John Warren...........................1759

1 Van Reed was the first Whig who was elected treasurer, because of the general opposition to the regular nominee of the Democratic party, Adam Leize, which arose against him on account of attempted legislation to increase the term of office.

2 William Runkel was elected for the full term, but he having died before the term began, the county commissioners appointed the incumbent, George Feather.

ROTHONOTARIES, RECORDER, REGISTER, CLERK OF ORPHANS' COURT AND CLERK OF QUARTER SESSIONS.—The several offices named were created with the County Courts. Immediately after the erection of Berks County they were established at Reading, the county town, and filled by appointment of the Governor. The amended Constitution of 1838 changed the manner of filling the offices named from appointment by Governor to election by the people; and the act of July 2, 1839, passed in pursuance thereof, fixed the term of office at three years. The first officers were elected in October, 1839. No change has been made since. From this time the terms of the officers began on the 1st day of December following their election till the adoption of the new Constitution, when the time was changed to the first Monday of January following their election. The change included also the other county officers.

Surveyors

The office of surveyor-general of the State was created April 9, 1781, and the officer was then empowered to appoint a deputy or deputies in any county of the State. The first appointment of a deputy-surveyor for Berks County was made in 1800. One deputy was appointed from that time to 1834, when two deputies were appointed. The appointment of two was continued till the passage of the Act of April 9, 1850, which provided for the election of a county surveyor in October following for the term of three years, and every third year thereafter. Since 1850 this officer has been elected by the people.

1 Upon the establishment of a separate Orphans’ Court, in 1888, this officer was discontinued, and the register became the clerk, as provided by law.
Previous to 1809 "overseers" of the poor were appointed by the justices of the county. On March 11, 1809, an act was passed authorizing the election of the overseers annually. The poor of the county were provided for by overseers till the passage of an act of Assembly on March 29, 1824, especially for Berks County, which provided for the election of poor directors. At the following election, in October of that year, three directors were elected in pursuance of the act—one for one year, one for two years and one for three years; and annually after said election one director was elected for three years. This law has not been altered. The directors appoint a steward and other officers annually, to superintend and carry on the management of the institution successfully. The board organizes annually on the third Monday of November.

The first seven directors named were appointed by the act to serve till the election of three directors as required:

POOR DIRECTORS.

1 Lash died in March, 1868, and Elias Obold was appointed on April 18, 1868, to fill the unexpired term.
MERCANTILE APPRAISERS.

Previous to 1846 only dealers in foreign merchandise were required to take out a county license to enable them to make sale thereof. But on April 22, 1846, an act was passed requiring all dealers in goods, wares and merchandise to take out a county license, and thereby the county commissioners of each county were empowered to appoint annually a mercantile appraiser, who was directed to assess and classify all dealers, and furnish a list of them to the county treasurer. From 1830 till this act was passed, the constables of the townships, etc., of the county furnished under oath a list of the foreign dealers to the clerk of the Quarter Sessions, and the associate judges and county commissioners classified them and delivered a list to the county treasurer. Before 1830 the foreign dealers were returned by the constables to the clerk of the Court of Quarter Sessions; the clerk certified the returns to the State treasurer, who forwarded a list to the county treasurer for the collection of the license fees.

In Berks County the constables still made their returns for the years 1846 and 1847. The county commissioners made the first appointment for 1848.

SEALERS OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

In 1834 a law was enacted which required the Governor to furnish the county commissioners of each county with standards of weights and measures, which were to be used for the purpose of adjusting weights and measures; and these standards were to be examined, and, if necessary, corrected at least once in every ten years. The standards as required were furnished to the county commissioners, and deposited in the court-house for the purpose intended. But there was no provision for an officer whose duty it was to test all weights and measures. In 1845 this discrepancy was supplied by an act passed on April 15. It authorized the Governor to appoint a sealer of weights and measures for such respective counties of the State as should apply for and obtain copies of the standards, as provided in this act, for the term of three years. And it was made the duty of the sealer "at least once in every year to go to stores, houses, stalls and offices of the makers, venders, or proprietors of beams, scales, weights and measures within the county, and try and adjust all beams, scales, weights and measures, and seal the same with the initials of his last or surname, and the current year.” Under this law the first appointment was made on June 16, 1853. This office, however, became burdensome and offensive to the people of the county, and accordingly they, with the people of seven other counties of the State—Bucks, Dauphin, Lancaster, Lehigh, Montgomery, Franklin and Westmoreland—who felt similarly burdened and offended, effected the passage of a special act on March 22, 1859, whereby the office within the counties named was abolished. After the lapse of eighteen years thereafter it would seem that the weights and measures of this county, as well as other counties of the State, needed the test of the standards. So they were brought to the notice of the people again by the passage of a general law on April 4, 1877. By it the Governor was authorized to appoint one person as sealer, in the several counties where no such office existed, for the term of three years. The first appointment under this law was made April 30, 1877. And strangely enough, as previously, the office only survived six years, and was again abolished, an act for this purpose having been passed on March 8, 1883. The standards are, therefore, not carried around throughout the whole county to remind the dealers and store-keepers that they must at least give true measure, if not good, pressed down and running over. The market commissioner of Reading, who visits the markets under the city ordinance, is the only tester now with the standards. The sealers were:

PRISON INSPECTORS.

The first county prison was erected in 1770. It stands at the northwest corner of Fifth and Washington Streets, Reading, still in good condition.1 Under the law then prevailing, the sheriff had control of the prison during his official term, and he was authorized to appoint keepers. This practice continued till the passage of the act of April 8, 1848, expressly for Berks County, whereby seven prison inspectors were to be appointed, four by the judges of the Court of Quarter Sessions, and three by the county commissioners, who were to comprise the “Board of Inspectors,” the terms of office to be as follows: For three, three years; two, two years; and two one year; and afterward, all terms three years. The inspectors were authorized to appoint, with sanction of the court, a keeper, matron, etc. This act of Assembly continued in force till the passage of the act of April 10, 1873, whereby nine inspectors were to be elected at the next regular election, when each elector was to vote for six candidates, and the nine highest to be the inspectors. The elected candidates were to draw lots for one, two and three years. And annually thereafter, three inspectors were to be elected for three years, the electors to vote for two, and the three having the highest vote to be the inspectors.

The following persons were the first inspectors under the act of 1848:

SUPERINTENDENTS OF COMMON SCHOOLS.

Numerous legislative attempts were made to popularize and thoroughly introduce public education. Fifty years were spent in endeavors to educate the poorer classes of children by proposed taxation, with comparatively little progress. Finally, an act was passed May 8, 1854, which made proceedings in this behalf compulsory, and authorized a school tax to be levied, directors to be elected, etc. And to see that the branches of a common education were properly taught, teaching directed, established graded schools maintained, and uniformity in course of studies preserved, a county superintendent was to be elected for a term of three years by all the directors of the county. Since 1854 the system of education provided by the State has been carried on successfully in the county by school directors and a county superintendent.

The school affairs of the city of Reading are under the supervision of a board of school controllers and a city superintendent.

The county superintendents were:

JURY COMMISSIONERS.

Before 1867 the jurors for the trial of cases in the several courts of the county were selected from the qualified electors by the county commissioners and the sheriff. On April 10, 1867, a general act was passed for the State requiring the election of two jury commissioners in October following, for the term of three years, and every third year thereafter, for the purpose of selecting jurors from the qualified electors. The act provides that each elector shall vote for one person for this office, and the two persons having the highest vote shall be the commissioners. They are to select a number designated by the court, and place the names in a jury wheel in the presence of a judge of the court; and they and the sheriff are to draw panels of jurors as grand, petit, and traverse jurors for the county as thertofo. The number generally designated for the jury wheel previous to 1875 was a thousand names; then, upon the introduction of an additional law judge, the number was increased to twelve hundred. Since 1867 the jurors for the quarterly terms of the several courts of the county were selected and drawn as mentioned, by the following commissioners, who were elected for that purpose:

Charles J. Faber 1867-70
Joseph Breisford 1870-73

1 Edwin H. Harner removed from the county, and J. K. Sterrett was appointed February 26, 1881, for unexpired term.

LICENSE COMMISSIONERS.

In 1676 the Duke of York’s Laws required a license to enable a person to sell liquors in the province of Pennsylvania. This was granted by two justices of the peace in the Quarter Sessions, for the term of one year, upon the applicant furnishing “a certificate of his good behavior from the constable and two overseers of the parish” wherein he dwelt. In 1710 the law required the application to be recommended by the justices of the county courts to the Governor, who issued the license. The number was unlimited. But in 1794 the law required the judges of the Quarter Sessions, at the first session of every year thereafter, to limit and declare the number of taverns and public-houses to be licensed for the year following; and the judges were to have “regard to the particular neighborhoods and situations the most suitable for the accommodation of the inhabitants and travelers.” The Governor still granted the licenses upon the proper recommendation; and he continued to grant them till the passage of the act of March 8, 1815, when the judges of the Quarter Sessions issued them, upon the recommendation of the applicant by twelve reputable citizens of the district in which the tavern was to be kept. On April 23, 1869, an act of Assembly was specially passed for Berks County, whereby a Board of License Commissioners was created to issue licenses. The first board was composed of three members: the district attorney, in office ex officio; one member appointed by the judges of the Quarter Sessions for a term ending February, 1871; and the third by the county commissioners for a term ending February, 1873. And every two years after 1869 the court or commissioners were authorized to appoint a person for a term of four years. Licenses in the county were accordingly issued annually by this board till the law was repealed, May 5, 1876. In the year previous, on April 12, 1875, a general law to restrain and regulate the sale of liquors was passed by the Legislature for the State, excepting in those counties for which special provision was made. After the repeal of the act of 1869, the Court of Quarter Sessions issued licenses pursuant to the act of 1875. And this is the law under which the licenses are still issued.

In respect to licenses, a general act was passed March 27, 1872, "to permit the voters of this State to vote every three years on the question of granting licenses to sell intoxicating liquors." The time for the first general election on the question, in every city and county, was fixed for the third Friday in March, 1873, and every third year thereafter on the day for the annual municipal elections. It will be observed that the time was set in the spring of the year in order to obtain the expression of political sentiment uninfluenced by the general tide of opinion of the fall elections. One election was held, but before the first three years had expired the act was repealed, on April 12, 1875.

The board, during the seven years in which the act prevailed, comprised the following members:

OIL INSPECTOR.

The office of oil inspector was created by the act of May 15, 1874, "to provide for the better security of life and property from the dangers of coal and petroleum oils." By this act the standard or fire test of all burning-fluids was fixed at one hundred and ten degrees Fahrenheit. The inspector is appointed by the Court of Common Pleas of the county for the term of three years; and he is required to furnish security in ten thousand dollars for the faithful discharge of his duties. The first appointment was made in August, 1877.

Charles A. Z. Griesemer was the first inspector. He was reappointed in 1880, and again in 1883.

Biographical Sketches of Congressmen, Foreign Ministers, Delegates to State Conventions and State Officials.

Daniel Hiester was born in Bern township, Berks County, in 1747. He obtained a good English education and became a prosperous business man. He moved to Montgomery County, where during the Revolution he took an active and patriotic part. He was chosen a colonel and afterwards a brigadier-general of militia, and was in the service for a considerable time. In 1784 he was elected to the Supreme Executive Council of Pennsylvania, and in 1787 was appointed a commissioner of the Connecticut land claims. After the Revolutionary War he returned to Berks County and was elected a member of the First, Second, Third and Fourth Congresses of the United States. After this he removed to Hagerstown, Md., and was elected from that State a member of the Seventh and Eighth Congresses. During his attendance upon the Eighth Congress he died at Washington, March 8, 1804. He was one of those who voted for locating the seat of government on the Potomac.

Joseph Hiester, a Congressman for many years. (See sketch as a Governor of State, with State Officials).

Mathias Reichert was of German parentage. His grandfather, John Frederick Reichert, was born in Augsburg, Kingdom of Württemberg; emigrated to Pennsylvania, landing May 24, 1720; settled at New Hanover, in Montgomery County; took up one hundred and fifty acres of land, and died there in 1748, leaving a wife Anna Maria, and three children,—Casper, Mathias and Hannah. Mathias was born in 1719 and died March 25, 1775, aged fifty-six years, and left three sons and three daughters. The youngest son was Judge Reichert, born February 26, 1758. He married Maria Salome, daughter of Henry M. Muhlenberg, May 2, 1782. They had five sons and four daughters. He spent much of his life at Colebrookdale as a farmer, scrivener and justice of the peace. He first served as one of the court justices under the Constitution of 1776; was appointed associate judge of Berks County under the Constitution of 1790 and served until 1797. In 1802 he moved to Reading to fill an appointment as collector of excise, and in 1807 was elected to the United States House of Representatives to succeed Governor Joseph Hiester; was re-elected in 1809 and served until 1811. He held the commission as a justice of the peace for forty-two years and died in 1830, highly respected by the entire community.

JOHN M. HYNEMAN was a resident of Reading. He was a representative in the State Legislature from Berks County in 1809, filled the position of clerk of the Orphans' Court from 1810 to 1815, and was county surveyor from 1813 to 1816. He was elected a representative in Congress by the Berks District in 1810, and re-elected in October, 1812, serving from 1811 to 1813, when he resigned, and General Daniel Udree was elected to fill the vacancy. He died in April, 1816, aged forty-five years.

DANIEL UDREE was born in Philadelphia August 5, 1751. He removed to Berks County, and settled in Oley township, where he became extensively engaged in the manufacture of iron. He operated the Oley Furnace and Rockland Forges very successfully for over thirty years, owning, in connection with those industries, several thousand acres of land. He was established in business by his uncle, Jacob Winey, a prominent capitalist and merchant of Philadelphia.

He was enlisted in the Revolutionary War for several years, commanding a regiment at the battle of Brandywine, where his horse was shot under him. He took an active part in the local militia for many years, and served the office of major-general for one term of seven years about 1815.

He represented Berks County in the General Assembly from 1799 to 1803, and also for the year 1805, and while there showed an earnest interest in legislation relative to public internal improvements in the State. He was the representative in Congress for the Berks District for two terms, from 1813 to 1815, and from 1823 to 1825. Whilst at Washington during his last term in Congress, John Quincy Adams was elected President. Shortly before the election he attended a party which was given by Mrs. Adams, and she, in a quiet, pleasant way, alluded to the probable support which her husband would receive from the representatives from Pennsylvania. "Yes," said he to her, "we are like the handle of a jug, all on one side," intimating politely that the great majority of them were for General Jackson. He died July 15, 1828, leaving a large estate. He was the last really prominent and representative man who lived in Oley, and one of the few Congressmen selected from the country districts of the county. In personal appearance, he was a well-developed man, rather below the medium height, and his conversational manner was quick and nervous.

LUDWIG WORMAN was a native of Bucks County, Pa. He removed to Berks County early in life, and carried on the tanning business in Earl township. He was elected to Congress for the term 1821 to 1823, and died October 17, 1822, while a member of that body.

WILLIAM ADDAMS was born on the 9th of March, 1777, in Lancaster County, Pa.; removed to Berks County early in life, and served as county auditor during the years 1813 and 1814; was county commissioner from 1814 to 1817; member of the State Legislature from 1822 to 1824, and associate judge of Berks County from 1839 to 1842, having succeeded the Hon. William Darling by appointment from Governor David R. Porter.

He was a Representative in Congress from Berks County from 1825 to 1829, and rendered efficient service on a committee for the Deaf and Dumb Institutions of the States of New York and Ohio. He was a man of exemplary habits, highly respected and honored by those who knew him, and held many local positions of trust and responsibility. He was esteemed for his "sterling integrity, good sense and unostentatious sincerity of purpose." For many years he was captain of the "Reading Troop," which, under his discipline, was the pride of the county. He died at his residence in Spring township, this county, March 31, 1858, at the advanced age of eighty-one years.

John Ritter, a Congressman from 1843 to 1847. (See sketch in chapter on Newspapers.)

J. Glancy Jones, a Congressman from 1851 to 1858. (See sketch with biographies of Foreign Ministers.)

Henry A. Muhlenberg was born at Reading, Pa., July 21, 1823. He was the son of Henry Augustus Muhlenberg and Rebecca, daughter of Governor Joseph Hister. His preliminary education was acquired under the direction of his father. At the age of fourteen he entered Jefferson College, at Canonsburg, Pa., where he remained one year, passing thence to Dickinson College, where he entered the sophomore class, and was graduated in 1841. He was a close student, especially of the classics and of history. He passed three years, from 1841 to 1844, in the office of his preceptor, Hon. J. Pringle Jones, engaged in the study of the law.

During his father's candidacy for Governor, in 1844, he displayed marked ability as his private secretary, and conducted all his father's correspondence during the canvass. In 1846, when the Mexican War broke out, he raised a company of volunteers in Reading, and personally tendered their services to the Governor, but the complement of Pennsylvania having already been filled, the offer was declined. In the County Convention of 1846, he, with his brother Hister, the president of that body, was mainly instrumental in causing the adoption of a resolution approving of the principles of the tariff of 1842, and demanding that, as it was passed by Democratic votes, it should receive a fair consideration from a Democratic Congress. He also delivered a speech in the same body on the Oregon question, in which he strongly favored the claims of the United States to all that district of country lying south of the parallel of 54° 40'. In 1847 and 1848 he was occupied in writing a "Life of General Peter Muhlenberg," of Revolutionary fame, which was published early in 1849, by Cary & Hart, Philadelphia, and was well received. It was dedicated to Jared Sparks, as a slight recognition of his services in elucidating our Revolutionary history.

In the fall of 1849 he was elected to the Legislature from Berks County, and served three years. He there acquired a reputation for integrity, eloquence and business ability. Shortly after taking his seat he delivered a speech on the supplement to the act incorporating the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, which greatly influenced the Senate in its decision to pass the measure. During the second part of his Senatorial career he was the Democratic candidate for Speaker, though the youngest member of that House, his competitor on the Whig side being Hon. John H. Walker, of Erie (the president of the Constitutional Convention of 1872-73). The Senate then contained sixteen Whigs, sixteen Democrats and one Native American, and a majority of all who voted was required to elect. On the eighth ballot, and on the third day, when it was evident that no choice could be made, unless the Whig candidate should vote for himself, the Democratic candidate, together with Messrs. Packer and Guernsey, also Democrats, out of political courtesy, abstained from voting. Throughout the whole contest the two candidates respectively voted for Thomas Carson and William F. Packer. As chairman of a select committee, to which was referred that portion of Governor Johnston's message for 1851 treating of the care and preservation of the State archives, Mr. Muhlenberg reported a bill, which became a law, for the publication, at the expense of the State, of the records of the proprietary government and of all papers relating to the Revolutionary War down to 1783. He was greatly instrumental in securing the passage of an act making an appropriation to continue the geological survey of the State, conducted by Professor Rogers. He favored also the building of new railroads to develop the resources of the commonwealth, though he was opposed to the State granting any direct aid to these objects. During the whole of his Senatorial term he was, in the words of Hon. C. R. Buckalew, "The bulwark

1 "Biog. Ency. of Penna."
Henry A. Muhlenberg
of the treasury against the assaults of outside interested parties." He was outspoken in defense of a tariff of such amount and so levied as to protect the great manufacturing interests of country. He also thought that as iron was an indispensable requisite for any nation, to provide against the contingency of a war, and to render the United States independent of any other country, that a high, though not a prohibitory duty should be imposed on that article.

In the Senate and in the County Conventions he, in connection with Judge Strong and other distinguished Democrats, demanded a modification of the tariff of 1846, in favor of the iron interest, in accordance with the views of Hon. Robert J. Walker, the author of that tariff—views expressed at the time of its passage. He was an earnest opponent of slavery, and considered it "a curse to that community on which it was inflicted; no one could dislike it more than he did, nor did he ever wish to be thought the friend and advocate of the institution." In his devotion, however, to the Union, and in his desire to do away with all causes which might inflame one section of the country against the other, looking upon the compromise measures of 1850 as a solemn compact between the North and South, he thought those measures and the laws resulting from them should be executed fully, honestly and completely. His devotion to the Union was one of the cardinal principles of his political faith. The words used by his father in Congress, at the time of Clay's compromise act of 1833, might be placed in his mouth also,—"The Union is the first and greatest of our national blessings, and to preserve it, nothing can or ought to be too precious. I go for the Union, the whole Union and nothing but the Union. It must be preserved, peaceably, if we can, forcibly, if we must."

No one who knew him intimately can doubt for a moment that he would have been foremost in the van of those Democrats who, in the hour of greatest danger, rushed to the rescue of their government and of their Union if he had then lived.

At such a time he would not have been behind his brother Hiesterm, or his uncle, Dr. F. A. Muhlenberg, of Lancaster, in forming that party which, in their opinion, held the true Democratic doctrine, in that it advocated the greatest good to the greatest masses. In July, 1852, he was nominated by acclamation the Democratic candidate for Congress in Berks County, and was elected the following October by a large majority. He left Reading late in November, 1853, for Washington, and was present at the opening of the thirty-fourth Congress, but had scarcely taken his seat when he was stricken down by illness. Everything was done for him that was possible and it was believed at one time that he was materially improved, but a relapse occurred and he died January 9, 1854, of hemorrhage and congestion of the lungs. His remains were laid to rest in the "Charles Evans Cemetery," near Reading.

He was a warm and true friend; no act of kindness was ever forgotten by him, and nothing within the limits of possibility was deemed too difficult when done in the cause of a friend. His fearlessness in all departments of life was one of the most marked traits of his character; he never shunned bearing the responsibility of any of his actions; he did what he considered his duty, no matter what the consequences might be. Above all, throughout all of his public life he was a man of unwavering integrity and unblemished honor; he would do nothing, however great the inducements to the contrary, which could lower himself in his own esteem or in that of others.

His standard was a very high one, and when he believed himself to be right, no power on earth could divert him from the path which honor, good faith, good feeling and his own judgment pointed out. He possessed an ample fortune, from which he was ever ready to contribute to all objects, whether charitable, religious, political or literary, which deserved his support.

As a citizen of Reading, he was foremost in advancing, by pen, tongue and purse, all projects which could benefit or increase the prosperity of his native place.

Had he lived, he would have written his name on the historical records of his country, and would have impressed his character on her legislation; cut off untimely in the flower of his youth, and in the very maturity of his powers, his loss was a great calamity to the commonwealth. He married, in November, 1847, his cousin, Annie H., daughter of the late Dr. F. A. Muhlenberg, of Lancaster, Pa., and a son and only child survives him,—Henry A. Muhlenberg, a member of the Reading bar.

GEORGE MAY KEIM

George May Keim was the son of General George de Benneville Keim. He was born at Reading on March 23, 1805, and educated at home and at "Bentley Hall," the school of Joshua Hoopes, at Downingtown, Chester County, Pa. He then studied law under Charles Chauncey, Esq., at Philadelphia, where he was admitted to practice on June 5, 1826, and on August 11th following he was admitted to practice in the several courts of Berks County.

In 1827 he was elected cashier of the Farmers' Bank of Reading, his uncle, Benneville Keim, having then been the president, which position he held till 1836. In 1829 he was commissioner, and afterwards for some years a manager, of the Mill Creek and Mine Hill Navigation and Railroad Company.

Mr. Keim took an active interest in the development of Reading. In this behalf he encouraged enterprises of various kinds. He aided in the erection of the pioneer rolling-mill and nail-works by Keims, Whitaker & Co. He was a member of the firm of Jones, Keim & Co., who carried on the Windsor Furnace, in Windsor township. This firm became celebrated for its fine castings made directly from the iron-ore. Among other distinguished representations, it cast "The Last Supper," after Leonardo da Vinci, which was highly complimented.

Military matters in the county won his attention, and he was identified with them actively for many years. In 1830 he was elected captain of the Reading Artillerists, succeeding his uncle, Captain Daniel de B. Keim. Shortly afterward he was chosen colonel of the Fifty-third Regiment of Pennsylvania Militia; and, in 1835, he was elected to the office of major-general of the Sixth Division of Pennsylvania Militia, which included the companies of Berks, Schuylkill, Dauphin and Lebanon Counties, succeeding his father in that position.

He represented the county at the convention called to amend the State Constitution, held during 1837–38. His speech on banking elicited general approval. He was one of the committee of nine (including such distinguished statesmen as John Sergeant, Charles Chauncey, Thaddeus Stevens and George W. Woodward) who issued a forcible address relative to the ways and means to provide for the cause of common-school education and the general diffusion of useful knowledge, together with the industry and pecuniary prosperity of Pennsylvania.

Upon the vacancy in the office of Representative in Congress from this district by the resignation of Hon. H. A. Muhlenberg in accepting the mission to Austria, General Keim was elected to fill the unexpired term. This was in 1838, and he was then re-elected for two terms, occupying this position till March, 1843, and filling it with honor. At the election for Speaker of the House in the Twenty-sixth Congress he received a complimentary vote, notwithstanding the caucus nomination by the Democrats. During the Twenty-seventh Congress he distinguished himself by a patriotic speech against a petition which prayed for a dissolution of the Union. In 1842 he declined a renomination for a fourth term.

Charles Dickens, who visited this country in 1842, whilst at Washington in March, was given a Congressional dinner, and upon this occasion General Keim presided, with many prominent men in politics and letters present to give a welcome to the great author.

After his retirement from Congress, General Keim was offered by President Tyler his choice of three positions—minister to Brazil, Governor of Wisconsin Territory, or United States marshal for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. He selected the latter, so that he could remain at home; and in 1844 he was reappointed to this position by President Polk.

He had popularized himself throughout Pennsylvania to such a marked degree by his political course till 1848, that earnest and strong movements were instituted in different sections of the State to nominate him as the Democratic candidate for Governor, but he declined to entertain the matter.

In 1852 he was elected to the office of mayor of Reading, by City Councils, to fill the unexpired term of Major George Getz, who died whilst occupying that position. He accepted this high compliment by Councils to him as a citizen, it having been given entirely unsolicited. In 1860 the Democratic State Convention was held at Reading, and then General Keim was elected as a Presidential elector-at-large.

General Keim always took a great interest in everything connected with agriculture. He introduced imported thoroughbred cattle in the county. He aided in establishing the Berks County Agricultural Society, and delivered the address at their first annual meeting, held on October 28, 1852. He was the second president of the society, holding that position for several years, and giving largely of his efforts towards the success of the society. During his administration of its affairs (May 13, 1854) the county commissioners leased to the society for ninety-nine years the “Commons,” for the purpose of holding its annual exhibitions. At different times, by request, made agricultural addresses in different sections of the State, which were received with marked favor. He was also interested in the geology and mineralogy of Pennsylvania, having begun in early life investigating these subjects with earnestness. A large and choice collection of minerals, which included valuable specimens from different parts of the earth, was the result of his devotion to these branches of knowledge; and he also succeeded in gathering a fine collection of Indian relics, principally from Central Pennsylvania. After his decease the former was presented by his children to the Lehigh University, and the latter to the Smithsonian Institution.

When the Civil War broke out, his patriotic impulses led him to express himself boldly in behalf of the Union. When the divisions in the Democratic party were having their worst effects, during the Presidential campaign of 1860, in distracting its organization and hastening its defeat, he stood steadfast, coming out from his retirement in order to encourage his Democratic friends. His public influence at this critical period aided greatly in holding together the Democratic party of the county.

In the spring of 1861, when this community was intensely excited over military preparations for war, General Keim raised a company of volunteers for home defense, and he was active and enthusiastic in drilling and preparing them for actual duty; and one of the last acts of his life was to head a paper with his name, offering the services of his company to the government. Owing to this excitement and unusual exertion, whilst preparing to drill his company in the armory at Odd-Fellows’ Hall, he was stricken with paralysis, from which death ensued shortly afterward. He died on June 10, 1861, in the fifty-sixth year of his age. He was buried at sunset, on June 12th, with military and Masonic honors, in Charles Evans’ Cemetery, minute guns having been fired from an elevated position south of the cemetery as the procession approached. The whole community mourned his loss. His funeral was one of the largest ever witnessed at Reading.

The personal character of this distinguished citizen of the county is so accurately portrayed by an editorial obituary notice, published in the Reading Gazette and Democrat, upon the occasion of his decease, that I introduce an extract from it as an appropriate conclusion to this biographical sketch:

"Although General Keim was, during the greater part of his life, eminently a public man, it was in his private and social relations that his best traits of character were displayed. Genial in his manners, kindly in his sympathies, generous in his disposition and warm in his attachments, he attracted around him many friends who learned to know and appreciate him, as those who had but a superficial acquaintance with him could not do. His house was the abode of hospitality; his door always open to the rich and poor, friend and stranger alike, and no one ever crossed his threshold who did not meet a hearty welcome. His charities were liberal and even munificent, and never withheld from any worthy object, whether individual or associative. The poor of our city always found in him a friend and benefactor. Our churches, our schools, our fire companies, our military organizations and all our institutions of benevolence and philanthropy were the recipients of his bounty, which was freely and largely bestowed. He was a liberal patron of the fine arts, and not a few young artists, struggling in poverty and obscurity, experienced the benefit of his counsel and encouragement. The collection of paintings and statuary which embellished his homestead was large and valuable, and embraced many pieces of rare merit that attested his fine taste and the discriminating liberality with which he cultivated it. His knowledge of men and books was extensive, and made him as a conversationalist an entertaining and instructive companion.

"The people of his native county always had in him a faithful advocate and true representative. He was devoted to their interests and found pleasure in all efforts that were calculated to advance them in prosperity and usefulness. He was among the first to arouse the spirit of home industry in his fellow-citizens; and many of the earlier business enterprises undertaken here after 1835 received his hearty cooperation."

In 1827 General Keim was married to Julia C. Mayer, youngest daughter of Hon. Christopher Mayer, of Lancaster, who for a number of years represented that county in the State Senate. She died on May 12, 1857. He left six surviving children,—George de Benneville, Charles Wetherill, Henry May, Julia Mayer, Susan Douglass and Mary May.

WILLIAM H. KEIM, a Congressman from 1858 to 1859. (For sketch, see chapter on Civil War.)

John Schwartz was born at Sunbury, in Northumberland County, Pa., on October 27, 1793. His father was a native Saxon, emigrating to this country when quite young, and subsequently serving in the Continental army during the whole of the Revolution; and removed to Reading when the subject of this sketch was ten years old. The son was placed in a town store and brought up to the business of a merchant, which he carried on successfully at Reading for many years. Subsequently he became interested in the iron business, and with a co-partner (Simon Seyfert) erected the Mount Penn Furnace, in Cumru township. He was successfully engaged in that business till 1858, when he retired.

For many years previous to his retirement from business he took an active interest in the political affairs of the county as a Democrat; and in all that time he never held nor sought an office. But in 1858 an influential part of the Democratic party of the county became dissatisfied with the political course pursued by the then representative in Congress, Hon. J. Glancy Jones, and they, objecting to his renomination, started an independent movement which resulted in the nomination of Mr. Schwartz. The campaign during the fall was bitter and earnest, and ended in his election by a majority of nineteen votes. This was a great victory for him and caused much rejoicing by a large body of citizens. The disappointment to the regular
Democrats was inexorable; and the most disappointed of all was the defeated candidate, who found that all his laborious efforts throughout the county, by public addresses to the people, had been spent in vain. But this defeat was, as it were, a blessing in disguise, for it led President Buchanan to tender to Mr. Jones, on the day of his defeat, the mission to Austria; so that this departure from the rule of the Democratic party gave the people of the county not only a new representative in Congress, but an honorable position at a foreign court. Mr. Schwartz took his seat in March, 1859. He was a man of large ability, fine appearance and pleasing address. These qualities enabled him to make a very favorable impression at Washington. On May 7, 1860, he delivered a speech on the tariff, favoring high duties on imports as a means of protecting home industries and of developing a balance of trade in our behalf. This speech was distinguished for its plain and concise style and for its facts and arguments on the subject under discussion. Whilst attending to the duties of his position he was attacked with jaundice, from which he died at Washington in June, 1860. It was said that his persistent determination to attend the daily sessions of the House, in the faithful performance of his duties, against the remonstrances of his physician and the entreaties of certain relatives who were with him, hastened his death. His decease was announced in the House and Senate, both of which bodies adjourned as a mark of respect to his memory; Messrs. Campbell, McPherson, Maynard, Grow, Stevens and Florence in the former, and Messrs. Cameron, Sumner and Seward in the latter having paid highly complimentary tributes to his many exemplary qualities as a man and his uprightness and zeal as a legislator, in discussing the usual resolutions of condolence and respect. His remains were brought to Reading by the sergeant-at-arms of the House and the Congressional committee, which consisted of Messrs. Covode, Train, Winslow, Hickman, Nixon and Graham. The funeral took place at his residence, on South Fifth Street, near Chestnut, on June 23, 1860, and the interment was made in the Charles Evans Cemetery, after appropriate and largely attended religious services in Trinity Lutheran Church. He was a prominent Mason, which body attended the funeral and performed the customary honors at the grave. The whole community mourned his loss. His social qualities were of the most genial kind. In his daily intercourse he was generous and honorable. During his long career as a man of extensive business transactions at Reading he ever maintained an honest name and an upright character, and in all the private relations of his life he bore an unblemished reputation.

During the War of 1812–15 Governor Simon Snyder gave him the appointment of quartermaster of the brigade which was raised in this and the adjoining counties, with the rank of major. He marched with the brigade to Baltimore and remained on duty at Camp Du Pont till the danger that threatened Maryland from the invasion of the British army was over. From that time till his decease he was familiarly known to the people of Berks County as Major Schwartz.

Jacob Kerlin McKenty, the only son of Henry McKenty, was born at Douglassville, Berks County, in 1827. He was graduated from Yale College with the class of 1848, afterwards spent one term in the Law Department of that institution, then completed his legal studies under the direction of Hon. William Strong, of Reading, and was admitted to the bar April 7, 1851. He soon became prominently identified with the Democratic party, and in the fall of 1856 was elected district attorney and served one term. In 1860 he was elected to Congress to fill the unexpired term of Hon. John Schwartz, who died while in office. He died unmarried at the residence of his parents January 3, 1866. He was a well-read and highly-esteemed lawyer.

Sydenham E. Ancona was born in Warwick, Lancaster County, Pa., November 20, 1824, and removing to Berks County, was for several years connected with the Reading Railroad Company. He was elected in 1860 to represent Berks County in Congress, and was twice re-elected, serving until 1867. In 1866 he was one of the representatives designated by the House to attend the funeral of General Scott. He has filled the offices of secretary and treasurer of the Reading Fire Insurance and Trust Company since its organization.

J. Lawrence Getz, a Congressman from 1867 to 1873. (For sketch, see chapter on Newspapers).

Hiester Clymer was a descendant of Richard Clymer, who emigrated to America from Bristol, England, in 1705, and became a shipping merchant and ship-builder in Philadelphia. Richard Clymer had two sons, William and Christopher. The latter was the father of George Clymer, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. William became a captain in the English navy; was married to Anna Roberdeau, a sister of Gen. Roberdeau, by whom he had one child, Daniel C. Clymer, born in 1747 at Philadelphia, and entered the legal profession first in his native city and later came to Reading. He had one daughter and two sons, William and Edward T. The latter was married to Maria Catharine, daughter of William Hiester, of Bern township, and resided near Morgantown, in Cemarvon township, at the time of his death, in 1831.

Hon. Hiester Clymer, one of the sons of Edward T. Clymer, was born in Cemarvon township, Berks County, November 3, 1827. After receiving a preparatory education at Reading he entered the College of New Jersey, at Princeton, and was graduated therefrom in 1847. His father and grandfather were educated at the same institution. He entered upon the study of the law, and was admitted to practice at the bar of Berks County, April 6, 1849. He went to Pottsville in 1851, where he remained five years successfully engaged in his profession, and in 1856 returned to Reading. In 1860 he served as a member of the Board of Revenue Commissioners and during the same year was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention held at Charleston. In October, 1860, he was elected to the State Senate to fill a vacancy caused by the death of Benjamin Nunemacher, and was re-elected in October, 1861 and 1864, and served until 1866. His career in the Senate of Pennsylvania was distinguished for dignity and courtesy of demeanor, readiness, force and eloquence in debate and steadfast devotion to the best interests of the commonwealth. He was nominated as the Democratic candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania in March, 1866, and immediately thereafter resigned his seat in the Senate. He made an energetic canvass of the State and spoke to large assemblages of people in nearly every county. Although he received a larger vote than had ever been previously given to any Democratic candidate for the same office, his competitor, General Geary, was elected. In 1868 he was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention that nominated Horatio Seymour for President. In 1870 he was appointed by Governor Geary a member of the Board of Public Charities of Pennsylvania, and held the position for several years. In the year 1871 he made a tour of Europe. In October, 1872, he was elected a Representative in Congress from Berks County and served with distinguished ability until 1883.

Mr. Clymer was married, in 1856, to Elizabeth Mary, daughter of Matthew Brooke, of Birdsboro, Berks County. They had two children, both of whom are dead. Mrs. Clymer died in October, 1870. Mr. Clymer was married a second time to Mrs. Clemens, of St. Louis, Mo., who survives him.

Daniel Ermentrout, son of William and Justina Silvis Ermentrout, was born at Reading, in Berks County, January 24, 1837. He was educated in the public and classical schools of his native place, and also at Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, Pa., and Elwood Institute, Norristown, Pa. Upon returning to Reading he began the study of law in the office of Hon. David F. Gordon, (then a practicing attorney at Reading, and at one time president judge of the Berks District,) and after pursuing a regular course of study under his direction, was admitted to the bar on August 3, 1859. Whilst pursuing his studies and also previously for a time he taught school at Norristown, Conshohocken and Reading, and in Muhlenberg township. He has been in active practice at Reading since his admission to the bar, and has enjoyed a large and lucrative business, having been connected with many important trials in the local courts and with arguments before the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. Soon after his admission to the bar he became an active partisan in the Democratic party, and his ability and energy were soon recognized by the prominent political leaders. In 1862 he was elected to the office of district attorney of Berks County, and officiated for a term of three years. This was during the trying times of the Civil War, and besides numerous general criminal affairs, he conducted several prominent trials which attracted considerable public attention. He filled the office of city solicitor for three terms, from 1867 to 1870. After serving these two local offices successfully, he was chosen, in 1873, to represent this district in the State Senate for a term of three years, and in 1876 he was re-elected for a term of four years. During the Centennial Exhibition of 1876 he was a prominent representative from Pennsylvania in the official proceedings. Whilst filling the office of State Senator the Governor of the State appointed him, in October, 1877, to serve as a member of the Pennsylvania Statutory Commission, which was authorized by the Legislature to select two representative Pennsylvanians as appropriate subjects for statues to be contributed by Pennsylvania to Statuary Hall of the Capitol at Washington, D. C.

As a member of this commission, he was particularly interested in the selection of General Peter Muhlenberg as one of the subjects for a statue, because in him the county of Berks would be prominently represented (he having been a grandson of the distinguished Conrad Weiser), as well as the Germans, who have done so much toward the welfare and progress of Pennsylvania. Upon the conclusion of his second term in the State Senate he was elected to represent this district in Congress for the term of two years from 1881 to 1883, and has since been twice re-elected, serving his third term at this time.

Mr. Ermentrout represented the Seventh Ward of Reading in the Board of School Controllers for a number of years, and took an active part in the educational matters of the city. He also served several years as chairman of the Democratic Committee of Berks County. He was a delegate to various Democratic State Conventions; and in 1880 he was a delegate from this district to the Democratic National Convention which was held at Cincinnati, and nominated Gen. Winfield S. Hancock for President—Mr. Ermentrout voting for Tilden as long as his name was mentioned as a candidate.

The history of Berks County has interested Mr. Ermentrout for many years, and his earnest researches have thoroughly familiarized him with the early settlements, social progress and political government of the county. He has delivered a number of addresses upon various public occasions which were particularly noted for their historical information. As a speaker he is forcible, commanding a high degree of power over his audience, and as a writer his language is perspicuous and fluent. Though prominently identified with the legal profession and the political government of the county for twenty years, he has nevertheless been a close and very successful student in general and classical literature. He has also traveled extensively through the United States and Europe.

Mr. Ermentrout was married to Adelaide Louise Metzger, a daughter of John Metzger, of Lancaster, and a lady of high culture and fine personal appearance, eminently qualified to fill the prominent social positions to which the representative character of her husband necessarily introduces her. In 1878, Mrs. Ermentrout acted as vice-regent of the Centennial Association of Valley Forge, in the district of Berks County in aid of the Valley Forge Fund and as such conducted with great success a “Grand Ball” at Reading on the evening of April 22, 1879. It was the most distinguished entertainment of the kind ever afforded to the citizens of the county, and netted a considerable sum to the association. Many prominent officials and representative men of the State were in attendance, including the Governor, his family and his staff. Mrs. Ermentrout during her husband’s presence at Washington in the performance of his representative duties, has taken an active and prominent part in the re-exceptions given by the President and high officials. Mr. and Mrs. Ermentrout have two children,—a son, Fitz Daniel, and a daughter, Adelaide Louise.

Genealogy.—John Ermentrout, who emigrated from the Palatinate, Germany, to Pennsylvania in 1739, was the great-great-grandfather of the subject of the foregoing sketch. The son of John was Christopher, born Feb. 8, 1754; the son of Christopher was John, born April 27, 1777. Amongst the children of the second John was William, the father of John S., Daniel and James N., whose sketches appear in this history. William Ermentrout, their father, was born December 12, 1799, and died Jan. 21, 1880. For many years he was engaged in the mercantile business at Reading and served as a member of the board of control of its public schools, as school treasurer, and as treasurer of the county of Berks.

The sons of William Ermentrout, in addition to the three named, are William C., Benjamin F. (deceased), Philip M., Joseph C. and Dr. Samuel C.

FOREIGN MINISTERS.

Hon. Henry Augustus Muhlenberg, clergyman and Congressman, was born at Lancaster, Pa., May 13, 1782. He was the eldest son of Rev. Henry E. and grandson of Rev. Henry Melchior Muhlenberg, the American ancestor of the family, who emigrated from Saxony in 1741 as a missionary of the Lutheran Church to the German population of Pennsylvania. Rev. Henry E. was an erudite and profound scholar and theologian, a celebrated mineralogist and botanist, and an author of so great repute in the latter science as to be characterized as the "Linnæus of our country." So learned a man was he, and so happy in his instructions to his son, that the latter was most thoroughly and liberally educated, and it was deemed unnecessary to send him to college, as before the period of life at which young men most commonly are matriculated at such an institution he had completed the usual collegiate course. In those days party spirit in the land was running high, and his father's family and connections were all imbued with "Republican," or, as they were afterward termed, "Democratic" principles. The odious "Alien and Sedition Laws" had been passed, and the Germans of Pennsylvania were sorely harassed by their provisions, and many able men were engaged in opposing their spirit and endeavoring to secure their repeal.

Though but sixteen years of age, he was writing in defense of Jefferson and McKean, and his pen gave promise of the potent influence which, in after-years, it was destined to wield over the German mind of his native State. According to the wishes of his father, he proceeded to New York to study theology under Rev. Dr. Kunze, and, in 1802, having been duly licensed to preach, took charge of the congregation of German Lutherans in Reading, Pa., which he retained for twenty-seven years. During a greater part of this time he was a member of the Synod, and filled the offices of secretary, treasurer and finally, by unanimous election, that of president, to which he was subsequently re-elected as often and as long as the constitution would permit.

As a pulpit orator he was celebrated. His great learning, his complete knowledge of this subject, his splendid rhetoric and profound logic combined to make in him one of the finest preachers of his church. His health becoming impaired, he resolved to withdraw from ministerial duties and retire to a farm; and no sooner did he signify his intention of so doing, than his fellow-citizens, who had long admired his quiet and consistent support of Democratic principles, solicited him to represent the district in Congress. In June, 1829, he resigned his ministerial office, having during the preceding October been elected a Representative in Congress.

In December, 1829, he took his seat at Washington, and gave his support to the administration of President Jackson. The latter, as the leader of the Democratic party, was attracted by the position assumed by Henry A. Muhlenberg, who, though he might have been deemed inexperienced in the forms of legislation, was yet so thorough in his understanding of the measures proposed, and so energetic in the manner in which he advocated their adoption, that in the very outset of his Congressional career he established an influence in the party which few men obtain after many years of service.

His views on the tariff question were very moderate. He believed more in the permanency of the system than in the amount of protection; the latter to be purely incidental, and the adjustment of duties to be such as should furnish a revenue to defray the expenses of the government.

He was opposed to the United States Bank, and coincided in all the views hostile to that institution expressed by the President. It was he who, on the 18th of February, 1834, after more than two months of daily appeals on behalf of the friends of the banks, moved the previous question, and, by the vote which was then taken, settled forever its destiny.

He continued for nine years his position as member of the House, and was indefatigable in his duty to his constituents and to his country. In 1835 he was a candidate of a portion of the Democratic party for the Governorship of Pennsylvania, but was defeated. In 1836, when it seemed more than probable that each section of the party would nominate an electoral ticket, he induced his friends to give way and support the ticket already chosen. They did so, and Martin Van Buren was elected. In 1837 the latter tendered him a seat in the Cabinet as Secretary of the Navy, and afterwards the Russian mission, both of which, for private reasons, he was obliged to decline. In 1838 he was named ambassador to Austria, was unanimously confirmed, and remained at Vienna until the close of 1840.

In 1844 he was nominated by the State Convention for the post of Governor, which he accepted, but died suddenly on August 11, 1844, two months prior to the election.

Mr. Muhlenberg was married twice: first to Elizabeth Hies- ter, a daughter of Gov. Jos. Hister with whom he had one daughter Mary Elizabeth, intermarried with E. Jonathan Deiningier; and then to Rebecca Hies- ter, also a daughter of Gov. Hister, with whom he had six children, —Emma Elizabeth, Hister H., Henry A., Em- ma Elizabeth, Rose Catharine and Henry A. His first wife died in 1806, and the second in 1841.

J. GLANCY JONES was born October 7, 1811, in Caernarvon township, Berks County. His ancestry were of Welsh origin. His great-grandfather, David Jones, settled in 1730 upon the Conestoga Creek, near Morgantown, and there he erected and carried on one of the first forges in that section of the State. His grandfather, Jonathan Jones, was captain of a company of troops belonging to the Continental Line, enlisted by authority of Congress, and rendered distinguished services in the expedition against Canada in 1776. Afterward he was lieutenant-colonel for a time. His death was occasioned by the hardships of that campaign. Jehu Jones, son of Jonathan and father of the subject of this sketch, was for many years engaged in the profession of a teacher, for which he was qualified by a classical education. He died in 1864, at an advanced age.

J. Glancy Jones was educated at Kenyon College, Ohio, and in 1833 was ordained to the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church, to which his family had for generations belonged. His inclinations, however, led him to prefer the profession of the law; and having undergone the necessary course of preparation, he was admitted to the bar in 1839. He commenced practice in 1842, at Easton, Pennsylvania. The judicial district was composed at that time of the counties of Berks, Lehigh and Northampton, and was presided over by the Hon. John Banks. After a residence of three years at Easton he removed to Reading, and was admitted to the bar of Berks County January 7, 1845. He was appointed district attorney for Berks County, under the administration of Governor Shunk, in March, 1847, and served in that capacity until January, 1849. During that period he was tendered by the Executive the president judgeship of the Chester and Delaware District.

Though successful in the practice of his profession, he very early inclined to politics. Being a decided Democrat, he became active in the affairs of the dominant party in his native county, as well as in the State at large. He was the warm personal friend and political supporter of Morris Longstreth, the unsuccessful competitor of Governor Johnston in 1848, and the following year was chairman of the Democratic State Committee. In 1850 he was elected to Congress from the Berks District. Having declined a renomination, the Hon. Henry A. Muhlenberg, the younger, was chosen as his successor for the term beginning in December, 1853. Mr. Muhlenberg having died shortly after taking his seat, a special election was held in February, 1854, to fill the vacancy, when Mr. Jones was chosen for the unexpired term. He was re-elected for two succeeding regular terms, in 1854 and 1856, thus holding the position of Representative, with but a brief intermission, for the period of eight years. As a member of the Committee on Claims, he was the author of the bill establishing the United States Court of Claims. In 1857, he was chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, a position of leadership which necessarily secured for its incumbent a national reputation.

After the election of Mr. Buchanan to the Presidency, in 1856, Mr. Jones was selected as a member of his Cabinet. This selection was ratified by the Democratic press and party throughout the country with great unanimity, but it awakened the bitter hostility of certain political enemies of Mr. Jones in Pennsylvania. This local hostility, Mr. Buchanan thought, might endanger the harmony of the party in the State, and the success of his administration; he therefore wrote to Mr. Jones, under date of February 17, 1857: “I have reserved the question of your appointment to a seat in the Cabinet until the latest hour, hoping, as I anxiously wished and desired, that public opinion in Pennsylvania might justify my choice;” but this opposition, he further wrote, “will deprive me of your valuable services in the cabinet. I have most reluctantly arrived at this conclusion.” Two years later Mr. Buchanan wrote that he bitterly regretted this action. In February, 1857, he tendered to Mr. Jones the mission to Berlin. “It is my purpose,” he wrote, “to present your name to the Senate for that highly respectable and important mission immediately after my Cabinet shall have been confirmed. And permit me here to add that I think your mind and qualifications are admirably adapted to that branch of the public service.” This position Mr. Jones declined. He continued his service in Congress as Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and was the zealous advocate and supporter of President Buchanan’s administration on the floor of the House.

In the year 1858 he was unanimously renominated for Congress, his opponent being Major John Schwartz, the candidate of the Anti-Lecompton Democracy, which united with it the strength of the Republican party.
Mr. Jones, being the special representative of the policy of the federal administration, the contest in Berks, as elsewhere, was conducted largely upon national issues. One of the most exciting campaigns in the history of the county ensued, which resulted in the election of Major John Schwartz by a majority of nineteen votes. The total vote in the district was upwards of fourteen thousand. Immediately after the result of the contest was known, President Buchanan tendered to Mr. Jones the Austrian mission, which he accepted. Upon his confirmation by the Senate, he resigned his seat in Congress, and left, with his family, for his post in January, 1859. Upon the accession of the Republican party to power, in 1861, Mr. Burlingame was appointed by President Lincoln to succeed Mr. Jones at the court of Vienna; but, having been almost immediately recalled, Mr. Jones, at the request of the administration, remained in the embassy until the arrival of his successor, Hon. John Lothrop Motley, in the month of December. At the period of the outbreak of the Civil War in the United States the subject of the belligerent relations of the two contending sections devolved duties of a peculiarly delicate and responsible nature upon our diplomatic representatives abroad, and, so far as Mr. Jones' sphere of service was concerned, he sustained his official trust in a manner highly satisfactory to the administration and the government of his country.

Upon his return home, where he arrived in January, 1862, the period of Mr. Jones' public life practically terminated, though he did not cease to participate in the counsels of his party for many years afterward. He resumed the practice of the law, and carried it on for about ten years, when declining health compelled him to retire from all employments of a public nature.

Mr. Jones was, for a long period, a prominent person in the councils of the Protestant Episcopal Church, having been frequently a delegate to diocesan conventions, and having taken a leading part in the measures which led to the establishment of the new diocese of Central Pennsylvania in 1871. During his entire political and professional career he preserved a character of unblemished integrity, and in his private relations to his fellow-men was equally above reproach. He had many warm and zealous friends, and succeeded, as few public men succeed, in preserving the personal esteem of his political opponents, against whom he never cherished animosity or resentment. He was well fitted to be a leader of men, and those who differed most radically with him in political opinion did not hesitate to acknowledge the winning power of his personal influence. He was a very social man. His domestic life was especially happy and attractive. His wife, Anna Rodman, a daughter of the Hon. William Rodman, of Bucks County, formerly a representative of that district in Congress, was a lady of superior refinement and most estimable Christian character, and her decease, in 1871, severed the ties of a peculiarly united and affectionate household.

Mr. Jones died at Reading March 24, 1878, in his sixty-seventh year, and upon that occasion the bar of the county united in a testimonial of marked respect to his memory and appreciation of his public services.

Two of his sons, Charles Henry and Richmond L. Jones, were admitted to the Berks County bar in 1863, having studied law in their father's office. The latter was a representative from the county in the Legislature from 1867 to 1869, and the former became a resident and practitioner at the bar of Philadelphia. Mr. Jones' eldest daughter, Anna Rodman, married Farrelly Alden, of Pittsburgh, and died there in December, 1885. His youngest daughter, Catharine, married William Thomas Wallace, of Pittsburgh, Pa.

John Endlich was born March 30, 1819, near Darmstadt, in the Grand Duchy of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. He received the usual German common-school education, together with thorough musical instruction, from his fifth year, under some of the most famous masters. In his sixteenth year he applied himself to the study of forestry, and when twenty years of age entered the government service of his native state in the department of forestry. Political affiliations rendering his continuance in that position irksome, he handed in his resignation in 1840, and immediately came to this country. He settled in Reading as a teacher of music, spent several years in Richmond, Va., in the same capacity, and returning to Reading, continued his profession with great success. In 1845 he married Miss Emma N. Miller, daughter of Rev. Jacob Miller, D.D., of Reading. In 1852 he relinquished his musical profession, and removed to a farm he had purchased in Alsace township, where he now resides.

In politics, Mr. Endlich has always been a consistent Democrat, serving repeatedly as delegate to local and State Conventions of that party. In 1857 President Buchanan appointed him United States consul to Bale, Switzerland, whence he returned in 1861. In 1866 he took his family to Germany for the purpose of giving his sons the benefits of an education at German institutions. He returned in 1872 and was induced to employ his musical attainments, especially in the line of sacred music, in the interest of the Lutheran Church, of which he is a member. During the course of the following year he published a choral book for services in the Lutheran Church, a collection for use in Sunday-schools, and a Liturgy, the musical work in all of which, including many original compositions, has received most flattering recognition in this country and in Germany. Of his children, three are living,—Emma A. Endlich, authoress of several religious publications; Dr. F. M. Endlich, geologist and mining engineer; and G. A. Endlich, attorney-at-law.

Henry M. Keim, son of Hon. George M. Keim and Julia Mayer, his wife, was born at Reading, August 16, 1842. He attended the Pennsylvania Military Institute at Reading during its flourishing days, and then spent four years in the Reading High School, from which he was graduated in 1858, at the age of fifteen years, at the head of his class; subsequently he took a regular course of study at the Union College, Schenectady, and was graduated in 1862. He then studied law in the office of Jacob S. Livingood, Esq., at Reading, and was admitted to the bar August 7, 1865.

In the fall of 1862 he enlisted as a private in Company I, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Militia, and was with the Pennsylvania division under Major-General Reynolds, who held the road to Hagers-town during the battle of Antietam. During the invasion of Pennsylvania by the rebels in July, 1863, he enlisted in Company A, Fifty-third Regiment of the Pennsylvania Volunteer Militia, and was commissioned first lieutenant. Shortly after, having been mustered into service, he was detailed with certain other first lieutenants to pass an examination for the purpose of relieving Lieutenant Petriken, of the regular army, as ordnance officer of the Lehigh District, and being successful, he was appointed to this responsible office by Major-General Franz Sigel. His company wasmustered out of service in the latter part of August, 1863, but he was retained in this position. At the end of three months an application was made by him for his discharge, but General Sigel issued an order prohibiting him to be mustered out at that time; and in a letter explanatory of his action in the matter, he said,—

"It was absolutely necessary and in the interest of the service to retain Lieutenant Keim. No officer could be found at that time to act in the aforesaid capacity, and it would have been injurious to the service to discharge him after he had made himself acquainted with the duties involved in his office."

His duties required much labor, and a great responsibility was connected with the office. Ordnance stores valued at over a million and a quarter of dollars were in his possession at one time, and he aided in arming and equipping twenty-seven thousand men for the military service.

Mr. Keim was one of the last three city auditors of Reading, having served for the year 1874-75, when that office was abolished by the new city charter of 1874, and the office of controller substituted. In 1875 he received the nomination of the Democratic party for mayor of the city, but he was defeated. The city was then still Republican, the Republican party having elected this officer from 1873 to 1879. And in 1876 he served as chairman of the Democratic County Committee during the Tilden campaign, and was chairman of the committee of arrangements during the great Jubilee Festival of the party, at Reading, when a great parade was held, followed by the roasting of two buffaloes.

Mr. Keim is at present holding a number of prominent positions of trust and responsibility. He was one of the managers of the Reading Iron-Works; is a trustee of the Charles Evans Cemetery, a manager of the Reading Library and of the St. Luke’s Hospital at Bethlehem, Pa. He has been a vestryman of Christ Episcopal Church, Reading, for a number of years, his grandfather, George DeB. Keim, having been its first senior warden, when the parish was organized, in 1822, from old St. Mary’s. He was a member of the committee who raised the endowment of the new diocese of Central Pennsylvania, was a delegate to the primary convention of the diocese, held at Harrisburg, in 1871, and served for five years on its standing committee.

In June, 1885, Mr. Keim was honored by the administration of President Cleveland with the appointment of consul to Prince Edward Island. He is now filling this appointment. He is the fourth person in the history of our county who has received a foreign appointment from the national government.

Mr. Keim was married, in 1867, to Emma E. Trexler, a daughter of Mr. Horatio Trexler, for many years prominently identified with the iron industry of Berks County.

DELEGATES AT CONVENTION OF 1776.

JACOB MORGAN was born in the northern part of Wales in 1716, emigrating thence with his father, Thomas Morgan, to Caernarvon township about 1730. Near the head-waters of the Conestoga, in the vicinity where Morgantown is situated, his father took up a large tract of land. He and David Jones were the most prominent settlers of that section of the county, they locating there about the time that the Indians moved northwardly towards and beyond the Blue Mountain. During the French and Indian War, Jacob Morgan served as a captain in the provincial service, having been commissioned December 5, 1755; and four years afterward he held the same commission in the regiment of Pennsylvania troops. He was one of the justices of the county for many years, 1768 to 1769, and 1772 to and beyond 1784, possibly till 1791. He represented the county at the Provincial Conference of 1776, and the Constitutional Convention of the same year. For a time he was colonel of a battalion of Associates, and afterward held the command of all the troops raised in the county.

During the years 1777 and 1778 he was a member of the Executive Council of the State, and of the Council of Safety from October 17, 1777, to December 4th following. In April, 1780, he received the appointment of assistant forage-master, which he held for some time. He died at Morgantown on Nov. 11, 1792, aged seventy-six years, and his body was buried in the graveyard of St. Thomas’ Episcopal Church, adjoining the village. He laid out the town-plan of Morgantown about the year 1770 and named the place after his family.

GABRIEL HIESTER, a son of Daniel Hiest and Catharine Shueler (natives of Witzenstein, Westphalia), was born in Bern township June 17, 1749. He was brought up as a farmer, receiving such an education as the neighborhood afforded at the Bern church school. During the Revolutionary excitement he was selected as one of the representatives from Berks County to the Provincial Convention for the formation of a State Constitution. This was in July, 1776. In 1778 he received the appointment of justice of the Common Pleas Court of the county, which he held for four years. Then he was elected to the Assembly, and represented the county in this legislative body for eight years, at different times—1782, 1787–89, 1791 and 1802–04. During this time (in 1789) he was in the Assembly when the question of framing a new Constitution was discussed, but he voted against the propriety of calling a convention for this purpose. He was Senator from the district which comprised Berks and Dauphin Counties for ten years—1795–96 and 1805–12.

This continued selection by his fellow-citizens indicated their confidence in him as a man of ability and integrity. He died on his farm, in Bern township, on September 1, 1824, aged over seventy-five years. He was a brother of Colonel Daniel Hiest T of Montgomery County), Colonel John Hiest (of Chester County) and a cousin of Governor Joseph Hister (of this county). His wife was Elizabeth Bausman, who survived him eight years, dying in the eighty-first year of her age.

John Lesher was a native of Germany. He was born January 5, 1711. He emigrated to Pennsylvania in 1734, and was naturalized in 1743. He first settled in the upper section of Bucks County, but subsequently removed to Oley township. Along the Manatawny Creek, near the Oley churches, he, with two other men (John Yoder and John Ross), erected a forge in 1744. This was known as the "Oley Forge." From that time, for a period of fifty years, he was prominently identified with the iron industry of Berks County.
He represented the county in the Constitutional Convention of 1776, and served in the General Assembly from 1776 till 1782, a period of six years. Whilst in the convention he was one of the important committee who prepared and reported the "Declaration of Rights." During the Revolution he acted as one of the commissioners for purchasing army supplies, having received his appointment on January 20, 1778.
He died in Oley township April 5, 1794, aged eighty-three years.

Benjamin Spyker was born in the Palatinate about the year 1723. His father, John Peter Spyker, emigrated to Pennsylvania in 1738, landing at the port of Philadelphia and proceeding thence shortly afterward to Tulpehocken township, where a large tract of land was taken up and a permanent residence effected. In 1744 he was licensed to carry on the business of an Indian trader; and subse-sequently he enlisted in the "French and Indian War"—his business having been destroyed by the rupture between the settlers and the Indians.
During this trying period he wrote a number of important letters in reference to the cruelties of the Indians and the suffering of the people.
He was a neighbor and intimate associate of Conrad Weiser. At the beginning of the Revolution he assisted in organizing the Asso-ciatiors of the county and preparing them for active military service. In 1776 he represented the county in the Provincial Conference, and in the Constitutional Convention. He also served the office of justice of the peace for many years in Tulpehocken township, his dis-

in the Constitutional Convention. He also served the office of justice of the peace for many years in Tulpehocken township, his dis-

1776, and to the convention in July following. In the next year the War Office of Pennsylvania appointed him to act as one of the commissioners to procure blankets for the Continental army, and also as a paymaster of the militia. He represented the county in the General Assembly for the year 1782. Whilst serving this office he was taken ill, and from this illness he died at home in February, 1783, aged fifty-four years.

Valentine Eckert was born in Longaselva, in the Kingdom of Hanover, in 1733. He came to America with his parents in 1740, who settled in the Tulpehocken Valley at a point to the east of where Womelsdorf is now situate.
He was naturalized in September, 1761. In June, 1776, he was one of the ten members of the Provincial Conference who represented Berks County in that important body; and in July following he was also selected as one of the eight members to represent the county in the Provincial Convention which was assembled for the purpose of framing a new government founded on the authority of the people. In 1776 and 1779 he represented the county in the Provincial Assembly. He offered his services to the government in the Revolutionary War, which were accepted, and he commanded a company of cavalry Associators for a time. He and his company participated in the battle of Germanstown in October, 1777, where he was wounded. He was appointed sub-lieutenant of the county on March 21, 1777, and served in this office till his promotion to lieutenant of the county in January, 1781.

While serving as sub-lieutenant he also acted as a commissioner for the purchase of army provisions. In 1784 he was appointed judge of the Court of Common Pleas of the county and occupied this office for a term of seven years, when, by the Constitution of 1790, a president judge of all the courts was appointed to take the place of the several judges. In the Pennsylvania militia he was brigade inspector for the county from April 11, 1793, for a period of twenty years. About the year 1816 he moved to the State of Virginia and died at Winchester in December, 1821, in the eighty-eighth year of his age.

Charles Shoemaker was born at Germantown about the year 1735. His grandfather emigrated to this country with Pastorious and settled in the vicinity of Germantown. At an early age, about the year 1765, he moved to Windsor township and took up a considerable quantity of land. He exerted a large influence in politics and business in the upper section of the county. He represented the county as a member in the Provincial Conference and also in the Constitutional Convention of 1776. In 1777 he was appointed as one of the justices of the county for seven years, and at the expiration of his term he was re-appointed, serving without break till the adoption of the Constitution of 1790. The State Assembly, in December, 1777, appointed and empowered him to solicit and take subscriptions for the Continental Loan, this service having required a large measure of ability to conduct the duties of the office with success. He succeeded in obtaining a considerable amount of subscriptions from various citizens of the county. At the close of the war much loss was suffered by farmers and merchants from non-re redemption of these loans. The people exhibited their patriotism to the country by lending their aid in its extremity.

In November, 1777, he acted as one of the commissioners who assembled at New Haven, in Connecticut, to regulate the price of commodities in the colonies.

He represented the county in the General Assembly for twelve years—1792 to 1801, in 1810 and in 1812; and in the Senate for one term of four years—1813 to 1816. He lived a retired life for several years, and then died in April, 1820.

Thomas Jones, Jr., was the son of Thomas Jones, one of the earliest Welsh settlers in Cumru township, having taken up land there in 1735. He was born in 1742 in this township. At the beginning of the Revolution he assisted in organizing the Associates of Berks County, and he was in active service for a time as a major in one of the battalions of the county. He was a member of the First Constitutional Convention from Berks County. He died in March, 1800, aged fifty-eight years. His residence was in Heidelberg township.

STATE OFFICIALS.

Joseph Hiester was born in Bern township, Berks County, on November 18, 1752. His father, John Heister, emigrated to this country in 1732 in the twenty-fifth year of his age, from the village of Elsoff, in the province of Westphalia, Germany. Some years afterward, he settled in Bern township, where he was then married to Mary Barbara Epler, a daughter of one of the first settlers in that section of the county. He and his two brothers, Joseph and Daniel (who emigrated in 1738), took up large tracts of land comprising several thousand acres and extending from the Bern church to the Tulpehocken Creek, and there they carried on farming. He died in 1757, aged fifty years. His wife was born in 1732; and she died in 1809. The remains of both were buried in the graveyard appurtenant to the Bern church.

Joseph Hiester was brought up on the farm till he was a young man. It is said that he at times related his early experience at plowing—how he was put to the plow so young that when it struck a stump or stone, and was thereby thrown from the furrow, he was not able to replace it till it had run a considerable distance; and when caught in a root its rebound would occasionally throw him prostrate. In the interval of farm labor he attended the school which was conducted at the Bern church, and there acquired the rudiments of an English and also a German education. The homestead was situated about a mile northwardly from the church.

He removed to Reading before he was of age, and entered the general store of Adam Witman. Whilst in the employ of Mr. Witman he became acquainted with his daughter Elizabeth, and he was married to her in 1771. He continued with his father-in-law till the breaking out of the Revolution. Then appreciating the spirit of the people for independence, he took an active part in discussing the principles of the Federalist party, and in encouraging the enlistment of men for military service. He raised a company of eighty men in July, 1776 which became a part of the "Flying Camp" and participated in the battle of Long Island. He was taken prisoner in this engagement and confined on the notorious prison-ship "Jersey" for a time, and was afterward imprisoned in New York. Whilst a prisoner in the latter place he was taken sick with a low fever, and became so feeble that in passing up and down-stairs he was obliged to creep on his hands and knees.

He and the other men imprisoned endured many hardships and much suffering. After having been held in prison several months he was exchanged. He proceeded immediately to Reading, and remained at home only a short time, sufficient to regain his health and strength, when he again joined the army, which lay towards Philadelphia. He returned in time to participate in the battle of Germantown. In this engagement he received a wound on his head. He continued in active service till the close of the war. A record of his services, or of his company, unfortunately, has not been preserved.

His earnest participation in the public meetings at Reading, which encouraged revolution, led to his selection as one of the ten delegates from Berks County to the conference held at Philadelphia on June 18, 1776, which decided that a Provincial Convention should be called on July 15, 1776, for the express purpose of "forming a new government in this province on the authority of the people only." His first cousin, Gabriel Hiester, was elected as one of the eight delegates to this convention, but he himself became engaged in the military service of his country.

Upon his return from the Revolution he entered into partnership with his father-in-law, Adam Witman, in the mercantile business, and some years afterward became the sole proprietor of the store. He conducted his business operations very successfully for a number of years. Public affairs also received much of his attention, not only relating to political government, but also to the development of Reading and the county by internal improvement. Four years after his return he was elected one of the members of the General Assembly from Berks County, and re-elected twice, continuing in this office for three years,—from 1787 to 1790. He was a member of the General Assembly when that body ratified the Constitution of the United States, which went into operation in March, 1789; and also when it decided that alterations and amendments to the Constitution of 1776 were necessary, and that a convention for that purpose should be called. He was chosen one of the delegates to the Constitutional Convention of 1789, having been the first on list of delegates from Berks County, and he assisted in framing the Constitution of 1790. After serving in this representative capacity, he was chosen the first State Senator from this district for one term of four years,—from 1790 to 1794. In 1797 he was elected to represent Berks County in Congress, succeeding his first cousin, Daniel Hiester, who had held this office for the first four terms, from 1789 to 1797, under the national Constitution, and he was continued as the representative for five terms, from 1797 to 1807. After an intermission of eight years—which he devoted entirely to business at Reading—he was again sent to Congress in 1815 and re-elected twice. Whilst holding this office he was prominently identified with the political affairs of Pennsylvania, so much so that in 1817 he became the nominee of the Federalist party for Governor. Though not elected then, his great popularity was shown in the flattering vote which he received.

He was the first candidate on the Federal ticket who received a majority of the votes in the county of Berks against the Democratic candidate, and also in the southeastern section of the State, which comprised eleven very populous and influential counties. The party naturally selected him in 1820 a second time as the most available candidate, and he was elected. This was a great victory for him, but especially for his party, inasmuch as he was the first successful candidate which the Federalists had placed in the field against the Democrats. The political returns show his increased popularity. The majority against him at the election of 1817 was 7005, but the majority for him at the election of 1820, notwithstanding that his opponent on the Democratic ticket had been Governor for the previous three years, was 1805. A careful study of the election returns reveals the fact, however, that the devotion of the people of Berks County to him caused his election. Theretofore the county had always been Democratic by a sure, if not a large, majority, and if it had continued steadfast to the Democratic party in 1820 he would certainly have been defeated. The county is therefore entitled to the greater part of the credit for his election. Having been elected to this position, he resigned his seat in Congress. He had been induced by his personal and political friends to become a candidate for this office upon the express condition that he would serve only one term, and notwithstanding his successful administration and a great pressure from partisans and many friends to be a candidate for re-election, he resolutely refused to permit the use of his name.

The administration of Governor Hiester was characterized by great activity in promoting the growth of the commonwealth, especially through internal improvements. Political contests were conducted in that period with great bitterness. Harsh criticisms were made against those who occupied prominent positions and directed public affairs. The administration of his immediate predecessor, Governor Findlay, was condemned without measure. The condemnation was so furious that it made a deep impression upon Governor Hiester, so deep, indeed, that he was led to refer to it in his inaugural address. Among other things, he said,—'But I trust, if any errors shall be committed, they will not be chargeable to intention. They will owe their origin to the imperfection of our nature and the narrow limits of human foresight. They will not proceed from a willful neglect of duty on my part, nor from any want of devotion to the best interests of our beloved country. Such errors, I may justly hope, will meet with indulgence from an enlightened and liberal people. Where censure shall, upon a full and impartial view of matters, be merited, let it not be withheld. It is the duty of freemen to examine closely into the conduct of those to whom they have delegated their power, or the guardianship of their rights and interests, to censure the abuse of the one, or the neglect or mismanagement of the other. Considering myself as elected by the people of this commonwealth, and not by any particular denomination of persons, I shall endeavor to deserve the name of chief magistrate of Pennsylvania, and to avoid the dis-

The great patronage at the disposal of the executive had become very troublesome. This was particularly experienced by Governor Findlay, and Governor Hiester, knowing this, asked the Legislature to devise some method by which the Governor could be relieved. He also suggested that the annual sessions of the Legislature might be shortened without detriment to the public good, that public improvements could then be made advantageously and domestic manufactures encouraged with success, and that there existed an imperative duty to introduce and support a liberal system of education, connected with some general religious instruction.

During the session of 1822 the city and county of Lancaster were erected into a school district, called the Second, the First having been the city and county of Philadelphia, erected in 1819. According to his sentiments, expressed to the Legislature, Governor Hiester in every possible way encouraged the system of free education; but a decade elapsed after his term before the system was perfected sufficiently by legislation to make it effective. And whilst Governor Hiester occupied the gubernatorial chair the State capital was removed from Lancaster to Harrisburg. The building was begun in 1819 and finished in 1821, and the General Assembly convened in it for the first time on January 3, 1822. The capital had been at Lancaster since 1799, and previously at Philadelphia.

In his last annual message to the Legislature Governor Hiester expressed many sentiments which indicated his strong love for the State and his zeal for her welfare and progress, concluding it as follows:

"Having been for nearly fifty years occasionally engaged in various highly responsible situations in the service of my country, and having witnessed its progress from colonial vassalage to independence and sovereignty, it is with most sincere pleasure that, on quitting the theatre of action, I can congratulate you and our fellow-citizens at large on the propitious situation in which it is now placed; and I avail myself of the occasion it affords me of repeating my fervent prayers to the Almighty Ruler of the Universe, under whose superintending influence it has attained its present eminence, that he may continue to cherish it with his fostering care, preserving its citizens in the free enjoyment of their just rights and republican institutions, until all earthly governments shall be terminated by the consummation of time."

Upon the expiration of his term of office he lived in retirement at Reading. His residence was situated on the northern side of Penn Street, midway between Fourth and Fifth Streets. The dwelling consisted of a two-story brick building, with a large frame stable on the rear of the lot. He owned a number of farms in Alsace (now Muhlenberg), Cumru and Bern townships, and also tracts of woodland on Mount Penn, altogether numbering nearly two thousand acres, seven prominent business stands and dwellings in Reading, valued at over fifty thousand dollars, and also out-lots. He occupied and farmed the out-lots for his own use, and kept horses and cows—a custom carried on by the more prominent inhabitants of Reading in order to supply their families with vegetables.

He frequently visited his farms. Upon one occasion, about 1825, he called to see John Sailor, who was farming the three hundred and twelve acre farm on the Kutztown road, at "Hiester's Lane" (now in North Reading, and owned by the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company). Finding Mr. Sailor on the barn-floor, threshing grain with a flail, he pulled off his coat and handled the flail, not only vigorously but successfully. During his youth he was recognized as an accomplished workman at all kinds of farm labor. When Mr. Sailor reached an advanced age and lived in retirement, he narrated this circumstance with much pleasure.

Governor Hiester was a man of commanding presence and pleasing address. He was about six feet tall and weighed about two hundred pounds. His manners were simple and unassuming, so much so, indeed, for a man of his high station and large means, that the people of this community were thereby most favorably impressed. The men of to-day, now old and gray, who then were boys at Reading, recall him with pleasure and speak of him in the highest terms of respect. And just as they speak of him so do they also speak of his wife. He was a member of the Reformed Church. His wife died June 11, 1825, aged seventy-five years, two months and nine days. He died seven years afterward, June 10, 1832, in the home which he had occupied for two-score of years, aged seventy-nine years, six months and twenty-two days. His remains are buried in the burying-ground of the Reformed Church. The funeral was conducted without display of any kind, according to the known wishes of the Governor; but though the occasion was not signalized by a great military parade and other demonstrations of respect, because they were declined by the family, a great many people nevertheless assembled to witness the simple ceremonies which were performed in carrying to the grave him who had occupied for over fifty years the most prominent positions before them. Some years afterward the remains of the Governor and his wife were removed to the Charles Evans Cemetery.

He left an estate which amounted to four hundred and sixty-eight thousand dollars. The greater part consisted of bonds and stocks—the latter having included, it is believed, fifty thousand dollars in the United States Bank. His surviving children and grandchildren were a son, John S. Hiester; two daughters, Catharine Spayd (widow of Hon. John Spayd) and Rebecca Muhlenberg (intermarried with Rev. Henry A. Muhlenberg); a granddaughter, Mary E. Muhlenberg (the daughter of Mary Heister, who was intermarried with Rev. Henry A. Muhlenberg); and seven grandchildren, the children of Elizabeth Hiester, who was intermarried with Levi Pauling, namely—Joseph Pauling, Henry Pauling, Elizabeth Pauling (intermarried with Thomas Ross), James Pauling, Rebecca Pauling, Ellen Pauling and Mary Pauling.

birth and earlier life in the county entitle him to a place in this history.

John Andrew Shulze was born in Tulpehocken township, Berks County, on July 19, 1775. He was the son of Rev. Christian Shulze, a Lutheran clergyman. His mother was Eve Elizabeth Muhlenberg, the oldest daughter of Rev. Henry Melchior Muhlenberg. He was liberally educated for the ministry, and regularly ordained as a minister in 1796, and he assisted his father for eight years in the discharge of pastoral duties to several congregations in Berks, Lebanon and Lancaster Counties. Owing to a rheumatic affection, he, in 1804, was obliged to relinquish preaching. He then moved to Myerstown, then in Dauphin County, and pursued the business of merchant. In 1806 he was elected a member of the State Legislature, and afterward twice re-elected, serving his constituents with distinction for three terms. In 1813, upon the erection of Lebanon County, he was appointed to fill the office of prothonotary, in which he continued for eight years. In 1821 he was again elected to the Legislature, and, in 1822, he was chosen Senator, to represent the Senatorial district composed of Dauphin and Lebanon Counties. Whilst serving as a Senator he received the Democratic nomination for Governor, and was elected by a majority of twenty-five thousand seven hundred and six over Andrew Gregg, the Federal candidate; and, in 1826, he was re-elected Governor with little opposition, the Federal party having run John Sergeant against him. In 1829 he was again brought out as a candidate, but, for the sake of harmony in the party, he withdrew, and George Wolf was nominated and elected. Whilst acting as Governor he had the honor of tendering the courtesies of the State to General Lafayette, who was then upon his celebrated tour through the country. His administration of the affairs of the State government during his official career was distinguished for integrity, wisdom and statesmanship.

During President Jackson's opposition against the Bank of the United States, Governor Shulze left the Democratic party. But he was not active in political life after his retirement from the office of Governor, excepting upon one occasion, in 1840, when he was a member of the Harrisburg Whig Convention, which nominated General Harrison for President. In this connection he ran as a Senatorial elector upon the Harrison ticket, and was elected, and afterward officiated as president of the State Electoral College.

Upon retiring from office he removed to Lycoming County, where he continued to reside till 1846. During that period he was engaged in certain extensive speculations in this great and enterprising county, but he was not successful in them. Then he moved to Lancaster, where he continued to reside till his death, November 18, 1852. He was a superior man, and he enjoyed the high esteem of his fellow-citizens for his many excellent personal and social characteristics. He was one of the few really prominent men whom this county produced. His predecessor in the gubernatorial chair of this State was Joseph Hiester, who was elected to this high office from Berks County.

Frederick Smith, one of the most distinguished men that Berks County has produced, was born in the year 1773, and was a son of Rev. John Frederick Smith, an eminent divine of the Lutheran Church in Pennsylvania, and one of the pioneers of that denomination in America. Frederick Smith obtained a superior classical education, and, selecting the law as his profession, after a careful preparation, was admitted to the bar at Reading August 7, 1795. He soon thereafter won prominence and distinction, both as a counselor and as an attorney in important litigation. In the mean time he became actively interested in the politics of his native State, and was a member of the Legislature for two years—1802-3. He was appointed deputy attorney-general for Berks County in 1818, and occupied that position for three years.

He served from 1823 to 1828 as attorney-general of Pennsylvania, under Governor Andrew Shulze, by whom he was appointed associate justice of the Supreme Court of the State in 1828, which position he filled until the time of his death. His judicial career, though brief, was distinguished. His decisions are cited as emphatic expositions of the law, and are characterized by clearness and logical force of reasoning. Besides possessing superior literary and professional ability, he was a man of genial spirits and affable manners, thus winning to him in social circles a large number of intimate friends.

Judge Smith died in Reading on Tuesday, October 4, 1830. He had returned to his home and family apparently in good health, and his heart buoyant with joy, only the evening before his sudden and unexpected death. Having just finished his evening repast, he was stricken down with a fatal malady, from which he suffered but a few hours. His remains were interred in the cemetery of the Roman Catholic Church, but have since been removed to the Charles Evans Cemetery. The members of the Reading bar called a meeting, of which Marks John Biddle was chairman and David F. Gordon secretary, and passed resolutions commendingatory of his life and character.

A meeting of the Philadelphia bar, held in the Law Library of that city, adopted appropriate resolutions in testimony of his high character and his distinguished ability. Of this meeting William Rawle was chairman and T. L. Wharton secretary.

Gabriel Hiester, a son of Hon. Gabriel Hiester, a prominent representative man of Berks County, was born in Bern township January 5, 1779. He was given a good English and German education, and his youth was spent on his father’s farm. His father having taken an active and very successful part in our local politics, he naturally exhibited the same spirit at an early age. By appointment from the Governor, he was prothonotary of the county from 1809 to 1817, and clerk of the Quarter Sessions from 1809 to 1812 and 1814 to 1817, and associate judge from 1819 to 1823. During the War of 1812–15 he served as brigade-major under General William Addams, of Berks County, in the campaign at Washington and Baltimore. He served as a Presidential elector in 1817 and in 1821, casting his ballot upon both occasions for James Monroe. Governor Andrew Shulze appointed him surveyor-general of the State on May 11, 1824, when he removed to Harrisburg, and he officiated in that position for six years.

Whilst at Harrisburg he became interested in the iron business, and erected the first rolling-mill in that vicinity, at Fairview, on the Кондьюинет, and he continued actively engaged in it till his decease. He died there on September 14, 1834. He was married, in 1803, to Mary Otto, a daughter of Dr. John Otto, of Reading. She died in 1853. They had the following children: Louisa, Harriet (inturned with C. B. Bioren), Augustus O., Gabriel and Catharine.

Jacob Sallade, a son of Andreas Sallade and Eva (née Schmidt), his wife, was born at Womelsdorf (Middletown) July 13, 1789, and there educated. He was employed for a time as clerk in the general store of a brother of Governor J. A. Shulze, at that place, and also officiated as a justice of the peace. In 1824 he received from Governor Shulze (with whom he was upon intimate terms, having been brought up together in the same town) the appointment of clerk of the Orphans’ Court and clerk of the court of Quarter Sessions, and then he removed to Reading. He held these offices for three years, after which he filled the office of prothonotary for three years—from 1826 to 1829—by appointment also from Governor Shulze. During the next ten years he was engaged in the business of general merchandise at Reading, and he also served as a justice of the peace for a time.

In 1839 Governor Joseph Ritner appointed him surveyor-general, and he continued to serve in this position for six years. During that time he resided at Harrisburg, and he died there shortly after his term expired. His remains were brought to Reading and buried in Charles Evans’ Cemetery. He was a man of fine personal appearance, and enjoyed much popularity during his official career.

He was married to Susanna Mayer, with whom he had issue seven children—Maria Catharine, Andrew M. (an attorney at Reading), Charles M., Sarah, Susanna, Rebecca and Jacob M. (an attorney at Reading).

John Banks, a State treasurer during the year 1847. (For sketch see biographies of President Judges.)
William Strong, LL.D., associate judge of the Supreme Court of the United States until the time of his voluntary retirement, at the age of seventy years, was born at Somers, Conn., May 6, 1808, and is the son of the Rev. William L. Strong, an eminent Presbyterian clergyman and graduate of Yale College. His preparatory education was acquired at the Munson Academy, Massachusetts, and when sixteen years of age he entered the freshman class at Yale College, from which institution he was graduated in 1828, with honor to himself and the institution. He subsequently taught a classical and mathematical school, occupying his leisure hours in the study of the law and so continued until February, 1832, when he entered the Law Department of Yale College. In the following month of October he was admitted to the bar of the Superior Court of Connecticut, and shortly afterward he was admitted to practice in the District Court and Court of Common Pleas of the city and county of Philadelphia. On November 17th of the same year he opened a law-office in Reading and made that place his residence. In political faith he was a Democrat of the old school and as such was several times elected a member of the City Councils of Reading and also one of the controllers of the public schools. In 1846 he was elected as representative of the Eighth District in the Congress of the United States, and was re-elected in 1848. He served on several important committees and was chairman of the Committee on Elections. In 1850 he declined a re-election and returned to the practice of his profession. In 1857 he was elected by the people of the commonwealth a judge of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania for the term of fifteen years, but resigned his position on the bench October 1, 1868, and returned to practice his profession at Philadelphia. On February 18, 1870, he was appointed by President Grant an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, which high position he held till 1878, when he was retired under the act of Congress.

While a resident of Reading he was for many years a director of the Farmers' Bank, as well as a director of the Lebanon Valley Railroad. He was counsel for the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company until he was elevated to the Supreme bench. In religious faith he is a Presbyterian, having been for many years a member of that denomination and ruling elder. For several years he was one of the vice-presidents of the American Bible Society, as also of the American Sunday-School Union; and in 1873 was elected president of the American Tract Society. He received in 1867 the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from Lafayette College, at Easton, and in 1870 the same honorary diploma was granted him by Nassau Hall, Princeton, N. J., and also by his Alma Mater, Yale College.

William Muhlenberg Hiester, son of the celebrated physician, Dr. Isaac Hiester, was born in Reading, May 15, 1818. His grandfather, on the maternal side, was General Peter Muhlenberg, of Revolutionary fame. His mother, Hetty Muhlenberg, died in 1872, at the advanced age of eighty-eight years. He received a preparatory training at the West Nottingham Academy in Maryland, and subsequently entered Bristol College in Pennsylvania, and graduated in 1837, in the second and last class of graduates from that institution. He read law in the office of Judge Banks, attended a course of lectures in the Law Department of Harvard College, and was admitted to the bar at Reading, January 7, 1840. The honorary degree of A.M. was conferred upon him in 1843, by Harvard College. He practiced his profession four years in Erie, Pa., and in 1845 returned to Reading, and associated himself with the Hon. Henry A. Muhlenberg, and soon acquired a large practice. In 1852 he was elected by the Democratic party as a member of the State Senate, and served until 1855, taking foremost rank among the Democratic members. At the opening of the session of 1855, after an exciting contest, he was elected Speaker of the Senate on the twenty-seventh ballot. His career as Speaker was dignified, firm and impartial. In January, 1858, he was appointed secretary of the commonwealth by Governor William F. Packer, and continued in that office during the administration of three years. He supported Stephen A.
Douglas for President of the United States in the campaign of 1860, but subsequently earnestly advocated the administration of Abraham Lincoln, and was a warm friend of the Union. In the summer of 1863, when Pennsylvania was being invaded by General Lee, Mr Hiest-ter was appointed by Governor Curtin one of the mustering officers, with the rank of major, to muster in troops that volunteered for ninety days’ service, in response to the Governor’s proclamation of June 26, 1863, calling for sixty thousand men. He was assigned to duty at the temporary rendezvous on the Agricultural Fair Grounds at Reading, which, in compliment to him, was designated Camp Hiest-ter. In the execution of his military commission, he mustered into the State service eight full regiments of volunteers, comprising an aggregate force of eight thousand men. After the war he supported the Republican party, and in 1864 was the Republican candidate for Congress in the Berks County District. After this event, he retired from participation in public affairs, and devoted his attention to the benevolent and business interests of his native city. He was a director in the Reading Library Company, in the Charles Evans Cemetery Company and the Reading Gas Company, and a liberal supporter of the public and private charities of the city. He died in Reading August 16, 1878, and left a widow, and a son Isaac, who is a practicing attorney at Reading.

WILLIAM J. WOODWARD was the second president judge elected in Berks County under the amended Constitution of the State of Pennsylvania. He was called here by a very strong public sentiment which had been developed in his favor by his high and spotless character as a man, and by his ability and reputation as a young and promising jurist.

He was born September 24, 1819, at Beth- any, in Wayne County, Pa. His father, John K. Woodward, was a civil engineer and journalist, and at the time of his decease, in 1825, was prothonotary of Wayne County; his grandfather was an associate judge of that county for fifteen years, and sheriff in 1807. After acquiring an academic education at Wilkesbarre, he taught school for several terms in his native county. At the age of seventeen years he directed his attention to the publication of the Bethany Herald, having had at that early age editorial control of that newspaper. Subsequently, he was employed in the editorial staff of the Pennsylvania, a prominent Demo- cratic newspaper published at Philadelphia, and continued his connection with it till 1840. He then returned to Wilkesbarre, and, selecting the law as his profession, entered the office of his uncle, George W. Woodward, a prac- ticing attorney at the Luzerne County bar, for the purpose of pursuing the necessary course of study. Whilst in this office his uncle was elevated to the bench as president judge of the Fourth Judicial District of Pennsylvania. His preparation was completed under the preceptor- ship of Hon. Edmund L. Dana, and he was admitted to the bar at Wilkesbarre on August 1, 1842.

As a young attorney he was close and dili- gent in the preparation of the cases that came to him. His great care and thoroughness soon won the attention of older attorneys, and they selected him as junior counsel in important litigation. He continued in active and very successful practice for fourteen years. In April, 1856, the Legislature erected a new judicial district out of Columbia, Sullivan and Wyoming Counties—the Twenty-sixth in the State. These counties adjoined Luzerne on the west and north. In that section of the State Mr. Woodward had come to be thoroughly known as an upright man and a distinguished lawyer, and public sentiment drifted naturally towards him as the person qualified to fill the responsible position of president judge of that district. The Governor, James Pollock, re- responded to this sentiment by appointing him to the position, and in October following he was elected for the term of ten years. The quali- ties of his mind, developed through earnest application and a long and wide experience in the practice of the legal profession, fitted him em- inently for this high office, and the community, whose several rights had been placed under his judicial care, soon found the able lawyer advance into the noble judge. His reputation spread rapidly into adjoining districts. Half of his term had not expired, yet the old and influential district comprising Bucks and Montgomery Counties gave him the nomination for the president judgeship on the Democratic ticket, and asked him to accept it. This was a flattering recognition of his judicial character and ability; but he declined the honor. In the gles and excitements, he gave our community to know that he, in the matter of the Civil War then raging, was most positively for the preservation of the Union of all the States, and for the enforcement of the Constitution. "To secure these ends," he said, in concluding his letter, "some personal sacrifices must be made, and some peculiar political theories must be postponed. Present exigencies demand the united and cordial support by our whole people of same year, 1861, the term of our president judge in Berks County was about to expire, and the major part of the attorneys of our bar gave him a pressing invitation to become his successor. The Democratic convention held at Reading, August 31, 1861, gave him the nomination by acclamation, and this he accepted. In a letter dated at Bloomsburg, September 11, 1861, besides expressing his gratitude for the high honor conferred upon him, and his opinion about the impropriety of law judges of the commonwealth participating in political strugevery legitimate and constitutional effort of the national government to bring the existing war to a successful issue." His sentiments were highly approved by our community, and in October following he was elected by a majority of four thousand and ninety-two votes over a local candidate for the same position. The Republican party had nominated Henry W. Smith, Esq., a prominent attorney of Reading, who was affiliated with the Democratic party, and a strong effort had been made for his election. The majority was therefore highly complimentary.
Judge Woodward moved to Reading and took his seat upon the bench in December, 1861. His judicial and social deportment at once inspired the citizens of the county with unqualified confidence. The Civil War caused much commotion in the county. The Democrats were displeased with the extreme course of the Republican administration in national affairs, but he, notwithstanding his election by them, advised co-operation and the enforcement of law to restore peace. His earnest public actions as a citizen of this community, in behalf of the war, in conjunction with prominent and influential professional and business men, contributed a powerful influence towards the creation of a proper spirit in that alarming period. The majority of the people in the county were opposed to the war, especially to the new administration, and a bad influence at that time might have resulted in a great social disturbance, if not in loss of life and property. If it lay here concealed, it would not have dared to develop itself with such men as he to condemn it. His patriotic conduct as a man of Democratic principles and associations is therefore worthy of special mention.

During his term he was unusually devoted to his office, and his administration of its responsible duties gave entire satisfaction; and he became thoroughly identified with the interests and welfare of our county. His re-election was therefore assured. Shortly before the expiration of his term the Legislature established a District Court for Luzerne County, and the bar of that county unanimously invited him to accept the office of president judge of the new court. When the movement became known to the members of the bar of Berks County they held a special meeting and passed resolutions expressing the highest regard and affection for him, and inviting him to remain with them. The thorough appreciation of his course upon the bench by the entire community, and the earnest expressions of good-will by all the attorneys who practiced under him, induced him to decline the honor proposed by the Bar of Luzerne County, and to remain in the county of Berks. He was nominated by acclamation at the Democratic Convention in June, 1871, and re-elected for a second term of ten years by a majority of 5968 votes.

The new Constitution of the State increased the number of the justices of the Supreme Court from five to seven members, and the two new members were to be elected in 1874, one by the Democratic party and the other by the Republican party. The superiority of Judge Woodward's judicial qualifications and experience brought him prominently before the Democrats of the State as a worthy candidate for this important position, and he received the nomination of their State Convention. This honor was given to him without solicitation of any kind on his part. The office sought the man. Upon his nomination he received numerous congratulatory letters, and the people of Berks County rejoiced at this honor, though they should suffer the loss of his valuable services. One of these letters was from Mr. Thomas C. Zimmerman, one of the editors of the Times and Journal, which elicited the following, among other expressions of gratitude:

"To what extent my professional reputation has been enhanced by the liberal and ungrudging eulogies of the Journal and of the Times it is of course impossible to conjecture. That I have been very greatly indebted to those articles for any general position in the State, I have never for a moment entertained a doubt...I believe I am indebted to the course of the Journal in former years, and of the Times since you purchased it, for the existence of that sentiment [pervading the State, as to his fitness and capacity for the position for which he was a candidate], more than to any other cause. The effect of that course, moral and direct, has been a most significant and essential element of the influence that has secured my nomination."

The one was a thorough Democrat, the other a thorough Republican. The deliberate expressions of the former are significant, in showing how he, on the one hand, had won the favor of a person of opposite political sentiments, and, on the other, how he regarded the extent and power of its influence.

Shortly after the election of the two Associate Justices the Hon. Edward M. Paxson, the Republican candidate elevated at the same time to the Supreme bench, visited Judge Woodward at Reading. Whilst here they cast lots for precedence in the order of succession to the position of chief justice, and Judge Paxson won it. The term was for twenty-one years, without re-election, and Judge Woodward could therefore not hope to fill the highest position in the court except by the death or resignation of Judge Paxson. He took his seat on the Supreme bench on January 1, 1875, and filled the office with honor and distinction till his decease, September 23, 1879. He was particularly regarded for devotion to his office and for ability and conscientiousness in the discharge of its duties. His remains were buried at Wilkesbarre.

Judge Woodward was elected president of the Reading Benevolent Society, at Reading, in 1871, and he occupied this office till his decease. He took a deep interest in the benevolent affairs of our community and gave generously towards the relief of poor people. In 1875 he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from Franklin and Marshall College.

Whilst upon the bench in Berks County for a period of fourteen years, he adjudicated many cases, the opinions in which were not questioned by writ of error or appeal. This exhibits the high degree of confidence which lawyers and laymen had in his judgment and discrimination. These cases have been compiled by G. A. Endlich, Esq., an attorney of the Berks County bar, and published in two volumes. They are known as "Woodward's Decisions." The language in which his opinions are expressed is terse, indicating a clear and logical condition of intellect. His handwriting was ever recognized for its neatness, regularity and legibility, characteristics which manifested the extreme care and deliberation of his actions. And his conduct in the associations of life was, like his language and handwriting, thoroughly exemplary.

He was married to Katharine Scott, daughter of Hon. David Scott, of Wilkesbarre, with whom he had three children—two sons (Henry and Warren, both educated for and admitted to the bar, but now deceased) and a daughter, Katharine Scott (intermarried with Frank Perley Howe, son of Rev. M. A. De Wolfe Howe, D.D., residing at Danville, Pa.).

CHAPTER XX.

JUDICIARY—BENCH AND BAR.

Judges.—Various Acts of Assembly were passed before 1722, for a period of forty years, to establish the powers of courts for the purposes of protecting men in the enjoyment of their personal rights, of redressing wrongs, of adjudicating the rights of property and of administering estates. Finally, in that year, the law for the several courts of the province became settled, and continued so till the Revolution, with the exception of certain amendments by two supplementary acts passed in 1759 and 1767.

From the time of the erection of the county in 1752 down to 1776 the following persons acted in the capacity of justices, the length of service of most of them being unknown:

In 1776 the Constitutional Convention provided in the first Constitution of the State that the Supreme Executive Council should consist of twelve persons, who were to be chosen by ballot by the respective counties for the term of three years. The apportionment gave one to Berks County. The following Councilors were elected from Berks till the adoption of the Constitution of 1790. The term of the first was fixed at two years, and afterward three years.

This Constitution also provided for the establishment of courts of justice in every county of the State. The following persons officiated as judges of the county from 1776 till 1790. The first three were president judges of the courts for a time:

Henry Christ. John Eckert.
Peter Spyker. Jacob Weaver.
James Read. John Otto.
Daniel Levan. Matthias Reichert.
Valentine Eckert. Nicholas Hunter.
John Ludwig. Egedio Meyer.
Jacob Shoemaker. John Christ.

And it provided also that each election district should elect two or more persons for the office of justice of the peace, and that the president of the Executive Council should commission one or more for each district for seven years. The following justices were elected in Berks County, and commissioned from 1777 till 1790, the dash after the year indicating uncertainty whether or not the full term was served, and the repetition of the year indicating re-election:

Nicholas Hunter.........................1788
James Diemer.........................1788–91–

PRESIDENT, ADDITIONAL LAW, ORPHANS' COURT AND ASSOCIATE JUDGES.

The Constitution of 1790 provided for the establishment of Circuit Courts in the State, to be composed of certain counties—not less than three nor more than six; and for the appointment by the Governor of a president judge of the courts in each circuit, and also of other judges, not less than three nor more than four in number, whose residence should be in the county. All the judges appointed were to hold their offices during good behavior.

In 1791, in pursuance of the Constitution of 1790, the State was divided into five judicial circuits or districts, and each district became entitled to a president judge. The Third District comprised Berks, Luzerne, Northampton and Northumberland Counties. In 1806 the State was divided into ten districts, and Berks, Northampton and Wayne comprised the Third District. In 1811 Schuylkill County was erected and included in the district, but it was cut off in 1815. In 1812 Lehigh County was erected and included in the district. In 1834 the State was divided into seventeen districts, and Berks, Lehigh and Northampton comprised the Third District.

The county of Berks was erected into a separate judicial district by the act of April 5, 1849, and called the Twenty-third District. It has since been a separate district, with this number in the judicial system.

In 1810 the associate judges were limited to two in number. The provision in reference to the tenure of office was modified by the amended Constitution of 1838, whereby the term of president judges was fixed at ten years, and of associate judges at five years.

In 1850 an amendment to the Constitution was adopted which provided for the election of the judges for the terms mentioned. The first election was held in October, 1851.

The office of additional law judge was created by the act of April 15, 1869, for Berks County, with similar powers and term as those of president judge.

The office of Orphans’ Court judge was created for the county by the act of June 13, 1883, pursuant to the new Constitution; and on June 29th following the Governor made the first appointment. His judicial powers are confined to matters which arise in the Orphans' Court, and the term of service is ten years.

The office of associate judge was abolished by the New Constitution, the incumbents to continue in office until their terms of service expired.

Before 1874 county officials took their offices on the second Monday of December succeeding their election. The new Constitution provided that thereafter they should take their offices on the first Monday of January succeeding.

² Jeremiah Hageman succeeded Warren J. Woodward, by promotion, on 13th of January, 1876, when he was sworn as president judge for the remainder of the term, ending on 5th of January, 1880. He was elected in November, 1879, for a term of ten years.

ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW.—The office of attorney-at-law is not an elective one. It never was. But it has existed time out of mind. It began with the administration of justice. It is inseparable from it. The history of attorneys would be the history of the courts of judicature. They have always occupied a prominent place. Their prominence has resulted from energy well directed in behalf of the rights and property of mankind.
and also in behalf as well of the establishment as of the development of principles regulative of associations in every department of life.

A law was enacted in this State as early as 1710 in relation to this office. Then the justices were authorized to admit any attorney or attorneys to plead in any of the established courts during good behavior. No provision was made as to number or ability. In 1715, however, the authority of the justices was modified. They might admit "a competent number of persons, of honest disposition and learned in the Law, to practice as attorneys, who shall behave themselves justly and faithfully in their practice." And, in 1727, a provision was made requiring such persons before they were admitted to take the following oath: "Thou shalt behave thyself in the office of attorney within the court, according to the best of thy learning and ability, and with all good fidelity as well to the court as to the client; thou shalt use no falsehood, nor delay any person's cause for lucre or malice."

And these qualifications have continued to this day. Since the adoption of the State and national Constitutions they have qualified to support them. This last qualification is common to all statutory officers.

The following attorneys resided in the county of Berks and practiced in its several courts. The date after each name is the time of admission to practice:

Biographical Sketches of Judges and Attorneys at Law.

Judges.

Conrad Weiser was the most prominent historical character in the county of Berks previous to 1760. His great prominence arose from his intimate connection with the provincial government of Pennsylvania for thirty years. He was the principal judge of Berks County from 1752 to 1760, for which reason this sketch is presented at the head of the biographies of the judges.

He was born November 2, 1696, at Aftaelt, a small village in the County of Herrenberg, in Württemberg, Germany, and there he acquired a general education, which included the principles of the Christian religion according to the catechism of Martin Luther. Whilst in his fourteenth year he emigrated with his father and family (which included himself and seven other children) to New York, landing June 17, 1710. At that time several thousand Germans were sent to America by Queen Anne, who had furnished them with food for a time at London. Shortly after their arrival they were removed to Livingston Manor by the Governor of New York, to burn tar and cultivate hemp to defray the expenses incurred by Queen Anne in conveying them from Holland to England and from England to America. They labored till 1713 in this employment, under the direction of commissioners who were placed in authority over them; then, finding that they were existing under a form of bondage, they protested against the treatment, and this effected their release. Shortly afterward they became dispersed. About one hundred and fifty families of them, including the Weiser family, removed to Schoharie, forty miles west of Albany. Whilst spending the winter of 1713–14 at Schenectady, his father was frequently visited by an Indian chief of the Mohawk tribe, and during one of these visits the chief proposed to him to visit the Mohawk country and teach him the language of that tribe. His father agreed to the proposition, and he accordingly accompanied the Indian chief.

Conrad Weiser was in his eighteenth year when he went to live with the Indians. He was a strong young man, but all of his strength was necessary to endure the sufferings which he was compelled to undergo whilst living with them. He had scarcely clothing sufficient to cover his body during the winter of that trying year. Besides much suffering, he was frequently threatened with death by the Indians during a state of intoxication. In July, 1714, he returned to his father's home at Schoharie. In this time he acquired a considerable knowledge of the Mohawk language, and whilst at home he increased this knowledge by being called upon to act as interpreter between the German settlers of that vicinity and the Mohawk Indians. Several families of this tribe lived within a mile of his residence. His services were performed gratuitously. The settlers having been disturbed in their possessions, they left that section of the country; Conrad Weiser's father and a number of others migrated to Pennsylvania. They located in Tulpehocken in the spring of 1723, in the midst of the Indians; and there they also commenced the improvement of the land which they occupied without permission from the land commissioners. The Indians complained, but the settlers were not disturbed. Subsequently the Indians released their rights for a consideration from the provincial government, and about 1733 removed beyond the Blue Mountain.

Conrad Weiser was married to a young woman of Schoharie in 1720. He continued at that place till 1729, when, with his wife and five children (two sons—Philip and Frederick—and three daughters—Anna, Madlina and Maria), he removed to the Tulpehocken settlement, locating on a tract of land half a mile east of the present borough of Womelsdorf. Shortly after his arrival his ability and success as an Indian interpreter became known to the provincial government, and the Governor employed him in negotiations with the Indians. His first services in this capacity were performed in 1731; and from that time for nearly thirty years he was almost constantly engaged in this important work. He attended and assisted at numerous treaties, some of which were very important. In the published proceedings of these treaties in the colonial records and Pennsylvania Archives, his name appears prominently. He always distinguished himself—giving entire satisfaction to both parties. His integrity was particularly recognized and publicly complimented.

He was one of the most prominent men in the "French and Indian War." His numerous letters, which appear in the chapter on that subject in this history, indicate his zeal, courage and patriotism. He served in that war as a colonel, having received his commission as colonel on October 31, 1755, and as such officer commanded the Second Battalion of the Pennsylvania Regiment. His services were of great value to the government and to the people of this county.

The first proceedings for the erection of Berks County were instituted in 1738. In this behalf Mr. Weiser was very active. And he continued active till the determined requests of the citizens were granted eventually by the General Assembly in 1752. The town of Reading was laid out by the Penns in 1748. In the disposition of the town-lots, Mr. Weiser acted as one of the commissioners. He was prominently identified with the first movements in building up the town, and he manifested a strong interest in the development of the business interests of the place.

The Governor of the province, in 1741, appointed him as a justice of the peace. He continued to serve in this office for a number of years. When the county was erected, in 1752, he was appointed one of the first judges. He acted as president judge of the courts till his decease, in 1760. His appointment to this important position was natural, by reason of his prominence, influence, experience and ability. He lived at Reading mostly during the latter part of his life.

He died on his Heidelberg farm July 13, 1760, and his remains were buried in a private burying-ground on the place, where they have remained since. He left a widow and seven children: five sons,—Philip, Frederick, Peter, Samuel and Benjamin, and two daughters,—Maria, who was intermarried with Rev. Henry Melchior Muhlenberg, and Margaret, who was intermarried with — Finkler. He was possessed of a large estate, consisting of properties at Reading, and lands in Heidelberg township, and in the region of country beyond the Blue Mountain. In Heidelberg he owned about eight hundred and ninety acres, which included a tract of three hundred and forty-seven acres and the privileges of a “Court-Baron,” granted to him in 1743—the tract having originally contained fifty-one hundred and sixty-five acres as granted to John Page, in 1735, by patent, and then been erected into a manor, called the “Manor of Plumton.” At Reading, one of his properties was a business stand, and it has continued to be a prominent business place from that time till now, a period embracing over one hundred and thirty years. This has been known latterly as the “Old White Store.”

An extended and interesting biographical sketch of Conrad Weiser, including his numerous letters during the “French and Indian War,” his reports of journeys, etc., was prepared by one of his descendants, Rev. C. Z. Weiser, D.D., and published at Reading, by Daniel Miller, in 1876.

Jacob Rush, the first president judge of the Third Judicial District of which Berks County formed a part, was born in Byberry township, near Philadelphia, in the year 1746, and was the brother of the celebrated artist and physician, Benjamin Rush. He received an excellent preparatory education and then entered the College of New Jersey, at Princeton, from which institution he was graduated in 1765. Immediately after the State Constitution of 1790 was adopted, he was appointed to preside over the courts of the Third District, which included the county of Berks. He afterward became president judge of the First District, of which Philadelphia formed a part, and held that responsible position for many years, until the time of his death. In the controversy between Reed and Dickinson he was an able writer on the side of the latter. He published his “Charges on Moral and Religious Subjects” at Philadelphia in 1803. He was a patriot of the Revolution and in its darkest days stood firm to its principles and to his country. Judge Rush also published in 1774 “Resolves in Committee Chambers” and in 1819 a work on “Christian Baptism.” While president judge of the Third District he resided in Reading, on the west side of South Fifth Street, between Cherry and Franklin Streets. He died at Philadelphia, January 5, 1820.

John Spayd was born in Dauphin County in January, 1764. He acquired a classical education, read law and was admitted to the bar February 14, 1788, and began practicing at Reading, where he attained great prominence. He was appointed judge of the courts of Berks County in 1806 and served with distinguished ability until 1809. During the years 1795 and 1810 he was a member of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania and devoted the remainder of his life to the practice of law at Reading. He went to the city of Philadelphia for surgical relief from a disease with which he had long suffered, underwent an operation, but the result was beyond the control of human skill and he died there at two A.M., October 13, 1822, in the fifty-eighth year of his age. His remains were brought to Reading on the 15th and interred the following day in the Lutheran grave-yard. The judges of the court, members of the bar and the Borough Council each passed appropriate resolutions commendatory of his life and character as a lawyer, as a judge and as a public-spirited citizen, resolved to attend his funeral in a body and wear crape on the left arm for thirty days. His remains have since been transferred to Charles Evans’ Cemetery.

As an advocate his knowledge was various and extensive, his judgment sound and his counsel recognized as of a high order. By his brethren of the bar his merits as a sincere friend and as an honorable practitioner were highly appreciated, and he performed all his various duties as a lawyer, a judge and a citizen with recognized promptness and acknowledged ability. As a lawyer he disdained everything like artifice or technical advantage and looked to the merits of his case alone. He seemed ever to contend for justice rather than victory; hence his influence with the court and jury was deservedly great. In the prosecution of doubtful claims, where individuals had important trusts to fulfill, which they were anxious should be judiciously and faithfully managed, recourse was had with the utmost confidence to John Spayd, and his opinions were considered oracles upon which the most perfect reliance could be placed.

The Borough Council at the time of his death passed resolutions in commendation of his valuable services for many years as chief burgess. At a bar meeting presided over by Judge Robert Porter resolutions commendatory of his life and character were adopted. Members of the Philadelphia bar held a meeting in the District Court-room, presided over by Hon. Joseph B. McKean, and adopted resolutions relating to "John Spayd, Esq., a distinguished member of the profession from Reading, who died while on a visit to Philadelphia, and in testimony of our respect for his private virtues and professional attainments, we will attend as far as the limits of this city the removal of his remains for interment at Reading."

Judge Spayd was married to Catharine Hiester, eldest daughter of Governor Joseph Hiester. Their children were Elizabeth, married to Edward B. Hubley, once a member of Congress from Schuylkill County; John, a graduate of the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania; Catharine B., married to John B. Brooke, a prominent merchant of Reading and father of Dr. John B. Brooke; Joseph H., a member of the Berks County bar; George W., once chief burgess of Reading; Henry, who completed the medical course at the University of Pennsylvania and died one year after his graduation; Amelia, married to Dr. Diller Luther, of Reading.

At the time of his death Judge Spayd resided in Penn Square, Reading, next house west of the Farmer's Bank.

ROBERT PORTER was the third president judge of the several courts of Berks County. He was the eldest son of General Andrew Porter and was born at Philadelphia on January 10, 1768. His father then was conducting a mathematical and an English school. When he was only eight years old the Revolution had begun in earnest and his father had enlisted to serve the United Colonies in their great struggle for independence. Toward the close of the war his father was colonel of the Fourth Pennsylvania Regiment of Artillery, and it is said that Judge Porter, when only thirteen years of age, was enlisted in one of the companies under the command of his father. At the conclusion of the war he resumed his studies at Philadelphia, and, selecting the law as his profession, he was admitted to practice on May 15, 1789. After being engaged in a successful practice for twenty years, at Philadelphia, he, in 1810, was appointed by Governor Simon Snyder to the office of president judge of the Third Judicial District which comprised the counties of Berks, Northampton and Wayne. He occupied this honorable position for the period of twenty-two years, and then, upon resigning his commission, retired to private life. He resided at Reading, on the northwest corner of Fifth and Penn Streets, during his term of office. He died on June 23, 1842, at Brookville, Pa., aged seventy-four years. Judge Porter was a man of profound learning and superior legal attainments.

GARRICK MALLERY was a native of Massachusetts. After obtaining a good preliminary education, he entered Yale College and was graduated from that institution in the year 1809. He soon afterwards became principal of an academy at Wilksbarre, and while occupying that position engaged in the study of law, and was admitted to the bar at Wilksbarre about 1812. Being well adapted by nature to the legal profession, he added to his efficiency by diligent and well-directed study, and therefore soon acquired a practice which extended over a large portion of Northern Pennsylvania. In 1825 he was elected a member of the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania and during his legislative career was instrumental in securing the enactment of certain bills which led to the great improvement of the North Branch region.

In 1832 Governor Wolf appointed him president judge of the Third Judicial District, then composed of the counties of Berks, Northampton and Lehigh, in which position he soon won fame and distinction, and presided with ability and dignity. He resigned in 1836 and removed to Philadelphia, where he resumed the practice of the law. About the time of his resignation the members of the bar of Berks County met March 16, 1836, and passed resolutions of regret, and tendered him a bar dinner in Reading as a token of their high appreciation of his ability as a judge and character as a gentleman. He replied in the kindliest terms from Easton, Pa., but owing to a press of professional duties was obliged to decline the proffered honor. His experience in reference to titles to coal and unseated lands throughout the State of Pennsylvania rendered his services especially valuable to purchasers of that kind of property, and his practice thus became very extensive. During his residence in Philadelphia he was standing master in Chancery of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and was for many years solicitor and advisor of the Camden and Amboy, the Philadelphia and Trenton and other railroad companies.

Judge Mallery was thrice married; his last wife was a daughter of Dr. Otto, a prominent physician of Philadelphia. Hon. William Strong, lately retired from the Supreme Court of the United States, was married to his daughter.

John Banks, the fifth president judge of courts of Berks County, was born near Lewisburgh, Ji-uniata County, Pa., in the year 1793. His paternal grandfather emigrated from Scotland and lived to the age of nearly one hundred years. His father being a farmer, his youth was spent mostly in assisting him in the arduous duties of that occupation. The advantages of a liberal education, however, were not denied him. He entered upon the study of law with a well-disciplined mind, was admitted to the bar of his native county in 1819, and soon after removed to the western part of the State. He located in Mercer County and there rapidly attained eminence at the bar. Without any solicitation on his part, he was nominated and elected a representative in Congress, and twice re-elected, serving from 1831 to 1836. He won distinction in Congress by his treatment of contested election cases. His patience and fairness in the investigations and his clearness in applying the law to the facts, made his conclusions invariably acceptable. In the spring of 1836 he vacated his seat in Congress to accept the appointment of president judge of the Third Judicial District of the State, composed of the counties of Berks, Lehigh and Northampton, the office having been tendered him by Governor Ritner. Succeeding so accomplished a jurist as Garrick Mallery, he sustained himself in his new position under difficult circumstances, and proved by his administration of justice that he had an acquaintance with the law fully as much under control as his predecessor. He possessed a kind heart, was easy and graceful in his manners and clear in his opinions. His su-ior qualities soon won for him the full confidence of the people. No man was ever more obliging and condescending to his juniors than he, and no man ever lived in Reading whose companionship was more highly prized by so varied a circle of friends. Having spent eleven years as president dudge of the court, he resigned the position in 1847, and accepted the office of State treasurer of Pennsylvania and served one term. In 1841, while judge of the courts, he was nominated by the Whig party for the office of Governor of Pennsylvania, but was defeated by David R. Porter, the Democratic nominee. He was subse-sequently nominated and supported by the Whig

John Banks.

John Pringle Jones was born near Newtown, in Durham township, Bucks County, in 1812, and was an only child. His father died when he was young. His mother was a Pringle and a member of an English family of great respectability in Philadelphia. She moved to her native city after the death of her husband. The education of the son, J. Pringle Jones, was acquired at Captain Partridge's Military Academy, in Middletown, Conn., and at the University of Pennsylvania, where he studied two years and was then admitted to the senior class of the College of New Jersey, at Princeton, from which he was graduated with honor in 1831. After leaving college he studied law in the office of Charles Chauncey, Esq., and was admitted a member of the Philadelphia bar in 1834. Being a great lover of nature, he traveled to and wandered over the green hills of Berks County, and whilst in the county, in 1835, he determined to locate in Reading. He was at once received into the best society on account of his education, culture and social qualities. In 1839 he was appointed deputy attorney-general for Berks County and served in that office until 1847. During this time he was associated in the practice of law with Robert M. Barr, Esq., who was appointed, in 1845, reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court. At the expiration of the official term of Hon. John Banks as judge of the Third District, then composed of Berks, Lehigh and Northampton Counties, he was appointed by Governor Shunk to fill this honorable position. He took the oath of office March 15, 1847. By an act of the Legislature, passed in 1849, Berks County was erected into a separate judicial district, of which David F. Gordon was appointed president-judge, and Judge Jones continued to preside in Lehigh and Northampton Counties until 1851.

In 1849, Mr. Barr, the State reporter, died, and Judge Jones completed two of the “State Reports” which his former partner had left unfinished. These reports are known as “Jones’ Reports.” In 1851 he was elected president judge of the courts of Berks County for ten years. After the expiration of this term he devoted himself to literary pursuits and to the management of the Charles Evans Cemetery Company, of which he was elected president.

In 1857 Judge Maynard, of the Third Judicial District, then composed of Lehigh and Northampton Counties, died, and Judge Jones was appointed his successor for the unexpired term. This was the last official position he occupied. In 1871 he had an attack of paralysis. In October, 1872, he sailed for Europe, accompanied by his wife, and traveled through France, Italy, Germany and a part of Russia. He was taken sick and died in London, on Monday, March 16, 1874. His remains were brought to Reading and buried in Charles Evans Cemetery.

He was married first to Annie Hiest, daughter of Dr. Isaac Hiest, of Reading, in 1840. After her death he was married, in 1851, to Catharine E. Hiest, daughter of John S. Hiest. Nature favored Judge Jones with a fine physical appearance and excellent mental endowments. He had a decided taste for literature, and after he retired from the bench devoted much of his time to the gratification of this taste. He was a man of sterling integrity and great moral worth. A marked trait was his strong attachment to his friends, of whom he had a great many in the county of Berks and also throughout Eastern Pennsylvania.

David F. Gordon was born at Philadelphia on November 20, 1795. He received an excellent classical education at the University of Pennsylvania, and then studied law and was admitted to practice in 1816, and soon afterward gained an enviable reputation as a member of the bar. He remained in that city until 1824, when he removed to Reading and was admitted to practice in the several courts of Berks County. He continued in active practice here for eight years, and then purchased from George Getz the Berks and Schuylkill Journal, a weekly English newspaper published at Reading, which he was well qualified to publish by reason of his learning and literary taste. He published this paper very successfully, conducting its editorial department with ability, until 1888, then sold it and resumed his law practice. After practicing for eleven years he was appointed to the office of president judge of this judicial district by Governor W. F. Johnston. Berks County had just been erected into a separate judicial district, called, in the system, the Twenty-third.

He remained on the bench until December, 1851, retiring then by virtue of the amendment to the Constitution, under which the office of judge became elective, and Hon. J. Pringle Jones was chosen to fill this position for ten years. Whilst holding this office he was nominated by the Whig party of the State for the office of associate justice of the Supreme Court, but his party being then in the minority, he was defeated. He was recognized as an able judge and thoroughly conscientious in the performance of all his judicial duties. His course won for him the highest respect and confidence of his fellow-citizens. Upon retiring from the bench he resumed his legal practice at Reading. He died on December 27, 1859, aged sixty-four years.

As a man, he was highly esteemed for his many superior traits of character. He was buried in the Charles Evans Cemetery.

Warren J. Woodward, a president judge from 1861 to 1874. (For sketch, see biographies of State Officials).

Jeremiah Hagenman was born at Phoenixville, Chester County, Pa., on February 6, 1820. His parents were Jeremiah and Mary H. Hagenman. He obtained a preparatory education in the schools of his native town, and at the early age of sixteen years engaged in the profession of teaching. He continued to teach some time and then removed to Reading, where he entered the public schools and prosecuted higher branches of study till he was nineteen years old. He then began the study of law, under the direction of Peter Filbert, Esq., at Reading, teaching occasionally whilst pursuing his legal studies, and was admitted to the bar on April 7, 1842. In the following autumn he opened an office at Reading and soon entered upon an active practice, which he conducted very successfully for seventeen years, when he was elected additional law judge of Berks County for a period of ten years. In 1875, upon the elevation of Hon. Warren J. Woodward to the Supreme bench of the State, he was promoted to the office of president judge, and in 1879 he was re-elected for another term of ten years. He is now filling this honorable position. The attorneys have always appreciated him for his courtesy on the bench, and the younger attorneys have found him possessed of a kindly spirit and great indulgence,—two characteristics disposed to encourage them in the trial of their cases. During the past seventeen years numerous cases tried before him have been taken to the Supreme Court, but his adjudications have been generally sustained, comparatively few judgments having been reversed.

Judge Hagenman became interested in politics soon after his admission to the bar, and was prominently identified with the movements of the Democratic party from 1850 till 1869. He attended many State Conventions as a delegate from this district; and in 1868 he was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention which assembled at New York and nominated Hon. Horatio Seymour.
for President. In 1850 he was elected district attorney, under the act then passed creating the office, and, after serving three years, was re-elected for a second term. He was the first person chosen to this position and the only district attorney who filled it for six years. His administration of the duties of the office was highly satisfactory, and he was tendered a third term by the party leaders, but he declined the honor.

The public school affairs of Reading received the earnest attention of Judge Hagenman for nearly forty years. He first became a director about 1846, in the Southwest Ward, and served several years. In 1858 he was elected to represent the Southeast Ward (subsequently the Third, and then the Fourth) in the School Board, and afterward re-elected, term after term, till 1883, when he declined to serve any longer.

For twenty years he served as chairman of the High School committee. He advocated, with much success, the erection of more commodious and attractive school buildings; and he first suggested the practicability of heating the buildings by heaters in the cellars. The first successful experiment was made in the Elm Street building, under his supervision as chairman of a special committee. This was about 1865. Then the High School (academy) building, and next the Lerce building came to be heated in the same way. This process of heating the school-rooms is now common in all the public schools. In recognition of his valuable services the board named the "J. Hagenman School Building" after him, which is a superior brick structure, situated on Franklin, between Eighth and Ninth Streets, and was erected in 1875.

He served the county commissioners as solicitor for a number of years. About 1860 he was instrumental in having them to allow half of the court fines to be appropriated towards establishing a Law Library for the bench and bar, in the courthouse. David L. Wenrich, Sr., one of the commissioners, was particularly favorable to the plan, on account of the great convenience to the judges and the attorneys in the trial of cases, and he had the board of commissioners to make an order to pay half of the fines for five years for that purpose. John S. Richards, Esq., an attorney at the bar, suggested the idea. Subsequently legislation was obtained allowing this to be done, and a Law Library association was incorporated. Law-books multiplied in number year after year, till now the association possesses a valuable and extensive library.

In 1850 Judge Hagenman was married to Louisa A. Boyer, a daughter of George Boyer, who was a descendant of one of the first families in the county, and who was a prominent member of Trinity Lutheran congregation, having taken an active part in the erection of its church building in 1791, which is still in a good state of preservation. Judge Hagenman is now serving as trustee of Trinity Church, of which he is a consistent member. They have one son—George F. Hagenman, Esq., a practicing attorney at the Reading bar.

Henry Van Reed was born August 31, 1821, in the northern corner of Cumru (now Spring) township, this county, on the Cacoosing Creek, near its outlet into the Tulpehocken. His grandfather, John Van Reed, settled there about the time of the Revolution, and his father was born there in 1786. He was educated at Reading, Lititz, Lafayette College and Dickinson College, graduating from the latter institution in 1843. Upon returning home he selected the law as his profession and pursued a regular course of legal study in the office of David F. Gordon, Esq., a distinguished lawyer at Reading, and afterwards president judge of this judicial district. On April 5, 1844, he was admitted to the bar. He at once opened an office at Reading, and soon established a large and lucrative practice, which he continued for twenty years.

In 1851 he made a trip to California, visiting his brothers, James and Lewis, who had gone thither some years previously. He was engaged in the banking business at San Francisco, with his brother James, for some months, but preferring a residence in the eastern section of the country, he returned home in the same year.

In April, 1869, the State Legislature authorized the qualified electors of Berks County to elect at the next succeeding general election an additional law judge, whose powers and term of office were to be similar to those of the president judge. At that time the Governor, John W. Geary, was a Republican in politics, and, having been authorized to appoint a suitable person to act as such judge.
till one should be elected and commissioned, he, upon the flattering recommendation of a number of prominent Republicans of the county, appointed Mr. Van Reed to this position on July 13, 1869. This was a high compliment to Mr. Van Reed. The appointment was given to him without any solicitation on his part, he believing, as Judge Woodward had previously expressed himself, that a judge, or a man about to become a judge, should not participate in the matter of political appointments and elections. He was then a prominent attorney in active practice; and, having been an earnest Republican—though not a politician—whose views on political subjects were known and appreciated, public attention was naturally directed towards him as the person qualified to fill the position. He occupied his seat on the Bench till December 6, 1869, when his successor duly elected was qualified. Subsequently, from January 12, 1875, till January 2, 1876, he filled the same office by appointment from Governor John F. Hartranft, to supply a vacancy caused by the promotion of the then incumbent to the office of president judge. He distinguished himself upon both occasions by his ability and by the promptness and impartiality with which he discharged the duties of this honorable position. His course was highly satisfactory, and his continuation on the bench was only interrupted by the great predominance of Democratic sentiment in the county. Upon being retired from the bench he gradually discontinued the practice of the legal profession.

Judge Van Reed represented this district as one of the delegates to the Constitutional Convention of the State of Pennsylvania, which was held in 1872 and 1873—he having been selected as the Republican delegate.

During the progress of the Civil War he was an ardent supporter of the national administration in every way. His strong, patriotic feelings impelled him to express himself in the most positive manner in favor of prosecuting the war. When the State of Pennsylvania was threatened with an invasion by the rebels, in September, 1862, he enlisted, with a large number of the most prominent men of Reading, as a private in Company G, of the Second Regiment of the State Volunteer Militia, commanded by Captain F. S. Bickley. This company was marched to and beyond the State line and engaged in performing military service for eleven days, when it was discharged. And during the terrible excitement throughout the State, owing to the battle of Gettysburg, in the beginning of July, 1863, he enlisted again in Company C, Forty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Militia, and acted as a sergeant. This regiment was composed entirely of Berks County companies, and it was under the command of Col. Charles H. Hunter, continuing in service from July 6 till August 12, 1863.

Judge Van Reed died June 30, 1885, after an illness of several years. The members of the Berks County bar held a meeting and took appropriate action upon his death. Besides highly eulogistic addresses by them upon that occasion, relating to his life and character, they passed a resolution wherein they regarded him "as one of the best types of manhood this county has developed." "His sentiments were just and his impulses noble. As a lawyer and judge he was able, conscientious and painstaking. As a man he despised sham and hypocrisy; and he took for his own example the Christian virtues. He had the rare gift of courage equal to his convictions; and, therefore, in public as well as in private life he acted as he believed that an honest, upright man should act, without regard to affiliations or personal consequences. He was a fortunate man in that he acquired such a position in the public attention that high places sought him though he was in a minority party."

He was married to Catharine Gernant, a daughter of George Gernant. She died January 13, 1883. He left two surviving children—George Van Reed and Anna Van Reed.

Augustus S. Sassaman was born in Douglass township, Berks County, February 7, 1834. His paternal ancestor, Augustus Sassaman, a native of Witgenstein, Germany, married a Miss Gernant, emigrated to America and settled in the Maiden-creek district of this county immediately after the Revolution. Judge Sassaman received a preparatory educational training in the district schools, and at a classical seminary in Boyertown. In 1853 he was admitted to the junior class in Dickinson College, at Carlisle, Pa., was graduated from that institution with the class of 1855 and immediately thereafter entered the profession of teaching at New Berlin, Union County, in an institution which, in 1856, was merged into the Union Seminary. He filled its chair of ancient languages for three years, the chair of natural sciences for four years, and for a time he gave instruction in the German language. While teaching he began the study of the law under the direction of Hon. A. H. Dill and Isaac Slenker. Resigning his position in the Union Seminary in 1862, he spent a year in the office of Isaac Slenker, Esq., and was admitted to the bar at Lewisburgh, Pa., in December, 1863. At the instance of some of the friends of his wife, who was a Miss De Turk, from Berks County, and a descendant of Huguenot ancestry, he returned to his native county and soon acquired a large and lucrative practice. He continued in the active duties of his profession until 1875, when he was elected additional law judge of the courts of Berks County and served one full term of ten years, from January 2, 1876, to January 4, 1886. Upon his retirement from the bench, Judge Sassaman returned to the practice of the law, in which he is now actively engaged.

James Nevin Ermentrout, the youngest son of William and Justina (Silvis) Ermentrout, was born at Reading, October 25, 1846. After a preparatory education in the common schools he was admitted into the High School when eleven years old, at the head of his class. He spent four years in this local institution and graduated June, 1862. Having been first in his class at the time of his graduation, he delivered the valedictory,—the highest honor at the commencement exercises. After teaching a country school in Ruscomb-manor township during the following winter (1862–63), he entered the Tuscarora Academy, in Juniata County, and there continued his studies in the higher branches of education for a year, excepting the winter of 1863–64, when he again taught a school in Alsace township. Then he was appointed professor of languages in that institution, and filled this important position very acceptably for a year. In 1865 he resigned this position and returned to Reading. During that year he assisted in organizing the parochial school in the St. John's German Lutheran Church, and conducted it as principal with great satisfaction to the officers and members of that congregation. His brother, Professor John S. Ermentrout, was then filling the office of superintendent of common schools of the county, and owing to the many schools over an extended territory and the great labor in performing the duties of this position, he was appointed deputy superintendent. His qualifications for the work of assisting in perfecting the school system in the county were of a high order. He continued in this educational work for two years, from 1866 to 1868, and distinguished himself by his devotion to it. The increasing number of schools, scholars and teachers indicated the zeal with which he pursued this undertaking, and the success of his efforts.

Whilst deputy superintendent, he selected the law as his profession, and conducted a course of reading and study, under the preceptorship of his brother, Daniel Ermentrout, Esq., a practicing attorney at Reading and now representative in Congress from this district, till November 27, 1867, when he was admitted to the bar. In 1868, upon discontinuing his labors as deputy superintendent in the educational work of the county, he directed his attention entirely to the legal profession, and, by reason of his extensive acquaintance throughout the county which he had made during his visits in the several school districts, he soon became actively engaged in practice. In 1869 he formed a law partnership with his brother, under the firm name of Daniel & James N. Ermentrout. Their law business increased rapidly and embraced a general practice, including important litigation and the settlement of numerous valuable estates. In 1874, Daniel Ermentrout, Esq., was elected State Senator from this district, and re-elected for three successive terms till 1880; and then he was chosen a member of Congress, which office he has held from 1881 till now—he being the present incumbent. During this period the extensive practice of the firm was conducted very successfully and almost entirely by the junior member, and this constant engagement in legal business gave him a large and valuable experience. His strict integrity won for him the confidence of all who came to know him or transact business with him; and his uniform courtesy to all the members of the bar was a prominent characteristic of his daily life for which he was highly regarded by them.

When the term of the additional law judge of the county was about to expire, the members of the bar naturally directed their attention towards Mr. Ermentrout as an attorney worthy of their consideration in connection with this office. In April, 1885, a letter was addressed to him, subscribed by eighty attorneys, without regard to political party, comprising almost the entire number at the bar, requesting him to permit the presentation of his name to the people and the suggestion of himself as a proper person to fill this office. He consented, because he felt it a duty incumbent upon him to do so, inasmuch as the request came with such unusual unanimity and in such a non-partisan form. This proceeding on the part of the attorneys created a strong public sentiment in his behalf, and when the Democratic Convention assembled at Reading, on August 31st following, he was nominated by acclamation, and afterward elected at the ensuing county election. He was sworn into office for ten years on January 4, 1886. His call to the bench by the almost unanimous voice of the Berks County bar is the highest possible tribute to his legal learning and personal integrity.

Hiram H. Schwartz is of German extraction. His grandfather, Isaac Schwartz, was married to Miss Margaret Rathmacher; and he resided in Upper Macungie township, Lehigh County, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits. Their children were Jacob, John, Isaac, Elizabeth, Harriet, Kate, Mary and Esther. John was born on the 13th of March, 1804, at Schwartz's Spring, in Upper Macungie, and he was married to Hannah Keck, daughter of Conrad and Catherine Moyer Keck, of the same township. Their issue was six children,—Hiram H., John W., Alfred P. (deceased), Eli G., Catherine (married to E. L. Breinig) and Katurah (married to — Fulmer).

Hiram H. Schwartz was born on a farm in Maxatawny township, now owned by Jacob Kutz, and in April, 1834, removed to a farm in North Whitehall township, Lehigh County, where his youthful days were spent. He first became a pupil of the subscription schools of the neighborhood, subsequently of the free school and finally, at the age of sixteen, continued his studies under the direction of Rev. Dr. Van Derveer, remaining for several years at the boarding-school of the latter. He then entered Franklin and Marshall College, from which institution he was graduated in June, 1855. Subsequently he engaged in teaching, pursuing at the same time a course of study in the law. He was elected school superintendent of Lehigh County in 1857, which office he filled very acceptably for three years. On the 12th of May, 1858, he was admitted to the bar, having pursued his studies under Hon. Samuel A. Bridges, of Allentown. In 1860 Judge Schwartz began the practice of his profession at Kutztown, Berks County. In the fall of 1869 he was elected as a Democrat to the State Legislature, and re-elected in 1870–71, meanwhile continuing in active practice. On the 29th of June, 1883, he was appointed judge of the Orphans' Court of Berks County, an office created under the act of 1883 expressly for this county, and at the succeeding election he was elected for this position for the term of ten years. He is connected with the Masonic fraternity as a member of Huguenot Lodge, No. 377, of Kutztown. He has been for many years an earnest friend of the cause of education, being now a trustee of the Kutztown State Normal School. He is a member of the Reformed Church at Kutztown.

ASSOCIATE JUDGES.

James Diezemer was an educated physician and one of the prominent citizens of Reading at the time of the erection of Berks County. He was an Englishman and the first physician of the town who conversed in the English language. As early as 1765 he served as one of the wardens of Christ's Episcopal Church, and, in 1815, he deeded the lot upon which Christ Cathedral stands to Marks John Biddle, James May and George Douglass. He filled the office of justice of the peace under the provincial government; and under the provisions of the State Constitution of 1776 he served for several years as one of the judges of the County Courts, acting as president judge for a time. When the Constitution of 1790 was adopted, he received the appointment as one of the four associate judges of Berks County, and served continuously from 1791 to 1819. From the length of time that he filled these responsible official positions, it is evident that he was a man of ability and integrity, and tradition gives him the credit of having been able to administer the duties of his office with the precision and accuracy of a judge learned in the law. Altogether he served in this capacity for about thirty years, much longer than any other official on the bench in the history of the county. After a long and useful life as a judge, physician and public-spirited citizen of the town, he died June 21, 1821, in the eighty-seventh year of his age. His remains were interred beside those of his wife and still lie within the inclosure of Christ Church, Reading, of which, for more than sixty-five years, he was a leading member.

George Ege was born March 9, 1748, and died December 14, 1829, aged eighty one years and nine months. During his long and active business career he was extensively known as the largest land-owner of his time in Berks County, and prominently identified with the iron interests of the county for a period of half a century. In 1774 he purchased an interest in Charming Forge for eight hundred and thirty-eight pounds; nine months later bought the remaining interest for one thousand six hundred and sixty-three pounds, and became its sole owner and manager. In 1804 he built and operated Schuylkill County Forge, near Port Clinton, then in Berks, now in Schuylkill County. At that time he was possessed of the following landed estates: Charming Forge, with four thousand acres; Reading Furnace, with six thousand acres; Schuylkill Forge, with six thousand acres; and four large farms in Tulpehocken and Heidelberg townships, embracing one thousand acres. The names of these farms were "Spring," "Sheaff," "Leiss" and "Richards." In 1824 the assessed value of his personal and real estate was three hundred and eighty thousand dollars. During the Revolutionary War he was an ardent patriot, and in 1783 was a member of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania. In 1791 he was appointed one of the first associate judges of Berks County under the Constitution of 1790, and served continuously with marked ability until 1818, a period of twenty-eight years, when he resigned the position to devote himself exclusively to his extensive business interests. He died at his home at Charming Forge, in Marion township, this county, and his remains were interred in the cemetery at Womelsdorf.

Judge Ege was married to Elizabeth Oberfeldt, of Amboty, N. J., by whom he had three children, —George, Rebecca and Michael. There are no descendants of George now living; Rebecca was married to Joseph Old and died without issue; Michael was married to Maria Margareetta Shulze, daughter of Rev. Shulze, pastor of Tulpehocken Church. One of the grandchildren of Michael and Margarettta Ege, Harriet Ege, widow of the late John Ermentrout, resides at Reading, in the eighty-fifth year of her age. The great-grandchildren of Judge Ege and descendants of Michael Ege now living are Charles M. Ege and William Ege, of Dakota, Richard Brown Ege, of Sioux City, Iowa, and Mrs. David McCulloch, of Wisconsin.

Nicholas Lotz was born February 20, 1740, and emigrated to Pennsylvania when a young man. He first settled in the western section of the county, and there married a young woman by the name of Meyer. Some time previous to the Revolution he located at Reading and became the owner of the two mills at the mouth of the Wyoming Creek, which he conducted very successfully. When the struggle for independence began, he was prominently identified with the patriotic movement at Reading. He served as one of the ten delegates from Berks County to the Provincial Conference, which assembled at Philadelphia in June, 1776, and upon his return home he took an active part in the enlistment of men. He was commissioned a lieutenant-colonel and participated in the movement of the "Flying Camp" from Philadelphia to New York, where he was engaged in the battle of Long Island and taken prisoner. He was admitted to parole within certain bounds on April 16, 1777, and exchanged on September 10, 1779. In 1780 he was appointed commissioner of forage, and whilst serving this appointment he purchased a large amount of supplies for the army, consisting of flour, oats, cattle, sheep, etc.

Colonel Lotz represented Berks County in the General Assembly from 1784 to 1786, and again from 1790 to 1794; and he filled the appointment of associate-judge of the county from 1795 to 1806, having succeeded Colonel Joseph Hieste in that office. He died November 28, 1807, and left to survive him eight children: seven sons—Philip, Nicholas, Jacob, John, Henry, Michael and William—and a daughter, Ross, married to John Yeager. His remains were buried in the graveyard of the First Reformed Church at Reading and from thence removed to the Charles Evans' Cemetery.

Benjamin Morris, a brother of Cadwalader Morris, became interested in the iron business at Birdsboro' in 1790, and then moved to that town. In 1797 he was a resident of Reading. In the next year, 1798, he received the appointment of associate judge of Berks County and occupied that position till 1809.

Charles Shoemaker was born at Germans-town in 1757, and was about eight years of age when his father settled in Windsor township, Berks County. He was an associate judge of the county from 1820 to 1822, dying whilst filling this position, November, 1822. He was a highly-esteemed citizen. His opinion in various matters was frequently consulted by the people residing in his section of the county.

William Witman was born February, 1772, at Reading, on the east side of North Fifth Street, near Walnut, where he resided all his life. His vocation was surveyor and conveyancer, which he pursued at Reading for many years. He served as an associate judge of Berks County from 1823 to 1828, dying whilst occupying this position, June 16, 1828. He was married to Mary Green, a Quakeress (born in 1770, died in 1835), with whom he had eight children,—Charles, Alexander

1 Col. Lotz was a tall, finely proportioned man; measured about six feet three inches, and weighed about three hundred pounds.

Hamilton, Esther (who was married to Dr. John B. Otto), Sarah, Maria, Collins, Catharine and Matilda.

Jacob Schneider was born in Exeter township, and when a young man came to Reading, learned the trade of printer and was one of the publishers who founded the Reading Adler in 1796, of which he remained part owner until 1802. He was a member of the Legislature in 1809 and was register and recorder of Berks County from 1809 to 1817. He was appointed associate judge in 1804 and served until 1829, shortly after which he died.

Matthias S. Richards was born February 7, 1787, in Colebrookdale township. He first entered upon a business career as a merchant. From 1812 to 1845 he was a successful surveyor and scrivener; was deputy surveyor of Berks County from 1823 to 1834; appointed justice of the peace in 1827; and associate judge of the courts of Berks County in 1829, serving until 1846. He was a member of the Reading Water Company for several years after his election in 1820. In 1823 he served as clerk of the Orphan's Court. He was one of the commissioners to organize the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Co., and one of its board of managers for many years. For upwards of twenty-five years he was librarian, secretary or treasurer of the Reading Library. He acted frequently as a commissioner in proceedings to erect new townships in the county. Judge Richards filled a very prominent and useful position in the history of the county during the greater part of his life. He died at Reading in 1862, aged seventy-five years.

William Darling was a native of the State of Maine, born in Bucksport, November 10, 1797. When a young man, he came to Berks County and became prominently identified with the manufacture of iron at Joanna Furnace, which at one time he owned and managed exclusively. In 1830 he was appointed associate judge of Berks County and served with ability in that office till 1838. He was connected with various local enterprises and for a time had a large interest in the Reading Foundry. In all his business relations he was recognized as a man of tact and ability. He was commissioner of the United States to the First World's Fair, which was held at London, in 1851, and was vice-president of the American Sunday-School Union from the time of organization to his death, September 20, 1871. In January, 1820, Judge Darling was married to Margaretta Vaughan, daughter of John Smith, proprietor of Joanna Furnace. The names of the children still living are Mrs. Mary S. Wilcox, Philadelphia; Henry Darling, D.D., now president of Hamilton College, New York; Mrs. William A. Drown, of Fern Hill, Abington, Pa.; Miss Margaretta Vaughan Darling, of the same place; Edward P. Darling, Esq., of Wilkesbarre; and J. Vaughan Darling, Esq., also of Wilkesbarre.

John Stauffer, eldest son of Jacob Stauffer and Susanna, his wife, late of Colebrookdale township, Berks County, was born on the 4th day of July, A.D. 1792. On the 1st day of December, 1816, he was married to Elizabeth Keely, eldest daughter of Henry and Catharine Keely, of Douglass township, Berks County, and shortly thereafter moved to Boyertown, in said county, where he followed farming and conveyancing. They had ten children, to wit: Mary Ann, William, Frederick, Esther, John, Franklin, Elizabeth, Amanda, Abner K. and Minerva. The oldest and youngest died in infancy. Franklin died in 1880, his wife surviving him only four days, and leaving four children. All the rest of the children are still living. In 1829 the subject of this sketch was elected to the State Legislature from the Berks district and held said position for three successive terms. In 1843 he was chosen one of the associate judges of Berks County and filled that office for eight years, when his declining health compelled him to withdraw from further participation in public or political affairs. In 1850 he founded Mount Pleasant Seminary at Boyertown, an institution which he intended should have for its object a higher education for the children of the neighborhood of both sexes than could be obtained through the public schools. He took a great interest in the education of the young and had the proud satisfaction of seeing his institution in a flourishing condition before his death. He died on the 28th day of November, 1854. His wife died about three years later. Both are buried in Fairview Cemetery, at Boyertown.
William High was born January 14, 1786, and died March 29, 1851. At the time of his death his commission as an associate judge had just expired, having served five years. He was elected county commissioner and served from 1816 to 1819. He was a member of the State Legislature from Berks County for the year 1832; and he was one of the five delegates from Berks County to the Constitutional Convention of Pennsylvania in 1838. He was prominently connected with the old militia system and held the office of brigadier-general by election for fifteen years. He was elected captain of the Reading Cavalry Company in 1816, having become a member of the company in 1809.

“He was a man remarkable for the possession of honesty and courage in the highest degree. What he knew to be right he dared to do. These qualities he showed forth from the bench with the brightest lustre.”

Samuel Bell was a native of Reading, born in the year 1797. During the early part of his life he was engaged in the mercantile business at the corner of Third and Penn Streets, and subsequently was extensively engaged in the coal trade of Schuylkill County. He took an active interest in the welfare of Reading and contributed liberally toward the establishment of various industrial enterprises. He served as associate judge of the courts of Berks County by appointment during the years 1850–51 and held other positions of trust at different times. He moved to Philadelphia in the spring of 1861 and died in that city September 15, 1863, aged sixty-six years. He was esteemed as a kind-hearted and generous man, and was possessed of an exemplary character.

Daniel Young was a native of Montgomery County, born in 1793 in Upper Salford township. From there his parents moved to Lehigh County, and thence to Berks. After his education at Pottstown he engaged in the iron business, first with his father and then with General Daniel Udree as manager of the Rockland Forges, in this county, holding this position for twenty years. He next managed the iron interest at the Windsor Furnace for Jones, Keim & Co. until 1843. In 1842 he was elected prothonotary of Berks County and served one term. In 1851 he was elected an associate judge and served very creditably one full term of five years. In 1857 he was appointed one of the prison inspectors and continued in that board until 1866, and was its president from 1860. He published a little mathematical work called the “Ready Calculator,” which was much used in calculating lumber by owners of saw-mills, for which purpose it was intended. During the Civil War he was an ardent friend of the Union. He was a member of the Reformed Church and officiated for many years as organist. He was married, in 1815, to Miss Lessig, who died in 1852. His mother died at the advanced age of ninety-six years, and he died July 27, 1873, at the advanced age of eighty-one years. He was a man of excellent moral character and highly esteemed by all who knew him.

William Heidenreich was born in Catawissa, Columbia County, September 4, 1800; he was apprenticed to learn the trade of a cabinet-maker; lived for a time in Northumberland County and thence moved to Kutztown, Berks County, where he engaged in the mercantile business with David B. Kutz for many years, until 1857. In October, 1851, he and Hon. Daniel Young were elected the first associate judges of the courts of Berks County under the amendment to the State Constitution ratified in 1850, making that office elective. He served one full term of five years. He officiated as treasurer of Reading from 1863 to 1871. Judge Heidenreich was married, July 2, 1820, to Louisa daughter of Dewalt and Elizabeth Bieber, of Kutztown. He died February 9, 1877, leaving no children. His widow resides at Reading. He was a tall and handsome man of commanding appearance and recognized for his high moral principles.

David Schall was born in Oley (now Pike) township May 25, 1801, and was the son of Hon. George Schall, who represented Berks County in the Senate of Pennsylvania 1825 to 1828. He attended the district schools and an educational institution in Philadelphia. He was largely engaged in the iron interests and managed the Dale Iron-Works from 1825 to 1868. In 1825 he was instrumental in establishing Dale post-office and served as postmaster from that date until 1857. In May, 1830, he was appointed by Governor Wolf major of the Second Independent Battalion of Berks County militia. He was elected associate judge of the courts of Berks County in 1856, re-elected in 1861 and served two full terms with great acceptance to the people. Judge Schall was married to Catharine Endy. Their children are George Schall, now warden of Montgomery County Prison; Amelia, married to Colonel William Trexler; John W. Schall, recorder of deeds of Montgomery County for eight years and Colonel of the Eighty-seventh Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers during the war; and married to Mary Hoover; William A. Schall, captain of Company H, Sixty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and married to Mary B. High; D. Horace Schall, a justice of the peace in Washington township and lieutenant Company H, Forty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; married to Mary Fogel; Alfred A. Schall, married to Emma Mohr; Hannah V., Emeline K., and Mary L. Schall. He died January 22, 1877, aged nearly seventy-six years. He was a man of enterprise and public spirit and exerted a high and wide social and political influence in the county.

George D. Stitzel.—The ancestor of the Stitzel family in Berks County was John Stitzel, who was born at Stuttgart, in Württemburg, Germany, and as a young man, emigrated to this country, landing September 14, 1753, at Philadelphia. His passage was made on a sailing- vessel, "Edenberg," from Rotterdam, James Russel, captain. From Philadelphia he proceeded immediately to Oley township, in Berks County, where he was hired out to service for several years to pay the cost of his passage over the sea. Upon obtaining his freedom from this service he was married to a young woman, whose family name was Ludwig and who was a farmer’s daughter, residing near by in the same township. By industry and economy in the pursuit of farming he subsequently became the owner of a small farm situated in the upper section of the township, near the "Oley Furnace." He died on this farm, and left to survive him five sons and a daughter, namely: Jacob, Adam, Ludwig, George and John, and Cevilla, who some years afterwards died unmarried.

George Stitzel, the fourth of the sons named, was born on the homestead in Oley township. When a young man he was regularly apprenticed to the trade of a blacksmith, his brothers having likewise been apprenticed to trades. This was done in pursuance of a custom that then prevailed, notwithstanding the common vocation of farming—for all young men were expected to learn a mechanical trade of some kind. He was married to Sarah Hoch (High), of Oley, and in 1788 they together settled in Richmond township, where he purchased and carried on successfully for a number of years a farm of one hundred and ninety acres. In that early period, about the year 1800, grain was sold at low prices and had to be transported to Philadelphia in wagons to find a market. His wife having died shortly after settling in Richmond township, he married a second wife, named Elizabeth Hoch (High), a distant relative of his first wife, the daughter of Rudolph Hoch, a farmer of the same township. He left four children,—John, Henry, Magdalena (married to Gideon High) and George.

Henry Stitzel, the second of the sons last named, was born in Richmond township, on the homestead, in 1787. He was married to Catharine Deisher, daughter of Abraham Deisher, who was a farmer in Malden-creek township, and whose father was one of the earliest settlers in that section of the county. Shortly after his marriage he moved to Washington County, Md., near Hagerstown, where he remained a number of years engaged extensively in farming operations. Whilst there he owned a number of slaves, according to a custom of all farmers in that State; but being conscientiously opposed to slavery, he eventually exchanged his farm and slaves for a large farm in Franklin County, Pa., whither he then removed. He carried on the latter plantation successfully for some time, but being persuaded to return to Berks County, he sold the premises and took possession of the homestead. Here he carried on farming till his death, in 1833. Upon his return he interested himself in the cause of education. He established a school upon his farm, and induced a teacher named John P. Daniels, a resident of the Trappe, to come to Berks County and carry on teaching. This was the first English teacher in Richmond township. English teaching was continued till 1833. The term was through the winter. His wife died in Maryland in 1820. He afterward married Esther Hill, a widow and a sister of his first wife. At his death, in 1833, he left six children,—Abaline, married to George W. Wily; Tysher; Hannah M., married to David Neff; Mary A., married to Dr. James M. Mathews; George D. and John D.

George Deisher Stitzel, the second son of Henry Stitzel, and the subject of this biographical sketch, was born in Washington County, Md., on March 5, 1822. When his father returned to Berks County he was yet a boy. He attended the English school taught by teacher Daniels, till it was discontinued, in 1833; and afterward, for several years, during the winter season, was a pupil in the Friends' school, in Maiden-creek township, an institution which was recognized for its excellence under the direction of the Friends. Upon leaving school he directed his attention to farming. Before attaining his majority he became interested in the militia system, which was then in its most active state, and in 1842 he was elected and commissioned as captain of the "Monroe Troop." He served this position for a full term of seven years, not missing a single day in the performance of his duties at the frequent military exercises of the company. These were conducted at different places in the upper eastern section of the county and also in Lehigh County, selected by a vote of the company.

In 1845, in his twenty-third year, he was elected justice of the peace of Richmond township, and after serving the term of five years he was re-elected for a second term; then residing in Maiden-creek township, to which he had then removed. In connection with this local office he carried on surveying and conveyancing. In 1856, a year after his second term as a justice of peace had expired, he was nominated associate judge of the county upon the Democratic ticket and elected for the term of five years and re-elected in 1861 for a second term. During the latter term the Civil War broke out. In the excitement and commotion that ensued he was instrumental, with other prominent officials and influential citizens, in creating a proper spirit in the Democratic County (which was opposed to the Republican administration), towards encouraging the prosecution of the war for the Union. The influence of such men in the time of a crisis in our affairs such as the war from 1861 to 1865 is most powerful.

Judge Stitzel moved to Reading in 1858 to accommodate the wishes of the bar and the requirements of his office, his associate on the bench, Hon. David Schall, being a resident of Washington township, at Dale Forge, in the iron business. Whilst residing in Maiden-creek township he interested himself in the construction of the East Pennsylvania Railroad. He was one of the projectors of this road, and a charter member who proceeded to Harrisburg and obtained its charter; and upon the organization of the company he was selected as one of the first board of directors, a position which he has held ever since, a period covering nearly thirty years. In 1869 this railroad was leased to the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company. He then formed a business connection with the latter company, which has been continued till date, acting as its real estate agent and supervising particularly all its farm properties. In this position he has been very successful in the adjustment of land damages, a position requiring the exercise of rare judgment and thorough observation of men and things.

In 1870 he united with several prominent business men of Reading in forming a local mutual fire insurance company, which was then successfully organized and chartered under the name of the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Reading, Pa. He was elected the first president, and he has been re-elected annually to this position. No assessment has been made as yet during the sixteen years of its existence, notwithstanding many buildings were burned on which insurance was carried in this company, and the losses were satisfied. This is evidence of most admirable management. He is now (1886), a director of the First National Bank of Reading.

In 1866, Judge Stitzel became a member of the Reading Relief Society, and from that time till now, a period covering twenty years, he has been actively interested in its management, whereby the poor people of this community have been afforded much relief annually during the winter season. He acted for a time as secretary of the society, and in 1870 he succeeded Lewis Briner in the presidency, which office he has held annually. During this time, in 1874, the society erected a fine two-story brick building in which to hold its meetings and carry on its noble work of charity. Its erection is attributable principally to his encouragement and energy. He is one of the three members of the local Board of Public Charities, appointed to investigate and report upon the condition of our prison and poor-house. In 1874 he was elected as a trustee of the Charles Evans Cemetery Company, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the Hon. J. Pringle Jones, since which time he has taken an active part in its management.

Having been born and reared on a farm, and being practically interested in farming operations, first as the owner of three large and flourishing farms in this county (including the Stitzel homestead, in Richmond township), and as the superintendent of all the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company farms, it was natural for him to become thoroughly interested in a society for the successful consideration and direction of farming operations. The Berks County Agricultural Society has received his encouragement for many years. At the last annual meeting he was elected president of the society for the year 1886; and he has been prominently connected with the Fruitgrowers' Association of Pennsylvania since 1873, having served as president during the last five years, till 1886, when he declined re-election.

The various positions filled by Judge Stitzel indicate a man of superior ability and of thorough integrity, and the people have not been slow in recognizing and appreciating these qualities. He has not only filled public positions, but also numerous private positions of trust and responsibility, having acted as executor, administrator and trustee in the settlement of nearly a hundred estates, which involved the distribution of not less than two millions of dollars. His recognized ability and integrity in this respect was so highly appreciated by the Hon. Warren J. Woodward that he was appointed executor of his large estate, comprising property of various kinds, with unlimited discretionary power for its adjustment in effecting distribution, as in the last will directed. He was married to Amanda, daughter of George Weidenhamer, Maiden Creek township, by whom he had two daughters, both of whom are deceased. Charles Kessler was born at Reading in the year 1805, and died of apoplexy December 26, 1871. Few men were better known to the citizens of Berks County than he. When a youth he entered the office of the Reading Adler, when that paper was published by his father, Charles, which, by patient labor and research, he accumulated a valuable collection of insects. He also took a great interest in agriculture, was one of the originators of the Berks County Agricultural and Horticultural Society and for many years the president of it. He was a successful fruit-grower, and many choice varieties of apples, peaches, pears and grapes were introduced into this county through his personal efforts. He was a leader in the Democratic party for many years, and a man of undoubted ability and integrity.

Kessler, and his uncle, Hon. John Ritter. Soon after attaining his majority he was promoted to the position of translator and associate editor of the paper. Much of the influence and popularity afterwards obtained by that journal was due to his untiring energy. He became part owner of the Adler in 1852, sole proprietor a few years later and continued so until 1864. In 1886 he was elected associate judge of the courts of Berks County, served in that office until 1871, his term of service expiring only a few weeks before his death. Judge Kessler spent much of his leisure time in the study of the sciences, and was especially devoted to the study of entomology, in

DAVID KUTZ.

David Kutz was born in 1798, in Maxatawny township, Berks County. He was brought up in agricultural pursuits and resided all his life at the family homestead, adjoining Kutztown (which place was named after his ancestors), one of the best cultivated and most productive farms in the county. He was a true type of the Pennsylvania German character. In him was combined in an eminent degree all the qualities of industry, frugality, sturdy independence and inflexible honesty, which distinguish that valuable class of citizens. He had a general acquaintance throughout the county. His sterling integrity and sound judgment commanded the confidence of the citizens of...
Berks County in the highest degree. He manifested a deep interest in public affairs, and he was always active in political matters. He labored earnestly to strengthen the organization and promote the welfare of the Democratic party, the principles of which he was a firm advocate. Ambition never tempted him to take office merely for the sake of office. He accepted only such local positions as afforded him the opportunity to serve his fellow-citizens, and such services he performed with recognized fidelity. He figured prominently at numerous County Conventions. He officiated as county commissioner in 1838-39 and subsequently as one of the Board of Prison Inspectors by appointment from the Court of Quarter Sessions for fifteen years, from 1858 to 1868, having served as president of that body for a time. In the fall of 1866 he was elected associate judge of Berks County for the term of five years, and whilst serving in that capacity he died, on the 20th of July, 1870, in his seventy-third year. In private as in public life Judge Kutz was distinguished for his high moral character.

Henry Rhoads was born in Amity township, Berks County, June 2, 1802. He came to Reading when a young man, and after serving a number of years as clerk in the prothonotary's office he began the study of the law in the office of Samuel Baird, Esq. He was admitted to the bar April 3, 1832. In 1836 he was appointed clerk of the Orphans' Court by Governor Ritner and served from 1836 to 1838. He officiated as postmaster at Reading during President Taylor's administration, and served as associate judge of the county of Berks from August 3, 1870, to December 4, 1871, having been appointed by Governor Geary to fill the unexpired term of Hon. David Kutz, deceased. He was one of the first school directors of Reading under the common-school system. He acted as superintendent of Christ's Episcopal Sunday-school from 1833 to 1838 and served as member of the vestry for many years. He was an Old-Line Whig, and upon the organization of the Republican party was one of its staunchest adherents. He was a partner, in 1838, with John S. Richards, Esq., in the publication of the Berks and Schuylkill Journal. While at the bar he for a time enjoyed the largest Orphans' Court practice in Berks County. He died February 15, 1881, aged nearly eighty years. His father, Daniel Rhoads, was register of wills of Berks County from 1818 to 1820 and 1824 to 1829. He married Sarah, daughter of Charles Bushar, of Reading, by whom he had six children,—Charles B. (deceased), John H., George B., Louisa B., Charles B. and Daniel P. George B. Rhoads, the third son, was captain in the Union army, and was killed at Petersburg, Va.

George W. Bruckman was born in Reading, and has resided in this place all of his life. His father, Carl A. Bruckman, emigrated from Amsterdam, Holland, located in Reading early in life, learned the printer's trade, and for a time published a German newspaper known as Readinger Postbote. He received his education in the schools of Reading, then served an apprenticeship to the plasterer's trade and followed that business for ten years. Then he became clerk to the county commissioners and served in that position for ten years. He acted as deputy prothonotary for three years, from 1851 to 1854, under Dr. Charles H. Hunter; served as city treasurer during the years 1857-58, and officiated as teller in Bushong's Bank for a time. In 1871 he was elected associate judge of the county of Berks and served one full term of five years. He was one of the last two associate judges in the county, the office having been abolished by the Constitution of 1873, during his term of service. He is living in retirement at Reading.

Daniel Buskirk is a descendant from ancestors who emigrated from Holland, his grandfather having been Marmaduke Van Buskirk, a soldier of the Revolution, who resided in New York. He had three sons,—John, Jacob and Joseph. Jacob Van Buskirk was born on the 4th of July, 1783, in New York City, and removed to Colebrookdale township, Berks County, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits. He married Catherine, daughter of Sebastian Koch, a soldier of the Revolution and a resident of the same township. Their children are John, Daniel, Mary (married to Peter Heffner), Catherine (married to Joseph Scheidt) and Jacob, all of whom are still living.

Daniel Buskirk was born on the 13th of January, 1816, in Colebrookdale township. He removed to Pricetown at an early age, where he spent the greater part of his youth. His advantages of education were limited, but he took advantage of those at command. He then learned the trade of a moulder at the Oley Furnace and was engaged in that occupation for seven years in Berks and Northampton Counties and in Warren County, N. J. Upon returning to Pricetown he was elected, in 1841, to the office of justice of the peace in Ruscomb-manor township, when he abandoned his trade and directed his entire attention to the duties of his office until 1855, having been twice re-elected. He then received the nomination for and was elected to the office of register of wills of Berks County. On the expiration of his term of three years he was again elected a justice of the peace, and he continued to hold this office by re-election till 1871, when he was elevated to associate judge of the county. He filled this honorable position very creditably for a term of five years. During his term of service the office was abolished by the Constitution of 1873. In 1877 he was again chosen justice of the peace of the township and was for a time an elder and a trustee of the Evangelical Lutheran Church at Pricetown.

Judge Buskirk was also actively and successfully engaged in farming operations for many years. Having retired from this pursuit his several farms in the township are carried on by his sons. Judge Buskirk was married in 1838 to Rebecca S., daughter of Jacob S. Keller, of Ruscomb-manor township. His children are William, Daniel (now deceased), Hiram, Ephraim, Jacob (now deceased), James and Rebecca (now deceased). His wife died August 28th, 1882.
ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW.

James Read was born in Philadelphia and came to Reading at an early period in his history and, by appointment from the Provincial Governor, filled the county offices of prothonotary, recorder, register, clerk of Orphans' Court and clerk of the Court of Quarter Sessions continuously from the time of the organization of Berks County, in 1752, till 1776. He was one of the first attorneys admitted to the bar at Reading, and also practiced his profession whilst filling the offices named. The official records are in his own handwriting and indicate that he was a man of careful habits. He officiated as one of the justices of the county courts under the Provincial Government, and served as a member of the Supreme Executive Council for two terms, from 1779 to 1782 and from 1788 to 1791. Under the constitution of 1776 he was elected in 1783 as a Censor to represent Berks County in the Council of Censors who were "to inquire whether the Constitution was preserved inviolate in every part." The numerous positions filled by him indicate that he was a man of recognized ability.

James Biddle was one of the first attorneys of the Berks County bar, who attained prominence for legal learning, died in Reading March 1, 1815, aged sixty-three years. He was admitted to the bar August 13, 1772, and soon thereafter became one of the leaders of his profession in this section of the State. He had an extensive knowledge of the Latin, Greek, French and German languages, and was well versed in general literature. He was possessed of great tenderness of heart, gentleness of manner and cheerfulness of disposition, and was one of the pioneer lawyers, well known for his integrity and ability. These excellent qualities won for him many friends and patrons among the early settlers of Berks County.

Daniel C. Clymer was born in Philadelphia, April 6, 1748, and having lost his father at an early age, he was brought up and educated by his uncle, Gen. Daniel Robereau, who became a distinguished officer in the Revolutionary army. He was sent to Princeton College and graduated in 1766; and upon returning to Philadelphia he there studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1768.

When the Revolution broke out he enlisted as an Associate; joined the company of Captain John Little in the Second Battalion of Philadelphia Militia, and was elected First Lieutenant. In June, 1775, he was appointed by Congress one of the signers of Bills of Credit for $2,000,000; and again in March, 1776, for $4,000,000. In April, 1776, he was appointed to the command of the Rifle Battalion of Philadelphia, having been commissioned on April 8, 1776, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. In July, 1776, he was one of the delegates from Philadelphia to the Convention of Association, which assembled at Lancaster, for the purpose of electing a Brigadier-General. He acted as secretary, and his uncle, Daniel Robereau, was elected. In 1777 he served as a Commissioner of Claims in the Treasury Department of the United Colonies. During the closing years of the Revolution he removed to Reading and practiced his profession in Berks and the adjoining counties. He was admitted to the bar at Reading, May 4, 1776, doubtless at that time for special business. About the time of his removal to Reading, in 1782, he was married to Mary Weidner, a daughter of Peter and Susan Weidner, of Berks County. His wife died in 1802, aged

James Whitehead, Jr., was one of the earliest lawyers at Reading. In 1768 he drew the petition which was addressed to the Governor of the Province of Pennsylvania, praying for the establishment of Reading into a market town. This was signed by many prominent citizens and the charter was granted at the time requested.

Collinson Read, one of the first lawyers of the forty-six years. He died at Reading, January 25, 1810, and left three children—Ann, born at Reading 1782, and died unmarried at Morgantown 1852; William, an attorney (see sketch) and Edward Tilghman, born at Reading 1790, educated at Princeton College and pursued farming in Caernarvon township, having married Maria Catharine Hiester, daughter of William Hiester, and died on his farm in 1831, leaving to survive him five sons, Daniel R., William H., Edward M. Hiester and George E., and a daughter, Mary Hiester.

MARKS JOHN BIDDLE, a son of James Biddle, was born at Philadelphia, May 24, 1763, and there he obtained a good education. He came to Reading and was admitted to the bar in December, 1788, when he began the practice of the law in Berks County. He devoted his whole time to his profession and soon established a large and lucrative business, which he maintained until 1840, when he retired from practice. Shortly afterward he became afflicted with blindness and continued blind for seven years till his death. During this trying period he was cheerful. He enjoyed the literary productions of his day by having the same read to him. He was distinguished for strong intellect and clear judgment. His legal learning was accurate and profound, and his efforts at the Bar were remarkable for a thorough knowledge and comprehensive grasp of his subject. He represented the county in the State Senate from 1817 to 1820. About this time he was the local representative of the Penns in the collection of ground rents. Upon the election of Governor Joseph Hiester he received the appointment of prothonotary of the county and held the office from 1821 to 1824. He died August 11, 1849, over eighty-four years of age. James D. Biddle was his only son.

LEVI PAWLING was the third son of Henry Pawling, one of the first associate judges of Montgomery County. He was born in Providence township, that county; read law and was admitted to practice at Norristown in November, 1795; became a member of the Berks County bar August 18, 1796; lived for a short time at Reading, and on October 14, 1804, was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Governor Joseph Hiester. He soon afterwards attained great prominence at the Montgomery Bar, lived in magnificent style for those early days, and filled a great many positions of trust and responsibility. Being a Federalist in politics and a resident of a Democratic county, he was not elected to any legislative office except to a seat in Congress, serving as a representative one term, from 1817 to 1819. For a number of years he was President of the Bank of Montgomery County. About the time of his retirement from business he was financially embarrassed and he lost the extensive property he had owned. His wife died in 1826. He survived her until 1845, and died at the age of seventy-three years. His wealthy father-in-law left each of Mr. and Mrs. Pawling’s children a patrimony of ten thousand dollars. James M. Pawling, their second son, was a prominent member of the Montgomery County Bar and was admitted a member of the Berks County Bar November 7, 1833, but lived at Norristown.

JOHN S. HIESTER was born at Reading July 28, 1774, and was the only son of Governor Joseph Hiester. He was educated at Princeton College, from which he graduated with honor to himself, in 1794 at the age of twenty; studied law in Philadelphia under the direction of Jared Ingersoll, Esq., and was admitted to the bar in 1798. He was married to Miss Fries, of Philadelphia. After a wedded life of six months she died. Afterwards he was married to Maria C. Muhlenberg, a first cousin of Henry A. Muhlenberg, by whom he had four children. For nine years he had all the offices in connection with the county courts of Berks County. He was well qualified to fill these positions. He was cashier of Farmers’ Bank, also president of Borough Council for several years. He died March 7, 1849, in the seventy-fifth year of his age.

FREDERICK JOHN HALLER was admitted to the bar November 4, 1801; practiced for a short time at Kutztown, then moved to Huntingdon; from thence to Hollidaysburg, and, later in life, located at Allentown, where he died.

SAMUEL D. FRANKS was the son of Colonel Isaac Franks, of Philadelphia, who was one of the staff-officers of General Washington in the Revolution during the Pennsylvania campaign, and a cousin of the great wit and beauty, Miss Rebecca.
Franks, who became the wife of Sir Henry Johnson, Bart. He was born at Philadelphia in the year 1784, and there educated for the bar. He came to Reading early in life and was admitted to the Berks County bar on August 10, 1805. Soon afterward he was married to Sarah May, the daughter of James May and a sister of Mrs. George De B. Keim. During the War of 1812–15 he was major in a Berks County regiment of volunteers, and was at Baltimore in 1814 when that city was threatened by the British forces.

"Upon his return from military service he became clerk of the House of Representatives. He was an efficient officer and an excellent reader, useful to the members and quite popular. Upon the election of Governor Findlay he received the appointment of president judge of Dauphin County July 29, 1818, and he occupied this position till January 12, 1830, when he resigned his commission. He was a man of much talent and a most amusing companion, having considerable talent for mimicry. He abounded in anecdotes. He was a large man, with a large head and fine face; he had a large Grecian nose, florid countenance and red hair. He said he was the best red (read) judge in Pennsylvania; but the law, as a science, had few charms for him." 1

In the year 1818, previous to his appointment as a president judge he officiated in Berks County as prothonotary and clerk of the Quarter Sessions, took an earnest interest in the militia affairs of the State, in which he became very popular. He was elected major-general of the Sixth Division Pennsylvania Militia, which was composed of the troops in Berks, Dauphin, Lebanon and Schuylkill Counties, and occupied that prominent position till the time of his death, when his brother-in-law, General George De B. Keim, of Reading, was elected to succeed him. He died at Orwigsburg, Schuylkill County, aged only forty-six years. His remains were brought to Reading and buried in the graveyard adjoining Christ's Episcopal Church.

James B. Hubley was born in the year 1789, in Montgomery Co., Pa., and was a son of Joseph Hubley and brother of Edwin B. Hubley. He was admitted a member of the bar of Berks County April 3, 1809. He practiced for a time in Reading, moved to Orwigsburg, then the county seat of Schuylkill County, and died August 26, 1828, at the age of thirty-eight years. He was an heir to the Burd estate. He was a man of brilliant promise, possessed a benevolent and kindly disposition, had amiable manners and was favorably known for his honesty and integrity.

William Clymer, a son of Daniel C. Clymer, Esq., was born at Reading on March 28, 1788. He was educated at Yale College, from which he was graduated in 1807. Upon returning home he studied law in the office of his father, a practicing attorney at Reading, and was admitted to the bar in 1809. He practiced his profession in Berks County and died in 1846. He was married to Susan Rightmyer, of Reading, and with her had eight children, three of whom survived him,—Henry, Mary Ann and William.

Franklin S. Muhlenberg, son of General Peter Muhlenberg, was born in Philadelphia April 22, 1795; obtained a liberal education, studied law and was admitted a member of the Berks County bar May 8, 1816, and became private secretary of Governor Joseph Hiester from 1820 to 1823. Soon after the latter date he removed to Ohio, became a member of the Legislature of that State, and later, was a representative from Ohio in the Twentieth Congress. He died in Pickaway County, Ohio, in 1832.

Nathaniel Potts Hobart was a native of Philadelphia, born October 3, 1790, read law in the office of John C. Smith, and was admitted to the bar of his native city; removed to Pottstown, where he was appointed justice of the peace by Governor Simon Snyder; joined Captain Daniel De B. Keim's company of Washington Blues in August, 1814; marched with it to Camp Dupont, and there joined the First Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers October 7, 1814, and served as fourth sergeant of the company until December 5th of the same year, when they returned to Reading; admitted an attorney of the Berks County bar January 3, 1818; was clerk in the prothonotary's office, under John Adams, for several years; was assistant clerk in the House of Representatives at Harrisburg, under chief clerk Francis R. Shunk. In 1827 Governor Shulze appointed him clerk of the Orphans' Court and Court of Quarter Sessions of Berks County, which position he held until 1830, when he removed to Pottstown. In 1836 he was appointed auditor-general of Pennsylvania by Governor Ritner, and held the office for three years; resided at Pottstown from 1830 until his death, July 3, 1860. He was married April 18, 1813, to Joanna Holland. Their children were John Potts (now an attorney in Pottsville), Sarah P., Eliza R., Anna Sophia, Robert H., Nathaniel B., William R. and Ellen G. Hobart.

James D. Biddle was the only son of Marks John Biddle, Esq. After obtaining a good English education he studied law under the direction of his father and was admitted to the bar at Reading April 9, 1815. For many years he was a notary public, and became a very popular lawyer, but died when yet young.

Charles Davis, son of Moses Davis, was born in Easton December 25, 1795, and upon attaining manhood, read law in the office of Hon. Samuel Sitgreaves of the Northampton bar, and was admitted to practice January 16, 1817, when he removed to Allentown. This was shortly after the erection of Lehigh County. He soon became one of the leaders of the bar of that county and continued uninterruptedly to practice his profession at Allentown until 1839 when he came to Reading where he followed his profession until 1867. By this time increasing years and declining health impelled him to relinquish his practice as his physical constitution would no longer withstand its demands. He accordingly determined to remove to the home of his childhood and youth, and died in Easton on January 19, 1873. During his last residence in his native town, he lived a semi-retired life, but was in the full enjoyment of his faculties and was frequently consulted by other members of the Northampton bar. In speaking of Mr. Davis, Judge Maxwell said, "It is worthy of remark that no attorney had been more diligent in the practice of his profession, nor more faithful and devoted to the interests of his clients to whose causes or business he devoted all the powers of his vigorous mind. He was not only an able and successful lawyer but a valuable and useful citizen. He had always been a consistent Christian, and by his walk and conversation, honored his profession."

Charles Witman, son of Hon. William Witman, associate judge of Berks County from 1823 to 1828, was born at Reading in the year 1790, and was admitted to the bar of Berks County August 9, 1818. He lived and practiced law at Reading for a number of years and then removed to Orwigsburg, Schuylkill County, where he practiced his profession till his death February 13, 1856.

Edward B. Hubley was born at Reading in 1792. He was the son of Joseph Hubley, a practicing attorney of the Berks County bar. He studied law with his father and was admitted to the bar April 5, 1820. After practicing at Reading for a while he moved to Orwigsburg, then the county-seat of Schuylkill County, and there continued his profession for a number of years. He represented that district in Congress for two terms from 1835 to 1839. He held the appointment of canal commissioner of this State for several years under Governor David R. Porter, and acted as a commissioner of Indian affairs under President Polk. In all these positions he discharged his duties with ability and fidelity. About 1848 he returned to Reading and continued to reside here for eight years; then he removed to Philadelphia, and died there shortly afterward, on February 23, 1856, aged sixty-four years. He was married to Catherine, eldest daughter of Judge Spayd.

James L. Dunn, the only son of James Dunn, was born in Kent County, Md., July 25, 1785. He was educated in the schools of Baltimore, then went to Philadelphia to live in the family of his uncle, John Lorrain. He there studied the art of book-keeping, and, for a time, was engaged in the mercantile business. In 1815 he came to Reading and read law under the direction of Samuel Baird, Esq., and was admitted to the bar of Berks County, November 10, 1821. Mr. Dunn was an excellent lawyer, a fine scholar, a genial companion, courteous and affable in his manners and prepossessing in appearance. During the last twelve years of his life he was a confirmed invalid and was compelled to retire from an extensive practice at the bar. He was a prominent and influential member of the Episcopal Church, and one of the original board of directors of the Charles Evans Cemetery. He was married to Sara Rees, of Philadelphia, who died before him. Their children were Charles C. Dunn, George R. Dunn, of Philadelphia, Mrs. De B. Keim, of Reading; Mrs. Nelson B. Bowman, of Brownsville, Pa., all of whom are living, and Mrs. Edward McLonegan, deceased, of Reading.

William C. Leavenworth, who was admitted to the bar at Reading, August 18, 1822, was a native of New England. During a residence of about twenty years in Reading he won considerable distinction in the legal profession and was a man of fine intellectual attainments. He accompanied the tide of emigration to California during the "gold-fever" and died in that State. Henry Dreer, the prominent nurseryman of Philadelphia, is married to his daughter.

Lloyd Wharton, who obtained a good education, then pursued the study of law, was admitted elsewhere, and, on March 24, 1824, became a member of the Berks County bar. He continued in practice at Reading until about the year 1840, when he moved to Philadelphia county and lived on the Delaware, near Bristol. While in Reading in the year 1835, he was instrumental in securing the charter of the Berks County Bank, and for a time, he was the principal stockholder in it. He disposed of his interest to Elijah Deckert and William Darling in 1839. Soon after his removal from Reading his name was changed to Lloyd Wharton Beckley, and he thus became heir to a large part of the Beckley estate. He was a man of rare intelligence and well versed in general literature.

Thomas Morris was born near Doylestown, Pa., and was a son of Thomas Morris. After tending an excellent academy in his native town, he entered the office of the Hon. John Chapman, a distinguished lawyer of the Bucks County bar, and having completed the required course of legal studies, was admitted to the bar. For a time thereafter he lived at Pottsville and became a member of the Berks County bar by admission November 1, 1824. He was an active Democrat and ardent supporter of Henry A. Muhlenberg for governor of Pennsylvania. That department of practice relating to land titles was a specialty with him. He died June 17, 1872.

David Evans, who was admitted to the bar at Reading, January 5, 1825, was born at Morgantown, this county, and was of Welsh descent. After engaging in the duties of his profession at Reading for a number of years, he removed to the State of Ohio, where he died. William Fullerton Duncan, who was admitted to the bar at the same time, also moved to the west after a few years' practice here.

Henry W. Smith, for many years a distinguished member of the Berks County bar, was a son of Judge Frederick Smith, of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, and was born January 4, 1804. He studied law under the instruction of his father, and was admitted to the bar January 5, 1825. He was active in politics; was a delegate to the State Democratic convention of 1832, 1835, 1841, 1844 and 1846, and was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention in 1855. He was a candidate for Congress on a combined ticket of Whigs and Democrats, in 1836, against Henry A. Muhlenberg, Democrat, who was elected. He served as a member of the State Legislature, in 1843 and 1844. In 1846 he was a candidate for Congress against Judge William Strong. He was the candidate for president-judge of the county, in 1851, against J. Pringle Jones, and in 1861, was the candidate for the same office on the "Union" ticket against W. J. Woodward. Mr. Smith had an extensive practice and was one of the ablest lawyers Berks County has produced. The last important official position he filled was that of a member of the convention that framed the State Constitution of 1873. At one time, he and his brother George owned one-half of the stock of the Reading Water Company. He died August 27, 1878, leaving a widow and an only son, F. Leaf Smith, now a member of the Reading bar.

Edward P. Pearson, for many years one of the leading attorneys of the Reading bar, was a native of New Jersey, and after completing his legal studies moved to Lebanon, Pa., and from thence to Reading, where he became associated in practice with Henry W. Smith, Esq., and succeeded to a large and lucrative business. He was married to Fredericka, a daughter of Judge Frederick Smith. Edward P. Pearson, one of his sons, is now a lieutenant-colonel in the Regular Army. Frederick Pearson, another son, was a commodore in the American Navy and won distinction in assisting the English Navy to quell an insurrection in Japan. For gallant services on this occasion the Queen of England offered him a knighthood, but being in the American service he was obliged to decline the proffered honor. He retired from the Navy soon after his marriage with Miss Ayers, of Boston, daughter of the originator of "Ayers' Pecoral."

Charles J. Jack, a native of Philadelphia, came to Reading in 1825, and in August of that year was admitted a member of the Berks County bar. Being a devoted Democrat he established and published a newspaper in Reading for a number of years, known as the Jackson Democrat. He was a man of brilliancy and power and attained considerable influence in the politics of the State. He ceased the publication of his paper about 1834 and soon afterward removed to Philadelphia, where he died.

Joseph H. Spayd, son of John Spayd, president judge of the courts of Berks County, and grandson of Governor Hiester, was born in 1803 and died in Reading, June 5, 1865, aged sixty-two years. He obtained a liberal education; was a graduate of Yale College; studied law and was admitted a member of the Reading bar in 1826. Two years after his admission he was appointed by attorney-general Ellmaker, prosecuting attorney of the courts of Berks County. Being possessed of considerable means he relinquished the practice of his profession early in life and devoted his time to liberal reading, having a strong partiality for general literature. He accumulated an excellent library and was especially interested in the study of natural science, his favorite branches being geology and natural history.

Elijah Dechert was born in Cumru township, Berks County, October 15, 1799, and was the son of John and Deborah Dechert. His father, a farmer, was a lieutenant in the army of the Revolution, and was the descendant of ancestors who came with the German pilgrimage, to escape religious persecution in Europe. The earnestness of the religious faith of the family is shown by the fact that all of his own and of the preceding generations received Biblical names at their baptism.

His elder brother, Daniel, died at his home at Sinking Springs, in this county, September 17th, 1884, aged ninety-one years. He had lived upon his farm in that vicinity for many years, and was highly respected. Many of his numerous descendants are active members of the community. Another brother, Samuel, removed to Springfield, Ohio, where he was a leading manufacturer. He died there in 1884, leaving to survive him a widow and numerous children and grandchildren.

Elijah Dechert was chief clerk in the proto- notary's office at Reading, under General John Adams and Marks John Biddle, Esq., and was admitted to the bar on January 4, 1827. For many years he had a large practice, and by his integrity, industry and ability, held a high position at a bar which ranked among the strongest in the State.

Early in life he became a member and also elder of the First Presbyterian Church of Reading, of which he was one of the founders, and he was, for many years, the superintendent of its Sunday-school. He was earnestly interested in the temperance and other moral reforms of the day, ever acting in accordance with his convictions of right and shrinking from the performance of no duty. Accordingly, he was known and respected in the community as an independent and honorable citizen, who, avoiding politics and political ambition, was satisfied to perform the duties of private life.

He was an early friend of the public-school system, and it was said, in a leading newspaper, at the time of his death: "Berks County and Reading owe him a debt of gratitude for his valuable and persevering labors in behalf of the youth of the city and county."

He died in the City of Philadelphia, whither he had removed, June 14, 1854. On September 15, 1824, he was married to Mary W., daughter of Hon. Robert Porter, then the president judge of this district, having filled the office, for more than twenty years, with the deserved reputation of an honest man, a fine scholar and a sound lawyer. Judge Porter had been a lieutenant in the Revolutionary Army, and was the son of General Andrew Porter, of the Pennsylvania Line of that army, and who was afterwards surveyor-general of Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Dechert survived her husband, and died January 15, 1872, leaving a family of seven children. Of these, one son, William W. (now deceased), became the vice-president of the Camden and Amboy Railroad Company; another, Howard P., is a Presbyterian minister, and the other two, Henry M. and Robert P., are now prominent members of the Philadelphia bar. Robert P. Dechert was lieutenant-colonel of the Twenty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers during the War of the Rebellion, and is now the controller of the city of Philadelphia.

One daughter, Sarah B., married Edmond S. Young, a leading lawyer of Dayton, Ohio; another, Agnes G., married Rev. Alfred Taylor, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and the youngest (now deceased) married Rev. Charles E. Griffith, late of Allentown, Pa. William W. married Esther, daughter of Colonel Y. D. Dashiel, U.S.A., and left three children, who are now living,—Yellott D., of the New York bar, Mary P. and William W. Henry M. Dechert married Esther S., daughter of Thomas S. Taylor, of Philadelphia. They have four children,—Henry T., of the Philadelphia bar, Bertha M., Ellen G. and Edward Porter. Mrs. Young has two sons,—George R. and William H., of the Ohio bar, and a daughter, Mary. Howard P. married Caroline Sandford, of New York; they have one daughter, Caroline. Mrs. Taylor has a son,—Thomas P., of Bridgeport, Conn., and two daughters,—Mrs. Fanny Rowell and Isabella. Mrs. Griffith left two children,—Mary D. and Charles E.

In taking up the histories of families in this county, we notice the remarkable, widespread emigration going out from Berks County. As is the case with this and many other families, her sons and daughters have gone out to the East and the West. In Philadelphia, the central parts of Pennsylvania, and in Ohio, Indiana, Iowa and other of the Western States, Berks County names are almost as familiar as here at home. Many persons ignorantly suppose that New England emigration has determined the fortunes of our land; but the traveler and the scholar know that the German and Scotch-Irish ancestry of Pennsylvania brought to us those elements of industry and intelligence, and that sturdiness of purpose, which, combined with New England enterprise and intelligence, make up the strength of American character.

Jacob Hoffman, brother of the late Dr. Charles Edward Hoffman, of Reading, and Dr. William Hoffman, residing at 244 South Fifth Street, was born in 1805, on a farm in Northampton County, Pa. He acquired a preliminary education in Easton, where he read law under the direction of the late Hon. James Porter, of the Northampton bar, and was admitted two years later. He began practicing at Easton. In 1829 he married Mary Gehr, daughter of Jacob Gehr, of Oley township, Berks County, and in 1831 removed to Reading, having been admitted as an attorney to practice before the courts of this county November 10, 1829. Mr. Hoffman early gained an enviable reputation as an influential lawyer in important land cases, especially where disputes arose in reference to titles. In his litigations relating to certain coal lands lying in the county of Schuylkill, his services were of great value, in consequence of which much of his practice was before the courts of that county. He died in Reading November 21, 1870. During the Civil War he was an earnest supporter of the administration of Abraham Lincoln.

Robert M. Barr was born at Lancaster, Pa. He was admitted to the bar of Berks County on January 3, 1831, about which time he moved to Reading. He acquired an extensive practice and was recognized as a superior lawyer. He was a man of fine personal appearance and possessed a high order of eloquence. He represented Berks County in the Assembly for the year 1841, and in 1845 he received the appointment of State reporter from Governor Shunk—the office having been created in the year named. The prescribed term of office was five years. He died whilst filling this appointment, having compiled and published the first ten State reports commonly known as "Barr's Reports." His friend, J. Pringle Jones, Esq.,—(who subsequently filled the office of president judge of Berks County) completed the compilation of the cases adjudicated during his term and published them in two volumes, commonly known as "Jones' Reports." He died at Reading, December 25, 1849, aged forty-seven years. He was married

Peter Filbert was born in Reading in 1793, and was a son of Peter Filbert, sheriff of Berks County, for the years 1785–86–87. He chose the profession of law and was admitted to practice at Reading January 6, 1831. During the year 1840, he represented Berks County in the State Legislature. He filled the position of chief burgess of Reading for several years until a city charter was obtained in 1847, then was elected the first mayor, and held the latter office one year. While serving as mayor he was appointed district deputy attorney general for Berks County. He was a notary public for a number of years. He died on the 28th of May, 1864, aged seventy-one years.

John B. Mayer was born at Lancaster; acquired a good education; read law and was admitted to the bar January 8, 1831. While engaged in his profession with fine prospects of future success, he was stricken down with consumption at the early age of twenty-eight years.

Francis Aurand, who was admitted to the bar at Reading November 13, 1833, died of pulmonary disease May 29, 1837, aged twenty-five years.

William Betz was born at Reading in 1812. He was the son of Henry Betz, Esq., sheriff of Berks County for one term (1821–23) and for many years a justice of the peace of Reading. After receiving a general education at home he studied law and was admitted to practice on January 10, 1834. He carried on his profession at Reading for upwards of twenty years, and then removed to Philadelphia about 1857, where he died on August 25, 1860, aged forty-eight years. Whilst practicing law at Reading he also held the office of justice of the peace for some years and also chief burgess; and upon the erection of Reading into a city, he was elected alderman of the north ward, for one term, which office he filled acceptably from 1847 to 1851. He was generally recognized as a magistrate of decided ability, and as a man of generous disposition. At Philadelphia he was one of the principal clerks in the post-office, dying whilst filling this position.

George G. Barclay, son of Andrew C. Barclay, a prominent merchant of Philadelphia, was born in that city. After obtaining a preliminary education, he entered Yale College from which institution he was graduated in 1832. He soon thereafter engaged in the study of the law, and after the necessary preparation was admitted to the bar. In 1835 he came to Reading and here continued his profession with excellent success, for a period of forty years during which time he took great interest in the growth and prosperity of the city of Reading, and in the development of the county. In politics he was an ardent and consistent Whig for many years, but eventually became more conservative in political matters. In 1873 he was chosen one of the Representatives from Berks County to the Convention at Philadelphia which framed the present State Constitution. About 1875 he removed to Philadelphia and there became associated in the practice of law with Judge Wilson. He now lives in retirement in that city. He is the oldest member of the Berks County bar now living.

Newton D. Strong was born in Somers, Conn., in the year 1810. He acquired a good academic education and was graduated from Yale College in 1831, with one of the first honors of his class. He was then appointed a tutor at Yale, which position he held two years. At the expiration of this time, he removed to Reading and became a law student in the office of his brother, Hon. William Strong. After his admission to the bar he practiced his profession for a few years at Easton, Pa., and then removed to Alton, Ill., where he soon took a leading position among the lawyers of that State. Upon the election of his brother to Congress from Berks County he returned to Reading and assumed his brother's practice in this county. A few years later he removed to St. Louis, Mo., where he was engaged in the duties of his profession at the time of his death, August 9, 1866, in the fifty-sixth year of his age. His remains were brought to Reading and interred in Charles Evans' Cemetery. He possessed an accomplished education, was a fine lawyer, and brought to the exercise of his profession all the resources of a well cultivated mind.

Anthony F. Miller was born February 25, 1806, in Reading; was educated in the schools of his native town; read law in the office of Hon. John Banks, and was admitted to the bar August 15, 1836; practiced in Reading for several years, and died August 16, 1863.
FRANKLIN B. SHOENER was born at Reading and educated in the Lancasterian school of his native town then under the management of Major Medara. He read law under the instruction of Elijah Deckert, Esq., and was admitted a member of the Reading bar January 3, 1837. He practiced law for several years, but died at the age of twenty-seven. He was an officer in the Washington Greys, a volunteer military company commanded by Daniel M. Keim.

JOHN S. RICHARDS was born February 5, 1815, in Robeson township, Berks County, near Joanna Furnace, and was the eldest son of James Richards, a merchant. He early developed a taste for literature, and read the books of his father's library with the assiduity of a mature student. Upon the death of his father in 1827, he moved to Reading to live with his uncle, Judge William Darling, and attended the Reading Academy, where he acquired a good preparatory education. In 1830 Judge Darling removed to Joanna Furnace and young Richards became a clerk in his store at that place.

In 1832 Mr. Richards organized the Young Men's Temperance Society at Morgantown and also established a public library for the citizens of Robeson township. At the age of sixteen he began to write for the newspapers and continued the same until his death,—on political, educational, social, scientific, moral and religious topics. He acquired a considerable knowledge of the Latin, German and French languages. In 1834 he began the study of the law in the office of Elijah Deckert, Esq., and was admitted to the bar April 4, 1837, and the next year he became associated with Henry Rhoads in the publication of the Berks and Schuylkill Journal. He continued to edit it until 1845 and finally sold it in 1860. He took an active part in politics and wrote many vigorous editorials on that subject. He was a devoted Whig and a great admirer of Henry Clay, and made many speeches in support of the Kentucky statesman for President of the United States.

While engaged in the active duties of his profession he took a devoted interest in the cause of education, served nearly thirty years as a member of the Board of School Controllers of Reading and assisted in establishing the City High School. Mr. Richards possessed great versatility of powers. His intellectual and professional acquirements were very extensive, and as a member of the Reading bar he maintained a very high standing. For the years 1849 and 1850 he served as district attorney for Berks County and was for a time attorney for the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company. After an industrious and useful career he died in the year 1872 universally honored and respected. He was a prominent member of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

DENNIS W. O'BRIEN was born in Reading and obtained a preliminary education in the schools of his native town. When yet a young man he made a tour of Europe in company with his uncle, Joseph O'Brien. After returning home he acquired a classical education at college and then entered upon the study of law under the direction of Charles Evans, Esq., of the Reading bar, and was admitted to practice August 7, 1838, and was engaged in his profession at Reading until 1814, about which time he removed to the city of Philadelphia, where he was elected judge of one of the courts. He died a few years ago.

JEREMIAH D. BITTING was admitted to the bar August 8, 1838. For a time he took an active interest in politics and from 1859 to 1882 he was sheriff of Berks County. He removed to Philadelphia, engaged in mercantile business and now resides in that city.

ANDREW SALLADE was a native of Womelsdorf. He was admitted to the bar August 11, 1838, practiced law at Reading successfully and then moved to Philadelphia and practiced before the Court of Claims. He was a member of the Legislature from Berks County in the year 1855. During the Civil War, through the influence of Hon. Simon Cameron, he was appointed a paymaster in the Union army. He died in the far West, while on a visit to his son Madison, who is now an officer in the Regular Army.

Jackson H. Sherman, a native of New England, studied law in the office of Judge William Darling, and soon after removed to the West.

Peter Shearer was born February 3, 1819, in Reading. He acquired a preparatory education in his native town and became one of the first teachers after the adoption of the public school system; was admitted to the bar April 7, 1840, after reading in the office of Henry W. Smith, Esq.; left Reading in 1843 for New Orleans; was a volunteer in Captain Blanchard’s company, of that city, in the Mexican War; was in the battle of Monterey and took part in the siege of Vera Cruz. After the war he located in Mansfield, La., and published a newspaper for a number of years; returned to Reading in 1857; in 1862 enlisted in a New York regiment and served under General Hunter; was wounded in the battle of Piedmont, taken prisoner and sent to Andersonville for six months, and was released just before Sherman’s March to the Sea. Since the war he has lived in Berks County.

Matthias Mengel was born near Morgantown, in Caernarvon township, January 13, 1814. He spent his boyhood days on the farm of his father, until 1838, when he came to Reading, became a student-at-law in the office of Elijah Dechert, Esq., and was admitted to the bar April 9, 1840. In 1845 he was elected a magistrate, became an alderman in 1847, when Reading was incorporated into a city, and served in that office continuously until 1860; was treasurer of the city School Board from 1866 to 1868, when he was again elected alderman, serving until 1873; was re-elected in 1875 and filled two consecutive terms, ending in 1885. He has recently been appointed a notary public. Mr. Mengel has been a successful business man. He maintains his jovial spirit, which has been one of the prominent traits of his character all through his life. He is widely known throughout the county as a man of the highest integrity, for which he will long be remembered, as well as for his original witticisms.

George E. Ludwig was born in Berks County; he obtained a classical education; was admitted to the bar at Reading November 3, 1840, where he practiced for about fifteen years and then removed to Philadelphia. He was married to Maria Keim, a sister of General William H. Keim, who died shortly after their marriage, leaving one child, De Benneville Keim Ludwig, now of Philadelphia.

James Donagan was born in Philadelphia in 1793. He came to Berks County at an early age; studied medicine under Dr. John C. Baum, of Exeter township. After his graduation from the University of Pennsylvania he located at Kutztown, where he practiced medicine for a number of years. He then abandoned the medical profession, entered upon the study of the law, was admitted to the bar of Berks County December 22, 1841, and continued in active practice until about 1860. He held several important political positions; was one of the five delegates from Berks County to the Constitutional Convention of 1888, and was the last survivor of the delegation from this county. During the years 1840–41–42 he held the office of clerk of the Orphans’ Court of this county. In the spring of 1863 he was chosen to represent the Fourth Ward of Reading in the City Councils, and upon the organization of that body was chosen its president. While occupying that position he died suddenly of heart disease January 20, 1864, aged seventy-one years. His various public duties were performed with ability and fidelity.

Samuel Sohl was born in Heidelberg; read law with Hon. William Strong; was admitted to the bar April 5, 1842; practiced law at Reading several years; retired from practice and died near the place of his birth.

Silas E. Buzard was born at Buzzardsville, Monroe County, Pa.; was a graduate of the College of New Jersey, at Princeton; became a member of the Berks County bar April 8, 1845; located at Kutztown, where he practiced a few years and died at the age of twenty-seven years.

Charles Weirman was born in Lebanon County; read law; was admitted May 17, 1842; practiced about five years and then became engaged in the manufacture of bricks and extensively interested in patented brick machines. He died while actively engaged in that business.

George W. Arms, was born in Douglass township; came to Reading and was admitted to the bar March 8, 1843. He practiced at Reading for some years, and being taken sick, went to his home in the country, where he died.

John K. Longnecker was a native of Lehigh County; was admitted a member of the Reading bar November 6, 1843; practiced law in Reading for a few months and then returned to Allentown, where he continued in his profession successfully.

William M. Baird.—The Bairds and the Biddles have always been among the most noted people of Pennsylvania. They are of Scotch, English and Irish origin. Samuel Baird, the grandfather of William M. Baird, was an assistant quartermaster in Washington's army when they were quartered at Valley Forge. William Biddle, his ancestor on the maternal side, came to America in 1681, and was the pioneer of the Biddle family noted in Pennsylvania annals. Thomas Potts, of Colebrookdale Furnace, a pioneer in the iron business in Berks County, and Rev. Elisha Spencer, D.D., (whose loyalty was such during the times that tried men's souls that he was sent by Washington into Georgia to arouse the patriotism of the people of that State, and upon whose head a price was set by the English Tories,) were also collateral relatives of the maternal line.

Samuel Baird, the father of William M. Baird, was a leading attorney at the Berks County bar half a century ago. He was the contemporary of Governor Hister and Judges Spayd, Smith, Franks, Porter and Mallery, and of the elder Keims, Histers, Muhlenbergs, Biddles, Darlings, Bells and other leading citizens of the old borough half a century ago. He had a strong taste for the natural sciences, which, by force of example and early training, was imparted to his children. William turned his attention especially to ornithology and mineralogy, and collected many valuable specimens now in the Smithsonian Institution at Washington. Spencer F. Baird, the second son, is now and has for many years been the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and as a scientist, especially in the department of fishes, is world-renowned. Samuel, another son, died about a year ago at Carlisle, Pa.

William M. Baird, son of Samuel and Lydia (Biddle) Baird, was born in Reading August 4, 1817. His early education was obtained at the Reading schools, such as they then were. His father died in 1833, after which he spent a year at Nottingham Academy, Maryland. He entered Lafayette College in 1834, and after remaining there for some time, was transferred to Dickinson College, where his mother resided at the time, and where he graduated in 1837, in the twentieth year of his age. He subsequently attended a law school at Carlisle and was admitted to the bar there in 1840, but soon after removed to Gettysburg to practice his profession. In 1841 he was appointed to a clerkship at Washington under his uncle, Hon. Charles B. Penrose, who was solicitor of the treasury during the Harrison and Tyler administration. He held this place until 1844, when he came to Reading and was admitted to the Berks County bar, April 12th of that year, and at once took a prominent position in his profession. On the 2d of December, 1847, he was married to Harriet, daughter of Robert W. Holmes, of Cape May County, N. J. On his entrance into political life he identified himself with the Whig party, and was one of the leading spirits of that organization, and of the Republican party, which succeeded it. In 1855 he was elected mayor of Reading by a majority of seven hundred and four, one of the largest majorities ever given to any candidate before or since for that office. His administration of the city government was noted for its efficiency; but after a year's experience of its annoyances he refused to stand as a candidate for re-election. In 1862 he was chosen treasurer of the old Reading Water Company and held that responsible office until the city purchased and took charge of the works. At the outbreak of the Civil War, in 1861, and during its continuance, he was earnest in support of the Union and the administration of President Lincoln, forming one of the coterie of staunch Republicans and Union Democrats in his native county of Berks who stood by the government in its desperate struggle for supremacy. Though his health prevented him from entering the army, he did all he could by voice and pen to strengthen and uphold the government and flag of his country and was a wise and influential counselor during the war. So prominent and valuable were his services in this direction that after the war was over, and by General Grant as President, he was complimented by the important and responsible appointment to the collectorship of internal revenue in the Eighth or Berks District of Pennsylvania, in which office he served with marked ability and the fidelity and integrity consistent with his high personal character until his death, which occurred October 19, 1872.

Presbyterian faith, and was through life a faithful and consistent member of the Calvinistic Church, having filled the positions of the eldership and superintendent of the Sabbath school of the First Church of that denomination in Reading for many years. He was of a tall and commanding presence, possessed of a fine and well-cultured mind, a Christian without bigotry, charitable without ostentation, a wise counselor, a genial companion, a good citizen and patriot and a true friend. His personal character was of the highest order and won for him the respect and esteem of the entire community in which he lived, while to his immediate family he was all that a husband and father could be. His wife still survives, as do a son and daughter—Robert and Mary—who reverence his memory and honor his name.

ISAAC HIGH KEIM, son of De Benneville Keim, was born in Reading; was graduated from Princeton College; was admitted to the bar at Reading, and soon after his admission removed to St. Louis, Mo., where he successfully practiced his profession and attained great prominence, and in which city he died a few years ago.

FRANKLIN B. MILLER, son of Hon. John Miller, a State Senator from this district, was born in Reading November 12, 1831. After he acquired a preparatory education he took up the study of law and was admitted to practice December 14, 1844. In 1851 he was elected alderman of the North Ward of Reading and twice re-elected, and held that office until his death, December 13, 1865. He was an intelligent and capable magistrate.
JACOB S. LIVINGOOD was born at Womelsdorf, and is a son of the late Dr. John B. Livingood, for many years a prominent physician of that town. He is a descendant of one of the first emigrants who located in the Tulpehocken settlement. His preliminary education was acquired at Womelsdorf Union Academy and at Franklin College, Lancaster, Pa. He then entered the office of Charles Davis, Esq., for a time and was graduated from the Yale Law School in 1845. Returning to Berks County, he was admitted a member of the bar January 7, 1845, and soon thereafter began the practice of the law in co-partnership with Robert M. Barr, Esq., who afterwards became State reporter. Mr. Livingood has continued uninterruptedly in the pursuit of his profession at Reading since his admission, and is now one of the oldest active practitioners of the Berks County bar.

WILLIAM B. SCHOENER was born February 29, 1813, in Reading; attended the schools of his native town, under the instruction of Major Madara. He read law in the office of Jeremiah Hagenman, now president judge of the courts of Berks County, and was admitted to the bar August 15, 1846. He continued to practice his profession until his death, July 4, 1882.

J. DE PUY DAVIS, son of Charles Davis, Esq., was born in Allentown in 1826. After a careful preparatory education, he read law in the office of his father; then attended lectures at the Hoffman Law Institute, in Philadelphia, and was admitted to the bar January 4, 1847. Shortly after his admission he went to Mexico as a private in the Third Regiment of Kentucky Volunteers, and returned at the conclusion of the Mexican War as second lieutenant of the Eleventh Infantry of the regular army. During the Civil War he entered the Union army as lieutenant-colonel of the One Hundred and Sixty-seventh Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers. When the commander of this regiment, Colonel Charles Knoderer, was killed, he was promoted to the position of colonel. After the close of the war Colonel Davis returned to Reading, and in 1867 was chosen to represent Berks County in the State Senate, and occupied that office until 1873. In 1874 he went to Marshall, Texas, and was for six years solicitor of the Texas and Pacific Railroad. He now resides in Reading.

JAMES MAY JONES was born in Berks County; early in life he came to Reading and was engaged with Levi Hiester in the manufacture of hoes; read law and was admitted to the bar January 5, 1847. He practiced for a short time and then went to California during the "gold fever." He died in that State after being there about six months.

SAMUEL L. YOUNG was born in Rockland township, Berks County, September 24, 1822, and is a son of the late associate judge, Daniel Young. He attended the Bolmar Academy, in West Chester, where he received a preparatory education, and then began the study of law under the direction of William Strong, Esq., subsequently judge of the Supreme Court of the United States; was admitted to the bar in 1847, and soon became a prominent attorney. In 1855 he was appointed commissioner of the Circuit Court of the United States, and still continues to fill that office. During the Civil War he was appointed chief of staff to Major-General William H. Keim, and remained with him in active service until the command was relieved. When General Lee invaded Pennsylvania the first time, Major Young raised an independent cavalry company for the State service, and retained the command of it until after the battle of Antietam, when the company returned home. In 1863 he entered the military service as chief of a reconnoitering party of cavalry, and continued in it for several months. Upon his return to Reading he resumed his legal practice. Mr. Young possesses a fine library; is an excellent French and German scholar and a gentleman of fine legal attainments.

A. LUCIUS HENNERSHOTZ was born in Alsace township, now Muhlenberg; came to Reading when young; entered upon the study of the law and was admitted November 11, 1847. He engaged in the practice of his profession for about ten years, and in the meantime was several years clerk of the Select Council. He then moved to Philadelphia and became a broker and conveyancer, and now resides in that city.

J. BRIGHT SMITH was born at Reading in 1827; educated in the schools of his native town and at the University of Georgetown, D. C.; studied law in the office of his uncle, Henry W. Smith, Esq., and was admitted to the bar April 5, 1848; practiced at Reading for a few years and then moved to Freeport, Ill., where he continued in his profession until his removal to Denver. He there was elected one of the judges of the Supreme Court, under the territorial government of Colorado, and afterward practiced his profession in Denver for a number of years. He is now a resident of Reading.

William F. Filbert was a son of Peter Filbert, Esq., with whom he read law, and was admitted August 9, 1848. After practicing his profession for about ten years he died, unmarried.

A. Jordan Swartz was born in 1825. He was admitted to the bar of Berks County September 12, 1848. After practicing law nine years, he was elected mayor of Reading by the Democratic party and held the office for one term. In 1859 he received the appointment of a clerkship in the Treasury Department at Washington and shortly thereafter was promoted to the position of Second Auditor of the Treasury, which position he held until his death, in July, 1866.

Joel B. Waner was born in Maxatawny township, Berks County, March 5, 1821. He worked on his father's farm and taught school until twenty-one years of age, after which he entered Marshall College and was graduated from that institution in 1846; read law under the direction of Hon. William Strong and was admitted to practice in Berks County in 1849. He was elected mayor of Reading in 1856, and in 1858 was the Democratic candidate for Congress, to fill the unexpired term of Hon. J. Glancy Jones. In 1861 he was again elected mayor, and in 1862, while holding that position, he entered the army as major of the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and participated in the battles of South Mountain and Antietam. During the same year he was again a candidate for Congress. He had an extensive legal practice; was at one time largely interested in real estate matters. He was an estimable gentleman, congenial companion and a warm friend to all who knew him. In 1851 he married Miss Anna L. Zieber, daughter of Philip Zieber, Esq., of this city. His wife and four children survive him.

Jacob M. Sallade, a native of Reading, read law with his brother, Andrew M. Sallade, Esq., and was admitted April 6, 1849. He practiced his profession and was for many years a notary public. He died while yet a young man.

Charles B. Weaver was born in Berks County, near Weavertown. He became a member of the bar November 9, 1850, practiced law for a few years and then engaged with his father, near his home, in the iron business, and died while thus employed.

William Edmund Banks, son of Judge Banks, read law with his father, practiced here for a time and then moved to Mercer County, Pa., where he continued in his profession until his death.

Albert G. Green, son of John Green, a merchant of Reading, was born in 1828. He obtained a preparatory education in the schools of his native city and then entered Yale College, from which he was graduated in 1849. He studied law in the office of Hon. David F. Gordon, and was admitted to the bar November 11, 1851, since which time he has been actively and successfully engaged in practice at Reading. He served as city auditor during the years 1856-57, and as city solicitor for one term, from 1857 to 1859. For a period of eight years he was a member of the Board of School Controllers, officiating as president of that body for two years.

Edmond L. Smith was born October 23, 1829, and is a son of the late George Smith and grandson of Hon. Frederick Smith, judge of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. He obtained his elementary education at the Reading Academy and afterward entered the University of Georgetown, D. C., where he was graduated at the age of nineteen, taking the second honor of his class. He studied law in the office of his uncle, Henry W. Smith, and Edward P. Pearson, Esqs., and was admitted to the bar in November 11, 1851. In 1858 he was a member of the Legislature from Berks County. When the Civil War opened he joined the army with Ringgold's Battery as a private. Owing to the large number of men desiring to enlist in this company, another company was formed and Mr. Smith was chosen its captain, but was transferred to the regular army by a captain's commission dated May 14, 1861, and, excepting a year of captivity, was in the military service to the end of the war. In the East he served under General McClellan in the battles of the Peninsula, South Mountain and Antietam, and under General Burnside at Fredericksburg. In these engagements he commanded a battalion of his regiment. In the following spring he was ordered with his regiment to join General Rosecrans in the West, and was captured at the battle of Chickamauga, September 20, 1863. During the second day of this battle, the command of the regiment devolved upon him, and whilst leading it to repel the enemy's assault, his horse was shot from under him. He received a major's brevet for bravery and meritorious conduct on this occasion. For nearly thirteen months he was in Libby and other Southern prisons. Whilst in Libby he was engaged with others for sixty days in the construction of a tunnel, through which, on a dark night in February, one hundred and ten prisoners passed into freedom, but only for a time; for within three weeks one-half of the fugitives, of which he was one, were recaptured and for two weeks placed in a dungeon, on an allowance of bread and water. Subsequently, in May, whilst en route to Andersonville, he jumped from the car with three of his companions, at night, and remained out upwards of six weeks, lurking in the swamps of Georgia and subsisting upon berries and raw rice. He was recaptured with his comrades on an island in the Savannah River, where they had taken refuge from a close pursuit made with dogs. This was followed by another dungeon sojourn on meagre diet in the Charleston jail. It was whilst confined here that he was visited by Major Edmund Deslonde, of the Confederate army an old school-mate and fellow-graduate, through whose good offices he was finally paroled and subsequently exchanged in October, 1864.

In 1867 he resigned his commission in the army, and associated himself with his brother, Hon. J. Bright Smith, in the practice of the law at Denver, Col., where he now resides. During his residence in Denver he has several times represented the strong Republican county of Arapahoe in the Legislature, though himself a Democrat.

On his brother's retirement from the practice he united with Judge Wells, formerly of the Colorado Supreme Court, and Hon. Thomas Mason, in the well-known legal firm of Wells, Smith & Mason, with which he is now connected.

Charles Oscar Wagner was born in Leipsic, Germany, in 1824. He came to Reading when a young man and was dependent upon his own energies for support. He first engaged in teaching the German language for several years, and, after the necessary preparations, was admitted to the bar on November 5, 1852. During the Confederate invasion, in 1863, he enlisted as an officer in the Ringgold Artillery, and, while in the service, contracted typhoid fever, from the effect of which he died September 6, 1863, aged thirty-nine years.

Michael P. Boyer was born September 13, 1831, at Gibraltar Forge; acquired a preparatory education in Berneville; came to Reading in 1849 and served as an assistant in the prothonotary's office for three years. He pursued the study of the law under the direction of H. W. Smith and J. Pringle, Esqs., and was admitted to the bar August 8, 1853; was a member of the Legislature in 1860. He died August 29, 1867, at the early age of thirty-five years.

Wharton Morris, son of Thomas Morris, Esq., is a native of Reading. After acquiring a preliminary education, he pursued the study of the law under the instruction of William B. Heiskill, Esq., of Philadelphia, and in the office of his father. Having completed the required course, he was admitted to the bar November 15, 1854, and has since practiced in Reading. During the years 1860–61–62 he was solicitor for the directors of the poor of Berks County, and afterwards served as District Attorney from 1865 to 1868.

F. Leaf Smith, son of the late Henry W. Smith and grandson of Judge Frederick Smith, was born in Reading, attended the schools of his native place, and was graduated from Georgetown College, D.C., in 1834, taking all the leading honors of his class. He read law in the office of his father and was admitted to the bar November 10, 1855. He has lately retired from practice, devoting his time to his private affairs.

Amos B. Wanner was born in 1831 in Maxawany township, Berks County. His preliminary education was acquired in a private academy near his native place, and at Port Royal Seminary, in Philadelphia. He then pursued the study of the law, under the instruction of his brother, J. B.
Wanner, Esq., and Hon. J. Glancy Jones, and was admitted to the bar January 12, 1857. He has since practiced at Reading. Mr. Wanner represented Berks County in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives in 1875 and 1876, and was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention which met at St. Louis in 1876.

George F. Baer was born in Somerset County, Pa., September 26, 1842. His father, Solomon Baer, was born in Northampton County (near what is now known as Unionville, in Lehigh County) in 1794, and moved, with his parents, to Maryland, near Cumberland, when six years old; and he settled in Somerset County in 1816, where he continued to reside till his death, in 1882. He was aged eighty-eight years and left to survive him four daughters and three sons, the latter being William J. (president judge of the Somerset and Bedford District), Herman L. (a practicing attorney at Somerset) and George F., the subject of this sketch; a fourth son, Harry G. (who was enlisted in the Civil War as an officer in Company B, Fifty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, commanded by Col. Jacob M. Campbell), having died in 1874.

John Jacob Baer, the father of Solomon Baer, was born in Northampton County in 1761, on the homestead, and removed to Maryland in 1800, where he carried on farming and died in 1823, aged sixty-two years; and Christophel Baer, the grandfather, emigrated from the Palatinate in 1747, and, upon arriving in Philadelphia on August 1st of that year, proceeded to Northampton County, purchased farming land and carried on farming.

When George F. Baer was six years old his parents removed to the town of Somerset, and he there attended the schools of the town and the Somerset Institute (of which Professor Charles L.
Loose was the principal) till 1855, when he entered the printing-office of the Somerset Democrat (then published by Chauncey F. Mitchell), and worked at the printing trade until April, 1858. He then attended the Somerset Academy for one year. In the spring of 1859 he became the chief clerk and book-keeper of the Ashtola Mills, a large manufacturing establishment ten miles from Johnstown. He occupied this position till the summer of 1860, when he entered the sophomore class of Franklin and Marshall College. Whilst pursuing his course of study in that institution the Civil War broke out, and in the spring of 1861 he and his brother Harry purchased the Somerset Democrat and began its publication. After conducting it successfully till the following September his brother Harry enlisted in the volunteer service, leaving him in sole charge of the newspaper. He was employed at the case during the day, and at night edited the paper. At times he was so busily engaged at printing that he was obliged to compose and set up his editorials while standing before the case. During this time he kept up a private course of studies, with the view of eventually returning to college. He continued to edit the Democrat until August, 1862, when he raised a company of volunteers, which was mustered into the service as Company E, One Hundred and Thirty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, of which he was duly commissioned captain. At that time he was not twenty years old. He served as captain for nine months, the period of enlistment, acting part of the time by detail as adjutant-general of the Second Brigade, in General Humphrey’s division. His regiment joined the Army of the Potomac at the second battle of Bull Run, and was with that army at the battles of Antietam, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville. Its most distinguished service was in forming the advance line of the army in the famous charge on the Fredericksburg Heights, December 13, 1862. He was mustered out of service with his company on May 26, 1863.

Upon returning home Mr. Baer selected the law as his profession, and after pursuing a regular course of legal studies in the office of his brothers—who were practicing attorneys at the Somerset bar—he was admitted to practice at April term, 1864. He practiced his profession at Somerset till April, 1868, when he removed to Reading, having been admitted to the Berks County bar a short time before (January 22, 1868), whilst on a visit to Reading.

During his practice of four years under his brothers at Somerset, he became thoroughly acquainted with the practice of the law in all its branches, especially in that department which related to pleading and the trial of cases.

A few years after his arrival at Reading his general practice began to increase rapidly and he soon won a place in the foremost rank of the attorneys at the bar, becoming more and more successful with each passing year. During the past fifteen years he has been prominently identified with all the important litigation before the several courts of Berks County, and also before the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, upon cases removed from this and other districts. Shortly before the death of John S. Richards, Esq., in 1872, he became the resident solicitor of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, and he has since occupied that position. His arrival in this county marks the beginning of a new generation of young attorneys at this bar, who have distinguished themselves by devotion to their profession and have won that success in it which well directed energy merits. In 1876 he was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of the United States, Washington, D. C.

Since his residence here Mr. Baer has been interested in the general development of the community, through improvements. He is connected with different industrial nature. Since his residence here Mr. Baer has been interested in the general development of the community, through improvements of various kinds. He is connected with different enterprises of an industrial nature. At the present time he is president of the Temple Iron Company, chairman of the Bushong Paper Company (Limited) and a director in the following organizations: Reading Fire Insurance Company, Reading Iron-Works, Clymer Iron Company, Keystone Coal Company, Boyertown Mining Company, Penn National Bank and the Reading Hospital. Mr. Baer is also a trustee of the Franklin and Marshall College and of Palatinate College. The former institution conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts.
a hardware-store. In 1865 he became a student-at-law in the office of John S. Richards, Esq., and was admitted to the bar August 10, 1868. Owing to the defective eyesight of his preceptor, soon after admission to practice, he assumed almost the entire management of Mr. Richards' extensive business, and executed it with ability and dispatch. In the mean time he was an ardent student of his profession and overtasked his mental powers, causing sickness and premature death at the age of about thirty years.

Benjamin B. Laucks was born in Oley township; educated in the schools of the vicinity of his birth; read law in the office of his father, Franklin B. Laucks, Esq., of Reading, and was admitted to the bar January 11, 1869. After practicing for a while at Reading, removed to Pottsville, and died there.

H. Willis Bland was born August 20, 1846, at Blandon, Berks County; acquired a preliminary education in school at Birdsboro. On September 4, 1861, he joined Company H, Eighty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and served in all the engagements in which the regiment participated until expiration of term of service, in September, 1864. In February, 1867, he removed to Reading and read law in the office of J. Howard Jacobs, Esq., and was admitted to the bar April 12, 1869.

Henry C. G. Reber was born in Penn township, Berks County, December 18, 1846; was educated at Franklin and Marshall College, from which he was graduated in 1866. Immediately thereafter he entered the law office of Jeremiah Hagenman, Esq., at Reading, now president judge of Berks County, and after pursuing his legal studies for three years, was admitted to the bar April 12, 1869. He has practiced his profession at Reading since. He filled the office of district attorney for one term of three years, from 1875 to 1877.

Cyrus G. Derr was born July 18, 1848, at Lebanon, Pa. He obtained his education in the schools of his native town; read law in the office of his father, William M. Derr, Esq.; attended the Law Department of the University of Pennsylvania; was admitted a member of the Lebanon County bar in 1869 and in 1872 located in Reading, where he has since practiced his profession.

Morton L. Montgomery, the author of this history, was born at Reading November 10, 1846. His father, John Leonard Montgomery, came from Northumberland County, Pa., to Reading in 1835, and in 1842 was married to Catharine Rush, who was born at Reading in 1810. Her father, Philip Rush, a first major in the War of 1812-15, and a weaver by occupation, was also born at Reading, in 1783; and her grandfather, Stephen Rush, moved from Hereford township, in this county, to Reading shortly after the town was laid out.

Mr. Montgomery was educated in the common schools of his native place till 1863, having spent the last three years in the Reading High School; and, being inclined to mathematics and draughting, he then entered the office of Mr. Daniel Zacharias, county surveyor of Berks County, and city engineer of Reading, for the purpose of learning practical surveying and civil engineering. He continued in this office at Reading eight months, when he went to Pottsville, Schuylkill County, at the request of Mr. Zacharias, to enter a larger field for the prosecution of his studies, and he was there employed by Mr. Daniel Hoffman, a mining, civil and topographical engineer. After remaining with Mr. Hoffman the greater part of two years he returned to Reading, and entered the office of Jacob S. Livingood, Esq., as a student-at-law. He spent the required term of three years with Mr. Livingood, and, besides prosecuting his legal studies, he attended an extensive practice, the labors of which consisted in the preparation of cases, arguments, proceedings in partition, conveyancing, etc. After traveling for a time in the fall of 1869 through the Middle and Eastern States, he entered the Law Department of Harvard University and remained there two terms. Upon returning to Reading he spent a year in the office of Samuel L. Young, Esq., in order to comply with the new rules of court which had been adopted during his absence and which required the last year of study to be passed in a lawyer's office. He was admitted to the bar on August 28, 1871, since which time he has been in active practice at Reading.

Shortly after his admission to the bar he became earnestly interested in the history of his native county, and, after he had collected much valuable material relating to the early settlements and formation of the townships and the development of all the districts in the county, he determined to write and publish the "History of Berks County." In the course of his investigations he contributed a number of historical articles to the press, and in 1883 he published the "Political Hand-Book of Berks County, Pa." In 1884 he issued a prospectus, announcing his proposed publication of the "History of Reading," but finding, in the course of his undertaking, that the practice of the law and the labors of an author and publisher could not be conducted together successfully, he entered into a contract with Messrs. Everts, Peck & Richards, publishers of histories, etc., at Philadelphia, for the publication of the "History of Berks County" in one large octavo volume, to comprise all the history of the entire county, and thereby conclude his undertaking more speedily and satisfactorily. The labor of Mr. Montgomery in this behalf has been necessarily severe during the last ten years and has required the utmost persistence to accomplish his purpose. During this time he has carried on his investigations without any assistance, having visited different places, traveled throughout the county repeatedly and examined newspaper files, county records and libraries here and elsewhere.

In 1874, Mr. Montgomery was married to Florence Baugh Bush, a daughter of Dr. Andrew and Mary Baugh Bush, of East Coventry township, Chester County, Pa. They have a daughter, Florence Baugh Montgomery, who was born at Reading, 1876.

and the judges at that place in 1790, "for the common good," approved and recommended the printing and publishing of his book, entitled "Reports of Cases ruled and adjudged in the Courts of Pennsylvania before and since the Revolution." Mr. Dallas accordingly published the cases. The first volume was inscribed to the Hon. Thomas McKean, chief justice of Pennsylvania. He published four books, covering the adjudications for fifty years, from 1754 to 1805, and they were known as "Dallas' Reports." Subsequently other attorneys also compiled and published reports, namely,—Yeates, 4 volumes; Binney, 6; Sergeant & Rawle, 17; Rawle, 5; Penrose & Watts, 3; Watts, 10; Wharton, 6; Watts & Sergeant, 9.

During the publication of the last-named reports, in the year 1843, a number of prominent attorneys, including David F. Gordon, Jacob Hoffman, Henry W. Smith, William Strong, J. Pringle Jones, George G. Barclay and Robert M. Barr, met and formed a society for the purpose of organizing a "Berks County Law Library." A fund was raised by them among the members of the bar, who each subscribed five dollars, and with it they purchased the first State Reports and certain law-books. This collection of reports and books was placed in the small retiring-room of the judges, situated at the southern end of the bench in the court-house, and formed the nucleus, from which has been developed the present extensive law library.

The reports continued to be published in the same manner, without authority of law, from 1790 till 1845. Then an Act of Assembly was passed, authorizing the Governor of the State to appoint a State reporter, and commission him for the period of five years. The reporter commissioned was required to be "a person of known integrity, experience and learning in the law." This appointment to be made every five years.

The first person appointed was Robert M. Barr, Esq., a practicing attorney at Reading. He was appointed before July, 1845. He died previous to the expiration of his term of service, and his friend, Hon. J. Pringle Jones, finished the work which he had left incomplete, and, with the consent of Governor Johnson, published the materials collected for the use of his family.
Mr. Barr, as State reporter, published ten volumes, two a year, as required by the law, and Mr. Jones published two volumes, being the eleventh and twelfth volumes of State Reports. George W. Harris, of Harrisburg, was appointed, in 1849, as the second State reporter. He served his term until 1855, and published two volumes a year, and two additional volumes (under act of May 8, 1855), altogether twelve volumes, from the twelfth to twenty-fourth State Reports. Subsequent State reporters have been Casey, Wright, Smith, Norris and Outerbridge.

The law library of the Reading bar continued a feeble existence till 1859; then a determined effort was made by the attorneys to more thoroughly organize a society for this purpose and to increase the collection of books, and they decided to obtain a charter. Accordingly, a petition for the incorporation of the Berks County Law Library was presented to court on February 28, 1859, and the decree of incorporation was made on April 11th following, by Hon. J. Pringle Jones, then president judge, on motion of John S. Richards, Esq. The petition was signed by the following active members of the bar:

The object of the association was “to establish and perpetuate a Law and Miscellaneous Library for the use of the Judges of the Courts, the members of the Bar and the Commissioners of the County.”

Various plans were suggested for the purpose of raising funds with which to keep up the necessary supply of books; and, after considering them for some months, finally John S. Richards, Esq., conceived and expressed earnestly the idea of obtaining a portion of the fines which were imposed in the Quarter Sessions. At that time Mr. David L. Wenrich, an enterprising, progressive and liberal-minded farmer, residing in Lower Heidelberg township, was one of the county commissioners, and J. Hagenman, Esq. (now president judge), was the commissioners’ solicitor. The latter introduced the matter to Mr. Wenrich’s attention and explained the advantages which would result to the county in various ways, and Mr. Wenrich, appreciating the movement, then induced the county commissioners to agree to allow one-half of the fines to be appropriated to the law library for the period of five years. Subsequently, to legalize this appropriation, an act of Assembly was passed on March 24, 1860, authorizing one-half of the fines to be paid to the treasurer of the library for the period of five years, and providing that the books purchased “shall be for the use of the several courts, the commissioners of the county and the members of the association.” This act was extended in 1866 for another period of five years, and in 1870 the provision in the act relating to a limit of time was repealed. From 1860 till the present time such fines have been received by the library and appropriated towards the purchase of law-books, and necessary miscellaneous books for reference; and under this system the library has become very valuable.

The collection of books comprises all the Pennsylvania State Reports, digests and prominent treatises on law topics, complete sets of reports of the following States: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Maryland and Ohio, and also a full set of English reports. There are also promiscuous reports from other States, encyclopedias, etc. The number of books in April, 1886, was thirty-eight hundred and fifty.

In 1869 a fire-proof extension of two wings was constructed at the rear of the court-house, and then the library was removed from the small and inconvenient room where it had been located for twenty-five years into a fine, large and very pleasant room on the second floor in the upper wing. Opportunities for increase were afforded thereby, and from that time the books multiplied rapidly.

LEGAL ASSOCIATION.—In 1867 a “Legal Association of Berks County, Pa.,” was formed
The medical profession of Berks County

'the human body and the human profession. The superstructure whose base the human frame is the human profession that employs the sciences of medicine and surgery, whose duties it is to study the nature of the human body, to protect it from injury, to cure its diseases, and to promote its health. The medical profession is the foundation of all sciences, and the sciences are the body of knowledge. The medical profession is the servant of all sciences, and all sciences are the servants of the medical profession. The medical profession is the chief among professions, and the professions are the chief among sciences. The medical profession is the master of all sciences, and all sciences are the servants of the medical profession. The medical profession is the ruler of all sciences, and all sciences are the subjects of the medical profession. The medical profession is the judge of all sciences, and all sciences are the subjects of the medical profession. The medical profession is the arbiter of all sciences, and all sciences are the subjects of the medical profession.

medical treatment was largely administered by the clergy who attended to the wants of the sick as well as the duties of a clerical profession. This plan fettered the progress of the profession, but was infinitely better than the curse of quackery, as the ecclesiastics in general were intelligent men.

Many interesting allusions are made to the art of healing by famous personages. We have a Scriptural reference of David in his youth, with his harp, striving by the aid of music to cure the mental derangement of Saul. The medicinal virtues of music were manifold and marvelous, according to many classic writers. Says the book of Ecclesiastes: "The Lord hath created medicines out of the earth and he that is wise will not abhor them." Pliny speaks of one Chrysappas, who became famous by advocating cabbages as the panacea for all complaints. A quack with the distinguished name of Graham, in 1782, created a sensation in London by building a mansion called the "Temple of Health." Among other whimsicalities, he claimed to have discovered the "elixir of life," by taking a portion of which, at the small cost of one thousand pounds sterling, the patient might live as long as he wished. Dryden confessed his indebtedness to cathartics for propitiating his muse; his imaginative faculty being thus dependent, as he thought, upon the elasticity of his viscera. Pope, a few days before his death, said, "My medical associates are the most amiable companions, the best friends and the most learned men I know." Solomon tells us, "A merry heart doeth good like medicine," and a great writer once said "Hope and success are finer tonics than any to be found in an apothecary's shop, and even fear may boast its cure." Sir Philip Sydney defines health thus,—

"Great temperance, open air, Easy labor, little care."

A great Frenchman once said: "When I die I will leave behind me three great physicians—Water, Exercise, Diet."

Hippocrates may be regarded as the father of medicine; but it was to the collected wisdom and experience of his successors, many ages after his death, that the science of medicine owes its present glory and renown.

The following medical men of half a century or more ago lived to bless mankind: Harvey, Garth, Radcliffe, Meade, Askew, Pitcairn, Baillie, Cullen, Friend, Linacre, Cains, Hunter, Denman, Velpau, Listea and Brocklesby.

Among the representative physicians of America who won renown during the past hundred years are Morgan, Rush, Kuhn, Bond, Chapman, G. B. Wood, Null and Flint, in Medicine; Barton, Physick, Mott, Gibson, Gross, Pancoast and Hamilton, in Surgery; Shippen, Wistar and Horner, in Anatomy and Surgery; Hodge, Druro and Meigs, in Obstetrics. All of those named are dead. Among the living American physicians who have a distinguished reputation are Agnew and Bigelow, in Surgery; Stillé, Da Costa and Alonzo Clarke, in Medicine; Leidy, in Anatomy; Barker, in Obstetrics; Dalton, in Physiology; Thomas and Goodall, in Diseases of Women.

Berkers County produced representative medical men of ability and skill, some of whom attained more than a local reputation. Of such were the Ottos and the Hiesters, Gries, Gerasch, Marshall, Wood, Plank, Tryon, Pounder, Wily, Herbst, Schoener, Moore, Bratt, Ulrich, Eckert, Tyson, Hunter, Baum, Wallance, etc., and a number of living practitioners now in the ranks of the profession.

INTRODUCTION OF MEDICAL PRACTICE INTO BERKS COUNTY.—At the time of the first settlement of Berks County, scarcely a century had passed since Harvey had expanded his complete discovery of the circulation of the blood. Books were then rare, newspapers almost unknown, the medical almanac was not dreamed of, institutions in which the science of medicine was taught were few, and there were few persons in Pennsylvania at that period whose knowledge of medicine exceeded that of the intelligent housewife of the present day. Our Materia Medica did not yet contain the names quinine, morphine, strychnine, iodine and the iodides, the bromides, hydrocyanic acid, cod-liver oil and chloroform. The practical application of the stethoscope, the pleximeter, the speculum, the ophthalmoscope and the laryngoscope in the physical diagnosis of disease had never yet been made. Nor had chemistry, the microscope and electricity been successfully applied to such a purpose. Lady Montague had not yet brought from Constantinople the practice of inoculation, nor Jeaner developed his system of vaccination.

As in Egypt, where the healing art was first cultivated, and as among the Jews under Moses, so among the early settlers of Berks County, the offices of clergyman and physician were often combined in the same person. The knowledge of medicine of those individuals was not extensive. The various ailments incident to human kind in those days were supposed to be cured by the virtues of herbs found within the borders of nearly every settlement. The custom of repairing periodically to the physician to be ‘cupped’ or ‘blooded’ was almost universally prevalent. The doctor did not enjoy the exclusive privilege of this practice, as the barber was a competitor and did a large amount of it. The red and white striped pole, now used to designate a barber-shop, is but a relic of the olden-time advertisement, painted to represent the blood trickling down the arm of a patient. The minister, the barber, the midwife and the housewife seemed to possess all the qualifications necessary to act as adjunct doctors. It was only when life was supposed to be in imminent danger that the educated physician was summoned to the bedside. Midwives attended to a large amount of the practice without entertaining the remotest idea that they were performing duties which should require the attention of a skilled practitioner. The practice of these people is not yet discontinued in Berks County. A large part of the treatment of the sick, especially in the rural districts, a century ago, was performed by self-made physicians or irregular practitioners. Nearly every township had one or two of these. Domestic remedies were much used and are still in vogue, as well as the magic art of ‘powwowing,’ a relic of barbarism. Sometimes a patient was bled or purged, and if no improvement followed, a physician was sent for, who examined the patient and diagnosed the case. He then required some one of the family to call at his office every few days to report the condition of the patient. In that way a good practitioner attended to the sick of a great many families over a large scope of country. He almost invariably traveled on horseback, with his ‘schwerick sock’ (saddle bags) to store his medicines. Many of the practitioners of a later date attended one term of lectures and then began practicing without receiving a diploma.

During the early history of medical practice in this county the principal diseases were malarial, intermittent and remittent fevers, or ague and fever, popularly termed “the shakes.” The universal remedy was Peruvian bark in the form of powder, and was known to the common people as “barricks.”

There were a few cases of yellow fever in Berks County during its prevalence at Philadelphia in 1803. The Asiatic cholera prevailed in Reading to a limited degree in 1832, and a few persons died from its effects.

Scarlatina and dysentery were frequently epidemic a half century ago, and carried off many children at times. Diphtheria made its appearance in this county about 1850, and since that date has often been epidemic. It is a disease that was much dreaded at first; medical skill seems to have it now under better control.

In the foregoing paragraphs it was attempted to give a few facts of the history of medicine, the profession of which, though arduous in the extreme, is noble and honorable,—equal in comparison to any other of the learned professions. Few, we believe, who have entered it would exchange for any other profession. The variety of learning required, the constant access of new truths, the earnest, anxious, though interesting, occupation it affords to the mind, renders it absolutely absorbing and exciting; but it develops, cultivates and refines the intellect and ennobles the soul. Some of the finest specimens of true manhood to-day are found within the medical fraternity. The intelligent and conscientious physician acquires an extensive knowledge of human nature, observes the beautiful traits of domestic affection, receives the gratitude of many people, the cordial friendship of others, and the universal respect of all. There is but one drawback to the profession, and that is the innate desire of so many people to be humbugged by quacks and charlatans, whom every enlightened individual should shun.

DECEASED PHYSICIANS OF BERKS COUNTY.

All the facts that could be obtained of the medical practitioners now deceased, who resided in Berks County, are here given in the form of biographical sketches, carefully prepared with data obtained from the best sources of information.

Jacob Plank so far as is known, was the pioneer physician of Berks County. He was a Huguenot, and located in Oley township soon after the first settlement of that region. His medical education was acquired between the years 1696 and 1700, when he was a student at the University of Basel, Switzerland, under the instruction of Theodorus Zuingerus, professor of the practice of medicine in that institution, and author of works on “Materia Medica,” “Botany” and “Pharmacy.” Soon after his medical studies were completed he emigrated to America, and while on his way to a settlement in Berks County, he was detained at Oley through the importunities of a settler whose wife lay sick at the time. His skill in the successful treatment of this case won the confidence of the settlers, and they induced him to remain in their midst. It is not known when or whom he married or when he died. He located in this county at a very early date, and in 1720 signed a petition, together with other early settlers, asking for the erection of a new township to be called “Oley.”

Dr. D. Heber Plank, of Morgantown, this county, is a great-great grandson of Dr. Jacob Plank, and has in his possession some of his ancestor's medical books.

George De Benneville, one of the pioneer physicians of the county, was born in London July 26, 1703. He was a descendant of George De Benneville, a Frenchman of Normandy, born in the city of Rouen. Dr. De Benneville came to America in 1745, and settled in Oley township, Berks County, with a colony of Huguenots. Among them were the De Bertolets, who located there as early as 1726. On the year of his arrival at the Oley settlement, Dr. De Benneville was married to Esther De Ber-was stationed at Philadelphia, and in April, 1777, he was at Albany. While there, he was director-general of the hospitals of the North Department. Through his zeal in public service, he was prostrated by illness, and he died at Reading, October, 1781.

Bodo Otto, one of the first skilled physicians and surgeons of Reading, was a descendant of distinguished ancestry. His father, Christopher Otto, was born in the Kingdom of Hanover, Germany, about 1685. While in the service of Baron Bodo von Obergs, one of the King's noblemen, he was married, in 1708, to Maria Magdalena Nei- neken in the Neu-stadten Church, Hanover, by the court chaplain, Rev. Wahren- dorf. Christopher Otto was appointed controller, by the Elector of Brunswick-Lueneberg, for the county of Schwartzfels, and died at Lauden- berg, October 21, 1752. Dr. Bodo Otto was born of this marriage in 1709, and obtained his Christian name in honor of Baron Bodo, who was his sponsor in baptism, shortly after his birth. He acquired an excellent scholastic education, and having attained manhood, desired to study medicine and surgery. Application was accordingly made to Augustus Daniel Meier, in the town of Hartzberg, near the Hartz, and, according to the custom of his native land, in order to give special privileges, two witnesses who were present at the marriage of his parents, testified as to the legitimacy of his birth. He was then accorded the best advantages the country afforded, and was regularly educated as a surgeon under the authority of the government in the university of Göttingen, where he also received special instruction in anatomy, physiology, botany and physics. He then was received as a member of the College of Surgeons at Lueneberg and had charge of the prisoners in the Fortress Kaleberg, and the Invalides quartered in the town. He thus became very proficient in the practice of his profession and his talent and ability were appreciated, acknowledged and approved in letters of commendation from the royal surgeons, by officers in command, and by people of distinction in his native land. In 1736 he married Elizabeth Sauer- chen, who died in Germany in 1738 leaving one child, Mary Elizabeth. On May 21, 1742 he was again married, to Doratha Doehmchen, by whom he had four children, Frederick Christopher, who was born August 22, 1748, and died November 18, 1795; Doratha Sophia, born February 28, 1745, and died November 16, 1774; Bodo, born September 14, 1748, and died January 20, 1782; John Augustus, born July 20, 1751, died December 16, 1834.

Three years after the death of his father, Dr. Bodo Otto and his family, together with a number of other families of the better class of Germans, owing to the political dissensions and revolution in their native land, determined to seek new homes in America, in which thousands of thrifty German emigrants were already prospering. The vessel in which they sailed left Amsterdam May 1, 1755, and landed November 10th of the same year. He located in Philadelphia, where he was soon highly esteemed for his literary, medical and surgical ability, and rapidly acquired a practice. As the tide of German emigration was moving up the Schuylkill Valley, whose fertile lands were fast becoming occupied by a thrifty class of settlers, Dr. Otto followed the footsteps of many of his worthy countrymen, and moved to Reading, locating here in 1773.

About this time the Revolutionary sentiment in the colonies was gathering force. The Germans were not behind in condemning the British oppression, and the German settlers in this grand old county of Berks, in common with other counties in the province of Pennsylvania, settled by the same people, soon became devoted advocates of a new and independent form of government. As an evidence of the influence of Bodo Otto among his fellow-countrymen, with whom he had resided but three years, he was in 1776 chosen one of the delegates to represent Berks County in the Provincial Conference which met in Carpenter’s Hall, Philadelphia, June 18, 1776. As a further evidence of the patriotic devotion of Bodo Otto to the interests of his adopted country, early in the progress of the Revolution he offered his services as a surgeon in the American army, and they were gratefully accepted.

During the gloomiest period of that prolonged war for liberty and independence, while the army of General Washington was encamped at Valley Forge, Dr. Bodo Otto, assisted by his two sons, Drs. John A. and Bodo Otto, Jr., were surgeons in charge of the camp hospital. He endured the same privations during the memorable winter of 1777-78, while devoting himself to the welfare of the sick and wounded.

At the close of the Revolutionary War Dr. Otto returned to Reading, resumed the practice of his profession and in the meantime took a prominent part in the administration of local affairs.

He died June 13, 1787, aged seventy-eight years. His remains were interred and now rest in the old Trinity church yard of Reading, he being a member of the Trinity congregation.

His second wife died at Philadelphia in 1765, and he was married a third time, on December 18, 1768, to Margaret Parish, an English lady of Philadelphia. She died in 1801. They had no children. (All of the above statements relative to Dr. Otto are substantiated by documentary evidence perused by the writer and now in the possession of John A. Otto, of Williamsport, Pa.)

The following certificate is of special interest:

“This is to certify that Dr. Bodo Otto served in the capacity of a senior surgeon in the Hospitals of the United States in the year 1776, and when the new arrangement, in April, 1777, took place, he was continued in that station until the subsequent arrangement of September, 1780, when he was appointed hospital physician and surgeon, in which capacity he officiated until a reduction of a number of the officers of said department, in January, 1782, was made. During the whole of the time he acted in the above stations he discharged his duty with great faithfulness and attention. The humanity, for which he was distinguished, towards the brave American soldiery, claims the thanks of every lover of his country, and the success attending his practice will be a sufficient recommendation of his abilities in his profession.

“Given under my hand, the 26th day of January, 1782.

BODO OTTO, JR., son of Dr. Bodo Otto by his second marriage, was born in Hanover, Germany, September 14, 1748, and died June 20, 1782. As above mentioned, he was a surgeon of the Revolution. He lived at Woodbury, N. J., and during his absence from home, attending to hospital duty, his political antagonists, the Tories, burned his house, and his wife and children, during inclement weather, were driven from home, and all the products of his farm were consumed. The incendiaries were apprehended and convicted. Notwithstanding the calamity in which their acts had plunged him, Dr. Otto actually took a long ride on horseback to obtain their pardon. Being overtaken by a violent storm on his return, he contracted a severe catarrh, which was soon followed by pulmonary consumption, and he died at the early age of thirty years, leaving three children, one of whom, Dr. John C. Otto, a graduate of Princeton College in 1792, a medical student under the renowned Dr. Benjamin Rush, who recognized his amiable deportment and promising talents, and awarded him many tokens of esteem and affection. He was graduated in medicine from the University of Pennsylvania in 1796, and soon took rank in Philadelphia among such eminent physicians of that day as Rush, James, Parke, Dewees, Physick, Hewson, Chapman and others. In 1798 he was chosen one of the physicians of the Philadelphia Dispensary, and upon the death of Dr. Rush, he succeeded his eminent preceptor as one of the physicians of the Pennsylvania Hospital, and held the position for twenty-two years, when he resigned. He died June 26, 1844, recognized by the profession as an eminent practitioner, a fine scholar and a cultured gentleman.

John A. Otto, son of Dr. Bodo Otto, Sr., was born in Hanover, Germany, on July 30, 1751; arrived with his father at Philadelphia in 1755. In addition to attending the best schools of that day, he received instructions from his father, under whom he served as assistant surgeon through the Revolutionary War. It was upon his recommendation, after the capture of the Hessians at Trenton, that some of them were brought to Reading and there encamped on Penn Mount. He was one of the escort.

Dr. Otto settled in Reading with his father, in 1773, and three years later was married to Catharine Hitner, of Marble Hall, Montgomery County, Pa. Like his father, he showed a patriotic devotion to his country by refusing to accept a pension for his services, as a surgeon at Valley Forge. He soon acquired a lucrative practice in Reading, and became one of the leading physicians of his time in the State, and maintained that honorable position until his death, December 14, 1834, aged eighty-three years. His wife died of grief a few days later. He was one of the court justices under the State Constitution of 1776, and was appointed prothonotary of Berks County in 1790.

The children of Dr. John A. and Catharine Otto, who arrived at maturity, were Margaret, married to Benjamin Whitman; Mary, married to Gabriel Hiester, who served as one of the court justices, and afterwards, under the Constitution of 1790, was an associate judge of Berks County from 1819 to 1823; Sarah, married to Jonathan Hiester, a member of the Berks County bar; Elizabeth, married to Henry Richards; Maria, married to Joseph Wood; and Daniel H. married to Sarah Whitman; and Dr. John B. Otto.

John B. Otto, who is well remembered by many citizens of Reading, was a son of Dr. John A. Otto, and, at the time of his death, was the oldest physician in the city, in which place he was born December 20, 1785. He was graduated from Princeton College, read medicine under Dr. Wistar, of Philadelphia, and was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1808, when such men as Rush, Physick, Wistar, Shippen, Barton and Woodhouse were professors. He began the practice of medicine in his native town, where for half a century he enjoyed a large and varied professional experience. He was a man of more than ordinary energy and activity, and possessed remarkable powers of endurance, both physical and mental.

