lee H., has been born. Mr. Bowman is a member of the Lutheran Church, and is a republican.

Andrew Craighead, real-estate dealer, Elizabeth, is a grandson of Robert Craighead, a native of Ireland, who emigrated to this country at a very early day and settled near Carlisle, Pa. John Craighead was the third son of Robert, and is the father of our subject. He was born near Carlisle, Pa., and was a young boy when his family moved to this county, and was one of the very earliest settlers of this township. He started in life as a farmer, and afterward engaged in the lumber business with Maj. John Walker, which continued until his death. They built some of the first sawmills erected in the county. He was one of the first justices of the peace of this borough, and held that office until his death, in 1838. His wife was Abigail Stewart, of this town, and they reared a family of six daughters and five sons; one daughter and four sons are still living, as follows:
genealogy of Mr. McLain’s family is as follows: In 1850 six brothers from the Isle of Mull, Scotland, emigrated to America. They were all civil engineers, and settled in the Cumberland valley. Of their descendants, William McLain settled in Washington county in an early day. His son, Hon. J. R., was a farmer and wool-merchant in Washington county; in 1877 was elected to the legislature, and in 1886 was elected state senator. He married SusannahRalston, who became the mother of five sons and four daughters. W. J. E. McLain was educated by Rev. W. H. Lester, at the West Alexander Academy, and afterward took a classical course at Amherst College. He taught school two years in his native county, and one term in Iowa. For two years he had charge of the fitting-school for boys in Miami township, near Lebanon church. He then became the first principal of the Amity Academy of Dravosburg, where he taught two years with great tact and ability. In 1878 he opened a large general store in Dravosburg, which is in a flourishing condition, and does business under the firm name of J. R. McLain & Co. He was married Oct. 16, 1888, to Miss Anna M., daughter of Addison Lytle, Esq., of Allegheny City, Pa. Mr. McLain is identified with the K. of P., Jr. O. U. A. M. and R. A. He is a director of the First National Bank of Homestead; in politics he is a republican.

William B. Moyle, merchant, Tarentum, was born at Sharpsburg, Allegheny county, Pa., in 1859, a son of William and Hannah (Lloyd) Moyle, the former a native of Cornwall, England, the latter of Wales. They were married at Sharpsburg, where Mr. Moyle was engaged in business, but later he removed to Allegheny City, and there carries on a general furniture-store. Their children were Emma, Luella, Alice, Charles, Edith and William B. Our subject remained at home until his marriage, in 1880, with Jessie, daughter of Thomas H. Neal, of Bellevue, Pa. In 1887 they removed to Tarentum, where he became established in business as a dealer in furniture. Mr. and Mrs. Moyle have one child, William Lloyd.

Jacob G. Vogele, merchant, Tarentum, was born at Butler, Butler county, Pa., in 1853, a son of George and Mary (Gass) Vogele, former of whom is one of the pioneers of Butler county, and is in business at the same corner where our subject was born. Mary, his wife, died July 25, 1878. Their family consisted of seven children: Edward, Jacob G., George Henry, Sarah M., Emma E., Aaron E. (deceased) and Clara. In 1870 Jacob G. commenced to learn the carpenter’s trade of F. Felgel, of Butler, which he followed until 1875, in which year he went to California, where he followed his trade for about a year. He then accepted a position with a mercantile house, with which he remained until the spring of 1882. Returning to Pennsylvania, he married Annie C., daughter of Charles and Louisa Wohlleb, of Tarentum. The young couple then proceeded to California, but owing to the ill health of Mrs. Vogeley they returned to Allegheny county, and located at Tarentum. Here Mr. Vogeley commenced general merchandise business, consisting of dry goods, wall-paper, furnishings, notions, etc. Mr. and Mrs. Vogeley have two children, Charles George and Lillian P. Mr. Vogeley is a member of the R. A. Lodge, No. 910, of Tarentum. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church.

THOMAS HARE, merchant, Pittsburgh, born and reared in County Derry, Ireland. At the age of eighteen years he came to America, and in 1847 settled in Pittsburgh, where he engaged in the regular hardware business with Logan, Wilson & Co., since changed to Logan, Gregg & Co. Later he engaged with R. T. Leach, and remained in his employ four years, and afterward commenced business on a small scale at 513 Wood street, in partnership with Mr. McWhinney. The firm was known as McWhinney, Hare & Co. They continued successfully for ten years, when the firm changed to Thomas Hare & Bro., and later to Hare & Son, the son being Thomas C. They are conducting principally a wholesale business, and are doing an excellent trade.

CHRISTIAN WILHELM, merchant, Fetterman, was born in Germany in 1884, son of Powell Wilhelm. He was educated at the schools in Germany, was formerly employed in coal-mining, and for the past twenty-five years has been in mercantile business. He came to his present location in 1865. He was married, in 1866, to Louisa, daughter of Henry Koch, and they have had seven children, five of whom are now living: Fred, Louisa, William, August and Mena. Mr. Wilhelm is a republican, a Freemason, and a member of the I. O. O. F. and Red Men. The family are members of the G. P. Church.

JOHN B. SHERRIFF, farmer, postoffice Elizabeth, is a grandson of John and Martha (Neal) Sherriff. John was a native of Ireland, and came to America in 1785, first settling near Carlisle, Pa., where he married, and afterward located on Peters creek, but later removed to Saw-Mill run, where he was accidentally killed in 1810. His eldest son, William, the father of our subject, was a carpenter, and settled in Mercer county, where he died Oct. 4, 1849. He married Jeanette Black, who died Aug. 10, 1877. Eight of their children are still living, as follows: Martha (Mrs. John Robinson), Jeanette (Mrs. M. Vannmeter), Adam and Joseph, all of Lawrence county, Pa.; Elizabeth (Mrs. James Shields, in Iowa), Harriet (Mrs. William Somerville, deceased, of Ohio), William H. (Iowa), and John B. The last named was the eldest, and was born July 18, 1811, in Mercer county. When seventeen years old he went to Pittsburgh and learned the trade of coppersmith, and in 1835 established a business there, which he continued for fifty-two years, retiring in 1887. In 1865 he purchased his present farm, on which he has since resided. July 11, 1887, he was married to Sarah H., daughter of John and Rebecca (Gordon) McGraw, of this county. They were the parents of six children, of whom five are living. Their names are as follows: Henry C., William J., Annie M. (Mrs. Isaac Taylor, deceased), Rebecca J. (widow of S. O. Wiley, and now Mrs. West, of Ballard, Cal.), Charles F., Agnes L. (Mrs. Matthew P. Winterburn). Mr. and Mrs. Sherriff are members of the Presbyterian Church.

CHRISTIAN GAUF, tobacconist, Elizabeth, was born in Prussia Sept. 27, 1835, and came to this country in 1853. He located at Pittsburgh, and afterward in St. Louis; remained at the latter place until 1861. He then enlisted in the Missouri militia, and served three months, after which he enlisted in the 4th M. C. Co. C, and afterward in Co. I, and served until the close of the war. He was taken prisoner July 10, 1868, at the engagement at Union City, Tenn., and was confined in Libby prison and Belle Island for about six months. At the close of the war he came to Elizabeth borough and engaged in the manufacture of cigars, and has since resided here. He is a member of the old Mononga-hela Lodge, No. 298, and Encampment, No 109, I. O. O. F.; Joseph Stevens Post, No. 111, G. A. R., and K. of P. Lodge, No. 444. In 1867 he was married to Mrs. Margaret A. Baum, daughter of Maxwell Wall, of Forward township. They have two children living: Bertha and Alfaretta. Mrs. Gauf has one son by her former marriage—Reno Kerney Baum. The family are members of the M. E. Church.

AMES MILLER, contractor, Wilkinsburg, was born in Hempfield, Westmoreland county, Pa., in 1847, son of John and Elizabeth (Long) Miller, natives of that county. His grandfather, John Miller, was a blacksmith, and came of German stock. The father and mother now reside on the farm owned by Tobias Long, father of the latter. Ames Miller remained on the home farm till eighteen years old, when he went to learn the carpenter trade, and a year later began building barns for neighboring farmers. In 1874 he came to Wilkinsburg, and was employed as journeyman till 1886, when he began contracting. He was formerly associated with the Lutheran Church, but is now united, along with his family, with the Reformed Church; he is a democrat. Nov. 17, 1870, Mr. Miller was wedded to Sarah J. Steimer, a native of Westmoreland county, and daughter of Jacob G. and Mary Magdalene Steimer, of German descent, and following-named children have been born to this union: Francis Marian, Anna Mary, Sarah Elizabeth, Adda May and Alice Edna, living, and Simon Henry, George Wilson and Emma Jane, deceased.

JAMES ELLIS BOOTH, farmer, postoffice New Texas, was born March 18, 1854, in Pittsburgh, a son of Thomas and Mary (McGregor) Booth. Thomas was born in England in 1828, a son of Thomas, Sr., and Elizabeth (Jones) Booth, natives, respectively, of Cheshire, England, and North Wales, and were born on the same day, July 8, 1798. Thomas, Jr., was brought from England when he was eight months old to Jersey City, where, after arriving at manhood, he followed carpentering for eight years, at which time he moved to Pittsburgh, and died Jan. 25, 1858. Here his son Thomas was educated, and for many years followed carpentering and architecture. In 1861 he engaged in the brewing business in Allegheny City, in company with Mr. Brown, now president of the East End Bank, which he conducted successfully until 1883, when he retired. In 1878 he bought the farm which he now owns, and erected a house costing $5,000, and other buildings to correspond. He died in April, 1887. His wife, Mary Booth, a daughter of James and Martha (Wilson) McWhirk, was born in Ireland, Aug. 2, 1835. Her father was born in Ireland and her mother in Lancastcr county, Pa. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Booth: James Ellis, the only one living; Sarah Ann, who died in 1875, aged nineteen years; Ellen Elizabeth, who died Feb. 3, 1862, aged nine years; Robert and William (twins), who died Oct. 17 and 21, 1861, respectively. James Ellis Booth was educated in the old Fifth ward and high-schools of Pittsburgh, and learned the brewing business with his father. His health failing, he moved, in 1880, to his father's farm. He married, Oct. 17, 1878, Georgie Vincent, who was born in Noblestown, Washington county, Pa., in May, 1857, a daughter of James and Julia (Welsh) Vincent, of Washington county, former of whom died Feb. 14, 1876, aged seventy-one years; latter lives in the city of Allegheny. Four children, Florence E., Thomas B., Vincent and Georgie, make happy the home circle. Mr. Booth is a republican, and he and Mrs. Booth are members of the U. P. Church. He owns 280 acres, well improved, with fine buildings; also brewing property and houses and lots in Allegheny City. His mother also owns a fine block on Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, but makes her home with her son on the farm.

Alexander Boyd Boal, farmer, post-office Parnassus, was born in County Down, Ireland, about 1830, a son of John and Resan (McWhirk) Boal, who died in the old country. He received his education in Ireland, and, as he was the seventh son, was educated for the ministry, but coming to Pittsburgh, in 1847, he engaged with James Reece, to learn steam-engine building, at which he remained three years. He was at the Fort Pitt iron-works ten years, and then he and his brother began business together. This enterprise not being a success, he in 1864 took charge of the mechanical department of the Standard Oil company's works for three years. He was about the Eclipse works two years, and was foreman for Robert C. Totten three years. In 1873 he was elected one of the directors and superintendent of the Portsmouth Foundry & Machine company, Portsmouth, Ohio. The year was a very successful one, and he was unanimously re-elected; however, five months later he was discharged without cause, and brought suit for the remainder of the year's salary, which passed through the courts to the supreme court and was decided in his favor. Returning to Pittsburgh in 1875, he soon after engaged at the Westinghouse Air-Brake works, remaining until 1885, when he exchanged some city property for his farm in Plum township.

