Industries.—The manufacture of mince-meat was begun in this city by G. W. Craig in 1878. The business was conducted by him at this place until 1881. In that year Allen M. Craig, his son, purchased a butcher-shop in Wilmington and the mince-meat factory was moved to that place and conducted under the style of Craig & Co. In the following year William Beck purchased the mince-meat factory of Allen M. Craig and it was brought back to Delaware City. A suitable building, twenty by sixty feet, with an L twenty by thirty feet, was erected and fitted up with the apparatus necessary for this work. The factory is run by steam-power and has a capacity of five thousand pounds per day. It is in operation only during five months of the year. The meat is prepared from cattle killed at the factory and the entire beef is used. There are ten employees during the season, superintended by G. W. Craig. Three brands are manufactured, viz.: Craig's Choice Family, Craig's Diamond State and Craig's Star. The meat is packed in eighteen, thirty-six and seventy pound pails, also in barrels, half-ee and quarters and shipped principally to Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia and Wilmington. The business has increased from five hundred pounds manufactured in 1878 to two thousand thousand pounds made during the last season.

In 1828 John A. Hopper came to Delaware City and a short time afterwards opened a shop for heavy wagon work and blacksmithing. This shop was situated on the corner of Washington and William Streets and was purchased in 1839 by Joseph Brewer. In 1854 the old shop was removed and the present one erected. In 1878 R. A. Moody purchased the shop and conducted it till March 1, 1886, when a copartnership was formed between R. A. Moody and George N. Bright, who have since traded under the name and style of R. A. Moody & Co. On the same date they purchased of C. G. Alexander & Co. a carriage factory on the corner of Washington and Front Streets. This factory was started in 1840 by J. S. Alexander. It was next owned by his son, Richard G. Alexander, of whom Charles G. Alexander and H. H. Clark, trading as C. G. Alexander & Co., purchased. Although the two factories are owned by the same firm, yet each is distinct and complete in itself. By this firm there are manufactured annually fifty carriages and forty heavy wagons, and in addition a large amount of repairing is done. In the two departments eleven men are employed.

In 1865 a building was erected on the corner of Clinton and Fifth Streets, by Higgins, Marshand & Co., to be used as a manufactory for stamped tin and sheet iron ware. The business was continued by this firm and Higgins, Reybold & Co. for a space of three years, when it was purchased by the Lalance & Grosjean Manufacturing Company, of New York, and discontinued. The building was used for the manufacture of fertilizers, but on account of its location was abandoned at the end of a year. Since that time it has been used as a canning factory, and has been conducted respectively by William G. Knowles, Sleeper Wells, Aldridge and William E. Cleaver. The Anderson Preserving Company, of Camden, New Jersey, has leased it for this year and will can tomatoes. The "Boston Market" and "Pennsylvania" are the brands canned by this company. During the two months during which the canning is done, eighty women, twenty men and fifteen boys are employed. Thomas C. Horner is the superintendent. The goods are shipped principally to New York. The main building is a two-story brick, one hundred by forty feet with a one story L, fifty by thirty feet. A peeling-room, thirty-six by forty feet, has just been erected.

The three-story frame grist-mill on Second Street, now owned by George Reybold, was built in 1859 by W. C. Robertson and Henry Price. It was conducted by them a few years and then sold to Ray Jamison. George Cleaver was the next owner and he sold in a few years to George and Eugene Reybold. Eugene Reybold shortly afterwards conveyed his interest to George, who is now sole owner. The mill is fitted up with a twenty-five horse-power engine and forty horse-power boiler, and was run entirely by steam. The grinding is done with two burrs. The capacity of the mill is one and a half barrels of flour and forty bushels of feed per hour. Both custom and merchant work were done here. The mill has not been operated during the past four years.

Hotels.—The first hotel in this city was opened in 1826 by —— Scattergood, in the building now occupied by John Roberts, on the corner of Washington and Second Streets. This was the first house erected within the present limits of Delaware City, and was known as the "farm-house." In 1827 Thomas Craven was the proprietor. He was succeeded by Elijah Jefferson, who was the last man that used it for hotel purposes. In 1838 the Delaware City Hotel was built by Manuel Eyre, and Elijah Jefferson moved into this building as tenant. It is situated on the corner of Clinton Street and Delaware Avenue. John Albertson was the next landlord. Francis D. Dunlap purchased the property of Manuel Eyre, and after his death it was purchased by Dr. Francis S. Dunlap, the present owner. Since John Albertson conducted it the hotel has been managed by Francis D. Dunlap, Joseph S. Mathews, Martin D. Ball, Francis S. Dunlap, M.D., Hugh Horner, Thomas Bradway, Joseph A. Kidder and E. A. Scott, the present landlord.

On July 24, 1890, Thomas Folwell purchased of Manuel Eyre a lot of land on the northwest side of Clinton Street. On this lot Folwell had already erected a dining-room, and it is so stated in the deed. This was the origin of the Delaware City House, afterwards known as the "Robinson House." This hotel was successively owned by Jacob Robinson, Jonathan Draper, John T. Cheairs, Charles Clements, Frank Bradway and Thomas D. Bradway. After the decease of Thomas D. Bradway the property vested in his widow, to whom it belonged when it was consumed by fire, January 6, 1887.

The Delaware City Volunteer Fire Company was organized March 17, 1887, and has a membership of sixty. The officers are: President, James E. Sadler; Vice-President, Charles G. Ash; Secretary, W. W. Cheairs; Treasurer, Dr. F. Bellville; Chief, George N. Bright. Shortly after organization a Rumsey hand-engine and five hundred feet of hose was purchased by the town commissioners and presented to the company. The Farmers' Mutual Insurance Company of New Castle County donated to the organization the sum of fifty dollars. Meetings are held on the first Thursday night of each month.