For a short time during the last war with Great Britain he acted as surgeon in the army, and was with the troops at York when General Ross was marching on Baltimore. He devoted himself to his profession so assiduously and absorbingly that he scarcely had a leisure hour, even for the repose so necessary to the human system; and yet he was never weary of his work, but always ready to answer the calls of his patients with cheerfulness and alacrity. He was a gentleman of the old school. He would rather have suffered any wrong than inflict an injury. Singularly inoffensive and peaceful in disposition and life, unostentatious in manners and unambitious in aim, year after year he pursued the rounds of visitation to the sick and dying, doing whatever skill and assiduous attention could accomplish to relieve suffering and heal disease.

Reading,” remarks the Journal, “who conferred more substantial good on so great a number, or who received less in return for the good bestowed. It is speaking in moderation to say that the services rendered gratuitously to the poor, if they had been repaid in money, would of themselves have constituted an estate; but he had a richer reward,—the blessings of them that were ready to perish fell upon him.”

He died August 2, 1858, aged seventy-three years. The remains were conveyed to the Charles Evans Cemetery. The houses in the square where the deceased resided and on North Fifth Street were closed during the passage of the funeral cortège as a mark of respect to the memory of one who had been so long identified with Reading that his death was regarded as a public loss.

Dr. Otto was married, in 1810, to Esther G. Witman, daughter of Judge William Witman. She was a graduate of the Moravian Seminary at Bethlehem, Pa., and a lady of many accomplishments and excellent Christian virtues. She was enthusiastically devoted to the interests of the Lutheran Church, which was annually the recipient of her bounty, and the poor always found in her a friend. She died July 10, 1880, aged eighty-four years.

The children of Dr. John B. and Esther Otto are John Augustus, Bodo, Emma (married to S. Filbert) and Henry M., all of whom reside in Williamsport, Pa.; Maria (married to Jacob Geise, of Reading) and Matilda (married to Geo. W. Miller, of Reading).

William Woods, for many years the leading medical practitioner in Womelsdorf, located in that town before the period of the Revolutionary War. He is still remembered by some of the oldest citizens of the town and vicinity as a gentleman of high moral worth and superior professional qualifications.

Isaac Hiester, for many years one of the most distinguished physicians in the State and one of the leading citizens of Reading, was a son of William and Anne Maria Hiester and was born in Bern township, Berks County, June 22, 1785. He obtained his medical education at the University of Pennsylvania, and subsequently spent five years as physician to the Pennsylvania Hospital. After entering upon the practice of his profession in Reading he soon attained prominence and acquired great proficiency in the art of medicine. He was the first president of the Berks County Medical Society, organized in 1824. His speech on that occasion was a learned production, and appears in Rupp’s “History of Berks County.”

Dr. Hiester was endowed with more than ordinary mental ability; he did not rest with the knowledge acquired in the university, but, by attention and industry, kept pace with the advances and improvements of the day. Communications from his pen upon subjects which came under his observation as a practitioner were frequently published in the medical journals, which gave him both prominence and distinction among those who occupied the highest rank as physicians and surgeons.

A dignified presence, the address and manner of a gentleman, united with qualities which adorn human character, could not fail to make him a man of note in the community in which he spent his whole life.

To the distinguishing traits referred to was added a progressive spirit which placed him in the front of every movement having in view the growth and improvement of the city of which he was a resident. From a very early period he was an earnest advocate of higher methods of education than were then in use. The establishment of a new academy on a plan of class-rooms, lecture-room, library, with the introduction of a higher grade of educational training, is mainly due to his courageous and persistent efforts. He was also largely instrumental in procuring the necessary improvements for an adequate supply of water and gas for the city; and encouraged with his aid and support the numerous individual industrial enterprises which have insured such prosperity and growth as were scarcely believed possible. Nor was the spirit of enterprise characteristic of him by any means local. He was among the first to engage in the project to establish a line of railway communication from the anthracite coal-field to tide-water at Philadelphia. These efforts on the part of himself and those with whom he was associated resulted in effecting the construction of the railroad from Tan-qua to Port Clinton, the point where the Schuykill Canal was reached, and to which for a time the coal from the mines was transferred.
This arrangement was not of long continuance, but led to a desire to have the benefits of more rapid transportation by means of a continuous railroad line. Extensions with that view were commenced in 1837 and 1838. The road from Reading to Philadelphia was first completed.
The one from Reading to Pottsville was built several years thereafter. These railroads, built as branches by the Philadelphia and Reading Company and others which have been constructed since, were chartered as separate companies and eventually merged in the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad.

Dr. Hiester was selected as the president of the first-named and discharged the duties of the position until it was completed. He was also elected president of the road from Reading to Philadelphia, and served in that capacity in the early period of its organization.

Dr. Hiester was the first president of the Reading Gas Company, a member of the vestry of Christ Episcopal Church and one of the original members of the Charles Evans Cemetery Company, of which he was president at the time of his death.

On April 10, 1810, he was married to Esther Muhlenberg, a daughter of General Peter Muhlenberg. He died September 12, 1855.

FRANK M. HIESTER, son of Dr. Isaac Hiester, was born in 1828. He received a preparatory educational training in the schools of his native town and then entered the College of New Jersey, at Princeton, from which institution he was graduated in 1849. After spending the succeeding two years in the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, he was graduated in 1852 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He next visited Europe and spent eighteen months in the medical hospitals of Paris, France. Upon returning home he followed his profession with his father in Reading. Soon after the latter's death, in 1855, he relinquished the practice of medicine, and engaged in the mercantile business until 1861, when he was appointed assistant surgeon of the Fifty-fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers and in the autumn of 1861, was appointed brigade surgeon in the volunteer service of the United States, with the rank of major. His last government position was that of medical director of the Department of Ohio, with headquarters at Cincinnati. He died April 9, 1864, at his home in Reading, at the early age of thirty-six years. His death was much regretted, as he was a young man of brilliant promise.

JOHN P. HIESTER, brother of Dr. Isaac Hiester, was one of the most scholarly men that Berks County has produced. He was born July 3, 1803, and died September 15, 1854, not having quite passed his fiftieth year.
When but a youth he evinced a great interest in study, and eagerly perused the books that came within his reach. This thirst for knowledge was encouraged and he afterward acquired a liberal education in school and college. This he greatly enlarged by study and travel. After receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine he became a very prominent and influential practitioner in his chosen profession in the town of Reading. In order to recuperate his failing health, he decided to take a trip through Europe, and on April 16, 1841, he set sail from New York City and traveled through England, France, Italy, Belgium, Germany, Switzerland and France. While on his journey he regularly contributed to the Reading Gazette very ably-written descriptive articles of the scenes and incidents on the way, and of the interesting localities which he visited. These letters were received with so much interest that he was induced to publish them in book-form in 1844, under the name of "Notes of Travel." He returned to Reading in 1842 and resumed the practice of his profession. Dr. Hiester enjoyed for many years an extensive practice in Reading and vicinity. In the sick-chamber his sterling qualities of mind and heart were well known and appreciated. Tenderly solicitous for the welfare of his patients, unremitting in his attendance upon them, and ever wakeful to do for them all that the healing art afforded to alleviate their pains and sufferings, he endeared himself to them with the strongest ties of friendship. Although devoted almost to enthusiasm to the practice of medicine, he also found time to cultivate the kindred sciences, and nothing afforded him more pleasure than to use the treasures of his well-stored mind, improved by foreign travel and years of close study, in stimulating the intellectual advancement of the youth of his native town. He delivered many lectures of a literary and scientific nature, to lyceums and institutions of learning, and was very highly appreciated. He possessed an enlightened spirit, a correct judgment and a benevolent heart, and was always ready to assist and encourage by his counsel all enterprises having for their object the moral, intellectual or social advancement of the inhabitants of Reading. He was affable and engaging in his manners, and sincere in his friendships. His industry and love of intellectual labor were illustrated in the large number of addresses written and delivered by him before various literary and scientific associations.

Christian Ludwig Schlemm, who for many years was one of the most prominent physicians of Berks County, was a native of Heckelheim, in the Kingdom of Hanover; born February 4, 1776. He was the son of John Frederick and Dorothea Catharine Schlemm. After obtaining a good preparatory education he entered the Literary Department of the University of Göttingen, and was graduated from that institution in the year 1798. Soon thereafter he came to America and was engaged as a teacher for about two years in Germantown, Pa. With the design of studying medicine, he returned to his native country and became a student in the Medical Department of Göttingen University, and there received the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1803, after pursuing his studies under the celebrated scientists, Richter and Blumenbach. He began the practice of his profession in his native country, continuing until 1807, when he again came to America and located as a physician in Union County, where he was naturalized in the year 1815. He moved to Kutztown, Berks County, in the year 1818, and there rapidly acquired a large and lucrative practice, which he held until he retired from the active duties of his profession, and moved to Richmond township, where he died February 6, 1850.

Dr. Schlemm was a man of fine intellectual attainments, and possessed superior professional ability. In 1824 he was one of the organizers, and was chosen vice-president of the Berks County Medical Society, and one of the founders of the Reading Academy. He was a member of Lodge No. 62, Ancient York Masons. In 1816 he was married to Jessie Freeman, of Union County, by whom he had five children,—Frederick E., Edmund C., Charles W. G., William E. and a daughter. Charles W. G. Schlemm, the second son, was graduated from the Medical Department of Pennsylvania College in 1848, and is now practicing medicine in Reading and conducting a drug-store together with his son, Horace E. Schlemm, who was graduated from Jefferson Medical College in March, 1886. William C. Schlemm, the third son of Dr. Schlemm, is a graduate of the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, and is now practicing in Reading.

Michael Tryon, father of Dr. Jacob Tryon, of Rehrersburg, was born at Millbach, Lancaster (now Lebanon) County, on August 19, 1761, and died May 25, 1828, at the age of sixty-six years, nine months and nine days. His remains lie in the cemetery adjoining the Lutheran Church in Rehrersburg, where he resided a number of years before his death. His field of medical practice extended over a large territory of Berks and Lancaster Counties. He was regarded as an excellent physician and surgeon. He was somewhat eccentric in his manner of dealing with the people, and many interesting stories are related of him by the oldest citizens of the northern and western parts of Berks County.

Jonathan Pounder, an intelligent Englishman, born in 1784, and a graduate of one of the medical colleges of his native country, located near the village of Morgantown, this county, in 1830. Before coming to America he was a surgeon on an English man-of-war, which, when once cruising along the Atlantic coast, was shipwrecked. Dr. Pounder and seven members of the crew were the only persons whose lives were saved. After floating on the bosom of the ocean several days in a small open boat, they were rescued by an approaching vessel. His hair became gray at a very early age, which the doctor claimed was caused by excessive fright incident to the shipwreck. After coming to America he practiced medicine first in Philadelphia, then in Chester County and finally settled in this county, where he died January 10, 1871, aged eighty-eight years. He was a large man, six feet in height, had a deep bass voice, wore his hair like Andrew Jackson, whom he somewhat resembled, but with whom he differed in political sentiment. Dr. Pounder was an ardent Methodist and a writer of considerable ability. He wrote and had published the books with the following titles: "A Token to Children," "A Choice Drop of Honey from the Rock Christ," "Divine Breathings," "Camp-Meeting Hymn-Book," "The History of Little Jack," "Prayers for Children," "Hymns for Children." He was regarded as a physician of merit and was held in high esteem by his fellow-citizens.

Jacob Marshall was born near Lebanon in 1787. He received the degree of Doctor of Medicine from the University of Pennsylvania and soon after located in Reading, opened one of the first drug-stores in the town and also began the practice of medicine. During the second war with Great Britain, and at the time when Baltimore was threatened by the invading army, he raised a company of eighty-four men, mostly belonging to Reading. This company joined the First Regiment of the Second Brigade of Pennsylvania Militia. They marched from Reading to York and rendezvoused there. The invasion of the British was repelled by their defeat at Baltimore, soon after which event Captain Marshall's company, as well as all the other militia, was discharged from the service and they returned home. He then began anew his practice and soon became one of the leading physicians of Reading. In 1823 he was appointed by Governor Shulze clerk of the Court of Quarter Sessions of Berks County. About the same time he became a member of Lodge No. 62, Ancient Order of York Masons. Dr. Marshall lived to the advanced age of eighty-three years, four months and fourteen days, being the oldest physician in the county at the time of his death, July 11, 1871. His remains were interred in Charles Evans' Cemetery. Michael Reifsnyder, James Norton, Paul Ammon and Joseph Brelsford, surviving veterans of the War of 1812, acted as pall-bearers. He was married to Mary Bright, of Reading. One of his sons, Dr. John Marshall, a graduate of the Pennsylvania College of Medicine, was a skillful physician of Reading, but died early in life, on February 19, 1861. Another son, Dr. Philip D. Marshall, now practicing in the city, was graduated from Jefferson Medical College. In 1861 he entered the Union army as a surgeon and was stationed one year in Camp Curtin, at Harrisburg. He was next transferred to Washington, and from thence to Benton Barracks General Hospital, in St. Louis, where he remained about two years, becoming quite skillful as a surgeon. He now resides in Reading.

Michael Ludwig was a native of Amity township, Berks County, born in 1793, and died at Douglassville on June 1, 1857, aged sixty-four years. He was a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, and practiced his chosen profession in Amity and adjoining townships for many years with great success. During the last thirteen years of his life he was postmaster at Douglassville.

William Gries was born December 1, 1796, in Womelsdorf. He received a liberal education, and on reaching manhood went to Philadelphia, and entered into a mercantile life; continued for some years, during which time he studied medicine. He was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania in 1822, after which he returned to his native town of Womelsdorf, where he entered into a large practice. In 1824 he married Maria Priscilla, daughter of Hon. John Myers, of Myerstown, Lebanon County. In 1840, having met with an accident while attending to his professional duties, and broken his thigh, thus laming him for life, a large country practice became too laborious, and he removed to Reading, where he soon took a prominent place in his profession. But his health, which was never strong from the time of the accident, finally gave way, and he died April 12, 1857, in the sixty-first year of his age.

Dr. Gries belonged to the old school of physicians, for which Reading was noted in his day and generation. His medical contemporaries were the Ottos, father and son, and the brothers, Doctors Isaac and John P. Hiester, with whom he at once took rank as a professional equal. He assisted in the organization of the Berks County Medical Society, and while he lived was one of its prominent members. He was for many years a member of the vestry of Christ Episcopal Church, of which he was a devoted member. He also took an active part in all the religious, moral and progressive movements of the day, and never wearied in well-doing.

His character was beyond reproach, and in his private, professional, social and religious life he was a shining example to all his contemporaries. It may be said of him with truth, that he was a model man in all the relations of life.

Dr. Gries, though his death occurred before the Civil War, left three sons, all of whom gave themselves to the service of their county during that memorable period. The eldest, Rev. William R. Gries, as chaplain of the One Hundred and Fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers, served nobly to the end of the war, and died at Allentown, Pa., Oct. 18, 1872, while rector of Grace Episcopal Church of that city. The second son, John Myers Gries, who was a prominent architect at the opening of the Rebellion, and was chiefly instrumental in raising the One Hundred and Fourth Regiment, served as its major, and was mortally wounded at the battle of Fair Oaks, Va., while saving the colors of the regiment, and died in Philadelphia, June 13, 1862. The youngest son, Lemuel, was a member of the Ringgold Battery, of Reading, the first volunteer company in the United States to respond to President Lincoln's call for troops to save the capital of the nation, and who marched on the day of the call, reaching Washington on the 18th of April, 1861. He was afterwards elected first lieutenant of the same battery. He died in Reading, April 6, 1876.

Mrs. Priscilla Gries, the mother of this family, survived the doctor and sons. Though an invalid for a long time, her declining years were solaced by the devoted attentions of her daughter, Clara C. Gries, the sole survivor of the family to the end, and she closed her beautiful life with Christian resignation on the 31st day of August, 1882, in the seventy-eighth year of her age.

Henry Tyson was born in Montgomery County, Pa., May 21, 1815, and was the son of Cornelius and Hannah Smith Tyson. His father, Cornelius Tyson, a much-respected farmer, whose advice was often sought and who was frequently employed in matters of public trust, was also born in Montgomery County, as were also his grandfather, Joseph Tyson, born February 16, 1751, and his great-grandfather, Cornelius Tyson, whose marriage is recorded as having taken place March 30, 1738.

His early life was spent on a farm, and he learned the trade of a stone-mason, but he was always fond of books and soon became a teacher. He taught successfully, having had flourishing schools in Philadelphia and Reading, Pa. While conducting a school in Philadelphia he studied medicine, and was graduated from the Pennsylvania Medical College in 1843, the professors being Samuel George Morton, George McClellan, William Rush, Robert M. Bird, Samuel McClellan, Walter R. Johnson. His younger brother, Cornelius Tyson, was a member of the same class. In 1840 he married Gertrude Haviland Caswell, a widow.

Dr. Tyson began to practice medicine in Friedensburg, Berks County, in 1843, but soon removed to Reading, whence he returned to his native place, Worcester township, Montgomery County, on the death of his brother Cornelius, who died at the age of twenty-five, and to whose practice he succeeded. He returned to Reading about the year 1850. In 1854, Dr. Taylor was elected warden of the Berks County Prison, a position which he filled very acceptably for twelve years. For this position he was peculiarly adapted. Retiring in his habits, studious and thoughtful, he devoted himself to matters connected with prison discipline and the improvement of the condition of prisoners. He spent many hours with prisoners, in conversation and in interesting them in self-improvement, supplying them with books and other means to this end.

While at the prison, so far as his engagements permitted, and for two years after his retirement, Dr. Tyson continued to practice medicine in Reading; but, at the end of this time, a very serious illness shattered his health and he removed to a farm in Exeter township, a few miles below Reading. He enjoyed country life, having been always much interested in agriculture. The last seven years of his life were spent pleasantly in the improvement of his farm and in a restricted practice of his profession. He died at his home April 29, 1872, of a tubercular consumption, of which the seeds were sown in the illness above referred to. He was not quite fifty-seven years old. He survived his wife less than two years.

Dr. Tyson was literary in his tastes, and furnished numerous contributions to agricultural, secular, and occasionally to religious journals of the Society of Friends, of which he was for many years a member. He was a quiet but earnest supporter of the principles of Friends, and established the first First-day or Sunday-school in the so-called Hieksite branch of Friends, in the old meeting-house, in Washington Street, Reading.

Dr. Tyson left two sons, of whom the elder, James Tyson, is also a physician, having been graduated, in 1863, from the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, in which school he is now professor of general pathology and morbid anatomy and secretary of the faculty of medicine.

The second son, Henry, who became a farmer, died in October, 1882.

Charles A. Gerasch, one of the earliest and best-known physicians of Kutztown, Pa., was born at Frankfort-on-the-Oder, in Prussia. After receiving a good classical and medical education in the schools of Leipsic and Berlin, he entered the Prussian army as a surgeon. About the year 1828 he emigrated to the United States, bearing with him the most favorable recommendations from his superior officers, both professional and military. He first settled in Bucks County, Pa., and from thence removed to Longswamp, Berks County, and engaged in practice. He subsequently settled in Millerstown, Lehigh County, and finally, choosing Kutztown as a promising field for his professional labor, remained there until his death, on the 22d of July, 1876. He soon secured a good practice, which grew rapidly until it probably exceeded that of any country physician in Berks County. While successful in the treatment of disease, he was especially skillful in surgery, in which branch of his profession he had an enviable reputation. His services were much in demand throughout the county and his presence was often desired in consultation. His time and energies were entirely absorbed in his profession, having little leisure for participation in public affairs, for which he had little taste. A strong Republican in his political opinions, he never aspired to office. Dr. Gerasch was an earnest friend to the cause of education. He was one of the school directors of the borough and the chief projector of the public-school buildings, and he was also treasurer of the Keystone Normal School, which he aided materially in building. He was, by early education, a Lutheran in his religious faith, though a supporter of all religious denominations.

Dr. Gerasch possessed a sympathetic and kindly nature, and was ever ready, by word and deed, to encourage youthful ambition and industry. He loved children, and made many a heart beat with pleasure when the recipient of his annual holiday offerings to them.

Charles Baum and William J. C. Baum were each prominent physicians in this county as early as 1820. They assisted in the organization of the first medical society in Berks County in the year 1824, and were active members of that society for many years. They both were regular graduates of medical institutions, and were engaged in an extensive practice. Dr. John Baum, a son of one of the above-named physicians, was born at Baums. He had a large practice in Amity township a half-century ago. He resided at the homestead, one-half mile below the "Yellow House," and was a highly-esteemed citizen of that vicinity.
ALEXANDER HAMILTON WITMAN, for many years an active practitioner of Reading, was a student under Dr. John B. Otto, and a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania. He was born in 1800 and followed his profession in Reading until the time of the Civil War, when he became surgeon of the One Hundred and Sixty-sixth Pennsylvania Regiment of one year’s men, and was assigned to field hospital work in the Army of the Potomac. After returning home he resumed his practice, continuing until his death, in 1869. He was married in 1817 to Elizabeth Old. Dr. Witman was a man who had many friends, and was admired for his jovial disposition, and is well remembered as a humorist. He served as prothonotary of Berks County from 1836 to 1838. His son, Dr. Harrison T. Witman, was born December, 1837, and was graduated from Jefferson Medical College in 1861. He entered the service at the beginning of war as a surgeon of the Thirty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteer Regiment of three months’ men and afterward became surgeon of the Fifth Pennsylvania Reserves. He had an extensive practice in hospital work, and while attending to the wounded on the field was himself twice wounded in the battle at Bethesda Church, May 30, 1864, on the last day of his term of service. He was afterwards surgeon of the One Hundred and Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Regiment. For eleven months during the war he was assistant surgeon of the government hospital at Reading. Soon after the war he moved to Indianapolis, spent fourteen years there, and returned to Reading in 1880, where he now lives.

ADAM SCHOENER, who lived to the advanced age of eighty-four years, was born November 23, 1798, in Womelsdorf, and died January 11, 1882. Early in life he removed with his parents to Myerstown, Lebanon County, where he acquired a preliminary education. He then entered the office of Dr. Bower, and during the years 1819 and 1820 attended lectures under Drs. Morton, McLellan, Rush, Calhoun and Jenness at the University of Pennsylvania, from which institution he was graduated. He began practicing in Rehrersburg and continued to minister to the necessities of the sick of that village and vicinity until a few years before his death, when he removed to Reading. He died in Rehrersburg, at the home of his son-in-law, William Long. Dr. Schoener had a large general practice, and also spent much time in Berks and Lebanon Counties in the treatment of bronchitis and pulmonary affections. During his residence in Rehrersburg for a time he had an office in Reading, where he, on certain days, attended to the treatment of these specialties. Among the physicians who prepared under his instructions were Drs. John A. Fisher, Edward Brobst, J. J. Kateman and four of his sons, two of whom, Davilla B. and William J., died before their father. Dr. Adam Schoener was a justice of the peace for nearly twenty years, and served his community as a legal adviser and dispenser of justice, as well as a medical practitioner. In 1838, during the Anti-Masonic excitement, he was elected to the House of Representatives as a Democrat, and was at Harrisburg during the time of the so-called “Buck-shot War.” He served his constituents in the capacity of representative in the Legislature during the years 1834, 1839 and 1840, and was a member when the bill establishing the common schools of Pennsylvania was passed, and was the only member from the county of Berks who lent this bill encouraging support and voted for its passage. After the election of James Buchanan as President, Dr. Schoener became an ardent Republican, and supported that party until his death. He took an active interest in military affairs during the days when the militia law was in force, drilled a number of local companies and eventually served his county as brigade inspector of militia and volunteer soldiers for a period of fourteen years. In 1827 he joined the order of Masons, and was a member of Mount Lebanon Lodge, No. 172, A. Y. M. He was married to a Miss Good, of Columbia County, by whom he had seven children. The deceased paid his last visit to Reading in November. Owing to his feeble condition, it was with difficulty that his relatives succeeded in getting him to his old home in Rehrersburg, where he wished to end his days among his neighbors and friends. His remains were in terred in the cemetery adjoining Union Church, at Rehersburg.

George N. Eckert, the son of Peter Eckert, of WOMELSdorf, was born at that borough in 1802, and educated for the profession of medicine. After practicing for some years in Reading he moved to Schuylkill County, and there became largely interested in the coal and iron trade. He represented that district in Congress from 1847 to 1849. In the days of the Whig party he took a great interest in general politics, and during the administration of President Fillmore he held the office of director of the United States Mint at Philadelphia from 1851 to 1853, and died in that city June 28, 1865. He was a man of fine business qualifications. He was one of the organizers of the Berks County Medical Society in 1824.

John Vaughan Smith, son of John and Elizabeth B. Smith, was born at Joanna Furnace, April 28, 1808. Graduated at Princeton College in 1825; received his medical education at the Pennsylvania University; was commissioned in the navy June 27, 1829. He was for several years in control of the United States Naval Hospital, at Port Mahon. During the nineteen years of his service (chiefly in foreign ports,) he rose rapidly, and at the time of his death had but few equals as a medical officer. He was a man of varied accomplishments, and died while in charge of the navy yard at Charlestown, Mass. He was married August 25, 1834, to Mary Marshall, a niece of Judge White, of Kentucky. His second wife was Virginia Parker, daughter of Commodore Foxhall Parker (United States Navy) and Sarah Jay Bogardus. His death occurred August 25, 1848.

J. Howard Smith, son of Thomas B. Smith, was born at Joanna Furnace, Berks County, July 28, 1817; graduated at Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio; received his medical education at the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, and at once entered the United States Navy. He was rapidly promoted, and had made several cruises as surgeon; had written a monograph on Yellow Fever, and having obtained leave of absence from duty, was on his way to Philadelphia, intending to have it published, when the vessel in which he was returning, stopped for supplies at Vera Cruz, Mexico, intelligence was received of great sickness and distress at the hospital near Salamadina, and of the death, from yellow fever, of several of the attending physicians. Dr. Smith volunteered his services, which were accepted, and he at once entered upon his duties there, only to fall a victim to the disease, from which he died September 25, 1847.

Solomon G. Birch was born in Reading in 1803, and died in his native city April 11, 1845, at the early age of forty-one years. When but a lad he entered the employ of Dr. Isaac Hiester, who, taking an interest in the boy, and observing his mental qualifications, induced him to read medicine. After leaving the office of his preceptor he entered the Jefferson Medical College, where he remained one year, after which he began the practice of medicine, first in Oley township, then in Pricetown and finally, for several years before his death, in Reading, where he formed an intimate acquaintance with Dr. Hunter. He completed the medical course and received a diploma, some years after he began practicing. He was married to Elizabeth Harvey, of Reading. His son, now deceased, was a druggist of Reading.

William Herbst was born on February 3, 1804, at Altenberg, Muselwitz, in Saxony, and emigrated to Pennsylvania when sixteen years old, landing at the port of Philadelphia. He had selected medicine as his profession and pursued his studies under a physician in that city till he was graduated from Jefferson Medical College. After practicing there several years, he removed to the upper section of Oley (now Pike) township. Here he continued in active and successful practice for a period of forty years. During this time he became interested in politics as a Democrat, and in 1861 he was elected to the office of county treasurer for one term of two years. He lived in retirement till his death, and left to survive him three children—Dr. William Herbst, Mrs. G. A. Hinterleitner and Mrs. Edmund W. Gilbert—and a grandson, Dr. Edwin Herbst (the son of Captain George Herbst).

Charles Edward Hoffman was born in Northampton County, October, 1807, and died in Reading July 6, 1862. He obtained a preparatory training in the schools of his native county, began the study of medicine under the instruction of Dr. Philip Walter, of Nazareth, Pa., and was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1831. He began practicing in Nazareth; moved to Millerstown, Lehigh County, where he remained until 1854, when he came to Reading and continued to practice his profession in this city until his death. Dr. Hoffman was skillful as a surgeon. His great-grandfather was a chemist in one of the German universities, and gained considerable fame as the originator of the "Hoffman Anodyne," yet known to the profession.

A second cousin of the late Dr. Hoffman is professor of chemistry in the University of Berlin, Prussia. James M. Hoffman, a son of Dr. C. E. Hoffman, also became a physician. Soon after his graduation he went to Europe, in 1870, and became a surgeon in the German hospitals during the time of the Franco-Prussian War. This gave him an extensive practice in surgery. After the war closed he returned home and soon afterwards died of a fever.

Penrose Wily is a grandson of Penrose Wily, a farmer of Maiden Creek township, who, on May 10, 1780, married Sarah Wily, by whom he had two children,—John and Sarah. John was born November 19, 1782, and was married, on the 15th day of November, 1804, to Mary, daughter of Abraham Deisher, who was born June 7, 1785. Their son, Penrose Wily, was born in Maiden Creek township, September 21, 1805, and in youth had such educational advantages as were afforded in the schools of the vicinity. He studied medicine, and after his graduation from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, began to practice in Lehigh County. He later removed to Albany township, in Berks County, then to Chester County, and in 1850 settled in Leesport, this county, where he soon won an excellent reputation as a skillful and successful physician. While attending to the increasing demands of a general practice, he made a special study of fevers, in the treatment of which he had few equals. Obstetrical practice also absorbed much of his attention. Dr. Wily was twice married,—first, on the 22d of February, 1829, to Sarah Reagan. Their children were Melvina, married to Daniel Price; Mary, married to Henry Moore; and Sarah, married to M. Addis. His second marriage was with Martha Reagan, sister to his first wife, on the 15th of February, 1842. Their children are Martha B., George R., John C. and Emma D. The last four children were born in Chester County. Dr. Wily resided in Leesport until his death, and continued the practice of his profession until a few years before that event. He was connected with the Berks County Medical Society, and was a member of Lodge No. 62, Free and Accepted Masons, and of De Molay Commandery, No. 9, born January 11, 1809, at the homestead now occupied by his widow. His father having died, he removed at the age of nine years to the home of his grandfather, in Maiden-creek township, and until he was eighteen years of age assisted in the labor of the farm. He then went to Reading for the purpose of learning the printer's trade, at which he continued for two years, when he began the study of medicine, and was graduated from the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, March 17, 1831.
He began his professional career at the Half-Way House, in his native township, soon secured a large and profitable practice, and was known throughout the county as a skillful and ready surgeon. In 1852 he abandoned his profession, removed to the old homestead and embarked in the milling business in the mill built by his father adjacent to the family mansion, where he remained until his death, January 22, 1884. Dr. Wily was in politics an ardent Republican, but cared little for public office. He was deeply interested in the cause of education, and for many years was a school director of his township. He was educated in the faith of his parents, that of the Society of Friends. His widow is a member of the Reformed Church. Dr. Wily was married, on the 24th of November, 1832, to Sarah Ann, daughter of Joseph and Mary Wright. Their children are John, born November 9, 1833; Ellen, September 20, 1844; Edwin, September 13, 1846. John was first married to Mary, daughter of John and Phebe Wright, by whom he had one child, a daughter, Sarah. His second marriage was with Mary, daughter of Philip Brown, by whom he had one daughter, Mary. Dr. Wily was again married, August 10, 1850, to Kate, daughter of John and Sarah Huy. Their children are Owen, born August 11, 1851; Frank, June 8, 1863; Sally, December 11, 1865; Rose, February 27, 1865; Kate, March 10, 1871, and five who are deceased. Owen married Mary, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Freeman, of Leesport. They have children,—J. Freeman and C. May. Frank married Anne, daughter of Jacob and Amelia Huy.

William Moore was born in the city of Reading July 28, 1810, and died of apoplexy at his home in Womelsdorf May 23, 1872. After obtaining a good preparatory education he read medicine with Dr. J. W. Gloninger, of Lebanon, and was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of New York March 29, 1836. He practiced medicine two years in Jackson, Miss., and in 1840 located in Womelsdorf, where he spent the remainder of his life engaged in the arduous duties of his chosen profession. Dr. Moore was a man of thought, learning, integrity and ability. He won the popular heart by his amiable manners and strict adherence to duty and right. He was a conscientious Christian gentleman and filled responsible positions in church and Sunday-schools. His remains were interred in the Womelsdorf Cemetery and the funeral was attended by representatives from the Medical Societies of Berks and Lebanon Counties, to which he belonged, and by about two thousand persons of the town and vicinity. A special meeting of the Berks County Medical Society was held and a series of resolutions, commendatory of his life and character, were passed.

In politics Dr. Moore was first a Whig and afterwards an ardent and consistent Republican. He occupied various positions of honor and trust as a director in the Farmers National Bank of Reading, member of the board of managers of the Berks and Dauphin Turnpike Company, and treasurer of the borough of Womelsdorf. He took a great interest in agricultural affairs, in the rearing of fine live-stock and the cultivation of choice fruits. One of the crowning acts of his life was his efforts to establish a public library in the town of Womelsdorf, which was done shortly before his death.

Adrian Loewen was born in Neheim, Prussia, in 1810, and emigrated to America in 1835, after graduating as a physician in one of the universities of his native country. He soon after located in Reading to practice his profession. In 1836 he removed to Friedensburg, where he continued to practice until his death. Dr. Loewen was a man of fine scholastic attainments and excellent professional ability. In 1837 he was married to Cordelia, daughter of Andrew Snyder, at Oley Furnace. He died in 1848, leaving four children—Orlando, Albert, Adrian and Ellen.

Charles H. Hunter was born in Rockland township, Berks County, September 29, 1817, and died in Reading June 3, 1870. He was graduated from Princeton College, New Jersey, in 1837, after which he pursued the study of medicine under the instruction of Dr. Isaac Hiester and was graduated in 1841 from the University of Pennsylvania. He located in Reading. He was a close student and an ardent lover of his chosen profession, in which he early in life gained prominence and distinction. In 1851 he was elected prothonotary of Berks County and served one full term, but declined re-election. During President Buchanan’s administration Dr. Hunter was appointed coal agent for the government, which position he filled with marked ability. In 1862, during the first Confederate invasion of Pennsylvania, he proved his devotion to his country by raising a company of militia which was joined to the Eleventh Pennsylvania Regiment, under command of Colonel Knoderer. At the time of the second invasion, in 1863, he raised a company in the Forty-second Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers. He was chosen colonel of this regiment, marched with it into Maryland and remained in the service several months. He was a dignified officer and very popular with his subordinates.

Resuming his practice upon his return home, he pursued it with untiring zeal and devotion. As a citizen of Reading, Dr. Hunter was enterprising and progressive. He devoted a portion of his time to the development of the iron industries of Berks County.

DANIEL A. ULRICH was born at Stouchsburg, Lebanon County, Pa., April 10, 1819; acquired a preliminary education in the schools of that county; attended Pennsylvania College, at Gettysburg, for three years and College of New Jersey, at Princeton four years, graduating from that institution with the class of 1841. He then entered the Jefferson Medical College, at Philadelphia, and was graduated therefrom in 1844; practiced medicine in Reading for more than twenty years; his health failing him, he was, in 1876, appointed government storekeeper under Collector Tutton, of Philadelphia, a position which he held at the time of his death, January 6, 1879. Dr. Ulrich was possessed of fine intellectual endowments, was exceptionally popular with the people of Reading and was a successful practitioner.

HENRY W. JOHNSON was a native of Montgomery County, Pa.; was graduated in medicine from Jefferson Medical College in 1841, and soon afterward located in Boyertown. He built up an extensive practice in his profession, which he continued uninterruptedly at Boyertown until his death, June 17, 1863, aged forty-three years.

For a number of years, in association with a partner, he owned and controlled a coach-line on Fifth Street, Philadelphia, which brought him a handsome revenue.

EDWARD WALLACE, a native of Lancaster County, and a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, practiced medicine in Reading for nearly a quarter of a century with great success. He was frequently called in consultation with critical cases by his fellow-physicians and was known as a skillful surgeon. He was president of the Berks County Medical Society for several years. About 1872 he was appointed naval surgeon, and was located at Philadelphia. He died suddenly of heart-disease while residing in that city. For a time he was physician to the Presbyterian Hospital of Philadelphia.

PETER G. BERTOLET was born in Oley township in 1822. He studied medicine under Dr. Joseph Pancost, and after graduating from the University of Pennsylvania, located in Oley township, near the Oley Churches, and began there the practice of his profession, in which he was very successful up to the time of his death, March 8, 1866. He was a surgeon in the provost marshal’s office at Reading during the time of the drafts, to examine applicants for exemption.

Dr. Bertolet, during his practice, in visiting his numerous patients, interested himself in the local history of Oley township, and had gathered considerable material, which he designed to publish in book-form, with the title of “Oley and Vicinity.” His premature death prevented its accomplishment, and the manuscript is now in the Pennsylvania Historical Society, at Philadelphia.

CHARLES A. DEININGER was the son of Constantine J. Deininger, and was born at Reading in the year 1834. After obtaining a preliminary education he studied medicine and surgery under the direction of Dr. John P. Hiester, and attended lectures at the University of Pennsylvania. He was graduated from that institution in April, 1855, and immediately began the practice of his profession in Reading with bright prospects. The Crimean War was then waging, and he, showing a preference for surgery, decided to enter the service of the Russian government as a surgeon. His application was accepted and he left Reading in June to remain for a term of two years. He sailed from Boston July 4th, 1855, and arrived at Simpheropol, in Russia, about the 1st of September, where he entered the hospital and began the duties of a practical surgeon. Within two months his companion, Dr. Jones, of Baltimore, was prostrated with a sudden and violent attack of cholera, which caused his death. Through devotion, Dr. Deininger contracted the same disease, and in spite of all the efforts of his brother-surgeons he died also, after an illness of only eleven hours. This sad event transpired on October 25, 1855, in the twenty-first year of his age. His body was buried with that of his companion in that foreign land, but it was afterwards brought to Reading and buried in the Evans Cemetery. Dr. Deininger was a young man of fine intellect and possessed many sterling virtues, which endeared him to a large circle of relatives and acquaintances by whom his untimely death was sadly lamented. Nature asks no nobler sacrifice than those who yield up their own lives for the comfort of their fellowmen.

William N. Davis was born January 24, 1838, at Port Carbon, Schuylkill County; was graduated from the College of New Jersey, at Princeton, in 1856 and from the Jefferson Medical College in 1860, and began practicing medicine at Reading in 1861. In 1871 he married Amelia, daughter of John Yerger; he had a large and lucrative practice and was esteemed as one of the most promising physicians of the city. He died October 4, 1885.

Thomas J. Keely, son of Frederick Keely, died January 29, 1876, at New Berlin, Bucks County, Pa. He practiced medicine in Berks County for several years and during the Civil War was surgeon of the One Hundred and Forty-second Pennsylvania Regiment.

Living Members of the profession.

Jacob Tryon, son of Dr. Michael Tryon, one of the pioneer physicians of Berks County, was born in the town of Rehrersburg, where he now resides, January 22, 1800. His opportunities of obtaining a rudimentary education were very limited; acquired his knowledge of medicine and surgery in the office of his father, who was then attending to a large practice; commenced the practice of medicine at the age of twenty, and has continued it without intermission to the present time (1886). Like his father, he excelled in surgery, which he made his special study. His practice extends over a large area of territory, and for thirty years he visited his patients on horseback. He kept three or four horses and made it a point to meet all his engagements promptly. He performed a successful surgical operation at the age of eighty-three years, unassisted by any other surgeon. His has become a household name in many families in this and adjoining counties. He has always taken a deep interest in educational matters and schools in the district in which he resides. His oldest son, Dr. Percival J. Tryon, deceased, was born May 31, 1828. He received a liberal education and was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1850. Soon after his graduation he settled at Hamburg, Berks County, where he acquired a large practice, which he held up to the time of his death, which occurred on the 30th day of July, A.D. 1881.

Wm. Frederick Hoffman, brother of the late Dr. C. E. Hoffman, before mentioned, was born in Northampton County February 18, 1810; studied medicine with his brother; was graduated from Jefferson Medical College; practiced in Lehigh County from 1838 to 1853, and in 1854 located in Reading, where he has practiced his profession to this date. His son, Walter James Hoffman, now in the employ of the United States government, is a graduate of Jefferson Medical College in the class of 1866. In 1870 he entered the service of the Prussian government as a surgeon for a short time. In May, 1871, he accompanied Lieutenant Wheeler in his expedition through Arizona and New Mexico, both as a surgeon and naturalist. He afterwards became a surgeon of General Custer's regiment of the regular army, and accompanied him in an expedition up the Yellowstone River. He has since been under Lieutenant Powell, of the United States Geological Survey and Bureau of Ethnology. Dr. Hoffman has familiarized himself with the language of several Indian tribes and has prepared different government papers on the Indian race and on natural history. He recently prepared a list of the birds of the State of Nevada. He is also an artist. Many of the sketches of views in Powell's recent surveys published by the United States government, were sketched by him and are well done.

D. Llewellyn Beaver, now one of the oldest physicians in Berks County, is a native of Chester County, born in Great Valley in 1814. He attended the Bolmar Academy at West Chester; studied medicine and took his degree at Pennsylvania Medical College, in Philadelphia, in 1841. He began the practice of his profession at Temple, in Berks County, remaining two years, and then moved to Bern township. In 1849 he came to Reading and has since been actively engaged in the duties of his profession in the city.

James M. Mathews was born in Bucks County, Pa., on the 22d of February, 1817, his parents being Benjamin and Letitia Mathews, and his grandparents Benjamin Mathews and James Meredith respectively. The doctor received an academic education and began the study of medicine with Dr. Charles H. Mathews, of Doylestown, Pa. He was graduated from the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1840, and began the practice of his profession at Fleetwood, where he remained until 1860. In April, 1860, he located at Temple, this county, and continued there in active practice until June, 1873, when he was superseded by his son, Dr. Franklin Mathews. The doctor was married in 1843 to Mary Ann Stitzel. The children of this marriage are eight sons, six of whom are living, two being physicians and a third pursuing his medical studies preparatory to graduation. Dr. Mathews, since his retirement from practice, has spent his leisure in agricultural pursuits; occasionally he is employed as a surveyor and scrivener. Prior to the Rebellion he was in politics a Democrat, but has since voted the Republican ticket. He has not been an aspirant to any office other than that of school director.

Joseph Cohlentz is a native of Maryland, born January 24, 1820; worked on a farm and attended common schools until twenty-one years old; graduated from Marshall College, at Lancaster, in 1848, and the next year took his medical degree at the University of Virginia, and also completed the medical course at the University of Pennsylvania, in 1850; remained two years in Philadelphia, during which time he was connected with the Pennsylvania Hospital; took a special course at Dr. Warrington's Obstetric Institute; attended special course of clinics at University of Pennsylvania, and in practical pharmacy under Professor Parrish; practiced in Baltimore four years, in York County Pa., eight years; came to Reading in 1868 and was engaged in his profession in the city twenty-one years; located in Baltimore a second time in 1884, and the next year he relinquished his practice and moved to the State of Kansas, where he now resides.

Diller Luther is a descendant from a family of physicians, and is the great-grandson of Christian Luther, who emigrated to America in the ship “Edinburgh,” landing in New York, September 16, 1751, and located in the Pequea Valley, Lancaster County, but soon after migrated to the Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, where he married Christiana Kelp. On account of Indian troubles he returned to Pennsylvania, and settled at Ephrata, where he died. His son John, born in 1755, became a prominent physician and died at Harrisburg in 1811, leaving several children, among them John, who was a physician of note and practiced medicine in New Holland, Lancaster County, where he died in 1828. Three of his sons—Diller, John W. and Martin—have studied and practiced the profession of their worthy ancestors. John W. practiced for more than a third of a century in New Holland, where he died in 1870. Dr. Diller Luther was born in New Holland, November 18, 1808; attended Todd's Academy, in Harrisburg; was graduated in medicine from the University of Pennsylvania in 1829, and soon after located in Orwigsburg, Schuylkill County, remaining there one year; he came to Reading and practiced in that city from 1832 to 1838. During the latter year he relinquished his profession and began the mining and shipping of coal in Schuylkill County, which business he followed for about twenty-five years. In 1863 he was appointed internal revenue collector of the Eighth District of Pennsylvania, and served in that position until 1867. In 1873 he was appointed general agent and secretary of the State Board of Public Charities and filled that position until September, 1883, when he resigned. Dr. Diller Luther has been prominently identified with the banking interests of Reading, was several years president of the Anthracite Insurance Company of Philadelphia, and since 1873 has been president of the Charles Evans Cemetery Company. He was married, in 1834, to Amelia H., daughter of Judge John Spayd, of Reading. She died in 1872.

Martin Luther was born March 16, 1826, at New Holland, Lancaster County, Pa. He is a brother of Dr. Diller Luther, of Reading, and a son of Dr. John Luther, of New Holland, for many years a very prominent physician, an active politician and an influential member of the Masonic fraternity. His grandfather and his father, both physicians, had three sons each, who were engaged in the same profession. Dr. Martin Luther was educated in the best academies of West Chester and of Berks County, and subsequently studied under a private instructor. He began the study of medicine in the office of his brother, in New Holland, entered the Jefferson Medical College, in Philadelphia, and was graduated from that institution in the spring of 1848, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. For two years succeeding his graduation he practiced with his brother. In 1850 he came to Reading, and soon after his location here became one of the leading physicians of the city. He served as physician to the Berks County Almshouse from 1853 to 1855, and the two succeeding years was physician to the county prison. In 1862 he was appointed surgeon in charge of the United States Army Hospital at Reading, and remained in that position until the hospital was discontinued. In the same year he was appointed surgeon to the State, in making the necessary examination of those who had been drafted into the military service. In 1864 he served as a surgeon to the board of enrollment of the Eighth Congressional District, and remained in that position until the close of the war. He took a prominent part in establishing the Reading Dispensary in 1868. He was an influential member of the Berks County Medical Society, was several years its efficient president, and a number of times its representative delegate to the meetings of the State and National Medical Associations. Dr. Luther is a member of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia. He has a very extensive practice in the city of Reading, and is a surgeon of excellent ability.

L. De Barth Kuhn, a successful practitioner in the city of Reading for a number of years, moved to Brooklyn, N. Y. While residing in Reading, he was physician to the county almshouse, and during the Civil War was appointed to the position of surgeon in the Union army.

L. H. Thompson was born August 20, 1823, in Hereford township, Berks County; was a pupil in the district schools, and afterwards entered the Strasburg Academy, in Lancaster County; studied medicine with Dr. Samuel C. Thompson, at Ziegler'sville, Montgomery County, and graduated in medicine from the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia with the class of 1853; practiced at New Jerusalem, Fleetwood and Lyons, in Berks County, for twenty-six years, and in 1875 came to Reading, where he is now engaged in his profession.

John B. Brooke, who for many years has been one of the leading physicians of Reading, is a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, but he removed with his parents to Reading when quite young, and here acquired his education. He was graduated from Jefferson Medical College in 1858, and has since practiced medicine in Reading with great success. He takes an active interest in the city and county medical societies. Dr. Brooke is a great-grandson of Governor Hiester, and a grandson of Judge Spayd.

Jeremiah S. Trexler is the son of James Trexler, who was born in Trexlertown, Lehigh County, Pa., and died in Hamburg, Berks County. He was for some years a merchant, and on his removal to Allentown, became one of the popular landlords of the city. He married Jenette Dankel, of Lehigh County, and had children,—Lavina, Nelson H. and Jeremiah S. The last-named of this number was born at Trexlertown, in Lehigh County, and lived during his youth both in his native county and in Berks County. He obtained his education at the Moravian schools in Emaus and Bethlehem, Pa.; began the study of medicine with Dr. Charles Gerasch, of Kutztown, and was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1854. Locating at Kutztown, he became associated with his preceptor, Dr. Gerasch, and speedily secured an extensive practice. He remained associated with Dr. Gerasch until the death of the latter. As advancing years influenced Dr. Gerasch to relinquish his profession, Dr. Trexler succeeded to the practice, which was continued for several years. Ill health compelled him, however, to abandon his large field and limit his attentions to such patients and families as, from long association, found it difficult to call in the professional services of another. The doctor is actively associated with the business interests of both county and borough. He was formerly a director of the Keystone National Bank of Reading, and is also interested in the shoe factory and jobbing house of Levan, Stein & Co., of Kutztown. He is a member of the board of direction of the Keystone State Normal School. In politics he was an early Republican, and now affiliates with the Independent party. He has been chief burgess of the borough of Kutztown. He has taken high rank in the Masonic fraternity,—is a member of Huguenot Lodge, No. 377, of F. and A. M.; of Allen Chapter, No. 20, and of Allen Commandery, both of Allentown, Pa., and of the Consistory of Bloomsburg, Pa. Dr. Trexler during the late war in 1863, entered the army as surgeon of the Seventy-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. He participated in the engagement at Chancellorsville, was made prisoner and escaped, after which he joined the Army of the Cumberland and accompanied General Sherman in his march to the sea.

Reuben B. Rhoads was born at Boyertown, October 29, 1831, and educated at Mount Pleasant Seminary, in his native town; studied medicine under the direction of Dr. Henry W. Johnson; was graduated from Jefferson Medical College in April, 1857; located at Zieglerville, in Montgomery County, and practiced till August, 1862, when he raised a company of volunteers, and, as captain, took it to Harrisburg, applied for and received a surgeon's commission. He was employed for a time at Pittsburgh as examining surgeon, and then accompanied the One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Militia. He had charge of a brigade hospital, under command of Brigadier-General Tyndale, at Yorktown. He was mustered out with regiment at Harrisburg in July, 1863, and returned to Zieglerville, where he resumed the practice of his profession. He continued at this place for a year and removed to Amityville, Berks County, continuing in active practice till his election to the office of prison warden of Berks County in 1882, when he removed to Reading. He was twice re-elected and held this position till April, 1885.

During his residence at Amityville he became interested in the cultivation of fruit-trees, and for sixteen years carried on an extensive nursery. He still owns this nursery.

He was married, May 10, 1859, to Kate W. Gilbert, daughter of Adam R. Gilbert.

Decatur G. Schoener was born August 28, 1832, at Rehrersburg, and is a son of the late Dr. Adam Schoener; was educated in the schools of his native town and at Myerstown Academy; was graduated from the Pennsylvania Medical College, in Philadelphia, with the class of 1853; practiced with his father until 1856, when he removed to Reading, and has since practiced in the city.

James A. Fisher was born July 25, 1832, in Stouchsburg; acquired his education in public schools of his native town and the Stouchsburg Academy; studied medicine in the Pennsylvania Medical College in 1853; practiced in Stouchsburg until 1880, when he removed to Reading and has since been practicing in the city.

Samuel L. Kurtz was born September 27,
Hiester M. Nagle is the great-grandson of Peter Nagle, who, on his emigration from Germany, settled in Berks County. His son Peter, who also resided in the same county, was in Berks County July 11, 1782, and died May 2, 1846. He married Susan Filbert, born April 23, 1785, who died May 26, 1854. They had children,—John F., Augustus W., Peter F., Henry and one daughter.

Peter F. Nagle was born in Berks County, Eleventh Pennsylvania Reserves. In June, of same year, was promoted to surgeon and transferred to the Eighty-fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, which was assigned to the Eighteenth Army Corps, under General Butler, and participated in the several engagements before Petersburg and Richmond, Va. On the 22d of November, 1864, the regiment was mustered out of the service. He then joined his family in Reading, to which place they removed while he was in the army, and has since practiced in the city.

liamsport; obtained a rudimentary education in the schools of Reading, and continued his studies at Marshall College, Mercersburg, and at Kessler's Academy, Allentown. In 1865 he entered his father's office as a medical student, and continued with Dr. Frank Rieser, of Reading. He spent one year in the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania and two years at the Jefferson Medical College, from which institution he was graduated in 1857. The same year he began practice in Exeter township, Berks County, and remained there until 1859, the date of his removal to Fleetwood, in the same county. There he practiced until his connection with the army, August 4, 1862, as assistant surgeon of the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry. He was, on the 17th of December, 1864, promoted to the office of surgeon of the regiment, and served in that capacity until his discharge, August 13, 1865, participating meanwhile in the following engagements: Siege of Suffolk, Va., April 14 and March 4, 1863; Petersburg, June 9–16, 1864; Ream's Station, June 29, 1864; Deep Bottom, July 9, 1864; Richmond, September 29 and October 1, 1864; Darbytown Road, October 7, 1864; Seven Pines, October 27, 1864; New Market Heights, October 10, 1864; Five Forks, April 1, 1865; Deep Creek, April 4, 1865; Amelia Court-House, April 5, 1865, and Appomatox Court-House, April 9, 1865. On his return he settled in Reading and secured a lucrative practice. He is a member of the Medical Society of the County of Berks and of the Pathological Medical Society. As a Free and Accepted Mason, he is a member of Lodge No. 62, of Reading, of Chapter 152 and of Reading Commandery, No. 42.

As a Democrat, he was elected to and filled the office of county treasurer from 1874 to 1876, and was for two years a member of the City Council, the first of which (1878) he filled the chair of its president. He was, in July, 1885, appointed examining surgeon for pensions. Dr. Nagle was, on the 18th of June, 1872, married to Lucretia, daughter of Henry B. and Susan Boyer, of Reading. Their children are Henry B., Howard B., Paul, Charles E. and two who are deceased. The doctor is an esteemed member of Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church of Reading.

John S. Tryon was born in Rehersburg May 12, 1835, and is the second son of Dr. Jacob Tryon. He obtained his education in the common schools and at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg. He studied medicine under the tuition of his father, and was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1857. He immediately entered upon the practice of his profession in his native town, where he has since resided, and where he has met with success, especially in surgery. Drs. George F. Brendle (Mahany City), Daniel Dechert (Cressona), Simon Seyfert (Pinegrove, Schuylkill County) and John Wagner (Hamburg, Berks County) were students under his instruction.

John B. Sterley was born in 1835 in Montgomery County, Pa., and is a descendant of French ancestry. He attended Freeland Seminary (now Ursinus College); read medicine in the office of Drs. Keeler and Groff, of Harleysville; attended lectures at the University of Pennsylvania, and was graduated M.D. from that institution March 6, 1857; began practicing at Earlville, Lancaster County, Pa., and continued until 1862, when he entered the army as surgeon—first in Camp Curtin, at Harrisburg, for three months, and then became surgeon of the Eleventh Pennsylvania Militia. He was afterward transferred to Reading, as surgeon, to examine drafted men and substitutes, and, upon the organization of the One Hundred and Sixty-seventh Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, was chosen its surgeon. He was next appointed examining surgeon in the provost-marshall's office at Pottsville. In 1864 returned to Montgomery County, and in 1865 came to Reading, where he has since practiced his profession, excepting a few years when he was in Western Pennsylvania. Dr. Sterley was for three years a member of the United States board of examining surgeons for pensions.

John A. Brobst, of Bernville, was born October 26, 1835, at Rehersburg; attended the public and private schools, and, at the age of fourteen, was sent to Pennsylvania College, at Gettysburg, where he remained until he finished the studies of the sophomore year; read
Charles E. Shoemaker⁴ is a native of Montgomery County, Pa., and was born March 1, 1836, at Skippackville, a pleasant village on the Skippack, Flourtown and Philadelphia turnpike, about seventeen miles northwest of Philadelphia. His birth occurred on the old Shoemaker homestead, where his father, Jacob, and his grandfather, Isaac, were born, and which his great grandfather, George Shoemaker, purchased, the title being held continuously by this family for nearly one hundred years. The Shoemaker family is one of the oldest in the State, three brothers having emigrated to this country with William Penn, in 1683, and settled at Germantown (now Philadelphia), where still a number of their descendants may be found. Isaac Shoemaker, the grandfather of the doctor, had two sons, the elder George and the younger Jacob. The grandfather, who was an enterprising man, engaged in merchant milling, sawing and lumber, brick-making, farming and other businesses all at the same time. Although widely and favorably known as one of the most successful business men of his time in the county, he was by no means a worldly man, as the term implies. He was scrupulously just and honorable in all his dealings and of positive religious convictions, a consistent and active church member until his death, at the age of seventy-six. He gave the principal part of his real estate and business to his two sons. The agricultural part and old homestead went to his son Jacob, the father of the doctor, who here grew up midst pleasant surroundings, carefully trained and disciplined by his parents. They had six children, two of whom died in infancy and four of whom are still living. The subject of this biography is the second son. His mother (nee Everhart) was born, raised, and educated in Philadelphia. She died at the age of seventy, at Bethlehem, where she is buried and now rests in her son's lot on Niskey Hill, in that beautiful cemetery on the Lehigh River.

As above stated, Dr. Charles E. Shoemaker was the second son. The elder, now Dr. I. N. E. Shoemaker, of Reading, while quite young, chose medicine as a profession, and after receiving his preliminary education entered the office of Dr. Charles Shoemaker, of Montgomery County. His brother remained at his home and attended the village school until he entered Freeland Seminary (now Ursinus College), at Collegeville, Montgomery County, Pa., where he continued his studies during 1855-57, and then engaged as teacher of the borough school at Millerstown, Lehigh County, Pa., at the same time entering upon the study of medicine under Dr. Jenkin Evans, of that borough. After completing his term of teaching he discontinued his studies under Dr. Evans and entered the office of his brother, Dr. I. N. E. Shoemaker, in compliance with the latter’s wish, until the fall of 1858, when he became a student of the Medical Department of Pennsylvania College, Philadelphia, from which college he was graduated March 3, 1860. On the 23d day of the same month he was married to ore lands, where mining was extensively carried on. The country was thickly populated, and the extensive mining machinery was the cause of many accidents and much surgical practice. Here Dr. Shoemaker cast his lot and entered upon the practice of his profession on the 26th day of March, 1860, at which time and place there was a most fatal epidemic of malignant scarlet fever. He treated the disease with great success and was soon a very busy man, making three hundred and thirty-five visits the first month he practiced and losing but one case. Dr. Shoemaker was speedily known and recognized as a successful doctor. He attended an extraordinary case of attempted suicide by arsenic of a prominent young man, to whose assistance Dr. Shoemaker was hastily summoned, and fortunately saved from all harm after a great effort, as the case was a desperate one. This was reported and published in the Philadelphia Medical and Surgical Reporter, vol. v. p. 462. He was soon under the necessity of securing an assistant, whom he associated as partner in the business, which continued to increase so rapidly that with all his help he found country practice making inroads upon his health, and fearing a physical breakdown, concluded to relinquish his practice and remove to Bethlehem, Pa., in the spring of 1864, selling meanwhile to his partner, Dr. Henry K. Hartzell, and his brother, Dr. I. N. E. Shoemaker. Success attended him in his new field of labor, where he soon established a lucrative practice and took in Dr. John H. Wilson as partner, who became his successor. In the spring of 1873 he moved to the city of Reading, Pa. Having written his "Thesis on the Ear" when he graduated at Pennsylvania Medical College, Philadelphia, and devoted some study to auralsurgery, he improved every opportunity to qualify himself for the treatment of such cases. Being encouraged by his success, he finally concluded to master this subject, and thereupon abandoned general practice, repaired to New York City and entered Bellevue Hospital Medical College, where in connection with the hospitals, clinics and ear dispensaries and institutes of that city, he had superior opportunities for becoming, under Prof. Noyes as instructor, master of this special department of medical and surgical science.

After completing his post-graduate course in New York City he opened an office at Reading, and began practice as auralsurgeon. He confines his attention strictly to his specialty, namely, "The Ear, its Diseases and their Treatment." This seemingly limits his practice to but few ailments, though it in reality embraces all acute and chronic diseases of the head, ears, nose, throat, etc., including nervous and other ailments that may, through sympathy or otherwise, directly or indirectly affect the hearing, and especially such as affect the mucous membrane, as catarrh. In this new field of labor Dr. Shoemaker found an abundant harvest. The afflicted with these ailments, hearing of his success, soon noised it abroad, and his office was daily crowded and the doctor was obliged to again secure an assistant. Dr. Charles E. Shoemaker as auralsurgeon stands at the head of the profession in the State of Pennsylvania. His reputation is not local, but extends beyond the limits of his own State and country. He is not only known as a skillful and successful auralsurgeon, but as an able writer on auralsurgery, having published a volume of three hundred and seventy-five pages octavo, on "The Ear, its Diseases and Injuries and their Treatment," which has been favorably received and commented upon by the press.

J. B. Potteiger was born at Strasstown; attended the schools of Reading and Freeland Seminary; completed the medical course and took his degree at the Jefferson Medical College with the class of 1859; practiced at Lenharts-ville, Berks County until 1862, where he entered the army as assistant surgeon of the 128th Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, in the nine months' service. In 1864 he re-entered the army as surgeon by contract at the Lincoln Hospital for three months and was then sent to Point Lookout Hospital, until the spring of 1865. He then resumed practice first in Berks County and in 1867 located at Hamburg, where he has since resided. He was assistant surgeon of the Fourth Regiment, N. G. P., for several years, and in 1884 was chosen surgeon of the regiment with the rank of major. He has been a notary public for thirteen years.

F. K. Spang was born in Oley township, Berks County, in 1839. He was educated at Norristown, Penna., and at East Hampton, Mass., and graduated in medicine from the Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia, in the class of 1860. He engaged in a large practice for a number of years in Oley township and at Lyons Station, in Berks County; removed to Reading in 1884, where he has since met with great success in his profession.
Charles G. Loose was born November 15, 1840, in Centre township, Berks County; he attended the State Normal School at Millersville and Kutztown, and the Reading Classical Academy. He was graduated in medicine from the University of Pennsylvania in 1868. Practiced medicine in Mechanicsburg, Cumberland County, Pa., for seven years, also at Centreport, in Berks County, for the same time; came to Reading in 1882, and is now engaged in his profession in the city.

Henry Landis was born in East Lampeter township, Lancaster County; was educated in the common schools and at the Millersville State Normal School; studied medicine under the instruction of Dr. J. Aug. Ehler, of Lancaster, and took his degree at the University of Pennsylvania in 1861. He then practiced medicine at Wrightsville, in York County, and Marietta, Lancaster County. In 1870 he removed to Reading, and in 1873 was placed on the medical staff of St. Joseph’s Hospital. He former having settled in Pequea Valley, and the latter near Ephrata.

Peter Plank, the third son, was born in Oley, in the year 1748. He moved to the headwaters of the Conestoga, in Caernarvon township, some years before the Revolution, and there purchased a large tract of farming land and followed the occupation of a farmer. He was married to Frances (Franey) a daughter of Jacob Kauffman, who was a prominent farmer in the upper section of Chester County. He died in 1831, aged eighty-three years; and she died in 1837, aged seventy-six years. They had nine is a charter member of Lodge No. 398, A. Y. M., located at Marietta.

D. Heber Plank, of Morgantown, is a great-great grandson of Dr. Jacob Plank, a sketch of whom is given at the beginning of this chapter. Dr. Jacob Plank had four sons, viz.: Michael, John, Peter and Jacob. Michael migrated to Ohio, where he was one of the pioneers. John and Jacob moved to Lancaster County, the children,—Maria, born 1783; Jacob, born 1785; John, born 1787; Christopher, born 1789; Christian, born 1791; Elizabeth, born 1793; Anna, born 1798; Samuel, born 1801 and David, born 1804. He was, by religious faith, an Amish Mennonite, and during the last fifty years of his life filled very successfully the office of bishop, having had charge of all the congregations in Berks, Chester and Lancaster Counties. He was the second bishop of this denomination in this section of the State. The Amish to this day speak of him with the highest feelings of respect and affection, for his earnest efforts in their behalf.

David Plank, the youngest son, was born in Caernarvon township, on May 21, 1804, and, after receiving a good general education, turned his attention to farming. He married Rebecca, a daughter of Daniel Buckwalter, of same township, and a granddaughter of Francis Buckwalter, of Chester County; and afterward purchased the Plank homestead and the adjoining farm, upon which he carried on farming operations very successfully. In connection with this pursuit he burned and disposed of great quantities of lime upon his property. He retired some years ago from active business, and lived a quiet life in the old home in good health till recently. After a short illness, he died April 11, 1886, nearly eighty-two years old. For a number of years he took an active part in the political affairs of the county. He held the office of county treasurer for one term, 1859 and 1860; and the County Agricultural Society also received his earnest assistance, he having shown great interest in its success. He exercised a large influence in his community for upwards of forty years. The system of common-school education found in him a friend and advocate. He connected himself at an early date with the St. Thomas' Episcopal Church, at Morgantown, and acted as a vestryman for many years. He had eleven children, of whom the following six are still living: John, Daniel K., Margaret Elizabeth, Martin B., D. Heber and Rebecca Frances. His wife died in 1870, in the sixty-eighth year of her age.

D. Heber Plank, the subject of this biographical sketch, was born in Caernarvon township on November 12, 1842. After receiving a thorough common-school education, he attended the Pennsylvania State College and the Millersville Normal School; and then selecting medicine as his profession, he finished his medical education at the University of Pennsylvania, under the supervision of B. F. Bunn, M.D., at Birdsboro', and H. Lenox Hodge, M.D., at Philadelphia; from which he was graduated on March 14, 1867. For a year afterward he traveled extensively through the Western States and the Dominion of Canada, and then settled at Morgantown, in this county, where he has since been successfully engaged in a general practice of his profession. He is a member of the Pathological Society of Berks County. He owns and occupies a fine home in the centre of Morgantown; and, on the lot connected with the property, he has been quite successful in the cultivation of different varieties of pears. Several years ago he purchased a tract of forty acres of hill-land and planted it with black walnuts for the purpose of cultivating a walnut grove. These are practical evidences of his enterprise outside of his profession. In politics he is a Democrat. By his upright demeanor, and careful attention to business, he has won the confidence of the entire community. He is a member and now also a vestryman of St. Thomas' Episcopal Church, at Morgantown. He was married, in 1877, to Ida, eldest daughter of Horace Bertolet, deceased, and they have three sons,—David Horace, Walter Frederick and Heber Eugene.

ADAM B. DUNDOR was born May 16, 1838, in North Heidelberg township, Berks County; his preliminary education was obtained at the Fremont Academy, Chester County, and Freeeland Seminary, at Collegeville, Pa. In 1857 he entered Franklin and Marshall College, and was graduated from that institution in 1862; studied medicine with Dr. William Moore, of Womelsdorf, Pa., and was graduated in medicine from the Long Island College Hospital in 1863, and from the Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia, with the class of 1864; practiced medicine in Robesonia, Berks County, for three years, and removed to Reading in 1867; served as physician to the Berks County Almishouse and Hospital from 1870 to 1873, and prison physician from 1873 to 1877. He is at present (1886) a member of the Board of Health, of Reading.

Abraham S. Raudenbush was born July 24, 1841, at Salfordville, Montgomery County, Pa.; was educated in the public schools of that county until 1859, when he entered the Freeland Seminary. In 1862 he studied medicine in the office of Drs. Keeler and Groff, at Harleyville, Montgomery County, and at the close of the same year commenced a course in the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, graduating with the class of 1864. He then commenced practice at Adamstown, Lancaster County, continuing there for eighteen years. In 1882 he removed to Reading.

Stanley Smith, son of Levi B. Smith, was born at Joanna Furnace, Berks County. He graduated with honor at Amherst College, Massachusetts, in the class of 1865. He studied medicine with Professor B. Howard Rand, in Philadelphia, and graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1868. He then spent one year at the Leipsic University, Germany. On his return to this country, he was elected lecturer on Physical Diagnosis, in the summer course of the Jefferson Medical College, in 1875. In the spring of 1877 he resigned this position and removed to Reading, where he has since devoted special attention to the eye.

Israel Cleaver is of English and German ancestry, and was born November 26, 1842. His paternal ancestor was a large landowner, and one of the first members of the Maiden-creek Friends' Meeting. Dr. Cleaver acquired a preliminary education in the schools of Reading, and was graduated from the High School in the class of 1859. He taught school for three years and then entered the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, and was graduated from that institution in 1863. Immediately thereafter he entered the Union army as an assistant surgeon of a marine brigade along the Mississippi River, remaining two years. After returning to Pennsylvania, spent one year practicing in Clearfield County, then moved to Philipsburg, Centre County, and followed his profession there five successive years. In the fall of 1871 he located in Reading, and soon became an active practitioner in the city. He is a member of the Reading Medical Association, the Medical Society of the County of Berks, the State Medical Society, the Board of Health of the city, and for two years a member of the board of the United States examining surgeons for pensions. He is connected with the Grand Army of the Republic, and is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Dr. Cleaver is a gentleman of culture and an excellent physician.

Samuel C. Ermentrout, son of William E. and Justina (Silvis) Ermentrout, was born March 28, 1844. His preparatory education was acquired at the Reading High School and Reading Classical Academy. He then began the study of medicine under the instruction of Dr. Joseph Coblenz, and continued with Dr. Lenox Hodge, of Philadelphia. He was graduated in medicine from the University of Pennsylvania in 1866. During the Civil War he served as a private in Company E, One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was wounded at the battle of Chancellorsville. Soon after the opening of the Franco-Prussian War, in 1870, he went to Europe and was appointed a surgeon in the Prussian army, with the rank of first lieutenant, and was soon promoted to staff-surgeon, with the rank of captain. For his skillful surgery he was decorated with the golden cross, and made a member of the Order of the Crown. He served in the Prussian army just one year and was located in the hospital at Coblenz. At the close of the war he returned to Reading and has since practiced in his native city. He was physician to the county almshouse; was four years Commander of Keim Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Reading, and is a member of the medical staff of St. Joseph's Hospital.

W. Murray Weidman, born in Lebanon, Pa., is a son of Jacob Barge Weidman and Elizabeth Chambers Murray his wife. His paternal ancestors came to this country about 1700. His grandfather, Major John Weidman, born in Lancaster County in 1756, was a surveyor, served in the Revolutionary War, and was retired January 1, 1787. His name is enrolled in the Society of the Cincinnati. His father, born in Philadelphia, was a lawyer of Lebanon County, Pa., and a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1837–38. His maternal ancestors, the Murrays, came to this country in 1730, settling in New Jersey.
Doctor Weidman was educated at Lebanon Academy; entered Pennsylvania College at Gettysburg, from which he graduated in 1856. Selecting medicine as a profession, he entered the office of Drs. John W. and Cyrus D. Glouinge of Lebanon; continued his studies at the University of Pennsylvania, and received his diploma, 1860. For nineteen months he was one of the resident physicians in Philadelphia Hospital (Blockley), then he became assistant surgeon in the 11th Penna. Cavalry in the Civil War. Subsequently he was ordered to the 2d Penna. Cavalry. Oct. 1, 1862, he was promoted to rank of surgeon of same regiment. He was taken prisoner near Occoquan, Va., Dec. 28, 1863, but was on following day paroled with the wounded, in charge of whom he was left. When his term expired, Oct. 31, 1864, he was mustered out. The same year he located in Reading and soon afterward was appointed surgeon to the P. and R. R. Co., in which capacity he has since served. His professional knowledge and ability soon placed him with the leading practitioners and brought an extended practice. He devotes much attention to surgery, in which branch of the profession he has won a deservedly high reputation for skill and success.

He is a member of the Medical Society of Berks Co., Reading Medical Association, Medical Society of Pa., American Medical Association, and Academy of Medicine. Since 1867 he was one of the active managers and surgeons of the Reading Dispensary (now Reading Hospital). He was one of the original members of the Board of Health (1872), and for nine years, its presiding officer. He also served as city auditor from 1869 to 1872. Feb. 1886, he was appointed on the Pension Board of Examining Surgeons of Berks County. In politics he is a Democrat. He is a member of Christ Cathedral, of which he is now a vestryman, having served since 1867.

Dr. Weidman was married to Mary May, daughter of Hon. George M. Keim, by whom he has three children,—Julia Keim, Bessie Murray and Marion Douglass; two, Laura Farquhar and Helen Murray, having died.
Thomas A. Dunkle was born October, 1844, in Berks County; was a pupil in the schools of Reading, also in Union Seminary, at New Berlin, Union County, Pa.; studied medicine with Dr. D. L. Beaver as preceptor, and was graduated from the Jefferson Medical College, at Philadelphia, with the class of 1865. During 1862 and 1863 he was contract assistant surgeon in the United States hospital at Fourth and George Streets, Philadelphia. From 1865 to 1870 he practiced medicine in Friedensburg, Berks County, and removed to Reading in 1870, where he has since practiced.

George H. Bickel is of German descent, his grandfather, Joseph Bickel, having settled as a farmer in Heidelberg township, Berks County. Among his children is Josiah, the father of Dr. George H. Bickel. His mother is Louisa, daughter of George Hartman, of Bern township. Dr. Bickel was born in the latter township February 21, 1855, and passed much of his youth in that and Spring township, attending the public schools until his fifteenth year, when he removed to Schuylkill County and found employment in the mines during the summer months, pursuing his studies meanwhile in winter. He remained at that point for three years, subsequently spending one year at Hazleton, Luzerne County. He next spent two years at the Bloomsburg Normal School and then entered the office of Dr. James Y. Shearer, of Sinking Springs, as a student of medicine, remaining two years, and was graduated from the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1878. The same year he located in Rehrersburg, Berks County, where he has since been actively engaged in professional labor. He soon won the confidence of the community and established a large and growing practice. He is a member of the Berks County Medical Society, participates in the discussions before that body and occasionally contributes to the medical journals of the day. Dr. Bickel numbers among his most successful cases an operation resulting in the removal of an ovarian tumor in 1883, with distinguished physicians as his assistants. He has also met with much success in the treatment of diphtheria. Politically he is a Democrat. He and his wife are members of the Reformed Church of Rehrersburg. Dr. Bickel was married, on the 10th of April, 1880, to Lizzie, daughter of William Shaffner, of Tulpehocken township. Their children are Minnie May, born May 17, 1881, and George Allen, June 12, 1885.

Calvin K. Young was born in Oley township; attended the public schools, the Oley Academy and Millersville State Normal School; studied medicine under the direction of Dr. J.
S. Ammon, of Reading, and was graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Baltimore in 1880. He then entered the pharmacy of his former preceptor, Dr. J. S. Ammon, in Reading, where he remained until 1885, when he removed to the mining region in Pennsylvania to establish a drug-store.

James W. Keiser was born at Reading September 24, 1860; attended the public schools, and, at the age of sixteen years, began the study of medicine under the instruction of Dr. William N. Davis. In 1882 he was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania, and immediately began to practice in Reading. He is secretary of the Pathological Society of Berks County.

Milton D. M. Batdorff is the grandson of John Batdorff, who resided in Myerstown, Lebanon County, Pa., where he was a citizen of much influence, and, at one time, filled the office of associate judge of the Lebanon County Court. By his marriage to Miss Lauer, of the same county, were born the following-named children: Thomas, Benjamin, Peter, John, Daniel L., Elizabeth (married to George Walborn), Catherine (married to G. Walborn) and Mrs. Peter Etris.

Benjamin Batdorff was a native of Lebanon County, where his life was spent in the occupation of a farmer. He married Esther, daughter of Leonard Walborn. Their children were William, Peter, John, Aaron, Percival, Daniel, Milton D. M., George, Lepentina (married to Daniel Dierwechter) and Elizabeth (married to John Jones).

Milton D. M., of this number, and the subject of this biographical sketch, was born January 10, 1844, in Marion township, Berks County, and removed when a child to Myerstown, where he remained until twelve years of age, when Millersburg became his home. His father having died when his son was but a lad, he entered the family of his uncle, Dr. D. L. Batdorff, and after attending the public schools, learned the printer's trade, which he followed for seven years and then began the study of medicine, and spent five years in preparing himself for his profession. He attended the sessions of 1866–67 at the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, and was graduated from that institution in 1867. He remained one year in practice with his uncle, and then located in Friedensburg, Schuylkill County, remaining there four years. Returning to Millersburg, he was associated as a partner with Dr. D. L. Batdorff, and continued this relation until the death of the latter, in 1872. His son, Henry Batdorff, pursued his medical studies with the subject of this biography, and shared his practice for two years, since which period he has continued alone. Dr. Batdorff's field of practice is extensive, requiring long and tedious rides through his own and other townships. His practice, which is general, has been a growing and successful one. The doctor is a member of Bethel Lodge, No. 820, Independent Order of Odd-Fellows, of Millersburg. He is a member of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Rehrersburg. Dr. Batdorff was, December 25, 1868, married to Miss Emma, daughter of David B. Lerch, of Millersburg. Their children are William D., Minnie, Henry, Lizzie, Charlotte, Eva, Lillie and George. Mrs. Batdorff is a member of the Reformed Church of Millersburg.

Edward Hottenstein, Jr.—David Hottenstein, the grandfather of Dr. Hottenstein, studied medicine with Dr. Joseph Hirsch, and attended lectures at the Medical Institute, Philadelphia. After obtaining his diploma, he practiced in Berks County, and resided on the homestead in Maxatway. He was married to Elizabeth Kline, a daughter of Richard Kline, of Montgomery County. He died in 1848, aged eighty-two years, four months and twenty-five days, leaving six sons and two daughters, viz.: David, Jacob, Daniel, William, Isaac, Henry, Catharine and Sarah.

William had eight children, viz.: David H., Charles A., Robert, Henry, Edward, Caroline, Sallie A. and Matilda.

Edward was born October 1, 1831, at the old homestead. He first attended the district schools, then went to the seminary under Prof. J. Warren Sunderland, at Collegeville, after which he studied medicine under Dr. Henry Geiger, of Harleysville, Montgomery County.
He was graduated from Jefferson Medical College, 1853, and began practice in Maxatawny, where he remained until 1870, when he removed to Kutztown. He has since been engaged in his profession in that village. From the time he began to practice his profession he has met with success, and his business gradually increased until it was shared by his eldest son. He has made gynecology a specialty, and has devoted much study to cases of a chronic nature. In this field, as well as in his obstetrical practice, he has been exceptionally successful.

Dr. Hottenstein was married, September 18, 1855, to Sarah Ann, daughter of Jacob Knabb, of Oley, born September 10, 1835. Their children are Ida C., born September 4, 1856; H. Alice E., February 13, 1859; Elmer K., Dec. 3, 1861; Edward L., August 12, 1864; Sarah Ann, Aug. 5, 1866; William J., Aug. 28, 1868; Charles A., October 1, 1871; Peter D., July 20, 1874; Deborah C., January 14, 1877, of whom all but Sarah Ann are now living. Dr. Hottenstein is a Democrat in politics. He has been a member of the Borough Council of Kutztown, and for a number of years, president of the Board of School Directors. He is a member of the Medical Society of the county and a member of the Reformed Church of Kutztown.

His son, Elmer K., studied with his father, was graduated from the Jefferson Medical College in 1883, and is now associated with his father in practice. Edward L. also read medicine in his father's office.

Sketches of many of the physicians of this County will be found in the township and borough histories.

The Medical Faculty of Berks County.

—The first medical society of the county was incorporated, then subsequently organized at Reading, in the State-House, on Saturday, August 7, 1824, under the name of the "Medical Faculty of Berks County."
The following-named officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Isaac Hiester; Vice-Presidents, C. L. Schlemm and John B. Otto; Treasurer, George Eckert; Recording Secretary, Charles Baum; Corresponding Secretaries, William J. C. Baum and Edward Haydock; Curators, Bernard McNeil and Gerhard Bishop.

According to one of the resolutions then passed, it would appear that small-pox was then in the borough; and the society having undoubted confidence in vaccination, recommended strongly “this mild and safe preventative in all cases deemed liable to the infection of that loathsome and too often fatal disease.” Dr. Hiester, upon assuming the duties of the office to which he was unanimously chosen, delivered an admirable address to the faculty. Among other things, he said that this organization was the first of the kind in Pennsylvania, excepting the College of Physicians and Medical Society of Philadelphia.

This society continued to exist, hold regular meetings and annually send representatives to the State Medical Society for a period of twenty years. On February 23, 1850, the society was reorganized and the name changed to the “Medical Society of the City of Reading and the County of Berks,” with the object of cultivating the science of medicine in all its collateral branches, to elevate and sustain medical character, to encourage a system of professional etiquette and to promote mutual improvement, social intercourse and good feeling among the members of the medical profession. No person could become a member of this society unless he were a graduate of some recognized medical college. In 1856 William Herbst was president; Martin Luther, secretary; and Edward Wallace, treasurer. This society continued to exist until its disbandment, in 1870.

The Medical Society of the County of Berks.—The society with the above name was formed by members of the allopathic school of practice on November 22, 1870, on the same day that the old Berks County Medical Society was disbanded. The organization was effected in the office of Dr. J. B. Brooke, 44 North Fourth Street, Reading. The physicians present at the first meeting were J. S. Ammon, J. Brobst, Edward Brobst, J. B. Brooke, George W. Byerle, Joseph Coblentz, A. B. Dundor, J. S. Hunsberger, S. L. Kurtz, De B. Kuhn, C. Kreye, J. M. Matthews, William Moore, J. M. Newpher, J. Y. Shearer, J. K. Seaman, J. B. Sterley, C. Turner, D. A. Ulrich, Edward Wallace, Charles Weber and W. Murray Weidman. After a temporary organization a resolution was passed to the effect that the new society be formed for mutual improvement in connection with the Pennsylvania State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

The following resolution was then passed and signed by all members present:

“Resolved, That members of the Berks County Medical Society, and others members of the medical profession in good standing in this county and graduates of medicine, do hereby associate themselves for the purposes set forth in a preamble and constitution of the organization, under the name and title of the Berks County Medical Association.”

The constitution and by-laws were adopted at a meeting held January 3, 1871. At the same time a permanent organization was effected by electing William Moore, president; J. S. Ammon and James M. Matthews, vice-presidents; W. Murray Weidman, recording secretary; J. B. Brooke, corresponding secretary; D. A. Ulrich, treasurer; Edward Wallace, J. A. Brobst, De B. Kuhn, censors; and Joseph Coblentz, curator. At this meeting the name was changed from the Berks County Medical Association to the Medical Society of the County of Berks. It was also decided by resolution at the same time that the meetings be held bimonthly and that a business meeting shall regularly alternate with a meeting for the discussion of topics relating to the profession. The same regulation and order of exercises remain in force.

At the meeting of the society held in Stauffer’s Hall, March 7, 1871, Drs. S. L. Kurtz, D. A. Ulrich and Edward Wallace, a committee appointed to represent this society at the annual meeting of the State Medical Society, in Philadelphia, reported that they had gained recognition from that body, were admitted as members to its sessions, and that the board of censors of the State Medical Society had given their approval to the constitution and the by-laws of the Medical Society of the County of Berks.

The county society was then in excellent working condition and gradually increased in membership and influence. It is now an active agent in promoting the welfare of the profession in the city and county. The meetings are largely attended, and interesting and valuable discussions of important topics take place.

The first delegate election of this society to send representatives to the American Medical Association took place March 7, 1871. The delegates were Drs. Kuhn, Wily and Moore.

On May 2d of the same year the following-named members were elected delegates to the State Medical Society, viz.: Drs. Wallace, Weidman, Kuhn, Brooke, Conrad and J. A. Brobst. The society made its first annual visit to the County Almshouse in March, 1871.

On September 5, 1871, Dr. Brooke offered the following, which was passed unanimously:

"Resolved, That this day and annually hereafter, at the meeting in June, five members shall be elected as a Sanitary Committee, to whom shall be referred all papers read before this Society, for the purpose of making selections therefrom to accompany the sanitary report to be made to the State Medical Society."

The subject of vaccination received the official indorsement of the society during the year 1872, and the officers elected to serve for the ensuing year were Dr. Jos. Coblentz, president, and Dr. W. M. Weidman, recording secretary.

A committee was appointed to solicit contributions among the members of the society toward the Chicago Relief Fund for medical men, resulting in the collection of seventy-three dollars, which was duly forwarded.

During the year 1875 the place of meeting was changed to Dr. Brooke's office, and the officers elected for the year 1876 were: President, Dr. De B. Kuhn, and Recording Secretary, Dr. Israel Cleaver, the latter serving in the capacity of secretary for a subsequent period of eight years.

At a meeting held March 12, 1878, a resolution was passed favoring the signing of petitions to the State Legislature, praying the enactment of a law concerning "privileged communications" to physicians, whereby the profession will be placed on an equality with other professions as witnesses in courts of justice. The society unanimously decided to co-operate with other societies to secure the necessary legislation.

Dr. Muhlenberg presented the following resolution at a meeting held May 14, 1878, which the delegates were instructed to introduce at the next meeting of the State Society:

"Resolved, That no member of any county society in connection with the State Medical Society shall admit into his office a student of medicine until he present a certificate from an examining committee of said society, testifying that he has been duly examined, has a good English education, and a sufficient knowledge of Latin and scientific acquirements to enable him to pursue his studies with advantage."

This rule is now in force throughout the entire State. At the next meeting, held July 9th of the same year, the following was presented referring to the registration act:

"Resolved, That the corresponding secretary be authorized to seek full information relative to the steps to be taken to secure the registration of practitioners of medicine in the county of Berks, and inform the members of this Society of their duty in this respect, and otherwise do whatever may be necessary to the execution of the Act of Assembly requiring the registration of all practitioners of medicine in the State of Pennsylvania."

At a meeting held March 9, 1880, Dr. Cleaver introduced the subject of "Physical Culture" before the society, whereupon the following preamble and resolution were adopted:

"Whereas, Dr. Israel Cleaver, a member of this Association, has recently introduced the instruction of children in calisthenics and is now engaged in organizing a class of adults for the same purpose, therefore:

"Resolved, That this Society hereby endorses this effort to improve the health of the youth of our city by offering them a mode of exercise which is at once light, healthful and absolutely free from danger, and that the course thus inaugurated is worthy the fullest confidence and encouragement of parents and all others having an interest in the fullest physical development of their wards and children of both sexes."

The society began to write to medical practitioners at a distance to lecture upon special topics by resolution passed September 7, 1880, and Dr. E. H. Coover, of Harrisburg, delivered the first lecture upon the subject of "Spinal Curvature."

The society changed its place of meeting, by resolution passed March 8, 1881, from Dr. Brooke's office, where the members met for a period of ten years, to the Reading Library Building, at Fifth and Franklin Streets. At this meeting Dr. Atkinson, of Philadelphia, lectured before a number of physicians and invited guests upon the subject of "Scarlatina."

Amendments to the by-laws were added during the year 1882, pertaining chiefly to the requirements affecting office students, and the society also condemned the practice of copyrighting common pharmaceutical preparations by registering them as trade-marks.

The following important resolution was submitted by Dr. Coblentz at the meeting held November 12, 1883, and unanimously passed:

"Resolved, That we earnestly request our Representative in Congress to use his best endeavors to aid in procuring an adequate appropriation for the erection of a suitable building in Washington, D. C., in which the National Medical Library and the National Medical and Surgical Museum can be advantageously arranged and displayed for reference and examination; and that a copy of this resolution, with the compliments of this Society, be transmitted to Mr. Ermentrout."

The officers elected to serve for the year 1884 were Dr. W. G. Beyerle, president, and Dr. C. W. Bachman, secretary; and in the month of May, Professor Roberts Bartholow, of Philadelphia, lectured before an audience of over one hundred and ten physicians from different parts of the county, in Young Men's Christian Association Hall, under the auspices of the County Medical Society. The delegates to the State Medical Society, which convened in Philadelphia in 1884, consisting of Drs. Bachman, Cleaver, Hertzog, Hunsberger, Lee, Schulze, Sterley and Weidman, were instructed to vote affirmatively upon the resolution of the Philadelphia County Society favoring the creation of a State Board of Health.

The society, at one of its meetings this year, also discussed the subject of poisons, the sale of which was engaging the popular mind at this time, resulting in the following motion:

"Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to examine into the law governing the sale of poisons, and that the committee meet with the Druggists' Association, of this city, for the purpose of considering such action as may prevent or restrict an indiscriminate sale of the same."

The officers elected for the year 1886 are as follows: J. M. Myers, of Wernersville, president; Israel Cleaver, of Reading, first vice-president; W. E. Hunsberger, of Maiden-creek, second vice-president; C. W. Bachman, of Reading, recording secretary; Howard S. Rieser, corresponding secretary; J. B. Brooke, J. Y. Shearer and R. B. Shulze, censors; W. F. Muhlenberg, J. E. Kurtz and I. Cleaver, medical examiners, and W. Murray Weidman, curator.

The following is a list of the members of the society for the year 1886:

John A. Brobst, Bernville; W. George Beyerle, Bernville; L. H. Francis, Boyertown; James A. Hoffman, Centreport; J. S. Trexler, Kutztown; Ed. Brobst, Leesport; J. K. Seaman, Lenhartsville; D. H. Hain, Lower Bern; Wm. E. Hunsburger, Maiden-creek; W. B. Shaner, Mohrsville; J. B. Rupp, Malt-town; W. D. De Long, Pikoville; Charles Weber, Pricetown; George H. Bickle, Rehrersburg; James Y. Shearer, Sinking Spring; James M. Matthews, Temple; M. L. Fitch, Virginsville; James M. Myers, Wernersville.

The other members reside in the city of Reading; their names are as follows:

The Pathological Society.—This society, from whose membership is furnished the medical staff of St. Joseph's Hospital, was organized May 10, 1871. Dr. D. L. Beaver was chosen first president; B. F. Bunn and Martin Luther, vice-presidents; M. Albert Rhoads, secretary and treasurer. The society, since its organization, has held its monthly meetings in the offices of different members. The officers for the year 1886 are as follows: M. A. Rhoads, president; S. C. Ermentrout and H. Landis, vice-presidents; James W. Keiser, secretary and treasurer. The membership of the society is

The Reading Medical Association.—On the evening of May 27, 1850, Drs. William Gries, John P. Heister, D. L. Beaver, C. H. Hunter, L. L. Stewart and Edward Wallace met at the office of Dr. Hunter and organized “The Reading Medical Association,” adopting a constitution and by-laws, electing to membership Dr. Peter F. Nagle and choosing officers as follows: President, Dr. William M. Gries; Vice-President, Dr. John P. Hiester; Recording Secretary, Dr. Edward Wallace; Corresponding Secretary, Dr. L. L. Stewart; Treasurer, Dr. Charles H. Hunter.

Of the gentlemen who thus projected this organization, Dr. Beaver alone survives.

The usual purpose of such organizations, viz., the fostering of professional intercourse and consequent increase of knowledge, the preserving of a code of medical ethics and the conserving of everything of interest and benefit to the profession in the city of Reading, is expressed in the preamble to their constitution. For reasons not on record, there appears to have been no meetings from 1854 to September 12, 1859, when a move for reorganization was made and elected at the next meeting, held October 12, 1859. Again, for unrecorded reasons, a hiatus in events occurs. The last minute of this second organization bears date of January 24, 1860.

On July 30, 1867, a preliminary meeting was held, a third organization effected, a new constitution and by-laws adopted and on August 14th, the officers elected were: President, Dr. Peter F. Nagle; Vice-President, Dr. Charles Hunter; Secretary, Dr. W. Murray Weidman; Treasurer, Dr. Martin Luther; Censors, Drs. Wallace, Brooke and Beaver. From that time to the date of this writing (January, 1886), the association has had no more attacks of no quorum catalagouy.

The present members are as follows: President, Dr. Israel Cleaver; Vice-President, J. B. Sterley; Secretary, R. B. Schulze; Treasurer, S. L. Kurtz; Curator, W. Murray Weidman; Censors, Drs. Schulze, Brooke and Raudenbush, also Drs. Bachman, Dundor, J. E. Kurtz, Loose, Muhlenberg and Reeser.

At all the meetings, business usual to medical societies was transacted, and made the occasion of much pleasure and profit. But in addition there was an interest, having this association as its mainspring of action, that exposed its members many misgivings, demanded personal sacrifice and here and there provoked antagonisms, and which interest, while wrapped up in the transactions of the association, requires separate treatment for its consecutive presentation. Besides, it is the great work of the association in its past, and not likely to be overshadowed by anything it may accomplish in the future.

At the meeting of November 11, 1867, it appears there was read a communication from the Berks County Medical Society, embracing a proposition of establishing a hospital in the city of Reading. A committee, consisting of Drs. Brooke, Beaver and Luther, was appointed to consider the subject and report at next meeting. This led to the choosing of sixteen gentlemen representing the various business interests of the city, who should be asked to serve as a board of managers for the proposed hospital. These gentlemen, acting in conjunction with the Medical Association, agreed to institute a dispensary service in a small rented building, in which should also be placed a few beds for the reception of in-door patients, the medical staff to be chosen from the Reading Medical Association. The Association submitted a draft of rules and regulations for the government of the dispensary, to which the managers agreed, and which formed substantially the articles of the chart of incorporation, a prerequisite to which was also the incorporating of the Medical Association. January the 28th, 1868, was fixed as the day for opening the building for hospital and dispensary service. From this time forward the records of the Medical Association, saving what relates solely to medical topics, read like those of a board of managers of a hospital. And such they really were of necessity, because of the difficulty of regularly convening the board of managers, many of whom business withheld from due attention to this work.

Illustrative of how much this enterprise was dependent upon the Medical Association, a few facts are cited. At first the board of managers was composed entirely of gentlemen from the laity. Gradually so difficult did it become to convene a quorum of that body that in April, 1872, seven resigned and their places were supplied by seven others chosen from the association. Just previous to this time the financial distress of the hospital service was so great that the necessity for its closure became imminent. At this juncture the following resolution was unanimously adopted at the meeting of March, 1872, viz.: "That the members of this association will hold themselves individually and collectively responsible for the debts of the Reading Dispensary for three months from April 1, next."

Notwithstanding this burden, when the Sisters having charge of a charity, corner of Ninth and Walnut Streets, asked by note, May, 1872, the professional aid of the association, it was promptly tendered. In 1873 the association was approached, relative to taking charge of St. Joseph's Hospital, just organized. The answer given was substantially that, as a body, they could not formally accept such duty, but as individuals they would cheerfully serve. This answer appears to have failed reaching Rev. Father Borneman in due time, by reason of which other physicians were selected.

In 1876 the financial support from the community became so low that the hospital work was suspended and dispensary and out-door service only prosecuted.

The minutes of the association show that this step was previously determined upon in that body, as a temporary expedient, until with improved financial status, a hospital building could be erected on the grounds already secured, a purpose which was never abandoned.

Comment upon all this is unnecessary, except that its prompting lay in that spirit of all honorable physicians by which they habitually administer to the indigent sick.

Is it not safe to say that but for the Reading Medical Association, the Reading Hospital, at this writing almost completed, would have no existence? Nay, more, is it not probable that this faithfulness to a cause was provocative to the other benevolent enterprises that subsequently sprung into existence in this city?

(The history of this association was very kindly furnished by Dr. Israel C. Cleaver.)

HOMEOPATHY.

The founder of homeopathy, Samuel Hahnemann, was born April 10, 1755, at Meissen, in Cur-Saxony, one of the regions in Germany. He passed several years at the Stadtschule, and at the age of sixteen began to attend the Furstenschule of Meissen, where he remained eight years. His parents were poor, but his inherent thirst for knowledge induced his instructors to give him the advantages of an education without paying the usual tuition fees. In 1775 he entered the University of Leipsig, where he raised enough money to spend two years in study, by giving lessons as a tutor and making translations into German. He took his degree of Doctor of Medicine at Erlangen August 10, 1779. He spent ten years in the practice of his profession at different places, and in 1789 returned to Leipsig, where he soon became favorably known for his knowledge of medicine, chemistry, mineralogy and the kindred sciences, and for many important discoveries which gave him widely-spread reputation. In pursuing his investigations he became dissatisfied with the state of medical science around him. He claimed that it was imperfect, and then began to elaborate a new system of medicine which he termed homoeopathia, which is derived from the two Greek words, homoiós (similar) and pathos (feeling or suffering). He tested the use of a number of drugs, convinced himself and advanced it as a theory, that a remedy which would cure a certain disease would also produce a disorder very similar to that disease in a healthy person, and that the converse was equally true,—i.e., that a drug which produced a certain disease in a healthy body would cure it in a sick one. He tested drug after drug on his own person, carefully noting the minutest effects produced and comparing them with the symptoms of well-known diseases. He induced some of his friends to join him in these tests or provings, and, by mutually comparing notes, certain positive facts and a code were established. This was the origin of the famous axiom, similia similibus curantur. Many German physicians tested the principles of Hahnemann, and afterwards advocated them. The founder of this new system of medicine, after he had attained the age of forty-five years, lived in complete self-abnegation and endangered his own physical constitution in testing the system he was promulgating. In the mean while he wrote ten volumes of the "Materia Medica Pura," and effected some remarkable cures on persons of eminence in promulgating the theory of minimum doses. His greatest work is entitled the "Organon of Rational Medicine," which has always been, and doubtless will continue to be, a text-book of the homoeopathic profession. In 1805 he published a little work on the "Positive Effects of Medicine." In 1831 he rendered efficient service during the time the cholera raged so violently in Eastern Europe. In 1836 he left Leipzig and resided for fifteen years with the Duke at Coethen, perfecting his system by experiments and in the treatment of the sick of many families of the nobility.

During his residence at Coethen, when, in his eightieth year, he married Mademoiselle D'Hervilly Kohier, a member of one of the prominent families of France. She had been cured by him of a dangerous malady. The marriage was somewhat romantic, inasmuch as she was forty-five years his junior. Soon after this event he and his wife removed to Paris, where he spent the remainder of his years, and died July 2, 1844, at the advanced age of eighty-nine years. He was of slender form and diminutive stature. His head was large and his forehead well-proportioned. He was known by his cotemporaries as a man of fine intellect.

Early History of Homoeopathy in Berks County.—In the year 1838 homoeopathy was first made known to the people of Reading and Berks County by Dr. Adolph Lippe, who spent a year or two in practice here, being followed by Dr. Moore, who remained two years or longer and then removed to Philadelphia. Dr. John H. Behne located at Reading in 1840, and remained until his death. Dr. Caspari practiced in the city also for a few months in 1843. In 1854 Dr. George R. Starkey began practicing in Reading, and succeeded in establishing homoeopathy among the English-speaking residents of the place. He left the city in the spring of 1857, and went to Philadelphia, where he became professor of surgery in the Hahnemann Homoeopathic College of that city. He was followed in Reading by Dr. R. Sargent, who remained two years. Dr. B. R. Bratt, who was graduated from the Hahnemann College, at Philadelphia, in 1858, succeeded Dr. Sargent. He died January 31, 1872. Dr. E. H. Spooner, a graduate of Amherst College, Mass., two years a student of theology at Princeton, a soldier in the Union army from 1862 to 1865, and a graduate of the Homoeopathic College of New York, in the class of 1869, located in Reading the year of his graduation. He afterward moved to New York City. He has written several articles for the New England Medical Gazette. Dr. David L. Dreidelbiss, born in 1842, was educated at the Union Seminary, of New Berlin, Pa.; taught school for four years; studied medicine with Dr. G. A. Detweiler and attended lectures in Philadelphia and was graduated in 1865. He practiced in Reading until his death in 1872. Dr. S. L. Dreidelbiss, a younger brother, and a graduate of the Hahnemann Medical College of Philadelphia, class of 1871, took the practice of his brother.

Dr. John H. Helfrich, son of Rev. John Helfrich, who was one of the pioneers of homoeopathy in this county, practiced for a number of years in Kutztown and then removed the organization of this society

L. J. Knerr, W. A. Haman, D. C. Kline, J. S. Rittenhouse, R. F. Krebs and R. A. Shollenberger have been admitted to membership. The society holds its meetings monthly at the office of Dr. J. S. Rittenhouse, for the purpose of discussing topics pertaining to the profession and for general business. During the year 1886 Dr. Pachali was president and Dr. Jennings secretary.

BIOGRAPHIES OF HOMEOPATHISTS.

ADOLPH LIPPE, one of the most celebrated homeopathists in this country, and who introduced the system in Berks County, was born in Germany May 11, 1812, and is the oldest son of the late Count Ludwig and Countess Augusta zur Lippe. He was graduated from one of the higher institutions of Berlin; emigrated to the United States in 1839, and received the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1841 from the Homoeopathic Medical Academy at Allentown. He began the practice of medicine in Reading, where he remained two years and then moved to Carlisle, Pa., where he won distinction as a practitioner, by means of which he was induced to locate in Philadelphia, and there gained great popularity. He filled the chair of Materia Medica in the Homoeopathic College of Pennsylvania from 1863 to 1868, and during that time translated valuable German, Italian and French homoeopathic essays and treatises that are now standard in English. He adopted homoeopathy after a careful examination into its merits, believing it to be progressive, and, having devoted the best years of his life to its practice, he defended that school of medicine in its infancy, and nursed it through a crescent youth. He seems to have had the rare pleasure of witnessing the realization of his best hopes in observing his system of practice have a popularity, to which his own labors have contributed a full share. He is a resident of Philadelphia.

JOHN HENRY BEHNE was born in Nordhausen, Prussia, in the year 1800, attended different universities of Germany, and was graduated in medicine at Wurtzberg, Bavaria. He came to America in 1840, and located in Reading the same year as an allopathic physician. Soon after arriving here he formed an intimate acquaintance with Dr. Lippe, then residing in this city, who persuaded him to study and practice homœopathy. Dr. Behne was a gentleman of literary culture, of fine personal appearance, easy and graceful in his manners, and possessed many personal traits which soon won him numerous friends. He was beloved by the Germans. He enjoyed a large and lucrative practice, and was the family physician of many of the wealthiest families of Reading. Many patients came to him from different parts of the State for medical treatment. He was, for many years, an active member and secretary of Germania Lodge, No. 53, I. O. O. F.

Dr. Behne was twice married. His first wife, whom he married in Europe, died in Reading soon after he located in the city. They had one child, Gustavus, an artist of fine ability, who is now in Munich, Germany. Many of his paintings adorn the homes of citizens of Reading.

Several years after the death of his first wife, Dr. Behne married Miss Zabel, of New York. After spending many years of usefulness in Reading, attending to the wants of the sick and taking an active interest in the prosperity of the city, he died August 1, 1876.

Few Germans who came to America were as deeply interested in the prosperity of their adopted country as Dr. Behne. Many people of Reading now living have a very tender recollection of his many virtues.

GEORGE R. STARKEY, one of the early homœo-pathists of Reading, was born in Vassalboro', Maine, June 23, 1823, and spent the early years of his life on a farm. When he reached the age of fourteen a benevolent Quakeress interested herself in his behalf and had him admitted into the Friends' Boarding-School at Providence, Rhode Island. He there obtained a preparatory education and afterward engaged in teaching. He was graduated from Waterville College, Maine, in 1848, and from the Homœopathic Medical College at Philadelphia in 1855. Immediately after his graduation in medicine he came to Reading, where he remained two years, having at the time of his removal to Philadelphia, in 1857, a large number of prominent families on his visiting list. In June, 1860, Dr. Starkey was elected to the chair of anatomy in the Homœopathic Medical College, and the year following was called to the chair of surgery in the same institution. This position he filled four years. In 1869 he retired from the medical institution and became deeply interested in the compound oxygen gas treatment, as a specialty for the cure of chronic disease, and thereafter relinquished his general practice, meeting with success in administering this new agent. He is now in Philadelphia.

JOHN HELFRICH was a clergyman and also one of the first homœopathic physicians of Lehigh County. Late in life he was graduated from the Homœopathic Academy at Allentown, which was founded in 1835 and had a brief existence. For a number of years he practiced medicine at Kutztown. His son, J. Henry Helfrich, a graduate of the Pennsylvania Medical College in the class of 1846, practiced in Lehigh County until 1866, when he also moved to Kutztown, where he practiced homœopathy for eleven years, and returned then to Allentown. Rev. John Helfrich, in 1849, published a work in German on homœopathic veterinary practice. It was the first book of its kind published in America.

SAMUEL R. RITTENHOUSE was born near Trappe, Montgomery County, Pa., January 16, 1832. His parents were Jacob D. and Mary Reiner Rittenhouse, who resided on a farm in the above county. The father died of apoplexy April 17, 1843, in his sixty-first year. His paternal ancestors emigrated from Holland in 1690 and established at Germantown, Pa., the first paper-mill in America. Dr. Rittenhouse, after the completion of his preparatory education, entered the University of Pennsylvania, where he was graduated in 1858. He at once began practice as an allopathic physician near Trappe, Pa., and in the autumn of the same year returned to Philadelphia, where he attended another course of lectures at the University of Pennsylvania and enjoyed the advantages of the clinics at the Pennsylvania Hospital. In 1854 he entered into partnership with Dr. Lesher Trexler, at Longswamp, Berks County, with whom he shared a large and remunerative practice. During the year 1855 he was witness to such marvelous results from the treatment under the homoeopathic system in several cases of disease, that, despite his prejudice against it, he was induced to give it a patient and careful investigation. After thoughtfully reading the "Organon" and studying the Homoeopathic Materia Medica, he tested the medicines used in the practice of homoeopathy and became thoroughly satisfied with the truth of the foundation principle of Hahnemann—similia similibus curantur. He has since that time devoted himself with zeal to the new system. In 1857 he removed to Millerstown, Lehigh County, Pa., where for twelve years he was engaged in an extensive practice. During his residence there he was married to Miss Anna Maria Shaffer, daughter of John and Hannah Shaffer, of Macungie, Lehigh County, Pa. Their children are Jacob S., Annie S. and Hannah S. Jacob S. Rittenhouse began the study of medicine with his father, entered the Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia, in the fall of 1882, was graduated in the spring of 1885, and then associated with his father in practice. Owing to ill health caused by overwork in attending to a large practice Dr. Rittenhouse left Millerstown for Reading October, 1868, where he has since resided. He was a member of the Homoeopathic Society of Berks and Schuylkill Counties during its existence, is a member of the Homoeopathic Society of Pennsylvania, the Hahnemann Medical Society of Reading and the Reading Society of Natural Sciences. He has been a contributor to various medical journals. During the late war he was an enthusiastic advocate of the cause of the Union and contributed numerous articles to the local papers designed to inspire patriotism among the people. In the year 1863 he was the Republican candidate of his district in Lehigh County for the Legislature. Since the close of the war he has given no attention to politics but has devoted his entire time to the duties of his profession. In 1873 he was appointed examining surgeon for the U. B. Mutual Aid Society of Pennsylvania.

Rudolph F. Krebs was born May 28, 1832, at Glatz, in the province of Silesia, Prussia. He attended the government schools, then entered the gymnasium and continued in the University of Breslau. He was graduated in medicine from the University of Prague, Austria, in 1855. Soon thereafter he came to America and located at Boston, Mass., and practiced medicine in that city one and a half years. The climate there did not agree with him; he concluded to go South. Stopping, on his way southward, at Reading, he was induced by Drs. Behne and Starkey, then here, to remain in this county; whereupon, he located at Hamburg, in 1857, and established himself in a practice, which he continued there until 1884, when he removed to the city of Reading.

Dr. Krebs is a man of fine scholastic and professional attainments. He has practiced homoeopathy in Berks County longer than any other physician now living in this county.

Benjamin R. Bratt was born in 1836, of English ancestry, at Boonetown, N. J. His preparatory education was obtained in the public schools; he completed the literary course at Allegheny College, Meadville, Pa., and was graduated in 1855. He then entered the office of an homoeopathic physician in the city of Pittsburgh, and, in 1858, received the degree of Doctor of Medicine at the Hahnemann Medical College, of Philadelphia, after attending two full courses of lectures.

The same year of his graduation he located in Reading, where he soon met with success, and assiduously and conscientiously attended to a large practice. He was a physician of acknowledged skill and ability, of superior intelligence, generous impulses, magnetic presence and great tenderness of heart. A dangerous malady caused his premature death before he had arrived at middle age, on January 30, 1872. A widow and one child survived him. Mrs. Bratt was afterward married to M. Henry Connard, Jr., of the firm of Douglass & Connard, proprietors of the Reading Brass Works.

William F. Marks is of German parentage. His father, Elias Marks, lived at West Leesport, Berks County, where he was employed by the Schuylkill Canal Company, and, subsequently, entered the army, served during the first year of the Civil War and died of a disease contracted while in the service at the Memphis hospital in Memphis, Tenn. His wife, Catharine Fink, was among the victims of a freshet in the Schuylkill River in 1850. Mr. and Mrs. Marks had six children. Caroline, Nellie and Jonathan met the fate of their mother in 1850. The survivors are Kate, (married John Bossler), Sarah (married to Mr. Speicker), and Dr. William F. Marks, who was born April 6, 1846, at Leesport. Having been deprived of a mother’s watchful and tender care at the age of four years, he was adopted by Jacob Rieser, a farmer, who resided near Leesport, and whose affectionate interest greatly supplied the loss he had sustained. Here he remained until eighteen years of age, meanwhile attending the district school when not required to assist in the labor of the farm. He later became a pupil of the Freeland Seminary, at Collegeville, Pa., and for the three succeeding years engaged in teaching, which was varied by work upon the farm in summer. He also attended the Normal School at Kutztown. He began the study of medicine in the office of Dr. A. J. Dundore, of West Leesport. After attending the first course of lectures at the Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia, he entered the office of Professor Koch of that city, meanwhile giving his services to the dispensary and attending a special course at the Philadelphia School of Practical Obstetrics and Diseases of Women. He was graduated on the 3d of March, 1869, from the Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia. The same year he began the practice of his profession at Leesport, and, in January, 1871, desiring a larger field of labor, removed to Reading, where he has since resided. With a view to greater proficiency in his practice, he, in 1879, took a special course on diseases of women under Professor Ludlam at the Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago. He has made diseases of women a specialty, his extensive training having fitted him for this branch of medical treatment. Dr. Marks is a member of the Hahnemann Medical Society, of Reading, and a member of the city Board of Health. In politics he is a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Reformed Church. He was married to Rebecca S., daughter of Henry Althouse, on March 11, 1869. She died November 10, 1879, leaving one child, Minnie. His second marriage was with Clara R., daughter of Solomon Regan, of Reading. They have one child, Edith C.

LEWIS A. SCHOLLENBERGER was born in Hamburg, Berks County, October 11, 1843; was educated in the public schools of Hamburg and at the Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster County. He studied medicine under the instruction of Dr. R. F. Krebs, and attended the Hahnemann Medical College in Philadelphia, from which institution he was graduated. He practiced for several years in Hamburg, and in 1871 removed to Reading.

THEODORE PACHALI was born April 10, 1846, in Lissa, Province of Posen, Prussia; was educated in schools of his native town; graduated in medicine from the University of Kiel in Prussia in 1865. After graduation he was assigned to the Prussian North German navy for three years, and to the North German steamship Lloyd Line for one year; came to Reading in 1869 and has since practiced medicine in the city. Dr. Pachali is president of the Homeopathic Medical Society of Reading.

JOSEPH G. GROSSCUP was born in Lehigh County, Pa.; acquired his education in the Wyoming Seminary at Kingston and Muhlenberg College at Allentown, Penna.; studied medicine with Dr. F. J. Slough of Fogelsville, and was graduated M. D. from the Hahnemann Medical College at Philadelphia in 1873; practiced for three years at Slatonning, Penna., came to Reading in 1876; started the Homeopathic Pharmacy at 712 Penn street, also practiced his profession until 1883, when he spent two years at the New York Post Graduate Medical School, returning to Reading in 1884.

FRANCIS RITTER SCHMUCKER was born in Reading, March 24, 1838; received a preparatory training in the public schools of his native city, entered Yale College in 1856, was graduated from that institution in the class of 1861 and at once began to read law in the office of Charles Davis, Esq., and was admitted to practice in the fall of 1862. He next served as captain of Company A, one hundred and twenty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, a nine months regiment, and took part in the battles of Antietam and Chancellorsville. At the expiration of his term of service he entered the army a second time as Adjutant of the forty-second Regiment of Pennsylvania Militia. Returning he was married August 31, 1865, to Miss Emma C. Young of Allentown, Pa., and entered upon the practice of law. He was appointed Notary in 1867. After practicing law seven years, he took up the study of medicine, and was graduated from the Homeopathic Medical College of New York in the spring of 1873. Shortly afterward, he removed to Pittsburg, but returned to Reading November, 1874, where he has since been engaged in the practice of medicine.

ELHANAN ZOOK SCHMUCKER is descended on the paternal side from Swiss ancestors; his maternal ancestry was Prussian. His grandfather, Peter Schmucker, resided in Cumru township, Berks County, where he was the owner of an extensive tract of land, and devoted his life to the occupation of a farmer. He married Fannie Zook and had two sons, Jacob and Isaac. Jacob Schmucker was born April 2, 1810, in Cumru township, where his early life was spent. He was married to Mary Ann, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Ritter, and had children,—Joseph R., Elizabeth R., Francis R., Mary Ann, Peter R., Elhanan Z., Emma, Ellen (Mrs. George Bellemere) and Clara. Mr. Schmucker after his marriage removed to Oley township, and was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1845, when he came to Reading and engaged in the business of hotel-keeping until 1861, when he established a real estate agency and continued thus actively engaged until his death, November 1, 1874. His son, the subject of this biographical sketch, was born December 17, 1846, in Oley township, and removed, when two years of age, with his parents to Reading. After receiving an elementary training in the public schools he entered the mercantile business, and was thus engaged for four years in Reading and Philadelphia. He then entered the office of Dr. B. R. Bratt, of Reading, as a student of medicine, and was graduated from the Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1860. He was the following summer associated with his preceptor, Dr. Bratt, in the practice of his profession. During the winter of 1871 he attended lectures at the New York Homoeopathic Medical College, from which he received his diploma the same year. During this time he was resident physician of the college Dispensary and of the Five Points Hospital, and one of the staff of physicians in the New York Homoeopathic Dispensary. In 1871, on returning to Reading, he entered into practice with his preceptor, Dr. Bratt, and continued this relation until the death of the latter. In 1879 Dr. Schmucker made a tour through Europe, spending much time in the hospitals of Dublin, London, Paris and Edinburgh. He is a member of the Hahnemann Homoeopathic Medical Society of Reading, and of the American Institute of Homoeopathy. He has an extended practice, is skillful in diagnosis, and has been especially successful in the treatment of critical cases. He is a member of Trinity Lutheran Church of Reading. He was married, April 20, 1881, to Rebecca, daughter of Dr. H. H. Muhlenberg, for many years cashier of the Farmers' National Bank of Reading. Their children are Heister Muhlenberg (deceased) and Katherine Muhlenberg.

Samuel L. Dreibelbis was born March 25, 1848, in Berks County; attended Lebanon Valley College, at Annville, Lebanon County, also the Union Seminary, at New Berlin, Pa.; read medicine in 1868 and in 1869 with his brother, Dr. D. L. Dreibelbis, in Reading, and was graduated from the Hahnemann Medical College at Philadelphia in 1871; returned to Reading the same year and entered upon the duties of his profession in the city.

Isaac C. Detweiler was born in Max- tawny township January 1, 1830; was engaged in the practice of dentistry for eight years; became a student of medicine, and was graduated from the Pennsylvania Homeopathic Medical College in 1861; practiced two years at Kutztown, and in 1863 came to Reading.

Aaron C. Detweiler, brother of Drs. Isaac C. and Washington C. Detweiler, was born in Rockland township April 7, 1847; was educated in the public schools, Fairview Seminary and Kutztown State Normal School; graduated in medicine from the Jefferson Medical College; began practicing in co-partnership with his brother, Isaac C., at Reading. In 1872, Isaac C. retired, and he continued the practice, meeting with great success. On July 6, 1883, he and his brother, Washington, met an untimely death by drowning in the Schuykill River. They practiced the Homeo- pathic system of medicine.

Washington C. Detweiler was born in Rockland township, Berks County, November 22, 1844; studied medicine in the office of his brother, Dr. Aaron C. Detweiler; was graduated M.D. from Jefferson Medical College, at Philadelphia; began practicing in Reading, where he met with success, until his untimely death by drowning July 6, 1883.

Thomas C. Strasser was born at Kutztown December 24, 1845; attended public schools of his native town, Fairview Seminary, Keystone State Normal School and Allentown Seminary; was graduated M.D. from the University of Pennsylvania in 1867; began practicing medicine at Pleasant Corner, Lehigh County; moved to Macungie in 1868; was attending physician to the Lehigh County Hospital from 1871 to 1878; removed to Reading in 1885 and formed a co-partnership with Dr. Isaac C. Detweiler in the practice of homeopathy.

Chester B. Jennings was born March, 1856, in Reading; attended the public schools, and completed the course of the Reading High School in 1875; studied medicine with Dr. W. F. Marks, of Reading, for two years, and was graduated from the Hahnemann Medical College, at Philadelphia, in 1881; he is secretary of the Homoeopathic Medical Society of Reading, and has practiced in his native town since graduation.

David C. Kline was born September 22, 1856, in Northumberland County, Pa.; was graduated from the Bloomsburg State Normal School, and Dickinson Seminary at Williamsport, Pa.; studied medicine with Dr. F. B. Richtstine; graduated from the Hahnemann Medical College in 1883; commenced to practice at Columbia, Lancaster County; removed to Reading in 1883, where he has since practiced his profession.

L. J. Knerr was born January 4, 1858, in Lehigh County; educated in the public schools, the Keystone State Normal and the Muhlenberg College, at Allentown; read medicine with Dr. Constantine Herring, of Philadelphia, and was graduated in medicine from the Hahnemann Medical College of Philadelphia in 1880; removed to Reading in 1883; bought the Homoeopathic Pharmacy at 712 Penn Street, from Dr. Joseph G. Grosscup.

William A. Haman was born October 16, 1861, at Pottsville, Pa.; came to Reading in 1869; was educated in the public schools; studied medicine with Dr. W. C. Detweiler, of Reading; graduated from the Hahnemann Medical College of Philadelphia in 1883; has since been engaged in the practice of his profession at Reading.

John Ege was born in Dettingen, Kingdom of Wurtemberg, February 18, 1854; studied in the schools of his native country; came to America in 1881; attended the Hahnemann College of Medicine, Philadelphia, and was graduated therefrom with the class of 1883.

Levi R. Lentz is of German parentage. His father, Stephen Lentz, was born in 1799, in North Whitehall, Lehigh County, from whence he removed, during the latter portion of his life, to Allentown. After following successfully, for many years, his business of builder and contractor, he died, in 1867, in his sixty-eighth year. Mr. Lentz married Catherine Ringer, of North Whitehall township, and had children,—Josiah (married to Amanda Scherrer), Hettie (married to Tilghman Freyman), Sally Ann (married to Samuel Brown), Stephen (married to Ella Hartman), David, a clergyman (married to Eliza Swope), Caroline (married to Paul Ehret), Lewis H. (married to Susan Handwerk) and Levi R. The last-named and subject of this biography was born in North Whitehall on December 23, 1836. He obtained such educational training as was afforded in the country school, which was supplemented by a course of study at Allentown and private instruction under Rev. E. J. Fogles in the higher branches. On being thrown, at the age of seventeen, upon his own resources, he, a year later, apprenticed himself to learn the trade of carriage-building. In 1857 he established a carriage-factory in the village of Foglesville, Pa., and, in consequence of his careful habits and patient industry, soon succeeded in building up a profitable business. Being studiously inclined, all his leisure moments were spent in the perusal of useful books. His thirst for all useful knowledge led to his reading several medical works obtained from the library of his friend, Dr. Helfrich, which resulted in the development of a fondness for the study of medicine and his final determination to adopt it as his profession. Accordingly, in 1862, he entered as a student the office of Dr. John H. Helfrich. During the winter of 1862-63 he attended lectures at the New York Medical College and the next season at the Homeopathic Medical College in the same city. He enjoyed superior advantages while in attendance at the De Witt Dispensary, the Bellevue Hospital and the Blackwell’s Island Hospital. In the winter of 1864 and 1865, however, he was graduated from the Homeopathic Medical College of Philadelphia, and at once began practice at Fleetwood. Being the first homeopathic physician to locate in that village, he had strong prejudices to overcome, but strict and careful attention to business, the exercise of an excellent judgment and a thorough knowledge of the specific action of the homeopathic remedies, have enabled him to obtain a profitable and constantly increasing practice.

Dr. Lentz, during its existence, was a member of the Berks and Schuylkill County Homeopathic Society, is a member of the Alumni Association of the Hahnemann Medical College of Philadelphia, was for ten years president of the school board of the borough of Fleetwood and is an active member of the Masonic fraternity, in which he has taken high rank, being connected with Huguenot Lodge, No. 331, with De Molay Commandery, No. 9, of Reading and with Reading Chapter, No. 152.

In 1869 he married Miss Sarah, daughter of Hon. Daniel Koch, of Fleetwood. They have one son,—O. G. C. Lentz, born August 26, 1872, now pursuing his studies at the Moravian School at Nazareth, Pa.

Robert Walter, Wernersville; grad. from Hygee Therapeutic Col., N. J.; began prac. April, 1873.

DENTISTRY.

Dentistry as a profession is of recent origin. Its history dates back to half a century ago. Prior to that time the study and the care of teeth were limited to members of the medical profession and to the barber. There are many persons still living who remember when the scalpel and the forceps were as necessary instruments of the barber-shop as the shears and the razor. The first dental college in the world was established in Baltimore in 1830, since which date the principles of dentistry have been systematized into a science and practiced as an art. Within the ranks of this profession now are many representative men of education and culture. The early practice advocated the use of smooth-pointed instruments and non cohesive gold in filling teeth, whereas serrated instruments and cohesive gold are now largely used. Artificial teeth, carved out of ivory, involving great expense and labor, were made in America as early as 1780. Formerly the plates were made of gold and silver, in which the artificial teeth were set, necessarily making them heavy and costly. Plates are now made artistically by skilled dentists, not only of gold and silver, but of platinum, rubber and celluloid. Rubber plates were not introduced until about 1854, and celluloid still more recently. The preservation of teeth by the filling of them is a leading part now of the work of the skilled dentist of to-day. This profession is well represented in the city of Reading and the county of Berks by men who are enterprising and progressive and who have all modern instruments and necessary appliances for artistic workmanship.

E. SLEGEL, dentist, is the grandson of Henry Slegel, who resided in Fleetwood, where his grandfather settled after emigrating to America from Germany. He married and became the father of the following-named children: Samuel, Madalina, Daniel, Sally, Jacob, John, Bevey, Kate, Abraham and Solomon. Of this number, John was born in Fleetwood in 1802. His trade was that of a tailor, although much of his life was devoted to farming, his later years having been spent in Reading. He married Esther, daughter of Solomon Ely, of Maxatawny, whose children are Joel E.; Lucetta, married to James Dobson; Eli, Mary, married to Jacob Rehrer; and Sarah, married to J. Greiff. Eli Slegel was born November 23, 1836, in Fleetwood, and spent his boyhood on his father's farm. He availed himself of such educational advantages as the public schools afforded, but afterwards improved himself by judicious reading and habits of study. At the age of eighteen he removed to Coatesville, Chester County, and began the study of dental surgery with Dr. William Thompson. His course was completed under Dr. Lukens, of Philadelphia, after which he pursued his profession for one year in that city, and in 1857 came to Reading, where he has since resided. Here he started in practice with his brother, Joel E. Slegel, and soon controlled a large and lucrative business. He has added very considerably to the improvements in dentistry, noticeably by the invention of a porcelain and gold backing for ground for roots, which has made his name familiar to the profession. He has written upon the subject for the leading dental journals, and was invited by the New Jersey Dental Association to perform a clinic before that body, elucidating his invention. Various other bodies have also extended invitations to address them on this and other subjects pertaining to the science of dental surgery. Dr. Slegel avails himself of the most enlightened thought in connection with his profession as presented in the leading periodicals, and is ever ready to encourage and test the latest improvements in the science. He is a member of the Lebanon Valley Dental Society, of which he was both treasurer and president, and also a member of the Pennsylvania State Dental Society. The doctor was married, November 18, 1862, to Clara H., daughter of Samuel Hechler, of Reading. Their children are

Samuel E., John E. and Nellie Mabel, of whom Samuel E., the only survivor, is associated with his father in the profession. Dr. Slegel is a member of Chandler Lodge, No. 227, of Free and Accepted Masons; of Excelsior Chapter, No. 7; of Grey Council; and of Reading Commandery, No. 42. He is also a member of Continental Lodge of Independent Order of Odd-Fellows. His religious associations are with the Evangelical Church, of which he is a member.

CHAPTER XXII.
CENSUS OF BERKS COUNTY.

Early Population of State—Rate of Increase of Population—Census Table of County, 1790 to 1880—Census of Villages, 1880—Table of Houses, Farms, etc., in County, 1850—Taxables and Voters of County, 1876 and 1885—Property and Money Assessed, 1885.

No regular enumeration of the inhabitants of Pennsylvania was made previous to 1790. The first provision for enumeration was made by the Constitution of the United States, adopted September 17, 1787. Therein provision was made for the apportionment of representatives from the several States to Congress, and of direct taxes; and to effect a just apportionment, "the actual enumeration" was required to be made "within three years after the first meeting of Congress, and within every subsequent term of ten years, in such manner as they shall by law direct."
The population was theretofore simply estimated. The number of inhabitants of Pennsylvania was estimated as follows:

For the year 1791.......................... 20,000
  " 1749 (including Delaware)...250,000
  " 1775 ...............................341,000

The following table shows the taxable inhabitants of eight counties in the State for a time twenty and thirty years before the first census was taken:

Total of State...........................31,667 39,756 62,205

The first census of Pennsylvania was taken on September 7, 1791. And within every ten years thereafter the census was regularly taken to the present time. The result of each enumeration is set forth in the following “census” table for the districts and counties named. The returns of the first enumeration were so made that the number of inhabitants for the districts in Berks County was not ascertainable. Hence no figures are presented in the table.

The figures for 1800, and every decade thereafter, were taken from the census reports of the United States, published by order of Congress.

The blank spaces opposite certain districts in the table indicate non-existence of those districts at the time of enumeration.

Large decrease of population in certain districts for the next succeeding census is observable. This indicates reduction of the districts by the erection of others. For instance, Alsace in 1850 had a population of twenty-six hundred and ninety-seven; but in 1860 it had only twelve hundred and ninety-nine. The township of Muhlenberg was cut off in 1850 and erected into a separate district. Also Windsor in 1870 had twelve hundred and eleven, but in 1880 only eight hundred and thirty. The township was reduced in area by the extension of the limits of the borough of Hamburg. This extension was made in 1871.

The following statement is presented in order to show when the districts with the blank spaces were erected, and from which districts they were taken:

Bernville¹ taken from Penn in 1851.
Birdsboro² taken from Union and Robeson in 1872.
Boyertown taken from Colebrookdale in 1866.

³ Kutztown not enumerated till 1840.
The population of the county is given in the table at thirty-two thousand four hundred and seven. The number of inhabitants in that part which lay south of the mountain was twenty-eight thousand one hundred and sixty-nine.

And in 1810 the county included seven townships north of the mountains, whose enumeration was as follows:

Brunswick..........................1770
Mahantango, Lower............... 637
Mahantango, Upper............... 489
Manheim..........................1854
Norwegian......................... 415
Pinegrove..........................1290
Schuylkill.......................... 358

The population of the county for 1810 is given at forty-three thousand one hundred and forty-six. The number in that part of the county south of the mountain was thirty-six thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight. The townships named were cut to Schuylkill County in its erection in 1811.

The increase in Berks County for seventy years was two hundred and twenty-four per cent.; that of the eleven counties, three hundred and eighty-three per cent.; and that of the State, four hundred and twenty-eight per cent. This is wonderful! But what is more wonderful still, is the fact that in these seventy years the proportion of the eleven counties to the State in 1810, compared with the proportion in 1880, decreased only four per cent! And this, too, notwithstanding the great extension of railways to the north and west, and the development of the State and people through trade, manufactures, agriculture and education. In other words, in 1810 these counties had forty-four per cent. of the whole population, and in 1880 forty per cent.; and yet only one-tenth of the area in territory! And in respect to trade, manufactures, agriculture and wealth, these forty-six hundred square miles would exhibit a similar proportion if the tables were published herewith.

But Reading had the surprising increase of eleven hundred and fifty per cent. in seventy years, or about two generations, from 1810 to 1880. The figures in the table are very interesting. In this period the increase at no time in any decade fell below twenty-five per cent. After 1830 a marked increase is perceptible. This arose principally from the introduction of the railway, and manufactories of iron goods, after 1836. From 1840 to 1850 the increase was eighty-seven per cent.; and for twenty years following it kept near fifty per cent.

In Berks County, in the decade before 1860, the increase was twenty-two per cent.; but in the decade after, only thirteen per cent. The effects of the Civil War, 1861–65, are apparent.

Note: The first publication of a complete census of Berks County by districts from 1800 to 1880, according to the enumerations of the United States government, was made in Montgomery's Political Hand-Book of Berks County. The figures for the decades 1800, 1810, 1820 and 1830 were specially furnished by the Superintendent of the Census, at Washington, for this Hand-Book. The figures for the subsequent decades were taken from the published reports.

1 U. S. Census Report, 1860. The author of this history endeavored to arrange a similar table for the year 1880, but the Census Department at Washington, D. C., could not supply the figures. In 1880 there were in the county 6847 farms and 1044 manufacturing establishments.

CHAPTER XXIII.

READING.

PART I.—TOWN FROM 1748 TO 1783.

Selection of Town-Site.—William Penn owned the territory upon which Reading is situated by right of grant from King Charles II.; and he also purchased the interest of the Indians therein. He died in 1717, possessed of

it. By his last will he devised it to his children. In the general desire to dispose of the lands to settlers, the commissioners of the Penns, upon application to them, sold the land which lay to the east of the Schuylkill, at the "Ford," where the great highway from Tulpehocken to Philadelphia crossed the river. The patentee was Thomas Lawrence. He first obtained a patent for three hundred acres in 1733; and afterward, in 1739, another patent for one hundred and thirty-seven and one-half acres which adjoined the first tract on the east. A month before the first tract to Lawrence was surveyed, a large tract for eleven hundred and fifty acres, which extended thence northwardly along the river, had been set apart and surveyed for Richard Hockley, for the use of the Penns.

Some years after these grants had been made, it would seem that the Penns conceived the idea of laying out a town at this point. Doubtless the efforts of the settlers to obtain a county stimulated them in this behalf. Finding that the land had been sold, they endeavored to repurchase it. In this, however, they were not immediately successful. Lawrence declined to sell. Their agent at Philadelphia, William Parsons, was directed to investigate the matter. On September 28, 1743, he addressed a letter to them in reference to the proposed "Town of Reading." In this letter he stated that it was not to their interest to lay out the town on the land of Mr. Lawrence, because a hollow—which lay between his land and Hockley's—rendered the locality inconvenient for that purpose. He regarded Hockley's land as better adapted for a town, though its distance from the ford at Lawrence's land was an objection, and he therefore recommended it to their interest for town purposes.

1. Richard Hockley, tract for 1150 acres; surveyed February 19, 1733.
2. Thomas Lawrence, tract for 300 acres; surveyed March 19, 1733; patent October 27, 1733.
3. Thomas Lawrence, tract for 137½ acres; surveyed April 22, 1738; patent February 16, 1739.
4. Samuel Finney, tract for 150 acres; surveyed February 19, 1733.

Some time afterward the Hockley land was laid out into town-lots by Nicholas Scull. The exact date is not known. Thomas Penn was present. William Parsons addressed a letter to Penn on the 24th of November, 1748, in which, in connection with the recommendation of certain alterations from the town-plan of Lancaster for the town-lots of Reading, he said,—

"The situation of that part of the town to the South of the Great Hollow 2 is very elegant, upon rising ground, which descends very easily towards South and West, and is included chiefly within Mr. Scull's survey, made when you were on the spot."

The survey was accordingly made before the date of this letter. But water for convenient household use was found to be scarce and to lay deep on the Hockley land. It was abundant on the Lawrence land, where it was near the surface, and at many places bubbled up in strong springs. The Penns therefore endeavored to obtain the latter, for the purpose of removing the town thither. Though their efforts at first proved unsuccessful, their action in laying out lots for a proposed town on the Hockley land induced Lawrence to part with his property. He conveyed his two tracts to Thomas Jenkins on the 30th of December, 1745, and four days afterward Jenkins conveyed the same to Richard Peters and Richard Hockley—parties interested in the reconveyance to the proprietaries. On the 6th of March, 1748, they executed the

cality was fixed at a point 40° 19' 26" north latitude, and 1° 5' east longitude, with an elevation above the sea of about two hundred and fifty feet. At that time there was not a town, not even a village, in all the territory now included in the county, though the population was about ten thousand. The nearest town was Lebanon, twenty-eight miles to the west, which was laid out in 1740, and the next was Lancaster, thirty miles to the southwest, which was laid out in 1730. The latter place was the county-seat for the inhabitants of the county to the west of the Schuylkill for nearly twenty years. The inhabitants of the county to the east of the Schuylkill had Philadelphia as their county-seat. The people in this vicinity were still separated as a political body. A county had not yet been erected for them, and then there was only one house in this immediate locality. A church (Lutheran and Calvinist) was distant about two miles to the north, in Alsace township, and another (Baptist) in Cumru township, about the same distance off. The plan comprised five hundred and twenty town-lots and two hundred and four out-lots, numbered consecutively.

Lots Sold at Public Sale.—The Penns appointed three prominent representative men of the surrounding settlements as commissioners for the purpose of making a prompt sale of these lots. The commissioners were Conrad Weiser, Francis Parvin and William Hartley. Publication of the proposed sale was made, and on the 15th of June, 1749 (doubtless in Penn Square), the conditions of the sale were read to a great number of people. These conditions published the appointment of Weiser, Parvin and Hartley as commissioners for the purpose of treating with persons who should apply for lots in the town, and were signed by William Parsons. They were briefly as follows:

1. Every whole lot of sixty feet was to be subject to a ground-rent of seven shillings, payable to the proprietaries; to begin on March 1, 1750.
2. Lots on the great square were to be built upon with brick or stone in one year from March 1, 1750.

3. Lots on Main Street, not on the square, were to be built upon in two years.

4. Other lots within blocks adjoining Main (Penn) Street were to be built upon in three years.

5. Lots in blocks remote from Main Street were to be built upon in five years.

6. A sixty-foot lot, if too large, should be divided and ground-rent apportioned.

7. All who should take lots before March 1, 1750, were licensed to take stones for building purposes from any land of the proprietaries, assigned by Hartley.

8. Title would be made upon erection of building; and no assignment could be made before erection of building.

9. Privilege of ground-rent at seven shillings to continue only to March 1, 1750.

10. Houses should be built according to the regulation of the streets.

11. Persons might thereafter apply to the three commissioners named in reference to lots.

12. Two whole lots would be allotted in some convenient place for building houses of religious worship.

13. Persons who should intend to take lots were to send in their names and the time in which they could build, but they were not to undertake to build sooner than they really could, otherwise they might obstruct the progress and success of the town.

First PATENTEES.—In pursuance of the conditions named, town lots were sold, and patents were issued to purchasers. The following statement shows the years in which the buildings were probably erected, and to whom, and for which lots patents were issued. It is possible that buildings were erected in, and even before, 1751 and the patents taken up afterward.

In December, 1767, twenty-four water lots were laid out by John Lukens, surveyor-general, fronting on both sides of the Schuylkill River, at and near the “Ford,—eighteen on the eastern side and six on the western. These were laid out to accommodate warehouses and encourage transportation by water. From the “Ford,” westwardly, the Tulpehocken road was indicated, called “road to Sinking Spring.”

In June, 1776, four additional squares or blocks were laid out, between King (Third) Street and the river (Front Street), two on each side of Penn, and “divided into lots of the same dimensions as the other lots in the Town, and numbered on from the last number in the present plan,” being from No. 521 to No. 584. The two streets crossing Penn were called Treat (Second) and Bridge (Front).

Ground-Rent. —When the lots were laid out in the town-plan of Reading, each lot was made subject to a ground-rent of seven shillings, payable annually on the 1st day of March. Notwithstanding this condition, numerous lots were sold without the charge of 1 By act of 27th of November, 1779, the estates of the proprietaries of Pennsylvania were vested in the State and placed at the disposal of the Legislature; quit-rents were abolished, etc., and a donation made to the devises and legates of proprietaries of one hundred and thirty thousand pounds sterling.

ground-rent. Over sixty years after the town had been laid out, this charge, having become generally overlooked, was a great subject which agitated the citizens to a considerable degree and for a considerable time. In 1815, and again in 1818, a public notice was given to all delinquent that the ground-rents due should be paid; otherwise the lots remaining charged with them would be sold. The attorney for the Penns was apparently very lenient in his demands. He endeavored to satisfy the public that the ground-rents due could be legally collected. This professional service must have been found very objectionable, for in 1822 he notified the public that he would not settle any further ground-rents after October 15th, and that he would discontinue his agency for the Penns after that time. Nothing was subsequently done in this demand. In 1820 numerous releases of ground-rents were issued and recorded in the recorder's office at Reading. Many of the early patents are also recorded at Reading.

List of Taxables, 1759.—The following list of persons comprises the assessment of the town for the year 1759. It is the earliest that could be found among the county records in the courthouse. It includes two hundred and sixty-nine taxables. The total assessed value of taxable property amounted to nine hundred and ninety-four pounds; and the tax levied, ninety pounds and three shillings. Single men were each assessed at twenty shillings. Henry Hahn was the collector.

In 1780 the town had four hundred and seventeen resident taxables, or fully two thousand inhabitants.

District of Reading Erected.—The town of Reading and part of Alsace township adjoining were erected into a district called the "Township and District of Reading," at May sessions, 1760. The boundary lines to the eastward were not then fixed. A petition for this purpose was presented on February 11, 1761; a survey was made on May 11, 1761, and the proceedings were confirmed at May sessions, 1761. The commissioners appointed by the court were Benjamin Pearson, Edward Drury, William Iddings, Martin Kast, Christopher Witman, Michael Brecht.

Churches.—During the first decade of the town the several religious denominations were active. But it is not known which of them was first in the erection of a meeting-house. The Friends were in the ascendency in respect to government; but their number could not be compared with the number of the Lutherans and Calvinists (or Reformed). The Lutherans had, beyond a doubt, a meeting-house in 1752. It is believed that the Calvinists also had one at that time, though there is no record to establish the fact. They had a fine stone church in 1761. The Friends had a meeting-house before 1760. Their minutes refer to it as having been too small and inconvenient to accommodate their services. In 1765 the several meetings of Friends at Philadelphia and Exeter concurred in the necessity of erecting another. The Baptists had an organization at that time; and if they did not have a place of worship in the town, it was not far distant.1 There were also Episcopalians and Roman Catholics; but these denominations did not come to possess churches during that period ending 1783, though they held services occasionally. They assembled in the dwellings of certain members. The nearest church of the former denomination was at "Molatton," in Amity township, twelve miles distant to the southeast; and of the latter2 at "Goschenhoppen," in Hereford township, near the county line, twenty-five miles distant to the east. Possibly there was a Catholic Church in Maxatawny township also, to the northeast about twenty miles. There were Roman Catholics in the town from the beginning. Written complaints against them were made by certain prominent men to the provincial government in 1755; but these were disregarded.3 The largest religious denomination in the town was the Lutheran, though the Reformed was not much smaller. The members of both were zealous. They exhibited their devotion by promptly erecting, or moving toward the erection of, churches in which to carry on their services. And this they did, though they had a church only several miles to the north, in Alsace township. The number of either denomination could not be ascertained. Judging from a list of communicants in the Lutheran congregation in 1775, their membership was about one hundred and twenty-five.

2 But by the preamble of the act incorporating Reading into a borough it would appear that there was a Roman Catholic meeting-house in Reading in 1783. Four are there mentioned, three of which certainly were the Lutherans, Calvinists and Friends.

Schools.—In the matter of schools, the inhabitants displayed much earnestness. Each religious denomination carried on a separate school—especially the Lutherans, Reformed and Friends. Though the education was secular in kind, it was tinctured to a great degree with religion. Statements have frequently been made that schools were scarce and their encouragement was backward in this district of territory in that early period,—those which existed at all having been in villages and towns. This is a mistake. Before Reading was laid out there were at least eight schools in the territory now comprising Berks County,—four to the east of the river, in Hereford, Oley, Exeter and Maiden-creek, and four to the west, in Caernarvon, Robeson, Tulpehocken and Bethel. The education was limited, having been confined mostly to spelling, reading, writing and simple arithmetic. Each scholar was obliged to pay for tuition, generally several dollars for a quarter. In some instances scholars paid a cent a day, and this payment was made each day at the close of the session. Teaching was conducted during the spring, fall and winter. The greater number, if not all, of the scholars assisted daily in labor of some kind or other at their homes. The teachers were men, and men only; no women, and especially no young people. The schools were generally small one-story buildings. In some cases they consisted of rooms rented for that purpose.

Public Buildings.—Upon the erection of the county and the establishment of Reading as the county-town, quite naturally the county officials, especially the justices and county commissioners, took immediate steps for the erection of public buildings to subserve the convenience of transacting the public business of the county. But some time elapsed before their efforts in this direction were successful. In the mean time private buildings were used instead. The courts were held in taverns. The court-house was the first to be erected. The enterprise of the officials in this behalf was accomplished in 1762. The public offices were opened in February, 1766. The court-house was not built upon an extensive scale. A large building was not necessary. The public business of a judicial character was still limited. One clerk held all of the five offices at one time from the erection of the county till the Revolution. A county jail was erected in 1770.

Markets and Fairs.—In one of the petitions to the Assembly for the erection of Berks County, the petitioners represented that Reading, in 1751, contained one hundred and thirty dwellings, one hundred and six families and three hundred and seventy-eight inhabitants. By the foregoing assessment, it would appear that Reading, in 1759, contained one thousand two hundred inhabitants,—a growth of three hundred per cent. within ten years. In 1761 the town was erected into a separate district out of Alsace township. With so large a population and feeling their importance, the citizens quite naturally desired the town to possess the privilege of holding markets and fairs. They accordingly presented the following petition to John Penn, Governor of the province:

"The petition of the Inhabitants of the Town of Reading, in the county of Berks,

"Most Humbly Sheweth,—

"That about twelve years since this Tract of Country, now known by the Name of Berks County, part of the Province of Pennsylvania, by Act of General Assembly was made a Separate County, and in consequence Whereof, by order of the Honorable Proprietary, this part of the said County was Located, fixed and Surveyed for the County Town, and called by the Name of the Town of Reading, and very many Lots granted to your Petitioners and others, under certain Rents payable to the Proprietary and their Heirs forever.

"That your Petitioners are Tenants under such Grants, and have been at very considerable Expenoses in Erecting Houses and making other Valuable Improvements in the said Town, But humbly conceive that could we be favour'd with a Charter of Incorporation, granting Liberty to hold and keep Publick Markets weekly, and Fairs twice in the Year on certain Days, it would greatly tend to advance the Value of Lots Lett and to be Lett, encourage many others to come and Settle among Us, Increase our Number of Inhabitants, bring More Wealth and render the Town of Reading more happy and abundantly more flourishing.

2 See p. 468, chapter on Internal Improvements.
"Wherefore your Petitioners pray your Honour to take the Premises in your Consideration, and promote and forward the Prosperity, Happiness and Increase of one of the Proprietaries’ Towns by Incorporating and Granting them the Privilege of Fairs and Markets, as aforesaid."

This petition was written, in a superior handwriting, by James Whitehead, Jr., an attorney, dated at Reading, February 10, 1764, and subscribed by two hundred and fifteen inhabitants of the town. The names were mostly written in German. Their application was favorably entertained, though somewhat delayed, and on the 30th of July, 1766, a charter was granted, by which the town was authorized to hold weekly markets and semi-annual fairs. This charter was as follows:

CHARTER TO READING FOR MARKETS AND FAIRS.

"Thomas Penn and Richard Penn, Esquires, true and absolute proprietaries and Governors-in-Chief of the Province of Pennsylvania and Counties of Newcastle, Kent and Sussex on Delaware, To All to whom these Presents shall come, send Greeting:

"Whereas it hath been represented to Us that the Inhabitants of the Town of Reading, in the County of Berks, in the said Province, are in great want of a Market, for buying and selling Provisions, and of Fairs for buying and selling Goods, Wares, Merchandise and Cattle,—

"Now know ye that We, favouring the reasonable request of the said Inhabitants, and considering the flourishing State to which the said Town hath arrived through their Industry, have, of our free will, granted, and do, by these Presents, for Us, our Heirs and Successors, grant to the present and succeeding Inhabitants of the said Town that they shall and may forever hereafter have and keep within the said Town of Reading two fairs yearly, and every year, that is to say, the first to begin on the Twenty-seventh Day of October next, to be held in Penn Street and to continue that Day and the Day next following, and the other of the said Fairs to begin on the Fourth Day of June, to be held in Penn Street aforesaid and to continue that Day and the Day after. But in case either of those Days shall happen to fall on Sunday, then the said Fairs to be held the succeeding Day or two Days following together, and no longer. With all the Liberties and Customs to such Fairs belonging or incident. And We do also hereby grant to the Present and succeeding Inhabitants of the said Town of Reading, that they shall and may hold and keep within the said Town, in Penn Street Square, between Queen Street and Prince Street, two Markets in each Week, that is to say, one Market on Wednesday and one Market on Saturday in every week of the Year forever. And We do also hereby grant and ordain that there shall be a Clerk of the Market for the said Town, who shall have the Assize of Bread, Wine, Beer and all other Provisions brought for the use of the said Inhabitants, who shall and may perform all things belonging to the Office of a Clerk of the Market, within the said Town; And that Henry Haller shall be the present Clerk of the Market, who shall be removable at the pleasure of the Justices of the Peace of the said County of Berks, for the time being, or a Majority of them, in their Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace for the said County of Berks; and another Clerk of the Market shall from time to time be by them appointed and removed in their said Sessions as often as they shall find necessary. And We do hereby further grant and ordain that the Clerk of the Markets, for the time being, shall and may erect so many Stalls and Let the same at such reasonable rates as the said Justices may from time to time direct and see necessary, and that such Clerk shall exhibit his Accounts to the said Justices, to be by them examined and passed in their Sessions, which shall be in the Month of May every Year forever, and the Moneys arising therefrom shall be appropriated by the said Justices to the erecting and maintenance of the said Stalls, the paying the said Clerk of the Market for his services, and to such other Publick Uses within the said Town as they the said Justices shall think proper and direct.

"In Testimony whereof, We have caused the Great Seal of the said Province to be hereunto affixed. Witness John Penn, Esquire, Lieutenant-Governor and Commander-in-Chief of our said Province, at Philadelphia, the [Seal.] Tithieth Day of July, in the Sixth Year of the Reign of George the Third, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith and so forth, and in the Year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and sixty-six.

"John Penn."

The semi-weekly markets were instituted in the fall of 1766; a large market-house was then erected in Penn Square to the east of Callowhill (Fifth) Street; and then farmers and butchers began the sale of vegetables, butter, eggs, meat, etc., twice a week, in the morning of Wednesdays and Saturdays, the articles named having been exposed for sale in the market-house.

The semi-annual fairs began in October, 1766. They were held regularly on the 27th day of October and 4th day of June during that period and they were generally well attended. All kinds of goods and merchandise were brought to the market-house and exposed for sale. The people of the country and of the town doubtless looked upon these fair-days with much pleasure. In the beginning their dealings were mostly of a practical nature. But gradually they introduced festivities of various kinds. The exhibition continued two days, the first by common consent having been taken by the farmers and country people generally, and the second by the town-people. Dancing, with music, produced on the violin, was a prominent part of the programme; and (if we may judge of the exhibition then by the practices of the people four-score of years afterwards) the conclusion was enlivened with fighting and revelry.

Citizens against Change of Government.—Several years previous to the granting of the charter to the town, a considerable agitation prevailed amongst the people of the country concerning the question of a change of government which had been recommended by the Assembly of the province for the reason, as it was alleged,— "That mischievous disagreements subsist in this government, which proceed, as they conceive from the very nature of it, and that a Spirit of Violence, Riot and Confusion prevails among us which cannot be controlled by the present Power of Government and renders a change of the same necessary."

But they were generally against a change which indicates a "Tory" feeling. Their disapprobation of this movement was expressed in memorials to the King. These memorials were printed. In them the subscribers represented,—

"That they had received information that a certain petition praying for change of government had been drawn to the King; and alarmed at its nature, they asked for a copy to know its contents; that they were informed that it had already been forwarded, and no copy could be granted without leave of Assembly at next meeting in September; and, apprehending that delay would prejudice them so that they could not submit their sense of the matter, they represented that they held their Frame of Government in the highest estimation; that though disagreements had arisen, others around them were not exempted from like misfortune, and that they were not incident to the Nature of their Government; that the Province enjoyed "the most perfect internal Tranquility; that the Spirit of Riot and Violence was foreign to General Temper of the Inhabitants, that disturbances were quieted, the Civil Powers were supported and no offenders were screened from public justice; and that if executive power were too weak, the Assembly could strengthen it—therefore they prayed the King to disregard the petition of the Assembly as grievous and not properly representing the state of the Province."

One of them was signed by citizens of Reading, eighty-six in number; among these, prominent men, such as James Whitehead, Jr., James Scull, Isaac Levan, Abraham Levan, John Scull, Nicholas Scull, Conrad Bauer, Christopher Witman, Anthony Fricker, Jasper Scull, Henry Vandervislic. The great majority of the signatures were in German handwriting.

Another from citizens of Reading was signed by Jonas Seely, James Read, John Patton, Henry Christ, Jacob Weaver, (sheriff), John Bishop, Samuel Weiser, (coroner), Jacob Mechlin, Richard Lewis, (commissioner).

Early Inn-keepers.—The tavern was a prominent public place in the town. Licenses were granted by the Governor of the State upon the recommendation of the justices of the county. In 1762 over thirty licenses were issued for taverns in Reading. The following persons were recommended:

- Christopher Witman.
- Alexander Klinger.
- Peter Fetter.
- Peter Withington.
- Henry Kehler.
- Henry Hailer.
- Jacob Jager.
- Anthony Fricker.
- Jacob Graul.
- Jacob Keyser.
- Erhard Roos.
- George Albert.

- Conrad Langsdorff.
- Casper Pfitteicher.
- Christian Maurer.
- Peter Weiser.
- Jacob Rabolt.
- Ludwig Byerle.
- Jacob Moyer.
- William Frymyer.

A number of the tavern-keepers named were prominent, not only in the town affairs, but in the county political affairs. The proportion of taverns to the population was rather surprising, having been about one to every forty inhabitants. A prominent tavern was "Witman's," now the building occupied by the "Farmers' National Bank." This building was erected in 1763 by Adam Witman, an innkeeper, who, doubtless, erected it for an inn. He held it till 1778. In 1799, Michael Wood, also an inn-keeper, came to own it. He had leased it for some years previously. From his possession it took the name of "Wood's Inn," and it was so known till 1814, when the Farmers' Bank purchased it and took possession. The bank has held it for banking purposes continuously till now, a period covering seventy years. This is the second oldest building in Reading. 1 Washington sojourned in it whilst visiting Reading in 1793. He was very kindly received and hospitably entertained. He held a levee, and many persons called to show him honor and affection.

Early Occupations.—The early industry of the town was very diversified. It comprised numerous trades. The mechanics were the life and development of the town. They were happy because they were employed; and they were contented because they supplied their wants, not only by laboring for others, but also by cultivating lots and out-lots for themselves. And many of them were in good circumstances. Hat-making was then a prominent employment.

The following list (in connection with the previous list, which embraces the patentees of town-lots) indicates the occupations which the town afforded and also the pursuits which certain men followed. They were obtained from the records in the recorder's office of the county. The year indicates the date of the deed in which they appear. The persons mentioned may have lived in the town some time before the year given:

1754.—Martin Kast, inn-holder; Leonard Rupert, baker; Adam Wagner, baker; Moses Highman, merchant; Conrad Deboy, reed-maker; Andrew Steele, blacksmith; Joseph Chammond, shop-keeper; Michael Grettet, slaughterer; Jacob Kern, inn-holder; Evan Jones, shop-keeper; George M. Grettet, slaughterer; John Jackson, felt-maker; Samuel Jackson, felt-maker; Adam Wertherberger, weaver.

1 The oldest building now standing in Reading is situated on the northwest corner of Fifth and Washington Streets. It was erected in 1760 by Michael Brecht. Then it was a two-story building; the third-story was added in 1817.

1758.—John Shiridit, gunsmith; Sebastian Grauser, carpenter; Martin Kraft, inn-holder.

1766.—Henry Eckert, brewer; John Spohn, brewer; Conrad Geist, weaver.

1767.—Peter Zimmerman, mason; John Morris, joiner; Michael Klein, cordwainer; Jonathan Jones, saddletree-maker; Jacob Neithack, cordwainer.

1768.—Alexander Murray, clerk; Abraham Witman, cordwainer; Jacob Hoff, chirurgeon and barber.

1769.—Frederick Stieff, cordwainer; Jacob Graff, hatter; William Miller, pump-maker.

1772.—Jeremiah Paul, school-master; Anthony Fricker, inn-keeper.

1779.—Baltzer Henritze, hatter.
A prominent business stand is worthy of special mention in this connection. Conrad Weiser began a store on the north side of Penn Street, above Callowhill (now Fifth), on lot No. 3. He obtained the patent in 1751, having probably erected the building (two-story stone) shortly before. Here Weiser carried on business intercourse with the Indians, in which respect the building obtained particular historic prominence. This stand has continued prominent thence till now, a period extending over one hundred and thirty years. For many years it was commonly known as the "Old White Store." It came to be owned by Nicholas Keim, in 1769; and the Keim family carried on business in it through this period and for seventy years afterward.

Three old buildings, which were erected in this period, are still standing,—two-story stone tavern-stand, northwest corner of Fifth and Washington Streets, erected in 1760 (many years afterward improved and enlarged); two-story stone tavern-stand, on north side of Penn Street, below Fifth, 1763 (bank building since 1814); and two-story stone building, county prison, 1770, on northeast corner of Fifth and Washington Streets (store building since 1848).

Rainbow Fire Company.—The town-people naturally, after having erected numerous dwellings and buildings in the town, considered the necessity of an organization for protecting them from fire. It is believed that they organized a fire company soon after the town had begun to be rather compactly built up, though there is no record to establish the fact. A regular company was, however, organized on March 17, 1773, and named the "Rainbow Fire Company." And this would seem to have been the only company of this kind here for thirty years afterward. Their apparatus for extinguishing fires was, indeed, simple but laborious, especially when compared with the apparatus of fire companies one hundred years afterward. The fire was extinguished at first by buckets of water, hooks and axes. Water was carried in buckets and passed from hand to hand from the nearest pump (then numerous in town) to the burning building and poured upon the fire, and, if not sufficient, the hook and ax were applied to prevent the conflagration from spreading to other buildings.

Then the force-pump, manipulated by hand, was introduced. What an improvement this must have been regarded over the slow, tedious and too frequently ineffectual and dangerous method with the bucket? Instead of approaching the fire and pouring on the water, the firemen could stand off one hundred feet and more and force the water through a hose and pipe in a continuous stream upon the burning building.

No Newspapers nor Internal Improvements.—There were no newspapers in Reading during its history as a town. The Pennsylvania Gazette had a limited circulation among the people. This supplied the news, and this news was almost entirely "foreign." The local correspondence was only occasional. This important agent for preserving as well as communicating facts and particulars about a growing people, not being in existence then at Reading, affords no assistance whatever in ascertaining the condition of Reading before the Revolution. A "special" to the Gazette reported some of the Indian cruelties and wandering bears in the vicinity of Reading; and a correspondent from Reading, in 1760, intimated the possible improvement of the Schuylkill for navigation. The difficulty of gathering facts concerning this early period of Reading, upon which to found historical narrative, will therefore be appreciated.

And there was no bank nor post-office, no public water-works, no bridge nor turnpike, no canal nor railway, no telegraph nor telephone, no gas nor electric light! How destitute of public conveniences and improvements were the inhabitants of the town compared with what the people have now—in the year 1886! We cannot imagine their situation. And yet they were satisfied, for they knew not of these things.

Pump.—The pump was an important feature in the town; in fact, it was an indispensable feature—and it continued to be for a hundred years, till the municipal government discouraged its use, for sanitary reasons, especially after the valuable water-works had been obtained from the "Reading Water Company." It is one of the first things mentioned in connection with the town, and it occupies a prominent position in the growth and well-being of the people. It stood in every locality, and was used by everybody; its utility cannot be over-estimated. There were some springs in the town, and one place was supplied with running water. This was the "Fountain Inn," which was located on the south side of Penn Street, about fifty yards above Tenth. It was conveyed in a wooden pipe from the spring at the "Gravel Hole," on the "commons," a distance of nearly half a mile. Many wells were in use—the water having been drawn up in a bucket by a chain or rope attached to a windlass.

Fuel, Light, Entertainments.—The only substance which the inhabitants used for fuel for heating and cooking purposes was wood. The wood-stove was common everywhere; and so was the open fire-place. Great chimneys were a necessary part of every dwelling. Coal had been discovered in the upper section of the county, along the head-waters of the Schuylkill, some years before the close of this period, but its usefulness as a substance for fuel had not as yet been recognized or appreciated.

The light of that period was still in a primitive state. There was no step as yet beyond the lamp; wax and fat and oils were still the substances commonly used for this purpose. Gas was known abroad; but it had not yet been introduced for lighting public or private places. Thirty years more elapsed before it was adopted for lighting the streets of Westminster and London, in England. There was no demand for an improvement in this direction beyond the wants of social entertainment. The inhabitants worked while it was day; for when the night came they found that they could not work, realizing, indeed, the literal significance of the divine injunction. Work-shops closed at six o'clock or sun-down. The stores, however, were kept open till nine and ten o'clock; and the taverns, especially. A dim light enabled the people to move around; but talk, gossip and story-telling were carried on more than business. A country store or tavern of to-day is a fair sample of what the stores and taverns of Reading were during the period when it was a town; indeed, its light, produced from improved coal-oil lamps, is superior to the light that they had then from oil, fat and tallow.

There were no evening dramatic performances—no entertainments of any kind. Balls and dancing parties were numerous then as they are now. But these were conducted at taverns and not at halls especially designed for such a purpose. The violin was the only musical instrument used, and the player was an orchestra all in himself, his energetic stamping and motions keeping the dancers in time and awaking considerable activity upon the occasion.

The people had various pastimes, just as they have had everywhere, time out of mind. Card-playing, racing, quoiting, rolling and throwing ball, running and jumping, ball-playing and hoop-rolling were most common. These were, however, for men and boys. The women and girls devoted their spare time mostly to knitting, quilting, fancy-sewing and spinning. They did not have any sports which required physical exertion. Indeed, with them, such has ever been the case. It is even so now—excepting one instance, roller-skating.

Hunting and Fishing.—Hunting and fishing were especially interesting and successful sports in the days when the woods were great and wild and the rivers rolled onward unpolluted. This was indeed a great section, for woods and springs were in abundance. Before the town was laid, bears were numerous in this vicinity; and they continued here for some years afterward. Several were shot near by in 1754, of which special mention was made in a letter to the Pennsylvania Gazette at Philadelphia. All kinds of wild game were plentiful—deer, rabbits, pheasants, partridges, ducks, geese and pigeons. The latter were here in flocks, estimated by the thousand. Gunning for food—if not for a livelihood—was common with every man. Traps and snares were used very successfully by many for catching game.

The Schuylkill and its many tributaries abounded with fish. Fishers were just as successful as gunners. They were not required to walk more than a mile or two at most from their homes. The abundance of shad made this locality famous as a fishing-ground. Along the "Never-sink" and around the "Poplar Neck" they were plentiful. The name of the locality—Neversink—arose from this circumstance. With the Indians it was a chosen district above all other districts. The name imports the preference. Other fishes of various kinds were here likewise. Different modes of catching them were used—the net and the rod and line being preferred. The gig at night was frequently adopted. But the first-named was used mostly for this purpose. A large proportion of the food of the early inhabitants consisted of wild game and fish.

INDIAN INVASION.—In the early part of this period the inhabitants of the town were thoroughly aroused, if not terrified, by the horrible cruelties of the Indians along the Blue Mountain, just twenty miles away. The safety of the community was more or less uncertain during the continuance of their invasion from 1755 till 1763. A military depot was stationed in the town. Soldiers were quartered here to inspire confidence and the assurance of protection, and their movements must have kept the people in constant excitement. Conrad Weiser was the most prominent citizen by reason of his active participation in the warfare, not only as a commander of colonial troops, but also as an interpreter for the Indians and as a mediator between them and the government. Many of the settlers were murdered in the townships along the mountain. But the citizens of the town did not suffer any loss at all, for no lives were sacrificed, no persons were seized and carried away and no property was burned or stolen. They were fortunate. The Indians feared the town. It was too populous for them and too well-guarded. The nearest point to the town which they reached was six miles away. But then they were not in a squad, not in force sufficient to commit outrages if they had been so inclined; only a single Indian was seen, and he was apparently fleeing from impending harm or imprisonment. It is rather surprising that a single Indian dared to venture twenty miles away from his associates in and beyond the mountain, but, more surprising that he escaped with his life after having come so far into the county. The citizens must indeed have rejoiced when the declaration of peace was published in 1763.

REVOLUTION.—The rest and quiet which this declaration of peace produced were certainly very encouraging to them during their efforts in developing the town into that degree of importance which its position as a county-seat naturally demanded. But these had scarcely made an impression before a new subject began to agitate their minds. This was in reference to their personal and political rights as subjects of the King. The importance of these rights was not wholly understood or appreciated. Infringement upon them did not then awaken a public spirit of opposition. The people as a community were satisfied with the government over them. They were not even inclined to unite in a movement for a change. But in the course of ten years their sentiments changed; and just as they were indisposed at the close of the "French and Indian War" to consider any subject which tended to disturb the quiet that was settling round-about them, so were they prompt and active in preparing the way for the Revolution. They enunciated their feelings and principles at public meetings. They expressed earnest and bold sympathy for their fellow colonists in the distant colony of Massachusetts, and encouraged them in the stand which they had manfully taken against the encroachments of the British government upon their political rights. "No taxation without representation" was a great public sentiment to which our community could then readily subscribe and about which they could formulate a strong and unconquering spirit for war. In that time a new leader grew into popular favor, and they hesitatingly and unanimously looked to him for political representation, just as they had looked to Conrad Weiser twenty years before in their alarming days with the savage Indians. This was Edward Biddle. Companies of troops were formed and forwarded. Military supplies of all kinds were furnished in answer to all demands. Moneys were collected and paid over; and general activity prevailed in the community through the entire period of the Revolution for eight years. And naturally, this activity, this noble exhibition of patriotism, won the favor of the government, for the leaders in the great movement, recognizing the loyalty of the citizens, established in the town a large depot for military stores, and also a large barrack for prisoners of war. Altogether this was quite a centre in the movement for independence, though the rolling valleys and elevated hills round about were not drenched with the blood of men in actual warfare, though the county was not even invaded by the enemy. The nearest point reached was Valley Forge. Some of the prominent generals of the Revolutionary army were at Reading during the war. One of them, General Thomas Mifflin, was so pleased with the land in this locality that he purchased a large farm in Cumru township, and remained upon it with his family for some time. But it is not known that the commander-in-chief, General Washington, visited Reading. He was at the "Reading Furnace" in 1777, which was near the county line in Chester County, about fifteen miles southeast from Reading.

Prominent Men.—During the first period of Reading, from 1748 till 1783, a number of its citizens distinguished themselves, some as political representatives, some in the pursuits of business life and some in military service. I can mention the following men:

Political.—Conrad Weiser, Edward Biddle, Charles Biddle, James Read, Henry Haller.

Business.—Nicholas Keim, Nicholas Scull, John Jackson, Mark Bird, Gabriel Hiester, John Patton, Jacob Graeff, Henry Hahn, Samuel Jackson, Peter Gross, Henry Eckert, Jacob Bright, Baltzer Henritze, Nicholas Lotz, Dr. Jonathan Potts, Bodo Otto, Adam Witman, Michael Bright, Christopher Schultz, George Douglass, Anthony Fricker.

Military.—Daniel Brodhead, Joseph Hiester, George Nagel, John Spohn, Jacob Morgan, Jacob Graul, Jacob Maurer.

Many other men stood out prominently, but they were from the several districts of the county round about Reading.

Sketches of some of the men named appear elsewhere in this history.

Nicholas Keim.—John Keim, the progenitor of the Keim family, emigrated to America in the latter part of the seventeenth century, and became one of the first settlers in Oley township, Berks County, having taken up land before 1718, and located in the upper section of the township, near the present village of Lobachsville. He carried on farming there till his decease, in 1732. He was a "Friend," a follower of Pastoris.

Nicholas Keim, a son of John Keim, was born in Oley township April 2, 1719. He pursued the life of a farmer till 1755, and then with his wife, Barbara (Snyder), and an only son, moved to Reading, where he then began the business of a general hardware-store, and a dealer in grain, etc. In 1769 he purchased from Mark Bird the "Weiser Store Stand," on Penn Street, near Fifth, commonly known as the "Old White Store," and there carried on business very successfully for a number of years. At that period he was one of the principal merchants at Reading, Adam Witman.
having then also been largely engaged in trade. He resided in a large two-story stone dwelling on the northwest corner of Penn and Ninth Streets. He carried on extensive business transactions with the leading merchants of Philadelphia and Germantown. His receipt-book for the years 1763, 1764, 1765 and 1766 includes the autographs of the Wisters and Benezes, Samuel Miles (afterwards a colonel in the Revolution), Christopher Saur (the prominent publisher), Amos Wickersham, George Dillwyn, Owen Jones, John Cox, Caleb Foulke and others. About the year 1785 he transferred his store to his only son, John, and retired from active business. He was a man of progressive spirit, who encouraged everything relating to the development of the community in which he lived. He died on August 3, 1802, at the advanced age of eighty-three years, “after a long, lingering consumption, which he bore with Christian fortitude and entire devotion to the will of the Almighty.” [Weekly Advertiser, August 28, 1802.]

Pound Sterling.—The term “pound sterling” arose in England under King Richard I., about the year 1190. It is supposed to be an abbreviation of the word “Easterling,” the name of an oriental coin which was introduced into England by distinguished coiners from the East. It is also supposed to have been a small coin worth about one penny which was stamped by merchants from Germany called Esterlings during the reign of King John, 1199–1216.

In the provincial days of Pennsylvania a pound was equal to $2.42. The pound sterling of England is now represented by a “sovereign,” a gold coin valued at $4.84.

The terms “pounds,” “shillings,” “pence,” were used in reckoning for some years after the establishment of independence. The county records show a change from the use of these terms to dollars and cents in the year 1796. The early inhabitants of Reading were obliged to understand the value of the foreign coins in order to carry on satisfactory business intercourse with one another. Before the change was introduced there were two units of value: the English pound and the Spanish milled dollar, and the values of these standards were not common. The matter of reckoning value, making change and exchange, etc., was a complicated matter for them, much more so than we, who are accustomed to simple units of value, would imagine.

Calendar—Old Style to New Style.—The old style of reckoning time (Stylus Veneris) was the Julian Style, derived from Julius Caesar—46 B.C. The length of the year by this reckoning was afterward found to be incorrect. But centuries elapsed before it was changed. In 1582 Pope Gregory XIII., issued a brief in which he abolished the use of the Julian Calendar and substituted a corrected calendar according to the calculations of a learned astronomer of Naples, named Aloysius Lilius. The correction added ten days to the old style. The name of this calendar was called, after the Pope, “Gregorian,” and came to be recognized as the new style. The difference between the two styles continued to be ten days till 1700. In the eighteenth century it was eleven days. The order of the Pope was first recognized only by governments under the influence of the Roman Catholic religion. But the change was gradually introduced into the reckoning of all the governments. In 1751 an act of Parliament was passed by the British government adopting the new style in all public and legal transactions, and directing that the next year 1752 should begin on the 1st day of January, instead of the 25th day of March; that the names of the months (as January, February, March, etc.) should be substituted for the numbers (as 1st, 2d, 3d, etc.), and that the day following the 2d day of September, 1752, old style, should be reckoned as the 14th day of September, new style. Previous to the time that this act went into effect in the American colonies, the Assembly of Pennsylvania passed an act on March 11, 1752, recognizing the act of Parliament, more especially for the purpose of preventing disputes in reference to the dates of legal conveyances.
PART II.
BOROUGH FROM 1783 TO 1847.

CHARTER OF INCORPORATION. — After the close of the Revolution, with independence not only boldly declared but admirably won and firmly established throughout the United States, the town was ready for a step forward into a distinct political body, with the powers and privileges of municipal government. It then contained about four hundred taxable, or fully two thousand inhabitants. Nine-tenths of the population were Germans; and it was generally recognized as the largest, most important and progressive inland town in the entire country. Accordingly, a petition in this behalf was presented to the General Assembly of the State, and on the 12th day of September, 1783—thirty-five years after the town-plan had been laid out—it was erected into a borough. This length of time would seem to indicate a slowness of political action in respect to advancement beyond the ordinary and limited powers of a township; but it would also seem to indicate a good, orderly and contented people, who were able to get along satisfactorily without the aid of police regulations. By that time the county had come to contain a population numbering twenty-five thousand; and towns had come to be laid out and established in the county round-about Reading—Womelsdorf to the west, fourteen miles, in 1780; Hamburg to the north, sixteen miles, and Kutztown to the northeast, eighteen miles, about 1770; Birdsboro' to the southeast, nine miles, about 1770; and Morgantown to the south, fifteen miles, about 1770.

The following letter is worthy of preservation in connection with the incorporation of the borough:

"Sir.—I have proposed a few amendments to the Bill for erecting Reading into a Borough, which you left with me; they are written on the sheet accompanying the Bill. If I heard the objections to the Borough being bounded by the Western bank of the river Schuylkill, I could be enabled to give you my opinion better with respect to that matter than at present, but as I am now circumstances I cannot divine what they can be; nor do I perceive the particular advantages that may attend it, being thus bounded so as to render it a point of moment; perhaps it is intended that the Burgesses shall be True Trout.

"The question, whether the Burgesses can be constituted Justices of the peace for the county of Berks, has been duly attended to; and if the majority of the freeholders within the town and district incorporated request it, I can see no reason to suppose that the Legislature cannot gratify them, not only agreeable to the spirit but the letter of the 30th section of the Constitution.

"I am, Sir, in haste,

"Your most obedient, humble servant,

"THO. M'KEAN."

ACT OF ASSEMBLY.

"An Act for erecting the town of Reading, in the county of Berks, into a borough; for regulating the buildings, preventing nuisances and encroachments on the squares, streets, lanes and alleys of the same, and for other purposes therein mentioned, passed by the General Assembly September 12, 1783:

"Sec. 1. Whereas the inhabitants of the town of Reading have represented, by their petition to the Assembly, that the said town has greatly improved, and is yearly increasing in buildings and number of inhabitants; that a good court-house, jail and four churches or houses for public worship are erected, and that the courts of justice for the county are held there; that encroachments and nuisances have been committed in the public squares, streets, lanes and alleys of said town, and its out-lots; that contentions happen relative to partition walls and fences, and a variety of other matter, to the great annoyance and inconvenience of the inhabitants.

"Sec. 2. And whereas it is necessary, as well for the benefit of the inhabitants of the said town as those who trade and resort there, and for the advantage of the public in general, that the encroachments, nuisances, contentions, annoyances and inconveniences in the said town and out-lots thereto belonging, should for the future be prevented. And for the promoting industry, rule, order and the better government of the said town.

1 Some one has fixed the number at three hundred and sixty-two. By the assessor's list of the town for 1780 the resident taxable numbered four hundred and seventeen.

"Sec. 3. Be it enacted, and it is hereby enacted by the representatives of the freemen of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in general assembly met, and by the authority of the same, That the said town of Reading and the country herein after described shall be, and the same is hereby erected into a borough, which shall be called 'The Borough of Reading' for ever, the extent of which borough is and shall be comprised with the following boundaries, to wit: Beginning on the westerly bank of the river Schuylkill, opposite Lardner's lane of Hockley's ont-lots; thence across said river and Lardner's lane, north sixty-six degrees east, six hundred and fifty-nine perches to a post in a line of land late of Adam Witman, Esq., deceased; thence with said line, and Philip Sayler's, south twenty-four degrees east, one hundred and seven perches to a stone, being a corner of land late of Jonathan Potts, Esq., deceased; then with the lines of said Witman and Potts, north sixty-six degrees east, fifty-three perches to a stone, being a corner of said Potts' land; thence with the lines of Potts and Bright, south twenty-four degrees east, seventy perches to a stone, being a corner of said Bright's land; thence across the mountain, south six degrees west, four hundred and seventy-eight perches, to a post, being a corner of Michael Bright's land; thence south sixty-six degrees west, ninety-three perches, to a stone, being a corner of Isaac Swan's lands; thence by the same and Michael Crowser's land, south twenty-four degrees east, ninety-eight perches to a stone; thence by the same, south sixty-six degrees west, one hundred and fifty-six perches to a black oak, being a corner of said Swan's land, on the eastern bank of the said river Schuylkill; thence across said river to the western bank thereof; thence up the said river, along the several courses and distances on the westerly bank, seven hundred and forty perches to the place of beginning.

"Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That Daniel Levan and William Scull, Esquires, be and they are hereby appointed the present Burgess; and the said Daniel Levan shall be called the chief Burgess within the said borough; and Peter Nagle, John Spoon, Benjamin Spyker, Jr., and James May, assistants, for advising, aiding and assisting the said Burgess in the execution of the powers and authorities herein given them; and John Fry to be High Constable; and Collinson Reed, Esquire, to be the Town clerk; to continue Burgess, Assistants, High Constable and Town Clerk, until the first day of May, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-four, and from thence until others shall be duly elected and appointed in their place, as herein after is directed.

"Sec. 5. Style of the corporation. 'The Burgesses and Inhabitants of the Borough of Reading with its corporate powers and privileges enumerated.'

"Sec. 6. Election of Burgesses and other officers regulated. Time of Election fixed on first of May of each year.

"Sec. 7. Powers of the Burgesses specified.

"Sec. 8. Qualifications of Borough officers enumerated.

"Sec. 9. Provisions for markets and fairs. The markets to be held twice every week—on Wednesday and Saturday; and the fairs twice every year,—on the fourth of June and on the twenty-seventh of October,—each fair to continue two days. John Hartman is named as clerk of the market, 'who shall have the assize of bread, wine, beer, wood and all other provisions brought for the use of inhabitants.'

"Sec. 10.—Penalty on officers elected who refuse or neglect to act.

"Sec. 11.—Power to make rules and ordinances for the good government of the borough.

"Sec. 12.—Buildings heretofore erected that encroach on any street shall not be deemed nuisances; but they are not to be rebuilt nor shall future encroachments be made.

"Sec. 13.—No foundation of any party wall shall be laid by any person before applying to the regulators, who are to be appointed by the Burgesses.

"Sec. 14.—Owners not to build on streets encroached upon.

"Sec. 15.—Parties finding themselves aggrieved in respect to foundation wall may appeal to Quarter Sessions.

"Sec. 16.—Parties to pay regulator for service.

"Sec. 17.—Regulator to regulate partition fences, etc.

"Sec. 18.—Freeholders to choose supervisors and assessors annually on third Monday in May.

"Sec. 19.—Notice of their election to be given.

"Sec. 20.—Supervisors and assessors to levying a tax annually, not exceeding one shilling in the pound, on the clear yearly value of the real and personal estates, etc., after first being qualified.

"Sec. 21.—Supervisors, etc., refusing to serve, Burgess to appoint others; compensation fixed.

"Sec. 22.—Burgess to approve tax levied before collected.

"Sec. 23.—Tenants' goods liable to be distrained for tax.

"Sec. 24.—Tenants may deduct tax paid out of rent.

"Sec. 25.—Supervisors to repair streets.

"Sec. 26.—Supervisors may enter lands adjoining to cut drains or ditches for carrying off the water.

"Sec. 27.—Supervisors to be fined for neglect of duty.
In 1817 Reading was divided into two election wards,—North and South,—Penn Street having been made the dividing line. In 1840 it was divided into four election wards,—Northeast, Southeast, Northwest and Southwest,—Penn and Sixth Streets having been made the dividing lines. And, in 1844, a fifth election ward, called Spruce, was erected out of that part of Reading which lay between the Schuylkill River, Philadelphia and Reading Railroad and Spruce Street.

NEWSPAPERS.—There was no publication of any kind at Reading before 1783. In fact, the people of the town were without every great agent whose mission is the rapid development of a community. We must indeed wonder how they could exist without a newspaper, a post-office, a turnpike, a canal, a railway, and, especially, without some affair upon which to bestow much public attention and treasure. The introduction of municipal government amongst them marked the beginning of real progress, and Time thence would seem to have been generous in bestowing his blessings upon the community. By reviewing the whole period of the borough from 1783 to 1847, the newspaper occupies a very prominent position. It was the first evidence of real advancement by the town-people beyond their previous condition. And that this instrumentality in a new era of Reading should be the first was as natural as it was reasonable and necessary. The contents of the earliest publications were, doubtless, interesting to its readers, notwithstanding that they consisted of advertisements and foreign news almost entirely; but to us of to-day they would be decidedly uninteresting, inasmuch as we have been taught to expect and to read and to know many matters pertaining to persons not only round-about us, but distant many miles as well abroad as at home. Then these local matters must have been considered of no consequence, inasmuch as they were carried from house to house, and from place to place by speech. Now, however, they are, and even before the borough had run its course they were, carried by the press.

Nine-tenths of the inhabitants, it is believed, were Germans. Naturally the first local publication was in the same language. But an English publication followed some years afterward; and newspapers in both languages have continued in circulation hence till now. Two are worthy of special mention for their long duration; one being the Reading Adler (German), established in 1796, and the other, the Berks and Schuylkill Journal (English), established in 1816, the former having been the fourth and the latter the sixth publication begun at Reading. Many were begun, but they did not flourish. From 1820 till 1847 it would seem to have been quite fashionable to start and run a newspaper, judging from the number instituted, but not strongly constituted. Two English newspapers in this period are worthy of mention, the Berks County Press and the Gazette and Democrat, the former established in 1835 and the latter in 1839. Both figured conspicuously for thirty years, and chiefly as the advocates of the Democratic party.

The general development of the borough through these newspapers cannot be fully estimated. Their influence was certainly wonderful. At first their power over the public was trifling; but it grew with passing years. Long before the inhabitants thought of growing out of their boyhood into manhood, in respect to local self-government, it was felt as a strong agency amongst them. And it was as good as it was strong.

Post-office.—Several years after the introduction of the newspaper, the post-office at Reading was established. This was in 1793. We of to-day cannot imagine what a step this was by the people out of the wilderness of inconvenience and labor, if not anxiety. The nearest post-office, since the establishment of this department of public service in the country, was at Philadelphia. Letters therefore were comparatively few in number. If a letter were addressed to a person residing at Reading, it was delivered at Philadelphia, and there published in a newspaper. Through this publication, notice would reach Reading, and eventually the persons. Correspondence was almost entirely indulged in by those who could forward it by an express messenger. The stage was then a prominent institution. It was used for transporting letters, as well as persons and goods from place to place. After the establishment of postal routes the mail-bag was substituted for the driver's pocket. There was a daily mail between Philadelphia and Reading from 1793 till the establishment of the railroad in 1838. In this period of about forty-five years the intercourse of the people for social and business purposes was stimulated to a high degree. During nearly the whole time, letters were folded and closed with red sealing-wax. There was quite an art displayed in the folding so as to admit of opening the letter without mutilating certain parts of the manuscript. The envelope was introduced here shortly before the railways. From 1835 for a number of years, mail matter was received twice a day regularly.

Internal Improvements.—Great thoroughfares had been established which led through this section of country before Reading was laid out in 1748. From the Schuylkill at the foot of Penn street, roads extended to the west, to the north, to the southeast and to the southwest. The Indians had doubtless marked out these courses in passing to and from their respective encampments along the Tulpehocken, Ontelaunee, Schuylkill and Wyomissing, and they were adopted by surveyors in viewing and laying out public roads between the settlements. But, notwithstanding the rapid growth of the population round-about and in Reading down to 1783, there was no movement towards the creation of great highways by either land or water to encourage as well as to facilitate the business enterprises of the town. This was a very important matter to them, but apparently they did not feel the need of easy and rapid inter-communication. However, soon after the town had developed into a borough, a progressive spirit appeared, and this continued to show itself persistently from one decade to another till the people came to enjoy turnpikes, canals and a railroad. These were accomplished before 1840. By studying them respectively

it would seem that they were plants of slow growth. It is possible, if not probable, that the demands of trade were not urgent. Both dealers and people took ample time in business transactions, the former in supplying and the latter in demanding articles for use and consumption in daily life. And this may account for the apparent slowness of actually realizing their practical utility. Everything was slow, and competition was comparatively an unknown factor in the market, especially that competition which is now recognized for its energy and keenness, and without which a merchant would certainly be left far in the rear. These agents were useful to the borough in the development of manufactures and commerce, and they continued active till it was advanced into a city. Before 1810 they were of no consequence to the borough. But subsequently in every decade they manifested their power by an ever-increasing influence. In respect to population this is perceptible; for from 1810 to 1820, the increase was twenty five per cent; from 1820 to 1830, it was thirty-five per cent; from 1830 to 1840 it was 43.6 per cent; and from 1840 to 1850 it was 87.2 per cent. Allowing the town to have had 2000 inhabitants when it was incorporated into a borough, and the borough to have had 12,000 when it was incorporated into a city, it would appear that Reading increased in population 10,000 during sixty-four years, quintupling itself in two generations. A great, if not the greater, proportion of this surprising increase is attributable to internal improvements.

Ferries—Bridges.—At the foot of Penn Street there was a ferry across the Schuylkill from the beginning of the town till 1816, when a bridge was constructed. The first efforts of the inhabitants in this direction were made in 1796. The subject of this important improvement for the convenience and safety of the public was constantly before the people during a score of years. A stone bridge was first suggested, and the project was encouraged by liberal legislation. Even the "Lottery Scheme" was brought to the rescue, with the aid of prominent, influential commissioners. A beginning was made by the erection of stone piers and the county commissioners paid large sums of money on account of their construction. But the "old ferry" could not be supplanted. The people knew it was unsafe and uncertain. They experienced it, especially every spring. What was the cause of this inaction? Was the enterprise of the commissioners too weak, or was the stone bridge, as an enterprise, too strong for the times? What a contest this was! It amuses us of to-day. And yet have we not weakness, insecurity and uncertainty about us in the several departments of our daily life which we fail to remedy, notwithstanding the spirit of agitation on the one hand and our wealth and education on the other? It would seem that all efforts were fruitless till the turnpike was introduced. And yet stages ran to and fro across the ferry daily, for at least thirty years. Immediately after the turnpike had become established, a strong determination manifested itself towards the completion of the bridge. In 1816 it reached a passable condition, and in 1818 it was completed. It took the name of "Harrisburg Bridge" from the turnpike, the eastern terminus of which was at this point and the western at Harrisburg. Twelve years afterward a second bridge was erected across the river about two-thirds of a mile below. It took the name of "Lancaster Bridge" from the road which led to Lancaster. It was constructed also of wood. There was no delay in its construction. The county commissioners were authorized by an act passed in 1829 to erect it. They proceeded at once in the matter, and completed it in the following year. At this point there had also been a ferry for many years. It was commonly called "Strohecker's Ferry," afterward "Garber's" The first privilege for a ferry at this point had been granted by the Penns to one Levan, and during his time it was called "Levan's Ferry."

Fire Companies, Banks, Water Supply.—In the development of the borough, special mention must be made of three useful bodies which contributed much towards the general welfare of the community—the first in respect to fire, the second to money, and the third to water.

When the borough began its eventful history the "Rainbow Fire Company" was the only association in the place for the protection of property from fire, and it continued alone for a number of years. Two other organizations of this nature were in existence for some time, but no information was obtainable to show when they began or ended. One was called the "Union Fire Company" and the other the "Sun Fire Company." They were in active operation in 1808. At April term of that year they united with the "Rainbow" in a petition to the judges of the Quarter Sessions asking for pecuniary assistance. This petition was as follows:

"Petition of the Inhabitants of Reading, setting forth that a number of the inhabitants of the Borough of Reading have at a considerable expense established three fire companies, and provided engines, buckets, baskets and other necessary articles for saving property from destruction by fire, but that they have not funds to provide buckets sufficient to supply those who are unable to furnish themselves with them; that the preservation of the Court-House and other public buildings is for the advantage of the whole county, and, therefore, part of the expense of guarding against their being consumed by fire ought to be paid by the county instead of throwing the whole burden on the borough of Reading. Your petitioners therefore pray your Honor to recommend it to Grand Jury to grant a sum of money to enable the commissioners to purchase a competent number of fire buckets to be placed in some public place in the town of Reading under their care for the use of the inhabitants in case of fire.

"William Moore,
"Prest. of Union Fire Co.
"Peter Frailey,
"Prest. of Sun Fire Co.
"John Lotz,
"Prest. of Rainbow Fire Co."

It was laid before the grand jury, and on the 5th of April, 1808, an appropriation of two hundred dollars was recommended.

Subsequently, during the history of the borough, three fire companies were instituted, viz.: Junior, December 2, 1813; Reading, 1 July 4, 1819; Neversink, April 14, 1829.

Several early conspicuous fires which occurred in Reading are worthy of mention. On November 5, 1799, between one and two o'clock in the morning, a "shocking" fire broke out in a stable on "Moravian Alley." The property burned consisted of a large stable, including seventeen horses, ten dwelling-houses and a large warehouse, including a large quantity of tea, and a lot of coffee and other articles. The cause was not ascertained. It was reported that two men, who were sleeping in the stable, were also burned. Some months afterward (March 31, 1800) another fire occurred, which consumed a large house (the property of Daniel Strohecker), a large barn, including a horse and seven pigs (the property of Michael Madeira), and a stable, including a cow (the property of Jacob Good). The fire began in Strohecker's house.

A costly conflagration occurred on May 5, 1820, at midnight, on Penn Street, between Fifth and Sixth. Six valuable buildings were burned, five of which were stores, viz.:

Two-story stone building, occupied as a store by Lane & Orrick.

Two two-story brick buildings, one a store and the other a dwelling, the property of William Bell.

Two two-story buildings, one frame and the other brick, both occupied as stores, the property of William Moore.

Two-story brick building, occupied as a shoe-store by O'Brien & Foster, the property of James Bell.

The fire was caused by an incendiary. It originated in the back building of William Bell's store. The loss was great and could not be estimated.

Panic of 1837 — Shin-Plasters. — In 1837 the "panic" struck Reading. Owing to a suspension by the United States Bank, the banks at New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and other places suspended specie payments, and the banks at Reading were forced to do likewise. The suspension here took place on May 12, 1837. Notwithstanding this suspension, the business men of the borough published a notice of their entire confidence in the banks at home, and of their willingness to accept the notes of the banks in payment of debts, goods, etc.

1 A "Reading Hose Company" was in existence in 1810. In August of that year a notice was published requiring the payment of moneys due. The officers were Samuel Baird, Jr., pres.; William Tilton, sec.; M. Richards, treas.

2 This item was taken from the Readinger Adler. The fire is not mentioned in the Weekly Advertiser.
The scarcity of money compelled the people to resort to an expedient for a circulating medium. This was found in the "Shin-plaster," commonly so called, and also "Rag- Barons," "Hickory Leaves," etc. The Borough Council came to the relief of the people by authorizing an issue of loan certificates to the amount of twenty thousand dollars, in denominations of five, ten, twenty-five and fifty cents, and one, two and three dollars, which were to be redeemable on August 1, 1838. These certificates were loaned to business men on good security to indemnify their redemption and afterward redeemed. A public meeting was held on June 10, 1837, to denounce this proceeding. It was only a noisy demonstration, and resulted in a failure.

WATER.— Water was entirely supplied from wells and cisterns to the citizens till 1821. Then a company was organized for the purpose of supplying good water. It was called the "Reading Water Company." This was a great improvement, especially for those people who did not have a pump upon their premises and were compelled to carry water for some distance to their homes. This company, by means of pipes, conducted water throughout the borough into the yards of their patrons. But the pumps were not abandoned, notwithstanding that the water was of a limestone quality and not adapted for general household use, especially for washing purposes. Throughout this period many people from all parts of the borough resorted to the Commons, along the stream which flowed from the "arched spring" near the "gravel-hole," to carry on washing. The "Commons" was a great place on "washday." The most popular portion was at the head of Washington Street, within several hundred feet from the present entrance into the "Fair-Ground." Many women and girls were there at a time. The days most commonly devoted to this purpose were Mondays and Tuesdays. The numerous heads bobbing up and down over tubs, and long lines, with "wash" flapping in the breeze, presented an interesting sight indeed. The water was heated in large iron kettles, suspended from cross-bars which rested on notched upright posts, or placed on a temporary hearth built of stones gathered from the vicinity.

LIGHT.— The light of the town was still the light of the borough. Tallow, moulded in the form of candles, and oil and camphene in lamps were used. The streets were not lighted. Public buildings were very seldom used in the night for meetings or entertainments; and store keepers could get along with the light afforded from lamps. The times did not require a superior light, for the people had not yet come to convert part of the night into day.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.—The public buildings of the borough constituted the court-house, prison, State-House and market-houses. The old court-house was found too small and inconvenient, and a fine, large, brick structure was supplied in 1840. The prison of 1770 remained, and accommodated all the prisoners from the county and the county-seat. The rooms were not numerous, but the county commissioners and sheriff, nevertheless, found place for all the prisoners.

In 1791 the "State-House" was erected on the northeast corner of Penn and Callowhill (Fifth) Streets. This important building was supplied in order to provide offices for the county clerks, treasurer and commissioners. Upon the erection of the new court-house the offices were removed thither, and the building was sold.

When the town was incorporated into a borough there was only one market-house. It stood in Penn Square, above Callowhill Street. About 1799 a second was built after the same plan, below Callowhill Street. They were both rebuilt at the close of this period.

There were no halls for the accommodation of public entertainments. Balls, amusements, etc., were carried on in large rooms of certain inns. Two places were conspicuous: Weldy's, adjoining the "Harrisburg Bridge," or the south side, and Fricker's, on the southwest corner of Penn and Sixth Streets.

STAGES——CANALS——RAILWAYS.—Reading had been an active inland town, and public roads had been laid out extending to the north, east, south and west, for nearly forty years before the inhabitants were afforded a means of transportation by public conveyance at regular intervals to the surrounding settlements and towns, both near and distant. We are naturally inclined to wonder what subjects occupied the attention of prominent enterprising men to such an extent as to hinder them from devising so important and yet apparently so simple and trifling a thing as a stage for the accommodation of the public in respect to travel, soon after a considerable population had settled in the town, say in 1760 or 1770. People generally, and business men especially, moved about from place to place to a greater or less extent. Some had their own conveyances; but the majority had not. We can therefore readily understand that progress was necessarily slow without an accommodation of this kind, and that considerable time would have to pass away before any perceptible improvement was realized. Elsewhere the stage-coach was then a useful institution and in successful operation. At Philadelphia, just fifty miles off to the southeast, it had been in use for over forty years before Reading was laid out.

The stage was first introduced on the great highway between Reading and Philadelphia in 1789. Several years afterward stage-lines were extended to the west, through Lebanon Valley to Harrisburg, to the north over the Blue and Broad Mountains to Sunbury, and to the northeast through East Penn Valley to Easton. At first, weekly trips were made; afterward, as public demands required, they gradually became semi-weekly, tri-weekly, and eventually daily, the last having been reached in 1826—a period in the development of our local affairs about as long after the introduction of the stage as it was to obtain it after the settlement of the town in 1751. When the daily stages ran to and fro, trade and travel were lively. Their constant and increasing activity provoked competition. In order to "make time," "relays" for fresh horses were established at points along the lines every six miles, and the horses were urged onward over hills and dales under the twirling, cracking lash. How the coaches must have rocked on their leathern support! how the horns, blasted by long-winded drivers, must have sounded on the way in announcing their approach and arrival! The highest point of competition was reached in 1830. The fares had been cut to half their regular rates, and the stage-coaches had come to fly over the turnpikes at a gallop—especially to the south and west—even racing side by side at times to reach prominent places first. Then the court-house on Penn Square was the prominent point of observation in town to witness arrivals. Betting on first arrivals of competing stages was frequently practiced. It was common to see fifty and even a hundred persons assembled there, to receive the stages with a welcome of shouts and applause. What times, indeed! Men now, who are beyond the middle age of life, inform us that the times were better then than now, because more real business life and energy prevailed through individual enterprise, and because men had equal chances in their efforts for traffic and success. But legislation was then devising, if it had not already devised, a new and powerful competitor, and it was then unwittingly creating a great inequality amongst the several agencies in this department of commercial life. The Democratic party had had the reins of government over the affairs of the State and the direction of legislative policy for over thirty years. By looking back over this period it would seem that this great party had been developing a creature which was in principle undemocratic and which would soon manifest a tendency to hinder the development of personal enterprise for a time and then eventually drive it out of the market altogether. And this competitor, this creature, was the corporation. It did not take hold of the stage-coach as an institution worthy of its genius. But it had taken hold of the turnpike and afterward of the canal, and had struggled hard with them through many years till they were put into practical and successful operation. And these were hardly given an opportunity to display their utility before it developed the railroad with steam as a propelling power. What a step forward this was—a step to speed, to ease, to power! What was the horse in a coach or boat by the side of steam on a firm railroad track, which the seasons could not render precarious or impassable—even four-in-hand, fresh every six miles, flying under a lash and speedy before a horn! Naturally, the stage business passed away with the introduction of this new agent, a factor in our daily life which wind or weather, heat or cold, could not affect, and which was tireless and irresistable.

Hauling over steep hills and bad roads was slow and tedious, but it was not discouraging. The early settlers kept themselves and their strong teams at it in spite of hills and roads and weather. Navigation was recommended, but it was generally deemed impracticable. Efforts were being made to introduce it, but their progress was very slow, if not imperceptible. A discovery, however, beyond the mountains led to a change, and by it, physical energy was to be somewhat relieved. One of the great elements of nature was to be substituted in the place of the common road and turnpike in order to satisfy the demands of trade as developed by this discovery—water was to become a highway and the boat a conveyance.

In the upper regions of the Schuylkill coal had been discovered as early as 1770. But it was not mined successfully till the lapse of forty years later. After it began to be mined in large quantities, the ordinary wagon, capable of carrying but a few tons, became impracticable for the purpose of carrying it many miles over mountains and through gorges. This process was laborious, slow and costly. A way had to be found to make its transportation much less laborious and costly, and to hasten its delivery. This way was afforded soon afterward by the Schuylkill Navigation Company. It came with the demand. It began to carry coal, lumber, merchandise and produce in 1818, and every year, for several decades afterward, demonstrated its great utility. Its traffic increased from hundreds of tons to hundreds of thousands. The canal extended along the Schuylkill for a length of one hundred and eight miles,—from Mount Carbon to Philadelphia,—and was finished for traffic, through from one end to the other, in 1825. Its success stimulated a similar enterprise through the Lebanon Valley from the Schuylkill to the Susquehanna. This latter scheme for a highway by navigation had been projected more than fifty years before, but it was not completed till shortly afterward. It needed a great staple to hasten its development and construction. It found this in lumber, and it came to be equally successful for a period.

But the development of the country grew beyond navigation. The demands of the former exceeded the capacities of the latter. So a new agent had to be supplied to satisfy the one by taking the place of the other. This was found in steam. It would appear that this great motive came to us just when it was a necessity. How frequently discoveries succeed each other in a natural order to favor the development, the convenience, the enrichment and the improvement of a country! This is wonderful. Steam required a railroad; and the railroad was supplied. Its construction began in the county in 1835, and it was finished from Philadelphia to Reading in 1838, and to Pottsville in 1842.

MANUFACTURES.—The various trades common to every industrious community were carried on successfully in Reading from the beginning of this period. The previous history of the town for thirty years had developed industrial life to such a degree as to give the people a good start under a new political management. Its extent, beyond enumeration of the several occupations, could not be ascertained. There was no place to look for it. The newspaper—that great chronicler of all things, that grand historian of events—had not yet arrived. But the people had to prepare the way for its introduction, for its utility. Their only thought was to do in order to live and grow and thrive. They were making history for themselves, but not preserving it, being doubtless without a thought concerning it.

The employments of the people gave them an industrial condition with which to begin a new period of Reading under favorable auspices. They made the borough self-dependent and self-sustaining. They produced numerous articles, such as hats, ropes, chains, carpets, coverlets, clocks, home-spun material, barrels, castings, earthen-ware, boots and shoes, wagons and carriages, etc., and, I must not forget to add, whiskey in great quantities. These constituted a good foundation upon which to build a rich and attractive super-structure during the two generations that were to follow. The manufactured articles were produced by hand during the entire period. Steam-power was introduced about 1836; but it was applied almost entirely to the manufacture of iron articles. And about that time the industry in iron began with commendable enterprise. It naturally followed the introduction of steam. And gradually thereafter this important labor-saving agent was utilized in the manufacture of building materials, hats, ropes, etc. The railway was the stimulating influence which caused the development of this great industrial life. Before 1836 the borough contained no strong and rich manufacturing enterprises, notwithstanding the fact that turnpikes had encouraged trade overland for at least twenty years, and canals by water for ten years.

Traffic.—The traffic of the borough from the beginning of its history was large. To afford an idea of the nature and extent of the shipments made within the first twenty-five years of this period at certain times, the following statistics are presented. The articles named were shipped to Philadelphia from the store-house of Garber & Strobecker, during the years and times stated by flat-boats on the river Schuylkill.

There were other store-houses in Reading from which large quantities of goods were also shipped to Philadelphia in the same manner. And then, too, teams were busy in transporting various articles.

The dry-goods stores carried on business amounting annually to $280,000.

And in 1839 there were thirty-two licensed inn-keepers, distributed as follows:

| Penn Street | 17 | Washington Street | 1 |
| Turnpike | 1 | Seventh Street | 1 |
| Rolling-mill | 2 | N. Fifth Street | 4 |
| Franklin Street | 2 | S. Fifth Street | 4 |

Oyster-saloons were in abundance. In the county districts the licensed places numbered 195; total in county, 227. In 1844, Reading, 33, and country districts, 190; total, 223.

Distinguished Visitors.

John Penn.—John Penn visited Reading in April, 1788, whilst on his way from Philadelphia to Harrisburg. After leaving the “Black Horse” (Inn), now Douglassville, where he “bailed” his horses, he “passed on thro’” a series of higher hills, breaking the horizon with less harmony, and resembling somewhat more Pelion upon Ossa. Near Reading, into which I walked for two miles, sending on my horses, I met a person on horseback and questioned him concerning the Manor here, as I had alighted chiefly to examine at leisure my own ground. He showed the fertile valleys and low places, which were all settled by encroachers, and the rocky and barren mountains they left unsettled. The town is finely situated on the Schuylkill, surrounded at a distance and sheltered by these mountains. Dinner was ordered at one Witman’s, who proved the only tavern-keeper who had not lately petitioned against the confirmation of the proprietary estate. His accommodations were worthy of a respectable country town, and I dined heartily upon catfish, which the river plentifully affords.” This was on the 7th of April. During the day a number of the residents called to pay their respects to him. On the 8th he, with the company of Judge James Biddle and Daniel Clymer, Esq., both of Reading, visited the ferry which the Penns had rented to one Levan. “... A dinner was provided for us at Mr. Biddle’s, the honors of the table done in part by Mrs. Collins, his daughter, and his unmarried one present. They are of low stature, but rather pretty. Mr. Biddle appears an amiable character. It was mentioned that a subscription of about £3,000 currency would remove the obstructions of the Schuylkill so much that the trade and property of the town would most rapidly increase. Another plan much sooner to be executed is the establishment of a school. The trustees are to allow the teacher £100 currency per annum.”

LAFAYETTE.—In 1824 Lafayette visited the United States. His visit occasioned great public demonstrations of affection and esteem for him throughout the country. He arrived at New York on the 16th of August. The news of his arrival reached Reading on the following day and it awakened great joy throughout the town. Ringing bells, martial music and thundering cannon were heard all day. The borough authorities assembled on the 18th and passed appropriate resolutions respecting the distinguished visitor, and in the evening the town presented a magnificent appearance. Nearly every house on the prominent streets was brilliantly illuminated; it was estimated that ten thousand lights were displayed. Triumphal arches were erected across the streets at several places, and a large torchlight procession paraded about the town, accompanied by the “Reading Band” and marshaled by Daniel Rose, Esq.

A copy of the resolutions which were adopted by the borough authorities was transmitted to General Lafayette. He acknowledged its receipt by the following letter, addressed to the president of the Borough Council:

“WASHINGTON, February 5, 1825.

“Sir,—Altho’ the expressions of my gratitude to the respected citizens and council of Reading have been much retarded, I hope they will be received with that indulgence and friendly feeling to which your kindness has authorized me to apply. The testimonies of esteem and friendship which have been bestowed on me in the borough of Reading have made upon my heart a deep impression. Be pleased, sir, and gentlemen, to accept a tribute of these sentiments and of my high respect.

LAFAYETTE.

“Mr. Peter Nagle, Jr., Esq., Reading.”

Whilst Lafayette was at Philadelphia, the recipient of public welcome and honors as the city’s noble guest, the Reading Battalion of troops participated in the great demonstrations.

Van Buren’s Visit.—The President of the United States, Martin Van Buren, visited Reading on Tuesday, June 25, 1839, whilst on his way from Harrisburg to Easton. A special committee from the borough met him at Womelsdorf. Many citizens from different parts of the county—some in vehicles, others on horse-back and afoot—formed a procession on the turnpike, some distance west of the “Harrisburg Bridge,” and united with the committee in escorting the distinguished visitor into Reading. He was certainly pleased to receive a generous welcome from the thriving town on the Schuylkill, which three years before had given him such a handsome political support as nearly four to one against Gen. W. H. Harrison. The procession paraded through the prominent streets. The President rode on a handsome cream-colored horse, the property of a Mr. Dewees, from Oley, and his graceful horsemanship attracted general attention. He sojourned at “Herr’s Hotel.”

During the evening a reception was held for him at the residence of Samuel Bell, Esq., and “a highly creditable representation” assembled to show him honor. He was single then; for which reason “the beauty of Reading” comprised the conspicuous, if not the major part of the representation, and doubtless made it—as reported—highly creditable. He left for Easton via Kutztown on the following morning, a number of prominent citizens having accompanied him thither. Reading naturally took a high pride in this visit; for Van Buren had, in the previous year, paid a great compliment to the borough in the selection of a popular, generous and much-loved citizen, the Hon. Henry A. Muhlenberg, to be the first minister plenipotentiary to Austria.

Scott’s Visit.—Gen. Winfield Scott visited Reading on Saturday, May 21, 1842, during a great “Military Encampment” of the Berks County militia, on the “Commons.” He was accompanied by his aids, Lieutenants Alden and Carney. They were met at the railroad station (Seventh and Chestnut Streets) by a detachment of military and escorted to Herr’s Hotel, where they were cordially welcomed and properly entertained. Many citizens followed the parade. On Monday, the 23d, he reviewed the troops at the encampment, and left on the next day for Danville, to review a similar encampment. During the day medals were awarded for skillful shooting. General Scott was much pleased with the discipline and appearance of the encampment; and he paid a special compliment to the “Reading Artillerists.” He was particularly and favorably impressed with their captain, Thomas Leoser, a tall, finely-proportioned and charming, social man.

Numerous other prominent officials and politicians, both national and State, visited Reading before 1847, but there was no public demonstration. Some spoke at political meetings during Presidential campaigns,—including such as Harrison, Buchanan, Webster and Dallas.

MEMORIAL SERVICES.

WASHINGTON’S DEATH.—Washington, it is said, visited Reading some time before his death, in 1799. He sojourned at the Federal Inn (now the Farmers’ Bank building), and was given, whilst here, a “grand reception.” The event was celebrated by a ball, at which numerous citizens presented themselves to show their high respect for him. His death was sincerely mourned by all the people of Reading; the newspapers were clothed in heavy black borders; and, to demonstrate in a public manner their great sorrow for his death and great reverence for his name, they held funeral services on Sunday, January 5, 1800. The following report appeared in the Weekly Advertiser of 11th January:

“Funeral Procession

“ar In honor of Lieutenant-General George Washington, the late illustrious Commander-in-chief of all the Armies of the United States of America.

“On Sunday last, arrangements having been previously made by a Committee of the Free Masons, the inhabitants of this borough met at the House of Mr. Henry Boyer to make a suitable Mark of Respect to the Memory of our Great, Good and admirable

Washington. The Military formed in line, leaning on their Arms reversed, to receive the Bier, and about eleven o’clock the Procession began, moving along Penn street, west as far as the corner of the Centre Square, where it crossed Penn street and proceeded eastward to Prince street; thence to the German Lutheran Church, in the following order:

Masons in form.
Clergy.
Bier, with a hat and sword, carried by four Masons.
Judges of the Common Pleas.
Justices of Peace.
Attorneys.
Physicians.
Citizens.
Military.
Music playing dead march and Bells tolling.

“Having arrived at the Church the Bier was placed in the Centre. The ceremonies commenced with solemn music. The Rev. M. Lehman made suitable prayers and afterwards delivered an animated discourse adapted to the Occasion, from Revelation 2nd chapter, 7th verse. At the conclusion of which the Bier was taken through the Church and the ceremonies ended with the firing of three volleys over it.

“The Procession then returned in the same order, drums unmuffled and playing Washington’s March, to the place from whence they started, and dispersed.”

HARRISON’S DEATH. — The death of General William H. Harrison,1 whilst President of the United States, caused a public expression of sorrow. It was the subject of a “day of prayer” in Reading on 14th May, 1841. The military, literary and beneficial societies assembled in Trinity Lutheran Church to show their public regard for the memory of the distinguished general and statesman. The church was crowded and many persons were unable to enter. Rev. R. U. Morgan, rector of Christ’s Episcopal Church, preached an appropriate sermon. In the services he was assisted by Rev. Jacob Miller, of Trinity Lutheran Church, and Rev. William Pauli, of German Reformed Church.

STREETS,—CHANGE OF NAMES.—Upon the laying out of the town the streets were named as follows:

East and West.

Penn, extending through the centre of town.

1 He died April 4, 1841, having just been inaugurated on the 4th of March previous.
To the north, Thomas and Margaret.
To the south, Richard and Hamilton.

North and South (crossing the streets named at right angles).

King.  Earl.
Queen.  Clement.
Callowhill.  Lord.
Prince.  Vigour.
Duke.

These names were continued till changed by the Borough Council on 6th of August, 1833. The names then substituted were as follows, Penn having been retained:

North of Penn,—Liberty, Washington and Walnut. South,—Cherry, Franklin and Chestnut. Across Penn,—Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth and Eleventh; and what had been for a time called Bridge and Treat were then changed to Front and Second.

A year previous (in 1832) the streets of the borough were graded, according to regulation, by Enoch Lewis.

On October 18, 1845, the Councils named the following alleys, extending,— Laurel and Willow (south of Bingaman) were also named then.

EXECUTIONS.

In 1764 Thomas Fowler was convicted of burglary for breaking into the house of Sarah Drury, of Reading, by a special commission appointed, and he was hanged at Reading, Friday, September 7, 1764.

In 1767 Catharine Kreps was convicted of killing her illegitimate child at Reading, and she was executed Saturday, December 19, 1767.

In 1770 Thomas Procter was convicted of burglary for breaking into the dwelling of William Neal in July, 1769, and he suffered the penalty of death on Saturday, July 7, 1770.

During the Revolution a British soldier was hanged at Reading for murdering Jacob Hechler, of Exeter township, and afterward Samuel Reeves, a negro, suffered death, for a rape committed upon a woman named Mary Sepley, in Alsace township, about a mile and a half east from Reading.

In 1797 Benjamin Bailey was convicted of killing Jost Vollhaffer, and he died upon the scaffold at Reading on January 6, 1798, in the presence of over six thousand people.

EXECUTION FOR THEFT.—During the year 1784, a young man, by the name of Welsh, whilst on his way home to Reading, overtook a lame countrywoman, who carried a large bundle. In order to assist her, he carried the bundle to town. When she reached home, she missed nine dollars which she had deposited in the bundle, tied up in a handkerchief. Welsh was accused and before the magistrate he acknowledged the theft. Notwithstanding evidence of good character, he was convicted under the charge of Chief Justice McKean and executed. He behaved with firmness and resignation till the last moment. On his way to the gallows, looking at Penn's Mount, he said, "That is a grand sight; but I shall soon see a much more glorious one." A wretched-looking man was executed at the same time. Welsh had entered the colonial army in the beginning of the Revolution and served honorably during the whole of the war. After the declaration of peace he returned, married and settled at Reading. He was born at a place near by. When he committed the act, his wife lay sick and he was unable to maintain her, though he was willing to work. He would not beg assistance, regarding death less terrible. The war having just closed, it was thought that many soldiers would infest the roads and commit offenses, for which reason the criminal act of Welsh received the utmost penalty of the law so as to deter others. This is the earliest record of an execution at Reading. The hill near the gallows was covered with men, women and children, who had assembled to witness the execution. Many of them came a distance, from fifteen to twenty miles. Among these there was an old woman who, it was then said, had walked nearly seventy miles to see the execution; but, having fallen asleep shortly before the execution transpired, she did not wake up till it was over, when she cried most bitterly.1

COX AND SCHILDT EXECUTIONS.—In 1809 Susanna Cox, a young woman under twenty years old, was found guilty of causing the death of her illegitimate child on the Gehr farm, near the “Oley Line Tavern,” and hanged for the offense. The execution created a profound sensation throughout the county. A lengthy and graphic account of the proceedings connected with her trial and execution was later published in the Reading Daily Eagle (January 24, 1886). The newspapers at Reading, in 1809, contained little relating to the affair.

In 1813 John Schiltz was executed for killing, in a brutal manner, his father and mother, in Alsace township. This was the most shocking murder that ever occurred in this county.

In 1842 Nicolaus Reinhardt was hanged for murdering Conrad Christ in Bern township.

EARLY EXHIBITIONS.—Exhibitions were held at Reading at an early day. Reference to some will be made to show their character.

In January, 1799, a man named Salanca gave a “curious exhibition” in Barr’s ballroom, consisting of legerdemain performances by himself, tricks by a learned dog and a display of fire-works. Tickets for adults, fifty cents; for children, twenty-five cents.

In June, 1808, an elephant eight years old and seven feet high, was exhibited at the public-house of Daniel Feger; advertised as the only elephant then in the country. Admission, twenty-five cents.

On August 1, 1815, a whale was exhibited at the public-house of William Jones, weight, five thousand pounds. Admission, twelve and one-half cents; children, half price. This whale was caught in the Delaware, at Trenton, on November 11, 1814.

In November, 1831, Purdy, Carley & Bailey exhibited a menagerie of thirty living wild animals, including a lion and lioness, Arabian camels (male and female), llamas (male and female), hyena, kangaroo, tiger, leopard and panther.

In December, 1838, William Paulin, accompanied by a lady, ascended from Reading in a balloon named “Comet,” and in the following year he made two successful ascensions. Joshua Pusey (a pupil of Paulin’s) made an ascension September 14, 1850, landing at Philadelphia in three hours, and on October 5th following he made another, landing near Allentown in one hour and ten minutes.

Circuses gave numerous exhibitions and they were well patronized, and traveling dramatic troupes visited Reading, remaining a week at a time.

PROLIFIC MEN.

There were a number of prominent men at Reading during its history as a borough in the various avenues of business and professional life. A number of sketches appear in the chapters entitled militia, newspapers, politics, judiciary and medical, in which many of them came to serve with distinction.

JOHN KEIM.—Among the men who occupied a very prominent position in the business and social affairs of Reading, during this period for thirty years, by reason of his success as a merchant and of his large accumulation of property, was John Keim. He was the only son of Nicholas Keim, a merchant of Reading. He was born in Oley township July 6, 1749, and when six years old accompanied his father to Reading. He was married to Susanna, a daughter of Dr. George de Benneville, on October 15, 1771. In the fall of 1777 he marched with Lieutenant-Colonel Nicholas Lotz’s battalion to reinforce the army under General Washington, and, after serving five years, was honorably discharged in 1782.

Upon his return from the Revolutionary War he entered into business relations with his father in conducting a general hardware-store, and, several years afterward, became sole proprietor. About the year 1800 he formed a partnership with his two sons, Daniel and

1 Autobiography of Charles Biddle, pp. 192-194. On p. 202 a case is mentioned of a young single woman who murdered her child. The evidence at the trial at Reading showed that she had thrown the child into the Schuylkill, but she was acquitted because the constable, in breaking open her trunk, had found a quantity of clothing for an infant.
George, and they together conducted the business under the firm-name of John Keim & Sons for a number of years.

He served one term as a county commissioner, from 1787 to 1790, and filled the office of burgess of Reading for a time. He took an active part in the development of Reading through internal improvements and the erection of dwelling-houses. He was prominently identified with the first steps towards erecting the Penn Street Bridge. He built the first three-story brick building in Reading. In 1806 he leased the three-story brick building on South Fifth Street to Charles Evans, Esq., which afterwards became the property of Mr. Evans and was his residence for many years.

By his great success in business affairs and building operations, he came to be one of the most wealthy men of the county in his time. He died February 10, 1819, and left issue four children,—Daniel de B., George de B., Benneville and Esther de B. The following highly complimentary obituary notice was published in the Berks and Schuylkill Journal:

"Will be interred in the Episcopal burial-ground, this afternoon at two o'clock, the remains of Mr. John Keim, merchant, who departed this life on Wednesday morning last, in the seventieth year of his age. He had resided in this borough for sixty-four years, during which time he amassed a large fortune, which never caused a widow's tear or orphan's execration. . . .

"What he has left behind him was justly his own. As a creditor he was ever lenient, and his numerous tenantry can testify to his goodness as a landlord."

John McKnight was the most prominent banker at Reading during this period, having been the first cashier of a bank established at Reading, and continued active in this business till the borough was incorporated into a city, and for several years afterward. He was a native of East Nantmeal township, in Chester County, where he was born May 31, 1774. His father, Paul McKnight, came to this country in 1752, from the northern part of Ireland, and settled in Chester County. At the age of twenty-three years he entered the service of the Pennsylvania Bank, at Philadelphia, and continued there for ten years, till 1808. During the latter part of his service he acted as assistant cashier. Then a branch bank was established at Reading and he was sent here to officiate as cashier. He held this responsible position till his death, on March 9, 1856, a period covering forty-seven years. During this time he enjoyed in the highest degree the respect and confidence of the community. As a business man and financier he was scrupulously exact, impartial and honorable. He occupied the bank building (Union Bank) as his residence. He was one of the leaders in establishing the Presbyterian Church at Reading, and in the progress of this congregation he manifested an earnest interest. The span of his life at Reading comprehended the first extensive improvements here, and to these he gave active encouragement.

Benneville Keim was also very prominent in banking and manufactures, and in the improvements and municipal government of Reading; and though he died many years after 1847 (having reached the age of eighty-two years), he is intimately connected with its history as a borough. He was a son of John Keim, merchant, and was born at Reading November 30, 1790, where he died October 30, 1872. He filled in his native place during a long business life many responsible positions.
He was president of the Farmers’ Bank and of the Reading Water Company for a number of years; and he was a member of the firm of Keims, Whitaker & Co., which, in 1836, began the first extensive iron-works at Reading. In 1858 he was elected mayor of Reading, and he continued in office for three consecutive terms. Upon the establishment of the Charles Evans Cemetery he was elected by its generous founder as one of the board of trustees, and continued in the board till his decease.

James May.—On account of his connection with the early internal improvements of this section of country, James May occupied also a prominent position in the community. He was the son of Robert and Elizabeth May. He was born March 20, 1749, in Coventry township, Chester County, and died at Reading in 1819. He was married to Bridget Douglass, daughter of George Douglass, of Amity township, and had issue,—Mary, intermarried with Geo. de B. Keim; George; Sarah, intermarried with Hon. Samuel D. Franks; Thomas; and Elizabeth.

He removed to Reading before the Revolutionary War and remained here till his decease. He identified himself prominently with the several early internal improvements of this county, the Union Canal, Centre turnpike, etc. He was a director of the Branch Bank and a member of the first Board of Trade at Reading. He was one of the two wardens of the Episcopal Church, the other having been Marks John Biddle, Esq. His business was general merchandise, having dealt extensively in grain, lumber, etc.

William Henry, a prominent and successful master-builder during this period, was born at Reading in 1801. Many of the finest public buildings and private dwellings which were erected between 1830 and 1860 were planned by him and bear testimony to his skill as a carpenter and to his taste as an architect. The graceful spire of the Trinity Lutheran Church, generally recognized as one of the most perfect specimens of architecture of its kind in the State, is one of the ornaments of Reading, which has transmitted his name to the present generation. Strictly speaking, this spire was designed and constructed under the supervision of his father, Conrad Henry, but he gave valuable assistance in the work in respect to its durability and symmetry. He died on January 8, 1865, aged sixty-three years, and left six surviving children,—Mrs. H. R. Hawman, Mrs. Joseph Wilson, Albert C., John B., William A. and Joseph E.

Besides Mr. Henry, there were also as prominent builders, Joseph Henry (brother of William, who together built the present courthouse), Jacques V. Craig, George Foos, Frederick Printz, John Printz, Nathan Eisenhower, George Call, Jacob Fritz, Nicholas Lott, James Quinter, Samuel Yarger and Solomon Spohn. And the following men can also be mentioned in this connection, on account of having erected many dwelling-houses in Reading: Philip Zieber, Daniel H. Boas, Christopher Shearer and Benjamin Fink.

PART III.

CITY FROM 1847 TO 1886.

Review of Reading in 1847.—Reading was incorporated by the Legislature of Pennsylvania into a city on the 16th day of March, 1847. It was then in a flourishing state in every department of life, and well prepared to enter a new, larger and more responsible period of existence. This state was superinduced by diversified industry and manufactures. Naturally, this feature of the place stood out above every other with great prominence. Shops and factories and stores were numerous. These gave it activity and thrift, and attracted increasing trade and wealth. The population numbered about twelve thousand. The tendency of local development in these particulars was to the south of Penn Street and to the west of Ninth. Necessarily the erection of churches followed this development. At that time there were thirteen churches: seven north of Penn,—Friends, Lutheran, Reformed, Episcopal, Presbyterian (colored), African Methodist Episcopal (colored) and Evangelical (Salem’s); and six

1 Prepared by the author of this history and published in Reading Times, January 10, 1886.
south of Penn,—Catholic, Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Universalist and Lutheran.

The railroad deserves especial mention for its great and valuable influences in all the local affairs of the community. A decade had not fully elapsed since its introduction, yet it had demonstrated to a remarkable degree its power in accelerating the growth of everything. As a stimulating agent it was inestimable, not simply for its direct action upon manufactures and traffic, but also for its indirect action upon the people and their various business enterprises. Lands and buildings increased in value. Intercommunication was as much facilitated thereby on the one hand as it was encouraged on the other. It brought villages and towns to the north and to the southeast nearer to Reading, not in respect to distance but to time; and this was certainly a wonderful accomplishment in the onward march of our development. And what a teacher it was in quickening the intellect! Who can comprehend its power in this direction? It would seem to have been the forerunner of increased general education—to have prepared the way for the grand system which was then gradually working its way into the affections of the people. This railroad extended in a southeasterly direction to Philadelphia, and in a northerly direction to Pottsville. Another railroad had been projected, to extend westwardly from Reading through Lebanon Valley to Harrisburg, but it was not as yet begun. The canals and stages must be mentioned in this connection, for they, too, occupied still a prominent position. The former consisted of two lines, the "Schuylkill" and "Union," and the latter of three lines,—to the northeast to Easton, to the west to Harrisburg, and to the southwest to Lancaster.

A prominent social movement was also then perceptible. This was the secret society. Though not practically in its infancy, it had, nevertheless, not begun to make a marked impression till towards the close of the second period of Reading. The Independent Order of Odd-Fellows was particularly active. The beginning of the third period was its dawn. As a beneficial organization it extended its branches in various directions with remarkable activity. People of all trades, all classes and all denominations fairly ran to it, for the friendship that it engendered, and especially for the charity that it dispensed amongst its members in sickness and distress.

The Building and Saving Association had not yet arrived as a great financial institution in this growing community. The idea of saving money in small sums by numerous members of a common society, and erecting dwellings from the total accumulations by and for the working people was simply formulating. It was a public conception which was extending itself favorably amongst the laborers and middle classes and obtaining a permanent hold upon them. It was a grand project for providing homes through economy in the daily affairs of life, just as the "Secret Benevolent Society" was also a similar project for providing relief to its members and their families. Both were akin.

The fire company was in an active, if not in a flourishing, state. Four volunteer organizations were being conducted successfully (Rainbow, Junior, Reading and Neversink), partly through pecuniary assistance from the municipal government, but mainly from the spontaneous efforts of their members. It was a useful body, but its usefulness was sacrificed to a considerable degree, in the estimation of many propertyholders by the boisterous, if not the riotous, conduct of some of its members about that time. It had not yet come to possess friendly unity in a common cause, and especially to realize its possible importance as a political factor. It was still without a head. Each organization acted for itself. And all the organizations responded to alarms from impulse towards accomplishing the object of their existence, in which they respectively always displayed an earnest and commendable pride in reaching the fire first. This performance provided them with amusement in a certain sense, but they obtained it at the expense of labor and risk of life, if not suffering. They still pulled their apparatus by hand, and after somewhat, if not entirely, exhausting themselves in this manner on their way to the fire, they were there compelled to further exert their physical powers towards extinguishing the flames. When we consider that these four companies were composed of men generally in ordinary circumstances, with a limited common education, and continued their organizations successfully year after year, in spite of gratuitous labor and of monthly dues, we cannot help but feel a high respect for their disinterested, persistent devotion in behalf of the common welfare, and especially so upon comparing them with literary societies, which were then in a feeble existence and struggling unsuccessfully to continue for a little while longer, though composed of professional gentlemen who are presumed to have possessed a high order of intellect and to have been in good circumstances.

The system of common-school education was actively conducted in the two school wards of the city. There were seventeen schools, thirty-one teachers and two thousand and sixty-four scholars. The system of 1834 had been accepted by the citizens of the borough immediately after its enactment, and shortly afterward four brick school buildings erected. The following ten districts in the county besides Reading had also accepted the system previous to 1847: Caernarvon, Colebrookdale, Hamburg, Hereford, Kutztown, Marion, Robeson, Ruscomb-manor, Union and Womelsdorf. Its progress was perceptible, but public energy was necessary to maintain its increasing hold upon the citizens. In the beginning it had encountered a strong opposition, so strong, indeed, as to have been a prominent factor in politics. This was especially the case in the country districts. About this time the power of the County Court was directed, upon petition, towards the enforcement of the system in certain districts in which directors had been elected, but who failed to perform their duties. Such a spirited agitation of the subject naturally increased the general movement in its behalf.

The newspaper was in a flourishing condition at that time. When the borough began, in 1783, there was no publication of any kind at Reading. Shortly afterward, however, the newspaper was instituted, and, before 1800, it was being conducted with energy in both languages—English and German. Each decade thereafter saw the beginning and ending of different enterprises of this kind. They all were more or less important for a time, and moulded public opinion, especially of a political nature, to a large degree. Advertising was a conspicuous feature. When the city began there were five strong and well-conducted newspapers, viz.: Readinger Adler, Berks and Schuylkill Journal, Berks County Press, Liberale Beobachter and Reading Gazette and Democrat.

The political sentiment of the inhabitants was favorable to the Whigs in relation to the local government, but to the Democrats in relation to State and national government.

The markets were being conducted successfully in Penn Square. The "market-people" came to Reading regularly twice a week—Wednesdays and Saturdays—with their produce and sold it during the early hours of the morning. They stood in the market-houses and round-about them through all the seasons of the year, without regard to the condition of the weather. Convenience to them and to the purchaser was not as yet a subject of consideration. The Town Council proposed no improvement beyond the public advantages first afforded four-score years before; and they still levied and collected rents; and about that time they even rebuilt the market-houses, apparently indicating thereby that the "old style" should prevail for a score of years more, notwithstanding the wonderful development of the place in respect to internal affairs and population, and the increase of its influence as a centre of trade and wealth.

The semi-annual "Fairs" were still kept up; but they were without profit or advantage of any kind. They were useless; indeed, injurious to public morals. Hence, they were not only discouraged, but denounced by the press and by the people generally. Under such pressure their influence was weakened naturally. Amongst the customs of the inhabitants its hold was almost entirely gone. Dancing, drinking and fighting were conspicuous features, these having been indulged in by the lower classes of the people. Military affairs, however, maintained their activity. "Exercise" was carried on annually in May; and it was known as "battalion day."

very domestic in their daily life. Gardening was commonly carried on either in the lots upon which the dwellings stood, or in out-lots. Fruit-trees were numerous in every quarter. Plums, peaches, cherries and apples were plentiful. The first three were "preserved," not canned, as now. And nearly every family boiled apple-hutter in an open fire-place in the fall of the year. And "butchering" was observed by all. Home-made sausage, puddings, scrapple, hams and mince were common in every household. About Christmas all the cellars of housekeepers were well stocked. Wood was still mostly used for fuel, and sawing upon the highway was a common occupation. It was commonly called "cord-wood," because it was delivered by the cord on a wagon with ladders. It consisted of pieces of hickory, oak and chestnut (mostly the first), cut four feet in length. These pieces were sawed into two or more parts and then split and piled away ready for use. The "ten-plate" stove was almost wholly used for cooking and heating purposes. Coal had been known to the community for nearly forty years, but it had not yet come to be generally utilized, especially for domestic purposes. Its consumption was principally in public places, and shops, factories, etc.

The light was produced from fluid, oil and tallow, even common fat, the first two having been used almost wholly in stores, and the last two in dwellings, especially of the poorer classes of inhabitants. Gas was not yet introduced. The streets were not lighted up in the evening; and those people whose business or pleasure called them away from their homes during the night, had to go—if not grope—in darkness. Lanterns were frequently carried to shed light upon the roadway. And then this was no easy matter, for pavements were comparatively few and irregular, and did not facilitate the way of pedestrians. There were no "street-crossings" at the intersections of streets. The customs of the residents had not yet come to convert night into day for amusements of various kinds; indeed, their morals would not have tolerated such a practice, especially on the part of the young people. Dramatic entertainments were just starting out in earnest, and the demands for an improved light were gradually growing larger. The town was not large—the principal portion lying between Walnut Street on the north and Chestnut on the south, Ninth Street on the east and Third on the west. Business of all kinds was almost entirely done during the day-time, and merchants derived their chief support from the farmers. The streets were, therefore, quiet after sunset. Two constables were watchmen of the night, and for several hours before and after midnight called out the hour and the condition of the weather in a monotonous, low tone of voice.

The pump was still an institution throughout the city, notwithstanding the general supply of superior water afforded by the "Reading Water Company." It was convenient in every block, if not on or near every street-corner. At least one hundred were in daily use. Penn Street was especially well supplied. Ice had come to be furnished in small quantities for about ten years, but not for drinking purposes. Cool water, freshly pumped from the wells, was satisfactory to all.

INCORPORATION.—The borough of Reading was incorporated into a city by an act of Assembly passed on March 16, 1847. ¹ This act, besides investing the corporation with certain powers and privileges common to all municipalities, preserved the division of the territory into five wards,—Northeast, Northwest, Southeast, Southwest and Spruce. It provided for the election of Select and Common Councilmen by the people, the former for three years and the latter for one year; and for the annual appointment of a solicitor, street regulator, street commissioners, market commissioner, high constable, scavenger, and president and clerks of Councils by the Councils; and for the annual election of mayor, treasurer and three auditors by the people. It divided the city into two districts for aldermen—Penn Street having been the dividing line; and each district became entitled to two aldermen, with similar term of office and powers of justice of the peace. The day of election was fixed on the third Friday of March.

A second charter was provided for the city by an act passed on the 13th of March, 1861. In it, among other things, the names of the wards were changed, as follows: Spruce to First Ward; Southwest to Second; Southeast to Third; Northeast to Fourth; Northwest to Fifth; and the terms of office of the mayor and treasurer were increased to two years, and city auditors to three years.

A third charter was provided by an act passed on the 26th of April, 1864. The city was then divided into nine wards, numbered respectively, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. The day of election was changed to the second Friday in February. And the term of Common Councilmen was increased to two years, one-half of the number to be elected alternately every two years.

And in 1874 the act of May 23, 1874, was accepted by the people as a fourth charter for the city. It introduced additional changes. Each ward became entitled to one alderman. It substituted a "city controller," with a term of office for two years, in the place of the three auditors. It increased the terms of office of engineer and solicitor to two years. And all the Common Councilmen were to be elected every two years. This charter is now the general law for the administration of the several affairs of the city.

DEVELOPMENT.—From the time of the incorporation of Reading into a city till now the general development of the place from decade to decade has been remarkable. Its history began whilst the Mexican War was being carried on, and in which there was a company of volunteers from Reading, called the "Reading Artillrists." During the decade from 1847 to 1857 business affairs grew more active, and continued to do so till towards the close, when a panic ensued. Gas was introduced for lighting purposes; and the first large hall was provided for the accommodation of the public in respect to entertainments, dramatic performances, etc. The "Charles Evans Cemetery" was founded and other cemeteries were established to which the dead were then removed from the grave-yards in the central portion of the city, and in which burials were from that time made. Numerous buildings were erected, both dwellings and industrial establishments, the latter including prominent enterprises which have been continued in operation almost constantly till now, affording employment to hundreds of men and yielding to the community thousands of dollars which have been invested here in improvements of a substantial character. Two railroads were constructed,—the East Penn to the northeast, and the Lebanon Valley to the west,—and these stimulated the energy of the people. The militia system was still prominent, and battalion days were devoted to general military exercise; but the "fair-days" at the market-houses passed away without regret from any one, and the Agricultural Society substituted a county fair for an improved annual exhibition of goods, live-stock, etc. About 1850 many citizens became excited upon the subject of migrating to California, and several parties proceeded thither, under the hopes of realizing great profits from adventure and speculation in the golden State across the continent; but their doleful letters and early return dispelled the charm which had been thrown over the community and the excitement subsided. And political questions also agitated the people. One question, that of slavery, was brought prominently to their notice, and caused the Presidential campaign of 1856 to be particularly enthusiastic.

In the next decade, from 1857 to 1867, the Civil War was the most prominent subject which engaged the attention of the people, and it is treated at length in this history. The streets were regulated by a topographical survey, which was successfully carried on for several years, and which, by the establishment of lines and grades, encouraged building operations, especially in the northern section of the city; and the houses were numbered by an admirable

4 The "Topographical Survey" of Reading was authorized by act of Assembly passed April 26, 1864, in pursuance of which the City Councils caused the lines and grades of the streets to be surveyed, fixed, etc., during the years 1864-5-6-7-8. Duplicate confirmed plans of the several sections (eight in number) are on file in the Quarter Sessions office of Berks County.
system along all the streets. The “water-works” became the property of the people; efforts were made to improve the city charter by two amendments; the wards were differently arranged and increased in number; and a “Firemen’s Union” was organized. The people were very active and energetic in every department of life and the general wealth of the community was increased millions of dollars. Weekly newspapers became more thoroughly circulated, and the daily newspaper was established. Postal facilities were increased, to the great convenience of the people. The fourth railroad from Reading was projected and successfully extended, affording direct communication with Lancaster and Columbia. Political excitement reached the highest point which the community was able to bear without resulting in a serious social disturbance.

During the third decade, from 1867 to 1877, general enterprise was active in the beginning and continued so for several years; but then it began to decline and finally showed marked effects from the panic which prevailed throughout the country. Fire elsewhere destroyed much property, resulting in enormous losses which amounted to many million of dollars; and it seemed that some evil genius possessed this community also, by the numerous acts of incendiarism in the most populous parts of the city. Fortunately for us, the volunteer fire companies were not only prompt but vigilant. They were interested in the preservation of property and therefore were moved by the noblest impulses to prevent losses from fire. Then the “Electric Fire Alarm” was introduced, which soon demonstrated its incalculable value to the community; and the water supply was largely increased by the appropriation of the water of Antietam Creek, and the construction of a lake to be used as a storage reservoir, with a capacity of many million gallons. The “Centennial” was a prominent subject for several years, especially during the year 1876 for six months, from the 10th of May to the 10th of November, when our people patronized the “Great International Exhibition” at Philadelphia very extensively, having traveled repeatedly to and fro in regular and excursion trains. The railroads were busy, and their activity led others to be extended from Reading: the Wilmington and Northern, and the Berks County. Street railways were also introduced and operated through the length and breadth of the city. The old market-houses became objectionable, and upon the erection of fine, commodious and pleasant buildings in the several sections of the city by private enterprise for market purposes, they were removed. New and modern halls were provided, not only to encourage but to gratify the public desire for amusement. Foundries and factories were extended in different branches of industry, showing the increasing enterprise and wealth of manufacturers, and the employment of a larger number of mechanics and workingmen. Merchants and business men generally began to appreciate more the value and also the necessity of advertising in various ways, especially in the newspapers; and just as they here endeavored to attract the attention of the people of Reading and the districts throughout the county, so did the merchants at Philadelphia endeavor, through the newspapers, to draw trade away from the growing stores here to the business places there. Competition became an active feature of business life and a state of carrying on trade was produced far in advance of previous decades. The city was extended northwardly in 1871, and the total area increased to three thousand two hundred acres. And a new charter for the city was obtained, by acceptance of the general act of Assembly passed May 23, 1874, for the government of cities of the third class. In the previous decade the militia system was obliterated by the Civil War; and though a new system was then provided, it did not exhibit any strength during this decade in our community. The feeling and the general situation of the people in this respect are altogether different. We have had no "battalion days," no military exercises. In the beginning of the decade before 1867 there were over fifty companies of militia which exercised frequently every year in the several sections of the county; but in this decade (before 1877) we had only two companies, one at Reading and the other at Hamburg, whose exercises were scarcely noticed. The building and savings associations had a flourishing existence and assisted greatly in improving the city with numerous dwelling-houses for the working people. The political feeling of the people throughout the country changed very much, and the process of change necessarily developed a high degree of excitement. The year 1876 was particularly distinguished in this respect. Improved postal facilities were given to the people, and the business of the post office was largely increased.

1 On May 30, 1863, eight petitions from citizens of Reading were presented to Councils, praying them “to pass an ordinance providing for the numbering of the buildings in this city.” A special committee was appointed, which reported June 29, 1863,—“that the public wants demanded that it should be immediately acted upon by the Councils.” Accordingly, an ordinance was passed and approved August 81, 1863. This provided for the allowance of one hundred numbers for each square, on each street running east from Front Street, north from Penn and south from Penn. The system was first advocated in 1854. Previously a system had been in vogue on Penn Street for business convenience, the numbers running east and west from Fifth Street.

And the fourth, or last decade, from 1877 till now, has not fallen behind the previous decades. It started out with a serious trouble, the regulation of which was beyond our wisdom. We could not rectify it; it broke upon us like an explosion; and then, through fear, it subsided. This was the labor question. Several years before 1877, the subject was agitated earnestly and it led to the formation of different societies, the most prominent of which was the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. Demands for higher wages were made; these were not complied with and a strike followed. This strike was general in this State and in other States; and it was persisted in until it terminated in a great riot at Reading, which is described elsewhere in this chapter. Councils increased the water supply to answer the growing demands of our rapidly-increasing community; and they made efforts in the direction of improved highways. An earnest and a successful beginning for a City Park was instituted in 1878 by private individuals, but the decade is passing away and the park is still to be established.

Numerous other things within the past forty years have transpired which are worthy of mention, but they cannot be detailed without increasing the size of this history far beyond my intentions. It would be a difficult matter for me to determine just what to include and what to exclude, what to present in an extended manner and what to give only a passing notice. For this reason I have only taken a general survey of this period. The industries, internal improvements, churches, schools, associations, officials and census of Reading are treated in separate parts of this chapter. All the parts, taken together, give the county-seat a prominent place in the history of this county. The reader will, therefore, understand that I was compelled to confine myself more to the history of past events which are not within the knowledge of most of the people living, than to the history of matters and things which are within the re-collection of the present generation.

The last score of years of this century—a century already glorious with prodigious results, especially in our own vicinity—has advanced only several years beyond 1880. Looking backward through two scores of years in our municipal life, and realizing what education and steam have done for our industrious and law-abiding Christian community since 1840, or the close of the second score in this century, when these two great forces just began to impress themselves forcibly upon our people; and then looking forward through the remaining years of the present score to the year 1900, with the advantages of our vigorous population, education, wealth, manufactures, various internal improvements and political freedom, what c1
we not hope to accomplish in the next fifteen years, in respect to population, wealth and influence, with these same forces, the one to direct and the other to propel us in the progress of civilization? We have here a grand centre possessed of inconceivable natural advantages which arise from the conjunction of fertile valleys and flowing streams. The prospects before us for developments on the one hand and accomplishments on the other are most pleasing to contemplate. But to insure our future progress and make it proportionate with that of the past, we must fit ourselves to discriminate for things, not persons, and so direct our industrial, political and moral energy as to subserve the public welfare rather than individual aggrandizement.

Riot in Reading, July, 1877.¹—The great riot at Reading was such an extraordinary event in the history of our community that I give it a special notice.

On Saturday, July 21, 1877, great excitement prevailed at Reading, owing to the general strike of railroad train men in the following States: New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri. The central point of excitement was at Seventh and Penn Streets, where many men gathered to discuss the situation. At that time the excitement at Pittsburgh was intense, ending shortly thereafter in the great destruction of railroad property, which consisted of buildings, cars, etc., and in the loss of at least a score of lives. On the next day the situation was, naturally, worse, owing to the news from Pittsburgh, and more men crowded at the point named, but there was no disorderly demonstration of any kind during the day. By ten o'clock in the evening the crowd had moved to the passenger station, where the men greeted the last train from Philadelphia (10.30) with shouts and yells. Then the excitement became uncontrollable. The crowd moved westwardly upon the Lebanon Valley Railroad, and fire and destruction of property followed. It would be utterly impossible to describe briefly the terrible occurrences of that fatal Sunday night. Railroad tracks were torn up, and certain cabooses and freight cars were set on fire which resulted in a general alarm of fire, and response of the Fire Department, and during the terrible excitement in and about the “cut,” near Sixth Street, whither all attention had been directed, the costly and handsome railroad bridge, which spanned the river within a mile to the west, was set on fire and entirely destroyed. The bright flames, which flashed high into the darkness of the night, attracted thousands of people to the place. The burning bridge presented a sight as grand as it was awful. This condition of affairs was extremely alarming; no one knew what was next to happen, what was next to be destroyed. The news shocked the whole community. Crowds had gathered on Saturday, innocently, apparently, but unlawfully, without any earnest movement from the policemen to disperse them, and property had been destroyed on Sunday, the next day afterward. But what was to follow on the third day? On Monday the newspapers were almost wholly taken up with vivid descriptions of the excited condition of the community and of the destructive work of incendiaries. They were the centre of attraction. So important were they that they were never before in greater demand, and so interesting, indeed, that the news which they detailed caused shuddering hearts and moistening eyes. Everybody discussed the fire—everybody wondered what next! Throughout the day great excitement prevailed, and as the night approached it grew greater. The four corners of Seventh and Penn Streets were again crowded hour after hour, subject to a weak protest, but without any determined effort from municipal or county authorities to clear the highway. Who were rioters? Who were law-abiding citizens? All were disturbers of the peace. Trains were stopped there, coal cars were detached and many tons of coal were dumped upon the track for several hundred feet. Who did it? Men were blind. All was disorder. Hundreds, nay, thousands of people were concentrated at that point on both sides of Penn and Seventh Streets. And with this state of affairs, then wholly uncontrollable, the six o'clock passenger train approached the city around the bend of "Never-sink," and the shrill whistle of the engine never sounded in such a piercing manner. The engineer remained bravely at his post; the command was given to proceed forward at full speed, and forward indeed he directed his engine at the rate of forty-five miles an hour over the blockaded track. Who can imagine what might have been the result? Fortunately the train passed through safely, but the people scattered pell-mell for their lives, coals were thrown high into the air, and a dense cloud of black dust obscured everything round-about for a time. At the passenger station a great excitement took place immediately after the arrival of this train. The next down train was stopped in the cut, and this unlawful, daring proceeding drew the crowd from the depot and intensified the excitement at Seventh and Penn Streets. And in this state the people remained at that point, immovable. Proclamations by the sheriff of the county and earnest appeals by the policemen of the city did not make the slightest impression upon them. It seems that the vast multitude were in sympathy with the riotous demonstrations. And so matters remained for nearly two hours, apparently growing worse as the darkness of night fell upon the community. Then, however, a sudden change arose. And what agent was this that could, as it were, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, separate a maddened, threatening crowd, when sober, sensible appeals to citizens who had theretofore been a law-abiding people, were wholly unavailing? It was the bullet. This acted upon them as effectually as the lightning upon the restless, thickening clouds in a portentous sky.

About eight o'clock seven companies of the Fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, numbering about two hundred men, under the command of General Franklin Reeder, arrived at the station in the city, viz: —

Company B, Allen Rifles, Allentown; Company D, Allen Continentals, Allentown; Company E, Blue Mountain Legion, Hamburg; Company F, Easton Grays, Easton; Company H, Slatington Rifles, Slatington; Company I, Catasauqua; Company K, Portland, Northampton County.

After some consultation they were marched down the railroad and through the "cut" towards Penn Street to liberate the train there. On the way they were attacked by persons on the elevated pavements, who threw stones and bricks upon them. They did not fire in self-defense, but moved on bravely. Nearing Penn Street, the situation became so dangerous that some of the men, by some order or mistaken command, shot off their rifles. Bricks and stones were thrown with increased energy, and many shots followed. The crowd immediately scattered, and men were seen bearing away the wounded and killed. With the dispersing crowd the soldiers also became disordered, and the companies disorganized. Their conduct was disgraceful, and the whole community, and especially the management of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, lost confidence in them as a means of restoring order or preserving peace. A battery of United States Regular Artillery, equipped as infantry, then came here shortly afterward, under the command of General Hamilton, and remained till peace and order and safety were assured. The fidelity of G. A. Nicolls and George Eltz to their posts as officials of the railroad at this point, in the perilous situation of affairs then existing, was highly commendable.

VERDICT OF CORONER'S JURY.