Mr. Boal married, in 1852, Rachel Kennedy, who died one year later; he next married, in 1856, Caroline Davis, of Pittsburgh, daughter of David Davis and Mary (Daniels) Davis, both deceased. Twelve children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Boal, five of whom are living: William J., Mary L., John, Geo. W., and James H. and David John Alexander. The family are members of Parnassus Presbyterian Church. Mr. Boal is a republican, and while in Pittsburgh was commander of the Grant and Lincoln clubs.

James Davison Carothers, plasterer, Wilkinsburg, was born in May, 1855, on the north side of Penn avenue, about midway between Wood and Centre streets. His grandfather, Charles Carothers, came from Ireland when a young man, and Charles, son of the latter, was born in Patton (then Plum) township in 1797. Charles, Jr., married Eliza McCowan, who was born in what is now Penn, and opened a store on the site of Wilkinsburg about 1811. He was the first justice elected here, and was a staunch whig. After doing business some time in Pittsburgh, he went to New Castle in 1853, and kept store twenty years. He died in Wilkinsburg in 1876, in his seventy-second year; his widow died July 4, 1888, in her eightieth year; they were both identified with the Presbyterian Church. They reared two daughters and one son: Mary (Mrs. H. W. Sumner), Mary Margaret (wife of J. W. F. Beatty) and James D. The subject of this memoir received a common-school education in Wilkinsburg, Pittsburg, and in Monroeville, and when twenty years old began work at plastering, which trade he has followed ever since. For the last sixteen years he has dwelt at Wilkinsburg, and is united with the Presbyterian Church, A. O. U. W. and R. A., and he is a republican. In 1880, Mr. Carothers married Olivia J. Johnston, born in Penn, sister of W. F. Johnston (whose sketch appears elsewhere). Mrs. Carothers died in March, 1881, in her forty-seventh year, leaving three children: Harry McMillen, in Anson, Mo.; Ellen Mary, wife of Curtis Graham, in Wilkinsburg, and Charles Monroe, in Wilkinsburg; Frances, the third born, died in infancy.

Louis M. Hattman, upholsterer, post-office McKee's Rocks, son of Henry C. E. and Magdalena Hattman, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1854. His father was born in Holstein, Germany, in 1814, and immigrated to America about 1840, first locating in Cincinnati, where he became the first foreman of Dr. Crampton's Star candle-works, remaining until 1842. He then came to Pittsburgh, Pa., and was foreman of Singer's Star candle-factory, which occupation he followed until his retirement in 1856. He and his wife still reside in Pittsburgh, the parents of ten children, eight of whom are now living, viz.: Henry B., Frederick A., William A., Louis M., Louisa D. (wife of J. H. Garrett), Sarah (wife of John A. M. Nagle), Albert R. (born on the day Richmond was taken, April 2, 1865), and Rebecca (wife of George McKee). During the civil war Henry C. E. and his sons, Henry B. and Frederick A., served three years in Co. A, 99th V. I., and participated in all the engagements of that regiment during the war. Mr. Hattman was the first to learn the process of making white glue out of bones. Louis M. learned the furniture-upholstering and car business, which he has followed since he was sixteen years old. He and his brother, Frederick A., some years ago, at an elevation in the East End of Pittsburgh, discovered a part of the remains of a mastodon, two teeth of which weighed jointly fifteen pounds, and a tusk was nearly nine feet long. One of the teeth was presented to the Burnell museum, and is now on exhibition in New Orleans.

Daniel L. McGreevey, farmer, postoffice chartier, son of Daniel and Ellen McGreevey, was born in Philadelphia in 1833. His father came from Ireland to America in 1831, and located in Philadelphia, where he remained until 1859, when he moved with his family to Squirrel Hill, East End, Allegheny county, and followed farming and gardening. In 1856 he bought the place where his son, Daniel L., now resides. His wife died in 1865, at the age of sixty-seven years, and some years after her death he sold the property to his son, Daniel L., and moved to Robinson township. He died in 1881 at the age of seventy-five years. Of his eight children only two are living: Daniel L., on the old homestead, and Hugh H., in Pittsburgh. Daniel L. has always followed farming and gardening. He was married, in 1859, to Ann Matthews, of this county, and they have one child, Ellen C., now wife of William Debold, of Pittsburgh.

E. L. Erbeck, station-agent, Homestead, is a native of Bridgewater, Beaver county, Pa., a son of Christian Erbeck, of that county. He was educated in his native place, and graduated at Duff's Commercial College in the class of 1878. After clerking ten months in a store he began work for the Lake Erie Railroad company, and was an operator for many years. In October, 1888, he came to Homestead, where he has held the position of station-agent ever since. He has also been conducting a wholesale business in the interest of the railroad company. Since January, 1887, he has been in the builders' supply business, and has now his brother, F. J. Erbeck, as a partner. Mr. Erbeck married Zella T., daughter of Daniel Carns, and they have one child—Anna Lols.

Patrick F. Hanley, engineer, postoffice Homestead, was born March 17, 1846, in Ireland, and came to Albany, N. Y., when very young. He is a son of Thomas and Bridget (White) Hanley, natives of Ireland, former of whom was a contractor in Milwaukee, Wis., where Patrick F. was educated, and learned the machinist's trade in the machine-shops of Sanford & Sircum. There our subject followed his trade until his twentieth year, when he commenced railroading on the Chicago & North-Western railroad and the Illinois Central, as engineer. He was also in the employ of the Union Pacific railroad, and ran the first engine over the famous Dale creek bridge, on the summit of the Rocky mountains. In 1874 he returned east and followed engineering on the Mississippi and Ohio rivers. Subsequently he ran an engine on the Little Saw-Mill Run railroad, was in the accident there, and his escape from death was one of the most marvelous in the history of railroad accidents. Later he was foreman in the Pittsburgh and Glenwood shops, on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad. At present he is in the Armor Plate-mill, where he has charge of the big engine. He invented the first lateral and moving table for lifting heavy iron and a system of railroad signaling, and distinguished himself as a capable workman. He married, in Pittsburgh, Maggie Barrett, a native of Ireland, and they had two children, one now living, Nellie. Mr. and Mrs. Hanley are members of the Catholic Church. He is a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

Jacob A. Alter, farmer, postoffice New Texas, was born in Plum township, in his present home, in June, 1814, a son of John and Jane (Bratton) Alter, who were born in Washington county, April 27, 1802, and Jan. 18, 1802, and died Aug. 7, 1883, and Oct. 26, 1880, respectively. His grandfather, David Alter, died in this county. His father was a blacksmith, and also owned a farm, which his sons or hired help cultivated; was major of militia, and held many offices in Plum township; was the father of thirteen children: George, Eliza, Samuel, Mary, Sarah Jane, Nancy, Margaret Ann, Lucinda, Susan, Rebecca, Elvira (deceased at seventeen years of age), Jacob A. and William Daniel. He celebrated his golden wedding, and his children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren were present to the number of ninety-six. The subject of this sketch received a common-school education in Plum township, and always lived on the farm and took care of the family. He married, June 20, 1888, Jane Hamilton, sister of the county superintendent of schools, and daughter of Samuel and Mary (Patterson) Hamilton, natives of Washington county, Pa., and of Ireland. Mr. Hamilton died in September, 1864. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Alter: Jacob Hamilton, Howard Russell and Marie. The family are members of Plum Creek Presbyterian Church. Mr. Alter enlisted in August, 1862, in Co. G. 136th P. V. I., Col. Bayne, and was discharged in January, same year, on account of sickness.

John H. Bryant, foreman-machinist, Pittsburgh, is a son of William and Eliza Bryant, and was born in Allegheny City, Pa., in 1831. His grandfather came from Ireland about 1790, and settled in Washington county, Pa., where his son, William, was born in 1804. He married, in Monongahela City, Ann E. Beebe, of that city, and their children were James, William (deceased), Annette (wife of William Seifert), Sarah (wife of H. D. Rhine), John, Charles (deceased) and Edwin. William Bryant, though a democrat during the civil war, held the position of wagon-inspector under Lincoln’s administration. He died in May, 1879, a member of the Masonic fraternity; his widow survived him only six weeks. Mrs. William Bryant’s father carried on boat-building in Monongahela City for many years. John H. began to learn the trade of machinist when seventeen years old, has followed it ever since, and is foreman-machinist in the firm of Singer, Nimick & Co., Pittsburgh, where he learned the trade. He married, in 1872, Emma F., daughter of Richard and Mary J. Cuddy, and their children were Nellie, George A., Emma F., Mary J. (deceased), Grace A. and William E. Mr. Bryant is a member of the Jr. O. U. A. M.

James Grierson, farmer, postoffice Car- rick, was born Aug. 7, 1850, in Allegheny county, Pa., a son of John and Marion (Muckle) Grierson, natives of Scotland, former of whom came to America when a lad and successfully followed gardening in Brownstown up to the time of his death. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, as was also his wife, who survived him until March 18, 1885. She was the mother of three children: James, Elizabeth and Mrs. Matilda Semmelrock. The subject of this memoir was educated in this county, and has followed gardening and farming successfully, having a farm of twenty acres. He married here, Jan. 5, 1882, Mary, daughter of Thomas Butler, and they have two children, Walter and Milton. Mr. and Mrs. Grierson are members of the Presbyterian Church; he is a republican.

David Pierce, farmer, postoffice Monou- ngaheia City, son of Jonathan and Maria (Bell) Pierce, was born in Monongahela City in 1832. His parents and grandparents afterward removed to the farm now owned by David, where they died. Jonathan’s family were James, born in 1818; Joseph, in 1820; Cassander, in 1822; Nancy, in 1823; Lewis, in 1825; Israel, in 1828; Elizabeth, in 1830; David, in 1831; John, in 1832; John, in 1834; James, in 1835; Martha, in 1838; Mary, in 1840; Violet, in 1843. Joseph, John, Nancy and David are still living. David married Eliza Jane, daughter of Daniel and Elizabeth (Ketchum) Pierce, in 1871. Her brothers and sisters were William, Benjamin, Eliza Jane, Francis, Hannah and Joseph. The first two are deceased. David has a family of four children: Bessie, Gertrude, William and George. Mrs. Pierce is a member of the Methodist Church.

David N. Lea, postoffice Woodville, is the second son of Robert and Mary Lea. He was educated at the public schools of Scott township, and early in life commenced the study of steamboat-engineering, which business he has followed over thirty years. In 1846 he made his first trip to New Orleans, under Capt. Steven Stone, on the steamboat Pennsylvania, and after that made three trips to New Orleans from Pittsburgh. He belonged to the volunteer fire company of Pittsburgh for eight years, and fought the big fire of 1845 from beginning to end. During the war, in the year 1861, he was employed by the government to take four engines from Pittsburgh, by railway, to St. Louis, to place on the two gunboats Car- rondelet and Pittsburgh, and deliver them by water, on the Mississippi, ready for service at Cairo; then returned home on account of sickness in the family. Among his most noted voyages was that in 1861, when he safely carried the government supplies up the Yellowstone and Big Horn rivers, to a point beyond Fort Custer, which, until then, had never been explored so far by steamboat. This trip required three months, and Mr. Lea regards with pride the success of the enterprise. His principal work has been on the waters of the Ohio and Missis- sippi rivers. He is now living retired on a part of the old homestead, which is some of the original tract purchased by his ancestors. He was married, in 1848, to Ellen Fryer, and to them were born Annetta (Mrs. Keller) and Kate (Mrs. Gullett). His second marriage took place in 1865, with Miss A. E. Harbison, daughter of Matthew and Jane (McCormick) Harbison, and two children were born to this union: William N., a painter by trade, and Jennie, now Mrs. Wagon. Mr. Lea, although retired from active life, superintends the work on his farm. He is a republican; the family are members of the U. P. Church.