Post-Office.—A post-office was established in Delaware City in the year 1826. At this time a mail-route was established between St. George's village and Port Penn, passing through Delaware City. The mail contract was awarded to Ebenezer Eliason, and the rider was William Cooper. There was at this time only one mail a week. George Cleaver was the first postmaster, and continued until 1858, when he was succeeded by Edward Foster, who held the position until 1857. In that year John T. Cheairs received the appointment. He was followed in 1862 by Darrah Cleaver, who continued until 1866, when Edmund D. Cleaver became postmaster. Joseph Pennington obtained the office in the spring of 1869, and held it until 1881, when George A. Clark was appointed. Clark was succeeded by William A. Price, August 1, 1882, and Price by H. F. Mullen, November 9, 1885. Woodward W. Cheairs, the present incumbent, was appointed postmaster September 1, 1886.

Jackson Lodge, No. 19, A. F. A. M., was instituted June 27, 1887. The charter members were John Homan, Master; A. M. Biddle, W. W.; and Adam Von Culin, J. W. The organization has gradually increased in membership and now numbers thirty-eight members. The meetings are held on the first Tuesday night of each month, except July and August. The lodge-room is the third story of a brick building on Clinton Street. The following are the Past Masters:

Patrick Henry Lodge, No. 11, I. O. O. F., was instituted February 22, 1847. The charter members were James B. Henry, Charles C. Bigger, Francis D. Dunlap, Henry L. Packard, Leonard J. Vanheekle and William R. Bright. The first officers of the organization were James B. Henry, N. G.; Francis D. Dunlap, V. G.; Charles C. Bigger, R. S.; Henry L. Fockard, Treas.

Since its organization the lodge has enrolled two hundred and forty-five members, of which there are twenty-seven at present. In March, 1887, they purchased the building in which they hold their meetings. The lodge is now officered as follows: W. C. Bright, N. G.; Samuel R. Hines, V. G.; Frank L. Cleaver, R. S.; William R. Bright, Treas.; M. Kirby, P. S.

Diamond State Lodge, No. 15, I. O. O. T., was instituted April 14, 1886, with a membership of fourteen. The first officers were as follows: Rev. J. H. Willey, W. C. T.; Mrs. R. Hutchinson, V. T.; William Anderson, R. Sec'y; H. Heal, F. Sec'y; John H. Roberts, Sr., Treas.; George Hutchinson, Chaplain.

The lodge attained its highest membership in June, 1886, when forty-five names were enrolled. The order is still in a flourishing condition and numbers twenty-five members. The following are the officers at the present time: George Hutchinson, W. C. T.; Mrs. Jane Cairns, V. T.; Samuel R. Hines, Jr., R. Sec'y; Miss Florence E. Hutchinson, F. Sec'y; William J. Robinson, Chaplain; John Roberts, Treas.

The Delaware City Cemetery Association was organized in August, 1865, and incorporated Jan. 26, 1866. The incorporators were George B. Moncey, William Beck, Amos E. Davison, George H. Rie, William P. Householder, Joseph Brewer and Elon J. Way. The capital stock of five thousand dollars was divided into one thousand five-dollar shares. In September, 1865, four acres of land were purchased of Elon J. Way. At that time it lay on the outside of the town, but, by the extension of the town in 1871, it was brought within the present city limits. It was carefully arranged and laid out for a burying-ground. Amos E. Davison, the first president of the organization, was succeeded in August, 1877, by William Wingate, the present president. George B. Moncey, the first secretary, still serves in that capacity. The board of managers are William Wingate, William Beck, Amos E. Davison, George B. Moncey and William P. Householder.

Chapter L.

St. George's Hundred.

St. George's, the largest hundred in New Castle County, is bounded on the north by St. George's Creek, on the east by the Delaware River, on the south by Appoquinimink Creek and on the west by Maryland. With the exception of a small quantity of marsh on the river's edge, the land is all in a state of cultivation and yields abundantly. At one time a large portion of the hundred was devoted to peach-growing. This enterprise has to a great extent been abandoned and the chief products of the soil are wheat, corn and oats. Numerous small streams flowing through the hundred render the grounds very fertile. Facilities for shipping merchandise by boat are afforded to those living in the northern, eastern and southern parts of the hundred. Those in the central and western portions have railroad accommodations. The climate is healthful and all that can be desired. The population has largely increased from fifty taxable, representing perhaps two hundred and fifty inhabitants in 1833.

The first settlers in this vicinity were chiefly of four nationalities—Swedes, Dutch, French Huguenots and English. Of the first class were the Petersons and the Andersons; of the second class, the Alrichs, Hansons, Vandykes, Vandegrifts and Vances; of the third, the Dushans, Naudains of Appoquinimink, Bayards and the Seays; of the last, the Crawfords and the Taylors. Before 1833 fifty taxable citizens had taken up their residence within the bounds of this hundred. Among these were Henry Walraven, John Foster, John Taylor, John Peterson, Hans Hanson, Adam Peterson, Elias Humphreys, Judith Crawford, widow of James Crawford, and Peter Alrichs. The descendants of some of these early settlers still reside within the hundred, but the names of some have entirely disappeared from the neighborhood.