"The undersigned members of an inquest upon the bodies of a number of citizens who were killed during a riot which took place on Monday night, the 23rd day of July, 1877, in the city of Reading, after having heard a large number of witnesses whose testimony is hereto appended, and after due inquiry and consideration of all the facts and circumstances attending the riotous demonstrations, report as follows:"

"1. The said persons came to their death by a firing of the military upon the rioters.

"2. That the soldiers composing a portion of the Fourth Regiment, Pennsylvania National Guard, numbering about two hundred men, while marching through the railroad cut along Seventh Street, were continually assailed with stones and brickbats from the time they entered the cut at Walnut Street bridge until they approached Penn Street, a distance of two squares, the assault becoming severer the further they moved, and being accompanied with pistol shots after having reached Washington Street bridge; that during said march many of the soldiers were badly wounded by the missiles, some of them being knocked down two or three times; notwithstanding an order from the commanding officer not to fire, a single shot from one of the military was a signal for others to fire, which soon became general. It would be expecting too much of human nature, especially on the part of untrained soldiers, to expect them not to fire under the fearful peril in which they were placed, and when once the firing commenced the volleys of stones and pistol shots continuing and especially directed against their ranks, the inquest cannot censure them for the manner in which they acted.

"4. That whilst the deaths were immediately owing to the firing of the soldiers who were at the proper place under proper authority where the disorder was raging, yet the responsibility for the terrible tragedy of Monday night is directly attributed to those who composed the lawless body assembled near the corner of Seventh and Penn Streets, who were instigating the riotous proceedings; whilst many were present, not as inciting to riot, but out of idle curiosity, they nevertheless by their presence gave aid and confidence to the mob spirit who initiated the disturbance; the latter are the persons primarily responsible for all subsequent trouble and bloodshed, and if detected and arrested should be held to the severest accountability.

"5. The absence of the Mayor from the city may be a sufficient excuse for the inactivity of the city authorities at the time.

"6. Whilst on the one hand the testimony clearly shows that Chief of Police Cullen was faithful in the discharge of his official duty, it is a matter of regret to the inquest that the testimony does not equally commend the Sheriff in the discharge of his duty. On the contrary, though telegraphed for early on Monday morning, 23d July, and having reached the city by special train provided by the railroad company at 5 o'clock A.M., he nevertheless made no attempt to provide for the preservation of the public peace, although earnestly appealed to and urged to organize a posse by a number of citizens during the day. It is well known that during the whole of Monday the city was under the power and in the control of the mob, whose progress was hourly gathering strength, and that before noon, Messrs. Wootten & Miller offered to furnish a sufficient number of men with arms and ammunition, to constitute a posse comitatus and suppress the riot if the Sheriff would give the authority for so doing. This offer was declined by the Sheriff, who significantly remarked that the mob also had arms. All that the Sheriff of Berks County did in this fearful emergency, after wasting the whole day in his office doing nothing, was to issue his proclamation after 5 o'clock in the evening, calling upon the citizens to remain at home.

"In conclusion thereof or in accordance with the evidence presented, the inquest believes that the Sheriff having neglected and refused to perform what was his obvious duty, is in a measure responsible for the events which followed.

"In witness whereof, as well as aforesaid Coroner, as the jurors aforesaid, have to this inquiry put their hands and seals, this 7th day of August, 1877, [Signed] William Bland, David Fox, William C. Kelchner, S. A. Stout, John H. Kelly, Reuben Hottenstein, George S. Goodhart, (Coroner)."

The jury also rendered special verdicts in each of the cases of the ten citizens killed during the riot, as follows:

"MILTON TRACE came to his death on South Seventh below Chestnut; died from the effects of a large bullet wound entering in near the angle of the month, left side, passing through horizontally, wounding large arteries, fracturing the second vertebra of the neck and then passing out on the same side of entrance; wound was received at the time the second volley was fired by the military.

"JAMES J. FISHER died near the corner of Penn and Seventh Streets, from hemorrhage of the femoral artery, caused by a bullet shot which entered on the inside of the left thigh, penetrating the artery and passing out on the opposite side, fracturing the bone. Shot was fired by one of the military.

"LUDWIG HOFFMAN was shot while standing a little above Esterly's store, on Penn Street, on the evening of the 23d ult., and from which he died early next morning; ball entered on the right side of the spine immediately above the crest of the ilium, passing through the ascending colon to the right and a little below the umbilicus, where it passed out.

"John H. Weaver came to his death by a wound produced by a rifle ball which entered the left side of the chest about the fifth rib, which it fractured and then passed downward, wounding probably the aorta, the hemorrhage causing death in a short time. Ball was shot by one of the soldiers.

"Lewis Alexander Eisenhower came to his death by a rifle shot wound while leaving the east sidewalk of the Ubil House, the bullet entering the outside, passing through horizontally the lower part of the upper third of the right thigh, taking with it a portion of the thigh bone and wounding the femoral artery, the hemorrhage from which caused his death in about two hours. We are satisfied that the shot came from the military.

"John A. Cassidy came to his death nearly in front of Shearer's shoe store by a rifle shot fired by the military on Penn Street and Seventh, shooting diagonally across and up Penn Street, the ball entering in the small of the back near the spine, on the right of the spine, making its exit near the lower part of the breast bone, right side, from which wound he died in about twenty minutes.

"John Alvin Wunder came to his death from wounds received from the military near the corner of Penn and Seventh Streets, and from which he died in about two hours after the receipt of the wounds. The wound was that of a rifle ball or slin shot which passed the hip and abdomen; that above named was at Seventh and Penn simply as an innocent spectator.

"Daniel Nachtrieb came to his death at the corner of Penn and Seventh Streets; that a bullet-shot entered immediately over the right eye, passing through the brain and making its exit behind the right ear, on about a level with it, causing his death in a short time, and that said shot was fired by one of the military, who were on Seventh Street, about twenty or twenty-five yards above Penn Street.

"Elias Shafer came to his death on the evening of the 23d ult., on Penn Street, near Seventh Street, and died of hemorrhage, from a wound of a rifle-ball, which entered on the left side of the chest, near the nipple, passed in a direct horizontal line backward, penetrating the lower part of the lung, and emerged at the left side of the spinal column, which was shattered. We believe that the shot came from the military.

"Howard Cramp was picked up on Penn Street, a little above Esterly's store, about half-past eight o'clock, and carried into the drug-store, where he died. The boy was no rioter, but a peaceable and quiet boy, and was there simply as a spectator. Ball entered immediately above the hip, on the left side, and passed out on a level on the right side.

The following citizens were wounded:

The following soldiers were wounded:

G. P. Roth, Company B; C. G. Weber, Company B; Josiah Hillegass, Company B; Lewis Heckman, Company E; O. C. Bunting, Company F; Frederick Snyder, Company F; Charles Leidy, Company F; George McDowell, Company H; B. F. Hunt, Company H; Albert Kildare, Company I; H. M. La Bar, Company K; William F. Allen, Company K.

TRIAL OF RIOTERS.—Many men were arrested and indicted for alleged implication in the riot. Samuel Humphreys and Edward Smith were indicted with five others (including Hiram Nachtrieb) for maliciously setting fire to Lebanon Valley Railroad bridge, but they pleaded guilty and were sentenced to imprisonment for five years. Of the five other defendants, Hiram Nachtrieb was the only one tried, and after a determined trial on the part of the commonwealth, with the assistance of F. B. Gowen, Esq., president of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, from October 2 to October 6, 1877, he was acquitted. A second case, against fourteen men, was tried the following week and all were acquitted excepting one, who was convicted of inciting to riot. A third case was called on October 22d, in which forty-one persons were indicted, but it was not tried. The trials were attended by many people, especially the first trial.

PART IV.

MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES.

The close proximity of Reading to the vast coal fields of the State of Pennsylvania, the superior local resources and its location being near the great marts of trade and commerce of the seaboard States induced enterprising business men to here establish large manufacturing works. They have been the main cause of the rapid growth and substantial prosperity of the city, and have given Reading a name and a fame which extends throughout our entire country, and into many other countries of the civilized world. Small manufactories were first started, which were attended by success, and then gradually developed into the present extensive ones, which have given employment to many people, and have contributed very much to the material interests of the city.

A description and a history of the various manufacturing industries of the city are presented in the following pages.

Before 1849 large manufacturing establishments were very few in Reading; in fact, only one extensive firm is worthy of special mention, Keims, Whitaker & Co., afterward Seyfert, McManus & Co., instituted in 1835. There were numerous works, some carried on by individuals and others by firms consisting of two and three persons, such as furnaces, machine-shops, foundries, saw-mills, planing-mills, coach-factories, wheelwright-shops, cabinet-shops, etc. The decade from 1840 to 1850 was particularly prosperous in respect to various enterprises. As a consequence, the population of Reading increased eighty-seven per cent.
during that period, and dwellings multiplied rapidly to satisfy the great demand for them.
The growth in these two respects was almost entirely to the south of Penn Street, which district surrounded the industries.

The first considerable enterprises under the act of 1849 were the "cotton-mill" and "woolen-mill." But they had not been carried on long before they ran into insolvency. The spirit of a corporation was apparently not adapted to industries of this character. Upon falling into private management they were operated successfully.

Jones, Darling & Co., in 1837, erected a foundry in the western portion of the borough of Reading, and began the manufacture of all kinds of iron and brass castings for rolling-mills, factories, engines, threshing-machines, corn-shellers, forge-hammers and anvils, car-wheels, platforms and turnouts for railroads, pipes and pumps, etc. Brass castings were made here, however, at least twenty years before, a foundry having been carried on by Henry Fellows and Isaac Myers.

About the same time Dotterer, Darling & Co. established a large machine-shop near by,
for the manufacture of locomotives and stationary engines, mill-gearing and machinery. They manufactured the first locomotive engine at Reading. It was made to order for the Charleston (South Carolina) Railroad, and tried on April 27, 1838, with success. Soon after, they finished another for the same road.
The manufacture of iron tubes was begun at Reading by Thomas S. Darling. He converted the old machine-works in which he had been interested into a tube-works with a daily capacity of twenty-five hundred feet.

In December, 1851, a forge company was instituted, under the name of the Reading Steam Forge Company, for the manufacture of iron, with a capital stock of seventy thousand dol-ars, in fourteen hundred shares. In January, 1853, the stock was increased to two thousand shares, and in February, 1854, to two thousand five hundred shares. The first subscribers numbered fifty-two, and the largest in Reading were Farmers' Bank, 100 shares; Lewis Kirk, 100 shares; H. A. Muhlenberg, 110 shares; Andrew Taylor, 100 shares; Adam Johnston, 80 shares; M. S. Richards, 80 shares.

This forge was built in 1852, adjoining Jackson's ropewalk, and operated some years by the company.

The Reading Iron-Works were established in May, 1836, by the firm of Keims, Whittaker & Co., and then named the Reading Iron and Nail-Works. About one hundred thousand dollars were invested in the business.
The firm was composed of Benneville Keim,
George M. Keim, James Whittaker and Simon Seyfert. A large rolling-mill, a slitting-mill and a nail-factory were erected. These works were planned on a very extensive scale and gave a new impetus to the industrial life of Reading. At these works the first large stationary steam-engine for driving machinery was introduced into this county. Two hundred and fifty men were employed. Bar-iron was made in very large quantities, and cut-nails of many kinds and varieties, by twenty-six nail-machines. In April, 1839, George M. Keim retired from the firm, and in July, 1844, Benneville Keim and James Whittaker retired.

From July, 1844, to July, 1846, the works were owned exclusively by Simon Seyfert and John McManus, (the latter of whom had some years prior to the first date become a part owner,) each owning a half-interest, under the firm-name of Seyfert & McManus. In July, 1846, Jacob V. R. Hunter and Nicholas V. R. Hunter were taken in as partners. Each of the four individuals then composing the firm owned a fourth interest, and the name was changed to Seyfert, McManus & Co. In 1848 the tube-mill was built, the capacity of manufacture greatly increased and more workmen employed. In 1852, after the death of Simon Seyfert, his interest was disposed of to his son, William M. Seyfert, and James McCarty. The name remained unchanged, and the individuals composing the firm then were John McManus, Jacob V. R. Hunter and Nicholas V. R. Hunter. In 1853 Horatio Trexler purchased one-fifth interest in the works. Anthracite Furnace, No. 1, was built in 1853–54. Its height was fifty-six feet, and it was fifty feet square at the base and forty feet square at the top. During the first week it was in blast one hundred and seventy tons of iron were made; its entire capacity was two hundred and fifty tons per week. In December, 1861, the interest of Nicholas V. R. Hunter was closed out by purchase.

In 1862 a charter of incorporation was obtained and approved on April 17th, under the present name, Seyfert, McManus & Co., the Reading Iron-Works. The names of the incorporators are John McManus, Horatio Trexler, William M. Seyfert, James McCarty, Charles H. Hunter, M.D. (son of Jacob,) I. N. Hunter, H. A. Hunter, Mary A. Hunter, Lucy J. Seyfert, Emma E. Hunter and James F. Hunter.

In January, 1862, the Scott Foundry, on North Eighth Street, was purchased by this company, at which large cotton-presses, castings for sugar-mills and other large castings have been extensively made. During the Civil War cannons from nine-inch to fifteen-inch calibre were made for the United States government.

In February, 1862, the Reading Steam Forge, situated on North Eighth Street, was purchased, and the manufacture of heavy forge-iron was begun. No forge in America has exceeded this one in the production of immense bars of iron. Some years ago a solid shaft of iron, thirty-six feet long and three feet in diameter, was made here for a large ocean steamer.

In September, 1863, the sheet-mill was bought of Lauth, Berg & Co. It is situated at the foot of Chestnut Street. Huge sheets of iron and large plates are made at this mill. In 1874 Blast Furnace No. 2 was built. Its capacity is two hundred and fifty tons per week.

The Reading Iron-Works, employs, in all its departments, about two thousand and twenty-five men regularly. When running in full capacity, three thousand men have been employed. At the present time (1886) about one thousand men are employed in the tube-works, two hundred and fifty in rolling-mill, two hundred and fifty men in the sheet-mill, two hundred and twenty men in the two blast furnaces, one hundred and seventy-five men in Scott Foundry, and one hundred and fifty men in the steam-forge. From eight hundred thousand to one million dollars are paid annually to the employees. The company that own and operate the Reading Iron-Works own one-half interest in the Gibraltar Plate-Mill and lands belonging thereto, and also own the tube-works at Camden, N. J.

Simon Seyfert was of German descent, his grandfather having emigrated from the province of Alsace. His father, Joseph Seyfert, was born in 1752, near Shartlesville, Berks County. He was married to Catherine Allweine, of the same township. Joseph Seyfert combined farming with the business of a miller and continued in the active management of his varied interests until his death, in 1821, in his sixty-ninth year. Simon Seyfert, one of his seven sons, was born June 2, 1786, on the homestead. After obtaining a rudimentary education he began business as a clerk in the grocery and dry-goods store of John F. Eichorn, in Reading, and remained several years in his employ. Being ambitious for a more extended field than had thus far opened to him, he then purchased property at the northeast corner of Seventh and Penn Sts., Reading, and erected a store, where he engaged in the grocery and dry-goods business. Here he remained until 1826, when, in connection with John Schwartz, he purchased the Gibraltar Forges and embarked in the manufacture of iron. In 1828 he and his partner purchased the Mount Penn property, in Cumnor township, erected a furnace and operated it in connection with the Gibraltar property, under the firm-name of Seyfert & Schwartz. This business connection was continued until 1833, when, on a dissolution of the partnership, the property was divided, Mr. Seyfert taking the Gibraltar Iron-Works, which he managed successfully until his death. In connection with George M. and De Benneville Keim and James Whitaker, Mr. Seyfert, in 1836, became interested in the original Reading Iron-Works, consisting of a rolling-mill and nail-factory, the interested parties remaining as above mentioned until 1838, when George M. Keim retired. In July, 1844, Mr. Seyfert became owner in connection with John McManus, the firm becoming Seyfert & McManus, which was again changed in 1846 and became Seyfert, McManus & Co., with Jacob V. R. Hunter and Nicholas V. R. Hunter as the additional partners. Two years later the firm established the wrought pipe and tube-works, which are still in successful operation in Reading. In 1848, upon his death, William M. Seyfert, his son, assumed his interest in the concern.

Simon Seyfert was married, in 1811, to Catherine, daughter of William Mannerback, of Reading. Their children are eight in number. Mr. Seyfert affiliated with the Old-Line Whig party in politics, and while active in the furtherance of the principles of that party, declined all proffers of office. He was, aside from his private business interests, energetic in the organization and support of various corporations of which he was director and a leading spirit. Gifted with rare business capacity, unerring judgment and great energy, his co-operation in the establishment of various commercial enterprises was earnestly solicited. Public-spirited, liberal and ever ready to invest capital for the employment of labor, Mr. Seyfert was an influential factor in the growth and development of Reading. He died October 26, 1848, in his sixty-third year.

John McManus, a well-known man in his day throughout the country, and a resident for the most years of his life in Reading, was born in September, 1808, in the county of Fermanagh, province of Ulster, Ireland. His parents, of whom the father was Irish and Catholic, whilst the mother was English and Protestant, occupied glebe lands, which his father farmed under a lease that had been held and renewed for many generations by his people. The father was well-to-do in his farming, according to the measures of the country, and able to send his son to Portumna College, where he had the benefit of a good education. At the age of nineteen, alone and without acquaintance, he came to this country. Owing to the friendly interest of the captain of the ship on which he made the passage, he was able shortly after his landing to get employment in a dry-goods store in Philadelphia. But the position of a dry-goods clerk was irksome and promised too little future advancement. He preferred a sturdier and more independent walk in life, and the public works at that period, 1828, just beginning to take great form, under the needs which the political and commercial growth of the country created, attracted him. He started out as a common laborer, though his term of service in that position was but brief, for his employer soon discovered that he was fitted by natural ability, as well as by education, to higher duties, and shortly thereafter he became a "boss" or director over portions of his employer's work. The step was not then a long one to taking contracts for himself, and his first work as a contractor was on the Morris Canal. There were but few of the great public enterprises under way between the years 1828 and 1842 in which he was not engaged, and the location of his works in the various and then remote parts of both the States and Canada, compelling him to travel widely, enabled him to gain an acquaintance with public men and an intimate knowledge of the country's resources, which made him a man of practical and interesting intelligence, and proved to him in after-years valuable achievements. In 1838, he built the section of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad around Neversink Hill, just south of Reading and underneath the landmark known as the "White House," where he kept bachelor's hall while prosecuting this work. During his stay about Reading he met Caroline Seyfert, daughter of Simon Seyfert, a well-known merchant and manufacturer of Reading, to whom afterwards, on January 29, 1839, he was married by the Rev. Keenan, of Lancaster. In 1840 he was at work on the construction of the Croton Dam and Aqueduct, the water supply system of New York City, and a stone tablet affixed to the reservoir at Croton bears testimony to his important connection with this work. As a contractor he did other work near and about Reading to wit, the grading of a portion of the line of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad near Shoemakersville, and the widening of the Schuylkill Canal and Union Canal. His last work as a contractor was the building of a section of the Hudson River Railroad opposite West Point.

In the meantime, in 1840, he had fixed his family in Reading as a place of residence, and at the urgent solicitation of his father-in-law,—for he was loth to leave a field of business which had been so profitable to him, and which at that time, too, was offering even larger and more important stakes by reason of the great railroad and canal extensions just then being projected,—he invested a large portion of the accumulated fruits of his labors and exertions as a contractor, then amounting to over $100,000, in the rolling-mill business, at Reading, of Whitaker & Seyfert. In 1844 Whitaker left the partnership, and Mr. McManus, who had been quietly instructing himself in the iron business and the process of its manufacture, took personal charge, and the business thenceforward was carried on under the firm-name of Seyfert, McManus & Co. Under his unceasing and vigorous energy and enterprise there were added to the rolling-mill various branches, one after another, of manufacture, and the firm made great strides in the expansion and development of its business. It was the owner or controller of thousands of acres of coal, ore, and farm land, in one locality being the owner of one hundred and sixty thousand acres in a block. Bloomaries, furnaces, rolling-mills, tube-mills, forges, foundries and machine-shops were built or secured and the firm-name became nearly as well known on the Pacific as on the Atlantic coast. Its name and brand can be read to-day on many of the largest cannon of our national defense; and vessels of both our own and foreign navies, in the guns which man their decks, the plates which frame their hulls, as well as in the shafts and other heavy parts of the ships' interiors, display the handiwork of the firm. The promptness with which he turned the resources of his firm, so far as its works were applicable, to the aid of the government in its trying need for guns and heavy armament, at the outbreak of the Rebellion, was fittingly testified to in terms complimentary to him in an autograph letter of General Scott.

It was due to this letter that one of the firm's largest industrial departments was named the "Scott Foundry." Mr. McManus' early experience as a contractor and the inclinations bred of that employment would never wholly permit him to give up taking an active part in public enterprises, and he was prominently connected with many of them. His connection with the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific and Texas Pacific Railroads is worthy of note. In the first he was an incorporator; in the second he was both an incorporator and an active member of its board of management to the time of its completion and for some time thereafter; in the third he was also both an incorporator and a director, and in the construction of the road itself, closely allied to it as the president of the California and Texas Railway Construction Company. When telegraphy was little more than a dream, he became satisfied of its ultimate success, and for quite a time he held a controlling interest in the capital stock of the Philadelphia, Reading and Pottsville Telegraph Company, nearly the oldest of existing telegraph companies in the country. Letters now in the possession of his family, between Professor Morse and himself, show an arrangement with the great inventor for the building of the line. No one took a more active part in developing and extending the railroad facilities of Reading, either by personal energy or substantial money assistance. He interested himself in the building of the Lebanon Valley, the Reading and Columbia and the East Pennsylvania Railroads from the time of their inception and building till the acquisition of each and all of them by the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad. In the building of the East Pennsylvania Railroad he made a great effort to acquire an independent outlet for Reading, subscribing and taking a large number of shares of its capital stock. Beyond the benefit to Reading in the possession of an independent and competitive railroad outlet, there were other and very important motives for resisting the attempts of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad to get control of this line. The East Pennsylvania Railroad had been built and adequately equipped, and under traffic arrangements with the Pennsylvania Railroad, which had not yet acquired the present line to New York. It had become the link in a chain of roads by which numbers of through trains from the West via Harrisburg, passing daily through Reading, were enabled to reach New York City. It was naturally the short and direct highway for freight and passengers from the West to New York or vice versa, and had the road been retained in the control of its builders and original owners, the present enormous tonnage now carried to Philadelphia, and thence to New York over the New Jersey system, subsequently acquired by the Pennsylvania Railroad, would have passed through Reading, much, no one can doubt, to the latter city's advantage and prosperity. It was one of Mr. McManus' grievous disappointments in life that these arrangements had to be abandoned when the East Pennsylvania passed under the control of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, not alone because he deemed it a blow to some of his own business projects, but because he knew that Reading, the city of his home, had lost an advantage that tended greatly to its industrial and commercial advancement, and which would never possibly arise again.

In character Mr. McManus was a man of indomitable will and an energy untiring, qualities which were well displayed and evidenced in the expression of his countenance and the erect and sturdy carriage of his person. Fixed in his purpose and plan, and certain of its honesty, he pursued it to an end, whether successful or not, regardless of criticism or remark. He feared no one and respected all who were worthy. His truthfulness and sincerity in all things no one was able or dared to question. In his habits he was correct to severity, yet never obtruded on others his own methods of conduct and practice. In religion he was of the Roman Catholic faith, whose principles and obligations he strictly followed through life, making them a duty and a guiding star to himself in all things. He died June 2, 1875, in the sixty-seventh year of his age, after only a few days' illness.

Henry Clay Furnaces, located near the Schuylkill, south of South Street, were built in 1840 by Isaac and George M. Eckert, as the firm of Eckert & Bro. In 1872 Henry S. and George B. Eckert, as Eckert & Bro., became the owners and are now operating them. The furnace property includes an area of twelve acres. Two large stacks are erected and the capacity of the furnaces is twenty-five thousand tons of pig iron annually.

One hundred workmen are regularly employed in the production of iron at the furnaces and two hundred men in the various ore-mines operated by this firm. The mines are located in Berks and Lebanon Counties. These furnaces are among the important manufacturing industries of the city of Reading.

The Reading Stove-Works.—The large enterprise of the firm of Orr, Painter & Co., proprietors of the Reading Stove-Works, has greatly assisted in giving prestige and character to the manufacturing industries of the city of Reading. The firm was organized in 1866 by Jesse Orr, John R. Painter, William Grader, Peter W. Nagle, William H. Shick, Henry C. Posey, Jasper Sheeler, Elijah Bull and Charles

From the time the works were started to the present this firm has met with great prosperity. Beginning on a small scale, the business grew rapidly, and the facilities for manufacturing were gradually increased and greatly improved. Fourteen moulders were employed at first; now as many as one hundred and five are at work in the foundry, and the entire number of employees is about three hundred. The capital invested is four hundred thousand dollars. Immense quantities of stoves are annually made and sold. The product of the past year (1885) was thirty thousand stoves of three hundred styles and sizes, which were disposed of in various States of the Union. They are favorably known for their usefulness and durability. Heating furnaces, heaters and hollow-ware are also manufactured at these works. The same firm have a branch establishment at 64 North Second Street, Philadelphia, under the management of William Thompson, and one also in Chicago, superintended by Charles T. Boal.

These stove-works are located on Canal Street, below Chestnut. They cover a large area on both sides of this street. The western side of the works extend an entire square in length, from Chestnut to Spruce Street, and from Canal Street to the Reading and Schuylkill Canal. On the eastern side they extend half a square below Chestnut Street. Superior facilities for shipping the manufactured articles are afforded by the three lines of railroads which intersect the works. Seven distinct buildings are occupied. There are two large five-story foundries, with additional buildings for moulding, casting, cleaning, grinding and polishing, nickel-plating, finishing and mounting. There are also shipping departments and offices. A large five-story building on the east side of Canal Street has seven rooms, each one hundred and fourteen feet in length, used as pattern and storage-rooms, near an adjoining shipping department. The motive-power to run the works is furnished by three engines with three duplex boilers combining one hundred and thirty-five horse-power.

Reading Bolt and Nut-Works.—In 1865 J. H. Sternbergh came to Reading from the State of New York and began the manufacture of iron nuts. At that time there were but few establishments in the country engaged in the manufacture of iron nuts by machinery, and although Mr. Sternbergh never had experience in any mechanical industry, yet by patient labor and close application he succeeded in inventing and constructing machinery well adapted for the purpose intended, and at the end of the second year was so far encouraged as to consider his enterprise quite hopeful. He erected temporary buildings at the foot of Pine Street in the autumn of 1865, and having leased power from an adjoining establishment, carried on his work during the next three years at that place with a force of eight or ten men, and there laid the foundation of his subsequent operations.

In January, 1869, he moved to North Third Street, above Buttonwood, where, in 1868, he had erected permanent buildings adapted to meet the requirements of his increasing business. Since that date the works have been in constant and successful operation, having been enlarged at three different times, until now the establishment consists of several large buildings, the principal one of which is about two hundred and fifteen feet long by one hundred and thirty-five feet wide, and is supplied with the best modern machinery for the production not only of nuts of all sizes, but also for the manufacture of every variety of bolts, washers, rivets, as well as many other articles made of wrought iron.

In addition to the main building above mentioned, the works include a rolling-mill building one hundred and ninety feet long by seventy-two feet wide, in which there are three trains of rolls and three large heating furnaces, three upright steam-engines, besides steam-shears, lathes, pumps and other machinery usually found in a rolling-mill. The capacity of this mill is about ten thousand tons of rolled iron annually, embracing all the various sizes of merchant iron commonly used, rounds, squares, flats, bands, hoops, etc. Most of the product of this mill is consumed in the works in the production of bolts, nuts, washers, rivets and rods for bridges, buildings, etc., and the surplus product is sold to merchants and consumers of refined bar and band-iron. In 1880 a large warehouse, about one hundred feet by fifty feet, four stories high, was built, in which is stored the stock of goods manufactured, all packed in boxes and kegs ready for immediate shipment. So large is the consumption of goods of this character that many hundred tons of finished goods are constantly kept in stock ready for the prompt filling of orders.

The grounds upon which these works are situated embrace about eight acres between Third and Fourth Streets, and between the Lebanon Valley Railroad and Buttonwood Street. Three different railroad tracks run into the works,—one for the delivery of coal, another for the delivery of crude iron in various forms, and the third for the shipment of the products of the factory and the mill, altogether affording very convenient facilities for the prompt handling of materials. About two hundred and fifty men have been employed in this establishment, but during the past year or two only about one hundred and seventy-five or two hundred men have been employed. This decrease in the number was owing to the general depression in business.

Twenty-five years ago bolts and nuts were made by hand, and were generally clumsy as well as expensive articles. Such works as these illustrate the rapid progress in the development of machinery and methods for the production of useful articles in new lines with remarkable precision, and with great economy, and while they contribute to the general advancement of the mechanic arts, they are also of great importance in contributing to the wealth and population of the town or city where they are located.

Reading Hardware Company.—The proprietors of this extensive business are William M. Griscom, Matthan Harbster, William Harbster and Henry C. England. This is one of the leading manufacturing establishments in the State of Pennsylvania. Their works are located in the southern part of the city, adjoining the Wilmington and Northern, West Reading and Pennsylvania Schuylkill Valley Railroads. The Reading Hardware Company has grown to its present importance from a comparatively small beginning. In the year 1851, William Harbster laid the foundation of it in a small blacksmith-shop at the foot of South Sixth Street. In 1852 his brothers Matthan and John became associated with him, under the firm-name of Harbster Brothers. The goods produced soon became favorably known to dealers, and the increased demand for them necessitated the securing of better appliances, the enlargement of their works and the investment of more capital. In 1858 William M. Griscom became associated with the Harbster Brothers, and the name of the firm was changed to Harbster Brothers & Co., under which title it worked until 1862, when it received its present name. By steady yearly increases the business of the firm has grown to large proportions. The members are practical mechanics as well as good business men, have paid strict attention to the demands of the trade and have constantly introduced new designs in the various articles in builders’ hardware. They have maintained a strict personal supervision of the business in all its branches and have continuously produced goods of a very superior quality. The magnitude of the buildings indicates the extent of the business done. They cover an area of five acres. The buildings are substantial brick structures, three and four stories high, and are specially adapted to the work carried on in them. They contain large and commodious warehouses for the storage of finished goods; finishing-shops equipped with the most approved modern machinery for aiding in the work and manned by skilled artisans; Japan building in which are the baking ovens (this building has been highly commended by insurance companies as a model of neatness and During the past year H. C. England, who for nearly a score of years so efficiently managed the sales department, was, on January 1, 1885, admitted as a partner, and in June of the same year William Harbster, the founder and senior member of the company, died. The members of the company at present are William M. Griscom, Matthan Harbster and Henry C. England. Mr. Griscom resides in Europe and has special charge of the foreign business of the company. Mr. Harbster presides over the manufacturing departments and supervises the general business. Mr. England continues to have charge of the selling department.

For the convenience of the trade and to facilitate business, the company have established stores in New York and Philadelphia, where large stocks of their full line are carried. They also employ traveling salesmen, who canvass the States from Maine to California.

WILLIAM HARBSTER is descended from German ancestry. His grandfather, John Harbster, on his emigration to America, settled in Albany townships, Berks County, Pa. Among his children was Henry Harbster, born in the same township, from whence he removed to Lehigh and later to Montgomery County. He was a blacksmith by trade, but subsequently engaged in the manufacture of coffee-mills, and conducted a thriving business in the sale of these articles. He married Mary, daughter of Sebastian Bucherd, whose children were Matilda (married to Casper Aman), Hannah (married to Jacob Nukerek), Ellen (deceased, married to William M. Griscom), William, Henry, Samuel (who died in youth), Matthan and John (deceased).

William Harbster was born October 20, 1823, in Albany township, where his school-days were spent, after which he removed to Boyertown for the purpose of learning the trade of a blacksmith. He remained there seven years, working, on the completion of his apprenticeship, as a journeyman. Removing at the expiration of this period to Reading, he found employment in a foundry, and, subsequently, entered the shops of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad. He next removed to Hamburg, opened a shop and devoted his skill principally to the iron work for carriages. At the end of the second year he returned to Reading and there continued at his trade. In 1851, by the advice and assistance of William M. Griscom, he projected the Reading Hardware-Works, beginning under very humble circumstances, and, at first, manufacturing but few articles. By energy, excellent management and skillful workmanship, the business increased, and Matthew and John Harbster, his younger brothers, were admitted as partners, under the firm-name of Harbster Brothers. Mr. Harbster was, on the 15th of June, 1848, married to Ellen, daughter of George Matthews, of Lebanon County, the children of this marriage being Emma R. (married to William Kessel), Cecelia (married to John Mohn), John F., Morris G. (deceased), Anne R. (married to John Goodman), Howard E. and Mary Margaret.

Morris G. Harbster was actively engaged in the Reading Hardware-Works, being chief designer and manager of the chasing department, where his skill and ability were invaluable. He was married to Miss Kate E. Seivert, of Reading. William Harbster was also the head of the Reading Nickel-Plating Works. He was formerly officially connected with banks and other business organizations, but in later years retired from these responsibilities. In politics he is an active Republican. As a Mason, he was a member of Chandler Lodge, No. 227; Reading Chapter, No. 152; Creigh Council, No. 16, and De Molay Commandery, No. 9. He was a member of Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church until his death, June 16, 1885, in his sixty-second year.

Matthew Harbster, brother of William, was born on the 18th of May, 1831, in Lehigh County, and removed with his parents in early youth to Montgomery County, attending the common schools at Pottstown, in that county, and afterward entered the shop of his brother William, in Hamburg, for the purpose of learning the blacksmith's trade. He continued this as journeyman for several years in Pottstown and later in Hamburg, after which he made Reading his residence. In 1852 he became associated with his brother, William, in the Reading Hardware-Works, and is still connected with that establishment as its active and managing partner. Mr. Harbster was married, August 12, 1856, to Susan, daughter of John Bingman, of Reading. Their children are Ida C. (married to Charles E. Shrader), John E. (associated with his father in business), Ellen Kate (married to Howard Boas) and Nellie G. Mr. Harbster is a director of the Farmers' National Bank of Reading, and of the Sixth Street Passenger Railway, and is president of the Reading Land Improvement Company. As a Republican, he has represented his ward in the Common and Select Council and has been a member of the School Board of the city. He is also actively connected with the Masonic fraternity. He is a member of Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church and director of the Young Men's Christian Association.

Union Boiler-Works, at the foot of Ninth Street, including all the departments, cover an area of eight acres. They were established by the firm of Obert & Tippets in 1854, at the same site. In 1862 Francis J. Obert purchased the interest of his partner, Robert Tippets, and has since conducted the business as sole proprietor. These works front on Ninth Street, and extend in depth to the Reading Railroad, and consist of a main building, warehouses, store-house and coal-bins. An extensive business is done here in the manufacture of boilers, smoke-stacks, water and oil-tanks, gas-holders, cupolas, furnace casings, iron bridges, pulp digesters for paper-mills, iron stock cars, iron roofing, etc. The number of men employed has ranged from fifty to one hundred and sixty. The manufactured products of these works have been sold in large quantities since they were originated.

The Reading Butt-Works are located on north Third Street, corner of Buttonwood. The foundry has a frontage on the railroad, and is furnished with two large cupolas, with a capacity of twenty tons of iron daily. Twelve hundred tons of metal of various kinds are used yearly in the production of hardware and butts. The business was begun in 1867 by the present proprietors, Cyrus, John, Charles, Jr., and James Rick, under the firm-name of Rick Brothers.
McNauber
The large tack works on the opposite side of the railroad are also owned and operated by this company, and are furnished with thirty tack-making machines, which turn out daily one ton of finished tacks of all sizes, the yearly product being three hundred tons. The firm employs in the foundry and tack-works one hundred and seventy-five workmen.

The Manhattan Hardware Company, corner of Ninth and Bingaman Streets was organized by gentlemen from New York in 1875, who located this foundry at Reading. On September 22, 1885, it was incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania, with D. H. Fitzgerald, president; William Kerns, vice-president; and J. P. Egan, secretary and treasurer. About one hundred thousand dollars are invested in the enterprise, and over five hundred hands employed. The business for the past year has exceeded seven hundred thousand dollars. This company is now (1886) building large and extensive works, covering the entire block on Third Street, between Bern and Richmond Streets, North Reading.

The Penn Hardware Company, corner of Canal and Spruce Streets, was organized in 1877 by C. Raymond Heizmann and Albert A. Heizmann, who are the present proprietors. Capital in 1885, one hundred thousand dollars. Three hundred and fifty workman are employed; and in the past year (1886) a business amounting to three hundred thousand dollars was done. A general line of builders' hardware is made, and their manufactures are sold over the entire United States; also in Canada, England, Germany and Australia. To satisfy the increasing demand for their goods, the company has established salesrooms in Philadelphia, New York, Baltimore and Chicago.

The Maiden Creek Iron Company, of Reading, have their works at Blandon, in Maiden Creek township. This industry was formerly known as the Blandon Iron-Works, and were erected in 1867 by Jacob Kaufman and Charles D. Geiger, and successfully worked in the manufacture of hand, hoop and pipe-iron until 1876. The works were then purchased by the present company, which is composed of R. H. Reifsnyder and Z. H. Maurer, who have at present thirteen furnaces in full blast, which produce four thousand tons of manufactured iron per year. They employ one hundred and forty men. The full capacity of the works is seven thousand tons per year.

McIlvaine Iron-Works, on Neversink, near Eighth, Reading, were established in 1856 by William McIlvaine, who had for ten years previously been associated with Simon and Henry A. Seyfert in the manufacture of boiler-plate, at Gibraltar, in this county. On the 9th of July, 1857, the first sheet of boiler-plate was rolled. The works comprised at that time two heating furnaces, one pair of plate-rolls, seventy-two inches long by twenty-two inches in diameter, and one Nasmyth hammer. July 1, 1862, Morton C. and William R. McIlvaine, sons of the proprietor, were admitted as partners, the firm taking the name of William McIlvaine & Sons. During the year 1864 two puddling furnaces were built, and subsequently others were added of the same kind, in all making four single and two double puddling furnaces. In 1873 the rolls were enlarged to eighty-one inches long and twenty-five inches in diameter, and the third heating furnace was built. A larger engine was put in and the hammer increased in weight. A train of break-down rolls, for rolling puddled bars, was also placed in position, increasing the capacity of the works, which, in 1886, are producing between five thousand and six thousand tons of plate-iron yearly.

In 1864 the firm purchased two thousand acres of woodland near Duncannon, Pa., and erected a charcoal forge, for the manufacture of charcoal blooms, which were used by the works here in the higher grades of boiler-plates. The capital employed in these two establishments amounts to two hundred thousand dollars. One hundred and fifty workmen are employed.

Mount Penn Stove-Works occupy an acre and a quarter of ground in the northwestern part of Reading, corner of North Third Street and Lebanon Valley Railroad. The company, represented by Samuel H. Kutz as president, J. Allison Orr, superintendent, and M. B. McKnight, treasurer, was incorporated in June, 1882, with a paid-in capital of fifty thousand dollars. The works had been operated in 1881 by Stauffer, McKnight & Co., who sold out to the present company.

The buildings comprise a large foundry, with cupola of fifteen tons' capacity, finishing and machine-rooms, pattern and carpenter-shops, engine and boiler-rooms, polishing and nickle-plating rooms, charring-rooms, blacksmith-shops, etc., together with storage and packing-floors of fifty thousand square feet capacity. They employ one hundred hands in the manufacture of stoves, heaters, ranges, furnaces, etc., in all their various styles, together with hollow-ware and fine light iron castings. During the year 1885 this company made over one thousand tons of stove-plate, representing ten thousand stoves of one hundred and seventy-five different styles and sizes.

Mellert Foundry and Machine Company (Limited), on Second and Chestnut Streets, is a very important industry, and was originated by John Mellert, the father of Arnold, Magnus and Otto Mellert, in 1848, for the manufacture of stoves. In 1851 he began to make water and gas-pipes and discontinued the making of stoves. In 1853 he built a large machine-shop in connection with the foundry, and commenced to construct machinery for grist and rolling-mills. In 1860 he introduced a new business in the building of passenger-cars and coal-cars for the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, and erected large shops for that purpose. In 1863 the car-shop was changed into a general foundry, and the old foundry was converted into a pipe foundry to make water and gas-pipes twelve feet in length. In 1876 a new pipe foundry was built for the special construction of large pipes from twenty to forty-eight inches in diameter. In 1880 a stock company was formed, the stockholders of which are Peter D. Wanner, Arnold Mellert, Magnus Mellert, Otto Mellert and Albert Mellert. The chairman is Arnold Mellert; secretary and treasurer, Peter D. Wanner.

The entire works occupy five hundred and forty feet on Second Street, two hundred and ninety feet on Chestnut Street and two hundred and twenty feet on Grape Street. Four different tracts of land, separated by the streets above mentioned, are occupied by the different buildings belonging to these works. For loading pipes and for lifting purposes in the foundry, nine cranes are used; seven of these have each a ten horse power engine attached to them. The motive-power to run the machine shops is a forty horse-power engine and two tubular boilers having a combined power of one hundred and ten horses.

The various kinds of manufactures are water and gas-pipes, flange-pipes, stop-valves, fire-hydrants, lamp-posts, structural work, car and railroad castings, the Canada turbine, etc. Two hundred men are employed. Amount of business annually done, $500,000. The company has a branch house at 160 Broadway, New York City, under the management of John Fox.

The Spectacle-Factory of Thomas A. Wilson, on the corner of Second and Washington Streets, was built in 1871, completed and supplied with machinery specially devised by the proprietor during the early part of the year 1872. Lenses are here manufactured out of sand brought from Berkshire, Mass. Many varieties are made. This is the only factory of its kind in the world in which all of the parts, glass lens and frames are made under one management. Employment is given to two hundred and forty workmen. The average daily production during the year 1885 was three thousand eight hundred pairs; one ton of steel a month is consumed. Two large buildings are now occupied.

The Franklin Foundry was started by Adam Johnston, in 1840, at the southeast corner of Eighth and Chestnut Streets, for the manufacture of iron castings. He conducted the foundry successfully for nearly twenty years. In 1844 he increased its capacity and added a machine-shop, and then he changed the name to "Franklin Iron-Works," and began the manufacture of iron cars for coal transportation on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad. In 1851 he commenced the building of wooden freight cars for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and other companies, constantly increasing the business. In 1844 five hundred cars were built annually, which by 1851 was increased to twelve hundred cars annually. From 1858 to 1860 Ezekiel Jones and Daniel Shaaber conducted the business, but in 1860, Adam Johnston, his son Henry and Daniel Shaaber became associated under the name of Johnston & Son. In 1882 Henry Johnston came into possession of the works and has since conducted them, filling large orders for castings for blast furnaces, etc. The foundry at this time turns out twenty tons of castings daily, with seventy workmen employed; when run to its full capacity, employment is given to two hundred men.

Central Foundry and Machine-Shops, operated by B. W. Grist & Co. (Limited), are located on the corner of Cherry and Carpenter Streets. They were started in the year 1840 by L. K. Moore, who conducted them for a number of years. Since 1879 the above-mentioned firm has been engaged here in the manufacture of vertical and horizontal steam-engines, counter and platform scales and a variety of machinery. Forty workmen are employed.

The Machine-Shops located on the corner of Orange and Ringaman Streets were started in 1883 by David Greth. In 1884 Fred. Gerhart and Mahlon Shaaber purchased the stock of machinery and have since carried on the business under the firm-name of Gerhart & Shaaber. They manufacture supplies for machinists and a variety of brass and iron-work, and do a large business in repairing and refitting.

F. S. Neuendorffer & Co., manufacturers of iron railing and locks, are the successors of Louis Neuendorffer, who established the business at 428 Court Street in 1859. At his death, in 1884, it passed into the hands of his son, Frederick S. Neuendorffer, who admitted as a partner Charles Frichter. The new firm employ seven workmen, manufacturing iron railing and various kinds of architectural iron-work.

The Brass and Iron Foundry on the corner of Sixth and Chestnut Streets was established in 1853 by James L. Douglass. In 1854 Henry Connard was admitted as a partner in the business. Brass castings for machinists and manufacturers are made here as specialties. Steam-valves, steam-pumps, steam-engines, lathes, fans and shaftings are also manufactured. Eighteen workmen are employed. The present firm-name is Douglass & Connard.

Reading Industrial Works originated in the year 1871, at their present location, Ninth Street below Bingaman, by Joseph H. Miller, John C. Printz, Samuel Davies, William Shaffer and Adam Shaaber, as the firm of Miller, Printz & Co. No changes have taken place in this firm, who are engaged in the manufacture of brass and iron castings, machinists' and manufacturers' supplies, pipe-fittings, globe valves, cocks, pumps, injectors and a variety of other products. Thirty-five men are employed.

Reading Nickel-Plating Works were founded during the year 1881, at Sixth Street, below Chestnut, by Robert Arhard. The next year he sold the works to Kensing & Harbster, who, in 1884, removed them to 316 and 318 Maple Street. In 1885 E. H. Smeltzer became the sole proprietor. For a time a brass foundry was operated in connection with these works. Brass, bronze and German silver castings are made and nickel-plating in various forms is extensively done. Twenty employees are at work.

West Reading Boiler-Works, on the corner of Front and Chestnut Streets, were built by the firm of Sterling & Weidner in 1877, and have since been operated by them. Boilers, tanks, oil-stills, pipes for blast furnaces, smoke-stacks, etc., are manufactured. About forty men are employed and an extensive business is done.

Reading Engine-Works, on Pine Street, between Second and Third, were started in 1885 by Orr & Sembower (W. Harry Orr and C. H. Sembower) for the manufacture of vertical, horizontal and hoisting engines, from three to twenty horse-power. Sixteen workmen are constantly employed, and the firm do a large business in constructing the marine vertical engine, which is of special design, with link and reversing lever, and can be utilized for general purposes as a motor.

The Eagle Bolt-Works were established in 1845, at Philadelphia, where the business was conducted until 1876 by William Golcher, who there manufactured the first carriage-bolt by machinery in America. During the Centennial year G. and J. T. Golcher, sons of the original proprietor, removed the works to a site near the Lebanon Valley Railroad Bridge. The machinery used in making bolts are patented inventions, designed by the members of the firm. Eighteen men are employed and forty thousand bolts are made weekly.

Snell & Meharg operate the engine-works on Court Street, above Second; and since they began, in 1880, have manufactured vertical and horizontal engines ranging from three to twenty horse-power. In addition, this firm designs and constructs various kinds of machinery. About a dozen men are constantly at work. The proprietors are J. H. Snell and George F. Meharg.

The Machine-Shops of Muhlenberg & West (N. H. Muhlenberg & R. H. West) were begun in 1883, at Nos. 26 and 28 South Fifth Street. This firm manufactures and deals extensively in machinery and machinists' supplies, steam fittings, belting, wrought-iron pipes, joints and connections, etc.; they are also agents for Westinghouse steam-engines, Worthington steam pump and the Rue Little Giant Injector. Capital invested, thirty thousand dollars; fifteen hands are employed; business extends to several of the Northern States, and amounts to one hundred and eighty thousand dollars per year.

The Penn Boiler-Works were established in 1883 on the corner of Front and Pine Streets, by George C. Wilson and H. P. Yeager. The works are designed for the manufacture of steam boilers, tanks, oil-stills, pipes for blast furnaces, stacks, etc. They have three thousand dollars invested in the business and twelve workmen employed; amount of business, fifteen thousand dollars per year.

Peipher & Leinbach, manufacturers of steam-engines, boilers and machinery of various kinds, are the successors of Hass & Peipher, who began the business in 1883. On January 1, 1886, Daniel Leinbach purchased the interest of J. A. Hass, and the present firm was formed. Eight employees are engaged at these works.

The Machine-Shops at 126 Carpenter Street, owned by George W. Francis, were started by him in 1882 for the manufacture of light machinery, stocks, taps, dies, planer knives, moulding bits and cutters.

The Greth Machine-Shops, Nos. 627 and 631 Franklin Street, Reading, were founded by Daniel Greth in 1883. In 1884, J. P. Miller and H. E. Deininger bought out the entire stock and machinery, and have since conducted the business. They manufacture machinists' and manufacturers' supplies, brass and iron-work, and do a large business in repairing engines and machinery. They also keep in stock belting, packing, pipe, valves, etc. Capital invested, three thousand dollars; six hands employed.

The Gun and Rifle-Factory on southwest corner of Ninth and Walnut Streets was founded in 1870 by Nelson Delany, who bought ground and erected the factory for making small calibre rifles for the Southern and Western trade and special orders. From 1856 to 1870 he made rifles in small quantities, but the increasing demand for his manufactures led to the erection of the present works. During the War of the Rebellion he took large contracts from the government for the manufacture of gun-barrels, which were made during the daytime, and in the evening his entire force of workmen were also engaged in the manufacture of cartridges for the army.

Daniel Gerhart began business as a gunsmith at 12 North Fifth Street in 1876. In 1878 he removed to 14 North Eighth Street; he manufactures guns and rifles of many kinds to order, and has lately commenced to make fine fishing-rods, reels, etc., for the trade.

The Novelty Works, at 308 Schuylkill Avenue, were started in 1881 for the manufacture of breech-loading guns, rifles, meat-cutters and cigar-cutters. The specialty is the New American breech-loading rifle, the design of which was invented by the proprietor of these works, James J. Oakes.

Wagner's Patent Roller Tugs were first introduced to the public in 1883, when Julius Wagner, the inventor and patentee, began the manufacture of them at 276 South Ninth Street, Reading. Since 1883 he has secured several patents, including boom-tugs, roller rein hook and leather clamp, for harness. He has successfully introduced his patents over a large territory, and in the past year the sales of his tugs have largely increased, thirty thousand sets having been sold.

The Excelsior Galvanizing Works, of Reading, were started in 1878, by Daniel F. McCullough, at No. 546 South Seventh Street. In 1884 he fitted up the works at No. 526 South Seventh Street. He has two workman employed; his trade is confined to Reading and Berks County.

John Miller was the first locksmith in Reading, having started the business at 932 Penn Street in 1826. He built up a large trade in door locks of his own design and manufacture, which were in great demand in most of the counties of the State, and which are still in use. Two forges were worked and six hands constantly employed for many years. After his death, in 1872, the shops came into the possession of his son, John W. Miller, who still continues the business.

HATTERS AND HAT-MAKING.

The manufacture of wool and fur hats is the oldest, most conspicuous and most continuous employment in Reading. This department of trade was in a flourishing condition when the borough was created. The prominent hatters of Reading between the years 1752 and 1782 were the following, whose names are arranged in the order of priority: John Jackson, Samuel Jackson, Isaac Lebo, Matthias Hineline, Elias Yungman, George Schultz, Jacob Graeff, Peter Nagle, Sr., Peter Gross, Jacob Gross, Baltzer Henritze, Frederick Repp, Jr., Charles Bushaur.

The following statistics, in reference to the manufacture of fine and coarse hats in Berks and surrounding counties for the year 1795, appear in an early publication:¹

The county of York then had twenty-six hatters and produced twenty-six hundred fur hats and thirty thousand wool hats.

Reading contributed almost entirely the hatters and hats stated in the foregoing table for Berks County. The hatters in Berks County were almost wholly devoted to the production of wool hats, whilst in Philadelphia they were mostly of fur hats. Every county in the State then contained busy factories in this branch of industry.

The wool hat, as then made, was heavy and stiff, so stiff that a man (weighing two hundred pounds) could stand upon it without crushing it. Its weight—well, to us of to-day, who carry fine, small, light hats, weighing but two ounces, prodigious—was eleven to twelve ounces. Its height was from four and a half to six inches, with a brim three and a half to four inches wide and from one-eighth to three-eighths inch thick. The colors were black and white, the number of each manufactured being about the same. The quantity of wool in each hat was about eight ounces.

In 1824 the borough contained less than one thousand taxable. Of this number, there were six master-hatters, who gave employment to four hundred and fifty journeymen and apprentices, worked up annually sixty thousand pounds of wool, and manufactured one hundred and fifty thousand hats. A hatter could make, on an average, eight hats a day.

This branch of industry continued to grow in strength as the months and years rolled on, especially in respect to the number of employees. The apprentices were numerous. Their increased number alarmed the masters and journeymen. It became a serious matter with them. Finally they began to consider the advisability of forming a society for regulating the admission of new hands into their employment. The subject was discussed till it resulted in a public meeting. This meeting was held in the borough on May 13, 1829. But the conclusion of its deliberations was adverse to the formation of a society. The following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That upon due reflection we consider the object of this meeting entirely premature, and indirectly tending to the subversion of those philanthropic views that prompted it, as well as infringing upon the prerogative relatively existing between the master and apprentice—that therefore the formation of such society be deemed at present useless and inexpedient."

The persons present were Joseph Homan (president), Jacob Goodhart (secretary), Benjamin Davies, Samuel Ritter, Abel Levering, John Sherrer, William Arnold, Nicholas Lott, Abram Roland, George Roland, Adam Fesig, Anthony Boyer, George Graeff, Peter Homan, Jacob Fricker, Frederick Rapp, Henry Ritze, David Rightmyer, John Brown, John Kild, Charles Kessler, George Till, Christian Ritter, Daniel M. Keim, William Sherer, Matthias Roland, Jacob Maurer, John Keffer, Daniel Rightmyer, Jacob Sauerbier, Jacob Graeff and John Price.

In 1854 M. & J. Siegel carried on the largest factory in Reading, and one of the largest in the State. They employed altogether sixty hands, and manufactured daily twelve thousand wool hats. They consumed three thousand pounds of wool weekly.

Some years afterward this industry was injured considerably by the introduction of caps and straw hats. Many journeymen were thereby induced, if not compelled, to seek other occupations. In 1846 the estimated number actively engaged in it was about fifteen master-hatters and fifty journeymen. The daily pay was about ninety-six cents. Hats were made by the piece. This was, indeed, a wonderful decrease in twenty years. And it was not revived until 1852, when hats began to be made by machinery. The colors began to be introduced about 1847. Many different colors were used in 1851.

The first soft wool hats in Reading were made, in 1847, by John Lotz and his son David. They were from six to six and a half inches high, and weighed from four to five ounces. They had a wide brim. A button was attached on the right and left sides of the hat to enable the brim to be looped up, if necessary. The style was called "sugar-loaf," having a round top. Home-made hats were mostly worn by the citizens.

William Arnold, who was for more than half a century prominently identified with manufacturing, political and business interests of Reading and Berks County, was born in the year 1798, and died in 1884, in the eighty-sixth year of his age. His father, Nicholas Arnold, was one of the earliest persons who engaged in the manufacture of wool hats on an extensive scale in Reading, and was also a farmer and owned and cultivated the land on which the southwestern part of the city is now built. Early in life he was married to Barbara Fichthorn. Both of them lived to an advanced age. William Arnold, their son, after serving an apprenticeship and carefully learning the trade, succeeded his father in the business on North Eighth Street, between Penn and Washington, and there manufactured wool hats for the Southern trade in large quantities for a period of twenty-eight years. He regularly employed from thirty to forty hands, and made many more hats than any other person then engaged in the same business at Reading. He frequently shipped the hats in sailing-vessels to Charleston, South Carolina, which took him three months to make the trip. Prosperity attended him in his occupation, and at the age of fifty years he retired from the business with a handsome competence as the result of his energy and executive ability. After he discontinued the hat business he took an active interest in the administration of county affairs, being a Democrat in politics. He was commissioner from 1841 to 1845; treasurer, from 1845 to 1847; and director of the poor from 1850 to 1857; also for many years a director in the Farmer's Bank of Reading. He served as executor, administrator, trustee and guardian for a period of thirty years, during which he settled numerous estates. This attests in a high degree the confidence of the community in him.
He took a prominent part in the Masonic Order of Reading, having been a member of Lodge No. 62. He was a consistent member of Trinity Lutheran Church. He was married twice. His first marriage was with Anna Homan, by whom he had four children, two of whom are living,—William A. and Annie Louisa, married to Ferdinand Ritter, of Reading. His first wife died in 1834, at the age of thirty-four years. His second marriage was with Catharina Sauertier, of Reading, who died in 1877, aged fifty-eight years. The children of the last marriage are Amanda (married to Frank Markley) and Emma (married to Lewis Dauth).

William A. Arnold, the eldest child by the first marriage, now an influential citizen of Reading, was born in 1836, and educated in the schools of his native place. In 1859, after having carefully learned the trade of a hatter, he engaged in the business of manufacturing hats. He was connected with Adam Kutz and Samuel Kutz for twenty years, and the firm of Kutz, Arnold & Co., during the war, carried on the largest factory and trade in the county. They were very successful. This firm had located on South Eleventh Street, near Chestnut, and there erected numerous dwellings, being the first to improve that section of Reading. Mr. Arnold is president of the Reading Fire Insurance and Trust Company, and a director of the Farmers' National Bank and the Reading Gas Company. When the Reading Savings-Bank suspended he was appointed assignee, and displayed much energy and ability in the settlement of its large estate to the satisfaction of its many creditors. He was married to Ellen L. Rick, with whom he has six children.

Hendel Bros., Sons & Co. own an extensive hat-factory located on South Fifth Street, below Laurel. This is one of the largest and most productive establishments of its kind in this country. In 1860 John and George Hendel, in partnership with their father, in Adamstown, Lancaster County, began to make wool hats, and in 1863 the two sons erected a factory in Exeter township, Berks County; in 1867 they moved to Reading, and started the business on a more extensive scale on Maple Street, below Chestnut. In 1869 this factory was sold to the firm of Reed & Miller. The following year John Hendel purchased a hat-factory on the corner of Eleventh and Spruce Streets, which he disposed of at the expiration of one year, and in 1871, in connection with his brothers, George and Henry Hendel, as the firm of Hendel Bros., bought the Wyomissing Woolen Mills, located on Fifth Street, below Laurel, in the city of Reading, remodeled the building and supplied it with superior machinery and appliances for manufacturing woolen hats of many kinds and varieties. The business rapidly developed and soon became known as one of the leading manufacturing establishments in the city. In 1879 Levi H., Daniel J. and James M., sons of George Hendel, were admitted as partners of this prosperous firm. In 1883 Henry B. Hendel retired. The following year Charles B. Hendel became a partner. The firm is now composed of John and George Hendel, the four sons of the latter and William J. Bobst, under the name of Hendel Bros., Sons & Co. The building occupied by the firm is a large three-story brick factory and all the necessary accompanying buildings for fulling, dyeing, storage and finishing-rooms. The capacity of this extensive establishment is two hundred and fifty dozen hats per day. About one hundred and seventy workmen are regularly employed. The amount of capital invested is one hundred and fifty thousand dollars; amount of business done yearly is two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. Many kinds and varieties of hats are made for the general trade in this country, and some are shipped to foreign countries. All boxes used are manufactured in this establishment.

John and George Hendel, the senior members of this firm, in 1878 started another hat-factory near Shillington, in Curnau township, this county, and in 1884 John R. Hendel, Jr., son of George Hendel, became a partner in this firm, which has since been known as George Hendel Bro. & Son. The same kinds and varieties of hats are made at this factory as in the one at Reading. The number of employees is eighty, and yearly production thirty-eight thousand dozen hats. The amount of capital invested is seventy-five thousand dollars, and the amount of business done yearly is one hundred and ten thousand dollars.

The manufactured goods of the above-named hat-factories are sold through their own commission house, managed by Hawley, Hendel & Mohn, on the corner of Houston and Green Streets, New York City.

John Hendel of the above-mentioned firm, is a grandson of John Hendel, of German descent, an industrious cabinet-maker, who resided in Adamstown, Lancaster County, Pa., and was married to Kate Amman. Their children were Levi, John, and Theresa (married to William Fichthorn).

Levi Hendel was born in Brecknock township, Lancaster County, and, being left an orphan at the age of three years, was indentured to a farmer until his fourteenth year. He was then apprenticed to the hatter’s trade under Philip Fichthorn, of Adamstown, Lancaster County, which he subsequently made the business of his life. He was married to Susan, daughter of Jacob Bollman, a farmer of Spring township, Berks County. Their children are John, George, Kate (married to Isaac Lausch), Henry, Louisa (married to William Humbert) and William. Mr. Hendel’s second marriage was with Susan Will, whose children are a son, Howard, and a daughter, Emma (married to Isaac Spang). John Hendel was born on the 7th of December, 1833, in Adamstown, Lancer-improvements were added. At the end of the second year they removed to Reading, and, effecting an exchange of property with John Yerger, embarked in the same business on a more extended scale. His brother Henry was later admitted as a partner, under the firm-name of Hendel Brothers. The house was again changed, and became, as at present, Hendel Brothers, Sons & Co. Mr. Hendel was, on the 22d of February, 1853, married to Miss Kate, daughter of William and Kate Steiff, of the Beading Fire Insurance Company, treasurer and director of the Keystone Land and Cattle Company and partner in the commission house of Hawley, Hendel & Mohn, New York. He is in his political associations a Republican. He is a member of Chandler Lodge, No. 227, of F. and A. M.; of De Molay Commandery, No. 9, and Chapter, No. 152, all of Reading. Mr. Hendel is connected with the Evangelical Association, in which he is class-leader, steward and trustee.

Their children are Levi H., born November 30, 1853; Daniel J., July 8, 1855; James M., February 23, 1857; John O., December 18, 1858; Mary A., November 26, 1860; George W., September 18, 1862; Charles W., February 22, 1864; Edwin, March 30, 1866; Harrison P., September 12, 1867; Harvey H., December 30, 1869; and Kate A., September 8, 1871. Three of this number are deceased. Levi H., Daniel J., James M. and Charles W. are partners in the house established by their father. Mr. Hendel is a director of the First National Bank of Reading, a director of the Reading Fire Insurance Company, treasurer and director of the Keystone Land and Cattle Company and partner in the commission house of Hawley, Hendel & Mohn, New York. He is in his political associations a Republican. He is a member of Chandler Lodge, No. 227, of F. and A. M.; of De Molay Commandery, No. 9, and Chapter, No. 152, all of Reading. tion is about one thousand dozens of hats. This firm is composed of Henry B. Hendel, his brother, William B. Hendel, and three nephews, William S. Humbert, Levi H. Lausch and George H. Lausch. The co-partnership was formed in 1882, when this building was taken and improved, and it has since been occupied. The building is owned by the senior member. This firm is composed of enterprising and energetic young men, and they have been successful in their business operations.

Henry B. Hendel was born April 21, 1843, in Adamstown, Lancaster County, Pa., and obtained his early education in the common schools, after which he became a pupil of the State Normal School at Millersville. He then entered the hat manufacturing establishment of his father, and, in 1866, became a partner in the business. During the year 1868 the partnership terminated, owing to the death of the senior member of the firm, and Mr. Hendel removed to Reading. Here he purchased a factory located on the corner of Eleventh and Spruce Streets, and again embarked in manufacturing, but sold at the expiration of the first year. He next became interested as part owner in two factories located at Adamstown and Mohunsville respectively, the buying and selling for the latter being done by him while continuing his residence in Reading. Finally, disposing of his interests in both these concerns, he became a partner with his brothers, John and George, in the present factory on Fifth Street, Reading. He was also interested in the factory built by his brother George in Cumru township. Selling these various interests, he established the business now conducted on Maple Street, Reading, enlarging the mill and otherwise increasing the opportunities for manufacturing, the firm being known as Henry B. Hendel & Co., hat manufacturers. Mr. Hendel is a Republican in politics and now fills the office of school controller, though rarely accepting public position from his party. He is a member of Williamson Lodge, No. 307, of F. and A. M., of Womelsdorf; of Reading Commandery, No. 42, and of Excelsior Chapter, No. 237. He is also interested in the commission house of Hawley, Hendel & Mohn, of New York. He is a member of the Evangelical Association. Mr. Hendel was, on the 5th of September, 1876, married to Martha, daughter of Mrs. Elizabeth Metzger, of Reading, who died in 1877. Their only daughter, Estella, died in infancy.

J. G. Mohn & Bros. wool-hat factory, located on Eleventh Street, below Chestnut, was originated in 1859 at the same place by Kutz, Arnold & Co., who conducted the business until 1878, when the present firm, composed of Jeremiah G. Richard and John G. Mohn, purchased the entire interests. The buildings used are a three-story brick factory, containing various departments, and three adjoining storehouses. The factory is supplied with improved machinery for the manufacture of staple-wool hats in many different colors, shapes and forms, which are sold to the general trade through the commission house of Hawley, Hendel & Mohn, corner of Houston and Green Streets, New York City. This enterprising firm has about ninety employees regularly, manufacturing daily about one hundred and fifty dozen hats or forty thousand dozen yearly.

John R. Miller & Co.'s wool-hat manufactory is located on Fourth and Laurel Streets. Mr. Miller, who at present is the sole proprietor of the business, is a native of Adamstown, Lancaster County, and came to Reading from Pine Grove, Schuylkill County, January 5, 1870, when he began the manufacture of hats in connection with John Hendel and William L. Reed in a building located on Maple Street, below Chestnut. About twenty-five workmen were then employed. In 1871 the factory burned down which caused a dissolution of the original partnership. Mr. Miller then leased an old mill on the west side of the Lancaster bridge, and in connection with John Shadle embarked anew in the business. This partnership lasted but one year, when William B. Hendel became a member of the firm, continuing one year. At the expiration of this time Levi Miller, of Pine Grove, took an interest, and the firm of John R. Miller & Co. was formed. Since 1878 the senior member of the firm has been sole proprietor and has conducted the business with enterprise, acknowledged ability and success. In 1879 he built his present factory, a large three-story brick building, forty by one hundred and forty feet, with an office, dye-house addition and a three-story wing extending from the middle of the main building. The interior is supplied with the latest improved machinery, run by a sixty horsepower engine, supplied by a one hundred horsepower boiler. About one hundred employees are regularly engaged at this factory. The daily product is one hundred and fifty dozens of wool hats, which are sold to the general trade through a commission house in New York City. For several years past Henry R. Miller, brother of the proprietor, has been chief assistant in the management of the business.

D. F. Lotz & Co. are the proprietors of an establishment for the manufacture of staple-wool hats, on South Eleventh Street, near Spruce. The factory was built in 1866 by Jacob Sauerbier and soon after operated by Eisenbeiss & Co. In 1878 D. F. Lotz leased the factory, and, in connection with Elim Heckler, John Rehrer and Samuel Homan, formed a co-partnership under the name of D. F. Lotz & Co., the present firm. They also made staple-wool hats of various kinds, which are sold to the general trade through New York commission houses. The factory is a fine three-story building, with all conveniences and apparatus needed. Thirty-seven workmen are employed. The yearly production now is seventy-two thousand dozen hats. The full capacity of the works is one hundred thousand.

C. F. Kessler & Son are proprietors of the hat-factory on the corner of South Eleventh and Spruce Streets, which was established in 1862 by David Lotz. In 1876 Conrad F. Kessler, the present senior proprietor, purchased the factory, and in 1883 admitted his son, William H. Kessler, as a partner. Wool hats are made here to the amount of one hundred dozens per day when the full capacity is used. Sixty hands are employed.

Neversink Hat-Factory, owned by Robert H. Savage, is at the southeast corner of Thirteenth and Muhlenberg Streets. The factory was built, in 1883, by the present owner, and is a new three-story brick building, extending a long distance on both streets, furnished with well-designed machinery of improved kinds. Eighty hands are employed regularly, and the capacity of the factory is seventy-five dozen staple-wool hats daily. Manufactured hats are sold through commission houses and to merchants directly from the factory.

Keystone Hat-Factory, owned by I. W. Levan & Son, on Muhlenberg Street, above Eleventh, was established in 1865, by W. & I. W. Levan. In 1871 the firm was changed to I. W. Levan & Son, and in 1884, Charles Y. Levan became a partner of the present firm. They manufacture staple-wool hats for the West, Southwest and California trade in large quantities, as well as other kinds and varieties. The factory is a three-story building, extending one hundred and twenty-six feet on Muhlenberg Street, well fitted and well furnished with machinery and apparatus. The capacity of the factory is one hundred and fifty dozen hats daily; capital invested, one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. The number of hands employed is seventy.

Isaac W. Levan, the senior proprietor of this firm, is descended from Huguenot ancestry. His grandfather, Isaac Levan, resided in Exeter township, Berks County, where he engaged in farming. He was married to a Miss Newkirk, of the same county, and had the following-named children: Isaac, John, Jacob, Catherine (married to John Deiter), Mary (married to Lewis Seider), Nellie (married to William Yohn) and Phebe (married to William Yohn).

John Levan was born in Berks County, and on reaching mature years engaged in stage-driving on the Philadelphia and Pottsville turnpike, after which he became a farmer, and died at the age of forty-three years. He married Rebecca, daughter of Philip Witz, a locksmith, a soldier of the Revolution and a resident of Pottstown, Pa. Their children are Isaac W., John (deceased), Susan (married to Henry Hagen), Catherine (married to Joseph Watt), Julia and Mary (married to Enos Alderman).

Isaac W. Levan was born on the 22d of October, 1818, on the farm in Exeter township, and removed, when a youth, to Pottstown, where he attended school. In 1827 Reading became his home. He was employed in the summer on the Schuylkill Canal and in the winter found his services in demand to carry the local mails. In 1836 he was indentured to John Yeager, in Philadelphia, as apprentice to the hatter's trade, and after a service of three years he worked as a journeyman. He was, in the spring of 1842, married to Catherine, daughter of John Yeager, of Philadelphia, who died on the 28th of July, 1883. Their children are John Y. (who died in 1884, married to Emma Rowe), Charles Y., Emily (married to Thomas Andrews, of Philadelphia), Catherine, Amelia (deceased) and Harry (deceased).

Mrs. Levan was a lady of many Christian virtues, active in the leading city charities, zealous in the promotion of all benevolent interests connected with her church, and exemplifying in her daily walk and conversation a well-founded and beautiful Christian character. Both Mr. and Mrs. Levan were members of the Second Reformed Church of Reading, in which the family have been active workers.

In 1847 Mr. Levan returned to Reading, and, under the firm-name of Levan & Faust, opened a store and began the manufacture of hats. This business connection being dissolved in 1863, he continued the enterprise as a retailer and manufacturer, becoming, in 1865, a manufacturer exclusively. In this he is still engaged. Beginning with little capital, by industry and judgment he established an extensive and successful business and amassed a competency. In politics Mr. Levan, until the outbreak of the war, was a Democrat. Circumstances then influenced a change in his views, since which time he has affiliated with the Republican party. He has represented both parties in the City Council. He was one of the organizers and is now president of the Penn National Bank. In business circles, and in all deliberative assemblies where experience combined with sound judgment are of consequence, Mr. Levan’s opinions command respect and consideration.

W. H. Reinoehl & Co. are the owners of a wool-hat factory on the southeast corner of Tenth and Spruce Streets, Reading. The business was instituted in 1866 by F. D. Nagle & Co., who were succeeded by Nagle & Reinoehl. In 1877 the present firm was formed composed of W. H. Reinoehl and O. B. Wetherhold. The main factory, three-story brick, with five other adjoining buildings, are all well equipped with good machinery and appliances. A fine grade of wool hats is made here, as well as medium grades in black and fancy colors. Seventy workmen are employed; eighty dozen hats are daily made.

G. W. Alexander & Co., hat manufacturers, of West Reading, are the successors of F. R. Frill & G. R. Alexander, who began the business in 1877, and in 1881 the present firm became the proprietors. They have invested forty-five thousand dollars in the business and employ seventy-six hands. Their goods are sold partly from their factory, though principally through New York commission houses.

Theodore Terrell and Ira W. Travis commenced the manufacture of hat blocks, flanges and hatters’ tools in 1881, at the corner of Franklin and Carpenter Streets. In 1882 they removed to their present manufactory, Ninth and Bingaman Streets. They have three thousand dollars invested in the business.

BRICK-MAKING.

The business of making bricks for building purposes was an early industry. Tile-making is mentioned amongst the first employments of the town. It is not known whether or not this branch here included bricks. Tradition says that the first brick house erected in Reading is the one-story small building still standing on the southwest corner of Seventh and Washington Streets. It was erected about 1800 for the German Reformed congregation as a school-house. The buildings theretofore erected were of stone, log and frame. In 1845 this business had reached a wonderful degree of development. In this year, in Reading, over seven millions of bricks were made by the following-named manufacturers, who then employed one hundred and twenty-seven workmen:

Building brick then cost four dollars a thousand. It may be stated in this connection that the increase of the population from 1840 to 1850 was eighty-seven per cent. This was attributed to improvements which arose directly from manufactures superinduced by legislation for tariff in 1842. And, among other things, it was said that “immediately after the passage of the tariff law of that year the business and enterprise of the town received a fresh impetus. New factories were started in various parts of the town; the coal trade was increased; large numbers of hands were employed in the railroad shops; people flocked from all quarters; houses became scarce; building operations were commenced on a larger scale than during any former period in the history of the town to accommodate the influx of new citizens."

Reading Fire-Brick Works, located on Canal Street, between Fourth and Fifth, were originated by William A. Wells in 1846, who, after carrying on the business for some years, sold out to Isaac Bertolett, and by him carried on until April, 1857, when Mr. Bertolett sold his interest to Isaac McHose and A. S. Thompson, who continued the business under the firm name of McHose & Thompson. Their annual capacity was two million bricks. On January 1, 1865, Levi Quier was admitted as a member of this firm. On January 1, 1870, the firm of McHose & Co., consisting of Isaac McHose, Levi Quier and Jerome L. Boyer, bought the interest of A. S. Thompson, and during the year 1870 the old works were rebuilt and enlarged, stocked with new and most improved machinery, capacity increased to three million five hundred thousand bricks per annum; employing from sixty to seventy workmen. The material used is all transported by railroad and canal from the celebrated fire-clay banks of New Jersey. Principal market is supplying the numerous blast furnaces, rolling-mills, foundries, etc., located in the Schuylkill and Lebanon Valley districts; special orders are often sent to more distant parts of this country. These works are connected by three lines of railroads, viz.: Philadelphia and Reading, Pennsylvania, Schuylkill Valley and Wilmington and Northern, and the Schuylkill Canal, giving it the very best of shipping facilities to all parts of the country.

Isaac McHose, who is of Scotch descent, is the son of Isaac McHose, who was born in Northampton County, Pa., in 1783, and died January 15, 1861, aged seventy-seven years. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Jonathan Laubach, of Lehigh County, whose children are John, Julia Ann, Hannah, Samuel, Levina, Isaac, Owen, William, Elizabeth and Josiah. Isaac McHose, lately president of the Keystone National Bank of Reading, was born in Hanover township, Lehigh County, December 6, 1822. He was educated in the public schools. His father having followed the occupation of a bricklayer, his son learned the trade, making a specialty of the construction of anthracite furnaces. In this he reached such perfection that his contracts always guaranteed a complete and satisfactory furnace before its delivery to the owner, which gave him a practical monopoly of the business throughout the iron region. In 1832 he removed to Reading, where he has since resided, and the same year purchased a small fire-brick works in that city; rebuilt, remodeled and extended it until it has become the largest and most successful manufactory of its kind in the United States. His business projects have been both diversified and prosperous. For many years he has been largely interested in the manufacture of iron. Upon the removal of the Keystone National Bank to Reading, he was solicited to take the presidency of the institution, though not an owner of its stock, which request he complied with. Mr. McHose is a gentleman of great business talent combined with practical experience. He has been very successful in his investments and possesses a competence. His name is a synonym of uprightness, strict integrity and honor wherever he is known, and he has been called by his fellow-citizens to serve them in various positions of trust. He has been a member of the Select branch of the City Council, of the Board of Control, and is also one of the Water commissioners. He was a Presidential elector on the Republican ticket in the campaign of 1884. His name was brought prominently before the Republican State Convention for the office of State treasurer by his friends and received a strong support. He is president of the Board of Trade of Reading and president of the Reading Public Library. Mr. McHose is an active member of St. Paul's Reformed Church of Reading, in which he has served as an elder for twenty-five years. He is much interested in benevolent and charitable institutions, aiding in the founding of the Womelsdorf Orphans' Home and serving as a director in that institution, while every worthy charity enlists his aid. A citizen of Reading writes that for fifteen years some orphan boy has received a collegiate education through the benevolence of Mr. McHose, and when one graduates another takes his place, some of these protégés having risen to honor and distinction. His ability and integrity have given him a prominent and leading position in his own city, and extended his reputation throughout the State. He has ever aimed in his business career to so invest his capital as to give employment to labor. He has manifested an active and practical interest in the Young Men’s Christian Association of Reading, and is at present chairman of its board of trustees. Mr. McHose was, on March 5, 1846, married to Letitia, daughter of Valentine Weider, of Lehigh County. Their children are Susan E. (Mrs. J. L. Boyer), of Reading; Ambrose A., of Columbia, Pa.; Wilson V. and Isaac, Jr., of Reading.

Printz’s Brick Works.—The large brick manufactury on North Tenth Street and Pricetown road was owned from 1856 to 1862 by John Printz and Michael Sands, as the firm of Printz & Sands. In 1862 they started a new yard on North Fifth Street and Centre Avenue. In 1865 Michael Sands sold his interest to Daniel D. Graul, and in 1877, J. L. Moyer was admitted as a partner to the firm, then known as Printz, Graul & Co. In 1880 this firm dissolved, and the business has since been continued by John Printz. Seventy-five to eighty hands are employed. Four million bricks per year are made at this yard.

In 1885 Mr. Printz extended his works to cover thirty acres, and began to manufacture fancy and ornamental bricks for house-fronts. He is preparing to carry on the kilns to their fullest capacity and to manufacture sixty-five thousand bricks per day, with one hundred and forty hands employed.

John H. Printz.—The Printz family have been residents of Reading from the beginning of the town. They are of German origin. John H. Printz is the son of John Printz, Jr., and was born at Reading March 31, 1833. His father was also born at Reading, carried on the trade of a carpenter and afterward the business of a contractor, and left seven surviving children,—Henry, William, Susan Ann, Christian, John H., Levi and Frederick. His mother was Rosanna Hill, of Spring (formerly Cumru) township, who died in 1866, aged sixty-six years. His father died in 1880, aged nearly eighty years. Mr. Printz was educated in the common schools. In 1844 he became an apprentice in the business of brick-making under John Darrah, who was then an extensive manufacturer, and after completing his apprenticeship and working as a journeyman till 1855, he began business for himself, continuing since that time in this department of industry. The kilns were then almost entirely south of Penn Street, in the vicinity of Eighth and Chestnut Streets, and their capacity was from fifty thousand to sixty thousand, excepting Darrah’s, whose kiln held one hundred and fifty thousand. Subsequently, as the city developed, the kilns were removed farther and farther north of Penn Street until they reached their present locality. On Ninth Street, in the vicinity of Elm and Buttonwood, many thousand of bricks were manufactured about the time and for some years after he began. The single mould was then used and it is still used. The double mould was tried, but it proved a failure. The clay was worked by hand and turned over repeatedly by a shovel, and this process continued till after the war, when horse-power was introduced. A machine for manufacturing brick was first tried here in 1856, and again in 1868, but it was a failure, the clay here not having been adapted, on account of numerous stones. The clay is still worked by hand and tempered by horse-power. Mr. Printz introduced the manufacture of ornamental brick in 1885, being the second manufacturer in this State. There are only three manufacturers of them in the United States,—one at Philadelphia, one at Reading and one at Wilmington. From 1880 to 1885 the average annual production of bricks at Reading was about twenty millions. Mr. Printz was the largest producer during the last three years, having employed seventy-five hands (including thirteen brick-makers) and produced four and a half million brick annually. He has been now thirty years in this industry, and has occupied the same stand, along the west side of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad at Marion Street, for the last seventeen years. During April, 1886, he employed one hundred and fifty hands and manufactured daily sixty-eight thousand brick, including ornamental. He had then five kilns in service, four at Reading and one at Birdsboro'. They are the largest in the county, capacity varying from one hundred and twenty thousand to two hundred and twenty thousand. Altogether there are five hundred hands employed in this business at Reading.

Mr. Printz served in the Common Council of Reading three times,—from the Third Ward, 1869 to 1871; from the Fourth Ward, 1880 to 1882; and again from the Third Ward from 1884 to 1886. He also officiated as constable of the southern district of Reading (that portion south of Penn Street) for two years, 1865 and 1866. He entered the order of Free Masonry in 1866, being a member of Chandler Lodge, No. 227. He was one of the Knights Templar excursion party which made a grand pilgrimage to San Francisco in 1883; and in 1885 he visited the New Orleans Exposition. He has traveled altogether through thirty-six States and Territories of the United States.

He was twice married,—first to Matilda Totton, who died in 1877; and then to Catharine Bulles. He has six children—John Thomas, Alice Catharine (married to George Clouser), Harry C., Anna, Laura and Bessie.

The Shenfelder brick-yard at Hockley Lane and Kissinger Streets, has been in successful operation since 1856. At this date A. Shenfelder and D. P. Shenfelder, his son, commenced making pressed, building and paving brick, and continued for twenty-eight years. In 1884, D. P. Shenfelder and H. P. Shenfelder, his son, purchased the works, and, under the name of D. P. Shenfelder & Son, have continued it to date. They manufacture bricks by machinery which turns out twenty thousand bricks per day. Thirty-two workmen are employed.

William Graul, James Katzermoyer and Mathias Moyer, trading as Graul & Co., commenced brick-making in 1878 at Sixth and Hockley Lane. They were the successors of Daniel Graul and J. L. Moyer, who started the brick-yard in 1876. Graul & Co. burn both pressed and common bricks for building purposes. They employ sixty-five hands, turning out three million five hundred thousand bricks per year.

Conrad Kaltenbach and Charles Focht commenced burning house and paving bricks on Second Street, near the Lebanon Valley Railroad bridge, in the year 1884, where they continue to do a large business. Fourteen men are regularly employed. The product of the year 1885 was seven hundred thousand bricks.

The other brick manufacturers of the city are William B. Kline, William Parker and Cornelius Rothenberger.

Simon Kline is the grandson of Henry Kline, who, on his emigration from Alsace, France, came to Berks County, and engaged in farming. His children were John, Abraham, Henry, Adam, Elizabeth, Sarah. Henry, of this number, was born in Alsace township, Berks County, where he combined the business of farming with the trades of a cooper and a weaver. He married Magdalena Shmale, daughter of John Shmale, of the same county. They had children,—John, Catharine (Mrs. William), Adam, Henry, Abraham, Sarah (Mrs. Jacob Brumbach), Daniel, Elizabeth (Mrs. Henry Diehl), Mary (Mrs. Perry Reifsnyder), Sophia (Mrs. David Clouser, and Simon. Simon Kline was born May 14, 1830, on the homestead farm in Alsace township, and in youth attended the schools of the neighborhood, after which he continued his studies in Reading. He then assisted his father in his various occupations until his twenty-first year, and, on the 30th of November, 1851, was married to Catharine, daughter of Henry Noll, of Ruscomb-manor township, Berks County, and granddaughter of Peter and Magdalena Keller Noll. Their children are Ezra, born September 13, 1852; Henry Adam, May 19, 1856 (deceased); Rebecca Minerva, May 7, 1858 (deceased); Mary Magdalena, August 23, 1859, married to Edmund Schlegel; Rebecca Catherine, January 24, 1861, married to William M. Fulton; Simon Sidenham, March 8, 1865; Elias, August 20, 1865 (deceased); George Oscar, July 19, 1866 and David Milton, August 25, 1868. Mr. Kline, during the two years succeeding his marriage, was employed in the purchase of wood-lands, which he cleared, a ready market being found for the wood in the county. He then removed to Reading and engaged in contracting, as also in the manufacture of bricks. Removing from Reading to Fleetwood, he devoted five years to the manufacture of bricks at this point, and returning again to Reading, continued the business combined with building and contracting in which he is still engaged, and has met with marked success as the result of honesty and thrift. He is a Democrat in politics. He has been connected by membership with various building organizations, but is now identified only with the Hampton Building Association. He is a member of Mt. Penn Lodge, No. 65 of Knights of Pythias and of Freedom Circle.

He is a member, and was formerly an Elder of the First Reformed Church of Reading, of which his wife and children are also members. The Fire-Brick Kilns of George J. Eckert, at 458 Canal Street, were built by Miller & Eckert in 1863. Two years later Mr. Miller retired from the business and Mr. Eckert assumed entire control. There are now three large kilns, the manufacturing capacity of which is one hundred thousand bricks per month. Twenty men are employed. The works cover a large area and a prosperous business is done.

George J. Eckert is the grandson of Philip Eckert, who was born June 18, 1756, and died September 10, 1828. He was married to Lydia Beck, born June 17, 1762. Their children were George, born September 9, 1782; Mary, born 1784; Susanna, born 1785; Catherine, born 1788; Peter, born 1790; Sarah, born 1792; Margaret, born 1794; Elizabeth, born 1795; Catherine (2d), born 1799; and Hannah, born 1803. George, the eldest of these children, was born near Shaefferstown, Lebanon County, and died on the 19th of January, 1854. He was married, January 26, 1809, to Sarah, daughter of Rudolph Resley, of South Lebanon township, Lebanon County, Pa., who was born December 16, 1787, and died January 12, 1879. Their children were Catherine, born 1809; Elizabeth, born 1811; Mary, born 1813; George, born 1815; Cyrus, born 1817; Philip, born 1820; William, born 1822; Rudolph, born 1825; George John, born February 14, 1827, and Aaron T., born in 1830; of whom the survivors are Catherine, William, Rudolph and George J.

The last-named was born in North Lebanon township, Lebanon County, and obtained his preparatory education at Lebanon, Pa., after which he entered Marshall College, Mercersburg, Pa., and was graduated on the 6th of September, 1852. The same fall, on becoming a citizen of Reading, he entered the law-office of Hon. William Strong as a student, and was admitted to practice in the several courts of Berks County April 28, 1855. He pursued his profession successfully until 1865, when it was abandoned for less sedentary employment. Having, in 1863, established a fire-brick factory, he devoted his time mainly to this enterprise, which has been enlarged and extended, and is still conducted by him. Mr. Eckert was, on the 26th of November, 1857, married to Rebecca, daughter of Isaac M. Gerhard, of Sheridan, Lebanon County, Pa. Their children are Isaac Gerhard, Rudolph Resley, Mintie S., Emma Rebecca, George, William (deceased) and Ellen. Isaac G. is married to Elizabeth Smith, of Luzerne County, Pa., his present residence.

Mr. Eckert was one of Reading's most patriotic citizens during the late war. He was active in the raising of recruits and in the equipment of the soldiery. He was in the military service for ninety days, during the invasion of Pennsylvania, and on July 6, 1863, was commissioned second lieutenant of Company C of the Forty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. He is an active and influential member of the Republican party in this county; he was a delegate to the State Republican Convention held at Pittsburg in 1863, and also a delegate to the National Convention of 1868, held at Chicago, which nominated General Grant for the Presidency; he was a member of the Select Council of Reading from 1866 to 1869, and of the Common Coun-man of the building committee on the occasion of the remodeling of the church in 1874-75.

Reading Terra-Cotta Works began operations in 1867, under the proprietorship of Sharff, Hagy & Co., who were succeeded in the ownership of it, in 1873, by E. S. Fox & Co., who now manufacture sewer-pipes, water-pipes, chimney-tops, heat-pipes, flues, garden, rustic and hanging vases, etc. The works are located at cil from 1876 to 1878. During this time he was instrumental in defeating the bill authorizing the making of loans by the city, which measure has materially reduced her debt. He participated in the organization of the Union Bank of Reading, and was for three years a member of its board of directors. He is a member, and was for years one of the trustees, of the First Reformed Congregation of Reading, and chair-the foot of Franklin Street, and cover an area of two hundred and thirty by two hundred and forty feet. There are two down-draft kilns for burning the products of their manufacture. A thirty horse-power engine, with a fifty horse-power boiler, are used to produce a motive force to drive the machinery. A steam pipe-press, capable of making three hundred feet of drain-pipe per hour, is in operation.

The Reading Pottery.—The manufacture of stone-ware, earthen-ware and glazed ware has been extensively carried on since 1864, on Schuykill Avenue, by Daniel P. Shenfelder. He makes large quantities of fruit-jars, crocks and stone-ware for farmers’ use. Two large kilns are in operation and ten hands employed. The machinery is run by a large engine. Twenty thousand dollars are invested in this business.

Breweries, Malt-Houses and Distilleries.

Frederick Lauer was born in the province of Palatine (now Rhenish Bavaria) October 14, 1810, and was the son of George and Katrina Lauer. He attended school until twelve years of age, and during that time became familiar with the French language. His father had been one of the largest property-owners in the country and raised the first liberty pole on the French borders. He suffered a penalty for his liberal and patriotic views, and for nine years was unable to gather any crops, owing to the presence of the army. He emigrated to America, with his family, and landed in Baltimore in August, 1823, and immediately thereafter came to Reading, where his married daughter was then living. Here, for a short time, his son Frederick became a butcher-boy, assisting his brother-in-law. He left this employment when his father began the brewing business at Womelsdorf, Berks County, and assisted him there until his removal to Reading, where he continued his calling. During this time the lad received four months’ schooling (three of them at a night-school), but many of his leisure hours were devoted to study. In the spring of 1826 his father returned to Reading and established a small brewery in an old log house, built many years before by one of the founders of the town. Frederick, who was then but sixteen years of age, was made foreman and clerk, and, with one assistant, did all the brewing. He built up his first kettle with a capacity of five barrels, which, in two months, was increased to ten. He rose at two A.M., finished the brewing by daylight, and after breakfast would deliver the beer to customers in town. In 1835 he became proprietor of the brewery, enlarged it, and, with the aid of more assistants, extended the business. During the first five years nothing was made but what was known as “strong beer.” The brewing of ale and porter was begun in 1831, and of lager beer in 1844. The site of the brewery in 1826 was in the midst of a swamp. The improvements which have resulted from Mr. Lauer’s industry and tact are truly wonderful. In 1849 he began to buy up vacant lots, and therein quarried extensive vaults in the solid lime-stone rock for the storage of lager beer. In 1866 he erected a large brewery on this locality, containing all the latest improvements and in every respect complete. In connection with this brewery was a fine park, with shade-trees and other adornments.

The civic virtues and public spirit of Frederick Lauer were justly appreciated by his fellow-citizens. He represented his ward in the Town Council, and he was greatly instrumental in securing the incorporation of Reading as a city, in 1847. In 1867 he was chosen president of the Select Council. He was one of the organizers of the Berks County Agricultural Society, was its president for several years, and, to the time of his death, one of its most active members; was for many years in the board of directors of the Reading and Columbia Railroad Company, a member of the Reading Dispensary Board, Reading Benevolent Society, Reading Relief Society and Reading Board of Trade, and one of the trustees of the Keystone State Normal School.

Frederick Lauer was a member of the Masonic fraternity, a companion of De Molay Commandery of Knights Templar, and a Past Master of Lodge No. 62, of Free and Accepted Masons. He was a sincere Christian, Lutheran by denomination, and for many years a vestryman and trustee of Trinity Church of Reading.

His business interests forbidding the acceptance of political office, he declined offered Congressional nomination. As a delegate to the National Convention at Charleston, S. C., in 1860, he determinedly opposed secession, and earnestly endeavored to secure the adoption of a platform and the nomination of a candidate for the Presidency that would guarantee the preservation of the Union. True to his loyal principles, when the struggle for the maintenance of the Union came, he equipped, at his own expense, a whole company of men, which served throughout the war in the One Hundred and Fourth Pennsylvania Regiment.

He was an intimate friend of the celebrated Dr. Hebbe, the Swedish revolutionist, who was driven from his native land. He was also in regular correspondence with the United States consuls abroad, interchangeing views and keeping well informed on foreign affairs and in advance of the movements which afterward took place. His efforts in connection with the internal revenue tax on fermented liquors were invariably crowned with success, and, as president of the Brewers' Congress, he was indefatigable in the service of his trade. Shrewd, far-seeing and industrious, he made his establishment one of the most successful in the United States.

Mr. Lauer was married, May 9, 1838, to Mary, daughter of Peter and Elizabeth Guldin. The children of the union are George Frederick, born November 2, 1850; Franklin Pierce, born November 2, 1852; and one who died an infant.

Mr. Lauer died September 5, 1883, in the seventy-third year of his age. On the occasion of his decease suitable resolutions were passed by the Lager Bier Brauer Verein, the Ale and Porter Brewers' Association of Pennsylvania and the United States Brewers' Association. The latter association erected, in Reading, an imposing monument to his memory, which was unveiled on the 23d of May, 1885.

bey, as a partner, in 1880. The extensive establishment which they now own is located on the corner of River and Hockley Streets, and was erected in 1869. The buildings are a three-story brewery, a six-story brick malt-house, two refrigerators and two ice-houses. They cover a tract of three acres.

In the malt-house are five germinating-floors, one storage-floor and two large drying-kilns. Two engines, producing sixty horse-power, and two large duplex boilers, of seventy-five horse-power, are used. Thirty hands are employed. During the year 1885 twenty thousand barrels of beer and porter were manufactured and sold by Peter Barbey & Son. The full brewing capacity of this establishment is thirty-five thousand barrels, and the full malting capacity seventy-five thousand bushels of barley malt.

Peter BarbeY, the originator of this brewery, was born November 9, 1825, in Dierbach, Canton of Borgzabern Rhinepfaltz, Bavaria, and is a son of Christopher and Katrina BarbeY. He attended the schools of his native country until the age of fourteen, when he entered the brewing establishment of Peter BarbeY, his uncle, for the purpose of learning the business of a brewer, remaining three years, at the expiration of which time he became thoroughly familiar with the art of brewing. He sought employment in France and Switzerland, in which countries he spent four years, adding, meanwhile, largely to his knowledge of brewing by practical experience. Returning home at the age of twenty-one years, he was drafted, and served four years in the army as a member of a cavalry regiment, at the end of which time he emigrated to America, and, proceeding at once to Philadelphia, he engaged for two and a half years in the pursuit of his trade. Removing to Reading, he entered the employ of Frederick Lauer for one year, and soon after opened a saloon. In 1860 he began his prosperous career as a brewer in the city of Reading, which business he has conducted with gratifying success, and is now the senior proprietor of the above described establishment.

Mr. BarbeY was married to Rosina, daughter of Philip Kuntz, of Rhenish Bavaria. They had two children,—Katrina, a daughter, now deceased, and John, at present associated with his father in business. In politics Mr. BarbeY is a Democrat but has never been an aspirant for office; he is a director of the Keystone National Bank, and a member of Tentonia Lodge, No. 358, of Free and Accepted Masons, and of Germania Lodge, Independent Order of Odd-Fellows.

Deppen's Brewery, on Chestnut Street, was established in 1845, by N. A. Felix, who, until 1874, a period of twenty-nine years, made lager beer, porter and ale in large quantities, and during that time added various improvements. Mr. Felix died in 1874 and the managers of his estate conducted the business until 1879, when Dr. William P. Deppen bought the brewery and has since had an increasing demand for the product of his manufacture. The buildings, which cover a large area, include the brewery proper, a malt-house and two ice-houses. The establishment is furnished with a large engine, a boiler and all necessary appliances for making beer.

Keller's Brewery is located on Ash Street and is owned and operated by Samuel C. Keller and Otto Eyring. The brewery was erected in 1850 by a Mr. Hoyer. In 1877 Samuel C. Keller purchased it and in 1884 admitted his present partner. They now brew what is widely known as the "Reading Lager Beer and Porter." The grounds are an acre in extent and five buildings are occupied. Two engines, with a combined power of eighty horses, are used. Twelve men are employed. The amount of yearly business is sixty thousand dollars and the interests are prospering.

The City Brewery is situated at 38 and 40 South Seventh Street, and was built in 1874 by Abraham Peltzer, who then began the brewing of lager and Weiss beer. The building is thirty by two hundred and fifty feet, and includes a brewery, ice-house and storage-rooms. Nearly all of his beer is consumed in the city.

The Mal't-House between Laurel and Muhlenberg Streets, on the line of Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, was built in 1863 by Frederick Shouldt and Moses K. Graeff, who continued as partners in the manufacture of malt from barley, to the amount of thirty-two thousand bushels annually, until 1867, when Mr. Shouldt sold his interest to his partner, who is the present owner. The large buildings now used cover an area of an acre and are three and four stories high. The capacity of the establishment is seventy-five thousand bushels of malted grain per year.

The MALT-HOUSE of Hagy & Pott, on Third Street, north of Buttonwood, was built in 1882, by the present proprietors, who then owned a malt-house on Orange Street, near Chestnut, which they purchased from Frederick Shouldt, who started it in 1876. The Third Street malt-house has eighty feet front and two hundred and fifty feet depth. Sixty thousand bushels of barley are malted annually. An eighteen horsepower engine and a twenty-five horse-power upright boiler are used. The entire apartments are two large drying-rooms, three storage-rooms and one large double kiln. Two elevators are used. This firm, composed of Walton K. Hagy and Benjamin Pott, show evidences of prosperity.

NEVERSINK DISTILLERY was built on northeast corner of Eleventh and Muhlenberg Streets, in 1857, by Hill & Wolfkill, and the business was begun the same year and continued by them until 1862, when Samuel Buch purchased the entire interest and has since manufactured whiskies in large quantities. The original capacity of this distillery was one hundred and fifty gallons per day. When it came under the ownership of Samuel Buch, the main building was greatly enlarged and five additional ones were erected, one of which is a bonded warehouse, capable of holding three thousand barrels. Improved machinery is used and now eight hundred gallons of whiskey are made every twenty-four hours. A forty horse-power engine and a sixty horse-power boiler are used as a motive-power. Eight hands are employed.

TANNERS.

The Kerper Tannery, now the oldest manufactory of its kind in Reading, was built on a lot originally conveyed by the heirs of Penn to Conrad Bower in 1753. Isaac Levan purchased the property, in 1761, of the original grantee, and the same year began to manufacture the first leather in the town. He followed his chosen occupation for many years, and supplied the early cordwainers of the olden time in the new town of Reading and its vicinity with the necessary leather to make the boots and shoes for the industrious populace. John Dieffenbach became the successor of Isaac Levan and conducted the business until 1825, when Abraham Kerper purchased the tannery and worked it with great success until 1856. The year last named Henry Kerper, the present owner, purchased it, made extensive improvements of various kinds, extended the tanning facilities and increased the number of vats to one hundred and twenty-five. In 1884, owing to its position near the heart of the city, Mr. Kerper discontinued the tannery and is the proprietor of a leather and shoe-finding establishment at 124 South Sixth Street.

WINTER & GOETZ conducted an extensive business in the manufacture of glove kid leather at their tannery on Canal Street, at the foot of Pine Street. The business was begun in 1869 on Jefferson Street, at the River road crossing, by Blatz & Winter. Upon the retirement of Mr. Blatz, in 1875, Ferdinand Goetz purchased his interest and the present firm was formed. Owing to an increasing business, the old tannery and site were sold. The firm then purchased the present site, and on it, in 1883, erected a tannery building, two hundred and twenty-five feet front on Canal Street and one hundred and forty feet in depth to the canal. The firm have forty-four employees. The amount of business done yearly is one hundred and ten thousand dollars, and the amount of investment is sixty thousand dollars. Through a branch establishment at No. 180 William Street, New York City, the manufactured goods of this tannery are sold to the general trade.

De Long Brothers, tanners and curriers, own an establishment on the corner of Ninth and Muhlenberg Streets. This industry was founded by Stroup & Co., in 1860, on the same site. In 1865 Merkle & Co. became the owners. Manasses and Michael De Long bought the tannery and land adjoining in 1868 and made many important improvements and extended the business. One acre is now occupied by this tannery. In 1870 John De Long was admitted an active partner, and in 1872 Jacob B. Fricker became a silent partner. On January 1, 1886, Michael De Long retired and since then Manns and John De Long, with J. B. Fricker, have continued the business under the name of De Long Brothers. A twenty horse-power engine, with a forty horse-power tubular boiler, furnish the motive-power for this establishment. One hundred vats are used in tanning, having a capacity of five thousand sides of hides and four thousand calf-skins per year. The firm employs twenty-five workmen. The amount of yearly business done is eighty thousand dollars. Since 1868 the business has been more than doubled. In connection with tannery, this firm has a commission house at No. 301 North Third Street, Philadelphia, through which most of the products of the tannery are sold.

George F. Winter, tanner and currier, on the northwest corner of Second and Chestnut Streets, now owns what for more than half a century was known as the “Old Dutch Tannery,” located on the same premises, and conducted for many years by Winter & Gabriel. The present proprietors purchased the tannery in 1864. The capacity is one thousand hides per year. One large bark-mill and thirty vats are used.

CIGAR-MAKING.

The manufacture of cigars began in Reading about the year 1800, and from that date to 1850 the prominent manufacturers of the town were James Morris, John Eyrich, Samuel Eyrich, Isaac James, J. & E. Eyrich, son of John, Philip Albright, Gosham Wolf, John Maltzberger, J. & G. W. Hautsch, C. Brenneiser and William Harman. The tobacco used in making cigars at first was obtained from Kentucky; manufacturers visited that State annually and purchased a sufficient supply for the entire year. The prices paid ranged from three to seven cents a pound. About 1835 tobacco was introduced from Lancaster and York Counties. Cigar-makers generally made from eight hundred to fifteen hundred cigars per day. A few made as many as two thousand per day. If an experienced workman could not make one thousand per day, he was considered ordinary. The wages paid were five, six and seven cents a hundred. The cigars were sold at rates ranging from one dollar and a half to two dollars per thousand. The total manufacture in 1840 was about forty thousand cigars daily. Possibly of this number, one-half were made in the country districts surrounding Reading. The country cigars were made mostly for Mr. Eyrich. The country cigar-makers would buy the leaf tobacco from him and then sell him the cigars they manufactured. He bad, at times, one half a million cigars on hand. Most of the cigars made, and which were sold at from three to seven for a cent, were consumed in Reading and vicinity. There was then more smoking, in proportion to the population, than at the present day. On the counter of every tavern a box of cigars always stood, whose contents were free to all guests. The workers in tobacco then were almost entirely men and boys, the latter being strippers. The employment of females was begun about 1870. Chewing tobacco was manufactured by Morris & Eyrich. Since 1840 the business of cigar-making has gradually increased, a better quality of cigars have been made, more skillful workmen employed, until at the present day it is a very valuable and productive industry in the city of Reading. According to the report of the Board of Trade of the city for the year 1882, there were then eleven establishments, with an invested capital of $119,000; number of hands employed three hundred and forty-eight, who received in wages $54,635; the value of the product, $271,000. The number of establishments has lately increased.

The wholesale tobacco house of Crouse & Co., on South Sixth Street, is quite an extensive establishment. The business was begun at the same site, in 1836, by Hautsch & Bro., who were succeeded in order by Hautsch & Lyon, Hautsch & Crouse and the present firm, composed of Daniel W. Crouse, George W. Crouse and George W. Hautsch. One hundred and fifty hands are employed. A large building is used. The same firm has a branch house at 168 Chambers Street, New York.

The manufacture of cigars and sale of manu-manufactured tobacco, at No. 707 Penn Street, Reading, was commenced in 1876, by D. C. & H. H. Hillegass. In 1879 D. C. Hillegass formed a co-partnership with John R. Mast, under the name of Hillegass & Mast, as packers and wholesale dealers, and established the warehouse at No. 728 Penn Street, with packing-house at No. 511 Cherry Street. In 1882 D. C. Hillegass withdrew from the firm and commenced business as a wholesale dealer in cigars and leaf tobacco, at No. 23 South Sixth Street, with warehouses for storing and packing on Cherry, Pearl and South Sixth Streets. He employed forty hands and purchased the products of twenty manufactories in different portions of Berks Co.

The Cigar Manufactory, at No. 728 Penn Street, conducted by Hillegass & Mast from 1879 until 1882, was continued by John R. Mast until 1883. He then, with H. B. Bausman, commenced the sale of leaf tobacco, having a warehouse at No. 636 Court Street. Under the name of Bausman & Mast a large business were transacted; fifty thousand dollars was invested and thirty hands employed. On January 1, 1886, this firm dissolved, and a new one was formed at the same location, with J. S. Wisler, John R. Mast and H. Elwood Reifsnyder as partners, who, in 1886, erected a large manufactory on Cherry Street, below Eighth Street.

Glaser & Frame own an extensive cigar-factory on Spruce Street, between Eighth and Ninth. The same firm, composed of N. G. Glaser and George C. Frame, began business on a smaller scale, at No. 13 South Sixth Street, in 1879, to make a fine grade of cigars, which soon were in great demand, and the firm, in order to extend their business, moved to their present location. In addition to their own factory this firm controls the product of twenty other factories, located in Berks, Lancaster and York Counties. In the Reading factory two hundred and fifty hands are employed, and amount of capital invested is ninety thousand dollars. Seven traveling agents sell their goods to the general trade. At a branch establishment, owned by Glaser & Frame, located at Seneca, N. Y., known as the Seneca Cigar Company, twenty agents are employed to sell to the retail trade through New York and the New England States. The firm also imports Havana and Sumatra five grade leaf tobacco. A very large and successful business is done.

Miscellaneous Manufactures.

Reading Cotton-Mill.—Soon after the passage of the "General Manufacturing Law" of April 9, 1849, the capitalists and business men of Reading made a second effort to introduce a cotton manufacturing establishment. A meeting was held by them on May 26, 1849; and a second meeting on 14th of June following, at which a company was recommended under the law of 1849, with the name of "Reading Manufacturing Company," and a capital of two hundred thousand dollars, in four thousand shares of fifty dollars each, and a term of twenty years. On the 18th of August following, at a meeting, a report was made that one hundred and fifty thousand dollars of the stock had been subscribed for; and on the 17th of November a meeting was held to elect thirteen directors, which was spirited and polled over twenty-two hundred votes. Subsequently a new board was elected, and the charter and subscriptions thereto were recorded June 17, 1850. The capital stock was fixed at two hundred and twenty thousand dollars, or forty-four hundred shares. There were five hundred and fifty-five subscribers who took all the stock, the largest being Charles T. James, of Providence, R. I., one thousand shares; Farmers' Bank, Reading, two hundred shares; F. A. M. Hiester, Reading, one hundred shares; Samuel Bell, Reading, one hundred shares; H. A. Muhlenberg, Reading, ninety-eight shares.

The county commissioners subscribed for forty shares.
The company shortly before had purchased ground and issued proposals. The contract was awarded to C. T. James, for one hundred and ninety thousand dollars, and mill to contain eighty-one hundred and ninety-six spindles. The ground was broken May 2, 1850, and the building was completed and put in operation in December, 1851. The dimensions of the building: Width, sixty-eight; length, two hundred and seventy-four feet; self-operating mule spindles, 11,204; and looms, three hundred. Steam engine, two hundred horse-power; and daily production estimated at ninety-three hundred yards.

In 1852 the production of muslin, in yards, was 1,578,859. In 1853 the production of muslin, in yards, was 2,186,927. The number of hands employed in 1853 was three hundred and twenty-four—men, thirty-six; boys, seventy-seven; women and girls, two hundred and eleven—and wages paid, $44,832.15. During this year the company exhibited manufactured goods at Crystal Palace Exhibition, New York, and a bronze medal was awarded for fine brown sheeting, its evenness of thread and perfection in weaving. The company continued operations till February, 1860, when the stockholders decided to sell the factory; and it was accordingly sold on March 28, 1860, for one hundred and fifty-two thousand four hundred and sixty dollars, to Garner & Co., of New York. The total cost was two hundred and twenty thousand dollars. The panic of 1857 was the direct cause of the sale. This was the first large enterprise of the kind started at Reading.

This extensive establishment, located on South Ninth Street, covering an entire square, or seven acres in area, is now in full operation under the firm of Garner & Co., who employ two hundred and twenty hands. Thirty mules, running sixteen thousand spindles, are used in the manufacture of Silesia goods. The product of this factory is now shipped direct to the print-works owned by the same firm in New York City. A three hundred horse-power engine, with three accompanying tubular boilers, run the extensive machinery. The weekly production for the present year, 1886, is fifty thousand yards of goods.

The Reading Woollen-Mills, on North Fourth Street, are owned by J. G. Leinbach & Co. The mills were built in 1859, by Robert M. Shouse, for the manufacture of checkered goods and gingham. In 1864 they were fitted up as woolen and cotton-mills and operated by Shouse & Leinbach. In 1875 J. G. Leinbach rented the mills and took in as partners A. S. Leinbach, John Shadle and E. Davis. The following year the firm of J. G. Leinbach & Co., purchased the mills. Four additional buildings were erected, covering an entire area of one acre. Sixty hands are employed in the mills and six traveling salesmen. Amount of capital invested, one hundred thousand dollars. The motive force is produced by a forty-five horse-power engine and two thirty horse-power cylinder boilers. One mule and three jacks, run twelve hundred and sixteen spindles in this mill.

Paper-Mills.—Jacob Bushing is the proprietor of the Reading, Packerach and Tulpehocken Paper-Mills, all of which are in this city.

The Tulpehocken Mill was built in 1856. At this mill a fine quality of Manilla paper is made and twenty-five employees are at work. The Reading Paper-Mill was built in 1865. Book-paper is made at this mill and forty-five hands are employed. The Packerach Mill was built in 1871. The manufactured product of this mill is book-paper, and fifty hands are employed.

The Artistic Glass-Works are owned by Joseph Bournique & Co., who do a large business at the factory on the corner of Ninth and Laurel Streets. The firm is composed of Joseph and Adolph Bournique, L. and J. P. Kremp and Augustus Rolland. Fifteen glass-blowers are employed. Glass lamps, globes, vases, toilet-sets and many kinds of fancy glassware are made. The specialties are gas and electric globes, dome shades, white enameled ware. Many exquisite designs are made.

West Reading Planing-Mills, on Spruce Street, below Third, were built in 1866 by Eisenhower, Fink & Co., who were the proprietors until the death of the senior member of the firm, in 1877, when the present owners, J. Fink and A. Huyett, as J. Fink & Co., succeeded. Sixty hands are employed in the manufacture of sash, shutters, doors, blinds and other varieties of building materials. These mills extend one hundred and ten feet front on Spruce and an entire square along the side, to Pine Street. A fifty horse-power engine, with an eighty horse-power boiler, drive the machinery of these extensive mills. Thirty-nine varieties of machines have recently been added to increase the manufacturing capacity.

KLINE & SHUNK (LIMITED).—On the 2d of January, 1884, the firm of Kline & Shunk (Limited) took possession of the large steam planing-mill located at the corner of Franklin and Carpenter Streets, for many years previously occupied by J. H. Cheatham. Aaron K. Kline, the senior member of this firm, is a son of the late David B. Kline, of Exeter township. Previous to entering the firm Frederick Shunk had been foreman at this mill for thirteen years. The firm manufactures and sells in this and adjoining counties, doors, window-sash, shutter-blinds, window-frames, door-frames, mouldings, brackets, furniture and a great variety of builders' material of various kinds. They use a sixty horse-power engine and employ forty-five mechanics. There is connected with this establishment a lumber-yard on Spruce Street, Reading, used for the storage and drying of lumber.

BUILDERS.—Many prominent builders have been produced in Reading during the last forty years. All of them have sprung from the working-class of citizens. Their energy, enterprise and industry have contributed incalculable wealth to this community. As the population of the city multiplied, the wants of the community for dwellings and buildings increased, and the builders satisfied these wants. Some of the more prominent builders before 1870 were George Foos, Joseph Henry, William Henry, Samuel Summons, John Fink, Nathan M. Eisenhower, William B. Hertzol, Benvenile Hemmig, Daniel Spohn, Henry Heckman, Samuel Koch, Miller & Craig, George Garst, George Mast, Jacob Graeff, Dickinson Kutz, John Printz, David Gross, Benjamin Oster, William Wells and Daniel Mast; and since 1870, Daniel C. Roth, Jacob Kline, William Brison, William Shatell, John Augstadt, Herman Rummel, Edward K. Mull, Christian Frautz, Daniel Helfrich, Peter Helfrich, David Stephan, Jacob D. Shollenberger, Henry D. Fisher, Frederick Fisher, William Myers, John Schaeffer, Jacob Miller, Gabriel Matz and David Moser.

Business men have also erected numerous houses in this time, among them being Philip Zieber, John C. Maitland, John B. Grissinger, Jacob B. Fricker, Jeremiah Benner, Jacob S. Livingwood, John R. Bechtel and George M. Erneutruit.

DANIEL SPOHN, a prominent and successful builder and contractor, born in Reading, Dec. 15, 1815. He learned the trade of a carpenter under his father, Solomon Spohn. At an early age he started out for himself without any capital, but by well-directed industry and close application he soon developed a large business and eventually became one of the most prominent, progressive and successful builders in Reading. For many years he was a master-builder, erecting rows of houses at a time and thereby assisting in the rapid growth of the city. These houses disposed of on easy terms—mostly to workingmen—as an incentive to them to acquire their own homes and become practically interested in the welfare and development of Reading. He built some of the finest structures in Reading, including several school-houses, the city hall and the rear of the Reading Fire Insurance Company building. The last public building in which he was interested was the "Reading Relief Building." This was erected by him in 1874. Many years ago he directed his attention to the improvement of South Sixth Street, below Franklin, and he succeeded in building up many fine dwellings, in this way doing more than any other persons toward the permanent improvement of that section of the city. And he was not only engaged in improvements of this kind in one section of Reading, but in several parts at the same time. By his enterprise he afforded employment to many carpenters and laborers, and patronized business and material men of various kinds. He was an earnest friend of Building and Saving Associations. Communities are created and enriched by men of foresight, energy and determination, such as Mr. Spohn. He enjoyed the entire confidence of the many prominent men who employed him. As an illustration of this, Hon. W. J. Woodward (president judge), in proposing to erect his residence on North Fifth Street, selected and made a contract with him, providing for payments at certain periods during the progress of the building. One day Judge Woodward offered him two thousand dollars in advance long before it was due. Mr. Spohn council for several terms—1865-67, and 1868–72—and whilst in that body performed valuable public services on a number of important committees.

Mr. Spohn assisted in organizing the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Reading, and, for a time, acted as one of its directors. He was also connected with the Odd Fellows.

Notwithstanding his many business engagements, he found time to become interested in poultry and pigeons. He was passionately fond politely declined it, but Judge Woodward insisted upon his accepting it, saying that he was thoroughly satisfied of his honesty. This is an evidence of the esteem in which he was held.

Having been so deeply interested in the practical development of Reading, he naturally directed his attention to its local government, and his fellow-citizens were not slow in appreciating his ability and energy in their behalf. He represented the fourth ward in the common of the latter, having had on hand for many years, and till his decease, a large and valuable stock of the finest fancy birds.

He was a kind and indulgent husband and father, a warm friend and good neighbor.

He died on August 8, 1875, of paralysis, in the sixtieth year of his age. He was married to Sarah Reiff, the descendant of an old, prominent and influential family in Chester County, with whom he left nine surviving children,— Annie, Emma (intermarried with John Moore, a prominent farmer near Millbach, Lebanon County), Kate (intermarried with Henry C. Jones, auditor of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company), Llewellyn, Jacob R., Mary (intermarried with Alexander Shartle), Charles D., Clara (intermarried with Wallace Wise) and Rosa.

Jacob Reiff Spohn was born at Reading, February 25, 1845, and educated in the common schools. He became an employee of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company at an early age, and, by industry, unusual ability and remarkable devotion to the interests of the company, he rose step by step in the confidence of the officials, and was promoted from one position to another until he came to fill the position of general division freight agent, for which he was thoroughly qualified. He died at Philadelphia on October 9, 1883, much lamented by the highest officials of the company, who attended his funeral in a body. As a tribute of their high esteem, many of the employees united in erecting a fine, large monument over his grave in Charles Evans' Cemetery. He left a widow and son, Harry Reiff Spohn.

Paper-Box Factories.—Augustus Webeck began the manufacture of paper-boxes in 1865 at No. 1240 Perkiomen Avenue. Twenty-five men are employed at this establishment and twenty thousand dollars of business is annually done. Hat-boxes and hardware-boxes of many kinds and varieties are made.

The paper-box factory at No. 527 South Sixth Street, owned by Abraham Trate, was commenced in 1872. He makes hat-boxes and many varieties of paper-boxes for the shipping and handling goods. About a dozen workmen are regularly employed.

Benjamin Mohn established a paper-box manufactory at No. 211 Maple Street in 1874. His business is quite extensive in the manufacture of hat-boxes for the trade in Reading.

Albert Thalheimer established his box factory July 10, 1866, and then employed three workmen. As his business increased he invented and introduced improved machinery, and enlarged his factory, located on Cedar Street, near Walnut. He now has sixty-three employees, consumes twenty-five thousand feet of lumber weekly, and makes cigar-boxes, shelf-boxes and boxes for general purposes in large quantities. Seven saws are kept running. The printing department is connected with the factory. Mr. Thalheimer is also proprietor of the "Reading Organ Action Works," established in 1885, at Reading.

Daniel Rapp conducts carriage-shops on Poplar Street. He began the same business on Court Street in 1867, and removed to his present place in 1872. He employs sixteen workmen.

E. W. Kreider's shops, on Pearl Street, were started in 1855 by Conrad Krebs. In 1872 the present owner purchased the shops, and has since run them. About a dozen employees are at work.

Keystone Coal-Dumping-Wagon Factory, near the Lebanon Valley Railroad bridge, was started in 1882 by H. S. Bromhart and Isaac B. Ritter, as the firm of Bromhart & Ritter. They construct a convenient dumping-wagon of their own invention, which is patented. This wagon has met with a large sale. Nine men are employed in this factory.

Reading Fire Apparatus Works, near the Lebanon Valley Railroad bridge, was founded in 1881 by theSpawn & Dennis Manufacturing Company, who in 1882 disposed of them to the present owner, W. W. Wunder. Hook-and-ladder trucks, hose-carriages, carts, reels, extension ladders, fire extinguishers and a variety of other apparatus necessary to extinguish fire are made. Thirteen workmen are employed and fifteen thousand dollars of business is done yearly. Among the important towns supplied with apparatus from these works are Charleston, S. C., Augusta, Ga., Poughkeepsie, Jamestown, Salamanca, N. Y., Birmingham and Danbury, Conn.

Thomas P. Kinsey, mechanical engineer and solicitor of patents, at No. 102 South Third Street, began business in 1876, and makes designs, drafts, plans, elevations, specifications and estimates of bridges, boilers, mills, mines and furnace equipments.

The Furniture and Upholstery Manufactory of Schrader & Kline, No. 650 Penn Street, was established in 1883 for the manufacture of special articles in the furniture and upholstery line to order. They have a large four-story factory, extending from Penn to Cherry Street, and employ forty hands in filling orders for dealers' supplies in Pennsylvania and surrounding States; with forty-five thousand dollars invested in the business. E. M. Schrader and L. S. Kline compose the firm.

Enterprise Furniture Manufactory was originated in the year 1869 by Jacob H. Deyscher, in a building on South Third Street. In 1874 he opened a retail furniture salesroom at 409 South Fifth Street in addition. Owing to the financial depression of 1873, the proprietor suffered losses; so that in 1878, the business passed into the hands of his wife, Anna K. Deyscher, who is the present owner, Mr. Deyscher still acting as general superintendent. The factory covers a half acre of ground and large quantities of furniture, packing-boxes and box lumber are made. Thirteen employees are engaged, thirty-five thousand dollars are invested and a business of sixty thousand dollars is done yearly.

The Anchor Bending-Works, on Second and Franklin Streets, have been in operation since 1879, when Jacob A. Leippe commenced the manufacture of the Anchor shafts and rims, which are extensively manufactured and sold. An area of an acre is occupied by the works and the storage-rooms for prepared lumber and manufactured products. Twenty-five men are employed.

Wheelwrights.—The name of Goodman as a wheelwright and carriage-builder has been prominently and favorably known to the citizens of Reading and Berks County since 1824. John Goodman then began this business on Court Street, between Seventh and Eighth Streets. In 1826 he removed to shops on Lemon Street, near Franklin. He enjoyed a large trade over an extensive territory. In 1854 he admitted as a partner his son, Henry Goodman. In 1866 the latter was given entire control of the business and has since conducted it.

Shadell & Pegley own a shop at 340 Church Street, Jacob Troop at 15 North Third St., and Christian Bridenstine at 901 North Eighth St.

George W. Biehl, proprietor of the large carriage manufactory on Pearl Street, between Cherry and Franklin, and of the salesroom, at No. 31 South Fifth Street, commenced the business in 1877 on Cherry Street, below Sixth, and in 1881 removed to his present location. Mr. Biehl makes a specialty of furnishing large invoices of manufactured carriage-bodies, wooden gear and builders' supplies to the trade in the Northern and Western States. His salesrooms are filled with carriages, phaetons, sleighs, etc. He employs thirty-eight workmen, has fifteen thousand dollars invested in the manufactory and his yearly sales amount to thirty-five thousand dollars.

William H. Wetherhold possesses an extensive carriage manufactory on Poplar Street, which was originated by him in 1862. The departments are wheelwright-shop, blacksmith-shop, trimming, paint and storage-rooms, which together cover a large area. Many kinds of carriages and wagons are made at this factory by forty workmen. The annual business done is about eighteen thousand dollars. The carriages of this factory are known over a large territory.

The Bard Spoke-Works, owned by Harry S. Bard, were established in 1864 by Roland & Smith, who made tool-handles and spokes until 1875, when Mr. Bard purchased the works. He has since erected three additional buildings, and manufactures banded hub wheels, spokes, felloes and handles. Fifteen men are employed.

The Pipe-Organ Factory at No. 824 Court Street was established in Reading, during the year 1856, by the present proprietor, Samuel Bohler, who for thirty years has built pipe-organs for churches. Mr. Bohler is a native of Switzerland, learned the business of organ-making under his father, who also was a builder of organs. Sixty-seven large pipe organs, for various churches in the Eastern and Middle States, whose prices ranged from three hundred to six thousand dollars, were made by the Reading factory. The three-manual-pipe organ, with forty stops, now owned by the St. John's Lutheran Church at Allentown, is the largest one constructed here. First ten-stop organ made in Reading, by Messrs. Bohler & Son, July, 1850.

The Lumber-Yard of F. P. Heller, at No. 205 Penn Street, was first opened by Solomon F. Snyder in 1850, and purchased by the present owner in 1867. His yard on Penn Street is one hundred and twenty by two hundred and seventy feet. He has another yard on the corner of Second and Walnut Streets, three hundred by two hundred and thirty feet, used for storing lumber. Forty thousand dollars are invested, and a business of one hundred thousand dollars per year is transacted.

Fredric P. Heller is the great-grandson of William Ludwig Heller, who died in Reading, July 7, 1765. His son, Frederick Heller, was born July 19, 1763, and died October, 1837. He was married to Catherine Bright, and had two daughters and twelve sons, of whom George Heller was the sixth child. The latter was born January 22, 1800, in Reading, which has been his life-time residence, his business for more than sixty years having been that of a jeweler. He married Catherine, daughter of Peter Smith, of Reading, and had three sons,—Fredric P., Joseph F. and James A., of whom the subject of this biography is the only survivor. Mr. Heller's second marriage was with Caroline, daughter of Jacob Kern, of Reading. Their children are Francis K. (once a student at Yale College, and whose death was the result of a wound received at the battle of Fair Oaks, during the Civil War), Charles H. (deceased), Philip K. (of Philadelphia), Mary C., Emily C. and Rosa A.

Fredric P. Heller was born on July 28, 1834, in Reading, where his life has been spent in active business pursuits. His education was acquired in the common schools, after which he learned the trade of watch-maker, under his father and in Philadelphia. In 1857 he opened a store in Reading, at the corner of Fourth and Penn Streets, from whence, in 1860, he removed to 625 Penn Street, and conducted the business until 1867, when it was relinquished for his present interest as a lumber dealer. He was, February 8, 1859, married to Rose E., daughter of S. L. Snyder, of Reading. Their children are two daughters,—Kate E., married to William A. Huff, of Greensburg, Pa.; and Carrie S., married to William H. Kesler, of Reading. Mr. Heller is in politics a Republican, and prominent in the various political movements connected with his ward. In 1858 he was elected a member of the School Board, and held the office for two years. He served during the years 1873 and 1874 in the Common Council of the city, and was in the latter year elected to the Select Council, in which body he officiated until 1877. He was again elected in 1883, and still fills the office. Mr. Heller was the projector of the Reading Board of Trade and until recently one of its officers. He was also the originator, and has since its organization been the president, of the Washington Library. He is Treasurer and Past Master of Lodge No. 62, of Free and Accepted Masons, Past High Priest of Reading Chapter, No. 152, and the projector and among the earliest officers of Reading Commandery, No. 42, as also Division Commander of the Tenth Division. Mr. Heller has been a leading spirit in various building associations in which he is at present an officer. He has been active in military matters, and for several years previous to the war held a commission in the volunteer service, which, owing to disension in the company, he resigned before the outbreak of the late war. He is a member of Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church of Reading.

Boat-Builders.—The building of canal-boats was an important industry in Reading in days of the past. The last factories in operation were owned by John A. Hiester and Krick & Co., both located at the foot of South Fifth Street. A number of boats and barges now in use on the Schuylkill Navigation and Erie Canal and other inland water-routes, have been made at the yards of the above-mentioned firms. A large dry-dock is attached to the yard owned by Mr. Hiester. No boats have been built since 1884.

Brush-Makers.—Peter Stinell, in 1847, began making brushes in Reading, at 945 Penn Street. He had a large trade for many years, employing twenty-seven workmen. Three teams were constantly traveling to dispose of his brushes. In 1861 he selected the eligible site at 837 Walnut Street, and fitted up a new factory and salesroom. By his death, in 1870, his son, John E. Stinell, succeeded, and has continued the business.

Amos Drenkel, in 1863, commenced to make brushes at his present place, No. 15 North Eighth Street. In 1873 he erected a three-story brick building. The first floor is used as a salesroom. The other brush-makers of the city are J. O. Flatt & Co., Adam Nickalans, Michael Nickalans and George Regenfuse.

Benjamin Lichtenthäeler was born at Lititz, in Lancaster County, on March 17, 1817, where his father, Adolph Lichtenthäeler, settled shortly after the Revolutionary War, having emigrated from Germany. When a boy he attended the Moravian school at that place for some years, and then learned the trade of cabinet-making, under his elder brother. After Jacob B., Walter B. and William F. Shanaman commenced the manufacture of brooms in 1872, at No. 309 North Fifth Street, under the firm-name of Shanaman Bros. In 1878 they removed to the manufactory No. 236 North Sixth Street, where they carry on a large and increasing trade. They employ thirteen men.

The Pretzel Bakery is a manufactory worthy of special mention. It is owned by Benjamin Lichtenthäeler; is located at No. 37 Apple Street, and was started in 1860, by the present owner, on Cherry Street, above Second. The present bakery was built by Mr. Lichtenthäeler in 1872.

Finding that there could be a trade established in the sale of a steam pretzel, he then embarked in that business. During the first year he had one workman employed beside himself, one team upon the road and disposed of about two hundred thousand pretzels. This successful beginning was very encouraging to him, and he continued in the business from year to year till the present time, developing his trade and increasing the quantity manufactured. He now employs four hands beside himself, has two teams upon the road (one delivering in the city and the other throughout the county, extending his trips into the adjoining counties). Last year he manufactured and disposed of one million two hundred thousand pretzels—an evidence of his success in this undertaking. He was the first one to engage in this particular business as a specialty at Reading. Since he introduced it others have engaged in it, including nearly all the bakers; but the sale of his article has not been affected, indicating the thorough manner with which he has established his trade.

During his residence here Mr. Lichtenhaeler has devoted his attention entirely to his business, excepting for a period of three years, from 1877 to 1880, when he served as a member of the Select Council from the Fifth Ward, he having been elected to this position without any solicitation on his part. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

In 1848 he was married to Lucinda E. Smith, a native of Bethlehem, and they have two children, Edward and Sarah (intermarried with William Conwell).

Farming Implements.—Farming implements were made at Reading from an early period. Before 1840 this branch of industry was carried on extensively by different individuals, among them, Adam Waid, Jacob Ahrens, Matthias Raser and M. Kirkpatrick. Samuel Lessig began in 1849. He has continued till now. In 1858 Raser invented the first lever horse-rake. It was patented. Samuel Lessig obtained a half interest in the invention; and, in 1859 he improved it. For about ten years he manufactured and sold large numbers of them.

The first power in threshing was the rotary lever power pulling at the centre; then the treading-power. Mr. Lessig, in 1869, improved the lever-power by introducing an iron circular frame, and applying the power at a point in this frame about twenty inches from the centre. This was the first application of this principle. It increased the power and reduced the exertion.

He also invented an improved "Threshing-Machine" in 1871, for which he obtained a patent. He has been conspicuously identified with this industry for over thirty years in Reading.

Clock-Making.—Clocks were made at Reading from 1760 for about seventy years. The metal parts of the clock were mostly imported, and then set together by clock-makers. Some of the brass wheels were cast at Reading, by brass-founders; which were filed and prepared for clock-works. Eight-day corner clocks only were made at Reading. The cost was from sixty to seventy dollars, and with a fine high walnut case added, it would frequently amount to one hundred dollars. Evidently, only a few clocks in proportion to population, were in use. The making of a clock required from six weeks to two months. This interesting branch of industry was forced out of this community by the introduction of Yankee clocks, which were much cheaper. There were shops also for making repairs to watches, clocks, etc., in which, however, no clocks were made.

Among the early clock-makers were Daniel Rose, Daniel Oyster, John Keim, Henry Hahn. Some of these clocks indicated the changes of the moon; others had moving figures, which appeared and disappeared. A musical department was even included in the more valuable clocks, which produced pleasing tunes. Their delicate construction displayed wonderful workmanship. Many of them were destroyed between 1840 and 1870. Comparatively few families now have them.

Rope-Making.—The manufacture of ropes in Reading was one of the first industries of the town; and it has continued regularly from the beginning. The rope-walk of Thomas Jackson, at the foot of Sixth Street, for many years was the most prominent establishment of its kind. During the freshet of 1850 it was washed away. Mr. Jackson then purchased land in North Reading, on "Hockley Lane," near the "Kutztown Road" (now Eighth Street), and erected a new factory. The "rope-walk" was made over fourteen hundred feet long. It has been continued in this locality since, and in the same name, having at the proprietor's death passed to his son. It has been very successfully managed. Ropes of many sizes are manufactured and shipped to many points. The firm of Thomas Jackson & Son now manufacture Manila, Sisal and jute rope, cordage, twines and packing yarn.

MARBLE-WORKS.—The marble-works of John Frederick Moers were established in 1790 by the grandfather of the present owner, who bore the same name. The father of Mr. Moers, whose name was also John Frederick Moers, owned them for a number of years. They are located at 212 and 214 Penn Street.

The Reading Steam Marble-Mill, H. S. Getz & Co., proprietors, began business in 1873, at Spruce and Canal Streets. In 1881 they erected the large buildings on Canal, foot of Second Street. This is the only general supply marble-mill in Reading, doing strictly a wholesale trade with about sixty thousand dollars invested in the business; with seven workmen employed.

The Eagle Marble-Works, at the northwest corner of Sixth and Elm Streets, were established in 1875 by Penrose F. Eisenbrown. In 1877 he opened a granite yard in connection with his business; also a mantel department, with slate and marble mantels, marbleized slates for vestibule, flooring, etc. He has twenty-five thousand dollars invested in the business and employs from twenty-five to thirty workmen; business extends to several of the surrounding States. His works are the largest and have the finest collection of tombstones, monuments and fine sculpture in the city of Reading.

The Reading Marble and Granite-Works were established in 1881 by F. F. Bressler and Amos S. Esterly, at Nos. 418 to 435 North Sixth Street, Reading. This firm has invested ten thousand dollars in the business, and employ ten workmen. Many fine monuments are executed.

THE UMBRELLA MANUFACTORY, No 639 Penn Street, is conducted by August Rolland, who began the business in 1869 at 26 South Seventh Street, removing to the present location in 1879.

COLLAR MANUFACTURERS.—Christian Grunder is the successor of Nathaniel Gery, who began the manufacture of horse-collars in 1854 at Ninth and Washington Streets, and in 1856 removed his shops to No. 844 Penn Street. At his death, in 1868, the business was purchased by Mr. Grunder and run successfully until 1881, when he removed to No. 8 North Ninth Street. He manufactures and keeps in stock Scotch, Irish and short straw collars.

The collar manufactory at 903 Penn Street was commenced by John M. Kantner in 1878. He manufactures all kinds of short straw collars. The business demands a large and varied stock to be kept on hand.

BASKET-MAKING.—John Cook began the manufacture of willow baskets at 219 North Tenth Street in 1872; in 1883 he removed to his manufactory, corner Tenth and Walnut Streets. This branch of industry has rapidly declined in Reading by reason of large shipments of manufactured willow-ware from Philadelphia. Jacob Cook commenced basket-making in 1870 at Eighth and Cherry Streets. In 1875 he removed to 114 North Eleventh Street.

THE READING PAINT MANUFACTORY.—This large establishment extends from 220 to 230 Poplar Street. It was originated in 1870 by A. Wilhelm & Co., and has been in successful operation to present time. The company manufacture and fill large orders for dry, ground in oil, ready-mixed paints. Their trade extends through eight different States, and twenty workmen are employed constantly.

THE PAINT MANUFACTORY, Nos. 229, 231 and 233 South Eighth Street, was built in 1884 by B. Frank Ruth and Edward Scull, known as B. F. Ruth & Co. They manufactured paints for cars, bridges, houses, roofs, etc. The trade requires these dry, ground in oil and ready mixed. They employ five hands. The product of the manufactory is shipped largely to Northern and Eastern States.

MICHAEL SCHWEITZER began the business of carpet-weaving in 1851 at his present manufactory, 139 South Sixth Street. He has two thousand dollars invested in the business; runs four looms, with five hands constantly employed.
Schick and John H. Fett are the proprietors of the oldest and largest bottling establishment in the city of Reading. In 1864 they erected two large buildings on property to the rear of No. 31 North Ninth Street, and, under the firm-name of Schick & Fett, began the manufacture of sarsaparilla, soda water, pear cider and birch beer. The bottling of porter, lager beer and brown stout is also done. In the past year a large patent water-filter was placed in the works. They employ six teams and a force of ten hands, and their trade is extended through Berks, Lancaster, Chester and Montgomery Counties.

The Reading Soap and Candle-Works were established in 1866 by Frederick Bickel, at No. 128 Washington Street. In 1879 W. K. Leaman, who had been in the works for some years, assumed the entire control, and by the aid of improved machinery has extended the capacity for manufacturing, and his trade has since increased. The amount of capital invested is ten thousand dollars; number of hands employed, ten.

Boots and Shoes.—Large quantities of boots and shoes were manufactured in the borough previous to 1839. But this industry was also then affected by the introduction of foreign goods. In the year named the borough contained seven stores, which sold annually many cases of boots and shoes, mostly made in and shipped from Philadelphia and New England. The production of the factories at Reading was thereby greatly diminished. This result was attributed to "the baneful influence of trades unions imported from England." The first large factory at Reading was carried on by O'Brien & Foster. In 1819 this firm had three thousand pairs of boots and shoes for their wholesale trade, independent of a large stock for retail. About 1846 Henry F. Felix began the extensive manufacture and sale of this class of goods.

Walp & Co., comprised of Oliver J. Walp and Alonzo R. Leavitt, conduct a shoe-factory at 810 Cherry Street. The business was begun in 1883 by Mr. Leavitt. January 1, 1886, Mr. Walp became a partner. At present eighty-five hands are employed. The capital invested is forty-five thousand dollars.

Dives, Pomeroy & Stewart.—This firm has become deservedly popular, prominent and prosperous in the dry-goods and notion business in the city, and its members are an example of what men can accomplish by an active, energetic application to business, coupled with a desire to learn the wants of the community and to cheerfully supply them. On the 1st of April, 1876, Josiah Dives, George S. Pomeroy and John Stewart associated themselves as partners, and started out in business at Reading, in the "Globe Store," established by John D. Mishler. From the start their business has been remarkably prosperous and noted for its enterprise and fair dealing. These characteristics and the evident purposes that the young merchants entertained, that "they serve the public best who serve it most," secured them a patronage which has made the large establishment they now occupy an easy possibility. Their extended business soon induced them to vacate the "Globe Store" and remove to a place of larger capacity. They entered the double store in the Miller building in 1879, and, after remaining there three years, these also became inadequate. In 1882 they erected their present magnificent mercantile building and took possession on October 12th of that year. Its massive proportions and internal arrangements are exceeded by but few other business houses in the State. The building is of brick, with brown-stone trimmings, 60x155 feet, and four stories high. The basement is also finished for business purposes, serving as another story in the building. The main salesroom has an area of more than nine thousand square feet, and contains more than six hundred linear feet of counters. It is divided into departments, after the manner of the modern store; and, since November, 1882, has been supplied with the "cash-ball system," this firm being the first in the city to adopt its use. The room is admirably lighted by sky-lights in the rear, and has the front entrances recessed eleven feet, so as to afford additional light, and large windows for displaying goods. The arrangement of goods is repeatedly changed, and attracts much attention. Projecting from the centre of the roof is an observatory seventy-three feet above the sidewalk. The building was designed by Edward Mull, a prominent and successful builder of Reading, and erected under his supervision.

It is very creditable alike to the enterprise and progressive spirit of the proprietors, and to the taste and judgment of the builder.

The business of the firm has been largely increased since they have occupied this establishment. Its patronage comes from all parts of the county, and even from the adjoining counties. On holidays the store-room is a veritable “bee-hive,” almost packed with thirty at Altoona and fifteen at Pottstown; altogether, one hundred and seventy.

George Smith was the second son of the late Hon. Frederick Smith, once attorney-general of the commonwealth, and at the time of his death.
one of the justices of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, was married to Catharine Leaf, of Philadelphia. She was of English extraction and a woman of large brain capacity and power of will and of fine physique. George Smith was born at Reading, in the Smith mansion, which stood on the site now occupied by The First National Bank. He developed at an early age a taste for active, out-door pursuits, and a corresponding repugnance for books, still survives and is among the oldest of Reading's inhabitants, and loved and revered alike for her goodness and her years. Young Smith, when freed from his indenture of apprenticeship, entered upon a business career for himself. He evinced a sagacity and foresight seldom found in one of his years. Success attended his well-directed efforts and he soon became the owner of the mill at which he had learned his trade. He then extended his operations and sought although he acquired a good English education. At the age of sixteen, he apprenticed himself to learn the trade of a miller, at what was then known as Governor Hiester's mill, adjacent to Reading, on the west bank of the Schuylkill River, at the mouth of Wyomissing Creek. On the door-frame of the old mill where he began his apprenticeship there can yet be seen, carved with his pocket-knife, the following: "George Smith, 1818." When but eighteen years of age he married Margaret, the youngest daughter of the late Jacob Brecht (since called Bright), who the markets of Philadelphia and other adjoining counties. This was before the era of railroads, and the extent of his enterprise can be judged by the circumstance that in the transportation of his cargoes to the mining regions above and tide-water below, quite a fleet of barges on the Union and Schuylkill Canals were required.

Subsequently Mr. Smith associated himself with the late Lewis Reese, and they, together, for many years, operated Rees' (now Krick's) mill on the Schuylkill. Their transactions here were so large that the mill soon was reputed as one of the leading plants of the kind in this section of the State, and it brought the proprietors into prominence. It was whilst engaged here that Mr. Smith, in 1839, was commissioned flour inspector by Governor David R. Porter. For this responsible trust he was well prepared by experience and practical knowledge of details.

Writing to Governor Wolf in 1829, one of his friends, in advocating his appointment as register of the county, epitomizes his qualifications thus: "Among the applicants for office from Berks County will be George Smith. He is a man of correct morals and excellent habits. He will apply and be warmly recommended for the register's office of this county. He has excellent capacity, strong sense, a clear judgment and most sterling integrity. I believe him in every way well qualified for the office."

He received the appointment, and, in 1830, was commissioned and acceptably filled the office during the six years of Governor Wolf's administration. Prior to this, in 1828, he went as a delegate to the National Convention, at which General Jackson was renominated for President. He represented the county in the State Convention of 1829, where George Wolf was nominated for Governor and was by the same convention made a member of the State Committee of Correspondence.

In 1843 he was appointed by the party in Berks to represent it in the State Convention of that year to nominate a Board of Canal Commissioners and upon his return, at the ensuing County Convention, received a vote of thanks for the manner in which he had performed his duties. On two subsequent occasions, in 1850 and 1857, he was again a delegate to State Conventions.

In 1853 Mr. Smith quit the milling business in the vicinity of Reading, and united with his son, George Smith, Jr., as a partner in the same business at Birdsboro. They continued at that place until 1859, when he permanently withdrew from the business, and thereafter gave his attention to his real estate interests, which had grown to large proportions throughout city and country.

Although strangely indifferent to the value of education in his youth, he realized his error in after years and afforded all his children ample opportunity for a liberal training. With great quickness of apprehension and a tenacious memory, he availed himself of every opportunity to compensate for his own deficiencies.

Besides his widow, already mentioned, he leaves surviving six children, as follows: Mrs. Angeline E. Stewart, Mrs. Colonel J. De Puy Davis, Judge J. Bright Smith, Miss Kate A. Smith, all of Reading; Major E. L. Smith, of Denver, Col., and George Smith, Jr., of Union township.

Although an inflexible Democrat, and, indeed, by many regarded as a stanch partisan, he was singularly free from bigotry of every sort, and tolerant of the opinions and professions of honest political opponents. He believed fully in the utmost freedom of thought and speech and conceded it as freely to others as he claimed it for himself. "Judge not, lest ye be also judged," was a favorite Scriptural injunction which he habitually quoted and inculcated, and it can with truth be said of him, as was said of his great ancestor, John Frederick Smith, "that he practiced what he preached."

In his habits and manner of life George Smith was modest, plain and unobtrusive. The natural and the real were what he affected—the artificial and the showy were his aversion. As in the affairs of State, so in the household, he advocated and insisted upon good husbandry, but he recognized clearly the distinguishing line between the benefits of a prudent economy and the evils of parsimony. Mingling with all classes, he was familiar with the poor and distressed, many of whom survive and gratefully attest the tenderness of his sympathy and his quiet deeds of charity. With these attributes of head and heart it is scarcely necessary to add that as son, husband and father he was dutiful, affectionate and exemplary. On the 29th of September, 1878, at his residence, in the city of Reading, surrounded by those he loved, he quietly passed to his eternal rest.

John Sallada Pearson, the son of Elijah and Mary Pearson, was born March 10, 1805, in the town of Womelsdorf. After moderate advantages of an education he entered the dry-goods store of O'Brien & Raiguel, at Reading, and, on attaining his majority, with his cousin, organized the firm of John S. & Charles M. Pearson, which was one of the oldest and most extensive dry-goods firms in the city. After completing a business career of half a century, he retired in 1871 from active mercantile life, having built up not only a successful trade, but a character for probity and sterling worth. He was a man of strong individuality and great industry; was firm in his convictions and prominent in the cultivation of a spirit of benevolence. Mr. Pearson was agreeable, accommodating and attentive to his customers and just in his dealings. By this means he established a trade which made him a successful merchant and gave him high standing and excellent credit in the commercial world. It was said by one of his friends that he was the most upright and conscientious business man he ever knew. Kind and benevolent by nature, he contributed to every deserving charity and never refused the petitions for the relief of poverty and distress. Mr. Pearson was noted for his kindness to young men about starting in business life. During his business career his establishment was a school for the training of many who afterwards became some of the most successful business men of Reading. His nature was bright, cheerful and buoyant, his form erect and his step elastic, even in advancing years. With excellent health and a heart always light and joyous, life had for him much of happiness and sunshine. Mr. Pearson was always in politics a Whig or Republican, but never participated in the strife for office. He was a director of the Union Bank of Reading, a trustee of the Charles Evans Cemetery, a member of the Reading Relief and the Reading Benevolent Societies, and for thirty-three years a consistent member of the First Presbyterian Church, of which he was both trustee and treasurer, and to which he contributed with great liberality. He was one of the committee appointed to select the site for the Widows' and Single Women's Home and the first contributor to the Reading Dispensary. He was also in earlier days connected with the Montgomery Lodge of Odd-Fellows. Mr. Pearson was twice married,—first, to Miss Mary Jones, and second, to Mary, widow of Captain Thomas Leezer. By his first marriage he had two children,—Annie C. (deceased) and Almira R., married to Henry A. Hoff, whose children are Harry K., D. Pearson, Charles J. and Mary Pearson. Mr. Pearson died on the 8th of July, 1885, in his eightieth year. As a touching tribute to his character and influence, the business men of Reading closed their stores and offices on the occasion of his funeral.

Caleb Wheeler, is of English descent. He was born in Sussex County, N. J., on the 1st of July, 1805, and at the age of four years removed to Morris County, in the same State, his youth having been spent at Denville near Morristown. His education was confined to such instruction as was obtained at the country schools and for a short period at a boardingschool in Morristown, after which his time was devoted to the management of the business interests of a relative in the same county. He then entered a store and was engaged in mercantile pursuits until his subsequent removal to Hackettstown, Warren County, N. J., where he remained as an active business man until 1830, the date of his advent in Schuykill County, Pa., where he continued his career of a successful merchant. In 1830 he was married to Nancy H., daughter of Silas Riggs, of Morris County, N. J., who died in Reading on the 5th of April, 1873. Mr. Wheeler soon after his marriage engaged extensively in the coal business, being one of the first to develop the coal interests of the western end of Schuykill County and among the most active operators and successful shippers of that product. He meanwhile for many years acted as agent of the Swatara Coal Company, who were large owners of coal lands in the county. Mr. Wheeler, in April, 1857, removed to Reading, and while making that city his residence, still retained his extensive business interests and continued to manage the finances of the firm. Formerly a Whig and later a Republican in his political convictions, he has ever been a strong and earnest advocate of the principles of his party, but declined all offers of office. He was a zealous supporter of the government during the late war, both with his means and influence. He was a former director of the Farmers' National Bank of Reading, and otherwise identified with the business interests of the city. Mr. Wheeler is an elder of the First Presbyterian Church of Reading. He is greatly interested in the benevolent enterprises of Reading, which receive from him substantial support. He was one of the projectors of the Reading Hospital, is now a member of its board of directors, and was one of the committee appointed to make the purchase of land for the site of the Home for Widows and Single Women, of Reading. Having retired from active commercial life, he finds pleasure in the advancement of these and other benevolent interests.

James T. Reber, a prominent and successful hardware merchant at Reading for nearly thirty years, was born April 29, 1834, at Springing, then in Cumru, now Spring township, this county. He is of German descent.

The progenitor of the Reber family in Berks County was Johannes Reber, who emigrated to this country in 1742, when six years old, from Langenselbold, then in Hesse-Cassel, now belonging to the kingdom of Prussia, having accompanied his parents. His father's name was Johann Bernhart Reber, and his mother's Johanna Magdalena, daughter of Conrad Hahn. Another son was included in this party, named Ludwig Friedrich August, who was then only two years old. They arrived in the same year at the port of Philadelphia, proceeding immediately to the Tulpehocken settlement, and locating at the "big bend" of the Tulpehocken Creek at a place then and still known as the "Blue Marsh," where the father took up a tract of land and began farming. Three sons were afterward born at that place, named Thomas, Valentine and Peter. From these five sons it is believed that all the persons by the name of Reber in this country have descended. Valentine and Peter Reber, the last two named, proceeded to the West upon obtaining their majority.

Johannes Reber pursued the life of a farmer all his life in the neighborhood where his parents first settled. He was married twice, the name of his first wife having been Orbengast, and of his second, Haas. By the first marriage he had two children,—John and Magdalena (who intermarried with John Richards),—and by the second three children,—Nicholas, Abraham and Michael.

John Reber, the third, was born September 20, 1768, in Heidelberg (now Lower Heidelberg) township, where he afterwards also carried on farming. By the manuscript papers which he left, it appears that he settled up numerous estates, having acted as a fiduciary for many people in his neighborhood. He was married to Magdalena Rathmacher, of Macungie, in Northampton (now Lehigh) County, and had issue fifteen children, namely,—Magdalena, Barbara, Christiana, Elizabeth, Rebecca, Sarah, Anna Maria, Joseph, John, Benjamin, Susanannah, Jonas, Daniel and Samuel, and one who died in infancy. He died May 12, 1844, aged nearly seventy-six years.

Benjamin Reber, the fourth generation, was born April 14, 1807. He was a saddler by trade, and afterwards, for fifty years, he followed farming on the homestead, of which he became the owner about 1840. He had seven children by the first wife,—Richard T. (married first to Sarah Kerschner and afterward to Catharine Bickel), James T. (married to Sarah Potteiger), Charles (married to Eliza Z. Van Reed), Sarah (intermarried with Harrison Weitzel), Rebecca (intermarried with Calvin J. Lorah), Eliza (died single) and John (died in infancy).

James Tobias Reber, the subject of this biographical sketch, was raised on the farm of his father, assisting at general farming labor and attending the schools of his native township till his sixteenth year, when he went to the select school of Professor Henry G. Stetler, at Boyertown, for one term, and afterward the Strassburg Academy, in Lancaster County, then conducted by Rev. J. M. Carter, also for a term. Upon returning home he became engaged in teaching school, which he followed for two seasons, first in Lower Heidelberg township and afterward in Muhlenberg township. In 1833 he removed to Reading and entered the general hardware-store of George de B. Keim & Co., then located at the southeast corner of Third and Penn Streets, where he was employed as clerk for three years.
In 1856 he entered into a co-partnership with Adam Bard for the purpose of carrying on the general hardware business, under the firm-name of Bard & Reber, and on October 6th of that year began at No. 741 Penn Street, where they continued to do business under the same name for twenty-two years. During this time they were very successful, and their business requiring larger facilities for carrying on the same, they, in 1877, purchased the property at the southeast corner of Eighth and Penn Streets, where they erected the present large three-story brick store building, in dimensions twenty-four by two hundred and seventy feet, and into which they removed in 1878. The senior member, Adam Bard, then sold his interest in the business to his son, George W. Bard, and his son-in-law, David P. Schott, and retired from active mercantile life. Albert F. Kraemer, an employee with the firm for many years, was admitted as a partner, and the firm-name became Bard, Reber & Co. Under this name they have since conducted the business very successfully, and have extended their trade throughout this and the surrounding counties. Notwithstanding the active life of Mr. Reber in the hardware business, he became interested in the development of a superior plumbago mine in Chester County, of which he was the general manager for eight years; and during this time the enterprise was an entire success. He has acted as administrator, guardian and trustee in the settlement of a number of valuable estates.

Mr. Reber represented the Eighth Ward in Common Council during the years 1863 and 1864, and he served a term of three years as a prison inspector, from 1876 to 1879. In politics he is a Democrat.

He is a member of the Reformed Church. He has filled various church offices, among them being trustee of Synod, of Palatinate College, and of Bethany Orphans’ Home, a member of the Board of Publication and other minor positions.

In 1854 he was married to Sarah Potteiger, a daughter of John Potteiger, who served one term, from 1850 to 1853, as sheriff of Berks County, by whom he has now living five children—C. Alice (intermarried with Joseph H. Templin), Valeria E. (intermarried with Isaac L. Deeter), Morris B., Clara R. and James C.,—one son, Benjamin F., having died in the ninth year of his age, and another son having died in infancy.

Augustus F. Boas, son of Jacob and Sarah (Dick) Boas, was born at Reading in the year 1813. His paternal grandfather was the Rev. William Boas, an emigrant from Germany, who became the first pastor of the First Reformed Church of Reading. He attended the schools of his native town first, and afterward entered the Reading Academy, then under the principalship of Rev. John F. Greer. Some of his other teachers in this institution then were Joseph Barrett, Archibald McElroy and a Mr. Dawson. Under the last-named he received excellent instruction in the Latin language. At the age of sixteen he engaged as a teacher of a school in Alsace township. Finishing one term there, he was engaged eighteen months continuously as a teacher in the village of Kutztown. At the age of twenty he went to Allentown and entered the law-office of Charles Davis, Esq., as a student, remaining two years, when he returned to Reading, and completed his legal studies under Elijah Dechert, Esq., and was admitted to the bar August 4, 1835. After practicing law a short time he became chief clerk of the Berks County Bank, which had just been organized. At the time of its collapse, in 1842, Mr. Boas settled up the affairs of the bank, and, at the same time, engaged in the lumber business on an extensive scale. In 1855 he obtained the charter for the Reading Savings-Bank and became the president of it and was the principal stockholder. In 1863 he was one of the founders of the First National Bank, and was elected its cashier, serving from the time of its organization until 1878. He was also president of the Reading Savings-Bank until its suspension, in 1877, at which time, in order to protect the interest of the bank’s creditors as best he could, freely surrendered all of his real estate and personal property, and retired from the business with an unblemished reputation. In November, 1883, he was tendered a position in the Commonwealth Guarantee, Trust and Safe Deposite Company, at Harrisburg, and soon after entered upon its responsible duties.

No person in the city of Reading was a more devoted worker in the Sunday-school cause than Mr. Boas. In 1820 he became a pupil of the first Sunday-school in his native city, which was organized in the academy in 1819. When but sixteen years old he became superintendent of the first African Sunday-school of Reading. When the church Sunday-schools were organized he was chosen superintendent of the one connected with the First Reformed Church in Reading, and continued in that position for thirty years. He greatly assisted in establishing the Reading Library and in organizing St. Paul's Memorial Reformed Church, and in the encouragement of local charities.

Mr. Boas was married, in 1835, to Emma E. Boyer. During the Civil War he associated with the influential men of Reading in encouraging voluntary enlistment and the raising of money for bounty purposes.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

CITY BUILDINGS.—The city buildings¹ include the market-houses, water-works, city hall, fire company buildings, commons and park.

MARKET-HOUSES.—Immediately after a square brick pillars, arranged in a row on each side, covered by a shingle roof with a plastered ceiling.

A similar market-house was erected in 1799 in West Market Square, about the same distance from Callowhill Street. A belfry was on the eastern extremity.

There were paved, uncovered extensions to the market-houses—from the eastern market-house to Sixth Street and from the western to Fourth Street. In the eastern market-house and extension there were thirty-two stalls and fifty-eight stands, and in the western thirty-eight stalls and fifty-eight stands. Numerous stands were on the outside of and between the market-houses. The stalls of the eastern market-house were mostly occupied by butchers. Their rental was high through competition. The income from that market-house was, therefore, much larger than the western. In the former the stalls rented from ten dollars to forty dollars each; in the latter, only five dollars; and outside benches were $2.50. From the beginning till about 1840 many of the stalls were not taken. This arose from the supply of country produce, meats, etc., delivered to the citizens at their homes. And many of them did not require supplies from the country, because they had their own gardens in which they raised fruits and vegetables. The owners and occupants of lots on Penn Street generally owned and farmed out-lots for this purpose; and they also kept cows and raised and fattened pigs and poultry.

The total revenue from rents in 1851 was $494.62;1 in 1857, was $2021.32; in 1869, $12,643; in 1870, $5822; and in 1871, $1656.86. In the year 1871 the market-houses were sold for seven hundred and fifteen dollars.

These two market-houses were rebuilt—western, thirty by one hundred and ninety-two feet, in 1846, for thirty-four hundred dollars; eastern, in 1847, for twenty-nine hundred and ninety dollars. In the rebuilding, iron pillars were substituted for brick pillars as supports for the roof. They were continued till 1871; then, by the encouragement of City Councils, private, commodious buildings, for the purpose of weekly markets, were erected in the several sections of the city, and the old buildings were demolished.

Town Pump.—In the former market-house there was a pump. It was known as the "old town pump." About the time that the town-lots were sold, a town-pump was projected by Richard Peters, agent for the proprietors, "for the encouragement of the town," and he contributed ten pounds towards the expense. Conrad Weiser selected the place for the well. It was situated in the middle of Penn Square, about seventy-five yards east of Callowhill Street. Good water was found at the depth of fifty-three feet. An order for the money was drawn by Peters, in Weiser's favor, dated August 1, 1750, in which Peters certified that the well had been dug, and Weiser acknowledged the receipt of the ten pounds. Sixteen years afterward it came to occupy the centre of the market-house, which was erected over it. And there it stood till the market-house was torn down in 1871, a period of over one hundred and twenty years. What a history it has! Who, of the many citizens born before 1860, does not remember it with pleasure? Many a thirst was quenched with a hearty draught of cold lime-stone water out of the rusty iron ladle, with a long handle, attached to the pump by a chain. During the semi-annual fairs, and also during parades and demonstrations on Penn Square, it was particularly convenient and useful.

At the November sessions of court, in the year 1806, a petition was presented to the judges, which represented "that there is frequently a great scarcity of water in the town of Reading, which is not only a great inconvenience to the inhabitants and farmers passing through with their teams, but excites serious alarm in case of any buildings taking fire. That a pump of water is particularly wanted near the new market, in the said town, which would be free to all inhabitants and others;" and prayed that the grand jury would allow a sufficient sum of money for the purpose of sinking a well and putting in a pump at the west end of said market-house. The prayer was granted, and a sum allowed; and the pump was established at the place designated. But this pump was not so popular as the older pump in the eastern market-house—the water was not so palatable.

FAIR-DAYS.—By the charter the semi-annual fairs were held on the 27th day of October and the 4th day of June of each year. These fairs were instituted for the exhibition and sale of all kinds of products, manufactures and merchandize. And they were not alone for the town people, but for the farmers. The eastern market-house was the most popular. The first fair was held in October, 1766. They were held regularly for about seventy years, during which time they encouraged trade and contributed much pleasure to the people. Dancing was carried on by men, women and young people at certain taverns in the town, the “Green Tree” (now the Keystone House) having been conspicuous in this respect. Besides dancing there was much general jollification. Two days were usually spent in this manner, the first day having been by common consent for the “country folks” and the second for the “town folks.”

Fighting was a common practice, and “rowdies” and “bullies” were conspicuous. This rough and boisterous element in public brought the fairs gradually into disrepute. About 1836 they began to be objectionable, so much, indeed, that the better class of people of the town uttered complaints. The noise and disturbance was not caused by men alone. Boys took part in the demonstration by shooting off and exploding fire-crackers and yelling vociferously till midnight. “What times! What manners!”

Just then the common school was fighting its way into public favor; and as the school came nearer to the people the fair-day, with its hilarity and profanity, departed. The following notice 1 of the “Fall Fair-day” appeared in one of the local weekly newspapers:

“The semi-annual fair on Wednesday [October 27, 1847] was a dead failure. A few rowdy-looking individuals of both sexes rendezvoused at the lower market-house, but elsewhere the streets maintained their usual quiet appearance. These fairs are now brought down to the lowest standard and must soon be entirely abolished by general consent. No one, either in town or country, laying any claim to respectability, will attend them; and none but the vilest grog-shops and dens of iniquity afford them house-room to practice their drunken orgies and vulgar ‘hoe-downs.’ This is as it should be.”

Year after year these great days lost favor till 1850, when they were abandoned. A new institution arose to take its place, which was more adapted to develop respectful behavior and encourage agriculture and manufactures. This was the Agricultural Society. And from the highway at the market-houses the exhibition was transferred to the “Commons,” which the society inclosed and improved for the purpose. The selling feature of “fair-day” was discontinued, and the semi-annual town fair became an annual county fair.

MARKET-DAYS.—The charter established two market-days for every week—Wednesday and Saturday. The weekly markets began during the fall of 1766. Butchers and farmers attended regularly for the sale of meat, vegetables, butter, eggs, etc., some twice a week, others once. The markets opened in the morning. No regular hour was fixed at which to begin sales. The market people would generally be at their stalls very early, some, indeed, soon after midnight, and so timely as to be able to take a nap in their waggons before the town-people came to buy their articles; and this they did with wonderful persistence through all seasons of the year. We cannot imagine what trials they frequently endured through the cold winter mornings for the sake of selling their goods to get a little cash. What labor to produce them, what energy to carry them to market, what patience to sell them! And this custom of selling goods at the market-place in the highway, mostly without shelter, continued decade after decade for over one hundred years, from the time when the town contained about one thousand inhabitants till the number had grown beyond thirty-three thousand. This was a long period to continue going to the same place for the same purpose, without any improvement in respect to comfort and convenience of both the seller and the buyer. The subject of private market-houses in the several sections of the city was agitated for several years previously. The movement met with general opposition from the property-holders and business men on Penn Square. After considerable discussion the Councils passed an ordinance on April 30, 1870, favoring the removal of the public market-houses. This action encouraged private enterprise, and steps were immediately taken towards the erection of private market-houses to the east and west, and to the north and south of Penn Square. Their utility and excellence were practically demonstrated immediately after their completion.

Penn Square.—The public square of the town, formerly called "Market," and latterly "Penn," and its improvement, have received much consideration, without any practical results. The old court-house stood in the centre from 1762 till 1841, and the old market-houses to the east and west, from 1766 to 1871. Immediately after the court-house had been removed, in 1841, various suggestions were proposed for the improvement of the square. The "odious market-houses" were to be removed and double rows of American forest-trees planted, and a statue of either William Penn or Conrad Weiser was to be erected on the site of the old buildings. These improvements were proposed to be made by certain generous, public-spirited individuals, "without a cent of charge to the town," provided the Town Council gave its consent. Seven years elapsed without success. The centennial year (1848) of the founding of the town arrived, and again the spirit seized the party of improvement. A public meeting was held January 22, 1848, with the following officers: Hon. Samuel Bell, president; William H. Keim, secretary; and Dr. H. H. Muhlenberg, treasurer; for the purpose of perfecting the plan and awakening general public spirit for the improvement of the square. The following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, that the proposed statue be that of William Penn, on account of his appropriate character and feasibility, and to commemorate the centennial anniversary of the foundation of Reading in 1748, by the Penn family, on ground given by them to the citizens for public purposes in Penn Street and Penn Square, the materials to be of Berks County iron and sandstone, and the work executed in Reading."

Various committees were appointed and the subscriptions were to be not less than one dollar and not more than two dollars. These commendable efforts, however, proved unavailing. A score of years elapsed before the odious market-houses were even removed, and a generation has passed away, leaving the square without public improvement of any kind. This is rather surprising, especially when we consider the general education, enterprise and wealth of the community, and the introduction of a large and increasing new element. We are not wanting in distinguished persons or events worthy of a monument. If conspicuous places are selected for churches, around which certain sects can gather and become enthusiastic in a religious sense, why cannot the square be ornamented with a monument to signalize the nobility and generosity of William Penn, the public services of Conrad Weiser, the devotion of our people in the cause of independence, the honorable and prominent career of Joseph Hiester, the heroism of our noble company of men—the Reading Artillereists in the Mexican War, or the great sacrifices we made in the cause of the Union of our States, around which our whole community could gather and become enthusiastic in a patriotic sense? It is said that a monument here would be a great obstruction. But do we not permit obstructions at some places and even encourage them at others, notwithstanding that they do not subserve a purpose to compare with that which a monument in Penn Square would subserve in the development of a noble local pride for that achievement which it would be specially designed to signalize?

Water-Works.—For over seventy years the inhabitants of Reading were almost entirely supplied with water from cisterns, wells and pumps. The water was mostly limestone in quality and generally unpalatable, especially to those persons who were not accustomed to its peculiar taste. It was unfit for washing purposes and those who had no cisterns were compelled to fetch water from the river Schuylkill. After the borough came to possess a population of four thousand, these sources became too few in proportion for convenience and certainty of supply. Accordingly, in 1819, the subject of "Water-Works" was agitated; and this agitation resulted in the incorporation of a company for supplying the people with water. An act of Assembly was passed on March 16, 1819, whereby the "Reading Water Company" was created. The commissioners appointed to obtain subscriptions of stock (four hundred shares) were John Spayd, Frederick Heller, John Addams, George de B. Keim and John Berkiubine. This enterprise proved a success. The company purchased land in Alsace township, along the western declivity of Penn's Mount, to the northeast of Reading, which included a large and inexhaustible spring of water, commonly called "Hampden Spring," and proceeded without delay in the construction of a reservoir at the head of Penn Street, into which they conducted the spring water. Their progress was so rapid that by July 19, 1821, the water was let into the reservoir; and by October following, it was conducted through the principal streets. The spring was situated one mile and sixteen perches from the reservoir, with an elevation of one hundred and sixteen feet above it; and it discharged constantly from day to day about seventy gallons of pure, mountain water a minute, or about one hundred thousand gallons a day. The water was conducted by gravity through earthen pipes two and a half inches in diameter, laid three feet below the surface. Some of the pipes were of logs. The reservoir was constructed of stone, with a capacity of one thousand hogsheads. From the reservoir to the "Old Court-House" (Fifth and Penn Streets) the distance was three thousand four hundred and fifty-nine feet, with a fall of eighty-eight feet. The pipes through the streets were mostly of iron, varying from two to four inches in diameter. By 1833 the money expended in this great improvement exceeded twenty thousand dollars. Then two hundred and fifty families were supplied with water, and the annual income was about fifteen hundred dollars. The population was about sixty-five hundred. Apparently about one-fourth of the inhabitants were supplied with water by the water company. This would indicate a considerable encouragement of the enterprise. The company increased its capacities and facilities with the growth and demands of the borough, and continued to supply the people till the borough grew into a city, and for eighteen years afterward, when (1865) the company sold its rights, properties, etc., to the "City of Reading" for three hundred thousand dollars. The citizens were, therefore, greatly indebted to the "Reading Water Company" for the introduction of pure, soft, spring water, which was suitable for all purposes. Instead of being forced, in most cases, to carry water for some distance, it was delivered to them at their doors.

In the introduction of the water from Bernhart's Creek during the year 1858, the company excavated a tunnel in length ten hundred and sixty-six feet through the hill upon which the Alsace Church is situated. The greater part was cut through slate-rock.

The water-works comprise four reservoirs: City Reservoir,1 Antietam Lake, Bernhart Lake and Hampden Reservoir.

The City Reservoir was constructed by the Reading Water Company, the first basin in 1821 and the second in 1848, and was included in the transfer by the company to the city on April 1, 1865. These basins were enlarged in 1872, at an expense of $16,869.21. Their total capacity is 5,132,000 gallons—northern basin, 2,087,000 gallons; southern basin, 3,045,000 gallons. This is a superior improvement.

Immediately before the purchase of the works of the Reading Water Company, the City Councils, by a special committee, had succeeded in obtaining the Ohlinger mill property in Alsace township, with the view of eventually

Two springs also afford a water supply—Edelman and Mineral. The Edelman Spring is situated in Alsace township and is constructed for a storage reservoir. It has a flow of fifty thousand gallons per day, and is conducted by a separate pipe to the city reservoirs. And the Mineral Spring is situated within the eastern city limits, and has a daily flow of one hundred and twenty thousand gallons.

The daily minimum flow of the streams and springs of water which supply the city is estimated to be as follows:

In 1882 the total length of main and distributing pipes was 271,748 lineal feet or 51.47 miles. This has been much increased since. The total cost of the reservoirs, pipe, etc., was then estimated at nine hundred thousand dollars.

COMMONS AND PARK.—A large tract of land which lay at the base of Penn’s Mount and contained about fifty acres was known as the “Commons” for over one hundred years after the town was laid out. By the language of an act passed on the 17th of February, 1852, it would appear that this tract (in reality about eighty-five acres in area) had been “reserved by the proprietors of Pennsylvania as a free and public commons for the dwellers in said town” at the time when they laid out the town. Notwithstanding the “tradition” that this land belonged to the town and had been occupied by the dwellers as a “commons” for fifty years, the authorities of the borough permitted a sale thereof, by the attorney for the Penns, to the commissioners of Berks County on November 19, 1800, for the nominal consideration of four hundred and forty dollars. And from that time till 1884 the county claimed to own it. In 1839 the county commissioners sold thirty-five acres of the tract, comprising that portion which lay east of Tenth Street and north of Walnut for the distance of one thousand two hundred and eighty feet.

1 Mr. Smith was an active and enterprising citizen of Reading for many years. He was a millwright by occupation and a highly esteemed man for his social and political integrity. He represented the Seventh Ward in Select Council during 1865 and 1866, officiating as president for a year; and he served as a water commissioner from 1867 till 1885, a period covering sixteen continuous years. He died in 1886.

In June, 1850, about thirty acres were inclosed by a fence, the inclosure extending from the "Hill Road" to Washington Street, and from Eleventh Street to the eastern boundary line. Upon the organization of the Agricultural Society of the county, the county commissioners leased the tract to them for the purpose of holding an annual "Fair;" which then erected exhibition buildings, constructed a circular race track (one-third of a mile in circumference), etc. In 1865 the track was increased to a half-mile in length, and then the remaining part of the "commons" to Walnut Street on the north was inclosed.

In 1852, through the enterprise and influence of Hon. Henry A. Muhlenberg, then State Senator from Berks County, an act of Assembly was passed which provided—

"That it shall be the duty of the commissioners of the County of Berks, and they are hereby authorized and required to convey in fee, to the mayor, aldermen and citizens of Reading, in trust for the use of said citizens, for the sole purpose of establishing a public park and parade ground forever and for no other purpose, object or design whatsoever, the 'public commons,' containing forty-nine acres and one hundred and thirty four perches. And that, immediately upon such conveyance, 'it shall be the duty of the mayor, etc., to cause the whole of said lot to be enclosed for the purpose of a public park and parade ground, to fill up the water gullies, and otherwise level the surface of the ground, so far as may be necessary, to cause walks to be laid out, trees planted, and such other steps to be taken as will best carry out the true intent and meaning of this act, always, however, reserving a sufficiently large space of clear ground to enable any portion or the whole of the volunteers of Berks County to use the same as a parade ground, which may also be used for the celebrations of the Agricultural Society, for public meetings and other similar purposes."

But nothing was done. It would appear from this inaction that the public spirit of the officials, both of the county-seat and county, was utterly unworthy the generous impulse of the Penns, and, afterward, of the General Assembly. The expense of this improvement would have been insignificant, compared with the general benefit to the community. And what is rather surprising, was the continued public indifference to this commendable project thence till now, a period extending over thirty years. We may well ask, where were the men of station, of influence, of wealth, of culture, of enterprise during this period?—what were their feelings insomuch as such remarkable indifference was constantly exhibited toward public improvement?

In 1878 a movement was made to improve that part of the commons which lay between the prison, the turnpike and the Hill road. Prominent in this movement were property-holders in the vicinity, including Abraham B. Bechtel, David F. Lotz, Hister Clymer, Henry S. Eckert, William E. Good, Charles K. Hillegass, Adam Schwartz, Charles Brenciser, William Arnold, Samuel H. Kutz, Abner K. Stauffer and others. Over six thousand dollars were collected and appropriated toward the improvement, and their proceedings in this behalf were entirely successful. The sheds of the Agricultural Society were removed to the northern portion of the "fair-ground," and the small tract was inclosed. David F. Lotz, assisted by John Knabb, was untiring in his efforts, and he succeeded in having the surface prepared, walks and roads laid out, trees planted, etc. During the hot summer of that year he and Mr. Knabb worked faithfully and without compensation, and accomplished much toward the improvement of the place. The Harbster Brothers presented an iron drinking-fountain, which was placed at the main entrance; P. F. Eisenbrown presented a fine, large and unique marble drinking-fountain, which was placed toward the upper end; and John D. Mishler presented a marble drinking-fountain, which was placed at the southern entrance. And since that time the City Councils have taken charge of it, though not kept in the same fine and promising condition in which they received it.

LAUER MONUMENT.—A fine bronze monument of Frederick Lauer was erected in the City Park, in 1886, by the Brewers' Association of the United States. It has the following inscriptions on the four sides:

To Frederick Lauer,
of Reading, Pa.
The United States Brewers' Association, of which he was the first president, has erected this monument in grateful remembrance of his unselfish labor for the welfare of the brewing trade in this country.

[Rear.]
The City of Reading Commemorates the public and Private virtues of an honored citizen by the grant of this location.
Erected
A. D., MDCCCLXXXV,
The year of the twenty-fifth Convention of the United States Brewers' Association.

[East.]
His zeal sprung from his firm conviction that in striving to advance the brewing trade he was working for the cause of National Temperance.

[West.]
Let his example lead the brewers of this city to maintain Good-Fellowship.
to Preserve their Association and to defend their rights.

In 1884 proceedings were instituted by the City Councils to obtain a deed for the entire tract of land inclosed, and now occupied by the Agricultural Society; but the Court of Common Pleas refused to award a writ of mandamus against the county commissioners to compel them to execute the deed which was prayed for. The matter was carried to the Supreme Court and the judgment was reversed; but the deed has as yet not been delivered to the city of Reading, granting and conveying the "commons" to the corporation, the matter being still, as the lawyers say, in fieri.

City Hall.—The Borough Council organized in the old court-house in 1783, and there it assembled year after year until the new courthouse was erected, when it removed its place of meeting into that building. In 1847 the City Councils organized there—the Select branch in the room on third floor, south side, next to the stairway, and the Common branch in the opposite room, on the north side; and they continued to meet in those rooms till the city of Reading purchased the property on the northeast corner of Fifth and Franklin Streets—then an old-fashioned, low, two-story brick building.

City Hall was erected by Councils in 1870. The total expense was about twenty-six thousand dollars. It comprises the "lock-up," the battery for the electric alarm, offices for the several city officials, Council chambers, and a large hall, the latter being occupied by lodges of the Masonic order. It is situated on the northeast corner of Fifth and Franklin Streets. Daniel Spohn, a prominent and successful builder in his time, was the contractor.

Fire Company Buildings.—For many years the early fire companies owned their own buildings in which they kept their apparatus; but when the city government began to contribute more liberally towards their encouragement, it became the owner of the buildings. Now it owns all the buildings of the several companies, excepting that of the Liberty Fire Company. The buildings are all fine, substantial structures, elegantly furnished. They are situated as follows:

Increase of Buildings.—The following table shows the remarkable and continuous growth of Reading in respect to buildings, from 1842 to 1859.¹ The columns represent the several wards of the city:

In 1840 seventy-seven houses were erected. In 1841 the total number of buildings in Reading was one thousand three hundred and sixty-five. In 1849, Richard Clark, of Philadelphia, published a large map of Reading, four feet square, by which it is shown that then two-thirds of the city was south of Penn Street.

In 1873 the city of Reading had the smallest ratio of individuals to each building of all the cities in the United States, excepting Toledo, the ratio of which was a very small fraction less. Our ratio was a little more than five persons to each dwelling.

POST-OFFICE

The post-office was established in 1793. Shortly afterward other offices were established in different parts of the county and the people found them a great convenience; and they have increased from decade to decade till now. The total number of post-offices now in the county is one hundred and thirty.

The letters at Reading office were called for altogether till about 1835; then a man by the name of Shearer began to carry letters of many individuals not in business throughout the borough at a cent a letter. He was succeeded by William Taylor, who continued till 1848, and earned by his labor in this position about five dollars a week. Hamilton Mills and Joseph Barrett then carried for less than a year. Wm. Ruckman entered upon this service in 1848 and continued to carry letters till 1861, a period covering thirteen years. He carried letters at two cents for each letter and earned from twelve to fifteen dollars a week. Samuel B. Ruth, Albert Miller, Christian Schultz and Benjamin Guinther succeeded him, the latter two carrying till 1864, when the government established the free delivery system. These men were recommended by the postmaster and appointed by the department at Washington.

LETTER BOXES

Letter-boxes were put up at five places in Reading in August, 1864, for the purpose of enabling the citizens to drop letters to be collected by carriers. These were placed at the following stores, inside:

- Yeich's store, Penn above Front; Ringler's store, Fourth and Spruce; Shaler's store, Seventh and Bingaman; Zieber's store, Ninth and Penn; Heffelinger's, Eighth above Walnut.

The first collection was made on August 22d. Two collections were made daily, nine A.M. and three P.M. All letters had to be stamped with a three-cent stamp. And there were then two letter-carriers—one for delivery north of Penn and the other south. This postal accommodation was introduced by the postmaster, Jacob Knabb.

MONEY ORDER SYSTEM

The money order system was introduced about the same time, in pursuance of an act of Congress passed May 17, 1864. In this division of service at Reading, the following orders, etc., were issued and paid in 1885:

1 See Chap. XVIII, Internal Improvements, p. 471.
Postal-cards were introduced in 1873; two-cent postage began October 1, 1883, and special delivery October 1, 1885. In the postal service at Reading there are 17 carriers to deliver and collect letters, etc., and 115 boxes distributed throughout the city at different points, and in the post-office 10 clerks and 1 special delivery messenger are employed. The call boxes number 322, lock boxes 37, and lock drawers 6.

Gottlieb Jungman, first postmaster, serving from 1793 to 1801, was a prominent publisher of several newspapers at Reading. The last newspaper which he published here was the Weekly Herald, having issued it from 1811 to 1816, when he discontinued it and moved West.

1 Calvin Goodman was recently appointed to succeed Mr. Whitner at the expiration of his term of four years.
JOHN WALTER, the second postmaster, who officiated for twenty-eight years, from 1801 to 1829, was born at Reading, and carried on for a number of years the trade of book-binding. He received the appointment of postmaster from President Jefferson in 1801, and he continued to hold this position by re-appointment of the succeeding Presidents till the time of President Jackson, when he was suspended on account of his active efforts for the election of John Quincy Adams as President. He lived on North Fifth street, near Walnut (now No. 140), and there kept the post-office. He died in 1836, aged sixty-nine years. He was married to Magdalena Lehman, from Germantown.

SAMUEL RITTER, the third postmaster who served for twelve years, was born in Exeter township on April 3, 1792, and educated in the schools of the township. He removed to Reading about the time he attained his majority, and for some years engaged in the grocery business at the Southwest corner of Seventh and Penn Streets. He served as deputy sheriff from 1821 to 1823, under Henry Betz, Esq., and then till 1829 as clerk in the Adler printing establishment. He held the office of postmaster of Reading during the administrations of Jackson and Van Buren, having in this time won the confidence and esteem of the community by his strict integrity and uniform courtesy in the discharge of his official duties. The post-office was in the Messersmith Building (now Lerch hardware-store). Afterward he was a clerk in the dispatcher's office of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company at Reading. He died of paralysis whilst occupying that position, on September 8, 1860, in the sixty-ninth year of his age. He was married to Catharine Kast, and left nine children—Joseph, Anna (married to Charles H. Fritz), Jacob, Henry, Hiram, Catharine (married to William Kerper), Amelia (married to Michael Locher), Ellen (married to Simon Seyfert), and Louisa (married to B. H. Brown).

GEORGE K. WHITNER is the great-grandson of George Whitner, who emigrated from Württemberg, Germany, and settled in Berks County as a minister of the Reformed Church. Among his children was a son, Abraham, who resided in Columbia County, Pa., where he pursued the business of farming. He was twice married; his only son by the first marriage was George, born in Columbia County, who, at the age of eighteen, came to Berks County and learned the trade of a weaver in Albany township. Later, Reading became his place of residence; but in 1836 he made Amity township his home, continuing to work at his trade in both localities. He, in 1827, married Christina, daughter of David Kline, of Amity township, whose surviving children are David, Rebecca, Abraham, Hiram, George K., Samuel, Sarah and Calvin. The year of his marriage, Mr. Whitner engaged in the hotel business in Amity township, and became the landlord of the popular hostelry known as "The Yellow House.”

George K. Whitner was born on the 28th of December, 1837, in Amity township, and at the youthful age of four years removed to his father's farm in Oley township, where he remained until 1869, when he located in Reading. He received his earliest instruction at the common schools of the township, and at the age of seventeen continued his studies at the Mount Pleasant Academy, Boyertown, Pa., finally becoming a pupil of the Reading Institute and Normal School, conducted by Rev. William A. Good, after which, for five winters, he engaged in teaching. In 1863 he was appointed assistant assessor of internal revenue for the district embraced in Oley, Pike and Rockland townships, Berks County, which position he held for a period of five years. In 1876 he was nominated for prothonotary of the county, which honor he declined, as he was the incumbent of the above office. Removing to Reading, he subsequently became associated with Eli S. Fox in the Reading Terra-Cotta Works, in which he is still interested. Mr. Whitner was, on the 28th of February, 1864, married to Ellen R., daughter of Eli S. Fox, of Reading. He is a Republican in politics, and has for years taken a decided stand in defense of the principles of his party. He has, however, held no office other than that of postmaster of the city of Reading, to which he was appointed May 31, 1882, and served a full term of four years. The admirable system introduced by Mr. Whitner into the management of the office has won for him the most cordial commendation from his superior officials. He is a director of the Keystone National Bank of Reading, and a member of the Reformed Church.

Cemeteries.—The people of Reading were accustomed to burying their dead in “burying-grounds” included in the several church properties during the first two periods of the place as a town and borough. The grounds conspicuous for this purpose were rather numerous, there having been no less than seven: 1

Trinity Lutheran, N. W. corner of Sixth and Washington Streets.
Trinity Lutheran, N. W. corner of Sixth and Walnut Streets.
German Reformed, N. E. corner of Sixth and Washington Streets.

Friends’, W. side of Sixth, between Washington and Walnut Streets.
Episcopalian, S. E. corner of Sixth and Walnut Streets.
Episcopalian, W. side of Fifth, above Court Street.
Catholic, E. side of Seventh, between Franklin and Chestnut Streets.

Burials were made in the first, third and fourth “grounds” from the beginning of Reading during a period of one hundred years. The several religious denominations buried their dead in their own grounds; and this distinctive feature was continued until the establishment of a general cemetery for the inhabitants. The number interred in them was large. In 1860 the Lutheran congregation removed the dead from the ground at Sixth and Walnut Streets; and in 1870, the Reformed from Sixth and Washington Streets.

Charles Evans’ Cemetery.—Charles Evans, a distinguished and wealthy member of

1 The Jews claim to have had an early burying-ground on Schuylkill Avenue, near the railroad; but I could not find any deed, record or data on the subject.
the Berks County bar, "not having any child of the many born to him left to inherit his fortune, exercised his mind with devising some such disposition of a portion of his property as would redound to the benefit of the people of Reading.
He finally determined that the establishment of a cemetery would be the practical form of benevolence most beneficial to them and most agreeable to himself. Not postponing the execution of his project until after his death, as men too frequently do, he proceeded to select the site for a cemetery, purchase the land and appoint the trustees of his choice. The necessary legislation having been obtained to incorporate those trustees, the company was organized on March 28, 1846, whereupon Mr. Evans made the con-voyance to it of twenty-five acres of land. His interest in the institution was not exhausted by this liberal gift; for, besides a further gift of two thousand dollars in money, in his will he bequeathed to it ten thousand dollars and six-eighths of the residue of his estate, which, upon final settlement, amounted to nearly sixty-seven thousand dollars, making, with the land, an aggregate endowment of over eighty-four thousand dollars—a benefaction to a single object of public utility so great as to have been exceeded but in a few instances, it is believed, in Pennsylvania."

The trustees appointed by Mr. Evans were John Banks, John S. Hiester, Dr. Isaac Hies-ter, James L. Dunn, Samuel Bell, Dr. Hiester
H. Muhlenberg, William Strong, Matthias S.
Richards, William Darling, Dr. Diller Luther, William Eckert, Benneville Keim and Peter Filbert. They were incorporated by an act of Assembly, passed 24th of February, 1846, under the name of the "Charles Evans Cemtery Company." On the 28th of March following they organized the company by electing as the first officers of the board: John S. Hiester, president; Samuel Bell, treasurer; Matthias S.
Richards, secretary. Upon this organization,
Mr. Evans conveyed to the company twenty-five acres of ground, situated one mile north of Penn Square, on the eastern side of the Centre turnpike, to be used for the burial of the dead forever. The board addressed a letter of thanks to him for his liberal gift. In his reply, dated July 11, 1846, he said, among other things,—

"... That it is the duty of the living to provide for the becoming interment of the dead, is a sentiment which seems to have been cherished by almost all nations from the earliest period of time. The Greeks, Romans and other nations manifested a laudable desire to establish suitable places for the repose of the dead. Associations for these meritorious purposes have recently become prevalent in Pennsyl-\nania. Such establishments afford opportunities for all to provide a decent place for the interment of their friends and the final repose of themselves.
Rural cemeteries have long been considered of great utility and importance, and are subjects of deep and universal interest. Most ancient nations permitted no sepulture within their cities. Adrian and Theodosius, and other Roman Emperors, believing interments in populous places to be detrimental to health, prohibited all burials within the walls of their cities.
Regulations of this kind, which exempt the living from the mismas of the dead, have long been considered indispensable to the health and happiness of the community.

"That the ground selected for the cemetery should have met with the unanimous approval of the trust-eses to make a source of inexpressible gratification.
In the hands of gentlemen so well qualified for the trust, the march of improvement will be unobstructed and the establishment rendered extensively useful.
That such may be its fate is the sincere and ardent desire of him whose humble act has been abundantly rewarded by the very gratifying terms in which it has been accepted."

The trustees then adopted a plan for laying out and permanently inclosing the ground and for a gateway as the main entrance into the cemetery. This gateway presents an imposing front, and it possesses the enduring merit of being thoroughly well built of the best materials.
Its cost was $18,879.78. It was built in 1847-
49. Upon its completion they erected the side-wings and also a dwelling-house within for the superintendent.

In 1852 they erected a chapel of red frestone. Its cost was $18,818.96.

Since the death of the founder the area has been increased by additional purchases of land adjoining the cemetery to the east and north.
Now it embraces one hundred and twenty-seven acres.

From the opening of the cemetery till January 1, 1864, the removals from other grounds and the burials together numbered three thousand two hundred and sixty-three, an average of two hundred and four interments per annum. During 1861, 1862 and 1863 the average was two hundred and seventy. From the beginning till now it is estimated that fifteen thousand burials have been made in the cemetery.

The cemetery contains many fine monuments. The Evans lot is situated in the central section of the cemetery, surrounded by a heavy iron railing. In it are four large trees, two graves, small plain head and foot-stones for each grave, and a plain marble shaft resting upon two plain marble blocks. Near the top of the shaft, on the east side, is a medallion bust of Charles Evans; and the inscriptions on it are as follows:

CHARLES EVANS.
The founder of this cemetery which justly bears his name, an Eminent Lawyer Learned, faithful, eloquent, An exemplary citizen, Publick spirited and generous, and in every sphere of his long and useful life conscientious, upright and honorable. Born 30 of March, 1768 Died 5 of September, 1847. In the Christian's hope of a glorious immortality.

MARY EVANS, wife of CHARLES EVANS.
Eminent for the powers of her mind And the benevolence of her heart. She died beloved and lamented, 30 August, 1838, In the seventieth year of her age.

CHARLES EVANS was born in Philadelphia on March 30, 1768. His parents were David Evans, of Philadelphia, and Letitia Thomas, of Radnor, both members of the Society of Friends. He received a good education, "which Friends never failed to give their children," and entered the office of Benjamin Chew, Esq., a distinguished lawyer at Philadelphia, for the purpose of reading law, when he was twenty years of age. He was admitted to the bar in June, 1791, and two months afterward went to Reading to practice law. In his profession he was faithful, capable and diligent, and "in ten years after his admission he had won his right-ful place in the front rank of this bar. At that day and in that rank his compers were lawyers of the severe school, who studied law in the original sources of statutes and reports." He continued in full and active business till 1828, and then retired with an ample fortune. Occasionally afterward he appeared in court to try a case or argue a rule. His last elaborate discussion of a question of law was in 1840, and his latest appearance in court in 1843. In 1846 he founded the "Charles Evans Cemetery," situated in Reading, and established it firmly by large donations of money and grants of property. He died September 5, 1847, and "was buried in the cemetery of his endowment, where a fitting monument marks his final resting-place and transmits to after-times the features of the man and a just and truthful tribute to his worth." He was married to Mary Keene, a daughter of Reynold Keene and Christiana Stille, both of Philadelphia, but had no surviving children. He was the first philanthropist at Reading whose heart was moved by a generous sponta-neous impulse toward the general welfare of this growing community. But, strange to say, notwithstanding this wonderful incentive to others of his day and generation, who were en-gaged here in business, accumulated fortunes and survived him, "to go and do likewise" in some other field in which philanthropy could be equally beneficial to the public, not a single individual since has been moved to make a liberal gift, donation or grant for a public cause.

Other Cemeteries.—Two cemeteries were laid out and established in 1849 on the northern slope of Neversink,—Trinity Lutheran and Roman Catholic. The former was extended by the addition of St. John's German Lutheran, both being together.

The Aulenbach Cemetery was established in 1851, and was named after Charles Aulenbach, who owned the land and laid it out in lots for burial purposes. The original tract numbered four hundred and thirty-two lots. The cemetery company was incorporated May 17, 1853. The cemetery has been enlarged and much improved and now numbers one thousand nine hundred and sixty lots. It is situated at the eastern boundary of Reading.

The Hebrew Cemetery is a small inclosure on South Street, opposite the Roman Catholic Cemetery.

The colored people buried in the burying-ground attached to the African M. E. Church, on North Tenth Street, near Washington, and also in burying-ground attached to the Washington Street Presbyterian Church for many years; but since 1874 in Charles Evans' Cemetery.

Gas and Electric Light.—Our forefathers used a very simple sort of light. It was produced from tallow and oil. Candles were in universal use. And they continued in use during the first and second periods of Reading. The inhabitants did not require a superior light, for they performed their labor and transacted their business during the hours of the day in which the sun shone,—from "sun-rise" to "sun-set,"—carrying out the divine injunction, "work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work." From this, however, we are not to infer that the night was not used to some extent, as it is now, for amusement at least, if not so much for labor and business. "Country life," as distinguished from "town-life," clung to the inhabitants with remarkable tenacity. This arose from their condition. They were mostly of the laboring class. They had simple habits. A great proportion also carried on agriculture in connection with their trades and occupations. Generally inclined, if not forced, to exercise economy, they avoided expense beyond the necessities of life. Naturally, therefore, a simple, cheap light was sufficient for their purposes. A demand for an improvement did not arise; hence, it was not thought of. If, perchance, it occurred to some men of enterprise and advanced thought, it was certainly during these periods impracticable. The time had not yet come, and the population had not yet reached the number to justify the experiment and expense.

Immediately after the erection of the borough into a city an improvement was made. And this was by the introduction of gas, for which a company was formed in 1848, under the name of the "Reading Gas Company." It continued to supply many citizens and business places and the streets of the city with gas from that time till November, 1885, when the "Consumers' Gas Company" took possession of its extensive and costly plant under a lease. This latter company is now supplying gas to the community. The Reading Company began their enterprise with five miles of pipes and sixteen lamps in the central part of the city, and supplied the gas from a gasometer with a capacity of fifty thousand feet. The works then had only nine retorts. As time advanced, the demands for gas increased and the retorts multiplied, advancing in number from nine to sixty. In 1861 a telescope gasometer was erected with a capacity of one hundred thousand feet, and afterward a similar one was substituted in the place of the original one. In 1873 the company erected at Fourth and Elm Streets a large distributing telescope gasometer, with a capacity of three hundred and sixty thousand feet. Its works are situated in the southern section of the city, at the foot of Fifth Street. Dr. Isaac Hiester was the first president and Matthias S. Richards the first secretary and treasurer. Horatio Trexler has officiated as president since 1860; and Edward D. Smith as secretary and treasurer since 1859. Its organization is maintained notwithstanding the transfer. In November, 1885, there were thirty-nine miles of pipes and two hundred and fifty-five gas lamps.

Naphtha gas was introduced in 1879. By this process about three hundred lamps are lit, being located in the outer portions of the city and along the alleys.

A company was formed in 1883 for the purpose of supplying Reading with electric light and power, and it has been in successful operation since. At present the company has in use fourteen miles of wire, and is supplying electric light to the city and certain business men; total number of city lamps being seventy-eight, and business lights forty-two. The company began to supply the city with light at the more prominent intersection of streets on Sept. 1, 1883. This company is now finishing a large and substantial brick building on Seventh Street near Chestnut, to supply the increasing demands for their superior light. The engine is four hundred and fifty horse power, capable of carrying one hundred and twenty-two arc lights and two thousand four hundred incandescent lights. The officers of the company are Thomas P. Merritt, president, and Joshua K. Righter, secretary and treasurer.

HALLS.—The people of Reading had a natural fondness for amusement from its very beginning as a prominent centre. During its first period as a town there were no buildings set apart expressly for meetings and amusements. Every tavern had a large room, in which the landlord encouraged parties to assemble for dancing, an amusement which was indulged in quite frequently during the year by the young people, and which was especially conspicuous on "Fair-Days." Public meetings assembled at the court-house, and also to a certain extent in the Reading Academy, a building erected in 1810 for educational purposes. And during its second period as a borough the situation in this respect was not much improved. The "State-House" was erected in 1793, at the northeast corner of Fifth and Penn Streets, and included two large rooms on the second floor; but these rooms were never converted into "halls" for dancing, theatres, etc.,—the one having been mostly used for a Sunday-school, from about 1820 till 1846, and the other for a lodge-room by the "Masons," when the building was sold by the county. Theatres and performances of all kinds were still conducted in large rooms of certain tavern buildings. But its third period as a city had hardly begun before a change was effected to accommodate the public. The first enterprise for this purpose was projected in 1842, when steps were taken by the Masonic Lodge for the erection of a large and commodious three-story hall on the east side of South Fifth Street, near Franklin; but it failed, notwithstanding a large room was much needed. The academy had been closed to entertainments, even concerts.

In 1846 a second effort was made in this behalf. This was by the "Odd-Fellows." They purchased the lot on the southwest corner of Fifth and Franklin Streets, and began building operations in April, 1846. The building—three-story brick—was dedicated as the "Odd-Fellows' Hall," on October 26, 1847. The procession of Odd-Fellows upon that occasion presented one of the finest pageants ever witnessed in Reading. A large number of the members of the order from abroad, including the dignitaries of the Grand Lodge of this and other States and of the United States, were in attendance; and the various lodges in this county were largely represented. The ceremony of dedicating the hall was imposing. It took place between ten and twelve o'clock in the morning.

Thirty-four lodges were present from Philadelphia and surrounding counties, and the number in line was from two thousand to two thousand five hundred. All the banners were beautiful and attractive and mostly made for the occasion. A levee took place in the evening. Many persons attended. The ball was a splendid affair.

Concerts and entertainments began to be held immediately after its dedication in the large auditorium on the second floor. A dramatic troupe, under the management of J. H. Powell, is worthy of special mention. He opened on May 10, 1848, and continued to play to large audiences for four weeks.

The next was the "Keystone Hall"—an addition erected at the rear of the Keystone House —northwest corner of Sixth and Penn Streets, by the owner, Tobias Barto. Its completion was signalized by a “Grand Dedication Ball,” on Thursday evening, October 19, 1854. Its capacity was about five hundred. Many entertainments, balls and public meetings were held in it during its continuance. In 1866 it was enlarged and much improved, when it was called Keystone Opera-House. It was discontinued upon the enlargement of the hotel.

The third was “Aulenbach’s Hall,” on the south side of Penn street, one hundred feet above Sixth, erected by John S. Aulenbach in 1862. Its capacity, including gallery, was about eight hundred.

The fourth was “Breneiser’s Hall” on the northwest corner of Penn and Eighth Streets, erected by Charles S. Breneiser in 1869. From 1879 till now it has been known as Association Hall—the second and third floors having been occupied by the Young Men’s Christian Association of Reading till April 1, 1886, and since then only the second floor. The third floor is occupied by societies of Odd-Fellows.

Mishler’s Academy of Music was erected by Joseph Mishler, of Reading, and opened to the public October 1, 1872, with an entertainment by home talent, consisting of an address by Hon. Hieste Clymer, vocal selections by Albert S. Boyer, violin solos by A. S. Bowman, zither solo by Philip Bissinger, the Ringgold Band, under the direction of B. M. Henry, and the Germania Orchestra under the direction of Prof. J. William Jost. Tickets were sold by sealed proposals which ranged from twenty dollars to fifty cents. Col. Eli S. Fox, of the Keystone House, was the highest bidder, taking first choice of two seats for forty dollars. Hon.
been opened were: Parquet, five dollars; parquet circle, $2.50; gallery one dollar; boxes, forty dollars. The first dramatic performance was given October 7, 1872, by a dramatic company under the management of Mr. John E. McDonough, which remained four weeks playing to crowded houses. All the leading American stars, except Booth, appeared at the Academy, and the character of entertainments equaled those of any theatre in New York or Philadelphia. Among those that had the largest receipts were Charlotte Cushman, as "Meg Merrilies," May 15, 1873, and on that occasion the prices of seats were higher than for any other dramatic performance since; the prices were $2, $1.50, $1 and seventy-five cents; the receipts were seven hundred and four dollars, and as Miss Cushman received five hundred and personal expenses for her own services only, there was a loss of several hundred dollars; Carnecross and Dixey, $646.50; Henry Ward Beecher, $761, $1 having been charged for seats in every part of the Academy; George L. Fox in pantomime, $769.50; Furbish's Two Orphans Company (two nights), $1280; Thatcher, Primrose and West, $685.35; Kiralfy's Around the World, $698.50; E. L. Davenport, $613.50; Fanny Davenport, $652.70; and Thomas' orchestra, $1011. A pleasing feature for several seasons was Mishler's course of lectures, for which the stage settings were made expressly to conform with the subject of the lecture. The Mishler Academy was the first modern complete theatre erected in Eastern Pennsylvania, outside of Philadelphia. The Academy occupied a space of seventy by one hundred feet, and the auditorium was divided into a parquette, raised parquette circle, and one gallery, with a total seating capacity of over one thousand persons. The cost exceeded one hundred thousand dollars. The interior arrangements were complete in all their appointments, and the ceilings and walls were magnificently frescoed.

After a successful career of fourteen years, the Academy was closed also by home talent, February 27, 1886,— the production of the "Drummer Boy of Shiloh," by members of the McLean and Keim Posts, G. A. R.
The Academy was always under the management of John D. Mishler, son of the proprietor.

Joseph Mishler, the proprietor of the Academy, was born at Reamstown, Lancaster County, Pa., March 14, 1820. He located at Reading in 1848, and became an enterprising and liberal-spirited citizen. He was of a jovial, sociable disposition and had an extensive acquaintance throughout the State. In the early progress of the city he was among the foremost in the erection of numerous buildings. In 1872 he erected the first modern place of amusement in Reading. It was a gratifying enterprise to his friends and a substantial evidence of his liberality and good taste. The last six years of his life he retired from active business. He died August 20, 1880. He was married to Rebecca Zimmerman, of Lebanon County, Pa., and left a widow and two sons, —John D. and William D.

John D. Mishler was born at Newmanstown, Lebanon County, in 1847, and educated at Reading. He was actively engaged as a merchant at Reading from 1868 till 1872, when he directed his attention to public entertainments, in which since that time he has met with great success. He has also shown a high degree of public spirit in other matters pertaining to the progress of Reading. In various charitable affairs he has exhibited much liberality. He was connected with the construction of the first street railway in Reading, the organization of the first Board of Health, the agitation of the City Park, and the projection of the Widows' Home.

Grand Opera-House.—In 1871 the West Reading Market-House Company erected a fine and commodious market-house on Penn Street, between Third and Fourth Streets, extending to Cherry Street in the rear. Shortly after its completion, the company decided to add an "Opera-House" to the front part, and accordingly proceeded in that behalf, finishing the building in September, 1873; and in the same month it was regularly opened to the public as a superior place of amusement with a seating capacity for one thousand persons. The cost was forty thousand dollars. The decorations were admirably executed by Frederick Spang, artist, of Reading.

The front of the parquet circle is in panel-work, with handsome life-like portraits of Rubinstein, Mrs. Billington, Lucca, Miss Nielson, Jenny Lind, M'Ille Nilsson, Handel, Haydn, Clara Louise Kellogg, Parepa Rosa, Mrs. Scott Siddons, Madame Sassi, Madame Pasta, and Meyerbeer. These are interspersed with elegant little bouquets of flowers. Above the proscenium, in a recess, is the head of Apollo, and on the ceiling are portraits of Forrest as Macbeth, the elder Mrs. Siddons as Lady Macbeth, Fanny Kemble, Beethoven, Mozart, Schiller and Goethe. In the centre of the dome are four figures, representing Spring, Summer, Autumn and Winter, which are interspersed with wreaths and bouquets. Encircling these are figures of Music, Tragedy, Comedy and the Terpsichorean art. The stage is thirty-four feet deep, with a recess of twelve feet. The following gentlemen composed the board of directors, who attended to the erection of the building: Reuben E. Addams, Charles S. Birch, George M. Ermentrout, John Kissinger, John McKnight, Arnold Mellert, John F. Orth, John S. Pearson and A. W. Potteiger. The president of the board was John Kissinger, and the secretary and treasurer George M. Ermentrout, Esq.

Mr. George W. Miller has been the manager for the past ten years, successfully providing attractive and well attended amusements.

MENNERCHOR HALL.—A "Masonic Temple" was begun in 1873, on North Sixth Street, near Walnut, but the project failed during the course of its erection, after the completion of the market-house. Subsequently Hon. George D. Stitzel and several others purchased the property and completed the building. It was opened in 1877, and named after the prominent singing society of Reading. A small stage was added to the auditorium. The capacity is estimated at eight hundred persons. The market-house was torn down recently, and the owners (George D. Stitzel, Nolan Brothers, William Shomo, John D. Mishler and Garrett B. Stevens) are now erecting a commodious opera-house, to take the place of the "Academy of Music," and to be complete in all its appointments.

There have been other places of amusement in Reading, but they were not long in existence, and special mention of them will not be made.

PRIVATE MARKET-HOUSES.—Immediately after the public market-houses were abandoned, private individuals erected substantial and commodious buildings to accommodate the market people, which were opened the first time on May 10, 1871. The following three buildings were erected shortly before: South Reading, Sixth and Bingaman; Farmer’s, on Penn, between Eighth and Ninth; West Reading, on Penn, between Third and Fourth. In 1874 two additional market-houses were erected,—Northeast, at Ninth and Buttonwood, and the Keystone, on Sixth, near Walnut,—and in 1884, a sixth was erected at Tenth and Chestnut, by Dr. W. P. Deppen.

HOSPITALS.—There are two fine hospital buildings in Reading,—the Reading, in the northern part of the city; and the St. Joseph’s, on Walnut Street, above Twelfth. Both occupy fine positions and command magnificent views of the surrounding country.

READING HOSPITAL.—Prior to the year 1867 Reading had no institution to provide medical treatment and medicines for the worthy poor. The Reading Medical Association recognizing this want, at a stated meeting in December of that year, appointed a committee, composed of Drs. D. L. Beaver, J. B. Brooke, S. L. Kurtz, Martin Luther, Edward Wallace and W. Murray Weidman, to confer with some of the leading citizens in reference to this charity. On the evening of December 14, 1867, at the office of Dr. Martin Luther, the following-named gentlemen met the committee: A. F. Boas, Isaac Eckert, Wm. Griscom, Dr. Chas. H. Hunter, Chas. Kessler, Adam Leize, Frederick Lauer, H. H. Muhlenberg, John McManus, G. A. Nicolls, James F. Smith, Dr. Daniel Ulrich and P. M. Ziegler. It was then determined to open the “Reading Dispensary.”

A constitution with by-laws was adopted, a charter was obtained, money was subscribed and a house rented. Messrs. A. F. Boas, Henry Bushong, Hiester Clymer, Isaac Eckert, Wm. Griscom, Chas. H. Hunter, M.D., Charles Kessler, Adam Leize, Frederick Lauer, H. H. Muhlenberg, John McManus, G. A. Nicolls, John S. Richards, Esq., Daniel Shaaber, Hon. Warren J. Woodward, James F. Smith and P. M. Ziegler composed the first board of managers.

On the 27th of January, 1868, the Reading Dispensary was opened at No. 618 Court Street for the reception of in-door patients. One surgeon and one physician were appointed to be in attendance daily. Out-door patients were prescribed for every afternoon except Sundays, between the hours of two and three. Ward physicians were appointed to attend patients too ill to call at the institution. All this work was performed gratuitously by the members of the Reading Medical Association. In February, 1874, Frederick Lauer, Drs. Brooke, Kurtz and Weidman were appointed as a committee by the board of managers to purchase a site for the erection of a hospital building. The spot selected was that on which the Reading Hospital now stands and was purchased of Michael Hauser. During the financial panic of 1874 the demands on the dispensary were greatly increased and the collections diminished to such an extent that the managers were compelled to close the building on Court Street. A room was obtained in the building of the Reading Relief Association, corner of Franklin and Plum Streets, where all out-door patients were attended daily, and the services of the ward physicians continued as above mentioned. In 1883 the charter was revised and the name changed to the “Reading Hospital.” The State appropriated twenty thousand dollars on condition that twenty-five thousand dollars be collected from citizens. This being accomplished, a plan of building, designed by Furness & Evans, under the direction of the building committee—namely, W. E. C. Coxe, J. B. Brooke, M.D., Geo. F. Baer, Harrison Maltzberger and W. M. Weidman, M.D.,—was adopted, and the building commenced.

The members of the board of managers at present are W. E. C. Coxe, president; P. M. Ziegler, treasurer; Israel Cleaver, M.D., secretary; B. R. Lee, M.D., representative of Reading Medical Association; George F. Baer, Esq., Elijah Bull, Charles Breneiser, J. B. Brooke, M.D., A. B. Dundor, M.D., Henry S. Eckert,
S. L. Kurtz, M.D., Harrison Maltzberger, Esq., W. F. Muhlenberg, M.D., John B. Raser, P. R. Stetson and W. Murray Weidman, M.D.

The hospital comprises a superior and commodious two-story brick structure with a cut lime-stone base in a fine, elevated position, which commands a magnificent view of Reading and the surrounding country. It contains all the modern improvements, especially designed for a complete sanitarium, with two large wards, each having a capacity for twelve beds, a female ward for five beds and three apartments for “pay” patients. When finished it will be under the care of a physician and surgeon, matron and nurse, with several assistants.

The building is situated one mile north from Penn Street, and is accessible by conveyance or by the street railway, the northern terminus of which is only a short distance from the inclosure. The property includes a tract of over three acres of ground.

The following subscriptions have been received towards the Reading Hospital to December 31, 1884:

ST. JOSEPH'S HOSPITAL.—The land on which this hospital is located, on the north side of Walnut Street, above Twelfth, was long known as the Vollmer property. It was purchased in 1873 for ten thousand dollars and contained three and a half acres, on which were then a two-story brick dwelling, twenty by thirty feet, a frame structure and a stable. The dwelling was arranged into wards, appropriately furnished, and the institution was opened as a hospital in August, 1873, under the immediate stewardship of the Sisters of St. Francis. Immediately after the organization of the hospital, the Pathological Society of Berks County, at a meeting held for that purpose, appointed a committee to tender the services of its members as a medical board of the institution. The offer was gratefully accepted and a board was organized, with the following membership: Drs. D. L. Beaver, Martin Luther, Jeremiah Breidenbach, H. M. Nagle, Henry Landis, J. G. Kalbach, Samuel Ermentrout and M. A. Rhoads, which was subsequently increased by the addition of James M. Hoffman and A. J. Cressman. The same medical society is to the present day the efficient medical staff of St. Joseph's Hospital.

The corner-stone of the new St. Joseph's Hospital was laid in July, 1882, and the building placed under roof some time during the following winter. On account of the lack of funds, the building was not completed until 1885, when, on May 25th, it was solemnly blessed by the most Rev. P. J. Ryan, Archbishop of Philadelphia. Soon after this it was properly furnished and occupied. Since then it has done a noble work, as from thirty to forty patients at a time have been carefully provided for. The main building has a front on Walnut Street of sixty-five feet; its depth is fifty feet, with additions both in the front and to the rear. On its west side it has four stories, on the east three. Spacious balconies on the east and west sides afford patients who can leave the house pure air, a most beautiful view of Reading and has surroundings and opportunity for light out-door exercise.

The interior arrangements, with all modern improvements, are well adapted to the comfort and improvement of its suffering inmates. The building contains fourteen single rooms, well furnished for private patients, and three wards with twenty-six beds.

There are other large rooms and halls that can be made into wards for patients, if necessary, so as to double the capacity of the institution. The hospital occupies an elevated location on the western slope of Mount Penn. The grounds belonging to the institution are principally occupied by productive vineyards, fruit-trees and shrubbery, thus affording convalescent patients ample opportunity in mild weather for amusement and recreation. Easily accessible from all parts of the city, with an inexhaustible flow of pure mountain spring-water, and affording a magnificent view of the city of Reading and the surrounding country, it is most eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was erected.

Though conducted by the Sisters of St. Francis, a well-known religious society in the Catholic Church, it is by no means a sectarian institution in the dispensation of its charities. The statistics of the hospital show that more than one-half of the patients treated were not of the Catholic, but of the Protestant persuasion. Its doors are open alike to the sick and afflicted of every race, color and creed. Comparatively few of its inmates are able to pay for their board, and most of them are charity patients.

The institution was built by charitable contributions. Its greatest benefactor was the late Francis A. Drexel, who kindly remembered it by a handsome legacy among his most munificent charities. Next to him stands the charitable George R. Frill, of Reading, who has donated to the institution ten thousand dollars' worth of stock of the Reading Land Improvement Company, on which the hospital may realize at some future day a handsome sum for its support. Meanwhile, the hospital is supported by the charity of the citizens of Reading, solicited from time to time by the Sisters in charge.

PRIVATE PARKS.—A number of small parks are situated in different parts of the city,—Lauer's, Third and Elm; Fairview, Ninth and South; City Hotel and Grand Central, in East Reading; Andalusia (Hertwig's), North Reading; and the Highland House, on Neversink. The first has been prominent in social and convivial affairs, in political demonstrations, and in celebrations of various kinds for many years. The last was set apart in 1884 by A. S. Ganzer, who erected thereon a fine, commodious, three-story frame building and constructed an inclined railway. This place affords a magnificent view of Reading, and also northwardly over the Schuylkill Valley, and westwardly over the Lebanon Valley; and near by are "look-outs" (elevated platforms), one at the eastern end of Neversink, looking west and north, and two others, on the same mountain, looking south and southeast over the Schuylkill Valley, in which the "double bend," bridges, "Big Dam" and fine farms are conspicuous features.

The Highland House has one hundred and eighteen rooms. It is elevated above the Schuylkill River seven hundred and twenty-eight feet, and nine hundred and seventy-two feet above tide-water. The inclined double track railway leading to it is one thousand eight hundred feet long. The cars are drawn by a double cable, and moved by an eighty horse-power engine. Eighty acres are included in the property with timber of thirty years' growth. An artesian well is upon the premises, the depth of which is five hundred and sixty feet, with a daily water supply equal to fifty thousand gallons. The total cost is about sixty thousand dollars.
MINERAL SPRING.—The property in the eastern section of the city, owned by the city of Reading and commonly known by the name of "Mineral Spring," must be mentioned in this connection, for, if not a private park, it is a property used as a park by many people on pleasant days. It has been much improved lately. The place is remembered with pleasure by many on account of the "chickens and waffles" furnished there for thirty years by Mrs. Roland.

By a petition for a road presented to court on January 4, 1819, it would appear that shortly before, a "mineral water" was discovered on land of Charles Kessler, about one mile and a half to the eastward of Reading, which was considered "as an efficacious remedy for many disorders," having been used for some time previously by a great many persons as a medicine. On this account the public-house near by, in the occupancy of Jacob Schneider, was expected to become a place of great resort, and not having a road to reach it conveniently, the court was therefore asked to lay one out, which was done. This place has been a resort for the people ever since. The Democrats for many years annually celebrated the "Fourth of July," drank toasts and delivered speeches there. The mineral spring is abandoned, not having been sufficiently strong to be of any profit.

STREET RAILWAYS.

READING CITY.—In 1873 the Reading City Passenger Railway Company was incorporated with the following members: George R. Frill, James Millholland, David McKnight, George W. Bruckman and William H. Parvin. The railway was laid in 1874 on Sixth Street, from Canal Street northwardly to Robeson, and thence to the Evans Cemetery, the first cars having been run in August of that year. The company has continued to operate the road successfully since. It owns four miles of track, seventy horses and twenty-one cars. In 1884 it carried four hundred and twenty-one thousand nine hundred and sixty-one passengers.

PERKIOMEN AVENUE.—The company for laying this street railway was first incorporated in 1873, under the name of Penn Street Passenger Railway Company, the petition having been subscribed by two hundred and five citizens and property-holders along Penn Street; and the right was given to construct a street railway on Penn Street from Front to Eleventh, thence on Perkiomen Avenue to Nineteenth Street. Then an organization was effected and the railway laid in 1874. But the road was not operated successfully for a number of years; then it passed into the possession of the Central Passenger Railway Company, which also failed to carry it on to advantage. In 1881 the Perkiomen Avenue Passenger Railway Company was organized, when it purchased the road, cars, etc. It has operated the road successfully since. In 1884 it carried three hundred and seventy-four thousand seven hundred and seven passengers. The length of the road is two miles; and it has in use fifteen cars and forty-two horses.

PART VI.

CHURCHES.

LUTHERAN CHURCHES.

TRINITY LUTHERAN CHURCH.—The records of Trinity Church begin with 1751, and the first entry is the baptism of Henry, son of Abraham and Margaret Brosius, born August 20th, and baptized August 24th, by Rev. Tobias Wagner, who served congregations in a somewhat irregular manner in this and neighboring counties. Religious services, at first, were held in private houses, but steps were speedily taken for the erection of a church-building. A meeting of such persons for this purpose was held on the festival of Epiphany, January 6, 1752, and Peter Schneider and John Oerlin were appointed a building committee, and at the same time Peter Schneider, Christian Brentzter, William Marx and Abraham Brosius were re-elected church officers, which latter statement shows that an organization had previously been effected. The building was begun in the spring of 1752 on a lot of ground situated on the northwest corner of Prince and Thomas Streets (now Sixth and Washington Streets). It was located on the western part of the ground, where the parsonage now stands, was built of logs and was surmounted with a steeple having
The patent to the congregation for the lots Nos. 406 and 407 was not issued until 1754. A delegate was sent to the meeting of the Evangelical Lutheran Ministerium, held in October, 1752, with a petition signed by eighty-two members, praying "that a member of that reverend body might be appointed to deliver the first sermon in the newly-erected church, and also to set things in good order in the congregation." Rev. Henry Melchior Muhlenberg was accordingly appointed, and he preached the first sermon in the church on October 15, 1752. The church was consecrated on Trinity Sunday, June 17, 1753, and received the name "The Holy Trinity Church." On that occasion the following church officers were installed: Peter Schneider, Philip Jacob Mayer, Wilhelm Marx, Henry Hahn, Peter Weiser, Christian Barchmann, Eberhard Martin, Henry Reitmyer, Frederick Wendisch, Michael Fiehthorn, Jurg Sauerbrey, Alexander Klinger, Peter Drompor and John Kissinger, together with J. Spengler and A. Reissle, from Alsace, and Martin Gerich, from Schartzwald (Exeter).

Presents to the new church, consisting of pulpit and altar coverings, sacramental vessels, collection plates, etc., are recorded as having been made by Christian Brentner and his wife Catharine, Eberhard Martin, Anna K. Sauer-milch, Philip J. Rohrbuckscht, Master Trury and the congregations at Lancaster and Phila.

Pastoral changes were frequent in the early history of the congregation and the records kept are often fragmentary. The following served the congregation during the last century: Rev. H. B. G. Wordman, in 1752; Rev. D. Schnuhmacker, in 1754-55; Rev. J. C. Hartwig, in 1757; Rev. — Hauseil, 1759-62; Rev. J. A. Krug, 1764-71; Rev. Henry Moller, in 1775; Rev. D. Lehman, 1779-80; Rev. Charles Frederick Wildbahn, 1782-96; and Rev. D. Lehman (the second time), 1796 to 1801. Notwithstanding these frequent changes, and the distress which prevailed during and subsequent to the Revolutionary War, the congregation grew in numbers and wealth, and in 1790 determined to erect the large and stately edifice now standing on the northwest corner of Sixth and Washington Streets. The erection of a building of such dimensions, strength and beauty, at that early date, bears testimony to the enlarged ideas, culture and liberality of the congregation and its pastor, Rev. C. F. Wildbahn. The subscription list was started in 1790, the corner-stone was laid in 1791 and the building completed in 1798, with the exception of the spire, which was not added until 1831. The dimensions are one hundred feet long by sixty-one feet wide, and originally the church had but one floor, with three doors of entrance on Washington Street and one on Sixth Street.

In 1803 Rev. Henry A. Muhlenberg, son of Rev. Dr. H. E. Muhlenberg, of Lancaster, and grandson of Rev. Henry Melchior Muhlenberg, the patriarch of the Lutheran Church in America, accepted a call and took charge of this congregation. He married into the family of Governor Hiester, and his high social position and eminent talents gave a new impulse to the congregation. His call, still in possession of his son, Dr. H. H. Muhlenberg, provided for English preaching every fourth Sunday, the services previous to that date having been entirely in the German language. The number of worshippers on these occasions was quite small, and after several years the German language was again used in all the services.
Mr. Muhlenberg was the longest settled pastor the congregation ever had, his ministry continuing twenty-six years, until 1829, when he was chosen to represent this district in Congress.

He was succeeded by Rev. Jacob Miller, D.D., who took charge of the congregation in May, 1829, and died in May, 1850, having faithfully served the church for twenty-one years.

During his pastorate, about 1831–33, the very fine spire, which is still the pride of the city and its most prominent landmark, was erected, and two large bells placed therein additional to the smaller one which had been in use whilst the first church was yet standing. This first bell was cast by Henry Kapple, in Philadelphia, in 1755, and for many years was rung daily at eight a.m. and at noon, the custom continuing as late as 1844. When St. Luke's Chapel was built, this bell was placed upon it and used about ten years, when it became cracked and was replaced in the tower of Trinity Church, where it is kept as a relic of "ye olden time." The spire of the church is over two hundred feet in height, and for a long while was the highest in the State.

In 1842 a number of members who desired services in the English language withdrew and organized St. Matthew's congregation. This led to the call, in the fall of the same year, of Rev. F. A. M. Keller as assistant pastor, who was to officiate in the English language. He entered immediately on his duties. From that time the morning services were held by Dr. Miller in the German language, and the evening services by Mr. Keller in the English language. Rev. John W. Richards, D.D., was chosen pastor after the death of Dr. Miller. He was a native of Reading, and a grandson of the Patriarch Muhlenberg. As he was able to officiate in both languages, the services of the English assistant were dispensed with, upon which action a large number of the friends of Mr. Keller withdrew and organized in 1851 St. James' Lutheran congregation.

At a meeting of the vestry held November 2, 1850, it was determined to make extensive alterations in the church edifice, fitting it up in modern style and making better arrangements for the Sunday-school and weekly meetings. The improvements were completed by the middle of the following summer and the church was reconsecrated on July 27, 1851.

The building was very materially altered in its arrangements, but not in its dimensions, the great height of the church allowing a basement story of eleven feet high to be formed by putting a second floor in, and still leaving a height of thirty feet for the main auditorium, and giving space on the first floor for a large Sunday-school room and a lecture-room. The chancel, with pulpit and altar richly furnished, was placed at the eastern end of the building, frosted glass put in the windows, the walls frescoed in a very superior manner by an Italian artist then in this country, and the entire building renovated and beautified at an expense of about ten thousand dollars.

Dr. Richards entered on his duties March 16, 1851, and his sudden death on January 24, 1854, was universally lamented. He was succeeded by Rev. John N. Hoffman, who served the congregation from September 3, 1854, until his death, which occurred July 26, 1857. The congregation had grown very large, and many believed the time had come for a division on the basis of language, but various difficulties prevented its immediate consummation. Rev. F. J. F. Shantz, who had just entered the ministry, was called as a supply and on November 28, 1857, was elected pastor. He officiated in both languages for two years, when Rev. J. J. Kündig was called as assistant to preach in the German language. This arrangement continued but one year, when the division or separation of the English and German portions of the congregation took place. The old grave-yard at Sixth and Walnut Streets was sold, and with the proceeds the German portion erected St. John's German Lutheran Church, and Trinity Church became exclusively English in its services. Shortly after the separation, Rev. Mr. Schantz resigned (in January, 1861), and on March 9th Rev. C. Rightmyer was chosen pastor and served the congregation until the summer of 1864, when his resignation was accepted.

Rev. Jacob Fry, the present pastor, was elected on Christmas day, 1864, and entered on His duties February 1, 1865. He is the son of Hon. Jacob Fry, of Montgomery County, who represented that district in Congress for several terms, and more recently was auditor-general of Pennsylvania. A large number of families who had left the church on account of the strifes and troubles which for some years disturbed the congregation, returned, and very large accessions were made to its membership. Some six hundred families are now connected with it, the communicant members numbering over twelve hundred, and one thousand teachers and scholars are connected with the Sunday-school.

Mr. Fry is a graduate of Union College, New York, and the title of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him by his Alma Mater in 1873.

He has occupied many prominent positions in the Ministerium of Pennsylvania, which which the congregation is connected, and has succeeded in developing a great degree of enterprise and liberality in the congregation. His pastorate has extended twenty-two years, and is second in duration only to that of Mr. Muhlenberg. During his time the venerable church has twice been renovated,—the first time in 1873, when the entire basement was thrown into one large room for the Sunday-school, and the chapel on the north side of the church was erected for week-day services, business meetings and the Infant and Secondary Departments of the Sunday-school. At the same time the church was repainted and recarpeted, stained glass put into the windows, and the magnificent organ purchased which is now in use. It has three banks of keys, forty-four registers and two thousand pipes, the bellows being operated by a water-motor. The cost of the organ was six thousand dollars, the chapel about the same sum and the other improvements brought the total expense to fifteen thousand dollars, all of which was raised by Dr. Fry's personal efforts.

The second renovation was made in 1881, when the walls were re-frescoed, the church repainted, the pews upholstered and new carpets laid, stained glass windows put in the vestibules and Sunday-school rooms, and a large ventilator in the ceiling of the church. The expense of these improvements was about six thousand dollars, all of which was secured at a single service before the work began. The congregation has manifested also a most commendable missionary spirit during Dr. Fry's ministry, and has erected no less than five mission churches or chapels in various parts of the city in this time.

As a memento of the Seventh Jubilee of the Reformation, the congregation and Sunday-school built a chapel on North Ninth Street, beyond Buttonwood Street, in 1867–68. The building and ground cost about three thousand eight hundred dollars. This was subsequently enlarged and became St. Luke's Lutheran Church, of which Rev. F. K. Huntzinger is now pastor.

In 1876, as a memento of the centennial of American Independence, Grace Church, a stately brick structure on South Eleventh Street, above Franklin, was begun, and in 1878 finished at a cost of eighteen thousand dollars for building and ground. A congregation was organized in 1878, with Rev. W. H. Myers as pastor.

In 1885 three chapels were erected in the suburbs of Reading for the accommodation of the three mission-schools of the congregation—Peace Chapel in North Reading, Faith Chapel in Woodvale in East Reading, and Hope Chapel in the northwestern part of the city, on Schuylkill Avenue, above the Lebanon Valley Railroad. They are exactly alike, built in part of brick, beveled siding and slate, with Gothic roof and tower. A large school-room, infant classroom, vestry room and vestibule make up the interior arrangement. The buildings and furniture cost about seven thousand five hundred dollars, and the grounds two thousand dollars more. They were commenced in May and completed in September the same year. Although erected for mission-school purposes, the demand for preaching services became so great that in November Dr. Fry secured the services of Rev. L. J. Bickel to take pastoral charge of them, and public services have since been held in them on alternate Sundays.

Total communicant Lutherans in Reading number five thousand.

A Sunday-school has been successfully conducted in connection with the church since 1830. The number of scholars attending school averages nine hundred and fifty every Sunday. Mr. H. M. M. Richards is the superintendent. The three mission-schools number four hundred and twenty-five.

A beneficial "brotherhood," together with a "sisterhood," was organized by the pastor about ten years ago, out of members of this congregation, for purposes of mutual relief and support in times of sickness and distress. Members of other Lutheran congregations are also admitted. It has been conducted successfully till now.

During the past winter another new feature was introduced amongst the young members of the congregation for the purpose of affording literary and social entertainment. It was very successful.

St. Matthew's English Lutheran Church.—The St. Matthew's Lutheran congregation was organized in 1842. At that time Trinity Church was the only Lutheran Church in Reading. The German language was used exclusively in conducting its services. An application for the partial introduction by a portion of its English-speaking members for English services, which was refused, originated the desire for a separate church.

An organization was formed and a room on the second story of the "Old State-House" building was rented and occupied until the present church, on Franklin Street, between Fifth and Sixth, was finished in 1844. The Sunday-school was established in 1842 in a rented room on Franklin Street soon afterward. The Rev. James L. Schoch was elected minister of the church and he also served as the first superintendent of the Sunday-school. He continued to officiate as pastor of the congregation until 1849, and was followed temporarily by Rev. J. Kohler for a time. Rev. J. C. Brown (afterward president of the seminary at Gettysburg) became the next regular pastor, and after him Rev. D. Milton Valentine, the latter serving the congregation until he was elected president of Gettysburg college. The present pastor is Rev. T. C. Billheimer.

An interesting fact connected with the history of St. Matthew's Church is that its establishment was strongly opposed on the ground that it was not needed, insisting that the Lutheran Church was German in her origin, history and language, and that she should remain so. Within the period of forty years, six other Lutheran Churches have been reared, in all of which excepting two the English language is used exclusively, including in the enumeration the old Trinity, the mother-church from whence the principal opposition was encountered. Partly from changes in population—in a large degree from the necessity of providing for the young English portion of her membership—she, too, found it expedient to displace the German and substitute the English language to protect herself from losses by diversions into churches of other denominations. Such have been the results of the contest on the question of language, in which St. Matthew's Church engaged so earnestly and bore so conspicuous a part.

The following-named persons were its first officers:

Dr. Diller Luther. John Hepler.
Peter Filbert. Henry Frey.
Henry Haha. Frederick Fox.
Marks B. Scull. Jacob H. Boyer.
Dr. Solomon Birch. Nicholas Mason.
Dr. A. H. Witman. Jesse Orner.
Solomon Stanfier. Jacob Sallada.

The membership of the church is now three-hundred and of the Sunday-school about the same number.

ST. JAMES’ LUTHERAN CHURCH.—On November 14, 1850, a meeting was held to consider the necessity of organizing another English Lutheran congregation in Reading. Horatio Trexler was appointed chairman and Levi Hiester secretary. At that meeting it was resolved to organize a congregation to be known as “St. James’,” and Rev. F. A. M. Keller was chosen its pastor. Measures were at once taken to secure a suitable lot on which to erect a church building. Meanwhile services were held, morning and evening, in the Odd-Fellows’ Hall, corner of Fifth and Franklin Streets.

At a meeting held on December 23, 1850, the charter of the congregation was approved, and on the 30th of the same month the board of church officers was elected, consisting of the following members: Trustees, Jacob Hoff and Asaph Shenfielder; Elders, Peter Shenfielder, William Rhode, Nathan M. Eisenhow and Horatio Trexler; Deacons, Ephraim Armstrong, Daniel Weand, Reuben Fichthorn and Michael Fritz. The following is a list of the names of the original incorporators: Horatio Trexler, L. Hiester, Michael Fritz, Ephraim Armstrong, Henry W. Moyer, Peter Shenfielder, Reuben Fichthorn, Thomas Hill, John Fink, Jacob Hoff, F. A. M. Keller, Peter Herman, Nathan M. Eisenhow, Walter Shoemaker, Wm. S. Fisher, Peter S. Ermold and F. A. Domahower.

The lot on the corner of Fifth and Chestnut Streets was purchased and the church building was then erected. The corner-stone was laid May 11, 1851, and the building dedicated March 21, 1852. In the mean time, Odd-Fellows’ Hall not having been regarded as a suitable place to administer confirmation and the holy communion, the use of the Presbyterian Church was requested and kindly given, and the first confirmation accordingly took place on Good Friday evening, April 18, 1851, and the holy communion was administered on the Sunday afternoon following, it being Easter. The number communing was ninety, and the number confirmed thirty-two. Rev. F. A. M. Keller continued to serve as pastor of this church until his death, in March, 1864. He was a man of great force of character, warm-hearted and generous, and his memory is cherished with ardent affection by his surviving parishioners and friends.

The second pastor was Rev. F. C. H. Lampe, who commenced his ministrations to this church October 1, 1864. His pastorate was short, but very active. During the three years in which he served this congregation he collected upwards of twenty-three thousand dollars, repaired the church and had the fine, large organ built, which is still in use.

The third pastor was Rev. B. M. Schmucker, D.D., who took charge November 1, 1867. His able ministry extended over a period of thirteen years. The present incumbent is Rev. M. C. Horine, who became pastor September 1, 1881.

This church has at present a membership of five hundred and fifty. At the beginning of the congregation a Sunday-school was organized, and two sessions every Sunday were held for a time, one in the forenoon and one in the afternoon; afterwards only one session was held, which has been continued since. The first superintendent was Peter S. Ermold; the second, F. B. Fichthorn, and the third or present, Chas. B. Wells. The Sunday-school numbers in officers, teachers and scholars, five hundred and fifty-six. The library contains fifteen hundred and sixty volumes.

This congregation recently purchased a parsonage at 148 South Fifth Street, at a cost of five thousand dollars, for the use of the pastor. The present officers of this congregation are as follows:

ST. JOHN’S GERMAN LUTHERAN CHURCH.—The first Lutheran Church at Reading was erected in 1752 by the German Lutheran congregation. The services of this congregation were altogether in the German language for nearly a hundred years, excepting upon several occasions when the Rev. H. A. Muhlenberg preached in English. After the common-school law of 1834 became operative the use of the English language began to grow in the community and by 1840 a number of members of this congregation manifested a strong desire to have English preaching, but not being gratified, they withdrew in 1842, organized a congregation for English preaching, and called it "St. Matthew's." In 1844 they succeeded in erecting a church. Within ten years afterward another English Lutheran congregation was formed, which erected a church in 1851, and named it "St. James;" and before 1860 the old German Lutheran congregation became entirely English. Efforts had been made to carry on successfully both German and English, but they were unsuccessful. Rev. F. J. F. Schantz was the pastor (a young man) who preached in both languages, but the labor was too severe for him and an assistant was employed to preach in German.

Two congregations were thereupon formulated out of the old congregation,—one English, Trinity Lutheran, which remained in the old church property with Rev. Schantz as pastor, and the other German, which withdrew with Rev. J. J. Knendig, also a young man, as pastor.

Rev. Mr. Kuendig was called to officiate as assistant pastor in October, 1859. He was then a student at the Gettysburg Seminary. He preached his first sermon shortly afterward in Trinity Church, and was regularly employed with the consent of the Synod. In June following he was regularly ordained. His services as assistant were continued from November 27, 1859, to November 13, 1860, which were very successful, having been attended by large audiences. When the separation was agreed upon, Trinity Church vestry consented that the German congregation should be permitted to hold its services for one year in the old church, until it could have its own church erected, and that it should have the large lot of ground (used then as a burying-ground) on the northwest corner of Sixth and Walnut Streets (two hundred and forty by two hundred and thirty feet) for three thousand dollars.

The congregation was formed under the name of "St. John's German Lutheran Congreg-religious education of children as well as in the secular, instituted a parochial school on August 14, 1865, with two hundred scholars. The committee for this purpose was Rev. J. J. Kuentig, E. Jonathan Deiningher, Frederick Lauer, John Endlich and Michael K. Boyer. A large and substantial school building was then erected. The first teachers were Prof. Carl Wonnberger, James N. Ermentrout, Esq. (now additional law judge of Berks County) and Wilhelm Leesch. This school has been conducted very successfully since by the congregation. It was instituted for the benefit of the children of its own members; but other children are admitted upon the payment of nominal tuition fees. Prof. Carl Wonnberger is still principal of the school. He is also the organist. In both positions he is very efficient.

The congregation erected a fine stone chapel in East Reading (Thirteenth and Cotton Streets). The corner-stone was laid June 7, 1874, and the building dedicated November 29, 1874. Its seating capacity is four hundred.

A number of societies are carried on by the members and children of the congregation: Benevolent (since 1861), Doreas (since 1862), Youth’s, Reading, Brotherhood and Maennerchor.

St. Luke’s Lutheran Church. — This church is situated on North Ninth Street, between Buttonwood and Green. The nucleus of the congregation was from a Sunday-school which met in a public school-house on Tenth Street near Green. In 1865 the Trinity Lutheran congregation, under whose auspices the school was conducted, seeing the necessity of providing more ample accommodations for it, purchased the lot on which it stands, and, in 1868, built a frame chapel, thirty by fifty feet, at a cost (without the ground) of thirty-six hundred dollars. The school was transferred to this building immediately after its completion.

In 1869 Rev. F. K. Huntzinger, the present pastor, was called as missionary with the view of organizing a congregation at some future time, and held his first service in the church in October of that year. The attendance at the public services for the greater part of the first year was small, often not more than ten to fifteen persons being present. That section of the city had just been laid out, and only a few houses were near the church; but as the section was rapidly improving, the attendance at the services increased accordingly, and an organiza-

Elders—John Samsel and Jacob Bissikummer;

The following constitute the present vestry:

Trustees—Ephraim Fink and Charles Dietrich; Elders—Jacob F. Keil and Charles Erb; Deacons—John E. Biehl, William T. Ermold, Jacob D. Verger, Daniel B. Potteiger, Franklin B. Himmelreich and Thomas Rapp.

The congregation was incorporated in 1877. The services have been conducted from the beginning both in the English and German languages; in the morning the German is used and at all other services the English.

The first class of catechumens numbered twenty-five persons and was confirmed on Good Friday, April 21, 1871. Since then there have been confirmed in the church about seven hundred and fifty persons, and the congregation now numbers over eight hundred members. The Sunday-school has a membership of seven hundred and about forty teachers. Benneville K. Gruber is the present superintendent; Solomon L. Moser was the first and Levi H. Liess the second. The library has nearly one thousand volumes. William T. Ermold has been librarian since the organization of the school.

The church choir has been under the direction of Nathan Rohrbach since its organization, in 1871. The church was enlarged in 1874. On January 10, 1870, the trustees of the Trinity Lutheran congregation, for a nominal consideration, executed a deed for the church building, together with the lot of ground (sixty by one hundred and ten feet) on which it stands, to St. Luke’s Lutheran congregation in fee-simple.

The accompanying illustration represents the first church, which, in 1886, was replaced by the present two-story brick structure. The dimensions of the new building are ninety-four by fifty feet. The first floor is arranged in three departments to accommodate the Sunday-school; and the auditorium occupies the entire second floor, including three galleries on the sides and rear end, affording a total seating capacity of about twelve hundred. The building committee were Elias A. Bitner, Charles Dietrich and David Clouser, Sr.

Rev. F. K. Hutzinger is also pastor of the Alsace Lutheran congregation, which holds its services in the Alsace Church, adjoining the northern line of the city of Reading, and of St. Peter’s Lutheran Church, in Richmond township.

Grace Lutheran Church had its beginning in a Sunday-school which was organized July 5, 1868. The first place of meeting was in a public-school house at the corner of Ninth and Spruce Streets, and the original committee on its organization comprised Henry J. Rhoads, Daniel S. Zacharias, John Wise, Amos W. Potteiger, Samuel Ruckstool, Louis Dauth and William Rapp. Its affairs were under the control of the Trinity Lutheran Sunday-school Association. Mr. Daniel S. Zacharias was the first superintendent. He served two years, and was succeeded by Henry J. Rhoads, who has officiated since, a period of sixteen years. A fine brick chapel, with a view to the forming of a congregation, was erected on Eleventh near Franklin, at an expense of seventeen thousand dollars, and on the 7th of April, 1878, the new building was dedicated. In the fall of 1877 the Sunday-school was removed to its new home, where it was reorganized with about one hundred scholars on the roll. Rev. W. H. Myers had been called as the assistant to the pastor of Trinity congregation, with a view eventually to form a congregation in Grace Chapel. Regular services were opened on the 28th of April, 1878. In the evening of the 7th of October following an organization was effected, when fifty-four signed their names to join church; and on October 29th a congregational meeting was held, a constitution was adopted and the officers and a pastor were regularly elected. The congregation from the start had a rapid growth, and today numbers four hundred and fifty active members and an equal number of Sunday-school scholars. The school has a library of over six hundred select books.

Reformed Churches.

First Reformed Church (known commonly as German Reformed).—At the same time that the Lutherans took steps to establish a place of worship for themselves at Reading, the German Reformed (or, as they were then mostly called, "German Calvinists") did likewise. Their first place of worship is not definitely known.

The reverse side of the plate was also inscribed,—

"Conrad Weiser and Isaac Levan, trustees of the congregation in the Patent; and Architects are M. W. Resser, Abr. Kerper and W. Miller, who are also Wardens of the Congregation."

The congregation was incorporated, under the name of the "German Reformed Congregation in Reading," on August 25, 1785.

The corner-stone of the second church was laid on June 17, 1832, and the following articles were deposited in it: a Bible and hymn-book, the leaden plate, with record of events of the first church, a new plate, with record of events, a medal, struck in commemoration of the centennial anniversary of the birth of George Washington, and silver and copper coins of the United States.

The building committee was composed of the following persons: Nicholas Lot, Baltzer Smith, Daniel Fasig, John Miller, John Y. Cunnins, Abraham Kerper.

This building was extensively remodeled in 1875, at an expense of forty-one thousand dollars, including a steeple one hundred and eighty-nine feet high and a fine three-story brick parsonage.

For a period of ten years after the foundation of the first church the congregation had no regularly ordained pastor. In this time, however, there was preaching by ministers supplied for the purpose, among them the Revs. Michael Schlatter, John Conrad Steyner, G. M. Weiis, Leydick and Waldsmith. In 1771 the congregation secured their first pastor in the Rev. William Boos, who continued till 1782. The subsequent pastors were,—

J. W. G. Nebling,1 1782–84; Bernhart Willy, 1784–86;

1 Rev. J. W. G. Nebling (Nevellling), formerly chaplain in the Continental army, became pastor in 1782. He was possessed of a valuable estate, amounting to twenty-five thousand dollars, which he tendered Congress for the relief of the country's financial embarrassment. A certificate of Congress was his only security. He was devoted to the cause, faithful as chaplain and was held in high esteem by General Washington. As an evidence of the influence he exerted, it is proper to mention that the British government offered a large reward for his apprehension, and that General Washington on one occasion placed a troop of horse at his disposal to secure his protection against those Five congregations have proceeded from this congregation and erected churches,—Second, in 1848; St. John’s, in 1870; St. Paul’s Memorial, in 1873; Zion’s (German), in 1881; and St. Stephen’s, in 1884. All of them have been conducted very successfully.

A Sunday-school was organized on the 10th of January, 1841, with one hundred and eighty scholars; and it was decided that the exercises should be conducted in the English language. From this it would seem that the “English” spirit had also taken hold upon this congregation. A year afterward (5th of February, 1842) the subject of English and German preaching was submitted to the congregation, and the proposition was supported almost unanimously, one hundred and forty-five having voted for it and only three against it.

Communicant members of this church number eight hundred and forty-five. Estimated membership of all Reformed Churches in Reading is about three thousand.

The Sunday-school has eight hundred and forty-five scholars and teachers; and St. Mark’s Mission Sunday-school has one hundred and thirty-five. Total scholars and teachers of Reformed Sunday-schools in Reading are about two thousand nine hundred.

The consistory of the congregation is composed of the following persons: Samuel Holl, Amos Dick, Levi R. Snyder, John Jacobs, Harrison Althouse, elders; Samuel Herbie, Samuel Leymaster, Aaron S. Leas, trustees;

The Second Reformed Church.—In the spring of 1848 the Rev. John Casper Bucher, pastor of the First Reformed Church, which was then the only one in the city of Reading, felt that the time had come when the old congregation should send a colony to establish a purely English interest. His consistory, accordingly, resolved to organize a Second Reformed Church, to have its worship and exercises altogether in the English language. They authorized their pastor to organize a congregation, and to install the officers so soon as they could be elected by persons who desired to unite themselves with the same.

At a special congregational meeting of the First Church, held on July 9, 1848, the following twenty-five members, viz.: Ivens Benson, John Ermentrout, A. F. Boas, Andrew S. Rhoads, John Hartman, Benneville Dissler, William Ermentrout, Jr., Edmund H. Zieber, George B. Snyder, Philip Derringer, Franklin Beidler, Henry A. Lantz, Charles Fisher, Mrs. Susan Benson, Mrs. J. L. Derringer, Mrs. Emma Boas, Mrs. Rebecca Andrews, Mrs. M. Smith, Miss Anna L. Zieber, Miss Elena Leize, Miss Leonora Derringer, Miss Seraphina Derringer, Miss Catharine Helfenstein, Miss Rebecca Lantz and Miss Susan B. Goodhart, were dismissed, who, with five others not members of the First Church, were organized and constituted the Second Church. Rev. Bucher at the same time and place installed John Ermentrout and Ivens Benson as elders, and Benneville Dissler, A. F. Boas, John Hartman and Andrew S. Rhoads as deacons. After the congregation had been fully organized, the Rev. Bucher extended an invitation to the Rev. Thomas C. Porter to take charge of this congregation. Rev. Porter accepted the invitation. A temporary place of worship was secured in the “Old Academy,” the present ladies’ High School building, where he preached twice every Sunday. In the following spring, however, a call to the professorship of natural sciences in Marshall College, at Mercersburg, Pa., was placed in Rev. Porter’s hands, the acceptance who sought his life. By some means unknown the certificate was ruined, the money was lost and he was ever afterwards poor. At the close of his first year he rode out of town, when the horse stumbled and fell, and the stem of a pipe inflicted a severe wound in his throat. This permanently injured his speech. He was a man of commanding personal appearance and a popular preacher. After leaving Reading he was stricken with apoplexy and remained an invalid for sixty years. He died, nearly one hundred years old, at Philadelphia, in very destitute circumstances, and was buried in the grave-yard attached to the Reformed Church, near Fourth and Race Streets.

of which compelled him to resign as pastor. He left Reading about the 1st of May, 1849.