Joseph Campbell, miller, postoffice Woodville, was born in County Down, Ire- land, in 1848, the eldest son of twelve children born to James and Margaret (Artherli- not) Campbell. He attended the schools of his native land until he was fourteen years of age, when he commenced to learn the millwright’s trade, serving an apprenticeship of four years. He came to this county in 1871, and was superintendent of his present mill, then owned by other parties, for twelve years. He purchased the property in 1884, and since then has made great changes and improvements, and the work is done by the old French burr system, and his superior flour, consumed by local trade, speaks best for its quality. Mr. Campbell undoubtedly understands the details of the mill business, and by close application and skill has been success- ful. He was married in 1860 to Miss Agnes Rodgers, who has borne him thirteen children, nine of whom are now living. He is a member of the U. P. Church, and is a republican.

Maurice Kapp, mine-boss, postoffice Carrick, was born March 28, 1833, in Hessen, Germany, a son of Wendal and Joseva (Wiegand) Kapp, natives of the above-named place. He emigrated to America at the age of twenty, engaged with J. B. Hays in the Shoeberger Coal-works, and subsequently was promoted to the position of boss with Thomas Briggs, for whom he worked three years, and then engaged as boss with Joe Waltou. To the present time he has been mining-boss for twenty years, and has had as many as three hundred employés. He commenced at the bottom of the ladder and by his industry and good habits worked himself up. He married here Geneva Holzheimer, a native of Germany, and seven children have blessed their union: Mrs. Mollie McCarry, Mrs. Lizzie Soulier, John, Catherine, Minnie, Joseph and Peter. Mr. and Mrs. Kapp are members of the Catholic Church: politically he votes for principle.

N. F. Sanford, superintendent of coal-works, postoffice Mansfield Valley, is a native of Youngstown, Ohio, born in 1843, a son of Samuel Sanford, a farmer of Ohio. He is the first-born of six children, and was educated at the Warren high-school, subsequently taking a commercial course at Oberlin College, Ohio. Early in life he engaged in the coal business, which he has followed since. His first connection with the works of which he is now superintendent was with what was known as the Essen mines of the Chartiers Coal company, owned and controlled by the Economic society. Mr. Sanford came to Allegheny county in 1886, and the works, of which he is a member, and known as Sanford & Co.'s Coke and Coal Works, was organized in that year. He is superintendent and general manager, and the market for his production is Youngstown during the winter and the lakes in the summer. Mr. Sanford was married in 1861 to Ostia Louise Leet, daughter of Homer M. Leet, of Connecticut, a prominent engineer and surveyor. Seven children, five of whom are living, have been born to their union: Jesse H., formerly superintendent of the works of Sanford & Co., now owner of mines and stores; Bertha, Elr, Ida May and Violet. Mr. Sanford started in life comparatively poor, but by close application and industry has made life a success. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is a republican. Mr. and Mrs. Sanford’s ancestors were early pioneers of Trumbull county, Ohio, the Reserve, where some of the direct line of the old Pilgrims or Puritans (from whom Mrs. Sanford claims direct lineage) settled (coming from the east) while the country was a wilderness, inhabited by wild beasts and Indians. Mr. A. Woodford, uncle of Mrs. Sanford, was the first white child born in Trumbull county, eight and one-half miles north of what is now the city of Youngstown, Ohio.

Thomas E. Morgan, general merchant, postoffice Mansfield Valley, was born in West Elizabeth, Allegheny county, Pa., March 29, 1843. He is the eldest son of David and Charlotte (Rodgers) Morgan, the parents of six children. David Morgan came from Wales to America at an early date; his wife was a German lady. Thomas E. was educated at the common schools, and for one year was a student at Iron City College, Pittsburgh. After finishing school he was for a number of years employed as clerk on a steamboat; later worked in a teahouse, and then for thirteen years in manufacturing-works. In 1862 he enlisted in Co. E, 153rd regiment, and served until the close of the war. In 1865 he removed to Mansfield, where he has since resided, engaged in the grocery business, in which he has been very successful. He married, Oct. 28, 1869, Mary E. Boyd, daughter of Irwin J. Boyd, and seven children were born to them, four yet living: Lottie E., Sarah B., James W. and Eva S. T. Mr. Morgan and family are members of the Presbyterian Church; he is a republican.

Hartman Guise, pilot, postoffice McKeensport, son of William and Catharine Guise, was born in Germany in 1823. His parents immigrated to America and located in Pittsburgh in 1831, where his father readily found employment, being a mason and bricklayer. In 1840 he removed to Versailles township and engaged in mining coal. Hartman Guise came to Pittsburgh with his parents, and when eight years of age began work in the John Robinson Glass-works, remaining there several years. He was afterward, for about five years, employed at John Hay’s glass-works, and in 1840 he removed to Versailles township. Mr. Guise was a pilot on the Ohio river between Pittsburgh and Louisville for a period of fifteen years, and in 1855 he married May, daughter of James McCain, of Armstrong county. He purchased and located on the farm he now owns in Versailles township. They have one son, William J., who married Miss Anna Williams, of Monroe county, Ohio. Their home is with Mr. Guise, in Versailles.

Joseph McNall, farmer, postoffice Imperial, was born near Candler, Washington county, Pa., June 10, 1838, a son of James and Mary (Donehoo) McNall, natives of Washington county, former of whom was a soldier in the war of 1812. Daniel and Nancy (McCune) Donehoo, parents of Mrs. Mary McNall, natives of Ireland, and Presbyterians, were early settlers of Findlay township, but afterward moved to Washington county. James and Mary (Donehoo) McNall had nine children: Ellen (wife of John B. Burns), Nancy (wife of Henry Adams), Jane (wife of James Farrar), Eliza M. (died young), Mary, Martha (deceased), Isabelle, Joseph and James (deceased). Joseph married, August 29, 1859, Harriet A. Buchannon, daughter of John and Eleanor (Phillis) Buchannon, old residents of Washington county, Pa. After his marriage Mr. McNall settled on his farm in Robinson township, Washington county. In 1882 he sold out and purchased his present farm in Findlay township. Mr. and Mrs. McNall have six children living, viz.: James E. B. (reporter for the Evening News, Kansas City, Mo.), Nannie E., Alfred A., Joseph W., Addie J., and Leonard E. Mrs. McNall is a member of the U. P. Church at Clinton.
HISTORY OF ALLEGHENY COUNTY.

J. L. Forsaith, manufacturer, Eina, was born Aug. 27, 1837, in Lisbon, Grafton county, N. H. His ancestors were Scotch-Irish, and highly respected citizens of the above-named place. J. L. was educated in Boston, where he also learned the bricklayer's trade. At the outbreak of the civil war he enlisted in Co. H, 50th Mass. V. I., as a non-commissioned officer; served one year, and participated in Banks' expedition up the Red river. After the war he came to Pittsburgh, engaged in gauging crude oil; in 1870, he was elected city gauger, and paid more money into the city treasury in one year than anyone preceding or succeeding him. He was next appointed oil-inspector for Allegheny county, and served four years. Since then he has been a manufacturer in Sharpsburg of rolling mill greases, and lamps for furnaces and foundries, which he patented; also conducted the tin-roofing business, and has large quarries in Eina, where he resides. Mr. Forsaith married, in New Hampshire, Sophia T. Parker, and they have six children, viz.: George B., Adah L. Blanche, Herbert J., Maud and David. Mr. and Mrs. Forsaith are members of the M. E. Church, of which he is trustee and steward. He is a member of the G. A. R., is a republican, and has filled the offices of burgess and councilman of Eina.

John and Hiram Gamble, farmers, post-office Gamble's, are sons of John and Sarah (Douthitt) Gamble. John was born at West Newton, Westmoreland county, and with his parents removed to Black Horse farm, where Mr. Weaver now lives, thence to the farm he now occupies. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Round Hill, and is a prohibitionist. Hiram was born here in 1835. Their father was a native of Westmoreland county, and settled on this farm about 1820. Hiram married Mary Jane, daughter of John Torrence, of Elizabeth township, who died in October, 1884, leaving four children: Hezekiah D., Power T., Elliott A. and Oliver P., all of whom make their home at their father's house. Hiram Gamble is a democrat. A sister of the two brothers lives with them, Miss Mary B. Gamble, who was born in Forward in January, 1821. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Round Hill.

Robert P. Watson, lumber-merchant, Glenshaw, was born March 15, 1854, near Newport, R. I. The genealogy of the Watson family in New England dates back to colonial days, when the great-grandfather, Job Watson, was the largest landowner of Comanicut island, and a member of the gubernatorial council. His son, Robert Hazard Watson, was the father of Dr. Daniel Watson, one of the best-known physicians of that country. He married Sarah C. Arnold, and they had eight children. Of these our subject was educated in Rhode Island, and became a farmer there. He came to Pittsburgh in 1861, where he was a salesman seven years. In 1871 he took charge of the Glenshaw Coal company, and was superintendent until 1879. Since that time he has been engaged in farming and the lumber business. He married Ellen K., youngest daughter of T. W. Shaw. In the spring of 1879 Mr. and Mrs. Watson organized a Sabbath-school in the old Shaw sickle-factory, of which he was superintendent for seven years. He and Mrs. Watson were faithful workers in this labor of love, which was the foundation of the present flourishing Presbyterian Church.

William W. Irwin, farmer, postoffice Gamble's, is a son of John and Ann (McConnell) Irwin, and was born in 1843 on the farm now owned by him. His grandfather was a native of Ireland, and came to this country, where John was born, and served in the war of 1812. William's father was twice married, his first wife being Sarah La Fever, who was born in 1783, and died in 1832. John was born in 1788, and lived to be ninety-one years old. Their children were Harriet, Margaret, John Brady, Joseph L., Mary Catherine, Charity Eleanor, Rebecca Ann, Martha Ann, Henry F. and Susanna. Ann (McConnell) Irwin was born in 1802, and lived to be eighty years old. Their children were Sarah Alice, Nancy D., Findley D., Loressa J., William W. and Anna A. The following are deceased: Charity, Rebecca, Catherine, Susan, Nancy D. and Henry F. Henry F., Findley D. and William W. served in the late war. Findley D. was wounded and taken prisoner. In 1878 William W. married Nora, daughter of John McNall, whose parents were natives of this county. Their children are Frank W., Bert M., Henry F., John F., Anna B., Marion P. and Maggie; the last named is deceased. The rest are still at home. Mr. and Mrs. Irwin are members of the U. P. Church; he is a republican.

William Mullen Cribbs, druggist, Turtle Creek, was born in Homer City, Indiana county, Pa., June 4, 1845. His grandfather, Daniel, was a farmer, near Clarksburg, Indiana county, and was probably born of German parents. George, a son of the latter, kept a hotel for many years at Homer City, and died in 1875; his widow, Isabella Devers, of French ancestry, resides with William at Turtle Creek. A younger son and a daughter are the only other living children and are all together. William Cribbs finished his education at the Pittsburgh College of Pharmacy, and when his eldest brother, James, died took control of his drug business. Although only seventeen years old at that time, he managed the business successfully, and does a retail and jobbing trade amounting to from ten to fifteen hundred dollars per month. Besides the family residence and a farm of eighty-five acres in Patton township he owns real estate in Homestead and Millwood. He is a supporter of the republican party; is treasurer of the M. E. Sunday-school, and a member of the official board in that church, with which all the family is associated.