Probably the first grant of land in the lower part of New Castle County was that made in 1646 by William Kieft, then a Dutch Governor, to Abraham Planck, Simon Root, John Andriesen and Peter Harmensen. Each were granted two hundred acres of land on South River (Delaware), near Bird Island (Reedy), on condition of settlement within one year, with the promise of more land on the condition that they build houses and reside upon the land. They evidently did not settle here or even make a pretense of so doing, as they did not hold the land nor claim any title to it, and with the exception of John Andriesen, the names are not found in this hundred. They, however, settled on the Schuylkill River and farther south in the State of Delaware. The land thus offered to them at a later date came to Peter Alrichs and Casparus Herman. Peter Alrichs was a nephew of Vice-Director Jacob Alrichs, who succeeded Jean Paul Jacquet in 1657, and died at New Castle in 1659. Peter came to this country with his uncle, and at once entered into public affairs and continued during his life a prominent man in the affairs of the colony, both under the Dutch and the English, acting as commander at the Whorekill and as a magistrate for many years. He located land under the Dutch, which was confiscated, and afterwards obtained land from the English, some of which is still held by the family. He took up a large tract of land in what is now St. George's Hundred, extending from St. Augustine Creek to St. George's Creek, and from the Delaware River westward to the King's Road. He also obtained a large tract in the northern part of New Castle Hundred, on the river and at the mouth of the Christians, where he lived and died. Some of his sons settled at the latter place, and their descendants held portions of the property till 1880, when they sold to the Lobdell Car-Wheel Company. The tract in St. George's was resurveyed to his sons as follows: to Hermanus Alrichs, February 22, 1682, 1027 acres on Delaware River between Great Creek (a small stream emptying into the Delaware) and St. Augustine Creek, the latter being the southern boundary; to Sigfriedus, Wessels and Jacobus Alrichs, September 24, 1702, 2048 acres from the Delaware to the King's Road, between St. George's and Great Creeks. On December 31, 1733, Peter Alrichs was in possession of 127 acres opposite Reedy Island, and embracing Port Penn and St. Augustine Landing. A portion of this land, six hundred feet on the river and six hundred feet inland, including what is commonly called the "Row-ground" and lying north of "Alrich's landing-place" was conveyed April 16, 1774, by Peter and John Alrichs, to Luke Morris, Robert White and William Morrell, wardens of the port of Philadelphia. They were appointed under an act of Assembly of Pennsylvania to erect piers upon the premises for the use of ships traversing the river. The piers remained until 1884, when they were removed. The Alrichs in the State of Delaware are descendants of Peter Alrichs.

A portion of the territory originally owned by Alrichs was covered with a swamp, extending from St. George's Creek and known as Doctor's Swamp. In this vicinity, before the land was re-surveyed to Alrichs, certain other persons settled and took up land. On May 28, 1675, there was surveyed for Dr. Thomas Spry (who was also a lawyer, and the first one admitted to practice in the courts of New Castle), a tract of one hundred and sixty acres. It was known as "Doctor's Commons," and was on a creek called "Doctor's Run," now entirely dried up and forgotten. On February 2, 1680, he sold it to Henry Vanderberg, who conveyed it, March 11, 1688, to Robert Ashton, who had lived on it for some time. On the 24th of December, 1708, he received a warrant for nine hundred acres, lying between Little St. George's and St. George's Creeks, with Doctor's Run and Doctor's Swamp in the rear. This land is now in the possession of William S. Lawrence, Z. A. Pool, Z. P. Longland, the heirs of William Kennedy, the heirs of James T. Carpenter and the heirs of Wilson Greene. On October 15, 1675, Edmund Cantwell surveyed for Patrick Carr two hundred acres of land on a neck between St. George's and Arenty's Creeks (St. Augustine). This land adjoined Doctor's Swamp, and was conveyed by Carr and Oalla Janson, March 28, 1679. The tract passed through several hands, and June 11, 1729, was purchased by Robert Crow, a surveyor. By him it was conveyed, October 27, 1797, to William Hill, the grandfather of John D. Dilworth, the present owner.
NEW CASTLE COUNTY.

The house was built at a very early date, and from its construction plainly shows that it was built at a time when protection from the Indians was a necessity. The original windows, two of which remain unaltered, are no larger than loopholes. In the basement there is a vault, and from it proceeds a secret passage in the direction of the river; where it leads to is unknown, as it has been walled up many years. A short distance away, on a farm now occupied by Edward Pleasanton, are peculiarly shaped holes, which suggest that they were constructed by the Indians as a rendezvous, hiding-place and winter-quarters.

The ancestors of the Delaware Dilworths went to Ireland with Cromwell, and in the North of Ireland Captain John Dilworth was born about 1750; he came to America when quite a young man, and soon after married Hannah Alrichs, a descendant of Peter Alrichs, above mentioned.

Being a loyal English officer, Captain Dilworth commanded the ship which led the British fleet to Philadelphia in 1779. In passing Fort Mifflin his vessel was severely riddled by cannon-balls, and he received a bad wound in the leg. Knowing the need of his presence, he declined to obey the surgeon's orders to "go below" till the fleet was safely moored at Philadelphia, when he was carried ashore and was ill some time. Captain Dilworth's wife died young, leaving an infant son; he soon after went to Florida, and married again; many descendants of this marriage are now living in that State.

John Alrichs Dilworth, was born near Macdonough, Delaware, in 1778, and in his mother's death was adopted by her sister, a Mrs. Stockton. He was twice married,—first to Elizabeth Hill, of Smyrna, who left one son; secondly, to the widow Jefferies, by whom he had one daughter. He was a gentleman of the old school, and noted for his genial hospitality. He died when about forty years of age.

John Ducha Dilworth was born November 1779, near Macdonough. Like his father, he lost his mother in infancy. His family having bought the property now known as the Dilworth farm, near Fort Penn, he was reared there by his maternal grandmother, receiving his education first at the village school, afterwards under private tutors, and has spent the greater portion of his active life as a farmer. He married, in 1823, Eliza Francis Gordon, of Philadelphia, who died in 1878. They had fourteen children, eleven living, to maturing age. Eight sons were married, of whom six are still living. Rebecca, one of the three daughters, married Rev. I. W. K. Handy; is now a widow, living with her son in St. Paul, Minn.

John D. Dilworth was elected to the State Legislature in 1830, and served till 1839,—four years in each House,—was nominated to Congress in 1846, but defeated by a small majority by the present Judge John W. Houston. In 1848 he was nominated Presidential elector as the friend of General Cass; in 1850 he was appointed clerk of the court of New Castle County, which office he held five years. In 1860, having purchased land in Sussex County, Del., he removed thither; and in 1873 moved again to Worcester County, Md., where he still resides, in his eighty-ninth year, enjoying good health and retaining all his faculties.