During the vacancy of the pastorate the congregation returned to the mother-church, retaining, however, their organization, with a view toward an independent existence. On the 21st day of April, 1851, they became an incorporated body, under the name of the “Second German Reformed Church of Reading.” Although the name may appear at this day rather anomalous for an English congregation to assume, yet the word “German” was used to designate the denomination to which the congregation belonged, to distinguish it from the “Dutch Reformed.”

At a congregational meeting held May 11, 1851, the Rev. Moses Kieffer was chosen pastor. He brought new zeal into the congregation. On June 3d, following a committee composed of Rev. Kieffer, John Ermentrout and Philip Zieber was appointed to ascertain the expense to erect a church edifice, and to devise means of securing the money needed to meet such expense. They made a report, which was favorably considered, and recommended the purchase of a lot on the east side of Sixth Street, between Cherry and Franklin. Work on the new church building was immediately commenced, and on September 14, 1851, the corner-stone was laid. They, however, soon met with embarrassments from want of funds, having been disappointed in receiving that assistance from the mother-church which had been promised to them. But under the circumstances the work was carried on to the best advantage possible until February 6, 1853, when the church was so far finished as to be in a condition to be used, and was consecrated for divine service amid many anxious hopes and fears.

On the 7th day of August, 1855, Rev. Kieffer resigned the pastorate in order to accept a call to a professorship in the Theological Seminary at Tiffin, Ohio. The resignation took effect October 1, 1855. The pastorate of the church remained vacant for two and a half months, at the end of which Rev. Charles F. McCauley, D.D., entered on the discharge of the duties of that position, and has continued in the exercise of the same until the present day. He found the condition of the congregation most discouraging. The membership was small and the indebtedness heavy. The burden of the indebtedness almost crushed the congregation. It was only by the personal efforts of Dr. McCauley that the property was saved from being seized under an execution. On the 16th of February, 1860, he went forth on a mission of charity, and during a protracted series of journeys, extending over four thousand and five hundred miles, was enabled to pay $3192.75 into the church treasury. Within two years thereafter he wiped out the whole indebtedness, having collected $7256.27.

Not only has the congregation prospered financially under the pastorate of Dr. McCauley, but also spiritually and in membership. On January 1, 1886, the membership had increased to five hundred and seventy confirmed members and three hundred and twenty-five unconfirmed members. The congregation has under its care two Sunday-schools, having five hundred and seventy-seven Sunday-school scholars. The revenue of the congregation amounts to yearly about three thousand dollars for congregational purposes and about eighteen hundred dollars for benevolent purposes.

St. Paul's Memorial Reformed Church.
—This church was founded by a colony of the First Reformed Church of Reading. Rev. B. Bausman, D.D., had been the pastor of the mother-church for nine years. As its membership had become very large, the consistory and many of the members deemed it necessary to form a new congregation. The enterprise was started under the auspices of the First Church. By it the lot was selected, the building committee appointed, the erection and style of the building decided upon and subscriptions to secure the necessary means were solicited. Under its direction this committee continued until December 26, 1872, when St. Paul's congregation was organized. On August 27, 1871, the corner-stone of the contemplated building was laid.

On August 18, 1872, the chapel or Sunday-school building was dedicated. On the afternoon of the same day a Sunday-school was organized under the supervision of the school of the First Church. In this relation it continued until June 28, 1873, when it became an organization by itself, as the Sunday-school of St. Paul’s Church. On December 29, 1872, St. Paul’s Memorial Reformed congregation was organized, with a colony of one hundred and ninety-eight members of the First Reformed Church, and six members were received from other evangelical churches. Others were added, so that by the end of the first year the congregation had four hundred and twenty-one members. At an election for pastor held January 6, 1873, Rev. B. Bausman, D.D., was chosen to this office and has continued to serve the congregation to this time (1886). The completion of the main building was thereafter prosecuted independent of the parent congregation. This was dedicated on February 15, 1874.

The church is situated on North Sixth Street, on a plot of ground one hundred feet front and two hundred and thirty feet deep, and is a cruciform Gothic structure. The front, with a central tower, is of brown sandstone. The rest of the edifice is built of brick. The pulpit is a lofty Gothic recess, with a large organ at the side of it. The cost of the building amounted to eighty-two thousand six hundred dollars, without the ground, valued at twenty thousand dollars. The total estimated value of the property at the time of dedication, including the organ and furniture, was one hundred and ten thousand dollars.

Since its organization two other Reformed churches were founded in Reading, to which St. Paul’s contributed its proportion of material. The congregation has now six hundred confirmed members. Its Sunday-school has four hundred scholars and sixty-four officers and teachers. From its early history various charitable, benevolent and religious societies have been organized for the improvement of the members as well as for vigorous aggressive church work. Its poor are cared for by a permanent committee of ladies appointed by the consistory and furnished with the necessary means by the congregation. Its systematic Benevolent Society is as old as the flock itself. Its ward committees canvass the congregation, whose members bring their offerings at the monthly meetings. Two beneficial societies—the Brotherhood and the Sisterhood—have done excellent work for a period of thirteen years. Their object is to cultivate kindly social intercourse among the members, to encourage one another in temporal and spiritual things, support the members in time of sickness and bereavement, help them to bury their dead and care for their orphans. After doing all this each society has accumulated considerable invested funds. A large society of ladies is actively engaged in the interest of such objects, inside and outside the congregation, as may claim their attention. St. Paul’s Young Men’s Association, although scarcely a year old, has already become an active and important factor in congregational work.

St. John’s Reformed Church is situated on the corner of Ninth and Chestnut Streets. The congregation that worships in it is the outgrowth of a mission Sunday-school organized under the auspices of the First and Second Reformed congregations of the city, at the instance of their respective pastors, Rev. B. Bausman, D.D., and C. F. McCauley, D.D. Both took the warmest interest in the mission school and tenderly fostered it with their pastoral care. The Sunday-school was organized in the second story of the old public school-house on Franklin Street, above Eighth, on March 6, 1864. On the second Sunday seventy-five pupils were in attendance. Rev. W. A. Good was identified with the interest from the beginning, laboring with great zeal and self-denial as its superintendent until August 12, 1871, when the school had already developed into a congregation.

On November 23, 1864, Rev. Dr. Bausman purchased two of the three lots now in possession of the congregation, on his own responsibility, for the sum of nine hundred and fifty dollars. A chapel, forty-eight by thirty-two feet, was completed then and dedicated April 2, 1865. The superintendent, Rev. W. A. Good, conducted German services for several years. On June 25, 1871, the following-named persons resolved to be organized into a congregation: Henry R. Eshelman, Samuel Savage, John G. Herbine, Conrad Gehrung, John Harner, Henry Wittich, Adam Dies, John Kessler, John Goodhart, Daniel Zimmerman, Philip Wittich, Jacob Detthoff, Isaac Medary and John Miller. On May 24, 1877, Rev. Christian Kessler was ordained and installed as pastor of the congregation. Chronic bronchitis compelled him to resign on January 3, 1878. During his brief pastorate he gathered about two hundred members and the chapel was twice enlarged.

The second pastor, Rev. James A. Schultz, began his labors in March, 1873. Ill health constrained him to resign on the 19th of the following October. He confirmed a class of twenty-four, and sixty were received by certificates. An additional lot was purchased for eighteen hundred dollars during his pastorate. On March 15, 1874, Rev. J. G. Shoemaker was installed. He resigned in less than a year. On October 12, 1875, Rev. J. W. Steinmetz, formerly of Danville, Pa., was installed as the pastor.

Owing to frequent changes of pastor and protracted vacancies, the mission had deteriorated. Many of the members had scattered, only one hundred and sixty remained, and but eighty-seven communed at the first communion on October 24, 1875. But hope revived in the hearts of the people and they rallied around the new pastor. A larger house of worship was needed. One aged member, William Lotz, obligated himself to furnish four hundred thousand bricks for a new church and parsonage, whereupon the consistory and the congregation resolved to build the present church, which is eighty-three by fifty-three feet, with a square tower sixty-four feet in height, containing a bell of thirteen hundred pounds, donated by Manasses Delong, Michael Delong, John Delong and Jacob Straub. The parsonage was erected with the church and connected with it. The whole church property is of brick with sandstone base. The audience chamber, with an end gallery, will comfortably seat eight hundred people. The basement was dedicated on May 13, 1877. The audience chamber was dedicated on October 14, 1877. Church and parsonage were erected at a cost of sixteen thousand five hundred and fifty-four dollars. The property cost about eighteen thousand dollars. The present value of the property is about twenty-two thousand dollars.

Nearly five hundred members constitute the present strength of the congregation and four hundred and twenty-five pupils are enrolled upon the register of the Sunday-school.

Zion’s Reformed Church.—Rev. L. K. Derr, under whose ministration and supervision this church was organized, was commissioned by the Board of Missions of the German Synod of the East, to come to Reading and look after the German interests of the Reformed people of the city. He preached his first sermon on the last Sabbath in the month of May, 1881, in the Young Men’s Christian Association Hall, corner of Eighth and Penn Streets, to an audience of eighteen persons. Here services were held twice every Sunday for two months, after which the place of worship was changed to Fisher’s Hall, corner of Eighth and Washington Streets. On August 14, 1881, the congregation was organized with thirty members, by electing the following consistory: Elders, Louis Grebe, John D. Taenzer and Jacob Hoffman; Deacons, William Keller, Jacob K. Stuber and William T. Lamm.

The pastor was assisted on this occasion by Rev. Dr. N. Gehr, president of the Board of Missions; a suitable site was selected at the southwest corner of Washington and Cedar Streets, and in the fall of 1882, the following building committee was appointed: L. K. Derr, James T. Reber and Jacob B. Fricker, who at once made arrangements to build a church. On the 12th day of November, 1882, the corner-stone was laid; on April 1, 1883, the basement was dedicated, and on August 26th, of the same year, the church proper was dedicated. The congregation at this time (1886) has two hundred and fifty members. The Sunday-school was organized in the spring of 1883, with twenty-five members, and now numbers one hundred and sixty. C. W. Rickenbach is the present superintendent. In the summer of 1885, the congregation built a fine parsonage, which is now occupied by the pastor and his family.

St. Stephen’s Reformed Church is situated on the corner of Ninth and Greenwich Streets. The church building was erected in the fall of 1883, the corner-stone being laid on Sunday, September the 2d, 1883, and the church dedicated on December 30 following. The building originally cost thirty-seven hundred dollars. An addition was made during the fall of 1885, at a cost of six hundred dollars. The dimensions of the church building are thirty-six by seventy feet; addition, twenty-five by twenty-two feet. Size of lot, sixty-one by one hundred and ten feet. Services in the English language have been held regularly twice a Sunday since the dedication. The congregation was organized March 16, 1884, with fifty-seven communicant members. The present communicant membership is one hundred and thirty.

St. Paul’s Memorial (Tenth Street Mission) Sunday-school, numbering sixty members, was transferred to this church on the Sunday before dedication. Of these, about twenty remain. The present number in Sunday-school is three hundred and forty. The members of the church building committee were: James T. Reber, Aaron Leas, Solomon Hartman and Jacob B. Fricker. Rev. Calvin S. Gerhard is pastor of the congregation. The elders are Daniel Bucher and Daniel Kline; the deacons are Samuel Palm and Milton J. Coller.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

FIRST MEETING-HOUSE IN READING.—The Friends residing in Reading effected an organization and erected a small building for a temporary meeting-house in 1751. Where it was located is now unknown. On the 30th of December, 1756, meetings were ordered to be held at Reading every Third Day, the year round, beginning at the eleventh hour. November 29, 1759, a committee reported that they had selected lots 402 and 403 as a suitable site for a new meeting-house. The committee were authorized to purchase the lots, and they subsequently reported a deed thereof. On these lots (west side of North Sixth Street, between Washington and Walnut, where the present stone meeting-house is located) forest-trees were cut down and they were used in erecting a small building, in which the meetings were then held. At the Exeter Meeting, held October 30, 1760, “Reading reported that meetings are kept up, though the attendance is sometimes small; they are not so well behaved as they ought to be; love and unity subsist in a good degree, but the members are not all clear of sleeping in meeting.”

On the 27th of August, 1761, the Reading Friends asked for a First Day meeting to begin at ten A.M. and at three P.M., and in the following month a committee reported favorably.

On the 30th of December, 1762, a report was presented that “the Friends of Reading are in much need of a better house to meet in, and have thought of beginning to build one next summer, but their ground (on North Sixth Street) is no more than sufficient for a burying-place, and that it is advisable to build a house large enough to accommodate the meeting when Friends visit the place, for which another lot should be bought.” A special committee reported favorably January 27, 1763, but desired the advice of the Quarterly Meeting which was held in Philadelphia in November, 1764, when the matter was referred to a committee of thirteen, who reported at the Exeter Meeting December 27, 1764, recommending a Monthly Meeting and a new house. The Philadelphia Meeting held May 6, 1765, recommended the erection of “a meeting-house of round logs only at present,” and the Exeter Meeting, on the 30th of the same month, concurred in this action. The same year, 1765, the building of “round logs” was erected, on a lot of ground on the corner of Queen and Thomas Streets. After the lower logs had partly decayed, the building was repaired by the erection of a brick wall extending from the ground upward a few feet.

The last wedding which took place in the little meeting-house on North Sixth Street, shortly before its demolition, was that of Solomon Coles, son of Daniel Coles, and Esther Pearson, daughter of Thomas Pearson, of Maiden-creek, May 2, 1765, and the following friends, including the parents of the bride, were the witnesses: Thomas Pearson, Elizabeth Pearson, William Boone, Benjamin Pearson, Jeremiah Boone, Elijah Pearson, Hannah Pearson, George Hughes, Judah Boone, David Pearson, Jonathan Jones, Hannah Jones, Jonathan Pearson, Sarah Pearson, Barbara Parks, Thomas Hutton, Samuel Imbree, Jeremiah Paul, William Jennings, Thomas Wickersham, Edward George, James Imbree, Richard Penrose, Samuel Parks, Moses Embree, Elijah Wickersham, Samuel Jackson, Mary Jackson, Abraham Williams, drew with a sharp instrument upon the wainscoting of the meeting-house the picture of a British ship of war. When the old log house was torn down eighteen years ago, after having stood one hundred and three years, Rachel D. Griscom, who bought the house (without the lot) for twenty-five dollars, sent to the Pennsylvania Historical Society of Philadelphia that portion of the wainscot containing the drawing of the finest ship. There was found under the old building several pieces of American and a French coin, and the bayonet of a British musket, which Miss Griscom keeps as relics. A number of citizens have canoe made from logs and wainscot of the meeting-house. Some of the material was hauled to the present meeting-house property on North Sixth Street, and some of the old benches are in the stone building. Small locust-trees were in the yard and old poplar-trees with immense roots stood along the sidewalk at the log meeting-house on Washing-

At the Monthly Meeting held in Maiden-creek April 24, 1867, Henry Tyson, Samuel E. Griscom and John H. Reid were appointed a committee to devise a plan and means to build a meeting and school-house on either the Washington or the Sixth Street lot. They recommended that a new building be erected on Sixth Street. August 21, 1867, the Washington Street lot, sixty by two hundred and thirty feet, extending from Fourth to Ash, was disposed of at public sale to Daniel Miller and Giles J. Wilson for nine thousand and fifteen dollars, and there are now nine brick houses on that lot. The deed conveying the title of the property to Miller and Wilson is dated March 30, 1868, and is signed by Thomas Lightfoot, Maiden-creek; Samuel E. Griscom, Schuylkill County; Dr. Henry Tyson, Exeter; William P. Reid, Reading; and Thomas Pearson, Pughtown, Chester County, as trustees for the sole use of the members of the religious society of Friends of Reading in unity and religious fellowship with Exeter Monthly Meeting held at Maiden-

MEETING-HOUSE USED AS A HOSPITAL.—While the Hessians, captured at Trenton in 1776, were prisoners in Reading, the meeting-house was used as a hospital, in which many sick soldiers were treated. Those who died were interred in the lot adjoining the Friends' burial-ground on North Sixth Street. Among the prisoners of war were James Forster, master of a transport ship, and John Wilkinson, mate of the same, Samuel Elphinstone and James Hornes, mates of a British ship of war; and there were other seamen. EPISCOPAL CHURCHES.

CHRIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. The first notice of Episcopalianism in Berks County is in a letter by Rev. Thomas Barton to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, dated December 21, 1759, in which he said: "In the county of Berks there are a number of people of the Communion of the Church of England, who have never had an Episcopal minister among them." He may have alluded particularly to the persons in Caernarvon, where there was a new church of this denomination erected, a former church having existed there, it is said, about twenty years; and also to those in Amity, at a place called Morlattin (now Douglassville), who had established themselves there for thirty years. Besides these two churches, there was no other in the entire county till the lapse of sixty-five years, when a third church was erected at Reading.

In 1760, William Bird and others addressed a petition to the society mentioned, in which they stated: "That the said county is a very large and growing one, situated on the frontiers of the said province and hath never yet had any English minister of any denomination settled in it," etc. That in this distress (of leaving their families entirely destitute of religious instruction) they invited Rev. Dr. Wm. Smith to preach among them, &c.; and "we have presumed to apply for your assistance in sending over a missionary to reside in Reading, the chief town of the county of Berks, and to officiate also at Morlattin, a place fifteen miles distant, where a church has for many years been built by a society of English and Swedes, who are desirous of having a missionary of the Church of England, and join with us in this application; that to induce request they have, with Morlattin congregation, obliged themselves to pay such missionary annually £60 Penna. money; that for want of ministers their members are drawn after various sorts of sectaries, and which is still worse, the Roman Catholic priests are making converts, to great grief of petitioners; and that if they have no particular missionary they would ask for Mr. Jos. Mather," etc.

In 1763 Rev. Alexander Murray wrote to the society and stated that his mission (English Church) at Reading comprised seven families, or forty-eight souls, of which twelve were under seven years of age; besides whom there were twenty unbaptized Anabaptists who resided in the town and occasionally made up part of his congregation. Then they had no church at Reading, but they held their meetings in a "Dwelling-House that is hired for holding the Civil Courts in." At this time he estimated the town to contain two hundred and ten families, or about thirteen hundred persons, young and old; of the number of families, one hundred and ten were German Lutherans, about half as many German Calvinists and the rest chiefly Quakers, and a few Papists. The Germans were computed twelve to one of all other nationalities together, and they seemed "abundantly well provided in teachers of one denomination or another, and as long as they are so blindly attached to their native tongue as they are at present, an English minister can be of no service to them. For though they might be at no loss for English schoolmasters, yet they choose to send their children rather to German schools, which they have everywhere in great plenty."

In 1764 his congregation increased from seven to eighteen families, consisting of one hundred and twenty-one souls. He despaired then of seeing a church erected for some time to come. But in his despair, without church, parsonage or voluntary subscriptions, he hardly thought that the "some time" would be so long as sixty years. In 1765 they had the use of the court-house to assemble in for divine service, which place was common to all sectaries. The parish in Reading was called "St. Mary's," having been named after the principal parish of Reading, England. It was so known till about 1815, when it was changed to "Christ's." It has since retained the latter name. In 1765 the officers were,—Wardens: Edward Biddle and James Diemer; Vestrymen: James Read, John Patton, Jonas Seely, James Whitehead, John Price, Mark Bird, Peter Witherington and George Hinton. And in this year they made an effort to obtain a lot (No. 396, North Fifth Street, near Walnut) for building an Episcopal Church upon it, "as the Honorable Proprietors have given orders for that purpose." It would seem that they had first intended to build on lot No. 394 (southwest corner of Sixth and Walnut) upon which they deposited building material; but the lot was rather distant from the centre of town, so it was afterward removed to lot No. 71 (North Fifth, above Court). They then endeavored to raise money by a lottery for a church building. The Assembly granted the prayer of their petition by giving them three hundred and fifteen pounds, and the petitioners bound themselves to add two hundred pounds. But they failed to accomplish the object of their earnest endeavors. After the lapse of seven years the rector hoped that they would be in a condition to build a church; but his congregation was too weak and his hopes were not realized. In a letter of March 26, 1772, he alluded to the order and quiet of his congregation "amidst the clamor and noise, contention and evil-speaking of the German colonists, who are the body of the people in this Frontier County;" and he added certain remarks which are decidedly interesting to the Lutherans and Calvinists (Reformed) of to-day, over a century afterward, these, briefly stated, being that the Lutherans and Calvinists used organs, violins, etc., in worship; that the Lutherans of the town were erecting one another on an occasion of electing a minister, which satisfaction they frequently indulged in, "being fonder of new clergy than new clothes, which they are parsimonious enough to wear threadbare, and when they are ripe for a change of pastors they make them do so too and so starve them out of place with cold and hunger."

The spirit of independence and revolution which soon afterward was developed among the town-people, and especially in his own little patriotic flock, antagonized with the loyalty of the Rev. Murray to the English government, and so the relation of pastor and people was seriously disturbed. He was given special permission by the Executive Council of the State to dispose of his real property (which he had come to own here), after which he departed. He left about 1778.

From 1772 for over forty years there is no record of the Episcopal congregation nor mention of a church. In 1815 lot No. 71 (west side of Fifth, second lot north of Court) was granted by James Diemer to James May, Marks John Biddle and George Douglass, "in trust for the erection of an Episcopal Church whenever it should be found convenient, and as a burial-place for the Episcopalians within the Town of Reading and vicinity, and for such other persons, not Episcopalians, as the trustees shall permit to be buried therein, and for no other purpose whatever." But nine years elapsed after the granting of this lot before any active, successful steps were taken toward the erection of a church thereon. In October, 1824, the wardens and vestry advertised for proposals to be presented on November 8th. In the following spring they began the erection of a church. The corner-stone was laid on June 8, 1825, in the presence of a great concourse of people, with all the clergy of Reading and vicinity, and also Reverends Bull and Allen. After the customary services in the laying of the stone the clergy and people proceeded to Trinity Lutheran Church, where sermons were delivered appropriate to this great event. The building was completed within a year afterward, the consecration thereof having taken place on May 10, 1826, and sermons delivered by Bishop White. The style of the building was of the early English Gothic. Its dimensions were thirty-five feet front and fifty feet deep, with a seating capacity for three hundred persons. In 1863 the old building was enlarged and improved by the addition of a recess chancel, transepts and spire. The church was enlarged again in 1873 by the addition of sixteen feet to the depth of the chancel and of rooms for the vestry, the rector and the choir. In 1884 a handsome and commodious parish building was erected with a legacy left to the church by the late Lucretia D. Wood. This building contains rooms for classes and parish societies and a chapel and Sunday-school room.

The rector of Christ Church, with their terms of service since 1823 have been,—

1823 to 1824—Rev. Robert Davis.
1826—Rev. W. C. Mead.
1827 to 1828—Rev. H. J. Whitelouse.
1830 to 1831—Rev. J. B. Cummings.
1832 to 1833—Rev. S. A. McCookry.
1834—Rev. G. W. Cole.
1834 to 1859—Rev. R. U. Morgan, D.D.
1850 to 1861—Rev. M. C. Lightner.
1887 to 1889—Rev. J. P. Lundy, D.D.
1889 to 1872—Rev. J. P. Hammond.

RT. REV. MARK ANTONY DE WOLFE
HOWE, D.D., LL.D., first bishop of the diocese of Central Pennsylvania, was born in Bristol, Rhode Island, on the 5th of April, 1800.
His parents were John and Louisa Smith Howe, the former being descended on the maternal side from the De Wolfe family. John Howe was graduated from Brown University in 1805; he studied law with Judge Bourne and became a successful practitioner in Bristol, Rhode Island.
Mrs. Howe was the daughter of Stephen Smith, Esq., and sister to Bishop B. B. Smith, of Kentucky, late presiding bishop of the church in America. John Howe was a member of the congregation of St. Michael’s Church, Bristol, in which his son was baptized by Bishop Griswold, then rector of the church, as well as bishop of the “Eastern Diocese.” Mark Antony De Wolfe Howe entered the celebrated Philips Academy at Andover, Mass., when about eleven years of age and became in 1824 a pupil of the college at Middlebury, Vt., where he completed his freshman and sophomore years, and was transferred to Brown University, mattriculating at that institution under Dr. Wayland, and two years later was graduated with high distinction. He became a member of the Phi Beta Kappa Society and was subsequently a successful candidate for a classical tutorship in Brown University.

He entered his father’s office as a student of the law; soon thereafter accepted the position of usher in the Adams Grammar School, Boston, and was the following year appointed master of the Hawes Grammar School. With great responsibilities resting upon him, and with but little assistance, he was eminently successful in maintaining discipline, and winning for the school an enviable reputation. He was at this time a regular attendant on St. Matthew’s Church, South Boston, and was then confirmed by Bishop Griswold. Turning his attention to the ministry, he began his preparation for its duties, and was admitted as a candidate for holy orders in 1830. Through the influence of Dr. Wayland he was elected classical tutor in Brown University, and accepted the position at pecuniary sacrifice but with increased opportunities for study. In January, 1832, he was ordained deacon by Bishop Griswold, in St.
Michael’s Church, Bristol, continuing his duties as tutor at Brown University. In September following he was invited to officiate in the vac-cant parish of St. Matthew’s Church, Boston, and soon after became rector of St. James’ Church, Roxbury. This congregation was then worshipping in a hall, but active measures were in progress for the erection of a new church edifice, which was built under his successful ministry and consecrated in 1834. He was ordained to the priesthood in February, 1833, in St. Paul’s Church, Boston, by Bishop Griswold.
Resigning his rectorship in 1834, he accepted the position of associate editor of the Christian Witness, his colleague being the Rev. Dr. Stone, of St. Paul’s Church, Boston, and continued his residence in Roxbury, meanwhile ministering in vacant parishes. In 1835 he was called to the rectorship of Christ Church, Cambridge, and, while accepting the position, still retained his connection with the Christian Witness.
Recalled to St. James’ Church, Roxbury, in 1836, under peculiar and interesting circumstances, he felt constrained to accept the charge.
The debt of the church was speedily reduced from twenty-four thousand to three thousand dollars; and in 1839 a missionary enterprise was begun at Jamaica Plains, which resulted in the formation of the present St. John’s Church.
In 1845 he was called to St. Paul's Church, Louisville, Ky., but declined the invitation. Early the following year he accepted the rectorship of St. Luke's Church, Philadelphia. In 1847 he was elected a member of the standing committee of the diocese of Pennsylvania and served that body for many years as secretary. In 1848 he received from Brown University the degree of Doctor of Divinity. Having in 1850 taken his seat in the General Convention as a deputy, he was at once elected its secretary, and filled the office with great ability for a period of twelve years, after which he declined re-election. Under his rectorship in St. Luke's Parish, Philadelphia, various mission enterprises were inaugurated, the first being a "night-school" for young men. He founded St. Luke's Home for Aged Women, then a Sunday-school for colored children, which was followed by the inauguration of a system of missionary work in the southwestern part of the city. A hall was engaged, centrally situated in the neighborhood, from which the congregation was to be gathered in. A Sunday-school, sewing-school, night-school and the usual forces of mission work were put into active operation, resulting in the purchase of the neighboring Church of the Ascension, which for five years was connected with St. Luke's as its mission chapel and afterwards became an independent church. On the election of an assistant bishop of Pennsylvania, in 1858, the name of Dr. M. A. De Wolfe Howe came prominently before the convention. At the death of Bishop Bowman, a few years later, he was again placed in nomination, but withdrew in favor of Rev. Dr. Stevens. In 1865 he was elected missionary bishop of Nevada (an ecclesiastical jurisdiction including Utah, New Mexico and Arizona), but after mature deliberation he declined the office. In May, 1870, the convention of the diocese of Pennsylvania decided upon a division of jurisdiction, subject to the approval of the General Convention. The diocese which it was proposed to erect was to consist of territory outside the counties of Philadelphia, Delaware, Chester, Montgomery and Bucks. This division would leave thirty-seven counties in the proposed new diocese. The General Convention assented to this division in October, 1871, and the new diocese was named the Diocese of Central Pennsylvania at the primary convention held at Harrisburg on the 8th of November of the same year. In the following day's session the Rev. Dr. Howe was elected bishop of this diocese by a very gratifying vote. The consecration took place in St. Luke's Church, Philadelphia, on Innocents' Day, December 28, 1871. The bishop's first episcopal duty in his diocese was performed in Trinity Church, Easton, on the 14th of January, 1872, the city of Reading afterwards becoming his residence. The Diocese of Central Pennsylvania contains twenty-four thousand square miles. From 1871 to 1884 Bishop Howe administered this great diocese alone, travelling in the visitation of its parishes six thousand miles yearly. In that period he consecrated thirty-five new churches, and the number of the clergy increased from fifty-seven to ninety-eight. In the autumn of 1884 the Rev. N. S. Rulison, D.D., was consecrated as assistant bishop, since which time Bishop Howe has confined himself to general administration in the diocese. Amid his proper labors Dr. Howe has devoted some leisure to literary work, and has published the following: "Essays and Fugitive Pieces in Verse," "A pamphlet on the right of the Eastern Diocese to elect an Assistant Bishop," "A Review of the Report of the Boston School Committee," "A pamphlet in vindication of the Missionary Association for the West," "Preface to Butler's Edition of Bishop Heber's Poems," "Several Occasional Sermons," "Sermon before the Convention of the Diocese of Pennsylvania," "Memoirs of the Rt. Rev. Alonzo Potter, D.D."

St. Barnabas' Church.—This is a free church and had its origin in mission services, which were conducted by members of Christ Church. On December 5, 1859, Rev. John Long became the first rector of the parish established about that time, and he served until November 1, 1861. During his ministry the present small brick church was built on Sixth near Bingaman Street, having been completed and first occupied in the fall of 1860. Peter Jones, Wharton Morris and David A. Griffith were the building committee. The congregation
numbers sixty communicant members. The vestry for the year 1836 comprises: Wardens, Peter Jones and William Bouchat; Vestrymen, Samuel C. Moyer, Wm. K. Yocom, Nicholas Jones, Joseph W. Holnies, George Ray, Huysings Bouchat and Emanuel Richards.

After the resignation of Rector Long the congregation was supplied with preaching by Christ Church until 1864, since which time the rectors have been:

The Sabbath-school is superintended by Chester B. Jennings and the membership numbers one hundred and twenty.

Presbyterian Churches.

First Presbyterian Church.—The exact date of the organization of the Presbyterian congregation in Reading is not known. John F. Grier came to Reading in the beginning of the year 1811, probably shortly before; when he and John McKnight, William Bell, Samuel Bell, William Moore, Louis Reese and others, about that time, or soon afterward, associated together for the purpose of organizing a Presbyterian congregation. For several years, however, there would appear to be no definite information. In 1813, there would seem to have been an organization, for a ten ruling elders, were ordained,—namely, John McKnight, William Bell, William Moore and Charles Snowden. On November 22, 1814, Mr. Grier was ordained as a minister by the Presbytery of New Castle in the Trinity Lutheran Church. He had carried on teaching in the “Reading Academy” for at least three years previously. From the time of his ordination he doubtless preached regularly, if he did not preach before; and from this time onward he exerted himself toward increasing his congregation and toward obtaining a separate church for religious worship. In both respects he was successful. His membership comprised numerous influential people who were prominent in the business and social affairs of the town.

In 1823 the congregation purchased lot No. 526 and half of 525, Penn Street (north side between Second and Third Streets), and thereon caused a building to be erected. The cornerstone was laid on Sunday morning, June 29, 1823, in the presence of a large number of people. The day was bright and beautiful. Vocal and instrumental music was rendered. A German hymn, composed for the occasion, was sung. Rev. H. A. Muhlenberg (pastor of Trinity Lutheran congregation) delivered a brief introduction, address and prayer in the German language, and Rev. J. N. C. Grier (of Chester County) preached an appropriate sermon. The ceremony of laying the corner-stone was performed by the pastor of the congregation, Rev. J. F. Grier. In the afternoon, services were held in Trinity Lutheran Church (which was kindly given for the occasion), the Rev. Mr. Dechant, pastor of the German Presbyterian Church at Pottsgrove (Pottstown), having preached in the German language. And the building was dedicated on May 2, 1824. In the dedication, eight clergymen from four different denominations officiated.

Large circular pillars were constructed in the front of the building and painted in imitation of marble. The building was painted white, for which reason it was commonly known as the “White Church.” Its dimensions were forty by seventy-five feet, and its capacity was about six hundred persons.

In 1826 the membership of the congregation was sixty-eight.

In 1847 another site was selected for a new and improved building. The last services in the “White Church” were held on the 9th of May, 1847. On the 24th of June following the corner-stone of the new building was laid. Whilst the building was in course of erection, services were held in the English Lutheran Church (St. Matthew’s), a temporary association of the two congregations having been carried on successfully, and the alternate services of the respective pastors having been largely attended. It was dedicated on the 19th of November, 1848, the officiating ministers having been Rev. E. J. Richards, the pastor, Rev. De Witt, of Harrisburg, and Rev. Albert Barnes, of Philadelphia. This building is still standing. Upon its completion the cost amounted to fifteen thousand dollars. The dimensions are sixty-one by eighty-one feet. A square tower, ninety-five feet high, is constructed in front. The face of the front and tower is cut sandstone. The style of architecture is "early English Gothic." The seating capacity is about one thousand persons. In 1883-84 a fine and commodious addition was made to the rear of the building.

The pastors who have served this congregation were,—

Elders for 1886: Caleb Wheeler, James F. Smith, James Jameson, J. H. Sternbergh, Frank B. Nagle and Joseph V. Kendall. The Sunday-school connected with this church numbers three hundred and fifty pupils with J. H. Sternbergh as superintendent; and the congregation four hundred and seventy members.

Bethany Mission Chapel.—In North Reading, near the terminus of Ninth Street, the Presbyterians erected a chapel as a thank-offering for the union of the Old and New School Presbyterian Churches, which resulted from meetings in the vicinity for Sunday-school purposes, begun on the 28th of June, 1868. The chapel was dedicated on the 11th of September, 1870. The Sunday-school connected with this chapel numbers one hundred and thirty-five members, and is superintended by Charles S. Foos.

Certain Presbyterians exerted themselves in behalf of establishing a Sunday-school at Reading about 1815, and finally succeeded in organizing a Sabbath-school association in 1819. Shortly after its organization the school assembled in the "State-House," and continued to assemble there till the Fifth Street Church was completed, in 1848, when it was transferred thither. It has been in active, continuous operation since.

In 1858 a "Union Mission Sunday-School" was organized, which was held in the Franklin Street public school building. At first it was composed of members of different denominations, but it soon became exclusively Presbyterian, when the name was changed to Calvary Presbyterian Sabbath-School. It has been carried on successfully since.

Washington Street Presbyterian Church congregation was organized April 29, 1823, by Rev. John A. Grier. A property was purchased then on the northeast corner of Washington and Mulberry Streets,—a lot sixty by two hundred and twenty-five feet, with two tenements thereon, which were then converted into a "house of worship," at an expense of five hundred dollars. The cost of this improvement was paid by Rev. Grier and his widow. The following early ministers officiated:

Rev. Mr. Ward, two years; Rev. John Gloucester, three years; Rev. John Dorsey, one year; Rev. Thomas Hunt, two years.

Rev. Gloucester also served the congregation from 1844 till 1849.

In 1848 a new church was erected on same site for fifteen hundred dollars. The church building was improved in 1882 at an expense of about five hundred dollars. Rev. William R. Templeton has been the resident pastor since 1874. The present (1885) membership of church is sixty.

It is believed that a Sunday-school was organized in 1835. The school now numbers one hundred and thirty children. Hiram Fry was superintendent for over forty years.

Members of this congregation on 1st of April, 1834,—

Herman Fry (elder), Abraham Fry (elder), Henry Jones (elder), Richard Brown (deacon), James Banton (deacon), Margaret Clymer, Hester Brown, Maria Fry, Catharine Jones, Elizabeth Bowers, Mary Waters, Elizabeth Dobbing, Abigail Leader, Elizabeth Fry, Hannah Brown, Mary Golby, Mary Ann Wilson, Margaret Banton, Mrs. Dorsey, Jane Baker, Richard Dorsey.

Baptist Churches.

First Baptist Church.—From the beginning of Reading for a period of eighty years there were persons who were Baptists by profession of faith and doctrine; but their number was too small to admit of an organization. They attended the religious services of other congregations and were somewhat classed with them till a separate organization was effected; but they doubtless occasionally went to Sinking Spring to participate in the worship of their own denomination—a Baptist Church in the county having been established there about 1740. Another church probably earlier was also nearer Reading, on the Wyomissing Creek.

During the year 1828, Revs. John Booth and Leonard Fletcher, of the Baptist denomination, visited Reading occasionally and held religious services. Toward the close of that year (December 20, 1828), a half-dozen baptized persons met in the dwelling of William James, on the northwest corner of Front and Franklin Streets, and organized the First Baptist congregation of Reading. Revs. J. Booth and J. H. Kennard were present upon that occasion and assisted in its organization and recognition. The names of the six constituent members were William James, Adam Johnson, Sr., John Faulkner, Sarah Faulkner, Mary Ann Lockart and Ann Oliver.

Shortly afterward, in 1829, this little society purchased a lot of ground on the southeast corner of Front and Cherry Streets, and thereon immediately began and soon completed a modest church. In this building they continued to hold their religious services till the summer of 1836, when they removed to another church, which they had just before erected, situated on Chestnut Street, north side, above Fourth. In 1845 this church was found too small and inconvenient for them, so they substituted a larger building. This has been occupied to the present time. It is a plain but substantial and comfortable plastered brick building, two stories in height, and capable of seating in the auditorium about five hundred persons. For some time after the organization of the congregation there was no regular preaching. But during the first six years they obtained their first pastor,—when, it is not known, owing to the loss of the minutes of the congregation. Since its organization about seven hundred members were added by baptism. The Sunday-school was organized, which has been carried on since successfully.

In 1869 the congregation erected a small brick chapel on Ninth Street, beyond Centre, and then organized the Second Baptist Church, which was known as the Berean Mission.

The pastors of the First Baptist Church were:
George Higgins, E. M. Barker, 1835–38; Enos M. Philips, 1840–42; Samuel Davidson, 1842–45; Emerson Andrews, 1845–46; Joseph Hammitt, 1846–49; Isaac Bevan, 1850–58; George Frear, 1858–72; A. H. Sembower, 1872–85; Charles M. Deitz, since June 1, 1885.

The present membership is five hundred and fifteen; number of members added under the present pastor, one hundred and twenty-five. A flourishing Sunday-school meets in this church, of which Daniel Shaaber is superintendent.

The Sunday-school Association has begun a mission school in Ricktown, which issuperintended by Jesse Orr.

BEREAN BAPTIST CHURCH is located on North Ninth Street, above Centre. The building in which the congregation worshipped was built in 1869 by the First Baptist Church of Reading. The congregation was organized July 15, 1879, when the building was leased and has since been used by the Berean congregation. The pastors who have officiated since the time of the organization were J. P. McCollough, from November, 1879, to September, 1880; J. J. Reeder, from October, 1880, to April, 1882; B. G. Parker, from June, 1882, to September, 1884. The present pastor is J. N. Earle, who has served since December, 1885. The original membership was eighteen; present (1886) membership, ninety-two. The Sunday-school was organized in 1869; transferred to the Berean Church in 1879. J. H. Romkin has served as superintendent since organization.

UNIVERSALIST CHURCH. — The Universalist congregation was organized in 1831. Several years before, in June, 1829, the Rev. Theophilus Fiske preached in the city on the doctrine of "the restitution of all things." He came here for that purpose upon the invitation of certain influential citizens, comprising, among others, members of the Keim, Boas and Ritter families. The Keim family are descendants of Dr. George de Benneville, who emigrated from England to this country in 1841, and who, it is believed, was the first public advocate of Universalism on the Western Continent.
After the organization of the society, steps were taken for the erection of a building for public worship; the corner-stone was laid Aug. 12, 1831, and on the 22d day of April, 1832, the church was dedicated. The building is still standing. It is situated on the south side of Franklin Street, above Fourth; two-story brick, forty by sixty feet, with a belfry, and capable of seating about five hundred people.

An addition was made in 1870 for Sunday-school purposes by the Sunday-school. It is the third church which was consecrated to this faith in Pennsylvania.

The society was incorporated on May 29, 1832. The charter members were,—

The following persons joined the congregation soon after the erection of the church:

The following ministers served the congregation:

The present membership of the congregation is two hundred and seventy-one, and of the Sunday-school two hundred and twenty-five.

The library of the school contains one thousand selected books.

Captain F. S. Boas has officiated as the superintendent of the Sunday-school since May 6, 1861, excepting for a period of nearly four years, from 1865 to 1869. He has taken a prominent part in the church affairs during the period of thirty-five years, having served as secretary of the congregation since January, 1854.

The vestry is composed of the following members:

METHODIST CHURCHES.

EBENEZER METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

—Methodism in Berks County is not an indigenous plant, but an exotic one. Therefore, while in other parts of the State it exhibits great strength and wealth, here it has been of rather slow growth. The first Methodist Episcopal class in Reading was formed in 1822 by Rev. Henry Boehm. This formed the nucleus of the first organization, which was composed of Henry Goodhart, William Collier, Christian Miller, Daniel Riien, John Rorick, Elijah Bull and John Addams. The society worshipped for five years in private houses. In 1827 the first Methodist Episcopal Church was built on Third Street, below Franklin. This was a plain structure, where the society worshipped for twelve years. Samuel Pettit bought this ground and did much for the church in various ways.

Rev. Christian Miller, Thomas Sovereign, David Best, Joseph Ashbrook, James Talbot, Allen Johns and John Inskip served this charge as pastors.

The building proving too limited for the increasing membership, in 1839, Rev. John A. Roach, with a building committee, bought a large lot on Fourth Street, above Franklin, and on it erected the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Reading. This was a two-story brick building, with seating capacity for about six hundred. It was thoroughly remodeled in 1868, under the ministry of Rev. T. A. Fernley. It was again renovated and is now well furnished both in lecture and audience-rooms, is free of debt and is the strongest Methodist Episcopal Church in Berks County. It has a membership of about four hundred. The Sabbath-school is large and vigorous, under the direction of Walter Davis and William Price. There is a large, well-furnished parsonage on a lot adjoining the church.

Two flourishing churches have been formed by this charge, viz.: St. Peters, on Fifth Street, and Covenant, on Elm Street, near Ninth Street.

The following are the names of the pastors who have served the church since 1839, in the order of their appointments:

The present value of the property is about thirty-five thousand dollars. In the year 1884 a large pipe-organ was placed in the church.

St. Peter's Methodist Episcopal Church is situated on South Fifth Street, opposite Pine Street. The congregation was organized in 1848, by Rev. James Y. Ashton, who was appointed by the bishop, at the Philadelphia Annual Conference, for the purpose of establishing a second Methodist Episcopal Church in Reading. James H. McFarland was presiding elder of the Reading District. Sixty members of the Ebenezer Church volunteered to start the new enterprise. They held religious services first in the Odd-Fellows', now Library Hall, and afterward in Aulenbach's Hall, on Penn Street, above Sixth. The same year a two-story brick church was built, fifty by seventy-five feet, and January 28, 1849, the lower room was opened for church and Sabbath-school services. The upper room was finished and dedicated in 1849.

Andrew M. Dehart, Isaiah Wells and Jacob Sauerbier were the building committee. In 1883–84 the front of the church was remodeled, the tower built, twenty-one feet added to the length of the church and a one-story infant school-room annexed. Henry D. High, William M. Stauffer and Wesley H. Wells were the building committee.

The names of the pastors of the church since the time of organization, and term of service, were as follows:

- James Y. Ashton, two years; G. Dixon Bowen, two years; Newton Weston, two years; Thomas A. Fernley, two years; Arthur W. Milby, two years; John H. Alday, one year; James H. McCarter, two years; Samuel Irwin, two years; John F. Meredith, three years; Peter J. Cox, two years; Robert H. Pattison, one year; Henry B. Calloway, two years; George Heacock, two years; Samuel Irwin, three years; John E. Kessler, three years; William J. Mills, three years; Joseph B. Dobbins, two years; Amos Johnson, who has served two years, is the pastor for the year 1886.

The Sunday-school connected with this church was organized, in 1844, in a school-house, and moved to the church in 1849. This school, on February 1, 1886, had three hundred and ninety-nine pupils, with an average attendance of three hundred and forty-two. There is also a mission school connected with this congregation.

Covenant Methodist Episcopal Church, located on Elm Street, above Ninth.—The congregation was organized in 1869, by Rev. S. G. Grove, with thirteen members. Under his ministration many members were added. He officiated as pastor until 1872. The following is a complete list of the pastors who have served this congregation:

- S. G. Grove, from 1869 to 1872; T. M. Griffith, from 1872 to 1873; W. K. Maeneal, from 1873 to 1876; J. B. Graff, from 1876 to 1879; L. B. Hoffman, from 1879 to 1881; C. Hudson, from 1881 to 1882; H. A. Cleveland, from 1882 to 1884; J. D. Fox, from 1884 to date.

Since its organization the congregation has greatly increased. Membership, 1886, two hundred and ten. The Sunday-school was organized in the same year as the church, and has been very successfully conducted. The present number of pupils is two hundred and fifty. Mr. J. D. Fox is the superintendent.

African Methodist Episcopal Church.—The congregation was organized in 1837, and soon after a one-story frame building was obtained, in which religious worship was held until the present handsome two-story brick church was built in 1869, on Tenth Street, near Washington, by Samuel Underhill and Aaron Eyrick. The membership of the congregation is about forty. The Sunday-school connected with it numbers fifty pupils. The superintendent is G. T. Hawkins.

The following pastors have ministered to this congregation since the time of organization:

Evangelical Churches.

Salem Church of the Evangelical Association.—The congregation of this church was organized in 1844 by Rev. Joseph M. Saylor. A house of worship was erected the same year on the corner of Eighth and Court Streets. This building was used until 1877, when the present large and commodious church was erected. The congregation has constantly increased in membership until it now (1886) numbers five hundred members. The Sunday-school was organized the same year as the congregation. It now has seven hundred pupils with Dr. S. L. Dreibelbis as superintendent.

The following is a complete list of the pastors who have ministered to this congregation:

Ebenezer Church of the Evangelical Association, located on Ninth Street, above Elm, was organized by the Rev. John Koehl, in 1870, with sixty members. The congregation first worshipped in Fisher's Hall. The same year a one-story church, sixty-eight by thirty-eight feet, was built on Ninth Street, near Buttonwood. George Gasser, Abraham Fry, William R. Heilig, Christian Kolb and Andrew Benner were the trustees and building committee. In 1885 a large and commodious two-story brick building, forty by seventy-four feet in size, was built, and a two-story brick parsonage which is the property of the congregation. The pastors in succession were John Koehl, E. Butz, Isaac Hess, F. P. Lehr, J. Neitz, S. B. Brown, S. Neitz and Isaac J. Reitz, who is the present pastor. The congregation has largely increased; has at the present time (1886) a membership of two hundred and thirty. The Sunday-school was organized May 22, 1870, with forty scholars, and has been very successful, having at this date three hundred pupils. James H. Miller is the superintendent.

Immanuel Church of the Evangelical Association is situated on Sixth Street, above Chestnut Street. In 1861 a number of the members in good standing of the Salem Evangelical Church, of this city, made application to the East Pennsylvania Conference for a separate organization, the motive being to establish an exclusively English congregation. This was granted the same year, and the congregation organized at the house of Rev. Seneca Breyfogle. Soon after, a hall was rented on the northwest corner of Fourth and Penn Streets. The first services were held on October 27, 1861, and seventeen persons signed the constitution as members. In January, 1862, the congregation purchased a two-story brick church on Chestnut Street, below Sixth Street, formerly used by the Protestant Methodist congregation. In this they worshipped until December, 1884, when they removed to the lecture-room of their new and large church on Sixth Street near Chestnut. This had been in course of erection for several months and was completed at a cost of thirty thousand dollars. The entire amount was secured on the day of the dedication, in 1885. During the dedication ceremonies the congregation unanimously decided that the pews of this church should be forever free.

The officiating pastors were,—

Eight hundred persons have united with this church since its organization, and during the same period five thousand dollars were contributed toward the missionary fund. The congregation at the present time numbers four hundred members. A Sunday-school was organized at the same time as the church, with sixty-eight pupils in attendance, and has been very successful. In 1885 the number of pupils had increased to five hundred and twenty, with an average attendance of four hundred and ten. F. G. Boas is now, and has been for more than twenty five years general superintendent of the school. Miss Ella B. Dunkel is superintendent of the primary department, with over two hundred pupils.

ST. MATTHEW’S CHURCH OF THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION is situated at Eighteenth and Cotton Streets, and is a mission under the supervision of the pastor, Francis Hoffman, and trustees of Salem Evangelical Church. It was organized in 1883, in a one-story frame building, which is still used as a place of worship. There are forty members connected with this mission; also a Sunday-school with one hundred and sixty pupils in attendance. Lewis Riegner is superintendent. This chapel was erected by the trustees of the Salem Evangelical Church.

UNITED BRETHREN CHURCHES.

ZION CHURCH OF THE UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST was organized in 1847 by Rev. S. Noll. A frame house of worship was built during the same year, at a cost of six hundred dollars. Rev. S. Vonieda took charge in 1848, and the next year a mission station was constituted, with Rev. S. Noll as leader, for three years, during which time he gathered in seventy-eight members. Rev. D. Hoffman served the congregation from 1852 to 1856, during whose pastorate fifty-seven members were added and the church now standing was built.

The pastors in order of succession who followed were,—

Joseph Young, George W. Hoffman, Jacob Brewer, D. M. Kaufman, — Ezekiel (under this pastorate a division of the church was made and the Otterbein formed), J. Runk, Job Light, J. H. Unger, J. H. Mark, D. Hoffman. Rev. Samuel Ettler became pastor of the congregation in 1881, and in 1886 is occupying the position.

The congregation had one hundred and fifty members when he was chosen pastor. There are now two hundred and ninety-six members. The Sunday-school connected with this church was organized in 1854. It has now three hundred pupils, with Franklin Ebright as superintendent.

OTTERBEIN CHURCH OF THE UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST is the second of that denomination in Reading. The church building is situated on Eighth Street near Elm. The congregation was organized in 1856, under Rev. I. L. Peters as pastor, and the first church was built the same year. The church was rebuilt in 1879 while the congregation was under the pastoral care of Rev. J. B. Funk.

The pastors have been,—

The first board of trustees was composed of Michael Sands, M. Fishburn, N. Zell and Geo. Heffelfinger. The trustees for the year 1886 are J. Wisler, Emerson Kline, Joseph Kline, Abraham Landis and Jacob Stoner. The church membership in 1886 is two hundred and fifty. The number of pupils in the Sunday-school, three hundred.

MENNONITE CHURCH.

FAITH CHAPEL, Mennonite Brethren in Christ, is situated on North Tenth Street near Oley. The congregation was organized in 1884, by Rev. Wm. B. Musselman. Thirty-five persons became members at the first meeting. The chapel was dedicated in January, 1885, by the pastor, who has officiated since the organization. The present membership is sixty-nine. The Sunday-school was organized in April, 1885, with one hundred and ten pupils. The superintendent is Wm. Gamler.

This is an independent congregation, a branch of the Mennonite denomination, whose strongest membership is in Canada.

FREE CHURCH.

Friendship Home Mission of the Reformed Evangelical Free Church (Cotton Street, above Tenth).—The congregation was organized September 1, 1883, in Sauppe's Hall, on Penn Street above Eighth, by the Rev. Joseph Kutz, the pastor and founder of the church. Eighteen original members joined this church, and a Sunday-school was organized at the same time on Tenth Street below Cotton, with fifteen pupils in attendance. In 1875 Mrs. Mary Kutz, wife of the pastor, collected sufficient funds to enable her husband to build a one-story brick church, twenty-six by forty-five feet, on Cotton Street above Tenth, which is now used by the congregation. Joseph Kutz acted as their pastor until his death, in 1883, and was succeeded by his son, J. Addison Kutz, the present pastor. The membership of the church has been constantly increasing since the time of organization. There are at present eighty-five members. The Sunday-school has two hundred and fifty pupils. The pastor, J. Addison Kutz, is superintendent of the school. This congregation is an independent church organization.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCHES.

St. Peter's.—The Roman Catholic denomination obtained an early foothold in Berks County. An establishment was effected in 1741 along the eastern border in Hereford (now Washington) township, at a place named "Churchville," after the church there situated. But their number in the county in the early history of the church was not at any time great.

There were adherents of this church in Reading from the beginning. About 1755, during the "French and Indian War," the inhabitants of the town regarded them with suspicion. This superinduced a strong letter, addressed by the justices of the county to the Governor of the province, dated July 23, 1755, in which they expressed the fear that the Protestants were "subject to a massacre whenever the Papists are ready," and prayed direction "in this important business." But, after submitting the matter to the Executive Council, he, in a reply dated Aug. 25th, following, said that there was little foundation for their representations, and this caused the apparently unnecessary excitement to subside.

In the letter it would appear that there was a priest then at Reading, who preached to his congregation once in four weeks. His name was Ferdinand Farmer. He reported in 1757 at Reading the following membership:

The first Roman Catholic Church was erected in 1791, on South Seventh Street, east side, near Chestnut, on lot No. 321. It was built of brick and capable of holding three hundred persons. It was called "St. Peter's." Previously, for some years, worship was carried on in a small log building on same lot.

With the growth of the town their number increased, and after the lapse of fifty years a larger building became necessary. Accordingly, they removed to the westside of South Fifth near Spruce Street, and began the erection of a large, improved church in 1845, which was dedicated May 24, 1846. Patrick Devlan, a prominent member of the congregation, presented a large bell to the church on December 12, 1850, which is still in use. Its total weight was three thousand four hundred pounds, with a diameter at its mouth, four feet eight inches.

The membership and services were English and German till the erection of "St. Paul's," in 1860-61, when the German portion withdrew.

The priests who officiated here were,— and Gerald Coghlan, the latter serving since August, 1882.

On March 25, 1829, W. S. Allgaier first moved to organize a separate Sunday-school for Roman Catholic children. He went to the different families of the congregation and obtained the names of sixty-two children. Collections were then made for the purchase of books, etc., and soon after the school was formed in the Madeira school building. Several years afterward the school was moved to the basement of the parsonage on Seventh Street, and afterward to St. Peter's Church, on South Fifth Street, where it has since been conducted successfully.

A number of societies are connected with St. Peter's Church. Some are beneficial. The oldest, St. Joseph's, was organized in 1852, Hibernia in 1860, and the Emerald in 1869. St. Peter's Temperance Society, consisting of about one hundred adults, was organized in June, 1883, and is connected with the Diocesan and the National Union. The cadets, having a membership of about sixty-five young folks, was organized about the same time as the adult society. The Sodality of the Blessed Mary was organized in May, 1883, and consists of about two hundred women and men. The Society of the Angels also has a membership of about two hundred, ranging in age from twelve to fifteen years, who have made their first communion. The Conference of St. Vincent de Paul, which includes many of the most prominent members of St. Peter's congregation, and looks after the temporal and spiritual wants of the poor, was organized in December, 1884.

St. Paul's.—This congregation was organized in 1860. Its members were, prior to that year, connected with St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church, on South Fifth Street. Under the direction of the late Most Rev. Archbishop J. F. Wood, of Philadelphia, the German-speaking portion of St. Peter's Church was formed into a separate congregation, and the late Rev. Charles F. Schrader was appointed their first pastor. Under his superintendence and by his exertions the St. Paul's Church was erected. Mr. A. Felix donated the lot of ground on which the church was built. Ground was broken on August 8, 1860, and the corner stone for the building was laid with great solemnity on the 16th of September, following, by the Most Rev. Archbishop Wood. The building was completed in June, 1861, and solemnly dedicated to the worship of God. Its original dimensions were sixty by one hundred and twenty feet, with a steeple one hundred and seventy-two feet high. The height of the ceiling is forty feet. The members of the congregation having increased rapidly in number, the church became too small, and an addition was made; the steeple's height was also increased to one hundred and eighty-seven feet. The present dimensions of the church are sixty by one hundred and sixty-two feet.

These improvements were completed in 1884. The architecture of this church is Romanesque in style, and the interior ceiling and walls are elaborately decorated with fresco-work and oil paintings. The new stained-glass windows are especially attractive; each one of these has groups of figures representing scenes from the Holy Scripture. They were imported from Innsbruck, Tyrol, and are really beautiful works of art. They are rare and costly specimens of fine workmanship, almost unrivaled in beauty of conception and artistic finish. St. Paul's Church is at present the largest house of worship in Reading. The congregation is very large and constantly increasing. Rev. George Borneman has been the pastor since its organization—after Rev. Schrader. Its present strength and wealth in church property attest to a very high degree his superior management in the performance of his duties.

St. Paul's parochial residence was built in 1873, beside the church, on North Ninth Street. It is large and substantial, and arranged with every convenience desirable.

Attached to St. Paul's Church is a large parochial school. The school-house was built in 1869. It is a spacious structure, sixty by forty feet, three stories high, each story fourteen feet clear. The daily attendance of pupils has been about six hundred ever since its origin. In this school both the German and English languages are taught. It is entirely supported by the members of St. Paul's congregation by voluntary contributions.

In 1881 a lot of ground, thirty by two hundred and twenty-five feet, with a one-story brick dwelling-house, adjoining the church property on the south side, was bought, for the purpose of building a house for the Sisters of Christian Charity, who, together with one male lay teacher, are now the instructors in St. Paul's School. A suitable three-story building was accordingly erected, in 1882, to the rear of the one-story dwelling mentioned, and is occupied since then by the Sisters as their residence.

The following beneficial societies are composed of members of St. Paul's Church, and hold their meetings in the parochial school building: St. Peter's and St. Paul's Society, organized in 1850; Bonisfanus Brotherhood, 1866; St. John's Society, 1868; Holy Cross Society, 1868; St. Mary's Society (consisting of ladies).

ST. CATHARINE'S FEMALE ORPHAN ASYLUM.—In April, 1872, three Sisters of the Order of St. Vincent de Paul came from the Mother's Home, Emmitsburg, Md., and, on the 15th of that month, opened St. Catharine's Female Orphans' Asylum, in an old and small one-story building on the south side of Franklin Street, between Eleventh and Twelfth. The first two orphans were brought from the Berks County Poor-House by W. S. Allgaier, executor of Mrs. Medary's estate, on April 29th following. The property, one hundred and forty by three hundred and thirty-nine feet, was devised for the purpose by Mrs. Catharine Medary, who died in May, 1871. The present three-story brick building, fifty by forty feet, was erected in 1873-74, at a cost of about fifteen thousand dollars, contributed by members of St. Peter's and St. Paul's Catholic Churches, and by citizens not belonging to the Catholic denomination. The corner-stone of this building was laid on September 9, 1873, by the Most Rev. Bishop Wood, and the building was completed and first occupied June 10, 1874. On the first floor proper is a beautiful little chapel containing a white marble altar that cost three hundred dollars. The chapel services are conducted by the pastors of St. Peter's and St. Paul's congregations alternately. At the present time there are in the institution forty-two orphans, who are taught to read, and write, and cipher, and to do all kinds of house-work. They are neatly attired, have cheerful faces and are well cared for. The Order of Sisters of Charity, having charge of the asylum, was founded by Vincent de Paul, in France, in 1617.

HEBREWS.

OHEF SHOLEM OF THE CITY OF READING.—In 1864 (May 1st) the Hebrews of Reading assembled together for the purpose of forming a Hebrew congregation and of raising a sufficient sum by subscription for the encouragement of regular preaching by a rabbi. An organization was effected on the 8th of May following by the election of officers, and then a lot of ground for burying purposes was reported to have been purchased (situated on South Street opposite the Catholic Cemetery) and inclosed. On May 15, 1864, they adopted the name of their congregation.

Their first religious services were held in a rented room on northeast corner of Sixth and Franklin Streets, and continued to be held there for a considerable time. In 1885, and for some years before, they conducted services successfully in the building on the northwest corner of Eighth and Washington Streets.

In 1884 and 1885 the Immanuel Evangelical congregation erected a new church for their religious worship on west side of Sixth Street above Chestnut. They then moved into this, leaving their old building unoccupied. The Hebrews found this building suitable for them as a congregation; so they purchased it in 1885 and made the necessary repairs. They paid four thousand two hundred and twenty-five dollars. In this commendable undertaking they were generously encouraged by business men of all denominations. They have a resident rabbi, Rev. Simon Levy, who preaches to them regularly. Their services are held on Friday evening and Saturday morning. They also conduct a Sunday-school for their children on Sundays. Their congregation comprises twenty-six members.

SUNDAY- SCHOOLS.

By a communication of "A Friend," addressed to the Berks and Schuylkill Journal, dated November 25, 1816, it would appear that the “Sunday-school” as an institution at Reading began some time before. The meeting for an organization of a “Sunday-school” was held in the “Reading Academy,” and its deliberations were presided over by the Rev. John F. Grier, who was then conducting the academy. He doubtless suggested the idea of such an organization and offered the academy as a place of meeting for that purpose. About seventy-five children assembled. Through the zeal and kindly assistance of several ladies, the first effort was attended with success. Its object was to “instruct children of every class, not only in the rudiments of the English language, but in those moral principles and religious truths, which are acknowledged by all to form the basis of human happiness and hope.” The first suggestion and attempt towards this organization “were treated with levity by many.” Upon its establishment the meetings were subsequently held in the “State-House” building, having begun there on October 10, 1819. A “Reading Sunday-school Association” was afterward organized. The officers for the year 1828–29 were:

President, Samuel Baird; Vice-Presidents, John McKnight, Wm. Darling; Treasurer, Elijah Dechert; Secretary, Lot Benson; Managers, William Addams, Philip A. Good, Henry A. Muhlenberg, John F. Grier, William Paul, Henry J. Whitehouse, Jacob Hubley, Daniel Rhine, William Bell, Dennis O’Brien, William Davis, George N. Eckert, Philip Miller and Thomas Cruise.

By the names of these persons, it would appear to have had the support of the best and most influential people of the town. In June, 1828, there were three Sunday-schools in the association.

School No. 1 assembled in the “State-House.” The scholars numbered four hundred and seven—male, one hundred and sixty-eight; female, two hundred and thirty-nine; and the teachers twenty-nine—male, twelve; female, seventeen. It possessed a library of one hundred and fifty volumes. The officers were a president and two directresses.

School No. 2 assembled in the room on the first floor of the Presbyterian Church. Number of scholars, one hundred and forty—male, sixty, female, eighty; teachers, seventeen—male, seven; female, ten. Library contained one hundred volumes. Its officers were a director and directress. The larger scholars of the two schools formed a “Bible Class,” which numbered fifty. They met every Tuesday evening.

School No. 3.—This school was composed of colored adults and children. Several years before, there was scarcely an African in Reading who could read the Word of God. But they made rapid progress and some were then teachers.

The Methodist Episcopal congregation had then a flourishing school, which numbered seventy children and twelve teachers; and flourishing schools were then also at Sinking Spring, Womelsdorf, Rehrersburg, Bernville, Hamburg and Kutztown.

The number of children taught at Sunday-schools in the county during the year was estimated at about twelve hundred.

School No. 1 continued to hold its sessions regularly every Sunday till September 26, 1847, in the “State-House,” a period covering about thirty-one years; and during all these years there was but one superintendent, Thomas O’Brien. It was then transferred to the new Presbyterian Church-building, then erecting on Fifth Street near Franklin. At times the scholars numbered three hundred and fifty. During its existence, especially for ten years after its organization, the teachers were not only Presbyterians, but also Lutherans, Reformed, Episcopalians and Catholics. The institution during that time had apparently been operated for the general welfare, without respect to religious feelings and prejudices.

After the Sunday-school had become an established institution, and had been in successful operation for over twelve years, the members of the Lutheran and Reformed congregations of the borough conceived the necessity of organizing separate Sunday-schools for their own children. This was effected on the 12th of April, 1829, under the name of “The Lutheran and Reformed Sunday-school Association of Reading.” The school was first opened in the spacious school-room of David Medary, on the west side of Fifth Street below Penn. The prospectus of the managers declared "that they were not instigated by any desire to propagate particular religious opinions or to impress the children confided to their care with sectarian principles... In the exercises of the school no preference will be given to one mode of faith or form of worship over any other." The association continued there only a short time, and then removed to the "Old Court-House." E. Jonathan Deininger was the superintendent. Several years afterward the two denominations separated, and the scholars of each occupied places specially provided by the congregations. The Lutheran Sunday-school began in a one-story brick building, erected for the purpose, on the southeast corner of Washington and Church Streets.

As other denominations organized congregations, Sunday-schools were also formed for their respective children. All the congregations have Sunday-schools connected with them, as indispensable parts in the great system of inculcating proper conceptions of morality and social and religious duty.

PART VII.

SCHOOLS.

Education began in Reading in the very beginning of its settlement. The town-plan was laid out in 1748, and the first lots were sold in 1749. Soon after this time churches were erected; and in connection with the churches there were schools. This conjunction of the two was common throughout the county from its earliest settlements. The oldest building used for school purposes for nearly a hundred years, now standing in Reading, is the one-story stone building at the southwest corner of Sixth and Washington Streets (the southern half of the building having been torn away). This was owned and carried on by the "German Lutheran" (afterward Trinity) congregation. It was erected, it is supposed, in 1765. The lot was purchased in 1763. Two of the early teachers were Joseph Fleischer and Paul Fugner. In 1844 the week-day school was still active, though not so numerously attended as previously. Education was conducted in German.

The "German Reformed" congregation obtained title to a lot on the southwest corner of Seventh and Washington Streets in 1776, and about that time erected a brick building and used it for school purposes for many years. The building is still standing.

The earliest record of a school is the "Charity School," for the establishment of which in Reading application was made in 1756. But an allowance of only three pounds was made three years afterward in 1759.1

One of the early teachers in Reading was Philip Jacob Foesig. His name has been traced back to 1762. In the year 1778 he was still a "schoolmaster." His school was situated on Seventh Street, west side, a short distance above Court.

The "Friends" were active at a very early period in the matter of education. The following statement was copied from an old, well-worn folio sheet. There was no date upon it. It related to the Friends' School, which was erected on the south side of Washington Street, at Wood, about 1787, and stood there many years.

"From an apprehension of the advantages arising to children by having their school education under exemplary, well-qualified tutors, and the necessity to encourage such schools, we whose names are hereto subscribed do promise and agree to give the sums we have thereto annexed towards building a school-house at Reading, which house and the masters employed while they continue to teach therein shall be and remain under the direction of Exeter Monthly Meeting, or a number of Friends thereby appointed to superintend the same."

There were twenty-seven subscribers, the largest having been Wm. Green, £15; Samuel Jackson, £7 10s.; John Mears, £5 10s.; and James Loure, Richard Lewis, James Imbree and Owen Hughes, each £5; Benjamin Pearson, £4; and Samuel Lee, £2.

This school was successfully conducted for nearly eighty years, when it was removed to the present church building of the Friends, on Sixth Street, north of Washington. The last teachers were the Misses Griscom, who are two of the oldest surviving teachers in this community after a long period of useful service in the profession of teaching.

Reading Academy.—The Reading Academy was the most prominent educational institution at Reading for about thirty years. The association was incorporated as early as March 10, 1788; but for twenty years its history is unknown.

In 1805 the State made a grant of forty-five hundred acres of land to it, and in that year a board of trustees was organized. Two years afterward, March 11, 1807, the board received a donation of two thousand dollars from the State for the purpose of erecting a suitable building.

In 1805 the following commissioners: Frederick Schmidt, Matthias Reichert, Nicolaus Dick, J. K. Messerschmidt, Geo. De B. Keim and Wm. Witman, Jr., were appointed to conduct a lottery for the purpose of raising money to erect "a building for English worship and for a school-house in the borough of Reading." They advertised the scheme in the Reading Advertiser on the 27th of December, 1805. Five thousand tickets were to be sold at three dollars each. Prize tickets were 2293; blanks, 2707. The prizes were: $1000, $500, $200, $100, $50, $40, $20 of $10, $50 of $20, $100 of $200. On the 15th of July, 1806, the commissioners published the drawing of the prizes. The highest prizes were: No. 2577 for $1000, No. 167 for $500 and Nos. 193 and 3734, each $200.

On the 26th of June, 1806, they published a scheme for second-class, same as the first. They presented a petition to the Court of Quarter Sessions, praying "that the Grand Jury authorize the county commissioners to take a number of tickets." On the 6th of April, 1808, authority was given "to take two hundred tickets of the second class of the 'Reading Church and Academy Lottery,' to hold them for the profit or loss of the county."

The profits to the commissioners on the lottery enterprise were devoted to the "Reading Academy."

The following notice appeared in the Weekly Advertiser of Reading in 1811 and 1812:

"Reading Academy."

"A very large, commodious and elegant building, lately erected in the town of Reading, will be opened on the 13th of April next for the instruction of youth in languages, mathematics, natural philosophy, astronomy, chemistry, geography, with use of the globes and projection of maps, English grammar and common English, etc."

"Terms of tuition in the higher branches, five dollars per quarter; the lower in proportion."

"Perhaps no place in the Union can boast of a more advantageous site for such an institution than Reading. Its dimensions are such as happily to combine the advantages of a city with those of a country place, beautifully situated on the banks of the river Schuylkill, in the midst of a rich and highly cultivated country, being remarkably healthy—the best of boarding to be had on the most reasonable terms; possessing every convenience, to be derived from stages running in all directions, from good society, well-chosen libraries—it promises a very desirable retreat, especially in the summer seasons, for studious young men, desirous of obtaining a liberal education."

"To expedite as much as possible the progress of the pupils, sober and experienced assistants will be employed, proportional in number to the increase of students, and the strictest attention shall be paid, not only to their progress in science, but to the preservation of their morals."

"The seminary is under the immediate inspection of gentlemen of the first attainments in the different professions, and private literary characters, who have resolved upon using every laudable means to render this institution worthy the public attention."

"The subscriber flatters himself, from an opportunity of a liberal education, and several years' experience in conducting an academy, that he can render every reasonable satisfaction to those who may intrust him with the education of their children."

"John F. Grier."

"Reading, March 2d, 1811."

By this notice, it would appear that the building was erected during the year 1810. Its location was on the southwest corner of Seventh and Chestnut Streets. It was opened on April 13, 1811, as advertised.

The donated land was not surveyed till 1818, when it was located in Mifflin township, Lycoming County, and a patent obtained for fifty-four hundred and forty-eight acres, eighty-one perches. One third of it, however, was allowed and granted to the surveyor for his services. It would seem that the academy never realized any benefit from this grant, for the remaining two-thirds were undisposed of as late as 1838. In 1832 another donation was received from the State, amounting to three thousand dollars—

"Upon the condition that four students in indigent circumstances should be educated for five years in such a manner as to become teachers in common English schools." And it is believed that as early as 1820 the trustees had received about thirty-five hundred dollars from the estate of Ernest L. Baishe, under his last will, wherein he provided that the principal should be invested and the interest thereof applied to the support and education of poor, talented young men. The trustees also received considerable money from the "Reading School-House and Church Lottery." All these several sums of money were expended by the trustees; but the institution was left in debt. This caused great dissatisfaction in the community. Public meetings were held in relation to it. A sale of the academy was considered at a public meeting on December 22, 1835, and deemed inexpedient and improper; and on January 2, 1836, another meeting was held, when the same opinion was expressed, as follows:

"That the trustees of the Academy hold it merely in trust for the benefit of the citizens, and that any application of its funds for other purposes than the Academy, is a violation of the rights of the community; and that nothing can be done without the people's consent."

A committee was appointed by the meeting to confer with the trustees as to the sale. Complaint was then made to the State Legislature. An investigation was demanded and given. This was in 1837. Considerable communications appeared in the local newspapers in reference to the matter. The academy building and one acre of ground was finally sold in 1838. Then the trustees of the academy, in 1839-40, erected the two-story brick building now standing at the northeast corner of Fourth and Court Streets. 1 A school was opened in it May 4, 1840, by Rev. J. R. Goodman, assisted by Professor — Bournes. The course of instruction embraced all the branches of a classical education, and scholars were prepared for college. Young men from distant parts were accommodated with boarding. The cost of boarding and tuition was one hundred and seventy-five dollars a year. Day scholars, for tuition only, was six dollars a quarter.

The trustees then held the academy building till 1850. By virtue of an act of Assembly passed April 8, 1848, they sold it to the school directors for the purposes of a "High School," by deed dated September 8, 1850; and this deed, with its conditions, was accepted October 10, 1850.

The first effort made to establish a High School proved a failure, "through the remissness of one of the wards" (Northeast), and it was abandoned for a while.

A meeting of the directors of three wards was held December 6, 1849, and they decided to organize a "City Union High School," which was to be opened with seventy-five scholars,—from Northwest Ward, thirty; Southwest Ward, thirty; and Southeast Ward, fifteen.

MILITARY INSTITUTE.—A "Military and Scientific Collegiate Institute" was then organized by Captain Alden Partridge, April 1, 1850, and carried on in the building. He was assisted by Professors E. G. Rehrer and J. B. Bachelder. The cost of tuition was as follows:

Primary, under ten years of age: four dollars a quarter. Junior, from ten to fourteen years: English, six dollars a quarter; classical, seven dollars a quarter. Senior, over fourteen years: English, eight dollars a quarters; classical, ten dollars a quarter.

General William H. Keim was chiefly instrumental in its establishment. The institute was incorporated under the name of "Pennsylvania Military Institute of Reading" in 1852. Then it had sixty-nine scholars.

Batchelder succeeded Partridge as principal. He resigned in the spring of 1853. Professor Alonzo Brown succeeded him. But the institution was not carried on long by him. About the time of its discontinuance, Rev. William A. Good began the "Reading Classical Academy."

of Reading exerted themselves in its behalf. The following extracts are taken from the "First Annual Report of Controllers of the Reading School District," which was published by them in January, 1856. The first organization of the school system in Reading began in 1834:

"Surprising as it may seem to those who recollect the fierce political opposition it received in Berks for many years subsequently, two of her then members of the Legislature, Benjamin Tyson and Adam Schoener, voted for the original bill. They were renominated by the dominant party the ensuing year, but a 'split' was the consequence; the school 'candidates' were defeated by regular old fogies, and from that time until within a few years past, opposition to the public schools continued to be the main article in the 'Democratic' creed.

"The first meeting which was held in Reading about the time the law was passed in favor of the school system was called by Wm. Wilson, Joshua Davis, Godfrey Pfleager, Andrew Martin, Edward Smeeck and C. Hazzard. After the law was passed the most strenuous efforts were made by the 'wheel horses' of that day to procure its repeal and prevent the opening of schools. Like most laws of a progressive character, it was pronounced 'unconstitutional;' 'tyrannical' and 'unjust.' But although the 'no school' party succeeded in the county, they were unsuccessful in the city. The people took the matter in hand, the system was accepted and the schools were opened."

In May, 1836, a meeting of delegates from the various districts of Berks County was held in the court-house, for the purpose of accepting or rejecting the school system.

There were twenty-nine districts represented. The following voted for it: Reading (two districts), Amity, Caernarvon, Robeson, Ruscombmanor, Union, Windsor and Womelsdorf. All the others voted against it. At first the school-houses in Reading were small and inconvenient. They improved as the population and wealth increased.

The first school directors of Reading were elected without opposition on the 20th March, 1835. They were,—

North Ward, David Rightmyer and Benjamin Davis.
South Ward, Daniel Ermold, William Wanner, Jacob Geiger and Daniel Graeff.

And the reports for this year show that one thousand eight hundred and nine children attended school,—

The first school-house in Reading, as a result of the advocacy and adoption of the common-school system, was the small one-story brick building erected in 1838 at the southwest corner of Sixth and Walnut Streets. Previously the schools were conducted in buildings rented for the purpose.

In 1840 there were in Reading seventeen schools, twenty-four teachers and one thousand five hundred and seventy-seven scholars1 and four public school buildings, each with four apartments. These buildings were,—

1. One-story brick, forty-two by thirty feet, on Washington, between Eighth and Ninth, erected in 1888.
2. Two-story brick, forty-five by fifty-five feet, on Franklin, between Eighth and Ninth, erected in 1839.
3. One-story brick, forty-five by thirty feet, on corner of Sixth and Walnut, erected in 1840.
4. Two-story brick, forty-five by fifty-five feet, on Chestnut, between Third and Fourth, erected in 1840.

In 1846 there were seventeen schools, thirty-five teachers and one thousand nine hundred and fifteen scholars.

The "Normal School" began in the spring of 1852, in the Washington Street school building. Thirty teachers attended. The sessions were held on every Saturday morning. Subsequently they were held in the High School building.

The act of 1874, providing a municipal government for cities of the third class (which included Reading), was accepted by the electors of Reading upon the recommendation of the City Councils; but it was not recommended by the Board of Controllers, they deeming the management of the school affairs under a distinct organization as necessary and as more disposed

1 In Stahle's "Description of Reading," p. 55, the number of schools is stated to have been then 22 (10 public and 9 private), and of all scholars 2552, in public schools 918; the total number entitled to privilege of free schools, 2000.
to promote the general progress of education in the city.

In 1885 an act was passed, directing the holding of "City Institutes" in cities of the third class. The first institute of this kind was held at Reading during the last week of November, 1885, in the Grand Opera-House.

Officers of School District.—On the 26th of April, 1864, in the revised charter for the city of Reading, the five school districts of the city—each ward having then constituted a district—were consolidated into one district, under the name of the "Reading School District."

Each ward became entitled to four controllers, with a term of four years; and two were to be elected alternately every two years. The voters at the biennial elections were to vote for one person, and the two persons having the largest number of votes were to be declared elected. This provision was made to preserve political equipoise in the Board of Controllers. The first members were elected at the city election in February, 1865. The city charter of 1874 made provision for school affairs, but it was not accepted. The school district is therefore a separate organization. Under the provisions of this law, the school district was authorized to assess and collect taxes for school purposes. The management of the school affairs of the city since 1865, by the Board of School Controllers, has been very successful. Numerous large, commodious and handsome school buildings have been erected in every section of the city, and general education has been so thoroughly introduced as to render the average ability of the many children in the city to read and write equal to that of any other city; indeed, in excess of that of some cities which are composed, like Reading, of a people mostly devoted to manufactures. The glory of the great system of free education provided for by the State under the general act of 1854 is therefore admirably illustrated by the condition of the school affairs in the city.

*The organization of the High School influenced the consolidation of the wards of the city for school purposes. This was finally effected in 1859, by an Act of Assembly and all the schools of the city came to be regulated by a Board of Controllers.

The school buildings here and elsewhere throughout the State are the pride of the people, notwithstanding complaint from some of them in respect to cost, style, etc.; and the system of education which is carried on within them, notwithstanding its weaknesses, contributes a well-being to the general community that cannot be estimated. They are, indeed, monuments which celebrate daily the rise and progress of the people—the advancement of children, with little or nothing to recommend them to the favor of the world, into noble, industrious, law-abiding men and women, who come to occupy positions of prominence and responsibility in the commercial, industrial, political, professional and social affairs of life, and, by their education there obtained, to discharge trusts with such ability and fidelity as to win universal admiration.

The following persons were officers of the Board of Controllers of the Reading School District from 1865 to the present time:

City Superintendents.—In 1867 the school directors of cities containing a population exceeding ten thousand were authorized to elect a city superintendent of the common schools for the term of three years. The directors of Reading elected the first superintendent in 1887. Thence, till now, the superintendents were:
HIGH SCHOOL.—The subject of a "Reading High School" was first agitated in 1851. It was organized on November 2, 1852. William H. Batt was the principal. There were thirty-five scholars, all boys, admitted, who were sent from the several wards as follows: Northeast, 5; Southeast, 5; Northwest, 10; Southwest, 10; Spruce 5. In September, 1853, it opened with sixty-three scholars.

The first "High School Commencement" was held on July 3, 1856. The address was delivered by Hon. William Strong.

The "Female High School" was organized in September, 1857. The second floor of the building was occupied for this purpose.

The co-education of boys and girls began August 15, 1859, and continued till 1881. The Board of Controllers then decided upon a separation of the female department remaining in the "High School" building, and the male locating in the building at the southeast corner of Eighth and Penn Streets, third floor.

The fine commodious "Boys' High School," at the southeast corner of Eighth and Washington Streets, was erected in 1883 and 1884. The total cost, including equipment in all its departments, was $65,500. Possession was taken, and the school began to be conducted in it, April, 1884.

Since 1880 the board has expended for new buildings, $154,000.

INFANT SCHOOL SOCIETY.—In 1832 a movement was encouraged towards the establishment of a society for the education of the infant children of Reading. A meeting was held on January 19, 1832.—Joseph Kendall having been chairman and Samuel Bell, secretary. A constitution was adopted, and a report was presented, showing the success in this novel experiment. Over two hundred infants had enjoyed the benefits of a school which was being conducted for this purpose, notwithstanding various prejudices were manifested against it.

The highest number of scholars in the school at one time was 108; the average number, 50. The tuition for a whole term was $3.12½. Children of parents in good circumstances, $1 a quarter; poor children, fifty cents a quarter; destitute children, free.

The salary of the principal teacher was $150; and the assistant, $100.

The whole receipts were reported at $687.79; the expense, $682.73.

A resolution was passed encouraging the continuance of the school; and the following board of managers was elected to serve for the ensuing year:

Mrs. N. O’Brien, Mrs. Bell, Mrs. Beard, Mrs. Dechert, Mrs. E. O’Brien, Mrs. Moes, Misses Baum, Slater, Beard, Badger, Porter, Coleman, Mrs. Cumming, Mrs. Kendall, Mrs. Eckert and Mrs. M. S. Richards.

FEMALE SEMINARIES.—The first establishment of a separate institution at Reading for the education of young ladies was in 1835. A seminary was then begun by Mrs. M. E. Shaw, who came highly recommended. Her school was in five departments; and besides English and French, her course of education embraced music, drawing and needle-work. Her terms were,—board and washing, twelve weeks, thirty-two dollars and fifty cents; music, French and drawing, each eight dollars; use for piano, one dollar; pew-rent in church, fifty cents. She was succeeded by a Mrs. Clarke, of Lancaster, on October 13, 1835.

Reading Female Seminary.—In pursuance of an act passed April 16, 1838, a female school in Reading was erected into a seminary for the education of female youth in the arts, sciences and useful literature.

The trustees were Rev. Jacob Miller, Rev. William Pauli, Jacob Sallade, Alv.i Kerper, Henry A. Muhlenberg, Geo. De B. Keim, W. Darling, John Miller and Peter Filbert.

The seminary was endowed from the State, according to the number of teachers and pupils, from three hundred dollars to five hundred dollars. Sallade was elected first president; Kerper, treasurer and Filbert, secretary.

Eighty shares of stock were authorized to be issued at twenty-five dollars, and only two shares were allowed to one person. An advertisement was made on June 16, 1838.

It was opened on September 3, 1838, with three teachers and sixty pupils, and successfully conducted for some years afterward.

In 1850 three female seminaries were carried on,—one by Mrs. Dechert and daughters, on Penn, above Sixth Street; a second by Mrs. Orrick and Mrs. Young, at corner of Fifth and Walnut Streets; and a third by Miss M. Jackson, on Fifth, between Franklin and Chestnut Streets, whose course embraced English education, wax, worsted, and zephyr-work, and Polish and silk embroidery.

A “Winchester Female Academy” was carried on for some years on Penn above Eighth, in the building now used as Union Hotel. It was an incorporated body, created in 1867.

Private Schools of Reading.

The Academy of the Immaculate Heart is a Roman Catholic School, established by St. Peter’s congregation in 1859. It is devoted to the education of young ladies. At the same time and place there were established a parochial school and a boarding-school, the former being still continued. The latter was removed to West Chester in 1872 where it is now kept up by the church. The academy was first in charge of Mother Superior Magdalen, but the present Mother Superior is Mary Ambrosia. About a hundred students are in daily attendance. The parochial school has about two hundred and seventy-five pupils of both sexes, who are taught by five Sisters of the Immaculate Heart. Both schools are supervised by the Rev. Father Gerald P. Coghlan. The buildings at 225 South Fifth Street were erected for a residence some years before 1859, but were enlarged and changed to adapt them to the wants of the school.

The Reading Scientific Academy.—In the fall of 1862 Prof. D. B. Brunner located in Reading after a thorough preparation for educational work and became the owner of S. A. K. Francis’ Classical Academy, which he continued with great success for ten years. In 1872 he was elected county superintendent of public schools, and then he suspended teaching till the expiration of his term, in 1875, when he revived it with the present name, conducting it in connection with Mr. Farr’s business school one year. In 1876 the academy became a separate institution and was largely attended for the next four years. Prof. Brunner is a scientist of acknowledged ability. He has constructed a superior set of philosophical apparatus to illustrate frequent lectures on natural philosophy to his scholars. In 1880 he sold out his interest in one branch of the school to E. L. Horning, and under the principalship of the latter the academy was conducted till 1886. In 1885 a commercial department was opened by Prof. Brunner in the Scientific Academy. A night-school has also been conducted for some years. Both sexes are admitted in the course of instruction.

Reading Business College.—The first business college in Reading was opened about 1864, by Clark & Nelson, and was well patronized. In the course of a few years there were several changes of management which affected the attendance so that the school was closed. About 1868 a Mr. Folmer attempted to carry on another business school, but abandoned the project at the end of the year. In 1872 C. N. Farr established a new business college, which he carried on with much success until 1876, when he disposed of his interest to E. E. Post, to become private secretary to the Governor of the State. Mr. Post continued the school until 1879, when it was finally closed. In 1881 Prof. D. B. Brunner revived the college, with the present name, and has succeeded in founding it upon a permanent basis. Under his principalship the college has become very popular, having an annual attendance of nearly two hundred students.

Selwyn Hall is the name of the dioecesan school of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Central Pennsylvania, and is situated near the northern city limits, in the building commonly known as the “Deininger Mansion.” It was founded in 1875 as a boarding and day-school for boys. The property comprises about four and a half acres of land at the foot of Penn’s Mount. The building is large and commodious, well ventilated, warmed by the most improved hot-air furnaces and in particular equipped with a view to the health and comfort of the cadets.

The gymnasium—a handsome brick building, eighty by thirty-five feet—has been fitted up with a view to encouraging athletic sports, and contains all the necessary apparatus.

The course of instruction is similar to that of kindred institutions, having in addition the influences and advantages of special instruction in the doctrines of the Episcopal Church.

The school is under the immediate direction of the Rev. Bishop M. A. De Wolfe Howe, D.D., and has as its head master Lot Clarke Bishop. In 1885 the cadets on the roll numbered twenty-five.

Carroll Institute situated on Fourth Street, near Walnut, was established in 1880 by Edward Carroll, the present principal, to prepare boys for college. The number of students is limited to thirty-five, and so generous has been the patronage of this community that the average annual attendance has been thirty-four. Of the twenty students who were prepared for college under Prof. Carroll, eight were admitted to the Lehigh University, one to University of Pennslyvania, ten to Lafayette College and one to Princeton.

Schuylkill Seminary was established by, and is under the patronage of, the East Pennsylvania Conference of the Evangelical Association, which decided to maintain such an institution at its annual meeting in 1881. The committee to whom was assigned the work of establishing a seminary held its first meeting at Reading May 9, 1881, when an organization was effected; subsequently the appointment of the Rev. S. S. Chubb as general manager and the Rev. W. E. Walz as principal was made. The seminary was formally opened on the evening of August 16, 1881, in the Salem Evangelical Church in Reading; and the following day the exercises of the school began in the building on the northwest corner of Sixth and Walnut Streets, where it has since been continued. The Rev. W. E. Walz, becoming a missionary to Japan, Prof. John F. Crowell was elected principal and Miss Lizzie F. Baker preceptress. Prof. Crowell is now in Europe completing his studies in the old universities, and Thomas S. Stein, A.M., is serving as principal de facto. The seminary having become permanently established and outgrowing its present quarters, it will be removed to Frederickburg, Lebanon County, in August, 1886, where one of the most complete college buildings in the State has been erected for its use through a generous donation by Col. John H. Lick.

Stewart Academy is an English classical and mathematical school for both sexes. It is conducted in the fine three-story sandstone mansion, late the residence of Henry A. Seybert, situated on the corner of Fifth and Cherry Streets. Its ample and elegant rooms have been well furnished for school purposes by the present proprietor. The academy was established September 12, 1881, by Prof. and Mrs. John A. Stewart, both long identified with the educational work of the city. The former was an assistant in the High School twelve years, and served fourteen years more as principal, having been then assisted by Mrs. Stewart (née Greth). Their large experience as educators and recognized popularity have been fully appreciated by the public in the patronage they have received in their new enterprise. The academy was opened with eighty-six pupils, and it has since had a yearly attendance of one hundred and seventy-five students. The number attending this year shows an increase over the preceding year.

It has primary, intermediate and academic departments, thus enabling children of the same family to be educated under the same system, from the first elements to the training for business or the admission into college. Besides the principals, the corps of teachers includes six assistants. All the necessary apparatus has been supplied to illustrate the course of instruction. The first class, of six scholars, graduated June 26, 1884, the exercises upon that occasion having been conducted in the Academy of Music, in the presence of a large number of persons. The graduating class of 1886 numbers ten scholars. Under the direction of Prof. and Mrs. Stewart the academy has been a great success; it is now one of the principal educational institutions of the city, and has aided materially in awakening a stronger interest in the higher branches of learning afforded by local enterprise.

Reading Seminary for Young Ladies

was opened in convenient rooms, on the corner of Fourth and Penn Streets, September, 1884. The first principal was Mrs. S. I. B. Wisener, who had charge of the school one year, when she removed to the South. In September, 1885, Miss C. J. Brown became the principal of the seminary, and it has since prospered under her direction. It has now four teachers and thirty scholars. Special attention is paid to the study of the fine arts and painting.

Inter-State Commercial College

was established September 1, 1885, by the present principal, Prof. H. Y. Stoner. It occupies commodious and well-arranged rooms on the corner of Sixth and Washington Streets, and, though not quite a year old, has been remarkably prosperous. More than fifty students, of both sexes, have been admitted and twelve have completed the course of study. Prof. Stoner is a native of Exeter township. For eight years he was connected with the foremost business colleges of the country. In addition to the studies usually pursued in business colleges, English branches and short-hand are taught, so that a thoroughly practical education may be obtained in his college.

Among the select schools of the city continued for a term of years, that of the Misses Cooper is worthy of notice. It was established in 1874, and had a regular attendance of twenty-five girls till recently. The common English branches, French and German were taught. Other select schools have been successfully conducted for a time, the most prominent, by reason of its continuance till now, being that of Miss Esther Benade.

Herman Strecker, of Reading, is one of the most eminent specialists in the department of science in America. He was born in Philadelphia March 24, 1836. At a very early age he evinced a fondness for the study of natural history, and at the age of nineteen centered his attention and diligent study during leisure hours on the Lepidoptera, a division of the fascinating science of entomology devoted to butterflies and moths. He is one of the best authorities on this subject in the world, and is a faithful illustration of what wonders may be accomplished by one who devotes his leisure hours to patient and diligent study on one particular department of science. His valuable and truly magnificent collection of butterflies is not excelled by any other collection of the same kind in the world. It contains over seventy thousand specimens, gathered from every corner of the globe. Among the great rarities is a specimen of Colias Boothii, taken by the second Ross expedition in search of a northwest passage, in 1827–29. This is the only example of that species in any American collection. There are also three of the great Papilio Antiochus, from equatorial Africa, of which only about a dozen are known. Then there is the argus moth (Eustera Argus), with enormously long, slender, tail-like attachments to the hind wings; whole suites of the splendid golden Crassus and Lydus butterflies, from Halmheira; the curious dead-leaf butterfly, from China and India; the wonderful Parnassius butterflies, from fifteen to eighteen thousand feet elevation in the Himalayas and other great mountain ranges; enormous Cossus, from Australia, which are eaten by the natives; the owl moth of Brazil, measuring a foot across the wings; the resplendent Rhipheus flies, from Madagascar, which have no rival in nature to their beauty—the brilliancy of the humming-bird, the glitter of gems fading in comparison with them. There are also monsters, half male and half female, or those with one wing partly of one sex and the rest of the other; there are albinos, melanos, hybrids, monsters with an extra wing—every imaginable variety or freak. There are butterflies that look like wasps, like bees, like lichens; moths with peculiar markings resembling skulls, anchors and the figures.

There are examples collected by trained collectors in every quarter of the world, by Indians, by Eskimaux, by explorers and travelers, by Jesuit missionaries, by any one whose services could be enlisted. This truly wonderful collection is the result of more than thirty years of study and systematic collecting. For some specimens he has paid as much as fifty dollars each. Being endowed with great artistic talent, he has published many valuable works describing new species, etc., illustrated by finely-executed lithographs engraved by himself, and in many cases colored in a life-like manner by his own hands. He also published a work containing a catalogue of North American butterflies.

Mr. Strecker is an architect, designer and sculptor by profession. He located at Reading nearly forty years ago, having then accompanied his father, who was the prominent dealer in marble and marble-worker of Reading at that time. He has since followed the pursuit of his father. As a sculptor he gained an enviable reputation, and he has produced many praise-worthy works of art, among which are the large crucifix in the burial lot of the DeLong family in Charles Evans Cemetery, cut from solid marble and weighing fourteen tons; the monument erected for the family of Judge Donaldson, of Pottstown; a monument erected to the memory of James Nolan, Esq., a beautiful design; the “angel boy,” erected on the grave of Sammy Kutz. The above are a few of the designs from his master hand. Joseph Drexel, of New York, has in his palatial residence a superb alto relievo from the chisel of Mr. Strecker. It is a grand conception of the allegory of Poe’s “Raven.”

ARTISTS.

Art and artists can be appropriately mentioned in this connection. Art was taught here for a time in the ladies’ seminaries, especially between 1830 and 1850.

The first artist of distinction at Reading (of whom any definite information was obtainable) was Genorino Persico. He came here about 1820, married a daughter of John McKnight, banker, and after remaining several years, removed to Richmond, Va. He was particularly expert in crayon drawing. His brother was a famous artist, having painted one of the prominent scenes in the Capitol building at Washington, and was befriended there by Hon. George M. Keim, a great patron of art and artists.

JACOB B. SCHÖNER, son of William Schöner, Esq., for many years a justice of the peace at Reading, was a superior painter of miniature portraits before 1845. He was born at Reading in 1805, and when still a boy took some lessons in drawing under Persico; subsequently he entered the Academy of Fine Arts at Philadelphia and there devoted himself especially to miniature painting, in which he became proficient. He was successful at Reading till 1845; when he removed to Boston, where he died several years afterward.

JAMES A. BENADE was doubtless the first artist at Reading who acquired more than a local reputation by his brilliant productions. He was the son of Dr. Andrew Bena, a distinguished Moravian bishop of Bethlehem, where he was born in 1823, and educated in the superior schools which that place afforded. Having a natural inclination to art, he studied painting for a time under a noted Moravian artist named Grünwald, and afterward prosecuted his studies at Philadelphia. When seventeen years old he settled at Reading. His mind was active and his brush was busy, and he soon won a high place in the esteem of this community by his wonderful talent. He was rapidly on the way to a national reputation as a landscape painter, but in the very midst of his bright and encouraging prospects he was stricken with paralysis, from which he died shortly afterward (February 2, 1853) in the thirty-first year of his age. Upon that occasion the Berks and Schuylkill Journal contained the following highly complimentary obituary notice:

"As a landscape painter Benade had no superior who were natives of this country, and his constant improvement afforded high ground for believing that in the course of a few years he would stand at the very head of painters in his peculiar branch of art."

A number of his larger paintings are highly valued by certain persons of this community, on account of their artistic excellence, prominent pieces among them being with his family and the families of Dr. H. H. Muhlenberg, William H. Clymer and William H. Strickland. His productions indicate a master as well as a genius, for he was able to execute what he conceived.
His sketches include superior views of Reading and of picturesque localities round about the place.

He was married to Sarah Nagle Moers, of Reading, by whom he had four children,— James, Henry, Esther and Sarah.

F. D. Devlan, a distinguished artist, who succeeded Benade in the order of prominence, was born in Paterson, N. J., on the 15th of December, 1835, but shortly after his birth his family moved to Lambertville, in the same State, where they engaged in the iron business.

In a few years one of those panics which periodically seem to paralyze the business world, affected them, and they came and settled in Reading, Pa. At that time the subject of this sketch could not have been more than four years old. Subsequently he attended the public schools until he was about fifteen years old.
This story is told of the school-boy, "Dan," as he was familiarly called then and through his after-life. He occupied the same desk with George S——, now a prominent Democratic politician of Berks County. One day the principal of the school, or rather his assistant, caught
"Dan," drawing in George's atlas, while he did
"Dan's" arithmetical examples. This the teacher threatened to tell the principal, when George raised his slate (without a frame) and said: "If you do, I'll cut your head off." After school hours the warehouse in the rear of the store kept by his father and his brother, at the southeast corner of Fifth and Chestnut Streets, was crowded every day by boys watching the embro artist covering sheets of pastelboard and shingles with pictures done in house-paints, urnished by a friend and admirer in the house-painting business. "Dan's" father thought he was wasting time and neglecting his studies
"for the painting craze," as pater familias characterized his son's love for painting; so he sent him to a classical school in order to divert his mind from a continuance in the work for which he had such a marked propensity. His mother and elder brother, however, encouraged him in his painting, and when he was about seventeen years of age he was sent as a pupil to Mr. James
A. Benade, an artist at Reading at that time.
Boy as he was, his preceptor always got him to paint the animals in his pictures. It was in this branch of art that Mr. Devlan excelled.
He had a poetic feeling, and could impart to a landscape most charming effects. His first picture created quite an excitement in the art circles of Philadelphia. It was placed on exhibition in a window of one of the prominent art galleries on Chestnut Street, and people went in throngs to see the "picture painted by a boy up in the mountains." His best pictures are in possession of the following individuals: Mr.
Clark, architect of the National Capitol, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Dr. Chas. H. Hunter, Mrs.
Harry Hunter, Nathaniel Ferguson, Theodore I.
Heizmann, Mrs. John McManus, Wm. McIlvain, Jr., Horatio Trexler, all of Reading, and Mr. Geo.
Brooke, of Birdsboro. The picture owned by Mrs.
John McManus was finished only a few days before he died. It is said of him that he was so much in love with his art that he had a strong inclination to join a monastic order, so as to afford an opportunity for pursuing his studies to "his heart's content." From this he was, however, dissuaded by dear friends. Mr.
Devlan was one of the most genial companions, of unruffled sweetness of temper, and although full of humor, there was a deep religious feeling pervading his nature. At one time, during the beginning of the Civil War, he drew cartoons for Frank Leslie's Illustrated News, all of which were published—some of them full-page pictures. This field of work he soon abandoned, however, because of the poor compensation which it yielded. Mr. Devlan died June 6, 1870, after a somewhat protracted illness, at the age of thirty-five. His remains were buried in the Catholic Cemetery, on the northern slope of the Neversink. He was married to a daughter of Jacob Sauerbier.

Amos Gable, portrait-painter, a son of Joseph Gable, was born at Reading, February 2, 1840. He was educated in the common schools, and then pursued the trade of barber for twenty-five years, till 1875. About 1860 he began to practice painting as a pastime, having taken it to from his natural taste; and in 1865 he painted his first portrait. He has been very successful, his patronage coming not only from this community, but from other places in this State and other States. He visited Dusseldorf and Munich in 1867, where he took lessons under distinguished artists in this special branch of painting.

J. Heyl Raser, for many years a successful druggist at Reading, opened an art studio in 1872. He had studied painting when a boy at Plainfield, Conn., showing at that time a high order of talent for drawing; and he had continued his studies as a diversion, year after year, till he disposed of his business to his son in the year mentioned, and then turned his entire attention to painting. He soon attracted much attention and his sketches were received with great favor. In 1875 he visited Europe, and upon his return continued at Reading till 1884, when he removed to Philadelphia and there opened a studio. He painted many fine sketches of the picturesque scenery round-about Reading.

Frederick Spang, a descendant of Frederick Spang, a prominent iron-master of this county, was born in Oley township, and educated at Norristown, to which place his parents had removed when he was a boy. He served for three years in the Civil War, having been a member of Company C, in the Fifteenth Pennsyl ylvania Cavalry. He studied art in Philadelphia, and after spending several years in California, along the coast, pursuing his profession, he came to Reading in 1870. He has since been here, producing superior portraits and sketches.

Christopher Shearer, a native of Reading, and son of Christopher Shearer, an enterprising builder at Reading, and farmer at Tuckerton, inclined to the study of art at an early age. He frequently visited the studio of F. D. Devlan whilst that distinguished artist was engaged upon some of his noted productions, and also the studio of J. Heyl Raser, to whom, upon a certain occasion, it is said, he innocently remarked, "I believe I can paint," when Raser replied, "Yes, a man can do anything if he tries." He tried and he was encouraged to continue. After showing great aptitude for the profession, he visited Europe, and pursued his studies for several years under German masters. Since returning he has established himself at Philadelphia, where he has attained, by his industry and skill, a national reputation as a brilliant landscape-painter. His conceptions are grand and his productions are highly appreciated by art critics and people of culture.

Singing.—In 1811 Stephen St. John advertised a notice that he purposed establishing an "English Singing-School" at Reading. Previous efforts had been made in this direction, but they proved fruitless. And nothing having been mentioned of this effort of 1811 afterward, it can be presumed that this also failed. The time for such an undertaking had not yet arrived, though English education had been carried on by the Friends for fifty years before. Within the past thirty years a number of professors have taught music, some in private classes, others in public schools and in churches. John Teed and Thomas W. Frescoln have been active and successful teachers.

Dancing.—The accomplishment of "dancing" is a branch of education which received the early attention of the people of Reading. A Mr. Hervey, dancing-master, advertised a notice in the Weekly Advertiser, of Reading, that he would open a "dancing-school" at Wood's tavern on the 21st of May, 1796.
Professor A. Bonnaffon opened a dancing-school in “Frickers’s Hall” (Sixth and Penn Streets, southwest corner) on March 25, 1818, and carried it on for some years. B. August, a professor from Paris, gave instructions for some time, about 1822. Charles Seville, a distinguished dancing-master, taught for two seasons, about 1840. Among his many scholars was Professor Frank Stouch.

Professor Stouch succeeded Seville in 1840, and taught dancing at Reading and vicinity for over forty years, without interruption. He distinguished himself by his successful teaching. Every year the average number of pupils at Reading and elsewhere was four hundred. He taught occasionally at Lancaster, Allentown, Pottstown, Lebanon and Philadelphia. He is remembered with great respect and affection. By his accomplishment and teaching he contributed much pleasure to many persons, old and young. In many families he taught the parents, their children and grandchildren. He is still active and successful in the profession.

Latterly, dancing-schools have been carried on here quite extensively and successfully. Prominent among the masters are Professors John Fahrbach and William K. Drexel.

PART VIII.

PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATIONS.

The associations of Reading which have been created for the protection of the inhabitants from losses by fire comprise those which are called “Fire Companies.” The first company at Reading for this purpose was the “Rainbow.” It was organized March 17, 1773. It is said that an organization of this nature existed here for some years previously; but no definite information respecting it was obtainable. The “Rainbow” was the only company for nearly thirty years. In March, 1800, a second company was organized under the name of the “Sun.” Some time afterward a third was organized under the name of “Union.” These two were disbanded about 1812; possibly they merged into a new company, which was organized December 2, 1813, and called the “Junior.”

Since 1813 nine companies have been formed, namely: Reading, July 4, 1819; Neversink, April 14, 1829; Friendship, March 4, 1848; Liberty, January 21, 1854; Washington, September 17, 1855; Keystone, January 19, 1856; Ringgold, June 5, 1856; Hampden, September 8, 1867; and Marion, 1884. The “Reading” and “Washington” were organized as “Hose Companies,” but the former became an “Engine Company” in 1860, by the introduction of the first steam fire-engine at Reading. The “Washington” added a hook-and-ladder truck in 1873. The “Keystone” was organized as a “Hook-and-Ladder Company” and in 1880 it added a “Salvage Corps.” These several companies are incorporated bodies.

A meeting of the firemen of Reading was held on February 12, 1833, for the purpose of considering the propriety of calling upon the Borough Council “to pay the expenses of keeping up the Fire Department.” Previously the companies were compelled to beg assistance from the citizens to enable them to carry on successfully the object of their association. But this continual begging came to be regarded by the people as a nuisance in one respect and as unjust and unequal in another, for some citizens gave contributions of money and others would not give any, yet all were benefited alike by the common protection which the fire companies afforded. This proceeding was begun in order “that the burden should be removed from the few.” The companies represented at this meeting were the Rainbow, Junior, Reading Hose, Neversink and Protection. A committee, composed of three members from each of the companies named, was appointed to present a petition to the Borough Council, praying for an appropriation to pay the expenses of the Fire Department. This brought a partial relief. The local government made annual appropriations and subsequently came to own the fire apparatus and buildings.

Ninety years had elapsed before this step was taken here. The great progress, by comparison, is apparent. Before the next decade had elapsed four additional steam fire-engines were added to the Fire Department by the following companies in the order named: Rainbow, Junior, Liberty and Friendship. From the time of the institution of these respective companies the hand-engine had been used. In 1872 two more steam fire-engines were added by the Neversink and the Hampden. There are now altogether seven in the service of the department.

Firemen's Union.—Representatives from the several companies named assembled in the city on the 18th day of March, 1861, and formed a Firemen's Union, "in order to promote harmony and friendly intercourse among the firemen, to establish those just relations which ought to exist among institutions whose views are similar, and to enable them more effectually to perform those philanthropic duties which devolve upon them." This Union was an ordinary association for four years, composed of five delegates from each company represented. Finding its powers inadequate for the purposes for which it was formed, an application was made to the Legislature of the State for a charter of incorporation; and it was accordingly incorporated on the 15th of March, 1865, under the name of the "Firemen's Union of the City of Reading."

It has since acted under this charter, and performed its functions in an admirable manner. And it has been to the people of the city through these years a certain and strong assurance of protection to their property and their lives from fire. The management is vested in a board of trustees, elected by the Union annually in October, and serving from the third Monday of January following. It is composed of one member from each company represented in the Union, and it is authorized to elect such officers at such salaries as the trustees shall deem expedient.

The volunteer Fire Department has now been an institution here over one hundred and ten years. The respective companies have through this long time not only defended, but also promoted the public welfare. They have always occupied a prominent place in the municipal affairs of Reading, more especially since the establishment of the Firemen's Union. Howard F. Boyer, the chief engineer, has been the most prominent person in the department for the past decade. He has filled his responsible position with credit to himself and with satisfaction to the public. The firemen have con- ceded this place to him year after year with remarkable unanimity, by reason of his devotion, courage, promptness and efficiency in the service of the department. Many firemen are equally zealous; and they are worthy of great praise for their self-sacrifices in behalf of the public safety and welfare.

Fire-alarm.—Immediately upon the breaking out of a fire an alarm was given to summon assistance. This alarm was struck on the bells of Trinity Lutheran Church for many years, till 1840; then upon the bell of the court-house for the next thirty-three years. The locality of the fire was indicated by a number of strokes on the bell to correspond with the number of the ward in which the fire was. In 1873 the "electric fire-alarm" was introduced. It has proved invaluable; and the response of the respective fire companies thereto has been as prompt as their services were efficient.

Previous to 1873 the fact that a fire had broken out was carried to the janitor of Trinity Church or of the court-house, who would ascend into the steeple and strike the alarm. This was a proceeding slow and tedious, and frequently delayed by the absence of the janitor. Joseph Ritter, janitor of the court-house and court-crier of the County Courts from 1840 till his death, in 1880, was conspicuous in this important service. At all hours of the night, as well as during the day, and in all seasons of the year, for thirty-three years, he responded promptly and willingly to the call for the alarm; and upon sounding it on the superior, clear-toned bell of the court-house, he awakened the whole community. Firemen of the several companies ran, first to their respective engine-houses and then with their engines to the fire; men and boys from all parts ran, many taking hold of the ropes attached to the engines and hose-carriages and assisting in drawing them to the fire. On the way the fireman's horn sounded, "Roll her, boys; roll her!" and excited voices cried out repeatedly, "Fire! fire!!" Such a demonstration naturally collected a large crowd at the fire. When the hand-engines were in use many of the bystanders assisted, and the pumping process afforded them much amusement. But progress has brought change. Men and boys are no longer seen tugging away, nearly breathless and exhausted, or running out of rank on account of "stitches" in their sides, to rest on the curb-stone half-way to the fire, or rolling out of the way after a stumble from weak knees to prevent a "run over." Horses, with ambitious, fearless drivers, have been substituted in their stead, and these now gallop onward as if sporting with the heavy engines drawn after them; and excited people are no longer heard crying "Fire!" whilst running to the scene of the conflagration.

During the decade from 1860 to 1870 the improvement from the hand-engine to the steam-engine was great; but the introduction of the electric fire-alarm, in 1873, was a greater improvement. By it, many places were substituted for one place, at all of which the signal could be given with equal facility. These were located in different parts of the city, so as to be convenient in case of fire, and to enable the alarm to be given promptly. Its operation came to be understood and its utility recognized immediately. In the old way, much valuable time was frequently lost in causing the alarm to be given, whereby the fire reached a stage beyond control; but in the new way, the alarm was transmitted to all parts of the city without loss of time, and its promptness enabled the chief engineer and responding department to arrive at the place before the fire obtained much progress beyond ignition. The alarm was struck at first, for some years, on the Presbyterian church-bell, and then fire-gongs were introduced in the buildings of the several fire companies. And this electric communication has been carried on so far as to open the stable-doors and permit the horses to run into position at the engines and carriages without assistance. In 1877 a handsome, substantial brick fire-alarm tower was erected on the premises of the Rainbow Fire Company. It is one hundred and fourteen feet high, constructed of two hundred and sixty-seven thousand brick. The alarm-bell weighs over three thousand pounds and is elevated ninety feet. The money for this improvement was raised by contributions and subscriptions through the energy and liberality of its members.

The system of the fire-alarm is regulated by a powerful battery which is situated in the city hall. It is supervised by a superintendent. Wires extend from this battery in three circuits throughout the city, and alarm-boxes for public convenience are located along these wires at or near the intersection of streets, several squares from one another.

Parades, Etc.—The fire companies have had numerous parades, in which they exhibited their respective organizations in full dress. Their appearance was fine and won general admiration. The success of these voluntary associations for the general welfare was thereby satisfactorily demonstrated. Their number was an imposing feature.

An annual ball has been given by each company for many years, especially by the older companies. It is an event which has awakened much interest and afforded much pleasure, and the members have displayed energy and ability in its successful management. General sociability has always stood out prominently upon this occasion.

Previous to 1860 the general deportment of the companies as bodies was not at all friendly towards one another. It was rough and frequently resulted in demonstrations which elicited public concern. In November, 1849, an affair arose which implicated two rival companies. "Stones were thrown, heads were bruised and pistols were discharged. The row was a premeditated affair. Seventeen of the rioters were bound over to court." Shortly before there were "disgraceful pugilistic exhibitions and frequent false alarms." Water-fights were occasionally indulged in after a fire was extinguished. Such battles required much courage and perseverance. The water was driven with great force into the faces of the respective factions, especially the leaders, who held the branch-pipes. The performance naturally offered much amusement to the by-standers; indeed, these were impelled to give their attendance through curious anticipations. Since 1860 the general conduct of the firemen, especially their friendliness towards one another, has improved very much. There have been no fights for many years. The "Union" has exercised a large beneficial influence over them.

The Rainbow Fire Company.—In the latter part of 1772 the project of organizing a fire company was spoken of, but it was not until the year following, 1773, that the representative men of that day came together and regularly organized the Rainbow Company.

A hand-engine was the first ever brought to Reading, and was ordered from Philadelphia. One of the most important events of the history of the early days of Reading was the reception of this engine. It was brought by way of the Perkiomen turnpike, and a large number of people turned out to witness its coming. The engine was housed at the company's headquarters, then situated on the estate of the Keims. It consisted of a small frame building and was situated on the north side of Penn Street, near Ninth.

Among the members who organized the company (it has been asserted that it was a stock company, organized for the protection of members' property first, and others' afterwards) are found such names as Printz, Lott, Homan, Nagle, Dick, Wunder, Phillippi, Eisenbeise, Shearer, Boas, Rightmyer, Graeff, Rupert, Fiehthorn, Miller, Geiger, Graul, Eisenhower, Maltzberger, Rush, Rhein, Brobst, Koch, Schwartz, Boyer, Arnold, Cunius, Bickley, Spatz, Goodman, Rapp, Roland, Scholl, Sauерbier, Cleaver, Henriitz, Hahn, Madeira, Dissler, Keim, Orth, Moyer, Schultz, Lotz, Reinhart, Borkert, Rhoads, Boyer, Aulenbach and others. Who the first officers were it is impossible to tell, as all the minutes and records, if any existed, have been lost, and such members as might have remembered have long since passed away.

The company at that time had no regular uniform. Each member was provided with two buckets, a bag or a basket, to use at fires in subduing the flames and carrying out valuable articles from burning buildings. These things were kept at the private houses, and an inspector, who was regularly appointed, visited the homes of the members every three months to inspect the condition of the buckets, baskets and bags. At the outbreak of the Revolution a great many of the members joined the company of Captain Joseph Hiester, who was afterward made a general in the army, and who organized the company in Reading at his own expense. During the Revolution and for quite a number of years afterward the Rainbow Fire Company was inactive, but always maintained its organization.

Up to the year 1834 very little is known of the company. In that year the old building was removed from its position and taken to the lower part of the city to do duty as an office for the Anderson distillery. Those were the days of the great temperance orator and advocate, Elijah Dechert, and it is said that he made the remark after the removal that it was "Hell Fire-Engine" and should so be called.

A new frame engine-house was built by Carpenter Printz, on the old location; the old members gave way to their grown sons, and Jacob Fricker was elected the first president after the re-organization in the same year, 1834. Shortly after this the company did excellent service at a great fire which took place, burning large stores on the south side of Penn Street, between Fifth and Sixth, the sites of the Bushong Bank, the residences of Colonel Joseph L. Stichter, Henry Bushong and the Lauman property. About this time the first uniforms came into use, and consisted of black oil-cloth capes, with a spread eagle and the word "Rainbow" painted on them. The members never held meetings at the engine-houses, but assembled at the old hotel at Eighth and Penn Streets, and also at a hotel on a site now occupied by the Farmers' Market-House.

In 1840 the company moved their headquarters to North Eighth Street, between Court and Penn, and erected a building on property deeded to the company by Henry Nagle, chief marshal of the day. After the removal the old hand-engine was laid aside and a new one procured. It remained in service until the arrival of the company's first steam fire-engine. The second hand-engine passed into the hands of the city and was sold to Douglass & Conard for old iron.

Here they continued to hold forth up to March 10, 1870, when they removed to the present large and commodious engine-house, whose building commenced in July, 1869, and was finished in the winter of 1870. Their first steam fire-engine arrived in June, 1863. They used it until the fall of 1866, when it was sold to the Rainbow Fire Company, of Rome, Ga. Their present steamer, which is a second-class Amoskeag, was bought for four thousand nine hundred dollars, and arrived in this city on the 10th of November, 1868.

All those who yet remain to tell the early history of the Rainbow were the youngest of the members that belonged to the company at its reorganization, in 1834. In 1867 John Printz, then the oldest member of the company, died at the age of ninety-six years.

In 1873 the company celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of their origin by a magnificent street parade, at which many companies from neighboring towns and cities participated. Among the old members of the Rainbow then living were Abraham Reinhart, Nicholas Lott, William Arnold, Philip Zieber, John Goodhart, Henry Henritze, Francis B. Shalter, John Fox, Daniel Graeff, John Fox, William Shearer, Jacob Sauerbier, Abraham Clemens, Augustus Whitman, John Zieber, John Moyer, Jacob Niehart, John Ziegler, John Goodman, Daniel Burkhart, Frank Mellen, Samuel Levan, Frederick Printz, Augustus Nagle, Peter and Jacob Maltzberger, Christian Eiler, Francis Roland, William M. Graul, Charles Horn, Solomon McCabe, John Drenkle, William Lockwood, Henry Eisenbeise, Jacob Lott, George Rothenberger, Henry Hahn, Jacob Drenkle, Peter Lindekugle, Michael Shultz, Jacob Roland, Augustus F. Boas and others.

The first charter of the company is dated April 7, 1843, when David Eisenhower was president and Henry Nagle secretary. The charter was revised and granted by the County Court in 1869. The company's house is one of the finest in the United States, and the individual efforts of the members have placed it in a prosperous condition.

The number of active members for the year 1886 is three hundred and sixty, of honorary members one hundred and forty-eight, and of contributing members ninety-five.

Junior Fire Company.—This company was organized December 2, 1813. The first building used was situated on Fifth Street, between Court and Washington. The charter members, as far as could be gathered, were: Dr. Philip Marshall (who was the first president of the company), Wm. Rhoads, John Reiff-snyder, Michael Reiffnyder, Geo. Weller, Jacob Davies, Henry B. Sage, Wm. Frill, Geo. Wile, Francis Boyer, William Schoener, Joseph All-gaiar, George Nagel, Jacob Weizel, Daniel Fichthon, Joshua Davies, Peter Yeager, John Dffenbach, John Kidd, Daniel Ermold, John K. Boyer, George Phillippi, Daniel H. Otto, Charles Witman, Henry Reinhart, John E. Ruhl, John C. Baum, John Witman, Thomas Jones, Jacob Stichter, George Reese, John Frill, George Strohecker, Benjamin Gicker, Abraham Seybert, Isaac Meyers, Jacob Gesler.

The following charter members held positions in the company in 1813:

Key Company.—John Allgaier, John Schwartz, John McKnight, Samuel Moore, Henry Schoener, William Rehr, Philip Smith, Jacob Lehman, Joseph Allgaier, William Row, Isaac Young, George Zieber.

Engineers.—John C. Neidley, Abraham Yeager.

Hook-Men.—Andrew Fichthorn, Jr., Christian Haveracker, Joseph Bright, Jacob Fritz.

Rank-Formers.—Henry Boyer, William Marx, William Jones, Jacob Young.

Guard Movables.—John Hanold, Benjamin Stout, John Schembers, Isaac Pierson, Josiah Smith.

The first building occupied was frame, in which the hand-engine was kept. A two-story frame building, on the corner of Washington and Church Streets, was next used. In 1865 the first steam-engine used by this company was purchased of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company by the city authorities, and new quarters were secured on Washington Street, between Reed and Sixth. In 1876 the city erected a fine two-story brick building on the corner of Walnut and Vine Streets, which is at present the headquarters of the Junior Company. It contains various apartments, suited for the wants of the members of the company, all of which are well furnished.

The city authorities, in 1881, sold the Amoskeag engine, purchased in 1865, to Douglass & Couard, the Junior Company having, the year previous, bought a first-class steam fire-engine of Clapp & Jones, of Hudson, New York. Two hose-carriages—one of them made by Spawn & Dennison, of Reading, the other by Fraser, of Philadelphia—and three horses are the property of this company.

For the year 1886 there are three hundred and fifty-six active members and three hundred and forty-two honorary members.

Reading Fire Company was organized on July 4, 1819. The first place of meeting was on Court Street, between Fifth and Sixth; at that time it was a hose company. The original frame building used as the first headquarters was removed in its entirety to Fifth Street, near Franklin, and a hand-engine was added to the needed apparatus of the company. In 1839 the building entire and its equipments were moved to Franklin Street, above Fourth. The old frame building was sold in 1843 and a two-story brick building was obtained on Franklin Street, above Fifth, which continued to be the headquarters until 1857, when another removal was made to Franklin Street, below Sixth. The present headquarters is located on Franklin Street above Sixth, where a very commodious and convenient two-story brick building was erected for the company by the city in 1884. This building is well designed, admirably arranged and all of its apartments well furnished, affording the best modern comforts and conveniences.

The Reading Fire Company has the honorable distinction of having purchased the first steam fire-engine ever owned in this city. It was manufactured by Lee, Larned & Co., who had the engine on exhibition at the Berks County Agricultural Fair. It was bought in 1860 for the sum of three thousand dollars. This steamer was put into effective use for fifteen years in succession, when it was sold, in 1875, to William Wunder for old iron. The beautiful Silsby engine purchased in 1875, for the sum of five thousand five hundred dollars, was manufactured at Seneca Falls, N. Y. The company also owns one Silsby hose-carriage and three fine horses. The charter members of the company, as far as could be ascertained, were John H. Keim, James M. Lewis, Ephraim Booth, Valentine Graff, Ephraim Armstrong, Isaac Peterman, Richard Bickel, John Warren, Marks John Biddle, William Zieber, George Heller,—Hyde,—Hill. The first president of the company was Samuel Bell, and the first secretary Mr. Tilton. For the year 1886 there are seventy-five active members of this company and eighty honorary members.

The company organized the same year by electing George W. Oakley, president; Jeremiah Snyder, secretary; and William H. Keim, treasurer. The headquarters of the company was on Fourth Street, above Washington Street, in a small frame building. This continued to be the headquarters from 1829 to 1861. During that period one of the old-time hand-engines was used by the company. In 1861 a building was secured on Fourth Street, between Washington and Walnut, which was used as the headquarters. Soon after their removal, a small steam-engine was purchased by the city authorities, and was put into effective use on many occasions.

It was superseded, in 1876, by the present beautiful and attractive steam-engine which was purchased from the exhibitors of it in the Centennial buildings, at Philadelphia, immediately after the close of the exhibition. This valuable engine was purchased by the company and is now owned by them. In 1877 the city authorities sold the old steam-engine to Douglass & Couard, of Reading.

In 1883 the city erected for this company a large two-story brick building on the corner of Third and Court Streets, which has been elegantly furnished by the company, and contains various apartments, including a finely-furnished parlor. The equipment is a steam fire-engine manufactured by Klapp & Jones, of Hudson, N. Y., and purchased, in 1876, and a hose-wagon made by the American Fire-Hose Manufacturing Company, of Chelsea, Mass. Three horses are owned by the company. The company was incorporated in 1835.

FRIENDSHIP FIRE COMPANY was organized March 4, 1848, at the public-house of William Rapp, on the corner of Eighth and Penn Streets. The charter members of this company were A. D. Miller, Zachariah Maurer, Reuben Goodman, Franklin D. Nagle, Thomas Barnet, William Rapp, Henry Nagle, Levi Homan, George Greaff, Charles Breeneiser, John Drenkle, Jacob Young, John Miller, Ferdinand Ritter, George S. Bickley, Calvin Shingle, James Orth, Amos Geily, William Kriesher, Daniel D. Maurer, Benjamin Shearer, James Edward, Franklin S. Bickley, William Denhard, John Shauber, Matthias Babb, James and M. Rolland. For many years the building of the company was on Franklin, above Peach.

This company received a charter of incorporation on March 20, 1869. The neat and commodious building used as the headquarters of the Friendship is located on the corner of Franklin and Peach Streets. The supply of fire apparatus consists of one second-class Amoskeag steam-engine, made at Manchester, New Hampshire, one horse hose-carriage, one hand hose carriage. Four horses are also owned by the company. The number of active members for 1886 is four hundred and forty-three, two hundred and ninety honorary members and one hundred and fifty contributing members.

The headquarters of this company is on the southeast corner of Fifth and Laurel Streets. A two-story building is occupied, which is the property of the company. It contains various apartments, including a finely-furnished parlor. The apparatus, which is owned by the city, consists of one fine second-class Silsby engine, purchased at Seneca Falls, N. Y.; one Silsby hose-carriage. Four horses are also used by this company. The number of active members is five hundred and ninety-five. There are seventy-three honorary members.

KEYSTONE HOOK-AND-LADDER COMPANY was organized January 19, 1866, by the following-named charter members:

The Keystone owns one hook-and-ladder truck, made by Buckley & Merritt, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; one patrol-wagon, made by W. W. Wunder, of Reading; and three horses. A two-story brick building, on Penn Street, north of Front Street, erected by the city, is the headquarters of this company.

March 31, 1871, the Spring Garden Hose Company was consolidated with the Washington. In 1873 a hook-and-ladder truck was added to the fire apparatus. The Company was then reorganized and the present name was adopted.

The two-story brick building on Spruce Street above Tenth, is the headquarters of the Washington. Its various apartments are well furnished and attractively arranged, so as to afford all necessary comforts and conveniences to the members of the company. The supply of apparatus consists of one hook-and-ladder truck, made by E. B. Leverick, of New York; one hose-carriage, made by W. W. Wunder, of Reading.

The number of active members of this company is one hundred and thirty, and the number of honorary members one hundred and thirty-five.

The Hampden Company have their headquarters in a two-story brick building with various apartments. The apparatus consists of a third-class steam fire-engine made by Klapp & Jones, one hose-cart made by Spawn & Dennison of Reading. Three horses are used. There are one hundred and sixty-two active members.

The Marion Hose Company was organized in the year 1881, October 1st, by sixty-nine charter members, at Ninth Street, near Spring. The first officers elected were John F. Wagner, president; Ellsworth B. A. Zwoyer, Conrad Foesig. The name then adopted was "The Society of the English Library of Reading." Seventy persons subscribed its constitution. Upon its organization eighty-four volumes of books were obtained from a "Library Company" which had been previously established—the former having evidently taken the place of the latter. On the 16th May following, its name was changed to "The Library Company of Reading," and on December 14, 1819, it was incorporated. In June, 1832, the library contained about one thousand volumes, and it was then kept at the dwelling of Hon. Matthias S. Richards. At that time it was in successful operation; but about 1847 it was otherwise. Members had failed to pay their dues, also to keep up interest in it. Instead of taking out one book at a time, they were found to have taken out more. One member was discovered who had taken out twenty volumes, and kept them some years. This course had

Secretary; Samuel Milmore, treasurer. As yet a small frame building is used as the headquarters. One hose-wagon and other necessary apparatus for extinguishing fire is the property of the company. The number of active members in 1886 is seventy-three.

The Salvage Corps was instituted June, 1879, in connection with the Keystone Hook-and-Ladder Company. The first patrol-wagon of the Corps was purchased the same year of the organization, from Spawn & Dennison, of Reading, and was used until 1884, when a larger wagon was purchased with more complete arrangements, including a hose-reel for carrying three hundred feet of hose. The entire fire apparatus consists of water-proof tarpaulins, fire extinguishers, rubber blankets, respirators, buckets, axes, brooms, door-jammers, etc.

LIBRARIES.

Two libraries were instituted at Reading about the year 1809; the one was German and the other English. It is probable that the former was established first. It was organized by twenty-six prominent citizens of Reading, under the name of "Reading German Library Company." By-laws were adopted and a successful management was carried on for many years. It began with six hundred and eighty-five volumes; a first addition of books was made, numbering one hundred and forty volumes; a second, two hundred and forty-five volumes; a third, one hundred and sixty-two volumes; and a fourth, two hundred and seventy-five volumes—altogether including one thousand five hundred and seven volumes. By these additions it would appear that the library was well patronized and in a flourishing condition. The company disband ed about 1847 and distributed its books among its members. A large number of them came to be owned by John Ritter, an active member, and they are now in the possession of his son, Louis Ritter.

The "Reading Library" was organized at a public meeting held by Joseph Green, Samuel Moore, James Morris, Samuel Morris, Thomas L. Morris, John Miller, Thomas Peacock, Benjamin Davis, Jesse Smith and John Alligair, on March 16, 1808, at the public-house of caused great dissatisfaction to arise; and the members had, therefore, dwindled away till scarcely a dozen remained. A report was presented at a special meeting held on July 31, 1845, by which it appeared that the membership was thirty-three; that the books on the catalogue numbered eleven hundred and eighty-six, though the actual number was greater; and that the library had been under the control of a librarian for thirty years, during which period it was not closed a single time.

For some time before Reading was incorporated into a city the "Reading Library" had not been in a flourishing condition; in fact, it had become rather abandoned. The citizens, in respect to trade, buildings, etc., were making great strides onward since the establishment of the city; but, notwithstanding their earnest efforts in these directions, they could not forget this struggling institution whose object was the general welfare of the people through reading and good literature. During the fall of 1849 efforts were made to revive it into activity. A meeting was held on the 23d of November, at which the annual dues were fixed at two dollars, the price of stock at two dollars a share, and twenty-four members were elected. The general indifference of the public to the welfare of the library was deprecated. At this meeting it was reported that the "Reading Cabinet" (a literary society in vogue for some time) had dissolved and presented its cases of minerals, etc., to the library, and recommended the library to take the Cabinet’s place in the Reading Academy building. The books of the library were accordingly removed, in December, 1849, from the dwelling of Mr. Richards (where they had been for years) to the second story of the Journal building, on Sixth Street near Penn, where they remained for eight years. In 1868 a reorganization of the library company was effected, and the company then, through A. F. Boas, Esq., purchased the "Odd-Fellows’ Hall" for ten thousand dollars. It was actively conducted till 1879, then it was closed for four years. In 1883 (September) it was reopened and since that time it has been open to members on alternate days (excepting Sunday), every afternoon and evening. The present number of volumes is about sixty-two hundred. It is also supplied with the weekly papers and monthly periodicals. The board of directors comprises Jacob Knabb, president; William H. Strickland, secretary, treasurer and librarian. The latter has officiated as treasurer since 1862.

The "Franklin Library" and "Mechanics’ Institute" were organized at Reading about 1840. In 1848 they were successfully conducted, and then the library contained nearly one thousand volumes.

The "Harmonie Männerchor" possesses a fine library in their hall, which numbers twenty-five hundred volumes.

Washington Library Company had its origin in the fall of 1854 as a social society, but after a number of years it was permanently organized with the above name. On the 22d of October, 1870, it was incorporated. The following persons were members at the time of its incorporation: F. P. Heller, William P. Bard, H. A. Yundt, P. K. Heller, W. G. Von Neida, C. C. Maltzberger, John D. Mishler, Lemon Buck, Lyman Shirey, James H. Gentzler, A. A. Heizmann, Charles Peacock and Charles A. Ringel. In 1876 a hall was erected by the company and the second and third stories fitted up for its use, the lower story forming business rooms. There are parlors for study and recreation, the former containing the nucleus of a library, which is enlarged as the funds of the company permit. In all there are one hundred members, of whom forty are active. The property of the company is valued at ten thousand dollars.

Musical associations have had an early beginning in Reading. Music was taught here in 1814 and for some years afterward by J. Jungmann, who conducted a musical academy in the borough. This class of associations comprises two kinds, instrumental and vocal. The instrumental associations were instituted first. A band was in existence in 1814. In 1832 the “Reading Military Band” was instituted. Different bands were organized afterwards, among them the “Mechanics’ Brass Band,” which was conspicuous in and after 1845. How long these several bands continued is not known. The “Ringgold Band” was instituted in 1852. It was afterward engaged in the Civil War for a time. It has continued till now, winning year after year higher popular favor, both here and throughout the country, by its proficiency in discoursing superior classic music. Latterly, it has conducted annual concerts with great success. It has accompanied the “Knights Templar” upon long pilgrimages. Wherever it is, wherever it goes, it makes a marked impression. In parades it is always conspicuous. The concordance of its marching music thrills the multitudes through which it passes. Joseph Winter has been the leader for some years, through whose superior direction the band has attained its eminent position as a musical organization.

Another band worthy of mention is the “Liberty Band.” It was instituted in 1881. It is employed frequently to accompany excursions; also to discourse music for balls, festivals, etc. It has come to possess considerable proficiency under the leadership of Prof. O. H. Unger.

The vocal associations began in 1832; possibly a short time before. The first society was entitled “Beethoven Society of Reading.” The first public concert was given by this society on April 7, 1832, in the State-House. J. Roland was the leader. An interesting programme of vocal and instrumental music was successfully rendered to a large audience. Its subsequent history is not known.

In 1855 a society entitled the “Reading Musical Society” was organized. Its meetings were held in High-School Hall. Its life was short.

The “Mozart Musical Union” was organized by James M. Lyons in the fall of 1862. It was composed of about seventy members, ladies and gentlemen, from Reading. It practiced vocal music for nearly ten years under the leadership of Mr. Lyons, and gave occasional public concerts here and elsewhere.

Harmonie Männerchor.—In 1847 the Reading Männerchor was organized at Reading, having been composed mostly of the prominent Germans then in the city. It continued its organization till 1874, when it became united with the Harmonie Männerchor (an institution organized at Reading, in 1870), since which time the two organizations have been one, under the name last mentioned. The society is under the directorship of Professor J. William Jost. It numbers now thirty-eight active members, four hundred and thirty passive, and fourteen honorary. It has been located in its present quarters in the hall, on North Sixth Street, near Walnut, named after it, since 1878, where pleasant rooms have been furnished for meetings, etc. It has a library of classical and other works, both English and German, numbering twenty-five hundred volumes, and moneyed assets amounting to four thousand dollars, indicating its substantial and flourishing condition.

Numerous other societies were organized, but they had a short existence.

The Reading Choral Society is worthy of mention. It was organized in April, 1875, with Professor E. A. Berg as director. It has had a successful existence since, with the same director. The present membership numbers about one hundred and forty. Mr. Jesse Orr is president of the society.

Historical.

Historical Society of Berks County was organized at Reading on August 5, 1869, for the purpose of collecting and perpetuating the historical reminiscences of Berks County. The first officers were: President, William M. Hester; Vice-Presidents, Jesse G. Hawley, Samuel L. Young, Hester Clymer and Oliver C. James; Corresponding Secretary, Henry M. Keim; Recording Secretary and Treasurer, Charles W. Keim; and Librarian, Daniel S. Zacharias. It was incorporated December 13, 1869, the petition for that purpose having been subscribed by twenty-four members of the society. Some meetings were held, which were preparing the way for historical investigations; but within a year the commendable spirit in this behalf passed away, leaving the society with solely a legal existence, but without accomplishing its purpose. One paper read before it is worthy of special mention,—the article by Hon. William M. Hiester, on the “Ringgold Light Artillery,” showing that this company was the first to offer its services to the national government in answer to the call of President Lincoln for troops and to move to the Capitol in defense of the country in the Civil War.\(^1\)

A society of this nature existed at Reading about thirty years before the society mentioned. It was an organized body, whose purpose was the collection of data pertaining to the history of the county and the county-seat. Through the decease of certain prominent members it fell into neglect. It left no archives of any kind. No effort, not even a suggestion, was made till 1869 to revive a society of this important and useful nature here. This total indifference on the part of certain prominent, well-informed citizens to such an interesting field of knowledge is altogether inexcusable. Many valuable facts, manuscript papers, statistics, etc., which could—and doubtless would—have been preserved by a society of this nature, have been lost by this neglect. Historical research has therefore come to be a most laborious and discourage undertaking.

LITERARY.

PHILOMATHEAN LITERARY, MUSICAL AND SOCIAL UNION was organized January 13, 1879, with twenty members. It originated as a branch of the old Keystone Literary Society. Its title indicates its purposes. The Union is one of the few societies of this nature which has continued beyond a few years. It is now in a flourishing condition. There are thirty active and twenty associate members. The semi-monthly meetings are attended with great interest. The yearly entertainments are occasions of public concern. The Union has the nucleus of a fine library and other valuable property.

The “Reading Lyceum” flourished for some years. It was organized in 1869, and incorporated in 1873, composed mostly of young attorneys. For several successive years it gave a course of lectures.

SCIENTIFIC.

A SOCIETY OF NATURAL SCIENCES was organized in 1869, and then incorporated; and in 1870 it opened rooms to the public for the exhibition of numerous natural curiosities of various kinds. For a time it was located on the first floor of the “Library Hall,” and there gave several successful exhibitions. But it was not sufficiently patronized, and in 1884 it was disbanded, when the collection was distributed amongst its members.

CHARITABLE ASSOCIATIONS.

Charity has been active and prominent in the various public affairs of Reading for over sixty years. The citizens, as a whole, have not displayed any noteworthy enterprise whose object was the promotion of the common welfare; but throughout their entire history they have exhibited active benevolence. It assumed definite proportions about the time when the common-school system of education was firmly introduced; and as time advanced it ran into different useful channels. The several associations of this nature which have been established are the following: Benevolent, Relief, Widows’ Home and Hospitals.

The first organization was a “Soup Society.” It was formed September 23, 1823. A meeting of ladies of Reading was then held in the “State-House” “for the purpose of devising means for the relief of sick and indigent persons within the borough;” and it was decided “that a supply of wholesome and nutritious soup should be prepared for distribution twice a week during the continuance of the sickly season.” The families in distress called on the following managers for assistance: Mrs. Frederick Smith, Mrs. Charles Evans, Mrs.
William Darling, Mrs. E. Eckert and Mrs. Lydia M. Baird, treasurer.

Much valuable relief was afforded by this organization. One hundred and twenty gallons of soup and great quantities of bread were distributed every week.

This “sickly season” was superinduced by the construction of the Schuylkill Canal. In Union township whole families were found bed-fast, helpless and poor, and assistance, and even nurses, were sent from Reading to the stricken people. This society terminated its useful career after the prevailing epidemic had passed away.

A meeting was held in the State-House on January 27, 1835, for the purpose of establishing a “Benevolent Society.” A constitution was adopted, and officers and a board of managers were elected. Two days afterward the board organized, divided the borough into seven wards and instituted the work of practical benevolence. The first annual meeting of the society was held on January 1, 1836.

Annual meetings have been held since. It has now been actively engaged for fifty years in carrying out the commendable object for which it was instituted. In this time it accomplished much good and relieved many suffering families from cold and hunger. The managers met mostly, if not altogether, at various private dwellings till 1874. The “Relief Society” then granted them the privilege of meeting in their fine building free of rent, where they have continued to meet till now. Their active work of benevolence is carried on almost entirely during the winter months. The many good women who have been engaged in this noble work cannot be too highly commended. The annual meetings of the society have been held principally in the prominent churches.

The society was incorporated November 21, 1849, under the name of “Benevolent Society of the City of Reading.”

Officers of the Society.—Presidents: M. S. Richards, 1835-48; Samuel Bell, 1848-60; G. A. Nicolls, 1860-71; W. J. Woodward, 1871-79; J. Hagenman, 1879-83; D. McM. Gregg, 1883-86.

Secretaries: Diller Luther, 1835-37; R. U. Morgan, 1837-44; James L. Schock, 1844-49; E. J. Richards, 1849-70; Jacob Fry, 1870-83; Wallace Radcliffe, 1883-85; William H. Myers, 1886.

Treasurers: John M. Keim, 1835-44; Joseph L. Stichter, 1844-70; James Millholland, 1870-73; William G. McGowan, 1873-83; Thomas D. Stichter, 1883-86.

Reading Dispensary.—An association composed of certain physicians and citizens was organized December 14, 1867, upon the suggestion of the “Reading Medical Association,” and a constitution was adopted January 8, 1868. The object of the association was to provide for the indigent sick and wounded people of Reading. A dispensary was opened on January 27, 1868, and during the first year of its existence over four hundred cases of sickness and accidents were attended to by the association. It was incorporated March 10, 1869. The hospital was located at 618 Court Street and was conducted successfully for eight years, when it was abandoned for want of pecuniary support. In the mean time a society of ladies was formed, whose object was to obtain a building or hospital for the use of the dispensary. They met at the dispensary November 28, 1873, to take the necessary steps in this behalf. They were Mrs. William A. Good, Mrs. Ebur, Mrs. Edward Scull, Mrs. J. T. Craig, Misses Rachel D. Griscom, Kate Leaman and Louisa Filbert. Mrs. Craig was elected president and Miss Griscom secretary and treasurer. They held a “Bazaar,” in which proceeding they were assisted by the several churches in Reading, and on February 4, 1874, they reported on hand $2125; and in November following they held a “Fair,” from which they realized $941.48. Shortly afterward a small tract of land was purchased for the purpose of erecting thereon a hospital, and from that time onward earnest steps were taken to finish the undertaking. And in this the parties particularly interested were entirely successful. The name of the first association was changed to “The Reading Hospital” on March 12, 1883.

The “Reading Hospital” and “St. Joseph’s Hospital” are mentioned elsewhere.1

Reading Relief Society is a charitable organization which became an incorporated body

1 See Part V. Internal Improvements, p. 744.

The object was "to provide means for the gratuitous distribution of soup and such means of life as may be deemed proper for the poor and needy of the city of Reading." In its workings the society has sustained an auxiliary relation to the Reading Benevolent Society, and has, like that body, been a valuable means in alleviating the sufferings of many poor and hungry people of Reading. In 1874 its usefulness was emphasized by the erection of a fine two-story brick building on the corner of Franklin and Plum Streets, costing five thousand dollars, where its charity has since been dispensed with great success.1 The following persons have been the officers for many years, and they are still officiating: George D. Stitzel, president; Reuben Hoffa, secretary; James Jameson, treasurer; A. B. Yeager, superintendent.

WIDOWS' HOME.—The association known as the "Home for Widows and Single Women of Reading" was organized in 1874, and incorporated in 1875, for the purpose of affording humane and charitable relief, assistance and support to widows and single women of Reading. The incorporating members were Eliza W. Howe, Sarah Briner, Ann E. Craig, Rachel D. Griscom, Mary Eckert, Sarah B. Good, Harriet B. Connard, Maria W. Brooke, Maria B. Ritter, Asenath J. Shaaber, Susan E. Benson, Margaretta C. Ermentrout, Catharine E. H. Jones, Mary H. Pearson, Emily H. Smith, Emily K. Baer, Sarah C. McIlvain and Lucretia M. Hickman.

In the first annual report the following remarks were introduced, showing the efforts expended in behalf of forming this society:

"For many years the ladies of Reading have desired to establish a home similar to the one in Philadelphia, for the benefit of the unfortunate aged who have lived useful and meritorious lives. Some ladies made considerable exertions towards it, and, in September, 1873, another effort was inaugurated by others. Public meetings were held, at which Mr. Lewis Briner, His Honor, Mayor Evans, Rev. Mr. Radcliffe and other friends of humanity made efforts towards establishing combined homes for men, women and children. A committee was appointed at the last meeting to make arrangements, which failed again and again to find a quorum, and then disbanded. A few ladies then ascertained that a charter could be given by the Court of Berks County for a home for women only, while the combined homes required an act of the Legislature. They therefore resolved to undertake what could be done in Reading. Applying to Mr. Morton L. Montgomery (lawyer) from time to time for advice, he guided the actions of the ladies in obtaining petitioners, a charter, a constitution and by-laws, and the society was formed and in action, and a pamphlet published, by the 14th of January, 1875."

The membership of this association numbers one hundred and eighty-eight, all citizens of Reading, to which place membership is restricted.

Since the regular organization Mrs. M. A. De Wolfe Howe has officiated as first directress, Miss Susan E. Benson as treasurer and Miss Rachel D. Griscom as secretary.

The management of this society has been conducted very successfully. A "Home" was rented for a time; then a fine property was purchased, in which a "home" was established. This is situated on Eighth Street, near Chestnut. In 1885 a large lot of ground was obtained in East Reading, and there the members caused a superior and commodious stone structure to be erected, which is now being finished. In this behalf they received liberal encouragement from a number of prominent citizens.

RELIGIOUS.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION1 was organized in the chapel of the Presbyterian Church, November 22, 1869. The first officers were J. H. Sternbergh, president; F. A. Shearer, vice-president; W. O. Brewster, secretary; and H. J. Rhoads, treasurer.

The first board of managers was not elected until December 19, 1870. It was composed of J. E. Price, G. W. Armstrong, Rev. S. Douer, D. H. Beideman, J. Dorwort and George W. Phelps.

1 An organization of same name existed for a time at Reading about ten years previously.
On the 1st of January, 1870, the association occupied its first rooms in Earl's building, northwest corner Fifth and Penn, and shortly afterward removed to the Crous building, near the southeast corner of Fifth and Penn, where it remained about six years. Since 1879 it has been at its present quarters, corner of Eighth and Penn Streets.

In February, 1879, the first general secretary was employed to look after the work and interests of the association. The following secretaries have officiated:

The association was incorporated in March, 1882, and afterwards authorized to own real estate. A movement to erect a building was made in the fall of 1885, during the Moody revival services at Reading, the funds collected and pledged being placed in charge of building trustees, comprising the following prominent citizens: Isaac McHose, Jesse Orr, William McElwain, Matt. Harbster, W. H. Shick, J. F. Smith, J. Hendel, S. E. Ancona. Nearly ten thousand dollars have already been secured for that purpose.

The association has spacious and well-furnished rooms for worship, recreation and literary culture. The reading-room is supplied with sixty-five daily, weekly and monthly newspapers and periodicals, which are perused daily by nearly a hundred visitors. The entire membership is four hundred and eighty-three, and the yearly expenses of the association are about two thousand and five hundred dollars.

The Board of Trade of Reading was organized April 21, 1881, to enhance the material interests of the city. Its specific purposes are to promote the trade, commerce, manufactures and mechanic arts; to establish and maintain uniformity in commercial usages and to inculcate principles of justice and equity in business relations; to disseminate valuable commercial and statistical information; to facilitate the adjustment of controversies in trade; and to foster, protect and advance the best interests of the business community. These aims have enlisted the sympathy and secured the cooperation of most of the energetic business men of the city, who have enrolled themselves as members of the association.

Committees have been appointed in accordance with the above purposes, and their efforts have produced gratifying results. In 1882 an exhaustive report of the board was prepared by Mr. De B. Randolph Keim, which served a valuable purpose in disseminating information regarding the city as a great business centre.

The following was the first official organization of the association:

Standing Committees.

Arbitration.—Charles Breneiser, Abner K. Stauffer, Thomas P. Merritt, Nicholas Jones, J. B. Brooke, M.D.

Transpotation.—Frederick Lauer, A. Wilhelm, William R. McIlvain, De B. Randolph Keim, Jacob Knabb.

E. F. Keever has continued to serve efficiently as secretary of the board since its organization.

The present officers are Isaac McHose, president; H. C. England and Peter D. Wanner, vice-presidents; John R. Kaucher, treasurer; Elijah F. Keever, secretary.

Building, Loan and Savings Associations.—These associations of Reading have been important factors in promoting the growth of the city, and have assisted many worthy citizens to the ownership of homes or given them financial aid in transacting their business. The moneys handled by them count into the millions of dollars. Being thus matters of public interest, a list of the principal institutions is here presented.\footnote{1}

The building association as an organization did not begin to erect buildings till about 1876. Previously it simply received money and made the same profitable by disposing of them to parties on mortgage securities. When the amounts on hand became so large as to be unproductive, measures were instituted to make them productive, and the directors then turned their attention to building operations. During the last ten years it is estimated that the several building associations of Reading erected altogether about eight hundred buildings, almost entirely dwellings for the working people. Many men have been active in this matter for a number of years, and they have contributed greatly to the permanent improvement of Reading. Louis Kremp, Esq., has been connected with this branch of business in our community for over twenty years, and he has served most faithfully as secretary and treasurer during this long period of time.

LOUIS KREMP was born October 26, 1820, in Saar-Union, Bas-Rhin, Alsace, France. His grandfather, John Kremp, had held the office of mayor and was a man of more than ordinary influence in the community in which he lived. His father, Xavier Kremp, was for many years city clerk.

Louis Kremp obtained his early education in the parish school, and finished his studies in the seminary of Metz. After his return to Saar-Union he joined his father as a partner in business. In September, 1847, he was married to Miss Caroline Prestat, a daughter of Nicolas Joseph Prestat, a gentleman of culture and refinement, holding a responsible office under the government. In the spring of 1849 he, with his wife, came to America, arriving in New York on the 4th of July. Mr. C. Wagner, a friend and school companion of Mr. Kremp, Sr., was then teaching Latin in Philadelphia. He advised Louis Kremp to remove to Reading, where he opened a notion-store. In April, 1862, he was elected secretary of St. Peter's Roman Catholic Beneficial Society, a very large organization. In 1863 he was elected secretary of the Reading German Building and Savings Association, and since then has helped to organize one or more associations every year, of which he was invariably chosen secretary. Sixteen of these associations have successfully run their course, paying the stockholders ten, twelve and even thirteen per cent. He is now secretary of twenty-one associations, one or two of which will expire every year. He is also a real estate and fire insurance agent.

In 1873 Louis Kremp was the Democratic candidate for alderman of the Eighth Ward of Reading, and was elected by a large majority. At the expiration of his term he declined a second nomination, and at that date received a commission as notary public.

Mr. Kremp has two sons and three daughters, named, respectively, Joseph P., Felix P., Amelia T., Lizzie P. and Caroline E. Kremp.

Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Berks County.—During the year 1844 the citizens of the southeast section of Berks Co. felt the necessity of a society whose object was their protection against loss by fire, and for this purpose held a meeting at the “Yellow House,” in Amity township, on November 2, 1844, at which time and place the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Berks County was organized, and, on December 7th following, the members elected a board of managers as follows: Henry Schaeffer, Isaac Bertolet, David Kline, Thomas Snyder, John Deturck, Daniel Snyder, Gideon Hoch, Joshua Hoch, Jacob Weiser, John Herbein, William Knabb, Jacob H. Reiff, Thomas P. Lee.

The company was incorporated January 31, 1845, for a term of twenty years. The charter was renewed in 1863 and made perpetual. The first policies of this company were issued on August 9, 1845; they numbered fifty-nine, with an aggregate insurance of two hundred thousand dollars.

In 1865 new policies were issued to all the members under the new charter, which then numbered eleven hundred and forty-one, with an aggregate insurance amounting to two million five hundred thousand dollars. In December, 1885, the aggregate insurance was seven million eight hundred thousand dollars.

The officers from the time of organization of the company, with their terms of service, are as follows: Presidents—Daniel Snyder (from 1845 to 1849), William Knabb (from 1849 to 1869), John Francis (from 1869 to 1872), William Yocom (from 1872 to 1885); Treasurers— Jacob H. Reiff (from 1845 to 1862), Wellington B. Griesemer (from 1862 to 1871), Jacob Herbein (from 1871 to 1885); Secretaries—James Bertollet (from 1845 to 1849), James Lee (from 1849 to 1864), George K. Lorah (from 1864 to 1885).

Reading Fire Insurance and Trust Company of Berks County, is the outgrowth of the Neversink Life and Fire Insurance Company of Berks County, which was organized on July 8, 1867, by the election of J. Pringle Jones, president; James McKnight, vice-president; and S. E. Ancona, secretary and treasurer. The first directors were J. T. Valentine, George Rieser, Jacob Shaffner, J. T. Jackson, Henry L. Van Reed, Jonas Shalter and Daniel E. Stout. In 1868 an application was made to the Court of Common Pleas of Berks County to change the name of the corporation to "The Reading Fire Insurance and Trust Company of Berks County." This application was granted April 13, 1868. The building owned and occupied by the company is situated on the southeast corner of Fifth and Court Streets, Reading, and was erected in 1870, at a cost of thirty thousand dollars, including the lot. The business offices are neat, attractive and well adapted to the purposes for which they are used. Up to January, 1870, a large home business was done, but since that time it has been extended into other counties in Pennsylvania and various States of the Union. At the close of the year 1885 the paid-up capital of the company was two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, with four hundred thousand dollars assets. The present officers are William A. Arnold, president; Adam Bard, vice-president; S. E. Ancona, secretary and treasurer.

Sinking Spring Mutual Fire Insurance Company.—This company was organized under an act of the Legislature, approved February 10, 1843, and had its principal office at Sinking Spring until 1864, when it was removed to Reading, where it has since been maintained. The original corporators were Solomon Kirby, William Peacock, Aaron Mull, John Van Reed, James C. Livingood, Andrew Kurr, Isaac H. Mohr, George Whitner, John Kemp, Peter Kershner, John W. Gloninger, C. O. Meiley, Edward Kern. The company is purely mutual, issues perpetual policies on ordinary risks and its management is safe and conservative. Since its organization three hundred and thirty-nine thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars insurance has been paid. The insurance carried at present aggregates nearly fourteen million dollars. The principal officers are James Y. Shearer, president; Wellington Van Reed, secretary; Philip R. Ball, treasurer.

American Protective and Detective Society of Reading, was organized 1885. It was chartered on the 9th of March, of the same year, with a paid-up capital of twenty thousand dollars, with the privilege to extend the same to one hundred thousand dollars. It issued its first policy March 25, 1885, since which time the business has rapidly increased. The number of members is two hundred and thirty, the amount of insurance taken is two hundred and sixty-five thousand dollars.

Secret associations.

Free and Accepted Masons.—The first lodge of Masons in the county was instituted at Reading March 31, 1794, with five members. Its meetings have since been regularly held as Reading Lodge, No. 66. It has at present more than three hundred and twenty-five members. Hundreds more have been initiated by it into the doctrines of Masonry. Chandler Lodge is the strongest, numerically, in the city, having about four hundred members.

The appended list shows the Masonic organizations of Reading:

INDEPENDENT ORDER OF ODD-FELLOWS.

The Independent Order of Odd-Fellows was established in the United States April 26, 1819, and the first prominent lodge in Reading was instituted in 1839. From that time the growth of the order has been steady, both in the city and the county. In 1849 there were 1613 members; increased to 1707 in 1855.

The condition of the order in the county on the 1st of October, 1884, is shown in the following lists:

*Removed from Pleasantville to Boyertown, thence to Reading.
†Formerly Bethlehem Lodge; removed to Reading and reorganized January 30, 1897.

The nine lodges in the city had seventeen hundred and twenty-five members, and the outside lodges six hundred and forty-eight members.

The above lodges have assets amounting to seventy thousand seven hundred dollars and pay out about fifteen thousand dollars annually for the care of the sick and the burial of the dead. The assets of the lodges in the city alone are nearly forty-one thousand dollars, and its lodges are carried on at an expense of a little more than fifteen thousand dollars per year.

The following are the encampments in the city and the county:

The Odd-Fellows’ Mutual Life Insurance Association, of Berks County, was organized December 1, 1869, and has been fairly prosperous. Its office is in Reading.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES.—The Reading Temperance Society was organized on July 2, 1829, and two years later it had one hundred members. Prior to 1831 there were ten distilleries in and near the city which were about that time discontinued, so that but one remained in 1832. The following year there was organized the “Berks County Temperance Society,” auxiliary to the State Society, for discouraging the use of ardent spirits. Its purposes were shown in its constitution:

“Article 10. The members of this society, believing that the use of distilled liquor is, for persons in health, not only unnecessary, but injurious, and that the practice is the cause of forming intemperate appetites and habits, and while it is continued the evil of intemperance can never be prevented, do, therefore, agree, that they will not, except as medicine, in case of bodily infirmity, use distilled spirits ourselves, or procure them for the use of our families, or provide them for the entertainment of our friends or for persons in our employment; and that, in all suitable ways, we will discountenance the use of them in the community.”
The officers for 1833 were,—President, Garrick Mallery; Vice-Presidents, Isaac Heister and John P. Rutter; Secretary, Henry Rhoads; Treasurer, Lloyd Wharton; Executive Committee, Isaac Heister, Wm. Darling, John P. Rutter, James L. Dunn, Evan Evans, Elijah Dechert, Joseph Kendall.

In 1845 the Sons of Temperance established a flourishing division in Reading, and the following year there were six hundred members in the county, most of them in the city. On the 18th of January, 1847, John B. Gough lectured on temperance in the Reformed Church, the tickets of admission being sold at twelve and a half cents. "His lecture excited the most astonishing sensation," according to the report of a local paper. In October, 1853, Neal Dow lectured on the Maine Liquor Law in St. Peter's Methodist Church, his address creating a favorable impression.

The first lodge of Good Templars in Reading was organized January 1, 1855, and was called Keystone, No. 254. About a year later Esmeralda Lodge was instituted, but both ceased to exist in a few years. Next came Reading and Norma Lodges of Good Templars, which were very flourishing for a number of years; and in later years other lodges were established which had a short existence.

AMERICAN PROTESTANT ASSOCIATION.—This order has the following organizations: Reading Lodge, No. 74, instituted July 31, 1857; Germania Lodge, No. 1, instituted June 16, 1870; Esther Lodge, No. 2, instituted March 1, 1871; Aaron Lodge, No. 95, instituted Aug. 23, 1871; Mount Sinai Encampment, No. 4, instituted Jan. 1, 1866; Friendship Lodge (Junior Order), No. 7, instituted September 21, 1868.

BANKS AND BANKING.

The first public financial institution of this country was the "Bank of North America." It was incorporated by the United States Congress on December 31, 1781. The idea of such an institution was suggested by Robert Morris, and he also submitted a plan for its management. It arose from a conviction that the public finances would be supported thereby, and that the exigencies of the government rendered its establishment indispensable. Its operations began on January 7, 1782. Robert Morris then wrote to the president of the Executive Council of Pennsylvania "that it would have a tendency to increase both the internal and external commerce of North America, and would undoubtedly be infinitely useful to all the traders of every State in the Union, if properly conducted."

This project necessarily stimulated the idea of a State bank. After the lapse of a decade, legislation was induced in this direction, and on the 30th of March, 1793, the "Bank of Pennsylvania" was incorporated. It was empowered to establish "Branch Banks."

READING BRANCH BANK.—The directors were authorized to establish a branch at Reading. Subscriptions of the stock were directed to be made on the 3d of June, 1793, at Philadelphia, Lancaster and Reading. The amount to be subscribed at Reading was two hundred shares, and the subscription was to be conducted by James Diemer, Joseph Hister, James May, Jacob Bower and Thomas Dundas. The efforts of these men were not successful at that time. But the opportunity of establishing such an invaluable agent for public progress was not laid out of sight, though fifteen years elapsed before it came to be permanently instituted. On the 26th of July, 1808, it was opened to the public, and it was commonly known as the "Reading Bank of Discount and Deposit."

The directors were Daniel Udree, George Ege, John Addams, Peter Frailey, George De B. Keim, John Smith, Marks J. Biddle, Gabriel Hister, Jr., Charles Evans, Joseph Hister, William Bell and William Moore.

It will be observed that only one of the actively interested persons at the beginning survived, and this was Joseph Hister. The business of this bank was carried on in the building now occupied by the "Union Bank" from the beginning of its career till its suspension in 1857. This building has been used for the purposes of a bank for nearly eighty years.

FARMERS' BANK.—This was the second bank instituted at Reading. It was authorized by an act of Assembly passed on the 21st of March, 1813, creating a general system of banking for the entire State, divided the State into twenty-seven districts and provided a bank for each district. The counties of Berks and Schuylkill were made one district and given a bank, to be called the "Farmers' Bank of Reading;" and the directors were authorized to establish an office at Orwigsburg, in Schuylkill County, for the purposes of discount and deposit only. The number of shares—at fifty dollars each—which were to be subscribed for was ten thousand five hundred in Berks County and fifteen hundred in Schuylkill County. Governor Simon Snyder was opposed to legislation on this subject, and especially to the system proposed. He therefore returned the bill with his objections, which, it can be added, were expressed with great force and sense, if not with effect. But a year afterward (21st of March, 1814) it was passed over his veto by two-thirds of both Houses.

The introductory steps towards establishing this institution were taken on the 11th of November, 1813, at a public meeting which was held in the public building; the officers were John Spayd, chairman, and Frederick Smith, secretary.

The following resolutions, among others, were adopted:

"That a well regulated Bank, with a competent capital, under the direction of Persons in whom the Citizens of the County of Berks and of the State at large would place confidence, established in the Borough of Reading and authorized by Law, would greatly promote internal improvements and the Agricultural, Commercial and Manufacturing Interest of the County.

"That it is highly imprudent, unsafe and would speedily subvert every principle of good government for Banking Associations in Pennsylvania to commence operations contrary to the Laws of this Commonwealth, and to oppose the constituted authorities of our Country in violating the Act of the 19th of March, 1810, on the subject of Banks, by establishing or organizing Banking Companies without previously obtaining Charters.

"That S. D. Franks, John Spayd, John M. Hyneman, Frederick Smith, Esqs., and Matthias Ludwig be a Committee for the purpose of drafting the Memorial, and that they be authorized to confer with a similar Committee should such Committee be appointed in Schuylkill County, and to embrace Schuylkill and Berks in the Petition for a Charter should the Citizens of Schuylkill County deem it proper. Capital, $500,000, with privilege of extending it to $1,000,000."

The first directors were John Spayd, William Witman, Jr., John M. Hyneman, Jacob K. Boyer, Lewis Reese, Daniel Kerper, Samuel Bell, Benneville Keim, Conrad Stauch, John Good, Ludwig Worman, John Wiley, Daniel Graeff. These individuals met at the courthouse on the 14th of June, 1814, for the purpose of effecting an organization, and on the 22d of June, following, they elected William Witman president and John S. Hiester cashier. Having shortly before purchased the building now occupied by the bank, at 445 Penn Street, they began business on the day named.

A "Branch Bank" was not established at Orwigsburg.

As a matter of general interest, and being the earliest banking statistics which could be obtained, the following statement is presented:

This will afford an idea of the extent of the business of the borough then. The Reading Bank had transactions as great, it not greater, in amount. Till September, 1819, the business had increased to five hundred and eighteen thousand seven hundred and forty-one dollars, having been almost trebled. In November, 1840, it was six hundred and nine thousand seven hundred and seventy-one dollars.

This institution has continued to prosper from the time of its organization to the present. The names of the presidents and cashiers, together with their terms of service, are as follows:

Presidents. William Witman, 1814-15; Lewis

2 The State-House was commonly used in this work.
He has been annually re-elected and has served continuously in that position until this date (1886), a period of forty-three years. The integrity, capacity and financial ability of the cashier preserved the bank from embarrassment during the panic of 1857, the financial troubles incident to the the Civil War and of the financial crisis of the year 1873. During all these periods of financial depression the Farmers' Bank of Reading has always maintained the highest reputation for great financial strength and for the soundest business management. The success and reputation of the bank are mainly due to the ability and high character of its cashier.

Dr. Muhlenberg was for ten years a member of Councils of the borough of Reading, and a member of the first Councils after the city corporation in 1850.

Prior to the Civil War he took great interest and an active part in the volunteer military organizations of his own county. He entered a noted company, called the Washington Grays, as a private, and afterwards became lieutenant. During the Catholic riots of 1844, in Philadelphia, as lieutenant of the Washington Grays he formed part of the force sent to that city to assist in quelling the riot. During the Civil War he twice enlisted in the Pennsylvania State Volunteers—once before the battle at Antietam, and again after the battle of Gettysburg.

Dr. Muhlenberg was one of the original trustees of the Charles Evans Cemetery Company, and for many years was the president of that corporation. He was a director and president of the Reading Water Company.

Dr. Muhlenberg has been twice married,—first, to Amelia Hanold, and second, to Catherine S. Hunter, both of Reading, Pa. By the last marriage he has had seven children. He became a member of the Lutheran Church in 1830 and was a member of the vestry of Trinity Church for many years.

Dr. Muhlenberg has always been a public-spirited and enterprising citizen, and his generosity is well-known. He has favored and assisted the growth and development of his native city by every proper means within his power. He died May 5, 1886.
ISAAC ECKERT, ironmaster and bank president, was born in the town of Womelsdorf, Berks County, in January, 1800. He was a son of Peter Eckert, a farmer and merchant of that neighborhood, and a grandson of Valentine Eckert, who represented Berks County as one of the delegates to the first Constitutional Convention of Pennsylvania, in 1776, and who served in the Revolutionary War as captain of a troop of cavalry. The maiden-name of his mother was Brown, a member of a well-known family near Erie, Pa. He was educated in the schools of his native place and in the grammar-school of the University of Pennsylvania.

Before attaining his majority, he and his elder brother, William, succeeded their father in the mercantile business at Womelsdorf, and, about 1828, they removed their business to Reading, where they continued the same business at the northwest corner of Fourth and Penn Streets until 1836, when he retired and became associated with his younger brother, Dr. George N. Eckert, in the manufacture of iron. In 1842-44 they erected at Reading the "Henry Clay Furnace," which was one of the largest anthracite furnaces in the State at that time; and, in 1855, a similar furnace was erected upon an adjoining site. Upon the death of Dr. Eckert, he became the sole owner of these iron-works, and continued to operate the same until 1873, when he retired, passing them over to his sons, Henry S. and George B. Eckert, by whom the furnaces have been since successfully carried on under the firm-name of Eckert & Brother.

In 1838 he was elected president of the Farmers' Bank of Reading, and he held this office without intermission until his death, in 1873, covering a period of thirty-five years. His eldest son, Henry S. Eckert, succeeded him in this position. He also served as president of the Country Bank Association for eight years,—this association having been composed of the national banks east of the Allegheny Mountains. In 1852 he was chosen president of the Leesport Iron Company, and he continued to act as the executive officer till the time of his decease, a period of twenty-one years. He was one of the largest stockholders of this extensive industry. Through his enterprises he became a large land-owner in Berks and Schuylkill Counties.

Mr. Eckert was one of the founders of the Berks County Agricultural and Horticultural Society and served for many years as president, having been well fitted for this position. He took great interest in the introduction of the best breeds of horned cattle and other live stock and also of standard fruits; and during his administration superior specimens of such stock, fruits, etc., constituted the chief attraction of the annual fairs of the society.

In 1867 and also in 1873 he made extensive tours through the principal countries of Europe and acquired much practical information upon many subjects. In the latter year he served as one of the commissioners to the Vienna Exhibition, having been appointed by President Grant, and he also served as one of the two commissioners from the Berks District for the organization of the Board of Finance, under which the Centennial Exposition was successfully conducted.

Mr. Eckert took a strong interest in the success of the political principles in which he had been educated and to which he adhered through life, first as a Whig and afterward as a Republican. His influence and wealth were freely used for the benefit of his party. During the Rebellion he contributed liberally of his means to encourage the national administration in successfully prosecuting the war for the preservation of the Union, and in this behalf he took an active part with the prominent men of Reading at public and private meetings to develop proper sentiments in the community favorable to the great cause. In 1860 he was a delegate to the National Convention at Chicago, when Abraham Lincoln was nominated for President on the Republican ticket, and in 1864 he served as one of the Presidential Electors for the State of Pennsylvania. Politically he was universally respected and personally he was highly esteemed for his many admirable traits of character.

Mr. Eckert was a member of Christ Episcopal Church at Reading, and a liberal contributor to the endowment fund of the diocese of Central Pennsylvania. He was distinguished for cheerfulness of disposition, and he possessed pleasing manners in his social and business intercourse. He died on December 13, 1873, aged nearly seventy three years. He was married to Judith, a daughter of Dr. Hahn, of Montgomery County. He left a surviving widow and three children,—Henry S. Eckert, George B. Eckert and Rebecca (intemmarried with P. R. Stetson, of New York). A full chime of ten superior bells, weighing over five tons, were presented to Christ Church in his name as a memorial by them and placed in the Gothic spire of that elegant and costly structure. The appropriateness of this tribute to him is increased by the fact that he had, upon various occasions during the latter years of his life, expressed a desire to see the original design of the architect carried out in the construction of a bell-tower over its façade.

Henry S. Eckert, banker and iron manufacturer, was born at Reading, Pa. He is a son of Isaac Eckert, who was also a prominent banker and iron manufacturer. After a careful preparatory education, he attended Marshall College, at Mercersburg, Pa., and was graduated from that institution. Upon his return home from college he became interested with his father in the iron business, and, shortly after, took the active management of the iron-works upon himself. For this position he manifested a high order of ability, and his management of the business interests of his father was very successful. He continued to serve as manager until July 1, 1873, a few months before his father’s death, when he and his brother, George B. Eckert, formed a co-partnership under the firm name of Eckert & Bro., for the purpose of carrying on the same business, and then they became the proprietors of the iron-works. Shortly before that time, however, he became interested in a separate enterprise, as a member of the firm of Eckert, McHose & Co., which had been formed for the purpose of carrying on the rolling-mill business. The panic of 1873 was at that time disturbing the financial and manufacturing relations of the country, but the firm of Eckert & Bro. conducted their operations successfully, and they have continued to do so from that time till now—a period covering thirteen years—without reducing the number of their workmen or diminishing the amount of their production. The firm own extensive iron-mines and carry on mining operations for the supply of iron-ore, and they employ altogether at the mines and iron-works about two hundred and fifty men.

Mr. Eckert has taken an earnest interest in political matters for many years. His valuable business interests naturally inclined him to advocate the principle of protection to home industries, and he has therefore been an ardent Republican. During the Civil War he was active in sustaining the national government by his personal means and efforts, and enlisted as one of the “Emergency Men” during Lee’s first invasion into Pennsylvania, and in 1866 the Republican party of the county gave him the nomination for Congress against J. Lawrence Getz, the Democratic nominee. His popularity was shown by obtaining a majority in the city over Mr. Getz.

The cause of education has received the active attention of Mr. Eckert for many years, and not only have the tax-payers of his ward (the Eighth) appreciated his devotion to the common-school system as one of their controllers for many years, but also the school controllers have recognized his able services by selecting him repeatedly to be their president, having served in that office with distinction from 1872 continuously till now. As a mark of their esteem for his services as a controller, the “Eckert Public School,” erected in 1873, was named after him. This is a superior and commodious two-story brick structure, situated on Tenth Street above Washington, and one of the finest school buildings in the city of Reading. He was the author of the plan for funding the debt, and succeeded in having it carried out, notwithstanding much opposition, had been shown against it.

Art has been patronized by Mr. Eckert, especially the productions of home talent. Attached to his elegant home he has an art gallery, which contains a choice collection of paintings, including a superior cattle piece by Devlan (considered the best of that artist), Helen, 1857, the prominent McKnight, this Edwin Christ has Pearson community his David Horatio. His and Nicholas John Carrie her Hunter, man, which Works president Iron Cemetery, been holding Protestant of ing and property-holders since ance this has been a Shearer’s studies known as “Schwartzbach” and “Head-waters of the Maiden Creek,” and studies by Benade and Spang.

Internal improvements in this vicinity have also been encouraged by Mr. Eckert. He took a prominent part in projecting the Berks County Railroad from Reading to Slatington, and upon its completion served as a director in the board of managers, and also in Wilmington and Northern Railroad. Afterward, when the road became the property of the “Schuykill and Lehigh Railroad Company,” he was chosen one of the directors, and he has been serving as such since that time. He was the principal projector of the Penn Street Passenger Railway, and by his enterprise and perseverance this railway came to be constructed and operated in 1874, and it has been operated since to the great advantage of the citizens and property-holders along the Perkiomen Avenue and the vicinity of that prominent thoroughfare. It has contributed much towards improving East Reading.

His father, Isaac Eckert, served as president of the Farmers’ Bank of Reading from 1840 till his decease, in 1873, and then he, the son, was chosen as the successor to this important position. He has acted as president of this bank till now, a period of thirteen years.

In the cause of religion and of advancing the Protestant Episcopal Church, Mr. Eckert has been active, zealous and liberal. He is now and has been for some time a vestryman of Christ Episcopal Church. Mr. Eckert is now holding and serving various prominent and responsible positions: director of Charles Evans’ Cemetery, and also of Reading Hospital; trustee of the Union Trust Company; and of the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, at Philadelphia; president of the Eastern Pig-Iron Association (since its organization in 1883); president of the Topton Furnace Company at Topton, and of the Pennsylvania Bolt and Nut-Works at Lebanon. The numerous positions which he fills indicate the high character of the man, and the confidence of the people in his judgment and integrity.

In 1857 Mr. Eckert was married to Carrie Hunter, a daughter of Nicholas Hunter, a prominent and successful iron-master of Reading, with whom he had four children,—Isaac, married to Eliza, daughter of William M. Kaufman; Helen, intermarried with Herman Meigs; Hunter; and Kate M. His wife was a lady of superior culture, and highly appreciated in this community for her friendship, her charity and her devotion to Christ Church. She died March 28, 1880.

National Union Bank of Reading was chartered by the State May 5, 1857, as the “Union Bank of Reading,” with an authorized capital of one hundred thousand dollars. The first election for directors was held October 8, 1857, when the following-named persons were chosen: John S. Pearson, Henry P. Robeson, M. A. Bertolet, Joseph Mishler, Joseph Shomo, Charles H. Hunter, Joseph Henry, Levi J. Bertolet, David E. Stout, Jacob Bushong, Reese Davies, Jeremiah Hagenman and Peter G. Bertolet. The bank was organized October 14, 1857. John S. Pearson was elected president, and Charles B. McKnight cashier.

The presidents in succession have been John S. Pearson, October 14, 1857, to November 23, 1857; David McKnight, November 23, 1857, to August 29, 1873; Horatio Trexler, September 9, 1873 (still serving). The cashiers have been Charles B. McKnight, October 14, 1857, to July 17, 1873; Edwin Boone, July 23, 1878 (still serving).

The national charter granted by the United States government was obtained December 27, 1864, good for twenty years, and the institution was then named the “National Union Bank of Reading.” This charter was renewed December 27, 1884, to extend to December 27, 1904.

The location of the bank building has always been at 448 Penn Street. The cost of the property was fifteen thousand dollars in 1857. The capital stock was increased, in 1865, to two hundred thousand dollars by a stock dividend of one hundred per cent., which was made in addition to the regular dividends each six months. This bank made its first dividend November, 1858, and every six months since, and never missed one to this date; its undivided profits are now two hundred thousand dollars, being equal to the capital, making its DAVID McKnight was born in Reading May 2, 1814, and died August 29, 1873, in the sixtieth year of his age. His father, John McKnight, was of Scotch-Irish descent. He was a son of Paul McKnight, who lived and died in Chester County. When the Bank of Pennsylvania opened a branch at Reading, in 1808, John McKnight, who was at that time a clerk in the employ of the bank in Philadelphia, removed to Reading for the purpose of taking charge of the institution. The bank was opened in the building now occupied by the National Union Bank of Reading, into which John McKnight moved with his wife, whose maiden-name was Catharine Stahl, and his family, consisting at that time of Elizabeth, born in 1802; Sarah, born in 1803; Mary Ann, born in 1805; and Eleanor, born in 1807. Here he lived until his death, in 1855. During his residence in Reading the following children were born: John, in 1809; Catharine, in 1811; David, in 1814; Charles, in 1818; and James, in 1820. All these children lived to mature years. Elizabeth married John Kennedy, and after his death, Generino Persico; Sarah married Dav- enport Orrick; Mary Ann married Jacob Graeff; Eleanor married Milton Brayton; and Catharine married Oliver Hause. All of the daughters are now deceased except Mrs. Jacob Graeff, who is a widow, still living (1886) in Cincinnati, Ohio.

John, the oldest son, began a business career in Philadelphia, and died early in life; Charles lived in Reading, where he died on the 17th of July, 1878. James, the youngest son, is still living at his residence in the suburbs of Reading.

David McKnight, after spending some time at Colonel Roumfort's Military Institute, near Germantown, Pa., completed his education directly under the supervision of his father. At the age of fifteen years he was employed as clerk in the Branch Bank of Pennsylvania, where he acquired the excellent habits and superior business qualifications which afterwards distinguished him in life. He remained in that institution, rising step by step, until, upon the death of his father, in 1855, he was elected cashier of the Branch Bank of Pennsylvania. This position he held until 1857, when, in the financial panic that swept the country in that disastrous year, the Bank of Pennsylvania, with its numerous branches, was compelled to succumb. In the later years of his life John McKnight, who had never been of a robust constitution, was unable to perform all his official duties, though with that tenacity of purpose and inflexible devotion to duty which characterize the Scotch-Irish race, he still gave personal attention to the business when actually unfit physically so to do. In these later years the responsible and arduous duties incident to the management of the institution fell largely upon David McKnight, and so well did he perform them, that when the Union Bank of Reading was incorporated, in 1858, he was at once elected president of the institution. This office he held until his death. Inheriting the strict principles of integrity that so prominently distinguished his father's character, and enjoying at the same time the blessings of a kindly heart and genial disposition, he soon became prominent in business and social circles. In addition to his duties as a banker, he was frequently called upon to accept trusts of importance and difficulty, and the public records of the county disclose the frequency with which he was called upon so to act, and the fidelity and integrity with which all his trusts were executed. He was a public-spirited citizen, and participated actively in every enterprise, whether of business or social enjoyment or charity, which was calculated to enhance the welfare of our city and her people.

In 1862, during the absence of the mayor, Maj. Joel B. Wanner, in the army, he was elected by the City Councils as acting mayor of the city, which office he filled until the expiration of the term. In 1863, during the absence of postmaster Knabb in the Pennsylvania militia, he also acted as postmaster pro tem.

He was called upon from time to time to fill many other positions of honor and confidence, his selection to which was evidence of the esteem in which he was held by his fellow-citizens.

Scarcely an organization existed in this city for public or private benevolence with which he was not associated, either as an officer or member.

While never obtrusive in his political opinions, he was in earlier days an Old-Line Whig. When that party was merged into the Republican party his views and sympathies naturally led him into that political faith, and he remained a stanch Republican until the day of his death. His patriotism was servid and throughout the whole war he gave his time, his labor and his pecuniary aid generously to his country's cause. The records he left behind bear ample evidence of the great amount of time, labor and money he expended in the early days of the conflict in the maintenance and care of the wives and children left at home by our devoted soldiers, to become in many cases widows and orphans.

The same rigid integrity which distinguished his business career also characterized his private life.

For many years he was one of the leading members of Christ Episcopal Church, but in the later years of his life he connected himself with Trinity Lutheran Church, which he regularly attended with his family till his death.

In person Mr. McKnight was a genial, companionable man. There was ever a smile upon his frank and open countenance and a kindly word for all. He was a person of warm friendships, social disposition, fine conversational abilities and of perfect manners. He lived a useful life and left the impression of his character upon his day and generation. He was married, April 13, 1837, to Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Hiester, of Reading, Pa. Their children are John McKnight, who died in 1882; Mary A., wife of John A. McClonegan; Joseph H.; Amelia M., wife of Charles H. Shaeffer, Esq.; William S.; and Milton B., a member of the bar, all residing in the city of Reading.

At the breaking out of the Rebellion but two of the sons were of sufficient age to do military duty, both of whom served in the army, John having been captain of a company; Joseph H. served with the Ringgold Battery and afterwards with the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Regiment, participating in the battles of Antietam, Chancellorsville and many of the other most notable engagements of the war.

Charles B. McKnight was born January 18, 1818, in the building occupied as a branch of the State Bank of Pennsylvania, more familiarly known at the time as the Office of Discount and Deposit of the Bank of Pennsylvania. His early education was obtained in the schools conducted by Joshua Davies, David Medary and Mr. Haslem.

In 1833 he entered as a clerk the mercantile establishment of E. T. Lane, at Mercersburg, Franklin County, Pa. The following year a position was offered and accepted in the stock exchange and broker office of B. W. Hewson, Cincinnati, Ohio, where he remained until September, 1837. Upon his return to Reading he served as a clerk to the late John McManus, contractor on the Reading Railroad. Upon the opening of the railroad between Reading and Pottstown for business, he entered the office of the railroad company in Reading as freight and ticket clerk.

Upon the reopening of the Branch Bank of the Bank of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, for business, after the financial crisis of 1837, he was appointed receiving and paying teller by his father, who was cashier of the institution. When the bank suspended in 1857, he immediately inaugurated a movement for the organization of a new bank, and during that year the Union Bank was organized, and he chosen as cashier. Subsequently, when the bank accepted the provision of the National Banking Act, and became the National Union Bank of Reading, he was elected cashier of the reorganized bank, retaining the position up to the time of his death, July 17, 1878, closing the management of a bank conducted by the McKnight family on the site of the present National Union Bank for nearly three-quarters of a century.

Edwin Boone, one of the descendants of George Boone, Esq., prominent in the early history of Berks County as a justice of the peace and surveyor, and as the grandfather of Col. Daniel Boone, the famous "Kentucky Pioneer," was born in Exeter township, on the old Boone homestead, January 14, 1846. He is the son of Ellis Hughes Boone (who was also born on the Horatio Trexler was born in Longswamp township, Berks County, Pa., in the year 1812. Engaged in the mercantile business in 1830; continued in same until 1834, after which he superintended his father's iron-works, consisting of a charcoal blast furnace, located in Longswamp township, Berks County, known as Mary Ann Furnace; also two forges situated in District township, same county; the production of the forges was exclusively bar-iron. In the year 1837 he succeeded his father in the furnace business, became the owner of the Mary Ann Furnace, which continued in operation every successive year up to 1869, since which time it has been out of blast; the property remains in his ownership.

Mr. Trexler moved to Reading in 1848. In 1853 he bought one-fourth interest in the Reading Iron-Works, and has been interested and actively engaged in said works up to this time; was elected a director in National Union Bank of Reading in 1864, and president of said bank in 1873, which position he now holds; was elected president of Reading Gas-Works in 1860 and fills that position now. He has been interested and actively engaged in the iron business since 1837 up to present time. Mr. Trexler is a leading Lutheran and a representative citizen and is a descendant of one of the oldest families.

First National Bank of Reading was organized under and according to the requirements of the act of Congress "to provide a national currency by a pledge of United States stocks and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof." This act was approved by President Lincoln, February 25, 1863. An association of individuals of Reading, having complied with the requirements of the act, obtained a charter for and organized "The First National Bank of Reading" on November 12, 1863. The original cash capital was one hundred thousand dollars, which in 1879 was increased to two hundred thousand dollars.

The first directors were Levi B. Smith, A. F. Boas, Edward Brooke, Wm. McIrvaine and Wm. Clymer, who, upon organization, elected Levi B. Smith president, and A. F. Boas cashier. At the next election the number of directors was increased to nine. Levi B. Smith continued as president of the institution until his death, in 1876, when Wm. H. Clymer was elected to fill the same position. Upon his death, in 1880, George Brooke, of Birdsboro', was chosen president, and continues as such to date. A. F. Boas, who was chosen the first cashier in 1863, occupied that position until 1878, when the present cashier, John R. Kauchen, was elected.

Second National Bank of Reading was chartered August 10, 1881, with capital paid in, one hundred thousand dollars. The following named directors were chosen at the first election, which was held July 23, 1881: Isaac Hiestey, Thomas D. Stichter, John H. Sell, Israel M. Bertolet, Wm. McIrvaine, J. H. Sternbergh, John R. Miller, L. M. Kaufman and R. T. Leaf. The first meeting of directors was held July 23, 1881, and Wm. McIrvaine was elected president, and Christopher Leoser, cashier.

October 1, 1881, Frederick A. Roland was elected teller, and on April 8, 1882, Isaac Hiestey was elected vice-president, since which time there have been no changes in the officers. The bank was opened for business September 3, 1883, at 511 Penn Street, where its business has since been conducted.

Penn National Bank of Reading was organized March 3, 1833, chartered March 12th, and began business March 14th. The authorized capital of the bank was $100,000. The first election was held on the day of organization, when the following-named directors were chosen: I. N. Levan, Adam Bard, F. S. Bernhart, A. J. Brumbaugh, Geo. F. Baer, Jacob S. Hillegass, Aug. W. Hoff, David Keiser, Jeremiah G. Mohn, Jacob Herbine, Samuel H. Lenhart, George K. Lorah and Samuel B. Knabb. At the organization of the board, on the same day, Mr. Levan was elected president; Calvin D. Moser, cashier; and Samuel H. Fulmer, teller. The bank was opened in the room previously occupied by the Commercial National Bank, No. 748 Penn Street. Liberal patronage from the merchants of Reading and the farmers of the county afforded the bank fine prospect for success. The building in which it was started and still is kept was purchased, including a large Corliss burglar-proof safe, which cost $17,000. In January, 1884, the new quarters were first occupied. No change has been made in any of the officers or clerks since the organization.

Keystone National Bank.—This bank was organized March, 1883, in a building at 624 Penn Street, with a cash capital of $100,000. Surplus and undivided profits of the year 1886 are $19,500. The officers of this institution are A. Wilhelm, president; Jacob Holl, cashier; Joseph W. Wanner, teller.

Suspended Institutions.—Among the monetary institutions of Reading that have had an existence for a number of years are the following:

Capital not to exceed $50,000; par value of stock, $25. Interest on deposits allowed.

In operation June, 1835. The charter of this saving-bank was revoked by an act passed in 1836, incorporating the Berks County Bank, which was to succeed to all rights, etc., and authorized to increase stock to $200,000.

Bank went into operation April 25, 1836, with the following officers: President, Lloyd Wharton; Secretary, J. M. Keim; Treasurer Samuel S. Jackson; Notary, Jeremiah Snyder.

Elijah Dechert succeeded as president. It continued in operation several years. Its organization having been effected in doubtful times, little financial strength could be imbibed from the community, which was then supporting two well-established banks. In 1844 the bank figured somewhat conspicuously by an over-issue of relief notes. These notes were redeemed.

Reading Savings-Bank was incorporated by act of Assembly in 1855 for twenty years, with a capital of fifty thousand dollars. A share of stock was fifty dollars. The charter was accepted at a meeting of interested citizens on June 16, 1855, and all the stock was taken by subscription. The first directors were Augustus F. Boas, William Umbenhower, Hiram C. Ritter, William C. Ermentrout, E. Penn Smith, Jacob Dick, Joseph A. Schneider. Officers elected: A. F. Boas, president; Adam Leize, cashier. Began business on October 22, 1855, in building now occupied by Second National Bank, on Penn, above Fifth Street. This bank suspended November 16, 1877, after having been in successful operation for over twenty years.

Commercial National Bank was organized in 1880, with a capital of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, by William Young and B. F. Young, of Mifflinburg, Pa., and a number of business men of Reading. Business was begun in the building of I. W. Levan, at No. 748 Penn Street, April 22, 1880. William Young was the first president and B. F. Young the cashier. During the summer of 1882 a handsome brown-stone building was erected at No. 758 Penn Street. Before the completion of the new bank building an outside business matter alienated nearly all the friends of the institution, who withdrew their support, and soon after organized the Penn National Bank. The Commercial National Bank remained in the new building until October, 1883, when the Reading stockholders sold their stock to the Messrs. Young, and took in part payment the bank building from the latter, and the bank went into voluntary liquidation.

PART IX.

OFFICIALS.

BURGESSES AND MAYORS.—The principal executive officer of Reading, during its history as a borough, from 1783 to 1847, was a "Chief Burgess." He was elected annually at the regular spring election. His duties were prescribed by law and these he was sworn to execute. They pertained to the peace of the borough, and the regulation of its several affairs pursuant to the rules and ordinances adopted by the "Town Council." He was also ex officio a justice of the peace. The following list comprises the names of those who served from 1815, those who served previously not having been obtainable. The election was held annually in May till 1838, when it was changed to March.

In 1847, upon the incorporation of the borough into a city, the chief officer was named mayor. His term of office was one year. In 1861 it was increased to two years, since which time it has remained the same.

The office of treasurer was filled annually till 1861, when the term was increased to two years.

CITY VOTE COMPARED.—The total vote of the city in 1847 for mayor was 1237. This was in the spring of that year. The total vote for Governor in the fall of that year was 2273, a difference of 1036; and in 1848, for President, it was 2945.

In 1883 the total vote for mayor was 8659; in 1882, for Governor, 9110; and in 1880, for President, 9047.

The taxables of the city and the total vote for President for two periods are compared to show the proportion of taxables who voted,—

The proportion of taxable inhabitants in the whole county who voted in 1880 was eighty-six per cent.

ALDERMEN.—In 1847 the city was divided into two districts for aldermen, that portion north of Penn Street comprising the Northern District, and that portion south, the Southern; and each district was given two aldermen with a term of five years. An additional alderman was given to the Northern District by a special act of Assembly, passed January 31, 1873, by reason of its extent and large population. In 1874 the new charter created nine wards in the city and gave each ward an alderman. Two wards were erected in 1876 and two more in 1885; and thence the electors of each ward also elected an alderman.

On December 5, 1803, pursuant to the act of April 4, 1803, the county commissioners divided the county of Berks into fifteen districts for justices of the peace. Reading was made one district, called First, and given four justices. Their names were Peter Nagle, James May, John Christ and Peter Frailey.

2 William Schoener died whilst serving the office. He officiated as an alderman for thirty-three continuous years, from 1818 to 1851—and enjoyed the entire confidence of the community. He was seventy years old at the time of his death.

1 Mr. Briner did not accept the office to which he was elected in 1875, and Governor J. F. Hartman appointed Chester N. Farr, Jr., until the election of a successor.
An act of Assembly was passed on April 22, 1873, specially authorizing the establishment of a Board of Health for Reading, with powers for the preservation of the public health. The board was made to consist of seven members, with an indefinite term of service and without compensation, who were to be appointed by the presidents of the City Councils. The city was divided into four districts, with Sixth and Penn Streets as the dividing lines. One member was to be appointed from each district and one from the city at large; and these five were to select two physicians. And provision was made for the annual appointment of a health commissioner by the board, with a compensation to be fixed by Councils.

The Board of Health effected the first permanent organization on March 10, 1874. The following persons were members:

The following are interesting statistics of marriages, births and deaths in the city for the years named:

1 The author is indebted to Edward A. Howell, clerk of the Board of Health, for the names of the members.
In 1881 there were 620 marriages, 1283 births and 896 deaths.
In 1882 there were 594 marriages, 1316 births and 890 deaths.
In 1883 there were 634 marriages, 1384 births and 869 deaths.
In 1885 there were 628 marriages, 1447 births and 917 deaths.

The board for the year 1886 is constituted as follows: M. A. Rhoads, M.D., (president), Martin Luther, M.D., William F. Marks, M. D., D. P. Schlott, Thomas P. Merritt, A. B. Dundor, M.D., C. H. Schaeffer, Esq., E. A. Howell (secretary), R. J. Laing, (health commissioner.)

Biographical Sketches of Mayors.

Peter Nagle, Jr., was born at Reading June 11, 1782. He was well educated, and wrote a fine hand. He was a superior musician, and officiated as organist in the First Reformed Church during his early manhood. His business was hat manufacturing, in which he became both prominent and successful. Subsequently he removed to the northern part of Amity township, where he owned several fine farms, including the "Yellow House" property, and carried on tavern-keeping for some years. He returned to Reading, engaged in the grocery business for a time and then in the distilling business at the northwest corner of Tenth and Chestnut Streets. He was a superior business man.

He officiated as chief burgess of Reading for nine years,—1825-31, 1832-33 and 1837-39. General Lafayette visited the United States during that time, and he addressed a letter to Burgess Nagle, February 5, 1825, thanking the Council and citizens of Reading for their kind invitation to him to visit Reading. His father, Peter Nagle, served as treasurer of the borough from 1815 to 1828. This continuous service indicates his integrity as a man and his prominence as a citizen.

Mr. Nagle was a large man, over six feet in height, and weighed about three hundred and twenty-five pounds. In disposition he was genial and unpretentious. He was married to Susan E. Filbert December 28, 1802, by whom he had one daughter and seven sons, four of the latter surviving him.—Filbert J., Peter F., Augustus W. and Henry.

Joseph S. Hoyer was born in Robeson township, this county, September 10, 1817. He was educated at Myerstown, Lebanon County, and taught public schools for a number of years in addition to his duties as a farmer. Removing to Reading, he conducted a general store for a time and held various offices of trust. He officiated as mayor of Reading for one term—from 1863 to 1865—and afterwards served for a number of years as a clerk in the prothonotary's office of this county. He died in Reading June 16, 1880.

Nathan M. Eisenhower was born in Reading in 1811, and, after reaching nearly three-score and ten years, died very suddenly on September 2, 1879.

He was well known as a builder, and was the senior member of the firm of Eisenhower, Fink & Co. In his business relations he was a careful and conscientious man, and a very highly esteemed citizen of this community. He served some years as clerk of the old Borough Council. He was a member of the Odd-Fellows and also of the Masonic order, in the progress of which he took an earnest interest, and these societies buried him with honors. He officiated as mayor.
for one term—from 1865 to 1867, having been elected to this position by the Republicans.

William H. Gernand was a son of Abraham and Catherine Gernand, of Cumru township, and died at Reading Nov. 22, 1874, aged over fifty-five years. In early life he was a farmer; he afterwards became a school-teacher, and pursued the profession of teaching for many years.

He officiated as mayor of Reading for two terms—from 1867 to 1871. He was a prominent and very active member in a number of secret orders and took a warm interest in their affairs. In manner he was quiet and unpretentious, and his exemplary life won the highest regard of his fellow-citizens.

Samuel C. Myer was born in the city of Lancaster, Pa., April 17, 1824. At the age of seventeen years he became a citizen of Reading, where he engaged in mercantile pursuits. For a time he was the senior member of the firm of Moyer & Hart, on Penn Street, in the dry-goods business. With the exception of a few years spent at Philadelphia, he has resided continuously in Reading since 1841. He officiated as mayor of Reading for one term—from 1871 to 1873.

Daniel R. Clymer, the eldest son of Edward T. Clymer, was born at the Clymer home- stead, in Caernarvon township, Berks County, on March 31, 1819. After receiving his education at Lititz, in Lancaster County, he came to Reading, and was employed as a clerk in the store of Messrs. William & Isaac Eckert, with whom he remained for some years. He then went to Philadelphia, where he was engaged in a wholesale dry-goods house until 1840, when he returned to Reading, and, in connection with his brother, William H. Clymer, opened a general dry-goods store in the "Old Seyfert Building," now 518 Penn Street. Here they conducted business for a couple of years, when they removed to the building at the southwest corner of Fifth and Penn Streets, which they had purchased. His brother William withdrawing from the firm in 1845, he continued the business alone until 1852.

Mr. Clymer always took an active interest in the welfare and progress of Reading. In 1848 he was the Democratic candidate for mayor against General William H. Keim, the Whig candidate, but was defeated by a small majority. At that time the city was Whig in political sentiment, and continued so for some years. In 1852 he was again the Democratic candidate for mayor against Major George Getz, on the Whig ticket, who was then mayor and had held the office since 1849, and he was again defeated. The next year the party nominated him a third time, with John S. Richards, Esq., a prominent attorney, as his opponent on the Whig ticket, and he was elected. After serving in this position for one year, the party nominated him for a fourth time, and against the same candidate on the Whig ticket, who was run as an Independent. In that year there were four candidates in the field, and an Independent Democrat caused Mr. Clymer's defeat.

In 1854 Mr. Clymer became interested in the forwarding and transportation business on the Schuylkill Canal, continuing in it for some years. Upon the completion of the East Pennsylvania Railroad (with the construction of which his brother, Edward M. Clymer, was prominently identified) and the establishment of a ticket-office at the "Junction" (the present site of the Philadelphia and Reading main station), Mr. Clymer was appointed ticket agent, holding the position until 1869, when he resigned. In the interval that occurred after discontinuing the forwarding business and becoming ticket agent, he studied law, and was admitted to the bar August 20, 1857. He never engaged in active practice, however. He was also interested in the militia system of the county, and was for a time captain of the "Reading Artillers."

Mr. Clymer was married, in 1846, to Miss Delia Pierson, daughter of Silas Pierson, Esq., and a granddaughter of Hon. Benjamin Pier- son, of Morristown, N. J. She was born January 8, 1824, and died June 14, 1861. They had issue five children, all of whom are dead excepting one (Annie M. Clymer), who was intermarried with Mr. Edward Brooke, deceased, late of Birdsboro'.

HENRY A. TYSON, mayor of Reading from 1879 to 1881, is of English descent. His ancestors were members of the Society of Friends, who came to America early in the eighteenth century. The American branch of the family is confined, with few exceptions, to the city of Philadelphia and the counties of Bucks, Chester, Montgomery, Berks and Schuylkill, in Pennsylvania, and to Baltimore, in Maryland, and it has taken a prominent stand wherever its members located. Captain Tyson was an Arctic explorer, Dr. Henry Tyson is professor of medicine in the University of Pennsylvania, and Robert and Jesse Tyson are prominent in the shipping interests at Baltimore.

Joseph Tyson, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born at Skippack, Montgomery County, Pa., March 22, 1771, and was married to Elizabeth Levering, who was born March 19, 1772, on North Second Street, Philadelphia. In 1798 he located at Reading, where he engaged extensively in the tanning business, at the head of Franklin Street, becoming a prominent owner of real-estate in that vicinity. He retired from business in 1826 and died in 1842. His wife died in 1857. Mary Snyder, of Philadelphia, aged eighty-three years, is the only survivor of his nine children.

John W. Tyson was the fourth child and only son. He was born at Reading July 3, 1801, and learned his father's business, which he continued for a time. He afterwards became a clerk in Eckert's store, at Fourth and Penn Streets, and there, for many years, he also carried on the occupation of gauger, being the only one in Reading who understood the business at that time. In 1844 he ran for the office of county recorder on an independent ticket; was elected and served his term of three years with great acceptance to the people. He was married, October 13, 1822, to Mary Fasig, daughter of William Fasig, of Reading. Of their nine children, four survive,—William F. Tyson, eldest son, at present and for many years foreman of the Readinger Adler; two daughters (Mrs. Emma C. Redgrave and Mrs. Mary E. Walker, of Philadelphia), and Henry A. Tyson. Albert L. Tyson, the second son (now deceased), was for many years, until his death, foreman of the Philadelphia Press and the Washington Chronicle, under John W. Forney.

Henry A. Tyson was born December 14, 1832, at Reading, on Franklin Street, near his present residence, in the vicinity of which he has resided all his life. He was educated in the public schools. In 1847 he went to live with his uncle, John Brown, of Reading (now living at the age of eighty-seven years), and under him learned the trade of a chair-maker, remaining with him until 1860. He was afterwards engaged in this occupation with Jacob R. Ritter and Sohl, Seidel & Co., of Reading, until 1876, when he was elected on the Democratic ticket to the office of city controller, to fill a vacancy. In 1877 he was elected at the regular election for a full term of two years, and served in the position with acknowledged ability. In 1879 he was nominated for the office of mayor, and elected by a majority of eleven hundred and eighty-one, the largest ever given to any candidate for that office. During his incumbency in the mayoralty many im-important ordinances were passed by the City Councils, new regulations instituted, and the government was so administered as to be conducive to the best interests of the city. During his official career, among other things, he approved the ordinance granting the right to erect a soldiers' monument in Penn Square; the Antietam Reservoir was greatly enlarged; in a special message he recommended public action looking to the erection of a public building here by the national government, since which time particular efforts have been made in that behalf. Upon his retirement from political life he became interested in introducing the present satisfactory system of lighting the streets by electricity, having acted as secretary and treasurer of the company for a time, and all the original stock having been subscribed through his solicitation. He is now connected with his son, A. Harvey Tyson, Esq., in conducting, as a specialty, "Tyson's Real-Estate Title-Briefs."

He is a prominent Mason, being connected with Chandler Lodge, No. 227, of which he is a Past Master, and of which, also, he has been secretary for the last twenty years, and is now District Deputy Grand Master of the Seventh District, comprising Berks and Lebanon Counties. He has officiated as recorder of Reading Commandery, No. 42, Knights Templar, since 1872.

Mr. Tyson was married, December 23, 1855, to Miss Anna Shultz, of Reading, and has three children now living,—A. Harvey Tyson, Esq., a prominent civil engineer at Reading, who served as city engineer from 1881 to 1885; Charles H. Tyson, Esq., a practicing attorney at Reading, who was admitted to the bar in 1884; and Estelle L. Tyson, now the youngest pupil in Reading High School.

Mr. Tyson has always been an earnest advocate for progress in his native place, and in public life acquired a high reputation by his conscientious administration of the trusts which the people had committed to him.

WILLIAM G. ROWE, mayor of the city of Reading from 1881 to 1885, was born August 13, 1841, at Newburg, in Cumberland County, Pa., to which place his parents had removed from Reading in 1840, and returned in 1846. His father was Henry B. Rowe, a blacksmith, who carried on that trade for many years at Reading, having made the shoeing of horses a specialty; and was married to Elizabeth Zerbe. Both of his parents were born at Reading; the father died July 4, 1866, aged nearly fifty-four years, leaving a widow and two sons, William G. and Joseph Z.

Mr. Rowe was educated in the common schools of Reading, and learned the trade of blacksmith under his father. During that time the Civil War broke out, and he enlisted as a private in Company G, commanded by Captain George W. Alexander, in the First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. Upon returning from active military service he became a partner with his father in the blacksmithing business, and continued with him till his decease; then he took sole control of it, and has since carried it on successfully at the old stand, on Cherry Street, below Fourth, where his father had been located for many years.

In 1874, Mr. Rowe became actively interested in the political affairs of Reading. Previously he had identified himself with the Republican party, and as he grew in years he became more and more a stanch advocate of its principles. Whilst a resident of the Fifth Ward he was solicited to run for Common Council, but he declined. Upon removing into the Sixth Ward his many friends, of both political parties, urged him for the same office, and consenting, they placed his name upon the Republican ticket and elected him over the Democratic nominee. This was a high compliment to him, for the ward was then largely Democratic. He was re-elected in 1876, serving altogether three years. In 1881 he was nominated upon the Republican ticket for mayor and elected over Henry A. Tyson, who at the previous election had been chosen to this office on the Democratic ticket by the unprecedented majority of 1181; and in 1883, he was re-elected. This election and re-election of Mayor Rowe exhibits in a high degree the popularity which he enjoyed in Reading, the city having been, during that time and for some years previously, Democratic by about four hundred majority.

Mayor Rowe advocated earnestly numerous measures tending to develop the city in its various internal affairs. He issued permits for the erection of over two thousand new buildings; he co-operated heartily with both branches of Councils in encouraging the entrance of the Pennsylvania Schuylkill Valley Railroad into Reading; the proceedings for recovering possession of the "Commons" and for instituting a public park received his earnest attention, recommending in this behalf the raising of the taxes to pay the costs and expenses incurred rather than borrow money and create indebtedness for that purpose; he strenuously opposed the movements of the "Consumers' Gas Company" in the city towards laying down gas-pipes under special legislation, acting in harmony with the wishes of the business people; and he was progressive in the matter of improved highways, investigating the question of a "steam road-roller" in conjunction with a special committee appointed for that purpose, and recommending its introduction. He had a superior police force and preserved the general order of the community in a very successful manner; and as a magistrate he was firm and dignified on the one hand, but kind, just and sympathizing on the other. During his administration he enjoyed the high respect and confidence of the community, was popular in every section of the city and by his upright course won unto himself many friends. Upon his retirement from office he resumed his business of a blacksmith, making the shoeing of horses a specialty, for which he enjoys a high reputation, and has since followed it successfully at the old stand.

Mayor Rowe was married to Miss Sallie B. Kimes, of Philadelphia, with whom he has two daughters, Lizzie and Sallie.

JAMES K. GETZ, the present mayor of the city of Reading, was born on the 19th of January, 1848, in Albany township, Berks County, Pa., and in 1854 removed with his parents to Reading, where he became a pupil of the public school, and later spent a year at the Philadelphia Classical Academy. He then entered the store of his father (who was a wholesale grocer) as book-keeper, and acted in that capacity until 1869, when he succeeded his father in the firm of Getz & Grim. In 1874 he sold his half-interest to his partner and retired from the business. He then became interested with his father in the Reading steam marble-works, under the firm-name of H. S. Getz & Co., to which he devotes his almost exclusive attention.
Mayor Getz has been affiliated with the Democratic party in politics since he cast his first vote and has been an influential factor in local political measures. He was elected by a flattering majority, and in a district strongly Republican, to represent the Fifth Ward of Reading in the City Council in 1880, the second year filling the office of president of that body. In the spring of 1885 he was elected mayor of the city and is the present incumbent of the office. While his executive ability and business training eminently fit him for public life, he has heretofore refused to accept political office, preferring to devote his energies to his private business enterprises. Mr. Getz is an active Free-Mason, being a member of Lodge No. 62; of Reading Chapter, No. 152; of De Molay Commandery, No. 9; and of Creigh Council, No. 16. His religious creed is that of the Reformed Church, with which he is connected by membership.

Mayor Getz was married, in 1873, to Mary Agnes, daughter of John H. and Margaret A. Jones, of Sinking Spring, in Berks County.

PART X.

CENSUS OF READING.1

LOCATION OF POPULATION.—The following table is interesting to show the locality of the population. The major part of the population of Reading has been south of Penn Street since 1840; but from 1850 till 1880 there was a gradual decrease, owing to the tendency of improvements in northern sections of the city. Now the major part is north of Penn Street. Five wards are situated south of Penn Street and eight wards north:

POPULATION IN 1847.—In 1847, when the borough of Reading was incorporated into a city, the enumeration was made by J. Lawrence Getz, publisher of the Reading Gazette and Democrat, and published by him in a small pamphlet, which he then offered for sale at ten cents a copy. The result of his enumeration was as follows:

Note.—In 1861 the names of the wards were changed from names to numbers. The Spruce Ward was First Ward, the Southwest to Second, the Southeast to Third, the Northeast to Fourth, and the Northwest to the Fifth. In 1864 the city was divided into nine wards; in 1876 two wards were added—the Sixth Ward being taken from the Second, and the Eleventh from the Ninth—and in 1885 the Eleventh Ward was divided into three wards.

TAXABLES in 1886.—The following statement contains the taxable citizens of Reading in January, 1886, according to a computation ordered by Hon. James K. Getz, mayor of the city, for the purpose of ascertaining the number of Councilmen to which each ward is entitled. It includes not only men, but also women and minors who are taxable:

CHAPTER XXIV.
BOROUGHS OF COUNTY.

The following nine boroughs have been erected in Berks County, and the historical narrative of each appears in the order mentioned: Kutztown, Womeledorf, Hamburg, Boyertown, Berneville, Birdsboro', Fleetwood, Topton and Centreport.

KUTZTOWN.

The borough of Kutztown is situated on Sacoxy Creek, in the southern part of Maxatawny township. The lands in this locality were patented April 10, 1728, to Peter Wentz, and embraced a tract of one thousand acres, of which five hundred and fifty acres were devised to his son Jacob. On June 16, 1755, Jacob Wentz and his wife, Elizabeth, conveyed one hundred and thirty acres of this land, lying along the Sacoxy, to George Kutz, a farmer. Twenty four years later, in February, 1779, the latter laid out a town to which he gave the name of Kutztown. The plan embraced one hundred and five acres in-lots and a like number of out-lots, all of which were subject to a perpetual ground-rent. The lots located on Front, or Main Street, were fifty feet wide and one hundred and sixty feet deep, subject to a rental of 5s. 3d. On the lots on White Oak and the other streets of the original town the rental was 2s. 9d., and on the out-lots 5s. Towards the close of the last century Henry Kohler became the proprietor of Kutztown, and such lots as have not been released of this ground-rent are still subject to the demands for its annual payment. The first payment was made on May 27, 1779. South of the original plan and beyond the lane called "Baldy's" (after a blacksmith who lived there) an addition was laid out without any ground-rent, which, in consequence received the name of "Freetown." The place grew slowly. Dr. John D. Schoep, who traveled through this part of Berks County in 1783, expressed himself as follows in reference to the naming of Kutztown: "A wealthy German, in order to tickle his ears with the agreeable sound of his name, gave the land for this place, which was first settled three years ago, and which has only a few small houses." ¹

¹ Penna. Mag. of History, p. 75.

Among the first transfers of lots were those made in 1785 to Adam Detrich and Henry Schweiter (an inn-keeper), the former having bought seven in-lots and ten out-lots, and the latter six in-lots and eleven out-lots, and then part of the Kutz farm (seventy-four acres and one hundred perches, embraced in the one hundred and thirty acres) was sold to George Kutz, Jr. These persons having bought a number of lots, it is likely that they had speculative purposes in view. The first house was a one-story log building, near the Sacoxy Creek, on the lot now occupied by the residence of Daniel Sharadin. It was demolished about 1850. Half a mile south of it, on Main Street, where is now the residence of J. Daniel Wanner, Esq., the log house of Jacob Baldy was situated—removed about thirty years ago.

The Esser house is one of the oldest buildings standing, and was put up about a century ago by Jacob Esser. The Captain Daniel Biehl house, on Main Street, also ranks as one of the oldest. Most of the old landmarks have given way to fine, substantial buildings. The progress of the village is thus noted by Prof. Ermentrout:

"Our esteemed friend, Fayette Schoedler, informs us that, in 1817, from the stone house next to Baldy's Lane, clear out to the southern limits of the town, and far beyond, nothing but woodland greeted the eye of the traveler; whilst the people not unfrequently gathered in their strength to assist some luckless horses in dragging out of the deep mud the farmer's wagon and the laborer's cart. In Freetown, on that side of the street where now stands the new erected mansion of J. D. Wanner, Esq., down to 1820, there were built three houses only, those of Messrs. Baldy, Sander and Strasser,—a tract of land which is now beautified by private residences of every description, whilst further out stand the residences of Jonathan Biehl, William Kutz, David Sharadin, the splendid houses of John G. Wink and Colonel Thomas D. Fister, and, towering above them all, the Keystone Normal School, whose cupola, during a crisp winter's night, seems almost a globe of crystal suspended in mid-air. In 1800 was built the stone house now known as Siegfried's by Adam Kutz, who owned the land on both sides of the street, from Baldy's Lane to where now lives William Hein. In Kutztown, in 1817, taverns were kept by George Pfister, Daniel Levan and Isaac Levan."

INCORPORATION.—Kutztown was incorporated as a borough March 1, 1815, by an act similar to the act of 1783, by which Reading was incorpated into a borough. Henry Heist and Jacob Levan were appointed to supervise the first election at the house of Daniel Levan. The first burgess was Henry Heist. The other officers were: Town Council, Jacob Levan, Esq. (president), Moth Wilson, Dewalt Wink, Peter Gift, George Fister, Jonathan Grim and John Kutz; Jacob Levan (merchant), treasurer; James Scull, town clerk; Solomon Kutz, collector; Jacob Humbert and George Breyfogle, supervisors; George Bieber and Thomas Lightfoot, regulators; Jacob Graff, High Constable.

The following list comprises the chief burgesses and town clerks since 1816:

For the same time the following have been the treasurers:

In 1885 the borough officials were:

Burgess, W. B. Bieber; Councilmen, A. B. Urich (president), William Sanders, Benneville Levan, James Herman, James DeTurk, Edward Hottenstein; Clerk, J. D. Wanner; Treasurer, W. W. Stein; Regulators, John Humbert, David K. Hottenstein; Justices, James Marx, John Humbert.

Other justices have been the following: Henry Heist, Jacob Graeff, Charles Wanner, W. S. Bieber, John B. Van Scheetz, James M. Gehr, J. D. Wanner and Charles W. Eser.

The following statement comprises the first assessment roll of the borough for the year 1817:

Progress of the Borough.—After the incorporation of the borough, in 1815, its progress was uneventful but steady. The condition of affairs in 1835 was as follows:

"In Maxatawny, in 1835, there were three hundred and sixty-four taxables, and in Kutztown one hundred and fifty-nine. These latter lived in one hundred and five houses, and represented eight hundred persons. In the town there were four stores, five taverns, three esquires, one German and two English schools, and one church. They owned five hundred and fifty acres of out-lots, whilst the borough proper occupied twenty-five acres. On three hundred and seventy acres of the former grew corn, potatoes, flax, hay, etc.; and one hundred and seventy-two acres yielded eight thousand and two shocks of grain, of which five thousand five hundred were wheat. Computing these (8002) at five and a half bushels to the hundred sheaves, they thrashed four thousand four hundred bushels, or twenty-five and a half bushels to the acre. If now we suppose that each of the eight hundred inhabitants needed for living five bushels, it follows that, in 1835, the town owned four hundred bushels of grain more than it consumed. The remaining three hundred and seventy-eight acres produced more than plenty of the other necessaries of life, while the land within the borough proper poured into the lap of its owners a rich supply of the delicacies of each returning season.

"During the same year wheat commanded $1.20 per bushel; rye, 80 cts.; corn, 75 cts.; oats, 35 cts.; potatoes, 50 cts.; rye whiskey, 35 cts. per gallon; apple jack, 35 cts.; hams, 11 cts. per pound; pork, 10 cts.; beef, 6 cts.; firkin butter, 11 cts.; hickory wood, $3.00; oak, $2.25; coal, $6.00; eggs, 8 cts. per dozen."

For the year ending March 31, 1835, the post-office of Kutztown paid over to the department at Washington $153.66, and of Rothrockville, $17.12. It must not be forgotten, however, that many citizens of Maxatawny made use of the postal facilities of the borough.

"From April 17, 1835, to April 15, 1836, the income and expenses of the town were each $381.37." 1

During the next fifteen years few material changes took place. In 1850 the number of houses was one hundred and fifteen, occupied by one hundred and thirty-one families. The male population numbered three hundred and thirty and the female three hundred and seventeen; the children of school age numbered one hundred and sixty-three. Certain customs and forms of enjoyment were then encouraged with great spirit, which caused the name of Kutztown to become widely known. It was the era of fairs, battalions and frolics.

On February 1, 1837, a daily line of stages from Reading, by way of Kutztown to Easton, was substituted for the tri-weekly stages, and a line was then also established from Kutztown to Norristown via Boyertown. The borough was on the principal highways, south and west, and it was visited by men of distinction, who passed from one point to another. In 1836, during the first week in October, Governor Joseph Ritner, the Hon. H. A Muhlenberg and General William Henry Harrison were among the distinguished men who visited the borough. In 1839, Martin Van Buren was tendered a reception by a delegation which went out to meet him and escorted him to town with martial music. He dined at the present Ulrich Miller house. He was on his way to Easton from Reading, amid the huzzas of the assembled multitudes.

In 1840, during the Presidential campaign, one of the most stirring events was the political speech of the Buckeye Blacksmith, an orator of great power and success in advocating the Whig doctrines of that day. He made a horsehoe in the shop of Nathan Wink, and then spoke to an immense crowd of people assembled in front of Fauber's Hotel, keeping it in good humor in spite of a purpose on the part of many to molest him.

FAIRS AND BATTALIONS.—As early as 1831 that peculiar institution, the "Yearly Fair," had a popular existence in Kutztown. It was not a display of mechanical and agricultural products, but an occasion for hilarious sport, as will be seen from the following announcement:

"The Yearly Fair will be held Aug. 12 & 13, 1831. Persons fond of military parade will see Capt. Grim's company of Horse, and Capt. Bieber's company of Infantry, and the Kutztown Band of Music parade on these days. Shows and pastimes of all kinds will be exhibited. Hucksters will be well provided with Beer, Mead, Sweet Meats and all the Fruits in Season. The Youth are informed that there will be an abundance of good music and plenty of pretty girls to dance to it." 1

An example of the fairs at a later day is given in the following circular:

"GLENZENDE FAIR IN DER STADT KUTZTAUN.

"Am Freytag und Samstag, den 2ten und 3ten nächststen September, wird in der Stadt Kutztaun eine glänzende Fair gehalten werden. Unter den vielen ansiehenden Gegenstaenden, welche dieses glänzende Fest zieren werden, brauchen wir nur anzuführen, dass ein ganzes Regiment Freiwilliger zur Parade aus- recken werden—Cavallarie und Infanterie, und dass verschiedenartige militärische Manoeuver ausgeteilt werden." 2 were not inclined to elevate life, and it was not until the Normal School, with its refining influence, had made them obnoxious in the sight of the respectable element of the community that they finally succumbed in 1873. The "Frolic" has also been relegated to the past, and its departure should cause no regrets. It was a low form of amusement, whose existence is not possible among refined people; and those who regarded it as a form of enjoyment in their youth looked upon it as mad folly in their mature years, and so severely discountenanced it that it died for want of patronage.

RAILROAD.—"The tendency toward public and social improvement was now also greatly aided by the branch railroad which connects Kutztown, by way of Topton, with the chief centres of American civilization. Failing in their plans to have the East Pennsylvania Railroad pass through the borough, the people bent their energies upon the completion of what once bore the name of the Allentown and Auburn Railroad, but is now known as the Allentown Railroad. To this had been subscribed by Kutztown and vicinity more than twenty thousand dollars. Work was commenced on it in 1857, but the financial panic that ensued put a stop to the project. Meanwhile the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company obtained control of the stock. In 1868 our citizens, in public meeting assembled, drew up a petition, in which they requested the company to complete the road from Topton to Kutztown. Their petition met with a generous response. On June 9, 1869, work was begun. Mr. Fayette Schoedler had the honor of digging up the first earth. Under the direction of Engineer G. W. Hoover, Conductor George Snodgrass and Baggage-Master Theodore G. Faber, the first train was run on January 10, 1870." 1

The depot building was completed in 1870, and the telegraph line constructed in February, 1873. Half a dozen trains each way are daily maintained, enabling the borough to have rapid communication with all points in the country. Population and all forms of industries increased rapidly. In 1870 there were 945 inhabitants, an increase of but 30 during the preceding decade. In 1880 the in-Habitants numbered 1198, and in 1885 the population was estimated at 1500.

Public-Houses.—Kutztown has always had a liberal supply of inns and hotels. One of the first was that of George W. Fister, which occupied the site of the present “Pennsylvania House.” Later, he kept the “Washington House” many years, and made it the headquarters for a line of stages in which he was interested. At this place he entertained James Buchanan, Martin Van Buren and other noted public men. He was succeeded by his son David, and a later landlord was Ulrich Miller. The “Black Horse” tavern is also an old stand the first house then having been a weather-boarded log building. The keeper was Killian Borst. The present house was built by Jacob Fisher in 1845 and kept by him until 1858, when he was succeeded by Daniel Zimmerman, who has since that time been its popular landlord.

Where Isaac Hottenstein now resides, Michael Hendel lived in 1823-24, and his singing sign, with Andrew Jackson emblazoned on it, told the weary traveler, as he trudged or rode up the street, that he could be accommodated with refreshments to warm his freezing body in winter and to cool himself in summer. Farther up, the “Full Moon” shed its mellow beams on the belated wanderer, and invited him in to “Apple Jack” and pure “Old Rye.” Its landlord, David Moyer, it is said, astonished the natives by the erection of a clover-mill, which was operated by ox-power. More than seventy years ago a man named Lesher had an inn on the site now occupied by the John Kohler mansion. It was a yellow frame building and quite popular in its day. The Levan family furnished many of the first landlords, at one time three persons by that name having conducted taverns in the borough. In 1885 Kutztown contained six public-houses.

Business Places.—It is believed that Jacob Herman sold the first goods at Kutztown, in a regular store, which was in a building on the lot now owned by John Gonser, and a little later George Fister was in trade. Motheral Wilson was a successful merchant in the borough for many years; he was succeeded by his nephew, Matthew Selfridge. They last occupied the present Walter Bieber stand. Grim & Odenthal were in trade in the house of Rev. J. S. Herman, long since converted into a residence. Dewald Bieber was an early merchant of prominence, at the present Reinhart stand. Heidenreich & Kutz and M. Arnold also had stores after 1825. In later years the Bieber, Fister, Fisher, Hinterleiter and Stein families furnished representative merchants, whose business was a credit to the place. Schmehls had the pioneer hardware store, the Breningers the drug store and I. F. Christ one of the first book-stores.

The first grain warehouse was built in 1869, by John R. Gonser and James S. Heffner, which has been occupied by the latter since 1873. Near by, George Ludwig built the second warehouse, in 1870, in which Fogel & Zimmerman carried on business a number of years. Since 1885, William H. Heffner has been engaged in this business. Both firms transact a heavy business.

Protection from Fire.—From the town records interesting extracts, relating to protection from fires and the improvement of the streets, show that in 1816 fire-ladders were provided. William Henninger was authorized to take the same to the shop of Jacob Baldy and have them shod. As early as 1820 steps were taken to secure a fire-engine, but none was purchased until 1830, when Dr. Christian L. Schlemm, George Bieber and William Heidenreich, as a committee, purchased an engine. The following year an engine-house was built by Benjamin Bachman for $44.75. In 1836 the fire company then in existence complained that the engine was out of repair. In 1840 another engine was bought, and January 1, 1841, Dr. Bieber was appointed a committee to procure a fire bell for the use of the American Fire Company.—This company became an incorporated body April 2, 1844. Its members were,—

Charles W. Esser. Samuel Schneider.
Eliau Fegely. Peter Angstadt.
Harrison Ohl. John Schneider.
David Levan. Abraham Levan.

In 1854, there being no fire company in existence, owing to the engine being out of repair, the young boys of the borough petitioned the Council for permission to organize a company. The request was not allowed. The engine was repaired by Paul Hilbert and Henry Glasser, but not thoroughly, it would seem, for in 1858 two hundred dollars more were expended for this purpose, through D. B. Kutz & Co.

In 1860 the Borough Council decided to build an engine-house, but the Civil War caused the matter to be suspended. The building was not put up until 1871. It is a two-story brick, twenty-one by thirty feet, and cost one thousand three hundred and forty-nine dollars. In it are housed the old fire-engines, but no company to man the same is now maintained.

Street Improvement.—In 1855 an ordinance was passed to grade Main Street, which was opposed by many property-holders as not conducive to the public welfare, and as tending to increase the taxes unnecessarily. “But we are in favor of having the pavements made, every man’s according to his neighbor’s.”

This year the wages for working on the roads were, for men, eighty-seven and a half cents; for boys, forty-three and three-fourths cents. This exactness and regard for the fraction of a dollar finds a counterpart in the report of the treasurer in 1829, which indicated a balance in the treasury of $30.31.

For a long while the borough maintained the office of clerk of the market, a position which was filled first by Conrad Capp and many years by John Baer.

In 1857 the first lock-up was built by Nathan Levan, by contract, for one hundred and forty-nine dollars. The principal street of the borough is well paved and fairly well lighted. The public improvements were much retarded by the Civil War. The borough was at great expense during that period in procuring volunteers and filling quotas. The following table shows the men furnished and appropriations made:

Total amount $19,905.21

“Of this sum, $1810.00 were raised by private subscription, and $3,000.00 by county bounty; the remainder by the borough.

“The bounty tax in Maxstawnys amounted to $48,000.00.”

Manufactures.—One of the first industries of the place, aside from the ordinary mechanic pursuits, was the building of pipe-organs by the Openheimer Brothers, who removed to Reading where they followed the same occupation.

In the lower part of the borough a tannery was operated for a number of years, with success, by Nathan Levan, who was also a carrier by trade. It was removed about twenty-five years ago.

The Kutztown Tannery was established in 1870 by the present proprietor, J. D. Sharadin. It consists of a main building, thirty-three by seventy-two feet, two stories high, with an extension thirty by thirty feet. The power is furnished by a ten horse-power engine. The product is chiefly oak-tanned harness-leather, although kipp and calf-skins are also prepared. From five to six men are employed.

The Kutztown Shoe-Factory was established in the fall of 1883 by a company composed of Hon. H. H. Schwartz, Dr. J. S. Trexler, Nathan Levan, William F. Stimmel, Lewis A. Stein and A. A. Lentz, under the firm-name of Levan, Stein & Co. Lentz withdrew in 1884. The business has since been carried on successfully by the firm. The factory occupies a large building, formerly used by David Saul as a brewery, but not operated for many years. The firm employ thirty workmen in the factory, and manufacture shoes for ladies, misses and children. An increasing trade indicates the prosperity of their enterprise.

Eck’s Hosiery Factory was established in the fall of 1882 by J. L. Eck. He began operations with three machines, and has steadily increased his business, until now there are thirty weaving and knitting-machines in the factory. A new building was fitted up in 1884, with steam for motive-power. The operatives are girls and boys and the products are plain and fancy hose, chiefly for women and children. About three hundred dozen pairs are manufactured weekly.

Carriage-Factory.—The carriage-factory of R. Miller's Son, on Main Street, was established by R. Miller in 1837. The present building has been occupied since 1873. It is of brick, sixty by sixty-four feet, two stories high, with a blacksmith-shop, thirty by sixty feet, attached. From twelve to eighteen hands are employed on light vehicles and sleighs.

Kutztown Foundry and Machine-Shops.—This industry was established in 1851 by Daniel B. Kutz and Elias Jackson. In 1865 the Zehm Brothers became the proprietors, who, four years later, moved to the present site. The foundry was burned down in 1870 and the present shops were erected the same year. The main shop is of brick, forty-two by one hundred and two feet, two stories high, and is well supplied with lathes and iron-working machinery. The motive-power is furnished by a thirty horse-power engine. The plant embraces about one and one-fourth acres, which include smaller work-shops and buildings for storage purposes. A track from the railroad, close at hand, affords easy shipment for the products of the establishment. Twenty hands are employed in the manufacture of engines, boilers, steam-pumps, mining, milling and slate machinery. A specialty is made of the Keystone Turbine Water-Wheel. The present proprietors are Chas. G. and Fred. S. Zehm.

Isaac Wentzel & Sons built a machine-shop near the Sacony in 1873, consisting of a two-story frame building, thirty by forty-five feet, with steam for motive-power. They manufacture general farming implements.

Cigars.—In the borough the manufacture of cigars is carried on by Fritch & Merker, Harvey Basst and C. W. Keiter, the latter employing sixteen hands.

Bricks.—John H. Mohr and William Weaver each have large and well-appointed brick-yards, just outside the limits of the borough, which give employment to a large number of hands. The clay is of fine quality and the bricks manufactured by them are very durable.

Lime is manufactured extensively by John D. Deisher, Neff Bros., Lewis Brown, A. W. Fritch and William Wessner. The first-named has a dozen kilns. This business affords occupation for a large number of men.

Kutztown Creamery. An association with forty-nine members was organized in the spring of 1881, for the manufacture of butter and cheese; and in the following summer a fine two-story brick building (thirty four by forty-four feet) was put up, and the other necessary buildings provided to carry on the business. The entire outlay was about four thousand dollars. The creamery has been carried on successfully, having about seventy patrons who supply milk daily. In 1885 William S. Kutz was president; David S. Schaefier, treasurer; and Jonathan Biehl, secretary.

Kutztown Furnace was erected by the Kutztown Iron Company, which was incorporated in 1872. Most of the stockholders lived in Kutztown and vicinity, although some persons from abroad were interested. A tract of five acres of land was secured from the D. S. Kutz farm, near the borough, and thereon the furnace was built in 1873, the first ground having been dug July 2d, by Henry Boyer. The contractors were Lee, Noble & Co. The furnace was first operated under a lease by Charles H. Nimson & Co., with Henry C. Cooper as the manager. In the course of a few years the furnace became the property of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, who leased it to different parties. William M. Kaufman & Co. have been the most successful operators. In July, 1888, the boiler of the furnace exploded, upsetting the smoke-stack, which fell across the casting-house and demolished it. Several workmen were fatally injured. Since that time the property has lain in ruins. The capacity of the furnace was nearly two hundred tons per week.

Churches.—St. John's Church, commonly called the old Union Church, from its being the joint property of Lutheran and Reformed Congregations, ranks with the oldest in the county. Its early history is somewhat obscure, owing to the loss of the records; but from the history of contemporary churches, its organization took place some time about 1755. The first meeting-house, built of logs, stood about a mile east of the present site. The church property included twenty-four acres of land. The ministers were Revs. Daniel Lehman and John Henry Helfrich. In 1788 the congregation determined to erect a church in Kutztown.

"On the 9th of November, 1789, the present congregations were reorganized; and on the 24th of May, 1790, the corner-stone of the church was laid. It was dedicated August 7, 1791, with Rev. Daniel Lehman, Evangelical Lutheran preacher, and Rev. John Henry Helfrich, Evangelical Reformed preacher, as officiating ministers on that occasion. The earliest officers were: Trustees on the Lutheran side, Jacob Herman, 1789-1801; Jacob Schweizer, 1789; Michael Weortlein, 1789; and, on the Reformed side, George Pfister, 1789-1889; Jeremiah Kolb, 1789; Peter Christman, 1789-1813; as elders on Lutheran side, George Kistler, 1791; Peter Mathern, 1791; and, on the Reformed side, Nicholas Kieffer, 1791; George Kemp, 1791; as deacons on the Lutheran side, M. Bast, 1791; Abraham Biehl, 1791-95; Nicholas Kutz, 1791-99; Jacob Eser, 1796-99; John Bieber, 1799; John Kutz, 1799; Abraham Eerkel, 1800; and, on the Reformed side, John Siegfried, 1791; Simon George, 1791; John Levan, Jr., 1791; Philip Michael, 1795; Philip Klein, 1797-98; John Funk, 1801.

"In 1812 there was expressed a desire to complete the building. Up to that time it had cost $3307.33. On January 2, 1813, it became free of debt. In 1816 the building was weather-boarded, at an expense of $515.98. In 1842 the church-yard was completed, and in 1846 a new pulpit was constructed. The total cost was about six thousand dollars.

"The real estate of the congregation consists of seven lots. The first three, on the corner of which the building stands, were deeded to it September 8, 1820, for the consideration of one dollar, by Henry Kohler, the owner of them, and the then proprietor of Kutztown. On May 9, 1804, was delivered to it the school lots, Nos. 87 and 88, for five shillings, by Jacob Herman, lessee, and afterwards one of them for school purposes, gratuitously, by Henry Kohler. On one of them must still be paid a yearly ground-rent of thirty seven and a half cents, and on lots Nos. 85 and 86 a yearly ground-rent of seventy-five cents.

"For eighty-six years the Lutheran and Reformed people worshipped Almighty God in this venerable edifice. But the time came when they required a temple that would more worthily represent their zeal and devotion in Divine things. So on April 4, 1876, at a meeting of the joint vestries, they passed the following resolution:

'That the question whether a New Union Church shall be built, shall be submitted to the members of the Lutheran and Reformed congregations of Kutztown, to be decided at an election to be held on April 17th, after service, to be voted upon with written or printed tickets as follows: for building a New Union Church and against building a New Union Church.' The result was two hundred and seventy-nine votes for and seventy-seven against building. There was immediately appointed a committee on subscription,—Charles Rahn, Charles Deisher, George Bieber, David Schaeffer, Jacob Sunday, Charles Kutz, Jonathan Bieber, John Christman, George Kutz, John Kemp, W. Rahn and Jac. Rahn.

"In the presence of a great multitude of people, on Whit-Sunday, June 4th, the corner-stone was laid. The exercises were continued on Whit-Monday, 1876."

The house was so far completed that the basement was used for worship in the fall of 1876, but the church was not fully completed until the following year, when it was formally dedicated. It is of brick, forty-nine by seventy-six feet; the main room is on the second story. The basement is divided into four rooms. The church is supplied with a fine bell, the sound of which can be heard many miles away; and also with an excellent pipe-organ.

The Lutheran congregation had, in 1885, about two hundred and fifty members, with Rev. J. J. Cressman as pastor. His predecessors in the ministry of the church were the Rev. Daniel Lehman, until 1808; Rev. John Knoke, till 1837; Rev. Daniel Kohler, from 1839 to 1851; Rev. G. A. Hinterleiter and Rev. George F. Speiker.

The first minister of the Reformed congregation was the Rev. Henry Helfrich, who was succeeded by Revs. Charles G. Herman and J. Sassa- man Herman. The present pastor is the Rev. J. Ermentrout.
John H. Leinbach. The membership of the congregation is more than three hundred.

The Union Sunday-school maintained in the church had as its superintendents Milton J. Bieber and Charles Christman. The membership of the school was more than two hundred and fifty.

"About 1826 the first Sunday-school was organized under the name of The Kutztown Sunday-School Union. It occupied an independent position. Prior to that time religious instruction was imparted to the young by the preachers, and during the summer, on the Lord's Day, by the organists, who also taught the daily parochial school. In the Fatherland it was, and still is, the custom for the pastor, on every Sunday afternoon, to explain the catechism to the children assembled in the church. But, as the pastors here were overburdened with work, it became necessary to organize the Sunday-school. The opposition to it was at first earnest, but it soon gave way. In addition to the one just mentioned other Sunday-schools were established,—the 'German Reformed and Lutheran Sunday-School' and the 'German Reformed Sunday-School.' Thus, at one time three schools vied with one another in training up the children in the way in which they should go. The last-named school having drained the first named of its members, on April 24, 1868, there was established in place of the 'German Reformed and Lutheran Sunday-School,' an exclusively Lutheran one. Of the latter, the first superintendent was E. D. Bieber.

"The first Union Sunday-school (Reformed and Lutheran) was organized by Rev. J. S. Herrmann, who served as superintendent for a number of years. Even before he became pastor in Kutztown, he had taken a deep interest in the religious education of the young."

Of this Sunday-school John G. Wiik was the superintendent from 1846 to 1857. Many others took a warm interest in its support.

Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church is the offspring of the Lutheran Sunday-school, which was organized April 24, 1868. After meeting in the old church for some time, the conviction was forced on the minds of those interested in its maintenance that its welfare would be best promoted in a house of its own. At the same time the organization of an exclusively Lutheran Church was suggested, and on the 12th of February, 1874, definite action in this direction was taken by the Sunday-school deciding then that it would raise five hundred dollars towards the erection of a building, providing a room therein would be set aside for its use. This proposition was received with favor, and the work of building was begun in earnest, on a lot on the west side of Main Street. The corner-stone of the chapel of the proposed church was laid August 2, 1874, and December 25th of the same year the building was dedicated. It is a neat brick edifice, having a capacity for about five hundred people, costing about six thousand dollars. Nearly one-fourth of this amount was contributed by the Sunday-school. In April, 1876, the Rev. George T. Speiker became the pastor of the new congregation, and since May, 1884, the Rev. W. A. C. Mueller has served in that capacity. In the spring of 1885 the chapel was beautifully frescoed and otherwise improved.

In January, 1886, the congregation numbered two hundred and fifty members, and then it had the following consistory:

W. B. Bieber is superintendent of the Sunday-school, which has about one hundred and seventy-five members.

The Kutztown Reformed Sunday-school was organized May 17, 1863, and had for first president J. S. Herman, and first superintendent H. R. Nicks. Its meetings were first held in the old Union Church, later in the Evangelical Church and the past five years in the public school building. The superintendent, in 1886, was E. L. Kemp. Like Trinity Lutheran Sunday-school, this Sunday-school has led to the formation of a separate congregation to be known as First Reformed Church, which will erect a building on White Oak Street. The style of architecture will be Gothic, the material brick, and the cost about six thousand dollars. The building committee is comprised of Lewis Butz, president; Edward Hottenstein, secretary; David H. Hottenstein, treasurer; J. D. Sharadin, Alfred Neff, William T.
Stimmel and Nathan Kemp. Most of these members formerly had a connection with the St. John's Church.

Salem Church of the Evangelical Association.—The pioneer minister of this persuasion was the Rev. Bishop John Seybert, who preached the first sermon, April 12, 1828, at the house of Peter Neff. From that time until 1848 occasional preaching was held at the houses of such as accepted the faith, but no regular congregation was formed until about two years later, when meetings were held stately. In 1850 a lot on Main Street was bought, and a meeting-house built the same year, which was placed in charge of Trustees Jacob Stoudt, Solomon Ely and Benneville Klein, who were also among the principal members. The building was of brick, thirty-five by forty-five feet, and cost eleven hundred dollars. It served as a place of worship until May 6, 1885, when it was demolished, and the present fine edifice erected by a building committee composed of D. B. Snyder, John R. Gonser, Rev. W. H. Weidner, Silas K. Hoch and H. B. Mohr. It is a two-story brick building, with a very fine steeple, in which is a bell weighing five hundred and sixty pounds. The bell on the old church weighed but eighty pounds. The lower part of the church was occupied in the fall of 1885, and the auditorium will be consecrated in the summer of 1886. Its cost has been six thousand dollars. The trustees are J. C. Gehr, Silas Hoch and D. B. Snyder. The membership of the church is small, numbering only thirty. Their pastor was the Rev. W. H. Weidner, preacher in charge of Kutztown Circuit. Other Evangelical preachers at Kutztown have been the Revs. McLane, Hess, Serm, Wieand, Leopold, Neitz, Ziegenfuss, Gingrich, Schultz, Sechrist, Stauffer, Miller, Yakeal, Overholz, Stermer and Speicher. The Sunday-school has Elias J. Hoch for its superintendent. The first Evangelical Sunday-school was organized May 26, 1851.

Religious meetings are also held in the chapel of the Normal School, but they are non-sectarian in character. The principal of the school and visiting clergyman officiate at the services.

Schools.—The Parochial School, one of the first organized schools, was established by the congregations of the old Union Church, and measures were early taken to make the instruction effective and thorough. "In the rules which they framed on November 9, 1789, it is stated, that as the education of the young in reading, writing, and other branches, is of the highest importance, there shall be built as soon as possible a school-house; that the school-house shall be located near the church; that when built, there shall be elected a man who is not only competent to teach and to sing, but also bears a good moral character; that the preachers, elders and deacons shall have a care that good order prevails in the school, that each child receives proper attention and that no partiality be shown.

"The school-house was built 1804–5. Its first trustees were Jacob Levan, Jr., Jacob Kutz, Jr., Henry Heist and John Bieber, Jr. The trustees had charge of the school-house and were required to hold quarterly examinations of the pupils, in the presence of the teacher, and with the co-operation of the preachers, elders and deacons. The teacher lived in the building. His duties were to lead the singing in church, to play the organ, to teach the children how to pray, to spell, to read, to write, to sing, to cipher; also, during the summer, on the Sundays when there was no divine service, Kinder lehre zu halten, and from time to time to confer with the trustees.

"On May 15, 1805, it was resolved that in the school-house there should be a room for the accommodation of an English teacher; that the following autumn there should be employed one who bore a good character, and who could instruct well in speaking, reading, writing and ciphering; and that the trustees shall have a care that there be English teaching at least every winter." This school was kept up with satisfactory results until after the free school system was introduced.

Common-School System.—In the year 1838 Kutztown accepted the common-school system. On the ground where the present school-building now stands, David Levan erected the first school-house, and on its site, under the supervision of the directors—Hon. H. H. Schwartz, Dr. Charles A. Gerasch, A. Manderbach, Aug. Sprenger and H. F. Bickel—there was built in 1862, at a cost of $3300.00, the building which now ornaments the borough. In it taught, at different periods, J. B. Van Scheett, William Detweiler, John G.

Maxatawny Seminary and Keystone State Normal School.—Toward the close of 1860 a more important educational movement was inaugurated. Rev. J. Sassaman Herman now applied to the Rev. Dr. Gerhart, president of Franklin and Marshall College, for a teacher, and Prof. H. R. Nicks, A.M., a graduate of that institution, was recommended. On November 15, 1860, this gentleman came to Kutztown, and opened Fairview Seminary, in the house now occupied as a residence by Col. Thomas D. Fister. His assistant teachers were John Humbert, Esq., and Harry Weand. In the spring of 1863, Mr. Nicks moved his school into the borough. Through the influence of the professor, a man of fine scholarly attainments, some of the citizens of Kutztown and Maxatawny were induced to purchase five acres of land at two hundred and seventy-five dollars per acre, and to erect on it a building at a cost of four thousand one hundred dollars. This building (fifty by forty feet) became in time the northern wing of the present Keystone State Normal School. In the consummation of this work Prof. Nicks was greatly assisted by the Rev. Dr. Gerhart, who spent several days in Kutztown and vicinity, visiting our citizens and urging the importance of the undertaking. He suggested the plan on which the wing just referred to was erected. In consideration of the fact that the people of the township had manifested a very deep interest in the success of the project, the name of the school was changed from Fairview to Maxatawny Seminary. Prof. Nicks moved into his new home in September, 1864. His chief assistant was Prof. S. Transue, A.M., a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College. During several months of the year 1865, Prof. John S. Erment Trout also assisted in teaching in the seminary. His chief object in doing so was to prepare the way for carrying into effect a project which, as superintendent of the common schools of Berks, he had long entertained. This project was the establishment of a State Normal School in Berks County for the education of teachers.

As he was journeying from Lyons to Kutztown, in the discharge of official duty, the superintendent of schools in the county, saw in the distance the building known as Maxatawny Seminary. It occurred to him that, if the people of that section had taken sufficient interest in the cause of education to erect that building, they might be induced to assist him in carrying out his project of establishing a regular State Normal School for the Third Normal District. On consultation with Prof. Nicks, he found that the project was favored. In 1865 the teachers of Berks County were collected in the seminary, for the purpose of normal instruction but it was found too small to accommodate the students who flocked thither from every part of the county and from adjacent districts. The success of this movement inspired the people of Kutztown and Maxatawny to erect such buildings as the school law required, and to establish a regular Normal School for the district, and to the generous and enterprising citizens of that section of the county belongs the honor of having provided the "material means" which were needed to purchase grounds and put up necessary buildings.

The contributors to the fund for building Maxatawny Seminary were Jacob Sunday and G. Bieber, each five hundred dollars; C. A. Gerasch, D. H. Hottenstein, Lizzie E. Bieber, E. Butz, Susannah Hottenstein, Solomon Christ, each three hundred dollars; D. H. Hottenstein, Jon. S. Bieber, Isaac Roeller, B. E. Kramlich, C. A. Gerasch, A. R. Nicks, E. Butz, Susannah Hottenstein, Wm. Hottenstein, G. Dietrich, Sol. Christ, David Schaeffer, J. D. Wanner, Jno. Kieffer, John Rahn, each two hundred dollars; H. R. Nicks, one hundred and fifty dollars; Ulrich Miller, David Fister, G. Bieber, George Kutz, D. H. Hottenstein, each one hundred dollars; H. R. Nicks, fifty dollars,—total, six thousand five hundred dollars.

Maxatawny Seminary, which was started as a private enterprise, disappeared. For the furniture with which Prof. Nicks had provided it, and for any necessary improvements he had made, he was compensated. Its stock, building and grounds were transferred to a new board of trustees, who purchased five additional acres of land, and began to procure subscriptions with which to erect what is now known as the Keystone State Normal School. Within a year, to the building formerly known as Maxatawny Seminary were added a centre building, one hundred by forty feet, and two wings each fifty by forty feet.
These improvements were made possible in consequence of subscriptions by the following, who were also the original stockholders of the Normal School:

They selected as the first board of trustees,—

"L. K. Hottenstein, Pres.; David H. Hottenstein, Sec.; Lesher Trexler, M.D., President of the Board of Stockholders; Jonas Hoch, Secretary of the Board of Stockholders; Chas. Gerash, M.D., Treasurer; H. Bushong, E. Butz, D. Dietrich, John S. Ermentrout, D. Fister, Hon. Jno. H. Fogel, Edward Hottenstein, M.D., Hon. J. Glancy Jones, Rev. B. E. Kramlich, D. Luther, M.D., J. Miller, H. R. Nichols, Hon. H. H. Schwartz, D. Schaeffer, A. Stein, J. D. Wanner, Esq."