JAMES GAYLEY, superintendent of furnaces in the Edgar Thomson works, Braddock, was born in Cecil county, Md., in 1835. His father, Samuel A. Gayley, a Presbyterian minister, a native of County Tyrone, Ireland, emigrated to America about 1840, and for thirty-one years has been pastor of one congregation. His wife is Agnes, daughter of Peter Malcolm, a grain-merchant of Baltimore, Md. Our subject received his preliminary education at West Nottingham Academy, Maryland, and at the age of sixteen entered Lafayette College, at Easton, Pa., graduating at that institution in 1876. Mr. Gayley commenced his business career in the capacity of a chemist for the Craine Iron-works at Catasauqua, Pa., and for three years remained with that company. He then identified himself with a large furnace company at St. Louis, where he continued for two and a half years; then went to the E. & G. Brooke iron company, at Birdsboro, Pa., where he had charge of their blast-furnace department for three years. In 1885 he entered the employ of the Edgar Thomson works, Braddock, as superintendent of the blast-furnace department, which position he now holds. In 1884 he married Julia T., daughter of Col. Curtiss C. Gardiner (a prominent insurance-man and lawyer of St. Louis) and Mary (Thurston) Gardiner, daughter of Judge Thurston, of Elmira, N. Y., the latter being a descendant in the sixth generation of Miles Standish. Mr. and Mrs. Gayley have three children: Mary Thurston and Agnes Malcolm. They are members of the Presbyterian Church; he is a democrat.

JOSEPH TILBROOK, farmer, postoffice Stewart's Station, was born in 1822, within five miles of his present residence, a son of William and Martha (Taylor) Tilbrook, natives of Pennsylvania. His grandfather, Mr. Tilbrook, came from England; was a schoolteacher, and had a small farm in Versailles township, whereon he reared his family; his wife was a Virginian, or English. William, their son, settled on a farm in Patton about 1818. He was an elder in the Murrysville Presbyterian Church, afterward in the Cross Roads Church, and politically he was a republican. Joseph is the second of nine children, and has passed his life in Patton township. In 1846 he married Lucinda McDowell, a native of Penn township, and settled on his present farm. Alexander McDowell, father of Mrs. Tilbrook, a native of this county, and of Irish descent, served under Gen. Harrison in the campaign against the western Indians. His wife, Jane, was a daughter of Gen. Lapsley, an English soldier of the Revolution. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Tilbrook are Zachariah, Hiram McDowell, John Francis, Andrew Austin, Jennie M.; William Alexander, the eldest, was killed by a flat-car which he was trying to stop on a switch at Stewart's Station in 1889; he was very intelligent, and greatly respected. Mr. Tilbrook is a republican, a member of Cross Roads Church.

ALEXANDER M. SCOTT, merchant, Camden, was born Jan. 18, 1851, in Mifflin township. His great-grandparents were Thomas and Mary (Wilson) Scott, natives of Scotland, who emigrated to Ireland, where they reared a family of six boys and three girls. Of the sons, James married Nancy Jamison, came to America in 1836, and after ten years' residence in Butler county moved to this county, where he died July 3, 1863, aged eighty-three years, and his widow April 30, 1883, aged ninety-six years. They had seven children: William, Thomas, Alexander M., John, Maria, Nancy and Sarah. Of these Thomas married Lucinda, daughter of John and Sarah (Becket) Shoograss. They had seven children: John S., Alexander M., William, Sarah and Elizabeth. His present wife, Maggie, daughter of David Moore, is the mother of Lucinda, Samuel, Mary, Howard, Annie, Blair and Maggie L. Mr. Scott owns the old farm of one hundred acres. He is an elder in the Presbyterian Church.

The subject of this biography entered a mercantile career at the age of thirteen as a clerk in Camden, and has been identified with the store in Camden almost ever since. In 1870 he was employed by Lysle, Bailey & Co., as clerk, and made himself so generally useful that he became a partner and general manager two years later. He is also president of the Monongahela and Peters Creek Gas and Coal company. In 1889, he associated himself in business as copartner and general manager of the wholesale grocery business founded by Mr. Kirkpatrick in 1853 and at present conducted at 903 Liberty street, Pittsburgh, under the firm name of Allen Kirkpatrick & Co. Mr. Scott is an active worker in the Presbyterian Church, and for twelve years was superintendent of the Lebanon Sabbath-school. He married Margaret B., daughter of Allen and Rebecca (Bell) Kirkpatrick, of Pittsburgh.

GEORGE M. PARKER, merchant, Tarentum, son of William and Mary Parker, was born in Baltimore, Md., Jan. 23, 1851. His parents removed to Tarentum, Allegheny county, Pa., in 1853. In 1871 he married C. A. Renouf, daughter of Nicholas Renouf, of Tarentum, and they have since made their home there. Mr. Parker is one of the leading business-men of the borough, having for some years been engaged in general merchandising, but at present is dealing in teas, baking-powder, spices, confectionery and musical instruments, and has made "Parker's Tea Store" a popular resort. He has two children: Edwin M., who died at the age of two years, and Myrtle May, now fourteen years old. Mr. and Mrs. Parker are members of the Methodist Church.

Joseph Franklin Roberts, railroad conductor, postoffice Turtle Creek, was born at West Newton, Pa., April 16, 1851, a son of John Roberts, who was a native of Wales, but reared in London, England. John was a tinner, and when twenty-six years old came to this country and located at West Elizabeth, Allegheny county, where his wife, Elizabeth, died. He afterward married Anna Catherine Keck, who was born in Germany and came with her father, Michael Keck, to this country when she was six years old. For a time Mr. Roberts kept a large store at West Newton, and afterward engaged in farming near there. In 1863 he removed with his family to Turtle Creek, where he died in 1870, aged sixty-three; his widow died in 1889, aged fifty-eight. They had ten children, seven now living, of whom Joseph F. is the third. Rosetta, the eldest, died when six years old, and Charles Samuel and Daniel at four years and fourteen months, respectively. The others are named as follows: George Oliver, Matthias Mansell, Mary Melvina (Churchfield), Margaret Ann (Gilliland), Homer Clark and Sarah Ellen (Church). In 1870 Joseph Roberts engaged as a driver on the Brinton coal-train on the Pennsylvania railroad, and after six weeks' service was given charge of the train. With the exception of two years each at East Liberty and Brinton, as yardmaster, he has occupied the same position ever since. He is a member of the Conductors' Brotherhood of the Pennsylvania railroad, relieved afterward, and of the Royal Arcanum. His first vote was cast with the democrats, but he afterward became a republican, and is a supporter of the prohibition movement. In 1876 he married Margaret Kidd, who was born in Scotland. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Roberts are Andrew Kidd, John Franklin, Homer Clark and Isabella Bowman. Mr. Roberts and family are members of the E. M. Church.

William Cruikshank, merchant, Verona, was born in County Down, Ireland, in 1842, and came with his parents, William and Jane Cruikshank, to America when he was four years old. The family arrived at Pittsburgh in January, 1847, and the father, who was a blacksmith, found his first employment in turning horseshoes for the government for use in the Mexican war. The family dwelt two years at Monroeville, Patton township, where the mother died in 1851. Eight years were spent in Moon township, Allegheny county, and from there they removed to Kendall, Beaver county. The last shop operated by William Cruikshank, Sr., was at Sandy Creek, Penn township, where he died in 1877, aged sixty years. There were four sons: Joel and Thomas, conducting a shop near Brinton; William, and James, who was lost at sea on his way to Ireland, in 1884. William assisted his father in his shop in Kendall, Beaver county, and from there went to Steubenville, Ohio, in 1861, to work at his trade. In August of that year he enlisted in Co. B, 4th P. C., in Pittsburgh, and served in the Army of the Potomac until the close of the civil war—four years lacking twenty days. He was company blacksmith, and learned much during his service. His brother Thomas was in the same company from 1862, serving three years. For one year after the war William assisted his father at Sandy Creek, and then succeeded to the ownership of the business. He was an expert shoer, and did a very profitable business until 1877, when he sold out. Next year he came to Verona, and in 1880 built the store and residence which he now occupies. He also purchased the adjoining property, in which he carries on a livery and undertaking business. For two years he served as collector of taxes in Penn township, and five years as justice of the peace. He is a republican in politics, and in religion a Presbyterian. He is a member of the G. A. R., K. of P. and I. O. O. F. July 4, 1866, Mr. Cruikshank was married to Elizabeth Edgar, who died in 1877. Of her four children only one survived her—William Lavery. In 1879 Mr. Cruikshank married again, the bride being Annie B. Forstl, who became the mother of three children—Annie, May and Selma, surviving—and died in 1884.

Edward B. Godfrey, paper-bag manufacturer, Tarentum, a native of New Hampshire, came to Pittsburgh, and in 1856 he started a paper-manufacturing establishment. At his works, in 1851, was manufactured the first paper flour-sack ever made in the United States. Mr. Godfrey being the manufacturer of both the paper and the bag. His works at that time were on the Monongahela river, where he had two mills, but fire destroyed the big mill in 1883, and in 1884 he built a new mill at Tarentum, whither he removed the one from Monongahela river. The works have a capacity of ten tons of flour-sack paper daily, or 150,000 flour-sacks daily, and afford employment to from seventy-five to one hundred people. The firm is now Godfrey & Clark, with J. W. Rutherford as superintendent.

John Mertz, iron-worker, Pittsburgh, is a son of John and Eve Mertz, and was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1833. His parents came from France to this country in 1831, and settled in Pittsburgh, where they resided until the father's decease, in 1877, when he was seventy-five years of age. His widow is still living at the age of eighty-three years. John Mertz, Sr., was a watchman at Lawrence & Cutty's iron-works for twenty-five years, now J. Painter & Sons Co. His children were: George, John, and Eve C., wife of C. D. Agerter. By industry and perseverance Mr. Mertz accumulated considerable property, leaving his family in good circumstances. He and his wife were members of the G. L. Church. John Mertz, Jr., married, in 1857, Josephine, daughter of George and Freelove Dougherty, and their children are John C., George D., Freelove, Robert H., Sidney J., Eve and Park S. Mr. Mertz has been engaged in the iron business since he was sixteen years old. He is a Freemason, a member of the I. O. O. F., the A. O. U. W., the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers and Sovereigns of Industry. He is a Republican. His family are members of the Eighth Presbyterian Church.

JACOB BOOBYER, Jr., Sewickley, is a son of Jacob Boobyer, Sr., a native of Devonshire, England, a carpenter by trade, married to Elizabeth Baker, who was a teacher, coming of a literary and cultured ancestry. Jacob Boobyer, Jr., and family came to America, and settled in Philadelphia, Pa., where he was a window-blind manufacturer. In 1830 he removed to Pittsburgh, and eventually came into the country and engaged in farming. He died in 1874, aged eighty-three years. Jacob Boobyer, Jr., came from England to Philadelphia in 1820; at twelve years of age was errand-boy for John Robinson, in Pittsburgh. Robinson being one of the flint-glass manufacturers in the west; subsequently he learned the tailor's trade with J. B. Evans, and worked for Digby & Hopewell nearly ten years. In 1848, he started in business for himself, and retired from the same in 1872; then afterward he lived on his farm in Sewickley township. Mr. Boobyer was married to Anna, daughter of Louis J. Chamberlin, a dentist in Pittsburgh.