Thomas F. Dilworth, fifth son of John D. Dilworth, and only member of the family now residing in Delaware, was born January 16, 1865, in the family homestead, in which he has always lived. Attending the public schools during the winter months constituted his education till his eighteenth year; the three winters following he attended New Castle Institute, spending a part of his time during the third year in the office of his father, then clerk of the peace for New Castle County.

Mr. Dilworth had in very early life taken part in the farm-work, and, after assisting his father till the end of his term, he took entire charge of the property, and has devoted his whole energy since to the business of farming. The homestead farm had run down till it scarcely produced bread for the family, but under his management it compares well with the best in the neighborhood. He early began investigating the values of and using artificial manures; engaging in large and small fruit cultivation, especially in peach-growing. Of this fruit he obtained good crops for a number of years.

In 1876 Mr. Dilworth bought the land of Dr. D. Stewart, extending from the Dilworth farm to the river, and also set in peaches, making about two hundred acres in that fruit; since then he has been farming the whole tract, about five hundred acres, as one farm; has erected dairy buildings, stabilizing for fifty cows and all necessary appliances of a first-class dairy, including the wholesale manufacture of ice cream in summer; ice-houses and ice-pond being needful adjuncts.

Raising vegetables on a large scale, poor markets resulted in the erection of a canning factory, whose capacity he extended to offer his neighbors a market for their stock. Several hundred thousand cans are packed each year, and the business is growing. His idea is to connect with farming everything properly belonging with it.

Mr. Dilworth uses machinery where it is practicable; as grinding food for stock, sawing wood, rails, posts, boxes for the factory, etc., and buys, as well as sells, by wholesale, often furnishing his laborers with supplies at a small advance.

He has never held other than local public offices, not caring to enter at all into political life. He has been a member of the Presbyterian Church for many years. Mr. Dilworth married, in 1864, Henrietta Maria Stewart, daughter of Dr. D. Stewart and granddaughter of Judge Earle, of the Superior Court of Maryland. They have had three children—Eliza Margaret (who died young), Henrietta Tilghman and Rebecca Francis.

The tract "Chelsey," on the south side of St.
George's Creek, being the first firm neck of land, was granted November 5, 1675, to Ann Whale, widow of George Whale. The tract embraced three hundred acres, and was adjoining the land granted to Doctor Spry. The tract was sold by George Moore, son of Ann Whale, to John Ogle, who sold to John Test. The property was next owned by Marmaduke Randall. On the 6th of January, 1861, R. D. Andrews and Jacob Aersen petitioned the court to grant them this tract, showing that it was forfeited by reason of non-compliance with the regulations, which require that the property be seated and improved within five years. The petition was granted and warrant promised if they complied with the regulations.

On November 5, 1675, "Hampton," a tract of three hundred acres, was patented to John Ogle by Governor Andros. It was on the south side of St. George's Creek and adjoined land of Ann Whale. This was conveyed September 15, 1691, to Edward Gibbs, and in 1728 one hundred and sixty-six acres of it was sold to John Elliott. The present owner is William McMullen.

In 1876 George Ashton surveyed a part of the farm now belonging to the heirs of Christopher Vandergrift. It extended northward to Doctor's Swamp.

Andrew Eliason is a retired farmer of St. George's Hundred. His grandparents, Andrew and Lydia Eliason, came to this country from England, before the War of the Revolution, and settled in Delaware. Seven children were born to them, viz.: Susannah, Joshua, William, Dorrington, Rachel, Andrew, and Esther. William, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born October 7, 1780. He was married four times,—first to a Miss Bunker, who died soon after her marriage without leaving issue; second to Ann Evans, by whom he had three children, viz.: Joshua, Mary Ann, and Andrew, the subject of this sketch; third to Sarah Douglass, the mother of John D. and James J. Eliason, and fourth to Ann Williams, the mother of his youngest child, Charles T. Eliason. He was a quiet, industrious farmer, respected and beloved by all who knew him. He died suddenly January 7, 1827, at the early age of forty-six.

In the latter part of his life he had incurred heavy losses in consequence of having become surety for his friends, and upon his death his administrator, under the then existing laws, sold all of his property, including even his personal effects for the payment of the same. Packed in an old leather-covered trunk, his wardrobe was offered at public sale, and Andrew, then a lad of sixteen years, became the purchaser.

This trunk is still in his possession, a cherished memento of a revered father and of the disastrous period in which he closed a life of honorable endeavor.

This time of hardship and trial, which attended the close of the father's life, was the beginning of a career of signal prosperity for the son.

Andrew Eliason, the subject of this sketch, was born April 30, 1810, in St. George's Hundred, not far from Mt. Pleasant. His mother, Ann Evans, died while he was an infant. Left a penniless orphan at the early age of sixteen, and thrown at once upon his own resources, with no liberal educational advantages, and nothing to rely upon but himself, his prosperous and useful life is a living illustration of what courage and self-reliance can accomplish, when joined with integrity and honesty of purpose.

Andrew's early life was spent on the farm where he now lives. Before his father's death he worked on the farm and helped attend to the stock in the winter. Very little attention seems to have been paid to his education at this period, for he has often been heard to remark that until after his father's death he had hardly seen the inside of a school-house.

After the death of his father, in 1827, Andrew found a good friend in Mr. James T. Bird, by whom he was employed to drive teams upon the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, then in course of completion. He went to live with Mr. and Mrs. Bird in 1827, and continued with them two years, driving teams upon the canal for ten months in the year, working early and late. The other two months of the year he spent in school, for he seems thus early to have realized the necessity and advantage of an education. He often speaks in terms of affection of Mr. and Mrs. Bird, who were to him indeed a foster father and mother.

At the expiration of the two years Mr. Bird found his services so valuable that he employed him to manage and take charge of his farm, from which he then removed. By carefully saving his money the young farmer and manager was able, by March 1, 1838, to purchase the stock and farming implements belonging to his employer, and continued on as the tenant. On the 21st of the same month he was married to Miss Lydia Ann Cann, daughter of William Cann, of Glasgow, Pensacola Hundred. This proved to be one of the wisest steps of his life, for in her he gained a prudent, faithful, self-denying companion and helper, to whose assistance and counsel not a little of his success in life is due.