"The individual who first conceived, suggested and urged the erection of a Normal School at Kutztown was Prof. John S. Ermentrout, then Superintendent of Common Schools in Berks Co. The Hon. H. H. Schwartz, a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, Pa., procured the architectural design. He, Profs. Nicks and Ermentrout, and the Rev. B. E. Kramlich deserve great credit for the zeal with which they encouraged the great work to its final completion."

"The corner-stone was laid Sept. 17, 1865, by the County Superintendent of Berks County; and addresses were delivered by Hon. J. Lawrence Getz, William Rosenthal, Esq., Hon. Daniel Ermentrout, Llewellyn Wanner, Esq., and Prof. Albert N. Raub."

"On September 13, 1866, the school was recognized by the State Superintendent, Hon. Chas. R. Coburn, and the Committee of Inspection, as the State Normal School for the Third District, which embraces the counties of Berks, Schuylkill and Lehigh. The Inspectors were the Hons. W. Worthington, G. Landon, S. Elliott, Thaddens Banks and the County Superintendents, John S. Ermentrout, of Berks, Jesse Newlin, of Schuylkill, and E. J. Young, of Lehigh."

On the 15th of September, 1866, the building was formally dedicated, "with the celebration of appropriate religious and literary exercises, to the honor of Almighty God, to the service of a sound Christian morality and to the educational interests of the State of Pennsylvania."

The first principal of the Keystone Normal School was John S. Ermentrout, A.M., Professor of Mental and Moral Science, and of Theory and Practice of Teaching. From 1866-71 he discharged the duties of this position. During the first year of its existence there were enrolled three hundred and eighteen students.

During the first year the following teachers were employed: H. R. Nicks, A.M., Associate Principal, and Professor of Mathematics and Physics; Albert N. Raub, A.M., of English Language and Literature and Vocal Music; Samuel Transeau, A.M., of Ancient Languages and History; Edward T. Burgan, M.E., Superintendent of Model School; Rev. G. F. Speiker, of German Language and Literature; Lesher Trexler, M.D., of Anatomy, Physiology and Hygiene; Miss Julia E. Bullard, M.L., of Instrumental Music, French, Painting and Drawing; Mary Morrison, of Reading, Geography; and P. S. Umbenhauer, Pupil Assistant.

In 1871 the Rev. A. R. Horne, A.M., was elected as the principal, Professor Ermentrout having gone to another field of labor; but he did not take charge of the school until March, 1872. Meantime Prof. N. C. Schaeffer was the acting principal, and, upon the retirement of Professor Horne, in the summer of 1877, he became principal, which office he has since filled with great success.

Professor Schaeffer was born in Maxatawney in 1849, educated at the Keystone Normal and graduated from Franklin and Marshall College in 1867. Studied theology, was ordained to the ministry and pursued a course of study in the Universities of Berlin, Tubingen and Leipzic from 1873 to 1875.

R. R. Koch.
Returning to this country, he taught several years in Franklin and Marshall College and then re- signed his professorship to become principal of the Keystone Normal School.

In 1885 the organization of the school was as follows:

Officers: Rev. B. E. Kramlich, president of board of trustees; John Humbert, secretary of board of trustees; David H. Hottenstein, president of board of stockholders; Dr. Edward Hottenstein, secretary of board of stockholders; Prof. John J. Hottenstein, treasurer; Dewalt F. Bieber, steward.

Allen Hottenstein, James H. Marx and F. K. Berndt have been superintendents of the Model School.

In 1868 the first class was graduated, consisting of six young men, namely, W. M. Achenbach, George H. Heffner, R. N. Lehman, J. H. Marx, A. D. Rowe and F. F. Springer. Since that time the number of graduates annually in the elementary course has been as follows:

The following have been the graduates in the scientific course:

Of the two hundred and seventy graduates, ninety were from Berks County. A majority of the graduates have devoted themselves to teaching. Fourteen of the graduates have been awarded State certificates.

The total enrollment of students in 1885 was five hundred and forty-four.

The Normal School buildings are located upon an elevated campus, ten acres in extent, which have been highly beautified. The observatory of the main building commands a magnificent view of the surrounding country. In addition to the original buildings, a building for the ladies' department of the school was erected in 1880-81.

In 1884 the trustees erected another building, which contains a dining-room and kitchen, a commodious chapel and four recitation-rooms, and a number of dormitories.

The building presents a front of three hundred and fifty feet and a depth of one hundred and ninety feet. The property is estimated to be worth one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Two literary societies, connected with the school, contribute to the progress and culture of the students. Each has a library of one thousand volumes.

The school is well supplied with illustrative philosophical apparatus, geological and ornithological cabinets, and an extensive herbarium, containing the entire flora of the county.

Centennial Monument.—On the 4th of July, 1876, a fine monument was erected in the enclosure of the Keystone State Normal School, before the main building.

"The base is a granite stone, weighing two tons and a half. On this rests an octagonal die which supports an octagonal spire, both of Italian marble, and upon the spire there is an octagonal cap, surmounted with an eagle. The whole work reflects great credit on the sculptor, Mr. Philip Wentz. The cost was two hundred and fifty dollars. Of this sum, Mr. Wentz himself subscribed seventy-five dollars, and the remainder was collected in town and in the Normal School by Mrs. Dr. Charles H. Wanner and the Misses Alesa Helfrich and Harriet B. Swineford. On the four larger sides of the die the following mottoes are inscribed, which were selected by a committee consisting of Rev. Professor Horne, Professor John S. Ermentrout and County Superintendent Samuel A. Baer."
On the north side,—"Unser Frei Schul Wesakunft fun da Pennsilfownish Deitscha har. Der Govaner Wolf hat's geplant un g'start un der Rittner un der Shunk hen's ausg'fuehrt."

On the south,—"Nee scire fas est omnia."

On the east,—"Wie gott mit unsern Vaetern war, so sei er auch mit uns."

On the west,—"Virtue, Liberty and Independence."

The following articles were deposited in that part of the monument on which the spire rests:

The history of Kutztown and Maxatawny; the latest newspapers of the county; ancient coins; almanacs and coins of 1876; a catalogue of the Normal School for 1876; the names of contributors to the monument; and the late census of Kutztown, continental scrip, and a silver quarter dated 1776, donated by A. J. Fogel. Professor John S. Ermentrout deposited these articles, and delivered an appropriate address. The chairman of the monumental committee, County Superintendent S. A. Baer, presented the monument to the chief burgess of the borough, and the chief burgess to the trustees of the Keystone Normal School, who received the same through their president, the Hon. H. H. Schwartz.

Banks.—Kutztown Savings-Bank was chartered in 1869, with a capital of twenty-four thousand dollars in twelve hundred shares at twenty dollars each. It began business with a paid-up capital of six thousand. The first president was J. H. Fogel, and Edward Hottenstein was the first cashier. The bank suspended business in November, 1876, on account of the general stagnation of trade which crippled its loans. In 1876 W. C. Dietrich was the cashier.

Peabody Savings-Bank was organized a year later, with J. D. Wanner as cashier. It met a similar fate after being ten years in business.

National Bank of Kutztown obtained its charter under the general banking laws of the United States in 1871. Its authorized capital was sixty thousand dollars, with the privilege of increase to two hundred thousand dollars. John H. Fogel was the president, and Thomas D. Fister the cashier. J. G. Wink succeeded the former as president, and held that position until the bank was removed to Reading, in the spring of 1883, when the name was changed to Keystone National Bank. A branch of this bank for receiving deposits is still maintained in the Trexler Block at Kutztown.

Press.—The history of the press of the borough is noted in detail in Chapter XVII., Newspapers.

In 1886 there was a finely-equipped office, the property of A. B. Urich, from which he regularly published the Journal and the Patriot, German and semi-English papers, edited by Conrad Gehring, both of which were well patronized.

Post-office at Kutztown was established in 1805, and had for many years poor mail facilities. Henry Heist was one of the first postmasters, and was succeeded by his son Joseph, who held the office until after 1850. His successors were George Fister, Reuben Bast, Charles Helfrich, Jonathan Bieber, Christian Bieber, and since April, 1885, William Sander. The office is supplied with half a dozen mails per day, and distributes a large amount of matter.

Physicians.—Among those who first practiced medicine at Kutztown was a Dr. Ephraim Becker, of whom but little more than the name is now remembered. The Baums, Drs. David and William, came soon afterward, but did not remain long, both removing to the West. At a later date Dr. Christian L. Schlemm (who died in Richmond township) was a practitioner of high repute. Dr. James Donagan was long in practice, serving also as town clerk. He removed to Reading where he studied law, and in the latter years of his life followed that profession. Dr. Evan Slough came from Easton, to which place he returned after a few years' stay.

Dr. Charles A. Gerasch came to the county in 1829, settled first at Mertztown, but later at Kutztown, where he became one of the foremost physicians of the county. He died July 22, 1876, and his funeral was the largest ever held at Kutztown. Dr. Reuben Haines was in the borough from about 1836 until his death, eight years later. Dr. William S. Bieber was in the place about the same time, and died two years afterward. He was the father of Dr. Lewis Bieber, of Phillipsburg, N. J. Dr. Edward Hottenstein first practiced in Maxatawny township, and since 1870 in the borough. Dr. Elmer K. Hottenstein is also in practice at Kutztown. Dr. Jeremiah S. Trexler succeeded Dr. Charles A. Gerasch, and is now in active practice. Dr. Charles H. Wanner practiced at Kutztown till his death, November 12, 1869, at the age of forty-two years. Dr. Cyrus Wanner has been at Kutztown in active practice since 1875. Dr. L. C. Berkemeyer came to the place as a druggist, but has been professionally engaged the past few years. Additional physicians have been Drs. J. H. Helfrich, J. N. Shoemaker and Solomon Becker.

In dentistry may be named H. L. and A. B. Johnson, Samuel and James O'Boyle and William Steller, A. B. Johnson and James O'Boyle continuing to the present.

As graduates from medical colleges, who removed from Kutztown and vicinity, may be named David Hottenstein, Levi Thompson, Charles Schlemm, W. S. Bieber, Edward Hottenstein, W. Reichard, Thomas Strasser, L. Bieber, A. C. Hottenstein, E. N. Bieber, W. Reber and T. T. Thompson.

Lawyers.—Among the attorneys at this place were Silas E. Buzzard, John K. Longenecker, Henry Kutz and Frederick John Haller, who was also a teacher.

H. H. Schwartz was an attorney at Kutztown from 1860 till 1883, when he was elevated to the office of Orphans' Court judge of Berks County.

James H. Marx has been a successful attorney in the borough since 1878.

Farmers’ Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Berks and Lehigh Counties was organized in 1857. Its directors in January, 1886, were Benneville Smith, president; William Siegfried, treasurer; Jonathan Biehl, secretary; C. H. Dietrich, Thomas D. Mohr and Stephen Smith. The office of the secretary is at Kutztown. The company carries twelve hundred risks, representing three million dollars, in farm and detached village property. The average cost of insurance, up to this period, has been about $1.25 per thousand per annum.

Brotherly Love Lodge, No. 77, was instituted in October, 1842, and for many years flourished. The war and removals decimated its numbers to such an extent that its meetings had to be discontinued in January, 1879.

Kutztown Council, No. 48, Order of Senior American Mechanics, instituted March 22, 1858, was the next in the order of time. It, too, was weakened by the war and by the stagnation of business which followed the panic of 1873. At one time it had a membership of one hundred and twenty, but it weakened so that, in 1876, it was forced to disband.

Friendship Link, No. 6, Daughters of Liberty, was instituted February 21, 1867, with thirty-six members, as a beneficiary society for ladies, to provide a fund in case of sickness or death. The order proved highly beneficial so long as it was kept up, but lack of interest and changes in the social relations of the ladies belonging to the society forced it to disband March 30, 1876.

Kutztown Lodge, No. 307, Knights of Pythias, was instituted in 1872, but, after a few years of successful existence, in which period more than one hundred members were enrolled, it was obliged to surrender its charter in 1878, on account of lack of interest in the welfare of the order.

Tucaoulido Council, No. 116, Junior American Mechanics, was instituted in 1870, and disbanded in 1878.

Maxatawny Grange, No. 14, Patrons of Husbandry, was instituted in the fall of 1873, and had for its first Master George Kutz. His successors were William DeTurk and Lewis Wagenhorst. The meetings were first held at Kutztown, but later in the township, where a sort of co-operative store was also maintained. At one time there were more than fifty members, but their interest in the good of the order declined to such an extent that the meetings could no longer be kept up, and it was discontinued in 1876.

Huguenot Lodge, No. 377, F. and A. M., was instituted November 29, 1866, as a lodge of the Ancient York Masons, by J. L. Stichter, of Reading. It has had a flourishing existence, the membership being more than a hundred.

Kutztown Lodge, No. 214, D. O. Harugari, whose motto is “Freundschaft, Liebe und Humanität,” was instituted May 20, 1870. Unlike most lodges of this order, the membership is composed largely of native-born citizens, only a few Germans of foreign birth belonging to it. In the first five years of its existence the lodge had more than a hundred members, but the panic of 1873 reduced the number to sixty-three. In January, 1886, ninety members were reported. The lodge has invested fund of two thousand dollars and holds its meetings in a very fine room. On the 4th of July, 1876, the lodge dedicated a lot in Fairview Cemetery for the use of its members, upon which it planted an oak-tree as its symbol.

Adonis Castle, No. 70, Knights of the Golden Eagle, was instituted January 14, 1886, with thirty-seven charter members.

Cemeteries.—Hope Cemetery Company was incorporated September 17, 1861. The cemetery was consecrated June 22, 1862. The subscribers were Samuel Shearer, Daniel Bieber, John W.
Bieber, William Heine, David Kutz, Jacob R.
Heffner and Charles W. Esser. Purchasers of lots in the cemetery obtain a mutual membership in the company, whose affairs are controlled by nine trustees. In 1886 these were George J. Kutz, president; John Humbert, secretary; Jonathan Biehl, treasurer; J. R. Heffner, Reuben Kutz, D.
S. Kutz, David Schaeffer, William Shaedle and William Sanders. The cemetery consists of about three acres of land, near St. John's Church. A neat iron fence was erected along Church Alley, at a cost of sixteen hundred dollars. The lot-owners number about two hundred. The first burial was John D. Bieber, December 30, 1861.

Fairview Cemetery was consecrated June 15, 1861. It consists of five acres of finely-located land, lying beyond the campus of the Normal School. It is also controlled by an association, having no ecclesiastical connection. This body was organized April 12, 1861. In January, 1886, it had one hundred and ninety-two members.
The officers then were: President, Isaac F. Christ;
Secretary, Jonathan Hoch; Treasurer, J. D.
Wanner. The cemetery has been inclosed with a substantial stone and iron fence and presents an attractive appearance. Isadore Weiser was the first person interred.

Keystone Agricultural and Horticultural Society was chartered in 1870, with forty-one stockholders. Its first officers were Elijah De Turck, president; John R. Gonser, secretary; and L. K.
Hottenstein, treasurer. Fifteen acres of land, near the borough limits, were purchased and improved for fair purposes. A race-course was constructed and substantial buildings were erected for the display of textile and manufactured goods. The outlay was nearly fifteen thousand dollars. Notwithstanding the exhibitions first held were successful, the receipts were inadequate to defray the amounts expended, which embarrassed the society to such an extent, in the course of a few years, that a foreclosure was inevitable. At a sale of the same, Jacob R. Heffner and Joshua A. Levan became the owners, and by a subsequent transfer the property passed into the hands of W. H. Heffner. The society attained its zenith in 1876.

From that time on the business depression which affected Kutztown caused a diminished interest in the affairs of the society; and, although the annual exhibitions have been maintained, they have not reached the high standard of the first meetings. In 1872 Horace Greeley visited Kutztown and delivered the annual address before the society; in 1874 the orator was the Hon. Alexander Ramsey; and in 1875 Judge Humphreys, of Washington, D. C. The meetings are now held under the direction of the owners of the property.

Berks County Poultry Association was or-organized at Kutztown, in the latter part of 1875, with L. C. Berkenmeyer, president; Conrad Gehring, secretary; J. H. Marx, corresponding secretary; S. S.
Schmehl, treasurer. Its first and only exhibition was held January 11–14, 1876, the association disbanding soon afterwards.

Biographical.

Nathan Levan is descended from Huguenot stock, and the great-grandson of Jacob Levan, who resided in Maxatawny township. His son John, who later occupied the homestead, married a Miss Schwoyer, whose children were Daniel, Gideon, John, Samuel, David, Perry, Harrison; and daughters, Mrs. Levan, Mrs. Kahl, Mrs. De Turck and Mrs. Houpt.

John, of this number, was born in the year 1800, and resided on a farm adjacent to the homestead in Maxatawny township. He married Susan, daughter of Jacob Glasser, of the same township, and had children,—Nathan, Jacob (deceased), Joshua (deceased), Susan, Mary (deceased) and Louisa. John Levan died in 1850. His son, Nathan was born on the 12th of November, 1828, in Maxatawny township, and remained at the home of his parents until his seventeenth year.
He meanwhile attended the academy at Kutztown, and on completing his studies entered the tannery of William Hine, of Rockland township. On the completion of his apprenticeship, he removed to Philadelphia, and pursued his trade in that city for five years. Returning to his native county, he built a tannery in Kutztown, and for five years conducted a successful business. Selling the property at the expiration of this

Mr. Levan, in politics, is a Democrat, and, during the war, was president of the Borough Council of Kutztown, manifesting then great patriotism, by his efforts to fill the required quota and by earnestly supporting the Union cause during that eventful period. He is a member of the Reformed Church of Kutztown, in which he is an elder. Mr. Levan was, on the 24th of November, 1880, married to Ella F., daughter of Samuel and Harriet F. Berlin, of Cherryville, Northampton County, Pa. Their only child, a son, John Nathan, was born in August, 1884, at Kutztown.

WOMELSDORF.

The borough of Womelsdorf is situated on the “Berks and Dauphin Turnpike,” fourteen miles from Reading and about a mile north of Womelsdorf Station, on the Lebanon Valley Railroad. It contains three churches, a fine public school building, four hotels and about a dozen places of business. It is an old town, laid out in 1762 by John Womelsdorf, from whom it takes its name. The town-plan comprised seventy-five lots. Until sixty years ago it was known and designated in the records as Middletown, probably from its location midway between Reading and Lebanon. In 1885 the population was nearly eleven hundred, but as three hundred were reported in 1800, the increase since that time has been only about ten per year. The place has been substantially improved and contains a number of fine buildings.

Among the first settlers of the borough were families bearing the names of Seltzer, Salladé, Bressler, Sicherthaler, Bennethum, Moyer, Simmons, Reed, Pliny, Hersch, German, Stouch, Lesher, Ermentrout, Petree, Brownell, Arnold, Yeiser, Smith, See, Vanderslice, Diehl, Livingood, Voneida, Stephens and Kintzer.

The old landmarks have nearly all been removed. No direct descendants of John Womelsdorf remain. Jacob Seltzer, grandfather of Michael Seltzer, built the first house in 1762. It was long used as a tavern and well adapted for that purpose. It was constructed of large limestone blocks and stood on the lot now occupied by the mansion of Harry A. Fidler. It was demolished about fifteen years ago. It was at this house that Washington sojourned all night November 13, 1788, and where John Pliny addressed him in behalf of the citizens. The road at that time passed direct by the Conrad Weiser house, along the rise of ground, and at the tavern turned northwest in its course across the mountain.

The following list comprises the taxable inhabitants of Middletown (Womelsdorf) for the year 1790:

John M. Smith and Isaac Y. Kintzer were the justices of the peace in 1885, the latter having served during the past seventeen years.

¹ In 1885 the Rev. William Hendel was elected high constable, his name having been placed upon the ticket "as a good joke upon the reverend gentleman." But to the surprise of all the citizens of the borough, he accepted his commission and enforced the ordinances strictly. He was still in the ministry at the time.
Post-Office.—The post-office at Womelsdorf was established July 1, 1807.

In 1844 Womelsdorf contained a population of nine hundred; one hundred and twenty-five houses, three stores and three taverns; three churches,—Lutheran and German Reformed, Presbyterian and Evangelical Association; three schools, and an academy, built in 1834, of which Rev. Morse was the principal. [Rupp.]

In July, 1850, the borough contained—

Physicians.—A number of physicians of more than ordinary prominence have resided and practiced in Womelsdorf. Among those who made a name in that profession were Drs. John Livingood, John Lesher, William Gries, Wm. Moore, Daniel B. D. Beaver and John M. Stephen. Later practitioners are Drs. James C. Livingood, Lewis A. Livingood, Horace P. Livingood and Franklin L. Sallade.

Taverns.—The present Seltzer House was originally a two-story building, erected before 1800. For nearly fifty years Michael Seltzer served the public as a landlord. Contemporary with him for some years was Conrad Stouch at the present Centre House (which was then the stage-office). Where John H. Spatz has kept an inn the past twenty years Jacob Moyer “fed man and beast” in the pioneer days of Womelsdorf. The patronage of taverns was then large, and all of them were great centres for the exchange of news and the transaction of business.

In the neighborhood of these inns a riot took place during the building of the Lebanon Valley Railroad, in 1856. For some cause the workmen became disaffected and desired to show anger against the paymasters, who had an office in the lower end of the borough. But before they could do great damage the Ringgold Light Artillery, from Reading, restored order by planting its guns at various points in the streets and overawing the mob. Several of the leaders were arrested, but nearly all of them managed to escape, and the excitement soon subsided.

Industries.—The first settlers of Womelsdorf were supplied with flour made by Seltzer’s mill, on the Tulpehocken, at the lower end of the borough. This was an old landmark, which gave way to a new mill built by David Laucks, in 1862, and which was supplied with steam as an auxiliary power in 1877. Mahlon Fogelman is the present proprietor. Northwest of the borough Adam Brown had another grist mill, which, in an improved condition, is still running. A distillery was there carried on for a time by John Longenecker and others, but it has long since been discontinued.

The making of hats was a profitable occupation of some of the people at Womelsdorf in the early part of this century. Among others, Michael Petree and John and Samuel Ermentrout had shops where they manufactured all kinds of hats. A tannery was carried on by David Bennethum on Second Street, and John Palm made guns, whose reputation was not confined to the immediate neighborhood. These industries have passed away. The usual shops of mechanics are carried on in the borough. The place has never encouraged manufacturing; hence its lack of work-shops. Several general stores in the borough are afforded a large and thriving business. Pliny had a store on the Filbert corner and was in trade about the same time as Henry Hersch, whose store was where is now John Long’s undertaking shop. Near by, at a later day, Peter Eckert was in trade and was followed by Lott Benson. Huff & Deckert and Seibert were also early merchants.

Valentine’s Cigar-Factory is the most noteworthy industry in the borough. It is carried on in the Seibert mansion, and with its spacious grounds is one of the finest factories in the State; and in the extent of its business it ranks with the leading cigar-factories in the country. The head of the firm, A. S. Valentine, began the manufacture of cigars at Womelsdorf, in a very small way, in 1852. As his business prospered he extended his facilities. In 1885 nearly four hundred hands were employed by his firm. Of this number, about one-third found occupation in the home factory, the remainder being employed in smaller factories, at Womelsdorf and Stouchsburg, controlled by the firm. In 1876 George H. Valentine became associated with his father in carrying on this business. A number of buildings have been occupied by the firm, but since 1882 the factory has been at its present quarters. The trade of the firm is chiefly in the South and the West, the products being distributed through jobbing-houses, for whom special grades of work are made.

Schools.—It is said that Baron Stiegel, the unfortunate iron-master, taught a school at Womelsdorf in 1765, having been brought to that place by the Rev. John Nicholas Kurtz. Among other pioneer teachers, Walker Stephen is best remembered. He made teaching a profession and followed it with success for a period of sixty years, teaching at Womelsdorf as late as 1882. He also started the first Sunday-school at that place. In 1828 the High Schools found encouragement in the building of an academy, which was successfully carried on until about 1855. Among those active in promoting this object were Dr. William Gries, Dr. John Livingood, Andrew Taylor, John Seltzer, John Smith, George Keiser and Jacob Salladé. In time it was found necessary to enlarge the building and to place the academy in charge of an incorporated 1 board of directors. Prof. Howell, Robert Kerr and William Reynolds are best remembered as successful teachers.

In a few years after the academy was abandoned the building became the property of the Public School Board and was used until 1880, when the present High School building was erected.

In the eastern part of the borough a select school was established in 1866, through the efforts of Elias Fidler and others, and in which Miss Moore, Miss Quimby, Charles F. Evans and John S. Grumbein were successful teachers, the latter teaching last in 1875. The following year Mr. Grumbein opened a school in a building at the railroad station, which was discontinued soon afterward, in consequence of his death, March, 1877. He was a teacher of rare ability, and also richly endowed with inventive skill. He was particularly known as a superior mathematician.

In 1880 the High School building at Womelsdorf was erected, at a cost of about four thousand five hundred dollars. It has an eligible location on the site of the old academy, and is a fine two-story brick building. It comprises four rooms, occupied by Primary, Secondary, Grammar and High Schools. The average attendance is over two hundred. At the time the building was erected the board of directors was composed of Rev. T. C. Leinbach, president; Isaac Y. Kintzer, secretary; John Haak, treasurer; Dr. H. B. Hamaker, C. P. Moyer and C. P. Kreitzer. An additional school is occasionally maintained in the old Universalist Church, making five public schools in the borough.

Churches.—Zion's Lutheran and German Reformed Church.—In 1792 adherents of the Evangelical Lutheran and German Reformed Churches residing at Womelsdorf and vicinity determined to jointly build a house of worship. The cornerstone of the church was laid June 30, 1792. The building was completed some years afterward. It was constructed of stone, and possessed the features peculiar to the church architecture of that day. The mason-work was done by Thomas Miller; the carpenters were Christian Miller, Philip Webber and George Strickler. The building committee was composed of Heinrich Seltzer, Philip Moyer, Jacob Seltzer, Frederick Bechtold, Daniel Graeff, Johannes German, Adam Ruth, Conrad Weiser, Conrad Stouch, Heinrich Hersch, Johannes Keiser, Jacob Eckert.

Originally the building had a floor of brick. In 1867 the church was rebuilt. Peter Althouse, Samuel Filbert and John Moyer acted as the

2 In reference to the erection of this church, an act was passed February 1, 1805, and Nicholas Eckart, Henry Hirsh, George Ege, Jr., Conrad Stouch, John Keiser, John Weisser and Daniel Graeff were appointed commissioners "to raise fifteen hundred dollars by lottery, to be applied in defraying expenses of erecting Zion Church and two school-houses at Womelsdorf, Berks County."

The following prizes were given to numbers drawn: $600 to No. 2528; $300 to No. 2444; $200 to No. 1383; $100 to Nos. 5, 1162, 1795; $50 to 18 numbers; $25 to 40 numbers; $10 to 70 numbers; $5 to 100 numbers; $3 to 800 numbers. Altogether there were 1084 numbers of the value of $7200.
building committee. It remains substantially as they delivered it to the congregations. It is a large two-story stone edifice, supplied with a steeple and bell. In 1883 the trustees were John Moyer, Michael Seltzer and Charles P. Kreitzner. The loss of records will not permit us to give a full history of the congregations, but when the church was first built the Lutheran preacher was the Rev. Emanuel Shultz, and the Rev. Daniel Wagner the Reformed.

The Reformed congregation was served in 1885 by the Rev. Levi D. Stambaugh, in connection with other appointments. Some of the intermediate pastors have been the Revs. Lewis D. Stickley, George Wolf, D.D., — Zehring Pauli and William Hendel, D.D. In 1885 this congregation had two hundred and seventy-five members, and Enoch John M. Smith, Levi Manderbach, John and William Yoder as its consistory.

The Lutheran congregation at the same time had the Rev. Aaron Finrock as pastor, he having served the church since September, 1865. He succeeded the Rev. Eggers. The congregation in 1885 numbered two hundred and twenty-five, and had Thomas E. Haak, Charles Geisler, William B. Filbert and Frank Haak as elders and deacons.

INTERMENTS — Among the numerous interments in Zion's Church Cemetery the following are noted:

- Philip Schwalm, born 1790; died 1849.
- Magdalen Ermentrout, born 1774; died 1846.
- Jacob Moyer, born 1770; died 1851.
- John Nicholas Moyer, born 1769; died 1828.
- Johann Bennethum, born 1765; died 1828.
- Rev. William Hendel, born 1768; died 1846.

Reformed minister fifty years.

- Jared Weiser, born 1758; died 1820.
- John Seltzer, born 1790; died 1858.
- Joseph Kendall, born 1779; died 1826.
- Conrad Stouch, born 1757; died 1849.
- Peter Womelsdorf, born 1787; died 1843.
- George Bennethum, born 1759; died 1851.
- Philip Lash, born 1774; died 1838.
- John Dietrich Gries, born 1754; died 1833.
- Christopher Ermentrout, born 1756; died 1825.

- John Vanderslice, born 1770; died 1846.
- George Ulrich, born 1797; died 1844.
- Johann Hoffman, born 1759; died 1835.
- Margaret Shoffer, born 1739; died 1815.

Robert Woods, born 1765; died 1840.
Anna Salladé, born 1727; died 1806.
John Lebo, born 1779; died 1805.
Andrew Stouch, born 1780; died 1864.
John Jacob Schoenfelder, born 1762; died 1829.
Frances Moore, born 1777; died 1858.
John Salladé, born 1768; died 1855.
Johannes Filbert, born 1777; died 1857.
Peter Neff, born 1779; died 1854.
George Ege, born 1779; died 1812.

The monument of the Ege family in this cemetery is worthy of special mention. The cemetery is kept in fine order.

New Lutheran Church.—In 1858 a number of persons at Womelsdorf associated for the purpose of maintaining worship according to the customs of the new school Lutherans. For this purpose they secured the use of the old Presbyterian meeting-house, and they have met there statedly since. The congregation, as originally composed, has as elders, Elias Fidler and Absalom Fisher; Deacons, Peter Spang and William M. Salladé; and Isaac Fidler, Isaac Womelsdorf, John M. Schonour, John H. Sell and Jacob Stout were among the other members. The Rev. J. M. Ditzler became the first pastor, preaching about ten years, and was followed by the Revs. Uriel Graves, G. J. Mortz, E. Lenhart, P. C. Croll and Isaiah B. Christ. At one time the congregation had eighty members, but as no regular service has been maintained the past six months, the interest in the work has declined, and not more than half that number retain their profession.

Emanuel Evangelical Church — Members of the Evangelical Association worshipped at Womelsdorf more than fifty years ago at the houses of those who had accepted that faith, and later in a small brick meeting-house, standing at the lower end of the town. This was demolished in 1867, and the present neat church edifice erected on an adjoining lot. It is thirty-eight by sixty-five feet, two stories high and constructed of brick. The building committee were Zachariah Burns, Isaac Deppen, Isaac Miller, Ezra Price and John Yost.

In 1869 a parsonage was built on the old church lot, which is the home of the preacher in charge of Womelsdorf Circuit. This circuit embraces, besides the church here, appointments at Bernville, Bern, Centreport and Leesport. In 1885 the resident pastor was the Rev. J. Savitz. His predecessors during the past twenty years were as follows: The Revs. J. L. Ginther, D. W. Bixler, Isaac Hess, F. Sechrist, John Koehl, I. E. Knerr, A. Leopolt and C. Breyfogle, the latter having been in charge when the church was built. In 1885 the trustees were Samuel E. Dundore, Isaac P. Deppen, Samuel Mumma, John C. Bickle and A. Baucet. The membership of the church was about fifty and its service was alternately in the English and German languages.

Presbyterians.—The Presbyterians in this community were always weak numerically; but, inspired by a zealous purpose to provide a place for English worship, a meeting house was built in July, 1834, on a lot of ground set aside for this purpose by Misses Frances Moore and Lydia Moore. In this house the Rev. Mr. Morse and others expounded the gospel, the most of the ministers being supplies from neighboring Presbyterian Churches. Preaching was conducted regularly and successfully for twenty years. Then, owing to the death of those mostly interested in the society, the congregation weakened and the preaching was afforded only at intervals. The Presbyterian Synod still retains its title to the church property, and, in 1885, it was held in trust for the Synod by William Livengood, William G. Moore, James Moore and John M. Stephen.

Universalists.—The Universalists also had the nucleus of a society at Womelsdorf, nearly half a century ago, and, through the efforts of the Longeneckers, Manderbachs and others, a meeting-house was built, in which preaching was maintained at irregular periods for several years. The building was then sold to the board of school directors and is still used for school purposes.

Union Cemetery is controlled by an association organized in 1858, which had as directors Elias Fidler, president; William M. Sallade, secretary; Peter Spang, treasurer; and Dr. William Moore and John M. Schonour. The association bought three acres of land on the hill north of the borough and west of the Union Church, which was improved for cemetery purposes, and, in 1883, purchased an addition of three acres. The whole is neatly inclosed. It is the burial-place of many of the oldest families of that part of the county, and contains a number of fine monuments. On the death of Elias Fidler and Dr. Moore, Adam S. Valentine and William G. Moore became directors. With the exception of these changes, the board of directors remains the same as when first organized.

Societies.—Williamson Lodge, No. 307, F. and A. M., was instituted at Womelsdorf, April 1, 1857, with the nine charter members named below: John M. Stephen, E. Penn Smith, William Moore, John M. Schonour, John H. Oberly, John H. Sell, Charles Phillips, William A. Moyer and Thomas S. Searle. Dr. Stephens was the first Master of the lodge. In 1885 it had eighty-eight members.

Golden Rule Lodge, No. 159, I. O. O. F., was instituted February 16, 1846, with the following charter members: Jacob H. Boyer, Samuel Stites, Jeremiah Clause, Jonathan Kloppe, Elijah P. Smith, H. Vanderalice, William Yerger, Jacob Sutter, Daniel Smith, H. C. Dewalt, Joseph Smith, Jacob F. Peters, Edward Walborn and Benj. Spatz. In 1885 the lodge had a membership of seventy-nine.

Washington Camp, No. 67, Patriotic Sons of America, was instituted on August 6, 1869, with twenty members. It is still an active organization. In 1885 it reported a membership of one hundred and thirty-seven. Previously a camp had been in existence at Womelsdorf for a time, but it was allowed to go down.

Neversink Council, No. 127, United American Mechanics, was instituted at Womelsdorf, in 1851, with twelve charter members. The meetings of council have been held with continued interest. The present membership is seventy-three. The council has had an aggregate membership of three hundred and seventy-five.

Military Encampment.—A military encampment was held at Womelsdorf in August, 1842, in which five militia companies participated,—Reading Artillerists, National Greys (Reading), Bernville Troop, Womelsdorf Rifles, Lebanon Company.

A large number of people visited the encampment, and the customary amusements were extensively patronized.

General Washington's Visit.—The following account of Washington's visit to Womelsdorf has been taken from the "Life of Captain Samuel Dewees," which was published by John Smith Hanna in 1844:
"The young men of Womellsdorff, and adjoining country, fired with the same undying spirit of true patriotism, organized themselves into a volunteer company, and chose me for their Captain. In 1783, if my memory serves me right, General Washington, when President of the United States, made a tour through the eastern part of Pennsylvania, passing through Reading, Lancaster, Harrisburg, Carlisle, Chambersburg, etc. After leaving Reading, he came to Womellsdorff, where he stopped for the night. He arrived late in the evening, and put up at the public-house of my brother-in-law, Stouch. Hearing that Washington had arrived, I ran around and collected about thirty of my men, and placed them under arms, each man having in accordance with my orders, provided himself with a powder-horn containing powder enough to fire fifteen or twenty rounds as a salute to President Washington, First Father and Saviour of his country. By the time we were in readiness it was nearly dusk, I had a capital Drummer but no Fifer, and I could not think of marching my men to salute the great and good Washington without having music as it should be. I resolved that I would play the fife myself. I therefore sheathed my sword, appointed my First Lieutenant Captain, in part, and myself Fifer pro tem. I then placed myself by the side of my Drummer, on the right of my company. When matters were thus arranged, we marched up to Stouch's Hotel, then the quarters of President Washington, and drew up in line in front of the house. I then brought my men to an order, and as soon as President Washington appeared at the door of the Hotel, I quickly commanded my men to shoulder arms, and then ordered them to present arms. I had then to assist the Drummer (by playing a truie on the fife for him) to beat the appropriate salute. It was common in those days, and I believe it is still done, when beating a salute, for the ensign or flagbearer to wave the flag at certain rolls of the drum. By the time that the musical salute was ended, President Washington had gained a position on the steps in the front door of the Hotel. He then asked for (or who was) the captain of the company. I drew my sword and stepped towards him and saluted him with the usual salute of the sword. I then stepped up to him, and, with my sword in one hand and my Fife in the other, observed to him as follows:

"Sir, I am both Captain and Fifer. I have a good Drummer, sir, but no Fifer, and could not think of tendering military honors to you in a patched up or hame way, and concluded, in the absence of a Fifer, to play the Fife myself, and told him my name was Dewees.'

"Washington smiled and said, 'Captain Dewees, you have been in the Revolutionary War.' 'Yes, sir,' said I. He then said, 'You have played the fife during the war.' I told him that I had. He said that he knew by the tunes we had played, and by the manner in which they were played, that I had been in the Continental service. He then complimented me upon my having sacrificed my station (that of Captain) to gratify his ear with the well-to-be-remembered airs so often heard during the Revolution in the camps of his country. He then observed:

"Captain Dewees, you are disposed to pay great respect to me, for which I am extremely obliged to you, as also to the officers and men composing your company. But there has been so much respect paid to me on my whole route, at Hanover especially, that I feel rather unpleasant when in receipt of it. I know, sir, that it is incorrectly done. Although I have not done less than any man, I have always tried to serve my country faithfully, fearlessly and nobly, whether in the field or out of it, and in doing this, I have but done my duty to my country and countrymen, posterity and to my God. Still, sir, I do not wish to damp your patriotic ardour, nor the patriotic ardour of a single member of your company. Nor am I to be understood, sir, as wishing to damp the generous and patriotic feelings of the men and women, citizens of Womellsdorff now present as spectators; nor do I wish, Captain Dewees, to be viewed as despising your tender of honors. Nor do I wish you, sir, to understand me as forbidding you to fire a salute, but I would respectfully request that it may be dispensed with, and if it will be agreeable to you and your men, that of granting my request, I hope that a salute will not be fired.' I replied, 'General Washington, if it is your desire that we shall not fire a salute, there shall not be a gun fired.' I then addressed myself to my men and stated that not a man would be permitted to fire a gun.

"President Washington then requested me to march my men into the house. I did so. He then ordered different kinds of liquor to be set out, and invited us to partake with him of whatever kind of liquor we should choose to drink. I then asked my men to come forward and partake of the President's treat, and observed that they should take a civil drink, and for each to do so in a quiet and respectful manner. After all had drank, I gave them strict orders also that no man should behave in an uncivil, rude or noisy manner; that we had called, out of respect, to render respect and honors to his Excellency, the President, and all things should now be conducted in a respectful and quiet manner. The President told the landlord to charge the liquor he had ordered to his bill, thanked us in a kind manner for the honors we had done him, bowed to us, bade us good-night and then retired to his room. I do not pretend to state that the President's language was in the precise words I have used, but it was tantamount thereto.

"As soon as the President retired, I then ordered my drummer, and I may add myself (for I assisted), to beat up the long roll; this done, the men paraded at their posts and formed ranks immediately. We then marched down to the lower tavern, in Womellsdorff, kept by Wierech Seltzer, where we enjoyed ourselves in dancing awhile. We dispersed (I suppose) at a late hour, but the orders which I gave, that mirth and sociability should reign throughout the evening, were most happily obeyed. Nothing transpired to (not even the President's wish as regarded a salute; this of itself was not a disappointment, for he was a lover of quiet, and every man yielded spontaneously what he so anxiously desired) to mar the patriotic pleasure which each member of my company set out determined to enjoy."

And the following German report of this visit is published in Rupp's "History of Berks County," page 194.
"Wommelsdorf, den 14ten Nov. 1798.

"Gestern Abends hatten die Einwohner dieser Stadt das Vergnügen den Presidenten George Washington, der Vereinigten Staaten von America zu bewirthen, und ihm bey dieser Gelegenheit folgende Adresse zu überreichen.

"Ihre Excellenz!

To which General Washington sent the following very appropriate reply:

"Die Aufmerksamkeit die sie mir erzeigen, und der Beifall von meinen Bemühungen, giebt mir das groesse Vergnügen."

A company of volunteers assembled, and amidst repeated firing of guns, near the door of the house in which he lodged, exclaimed,—

"Lang lebe George Washington! Lang lebe George Washington!!"

HAMBURG.

The thriving borough of Hamburg is situated on the Schuylkill River, near where it passes through the Blue Mountains. It is favorably located in a good farming country, and having communications with points north and south by means of the canal and two principal lines of railway—the Philadelphia and Reading and Pennsylvania,—as well as being a projected station on other railways under construction, it has become a business point in the county, with varied industries, second in importance to Reading only. In 1885 there were about two thousand five hundred inhabitants, five churches, two school-houses, a bank and other interests.

The locality in which Hamburg is situated was known by that name before the town was laid out, the nature of the country and the nationality of the first settlers no doubt suggesting the appellation. The records of this section indicate a land-warrant, dated in London, May 12, 1732, for six hundred and twenty six acres, situated east of the Schuylkill and north of the mouth of Maiden-creek, which was divided into three parts by Deputy Surveyor James Scull, and one part surveyed November 25, 1772, for Martin Kaercher, Sr. This survey was confirmed to him by a deed, December 23, 1772, in which it is spoken of as "a certain tract of land called Hamburg, and situate in Windsor township, containing two hundred and fifty acres. Seven years later, on the 23d of January, 1779, Martin Kaercher, Sr., and Elizabeth, his wife, of Longswamp township, granted this tract of land to their son, Martin Kaercher, Jr., who, at that time, lived on it. The consideration was two thousand five hundred pounds. About this time Martin Kaercher, Jr., laid out the town, for on the 1st of December, 1779, he executed a deed to Michael Lindehmath for lots Nos. 17, 19, 32, 45, 87 and 110, and out-lots 59, 60, 88, 89, 125 and 126. These lots were subject to a ground-rent, payable on the 27th day of May of each year, at the rate of two pounds five shillings for corner-lots and twenty-two shillings six pence for other lots. This ground rental has been the source of much vexatious litigation, and many of the lots of Hamburg are not yet clear of this claim. Its existence has, in a great measure, retarded the growth of the borough. In 1780 Martin Kaercher, Jr., deed back a part of the Hamburg tract to his father, but reserved the lots laid out, and made sales as follows:

July 20, 1781, to John Zone.
November 27, 1782, to Frederick Pouch.
October 28, 1782, to Christopher Tim.
May 2, 1783, to John Moyer and Frank Levenberg.
April 3, 1783, to Peter Forwalk.
July 19, 1784, to George Benzeman.
April 19, 1784, to Andrew Helwig.
January 27, 1785, to George Miller, Jr., for corn mill and tract of forty acres.
January 8, 1785, the tract called the "Shoup," fourteen acres (which had been patented to Kaercher the previous year).
March 1, 1785, to John Moyer (tavern-keeper and trader).
September 1, 1785, to Martin Kaercher, Sr.
May 23, 1786, to Andrew Lytle.
May 6, 1786, to John Myers and Philip Shatz, lots for school and church purposes, they being trustees of Lutheran and Reformed congregations.

October 20, 1786, to Daniel Rothermel (papermaker).

1792, to Andrew Forsyth.
March 16, 1798, to William Kaercher.
March 17, 1798, to George Kaercher.

January 1, 1794, to Daniel Kaercher.
March 29, 1794, to Samuel Winters.

Martin Kaercher, Jr., lived on a farm on Kaercher's Run. He also owned the mill on that stream, which is now the mill-site on Main Street.
He conveyed this property to George Miller in 1785.
He appears to have been financially embarrassed, and some of his property was sold by the sheriff in 1787. The elder members of the family died at Hamburg, and others removed to other parts. The village grew very slowly, and, after the custom of that time (naming towns for their founders), was called, in the common vernacular, "Kaerchetown," which some people earnestly suppose to have been the original name of the borough; and some people, to give the place an English name, called it Church town. The first buildings were built of logs. Some of them, weather-boarded or roughcast, may still be found in the older parts of the town. The first brick house was built by John Miller, on the upper part of Main Street, which is still standing as the residence of E. M. Miller. It is a one-story building. After the manufacture of bricks was begun at this place the larger portion of the buildings were put up of that material. One of the oldest large houses was built of stone, in 1811, by Abraham Bailey, and even now has the appearance of a mansion. The masonry and the wood-work indicate skill and care of no mean order on the part of the workmen engaged in its construction.

After the first meeting-house was built, in 1790, the population increased more than in former years, and, in 1800, the place had three hundred and twenty-nine inhabitants.

Among the citizens of Hamburg from 1800 to 1820 were the following:

John Meyer, broker.
Henry Heinly, tailor.
John DeWeld, better.
John Shomo, Jr., teacher.
David Newhart, tobacconist.

Georgie Miller, miller.
Charles Guse, мясник.
William Feather, tanner.
Moses Leroy, store-keeper.
Daniel Leva, tavern-keeper.
Jacob Snell, butcher.
Joseph Shomo, Sr., timnith.
Abraham Wold, saddler.

Henry Groh, yeoman.
Adolphus Hatzfield, justice.
Dr. Klein, physician.
Philip Saunders, cordwainer.
Andrew Helvig, yeoman.
Henry Schoener, chair-maker.
William Cautler, chair-maker.

Henry Lewers, timnith.

Henry Fiesler, baker.
John Schenk, tailor.
John bildeman, clock-maker.
Mrs. Peter Schatz, cake-baker.

Henry Lindenmuth, shoemaker.
Abraham Bailey, tavern-keeper.
William Schau, tailor.

Abraham DeWend, cigar-maker.
Dr. Benj. Becker, physician.

Philip Hummel, farmer.
Frederick Felix, shoemaker.

Michael Roese, cooper.
William Rieder, carpenter.
William Machem, dyer.

Jacob Glatz, laborer.
John Miller, cabinet-maker.

Andrew Forsyth, merchant.

Jacob Fisher, coffee-maker.
Capt. Leibholzer, Revolutionary.

Sebastian Leonard, blacksmith.
Daniel Korn, store-keeper.

David Davidhouser, tavern-keeper.

Andrew Hummed, laborer.
John Haines, carpenter.

Christian Lohman, weaver.

John Miller, cooper.

The building of the turnpike and the canal, and later of the Philadelphia and Reading Railway, through this place, each promoted the growth of the borough—each event forming a period of prosperity in its history. But more especially was a building boom inaugurated when it was supposed that Hamburg would become the entrepôt for the shipment of the vast quantities of coal now loaded on the boats at Port Clinton and Schuykill Haven—a belief which was strengthened when the railroad company bought up all the property available along the canal, with a view of erecting immense warehouses thereon for shipment purposes. It was about this time that the fine Heinly Block, on Main Street, was erected, and a little later, in 1871, the massive four-story building, on the corner of Main and State Streets, now known as the Fenstermacher Block. This inaugurated the era of better buildings in Hamburg. The last event, which quickened the business life of the borough, was the building of the Pennsylvania Railroad, in 1885, and the erection of the attractive depot building on State Street, near the canal.
It is of brick, elegantly finished, and has few superiors anywhere. Its architecture has been the means of causing other buildings in the town to assume shapes practical and pleasing, though much at variance with the styles prevailing for sixty years.
The depot building was opened in December, 1885.
To this new order of buildings belongs the business house of N. A. Confer, erected in 1885–86, on the southwest corner of White Oak and State Streets. It is a high, one-story building of brick, sixty by one hundred and twenty feet, forming one room, to be devoted to general mercantile purposes. The building is ornate, and having a high roof with raised skylights, is not unattractive in appearance. Mr. Confer has been in trade at Hamburg since 1868, and ranks as one of the foremost merchants of the county. Robert Scott, on the corner of Main and Pine Streets, had one of the first good stores; and soon after came John Beitenman. At the upper end of the town John Miller had a good trade. Later, Joseph Shomo and Samuel Shollenberger carried on a large business in what is now the Item office. After some years George and Joseph Shollenberger were associated and opened a store on the corner where is now the Nathan Bear stand, where had been David Nice and Daniel Wolff. Shomo opened the stand on Main and Pine Streets, now known as the D. A. Heffner store; William D. Shomo also conducted business very successfully in the same place. Among the earlier stores was that of Daniel Kern, on Main Street, next-door to the "Swan" Hotel, which he also kept. Joseph Filbert and others were in the same locality. Charles Shomo was in trade in the Item building, and Joseph Seidel in the building now occupied by Fister's drug-store. Charles A. Seidel was on the opposite side of the street. David Heinly put up the building where is now the general store of James L. Merkel. James Fenstermacher has been in trade at Hamburg since 1862, occupying his present building since 1871; and next-door is the notion-store of James L. Baum. John Beitenman was an early dealer in hardware. Peter C. Baum had the first store wholly devoted to that line of trade, his place being on White Oak Street. David Heinly opened the next store, on Main Street, which is now occupied by Walter Raubenhold.

Nathaniel J. Hatzfield was one of the first dealers in cabinet-ware, and Jacob Laub had an early furniture-store on Main Street. Sheradin. Mengel and others were also in this business. It is now successfully carried on by Peter Burkey, who operates a small furniture-factory in connection with a store. Other stores devoted to specialties were opened lately, among them being the grocery business of R. T. Lenhart and the fine jewelry-store of W. W. Appel. On State Street and the canal the fine grain warehouse of J. A. Bauchor, erected in 1876; and farther down the canal, at the old Loose & Shollenberger place, Lenhart & Co. have been coal and lumber dealers since 1882. Near this point the river was first crossed by ferries, one of them being operated many years by a man named Silliman. The first bridge across the stream was swept away by a freshet in July, 1850, and broken to pieces. The present wood-covered bridge is over two hundred feet long. After being a toll-bridge for many years, it was recently declared free.

Among the chief public-houses, the John Bailey stand, on Main Street, lately demolished, is one of the best remembered. It was partly log and partly brick, and in its time was a good house. Daniel Kern's inn, on the opposite side of the street, was the headquarters for stages. At the head of the street John Shomo, Jr., had a public-house, which has since been demolished. The present house was built by John Confer, but kept by him as an inn only a short time. Joseph Shomo had an old-time hotel on the site of Raubenhold's store, which was kept at a later day by Daniel Levan. The present "Washington House" is on the site of an inn formerly kept by John Shomo. The frame house was removed, and in the house now standing Charles Keller, Jacob Boyer and Joseph N. Shomo have entertained the public,—the latter since 1870. The present three-story brick American House was built by Isaac Thompson, and has been kept by him and the landlord now in possession, David H. Fink.

HAMBURG INCORPORATED.—In order to secure better streets and to promote the general welfare of the village, an effort was made to incorporate Hamburg more than fifty years ago. To this end a number of special acts were passed, the first bearing date April 5, 1830. In accordance with one of the provisions of the act, a survey and plat of the town was made September 8, 1830, by Mathias S. Richards, Philip A. Good and George Heisler. But, owing to a non-compliance with some of the terms of the act, no organization was effected, and it was not until after the passage of the act of April 3, 1837, that Hamburg became possessed of corporate powers and privileges, which were extended and enlarged by the following special acts: April 16, 1838; January 12, 1840; March 18, 1852; August 24, 1864; March 22, 1865; June 2, 1875; and by the general act of May 5, 1876. The bounds of the borough were changed in February, 1876, and further modified, in 1877, by regular surveys.

The first borough election was held in 1837, and resulted in the choice of Daniel Sheffliey as president of the Council, and P. C. Baum clerk. The loss of the records for the first thirty years of the corporate history renders the task of compiling a complete list of officials impossible.

P. C. Baum served as clerk for a number of years, and others who filled the same office were George Shenk, B. E. Shollenberger, Charles Benezman, Bennwell Derr, Mahlon F. Wolff and George A. Xander.

Some of the presidents for the same period were Augustus Shultz, E. M. Smith, Edward H. Miller, Charles Faust, Rufus D. Wolff and Benjamin Goodman.

Since 1867 the principal officers have been:

1867-68.—John Sunday, burgess; Jacob Geiger, president of the Council; George A. Xander, clerk.

1869-71.—James Prutzman, burgess; Benjamin Goodman, president of the Council; Geo. A. Xander, clerk.

1874-75.—John Sunday, burgess; William K. Miller, president of the Council; J. Jerome Miller, clerk.

1876.—Jacob Geiger, burgess; Levi Williamson, president of the Council; J. Jerome Miller, clerk.

1877.—Fred. Gordfleck, burgess; James Prutzman, president of the Council; J. Jerome Miller, clerk.

1878.—Fred. Gordfleck, burgess; R. D. Wolff, president of the Council; B. S. Gardner, clerk.

1879.—J. A. Tobias, burgess; R. D. Wolff, president of the Council; B. S. Gardner, clerk.

1880.—Reuben Seidel, burgess; R. D. Wolff, president of the Council; B. S. Gardner, clerk.

1881.—Wm. Harris, burgess; J. L. Merkel, president of the Council; R. J. M. Miller, clerk.

1884.—A. F. Luburg, burgess; J. L. Merkel, president of the Council; R. J. M. Miller, clerk.

In 1885 the officers were,—

Solomon K. Dreibelbis, burgess; William K. Miller, assistant burgess; Members of Council, James L. Merkeli (president), D. K. Nies, J. C. Bear, J. J. Miller, C. A. Seidel, John S. Smith, Christian Baum, Wm. H. Grimm, Jacob Hallenbach; R. J. M. Miller, secretary of Council; O. J. Wolf, treasurer; O. J. Wolff and Jackson Levan, justices of the peace; Geo. M. Witters, constable; Charles Williamson and Franklin N. Fichthorn, policemen.

The office of justice was also held by Israel Derr, Henry Lewars, Benjamin Shollenberger, Jeremiah Wolfinger, Henry K. Burkhalter and Mahlon F. Wolff.

Jackson Levan was the first notary public, receiving his commission in 1870.

Measures for protection against fire were taken before Hamburg became a borough, a number of buckets having been procured and distributed among the citizens.

THE HAMBURG FIRE COMPANY was organized in 1838, and it had, among others, the following members:

Henry Fister.        Joseph Shomo.
Henry Levan.        Jacob Shollenberger.
                    — Shappell.
Andrew Smith.       William Shomo.
Adam Keiser.        George Miller.
Moses Levy.         John Shollenberger.
John Derr.          Abraham Williamson.
Peter Miller.       Andrew Smith, Jr.
John Shenk.         Daniel Shollenberger.
William Feather.

A small engine, worked by a crank, was purchased, and every member of the company was supplied with a leathern bucket and a sail-cloth bag. In 1866 the borough erected a substantial engine-house, of brick, twenty-two by forty feet, part of which is two stories high. This building also serves as a place for the meetings of Council. About the same time a larger hand-engine was purchased, which was used until 1877, when a Sibley steam fire-engine was purchased and the department again reorganized. Fire-plugs were placed at the upper end of Main Street, and at other places on the canal and creek, where a good water supply might be obtained, and from these plugs nearly every point in the borough can be reached with several hundred feet of hose.

The Union Fire Company, No. 1, was formed in January, 1886, with the following organization:

Oliver J. Wolff, president; Wm. G. Sheradin, vice-president; Dougliss D. Seidel, recording secretary; Dr. John R. Wagner, assistant recording secretary; Abraham J. Seaman, financial secretary; Hon.
Charles A. Seidel, treasurer; William Heinley, Chas.
F. Jones, William F. Burke, trustees; Douglass D.
Seidel, janitor; William G. Sheradin, foreman; Albert Severt, first assistant foreman; J. W. Heinly, second assistant foreman; John H. Smith, engineer; Daniel A. Burkey and B. Frank Bean, assistant engineers; Charles Williamson, fireman; Franklin M. Seaman and Franklin V. Fichthorn, assistant firemen; David Finally, William Heinly, Irwin Lenhart and Solomon K.
Hoffman, engine directors; Reuben A. Dietrich, Dr.
John R. Wagner, John Burkey and Franklin Kaufman, hose directors; L. K. Saul, David Beard, Chas.
Reinhart and James Kelchner, pipemen; George Spindler, Charles F. Jones, John Spareley, John Williamson, Daniel Tobias, Arthur Fesig, George H.
Seaman, Samuel Longlow, Calvin F. Miller, W. William Appel, John Shadler, Joel E. Seaman, hook-and ladder-men.

West Hamburg.—The station on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, at Hamburg, is on the west side of the river, about half a mile from the borough. The depot building was first sixty rods north of the present site, and Henry S. Kern became the agent, holding the position eighteen years. In 1867 the present location was selected, on the farm of N. S. Schock. S. K. Kramp is the present agent.

The first store in the hamlet, by the depot (sometimes called West Hamburg), was opened at the old station, in 1853, by Moses S. Schock.
Since 1867 N. S. Schock has been in business at his present stand. He was the first postmaster of the Berks post-office, established there in 1879.

In 1870 John Williams and Solomon Seaman erected a large brick block, which was arranged for hotel and store purposes. There Williams opened what is now the National Hotel, and Solomon Seaman & Sons established a mercantile business, which is now carried on by Seaman & Brother.

The Hamburg Rolling-Mill is situated at the lower part of the hamlet, and comprises spacious buildings with convenient connections with the main tracks of the railroad. The enterprise was begun in 1865 by an association composed of William D.
Shomo, Benjamin H. Lenhart, Gideon Sunday, George Merkel and John Bickley. The following year the business was carried on by Merkel, Spang & Co., and in 1871 by the Hamburg Iron Company, composed of William A. Shoemaker, John Shoemaker, John Raudson and H. C.
Beam. Afterward, it was carried on for a time by Richard Dunkel and others. In 1881 the present firm of Nevegold, Scheide & Co., of Bristol, Pa., took possession of the works and began operations under a lease for five years. They employ seventy-five men and make a specialty of the manufacture of band and hoop-iron, producing from eighty to one hundred and fifty tons daily. The property belongs to the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company.

Industries.—One of the earliest industries at this place was the mill of Martin Kaercher, Jr., on Kaercher’s Run, where it crosses Main Street.
He sold out to George Miller in 1785, who put up the first substantial mill. The old building was burned down in 1875, and the present fine mill was erected by William D. Shomo, who operates it still.

The next mill was built in the northern part of the borough by Jonas Kern; but, after it became the property of the Reading Railroad Company, it was allowed to remain idle.

Near State Street, a steam-mill was built by Thomas Sieger, which was supplied with good ma-achinery, but which has had many owners, among them being Daniel Kern, Jacob Geiger, Fisk & Co., Motes & Buffington and the present George Walters.

In this locality the boat-yard of Benjamin Meinder was situated. He was the successor of Frederick Albright, the first boat-builder, whose yard was in the southern part of the borough.
Meinder was succeeded by Miller & Baltzer, and they by Jacob Wolff, the last boat-builder, to any extent, in the borough.

Among the smaller industries were the hat-shops of Henry Fister, who employed a number of hands, and that of George & Peter Stambaugh, on the corner of Main and State Streets, both long since discontinued. The chief products were wool hats.
Early of the old mill the distillation of liquor was carried on in early times. Jacob and William Kalbach put up a large distillery near the canal, in the lower part of the borough, which was in operation about 1850. An extensive business was at one time carried on, but no liquor has been made there within the last twelve years. The building is the property of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, and latterly has been used for warehouse purposes.

On White Oak Street, where the office of J. Levan, Esq., is now situated, Dr. Augustus Shultz had a brewery in operation several years, about 1832. On Main Street, in the southern part of the borough, another brewery had a short existence. It was the property of Benjamin Meinders.

The principal brewery in the place was on Main Street, in the central part of the town. It was built by William D. Shomo, about 1840. John Rothlauf filled the position of brewer many years and was succeeded by Joseph Popp and others. The building has not been used for brewing purposes since 1880. No liquor is now manufactured in the borough.

The manufacture of bricks was commenced on the Schuylkill flats about forty years ago by John Tobias, and the business which he established is still carried on by Tobias Brothers & Co. Fine bricks are made and a number of men afforded employment. At this point Wilson Rothenberger was an early brick-maker. John Schrayer had a yard near the distillery for a time, but which is now idle.

On Main Street, on the site of the Savings Bank, William Fetter had a tannery, which passed from him to Wilson Motz and then to Michael Richards. Latterly, steam-power was employed and an extensive business carried on. Leather was finished for the market.

Near the canal Eli Kummerer built a tannery, in 1869, with twenty vats. It was operated until 1883.

The tannery of Joseph Kummerer, on Washington Street, was built in 1858 by J. & E. Kummerer, and has been operated since 1861 by Joseph Kummerer. It has twenty-one vats, and eleven hundred hides are prepared annually for the market.

The shoe-factory of R. S. Appel and J. A. Spangler was established in 1881, on Main Street, near State. From twenty to thirty hands are employed in the manufacture of infants', children's and misses' fine and medium grade shoes.

Cordwainers were in the town at an early period of its history; these were shoemakers.

As early as 1790 Andrew Smith began the manufacture of chains in a shop which stood on State Street, on the site of the residence of E. M. Smith. In 1825, when E. M. Smith was fourteen years of age, he continued the trade of his father and afterward added the manufacture of shoot nails, for use in coal-breakers. In 1877 E. M. Smith & Son's Chain and Nail-Works were established in a large frame building on Main Street. The shop now has thirteen fires and the necessary machinery for making all kinds of wagons and mine chains as well as shoot nails. Most of their production is sold to the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company.

In the immediate locality Israel Derr carried on a tannery in the early part of the present century. It was erected on the site of an abandoned oil-mill. The tannery was converted into a foundry about 1830 by Benneville Derr, who added a brick building. This was the beginning of the "Hamburg Stove-Works," in which were made the "Day-Light Heater" and cooking-stoves; also the "R. De r Plow." Mr. Derr employed from twelve to fifteen men. The name of this industry has been changed to the Hamburg Plow-Works, operated by a firm composed of S. A. Loose, C. F. Seannan and P. M. Shollenberger, trading under the name of Loose, Seannan & Co., which obtained possession of the property November 26, 1881. Since the decease of Benneville Derr this firm has carried on extensively a general foundry business and the manufacture of specialties. Water-power was used at first alone for a time, then steam-power was added and the works enlarged to accommodate the growing business. At present four spacious buildings are occupied by the firm, and more than twenty men are afforded constant employment, chiefly in the manufacture of the Hamburg Champion Plow and Bowers' Patent Slip Point Plow-shares. The latter article is sold in almost every State of the Union, where reversible plow-shares are used.
The Keystone Foundry of Hamburg was established on State Street, near Canal, in 1841, by Reuben Lins. In 1848 a large brick building was erected and steam-power supplied to operate the machinery. The establishment was devoted to manufacturing agricultural implements, rolling-mill castings and stoves. After 1850 the business amounted annually to fifteen thousand dollars. In 1852, Charles Egolf became a partner, and the firm of Lins & Egolf carried on the business till 1858, when they transferred it to G. & W. Deisher. Afterward, Henry Diesher became the sole owner. The works were then operated nine years, under a lease by Sivet & Stonecker. In 1881, Henry Seiver became the owner, and he is the present proprietor. Eight men are employed in the manufacture of mill castings, kettles and the Hamburg chilled plow.

Carriage-shops have been maintained at Hamburg from the beginning of its existence as a business point. In 1885 there were three establishments of this kind, carried on by Lewis C. Romich, Christian Baum and W. A. Scott, all situated on State Street. Baum has been in business since 1868, and Scott since 1866. The three shops employ about thirty hands.

Post-Office.—The Hamburg post-office was established July 1, 1798. Among the first postmasters were Henry Fister, who had the office at his hat-shop, and John Shenk, who kept it at his tailor-shop. Later, another tailor, John Kirkpatrick, was the postmaster, and among his successors were Charles Benzeman, John F. Rhoades, Daniel Wolff, George Shollenberger, Peter S. Hains, Milton S. Ludwig, M. M. Lenhart, Elias Shomo, Henry Rothenberger, and since October, 1885, Dr. William Harris. The office has been on State Street for some time. It is graded as fourth-class, and has been a money-order office since July 1, 1874. There are seven mails in and an equal number out of this office. It is the distributing point for mails to offices on the Allentown and Strasstown stage-route.

Legal and Medical Professions.—In the learned professions J. Ed. Miller has been the only attorney to open and maintain an office at Hamburg for the practice of law. Other attorneys have visited Hamburg at stated periods for many years. Dr. A. Klein was one of the first medical practitioners at Hamburg, continuing until his tragic death at the hands of Adolph Hatzfeld, a prominent German compatriot, whose plea was justifiable homicide. Dr. — Baum was another early physician, whose stay was not of long duration. Dr. John B. Tryon was in successful practice until his death; and Drs Killian, Becker, Shultz, Kendall, Benzeman and Medlar were each here for short periods. Dr. John Seiberling had a good practice until his removal to Philadelphia, and Dr. Herman Seider until he went to Schuylkill County. Dr. Benjamin F. Isett succeeded Dr. Seiberling, he being the father of Dr. Joseph T. Isett, a homœopathist, still in practice. Dr. Benjamin Nice was in practice at Hamburg before 1820, but he removed and did not locate here permanently until 1830; upon his return he continued in active practice until his death, July 14, 1862. His son, Dr. Franklin B. Nice, began his professional career at Hamburg in 1851, and is still in active practice. Another son, George Nice, studied medicine the same time, but he removed to Port Clinton, and died there in 1877. Other resident physicians are Dr. John Potteiger, who came to this place from Lenhartsville in 1870; Dr. John R. Wagner, since the spring of 1884; and Dr. Joseph Hatzfeld, homœopathist, since 1882.

In the drug business John Beitenman was the pioneer, having his apothecary-store on Main Street. His successor was Major John A. Beitenman, who pursued this avocation a number of years. Since 1868 William Harris has conducted a drug-store successfully at Hamburg. Later, stores were opened by Adam Bodenheim and Thomas Fister, the former being now known as the Stein store.

Hamburg Savings-Bank.—This bank was established under a charter granted March 24, 1870, and was opened for business in November, 1872. The authorized paid-up capital was fifty thousand dollars, but business was begun with ten thousand dollars, which was increased to forty thousand dollars in 1877, and the capital fully paid up in 1884. The bank organized by electing Benneville Derr president, and Charles M. Schomo cashier. From 1877 to 1885 Nathan Bear was the president, when he was succeeded by Peter Burkey. The cashier since 1877 has been
J. Jerome Miller. The present directors are Peter Burkey, Nathan Bear, A. R. Shollenberger, Daniel Boyer, Samuel C. Boyer, Nathan Schock, Samuel Merk and Solomon H. Lenhart.

The bank occupies a substantial building on Main Street, especially prepared for its use in 1877. Previous to that time business was done in the Shono Block. Though organized as a savings-bank, a general banking, collection and exchange business is also transacted, thus making the bank a great accommodation to Hamburg and vicinity.

Churches.—St. John's Church is the oldest in the borough, and the one around which the most historic interest centres. In 1790, on February 12th, the first church at Hamburg was consecrated as a German Lutheran and Reformed United (Gemeinschaftliche) Church.

The land on which it was erected, and which at that time was the old church-yard (Gottesacker) of this congregation, had been given as a gift by Martin Kercher in 1773, for the use of the Lutheran and Reformed inhabitants of Hamburg and vicinity, to bury their dead and to erect on it a United Lutheran and Reformed Church edifice.

At that time Hamburg resembled a desert; the vicinity was a forest, the inhabitants were few and poor, and could not erect a church; they therefore worshipped God in private dwellings, and used the lower part of the land as a burying-ground, reserving the upper part for the church. In time they were enabled to build a church of logs, using the lower story as a school-room and the second story as a place of public worship. On the day mentioned the church was solemnly consecrated as a church of God under the name, style and title of "The United Evangelical Lutheran and Evangelical Reformed St. John's Church in the village of Hamburg."

Pastors, Rev. Daniel Lehman (Lutheran) and Rev. Henry Hertzol (Reformed).

After 1800 the influx of population at Hamburg was rapid, and the church became too small to accommodate the growing congregations. As all the means to erect a new church could not be raised by the ordinary methods of collections and subscriptions, the Legislature was invoked to grant the church privilege to raise funds by lottery—by no means an unpopular method of raising money in those days for various enterprises. An act was passed in 1807 authorizing them to raise by lottery three thousand dollars, with which to build a church at Hamburg for the use of the Lutheran and Calvinist congregations. Robert Scott, George Miller, Philip Klein, Philip Seidel, John Mayer and Abraham Bailey were appointed commissioners to conduct the lottery. Five thousand tickets, at one dollar each, were issued, seventeen hundred and fifty entitling the holders to prizes, and three thousand two hundred and fifty being blanks. The final drawing was published for June 15, 1813, from which it appeared that there were two prizes of twenty-five dollars, two of twenty dollars, two of fifteen dollars, five of ten dollars, seventy of five dollars, and others at smaller amounts. It is not known what amount was actually realized by this lottery. The corner-stone of the new church was laid June 16, 1811, and a very substantial stone building erected,—in dimensions, thirty-five by forty-five feet. It was finished in 1814, and consecrated in March, 1815. This building stood on the site of the present edifice. After the new church came to be occupied the old church was set apart for school purposes. The upper room was used as a public hall. Upon its removal the logs were used in the construction of a one-story school-house on the same lot. When the stone church was consecrated the Lutheran congregation was without a pastor, but the Reformed had Rev. Philip Mayer. The trustees at the time were George Schumacher and Henry Lewers (Lutheran), Jacob Stitzel and Henry Fister (Reformed). Abraham Wolf was the treasurer, and Robert Scott the secretary. The mason-work was done by William Adam and Jacob Gehret, and the carpenter-work by Philip Altenderfer. In the church thus provided the congregations flourished forty-six years, when it was found too small and "its inner arrangements too inconvenient to accommodate all the members and to be in harmony with the spirit of the times."

A proposition to build a new church, as urged upon the members by Pastor A. L. Herman, June 1, 1857, was received with much favor, and measures to build it were at once instituted and diligently prosecuted.

The necessary list of subscription was filled in a few weeks, the trustees chosen and a resolution adopted to erect the building that summer, which was to be known by the same name. The cornerstone was laid August 16, 1857.

Prior to the building of this church the brick school-house was built and the upper room set aside for the use of the congregations until the present edifice would be occupied. The old walls of the stone church were used in building the foundation of the present church, and the other materials removed. The steeple of the old church had a vane in the shape of a fish, and upon which was the date 1811. The pulpit, also, was a novelty, very closely resembling a tulip. The new church is of brick, very commodious, being sixty by eighty feet, and a fine building throughout. The bell, with which the steeple is supplied, is one of the best in the county. The lot upon which the building stands indicates careful attention. In the rear of the church there is a new cemetery, a few acres in area. The trustees in 1885 were George Walters and J. B. Pottinger (Lutheran), Lewis C. Romich and William G. Sheridan (Reformed). The pastor of the Reformed congregation was the Rev. Perry Y. Schelley, and the members numbered three hundred. Among other pastors may be named the Revs. Moses Peters, William F. P. Davis and A. L. Herman. The Lutheran congregation, also, has about three hundred members under the pastoral care of the Rev. Oscar Miller. Among his predecessors were the Revs. Drumheller, Iaeger, Klein and Iaeger. The latter served the congregation many years.

Since the Rev. Herman was connected with the church, the pastors have been superintendents of the Sunday-schools. The first Sunday-school was started in the old log church by Henry Lewers, Robert Scott, John Shenck, Henry Fister, Andrew Smith and John Bailey, kept up for some years. The present school was instituted afterwards.

Biographical.

Rev. G. F. I. Iaeger, who was for sixty years a minister of the Lutheran Church in Berks County, was born July 20, 1796, in Illingen, in the kingdom of Württemberg. His parents were Rev. Charles F. Iaeger and Catherine Commerell. He was baptized in infancy, and in due time confirmed and received by his father as a communicant member of the Lutheran Church. After attending the schools of his native village, and also the Latin school at Maulbrun, six miles from Illingen, he entered the University of Tübingen, where he remained several years.

But at this juncture came a turning-point in his life. The war between France, under Napoleon the First, and Russia had just ended, and of the eighteen thousand soldiers that left Württemberg, only three thousand returned. A heavy draft must, of consequence, be made to fill up the ranks of the army, and he having no desire to enter military life, informed his parents that he should make his future home in America. He left his father's house in July, 1817, and coming by way of London, visited his relatives, the Commerells. On the 8th of September he took passage for New York and was forty-nine days crossing the ocean. It was a strange coincidence that thirty-eight years after this, in 1855, on the 8th of September, he again took passage from Liverpool to New York, after a pleasant visit to his old home, and to his brother and sister, this time making the trip, by steamer, in eleven days. After remaining a few days in New York, he came to Philadelphia, and from there went to Northampton County, where he taught school near Bethlehem during that winter and summer. In 1818 he came to Hamburg, Berks County, and joined Rev. John Engel, pastor of a number of Lutheran congregations, who soon found him a diligent student. He offered him a home in his family, instructed him in the doctrines of the Lutheran Church in this country, and procured a school for him near Hamburg, at St. Paul's Church, where he taught during the winter of 1818. He also commenced preaching as Rev. Mr. Engel's student, and at times officiated in that minister's congregations. He delivered his first sermon at Plunket's Church October 18, 1818, in Greenwich, six miles from Hamburg, and from that date continued preaching for fifty-one years to this people.

In the spring of 1819 he, with three other young men, Dr. Demme, Dr. Krauth and Henry Kurtz, was received as a member of the old Pennsylvania Synod at Baltimore, Md. On his return from Synod to Hamburg, Rev. Mr. Engel gave him two congregations,—White Church in Albany and St. Jacob's in Lynntown. This was the beginning of the pastoral work in which he engaged as a faithful shepherd for fifty-five years.
On March 14, 1820, he was united in marriage to Mary, daughter of Lewis and Anna Audenried, from McKeansburg, Schuylkill County. In April, 1820, they commenced house-keeping in Lynntown, near St. Jacob's Church, where they remained five years. In 1825 they removed near Klinesville, seven miles east of Hamburg, and resided at this point until 1876, when, on account of the infirmities of old age, Mr. Iaeger gave up his congregations and moved to Hamburg, where he continued active in his Master's work, visiting the sick and the aged, and occasionally preaching funeral sermons. He was an able sermonizer, a pleasant speaker and a beloved and faithful pastor. He, with his devoted wife, reared a family of eleven children, seven of whom are still living,—William, in West Virginia; Lewis, in Yuma, Arizona; Rev. Thomas T. and Samuel, in Reading; Mrs. Levan, in Hamburg; Mrs. Berger, in Philadelphia; and Mrs. Salade, in Tamaqua. In the fall of 1879 Mr. Iaeger began to suffer from heart-disease, which often gave him great pain. He, however, endured his sufferings with Christian fortitude and patience, until the Head of the Church called him to his eternal rest. He died November 16, 1879, aged eighty-six years, three months and twenty-six days. His widow still resides at Hamburg, and is now in her eighty-ninth year.

Emanuel Church was built in 1854, at a cost of eleven thousand dollars, for the accommodation of Evangelical Lutheran and German Reformed Congregations, most of the members having withdrawn from St. John's Church, on account of a difficulty which arose from the opposition of many members to preaching in the English language. The building committee was composed of Dr. John Seiberling, John Lubarg, Wm. E. Shollenberger, Jacob Geiger, Reuben Lins, George Shollenberger and Daniel Kern. The united congregations occupied the church under favorable auspices for some years, and at one time had a joint membership of two hundred and fifty. Their services were conducted wholly in the English language. The Reformed congregation had as pastors the Revs. Moses Kieffer, Joseph H. Appel, Uriah Heilman, D. B. Albright and William H. Reilly, some of them preaching as supplies. On the part of the Lutherans, the ministers were the Revs. Scheide, Keller, Gable and B. D. Zweitzig. On July 5, 1877, the church was badly wrecked by a tornado. The expense attending the repair of the building proved so burdensome to the congregations that the Rev. B. D. Zweitzig assumed the settlement of it on behalf of the Lutheran congregations, and he now holds the church in trust. No services of any kind have been held in the church during the past year, and most of the members have again connected themselves with St. John’s Church. A flourishing Sunday-school was maintained by the congregations, and superintended by H. R. Shollenberger, but it has been discontinued.

St. Mary’s Roman Catholic Church was built in 1853. It is a plain brick building; in dimensions, forty by seventy feet. The congregation has never been large, and without a resident priest, its interests have not received proper encouragement. Lately monthly meetings have been held by a priest from Schuylkill Haven, with preaching in the English language. The membership does not exceed a dozen persons.

Hamburg Methodist Episcopal Church. — In the spring of 1859 the Rev. H. H. Davis began preaching Methodism in Hamburg and met with so much opposition that a building could not be obtained in which to hold the meetings. Strong in his purpose, however, he continued his labors, and on May 15th preached on the door-steps of a Mr. Epler in the morning, and in the afternoon in Shollenberger’s lumber yard. These services won several members, and three months afterward he was encouraged to rent Kern’s hall, at a rental of fifty dollars for seven months. He began preaching August 27th, and held semi-monthly meetings. On November 6th an extra meeting was conducted, which produced great excitement and not a little opposition in the town, and on November 25th he organized a class with the following members: James, Geiger, Gleasoner, Dewalt and Long and their families. They met statelly in the hall, till its further use was refused, May 5, 1860. A lot was then bought for church purposes, and in June a tent was procured and services held in it until a church was erected, in the fall of the same year. On July 15th a Sunday-school of twenty-two scholars was formed, with H. H. Dove as superintendent, this having also been organized in the tent. The church was dedicated on November 29, 1860, and Sunday-school was first held in the building on December 2d following, each pupil having been presented with a card to commemorate the occasion. The building was improved in 1870, and again in 1884, the latter repairs involving an outlay of five hundred dollars. It is centrally located, on White Oak Street, and is a neat and inviting brick edifice. The congregation has about fifty members, and the Sunday-school one hundred and thirty five. S. A. Loose is superintendent of the school. The ministers of the church since its organization have been the following:

1859-61, H. H. Davis.
1863, A. Fisher.
1864, Joseph Schlichter.
1865, William Manlove.
1866, Jacob Hughes.
1867, Benjamin Christ.
1868, M. Barnhill.
1869, S. G. Grove.
1870-71, John W. Sayers.
1873-74, L. M. Hobbs.
1875, W. A. Macnich.
1876-77, Geo. W. North.
1878, C. Hudson.
1879, George A. Wolfe.
1880-81, A. L. Hood.
1884-86, A. A. Arthur.

St. Paul’s Church (Evangelical Association) was built in 1872, under the direction of the Rev. Thos. Bowman and the Rev. B. Miller, for the accommodation of fifteen members. Among these were Jonas Mengle, Henry Gessley, Henry Lenhart and Jesse Rubright. The present trustees are R. T. Lenhart, Jesse Rubright and Allen Savage.

The membership of the church is still small, but the Sabbath-school, under the superintendence of R. T. Lenhart, has seventy-five scholars. This congregation is included in the Kutztown Circuit, of which Rev. Wm. H. Weidner is pastor. Other ministers serving here have been Revs. J. Stermer, D. Lentz, D. S. Stauffer, B. Miller and I. Hess.

Schools.—When the first St. John’s Church was built it was so arranged that a part of it could be used for school purposes, and therein instruction was imparted as early as 1791. After 1815 the building was wholly devoted to secular uses and English schools were taught in it; and afterward the one-story log house upon the same lot was used for the same purpose. The present brick school-house, in the same locality, was built after 1855.
by the united efforts of the school board and the members of St. John's Church, who used the upper part of the building as a place of worship until their new church was completed, in 1858. The large brick school-house on the upper part of White Oak Street was erected at a later day. The first English school in Hamburg was taught in a log building, near Stillman's Ferry, by a lady named Miss Shinmins. Some few years later, about 1829, John Shomo taught English school at his residence on Main Street. About the time Hamburg accepted the free-school system, in 1838, a stone school-house was built on State Street, near the canal, which was used many years. The building stood until 1885, when it was demolished by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, to make way for its track. Joseph Barr Tyson (who afterwards became a noted lawyer in Philadelphia, taught school for a time at Hamburg; also Philip Ellinger, of the same city, and Charles Smith and P. C. Baum, of Hamburg. The Rev. R. S. Appel taught a select school with success, several years, in the basement of Emanuel Church, soon after the completion of that building, in 1854. R. G. Hunter and D. S. Keck conducted the High School successfully for some years.

In 1885 there were eight public schools in the borough, graded as three primary, two secondary, two grammar and one High School. The average attendance was about four hundred. The school board was composed of R. J. M. Miller, president; O. J. Wolf, secretary; J. Jerome Miller, treasurer; A. B. Shollenberger, D. A. Bauscher and Walter M. Raubenhold.

Associations.—Company E, Fourth Regiment, National Guards of Pennsylvania, was organized April 13, 1875, with one hundred men and E. F. Smith as captain. The company owned its private uniforms and kept up the standard of its membership to one hundred for three years. In 1878 it accepted the State uniform for its guards and reduced its membership to a maximum of sixty enlisted men. Captain Smith remained in command until 1882, when Charles F. Seaman was elected his successor, who has since retained that position. The company has kept up its organization to the legal standard. The other officers of the company then were B. F. Geres, first lieutenant; William S. Scott, second lieutenant; William Pesig, order-the Lititz Springs, on the Fourth of July, for four successive years; at the Firemen's Tournament at Reading; at the Grand Commandery of the Knights Templar at Philadelphia, one week, having then had the right on the line of march; and at the meeting of the Grand Lodge of Odd-Fellows in Philadelphia in 1876, four days. In 1879 the membership of the band was decreased, and after the inauguration of President Garfield, in 1881, it was wholly disbanded. In 1883 six members of the old band, under the leadership of Peter Burkey, formed a new band. This has maintained its existence since, with a membership increased to eleven musicians.

Symmetry Lodge, No. 103, I. O. O. F., was instituted in 1844, with John F. Rhodes, William E. Shollenberger, Charles Lochman, Peter C. Baum and A. S. Fesig as members. In 1885 the lodge numbered one hundred and thirty-two members. Of this lodge H. R. Shollenberger has been secretary the past thirty-seven years. The meetings are held in a hall owned by the lodge. Its entire property aggregates twelve thousand dollars.

Hamburg Encampment, No. 106, I. O. O. F., was instituted in 1850, with seven members. In 1885 the number was thirty-two.

Its organization was kept up during the Civil War, and notwithstanding the loss of members by removals to the West. The encampment has funds invested, which indicates its flourishing condition.

Vaux Lodge, No. 406, A. Y. M., was instituted March 18, 1868.

In 1885 the lodge reported fifty-eight members.

The meetings are held in a rented hall. The lodge has been prosperous.

Hamburg Council, No. 74, Order U. A. M., was organized on February 8, 1848. Its meetings have been regularly held for the past twenty-five years in the Shomo Block. The hall is well furnished, and the property of the council is valued at four thousand dollars. In 1885 there were seventy-three members.

Washington Camp, No. 78, P. O. S. of A., was instituted in 1866. In 1885 there were seventy-three members, and it had two thousand one hundred and eighty-nine dollars invested.

The meetings are held in Mechanics' Hall.

Arcadia Chamber, No. 20, Order Knights of Friendship, was instituted January 26, 1885, with thirteen charter members. Since that time forty-seven additional names have been added to the roll.

General John A. Rawlins Post, No. 157, G. A. R., was instituted in 1868, and attained a membership of forty-five. William R. Smith was one of the first Commanders. Owing to loss of members by removals from Hamburg, the post surrendered its charter in 1872.

Biographical.

William Harris was born February 8, 1843, in Hemlock township, Columbia County, Pa., and is the oldest son of Jacob Harris, who, during his lifetime, was a prominent citizen of that county, having served as treasurer two terms, and as a justice of the peace for twenty-five years. The subject of this sketch was educated in the common schools, at Greenwood Seminary, in Columbia County, and Dickinson Seminary, at Williamsport, Pa. He is also a graduate of the Iron City College, of Pittsburgh, where he taught book-keeping and penmanship for two years.

He was a successful teacher in the common schools and received a professional certificate from William Burgess, the first county superintendent of Columbia County. From his boyhood he was engaged in mercantile business in his father's store, at Buckhorn, Pa., and upon attaining his majority was made a member of the firm.

He read medicine with Dr. M. Reynolds, but, preferring the drug business to the practice of medicine, chose that as his vocation, and removed to Hamburg, Berks County, in 1869 where he has since resided and established a prosperous business.

He was one of the first members of the Pennsylvania Pharmaceutical Society, and has, at various times, served on important committees. Dr. Harris has become widely known as chairman of the Democratic Standing Committee of his county, to which position he has been chosen for seven successive years. He has ability as a public speaker, an organizer and leader.

He conducted the Hamburg Band, a well-known organization, for seven years. At the formation of the Berks County Merchants' Association he was chosen its president. He has served as school director, and has been for four years burgess of the borough of Hamburg and is now acting as postmaster.

Dr. Harris was married, February 20, 1868, to Ella, daughter of Robert Hagenbush, of Bloomsburg, Pa., and has three children,—two sons, James Albert and Charles Caleb, and a daughter, Mary Elizabeth. Dr. Harris is a member of Symmetry Lodge, No. 103, of Independent Order of Odd-Fellows, and of the Grand Lodge. He is connected by membership with the Reformed Church of Hamburg, and conducts the music of the Sunday-school as its organist.

BIRDSBORO.

The flourishing borough of Birdsboro is on the southern bank of the Schuylkill, nine miles below Reading, and includes, within its corporate limits, the villages of Brooklyn, Beidlertown, Lincolnville and Silverton. It is on both sides of Hay Creek. It was formed out of parts of Union and Robeson townships; and, though founded nearly one hundred and thirty years ago, it has had the most of its growth within the last three decades. In 1850 the population was two hundred and fifty, and in 1886 the inhabitants numbered fully two thousand more. This increase was brought about mainly by the development of the iron business at that place, through Messrs. Edward and George Brooke, and by becoming a station on three lines of railways. The oldest station is on the Reading Railroad, on the opposite side of the river, where new and attractive buildings were erected in 1883, by L. H. Focht, contractor for the company. On the Wilmington Railroad, Raymund Moore erected a superior station in 1885, as contractor for the company; and during the same year the handsome station of the Pennsylvania Railroad was built. The architecture of these buildings has had a wholesome effect upon the place, causing a pleasing diversity of style in the new homes erected, in which respect Birdsboro surpasses all the other boroughs in the county.

First Settlement by William Bird.—Iron-works were established at Birdsboro among the earliest in the country. In 1740 William Bird bought a tract of land lying along Hay Creek, where it empties into the Schuylkill River, including several water-powers. Here he built the first forge, and took out warrants for adjoining lands, until at the time of his death, about 1760, he owned three thousand acres of land, three forges, a grist-mill and saw-mill. His son, Mark Bird, succeeded him in the business, built Hopewell Furnace and increased his boundaries, until in 1785 they included eight thousand acres. He also built a rolling and slitting-mill, which was one of the first mills of the kind in the country, and stood upon the same ground that the present rolling-mill occupies. A nail-factory was also in operation here at an early date making nails, by cutting them from plates of iron and heading them by hand. Mark Bird became embarrassed in business, and in 1788 transferred the greater part of his property to John Nixon, who sold to Cadwallader Morris and James Old, and, after passing through other hands, James Wilson, in 1794, became possessed of nearly all the estate. He was the brother-in-law of Mark Bird, and a signer of the Declaration of Independence. James Wilson sold the forges, with two thousand two hundred acres of land, in 1796, to John Louis Barde, the grandfather of the present proprietors. He came to Birdsboro in the year 1788, and had been running the forges under a lease. John Louis Barde was born in Geneva, Switzerland, in 1756, and educated in England at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich. He entered the English army and accompanied the expedition to this country with the troops sent to operate against the Spaniards in their attack on Pensacola, in 1779, where he married the daughter of Major Robert Farmar, the English Governor of West Florida. He came North in 1782, sold his commission, and became a citizen of the United States. He died at Birdsboro in 1799, and the property came into the hands of Matthew Brooke, who afterwards married his daughter, and was the father of Edward and George Brooke.

Matthew Brooke had purchased the Birdsboro farm in 1796, and in the year 1800 he, together with his brother, Thomas Brooke, and Daniel Buckley (who was married to their sister), purchased Hopewell Furnace from Judge Wilson. The forefathers of the Brooke family came from Yorkshire, England, in 1698.

Development of Birdsboro by the Brookes.—John Brooke and Frances, his wife, with their two sons, James and Matthew, arrived in the Delaware River in the above year, but in consequence of a contagious disease on board the vessel, the passengers were not permitted to come to Philadelphia, but disembarked lower down the river, where the parents died soon after landing and were buried in the grave-yard at Haddonfield, N. J. They were of the Society of Friends, and before leaving England John Brooke had purchased of William Penn one thousand five hundred acres of land, to be taken up anywhere between the Delaware and Susquehanna Rivers, where vacant land should be found. James and Matthew took up the land in Limerick township, Montgomery County, and settled there. Matthew Brooke, of Birdsboro, was the grandson of this Matthew, and the third of that name. The old mansion-house, which was built by William Bird in 1751, and still standing, was the residence of all the early proprietors of the works. It was in its time one of the finest country-seats in the State. The front, which was of cut sandstone, faced the Schuylkill, with a lawn stretching to its banks. On the side along Hay Creek stood a grove of large old trees which Mark Bird had fenced up and used as a deer-park. When the canal was built in front of the house it became unsuitable for a residence, and one near the lower forge was used for that purpose. The latter was torn down in 1879 to make room for the enlargement of the rolling-mill.

Matthew Brooke left two sons and three daughters, two of whom died young, and the third married the Hon. Hister Clymer, of Reading. His sons, Edward and George Brooke, took charge of the property in 1837. The works then consisted of two forges, one of which was called the "refinery," where the pig-iron was converted into what were termed "anchovies," being blooms hammered down into a bar at one end for convenience of handling and taken to the other forge, called the "chafery," where they were heated and hammered into various kinds of bar-iron. The whole production was only about two hundred tons per annum.

After building the residence now occupied by Mrs. Edward Brooke and a large flour-mill, they turned their attention to enlarging the production of iron. In 1846 they built a charcoal furnace where old Hampton Forge had stood, with the object of using their wood to make pig-iron in place of operating the forges. In 1848 they commenced building the rolling-mill and nail-factory, which were put in operation the next year. No. 1 Anthracite Furnace was built in 1852, and two other furnaces in 1870 and 1873. The furnaces are supplied with ores chiefly from the French Creek, Warwick and Jones' Mines, in which the firm own nearly one-half interest. These mines are situated ten to fifteen miles south of Birdsboro, and are connected with the furnaces by the Wilmington and Northern Railroad. In 1864 E. and G. Brooke, in connection with Seyfert, McManus & Co. and Samuel E. Griscom, opened the William Penn Colliery, near Shenandoah, Schuylkill County, Pa., which has since come into the sole possession of Edward and George Brooke. It is one of the best mines in the coal region, both for quality of coal and large production. It has for a number of years been managed by William H. Lewis.

Edward Brooke was born at Birdsboro, and died there, deeply regretted by all who knew him, on Christmas day, 1878. He was distinguished for his business ability and ambition, and united boldness and foresight in projecting enterprises with carefulness and prudence in their execution. To his success in life his extended scientific knowledge largely contributed, and in all business affairs he manifested great industry, perseverance and sound judgment. He was by nature kind and genial, honorable in all his dealings and generous to every one in word and deed. The welfare of Birdsboro was always a matter of interest to him, and, in co-operation with his brother, he was wise and liberal in devising and effecting its advancement. Through his efforts the Wilmington and Reading Railroad was constructed, passing through Birdsboro, and he was its first president. He was one of the original projectors of the First National Bank of Reading, and one of its directors until his death. He married Annie M. Clymer, daughter of Daniel R. Clymer, of Reading, and left one daughter, Annie C., and three sons,—Robert Edward, George Clymer and Frederick Hister. In order to continue the business after his death, it was organized into two companies, under the title of the Edward and George Brooke Iron Company and the Edward and George Brooke Land Company, all the property remaining in the same ownership. Geo. Brooke was made president of the two companies, and Geo. W. Harrison, treasurer, and Richard T. Leaf, secretary. Under this arrangement the business has since been conducted, and kept up fully to the progress of the times. A steel plant is now being erected at No. 2 Blast Furnace, with the intention of converting the molten iron directly into steel, which will be used to make nails. A new train of rolls will also be put into the rolling-mill and other alterations made to work steel.

The capacity of the works has been gradually increased until now they are capable of producing fifty thousand tons of pig-iron and two hundred and fifty thousand kegs of nails per annum. About six hundred and seventy-five men and boys are employed at the works and iron-mines, who earn about twenty-eight thousand dollars per month. One hundred and seventy houses belonging to the firm are occupied by workmen employed, and about one hundred other houses are owned by the employees, who have built them out of the savings of their wages. At the William Penn Colliery five hundred and seventy-five men are employed, earning about twenty-two thousand dollars per month, and about two hundred and forty thousand tons of coal are mined annually.

George Brooke was also born at Birdsboro, and has always taken the same interest with his brother in the substantial and moral improvement of the place. He is a member of the Town Council and School Board, giving his assistance and advice in their deliberations. Beside his engagements in the iron business, he is president of the First National Bank of Reading, a director in the Wilmington and Northern Railroad and in the Schuylkill Navigation Company, president of the Pennsylvania Diamond Drill Company, and treasurer of the Keystone Coal Company of West Virginia. In 1862 he married Mary B. Irwin, the granddaughter of Captain Stephen Baldwin, a well-known and highly-respected ship-owner and merchant of Philadelphia, and daughter of John H. Irwin, a grandson of Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg, the first Speaker of the House of Representatives. They have two sons,—Edward and George.

General Industries, Stores and Hotels.—
The present Brooke flouring-mill is the third occupying that site. It was begun in 1844 and completed the following year. In the fall of 1844 a Henry Clay meeting was held in the building, there being at that time no hall to accommodate such a gathering. In 1879 and 1882 the mill was remodeled and supplied with modern machinery and steam-power. Its capacity has been much enlarged. Another mill was started in the borough in 1876, when J. R. Kerst supplied the old Bland building with mill machinery. It was operated till 1885, when work was discontinued, and the machinery removed the following year.

In 1867 the Birdsboro Iron Foundry Company, a joint-stock association, was formed, with David Knaur as president, and Edward Parlan as secretary. In 1868 they erected a large building for manufacturing purposes, and this was enlarged in 1869 by the addition of a wing, when forty-five men were afforded employment. Stoves were manufactured, a specialty being made of the "Enterprise" pattern, and machine-castings were also produced. In 1869 the works were leased to A. R. Young and Joseph R. Kerst. Soon afterward they were operated by the former alone; and he then began the manufacture of fine castings for the Boston market. In 1871 work was discontinued and the buildings were sold to E. and G. Brooke. After standing idle till 1885, they came to be then occupied by the Pennsylvania Diamond Drill Company, which removed their works to that place from Pottsville. The company is engaged in the manufacture of diamond drilling-machines, mining tools and high-speed electric light engines. Thirty-five men are employed.

The first store, independent of the iron-works, was opened about 1829, by Geiger & Umstead, in a building which stood on the site of the present mill-shed. In 1837 the Brookes opened a store in the mansion, in the same locality, but soon afterward occupied a store-room which they erected at the canal lock. In 1875 a fine business-stand opposite the mill was erected by the Brookes, but it was burned out when nearly ready for occupancy. It was immediately rebuilt. The third story contains a large auditorium, known as "Brooke Hall." The lower stories form spacious business rooms, now occupied by Brooke & Co.

In 1850 Caleb Harrison erected a business house on Schuylkill Street, which was occupied as a store for six years by John Bland. In 1876 it was converted into a steam grist-mill by J. R. Kerst.

Opposite this place Jacob E. Hook erected a business house, where L. R. Bland was long in trade, and where Harry E. Hook & Bro. are now merchandising. In a part of the block is situated the Washington House, now the oldest hotel in the place. For many years the public-house of Birdsboro was in the old Bird mansion, and since 1882 it has been occupied by I. G. Steinrock.

In 1859 George Brinley established a business and it is still carried on by John H. Brinley. Other business men, prominent in the borough, are F. B. Kern, James S. Bruster, Raymond Moore and A. S. East.

The Birdsboro co-operative store was in operation from 1875 to 1886. I. L. Pauling being the president of the association.

The borough has had three building and loan associations, two of which, the "Birdsboro" and the "Keystone," have closed up their business with satisfactory results; the third, the "Enterprise," is now in operation, having one thousand shares at four hundred dollars each. Its officers are George W. Harrison, president; James S. Bruster, secretary; and C. K. Rhoads, treasurer.

The Birdsboro post-office was established January 6, 1851, and has had S. B. Hafer as postmaster since July, 1885. There are six mails per day and since July, 1884, the office has been a postal money-order office. Other postmasters have been William Lincoln, Sarah Evans and Reese Evans.

Incorporation.—On the 11th day of July, 1872, sixty-five freeholders and forty-four tenant citizens of Birdsboro and its outlying villages petitioned the Court of Quarter Sessions of Berks County for a decree of incorporation as a borough; and, on the 14th day of August of the same year, the grand jury recommended that the prayer of the petitioners be granted. The court made the decree on November 23, 1872, and directed that the first election of officers should be held March 11, 1873, having appointed Joseph R. Kerst judge, and Levi R. Bland and Benjamin Grubb inspectors. The first election resulted in the choice of George W. Hain as burgess; Edward Brooke, Henry A. Beaudencup, George W. Harrison, Geo. R. Brinley, B. F. Bunn and John Mock, Councilmen. Caleb K. Rhoads was appointed the clerk and treasurer, and he has since been annually appointed to the same offices. The following have been the burgesses: 1874–75, James Liggett; 1876, George Beard; 1877, D. K. Miller; 1878, George W. Hook; 1879–80, H. B Brusstar; 1881–82, C. B. Beard; 1883, Cyrus Painter; 1884, Michael Hoffman; 1885–86, A S. East. The presidents of the Council for the same period have been Edward Brooke, B. F. Bunn, John Mock, George Brooke and A. S. East. The clerk and treasurer from 1873 till now has been C. K. Rhoads. The Councilmen in 1886 were George Brooke, George E. Hook, I. G. Steinrock, Isaac Huyett and Isaac March. The justices of the peace have been J. R. Kerst and J. S. Brusstar.

The borough was incorporated with the following bounds: S. 24° 15′ W., 5118 feet; S. 74° 40′ E., 7128 feet; N. 14° 13′ E., 6349 feet; thence up the Schuylkill River to the place of beginning, containing eight hundred and five square acres. The survey was made by Kendall Bros., and the entire incorporation cost $133.50.

From the records of the borough the following extracts, relating to its affairs, have been taken: George R. Brinley and George W. Harrison were appointed a committee to name the streets. The latter, B. F. Bunn and John Mock, were appointed a committee to secure fire-ladders and other means of protection against loss from fire, which were ordered to be purchased April 19, 1873.

On the 5th of March, 1873, the first ordinances were adopted.

On the 6th of June, 1873, George W. Harrison, on behalf of the committee on a “lock-up,” reported a plan, which was adopted, and Moses Stubblebine was awarded the contract for building the same, a two-story building, which was ready for occup-cancy December, 1873. The upper story has been fitted up for the business meetings of the borough offiers, and the expense of the building was $1275.

In December, 1878, Edward Brooke died while holding the position of president of the Council, and that body passed appropriate resolutions of condolence, and ordered his chair in the council-room to be draped in morning.

On the 27th of January, 1883, the council presented a purse of fifty dollars to the Reading Hose Company for its assistance in putting out the fire in the De Witt shop.

In September, 1883, Kendall Bros. established the grade of the streets of the borough. October 17, 1883, resolutions of condolence were passed upon the death of Jacob E. Hook, a member of the Council; and December 29th, of the same year, President George Brooke reported that the system of water supply, established by his company, was completed to allow the water to be put in the mains for the use of the borough. Twenty-seven fire-plugs were erected at convenient points in the borough, to afford protection against fires, the Council agreeing to pay two hundred and fifty dollars for the use of the first twelve hydrants, and fifteen dollars apiece for the use of the remainder. The reservoir is in the mountains, two miles from Birdsboro, on Indian Run, and is fed by springs of pure water. It has an area of about eight acres, and a capacity of thirty-seven million gallons. The pressure is eighty-four pounds to the inch, and a stream of water can be thrown two hundred feet high in the lowest part of the borough. The water is conducted to the borough in a ten-inch main and thence distributed through three miles of smaller pipes to the different parts of the village.

December 31, 1884, the Council contracted with the Pennsylvania Globe Gas-Light Company, to erect twenty street lamps in the borough, at a cost of eighteen dollars per lamp; and the same were put up and have been used since the spring of 1885.

The principal streets of the borough have been curbed and some substantial sidewalks built.

Churches—Methodist Episcopal Church.—The first Methodist Episcopal Church in this locality was erected in the Mt. Airy neighborhood in 1839, and had as its first board of trustees, J. Beard, David Gilmore, John Kupp, Daniel Fox, John Harrison, John Rorke and Chas. Hoyer. The building was of stone, one-story high, and dimensions, twenty-five by forty eight feet. It well served its purpose a number of years. In 1869 the present edifice was erected in Birdsboro by a building committee composed of John Rorke, L. R. Bland, L. L. Bush, Wm. Morris and Joseph R. Minker. It is a spacious brick structure, with basement, forty-four by seventy feet, and cost eight thousand dollars. It was dedicated November 7, 1869, and on the 16th of May, the following year, the society became an incorporated body with the following as trustees: John Rorke, Jos. R. Minker, William Morris, Charles Hoyer, Adam Hoyer, L. R. Bland, Jeremiah Beard and Daniel Gilman. The church has a membership of three hundred, with the Rev. Thomas S. Mutchler as pastor (he serving also the Monocacy Church). A Sunday-school of two hundred and eighty members is connected with the church, and has J. Beard as the superintendent.

St. Michael’s Episcopal Church. — The congregation occupying this house of worship had its origin in missions, which were established at Birdsboro and Mt. Airy by St. Gabriel’s Church, of Douglassville, of which the Rev. Edmund Leaf was at that time rector. The interest thus developed led to the building of a small church at Birdsboro, the corner-stone of which was laid by Rev. Leaf, May 31, 1852, and the building consecrated February 12, 1853, by the Rev. Alonzo Potter, D.D. Rees Evans and Joseph R. Kerst were chosen wardens; and Edward Brooke, Levi E. Hook, George Brinley, George Brooke and David J. Lincoln, vestrymen. Some time afterward, through the liberality of E. and G. Brooke, a chapel was built on the same lot, in which a well-attended Sabbath-school has been maintained. For a few years a mission Sabbath-school was maintained at Mt. Airy, in the building which was formerly the Philomathean Academy, discontinued ten years ago. In 1877, E. and G. Brooke built a rectory at a cost of six thousand five hundred dollars, and presented it to St. Michael’s Church. It is built of cut sandstone and presents a fine appearance. In 1885 the Brookes again manifested their interest in the welfare of St. Michael’s Church by remodeling and rebuilding the church, at a cost of twelve thousand dollars, making it one of the finest churches of its size in the county. Its exterior has been made very substantial, and the interior is beautifully decorated, containing also memorial windows, perpetuating the remembrance of Edward Brooke, Caleb Harrison, Rees Evans, the family of Hiestier Clymer and others.

The last improvement was the erection of a library hall, in 1884, which contains a reading room, free to all, upon the payment of a very small membership fee. It has been supplied with eight hundred standard books, and is under the direction of the church officials. In 1886 they were: Wardens, David J. Lincoln and William Young; Vestry, George Brooke, George W. Harrison, H. G. Hunter, James King and William Brusstar. These also control St. Michael’s Cemetery, in Union township, which includes the old Philomathean Academy property. The building has been fitted up for a chapel, for use when interments are made, and the ground has been enlarged, so that it now includes about six acres. Thus far, two hundred and sixty lots have been laid out, and upon which about four hundred interments have been made. In the past sixteen years it has been open to the public. About two thousand five hundred dollars have been expended in the improvement of the property, which is becoming one of the handsomest cemeteries in the county.

The parish, when the first church was built, included the churches at Pottstown and Douglassville but has for many years been limited to the church at Birdsboro, and the Rev. Edmund Leaf has been the only rector. Through his efforts the work has grown from a small mission to a well-established church, having one hundred members.

St. Mark’s Evangelical Lutheran Church was built in 1877 by a committee composed of Raymond Moore, Harry E. Hook, C. K. Rhoads and F. B. Kern. It is a plain brick building, with the rear wall recessed to form pulpit space, and cost two thousand three hundred dollars. The congregation was organized in 1875, with forty-five members (the first services in this behalf having been held in November, 1873); at present it numbers one hundred and fifty. Rev. Z. H. Gable has been the only pastor. A flourishing Sunday-school, numbering two hundred members, has C. K. Rhoads as its superintendent. It was organized in 1878.

1 Died in 1886.
Birdsboro Evangelical Church is a plain frame building, erected in 1874 in South Birdsboro. It is part of a charge called the Birdsboro Circuit. The membership was at first small, and the congregation has had many obstacles to contend with. It has, however, prospered, and numbers one hundred and ten members, with the Rev. N. A. Barr as pastor. The Sunday-school superintendent is William Homan, and has one hundred and thirty-eight members.

St. Paul's Reformed Church.—The congregation which occupies this church was organized in March, 1880, with thirty members, most of whom had previously belonged to the Schwartzwald congregation, in Exeter township. S. R. Hofer and E. R. Hain were chosen as the first elders. The following year a building was commenced by Samuel R. Hafer. John Wusch and Frederick De Turk, as a committee appointed by the congregation, consecrated it in the fall of 1882. It is a rough stone structure, thirty-five by fifty feet, plastered on the outside, and cost three thousand dollars. The church has no settled pastor, having been supplied by ministers residing at Reading, the Rev. W. J. Kerschner being the present supply. The membership has been increased to sixty persons, and there is also a Sunday-school, having an attendance of a hundred, of which S. R. Hafer is the superintendent.

Schools.—In the locality of Birdsboro, common pay-schools were maintained soon after 1820. Among the teachers there were Samuel Bard, Thomas Graham and John Paulding. After the free schools had been established, so that a general interest was awakened in educational matters, a demand arose for a local High School. This feeling received material encouragement at the hands of Henry S. Kupp, who was instrumental in securing the services of B. F. Boyer, a graduate of Yale College, and opening a select school in a building on the Kupp farm, east of Birdsboro, in Robeson township, and near the Mount Airy neighborhood. His success as a teacher encouraged the building of the Philomathea Academy, on the same farm, in 1855, in which Prof. Boyer taught four years. Other teachers continued the school until 1865, when the building was vacated and set aside for religious uses. St. Michael's Cemetery was opened on adjoining lands.

The following year another school, called the “Birdsboro Academy,” was opened, and Prof. J. H. Swindell, of North Carolina, became the first teacher, receiving a salary of one thousand dollars per year. This school was discontinued in 1871.

In 1866 the borough maintained nine schools, in five buildings, which were attended by four hundred and fifty pupils, whose instruction cost about ten dollars per pupil. These schools were under the principalship of Prof. H. D. Hunter the past twelve years, and were graded by him into primary, secondary, grammar and high schools. The board of directors at this time is composed of William K. Young, president; Daniel K. Miller, secretary; L. E. Hook, treasurer; George Brooke, John I. Reeser and David Watts.

The old public-school building on Mill Street was demolished by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company when its road was built through the place in 1884, and in its place a spacious building, costing eight thousand dollars, erected. The school building in the Brooklyn addition, which was erected in 1873, was enlarged also in 1884, and the edifice on First Street was built in 1881, at a cost of about three thousand five hundred dollars.

Physicians.—In the practice of medicine Dr. Caleb Liggitt (who located here about thirty-eight years ago) may be regarded as the first. Dr. Jonathan Fondler, an Englishman, who suffered shipwreck on his voyage to America, and who died at Morgantown a very aged man, was also an early practitioner. Dr. B. F. Bunn has been in Birdsboro continuously since 1867, having come from Chester County. He opened the first drug-store in 1867. Dr. J. B. Holman, a Scotchman, was in practice from 1865 till his death, in 1873. Dr. H. B. Brustar, who graduated in 1873, located in Birdsboro in 1875, and since 1883 has carried on a drug-store in connection with his profession. Dr. James Lincoln, after being in practice three years in Chester County, located at Birdsboro in 1880, and since 1881 has also been in the drug business. Dr. M. A. Hengst has been in practice there since his graduation in 1877.

Secret Societies.—Neversink Lodge, No. 514, I. O. O. F., was instituted December 16, 1854. Among the surviving members are Levi E. Hook, Henry Yeager and Jacob Bower. In 1886 there were one hundred and seven members, having a fund amounting to two thousand four hundred dollars.

In 1848 Seminole Council of American Mechanics was instituted at Birdsboro. In June, 1850, a hall was built for its accommodation, and dedicated September 28th, the same year. After a season of prosperity it went down.

In 1868 Council No. 37, Order of Junior American Mechanics, was instituted, and its meetings are still continued with success, the members in April, 1886, numbering one hundred and twenty-two.

Fire Company.—Friendship Fire Company, No. 1, was incorporated August 2, 1883, and is the first distinct fire company organized in Birdsboro. In 1886 it had eighty-six members and occupied a very handsome building, which was erected in the fall of 1884 and delivered to the company January 20, 1885, by the contractor, L. H. Focht. The lot was donated by George Brooke. The building is two stories high, twenty-three by forty feet, of very pleasing architecture, and cost three thousand dollars. The upper story forms a neat parlor, and in the lower the apparatus of the company is kept, consisting of five hundred feet of hose and a carriage for the same, which was presented by Friendship Fire Company, No. 4, of Reading, on the 12th of May, 1883. The present property of the company is valued at four thousand five hundred dollars.

Biographical.

Levi H. Focht is descended from German ancestry. His grandfather, George Focht, was born February 1, 1773, and died March 1, 1839. He resided in Robeson township, and devoted his life to farming. By his marriage with Catherine Huyett, the following children were born: John, June 14, 1804; Samuel, August 8, 1805; Daniel, April 20, 1807; Mary, January 18, 1809; Charles, January 5, 1812; George, January 1, 1814; and Jacob, July 18, 1815. Jacob, the youngest son, is the only survivor, and now resides in Reading. Daniel Focht, the third son of George Focht, was born on the homestead in Robeson township, and, from his boyhood until his death, October 14, 1871, gained a livelihood by working upon the Schuylkill Canal as a repair man, and by cultivating the homestead farm after the death of his father. He married Catherine, daughter of David Hemmig, and had the following children: Mary Ann, born May 12, 1834, and now the wife of Raymond Mohr; Sarah, born November 12, 1835, married to Lewis Fritz; Catherine, born September 19, 1839, married to David Mock; David, born October 30, 1841, now deceased, leaving a widow, Martha Lincoln; Elizabeth, born March 21, 1845, married to Jeremiah Weidner; Hannah, born April 17, 1846; and Levi H., the subject of this sketch, who was born August 3, 1850. The last-named is a native of Robeson township. He obtained his education in the public schools of Birdsboro, and at the age of thirteen secured employment with the Schuylkill Navigation Company, and worked upon the repairs to the canal for two years. He was next apprenticed to learn the trade of a carpenter with his brother-in-law, Raymond Mohr, of Birdsboro, and was then employed on the Perkiomen Railroad, and afterward entering the service of Berton & McDonald, bridge-builders, of Philadelphia. He assisted them in the erection of a number of bridges in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. When the large wooden bridge spanning the Pompton River, on the line of the Midland Railroad of New Jersey, was built, he was given charge of the construction of it, then being but eighteen years of age. On the 23d of May, 1874, Mr. Focht was married to Alice, daughter of Jeremiah Beard, of Birdsboro. They had two children,—George Walter and Levi Roy, deceased. In 1873 Mr. Focht established himself in Birdsboro as a contractor and builder, and has prospered through his energy and determination to make the excellence of his work a guarantee of success. His most important orders include the stock-farm buildings of Mr. A. J. Cassatt, the majority of the stations on the line of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, and many large and elegant residences along the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad. He has recently completed an addition to the Haverford College buildings, at Haverford College, Pa.; also the Wood Memorial Chapel, adjoining Christ Cathedral, Reading, Pa. Mr. Focht has done the major part of the building in the town of his adoption, and is the projector of that portion of Birdsboro known as Lincolntown addition, in which the greater part of the many attractive residences were erected by him in conformity with his own plans and designs. Mr. Focht is a Republican in politics, and has represented that party in the Borough Council. As a Free and Accepted Mason, he is connected with Chandler Lodge, No. 227, of Reading, with Excelsior Chapter, No. 237, and with Reading Commandery, No. 42, K. T. He is also a member of Neversink Lodge, section of Berks County, and near the Montgomery County line. It is the most important station on the Colebrookdale Railroad. The inhabitants are wide-awake and intelligent, having numbered about fifteen hundred in the year 1885; and the place contains an unusual number of large and attractive buildings.

In 1769 Henry Stauffer became the owner of a large tract of land on part of which Boyertown is now located. He sold off from this tract to Jacob

BOYERTOWN.

The borough of Boyertown is comparatively recent in point of political existence, yet it has a degree of prosperity which places it amongst the most thriving and enterprising towns of Eastern Pennsylvania. It has a charming and healthful location, in Colebrookdale township, in the eastern Latshaw in 1775; to Jonathan Rhoads in 1786; and to Henry Baer in 1795. But upon part of this land John Salter lived as early as 1720; and he was, probably, the first resident of that immediate section of country. Henry Stauffer was a son of Jacob Stauffer, one of the first settlers of Hereford township, and died in 1803. His son Jacob, born in 1754, died in 1839, and was the father of Henry and John Stauffer, both of whom lived on the homestead until their death. The Shaner family was also one of the first to settle in that vicinity. Soon afterward came Henry Boyer and the Schaeffers, who settled on the Latshaw place. Boyer secured a central location on the above farm and opened a public-house, and his sons engaged in other business at the same point, which, through them, received the name of Boyertown, long before it was laid out in town lots in 1835.

Borough Incorporation.—The first attempt to incorporate Boyertown into a borough was made in 1851; then thirty-three persons signed a petition for such a purpose. But it was not successful. A second effort was made in April, 1866, which received the consideration of the grand jury, a favorable report having been made October 20, 1866, and then the decree of incorporation was accordingly made. An election was held and the first Council was organized at the Union Hotel November 19, 1866, with William Fegley, president; Samuel Sheney, treasurer; H. B. Rhoads, clerk; Dr. John Todd, Samuel Leaver, William Binder and Philip Gabel, Councilmen. Jonathan Kepler was the first burgess.

Since that time the following have been theburgesses, clerks, treasurers and presidents of Council:

In 1886 the officers were,—

Franklin Hartman, burgess; C. F. Emes, clerk; Levi H. Leever, treasurer; Jeremiah Romig, president.

Councilmen, George E. Bleim, Samuel G. Sands, Zep. Gottshall, John Schaeffer.

The justices since the organization of the borough have been William K. Stauffer, L. M. Koons, William Fox, J. B. Hankey, Henry B. Rhoads and C. F. Emes.

The solicitors for the borough have been B. Frank Boyer, Daniel and James Ermentrout and J. K. Grant, the last-named serving at present.

In 1867 the grades of the streets were established by D. S. Zacharias and William K. Stauffer. Since that time several of the principal streets have been graded in a very substantial manner, and the benefits sought by the incorporation have been generally realized.

Industries—Iron-ore.—The oldest and most important pursuit of the citizens of Boyertown has been iron-mining, an employment engaged in with more or less activity the past one hundred and sixty years.

As early as July 29, 1718, David Powell obtained a patent for two hundred acres of land, which afterward became known as the “Furnace Tract,” and a source of great profit to the proprietors. On June 4, 1719, Powell sold this land to Thomas Ruter, and on May 22, 1733, Samuel Potts obtained an interest in the same. These parties were the first to develop the mineral resources on the land. The Colebrookdale Furnace was erected about 1720 in that locality, and supplied with iron-ore obtained from the land nearby, where mining operations are still carried on. When they sold the land to Henry Stauffer, December 29, 1769, they reserved the mineral right, retained one acre where the iron vein cropped out and exacted a condition whereby they might have the privilege of mining at the “Red Bank,” holding themselves liable for damages resulting from mining operations. In later years, a claim for consequential damages having been made, the owners of the mineral right purchased six acres of land at that point, including the “Red Bank.” This land, including the mineral right of the old “Furnace Tract,” is now the property of Robert and Morris Lewis, of Philadelphia, but is worked under a lease by the Phoehix Iron Company, which was the first to carry on operations on an extensive scale and to employ machinery to increase the product. Before this the owners of the Colebrookdale Furnace, the Eckerts at Reading and others, had mined at the “Red Bank” in the old way. After working the mine on a limited scale, from 1852 for a few years, the Phoehix Iron Company began using steam-power in 1855, and so continued.
at the "Red Mine" until 1881, since which time operations have been confined to the lower mine, or the acre lot. At that place steam-power has been employed since 1869. At the lower place slope-mining is carried on, the slope at present being four hundred feet long and running at an angle of forty degrees. The ore is black magnetic and yields fifty-five per cent. of pure iron.

The lands contiguous to the "Furnace Tract" have the same vein of iron, though at much greater depths, and generally having a horizontal position. On the Binder lot, tests made for the Warwick Iron Company, in 1873, gave proof of the presence of rich ore, which has been developed and mined by that company. The shaft has a depth of six hundred and seventy feet. Sixty men are employed.

Gabel, Jones & Gabel are extensive miners on the Ritter tract, having operated since 1877. Their shaft has reached the depth of six hundred feet. They employ forty-five men and mine large quantities of first-class ore.

The fourth mine is on the John Rhoad tract, and has been worked by the present operators since October, 1883. Fifteen men are employed.

The united product of these mines is about six thousand tons per month, all of which is readily moved by direct tracks or sidings of the railroad from the mines.

CIGARS.—The manufacture of cigars is another industry which has quickened the business life of the borough, and affords employment to hundreds of persons. The pioneer manufacturer is D. S. Erb, the proprietor of the Keystone Cigar Factory.—Mr. Erb began business at Boyertown as a tobacconist in 1864, employing two hands, but increased the force from year to year until, in 1883, he had five hundred hands employed. About that time he changed the grade of his work, and has since produced fine cigars only, employing at present two hundred hands. His factory is one of the most complete in the county, occupying the greater part of a three-story brick building, seventy-five by seventy-five feet, which he erected in 1882.

Enterprise Cigar Factory is conducted by William M. Riegner & Brother. It was established in 1880, and also had a small beginning. In 1882 sixty persons were employed, but on raising the grade of the work, the number was reduced to thirty-two.

Boyertown Cigar Factory (P. A. Brauss & Co., proprietors) was established in the summer of 1884, and enlarged to its present size in the spring of 1886,—a frame factory, two and a half stories high, sixty by fifty-three feet. It contains eight rooms, heated by steam, and affords working space for one hundred and seventy-five men. This factory is operated with other factories elsewhere.

Cigar-Box Factory.—William W. Wren and Oliver Engel established this factory in 1881,—a two-story frame building, is supplied with first-class machinery, operated by steam-power. Eight hands are employed.

Boyertown Machine-Shop was established in 1878 by Daniel Schlegel, and has since been carried on by him. The motive-power is steam and the products are general farm and mining machinery. Four men are employed.

CHURCHES.—Mennonite Church.—The Mennonites were the first to establish a place of worship in what is now Boyertown. In 1790 Henry Stauffer, a member of this sect, granted one acre of ground to Abraham Bechtel and Henry High, in trust for the use of the "Mennonite Congregation of Colebrookdale," an organization some twenty years old at that time, and worshipping in a meeting-house in the eastern end of the valley. Upon this lot a log church was built the same year and a cemetery opened, which is still kept up, though in the borough. This log meeting-house was used as an auxiliary place of worship by the old Colebrookdale congregation, meetings being held every four weeks, until 1819, when it was replaced by a more commodious brick church, sustaining the same relation as the old house. For a number of years John Gehman and Christian Clemmer were the ministers, and the congregation had a harmonious existence until May, 1847, when a dissension arose on account of a change in the time-honored dress of the ministry and a modification of some of the cardinal doctrines of the sect, causing a division into old and new measure parties. The latter held that Menno Simon, the founder of the sect, did not lay down an imperative rule in regard to dress, or one which should for all time be unchangeable, but that the essential required was simplicity, a condition which could be obtained as well by the use of buttons as of hooks and eyes, or by modifying the cut to adapt it to the wearer instead of following an arbitrary cut. They claimed that a revision of the catechism had also been made necessary, and that the rule forbidding marriages outside of the pale of the church should be amended. They did not think that the use of musical instruments, as a means of worship, was sinful, and advocated the necessity of having a printed or written constitution instead of relying entirely upon the traditionary customs which so long governed them. They claimed, further, that the times demanded an educated ministry, and that the aids to progress and social and religious advancement should be accepted and used to the honor of the Divine Master. These innovations, introduced and demanded by John H. Oberholtzer, were too sweeping in their nature to be accepted by the Mennonites generally, and a determined opposition to them was aroused on the plea that they were inimical to the best interests of the church, and that, if entertained, the disruption of the sect would follow. The old party held that while the new coat of Oberholtzer, rounded to suit his person and provided with buttons, was not sinful by itself considered, it symbolized a rebellion against the usages which had been a distinguishing characteristic of the sect, and brought it with it a change of principles which would destroy all the traditions of the church. A vital issue having thus been made, a spirited controversy ensued which caused Oberholtzer to sever his connection with the Franconia Conference, in which body the title to the church property was vested, and to whose rulings the old Mennonites loyally held. Hence, when the new measure Mennonites demanded an interest in, or possession of, certain church property, the courts decreed that their claims had been forfeited. At Boyertown and Colebrookdale Clemmer became a follower of Oberholtzer, and was seconded by a large number of members, to whom he preached as a separate congregation. They used the old brick meeting-house alternately with the old congregation until 1877, when the latter proceeded to demolish it with the purpose of erecting a new house. They gave the new congregation notice of their intention and invited it to co-operate with them in building a new church, the title to which should remain in the Franconia Conference. They declined to do so, and had an injunction served on the old congregation to restrain the demolition of the old building. A long and costly litigation ensued, and, at the end of six years, the courts finally decreed as above stated. Meantime, the old congregation completed a new brick meeting-house forty-five by fifty feet, which was occupied in the fall of 1879. The building committee was composed of Samuel H. Landis, Jacob Bechtel, Joel B. Bauer and Henry G. Gabel. This building has since been used in connection with the old church in Washington township, meetings being held every four weeks. There are about forty members, and John B. Bechtel and Andrew Mack served as ministers.

The courts having decided that the new Mennonite congregation had no interest in the old church property, a new church edifice was begun by it on July 20, 1883. The building committee was composed of J. H. Borneman, Isaac Borneman and George Bleim, and the building was dedicated January 7, 1884, by the Rev. Andrew Schelly. It is a brick edifice, in dimensions, forty by sixty-five feet, situated in the southern part of the borough. The trustees, in 1886, were John Bechtel, Samuel Landis and J. H. Borneman. The Rev. Christian Clemmer preached for the congregation until his death, in 1882. The present minister is Bishop Moses Godshall, who is assisted by Abraham Godshall. There are about forty members and services are held semi-monthly.

Old Union Church.—The members of the German Reformed and Lutheran congregations of the Swamp Church, living in Colebrookdale township, erected a house of worship in 1811, upon a lot of ground donated by Henry Stauffer, adjoining that of the Mennonites. It was a plain edifice, forty by fifty feet, and contained galleries on three sides. It was arranged similar to the churches of that period. In 1851 a small steeple was added to the building, which was consecrated on April 26th. A bell was introduced at the same time, this having formerly been on the court house at Reading. The bell was cast in England in 1764, and weighed three hundred pounds. The congregation paid fifty dollars for it, which was a low price for a bell of such a quality. After the old house was demolished, as the property of the Reformed congregation, the bell was stored away for future use on a chapel or lecture-room. In 1853 the stone wall inclosing the cemetery was built by the united congregations, Dr. Charles Keeley having bequeathed two hundred dollars for that purpose. In 1854 lamps and chandeliers were supplied, and these were lit for the first time January 28th of that year. In 1873 the Reformed congregation became the owner of the property, and the old church building was taken down and the present Reformed Church of the Good Shepherd erected in its place, the meetings of the congregation having, in the mean time, been held in the Mennonite Church. The corner-stone was laid April 30, 1874, by the Rev. A. S. Leinbach, of Reading, and contained, among other things, a leaden plate, upon which were engraved the names of the building committee,—Jacob Kuser, L. M. Koons, Jeremiah Sweinhart, Joseph Young, J. H. Funk and Henry Leh, Sr.; the consistory, Jacob Kuser, Daniel Leidy, F. H. Stauffer, Daniel Borneman, W. Schealer, H. Will, Charles Hagy and John K Stauffer, and the pastor, Rev. L. J. Mayer.

It is a two story edifice, with a front of Philadelphia pressed brick. The building is fifty-two by eighty feet, with the rear wall recessed nine feet more to afford pupil space. In front is a tower, one hundred and forty feet high, the upper part presenting an octagonal appearance. The building contains a number of fine memorial windows, presented by the friends of the church. The auditorium is finely finished, and has a seating capacity for six hundred persons. It was dedicated on December 25, 1876. The cost was thirty-five thousand dollars.

The following pastors of the Reformed congregation officiated: Revs. Frederick Herman, Henry S. Baseler, Samuel Siebert, N. S. Straussburger, Augustus S. Dechert, R. A. Van Court and L. J. Moyer, the last being the present pastor. Rev. Mr. Dechert introduced English preaching every four weeks. The congregation has four hundred members, and a consistory of which L. P. G. Fegley is the secretary, and L. H. Leever the treasurer.

St. John’s Lutheran Church.—The Lutheran congregation, organized about the time the Union Church was built, had as its first pastor the Rev. Jacob Miller, who served it eighteen years. He was succeeded by Conrad Miller, whose pastorate extended through twenty-four years. Revs. Nathan Yeager and A. H. Groh officiated for a short time. Since December 9, 1865, the Rev. L. Groh has been the pastor, and during his ministry the history of the church has been the most eventful. Soon after his accession the question of building a new church was agitated, to accommodate the growing congregation; but it was not until 1870 that definite action was taken. On the last day of that year a meeting was held, at which it was decided that a charter should be procured and a new church built. It was then reported that ten thousand dollars had been pledged for a new church, one-fourth of the amount having been tendered by Samuel Shaner. The charter was procured the following January, and in it the congregation was designated by the present name, having been known up till then by the locality only. Dr. Thomas J. B. Rhoads, Jeremiah Romig, William Binder and Aaron Mory composed the building committee. The corner-stone was laid September 2, 1871, and the church was formally dedicated August 18, 1872. It is a well-proportioned, two-story brick edifice, fifty-five by ninety feet, with a high auditorium, having galleries on three sides, and affording seating capacity for one thousand persons. The church is finely finished and contains a pipe-organ of twenty-four stops. A steeple one hundred and sixty-nine feet high is attached to the building, and includes a fine bell, weighing two thousand six hundred pounds. The total church improvement cost about thirty-five thousand dollars.

A Lutheran Sunday-school has been conducted since September, 1872. In 1885 it had five hundred members, with David S. Erb as the superintendent. The congregation has about eight hundred members. The services are conducted in the German and English languages.

Ebenezer Methodist Episcopal Church.—The corner-stone of this church was laid August 10, 1875, and the church was completed for consecration the following year. It is a brick edifice, with a seating capacity for four hundred persons. The building committee were composed of James Wren, Joseph Tyrrell and Richard Richards, the latter serving as treasurer. When the congregation was organized there were fifty members, but owing to removals only thirty-eight were reported in 1882. During Rev. Martin's ministry there was an increase of membership, so that at the close of 1884 the entire number was seventy-two. On March 1, 1886, there were one hundred full and thirty-five probationary members.

There is a flourishing Sunday-school of twenty-one teachers and officers and one hundred and eighty-one scholars, supported by the church, William W. Wren being the superintendent.

Educational — Public School. — The first schools at Boyertown were taught by German teachers in the school-house standing on the Union Church lot. When the free-school system was accepted, in 1838, English instruction began to be imparted in the octagonal school building, which was used until 1860, when the board of directors—composed of Amos K. Strunk, Daniel K. Ritter, Isaac Ritter, John Murkel, Jesse Peunyacker and William Ritter—purchased a lot in another part of the town and erected a two-story brick building to accommodate two schools. This building was enlarged and remodeled in 1876 by the directors of the borough, who had controlled the school since 1866. It contains four rooms, neatly furnished. The schools were graded in 1878 and have achieved a good reputation. The four departments had an average attendance of one hundred and forty-one in 1885, and the schools were under the principalship of Henry B. Yorgey. At the same time the directors were J. H. Funk, president; William H. Fox, secretary; O. P. Grimley, treasurer; L. M. Wootman, D. B. Bauer and Daniel H. Fox.

Mount Pleasant Seminary had its origin in a select school, established in 1842 by Hon. John Stauffer. Its success encouraged him to erect a building for a school on a more extensive scale, and in 1849 the present seminary building was put up. Prof. Jacob Whitman was the first principal, in 1850, he having been a very able teacher and especially skillful as a botanist. The course of instruction he provided embraced the common English branches, the classics and higher mathematics. After occupying a professor's chair at the State Agricultural College he removed to Kansas, where he now resides. Henry Dechert and Charles Albert were later teachers. In 1854 Prof. P. D. W. Hankey took charge of the seminary and ably conducted it for thirteen years, and was assisted, part of the time, by his brother, Isaac B. Hankey. In 1855 the building was enlarged and its facilities much increased, so that it afforded accommodations for fifty resident scholars, besides having a number of day scholars. In 1867 Prof. L. M. Koons became principal and continued until the school was closed, in 1880. He was an able teacher, but his failing health caused him to relinquish a work which had become a part of his nature. The school afforded instruction for both sexes and supported a literary society, which had a library of several hundred volumes. The building has a fine location on spacious grounds, and is at present the property of Fred. H. Stauffer. Since the school was closed it has been used as a residence.

Kallymean Academy was established in 1866 by Prof. Isaac B. Hankey. He erected a large brick building, which had accommodations for seventy-five scholars, and had a corps of four teachers. The library contained about one thousand volumes. For a number of years the academy was highly prosperous. This school has also been recently discontinued and the property is now occupied as a private residence.

Taverns. — A public-house was opened about 1805 in a long, log building, which stood upon the site of the present "Union House," and of which Michael Boyer was the landlord. Prominent among the early landlords was Samuel Hartranft, the father of the ex-Governor. The present building was erected in 1855 by William Binder, and has been owned by D. D. Boyer since 1861. The recent landlords have been Frederick Graeff, Charles Grant, Nathaniel Erb and the present, M. K. Grant. In the days of stage travel this house was the headquarters at Boyertown for several lines.

In the lower part of the town Jacob Neidig had a small beer-shop, which afterwards became a public-house. The building has been torn down.

The present "Keystone House" was the second hotel of any size. It was built in 1850 by Henry Boyer, and has been enlarged several times, the last time by George K. Ritter. It is now an attractive, four-story building, kept by Jacob Schaeffer.
The third public-house of note was built as a residence by William Shaner and changed to a hotel by Charles Fegley in 1870. It was then known as the "William Penn Hotel," but after having been enlarged by the present owner, Samuel Sperry, in 1884, it was called the "Mansion House."

STORIES.—Some time after the year 1805 Daniel Boyer opened the first store in the place, occupying a part of the old log tavern; and some years later he built a brick store on the corner opposite, which has ever since been known as the "Boyer Stand." In 1835 Samuel B. Boyer opened another store, on the corner diagonally opposite the hotel, and Daniel B. Boyer engaged in trade the following year. In 1875-76 D. B. Boyer erected a three-story brick block, seventy by sixty-nine feet, on the site of the old stand, the upper story forming two public halls. In this building his sons, James and Horace K. Boyer, are now carrying on business.

Grim's Block, adjoining, was erected in 1873, by William K. Grim. It is sixty by eighty feet, three stories high, with large halls in the upper story.

The buildings on the opposite side of the old Boyer stand were removed and the present fine block built in 1879 by D. B. Boyer, and the adjoining block was built by him in 1884. Part of it is occupied by Levi E. Lefever, who started the first general hardware-store in the borough. In the lower part of the town L. H. Lefever put up a large business house, in 1868, and he has since been engaged there as a general merchant. Opposite is the Rhoads Block, erected in 1885, by Dr. Thomas J. B. Rhoads, in dimensions forty-eight by one hundred and fifty-seven feet, and four stories high. An opera-house is in the second-story front, with a seating capacity for five hundred persons. It was formally opened December 26, 1885. In the lower story are three fine store-rooms.

D. C. Brumbach's furniture establishment is in the same neighborhood and was erected in 1882. The building is forty by ninety feet, three stories in height, and is entirely occupied by him. H. M. Houck is the pioneer in this branch of trade, having established himself about twenty years ago. His present large warerooms have been occupied since 1883. Charles A. Mory and Baker & Weller are also general merchants; J. K. Himmelreich and A. E. & H. Leidy, dealers in millinery; D. H. Fox, clothier; J. S. Case, shoe dealer; I. J. Renner, harness; B. M. Yost, coal and feed.

Among the early inhabitants of the place were Lewis S. Worman, who established himself as a harness-maker in 1842, which business he still continues; David K. East, a watchmaker, for the same length of time; Hugh Borneman, a watchmaker, in 1841; Benjamin Riegner and John Deyscher, blacksmiths; Abraham Eshbach, John Stauffer, John Steinrook and Israel R. Laucks, tinsmiths; John Maurer, Daniel Sands and D. H. Fox, tailors; John Fegley, shoemaker; William Whitman, Josiah, Frederick and Jeremiah Sweinhart, wheelwrights; Reuben Prile and John Stauffer, cabinet-makers; and Daniel Cressman, tobacconist. Aside from a few stores and shops, with the general interests of a country town, the borough had nothing to distinguish it as a business point until the building of the railroad, in 1869. The depot buildings were erected in 1869 and Daniel Spare was appointed the first agent. Since January 1, 1879, the agent has been L. M. Wattman. The principal shipment is ore, about two hundred tons being moved daily. Cigars follow next as an article of shipment.

KEYSTONE FIRE COMPANY.—Before the incorporation measures had been taken to secure protection against fire, and a small hand-engine had been bought at Pottstown by means of a popular subscription. This engine was manned by a volunteer company whose organization was not kept up very strictly, and, in 1867, it was in debt to such an extent that the borough bought the apparatus and thenceforth appropriated a small sum of money each year to keep the same in order. In 1873 a good No. 2 Silsby steam fire-engine was bought, as well as a hose-carriage and a hose-truck, with six hundred feet of leather hose, which were placed in care of the newly-organized Keystone Fire Company. For a number of years a house was leased to store the apparatus; but, in 1878, a desirable lot was purchased, on which a good two-story engine-house was built the following year. In 1884 a part of this building was arranged for a borough lock-up. The upper story has been handsomely fitted up for the use of the fire company.

The company was organized January 27, 1873, and became an incorporated body May 6, 1873. Its first officers were I. B. Hankey, president; S. N. Bucher, vice-president; J. K. Grant, secretary; D. G. Gabel, assistant secretary; William Binder, treasurer; John Schealer, chief engineer.

The company adopted as its motto: "When duty calls, 'tis ours to obey," and selected a full board of hose and engine directors. On the 4th of July, that year, it made the first public exhibition of the engine, the department parading on that occasion. Since its existence the company has demonstrated its usefulness on several occasions, subduing fires when general conflagrations were threatened. It has acquired property to the amount of four hundred dollars and receives a yearly appropriation of one hundred dollars from the borough. Its active membership in 1886 was about forty, embracing only about one-third of the persons enrolled. Officers for 1886: John Leaver, president; William Wallace, vice-president; William H. Sperry, secretary; Frank Bucher, treasurer; Jacob Sassaman, chief engineer; James Anderson and Wilson Geyer, firemen; John Schealer, D. H. Fox and F. G. Binder, trustees.

Friendship Hook-and-Ladder Company was organized May 5, 1882, and had as its first officers George Endy, president; Franklin Deysher, secretary; and John Deysher, treasurer. A membership of thirty was reported in 1886, who manned a good outfit, consisting of hooks, ladders and trucks. Officers for 1886: Charles Bird, president; Charles Deysher, secretary; and Jacob Freed, foreman.

Post-Office.—The Boyertown post-office was established February 14, 1828. The following persons have been the postmasters: Daniel Boyer, 1828–36; Daniel B. Boyer, 1836–41; Jacob K. Boyer and D. B. Boyer, 1841–65; J. H. Funk, 1865–69; D. B. Boyer, 1869–85; W. K. Grim, 1885–86. The office is kept in a commodious room in the Grim Block, which has been especially fitted up for it. There are thirty-eight lock and two hundred and sixteen call boxes in addition to the general delivery. The office has twelve mails per day, one being direct from Philadelphia. Since August 1, 1880, it has been a postal money-order office. For many years the nearest office was Pottstown, and when established but one mail per week was afforded.

Physicians,—The first practitioners were William and Joel Bryant and a Dr. Wagenzeller, after 1830. Dr. Charles Keely is remembered as one of the most prominent of the early physicians, practicing here from 1840 for ten years, when he removed to Reading. Dr. Erastus P. Schull succeeded him, and he by Dr. John Todd, Dr. Samuel Todd, Dr. Addison Schultz and Dr. L. K. Francis, the latter being still in practice. The other resident physicians now are Dr. Thomas J. B. Rhoads, since 1863; Dr. T. H. Leidy, since 1878; Dr. Wilbur Hankey, since 1881; and Dr. John S. Borneman, since 1882. Dr. J. Funk is a resident physician, but not in practice. Dr. Henry Johnston, who died at Boyertown in 1861, had been a successful practitioner for fifteen years.

The first drug-store was established in 1865, by Dr. J. H. Funk, and is now continued by J. Gieger. Another drug-store was opened in 1882 by J. H. Borneman. The latter was the first to practice dentistry at this place, a profession which has also been followed by Dr. Joel B. Bower since 1862.

Printing.—Franklin Printing-Press was opened, in the fall of 1878, by Clinton S. Miller, who here published the Boyertown Weekly Messenger. In the fall of 1880, M. G. Oberholtzer purchased the office and discontinued the paper, devoting his attention to job work. In the spring of 1884 he sold out to J. H. Stauffer and C. F. Emes, who continued until September, 1885, when I. T. Ehst bought out Stauffer's interest, and the firm became Ehst & Emes.

Boyertown Democrat, a semi-German-English weekly, is published by the Charles Spatz Company. (See chapter on Newspapers.) The office is well equipped to do job printing.

Banks.—National Bank of Boyertown began business in March, 1874, with a capital of fifty thousand dollars, which, in 1875, was increased to one hundred thousand. The business was first conducted in Aaron Mory's building. In 1882 a spacious and substantial banking-house was erected for its exclusive use, at a cost of nine thousand dollars, which has been occupied since 1883. The bank was organized with a board of stockholders composed of Thomas J. B. Rhoads, D. B. Boyer, Aaron Mory, Milton A. Mory, William K. Grim, J. W. Hillegas, Daniel L. Rhoads, Thomas Christman, William Weand, Jacob B. Bechtel, Andrew B. Bauer and Jeremiah R. Guldin. The first-named became the president and Milton A. Mory the cashier, the latter serving since. The business of the bank has been very successfully conducted. The total resources March 1, 1886, were $453,690.89, with undivided profits amounting to nearly ten thousand dollars.

Farmers' National Bank of Boyertown was organized March 20, 1883, with the following directors: Dr. Thomas J. B. Rhoads, president; William K. Grim, vice-president; Hiram Burdam, J. William Hillegas, E. G. Pegley, Joseph H. Moyer, Dr. R. B. Rhoads, John Sabold, William H. Schneider and A. Y. Yoder. The capital stock is $50,000, and its total resources March 1, 1886, were $179,361, of which $103,848 were owing to depositors. An office is occupied on Philadelphia Avenue, and W. B. Grim is the cashier.

Thomas J. B. Rhoads was born September 26, 1837, on the Rhoads homestead, now included in the corporate limits of Boyertown, he being the youngest son of John Rhoads and his wife, Catharine. His progenitors emigrated from the Palatinate early in the eighteenth century, and took up their abode in what is now Amity township, this county. His great-grandfather, Mathias Roth, became a resident of Colebrookdale township about the year 1760, and twelve years later became the owner by purchase from Rutter and Potts of several hundred acres of land, with improvements, in what is now Morysville, near Boyertown. His grandfather, Jonathan Roth, became the owner of the mill property and farm at Morysville by inheritance. To this he added by purchase several tracts, which became the property of John Rhoads upon the death of Jonathan Roth. The orthography of the name was changed from Roth to Rhoads through the instrumentality of the instructors of the children of that period, in the beginning of the nineteenth century.

Before the adoption of the public school system in Berks County he was chiefly under the instructions of that precise, veteran school-teacher, Henry G. Stetler, who is still living. Later he became a student in Mount Pleasant Seminary, of Boyertown, when that institution was in the height of its success; and later he was for a time a pupil of Hon. Augustus S. Sassaman, under whose instructions he acquired a knowledge of the higher branches of English literature and mathematics.

At the age of eighteen he was selected by the school directors of Colebrookdale township to take charge of the Wise School, and during the three succeeding school terms he was teacher of the Gabeltown School, and closed his experience as a teacher of public schools in the spring of 1859. In his leisure hours, during 1857 and 1858, he commenced the study of medicine, of which he acquired considerable knowledge, until the spring of 1859, when he entered the office of his brother, Dr. R. B. Rhoads, then a physician in successful practice at Zieglersville, Montgomery County. He prosecuted his studies with diligence until October, 1859, when he became a matriculate of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; from this institution he was graduated in March, 1861, and on May 23d following he opened an office at Gilbertsville, Montgomery County, where he soon gained the confidence and esteem of the community, and acquired a good paying practice.

On May 10, 1862, he was married to Theresa F., only daughter of Captain Henry S. Leidy, which union was blessed with two sons and two daughters, of whom one son and one daughter only are living.

In September of the same year, responding to the call of his country for assistant surgeons of volunteers, he proceeded to Harrisburg, and after having passed a creditable examination by the State Board of Medical Examiners, he was commissioned as assistant surgeon, with the rank of first lieutenant, and assigned to the One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, then stationed at Gloucester Point, opposite Yorktown, Virginia. During the winter of 1862 he and his brother, Dr. R. B. Rhoads, had medical charge of all the forces then stationed at Gloucester Point, Fort Keyes, and a large settlement of "Contrabands," as well as the brigade hospital connected therewith, his brother being the senior officer. The onerous duties connected with his calling, in conjunction with the unavoidable exposures incident thereto, brought on an attack of typho-malarial fever, which laid him up for several weeks, and came nigh putting an end to his career, but an iron constitution and an indomitable will at last triumphed, and he became convalescent, although the disease left him a subject to rheumatic attacks thereafter.

Upon the opening of the campaign of 1863 he shared the trials, dangers and vicissitudes of his regiment until it was mustered out of service, on July 28th of that year. Upon returning from the army he settled down in Boyertown to continue the practice of his profession. His varied experience in medical and surgical practice whilst in the army gave him a leading position among the medical fraternity of his section, and he was soon overrun with practice.

He has been in continuous practice for a period of twenty-five years, with the exception of about six months during 1882, when he was laid up with a compound fracture of the right leg, the result of a runaway horse and several attacks of inflammatory rheumatism previously.

He was one of the projectors of the National Bank of Boyertown, when it was organized in 1874, and became its first president, which position he held until January, 1883, when he peremptorily declined a re-election. In March, 1883, he was one of the projectors of the Farmers' National Bank of Boyertown, which was organized on March 20th, becoming its president, which position he is holding at the present time.

On January 2, 1886, he became treasurer of the Boyertown Mutual Fire Insurance Company, upon organization of that corporation. He has held various offices of trust and honor, indicating the high estimation in which he is held. Besides carrying on his practice, in which he is still actively engaged, he is interested in real estate, principally in Boyertown.

OTHER COMPANIES.—Boyertown Mutual Fire Insurance Company was projected at an informal meeting, held December 5, 1885, by L. P. G. Fegley, Dr. Thomas J. B. Rhoads, William K. Grim and William D. Kehr, and it was then decided to open subscription books and solicit insurance. At another meeting, held December 28th, it was ascertained that a pledge of $216,500 of insurance had been secured. A charter was obtained January 2, 1886.

The first policy was issued on February 20, 1886, for three thousand dollars insurance, in favor of Jacob W. Leaver, of New Berlinville. On the 1st of March, 1886, the policies numbered eighty, all of which are perpetual and limited to safe risks, none exceeding five thousand dollars.

Boyertown Water Company was incorporated under an act of the Assembly, approved April 8, 1856, on the petition of George Mull, Samuel Shaner, Daniel B. Boyer, William Binder, Fred. H. Stauffer, Dr. Charles Keeley, William K. Stauffer, Lewis S. Worman, Benjamin Riegner, Jeremiah Sweinhart, Aaron K. Strunk, Henry Borneman and David H. Fox. The company supplies the borough with pure water, from springs in the neighborhood. The direct supply is from a reservoir of large capacity, in the rear of the Mount Pleasant Seminary, on an elevation which will afford a flow higher than the tallest building in the borough. An additional supply of water can be pumped into the reservoir from springs at the Ironstone Creek, distant one-fourth of a mile, by means of a steam-engine located there. The town is supplied with water-mains and eight fire-plugs.

Fairview Cemetery.—A company was organized March 2, 1859, with the following trustees: Jacob Merkel (president), William K. Stauffer (secretary), Samuel Shaner (treasurer), Samuel Witman, Thos. Shaner, Fred. H. Stauffer and Peter Fryer.

Five acres of land adjoining Boyertown were first purchased, and afterward five acres more— the present area being ten acres. One thousand lots, each fourteen by sixteen feet, have been laid out and many sold. A number of substantial and attractive improvements have been made, including a sexton’s residence. The association has a fund of three thousand dollars unexpended:

Union Cemetery is southwest of the borough and has an attractive location on an elevated tract of land. It embraces several acres, much of which was donated by the iron-mining firm of Gabel, Jones & Gabel.

SECRET SOCIETIES.—Freedom Council, No. 25, American Mechanics, was instituted January 5, 1854, at Boyertown.

The meetings were held with interest until 1862 when they were discontinued for the time being, and soon wholly given up. The last trustees were H. B. Rhoads, L. S. Worman and B. Riegner.

Some years later a lodge of the Brotherhood Society was established, which had a flourishing existence for a few years.

Washington Camp, No. 104, P. O. S. of A., was instituted in the fall of 1868, and flourished until a determined local opposition caused the meetings to be discontinued. There were at one time eighty causes led to the dissolution of the society. It was purely beneficial and entirely local.

Miners’ Beneficial Society was organized February 18, 1882, for the purpose of affording the miners of Boyertown mutual assistance, in case of sickness or death. It has some sixty members in good standing.

Salah Castle, No. 46, A. O. K. of M. C., was instituted February 15, 1873. It has a membership of sixty-seven, and a fund approximating $700.

members in good standing, some of whom remained faithful to their obligations, and still retain possession of the camp property, hoping some day to revive the meetings.

Oley Lodge, No. 218, I. O. O. F., was organized at Pleasantville, in Oley township, but removed to Boyertown in 1874. Its meetings were continued three years; then the lodge was transferred to Reading, where it still exists.

Boyertown Beneficial Association was instituted in 1847. At one time there were one hundred members, and the meetings were kept up with beneficial results until 1857, when removals and other

RESIDENCE OF FRANK G. BINDER, BOYERTOWN, PA.

Frank G. Binder was born January 29, 1860, in Boyertown. William Binder, his father, was born in New Hanover township, Montgomery County, November 18, 1820, and had four brothers—Samuel, born October 19, 1822; Jesse, born September 2, 1824—Benjamin, born July 13, 1831; and Franklin; and three sisters,—Esther, Magdalena, born December 23, 1827; Emma, born May 6, 1834; and Maria Ann, born June 23, 1837. Benjamin died from wounds received in the army and Franklin died when but seven years old.
William Binder died February 25, 1880. He had three children,—Henry M., with first wife and Clara G. and Frank G., with second wife. Clara was married to Frank Hartman, and died February 13, 1885.

Jonathan Binder, father of William, was born in Montgomery County, June 14, 1789, and was married to Joanna Bickel, born June 9, 1794. Jonathan Binder, father of Jonathan, was born in Germany, came to this country early in the eighteenth century and settled in Montgomery County. He and his son Jonathan were fullers by trade.

In 1854 William Binder came to Boyertown and moved into the old log hotel, then located on the corner of Philadelphia and Reading Avenues, upon which site, in 1857, he erected the three-story brick hotel, and remained there eight years, and for sixteen years dealt extensively in horses.

In 1859 he purchased fourteen acres of land from James Ellis. March 6, 1872, he leased a part thereof to H. and J. Gabel, Griffith Jones and Jacob and Isaac Fegley for twenty years. June 6, 1874, the lease was extended to fifty years. Rich ore was discovered. Since 1878 this “Binder mine” is extensively operated by Fegley & Co., and is called the “Warwick Mines,” superintended by Jacob Shupp. This property was inherited by Frank, Henry and Clara, and is still owned by them.

William Binder was one of the first Councilmen of the borough, treasurer of Fire Company, building-master of St. John’s Church and director of the Boyertown Building and Loan Association. His good council was often sought.

Frank G. Binder, in early youth, attended the common public school and in early years commenced going to Mount Pleasant Seminary and Kallynean Academy of his native town. In the fall of 1877 he entered Muhlenberg College, Allentown, Pa., and took one session in that institution; returning, he remained with his father until the latter died.

In the spring of 1883 he entered into co-partnership with his brother Henry, engaging in the trade of their father—dealing in horses—under the firm-name of H. M. Binder & Bro., doing an extensive business, and commanding the esteem and confidence of their customers, and, like their father, true in their dealings. December 23, 1884, Frank married a daughter of Hon. Isaac F. Yost, ex-associate judge of the Montgomery County Courts. Mr. Binder is very popular and a young, influential citizen. He is president of the Keystone Fire Company of Boyertown, and was a director of the Boyertown Building and Loan Association at its close, in 1884.

John Scheaffer, of Boyertown, Pa., was born August 26, 1859, in Earl township, Berks County, Pa., at the place known then as “Scheaffer’s Tannery,” now “Rappy’s.”

His father, Jeremiah Scheaffer, was born on the “Scheaffer farm,” at Boyertown, November 12, 1818, and died on the same farm April 27, 1880, leaving an only son. John Scheaffer, father of Jeremiah, was born in Philadelphia, February 28, 1788. Christian Scheaffer, grandfather of Jeremiah and great-grandfather of John Scheaffer, Jr., was a Hessian; came to this country when but fifteen years old and served in the Revolutionary War. He first settled in Exeter township, and by economy became possessed of three farms,—one in Exeter township, still known as the “Captain Scheaffer Farm,” one in Oley, and the Scheaffer farm at Boyertown.

The accession of this Boyertown farm records an exceedingly important history. A pile of old deeds, written on parchment, are in possession of the present owner of the farm, John Scheaffer. The tract first consisted of two hundred and forty-five acres, and comprised then also the Landis farm adjoining, at New Berlinville. The oldest records show that by a claim of right of proprietary, Thomas Baylie, of the city of Bristol, England, obtained it September 26 and 27, 1601. March 4, 1707, the commissioners of property, by warrant, granted the same to Edward Roberts in right of said Thomas Baylie, who, May 8, 1713, sold it to Edward Roberts, Jr., for four hundred and sixty-five pounds, who had a part patented in 1717, and November 31, 1725, sold the whole farm to Nicholas Scull, who the same day, sold it to Thomas Rutter, of Philadelphia, who sold it, December 14, 1727, unto Henry Keyler, who died intestate, and his heirs afterward sold it to George Keyler. George Keyler, December 4, 1754, sold it to Matthias Holsbough, who sold it, August 19, 1762, to Stephen Krumrein (Krumrein), for “seventeen hundred pounds in good gold and silver." (At this period the Landis farm was sold off, leaving in the Scheaffer tract the present number of acres—one hundred and forty-two.) In 1785 Krumrein sold the one hundred and forty-two acres to Jacob Latshaw, who sold it, March 19, 1801, to Abraham Latshaw, who, April 2, 1810, sold it to Christian Scheaffer, the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, for three thousand seven hundred and fifty pounds, and from this it was inherited from father to son.

John Scheaffer's early years were spent on his father's farm. He attended the borough schools and in 1875 and 1876, Kallynean Academy, at Boyertown. In 1885 he was elected a member of the Borough Council. Mr. Scheaffer is an enterprising young man, and is highly respected. He is married and has one child.

Bernville.

The borough of Bernville is situated in the western part of Penn township, on the Northkill, near its confluence with the Tulpehocken Creek, and about ten miles from the nearest railway station, Mohrville, on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad. Many substantial improvements have been made lately and the business men are enterprising; but there has been no increase in the population. In 1885 the inhabitants numbered about five hundred. Bernville was laid out in 1819 by Thomas Umbenhauer, who owned the farm on which it is located. On the 24th of August of the same year Peter Bennethum bought the first lots, six in all. The old tannery occupied this ground, and near by he built the first house.

The place was named January 22, 1820 by Thomas Umbenhauer, after the native place of his father, Stephanus Umbenhauer, which was Bern, in Switzerland. Number of lots laid out was sixty-two.

On March 7, 1820, sales of lots were made to the following persons:

INCORPORATION.—Bernville was incorporated as a borough in 1851 in order to secure better schools and roads. The latter at that time were in a very poor condition, and measures were taken, as soon as the power was vested with the Council, to improve them. To more fully encourage the authorities in this matter, the following persons, on the 17th day of August, 1852, agreed to sustain the Council in the expenses necessary to improve the streets and gutters:

A. R. Koenig.........................Joseph B. Conrad
Jacob Riegel.........................John F. Burkhart
Wm. E. Huber.........................John Runkle
Adam Snyder.........................Joseph Wolfinger
John Miller.............................Jacob Strauss
Elijah Richardson...................Samuel Hix
Jonathan Miller.....................John Greiner
Joseph Renner.......................John Yeager
Adam Bohn..............................Benj. Lins
A. B. Kerschner......................Jacob Werner
Henry Witman.........................John Herback
Albert Hine.............................John Haag
Henry Kline.............................Wm. B. Noll
S. W. Miller............................A. A. McDonough
Daniel Bentz...........................Jonathan Kline
John S. Rick..........................Henry Beyerle
John Spengler........................Wm. Grime
David R. Faust........................Benj. Himmelberger
Abraham Andrews......................John Hetrick
Jacob Riesser.........................Daniel Umbehauer
Joseph Burkhart......................Wm. Runkle
John Hix.................................John Daniel
E. B. Filbert...........................John Wenrich

These objects were secured in the course of a few years, and Bernville has since been noted for its well-paved and neatly-kept streets.

The burgesses and clerks since the incorporation have been the following:

1851...E. B. Filbert......................A. R. Koenig.
1852...A. R. Koenig.....................John S. Rick.
1853...William Runkle................John S. Rick.
1854...Henry Witman...................John S. Rick.
1855...Abraham Andrews..............Harrison Harner.
1856...Joseph B. Conrad..............Harrison Harner.
1857...H. Harner........................Wm. H. Kintzle.
1858...Adam Stoudt.....................H. Harner.
1859...Paul Wenrich....................H. Harner.
1860-61...Levi M. Gerhart.............H. Harner.
1862...D. D. Deppen....................H. Harner.
1863...John F. Burkhart...............H. Harner.
1864...A. M. Bright....................C. W. Hetrich.
1865...David R. Koenig..............Peter Sands.
1866...Adam M. Dundore..............C. W. Hetrich.
In 1885 the officers of the borough were as follows:

In 1880 the borough contained 86 dwelling-houses,—45 brick, 28 frame, 12 log and 1 stone; also 6 frame shops, 1 weaving-works and 1 foundry.

STORES.—After the Union Canal was completed to this point the place became a trading centre for grain and lumber, and then a warehouse was erected by Henry Witman and William Runkle for this business. David Renno built the second warehouse about 1839, about ten years later than the first. Philip Filbert had one of the first stores in this locality at his tavern-stand, just outside of the borough. In Bernville proper a man named Uhlman first traded, near the present Miller store. Reber & Penrose came next, closely followed by Wm. Runkle, Michael Boyer and Charles Heine. In 1858 there were six stores in the place, representing all branches of trade. Of these, several are noteworthy. The hardware business has been carried on by John F. Burkhart since 1848; the drug trade by Dr. H. H. Saavely since 1877. The mercantile business of the Millers was established at Bernville in 1847 by S. W. Miller, the father of the present proprietor. In 1864 the firm became S. W. Miller & Son, and so continued until 1878, when the father retired, leaving the son, Jonathan B. Miller, in charge of the business. In 1849 this stand was established in a store-room, twenty by thirty feet. A new room was found necessary in 1867 and accordingly supplied, twenty by fifty-five feet. In 1884 an addition of thirty-five by fifty-one feet was made, giving a room one hundred and six feet in depth. The main building is fifty-five feet square and three stories high. The extension has well arranged sky-lights and the entire building is heated by steam and lit by gas, generated on the premises. In its arrangement and general appearance this store is regarded as one of the finest in Eastern Pennsylvania, and the volume of business is not excelled by stores outside of large cities.

Jonathan B. Miller traces his ancestry to an early member of the family who emigrated from Germany. His great-grandfather was Johannes Miller, who resided in Tulpehocken township, where he conducted a tannery. His children were John, Samuel, Henry, Matthew and four daughters. John was a native of the same township, and succeeded his father as a tanner. He married Elizabeth Wagner, and had one son, Samuel W., who was born in the same township, January 15, 1816. After receiving a rudimentary education he entered his father’s tannery, and became familiar with the business, in which he continued until 1847, when, on removing to Bernville, he engaged in mercantile pursuits with such limited capital as it was possible to command. He continued in business alone until 1864, when his son was admitted to an interest, under the firm-name of S. W. Miller & Son, and the enterprise thus managed until the retirement of the senior partner, on the 1st of March, 1878. Mr. Miller married Sarah Brossman, of the same township, born December 4, 1821, whose children are Monroe (deceased), Isabella B. (wife of Dr. D. D. Deppen) and Jonathan B. The death of Samuel W. Miller occurred November 28, 1885. The only surviving son, Jonathan B., was born on the 21st of November, 1841, at Bernville, where his life has been spent in mercantile pursuits. After some attention given to the English branches at the public schools, he entered his father’s store as a clerk, having before this time become familiar with the business by occasional assistance rendered when a lad. In 1868 the trade had reached such proportions as to make larger quarters necessary, and a new store was erected on the present site. This also in a few years proved inadequate to the demands of customers, and a very spacious and attractive extension was added, the total length of the building being one hundred and six feet. It is now one of the most attractive and perfectly equipped stores in the county, requiring, beside the services of the proprietor, the aid of six clerks, which number on Saturdays is increased to eight. The heating appointments are supplied by steam to the store, as also to the dwelling adjacent, and the illuminating power manufactured on the premises. Mr. Miller was married, on the 24th of December, 1863, to Eliza L., daughter of Gabriel Dundore, of Bern township. Their children are Sarah Lydia, deceased, born May 27, 1865; Harry Grant, December 12, 1867; Benjamin F., August 17, 1870; John S., July 4, 1872; Catherine E., June 11, 1874; Amelia L., June 16, 1876; Mary M., June 27, 1878; James Garfield, deceased, June 21, 1882; and Emily N., June 13, 1885. A Republican in his political associations, Mr. Miller has not been an active worker in the party ranks.

He has, however, held for eight years the office of school director and various minor positions in the borough. He is an influential member of the Berks County Merchants' Association. Both he and Mrs. Miller are members of the Lutheran Evangelical Church of Bernville, Mr. Miller displayed his patriotism by enlisting for the emergency period of the late war in Company I, Forty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania State Militia. He varies the routine of trade by superintending the cultivation of a productive farm he owns, located in the suburbs of Bernville.

The store of Albert F. Schock is of large proportions. He has been in trade since 1872. He took possession of his present fine room in the fall of 1884. The main room is twenty-seven feet wide and one hundred feet long, including a wing eighteen by twenty-five feet. The second story is used for storage purposes as well as a large brick warehouse in the rear of the building. The store is well arranged for a large and varied stock. Seven clerks are employed.

Post-Offices.—Philip Filbert was the first postmaster in 1832, keeping the office at his inn. Wm. Runkle had the office many years at his store. The present postmaster is C. H. Hetrich. The office has a daily mail from Reading and a tri-weekly from Mohrsville via Centreport.

Taverns.—In this locality the old Filbert tavern is best remembered as an old-time inn, kept before the present century. On this site a tavern is still kept. In the borough Samuel Umbenhauer opened the first inn about 1821, in the house now occupied by Dr. John A. Brobst. The second inn was kept by Daniel Bentz and is now known as the upper tavern. The Eagle Hotel was first a store and was changed to a tavern by John Runkle. The lower tavern was built for hotel purposes by Samuel Hix and has been kept by different landlords.

Physicians.—Dr. Enoch Bricker, who died about 1835, was the first practicing physician at Bernville, and he was followed by Dr. Daniel Deppen.

Dr. George Beyerle was one of the pioneer physicians of the place. He was born at Reading in 1804, studied medicine with Dr. John Livengood, of Womelsdorf, and located at Bernville in 1828. Here he practiced forty-five years. He died in 1875. Then came other physicians,—Dr. A. A. McDonough till 1857, Dr. Philip R. Palm and Dr. George W. Ditzler, all removed.

Dr. W. G. Beyerle since 1853, but more actively since the close of the War for the Union, when he succeeded to his father’s practice.

Dr. Darius D. Deppen has been here since 1855, having practiced in Penn township two years previously, after his graduation from the Pennsylvania Medical College in 1853.

Dr. John A. Brobst since April, 1857, having followed his profession here continuously since his graduation.

Industries.—The oldest industry in the place is tanning. As early as 1820 Peter Ben-nethum engaged in this business, and continued until his death, fifteen years later, when John Miller began operations. Since 1872 the tannery has been carried on by Charles F. Rentchler, using steam-power. The plant is well arranged and capacitated to work up two thousand five hundred hides per year, oak tanning.

West from this point a foundry was built by Painter & Embich, but converted into a tannery by Elias Stoudt, and carried on as such a short time. Stoudt had also a distillery, which, in the course of a few years, was changed into a grist-mill, and is still in operation.

In the same locality, about thirty-five years ago, Zadoc Weaver carried on a foundry on a small scale, using steam-power, but the buildings have long since been removed. The foundry in the upper part of the borough was built by Joel Haag, who used the waters of the North-Kill for motive-power. Changes of ownership followed, Haag, Kline & Co. being the last to operate it, in 1875. The buildings are large, and at one time employment was given to fifty men in the manufacture of farm machinery. Among other articles manufactured was Klahr’s boring and sawing-machine, a very ingenious contrivance, patented January 31, 1865, by Benjamin Klahr, of Bernville. Since 1883 Mr. Klahr has carried on a pottery, operated by steam. It was established in 1873 by Levi Yonson.

The Bernville Handle-Works is an important factor in the industrial history of the village. They were established April 1, 1868, by Klahr & Son, and successfully carried on until their destruction by fire, September 24, 1882. The loss also included more than one hundred thousand feet of lumber. They were immediately rebuilt by Joseph Klahr, the present owner. The works use steam-power, and are well supplied with good machinery, much of it patented by Joseph Klahr. Employment is given to six men.

Benneville has mechanics of all kinds, and in addition half a dozen small cigar-shops, in which about forty men are employed.

Churches—North-Kill Church (Lutheran and Reformed).—This is an old stone church, situated on a lot of ground adjoining the borough on the north. It was built in 1791, and is essentially the same as when put up, some few modifications having been made in the inside of the building.

The first house of worship at that place was constructed of logs, and stood in a corner of the old cemetery, which was part of one acre of ground given for church purposes by Gottfried Fidler, in an agreement bearing date December 25, 1745, and about which time the building was erected.

This document was witnessed by Rev. John Casper Stoever, the minister in charge, Jacob Hoffman, John George Haag, and Albrecht Strause. In 1768 Stephen Fidler confirmed this gift, on the part of his father, by a deed, and John Nicholas Haag was appointed trustee of the property, in an instrument attested before Justice Peter Spycker, of Stouchsburgh. A year later Samuel Filbert gave a lot of ground to the church, and in 1770 conveyed the same to Christopher Minnich and Jacob Stranse, as trustees. The old log church was used until 1791, when it had decayed so much that a new house became necessary, which after much effort was built that year. The membership at that time was small and the people poor, so that aid was sought from adjoining districts through Helfrich Kolb, who was appointed collector to visit neighboring churches. His credentials were signed by the pastor, Emanuel Shultze, D.D., Nicholas Haag, Thomas Long, Samuel Stranse, Thomas Umbenhauer, Philip Filbert, Franz Umbenhauer and Michael Guiss. In 1795 the church was supplied with an organ, which is still in use. In March, 1834, the church ceased to be exclusively Lutheran; then persons of the German Reformed faith obtained an interest which has been maintained since. On February 26, 1870, the church was incorporated.

In 1885 the Lutheran congregation had two hundred and forty members; the Rev. J. J. Cressman as pastor.

The Reformed congregation then had two hundred and sixty members, and the Rev. Thomas C. Leinbach as pastor.

In the old North-Kill Cemetery are interred, among others, the following:

- John George Geilhers, born 1738, died 1811.
- Benjamin Adam Reif, born 1725, died 1784.
- Johannes Fidler, born 1734, died 1784.
- Nicholas Haag, died 1797.
- Johannes Brossman, born 1768, died 1890.
- Christopher Witter, born 1759, died 1808.
- John Nicholas Umbenhauer, born 1799, died 1823.
- Samuel Umbenhauer, born 1790, died 1826.
- Johannes Thomas Umbenhauer, born 1762, died 1822.
- John P. Heyler, born 1756, died 1832.
- George Bellman, born 1739, died 1813.
- Jacob Gerber, born 1784, died 1813.
- Johannes Haag, born 1776, died 1826.
- Melchoir Tiegel, born 1764, died 1822.
- Michael Siebert, born 1761, died 1831.
- Philip Filbert, born 1770, died 1829.
- John George Haag, born 1758, died 1845.
- Christian Gruber, born 1712.
- John Adam Gruber, born 1752, died 1781.
- Valentine Reber, born 1742, died 1818.
- Conrad Reber, born 1778, died 1817.
- John Peter Haas, born 1750, died 1816.
- John Philip Filbert, born 1743, died 1817.
- Albrecht Strauss, born 1760, died 1832.

This old lot is small and inclosed by an old stone fence. The new cemetery is spacious, well-kept and contains a large number of modern headstones.

Salem Church of the Evangelical Association, just outside of the borough limits of Bernville and forming a part of the borough, is a brick building, with spire and bell, and a seating capacity for four hundred persons. It is the third church erected on this site. The first was erected in 1852 and the second in 1872. The latter, a commodious brick building, was burned September 24, 1882. The congregation immediately proceeded to rebuild the church. It was dedicated by Bishop Bowman in February, 1883. Among the first members of this faith in the vicinity of Bernville were the families of John Daniel and John Henry Kline, Benjamin Klahr and a few others. The membership has never been large, numbering at present about thirty. They are served by ministers assigned to the Womelsdorf Circuit, which connection has been maintained many years. H. H. Swavely is superintendent of the Sunday-school.

Schools.—One of the first English teachers in this locality was Michael Borsch. The first school-house was of logs, on the present school-ground. The second was a brick building, and this becoming too small, another was built on the same lot. In 1878 these were removed and the present two-story brick building was then erected. It has four well-arranged rooms and presents a neat appearance. Ever since the incorporation of the borough, in 1851, a commendable interest has been manifested by the people of Bernville in their schools and the education of their children.

Societies.—Bernville Lodge, No. 122, I. O. of O. E., was instituted on September 6, 1845. In 1885 there were twenty-seven members. A hall was dedicated June 7, 1851.

Washington Camp, No. 113, P. O. S. of A., was instituted May 6, 1869, with twelve charter members. In December, 1885, there were fifty-eight members. Weekly meetings are held in a neatly-furnished hall in the Miller Block.

Bernville Association for Detection of Horse-Thieves was incorporated on April 14, 1862, with following members:

Joseph B. Conrad.
William N. Potteiger.
Adam H. Potteiger.
John S. Wennich.
Joseph M. Stoudt.
Samuel Stump.
Peter Umbenhaner.
David Luckenbill.
Aaron M. Bright.
Peter Bright.

Abraham R. Koenig.
Ereuerl Lengel.
Daniel Benz.
William Rishel.
John R. Koenig.
H. F. Groff.
Moses Scheffer.
D. D. Deppen.
Elias Obold.
John B. Reber.

This society has maintained a successful existence since its organization.

Military Encampment.—A large military encampment was held at Bernville on August 27, 1841, comprising seventeen companies of militia, almost entirely from Berks County. Several companies were from Lebanon and Schuylkill Counties. At that time Berks County had altogether twenty-three companies, indicating that the majority of the local companies were present upon that occasion.

The principal officer in command was General William H. Keim. The grand review of all the companies in dress parade was witnessed by Governor David R. Porter. Many persons were in attendance. The encampment was a great success.

FLEETWOOD.

The borough of Fleetwood is situated on the East Pennsylvania Railroad, in the southeastern part of Richmond township. It is located principally on the old Wanner, Schlegel and Ely farms, and the town here, prior to the building of the railroad, in 1857, was known by the name of Coxtown, which also was the name of the post-office until the railroad station was established. As Coxtown the place antedates the century. In 1800 there were five log houses, one of them occupied by the Cox family, which came into notoriety in 1809 on account of the hanging of one of the daughters, Susanna, for the murder of her illegitimate child. The family removed at an early day, but the house is still standing, with an addition, as the property of Solomon Schlegel. For a few years after 1810 the place was locally known as "Crowtown," a term applied to it by a wag who passed through the town, lying on the bottom of his wagon and cawing like the crow to express his disgust with the place. Coxtown was not favorably situated, before the railroad was built, to become a business place; and in 1856 it contained but twenty-five buildings, three of which only were of stone, all the rest being one-story log houses, occupied by mechanics or laborers. The stone houses are still standing as the residences of George Sholl and Isaac Mertz. The other building is part of the present Schaeffer tavern. All of them were built about 1825. The log cabins have nearly all given place to more substantial structures, while the old-fashioned sweep-well which was almost invariably found in the back-yard, has been replaced by the modern pump.
Among the early residents of the place were,
Michael Moyer, carpenter; Peter Hill, blacksmith; Jacob Sholl, shoemaker and inn-keeper; John Mesersmith, tailor; Joseph Reifnyder, carpenter; Jacob and John Widman, hatters; Christian Schlegel, farmer; Peter Wanner, farmer and miller; George Merkel, hatter; John Lehman, hatter; George Young, weaver; James Maxim, wheelwright; Benjamin Parks, store-keeper; and George Heckman, school-teacher.

Many of the early citizens of the place attained great age. Isaac Koch died aged eighty-three years, and his wife, Elizabeth, was eighty-six. Among those living at present, whose length of years borders on the four-score
list, are George Scholl, Solomon Schlegel, Samuel Schlegel and Mrs. Hannah Hoch, the latter being eighty-five years old.

In 1868 Thomas Mellon laid out the town-plan and acknowledged the same on the 11th of May, in the year named. About that time some very substantial improvements were made, and the future of the place was assured by the erection of several prosperous manufactories. Since then there has been a steady increase of fine residences and business houses. The town, in 1885, numbered about one thousand inhabitants.

INCORPORATION OF BOROUGH.—Fleetwood was incorporated as a borough by a decree of the court October 4, 1873. The first election was fixed for October 31, 1873, and George D.
Schaeffer was appointed judge; Daniel Melot and Samuel Dumm, inspectors. The election resulted in the selection of John Swartz as burg-gess, and the following Council: Daniel Koch, president; Jacob S. Kelehner, secretary; Edwin M. Shollenberger, treasurer; Jonas Weaver and Amos Melot. Conrad Nill was the first high constable. Since that time the following have been the borough officials:

In 1885 the officers were,—

(president), George D. Schaeffer (secretary), William S. Schaeffer (treasurer), Samuel Cleaver, Henry Schlegel, Henry Reider; Justices, James F. Dunn, William Bernhart; High Constable, Jacob Keim.

The first justices of the borough were George D. Schaeffer and Samuel Dumm.

On the 3d of September, 1874, the Kenddall Bros., of Reading, who had laid out and surveyed the streets and alleys of the borough, covering an area of three hundred acres, reported the following names for the streets:

All streets were made fifty feet wide, from house to house, except Main Street, from J.
Deisher's to Hannah Schaeffer's house, and Richmond, between Main and Arch Streets, which were made wide streets. Forty-three alleys were located, with widths of twelve, fi-ten and twenty feet. A number of the above streets have been much improved. No action leading to the formation of a Fire Department has yet been taken, excepting to purchase the old Neversink fire-engine, of Reading, but which has never been used.

STORES.—Benjamin Parks, Esq., had the first store in the place, in a building which stood opposite the Farmers' and Drovers' Hotel, and which, in a remodeled condition, is now occupied by Samuel Schlegel. A man named Bachman was the next in trade at that place, and John Messersmith in 1830. The latter soon opened another stand in the present Fleetwood House, keeping both store and tavern. In 1837 he was succeeded by Benjamin Messersmith, who continued there until 1851, when he built the store on the opposite corner, still known as the Messersmith stand. In that building Daniel J. Wanner first traded and the successive merchants were John Shollenberger, Melot & Kline, Melot & Schaeffer, C. A. Mesersmith, Schaeffer & Reifnyder and since 1880
the present firm, Schaeffer, Messersmith & Co.
The next stand was opened in a building put up by Daniel Schaeffer, Philip Schaeffer and Israel Kline, who occupied it for trading purposes. This place is now occupied by Daniel Melot, Oscar Melot and Nathan Schaeffer as a general store.

In 1860 William Sholl put up the business house on the corner of Main and Franklin Streets, which is at present used by Isaac Merkel and C. F. Reifsnyder as a general store. In this period John Shollenberger had a store opposite the foundry for a time. The stand on Main Street, occupied by Kelchner Brothers, was built by Samuel Kelchner and is the fourth business place in order.

The first distinct hardware-store was opened in 1885 by Albert Kline.

The first to engage in the furniture trade was Joseph Reifsnyder, and Joseph Schlegel was the next. This business is now carried on by Edwin M. Mill.

In the general produce business Schaeffer & Co. were the first firm, at the railroad, establishing a large trade, which is still carried on by Lewis A. Wanner, Joel M. Schaeffer and others. Large quantities of iron-ore have been shipped from Fleetwood station, the shippers of the more recent period being the Schaeffers, James F. Dumm and Samuel H. Rothermel & Brother, the latter also being miners, operating on an extensive scale.

Taverns.—Opposite the old Parks store the Sholls had a tavern,—the first in the place—which is still continued as the property of that family.

From 1837 to 1851 Benjamin Messersmith was the proprietor of the present "Fleetwood House," and which has been kept for a number of years by the present landlord, George D. Schaeffer. The original building has been much enlarged.

The "Union House" was built by Levi Templing about the time the railroad was completed, but was enlarged by George Dewees, and is at present kept by Samuel Dewees.

A fourth hotel was built by its present occupant, Jacob Knoll, in the neighborhood of the depot.

Post-Office.—The post-office at Fleetwood was established in 1852 as Coxtown, and Benjamin Messersmith was the first postmaster. Subsequently the office was held by D. J. Wanner, John Shollenberger, Daniel Melot, Lewis Schaeffer, C. F. Reifsnyder, C. A. Messersmith in 1880, and since January, 1886, by Daniel Schaeffer. Since August 15, 1881, it has been a postal money-order office. Six mails per day are supplied, and it is the distributing office for Moselem Springs and Pricetown.

Physicians.—In the practice of medicine Dr. James Matthews, now of Temple, was located at this place about four years. Among other practitioners who were here a short time may be named Drs. Heiser, Long, Evans, Maury, Nagle and Thompson.

Dr. Edward Bieber was located at Fleetwood on the breaking out of the war, and joined the army from this place. Dr. L. R. Lentz has been in successful practice since 1865, and has as contemporaries Dr. A. N. Fretz and Dr. M. O. Grenawalt. Dr. Fretz carries on a drug-store in connection with his practice. Dr. Grenawalt located in the fall of 1885.

Dr. Peter H. Gehris is the dentist of the borough.

Societies.—Fleetwood Council, No. 20, Order of American Mechanics, was instituted in August, 1858, and has maintained its meetings regularly since its organization, convening every Saturday evening. In 1885 there were forty-four members.

The council has an invested fund of $2100, $800 real estate and $600 widows’ and orphans’ fund.

Willow Valley Lodge, No. 142, K. of P.—This body was instituted in March, 1868, and reported ninety-two members in 1885.

An invested fund of two thousand dollars is evidence of the prosperity of the lodge.

Washington Camp, No. 103, P. O. S. of A., was instituted September 22, 1868, with twenty-seven members, as a junior camp. On the 24th of January, 1880, it was re-chartered with its present title, the membership at that time being thirty-five. In 1885 the number belonging was thirty-nine.

Graded School.—In 1877 the graded school building was erected at a cost of more than six thousand dollars. It is a fine, large brick edifice, standing on a spacious lot, shaded by young, thrifty trees. The building is well supplied with apparatus, and a literary society, which meets regularly in it, maintains a library. The schools are graded into four departments,—primary, secondary, intermediate and grammar,—having a total enrollment of two hundred and nine pupils. Since 1883 William M. Zeichman has been the principal.

Churches. —St. Paul's Church (German Reformed and Lutheran) is located a short distance west of the borough, in Richmond township, but continues to be the principal place of worship for many of the people of Fleetwood. It is a plain stone edifice, erected in 1841, and has the architecture peculiar to that period. The grounds embrace two acres of land, cut from the farm of Benjamin Hoch, and most of which constitutes a cemetery. The church was built by a committee composed of Reuben Sholl, Joseph Reifsnyder, Abraham Mertz and Henry Seidel.

The Rev. Isaac Roeller became the pastor of the Lutheran congregation and served it until 1860, when the Rev. B. E. Krumlich took charge and still continues the pastoral relation. His congregation numbers more than three hundred members. The Reformed element of the church has a smaller membership, and has had two pastors, the Rev. Charles Herman being the first, with Rev. J. Sassaman Herman as his successor.

A Sunday-school, organized in St. Paul's Church, had William Sholl as its first superintendent, and after being continued here some time, was moved to the borough, where it is kept up in St. Paul's Chapel.

St. Paul's Chapel is a non-sectarian house of worship, dedicated in 1884, "for the use of any denomination professing the teachings of Christ and His followers, on proper consent obtained from the board of trustees controlling the house." The building is to be forever independent of synodical connection, but as it was erected mainly by the members of St. Paul's Church, to afford a more convenient place of worship in the village, the meetings of the foregoing congregations are most frequently held in it. The movement to erect this building was set on foot at a public meeting in August, 1883, when a number of the leading citizens were appointed to solicit subscriptions, conditioned upon a purpose to build, if funds sufficient could be secured. Their success led to the organization of a building society, September 1, 1883, of which C. F. Reifsnyder was president; T. J. Kreidler, secretary; and George B. Schaeffer, treasurer; and a building committee was appointed, composed of Lewis Schaeffer, A. H. Madeira, George Knoll, C. F. Reifsnyder and Levi Boyer. At the same time a board of trustees was selected, consisting of George B. Schaeffer, Lewis Schaeffer, C. F. Reifsnyder, George Knoll and Amos H. Madeira. A lot of ground was secured on Franklin Street, where the corner-stone was laid, September 28, 1883, by the Revs. N. C. Schaeffer, B. E. Kramlich and others. Upon this was built an attractive superstructure of brick, forty by seventy feet, and crowned with a steeple more than a hundred feet high. In this is a bell of fine tone, weighing two thousand and thirty-four pounds. The building was completed at a cost of about seven thousand dollars, and is a worthy monument to the public-spirited citizens who erected it. The property is in charge of a board of control, from whose numbers a body of trustees is selected, as the executive body of those who have contributed to the building of the chapel, and they also select the controllers.

Emanuel Church of the Evangelical Association, at Fleetwood, was built in 1866. It is a brick building of respectable appearance, with about five hundred seats. Among those interested in its erection were Dr. L. H. Thompson, George Kline, Levi Templin, Samuel Heckman, William Bernhart, Henry Gehris, Peter Gehris and George Haight. The members number fifteen hundred and seven, constituting three classes.

The Sunday-school connected with the church was organized with Peter H. Gehris as superintendent, and is at present in charge of Edwin M. Mill. It is well attended. The pastor in 1885 was the Rev. H. J. Glick, serving the church in connection with other appointments on the Friedensburg Circuit.
The United Mennonite Church was built as the Church of God, by Daniel Koch and others, in 1868. The same year the few members at this point connected themselves with the United Mennonites, a relation which has since been maintained. The society has not been strong at any time, and in 1885 there were but sixteen members, who had C. F. Hill as elder and Daniel Koch as deacon. Among the pastors have been the Revs. S. H. Fry, Gaman, Shelly and Samuel Musselman. No regular minister serves at present, but Mr. William Gaman, of Lehigh County, is the presiding elder of the district to which this church belongs.

INDUSTRIES.—The oldest industry, in the place, and the only one operated by water-power, is the grist-mill of Franklin Fritch, situated on Willow Creek. The power was first improved by the Wanner family. Samuel Wanner has a pioneer grist-mill. The mill now standing was built in 1844 by William Schaeffer, and has had as intermediate owners to the present, Jacob Wanner, Daniel Hoch and Daniel Koch. The capacity is small and the mill is done by old methods.

Daniel Koch is of German descent and the grandson of William Koch, who resided in Schuylkill County, where he was both a miller and a successful farmer. He was twice married, the children by the first alliance being Mrs. Knoskey, Mrs. Haller, Mrs. Rouse and Mrs. Hunsicker. By a second marriage, to Miss Neiphon, were children—William, Jacob, Henry, John, Hannah (Mrs. Benjamin Bensingier) and Sarah (wife of Daniel Fultz, M.D., of Schuylkill County). Henry Koch resided in his native county of Schuylkill until his death, at the age of seventy-six years. A miller by trade, he afterward adopted agriculture as a pursuit. He married Susannah, daughter of Baltzer Bock, of the same county, whose children were four sons and one daughter. The children of Henry Koch and his wife are Daniel, Benjamin, Hugh, Henry, William, Charles, Maria (wife of Eli Miller), Catherine (wife of William Schuman), Sarah (wife of Charles T. Bowen) and Amanda (wife of Jacob H. Pile).

Daniel Koch was born on the 24th of December, 1816, in Schuylkill County, where, after a common-school education, he engaged in work on the farm. At the age of seventeen he decided learning the trade of a miller, and with that purpose in view, entered the mill of his father, where, after an experience of four years, he became thoroughly proficient in the miller’s art. Soon after he engaged in the purchase and sale of produce and later opened a country store at McKeanburg, Schuylkill County, from whence he removed to Middleport, in the same county, and conducted a prosperous business for a period of thirteen years. He next became a farmer, having purchased a farm in Auburn, Schuylkill County, and removed to it. Eight years later he repaired to Monocacy township, Berks County, and purchased a mill, which, after managing a short time, he sold, and, removing to Fleetwood, in 1866, again engaged in milling. At the expiration of an extended career of sixteen years Mr. Koch retired from business. He was elected, in 1860, to the State Legislature as a Republican; has also filled several borough offices. He has frequently been appointed to such responsible offices as that of administrator and executor and filled them with a scrupulous regard to duty.

Mr. Koch and his family enjoy a record for patriotism which can be equaled by few families in the State. He enlisted in the Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers for the emergency period and served for two months in defense of his State, engaging in the skirmish at Wrightsville, Pa. Three of his brothers also enlisted and were in active service. Mr. Koch was, on the 24th of October, 1839, married to Mary Ann, daughter of Emanuel Beck, of Columbia County, Pa. Their children are Harriet (Mrs. Benjamin Jacobs), born January 17, 1841; Francis D., born August 21, 1842; Allen, February 10, 1844; Jeremiah, October 27, 1845; Albert, November 27, 1847; Sarah (Mrs. L. R. Lentz), March 26, 1850; Richard Henry, April 2, 1852; Emanuel, March 3, 1854; Areneus, April 3, 1856; Catherine (Mrs. Oscar Melot), January 8, 1859; Ambrose E., January 24, 1864. All of this number survive but Albert, who died April 6, 1853. Francis Koch joined the Forty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers and served until the close of the war, participating in many important engagements, in one of which he was severely wounded. He was promoted to the office of captain before his discharge. Allen enlisted as a drummer-boy, at the age of seventeen, and during his three years of service participated in many battles. Jeremiah accompanied his father during the emergency period. Mr. Koch’s religious creed is that of the Evangelical United Mennonite Church, of which he is a member.

In 1867 George Cox, William Cox and William S. Young built a wadding-mill, which was enlarged in 1869. The Messrs. Cox came from New York to engage in this business. Later, C. A. Messersmith became interested in the factory, employed from ten to twenty hands and transacted a yearly business of one hundred thousand dollars. On May 5, 1873, the factory was totally destroyed by fire, involving a loss of forty-five thousand dollars, and it has never been rebuilt.

Amandus Kern began the manufacture of mill-picks in 1868, and in 1885 he carried on a shop with two fires.

About the same time E. C. Weston began the manufacture of cigars, and he has since continued the business in a factory which affords employment to fifteen hands. Small factories are also carried on by Oliver Hoch and the Gehret Bros.

Coach-making is followed by Daniel Focht and Moses Fonik.

William B. Melot has a small shop for the manufacture of a seamless base-ball, which was patented by him November 27, 1883, and which has been received with great favor by the several leagues in the country.

Creamery.—The Fleetwood Creamery was built in March, 1885, by Cleaver & Moyer, and has been operated since by them. They occupy a fine building supplied with steam, and manufacture butter, cream only being delivered by the farmers who patronize it. The operations of the first year were very successful.

Foundry.—The most important industry in the borough, which more than any other has given growth to the place and quickened its business activities is the Fleetwood Foundry and Machine Works, carried on by Schaeffer, Merkel & Co. The business was established in 1864 by Lewis, George D., Daniel and Jonathan Schaeffer in a shop which is now the main building of the works, and this was enlarged as the business expanded. In 1885 the works embraced a machine-shop, foundry, wood-working shop, a blacksmith-shop and pattern-house, buildings for the storage of machinery and sheds for housing lumber, all conveniently provided with sidings from the railroad. The firm occupy three acres of ground. The motive-power is steam. The cupola of the foundry has a capacity for eight tons at a casting. From eighty to one hundred men are employed; capital invested, one hundred thousand dollars. The products embrace all classes of general farm machinery; mining machinery, since 1869; stationary engines and mill machinery, since 1876; and the celebrated Reliance Turbine Water-Wheel since 1873. The latter machine was invented by Adam W. Haag, a member of the firm, and is reputed one of the best wheels of the kind now in the market. The engines manufactured here are also deservedly popular. In 1867 George D. Schaeffer retired from the firm, his successor being Charles Melcher, when the title became Schaeffer, Melcher & Co., and so continued until 1872, when Wm. S. Merkel took the place of Melcher in the firm-name. The present members of the firm of Schaeffer, Merkel & Co. are Lewis Schaeffer, William S. Merkel, Adam W. Haag, C. F. Reifsnyder and John B. Bertolet.

Lewis Schaeffer.—The Schaeffer family comprises numerous members in Richmond and adjoining townships of this county. The progenitor was George Schaeffer, who emigrated from Germany about 1750, and upon arriving at Philadelphia, proceeded to “East Penn Valley,” and settled in Richmond township, where he took up land and carried on farming. He had four children—two daughters (one married to Dewald Bieber, and the other to John Bieber, a brother), and two sons—Philip and Peter, the latter of whom moved towards Philadelphia, where many of his descendants are now living.

Philip Schaeffer was born in Richmond township, and there carried on farming. He was married to a Miss Fetherolf, a descendant of that old family in Northampton (now Lehigh) County, by whom he had issue twelve children—eight sons (George Jonathan, Peter, Isaac, Daniel, Philip, William and David), and four daughters—Sarah (married to Jacob Delong), Elizabeth (married first to Isaac Siegfried, and then to Solomon Yoder), Anna (married to Isaac Merkel) and Esther (married to Francis Delong).

The second son of the eight named, Jonathan (married to Joel Hoch, of Richmond), Mary (married to Peter L. Diener), Amanda (married to John B. Bertolet), Susanna (married to Amos Rothermel and Caroline. He died in 1869, aged seventy-seven years, and his widow died in 1884, aged sixty-seven years.

Lewis Schaeffer, the eldest son of Jonathan Schaeffer, and the subject of this sketch, was born in Richmond township in 1838. He was educated in the schools of his native township, and was then engaged at farming for a time.

Lewis Schaeffer, was born in the same township, and there carried on farming for a number of years. He then became the senior partner of Schaeffer & Co., a firm organized at Fleetwood for the purpose of carrying on the manufacturing business, in which he continued till his decease. He was a man of enterprise and highly esteemed by the community. He was married to a Miss Barto, by whom he had issue ten children,—Lewis, Reuben, Adam, George, Jacob, Sarah

In 1864 he became interested with his father in the manufacturing business at Fleetwood, in which he has continued successfully till now, being the senior member of the firm of Schaeffer, Merkel & Co., and owning the major part of the interest in its business and property. Mr. Schaeffer is recognized for energy and success in business affairs, and he has contributed greatly toward the development of the borough of Fleetwood. In 1877 he officiated as chief burgess.
He was married twice; first to Caroline Messersmith, daughter of Benjamin Messersmith, who died in 1881, and by whom he has two daughters, Mary and Alice, and then to Mrs. Sallie Schaeffer (nee Kaufman), a daughter of David Kaufman, of Oley township, by whom he has a daughter, Alice.

TOPTON.

The borough of Topton is situated at the junction of the Kutztown Railroad with the East Penn Railroad, near the northwestern line of Longswamp township. Its name was derived from its location, at the highest point of the East Penn Railroad between Reading and Allentown. Although the railroad was opened in 1859, the place made but slow progress until within the past five years, when some substantial improvements were erected.

INcorporated into a Borough.—On the 11th of August, 1875, a petition, signed by forty-five persons, was presented to the Court of Quarter Sessions of Berks County, praying for a decree authorizing the incorporation of the town as a borough, and on the 12th day of the same month the grand jury reported favorably. Exceptions having been filed October 12, 1875, objecting to the incorporation, on account of including too much farming lands, action in the matter was stayed. Subsequently the plan was modified to exclude these lands, and on January 18, 1877, the decree of incorporation was finally granted. At the first election, held in that year, the following borough officers were elected:

Burgess, Peter W. Fisher; Councilmen, Benjamin Pott (president), C. D. Trexler, T. DeLong, David Merkel, J. D. Sanders, Peter L. Diener; Secretary, E. J. S. Hoch; Treasurer, B. C. Baer.

Since that time the following have been the burgesses and presidents:

The secretaries for the same period were E. J. S. Hoch, W. D. Trexler, L. F. Moll and James W. Sallade.

In 1885 the officers were,—

The borough justices then were William D. Trexler and John H. Miller. These offices had been previously filled by Levi F. Kuhns and B. C. Baer.

The population in 1885 was estimated at six hundred.

STORES.—One of the first business houses in the place was carried on in the Butz building, now occupied by the Topton Bank. There a store was kept in 1860 by Jerome Tidlow & Co., and three years later by Peter L. Diener and Smith Ubil. The next stand was opened in 1866 by Peter W. Fisher, being the building now occupied by C. B. Trexler as a general store. In 1875, Michael H. Miller built another store house, which was first occupied by David H. Merkel, and where Peter L. Diener is now in trade.

HOTELS.—The first hotel in the place was the Topton House, built in 1859 by James Butz, which became the property of Peter W. Fisher in 1866. The following year James Butz built the present American House, which is still owned by his family. The Washington House was built in 1874 by James George. It contains a hall, used for lodge purposes.

In February, 1886, the first shoe-store was erected, which was occupied by Daniel Heist. An extensive business in lumber, grain and coal is carried on by A. S. Heffner.

TOPTON POST-OFFICE was established in August, 1861, and J. D. Hans was the first postmaster. His successors have been Peter L. Diener, C. D. Trexler and Levi F. Moll. The office is supplied with four mails per day.

PHYSICIANS.—Dr. W. D. Trexler has followed his profession successfully the past fifteen years; and since 1881 Dr. A. C. S. Herman has also been located at Topton.

Dr. C. H. Rives was located at Topton a short time before 1870, but soon removed. In 1875-76 Dr. D. S. Bruner was at this place as a practicing physician; and others have lived here for short periods.

TOPTON FURNACE was built in 1871 by a company organized for this purpose, which had Isaac McHose as president, John H. Miller, secretary, and Thomas Berker, treasurer. William H. Berlin was the first manager. The company failed in 1873, and for some time the property lay idle, when Jacob H. Huntzinger became the owner. In 1879 the furnace was again put in blast and operated by William M. Kauffman & Co, until March, 1885, when that firm was succeeded by the Topton Furnace Company, of which Henry S. Eckert is president and Isaac S. Eckert superintendent. The plant embraces about twenty acres of land. Six good tenements are included.

Topton Roller-Mill was built in 1885, and set in motion in August of that year, by Sylvester Rohrbach, Oliver Rohrbach and Albert F. Kutz, the firm-name being Rohrbach Brothers & Kutz. The mill building is a three-story brick, forty-five by fifty-five feet, with an engine-house attached, and a sixty-five horsepower engine. The mill is supplied with twelve pairs of Odell rollers and operated on merchant work only, one hundred barrels per day being produced.

T. & M. H. DeLong's Furniture-Factory was established in 1880 by T. DeLong. The power is furnished by a steam-engine, and fourteen men are employed in the manufacture of furniture. In 1883 the present warerooms were occupied, which are well stocked with first-class furniture.

Railroad Station. — The present depot building was erected in 1875. It has ample accommodations and is well conducted by the station agent, G. F. Motzer. Large quantities of ore are shipped, but the output is only one-fourth as large at present as ten years ago, owing to the depression of the iron trade.

Topton National Bank was organized under the National Banking Laws, June 1, 1885, with a paid-up capital stock of fifty thousand dollars. The old Butz building was fitted up for this purpose, and the business has been highly prosperous. At the close of the first six months the assets were $93,859.29, and the undivided profits $1683.19. The erection of a new bank building is contemplated, a lot for this purpose having been purchased opposite the Topton House.

The president was John N. Jacobs, the cashier James M. Slifer. The other members of the board of directors were John H. Miller, Levi F. Mall, M. S. Long, D. H. Schweyer, George B. Schaeffer, William F. Stimmel and Ben Smith.

Schools. — The chief object aimed at, by the incorporation of Topton was obtained in the improved condition of its schools. A superior building was erected in the fall of 1885, at a cost of nearly five hundred dollars, it being an imposing two-story brick edifice, thirty-four by seventy-two feet in dimensions, surmounted by a belfry, which contains a fine bell. There are four recitation-rooms, three of which have been occupied by schools since October 12, 1885, under the principalship of S. W. Kline. The enrollment of pupils was one hundred and thirty-five. At the time the building was erected the board of directors was composed of A. S. Heffner, D. D. Hinterleiter, J. H. Moll, H. C. Roth, W. D. Trexler and Levi F. Moll.

Societies.—Topton Stannum, No. 201, Red Men, was instituted in 1873. It is a beneficial order, paying five dollars per week in case of sickness of members, or one hundred dollars in the event of their death. In 1885 there were thirty-five members, and the society had a reserve fund of nine hundred dollars.

Centennial Castle, No. 80, Knights of the Mystic Chain, was instituted at Topton in 1876, flourished a short time, but after three years the meetings were discontinued.

Topton Lodge, No. 437, K. of P., has been in existence since 1873, having forty-six members twelve years later. It has a fund of five hundred dollars invested for the good of the order. The meetings are held in a good hall, in the Washington House.

CENTREPORT.

The principal town in Centre township comprises several hundred inhabitants, three stores and one public-house. It is located in a very rich section of country, two miles from Mohrsville. The locality became a business point as early as 1818, when a public-house was opened by John Haag, whose family owned a farm covering the site now occupied by the town. This house has since been open for the entertainment of the public, and it was kept for a long time by John Pefferman and Bennewell Loose. In a part of the building John Faust, George Haag, Samuel Perry and others kept small stores. The first building for mercantile purposes was put up near this house in 1856, by Jacob Haag. William Borkey occupied it first in 1857, and after a period he was followed by James R. Koller and the present Kantner & Rentschler. The post-office is at this store. It was established in 1868, with James R. Koller as postmaster. The present postmaster is J. H. Spatz. It is supplied with tri-weekly mails from Mohrsville.

At the upper end of the town Perry Ludwig and John Koenig opened the first store, where John E. Pautsch and James T. Kline are now carrying on business. William Haag has a furniture-store.

The first mechanics, etc., at Centreport were:

Daniel H. Neecker, saddler; Joseph F. Seaman, shoemaker; Michael Rentschler, tailor; Joshua Reber, blacksmith; Emanuel Pleiss, coach-maker; Isaac H. Reber, undertaker; John Riegel, cigar-maker; George P. Rentschler, butcher.

Physicians.—Doctor J. H. Spatz is the oldest physician of the place. He located in West Leesport in 1848, and north of Centreport in 1874. Since 1881 he has resided in the borough.

The first doctor at Centreport was Dr. William Palm, who came in 1860 and remained until 1875. Dr. C. G. Loose was here from 1876 till 1882, when Dr. James A. Hoffman, a native of Kutztown, located in the practice of his profession and still remains. Dr. C. G. Richer located here in the spring of 1885.

Incorporation.—Centreport became a borough in 1884, mainly to obtain the benefits which such bodies have in regulating their own affairs. The bounds are small, including only the town proper. The first registry-list showed only thirty-two voters. The first Board of Councilmen was organized April 10, 1884, with W. W. Haag, president; J. H. Moll, secretary; Henry Stoyer, treasurer; David Stepp, W. R. Kline, G. W. B. Kauffman.

Morris Reeser was the first burgess; William Dewees, constable; and G. W. B. Kauffman and James W. Klopp, justices.

The first Board of School Directors was composed of John E. Pautsch, David Myers, Henry Stoyer, A. A. Lesher, John Stepe, George P. Rentschler.

A well-conducted school is maintained in the borough.

CHAPTER XXV.
TOWNSHIPS OF BERKS COUNTY.

Boundary of County.—Berk's County is bounded on the northwest by Schuylkill County, the Blue Mountain forming the natural boundary line, in length about thirty-six miles; on the northeast by Lehigh County, the line extending N. 49° W. 24 miles; on the southeast by Montgomery and Chester Counties, the line along the former county extending S. 33° W. 16½ miles, and the line along the latter S. 53° W. 11½ miles; and on the southwest by Lancaster and Lebanon Counties, the entire line extending N. 49½° W. 39 miles—along the former county 19 miles, and along the latter 20 miles. These lines inclose 526,000 acres, or 822 square miles.

The Schuylkill River divides this territory into two nearly equal divisions,—the eastern division containing about 280,000 acres, and the western 246,000 acres; and each division is capable of a natural subdivision.

Four Sections of County.—The eastern division can be divided into two sections by a line which extends eastwardly from the “Great Bend” of the Schuylkill, at Tuckerton, along the upper boundary lines of Muhlenberg, Ruscomb Manor, Rockland District and Hereford townships to Lehigh County. The southern section contains about 133,000 acres, and the northern 147,000 acres. Each section was identified from the earliest settlements by conspicuous streams of water, the southern section having been known by the name of Manatawny, and the upper Ontelaunee. Both these words are of Indian origin. The Indians had first possessed the entire territory, and their names naturally became attached to it. It is not only natural, therefore, to recognize the Indians, but simple justice to them in the use of these names to perpetuate their memory in its description. These streams extend northwardly through, and drain the greater part of, the respective sections from one extremity to the other. Nature has made them prominent; the Indians recognized them; and the historian cannot justly do otherwise.

The western division can be similarly divided. A natural boundary line divides it into two sections. It extends from the outlet of the Tulpehocken stream along the northern and western boundary lines of Spring township, formed by the stream named and its tributary, the Cacossing, to Lancaster County. The upper section was called Tulpehocken by the first settlers—a word also of Indian origin. This stream extends westwardly and northwardly through this section and drains it almost entirely. The lower section was called Schuylkill, from its connection with a large district of territory in Chester County known by this name. It has two streams which are known by Indian names, the Wyomissing and the Allegheny; but neither was sufficiently prominent to give its name to the entire section. The upper section contains about 130,000 acres, and the lower 116,000 acres.

The four sections have therefore been named Manatawny, Ontelaunee, Tulpehocken and Schuylkill, and they are treated in the order mentioned.

MANATAWNY SECTION.

The Manatawny section comprises fourteen townships, viz:

They are arranged and treated in the order of priority of settlement and erection. Reading is situated within this section; but it is treated separately as the county-seat in Chapter XXIII.

The central portion of this large section of territory is almost surrounded by hills. These hills form natural water-sheds for the section, whereby the streams are drawn through the several parts, south, east, north and west, affording invaluable irrigation and industrial power. The hills to the eastward and northward have been known for over one hundred and fifty years as the "Oley Hills;" and those to the westward for nearly the same period as the hills of "Ruscomb Manor," and "Penn's Manor,"—the latter including "Neversink" in Alsace, and "Schwartzwald" in Exeter. The greater proportion of the land is rather elevated and rolling; and about a fourth part of it is wood-land.

STREAMS.—The principal streams are Manatawny, Monocacy and Antietam. The Manatawny is the largest and longest stream. It has three sources, which unite near Pleasantville,—Beaver Creek, East Branch and West Branch. From the junction the Manatawny flows southwardly through the eastern part, and near the line of Oley; thence southeastwardly through Upper Amity and Central Douglass, into and through the extreme southwestern corner of Montgomery County into the Schuylkill. From its source to its mouth it is about twenty-five miles long, only three miles being in Montgomery County. In Douglass, near Pine Iron-Works, the Iron-stone Creek flows into it. The Manatawny and all its tributaries have a total length of fifty-six miles.

The Monocacy rises in the eastern part of Alsace and western part of Oley, and flows southwardly through Exeter and Amity into the Schuylkill, a length of eleven miles. It has two branches which, flow into it on the east,—Little Monocacy and Limekiln.

The Antietam rises in Ruscomb-manor, and flows southwardly through Alsace and Exeter into the Schuylkill, a length of nine miles.

To the westward the minor noteworthy streams are Rose Valley Run, Bernhart's Run HISTORY OF BERKS COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA.

and Laurel Run. All empty into the Schuylkill.

Besides the streams mentioned, the following rise in this section: Willow Creek, Sacoony and Perkiomen, with its tributaries, West Branch and Swamp Creek.

The total length of the streams and their tributaries in this section is over one hundred miles.

The water system of this territory is thorough. It plays a very important part in its prosperity. It affords invaluable and constant water-power. This power was appreciated by the first settlers, having been appropriated by them for mills, and subsequently utilized for forges, furnaces and factories.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.—Numerous roads have been laid out in this territory. Each township is well supplied. The most prominent roads of considerable length in this section are the following: Four from Reading, —1, to Boyertown (via Stonersville), eighteen miles; 2, to Friedensburg, nine miles; 3, to Pricetown, nine miles; 4, to Kutztown (via Temple). Two roads lead from Amityville,—one by way of Friedensburg and Pricetown to Blandon, and the other by way of Yellow House, Pleasantville and Stony Point to Kutztown. And a road leads from Boyertown, via Shultzville and Claytonville, to Lehigh County, ten miles.

Two turnpikes have been constructed in the section,—the "Perkiomen," from county line via Douglassville and Baunstown to Reading, and the "Centre," from Reading to Tuckerton, which extends northeardly, via Leesport and Hamburg, to the county line. A short turnpike has also been constructed in the extreme eastern part through Hereford.

Three railroads extend through it, viz.: The Philadelphia and Reading, along the Schuylkill River through the lower portion of Douglass, Amity, Exeter and Alsace and the central portion of Reading and Muhlenberg, for twenty miles; the East Pennsylvania, through Reading and Muhlenberg, for six miles; and the Colebrookdale, through Douglass, Colebrookdale and Washington, for ten miles—altogether thirty-six miles.

The Schuylkill Canal extends along the river, through Reading and Muhlenberg, to "Stoudt's Ferry," a distance of nine miles.

OLEY TOWNSHIP.

The district of Oley comprised the greater part of Manatawny section for a number of years till 1720. Next to "Manathanim" (Manatawny), it was the first name given to any considerable tract of territory in this region of the province, and by it the early settlers designated the locality. Strictly speaking, the district included only those lands in the central portion which were surrounded by hills. This circumstance led the Indians to name them Olink, and from this word the first settlers derived the name Oley.1 Its first appearance in a written form was in the patent to Isaac le Turk,2 granted to him for three hundred acres of land taken up in 1712. At that time there were two other settlers who had taken up lands by patent, named John le Dee and John Frederickfull. The land of the former was situated along the "Little Manatawny" (now adjoining Friedensburg), and in a continuous line of transmission for one hundred and seventy-four years, it has passed from father to son, grandsons and great-grandsons to the present generation.

Before the year 1700 William Penn had granted to different parties the right to take up lands in Pennsylvania, by virtue of which right certain large tracts were taken up in Oley. Actual possession was not taken by the original grantees when the right was given to them, but some years after 1700 by subsequent grantees. Prominent representative ancestors of some of the first families in the county ob-

1 It has been suggested that possibly the name arose from Oleye, a community in the Belgian province of Liitich Cistuit, Warenne, from which the first settlers may have emigrated.

2 Isaac le Turk had previously been settled on the Quassick Creek, in Dutchess County, New York, having emigrated from the country along the Rhine, with twelve thousand Germans, upon the invitation of Queen Anne. In 1700 he was registered there as a husbandman, unmarried, aged twenty-three years. He left in 1711, and emigrated to Oley in 1712.
TOWNSHIPS OF COUNTY.

It is the little but John Hoch, and John Yoder, and the lands purchased by them over one hundred and sixty years ago have been transmitted from generation to generation in their respective descendants to the present time.²

The Friends made early settlements in this district, prominent amongst them having been George Boone, Sr., and Anthony Lee.³ Boone served as a justice of the peace for many years, and practiced surveying, having surveyed a number of the townships in proceedings for their erection. He was the grandfather of Daniel Boone, the Kentucky pioneer. He took up a tract of four hundred acres in Oley (now Exeter) in 1718, about which time he settled there and erected and carried on the first mill in this section of the province. His son, James Boone, was a superior mathematician and served as one of the provincial judges of the county.

EARLY PROMINENT ROADS,—At the March sessions of court at Philadelphia, in 1735, a petition was presented to extend the Tulpehocken road (laid out in 1727) from the Schuylkill River to Oley. Mordecai Lincoln, Marcus Hulings, James Thompson, Peter Robeson, Benjamin Boone, and Thomas Potts were appointed viewers. At June sessions, 1736, they reported "a road from the ford of the Schuylkill at the end of the Tulpehocken road to the road from Oley to Philadelphia, in length thirty-seven hundred and twenty-six perches, or 11.64 miles." The course of this road occupied, in a general way, the present road from Reading via Black Bear, Jacksonwald and Stonersville to Amityville.

At that session also (June, 1736) a petition was presented for a road from Jacob Levan's mill, in Maxatawny, to the "King's Highway," by John Yoder's fence in Oley. John High, John Yoder, Jr., Samuel Golden, Benj. Langworthy, Abraham Ashman and Thomas Ellis (all residents of Oley) were appointed viewers. They laid out the road. It is now called the "Kutztown Road," and extends from Pleasantville, via Lobachsville and Stony Point to Kutztown.

INDIAN VILLAGES,—The Indians had a prominent settlement in this township. They had villages scattered at different places. One was situated a little north of the "Moravian

They shot off their guns into the air with a shout of exultation, and returned to their homes.*

³ Arthur Lee settled in Oley about 1718. He was a native of England. It is possible that he came into this section of Philadelphia County with George Boone, Sr. He then took up a large tract of land on the west branch of the Manatawny Creek, and Boone took up a large tract several miles to the west, along the Monocacy Creek. There had been an Indian village on his land, which, was, doubtless, removed beyond the South Mountain about that time, when the land was released to the Penns by the Indians. By a tradition in the Lee family, the Indians were for a time neighbors of Arthur Lee, and they showed a high respect for him on account of his principles,—they knowing that he was one of the class of men to which the Penns belonged. At one time these Indians, hearing that a hostile tribe intended to make an incursion into the settlement, came and notified him, but not without an apparently cruel demonstration. They visited his home in the night-time, painted and equipped as if to carry on warfare. Their formidable attitude alarmed the family, especially the younger members, who, in consequence, made some efforts to escape. But they assured the family that they came to notify and prepare them for a threatened invasion, rather than do any injury. They came disguised in this manner so as to deceive the Indians in case they should meet them. They then inquired of Mr. Lee for a confirmation of this alarming report; but they learned from him that it was untrue. This information delighted them.

School-house,” near the foot of “Grand Hill,” on the farm occupied by Jared Hoch. Five springs were at that point. Engle Peters was a near neighbor, with whom, it is said, they were upon intimate terms. He was a blacksmith by occupation and in appearance large and powerful. The Indians frequently visited his shop. Another village was on the Bertolet farm, at “Clay Slate Hill.” The largest village was on the Lee farm, where marks of numerous graves existed till about 1860. The spot was called “Lee’s Field,” having doubtless been a burying-ground of the Indians. Some of the Indians continued to live in that vicinity for a score of years after the territory was sold by them to the proprietaries. One of their employments was basket-making, in which they were expert. Upon the breaking out of the “French and Indian War” all intimacy between them and the settlers ceased.

In May, 1728, George Boone—a justice of the peace, residing in Oley township—addressed the following interesting letter to Patrick Gordon, Deputy Governor of the province, in reference to the unsettled and uncertain condition of the inhabitants, which arose from the threatening attitude of the Indians:

“Our condition at present looks with a bad Vizard, for, undoubtedly, the Indians will fall down upon us very suddenly. Our Inhabitants are generally fled. There remain about twenty men with me to guard my mill, where I have about 1000 bushels of wheat and flour; and we are resolved to defend ourselves to the last extremity and not to quit our habitations if we can have any succor from you. Wherefore I desire the Governor and Council to take our case into consideration and speedily send some messengers to the Indians, and some arms and ammunition to us, with some strength also, in order to defend our frontiers. Otherwise we shall undoubtedly perish and our province laid desolate and destroyed. The bearer is able to inform you with his own mouth the cause of my writing.”

First Assessment List.—No assessment lists have as yet come to light for this district for the period between 1719 and 1734. But fortunately, in spite of the gross and inexcusable carelessness of the county officials, a record of the taxable inhabitants of Philadelphia County for the year 1734 has been found. It was presented to the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, in whose careful and worthy possession it is now. It includes four districts—which were then recognized, though not yet established—now parts of Berks County: Oley, Amity, Colebrookdale and Maxatawny. The names of the taxables and the quantity of land held by each taxable, upon which quit-rents were paid, for Oley, were as follows:

In 1741 fifty-eight taxables were reported for the township.

Erection of Township.—On September 5, 1720, a petition was presented to court, at Philadelphia, in which the petitioners represented that they were settled on lands adjoining Amity, altogether about ten thousand acres, and requested that, owing to the inconveniences under which they labored, that said land should be erected into a township by the name commonly known. It was signed by the following inhabitants, mostly in German handwriting:

- John Longworthy
- Benjamin Longworthy
- John Henry Kirsten
- Hans Helfin Week
- Johannes Keilm
- Jacob Koch

1 The Boone mill was situated on the Monocacy Creek, several miles from the Schuylkill.

1 Penna. Arch., 218.

Action on this petition was delayed for some unknown reason for twenty years before the township was regularly erected.

The application for the erection of the township was renewed in June, 1740. A petition, signed by fifty-four subscribers, was presented to court, in which they asked for viewers to fix the boundary lines. Viewers were appointed, and on September 1, 1740, they made the following return:

"Beginning at a corner of Thomas Pott's land in the Amity township line; thence N. 70 W., 591 ps.; S. 20 W., 36 ps., to the North side of the King's road leading from Philadelphia to Tulpehocken settlements; thence along said road 1048 perches; thence N. 20 E., 1200 ps.; S. 70 E., 1400 ps., and S. 20 W., 1720 ps., to the beginning, containing about 14,000 acres of land."

Benjamin Eastburn was the surveyor. In the draft on file, the stream which empties into the Schuylkill above the Monocacy is called "Lahundake," now as the "Antietam." This return was confirmed, known, and the district included was named Oley.

TAXABLES OF 1759.—The following list comprises the taxables of the township for the year 1759. The tax levied amounted to one hundred and thirty-nine pounds, and Samuel High was the collector:

Before the county was cleared of its forests the Manantaway and its affluent had a sufficient volume to operate numerous mills and small factories, some of which are still carried on successsfully. On what is locally called Furnace Creek, near the mountains, the Oley Furnace was erected, which during the Revolution became the property of General Daniel Udree. The Clymer Iron Company succeeded in the ownership of this old industry and are still operating it. It is the oldest charcoal furnace in use in the State. The grist-mill connected with this property has been continuously operated. Down the creek John Stoetzel had a paper-mill as early as 1790. It was converted into a forge by Solomon Boyer in 1836. About 1849 Nimrod Yeakel became the owner and he built a grist-mill in the place of the forge, which is still operated by his family. Above this place a woolen-factory was erected by John R. Edelman, which is also continued and produces all kinds of woolen goods. A little more than half a mile down the stream on the present Mahlon De Turck's farm was the Seger saw-mill, whose power was lost employed to operate a flax-brake. But the Weiser saw-mill, below this point, has been operated for several generations, having as successive owners Christian, Jacob and Daniel Weiser. At the mouth of this stream the Bertolets had an oil-mill, but later the power was used only to operate a saw-mill. This property, as well as the old Bertolet grist-mill on the Little Manatawny, is still owned by that family, the owner of the latter being Daniel G. Bertolet. It is on a good site and is well patronized. The saw-mill is operated by Israel Bertolet, the owner of the large farm and a direct descendant of the first purchaser, one hundred and sixty years ago. Near Friedensburg, on the power above the Bertolet mill, is the Kerst mill, now the property of Ammon Kaufman and long operated by Daniel Kaufman. It is a substantial mill, supplied with good steam-power and four sets of stones. The old Reiff mill, on the headwaters of this stream, is now operated by A. Carl. It has also done service for several generations.

On the Monocacy John Knabb had a saw-mill, which after many years of successful operation was burned down. A new mill was built by Charles Knabb. Half a mile lower down the stream John Knabb erected a large stone grist-mill, which, in a repaired condition, is now carried on by Daniel Bieber. Lower down, the Herbein saw-mill, built by Jonas Herbein, is situated. Gear's fulling-mill was just outside the township, in Exeter, but has long since been removed.

On a branch of the Bieber Creek Jacob Bieber had a pioneer saw-mill, which was afterwards operated by Wm. Bieber; it is now the property of Benjamin Keim. A short distance below is one of the oldest mill-seats in the township. As early as 1742 a corn-mill was operated there by Snapphold, the mill standing some distance below the present one, which was built in 1761 by John Hoch. Originally it was a one-story building, not near as large as at present, having been built to its present size in 1830, by Solomon Peter. Before 1790 Casper Maul owned the property. Since 1846, Daniel Y. Peter has owned this mill. In 1884 he supplied steam-power. He has manufactured molasses at the same place. Below this point Joshua Hoch had an oil-mill about 1835, but the building has been idle many years; the saw-mill, built in 1839, is now operated by Isaac Brumbaugh. Several miles lower down the stream Ely & Yoder erected a paper-mill about 1850, using the power which had before operated a saw-mill and carried it on some time. When owned by Daniel Yoder alone he enlarged it. Subsequently it became the property of, first, Ezra Becker and then Geo. B. Conrad. At present it is owned by Henry Conrad. It was worked in the manufacture of printing paper and employed twenty hands. On the Yoder farm, at Pleasantville, Daniel Yoder had an oil-mill, which was abandoned and the power used to operate a clover and feed-mill, owned by John and David Yoder. These interests still remain. The Yoders were large land-owners. On the lower part of the tract there was another mill-site; it is now the Griesemer mill. This was first built by John Griesemer, and in 1839 destroyed by fire. It is at present operated by Jacob L. Griesemer and is one of the principal mills of the township. A short distance below were the Oley Forges, operated by the Leshers and the Spangs. The stream there afforded a strong water-power; the dam covered about forty acres. Spang also had a fulling-mill at that place, which was at one time extensively operated. The last power on the Manatawny, in Oley, was improved for a saw-mill, built by John P. Kaufman, and now owned by Samuel Kaufman. It is claimed by Benueville Grie-emer that he used the first stationary steam-engine in Oley, in 1848, in furnishing power for a stave-factory. Finding it unprofitable, he sold the machinery to parties who moved it to Bucks County. The township formerly had half a dozen small tanneries, but some of them have been altogether discontinued. One of the largest was carried on by David Bear, at Fried-enburg.

LEVI JOHN BERTOLETTE.

Levi John Bertolette was born at Spring
Forge, in Earl township, March 29, 1813.
His father was John Shenkel Bertolette, and his mother, Mary Boyer. His paternal ancestor, Jean Bertolette, emigrated to this country from the Palatinate, on the Rhine, in 1726. He was a native of Chateaudeux, in the Canton of Berne, Switzerland; was a Huguenot, and is said to have been a descendant of a French family driven from their native country during the persecution of the Huguenots in France. Jean Bertolette settled, upon his ar-ival in Pennsylvania, at a spot about one mile west of what is now the Yellow House. He brought with him a son named Abraham, then fourteen years of age, and who married Esther De Turk and had a son John, who was married to a Miss Shenkel. John Shenkel Bertolette, a son by this marriage, was the father of Levi
J. Bertolette. John S. Bertolette was the proprietor of the iron-mill known as Spring Forge, near where Earlville is now located, and managed the forge and a farm at the same time. He was a man of energetic business qualities, firm in purpose, and quick in execution. Levi J. Bertol-lette, his son, before he was fifteen years of age, was placed by his father in charge of a six-horse team, with which he hauled iron blooms to Philadelphia. At the early age of eighteen he was married to Henrietta Guldin, and was placed by his father in possession of a farm, which came to him in his own right but a short time afterward, at his father's death. He lived upon this farm, which was part of the originally settled tract, all his life, and became one of the prominent men of his neighborhood and of the county. He varied his farm duties with those of stock-raising and dealing in stock, and made frequent trips to Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Kentucky, buying up stock, bringing it home and selling it, the business proving lucrative. In stock raising his tastes ran toward fine driving horses, and he raised and turned out some of the fastest trotters and pacers in the county. At the time of the organization of the National Union Bank of Reading he became one of its directors, and filled that position for many years.

Politically, he was a Democrat of the Jack-sonian stripe, and never varied in his faith.
He was a member of the Lutheran Church from his early youth. He had a sympathetic nature under a somewhat stern and severe exterior. He was a warm friend and held the respect of all his neighbors, and thoroughly enjoyed his long life. He was guarded and judicious in his business relations. He had a great taste for travel, which was never gratified to its fullest extent, though he made several trips to Colorado and the Rocky Mountains. Throughout his life, and until his final sickness, he was a remarkable healthy and vigorous man. He was fond of reading, particularly subjects relating to the deeds and achievements of great men, and was possessed of a disposition that looked upon the bright side of life. He died April 10, 1883, full of years, and leaving a beloved and honored memory to his family and friends. He was the father of eight children. His widow, two sons and a daughter survive him. The former lives in Reading. The eldest son, John C., is a suc-sessful ranchman in Colorado, a few miles from the city of Denver. The second, Levi A., is now residing in Wilmington, Del., and the daughter, Emma Josephine, is the wife of Samuel Heckman and lives at the old homestead in Oley township, which she inherited.
He left also fourteen surviving grandchildren.

CHURCHES.

In no other township of the county have there been greater diversity of religious thought and freedom of opinion regarding doctrinal usages, than in Oley. Among the very earliest settlers there were a number of ultra-religionists, and during the first half of the eighteenth century various sects, whose doctrines were in direct conflict with the beliefs of the older churches, found adherents in the township. Some of these maintained meetings for a short period in Oley, but did not succeed in effecting permanent organizations.

During the earlier history of Oley, about 1718, there prevailed for a time a certain religious excitement, which was caused by a peculiar sect of people who styled themselves "New-Born." Their leader was a man named Matthias Bowman, who arrived from the Palatinate about that time for the purpose of conducting them in their religious belief. They professed sinless perfection and claimed that they "were sent of God to conform others." Their dispu-tations were frequently heard in the marketplaces of Philadelphia. Their leader was so forward as to carry his doctrines wherever he could. No person, howsoever retired, seemed to escape his visits. Even Conrad Beissel—the founder of the "Sieben Taeger"—was occasionally annoyed by the importunity of himself and of his disciples. It is probable that they continued for thirty years.

The Brethren, or Dunkards, were quite numerous in Oley from 1724 till 1745, when many removed. No effort appears to have been made by them to establish a regular place of worship. About that time the Moravians obtained a foothold in the southwestern part of the township, holding their first general meetings in the barn of John De Turk, and it was in that building where a general meeting was held February 11, 1742, which was attended by Bishops David Nichtman and Count Zinzend-dorf, who had then just arrived in America, and who there ordained Christian Henry Rauch and Gotlieb Buettner as deacons of the Moravian Church. The former was the missionary in Connecticut and was accompanied to this place by three Indians, who had been converted to the Christian religion, and who now sought the rite of baptism at the hands of the bishops or of some authorized minister.

After the ordination services, "the whole assembly being met, the three catechumens (Indians) were placed in the midst and with fervent prayer and supplication devoted to the Lord Jesus Christ as his eternal property, upon which Rauch, with great emotion of heart, baptized these three firstlings of the North American Indians into the death of Jesus, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, calling Shahaash, Abraham; Slein, Isaac; and Kiop, Jacob." This extraordinary meeting produced a marked effect upon the community, and was the means of giving the Moravians precedence in the next few years, so that a school-house and church building were erected some years afterward (1748) in the same neighborhood. It was located upon a tract of sixteen acres, which had been donated by John Diedrich Youngman, who had received a patent for the same from the Penns in 1735. Youngman was very zealous in this enterprise and it was mainly through his exertions that the buildings were erected. The larger building, commonly called the meeting-house, was forty-one feet square and three stories high. The lower story was divided into four apartments, each having a large open fire-place, and were, probably, the living-rooms of the teachers. The second story was devoted to church and school purposes, and the third story contained sleeping-rooms. Youngman died in 1747, and, as he was most interested in it, it was not kept up long afterward.

The large building became a farm-house, on the present Moyer place. In 1776 a building was erected by Daniel Hoch and others upon a smaller tract of land, near the burying-ground, which was thereafter known as the "Herrnhauter Schule Haus" (and which is still standing), nominally as the property of the Moravians. In this building schools were maintained with considerable regularity until 1873; then it became a residence and has since been used as such.

From 1850 till 1872 the township rented the building at four dollars per year for public schools, the proceeds, in part, being applied to the care of the property. The last school in it was taught in 1873 by Elijah Merkel. The cemetery is inclosed with a substantial fence and contains a number of graves, some of them marked with sand-stones, whose inscriptions have been effaced. The property comprises about three acres of land and is held in trust by Levi Merkel, Benneville Herbein and Jackson Snyder. Jared Hoch was long the treasurer of the school-house fund.

Dr. George De Benneville may be regarded as the first minister to take up his residence in the township for the purpose of teaching and preaching. He settled on what was known as the Peter Knabb farm. He built a spacious house, in which he taught and preached, and also frequently held services in the Moravian meeting-house. He was a medical practitioner; thus he became well known and popular among the people, and, as he did not belong to any particular sect, he was called on to preach the funeral services of most of the early settlers. It was he who encouraged the custom of having private burial-grounds on the farms, as a matter of convenience, since public cemeteries were few and far removed. In belief he was a Restorationist, but made no effort to establish that sect in Oley. Upon the breaking out of the Indian troubles, in 1755, he removed to near Philadelphia, where he died.

OLEY REFORMED CHURCH was founded in the Manatawny Valley, in one of the richest sections of the township. A number of Calvinists lived there, and one of them, John Lesher, on the 13th of April, 1734, deeded one hundred and thirty-two perches of land to Gabriel Boyer and Casper Griesemer, "in trust for the society of Christian people inhabiting Oley, professing the doctrines and tenets of John

2 The Moravian schools of Germantown and of Frederick township were incorporated into this school. In August, 1750, the following pupils were transferred from the Frederick school to Oley: David Beck, of Bethlehem; Abraham and John Bibighausen, George M. Graaf, Abraham Haller, Michael Kraemer, John Kiehm and John Weber, all of Lancaster County; Jonathan and Peter Jones, of New Providence township; Abraham Leinbach, Peter Vetter, of Oley; Israel Hersfield, of Long Island; Isaac Noble, of New York; Frederick Klemm, of Philadelphia; John Walton and Isaac, a Mohican Indian, of Shecomeco.
Calvin." Upon this lot a small log meeting-house was built in 1735, in which preached the visiting German Reformed ministers, and also, occasionally, a Lutheran minister. Among the former were the Rev. Henry Goetschy (who also preached before the church was built), Rev. George Michael Wiest, Rev. Johannes Bartholo-maes Rieger, Rev. J. B. Boehm, Rev. Michael Schlatter and Rev. — Leydick. In 1754 a new meeting-house was built by John Lesher, Casper Griesemer and Gabriel Boyer, which was used until the present edifice took its place, in 1822. The names of these members of the building committee were cut on the vane which adorned the roof of the church, and which was in the form of a huge rooster. The building was partly of stone and finished up with logs, making it more substantial than attractive. The floor was composed of bricks, about eight inches square and three inches thick. For a number of years there was no stove in it. In other respects it was like the churches of that day, having the old-fashioned pulpit and the usual number of side-doors. Whilst the second church was being built the congregation made an effort to secure a regular pastor, and, in 1755, appointed Elders John Lesher and Casper Griesemer to visit the Coetus at Lancaster and present a petition for a minister. Revs. Wiest, Schlatter, Leydick, Waldsmith and Steyner were appointed supplies for this congregation and congregations at Reading and other places in this part of the country. In 1761 Oley united with Reading in extending a call to the Rev. William Oitterbein, which he declined, and no regular pastor was secured until 1771, when the Rev. John William Boos assumed that relation and preached eleven years. In 1782 the Rev. — Nebling became the pastor, followed, in 1784, by Rev. Bernhart Willy, and by Rev. John William Ingold in 1786. A few years later the Rev. John William Boos was again the pastor, and was followed by the Revs. Fred Herman, — Dechant, Augustus Pauli, J. Sassaman Herman, Daniel E. Schoedler and the present, Rev. I. S. Stahr. The membership approximates four hundred and the congregation is in a flourishing condition. The Lutherans also worshipped in the old church, but in 1821 they became a distinct body and erected a place of worship on an adjoining lot. The following year the Re-formed congregation vacated its old church, and in May, 1822, laid the corner-stone of the present brick edifice, which was erected by a building committee having as its members Daniel Griesemer, Peter Knabb, Tobias Schall and Peter Guldin. It was dedicated late the same year and was used as built until 1880, when it was remodeled and made very attractive in its interior arrangements and embellishments.

Christ's Lutheran Church.—Having determined to erect their own house of worship, instead of uniting with the Reformed congregation in building a new church in place of the old Oley Church, which had become unfitted by age, the Lutheran members selected as their building committee Henry J. Spang, Martin Yoder and William Trout, and began operations early in 1821. A lot was procured from Jacob S. Spang, adjoining the old church, upon which was laid the corner-stone May 27, 1821, and the building was completed so far that a meeting was held in it on Christmas the same year. It is a plain structure, almost square, built of rough stone. It has been occupied since its consecration, May 27, 1822. It was repaired in 1878.

On January 6, 1822, Conrad Miller was installed the first pastor, and the congregation adopted its constitution on the 31st of March following. Rev. Miller served until 1834. The subsequent pastors were,— 1834–39, Isaac Roeller.

1840, Daniel Kohler.
1841–44, Mark Harpel.
1848–53, George F. Miller.

Since December 16, 1866, the Rev. T. T. Iaegar has officiated as pastor. The congregation is in a prosperous condition and has about the same number of members as the Reformed. In 1868 both churches were inclosed with a beautiful iron fence, costing two thousand five hundred dollars. It was built under the direction of Benneville Griesemer and James Stapleton.

The Oley Cemetery is controlled by an assocation chartered in 1870. The present officers are Samuel Hoch, president; Dr. A. N. Fegley, secretary; and John B. Yingling, treasurer. It comprises about four acres, which are neatly kept. Some fine monuments have been erected.

A Sunday-school was instituted here on June 6, 1852, after some opposition had been manifested against it.

Upon part of the old Reformed lot are the ruins of the old stone parochial school-house, which was used before the adoption of the free-school system. In it were taught some good schools, for the times in which they were maintained. It also served as the home of the organist for some years.

Each church has provided ample shed-room for the horses of its members.

Frieden's Church (Reformed and Lutheran).—Members of these denominations, residing in the northern and western parts of Oley, and desiring a more convenient place of worship than the neighboring churches afforded, decided, at a meeting held January 1, 1830, to build a church of their own at a place in the township now Friedensburg, and appointed John Laucks, Henry Dengler, Gideon Schneider and Abraham De Turk a building committee. A few days later (January 5th) Henry Dengler executed a deed in trust for one hundred and thirty-three perches of land, to Jacob H. Reiff, John Hunter, Sr., Solomon Boyer and Abraham Haas, "for the use of a church in which the Christian religion might be taught in German, according to the several doctrines of the Lutheran and Calvinist, or German Reformed Churches." Church regulations were now drawn up and the plan of the organization set forth as being purely fraternal; whence the name "Friedens" was suggested for the new building. Provision was also made to erect a school-house at the same time, which was to be controlled wholly by the trustees; and all these interests were to be "independent of synodical connection until the end of all time." The corner-stone of the church was laid May 23, 1830, and the two buildings were completed the following year at a cost of $1678.11.

This amount was exclusive of the work gratuitously done, which aided materially in the construction. The frames of the doors and windows were procured from a large oak, which stood on the farm of David Levan (now Mahlon De Turk), this having been cut down by the members and converted into lumber at a neighboring saw-mill.

On the 13th of August, 1831, the first baptism in the church took place, Solomon S. Reider receiving that rite; and the first communion was held October 23d of the same year. On August 30, 1854, the church and cemetery connected with it became an incorporated body. Then the cemetery was enlarged, comprising now more than three acres, which have been attractively improved. The trustees in 1886 were J. B. Leinbach, P. L. Glase, Stephen Reider, Daniel Link, George Brownmiller, John R. Adelman and John Dengler.

The congregations have prospered and increased in membership (each having about three hundred) so that the old church was no longer a fit earthly temple, and it was decided to erect a new one of larger capacity, and better suited to the requirements of the times. On April 5, 1886, the work of demolishing the old church was begun and on its site a new structure of brick will be erected, with a capacity for eight hundred persons. The tower is to be one hundred and three feet high, and is to contain a bell weighing eighteen hundred pounds. The committee charged with building this house are Henry Dellecker, Jacob Hoch, Charles Reiff, Joel Haas, P. L. Glase and J. B. Herbein.

While it is being built the congregations will worship in the "Union Church," below Friedensburg, and the Sunday-school, which was organized and held for a time in the church school-house, will be held in the public school building. Until 1867 it was held in summer only, but since that time it has been continued all year. H. Van Sickle and J. H. Major were the first two superintendents; and D. D. Hoch and J. L. Endy the last two. The school is well attended.

The following have been the pastors of the church and the years they began to teach:

From the organization of the congregations until 1882 the services were almost exclusively in German, but since the latter date one-fourth of the preaching has been English.

St. John’s Lutheran Church is located at Pleasantville, and is an attractive brick edifecome, having capacity for four hundred people.
It was erected in 1879, and dedicated November 23, 1879, at a cost of about twenty-four hundred dollars. A neat spire embellishes the outside appearance of the building. The conregregation occupying it was organized, in 1868, of members who belonged to the Lohachsville and Hill Churches, and who adhered to the Rev. Alfred D. Croll when he withdrew from the old Lutheran Synod of Pennsylvania and connected himself with the class known as New Lutheran. The membership was at first small, but increased until forty belonged, which is the number reported in 1886. The meetings were held in the Odd-Fellows’ Hall until the church was completed, and the Rev. Croll was the pastor until his death, in 1876. Since that time the pastors have been Revs. William Cutter, Edward Darron, William H. Lewars,
John A. Singmaster, and the present, George W. Fritsch. The church controls a cemetery of one acre, part of which was the old burial-ground of the Yoder family.

Ebenzer Evangelical Church is a small, plain frame building, erected in 1869, at the same place. At that time there were thirty-five members, and Rev. Frank Sechrist was the preacher in charge of the Friedens-burg Circuit, which supplies this church.
From the records at hand it appears that in 1853 a class of the association was organized at that place, which had twenty-two members, Jacob Bertolet as a local preacher, and S. Breigel as the leader. They were known as the Maxatawny Class, of the Milford Circuit, and Henry Bucks was the preacher in charge. Since that time, among the Evangelical preachers in this section have been Revs. Wiland, Specht, Gold, Hess, Ziegenfuss, Gingrich, Zorn, Sechrist, Adams, Harber, Glick and the present, R. Deisher. In 1886 there were fifty-four mem-

ers. Its trustees then were Albert Cleaver, Reuben Sharer and Irwin Kline.

Salem Church of the Evangelical Association at Friedensburg was built in 1881. The congregation occupying it was or-organized about 1840, and was one of the fruits of the religious excitement which prevailed in the township at that period. Meetings were first held at the house of Daniel Bertolet, Sr., in the barns of the members or in nature’s own temple, the leafy woods. But, soon afterward, Daniel Bertolet erected a union meeting-house, in the locality of his home, one mile from Friedensburg, in which the meetings of the Association were statedly held for some ten years, when an acre of land was purchased, at Friedensburg, for church and cemetery purpoes, upon which was erected a plain, stone church. This was occupied until 1881, when it was demolished and the material used in the present edifice. The corner-stone was laid in July of that year, and the church dedicated on It is a brick building, with a spire ninety-five feet high, which includes a bell weighing one thousand pounds. The building committee comprised W. H. Butterweck, William Schroeder and Amos Manwiller. Rev. Thomas Harber was the preacher in charge of the circuit at that time. The present trustees are B. R. High, William Schroeder and George Schaefer. The members number fifty, constituting a class of which Lewis Hoeffer is the leader. The Sunday-school has seventy-five members and George Dellecker is the superintendent. This church also belongs to Friedensburg Circuit, and, in addition to the pastors named in the Emanuel Church, the Revs. Moses Dissinger, John Koehl and Joseph Sayler preached, in the latter when the stone church was built.

Union Church (mentioned in connection with Salem Church) is used by various denominations, besides the Evangelicals. The property is held in trust by the heirs of Daniel Bertolet, who thus carry out the purpose of the founder. A cemetery is connected with it, in which are interred many people of that part of the township.

OLEY ACADEMY.

This institution had its origin in the desire of many of the best people of Oley to have in their midst a school where instruction in the higher branches might be obtained. An effort was made as early as 1850 to establish such a school at Friedensburg, which failed, owing to the want of enterprise and forethought on the part of some of the members of the School Board serving at that time.

The free-school system was accepted in 1849, and when school buildings had to be provided, the following year, Dr. Peter G. Bertolet (one of the most progressive citizens of the township), as a member of the School Board, urged the erection of a two-story building, in which a graded school should be taught, promising, on the part of the people of Friedensburg, that if such a school building were erected there, the citizens would defray one-half of the expense. He was warmly seconded by Martin Yoder; but the prejudice against such schools overcame the judgment of the majority of the directors and the proposition was defeated.

The township built two separate district school-houses in this locality and was content with ordinary English teaching a few months each year. Disappointed, but not disheartened, the friends of a liberal education bided their time, and on the 1st of January, 1857, they put forth another effort to establish such a school, but one which should be independent of public control. Dr. Bertolet found warm coadjutors in Daniel S. Leinbach, B. A. Glase and others, who agreed to associate themselves with him to form a stock company to erect and conduct an academy. The project was so warmly encouraged that its success was soon assured; and to put the enterprise upon the best possible footing, the company became an incorporated body April 13, 1857, upon the petition of the following persons:

P. G. Bertolet, Jacob Bertolet, Daniel G. Bertolet, J. H. Major, Peter Guldin, David Bear.

A commodious two-story brick building was erected in the lower part of Friedensburg, and on December 1, 1857, Oley Academy was opened, with forty students, and Jacob H. Major as principal. From the first it was prosperous. It suffered a reverse in 1874, which threatened the life of the school. Fortunately, a new generation of friends of higher education came to the rescue, and by their united efforts the institution was placed upon a better footing than ever before. Not only were old debts liquidated, but enough money was raised besides to erect a fine three-story boarding hall. The academy was supplied with choice philosophical apparatus, a large collection of geological and botanical specimens, and a library of about five hundred volumes of standard and reference books. Thus equipped, it entered upon a new career of prosperity, which has continued to this day. The yearly attendance is about one hundred students, and, being empowered by its charter to confer "honorary degrees," regular courses of study have been established.

These embrace the study of the English, in all its branches, and the ancient and modern classics. In 1885 the first class was graduated —twelve in number—which had completed the prescribed courses.

The academy has had a number of really distinguished men as instructors, who have conducted the academy very successfully. It has aided in preparing many for the different learned professions; has educated a large number of the ablest teachers in this section of the county, and inculcated a love for literary life in many homes in Oley and the surrounding townships. Of the many academies in the State called into existence thirty years ago, this is one of the few still open and whose present condition is better than its beginning.

Its principal instructors have been the following:

1857–58, Jacob H. Major.
the government during the late Civil War, amassing therefrom quite a fortune. He had as many as one hundred and fifty mules stabled at one time, waiting orders to ship to the army. North on the Oley pike Benneville Griesemer had a country store from 1840 till 1847. In the central part of the township Jacob Kemp had an old-time tavern about 1820, but which was discontinued more than thirty years ago. It was the first election-place of the township, and the polls were continued there after the tavern was closed.

GRIESEMERSVILLE is in the southeastern part, which took its name from the Griesemer family, which at one time owned about one thousand acres of land in that locality. Casper Griesemer was the great-grandfather of the elder Griesmers living in the township at present. He lived on the present Wellington Griesemer farm. One of his sons (Peter) resided a little west of the hamlet, and built a house there in 1782 which is still in use by his immediate descendants. Here also lived Samuel Goodman, who had the strength of a giant combined with the docility of a child. He served in the War of 1812-15, and the many feats which he performed appear almost incredible to the present generation. In that neighborhood several inns were kept at an early day. East of the Manatawny, on the present Henry Fisher farm, Fredrick Hill had a tavern which before him was kept by the Boyer family. It has been used as a farm-house for a long time. Nearer the present hamlet Nicholas Yeager sheltered man and beast in buildings which were closed to the public more than sixty years ago; and about the same time was discontinued the inn of George Focht, on the present High farm. Nearer the Oley Churches, on the present DeTurk farm, Enoch Griesemer had an inn, kept open until about forty years ago. This was, in its day, a noted house, and being on a principal thoroughfare, was well patronized. At the centre of the hamlet a brick hotel building, four stories high and sixty feet front, was erected by Peter D. Griesemer, in 1860, which has since been used as a public-house. At one time the building contained ninety rooms; but this number has been reduced by making several halls, which are used for public gatherings. In this building a store was also opened and the Griesemersville post-office established in 1870, kept by Peter D. Griesemer. A later postmaster was A. E. Fegley and the present is William Renno, the proprietor of the building. The store is kept by George S. Keiffer. Near this place is a mechanic-shop, carried on for the past fifty years by J. Spahn.

SPANGSVILLE, a post hamlet in the neighborhood of the old Oley Forge, derived its name from Jacob S. Spang, one of the owners of that industry, and who also merchandised there about sixty years ago. After his retirement Alexander Peacock was in trade, and subsequent merchants were, among others, George S. Keiffer, John Hartman, and the present, John B. Yingling. These have had charge of the Spangsville post-office, established in 1851, and which is at present supplied with a daily mail from Reading. For a number of years Jacob L. Griesemer has been the postmaster. It comprises a number of houses and shops, which may be classed as belonging to this hamlet. Near the Oley Churches Dr. E. E. Griesemer was in the active practice of his profession before his removal to Reading; and the present physician is Dr. A. N. Fegley, who has resided there the past sixteen years.

PLEASANTVILLE is not inappropriately named. It has a fine location on the Manatawny, near the Pike township line, and contains two churches, a store, taverns, shops and a dozen fine residences. Isaac Yoder was the founder of the place. About 1850 he erected part of the present tavern building, which he opened as a public-house. Soon afterward Abraham Cleaver began trading in the same building and later the house was used solely as an inn. It has been much enlarged by Evan Mensch, the present proprietor. In 1856 the Odd-Fellows belonging to Oley Lodge, No. 218, erected a fine three-story brick building, finishing it up in an attractive and substantial manner.

It was formally dedicated on Christmas day of that year. The lower story was fitted up for a business room and the upper stories formed a public hall, and one for the use of the lodges.