BRUCE TRACY, carpenter and builder, Sewickley, was born Sept. 27, 1810, in Uniontown, Pa., son of George and Leah (McCoy) Tracy. His great-grandfather, Col. Gattis, was in the revolutionary war; his wife was a Miss Bruce. His grandfather, John McCoy, was an early settler at Uniontown, where he owned much land. Bruce Tracy was reared in Wayne county, Ohio, where he partook of the blacksmith trade, and learned carpentering. He came to Pittsburgh in March, 1827, and completed his trade, which he followed there till 1839, when he came to Sewickley, where he has followed carpentering ever since, and built many dwellings. He may be called the grandfather of carpenters at Sewickley, as he has apprenticed and trained many of the carpenters in that place. At present he is engaged in the lumber business. Mr. Tracy was an abolitionist, and is now a prohibitionist. He cast his first vote for Gen. Jackson, and also voted for Gen. Harrison. In Sewickley he has been a member of the town council. He was first married, in the city of Allegheny, to Miss Ann McCowan, and to his second wife, Miss Mary McCowan, in the city of Pittsburgh. His son John D. Tracy, was killed in the battle of Antietam. Mr. and Mrs. Tracy attend the M. E. Church.

THOMAS H. S. ARMSTRONG, machinist, Allegheny, was born in Allegheny, Pa., Oct. 25, 1818, son of Richard Wilson and Matilda (Graham) Armstrong, former of whom was born in Lackawanna county, Pa., in 1809, and died at the age of seventy-six years. When eight years of age Richard W. came to Moon township, this county, where he lived for several years with a Mr. Nichols. On coming to Allegheny he learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed until 1873, and was employed as millwright and boss blacksmith in the Wayne Iron and Steel works for twenty-five years. He resided in Allegheny for fifty years, and was elected alderman in 1872, serving four years; was tax-collector four years, and United States inspector of boiler-plates until the office was abolished. He was a Master Mason when they had to hold meetings in the garrets in Pittsburgh and all Masons were in danger of their lives; was a member of the I. O. O. F. fifty four years. His widow, who now lives with her daughter, Mrs. Hettie Oyster, was born in Allegheny, Pa., in 1811. The subject of these lines received his education in Allegheny, and in 1864 commenced the machinist's trade, working six years. He then followed engineering on the river until 1880; then was employed three years as foreman for Wilcox, Shinkle & Co., and finally for a casting-house air-brake factory. Mr. Armstrong was married Nov. 24, 1875, to Maggie E. Lloyd, of Pittsburgh, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Lewis) Lloyd, natives of Wales. Three children blessed this union, viz.: Martha Sterling, Henrietta Lloyd and Charles F., who died in 1878. Mr. Armstrong is a Royal Arch Mason, is a member of the I. O. O. F. and A. O. U. W. He moved to his new home at Emsworth in September, 1884.

CHARLES I. MCKEE, commission-merchant, Allegheny, was born Sept. 7, 1837, in Birmingham, Ohio, son of Daniel and Amelia (Evans) Mckee, latter of whom was born at New Castle, Pa. Daniel Mckee, who was a native of Salem, Ohio, and a blacksmith by trade, moved, when Charles I. was but young; to New Castle, where he was educated until thirteen years of age. He (Charles I.) then came to Pittsburgh, where he worked for a grocer for a time; then entered the office of Brace Bros. laundry, as office-boy, where he rose step by step until he was placed in charge of their office on Sixth street. At the end of nine years Mr. Mckee resigned to accept a position as collector for William Moyle, Allegheny. Here he served three years, and then, in 1888, opened a commission-store at 83 East Diamond street, that city. Mr. Mckee was married May 26, 1884, to Mattie E. Lloyd, sister of Mrs. Thomas Armstrong (see sketch of Thomas H. S. Armstrong), and they have one child, Margaret M. Mr. Mckee is a member of the R. A., A. O. U. W. and Select Knights. Mrs. Mckee is present member of the M. E. Church. Their home is in Emsworth.

WILLIAM SCOTT, machinist, Wilkinsburg, was born in Johnstone, Renfrewshire, Scotland, May 5, 1883, a son of David and Mary (Smith) Scott. When seventeen years old he commenced to learn the machinist's trade, and became an engineer. For three years he was employed as engineer on a steamer belonging to the Cork Steamship company, plying between Cork and Liverpool and other ports. In 1893 he set out for America, and landed at Portland, Me., where he engaged as engineer of the government transport Star of the South, which cruised along the Atlantic and Gulf coast. Just before the close of the civil war he came to Allegheny county, and settled at Wilkinsburg. In 1865 he married Mary K., daughter of John and Maria (Speedly) Kelly, of Irish descent. Mrs. Scott is a native of Indiana county, her father having moved from here to that locality in early life. Mr. and Mrs. Scott's children are named as follows: William Wright, Maria, Belle, Mary Kelly and Annie D. The third child, Maggie C., died in 1887, aged nineteen. In 1871 Mr. Scott built his present residence on Rebecca street, and has ever since been employed by the A. French Manufacturing company, of Pittsburgh. In 1883 an accident destroyed the use of his right arm, which was caught midway between the wrist and elbow by a steam drop-hammer, and since then he has operated the engine. He is a member of the M. E. Church, I. O. O. F., A. O. U. W., and is a Freemason. He is a republican.

Charles Wesley McMinn was born in Salisbury, Lancaster county, Pa., Dec. 11, 1842. His grandfather, Robert McMinn, was the son of a Scotchman, and was born in Lancaster county, as was his father, Isaac Wilson. The latter married Mary A. Bender, also a native of Lancaster county, and died at the age of thirty-five; his widow now resides there. He was a teacher, and kept a country store. C. W. McMinn attended the public schools, and taught one year: and when twenty-two years old came to Pittsburgh, where he attended the Iron City Commercial College. He then taught in what is now the Twenty-first ward of Pittsburgh for eight years, being in Collins township during the first three years. For several years he was clerk in a dry-goods store in Pittsburgh, and in 1882 built and stocked his present store on Centre street, Brushton, a continuation of Tioga street, Pittsburgh. He took up his residence here in 1872, and has held a number of township offices. He was formerly a republican, now a democrat. He is a trustee in the M. E. Church, of which Mrs. McMinn is a member. He is a member of the A. O. U. W., of the R. A. and of the Order of Solomon. His marriage with Miss Caroline Chadwick, a daughter of Thomas Chadwick, took place in 1869, and their living children are Harrie F., Jennie E., Mary A. and Clara; the second, third and fourth died when very young.

Frederick Wilde, blacksmith, Chartiers, is a son of Charles and Mary Wilde, and was born in Germany May 19, 1845. His father died in Germany in 1861, and in 1861 his mother came to this country and now resides in the city of Allegheny, at the age of sixty-eight years. Frederick arrived in New York May 5, 1869, and worked one year on Long Island; in 1870 he came to Pittsburgh, and in March, 1874, located in Chartiers, Stowe township, where he bought property and established a general blacksmithing and wagon-making business, which he has successfully carried on to the present time. He first married, in 1872, Caroline Teitz, who died the following year at the age of twenty-six years. His second marriage occurred June 20, 1874, with Catherine Eisenbeiser, and by this union there are eight children: Lena, Louise, Annie, Katie, Frank, Bertie, Emma and Friederika.

John S. Waddle, blacksmith, postoffice Bakerstown, is a son of Thomas and Sarah J. (Swaney) Waddle. His grandfather, William Waddle, was a native of Ireland, and one of the early settlers of this county. Thomas Waddle was born in Allegheny county, and followed blacksmithing. Three of his children still reside in Allegheny county, Mary Jane, widow of James McElwain, of Allegheny county, and Sarah Jane, wife of Nathan White, of Allegheny. John S., the eldest of the family, was born Sept. 9, 1838, on the place now occupied by him. In 1857 he married Maria, daughter of William and Annie McKibbious, of West Deer township. They have four children living; William M., a merchant of Bakerstown; Thomas A., of Allegheny; Margaretta A., wife of Charles Karbin, of Sharpsburg, and Charles Howard, at home; a daughter deceased, Elizabeth I., was the wife of Harry Cowan, a merchant in Pittsburgh. Mr. Waddle and family are members of the Presbyterian Church of Bakerstown.

Harry Gordon, foreman of the pattern department of the National Tube-works, McKeepor's, was born at Stockport, Lancashire, England, Jan. 28, 1850, son of Robert and Mary A. (Ellen) Gordon. He was reared and educated in his native town, where he served an apprenticeship of five years at the pattern-maker's trade. In 1873 he came to America and located in McKeepor's, entering the employ of the National Tube-works company as a pattern-maker, and since 1890 he has been the efficient foreman of that department of their works. Mr. Gordon visited England in June, 1878, and August 7, same year, married Sarah Ellen, eldest daughter of Edmund J. and Damaris (Shawcross) Wild, of Stockport, by whom he has four children: Herbert Edmund, born January 28, 1880; Mabel Wild, born July 24, 1885; Minnie Wild, born Nov. 12, 1883, and Ellen, born Oct. 25, 1885. Mr. Gordon is a member of the Episcopal Church, the K. of H. and Foresters, of which latter organizations he has been treasurer for several years; politically he is a republican.

Lewis Roll, blacksmith, postoffice McKee's Rocks, son of John P. and Elizabeth Roll, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1844. His grandfather, John L. Roll, came to this country from Germany, in 1828, locating the same year in Pittsburgh, where he followed the trade of stonemason, and the foundation-stones of many of the old buildings of that city were laid by Mr. Roll. He died in January, 1881, in his ninety-first year, leaving five children: Margaret (Mrs. Holland), Magdalena (wife of Mr. Becker, a local preacher), Katie (Mrs. Shearing), Hannah (Mrs. Metz) and John P. The last named came with his parents to this county when about five years of age; he is a farmer and carpenter, and resides in Butler county. In 1848 he married Elizabeth Noss, of this county, and their children are Lewis, Katie (wife of Walter Campbell), Simon, William, George, Maggie (wife of Ira Porter), James, Wilson, Robert M., Lucinda and Frank. John P. Roll is a member of the I. O. O. F., in religious belief an adherent of the German Lutheran Church. Lewis Roll began the trade of blacksmith in 1861, which he has since followed, and now has a livery- and sale-stable in connection. He married, in October, 1867, Henrietta, daughter of Sebastian Goss, of this county, and their children are Ida and Lula M. Mr. Roll is a member of the I. O. O. F., K. of P. and Heptasophs. He is an English Lutheran.

James Campbell, foreman in the National Tube-works, McKeesport, was born in Prince Edward Island Sept. 21, 1889, a son of Roderick and Isabel (Stewart) Campbell, and is of Scotch parentage. He was reared and educated in the provinces, and for eighteen or twenty years followed the sea, serving in every capacity from a common sailor to master of a vessel. He served three years in the western gulf squadron, under Admiral Farragut, during the civil war. In 1871 he entered the employ of the National Tube-works company, at Boston, Mass., and in 1873 came to McKeesport in the interest of the same company; he has been foreman of the finishing department of their works here since 1876. Mr. Campbell has been twice married, his first wife being Mrs. Anna McClure Lawson, of England. His present wife is Mary J., daughter of Richard A. and Mary (Sleep) Hitchens, of McKeesport, and by her he has three children: Roderick, Hector and Edmund C. Mr. Campbell is a member of the Baptist Church, F. & A. M., K. of H., Heptasophs, G. A. R., Protected Home Circle and Order of Solomon. He is an active temperance worker, and president of the Blue Ribbon club of McKeesport, 1887-88-89. He is serving his second term as member of the borough council; politically he is a strong advocate of prohibition.