In 1838 Mr. Eliason purchased; of his two half-brothers, John D. and James J. Eliason, the heirs of their mother, Sarah Douglass, the farm on which he now lives, and on which he has lived continuously since he purchased it.

He has been, all his life, engaged in farming, to the practical details of which he has given the closest attention. Every step of his life shows evidence of sound judgment and strong common sense. Commerce as a driver of teams on the canal, he has advanced steadily forward, and, by the exercise of the sterling virtues of industry and frugality, has become the owner of four unencumbered farms, embracing nearly nine hundred acres, in St. George's and Pensacola Hundreds.

The old dwelling, purchased with his farm in 1888, and to which he took his young family, was exchanged in 1856 for the commodious mansion in which he now makes his home.
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

In the last part of his life he bad ...
NEW CASTLE COUNTY.

In politics Mr. Eliason was a strong Democrat until the opening of the Civil War, his last vote for a Democratic President being cast for John C. Breckinridge. During the war he was a pronounced Union man, and since that time he has been an ardent Republican and sincere advocate of a protective tariff. He has been three times elected a member of the House of Representatives of the State of Delaware—first in 1864, again in 1866 and again in 1880. While there he was distinguished for his sound views of the real needs of the people and his good judgment upon all public measures. The above is well illustrated by a little incident of the session of 1867: A prominent member of the House came in one morning just as the ayes and nays were being called upon an important bill. As he entered the room he heard his name called, and not knowing what the bill under consideration was, he quickly turned to Mr. Eliason, who was standing near, with the question: "How did you vote, Andrew? You are always right." Being told "aye," he, without hesitation, cried out: "Mr. Speaker, I vote 'aye.'" In the session of 1867 Mr. Eliason originated and introduced into the House of Representatives the first bill securing property rights to married women in Delaware (see House Journal 1867, p. 353), and to his efforts is chiefly due the credit of so moulding public opinion as to secure the final passage of the act. On its introduction the bill met with considerable opposition, particularly in the Senate. It was urged that if the old fiction that husband and wife were one person in law were destroyed, and the common law right of the husband to the property of the wife were invaded, it would produce such discord in the family that it would thenceforth be impossible for husband and wife to live together. Against this Mr. Eliason pleaded the hardship and injustice of a law that took from feeble woman all rights of property upon marriage, and so often gave it to a worthless or improvident husband. Upon his motion three hundred copies of the bill were ordered to be printed. These, by his direction, were distributed all over the State. The bill finally passed the House, but was killed in the Senate. The distribution of the copies of the bill throughout the State, however, created such a public sentiment in its favor that at the next session of the Legislature the bill became a law. To his efforts while in the Legislature are also in great measure due the passage of the law that prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors in Delaware on election day—one of the best laws on the statute-books.

Mr. Eliason is a man of strong religious convictions, having been, from early manhood, a stanch Presbyterian. He has been a member of the board of trustees of the Forest Presbyterian Church of Middletown from its organization, in 1850, and is the only living link connecting the present Presbyterian Church organization at Middletown with the old Forest Church congregation. He was elected a trustee of the old Forest Church in 1840, and is the only surviving member of the board of trustees then chosen.

He is one of the directors of the People's National Bank of Middletown, and has been since its organization.

He is a man of quiet demeanor, modest and approachable. In person tall and erect, though past three-score and ten years. He has eight children and has lived to see seventeen grandchildren.

His children are Mrs. Mary A. Sanborn, widow of the late Dr. Albert H. Sanborn, of Leipsic, Delaware; Mrs. Sallie E. Houston, wife of William H. Houston, Esq., a retired farmer of Middletown, Delaware; Mrs. Lydia E. Rothwell, wife of John M. Rothwell, a farmer near Middletown; Mrs. Catherine Naudain, wife of George W. W. Naudain, a merchant of Middletown; Andrew S. Eliason, a farmer near Summit Bridge, Delaware; James T. and Lewis E. Eliason, lumber and coal merchants, at New Castle, Delaware; and John Franklin Eliason, who is a dealer in merchandise at Mount Pleasant, Delaware, and takes the active oversight of his father's home farm. Of the grandchildren, two young men have reached their majority and are in business. One, Andrew E. Sanborn Esq., is an attorney at Wilmington, associated with Levi C. Bird, Esq., a son of Mr. Eliason's early patron and employer. The other, William Rothwell, is in the employ of James T. Eliason & Brother, at New Castle, Delaware.

In his home circle Mr. Eliason is seen at his best, for there the virtues of his private character most conspicuously shine. Best still with the companionship of the wife of his youth, (with whom he has recently celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his marriage), he has lived to see his large family grow up, successfully start in business, marry, and settle within a radius of fifteen miles from his fireside. Viewing with complacency the mountains of difficulty over which he has successfully climbed, he, in quiet retirement, on his own broad acres, is now enjoying the peaceful fruits of a virtuous and well-spent life. His character may be summed up in a few words, as one of the best types of a self made man, with the courage of his convictions, of the strictest integrity and honesty of purpose, a good citizen, a faithful friend, and an affectionate husband and father.