In 1873 the lodge was transferred to Boyertown and later to Reading, where its meetings are now held. In this building Ely & Yoder, Daniel Hoffman, Jacob F. Holder, H. K. Cleaver, and since 1874, F. R. Cleaver, have conducted a successful store business. Here is kept the Manatawny post-office, established in 1851, and on the Shanesville daily mail-route. Near this place Dr. Peter G. Bertolet practiced medicine a short time prior to his location at Friedensburg, and Albert Cleaver has had a saddlery on the place for many years. Pleasantville was erected into a separate school district in 1857, having been then taken out of Oley township.

FRIEDENSBURG is the largest and most prosperous village in the township, having now more than five hundred inhabitants. Though founded in 1831, the place has had the most of its growth within the past twenty years. Recently it has been beautified by the erection of costly and substantial buildings to a greater extent than in all its previous history. It contains the Oley Academy—an institution of learning of good repute—Friedens Church, an Evangelical Church, and stores, shops, etc. The name was suggested by Henry H. Maurer, and was derived from the Friedens Church, which was erected at this place in 1830. About the same time John A. Bertolet opened the tavern opposite the new church. Henry Dengler had opened a store some five years previous. The village was not regularly laid out. The buildings are mainly on the prominent road leading through the place. The original tavern building was enlarged by Peter Glase, who kept it for a long time. The present keeper is Oliver C. Miller. The second hotel was built in 1881 by S. H. Mensch and has since been occupied by him.

Henry Dengler continued his store in the long building until about 1832, when he occupied for some time in trade the building which is now the residence of Dr. J. Jack.

Near the same time, John K. and Malery Bertolet engaged for six years in business in part of the building which now forms the fine business house of John O. Glase. They were succeeded by Schnell & Laucks, and the latter by B. A. Glase, one of the most successful merchants in the county. His business is now carried on successfully by his son, John O. Glase. In 1860 David Baer built another business stand, which was occupied by William Baer, Calvin Whitner, Edwin Baer and P. L. Glase, the latter since 1884. John K. Bertolet and Jacob Day had other stores for short periods.

The post-office for this section of the township was established in 1828 with the name of Oley Furnace, which was afterward changed to Oley. The postmasters have been Henry Dengler, B. A. Glase, Edwin Baer, J. O. Glase and, for the past six months, George W. Yeager. It has a daily mail from Reading to Pikesville.

In the practice of the medical profession Dr. Francis Palm located here about 1820, continuing till his death, about 1850. Dr. Thomas Rutter came next, remaining several years; and Dr. Mark Kerr, for a short time, when he removed to Norristown. Dr. Henry Tyson came about 1844, and was a practitioner for six years, then removed to Reading; and Dr. Mengel, after a few years' practice, located in Schuykill County. Dr. Peter G. Bertolet was long, prominently and successfully identified with the medical interests of the township, and he was succeeded by Dr. J. A. Jock. Other physicians are Dr. George E. M. Herbst and Dr. William F. Hertzog, the latter locating within the past year.

The principal industry in the village is the coach-making establishment of W. H. Butterweck, carried on since 1872. He occupies a two-story building, and produces light work, and employs seven hands. Northeast of the village is the old and well-known machine-shop, operated by a small water-power, chiefly on repair-work, which is a great accommodation to the people of Oley. It has been carried on by Martin Yoder. In 1886 the principal tradesmen of Friedensburg were: Wheelwright and blacksmiths, Edwin Lorah, J. Hoock and E. Yoder; marble cutters, William Schollengerber and George Brownmiller; saddler, George W. Yeager; tinsmith, Jonas Carl; cabinet makers, Uriah A. Schlegel and Amos Rothermel; shoemakers, David Deihl, Samuel Angstadt and Daniel Angstadt; tailor, John Himmelreich.

Societies.

RINGGOLD COUNCIL, No. 23, ORDER OF AMERICAN MECHANICS, was instituted at Friedensburg April 28, 1858. At present it has sixty-eight members.

MINNEHAHA LODGE, No. 154, KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS, was instituted January 9, 1869, and in 1885 had one hundred and twenty-two members.

Both the above orders own and meet in a very fine hall, converted out of the David Baer residence in 1884, and they have a flourishing existence.

AMITY TOWNSHIP.

The first settlements in the county were made by Swedes along the eastern bank of the Schuylkill, in the locality of Douglassville. In 1701 Andrew Rudman, clerk, in behalf of himself and several of his countrymen, the Swedes, who were desirous of making a new settlement in the province of Pennsylvania, made application to William Penn for the privilege of taking up ten thousand acres of land on the river Schuylkill, near Maunatawny Creek. Penn, in pursuance of this application, issued a warrant on October 21, 1701, to Edward Pennington, forthwith to lay out ten thousand acres, which were to begin about six hundred perches up the Schuylkill from the upper line of the German's land (meaning Sprogell's manor, afterwards called McCall's manor), and to extend backward from the river ten miles with the said German's land, if convenient. The following-named Swedes then took up lands, the earliest survey having been made on October 21, 1701, and patents having been issued during the years 1704 and 1705:

Acrelius, in his "History of New Sweden," says that "when Penn came to Pennsylvania the second time he offered the Swedes ten thousand acres of land in Manathanim, sixty miles higher up in the country, under the pretext that they might have more room and live together. But the upshot was to get their homes for his Quakers, and few, therefore, accepted of the offer." The Swedes named are the few referred to by him.

In a letter from the Swedes to John Thelin, postmaster at Göteborg, dated in 1693, they asked for two ministers to come over and administer to them and also for certain religious books; they also represented,—"We live in great amity with the Indians, who have not done us any harm for many years." From this circumstance the Swedes, who afterward settled farther north, called their settlement "Amity." Their letter was answered by Archbishop Suenblius, upon the recommendation of King Charles, of Sweden, and the two ministers and books asked for were sent to them. One of the ministers was Andrew Rudman, of Gestricia, who, upon his arrival on June 24, 1697, selected the congregation at Wicoco, in Philadelphia, which included Manathanim [Manatawny].

OLD SWEDE'S BUILDING.—On the eastern bank of the Schuylkill, at the bridge near Douglassville, a small two-story stone building is still standing in a good state of preservation, though erected one hundred and seventy years ago. Its dimensions are thirty-six by twenty-one feet. A soft yellow shale stone tablet is built in the front wall, between the windows of the second story which face the river, and bears the following inscription: Such inscriptions were commonly made by similar stones are found on buildings in Bucks County. The upper letter indicated the initial of the husband's name; the lower letter to the left the initial of the husband's given name, and to the right that of the wife's, and the figures indicated the time of erection. This inscription indicates that the building was erected by Mounce Jones and Ingabo, his wife, in 1716. He took up one of the Swedes' tracts of land, on which this building is situated, on October 21, 1701, and the patent was issued to him on May 15, 1705. At that point of the river there was a ford. It was used for many years till 1833, when a private bridge was erected by a stock company. Previous to 1820 the building had been used for some years as a tavern, and went by the name of "Lamb's Inn."

Soon after the Swedes had effected permanent settlements on their lands they felt the want of roads. In March, 1709, they, with other settlers, who occupied lands lower down the river, presented a petition to court at Philadelphia. They represented that they had plantations lying very remote in the country, and in the edge or outskirts of any inhabitants in the county and that it was very difficult for them to pass and re-pass unto their plantations, because there was no public road laid out far enough; they therefore prayed for viewers to lay out a road from the late house of Edward Lane, deceased, being on the Queen’s Highway, unto Manitaia. This petition was signed by Mons Jones. Andrew Leichken.

Jesta Jestison. Henry Parker.
John Jones. Hübter Hüberton.

The court appointed Mouns Jones, Walter Newman, Matthew Brooks, Andrew Lyson, John Justice and James Brooks, or any four of them, to lay out the road and report at the next session. This report could not be found, and it is believed that the road was not laid out.

TOWNSHIP ERECTED.—About 1719 an application was made to erect the Swedes’ tracts, together ten thousand five hundred acres in area, into a township to be called “Amity.” The survey was made by George Boone, Esq. The application was granted; the township was erected, and a constable and other necessary township officers were appointed, but no record was made of the proceedings and the application had to be renewed twenty-five years afterward.

The petition was presented at Philadelphia on March 3, 1744, and signed by the following persons:

Gilbert Dehart.

William Nelson.
John Campbell.
Owen Richard.

This was the first township erected in the district now comprised in Berks County.

In 1717 another petition was presented for a public road from Oley to the King’s Highway. At December sessions the court appointed the following viewers: John Rhodes, Thomas McCarty, Andrew Robeson, Matthew Brooks, James Brooks and Matthias Bowman. The road was laid out forty feet wide and confirmed at December sessions, 1719. It is the direct road from Pleasantville, by way of Yellow House, to Amityville.

In June, 1718, Andrew Robeson applied for a road from Perkiomen Creek, through Lower and Upper Limerick and the Frankford tracts, to the upper part of Amity. William Harman, John Jacob, Matthew Holgate, Thomas Strond, John Redgedar and Matthew Brooks were appointed viewers. The Perkiomen turnpike occupies the road laid out by them. The name “Amity,” to designate locality, was first used in this petition.

The following list comprises the names of the taxables (thirty-seven) of the township in 1734, and the quantity of land upon which they paid quit-rent:

In 1741 the number of taxables returned was seventy.

years; and for a longer period of time the Schracks had a mill near the mouth of the creek, which is now carried on by Isaac Moyer.

On the Manatawny, the lower power in the township was made to operate grist and over-mills for the Boone family, which, like the owners, have passed away. Thomas Boone died at that place. Lida Schull built the present three-story brick mill about 1850, which replaced the old stone and frame mill. Isaac F. March and Isaac Fegley also owned the property, which now belongs to M. Rhoads. The old Ose Sands mill was next above,—an old structure with the lower part stone and a frame superstructure. Solomon Rhoads re-modeled the mill, which was destroyed by fire July 7, 1855. The present brick mill was built on the site the same year, and as the property of Mahlon Weidner, was supplied with new process machinery in 1884. The old stone mill of John S. Bertolet, at the next site, was rebuilt by John Rhoads, but is now the property of John Hiest. Near the Earl line David Rhoads had a paper-mill, Jacob Weaver a grist-mill, and seventy years ago an oil-mill was put up at the same place. After a number of years elapsed the grist-mill only remained which is now operated by James High.

The Monocacy Valley Creamery was built, in 1881, by George K. Lorah, James B. McLane, Cyrus Moser, Alfred Gross, Ammon Kline, Jacob Guldin and M. L. Lorah. There are sixty-five patrons, and the creamery is carried on by the association, under the superintendency of Jacob F. Guldin.

CHURCHES.

MOLATTON CHURCH.—Next after a public road the Swedes considered the necessity of a meeting-house for their religious well-being. They erected a log house for this purpose several years before 1720. It was called the "Swedes' Church."

It stood near the eastern line of the St. Gabriel's Church property, at Douglassville, about twenty paces south from the turnpike. The door-way faced toward the east. The dimensions of the building were about twenty-four by thirty feet, one story in height.
Conferences between the Indians and the government officials of the province, which are referred to in the Colonial Records, were held in this meeting-house. It was the first house for worship erected in the large area of territory now included within the limits of Berks County, and it was used for this purpose for many years. It took fire in some unaccountable way during a cold winter night in the year 1831 and was entirely destroyed. For some years previously it had been used for school purposes. Some of the teachers were Francis R. Shunk (afterwards Governor of Pennsylvanias), Mrs. Jacob Warren, Abraham Bannan (father of the distinguished editor and political economist, Benjamin Bannan, of Pottsville), Henry McKenty and William Mendenhall. The building was burned whilst the last-named carried on the school. The private schools kept there by the persons named were very successful. Upwards of fifty scholars attended during a term. Desks were arranged along the walls. The backs of the scholars were toward the teacher, who had his desk and seat situated in the centre of the room. The heat was supplied by a large wood-stove. The tuition was four cents a day, or two dollars and a half for three months. The branches of education comprised spelling, reading, writing and arithmetic. Very few scholars were taught grammar and none geography.

A meeting of members from all parts of the Wicocoa congregation was held on Sunday, March 27, 1720, to determine the arrangements for the services and support of the two pastors (Lidman and Hesselius). Many attendants from Manathanim were present. They represented that they had always held to the Wicocoa congregation and had contributed their share for the building of the church and for the support of the minister and church, and therefore prayed that Hesselius should dwell among them and exercise his office for their spiritual edification. Upon this application he went up to them. The following year he complained that his hearers were few and unable to support him. He was the first settled pastor at Molattont. Rev. Gabriel Falk was the second resident pastor. The earliest records of the congregation were begun by him in 1735. No record of the previous years has been found. In the beginning of his career at Molattont, Falk succeeded in erecting a log church, which was begun in 1736 and completed in 1737. It is believed that a church had previously stood here for about twenty years. The land on which the church building stood was obtained from Andrew Robeson.

In 1742 and for some years afterward the Moravians made efforts to get possession of the congregation. Zinzendorf, who came to Pennsylvania in 1742, brought with him a number of spiritual co-laborers, and they together made earnest efforts to gather new believers from different religious denominations. A young Swede was sent to this place, and having won over to him some Swedish, English, Irish and German people, tried, with their help, to take possession of this church. Services were announced by him to take place on a certain day. On this day the regular pastor (Falk) went early to the church and in the pulpit awaited the arrival of the young emissary. Upon his arrival, after the people had assembled, Falk (who was an old man) went from the pulpit to meet him, and said: “You enter the sheep-fold as a thief and murderer,” and then gave him a heavy blow on the mouth. Before a fight arose the members separated them. The Moravians obtained a foot-hold through the absence of Falk, who was not always at home, and could not win over the people to himself as the young Swede did. But they did not remain long in this field. The practical results of their labors amongst other congregations ended in discord.

A third resident pastor was John Abraham Lindenius, who was sent by Acrelius, near the close of 1752, to reside at Molatton. Falk having left in 1745, the congregation had no regular pastor for the following seven years. During that time Muhlenberg preached to them repeatedly. Lindenius remained till the spring of 1755. He was the last Swedish pastor at Molatton.

Rev. Muhlenberg continued his occasional visits at Molatton till August, 1761. From the beginning till that time the congregation was Lutheran in denomination and only Lutheran pastors officiated. Soon afterward it became connected with the Protestant Episcopal Church. This change was effected through applications to the “English Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts” for assistance in carrying on religious work at Molatton. Rev. Alexander Murray was sent by this society as a missionary to live at Reading and form a congregation there, and also to minister to the congregation at Molatton. He arrived in 1762. He reported (April 9, 1763) the membership of the congregation to consist of thirty-six families and two hundred and thirty-two persons, of whom sixty-five were under seven years of age; also that there was then a ruinous kind of a church there, “built of logs or rough timber about thirty years ago by the Swedes, and as a great part of the congregation there consisted of these, I have been hitherto allowed the use of it, but it matters very little whether I am or not for the future, as it will cost as much to repair it as it would to build a new one of like materials and dimensions.” In January, 1764, he reported twenty-nine families and one hundred and eighty-five persons, and added, “I can no more prevail on that people than these in town [meaning Reading] to engage heartily in any scheme for building a church; so I despair of seeing one erected in either of the places for some time to come.”

St. Gabriel’s Church.—Shortly after the arrival of Rev. Alexander Murray, in 1762, he succeeded in having a vestry chosen to officiate for the Episcopal congregation at Molatton.

This organization was effected in April, 1763. In 1765 the congregation erected a log church of hewn timber, near by to the west of the “Swedes’ Church,” and continued to occupy it till 1801, when they demolished it and built a stone structure. This latter building is still standing, having been in use over four-score years.

In 1880 measures were taken to erect a new church, in which the rector, Rev. John Long, was particularly earnest and successful. A building committee was appointed, consisting of Rev. Mr. Long, John Y. Yocum and Jeremiah Yocum, and Mr. Henry Messchert, a resident of the vicinity, generously donated a fine lot of ground for the purpose. Work was commenced in June, 1880; on the 19th of October following, the corner-stone was laid, and on January 23, 1884, the building was consecrated. The liberality of John Crouse towards encouraging and completing this church improvement is worthy of special mention. A small, neat spire, eighty-five feet high, is constructed at the lower front angle. It contains a clear-toned bell, weighing nineteen hundred pounds. The total cost was nearly twenty-one thousand dollars.

1 The members of the Molatton congregation decided, at a meeting, April 28, 1758, to obtain the canons of the Church of England, “in order that their affairs might be attended to in an orderly and Christianlike manner.” This having been done, it was afterward decided to ask the “Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Lands,” in England, to supply them with a minister. Such a request was made July 13, 1760, and again at a general meeting April 17, 1761. Under the direction of this society the Rev. Alexander Murray assumed a pastoral care of the missions at Molatton and Reading in November, 1762.

The interior is finished and furnished in a most pleasing manner. Beautiful memorial windows enhance the attractive appearance of the auditorium. The building is also supplied with an organ of twenty stops, a large furnace for heating purposes, and gas, which is generated upon the premises.

The first Sunday-school was organized during the pastorate of Rev. George Mintzer in a barn near by, and comprised scholars who are citizens of the townships and members of the church. A Sunday-school is conducted in the old church building. The membership of the Sunday-school is sixty, and of the congregation, seventy-two.

A burying-ground is attached to the old church building, and contains the oldest grave-stones in the county, one of which—that of Andrew Robeson—is still legible.

During the ministry of Rev. Edmund Leaf a parsonage was erected at Douglassville at a cost of three thousand dollars. Rev. Alexander Murray officiated as rector from 1762 till the Revolution; afterward he served the congregation again from 1790 to 1792. The succeeding ministers were,—

ST. PAUL’S CHURCH (Reformed and Lutheran) is situated at Amityville, and occupies a very fine and conspicuous position. The earliest members first worshipped at Molatton Church, but after the change which took place there a central locality was sought upon which to build a church for themselves. A small tract of land at the intersection of three important roads was selected, and eleven rods purchased from the Boyer estate, and there they erected, in 1753, a log building, which served for both church and school purposes; it was used until 1796, and then a new church was substituted. The small church lot was enlarged by the purchase of three acres and thirty-six rods of land from the farm of Philip Boyer, and upon part of it a log school-house was built, which was used until 1839. Having determined to build a new church of stone, a subscription list was started February 14, 1795, in which the amounts pledged ranged from three pounds down to a shilling, and when seven hundred and thirty-eight pounds had been promised, building operations were commenced in the spring of the same year.

This house was to be used alternately by the congregations, and it was provided that all denominational differences "should be settled in a Christian-like manner, so as to promote the worship of God and the honor of the Saviour." The corner-stone was laid September 18, 1795, the clergy present being the Revs. Carl Frederick Wildbahn and Daniel Lehman, Lutheran; the Revs. Philip Pauli and William Ingold, Reformed. At that time the vestry was composed of Jacob Roth and George Fuss, Lutheran; and Jacob Hoerner and Michael Ludwig, Reformed. The building committee was George Lorah and Matthias Roth; the mason was Carl Boyer and the carpenter Jacob Gerber. The church was completed in 1796 at a cost of two thousand three hundred and twenty-five dollars, but was not consecrated until the following year. It was covered with cedar shingles, and most of the lumber used was brought from Orwigsburg. The building of the church was a great burden, and it was not fully paid until 1816.

The corner-stone of the present (or third) church was laid August 12, 1872, and a little more than a year later (August 16 and 17, 1873) the consecration took place. It is an imposing edifice, with a steeple one hundred and twenty feet high, which is visible many miles in the surrounding country. It has a seating capacity of eight hundred. The bell in the steeple weighs two thousand pounds.

The building committee was John Frooes, George Lorah, David Horner, Joshua Fulmer and David Rhoads.

South of the church a large new cemetery was opened in 1860. It has been much beautified and contains a large number of fine monuments. It is controlled by the consistory.
For many years the services of the congregations were exclusively in German, and as the English-speaking element developed and the demand for preaching in that language was unheeded, a separate English Lutheran congregation was formed in 1841, and carried on services in the school-house, with Rev. J. L. Schoch as pastor. In 1844 this congregation put up a small, plain brick church, which served them as a place of worship until the members again connected themselves with the old church. Mr. Schoch's ministry continued until after 1850, when the Rev. J. A. Brown preached for a short time. Meantime, in 1848, the Rev. Geo. F. Miller, pastor of the Old Lutheran congregation, commenced holding English services every four weeks,—a custom which was also followed by the German Reformed pastor—thus removing the principal cause which led to the formation of a new church, and afterward it was deemed inadvisable to keep up a separate organization. The building has since been used stately as a place of worship by a small congregation of the sect called the United Brethren. It is held in trust for the Lutherans by Ezekiel Rhoads, surviving trustee of the congregation. Prior to the building of this house an English Sabbath-school was established in the school-house, which later held its meetings in the new church, and, under the superintendence of Ezekiel Rhoads, was so prosperous that it threatened the vitality of the old Sunday-school, causing that body also to encourage the use of English in its school.

The first English Sunday-school has maintained its existence since its organization, and is still in a flourishing condition. This Sunday-school is now one of seven schools maintained by the congregations, which together have an aggregate attendance of nine hundred scholars, and the exercises in all of them are exclusively English.

The services of both congregations were almost wholly in the German language until 1848, when English preaching was introduced and the services increased to twice per month; and a few years later they became alternate with the German. Since the organization of the congregations the following have been the Lutheran pastors:

1758, H. M. Muhlenberg.
1761, John H. Schaum.
1767, John L. Voight.
1778, A. Gerresheim.
1788, Christian Striet.
1789, John F. Weiland.
1799, Carl F. Wildbahn.
1801, Henry A. Geidenheimer.

The congregation has a membership of nearly five hundred.

The pastors of the Reformed congregation for the same period were,— 1791, John C. Gobrecht.

1791-96, John W. Ingold.
1804-40, Fred. Herman.
1840-44, H. S. Bassler.
1844-49, Samuel Seivert.
1850-55, John H. Leinbach.
1856-60, L. S. Strassburger.
1864-69, J. H. Dubbs.
1869-80, D. Leberman.
1880, John H. Leinbach.

A membership of four hundred was reported in 1885.

The United Brethren congregation, worshiping in the small brick church at Amityville is weak numerically, and has not been able to maintain regular services. In 1885 the number of members did not exceed twenty and no regular organization was reported.

VILLAGES.

Weavertown is the oldest business point in the township. Half a century ago it was more important, relatively, than at present. It has twenty buildings, which are but a few more in number than the place had sixty years ago. It took its name from Jacob Weaver, on whose farm the village was laid out, and who lived on the present William K. Lorah place, where he died. The house he occupied was partly of stone and logs, and served as a pioneer inn. After it was abandoned for that purpose, an inn was opened in a log house farther up the road, which was last kept by Henry Yerger, a number of landlords having been his predecessors. The first settlers were nearly all German mechanics. Ludwig Spiese had a small store for a time. Henry Wiebeck was a shoemaker; Adam Knauer, tailor; Michael Klinger, luter; John Bridenbaugh, cooper; David Dehart, shoemaker; Henry Yerger, clock-maker; and old blind man, named Hatfield, basket-maker, who peddled his wares about the country. Henry Auman was a German teacher, who conducted schools at the church at Amityville and at the Yellow House. In the last years of his life he taught at his house, in Weavertown. In 1853 Daniel Lorah built a store-house, which he occupied, and it has been a place of business ever since, the merchant at present occupying it being A. S. Strassburger.

The post-office at this place was established in 1828, with the name of Brumfieldville, in compliment to Jesse Brumfield, the first postmaster, who had the office at his residence, half a mile from the hamlet. For a long time the office was kept at the house of Henry Auman, the old school-teacher. The present postmaster is Milton Schaeffer. A daily mail from Reading is supplied.

The Sabbath-school chapel was built in 1879, and the neat brick school-house in 1876, both being very creditable buildings.

The Union Sunday-school Chapel at Weavertown, was erected, in 1879, on a lot donated for that purpose by William K. Lorah. It is a neat frame building, and cost twelve hundred and twenty-eight dollars.

The Sunday-school occupying this house was organized May 19, 1867, and has since been maintained. It has eighty members and a library of two hundred volumes.

Amityville is a beautifully located village, on the Amity turnpike leading to the Yellow House, a little east of the centre of the township. It contains two churches, school-house, hotels, store and several mechanic-shops. A number of fine residences adorn the place. This locality was called "New Storeville" as early as 1782, on account of a new store having been established there by Ludwig Spiese, who first began trading at Weavertown. In 1818 Adam Miller was also in trade at both places. Later, his son-in-law, John Yocum, built a new store-stand, where he traded some ten years, about 1850. J. M. Manger has been in trade the past few years. He is the postmaster of the Athol post-office, established January 23, 1885, and which has a daily mail on the Boyertown route. About 1852 the name New Storeville was abandoned. The place has since been called Amityville. In the beginning of the century a man named Luther had a public-house near the angle of the roads, where is now the Schaeffer residence, the building being a quaint log structure, and the sign having a coon painted on it, whence it was called the "Coon's Nest." Luther was a coffee-mill maker and had a small shop where he carried on that business. In 1840, J. J. Wagner located here as a cabinet-maker and undertaker; also followed the carpenter's trade. He has built most of the houses in the place. In the former business he was succeeded by his son, Henry B., who maintains a shop. In 1858, William Yocum a wheelwright shop and the Pottses afterwards also engaged at that trade, their shops being still carried on.

Near Amityville, Dr. R. B. Rhoads established a nursery, which is continued by B. J. Rhoads, and is the only industry of this nature in that part of the county.

Physicians.—In 1840, Dr. John F. Baum resided near Yellow House, and in the same neighborhood was Dr. Mark Darrah, each having had a large practice. Dr. Elias C. Kitchen located between Amityville and Weavertown, and has, for a number of years, been in active practice. On the same road, north, are located as physicians, Doctors D. McLane and Ira Moser, both being recent graduates. At Amityville lived, for a number of years as a successful practitioner, Dr. Reuben B. Rhoads, who has now become a citizen of Boyertown.

The cause of education found many warm friends in Amity at an early day, and as early as 1820 Samuel Boyer had a private English school, which was well patronized. In 1842 S. L. Rhoads established an academy, which flourished until 1852, when the free schools seem to supply the wants for schools of that nature, and it was then discontinued. The present school-house was built in 1869, and is a large brick building with an attractive exterior. In the summer months it is conducted as the Amity Seminary by J. C. Holloway.

Amity Library Association.—On January
12, 1878, a meeting was held to discuss the advisability of forming a library association, which should be auxiliary to and be governed by a literary society; and then a committee was appointed to report on the organization of such a body. A week later another meeting was held, the society organized and officers elected.

An unlimited number of shares of stock in the Library Association were offered at one dollar per share, and were so freely taken that the nucleus of a library was very soon gathered. To this, additions were made from time to time until, in March, 1886, the library contained five hundred volumes of standard books and about two hundred volumes of public documents. A library-room has been fitted up in the old school-house at Amityville, and since its organization the association has been faithfully kept up.

Washington Camp No. 213, P. O. S. of A., was instituted at Amityville (Athol) May 7, 1874. In 1885 it had forty members, and held its meetings in a neat hall in the Stettler House. The camp has about five hundred dollars in its treasury and twelve hundred dollars invested in real estate.

Earlville is a post hamlet two miles north from Amityville, on the line of Earl township. It derived its name when the post-office was established, in 1838. Until that time the locality was called Klinesville, after Jacob Klins, who opened a public-house there about 1800, and a store twenty years later. These interests have since been continued, the property being owned in later years by Isaac G. Stettler, and whose heirs still control it. The office has a daily mail on the Boyertown route.

Yellow House is a similar hamlet on the Oley line, on the turnpike from Douglassville, and derived its name from a country tavern at that point, kept by the Nagles, which was painted yellow. It became widely known by this name and when the post-office was established, in 1866, it took the same name. The hotel and store were long the property of the Guldin family. A creamery was lately erected here by W. D. Kehl.

Douglassville is a station on Philadelphia and Reading and Pennsylvania Railroads. Few stations on these great railways are so highly favored in the matter of depot accommodations as this place. It is the railway point of large sections of country, north and south of the river. The village contains the handsome St. Gabriel's Episcopal Church, some fine residences, a forge, two stores and a hotel. After the removal of some of the early Swedish settlers, Jacob Warren, by trade a carpenter, became the owner of some lands here and built several houses, one of which was afterward known as the Ludwig mansion, and the place became locally known as Warrensburg. Failing in business, his property passed into other hands. George Douglass, having become an extensive land-owner along the river, including the old Jones house, the hamlet was called Douglassville; and with this name the post-office was established in March, 1829.

For many years the office was kept by Dr. Michael Ludwig, Theodore, his son, and L. B. Holloway, the latter from 1865 to January, 1886, when George S. Reed was appointed. There are five mails per day. In this old building George Douglass once carried on business, and in the next building below was an inn, called the "White Horse Tavern." Another inn was opened by Jacob Rahu, called the "Black Horse Tavern," and which, in an enlarged and improved condition, is continued, by Samuel Van Reed, as the Douglassville Hotel. In this building Henry McKenty opened a store and also followed his occupation as a tailor. The room has been much enlarged and occupied by L. B. Holloway, Charles Hine and the present John H. Egolf in transacting a general mercantile business. McKenty also built the large residence which is now the Egolf mansion. In 1877 a Union Co-operative Store was started by the Patrons of Husbandry of this section, in the old Ludwig building, which was continued a few years under the management of E. H. Prutzman. The directors controlling the store were D. B. Mauger, H. P. Leaf and J. Y. Yocum, as officers. The same building has also been used for hotel purposes. Walter and David Young are dealers in lumber and coal.
About seventy years ago Dr. James May was here as a physician. In 1823 Dr. Michael Ludwing succeeded him and practiced many years. When the latter first became a practitioner here, his ride extended over territory which is now occupied by fifteen doctors. Dr. William Jones was also long in practice and was succeeded by Dr. Franklin Gerhart.

Washington Camp, No. 240, P. O. S. of A., was instituted at Douglassville July 15, 1877, with fourteen members. In 1885 twenty were reported. The camp has about two-hundred and fifty dollars in its treasury, and though not strong numerically, is fairly prosperous.

Monocacy Station, on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, is a small hamlet, eleven and a half miles below Reading. It derives its name from Monocacy Hill, in that locality. A post-office was established in 1872. It contains a public-house, a store and a half-dozen residences.

Biographical Sketches.

Ezekiel Rhoads.—The ancestors of the Rhoads family arrived in Pennsylvania about 1710. An allusion is made to them in a manuscript history of Oley township, which is now in the Pennsylvania Historical Society, at Philadelphia, to this effect:

"About 1725 three brothers named Rhoads, or Roth, also prospected this section of country for a home. As they threaded their way through Oley, one day, they halted at the beautiful spring, where now stands the farm-house of Jacob K. Kaufman, near the Yellow House. . . . They finally took up land on the All Sort range, in Amity, and settled thereon, and many families of that name have descended from them, some of whom are still in possession of the ancestral estates."

Ezekiel Rhoads was the son of Samuel and Elizabeth Rhoads, grandson of Jacob and the great-grandson of Jacob, one of the three brothers mentioned. He was born in Amity township January 26, 1810. In his fifteenth year he became an orphan, and, at the same age, he was confirmed and admitted to full membership in the Evangelical Lutheran Church at Amityville, then under the ministration of the Rev. Conrad Miller. Owing to the early death of his parents, the lad attended school but six months in his life. His guardian, David Ludwing, hired him to John A. Bertolote, of Oley township, at the wages of four dollars per month for services which now would be valued at twelve dollars per month. On October 1, 1825, he was apprenticed for a term of two and a half years to Jacob Coleman, of Amity, to learn the tailoring trade, often working from four o'clock in the morning until eleven at night during the winter season. This period of his life instilled into young Rhoads those habits of industry and steady application which have clung to him and are part of his characteristics, even in his old age. In 1828 he went to Trappe, in Montgomery County, where he followed his trade as a journeyman for a year, and in 1829 removed to Reading where he was employed with Joseph Wanner until 1831, when he removed to Amity township, on a tract of land containing thirty-eight acres, on the Manatawny Creek. This land he inherited at a valuation of one thousand eight hundred and sixty dollars. This, with two hundred dollars in cash which he had saved from his earnings, constituted his start in life. Mr. Rhoads here followed tailoring, then purchased forty-three and a half acres adjoining the inherited tract. In 1833 he purchased twenty acres additional at one hundred dollars per acre, having then in all one hundred and a half acres. Shortly afterward he acquired, by purchase, a tract of forty-three acres, and one of thirty-four acres, having then in all one hundred and seventy-eight and a half acres. From 1831 to 1838 he conducted tailoring in addition to farming, employing five hands at the former business. In the year last named he began to devote his entire energies to farming.

Mr. Rhoads during all this time was a public-spirited citizen, ever favoring and aiding public enterprises. He was one of the original shareholders of the National Union Bank of Reading. He holds stock in the National Bank of Norristown, and in the Yellow House and Douglassville Turnpike Company, and one-fourth scholarship in Franklin and Marshall College. From the date of his admission married to Susanna K. Bertolette, daughter of John A. Bertolette, of Oley township. They have had eight children, two of whom died in infancy. His wife was stricken with paralysis and died February 28, 1875, in her forty-fourth year.

Calvin B. Rhoads, the oldest son, was married to Camilla Johnson, of Norristown; he removed to Wilmington, Del., in 1873, and in 1885 was elected mayor of that city.

In 1885 he accepted the superintendency of the Locustdale Sunday-school, between Yellow House and Earlville. He has never faltered in the diligent study of the Scriptures.

In politics Mr. Rhoads has always been a Democrat. In 1860 he supported Stephen A. Douglas for President of the United States. He has remained a firm Democrat, and has always been an advocate of sound political principles.

Ezekiel Rhoads is a man of marked traits of character, of irreproachable honesty and the strictest integrity. He is dignified in his bearing, affable in his manners and highly revered by the community in which he lives.

Henry K. Bechtel, of Exeter township, and now resides in Reading. By these six children Mr. Rhoads has sixteen grandchildren living.

After his wife's death Mr. Rhoads ceased farming and lived with his son Franklin, who succeeded him. He resides with his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel L. Rhoads, at Yellow House, where he lives at the present time, surrounded by all the bright and cheerful influences of a charming domestic circle. He confines his energies to the performance of religious, private and social duties, and has come to be affectionately called grandfather by all the people of his neighborhood. He is yet in the full vigor of health and possesses a genial and happy disposition.

William Yocom was born on the old Yocom homestead, in Amity township, January 23, 1817. His father was Moses Yocom, born at the same place October 11, 1786, and died August 30, 1850. William Yocom’s mother was Susanna Weaver, a daughter of Jacob and Anna Weaver, who were the parents of Peter Weaver, who was the father of Colonel Jeremiah Weaver. Susanna Yocom, mother of William Yocom, was born August 18, 1791, and died May 19, 1872. William Yocom’s grandfather was John Yocom and was also born on the old homestead (now the Casselbury farm), in the year 1749, and died October 14, 1823.

Jonas Yocom, the great-grandfather of William Yocom, was a Swede, and came with the Swedes to this country late in the seventeenth century, and settled with the colony at the Wissahickon, near Philadelphia, with two other brothers. Later some of the Swedes settled on the left bank of the Schuylkill River, at what is now Douglassville, but two miles south from Mr. Yocom's residence, where the old stone house, built in 1716, still stands. The name was first spelled "Joom," then "Yocom" and now "Yocom." Moses Yocom had three farms in Amity township.

William Yocom obtained a common-school education; worked on farm with his father. In January, 1834, he was apprenticed to John Bunn at cabinet-making and served three years, and pursued it two years. He became highly respected and still is held in high esteem by all who know him. He was elected to numerous township offices; was a school director when Jesse G. Hawley, Esq., editor of the Reading Daily Eagle, first taught school, and served three terms.

In 1867-68 the Douglassville and Yellow House turnpike road was constructed and Mr. Yocom elected its first superintendent, and also ever since its construction its treasurer; is president of the Berks County Mutual Fire Insurance Company for the last ten years, and since 1870 a director of the National Bank of Pottstown; is trustee, guardian, assignee, executor and administrator of estates. His farm, which he still cultivate, contains two hundred acres; it lies between Amityville and Douglassville, and was formerly known as the "Jones homestead." His son's name is William B. Yocom. He has his second wife, who was Miss Mary B. Kline, daughter of George Kline, and was in later years a prominent merchant at Earlville, Berks county, Pa., and has one son, William B. Yocom.

George K. Lorah was born on a farm in Amity township January 14, 1823. John Lorah, his great-grandfather, emigrated from France during the time of the persecution of the Huguenots, about 1710. The deed for a tract of two hundred and sixty-seven and one-half acres of land he purchased in Amity township is dated June 1, 1740. John Lorah died in 1868 (?) leaving two sons, George and John, and three daughters. George Lorah was born in 1745. He held the office of county commissioner of Berks County for three years; was also appointed a justice of the peace for Amity township and held the office until he died, August 1, 1823, leaving three sons—John, George and Daniel—and three daughters. John, the eldest, moved to Ohio, and died there about 1845. George, the second son, lived in Cumru township, Berks County, and died there in 1840. Daniel, the third son, was born February 20, 1779, in Amity township. He was very prominent in the church and in political matters, and filled various offices.

He owned the farm previously owned by his father and grandfather; it is now owned by John Lorah, brother of George K. Lorah. He died September 8, 1853, leaving four sons—William, John, George and Augustus—and seven daughters. The sons reside in Amity township, except Augustus, who lives in Pottstown. The mother, Hannah Knabb, was a descendant of a prominent family of Oley township.

George K. Lorah obtained his education in a subscription school in Amityville, until he was eighteen years old, taught by Samuel Boyer, an efficient teacher. He worked on the farm of his father until 1843, when he engaged in teaching a subscription school in Colebrookdale township; then taught one year in Amity township and was a clerk in the mercantile business for eighteen months. In 1847 he engaged in farming land which he afterwards inherited from his father, and by purchases since has now in all one hundred and sixty-nine acres. September 23, 1847, he married Wilhelmina De Turk, daughter of Jacob De Turk, also a descendant of the Huguenots. She was prominent in church-work, in which she always took great interest. She was born October 16, 1825, and died September 21, 1880. Mr. Lorah has always taken a prominent part in the church and in political matters; held the office of deacon and elder in the Reformed Church at Amityville; was also one of the building committee for the erection of the present church there.

Mr. Lorah was at various times elected school director, and served as a mercantile appraiser for the year 1858. In 1861 he was elected county commissioner. During the time of the Civil War, by reason of which it was often difficult to act upon subjects brought before the board, asking for relief for the families of soldiers during their absence at the seat of war, and for the payment of bounties to men willing to enlist, to fill the different quotas of the county, and which required appropriations of large sums of money, upon the propriety or the right of which people greatly differed, the commissioners took the responsibility to act in accordance with their best judgment, and were abundantly sustained by the people, and the county debt thereby created has since all been cheerfully paid by the tax-payers of the county.

He held the office of justice of the peace from 1865 to 1880. He then resigned the office in order to accept the office of Representative in the Legislature of Pennsylvania, to which position he was elected in November, 1880, for the term of two years, and served during the session of 1881 faithfully and with credit to himself and his constituents. In the fall of 1882 he was re-elected, and served in the extra session of 1883 to the entire credit of himself and those he represented. At the expiration of his term, in December, 1884, he was appointed a notary public. In 1886 the citizens of his township again elected him justice of the peace.

He is the secretary of the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Berks County, which position he has held since December, 1864. Through his excellent and careful management the company has been very successful, increasing their insurance from two million five hundred thousand dollars to eight million dollars. He is also president of the Douglassville and Yellow House Turnpike Company, and a director of the Oley Valley and Lehigh Railroad Company; also a director of the Penn National Bank of Reading, and secretary and treasurer of the Monocacy Bridge Company; also president of the Monocacy Valley Creamery Association. He has had the settlement of a large number of estates as executor, administrator or assignee, and held many positions as trustee and guardian of minor children, enjoying the general confidence and esteem of all who know him.

Philip Ludwig was born in Amity township, March 10, 1759, and carried on farming. He was actively interested in the building of the first substantial Amity Church, having been one of the prominent members of that congregation. He was married to Anna Dehart, born August 16, 1769, and died December 25, 1825. He died February 5, 1827, and left seven children,—Abraham, Thomas (married to Mary A. Schaeffer), Jacob (married to Sarah Spang), Benjamin, Mary (married to George Moser), Ellen (married first to a Nein, and afterward to Wesley Stern), and Rachel (married Daniel Deeter and moved West).

Abraham Ludwig was born in Amity township, on the homestead, March 7, 1788. He was educated at the "Molatton School" and subsequently carried on farming. He was mar-

Elam M. Ludwig, a prominent and successful breeder of fine blooded horses, is a descendant of Michael Ludwig, who emigrated from Germany to Pennsylvania, having sailed in the ship called "Pennsylvania Merchant" and landed at the port of Philadelphia in 1733, whence he proceeded to Amity township and settled on the farm now occupied by William Davidheiser, of which he then became the owner. Michael Ludwig was married to a young woman named Bechtel, by whom he had children, among them being two sons,—Michael (who was married to a Miss Lutz) and Philip. Michael Ludwig was born in Amity township, March 10, 1759, and carried on farming. He was actively interested in the building of the first substantial Amity Church, having been one of the prominent members of that congregation. He was married to Anna Dehart, born August 16, 1769, and died December 25, 1825. He died February 5, 1827, and left seven chilried to Sarah Miller, who was born January 8, 1786. He died January 18, 1863, and left a widow (who survived him fifteen years, having died July 26, 1878) and seven children,—Harriet (married to William Lorah, a descendant of one of the earliest settlers of the township), Augustus (married to Carolina Pott, a daughter of John Pott), Elizabeth (married to Peter Marquet, Esq.), Mary Ann (married to Jacob Holloway), Elam, Sarah (married to Jacob Schaeffer) and Lewis (married to Elizabeth Rothermel, a daughter of Peter Rothermel).

Elam Miller Ludwig, the subject of this sketch, was born on the homestead March 7, 1828, and educated in the schools which the township afforded. He assisted his father in farming till he became twenty-three years of age, and then commenced farming for himself in Union township, on one of the Brooke farms, which he bought in the next year after he began (having been given a generous opportunity by the owners, Edward and George Brooke), and in three years he sold the same at a considerable profit; this profit gave him a substantial start in business life. He then moved to Amity township, and bought the Egle farm (eighty acres), known also as the Gerling farm, which was a part of one of the Swedes' tracts; this he has occupied and conducted continuously till now.

Mr. Ludwig has taken a great interest in the Agricultural Society of the county, having attended all its exhibitions, excepting the first, and placed superior blooded horses on exhibition. His first exhibition consisted of two heavy Canadian stallions. From that time till now—a period covering over thirty years—he has paid much attention to the raising of fine horses, distinguished for speed, and exhibited them at county fairs. The stallion "Bonaparte" was introduced by Townsend Evans, of which Mr. Ludwig became the owner. Sired by this stallion, he raised a fine, speedy mare, which, at four years old, trotted a mile in two fifty-two. This was remarkable speed for a local horse thirty years ago. He introduced "Ironside," having bought him as a colt. This superior stallion trotted a mile on an inferior track (circular, one-third of a mile in length) in two thirty-six. This was a wonderful feat, and the exhibition developed a feeling in the community for speed in horses. In 1865 Mr. Ludwig introduced the "Ethan Allen" stock. He raised "Lady Elgin," a fine, gentle and speedy mare, which trotted a mile in two twenty-seven. This mare he now has upon his plantation for breeding purposes. In 1874 he introduced the "Hamblenonian" stock, which he has latterly made a specialty, and in which he has been very successful. His stock now includes two fine bay mares, "Purity" and "Little Thorne" mated, that have trotted together a half a mile in one fifteen and a quarter.

Mr. Ludwig was married to Hannah Grinder, a daughter of Samuel Grinder, by whom he has nine children,—Calvin, Brooke, Barde, Harriet, Mahlon, Amelia, Sarah, Abraham and Lewis.

Colonel Jeremiah Weaver, of Amity township, Berks County, Pennsylvania, was born October 1, 1816, on the farm of his father, and the farm he afterwards owned. He always lived on the same farm on which he died, November 2, 1885, from softening of the brain. His father was Peter Weaver, a wealthy and distinguished farmer, who, during the latter days of his life, was nearly blind. Peter Weaver was born on the same farm, where he resided until his death, in the eighty-sixth year of his age, from palsy. He was buried in the Amityville church-yard. Colonel Weaver was buried at the Oley Churches. Peter Weaver had two children, Jeremiah and Anna Weaver, the latter being married to Cyrus Ludwig, and after his death she married Edward Philips.

The parents of Peter Weaver and the grandfather of Colonel Weaver were Jacob Weaver and a Miss Van Reed; they had eleven children.

Ellen Knabb, of Oley is a sister of Peter Weaver and an aunt of the colonel. She is now in her ninety-second year.

Colonel Weaver had no children. He was a firm, yet rational man, courageous and brave. He was elected and commissioned by Governor Francis R. Shunk, April 18, 1845, colonel of the Third Regiment of Militia of Pennsylvania, Second Brigade of the Sixth Division, composed of the militia of the counties of Dauphin, Lebanon, Berks and Schuylkill. September 7, 1850, William F. Johnson, Governor of Pennsylvania, commissioned him captain of the National Artillery of the Uniformed Militia of Pennsylvania, First Brigade of the Fifth Division, comprising Dauphin, Lebanon and Berks Counties. He was again elected and commissioned stock farms in the country. He had a custom of always keeping six heavy Norman horses on the farm and objected to all small horses. He usually kept about twenty-five milk cows for use on the farm, and made the fattening of oxen a specialty, which were shipped to New York and Philadelphia markets. Much of the burden and care of managing the farm was assumed by John Swavely, who had been employed by Colonel Weaver for twenty years, and since the colonel’s death still assists Mrs. Weaver in the direction of the farm. In 1871 Colonel Weaver had as much as fifty-five head of cattle and three hundred sheep. He dealt mostly in “short-horn” Durhams. In 1868 Mr. Swavely brought from Ohio, for Colonel Weaver, an ox that weighed twenty-five hundred pounds, for which he paid in Ohio two hundred and fifty dollars. Other oxen averaged from eighteen hundred to two thousand pounds, and for many he gave one hundred dollars per head. He bought nearly all his cattle in Trumbull County, Ohio. He bought Southdown sheep (imported), for which he paid one hundred and five dollars per head, and for Canada sheep he paid as high as forty dollars per head. When he exhibited stock at the county fairs he always secured first premium. He was given first premium at the State fair when held at Easton, Pennsylvania, for fat and yoke oxen. His farm was one of the finest in Berks County, and has been in the possession of the Weaver family since January 5, 1760. It was patented to Peter Weaver, one of the earliest ancestry of the Weavers in this county, and descended from father to son or brother to brother. In 1718 the first owner, Peter Weaver, sold it to Jacob Weaver. In 1747 Jacob sold it to his son Peter, and in 1783 Peter sold it to his son, Jacob Weaver, Jr. In 1820 Jacob Weaver, Jr., sold it to his son Samuel; when, in 1840, Samuel died single and intestate, Jacob Weaver, a brother of Samuel, took it at the appraisement. Jacob, in 1842, had it sold by the sheriff, when Peter Weaver (the father of our subject) bought it and in 1866 sold it to his son, Colonel Jeremiah Weaver. The latter, owing to sundry losses and misfortunes, became involved and assigned his estate to William Yocom for benefit of creditors, and in 1876 Mrs. Catharine Weaver, wife of Colonel Weaver, bought the property and still retains it. It contains two hundred and two acres and fifty-five perches of good soil, well divided into suitable fields, with the finest spring water facilities on all parts of the farm and never freezes.

The farm extends from the Reading and Boyertown road to the Douglassville and Yellow House turnpike road, accessible from either. The farm has the finest and best fruit, three apple orchards containing about thirty-five acres.

The buildings are in excellent condition, there being two dwelling-houses and twenty-two out-buildings. The farm is tenanted (1886) by William Conrad.

COLEBROOKDALE TOWNSHIP.

ERECTION OF TOWNSHIP.—A petition of sundry inhabitants of "Colebrook-Dale" was presented to the Court of Quarter Sessions, at Philadelphia, on September 7, 1741, in which they set forth "that your petitioners suffer under some disadvantages as touching roads and highways, the poor, etc., as not knowing their boundaries, for which reasons some contentious persons frequently oppose us in our proceedings: wherefore we humbly pray this court to take this affair into their consideration and erect a new township. Beginning at a corner in George McCall’s upper line of the manor called John Penn’s and Douglass township line, and from thence to run along the said manor line north forty east one thousand six hundred perches; thence northwest nine hundred and sixty perches to a corner; thence south forty west one thousand six hundred perches; thence southeast nine hundred and sixty perches by vacant land and Douglass township, to the place of beginning, containing about nine thousand six hundred acres." The subscribers were,—

Thomas Potts. Conrad Behm.
John Potts. Samuel Michael Essig.
John Conrad Roth. Franz Yester Staudt.
Friedrick Frey. Jacob Maitlon.
Thomas Willson. Thomas Potts, Jr.

The survey was made by George Boone, Esq., and reported by him to William Parsons, surveyor-general, who, in December following, certified that the courses of the district surveyed did not interfere with the bounds of any other township; whereupon the court erected the same into a township by the name of Cole-Brookdale.

In 1839 the area of the township was reduced over one-third by the appropriation of about three thousand six hundred acres in the upper section toward the erection of Washington township. The estimated area in 1849 was six thousand acres. In 1866 the borough of Boyertown was erected out of a portion of territory in the eastern section of the township. A post-office had been established at this point in the township in 1828.

EARLY IRON-WORKS.—Iron-works were begun at a very early period in this district, and it is believed that they were the first in Pennsylvania. In the colonial records they are referred to as the "Mahanatawny Iron-Works," because they were situated in the district of country known by that name. They comprised a furnace, which has been called and known as "Colebrookdale." It is supposed that this furnace was erected in the year 1720, "or a year or two earlier," by a company comprising, among others, Thomas Rutter, Anthony Morris, James Lewis and Thomas Potts, and carried on for about fifty years. The furnace was situated on the Iron-Stone Creek, an important branch of the Manatawny, within a mile to the south of the present borough of Boyertown. It stood about five perches west from the creek, near the road which leads from the Reading road to Englesville. A large dam was constructed immediately above the furnace and supplied with water by a head-race, which extended from a point in the creek about one hundred and forty perches north from the furnace and lay to the west of the creek. The early discovery of a valuable deposit of iron-ore near by induced the erection of the furnace at this point. The mouth of the mine-hole was about one hundred and fifty perches distant from the furnace in a northeastwardly direction. A great abundance of magnetic ore has been mined in this vicinity. Two veins have been worked very successfully,—one at a depth of three hundred and ninety-two feet, which was found to be twenty-two feet thick and to yield fifty per cent. of red magnetic ore; and the other at a greater depth, which is said to be inexhaustible. Latterly for some years the mine has been operated by the Warwick Iron Company. A portion of Boyertown has been undermined.

The land upon which this furnace stood was taken up by David Powell, to whom a patent was issued in 1718 for two hundred acres, and he conveyed it to Thomas Rutter in 1719.

SETTLEMENT ATTACKED BY INDIANS.—The first conflict between the Indians and the early settlers of this section of country, now included in Berks County, was in 1728, in the Manatawny region. A petition, subscribed by a number of the inhabitants of Colebrookdale, was presented to Governor Gordon on May 10, 1728, in which they referred to their sufferings from the Indians and prayed for "relief of themselves and their poor wives and children, who were to them more than life itself," A skirmish is alleged to have taken place at "Mahanatawny Iron-Works" between the inhabitants of that region of country and a party of foreign Indians, and the Governor, in pursuance of the petition mentioned, accompanied by divers gentlemen, visited the place. Upon his return to Philadelphia he met the Executive Council, on May 15, 1728,

"And acquainted the board that he had just returned from Mahanatawny, where he found the people in very great disorder by the noise of the skirmish that happened between some of our people and a small party of Indians; that many of the back inhabitants had quit their houses and seemed under great apprehensions of numbers of Indians coming to attack them; that several Palatine families, numbering some hundreds of persons, were gathered together at a mill near New Hanover township, in order to defend themselves, and that there he saw the man who was said to have been killed by the Indians, but he appeared to be only slightly wounded in the belly. The report had been, that the Indians fired upon some of our people, wounded several slightly and one man mortally; that having examined several persons there and at Colebrookdale, touching the said Indians, he understood that they were eleven in number, painted for war, armed with pistols, guns, etc., and had been in that neighborhood for some days, that they were all armed, and had a Spanish Indian for their captain; and that having been rude in several houses where they forced the people to supply them with victuals and drink, some of our inhabitants, to the number of twenty, were armed with guns and swords, went in search of the Indians, and, coming up with them, they sent two of their number to treat with the captain, who, instead of receiving them civilly, brandished his sword and commanded his men to fire, which they did and wounded two of ours, who, thereupon, returned their fire; upon which they saw the captain fall, but he afterward got up and ran into the woods after his party, having left his gun and watch-coat behind, and that since that time they had been seen no more." 3

to Philadelphia, by Thomas Rutter, John Roades, Jonathan Robeson and Burg Hollenbock. A public road was laid out in 1728 from Skippack to Colebrookdale.

Industries.—East of Boyertown is an old-established tannery, which was carried on many years by the Landis family, and at present conducted by Samuel G. Landis. There are thirty vats. Steam is employed to heat the liquor of the vats only, the other portion of the work being done by the old methods. The product is mainly fine leather. In the same locality is the David Landis tannery, also an old establishment, and operated, on a small scale, in 1886, by Tobias Landis. Beyond these a number of powers are afforded on the Swamp Creek, which were early made to operate mills and small factories.

Near the Washington township line is the old Reninger mill, a stone, plastered building, having small grinding capacity, which is owned by Jacob Oberholtzer. The next lower power operated is a small saw-mill, the capacity of which was increased when Ambrose Stauffer introduced steam-power. A short distance from this William Johnson put up a fulling-mill and also made cloths and light cassimers. It became the property of Henry Fisher and was operated by him a number of years. For more than twenty years the factory has been carried on by Nicholas J. Fisher. Steam-power is employed. The building is an old frame structure. Some fine work is produced.

On the stream next below, is a large brick mill, supplied with good machinery, operated by water and steam and owned by Nicholas Johnson. The next lower and the last mill-site in the township was improved to operate a fulling-mill for the Allebachs, which has given place to a grist-mill, owned by Jacob Merkel.

The site of the old Knauss mill, on the Ironstone Creek, near the head-waters of that stream, has been occupied, since 1865, by the mill of William K. Grim. It is a stone building and has four runs of burrs. In the same locality Henry Knauss had a small tannery, which, in 1830, became the property of Gideon Grim, and which was carried on by William K. Grim until 1877, when work was discontinued. The buildings are still standing and when fully worked the tannery had a good capacity, having in all forty vats. Lower down this stream the Gables had, for many years, saw and oil-mills, but converted the latter into a spoke and handle factory, which are still carried on by John Gable. The power below was also improved by the Gables, and the present mill, built in 1860, by David Gable, and operated by Henry G. Gable, is below the site first occupied by the old Henry Gable mill, which has been removed. It is a stone and brick building and has a good power and four runs of stones, with a large capacity.

On the lowest power in the township was the old Rhodes mill and the Colebrookdale Furnace, the former built about 1800. Later it was owned by the Morys; and the new mill built at this place by Mathias Ritter was burned down in 1884. It has been rebuilt by William Groff, the present owner. The power is limited. Aside from the above interests, there has been but very little manufacturing, excepting such as has a relation with agricultural pursuits. In 1881 the Colebrookdale Creamery was gotten in operation by a stock company, which has since continued it. The factory has a good location, two miles from Boyertown, and does a prosperous business. The building is large and supplied with both butter and cheese-making machinery.

In 1876 Dr. J. H. Funk began the cultivation of small fruits, apples, pears and cherries on his farm near Boyertown, and, having safely passed through the experimental stage, he has succeeded in establishing a pleasant and profitable business, which gives steady employment to six men, and in the fruit season, to scores of persons. In 1885 he produced eight hundred bushels of strawberries and had an enormous vintage from fifteen hundred grape-vines. He also grows from fifty to sixty thousand heads of cabbage per year. His success has caused other fruit and truck farms to be opened, among the principal being those of Funk & Schaeffer, twenty-one acres in grapes and pears, and John Schaeffer, five acres in a variety of fruits.

On the farm of Jacob Bechtel is a large deposit of black lead, which has been mined to some extent by the owners, and which at one time was a profitable business. The quality is good, but not as fine as some recently discovered in other localities, which has caused this mine to be abandoned for the present.

ZION'S CHURCH, EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.—This is the only house of worship in the township outside of the borough of Boyertown. It is a plain brick building, thirty-two by forty feet, and was erected in 1850, in the village of New Berlinville, upon a lot of land given for the purpose by Henry Gilbert, who was one of the original members of the association at this place, and who was most instrumental in the organization of the church. Among other prominent members were Edwin Fritz, Amos Brower, Wm. G. Fritz, David York, Augustus Levan, Mathias Levan, Stover Worman, Josiah H. Reninger, Melchoir Schultz and George Schultz.

The latter three served as the first board of trustees. This church has never had a strong membership, but it has shown much spiritual life, and has contributed faithfully to the extension of religious influences in the community. It has also furnished four serviceable ministers, — the Revs. David Stauffer, Aaron Steltz, William H. Stauffer and F. G. Stauffer. In 1885 there were fifty members, who had their ministerial service from the Milford Circuit, the Rev. Frank Sechrist, preacher in charge. In 1869 the church secured three-fourths of an acre of land for cemetery purposes; and in 1886 the property was controlled by Trustees Wm. H. Stauffer, David Worsler and Stover Worman. A Sunday-school of fifty members has Henry B. Stauffer as the superintendent.

VILLAGES.

NEW BERLINVILLE is a growing village, a little more than half a mile east from Boyertown, sustaining a suburban relation to that place. It was started about 1835 on the lands of Samuel Gilbert, Peter Houck and Jacob Gottschall, and was long called New Berlin, in compliment, it is said, to a worthy German orphan boy who was reared here and whose nativity was Berlin. When the post-office was established, February 23, 1883, the present name was adopted to distinguish it from New Berlin, in Union County. Jacob W. Leaver has been the only postmaster till now.

Two daily mails are received. The office is kept in a store carried on by Leaver, as the successor of his father, Samuel Leaver, who here engaged in trade in 1879. Other merchants in trade at this stand were David Johnson, Levi Gilbert, Josiah Reninger, P. Y. Brendlinger, (for about twenty years), Fritz and Hagy. In the same building an inn was opened in the spring of 1886 by U. Y. Houck. A store for the sale of farming implements was established in 1885 by D. H. G. Kuser, and C. W. Ritter has also recently opened a jewelry store. At the railway station, some distance from the main part of the village, E. H. Moyer began business in the coal trade in 1884, and also put in operation a small feed-mill. In this locality a large brick-yard was opened in 1883 by James Muthard, Samuel G. Landis and Henry R. Eschbach, which is now carried on by Jacob Schaeffer. The clay is of a good quality and the product is large. New Berlinville contains some handsome residences, and it has one church, Zion's Evangelical. The ordinary mechanic trades are also carried on in the village.

Morvsyille, on the turnpike, west of Boyertown, is a hamlet comprising about thirty houses, clustered around what was formally the site of the old Colebrookdale Furnace. Its proximity to the above place prevents it from becoming much of a business place. It contains a store, mill, shops, etc. The name was derived from the Morv family, prominent at an early day in this settlement.

In 1869 R. R. Engel began merchandising at this point and he has since continued. For many years he has been a toboconist. In 1885 he erected a cigar factory, in which eight men are now employed. William Groff is the miller of that locality and also carries on the coal business.

Engelsville is also a small hamlet in the southwestern part of the township, about two miles from Boyertown. It derived its name from Peter and John Engel, farmers and cooperers, who lived at the "Cross-Roads" at that point. Later other cooper-shops were opened. Cooperers was the principal occupation of the inhabitants for a number of years, the barrels etc., being peddled over the country. A public house was opened by William Engel in a building which has been devoted to other uses. While it was yet an inn Solomon Stetler kept another tavern and a store in connection, the place then having two public-houses. The store has been discontinued, having been last kept by Jacob Shaner, but the tavern is still continued by Jeremiah G. Brumbaugh. A pottery after being conducted for some years has been discontinued. The manufacture of brick is carried on by William Kehl.

In the northeastern part of the township John Muthard had a public-house, about 1800, on the farm now occupied by John Emerick, which was discontinued many years ago; and within the past few years W. H. B. Shanely has opened a country store in the Ironstone Valley. The first store was kept here about fifty years ago by Abraham Gobel.

Biographical.

Lewis P. G. Fegley was born August 23, 1851, in New Berlinville, Colebrookdale township. His father, Peter Fegley, was born in Douglass township, Montgomery County, August 14, 1815, and in 1843 moved to New Berlin, on the farm of his father-in-law, Jacob Gottshall. At this place Lewis P. G. Fegley was born. He attended the public school of his native township, and Mount Pleasant Seminary, at Boyertown. In the fall of 1868 he began to teach among the Mennonites in Butter Valley. In 1869 he taught the Treichlersville school, and the succeeding four terms the New Berlin school, and the two following terms the Boyertown High School.

He was elected justice of the peace for his native township in 1885. In 1881 he taught the Colebrookdale Grammar School. In 1878 he was appointed by the heirs of a deceased relative to go to California to look up their interest in an estate of a deceased uncle. After meeting with success during his journey to and fro, he took notes of interest and incidents along the entire route, and has since written a little volume of over two hundred pages, which he styles "From Ocean to Ocean," or, "Across the Continent." He has had many and large estates to settle as administrator, assignee and trustee. January 2, 1883, he was appointed acting cashier of the National Bank of Boyertown, to fill a brief vacancy.

He is closely identified with Sunday-school and church interests; was superintendent of the Reformed Sunday-school of Boyertown for five years; served as deacon in the church for six years and secretary of the congregation since September 24, 1882. At the Democratic County Convention held at Reading, September 1882, he announced himself as a candidate for State Representative. Under the rule of his party, he withdrew his name before balloting commenced and waited until the Convention of 1884, and when the ballot had proceeded about two-thirds he had eleven votes more than were required to nominate him, and was at that point, with his colleague, Mr. Baer, nominated by acclamation and elected at the general election that fall. Resigned as justice of the peace December 1, 1884. January 6, 1885, he took his seat as a member of the House of Representasentatives of Pennsylvania. He did not miss a single session.

DOUGLASS TOWNSHIP.

Erection of Township.—A petition of several inhabitants of the township of Oley was presented to the Quarter Sessions at Philadelphia, in the beginning of the year 1736, which set forth "that for several years past, about four miles distant from the high road leading to Philadelphia through George McCall's manor and several other tracts of land, the roads have been so bad that it was difficult for a single horse to pass without damage, and that the said petitioners had several times represented to this court the badness thereof, but that nothing as yet had been done the reason, as they were informed, was because no overseers have been as yet appointed by the court over the said road, and that there were at least thirty families settled on the said lands who are not in Hanover or Amity townships, between which townships the aforesaid road lieth," and prayed "the said court would be pleased to erect the said lands into a township and appoint a constable and overseers." In pursuance of an order of the court upon this petition, the surveyor-general, Benjamin Eastburn, made a draft of the said lands petitioned for to be made a township, and certified that the same did not interfere with any other township. The courses and distances returned by him were as follows:

"Beginning at a corner of Amity township by the river Schuylkill, and extending thence by the said township, N. 20 E. 700 perches; thence N. 70 W. 89 perches; thence N. 20 E. five hundred perches to the upper corner of the said township; thence on vacant land N. E. 690 perches; thence on vacant land and on a line dividing the lands of Thomas Potts & Co., from lands belonging to the heirs of Thomas Rutter and lands of the Colebrookdale Co., and on other land and on George McCall's manor, S. E. 1380 perches, to a line of the German Co.'s land; thence on the same S. 40 W. 1290 perches, to the aforesaid river; thence up the same, 1060 perches, to the place of beginning."

And this tract was erected by the court on June 7, 1736, into a township, naming it "Donglass;" and in the order of erection John Ball and James Yokham (Yocum) were appointed as the first overseers of highways, and Andrew Ringberry as first constable for the ensuing year.

In 1842 the boundary lines of the township separating Colebrookdale and Earl were adjusted in order to remedy an existing inconvenience with respect to road taxes.

In 1849 the estimated area of the township was seven thousand acres.

The southern section of the township adjoining the river is flat, but the central and northern section are considerably interspersed with hills and wood-land.

Taxables of 1759.—The following list contains the names of the taxables of the township in 1759. The tax levied was £37 17s. 6d. Derrick Cleaver was the collector.

Romosh, John

Early Iron-Works.—The only industry in the township is the "Pine Iron-Works," situated on Manatawny Creek, near the line of Amity township. It occupies the site of the "Pine Forge," which was begun by Thomas Potts in 1740. A piece of pig-metal is preserved on the place, which was cast then to signalize the foundation of the industry. Its length is one and a half feet, and its appearance thus:

Two forges named "Pool" were then in this vicinity, on the same creek, one above and the other below the "Pine Forge." John Potts, son of Thomas, succeeded him as owner; and he, after having carried it on till 1769, sold it to David Potts, Jr. In 1783 David Rutter bought it at public sale, and carried it on till his decease, in 1815, when his son John became the owner and operator. In 1844 Joseph Bailey purchased the property, who, in the following year, tore down the forge and erected in its stead a rolling-mill for making plate-iron, with a capacity of eight hundred tons, and substituted the name "Pine Iron-Works." The mill was rebuilt and enlarged in 1869, with its capacity increased to twenty-eight hundred tons, from which time it has been owned and operated by Joseph L. Bailey and Comley B. Shoemaker, under the firm-name of Joseph L. Bailey & Co. This firm have made a specialty of the best qualities of cold blast charcoal boiler-plate for locomotive and marine work. In 1881 they purchased a property at Manatawny Station, on the Colebrookdale Railroad, and erected a steam-power rolling-mill with a capacity of four thousand tons, which was set in operation in May, 1882. In the beginning of the year 1882 the firm-name was changed to Bailey & Shoemaker. Forty men are employed at the latter works.

The old Pine Iron-Works have fallen into disuse and are practically abandoned. The water-power is devoted to the operation of the Bailey grist-mill, a four-story structure of mountain stone, which has a good capacity.

A large covered frame county bridge was constructed across the Manatawny at this point in 1855.

INDUSTRIES.—The manufacturing interests of the township are limited to the water-powers found on two streams, of which the Manatawny is fully given over to the interests of the Pine Iron-Works.” On the Ironstone Creek, the upper power was first improved by a man named Bechtel, who had a saw-mill there. This is now the site of Wren’s Woolen-Mills, which had its beginning about forty years ago as a small fulling-mill, put up by Amos Brower. The first building now forms the upper part of the factory. John C. Castle enlarged the building some twenty years later. At present it is sixty by one hundred and thirty feet, and part of it is three stories high. It is supplied with one jack and three hundred and thirty-six spindles, one set of cards, one hard waste pricker, one teazel and wire gig and four Compton looms, thus enabling the manufacture of all kinds of woollen goods. At present a specialty is made of miners’ grey flannels. The water-power is supplemented by a ten horse-power engine. Eleven operatives are employed. Since 1883 the mills have been carried on by William Preston & Co. For a number of years the property has belonged to Major James Wren.

Colebrookdale Iron-Works has the site of the old George Gresh mill and where later Jonas Weaver had an oil and saw-mill. W. W. Weaver became the owner of the property about fifty-five years ago and put up a tilt-hammer, to which a foundry was added. Wood-burning stoves were cast there, which obtained a wide reputation. Mill fixtures and ordinary castings were also manufactured. Later a wrought iron coffee-mill was also manufactured and sold extensively. Wash-kettles and sad-irons were added, as other products. These latter articles still constitute some of the chief articles of manufacture. Wagon-boxes, thimble-skeins and pipe-boxes are also made at the works. In 1867, W. W. Weaver was succeeded by the present proprietors, Brendlinger & Co. The work is under the management of John Sabold, as superintendent. They enlarged the establishment and in 1871 added a thirty-five horse-power engine. This industry at present embraces half a dozen large buildings and affords employment to sixty men. The property includes thirty acres of land and a number of tenement houses. A store was formerly kept in connection with the works.

Near the little Oley post-office Jacob Albright had a small tannery which was discontinued when the owner removed to Earl township, many years ago. In the same locality Henry Gresh had a saw-mill and an oil-mill. Feed was also ground there. The oil and chopping-mills have been discontinued. The saw-mill is operated by Z. F. Gresh.

The Gilbert mill occupied the next site and Henry and George Gilbert were succeeded by Adam Miller. Fred. Neiman was the next proprietor. The latter remodeled the mill in 1880, and supplied new machinery. It has a good power. Since 1884 H. Y. Livengood has been the owner.

A short distance lower down the stream was the old Nagle mill, which was improved by David Fritz, who built the present stone mill about twenty years ago. It is now operated by his son, Eli, and carried on as a custom-mill. The Samuel Wagner custom and merchant-mill is at the next power. It is a stone building and was erected about forty years ago by Mathias Livengood. Near the mouth of the Iron-stone is an old mill, operated many years in the early part of the century by Jacob Keely, and which had a wide patronage. The old building still stands. It was supplied with new machinery by Jacob Livengood. A clover-mill was carried on for a time by Mr. Livengood. The grist-mill is owned by William Livengood, who carries on the same successfully.

No Church in Township.—The township has no house of worship or organized religious body within its bounds. There is a small public cemetery in the vicinity of “Little Oley.” It is commonly called “Fritz’s Grave-Yard.” There have been interred in it many of the pioneer residents of this township, including the Eppenheisers, Keelys, Beckers, Brunners, Greshes, Macks and Reifsnyders. The township is well supplied with schools.

Villages.

Though this township has a large population for its area, the nature of the country and its relation to other localities has prevented the founding of villages of any size. The oldest distinctive business place is—

Greshville, a village situated in the upper part of the township, on the western slope of “Furnace” Hill. Large deposits of limestone are in that locality, which are easily quarried and readily converted into lime. This employment gave occupation to a large number of men years ago, which caused the place to become known as “Limestone.” In 1853 a post-office was established with the name of Greshville, in compliment to Adam Gresh, a prominent business man in the early part of the century, and since that time the place has been so known. Adam Gresh had a store, tavern and distillery, which caused his place to be widely known and also the centre of quite an active business. In 1824 the Keely family had a public-house, George Miller and David Gresh were also early in trade, and Peter Ludwig is remembered as a pioneer merchant. The last merchant there was Jacob Reiff, who discontinued business in 1885. The public-house, first kept by Adam Gresh, was continued by his family after his death. The landlord for the past fifteen years has been Mahlon H. Maurer, who is also the postmaster. The latter has also been engaged in the manufacture of lime. Other persons who have been engaged in this business are the Greshes, Charles Hagy, Henry B. Keely and Samuel Leaver. The total product of lime was very large. Near this place is Colebrookdale Station.

Little Oley.—A short distance from the latter place are the buildings occupied by the workmen of the “Colebrookdale Iron-Works” and other scattering houses, the whole forming the hamlet of Little Oley. About forty-five years ago a public-house was here opened by Solomon L. Engle, which has had many keepers, among them being Aaron Maurer, John Wise and Ephraim Yorgey. In 1885 the tavern was rebuilt by William W. Turner, and it has been kept by him since. In 1865 U. F. Gresh opened a store, in which he has since carried on the business of a general country store, and served as postmaster of the Little Oley post-office, established in 1871. Southwest from this place is a fertile stretch of country which resembles Oley, and, being less in area, it was called “Little Oley.”

Glendale.—Several miles below is Manatawny Station, at the mouth of the Ironstone Creek. The Pine Iron-Works post-office is located there, which was established in 1871, with Joseph Bailey as postmaster, and having at present A. L. Burns as deputy. The locality is known as “Glendale.”

It comprises the new Pine Iron-Works, a well-appointed industrial establishment, mills, a tavern, store, neat school-house and about forty other buildings. The tavern situated on the Ironstone was long kept by the Hatfields, who opened it about 1851. Ephraim Swavely is the present keeper. At the old iron-works the elder Bailey supplied some goods, but no regular store was opened until 1879, when Philip S. Baker engaged in merchandising. He disposed of his business in 1886 to J. R. Mowday & Son. The school-house is a long building with two rooms, and stands on a spacious lot somewhat removed from the street. It was erected in 1883. A select summer school is there maintained under the title of the “Glendale Seminary,” of which D. M. B. Wann is the principal.

West of Manatawny Station is the country store of Samuel Yorgey, which has been carried on the past twelve years. William Focht and Elias Fritz were also licensed to retail goods, but have not been carrying full lines of merchandise.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

DAVID B. MAUGER, of Douglassville, was born in Douglass township August 12, 1822. He obtained his education in the common schools of his native township. Being possessed of considerable ambition, he applied himself to reading and study, and at the age of eighteen years he opened a subscription school in the “Grostown” school-house, in Pottsgrove township, Montgomery County. In the fall of 1842 he took charge of an academy at Douglassville, and continued in that position seven years, during which time he took up the study of surveying and is now one of the most reliable surveyors. He made his first survey December 22, 1842, of a tract in Montgomery County, Pa., upon which site the village of Buchananville is built. He followed the profession of teaching, in connection with surveying and conveyancing, for a period of sixteen years. In 1850 he purchased from Henry McKenty the farm upon which he now resides. He was elected justice of the peace of his native township in 1850, succeeding his uncle, Jacob Livengood, and received his commission from Governor William F. Johnston April 9, 1850, and has held the same office ever since, with much credit and confidence. In October, 1851, he was married to Mary Amanda, daughter of Daniel Lorah, by whom he had one daughter and three sons living. His daughter Sallie was a graduate from Allentown Female College, in 1876, taking the first honors of her class. His three sons attended the Keystone State Normal School. Daniel Lorah, the eldest, is now agent at Franklin Street Station, Reading, on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad. His second son, David Franklin, is now (1886) a student in the senior class at Franklin and Marshall College. His third son, Henry Snyder, is a student at the College of Pharmacy in Philadelphia. Since 1851 Mr. Mauger has been largely engaged in the settlement of estates. He has been secretary of the Douglassville and Yellow House Turnpike Company since its organization in 1867; was elected one of the directors of the Schuylkill Bridge Company, at Douglassville, in 1866, and in 1867 became the successor to Henry McKenty as secretary and treasurer of said company, occupying this position until July, 1880, when he sold his stock and ceased to be a member. He was elected one of the board of managers of the Perkiomen and Reading Turnpike road, and also became its secretary June, 1872, which office he still holds. He has been a school director for a number of terms, and always secretary of the board. He has been an elder in the Reformed Church at Pottstown since 1857; was elected by Goshenhoppen Classis a delegate to the first meeting of the triennial session of the General Synod of the Reformed Church, held at Pittsburgh, Pa., in November, 1863, and represented said Classis as a delegate to the Synods, almost annually, ever since, and has been treasurer of Classis since 1870. He became a member of the Order of Patrons of Husbandry, and at the meeting of Subordinate Granges, held in Reading in September, 1873, for the purpose of organizing a State Grange, was elected its first Master, and in January, 1875, he was re-elected at the annual meeting of Subordinate Granges, held for that purpose at Williamsport, Pa. At the annual meeting held at Meadville, Crawford County, Pa., his services were again solicited, but he declined, and was succeeded by Victor E. Piollette, of Bradford County, Pa. During 'Squire Mauger's mastership he represented the Pennsylvania State Grange, P. of H., held at St. Louis, Mo., in January, 1874, also at the annual session held at Charleston, S. C., in 1875, the session held in Louisville, Ky., in November, 1875, and the annual session held in Chicago in November, 1876.

In January, 1886, he was elected a director and manager of the Boyertown Mutual Fire Insurance Company.

His ancestry dates back, as far as can be ascertained, to his grandfather, Henry Mauger, and his wife, who emigrated to this county from Germany in or about the year 1762, being but twelve years old, and settled on the farm of which he afterwards became the owner. He was married to Mary Balser; they had born unto them six sons, viz.: John, Henry, Frederick, Jacob and David (the latter the father of the subject of this biography) and William and one daughter, Elizabeth. All were married, raised families, and lived from seventy-eight to eighty-four years respectively. William, the last one, died about one year ago, aged eighty-four years. David Mauger, Sr., father of the subject of this sketch, was born February 12, 1797, in Douglass township, Berks County, on the "Mauger Farm," becoming the owner thereof in fee-simple March 24, 1826, purchasing the same from his father, the aforesaid Henry Mauger. The farm comprises one hundred and sixty-eight acres of the finest and best arable land, beautifully located near two railroads, Schuylkill River and canal. Its buildings, although old, are kept in excellent repair, and look neat and tidy, showing skillful and proper management and attention by its owner.

Sarah Mauger, the mother of "D. B.," as he is frequently called, was born April 20, 1802, on the farm of her father, George Bechtel, in Pottsgrove township, Montgomery County. John George Bechtel, the father of the Bechtel family in this country, emigrated in the year 1740, and was the great-great-grandfather of D. B. Mauger.

EXETER TOWNSHIP.

ERECITION OF TOWNSHIP.—In the erection of Oley township by the establishment of the boundary lines, in 1741, over fifty families (who had settled to the southwest) were excluded. A petition was therefore presented to court, at Philadelphia, on September 7, 1741, setting forth that they had been left out, and
The court ordered the district to be examined, according to the draft presented, to ascertain whether or not it interfered with any other township, and the surveyor-general, William Parsons, certified that the lines did not interfere; whereupon, on December 7, 1741, the tract of land inclosed was erected into a township by the name of "Exeter," within the following bounds: "Beginning by the river Schuylkill at the upper end of Burgeon Bird's land; thence N. 33° E., 87 perches; S. 57° E., 70 ps.; N. 33° E., 1154 ps.; and N. 70° E., 400 ps. to a road commonly called Hans Snyder's road; thence along said road to Amity township line, a distance of 1208 ps.; thence S. 20° W., 1160 ps. to Schuylkill River, and thence up the river 1760 ps. to the beginning." The lines inclosed about 13,500 acres. The survey of the lines on the draft, presented with the petition, was made by George Boone, Esq.

EARLY LAND GRANTS.—In August, 1682, Penn granted to John Millington, of Shrewsbury, England, a baker, five hundred acres, to be located in Pennsylvania. Millington's interest became vested in Ralph Asheton, of Philadelphia, and, in November, 1730, Asheton granted two hundred and fifty acres, adjoining the 'Swedes' tract, to Squire Boone, of Philadelphia County, father of the famous Kentucky pioneer, Colonel Daniel Boone.

The "London Company" (consisting of Tobias Collet, Daniel Quair and Henry Goldney) took up a tract of one thousand acres on the east side of the river; the warrant was issued October 18, 1716. Penn, in 1699, had granted to this company sixty thousand acres in Pennsylvania. The one thousand acres were taken in part thereof, and on November 9, 1717, the patent was issued. In February, 1718, the company granted their right to Andrew Robeson, then of Roxbury township, in Philadelphia County. This tract became vested in Mordecai Lincoln, the elder, in May, 1730, and he devised it to his two sons, Mordecai 1 and Thomas, and a posthumous son, who was named Abraham. The latter became prominent in the political history of Berks County.

George Boone, Esq., took up a tract of four hundred acres in this district, along the Monocacy Creek, in 1718.

The Levan family have occupied a prominent position in this township for one hundred and fifty years, having, during this time, owned a large area of farming land where the members of that family are now located. They gave much encouragement to the Schwartzwald Church by liberal contributions.

The Ritter and Herbein families have also been prominent for many years.

PIONEER OF KENTUCKY.—Daniel Boone, the famous Kentucky pioneer, was born in this township on October 22, 1733, on a farm

1 Careful inquiry within the last five years has fully developed the Lincoln genealogy. Mordecai Lincoln, the President's great-great-grandfather, was a resident in the Quaker settlement at Oley, in Berks County, Pa., before 1730, and died and was buried there. He came from Massachusetts originally, and lived for a time in New Jersey. About May, 1730, he died, and about 1750, at the same time when the Boones and the Hanks set off from the same neighborhood for the South, his son John removed with his family to the Shenandoah Valley, Rockingham County, Va. From there his son, Abraham, removed into Kentucky, in 1782, and was killed by the Indians, leaving three sons, of whom Thomas, the youngest, was the father of the President.

Nancy Hank, the wife of Thomas Lincoln, and the mother of the President, was a descendant, probably the granddaughter, of that John Hank who left Berks County, also, about 1750, and settled ultimately in Virginia, in Rockingham County. She is said to have been in her youth a woman of beauty. She was by nature refined, and of more than ordinary intellect. Her friends spoke of her as being a person of marked and decided character. She was unusually intelligent, reading all the books she could obtain. She taught her husband, as well as her son Abraham, to read and write. She was a woman of deep religious feeling, of the most exemplary character, and most tenderly and affectionately devoted to her family.

She could not only kill the wild game of the woods, but she could also dress it, and make of the skins clothes for her family, and prepare the flesh for food.—Arnold's "Life of Abraham Lincoln."
which is about one mile north of Baumstown. His father, Squire Boone, then owned and occupied the farm, having bought it in November, 1730. The dwelling in which he was born is still standing, though much enlarged and improved. He and his father and family left the township in 1750 and migrated to North Carolina; and thence, some years afterward (1769), he led a party into the unknown regions of Western Virginia, "beyond the mountains," where he distinguished himself by his boldness, his experiences with the Indians, his narrow escapes and his successful career as a pioneer. His life in that early period of our great country has made him the most conspicuous person in the first steps of our civilization westward of the Allegheny Mountains. He died at Charette village, in Missouri, on September 26, 1820, aged eighty-six years, eleven months, four days.

Taxables of 1759.—The following list comprises the names of the taxables of the township in 1759. Total amount of tax then levied was £76 2s. 6d. Peter Huet was the collector:

Industries.—The water-power of Antietam Creek, for the first half-dozen miles in its course through the township, was formerly well improved, and a few important industries still remain. Near the Alsace line is the old Hill mill, now operated by John Wanner, which has produced flour for half a century. A short distance below John Breiner had a stone paper-mill. He then lived in the upper part of the building. Afterward the building was used to bore rifles. No manufacturing is done at present at the place. Immediately below, Philip Moyer had a tilt-hammer, to which was added a forge by Solomon Seidel and both were carried on a number of years. Gottlieb Moyer was the last owner. The power has been entirely vacated. Benjamin Custer had a fulling-mill at the power below, also carding and making coarse cloths. A saw-mill was operated at the same place, but the power has long since been idle. The paper-mill of Abraham Keller was operated by the power below this point, and, after a time, it was made to work the machinery of a carding-mill for Jacob Brumbach. When owned by William Brumbach it was burned down and rebuilt, when it was converted into an oil-mill. Afterward it was used as a hat-factory by the Hendels and John Yerger. It has stood idle the past few years. The site below was also occupied by an oil-mill, belonging to Jacob and Adam Breiner, and becoming the property of Adam Johnson, a small foundry was established, which was operated by him some time. In 1854 Jacob Griesemer converted it into a grist-mill, and a saw-mill was added, and steam-power was afterward supplied. The mills are now operated by James Griesemer. Below the place where the Oley pike crosses the creek, Daniel Guldin had a carding-mill, the power of which was afterward used to operate a hat-factory for Abraham Stauffer; but no work has been done the past few years, the building being unoccupied. Close by a large glue-factory was established in 1878 by Joseph and Daniel Levan, which is still successfully operated by them. The Philip Housin mill was on the creek at the next lower power. Becoming the property of William Brumbach, it was converted into a woolen-factory, and as such operated until it was burned down some twenty years ago, when the present "St. Lawrence Woollen-Mills" were erected by Albert J. Brumbach, the present proprietor. It is a large two-story stone building, supplied with superior improved machinery for making all kinds of woolen fabrics and yarns. The motive-power is water and steam and thirty operatives are employed. The name "St. Lawrence" arose from a grade of goods manufactured there. This property has been improved with a number of buildings to such an extent that the locality has the appearance of a village. Next below this factory Jacob Levan operated a saw-mill, which has been removed; also an old grist-mill, formerly operated by the Bechtels. Near by, on a small tributary, George De B. Keim had a clover-seed mill, which did good service in its day, but has been idle a long time. On the main stream, in this locality, Gottlieb Moyer erected, in 1828, what he called the "Exeter Tilt-Hammer," and George de B. Keim purchasing an interest in the property, a forge was added, which was operated by Keim & Moyer from about 1840 for some years, and known as the "Exeter Forge." Moyer & Yocum were later operators. The business has been abandoned and the power has been used to operate a small feed-mill, now owned by M. J. Althouse. A pottery has been carried on near by for a number of years by Jacob Troxell. A small turning-factory in this locality has also passed away. Near the Perkioon turnpike John Bishop had a saw and grist-mill, among the first in the township, which burned down whilst owned by Nicholas Jones. A stone building was erected in its place and the mill is now operated as the property of Jacob Hertzog. Thomas and John Lincoln had a saw-mill at the next power, which was replaced by a new mill, erected by Washington Kissinger, and is still operated as a saw-mill. At this place—"Exeter Station"—Colonel D. C. Keller had a distillery, which was discontinued after several years' operation. The building afterward burned down. At this place there was also a small steam forge, erected by Reuben Seidel and operated by him for some years.

On the Monocacy, just where it passes into Exeter, Jacob and John Gehr had a fulling and carding-mill, but which has not been run the past fifty years. The building has been removed. Traces of the old race may still be seen. Half a mile down the stream Daniel Snyder erected a grist-mill, which was operated before 1800 and which has been continuously owned by the Snyder family. The original old stone building has been enlarged and improved and it is still a good mill, operated by William H. Snyder. On the Limekill Creek, near the Oley line, Henry Knauss operated a grist-mill many years, John H. Bechtel becoming a later owner, and though the power is not strong, the mill is operated nearly constantly. A saw-mill, by Jacob Thomas, occupied the next site, and, after being the property of Herbein and others, at present belongs to James Boone. The oldest mill in the township was in this locality, near the Friends' meeting-house, but had its water-power from the Monocacy, by means of a race, being almost a mile long. It may have been operated as early as 1726 by the Boone family, but owing to its unfavorable location, it was not kept up after the first log building commenced to show signs of decay, especially after better mills were supplied. The mill was on the present Jacob B. Kaufman farm and the head of the race was on the farm of Isaac Christian. The Boone who had this mill was of the same family from which has descended Moses Boone, still living in that locality. Below this point potteries have been carried on by C. C. Guldin, C. Link and others. Near the Birdsboro station Messrs. E. & G. Brooke erected a fine, large furnace, which is still carried on successfully in connection with the Brooke Iron-Works at Birdsboro.

EXETER STATION, on the same road, nearer Reading, has but a few buildings, the principal being the store and tavern of H. B. Levan. He is also the postmaster of Exeter Station office, established in 1861. William B. Levan has been the station agent of the railroad company for many years. Washington Kissinger was the first to engage in business at this point.

On the Perkiomen turnpike, from the "Black Bear" to the "Red Lion" Inns, are several settlements approaching hamlets in appearance, and which are known locally as "Woodville" and "Suckertown." Neither has any business place connected with it.

On the present Samuel Kaufman farm, formerly owned by one of the Boones, is part of a stone building erected in 1733, which is yet in good condition.

Other old houses are along the Monocacy, among them being the one now owned by James Lee, formerly the Isaac Christian place, the Lees, Hughes, etc. They are all stone and some of them two stories high.

CHURCHES.

FRIENDS' MEETING-HOUSE is situate in the Monocacy Valley and on the Amity line. It is a plain stone building, built similar to, but a little larger than, the ordinary country school-house. Like the habits of the sect for which it was designed, it was finished in a simple, but neat style. Meetings are still held regularly, but there are few attendants besides the Baileys, Shoemakers and Lees, some of whom come from a distance. The Monthly Meetings are attended by Friends from Reading, Robeson and Maiden-creek, in addition to the foregoing. The cemetery is inclosed with a substantial stone fence, and contains so many interments that some graves are on top of others. The site is pleasant, and the place for a meeting-house was well selected, at that time having been a central point for large settlements of Friends in the valleys of the Monocacy and the Manatawuy. The one acre of land on which the house was built was part of a two hundred and seventy-seven-acre tract which had been patented by Thomas Penn to George Boone in 1734, and was deeded by Boone and his wife, Deborah, to Anthony Lee, John Webb and Squire Boone, for a consideration of twenty shillings, December 24, 1736. The same day they, in turn, conveyed the land to Ellis Hugh, Thomas Ellis and James Boone in trust, "for a house and place of religious worship for meeting for the people called Quakers, within said township of Oley, and shall permit and suffer the said piece of land wherein ye said messuage stands, and is erected . . . to be and remain a burying-place for ye burying and intering of all such persous as the people called Quakers within ye said township shall allow of, and to and for no other use and service whatsoever."

It is probable that the first meeting-house was erected prior to this date (December 24, 1736), but the first Monthly Meeting appears to have been held June 25, 1737. At the meeting in the Eighth Month, Anthony Lee and Richard Lundy were chosen additional elders; and at the Tenth Monthly Meeting Ellis
Hughes and James Boone were appointed overseers in place of Thomas Ellis and Anthony Lee. The Eleventh Monthly Meeting, in 1737, was held in the meeting-house in Maiden-creek, with which society this organization has always been connected in holding Monthly Meetings.

Exeter having been set off from Oley, in 1742, the name of the meeting, which was up to that time Oley, was changed to Exeter (March 3, 1742), and the first recorded meeting as Exeter was held April 24, 1742. Though so many changes have taken place that scarcely any members are left, those remaining must be commended for their adherence to the faith of the fathers and the consistent service they maintain when the future of the meeting seems so inauspicious.

This meeting-house is mentioned in a petition, presented to the court at Philadelphia, in 1727, for a road "from the Lutheran Meeting-House at Tulpehocken creek to the High Road at the Quaker Meeting-House near the Mill of George Boone, in Oley." By this petition it appears that both a mill and a meeting-house were then in existence, and that the inhabitants of the surrounding country had their grists ground in the vicinity of their settlements, instead of having been compelled to proceed to the Perkiomen Mills, thirty miles distant, for that purpose.

Schwartzwald Church (Reformed and Lutheran) is near the centre of the township. Its early history is obscure, inasmuch as no records have been preserved. It was founded at such an early day that no personal recollection is authentic. But from contemporary accounts it is learned that a log church was built as early as 1754, in which worshipped Reformed and Lutheran congregations, whose early ministry was the same as those of the Trinity Lutheran Church of Reading and the First Reformed Church of the same place. This church was used until 1810, when a new stone church was built upon the same lot of ground. It was built after the custom of that day, being almost square, and having three galleries, a tulip-shaped pulpit and a good pipe-organ, which was consecrated November 10, 1811, when services were held in both the English and German languages. Early in 1870 it was determined to erect a new church, as the old one had insufficient accommodations and bore the appearance of age so that it was unattractive. Accordingly, a building committee was appointed, consisting of Joseph Levan, Benjamin S. Ritter, Simpson Garber, Joseph Kissling and John Heister, and they labored so zealously that the present edifice was completed before the close of the year. The old church was torn down in the early part of June and the corner-stone of the new church was laid July 17, 1870. The consecration took place December 18, 1870. It is a brick structure, fifty by seventy-eight feet, and was completed at a cost of twelve thousand dollars. On the church is a square spire, containing a superior, rich-toned bell. The interior is finely finished and has a seating capacity for eight hundred people. In the rear of the pulpit is a fine life-size painting of Christ, standing at an open door. This was presented to the church in the spring of 1871 by Benjamin S. Ritter. A new organ was purchased in 1875, and sheds for the comfort of the horses of the members have also been built.

The Reformed congregation reported five hundred and fifty members in 1886, and the Rev. Aaron S. Leinbach and his son, John H., as pastors. The former has officiated here thirty-eight years. He preaches in the German language, while the latter has English services, thus giving a dual pastorate. The predecessor of these was the Rev. Wm. Pauli, who sustained a pastoral relation many years.

The Lutheran congregation has a smaller membership, there being about three hundred members under the pastoral care of the Rev. B. D. Zweizig, who served for the past twenty years. His predecessors were the Revs. Kuendig, Wagner and Miller. One-third of the preaching is in the English. North of the church is the Schwartzwald Cemetery, containing five acres. It includes the old burial-ground and lot of the church (one acre). The improvements are substantial and the older part of the cemetery has been planted with fine trees and shrubs. It is controlled by the "Schwartz-wald Cemetery Association," which was incorporated on November 18, 1859. The petitioners for incorporation were,—

For the past twenty-seven years the church and cemetery have been in charge of Sexton William Ebbert. The trustees of the Cemetery Association for 1886, are A. Herbein, president; A. J. Brumbach, secretary; B. S. Ritter, treasurer; Joseph Snyder, Cyrus Levan, David Lutz, Samuel B. Knabb.

In the eastern part of the township are a number of private burial-grounds, some inclosed with good stone walls and neatly kept, while others, on farms which have passed out of the hands of the original owners, are in a neglected condition.

Baumstown Chapel (Reformed) is a plain frame building, thirty by forty feet, on an undivided lot of ground, long regarded as a commons. A part of this has been inclosed and forms a small cemetery. It was built about forty years ago and in 1885 was controlled by Trustees H. Y. Linderman, Philip Lott and Amos Redcay. Since February 8, 1869, the congregation has been an organized body; but as the membership is small, little attention is paid to the details of the organization. Some of the pastors of the Amity Church have occasionally preached in this church, and until recently the Rev. M. H. Mishler was the pastor. The Rev. A. H. Liess lately began preaching here. In the chapel a good Sunday-school has been maintained for a number of years, having as a former superintendent H. Y. Stoner, and William B. Potts as the present. There are about ninety members.

Below Baumstown is another chapel, nominally belonging to the "United Brethren in Christ," but which has lately become the property of Daniel Bowars, by purchase. It was built in 1869, and for a time occupied by a flourishing congregation. The removal of members, however, and other causes have interfered with the prosperity of the society, so that only occasional services are held. The building is a plain frame structure and stands on one acre of land, purchased from the farm of George Wamsher.

Stonesville Sunday-School Chapel was built in the fall of 1885, for the use of a Union Sunday-school, organized in April, 1882. D. V. R. Ludwig has been superintendent since its organization. The chapel stands upon a lot donated by Sarah A. Young and is a neat frame building, thirty by fifty feet, costing one thousand dollars. It was erected by Ammon M. Kline, Charles B. Rice and D. V. R. Ludwig as a committee for the Sunday-school.

Schools.—The oldest school-house in the township was the one erected by the Friends at their meeting-house, and in which schools were maintained from 1790 till 1860, when the property was sold to the township, to be used as a public-school building. The schools until that were subscription schools, patronized by the people generally. Some of the principal teachers were James Boone, Thomas Cherington, Abner Thomas, John Lee, Ellis Lee and James Lee.

In 1885 there were twelve districts in the township, each provided with its own school building. Those recently erected are very attractive. The Hill school-house was built in 1885, and among other improvements contains a furnace for heating purposes. It has patent furniture and slate blackboards. The cost was about twelve hundred dollars. In all the districts the schools are conducted for five months annually, and this is supplemented, in some districts, by private schools in summer.

Villages.

A few miles east from Reading, at the intersection of the Oley and Perkiomen turnpikes, an inn has been kept almost from the time the country was first settled. It is widely known as the "Black Bear," from the picture of that animal painted on the sign, and having a bountiful supply of superior water, no teamster thinks of passing by without refreshing his teams. Jacob Maury was one of the early landlords, but for the past twenty years it has been kept by George Hill and his son, Levi.
St. Lawrence is situated on the Oley turnpike and extends along this prominent highway from Antietam Creek for a mile. The name arose from a certain class of woolen and cotton goods in 1856 which were manufactured by Wm. Brumbaugh, and sold at the commission house of T. P. Remington, Philadelphia.

Jacob Brumbaugh first started the manufacture of woolen goods here about 1840, in the building above the turnpike lately known as "Yerger's hat factory." In 1842 he and his brother William carried on the business until 1850; then William took and continued it alone until 1856, when he removed the machinery to a mill a mile down the creek, known as the "Brumbaugh Mill." This was formerly a grist-mill, and William Brumbaugh converted it into a woolen-mill in 1853. In 1857 he erected a second mill. In 1862 both mills were destroyed by fire, loss being $75,000. They were then rebuilt by Albert J. Brumbaugh, his son, the present enterprising and successful proprietor, who has carried on the business since. In 1881 he ran three sets of machines, employed forty-five persons, and made annual sales amounting to $100,000.

Hats were first manufactured here by Moyer Siegel and John Siegel in 1850. This business was carried on for about thirty years by various parties, among them M. & J. Seigal, Stauffer & Kretz, John Yerger and Schulhoff Brothers.

The Levan Brothers (Daniel and Joseph) began the manufacture of glue here in 1874, when they erected their present large factory. They had for some years before carried on the business at Reading, in a building on Cherry Street, below Eleventh, where their father and grandfather had manufactured glue for many years.

James Z. Griesemer has carried on a grist and saw-mill for a number of years on Antietam Creek, at the crossing of the "Oley Turnpike."

In 1881 the village had fifty-four dwellings and two hundred and sixty inhabitants.

Camp No. 230, P. O. S. of A., at St. Lawrence, holds its meetings in a building, near the Brumbaugh factory, but a new hall will be especially built for it in 1886, on an eligible site on the turnpike. There are one hundred and six members and property valued at nearly three thousand dollars.

Jacksonwald was named after John Jackson, who built a large hotel there in 1870, and in November of the same year succeeded in having a post-office established with the name of the hamlet. Jackson was appointed postmaster and still holds that position. There is a daily mail from Reading. In the vicinity is the "Schwartzwald Church" and eight or ten houses, occupied by people who have been attracted by the beauty of this locality. Near by is the "Centre Hotel" of P. Althouse, and a mile east was formerly the old Amos Ritter tavern, now used as a farm residence.

Dr. J. Y. Hoffman, who graduated from the Jefferson Medical College in 1880, has been located as a practitioner at Jacksonwald since 1882, being the successor of Dr. Martin L. Bertolet, who settled there in 1878, and after practicing four years removed to the West. Prior to that time Dr. Peter Snyder was in practice in that part of the township. He removed in 1888.

Dr. John B. Greisemer has practiced the healing art in Exeter township for many years, residing at present near the "Black Bear." For several years Dr. H. M. Nagle was at Stonerville, and Dr. T. L. Leidy and Dr. J. B. Kern were each in practice several years, in the same locality.

Lime Kiln, commonly known as Snyderville, is situated on the Monocacy, at the Oley line, and contains a store, tavern, post-office and half a dozen residences in the immediate locality.

The business house was built in 1835 by Jacob and Peter Snyder, the former becoming the owner in 1842, and the property still remains in his family. Jacob Snyder had the first public-house and Augustus Miller the store. The latter is now kept by Charles S. Snyder and the former by Jacob H. Snyder. The Lime Kiln post-office was established in 1870 (the name originated from the lime kiln near by) and Jacob C. Snyder was the postmaster. This position is now held by John H. Snyder. At that place is an octagonal stone building, erected in 1833, on the Gehr (now Cleaver) farm, which was recently repaired and supplied with a belfry. It is used for public gatherings and Sunday-school purposes, and is controlled by Trustees John H. Snyder and Samuel B. Knabb.

The building was erected for private schools and replaced an old log school-house on the same site, which was built soon after 1800. It was, next to the Moravian school in Oley, the oldest in this part of the county. Lime Kiln, or Oley Line has an attractive location and has lately been substantially improved by the erection of several fine buildings.

Washington Camp, No. 221 P. O. S. of A., was instituted at Oley Line July 30, 1874, but held its first meetings at Griesemerville. In 1886 there were seventy-eight members who met statedly in a hall in the Snyder building, having as principal officers, President, George M. Ruth; Vice-President, Isaac Herbein; Secretary, John S. Snyder; Treasurer, C. S. Snyder; Trustees, J. G. Herbein, B. H. Altenderfer, D. V. R. Ludwig.

The camp is in a prosperous condition, having property to the amount of eighteen hundred dollars.

Stonesville, a hamlet of about fifteen buildings, is east of the centre of the township, and became a business place in 1813, when Philip Boyer opened a hotel called the “Compass,” from the figure of that instrument painted on the sign. Philip Boyer was succeeded by his son John, who sold out to George Stoner in 1847. The latter was a man of great energy. He built an addition to the house, and also opened a store, in which was kept the post-office, established with the name of Stonersville. This title was then applied to the locality and has since been continued. Stoner’s tavern was largely patronized by drovers, and for their accommodation he had a forty-acre pasture field opposite the hotel. In 1848 he erected a large brick shed on the roadside. After a few years the business declined, leaving this large building almost useless. This change was caused by the railroad. Stoner removed to the “Red Lion” in 1863 and Daniel H. Snyder became the proprietor of the hotel. In 1881 David K. Young succeeded him and it is now continued by John K. Young. Since 1882 the store has been kept by D. V. R. Ludwig, who was also postmaster until 1885, when Jacob F. Goldin received the appointment. It is served with a daily mail by the Boyertown stage on the route from Reading to Boyertown. At and near this place are several old established mechanics’ shops. Moses Boone has pursued the business of a wheelwright for many years.

Baumstown, at the lower end of the township, on the highlands, traversed by the Perkiomen turnpike, one mile from the Schnyldkill, is the oldest hamlet in the township, and is more of the nature of a straggling village. The site was first surveyed in 1733 and the following year two hundred and fifty-one acres were patented to Rudolph Wachler. Stephen Boltz became a later owner, and he, in 1792, deeded some land to Wm. Witman, who, about 1795 or 1796, laid out a town on a comprehensive scale, which he called Ecetertown. July 3, 1796, he conveyed the first lot to Frederick Kopp, of Robeson township, for ten silver dollars; but it does not appear that he succeeded in making many sales to actual settlers, and, about 1800, he sold out his town to Dr. John Christian Baum. It was from him that the place took its present name some years later. Dr. Baum lived there and followed his profession, and was father of Dr. John Baum, who practiced his profession for a number of years at the Yellow House. A later physician at Baumstown was Dr. Ernst Baggie, who died at the “Red Lion” soon after 1864. At Baumstown a public-house was kept many years, but not since 1868, when Edmund Levan was the landlord. Other keepers were E. Dengler and Capt. George Newkirk. The nearness of Birdsboro has made the business of tavern-keeping and also of merchandising unprofitable at Baumstown. The “Red Lion” inn was established on this road a mile above Baumstown by Nicholas Hoerner in 1760. During its early history, for twenty years it was known as the “King George.” It is now owned by Solomon Stoner, a successful merchant in the township for many years.
Lionel Leinberger, a Jew, had the first store in part of the old Baum house. Samuel Hechler built a store fifty years ago and since 1854 H. Y. Linderman has been his successor. At this store is kept the Baumstown post-office, established in 1835, and which at present has one mail daily from Birdsboro. The postmaster is F. J. Luiderman. Among the early mechanics at this place were Ezekiel Jones, Jacob Kerlin and John Moyer. Birdsboro Station, Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, is in Exeter. The depot buildings are new and very attractive in external appearance and interior arrangement.

BIографICAL.

Joseph Levand is of Huguenot descent, and the grandson of Jacob Levan, whose son Abraham married Maria Bechtel. The children of this marriage are Susan, Jacob, Elizabeth, Joseph Abraham and two who died in childhood. Abraham Levan spent his life on the farm now owned by Jacob Levan. His son, Joseph Levan, was born on the 9th of June, 1803, and with his brothers and sisters inherited the homestead, where he devoted his life to agriculture and was regarded as one of the most successful farmers of the township. He was married to Caroline Matilda, daughter of Peter Bechtel, of Caernarvon township. Their children were Mary, deceased, born December 3, 1836; Joseph, deceased, born March 29, 1838; Abraham, born January 18, 1841; Jacob, September 5, 1848; Cyrus, December 18, 1849; Nathan, July 5, 1854; and David, December 24, 1859. Joseph Levan being the only one of his father's children who was married, he for many years lived upon the paternal homestead. He was an earnest Democrat in politics and among the foremost to defend the principles of his party. He was frequently chosen as a delegate to County Conventions and held various township offices, more from a sense of duty than from preference. His integrity and scrupulous honesty caused him often to be made guardian, executor and administrator, which positions were filled with ability and fidelity. Mr. Levan was a member of the Schwartzwald German Reformed Church, in which he was both a deacon and an elder; all his children became members of the same church. He was a member of the building committee at the time of the erection of the church building and contributed liberally toward paying the debt. He died December 10, 1872. His widow survives and lives in Exeter township. Jacob Levan resides upon the farm which was the place of his birth and has followed the employment of a farmer all his life. He was married to Elizabeth, daughter of John and Joan Kerper, of Exeter township, in 1882. They have two children, Caroline Amelia and Jacob. Cyrus Levan is also a prosperous farmer in the same township. He married Susan, daughter of Benjamin Trout. Their surviving children are Jacob, Edwin and Harry. Abraham Levan has retired from his labors as a farmer and resides in Exeter township. He married Sally Davis and has no living children. Nathan Levan resides in Exeter township. He married Amanda, daughter of John and Joan Kerper and has two children, Mary and Joseph. David Levan graduated from Franklin and Marshall College and is now engaged in the study of law.

Ephraim Schneider is a descendant of Hans Schneider, the progenitor of the branches of the Schneider family residing in Exeter and Oley townships, Berks County. He emigrated from Switzerland before the Revolutionary War, and settled on a tract of land at present known as "Oley Line." Ephraim Schneider was born October 11, 1822, in Exeter township, on the Schneider mill farm, on a part of which stands his present home. The grist-mill and farm were deeded to his grandfather, Daniel Schneider, by his great-grandfather, Peter Schneider, and again willed by his grandfather Daniel to his son, Daniel K. Schneider. The grist-mill and part of the land are now owned and occupied by William H. Schneider, who was for six consecutive times elected justice of the peace (1855 to 1885). Daniel Schneider, grandfather of Ephraim, served in the army during the Revolutionary War, and on his return from Valley Forge, where Washington's army was encamped, narrowly escaped death from the severity of the cold. He married Sarah Knabb, and had among their chilchildren a son, Daniel K., the eldest of the family, who carried on the well-known Schneider mill. He commanded a company of militia on the breaking out of the War of 1812, but by unfair means was later deprived of his command, which he much regretted in after-life. He filled for three years the office of county commissioner, and was one of the incorporators of the Berks County Mutual Fire Insurance Company, of which he was the first president. He died on the 4th of March, 1872, in his eighty-fourth year. Daniel K. Schneider married Mary Lies. Their children were Solomon and Henrietta, married to John Bechtel. By a second marriage, with Catherine Herbine, of Exeter township, he had the following-named children: Ephraim, Daniel, William, Augustus, Amelia, (Mrs. Levan), Susan (Mrs. Faber), Catherine (Mrs. Girst), and Lydia (deceased). Ephraim Schneider has spent his whole life in the township of his birth. He learned the trade of a millwright, but finding it necessary to be much away from home in the pursuit of his vocation, finally abandoned it, and purchasing a farm at Stonerville, in Exeter township, devoted his attention to farming. At a later date he bought another farm, on which he now resides. He was, in 1844, married to Rebecca, daughter of Jacob and Susan Knabb Dehart. Their children are William, born June 25, 1846; Sarah M., October 29, 1848; Kate (Mrs. Peter Harbine), September 25, 1850; Ezra, January 25, 1855; Calvin, October 16, 1858; Rosa, February 21, 1861, deceased; Mary Ann, April 2, 1863; and Daniel, an infant. The grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Schneider are Elizabeth M., Calvin and Cora, children of William Schneider, and Lizzie, Alice, Charles (deceased) and Gertrude, children of Peter and Kate Harbine. Mr. Schneider, as a Democrat, is active and influential in local politics. He is interested in the lumber business. He and... his family are members of the Schwartzwald Reformed Church, in which he has filled the offices of trustee, deacon and elder.

ALSACE TOWNSHIP.

ERECTIOOF TOWNSHIP.—Jacob Spangler, Dewalt Baum, Johannes Haweacker, Henry Suider, Philip S. Hare, Peter Smith, Heinrich Guthard, Heinrich Gerhard and Michael Graul subscribed a petition which was presented to the Court of Quarter Sessions of Philadelphia County on December 2, 1744, in which they represented that a sufficient quantity of land had become settled, and that they labored under such inconveniences as to entitle them to be erected into a separate township; that the first settlers had come from a place in Germany, called Elsas, and that they therefore desired the township to be called by that name. The court ordered a survey of the district to be made; and the survey was accordingly made by Edward Scull, surveyor, who reported the following description:

"Beginning at a corner of Exeter township, on the northeast bank of the Schuylkill river; thence by said township N. 33° 57' E. 87 perches; S. 57° E. 70 perches; N. 33° 11' 54 perches; N. 70° E. 400 perches to a road leading to Philadelphia; thence along said road 167 perches to a corner of Oley township; thence by the same N. 20° E. 490 perches; thence by vacant land and the Manor of Ruscomb, N. 45° W. 1730 perches; thence S. 65° W. 817 perches to Schuylkill River; thence down the river about seven miles to the place of beginning, containing 23,270 acres."

The surveyor-general, William Parsons, examined the survey and certified on March 3, 1745, that it did not interfere with any other township; and on the following day it was erected into a township, to be known as "Alsace."

The area of the township was reduced upon several occasions—first, by erecting the town of Reading into a separate district or township in 1761, and upon its enlargement as a borough in 1783, and a city in 1847; again, upon the erection of Muhlenberg township, in 1851, out of that portion of its territory which lay to the north of Reading and to the west of Penn’s Mount. And in 1850 another reduction was made by cutting off the "Poplar Neck" and lands adjacent, extending to "Neversink," together with over three hundred acres, and adding it to Cumru township—this having been deemed advisable as a matter of convenience in respect to roads, schools and elections. This body of land is the only portion of the county lying to the east of the Schuylkill which is connected with a district lying to the west.

EARLY WARRANTS.—In pursuance of an application by Andrew Robeson for five hundred acres of land, a tract was surveyed for him on August 26, 1714. The northern line began "on the east side of the Schuylkill, at a black-oak, near the ford where the old road leads to Turphahoking;" and the southern line ran along "Neversink’s land." This comprised what is now the southwestern section of Reading. The survey was abandoned for some unknown reason. The Indians may have objected, because the land lay beyond the "Lechay Hills" (South Mountain). Several years afterward, in 1718, Robeson purchased one thousand acres south of this natural boundary line.

A large tract of land, containing three hundred and seventy-five acres, in the extreme lower section of the township, adjoining the Schuylkill, was patented to Edward Farmer in 1785, under the name of "Poplar Neck." Nicholas Scull, surveyor, made use of the same name in entering notes of a survey in that locality in his note-book on December 11, 1734. The greater part of this tract (two hundred and thirteen acres) became vested in Samuel High, of Oley, by deed, dated February 20, 1746. And this land has been transmitted in an unbroken line in the High family from that time till now, a period covering one hundred and forty years. The name was given to this neck of land (formed by a bend in the river) from the poplar trees which were found growing there, and this same species of tree is still found there growing with great vigor. The land is now owned and occupied by Ezra High, a superior farmer and exemplary man.

In the extreme northern end of the township there is a parallel case of the transmission of land in one family in an unbroken line, for nearly a hundred years. In 1737 a tract of one hundred and forty-four acres, called the "Four Corners," was surveyed to Conrad Koh (or Cook), and he conveyed his right, in 1741, to Dietrich Bydelman. Dietrich Shalter migrated from Goshenhoppen to this land and hired himself to Bydelman, and soon afterward married his only child. Bydelman obtained the patent for the tract mentioned, and two other tracts in 1770 and 1771, together containing two hundred and forty-two acres; and in 1791 he conveyed these tracts to his son-in-law, Dietrich Shalter, from whom this land has been transmitted in the Shalter name till the present time. Benjamin S. Shalter (a great-grandson of Bydelman) became the owner in 1835, and died in possession in 1884. It is still in the family. Mr. Shalter was a progressive farmer and recognized for his honor and honesty; and notwithstanding that his land is situated on the hills, he has brought it to, and continued it in, a high state of cultivation. He was a man possessed of much public spirit. His Christian generosity won for him the highest esteem of his fellow-citizens. The church erected near by, in 1860, commonly known as the "Shalter Church," is mainly attributable to his energy, and his great desire to promote the public welfare of his neighborhood, he having donated the land, contributed much building material and subscribed five hundred dollars toward the enterprise, together amounting to about three-fourths of the total cost.

TAXABLES FOR 1759.—The following list comprises the names of the taxables of the township in 1759. The total amount of tax then levied was fifty-four pounds nineteen shillings. Samuel High was the collector:

The "Manor of Penn's Mount" lay principally in this township. It extended into Exeter on the south and into Maiden-creek on the north, and comprised two hundred and thirty-two tracts of land, mostly small in area, containing together (exclusive of patented land) eleven thousand one hundred and ninety-six acres, one hundred and eight perches. The survey was made in June, 1789, by Cadwalader Evans, Jr. Many tracts were owned by inhabitants of Reading, but the great majority of them were owned by farmers. The "Manor" was known for many years before. It was set apart by warrant dated November 25, 1748, for the use of the Penns, and, after having been surveyed, it was returned January 21, 1755. It contained in the whole twelve thousand two hundred acres.¹

¹A copy of a draft of this "Manor," containing a connected draft of all the tracts, is in the possession of Ken-
These industries are yet carried on by his. For many years Enoch Caller operated a paper-mill at the next power down the valley. He occupied a large log building, a part of which served as a residence. The mill was destroyed by fire and the power was afterward taken when "Antietam Lake" was constructed. Near by a forge was run by Philip Seidel, and sold by him to Philip Burkert, who built a grist-mill, which was subsequently operated as an oil-mill. Philip Burkert also had a forge below what is now Antietam Lake; but it has long since been abandoned. A little more than a quarter of a mile lower down Conrad Feger had a paper-mill in a large wooden building, which was destroyed by fire. It was rebuilt by C. Van Reed, and again burned down. Dr. C. Reber next had it as a paper-mill, and this site is now occupied by Kremer's woolen-mill.

Louis Kraemer is of German nationality, and the son of Ferdinand and Catherine Kraemer, who resided in Berleburg, Westphalia, where the former was in early life a merchant. In 1830 he exchanged his city property for a farm in the suburbs. His son Louis was born on the 2d of January, 1828, in Berleburg, and until the age of sixteen remained upon his father's farm, meanwhile attending the neighboring school. He then chose his vocation in life—that of a dyer—and, removing to Barmen, in the Rhine province, devoted four years to perfecting himself in his trade. Seeking a wider field of operation than was offered at home, he, in 1848, emigrated to America, and remained six years in the employ of Joseph Ripka, at Manayunk, now a part of Philadelphia, as a dyer. In 1854 he assumed charge of a large dyeing establishment at Norwich, Conn., and remained thus engaged until 1865. The previous fall, in connection with other partners, he purchased the site on which the present Stony Creek Mills are erected, and, in the summer of 1865, the firm of Kraemer, Schaefer & Co. began the erection of buildings which have since been remodeled and replaced by more commodious structures, the present factory and its adjuncts having been erected since 1875. The attention of the inhabitants of Alsace has lately been directed to vineyards and truck gardening, and many have found profitable employment in these occupations. Aug. Wentzel has fine truck gardens near Reading, and in the lower part of the township, on the slopes of Penn's Mount, are the vineyards of Eberhart Barth, John Reininger, George Reininger and John Fisher, each being several acres in extent. Others have lately engaged in these industries and are long the apparently sterile mountain-side will be rendered more productive than some of the low lands of the county.

The surface is rolling and mountainous. The soil is principally a gravel nature and where cultivated is generally very productive. The eastern and southeastern sections are particularly adapted to the cultivation of the grape, different berries, fruits and vegetables. The farmers, by industry and perseverance, in these sections, have been very successful. It is rather surprising that they have cleared and cultivated such a large area of land upon and amongst the hills.

There is not a general store in the township. It has four licensed taverns; these were for many years and still are known as Dengler's, Babb's, Fies' and Heckman's. And notwithstanding its riches and importance and its possession by a thrifty, energetic and prolific people, it has not a single town nor a village that is recognized by any name. It did not even have a post-office for many years, "Stony Creek Mills" having been established in 1879. Its proximity to Reading and the almost daily, at least weekly, visits of its inhabitants to the county-town enabled them to procure merchandise and receive their mail matter; the want of stores and post-office was therefore not felt.

CHURCHES.

ZION'S CHURCH, known in the beginning and still commonly called "Spies' Church," is situated in the eastern section of the township. It was first established in 1774, on a small tract of land donated by Victorious Spies. Burials were permitted by him in the ground for about five years before. Prominent among the first trustees were Spies and Paul Feger. In 1810 a large two-story stone structure was erected in the place of the old building, the trustees at the time having been Paul Bar, John Babb, George Schade and Peter Knabb, and the ministers, J. Frederick Herman, Reformed; and Henry A. Muhlenberg, Lutheran. Rev. A. L. Herman preached to the congregation during the long period of forty-three years. J. P. Herline officiated as organist from 1839 to 1858. He was then succeeded by William C. Keller, who still officiates in this capacity. The building of 1810 is still used for religious services by the Lutheran and Reformed denominations. A Cemetery Company was incorporated April 16, 1861. The charter members were:

Valentine Hartman. Jacob Volk.
Frederick Hinnershitz. Peter Hartman.
Gottfried Lutz. George B. Hartman.
George Schottman. Jacob Hoch.
Daniel Schmeck. Matthias Moyer.
Peter Fries. Nathan Knabb.

A tract of four acres was purchased for the purposes of a cemetery and added to the church property in 1860. It is pleasantly located on the hill-side. It is laid off in squares and many fine marble grave-stones and monuments have been erected. The lots number three hundred and eighty-six, and they have nearly all been sold.

Rev. T. T. Iaeger has been the Lutheran pastor for the past thirty years; and Rev. A. S. Leinbach, the Reformed for the past fifteen years.

Shalter Church, also known as the "Salem's Church" is situated in the northern part of the township. It was erected in 1860, the corner-stone having been laid on the 9th of April, and the dedication having taken place on the 24th of October. The building is a two-story stone structure, plastered and painted in imitation of brick. The upper room is the auditorium, with a seating capacity of three hundred. The congregation numbers five hundred members. The first story is used for Sunday-school purposes. It takes its name after Benjamin Shalter, who was the most liberal contributor towards its erection. The property includes a burial-ground in area about two acres. Dieter Beitelman (Bydelman) first set apart a small tract of land here for a burying-ground, and advised burials to be made in it. This was in 1790. His body was buried in it, a grave-stone marking the resting place, with an inscription:

Dietrich Beitelman,
Born June 15, 1790; died February 16, 1793;
Aged 88 years, 8 months.

Faith Chapel was erected by Trinity Lutheran congregation during the year 1885, in connection with two other chapels in Reading. It is situated in the village of "Woodvale," on the road to Friedensburg. Regular church and Sunday-school services are conducted there. It is mentioned in connection with Trinity Church of Reading.

The following extracts are taken from an article entitled "Zion's Hill," which I wrote and published in the Reading Times and Dispatch on the 30th of June, 1881, and, being applicable to our churches and districts generally, they are introduced in this connection:

"This church has the highest location of any in the county; and, though not one of the oldest, it is nevertheless to be classed with our early churches. The religious organizations which worship in it are Lutheran and Reformed. Both have a large membership. Each organization holds services in the church alternately every two weeks. The services are conducted altogether in the German language. This language has been in constant use from the beginning of the church until now. In many respects this is a representative church of the county. The people of the vicinity for miles are attached to it, and their attachment is manifested through their devotion. This religious quality has been transmitted unto them, for their parents and grand-parents exhibited it in an equal degree. It was productive of great good to their progenitors; and it is now equally and similarly fruitful to them in various ways. They are not boastful of that religious progress which too often begets hurtful pride, especially in an agricultural people; and they are not afflicted with intolerance. They have indeed the religion of their fathers, inculcated by such distinguished ministers as Muhlenberg and Miller, Herman Iaeger and Leinbach. They are not cultured, but their intelligence enables them to show a contentment which a cultivated people too frequently do not enjoy. Their fellowship and hospitality manifest a degree of natural refinement which is truly praiseworthy. Continuous hard labor in cultivating the soil prohibits them from giving that attention to graceful demeanor which is demanded by social life in our cities. But they are a faithful people, and their untiring energy is generally rewarded with success. And their economic habits enable them to live well and comfortably. More worldly refinement would indispose them to give personally the same amount of labor to agriculture, and they would therefore be obliged to resort gradually to speculation for sustenance. I have observed these characteristics to be general throughout our country.

"The people, being contented, scarcely feel the force of government; taxation is light, crimes are limited, serious offenses are very seldom committed, a high order of morality is exhibited everywhere, untiring industry and a rather rigorous economy are daily practiced. These are certainly the elements of a law-abiding and prosperous people. And I think I can say that they are principally attributable to the form of religion which has been transmitted from generation to generation during this comparatively long period without any change. To us, therefore, it has been a fortunate circumstance in the preservation and development of our people. Their houses have not grown into costly palaces, their roads into railways, their horse-power into steam-power, their mail communication into the telegraph and telephone, their farms into out-lots, and their labor into speculation,—all these are generally the same as their fathers had them; but their rugged hill-sides have been made more fruitful, their manual labor has been gradually decreased by the introduction of labor-saving machinery, their intelligence has been improved by the encouragement of more schools and teachers, their general wealth has been increased, their health and longevity have been preserved, their names have been made stronger in influence and their sons and daughters have been multiplied. Who will say that the latter accomplishments are not of more importance to the well-being, stability and equality of a free people than the former?

"Steam and electricity are important agents amongst our people—particularly in our rapidly-growing and beautiful county-seat, whence they are extending in every direction. They are producing wonderful changes as well here as elsewhere. They are bringing us into closer proximity with each other every year. By our present condition and mode of life they are indispensable. But we cannot overlook the fact that they are gradually making us to be too much a speculative people, developing more and more our feelings into passions and our comforts into luxuries, and causing a more apparent social inequality through the enrichment of some at the expense of others; and we cannot deny the fact that they—though they should be valuable instruments in our hands for our uniform development—are in reality, to a considerable degree, misguided influences, which are working in us a gradual physical weakness and transmitting vast accumulations of wealth and high-spirited blood not much beyond a single generation. Why shall successful business men, whether in stocks or trade, or in or out of the useful professions, leave mostly only asylums, cemeteries and monuments for a gaping multitude? Why not blood, a living and self-perpetuating blood, that shall manifest itself in an ever-increasing nobility? Why not sentient living temples, instead of pyramids, sphinxes and tombs? Are we growing into a period when millionaires shall celebrate an age with uplifted brick and stone, iron and gold, carried aloft by a dependent people, as Cheops did with his subjects thousands of years ago? We want no golden calves to worship, no false gods to mock us. We rather want a hundred thousand people in every community to construct, without expense or suffering, by a common impulse, a social organization that shall carry us into a higher, real civilization and a certain immortality. We want a posterity that can take care of itself and that shall not be dependent upon trustees from an ordinary man with uncertain sureties to an extraordinary corporation with expert officers, whose financial management generally brings unto themselves self-aggrandizement and remarkable affluence and ease. We want a people that shall thrive by industry in productive labor and not by activity in consuming speculation. We want a posterity that shall transmit physical strength and laudable industry to the next generation, instead of great wealth and pride, re-uliting in imbecility and idleness. The contrast is apparent. By the latter we cannot fail to suffer eventually; but by the former we must continue to prosper and produce in ourselves and for our posterity a physical development and moral grandeur that shall make us a better, and preserve us a free people.

"This beautiful hill is expressive of our most prevalent religion. This inspiring religion has characterized and is still characterizing the great majority of our people. The qualities it has produced in us are the basis of our moral and substantial welfare. These have influenced our daily life, discouraged evil of every sort, and encouraged good, and directed industry into not only profitable, but useful channels. Our agricultural communities especially, from which we are daily receiving so much benefit, have been controlled and benefited by them. These results in us are apparent, not only lately, but from the beginning until now.

"A beacon light set upon this hill would scatter its bright rays far and wide in every direction and gladden many hearts. Every township in the county has a number of religious lights, who—beneficent rays have been directed by upright Lutheran and Reformed ministers from churches on the hills and in the valleys. Their ministrations have been blessed. They have not made us a brilliant but a successful people,—successful in having preserved an average development which is not inferior to any other. Health, longevity, industry, economy, wealth, intelligence, morality, increase in population and contentment—these make a strong, good and reliable people. And these qualities our people generally possess in a degree superior to that in which our ancestors possessed them. To what is this attributable? It must be attributable to some good influence, for they could not have been thus developed spontaneously through so long a period of time. And I may here observe that the county has received comparatively little benefit from immigration or any other outside influence, excepting the railway. So that the development has arisen principally from our own people themselves, under the continual guidance of some beneficent influence. This influence has been our simple but powerful religion.

"This is in reality the spirit of our people. It is the vitality that disposes us to be a good rather than a rich people. It tends more and more to create and preserve a general equality upon which the permanence of our free government depends. It teaches us that our highest ambition should and must ever be life, not wealth—rather to live well than to die rich; rather to transmit reliable principles than to bequeath property. A noble teacher is this, whose great and constant aim for us is nobility now and immortality hereafter. And, like 'Zion's Hill,' it will always have the bubbling waters of purity and excellence to flow in amongst us for our spiritual delectation; and it will remain permanent through all the fluctuations of an advancing civilization."

VILLAGES AND TAVERNS.—At Stony Creek Mills there is a collection of buildings which give the place the appearance of a village. Most of its inhabitants find employment in the woolen-mill and the neighboring vineyards. It contains no store. A tavern near by the mills is kept by George Babb. It was established in 1859 by John Babb, and has since been carried on by him. A post-office, bearing the name of the mills, was established in 1879 with Louis F. Cramer as postmaster, and Henry Cramer as deputy. There is a daily mail on the Friedensburg route, via this office, which also supplies the Alsace office, established in 1863.

On the Perkiomen turnpike a number of houses have been built, and the locality begins to assume the aspect of a business place. In 1884 Kendall Bros., of Reading, laid out a small town and named it "Woodvale." They sold some lots at public sale, and several buildings and a fine Lutheran chapel have been erected since. In 1820 there was a public-house kept by the Fry family. The present Mount Penn Hotel is kept by Charles Dengler, successor to George Dengler. A lumber and coal business is carried on by Aug. H. Wentzel, and several mechanic shops are maintained. A dozen dwellings are along the turnpike towards the Black Bear Inn, and a blacksmith-shop, carried on by Percival Leinbach, who has been there for a number of years.

North of the Stony Creek Mills is the oldest tavern in the township, kept since 1839 by Peter Fies. It was opened in another building on this site about seventy years ago, by Benjamin Tobias, and became the property of William Hartman, who was followed by Abraham Spies. Before the building of the East Penn Railroad the place had a large patronage and was a central point for a large scope of country. Several miles from here Jacob Hartman, a blind man, had a public-house which was well patronized on account of the misfortune of the owner. It was originally an old log building, but after Hartman's removal to the West a new tavern was built by a German named Rotherhoff. In the extreme corner of the township the Heckman tavern has afforded the public needed accommodations, and is still continued by that family.

HESSIAN CAMP.—On the southern declivity of "Penn's Mount," near Reading, certain prisoners, taken in the War of the Revolution, were encamped for a period of six years, from 1777 to 1783. They were mostly Hessians, and hence the place was called "Hessian Camp"—a name which the locality has retained to this day. Huts had been erected by them for their quarters. Depressions in the ground there still indicate the locality where they once stood.

MINERAL SPRING.—About 1815, Charles Kessler and John Spade erected a woolen-mill on Rose Valley Creek, in "Rosenthal," for the purpose of encouraging home industry. But the importation of foreign goods obliged them to abandon the experiment in 1818. About this time, Dr. Isaac Hiester discovered mineral water at a spring near by. He analyzed it and reported that it "contained iron, held in solution with carbonic acid gas, together with a small quantity of carbonate of soda." Then the dwelling was converted into an inn, and Jacob Schneider advertised it as a health resort. In 1837 it was converted into a "fashionable hotel," and carried on until 1856, when the Reading Water Company purchased the property. The mineral spring was walled out and an octagonal building erected over it, consisting of eight iron pillars, with open sides and covered with a roof. This building is still standing; but the spring is very nearly run dry, not so much from want of water as from want of care. The hotel has been famous for many years as a banqueting place. Before the Civil War the leaders of the Democratic party generally assembled here on the 4th of July for many successive years, and celebrated the day by responding to patriotic toasts and sentiments, etc. Madam Susan Roland and her most delicious "chickens and waffles" contributed much toward the popularity of this pleasant retreat by the side of the gurgling brook, over-shaded by tall oaks and button-woods. Her pleasant manners and superior cooking will be remembered for many years. She died April 6, 1883, aged seventy-nine years, after having occupied the place since 1850.

SCHILD MURDER.—A "most horrible murder" occurred on the hill several hundred yards southwardly from the Shalter Church, on August 12, 1812. The following account appeared in the Weekly Advertiser, August 15, 1812:

"It falls very unfortunately to our lot to communicate one of the most barbarous and murderous acts ever committed by a monster in human shape. On Wednesday, the 12th inst., after four o'clock in the afternoon, a man named John Schild, in Alsace township, about four miles from this place, began with an axe to cut up everything about and in the house. When his father (who lived close by) heard it, he went to him, and said, 'John! John! what are you doing?' John turned upon his father with the axe and cut him in the breast, when the father immediately turned around, holding his breast, and retreated to the house. John pursued him, cut him down, chopped half of his head off, threw it from him, then cut his body open, tore out his entrails and heart. His mother approaching him with exclamations, he cut her down in the very same manner, taking her bowels, heart and liver out, and threw it in the bake-oven, which had just before been heated by the family to bake bread. A younger brother, being near by, this monster now made at him with the axe, but the brother catching his arms, threw him down and fled. The monster then tried to set a dog after him, but the dog would not obey him, so he seized the dog, chopped his legs off, and threw his body also into the bake-oven. Then he set fire to the barn, which with all its contents was soon reduced to ashes. His wife and family had in the mean time fled to the woods, where they lay all night under a tree. His brother in a little while after came back to the horrible scene with some neighbors, to whom the monster, after having thrown away his deadly weapon, surrendered himself, and said, 'I am the person who has done all this.' The monster was arrested and conveyed to the goal of this place (Reading), where he is now confined. A coroner's inquest was held over the mangled remains of the parents of this savage monster! It is not in our power at present to add anything more. We wished rather to have passed it in silence, but something was expected."

Immediately after the murder the neighbors were terrorized so much as not to be willing to approach the place. But Dietrich Shalter (father of Benjamin, who was known to have great influence over Schild) went there, and finding Schild walking about with the axe on his shoulder said to him (in German), "Oh, John, what have you done?" He replied (also in German), "Yes, what have I done?"

Schild was tried in November following, convicted of murder in the first degree and sentenced to be hanged. His execution took place on the "Commons," at Reading, on January 30, 1813. An unusually large number of people assembled from all parts of the surrounding county to witness the scene. A full confession was made by the murderer before his execution. His body was buried on the hill near by the place where he committed the murder. Schild's father was sixty-eight years old and his mother sixty-five, when they were killed. Their bodies were buried in the burying-ground now a part of the Shalter Church property.

WENTZEL HORROR.—On Sunday morning, April 19, 1885, a small out-building on the property of Augustus H. Wentzel was burned. At the time of the occurrence the two sons of Mr. Wentzel and two workmen named Hettiger were sleeping there, and they perished in the flames. Albert Knoll, a weak-minded son.

1 Reading Advertiser, February 2, 1813.
of a neighbor, was arrested for the deed, but he was acquitted on the ground of insanity. This produced a profound sensation and moved the hearts of the entire community. The funeral services conducted at Zion's Church were attended by a multitude of sympathizing people from all parts of the county.

Political Prize Banner.—In 1852 the Democratic citizens of Reading proposed to present a "Prize Banner" to the political district which would show the largest increase in majority at the Presidential election. After the election it was ascertained that the largest increase had been made by Alsace township. Accordingly, a committee was appointed to make the presentation, on February 19, 1852, and a township committee was also appointed to receive the banner, which comprised the following active political workers of the township:

- Jacob Seidel, Sr.
- Joseph Marks.
- Daniel Gottshall.
- Abraham Hartman.
- Franklin Rothenberger.
- Henry Hinnershitz.
- John Seidel.
- Benjamin Barto.
- Simon Lies.
- Reuben Shalter.
- Benjamin Hill.
- Samuel Fick.
- Jacob Marks.
- Jacob Seidel, Jr.
- Frederick Seidel.
- Michael Lies.

The banner contained the following: On the obverse side there was a fine portrait of President Pierce, on white satin, with the patriotic motto in a scroll underneath:

"No North.
No South."

And on the reverse side, the following inscription, in gold, on a blue silk ground:

"Prize Banner,—Presented by the Democratic Citizens of Reading to the Democrats of Alsace for their devotion to the principles of Democracy."

The presentation was made at the public house of Peter Fies, by A. M. Stallade, Esq., chairman of the committee; and the banner was received by Hon. Henry A. Muhlenberg in behalf of the township. Other addresses were made, after which a bountiful dinner was enjoyed. About three hundred persons attended this exceptional meeting.

During the last thirty years the hills lands of Penn's Mount, overlooking Exeter township, have been highly improved. The grape has been largely cultivated.

Recently a resort has been established on the top of one of the hills of this township, and a distinguished Pennsylvania German poet, H. L. Fisher, Esq., of York, Pa., made it the subject of an interesting and expressive poem, after a pleasant visit with Mr. Thomas C. Zimmermann and others. With his permission it is introduced,—

MUHLENBERG TOWNSHIP.

ERECSTION OF TOWNSHIP.—The western section of the township of Alsace, from the upper to the lower extremity, is comparatively level, and comprises mostly fertile, lime-stone land; and the eastern section is remarkably hilly, and comprises rather sterile gravel land. The roads in the former were easily and cheaply repaired, but in the latter the repairs were frequent and expensive. This was a subject of complaint by the tax-payers of the former section for some years; finally, it culminated in an application to court, in 1849, for a division of the township. Aaron Albright, Dennis W. O'Brien and Henry Schoener were appointed commissioners to make and report the desired division.
On June 14, 1849, they reported a division, having run a line almost straight from a point near the Ruscomb-manor corner to the northernmost point of the Schuylkill bend, near the Big Dam, and having suggested for the western section (exclusive of the ground included in the limits of Reading) the name of "Neversink township." This report met with great opposition from the prominent men of the eastern section, among them Benjamin Shalter, Adam Heckman, Valentine Hartman, Peter Hartman and John Bernhart. Their exceptions prevailed, and the report was "set aside upon merits" on November 24, 1849. A review was asked for, and the court appointed M. S. Richards, Richard Boone and Benjamin Tyson commissioners. A re-survey was made by them on March 25, 1850. They considered the advisability of continuing the name of Alsace township for the western section, and of suggesting the name of "Manor township" for the eastern, inasmuch as the eastern was principally composed of the "Manor of Penn's Mount." Their report could not be found amongst the records in the Quarter Sessions of the county.

In May following a large and enthusiastic meeting was held at the public-house of Jacob Kerlin by tax-payers of the proposed western section who favored a division. Jacob S. Ebling was president of the meeting; John Ha-beracker, John Gehret, John Leimbach, John Schneider and Henry Leimbach were vice-presidents; and Francis Parvin and T. J. Weber secretaries. The following prominent men reported appropriate resolutions, which were adopted by the meeting: Daniel Shepp, Jacob Gehret, John Ulrich, George Spengler, Daniel Shell, John Dotterer, Peter Rothermel, Daniel Maurer, Jacob Maurer, Jacob Moyer, Daniel Zacharias, Sr., J. P. Ulrich, Simon Moyer, Ja-
Jacob Gehret, Sr., Edward Leader, Jonathan King, Henry Spengler, Henry Body; and a vigilance committee, consisting of sixty-nine members, was then appointed to promote the interests of the movement in behalf of the proposed new township. Shortly afterward the division was made by the court, and the western division was named Muhlenberg, the family of this name then owning a large quantity of land within its limits. It may be remarked, in this connection, that this is the only township named after a representative man of the county.

INDUSTRIES.

The old Leize mill, near the mouth of Laurel Run, was one of the first improvements of the kind in the present township.

The second mill, built of stone, by Adam Leize, was long operated by his son, Henry. The present brick mill was built by a later owner, Wm. Rothenberger. It has been supplied with steam-power, and it is now carried on by Peter Rothenberger.

On Spring Creek (commonly known as Bernhart's Run) near the mountain, the Leizes had a saw-mill, on a power which was later made to operate a hat-factory, owned by Wertz and others. Cotton batting was also made there. Twenty years ago the power was used to operate a grist-mill, which is now owned by John Grim. At the lower part of the valley there was the pioneer Rothermel saw-mill, and on its site such a mill was maintained until 1883, the property having passed into the hands of the Bernharts. A short distance above, clover and grist-mills were erected, both of which were demolished. The grist-mill was replaced by the present mill, which was built in 1856 by John Bernhart, and steam-power was introduced in 1876. The building is a large three-story brick, and is the property of the city of Reading, being on the tract purchased to obtain a water supply. Large reservoirs have here been constructed, from which the water flows by gravitation to the distributing reservoir and also through the streets of the city.

1 The record of this proceeding could not be found in the county court-house. On February 10, 1851, an act of Assembly was passed, ordering the qualified electors of Muhlenberg township to hold their general and township elections at the public-house of Gabriel Gehret, which was at the Temple; and on March 11th following an act was passed ordering such elections also in Alsace township, to be held at the public-house of Peter Fies.

Mount Laurel Furnace, near the mountain, on Laurel Run, was built in 1836 by John A. Bertolet, Mayberry Bertolet and Francis Palm as a charcoal furnace of small capacity, and shortly afterward it became the property of Samuel Kaufman. In 1846 it was sold to Wm. H. Clymer, who had it in blast pretty generally until 1872, when the charcoal furnace was abandoned and an anthracite furnace erected on its site. This improvement was made by the Clymer Iron Company, which was formed in 1873 and was composed of William H. Clymer, Edward C. Clymer and Heister Clymer, the former as president, the latter as secretary and treasurer. It has since been operated by that company. The officers in 1885 were Geo. E. Clymer, president; and Abraham Sweitzer, general manager.

The plant comprises about forty acres of land, with mansion and thirteen tenements. It is connected with the railroad at Temple station, one mile distant, by its own track. The product is about two hundred tons of good foundry iron a week.

The company also controls the Oley Furnace property, and operates it in connection with Mt. Laurel Furnace. It has been out of blast some years, and was last operated by Levan, Merkel & Co., from whom it passed to the present company.

Temple Furnace is located on the railroad, at Temple, the plant embracing a finely constructed anthracite furnace, with thirty-two acres of ground and eighteen tenements. The furnace was begun in 1867, and put in blast the following year by Wm. H. Clymer & Co., his brothers Edward, Heister and George E. being associated with him. He was the manager until March, 1871, when Isaac McHose secured an interest, and the firm became Clymer, McHose & Co., continuing as such until March 22, 1873, when the parties interested became an incorporated body, as the Temple Iron Co., of which Wm. H. Clymer was the president, and Ambrose A. McHose, secretary.

The property is still controlled by the Temple Iron Co., the present officers being Geo. F. Baer, president; Edward T. Clymer, secretary and treasurer. The furnace has been out of blast since May, 1883. Its capacity is two hundred and forty tons of foundry iron per week. The larger part of the ore has been obtained from the mines of this company in Berks and Lehigh Counties.

Shearer's Fruit Farms, near Tuckerton station, are among the most noteworthy interests of the township. They embrace one hundred and three acres of good land, which have been made doubly fertile by skillful cultivation. The proprietor, Christopher Shearer, located here in 1858 and first successfully cultivated grain and hay, producing immense quantities of the latter, but soon devoted his attention to the culture of potatoes and tobacco, as principal crops. About the same time he began setting his farm with fruit trees, planting in one year one thousand seven hundred Bartlett pear trees and near the same number of apple trees. All varieties of small fruits were also planted, and a peach orchard of two thousand trees started, while the area of his apple, pear and quince orchards was much increased. In 1885 there were two vineyards of sixteen acres, set almost wholly with the Clinton grape, and nearly the entire acreage of the farm was devoted to the culture of the fruits named, about twenty acres only being set aside for tobacco. The farm has been well improved, containing, in addition to the home buildings, six tenements, large refrigerators and nine vaults, three cider-presses and other appliances for storage and manufacturing purposes. About forty thousand gallons of wine are made annually. From ten to thirty men are constantly employed.

CHURCHES.

Alsace Church is situated on the road from Reading to Kutztown, on a tract of land which adjoins the northern boundary line of Reading. It was first established about 1740, the exact time being unknown. It is the oldest site of a church in the vicinity of Reading. The earliest records of the church have been lost. A burying-ground was included with the property from the beginning of the church. Many of the first residents of Reading, after the town was laid out, continued to worship there for many years notwithstanding the erection of separate church buildings by the Lutheran and Reformed denominations in the town. A new and fine two-story brick building was erected in 1850 on the old site, the corner stone having been laid May 9, 1850, and the dedication having taken place on October 19th to 20th following. This is probably the third church. It is a fine, large brick building and occupies a prominent position on a knoll, which renders it visible for many miles. In 1885 it was handsomely repaired and repainted; new windows with stained glass were introduced, and a neat baptismal font was procured. A life-size painting of Christ is on the wall in the rear of the pulpit.

It is a "union" church for Lutheran and Reformed congregations. In 1885 the elders were: Lutheran, Henry Saylor and W. Fisher; Reformed, Reuben Frederick and Amos Gehret. The membership then was: Lutheran, one hundred and ninety; Reformed, two hundred and forty-five.

A new cemetery was set apart in 1854, and sheds were erected to accommodate one hundred teams. The church is inclosed in a spacious yard.

The ministers who officiated here since 1850 have been Reverends Geissenheimer, Wagner, Iaeger and Huntzinger for the Lutheran congregation, and Reverends William Pauli, Augustus Pauli and A. S. Leinbach for the Reformed.

Hinnershitz Church is situated at Tuckerton, on an acre lot of land, adjoining the Centre turnpike, which was donated by William Hinnershitz (son of Conrad, an early and prominent settler in that section of the county) on February 17, 1849, for church purposes. During that year a large and handsome two-story brick building was erected by the people of that vicinity, and it was dedicated on April 28, 1850, taking the name of "Hinnershitz Church," after the generous donor who started the movement in its erection. Two additional acres were purchased for burying purposes. The building committee was composed of John Zacharias, George Maurer, Jonas Shalter and Peter Rothermel.

In 1882 the church was handsomely repaired and a fine new altar was supplied.
The elders in 1885 were: Lutheran, Frederick Hartman and James Schmeck; Reformed, James Keller and Lewis Breidegam.

The membership of the congregations is: Lutheran, one hundred and twenty; and Reformed, one hundred and thirty.

The pastors have been: Reformed, Reverends William Pauli, Augustus Pauli and Aaron S. Leinbach (the last name: officiating now); and Lutheran, Reverends G. F. J. Iaeger, T. T. Iaeger, and B. D. Zweizig (the latter being the present minister and having officiated for the past twenty-six years).

VILLAGES.

TUCKERTON.—Conrad Hinnershitz died in 1838, possessed of a farm containing two hundred and twenty-one acres in the vicinity of Tuckerton. His son William became owner of the land by devise, opened a lime-stone quarry and carried on the business of lime, coal and grain. This business started a station on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad. In 1850 it was known as Steeleville, having been named after J. Dutton Steele, the civil engineer of the road. In 1862 an application was made for a station, to be named "Tuckerton," after John Tucker, the first president of the road, which was granted. The station has been continued since by this name. Along the pike, a short distance to the east, a number of houses were then erected, forming quite a village. It took the name of the station. In 1881 it had thirty dwellings, a church, tavern, store, warehouse and one hundred and sixty-five inhabitants. A post-office, named "Schuylkill Bend" was established with Jonas Shalter as postmaster, in 1838; afterward it was changed to "Tuckerton," and Thomas Baum was the postmaster. J. A. Moyer is the present railroad station agent, having held that position a number of years. Hinnershitz erected stores and warehouses and was largely engaged in trade, being especially a heavy dealer in grain. He was succeeded by Daniel Baum and others, the present merchant being John A. Schaeffer. The first tavern in this vicinity was opened about 1845 by Solomon Horning and kept by him a number of years. The present landlord is Lewis Breidegam.

TEMPLE is the largest village in the township and has a pleasant location on the East Pennsylvania Railroad, of which it is a station. It contains a large furnace, store, hotel and about seventy buildings and three hundred inhabitants.

The place has collected about a prominent "cross-roads" on the Kutztown road, five miles from Reading. It derived its name from an old tavern, which stood here many years before 1800, and had for its sign a figure of King Solomon, painted in gorgeous colors, sitting on his throne. The portrait was remarkably well executed and thereby the place became widely known. It required no great inventive faculty to designate the tavern as the temple—a term by which it and the locality have been known the past sixty years. The sign was three by five feet and the post fifteen feet high. It was taken down about 1870. The tavern building was of logs and stone—the latter rough-cast—and owned, first, by members of the Hartman family. In 1836 the keeper was John Huyett, who leased it to Daniel Kerlin. Isaac Bieber was a later landlord. The present hotel was built by Daniel Kelechner in 1853, and kept by him about ten years. It has since been occupied by a number of landlords, the present occupant being William L. Granl. Shortly after the railroad station was opened and named "Temple"—the word "Solomon" was dropped.

Daniel Baum was the first merchant in the place, opposite the hotel, where he built a large business house in 1870. In the course of a few years he moved to Luzerne County, when he was succeeded by John H. Schaeffer and Daniel Kerling, and, since 1882, Michael Adam. The latter enlarged the building in 1884. The third story forms a hall, used for lodge purposes.

The Temple post-office was established June 20, 1857. Since August, 1883, B. F. Y. Graeff has been the postmaster, keeping the office in connection with his duties as railroad station master. Four mails a day are supplied.

Dr. D. L. Bieber, about 1840, was the first physician located here. Later, Dr. William Schlemm settled at Tuckerton and Dr. James Mathews, in 1860. After the latter's retirement, his son Franklin began practicing. The present physicians are Drs. Robert Huyett and George Engler.

Among the first residents of this locality were Daniel Hollenbach, a chainsmith, who lived in an old log house on the lot now owned by Dr. Mathews, where he also carried on a small shop. Daniel Zweitzig lived here as a laborer, selling out to Benneville Rothermel, a mason. Augustus Kerling has been a shoemaker here the past forty years, and Daniel Kerling a coachmaker. John Rothermel was one of the first carpenters. In the coach-making business Kerling was succeeded by his sons in 1881, the firm becoming Wm. F. Kerling & Bros. They have a well-ordered shop and produce about forty fine carriages annually. Seven hands are employed. Cigar-shops are carried on by Daniel H. and John B. Kerling, eight hands being employed in the aggregate.

Temple Council, No. 339, American Mechanics, was instituted in 1873 and had in 1885 thirty-four members. Since its organization the meetings have been regularly kept. The council has an invested fund of five hundred dollars and is generally prosperous.

Hyde Park is a name applied to a hamlet on the Kutztown road, two miles north of Reading. It is chiefly on sixteen acres of land, which were laid out into lots by John Frymire and William Umbenhaner. The former built a large brick hotel in 1876, which he has since kept, and north of this point Henry Miller has a store. Near by is the old Geiger inn, known many years as the "Cross Keys," now continued by Edwin Becker. The hamlet includes a number of fine homes. Since 1838 Jacob Lutz has followed blacksmithing at this point, and his stone shop is one of the first improvements in the place. The immense Wyomissing ice-houses were built in 1885 by Jefferson M. Keller, who removed them from Reading. The supply is taken from a fine large pond, of seven acres in area. Steam-power is used to elevate the ice. Beyond this is Bernhart's Crossing, the railway station of Hyde Park. It is at the lower part of "Spring Valley," a vale of striking beauty, through which courses the sparkling Spring Creek, and in which there are a number of improvements. The Bernhart family was early settled here, and for many years was engaged in keeping a public-house. The successive keepers were Daniel, Jacob and John Bernhart. Opposite the brick hotel are fine pleasure grounds, extending to Penn's Mount, and near by are several highly improved farms. The property is at present owned by James Nolan, of Reading.

HEREFORD TOWNSHIP.

Erection of Township.—This district of territory was first settled about twenty years before the erection of the county, in 1752. The early settlers were principally Schwenkfelders, and included Rev. Christopher Schultz, George Schultz, Melchior Schultz, Melchior Wiegener, David Mester, Gregorius Mester and Baltzer Yeagle. In 1753 a petition was presented to court, asking for the erection of a new township, which was to be bounded and described as follows: "Beginning at a heap of stones on land of Adam Trump—being the chief corner of Philadelphia County in the line of Northampton County; thence northwest 1320 ps. to a post; thence by lands of Peter Fedelor, Adam Mon, Richard Gregory, Thomas Mayberry and others, S. W. 1770 ps. to a corner of land of John Hess; thence S. E. 615 ps. to a chestnut-tree, the corner of Colebrookdale township; thence along the line of said township by the same course 945 ps. to a post in the line of McCall's manor, being the upper line of Philadelphia County; thence by the line of said manor N. 38 E., 1800 ps. to the place of beginning, containing 15,930 acres."

The petition was signed by seventeen inhabitants of this section; their names were,—

David Shultz surveyed the tract above described on January 5, 1758, and the lines not interfering with any other township, it was, on February 1st following erected into a township and named Hereford.

In 1839 a large part of the township in the southern section, comprising about four thousand two hundred acres, was laid off and appropriated toward the erection of a new township called Washington.

In 1841 a large tract in the western section, containing about eleven hundred acres, was asked to be set apart and added to District township. The court appointed James Donagun, Benjamin Tyson and M. S. Richards as commissioners to view the premises, who made a favorable report, and the prayer of the petitioners was granted. In 1849 the estimated area of the township was twelve thousand acres.

Taxable of 1759.—The following list comprises the names of the taxable of the township for 1759. Tax levied was £74 15s. 6d. Peter Featherolf was the collector.

INDUSTRIES.

The Perkiomen and its branches afford a number of mill-sites, whose powers have been utilized for more than a century. One of the oldest is the Wiegner mill, long owned and operated by that family, and which is now carried on by Eli Klotz. Near by a man named Sleicher had a mill, whose site was taken for a new mill by David Knetz, and of which Charles Knetz is now the proprietor. The Clemmer mill is closely associated with the early matters of the township. It was built by David Clemmer and is at present operated by James B. Funk, the motive-power being water and steam. In this part of the township a small pottery was started about forty years ago by John Frederick, which is still carried on by his family. The "Clayton Creamery" is owned and conducted by an association which was organized in 1881. The present officers are Henry G. Clemmer, manager; John L. Bauer, secretary; and James B. Funk, treasurer. Spacious buildings are occupied, which are supplied with the most approved apparatus for making first-class butter and cheese, the products having a high reputation in the city markets. It is successfully managed. William A. Clemmer is the present operator for the association. A few miles from this place a tannery was built many years ago by Benjamin De Long, which had as later owners F. K. Wald, F. K. Knetz and, since January, 1885, M. K. Smith. It is a large two-story stone building and contains twenty-six double vats. It is worked largely on calf-skins.

On the main branch of the Perkiomen John E. Gery built an oil-mill, which became the property of Israel Kriebel in 1833. Four years later he put up a new stone mill-house, which he supplied with machinery for making linseed oil. It has been operated the past twenty-five years by Henry Kriebel. It is the only oil-mill now operated in the county. On the same stream, at Treichlersville, Samuel Treichler had an oil-mill, which was converted into a grist-mill by David Treichler, making the building three stories high and supplying three runs of burrs. A saw-mill at the same power has been abandoned. The flouring-mill is operated by the Treichler family. Above is the mill-seat improved by the Schultz family and which has been controlled by them many years. Beyond the hills, near the Lehigh County line, Jonas Shank had a carding-mill. Coarse cloths were manufactured. It has been idle some time. The next power above drives the machinery of the Christman mill. The present stone building is the second on the site, erected by Jacob Christman. It is supplied with four runs of stones. At what is locally called “Ferryville” is the stone grist-mill built by Michael Gery and which is now operated by E. N. Gery. These mills produce large quantities of flour annually and are a great accommodation to the people.

On the west branch of the Perkiomen, below Huff’s Church, there was a small charcoal furnace, which was erected many years ago. It stood near a high bank, above Mensch’s mill, and had a long race, leading to a dam above Huff’s Church, to supply the power. For a time the furnace was operated by a man named Mayberry, but it was removed so long ago that scarcely any trace now remains. Several miles down the stream the Mount Pleasant Furnace stood for many years. It was built in 1739 by Thomas Potts. Both these industries are mentioned in the draft of the township prepared in 1753. Mensch’s mill is also one of the oldest in Hereford. The present mill is of stone, three stories high. A saw-mill is operated by the same power. The Mensch family have continuously owned this property for several generations. Some distance below, Daniel Hunter had a pioneer mill, which became known as John Rush’s mill, but which is now the property of Hartsough & Bro. Between these there was a forge carried on for a time by Peter Weller, but which was abandoned and the building converted into a smith-shop.

Iron-Ore Mines.—Valuable iron-mines have been carried on successfully for many years in the northern part of the township, those on the Bittenbender and Gehman tracts being worthy of special mention.

The following table shows the profit of the iron-ore mines in this township till 1880.

The yield was from the entire field, which is about three thousand feet long, and averaging in depth one hundred and thirty feet. 1

At the Bittenbender mine the ore raised from January to August, 1880, was three thousand eight hundred and ninety-two tons.

Churches.

Hereford Church (Reformed and Lutheran).—In 1812 a stone meeting-house for the Reformed and Lutheran congregations was begun on a lot of land donated for this purpose by Frederick Huff, 2 which was not completed until 1814. It was a building almost square in appearance, high, with three galleries and other characteristics of the old-time church. This house, from its location, became popularly known as the “Huff Church” and is so spoken of to this day, although the proper name is the one given. In a repaired condition the stone church was used until 1881, when it was taken down and a new edifice erected, whose proportions and attractive finish are surpassed by few churches in the county outside of the city of Reading.

1 Penna. Geol. Survey—“Berks”—part 1, p. 289.

2 Frederick Huff died in 1816, aged eighty-two years. He lived to see seventy-nine grandchildren and thirty-seven great-grandchildren.
The corner-stone was laid June 5, 1881, and just a year later the church was dedicated. It is a brick structure, sixty by ninety feet, two stories high, the basement being divided into four rooms. The auditorium is very high and has wide galleries on three sides, so that accommodations for one thousand persons are afforded. The walls and ceilings are beautifully frescoed and embellished by life-size paintings of Moses, St. John, St. Mark, St. Matthew and St. Luke. In the rear of the pulpit is a portrait of Christ holding an open book containing the words, “Wer mich bekennet für den Menschen den will ich wieder bekennen für meinem Himmlischen Vater.”

The pulpit furniture is very fine. A fine baptismal font was the joint gift of D. H. Schweyer and Wm. H. Sallade. The chandelier was presented by C. N. Gery, Wm. B. Mull and Dr. J. A. Roth. A superior pipe-organ was supplied in 1865. The church is surmounted by a shapely spire, in which is a bell weighing, with its hangings, twenty-two hundred and forty pounds. The cost of this fine improvement, exclusive of the labor performed gratuitously, was twenty thousand dollars. The building committee was composed of Samuel Bittenbender, Charles N. Gery, John Geisinger and John Rush.

The Reformed congregation has had the pastoral service of the Rev. Charles Herman, Rev. J. Sassaman Herman, and, for the past twelve years, the Rev. Eli Keller. Its membership numbers nearly four hundred. The Lutheran congregation has about four hundred and fifty members, and is under the pastoral care of the Rev. D. K. Humbert, who is the successor in this office of the Revs. Roller, Kramlich, Croll and Boyer. A flourishing Sunday-school is maintained nine months in the year.

Schwenkfelder Meeting-House is on the Washington township line, a short distance from Montgomery County. Connected with it is a small cemetery, where are interred the members of this faith who settled in lower Berks many years ago. It is a stone house, about thirty-five by fifty feet, and was erected in 1824. Extensive repairs in 1883 have again placed it in a good condition. The church members worshipping here are few in number and services are held in connection with two other churches in Montgomery County, each church having a meeting every three weeks. The holidays of the church are strictly observed. A Sabbath-school is maintained the entire year.

VILLAGES.

Clayton is a hamlet on the Washington township line, with its principal interests in Hereford. It received its name when the post-office was established, in 1850. Before that time it had become a business point. It is located at the intersection of several roads, and is the southern terminus of a fine turnpike to Treichlersville. There are a store, tavern, mechanics-shops and half a dozen residences. The first settler was Andrew Fink, a dealer in small beer and cakes, who lived in a small house opposite the present store. He sold out to A. B. Bechtel, who put up the present improvements. John Bechtel put up the store building about forty years ago, and he and his son, A. B. Bechtel, engaged in merchandising. This became the property of Henry Schultz and since 1872 the merchants have been H. H. and E. H. Schultz. The post-office is kept by them. It distributes a daily mail. The tavern was built in 1839 by Jacob Treichler, who also kept a small store in the same building. After his death the business was continued some time by his widow. The inn at present is the property of Frank Schultz.

Herefordville is a small village, near the Montgomery line, in the northeastern part of the township. It has the usual interests of a country place and contains about two dozen buildings. The name was derived from the township and first used when John Hillegas laid out the village lots. Eli Ritz had one of the first improvements here, keeping a public-house, soon after 1800, in part of the building which still serves such a purpose. The Hillegas family became the owners of the property, after Abraham Shell had occupied it a long time, and enlarged the old stone house. They carried on a tavern and store in it. Later John Hillegas built the brick store on the opposite side of the street, in which many parties have merchandised.
Benjamin Deysher has had a tin and hardware store the past thirteen years. Lower down the turnpike, near the Montgomery line, Jacob Gery had a store and tavern, which were kept a number of years, but have long since been discontinued. In this locality lived Dr. Joel Y. Scholley, for a number of years a successful practitioner. In Herefordville proper Dr. Henry Babb built a fine residence and was also engaged in the practice of his profession. The last resident physician was Dr. J. P. Hersh.

Treichlersville is a hamlet on the Perkiomen Creek, at the intersection of the "Clayton Turnpikes," and was named after Samuel Treichler, who opened a store at this point and was also the keeper of a public-house, begun about 1830. The latter has had many owners. It was conducted in 1885 by Daniel Bortz. The Hereford post-office, established in 1830, is kept at this place, and Treichler was the first postmaster. For many years H. Kriebel held the office. The present postmaster is E. G. Fegley, the merchant of the place. Several mills are situated here. Some years ago a small tilt-hammer was operated by the Bauer family.

Perryville.—Near the head-waters of the Perkiomen is a small hamlet called Perryville, or Gery's Mills, long operated by Michael Gery. He also had a store and tavern, the latter only being continued at present, with Nathaniel Gregory as the proprietor.

Siesholtzville.—North, near the Longswamp line, is the old hamlet of Siesholtzville, which received its name from Abraham Siesholtz, the keeper of an old-time tavern. The first public house was opened about 1800, by a man named Mensch. A store was begun by Charles Helfrich, and a later merchant was Charles Gery. The Siesholtzville post-office, established in 1849, is kept by the latter. A tri-weekly mail is supplied from Barto. Dr. J. A. Roth has been the medical practitioner for several years. A few mechanics find employment in this locality.

Huff's Church is a hamlet on the headwaters of the west branch of the Perkiomen, so called on account of the Hereford Union Church, located here, and the Huff family, who first made this a public place. It comprises half a dozen houses. George Huff had a public-house at the place now kept by C. D. Gery, for many years; the latter demolished the old house in the spring of 1886, and erected a three-story stone building in its place. Abraham Baum had the first store. In 1871 M. M. Gery built a large frame store, in which he engaged in business the following year. He was succeeded in 1876 by the present merchant, D. R. Bechtel, who is also the postmaster of Huff's Church office, established in 1874, and supplied with a tri-weekly mail, on the route to Siesholtzville. A fine hardware store was opened in 1883 by Daniel C. Gruber, and it has since been carried on by him. There are also a few mechanic shops in the neighborhood. The school-house, a neat and attractive brick building, was erected in 1878.

Turnpikes.—The township is well supplied with turnpikes, indicating the enterprise and public spirit of the citizens in that vicinity. There are three turnpikes,—

From Clayton to Treichlersville, three miles long. It was constructed by a company of citizens of the township. Henry G. Clemmer is the manager.

From Treichlersville to Montgomery County line, one and a half miles long. Managed by company organized out of county.

From Treichlersville to Lehigh County line, one-half mile long.

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP.

Erection of Township.—A new township, named Washington, was erected in 1839 out of the southern part of Hereford (forty-two hundred acres) and the northern part of Colebrookdale (about eighteen hundred acres). The names of the early settlers of these parts are included in the lists of names given for said two townships.

Early Settlers.—The land on which Eschbach's Crossing, Barto and Schultzville are situated, together with the land constituting adjoining farms in the vicinity, comprise five hundred acres, or one-half of a tract of one thousand acres which William Penn granted to a certain John Coles, of Calcut, in Somerset County, Great Britain, in September, 1681, to be taken up in the province of Pennsylvania. This grant became vested in Samuel Powel, of Philadelphia, who shortly afterward caused five hundred acres to be located and surveyed in this vicinity. In 1724 he conveyed this tract of five hundred acres to Jacob Stauffer, a shoemaker, resident at Skippack. A large part of this tract has been retained in the Stauffer family from that time till now, it having been conveyed in a direct line from Jacob to Daniel, to Abraham, to Henry, to Abraham B., the present owner.

In 1734 a number of "Schweinkfielders" came to Pennsylvania,—altogether one hundred and sixty-four: eighty-one males and eighty-three females. Amongst these were Melchior Schultz, his wife, Susanna, and their three young sons,—George, Melchior and Christopher. They settled at a point several miles northeast from Schultzville about the year 1736, where they succeeded in erecting a capacious two-story dwelling out of tall oaks, which they had felled, cut into logs and sawed by hand into plank, the latter having been placed on the outside wall for protection; and they, in their early life, manufactured wagon-wheels out of oak timber, plaited horse-collars out of straw, twisted traces out of hemp and raised their own flax and wool, which they spun into yarn and upon a weaver's loom wove into cloth for wearing apparel.

INDUSTRIES.

The "West Branch" of the Perkiomen affords some water-powers which are not surpassed in the county. They were improved at an early day to operate mills and forges. In the little dale, from the hills of Hereford to the lowlands of Washington, a distance of about three miles, there are a dozen powers, two of which at one time operated furnaces and three of them forges. When the latter were in operation this was one of the busiest sections of the county. One of the largest and most widely known of these forges was the one so long carried on by David Schall, and known as the "Dale Forge." It had a very superior water-power and large capacity. When first started it was known as "Foehst's Forge." It has not been worked the past twenty years and the power is now devoted to the operation of a saw-mill. Below this place Aaron Covely had a foundry for the manufacture of cooking and heating-stoves, etc. It became the property of Anthony Eltz, who converted it into a forge after the foundry building had been burned down. The power has also been abandoned. The lower forge was long known as Fisher's, having been last operated by Samuel Wise. Above this place there was a power used successfully for a time by Joseph Rush, in preparing whet-stones, the material having been quarried on his farm in the neighborhood. The quality was good, but the layer was limited and became exhausted some years ago.

While used as a mill by Edward Meckler the property was destroyed by fire, in the spring of 1885. It has been rebuilt and converted into a turning-shop. In this locality the grist-mill of Jacob Anthony is operated in a small way. Lower down is the fine mill of Samuel B. Latshaw, which was lately enlarged and supplied with roller machinery, with steam-power added. This site was formerly known as Erb's, and later as Babb's. The Mount Pleasant Furnace was at a lower site, where the dale widens out into the level lands. After the manufacture of iron was discontinued the power was used to operate a saw-mill. Several miles below, Henry Landis established a tannery about seventy years ago. It was operated latterly by David Landis and by Jonathan Mathias. It has thirty vats. In 1885 the latter established a carrier-shop at Churchville. The tannery has been idle since 1885. The last power in this county on this stream operates a grist-mill, owned by Amos Schultz. The building is constructed of brick and a profitable business is carried on by him.

On Swamp Creek improvements were made at an early period by the Kummerers, Bechtels and Stauffers. On a branch of the creek, in the northern part of the township, one of these mills is now operated by A. Benfield. Below, John Dotterer had in operation a clover and a grist-mill, but as the power was small it was soon abandoned, when he, in 1885, built a superior new mill on the old Kummerer site. The next lower power was made to operate the oil and saw-mills of John Bechtel and others. The oil-mill has been discontinued. In 1882 James Bechtel started a grist-mill in its stead and rebuilt the saw-mill. The old Stauffer mill, next below, was also rebuilt in 1882 and supplied with roller machinery by John Stauffer, the present owner. Near what is now Bechtelsville, the upper mill was formerly supplied with machinery for making linseed oil, but became a grist-mill under the ownership of William Bechtel. Jacob Oberholtzer is the owner of the lower mill. It was carried on for sixty years by John S. Bechtel and his son, David. It is still a good mill. A short distance below the village is the fine grist-mill of Henry Young, which is the last power on the stream in the township. Most of the above mills have a good capacity. When the water-power becomes insufficient they are able, with steam-power supplied in recent years, to manufacture almost constantly. Altogether, thousands of barrels of flour are manufactured annually in the township, indicating the great value of the flowing water in the meandering streams of that township.

Norway Furnace, at Bechtelsville, is the property of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company. It was projected and built by the Bechtelsville Iron Company, composed mainly of citizens of Washington township, in 1872-73, but owing to the panic coming on, it was never put in blast by the original owners. It resulted in great losses to the projectors. Afterward it was first operated under a lease by the Pottstown Iron Company. In December, 1883, the company transferred its lease to Gabel, Jones & Gabel. Substantial improvements were then made by this firm and they have since successfully operated it under the superintendence of Levi Yocum. The ore used is procured at the mine of the firm at Boyertown, and the daily product is forty tons of superior foundry iron. Forty-five men are steadily employed. The plant embraces thirty acres of land and the furnace cost originally one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

At Barto a valuable mine of iron-ore has been in successful operation for many years. The ore was first mined in limited quantities and the operations were confined to the surface. Within the past twenty years steam-power has been employed and, in later years, three mines have been worked, viz.: the A. H. Barto, at a depth of one hundred and twenty-five feet; the R. S. Landis, at a depth of three hundred and twenty-five feet, and drifts—the most productive of all the mines; and the mine of the Pottstown Iron Company, which has been wholly abandoned. Its shaft had reached a depth of two hundred feet, but not being very rich, and the water being troublesome, the machinery was removed to other points. In 1886 the mines were idle. Near Bechtelsville iron-ore also abounds, but not in quantities to warrant mining operations.

Churches.

Mennonite Churches.—Among the first settlers of the township of Hereford was a colony of Mennonites, who have since, in connection with kindred settlements in Montgomery and Lehigh Counties, preserved a denominational organization, which was formed in the last century. These early Mennonites were on very friendly terms with Father Theodore Schneider, the Jesuit missionary. They co-operated with him in building the first Catholic Church, in 1743, and as a compensation to them for their kindness, an acre of land was granted to them out of the tract belonging to his society. This gave them a central location upon which to build a church of their own. The meeting-house which they then erected still stands and has a very primitive appearance, which indicates its extreme age. It is a low, wooden structure, a little larger than the ordinary school-house, with the joists extending far across the walls and the roof resting upon the same. It is occupied by the old Mennonites, who have stated services there in connection with other appointments. On the same lot there is a plain brick church, forty-five by seventy-five feet, which was put up by the New Mennonites in 1851. The building committee consisted of G. Bechtel, H. Eschbach and A. Bauer. It has since been occupied by them. Meetings are held regularly every two weeks by their ministers, Rev. C. H. A. Van Der Smissen and A. Godshall. The members number nearly two hundred.
During the past sixteen years they have maintained a flourishing Sabbath-school. James H. Fuuk is the present superintendent. The congregations at Boyertown are a part of the old Hereford (or Colebrookdale) congregation, and the account there given will serve as a history of these congregations in the more important matters and the causes which led to their separate establishment. The cemetery of the Washington churches contains a large number of graves and is kept in good condition.

CHURCH OF THE BLESSED SACRAMENT.— The earliest Roman Catholic Church in the county was erected in this township in the eastern section, about a half-mile from the county line. The first church was built, in 1743, by the Rev. Theodor Schneider, from Bavaria, for the “Society of Jesus.” During his efforts in this behalf he was assisted by the Mennonites and Schwenkfelders. This building is still standing in a good state of preservation. The record of baptisms begins with the year 1741, and includes, among other districts, Maxatawni, Tulpehaken and Goshenhoppen. Two patents were taken up for land—one for one hundred and twenty-one acres by Father Neale, in 1747, and the other for three hundred and seventy-three acres by Father Greaton, in 1748. A substantial brick church was erected in front of the old church in 1837, including a steeple, in which two superior bells were placed. The church was recently improved, figures were introduced and fine lamps were supplied for evening services. Two masses are conducted on Sundays.

In 1882 the old mission-house was torn down and a brick residence was erected for the priest. A new cemetery was set apart and consecrated October 6, 1876.

Three priests lie buried under the floor at the pulpit in the old church building. They were the first, Father Schneider, who died July 10, 1764, aged sixty-two years; the second, Father John Baptist de Ritter, who died February 3, 1787, aged seventy years, after having held the mission for twenty years; and the third, Father Paulus Erntzen, who died March 26, 1818, aged fifty-three years, after having held the mission twenty-seven years.

In 1820 Father Paul Kohlman, a Franciscan monk, became the first priest of the “Society of Jesus.” He was assisted by Father Corvin, a Pole, till 1827; then the latter became the priest, and he continued to officiate till his death, October 11, 1837.

Rev. Augustus Bally began his service here November 1, 1837, and he continued to officiate as priest with great success for a period of forty-four years. He died January 28, 1882. He was a native of Belgium and won a high position as a priest in this denomination. He possessed an active mind, and he was recognized for his liberality and enterprising spirit. Besides completing the church, which had been begun before he arrived, he also erected a fine brick school-house.

Rev. John Baptiste Meurer succeeded Father Bally as priest, after having assisted him since September 1, 1875. The parish now numbers three hundred and twenty-five families.

Father Schneider was settled here permanently in 1741. He erected a small two-story building, with one room on each floor, soon after he arrived. In the room on the first floor he instituted a school in 1743. It is said that about that time he and his scholars were compelled to remain in the building for a day and night owing to a heavy snow-fall. This school building is still standing. A school was conducted successfully in it till the township accepted the common-school system, in 1850, when the congregation established a parochial school. Reverend Father Bally erected a fine brick school building, to take the place of the old school-house. The school term extends through eight months of the year. Father Meurer pays the expense of one month, and the remaining expense is paid by subscription.

VILLAGES.

Churchville is a pleasant village near the northeastern line of the township. It was laid out in 1860, by the Rev. Father Bally, on the lands of the Catholic Society of Jesus. It is situated in a very fertile country, and the beauty of its location is not excelled by any other village in the county. In this vicinity there are the fine Church of the Blessed Sacrament, two Mennonite Churches, stores and various kinds of mechanic shops. The residences are substantial looking, and bear evidence of the thrift and comfort of the owners.

One of the first improvements was the public-house kept by Nicholas Andre, soon after 1860. It was subsequently enlarged by Samuel Cole and has since had a number of keepers. Opposite is a general store carried on by Wm. Bechtel since 1869; also the hardware-store of Henry Reding, being a branch store of that first established here by Bechtel & Diehl. A clock and jewelry-store has been carried on by E. S. Gehman since 1882, and a general store by Frank Johnson since the fall of 1883. A planing-mill, operated by steam, was started in the spring of 1886 by Anthony Johnson. To the north a hardware-store, begun in 1869, by Joseph Diehl, is carried on by H. M. Diehl & Bro. A post-office was established at Churchville in October, 1883, with the name of Bally, and of which Wm. Bechtel was the first postmaster. February 15, 1886, Aug. Kuhn succeeded him. A daily mail is supplied. The village has at present over three hundred inhabitants.

BARTO is situated at the northern terminus of the Colebrookdale Railroad, in the centre of the township. It was laid out in 1869 by Thomas Christman, guardian of Abraham H. Barto, on land of the latter, at a point where the railroad company was then erecting a depot. It was first called "Mount Pleasant," because of its nearness to the spot where the old "Mount Pleasant Furnace" formerly stood. The name was changed to Barto in 1875 by the railroad company, to distinguish it from other places of the same name. In 1881 it contained a store, hotel, thirteen dwellings and sixty-six inhabitants. An extensive business in coal and lumber is carried on by William D. Schall. A large and valuable body of magnetic iron-ore has been mined in the immediate vicinity, Jacob Fretz was the first agent of the railroad. Since 1875 the position has been filled by W. W. Albright. Ore was formerly shipped in large quantities, but not since 1884. The first building in the place was put up in 1869 by Schall & Bauer, dealers in lumber and coal, and was part of the present hotel first opened by Eli Gilbert. The house was enlarged by R. S. Smith in 1873, and kept by him ten years. The first general store was opened, in 1878, by B. F. Sell. He was succeeded in the spring of 1885 by Smith & Stauffer. The Barto post-office was established in 1882, and B. F. Sell served as postmaster until April 7, 1885, when J. A. Smith was appointed. It has two mails per day and is the distributing point for a number of offices.

SCHULTZVILLE is situated a half-mile eastwardly from Barto, at the intersection of two public roads,—one leading from Boyertown to Allentown, and the other from Dale (Barto) to Zieglersville. It was named in 1833 by Christopher K. Schultz, who then and for over twenty years afterward conducted here a store and tavern. A post-office, named "Colebrookdale," was established here in 1828, and Mr. Schultz served as postmaster till his death, in 1856. He was succeeded by the present postmaster, P. D. Schall, who is also the proprietor of the store and tavern. In 1881 it contained a hotel, a store, seven dwellings and fifty inhabitants. An independent school district was established in 1852 out of territory comprising the village and adjacent properties, since which time the directors have conducted a successful school, with the scholars varying in number from thirty to fifty.

This place has no mechanic-shops. Dr. Chester Clark practiced there as a physician from 1828 till 1842; then the property passed into the possession of D. S. Schultz, Esq., who has since occupied it. He is a practical surveyor. The Schultz and Stauffer families have been land-owners here for more than one hundred and fifty years.

North of Barto, near the Hereford line, the Dale post-office was established in 1828, the name being suggested by the Dale Forge, carried on then at that point. The office has been kept by the Schall family since its establishment, the present mistress being Mary Schall.

In this neighborhood the Covelys opened a public-house. This became the property of Abraham Trollinger, and he then carried on a store also. These interests have been continued since by different parties. After the forges in the valley were abandoned, the place ceased to be an important business point.

Eschbach is nearly a mile southwest of Barto. It is also a station on the railroad. It contains several shops, a store and tavern and about twenty buildings. It took its name after George M. Eschbach, a successful stock dealer and tavern-keeper on the road west of the present railroad station. He encouraged the railroad enterprise by a liberal subscription for the bonds of the company. The tavern is at present carried on by William Hartsough, who has, also, a cigar-factory in which eight hands are employed. Adam Glase had the first store in 1858, having removed here from Bechtelsville. The present merchant is William Hines, also the keeper of the Bechtelsville post-office, established half a mile west, in 1852, with Isaac Bechtel as postmaster. In 1858 George M. Eschbach was the postmaster and had the office first transferred to this place; but, in 1866, when Jacob E. Bowman had the office, it was returned to Bechtelsville, thus intermingling the interests of the two places. The place was not laid out.

Bechtelsville is a growing village, with a fine, large furnace, mills, several stores and taverns and sixty good houses, occupied by seventy families. The increase of population has been greatest during the past few years and almost all the entire growth has been made since 1869, when it became a railway station. Before that time there were two mills and three houses, most of them belonging to the family of John S. Bechtel, after whom the place took its name. The village has a pleasant location on Swamp Creek. Isaac Bechtel had the first store in a building near the mill, some time about 1850. The building was afterwards converted into a tavern, which is still kept. Another tavern was opened by David K. Borkey. This became the property of Matthias Dotterer, and he then introduced a store. Two more stores were opened in 1885, by H. C. Schoenley and John E. Stangier & Bro. The cabinet and undertaking business was established in 1883 by William Conrad. A marble-yard is owned and carried on by Thomas W. Hoffman & Son; and J. H. Moyer is a dealer in coal and feed.

Physicians.

In 1884 Dr. B. S. Grim located here as a physician and continues in practice. At Eschbach, Dr. Franklin R. Brunner (the present State Senator from Berks County) has been in practice the past twenty-five years; at Churchville, Dr. Isaac R. Yeagle, the past eighteen years; and near the latter place Dr. C. K. Christman, the past sixteen years. The first to practice medicine in the eastern part of the township was Dr. Joel Y. Shelly, who lived near Herefordville. He was the preceptor of Dr. Nathan Young, who was at Schultzville from 1828 till 1842. Dr. Oliver Young also practiced medicine at that place. Drs. John and Joseph Wilson were practitioners a short time, the latter retiring and the former moving to Bethlehem.

Abram H. Barto, of Washington township, is the son of Isaac Bartow (as the name was first spelled), who was born in Oley township August 17, 1786, and, in 1812, was married to Elizabeth Feger. In April, 1838, Mrs. Bartow and her two daughters died. On November 24, 1843, Mr. Bartow was married to Magdalena Huber, by whom he had one son — Abram. Isaac Bartow came from Oley in 1813, and purchased land in what was then Hereford (now Washington) township. The tract contains one hundred and fifty acres. He died June 27, 1865, highly honored and respected. Abram, his son, succeeded in the ownership of his property.

Abram H. Barto was born March 4, 1855. He was educated in the public schools, Mount Pleasant Seminary, at Boyertown, and the Kutztown State Normal School. In 1875 he took a scientific course in the Allentown Business College. He married Miss Stauffer, and they have three children.

In 1868 the Colebrookdale Railroad Company surveyed its line from Pottstown, via Boyertown, to a terminus on and near the western border of Mr. Barto's farm. The road was soon completed and a fine depot erected at this terminus. In 1870 he had building lots surveyed and commenced to sell them. A dozen houses have since been erected, and the name of the station changed from "Mount Pleasant" to "Barto," which is also the name of the post-office. Mr. Barto conducts a store at this place. He is closely identified with Sunday-school and church matters.

RUSCOMB-MANOR TOWNSHIP.

MANOR OF RUSCOMB ERECTED.—Pursuant to a verbal order from the proprietor, Nicholas Scull surveyed, on July 26, 1739, for the proprietors' use, a large tract of land, situated between Oley and Maiden creek, containing ten thousand acres, which was named the "Manor of Ruscombe."

No positive information was obtained respecting the early settlements in this district of territory. It is more than probable, however, that very few settlements were made in it prior to 1752. This inference is drawn from a survey made by Cadwalader Evans, Jr., in August, 1789. In a return made by him then, the following five persons only were mentioned as patentees:

- Jacob Tysher, patent issued April 25, 1764, for one hundred acres.
- Adam Speitlemyer, patent issued December 9, 1766, for one hundred and one acres.
- John Riegel, patent issued February 2, 1772, for fifty six acres.
- Jacob Zauger, patent issued February 21, 1772, for one hundred and ten acres.
- Conrad Schmell, patent issued February 21, 1787, for thirty-eight acres.

Other patentees then were John Christian Slegle, Jacob Miller, Yost Wagner, Ulrich Huy and Conrad Price, and there is also given a list of names of persons who have marked out lands for themselves within the manor lines. This list comprises one hundred and fifteen names, and the tracts together contained eight thousand nine hundred and eighteen acres and twenty three perches. It is more than likely that if settlers to any considerable number had located in this section, they would have taken up lands by patent more than those named as settlers did in neighboring districts. 1

I was not able to find any record of the erection of the manor into a township. Its lines were changed by the erection of neighboring districts into townships. The earliest evidence of it as a township is the assessment record of the county for the year 1759, in which it is included in the list of townships.

Taxables for 1759.—The following list comprises the names of the taxables in the township in 1759. The total tax levied was £16 11s. 6d. Jacob Leapert was the collector,—

1 Rupp, in his "History of Berks County," page 244, mentions the names of thirty-eight land-holders within the township in 1749.

Haas, Benjamin Foos, Charles Schaeffer and Daniel Spies are each over seventy-five years.

The highest point in the township is on "Wagner's Head," about a mile southwardly from Pricetown. It is about two hundred feet higher than Pricetown and seven hundred feet higher than Fleetwood, on the East Pennsylvania Railroad (two miles distant), or about eleven hundred and fifty feet above the sea. It commands a magnificent view of the East Penn Valley to the north, Lebanon Valley to the west and the Oley Valley to the southeast.

Industries.—The water-power of Ruscomb-manor is limited to several small streams whose volume is strong enough to operate small mills or other common industries. Near Pricetown William D. Haines had in successful operation a good tannery from 1824 for a number of years. William Haas was a later owner and tanned until ten years ago, when work was discontinued. Below this place George Heckman carried on a tannery until his death, when the property passed into the possession of Benjamin Kline, who then operated it for some years. These buildings have been removed. In 1855 Michael Buck put up a tannery in the eastern part of the township, which he carried on about five years, and then in 1861 he converted it into a glue factory. As such he operated it until 1875, when his son, Fred. Buck, became the owner. Since 1885 Peter Hill has been the proprietor. The motor is steam and the annual product is about eighty barrels.

Lower down, on the Willow Creek, Henry Gilbert owned and carried on a mill about 1800, which became the property of John Focht. The first mill had only a small capacity. About forty years ago Samuel Wanner built the present mill, now owned and operated by Israel Leinbach.

A short distance below, Henry Rettinger had a small saw-mill, which was afterward removed and the power abandoned. Another power was improved to operate a tilt-hammer for a man named Biecher, which became the property of Henry Rettinger, who employed the power to operate a clogen-mill. Here is now a feed-mill and machine-shop owned and operated by Schmeck & Haag. An improvement lately made will enable them to manufacture yellow ochre at the same point. The mineral is obtained from an abandoned iron-mine in the neighborhood. This stream was also appropriated before 1800 to operate a carding-mill for Peter Wanner for some years, which has been discontinued and the power used to carry on a saw-mill for Nicodemus Noll.

Near Blandon, William Moser had a grist-mill containing good machinery, but as his water-power is weak, very little work is done.

The first iron-ore mine was opened in the township about 1860. The locality is near Fleetwood. It is commonly called the Madeira Mine. Some years afterward the "Clymer Iron Company" opened several ore-mines about a mile eastwardly from Pricetown, from which much ore was obtained.

CHURCHES.

BAPTIST MEETING-HOUSE.—In 1807 Martin Gaube conveyed to "The Old Baptist Society," composed of members in and about the township of Ruscomb-manor, a lot of ground containing one acre, and a "House of Divine Worship" thereon erected. This lot is part of the Price tract. The trustees of the society then were Martin Gaube, David Kinsey, Christian Kinsey and John Beyler. This church was in existence at least a score of years before. A "burying-ground" was also inclosed. Before the completion of the church the meetings were held under a large tree, which stood on this lot, and in the Gaube house or barn, he being the first preacher. Among the members were persons belonging to Kenzie, Reublemoyer, Fiant and Price families. The local membership was not large at any time. At present only a few members survive. Among the preachers at this church have been George Price (of Chester County), John Price, John Zug, Henry Kasell, Samuel Harley, Jonas Price, William Hartzell and Christian Buchar. The present preachers are J. Rothermel, Joshua Koenig and Israel Koenig.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH (LUTHERAN AND REFORMED).—Rev. Augustus Herman, a Reformed minister, and Rev. Jacob Miller, Lutheran, visited this locality before 1840 and occasionally preached in the Baptist meeting-house; but none of their ordinances were ever observed in that place and no efforts made to form congregations. The Harvest Home meetings were usually held under the large tree near the church. In 1841 William D. Haines succeeded in interesting a number of people to unite with him in building at Pricetown a new church for the use of the Lutheran and Reformed congregations, which had been formed of the Hans, Fry, Buskirk, Levan, Rider, Van Miller and Lamb families. It was dedicated as the "St. John's Union Church." It is a stone building standing on an acre of land purchased from John Haas for this purpose. The membership of both congregations has always been small, and the aggregate number belonging at present is not more than one hundred and fifty.

The Reformed congregation had as its first pastor the Rev. Isaac Miesse. At present it is served by Rev. Isaac S. Stahr. His predecessors were Revs. N. Strassburger, William Good, Philip Hoffman and Daniel Schoedler. The pastors of the Lutheran congregation have been the Revs. Isaac Roeller, Daniel Kohler, J. M. Ditzler, A. Hinterleiter, T. T. Iaeger, G. F. Spiecker and U. P. Heilman.

The Sunday-school conducted in this church by Samuel J. Hill, superintendent, was first organized in the Baptist meeting-house, in the spring of 1833, by William D. Haines, who by birth was an Englishman, and came to this place from Philadelphia. He was the superintendent many years, and it was his interest in this matter which led to the building of the church, although for many years the Sunday-school was elsewhere held.

The church bell is the old bell which hung for four-score years in the old court-house at Reading. It is still in a good state of preservation, and when rung produces a pleasing sound, which reverberates grandly amongst the high hill-tops surrounding. Years ago it summoned the citizens of the county to give their attendance before the transitory judgment-seat of man; but it is now, and has been for over forty years, used to summon the surrounding community into the church to prepare the way for the judgment-seat of God, “Eternal in the Heavens.”

Salem Evangelical Church at Pricetown was built in 1857 by John Brown, Franklin Palm and Rev. Henry Bucks, as a committee appointed for that purpose. It is constructed of mountain stone, very plainly built, and stands on an acre of ground, the greater part of which is a cemetery. The trustees in 1885 were Ephraim Stitzer, Obed Manwiller and David Bierman. The membership is weak, only twenty persons belonging to it. These form a class under the leadership of Francis Heckman. The church is an appointment of the Friedensburg Circuit, of which Rev. H. H. Glick was the preacher in 1885. Other ministers who preached here: Revs. Henry Bucks, Hess, Schultz, Litzenberger, Butz, Kurtz, Ziegenfuss, Kahl, Hooper, Sechrist and Lerch.

Seventh-Day Adventists.—A society of this faith was organized at Pricetown in the fall of 1883 by Elder Henry A. Rife, acting under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Conference. Amos Snyder was appointed local elder and Samuel S. Gruber deacon. The ten members originally composing the society have received an addition of eight members, and the work of the society is fairly prosperous. The meetings are held in the school-house at Fleetwood and at the houses of the members at Pricetown, except when a protracted effort is made, when a large tent is provided, in which visiting elders, conduct the services. The society is part of District No. 1, whose headquarters are at Allentown.

In addition to the cemeteries connected with the foregoing churches, there are a number of private burial-grounds in the township, usually on the farms of those who made the first interments, and containing the dead of the original owners and their family connections. Among them are those of Samuel Fox, Samuel J. Hill, David Croll, Henry Knoll, Washington Schneck, Isaac Hoeffer, Dr. Levi Thompson, Zachariah Hilbert, Samuel Hoeffer, Daniel Iseger, Samuel Schmehl and Ephraim Snyder.

Schools.—One of the first schools in the township was taught in the vicinity of Pricetown. A school-house was afterward built at Pricetown, on the same lot that the Dunker Church occupies, the building committee having been Daniel Brown, Daniel Snyder and Abraham Wagner. In this both English and German were taught, George Price being a German teacher. The best remembered English teachers were Cyrus Knapp, John P. Daniels and Isaac Jacobs. The free-school system was accepted by Ruscomb-manor in 1837, the township being one of the first in the county to adopt it, and the first school at Pricetown under that system was taught by an Irishman named Murphy.

Villages.

Pricetown is the only village in the township. It is located on the highlands south of the centre. It contains several hotels and stores, three churches and about thirty residences. Its nearest railroad station is Fleetwood, on the East Pennsylvania Railroad, two miles north. The place took its name from Conrad Price (Preiss), who purchased a tract of one hundred and one acres lying here from Adam Spittlemyer in 1768. It is supposed that the town plan was laid out by him in 1780. He erected a log house on this tract in 1773 which is still standing. Some time about the Revolution he gave each of his sons a tract of this land, and made calculation for a future village by providing for an alley-way in the rear of the land. These smaller tracts were subsequently cut up into lots to suit purchasers. One of Price's sons lived in the eastern part of the present village, and was by trade a pump-maker. Another son lived in the western part, and was a farmer. A tailor named Gable was an early citizen of the place, and a little later came Anthony Le Fever, who had a small tannery in the eastern part, which became the property of Aaron Heckman, who last carried it on. And mechanics came as the surrounding country was developed, among the number being Jacob Weiser and Henry Haines, carpenters; Christian Glasser, John, Elijah and Amos Brown, shoemakers; Thomas Sechrist, tailor; Benjamin Tobias and Valentine Ebling, blacksmiths. Lewis Frank, a Jew peddler, also lived here many years, becoming quite noted in other parts of the country for the sharp bargains which he drove. Jonathan Price built a tavern on the present Guinther stand and opposite another house, in which he opened the first store. In the tavern business he was succeeded by Henry Bernhart, who kept it until his death, when his widow carried it on. The present tavern was built by Israel Wentzel, who enlarged the old building. In 1885 it was kept by Saphenus Guinther. After Price discontinued his store Benjamin Kline succeeded him, and he had among his successors Henry Dengler, Samuel Babb, Charles Levan, Jacob Engle and Charles Levan, the last in trade at that stand.

Near by Daniel Brown opened another store some eight years ago, which is still continued by him. In the lower part of the village Benjamin Kline put up a store and tavern building fifty years ago, and was in business there about ten years. It has been carried on there since 1868 by Weston & Brother.

The post-office at Pricetown is the only one in the township. For a long time it had but a weekly mail, and George Henner was the postmaster. Samuel Babb was his successor, followed by Aaron Heckman, Charles Levan and William C. Weston, when the mail was tri-weekly. Since July, 1885, a daily mail from Fleetwood has been supplied, and George Hill is the present postmaster. Charles Levan, a prominent and very successful merchant at Pricetown, was the postmaster for twenty-eight years, till October, 1864.

Dr. Jacob Rothrock is remembered as one of the first physicians located at this place. He was followed by Dr. Henry Burch. Dr. Adrian Loeven was also a practitioner for some years, and he died in the township. Dr. Charles Weber located at Pricetown about thirty-five years ago, and is still in successful practice, having been the longest located in the township.

In 1844 the village contained twenty-five houses, one church, one store, two taverns and one hundred and sixty-five inhabitants; and in 1883 it contained four churches, two stores, three taverns and two hundred inhabitants.

Among other country inns maintained at different times in the township, the most important was the one kept by John Sterner, about 1820, on the place now owned by David Manwiller. West of Pricetown, Peter Miller had an inn about the same time, the place being at present the farm-house of Washington Schmeck.

ROCKLAND TOWNSHIP.

ERECTION OF TOWNSHIP.—In May, 1758, Henry Vanderslice surveyed a large tract of land, containing twelve thousand and eighty-five acres, in the "Oley Hills," for a township. It was confirmed by the court on November 14th following and named "Rockland." The lines were as follows:

"Beginning at a corner of Oley township; thence along the same S. 70° E. 1070 perches, to a stone corner; thence along territory in which there was then a great number of settlers, but which was not yet a township (though it was known by the name of East District, having been the Eastern District of Oley), N. 40° E. 1350 perches, to a chestnut tree; thence along territory known by the name of Long Swamp (which was not yet a township, though steps were then being taken to erect it into a township), N. 55° W. 875 perches, to a stone corner; then along Maxatawny township, S. W. 599 ps., to a Hickory tree corner, and N. W. 472 ps., to a white oak tree corner; thence along Richmond township, S. W. 688 ps., to a stone corner; thence along Ruscomb-manor township, S. E. 578 ps., to a white oak tree corner, and S. W. 639 ps., to the place of beginning."

In 1840 a large tract in the western section of the township, containing about one thousand four hundred acres, was cut off and added to Richmond township, by petition of interested citizens, on account of grievances felt in respect to road taxes and to attending military exercises. M. S. Richards, Samuel S. Jackson and Samuel Beard were the commissioners.

In 1842 a triangular tract in the extreme southeastern section was cut from the township by Samuel S. Jackson, William Wunder and M. S. Richards, commissioners on petition, etc., and added to Pike township.

In 1733 (March 10th) a warrant was issued to Casper Wistar, of Philadelphia, for one thousand acres. The tract was not then located. In August following Conrad Reiff, of Oley, obtained a patent for three hundred acres under this warrant, which he located in the northern section of Oley, and which subsequently became a part of Rockland.

The township took its name from the numerous large rocks found on its territory, especially in the central section. A large rock (in dimensions, thirty feet long, fifteen feet wide and fifteen feet high), which rests on another somewhat smaller, is situated in an open field near by, and to the south of the road leading from Drysville to Fredericksville, and about a mile west from the line of District township. It is commonly known as "Shott's Head." A rock twice the size of the one mentioned lies on the surface of the field near by. A large collection of rocks, comprising what is generally known as "Guinther's Head," are situated about a mile to the north of "Shott's Head." The topmost rock is sixty feet long, twelve feet high and ten feet wide. Its appearance is imposing, the surface of the earth descends abruptly for several hundred feet. It is in a direct line with the Keystone Normal School and the "Pinnacle" (Albany township). It is about one mile west from, and fifty feet lower than, a prominently projecting point in the Longswamp Hills, which has been selected by the United States government as a station in the triangulation survey, and represented to be visible from the State-House at Philadelphia. Near by "Guinther's Head" there is a succession of six large rocks (somewhat lower in elevation), which project upwards in a line at an angle of seventy degrees, and about one hundred and twenty feet in length. The water-shed of the township is in this vicinity, the water draining to the east, south and west.

TAXABLES OF 1750.—The following list comprises the names of taxables in the township in 1750. The tax levied was £31 17s. 6d. Henry Mertz was the collector. The early settlers were Germans, who migrated northwardly from Oley before the erection of the county:

INDUSTRIES.

The streams of Rockland township are small, but the rugged nature of the country makes their use as water-powers possible. These advantages have been well improved. On the Sacony, near the Maxatawny line, William Grim and Joseph De Long have in operation a fine mill, whose old power has been supplemented by steam, and the old methods have given place to the roller process. A new mill has also been built. For the quarter part of a century the Grim family have been interested in milling at this point.

Above, on the site of the old Haag mill, C. Rohrbach has in operation a good mill, which is well patronized. The marble saw-mills of Schweyer & Leiss, operated since 1864, is an interest which has given steady employment to a number of men. The marble is brought here in blocks, hauled from Bower’s Station, and after being sawed into the desired shape, is again taken back to the yard at Bower’s.

"SALLY ANN FURNACE," on the headwaters of the Sacony, was built about 1811 by Valentine Eckert. Prior to that time the site was owned by Abraham Bieber. Like the furnaces put up in those days, it had only a small capacity, and was located here principally on account of the ease in getting wood for charcoal purposes. Eckert sold the property to Jacob V. R. Hunter. The furnace was discontinued in 1869. In 1879 it was again put in blast, steam-power having been added, and it was operated only a short time when the machinery was removed. The furnace has since been idle. The property belongs to the heirs of Daniel Hunter, and includes several hundred acres of land, a good farm with mansion and half a dozen tenements.

The "Rockland Forges" were located in the southern section of the township, on Beaver Creek, and operated for about seventy years. Seven thousand and fifty-three acres of woodland were connected with these industries. The most prominent operator was General Daniel Udree.1

On the head-waters of Bieber Creek, near Dryville, is the old Roth mill, built as early as 1810. It has a small capacity and is now operated as the property of C. Keller. Near by, the Yoder family had a saw-mill many years ago, which has become better known as the ‘Sandier mill.

The Tyson Forge, at Strunk’s mill, was discontinued long ago, but the mill is still carried on. Near the Oley line Jacob Barto put up a paper-mill, which he operated some time, when he sold out to Levi Kohler. It was last operated by David Lohbach, Esq., in the manufacture of wrapping-paper. This building is now occupied, and the power used by William S. Reinhardt in the manufacture of farming implements. Here, for a short time, a small mill was operated by two Germans in the manufacture of birch-oil.

Near New Jerusalem there is a deposit of granite, closely resembling the better grades of Vermont granite, very hard and capable of bearing a fine polish. It has been quarried to some extent on the farms of Jacob Angstadt and John Dry, and shipments made to Easton, Philadelphia and other points. Lately nothing has been done in this direction. Eighteen men were formerly employed. Several iron-mines have been profitably worked, the ore found being heavy and rich hematite. The principal operations were on the Bieber and Beidler farms.

CHURCHES.

CHRIST’S LUTHERAN CHURCH, sometimes called "Bieber Creek Church," from its location on the headwaters of that stream, is situated near Drysville in a fine position. The congregation was organized in 1747 by the Rev. Tobias Wagner, and in the spring of that year Henry Mertz donated three-fourths of an acre of land upon which to build a church. The building was of logs, and was so far completed that it could be occupied in the fall of that year. After seventeen years the members of the congregation had increased to such an extent that a new and larger church was required. Accordingly, the corner-stone was laid June 14, 1764, and the church built that year. The building committee comprised George Schaeffer, Sr., Henry Mertz, Johannes Bieber, George Heffner and Jacob Freu. The minister at that time was the Rev. Johannes Schaum. When he died, January 25, 1778, he was buried under the church, after the custom of that day. He was an earnest pastor and highly appreciated by the congregation. A third church was erected in 1798, being the present building. It is a stone building, of substantial appearance. It was handsomely repaired in 1879. The church property embraces about twenty acres of land, four of which have been devoted to cemetery purposes. Sheds, several hundred feet in length, of neat appearance, have been erected for the comfort of the horses of the attendants of the church.

The congregation had about five hundred members in 1885.

Rev. B. E. Kramlich was the pastor, succeeding the Rev. Isaac Roeller in 1862, the latter having served the congregation twenty-two years. His predecessors were Revs. John Knoske and Daniel Lehman.

NEW JERUSALEM CHURCH (Reformed and Lutheran) was erected in 1840, in consequence of a division in “Christ Church,” a number of members withdrawing to form separate congregations and to erect a distinct church. The house stands on half an acre of land, donated by Andrew Shiffert, who was a member of the building committee. At a later period two acres more were secured from the Herbein farm, which were set apart for cemetery purposes. The church is of stone and almost square in dimensions. A movement is on foot to remodel it in the near future. The Lutheran congregation had as its first pastor the Rev. John Knoske, who was instrumental in building the church. His successors were the Revs. Hinterleiter, Kohler, Sell, Croll, Boyer and D. K. Humbert, the latter being at present in charge. The members number about two hundred. The Reformed congregation has a much smaller membership, and the Rev. Isaac S. Stahr is the pastor. His predecessors were Revs. Daniel Schoedler, J. Sassaman Herman and Isaac Miesse, the last having been the first pastor. A Sunday-school, comprising one hundred members, is conducted in this church.

VILLAGES.

DRYVILLE comprises fifteen residences, a tavern, store, church and eighty inhabitants. It is situated near the northern line of the township, about one and a half miles from Lyons station, on the East Pennsylvania Railroad. It received its name in 1852, when the post-office was established. Previously it had been called “Stony Point.” Benjamin E. Dry was appointed postmaster, and he has since continuously held that office. The early settlers here were Jacob Mertz, farmer; Mathias Roth, farmer and miller; John Diener, farmer; and later, John Stimmel, coachmaker. Upon the old Mertz farm most of the present hamlet is built.

The first store in the place was opened by Fink & Weidnerhammer, and those subsequently in trade were Klein & Weiler, Thomas Oyster, Samuel Fee, Christian Bryman, S. & H. H. Weidner, Joseph E. Dry, R. E. Dry, R. B. Dry, and since March 11, 1857, Benjamin E. Dry, the latter two having occupied the present stand, which was built in 1852. The former store was at the lower end of the place, near the creek.

John Christman was the first inn-keeper. The present tavern was opened about 1847. A large number of landlords have served the public at this place.

NEW JERUSALEM is located toward the centre of the township, about a mile from Dryville. It contains about twenty residences, a store, hotel, church and a liberal supply of mechanic shops. Among the early tradesmen at this place were John Kline, cradle-maker; Joel Barto and E. Guinther, shoemakers; A. Hilbert, saddler; Jacob Meyer, blacksmith; Samnel Funk, wagon-maker; and Jacob Kline, tin-smith.

The first public place at this point was the tavern kept by Andrew Shiffert, about 1810, in a house which has been converted into a residence. In the present building David Bast was the first landlord. In this building the first store of the place was opened by John Bower, and at the present stand, now occupied by Herman B. Ruppert; the first store-keepers were Jacob Holder & Bro. In 1882 the village contained twenty dwellings and one hundred and twenty inhabitants.

The New Jerusalem post-office was established in 1828. It is supplied with a daily mail. For many years a tri-weekly mail only was afforded.

In the practice of medicine Dr. George L. Maurer located here in 1835, and was, probably, the first permanent physician in the township. Benjamin E. Dry graduated in medicine in 1856, but never became a practitioner. The present physician is Dr. D. M. Bortz. Other physicians in the township have been Doctors Evans, L. H. Thompson, William H. Babb (who died in the township), James McDonough, William Funk and William Hertzog.

In the country east of Dryville, R. H. Angstadt had a store, which he continued about five years, when he removed it. Country hotels have also been kept by Thomas Geissler and others at the stand now occupied by William G. Weidner.

Destructive Whirlwind in Township.—On Tuesday, May 22, 1804, a fearful and destructive whirlwind arose in Rockland township, which, it was thought by the inhabitants, could hardly have been surpassed in severity. It began in the township about four o’clock in the afternoon, near the mill of Frederick Miner, and covered a width of about two hundred yards and extended thence through Northampton (now partly Lehigh) County to the Delaware River. Its course was from west to east, and the entire area was marked by destruction. It hurled the roofs from the buildings of the following persons in the township: Peter Bauer, mills, saw-mill, barn and house; Paul Grosscup, barn; Henry Hoffman, barn and house; Daniel Fry, barn, stable and house. Many other buildings were injured. It uprooted nearly all the fruit and other trees, turned over fences, etc. At some places large hail-stones fell, destroying much growing grain. It continued about ten minutes and was accompanied with severe rain, thunder and lightning.

District Township.

Early Settlement.—As early immigrants into Pennsylvania proceeded up the Schuylkill Valley and its principal tributaries, the Perkiomen and the Manatawny Valleys, some of them settled in and above the “Oley Hills,” and in taking up lands they located them as lying in the district between Oley and Colebrookdale. The settlements extended over a long section of territory, and to facilitate the assessment of property therein, the county commissioners caused it to be divided into two sections, which they called “East District” and “West District.” Separate assessment lists of the taxables in these two districts were made for some years. I could not ascertain when this township by the name of District was first established.

In 1841 a tract of eleven hundred acres was added to this township in the eastern section,—it having been taken from the western part of Hereford township.

In 1849 the estimated area was seven thousand acres.

Taxables of 1759.—The following list comprises the names of the taxables of the township for the year 1759. Tax levied was £40 14s. 6d. George Hartlein was the collector:

EARLY INDUSTRIES.—In 1726 Owen Richards and David Harry conveyed unto John Ellis, of Oley, two tracts of land, containing two hundred and fifty acres which adjoined property belonging to the “Spring Forge Co.” This company was then conducting a forge somewhere in this vicinity, which was commonly called “Spring Forge.” Its location, it is believed, was on Pine Creek, in this district (now, and since 1813 in Pike township), about four miles north of the “Oley Churches.” Its early history is involved in obscurity. It was owned by Anthony Morris and conducted by him in 1729. It is possible that the forge of this company was situated on the Manatawny, within several miles of “Pine Forge.”

“The District Furnace” was in this township, situated on Pine Creek about a mile above the line of Pike township. It was owned in 1784 by John Lesher, who, it is believed, erected it some years before.

The inhabitants of District are almost exclusively engaged in agricultural pursuits. The township is isolated, and it has only a few streams of water, whose power is very feeble. In the eastern part Anthony Eltz conducted a tannery for a number of years. The buildings were enlarged and converted into a tavern by Thomas Heydt, about ten years ago. It is still a public-house. Near this place the Sharps had a mill, which became the property of George Conrad. It is now the property of George Kemp. The work done there is limited. In the northwestern part, on the head-waters of Pine Creek, on the site of a small charcoal furnace, which the Leschers formerly carried on, Reuben Trexler built a stone mill, which is still operated as the property of William Lesher.

It has three sets of stones and does good custom work.

VILLAGES.

FREDERICKSVILLE is situated in the northwestern part of the township. It was named after David Frederick, who built and kept a public-house there. Later Henry Bauman opened a store at the same place. The present store is in a new building erected by Jacob Fry, the merchant, inn-keeper and postmaster of the village.

The Fredericksville post-office was established in 1853, with David Frederick as the first postmaster. The office has a daily mail from Lyons and Barto stations.

LANDISVILLE, commonly known as “Landis’ Store” is situated in the central portion of the township. John Weller established a tavern at this place about 1800, and carried it on successfully for many years. The old building is still standing. He sold out to Samuel Landis, who continued the same business. The place then took the name mentioned. Samuel Tee opened a general store in the same building. In 1853 a post-office was established at this point, and named “Landis’ Store.” Samuel Landis was the first postmaster and was succeeded by his son, John H. Landis, the present incumbent. It is on the same stage line as the Fredericksville office and has a daily mail. Tee was succeeded in the mercantile business by Henry Bauman, for a short time, when he sold out to Samuel Landis. The latter was succeeded in both store and tavern by his son, John H., in 1872, who, after conducting business for ten years, enlarged and remodeled the buildings. The location is on elevated ground. Near this place lived Dr. Augustus Knoske, a German physician, skilled as a practitioner, but eccentric in his habits. He was professionally engaged a number of years, traveling over a large scope of country on foot and carrying his medicines in his great-coat pockets, which he wore even on the warmest days.

There is no organized religious body in the township, most of the inhabitants worshiping at the Hill Church or Hereford Church, each being only several miles distant. The schoolhouses are inviting and the schools are usually well sustained.

“Down to the spring election of 1867, one township of the county refused to come under the beneficent rule of the common-school system. At last it has wheeled into line; and it now stands ready to join its energies with the other townships of the county in the great work of education. The people of District township covered themselves with glory, when last March, through the ballot-box, they elected six directors according to the requirements of the school law. They now enter upon a new epoch in their history.”

In 1868 the township had four schools with an attendance of two hundred and seven scholars.

EARL TOWNSHIP.

Erection of Township.—In the hilly and wooded section of territory which lay to the east of the “Oley Hills,” and which was included as a part of Oley township, a considerable number of settlers took up lands and established their homes before the erection of the county, and these were continued for some years afterward. The settlements then came to be commonly regarded in that vicinity as a district, though it was not regularly established as such; and the inhabitants of the one or other portion identified their locality as the “Western District” or “Eastern District.”

On August 14, 1781, the inhabitants of the “Western District” presented a petition to the court at Reading, praying that the district might be divided on account of its great length (upwards of eighteen miles), and set apart into a separate township. The following commissioners were appointed: Daniel Bertolet, Daniel Guldin, Daniel Hunter, Daniel Levan and Henry Kerst, who made return of the district inclosed the within following lines for such township, viz.:

"Beginning at a corner of Oley and Amity townships; thence along Amity township S. 75 W. 875 perches; thence along Douglas township N. 40 E. 660 perches; thence along Colebrookdale township N. 55 W. 236 perches and N. 35 E. 880 perches to a point; thence along territory commonly called the 'Eastern District,' the following five courses and distances: N. 46 W. 160 perches, N. 69 W. 234 perches, N. 77 W. 320 perches, S. 46 W. 290 perches and N. 63 W. 540 perches to a point on the line of Oley township; thence along said line S. 15 W. 1686 perches to the place of beginning; and reported it to contain 10,882 acres.”

Their return was confirmed by the court, and in November of the same year the court erected the said district into a township by the name of EARL.

TAXABLES OF 1782.—The following list comprises the names of one hundred and ten taxable of the township for the year 1782. Tax levied was £28 19s. 11d. The amount assessed was £347 19s. 6d. John Weidner was the collector. All the parties named did not then reside in the township; some of them were non-residents,—

SHANESVILLE.

The only distinctive business point in Earl township is Shanessville, a village of twenty buildings, a little north of the centre of the township. It derived its name from John Shane, who owned the land upon which the place was founded by Peter Clauser, in 1833, the latter having built and opened a public-house that year. This was kept by him until his death, when his son Daniel succeeded him. He was an active business man, and under his direction most of the buildings in the place were put up. The present landlord is his son, Simon B. Clauser.

The first mercantile business was carried on by Tobias Clauser, about forty years ago. Afterward Daniel Clauser had a store at the same place. In 1859 he built a new store-room, in which Young & Hillegas first traded. Subsequently, Simon Clauser, Wm. Haas, Samuel Weidner and Isaac Heydt traded there; the last-named is the present merchant, and he is also postmaster of the Shanessville office, which was established in 1867. The first mail service was from Kutztown, three times a week. In 1872 the Reading route was established, and since 1882 the service has been daily. For many years the proprietor of the stage-line has been Reuben Uptegrove, whose faithful service has given the people of this remote township comparatively easy communication with Reading. In the southern part of the township is a country tavern kept by A. E. Fegley. Farther up the road is Earlville, with a post-office, store and tavern. The place is just across the line in Amity, and is noted in the sketch of that township.

The first tavern in the township was kept by the Pennybecker family, soon after 1800, in a house which stood at the foot of the hills in the central part of the township. It was discon-

viewed the premises, consisting of sections of territory from District, Rockland, Oley and Earl townships, and set them apart for a new township, to be called Pike, which were bounded and described as follows: "Beginning at Pine Creek, on lands of John Weidner, in Oley township; thence south sixty-six and a half east one thousand five hundred perches; thence along the line of Colebrookdale township, north thirty-three and a half cast five hundred and sixty-five perches; thence through District township, north fifty, west one thousand four hundred and forty perches; thence along the line of Rockland township, south thirty-five west six hundred and ten perches to Pine Creek; and thence along said creek four hundred and fifteen perches to the place of beginning. Their report was presented and confirmed at August sessions, 1813.

In 1842 a section of Rockland township was added to Pike.

The names of the taxables of the township for the year 1814 are not given, for the reason that the early settlers of this section are included in the townships of Oley, District and Rockland.

CHURCHES.

St. John's Church.—An old-established church, commonly known as the "Hill Church," stands in the eastern section of the township. In 1741 certain members of the Lutheran denomination and their neighbors of the "Oley Hills" bought a tract of fifty acres of land on a high place of the mountain, for a glebe or parsonage farm; and in 1747 they erected a frame building for church purposes. They were assisted by members of the German Reformed congregation, who, in consideration of their assistance, were permitted to send their children to the school of the Lutheran congre-

1 The warrant was issued in 1747 to Casper Grygler, George Ernest and Andrew Rodenheffer for the use of the "Hill Church." The patent was issued in 1829 to William Walter, Adam Weller, Henry Gross and George Herbet, wardens of the Lutheran and Presbyterian congregations, in Pike township, called "Hill Church."

2 The roof of the first church projected over the sides so as to protect it against storms. This space under the roof on the outside was used by the early settlers to hang up their seed corn, from which circumstance it was called locally "Die Welshkorn Kerche."

PIKE TOWNSHIP.

Erection of Township.—In pursuance of an application for a new township, the Court of Quarter Sessions, in November, 1812, appointed Henry M. Richards, Frederick Fritz and John Miller commissioners for the purpose of viewing and laying out the desired township. Some months afterward these commissioners continued many years ago, and the building was converted into a farm-house. The early elections were held at that place.

The land of this township is very hilly, but it has been occupied by an enterprising people, who have obtained for themselves numerous roads, and established six schools for the education of their children. The "Oley Hills" in this township comprise a number of prominent elevations which are respectively known as "Earl," "Stone Cave," "Long," "Fancy" and "Sandy." They are also sometimes called "Earl Mountains."

Although there is no church within the bounds of Earl township, it must not be supposed that its inhabitants are averse to religious influences. Most of them are attendants of the churches in Oley, Pike and Colebrookdale townships. Sunday-schools are maintained in the township. A union Sunday-school was organized as early as May 20, 1850, when opposition against such schools was very strong in some parts of the county. In July following it had sixty scholars.

Since 1850 these valuable auxiliaries to the neighboring churches have received the patronage and support of the best people of the township.

The success of this Christian enterprise is amongst the hills of Earl over thirty years ago, when the system of common-school education was struggling to complete its grand march throughout the county, won the following complimentary notice in a newspaper published then at Reading: "Earl is a glorious little township. These names (alluding to the names of the officers and teachers published) stand in bright contrast with the anti-Sunday-school men of Robeson."

gation, hold religious services in the church and bury their dead in the adjacent burying-ground. Some years afterward the Reformed members became joint owners of the property. In 1786 the two congregations united in the erection of a fine stone church building in place of the frame church. And a third church was erected in 1853, the corner-stone having been laid on May 15, 1853. A grand "Centenary Festival" was held in this church on September 22, 1866. This occasion was set apart in order to celebrate the day when Rev. Michael Schlatter—the pioneer missionary of the German Reformed Church in Berks County—visited Oley, which was exactly one hundred and twenty years before (September 22, 1746). The church was handsomely and profusely decorated. A conspicuous figure in the services then was the Hon. Daniel Young, a prominent member of the First Reformed Church of Reading, who had been the organist of the "Hill Church" fifty-three years before. He was present by special invitation and officiated at the organ. Though over seventy years of age "he gave speech and voice to the devotions of a hundred years. His discourses spoke of feasts and funerals, of bridal joys and burial griefs. The church rang with the same hymns and the same chorals which the original settlers sang when lonely strangers here, and the same which he sang with this flock fifty years ago."

In 1886 the present building was remodeled and supplied with a spire, which greatly improved its appearance.

The ministers of the Lutheran congregation have been the following:

The Revs. Lucas Raus, in 1754; Wm. Kurtz, John H. Schaum, Fred. A. Muhlenberg, G. H. E. Muhlenberg, J. M. Schmidt, Christian Striet, Daniel Lehman, John C. Dill, John F. Wieand, Jacob Miller, Conrad Miller, Nathan Iseger, A. D. Croll, S. R. Boyer and D. K. Humbert, the latter being the present pastor. The Reformed congregation has had as its principal pastors the Revs. Aug. Herman, Lewis Herman, R. A. Van Court and P. P. A. Hoffman. Each congregation has about four hundred members.

1 An interesting article on the history of this church was prepared by Rev. B. Bausman, of Reading, and published in the German Reformed Messenger in 1866.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH (Lutheran and Reformed) is located on a very elevated tract of ground near Lobachsville, and is most generally spoken of as the "Lobach's Church." To afford a more central place of worship to the people of this vicinity than that occupied by the Hill and Oley Churches, Samuel Lobach donated a lot of land for church and cemetery purposes, and upon this there was built, in 1834, a plain stone church. The building committee was composed of Samuel Lobach, Jacob Weidner, Jacob Bieber and Joseph Specht. The structure was small, being but thirty-five by forty feet, and it soon became insufficient to accommodate the people. It was used, however, until 1877, when it was taken down and the present edifice erected in its place the same year. Many persons came from near and far to witness the consecration services, which transpired late in the fall. The building committee was composed of David Lobach, Benjamin Yerger and William Gabel. The first-named was not only active, but untiring in the matter. It is a fine building of substantial stone masonry and has a neat spire. Connected with the church is a cemetery, which has been enlarged by the addition of several acres. The property was neatly inclosed in 1878. This cemetery is controlled by a corporate body. Officers for 1886: Trustees,—Nathan H. Landis, Daniel Peters, David Fry, Moses Eberhart, Nathan Yoder, Jr., and Tilghman Houseman. The church property also includes a number of sheds, built of stone and substantially constructed. Its members number one hundred.

The first pastor was the Rev. Isaac Roeller, who remained until 1836. The succeeding pastors were Revs. Peter Miller, 1836-39; Daniel Kohler, 1839-50; John Grim, 1850-51; Joel Grim, 1851-52; George S. Miller, 1852-53; A. J. Hinterleiter, 1853-60; Alfred D. Croll, 1862-68; Simon R. Boyer, 1868-72; and D. K. Humbert, 1872-86.

The membership is small, embracing only about forty. Since June 28, 1862, the pastor has been Rev. P. P. A. Hoffman. His predecessor and the first pastor of the church was the Rev.
Lewis Herman, who preached from 1834 until August 19, 1860. In the cemetery lies interred George Angstadt, who died at Lobachsville in 1861, aged one hundred and one years, six months and fifteen days; and on May 22, 1859, his wife died, aged ninety-one years.

VILLAGES.

HILL CHURCH.—Of the villages in the township, Hill Church is the smallest, comprising but a few buildings, the post-office, store and tavern being the principal features. Both the latter are kept by John W. Dotterer. He is also the postmaster of the office which was established in 1864. Among other tavern-keepers there were members of the Wieand family. Adam Glase kept the first store.

PIKEVILLE, one mile from the Oley line, is situated in the most fertile valley of the township, near the base of the hills which characterize the interior. It contains about a dozen houses, some of them large and substantial. The point is favorable for trading purposes. It is the place where William Shall had his store and tavern many years ago. In 1834 the post-office was established and named Pikeville. A shop and a few other buildings were built soon afterward. Most of the improvements have been made in recent years. From 1868 till 1879 Nathan H. Landis conducted the business of the place. He is the present postmaster. The store and tavern have been kept successfully by H. B. Ruppert, Benjamin Yerger and H. B. Yerger.

Near this place Dr. William A. Herbst lived as a medical practitioner, and after a number of years moved to Reading. His first home was at the mill, which he also carried on. He was succeeded by a Dr. Gore, whose practice continued until his death; then Drs. T. D. Leidy, Oliver H. Fisher, E. N. Herbst and B. S. Grim practiced here for a short time. The last-named was succeeded by the present Dr. W. D. De Long, who has a large and increasing practice. One mile north, Dr. Wiley was in practice a short time before his death; and some other physicians were in the township for very brief periods, removing before they had succeeded in establishing themselves in practice.

LOBACHSVILLE is the oldest hamlet in the township, and derived its name from Peter Lobach, its founder. It was formerly the seat of active manufacturing interests and a business place of considerable importance, but with the decay of the former the latter has also declined until but little remains. Here are half a dozen residences and the usual interests of a country place. The first improvements were made by William Pott, who was a large land-owner and miller on the Pine Creek. In 1745 he conveyed fifty-nine acres and a fulling-mill to Peter Lobach, but he reserved the grist-mill, a short distance above. Lobach carried on the fulling-mill and was succeeded in that business by his son Samuel, who was the father of two sons—William and Samuel. The first-named (William) succeeded his father in the ownership of the mills and woolen-factory; and his brother (Samuel) built and carried on successfully a chair-factory for some years. Samuel Lobach, last-named, was the father of David Lobach, for many years a justice of the peace at this place. The elder Samuel Lobach substituted the present large stone woolen-factory in the place of the old factory. Latterly, since 1885, the building has been used as a creamery by William Keim. Its use as a woolen-factory was abandoned when William Lobach erected a new woolen-factory a short distance below. This was successfully operated by him for a number of years and then the machinery was removed. The building was demolished and the dam torn away. The property now belongs to the Weidner family. The saw-mill at the upper power is still operated for the Lobach heirs.

Samuel Lobach, the chair-maker, started the store, and, at his death it passed to his son David. The latter sold out to Levi Brown, and, upon Brown's death, others succeeded for several years. The present store-keeper is F. K. Yoder. The Lobachsville post-office was established in 1835. It has always been in this store, and the store-keepers have been the postmasters. It has a daily mail from Reading, on the stage-route to Pikeville. William Lobach built and kept the tavern opposite the store. Since his time it has had many keepers, the present being A. K. Yoder.
The old Pott mill became the property of Jonathan Grin, who owned it a number of years. William Harner was a later owner and David Reinert is the present. It is an old stone building. The site was one of the first improved in this part of the county. Above—where were the Pott, and, later, the Heilig forges, no improvements remain, the water-power being unemployed.

On the Manatawny proper, near the Oley line, the old mill, long operated by George Shall, became the property of Dr. William A. Herbst, and from him it passed to George Renniger. It was destroyed by fire in 1883, and rebuilt by him the same year. It is now the property of Jonas Lesher. The mills of Motz, Yoder, Kleh and others have also had a number of changes of ownership, most of them being still operated in a small way. Near Pikeville, F. F. Cleaver built a first-class creamery in the spring of 1886.

Die Berg Maria.—A woman, by the name of Maria Young, also commonly called "Die Berg Maria," lived as a recluse for many years in this township, near Motz's mill. She was visited in her home in the mountain by persons from various parts of the country, some having come a distance of four hundred miles to see her. A stone was placed at her grave "By a Lady of Philadelphia," with the following epitaph:

"Anna Maria Young, a truly pious and benevolent recluse, who lived nearly thirty years alone on a small farm, the home of her ancestors, situated almost on the summit of one of the Oley mountains. Her cottage was the picture of neatness and of comfort, and was visited by strangers from every direction, who never failed to depart without imbibing the highest opinions of the meekness, the piety and the benevolence of their lonely, yet happy hostess. She died November 17, 1819, aged seventy years."

"Here, underneath this mountain stone,
Lies Mary Young, who lived alone,
High on the lofty mountain side,
Belov'd and honor'd till she died;
Lov'd and honor'd by the few,
Who give to virtue, virtue's due.
Stranger, she that's buried here,
Was humble, pious and sincere;
The even tenor of her days,
She pass'd in grateful pray'r and praise;
Her heart was like the gentle dove.

That came from Heav'n with promis'd love—
Her heart, her hands, her cottage door,
Were open to the rich and poor.
Her faith confirm'd, her will resign'd,
So sweetly calm, so pure her mind,
The God of mercy from his Throne
Look'd down and claimed her as his own."

ONTELAUNEE SECTION.

ONTELAUNEE section comprises the upper eastern portion of the county. It takes its name from the large stream which drains the greater part of its territory.

It is an Indian word, and signifies "Maiden Creek," a daughter or branch of the Schuylkill. The stream was called "Maiden Creek" by the "Friends" when they began their first settlements in 1733—ignoring the beautiful and expressive name, "Ontelaunee." The legislative provision that English words should be used in naming persons may have indirectly induced them to make the change. They took up the first land by patents along and across its winding banks from its mouth northwardly for more than ten miles; and also along the eastern bank of the Schuylkill from the same point to the Blue Mountain. Their presence and influence brought about the introduction of English names for the four townships—Maiden-creek, Richmond, Windsor and Greenwich, which, at the erection of the county, included over half of this large section.

But the name was very justly restored to prominence in the nomenclature of the county by the division of Maiden-creek township, and naming the western part "Ontelaunee."

STREAMS.—The Maiden-creek rises in Lehigh County. It enters Berks County in Albany township, flows southwardly for about twenty-five miles, forming in its course an irregular,

An interesting German poem, pertaining to the life and character of the same person, was prepared by "A Gentleman of Oley" (believed to have been Daniel Ber- tolet, a rich and religious farmer). It is published in Rupp's "History of Berks County," p. 260. A small German book, entitled "Die Berg Maria," was published by L. A. Wollenweber in 1880. It is valuable for many interesting historical facts, which relate as well to Berks County as to Maria Young.
diagonal line of the section, and empties into the Schuylkill in Ontelaunee township.¹

Its principal tributaries are the following:
Pine, Stony, Furnace, Sacony, Moselem and Willow.

No considerable creeks, except Pine Creek mentioned, flow into it from the west. The total length of the stream and its tributaries is seventy miles. It is a wonderful water-power, and is invaluable in irrigating the lands through which it winds its winding way.

HILLS.—There are numerous hills in this section, but they are not remarkable for prominence, and are not classed with any chain of mountains. They are mostly used for woodland. The Blue Mountain bounds it on the northwest. The "Pinnacle" is a spur from this mountain, and extends eastwardly through Windsor into Albany, in length about six miles. The easternmost point, at the apex, is one of the highest points in the county, being elevated over twelve hundred feet above the sea. It commands a magnificent view of the surrounding country for many miles, extending into Schuylkill, Lehigh and Northampton Counties, to the north and east, and including all that portion of Berks which lies north of the South Mountain.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.—This section is intersected by very many roads in all the townships. There are three prominent highways worthy of particular mention,—the "Centre Turnpike," which extends thirteen miles from Muhlenberg northwardly, generally along the Schuylkill, through Ontelaunee, Perry and Windsor to the Schuylkill County line; the "Kutztown Road," ² which extends in almost a direct line northeastwardly seventeen miles from the Centre turnpike, near the mouth of the Maiden Creek, through Ontelaunee, Maiden-creek, Richmond and Maxatantwy to the Lehigh County line; and the "State Road," which extends eastwardly thirteen miles from the river at Hamburg, through Windsor and Greenwich, to the Lehigh County line, it being a continuation of the State road from the Lebanon County line across the entire upper section of the county, in length altogether thirty-five miles.

The "Schuylkill Canal" extends along the river to the western extremity of the section from West Leesport, through Ontelaunee, Perry and Windsor, to Schuylkill County, a length of eleven and a half miles.

The "Reading and Lehigh Railroad" (formerly called the "Berks County") extends along the Maiden-creek from Berkeley, near its mouth, to the Lehigh County line, a length of about twenty miles.

The "East Penn Railroad" extends north-eastwardly through the lower portion of Ontelaunee, Maiden-creek, Richmond and Maxa-tawny and the central portion of Longswamp to the Lehigh County line, a distance of eighten miles.

Nine townships are included in this section, and the historical narrative of each appears in the order mentioned: Maiden-creek, Ontelaunee, Richmond, Maxatantwy, Longswamp, Windsor, Perry, Albany, Greenwich.

MAIDEN-CREEK TOWNSHIP.

The land in Maiden-creek township was taken up by Friends. The exact period is not known; but it is supposed about the time that the Indians released the land in 1732. The Friends were always inclined to respect the rights of the Indians, and therefore they were not guilty of trespasses. The Indians knew of and appreciated this friendly and honorable feeling:

It is supposed that Moses Starr and his wife were the first two settlers in that remote section of uninhabited country, having gone there about 1720. This is possible, but not probable.
Some of the earliest Friends who took up lands
by warrant and patent were Moses Starr, Francis Parvin, Samuel Lightfoot, Joseph Whyley (Wily), Robert Penrose, Mordecai Lee and Nathaniel Houlton. At one time about 1752, when Berks County was erected, nearly ¹The upper portion, from the mouth of the Sacony northwardly, is known as "Ontelaunee;" and the lower section from this point as "Maiden Creek."

²Sometimes called "Easton Road," because it was originally laid out to Easton.
the entire township was owned and occupied by Friends. Seventy families of them were connected with the meeting house in the township, which was erected in their midst.

In 1746, on the 2d day of the First Month (March) a petition was presented to the Court of Quarter Sessions, at Philadelphia, asking the judges to erect a new township and suggesting as a proper name, Maiden-creek. The petition described a large tract of land, containing nearly thirteen thousand acres, with the usual allowance. The descriptions by metes and bounds was as follows:

"Beginning at White Oak tree on the schuylkill River, a corner of the land of Nicholas Kindser; thence N. 65 E. 970 perches to stone in a line of the Manor of Ruscum; thence along said manor N. E. 560 ps., S. E. 116 ps., N. E. 86 ps., S. E. 91 ps., N. 65 E. 349 ps.; thence N. W., 1880 ps.; thence S. 65 W. 1370 ps. to the river; thence down the same river about 1400 ps. to the beginning."

Doubtless the townships to the east and north (Richmond and Windsor) were not then erected or recognized by the names subsequently given to them. The survey was made July 20, 1746, by Benjamin Lightfoot. The eastern line was reckoned four miles from Maxatavny.

This petition was subscribed by the following signers, who were property-holders, in the proposed new district:

The names were well written, without any marks. The prayer of the petitioners was granted in December, 1746, and the township by the name suggested was then erected.

In September, 1838, a large tract of land was laid off from Ruscumb-manor township and added to Maiden-creek township, in order to accommodate the property-holders of that section in respect to road taxes, etc.

In 1849 the township was divided into two sections for the purpose of forming a new township, and the western section was named "Ontelaunee."

The township was named after the creek which extends diagonally through its territory. The words "Maiden Creek" arose from the fact that the creek was a branch of the Schuylkill. The Indians called it Ontelaunee, which signifies little daughter. This Indian word is supposed to have been originally, Andenielia.

In the central part of the township is a spring of unusual size, its dimensions covering nearly three acres of ground. It was long known as the Berndt spring, but for a number of years the farm on which it is located has been the property of the Peters family. The water issuing from this spring is cool and pleasant to the taste, and its volume would be great enough to furnish water-power if the formation of the land were favorable to furnish a mill-site. The surrounding country is level, preventing the utilization of the water as a motive-power.

The following list comprises the taxable inhabitants of the township in 1750. Joseph Penrose was the collector. The amount of tax then levied was £50 2s.

The early substantial improvements in the township were made by the Friends. Latterly, especially during the last fifty years, a great proportion of those highly improved lands have passed into the hands of the Germans, through the gradual extinction or departure of the Friends.

Several families of the Friends still remain, however, bearing the honored names of Willy, Pearson, Wright, Lightfoot, Willit, Parvin and Penrose, who are now, as their fathers before them were, among the most substantial citizens of the county.

MAIDEN-CREEK FRIENDS' MEETING-HOUSE is a plain old stone building, one-half a mile west from Maiden-creek Station. The Monthly Meetings of the Friends in Maiden-creek were established as early as 1737, but they were probably held at the houses of some of the Friends. The present property was not obtained until about twenty-two years later. On the 12th of July, 1759, Benjamin Lightfoot granted a small tract (four acres and five perches) of land from his farm to certain friends, Joseph Penrose, Richard Penrose, Thomas Wright and William Tomlinson, who then erected the present meeting-house thereon. Originally the surrounding country was a forest of oak and walnut trees, some of the trees having attained very large proportions (the stump of an oak tree indicates a diameter of six feet and that of a walnut tree more than three feet). The building itself is out of repair, and the cemetery shows a neglected condition, owing to the very small number of persons now interested in these venerable landmarks. The Friends' school-house, near by, in consequence of its disuse for a number of years, is also dilapidated. The latter was built in 1807, and was kept open until about 1870. It is the second building at that place, the first having been erected some time before 1784. In that year a lot of ground adjoining the church-lot was purchased, and Thomas Wright, Mordecai Lee and Thomas Lightfoot were appointed a committee to provide a school. They secured a log building, which, no doubt, was used until the stone house took its place, twenty-three years later. In the spring of 1784 Thomas Pearson became the first regular teacher, his engagement having then been made for one year. Fifteen pupils entered the school then, and eight during the spring quarter, making twenty-three pupils in all. Instruction was given at the rate of forty shillings each a quarter. As this was one of the first English schools in the country, its patronage was quite large, many young men coming from a distance and boarding with farmers in the neighborhood. Special attention was given to mathematical studies, and as surveying promised to be a lucrative employment, a number attended the school with a view of qualifying themselves in that branch of study under teachers who were usually very proficient. Nearly all the teachers were Friends, the most prominent among them having been Thomas Pearson, Mordecai Wright, John G. Lewis, Joseph Jacobs, Jesse Willetts, James M. Meredith and Jesse Lightfoot. This school was instrumental in creating a sentiment in favor of English schools, and helped to make the system of free education a success.

The Orthodox Friends’ Meeting-House is situated on lands which was given for church purposes by Thomas Willits. It stands on the west side of the Maiden-creek. It is a small brick building. The Meeting is composed of Jacob Parvin and family, Thomas Willits and family, John Pearson, Susan Pearson, Rebecca Lee and William Smith. The present house has been occupied since 1853. Prior to that time, and after the Orthodox Friends had ceased to worship in the old stone house, the meetings were held in a log house on the Reber farm, previously used as a residence. There is no resident minister, but meetings are held regularly on every First day and also occasionally on week-days.

Maiden-creek Church.—This house of worship, in the lower part of Blandon, is finely located. It is a large brick edifice, with a basement, surmounted by a steeple and presents a substantial appearance. It was built in 1860 by Adam Kauffman, Jeremiah De Turk, David Trout and William Bland, as a building committee of the Lutheran and Reformed congregations, at a cost of about seven thousand dollars. The corner-stone was laid June 24, 1860. The trustees, in 1885, were Frank Seidel, John H. Medary and Jeremiah De Turk.

The Lutheran congregation, consisting of one hundred and forty members, has had the pastor care of the Rev. B. D. Zweitzig, with William Kisling and David Depp as elders; at the same time the Reformed congregation had about one hundred and twenty-five members, with John S. Fox and Solomon G. Dunkle as elders, and Rev. B. F. Wise pastor since 1877. The previous Reformed ministers, were the Revs. William Davis and A. L. Herman, the latter having been the first pastor.

A fine cemetery is connected with the church which is controlled by the Maiden-creek Cemetery Co., incorporated April 8, 1862, with the following members: Jacob Hoffman, John S. Fox, William Wissner, George D. Wissner, Jeremiah De Turk, George Dunkle, Nicholas Madary and A. W. Kauffman. The cemetery contains several acres of ground, is neatly laid out and kept in good order. It includes many fine monuments.

Zion’s Church of the Evangelical Association is a small but neat brick building in the upper part of Blandon. It was erected in 1875, mainly through the efforts of Jacob Reppert and Jacob Bartley, assisted by Mahlon Snyder, Ruben Shirley and William Siegfried. The membership of the church has always been small, numbering in 1885 only twenty members. The leader of the class is Mahlon Snyder. A Sunday-school is connected with the church, which is superintended by James Wilson. This appointment was formerly with the Kutztown Circuit. Among the preachers were the Revs. Kurtz, Butz, Seagrist, Leib, Leopold, Lerch, Gingrich, Dissinger, Zorn and Ziegenfuss. Within the past few years Blandon has been connected with other charges in forming Friedensburg Circuit, and which has had as pastors the Revs. C. Gingrich, Jacob Adams, Thomas Harper and H. J. Klick, the latter officiating at the present time.

TOWNS.

Molltown is a hamlet in the northern part of the township, which derives its name from the Moll family, early settlers at that point. Many years ago a tavern was kept there by a man named Lesher. Later, the stand was bought by Abraham Groves, when a few houses were put up and the place began to assume the appearance of a hamlet. Thence Joseph Peters had the tavern, and John Forney built the first store-house, in which Peters first engaged in trade, and mechanic-shops were put up about the same time. In 1855, Peter Adam was in trade at Molltown. The post-office in this locality bears the name of Kirbyville, being named for the Kirby family, who were honored citizens in this part of the county. It was established in 1859. Dr. L. D. Bieber lived at Molltown a number of years as a successful practitioner of medicine, removing from here to the central part of the State. Dr. John D. Rupp is at present in practice.

West from this place is another trading point, called Evansville, half a mile from the railway station which bears the same name. Here is the site of the old Stichter mill, and where later lived the Evans family, who operated the mill and carried on other enterprises. A store was opened here and a post-office established with the name of South Evansville. The mill, which is a valuable property, is now owned by John Huy. A short distance from this place is a settlement, called Buena Vista, locally celebrated for the wines made there by certain Germans.

In a southerly direction is Maiden-creek Station and a post-office, called Calcium, which was established July 4, 1885, with C. J. Miller as postmaster. He is also the station agent and carries on a store in a small way. This is a centre for the manufacture of lime and the shipment of limestones, which in this locality is of a superior quality. Near the station are six kilns, owned by Kline & Hoffman, who ship several car-loads of lime per day. The business was begun in 1873 on the Bushong farm. The same year J. M. Meredith began developing his quarry for bridge stone, one-fourth of a mile from the station, and to which a railroad track extends. Employment has been afforded for fifteen men. This quarry supplied the stone for the Blue Mountain dam and some of the largest bridges on the Berks and Lehigh Railroad. The stones are usually taken out in large blocks, some of them weighing five tons. At the depot J. M. Meredith and Thomas Lightfoot manufacture lime in kilns, which have a capacity of fifteen hundred bushels per week.

The Croydon Creamery is another industry at this point deserving notice. It occupies a large new building put up in 1884. Since January, 1885, Mr. F. Hart has operated a first-class creamery, which is well patronized by the surrounding farmers.

Not quite a mile east from Maiden-creek station is the hamlet usually called the "Half-Way House," after an old hotel which occupies an intermediate position on the road from Reading to Kutztown. The land there originally belonged to the Penrose family, but later a part was owned by a man named Moyer, who had a well-known public-house, about the beginning of the present century. Later keepers of the inn were John Garver and John B. Marsh, who moved to Illinois, in 1850. The present hotel was put up in 1855–56 by Samuel Kauffman, who made other substantial improvements here, including the store building and the Seidel mansion. Before the railway period the Half-Way House was one of the best-known stands in the county, and was especially patronized by dealers in cattle, who took large droves there for sale to the rich farmers in that section. The tavern is still kept up. Since 1858 Isaac Plank has successfully conducted a general store at this place. He is the postmaster of the Maiden-creek post-office, established at this point in 1862. His store is connected by the telephone with principal points in the county. George D. Stitzell was one of the earlier merchants. Since 1848 John S. Fox has had a smithy in the village.

The physician of the place is Dr. W. E. Hunsberger, a native of Montgomery County, who has been in practice since 1867. He succeeded Dr. H. Clay Merideth. Before he became a practitioner here Dr. Charles Schlem, living near Molltown, was the physician of this part of the township.

Blandon is the only town in the township. It is situated near the base of the mountain, in the eastern section, and on the East Penn Railroad. A station of the same name is on the railway, with a neat passenger depot and all the conveniences in sidings for freight shipments. The town contains two churches, several stores and hotels, a rolling-mill and several
The hundred inhabitants. It derives its name from Robert Bland, the owner of the land. He was a blacksmith. In the shop there was also a tilt-hammer. It stood on the site of the lower hotel. This hotel was opened to the public by William Bland, after the building of the railroad, and kept by him for some time. It has been improved since and has had various landlords, among them being Ezekiel Jones, and since 1883, R. Unger.

The town had a slow growth in the beginning and the improvements were not remarkable during the first ten years of its existence. Among the first inhabitants were Robert Bland, Henry Money, Samuel Hawkins, Thomas Roberts, Sr., Thomas Roberts, Jr., Jacob Keiffer, Lewis Guldin and Henry Wessner. After the rolling-mill was established here, in 1867, by Adam and Jacob Kauffman and C. D. Geiger, they and others put up substantial buildings, which gave character to the place and caused improvements to be added steadily since.

The first store at this point was kept by Peter Cleaver in a dwelling-house. He sold out to John B. Marsh, about forty years ago. Jeremiah B. Rothermel enlarged the building and kept the first regular store. Then came George Wessner and later the building was converted into a tavern. The lower store-stand was built by James Ahrens, in which he carried on business a number of years. The present occupants are A. G. and N. G. Rothermel, the former being, also, the postmaster of the Blander office, established long before the village had an existence.

Many years ago John Packer carried on a pottery for a time where the Blander House now stands, and manufactured a considerable quantity of common ware. The mill at the upper end of the town has been operated by the Guldin family many years. The first improvements were made by a man named Dunkel, who conducted several mills and a distillery. Frederick Guldin made some additional improvements about 1800, and these were afterward owned by Lewis Guldin, who also had a store at the mills for a short time. The present owner is Albert Guldin. On the same stream, farther up the mountain, is the mill built by John Moser. Near the railroad station a small planing-mill has been in operation for several years by D. S. Thomas, who also operates a saw-mill in connection.

The most important industry at Blandon is the Blandon Rolling-Mill. It was built in 1867 by Adam W. and Jacob Kauffman and Charles D. Geiger, who operated the same until 1874. After being idle several years, the Maiden-creek Iron Company became the owners, since which time this company has been successfully operating the mill. The building is conveniently located near the main line of the railroad and is one hundred and twenty by three hundred and ten feet in dimensions. It contains two heating and eleven puddling furnaces, which are worked to produce band and hoop-iron, and affords employment to one hundred and thirty hands. Formerly, bar and other kinds of iron were made. The mill has a superior water supply, from a never-failing mountain-stream, which flows into a reservoir near the works. Six tenement houses constitute part of the property.

Franklin Seidel is a great-grandson of Henry Seidel, who was born in 1732 and emigrated from Strasburgh when nineteen years of age. He was sold for his passage. On obtaining his freedom, in 1752, he came to Reading, Berks County, and afterward participated in the Indian war under Captain Hiester. He also served in the War of the Revolution, his wife and children meanwhile conducting the farm. About 1760 he married Elizabeth Rathsacher and purchased land in Bern township, returning again to Germany about 1786, and meanwhile engaging in mercantile ventures. He became the owner of four hundred acres of land in Maidencreek township, where he was for years a prosperous farmer. His death occurred in 1801. Henry and Elizabeth Seidel had children—Michael, Henry, Daniel, John, Philip, Jacob and two daughters, Mary and Margaret. Henry was born November 12, 1765, and died August 7, 1847, having settled on the homestead in 1791. He married Elizabeth Reber, of Windsor township, Berks County, and had fourteen children, of whom the following reached mature years: Daniel, Henry, Jacob, Elizabeth, Sarah, Catherine, Mary, Hannah, Susannah and Rebecca. Henry, the eleventh child in order of birth, was a native of Maiden-creek township, where he was born on the homestead June 9, 1809. Here he engaged in farming until his retirement from that occupation and removal to Reading, in 1857. He was, November 4, 1832, married to Lydia, daughter of Frederick Guldin, of the same township, and has children—Franklin, born July 11, 1833, and Sarah (Mrs. Henry Seidel's great-grandfather came from Germany. Her grandfather, John Adam, married Elizabeth Dunkel. Their son George, a farmer, born August 1, 1799, who died September 12, 1885, married Hannah Sell, of the same county. Their two children are Amanda (Mrs. George D. Stitzel) and Susannah (Mrs. Seidel). Mr. Seidel has devoted his life to farming. He is a member of the Berks County Agricultural Society, in which he manifests an active interest. He is a member of the Evangelical Lutheran Church.