Peter W. Schmidt, proprietor of the Farmer's Exchange, McKeesport, was born in Mifflin township, Sept. 6, 1833, a son of Peter and Augusta (Roof) Schmidt. His paternal grandfather was John Schmidt, a native of Germany and a coal-miner by occupation, who settled in Mifflin township in about 1847; his children were Peter, Mary, Catherine, Jacob, John, George, James and Margaret. The father is a native of both natives of Germany, and both now reside in Mifflin township. The father in early life followed mining as an occupation, but later embarked in business as a grocer and saloon-keeper. Mr. and Mrs. Peter Schmidt have seven children living: Peter W., Jacob, Margaret, Joseph, Mary, Barbara and Elizabeth. Peter W. was reared and educated in Mifflin township, and began life as a coal-miner, which occupation he followed seventeen years. In 1882 he located in McKeesport and became the proprietor of the Farmers' Exchange, which he has since successfully conducted.

Charles C. Henderson, Etna, son of the late James L. Henderson, one of the oldest residents in Etna, is connected with the office department of Spang, Chalfant & Co., where he has been since 1879.

James Reese, steelmill-roller, Pittsburgh, a son of William and Jane Reese, was born in this county in 1834. William came from Wales, settled in Pittsburgh, and married Jane Franck, who bore him following named children: William, Daniel (deceased), John, Ann (deceased wife of Rev. John Danks), Henry, Joseph, James and Reuben. William died in 1836, his widow April 11, 1885, at the age of eighty-six years. James Reese was put to work in the rolling-mill when but seven years of age, and has followed that business since; he has worked for Oliver Brothers & Philip about eleven years. He has been twice married; first in 1865, to Lucy W. Obey, and by this marriage there were six children: William B. (married in March, 1885, to Sarah Scott, and has two children, Lucy and Ida), Jane O. (deceased), Emma D., James A. (deceased), Bertha and John O. Mrs. Reese died in 1876, at the age of forty years, and Mr. Reese next married, Dec. 24, 1882, Sarah Reese, who died Sept. 1, 1883. Mr. Reese is a member of the Amalgamated association, and is a republican.

Henry Johnston, gardener, postoffice Chartiers, was born near Belfast, County Antrim, Ireland, in 1824, son of Edward and Margaret Johnston. He came to America in 1845, and settled in Allegheny county, Pa., the same year. He was employed as a gardener several years, and in 1849 leased some land for the same purpose, but in 1853 met with serious losses by flood. In 1866 he purchased forty-eight acres of land where he now resides, and has added to it so that he owns seventy-five acres in a high state of cultivation; has also six dwelling-houses. He is one of the most extensive gardeners in Allegheny county, having over one thousand hotbeds on his place, and has had a stand in the market at Pittsburgh since 1849. He retired to private life in the fall of 1888.

Mr. Johnston married, in 1847. Eliza A., daughter of Charles and Mary Pugh, and they have thirteen children, of whom the living are William F., Anna Mary (wife of Edward Johnston), Charles P., Margaret (wife of William College), Melissa, J. Harry, Robert C., DePauw, Laura W., and William H. Johnston is republican; in religion, English Lutheran. He has been school director in Chartiers township, and is one of the most industrious, successful and substantial citizens.
H. S. Ayres, freight-agent, Sharpsburg, was born in Blair county, Pa., Aug. 26, 1846, and comes of mixed extraction. His grandfather, William Ayres, was an iron-worker, and lived in Eastern Pennsylvania. He married Mattie Martin, of Welsh descent, and by her had twelve children, five now living. William, the sixth child, was born in 1824, in Centre county, Pa., and married Mary, daughter of John Funk, a farmer of Blair county. William was a tailor by trade, came to Allegheny county in 1849, and with the exception of six years has since resided in Sharpsburg. He is the father of nine children, all living, Henry S. being the eldest. The latter was educated at the public schools, and at the age of thirteen years became a clerk in Pittsburgh, where he remained seven years. Since 1866 he has been engaged in the railroad business, holding prominent positions in every department. He married, in 1871, Elizabeth Douglass, of Pittsburgh, and three children, all living, are the result of this union: Clara, Douglass and George.

Mr. Ayres is one of the prominent citizens of Sharpsburg, and has served in the town council. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and is a republican.

H. W. Ochse, merchant, Etna, was born Feb. 13, 1850, in Etna, Pa., a son of Henry Ochse, a native of Hessen, Germany, who came to this county at the age of eighteen years. Henry was a hatter in Spang's mill for about twenty years, and has been identified with every interest of Etna. He was the first burgess of the borough, was councilman for many years, besides filling other offices of trust. He married Maria, daughter of Samuel Sutter, who came to Etna in 1827. Their children now living are Charles D., Henry W., Samuel J., Wilhelmine S., Mary F., Emma E. and Louise R. His eldest son, John J., gave up his life in the service of his country at Etna. His family are active members of the German Church of Etna.

Henry W. is one of the enterprising merchants of Etna, with whose growth he has been closely connected. He married, April 11, 1872, Julia D., a daughter of Jacob Newman. Mr. Ochse is an ardent republican.

F. T. Berg, chief draftsman for the Edgar Thomson Steel-works, Braddock, is a native of Sweden, born in 1833. He graduated at the Polytechnical School and School of Mines at Stockholm, Sweden, in 1878, and in 1879 emigrated to America. He entered the employ of the Edgar Thomson Steel-works the same year as a laborer, was given a position in the drafting office of the works the following year, and was promoted to that of chief draftsman in 1881. Mr. Berg is a F. & A. M., and is a republican.

William Ramsay, merchant, Homestead, was born April 19, 1849, in Fifeshire, Scotland, a son of James Ramsay, a descendant of an old Scotch family. He received a common-school education, came to America at the age of nineteen, and became an engineer at Shafton, Pa. In 1881 he came to Home-
B. (Hartley) Miller. John Miller was by trade a blacksmith, and was in the coal business and the manufacture of salt in Westmoreland county. In Allegheny county he followed merchandising, and also founded the Iron City docks. He was a man of good business ability, and an earnest Christian. He died in February, 1892. The names of his children are Morris, John H., William, Charles Miranda, Hester and Elvira. John H. Miller was a blacksmith for seven years, and then engaged in mercantile business. He was one of the founders of the American Glass-works, limited, and is yet one of the proprietors. He married Miss Eleanor Griffith. They are both members of the Baptist Church, of which he is a deacon; he is a Republican.

Charles M. Schwab, superintendent of steel-works, postoffice Munhall, was born Feb. 18, 1862, in Williamsburg, Blair county, Pa., a son of John A. Schwab, also a native of the above place, and of German descent. The subject of these lines has always been a lover of books, and is a graduate of St. Francis College, Loretto, class of 1879. Immediately after graduating he engaged in civil and mechanical engineering at the Edgar Thomson Steel-works in Braddock, where he was actively engaged in the construction of blast-furnaces and new rail-mill. He soon attracted the attention of his superiors, who afforded him every opportunity to develop and climb higher and higher. He was appointed general superintendent of the Homestead Steel-works in January, 1888, and now occupies that position. Mr. Schwab is generally known as the youngest steel-manager in the country, being at the time of his appointment at Homestead but twenty-six years old.

Robert Wilson, retired, of Ellrod, son of John and Mary Wilson, was born in County Down, Ireland, in 1830, and coming to America in 1848 located in Pittsburgh, removing to Greenock in 1853, where he remained until 1883, when he came to his present residence at Ellrod, in Versailles township. Mrs. Mary Wilson, daughter of William and Isabella Black, was born in Glasgow, Lanarkshire, Scotland, in 1828, and came to America in 1844. The family first located in McKeesport, and removed a year later to a point on the Youghihenny river, about six miles above McKeesport. A considerable village soon grew up around them, and Mr. Black named it Greenock, that being the name of the last town seen by him when leaving his native land. Mrs. Wilson is a niece of Nelson (the inventor of the "hot blast"), to whom a large monument has been erected in the city of Glasgow, Scotland. Their children are Anna M., who is a graduate of California State Normal school, and Marguerite N. Mr. Wilson is a republican, and has been identified with the township in various official capacities. Both he and Mrs. Wilson are members of the M. E. Church.

W. S. Bullock, merchant, Homestead, was born Jan. 6, 1837, in Philadelphia, Pa. The first of his ancestors to come to this country was John Bullock; the second, who sailed from Hull, England, with his family, June 24, 1879, and October 20, same year, landed at the falls of the Delaware. He obtained a grant of land from Charles II, and then bought it from the Indians, thus emulating the worthy example of William Penn. Amos Bullock, the grandfather of W. S., was born Dec. 2, 1792, and was twice married; his first wife was Margaret Butcher, and his second wife, Mary McKee. He was the father of ten children, of whom David B., born Feb. 17, 1875, married Susan, daughter of Luke Derrickson. The latter built the first church in Wilmington, Del., which place was originally settled by his ancestors, who were natives of Sweden. David B., the father of W. S., became a merchant-tailor in Philadelphia, where he died in 1850.

The subject of this sketch was educated in Philadelphia, and at the Pennsylvania Agricultural College. He came to this county with his uncle, John Derrickson, who kept Lock No. 2, on the Monongahela river, and afterward had charge of the city farm, being assisted by Mr. Bullock, who, after his uncle's death, was superintendent for four years. After this he merchandised in Pittsburgh four or five years, and then once more superintended the city farm, which position he filled with ability. At the close of his term he entered into the builders' supply business in Pittsburgh in partnership with C. W. Taylor. He married Mary E. Hargrave, who was born in Westmoreland county, March 24, 1859, a daughter of Rev. O. F. Hargrave, and five children were born to them: William H. (born May 9, 1874, died Aug. 27, 1877), Annie G. (born Feb. 29, 1878, died Aug. 20, 1882), Mary A. (born March 26, 1881), Sue E. (born Dec. 6, 1883), Lavina A. (born Dec. 11, 1886, died Dec. 11, 1886). Since February, 1879, Mr. Bullock has resided in Homestead, where he has filled various municipal offices, and was the first burgess who served his full term. He is a member of the R. A., and is a Republican.

Elliott S. Thomas, merchant, McKeesport, was born in Washington county, Pa., Aug. 12, 1862, a son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Bebout) Thomas. He was reared in his native county, and educated at Washington and Jefferson College. In 1889 he taught school; from 1881 to 1889 he was a clerk in a large retail shoehouse in Pittsburgh, and then for two and a half years was in the employ of the wholesale boot and shoe firm of W. E. Schmertz, of Pittsburgh, as traveling salesman for the states of Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia. In 1888 he came to McKeesport, and in partnership with Mr. John Tress, of Pittsburgh, opened a large retail shoehouse on Fifth avenue. After one year Mr. Thomas purchased his partner's interest, has since conducted the business alone and enjoys a large and extensive trade; is also a jobber in leather and findings. He married, Nov. 10, 1887, Lulu B., daughter of C. R. Stucksflager, of this city. He is a prominent young businessman: is a member of the First M. E. Church and Jr. O. U. A. M.: also active and sustaining member of Y. M. C. A.; he is a republican.

Frederick Gedekoh, retired, Elizabeth, is a native of Germany, born at Shaunsburg Lippe, and came to this county in 1826. He married Wilhelmina Hamm, also a native of Germany. He first located in Pittsburgh, was a miner for twenty-eight years, and twelve years ago came to his present residence in Forward township. His children are Catherine, Wilhelmina, Henrietta, Heinrich, Sophia, Charlotte and Helena. Catherine, now Mrs. H. Coleman, and residing in Pittsburgh: Henrietta, now Mrs. Thomas Thomsoon: Sophia, now Mrs. Hodgson; Heinrich, Charlotte and Helena are all living.