The territory embraced in this hundred was all taken up by Augustine Herman, of Bohemia Manor, in 1671, under a claim of title from Lord Baltimore, and extended from the Delaware River, between St. George's and Appoquinimink Creeks, westward to the eastern bounds of Bohemia Manor. This large tract was called "St. Augustine Manor." The title was not valid and was soon after abandoned, at least as far as the disputed territory was concerned. He then made application to the authorities at New York for several hundred acres of land lying on the Delaware on the north side of Appoquinimink Creek, and south of St. Augustine's Creek. His rights in this warrant he transferred to his sons, Ephraim and Casparus. The land was surveyed by Captain Cantwell, December 1, 1675, and contained four hundred acres. This tract had been granted by Commander John Carr to the Hermans in 1673, but the Dutch soon after seized the territory. The grant, however, was renewed by Commander Peter Alerichs, February 5, 1674, and a patent granted by Governor Anthony Colve, February 16th of the same year. This tract descended to Ephraim Augustine Herman, who, on August 12, 1713, sold it to Hans Hanson, Bernard Joosten, Johannes Vanheken, William Hanson, John Hanson, Isaac Gooding and Johannes Swart. It remained joint property until February 17, 1717, when they released to each other. Hans Hanson received a tract called "Long Neck," which by his will, bearing date January 26, 1738, he devised to his son Philip together with his dwelling and two other tracts of fast land and some marsh land. Philip Hanson sold his tract to Cornelius Carty, October 80, 1756. Cornelius Carty also purchased the portion of John Gooding which was sold by the sheriff November 18, 1766. He also purchased a large quantity of land in this vicinity which he sold at different times. In 1762 to Gertrude Rothwell; 1764 to John Jones and John Hanson; 1767 to William Hanson and Isaac Gooding, and November 18, 1766, one hundred and fifty acres near Silver Run to Lawrence Higgins, who, February 16, 1775, conveyed the tract to Samuel Smith. The four hundred acre grant of Herman's is now probably owned by E. R. Norny, Edward Brugh and John Bailey. On E. R. Norny's property is a fishery which has been there for at least one hundred years.

A warrant dated 23d of February, 1682, was granted to Casparus Herman for a resurvey of his land and plantation near Reeden Island, according to the bounds of the English and Dutch patents. It was resurveyed June 24, 1686, and was bounded eastward with the Delaware River, westward by the King's Road, which leads to Apoquinimink, north by St. Augustine's Creek, south by the main stream of Apoquinimink, with a branch called Skunk Kill, containing in all three thousand two hundred and nine acres. Also a tract above the plantation called "Poplar's Neck," eight hundred and fifty-eight acres on the south side of Arrent's Creek or Kill (St. Augustine).

Ephraim, the eldest son of Augustine Herman, of Bohemia Manor, held various offices under the jurisdiction of the New Castle County Court. He was clerk of the court, receiver of quit rents, surveyor and venue master from 1673 until 1684, when upon the death of his father he succeeded to the estates. He moved to Bohemia Manor, where he died about 1690. Casparus, the second son, then living on his plantation in St. George's Hundred, at the decease of his brother moved to Cecil County, whence he was sent to represent his district in the Assembly in 1694. The property of Ephraim Herman was sold to different persons, part to Griffith Jones in 1685. In 1691 the widow of Ephraim Herman received a deed from the administrator for three lots in New Castle and the interest on a four hundred acre tract held with Johannes De Haes and an eighteen hundred acre tract on Duck Creek. Casparus Herman held two hundred acres of land with Captain Edward Cantwell under warrant of March 2, 1681, situated on both sides of Drawyer's Creek, one hundred acres on each side. "It being for ye use of a water-mill which said Cantwell and herman intende to erect on ye said branch for ye public good of ye Inhabitants." Whether the mill was built or not is unknown. If so every trace or record of it or its site have passed into oblivion. The common opinion that the mill owned by William H. Voshall & Bro. is the one referred to, as that was built at a later day by John Vance. He also inherited his father's and brother's estates. In 1679 he sold one hundred and ten acres of land on north side of "Arent's Kill" to John Blake, who, May 3, 1680, sold to Huybert Laurensen, of "Swanwyck," (above New Castle). This was part of a tract of three hundred and thirty acres which he took up March 25, 1676, and was called "ye good neighborhood." It was on the northeast side of Apoquinimink Creek.

A large part of the land lying on the Delaware and along the Apoquinimink about 1707-08 came into the possession of Samuel Vance, who settled upon it, and from him the place known for many years as Vance's Neck takes its name. The principal owners of the land in Vance's Neck at the present time are: Z. A. Pool, James M. Vandegrift, James Gordon and George Burgess. Reedy Island Neck north of Vance's Neck, and extending from Macdonough to the Delaware River between St. Augustine Creek and Silver Run, is now in the possession of Z. A. Pool, Leonard G. Vandegrift, C. J. Vandegrift, Richard Eaton, Wilson E. Vandegrift, Leonard G. Vandegrift, Sr., and Harry Walter. Samuel Vance also became the owner of lands farther up the stream. He conveyed one hundred and seventy acres to his son John, May 30, 1793. John also purchased, May 30, 1798, a tract of land known as "Lackford Hall," of Garrett and Anthony Dushane, and received a patent for it March 24, 1740. This was a portion of six hundred and twenty acres of land patented to John Taylor, March 26, 1684, and situated on the north side of Drawyer's Creek, between Taylor's Branch and Snowing's Branch, and was known as "Taylor's Neck." Adjoining on the west, and overlapping this tract, were two hundred and fifty acres of land patented to Walter Rowle, 1st of Tenth Month, 1684, known as "Rowle's Sepulchre." A triangular piece of land called the Trap, containing sixty-one acres of land, adjoins "Lackford Hall," and is on both sides of the King's road. It is not ascertained by whom it was originally taken up, but it was re-surveyed to Anthony Dushane on warrant of September 17, 1740, and again August 30, 1750, to James Macdonough, to whom it was conveyed by Dushane, November 18, 1748, as part of one hundred and twenty-seven acres. On it was a "new tavern house," which after the Revolution was known as the "General Knox," and is still standing and now in occupancy of William H. Loffard. James Macdonough came from Ireland about 1725. He married Lydia Laroux and had five sons and a daughter. One son was Commodore Thomas Macdonough who made himself famous on Lake Champlain in 1814. He was born at the "Trap" or Macdonough as it is now known. This tract of land is now owned by Z. A. Pool. On it is the private burying-ground of the Macdonoughs. Tomb-stones mark the last resting-place of James Macdonough, who died January 18, 1792, aged eighty years; Lydia, his wife, who departed this life August 21, 1764, aged thirty-five years; Thomas Macdonough, who died November 30, 1798, aged forty-eight years; Mary M., his wife, whose death occurred November 1, 1792, aged forty-one years and Bridget Macdonough, who departed this life August 4, 1776, at the age of twenty-four.