Thomas Willits is descended from English ancestors, the earliest representative of the family being Mary Willits, who settled on Long Island, where she was a resident as early as 1678, and removed from thence to Burlington, N. J., in 1685 or before. Henry Willits, the first who bore the name in Maiden-creek township, Berks County, was received into the Maiden-creek Monthly Meeting on the Third month, 26th day, 1743. He was the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch. He married, on the Fourth month, 2d day, 1746, Sarah, daughter of Anthony Lee, of Oley, Berks County, and had two sons, John and Jesse. Henry Willits purchased a tract of two hundred and thirty acres of land in Maiden-creek township (now Ontelaunee township) situated at the mouth of Maiden-creek, and settled upon it. Jesse, who was born on this tract, which embraced the homestead, married, on the 10th month, 6th day, 1779, Phebe, daughter of John and Mary Hutton. Their children are John H., born 11th month, 27th day, 1782, who died 11th month, 10th day, 1861; Sarah, 3d month, 16th day, 1784, who died 5th month, 11th day, 1819; Mary, 3d month, 24th day, 1785, who died in childhood; Mary (2d), 12th month, 18th day, 1786; William, 4th month, 6th day, 1789, who died 10th month, 2d day, 1852; Elizabeth, 3d month, 21st day, 1791, who died 1st month, 25th day, 1869; Henry, 2d month, 5th day, 1793, who died 10th month, 1864; Esther, 1st month, 25th day, 1795, who died in 1877; Phebe, 2d month, 23d day, 1797, who died 10th month, 19th day, 1865; Susannah, 10th month, 3d day, 1799, who died 8th month, 28th day, 1831; Jesse, 1st month, 17th day, 1802, who died 7th month, 22d day, 1867; and Deborah, 3d month, 31st day, 1803, who died 7th month, 20th day, 1841.

Phebe Hutton’s ancestors emigrated at an early date from Ireland. Nehemiah Hutton moved to Maiden-creek township in 1733 and purchased a tract of land, the half of which is now owned by the subject of this sketch. His son John, the grandfather of Thomas Willits was twice married,—first to Jane Fincher, on the 3d month, 13th day, 1754, and a second time, on the 12th month, 6th day, 1858, to Mary, widow of John Willy. Their only child, Phebe, is the grandmother of Thomas Willits. By the first marriage were two children. William Willits, who was born on the Hutton property, married Esther, daughter of Thomas Lightfoot, on the 4th month, 8th day, 1818. Her grandparents were Jacob and Sarah Lightfoot and her great-grandparents Thomas and Sarah Lightfoot. The family were among the pioneers to the county and took up lands, a portion of which is owned by the subject of this biography. William and Esther Willits had four children,—Mary, born 10th month, 6th day, 1820, who died on the 3d month, 27th day, 1843; Thomas, 2d month, 13th day, 1822; Samuel, 2d month, 14th day, 1824, who died 3d month, 9th day, 1863. The latter left children,—William, born 10th month, 4th day, 1852; engaged as a general merchant in Leesport; Francis, born 11th month, 3d day, 1856, of Delaware County; and Ellie, born 2d month, 17th day, 1859. William, who has served for five years as justice of the peace, married, 12th month, 18th day, 1885, Amanda, daughter of John Yoder, of Maiden-creek township. They have one son, Allen, born 10th month, 26th day, 1878. Two children, Howard and Sarah, are deceased. Francis Willits married Elizabeth Paschall, of Delaware County. Thomas Willits was born on the homestead and has made farming the business of his life, receiving in boyhood but a limited education at the school in the vicinity of his home. With his brother he inherited the farm which was his birthplace, and married, on the 9th month, 21st day, 1854, Susan P., daughter of James and Elizabeth Smith, of Chester County, and granddaughter of John and Mary Smith. Their children are Mary, born 10th month, 16th day, 1855; and Samuel, 7th month, 25th day, 1858, now cultivating the farm, and married to Mary H., daughter of Clifford and Ellen Pomeroy, of Reading. They have one son, Herbert P. Thomas Willits is a Republican in politics, but has neither sought nor held office. He is a director of the National Union Bank of Reading. Both he and his wife have adhered to the faith of their fathers and are members of the Exeter Friends’ Monthly Meeting.

ONTELAUNEE TOWNSHIP.

On the 2d of April, 1849, a petition of certain inhabitants¹ of Maiden-creek township

was presented to court, asking for a division of the township by a line to be extended from the Alsace township line, at the foot of Penn's Mount, northwardly, by way of Maiden Creek bridge and the public road from Oley to Hamburg, to the Windsor township line, and suggesting as a proper name for the western portion, "Schuylkill." The court entertained the petition and appointed Michael K. Boyer, Richard Boone and Benjamin Tyson as commissioners. At that time the electors of the township numbered about four hundred and fifty, and the population about two thousand one hundred.

The commissioners, after viewing the township, decided that it could be divided advantageously, and reported the following division line: "Beginning at a heap of stones, in the Alsace township line, at the foot of Penn's Mount; thence north thirty-four west two hundred and sixty-four perches, north twenty-four west ninety-seven perches, and north eighteen west one hundred and ninety-two perches to the Maiden Creek; thence along said creek northwardly, two hundred and sixty-four perches, to the road leading from Oley to Hamburg, and thence along said road northwardly six hundred and thirty-six and one-fourth perches to the Windsor township line." And they recommended "Schuylkill" as a proper name. Their report was presented on August 9, 1849. Remonstrances were filed, objecting to the division of the township because it was not large and because the poll was central; and these were subscribed by the most prominent taxables of the township. But they were dismissed on December 27, 1849, and the report was confirmed absolutely, excepting as to the name, the court having substituted the name of "Antietawny." 3

1 The other sides were reported: From said road, along said township line, south sixty-five west five hundred and forty-eight perches to the Schuylkill River; down the river fourteen hundred perches to the Alsace township line; thence along said line north sixty-five east seven hundred and sixty-four perches. The lines inclosed about five thousand seven hundred acres.

2 Subscribed by two hundred and eighteen signatures,—one hundred and forty-four English.

3 This spelling had been used for a century by different persons in deeds and church records; but it was erroneous. The proper spelling is "Outelaune." 4

In pursuance of an act passed, the question was submitted to a vote of the inhabitants, and the division was sustained by a majority of twenty-one. The whole number of votes polled was two hundred and five. The new township was erected into a separate election district by act passed February 28, 1850.

In Outelaunee township, as in Maiden-creek, the first settlers were Friends, some of whom entered the territory as early as 1721. Among the first was Moses Starr, who bought a tract of land containing five hundred and fifty-one acres, situated along the Maiden-creek. This tract has been subdivided and is now owned by the Forneys, Hottensteins and others. Upon this land a mansion was built in 1729, which was well preserved until recently. The Starrs have long since ceased to be citizens of the township. About the same time Francis Parvin built a log house, which stood in what is now the orchard of his great-grandson, Jacob Parvin, at Berkley. This house was kept unlocked for the accommodation of such Indians as might chance to visit Parvin, he having been on very friendly terms with them. They considered his place their home when in that vicinity. In 1758 Francis Parvin, the son of the first Francis, built a house at the place now known as Berkley, upon the same lot of ground as the first, but nearer the creek, which is still standing and is the home of the Parvins. It was constructed of stone and consisted of two rooms and a hall below. In 1856 Jacob Parvin, the present owner, built an addition to it at the east end, and plastered the whole building on the outside, thus destroying the original appearance of the old part of the house. The old building, in its improved condition, forms a very comfortable residence. The elder Parvins also interested themselves in the welfare of the colored people, several of them having had their homes with them at Berkley, being commonly known as Joe, Bill and Frisbie Loyd. The latter removed to Reading, where he opened a restaurant and also became a dealer in lottery tickets.

In the southern part of the township Ballthasar Schalter, a native of Germany, settled on a tract of land which is commonly called Schuylkill Bend. The farm embraced two hundred and eighty acres. He there reared his sons—Dieter, Michael and Jacob. The former took up his abode at what is called Shalter's Church, in Alsace township, while the other sons remained on the homestead. Part of this farm still belongs to one of the descendants, Jonas Shalter, who was born in 1815.

This locality suffered a great deal from the flood of September 3, 1850. At the bend of the Schuylkill eight acres of heavy timber were washed out, and the canal in that locality was much damaged. East of Leesport John Germant, son of George Germant, settled on the farm now owned by John Germant. A barn built in 1784 was recently torn down. Some of the Germant daughters married into the Eckert, Huy and Miller families, the latter being the ancestor of Levi Miller, the coal operator at Pine Grove. Jacob Rahn was a neighbor of the Germants, living on the farm owned by the Rhns. He was the father of sons named Jacob, John, Philip and Adam, and grandfather of the older Rhns of that part of the county. The Dunkels, Hays and Hottensteins were also among the first German families who effected settlement among the Friends. All of these have descendants occupying the original places, and some owning the first improvements.

Berkley is a name applied to the hamlet on Willow Creek, where it is crossed by the Centre turnpike and the Berks County Railroad. It is said to have received the name on account of its relative position to Reading, as Berkley in England to the Reading of that country. It is beautifully located in a valley and contains a tannery, grist-mill, distillery, hotel, several shops and residences. A station of the same name is on the railroad, and a post-office is maintained there, called East Berkley. A store was formerly kept in the place by a man named Diefenbach, but carried on a few years only, dis-continuing about 1830. John Eckert was an early keeper of the inn and part of the house built by him remains. But John Stichter was the first landlord who gave the inn a reputation. Before 1825 he had a large patronage and attracted a number of guests as summer boarders. In 1829 William Dunkel became the owner. He was succeeded, in 1857, by the present proprietor, James Dunkel. The house is large and bears evidence of its former popularity.

A mile below, at Schuylkill Bend, a store was opened by F. B. Shalter, in 1826, which, since 1835, has been carried on by Jonas Shalter, the latter engaging there in trade when he was only eighteen years of age. The public-house was first kept by a man named Medlar. For the past twenty years Samuel Mengel has been the landlord. These interests and the few houses along the turnpike, from the hamlet, are sometimes called Shalter's Store, but more properly Schuylkill Bend.

Leesport is the only town in the township. It is finely situated on the Schuylkill, about nine miles above Reading. It derives its name from its founder, Samuel Lee, who laid it out in 1840. On the 12th of April, 1839, Lee bought a farm of seventy-five acres from John Miller, a part of which he set aside for town lots, which now form the site of Leesport. Previously, there was a public-house at the place, called in early times George Gering's Inn, and where, later, Isaac and Reuben E. Addams were well-known landlords. In 1841 there were the following additional land-owners: James Bell, Jacob Miller, Jacob Dunkelberger, Josiah Zellers, John Althouse, George Weidenbaum, Henry Ropp and Henry Garrett. Lee closed out his unsold lots to Young & Darrah, who, for a number of years, were the principal lot-owners of the town. Althouse lived at the canal-lock, where he kept a public-house, and the bridge, which was built across the river at that point, was long known by his name. His public-house is now known as the Peter Hottenstein place. It had a number of other keepers, among them William Gift, Henry Gawker, George Germant and Reuben Wirmer. The hotel kept by Jacob Graeff for the past twenty years was built, in 1842, by John Fuss, but not opened as an inn until 1844, by Jacob Ebling. Other landlords of that time were Solomon Keim, John Yeager and Jacob Boyer, eleven years. The Leesport post-office was established in 1851, with Reuben Addams as the first postmaster. Jacob Graeff is the present incumbent. Nathan Young and Dr. James Darrah had the first regular store in the Althouse building at the canal, near which they also had a large warehouse. They had an immense trade and first made Leesport a business point. In 1854 Benjamin Lenhart engaged in trade. The store which he occupied has been used the past eight years by William Willits. Reuben Werner has also carried on business many years.

Young & Darrah built a good steam mill, in 1840, near the canal and close by their warehouse, which they successfully operated a number of years. They also built themselves fine mansions, which are among the finest residences of the town. After a period the mill machinery was removed from the mill and the building was converted into a woolen-factory by Butz & Levan. It was successfully operated for several years, the goods having a high reputation. In 1871 the building was destroyed by fire.

A Doctor Evans was one of the first resident practitioners in the township. In 1836 Dr. Strawbridge lived at Berkley, but subsequently built a house at Leesport and died there, some time after 1842. He was succeeded by Dr. Zollers, a German physician of good repute, who lived in the house now occupied by Jacob Boyer. Dr. Penrose Wily was next in practice, continuing until his death, in 1874. Dr. William Schlemm was here about one year, and Dr. Levan three years, removing thence to Philadelphia. Other physicians are noted in connection with West Leesport, in Bern township.

Leesport is connected with the latter place by a bridge and the two places are practically one. On the west side is the station of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, also three stores, two hotels, one church and a school-house; on the east side are a like number of similar interests and the station of the Pennsylvania Railroad, opened to the public in 1885. A furnace and a number of shops contribute to its business. The population is about three hundred and fifty.

INDUSTRIES.

One of the first manufacturing interests in the township was the tannery of Francis Parvin, on Willow Creek, at Berkley. The tannery was established in 1730, and it has been continuously carried on by the Parvin family since that time, the successive owners being three Francis Parvins, one in each generation. The present Jacob Parvin has had the property during the past forty years. For a long time the tannery included only three vats, but each successive owner increased the capacity until at present there are thirty-five vats and two large buildings adapted for tannery purposes. In 1852 steam was introduced and has since been employed. The production is twenty-five hides per week (oak-tanned), making calf-skin and harness-leather.

On the opposite side of the stream John Stichler had a tannery, about 1810, which was allowed to go down; but, in 1880, Rufus H. Dunkle erected a stone building on its site, in which he has since carried on the distillation of pure rye whiskey. On the same stream, to the east, Benneville Moser carried on for some years a distillery, after the late Civil War, which produced a considerable quantity of whiskey. The buildings have been removed. Below the tannery, on the same stream, the Parvins built a mill which in the early part of this century became the property of Mark Davis, who afterward rebuilt the mill. It has been further improved by the present owner, Reese Davis, and is now one of the best mills in that part of the county. Above Berkley, where the turnpike crosses the Maiden Creek, a paper-mill was put up, by Jacob Ulrick, on one side of the stream, and a fulling-mill, by Michael Ulrick, on the other side. This was about 1820. Some fifteen years later the fulling-mill was changed into a grist-mill by Jacob Parvin, and it is still so operated by Charles W. Faust. The paper-mill was also converted into a grist-mill by George Fox, after he had for a time distilled liquor in the building. The latter mill is now owned by David Schlegel. The next power above was improved to operate a mill built by Penrose Wily, soon after 1800, and which in its day did a large business. A later owner of the improved mill was Dr. Owen H. Wily. Still farther up the stream is the Evans mill, noted elsewhere.
In the western part of the township the quarrying of limestone has been a great industry for many years. Below Leesport there are extensive quarries, operated by the Atkins Bros., of Pottsville, from which ten car loads of stone per day are shipped. Near by are the limekilns of Wm. Baltzer, and the Richenbach lime-works, each carried on largely. These interests employ several dozen men, in addition to those engaged in taking out stone for the Leesport Iron Co. The quarries are reached by the tracks of both the Philadelphia and Reading and Pennsylvania Railroads.

Leesport Iron Company.—The industries of this company are the most important in the township. On the 27th of November, 1852, the following-named persons associated themselves to carry on the manufacture of iron at Leesport: Wm. Eckert, Nicholas V. R. Hunter, W. H. Clymer, John G. Kauffman, Geo. N. Eckert, James Millholland, Samuel Kauffman, Wm. M. Heister, Isaac Eckert, Fred. S. Hunter and Edward M. Clymer, having organized with the above name. They obtained a tract of land, embracing four acres, which formerly belonged to Darragh & Young, upon which they erected furnace buildings and made other necessary improvements. These were completed to such an extent that the work of filling the furnace stack took place at twelve o'clock, on the 17th of September, 1853, and the first run-out made the following day. The capacity of the furnace was small at first, the entire yearly product being only a little over six thousand tons. This capacity was more than doubled in 1871, when the furnace was rebuilt to its present size. As such it was in successful blast for some years, under the management of L. M. Kauffman. A season of depression followed, which caused this furnace, as well as many others in the Schuylkill Valley, to go out of blast and to remain idle for some time, or to be operated only on a limited scale. In May, 1885 the company was reorganized with R. F. Leaf (president), P. R. Stetson (secretary and treasurer) and M. P. Jenney (general manager). The furnace was overhauled and its capacity increased. In Nov., 1885, it was put in blast, since which time it has been in operation.

The property of the iron company consists of three farms in Ontelaunee township, near Leesport, two of them containing superior limestone, adapted for use in the furnace. Upon one of these farms a fine mansion for the use of the manager was built in 1885. The company has a well appointed office and thirty-seven tenements located in various parts of Leesport. It has also several miles of sidings, connecting with the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, half a mile below the furnace. It uses ores from the Lehigh section and from the Miller farm at Topton, in Berks County. About sixty men were employed in 1885, these embracing the greater part of the working population of Leesport.

Churches.

St. John’s Church (Evangelical Lutheran and German Reformed).—This is the oldest church in the township, and one of the oldest in that part of the county. On account of its proximity to the Gernant farm, it is often called the Gernant Church, and as such obtains wide local recognition. The site on which it stands is very commanding, making the church a prominent object for many miles. It is a large brick edifice, erected in 1868, by a building committee, composed of William Rahn, John Gernant, Franklind Rodenberger, Henry Gronis and Henry Gawker. The lot on which it stands contains thirteen acres and includes a cemetery which has been partly improved, and which, when fully completed, will be one of the finest in that section of the county. The property was enlarged to the present area when the present church was built. John Gernant donated six acres, and six more acres were purchased from the farm of Adam Gernant. The old cemetery embraced about one acre of ground, and on it stood the old church. Part of this land was obtained from the Gernant lands and one-half acre was granted by Mordecai Lee, in 1795, to the trustees of the two congregations,—Jacob Rahn, Yost Sies, Nicholas Schaeffer, John Althouse, Ludwig Bauser and Jacob Huey. It is believed that the church building had been put up in the previous year and most likely it was the second house used as a place of worship. The first building was a plain log house. The second church was also of logs, but it was built in a more attractive style. It was rough-cast on the outside. Its general appearance was that of a two-story building and it was supplied with a gallery after the manner of that day.

The Lutheran congregation has had as pastor the Rev. B. D. Zweitzig for the past twenty years. Some of the ministers who preceded him were the Revs. Ditzler, Harple, Wagner, Miller and Minnich. The earlier service was the same as that of other Lutheran congregations in this part of the county. This was also the case of the Reformed congregation. The Reformed pastors within the recollection of present members were the Revs. William Pauli, A. L. Herman, Fred. Herman, J. W. Steinmetz and the present pastor, S. A. Leinbach. The congregation has about one hundred and seventy-five members.

TRINITY CHURCH (REFORMED AND LUTHERAN).—This house of worship has a beautiful location in the eastern part of Leesport. It was founded in 1867 and then erected, at a cost of nearly twenty thousand dollars, in which the congregations prospered until the night of December 25, 1872, when it was destroyed by a fire, resulting from an overheated furnace, warned for the Christmas exercises of that evening. Not disheartened, though feeling the loss keenly, steps were at once taken to rebuild it and the present house was erected the following year under the direction of Reuben Werner and John V. Epler as a building committee. It is of brick, built in modern style, and while not as large nor as fine as the first house, it is of ample proportions and attractive in appearance. It was completed at a cost of about $12,000. The trustees in 1885 were Abraham Kauffman,
TOWNSHIPS OF COUNTY.

William Rahn, Daniel Schlegel, Jared Miller, and David L. Fetherolf, secretary.

The Lutheran congregation, numbering about one hundred and thirty members, has had the pastoral service of the Rev. B. D. Zweitzig many years. The Reformed congregation has the Rev. Samuel A. Leinbach as pastor. Both congregations have had the same ministers as those officiating at St. John's Church. A very prosperous and largely attended Sunday-school is connected with Trinity Church. A short distance from it is a well-kept cemetery of four acres, opened by a church in 1868.

RICHMOND TOWNSHIP.

The district of territory now comprising the township of Richmond was settled at the same time as the surrounding townships, and generally with the same class of people. The names of the first settlers will appear from the list of members who connected themselves with the Moselem Church in 1746. It was known as a district before the county was erected, in 1752. A survey of the territory was made whilst it was a part of Philadelphia County, the bearings and distances of the large tract surveyed having been as follows:

"Beginning at a corner of Maiden Creek township on the bank of the Maiden Creek, about 200 perches below the outlet of Moselem Creek; thence along said township S. E. 1370 perches, and thence S. 55 W. 59 perches to a corner of the Manor of Ruscomb; thence along said manor land, S. E. 132 ps., No. 65 E. 500 ps., and S. E. 123 ps., to a corner of a district subsequently named Rockland; thence along said district N. E. 620 ps., to a corner of Maxatavny township; thence along said township N. W. 880 ps., and N. E. 200 ps., to a corner of a district subsequently named Greenwich, thence N. 30 W. 590 ps. to the Sacony Creek, and thence down the Sacony and the Maiden Creek to the place of beginning, containing 12,480 acres."

This district was then called Musesley (Moselem) after the creek running through its central portion. I could not ascertain from the records of Philadelphia County when the township, by the name mentioned, was erected.

It is probable that the proceedings for the erection of the township were not successful at that time. The surveyor, in preparing the draft, did not affix a date or even his name. Benjamin Lightfoot was doubtless the surveyor. The township, by the name of Richmond was organized subsequently, supposed to have been in 1755. The lines were the same as mentioned. In the erection of Greenwich township the lines on the north were changed, and a number of acres inclined with that township. The lines along Ruscomb-manor and Rockland were changed so as to add a considerable area of land to Richmond township, the former in 1839 and the latter in 1840. This was done to accommodate the townships in respect to roads, taxes, etc.

The township comprises some of the finest farms in the county. Valuable deposits of ironore have contributed much to its wealth, the prominent mines being the Moselem, Rothermel and Heffner. These mines were worked at an early period in the history of the county. A forge, known as the "Moselem Forge," was in existence as early as 1767, and occupied a site on the Moselem creek in the vicinity of the furnace.

The borough of Fleetwood was erected out of a portion of the township in the extreme southern section.

Taxables of 1759.—The following list contains the taxable inhabitants of the township in the year 1759. Dewald Beaver was the collector, and the tax levied amounted to £41 ls. 6d.

EARLY SETTLERS.—On the Jonathan Sellenberger farm, at Fleetwood, the Dreibelbis family made a settlement in 1740, coming from Hannesthal, Germany. Daniel Dreibelbis had sons named Daniel, Abraham and Jacob. The first settled at Milton, Pa.; the second in Schuylkill County; and Jacob married a Merkel, and lived near Virginsville. Here he reared sons named Jacob, John, Samuel, William and David, the latter still living at a very old age. The Lesbers and Heffners settled in Greenwich, but some of the descendants early became identified with the history of Richmond.

John and Henry Stein settled on the Sacony, in Richmond, on what is now the Fegeley farm. The former had sons named Jacob, Peter, Daniel, Benjamin and Solomon, all deceased. Jacob died in Greenwich at the age of eighty years. He was the father of Adam Stein.

The Leibelsperger family settled on the State road at Moselem Springs. Jonathan Leibelsperger became ninety-two years old.

On Moselem Creek lived the Merkel family, who were large land-owners, the George Merkel tract at one time embracing one thousand three hundred acres. He had a mill above the present Merkel mansion, which was built in 1768, and this has been repaired so that it is still in excellent condition. The present Merkel Mill, below the old mansion, was built in 1856 by Samuel Merkel, its owner, and also the owner of the homestead. The mill is a large stone building. A distillery at this point has long since been abandoned.

MOSELEM MINES, ETC.—On the same stream, and about half a mile from where it empties into the Maiden Creek, Valentine Eckert had grist and saw-mills, and at an early day built a small charcoal furnace. It had a very small stack and the operations were carried on in a limited way. Eckert owned thousands of acres of land in Richmond and surrounding townships which embarrassed him so that it was put up at a forced sale. When Nicholas Hunter became the owner, he began work on a much larger scale and for his time operated extensively. He improved the water-power, and converted the timber on the surrounding hills into charcoal. The ore was obtained from the mines near by, which he more fully developed. In 1847 he erected a new furnace, which, in an improved condition, still remains. Its capacity is from seventy-five to one hundred and twenty-five tons of iron per week. In this enterprise his sons became associated with him, and afterward owned and operated the furnace. The water-power was applied by him to improve grist and saw-mills, except so much as was pumped into a large reservoir on an adjoining hill for a system of water-works to protect the furnace and its surroundings against fire. At different points hydrants have been erected, from which a stream can be thrown upon any of the buildings in the place.

In 1885 the plant embraced the furnace and its necessary buildings, grist and saw-mills, store and hotel buildings, a very fine mansion in spacious grounds and about forty tenement houses. In addition, there were seven hundred acres of land, forming three farms, one of which contains several valuable ore-mines, provided with the necessary machinery for working the same. The furnace has been out of blast since 1883. The other interests are carried on under the management of J. H. Druckemiller. A siding connects the furnace with Moselem station, on the railroad, distant one-fourth of a mile. The furnace property has had a number of changes of ownership. In 1871 Jacob and Henry Bushong, Jacob K. Spang and Wilson Kaufman, as Bushong & Co., became the proprietors, and they four years later sold it to the Moselem Iron Company, which then carried on the furnace. This company laid out town lots in 1875 for village purposes. Upon the dissolution of the company, soon afterward, Leibrand & McDowell succeeded to the ownership, and were followed, December 18, 1884, by the present proprietors, C. H. Shebel & C. H. Stelwagon.
The Moselem ore-beds are in that part of Richmond in which the level lands of the Maxatawny Valley meet the gravel hills, south-east of the centre of the township, and cover several hundred acres of land. Most of this was originally owned by John G. Gloss, but since 1830 by Samuel and John G. Kaufman. The ore is a fine brown hematite imbedded in red clay, assays from forty-five to fifty per cent. of iron, and produces an almost neutral metal. The development of this mineral has given employment to a large number of men the past fifty years, and the mines promise to be a source of wealth for a long time to come. The product has been as high as fifteen thousand tons per year, but since 1885 only two of the eight washers have been in use.

At the furnace is Moselem post-office, established in 1856. The first office was called Nora, after one of Hunter's daughters. It has a daily mail.

Moselem Springs.—In the township there are several natural features which deserve particular notice. On the Kutztown road, on the farm of R. Weidenhammer, one and one-half miles from Moselem Springs post-office, the large Moselem Springs are located, being the source of Moselem Creek. The volume of water flowing from them is very large and clear as crystal. When the country was first settled the settlers found both the spring and creek well supplied with brook trout. The Indians, on this account, gave it the name of Maschilomehamee (Moselem), signifying a trout stream. The creek affords excellent water-power and is altogether one of the finest streams in the county.

Crystal Cave.—Along the Sacoxy there is a singular limestone formation in which there are numerous crevices, several of them, thus far discovered, having the nature of caves. They are overlaid with a loose, shaly soil which permits the water to percolate through them and form numerous crystalline objects. One of these caves, near Virginsville, was discovered many years ago, and its mouth was opened so as to permit easy entrance. It was described, in 1840, as being in the edge of a cultivated field on the brow of a hill. "Passing into it, the adventurer descends about fifty yards by a rough, narrow passage, and then turns to the left at an acute angle with the passage. After proceeding about thirty yards farther, he enters the great chamber, about fifty feet long, twenty wide and fifteen to twenty high, in a rock of limestone. Near the end of this chamber, opposite to the entrance, is the altar, a large mass of stalactite, which rings under the hammer, and is translucent." This cave was popularly known as the Dragon's Cave many years ago. It has lately been much neglected and entrance can be had only with great difficulty. Its existence has almost been forgotten in the discovery of a much larger cave about two miles from Virginsville, and which has not improperly been called Crystal Cave. It was discovered November 12, 1871, while John Gehret and Gideon Merkel were engaged in quarrying stone on the farm of the latter, to burn lime in a kiln near by. After making a blast they were astonished to find a large opening leading to hidden recesses beyond, the extent of which was not apparent without an exploration. This they were emboldened to make in the course of a few days, and they found the cavern to be of large size and stored with the most beautiful stalactites and stalagmites in every conceivable form. A more extended exploration was made by S. D. F. Kohler, an amateur geologist, who resided in the neighborhood, and he was so favorably impressed with the cave, as an object of natural curiosity and beauty, that he purchased the farm and opened the cave to the inspection of the public. He removed numerous impediments and provided easy passages and stairways until the subterranean passages were improved to the extent of more than one thousand feet. Large numbers of visitors then came from all parts of the country, and they were delighted with the sights they beheld. In addition to the large corridors, whose roofs were overlaid with glittering stalactites, there are in different parts of the cave, forms which closely resemble a "Mummy Chamber," a "Preacher," a "Cemetery," a "Woman in White" and an "Angel's Wing." When the cave is fully illuminated it does not require a vivid imagination to conjure up a number of other beautiful forms. Many of the smaller crystals have been removed and converted into numerous beautiful objects, which are exposed for sale as mementoes of a visit to this interesting spot. Very fine springs are situated near the cave and a large hotel has been erected for the accommodation of visitors.

CHURCHES.

ZION'S LUTHERAN CHURCH (MOSELEM).—This ancient house of worship is located two and a half miles east of Virginsville, near the line of Maxatawny township. Its plan is antique, patterned, doubtless, after the Lutheran Church at the Trappe, said to be the oldest of that denomination in America. The present church was built in 1761, the rear wall being made hexagonal and the roof shaped to a slope covering it the same way. The masonry is of stone, procured in the neighborhood. The walls have resisted the elements remarkably well. The organ was supplied nine years after the building of the church. It was built by Tanneberger, of Lancaster, and was formally dedicated by Pastor Schaum in 1770.

The purpose to build an Evangelical Lutheran Church in Richmond was agitated as early as 1739 by Christopher Kuhn, Sebastian Kraemer and Jacob Hill, but before it could be accomplished the latter two died, leaving the work to be finished by Christopher Kuhn. In this he was ably assisted by his son, Dr. Adam Kuhn, of Lancaster County, who collected funds and secured a tract of one hundred acres from the Penns for church purposes.\(^1\)

Upon this land a log church was built in 1742. It was formally dedicated January 20, 1743, by John Valentine Kraft, at that time serving both as minister and school-teacher of the congregation. His dual services continued about two years, when the congregation became so strong that Rev. Tobias Wagner was ordained as regular minister. He began in 1745 and served sixteen years.

He began his labors by perfecting the organization of the congregation.

The following members subscribed the church regulations on Trinity Sunday, 1746:

- Johann Christoph Kuhn
- George Kern
- Charles Hafelin
- John Herbst

A new church building was erected in 1770, and an organ supplied. And a third church was dedicated on May 17, 1849.

The ministers who succeeded Rev. Wagner were,—

- Frederick Schaum, 1761 to 1778; Daniel Lehman, 1778 to 1810; John Knoshe, 1811 to 1822; Conrad Miller, 1822 to 1829; Isaac Roller, 1829 to 1860; Benjamin E. Kramlich, 1860 to —; W. A. C. Mueller, 1885 to —.

The congregation maintained a school as early as 1742, the teacher being John Valentine Kraft, and at an early day endeavored to elevate the standard of the profession by freeing the teacher from other occupations which would distract his attention from school work.

In 1743 the consistory declared: "That it is our most earnest desire that the teacher, as well as the preacher, shall be fairly compensated, so that he can live with his family like an honest man, without being obliged to engage in any business foreign to his profession. To this end, the teacher and the preacher shall have the land and the house upon it free, as long as they officially serve the congregation, and, as far as is reasonable, they may use the same as serves them best."

In the latter history of the congregation a two-story building was erected, one room of which served as a school-room and the other as a residence for the teacher. After the acceptance of the free-school system this school-house was leased to the directors from year to year, until about ten years ago. The house is still standing.

ST. PETER'S GERMAN REFORMED CHURCH is south of Moselem Creek and west of the ore-beds, on a fine, elevated site. A log church was first built in 1762 to accommodate such persons in Richmond township and the adjoining county as entertained the faith of the Reformed Church, the Moselem Church having been erected for the use of Lutherans only. In 1809 the present stone edifice was erected, and in essential features remains as put up. In 1840 the church was supplied with an organ. The logs of the old church were used in building a school-house, where church schools were taught, and later other schools maintained. The congregation, never as strong as in other localities in that part of the county, has been greatly diminished by the building of another church in the immediate locality in 1866, this having arisen from a church difficulty. For the past forty-eight years the Revs. Herman, father and son, have ministered to them in spiritual things, and the present pastor is the Rev. J. Sassaman Herman.

BECKER'S ST. PETER'S CHURCH (Reformed and Lutheran) is on the same hill as the church just mentioned, and several hundred yards from it. It stands on ground secured for this purpose from the farm of Henry Becker, whose name is used to distinguish it from the old church. The building is of fine limestone, well laid, and, although plain, it is attractive. Its elevated position commands a fine view of the surrounding country. It was erected in 1886 by members who withdrew from the "Zion's" and the "Old St. Peter's" Churches, and has had flourishing congregations worshiping in it. The membership of the Lutheran congregation was reported in 1885 as one hundred and thirty, and that of the German Reformed somewhat less. Its pastor since the organization has been the Rev. Richard Appel. The pastor of the Lutheran congregation is the Rev. F. K. Huntzinger, who succeeded the Rev. J. Wicklein, pastor when first organized.

The burial-ground connected with Becker's St. Peter's Church is one of the finest in that part of the county.

ST. JAMES' EVANGELICAL CHURCH is at Virginsville. It was built in 1883, but not formally dedicated until Pentecost Sunday in 1884. It is a neat, small brick building, built through the efforts of David Dreibelbis, Albert Shappley, Eli Keller, Solomon Miller, Benjamin Smith and Peter Adam. During the building of the church the Rev. Stauffer was the pastor, and since that time the ministers have been the same as those preaching in the church of this denomination in Albany township. In 1885 the preachers on that circuit were the Revs. Weidner and Speicher.

ROMAN CATHOLICS.—Among the earliest settlers of Maxatawny and Richmond were a few Catholic families, embracing the Winks, Dums and others, and a lot of ground was set apart for them, in 1740, in case they should wish to build a house of worship. It does not appear that this was ever done, and the lot reverted to the proprietors, as part of the vacant lands, at that time so abundant. In the present century a large, plain stone building was put up near the Moselem Ore-Mines, which was used as a Catholic Church a number of years, services being held at long intervals. The resident membership was very small, and as population shifted, some of those who had belonged removed, making it impossible to continue the meetings with interest. After standing vacant a number of years, the building was demolished and the material removed.
VILLAGES.

In the southeastern part of the township is a small hamlet called Walnuttown, from a cluster of walnut-trees growing at the place. Here there was formerly an inn, kept in a small log house. Among the keepers were Joseph Bartholomew, Nicholas Machemer, Peter Rothermel and Thomas Schneck. The house at present kept by Albert Strasser was built by Peter Rothermel.

A mile from this place is the old village of Coxtown, now the thriving borough of Fleetwood, of which a separate sketch is given in the chapter on the boroughs.

Near Moselem, and in the neighborhood of St. Peter’s Church, there is an old tavern-stand kept years ago by a man named Kemp. A later keeper was Joel Becker, and for the past thirteen years Henry Becker. On the State road to Kutztown, where the Fleetwood road crosses the same, public-houses have been kept for many years by the Croll’s, Elijah Moyer, Michael Dumm and the past forty years by Solomon Leibelsperger and his family. The present hotel and store building was put up in 1852. In the store is kept the Moselem Springs post-office, established in 1846, and which had, in 1885, Joel Leibelsperger as postmaster. A daily mail from Fleetwood is supplied.

VIRGINSVILLE is a small village in the northwestern part of the township, on the Maiden Creek, a little below the mouth of the Sacony. It is a station on the Berks and Lehigh Railroad, and has had its greatest growth since the completion of the railway. The place contains three taverns, a store, a number of fine residences and a church. The first regular store in this locality was opened in 1809 by William Dreibelbis, and about the same time an inn was opened by the Lesher family. The Dreibelbis family has been more or less engaged in trade here since. A store is now carried on by Abraham Mengel. In it is kept the Virginsville post-office, established in 1839, and of which Jackson Dreibelbis was the postmaster in 1885. Joseph De Young had a store here first, selling goods on a small scale. He also entertained the public. William Dreibelbis became his successor, and kept a public-house from 1844 to 1871. This house is now kept by Gustavus Dreibelbis. The fine three-story brick hotel, called the “Mansion House,” was opened to the public in 1885, by Eli Heim. Since 1851 Simon Dreibelbis has had a public-house in Perry, near Virginsville. The past twelve years Dr. D. M. L. Fitch has been a practitioner of medicine at Virginsville.

MAXATAWNY TOWNSHIP.

The Indians loved the Maxatawny country, and lingered there long after they had left other parts of the county, maintaining a friendly attitude towards the settlers. They had a place of burial in what is now a field of the Charles Deisher farm, and a tradition prevails that many hundreds of them were buried there, including their implements of warfare. Many relics were taken from that place in years gone by. Frequent cultivation of the ground has almost entirely obliterated the evidences that it was once their burial-place. There is a tradition that a stalwart Indian remained several years after the others had gone, as if loth to leave the scenes of his childhood. He was known by the unpoetic name of “Kneebuckle,” and he lived on the banks of the Sacony, subsisting on the fish and game which his skillful hands enabled him to capture. He was kind in his dealings with the early settlers and beloved by those who knew him. He suddenly disappeared. The beautiful lands of Maxatawny invited many immigrants at a very early period.

FIRST TAXABLES.—Prior to 1731 there lived in Maxatawny the following persons who owned land and paid quit-rents:

The author is indebted to Prof. J. S. Ermentrout’s sketch of Kutztown and Manastawny for valuable information in connection with this township.
This township was settled immediately after the land was released by the Indians. It was called a new district in 1734, by the name of Maxatawny. It had no constable then.

Township ERECTED.—A petition was presented to the Court of Quarter Sessions of Philadelphia County on September 6, 1742, praying for the erection of a new township out of a part of said county. The survey of the tract of land proposed for the township was made by George Boone, Esq., a draft of which was attached to the petition; and William Parsons, surveyor-general of the province, certified that the survey did not interfere with any other township. And the township was erected on the same day. The following statement is a copy of the record in the office of the court mentioned. The petition could not be found.

"Upon the Petition of several of the Inhabitants of the County of Philadelphia, situate at a Place called Maxatawny, setting forth that they had been settled in that part of this County for several years and paid Taxes and County Levies, and that the said Place is now become very populous, praying this Court would be pleased to view and examine a Draught of a Tract of Land to the said Petition annexed, and would erect the same into a Township by the following Bounds, viz.: Beginning in Bucks County Line and from thence running South West one thousand seven hundred and sixty perches; thence North West one thousand three hundred and sixty perches; thence North East one thousand seven hundred and sixty perches to Bucks County Line; thence along the same South East one thousand three hundred and sixty perches to the place of Beginning, containing fourteen thousand nine hundred and sixty Acres of Land.

"The Court having taken the said petition into consideration and the Surveyor-General of this province having certified to the Court that the several Courses and bounds of said Township petitioned for do not interfere with any other Township, The said Tract of Land bounded as aforesaid, containing fourteen thousand nine hundred and sixty Acres of Land, is now erected by this Court into a Township by the name of Maxatawny." 1 taxables of 1759.—The following list comprises the taxable inhabitants of the township for the year 1759. The amount of tax then levied was £77. Andrew Hauck was the collector:

1 The name of the township was derived from an Indian word, Mackisishanne, meaning Bear's Path Creek.

Prominent Families.—During the early history of the township the most prominent public men were the Levans, the Zimmermans, the Gehrs, the Grosscup and the Hottensteins.

Jacob Levan was one of the county justices from

1 The name of the township was derived from an Indian word, Mackiesiethanne, meaning Bear's Path Creek.
1752 to 1760; Sebastian Levan was a member of the Provincial Committee for Pennsylvania in 1775. Sebastian Zimmerman was a county justice from 1767 to 1771, and again from 1778 to 1784. Baltzer Gehr held numerous public offices, as is elsewhere shown, and Paul Gros-cup was scarcely less prominent; he was one of the best penmen in his day. The Hottensteinus are of noble origin and came to America in 1727, settling first in Oley, but three years later in Maxatawny, where they leased from the proprietors upwards of five hundred acres of land. The Levans became a numerous family, and owned many tracts of land. Jacob and John Levan lived near Kutztown, where some of their descendants still own the original settlement. Others lived in the western part of the township, where they had the first mill, and intermarried with the Siegfried family, also early settlers and large land-owners, in what is still known as Siegfried’s Dale. At one time the two families had more than a thousand acres of the choicest lands, lying in different tracts. The Biebers, from Chester County, were early settlers near Kutztown, John Bieber being one of the older members. Another family by that name, having among them John and Dewalt, came from Montgomery County and settled north of the Kemp tavern. On the opposite side lived Nicholas Kutz, and his son Nicholas, who were not of the same family as George Kutz, the founder of Kutztown. Members of both families still remain in the township. At Kemp’s tavern Daniel Levan and his son Daniel lived until 1788, when George Kemp became the owner, continuing the tavern already opened. He was a justice of the peace thirty-four years, and his son John for twenty years, living still on the homestead at an advanced age. The former was the grandson of Dewalt Kemp, who settled on the farm now owned by Nathan Kemp about 1730. His daughters married into the Hottenstein and Bieber families.

Casper Wink, married to Gertrude Kemp, was also one of the early settlers. They reared six children; Catherine, the eldest daughter, born in 1728, and Theobald, the eldest son, in 1733. The latter was the father of sons named Philip, John, Peter, Jacob (a Revolutionary soldier) and Dewalt. His daughters married Isaac Roberts, Jacob Levan, John Heidenreich (father of Judge Wm. S. Heidenreich), John Hausman and Daniel Kemp. A brother of Theobald Wink, John Peter, born in 1745, went to the Revolutionary War and never returned. Dewalt Wink, son of Theobald, born in 1776, was married to a daughter of George A. Fister, also a Revolutionary soldier, and who was the grandfather of Colonel Thomas D. Fister. He was the father of eleven sons and two daughters, among the former being John G. Wink, of Kutztown. CASPER WINK was a Catholic and a faithful colonist, having his allegiance certified, which reads as follows:

“I do hereby certify that Casper Wink, of Berks County, State of Pennsylvania, hath voluntarily taken and subscribed the oath of allegiance and Fidelity, as directed by an Act of General Assembly of Pennsylvania, passed on the 19th day of June A.D. 1777.

Witness my hand and seal, the 26th day of May, A.D. 1778.

“Peter Trexler, Esq.”

A similar paper was procured by Davold (Theobald) Wink November 3, 1777, and was attested by Samuel Ely. These interesting papers are now in possession of John G. Wink. Casper Wink was buried on his farm, which is still owned by a member of the family in the sixth generation.

Jacob Hinterleiter was a large land-owner near Topton. He was the father of Daniel Hinterleiter, of Kutztown, born in 1800, and grandfather of W. C. Hinterleiter. George, another son, moved to New York.

At Eagle Point the Kroningers were early settlers. One of the family, Daniel, became a very old man. John George Sell, living near Kutztown, also became very aged. At Bowers the De Long family were early and prominent settlers, the church at that place being often called by that name.

Southeast of Kutztown lived Peter Wanner (born where Fleetwood now is), who also became very old, dying at the age of ninety-two years. He was the father of sons named Peter, Daniel, Samuel, Thomas and John, the latter being the father of J. Daniel Wanner and Dr. Charles H. Wanner, of Kutztown, and of Amos B. Wanner, of Reading.
Numerous other old settlers in the township attained a great age, bordering on a century.

Revolutionary History. — In reference to the Revolutionary history of the township, Professor Ermentrout says,—

“In the War for Independence, Maxatawny was not passive.

“From John G. Wink, one of the most intelligent citizens of Maxatawny, we learn that Washington’s army marched through Kutztown. Eye-witnesses informed him that it came from Easton, and encamped for a time in the valley between the present residence of John Kemp, Esq., and the farm of Daniel Zimmerman in Maxatawny. Washington and his wife were with the soldiers. Mrs. Sassaman, for some years deceased, used to delight in telling her visitors that Mrs. Washington, who lodged in the house of her father, Joseph Gross, lifted her on her lap, and soothed her with caresses. On their way from Trenton, by way of Easton, to the well-known camp at Reading, the captured Hessians were marched through Kutztown.

“It is interesting also to know that, whilst the battle at Germantown, 1777, was raging, the thunders of the cannon fell upon the ears of the inhabitants of Kutztown and vicinity; that after the battle of Brandywine, 1777, a regiment of the American army encamped on the farms now owned by the Hottensteins, and, on leaving, impressed the horses and wagons of the people; and that George Kemp, Esq., was one of the wagon-masters who were present at the battle of Germantown.

“In Maxatawny there were still living in 1840 the following Revolutionary pensioners: Henry Grim, aged seventy-five; Frederick Bower, eighty-three; Jacob Wink, eighty-two; Philip Noyes, eighty-four; Christian Schmick, seventy-six. To this list we add the names of William Marx, Sr., and son, William, Casper Wink (buried on Squire Kemp’s farm), Jacob Esser, Peter Kutz, George Pfister, Peter Wink, Philip Wink and Doldridge. On January 7, 1857, Matthias Roth died in Rockland township, aged seventy-eight years. On the last Monday of November, 1836, another died, Peter Klein, Esq., of Greenwich township, aged seventy-seven years, who was buried at Dunkel’s Church.

“On the farm of J. Bieber, Jr., in Maxatawny, stands the Mammoth White Oak of Berks. It may be justly called the Centennial White Oak of Pennsylvania. On the 15th of September, 1877, one hundred years will have passed by since the baggage train of General Washington’s army, on its retreat from the battle-field of Germantown, sought and found protection under and around this Revolutionary tree. It is said that two centuries have looked upon this oak; and competent judges assure us that it is now sturdy enough to defy the storms of another hundred years, and may wave its branches in honor of the Centennial of 1876. One foot above the ground it measures twenty-eight feet in circumference, and ten feet above it begins to stretch forth twenty-seven limbs, some of which are three feet in diameter.”

Taverns. — The oldest tavern in the township and first opened to the public is the “Kemp Tavern,” one mile from Kutztown, on the Easton road. It was opened probably as early as 1740, by Daniel Levan, and since 1788 has belonged to the Kemp family. George Kemp kept the tavern fifty-two years and was succeeded by his son, John, who still owns the property. For many years the “Half-Way House” in Richmond township, and this one were the only public-houses on the State road between Reading and Allentown. Part of the present house was built by George Kemp in 1795, and the addition by John Kemp in 1852. It is a long stone building, and though large, was often taxed to its uttermost to accommodate the many travelers who visited or passed through that section before the era of railroads. Not only were all the sleeping rooms occupied, but the bar-room was frequently filled with sleeping teamsters and peddlers. In this part of the township Dr. David Hottenstein was a practicing physician many years and was followed by his grandson, Oscar Hottenstein, now in practice at that place. Farther up the State road, in the Zimmerman neighborhood, George Bohn had a store from 1817 on for the next eighteen years, when the place was converted into farm property. Soon after 1800, when the State road was extended through this section, the Siegfried Inn (north of Kroningersville) was opened to afford entertainment for the public. It has been maintained since.

Mills. — On the Sacoxy, below Kutztown, the Bieber family had a pioneer mill, John W. Bieber being for a long time the owner. In a repaired condition this grist-mill (with saw-mill attached) is now operated by Charles Kutz. The first mill in Maxatawny was on Mill Creek, near the hamlet of Eagle Point, and owned by Jacob Levan. A new mill, on the same site, is now the property of Charles Levan. Near by was formerly a tannery, also carried on by the Levans, but long since discontinued, John Levan having been the last to operate it. Another mill, on the same stream, was built by Daniel Siegfried and after a time also became the property of the Levans and is now owned by George Levan. That locality is locally known as Siegfried's Dale, on account of the early improvements made there by members of that family. North of Bower's, on a branch of the Sacony, the Grims had a good grist-mill, long operated by Daniel Grim, and which is still carried on by the family of Charles Trexler. The present is the second mill, a substantial stone building.

Furnaces.—The East Penn Furnaces, at Lyons, were built in the summer of 1871, on sixteen acres of land, secured from the farm of Daniel Angstadt, by the East Penn Iron Company, which had among its members John Deisher, William Grim, David Kern, Benjamin Helfrich, Amos Barto, Daniel Angstadt, Levi Kutz and Jacob Haag. John T. Noble, of Pottsville, Pa., was the contractor and builder. This large establishment cost over two hundred thousand dollars. Franklin Brownback was the first manager for the company. It was operated for four years and then the property passed into the hands of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, which still controls it. A fire destroyed the engine-house and damaged the furnace to such an extent that it has been out of blast the past five years.

At Bower's, a small furnace was erected in the summer of 1883, by S. Good and Jacob Smith. Before it was put into blast a storm destroyed the casting-house and otherwise damaged the property so that it has never been repaired. Subsequently Smith became the sole owner.

Iron-Ore.—Iron-ore abounds in the township and is usually of a good quality, yielding about forty per cent. of pure metal. On the Jacob Glasser farm, east of Kutztown, some of the first mining operations were carried on. Some of this ore was supplied to "Sally Ann" and "Mary Ann" Furnaces many years ago. Since 1870 mining has been carried on more extensively, with the aid of modern methods and machinery; about sixty men are employed at the mines. At Rothrocksville profitable mines are worked. At Bower's extensive shipments are made by Schweyer & Leiss, the Thompson Iron Company, Isaac Bieber, C. W. Kutz and Kaufman & Eckert, the ore being mined within a radius of a few miles of that place. Extensive limestone quarries are operated by the Clymer Iron Company, of Temple, averaging fifty tons per day. The stone quarried there is superior for smelting purposes.

Schools.—In 1852 Maxatawny accepted the common-school system and organized its first board at the house of David A. Hottenstein, May 16th, of that year. The first directors were Sam. Kutz, Dan. Hinterleiter, Sam. Bernhart, Peter Deysher, Henry Wagenhorst and Henry Heffner. At the first examination, held October 8, 1852, certificates were granted to Jacob Gehr, Benneville Stimmel, John Humbert and Jonas Hoch; on October 23, 1851, to William Levan, Isaac Fisher and Samuel Bernet; on November 13th to a Mr. Fisher and Benjamin Dornblaser.

Most of the districts have been provided with good school buildings and supplied with the necessary books and charts for conducting the schools successfully. The school-house at Lyons is the largest one outside of Kutztown. It is a two-story brick, erected in 1876, and cost one thousand two hundred and forty-seven dollars. In it are maintained two well-attended schools.

Churches.

Maxatawny Church (Reformed and Lutheran) is located at the village of Bower's. It is, next to the St. John's Church, at Kutztown, the oldest in Maxatawny, and one of the oldest in the eastern part of the county. For the first one hundred years of its existence it was the exclusive property of the Reformed congregation, the union not having been formed until 1859. The first house of worship was a log building, erected in 1759, on three acres of ground which had been donated for that purpose by John Sharadin, Peter De Long and Andreas Haag, each giving one acre, "to be used as long as the sun and moon shine." Subsequently additions were made to the church property until it now contains about eight acres. Most of this is included in the cemetery, which is well inclosed and contains some fine monuments. The first church stood on this donated land. The second building was constructed of stone and was located very nearly on the site of the present edifice. It was erected in 1808 and served its purpose until 1871, when it was demolished to make place for the imposing structure which is now the spiritual home of the two congregations. It is of brick, fifty by seventy feet, and has a stately steeple containing a bell weighing one thousand six hundred and ninety-four pounds. A smaller bell, of three hundred and twenty pounds weight, is used by the Sunday-school. These bells were provided in 1872.

The Reformed congregation had the Rev. M. J. Schalter as its first minister, although he did not sustain a pastoral relation. Others who preached from 1759 to 1772 were the Revs. — Fritz and Philip J. Michiel, neither of whom succeeded in building up the congregation spiritually, and it is said "left it in a wretched condition."

"As specimens of these leaders of the people, may be mentioned a Mr. Fritz, who, on one occasion, ascended the pulpit of De Long Church in a state of beastly intoxication! He announced his text: 'If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross, and follow me.' Repeating his text, with emphasis, he lost his balance and tumbled down the high pulpit stairs, with the last words, 'follow me,' in his mouth! One of the elders arose in his seat, and earnestly addressing the people, exclaimed, 'No brethren, we will not follow him!' He was immediately sent away.""^2

The real history of the church begins with 1772, when the venerable Rev. John Henry Helferich became the pastor. His Christian piety and exemplary life exerted a great influence for good in the many years of service which he gave to the church. He died December 5, 1810, and his remains repose in the Sassafras burial-ground, in Maxatawny. His successor was the Rev. Charles G. Herman, beginning his ministry in August, 1810, and also served the congregation until his death, in 1863, a period covering fifty-three years. He was recognized as one of the ablest ministers in this section of the State. His son, the Rev. Alfred J. Herman, had previously begun to officiate as the pastor and he still faithfully serves the congregation. The membership is about four hundred.

The Lutheran congregation had as its first acceptable pastor the Rev. Alfred D. Croll. His successor was the Rev. S. R. Boyer and since the fall of 1872, the present pastor, the Rev. David K. Humbert. The congregation has about one hundred and ten members.

ZION'S CHURCH (Lutheran and Reformed), commonly called Siegfried's, from those who took an active part in its erection, is in the northern part of the township. It was built in 1828, on one and a half acres of land, a part of which is set aside for cemetery purposes. Lately, half an acre more was donated to the church by Mrs. Matilda Kohler. The building is of stone.

The Lutheran congregation had for its first pastor the venerable Rev. Gottlob F. J. Iaeger, who was succeeded by the Rev. Isaac Roeller, and, since 1862, by the present Rev. B. E. Kramlich. The congregation numbers about two hundred and fifty members.

The first pastor of the Reformed congregation was the Rev. Charles G. Herman; the next the Rev. A. J. Herman, under whose ministrations the congregation flourished. The membership is about two hundred.

SAINT PAUL'S LUTHERAN CHURCH, of the East Pennsylvania Synod, at Lyons, is an off-spring of the old Maxatawny Church. It was erected in 1868, being a brick edifice with an auditorium and basement-rooms, having a capacity for three hundred persons. Those active in building it were Levi L. Springer, Jacob Rohrbach, Reuben Grim, David Fisher, Solomon Yoder, Willoughby Fenstermaker, William L. Grim, Charles G. Cline and John Deisher.

The Rev. Alfred D. Croll was the first pastor, continuing until his death, June 19, 1876, at the age of thirty-seven years. He was a native of Albany township, but was reared in Maxatawny. He was an eloquent minister, and under his pastorate the church flourished. The next pastor was the Rev. W. I. Cutter; afterward the pulpit was filled by supplies for a number of years. The later ministers were the Revs. Edward E. Baron, J. H. Singmaster and the present Rev. George W. Fritch. The congregation numbers sixty members.

Mr. Reed is superintendent of a Sunday-school which numbers eighty-five teachers and scholars.

East of the village is a cemetery of two acres, well improved, which is the property of St. Paul’s Church.

ZION’S CHURCH, EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION, in the village of Lyons, is a plain frame building, twenty-eight by forty feet, which has as its trustees, in 1885, David Fegeley, Solomon Fegeley and Charles Parks. The members number only twenty-three, and the ministerial service is supplied by ministers in the Kutztown Circuit. A Sunday-school is connected with the church, consisting of one hundred and twenty-three members, with David Fegeley as superintendent.

TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

LYONS is a thriving village favorably located on the East Penn Railroad, one mile west of Bower’s, and two and a half miles from Kutztown. It was the railway station of Kutztown till 1870, when the branch railroad was extended to that borough from Topton. It was named after M. E. Lyons, chief engineer of the railroad. The first improvements had been made before a station was located. The land on which the village stands was owned by John Haag and David Kemp, who donated the depot grounds. Upon this, John Haag built the railroad station-house in the winter of 1859. The depot is the shipping point for a large scope of country lying south of the railroad. W. B. Lance has been the agent since 1881. The first building in the place was the Lyons hotel, put up in the fall of 1858 by Jacob Reichert. It has been a public-house since that time, Amos Barto being the present keeper. About five years afterward the American House, a spacious three-story brick building, was built by Jacob Mathias.

John Haag erected the first business house, a few years after the building of the railroad, and Levi Kutz first occupied it for mercantile purposes. Subsequently it was enlarged and became the property of William Grim. Kauffman & Merkel traded in it in 1885. The next business stand was opened about 1870, by Adam Glase, in a building erected by Jacob Bertolet, of Oley. The mercantile firm of Moses & Augustus Kutz now carry on business there. The first grain, lumber and coal dealer was Jacob Haag. This business is at present carried on by the Hoch Bros. (Solomon, Jacob and Daniel). Among the first settlers and mechanics at Lyons were Daniel Angstadt, farmer; Charles Parks, carpenter; William Ferret, cooper; Joseph Dry, blacksmith; Amos Barto, shoemaker (and afterward miller, grain dealer, etc.); Samuel Kutz, tailor; Henry Boyer, coach-maker; Edward Reed, cabinet-maker and undertaker. Benjamin Helfrich conducted business successfully in the Bertolet building for some years. The growth of the place has not been fast, but substantial. It contains a number of fine residences. It is supplied with superior water by a company specially organized for that purpose. The East Penn Furnaces are situated half a mile to the east. In January, 1886, there were about five hundred inhabitants.

The Lyons post-office was established in October, 1860, with Jacob Reichert as postmaster. The office has five mails per day and is the distributing point for a stage route which supplies the mails for Dryville, New Jerusalem and other points south.

Among the doctors at Lyons have been Drs. Frederick Spang, Levi Thomson and Kunkel. In practice are Dr. B. A. Yeager, homœopathist, and Dr. M. E. Koch, allopathist, the latter locating in the village in 1883. Dr. C. H. Thimmo is the dentist of Lyons.

Lyons Steam Mill.—The first grist-mill at Lyons was built by Solomon Yoder & Son. It was destroyed by fire July 12, 1876, being at that time the property of Amos Rapp and William Bieber, who rebuilt it in 1877. It became the property of the Hoch Bros. in 1882. In 1885 they remodeled the mill, supplying it with six sets of roller machinery. The engine is forty horse-power, and the capacity is seventy-five barrels per day. The mill is a three-story brick building, with an engine-house attached.

Lyons Creamery has been carried on by William Forward since January, 1883, in the manufacture of gilt-edge butter, the product being about nine thousand pounds per month. The business was established in 1881 by William Grim, Ed. Miller and Nace & Swartley (the latter of Philadelphia), as the "Lyons Creamery Company, Limited." The creamery building is supplied with the necessary machinery, etc., and is operated by a ten horse-power engine.

Societies.—Lyons Lodge, No. 102, Knights of Pythias, was instituted June 1, 1869. In 1885 there were sixty members. Lyons Lodge, No. 634, I. O. O. F. The membership in January, 1886, was thirty-seven.

Bower's is a pleasant village in the southern part of the township, on a branch of the Sacony. It is a station on the East Pennsylvania Railroad, with about two hundred inhabitants, a church, and a number of very fine residences. The place was named after Jonas Bower, the owner of the farm on which the village was laid out by him in 1859. That year he converted the farm-house, which had been built in 1820, into a hotel, which was afterward kept by Amos Bower, Jacob Hill, James Fegeley, Geo. B. Yoder and Henry P. Schoedler. The first new building was put up in 1859 by E. J. Knoske, a part of which became the store of the place, being first occupied for mercantile purposes by Boyer & Knoske. A large number of persons have traded there, among others being Levi H. Leiss and William Seidel. In it was established the Bower's Station post-office, in June, 1860, with E. G. Knoske as the first postmaster. The office is at present kept by Wm. F. Seidel. The ground for the railroad station was donated by Jonas Bower and Daniel Grim, and the station-house was built by the first agent, E. G. Knoske, who occupied it, in part, as a warehouse to carry on his business as a coal and grain dealer. It has since been used in the same way by the successive agents. C. W. Kutz is the present agent.

The only active industry of the village is the marble-yard of Schweyer & Liess, established in 1863, by D. H. Schweyer. That year he purchased the Sell mill, in Rockland township, and fitted up the same for sawing marble into shapes for dealers and cutters. In 1865, Levi H. Liess became a partner. Three years later they formed a connection with the Easton Marble Company, which is still maintained. In 1882 they purchased the blue marble quarries at "King of Prussia," in Montgomery County, and marble-mills at that point, which gave them facilities for carrying on business on a very extensive scale. The quarry is one of the best in the State. The shipments at Bower's amount to about twenty-five thousand dollars per year. Ten men are employed at the Bower's yard and at the mills in Rockland.

Kroningserville is a small hamlet, about three miles from Kutztown, near the Greenwich line. It derived its name from Daniel Kroninger, a land-owner at that point, who also carried on the coach-maker's trade. The shop is still kept open by the family. A store and tavern were started at that point, about twenty years ago, by J. P. T. Haas. The former has been discontinued, but the tavern is still carried on by James Mertz. In August, 1862, a post-office was established there with the name of "Eagle Point." Since that time the locality is frequently called by the same name.

Monterey.—The first improvements of a business nature were made about 1830 by Israel and Jonathan Wertman, who opened a store, when the place became known as Weispot. At a later day Isaac L. Bieber built a tavern, which was first kept by one of the Wertmans. In May, 1847, the post-office was established, with the name of Monterey, and Joshua Miller as postmaster. The present store building was put up by Henry Lowe. At present James Fisher is engaged in trade, and he is also the inn-keeper and postmaster. A cabinet-shop was formerly carried on by David Zimmerman. The hamlet contains but a few houses. Ten years ago a co-operative store was opened under the au spices of the Patrons of Husbandry, but it was kept up only a short time. At present a regular store is carried on by John G. Shofer. The place has a few houses and a shop.

ROTHROCKSVILLE is situated in the township, near the Lehigh County line, and took its name from its founder, Dr. Jonas Rothrock, an eccentric physician, who located there about 1830. He followed his profession and at the same time kept a public-house. Afterwards he was a justice of the peace. It is said that he had a quarrelsome disposition and that his neighbors lived in dread of him. In the later years of his life he moved to Reading, where he was an object of public charity on account of his having become a cripple. He frequently visited the courthouse and afforded the clerks much amusement.
He was a devoted Democrat and was earnest in his expressions for the party. The village has about thirty dwellings, several mechanic-shops, a store and a tavern. At one time there were two public-houses, both having been built by Rothrock, who kept the new one at the same time that Christian Swoyer had the old one.
The inn-keeper in 1835 was Stephen Rohrbach.
In this house is kept the Maxatawny post-office.
It is supplied with a daily mail. The first store was kept by Daniel Clader.
The present merchants are Stephen Smith and Marvin Croll (Smith & Croll), who do an extensive business. Dr. Milton Richards is the physician of the village, having located there several years ago.

LONGSWAMP TOWNSHIP.

During the years 1734 and 1735 several trains of immigrants wandered from Goschen-hoppen and Oley towards the Lehigh Mountains adjoining Longswamp. Among these were the Fenstermachers, Carls, Haasses, Zimmermans, Reichers, Brunszes, Schmidts, Schneider, Lynns and others. Several brothers by the name of Fenstermacher were from Oley.
One of these remained in Longswamp and the others proceeded with the Lynns and other immigrants farther up towards the Blue Mountain, where they founded the settlement of Allemangiel, at times called Lynn. From Longswamp the e'evated land commands a view which overlooks the great valley over Weissenberg to Lynn in a straight line to the Blue Mountain, the elevation forming the waters-shed between the Schuylkill and the Lehigh.
From this elevation there appear to the right and the left little valleys, which descend gradually and lead the best water from springs. The immigrants followed this stretch of country and Longswamp became the place of entrance in the immigration from Goschenhoppen and Oley into this valley.

Many sections of our county bear Indian names, and settlements were also named after neighboring streams and other peculiarities.
Names having thus been given to settlements even before communities were established or townships named, they were generally retained.
This settlement was first called “ Little Lehigh,” and at the same time the land lying to the east and west “ the long swamp.” But after the Lutheran community, situated several miles downward, had recognized the name “ Little Lehigh,” the name Longswamp prevailed.

On the elevation in the valley above Topton
a small creek flows, formerly called “ Frog Creek.” It flows along the side of the mountain through Mertztown, and in Butz’s Valley, below Ludwig’s mill, it empties into the “ Little Lehigh.” This Frog Creek extends from the neighborhood of Topton to the “ Little Lehigh,” and there extends farther on along this little creek a small strip of meadow land, which was formerly named “ the long swamp.”
Upon the greater part of this swampy ground only sour grass and thickets grew, for which the immigrants had no inclination.

TAXABLES OF 1759.—The following statement comprises the list of taxables of the district for the year 1759. The tax levied amounted to £45 17s., and Samuel Borger was the collector.

Erection of Township.—This district of territory was known as Longswamp from the time of the earliest settlements, in 1734. In a draft of Rockland township, made in 1758, it is referred to as Long Swope, and mentioned as no township. The following assessment list indicates that the district was recognized, though not yet regularly established.

On the 10th of February, 1761, a petition was presented to the justices of Berks County asking that the place called Longswamp be erected into a township. It was subscribed by twenty-six names, in German handwriting. They were as follows:

- Frederick Hettig
- Samuel Dormeyer
- Martin Karcher
- Christian Erstenstätt.
- Ph'p Fenstermacher
- Frederich — Meier.
- Jacob Weimer
- Joseph Bury.
- Ludwigs Neitz
- John Kline.
- Philip Burger
- Samuel Burger.
- Peter Lutz
- Jacob Forny.
- Fred. Saussman
- Jacob Fenstermacher.
- Adam ——.
- Michael (Niethammer).
- Jacob Daumetz
- Lorentz Klein.
- Jacob Mertz
- Jacob Buman.
- Peter Mertz
- Nicholas Schwartz.
- Henry Bollinger
- Matthias Egner.

A survey of the district was made by Nicholas Bunn on February 2, 1761. It was bounded and described as follows:

"Beginning at a corner of Maxatawney township, in the Northampton County line; thence along said township S. W. 1286 ps.; thence along Rockland township, S. 34 E. 955 ps., and East 1262 ps.; thence along Horford township, N. E. 610 ps.; thence along said county line N. W. 1840 ps. to the beginning; containing 13, 395 acres."

In May, 1761, the township was erected.

The water-power afforded by the Little Lehigh was early utilized to operate small mills, such as the wants of the settlers demanded. One of these improvements was on the head-waters of that stream, where Jacob Lesher put in operation a small charcoal furnace, as early as 1797, and which he owned until 1808, when he sold the property to his son-in-law, Reuben Trexler. It had a wide reputation as the Mary Ann Furnace, and it was there that the first stoves made in Pennsylvania, for burning anthracite or stove-coal, were cast. Their manufacture continued from 1820 till 1857, and they were known to the trade as the "Lehigh Coal-Stove," and had, in their day, a fine reputation. Reuben Trexler transferred his interest in the furnace to his son Horatio, who still owns the property. It has been out of blast since 1869 and the improvements have been allowed to go to decay. Down this stream Lesher had a mill, which also passed into the hands of the Trexlers, and which is still in operation. The mill is one of the oldest in the county. A mill near by was in operation for a time for grinding gypsum, but it has been abandoned. A tannery was started in the early part of this century by Andrew Weiler. He sold out to Reuben Trexler, who was succeeded by his son William, the present owner. About one thousand hides per year are tanned. The old Wagenhorst mill occupies the next site on this stream, being near the county line. The improvements antedate the century and were made by John Wagenhorst. The present mill has been improved and is still operated by the Wagenhorst family. On the West Branch of the Little Lehigh Peter Hawerter had improved a site upon which he erected a fulling-mill, and later a feed-mill was added, the present owner being Morgan Long. Below this site there was a tannery of Valentine Geist, last operated by Benjamin Hawerter. The buildings remain, but the business has long since been discontinued. Above was the saw-mill of George Fritch, which was next carried on by Nathan Fritch.

Paint-mill.—The power above was made to operate a grist-mill for the Fritch family, but in 1884 this was converted into a paint-mill by T. L. Fritch & Bros. This has become one of the most important industries in the township. The firm mines and manufactures floated ochres, umbers and metallic paints, producing at the rate of one thousand barrels per month, and employing from ten to fifteen hands. The water-power has been supplemented by steam, so that operations can be carried on continuously. A specialty is made of raw and burnt umber, the mineral being found near by twenty feet below the surface and having a thickness of forty feet. The improvement above was made by John Butz, to operate a clover-mill, which has been idle a long time.

In the southwestern part of the township, on a branch of the Sacoony, on the site of the old Schnable mills are the Lesher grist and sawmills, now operated by John Long. The power is weak and the mills are old.

Near the Lehigh County line were the grist and saw-mills of John Keifer, which have been replaced by better and larger mills, operated by water and steam-power and owned by Ed. Mickley and Perry Wannamaker. This firm also has a large slaughter-house where from ten to thirty steers per week are killed. The locality is known as Maple Grove. Nearly west of this place was the oil-mill of Jacob Wagenhorst, which had a wide reputation. The building is still standing, but is not in use.

At Hancock a paint-mill was begun in the fall of 1884 by Henry S. Weiler and S. Long & Son, which is still operated by them in the manufacture of crude ochres, the material for which is procured at some of the iron-mines in the township. The mill has a capacity of thirty barrels per day, and the products are in good demand.

Plumbago.—In 1880 William Reiley & Co. built a plumbago-factory on the land of William Long, which was operated one year, when the building was destroyed by fire. The plumbago there found is of good quality when properly prepared.

White Clay.—On the lands of David Delong are beds of clay, almost pure white, which has been found well adapted for the use of paper-makers. Its development and manufacture was begun in 1876 by William Reiley & Co. who put up works for that purpose. These, in an enlarged condition, are now carried on by the "Star Clay Company," of which J. B. Wilson is the manager. Steam-power is employed and ten men are engaged in the various stages of manufacture.

In no township of the county is iron-ore more abundant than in Longswamp. Nearly every farm is underlaid with it and as many as one hundred mines have been opened. In most of the larger mines steam-power has been employed and within two miles of Mertztown forty engines have been in operation for this purpose.

Churches.

Longswamp Church.¹—Frederick Hoelwig, the cantor (the director of church music) of the congregation, certifies in his chronicle. Certain members of the Reformed congregation in Longswamp, after the command of God, declared that they would erect a church, and they began about September, 1748. The piece of ground which the members had selected was lawfully secured by Jost H. Sassamanhausen through a warrant. Afterwards the congregation bought nine acres in addition for the purpose of erecting a school-house thereon and for the use of the school-teacher. Both tracts were patented for the perpetual use of the Reformed congregation, which was not a union one originally, but so hard Reformed that the Lutherans who came afterward were pressed farther down into the valley, where they likewise established a congregation on the Little Lehigh.

The first church was erected about the year 1748. The members selected as master-builders (building committee) Joseph Biry and Samuel Burger. These said—as Hoelwig said in his chronicle—"with the help" of other members of the congregation, who had given contributions and whose names follow, the building was finished:

Leopold Kreber.
Theobald Karl.
Jacob Fenstermacher.
John Fried.
Peter Butz.
Nicholas Schwartz.
Nicholas Mertz.
David Mertz.
Peter Mertz.
Henry Bohlinger.
Christian Ruth.
Philip Burger.
Nicholas Kaiser.
Peter Kaiser.
Peter Walbert.
Bernhard Fogley.
Jost Henry Sassamanhausen.
Henry Stricker.
Jacob Long.
David Delong.
Henry Eigner.
Jacob Daniel Volk.

At the lower northern corner of the graveyard, several paces inward from the present wall, the old church was erected.

The second church was built under the church administration of Hertzel. The first church stood forty-three years. In this time the congregation increased in number so that the old little church became too small, and the well-being had also grown so much that the members thought that they could build a more corresponding church. In 1790 preparations were made for the new building. Then it happened, as it generally happens in the building of a church where there are many heads, each one would have their own way, and each one considered that he is right; so they disagreed where the church should be built. The place where the old church stood was not suitable any longer in the opinion of many. It was said that it should be built higher up the hill, and yet they did not wish to leave the old church-yard. So they came to pass "the throwing of hats." This was an old custom among the Germans, which was generally practiced when differences arose concerning matters of a congregation. By throwing their hats down upon the place that they thought was the proper place they expressed their opinion, and they were satisfied according to the majority of opinion. This was regarded as a holy election, which decision was submitted to by each one, whether it happened to be for or against him. So it happened here. Each one threw his hat upon the place where he was most pleased to have it. The hats were then counted and it was ascertained that the upper western corner had the most hats. Then a beautiful walled terrace was erected there and the commencement of the church building was made in a practical and united manner. The corner-stone was laid May 28, 1791, and Hertzel, the then minister, preached.

John Helfrich, a son of the deceased Rev. Helfrich, was then elected pastor of the congregation. In autumn, 1816, he began to preach after he had received his license from Synod. By his election dissatisfaction arose. Other ministers tried to become elected and did all they could to make good their application. The consequences were that the minds of the congregation became excited and thereby Helfrich's election became more decided. In the course of time many Lutherans settled in the vicinity of the congregation through buying and selling and reciprocal family connections. These organized themselves into a congregation and petitioned the Reformed members to be allowed to hold religious services in their church on condition that they paid a small rent. The rigid Reformed spirit of the parents had partly died out, and the Lutherans were willingly allowed. They elected the Rev. Jacob Miller in 1817, he who was compensated for a short time by his brother, Conrad Miller.

The church was rented by the Lutherans at a nominal rent for a definite term. After this term expired it was re-rented under similar conditions. At the third re-renting a difference arose which brought a separation. Under the administration of Pastor Roeller, who was the Lutheran minister about this time, the year 1837 found the greatest number of Lutherans brought together. They resolved to build their own church and founded the Mertztown congregation, near by the Longswamp. A small number of the Reformed members went with the Lutherans, and so the Mertztown congregation became a union congregation. But a small number of the Lutherans also remained with the Old Longswamp Church and were given the right to carry on worship therein without rent. And so this church also became union.

In the year 1848, after the congregation had existed for more than one hundred years, they decided to celebrate the event by a jubilee. The church was beautifully ornamented with flowers and crosses and the festival was held on the 30th of September and the 1st of October. This was the first centennial festival which was held in this vicinity. The festival sermons were preached by Dr. J. S. Kessler, Eichenberg and Brobst. From near and far people came to witness this immense festival.

In 1852 the second church was torn down for the purpose of erecting in its stead, in the vicinity, a new and more spacious one. The corner-stone was laid on the 9th of May. Dechant and both ministers of the congregation preached upon this occasion. On Christmas of this year the church was dedicated. Schmidd, Brobst, Hinterleitner and other ministers preached. The church is a tasteful building, with a steeple and bell. This was the first steeple in this district for miles round-about, and the bell the first which, with its brass tongue and resonating tone, called the congregation together from the extensive valley to the service of God.

The Reformed ministers who preached in Longswamp Church were—

Frederick Casimir Miller.
Philip Jacob Michael.
Rudolph Reidenweil.
G. H. Helfrich.
Henry Hertzel.
J. Henry Helfrich, 1795-1810.
W. Dechant, 1811-15.
John Helfrich, 1816-52.
W. A. Helfrich, 1852-85.

The Lutheran ministers of the congregation from 1817 were Jacob Miller, Conrad Miller and Isaac Roeller. After the separation, in 1837, the following ministers preached: Augustus Griebler, Peter Oberfeld, Jeremiah Schindel, P. Hinterleitner, Ferdinand Berkmeyer, C. H. M. Sell, A. Croll, S. R. Boyer and D. K. Humbert.

The trustees in 1885 were Nathan Haas, Manoah Long and William Schubert; and then the Reformed congregation had three hundred members, and the Lutheran two hundred.

The church property now comprises forty acres of land.

ST. PAUL’S CHURCH (Reformed and Lutheran) is located at Mertztown. It is a brick edifice, forty-four by fifty-six feet, with galleries on three sides; and it includes two acres of ground, most of which is used for cemetery purposes. The church was erected in 1837 by a building committee composed of Daniel Ginger, Jonas Trexler, Jonathan Haas and John Diener.

The Reformed congregation was organized by the Rev. Charles Herman, who was its first pastor, and the Rev. William Helfrich next. The present pastor is the Rev. J. Sassaman Herman. The members number about one hundred and fifty. Of the Lutheran congregation, the Rev. Isaac Roeller was the first pastor, and had here, as in other parts of the county, the Rev. B. E. Kramlich as his successor. His congregation is large, numbering three hundred members.

A large Sunday-school is maintained in the church. In 1885 Benneville Fegeley was superintendent.

SALEM CHURCH (Evangelical Association) was erected at Shamrock in 1870. It is a plainly-built frame building, put up by a committee composed of James Weida, Daniel Shirey and the Rev. Frank Sechrest, who was at that time the preacher in charge of Kutztown Circuit, which has supplied the ministerial service of the church. The membership has never been large, the aggregate in 1885 being only twenty-five persons. Ephraim Fegeley is the superintendent of the Sunday-school, which has about seventy-five members.

TOWNSHIPS OF COUNTY.

Numerous hamlets and small villages abound in every part of the township, on account of the extensive mining of iron-ore.

RED LION.—In the southeastern part is the hamlet of Red Lion, a freight station on the Catasauqua and Fogelsville Railroad, which derived its name from a tavern in that locality, whose sign was a “Red Lion.” This house was built by James Butz, and is still used for public purposes. Edwin Butz has a lumber and grain business and James Findley and others ship ore extensively. In the place are a dozen residences and a graded school-building.

FARMINGTON is on the same railroad, in the northeastern part of the township, with about the same number of houses. Its only business interest is that carried on by Smith & Croll, and the shipment of iron-ore.

Maple Grove is situated between these places, on the Lehigh County line. It comprises several mills, a number of dwellings and an inn built by John Keifer.

Longswamp is a post-office centre and comprises a store and tavern and several dwellings. It is often called “Trexler’s.” The post-office was established in April, 1822, and was first kept in a building which stood on the site of the present Trexler mansion, which was the homestead of the Trexler family. Reuben Trexler was the first postmaster, and the office has since been kept by succeeding members of the family. He had opened a store there about 1820 and conducted a general business. The post-office has a daily mail from Shamrock, the nearest railway station, distant one mile. The public-house in the same locality was first a residence, having been converted into a tavern by the Trexlers.

Weillertown is a village in the centre of the township, north of the Longswamp Church, containing about twenty-five buildings. From its location it is sometimes called Longswamp Centre. Its old name was derived from John Weiler, an early settler on the farm owned by Amos Weiler. He reared three sons, —Andrew, a tanner, who removed to Potts-town; John, a pioneer blacksmith at this place (who was the father of Nathan, James, William, Charles and Peter Weiler); and George, who was a farmer, the father of Amos Weiler, of Longswamp, and Manoah Weiler, of Reading. Daughters were married to Daniel Weida and Richard Wertz, both of Longswamp. One of the first improvements was the public-house of John Weiler, built in 1812 and kept by him until some time before his death, in 1835. The past forty years this house has been kept by Richard Wertz. The place had no store until 1874, when one was opened by Franklin Wertz and William Schubert, Jr., which has been carried on by William Weiler and his sons since 1877. Some of the early mechanics at this place were John Weiler, blacksmith; William Maberry, wheelwright; John Maberry, blacksmith; Richard Wertz, tailor; Aaron Albright, saddler; Nathan Weiler, tobacconist; Charles Weiler, carpenter and cabinet-maker; and James Master, marble-cutter. C. Deininger and Frederick Stein were teachers.

South of this place Dr. Manoah Long has been for many years in successful practice as a physician; and in the village, Dr. James Franklin Wertz (who was born in Longswamp in 1836), has lived and followed his profession since his graduation. Associated with him is his brother, Dr. Peter Weiler Wertz (born in 1842).

The population of the village is about one hundred.

Shamrock, on the East Pennsylvania Railroad, near the county line, was laid out in 1859, and received its name from Engineer Lyons, who located the station. The affairs of the railroad company, since 1860, have been in charge of L. S. Hawerter. The present depot building was erected in 1883. A hotel is conducted by C. A. Fegeley and a general store by Romig & Wetzel, who have been in trade since 1869. Their new building, completed in February, 1886, is seventy feet long, and part of the second story is set aside for tailor, saddler and shoemakers-shops. The Shamrock post-office was established in 1884, with Uriah Beir as postmaster. Four mails per day are supplied. A. Trexler is a dealer in coal and grain. A large amount of ore was formerly shipped from this point, but the annual shipment was only about fifteen thousand tons the past few years. Shamrock contains a fine school-house, an Evangelical Church, about thirty residences and a hundred and fifty inhabitants.

Mertztown is a station on the East Pennsylvania Railroad, a little more than a mile west of Shamrock. It is an old place and took its name from Martin Mertz, an old settler. It contains fine residences, a good school-house, a church, hotel and store. The greater part of the village has been built up since the opening of the railroad. In 1858 a grain warehouse was built by Nathan Trexler and Levi Leiss, in which a large business has since been done and which has attracted other interests. The occupants of this house in 1885 were E. H. & D. S. Trexler. In this place was kept the Mertztown post-office, established in December, 1857. Nathan Dresher has been the postmaster since August, 1885. It has four mails per day, and is the distributing point for Schwoyer's post-office. The first postmaster at Mertztown was Levi Leiss, and his successors were Marcus and Nicholas Long and James L. Trexler. Nathan Trexler was one of the first prominent business men of the place. In 1831 he built the house now occupied by E. H. Trexler, and kept it as a public-house until 1861, when it was continued fourteen years longer by E. H. Trexler. In 1874 the latter built the present hotel, a very large brick building. Levi Leiss was, for a number of years, a successful merchant at Mertztown, having been succeeded by Haas & Klein. The present merchants are T. L. Fritsch & Brothers.

In March, 1885, the Mertztown Creamery began operations under the ownership of Miller & Klein. In September of the same year E. H. Trexler became the proprietor. About eighteen hundred pounds of butter are made weekly. Near by, Uriah Butz has a coach-making establishment.

Kline's Corner is situated north of Mertztown, containing more than a dozen houses, many of them being occupied by miners. In 1885 a post-office was established there with the name of Schwoyer, the name being derived from the first postmaster, James Schwoyer, who also carries on a store. At this place A. H. Schwoyer has a public-house.

West is the small hamlet of Oreville, which has not yet become a business point.

Hancock, a flag-station between Topton and Mertztown, owes its existence to S. Long & Son, who opened it for settlement about fifteen years ago, and who are at present carrying on an extensive coal and lumber business. A paint-mill has recently been started, and a public-position in Ayrshire. His great-grandfather, Hugh Findlay, of Kilmarnock, was prominently connected with the coal mining interest of his native country, and a son by the same name, was identified with his father, and for many years was manager for the well-remembered Sandy Gawtry, the great Scotch coal operator. He had eight children, of whom James was the eldest, born in 1802, and, trained by his father in the business of coal mining, in early man-house was opened, about a year ago, by Francis W. Schwartz. A dozen residences constitute the other features of the place. Southwest is a collection of houses called Kutzville, but there is no special interest connected with it.

The borough of Topton was erected from this township.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

James Findlay is of Scotch descent. His ancestors for centuries occupied an honorable hood was made one of the managers of the mines. He was married in 1822 to Miss Elizabeth Holland in Kilmarnock, Ayrshire, by Rev. Mr. McGinlay. When thirty years of age, himself, wife and four children took passage on the sailing vessel "Mercator," and, after a voyage consuming thirty-five days, landed at New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, early in 1832. He at once engaged in the pursuit with which he was very familiar, and connected himself with the Henry, John Richard, Katie Louisa, Carrie Agnes and Nicholas Frederick.

WINDSOR TOWNSHIP.

EARLY SETTLERS.—It is difficult to give a full and authentic account of the early settlement of Windsor township, inasmuch as there is so little recorded matter to refer to for accurate data, and so many changes of ownership have taken place. There are some few farms remaining in the possession of descendants of the original owners. In general the first improvements were made on the high lands, on account of the ease of clearing the same, and their supposed greater healthfulness. Later, finding the level lands more desirable, many of the first tracts were sold and new homes were selected. The development of the country was slow, as is shown by the amount of work done on the public roads. From an auditor’s book begun in 1765, and used for this purpose continuously since, we learn that the total expenditures for the improvement of the roads the first year were only £3 11s. Pennsylvania currency. The workmen were paid at the rate of three shillings per day and the supervisor four shillings for going to Reading to be inducted to his office and a like amount to make his report. Lawrence May was the first supervisor and Eberhard Shappell, Peter Focht and Jeremiah Shappell the auditors. Among the men employed on the roads were George Yoh, Leonard Reber, Conrad Kerschner, George Lindenmuth, John Buck, Baltzer Buck, Michael Yoh, Peter Yoh, Michael Hallenbach and Henry Kalbach. When any of these persons furnished a team they were paid ten shillings a day for the use of the same. Accounts were kept in pounds, shillings and pence until 1820, when the present system began to be used.

The early settlers were not entirely free of the superstitions entertained by people in other localities, and a “witch dance” is said to have existed in the present township. Not quite two miles from Windsor Castle, on a vacant piece of land, a spot was designated as the trysting-place of the spirits of the evil one. Thither, witches, ghosts and spooks fled themselves, at certain periods, and with measured steps traveled around a common centre until a deep circular path had been worn in the earth, closely resembling the track made by horses hitched to a sweep-power. In late years the practice has not been kept up, and only a few traces of the “dance” remain.

Among the natural features of the township there are several trees which are remarkable for their unusual size or other peculiarities. A tree on the farm of Jacob Jacoby is thirty feet in circumference. In the road near Windsor Castle stood a white oak, which was an object of much attention. Its diameter at the base was forty-six inches. During a heavy storm the tree was blown down and upon being cut up yielded ten cords of wood. Some twenty feet from the ground, a main limb, growing out of the trunk and being two feet in diameter, was supported by another limb, about a foot in diameter, which grew out of the trunk and downward into the lower and larger limb, so as to form a perfect triangle. This curious freak of nature is still preserved by Mahlon A. Sellers. The township is not generally subject to storms, but on the 5th of July, 1877, there was a severe visitation by that destructive element, which unroofed thirteen barns and damaged all kinds of property to the amount of sixty thousand dollars.

The names of the earlier settlers in the township, appears in the following statement, which comprises a list of the taxable inhabitants for the year 1759:

The total tax levied then was £40 8s. 6d. and Michael Greisher was the collector.

It is not known when the township was regularly erected. It had a legal existence before 1752. The name was taken from Windsor, in England, and given to the township by the Friends, who were the earliest settlers, especially along the Schuylkill River. The foregoing list discloses the fact that numerous Germans were in the township at an early period.

The original description of the township by metes and bounds was as follows: "Beginning at the corner of Maiden-creek township on the eastern bank of the Schuylkill; thence N. 65 E. 1400 prs.; thence S. E. 140 prs. to Maiden Creek; thence up said creek 1300 prs. to a point; thence N. W. 1383 prs. to the Blue Mountain; thence S. W. 1235 prs. to the Schuylkill, and thence down the river 2750 prs. to the beginning; and this tract was estimated to contain 26,481 acres." When this description was given, the townships to the east and north (Richmond, Greenwich and Albany) were not mentioned, which would indicate that Windsor township had been set apart about 1746. The survey was doubtless made by Benjamin Lightfoot, who surveyed nearly all the townships in this section of the county.

In 1790 a tract of mountain land was added to the township on the north, containing about four thousand acres.

WINDSOR FURNACE is near the base of the Blue Mountain, in the northeastern part of the township, on a stream of water called Furnace Creek. It is believed that the first improvement at that point was made soon after the settlement of the county. On November 2, 1768, Henry Moll conveyed to Jacob Winey, of Philadelphia, one hundred and seventy-six acres of land, together with a forge for the manufacture of bar-iron, and a water grist and saw-mill thereon erected, which had come into the possession of Moll the same fall, through purchase at a sheriff's sale of the property of Frederick Delaplank, reported as an iron-master. After this sale the forge does not seem to have been operated, and we next learn of the establishment of a small charcoal furnace at that site by Valentine Eckert, an enterprising iron-master in the northern part of the county. Later, George Reagan became the manager, and the furnace was operated in connection with Union Furnace and the forges in Albany township. Thence the operators were Boyd & Ammon, Jones, Keim & Co., Darrah and Jones, who discontinued about 1850. While Jones, Keim & Co. had the furnace they made castings of various kinds, and in 1834 ventured upon the production of artistic work, which is thus described: "The Last Supper," after Leonardo da Vinci, made at the Windsor Furnace, by Jones, Keim & Co., was presented to the Philadelphia Exchange by D. M. Keim. It was cast from pure ore in common sand and oiled. This firm made the first attempt to bring to perfection, castings of this description. Many of our public institutions are in possession of specimens of their taste and skill." 1

After the furnace had been idle some time, William Metzler obtained the property and established a tannery on it, which he carried on very extensively until he was accidentally killed in his grinding-mill by being caught up by the machinery. Another period of inactivity followed, when the property was again converted into a charcoal furnace by George Merkel and equipped so that it could produce about thirty tons of iron per week. He operated it successfully a number of years and was succeeded by the present owner of the property, Daniel B. Fisher. The furnace was in blast till 1882. Connected with the furnace are a large tract of land, mills and about ten tenements, constituting together a valuable property.

A short distance north from Hamburg, on the Schnykill, was the Keim Furnace, which was last operated by Jones, Keim & Co., in connection with the Windsor Furnace. When the canal was widened it was found necessary to destroy the property, and then it passed out of existence. It was never operated extensively, employing usually only about twenty-five men. Among other productions, some fine castings for the railings of fences were manufactured and other ornamental work. In this locality there was also, for a time, a mill.

In the eastern part of the township on the lower waters of Furnace Creek, is a mill-site which was improved many years ago by the Miller family, and the mills erected there have always been operated by them. Steam-power was added at a later day, and the mill was thereby improved, so that it enjoys a good reputation. The present owner is George S. Miller.

The other interests of the township are such as pertain to purely agricultural pursuits. These engage the attention of most of the citizens, and therein they have achieved a reputation as skillful farmers.

WATER-CURE ESTABLISHMENT.—About 1850 a Dr. Quinadon, an eccentric but well educated man, of foreign extraction, appeared in Windsor and avowed his purpose to establish a water-cure. He secured a location near the Windsor Furnace, where he put up frame buildings for the accommodation of his patients and provided bath-houses, where shower, hot and cold baths could be taken. He obtained the necessary water from the race which carried the water to the furnace. At that point the furnace was elevated a considerable height from the ground. He opened his establishment in a public way and by having religious services, preaching a sermon wherein he endeavored to impress his hearers with the importance of his mission. Occasionally he would also preach in the neighboring churches, filling the appointment of some regular preacher. For a time he conducted his place with success, and, it is said, persons afflicted with rheumatism were especially benefited. His patronage, however, was never large and the enterprise was soon abandoned. Some of the buildings were removed and others converted into a residence. Dr. Quinadon removed, it is said, to Washington Territory.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH is on the State road, two miles northeast from Hamburg. It is the third house erected for religious purposes in that locality. The first church was of logs, put up for the accommodation of a Lutheran congregation, formed some time after 1750, as the result of the missionary labors of the Revs. Krug and Decker. It was dedicated November 6, 1756, by the Rev. Daniel Schumacher, as the “Lebanon Evangelical Lutheran Church, at the Blue Mountains.” The latter part of the title has been most generally applied to the church. At that time the elders were Martin Rouch, Jacob Mueller and George Gardner, who also served as the building committee. The members were at first few in numbers and the preaching at long intervals. But the increase of population and consequent increase of membership caused a desire for a larger and better building, and it was determined to erect it as soon as the necessary funds could be collected. Nearly all the people of that locality having been poor, authority was asked of the Lieutenant-Governor of the province to collect funds among charitable people in other sections to assist the enterprise, and a petition to that effect was issued September 25, 1767. It set forth that they wanted a “Brief to collect money for the purpose of erecting a church, in which they were desirous of having the Gospel of Christ preached to them and the Holy Sacraments administered to them; and stating that they were living near the Blue Mountains, from which place they had lately been driven by the Indians.” This paper was signed by the Rev. Peter Mischler, at that time the preacher, Jacob Mueller and George Crove, on behalf of many others. On the 9th of October, 1767, such a letter was granted, giving permission to collect five hundred pounds within the next two years. This means, added to their own efforts, enabled them to dedicate the new church in the summer of 1769. Soon afterward the Rev. Frederick Miller assumed the pastorate of the congregation and sustained that relation until his bodily infirmities compelled him to relinquish his charge in 1826. He died in August, 1827, and was interred in the cemetery of the church. On the 9th of July, 1826, the Rev. G. F. E. Iaeger became the pastor and ministered to the congregation until 1870. His accession was marked by two important events,—the beginning of preaching by the German Reformed congregation and the agitation of the question of building a new church of more substantial material than the old one. This was also of logs, and after the new edifice had been provided, it was taken down and the material used in building the schoolmaster's house, now used as the residence of the sexton.

In carrying out the latter purpose the cornerstone was laid April 29, 1832, and the church built during the summer and fall of that year. It was dedicated October 20, 1832, as the St. Paul's Church, union in nature, the two congregations to have equal rights and privileges in the property forever.

New church regulations were adopted, which are still in operation. In this condition the church was occupied until September, 1868, when some improvements were made on the interior of the building and new furniture supplied. At that time the pastors were: Lutheran, Rev. G. F. E. Iaeger, and Reformed, Rev. Aug. L. Herman, who had commenced serving the congregation in 1834.

The occupancy of the renovated church was made the occasion of celebrating its centennial, although twelve more years than a hundred had elapsed since the church was founded. The church is a plain, almost square, stone structure, very high and in a fair state of preservation. In connection with it there is a large cemetery, which shows good care and is the resting-place of hundreds of pioneers of that part of the county.

In 1870 the Rev. F. K. Huntzinger became the Lutheran pastor and those subsequently preaching were the Revs. B. S. Smoll, Drumheller and the Rev. Oscar Miller, since 1884. The Reformed congregation had less changes of pastor, the Rev. A. L. Herman being succeeded, in 1872, by the present, Rev. B. F. Wise. His congregation has about seventy-five members, while that of the Lutheran is somewhat more. The elders in 1885 were: Lutheran, Daniel Boyer and William Hollenbach; Reformed, Jacob Stamm and Joseph Arndt.

An early record of baptisms shows, among other members belonging from 1767 to 1874, the following: Michael Lindenmuth, George Gardener, Yost Greim, John Huber, Jacob Heil, Jacob Resch, George Heilman, Henry Bolender, Jacob Will, Christopher Lindenmuth, John Peter Gephart, Conrad Bolender, Henry Rausch, Jacob Keller, Henry Billig, Jacob Seidel, James Mohr and Jacob James.

As a rule, the citizens of Windsor have taken a commendable interest in their public schools, and as early as May, 1850, decided to build six new school-houses and to levy a tax of nine mills for this purpose. In them the usual periods of school have since been maintained each year.

WINDSOR CASTLE, the only business point in the township, is a hamlet, three miles south-east from Hamburg, containing a store, hotel, creamery, blacksmith-shop, etc., and half a dozen residences in the immediate neighborhood. It took its name when the post-office was established, in 1856, through the efforts of Mahlon A. Sellers, Esq., who was appointed postmaster, and has had the office ever since. The office is on the Hamburg and Allentown stage route, and a daily mail is supplied since July, 1885. Prior to that time the mails were tri-weekly. The hotel in which the office is kept is one of the oldest buildings in the township, and has been used for tavern purposes since the general settlement of the country. It was originally the home of Jeremiah Shappell. Ferdinand Yoh was one of the early keepers. During the Revolution a hickory liberty pole which stood in front of this tavern was cut down by British soldiers on their march to Bethlehem. In 1820 Jacob Heinly became the proprietor of the inn, and kept it until 1845, when he was succeeded by Mahlon A. Sellers, who has since been the proprietor. The place is more widely known than any other tavern in the northern part of the county and is sometimes called the "Black Horse Inn," from its old-time sign. The first stores in this locality were kept in the old tavern building by Charles Heinly and others, more than sixty years ago. Later, in 1849, a store-house was built on the opposite side of the road. This was burned down after having been occupied a few years by John Weightman. The present house was built in 1852 by Mahlon A. Sellers, and occupied by him the following year for store purposes. He was in business until 1870, since which time a number of dealers have occupied the stand.

The Windsor Castle Creamery occupies a building forty by forty-four feet, which was erected in 1885 by the Windsor Castle Creamery Association, which was organized on the 7th of April of that year. The first directors were Jacob D. Hoffman, Alfred K. Rentschner, Jeremiah M. Shappell, Daniel Smith and Peter Strasser. In 1885 the officers were Jacob D. Hoffman, president; Daniel Sault, treasurer; and M. A. Sellers, secretary. The creamery is operated under a lease by Milton L. Ritter, and the past year manufactured about ten thousand pounds of butter and fifteen thousand pounds of cheese. The patrons of the factory number about sixty.

Near Windsor Castle, on the Auburn and Allentown Railroad, partially completed, is a projected tunnel one thousand four hundred feet in length. In 1870 about four hundred feet of this tunnel was built on the south side of the hill, when work on the railroad was suspended.

North of this place, on the upper State road, in what is now the residence of William D. Merkel, was for some years a public-house, which was well patronized when Windsor Furnace was in active operation.

Gold was discovered in the neighborhood of Windsor Castle in 1850, on the farm of George Focht, and indications of silver also abounded, but not in quantities large enough to warrant mining operations.

The Windsor Mutual Assistance and Fire Insurance Company is the oldest of the mutual companies originated and maintained in the township. It was organized in 1844 and has been successfully carried on ever since. At one time the policies carried amounted to more than $3,000,000; but the formation of a new company has reduced this amount somewhat. Both farm and village property are insurable, by the terms of the amended charter, and the annual meetings must be held at Windsor Castle. In 1885 the principal officers were William Umbenhauer, president; James L. Merkel, secretary; Augustus R. Shollenberger, treasurer.

The Farmers' Mutual Insurance Company of Berks County is an offspring of the company named, and was organized in 1875 by members of the old company opposed to the insurance of village property. In the new company policies are written on farm and country property only, for two-thirds of their value. The company has been eminently successful, being prosperous from its formation. In 1885 the policies aggregated over $2,000,000 insurance. On ordinary property the insurance is perpetual, if the mutual clause is complied with; but on extra hazardous country property five-year policies are written. By the terms of the charter the meetings must be held annually at Windsor Castle. In 1885 the principal officers were the following: Samuel K. Fisher, president; A. S. Seidel, secretary; Samuel Bewer, treasurer.

Windsor Society for the Detection of Horse-Thieves.—This body was organized under a charter granted April 9, 1855, with eighty members and the following officers: Daniel Bausher, president; Jacob Reber, Jr., vice-president; M. A. Sellers, secretary; Jeremiah Focht, treasurer; William Miller, G. E. Horlacher and William Reber, auditors. Of the above officers, M. A. Sellers has filled the position of secretary continuously to the present time. The membership is limited to an area of country described by a radius of ten miles from Windsor Castle, the headquarters of the society.
The by-laws provide a police committee of sixteen persons, who hold themselves under the control and direction of the president of the society, and when the theft of a horse is reported, a search is instituted by this committee, and, getting on the track of the horse, must be pursued fifty miles, or until the thief is apprehended. In case of the loss of the animal the horse is appraised and the owner reimbursed from the funds of the society to the extent of three-fourths of the actual value. Since the operation of the society twelve horses belonging to members were reported missing, of which ten of them were recovered, and in nearly every instance the thieves were brought to justice. In 1885 there were one hundred members and the following officers: Joseph L. Smith, president; John De Turk, vice-president; Mahlon A. Sellers, secretary; Joseph Bewer, treasurer.

The Windsor Horse Life Insurance Company of Berks County was organized under a charter granted by the County Court August 1, 1850, with one hundred and ten members and the following as the first board of directors:

Mahlon A. Sellers. Daniel Bausher.
John Balthaser. George Merkel.

The first officers were William D. Shomo, president; Benjamin Gardner, vice-president; Mahlon A. Sellers, secretary; Samuel S. Unger, treasurer; John Balthaser, collector.

In its workings the company is purely mutual, and its operations are limited to Berks County. Its success is attested by the fact that its membership is fully kept up, and that since its existence the society has been able to sustain the loss of one hundred and forty-five horses. Insurance on animals may be placed as high as two hundred dollars, and in case of a loss, the owner is compensated within thirty days, less twenty per cent. of the appraised value of the animal. In 1885 the officers were Solomon Miller, president; John De Turk, vice-president; Mahlon A. Sellers, secretary; Jacob F. Christ, treasurer.

PERRY TOWNSHIP.

In an act passed April 2, 1821, establishing andaltering certain election districts, the following provision was made: "That the township of Perry, in the county of Berks, shall be a separate election district, and the electors thereof shall hold their general elections at the house now occupied by John Binckley, in said township." But no action was taken upon this legislation, and that section of territory was not made into a separate election district. No such township was in existence. Twenty-eight years afterward this election district was again established; and still the township was not erected. Four years more elapsed before such a political division was created. The provision was as follows: "That so much of the township of Windsor as lies south of a line commencing at a certain point on the Schuylkill River designated by a post on land of George Hughes; thence, including the farm buildings, the Zion's Church, et cetera, N. 87 5/8 degrees, E. 1776 perches, to a double-hickory tree on the banks of the Maiden Creek, on land of Jacob Heinly, be and the same is hereby erected into a new and separate township, school and election district, to be called Perry township." The voting-place was fixed at the house of Jacob Boyer, in Shoemakersville. Benjamin Gardner was appointed judge and John Suyder and John H. Mohr inspectors of the first election for township officers.

INDUSTRIES.—The industries of Perry township are few in number and limited to the ordinary occupations of a farming country. Along the Maiden Creek, near Virginsville, is the blue-stone quarry of Isaac Leiby, which is noted for its fine quality of stone, resembling slate in many respects. Blocks of stone have been taken from it varying from two inches to four feet in thickness and thirty feet long. The same kind of stone is found on the farm of Jacob Shappell. Neither quarry is worked on a large scale. The former has been open many years. Near Shoemakersville flag-stones of fine quality and large size are quarried by William S. Koller and Isaac Wheeler, both quarries being worked to a considerable extent.
On Plum Creek, more than a mile east from Shoemakersville, is an old mill-seat, known in early times as Schnable's, and later as the mill of Nicholas Greth. The present mill, a roomy brick building, was erected by Enoch Wartzenluft, and steam supplied, in addition to the water-power, before 1870. It is operated on custom-work. Near the village of Virginsville, and operated by the waters of the Maiden Creek, are the Gruber grist and saw-mills, built in 1832 by John Dreibelbis and now owned by Ephraim Dreibelbis, which have a good reputation. The fine mill of Adam Stoudt, at Shoemakersville, is operated by the Plum Creek and the Schuylkill. It was built, about 1840, by James and Joshua Reber, but has been supplied with modern machinery. In all points it is an excellent mill.

On the Plum Creek, in the village, is the well-equipped tannery of C. H. & W. S. Seidel, operated by the present firm since 1884. It was built to its present size in 1867, by Solomon B. Seidel, the owner since 1846. The building is fifty by ninety feet, and two stories high. There are sixty-four vats. Fifty hides per week are tanned into harness-leather. Steam has been used since 1863. The business was established by Samuel Shoemaker. Part of the building put up by him in 1810 is still used as an office. It is said that schools were taught in that room at an early day. Shoemaker was succeeded by Jacob Seidel, grandfather of the present owners. Near Shoemakersville, Henry Moll began the manufacture of common pottery-ware many years ago, and this is still carried on by Franklin B. Moll.

CHURCHES.

ZION'S CHURCH (Lutheran and Reformed).—This old house of worship is in the northern part of the township, three miles from Shoemakersville. In 1805 the present edifice was erected, the brick used in its construction having been made on the church property. The lot on which the house stands was bought then. Since that time additions have been purchased to enlarge the cemetery, which now embraces about three acres. It has lately been improved by having a neat iron fence built in front of the lot. The house shows evidence of age; but it has been improved so as to make it attractive. It was remodeled in 1860. At the time it was built the trustees were Andrew Schmidt, Peter Shappell, George Hinkel and Peter Gardner, the last two named being Lutheran. The present is the third house of worship used by these congregations. As early as 1760 the purpose to build a church in this neighborhood was agitated, and Conrad Kerschner made a journey to Philadelphia to secure a donation of land from the Penns for church purposes. He was successful in obtaining a grant of forty acres, and on this there was built a small log meeting-house, in 1761. It soon proved too small, and, in 1771, a larger building (also of logs) was erected, by a committee composed of Jeremiah Shappell, Eberhard Shappell, Johannes Herd, Conrad Kerschner and George Haner. This house also stood on the church property, on land donated by the Penns, but the third house it was thought best to build on more elevated ground, which was secured by purchase. The church property is improved with a residence, barn and enough sheds for the gratuitous use of church attendants to accommodate sixty-one teams.

The Rev. Bernhart Hausich was the first to preach in this locality. He held meetings before the first church was built. He visited the neighborhood from 1759 to 1763. Then came, as Lutheran pastors, the following:

D. Schumacher...1763-65  John Knoxke......1811-14  John A. Krug.....1765-71  Frederick Engel..1817-23  Heinrich Miller..1775-77  G. F. J. Iaeger...1823-66  Dan. Lehman..1778-1810  Thos. T. Iaeger...1866——

The Rev. John Andreas Krug was the first minister to preach regularly, and he began the records of the church. Some of his first entries indicate, in 1766, the marriage of Frantz Roth to Hannah Kerschner, the ceremony having been performed in the church, after the banns had been declared at Reading.

The first baptism was that of a child belonging to Jacob and Magdalena Schumacher, in September, 1762. The child received the name of Mary Magdalena, and Jacob Hill and Magdalena, his wife, were the sponsors. The Lutheran congregation has flourished for many years. In 1885 it had four hundred members.

The Reformed congregation had its first settled pastor in 1771, in the person of Rev. Philip Jacob Michel. The successive pastors were as follows:

In 1885 the congregation had three hundred members. Sixty years ago the church was supplied with a pipe-organ and John Starr was the organist for thirty-six years. Daniel Saul has filled the same position since 1866.

Shoemakersville Church (Reformed and Lutheran) was built in 1853 on two acres of land secured for this purpose from the farm of Joshua Reber. It is a two-story brick edifice, with a gallery, and was put up by a building committee composed of Daniel Unger and Solomon B. Seidel, on the part of the Lutheran congregation; and David Becker and Isaac Mohr, on the part of the Reformed congregation.

The latter had for its first pastor the Rev. Isaac Miesse, and was succeeded by the Revs. F. H. Swartz, E. P. A. Hoffman and the present pastor P. Y. Schelley. The congregation has one hundred and fifty members. The Lutheran congregation had for its first pastor the Rev. Thomas T. Iaeger, whose successors in the ministry were the Revs. B. E. Kramlich, Benjamin Kline, T. T. Iaeger, C. K. Drumheller and O. D. Miller. It has one hundred and fifty members and a well-attended Sunday-school is superintended by Henry K. Miller.

St. Timothy's Church (Reformed and Lutheran) is, as its name implies, a union house of worship, and was built at Mohrsville in 1864. It is located in the upper part of the village, on the east side of the turnpike and presents an inviting appearance. The house is of brick, in modern style of church architecture, and is supplied with a plain spire. The church was formally dedicated on Sunday, May 17, 1865.

The Lutheran congregation was organized with seventeen members and has increased to about sixty. The Rev. E. B. Kramlich was the first pastor. The Rev. G. W. Fritch is the present pastor.

The Reformed congregation numbers about thirty members, and has had the pastoral services of the Revs. Aaron S. Leinbach, Tobias Kessler, and R. S. Appel, the latter at present in charge.

The Ebenezer Church of the Evangelical Association was built in 1857, in the eastern part of the village of Shoemakersville. The building is of brick and rather small in dimensions. It was erected under the direction of the Rev. Daniel Wieand, assisted by a building committee. At that time about thirty persons constituted the membership, which is not much stronger at this time, owing to the organization of Salem United Brethren Church in the same village. The church is included in the Kutztown Circuit. It was served in 1885 by the Revs. William Weidner and C. C. Speicher. The circuit embraced in 1885 Kutztown, Lyons, Shamrock, Richmond, Virginsville, Wesnersville, Albany, Hamburg and Shoemakersville. The following ministers have been in charge of it: Revs. Wieand, Ziegenfuss, Leib, Leopold, Sechrist, Gingrich, Lichtenwalter, Stauffer, Yeagle, Lenz, Hess and Weidner.

Ebenezer Church supported a Sunday-school in 1885, which had Wm. P. Burkhart as the superintendent.

Salem Church of the United Brethren in Christ is located in the upper part of the village of Shoemakersville.

The congregation occupying it was organized in 1874. The church was built in 1876. It is a small, but neat brick house, plainly built. The committee who erected it were John Sieger, Peter Heckman and Franklin Guady. The two former and Samuel Leisher are the present trustees. There were thirty members when the church was organized; now they are nearly double that number. Since the fall of 1885 the pastor has been the Rev. L. W. Cranmer. Other ministers of the church have been the Revs. Longenecker, Fleisher, Lowry, Etter, Unger and Moon. A flourishing Sunday-school is supported by the church, with Henry Dubson as superintendent.

Schools.—The people of Perry have taken a warm interest in educational matters, and their school-houses generally, are well supplied with the requisites demanded by our modern teachers. The school-house at Shoemakersville was built in 1875. It is a spacious two-story building, well furnished and the schools maintained in it enjoy a good reputation.

VILLAGES.

Shoemakersville, the largest village in Perry township, is on the Schuylkill, southwardly of the centre of the township and at the mouth of Plum Creek. It is finely located on a level tract of land and is surrounded by a fertile country. Its name was derived from Henry Shoemaker, one of the first settlers at the place, who lived on the north side of Plum Creek. The stone mansion which he built in 1768 is still standing and is used as a residence, being now the property of Solomon B. Seidel. For a time he kept an inn at that place, but it was discontinued when a public-house was opened in Charles Shoemaker’s dwelling, which stood on the south side of Plum Creek and on the site of the present Metropolitan Hotel. The original house was of logs, but an addition of stone was made after more room was demanded. Charles Shoemaker was the father of sons named Charles, Benjamin, Jacob and Samuel. The first-named figured most in public affairs, being a member of the Assembly and a Senator from 1813 to 1816. He died at Shoemakersville in 1822. He was the father of Mrs. Solomon B. Seidel, of Shoemakersville, and Mrs. Charles Mohr and Mrs. Samuel Stepp, of Mohrsville. The lower part of Shoemakersville was never laid out for village purposes, but buildings were put up on lots of irregular size to suit the purchasers. Most of the growth has been made within the last twenty years. A quarter of a mile farther up the turnpike, and on the north side of the canal, an addition to Shoemakersville was made by Isaac Reber; and later, others, by F. S. Reber and S. S. Unger, upon which a number of houses have been built. Now this part is larger than the original village. The first house here was put up by Harrison Derrick, a log building used for a dwelling. Jacob Sieger put up the first substantial house, also a residence, in 1855; and about the same time William Miller another, now the residence of Perry Reber. Near the same time substantial improvements were made by Daniel Zuber, D. B. Fisher and George B. Fisher. The latter opened the first store, about 1865, in a building now occupied as a tin-shop by William F. Burkhardt.

In 1870 S. S. Unger put up a large three-story brick hotel in this part of the village, calling it the “Mansion House.” The upper part was finished off for a public hall and part of the lower floor prepared for a store-room, which has since been occupied for business purposes. The hotel has been continuously kept by S. S. and A. S. Unger.

Between these two parts of the village the Pennsylvania Railroad has located its station, erecting very neat depot buildings, opened for business in December, 1885. Half a mile west, in Centre township, is the depot building of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, and which is the Shoemakersville station. It was not located as early as the construction of the railway, the people of the place for many years having been obliged to transact their business through the Mohrsville station. In 1862 the Windsor Haven Bridge Company opened its toll-bridge and entered into an agreement with the railroad company whereby the latter agreed to maintain a station, provided the former would erect the depot buildings. This arrangement was carried out and since that time the station has aided in increasing the business of Shoemakersville. The first merchandising was done in the old Shoemaker mansion, where Samuel Dreibelbis had a store. Soon after, a man named Feyer opened a store in part of the Charles Shoemaker inn. This was discontinued and a store was opened at the canal by Jacob Barndt. Soon after, Michael Beard began trading in a house put up for store purposes by the Reber brothers, Joshua and James, who endeavored to attract business to the village by these improvements. Another store-stand was es-established by Charles Shoemaker, where Charles Weightman engaged in business. Later, Joseph Seidel built a store-house, which is still in use, occupied by Henry K. Miller many years. Along the canal store-houses were built by the Rebers and by Jacob Seidel, Sr. In the one D. I. Saul is in business, and near the Pennsylvania depot Charles N. Brownmiller has lately established himself in trade as a lumber and coal dealer.

The old Charles Shoemaker inn was carried on in a repaired condition until 1869, when Elias Becker built and has since kept the commodious three-story hotel known as the Metropolitan House. The upper story was fitted up for the use of secret societies and it has been occupied by lodges of the orders of Patrons of Husbandry, Knights of Pythias, Junior American Mechanics and Knights of the Mystic Chain, all of which have been discontinued and the charters surrendered. In this hotel is the Shoemakersville post-office, established in 1833, and which was kept by Charles Shoemaker, Jr. The present postmaster is Elias Becker.

Among the physicians at Shoemakersville may be named Dr. Winters, Dr. Hiram Witmer, Dr. J. N. Brause and the present practitioners, Dr. M. S. Reber and Dr. N. K. Fisher.

On the turnpike, above the village, were two old-time inns, known as Fink's and Heckman's; at the former were also as landlords, Solomon Lesher, Tobias Gerhart, Aspen Kerschner and Charles Dreisbich, the last to keep the inn.

Mohrsville is a pleasant hamlet consisting of fifteen buildings on the Perry township side of the Schuylkill, and as many more on the Centre township side. There are stations of the same name on both the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad and the Pennsylvania Railroad. The former station was established in October, 1841, in Centre township, and J. W. Smith appointed agent. Upon his decease Seth Zimmerman became his successor, and since December, 1842, has faithfully and efficiently discharged the duties of an agent of the company. The depot is large and much shipping is done at this point.

The station on the Pennsylvania Railroad was opened in December, 1885, and has been provided with pleasant quarters. It was on this side that Mohrsville began its growth and took its name from the Mohr family, who were early settlers here and the first to engage in trade. John H. Mohr had a public-house in the first building in the place, and he was the first postmaster of the office established May 10, 1836. The inn was vacated about 1853, after the hotel on the west side was opened. The store built about 1840 by John H. Mohr and John Gernant, and in which Michael R. Smith is now carrying on business, is the only public place on the east side, and in it is kept the post-office by Michael R. Smith. It is the distributing office for Centreport and Bernville by stage route tri-weekly. Various shops are in the village. Dr. W. R. Shaner is located there in the practice of medicine.

On the west side are a large hotel, a good store and a number of fine homes, some of them lately erected, while on the east side the new railroad has caused evidences of improvement to appear.

ALBANY TOWNSHIP.

Albany township is the northernmost district in the county. Its eastern line forms part of the county line between Berks and Lehigh Counties, and its northern line part of the county line between Berks and Schuylkill Counties. I have not been able to ascertain when this township was first erected and how much territory it embraced. The first district in this upper section of the county embraced a large area of territory, including what is now Albany and Greenwich townships, altogether about forty-five thousand acres, and it was known for some years previous to 1752 by the name of "Allemangel," which signified all wants, a country wanting in fertility of soil. About the time of, and probably immediately after, the erection of the county this large area was divided into two districts by a straight line run east and west through the central portion, the upper having been named Albany and the lower Greenwich. These names were taken from prominent districts in England, and were doubtless suggested by the surveyor, Benjamin Lightfoot, who was active in such service during that early period of the county. I made diligent search amongst the old records of Philadelphia County, and also of Berks County, without finding anything relating to the erection of this large tract of territory into a township or to its subsequent subdivision.

Immediately after the country between the South Mountain and Blue Mountain was declared open to general settlement upon its purchase from the Indians, settlers proceeded northwardly along the Maiden Creek and took up lands by warrant and survey. These were mostly, if not entirely, Germans. In 1741 there were thirty-seven taxables.

In 1732 a "manor" of two thousand acres was set apart for the use of Thomas Penn in the upper section. This tract was described as situated on the Andenheitia (Maiden Creek), between Big Manor Creek and Little Manor Creek. Tradition has carried the "manor" down till now, and the creeks to the east and west are still pointed out and so named.

Early Settlers.—Cornelius Frees took up a tract of land, containing two hundred acres, in 1743, which lay at the foot of the Blue Mountain, towards the western end of the township, in what is commonly called "The Corner"—[Die Eck]. His neighbors then were Adam Frees, Andreas Hagenbough and Tobias Stapleton. When the land was taken up it was described as being on a branch of Maiden Creek, in Philadelphia County. But several years afterward this section was known as "Allemaengel." He erected a log building on this tract. It was one story, with a garret, and its dimensions were eighteen feet wide by twenty-seven feet long. This was the first building erected in that distant locality. It was still standing in 1883, when I visited it, being then one hundred and forty years old, but it was in a very weak condition. The first floor had three rooms, and the garret the same. A large space was set apart for the "fire-corner" and kitchen. The two rooms adjoining were heated by a walled-in stove, which consisted of iron plates fastened together, and extended from one room through the partition into the other room. This was the only specimen of a stove of this pattern which I saw at any time in this county or elsewhere.

A large iron plate had been walled in on the side of the building by Frees, which continued in place for many years, until it was removed by Daniel Levan, a succeeding owner, who migrated from Exeter township. This plate is supposed to have been cast at the Colebrookdale Furnace. It contained the following inscription in raised letters:

\text{WAS NCH ZU GOTTES EHR AUS GLAEBEN GEHT IST SUNE MERCK AUF D THERES HERTZ VERLIEHR IA KENE STUNE}
\]

This building occupied a dangerous position during the invasion by the Indians. It was occupied at times as a place of refuge by the settlers in that vicinity. A man named Schoner, it is said, was shot at the door; and a quarter of a mile away a man named Shisler and his wife were killed by the Indians.

TAXABLES OF 1759. — The following list comprises the taxable inhabitants of the township in 1759. Michael Brobst was the collector. The tax levied amounted to £31 6s. 0d.

EARLY BUILDINGS.

Several old buildings in the township remain as evidences of its early settlement. On the farm of James B. Levan is an old log building which is a relic of the time when Indian warfare harassed the settlers, and it doubtless served as a sort of fort, for bullet-marks are still visible on the logs.

Near by is a stone house, owned by Joel Baer, which antedates the Revolution. It was long known as the “Robert Steppleton Place.” Farther east, on the Ontelaunee, is a log house, now owned by N. D. Trexler, at Trexler Station, which is a landmark easily recognized by the older people, and around which cluster many recollections. It was long an inn and in the days when grain was cut by hand-sickles the thirsty harvesters used to drive their sickles into the logs while they went inside to refresh themselves. These marks can be plainly seen. A few years ago, while the owner was rebuilding the chimney, he found a very rare relic of the Revolutionary period imbedded in the wall of the garret and plastered over. It is a circular piece of apple wood, about a foot in diameter and contains an excellent profile of Washington. On its edge there appears, in reversed letters, the following sentiment: “Long live Geo. Washington, the Commander of the Federal Army.” The date and other matter at the bottom have been eaten away by mice. The engraving shows skillful workmanship.

EARLY SETTLERS.

Of the early settlers, a number of descendants of the fourth and fifth generations still remain on the places first occupied by their forefathers, among which may be named the Berks and Baileys. Of the latter, Daniel Bailey, born in Albany, who died in Greenwich, ninety years of age.

In that township John Jacob Dietrich settled on the Sacony Creek, where he reared sons named Henry, John Jacob, George and Christian. The first two settled in Albany, and John Jacob, who died in 1857, was the father of Solomon and Charles P. Dietrich, well-known citizens of Albany. A member of another generation, Franklin S. Dietrich, born in Albany in September, 1851, after being educated at Kutztown Normal School, Freeland Seminary and at Philadelphia, went as a missionary to India in the fall of 1882, and has since been in that service.

The Fetherolf family, though prominent years ago in the affairs of Albany, have nearly all died or removed. Abraham, a son of John, became a physician of repute.

Among other natives of Albany who became physicians are James D. Graver, Wm. Trexler and George Reagan.

The Trexlers identified themselves with the township in 1826, occupying the Fusselman farm. Of sons named Amos, Jonas, Riter, Jairus, Aaron, Nathan, David and Benjamin, the first four survive, who, with their descendants, are active in the affairs of the county. The Kistlers settled in Lehigh County, near Wesnesville, from which place some of the family early came to Albany and carried on mills and small factories. Jacob, Daniel and Mathias Kistler are best remembered in this connection.

INDUSTRIES.

The mountain streams of Albany were early improved to operate mills and factories requiring but small power. Prominent in their day were the Union Forges and Furnace, on Pine Creek and its tributary, all within a radius of a mile, and their operations brought a sturdy, busy population to the township, many of whom left after the iron-works were no longer carried on. A small charcoal furnace and two forges were built before 1780, which became known as the "Union Iron-Works." They were subsequently operated by Michael Brobst, John Brobst, Valentine Brobst and John Richards. Later, George Reagan, an iron-master from Virginia, became the owner of the property, which included extensive tracts of land. Besides carrying on the iron-works, he operated grist and saw-mills and carried on a general store. The furnace was abandoned more than fifty years ago, and the last forge ceased to work twenty years later, under the ownership of William Reagan. But the grist-mill, built by Brobst over a hundred years ago, still remains. The lower story is of stone and the upper of logs. It is the property of Thomas Long. On Pine Creek were also the Knepper mill (very early) and oil, grist and saw-mills by Jacob Grenewalt and the Grim family. On Stony Run, near its mouth, the Mason family had an early mill, which was owned by Samuel Brobst and subsequently by Isaac Levan and his son Jackson. The present Deitrich mill is remembered as Kistler's and later as the property of Renben and Jonathan Grim, well-known citizens in their day. Then came the Grenewalt mill, which obtained a wider reputation as Kunzel's and is still owned by that family. The Fetherolf family had mills and shops on Mill Creek, which became the property of the Trexler family. On the Ontelaunee, near the Lehigh line, there was early a mill known as Witmann's, but better remembered as Moser's.

At Trexler's Station the Shellenberger family had a clover-mill and a power to grind sickles and turn gun-barrels. This power is now used to operate N. D. Trexler's tannery, which was established in 1857 by Joel Kistler and operated since 1867 by the present owner. The capacity is sixteen hundred hides per year. Other tanneries were operated on Aaron Trexler's place and on the Hagenbush farm, where fine leather was made a specialty. Isaac Levan long carried on a tannery, making leather of good quality by the use of improved methods and machinery.

Other small industries, such as carding-machines, oil-mills, saw-mills, etc., had an existence and some are still run to a limited extent. The majority of the population find employment in agriculture.

Slate Quarries.—Albany has become a prominent locality on account of its slate interests. These were first developed by Charles Faust, on his farm on the slope of the Blue Mountain. As the products had to be hauled to Hamburg, but little was done until 1876; when the Berks County Railroad, by affording better shipping facilities, induced more active operation of the quarries. That year David Heinley and Charles Faust opened the "Centennial Quarry," taking out a superior quality of slate and employing eighteen men the following year. In 1881 they sold out to the "Standard Slate Company," which was, in turn, succeeded by the "Big Bed Slate Company." In this quarry as high as forty men have been employed. The "Quaker City Slate Company" was the next to open a quarry opposite the "Centennial," and it successfully operated the same until 1884, when a change of ownership took place. Under this management thirty men found employment. In the same locality is the "Pittsburgh Quarry," which, when fully worked, employs twenty men, and also a new quarry by the "Continental Slate Company," of Philadelphia, which commenced work in the fall of 1885.

The slate of this section ranks with the best quality found in the slate region. It is in strata from fifteen to eighty feet below the surface. New developments being made from time to time, this industry promises to become the most important in the northern part of the county.

Churches.

Albany Church.—In this section of country, notwithstanding its remoteness from the stronger settlements to the south, the settlers displayed commendable energy towards establishing a church for religious worship. The devotion of Rev. Henry Melchior Muhlenberg carried him into that wild region of territory, to give encouragement and comfort to those pioneers in the great work of possessing and improving this new country, and of building up and carrying onward the development of the Lutheran Church in Pennsylvania. Certain of his church members had moved thither, between 1735 and 1745, from New Hanover, in Philadelphia (now Montgomery) County, and be naturally followed them to look after their spiritual welfare. In 1746 (April 11th) he took up in this township a tract of land containing fifty acres, and about that time a church was erected thereon. This was first known as "Allemaengel Church," and afterward named "New Jerusalem." In 1770, Muhlenberg granted this land to Philip Stambach, Jacob Gortner and Valentine Brobst, of Albany township, in Berks County, and Matthias Brobst and George Kestler, of Lynn township, in Northampton (now Lehigh) County, trustees, in trust and for the use of the "German Lutheran Congregation of Albany township." 1

The following interesting extracts have been taken from a centennial sermon delivered by the Rev. S. K. Brobst, at a celebration in this church on September 3, 1871: 2

"The beginning of the foundation of a German Evangelical Lutheran congregation in this vicinity, formerly called 'Allemaengel,' must have been already begun between the years 1740 and 1747. In the 'Hallischen Nachrichten,' pp. 215-216, the Rev. Henry Melchior Muhlenberg mentions the following facts concerning it:

"In March, 1747, I took a journey to the northwestern mountains, fifty miles from Providence (now called the Trappe). Many German people lived there, poor and destitute, and have a scarcity of spiritual and bodily food. Divers members of the congregation from New Hanover having moved thither, and recalled their worship of God, they gave me a pressing invitation to visit them. Many grew into a wild life and no longer regarded churches and schools, and some followed such men who had set themselves up as preachers (vagrants). Others sought something edifying and would not have anything to do with ministers walking about by themselves, but fell on the other side and connected themselves with the Moravians from Bethlehem.

"My former members had already several times sent men to me and asked me to help them. Having at the time had with me, as an assistant, Mr. Kurtz (school-teacher and assistant preacher), I sent him thither several times, and through my father-in-law, Conrad Weiser, let a small tract of land (50 acres) as a property for church purposes. Upon this they were to erect a log school-house or church. If they should in time become strong, so that they could support a school-teacher, then the children should receive some help. The school-teacher should read the Scriptures on Sundays and I would visit them once or several times every year.

"'After a majority of them had united and agreed upon a fair proposition, they began to erect a log church. In the mean time the Moravians 3 from Bethlehem were industrious in drawing some of these people unto themselves, most of whom were still in the possession of bodily sustenance. These Moravians proclaimed that they were the genuine Lutherans, and they also administered the sacrament after the manner of the Lutherans, and sent a brother member with his family to those whom they had won over, for the purpose of keeping school.

"The other party seeing this, they became angry and used abusive language, and the third party, on this account, withdrew. Soon after they had begun to erect a church, the operations stopped, and the building without a roof stands to this day. The Moravians thought that they would and could finish the building with the understanding that it should be a brotherly church; but this I did not agree to, because the ground was still in my possession, and I had hopes that the poor Lutherans would in time be able to help themselves. But then I did not see any possibility how such a spoiled disorderly heap could be improved until the Lord should give me ways and means as yet unknown. During my recent visit there, I myself preached, baptized several children and urged my former members to read the Scriptures and pray with diligence. And I administered the sacrament unto two old persons, at their earnest request. Their children had joined the Moravians and this caused them to sorrow secretly and receive the sacrament with the deepest humiliation; and they promised through Jesus Christ to remain faithful in life, sorrow and death.'

"The first children baptized were the children of John Bely, Frank Bely, Caspar Langenberger, Peter Driesz, Michael Brobst, Frederick Reichelsdorfer, John Wesner and George Kistler.

"Among the first persons confirmed were the following: in 1756, George Kistler, George Kunkel, Conrad Billman, Fr. Billig, Maria D. Fosselman; in 1757, George Fr. Braucher, George Brobst, Anna M. Grimm.

"A burying-ground is connected with the church.

"The first grave-stone bears date in 1760, and the second in 1762.

"The whole tract is still owned, excepting 1½ acres sold off to an adjoining owner of property.

1 Deed recorded in Recorder's office, Reading, in D. B. vol. vi., p. 321-322.
2 Published in Die Luthersche Zeitschrift, at Allentown, Pa., September 16, 1871, in German and translated by the author of this history.
3 The Moravians had a settlement near by in "Kistler's Valley," which must have included a considerable number. Upon Jonas Kistler's land there was a burying ground which was known as the "Moravian Burying-Ground."
"Beside the church record, the pastor (Schumacher) kept a private record with great care and exactness, in which he entered the baptisms and confirmations, with dates, names, etc., and this is now with the documents of the church. It contains the names of 1208 children baptized from 1754 till 1774, and their parents, and the names of 500 persons who were confirmed and admitted to membership. Among these names are many of the families who still reside in the vicinity and continue their connection with the church.

"From 1755 to 1769 the congregations were served by the Rev. Daniel Schumacher, a Lutheran minister who then lived at Weissenberg, between three and four miles from Allemangels, and in that time also served fifteen or sixteen other congregations in Berks and Northampton Counties; those in Berks having been Maxatawny (near Kutztown), Windsor, Green-

"In 1769 he withdrew from this church, moved a small distance away, and took with him a considerable number of his friends, where in 1770-71 a new 'Allemangels Kirche' was erected, formerly called Bethel Church, also the 'White Church.'

"In the beginning, and till 1808, the congregation was entirely Lutheran, excepting the privilege given to members of the Reformed denomination to worship in the church occasionally. Then a new church was encouraged, conjointly by Lutheran and Reformed members, with the understanding that the latter should enjoy equal privileges in the building, for church and school purposes and in the land for burying. The corner-stone was laid on 7th May, 1812, upon which occasion the Lutherans were represented by the Revs. J. Noske, H. Geissenhainer and J. Weinand, and the Reformed by Revs. Henry Dieffenbach and Jacob Dieffenbach.

"The dedication of the new church took place on 29-30 May, 1814. Revs. Noske and J. Heim officiated for the Lutheran members, and Revs. Henry Dieffenbach, Jacob Dieffenbach and Carl Hermann for the Reformed. The church of 1814 is still standing in a good state of preservation, and religious services are conducted there regularly and successfully. A school was conducted for many years in connection with the church."

The church is situated near the eastern line of the township, a short distance above Wessnersville. First known as the "Allemangels Kirche" and later as the "Albany Church," it has locally been designated as the "Red Church" on account of its roof having been painted that color. Its offspring, the church at Wessnersville, about the same time was designated as the "White Church," a title which still clings to it.

A centennial celebration was held at this church on Saturday and Sunday, the 2d and 3d days of September, 1871. The building was handsomely decorated with evergreens and flowers. The entire congregation, including many persons from distant parts who had been confirmed in this church, assembled to participate in the ceremony.

Various Lutheran preachers officiated here from 1770 to 1777, according to the handwriting in the church record, their names not having been mentioned. From 1777, for three years, the Rev. Friedrich Miller acted as pastor, and subsequently until 1810 the Rev. Daniel Lehmann. After Lehmann's death, Rev. John Knoske came from Orwigsburg (now in Schuylkill County), and served this church in connection with others situated in the vicinity extending to Kutztown, for twelve years, till the close of 1823. From 1824 until 1831 there were the Revs. Döring, Wartman and Pfalz, and in 1831, Rev. J. Roeller began to preach and continued faithfully for twenty-six years. His successors have been Revs. Leopold, S. S. Klein, L. Zuber, D. Trexler and H. S. Fegeley.

The Reformers pastors since 1812 have been Revs. Henry Dieffenbach, J. Zulich and A. J. Herman, the latter being in charge since 1856. The membership of each denomination then was about one hundred and fifty.

BIRTHS.—The New Jerusalem Cemetery contains a number of fine monuments erected by the Bachman, Trexler, Kistler and Fetherolf families.

BETHEL CHURCH.—Some years after the erection of the Albany Church, a movement was made for the erection of another church in the same township. This arose from a disturbance which existed in 1769, between certain members of the Albany Church and its pastor, the Rev. Daniel Schumacher, and which obliged him to withdraw. In leaving the church he carried a considerable number of sympathizing friends with him, and they together succeeded in organizing a second congregation and erecting a church a short distance to the south, which was dedicated May 20, 1774. It was named "Bethel Church." It is a log building, still standing, and is occupied by the sexton. At the time of its dedication it was declared a "union" church for the use of Lutheran and Reformed congregations.

The members were devoted to the interests of the church, and made a number of gifts. Christian Hechlcr presented a communion set; Jacob Bellerman, a baptismal font; Christian Braucher, a church record; John A. Manderbach, three pounds of money and a black altar-cloth; Susanna Norgang, a white worked altar-cloth; and Elias Ruthgen, a silk altar-cloth.

A new stone building was erected near by in 1840, to take the place of the old log building. The corner-stone was laid May 3d, and the church was dedicated on November 8th following. From its white appearance it took the name of the "White Church," to distinguish it from the "New Jerusalem Church," which was commonly known as the "Red Church," and it is still so called.

The Lutheran ministers have been Revs. Daniel Schumacher, Frederick Miller, J. Schaeffer, John S. Engel, G. F. J. Iaeger, Oliver Smith and since 1874 the Rev. B. S. Small; and the Reformed, Revs. Frederick T. Berger, Joseph S. Dubbs, Charles G. Herman, J. Sassaman Herman, John Zulich, Adam Schaeffer and, since 1872, the Rev. Benjamin Wise. Each congregation has about one hundred members.

NEW BETHEL CHURCH.—In the centre of Albany township, about five miles west of the Albany Church, another church was erected about 1750. It is stated that this building was erected in 1761. But in looking over the county records pertaining to the early roads of this township, I find that a church stood at that place in 1754, on a road described as beginning at Frederick Reichelderfer's and running by way of Martin Brobst's mill and the Lutheran Church to the Northampton County line. It is possible that a temporary church was first established there some time previous to 1754, and that the first permanent church was erected in 1761. Forty persons were interested in its erection, prominent among them having been Jacob Zettelmoyer, Simon Fries, Jacob Gerhart, Jacob Wade, Adam Levan and Ferdinand Ritter. Some of the persons resided in North-hampton (now Lehigh) County. In 1790 repairs were made to the building and thus it was used until 1853, when a new stone church was erected in its stead.

In 1883 the building was handsomely repaired and then (October) re-dedicated.

The membership of each denomination is about one hundred and fifty. The Lutheran minister is Rev. Oscar D. Miller; and the Reformed, Rev. J. N. Bachman.

The church school-house still stands, having become the property of the township after the adoption of the free-school system. In it private schools were successfully maintained many years. A grave-yard is part of the church property and contains some fine monuments.

ZION'S EVANGELICAL CHURCH is in the western part of Wessnersville. It is a neat frame building, on an acre of ground secured for church purposes, chiefly through the efforts of John P. Smith, for many years one of the most prominent members. It was dedicated in 1872 and its first minister was the Rev. W. Miller. The membership has always been small, the congregation being part of a circuit in Berks and Lehigh Counties. In 1885 the preachers in charge were the Revs. Weidner and Speicher.

SALEM EVANGELICAL CHURCH is situated in the northwestern part of the township, near the Blue Mountains, and included in the same circuit. It is a frame building and was erected in 1883.

VILLAGES.

WESSNERSVILLE is the largest village in Albany township. It has a very pleasant location on the high lands, three miles east from the Ontelaune. Kempton is its nearest railroad point. The place derives its name from Samuel and Nathan Wessner, who put up a number of substantial buildings in their endeavor to make this a business point. The large hotel was built by Samuel Wessner in 1858, and rebuilt by the present owner, Jeremiah Dunkle, in 1885. The first public-house was kept by Michael Shaeffer, prior to 1820, in a log house standing where is now the fine store of E. D. Kistler, which was put up in 1883. A store was kept there at an early day by Nathan Wessner. The first store in the locality was kept by Daniel Kistler, situated across the Lehigh line.

The post-office here bears the name of Stony Run. Solomon Fister was the first postmaster; William B. Kistler is at present in charge. In addition to the interests named, the village contains an Evangelical and Union Church, a number of shops, and a number of well-kept residences.

KEMPTON, the next place in point of size, is on the railroad, twenty-four miles from Reading. It is a station with good sidings and a fine Y track. An express-office is also maintained. The place is located on lands formerly owned by W. G. Kemp, hence its name. It dates its existence from 1874, and contains a fine grain warehouse, kept by M. C. Dietrich (for eleven years in business there), a post-office, established in 1881, some residences and a very fine hotel building. The latter was built by A. M. Metz in 1874. It is now the property of Adam Hipple.

TREXLER is a station nearly a mile above Kempton, and contains a warehouse, store, tannery and public-house, owned by Amos and N. D. Trexler, whose name the station bears. The former is postmaster of the office removed here from Fetherolfsville in 1874, when the name was changed to Trexler, and the hamlet called Fetherolfsville abandoned as a business point. The post-office there and the one at “Union Iron-Works,” also abandoned, were the oldest in the township. At the mill Abraham Long had an early store. Years ago a store was kept at Trexler by a Jew, in the old tavern building.

ALBANY STATION, below Kempton, though established by the railroad company in 1874, did not become a place of business until 1882, when William Heinly built a warehouse at that point. He has since transacted business in grain, lumber, coal and lime. The post-office is half a mile west, at what is called “Albany Centre,” established December, 1845. Long before, at that place Jacob Fusselman opened a public-house in a long building; the middle part was occupied as a residence, and the other as a store, kept by Godfried Zillich. In 1836 David Heinly became the owner of the property, and he was succeeded by his son David.

Lower down the Ontelaunee is another flag-station, called Greenewald, near which was an old-time inn kept by the Greenewald family, now kept by J. D. Fenstermacher. Stores were also at that point, at the Union Iron-Works and at other points, which were discontinued when trade was diverted by local circumstances. The slate quarries have afforded a trading point since their development. In 1876 the Mountain post-office was established at that point, and in 1882 Eckville post-office was created, farther west, with George W. Bolich postmaster.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

DAVID HEINLY is of German descent. His great-grandfather, David Heinly, was born in Germany, October 17, 1728, and on his emigration settled in Greenwich township, the date of this event being July 21, 1774. He resided upon a farm purchased of Thomas and John Penn. His four sons were David, George, John and Henry. His son Henry settled in Hamburg, John in Montour County, George occupied the homestead, and David, the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, located in Windsor township, Berks County. The death of the elder David Heinly occurred October 30, 1784. His son David was born June 27, 1765, and became a successful agriculturist. He married Mary Magdalene Dinter, of the same county, to whom were born children—George, Jacob, David, John, Samuel, Isaac, Henry, Sally (Mrs. Samuel Dietrich) and Polly (Mrs. Nathan Hoch.)

David Heinly, the father of the subject of this biographical sketch, was born in Windsor township, November 20, 1799, and followed his trade of a tanner until 1836, when he abandoned this vocation for the more attractive life of a farmer, settling upon the farm now owned by his son, David, in Albany township. In conjunction with this, he conducted both a saw-mill and a grist-mill. He married Rufina, daughter of Jacob Fusselman, of the same township, and had children—James, married to Sarah Grim; Charles, deceased; Julia, deceased; David,
Helena, deceased; Amelia (Mrs. G. W. Reagen), deceased; Kate (Mrs. C. P. Follweiler); William, married to Mary Jane Levan; Jacob, married to Mary Hagenbuch; Henry, married to Amanda Faust; Mary Magdalene, deceased. Mr. Heinly's death occurred August 20, 1863, and that of his wife in July, 1868. Their son David was born on the 31st of March, 1836, on the farm which is his present residence. Here, with the exception of a brief interval, his whole life has been passed. He received, in youth, instruction at private schools, and afterward enjoyed additional advantages at Camden, N. J. His services were given, until 1861, to his father, on the farm, after which date he engaged in mercantile pursuits in Albany township, and at the expiration of the second year returned to his father's home. In 1864 the farm became his by inheritance. He also opened a store, which, two years later, was sold to his brother, Mr. Heinly continuing to be the popular landlord of a hotel established by his grandfather, Fusselman, and for years kept by his father. He was, on the 28th of May, 1860 married to Amanda, daughter of Benjamin Levan, formerly county commissioner of Berks County. Their children are Elmira Josephine born April 16, 1861, deceased; Catherine Jane September 22, 1862, (Mrs. J. Neff); James Franklin, April 12, 1865; David Levan, December 20, 1871, deceased; Charles Benjamin, June 20, 1874. Mr. Heinly is, in politics an active Democrat. He was, in 1865, elect to the office of justice of the peace, which he filled continuously since that date. He was delegate to the State Convention in 1876, and from 1868 until 1881 held the commission postmaster of his locality. He was one of the projectors of the Berks and Lehigh Railroad and a member of its first board of directors. He was secretary of the Albany Mutual Fire Insurance Company, which he aided in organizing. He was formerly president, and is now a stockholder in the Steinsville Creamery.
Mr. Heinly, in 1867, opened a slate-quarry in Albany township (the second in the vicinity), known as the "Centennial Slate-Quarry," which he successfully operated for five years.

In his religious views Mr. Heinly is a Lutheran and a member of the German Lutheran Church of Albany township.

GREENWICH TOWNSHIP.

Before the erection of the county Greenwich township was a part of Albany township; but shortly after that time it was erected into a separate township. The name arose from Greenwich, a place in England, and it was doubtless suggested by the English settlers in this section of country. The boundaries could not be ascertained. The area is about fourteen thousand acres.

EARLY SETTLERS.—Henry Kohler was an early owner of a large tract of land in the southern part of the township, including the farm now owned by Adam Stein, where he built a stone house over a large spring. This building is still standing, being used as a warehouse for Stein’s distillery. Yost Henry George was another pioneer who made substantial improvements near by, some of which still remain. To the north Henry Smith (father of Samuel, Jonas and Benjamin Smith) improved a large tract of land, having been assisted in this work by his sons; and to the east the Grimm family took an important part in improving the township. These families have honored descendants still residing in the same vicinity.

In 1749 Peter Lenhart, of York County, received a patent for a tract of land which he conveyed to Jacob Lenhart in 1771. At what is now Lenhartsville, Henry Lenhart lived and also his sons John, Jacob, Samuel, Isaac, Henry, David and Frederick, most of whom had families of their own and resided in this locality. In the western part of the village one of their buildings remains, it having been put up in 1812. To the southeast, in the neighborhood of the church which bears their name, were the Dunkel family, whose descendants are found in all parts of the country and have become leading citizens; and north of them the Klines reared families, whose members may still be found in Reading and other points in Berks County. In the eastern part of the township the Christ family made a settlement which permanently fixed their name upon that locality.

TAXABLES of 1759.—The township had the following taxable in 1759. The tax then levied amounted to £35 15s., and Frederick Moser was the collector:

INDUSTRIES.—The township has always been well supplied with mills from the time of its early settlement. In March, 1755, a mill belonging to Peter Conrad was burned down by the Indians, who at the same time burned the house of Barnabas Seidel and killed the wife of Balsar Neyfong. The exact location of these events is not clearly remembered by the present inhabitants of the township. On the Sacoony, near its mouth, the Schneider family built or operated an early mill, and it was carried on later by Michael and Jacob Lesher. In 1862 Samuel Heinly rebuilt it, and later it became the property of Samuel Fegeley. On the same stream, above, was the mill of John Kremer, about 1800, later owned by David and Isaac Kemp, and which is now operated by William Heffner. Another mill was built farther up by Jacob Kurtz; and on Mill Creek, where is now the mill of Daniel Deitrich, was long the well-known mill of Kistler. It is a stone house in good condition. Stein's mill was owned at an early day by men named Kremer and Laab, and the present is the third building on that site. It was built in 1857 by Adam Stein.

Down the stream was a carding-mill carried on for a time by Jacob and Daniel Christ, but idle since 1875. The last site on Mill Creek was also used by the Christ family and others in the manufacture of gun-barrels and sickles. Guns of fine quality were made there prior to 1835 by John Wagenhorst. Above Stein's Michael Croll owned and carried on a small mill for a time.

At Grimsville the Croll family operated a distillery many years ago. Fruit liquors were also manufactured on numerous farms in the township. Stein's distillery, on the Kutztown road, is the best known industry of this kind in the township. It was begun in 1832 by Jacob Stein, and since 1846 it has been operated by Adam Stein. It is devoted to making pure rye whiskey. Near by is Stein's tavern, built in 1850 by Jacob Stein, and still continued as an inn. Farther down the road was the inn of Anthony Lee, long since closed, as has also been the public-house, north of Grimsville, kept about 1810 by the Billios family, and where Noah Seib was the host. Near Klinesville is still a country inn, kept by Charles Bleicher. In 1816 Peter Leiby was licensed to distill liquor in a still of seventy-three gallons' capacity, at eighteen cents per gallon.

At the centres made by these mills and taverns there were usually small tanneries and other industries. Of these, Jacob and Peter Grim had atannery on the Henry Grenewald place, which had an unusually good reputation for producing fine leather. The pottery at Lehnartsville was carried on about thirty years, but not since 1870. Common ware only was made. Above this village, where are the most important interests, on a stream flowing into the Ontelaunea, John Lenhart had a pioneer mill, which was afterward operated by Benjamin Lenhart. The new mill built in 1876 is the property of Daniel Grim. On the Ontelaunea, a short distance below Lehnartsville, George Merkel built a stone mill, which was burned down in 1875. It was rebuilt by the Merkel estate, and remodeled in 1885 by the present owner, Jacob K. Spang. The mill has been supplied with a set of rollers and other modern machinery, enabling the production of twenty-five barrels of superior flour per day.

Near this mill Nicholas Isager (Hunter) had a small forge at a very early day, and which was operated by Samuel V. R. Hunter until 1833, when George Merkel became the owner. He carried on the works until his death, in 1875. It was he who, in 1854, built the charcoal furnace known among iron men as "Maiden-creek Charcoal Furnace," and about the same time discontinued working the forge. In 1878 Jacob K. Spang, Samuel Erb and Joshua Hunsicker assumed charge of the works, under the firm-name of Spang, Erb & Co., and carried them on until January, 1882, when Jacob K. Spang became the sole owner. For the past year it has been out of blast. The capacity of the furnace is about forty tons per week, and the ore used is from the Moselem Mines, distant seven miles. The furnace is well located, with convenient sidings from the Berks County Railroad, and includes two hundred and seventy-five acres of land, a mansion and store, mill, barns and eleven tenement-houses.

CHURCHES.

NEW JERUSALEM CHURCH, (Reformed
AND LUTHERAN).—As early as 1744 a Reformed congregation (known as the High Dutch) was organized in the southwestern part of the township, to which Conrad Koch presented two acres of land upon which to erect a house of worship. A log house was built and used for church purposes until 1790, when forty acres more were secured and a new building, also of logs, built by the joint efforts of the Lutherans and the German Reformed people. This union of interests was effected August 29, 1790, and since that time the property, locally known as the "Dunkel Church," has been mutually controlled by the two congregations.\(^1\)

The church was repaired and again dedicated October 6, 1824, and in that condition was used for over thirty years. On the 12th of June, 1859, the corner-stone of the present edifice was laid, and the church was dedicated November 13, 1859. It is a neat brick building, with a capacity for eight hundred persons.

Each congregation has about two hundred members. The first Reformed minister was the Rev. Jacob Weimer. He left this part of the county in 1770, and was succeeded by Conrad Steiner, Jr. (who served as the school-teacher until that time). He preached until 1775, after which the congregation had no regular minister until 1790.

These then agreed upon rules for mutual regulation of church affairs.

From 1790 the Reformed pastors have been Revs. Henry Hertzol, Henry Dieffenbach, Carl G. Herman, Augustus Herman, J. Sassaman Herman and others. Since 1872, Rev. Benjamin Wise has been the minister.

The Lutheran congregation had as its first pastor the Rev. Daniel Lehman, and his successors were the Revs. John Knoeske, Fred. Engel, Gottlieb G. J. Jaeger, and since 1874 the Rev. B. S. Small.

BETHEL CHURCH is located at Grimsville and has for the past sixty-odd years been the joint property of Lutheran and German Reformed congregations. The organization of the former was made as early as 1761, when members of the Croll, Slenker, Grim, Gruber, Kohler, Dietrich, Gerringer and Bennehoff families united for that purpose and established worship in a small log church. This was torn down in 1803 and a new stone church then erected. This was improved in 1822. At that time the German Reformed congregation secured a half-interest in the church property and assisted in erecting the new building. In 1881 the building was thoroughly remodeled and supplied with a spire, making it not only more substantial, but a very inviting place of worship.

The Lutheran congregation has about four hundred members and the Reformed about half that number. The latter are under the pastoral care of the Rev. J. Sassaman Herman, who had as a predecessor his father, the Rev. Augustus Herman. The Rev. Schaeffer was the first pastor.

The Rev. Schumacher was the first Lutheran pastor. He was succeeded by Rev. John Knoeske. From 1821 until his death, in 1874, the venerable Rev. G. F. J. Jaeger was the pastor. He was succeeded by Rev. B. S. Small, the present minister, a native of Montgomery County.

FRIEDENS CHURCH (Lutheran and Reformed) is situated at Lenhartsville. It is a brick structure, plainly built, with a capacity for about four hundred persons. Connected with the church is a grave-yard. The building was erected in 1856 by a number of members of both congregations, who withdrew from the "Dunkel Church" for that purpose.
Lutherans have had as pastors Revs. Iaeger, F. K. Hunsicker, B. S. Smoll and since 1881 D. D. Trexler (there are about one hundred and eighty members); and the Reformed, Revs. J. S. Herman, R. S. Appel, B. Wise and the present pastor, Rev. Mr. Keiser. Its members number one hundred.

VILLAGES.

LENHARTSVILLE.—This is the chief village of the township. It is situated on both sides of the Ontelaune, on the Allentown State road, five miles east of Hamburg. It comprises about fifty buildings and the usual interests connected with a country place. Its name is derived from the Lenhart family, original owners of the land and the first to engage in business there. Its growth was slow and uneventful until after the erection of the Maiden-creek Furnace, on the east side of the creek; then other improvements were made. The Berks County Railroad stimulated the growth of the place when it made Lenhartsville a station.

One of the first houses was put up by a man named Eisenhour in the western portion of the village. In it John and Samuel Lenhart kept an inn. It stood on the site of the present Washington House and was opened in 1842 by Benneville Lesher, the first postmaster. The Farmers and Drovers' House was built in 1856 by William Rees.

James Fenstermacher had the first store on the west side in a building, which was last occupied for trading purposes, in 1883, by James W. Kerschner. In another building Francis B. Levan has had a store since 1881.

At the forge and furnace the several owners had stores, among them being Jacob, George and Horatio Merkel, Samuel Kauffman and the present, S. R. Smith. The building is now owned by Jacob K. Spang. At the same place the Lenhartsville post-office has been kept since 1881 by John G. Bast.

Before 1850 Dr. Saylor was located at Lenhartsville. Then came Drs. Appel and Poteiger. Since 1870 Dr. Jonathan K. Seaman has been the physician.

KLINESVILLE is the next hamlet east, on the State road, at its junction with the Kutztown road, two miles from Lenhartsville. It owes its existence to Peter Kline, land-owner, who put up a large log building in the last century, and kept an inn and a store. The store was largely patronized, and as the property of his son and grandson of the same name, it always maintained a good reputation. Peter Krause became the owner in 1876.

The large stone house, almost opposite, was built by Peter Kline (second), who carried on a store there. Charles H. Deitrich now occupies it, and he is postmaster of the Klinesville office. The place contains also the usual mechanics' shops. Near by, Peter Fister carried on a small distillery, which has long since been abandoned.

KRUMVILLE is the next hamlet, eastward on the State road leading to Allentown. Until recently it was known as Smithville, after Reuben Smith, who built the tavern and around which other buildings followed. The store was first kept by Henry and Michael Croll. In 1885 Mrs. Wilson P. Krum became the owner of most of the Smith property. Then a post-office was established there, named "Krumville," and the place has since been so called.

GRIMSVILLE, near the eastern line of the township, has a store, post-office, inn, steam tannery, church and several shops and residences. The first improvements were made by Michael Croll, consisting of a public-house. Owing to its location on the State road, about ten miles from Hamburg, the place has been well patronized, especially before the days of railroads, when droves of cattle were almost daily driven over that prominent highway. Daniel Grim put up the present brick inn more than fifty years ago and carried on the store and tannery. The hamlet took its name after him. The tannery is well appointed and operated by Daniel P. Grim, of Kutztown.

DREIBELBIS is a flag-station on the Berks County Railroad, a few miles below Lenhartsville. Mills have been carried on by water-power at that point (grist, saw, and oil mills). The first mill was erected by the Sunday family in the Revolutionary period. The mills (grist and saw) are owned and operated by Venus Deitrich. Manassas Dreibelbis and Gottlieb Kerschner owned them for many years.
Adam Stein.—During the year 1742 Jacob Stein and his wife emigrated from Germany to America. Their son Heinrich was born while on the passage. Upon landing in this country they proceeded to Berks County, took up a large tract of land in Richmond township and began to cultivate it. Other children born to them were Michael, Peter, Jacob and John. John was married to Maria Berk and their children were named Jacob, Elizabeth, Peter, Daniel, Hannah, Benjamin, Solomon and Hetty. John Stein died about 1835, at an advanced age. Jacob was born in 1791, and married Sarah Sunday. Their children were Solomon, Adam, Nathan, Annie (married William Schaeffer), Lavinia (married Daniel Deisher), Lucinda (married Henry K. Siegfried), Jacob and Henry, all born in Greenwich township. Jacob Stein was engaged in farming and distilling, and did an extensive business. He owned over five hundred acres of land, which he divided into five farms and built substantial farm buildings, and he also built a school-house for the township near his home. He died in May, 1872, aged eighty-one years. His wife died in February, 1846. Adam Stein, born December 18, 1819, attended the schools of the neighborhood and at the same time worked for his father on the farm and in the distillery. At the time of his marriage, in 1846, his father sold him a farm. The distillery lay idle from this time until 1872, when Adam began the distilling of a fine grade of rye and apple whiskies. These goods have attained a wide and excellent reputation, and his double copper distilled hand-made productions are extensively used.

Mr. Stein has taken great interest in the cause of education. When the Keystone State Normal School was originated, in 1866, he gave liberal encouragement and support. He was elected one of the first trustees of the institution and continued to fill the position until 1877.
Since 1864 Mr. Stein has been a member of the F. and A. M. The faithful wife and loving mother died in November, 1882. Mr. and Mrs. Stein joined the Reformed Church at Grimsville at an early age and he is still a consistent member.

Colonel Daniel B. Gris, is the son of Jonathan Gris, whose father emigrated from Alsace, Germany. The former married Catherine H. Bertolott and resided in Maxatawny.

Emma Kisler, by whom he has had three children: Isaac B., married to Deliah Schwab; he has two children (they live on the homestead); Sally Ann, married William Adam; and died in 1870, leaving Lewis Adam, married to Sally Anna; they have two children and are now in Kutztown; Mahala, also married William Dietrich, and have four children (she died, 1881); and Lorenzo Adam, died September, 1880, aged twenty-two years.
He has been a member of the School Board of the township in which he lives for twelve years, and was president three years and treasurer three years. In 1864 he was elected county commissioner and during his term of three years was instrumental in erecting ten county bridges, and the extension of the Berks County Prison at Reading. He was married, March 22, 1846, to Florinda Bieber. Their children are William B., now living at Kutztown, married to Emma Kisler, by whom he has had three children; Isaac B., married to Delilah Sechler, by whom he has two children (they live on the homestead); Sally Ann, married William D. Dietrich; and died in 1870, leaving one son; Lewis Adam, married to Sally Ann Miller (they have two children and are now living at Kutztown; Malara also married William D. Dietrich, and have four children (she died November, 1881); and Lenora Amanda, who died September, 1880, aged twenty-two years.

Since 1864 Mr. Stein has been a member of the F. and A. M. The faithful wife and loving mother died in November, 1882. Mr. and Mrs. Stein joined the Reformed Church at Grimsville at an early day and he is still a consistent member.

Colonel Daniel B. Grim, is the son of Jonathan Grim, whose father emigrated from Alsace, Germany. The former married Catherine H. Bertolett and resided in Maxatawny township, Berks County. Their only son, Daniel B., is the subject of this biographical sketch. He married, a second time, Elizabeth Snyder, and had children,—Joshua, Jonathan and Mary (Mrs. Faber). Daniel B. was born on the 17th of July, 1800, in Maxatawny township, and after a common-school education received in New Jersey and elsewhere, entered the tannery of his father for the purpose of becoming master of the trade of a tanner and currier. He continued to follow this trade, and in 1824 purchased the property, together with a distillery and farm adjacent to it, and conducted the business at Grimsville, Berks County, Pa. He was, in 1819, married to Elizabeth, daughter of Abraham Krause, of Skippackville, Montgomery County. Their children are Mary (deceased), Jonathan K., Daniel P., Charles A. K., Catherine (Mrs. William Stetler), Amelia (Mrs. William Breinig), Charlotte (deceased), Susan (Mrs. Charles Dietrich) and Sarah. Daniel P. is engaged in the tanning business at Grimsville, Greenwich township; Jonathan K. is a wholesale grocer at Reading; and Charles A. K. is a farmer at Topton, Maxatawny township. Mr. Grim, after his marriage, engaged in various business pursuits and brought to bear in each his accustomed sagacity and energy. He was much interested in the cause of education and one of the first to support the public schools of the township when they received great opposition from citizens and tax-payers. In all efforts to advance the interests of the community he was a leading spirit. In politics he was an Old-Line Whig. In early life he gave much attention to military matters, and held a commission as colonel in the State militia. He died March 6, 1883. His wife died November 24, 1882.

TULPEHOCKEN SECTION.

Tulpehocken section comprises the upper western portion of the county. It takes its name from the large stream which drains three-fourths of its territory. The name is an Indian word, which signifies “Land of Turtles.”

STREAMS.—Nature could not have marked out a course for this stream which would have been better adapted to the territory in point of locality. It rises in Lebanon County, a short distance west of Myerstown, and enters this section very nearly at the central point of its western line; thence it flows northeastwardly about thirteen miles to a point near Bernville, where a branch, the Northkill, has its outlet, and thence southeastwardly the same distance to the Schuylkill. It flows through the central portion of Marion to the eastern border, and thence it forms the boundary line between Marion on the east and Heidelberg on the west, Heidelberg North on the north and Jefferson on the south, and Penn on the southwest, and Heidelberg Lower and Spring on the north, and Bern on the south. Its importance in this particular was naturally appreciated when the territory was subdivided. The Northkill, a branch, flows southwardly from the Blue Mountain, a length of ten miles, and forms the boundary line between Penn and Bern Upper on the west, and Jefferson and Tulpehocken Upper on the east.

Through the northwestern portion the little Swatara flows from the Blue Mountain into Lebanon County a length of fourteen miles, and forms the boundary line between Bethel on the south and east, Tulpehocken on the north and Tulpehocken Upper on the west. This section is thus admirably subdivided by the streams named into four subdivisions, each of which was a township by itself when the county was erected.

The principal branches of the Tulpehocken are the following: Three flowing into it from the north—Mill, Northkill and Plum. Northkill derives its name from its locality, and Plum Creek from the numerous wild plum trees which grew along its banks; and two flowing into it from the south—Spring (which rises in a large crystal spring near Robesonia) and Cacoosing. The length of the Tulpehocken and these branches is about seventy-five miles. It is the longest stream in the county. The eastern portion of the section is drained principally by the Irish Creek (eight miles long) and Mill Creek (six miles long) into the Schuylkill. The total length of all the streams in the district is over one hundred miles.

The Blue Mountain forms the northern boundary line. In the interior part there is a considerable area of elevated land, which consists of rolling hills covered with woods. “Seull’s Hill” is the only portion worthy of special mention. It extends from Centre, through Penn into Jefferson, a length of about ten miles.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.—This district is intersected by numerous roads. There are three which are especially prominent. The “Berks and Dauphin Turnpike,” which extends westwardly from Reading via Sinking Spring, through Heidelberg Lower, Heidelberg and Marion, to the county line, a length of thirteen\(^1\) miles. This comprises the bed of the "Old Tulpehocken Road" which was petitioned for and laid out in 1727. Subsequently this road to Middletown (Womelsdorf) and thence northwardly via Godfrey Roebrrer's, through Tulpehocken and Bethel, across the Blue Mountain and along the Mahanoy Creek to the Susquehanna, was established by an act of Assembly.

The "State Road" extends across the upper portion several miles south of the Blue Mountain from Lebanon County line to the Schuylkill at Hamburg, a length of twenty-two miles. And the "Bernville Road" extends northwardly from Reading via Bernville to Millersburg, in Bethel, a length of twenty-three miles.

The Union Canal extends through the section along the upper bank of the Tulpehocken Creek from a point in Bern about a mile and a quarter above the mouth of the creek to the county line, a length of about twenty-five miles.

The Lebanon Valley Railroad extends westwardly from Reading via Sinking Spring, through Heidelberg Lower, Heidelberg and the lower corner of Marion to county line, a distance of ten\(^1\) miles.

Before 1729 the whole section was known as Tulpehocken. At the time of the erection of the county, in 1752, it comprised four townships—Tulpehocken, Heidelberg, Bern and Bethel. Subsequently eight townships were erected by subdivision—Bern Upper, Tulpehocken Upper, Penn, Centre, Heidelberg Lower, Marion, Heidelberg North and Jefferson.

TULPEHOCKEN TOWNSHIP.

Erection of Township.—The township of Tulpehocken was a recognized d'strict of territory before 1729, when it became part of Lancaster County. It was organized whilst a portion of Chester County. Then it extended from the Schuylkill River on the east to Lebanon township (doubtless limited by the stream called Little Swatara) on the west, and from the Blue Mountain on the north to the Cacoosing Creek (possibly Wyomissing Creek) on the south. I could not find any order of court in either Chester or Lancaster Counties establishing the boundary line of the township. The name of the township was taken from the stream.

In July, 1707, a French Indian trader named Nicole was arrested by order of the Governor, on account of great complaints against him at a village called Peixtan, on the Susquehanna, and taken by way of Tulpehocken and Manatawny to Philadelphia. Nicole was mounted upon a horse with his legs tied under the horse's belly. This is the earliest mention of these names in the colonial records.\(^3\)

When Lancaster County was erected the Indians still claimed this territory as a part of their possessions. In 1718 they had released their rights to a large district to Penn, but the upper boundary was the Lechay Hills (South Mountain). Immigration was, however, carried forward with such energy that the immigrants extended their movements and settlements beyond the limit of Penn's purchase. The first settlement was effected by certain Germans, about 1723. The Indians observed this trespass upon their lands, but made no complaint. Five years afterward another colony of Germans entered. The Indians then (June 5, 1728), carried information of these trespasses to Philadelphia, and laid it before the Provincial Council.

In June, 1728, Sassoonan, with certain Indians, visited Philadelphia and held a conference with the Lieutenant-Governor and the Executive Council, in the presence of a vast audience that filled the house and all its galleries—this being in reference to the extent of lands sold and released in 1718. The Indians thought that the settlers beyond the Lechay Hills along the Tulpehocken were trespassers, and it was admitted that the Tulpehocken lands lay beyond the release of 1718. Sassoonan said he could not himself believe the Christians had settled on them till he came and with his own eyes saw the houses and fields they had made there. Logan said that he was sensible the Palatines were settled there, but without the consent or knowledge of the commissioners; and he then explained how they came hither, and read the following petition, which the Palatines had addressed to the Governor and Council, in the handwriting of the Governor's secretary. It was as follows:

"The petition of us, the subscribers, being thirty-three families in number,—at present inhabiting Tulpahaca creek,—humbly sheweth,—

"That your petitioners, being natives of Germany, about fifteen years ago, were by the great goodness and royal bounty of her late majesty, Queen Anne, relieved from the hardships which they then suffered in Europe, and were transported into the colony of New York, where they settled. But their families increasing, and being in that government confined to the scanty allowance of ten acres of land to each family, wherein they could not well subsist, your petitioners, being informed of the kind reception which their countrymen usually met with in the Province of Pennsylvania, and hoping they might, with what substance they had, acquire larger settlements in that province, did last year leave their settlements in New York government and came with their families into this province, where, upon their arrival, they applied themselves to his excellency, the Governor, who of his great goodness permitted them to inhabit upon Tulpahaca creek (being the farthest inhabited part of the province northwest from Philadelphia) on condition that they should make full satisfaction to the proprietor or his agents for such lands as should be allotted them when they were ready to receive the same. And now your petitioners, understanding that some gentlemen, agents of the proprietor, have ample powers to dispose of lands in this province, and we, your petitioners, being willing and ready to purchase, do humbly beseech your excellency and council to recommend us to the favorable usage of the proprietor’s agent, that upon paying the usual prices for lands at such distance from Philadelphia, we may have sufficient rights and titles made to us for such lands as we shall have occasion to buy, that our children may have some settlement to depend on hereafter, and that by your authority we may be freed from the demands of the Indians of that part of the country, who pretend a right thereto. And we humbly beg leave to inform your excellency and council that there are fifty families more who, if they may be admitted upon the same conditions, are desirous to come and settle with us. We hope for your favorable answer to this, our humble request, and as in duty bound, shall ever pray, etc." 1

It was hoped that this explanation would be satisfactory. The Indians had complained and they were answered; and they were asked not to offer the settlers any violence, but to wait till such time as the matter could be adjusted. This proceeding, however, could not stop immigration into this territory. The Germans continued to enter and take up and improve the land. Finally, in 1732, the Indians sold the lands in the entire valley and removed beyond the Blue Mountain.

The following interesting details about these German first settlers in the Tulepocken Valley are submitted in this connection:

"Of the large number of Germans who went to England in 1708 and 1709, 10,000 died for want of sustenance, medical attendance &c., and 7000 returned to their native country, after having suffered great privations, half naked and in great despondency. Some of the survivors were transported to English Colonies in America. Ten sails of vessels were freighted with upward of 4000 Germans for New York. They embarked 25th December 1709, and arrived at New York June 14, 1710. On the inward passage, and immediately upon landing, 1700 died. The survivors encamped in tents—which they had brought with them—on Nutting [now Governor’s] Island. Here they remained until late in autumn, when about 1400 removed to Livingston Manor, 100 miles up the Hudson River.

"Those who settled on the Hudson River were under indenture to serve Queen Anne, as grateful subjects, to manufacture tar and raise hemp, in order to repay the expenses of their transportation and cost of subsistence to the amount of £10,000, which had been advanced by Parliamentary grant. This experiment proved a complete failure.

The Germans, having been unjustly oppressed, became dissatisfied with their treatment and situation. Governor Hunter resorted to violent measures to secure obedience to his demands, without success. One hundred and fifty families left late in the autumn of 1712—to escape the certainty of starving—for Schoharie Valley, some 60 miles northwest of Livingston Manor. They had no open road; no horses to carry or haul their baggage—this they loaded on rudely constructed sleds, which they tugged themselves through a three feet deep snow; their way was through an unbroken forest. It took them three full weeks. At Schoharie they improved the lands which Queen Anne had granted to them. They remained about ten years; then, owing to some defect in their titles, they were deprived of lands and improvements. In the spring of 1728 thirty-three families removed to Pennsylvania, and settled in Tulepocken, some fifteen miles west of the Schuykill River. 2

"Among these families there were the following: 3

Johannes Lantz.
Sebastian Pisas.
George Rieth.
Peter Rieth.

In 1728 other families left Schoharie, and settled here also. Among these there were:

Leonard Ansphach.
Georg Zeh.
Johan Jacob Holsteiner.
Andreas Kapp.
Johan Philip Schneider.
Jacob Löwengut.
Philip Theis.

George Schmidt.

In 1729, Conrad Weiser left Schoharie with his wife and five children [Philip, Fred'k, Anna, Madilina and Maria] and settled near the present site of Womelsdorf, one mile east of the town.

There was a Lutheran Church in this district as early as 1727; for in September, 1727, a petition was presented to the Court of Quarter Sessions, at Philadelphia, asking for a road to be laid out from the Lutheran meeting house at Tulpehocken Creek to the high road at the Quaker meeting house, near the mill of George Boone, in Oley. Viewers were then appointed, but they laid out the road only to the Schuylkill River.

In 1731, John Peter Miller became the pastor of the Reformed Church at Tulpehocken, and he preached to the Reformed people of this place for four years. [Dubbs' "History Man'l of Reformed Church," p. 176.]

During that time Conrad Beissel, a leader of the "German Baptists," visited Miller, who received him as an Angel of the Lord, was immersed and became a member of the brotherhood. Beissel made other converts here; among them was Conrad Weiser and three elders of the Reformed Church. But Weiser soon disagreed with this denomination and withdrew from them. Miller lived for a time as a hermit in Tulpehocken and then became the most active member of this fraternity. [Dubbs' "History Refd. Ch.", p. 184.]

MANOR OF PLUMTON.—The proprietaries of Pennsylvania, on the 17th of September, 1735, by letters patent, granted and conveyed to John Page a large tract of land, situated in the township of Tulpehocken, which contained 5165 acres, and they erected the same into a "Manor," adding and providing in said patent: "And the said proprietaries do erect the said described tract of land into a Manor, and name it the Manor of Plumton, and they do further give and grant to the said John Page, and to his heirs and assigns, full power and authority to erect and constitute within said manor a COURT BARON with all things whatsoever which to a Court Baron do belong."

Two of the adjoining land-owners were William Allen and Guelielma (Wilhelmina) Maria Fell. Most of the land surrounding was described as vacant.

In 1743, Page's attorney-in-fact conveyed a part of this manor, 3474 acres, including the privileges of the Court Baron, to Conrad Weiser, Esq. The manor was not held together, and the Court Baron was not established. The entire area was sold off to sundry settlers in Tulpehocken and Heidelberg townships.

In this township a manor was set apart for the use of the proprietaries, containing over two thousand acres. It was called "Tulpehocken Manor." But I could not ascertain any definite information respecting it.

TAXABLES OF 1759.—The following list comprised the taxables of the township in 1759. Michael Forrer was the collector of taxes. The tax levied amounted to £143 5s. 6d. The township then included all the territory bounded on the north by Blue Mountain, on the east by the Northkill, on the southwest by the Tulpehocken, on the northwest by the Little Swatara, and on the southwest by the boundary line of Lancaster County. Subsequently three other townships were formed out of portions of this territory, namely: Tulpehocken Upper in 1820, Marion in 1843, and Jefferson in 1851. The list including the taxables for all this territory, no separate lists will be added for the three townships named.

See Marion Township—"Churches."

He came to America in 1750 under the auspices of the church authorities of Heidelberg.

2 Tract extended across Tulpehocken Creek into Heidelberg township. It was surveyed in 1734.
3 The draft of this manor is with the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, in book entitled "Berks County."
NEW TOWNSHIP REFUSED.—In November, 1844, a petition signed by one hundred and thirty subscribers was presented to court praying for the erection of a new township out of parts of Tulpehocken, Upper Tulpehocken and Marion townships; and Matthias S. Richards, Samuel Baird and Samuel S. Jackson were appointed commissioners to make the necessary investigations, etc. These commissioners recommended the erection of the new township—“being satisfied that the late practice of subdividing large townships, and the convenience caused thereby for township transactions and the better attention to the keeping of roads, etc., in repair, has received general favor from experience,” and suggested as a proper name—“South Tulpehocken.” Their report was filed January 9, 1845, and confirmed nisi. But earnest exceptions were filed against the proposed and recommended new township; one remonstrance setting forth that the district, as laid out, “contains only about 110 taxable inhabitants—it is seven miles long and the widest part from one and a half to two miles broad,—and it will be inconvenient and burdensome to your petitioners and it will only gratify a few self-interested individuals.” An act of Assembly was passed on the 19th of February, 1845, requiring the question of this proposed township to be submitted to a vote of the taxable inhabitants of the three townships; but at an election held on the 21st day of March, 1845, the question was decided in the negative;1 and the court accordingly refused the application.

...

CHURCHES.

Host Church is in the southeastern part of the township. It derives its name from a family which formerly resided in that locality. As early as 1745 a congregation of the German Reformed Church had an existence there and worshipped in a log meeting-house, put up for the use of the congregation. Here they received the ministrations of the Rev. D. Bartholomae, in 1747, and of the Revs. H. W. Stoy, William Otterbein, John Waldschmidt and John Jacob Zufall, preaching at irregular periods, until 1769, when the Rev. Wm. Hendel entered upon a pastorate which continued thirteen years. In 1775 his labors resulted in giving the congregation a permanent organization, which has been continued until this day. It was determined to build a new church and a committee was selected to take this work in hand. The church as they built it was used about fifty years;

but, in 1832, the brick floor was removed, and a floor of boards put in its place; and other changes were also made in the house to bring it up to the requirements of that day. This work was done by George See at seventy-five cents per day and board. Twenty years later, in 1852, a steeple was put on the church and a bell of six hundred and thirty-four pounds weight placed in the same. In this condition the church was used three decades longer. On October 4, 1884, it was decided to enlarge the building by the addition of seventeen feet to its length, to cover it with slate and to renovate it internally. The cornerstone was laid May 17, 1885, and the completed building reconsecrated September 20, 1885, giving to the congregation one of the finest country churches in the county. The following ministers officiated: Wm. Hendel, Frederick Herman, Thomas H. Leinbach (1833–51), Jacob D. Zehring (1851–64), George Wolf and C. H. Leinbach.

Rev. Thomas C. Leinbach became the pastor in 1866 and he has been continued until now. In 1885 the congregation numbered three hundred and fifty members.2

After being exclusively a Reformed Church about one hundred years, a congregation of Lutherans began holding regular meetings here March 12, 1865, with the Rev. Aaron Finfrock as pastor, who has since served it with acceptance. In 1885 a membership of one hundred and seventy-five was reported. By agreement the congregation has a voice in the temporal affairs of the church, which is now practically a “union church.”

Rehersensburg Lutheran Church.—In 1765 Henry Holtzman granted to Trustees Christian Moyer, Ulrich Fisher, Jacob Reed and Thomas Kurr two and a half acres of ground for church purposes. This lot was enlarged by the addition of sixty rods more by Sebastian Brosius, and one hundred and thirty-eight rods by Godfrey Roehrer. In 1786 the latter donated four acres more; and other additions were made at later periods, until, at present, the church lot contains about thirteen acres of ground. Upon part of this lot there was built, in 1765, a two-story meeting house of logs, which was used as a place of worship until 1808, when the present meeting-house was built. It is a large stone edifice of substantial masonry. In 1849 the first steeple was placed on the church, which was removed in 1882 and another constructed in its stead. The latter contains a fine bell. The cemetery is large and finely kept. The membership of the church is large, numbering about five hundred and sixty. The pastor is Rev. A. J. Long, resident minister at the Tulpehocken Lutheran Church, at Stouchsburg. In the main these two churches have had the same ministers.

About thirty years after the church was built a parochial school was established, in a building put up for that purpose, upon the church grounds. This house was of logs, two-story, and was afterwards used as the public school-house until 1882, when a new school-house was erected. The early schools taught in it were excellent. Peter Walborn was a superior teacher. He taught about thirty years. Jacob Klune was the last teacher of the parish school, and the instruction generally imparted there was in the German language.

The first English school was taught in a private house, about 1820, by a Mr. Embich. Later a building was provided for English schools near the old church, in which James Allen, Jacob Rehm and others taught.

The public schools of Rehersburg form four grades, and are taught in a large frame building put up in 1882. The old school-house has been demolished. The old log church was torn down about 1810 and the material used for a residence near the centre of the village.

ST. JOHN'S UNION CHURCH (REFORMED AND LUTHERAN) is in the eastern part of Rehersburg and was built in 1847. The edifice is a neat brick structure and has attractive surroundings; the lot is enclosed with a fine iron fence. It embraces also a well-kept burial-ground, on which are some neat monuments. This church was built by members withdrawing from the old church at Rehersburg, on account of the difficulty of making arrangements whereby both congregations could have mutual interests. The membership was at first small, but in 1885 the Reformed congregation reported one hundred and thirty and the Lutherans not quite so many. The latter had the Rev. Daniel D. Trexler as pastor, and previously Revs. H. Y. Grahn, Rees and Rev. Thomas Læger. The Reformed congregation had as its minister, since February, 1884, the Rev. L. D. Stambaugh. Those who preceded him were the Revs. Steckle, Wolf, Schwartz and Miesse.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH OF THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION is located near the centre of the township, close by the old Livingood mills. The church was built in 1852 and is of brick, with a small steeple and bell. Its capacity is a few hundred. The early members belonged to the Livingood and Burns families and were but few in number. There having been few accessions, the congregation is weak numerically. The ministerial service is from Myerstown, in Lebanon County, with which place this appointment is united in forming a circuit.

TRINITY CHURCH.—This house of worship belongs to the United Brethren and was built in 1848, but remodeled and improved in 1885. The building is a plain frame, but ample for the wants of the congregation worshipping there, which numbered in 1885 but fifty members. The appointment was served in connection with churches in Lebanon County, forming a circuit, and the pastor was the Rev. J. P. Smith. A small graveyard is connected with the building.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH (LUTHERAN AND REFORMED), is located on a commanding site in Mt. Ema. It was built in 1883. It is a neat brick structure, forty-two by sixty-one feet, with steeple and bell, and cost over four thousand dollars. The building committee having the work in charge was W. A. Klick, J. Stamm, J. Bricker and P. M. Forrer. This is the second house which occupies the lot. The first was built in 1846 by John Fisher, J. Statzman and J. Goldman, in order to afford a more convenient place of worship for the people of that locality, and the site selected was the acre of ground set aside for church and school purposes by the proprietor of the town-site. The greater part of this was set aside for burial purposes. The cemetery provided is well kept, and contains some neat monuments.

In 1885 the Lutheran congregation had about sixty members and the Rev. F. J. F. Schantz as pastor. At the same time the Reformed congregation had one hundred members and the pastor was the Rev. L. D. Stambaugh. Each congregation supports a Sunday-school and Bible class.

Brethren Meeting-House.—In the northern part of the township, in what is known as the Ziegler neighborhood, there is a frame meeting-house belonging to the Brethren, or Dunkards. It was built about fifteen years ago and replaced a smaller brick house which had been built about fifteen years previously. The congregation occupying it is large and flourishing, a large number of members coming from other townships, chiefly from Bethel. The meetings held alternate with those in the Bethel Churches.

VILLAGES.

Rehrersburg.—The town plan of Rehrersburg was laid out by Jacob Rehrer, about the year 1803. It was acknowledged by him on the 4th of April, 1803, and recorded. The plan included ninety-four lots, which were arranged along the thoroughfare.

The main street was named “Gottfried,” the principal cross-street, “Jacob;” the next cross-streets, to the west, “Magdalen” and “Rehrer;” and to the east, “Maria” and “Brown.” The “square” in the centre of the town is seventy by four hundred and ten feet. Width of streets—main, fifty feet; cross, forty feet. The lots in the “square” are sixty by two hundred and forty-six feet; the others on Gottfried Street, sixty by two hundred and seventy feet. On the back of the plan the proprietor made the following provision, written in German: “This plan has three classes in price and are as follows: In the first class the tickets are twenty dollars, and a half-dollar ground rent each year; in the second, fifteen dollars and one dollar ground rent each year; in the third, ten dollars and one dollar and a half ground rent each year.”

The lots were disposed of by lottery. One of the first lots was sold in 1803 to Michael Tryon. Dr. John Tryon, his son, has occupied this lot and the dwelling thereon for many years.

Subsequently, in 1819, Mr. Rehrer laid out fifty-three additional lots on the north of the town.

In 1825, Thomas Kurr was the proprietor of the ground rent, the total amount of which was then stated to be seventy-seven dollars and eighty-five cents.

The deeds from Rehrer to purchasers were not recorded. The form of deed was printed. The following were some of the purchasers:

Abraham Guth, lots 3 and 8, in 1803.
Michael Tryon, lots 30 and 31, in 1803.
Joseph Geissler, lot 77, in 1803.
Joseph Geissler, lots 46 and 47, in 1806.
George Ohlwein, lot 79, in 1807.
Maria Messersmith (formerly Strack,) lot 82, in 1807.
Adam Weber, lot 83, in 1810.

The first building in this vicinity was erected south of the town about a quarter of a mile.

In addition:

George Harner and Godfrey D. Rehrer, lot 106, in 1820.
Christian Brobst, lot 108, in 1819.
Christian Brobst, lot 110, in 1819.
John Binkley, lot 112, in 1821.
Jacob Good, lot 122, in 1822.

The ground rent has not been released. The last payments were made in 1834. In this year a plow was distrained for rent due; but it was released upon proceeding in replevin.

Among the early settlers of Rehrersburg were Abraham Guth, merchant; Joseph Geissler, inn-keeper; Dr. Michael Tryon, physician; P. Lud-wig, justice; John Seamen, justice; Philip A. Good, surveyor; Christian Brobst, inn-keeper; John Schaeffer, weaver; John Aulenbach, cabinet maker; John Hartman, brick-maker; John Moss-watchmaker; Michael Fichthorn, hatter; John Reber, carpenter; Gerhart Miller, blacksmith; Jacob Lininger, blacksmith; Frederick Muth, lumber dealer; Godfrey Rehrer, merchant; John Lindenmuth, saddler; John Reber, tailor; Philip Kline, tanner; Henry Dewald, tinsmith; Wm. A. Good, teacher; Sebastian Lutz, saddler; Philip Schwalm, tailor; Jacob Schaeffer, farmer.

The house built by Abraham Guth was converted into a tavern by Jacob Good in 1806 and kept by him until 1814, when Christian Brobst became the landlord, keeping the house until his death, in 1831. Then came Valentine Brobst until 1853, and Henry Brobst, the present proprietor, succeeded to the ownership. About the same time, 1806, Joseph Geissler opened the second inn, which is now known as the "Farmers' Hotel." Michael Lindenmuth was the landlord there thirty years. On the site of Dr. Tryon's residence was a public-house kept about thirty-five years by John Binkley. The present "Union House" has been open for the entertainment of the public since 1838, John Ebling being the first landlord and John Christ, the present.

After Abraham Guth left the Brobst stand, in 1806, he opened a place of business where Kurr's store now is. This place has been used continuously for trading purposes. For a time a store was kept in the building which had formerly been the church, and which is still standing on the square as a residence.

The Rehrersburg post-office was established May 27, 1818. George Harner was the postmaster until 1834, keeping the office at his store. For the next five years Valentine Brobst was the postmaster. Since 1866 John B. Barnett has officiated. The office has daily mails from Womeldorf, and also from Reading via Bernville.

Physicians.—Dr. Michael Tryon, a native of Mill Creek, Lebanon County, located here as the first doctor in 1800, and remained until his death, in 1830. His son, Dr. Jacob Tryon, followed his profession at Rehrersburg actively from 1821 until 1884, when he retired at the age of eighty-four years. During the first twenty-three years of his practice he traveled altogether on horseback, and often visited patients twenty-five miles distant, traveling through woods without roads and over mountains. Since 1855 his son, Dr. John S. Tryon, has been a successful practitioner at this point. Dr. Abraham Good was the second physician in the village, a number of years prior to his removal to Lebanon, about 1837. Dr. Adam Schoener was here from 1820 until his removal to Reading, in 1865. Before his death he returned to Rehrersburg. Dr. Adam J. Schoener was fifteen years in practice before his death, in 1880.

The last to locate was Dr. George M. Bickel, who has been in successful practice the past eight years.

Besides the foregoing, a number of natives of the place became successful physicians, among them being Decatur Schoener, William J. Schoener, Edward, John A. and James C. Brobst, sons of Valentine Brobst.

The village had several secret societies, which, after a period of prosperity, were allowed to go down, and have for a number of years been discontinued.

The tannery there was established by Kline & Shellenberger sixty years ago, and is still in existence, though carried on in a small way at present. Among the industries at this point, which have been altogether abandoned, was a small foundry by S. Weber, which was once a useful enterprise.

Organs are built by Monroe Salem, and coach-making is carried on by C. D. Wagner.

The Rehrersburg Creamery was built in 1885 by Isaac H. Shade & Co. Steam-power is used, and about three hundred pounds of prime butter are made daily, in one-pound prints. The creamery has the patronage of thirty-one customers.

Mr. Etna.—This village is in the southwestern part of the township, on an elevated tract of land which overlooks the surrounding country. It was laid out in 1810 by Peter Wohleber, and for many years called Wohleberstown. The present name was adopted after 1854, when the post-office was established. Wohleber owned a farm at this place, and surveyed some twenty acres of it for village purposes. He laid out the streets and alleys with great regularity. The main street was widened at its centre, to form a market square. Following the custom of that day, the lots were disposed of with an annual ground-rent. The amount was two dollars per year, and it was paid for many years. The last lot released was that of Peter Wohleber, Jr.

The proprietor lived near the public well, which he had provided, and he continued in the village until his death. Before this occurred, Peter Schell became the proprietor, and in turn sold out to John Neff, in 1845. The latter disposed of his interests to Daniel Gasser, who executed titles to the lots.

The first house in the place was by the public well, and was removed by Peter Schell, a cooper by trade; John Achenbach was the blacksmith; Evan Lewis, the tailor; John Hoffsfinger, the nail-maker; John Bechtold, mason; Michael Hettinger, millwright; Jacob Robinson, laborer. These embraced the early settlers, in addition to the Wolheber family. Peter Wolheber sold the first goods, he having traded on a small scale. But Levi Woltersperger was the first to engage in trade to any extent. He lived on lot No. 6, and also kept a public-house. He was in business more than thirty years, and was succeeded by Brown & Bordner. William A. Glick was the second merchant, trading on a larger scale. In 1885 the village had four stores. One of these was in a three-story brick building, forty by sixty-one feet, built in 1881 by the proprietor, I. J. H. Bordner, who has been in trade eighteen years. Daily mails are received from Myerstown, and tri-weekly are carried to Wintersville. The present postmaster is I. J. H. Bordner.

The first tavern in the place was kept in 1810 at the present Brown House, in a building which forms a part of the present hotel. Jacob Hettinger was the landlord. The second inn was the Bordner House, kept chiefly by members of the Bordner family. The third house was built by John H. Weller, about 1870. These three taverns are still maintained.

In the practice of medicine, Dr. Christian Strohm was the first to locate at Mt. Etna. He was followed, in 1856, by Dr. L. G. Batdorff, a practitioner here continuously since that time.

South of Rebersburg is an old tavern-stand widely and favorably known as Gasser’s, and which had been kept by that family the greater part of a century. On the Womelsdorf road, near the southern line of the township, a number of people have had stores; Conrad Himnershitz being one of the first in trade. A post-office having the name of Host was established here in 1852, which is at present kept in the store of Jacob Shaffner, for a number of years a successful merchant at this point. The office has a daily mail from Womelsdorf. West, nearly midway between Host and Mt. Etna, is the hamlet of Wintersville, so called after Jacob Winters, who had a store and a tavern at that place. The post-office was established there in 1857 and is still maintained.

Near Mt. Etna, on a small spring branch, is the old Livengood mill, built in the early part of the present century. The old mill-house is still in use, but steam-power has been supplied to take the place of the falling water-power. On the Swatara, near the mouth of this stream, is the old Zimmerman mill, where, about 1850, Frederick Miller built a new mill, which has been remodeled and supplied with steam-power so that it has become an excellent mill. Jacob Zeigler was the proprietor in 1885. In the southern part of the township, on Mill Creek, Daniel Wolf had a small mill before 1800, occupying the site of the Moyer mill, started soon after the settlement of the township. The present is the third mill, having been rebuilt in 1869.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

George K. Stoudt is the grandson of George Stoudt, who was of German extraction and spent his life in Tulpehocken township as a farmer. He married Rebecca Wolfe, whose children were Daniel, Jacob, George, Benjamin, Maria, Eva, Elizabeth and Sarah. George Stoudt, of this number, was born on the 30th of June, 1794, in Tulpehocken township, where he followed the occupation of his father, and married Susanna, daughter of John Kutz, of Maxatawny township. The children of this marriage are George (who died in youth), Mary (Mrs. Jacob D. Barnet), William, George K., Isaac, Rebecca, John, Sarah (Mrs. Henry Peiffer) and Eliza (Mrs. John B. Schaeffer), of whom all but two survive. George K. Stoudt was born in Maiden-creek township, Berks County, March 15, 1818, and received very few advantages of education, his time having been required as assistant in the cultivation of his father’s land. He removed in 1834 with the latter to the farm now owned by him in Tulpehocken township, and continued industriously employed as a farmer for many years. He was married on the 15th of June, 1839, to Mary, daughter of William Richel, of the same township. Their children are Alvin (a prosperous farmer in Indiana), Susanna, (Mrs. Jared Himmelberger), John (engaged in farming pursuits in Ohio), Junemia (Mrs. J. Henry Gasser), Frank (who settled upon a farm in Illinois), Rebecca (Mrs. Jonathan R. Reber) and Sarah E. (Mrs. Edward Bickel). The death of Mrs. Stoudt occurred July 10, 1881. George K. Stoudt remained with his father until his death, in 1881, when the property was bequeathed to him, subject to the claims of the remaining heirs. He is still actively engaged in farming and ranks among the most successful agriculturists of his township. As a Democrat in politics, he has served in various local offices. He is often solicited to serve as guardian, executor and in other places of trust where his fidelity to duty has won the respect and confidence of the public. With other patriotic citizens he was active during the war in furthering the interests of the government. He is a director of the Sinking Spring Hull, whose children are William, (deceased), Margaret (Mrs. Emanuel Kissel), Polly (Mrs. Samuel Hallacher), Sarah, (Mrs. Samuel S. Brown), George, Henry (deceased) and Jacob. The last-named of this number was born January 23, 1831, in New Holland, Lancaster County, and at the age of thirteen years removed to Berks County, becoming a member of his brother's family in Tulpehocken township. In this township he still resides, the spot being familiarly Mutual Fire Insurance Company. Mr. Stoudt is a member of the Reformed Church of Rehersburg, in which he has officiated as elder and deacon and is now a trustee.

Jacob Shaffner is the grandson of George Shaffner, who married a Miss Stetler, and resided in New Holland, Lancaster County. The children of this marriage were George, Henry, John and one daughter. George was born in New Holland, and remained, during his life-time, a resident of his native county, where he followed the trade of a hatter. He married Catherine known as Host post-office. He entered the store of his brother as clerk, acting in that capacity until 1851, when he went to California by the well-known Nicaragua route. He located in Downieville, Sierra County, and later removed to Marysville, at the terminus of the Sacramento River. He first engaged in mining and afterward embarked in the dairy business, which was carried on with success until his return, in September, 1854, to his present home. In 1855 Mr. Shaffner formed a co-partnership with his brother in general merchandising, and the fol-sioning year purchased the entire interest, which he has since controlled. He is also extensively engaged in lime-burning and the quarrying of stone for building purposes, and known as one of the most enterprising farmers in the township. He was married, August 30, 1855, to Amelia, daughter of Augustus Leiss, of the same township. Their children were William, born July 21, 1863, and four pre-

Erection of Township.—In 1820, at the November term of the Quarter Sessions of Berks County, before the Hon. Robert Porter, president judge, and his associates (Gabriel Hiester and Charles Shoemaker), a petition, subscribed by one hundred and twelve inhabitants of Tulpehocken township, was presented, praying for a division of the township into two parts, by a straight line to extend from the Tulpehocken Creek at the gristmill of George Ege, Esq., to the little Swatara Creek, near the house of Philip Wilhelm; and on the same day (November 6th) the court appointed Matthias S. Richards, John V. Epler and Jonathan Hiester as commissioners, and directing them to view the township, and report their opinion as to the necessity of a division of the same, together with a draft of the township proposed to be laid off. On the 24th of No-der, following the commissioners viewed the township and reported in favor of its division according to the line suggested, regarding such division "to be of much advantage and no inconvecienced to any of the inhabitants thereof, particularly on account of its great extent, being about eighteen miles in length and varying from six to ten miles in width;" and they recommended, "upon the solicitation of a number of respectable inhabitants of Tulpehocken township," the name of Perry to be adopted for that part laid off; "as be-ging short and of easy pronunciation." Their report was presented to court on January 4, 1821, and held under advisement. But the recomdination of the short name "Perry," which was "of easy pronunciation," was not acceptable to a great many inhabitants of that part of the township laid off; they therefore objected to its adoption, and presented a petition setting forth their reasons, as follows:

"Your petitioners have a predilection for the name of Tulpehocken for various reasons.

"First.—By long use the name is familiar to us, and we can pronounce it with facility without deeming it to be too hard or too long.

"Secondly—It is an ancient name by which that part of Pennsylvania bordering on the banks of the Tulpehocken Creek has been known for more than one hundred years, and it has been generally understood that the settlement of Tulpehocken is in a fruitful country and consists of Germans and the descendants of Germans, noted for their industry, frugality, and their simple and virtuous habits of life. Your petitioners beg leave to say that they are proud of this distinction and do not only wish to desire it in future, but also to preserve the appellation of 'Tulpehocken,' which has hitherto been indicative of the good qualities before mentioned.

"Thirdly.—The name is an original one and we think that the preservation of such names tends to the encouragement of patriotism and exclude invinoness, which is sometimes provoked by the application of the name of party favorites.

"In addition to our reasons for preferring the name of Tulpehocken, we would further remark that according to our title deeds, our lands are said to be situate in Tulpehocken township, which will not be true unless the name shall be restored to us, and a great inconsistency will occur when it shall be said—'The lands of A. B. are situate in Tulpehocken township according to his title papers, and yet Tulpehocken is ten miles from A. B's land.'

"Your petitioners are also of opinion that names are matters of right, and should not be taken away for any other than strong reasons, unless by the consent of those who have a property or interest in them, and we assure your honors that we had not the least apprehension of being deprived of our ancient name, or we should have made known our wishes to the Court. We expected that each of the parts would retain the ancient name, with a distinction added, such as Upper and Lower, or North and South Tulpehocken. This was done with our neighboring township 'Bern,' as has so frequently been done in other counties as Upper, Middle and Lower Paxton, in Dauphin County, Upper and Lower Mount Bethel, in Northampton County, etc., etc., that we had reason to believe the same thing would be done with the parts of Tulpehocken.

"Wherefore, we pray that our township may be called 'Upper Tulpehocken,' instead of 'Perry.'"

This petition was subscribed by sixty-five persons—mostly in German handwriting.

Four other petitions with ninety-four subscribers (German handwriting almost entirely) were presented, asking for some name for upper part.

The court confirmed the proceedings, but named the parts as prayed for, by inscribing on the draft "Upper Tulpehocken" in the northern part, and "Tulpehocken" in the southern part.

The area of the township is estimated to be sixty-five hundred acres.

For first taxables, see Tulpehocken township.

Early Settlers.—Among the early settlers of the townships, the Reber family made substantial improvements east of Strausstown. The elder Reber had, among other children, a son named Jacob, who was the father of Peter, John, Jacob, Jonathan and Samuel. His daughters were married to Peter Weaver, Jno. Schwalm, Michael Boltz, Jacob Noecker and Andrew Daniels, whose descendants

2 The northerly part was to be called "Perry."
form a large portion of the population of the upper section of the county. Valentine Boltz was the father of George, John and Michael Boltz and of a daughter who married Peter Reber. Jacob Klahr was another early settler and reared sons named John, Jacob, Benjamin, Joseph and Peter. Some of his daughters were married to Joseph Berger, Daniel Strauss and Peter Boltz.

The Goodmans, Jacob, Simon and Benjamin, removed from the township after attaining manhood; but George, another brother, remained. He was the father of George, Henry, Daniel, Benjamin and Jonathan Goodman, the latter being the youngest and still living at Strausstown, at the age of eighty-five years. Daughters of the elder George Goodman married Christian Seaman, George Moyer, Jacob Batteiger and Adam Batteiger. Jacob Degler lived near the mountain, on a farm still owned by his grandson, John Degler. John Kline was in the same neighborhood and was the father of sons named Benjamin, Philip and William. The homestead is no longer in possession of the family. The Strauss family, the Spanglers, the Hiesters and others whose improvements made them noteworthy still have numerous descendants in Upper Tulpehocken.

Indian Fort.—The fort built for protection against the Indians was on the farm now owned by Jacob Ritzman, about two miles from Strausstown. It was located so as to command a gap in the mountain, through which a path led. This path is still kept up. Near by there were numerous springs of fresh water. The fort was on a small rise of ground facing the mountain and was intended, most likely, to guard approach from that direction only. It is probable that it was built of earth and stone, although some are inclined to think that it was surrounded by a palisade of logs. There are but faint traces of its existence.

Diedrich Schneider's.—A prominent and lovely building stood on the top of Blue Mountain for many years, which was famous in the days before the Revolution. It was called "Diedrich Schneider's."

Churches.

Zion's Church, (Lutheran and Reformed), the principal church of the township, is located half a mile east of Strausstown. When first built, nearly a hundred and fifty years ago, the church was called the "Blue Mountain Church," also "North-Kill Church." At first it was used by members of the German Reformed faith only. The Lutherans obtained an interest in the property when the present house was built, in 1819, since which time its affairs have been mutually managed. From the meagre records at hand it appears that among others who worshipped here, as early as 1750, were Adam Sontag, George Weber, Valentine Van Huss, Henry Berger, John Pontius, Andrew Kremer, Peter Smith, John Dundore, Simon Eichler, Nicholas Long, Balser Henne, Stephen Kerr, Thomas Miller, Adam Weber, Jacob Kantner, Yost Schumacher, Valentine Baumgartner, Jacob Emerich, Peter Homan, Casper Smith, Jacob Stouch, Martin Troester, Conrad Reber, Frederick Stupp and Simon Graeff. The first meeting-house was of logs, of small size, and stood in the grave-yard. The present church is of very substantial limestone masonry. In 1863 it was covered with slate and in 1883 it was supplied with a new steeple and other improvements. The church property embraces nearly fifty acres of land.

The Reformed congregation reported two hundred and fifty members, with the Rev. Thomas C. Leinbach as pastor. Among those who preceded him, were Revs. Schwartz, Miese, Zehring, Hassinger, Herman, Boyer, Meyers, Hendel and Stowe.

Rev. George Minnich was the first pastor of the Lutheran congregation, and under his ministry the church prospered. Later pastors were the Revs. J. M. Deitzler, H. G. Grahn, Joel Grimm and, for many years, the Rev. Aaron Finfrock. In 1885 the congregation had more than three hundred members.

On the church property a small school-house was built, soon after the first church, and schools were regularly taught by German teachers. Seventy years ago a Mr. Trewitz served as teacher. He had the reputation of being a strict disciplinarian. Other teachers were Peter Gilbert, Charles Butzer and William Miller. The latter also taught the English branches. David Garman is best remembered as one of the first successful English teachers. His school was kept in the eastern part of the village. Most of these teachers served the church as organists, a position which has been held since 1862 by William A. Unger. A Sunday-school is maintained and successfully conducted in the church.

St. Paul's Lutheran Church is in the village of Strausstown. It is a frame building, erected in 1861 by Dr. W. J. Schoener, Jonathan G. Reber and John Strause, as a building committee. The membership was small when the church was built, only about a dozen belonging. Rev. J. M. Ditzler was their pastor. Subsequently the congregation had the ministry of the Revs. Graves, Mortz, Cutler, Lenhart, Croll and Fritsch. In 1885 there were twenty-eight members. A Sunday-school is kept up in the church.

Villages.

Strausstown is a pleasant village, a little north of the centre of the township, on the State road, twelve miles west from Hamburg. It was laid out in 1840 by John Strauss, a land-owner in this locality, after whom it was named. He lived west of the village, on the Himmelberger farm. After the village was laid out he moved to the center of the town, where he died. The tract of land to the north was owned by John Batteiger, and east of him by Daniel Moyer; and upon each of these three tracts the village, with its additions, is now located. The first house in the place was built on a lot from the Batteiger tract, purchased by Joseph Boltz, March 28, 1835; and the house built by Boltz that year has been occupied by him since. The second house was also begun in 1835, but it was not completed until the following year. It was built by Jacob and Joseph Klahr, and now forms part of the Centre Hotel. After the lots were laid out by the foregoing land-owners, a number of houses were built. Among the early citizens of the place were:

Joseph Boltz, tailor; Joseph Heister, blacksmith; Benneville Clay, blacksmith; Thomas Schaum, turner and painter; John Keener, carpenter; Wm. Keener, carpenter; Samuel Neun, hatter; Jonathan Reber, cabinet-maker; Joseph Ulrich, tailor; Amos Sallade, tanner; Daniel Moyer, inn-keeper; Isaac Smith, shoemaker; Isaac Fessler, shoemaker; Jonathan Sauer, tinsmith; Michael K. Boyer, merchant; Daniel Batteiger, merchant; Jacob Klahr, saddler; John Berger, farmer; Peter Holtzman, wagon-maker.

The first store in this locality was begun about sixty years ago, in what is now the eastern part of the village, by a man named Uhlman.

In 1836 Samuel Shollenberger opened a store in the building put up by the Klahrs, but it was shortly followed by Michael K. Boyer and Daniel Batteiger. Then came Daniel Boltz and others. Subsequently a school was taught in that building, and since 1865, Moses Henne has used it, with additions, as the "Centre Hotel." After 1840 Wm. Strauss used part of the present L. W. Ritzman stand as a store, and at which place Joseph Batteiger and George Heilig were in successful trade years afterward.

Wm. Shomo built the third store-house in 1854, and Samuel Strauss engaged in trade there. The fourth store was built by Joseph Batteiger after 1860.

The Strausstown post-office was established Nov. 18, 1847, with Jacob Boltz as the first postmaster. There was one mail per week from Allentown to Rehersburg. Joseph Boltz had the office from 1852 to 1864. Solomon Strauss succeeded him, and since March, 1879, E. S. Strauss has been the postmaster. There are two stage lines supplying daily mails from Womelsdorf and Allentown, via Hamburg.

Daniel Moyer kept the first public-house at the east end of the village, having erected the present house about 1840. The present Filbert Hotel was kept first by Jacob Boltz, about 1845.

Strausstown has three hotels, four stores and all the mechanic shops maintained in a thriving village. There are good pavements and the few hundred inhabitants are prosperous.

To Dr. Charles McDonough is given the credit of being the first to locate in the practice of medicine at Strausstown. Then came Dr. Isaac Walborn, followed by Dr. Wm. J. Schoener, who practiced for a dozen of years prior to his death, in 1865. Since the spring of 1864, Dr. I. S. Herbein has been here in successful practice, locating at this point immediately after his graduation. Since 1875, Dr. J. F. Flick has been his contemporary.

At Strausstown the manufacture of cigars was first carried on by Henry Degler. In 1885 there were three shops in which this industry was conducted. The largest was the factory of Potts & Herbein. A fine building was put up recently for this purpose, and in it are employed from ten to twenty hands.

The most important industry Strausstown ever had was the extensive tannery of Michael Miller. It was established as early as 1825 by John Himmelberger. At first it was carried on in a small way. Miller rebuilt the tannery and added improvements from time to time, until it was an extensive establishment. He used modern methods and made all grades of leather successfully. He continued for about thirty years, until 1876.

Of the grist-mill nearest the village, John Geo. Reber was the first owner. The property subsequently passed into the hands of John Miller, and was by him carried on. The site is one of the oldest in this section. The lower mill on the North-Kill was built by Joseph Seyfert, in 1849, on the site of a mill formerly owned by John Miller, which had been destroyed by fire. It is of stone and brick, with water and steam-power. It is capable of doing much work. Joseph Hester is the present proprietor. In the eastern part of the township, on a branch of the North-Kill are the sites where were the forges and mills of Joseph Seyfert. The first improvement was a small grist-mill. It was replaced by a mill of better capacity, which was built by Benjamin & Joseph Seyfert. This mill is still in operation, as the property of Wm. Shomo. Below this power an improvement was made to operate a forge by the Seyferts, about 1830, and the business was so successfully carried on, that some ten years later an old mill, a mile up the stream, was converted into another forge, which Seyfert also operated. These, in connection with the mills and several farms, which he had under cultivation, formed an industry which gave employment to a large number of men. After the death of Joseph Seyfert, about the close of the late Civil War, the iron interests declined. The forges were practically abandoned about 1870. The Seyfert homestead is now the property of one of the sons of Joseph Seyfert, but the greater part of the once large estate has passed into other hands.

North of Strausstown, in the thickly-settled neighborhood along the base of the mountain, the Schubert post office was established, June 6, 1884, with Lewis Emerich as postmaster. The mail service is from Strausstown.

MARION TOWNSHIP.

Erection of Township.—In November, 1843, a petition of sundry inhabitants (one hundred and sixty-one) of Tulpehocken and Heidelberg townships was presented to court, praying for the erection of a new township, to be composed of parts of said townships, “The line to begin on the land of Sybilla Troutman, on the line between Tulpehocken and Upper Tulpehocken townships; thence to a point at Wohleberstown; thence the nearest and best route to the Lebanon County line; thence along said line to a point to the eastward of Newmanstown; thence to a point on the western line of the borough of Womelsdorf, near the land of Rev. Mr. Hundle; thence to a point on the line between the townships of Heidelberg and Tulpehocken, near George Keiser’s mill; thence by the best route to the beginning,” and the court appointed three commissioners to view and report upon the proposed new township.—Matthias S. Richards, Samuel Baird and Samuel S. Jackson.

This application was strenuously opposed by very many of the taxable inhabitants of the townships.¹ The report of the commissioners was presented to court on January 4, 1844, in which they returned the survey, by metes and bounds, of the new township laid off, and recommended the name of Marion, as follows: “Beginning on land of Sybilla Troutman; thence S. 85 W., 172 perches; N. 84 W., 6 miles and 44 perches, to the Lebanon County line; along said county line, S. 47⅔ E., 7 miles, 212 ps.; thence N. 13½ E., 354 ps., to the line of the Borough of Womelsdorf; thence along said Borough N. 11½ W., 275 ps. to the Tulpehocken Creek; along said creek 1430 ps., to a stone corner set up for a dividing corner between Tulpehocken and Upper Tulpehocken; and thence along the dividing line of said townships N. 28 W., 304 ps. to the Beginning.” This report was confirmed on the 6th of April, 1844, and the new township thereby laid off was named Marion, as recommended.

For first taxables, see Tulpehocken township.

In 1865 a small triangular tract of land was taken from this township and added to Lebanon county. This was caused by the extending of the Newmans town improvements into Berks County.1

Among the Palatines were the Reeds (originally Rieth) who in 1723 settled on the Tulpehocken, in what is now Marion township. They bore the Christian names of Peter, George, John Adam, Christopher, Jacob, Valentine, Nicholas, Frederick and Casper. Adam, John and Christopher settled in the neighborhood of what is now Reed’s Church, so called on account of their prominence as early members. The land on which John Reed lived was one hundred and forty-four acres in extent, and it has been in the Reed family six successive generations, the proprietors in the order of time being John, Leonard, Valentine, Christopher, John and the present, Frank Reed, through marriage with Rebecca, daughter of John, who was a son in the direct descent. On the farm is an old house, partly built in 1740 and increased to its present size in 1804. It is of logs, weather-boarded and has immense timbers to support the upper floors. The house contains an old clock which has been part of its furniture the past eighty-five years. Its maker was Jacob Gorgas, and it is believed that it has been running since 1704. The dial is hammerd brass and each of the weights weighs twelve pounds. The Rieths intermarried with the Lechners and both families have always been prominent in the affairs of the township.

In the neighborhood of the Rieths, Andrew Lash became the owner of a tract of land in 1735, upon which John Jacob Lash built a large rough-stone house in 1753. This date and other inscriptions are cut in a stone in the gable of the house. John Kurtz, the great-grandfather of the present owners, James, William and Samuel Kurtz, bought the property April 16, 1764, since which time it has been in the Kurtz family. The walls of the house indicate that the building may have been designed as a means of defense against Indians as well as a residence. The Lechners—John George, his brother Christopher and the latter’s son, also named Christopher—were among the early settlers of this section of country. The former reared a son named George, who united with his father in buying a tract of land extending up both sides of the Millbach from its mouth, most of which is still owned by their descendants. In all there were two hundred and thirty-five and a half acres, which were transferred to the Lechners May 9, 1778. These lands had previously been owned by Leonard Groh, Nicholas Rieth and Martin Weiser. John George Lechner dying in 1784, his son George became the sole owner of the land, and he bequeathed the southern half to his son Christopher, who built mills and made other important improvements on it. Most of this land is now owned by his grandson, Richard Lechner.

An interesting incident in the lives of these families happened in 1793, when General Washington visited the grave of Colonel Conrad Weiser. He requested the presence of his former body-guard, Christopher Lechner and the Reith brothers, Jacob and Valentine, who hastened to comply and spent several hours in the company of the great commander. These patriotic heroes lie in the grave-yard of the old Reed Church. Their places of earthly rest are marked by sandstones whose inscriptions are almost obliterated. Jacob Rieth died in 1821 and Valentine Rieth in 1825, aged respectively seventy-five and seventy-six years.

Industries—A mill existed in Tulpehocken settlement in 1732. In October of that year the provincial treasurer paid £1 5s. to the miller at Tulpehocken for ten bushels of meal delivered to Sassoonan (an Indian chief), who was then in want of provisions.

W. and B. F. Taylor continued to operate the Charming Forge property with its mills, etc.2 Since the abandonment of the canal, the water-power has been sufficiently strong for all necessary purposes. In 1885 three of the five fires of the forge were used and twenty-five men employed in the production of charcoal blooms of superior quality. The metal used was from the Robesonia and Clinton Furnaces. In 1884 the forge was improved by the addition of a Baker Rotary Blower, which greatly promotes its operation The saw-mill is in Marion, but the grist-mill is in North Heidelberg. The latter is a three-story stone building, put up in 1817 by George Ege. It has a separate water-power and, being a good mill, is largely patronized. All these interests give this place the appearance of a busy hamlet. Passing up the Tulpehocken, there was, in Marion, a mill for making cement, carried on by the Reed family several years.

Where the turnpike crosses the stream, below the junction of the Millbach with the Tulpehocken, there was a grist-mill which had as its last owner the Lechner family. When the canal was built it was removed to make way for that improvement. Nearly opposite this old site is a carding-mill, put up by the Lechners, which is still operated on a limited scale as the property of Dr. J. C. Livengood.

A short distance up the Millbach, on the old Christopher Lechner farm, is a good water-power which was improved by Christopher Lechner after 1776, to operate a wool-carding mill and an oil-mill. The carding-mill was torn down about 1825, but the oil-mill stood until after 1850. In it was organized the first Sunday-school in this neighborhood, about 1834. Its meetings, subsequently, were held elsewhere. A saw-mill took the place of the oil-mill, and the power of the former carding-mill was used to operate new grist and clover-mills, put up by the family of Christopher Lechner.

Of these latter mills only the saw-mill remains, the clover-mill having been recently removed, although not used for mill purposes for a long time. From 1829 until 1858 this mill property, containing fifteen acres of land, was out of the possession of the Lechner family, and while owned by Michael Wolf, in 1834, he built a mill for sawing what he supposed was marble, but which turned out to be a soft white limestone; consequently that enterprise was soon abandoned. Peter Walborn owned the property from 1838 until 1858, when J. George Lechner became the owner, and his heirs still own the site.

South of Stouchsburg, on the Tulpehocken, on the site of a clover-mill put up by Peter Sheetz, a grist-mill was erected by Adam Klopp, which, in a rebuilt condition, is now operated as the property of Augustus Burkholder. The next power above, and the last in the township on this stream, in early times operated the Anspach mill. Later, Edward Good owned the property, which is still carried on as a mill.

In this locality was the dynamite factory of Henry W. Stump, which exploded with such disastrous effects.

Dynamite Explosion.—In 1883 Henry W. Stump erected a dynamite factory in this township, within half a mile of Stouchsburg. The industry comprised six frame buildings. At half-past two o’clock in the afternoon of November 7, 1884, the entire plant was carried away by two terrific explosions, including three employees, John Capp, Frederick Knause and Frantz Spatz. Much damage was done in the vicinity, caused by the concussion, which was felt within a radius of many miles. The factory was not rebuilt.

Churches.

Zion’s Lutheran Church, more generally called the “Reed Church,” is on an elevated site, one mile east from Stouchsburg and one-fourth of a mile north of the turnpike, where it crosses the Tulpehocken. Zion’s congregation is one of the oldest in the county, and its early history is full of stirring events. As early as 1725 the people living along the Tulpehocken agitated the question of building a house of worship, where instruction might also be imparted to their children. Accordingly, a preliminary meeting was held in a block-house which stood on the right bank of Millbach (Mill) Creek, on the land now owned by William Zellers, near Newmanstown, to discuss this matter. The Rev. Casper Stoever, afterwards pastor of the Hill Church, in Lebanon County, came to preside, and to urge the brethren to take action. George Scholl moved that such a house be built on lands which Adam, Christopher and John Rieth offered to donate, in addition to the seven acres which the proprietor of Plumton Manor (John Page) had already set aside for church purposes, in case such a house should be built. Upon the fourteen acres of land thus selected, on account of its central position and elevated site, Christopher Lechner, as building-master, supervised the erection of a small but strong log meeting-house, in 1727. The labor was done by the people from many miles around. Living in dread of the wily savages, whose hostility might endanger their lives almost at any moment, the building was so arranged that it could be used as a fort in case of attack, and a sort of vault was made under the earthen-floor (with which the church was first supplied), where arms and ammunition might be stored.
In this rude house the people assembled statedly to worship, and having had no regular minister, one of their number served as lector, reading a sermon and conducting the services. Occasionally they were visited by Lutheran or Reformed missionaries, who preached for them and encouraged them to hope that they would soon have a pastor. In 1729 Conrad Weiser, and others who accompanied him to this country, became a member of the church, and more diligent efforts were made to secure a minister. In 1733 Casper Leutbecker, a tailor by trade, and who had been secured to teach the school, began to serve the congregation as a lector, and through him an effort was made, the year following, to secure a pastor, on a promise of a salary of thirty pounds (Pennsylvania currency). Meantime a parsonage was built, and, as no pastor could be secured from abroad, Leutbecker was inducted into that office, and occupied the parsonage. His ministry did not prove acceptable to all the members, and as Rev. John Casper Stoever had begun preaching at this place, in connection with the Hill Church, in Lebanon, and other appointments, the disaffected ones adhered to him and endeavored to have him installed as pastor. Thus arose a contention, which lasted several years and which has not inaptly been styled the "Confusion of Tulpehocken." This strife was very strong in the summer of 1736, and as there were then two ministers and two sets of church officers, each claiming the property which had been set aside by William Webb, the attorney of John Page, he was appealed to to decide which party should predominate. He visited the church, called into council the two so called pastors and their members, and after a patient hearing authorized Leutbecker as the regular pastor of the Lutheran Church, and so declared on the 13th day of September, 1736.

He also appointed Frederick Schaeffer, Michael Ri-th, Michael Schaeffer and Leonard Rieth church wardens, and delivered the keys of the church to them to be held by them and their successors as the wardens of the Lutheran Church. He stipulated, however, that when no regular services were held by Leutbecker, as the regular minister, Stoever or any other preacher who would behave himself might occupy the house for worship. Under this condition, and with the full approbation of the Leutbecker party, who avowed themselves ready to harmonize, Stoever continued to preach once a month. But his adherents were not disposed to submit without protest and instigated a series of persecutions which made the life of Leutbecker far from pleasant. He was molested in the discharge of his duties, and on one occasion, at least, his life was imperiled by an attempt to explode a piece of firewood, charged with gunpowder. Fortunately, the plot miscarried by the stick's being thrown out of the fire without doing any damage. Leutbecker's labors were ended by his death in 1738, and although Stoever continued to preach until 1742, he failed to unite the factions. Meanwhile, a new element appeared, and a second strife ensued in consequence of the effort of the Moravians to obtain possession of the property. After Leutbecker's death the party adhering to him were without a minister until the spring of 1742, when, through an acquaintance of Conrad Weiser with Count Zinzendorf, the latter promised to send them a minister free of expense, who should serve them until they could obtain a regular pastor from Europe. The pastor secured was J. Philip Meurer, who began his labors in September, 1742. Pending his arrival, Zinzendorf sent, as the minister above stated, a young man, Gottlob Buettner, who had just been ordained by the Oley Synod. He began preaching at Reed's Church in March, 1742, and soon had arrayed against him the friends of Stoever, who denounced him as an interloper and non-Lutheran. The wardens accepted him as the successor of Leutbecker and gave their official support, regarding him as a supply until Meurer's pastorate should actually begin, some months later. The Stoever faction, having been strengthened by the arrival of new settlers, again made a vigorous effort for the mastery, and being stronger in numbers than those who followed Buettner, again claimed the property on the plea that no title had been given to the wardens and that they now demanded the title. Again the attorney, Webb, came to the help of those opposed to Stoever and deeded the property to the wardens upon their assurance that they would hold it in trust for a Lutheran congregation. Chagrined at what they considered a defeat of their plans, and acting under a belief that the Moravians were using covert means to obtain the property for their own use, the feeling became so strong that when Zinzendorf visited the place to preach, in August of that year, they threatened him with personal violence. This act was the subject of a correspondence from this place which apprised the public of the unhappy state of affairs and gave the locality an unenviable reputation.

To correct these matters, the wardens prepared a statement, which was attested by Conrad Weiser, and published August 11, 1742, under the title of "The Confusion of Tulpehocken." The publication of this account and the arrival of Pastor Meurer had the effect of influencing many who had before been neutral so that the Stoever party soon found themselves in the minority. Unwilling to accept Meurer as their pastor and strengthened in their belief that the preaching at the Reed Church was Moravian and not Lutheran, they relinquished their efforts to obtain possession of the church and withdrew, in the fall of 1742, to form a new congregation. In this they were successful, and the following year Christ Church was founded. The pastorate of the Rev. J. Philip Meurer does not appear to have been successful, beyond the building a new stone church in 1744, his members being prompted thereto, most likely, by the action of the other congregation in building a stone house. His congregation did not increase, and, as the element which was distinctly Moravian withdrew, in 1745 (on account of having a church of their own built, about seven miles farther down the Tulpehocken, where a Moravian settlement was founded), those remaining were so few that services could hardly be maintained. Meurer added to his unpopularity by his action (February, 1747) in refusing to allow the then pastor of the Christ Church to hold the funeral services of a man who formerly belonged to his congregation, although he (the deceased) wanted the burial performed by the Rev. Kurtz. Some of his members, condemning his conduct, became connected with Christ Church, and as so little interest remained in Zion's Church, it came to pass in the summer of 1747 that the proposition to have the pastor of the Christ Church enter in and preach was acceptably received. The Rev. Kurtz began preaching there on September 13, 1747, and thenceforth the church was practically Lutheran and one with the other congregation, except in the matter of a preaching-place. It still remained for decision how much of an ownership the Moravians had in the property, insomuch as most of the means for building the new church, in 1744, had been furnished by them. A suit was brought to test the matter and a decision reached, April 26, 1755, which affirmed the claims of the Lutherans on the ground of the original intention of the donors of the land and the large majority of membership of the Lutherans at the time the suit was brought.

Rev. John Nicholas Kurtz continued pastor of the church until April, 1770, when he moved to York. The pulpit of Zion's Church was thence successively occupied by the same pastors as those of Christ Church, namely, the Rev. C. Emanuel Schulze, 1770 until 1809; and by the Rev. Daniel Ulrich from 1811 until 1851. In 1853 Zion's Church called the Rev. T. T. Iaeger as a separate pastor, who remained until 1865, when the present pastor, Rev. Aaron Finfrock, took charge of its spiritual affairs.

In 1837 the present church building was erected. It was repaired in 1879 by a slate roof and crowning it with a steeple. Like its predecessor, it is a stone house, and though not large, is well-built.

CHRIST LUTHERAN CHURCH.—The causes which led to the formation of this Lutheran congregation are stated in the account of Zion's Church. A beautiful building site was selected, about one mile west from Stouchsburg, on the south side of the turnpike, where a tract of fifteen acres of ground was donated for church purposes by Sebastian Fisher, Christian Lauer and George Unruh, each giving five acres. The corner-stone was laid May 12, 1743, and a stone church built during the summer of that year, dedicated on Christmas day fol-

following. At that time there were one hundred and sixty male members. Some of them were not in hearty accord with those who really desired to build up an active Lutheran congregation. The preaching of the Rev. Stoever failed to satisfy them and they secured the pastoral services of Rev. Tobias Wagner, who took charge of the congregation October 25, 1743. His connection with the church was terminated April 30, 1746, when he became the pastor of the Alsace Church. While he was the minister he performed the marriage ceremony of the Rev. Henry Melchior Muhlenberg and Anna Maria Weiser, daughter of Conrad Weiser, in the spring of 1745. The congregation was then supplied by Lutheran pastors of Eastern Pennsylvania, among whom was Muhlenberg, who visited Christ Church twice per year, preaching, confirming and administering the holy sacrament. He had as a helper Rev. John Nicholas Kurtz. The latter created so favorable an impression that the congregation asked him to settle in their midst as pastor. This he did, occupying the newly-built parsonage September 5, 1747. His pastorate was successfully continued until 1770, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Emanuel Schulze, who was a son-in-law of the Rev. Muhlenberg. He removed to Christ Church in December, 1770. He had charge of a number of congregations and was assisted by his brother-in-law, Rev. Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg. His pastorate was long and faithful, and it continued until his death, March 9, 1809. He was the pastor of Governor Schulze, who was born in the parsonage of Christ Church July 19, 1775.

After the Rev. Schulze died, Rev. Daniel Ulrich became the pastor, in 1811, and faithfully served until December, 1851. In February of the following year the Rev. L. G. Eggers became the pastor, and he served Christ Church until 1867. His three predecessors had also served Zion’s Church, but the ministry then became separate.

In 1868 the Rev. F. P. Moyer began serving Christ Church, and he continued until 1873. He was succeeded in 1874 by the present pastor, Rev. A. J. Long, under whose efficient ministrations the congregation continues to prosper.

The stone church built in 1743 becoming too small, the present large stone edifice was erected in its stead in 1788. It was badly wrecked by a dynamite explosion, which occurred near by, in November, 1884.

In the summer and fall of 1885 this church was thoroughly remodeled and repaired at a cost of six thousand dollars. A basement story was constructed, a new gallery provided, the windows were lengthened and colored glass put in. The interior wood-work is made of walnut and yellow pine, and new furniture and carpets were also provided. The walls are frescoed in water colors, and on the ceiling are four-life-size paintings in oil, representing the Birth, Crucifixion, Resurrection and Ascension of Christ. In the rear of the pulpit is Christ in Gethsemane. The congregation has three hundred members. The church organ is seventeen and a half feet high; it was rebuilt by Dieffenboch, of Millersburg.

TULPEHOCKEN TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH is not within the bounds of Berks County, but it is so near the western line and so many of its citizens belong to its membership, that a short sketch of its history is here given. The congregation was organized some time before 1745, when the first church building was put up of logs, on the south corner of the old cemetery, and near the present parsonage. This house was in use until 1772, when a new church was built in the upper part of the old cemetery and on the south side of the present highway. In 1853 the present house of worship was built on the north side of the turnpike, and adjoining the new cemetery, which was opened in 1864. It is about two miles from Stouchsburg, and on an elevated site. The building is of stone, spacious and attractive, and accommodates a very large membership. In 1885 they numbered nearly five hundred.

The church property includes two well-kept cemeteries, an old but substantial parsonage, and about thirty-five acres of land.

The Rev. Michael Schlatter was one of the pioneer preachers at this place in 1746 and the year following; and his labors as a missionary were shared by Revs. Reger, Boehm and Weiss. They preached at irregular intervals varying from four to ten weeks. The rapid settlement of the country and the increased interest in the work made a regular pastorate possible, and such a ministerial service began in the summer of 1747. Since that time the pastors of the church have

St. Peter's Union Chapel is in the eastern part of Stouchsburg. It was built in 1849 as a Union Church. A committee of seven persons solicited funds to put up the building. It is a small brick edifice. It has been remodeled so as to adapt it for Sunday-schools, which is one of its chief uses. The first Sabbath-school in it was superintended by Wm. H. Seibert. Other superintendents have been Thomas S. Searle and the present, Samuel Keiser. The chapel is controlled by a board of trustees, under whose sanction meetings are held by various persuasions, but chiefly by the Brethren, or Dunkards.

SCHOOLS.

The early settlers along the Tulpehocken established some of the first schools in the county. The first school was opened in a log building (which stood near the present Reed Church), about 1730. Casper Leutbecker was the teacher. His services continued until his death, in 1738, when Valentine Kroft taught at the same place. George Lecluine was subsequently a teacher in this neighborhood and imparted excellent instruction. In 1747 John Nicholas Kurtz taught a parish school at Christ's Church, where he was also pastor; and he was probably preacher and teacher as long as he remained in this locality. At the Tulpehocken Reformed Church there was also a parochial school, established by the direction of the Rev. Michael Schlatter, which had an existence as early as 1752, and probably received aid from the charity fund shortly after that time. In each of these localities schools were maintained with more or less regularity for nearly a hundred years. Near Christ's Church, west of Stouchsburg, the Tulpehocken Academy was founded in 1831. The school occupied a log building and was managed by a board of trustees. Myles Green, an Irishman, was the teacher who gave the school its reputation. Some of the leading men of this section received their English education in that school. He removed to the West in 1837, and was succeeded by J. C. Kessels. The academy was kept up until after 1840. Latterly it was not largely patronized. The building became the property of the Public School Board and stood until 1879, when it was replaced by the present brick school-house.

Stouchsburg Academy was established in 1838 in a building erected for the purpose in the eastern part of the village. Among the promoters of the enterprise were Samuel Moore, George Lechner, Samuel Lindennuth and Jacob Seibert. When first opened the school was not as successful as the patrons had hoped it would be, and, after a year or two, it passed out of the management of the trustees and was conducted as a private enterprise by Jacob Seibert. He secured as a teacher William H. Seibert, who taught with much success from 1840 until 1854. Among other teachers who followed him were Thomas S. Searle, Simon S. Miller, Isaac S. Moyer and W. Z. Deck. The house was converted into a residence about ten years ago.

In the fall of 1873 the public schools of Stouchsburg were graded into primary, secondary and grammar departments, and each taught in different buildings. This arrangement continued until the fall of 1877, when the present school building was occupied. It is a two-story brick, thirty by seventy-two feet, having four rooms. The average attendance of the schools is one hundred and ten, with a yearly increase, especially since the township board has authorized the attendance from all parts of Marion township of pupils who desire to enter the grammar school after attaining a certain standard in their own schools. W. Z. Deck has for many years been connected with the schools of Stouchsburg. Through his efforts they were graded.

Stouchsburg.—This is the only village in the township. It is on the Harrisburg turnpike, seventeen miles from Reading and one and a half miles from Sheridan, the nearest railway station. It contains a church, school house, several taverns and stores, with residences enough to accommodate about six hundred inhabitants. Many of the homes appear attractive and the village is kept very neat and orderly. The place was first called Stouchstown, after Andrew Stouch, who laid out the first lots, but received the present name when the post-office was established, in 1832. Stouch lived in the western part of the village, on the Wintersville Street. In the same part lived Benjamin and Peter Spycker. Both were well educated and figured prominently in the early affairs of the county. Benjamin lived on the north side of the present turnpike. It was at his house that Colonel Conrad Weiser's forces rendezvoused, in October, 1755, before marching against the Indians on the Swatara. He left no issue, but reared an adopted daughter Peter Spycker was one of the early justices and executed many legal papers of the people living in this part of the county. His house was on the south side of the street. One of the houses built by him is still standing, now the property of Dr. Newcomet. Peter Sheetz subsequently was the land-owner there, and sold off the village lots from his farm. The elder Spyckers died in this locality, but what few descendants they had, removed.

In addition to the foregoing, other early settlers at Stouchsburg were,—

Samuel Moore, merchant; Andrew Stouch, innkeeper; Samuel Lindenmuth, blacksmith; John Reed, farmer; Daniel Hackman, saddler; Jacob Burkholder, Daniel Burkholder, wheelwrights; Jacob Tice, merchant; George Peiffer, farmer; Jacob Spatz, drover; John Baum, Zep. Baum, James Livingood, Lewis Livingood, William Gruber, David Raybock, Moses Gruber, Isaac Y. Reed, John G. Kline, Jonathan C. Klopp, Daniel Smith, Henry Stump, Wm. Lludennuth, Francis Retter, Isaac Rauch, Jacob Jones.

John Diefenbach was one of the first tavernkeepers, his house being the old Stouch stand. George W. Crumb, Peter Walborn and others kept tavern in a house which stood on the site of the residence of Aaron Spohn, at the lower end of the village. The "Eagle Hotel" was opened by Henry Bennethum; the "Marion House," by Wm. Diefenbach before 1832, and it has been a tavern since. The "American House" was built in 1870 by Isaac L. Moyer.

Samuel Moore had the first store near the centre of the village, before 1825, trading in the present Searle house many years. Where James Zerbe lives Jacob Tice traded. Ephraim Stein was in the upper part of the village and there, later, Abraham Stein had a store. M. Thierwechter and Ephraim Hartler engaged in trade in 1840, which was afterwards carried on by Thierwechter alone.

John C Reed was a merchant more than twenty years and Moyer & Gerhart came later. In 1866 E. G Fisher and Samuel Keiser formed a co-partnership which continued until 1872, when Samuel Keiser became sole proprietor of the store. F. S. Fisher is carrying on business on the opposite side of the street.

At the Keiser store is kept the Stouchsburg post-office, established in 1832. A daily mail is supplied from Sheridan Station.

The early physicians were Drs Nathaniel Rauch and Adam Stouch; others were Drs. Edward Illick and Augustus Fisher (both moving to Ohio), James S. Fisher (about twenty years) and Dr. H. W. Newcomet, the last a contemporay of Dr. I. W. Newcomet, who has been in practice twenty years.

The manuacture of cigars gives occupation to a large number of persons in the village. In addition to those producing cigars for the factory of A. S. Valentine & Son, at Womelsdorf, there are factories operated by James Zerbe and Yocum Bros. The former was established in 1878, and employs twenty-five hands. The latter, when fully operated, employs about thirty hands.

Golden Rule Lodge No. 42, Ancient Order of Good Fellows.—This lodge was instituted at Stouchsburg, October 7, 1871, with the following members: D. Smith, Isaac L. Moyer, A. Burkholder, J. W. Manbeck, G. L. Groff, F. Kirst, H. W. Wenrich, and L. L Moyer. In 1885 there were seventy-three members.

The meetings are held in a fine lodge-room, in the American House block.

Washington Camp No. 237 P. O. S. of A., was instituted May 17, 1875. The principal officers then were Isaac L. Moyer, Daniel Smith, Franklin Kirst, F. G. Eckert, J. F. Brendle and George Bruner.

In 1885 the camp reported fifty-four members.

JEFFERSON TOWNSHIP.

ERECION OF TOWNSHIP.—Divers inhabitants of Upper Tulpehocken township (one hundred and seventeen) represented to the court in April, 1851, "that it would conduce to the advantages and convenience of said townships, to have a new township erected by dividing the said township on account of the township business, and because the common-school system, although not yet in operation, soon will be; and indicated therein by metes and bounds the southern section of the township (about two-fifths in area) to be set apart. The court appointed George Fox, John H. Gernant and Reuben E. Addams as commissioners. The report of the commissioners was presented to court on the 6th of August, 1851, in which they expressed the opinion that there was a great propriety in dividing said township and forming a new township as prayed for, and reported the following metes and bounds:

"Beginning at a stone in the North-Kill creek, near a black oak tree on the land of John Riegel; thence S. 89° W. 1306 perches to a black oak tree on land of Jonas Christman; thence S. 62° W. 334 ps. to a point on the dividing line between Tulpehocken and Upper Tulpehocken townships, at or near a hickory tree on land of Daniel Kline; thence along said dividing-line to a point where Marion, Tulpehocken and Upper Tulpehocken townships meet; and thence continuing in the same course S. 23° E. to the Tulpehocken creek (altogether 1209 ps.); thence down the Tulpehocken creek to the North-Kill creek (about 1350 ps.); thence up the North-Kill creek, 1054 ps., to the beginning—the tract containing 10,493 acres." No name for this new township was recommended by the commissioners. Only one taxable excepted to the confirmation of the report, and his exceptions were technical. A large number of taxables recommended the name of "Lower Tulpehocken." The court confirmed the report on January 28, 1852, and directed the township to be named "Jefferson." ¹

For first taxables, see Tulpehocken township.

Early Families.—Accounts of the early settlers appear in township from which Jefferson was formed. The Potteiger family settled first on the Wm. L. Klopp farm, in North Heidelberg township, and there John Adam Potteiger reared sons named Adam, Michael and Conrad. The former moved to Jefferson, settling on the farm now owned by his grandson, Adam N. He had two sons named John and Adam and a daughter who married Michael Miller, also of this township. Brothers of the first John Adam settled at Reading, also in Lebanon Co. A branch of the Potteiger family, commonly called Batteiger, settled near Straustown, where descendants still live. The Riegel family also made early improvements in the township, which are still owned by the family. John Riegel had sons named David, Michael, Abraham and Jacob, the first-named still living in Jefferson. On the Rehersburg road John Miller made notable improvements. He was the father of sons named Samuel, John and Henry, whose descendants continued to live in the county. In the southern part the Smith family was prominent, and in the central the Shaeffer. John Shaeffer lived on the present Wm. Shaeffer farm, removing thence to Reading. He was a son of Michael Shaeffer and a brother of Moses. In the northwestern part lived another Shaeffer family as early settlers, but not related to the foregoing.

Industries.—On the Little North-Kill there was a mill operated at an early day by Benjamin Miller, who was succeeded by Jonathan Miller, Moses Schock, Ephraim Moyer and the present Jonathan K. Potteiger, the latter operating the old mill in an improved condition. A distillery at this point, and carried on for a time by Benj. Miller, is no longer in use. On the North-Kill the Haag family had one of the first mills in this part of the county. It was successively owned by Jacob, John and Jonathan Haag and still belongs to the family. On the same stream, near Bernville, in Penn township John Haag built a mill in 1838, which is now operated by John Kissling.

In the southwestern part of the township is the old Jacob Gerhart mill, operated as the property of Wm. Derr. In the southern part there is a small water-power on a stream near the Tulpehocken, where David Brumbaugh had in successful operation a fulling-mill. This was enlarged and carried on more extensively by Isaac Yost. On account of its isolated location, the mill was closed and the machinery removed about fifteen years ago.

¹ The president judge upon the bench then was Hon. J. Pringle Jones, a sterling Democrat. The vote of the township for Governor in November preceding was: Democratic, 293; Whig, 88. The judge doubtless appreciated this preponderance of political sentiment and named the new township after a typical Democrat. He did not apparently appreciate the public sentiment for a local name. In this respect he acted differently from Judge Porter, who named Upper Tulpehocken in 1821.

West of Shaefferstown, Samuel Miller carried on a tannery about sixty years. He made an excellent quality of leather. The business is now carried on by Jacob Miller, who employs steam-power and tans after modern methods.

The tannery of Henry Miller, south of the village of Shaefferstown, worked in the old way, has long since been abandoned.

CHURCHES.

CHRIST’S CHURCH (Lutheran and Reformed) is situated on the Tulpehocken Creek, in the southeastern part of the township. It is sometimes called the “Little Tulpehocken Church,” to distinguish it from the old Tulpehocken Church, at Stouchsburg. For more than a hundred years the church was devoted exclusively to the worship of the Lutheran congregation, but since February 18, 1853, the Reformed congregation has had a joint interest in the property. This consisted in 1885 of church building and thirty-five acres of land. The landed property was conveyed to the congregation in 1744 by Richard and Thomas Penn, proprietors, and in the instrument making this conveyance Jacob Miller, Simon Minig, Conrad Ernst, Mathias Smith, Henry Gruber and Martin Batteiger are named as trustees. About this time a log meeting-house was built, and it continued in use until 1809, when the present edifice took its place. It is of stone, thirty-four by forty feet, two stories high, with gallery in the auditorium. The old church had a singular cresting on the roof, which consisted of a vane, crowned with a small rooster. The interior of the present church has been changed considerably, but the outside remains about as built in 1809.

In 1789 church regulations were adopted. From that time on the church flourished until many members moved away, between 1830 and 1850. The Lutheran congregation in 1885 numbered about one hundred and forty members, and the Reformed one hundred. The Lutheran pastor was Rev. A. J. Long, and the Reformed, Rev. Thomas C. Leinbach.

ST. PAUL’S CHURCH (Lutheran and Reformed) is situated at Shaefferstown. It was built in 1884–85. The corner-stone was laid August 24, 1884, and the church formally dedicated July 19, 1885. It is built of brick, and surmounted by a shapely steeple, in which a clear-toned bell is suspended. The cost was about five thousand dollars. In September, 1885, the Rev. L. D. Stambaugh organized the Reformed congregation, and became the first pastor; there were forty members. The Lutheran Congregation was organized November 22, 1885, by the Rev. B. E. Kramlich, president of the Synod, with about the same number of members.

SCHOOLS.—Soon after the township was settled a school was started at the Little Tulpehocken Church, in which instruction was imparted in the German language. It was kept up until about 1850. The first English school was opened sixty-five years ago, through the efforts of John Potteiger, in a room in a spring-house which stood on the old Potteiger farm. Thomas Shields, James Rogers and others were the teachers of schools well attended by the larger boys of the township. About 1845 Daniel Potteiger was instrumental in establishing another English school in the central part of the township, which was kept until the free-school system was adopted.

SHAEFFERSTOWN.—This is the only village in the township, and takes its name from John Shaeffer, who laid out the town-plan in 1836. That year the first house was built by Michael Fox. It is the second building east of the new church. Fox was by occupation a laborer. The same year another house was built by Zadock Weaver, a carpenter. This was destroyed by fire in 1839. The following year it was rebuilt. Another house was also built, which is now part of the tavern stand. This was owned by Christian Bombauer, who was the first inn-keeper. Joseph Manbeck enlarged the house, and in 1852 Isaac and Samuel Noll were the inn-keepers. John S. Holtzman enlarged the house still more. His family have kept the inn a number of years.

The first store was kept by Moses Schock and William Shaffer, in a small building opposite the present church, in 1846, and removed two years later to the tavern building, and since that time stores have been continuously kept at that place. Among others in trade there have been Isaac and Samuel Noll, Joseph Manbeck, Frank and James Crissman, and, since 1877, the Holtzmans. Crissman & Lesher opened the second store, in 1864, in the building now occupied by Adam Gotschall and Jeremiah Turk. The latter is the postmaster of the Tulpehocken post office, located at Shaefferstown. It was first kept by Moses Schoek. A daily mail from Reading is supplied, and telephonic communication with that place is also maintained.

The first smith at Shaefferstown was Michael Seitzener; Isaac Miller, the tailor; and Samuel Moyer, the cabinet-maker. The place had different mechanic-shops in 1885, and in addition to the foregoing had about twenty residences.

The first trading-point in this locality was half a mile east of the present village, where John Kersch had a store in 1813. Daniel Potteiger was the last in trade there. Close by, on the road leading to Straustown, Christian Long had a country tavern, which was kept open until about 1851, when the place was converted into a farmhouse.

HEIDELBERG TOWNSHIP. 1

ERECITION OF TOWNSHIP.—The early history of Heidelberg township is inseparably connected with Tulpehocken district. The first settlements were made in the vicinity of Womelsdorf, to the east and west and north of the Tulpehocken Creek, and they took the name "Tulpehocken" naturally after the creek. The Indians had a settlement or village here before the early immigrants arrived, which was known by the same name. The township of Heidelberg was laid off from Tulpehocken and erected in the year 1734,—this having been done at Lancaster at the same time that the town of Lancaster was erected as a separate district. The name was suggested by the settlers to hold in continual remembrance their "father-land" across the sea, where they were born and whence they had shortly before emigrated.

With the other territory west of the Schuylkill, it continued a part of Lancaster County until 1752 when Berks County was erected. During these eighteen years many settlers entered the township, 2 took up large tracts of land and improved them with buildings and by cultivation. And about the same time that the inhabitants proceeded to establish this township for their convenience, they also founded a church for themselves, near the centre, and about eight miles from the "Tulpehocken (or Reed's) Church." It was called "Hain's Church," after George Hain (Hain), who donated land for the purpose of erecting a church thereon.

The area of the township was about thirty-seven thousand acres, embracing territory about eight and a quarter miles long and seven miles wide. The boundary lines were as follows: Tulpehocken Creek from Lancaster County line to mouth of Cacoosing Creek; thence by the Cacoosing Creek southeastwardly to the Lancaster County line and thence northwardly, along said county line, to the Tulpehocken Creek.

In 1833 the borough of Womelsdorf was erected out of a part of this township, situated in the western section.