E. W. Pitts, teller in the People's Bank, McKeesport, was born in Johnstown, Cambria county, Pa., June 7, 1869, and was educated in the public schools of his native town. At the age of sixteen he came to McKeesport, and entered as a clerk in a grocery-store, where he remained five years. In 1881 he entered the People's Bank of McKeesport as a bookkeeper, and in 1889 was made teller of the bank, which position he still holds. Mr. Pitts assisted in the organization of the McKeesport Building and Loan association, of which he has, from the first, been the secretary. It is proper to say that the success which Mr. Pitts has achieved is wholly due to his own industry.

Robert Mills, foreman of puddling department No. 1 mill, National Rolling-Mill company, McKeesport, was born in Southwold, county of Suffolk, England, Aug. 10, 1826. He first came to America in 1840, after which he followed the seas eight years, during which time he visited nearly every port on the globe. In 1848 he located at Fall River, Mass., where he learned the trade of puddling, and worked as a journeyman in different sections of New England up to 1870. In that year he removed to McKeesport and, with the exception of a few months, he has since held his present position with the National Rolling-Mill company.

P. C. Wagner, merchant, Homestead, was born Aug. 17, 1869, in Sharpsburg, Pa., a son of Peter and Elizabeth (Burkett) Wagner, both natives of Germany. The father learned the shoemaker's trade in his native home, and followed it in Sharpsburg after his arrival there in 1849, conducting a good business. P. C. Wagner was educated in Sharpsburg, and clerked five years for G. W. Tilghman in the clothing business. Subsequently he served fifteen months with Spang, Chalfant & Co., in Etna, Pa., as assistant bookkeeper and shipping-clerk, and for one year was assistant postmaster in Sharpsburg. He then removed to Homestead, where in 1887, in partnership with his old employer, G. W. Tilghman, he opened a clothing-store. July 1, 1888, he bought out Mr. Tilghman's interest and is now conducting the business alone. He has built up a good trade, keeping a fine assortment of goods on hand.

James M. Speer, grocer, McKeesport, was born in Millersburg, Allegheny county, Oct. 23, 1854, a son of James and Frances (Metzger) Speer. His paternal grandfather was Thomas Speer, a son of Thomas Speer, a native of Ireland, and one of the pioneers of this county. His maternal grandfather was Michael Metzger, a son of Michael Metzger, a native of Germany and a pioneer of Millers-town. James Speer, the father of James M., is a resident of McKeesport, and is a blacksmith by occupation; is a practical and natural mechanic, and able to forge anything that can be made from iron. Our subject was reared in this county and educated in the common schools. He began life as a clerk, in which capacity he served fourteen years. He settled in McKeesport in 1880, and in 1882 embarked in his present business, at which he has been very successful. He married, in 1877, Mary M., daughter of George and Mary M. (Gilmor) Kirker, of Westmoreland county, and has two children, Bertha and Mary. Mr. Speer is a member of the U. P. Church; he is a republican.

C. W. Meeks, merchant, Munhall, was born Dec. 10, 1848, in Frederick county, Md., a son of John Meeks, who was in the United States government employ for seventeen years; was stationed at Harper's Ferry, sawing gunstocks, but later removed to Port Perry, Pa., and, in partnership with George T. Miller, followed his trade for four years, when he finally removed to Fayette county, and engaged in the spoke and hub business. After the death of his father, C. W. succeeded to his business, but after two years he sold out and came to Munhall, where he entered into partnership with A. C. Munhall in general mercantile trade. In their second year he bought Mr. Munhall out, and has since conducted the business with marked success, notwithstanding that he had no knowledge of it previous to embarking in it. He now employs eight clerks. Mr. Meeks is a member of the K. of P., R. A., K. of G. E. and American Mechanics, senior order; he is a democrat.

Charles Biehl, of Biehl Bros., Tarentum and Kittanning, Pa., son of Louis and Emma Biehl, was born at Kittanning, Armstrong county, Pa., in 1863. His father was a native of Germany and his mother of Butler county, Pa., and after their marriage they located at Kittanning, where the father carried on a manufacturing business until his decease, in 1881. His widow, mother of Charles, died in March, 1888, at Kittanning, where she continued to reside after the death. of her husband. Our subject removed to Tarentum in 1884, and was married to Miss Christina Ellenman in 1887. Mr. McAdams is engaged in the clothing, tailoring, hat and furnishing-goods business. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., O. U. A. M. and I. O. H.

George W. J. McAdams, Coraopolis, was born in Warrenton, Jefferson county, Ohio, April 9, 1847, a son of John and Hannah L. (King) McAdams, and ninth descendant of Gov. Winslow, one of the Pilgrim Fathers who came over in the Mayflower. John was born in a fort on the present site of Portland, Ohio. He was a merchant, owned a mill, and manufactured and shipped flour south to New Orleans. He was elected treasurer of Jefferson county in 1836, and re-elected in 1838, serving four years. At the outbreak of the civil war he enlisted in the 96th O. I. and served as sutler, his son-in-law, George Webster, being colonel of the regiment. John McAdams died in 1863, at sixty-three years. He built the warehouse and wharf at Warrenton, and was part owner of the steamboats Cabinet and Hibernia. He was a member of the M. P. Church, which he and Moses Kimball built at Warrenton, and held various offices of trust in his town. He was a prominent Mason at Warrenton and Steubenville. His widow died March 31, 1886, aged sixty-two years, a member of the U. P. Church. They had seven children, five yet living: G. W. J., L. C. C. (an M. D. in Warrenton, Ohio), S. L. (R. R. official at Ravenna), Annabel K. (wife of W. M. Litten, at Rush run, Ohio), and Joseph H. (R. R. official at Montour-Junction). George W. J. was educated at Steubenville, Ohio, and at eighteen began to teach music. At nineteen he began the study of telegraphy, at which he worked at Pittsburgh and various other points until Nov. 1, 1879, when he was appointed agent at Coraopolis. Mr. McAdams was united in marriage, June 9, 1881, with Maggie Watt, a native of Coraopolis, a daughter of William Watt, late manufacturer of that place, and they have one son, James E., born Dec. 9, 1881. Mr. and Mrs. McAdams are members of the U. P. Church at Coraopolis, and it was through his and others' efforts that the church was established and built here, of which he is treasurer.

Matthew Criddle, real-estate owner, postoffice Ross, was born March 13, 1833, in Merriott, Somersetshire, England, son of John and Mary (England) Criddle. His parents were descendants of an old English family, and were related to John Churchill, who was later the duke of Marlborough. Mrs. Mary Criddle died in Pittsburgh, Nov. 3, 1876, aged eighty-four years. John Criddle died of paralysis May 4, 1850. Matthew Criddle came to America when nineteen years old, and followed his trade of pattern-maker. He has invented a number of useful articles, among them the oscillating engine. Retiring from business, he purchased a part of the old Evergreen association, of which he still holds over one hundred acres. He also built the Evergreen Narrow-Gauge railroad, and was its president two years; altogether he has been identified with Evergreen over twenty-three years. Mr. Criddle married, Dec. 24, 1844, Elizabeth, daughter of William T. Wadsworth, of Cheshire, England, who came to America in 1817; Mrs. Criddle was born in Paterson, N. J., in 1832. Mr. and Mrs. Criddle have six children living: Henry, Matthew, Edmund J., Walter, Byron and Lilly.

Winfield S. Nestbit, a young lawyer residing in Tarentum and doing business in the city of Pittsburgh, is rapidly acquiring a reputation as a shrewd jurist and skillful advocate. He is a son of William Nestbit, who was born in 1816, in Pittsburgh, and who, reared to sturdy toil, served twenty-seven years as a machinist-blacksmith in one shop. In 1860 he removed to a farm some miles back of Tarentum, where he rapidly acquired great store of knowledge as a farmer, and taught even the oldest residents many useful lessons in agriculture. His knowledge of law and its application was so much above the average that he usually served as justice of the peace, and was familiarly known as "squire." He died in 1876, and lies buried in the Tarentum cemetery. Mr. Nestbit's ancestry is of the Scotch-Irish line, which, Americanized, has furnished many of our most progressive and influential citizens.

G. W. Hoffman, merchant, Noblestown. His ancestry in colonial times were scattered through Berks and Chester counties. G. W. Hoffman (grandfather of the subject of this sketch) and his brother, Isaac, came west shortly after the war of 1812, and located in Williamsport (now Monongahela City), Pa. Isaac afterward removed to Trumbull County, Ohio; G. W. remained at Williamsport until his death, which occurred shortly after his arrival. His widow, Rebecca, with her three children, G. W., Jefferson and Matilda, removed to Noblestown, and subsequently she married Joseph Johnston. Grandfather Hoffman had a title to about 240 acres of land patented by George Vlandingham, adjoining the eastern line of the Noble tract, from which Noblestown took its name. His son, G. W., was born Nov. 29, 1805, and was married Jan. 23, 1827, to Mary Link, born Jan. 25, 1804, and their children were as follows: Daniel, born Sept. 24, 1827, married March 21, 1850, to Nancy E., daughter of William Titball (now resident of Burgetstown, Washington county; had three sons and four daughters, all living); Rebecca, born Dec. 5, 1828, married March 1, 1860, to John Goist (she died Jan. 2, 1869, leaving three children); Jefferson, born Sept. 7, 1830, married Ruth Morris Oct. 18, 1853, and has two children living; Elizabeth, born Sept. 19, 1832, died June 2, 1852; Matilda E., born Feb. 5, 1835, married to William Johnston Oct. 23, 1856, reside at Burgetstown, have three daughters living: G. W., born Aug. 5, 1837, married Sept. 23, 1867, to Elizabeth Hagerty (reside in Noblestown; have four children); Benjamin W., born Nov. 21, 1839, married to Sarah Bell Jan. 31, 1867 (reside at Castle Shannon, have three children); Mary L., born March 14, 1842, married to Richard Sharp Jan. 23, 1861 (resident of Allegheny, have six children); Nancy, born Dec. 29, 1844, died May 19, 1857; Sarah Ann, born May 13, 1848, married to Frank Keiffer May 31, 1863; died Feb. 13, 1872, leaving two children. The father of this family had his arm torn off by a threshing-machine Feb. 17, 1854, and on the following morning he died, in the forty-eighth year of his age; his widow died Feb. 24, 1870, aged sixty-six.

James Kirkpatrick, superintendent of the Bear Creek Refining company, Pittsburgh, was born in Ireland, a son of John and Susanna (Crawford) Kirkpatrick, natives of Ireland, of Scotch descent. The father, who was a farmer, died in 1837, aged forty years; the mother died at the age of sixty-seven years, a member of the Presbyterian Church. At the age of seven years the death of his father threw her subject on the world for himself; and when sixteen years of age he learned the trade of machinist; then afterward bought a farm in Ohio and lived there seven years. Returning to Pittsburgh, he engaged in the oil business in that city, and some years afterward built the Bear Creek Refining-works, of which he has since been superintendent. In 1877 Mr. Kirkpatrick commenced the manufacture of oleomargarine in Pittsburgh, which enterprise he carried on for two years. He was married in September, 1857, to Mary A. Bradley, of Morgan county, Ohio, daughter of John and Nancy (Marianer) Bradley, both deceased. Two daughters, Nancy B. and Mary G., who died at the age of twelve and nine years, respectively, were born to Mr. and Mrs. Kirkpatrick. They are members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Kirkpatrick moved to Verona in 1886, and to his present fine brick house in 1887. He is a K. T. He has traveled over the greater part of Europe, having made four trips, on the last of which he took his wife with him. Mr. Kirkpatrick helped to capture Morgan during the late war. He has a sword that his great-great-grandfather Crawford carried during the famous siege of Derry, Ireland. Three of his uncles Crawford were British officers who served five years in the East Indies, and on their return their mother stood on the shore and saw them lost by the sinking of the troopship Suldana, while in sight of the city of Londonderry.