A large tract of land in the northern part of the hundred, west of the river lands, was originally occupied by Swedes who were there in 1675. Their names were Dirck Williamson, Dirck Laurensen and Claes Karsens. For some reason they were dispossessed, and on the 3d of May, 1686, Edward Green took up a tract for two thousand five hundred acres, which upon survey, a few days later, proved to be two thousand seven hundred and forty-two acres. This land he retained until August 21, 1691, when he sold it to John Scott, from whom Scott's Run takes its name. It was bounded on the east by the Hermon and Alrichs lands, and on the north by St. George's Creek. John Scott died, leaving an only son and child, Walter Scott, who, May 16, 1707, conveyed the entire tract to Matthias Van Beber, who, the same day, transferred it to Andrew Hamilton in the interest of himself, George Yeates and David French. He died before the division was made, and the transfers were made by his son, James Hamilton, who, at the request of George Yeates, conveyed a one-third interest to John Inglis, July 4, 1745, and December 4, 1746, conveyed the one-third interest of David French to John Moland. The three—Hamilton, Moland and Inglis—united, November 16, 1750, in conveying the greater part of the two thousand seven hundred and forty-two acres to David Thomas, who also bought of the sheriff William Golden, February 16, 1753, thirteen and a quarter acres of land on which was a fulling-mill. The thirteen acres were patented December 12, 1744, to Isaac Dushane who sold the tract May 14, 1750 to Alexander McAlpine. The quarter acre, also on Scott's run was sold March 12, 1716, by Quin Anderson to John Stewart with liberty "to build or cause to be erected or built a Fulling mill and to dig a race for the use of the said mill, and to draw as much Land as shall be need full and required," which liberty he took. This also came to McAlpine, who became involved financially and was closed out by the sheriff. This mill was near Fiddlers Bridge, and descended to David W. Thomas, by whom it was sold to Jacob Vandegrift, on the 3d of April, 1817. On March 15, 1813, Curtis Bowman became the owner. The land on which the mill stood is now owned by George W. Townsend. It was last successfully operated during the ownership of McDowell.

David Thomas in 1761, owned a mill seat in St. Georges, which was owned by the family until the Delaware and Chesapeake Canal was constructed when the property was bought by the Company.

On April 1, 1749, six hundred and twenty-five acres of Green's Forest were sold by some of the proprietors to Abraham Evans. David Thomas, who owned the greater part of the land warranted to Edward Green, had two sons, Enoch and David. The former studied medicine and was heir to the large possessions of his father. After his death the property passed to his son Nathan, who called the place "the Plains." A portion of it, now known as the "Idalia Manor," is owned by Mrs. John W. Osborne, who was a daughter of Nathan Thomas. In 1866 a portion of the tract was sold to Francis S., William A. and John McWhorter, by whom it was conveyed to Richard T. Cann, the present owner.

In 1671 Gov. Francis Lovelace patented to Jau Sieriks three hundred acres of upland and some adjacent marsh. This tract was known as "High Hook," and during the Revolutionary War belonged to John V. Hyatt, who was taken prisoner from here by the British. It is now in the possession of James M. Vandegrift.

On April 17, 1667, there was patented to Garret Otto two hundred and seventy-two acres of land between two of the branches of Drawyer's Creek. This farm is now owned by William Polk, who inherited from his grandfather, William Polk.

In 1685 there was surveyed for Daniel Smith the farm now owned by Isaac Woods, known as "Strawberry Hill."

In 1684 Amos Nichols surveyed three hundred acres, which included a portion of the farm now owned by George Houston. It was at one time owned by Thomas Hyatt, and at a later period by James Wilson. The portion of Bohemia Manor in the State of Delaware, originally owned by the Hermons, is now principally in the possession of John P. Cochran, George S. Brady and Manlove D. Wilson.

The Vandykes came to St. George's Hundred about 1715, and shortly afterwards purchased a tract of land in Dutch Neck, known as "Berwick." They also purchased, in 1719, two hundred acres of land on Doctor's Swamp, at that time in the possession of John Vanhekke. This land was patented November 5, 1675, to Ann Whale, whose son, George Moore, sold it to James Crawford. In this portion of St. George's Nicholas Vandyke was born in 1740. "Berwick" remained for many years in the possession of this family, the several members of which were prominent in the history of this hundred. It is now the property of Arthur Coleburn.
The Vandegrifts, an extensive and prominent family in this hundred, came here about 1708. Leonard Vandegrift, an elder in Drawyer's Church in 1711, was, doubtless, the ancestor of the Vandegrifts in this neighborhood. Leonard and Christopher are family names. The homestead of the Vandegrifts is now owned by Eli Biddle.

James M. Vandegrift, a farmer of Macdonough, New Castle County, was born June 15, 1813, near the place where he now resides. His father was Jacob Vandegrift, who was also a farmer of the same county, a man of great integrity, a member of the Presbyterian Church, and a trusted representative of his fellow-citizens for years in the State Legislature. He died, very highly respected, February 1, 1845, in the eighty second year of his age. The Vandegrifts were originally from Holland, and came to this country among the earliest settlers. The grandfather was Christopher Vandegrift, a farmer of St. George's Hundred, and his ancestors were owners of land from their earliest history in America. His mother was Jane McWhorter, of New Castle County. She was a devoted Christian and a member of the Presbyterian Church. She died November 20, 1829, leaving five surviving children. Mr. Vandegrift received his education at Wilmington and Middletown, having the benefit of a select school first at Middletown, taught by Rev. Joseph Wilson, and afterwards under the tutorship of Professor Belknap, for two sessions in Wilmington. At the age of eighteen he returned home and engaged in farming for two years, with his father on the home place.

He then began agricultural life on his own account at the paternal homestead known as "Retirement," a farm of two hundred acres of land near Macdonough. He followed, quite successfully, the business of farming until 1857, when he removed to the town of Odessa.