DIVISION OF TOWNSHIP.—The inhabitants finding the township too large for the convenient transaction of public business 3 "thereto necessarily appertaining," presented four petitions, to court on April 3, 1832, asking for the division of the township—a small stream called "Spring Creek," which runs through the township, affording such a natural division line as to remedy completely the evils complained of. The court appointed John Miller, George Gernand and Joseph Schmucker as commissioners. These commissioners viewed the township and the proposed line of division, and on the 23d of May, 1832, recommended the division as prayed for, reporting the following line: "Beginning at a chestnut tree, a corner of Lancaster, Lebanon and Berks Counties; thence through land of Matthias Wenrich, George Ege and Daniel Bechtel, N. 44° E. 286 ps. to a cherry tree; thence through lands of Peter Leininger, Frederick Bechtel, deceased, Matthias Wenrich and David Wenrich, N. 35° E. 662 ps. to Spring Creek; thence along said creek to the outlet thereof at the Tulpehocken Creek, a distance of 2045 ps.," the total length being nine and one-third miles. Exceptions were filed, setting forth that the greater part of the line was not described by hearing and distance; that the line was arbitrary and did not divide the township in equal parts, but cut the greater part of the roads into the west ern portion, which would thereby make the road taxes oppressive. The report was set aside on the 12th of January, 1833.

Ten years afterward the application for a division of the township was renewed— the petitioners praying for a straight line from the corner of the counties named to the “Big Spring,” and thence by Spring Creek to Tulpehocken. The commissioners appointed were Samuel S. Jackson, Benjamin Tyson and Matthias S. Richards, who on June 17, 1842, reported the line suggested—the first line being “N. 42° E. 957 ps. from the county corner to the Big Spring, and thence by Spring creek to the Tulpehocken Creek (by courses and distances) 2147 perches”—the entire line being in length nine and seven-tenths miles, and recom-manded the name of Lower Heidelberg for the eastern portion of the township. Their report was presented on September 15, 1842, and confirmed nisi. No exceptions were filed against this report and the eastern portion was accordingly erected under the name of Lower Heidelberg.

Old Buildings.—Among the old buildings in the township is part of an out-building on the old Sheetz farm, now owned by Peter Marshall, which, it is thought, was put up by Conrad Weiser. It is a low two-story building. It contains a large fire-place in the upper and lower rooms. As the walls are very massive, the idea of using the building as a means of protection is suggested. The Weiser farm contained two hundred and forty-eight acres of land, not very remarkable for fertility; and the selection was more likely made on account of the abundance of excellent water and the fine timber which covered the ground. East from this farm are several old buildings, used for public purposes when the highway was along the base of hills, where these houses stand. One of these is stone, the other of logs; but both are in a well-preserved condition. West, on the turnpike, is a large frame-building in which John Seltzer and others kept a tavern.

Early Settlers.—North of Womelsdorf one of the early settlers was John Deppen, who resided there until his death. He was the father of sons named Samuel, Joseph, Isaac, Adam and Michael. Some of their descendants still live in the township.

Among many other families who contributed to the development of the township were the Eckerts, Filberts, Fidlers, Leisses, Lauckes, Livingoods and Seltzers, most of whom have retained their landed interests.

Grave of Conrad Weiser.—The remains of Conrad Weiser and his wife still lie where they were interred a hundred and twenty-six years ago. The burial plat is in the orchard on the Sheetz farm, about fifty yards west from the house and three-quarters of a mile east from Womelsdorf. It is situated between the turnpike and Lebanon Valley Railroad. When the place was visited by the writer, November 12, 1885, there was nothing to indicate the spot except a single head-sandstone, on which was engraved,— after he had abandoned the Berkshire Furnace, in Lower Heidelberg township. He carried on the same successfully until 1824, when a depression in business caused him to suspend. In the course of years Robeson & Brooke became the owners, having the property until 1858, when Ferguson, White & Co. came in possession of it; while owned by them the name of the furnace was changed to Robesonia. Nathaniel Ferguson was a skillful and successful iron-master, but was obliged by weight of years to relinquish the business in 1885. It is now carried on by the "Robesonia Iron Company, Limited." In 1845, while owned by Robeson & Brooke an anthracite furnace was put up in place of the charcoal furnace. In 1858 another furnace of larger capacity was erected in its place, and other improvements were made afterwards. While putting up a new stack an accident occurred, on November 7, 1884, by the falling of a large furnace-stack, which had been in process of construction the previous June, which resulted in the death of seven men—Joseph Reed, Davilla Beckley, Henry Spanger, David M. Person, Monroe Pelpher, Frederick Foreman and Henry Putt—and the wounding of eight others—Lewis Dietrich, Jacob Fox, John Weinhold, James McCloskey, Charles F. Moyer, John Capp, Frank Spatz and Frederick Knause.

The demoli-bed stack stood on cast-iron columns thirty feet high, and the body of the stack was forty feet more in height and fifty feet in diameter. Within were the seven men engaged on the lining and they had almost reached the top, within fifteen feet, working on the scaffolding on the in-walls. Below were the bricklayers and tenders. Beneath all was Henry Putt, an old man, whose labor consisted in filling the buckets with firebrick and clay. The cause of the fall was the breaking of the columns, which fell like a flash all in a heap and without warning. The wall did not fall at once, but the scaffolding fell and then the walls gave way, covering the victims within a living grave. By the stack stood the casting-house, part of which was carried away by the fall. The columns twisted clean out before the fall. The cause was the weakness of the support on which the stack rested, the weight having been three thousand tons.

The damage to the property was repaired as speedily as possible, but it was deemed best to practically rebuild the furnace in 1885. Accordingly, the present owners availed themselves of all the improvements suggested by the most approved systems of iron manufacture, so that the capacity is now about one thousand tons per week, making the furnace in all its appointments and attendant interests one of the most valuable properties in the eastern part of the State. Employment is given to more than one hundred and fifty men. The ore used is procured from the celebrated Cornwall mines, in Lebanon County, on which the furnace holds a perpetual ore-right for the gratuitous supply of as much ore as will keep one stack in blast. Owing to improved methods, this amount is now thirty times greater than when the contract giving this right was entered into.

The fine cut-stone mansion, built by George Ege, at the furnace, in 1807, has also been repaired, and the grist-mill, long in operation, has been improved to meet the wants of present customers.

East of Robesonia is a spring of unusual size and beauty, popularly called, from its former owner, Germant's Big Spring. In 1775 it was known as "Allen's Spring." Its water is very clear and refreshing, with a volume large enough to furnish power for a mill several hundred yards below the spring. One of the early owners of this mill was Daniel Bechtol. The present improved mill is the property of James T. Reber, hardware merchant of Reading. The next water-power below operated a woolen-mill for John Eckert, now discontinued, as well as a distillery, which was carried on some time in the same building.

On the farm of the Orphans' Home is one of the finest springs in the county. Its volume is great. Power was afforded to operate a grist-mill and distillery a few hundred yards below it. This place became widely known as "Manderbach's Summer Resort," and was largely patronized. The distillery produced a fine quality of whiskey. Large wagons conveyed it to distant counties. There were also grounds for target practicing. Manderbach himself having been well skilled in the use of the rifle. The mill still remains, but the distillery has long since been demolished.

CHURCHES.

ST. DANIEL'S CHURCH is situated a mile north of Robesonia, at the intersection of several roads, from which fact it is sometimes called “Die Ecke Kirche.” The present building was put up in 1814. It has been remodeled and improved inside so that it bears little resemblance to its original condition. It is the third house used as a place of worship at this point, the first having been of logs, and built during the early settlement of the country. The building preceding the present one was put up in 1757; the congregation had the ministry of the Rev. John Nicholas Kurtz, who lived at Stouchsburg.

Upon the dedication of the present church the pastor was Rev. Daniel Ulrich, who served the congregation thirty-nine years. Then came the Revs. T. T. Jaeger, eleven years; H. S. Miller, one year; and the Rev. Aaron Finfrock, since 1863.

Until December 25, 1876, the church was entirely under the control of the Lutherans; then Rev. T. C. Leinbach organized a German Reformed congregation, with twenty-nine members, which prospered to such an extent that in 1885 the membership was one hundred and fifty-five. Mr. Leinbach is still pastor.

The affairs of the church are now controlled by the two congregations. The property includes well-kept cemeteries and a residence. In the latter is the home of John S. Henry, for many years the organist.

In the same locality are the grounds of the “Heidelberg Cemetery Company,” embracing several acres of land, which was opened to the public in 1880. It has been made an attractive place.

Union Chapel is situated at Robesonia. It is a neat stone chapel, built in 1869 by Ferguson, White & Co., furnace owners, for the free use of such religious bodies as may choose to maintain worship there. It was dedicated May 1, 1870. Originally intended for the accommodation of the furnace employees, it has proven a great convenience to the people of the village. A Sunday-school is regularly conducted in it, which is well attended by all classes. For many years Nathaniel Ferguson was the superintendent. The Presbyterians and German Baptists most frequently worship in the chapel.

Bethany Orphans’ Home.—This charitable institution is located near Womelsdorf Station, on the Lebanon Valley Railroad. It was founded September 21, 1863, at Philadelphia, Pa., by a number of Synods of the German Reformed Church of North America, but at present is maintained by but two Synods of that church. The location at Philadelphia not being desirable, the home was moved to Bridesburg July 13, 1864, where it remained about three years. On account of the prevalence of sickness among its inmates, a new location was sought where greater healthfulness could be obtained in connection with other advantages. Accordingly, for this purpose the property known as “Manderbach’s Summer Resort,” comprising twenty-six acres of land, on which was a three-story brick building, thirty-six by one hundred and twenty feet, mill and other improvements, was purchased in 1867 and fitted up to adapt it to the wants of the Home, and the institution was transferred October 1st of that year. In the fall of 1872 a farm of sixty acres of good land was added to the property and the necessary buildings provided to carry it on as part of the Home. The last improvement was a fine barn, in 1885, at a cost of two thousand three hundred dollars. Here the Home enjoyed uninterrupted prosperity until the midnight of November 11, 1881, when the main house and some other buildings were destroyed by fire, with all their contents, the inmates only escaping. The old mill and remaining buildings were fitted up, and after a short interruption the work of the Home was carried on as before. Steps were at once taken to rebuild the Home, and under the management of Mr. Isaac McHose, of Reading, as chairman of the building committee, the present superior three-story brick structure was erected and ready for use in December, 1882. The building is finely finished, heated throughout by steam and lighted by gasoline. Water is supplied on each floor from a reservoir on the mountain side and from a tank on the top of the building. The upper floor has the dormitories of the Home. The second floor contains the chapel, with a seating capacity for three hundred persons, music and recitation-rooms, parlors and offices for the matron and the superintendent. The lower floor is devoted to the household affairs of the Home. The entire cost was nearly thirty thousand dollars.
The Home is controlled by a board of managers, under the direction of the Reformed Churches contributing to its support, and is composed of twelve members and the superintendent ex officio. It passes upon the applications for admission to the Home, basing its action upon the recommendations of the congregations forwarding such applications. Orphan children more than six years old may enter the Home and be entitled to all its benefits, remaining on the terms of their indenture or until an equally good home is provided elsewhere. The inmates are instructed in the common English branches, German reading and writing, the common sciences and algebra, ten months of whose vigilant care has done much to promote the welfare of the Home. He resigned in January, 1886, and was succeeded by Rev. Thomas M. Yundt, who is the present superintendent.

VILLAGES.

WOMELS DORF STATION is fifteen miles from Reading, on the Lebanon Valley Railroad, and three-quarters of a mile south of the borough of Womelsdorf. Near by is the Bethany Orphans' Home. Around the depot a dozen buildings have been erected. The hamlet dates its beginning from 1858, when the station was established on lands given for this purpose by John Sheetz. The large school being afforded each year. Religious instruction is imparted by daily worship, preaching in the chapel every Sunday and in the Sabbath-school, upon all of which attendance is required.

In connection with the school work each pupil is required to labor several hours per day, the inmates being divided into four sections for this purpose. By this means the physical condition of the pupil is promoted, and it has been found so beneficial that not a single case of sickness, requiring the care of a physician, was reported in 1885. The highest number of inmates the Home has had was one hundred and five. In the fall of 1885 there were but sixty-nine. These were in charge of the superintendent, a matron and two lady teachers. The superintendent since November 12, 1868, has been the Rev. D. B. Albright.

Hotel building was put up in 1867 by Isaac Kintzer. Some years later Lewis, Jacob and William Livingood put up a fine, large factory building and supplied it with machinery for the manufacture of bolts and nuts. After a short operation the works were closed and the machinery removed. Afterward the building was used for some years as a creamery, but latterly it has not been occupied for manufacturing purposes.

ROBESONIA was laid out on lands of the Robesonia Furnace Company in 1855, by Robeson & Brooke, and it was named after Henry P. Robeson. The plan contained one hundred and fifteen lots. Before 1857 there was only one house on the present village site. It is still standing on the turnpike, and forms part of the public-house of Frank Filbert. At that time it was the property of Leonard Kohl, and Samuel Dechert occupied it as a store. Afterward John L. Fisher, Jacob Wenrich, Samuel Wenrich, Iaac Sohl, Jacob Noll and Wm. Filbert became residents of the village.

In 1885 there were about fifty residences, three stores, three taverns, a good school-house, a chapel for common worship, and, in addition, the interests connected with the furnace. Gideon B. Noll is the oldest merchant in the place. Hiester Filbert has been in trade for fifteen years. Before the village was founded, stores were kept in connection with the furnace by Leonard Kohl and others.

Dr. James C. Cress was the first to locate here as a physician; and other practitioners have been Doctors C. Strohm, Jacob Ammon, Adam Dundore, John A. Conrad (since 1873) and Harry H. Bollman.

The manufacture of cigar-boxes by machinery was begun here in 1880, by Wm. Fidler, and is still continued by him.

REILY L. FISHER is the great-grandson of Peter A. A. Fisher, who resided in Spring township, this county. John Fisher, son of Peter, was born in Lower Heidelberg township, of the same county, where he established a paper-mill, since converted into a woolen-mill, and conducted the business of paper manufacturing.

He married Rosina Hain, daughter of John and Margaret Hain, born in 1796. Their children were Elenora, born in 1797; Samuel, October 28, 1799; Peter, in 1801; Anna C., in 1804; Elizabeth, in 1805, deceased in youth; John, in 1808; who also died in early life; Anna, in 1810; Elijah, in 1812; Daniel, in 1815; Sarah, in 1818, and Jeremiah, in 1821.

Samuel Fisher spent his life as a farmer, in the township of his birth. On the 28th of December, 1821, he was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Peter Laucks, of the same township.
Their children were Reily L., born Nov. 12, 1822; Mary, March 27, 1824; Adam, March 27, 1825; David, April 7, 1829; Elizabeth, May 14, 1834.

Reily L. Fisher was born in Heidelberg township, where he has since lived. His educational advantages were such as the paid schools of the neighborhood afforded, after which, for a limited time, he assisted in the labor of the farm, and later was engaged as clerk at Sinking Spring and Wernersville.

On the 23d of January, 1851, he was married to Matilda B., daughter of Conrad and Magdalene Reber, of Bern township. The children of this union are Mary Magdalene, (Mrs. Albert A. Wenrich, of Heidelberg township) born March 13, 1852; Samuel, January 10, 1854, married to Ellen, daughter of Michael Ruth; Anna Elizabeth, September 21, 1856, deceased; Sarah Rebecca, (Mrs. David H. Hain), March 8, 1859; Amelia Catherine, June 9, 1861; Rosa Ellen, January 2, 1865; and Matilda Lucetta, March 21, 1872. Mr. Fisher remained on the farm one year after his marriage, and then embarked in mercantile business at Sinking Spring. He eventually returned to the farm, and on his abandonment of active labor placed his son Samuel in charge of the property, which he now cultivates. In 1874, on his retirement, he removed to his present home, in Heidelberg township, and is occupied in the improvement of a small tract of land adjacent to residence. Mr. Fisher is a strong Democrat in his politics. His ability and integrity have caused him often to be solicited for the offices of guardian, trustee and administrator, which duties have ever been fulfilled with scrupulous care. He is a supporter of the Reformed Church, of which his wife and children are members.

Nathaniel Ferguson was born in Lancaster County, Pa., November 20, 1817, and is the son of John and Elizabeth Ferguson, who emigrated to the United States about the year 1800, from near Dublin, and located in the above county, where they lived and reared a family of twelve children. The youngest son, Nathaniel, left home when eighteen years of age, with fifty cents given by his mother and her blessing and wishes for success. Having graduated at the Moscow Academy in Lancaster, where he had shown himself a diligent pupil, in 1839 he became clerk at the Elizabeth Furnace, in Lancaster County, then owned by the heirs of James Coleman, one of the proprietors of the Cornwall mines, two and a half years later rising to the management of the business, which position he held for seven years. He then removed to Swaytara Furnace, Schuylkill County, and became one of the firm of Eckert, Gilbert & Co., assuming meanwhile the active management. The co-partnership lasted until 1855, when they ceased operations, as the use of anthracite coal had superseded charcoal. In 1857 he removed to Robesonia Furnace and assumed the management. In 1860, at the death of Henry P. Robeson, he purchased an interest and became a partner in the firm of White, Ferguson & Co. In 1863 the firm became White & Ferguson, and remained so until 1875, the interest of Mr. White, who died in 1868, having been continued for the benefit of his heirs. The surviving partner then purchased the interest of one of the heirs and the firm became Ferguson, White & Co. One furnace being abandoned in 1874, after the enlargement of No. 2 stack, it was deemed advisable to manufacture but one brand of pig-iron — "Robesonia," — made exclusively of Cornwall ore, working under an ore-right used at Robesonia (formerly the Reading) Furnace since 1793, which right had been purchased from Peter Grubb, the original owner of the Cornwall ore-banks, and transferred from the Berkshire Furnace (originally named Roxborough), near Wernersville, in Berks County, subsequently abandoned. In 1885 Mr. Ferguson sold his interest in Robesonia, and, retiring from active business, removed to Reading, where he now resides. He was married, in 1856, to Miss Amanda Davenport, granddaughter of Judge William Adams, a member of Congress in the early part of the present century. As a man of self-reliance, sound education, untiring energy and great executive ability, the result, a successful manufacturer and clear-sighted business man, seemed as much a natural consequence as that Mr. Ferguson should win the respect and regard of all who knew him for his unswerving integrity, benevolence and liberality toward all. Patriotic and public-spirited, generous and kind, after a life of great activity he is resting from his labors, surrounded by his family of seven children, at his home in Reading.
HEIDELBERG LOWER.

The township of Heidelberg Lower was laid off from Heidelberg in 1842, with an area of about eighteen thousand acres. The population was about nineteen hundred. In 1850 the population was twenty-one hundred and forty-four, and in 1852 the total vote polled at the Presidential election was three hundred and ninety-five.

Ten years after the erection of the township the inhabitants felt the inconvenience of its extended territory, especially in respect to holding elections. They presented a petition to court, on April 10, 1852, asking for its division by a line extending from a point in the Cacoosing Creek, where the turnpike crosses the township line; thence in a straight line, northwardly, to a point in the Tulpehocken Creek at Peter Hain's mill-dam; and the erection of the northern section into a new township—and the court appointed Michael K. Boyer, Henry Nagle and Richard Boone as viewers. These viewers examined the territory, and decided that there was a great propriety in making the division, reporting the line suggested—"N. 58 1/2 W., 920 perches," and suggesting "Cacoosing township" as a proper name for the northern section laid off. This subdivision cut off about seven thousand five hundred acres in the proposed township. Their report was presented on August 12, 1852, and held under advisement. Technical exceptions were filed, and a remonstrance signed by one hundred and fifty-nine inhabitants,—representing the division to be against the best interests of the township,—was also filed. In February, 1853, the court decided not to confirm the report, and so the proposed township of "Cacoosing" was not granted.

One of the most prominent settlers of the township was George Hain (Hain), who, with the Kricks, Ruths and Fishers, came some time about 1730. He was a man of remarkable energy and became a large land-owner, having purchased in 1735 nine hundred and twenty acres; in 1741, one hundred and ninety acres; in 1742, two hundred and ninety-two acres; and in 1743, three hundred and twenty-seven acres. For the Allen tract (included in the first quantity) he agreed to pay one hundred and sixty-five pounds and a yearly rent of one and one-half bushels of wheat per hundred acres, to be paid forever after the 1st of November, 1736, and to be delivered at the city of Philadelphia. The Hain homestead was west of the village of Wernersville, on what is now known as the Hill farm. The original buildings have been removed. He died in 1746, and on the 24th of June, 1747, his sons, Peter, Adam, George, Frederick, Henry, Casper and John Christian, met and agreed to pay their mother, Veronica, each two pounds per year, on every 24th day of June, during her natural life.

Among the later improvements made by the Hains was a house of limestone, built by a German mason, said to have been a "Redemptioner," on the farm now owned by Henry Werner. It is one of the oldest buildings in the township. The houses on the farm of Thomas Reber, near Wernersville, and the one on the Eberle place are also very old. Descendants of the Hain, Dundore, Fisher, Krick, Ruth and Reber families still live in the township, on some of the original purchases.

INDUSTRIES.—The people of Lower Heidelberg are distinctively agriculturists, there being but few water-powers which admitted improvement for manufacturing purposes. Before the woods were cleared off, the brooks, flowing from South Mountain, had greater volume than at present and upon them small mills were built. One of the first was the old Hain mill, put in operation soon after 1755. Its capacity was small. The mill which afterward occupied the site was also a simple affair. It was replaced by the present mill, which is owned by George W. Wertz. Above this improvement is the gun-barrel factory of Lerch, Hassler & Co., worked on a small scale. This business was begun here about fifty years ago by Jacob Siegfried, who turned out good work. On Spring Creek proper, John Fisher had a paper-mill before 1800, which, after being operated some time, was converted into a joiner’s shop. Another change was also made by John Keim, in the manufacture of gun-barrels for a few years. Then Peter Hain established the foundry business, which was successfully carried on by him several years. Common castings were made. Some of the buildings remaining and other improvements by Peter Hain were next devoted to a woolen factory, which is the industry now carried on under the proprietorship of Ulysses Hain and Wm. Klopp. The motive-power is water and steam and the products are common woolen goods, carpets and yams. The next power below operates the Hain grist-mill, the mill-house in use being the second at this site. It was long the property of Peter Hain. At Brownsville Philip Von Neida employed the power (formerly used for a saw-mill) to operate a grist-mill, which he built in 1855 and which is still carried on by John B. Flickinger. At Wernersville a later industry is a creamery, established in 1882 by Eirich & Klopp, and of which Lewis M. Klopp has been the sole owner the past year. It is devoted to the manufacture of butter and cheese and is well patronized. Here also the quarrying and shipment of limestones was once an important business, among the firms engaged in it being Samuel, Charles and John Fiant, John Widmayer & Co., Eirich & Hassler, Zinn & Binckley and Deppen & Wenrich. The latter operated on a large scale. When the three quarries at this place were fully worked, employment was given to a large number of men. Latterly but little quarrying has been done, on account of inflowing water.

The only industry which had any historic interest attaching to it was the old Berkshire Furnace. It was located on the small stream near Dr. Walter’s Mountain Home. It was a small charcoal furnace, erected by William Bird previous to 1760, and was at first operated by him. The ore was mined at the base of Cushion Hill, in what is now Spring township. After the death of William Bird, a few years after the building of the furnace, his widow became the owner, and, in 1764, George Ege leased the property from her and operated the furnace about thirty years. About 1790 Ege became the owner of the property and soon afterward discontinued running it on account of the scarcity of water. Meantime, he had built the “Reading Furnace,” on Mill Creek, to the west. Frequently cannon-balls were found on the site of the furnace and also other articles of iron.

St. John’s Church, (Reformed) commonly known as “Hain’s Church,” is the only house of worship in the township. It is located in an elevated position, about a mile north from Wernersville. The church lot contains about seven acres of land, of which five were donated before 1735 by George Hain, after whom the church was named. The building was constructed of logs in 1735, small in size but strongly built. A school was carried on in this building at that time. The male members (it is reported by tradition) always carried their rifles with them when the presence of the enemy was reported. Some were posted as sentinels on the outside to watch the movements of the Indians, whilst the others worshipped inside. After peace was assured, there came an era of prosperity which enabled the congregation to build a better church. It was erected in 1765, and was a substantial stone edifice, forty by fifty feet, with walls three feet thick. A large sandstone was placed in the wall, with the following inscription:

Heidelberg Township—Hoch Deutsche Reformierte Kirche.
Alle die ein und aus gehen sollen Gott und dem Koenig getre und bleiben.

After the war for independence was over, and their allegiance to the crown could no longer be enforced, one of the builders (Ruth, it is said) exclaimed “Der verdammt Koenig muss raus!” A chisel was procured and the word King was cut from the stone. In this condition it is still preserved in the building. In 1794 a pipe-organ was supplied. The next improvement was made in 1844; the brick floor was removed and the galleries were rebuilt, being made more sloping than previously. In 1851 a steeple was
TOWNSHIPS OF COUNTY.

The addition to the building gave it the shape of the letter T, and the entire dimensions of the church increased to fifty by eighty-two feet. The basement is thirty by forty-eight feet, and the tower is one hundred and thirty-two feet high. The new part is of brick and the remaining walls of the old church have been made to resemble brickwork. The interior has been handsomely finished in oil and water-colors, the entire improvements costing eleven thousand dollars. The old bell having broken in 1884, a new one was supplied in 1885, whose volume and fullness of tone causes it to be heard many miles. The capacity of the building is a little more than eight hundred. It is sometimes too small to accommodate all the members of the congregation. The cemetery and the church surroundings show careful attention on the part of those entrusted with their oversight, and the place is, with all its appointments, creditable to the community.

One of the most important events in the early history of the church was the meeting of the Coetus, on the 29th of August, 1743, which was attended by fifty elders. At that time the Rev. Jacob Lisby was the pastor, and he was the first minister who had a regular pastoral connection. The preachers before that time had been the Revs. Boehm, Weise and Schaller. The pastors following the Rev. Lisby were Revs. Wm. Boas, Philip Moyer, Wm. Pauli, Wm. Henkel, D.D., Frederick Herman, J. S. Dubbs, Anthony Hautz and Thomas H. Leinbach. In 1854 the Rev. Augustus C. Pauli began a pastorate which was the most important in the history of the church, and whose ministrations harmonized the congregation and caused it to increase in membership. He continued until his death, in 1871. His successor was the Rev. W. F. P. Davis, who began on the 17th of March, 1872, and continued until September 8, 1883, when Rev. W. J. Kershner became the pastor.

HAIN CEMETERY is in the immediate neighborhood of the church. It is controlled by a company which was organized in 1876, with the following members: Isaac Hain, Moses Gockley, John A. Weitzel, John W. Ernst, John H. Miller and William Yoder. The company purchased seven acres of land, and laid out two acres of the same in lots sixteen by eighteen feet.

VILLAGES.

WERNERSVILLE is on the Berks and Dauphin turnpike and the Lebanon Valley Railroad, eight miles from Reading. It was laid out in December, 1855, on the lands of William Werner, after whom it was named. The plat was made by Aaron Albright, surveyor, and shows one hundred and thirty-one lots, located south of the turnpike and extending to the railroad. The adjoining lands were owned on the north by John A. Hain and William Werner (the latter was a farmer and lived in this locality until his death), on the east by Thomas Reber and Israel Grim, and on the west was the Lerch tavern. The buildings on the plat were the houses of Reuben Keim and a tenement house, occupied by Daniel Stoudt, the father of nineteen children. He was by trade a mason. Near him lived John Maurer, a shoemaker, who is the oldest citizen in the place, having settled here in 1852. East of him was a large stone building, put up by William Werner in 1849, and occupied by Philip Ludwig as a store. The Wernersville post-office was established in 1853, and first opened there. Farther down the pike was the fine stone mansion of William and Rebecca Werner, erected in 1844; farther east, at what is now the lower end of the village, was the inn kept by ex-Sheriff Binckley, still owned by the family. The Lerch tavern was in a large rough-stone building, put up before 1800, and kept in 1855 by Daniel Lerch. Its use as a public-house was long ago discontinued. It is still in excellent condition as a residence belonging to the Lerch family. Other early settlers of Wernersville were Jonas Kuorr, carpenter; Daniel Seitzinger, blacksmith; Michael Newman, blacksmith; Charles Spohn, tailor; Michael Shrum, wheelwright; Fred. Werner, tinsmith; Samuel Charles, saddler; Harry Wolfskill, plasterer; Reuben Landis, cigar-maker. The latter trade was carried on in 1885 by Frank线 B. Sohline a factory with thirty hands. Allison H. Eirich was the first coach-maker and he was succeeded by John Roether. At the Lerch tavern the first stores were kept.

In 1872 J. W. Deppen put up a large building in the western part of the village, in which he has kept a public-house, and where the firm of Deppen & Wenrich has also merchandized. In this place is kept the Wernersville post-office, Dr. J. W. Deppen, postmaster, since October, 1885. There are four mails per day. Prior to its establishment here the office was kept at the Wernersville tavern, opposite the depot, by Charles Spohn. The building was put up in 1847; but was not at first used as a tavern. A fine grain warehouse, built by J. W. Deppen, is occupied by E. M. Witman, who is also a large lumber dealer.

One of the first located physicians was Dr. Edward Livingood, who removed to the West. A Dr. Kalbach, after being in practice a short time, removed, and Dr. Jacob Addams succeeded him. During the war he became a surgeon in the army. Dr. R. D. Weinrich became a practitioner at this place in 1864, and continued until 1879, when he took charge of the "Mountain Home." Dr. J. W. Deppen became a citizen of this place in 1872 and has followed his profession since that time. Dr. David H. Haines, after being in practice a few years, removed to Mount Pleasant. Since 1883 Dr. J. M. Myers has been in successful practice. The present veterinary surgeon is Dr. William H. Seitzinger, who succeeded Dr. Reuben H. Sponagle.

Loover Heidelberg Live-Stock and Theft Insurance Company was incorporated November 3, 1873. In January, 1886, the company reported a membership of one hundred and sixty-six and the following officers: John Roether, president; Frederick Frees, vice-president; John A. Weitzel, treasurer and collector; M. E. Smeltzer, secretary. The operations of the company are confined within a radius of twenty miles and have been successfully conducted since its organization. The rates of insurance have averaged about two dollars per hundred. The total disbursements per year are about twelve hundred dollars, which amount is nearly all collected on the mutual plan, there being only a small reserve fund. The home office is at Wernersville.

Brownsville is a small hamlet in the northwestern part of the township, containing about twenty buildings, an inn kept by Moses Bal-thaser and a store by M. W. Kieth. The latter is also the postmaster of the Lower Heidelberg office, established there in 1864. The place takes its name from the Brown family, who were early merchants at that point. Sebastian Blindlein carries on the business of coach-maker. East from this place is an old-time inn, popularly called the "Dry Tavern," not because those patronizing it could not obtain stimulating drinks, but because there is no running water in the locality. It was opened some time about 1800. Its use as an inn has long since been discontinued. Eastward, on the same State road, Isaac Addams opened another public-house at a later day, which was quite popular before the era of railroads. Isaac Addams, Jr., was also a landlord, and the place was last kept by the Haag family. The place was closed to the public about fifteen years ago, and the house is now a farm residence.

Blue Marsh is the name of a small village in the northern section of the township, close to the Tulpehocken Creek. It has been known by this name for one hundred and fifty years. The Rebers were some of the earliest settlers in that vicinity. The place contains a number of dwellings, which extend along the "Bernville Road" for half a mile.

Lorah.—At the top of the hill, south of Blue Marsh, commonly known as "State Hill," a post-office was established recently. It contains a fine two-story tavern, coach-making establishment, blacksmith-shop and several buildings.

Health Resorts have given this locality great prominence. The mountains have peculiar configurations which afford gentle exposures and sheltered sides, beaming with the warmth of the glowing sun, or fanned by cooling breezes. This locality is almost wholly free from fogs, which sometimes hang over mountain-sides, and having a sandy and gravelly soil, which assures quick drainage in case of rains, there is no dampness and seldom any dew in summer. The temperature is equable, and Bayard Taylor pronounced it the finest climate in the world.

Dr. Charles Frederick Leisenring was the first person to utilize these advantages for sanitary purposes. In 1849 he put up a small frame building near the site of the present large “Grand View House.” The place was not so accessible as at present, and institutions of that kind had not yet been popularized. He continued successfully for nearly ten years, till his death. In this time he established a promising business and prepared the way for institutions of this kind. Dr. Aaron Smith then purchased the property, and shortly afterward (1860) improved the place by erecting a fine, large stone building. He conducted the enterprise with increasing success. In 1867 he erected a large stone addition to the building, and in 1874 a fine frame cottage opposite the main building. During this time Dr. R. T. Trall, of New York City, leased the institute and carried it on a year (1864–65). In 1874 Dr. J. S. Preston became the lessee, and shortly afterward Dr. Robert Walter. The latter was very successful for over three years. He then founded an institution of his own, a mile to the west, on a much more comprehensive scale, when the “Home” was again conducted by Dr. Smith for five years. In 1879 Drs. R. D. Wenrick and J. W. Deppen became the proprietors. They improved the property, changed the Home to an eclectic institution and have since been very successful. The main building and annex are heated by steam.

There are miles of walks and drives leading to many local points of interest. Included with the property are groves of native timber, some of them several acres in extent, and which are named after the woods growing there. “Cushion Peak” is also a part of this property. Tourists have declared the view from the buildings and also from this peak to be unsurpassed by any in America or Europe. It extends to the “Delaware Water Gap,” seventy-five miles to the northeast, and to the Swatara Gap, thirty miles to the northwest, overlooking the Schuylkill and Lebanon Valleys, with all their numerous fine farms, growing towns and busy thoroughfares. Since the ownership and management of the place by Messrs. Wenrick & Deppen, it has been known as “The Grand View House,” and patronized by many people every year from all parts of the country.

Walter’s Park Sanitarium.—After leaving the “Mountain Home” Dr. Robert Walter secured a fine site, one mile to the west, on the northerly slope of the South Mountain, and there erected a superior building for the accommodation of his patients and guests, taking possession in May, 1877. This building is known as “Chestnut Lodge.” The patronage was so liberal in the summer and fall of 1877 that tents were erected to afford shelter, and he at once began the erection of “Maple Wood Hall,” which was finished by the summer of 1878. In the spring of 1879 he built the “Home Cottage,” and in August of that year began work on “Science Hall,” completing it in 1880. The last-named is an imposing building, forty-eight by sixty-four feet, five stories high, exclusive of the attic, and is properly the hotel part of the sanitarium, containing the offices, parlors, dining-rooms, etc. The following year additional cottages were built, and, in 1882, a fine gymnasium. These four buildings are of stone, lined throughout to prevent dampness. Including piazzas, they aggregate three hundred feet front, and are arranged in semi-circular form, so as to obtain sunlight and air in abundance. They are capable of accommodating one hundred and fifty persons. The main building has an elevator for the use of feeble persons.

The parlors are large and airy, capable of seating two hundred persons. The dining-room is equally capacious and comfortable. The ceilings are twelve feet in height. The piazzas are double, extending around the principal buildings, connected with three floors, and so arranged that any one may walk out upon level ground from any one of them—an unusual convenience and safe fire-escape.

The gymnasium and bowling-alley are seventy-five by twenty-two feet in dimensions, twelve feet to ceiling, with abundant apparatus, health-lift, Indian-clubs, horizontal-bars, swings, traveling-rings, railroad, Gifford’s apparatus for rowing, etc., giving complete facilities for exercise.

The buildings are heated by steam. Each of the three lower floors is supplied with pure, soft water, obtained from the mountain, at an elevation above the buildings. The park comprises two hundred and forty acres, with over a score of buildings. The piazzas, and the property generally, afford magnificent views of the country to the north and east for many miles. The landscape gardener has embellished the grounds, bringing nature and art together with harmonious effects. More than two miles of walks and drives have been provided on the grounds, which afford a pleasing variety for all classes of persons.

The offices have telegraphic and telephonic connection. Dr. Walter and his wife have been very successful in building up and carrying on this sanitarium. The principles which they set forth, and the practices which they follow, have given the place its popularity and success.

_Sunny-Side Sanitarium_ is on the southern side of South Mountain, which insures it some advantages of location not possessed by the other places. It is three miles from Wernersville and about ten miles from Reading. Its situation upon a small plateau, eight hundred feet above tide-water, and four hundred feet above the adjacent valley, gives it a view both extensive and beautiful. A large portion of Lancaster County is spread before it like a great map. In the rear of the building, on the mountain-top, an observatory has been erected, which gives an additional elevation, from the summit of which a grand view is afforded to the north, east, south and west, overlooking mountains and valleys. The property embraces fifty acres of land, most of it sloping gently towards the south, and enjoying the protection and shelter of the wooded heights beyond. This delightful location was selected by Dr. James S. Preston.

He began improvements in 1879, and completed the buildings in the spring of 1880. The main building is of gray mountain stone, lined, and contains three full stories and a basement, arranged for comfort and convenience. It is capable of accommodating seventy-five guests. Hot and cold water are supplied on each floor. The rooms are so arranged that the sun shines into every one. It is a delightful place, and the proprietor has been very successful. It is a popular institution since the spring of 1885. James H. Preston, a son of the founder, has been the proprietor.

_The South Mountain Sunset Home_ is a resort for summer boarders, and occupies a commanding site near the summit of the mountain. The building is of gray mountain stone, four stories in height, with an observatory on the top, which commands a fine view. It was erected by Francis Grosch in 1876, and additions and improvements were made by him in 1880, and in 1885 by the proprietor. The entire building contains sixty rooms, capable of accommodating one hundred persons. The dining and reception-rooms are spacious. This resort is complete in all its appointments, and has been conducted very successfully by Mr. Grosch for ten years.

_Biographical._

_The Van Reed Family._—The progenitor of the Van Reed family in Berks County was John Van Reed, who died April 18, 1820, in his seventy-third year. He was married to Eva Yost. Among their children was a son, Henry Van Reed, born in 1780 and settled in Lower Heidelberg township, Berks County, on a tract of land now owned by Charles L. Van Reed. He was united in marriage to Mary Reber. Their children were Mary (born December 13, 1800), Elizabeth (May 1, 1803), Charles (October 12, 1807), John (July 1, 1810), Thomas (October 13, 1812), Levi (March 10, 1815), Henry (born September 14, 1827), Rebecca (May 24, 1830, married to Rufus Adams), Mary (May 26, 1832, who died February 1, 1835), John (July 22, 1834, who died March 16, 1842), Elizabeth (August 17, 1837, married to Charles T. Reber, M.D.), Mary, second, (August 19, 1839, who died March 29, 1842). Henry Van Reed built a paper-mill in Lower Heidelberg township, but did not long survive to witness its successful operation. His son Charles succeeded to the interest and for years conducted the mill, practically establishing the business on a firm basis. Having finally abandoned active business, he leased the mill to his son Henry, who became the head of the paper manufacturing interest. Charles Van Reed was an enterpris-

a grist-mill at the mouth of the Cacoosing Creek, which he converted into a paper-mill and conducted successfully until his death, when it became, by inheritance, the property of his son, Charles L. Mr. Van Reed enjoyed the reputation of being one of the most sagacious business men of the county, his opinion and judgment being often sought and received with great deference. As a citizen, he was public-spirited and foremost in advancing the interests of his township. He was a director of the National Union Bank of Reading. He was a Whig in the days of that party, and since a Republican. He was first a member of the First Reformed Church of Reading, and later of the St. John's Reformed Church of Sinking Springs, in which he filled the office of deacon. He died March 8, 1879, in his fifty-second year. His son, Charles L. Van Reed, was born on the homestead at Lower Heidelberg. From boyhood he became familiar with the paper-mill owned by his father, and finally entered it as an assistant, in 1873 assuming the management of the establishment. The property, on the death of his father, became his by inheritance, since which time he has continued its successful management as the sole owner. His extensive business interests preclude participation in public affairs, though frequently solicited to represent the Republican party as a candidate. Mr. Van Reed was, on November 18, 1875, married to Laura E., daughter of Christian Hertzler, of Mechanicsburg, Cumberland County, Pa. Their children are Henry

CHARLES V. R. EVANS is descended from Welsh ancestry. Three brothers emigrated from Wales about the year 1720, and landed on the Schuylkill River. He married a Miss Thomas, to whom was born, among other children, a son, Philip Thomas Evans. He inherited the homestead and was by occupation both a farmer and a miller. He was married to Elizabeth, daughter of John Van Reed, of Cumru township. Their children were Thomas, John, Joshua, Charles V. R., Henry, Mary (married Peter Bright) and Elizabeth (married to Thomas Jones).

Charles Van Reed Evans was born on the 4th of March, 1810, in Cumru township, and spent his youth on the homestead. His early education was obtained in the log school-house erected by the neighbors in the vicinity, the services of a teacher being paid for by the patrons of the school. He afterward gave his time and labor to his father in connection with in Philadelphia. All started on a prospecting tour through Pennsylvania with a view to the purchase of land.

Daniel, settled in Chester County, a second in Montgomery County, and Philip, who located in Berks County, is the progenitor of the branch of the family represented by the subject of this biographical sketch.

Joshua Evans, in the direct line of descent, resided in Cumru township, on the west side of the farm, and on the death of the latter, and a consequence disposition of the estate, he inherited his patrimony, and with it purchased the farm he now owns in Lower Heidelberg township. After a life of industry he retired from active labor and transferred the responsibility of the farm to his son John, who now directs its cultivation. Mr. Evans was, in 1836, married to Maria, daughter of William Spohn, of Lower Heidelberg township. Their surviving child-youth been an invalid, and his case finally regarded as hopeless, he was induced, in 1862, to seek restoration to health at the water cure located at Danville, N. Y. The benefit he received while under this peculiar treatment led to the study of health subjects and finally to the investigation and study of hygienic medication. He entered the Hygeo-Therapeutic College and was graduated from that institution in 1873. Removing to Franklin County, Pa., soon children are Jane, John (married to Margaret Van Reed), Thomas and Anne. Mr. Evans is a Republican in his political faith. He has held various township offices. He enjoys the confidence of his fellow-citizens to such an extent as to have frequently been appointed guardian, executor and administrator.

Robert Walter is the son of George and Betsey Walter, who emigrated from England in 1837 and located in Western Canada. Their son Robert was born in Halton County, Ontario, on the 14th of February, 1841, where he remained until his twentieth year. Having in after, he practiced his profession for one season, and the following year leased the water cure establishment located at Wernersville, Berks County, Pa., which he successfully conducted for a period of three years.

In 1876 Dr. Walter purchased ground in Lower Heidelberg township, Berks County, and began the erection of buildings, increasing the dimensions and capacity of the institution from year to year until, in convenience and comfort, it is one of the most perfect in the State. The doctor claims to have established a distinct system of medication in which the use of drugs is wholly avoided. The correctness of his theory has been demonstrated in the success of his treatment and the popularity of the institution, which the experience of several years has fully confirmed. Dr. Walter was on the 4th of July, 1872, married to Eunice C. Lippincott, daughter of John Lippincott, of South China, Maine. Their children are Maud Marion, Robert L., Mabel Helen, Stella M. and Earnest Albert.

The doctor is an earnest advocate of the principles of the Republican party, but, aside from the position of delegate to the State Convention of his party which nominated James G. Blaine for the Presidency, he has taken no active part in politics. He now affiliates with the Prohibition party. Dr. Walter wields a ready pen on subjects relating to his profession. He is the editor of "The Laws of Health" and "Health," and author of "The Philosophy of the Health Reform," the "Nutritive Cure" and "The Best Means of Preserving and Regaining Health." He has been latterly engaged in the preparation of a large work entitled "Science in Health and Disease," which gives a scientific solution of all the great problems of medical science, and establishes a system of treatment based on definite scientific principles. The doctor is a believer in Evangelical Christianity and often conducts worship in his own institution, though not a member of any church or denomination.

NORTH HEIDELBERG.

ERECITION OF TOWNSHIP.—The township of Heidelberg embraced at first about thirty-seven thousand acres and continued so large without any reduction for over one hundred years. In 1842 it was divided, and the eastern portion, about eighteen thousand acres, was erected into a township named "Lower Heidelberg." The remaining portion comprised about nineteen thousand acres. In April, 1844, a portion was taken away and contributed toward the erection of "Marion," in area about one thousand eight hundred acres. The township of Heidelberg was then left with about seventeen thousand two hundred acres.

During the fall of 1844 the inhabitants of the township thought that their township was too large and inconvenient. The population was about one thousand six hundred and the electors about three hundred. They therefore considered the propriety of dividing it. A tract had just been cut off. But this small reduction was not to stand in the way of improving their situation in respect to elections and roads. So they applied to the court for viewers.

And the court was sufficiently generous to encourage their application by appointing Mathias S. Richards, Samuel Beard and Samuel S. Jackson as prayed for. The spirit of division and of erecting new townships and new counties had taken a strong hold upon the people during this decade. Fortunately, the spirit did not succeed in carrying away any of the territory from the county of Berks towards certain projected new counties round-about to the north, east, south and west.

The commissioners examined the township, "and being satisfied that the late practice of subdividing large townships has received general favor from experience, because of the convenience for township transactions and of the better attention to keeping roads in repair," they therefore surveyed and marked off a dividing line, which began at the "Ege Forge," on the Tulpehocken Creek and extended thence "S. 71 E. 1140 ps. to a corner and S. 55 E. 487 ps. to Spring Creek," and they recommended the northern section to be named "North Heidelberg." The portion laid off contained about seven thousand two hundred acres. Their report was presented January 9, 1845, and confirmed nisi. A remonstrance was filed against the proposed division, signed by thirteen tax-

1 The population of Heidelberg in 1840 was three thousand five hundred and thirty-nine. When the township was divided, in 1842, the population was about three thousand seven hundred and the lower portion had more than half.

2 This was on November 9, 1844. Only thirty signatures (ten English) were attached to the petition.

3 Eleven new townships were erected from 1839 to 1851, four to the east of Schuylkill and seven to the west.
bles who resided therein, representing the division inconvenient and burdensome; but the court confirmed the report absolutely, and erected the territory laid off into a new township by the name recommended.

See Heidelberg township for list of first taxables which inhabited this section of the county.

EARLY FAMILIES.—The descendants of the Klopp family have for many years constituted a large portion of the population of North Heidelberg township. It is said that one of three brothers who came to Eastern Pennsylvania settled in Lebanon County and was killed by the Indians, another settled in Lower Heidelberg and Peter, the third, in North Heidelberg. The last-named had seven sons—Peter, Adam, John, Benjamin, Daniel, Joseph and Isaac. Some of his daughters married into the Ernst, Gerhart and Faust families. Peter, the eldest son, moved to the central part of the township, on the farm now owned by William D. Klopp; several of the sons moved to Tulpehocken township, and Daniel became a citizen of Illinois.

The Kalbachs, Dundores and Lengels were also very numerous, but most of them have died or removed, a few descendants of each family only remaining. Along the Tulpehocken there was an early settlement of Moravians, some of the members residing in what is now North Heidelberg, the others in Penn and Bern townships. Near the North Heidelberg Church Tobias Bickel made his home in the fall of 1736, and his brother, George Frederick, lived in Bern (now Penn) township. They were both young men and reared families in these townships. The former had a son named Anthony and a grandson by the name of Joseph, who was the father of some of the older Bickels in the county at this time.

Most of the other Moravians removed. Descendants of the Gerhart, Bright, Fisher, Moyer and Conrad families in the fourth and fifth generations are still near the cens where, a hundred and fifty years ago, the simple homes of their forefathers were erected.

MILLS AND STORES.—The people of the township are almost wholly given to agricultural pursuits. On the Tulpehocken, at the old Seyfert mill-site, Abraham Krick put up a good mill, which is still known as the “Krick mill,” although owned by different persons, among them John K. Derr and Benjamin Bickel, the present proprietor. A saw-mill is attached to this mill. Below, on the same stream, the Zerby family had early saw and grist-mills, whose sites are occupied by mills long owned by Jacob Wilhelm, and at present the property of Jacob Sunday. In this part of the township the distillation of liquor was formerly carried on by the Seyferts, and in other localities there were small stills which have been removed.

Lamm’s mill, in the eastern part of the township, on Spring Creek, was built soon after 1800 by the Fisher family and long carried on by it. At present saw and grist-mills are successfully carried on.

In the township are two post-offices, Krick’s Mill and North Heidelberg. The former is in the western part of the township and was established in 1865 with Abraham Krick as postmaster. His successor was John K. Derr. Joshua Moyer is the present postmaster. The office has a tri-weekly mail via the North Heidelberg office. This latter office was established in 1864, and Jonathan L. Klopp has been the postmaster. It is kept in connection with the only store in the township at a stand opened in 1851 by J. L. Reber, and where, since 1857, Jonathan L. Klopp has successfully carried on business. In connection with it there is a public-house, the whole occupying large and well-appointed buildings. Near by there was formerly an old public-house, opened about 1800, and kept by Michael Kalbach and others. The inn was known for many years as Kalbach’s. It was converted into a farm-house in 1851. The building stood until September, 1885, when it was destroyed by fire. In it was kept the first store in the township by Adam Fisher, Charles Rick and others.

CHURCHES.

North Heidelberg Church is the only house of worship in the township. It is situated in the eastern part, upon land donated for church purposes, by Tobias Bickel, as early as 1744. Prior to that time the people of this locality attended the meetings held at Reed’s Church, on the Tulpehocken, in the present township of Marion. A settlement of Moravians having been made in the eastern part of North Heidelberg, and the meetings at Reed’s Church having been held only at irregular intervals, they decided to have their own meeting-house, in which the Moravian doctrine might be preached without interruption. A plain log house was therefore built, in the summer and fall of 1744, upon the lot set aside by Bickel, and it was formally dedicated November 4, 1744, by a Moravian Synod, over which Henry Antes, presided. On the 9th of April following, a Moravian congregation was organized by Bishop August G. Spangenberg with the following members: Tobias Bickel, George Frederick Bickel, Stephen Brecht, John Fisher, Sr., John Fisher, Jr., Frederick Gerhart, Nicholas Glass, John Graefer, John Zerby, and their wives, and John Keller, a widower.

A building comprising a school-house and parsonage combined was built at the same time, and it was occupied by Daniel Neihart when the congregation was formed. Later teachers of this school were Werner, Weile, Blatzer and Polk.

The Moravian congregation had its membership augmented by new settlers, among whom were the Klapp, Conrad, Minnich and Zuber families, and then it flourished. The ministers visited the congregation statedly, coming from Bethlehem and other Moravian settlements. After 1830 a number of families removed to the West. This caused the congregation to weaken and decline, and eventually only few meetings a year were held.

The congregation was then disbanded, and the meeting-house came to be occupied by persons of the Lutheran and Reformed faith in that vicinity. About 1835, congregations were organized by them, and then regular preaching began by the Revs. Miesse and Minnich. In 1846, with the assistance of the Moravians who remained, the congregations united in building the present church upon the Moravian Church lot. It is a plain brick building of moderate size, and is supplied with a gallery. The cemetery attached is neatly inclosed. The German Reformed congregation had more than a hundred members, and Rev. Thomas C. Leinbach as pastor. The Lutheran congregation was smaller, and the minister was the Rev. J. J. Cressman.

The Moravians have still an interest in the property, but no meetings have been held within the past four years.

BERN TOWNSHIP!

ERECTON OF TOWNSHIP.—A petition was presented to the Court of Quarter Sessions of Lancaster County on May 2, 1738, praying for the erection of a new township out of the eastern section of Tulpehocken township, lying between the Schuylkill River and Tulpehocken Creek, and extending from the mouth of the creek to the Blue Mountain. The court shortly afterward ordered the erection of the township according to the prayer of the petitioners, and named it "Bern." The name was taken from Bern, a large division of territory in Switzerland, the native country whence many of the inhabitants emigrated.

When the county of Berks was erected the lands of this township extended beyond the Blue Mountain. In August, 1767, a petition was presented to court, asking for a division of the township on account of its extent. Commissioners were appointed (William Boone, Samuel Hoch, Thomas Wright, Joseph Penrose, Frederick Weiser and Thomas Jones), who laid down a line along the top of Blue Mountain,—S. 91 W. 1836 perches. In November following the proceedings were confirmed, and the northern portion beyond the mountain was named "Brunswick."

In 1789 an act of Assembly was passed, requiring the township to be divided. William Wheeler surveyed the line, which extended

1 I examined the records at Lancaster, but I could not find any papers relating to the erection of this township.

from the Tulpehocken Creek, near the mouth of the North-kill, across the township, N. 67° 51' E. seven miles and six perches to the Schuykill at Noecker's mill. The upper portion was called "Upper Bern."

In 1841 Penn township was erected out of a portion of Bern and Upper Beru, and in 1843, Centre township.

In 1849 the estimated area of Bern township was twenty thousand acres.

Taxables of 1759.—The taxables of the township in the year 1759 are named in the following list. John Reber was the collector. The tax levied amounted to £395 5s.

Early Settlers.—Among the early settlers of what is now comprised within the bounds of Bern township, the Hiester's were unusually prominent. They purchased several thousand acres of land along the Tulpehocken, and built mills, which proved great conveniences. They were in good circumstances. Their sons came to figure in public affairs prominently. Few of the descendants now remain in the township.

On the Schuykill, Peter Herbein became the owner of two hundred and thirty-five acres of fine land, in 1734, adjoining the lands of Henry Reesser, who was also an early settler. Both families have retained possession of their lands, the Herbeins now being represented by John, Thomas and William, great-grandsons of Henry Herbein, the father of sons named Abraham and John. Below this point the Rickenbach family became the owner of a tract of land on which descendants still live. They had a small burial-plot near Rickenbach Station, but later interments have been made in cemeteries.

Industries.—Although the people of Bern are almost exclusively devoted to agricultural pursuits, the ordinary industries are not wholly neglected. On Tulpehooken Creek the Hiester family built a mill, soon after the settlement of the township, which, in a changed condition, is still kept running. Gabriel and Jonathan Hiester are best remembered as successful millers at this point. After a number of owners, John B. Reber, now of Reading, became the proprietor. The mill is of stone and has a large capacity. The site lower down the stream was improved by Joseph Reber and the mill operated by him and by others of that family for many years. It is still known as "Reber's mill," though owned by Frank Hain.

Along the Schuylkill are valuable out-croppings of limestone of superior quality, both for building and for manufacturing purposes. They are easily quarried and readily shipped. William Silvis was one of the pioneers to develop this industry. About forty years ago he opened a quarry near Leinbach's store, which has been pretty generally operated since that time. He encouraged the workmen to build homes near the quarry. This was the beginning of a cluster of houses in this locality commonly called Mechanicsville. The present operators of this quarry are the Leinbach Brothers. There are six lime-kilns, with a capacity to produce annually over one hundred thousand bushels of lime. The next quarry was opened by Henry Larch and is now owned by George Hartman. About twenty-five thousand bushels of lime per year are made. The Stout quarries, opened by a man named Griscom, are now operated by William Fisher. Large quantities of stone are shipped from here and all these quarries employ from twenty to fifty men.

Farther up the river are the old Herbein quarries, first opened by William Herbein, about 1855, and developed by him so as to employ from twelve to eighteen men. It is at present owned by William Herbein, who employs steam to carry on its successful operation. Here is Rickenbach Station, with sidings to the quarry, which afford good shipping facilities. Near West Leesport, on the main line of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, are the lime-kilns of Rahn & Kauffman, which were opened by Leinbach & Epler soon after the completion of the railroad. From one hundred thousand to one hundred and thirty thousand bushels of lime are manufactured and shipped annually. Near by the manufacture of brick proves a profitable occupation.

Near Rickenbach Station are the Herbein mill and distillery, now idle, and the property of Jonas Shalter. The first improvement was a small distillery by Abraham Herbein, about sixty years ago. After the property passed into the hands of Reuben Herbein, the latter built the present mill and distillery, operating the same successfully some years. The Reeser mill, on the same stream, a mile above, is one of the first in the township, and has been run by that family since its erection. The present proprietor is Jonathan Reeser, who has also a saw-mill and large ice-houses at that point. The motive-power is water and steam.

Canal-boat building has been successfully carried on for about a score of years by James Rickenbach, on the canal, below Rickenbach Station. At his docks from twelve to twenty men find employment at building boats. James Rickenbach is also the owner of a number of boats in the carrying trade from that point.

At Hiester's Mill is a post-office, established in 1865. It is supplied with semi-weekly mails from Reading. Formerly small stores were kept in that locality as well as on the State road, almost north from that place, by J. Klein and others. In connection was a public-house, built about fifty years ago, which is now well remembered as the "Hain Tavern." East, on the same road, is Leinbach's post-office, store and tavern. The latter was first opened by Christian Leinbach in 1848, and a store kept in the same building until 1867, when the present stand opposite the tavern came to be occupied by E. A. Leinbach. He has also been postmaster since the establishment of the office, in 1852. There are four mails per week.

The Epler tavern, three-quarters of a mile towards Reading, on the same road, was the oldest public-house in the township. The building, which has been removed, was put up in the Revolutionary period, and was the scene of a disturbance in 1799—in consequence of the putting up a liberty pole by Epler, which certain parties threatened to cut down. The tavern was last kept by J. Mowry, about forty years ago.

CHURCHES.

BERN CHURCH (Reformed and Lutheran) was originally the exclusive property of a German Reformed congregation. This may have been organized as early as 1739, for there are records of baptism bearing that date. In 1743 about fifteen acres of land was surveyed by the Penns for the use of the society, and which was conveyed, in 1748, to Henry Reeser, trustee, for the use of the Calvinists residing in Bern, Cumru and Heidelberg townships. Upon this tract of land a log meeting-house was built, which was in use until some time about 1762, when a rough stone building was put up for a place of worship. This stood until the present edifice took its place, in 1837. In the previous winter the Lutherans arranged to secure an ownership in the property and the present house was built by the joint efforts of both societies. The corner-stone was laid July 30th, and the building completed in the fall of the same year. The church is constructed of brick, two stories high, with galleries, and it presents an attractive appearance. In 1762 the church lot was enlarged by the purchase of land from Daniel Hiester, which was conveyed to David Brecht (Bright), Matthias Stoudt and Yost Hiester, of Bern, and Henry Spohn and Martin Arnold, of Heidelberg, as trustees. Another purchase was made in 1792, when John Dundore, John Reber and Nicholas Stump were the trustees, making the entire church property about twenty acres. Upon this is a good residence and other improvements.

The church prospered until 1867, when dissensions reduced the membership of the Reformed congregation, and very greatly impaired its usefulness. It has had an increase of membership during the past few years. In 1885 there were three hundred and twenty-five members and Rev. Samuel S. Leinbach was the pastor. His immediate predecessors were Revs. Aaron Leinbach, Franklin H. Swartz and Isaac Miesse.

The Lutheran congregation has prospered under the ministry of the Rev. Thomas T. Laeger. In 1885 it reported two hundred and eighty members.

The church is situated near the northwestern line of the township.

FRIENDS.—In 1745 the proprietaries granted two acres "to John Ellyman for the use of the congregation of people called Quakers, to be laid out in an oblong where there are some graves already." A trust was declared and acknowledged September 7, 1758. Friends were evidently in the township at that early day.

EPLER CHURCH (Lutheran and Reformed) is a plain, substantial brick building, occupying a commanding site near the centre of the township. The corner-stone was laid June 1, 1851, and the house was almost completed the same year, under the direction of Abraham Koenig, Wm. Herbein, Jacob Gerhart and John Fox, as a building committee. The formal dedication took place in the spring of 1852. The present church took the place of a rough-cast log building, erected in 1788. Previously there was a log building of small size built soon after the settlement of the country, the exact date not being known. It was intended solely for the use of German Reformed people. In 1825 Rev. Waltz commenced holding services for the Lutherans, and in 1833 an arrangement was effected by which the Lutherans secured a joint interest in the property. A cemetery comprising four acres is included with the church property. Among the first members of this church was the Epler family, who warmly encouraged the erection of the first building and after whom it was named. Others associated with them were the Reeser, Herbein, Fisher, Lerch, Geiger, Albright, Bodie, Koenig, Moser, Young, Medlar, Kerscher, Hain, Emerich, Baer, Woomer, Stoudt and Machemer families.

In 1885 the Reformed congregation had about three hundred members and Rev. Samuel A. Leinbach was pastor. Among his predecessors were Revs. R. S. Apple, A. L. Herman, Joseph Dubs and Wm. Pauli and (in 1878,

1 See Chap. X., Liberty Poles.
when the second church was built) the Rev. Wm. Boas, who also officiated at Reading; and in 1885 Rev. B. D. Zweitzer was the pastor of the Lutheran congregation, numbering about one hundred members, he having served as the minister since 1862. The Rev. George Min- nieh served as pastor from 1833 till 1851, being followed that year by the Rev. R. S. Wagner, who remained until 1860; then came Rev. John G. Kuendig, who served until 1862. John Heintz has officiated as organist since 1858.

For many years the church maintained a well-ordered school for the study of the German language, which was most successfully taught from 1848 to 1858 by John Heintz. Since free schools have been established the school-house has been converted to other uses, in connection with the church property.

Just above the church cemetery Franklin Hain opened St. Paul's Cemetery in 1885. The lot embraces over an acre of ground and is neatly inclosed.

Salem Church (Evangelical Association) is situated in the village of West Leesport. It was built in 1872, and formally dedicated the following year. It is a brick building, without steeple. The membership of the church was small at first, and the increase has not been large since. In 1885 about fifty were connected with it. The congregation belongs to Womelsdorf Circuit of the Harrisburg District of the East Pennsylvania Conference; has Rev. J. A. Stirk as presiding elder.

A Sunday-school, comprising fifty members, is maintained in the church.

Zion's Church (Evangelical Association) is situated in the northwestern part of the township, near Centreville. It is a plain brick building, and was dedicated December 19, 1852. The membership worshipping here has always been small, and embraced on its first roll the names of the Hart, Dundore, Sonnon and Loose families. The church is part of the Womelsdorff Circuit, and has had its ministerial service from that source. A small grave-yard is connected with the church.

West Leesport is the only town within the present bounds of Bern township, and owes its existence wholly to the location of Leesport Station on the railroad at this place. The site is favorable for building purposes. It has had a slow growth, owing to the fact that Leesport (from which it is separated by the river) has the advantage of age and the possession of manu- facturing interests. There were in 1885 three stores, two public-houses, a church, several mechanic-shops and about thirty residences, many of them newly built. At the station large quantities of goods are received and shipped, this being a distributing point for a considerable area of the country. The Uhlers were the first to engage in business here after the completion of the railroad. They began in the building which is now occupied, in an enlarged condition, by Samuel Lenhart, and in which he has traded since 1858. In addition to general merchandising, he is a dealer in lumber and coal. He also has manufactured brick since 1879, affording employment to fourteen men.

Abraham Tobias built the next store-house and also the hotel building connected with it, in 1862, where he entertained the public some years. This house has had numerous landlords and merchants. It was kept in 1885 by Emanuel S. Strauss. The first public-house was opened by Abraham Harpell, before 1860, in what is now a private dwelling, near the present Gawker House, which was first a residence, and first kept as a tavern by John Kauffman. Since 1863, James Bell has been in the hardware trade, and in 1885 was also the postmaster of the West Leesport office, established in 1872. Prior to his appointment the office was held by H. M. Kauffman, John Good and Samuel Lenhart, the latter having carried the mails from West Leesport to the Leesport office twenty-six years.

One of the first physicians at West Leesport was Dr. John H. Spatz, who removed from this place to Centreport. Dr. Edwin Brobst ranks as the oldest settled practitioner, having been successfully engaged in his profession at this point the better part of a quarter of a century. Dr. F. P. Dundore has been in practice the past ten years, and Dr. J. V. Epler for a longer period of time.

TOWNSHIPS OF COUNTY. 1131
UPPER BERN TOWNSHIP.

Erection of Township.—This township was erected out of the upper portion of Bern township in 1789; but no separate assessment of taxable was made till 1820.

Early Settlers.—Among prominent settlers of the township the Shartle family can be mentioned. The original place of settlement was on what is now the State road, one mile east of the village of Shartlessville, the farm being now owned by O. F. Berger. Shartle had sons named William, John, George and Jacob. Two daughters were married to Adam Kauffman and Jacob Albright. Although their offspring was once numerous in the township, scarcely any descendants remain. The Kauffmans settled along the base of the mountain, being induced to select the lands there on account of the excellent water. They had the Rentschlers as neighbors and some of the first improvements in that part of Bern were made by them. The Waggers came a little later. North of them lived the Moyer family, which had some of its members killed by the Indians. The name is still perpetuated in the ownership of lands near the scene of that shocking tragedy.

John Christian Albright and Johannes Berger were later settlers. The former lived north of Shartlessville and had sons named Jacob, John and Solomon, the first-named being the father of Jacob Albright, still residing in the township as an octogenarian. The Schocks were also prominent, who helped to develop the township. The names of the early settlers are included in the list of taxable of Bern township.

Shartlessville is situated near the Blue Mountain, in the northwestern part of the township. It derives its name from the Shartle family, who lived at this place and made early improvements, which caused this locality to be known by its present title long before the village had an existence. The Shartles were farmers and, after the custom of that day, also kept inns, one of which was opened as early as 1765, and which, in 1801, was spoken of as an old log tavern. In 1819 George Shartle built a large brick house, which, with other property, passed into the possession of Benjamin Nunnenmaker, who laid out the village, the plat being made for him by S. V. Wagner, April 13, 1860. Prior to that time there was a house at the upper and one at the lower end of the village where business was carried on. In 1858 the first house in the centre of the village was built by Martin Zettlemeyer, which is now occupied by Charles Aschenbach, who has resided in this locality since 1851, carrying on his trade as a wheelwright. A number of houses were built soon after 1859 and occupied by,—

William Nunnenmaker, laborer; Benjamin B. Wagner, blacksmith; James Koller, tailor; Aaron Seaman, teacher; Joseph Gettering, undertaker; Moses Degler, cabinet-maker; Emanuel Bly, coach-maker; John Shaeffer, carpenter; and George K. Wann, shoemaker.

The Shartlessville post-office was established February 9, 1830, with Solomon Albright as postmaster. He held the office until 1852, serving, at the same time, as clerk for Joseph Seyfer. He was followed by Benjamin Nunnenmaker, Charles F. Rentschler, Joseph S. Hix, F. K. Machemer, Daniel Wagner and Moses Kauffman. The office has a daily mail from Hamburg.

The first resident physician was Dr. Aug. Schultz, a German, before the village was laid out. Dr. Devilla Schoener located here in 1860, and remained until his death, in December, 1874. He was succeeded by Dr. Daniel C. Ritzmaw, for four years in practice, when came the present Dr. John M. Brause.

In Shartlesville are small cigar factories carried on by John Ritzman & Co. and Levi B. Wagner. North of the village is the factory of V. C. Mohn & Brother. All of the factories employ about twenty persons.

The industries outside of the villages are few in number. The Kauffmann and Wagner mills are the oldest. The former mill remains about as first built. It has a small capacity, the volume of the stream on which it is located being feeble. Christopher and Valentine Wagner were successful millers at the lower site, or where the State road crosses the stream. The present mill (of massive stone) is still in a good condition, enabling the product of large quantities of flour, made by modern machinery. The present owner is Israel Miller. The first mill at this site was put up before the Revolution. It was of logs and had the water-wheel on the outside. Between these two there is a mill-site where Jacob Rentschler had an early fulling-mill, which was allowed to go down; then it was revived by Edward Moyer, who supplied new machinery and carried it on a few years, when the machinery was removed. About the same time he owned the grist-mill in the southern part of the township and added steam to the water-power then in use. This mill is now carried on by F. H. Lesher. Near the Schuylkill was a mill-site, improved before 1800 by the Keplinger family. This is now operated by the Fisher heirs. At this place a large creamery was established by a stock company of farmers, which has been successfully operated for several years. Here, also, is a store and the Bern post-office, established in 1878. The small hamlet is a flag station on the main line of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad.

Upper Bern post-office was established in 1863, at Wagner's inn, on the State road, four miles west from Hamburg. It was first kept by John Albright at the tavern, and later by Frank Wagner at the mill in this locality. Jonathan Rentschler is the present postmaster, having the office at his store in a new building opposite the old tavern, which was opened for trading purposes by G. B. Wagner & Son in 1882. A daily mail from Hamburg is supplied. The old Wagner or "Berks County" inn is a log building, put up in the last century. It is the oldest public-house in this part of the county. Valentine Wagner was an early keeper and it has remained almost continually in the family name.

Berks post-office is at the hamlet clustering around the station of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad in Upper Bern, opposite the borough of Hamburg. It was established December 23, 1879, with Nathan S. Schock, postmaster, who had it at his store until October, 1883, when F. S. Seaman was appointed and removed the office to his store. In addition to these two places of business, there are a large hotel, rolling-mill and a few residences at this point. It is usually called "West Hamburg".

CHURCHES.

St. Michael's Church (Lutheran and Reformed) is located near the centre of the township, on a lot elevated above the surrounding country, making it visible many miles around. The church property contains about fifty acres of land, and includes a large cemetery and the residence of the organist. The edifice is of brick, with large galleries on three sides, and has sittings for fourteen hundred persons, being the largest country church in the county. A shapely steeple, containing a large bell, adds to the attractions of the building. It was completed at a cost of eighteen thousand dollars. It was dedicated the latter part of May, 1875, having been erected the previous year. The day was very windy and the weather for some time had been dry, causing the leaves in the surrounding woods to be as inflammable as tinder. A large concourse of people was in attendance and hundreds of teams were hitched in the grove. A match dropped by a careless smoker ignited the leaves which were soon fanned into uncontrolable flames and burned with such rapidity that seventeen horses and twenty-two vehicles were destroyed.

This is the third church. These congregations were organized in 1769, during the ministry of the Rev. Philip Jacob Michael as German Reformed pastor, and the Rev. Peter Mischler as Lutheran.

A log meeting-house was built that year on nearly six acres of land, bought of Joseph Shollenberger, which tract was soon afterward enlarged by the purchase of forty-six acres. That building stood in what is now the cemetery of the church and was used until 1811, when it was replaced by the present edifice. The cornerstone was laid August 5, 1810, and the building soon afterward completed. The building was of brick, without a spire; but having been elevated, it presented a fine appearance. The total cost was thirteen hundred and eight pounds and thirteen shillings, Pennsylvania currency. After the church was dedicated, with all the debts paid, it was found that there was a handsome balance in the treasury. From that time on both congregations have flourished, the Reformed having nearly four hundred members in 1885, and the Lutherans a larger number.

The pastors of the church have been as follows:

German Reformed—Revs. Jacob Michael, John Waldshmidt, Hartzle, Munn, Philip Moyer, E. D. Zehring, Aaron Leimbach, T. C. Leimbach and Samuel Leimbach, the present minister. On the part of the Lutherans there were the Revs. Peter Mischler, Daniel Schomacher, Miller, Daniel Lehman, John Knoke, Marcus Harple, Carl Schmidt, Thomas T. Iaeger and B. D. Zweitzig, the present pastor.

Soon after the congregations were organized a school was regularly maintained at the church, Conrad Stein being one of the first teachers. In 1846 a new school-house was built, which is still standing in the cemetery, now serving as a home for the organist.

SHAFTLESVILLE FRIEDEN'S CHURCH (Lutheran and Reformed).—This is a fine brick building, and occupies a commanding site at Shaftlesville. The corner-stone was laid on August 28, 1870, and the lower part of the building completed for dedication in 1871. A fine bell was procured eight years later and efforts will be made to finish the church complete at an early day. The project of building a church at this place was agitated as long ago as 1860, but on account of the limited number of members who were willing to associate themselves for this purpose, nothing was done until ten years afterward, when James B. Nunnemaker encouraged the enterprise by donating four acres of land, on which to build a house of worship. Accordingly, on the 29th of January, 1870, church regulations were signed (Joseph S. Hix having been president of the association, which included fourteen members). About ten thousand dollars have thus far been spent upon the church.

The German Reformed congregation was organized with about fifty members, which has not been materially increased. The Rev. R. S. Apple has been the only pastor. The Lutheran congregation has a membership of seventy-five, with the Rev. D. D. Trexler as pastor. The first pastor was Rev. F. P. Messer. A well-conducted Sunday-school, of one hundred and seventy-five members, has Thomas Richardson as its superintendent.

THE UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST have a comfortable house of worship near the Upper Bern post-office. It was built in 1870. Among those who promoted the building of the church were John Loose (on whose land the house was built), Jacob Fisher, Benjamin Seaman, Benjamin Wert and Levi Dunkelberger. The membership is small and meetings are held only once a month. The ministerial supply is in connection with other churches of the same faith in the county.

MENNONITES.—The sect called Amish Mennonites were among the early settlers of Bern and took steps at an early day to establish a place of worship. For this purpose the Penns granted them a tract of land, consisting of twenty acres, near the Blue Mountain, upon which was built, in 1766, a small log meeting-house. It does not appear that the house was long maintained as a place of worship, but that, after the custom of the Mennonites, the meetings were held later at the houses of the members, which embraced in this and other townships families bearing the names of Weidman, Gerber, Miller, Kauffman, Yoder, Forney and Speicher. Most of the Amish element was absorbed by the Brethren or Dunkards, and a place of meeting established in Centre township.
Joseph S. Hix is a great-grandson of Henry Conrad Hix, who emigrated from Hamburg, Germany, about the year 1765, and settled in Heidelberg township, Berks County. He subsequently removed to Schuylkill County, and pursued the blacksmith's trade together with farming. He was united in marriage to a Miss Hoyer, by whom he had five sons and two daughters. Of this number, George resided both in Schuylkill and Berks Counties. He married a Miss Nunnemacher. Their children were Elizabeth, Rebecca, Catherine, Sarah, Joseph, William, Esther, Hannah and Mary Ann. Mr. Hix followed the occupation of his father, and during the later years of his life resided in Upper Bern township, where he died. His son William was born in Berks County in 1812, and was, like his ancestors, both a farmer and blacksmith. He married the White Hall Academy, in Cumberland County, pursuing his studies for several years at that institution. He then engaged in teaching at the same time, adding to his income by filling the position of a clerk. In 1866 he began business in Bernville, and a year later removed to Shartlesville, his present residence, engaging at this point in general mercantile business, where he has since controlled a large and increasing trade. He was largely interested with his brother in Schuylkill County, where an extensive business was conducted. On the death of the latter, in 1880, he sold his interest, and has since devoted his exclusive attention to the enterprise at Shartlesville. He is a director of the Farmers' Mutual Assistance and Fire Insurance Company of Berks County, and the Windsor Mutual Fire Insurance Company of the same county. Mr. Hicks is a Democrat, and active in the arena of politics. He has represented his county on various occasions at State Conventions, held several township offices, and been elected for two terms justice of the peace, the first time when but twenty-one years of age. He is a member of the Reformed Church at Shartlesville, a member of its board of trustees, and was one of its building committee during the erection of the edifice. Mr. Hix, in 1866, was married to Fayette, daughter of Henry Poteieger, of Berks County, who died February 21, 1875. Their only son, William Henry, died in his thirteenth year.

PENN TOWNSHIP.

Erection of Township.— At April Sessions, 1838, three petitions¹ were presented to court, setting forth,

"That the petitioners were under great inconvenience for the want of a new township, to be erected out of parts of Bern, Bern Upper, Tulpehocken Upper and Heidelberg; that said townships were very large and township meetings were very inconvenient for a large portion of the petitioners, and that the erection of a new township would make it much more convenient for your petitioners, and enable them to keep the roads in better repair."

The court appointed Evan Evans, Jacob Mast and David Morgan viewers. These viewers examined the territory proposed to be set apart for a new township; but, on May 23, 1838, they reported against the application, for the reason that a new township would make the condition of the petitioners much more inconvenient for a great majority of the inhabitants than it was without the township. Their report was then filed and the application was dropped.

A few years afterward (November 4, 1840) the application for a new township was renewed, with a modification that it should be erected out of parts of Bern and Bern Upper.² The petitioners recommended the name of "North-kill." The court appointed John Stauffer, Christian Shaner and Henry Gilbert as commissioners. The new district to be laid off (comprising nearly an election district as then formed) was considered advantageous to the inhabitants, and the commissioners, on December 17, 1840, reported the following metes and bounds:

"Beginning at a white oak tree on the East bank of the North-kill, near Peter Mogle's Carding-Mill; thence N. 80 E. 1007 ps.; thence S. 13 E. 1742 ps.; thence S. 51 W. 680 ps., to the east bank of the Tulpehocken creek; thence along said creek and the North-kill to the place of beginning."

And suggested "Penn" as a proper name. Exceptions were filed and depositions taken. After the contest was heard, the Court, on November 5, 1841, confirmed the report. This was the thirty-first township formed in the county, and at last William Penn, the founder of Pennsylvania, was honored by our own citizens in naming a district after him. This was eminently proper.

The borough of Bernville was erected out of this township.

Early Settlers.—John Bright was one of the early settlers on the road between Mount Pleasant and Bernville, where he owned a large tract of land. Part of this property is still owned by his grandchildren, John and Amandon Bright. Here is part of an old house standing more than a hundred years. John Bright had sons named Jacob and Peter, the former remaining on the homestead, the latter moving north of Bernville, where his descendants still reside. John Conrad was a neighbor of the Brights. He was a member of the Moravian Church, and a prominent man in the early history of the township. The descendants of John Conrad still live in the county, and have contributed to its material progress. The homestead is now owned by a great-grandson, Dr. John A. Conrad.

John Jacob Dundore was one of the first settlers in the southern part of Penn, owning tracts of land in that township and North Heidelberg. He reared a large family, some of the sons being John and John Jacob. Daughters married into the Gerhart and Shaul families. From these are descended the Dundores of the western part of the county. On the present Hetrich farm lived Joseph Obold, who was the grandfather of the older Obolds of the township. He had sons, Philip, George and Joseph, and daughters who married Benjamin Haas, Samuel Umbenbauer and Andrew Greth. Other early families were the Kalbachs, Hetrichs, Smiths, Kerschners, Kessels and Himmelbergers.

Mount Pleasant.—This village has a very pleasant location on the highlands, on the State road, in the southern part of the township. It was not regularly laid out, but lots were disposed of, according to the demands of the purchaser, from the farm of Henry Hetrich, landowner, who lived in what is now the lower part of the village. Where is now the residence of George Stoudt the first house in the place was put up by John Hetrich after 1812. Thence a residence was occasionally built, until the place has attained its present size. In 1885 there were about forty buildings, a store and a tavern, besides the usual mechanic shops.

About 1835 Benjamin Haas opened a public-house in a building which had previously been used as a farm-house. Later, John B. Reber was a host at this place. In 1885 Philip Obold was the landlord. The first tavern in this locality was half a mile southeast, on the State road, and kept by Jacob Good. It was discontinued about 1830. A store was also kept there. Here is now the wagon-factory of Frank Gruber, occupying a large building and operated by water-power since the summer of 1883.

The first store in the village was kept by Elias Obold, who commenced trading in 1851, in the building which is occupied by E. Obold & Sons, general merchants. The Lower Bern post-office was established here, with Joseph Obold postmaster, a position which has been held since 1864 by P. Reily F. Obold. The office has a daily mail from Reading.

On a farm just above the village Dr. Daniel Deppen lived and practiced medicine a period of forty years. He was the father of four sons, who also became physicians, namely, Darius Daniel Deppen (Bernville), James W. Deppen (Wernersville), Joseph F. Deppen and William P. Deppen (both at Reading). After Dr. Daniel Deppen, his son James was a practitioner a short time at Mount Pleasant, and was succeeded by Dr. Henry C. Moore; and he, in 1880, by the present, Dr. David H. Hain.

Since 1867 Dr. O. E. Collins & Son, veterinary surgeons, have extensively practiced their profession at this place.

The manufacture of cigars is carried on since 1877 by Jacob D. Madeira. In 1885 a fine factory had a working capacity for thirty-five hands. He employed from ten to twenty men and boys. Another factory, of smaller capacity, is operated by Darius Althouse.

Plow-making is carried on by E. H. Gruber, and coach-making by Isaac H. Gruber.

In the neighborhood of Scull’s Hill, Jacob Hister had an old-time tavern, afterward kept by Levi Balthaser, who opened and carried on a store in connection with the tavern. Under his management the stand became widely known. The store has long since been discontinued. Benjamin Haas also kept an early inn at this place, and northwest there were also country taverns for many years, which have been converted to other uses.

In the township, aside from the mills noticed in the sketch of Bernville, there were, on the North-Kill, several miles above the borough, fulling and carding-mills, belonging to Peter Mogle and Daniel Klahr, both of which have been discontinued and the power used to operate saw-mills. In their day a large amount of work was done and they proved a great accommodation to the people of this part of the county. Below Bernville, on the Tulpehocken, are two good water-powers, which were improved by the Stoudt family, who there erected
The buildings now used were put up within the last fifty years. Jacob Bohn is the present owner of the lower mill and Harrison Kalbach of the upper. Intermediate is the old Conrad mill, on a small stream near the canal, on which a warehouse had been built for its accommodation. The water failing, steam was supplied, and it is still carried on, with this double power, by Joseph B. Conrad. Many years ago the Conrads had a powder-mill at this place, which was changed to a clover-mill, also long since abandoned.

Near Bern Church was, in the early history of the township, a gun-barrel factory, operated by water-power and owned by Henry Deitz. Daniel B. Fisher converted this power to other use and it now operates a grist-mill. Subsequently steam was added.

There is no church in this township, the residents attending either at Bernville Church, to the north, or the Bern, to the southeast.

Biographical.

William Umbenhauer, is descended from German ancestors, his grandfather having been Thomas Umbenhauer, the founder of the present thriving borough of Bernville, who resided on the farm now owned by the subject of this biography, when he was both a farmer and a carpenter. He married Maria Catharine Stoudt of Penn township and had children—John, Peter, Daniel, Magdalena, Catherine and Elizabeth. Peter spent his life as a farmer on the homestead where he was born. He married Sarah, daughter of John Reber, of the same township. Their children are a son, William, and a daughter, Mary, deceased, wife of Isaac Kalbach. William Umbenhauer, was born on the 21st of June, 1824, on the ancestral land, of which he is now the owner. He received such educational advantages as the neighboring school afforded with additional opportunities at a boarding-school in Unionville, after which two winters were spent in teaching. He then gave his attention exclusively to the labor of the farm, and on the death of his father, in 1869, inherited the property. He was, on the 7th of September, 1844, married to Susanna, daughter of Peter Spang, of North Heidelberg township. Their children are Thomas S., married to Annie Stover, who has four children), Henry S. (married to Jennie Shadel, who has one child), William S. (married to Jennie Hain, whose only daughter is deceased), Milton S., Isaac S., John S., Daniel S., Catherine, and four who are deceased. Mr. Umbenhauer discontinued the management of the farm in 1883, which is now in the hands of his son, Thomas S., and retired from active labor. He is a Democrat in his political associations and was in 1869 elected justice of the peace for his township, which office he still fills. His ability and upright character have caused his services to be frequently in demand as executor, administrator and guardian. He is a director of the Windsor Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Berks County. He is public-spirited and during the late civil war showed a high degree of patriotism by assisting in filling the quota of men required from Penn township. Mr. Umbenhauer is a member of the Lutheran Church of Bernville.

erection of township.—Upon the application of inhabitants of Bern, Upper Bern and Penn townships for the erection of a new township out of parts of the townships named, the Court, on February 16, 1842, appointed Anthony Bickel, James Donagan and Matthias S. Richards as commissioners to view the district. The commissioners went upon the premises, and finding that a new district would be advantageous to the inhabitants, laid off the following territory:

"Beginning at the mouth of the Mill Creek, on the western bank of the Schuylkill; thence S. 64° W. 825 ps., and S. 46° W. 505 ps., to the line of Bern Upper and Penn townships; thence along said line S. 80° W. 128 ps.; thence S. 24° E. 665 ps., S. 16° E. 560 ps., and N. 77° E. 1290 ps., to the Schuylkill River at the Altohouse Bridge; thence up the westerly bank of said river about five miles and three-quarters to the place of beginning."

They suggested the name of "Centre." Their report was confirmed on January 2, 1843. The name of the new township was suggested from its locality, which comprised the central portion of territory between Bern and Upper Bern townships.

In 1857 a small triangular tract of land, comprising the extreme southeastern corner of the township, was laid off and annexed to Bern township. The commissioners were Daniel Potteiger, Henry Reider and Daniel Schell. The following metes and bounds inclosed the tract:

"Beginning at the corner of Bern and Centre townships, on the river; thence N. 51° W. 60 ps.; thence S. 42° W. 80 ps., to the township line; thence N. 77° E. 104 ps. to the beginning."

The quantity cut off was about twelve acres.

The early taxables of this township are included in the list of taxables of Bern township.

The industries of Centre, aside from agriculture, are few, and important only as they are useful, the small water-power limiting their capacity. On Irish Creek, where, in early days was the Wertman saw-mill, John Becker has in operation a grist-mill, whose power is water and steam. Near the mouth of that stream is the Daubert mill, built by the Ludwigs and which was known at times as Westerman's and Kauffman's mill. The Lenhart grist-mill, south of the centre, was built by John Ludwig about fifty years ago. It is operated on a small scale.

Along the Schuylkill, lime-stone has been profitably quarried for shipment and the manufacture of lime, carried on by Jonathan George, Frank Bucks and others, more than a dozen men finding occupation in that employment.

Several miles north of Centreport is an old tavern-stand opened more than half a century ago by Henry Resch. Reuben Ludwig has kept the house the past twenty-one years.
Bellemas Churches.

Bellemas Church (Reformed and Lutheran) is the oldest house of worship in the township. The present brick edifice was built in 1812, but has since been repaired. Its yard is neat and the cemetery on the church property is well kept. The land on which the improvements are situated was secured by patent from the commonwealth, November 30, 1809, when a little more than eleven acres were granted to Frederick Blatt, Samuel Vortman, Casper Freeman and Nicholas Klein, trustees of the Lutheran and German Reformed congregations, then already existing. The land was part of a larger tract which had been surveyed for Jacob Road, September 12, 1754. The organization of the German Reformed congregation was many years earlier. In 1752 the Rev. Wm. Stoy, who was at that time pastor of the old Tulpehocken (now Trinity) Church, preached in this locality and his efforts caused a small congregation to be formed. In 1769 the elder Rev. William Hendel began preaching here and soon after a log meeting-house was built. He remained until 1782. Eleven years later his son, the Rev. Wm. Hendel, D.D., began a ministry here which was terminated in 1815, but which was, in many respects, the most important period of the church, inasmuch as it witnessed the building of the present house, the acquisition of the property and the adoption of church regulations on September 11, 1813. At that time the pastor of the Lutheran congregation was the Rev. Frederick Moyer. After the Rev. Dr. Hendel had relinquished his charge, in 1815, the Rev. Philip Moyer became the pastor of the Reformed congregation and served until 1833. Then came a two years' pastorate by the Rev. Frederick Herman, followed by the Rev. John A. Liesse, until 1840. Next came the Rev. Isaac Miesse, who closed his twenty-four years' pastorate in 1864 and was succeeded by the Rev. Franklin H. Swartz, who left the congregation in 1870. In 1872, after the congregation had been without a regular pastor two years, the Rev. R. S. Appel took charge. A feeling of discontent, which had been brooding a long time, now manifested itself to the great detriment of the spiritual condition of the congregation, which was almost rent in twain. Lately these differences have been harmonized to some extent and the congregation again supplied with preaching. In 1885 the pastor was the Rev. M. H. Mishler, and the membership of the congregation was nearly four hundred. The Lutheran congregation was about one hundred less and the Rev. B. D. Zweitzig was the pastor.

Near the church is a new cemetery, recently opened by Isaac Graeff, which has been neatly improved.

Jerusalem Church (Evangelical Association) is near the village of Centreport, on a lot of land set aside for church purposes by Christopher Kline. It has sittings for about five hundred persons, and was built in 1862. A short distance from the church is the cemetery of half an acre of ground, maintained by the congregation. Among the first members here were Christopher, Benjamin and John Kline, Joshua Reber, William Zuber, John Dunkelberger and Daniel Lindenmuth. In 1885 there were nearly fifty members, who had their ministerial service supplied by the Womelsdorf Circuit. A Sunday-school, formerly maintained here, is now held at the school-house at Centreport.

Brethren Meeting-House.—East of Centreport is the meeting-house of the Brethren or Dunkards. It has a fine location for the wants of its worshippers, on half an acre of ground secured from the farm of Reuben Yoder. The house is a plain brick, of large capacity, and was built in 1867. One-fourth of a mile distant is the burial-ground, taken from Emanuel Yoder's farm. The members come from the surrounding townships to worship here and number about eighty. The preachers in 1885 were Jeremiah Rothermel and Joshua and Israel Koenig.

Villages.

Mohrsville.—After the completion of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, and the location of a station opposite the hamlet of Mohrsville, in Perry township, a small village was begun in that locality. It includes now about thirty buildings. The depot was built in the 1739, the court at Lancaster ordered the township of Lebanon to be divided by a line “beginning at the Swatara Creek, at a stone ridge, one-half mile below John Tittle’s, and continuing along said ridge eastwardly to Tulpehocken Township, to the north of Tobias Bickel’s, so as in its course to leave John Benargle, Adam Steel, Thomas Ewersly and Matthias Tice to the south of said line; that the northern division be called Bethel and the southern division Lebanon.”

Shortly before this division was ordered, a Moravian meeting-house was erected in that locality, not far from the Swatara Creek, and named “Bethel.” When the surrounding territory was erected into a township, the prominence of this building, in connection with the religious sentiment of the inhabitants, naturally suggested a proper name by which it should be known. In 1752, upon the erection of Berks County, the county line extended through this township and divided it into two nearly equal parts. The eastern part, included with Berks County, retained the same name. And it has been so recognized till now. No efforts have been made to divide the township into smaller districts on account of its large extent—it being in length nearly eleven miles and in width four miles—as they were made in the division of other large townships in this section, Tulpehocken, Heidelberg and Bern.

In 1791 the northern boundary line, on the top of the mountain, was established by a survey and proceedings in the Court of Quarter Sessions.

Early Settlers.—In 1733 a patent was issued to Thomas Freame (described as residing in Philadelphia), for ten thousand acres, situated on the Swatara Creek and adjoining the land of the proprietaries and of Thomas Lower. This large tract was taken up in pursuance of ten warrants. It extended across the Swatara into Tulpehocken township. It was sometimes called a “Manor.”

The following tracts were sold out of this manor, in Bethel township. Freame died possessed of a great portion.

INDIAN CRUELITIES.—This township was conspicuous during the incursions and cruelties by the Indians from 1756 till 1763. 1 More than sixty of its inhabitants were murdered. A prominent fort stood in the township, several miles north from Millersburg, on the road to Pine Grove, immediately below “Round Head,” having been erected there about 1754. It was called “Fort Henry.” 2 The spot is still pointed out by the neighboring inhabitants. This fort was a large log building, about forty by sixty feet, surrounded by a stockade. It afforded protection to many alarmed people who fled into it for refuge when the Indians entered the township. It was situated in “The Hole,” a peculiar, large depression of the earth’s surface between two ridges of the mountain. It was called by the early neighboring inhabitants “Der Loch”—the hole or hollow. This hollow extends some miles to the east and west of the gap in the ridge of the mountain where the fort stood. The eastern side is formed by the rocky eminence called “Round Head” (in German “Rund Kopt”). The people here call the eastern extremity of the hollow “Der Klein Loch” (The Little Hole) and the western or greater extremity “Der Gros Loch” (The Big Hole). The latter extends to the Swatara Creek. It is sometimes called “Monroe Valley,” having taken its name after a furnace of this name erected in the valley by Jonathan Seidel, from Robeson township. The lower boundary of this valley is called “Steinig Berg” (Stony Hill). 3

1 See Chapter on “French and Indian War.”
2 Dr. W. H. Egle, in his “History of Pennsylvania,” p. 807, locates this fort in Lebanon County. He states: This fort was erected in 1756 by Captain Christian Busse, by order of Governor Morris. In January, 1756, Governor Morris ordered him “to proceed as soon as possible with the company under your command to the gap where the Swatara comes through the mountains, and in some convenient place there to erect a fort of the form and dimensions herewith given, unless you shall judge the stockade already erected there conveniently placed, in which case you will take possession, and make such additional work as you may think necessary to make it sufficiently strong.” It is possible that Dr. Egle is correct in locating a fort in Lebanon County where the Swatara passes through the mountains. But it is certain that Captain Busse was stationed in the fort in Berks County; and it is probable that when he reached this locality—“The Hole”—he found “the stockade already erected there” and “conveniently placed;” and, upon taking possession, he added certain work “to make it sufficiently strong.”

3 Extracts taken from an article entitled “Round Head,” which was prepared by the author of this history and published in the Reading Times July 22, 1880:

“Over a thousand feet above the level of the sea, and overlooking the fertile valleys and rolling hills of Berks and Lebanon Counties for six hundred square miles, it stands high above the surrounding country, a monument of natural wonder, a witness of nature’s terrible convulsions, a mark of prehistoric times. Where is the mind that can penetrate into its hoary history, where the pen that can portray its grandeur and glory? How many million times have the magnificent beams of the morning sun crowned its towering head with a halo of light, first before reaching the rocks and trees below, as they flashed over Penn’s Mount, across the Schuylkill and the rolling country, far on to the West; and how many times have the same beams, after showering their life-giving warmth and brightness upon industrious villages and towns that now are along the Tulpehocken and Swatara, and upon the valleys and hills that now are divided into numerous productive farms, left it last before they were drawn in behind the western hills!

“Thousands of years ago, when the waters under the heaven were gathered together and the dry land appeared, what a spectacle must have been in this locality! The first speck of earth—as upon Ararat’s famous height—to feel the rushing of the mighty winds and to see the roaring waters ansue, what a witness of ages gone by! And when the angry waves ceased to wash its rugged sides, and the great law of gravity was exerting itself to the utmost to reduce all things to a common level, what a crushing and a thundering must have reverberated in the valleys round-about, as the great rocks rolled from their primeval beds down into the gorge before it, seven hundred feet below!

“And this is ‘Round Head’—so called for over one hundred years—a projection from the Blue Mountain in Bethel township, the northwestern section of Berks County, three miles north from the village of Millersburg and twenty-eight from the city of Reading.

“What was all this grand country a thousand years ago? Where are the records to give us to know who inhabited these mountains and hills, these valleys and streams? Were wild animals here alone and undisturbed? Was the eagle soaring aloft with wings unturled over this rocky eminence watching the sparkling ripples in the meandering stream below or the gambols of the deer and fawn laving here and slaking their thirst? Were men and women and children here struggling, as now they are, in the hot sun for subsistence? Were buildings and temples and peace and prosperity here? No paper, no parchment, no papyrus is here to inform us what civilization existed; the ploughshare has turned up no ornamented and finely-chiseled stones with hieroglyphic inscriptions; no famous Bayeux tapestry has been handed down from generation to generation to tell us that here, too, as in Britain, a William reigned.

“Even five hundred years ago our whole country was unknown—so it is supposed—and one hundred years farther down in the course of time Columbus was only concluding that a country must be here where we now are, and begging for aid to help him realize the grand venture of his life; one hundred years more settlements were only begun along the Atlantic coast, and the first ideas of government were only introduced in this benighted land; fifty years more the Swedes only began their settlements on the Delaware and Schuylkill, and fifty more Penn only landed here with his great charter from King Charles the Second for the government of Pennsylvania.

“Only? This seems like trudging with time. We speak of centuries then as years now. And well we can; for what transpired along the Schuylkill, the Tulpehocken and the Swatara before 1680? In England the noblemen trace back their ancestry and government for centuries; in Germany they go still farther back, and the Maharajah of Jeypole a thousand years. Think of it! Two hundred years ago our people here were only in reality beginning to live and understand free civil government. Then the great grandfathers of our forefathers were only developing the great ideas of independent thought and religious toleration in France and Germany. Then the Monceys, the most EARLY SETTLERS.—Among the early settlers was Jacob Bordner, from whom have descended the Bordners of the township. He lived first in Tulpehocken, but located finally near where Millersburg now is, where he remained until his death. He had sons named Jacob and John, and daughters, who married Adam Weber, Christopher Deck, Christian Knabel and Christopher Lebo. Michael Miller, the founder of Millersburg, had one son, Isaac, who remained in the township, and another, Joseph, in the public service at Harrisburg many years. Along the Swatara lived the Frantz family. Westward, among the older families were the Newcomet, Grove, Royer, Batdorff, Walborn and Kurr families.

DIEDRICH SCHNEIDER’S INN.—Three miles east from Millersburg, on the State road, is an old inn, which is a land-mark in the township, having been in existence the better part of a hundred years, as the property of the Schlaeman family. On the mountain, northeast from this point, in Schuylkill County, but on a farm which lies partly in Berks, was the home of the celebrated Diedrich Schneider, who died in 1817, and was buried in the old cemetery at Rehersburg. His wife, Dolly, whose maiden-name was Dorothea Hopp, continued the public-house after his death, and is well remembered as the keeper of that hoselry, noted for its plain, but unmistakable hospitality. She was a woman of remarkable vigor of body, and it is said, could dance as nimbly at the age of ninety-five as a young girl. Before her death the vicissitudes of life overtook her and she was taken to the Schuylkill County poor-house, where she died at the age of one hundred and seven years. The locality was long known as "Dolly Schneider's," after the house was aban-donated. On the Sumbury road, nearly three miles from Millersburg, was an old inn, about 1800, known as Lechner's, which after its destruction by fire, was not rebuilt as a tavern. A mile nearer the mountain, on the same road, was the inn of Francis Umbenhauer, who died in 1812; this afterwards became the property of George Batz.

INDUSTRIES.—In this locality a tannery was formerly carried on by John and afterward by David B. Larch, which was discontinued in 1866. West was another small tannery by a man named Barto; and near by a fulling-mill last operated by Philip Brown; near Frystotown Thomas Kurr had a distillery, which has long since been abandoned, as well as other ditilleries of small capacity in various parts of the township. The Crosskill Mills were built by Abraham Newcomen, soon after the settlement of the township. Part of the old mill-house still remains. The mill proper has been much improved, and steam-power added; Emanuel Spaunuth is the present proprietor. On the Swatara, a few miles from Millersburg Jacob Miller early used the power at that point to operate grist and saw-mills. These became the property of Peter Weidener, and later of Daniel Weidener, who now carries them on. Eastward, on a branch of the Swatara, Conrad Christ had a small grist-mill, to which a saw-mill was added, and which are still operated by Jacob Ebling. Bethel is distinctly devoted to agriculture, the foregoing mills doing only the custom work the country demands.

CHURCHES.

SALEM CHURCH (Lutheran and Reformed) is one-half mile southeast of Millersburg, at the intersection of two public roads. It was put up in 1810. A steeple was added to the church and other improvements made about 1856, and an organ was supplied at a more recent day. When built, on a lot of ground given for this purpose by Godfrey Rehrer, it was intended for the exclusive use of the German Reformed denomination, which had among its members, at that time, Jacob Border, John Klein, John Royer, John Ziebach, John Larch, Leonard Miller and Michael Miller. About 1850 the Lutherans arranged for an interest in the property, and a congregation was organized by the Rev. Thomas Iaeger, who preached every four weeks. The petitioners to secure this arrangement were Martin Smith and Solomon Shreffler. This congregation has flourished, one hundred members being reported in 1885, with Rev. D. D. Trexler as pastor.
In 1880 twenty-five members of the Lutheran congregation withdrew from the Salem Church, and organized themselves into a new body for the purpose of holding separate worship. They secured the use of the school building at Millersburg, and Rev. J. J. Cressman as pastor, meeting regularly until the spring of 1885, since which time the interest has been allowed to decline. The organization is now imperfectly maintained.

The German Reformed congregation had two hundred and seventy members in 1885, with the Rev. H. J. Welker as pastor.

German Baptist Meeting Houses.—In the township are two meeting-houses belonging to this denomination, popularly called “Dunkards.” The one north of Millersburg is a large building of uncut stone and was put up about thirty years ago. It stands on a lot taken from the David Merkey farm and has a graveyard attached. The meeting-house at Frystown was built a dozen years ago. It is a frame of large proportions. With it is also a burial plat. Both these meeting-houses are arranged with the necessary conveniences to celebrate the ordinances of this sect. The membership is strong in Bethel. The meetings rotate with those in Tulpehocken, and among those who occasionally expound the word are Revs. Pautz, Hartzler and Klein.

Villages.

Millersburg is a village situated in the central section of the township, near the base of the Blue Ridge. It has a large school building, three public-houses, one grocery and one drug-store, and two general stores. It was laid out by Michael Miller, September 17, 1814, the town plan including fifty-two lots. He lived in the lower part of the place, in part of the house now known as Kurr’s tavern, which was the first building in the village. George Leidner put up the second house in 1817, the same being a part of the present Centre House, and which, like the Kurr house, has always been devoted to the entertainment of the public. Leidner kept his inn about twenty-five years, and had as a successor Daniel Bordner. In their early history the patronage was very large, scores of teams on the way to Reading or points on the canal, before the building of the railroad, stopping there. The third public-house, a three-story brick, was built by Daniel Althouse in 1854 and Jonathan Miller was the landlord. This is now known as the “Bordiner House.”

The third building in the place is opposite the Centre House and was put up by Adam Weber in 1818, who occupied it until his death, in 1854. In all this time he followed his occupation of pump-maker and was succeeded by his son, John, at the same business.

The principal early settlers of the village and their occupations were the following:

- Michael Miller, farmer and inn-keeper; George Leidner, inn-keeper; Adam Weber, pump-maker; Philip Hunsicker, carpenter; Peter Herring, hatter; Frederick Ressler, wagon-maker; Michael Schmeltzer, blacksmith; William Blecher, tailor; Christian Swope, cooper; Absalom Klinger, weaver; Thomas Bordner, coverlet-weaver; Abraham Clark, merchant; Charles Cummins, merchant; Frederick Harner, merchant; Thomas Behrer, merchant.

The latter built the first brick house about 1820, using the same for a store-room and did business there several years. He was succeeded, in order, by Abraham Clark, Chas. Cummins, Daniel Althouse and others. Since 1879, Erasmus Gerhart has had a drug-store in the building.

Jacob Tice opened the second place of business about 1830, and soon came Frederick Harner; on the site occupied by the store of Tyrus Lere, who has been in trade since 1860. Jones & Beechtel opened another place of business after 1840, in which G. M. F. Rick was in successful trade many years, followed, in 1885, by his son, George, in a building adjoining the old stand.

Ever since the village has had an existence, the stores have had a large volume of business, attracting the trade of the surrounding country.

The post-office at Millersburg bears the name of Bethel. It was established in 1827, with Abraham Clark as postmaster. Subsequently the office was held by Charles Cummins, Frederick Harner, and after 1861, by G. M. F. Rick. Since October, 1885, the postmaster has been William Kline. The office has two mails per day from Reading and Myerstown.

The principal practitioners of medicine at Millersburg were Doctor Henry Swope, from about 1828 until his death; Doctor Abraham Roth, a few years only; Doctor David Batdorff, for thirty-five years, dying in 1874; Doctor Willoughby Kline and Doctor J. V. Albert, each a few years; Doctor James Y. Kline, one year; Doctor Henry Batdorff, for the past eight years; and Doctor D. M. Batdorff, since 1866. The latter is a nephew of Doctor Daniel Batdorff, with whom he studied and located here after his graduation. Doctor Henry Brown has been a reputable veterinary surgeon in Bethel the past forty years.

Bethel Lodge, No. 820, I. O. O. F., was instituted at Millersburg January 11, 1873. In 1885 the lodge was reported flourishing, with a membership of sixty.

One of the first acts of Michael Miller, when he laid out the village, was to set aside a lot for an English school, upon which the present school building stands. The first house was of logs, small in dimensions. Horatio Jones, who came to this place from Chester County, was the first teacher who succeeded in awakening an interest in the English, and it was from him that the first English in this locality was learned, the conversation up to his time having been wholly in Pennsylvania German. The old log house was replaced by a small brick building. Afterward a two-story brick building was substituted; and this proving too small, a larger brick building was put up. The school affairs are conducted successfully.

The business of manufacturing pipe-organs has been carried on in the township by the Dieffenbach family more than one hundred years. One of the first instruments of importance was the organ made for the Tulpehocken Church by Jacob Dieffenbach in 1787, at his place of residence, one and one-half miles from Millersburg. He was succeeded by his eldest son, Christian, and the latter by David Dieffenbach, father of the present organ-builder at Millersburg. The organs built by the Dieffenbachs are remarkable for their durability, power and sweetness of tone, many of them having been continuously in use for several generations. Some of the larger organs built were for the Tulpehocken Church, in 1787; Bernville Church, in 1796; New Hanover Church, in 1800; Orwigsburg Church, in 1808; Host Church, in 1812; and Rehersburg Church, in 1816; and also for the churches at Stouchsburg, Strasstown, Klopp's, Mount Zion, Epler's and Millersburg. The present proprietor has given his attention to the business exclusively for the past fifteen years. He has in his possession a good pipe-organ made by his great-grandfather in 1780.

Freystown.—In 1823 Martin Frey purchased a tract of land, containing seventy-seven acres and twenty-one perches, in the southwestern portion of the township; and in 1830 he laid out a town thereon, and named it "Freystown." The town-plan included one hundred and eighty-one lots. The dimensions of each lot were sixty-six by one hundred and ninety-eight feet. The lots were chanced off by lottery, each ticket selling for ten dollars. The following lots were sold during October, 1830:

The chief industry here is a tannery, which was established by Elias Frantz soon after 1830, and carried on by him many years. The business is now in the hands of Henry Frantz, and the products are all kinds of oak-tanned leather.

The store at this point had among its first keepers Peter Lutz, who also had a public-house. The Cross-Kill Mills post-office was established here in 1849, and kept first at the mills whose name it bears, west of the hamlet. A daily mail from Myerstown is supplied, the office being on the Millersburg route.
SCHUYLKILL SECTION.

The first settlers in the lower western section of the county migrated from Philadelphia County, across the Schuylkill, about 1715. They paid taxes for some years as assessed citizens of "Mahanatawny" (afterward Amity), in this county. The assessors of Chester County then included them also in their list of taxable. This caused them to complain, and they accordingly, in March, 1720, presented a petition to the Executive Council of the province, in which they represented,—

"That, whereas the Commissioners for the county of Chester have attempted of late to make us pay taxes in the county of Chester, notwithstanding we have ever since our first settlement paid our taxes in the county of Philadelphia;

"And your humble petitioners having no trade with Chester, and seeing it is impossible for us to have any tolerable convenient road to Chester by reason of rocks and mountains;

"And considering that the county of Philadelphia, if bounded, by the Schuylkill will not be above seven or eight miles broad at this place by an indifferend computation, and the county of Chester, if bounded by the Schuylkill aforesaid, will be near fifty miles broad by the like computation;

"And considering that we must carry the produce of our labor to market at or near Philadelphia, which is forty or fifty miles, to purchase money to pay our taxes and defray the several charges we shall be incident to by public services if we be taken into Chester county, which will be a very great burden upon us;

"The aforesaid considerations, your humble petitioners hope, are sufficient reason for us to pray your Honors that the counties may be divided, and that if possible, we may be (as heretofore) inhabitants in the county of Philadelphia, though on the west side of the Schuylkill."

This petition was signed by Israel Robeson, Francis Hughes, Henry Bell, John Sinclair, John Rumford and about forty more persons. The Council ordered the secretary "to inquire of the situation and case of the petitioners and report his opinion thereupon to the Board." On February 1, 1721, he reported that he was not able to find any authentic order for the division of the counties. . . .

"That he finds most of the petitioners passed over the Schuylkill from the settlements on the eastern side of it, which were considerable before there were any of note on the western side so high up that river, and accounting themselves to be still in Philadelphia county as they had been before they passed the river, they were accordingly taxed in the township formerly called Mahanatawny, but now Amity, township, there being no practicable road nor convenient communication between those parts and Chester."

The board, after consideration of the case, ordered "that the commissioners and assessors of Chester County should, until the matter could be more effectually settled, forbear to claim those inhabitants," . . . and that they "be permitted to pay their taxes and do all other duties to the county of Philadelphia, as formerly, without any further molestation," etc.

The Schuylkill section included a considerable portion of Chester County in the vicinity, and for many miles north, of French Creek to the Cacoosing. In 1729 all that portion of this section northwest of a line which extended through Union township, northeast by north twenty-one hundred perches, to the Schuylkill, at a point a short distance below the mouth of the Sixpenny Creek, was separated from Chester County, and included in the new county then erected, and named "Lancaster."

And in 1752 this portion, together with a triangular tract of land lying to the east of this line, was included in Berks County.

STREAMS.—In this section there is no conspicuous stream which extends branches into its several parts, as in the three sections,—Manatawny, Ontelaunee and Tulpehocken. It has, however, numerous creeks. All tend northeastwardly and empty into the Schuylkill, draining about four-fifths of its territory. The other fifth comprises Caernarvon, drained entirely by the Conestoga, the southern part of Brecknock by Muddy Creek and the southern part of Spring by Little Muddy Creek, into Lancaster County.

The streams worthy of special mention are Wyomissing, Angelica, Allegheny, Hay and Sixpenny, whose total length is about thirty-eight miles.

There are several smaller streams, which also empty into the Schuylkill, with a total length of about fifteen miles. The length of all the streams in this section is about three-fourths as great as the streams in the other respective sections.

1 The names could not be ascertained.
Hills.—A considerable portion of this section consists of wood-land, especially in Brecknock, Cumru, Robeson and Union townships. In the first three townships named the hills constitute what is generally called "The Forest," and in Union they constitute part of "Chestnut Ridge," which extends into Chester County.

Internal Improvements.—Numerous public roads intersect this section. The most prominent are the following: "Schuylkill Road," which extends along the Schuylkill from the mouth of the Tulpehocken to the Chester County line, a length of sixteen miles; "Berks and Dauphin Turnpike," "Lancaster Road," "New Holland Road," "Morgantown Road," and the "Conestoga Turnpike," the latter extending through the southern portion of Caernarvon township, via Morgantown, in length three miles. All excepting the last lead from Reading.

The "Schuylkill Canal" extends along and near by the bank of the Schuylkill, from the southern line of Reading, at the foot of "Neversink," through Cumru, Robeson and Union townships, a length of fifteen miles, and the "Union Canal" through a part of Spring and Cumru, along the Tulpehocken Creek and the Schuylkill, a length of about three miles.

The Lebanon Valley Railroad extends from Reading, diagonally through Spring, via Sinking Spring, a length of five and a half miles; the Wilmington and Northern from Reading, through Cumru, Robeson, Union and Caernarvon, via Poplar Neck, Birdsboro' and Geigerton, a length of eighteen miles; and the Schuylkill Valley Branch of the Pennsylvania Railroad from Reading, through Cumru, Robeson and Union townships, via Poplar Neck, Birdsboro' and Monocacy, a length of thirteen miles.

This section comprises six townships. The first four were erected before 1752; the remaining two afterward. They are treated in the order named,—

ROBESON TOWNSHIP.

Robeson Township had been known as a district before the erection of Lancaster County, in 1729, whilst its territory was a part of Chester County. At August sessions, 1729, of Lancaster County, the lines of certain townships situated north of the South Mountain, between the Schuylkill and Susquehanna Rivers, were defined, but Robeson was not included. A constable for the district was, however, then appointed—Francis Hughes. At the same time Israel Robeson was appointed one of the two supervisors of Leacock township, by which it would appear that he had moved out of the district, to the south, a dozen miles into the Conestoga Valley.

Andrew Robeson became a proprietor of land in this section as early as 1718. Together with a tract of one thousand acres on the eastern bank of the Schuylkill River (now in Exeter township), he purchased a tract of six hundred acres on the western bank. This was on February 20, 1718. He was then a resident of that part of Philadelphia County which is now Exeter, on the one thousand acre tract. Several years afterward (1719-20) he made his last will, whereby he disposed of a considerable estate. In it he names seven sons—Andrew, Israel, Jonathan, David, Thomas, Samuel and Peter—and three daughters—Elinor, Mary and "Margat." That part which related to land now included in Berks County was as follows:

To Israel, 600 acres "whereon he now (then) liveth, as also ten pounds to his three children"; (400 acres hereof having been conveyed by Israel to his son Moses fifty years afterward, 1770.)

To Jonathan, 1000 acres. (This was the homestead in Exeter.)

To David, 200 acres (occupied by David).

To Thomas, brick house called the "Sine (sign) of the sun."

To Samuel, house occupied by John Owen.

To Peter, 500 acres, called "Neversink."

By this will it would appear that he then owned in this vicinity over twenty-three hundred acres of land. He died February 19, 1719-20, aged sixty-six years, and was buried in Molatton church-yard (now St. Gabriel's, Douglassville.) A sand-stone still marks the grave.
On the obverse side there appears the following inscription:

“Removed from noise and care
This silent place I chose;
When death should end my years
To take a sweet repose.
Here in a peaceful place,
My ashes must remain;
My Saviour shall me keep
And raise me up again.”

Andrew Robeson was a Swede, a man of large wealth and of great social and political influence. His prominence was worthy a special testimonial to perpetuate his memory, and this was appropriately given to him by naming a township after him.

Besides the Robesons, some of the earliest settlers of this district were the following Friends: Gaius Dickinson, John Scarlet, Peter Thomas, John Hugh, William Hugh, Edward Hugh, William Morris, John Webb, James Webb, Joseph Webb, Benjamin Webb and Samuel Webb; and associated with them were Mordecai Ellis, Thomas Ellis, George Boone, John Boone and Thomas Boone, who had settled on the other side of the Schuylkill.

The territory of this township extended eastwardly, originally, to the Chester County line, several miles beyond Hay Creek. The early iron industry of William Bird, begun along the banks of Hay Creek about 1740, was in this township. This industry has been kept up until the present time, a period embracing nearly one hundred and fifty years. Upon the erection of the county, in 1752, the eastern portion, which lay between Hay Creek and the Chester County line, was added to a small portion of Chester County, which was cut to Berks in its erection; and these two portions, united, were formed into a township and called “Union.” Bird can be claimed as having begun in Robeson; and, as Robeson in his day (1719) was the largest resident land-owner in this upper region of the settled portion of the province, be, likewise, a generation afterward, came to be the largest owner of land, if not the richest inhabitant, of the county. And, before the close of the eighteenth century, a third name (Smith) came to be prominent in this township for the possession of property and influence, which has continued here with increasing strength for over four-score years till the present day.

TAXABLES of 1759.—The following list comprises the assessment of taxable inhabitants of the township for the year 1759. The total tax levied was £42 19s. 6d. Christian Arecot (Ehrgood) was the collector:

Robeson is one of the largest townships in the county. Its surface is for the most part mountainous, about three-eighths of its area being chestnut wood-land. Its entire area comprises about twenty-two thousand four hundred acres.

New Township not Established.—In 1845 a petition was presented to Court asking for the erection of the southern section of the township into a new township. The court appointed commissioners (Samuel S. Jackson, Lewis Reese and N. I. Richards) to examine the territory to be set apart for a new township; and these commissioners reported that a new township could be conveniently erected, reporting a line through the township from the extreme eastern corner of Brecknock township S. 84° 20′ E. 504 ps., N. 84° E. 647 ps. and east 186 ps. to the Union township line, at Hay Creek, 26° 20′ ps. north of the Union township corner, and they recommended "Hay Creek" as a proper name for the new township. This report was confirmed by the Court on November 3, 1845. But this proceeding had developed much opposition, which led to the passage of an act of Assembly directing the matter to be submitted to a vote of the electors of the township. This election was held on March 7, 1846, and the vote was unanimous against a division of the township.

INDUSTRIES.

In 1792 Potts & Rutter erected a charcoal furnace in the southern section of the township, near the line, and named it "Joanna," after Joanna Potts. They conducted the iron business there for four years, and then sold the property to Thomas Bull, Thomas May and John Smith. In 1798 Smith purchased the interests of his co-partners, and moved thither from "Dale Forge," where he had been located for some years. He conducted this furnace successfully until his death, when it passed into the hands of his son-in-law, Hon. William Darling, and his son, Levi B. Smith, who then carried on the business for some years, under the name of Darling & Smith. Smith afterward obtained entire possession and continued the iron business till his decease, August 9, 1876. In 1877 one of his sons, Colonel L. Heber Smith, purchased the furnace property. He has since carried on the business successfully. The furnace has a capacity of one hundred tons a month, and affords employment to fifty men. About six thousand acres of woodland are connected with it. Besides the stone homestead, near by, there are fifteen tenement houses and large stables and sheds on the premises, for horses, mules and charcoal. The watershed of this vicinity is near "Joanna," it following along the township line for the greater part, the waters which rise to the north flowing into Hay Creek, and those to the south into the Conestoga.

GIBRALTAR IRON-WORKS, on Allegheny Creek, consist of a rolling-mill, with a capacity of three thousand tons per year, one forge of three fires and one of four fires. About fifty men are employed. These works are connected with the "Reading Iron-Works," a corporation owning extensive industries at Reading.

SEYFERT'S IRON-WORKS, at Seyfert, consist of rolling and puddling-mills, with a capacity of five thousand tons of iron per year. The rolling-mill was erected in 1880, and the latter in 1882. One hundred and twenty men are employed, and there are, besides the mills, a number of tenements belonging to the property.

Grist-mills began with the early settlements. The superior water-power of Hay Creek and Allegheny Creek invited their erection. The "Scarlet Mill," on Hay Creek, was one of the first mills. John Scarlet took up two hundred and eight acres of land at an early time along this creek. In 1748 he obtained a patent, and in 1766 he conveyed the land, including corn-mill, saw-mill, etc., to his son John; and the mill at the mouth of the Allegheny Creek, known for many years as the "Beidler Mill," but latterly as the "Reed Mill," occupies the site of one of the first mills. In 1800 an application was made for a stone bridge over the creek at this mill. It was granted, and the grand jury (of which James May was foreman), on January 5, 1801, recommended an appropriation of two hundred and fifty pounds. Notwithstanding these successful proceedings, it would seem that this stone bridge was not erected, for in 1831 another application was made and allowed, and a bridge was erected at the same place.

On Hay Creek, below Joanna Furnace, the old Brunner mill has been replaced by a new mill owned by Kurtz & Plank, which was erected in the fall of 1885. The building is three-story stone, and includes two runs of burrs.

The old Geiger mill was built in 1781 by Paul Geiger, and remains in many respects as then put up, having a Master wheel which was in use more than one hundred years. The present owner is John Marquart. Near this building John Geiger had a carding-mill, and Paul Geiger a sickle-factory, both of which have been discontinued. Near this place is the Cold Run Creamery, owned and operated by an association since August, 1885. It is substantially built and well supplied with machinery, etc.

Below Scarlet's Mill, Ephraim Scarlet, a grandson of John Scarlet, got in operation a woolen-factory nearly sixty years ago, which was discontinued about 1870. This building and the mill have become the property of the Wilmington and Northern Railroad Company. Several scythe-factories were also carried on by the Scarlets for some years, one having been discontinued about 1840. The factory below the mill was carried on afterward by Peter Brown and others, and at one time quite extensively.

CHURCHES.

Friends' Meeting-House, near the central part of the township, is a large sand-stone building, fast going to decay. The grave-yard is inclosed with a stone wall, which is still in good condition. Some of the first settlers of Robeson were Friends, and they had a very early meeting-house. They also attended the meetings in Exeter and Reading. The active members were John Scarlet, Isaac Bonsal, John Williams, William Morris, Judah Thomas, Benjamin Scarlet and Enos Morris. The committee of the Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting, to which they were attached, said, in their report, after one of their visits to Robeson: "We found more Friends there than we had expected, who appeared devoted to the cause of truth."

For a long term of years the meetings were held with regularity, but owing to the reduced number of members, they were discontinued in 1872, and the property, containing about twenty acres, was sold to Jacob Kurtz, excepting the grave-yard, which was reserved as a permanent place of interment for such as might choose to use it for that purpose. Some of the descendants of the Friends are still among the citizens of the township, but do not adhere to the faith of their fathers.

Robeson Church (Lutheran and Reformed) is sometimes called the "Forest," also the "Plow" Church. It was built in 1767 as the exclusive property of a Lutheran congregation, and was unpretentious in its appearance. The first pastor was Rev. William Kurtz, who began in 1770. He remained until 1779, and for a short time the pulpit was vacant. A minister was proposed by some members, but failed to receive the office, because he was not properly ordained, and was suspected of being unsound in doctrine. This objection was expressed in the form of a protest, drawn up March 20, 1779, and was presented to the Synod by the Rev. Henry M. Muhlenberg, in behalf of the following members: John Fehr, John Moyer, Sr., Paul Geiger, Jacob Seifrit, Philip Wert, Melchior Schweitzer, Jacob Hoffman, Casper Wolf, Peter Böhm, Philip Fehr, John Moyer, Jr., George Wicklein and Jacob Fehr.

At the end of two years the Rev. T. F. Illing became the pastor, serving from 1781 to 1797. His successor was the Rev. John Plitt, from 1799 till 1812; and it was in the latter years of his pastorate (1810) that the present church was erected, by the joint efforts of the Lutherans and German Reformed, the latter having then obtained an interest in the property. As the expense of building was greater than the congregations felt able to bear, consent was sought to hold a lottery, to raise part of the money.1

1 "Lottery!"

"Scheme to raise by means of a lottery five thousand dollars to enable the Lutheran and Reformed congregations to build a church and school-house in Robeson township, Berks County." The following prizes were offered: One prize each for $600, $500, $300, $150; four each for $100; $51; fifty for $50; ten for $40; one hundred for $20; and one hundred and fifty for $5; etc. Five hundred tickets, at three dollars per ticket, were issued. All prizes were subject to a discount of twenty per cent. and were to be paid in thirty days after the lottery was drawn. Prizes not demanded in one year were considered as relinquished for the benefit of the church and school-house. The commissioners were Abram Mengel, Christian Trett, Jacob Geiger, John Westley, Christian Donnheur and John Ziemer; and the circular was dated January 15, 1810. The drawings were published in February, 1810, and it is said that many of the prizes were not demanded.
The building is constructed of sand-stone and remains substantially as erected. The situation is elevated and the building may be seen many miles. The cemetery near by is kept in good order. It was enlarged in 1885, by the addition of several acres from the farm of Jacob Good, under the general cemetery act. On the 19th and 20th of September, 1874, the church celebrated its first centennial, a large concourse of people having been in attendance.

In the new church the Lutheran pastors have been since 1813 Revs. Peter Filbert, J. W. Richards, C. A. Welden, C. P. Miller, Marens Harpel, Jeremiah Harpel, Thomas T. Taege, J. R. Focht, F. A. M. Keller, H. S. Miller, Aaron Finfrock, F. T. Hoover, D. K. Humbert and Zenas H. Gable, the latter having served since 1873. The congregation numbers four hundred members. The Reformed congregation has one hundred and fifty members, and has had the following pastors since 1811: Rev. Aug. Pauli, Amos Dick Thomas Leinbach, Fred. Herman, Aug. Herman, M. L. Fritch, the last name having served since 1872.

FRIEDEN'S LUTHERAN CHURCH, was built in 1886 on a lot set aside for that purpose by Daniel Wicklein. It is a stone building, with basement and was never wholly completed. The congregation occupying this church was independent of synodical connection and had the Rev. Jacob Wicklein as its only pastor, who preached a few years. He also served some congregations in Schuylkill County where he was accidentally killed. A cemetery is connected with the church, and about the only use the building is put to is when funerals are held.

ST. JOHNS CHURCH, (LUTHERAN AND REFORMED), is a plain, old-fashioned stone edifice, a short distance below Gibraltar. The ground on which it stands, including about half of the present grave yard was sold by Elias Retge (Reday) to Valentine Geiger and Herman Umstead, in trust, for the use of such Christian congregations as should contribute to the maintenance of the grave yard and the church to be erected thereon. The original plot contained one acre and ten perches, and the consideration was five shillings. The deed for this land was dated April 29, 1791, and states that this place had been used for divers years past by the above named Valentine Geiger, Herman Umstead and other inhabitants of Robeson township and parts adjacent. If a purpose had been formed to build a church, at the time this conveyance was made, it was not realized until eighteen years later. The present and only edifice at this place was erected in 1809. But who were instrumental in this work is not now positively known, for all accounts bearing on it, and the early history of the congregations, have been mislaid or destroyed. This much is known that, though nominally a Lutheran and Reformed Church, Episcopal and Baptist ministers also preached in it, the Revs. George Mintzer and Andrew Collins being remembered in this connection. The uncertainty as to the tenure of the building and the natural opposition to Sunday-schools, caused much trouble and local feeling in 1850 which was set at rest when the church became an incorporated body, April 9, 1851. In this charter the ownership of property is vested entirely in Lutheran and Reformed congregations and it is declared that the church should be used solely for preaching services by ordained and registered clergymen of those denominations. The church is also declared to be free from all synodical connection, and to be the exclusive property of the associated congregations. The trustees named in the charter were Jacob R. Hill, Benjamin H. Hill, Henry Moyer, Philip Hartz, Benjamin Clauser and John Haws. The latter and R. B. Seidel are at present trustees.

The Reformed congregation has one hundred and twenty-five members with Rev. M. L. Fritch as pastor since 1873. The ministers preceding him were the Revs. A. S. Leinbach, A. L. Herman, Aug. Pauli and William Pauli. The Lutheran congregation has had the Rev. Zenas H. Gable as the pastor since 1873. Other Lutheran ministers who officiated in the church were Revs. Peter Filbert, J. W. Richards, J. Harpel, J. L. Schock, J. A. Brown, F. A. M. Keller F. T. Hoover and D. K. Humbert.

EVANGELICAL CHURCHES.—The Evangelical Association has several churches within the bounds of the township, the oldest of which is the Bethel Church, south of the Plow Tavern. It was built in 1845 and rebuilt in 1872. It is a plain sand-stone building with sittings for two hundred persons. There is also a small grave-yard attached, in which are interred some of the early members, belonging to the Witman, Belhm, Hoffman, Brown, Gorman, Gable and Hines families. In the spring of 1874 a class of this faith was formed at Scarlet's Mill, and in that neighborhood a small house of worship was built, called the Hay Creek Chapel, which was completed in the fall of that year. Those interested in this work were J. Rhoads, William Pierce, Alex. McAllister, R. Sands, David Kurtz and William Linderman. At one time there were thirty members, but owing to removals and deaths the congregation has declined.

JOANNA HEIGHT CAMP MEETING GROUNDS were opened to the public in 1879. They are under the general management of the Rev. H. M. Sehring. They embrace about eight acres of natural forest, which is abundantly supplied with spring water. They are elegantly situated and have been extensively improved with numerous buildings. The frame dwellings number two hundred and fifty. The yearly meetings of the Methodists have been well attended and the grounds have become very popular.

VILLAGES.

BECKERSVILLE is a small post hamlet, in the southwestern part of the township, deriving its name from Jacob Becker, who was in business at that point a number of years, and who was instrumental in having the post-office established in 1852. Benjamin Dickinson was in business at that place as early as 1827, having a tavern, store and distillery, the former only being now continued. The office has a daily mail from White Bear Station. Several mechanic shops complete the other industries of the place. Dr. Isaac Haldeman has practiced as a physician at that place the past thirty-five years.

PLOW TAVERN is a small business point, nine miles from Reading, on the Morgantown road. It was widely known in the early part of the century as a centre for the "Forest Dis-
An older inn was kept by Mordecai Morris, in 1810, which was called the “Red Lion,” both houses taking their names from the signs which indicated them. The latter house was built before the Revolution, and had other keepers. Joseph Dickinson became the owner of the Morris property and established a tannery, which he carried on till 1840. The tannery was discontinued about thirty years later, when Jackson Beard became the owner of the property.

The post-office in this locality is called “Scarlet’s Mills” and was established in 1869. It is kept in a small store, near the station. Amos Boyer was the first postmaster, he having kept the office at the Scarlet mill. A store was kept in 1836 by George Pierce and last by Amos Boyer in 1876.

Naomi is situated in the northwestern part of the township and contains about forty buildings, occupied principally by the workmen employed in the “Seyfert Iron Works.” There have been public-houses and small stores, but none of historic interest.

Gibraltar is the name of another hamlet, one mile lower down. The canal and railroads have stations on each of the lines. It was formerly called Seidelsville, after the owner of iron-works located near the place. A post-office was established with that name in 1836, but was changed to Robeson and afterward to Gibraltar, under which name the office is continued. There have been no noteworthy business interests, aside from those connected with the iron-works. Two forges, known as “Do-Well,” were carried on near by for a time by the Seidel family.

Gickersville.—Near Birdsboro is a small hamlet called Robeson, though locally it has also been called Gickersville and Junction. It is not distinguished as a business place.

Biographical.

Thomas B. Smith, son of John and Elizabeth (Bull) Smith, was born at Dale Forge, in Berks County, August 17, 1793. He graduated at Dickinson College, studied law and was admitted to practice at the bar, Reading, 1814. In 1816 he married Annetta Old and assumed the management at Joanna Furnace, where he died February 24, 1825.

Horace Smith, his son, was born at Joanna Furnace, graduated at Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio, studied law in Reading, removed to Pottsville, where he practiced law. In 1850 he was appointed consul to Portugal. His health not improving, he returned in the spring of 1852 to Reading, where he died a few weeks afterward.

Levi B. Smith was of Scotch descent. His great-grandparents, John and Susanna Smith, emigrated from Ulster County, Ireland, in 1720, and settled in what is now Uwchlan township, Chester County, Pa., in a locality long known as the Brandywine Settlement. The family name was originally Macdonald, and that branch of it from which he descended formed an important part of the earliest Scottish emigration across the North Channel into Ireland in the time of James I., of England. Near the end of the seventeenth century the family lived in the northeastern part of Ireland. Just before the Battle of the Boyne, as the soldier-king, William III., was personally reconnoitering the locality, which was so soon to become famous, his horse cast a shoe. There was no farrier in attendance to replace it, but Macdonald, the father of John Smith, in whose neighborhood the accident occurred, and who, like many other farmers in thinly peopled districts, was something of a blacksmith, volunteered to repair the injury, shod the horse, and so enabled the King to proceed. The legend says that his neighbors, who, like himself, were in sympathy with the cause of which William was the champion, called him “the Smith.” In that district there was a surfeit of Macdonalds, and there were hardly enough names to individualize the members of the clan. Smith was to them a novelty, and this particular Scotchman, proud to have his name linked with that of a great man and a decisive battle, as that of Boynewater was soon known to be, accepted the cognomen and handed it down to his posterity as the family name. Among the first of the Scotch-Irish emigrants to Pennsylvania were John and Susanna Smith, who left their home in 1720, one year after the enforcing of “the Test,” and whose special grievance was not the raising of the rent of their homestead, but the absolute refusal of their landlord to renew their lease unless they would comply with the requirements of that hated act.

With her brother John came Mary Smith, who married Alexander Fulton, and to whom in due time was born a grandson, Robert Fulton, who has indissolubly linked his name with the history of steam navigation. John Smith died in 1765, aged seventy-nine years, and his wife Susanna in 1767, aged seventy-six years.

Three elder brothers having sought their fortunes elsewhere, the homestead in Uwchlan fell to Robert Smith, who was born at sea during the voyage to this country, and who had married, December 20, 1758, Margareta, daughter of John Vaughan, of Red Lion, Uwchlan township. Sergeant Robert Smith is reported in the public records of the time as "going to Reading to be qualified," when, in 1757, the war between the French and English made the Indians restless and aggressive. In August, 1775, when the colonial government was discussing means for the protection of Philadelphia, the Supreme Executive Council of Pennsylvania returned thanks to Robert Smith for a model of a machine for handling chevaux-de-frise, with which to obstruct the channel of the Delaware River, just below Red Bank, N. J. He sat in the convention which, on September 28, 1776, adopted the first State Constitution of Pennsylvania.

Being a man of considerable means and of extensive influence, he was appointed, on the 12th of March, 1777, by the Supreme Executive Council, to the position of lieutenant of Chester County, with the rank of colonel, and the charge of raising, arming and provisioning the military contingent of his district, and preparing the troops to take the field. He retired from this position (which he had filled for nine most eventful years) March 21, 1786. He served for one term in the State Assembly in 1785, and in 1787 retired to his farm after twelve years of public life. He died in 1803, aged eighty-three years, and his wife died in 1822, at the age of eighty-seven.

Of their children, Jonathan was, for many years, honorably and prominently connected with the First and Second United States Banks and the Bank of Pennsylvania, as their cashier. John Smith, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born April 8, 1762. As a young man he was manager of Warwick Furnace, Chester County, for Colonel Thomas Bull, the proprietor. In December, 1790, he married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Colonel Thomas and Ann (Hunter) Bull, and settled at Dale Forge, Berks County, which he owned and carried on until about 1796, when he removed to Joanna Furnace, Berks County, where the remainder of his life was passed. He was an active and successful business man. He died April 2, 1815.

Of the children of John Smith, three were sons,—Thomas, Levi B. and John Vaughan. Levi B. was born at Joanna Furnace February 8, 1806. He received a liberal education, graduating with honor at Princeton College, N. J., in the class of 1824, studied law and graduated at the Litchfield Law School, Litchfield, Conn., and was admitted to practice at the bar of Berks County January 10, 1827, though not with any intention of devoting himself to the legal profession. He was married April 10, 1827, to Emily H. Badger, a native of Bucksport, Me., of Puritan descent, whose ancestors emigrated to New England in 1635.

Soon after his marriage, he engaged in business, first at the Old Reading Hall, Chester County, and afterward at Mount Airy, about a mile southeast of Birdsboro. In 1833 he formed a partnership in the iron business at Joanna Furnace, with his brother-in-law, William Darling, who was also a member of the bar, and better known as Judge Darling. The firm of Darling & Smith, which lasted more than thirty years, became known through the whole country for their manufacture of wood-stoves, some of which can still be seen in the homes of many families in the county, with the name of the firm cast upon them in raised letters. This firm was subsequently dissolved, and gave place to that of Levi B. Smith & Co., and later, to Levi B. Smith & Sons. The business interests of these firms, together with that of his sons, Bently, William, Heber, Horace and Stanley, associated as Smith & Bros., extended through the three counties of Berks, Lancaster and Chester, comprising the Joanna Furnace, in Berks, Isabella Furnace, in Chester, extensive iron-ore lands in Lancaster, with over six thousand acres of land.

In 1862 Mr. Smith relinquished the active management of these business enterprises to his sons and removed to Reading, where he became one of its most useful and honored citizens. He was, in politics, an Old Line Whig, and a Republican from the formation of that party. He manifested a deep interest in politics, and in his younger days took an active part in National, State and County Conventions. He was frequently a delegate to those bodies, where his services were always of a valuable character. He was a candidate for Congress in 1860. His popularity throughont the county, and particularly in the southern townships, ran him far ahead of the ticket. In Robeson, out of 543 votes he received 435; in Caernarvon, 140 out of 200. Mr. Smith was on the Lincoln electoral ticket the same year, but in consequence of having been nominated for Congress he resigned. He was outspoken and fearless in his Republican principles, and assisted largely in establishing and maintaining the party in the county. He was a warm friend of the colored race and a sympathizer with them in their troubles.

Mr. Smith's business connections in this city and county were of the most extensive character. He was ever ready to lend his aid to pro-his death. For over thirty years he was a delegate to the Diocesan Conventions from St. Thomas' Church, Morgantown, and in 1858 a member of the General Convention which met in New York.

During the Rebellion but few men exhibited more spirit, energy and patriotism than he. He contributed liberally for the organization and equipment of companies to crush the Rebellion. Largely through his instrumentality three companies were sent out, each of which was commanded by one of the following sons: Bently H., L. Heber and William D. Smith.

In private life Mr. Smith bore an unblemished character, and was esteemed for his many virtues. He was a friend to the poor, a counselor to those in distress and a warm-hearted and pleasant companion. He died August 9, 1876, and left a widow and seven children, four sons (three named and Dr. Stanley Smith, one-list) and three daughters (Mrs. W. H. Clymer, Mrs. E. J. Richards and Miss Emily Smith).

L. Heber Smith, son of Levi B. Smith, was born on the homestead at Joanna Furnace, and, on the death of his father, succeeded to the iron interests at that place, of which he is now the exclusive proprietor and the first sole owner of the property. He indicated his patriotism during the late Rebellion by raising a company in July, 1862, afterward enrolled as Company A, of the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, of which he became captain. Soon after the battle of Antietam, in which this regiment participated, he was promoted to the lieutenant-colonelcy and was actively engaged at South Mountain and Chancellorsville. At the latter battle he was taken prisoner, and, after a short confinement in Libby Prison, he was paroled. Colonel Smith was married on the 17th of June, 1868, to Ella Jane, daughter of Clement B. Grubb, of Lancaster City, Pa. Their children are Clement Grubb, Heber Levi, Mary Grubb, Daisy Emily and Stanley McDonald. Colonel Smith, in his political sentiments, is a stanch Republican, and, while an active and influential member of the party, has always declined office. He is a director of the First National Bank of Reading, and identified with the leading business interests of the county.

Colonel Smith is a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, being a member of St. Thomas' Church, Morgantown, of which he is a vestryman.

CAERNARVON TOWNSHIP.

The township of Caernarvon is situated in the extreme southern section of the county. The territory was settled by the Wesnath at a very early period. The township, by this name, had been erected before 1729, whilst still a part of Chester County. It is not known how early the first settlements were made. The discovery of iron and copper in this section of the Conestoga Valley may have attracted settlers here about 1700; but general immigration would seem not to have been encouraged till 1732, because the Indians claimed the territory. The northerly line of the released land, fixed in 1718, was in this vicinity. In the erection of the township the whole of the Conestoga Valley was included, though it lay north of South Mountain, and though particular settlements had not yet, it is believed, been effected. In 1729 it was described as being bounded by Salisbury township, Cadwalader Ellis's land, a township not named (supposed to have been Robeson), Earl township and Leacock township; and George Hudson was constable.

The Welsh gave this name to the township. Caernarvon was, and is still, the name of a county in the northern part of Wales, and, it having been the native place of the settlers, they naturally suggested it as a proper name for the section of country in which they established their new home.

When Berks County was erected, the western boundary line extended through this township. The portion which was cut to the county included about eight thousand five hundred acres and retained the same name. The area was not reduced at any time.

TAXABLES OF 1759.—The following list comprises the taxable inhabitants of the township for the year 1759. The tax levied was

Industries.—Although the volume of the streams of the township is not great, there are a number of mill-sites whose advantages were appreciated and improved soon after the settlement of the country. Near the head-waters of Conestoga Creek are the Spring Mills, formerly owned by George Robeson, which have had many owners, and which are still in operation. Lower down the stream, in the valley proper, the Morgans improved the water-powers, which, together with some farming lands, became the property of the Clymers, Edward having the upper mill, and William the lower, where were an oil-mill and a distillery. In part of the mill-house an inn was kept. The Clymers sold the property to the Rev. Levi Bull, who discontinued the distillery; and the oil-mill was afterwards converted into a feed-mill by Isaac Graham. The Clymer homestead and the upper mill became the property of the Kurtzes, who still possess the same. The mill is still operated. At the confluence of the branches of the Conestoga, Dieter Bechtel had a mill, which is now the property of John P. Mast, who supplied roller machinery in 1885, and added steam-power in the spring of 1886, making it one of the best mills in this part of the country. On the left branch of the Conestoga, near Morgantown, Joseph Broadbent employed the power (which had been used to operate a flax-brake and carding-machine) to carry on the machinery of a woolen-factory in 1841, and enlarged the building in 1842. He manufactured all kinds of woolen goods, and discontinued it in 1864, the machinery having been removed soon afterward. Above this place was another carding-machine where Stephen Mast has had a clover-mill and a small mill for chopping feed; and in the same locality sorghum syrup was manufactured, about 1864, by John P. Mast, in a building specially erected for that purpose.

In the hills beyond, iron-ore has been mined by E. & G. Brooke, a good quality being obtained; and the Jones mines, three miles eastward, among the oldest and most productive in the county, are still being worked.¹

Churches.

St. Thomas’ Church (Episcopal).—Thomas Morgan, in his last will, dated December 9, 1740, devised to his four sons, John, Francis, William and Jacob, and their heirs, in trust, one acre of ground in Caernarvon, for the purpose of erecting thereon a house of worship and for a burying-ground. He also devised a tract of ninety-three acres of land in the same township, the rent of which should be applied towards building the church and maintaining services in the same. This land was held in trust until 1832, when it was sold, and the principal put on interest until 1886, when it was applied towards the erection of a parsonage for the parish at Morgantown.

Some years after 1740 a church was built on the acre lot, situated south of Morgantown, on the present Adam Styer farm. It was called “St. Thomas’ Chapel,” and services were held in it according to the forms of the Church of England. This chapel was neatly furnished in 1759, but had no settled minister, and Thomas Barton declared his purpose to visit the people the coming spring, with a view of securing an Episcopal minister for them. There was no regular rector before the accession of Dr. Levi Bull, some time before the close of the century. The chapel becoming too small, the State Assembly was petitioned for consent to establish the chapel in that village, and the congregation became incorporated on March 6, 1786. In 1792 Jacob Morgan donated lot No. 32, on Reading Street, in Morgantown, for church purposes. The chapel was built of logs on this lot, and so arranged as to form two rooms, one serving for school purposes. This building was used until 1824, when the present church edifice was erected upon the same site. It is a plain stone building, almost square, having a basement and auditorium. When the old chapel was removed the burial-ground connected with it reverted to the farm of Benjamin Gehman, who had bought it from the Morgans, and the lot was turned into a field, which was plowed over by Gehman. No trace of the spot now remains. It is supposed that Thomas Morgan was among those interred at that place. The grave-yard connected with the new church also contains many interments, among them being the following before 1800: Jacob Morgan, Rachel Morgan, Alexander Laverty and Henry Mengel. It contains the grave of James Lincoln, who was ninety-four years old; John Sypherd, eighty-six; John Teater, eighty-four; Samuel Laverty, eighty; and others whose years were more than three-score and ten. The school-house adjoining the church lot was built in 1827 and remodeled in 1879. For the past fifty years the public schools have been taught in it. It is one of the oldest buildings of the kind now remaining in the county. The parish in 1886 had thirty-three members.

The successive pastors of St. Michael's Chapel have been the following: Revs. Levi Bull, D.D., James Woodward, Jr., —— Flower, Edward Lygett, Henry M. Stewart, Francis E. Arnold, William R. Gries, Henry R. Smith, John Ireland and Samuel McElwee.

The Morgantown Methodist Episcopal Church.—The edifice at present occupied by the Methodists of Morgantown and vicinity was dedicated November 3, 1878. It is a two-story sand-stone structure, and cost eight thousand dollars. The interior is handsomely finished, with frescoed walls. At the time the edifice was erected, the Rev. Edward Devine was the pastor. The succeeding ministers were Revs. William W. Smith, W. W. Cookman and, since April, 1886, the Rev. Amos A. Arthur. The members number one hundred and fifteen, constituting two classes, led by Adam Styer and L. B. Foreman.

The first church was built in 1832, on the same lot, part of which forms a burial-ground. It was a small, one-story stone building and used until the present church took its place. For many years the membership of the church was small.

Harmony Meeting-House was erected in the fall of 1871, to accommodate such denominations as might wish to worship in that locality. Though Union in nature, it has been occupied chiefly by the Methodists, the minister serving this charge in connection with appointments in Chester County. The building is of brown sandstone and has sittings for two hundred and fifty persons. The members occupying it are few in number. It stands on the site of an old stone house, which was small and very plainly finished. The church lot was donated by Colonel L. Heber Smith, of Joanna Furnace, near which place the church is located.

Several miles south from this place is a small Baptist meeting-house, occupied by a congregation of that faith, whose membership is also small.

Caernarvon Cemetery, opposite Saint Thomas' church-yard, at Morgantown, was laid out in July, 1882, by J. Howard Jacobs, Esq., of Reading, and has an area of three acres, laid out in fourteen sections, containing four hundred and ten lots. Fine monuments have been erected by the Jacobs and Kurtz families.

Morgantown, the only village in the township, and one of the oldest in the county, is located in the beautiful Conestoga Valley, near the Lancaster County line. It was named after Jacob Morgan, who laid out the town about 1770. He was a son of Thomas Morgan, a native of Wales, who was a captain in the French and Indian War, and who had become the owner of a large tract of the choicest land in what is now Caernarvon. In 1765 Jacob Morgan was a merchant at Philadelphia, but he must have settled in this township soon afterward. He died at Morgantown in 1792, at the age of seventy-six years, and his wife, Rachel, in 1791, aged sixty-eight years. They had sons named Jacob and Benjamin and several daughters, one of whom was Rebecca (Price), who intermarried with the Wetherill family, of Philadelphia. Jacob Morgan took an active part in the Revolutionary War. Thomas Morgan was a brother of Jacob, and the father of sons named John, Francis, Jacob and William, most of whom figured in the early history of the village.

The original plat of the village embraced thirty-two lots, located on both sides of a street eighty feet wide, except on Centre Square, which was forty feet wide. These lots were each sixty by two hundred and sixty feet. In 1802 they were owned by Abner Lewis, Lott Evans, Joseph Ashton, Mary Hudson and William Morgan. In 1835 the lot-owners on the south side of the street were Charles Brooke, E. Rees, D. Morgan, S. Dingler, R. Laverty, E. Morgan, J. Jenkins, J. Morgan, W. Grier, John Dougherty, J. Good and the Methodist Church. On the north side, from the west, J. Sands, A. Fobes, D. Morgan, B. Clemson, John Morgan, David Finger, J. and S. Roberts, John Roberts, D. Morgan and Ann Clymer. Jehu Jones lived on Reading Street. One of the above-named, John Sands, a cabinet-maker, is still living at Morgantown, aged eighty-seven years. David Finger was another early cabinet-maker, an occupation which is now carried on by H. G. Weaver. Other pioneer tradesmen were Wilson and William Hamilton, wheelwrights; John Pawling, blacksmith; Frank and John Gillespie and John Dougherty, tailors; James Quinn and John Mason, shoemakers; Edward Wells, carpenter; Henry Clark, cooper; David Gilmore, tinsmith; John Kelcher, mason. There was another mason, remembered only as "Wee Billy," who built several of the stone houses with clay mortar, which, it is said, the hogs in the street mixed for him. He prepared a bed of clay mortar, in which he threw a lot of shelled corn, which tempted the hogs to wallow in the clay until it was thoroughly mixed. This ingenious mason removed at an early day.

In the early history of the village there were numerous public-houses. One was near the Methodist Church, called the "Hamilton House," which was kept by John Gray, Thomas Jones and others. The well of the tavern was in the street. On one occasion a great excitement was created when a horseman rode into it, but fortunately without injury to beast or rider. The site of Odd-Fellows' Hall was occupied by a store and tavern, as was also the place where is now Dr. Plank's residence. David Morgan built a part of the old hotel in 1799 and kept it about thirty years. It was extended to its present condition by Daniel K. Plank and has always been used as a tavern. Stores were also kept in it by John and James Morgan and others until 1841. In the "Hoffman House" Dieter Bechtel was an early landlord. Rees Evans was at the same place. For many years it was a residence. In 1878 it was again devoted to tavern purposes. Among the early merchants, Dr. McFarland was one of the first after the Morgans. He traded in the present Kenney residence, which he built. He also followed his profession, leaving the village about 1809. Later merchants at that place were James Byers and William Ross. Samuel Laverty and Robert Laverty traded in the old Foreman house, while Thomas Crews and later John C. Evans had stores in the John Plank residence. William Morris and his son James were the merchants in the Broadbent residence. The Duchman store was erected as a hall, for a boarding-school, by Alexander Tutton, about 1853, but not proving profitable, William Corbet converted it into a store a few years afterward. Here is kept the Morgantown post-office, established in 1806, the fourth office in the county. There are two mails per day. At one time six mail routes concentrated here, and Morgantown was the centre for a large scope of country. In "Odd-Fellows' Hall" stores have been kept since 1868, the first being Webb & Austin's.

The manufacture of cigars has lately been added to the interests of the place, factories being carried on by Emil Myers, Foreman & Kenney and W. S. Duchman. Twenty-five hands are employed in this business.

Dr. Hopperstetter was, next to Dr. McFarland, a practitioner at Morgantown. Later physicians were Dr. John S. Seltzer and Dr.
Henry Woodruff. Dr. D. Heber Plank has been in active practice at Morgantown since 1869, being the only resident physician.

The old buildings of the village have lately been beautified, and with the addition of several new ones, the place has been made attractive.

Union Lodge. No. 66, F. and A. M., was instituted at Morgantown in 1797, but it never had a strong membership. In 1816 there were twenty members and in 1833, when the last meeting was held before suspending, only five members were present, John C. Evans being the last Master. From that time until November 10, 1870, there was no Masonic body at Morgantown. Union Lodge, No. 479, was then instituted. In 1886 there were thirty-eight members, whose meetings were held in Odd-Fellows' Hall.

Caernarvon Lodge, No. 557, I. O. O. F., was instituted December 17, 1859, and has at present thirty-six members and assets amounting to three thousand six hundred dollars.

The hall was erected in 1868 by the Morgantown Hall Association, who sold out to the Odd-Fellows. The building is of stone, three stories high, and originally had the second and third stories set aside for hall purposes, the second being used for public gatherings. The hall used by the above lodges is spacious and furnished in good style.

Conestoga Vigilant Company is an association of horse-owners for protection against theft. It was founded in 1822 and has at present a membership of fifty. The quarterly meetings are held at Morgantown, where its principal officers reside.

Joanna Station, on the Wilmington and Northern Railroad, is in the northeastern part of the township, near the Jones Iron-Mines. It contains but a few buildings, one of them being the store of Allison Fosnacht, where is kept the Joanna Furnace post-office, established at the iron-works whose name it bears in December, 1830. From this place the Morgantown mail is supplied. Southeast from this place country stores have been kept for short periods, and on the Conestoga pike, Daniel Ubil had an inn soon after 1800, this being now a farm-house on the Abraham Kurtz place.

Nearer Morgantown, on the same thoroughfare, Robert Gilmore had a store and a public-house, called the "Conestoga Hotel," but first called the "Bull Inn," which now belongs to Robert Gilmore.

CUMRU TOWNSHIP.

When Lancaster County was erected, in 1729, all the territory extending north of the Chester County line to the Cacoosing Creek, excepting that portion included in Caernarvon township, was generally known as Robeson. About the time that the Indians released their rights to this territory immigrants entered upon it and effected settlements, having passed northwardly through Caernarvon township. They were Welsh persons. After the northern section had come to be fairly settled, proceedings were instituted to erect a new township. This was in 1737. The township was named "Cumru." I could not find the petition or other papers relating to its erection, on file in the office at Lancaster.

Hugh Jones was the first settler who took up lands in this township. He applied for and obtained a warrant in 1732 for a tract of one thousand acres, situated along the Wyomissing Creek. In pursuance of this warrant, six hundred acres were surveyed for him in 1733, and two hundred acres for Evan Price. The patents were issued in 1735.

The Price tract was taken up at the mouth of the Wyomissing Creek. He then erected and conducted a water corn-mill. This was known for many years as the Price Mill. In 1773 Nicholas Lutz purchased the mill. During the Revolution it was a busy industry in supplying flour to the army. In 1735, several months after the patent had been issued, Price conveyed sixty-two acres of this tract to Evan Lloyd. At this time there was a "race" and also a mill-dam, showing that the improvement had been made. In 1741 the land adjoining Henry Harry and David Lewis.

Evan Lloyd took up two tracts of land in this section,—one in 1735 for three hundred acres, and the other in 1738 for one hundred and seventy acres. And several months afterwards, in 1738, Thomas Lloyd (doubtless, a brother) took a tract for one hundred and eighty-six acres. On this latter tract a paper-mill was erected.

Thomas Jenkins took up a tract of one hundred and thirty-eight acres, on the Cacoosing, in 1734.

In 1737 Dietrich Marshall took up three hundred and forty-one acres along the Wyomissing. In 1750 he conveyed forty-nine acres thereof to John Moon (now Mohn), and in 1758 this tract was conveyed by Moon to his son Lodowick (Ludwig). John Moon, in 1748, took up two hundred and forty-five acres.

In 1737 Sebastian Goglin (doubtless changed to Gouglar) took up one hundred and eighty-five acres on the Cacoosing, and in 1740 and 1741 John Davis took up, on the same stream, seven hundred and forty-three acres.

In 1744 Anthony Morris took up five hundred acres on the Tulpehocken.

Henry Harry, in 1735, took up three hundred and eleven acres.

OPPOSITION TO DIVISION OF TOWNSHIP.—In April, 1842, a number of the inhabitants of Cumru and Heidelberg townships united in a petition to court, asking for the erection of a new township out of a part of each township, for the reason that their respective townships were unusually large and inconvenient for election purposes, township meetings, road repairs, etc. They suggested a division of the two townships by lines drawn through them northwardly from the county line, the Cumru portion lying west of the Wyomissing Creek and Lancaster road, and the Heidelberg portion lying east of Hain’s Church. The court entertained their petition and appointed three commissioners,—Samuel S. Jackson, Benjamin Tyson and Matthias S. Richards. These commissioners viewed the townships and reported, July 1, 1842, in favor of the division of Cumru township, according to the line suggested; but exceptions were filed against the proposed division, and the report was set aside January 6, 1843.

Several years afterwards (April, 1845) this effort for a division of the township, according to a line suggested in the report of 1842, was renewed. In May following the court appointed M. S. Richards, S. S. Jackson and Lewis Reese commissioners, who, on 1st July, 1845, recommended such a division. But the proceeding was again strenuously opposed on account of the injustice and inequality of the division, the upper part having all the finest farming lands and old improved roads, and the latter the poor and hilly lands and the recent roads, which occasioned large expense. The court held the matter under advisement over two years and then set aside the report.

In 1850 a third effort was made for a new township. This proved successful. The division line was located a short distance to the west of the previous line. The western portion was called “Spring.”

TAXABLES OF 1759.—The following taxable persons were included in the township in the year 1759. The tax levied then was £106 18s. 6d. David Evans, Jr., was the collector of taxes,

The petition was signed by one hundred and fifty-three subscribers, ninety-eight of the signatures being English.

A remonstrance was filed, subscribed by one hundred and seventy-eight tax-payers of the township, of which eighty-one signatures were English. A number of the exceptions were residents of Reading.

See Spring township.
The "Poor-house Property," which is owned and conducted by the county of Berks, is situated on the Lancaster road, adjoining Shillington, three miles from Reading. It embraces about five hundred acres of cleared land, which, for agricultural purposes, cannot be surpassed. As an institution for the poor of the county, it was begun in 1824, under the requirements of special legislation. The principal improvements consist of "Main Building," "Insane Buildings," "Hospital Building," etc. They are described in chapter devoted to Public Buildings.

The farming land in this section of the county, from the hills to the river, is superior. It is under a high state of cultivation, and reflects much credit upon the industry and ability of the farmers who are and have been for years in possession.

Whilst John Penn was on his way from Reading to Harrisburg, he visited Gen. Mifflin's farm. (A part of this farm is now included in the property of the Berks County Poor-House.) "The General and Mrs. Mifflin received us (himself and Judge James Biddle), in a neat farm-house, and being very early themselves, provided a second breakfast for us, though it was only half-past seven. He took us round some of his improvements, and I rode with him to various points of view which commanded the town of Reading and circumjacent hills and valleys. He farms about twelve hundred acres, and has a Scotch farmer who conducts the business; one hundred acres of meadow land he waters. A neighbor of the general's is one of the marrying Dunkers. They live in their own houses like other countrymen, but wear their beards long. General Mifflin, with agreeable frankness and affability, pressed us both to stay for an early dinner, to which we sat down about one o'clock. After dinner I mounted my horse and came into the Carlisle road about three miles off at Sinking Spring."
It is still operated to a limited extent. The other mill was owned by Bennevile Keim and later by the Schwartz family, whose property it still is. This mill is not operated. Next above is the old Evans mill-seat. The power is secured by means of a long raceway and there is a waste-race running through several farms below, which was used for irrigating the meadows. After Philip Evans the property was owned by J. V. R. Evans and now belongs to Matthias Mengel, Esq., of Reading. In its repaired condition the mill is substantial and has a good patronage. The old stone mill of Christian Germant, built in 1790, is at the next power up the stream. In later years it belonged to Jonathan and Annie Ruth, and is now known as the “Ruth Mill.” The power next above was probably one of the first improved on the creek. It was close by the old Baptist Church, built in 1740, and when last operated, before it was demolished, was known as Hill’s saw-mill.

In earlier times carding was done there and clover hulled by the Reams. The old Hemig mill-seat is above the Lancaster road and all the old buildings have been removed. The present fine brick mill was built by Joseph G. Hayett, and after being operated by him some time, passed into the hands of the present owner, Bennevile H. Hemig. The water-power is not strong, but the mill is finely located. More than seventy years ago there was a small woolen-factory and carding-mill run by Joseph Warner, on the old Body place, which was abandoned half a century ago, the power being idle until again utilized for Hendel’s hat-factory. So the power next above was also abandoned a number of years ago. In later years it operated D. Matz’s saw-mill, but before the Revolution Henry Voight had an establishment at that place for drawing wire. That industry was discontinued so many years ago that no detailed account of his operations is obtainable. Where is now the R. T. Gring grist-mill, William Pennypacker used the water-power as early as 1810 to bore out and grind rifle-barrels, after he had hammered them out by hand. He thus continued until about 1855, when Cyrus Hornberger built the mill now at that site. The pioneer gun-maker on this stream was David Pennypacker, father of William, who worked near the head of the stream as early as 1786. He made guns complete, including the wood-work, while William made the barrels only. David removed to Lancaster County, where he continued his trade. At one time there were a number of small shops for the manufacture of guns, either alone or in connection with other work. Such shops were owned by Cyrus Hornberger, Frank Miller, Henry Wooly, Gougler & Heberling. About 1838 Cornelius Reichwein opened a gun-shop where is now Ruth’s grist-mill, in which Henry W. Deeds worked many years, as one of the most skillful gun-makers in the county. Hiram & Joseph Holtry’s file-works were also first used as a gun-shop by John White, who removed to Angelica, where he put up another factory. Franklin Schnader’s shop, which has a tilt-hammer and boring machinery, is still operated on guns, the manufacture of which was first carried on there by John Keim. The power above was used for similar purposes by Kohl & Keim, but was changed to operate saw and clover-mills for Joseph Schoener and later for Amos Price. The stave-mill of Moses Ruffner is nearer the head of the stream, where also John Gougler had a small woolen factory in 1862.

After the manufacture of guns was no longer profitable, the most of these powers were devoted to the manufacture of hats.

Absalom Ruth was the pioneer of this industry on the Wyomissing. In 1859 he and his sons, John K., William, Henry and Michael, came from Adamstown and started up the hat business, on the site of the present Kessler factory. Later, they went into the old Reichwein gun-factory, and continued there until 1872, when they bought the old Mohn grist-mill, and converted that into a hat-factory, now carried on by John K. Ruth. The product is fifty dozen hats per day. The mill machinery was placed in a new building at the Reichwein power, now Ruth’s mill.

Jacob Kessler’s wool-hat factory was established in 1867 by Conrad F. Kessler & Bro. It was burned down in 1878 and rebuilt in 1880 by the present proprietor. The daily product is sixty dozens of hats. In 1878, Henry Worley began making hats, using the power of a rifle-factory, built by Benjamin Mohn in 1854. Worley also made rifles. The old building was small. A three-story frame building is now occupied. Thirty-six dozens of hats per day are produced.

At the next power David Glass had a trip-hammer as early as 1848. Five years later Gounger & Heberling operated both to make rifles. Then John Fiehthorn commenced to make wool hats in a factory which is now carried on by Spatz, Miller & Co., producing thirty dozen per day.

Anthony Wertz's cotton-lap factory has been in operation since 1870, using the power of the Frank Miller gun-factory, first operated in 1850. In 1885 carpet-weaving was begun as another branch of industry.

J. H. Spatz's hat-factory, in a three-story frame building, twenty-eight by fifty-four feet, was established in 1878. Steam-power only is used, and the product is forty dozen per day.

In 1874 Mohn, Spatz & Co. began the manufacture in another building, where they were succeeded in 1878 by Cyrus Hornberger, Samuel and Jonathan H. Miller. This factory is now operated by Spatz, Son & Co., making forty dozen per day, and using water and steam.

J. H. Miller's factory was erected in the winter of 1885-86, and is one of the largest and best arranged factories at the place. Steam-power only is used and the product is fifty dozen per day.

A mile below Mohnville is George Hendel's factory, which is operated by both water and steam-power. It was erected in 1878 on the site of the old Warner fulling-mill. The building is forty by one hundred and twenty-five feet, four-stories high. The industry includes separate storage buildings of large capacity. In its appointments it is one of the first factories in the country. It was first operated by George Hendel, John Hendel and Samuel K. Mohn. The present firm is George Hendel, Brother & Son. One hundred and eighty dozen hats are produced daily, giving employment to eighty hands. In all the foregoing factories several hundred hands are at present employed.

Although the Angelica Creek has a number of water-powers, it never became as important relatively, as the Wyomissing, and has in late years been devoted almost exclusively to the ice interests. These are controlled by George Frill, who has erected large and well-appointed ice-houses, enabling him to store enormous quantities of the purest ice. The former powers of Henning's grist-mill, a pioneer industry, and the "Speedwell Forges" have thus been diverted. The first forge became the property of Nicolas Yocum, in 1815. It was built by Philip Seidel some fifteen years earlier. In 1835 "Speedwell " No. 2 was built by Yocum, and in the course of some years these were operated separately by his sons, Moses and Daniel Yocum, until 1870 when they were abandoned. The gun factory of J. K. White and the Forest File Works of Moses Ruffner have also been abandoned, but the old Yost grist-mill is still operated in a small way. The Mount Penn Furnace on Flying Hill Run, was active for a number of years, and near the mouth of the same stream William Lewis had a forge as early as 1790. The power was afterwards applied to the operation of a small grist-mill.

CHURCHES.

BAPTIST CHURCH.—The first meeting-house erected within the bounds of the township was the Baptist Church. It was built on three acres of land, on the Wyomissing, in the neighborhood of "Rieth's mill," donated by Hugh Morris, Evan Lloyd and Evan Price, early settlers. The services were in the Welsh language, and the Rev. Thomas Jones was the pastor. He continued to preach for many years, when, on account of German immigration and other influences, the organization was allowed to go down. The grave-yard was kept up a number of years longer, but has for a long time been sadly neglected. The ruins of it may still be seen.

SALEM EVANGELICAL CHURCH, at Mohnsville, was the next erected. It was a rough stone building, plain in every respect, and put up in 1849. John Spatz, John Mohn and Samuel K. Mohn were the first trustees, and served until the church was demolished, twenty-nine years later. From a small membership the society increased until a larger house was necessary to accommodate it. The present edifice was erected in 1872. It is a two-story brick structure, with a steeple and bell. The basement has been fitted up for Sunday-school purposes. At that time the Rev. Jesse Lawrence was the pastor of the church, serving it in connection with other appointments on the Adamstown Circuit. The Rev. B. D. Albright is the present pastor. But the church being so flourishing, having more than two hundred members, will become a separate charge at the next meeting of the Conference. The building was improved in 1885, at a cost of more than fifteen hundred dollars. A Sunday-school of more than two hundred members has Nelson Dickinson as the superintendent.

Opposite the church is its burial-ground, and adjoining the latter is Mohnsville Cemetery, opened in 1876, and controlled by an association, of which James D. Leininger is president; Samuel K. Mohn, secretary; and Jonathan H. Miller, treasurer. It contains one acre of land.

Wyomissing Church (Reformed and Lutheran) is at Gounglestown. It was erected in 1850, having been dedicated November 17, 1850. The building becoming too small, it was determined, early in 1886, to erect a new edifice. The old church was occupied the last time April 4, 1886, when it was demolished. The new structure will be built of red sandstone, forty-five by seventy-five feet, and will have a basement and auditorium. The church will also be supplied with a spire and bell, and will be finished up in good style.

The Lutheran congregation had as its first pastor the Rev. R. S. Wagner, whose successors were Revs. B. D. Zweigiz, T. T. Jaeger, D. K. Humbert and Zenas H. Gabel, the present minister. There are two hundred and fifty members.

The Reformed congregation had the Rev. Augustus L. Herman as pastor until 1872, when the Rev. S. Schweitzer came for a year. Since June, 1873, the Rev. M. L. Fritch has been the pastor. There are also two hundred and fifty members. Both congregations are in a flourishing condition.

Christ Church, commonly called Yo-cum's Church (Reformed and Lutheran), is a little south of the centre of the township. It is a neat brick edifice, having a seating capacity for three hundred and fifty persons. It was erected in 1854, the corner-stone being laid on May 28th of that year. In connection with the church there are several acres of land devoted to cemetery purposes and other uses. The sheds and all the improvements are in good condition. A number of years before the church was built an octagonal school-house stood on this site, in which meetings were occasionally held, and a number of interments had taken place before the church was founded. This fact ultimately led to the selection of this place for a church. On account of its proximity to Reading, it has never been occupied by strong congregations. In 1886 each congregation had about one hundred and thirty communicant members.

The Rev. B. D. Zweigiz has been the only Lutheran pastor. On the Reformed side the pastor is the Rev. W. J. Kershner, whose predecessors were Revs. W. F. P. Davis and Augustus Pauli.

Immanuel Church is located at Shillington, and since 1877 has been the exclusive property of a German Reformed congregation. It was built in 1874 for the joint use of Lutheran and Reformed congregations. Both congregations occupied it a few years, when the Lutherans relinquished their interests, not being strong enough to maintain an organization. The structure is of brick and is surmounted by a small belfry. There are fittings for four hundred persons. In 1886 only about fifty communicant members were reported. Rev. W. J. Kershner was pastor. His predecessor, for one year, was the Rev. M. H. Mishler; and from 1874 until 1884, Rev. M. L. Fritch.

At Shillington a Sunday-school of one hundred and ten members is maintained in the school-house.
Among the old burial-grounds, Hemig's, near the almshouse, is still kept up; also the Bernard Adams Cemetery, near Reading. The latter contains about one-fourth of an acre of ground, inclosed by a very substantial stone wall. Included is a small stone building, used at funerals. Here are some old interments.

OPPOSITION TO EDUCATION.—In various parts of the township early pay-schools were taught, which educated many of the citizens to recognize the advantages of the free-school system. Nevertheless, there was a decided opposition to the system on the part of many wealthy and influential men, who expressed their disapprobation at a public meeting April 12, 1849. Resolutions were adopted, declaring a determined hostility towards the system and to oppose, at all hazards, the establishment of schools under the system. The meeting went so far as to ridicule the government in offering aid to establish better schools. To counteract this influence, the friends of free-schools held a meeting at the public-house of Adam Groff, May 12, 1849, when Jacob Matz was chosen president; Isaac Matz, vice-president; Cornelius Freeman and Jacob Stoudt, secretaries. Appropriate resolutions were adopted, in which the meeting lamented the downward tendency of their school affairs and the opposition of so many wealthy, influential citizens, and urged ceaseless effort until something was done towards their improvement. George W. Northheimer, John M. Dewees, John Van Reed and Charles H. Addams were appointed a committee to make proper application to the court to compel the directors to carry out the provisions of the act of 1849. A general county school convention, to be held at Reading, was also suggested. This determination was without effect. The opposition subsided and the schools gradually improved. One of the best known teachers of the township was William W. Lewis. He engaged at this vocation in 1854 and continued until his death, in 1882. He was progressive and had the esteem of those whom he served.

VILLAGES.

OAKLAND is the most recent village in the township, and sustains a suburban relation to Reading. It is very eligibly located, about half a mile from the Lancaster bridge, and has in the few years of its existence been remarkably prosperous. The village was laid out by John Bechtel on part of his farm, and contains more than thirty residences, all brick and many of attractive appearance. The village is being supplied with water from springs. The hotel in this locality was erected a number of years ago by Henry Kurtz, favorably known. It is a large, inviting building.

SHILLINGTON is very pleasantly located on the Lancaster road, three miles from Reading. It is named after Samuel Shilling, who sold off most of the lots. Prior to 1865 the improvements consisted of the tavern and a large stone farm-house. The tavern was opened at a very early day. It was kept in 1820 by Valentine Straub. A later keeper was Jacob Shilling, who was succeeded by John Beidler, whose estate still owns the property. Recent improvements have made the tavern one of the largest in the county, outside of the larger towns. It is widely known as the “Three-mile House.” Oliver Hinnershitz is the present landlord. Connected with it is the Reading Driving Park, which was opened to the public in 1869. It has a good half-mile course and other improvements. In 1874 a store was opened by Miss Mary Deeds, which is continued by Adam M. Rollman. He is also in charge of the Shillington post-office, established in July, 1884, which has a daily mail from Reading. There are a few mechanic-shops, a Reformed Church and about thirty residences, some of them being large and attractive in their surroundings.

GOUGLERSVILLE is near the southwestern corner of the township, on the old Lancaster road. It contains a fine Union church, a hotel, store, shops and twenty residences. The place took its name from John and Philip Gounger, who were influential citizens, and has been distinctively known by this title since the establishment of the Gouglersville post-office, in 1855. The first public improvement was the inn of Jacob Reedy, put up in 1813. A later keeper was William Kohl; and in 1842 John, Gouger became the owner, who greatly enlarged it. He also put up other buildings in the place. A store was started in 1843 by John Gougler. Philip Gougler was a later owner and James Hartman is the present proprietor of these interests. The post-office was kept for many years by Benjamin F. Hemmig, as deputy, who also served as justice of the peace. A daily mail is supplied by the Adamstown stage from Reading. The usual mechanic-shops have long been maintained. The manufacture of cigars has lately introduced new life. Small factories are carried on by Samuel and David Hornberger, each employing about a dozen hands. Near the village David M. Krill opened a factory in 1885; he employs thirty-five hands.

In 1881 the village contained seventeen dwellings and seventy-eight inhabitants, five carpenters, two wheelwrights, two hatters, two butchers, one undertaker, one blacksmith, two farmers and two yeomen.

During the active days of stage traveling between Reading and Lancaster, before the Reading and Columbia Railway was constructed, Gouglersville was a prominent stopping-place for changing horses.

The water-shed of the township is at Gouglersville, this point being the summit on the way between Reading and Lancaster. The waters of Muddy Creek rise to the south and flow into the Conestoga and thence into the Susquehanna, and the waters of the Wyomissing Creek rise to the north and flow into the Schuylkill.

Mohnsville is five miles from Reading, in the valley of the Wyomissing Creek, and owes its existence to the fine water-powers of that stream at that point. Prior to 1840 the only improvement was a small log house, on a piece of pasture land overgrown with brambles and wild bushes. Soon afterward it became the property of Benjamin Mohn, who cleared the land for farming purposes. In 1846 he built a grist-mill, being now joined by his nephew. Within the past ten years the manufacture of wool hats having become so important an industry at this place, the village has had the most of its growth in this period. It now includes one hundred and fifteen residences, five hundred and twenty-five inhabitants, a fine Evangelical Church, two stores, a hotel and factories. Samuel K. Mohn opened the first store in the mill which he was carrying on, about 1854, but a few years later erected a building for store purposes, in which he traded fifteen years. Here was established the Mohn's Store post-office, in 1857, of which he was the postmaster, a position now held by Jonathan H. Miller. Others in trade were William K. Ruth, John Y. Weidner, Joseph Gaul and Albert G. Miller.

The second store-stand was established by Ephraim G. Werner, who is still in trade. Benjamin Mohn built a residence which was used first as a tavern by John Greiner and later by John Mengel. The family of the latter now own the property. In 1886 Dr. W. B. Shaner was a practicing physician at the village.

In 1882 John A. Bohler began the manufacture of cigars at this place. He is the pioneer manufacturer in this industry. He occupies a three-story factory, twenty-four by forty feet, and employs sixty hands. Since 1885 George H. Leininger has carried on a factory employing twenty hands; and since April, 1886, Mohn & Seitzinger have in operation a factory employing twelve hands. On June 1, 1886, Huyet & Co. opened their factory, affording employment for forty hands.

The Mohnsville Water Company was incorporated September 9, 1885. It has water privileges assured which will give an inexhaustible supply of water. About one mile of pipes has already been laid, the water being secured from springs elevated so as to cause the water to flow by gravity.

The Mohnsville Building and Savings Association was organized in June, 1882. There are one thousand shares, whose par value is two hundred dollars per share. The association has erected eighteen buildings and has been an important factor in developing the village. John A. Bohler is secretary of the association.

Mohnsville Council, No. 86, O. of A. M., was instituted about eighteen years ago. It is well established, having sixty-five members. A lodge of Knights of Pythias was instituted more recently and is also reported flourishing. Camp No. 211, P. O. S. of A., was instituted July 25, 1884, and has sixty members. In the same hall an independent temperance organization, having fifty members, also holds its regular meetings.

Cumru post-office was established in 1858 at the Five-Mile House, on the old Lancaster road, which is one of the oldest tavern-stands in the township. It has had numerous keepers. Several mechanic-shops are carried on there.

Angelica post-office was established May 22, 1882, at the old Yost Tavern, in the Angelica Valley. Formerly the Groff Tavern was conducted there. Other inns of the township which are of the nature of landmarks are Lauber's White House, on Neversink Mountain, and the Sorrel Horse Inn, which was known as Steward's in 1820.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

CONRAD Y. BElDLER, of German descent, is the great-grandson of Conrad Beidler, and the grandson of Peter Beidler, who married Barbara Spohn. To this union was born a son, John, May 18, 1794, who married Magdalena, daughter of Abraham and Mary Hirsh Yost. Their children were Jeremiah, Conrad Y., Isaac Y., Mary Ann (Mrs. Samuel Brobst), whose son, John B., is the only grandson of John and Magdalena Beidler and Abraham. Conrad Y. Beidler, the second son by this marriage, was born in Cumru township, near Reading, on the 17th of June, 1820, and received his education at the public schools of his township and in Reading. He then became familiar with the work of the farm and a valuable assistant to his father in his farming enterprises. He was, in August, 1844, married to Catherine, daughter of William and Catherine Miller Spohn, who was born July 18, 1822, and resided in Spring township. Their only child is a daughter, Sarah Ann, born November 2, 1845, and married to William P. High, son of Ezra High, of Cumru township, Berks County, on the 29th of August, 1865. Their children are Kate M., Hannah C., Ezra (deceased), Conrad B., Mary
HISTORY OF BERKS COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA.

Soon after his marriage Mr. Beidler, with his brother, assumed the management of the farm, which they jointly cultivated for eight years, when he removed to the hotel at Shillington, in Cumru township, of which he was for five years the popular landlord. Reading next became his place of residence, where he remained five years, and at the expiration of that time settled upon a farm in Cumru township, which he had meanwhile purchased. On retiring from agricultural labor he built a residence in Shillington, and remained a citizen of that place until his death, on the 14th of June, 1883. Mrs. Beidler died on the 16th of September, 1863. Mr. Beidler was in politics a Democrat, but held no office other than that of school director of his township. He was a director of the Reading Savings-Bank, and frequently called upon to act as administrator, trustee and executor. He was a member of the Reformed Church.

ER E C T I O N OF TOWNSHIP.—In 1850 the township of Cumru included about thirty-three thousand acres of land. The population was thirty-eight hundred and fifty-three, the most populous district in the county outside of Reading; and the electors numbered about seven hundred and fifty. And in respect to area of territory it was the largest township in the county. Within the previous decade two unsuccessful attempts were made to effect a division of the township, on account of its great extent and incident inconvenience. In that year, with the state of affairs mentioned, a third attempt was made in this behalf. The petition prayed for a division line situated to the west of the line suggested in the previous petitions, beginning at the "Harrisburg Bridge" and extending southwardly to the Lancaster County lines, at the corner of Brecknock township; and it was subscribed by only forty-five taxable inhabitants of the township. The Court appointed Aaron Albright, Richard Boone and Michael K. Boyer as commissioners to inquire into the advisability of the proposed division. These commissioners, after viewing the township, divided the township as proposed, and recommended the western part to be erected into a new township under the name of Spring. The boundary lines were described in the report. They enclosed about fifteen thousand acres. The report was presented August 5, 1850. Exceptions were filed, which stated that the division would cut twenty-eight bridges in the eastern part and only three in the western, and also cut forty miles more of roads in the former than in the latter. But the Court disregarded the force of these exceptions, confirmed the report on November 23, 1850, and erected the new township with the name suggested.

The names of the early settlers are included with the taxables of Cumru township.

E A R L Y M U R D E R O F I N D I A N S.—In 1728 several of the Welsh settlers became involved in a serious trouble with the colonial government, which arose from killing three Indians at a place called Cucussea, in Chester County, (afterward changed to Cacoosing). The following proceedings have been published in connection with the matter:

"On the 12th of May, 1728, Patrick Gordon, Deputy Governor of Pennsylvania, issued a warrant for the apprehension of the murderers by hue and cry. It was as follows:

"To all Sheriffs, Coroners, Constables, and other his Majesty's subjects, within the Province of Pennsylvania, and every of them:

"Whereas I have this day received information that Walter Winter and John Winter, late of Chester County, farmers, did on the 11th day of this instant set upon and kill one old Indian man, named Toka Collie and his wife, with one other Indian woman being of our friend Indians, and being then in the peace of God and the King.

2 "Beginning at Harrisburg Bridge, ten courses generally S. W. altogether in length 8 m. 67½ ps. to Lancaster County line; thence along said line N. 48 W. 3 m. 264 ps; thence N. E. along Heidelberg township line (greater part of which is the Cacoosing creek, 8½ miles; thence from mouth of Cacoosing S. E. along Tulpehocken creek, 8½ miles to its mouth, and along the Schuylkill river 1 mile to Harrisburg Bridge."

3 This was in this township. The place can not be located.
"These are therefore in his Majesty's name to command you and every of you to Levy Hue and Cry, with horses and with foot within ye Province of Pennsylvania, after the said Walter Winter and John Winter, and them and each of them to apprehend and bring before some justice of the Peace of the Province aforesaid, to be examined and dealt with according to law.

The coroner was dispatched to take an inquisition of the dead bodies and bury them wrapt in linen; he was further directed that if any of their relatives were there, he should present them with four strouds 1 to cover the dead bodies and to give two strouds to the Indian girls, and to employ some person to core their wounds, and further to assure them that the offenders should not go unpunished. And messengers were sent to the chiefs of the different tribes to notify them of this unfortunate occurrence and to quiet their revengeful spirit by giving each of them two strouds.

The following affidavits, made before Edward Farmer and A. Hamilton (two justices of the peace, of Philadelphia County), on the same day on which the warrant was issued, detail the facts in relation to the killing of the Indians:

Walter Winter, of Cucussea, in the County of Chester, being examined saith that on the tenth day of this instant he had heard by a Dutchman who lives at Tulpehocken, that the Indians had killed sundry Dutchmen, viz., had killed two and wounded three Christians, whereupon the said Walter went about the neighborhood, and desired the people to get together to his house to defend themselves against the Indians, and returning again to his own house, where he was making fast the windows, in case any attempt should be made upon them. One John Roberts's son, came to the house of the said Walter, and desired the said Walter to go to his father's house and assist him, for that there were some Indians at his father's house with a bow and a great number of arrows, and that his father was in danger of being killed, whereupon the said Walter, with his father-in-law, Morgan Herbert, each having a gun, went away to the house of the said John Roberts, (the gun of the said Walter being loaded with one bullet and ten swan shot,) and as the said Walter and Morgan Herbert were going to John Roberts's they met with John Winter, who had with him a shot gun, and thereupon John Winter took the large gun and gave the small gun or pistol to Morgan Herbert, and when the said Walter with Morgan Herbert and John Winter came over the log that lies over the run just before Roberts's door, he saw John Roberts standing in his own door, he saw him have a gun in his hand, but whether he had it in his hand before this examinant came up to the house, or whether he went in for it afterwards, this examinant cannot say, and this examinant saw an Indian man, some women and some girls sitting on a wood-pile before John Roberts's door. And the Indian man getting up took his bow and stepping backwards took an arrow from his back, putting it to the string of the bow, whereupon this examinant apprehending the Indian was going to shoot at him, this examinant presented his gun and shot at the Indian man, that he believes the Indian was wounded, for he saw blood upon his breast, that John Winter at the same time shot one of the Indian women, and then ran up and knocked another Indian woman's brains out, that two Indian girls ran away, that the examinant followed one and with the bow and arrow which he took up where the said Indians were sitting, he shot at one of the Indian girls and then overtook her and brought her back, and he then saw the Indian man get up and went staggering in a swamp near the house, that John Winter and the examinant with Morgan Herbert, the next morning found the other Indian girl in Tocacolie's cabin, she was much hurt about the head and face, and she was ordered to go to Walter Winter's house, where she went accordingly. That this examinant was told by John Roberts' wife that the Indian boy, that was in company with the other Indians, was in the house and made three arrows in the house but this examinant did not see him. That this examinant with John Winter and John Herbert took the corpses of the two Indian women and hauled them out of the road and covered them with some leaves. 3

Morgan Herbert said that he was present at this examination, and having been read distinctly to him, that it was true in all its parts, except that of John Roberts having a gun, which he said he did not see.

John Winter was examined before same parties, at the same time. His affidavit corroborated that of his brother Walter. 4

On the 15th of May, 1728, a warrant was issued for the arrest of Walter Winter, John Winter and Morgan Herbert; and also a warrant for apprehending John Roberts by 'hue and cry.'

"It does not appear that the Winter brothers were tried, or even arrested. But Herbert was arrested, and convicted 'for aiding and abetting Walter Winter and John Winter in ye murder of certain native Indians.' During his imprisonment, however, in the Chester County jail, 'divers of ye inhabitants of ye said county, and some of ye county of Philadelphia, who give a good account of the said Morgan's good behavior and conduct amongst them,' made application to the justice of the court for a recommendation of mercy; and, it appearing to them that he was not active in perpetrating the murder, but unhappily fell into the company of those that committed it, they were induced to recommend him as an object of the Governor's compassion and mercy, so far as to grant him a reprieve 'until the King's pleasure be known, and in ye mean time to release him out of prison upon paying for and giving security for his good behavior towards all ye King's subjects and especially the native Indians of the province.' This recommendation was issued by the Justices (David Lloyd, Richard Hill and Jeremiah Langhorne). On the 8th of August, 1728, it was laid before the Executive Council, and upon considering it, they decided that mercy should be shown to him, and that the justices should be consulted as to the proper manner of doing it. The further proceedings in this matter were not published. But he was doubtless pardoned."

INDUSTRIES.—Near the upper tavern, in Fritztown, there was a paper-mill as early as 1770 which was then carried on for some years and then converted into a grist-mill. The latter was a stone building, one-story high and had a small capacity. The mill had many owners, among them being George and William Hain, Addams, Van Reed, and the Marshals. Near by, Jacob Miller had a distillery in which, after it was discontinued, Jacob Spies started a store, the first in this locality. Both mill and distillery have been removed, and some eighty rods lower down the valley a saw-mill was built after 1850, by Philip Von Neida. It is operated by water and steam power. In 1885 it was the property of Augustus Keener. Farther down the Little Cacoosing, near Weitzelville, is the old Eberle mill site, improved soon after the settlement of the county, and continuously owned by the Eberle family. At first there was a saw-mill, but some twenty years ago Joseph Eberle put up a good grist-mill, which is still operated by him. East, at the base of the high hills, in that part of the township, is a grist-mill, built about forty years ago by David Gring, and now operated by his son, David. The power is furnished by springs gushing from the hill side. After the stream has turned the machinery of the mill it sinks into the earth to reappear lower down the valley.

At Sinking Spring, John Miller put up a tannery which, after being carried on a number of years by him became the property of Thomas Mull, in 1840, then of Aaron Mulé who carried it on until 1864, doing a large business. Andrew Fichthorn owned and operated it also for some years successfully.

The tannery has long since been abandoned. Lower down, on Cacoosing Creek, is the mill built by William Addams, long and favorably known by his name. It is now operated by John Van Reed.

On the Tulpehocken a number of mill seats abound, which were early improved. The lowest is in the township of Bern and is now known as Bushong's paper-mill. Samuel Bell had pioneer grist and saw-mills at this place, and after his death they were carried on by Samuel Bell, Jr. The next power above has its seat in Spring township and had been improved to operate an oil-mill for a man named Moyer. The building has been removed. Still another power, farther up, improved by Joshua Fisher, has also been abandoned. The mill had been put up about 1812.

The Daniel Gring mill, the next power, was built about the same time and is still in operation. The Zng and Lash mills, on the powers above, are carried on as the property of George Wertz.

At the mouth of the Cacoosing, the Van-Reed paper-mills constitute the most important industry in the township, and rank among the most successful enterprises of the kind in the county. The Van Reeds are a family of paper makers, the present proprietor, Charles Van-Reed, belonging to the third generation, here carrying on that business. As conducted by him, the plant consists of three mills, designated as Nos. 1, 2 and 3, the first and last being auxiliary to the second. No. 1 mill is in Lower Heidelberg, and is run by the water of the Tulpehocken. In it Charles Van Reed, the grandfather of the present owner, made printing paper by hand at an early day, and for a time supplied the State Department at Harrisburg, with paper which was used in publishing official reports. In 1850 he leased this mill to his son, Henry Z. Van Reed, and, in 1859, the latter became the owner of the property, using the mill in connection with No. 2, on the Cacoosing, in Spring township, which he bought Jan. 4, 1854. This building had previously been used as a grist-mill by John Van Reed and was, later, the property of Daniel Dechert. In April, 1879, Charles Van Reed succeeded his father, Henry Z. and soon afterward supplied No. 2 mill with improved machinery which greatly increased the capacity. In the spring of 1882 he became the owner of the old Henry Van-Reed paper-mill, some distance above, on the Cacoosing, which had previously been opened by C. R. Leinbach, and also made it tributary to No. 2 mill. This arrangement enables him to manufacture three hundred and twenty-five tons of printing paper per year, giving steady employment to eighteen hands. The mills are substantial stone buildings. The property includes a farm of eighty acres of land and eight tenement houses. Since January, 1886, the principal office of the mills has been in the city of Reading, where he then established a paper and rag warehouse.

A fulling mill near the Van Reed paper-mills was abandoned when the power became necessary to carry on the latter interests.

One of the earliest industries of Spring township was the mining of iron ore, which is found in different parts of the township. The old Berkshire furnace, near Dr. Walter’s Park, in Lower Heidelberg, was supplied with ore mined near Cushion Hill, as early as 1760. The quality is red hematite. Among those who carried on iron mining, in that locality, at a later day, were Johnson & McCullough and Charles Ruth; the latter about thirty years ago. The next discovery was made on the timber land of Heny Ruth, sometime about 1847. The ore there found is bluish magnetic, almost entirely free from sulphur, which made it valuable. In mining it a shaft was sunk to the depth of more than one hundred feet. The next mine was developed in the same locality, and is known as the “Wheatfield Mines,” on the farm of William Fisher. This mine has been found very productive, and supplied ore for a number of furnaces in Reading. At one time a large force of men were employed in its development, but lately nothing has been done in active mining. Joseph Grill is mining ore in this locality at present, employing a dozen hands. The mineral is loaded on cars from a wharf provided near Fritztown. North of Sinking Spring, iron ore was mined on the Ruth and Mull farms, by the Eckerts and others, but operations were suspended about fifteen years ago. One of the shafts, on being sunk to a great depth tapped a large subterranean stream (known to abound in this county), which flooded the mine and caused a cessation of work. Limestone of good quality is found in nearly every part of the township, and at Sinking Spring has been quarried for shipment, large quantities, for a time, being taken out. In late years the operations have been on a limited scale, owing to the dullness of the furnace business. Among those who shipped limestone from this place were Stephen Denner & Co., Lewis Evans, Hezekiah V. Hamlin and James Ruth. The hands formerly employed have been obliged to seek other occupation.

CHURCHES.

BAPTIST CHURCHES.—A Baptist Congregation was one of the first religious organizations of the present township, having an existence about 1740. Its membership was composed largely of Welsh people or their descendants, all of whom have deceased or removed, taking whatever records pertaining to the society with them. The congregation became fully extinct many years ago. It worshipped in a log church which stood near the old cemetery in the lower part of the village of Sinking Spring. This burial plat is on part of a tract of about two acres of ground set aside for the use of the society, but the title of which is not well preserved, and the ownership is now involved in doubt. It was originally enclosed with a substantial stone wall, which crumbled down, leaving the cemetery in a much neglected condition. Lately it has been enclosed with a substantial picket fence, which shows that the community have not lost all respect for the dead which repose there. On the ground are some fine locust trees and a number of headstones showing great age and with inscriptions which have become illegible.

The log church near this cemetery was subsequently used for school purposes, and after its decay was removed and the present octagonal stone building erected on the lot. This was used as a school-house many years, some excellent schools being there maintained. After it ceased to be used for that purpose it was allowed to go down and for sometime stood in a dilapidated condition. Subsequently it was repaired and for a number of years it has been used as a residence.

St. John's Church (Lutheran and Reformed). This fine church edifice is located on a beautiful site in the village of Sinking Spring. It stands on a tract of land of one and a half acres, devised to the society by Christian Ruth, October 30, 1793. The corner-stone was laid, May 3, 1794. The church was a plain brick building, forty-eight by fifty-six feet, two-stories high, and without a steeple. Inside was the usual gallery, a wine-glass shaped pulpit, and a floor made of brick. These were manufactured on the old Krick farm, three-fourths of a mile from the village. Three doors afforded entrance to the building. It was dedicated as the "Evangelical Presbyterian Reformed Church," and was the exclusive property of a Reformed congregation until about 1812 when the Lutherans obtained a common interest. In 1809 the church property was enlarged by the addition of two and a half acres from the farm of Peter Ruth, north of the church, a part of which was added to the cemetery. In 1817 a fine pipe organ was built for the church, by Openhauser of Reading. On the middle of the organ, overshadowing it with its golden wings, was a large eagle, while on each side were figures of gilded angels, each blowing a horn. The next improvement was the removal of the brick floor and other interior changes. In 1851 a tower was built on the west side of the church. It is sixteen feet square and one hundred and fifty-one feet high and was supplied with a bell weighing one thousand six hundred and eight pounds. The entire outlay was about three thousand dollars, and on the completion of the work appropriate dedicatory services were held October 16, 1852. This bell was damaged and a new one (of nearly same weight) put in its place in September, 1881.

In the latter part of 1884 fine improvements were made to the church building, costing over seven thousand dollars.

The auditorium of the church is lit by a beautiful chandelier of twenty-four lights, costing one hundred and thirty dollars. The carpets and furniture of the church were secured by the ladies of the congregations at an outlay of six hundred dollars. This amount was raised by three societies, called the "Ladies Aid Society," composed of married women; the "GUILD," of single women; and the "Busy Bees," of young girls. The enlarged and beautiful church was appropriately dedicated on the 24th of May, 1885. A fine new organ was also supplied. It has twenty stops and cost sixteen hundred dollars.

The Lutheran congregation has three hundred and fifty members under the pastoral care of the Rev. B. D. Zweitzig. His predecessors have been the Reys, T. T. Iaeger, Keller, Reichert, Jacob Miller and Henry A. Muhlenberg.

The ministers who served on the Reformed side were Rev. Philip R. Pauli, from 1794 to 1815, twenty-one years. He was followed by his son, Rev. William Pauli, from 1816 to 1855, thirty-nine years. After his death, his brother, Rev. Charles A. Pauli, served from the year 1856 to 1870, fourteen years. Rev. W. F. P. Davis officiated from 1871 to 1883. He died after having served for twelve years, when the Rev. W. J. Kershuer was elected, who still remains in service. The Reformed congregation numbers four hundred and fifty members.
INDEPENDENT U. B. CHURCH is in the eastern part of the village of Sinking Spring. It was built in 1867 and dedicated the following year. The house is brick, with a low steeple, containing a small bell, and capacitated to hold two hundred and fifty persons.

Before this church was built, meetings of this denomination were held on the Weidman farm—in the barn when the weather permitted. The membership belonging in 1885 was forty-five. These had as their pastor the Rev. L. W. Cramer. A flourishing Sunday-school is maintained the entire year, B. B. Weidman being the superintendent.

KISSELINGER’s CHURCH is situated in the northern part of the township. It was built in 1852. The Lutheran congregation numbers fifty members, with the Rev. T. T. Iaeger as pastor; and the German Reformed congregation has about the same membership, with Rev. M. H. Mishler as pastor.

MOHN’S CHURCH (Evangelical Association) is in the southwestern part of the township, on one acre of land, secured for this purpose from the farm of Daniel Mohn. The present church is the second house of worship in this locality. It is a plain frame building. The first house was of brick, built about forty years ago. The members of the Association at this place number thirty and have their ministerial service in connection with Adamstown, in Lancaster County. The present pastor is the Rev. B. D. Albright.

SINKING SPRING CEMETERY COMPANY was incorporated by an act of Assembly, February 5, 1861, with the following members: David Gring, Isaac Huyett, Reuben Gaul, John Van Reed, Michael Goodman, Adam Dechert, Joshua Huyett, Daniel B. Lorah and Aaron Mull. An acre of ground was purchased near St. John’s Church, which was improved and disposed of so quickly that it was found necessary to enlarge the cemetery. These additions give it an area of nearly three acres. The cemetery is in an excellent condition and the affairs of the company are flourishing.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOL-HOUSE.—On the eastern part of the St. John’s Church property a parish school-house was built in 1804, and an addition built to it within the next ten years. It is of logs and stone, and the house still remains substantially as when first built. A book devoted to the interests of this school-house is one of the most interesting records preserved among the church papers. From it we learn that the total expense of putting up the house was £142. 5s. 4d. Nearly the entire amount was raised by subscription.

In this building the church long maintained schools, the organist, most generally, being the teacher. Instruction was in the German language.

The public-school building in the village accommodates two schools, which are well attended. It is a long but low brick structure, located in the upper part of the village.

East from the village early English schools were taught in a log house which stood on the farm of Philip Evans. He usually secured teachers from the New England States, hiring them as they were journeying by his house on their way to the West. In this manner he sometimes employed young men of great merit. A few remained and became useful citizens of the county.

VILLAGES.

SINKING SPRING is located on the Lebanon Valley Railroad, and on the Berks and Dauphin turnpike, five miles from Reading. It is also the junction of the Reading and Columbia Railroad, which here takes the tracks of the former railway into Reading. The village derives its name from a singular spring which here rises out of the ground with considerable volume of water and almost immediately sinks again. Its flow is periodic, being much greater some seasons than others, its volume depending upon local conditions. The sinking away of the water is caused by the peculiar limestone formation in this locality. The place has grown slowly and has never been noted for its business enterprise. It contains two stores, four public-houses, a number of shops, two churches and a number of fine residences. Among the first settlers here were the Ruth family, who owned the land in the upper part of the present village. Jacob Lambert and Catherine Sohl were also land-owners here in 1793, having buildings east of St. John's Church. At the spring was the public-house of John Huy, which was built some time after the Revolution. This was afterwards kept by Samuel Addams, a son-in-law of Huy, and father of John H. Addams, who removed to Northern Illinois, where he became one of the most prominent citizens of the State. Among the later keepers of the tavern was John Heffer, who built an addition to the original house. The property is now owned by William F. Ruth. The next public-house is almost of the same age, and John Ludwig was an early landlord, followed, among others, by George Ruth, John Binkley, Elijah Miller, Hugh Lindsay, the showman, Henry Mull, William Masser, Joshua Rollman, William Troxel, Benjamin Gaul, Hiram Miller and Levi Brumbaugh. The present "Centennial House" was first kept by Frank Stettler, succeeded by Nicholas Yo- eum and the present, Charles Gring. It has a large capacity and also contains a hall. Farther up the turnpike Thomas Van Reed had a public-house many years ago, which has been converted into a farm building, still occupied by him. Near the depot a neat tavern was built by Samuel Plum, who sold it to C. S. Rieser.

John Ludwig was one of the first to engage in merchandising in the tavern building, and later the firm of Ludwig & Hiester was at the same place. The house now owned by Isaac Beidler was devoted to business purposes in the early history of the village, John Miller being long in trade there. The building standing in the angle formed by the junction of the Lancaster road with the turnpike was devoted many years to merchandising. Among those in trade at that place were Elijah Miller, Elijah Ruth, Thomas Mull, Aaron Mull, Reuben Spohn and William K. Ruth. Near this place John Lambert, Sr., had a distillery, more than sixty years ago, which did a large business for those times. The stand at present occupied by Hiram R. Hull was the next opened, in the order of time. Among those in trade there were John Lambert, John Heffer, Reily Fisher and Aaron Yocum. Here is kept the Sinking Spring post-office, established in 1831. Others in business are William K. Ruth, general merchant; A. B. Krick and C. D. Reber, grain, flour and feed dealers; and S. P. Keppel & Co., lumber and coal dealers, who are successors of C. S. Rieser.

Cigar-factories were established by J. H. Kegerise in 1867, who employed five hands; Oliver B. Ruth in 1879; and Thomas Leininger in 1885, with nine hands.

The Palms (Peter and William) are well remembered as early and successful physicians. The latter died in the village in 1852, and had as contemporaries in the later years of his practice, Dr. Alexander H. Witman and Dr. Wendell Hibschman. Dr. Abrahm Ruth was in practice here and at Fritstown many years. Drs. Charles T. Reber, James Hoffman, Michael and John Livingood and Dr. Fishburn were all in practice a few years, then removed to the West. Drs. Thierwechter and Davis each practiced a short time. Dr. Thomas Mull went to the war as a surgeon and died at Alexandria. Dr. C. N. Hoffman is the oldest resident physician in the place; Dr. James Y. Shearer next; and Dr. J. S. Herbein since 1867.

The early mechanics were Michael Miller, carpenter; Matthias Peiffer and Andrew De Hart, blacksmiths; George Lambert and John Lambert, shoemakers; George Luft, tailor; Jacob Latshaw, tinsmith; Isaac and John Miller, carpenters; Charles H. Addams, justice of the peace, and James H. Addams, auctioneer.

_Sinking Spring Council, No. 77, O. of U. A. M._—This body was instituted March 24, 1862, with thirteen members. The present roll shows a membership of thirty-nine.

The meetings are held weekly in Hettinger's Hall. The lodge has been prosperous and has an invested fund of twenty-six hundred dollars.

_Lexington Lodge, No. 155, K. of P.,_ was instituted at Sinking Spring, June 12, 1869, and in 1885 had sixty members. The lodge meets in the Hoffman building. Its invested fund is about two thousand dollars.

_Weitzelville_ is a small hamlet, on the Lancaster road, two miles from Sinking Spring. It comprises fifteen buildings, including a pub-
TOWNSHIPS OF COUNTY.

Fritztown is situated half a mile south of Weitzelville and is built in a very straggling manner. It does not contain any fine improvements, although a number of comfortable homes. The hamlet was started on the lands of Jacob and Dietrich Marshall, and took its name from John Fritz, who built the first public-house, about 1811, north of the Fritztown Station, on the Columbia Railroad. It is now the log building occupied as a residence by Daniel Ulrich, an octogenarian, who is native of this place. After being a tavern forty years, it was turned into a residence. In 1884, Mahlon K. Masser opened a public-house almost opposite, which he still continues. The store-house there was built in 1849 by Charles Ruth and was occupied by him, Jacob Zinn and the present, William Zinn. The latter is postmaster of the Fritztown office, established November 12, 1862.

Among the early settlers here were John Ulrich and his son Daniel, coopers, since 1805; John Fritz, weaver; John Adam Miller, cabinet-maker; Daniel Huebner, Peter Bensing and John Grill, cooper; Daniel Hart, laborer; Alexander Fisher, millwright; Lewis Ruth and Charles Werner, wheelwrights; John Mohn, farmer; and Jacob Miller, justice. Most of the trades named are still carried on. In 1885 the manufacture of cigars was conducted in four shops, employing about a dozen hands. The large building near the station was formerly a tavern. At the upper end of the hamlet is the "Farmers' and Butchers' Hotel," in a stone building, erected by the Hill family in 1780. A later keeper was Abraham Mengel, who made some improvements in the building. Then came Peter Ludwig, Peter Texter and others. The present keeper is Martin De Hart.

Vinemont is a station on the Columbia Railroad, a short distance above the upper end of Fritztown. It contains only a few buildings, but has a post-office, which was established in 1883, with Tysher Stitzel as postmaster. The office is at present kept by Daniel Borneman, who also merchandises in a small way. The most important interests at this place are the vineyards and fruit-farms of Solomon Shearer. In 1877 he began devoting his attention to the cultivation of fruits, enlarging his farms from year to year, until they embrace nearly five hundred acres of land. The soil and climatic conditions of this locality appear to be especially favorable for grape and small fruit culture, and his efforts have been very successful. He has good farm buildings, refrigerator and wine-vault, where he keeps his surplus stock for shipment. About six acres are devoted to the cultivation of the grape, and large areas are set with pear, peach, plum, cherry, quince and apple-trees. He has also begun the cultivation of all kinds of nut-bearing trees and successfully grows the small fruits.

REV. BENNEVILLE B. WEIDMAN is the grandson of Joseph Weidman, who resided in Brecknock township, where his life was devoted to agricultural pursuits. He married Susan Hoffer, who was a native of Germany, and had children,—Daniel, Joseph, Henry, Christianna (wife of David Cole), Magdalena (wife of Simon Cole), Elizabeth (wife of Joel Steffy), Ann Mary (wife of Jacob Blankenbiller), Susanna and Solomon. The last-named of these children, and the father of Rev. Weidman, was born in Brecknock township, where he followed farming pursuits for a brief time, but later, removed to Spring township, having purchased the farm now owned by his widow. He married Mary Blankenbiller, whose children were Benneville B., Joseph, deceased; Elizabeth, Mary (Mrs. Ephraim Light), Lydia (Mrs. John Light), Susan (Mrs. R. G. Siebert), Solomon B., Kate and Amanda (Mrs. Bresler).

Benneville B. Weidman was born on the 5th of September, 1833, in Brecknock township, and, when an infant, removed with his parents to Spring township, spending his youth, until his twenty fifth year, on the homestead. Very limited advantages of education were enjoyed by
Mr. Weidman, the lack of good schools being, in a measure, supplied by judicious reading and study during his leisure hours. On leaving home he rented a farm in the same township, and cultivated the land for a period of thirteen years, when Sinking Spring, in the same county, became his residence. In 1873 he purchased his present residence, and, though not actively engaged in farming on an extensive scale, gives January, 1865, to Sarah, daughter of Matthias Peifer, of Spring township. Their children are Oscar L., Lincoln, Nora Amanda, Lizzie Irene, Stephen Matthias, Solomon Wilson, Joseph Irvin, Daniel Webster, Benneville Henry, Sallie Bertha and Jacob Austin, deceased.

Adam B. Krick is a great-great-grandson of Francis Krick. His great-grandfather, also named Francis, was born in 1736, in Cumru, William R. High), Adam B., Henry B. and Mary E. Mr. Krick died April 16, 1864. His widow survives, and resides with Adam one of the sons named.

Mr. Krick, the subject of this sketch, was born in Spring township October 27, 1836. He received his education at Sinking Spring, Reading, and at the Hudson River Institute, Claverack, N. Y. For five terms he taught school; then he engaged in farming, and pursued this occupa-

William F. is married to Clara, daughter of Amos Hartman, and is farming a portion of the old homestead, having inherited the agricultural tastes of his ancestors. Mr. Krick has served as school director during four successive terms. He is tion for nine years. Mr. Krick, in 1852, suffered from an accident, which influenced his subsequent career and rendered the amputation of a limb necessary in 1873. He for this reason abandoned farming the same year, and, removing to Sinking Spring, engaged at a later date in the wholesale and retail flour, feed and grain business, in which he is still engaged. On April 16, 1863, he was married to Lucy J., daughter of Benneville B. Reber and Sarah V. R. High, of Bern township, born April 13, a member, and the present treasurer, of the Sinking Spring Reformed Church.

Samuel Wertz is of Swiss descent and the son of Frederick and Elizabeth Wertz. The children of this marriage are two sons,—Samuel and Rudolph,—and a daughter, Elizabeth.

Samuel Wertz was born on the 2d of March, 1809, in the Canton of Argau, Switzerland, and, on learning the trade of a silk-ribbon weaver, found employment in a silk-factory. Seeking, however, a wider sphere of activity, he, on the 14th of May, 1834, emigrated to America and first located at Frankford, near Philadelphia, where he engaged in the manufacture of cotton laps and wadding. He then, for a brief time, made Cumberland County, Pa., his residence, and from that point, in the fall of 1836, removed to Harrisburg, where he conducted milling business.

Mr. Wertz was for a time a landlord in and public spirit. He often responded to the demand for his services as executor and administrator, and was the custodian of many important trusts. He was an active member of the Reformed Church, in which he was an elder both in Harrisburg and Reading. He married Maria Sweigert, of Lancaster County, whose children are Louisa (Mrs. Price), Elizabeth (Mrs. Strohecker), George W., Samuel (deceased), Edward and Jacob. Mrs. Wertz having died, he Exeter township, Berks County, after which he removed to Spring township and conducted both a mill and distillery, his chief production being cotton laps. Abandoning the distillery in 1865, he confined his attention exclusively to milling. In 1870 he removed to Reading, established a flour and feed warehouse and continued in this business until the 31st of December, 1874.

Mr. Wertz manifested great interest in public affairs, and was a man of much intelligence

Mr. Wertz married, on April 28th, 1850, Catherine, daughter of John Waldemnaier, of Berks County, whose two sons are Augustus C. and Frank S.

Mr. Wertz received a stroke of palsy on the 14th of June, 1882, which resulted in his death on the 20th of August, 1884, in the seventy-sixth year of his age. The following tribute to his memory is paid by a friend and neighbor: “As a man Mr. Wertz was eminently successful. In his business transactions he was discreet, reliable and honest. By strict economy.
and steady application he succeeded in amassing considerable property. As a citizen he was favorably known throughout the county. He was of commanding appearance, tall, erect and well-built; always happy, and, by his strong personal magnetism, unconsciously shed the sunlight in his own heart into that of others. He possessed an irrepressible vein of humor, which made him a very agreeable companion and enlivened those around him. He was a man who made friends wherever he went. On account of his intelligence and sense of right, he was a judicious and safe counselor, his advice being frequently sought by those who knew him. In religion he was devout, magnanimous and generous. He repeatedly filled various offices in the church, very ably and acceptably."

Conrad D. Reber is the grandson of Conrad Reber, a successful farmer in Bern township, who was first married to Magdalena Bright and afterward to Mrs. Kate Leib, and left the following children by the first marriage: Charles, Thomas B., Benneville B., John B., Levi B., Daniel, Matilda (Mrs. Reily L. Fisher), Mary (Mrs. Peter Griesemer). Benneville B. Reber was born in Bern township, and was a farmer by occupation. He was married, first, to Sarah V. R. High, by whom he had children,—William Henry, Lucy Jane (Mrs. Adam B. Krick), Kate H. (Mrs. Henry Huyett) and Annie M. He was married afterward to Mary E., daughter of Daniel and Mary Deichert. Their children are Conrad D., Sarah E. (Mrs. Frank Hartman), Mary E. (Mrs. Peter Leinbach), Matilda V., Thomas D., Ezra (deceased) and Clara (deceased). Conrad D. Reber, the subject of this sketch, was born on the 24th of January, 1852, in Bern township, and spent his youth upon the farm where he was born. He was educated at the Stouchsburg Academy, in Berks County, and then located at Sinking Spring, where he acted for three years in the capacity of clerk and assistant postmaster. He then traveled through the Western States, remaining for one year in Springfield, Ohio, engaged in mercantile pursuits. Returning to his native county, he married, on the 2d of November, 1876, Miss Amelia J., daughter of James and Mary Ruth, of Sinking Spring. The children of this marriage are Nellie R., Edith M., Addie E. and Katie May, the latter being deceased. After his marriage Mr. Reber engaged in the wholesale and retail grain, coal and lumber business at Sinking Spring and Robesonia, in Berks County, and is still interested in the purchase and sale of these commodities, as also in the mining of magnetic ore. He has been and is, as a Democrat, more or less active in local politics. He is a member of the Lutheran Church, of Sinking Spring, in which he has officiated as deacon, and is connected with the Sabbath-school.

BRECKNOCK TOWNSHIP.

The township of Brecknock was erected in 1741. Proceedings relating to its erection could not be found. When Berks County was erected, the boundary line extended through the township, and that portion of the township in this county naturally retained the same name.

The estimated area of the township in 1820 was nine thousand five hundred acres, and in 1849 ten thousand. In 1842 the western section was cut from the township and added to Cumru, the area having been about nine hundred acres. The length of the distance on the county line was four hundred and forty-four perches. The commissioners were Samuel S. Jackson, William Eckert and M. S. Richards.

The early settlers were Welsh, and they suggested the name of the township, doubtless taking it from the place of their nativity, in Wales.1

Four fine streams of water take their rise in this township near the "Ziemer Tavern." The land is rolling, interspersed with valleys, but well improved.

Taxables of 1759.—The names of the taxable people in the township for the year 1759 appear in the following list. Bernhard

INDUSTRIES.—The water-powers of Brecknock are confined to a few sites on the Allegheny Creek, which were improved at an early period. These mills are still kept up, but are not as important in their relation to the business of the township as formerly, since the power at certain seasons is very weak. Near the Robeson line is the old Christian Bixler saw-mill, carried on many years as the property of Isaac Bixler. The old Bixler grist-mill, at the power next above, was long operated by Daniel and Philip Bixler, but has lately become the property of Daniel Yelk. It has a small capacity. The Allegheny or Bowman mill, now owned by Christian Cooper, is a familiar landmark on the stream. For many years it was carried on by Joseph Bowman and later by Noah Bowman. Below this site John Bowman had wool-carding machinery and full cloth, discontinuing the business thirty years ago. Afterwards there was a small wood-working shop, which has also been removed. On Muddy Creek, John Schweitzer built a small saw-mill a number of years ago, which is now carried on successfully by Samuel Z. Schweitzer. William Schweitzer had a tannery in the same locality for some years, but it has been abandoned. In the western part of the township George Miller made axes by hand-power, and a small gun factory was also carried on a short time.

The citizens of the township are mainly agriculturists, and have also paid considerable attention to fruit-culture, the soil being well adapted for the smaller varieties. The apple and peach orchard of Henry Wagner was unusual on account of its size, it having thirty-four hundred peach trees. Unfortunately, these have been destroyed by blight, but the apple orchard is still one of the largest in this section of country.

Within the recollection of the old inhabitants John Ziemer was the first to engage in mercantile pursuits, having a store on the old State road in the eastern part. He there also distilled liquor soon after 1800. Before 1829 he had a public-house, which was afterward continued by Peter Ziemer. It has become a farm-house on the land of J. Schweitzer. In the same locality Daniel Hummel began a small store in a building which had formerly been a school-house, but which was enlarged to meet the demands of his trade. In 1869 a post-office was established with the name of the store, Hummel becoming the postmaster. A few years later Augustus Schweitzer became the owner of the property, which he improved. He also conducted a public-house and store and the post-office, continuing the two latter to the present time. There is a tri-weekly mail to Reading. North from this place John Hartz opened a small store in 1884; and west of this Peter Bowman had a store for thirty years, removing it some eighteen years ago, to Knauer's post-office, west of the centre of the township. John Trostel had the first public interest there, building a part of the present public-house more than forty years ago. Becoming the property of Daniel Knauer, he secured a post-office, with the name of his hotel, March 3, 1856. The hotel was afterwards carried on by Wm. R. Ziemer and is now the property of Henry K. Furlow, who is also the postmaster. In this locality a store was lately opened by Henry Trostel; there are also some mechanic-shops, being the only place having the appearance of a hamlet in the township.

CHURCHES.

ALLEGHENY CHURCH (REFORMED AND LUTHERAN).—In 1765 some thirty persons united in building the first house of worship, which was a simple log building, thirty by forty feet, without floor or stove, and had but two windows. Some years later it was plastered over and made more comfortable. It was used in this condition until 1800, when it was replaced by a plain sandstone building. From its location, near the Allegheny Creek, it took its name and is widely known among the churches of the county. The situation is very desirable, the church grounds commanding a view of the country many miles. The increase of membership and the prosperity of the congregations induced them to undertake the building of a new church in 1878, which, in its completed condition, is a worthy monument to their devotion. It is a beautiful sandstone edifice, forty five by seventy feet, with a pulpit recess of five feet in the rear wall. A steeple seventy feet high adds to its external appearance. The arrangement with galleries gives a seating capacity of eight hundred. The walls are finely frescoed and back of the pulpit is an attractive painting representing the "Ascension of Christ." It has a pipe-organ costing one thousand six hundred dollars. The cornerstone was laid May 23, 1878, and the dedication took place November 15th of the same year.

The cost, exclusive of the work done by members, as voluntary contribution, was nearly ten thousand dollars. Much of this amount was the proceeds realized from a farm of eighty-two acres which was devised to the church in 1814 by one of its members, John Christian Ludwig Schaeffler, who died that year. He was born in 1729 and at his death was interred in the cemetery of the church. Formerly the income from the farm was used in maintaining a school under the direction of the church. This was discontinued after the era of free schools.

Each congregation has about three hundred and twenty five members, the Lutherans having as their pastor Rev. Zenas H. Gable. Some of his predecessors were the Revs. D. K. Humbert, T. T. Iaeger, S. R. Wagner, H. Boyer and others who preached in the Plow Church. The first Reformed minister recorded was the Rev. S. Ammon. Then came the Revs. H. Ingold, T. Faber, John Z. Guldin, Reuben Herman, Fred. Herman and Aug. Herman, and, since 1873, M. L. Fritch.

The inscriptions on many sand stones have been effaced by the elements, and numerous graves have been marked by simple stone slabs containing no name at all.

Mennonite Meeting-Houses.—Among the early settlers of Brecknock were a number of families belonging to the Mennonite denomination, who worshipped in private houses until some thirty years ago, when the Allegheny and Gehman meeting-houses were built. The former was erected of sandstone on the land of Henry Weber, and has sittings for three hundred persons. The latter is a similar building, put upon the land of David Gehman, whose family was most active in promoting its erection. Each church has a small grave-yard connected. The first meetings in the Allegheny neighborhood were held at the house of Wendell Bowman. The preachers were Christian Good and Christian Gehman, the latter living in Berks County. The bishop was Jacob Zimmer- man. Later preachers were Peter Mentzer, Jacob Mosseman and Samuel Good. The churches have at present the ministry of Benjamin Horning, of Berks County, and Abraham Gehman and Chris- tian Stauffer, of Lancaster. The membership is small, and is confined mainly to the Bowman, Gehman, Horning and Messner families in Breck- nock. The meetings are usually well attended by members from associate churches in Lancaster County, where preaching was first maintained.

The Evangelical Meeting-House, near the Cumru line, was built about fifteen years ago on the land of Benjamin Remp, one of the most active members. Other members belonging were from the Brinline, Lutz and Blankenbiller families, the number never being large. The ministry is from Lancaster County. The church is a small frame building, and stands in a grave-yard.

Biographical.

Samuel Z. Schweitzer.—Four brothers by the name of Schweitzer emigrated from Württem- burg, in Germany, to Pennsylvania, about 1740. One, whose name was Peter, settled in Brecknock township, Lancaster County (now Berks County), another in Northampton County, the third in Cumberland County, and the fourth in Lancaster (now included in Dauphin) County. Peter Schweitzer was married to a young woman named Heffelfinger (who emigrated at the same time), and had seven children,—Frederick, Peter, Susan, Christian, Catharine, Elizabeth and Margaret.

Frederick Schweitzer was born in Brecknock township, Berks County, and carried on farming. He was married to Barbara Burkhardt, of the same township, and had eight children,—John, Frederick, Peter, Jacob, Elizabeth, Barbara, Susan and Catharine.

John Schweitzer was born in the same township August 28, 1791, and was married to Mary Ziegler (a daughter of Abraham Ziegler, a farmer of Lancaster County, who lived near by), born October 5, 1791, and who is now still living in the township, at the remarkable age of ninety-five years, in good health and able to move about with ease and speak with fluency, being possessed of a strong recollection of past events in the early history of the county. He had a farm of one hundred acres, with a saw-mill, which he conducted successfully for many years. He died December 5, 1871, and had four children,—Samuel Z., John (married to Maria Suader), Salome (now deceased, who was married to John Kachel) and Elizabeth (married to Peter Bixler, who is now deceased).

Samuel Ziegler Schweitzer was born in Brecknock township, on the old homestead, January 1, 1816. He was educated in his early youth in the private schools which the neighborhood afforded and subsequently attended a higher grade of schools at Morgantown and at Reading. A special study of his was surveying, which he pursued several years after returning home. In his seventeenth year he began teaching in the school building at Allegheny Church, in Brecknock township, and pursued this profession for seventeen successive years. The first three years were spent in the township named and near by, and the other years at various places in Lancaster County, the more prominent localities having been New Holland, Goodville and Churchtown. He also taught music for a time. During the interim from teaching every year he was engaged at farming, and also at droving for five years, traveling to the West for stock and driving it to the East to market. In 1852 he directed his attention entirely to farming and he has pursued this vocation since. He has always resided on the homestead, of which he became the owner in 1872. He now owns three farms (the third being distant one mile from the homestead), altogether three hundred and eighteen acres, which he is conducting successfully. On the place which he occupies he also carries on a saw-mill and chopping-mill.

Mr. Schweitzer is a Republican in politics. He officiated as justice of peace in the township for one term of five years from 1872. He has been prominently connected with the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Sinking Spring, Berks County, for many years having officiated as a Director. He is a member of the Allegheny Church, Lutheran denomination, having been associate treasurer of the church for the last twenty years, and treasurer of the Lutheran congregation since 1852. When the Allegheny Church was rebuilt, in 1878, he was one of the largest contributors.

He was married, in 1853, to Elizabeth Haller, daughter of Samuel Haller, a farmer of Terre Hill, Lancaster County.

UNION TOWNSHIP.

ERecTION OF TOWNSHIP.—This township was erected in 1753 by proceedings in the Court of Quarter Sessions of Berks County. The papers could not be found on file, excepting a draft which was prepared by Benjamin Lightfoot. The lines were surveyed by him on the 10th of February, 1753; their bearings and distances being as follows:

"Beginning at the Schuylkill, at the outlet of Hay Creek, on the upper side, thence along Robeson township, S. 10 W. 500 ps. and S. 41° 19' W. 900 ps., to a white oak tree corner, thence along Caernarvon township S. 45° 41' E. 970 ps. to a heap of stones, thence along Chester County N. 59 E. 2216 ps. to a post on the western bank of the Schuylkill, thence up the river 2125 ps. to the beginning."

These lines were estimated by him to enclose 13,112 acres, with usual allowance. Three prominent creeks are mentioned as being within the townships,—"Six-pence," "Mill," and the headwaters of "French." A line is drawn through this draft from a point on the river-bank opposite the mouth of Monocacy Creek to the Caernarvon township line (south 44° 19' west), crossing the line at a public road leading to Geiger's Mill about three hundred and forty-five perches from the Robeson township corner, this being intended, doubtless, to indicate the locality and bearing of the county line which had existed between Chester and Lancaster Counties.1

The name of the township arose from a "union" of two sections of territory, one (about seven thousand five hundred acres) from Coventry township, in Chester County, and the other from Robeson township, in Berks County.

FIRST SETTLERS.—The first tract of land was taken up by Hans Monson, by warrant, in 1684. The tract contained five hundred and eighty acres, and was situated in the vicinity of Mill Creek, on the Schuylkill. Soon afterward he conveyed the land to Peter Peterson Yocum. It is probable that Yocum did not then occupy this land.

In 1715 John Rumford took up, by patent, a tract of three hundred acres, situated on the Schuylkill, opposite the Swedes' tracts, in "Coventry." In 1728 he sold two hundred acres of this tract to Thomas Reese; the adjoining owner then on the east was John Blare (who "seated" the land) and on the south David Stephens (who had the land "in tenure"). Subsequently this two hundred acre tract came to be owned by Abraham Wislar. 2

1Taking this line to have been the county line, the estimated area of territory cut from Chester County was about nine thousand acres. But in 1729, when Lancaster County was erected from Chester County, this line was reported to have the bearing from the same point on the Schuylkill, southwest by south, or south 34° 45' west. This difference in the bearing of the line would make an area of about fifteen hundred acres; and, accordingly, about seventy-five hundred acres were taken from Chester County.

2Some of the earlier warrantees of land in the township before the erection of the county, besides those mentioned, were,—

A list of the freeholders of the township for 1764 includes the following persons with quantity of their land and number of servants, stock, etc.:

- Mark Bird: 1000 acres of land, 200 cultivated and 80 sowed; 5 servants, 5 negroes, 18 horses, 18 cattle, and 40 sheep.
- George Cerson: 220 acres of land, 130 cultivated and 25 sowed; 1 servant, 2 negroes, 4 horses, 5 cattle and 10 sheep.

Industries.—The limited water-power of the township has been well improved. On Six-Penny Creek, George Kerst had a pioneer mill, which was afterwards known as Linderman’s. Previous to 1839 George Zachariah erected a forge, called “Clinton,” at this water-power, and operated it for some years, when it was removed, and the power again used to operate a mill now known as Shirey’s. Below this site Jacob Unstead had fulling, feed and oil-mills, which were useful factors in the early history of that locality. Daniel Kinsey used the power for some years to operate a grist-mill erected by him. It has been idle a number of years.

Near the Schuylkill George Stoner had a saw-mill soon after 1800. It was operated until 1846, when William Miller added a grist-mill. Both mills are carried on by the Miller family. On Mill Creek, in the locality of Unionville, Jacob Kerlin was the proprietor of mills until 1825, when Abraham Wanger became the owner. After 1827 they were sold to Henry Flannery, and from him they have passed to Jacob K. Flannery, the present owner. For a short time a distillery was also carried on. In the southwestern part of the township, on a branch of Hay Creek, Paul Geiger built a feed and clover-mill, which still remains, Herman Geiger being the owner.

The “Hopewell” and “Monocacy” Furnaces are the prominent iron industries in the township. The latter has been in existence for one hundred and twenty years. They are mentioned in chapter on “Early and General Industries.”

Churches.

St. Paul’s Methodist Episcopal Church.—This is the oldest Methodist Church in the county, and one of the oldest in the State. The first church building was erected in 1773 upon the land of Mounce Jones, for the use of the Rev. W. Diener, a preacher of the “New Light” doctrine, but who subsequently embraced Methodism, and was instrumental in converting the most of his adherents to the same faith, some time before 1780. That year the property, which was known as the “Forest Church,” from its location in a district of

of the county by that name, was deeded to John Wesley and his followers, and from that time this has been distinctively a Methodist Church. The Methodist members at that period were David Hoffman, Henry Carbery, Jacob Zink, Abraham Zink, Mounce Jones, Abraham Lewis, Reuben Cox, John Geiger, Henry Kerlin and a few others. Before 1780 the Lutherans occasionally held meetings in this house, which was of the nature of a Union building, but thereafter were obligated to attend the church at the Plow Tavern until seventy years later, when they built a church in the same locality. The old Forest Church was a plain stone building, one story high. It was in use until 1858, when the present St. Paul’s Church was erected in its stead. This is a large stone edifice, plastered on the outside, and has basement rooms. On the north side of the building is preserved the stone inscribed with the date of the first building. In connection with it is a burial-lot, the front of which is enclosed with a stone wall built in 1818 by David Hoffman and Paul Geiger. In 1883 a parsonage was erected at Geigertown, three-fourths of a mile distant.

In 1870 St. Paul’s Church and the Zion Church became a separate charge, as the Geigertown Circuit.

The congregation of St. Paul’s Church has ninety-five members, and the Zion Church thirty. The latter house of worship was built in 1872, of sandstone, and cost twenty-three hundred dollars. It includes a burial plat.

St. James’ Evangelical Lutheran Church is near the village of Geigertown and had its corner stone laid August 11, 1850. Under the direction of George Zerr, Paul Geiger, George Wamsheer and Jacob Wolf, the building was completed for dedication on December 25th of the same year, the ceremony having been performed by Rev. F. A. M. Keller, of Reading, who was the first pastor and served until his death, in 1864. The congregation was organized by his predecessor, Rev. Jos. R. Focht. At first it was small; in 1886 it numbered seventy-five members. Rev. Zenas H. Gable has been pastor since 1873. The church building is nearly forty feet square, constructed of rough stone and plastered. It stands on an acre of land, which was donated by Paul Geiger and George Zerr; part of the land has been set apart for burial purposes.

Monocacy Methodist Episcopal Church.

—A plain frame building was erected in 1873. At the organization of the congregation there were sixty members; now they number one hundred and forty. It has always had the same ministerial service as the charge at Birdsboro. The society is flourishing and exerts a good influence on the community. The land on which the church stands was donated by the Monocacy Furnace Company.

Roman Catholic Church is situated below Monocacy. It was built about 1855, on a lot of land donated by Henry Flannery, and is still used by that denomination, although the membership is small and there is no settled priest. Many of the worshippers come from a long distance, the church accommodating many people not living in the township. It is a stone building, with a capacity for several hundred people. A burial-ground is attached.

In the central part of the township a small stone church was built about thirty years ago by the colored people belonging to the Methodist Church. The congregation is small.

Schools.—One of the first schools in the township was on the Kerst farm, in a log building erected about a hundred years ago. It was an ordinary pay-school, but was well attended for those times. In 1830 H. G. Stettler opened a boarding-school for boys, at Unionville, which he continued five years. He was accounted a good teacher, and gave thorough instruction in the English language. Other pay-schools have been maintained for short periods, among them “Philomathean Academy,” which is noted in Birdsboro. The common schools are well attended.

Villages.

Unionville is the oldest hamlet in the township. The land in that locality was owned by Abraham Brower, and upon part of it John Brower founded a business point before 1820, called Browerstown. When the post-office was established, in 1828, it was called “Brower,” by which name it is still designated. The present title of the hamlet was derived from the township. Abraham Brower carried on a small foundry until his death, in 1830, after which the business was continued for some time by his son-in-law, Augustus Leopold. Small castings only were made. John Brower had a shop for the manufacture of candle-sticks, lamps and coffee-mills, in which six men were employed; but this business was discontinued before 1830. About the same time Jacob Kerlin had a sickle and scythe-factory there, and William Kerlin a shop for boring out gun-barrels. The elder Jacob Kerlin carried on a mill. All these interests made Unionville a busy place for a time. A store was started before the post-office was established. Samuel Boone, Richard Jones and others carried on business there. A public-house was also kept, from 1820 to 1874, by John Brower, Titus Lavering and Augustus Kerlin. The place has about twenty buildings, including several mechanic-shops.

Above this place, on the old Jacob Whistler farm, Abraham Bannan built a warehouse and dock on the canal, in 1830, calling it "Port Union." In 1836 David Grim carried on a large business. James Healy and Amos Boone were later merchants. After the building of the railroads the business of the canal at this point was reduced and eventually suspended.

Above this point is the "Black Bear" Inn, opened in 1831 by James Blakely. Since 1834 it has been kept by the Ryan family. An earlier public-house was kept soon after 1800 by John Kerst, continuing some years, on what is now the Flannery farm. In the same locality Jacob Umstead operated a distillery until about 1824.

Mt. Airy, or Monocacy, is near the west line of the township, on the canal and Schuylkill. A store was opened by William Long, on the farm of Margaret Long, some time about 1813, and continued about a dozen years, which was the beginning of business-life in this locality. After that, other interests followed; but, on account of the nearness of Birdsboro, the hamlet has never obtained an important business position. Within its bounds are over twenty houses. In 1826 Lyon Lemberger had the store in this neighborhood, and a later merchant was John C. Evans, who discontinued in 1831; and it was not until 1885 that Alexander Church opened a store in the same room. In that building was kept the Mt. Airy post-office; but after 1825 it was continued down the road by Daniel Y. Knabb and Robert Bland. About 1833 Samuel Fox built a hotel in this locality, and became the postmaster. In 1837 he was succeeded by Herman Umstead, who kept a store and inn at the same time. In 1849 John Bland became the postmaster, who was succeeded by Umstead, who had the name of the office changed, in 1856, to bear his name, as the Mount Airy title was claimed at another place. Some time about 1861 the name of the office was changed to its present title, Monocacy. In the hamlet proper, Caleb and Charles Bland have the store and tavern. The usual mechanic-shops are carried on. East of this place John Geiger had a pioneer inn, keeping it in a log building. From 1830 until 1872 Ezekiel Beard entertained the public at the same point.

Biographical.

Charles M. Clingan, M.D., was born in Chester County, Pa., March 18, 1820. His father, William Clingan, was the owner of the Laurel Iron-Works, Chester County, Pa., where he died before reaching his thirtieth year. His grandfather, William Clingan, was a native of Ireland, and came to this country to establish a mercantile business, which, combined with agricultural pursuits, he carried on successfully in the southern portion of Chester County. He, with Robert Morris, Daniel Roberdeau, J. Bayard Smith and Joseph Reed, represented Pennsylvania in the framing of the Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union between the States, which was ratified at Philadelphia on the 22d of July, 1778. His mother was a grand-daughter of Colonel Thomas Bull, of Revolutionary fame. Upon completion of a preparatory course, Dr. Clingan began the study of medicine, graduating from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1840. He followed his profession in Chester County for four years, but, finding active business more to his taste, abandoned the practice to embark in iron manufacturing at the Rock Furnace, Lancaster County, Pa. He was married, on the 14th of March, 1843, by the Rev. Levi Bull, to Maria T., daughter of Clement Brooke, of Hopewell Furnace. Eight children were born of this union, three of whom survive,—two sons, Charles B. and A. Hunter (well known throughout this and adjoining counties), and one daughter, Anne Louise.

Dr. Clingan, after his marriage, assumed charge of the Hopewell Furnace, belonging to his father-in-law, Clement Brooke, in Hopewell, Union township, Berks County, also devoting much time, until his death, to the management of the Hopewell estate, comprising some five thousand acres of land situated in the southern portion of Berks and northern portion of Chester Counties.

In the year 1859 he removed to Philadelphia and became engaged in mercantile and banking business. He was a prominent member of the Commercial Exchange, a special partner in the firm of Clingan, Lewis & Co, wholesale pork packers and provision dealers, and president of the Keystone National Bank. On March 27, 1873, while attending to the duties of the latter position, he was stricken with sudden and fatal illness.

After the decease of Dr. Clingan, his widow and children, preferring country life, built two large mansions on farms owned by them and containing over four hundred acres, situated one mile west of Birdsboro, Pa. The widow and unmarried children live in one, whilst Charles B. Clingan and family occupy the other.

Two stations, both known as Clingan, are located at the foot of the lawn, one belonging to the Wilmington and Northern Railroad, the other to the Pennsylvania Schuylkill Valley Railroad.

Samuel M. Rea is the grandson of Samuel Rea, who resided in the northern part of Chester County, Pa., and the son of Samuel Rea, of the same county, who was married to Lydia Morris, daughter of Enos and Lydia Jackson Morris. Their son, Samuel M., was born on the 24th of March, 1823, in the northern portion of Chester County, and in early youth removed to Berks County, from whence he returned again to his native county. After preliminary instruction at the common schools he became a pupil of Price's boarding-school, near West Chester, devoting special attention to surveying, navigation and other mathematical studies. A limited time having been spent as a farmer, he entered the office of John S. Bowen, of West Chester, as clerk and draughtsman, and afterward engaged in surveying. He then embarked, with a partner, in a survey of the State of Delaware, preparatory to the publication of a county and State map. This project consumed the greater part of two summers, after which his profession of a surveyor and engineer led to his temporary location in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, New Jersey and New York States respectively. He was then employed in the survey and laying out of the township of Kingsessing prior to its consolidation with the city of Philadelphia. Transferring his quarters to Germantown, he engaged in a survey of the district including Germantown and Chestnut Hill. In 1862, Mr. Rea, in connection with a partner, purchased a farm of eight hundred acres in Maryland, and embarked in agricultural pursuits, which were continued for two years, when, having sold the property, he returned to Germantown, and, in 1864, made Reading his home. Here he engaged in a topographical survey of the city. Before the completion of this work, and on the 18th of May, 1867, he was elected city engineer. During this time he superintended the introduction of the Olinger water into the Penn reservoir, an achievement which won for him no little commendation.

In 1876 Mr. Rea purchased his present valuable farm in Union township, and, while not abandoning the pursuit of his profession (being the present surveyor of the borough of Birdsboro), retired to the more tranquil life of an agriculturist. He was united in marriage to Elizabeth, daughter of James Hartley Potts and Sarah Jackson, of Berks County. Their children are Morris Jackson, born February 16, 1870, and Lydia Lee, born July 19, 1871, both deceased. Mr. Rea is in politics a Republican, but gives little time to matters of a political nature. He is a member of the Berks County Agricultural and Horticultural Society. He was reared in the faith of the Society of Friends and inclines to that belief.
APPENDIX.

In 1811 the county of Schuylkill was erected from a part of Berks county and a part of Northampton county. The greater portion of its territory was cut from Berks County.

The following townships had been erected in that portion beyond the Blue Mountain when the county was established.

The early settlers had moved into this territory as early as 1749. In August, 1749, their trespasses upon the possessions of the Indians became a subject of complaint by the Indians to the government. Their deputies were sent by the Senecas, Onondagas, Tutatoes, Nanticoke and Conoy, to treat with the Governor and protest against the formation of settlements beyond the mountains. The Governor assured them that the trespasses should be stopped and gave them many presents.1

In May 1757, the following persons lived beyond the Blue Mountains in the vicinity of "Fort Franklin" within four miles, and in the district which a dozen years afterward was called Brunswick.

Adam Spltteman. Anthony Krum.
Casper Langbeiger. Jacob Keim.
Henry Norbech. Wm. Gabel.
Mark Grist's widow. John Wisseswer.
Wm. Ball. Jacob Richards.
Philip Annes. Christopher Sprecher.
Jacob Leisser. Geo. Sprecher.

John Schaeffer.

They petitioned the Governor not to remove Fort Franklin south of Blue Mountain into Albany township, otherwise they would have to desert their plantations.2

BRUNSWICK.—The first township beyond the Blue Mountain in the purchase of 1749 was Brunswick. It was erected in 1768. Its territory was situated east of the Schuylkill between the Blue and Sharp mountains. The first collector of taxes was Robert Stephen.

The first assessment list of 1769 levied a total tax of 6£ 2s. 6d. and comprised the following resident tax-payers:

Dolbert, Michael. Miller, Johannes.
Derr, Adam. Mayer, George.
Fahl, Dietrich. Schmelzer, Peter.
Fahl, Jos. Schaffer, Jacob.

The road from Reading to Fort Augusta ran through this township. It was laid out about 1750, and about sixty years afterward it became the Centre turnpike. "Fort Lebanon" stood on the forks of Schuylkill near the Blue Mountain. It was erected in this district in 1754, and "Fort Franklin" was located several miles farther north.

on Bohundy (or Lizard) creek—having been erected in 1756. These forts were erected to afford protection to the early settlers from the Indians.

PINE GROVE.—The second township was Pine Grove. It was erected in 1771. Its territory was situated west of the Schuykill, between the Blue and Sharp mountains. The first collector of taxes was George Goodman. The first assessment list of 1772 levied a total tax of £2 11s. 9d. and comprised the following resident taxpayers:

August, Daniel. Keiser, Michael.
Beyer, Assimus. Kucher, Peter.

MANHEIM.—The third township was Manheim. It was erected in 1790. Its territory was taken from Brunswick. The inhabitants had prayed for a division of Brunswick township on February 10, 1789. The commissioners who made the division were Henry Vanderaishe, Jacob Shartle, John Shomo, Thomas Wright, Philip Shatz and George Reber. They presented their report to Court on the 10th of November, 1789. But some time elapsed until it was confirmed, for no assessment was made until 1791. In that year, the first tax was levied—total amount seventeen pounds and eleven shillings. Conrad Minich was the first collector. The first assessment comprised the following resident tax-payers:

Michael Alspach. George Luckenbill.
Jacob Alspach. Nicholas Long.
Henry Achey. Peter Miller.
Frederick Boyer. Jacob Miller.
John Boyer. Philip Moyer.

For several years the township lines were not closed and its limits were not properly defined. The inhabitants therefore presented a petition to Court on April 3, 1797, to obtain an order for this purpose, and Thomas Lightfoot, Jesse Willits and Evan Hughes were appointed commissioners. They fixed the boundary-lines and made report of their proceedings on October 5, 1799. The area was forty thousand six hundred and nine acres. The greater part was situated on both sides of the Schuylkill, and it extended from the Blue Mountain on the south to the Tuscarora (Sharp) Mountain on the north. The point where the West Branch empties into the Schuylkill was near the Centre. Here Martin Dreibelbis had settled and erected a mill. His son Jacob laid out Schuylkill Haven in 1811. Several miles southeast of this point Peter Orwig owned land, and laid out a town in 1796. It was named after him, "Orwigsburg." And about four miles north of it, at the Schuylkill Gap, on the north side of the Sharp Mountain, a large tract of land was owned by Lewis Reese and Isaac Thomas. About 1796 they erected a furnace near this gap, and carried on the iron business until 1806. Then they sold it to John Pott, of District township, in Berks County. In 1807 Pott tore it down and erected in its stead another furnace, which he named "Greenwood;" and near by he also erected a number of small tenement-houses for his laborers. The names of some of these laborers were Henry Bolton, John Else, George Frievie, George Reiner, Anthony Schott and Thomas Swoyer. Daniel Focht was clerk at the furnace.

Near this gap masts were cut for the Continental Navy, in April, 1780. Captain Dennis Leary was in command of the men. He then reported interruptions by the Indians, who had invaded the territory from the north.

Below the outlet of the West Branch, on the Schuylkill, the mill of Ellis Hughes was situated. It was built before 1775.

In 1795 commissioners were appointed to run the line between Berks and Northumberland Counties. The establishment of this line by them left a very large area of territory in Berks not yet erected into townships. This was brought to the attention of the Court and, accordingly, on November 4, 1799, Thomas Lightfoot, Jesse Willets and Thomas Wright, Jr., were appointed commissioners to lay out the land into townships. The southern half of the territory, in the purchase of 1749, had been laid out into three townships—Brunswick, Pine Grove and Manheim. The commissioners named laid out the northern half into three townships also, and recommended their names to be as follows: The eastern township, Schuylkill; the central, Norwegian, and the western, Mahantango. The first had an area of sixty-eight thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight acres; the second, sixty-three thousand three hundred and forty-four acres, and the third, sixty-nine thousand five hundred and seven acres. Their report was signed January 7, 1801, and confirmed by the Court at January Sessions. The southern boundary line of Mahantango modified the adjoining township, Pine Grove, and it was adjusted by three commissioners—Michael Miller, Jacob Rehrer and Christian Lower, on January 8, 1804.

Schuylkill.—The first assessment of taxes in Schuylkill township was levied in 1802. Total amount of tax assessed was fifty-one dollars and fifty-nine cents. Jacob Stahl was the first collector.

The following persons were then resident taxpayers:

In this township, near where New Philadelphia is now situated, Rev. F. W. Geisenheimer & Co. erected a furnace, called the "Valley Furnace," about the year 1805, and carried on the iron business for many years.

Norwegian.—The first taxes in Norwegian township were levied in 1802,—total amount assessed was $100.76. Isaac Thomas was first collector. The following persons were then resident tax-payers.

In 1812. it was mid-way between Reading and Sunbury. Reed continued as proprietor until his death in 1812. And another tavern was erected farther north on the top of the Broad Mountain by George Seitzinger in 1810. It stood at a Fountain Spring on the Centre Turnpike.

Mahantango.—The first assessment of the taxes in Mahantango township was also made in 1802. Total amount levied $159.48. Frederick Kreutzer was the collector. The following persons were assessed as resident tax-payers.

Coal was discovered about 1770 in this district along the West Branch at a point near where Minersville is situated. And there Thomas Reed settled in 1793. He then erected a log house and a saw-mill; and several years afterward he built a tavern. It stood by the "Sunbury Road," and it was known as the Half-way House, because it was mid-way between Reading and Sunbury. Reed continued as proprietor until his death in 1812. And another tavern was erected farther north on the top of the Broad Mountain by George Seitzinger in 1810. It stood at a Fountain Spring on the Centre Turnpike.

Upper Mahantango.—About the year 1807, Mahantango township was divided into two parts, and they were called Upper and Lower Mahantango. The records, showing the exact time and manner of division, are missing. The earliest assessment found was for 1808. Total amount assessed, $25.19. Abrm. Yoder was then the assessor and collector. The following list shows which of the persons on the list for 1802, occupied the upper section of the township before its division, excepting some changes which may have taken place in the meantime:

The several townships named, at that time, possessed many permanent improvements. Saw-mills, grist-mills and furnaces had been successfully carried on for some years. Taverns had been established. Churches had been erected through the Christian zeal of Lutheran and Reformed settlers. Coal had been mined and burned successfully, and enterprise, capital and labor, had already been drawn to its wonderful beds; and projectors of public improvements had felt the importance of local government and representation.

The industrial, the social, and the political situation of the people were therefore sufficiently advanced for a separate existence as a county organization; and accordingly the seven townships named and two townships, West Penn and Rusin, of Northampton County, were erected into a county, called Schuylkill on March 1st, 1811. And by the act of Assembly Orwigsburg was made the county-seat. The subsequent development of the county through the period of nearly four score years has been marvellous.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

The first parties who introduced photography in Reading were Howard & Maurer, who carried on the business for many years in the “Jameson Building,” northeast corner of Sixth and Penn Streets, second and third stories. This was in 1852. They succeeded Charles L. Phillipi, who had been taking daguerreotypes for several years previously. Daguerreotype likenesses were first taken in Reading by John H. Scott, of Philadelphia, in September, 1841. The price was $3.50 for one likeness, and the person was obliged to sit for forty seconds.

The more prominent photographers at Reading during the last thirty years have been George W. Patton, Abel Mishler, Frederick Yeager, John Lee, William K. Leaman, Charles A. Saylor, William H. Dietrich, Edward E. Hafer, John D. Strunk and Thomas Taylor.

Mr. Hafer is now successfully conducting two galleries in Reading. He supplied the photographs for many of the portrait subjects in this history, from which the engravings were made.1

1 The author was promised certain facts on this subject which should have appeared in the chapter on “Education,” with “Art and Artists,” p. 808, but they were not supplied.