John Clark, paying teller of the Farmers' Deposit National Bank, Pittsburgh, was born in County Derry, Ireland, Dec. 27, 1791, son of Oliver and Eliza (Davis) Clark, natives of the same place. His mother died there, and after the children came to America his father, who was a farmer, and afterward an overseer, followed them here to spend his last days, dying at his son John's house, in 1853, at the age of seventy-five years. He had ten children, viz.: daughters, Eliza and Sarah (both deceased), Margaret, Jane and Mary; sons, R. D. (deceased), Joseph, John, and James and Oliver (both deceased). Of these, John attended school in Ireland, and on coming to Pittsburgh, in 1860, entered the Farmers' Deposit National Bank as messenger boy, from which he has worked his way up to his present position, Mr. Clark was married twice; the second time, in 1874, to Catharine Rogers, of County Derry, Ireland, and two children, Oliver D. and Edith G., have been born to them.

A. Gordon, Jr., merchant, Homestead, was born in 1853, in Pittsburgh, Pa. His father, Alexander Gordon, a native of Baltimore, came to this county at the age of twenty, and engaged in the commission and afterward in the lead business. Later he was engaged in the coal business at Swissvale until the N. Y. & C. Gas and Coal company bought his coal-lands. He took an active part in political matters before the war; was on the Kansas aid committee, and is the only one living of the three men who composed the committee of arrangements in 1856 when the republican party was organized. He married Katie Edwards, and to them were born Rev. John, Alexander, George B. (an attorney), William and Orra E. Our subject clerked nine years for his father, then became weighmaster, and finally superintendent of the coal-works. He is a graduate of the Western University. In 1882 he came to Homestead, where, in partnership with his brother, he opened a lumber-yard, and also a full stock of builders' supplies. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is a republican.

William G. Smith, Etna, was born Nov. 29, 1832, in Pittsburgh, Pa., a son of George W. Smith, a native of Lancaster, Ohio, and of Dutch-Irish descent. William G. was left an orphan at the age of five, and is a self-educated man. He learned the carpenter trade and pursued it for several years. June 1, 1877, he came to Etna, where he had previously learned the pattern-maker's trade, and entered the employ of Spang, Chalfant & Co., as a pattern-maker. He is now superintendent of the tubeworks. He married Josephine, daughter of Philip and Anna Yuna, and they have three children: Emure, George, and Frances. Mr. Smith is a republican, and has been councilman and burgess two terms each.

Joseph H. McAdams, station-agent, post-office Cornopolis, was born at Steubenville, Ohio, Nov. 23, 1838, a son of John and Hannah (King) McAdams, natives of Jefferson county, Ohio. John was county treasurer of Jefferson county, Ohio, for two terms. Mrs. McAdams was a descendant of Winslow King, who came from England in the Mayflower. John and Hannah McAdams had a family of seven children. Joseph, the youngest, was educated in Warrington, Ohio. He began to clerk in a general store and postoffice at Warrenton when fifteen years old, and remained until 1879, when he came to Cornopolis. While clerking at Warrenton he learned telegraphy, and worked as night operator at Coraopolis some five or six months. He was then appointed to his present position as agent at Montour Junction for the P. & L. E. and Montour railways. Mr. McAdams was united in marriage to Jessie L. Ferree, Sept. 23, 1881. She was born on the homestead farm at Coraopolis, a daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Woods) Ferree. Mr. and Mrs. McAdams are members of the Presbyterian Church, and have three children: Royal P., Edgar L. and Howard W. (twins).

P. H. Dugan, foreman of Singer, Nimick & Co.'s springshop, Pittsburgh, is a native of Ireland, and was born in 1851, to Thomas and Catherine Dugan, former of whom died in April, 1861, aged fifty-four years, and latter in January, 1871, aged sixty years. Thomas Dugan followed various occupations, among which were mining, farming, working in a glass-factory, and as shaper in the steel-rolling mill. He and his wife were the parents of seven children: Bartholomew, Thomas, Margaret, Mary (wife of Irving Hummell), P. H., Andrew and Richard (deceased). P. H. Dugan came with his parents to this country in 1854, and settled in Allegheny county, Pa. He was married, in 1871, to Mary, daughter of Owen and Bridget Brislin, and their children are Catherine H., Ellen B., Thomas F., Mary C., Clara B. and Irene T. Mr. Dugan has worked in the springshop of Singer, Nimick & Co. since he was nine years old, and has been foreman of same since 1875. He is a member of the C. M. B. A., St. James Total Abstinence society, Sovereigns of Industry, and of the Catholic Church.

Julian Kennedy, chief engineer Latrobe Steel-works, Latrobe, was born near Youngstown, Ohio, March 15, 1852. His father, T. W. Kennedy, was a millwright and mechanic, but better known as a builder of blast-furnaces in Ohio. Julian was educated at Yale College, where he graduated in the class of 1873, and while taking a post-graduate course filled the chair of physics. After identifying himself for a short time with the Brilar Hill Iron company, he was superintendent one year of the Morse Bridge-works, and in 1879 came to Braddock, where he was superintendent of the blast-furnaces in the Edgar Thomson Steel-works, remaining in charge of the construction and operating of this department for a period of four years. During that time he invented the fluid cinder car and improved hot-blast stoves, etc. From 1885 until January, 1886, he had charge of the Lucy furnaces, and when they became united with the Homestead Steel-works he became superintendent of both. In 1886 he built the new platemill, and the following year the armor-plate or universal mill, in the construction of which he put many of his inventions and plans, among others an automatic device for charging ingots and tabling them, and large hydraulic shears, which can handle a fifty-ton ingot. At present Mr. Kennedy is interested in the Latrobe plant, which makes a specialty of locomotive- and car-wheel tires.

William Boland Harrison, tax-collector, Wilkinsburg, was born at Port Perry, Pa., March 15, 1853, and is a son of George and Rachel (Bond) Harrison, now residents of Wilkins township. His grandfather, William Harrison, was an early settler in this county. Benjamin Bond, father of Rachel Harrison, came of English Quaker stock, and lived on Saw-Mill run, where Mrs. Harrison was born. George Harrison was born at what is now North Homestead. William B. Harrison was reared in Wilkins, and was employed several years at the Hampton Coalworks, where he was boss driver for six years. For two years he was yard brakeman at the Pennsylvania railroad station in Pittsburgh, and was promoted to extra conductor. While coupling cars on the 15th of May, 1887, his left knee was crushed, and he was obliged to retire from the road. In 1888 he was elected collector of Wilkinsburg borough on the anti-borough ticket. Mr. Harrison was married, Oct. 28, 1878, to Miss Maggie J., daughter of Thomas D. Palmer, of New England parentage, and their children were Maggie May (deceased), Annie Mary and Maud Simpson (deceased). Mr. Harrison is a republican and a member of the Jr. Q. U. A. M.; he is a Presbyterian, of which church Mrs. Harrison is a member.

John R. Cribbs, merchant, Verona, was born in Livermore, Westmoreland county, in 1830, and is the son of John and Sarah Cribbs, of German ancestry. His mother died before he was ten years old, and at nine years he was employed as driver on the Pennsylvania canal, during the summer, and worked for his board among the farmers during the winter. When seventeen years of age he began mining ore in Clarion county by contract, and also did something at blacksmithing, often spending the hours between 4 a.m. and 11 p.m. at the anvil. When petroleum was discovered in Venango county, he operated wells successfully at Walnut Bend, and in 1861 moved to Oil City, where he dealt in oil territory. During eleven months he made $240,000 in cash, but continued to invest in lands, and lost very heavily when values fell off. Since then he has twice moved to Illinois, and back; and held large tracts in Tennessee and Missouri. He is now the owner of a finely improved farm of 242 acres near Iola, Kan., and oil-lands in Meigs county, Ohio. After keeping hotel four years at Johnstown, Penn township, he built, in 1873, the fine store in which he does business in Verona, and moved his family to the apartments above. He carried a general merchandise stock valued at $10,000, and lumber, stone and builders' supplies of half as much. Besides the store he built five houses, part of which he still owns. He also owns a dry-goods, notion and men's furnishing store in Ft. Scott, Kan., valued at $9,000. Mr. Cribbs is a republican, has been a member of the school board and has spent several terms.
in the borough council as chairman of the finance committee. In 1849 he married Elizabeth, daughter of William Mayse (of Irish parentage), born in Clarion county. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Cribbs are Sarah Jane (Needham), Elizabeth (Moore), Oliver L.; Eva (Simpson), Fielding D., Hyatt M., Corn V. and Walter T. Two died in infancy.

Knox Simpson, station-agent at Verona, was born in Manor, Armstrong county, Pa., July 7, 1853, and is the son of John and Mary Jane Simpson, the former a native of the same county, and the latter (whose maiden name was Simpson) of Indiana county. His grandfather, James Simpson, came from Ireland, and settled on a farm near Rural village, Armstrong county, about 1800. John Simpson began the clearing for a house on his present farm in Manor township in 1840. John K. remained on this farm until the day he was of age, when he took charge of the telegraphic instruments at Falls Creek, Clearfield county, Pa., on the Allegheny Valley railroad, having learned their use by evening study. In 1875 he became night operator and ticket-clerk at Parker, and two years later was promoted to agent's clerk. He took charge of Verona station Oct. 1, 1879. Mr. Simpson is a member of the U. P. Church, S. of T., R. A. and Jr. O. U. A. M.; he is a republican, and served as school-tax collector in 1887. He married, Dec. 11, 1878, Margie E. Fellows, who died in 1885, leaving two daughters: Alta Naomi and Mary Jane. Mr. Simpson was afterward married, May 17, 1888, to Eva Lucretia, daughter of John R. Cribbs.

Samuel McCune, merchant, Homestead, was born Aug. 14, 1846, at Lockport station, Westmoreland county, Pa., son of James and Eliza (Bannon) McCune, who emigrated to America when quite young, and were married in this country; they had six children, of whom five were sons. Samuel attended the common schools of his native county, and at the age of seventeen, while Gen. Morgan made his famous raid, he enlisted, June 17, 1863, in Co. B, 1st battalion P. C. After six months' service he re-enlisted in Co. D, 186th P. V. I., served until the close of the war, and received an honorable discharge Aug. 19, 1865. After the war he was clerk for F. H. Eaton & Co., a large trimming and fancy-good firm in Pittsburgh. In January, 1882, he opened a small dry-goods store in Homestead, which he enlarged until to-day he owns a handsome brick store, in which he does the largest dry-goods business in the place. He married Mary E. Alexander, a native of Moundsville, W. Va., and they have two children: Joseph B. and Samuel W. Mr. McCune is a member of the I. O. O. F., politically an independent republican.

Louis Pichel, merchant, Tarentum, son of Isaac and Nanna (Goodman) Pichel, was born in Pittsburgh, in 1855. His parents were of European birth, and located in Pitts-his trade in Pittsburgh, and has been engaged in contracting most of the time since, doing a large amount of work in Pittsburgh after the fire of 1843. He bought about fifteen acres of land at Bellevue in 1865, and has sold off much of the same in town lots. He married, in 1833, Margaret Long, a native of Carlisle, Pa., and to them were born eleven children, five of whom are living, viz.: William, James, Albert, Ellen (Mrs. McIntosh) and Agnes (Mrs. R. J. Miller). Mr. and Mrs. Claney are members of the M. P. Church; politically he was a whig, now is a republican. Although eighty years of age, Mr. Claney still makes the ascent of all buildings with his workmen.