In 1860 Mr. Vandegrift removed to "Elm Grange," an estate containing two hundred acres near Macdonough. He rebuilt the house and completed a beautiful and substantial residence for his family. He has devoted his energies chiefly to the raising of cereals and stock, but has given some attention to fruit culture. He owns some of the best improved lands in New Castle County, and is the owner of large amounts of real estate. Mr. Vandegrift has never aspired to political position, and, although holding well defined opinions, is not a partisan. He joined the Presbyterian Church at St. George's in 1842, under the pastorate of Rev. Jas. C. Howe. He has been for many years an elder in that church, and sustains that relation at this time, January, 1888. He served as a trustee of the same church for many years. Mr. Vandegrift was married August 21, 1844, to Miss Mary A. E., daughter of John Cochran, of Middletown. His wife was a member of the Presbyterian Church from early life, and a devoutly pious woman. She died December 14, 1868, in the forty-seventh year of her age, leaving the following children: Olivia C., wife of George W. Dennison, a merchant in Little Rock, Arkansas; Lina, now the wife of Col. B. S. Johnston, of Little Rock, Arkansas, who is associated with a partner, Mr. Dodge, councillor for the Iron Mountain Railroad; and Margaret P., now wife of William P. Mifflin, Esq., a citizen of Middletown, Delaware. Mr. Vandegrift was married a second time, October 31, 1872, to Miss Angeline C., daughter of Mr. Joseph Cleaver, a prominent merchant of Port Penn, and sister of Mr. Henry Cleaver, who succeeds his father in business, and of Mr. Joseph Cleaver, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits near Port Penn.

Leonard G. Vandegrift is the son of Christopher and Lydia Vandegrift, and was born February 9, 1818, near Port Penn, in St. George's Hundred, New Castle County, Delaware, and has always lived in sight of his birth-place. After getting what education the common schools afforded, he went to the Middletown Academy, which at that day, under the management of Rev. Joseph Wilson, was an educational institution of considerable strength and standing.

He commenced farming within a year or two after leaving the Middletown Academy, and was engaged in that business until his youngest son attained his majority, when he gave up the original homestead "Bashley" and most of the land belonging to the present homestead "Geraldville," to him.

Mr. Vandegrift has been three times married. His first wife was a Janvier, of which marriage two children survive, a daughter and a son; his second wife was a Dilworth of which marriage, three sons survive; and his third and present wife was a daughter of his uncle, Abram Vandegrift. There are no issue of the last marriage.

The Vandegrift family was one of the earliest families to settle in St. George's Hundred, being undoubtedly of Dutch descent and so referred to by local historians.

The earliest account of their connection with Delaware is probably that in Hazard's Annals of Delaware and Pennsylvania, page 304, where it is stated that Director Stuyvesant of New Amsterdam, now New York, appointed certain men, among them one, Paulus Lindert Van De Graff, old burgomaster of Amsterdam, to go to New Amstel, now New Castle, to inquire into the murder of certain savages on the South, now Delaware River. This was in the spring of 1660.

The earliest land record which is accessible, reaches back only to 1708. By a patent from Thomas Penn and William Penn of one hundred and seventy-nine acres to Leonard Vandegrift, it is recited that six hundred acres in St. George's were, on the 16th day of March, 1708, granted by the Commissioners of Property of William Penn to Jacob Vandegrift, Daniel Cormick and Albertus Vanzant.

This grant was in all probability in pursuance of an order made by Governor Lovelace, after the dispos-of low land lying in the Penn, which, in 1749,
as and one acres was warried and session of the Dutch settlement by the English, to the effect that those settlers "on the Delaware, as well as elsewhere, who hold the lands by patent or ground brief of Dutch tenure, and those who have none shall, with all convenient speed apply with or for them, or be liable to penalty by law."

An examination of the old records at Harrisburg and Albany, especially the latter, would undoubtedly furnish a valuable history of the Vande grift family.

There is a will on file in the office of the register of wills for New Castle County, made April 12, 1758, by one, Jacob Vande grift, who speaks of himself as an "old" man, and this is probably the original patentee above referred to. He had two sons, Leonard and Jacob, to whom, inter alia, he bequeathed his "silver buttons to be equally divided between them," and to one of his daughters, Christiana Atkinson, "as much striped holland as would make her a complete gown."

It is hard to say whether the Leonard Vande grift to whom the one hundred and seventy-nine acres were patented was a brother or a son of Jacob, because the county records show two Leonard Vande grifts in existence at this time and also a Christopher Vande-grift.

Leonard, the patentee, died four years before Jacob, in 1750, and those one hundred and seventy-nine acres, now known as the Biddle's Corner farm, were devised to Christopher, and have remained in the Vande grift family ever since, being now owned by Thomas J. Craven whose mother was a Vande grift.

Leonard Vande grift was one of the substantial men of his day and took an active part in the Legislature of 1808 and 1809. His son, Christopher, above referred to, the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, lived to be eighty-five years old and died June 8th, 1816.

The family have always been closely identified with the welfare and management of Drawyer's Presbyterian Church and with the St. George's Presbyterian Church, and have also always taken an active interest in the politics of their State and County, often filling important places of trust and honor.

None of them, however, will leave behind a better record for uprightness and integrity than the one of whose life this is, in part, a short account. The public records bear witness to the confidence of the people among whom he has spent his life and their election of him, at various times, to offices of trust and honor, is a further manifestation of their belief in his sound judgment and integrity. He has always been a Democrat and as such, was elected State Senator in 1871 and 1873, which was probably the most important public office he ever filled.

During the leisure time which has so deservedly come to him within the past few years, he has been much of a traveller, and has visited most of the States of the Union. He is now, in all probability, the oldest member of his family, but a careful and temperate life have caused the years to rest most lightly upon him.

Reedy Island is a tract of low land lying in the Delaware River opposite Port Penn, which, in 1749, contained one hundred and fifty-two acres and one hundred and twenty-eight perches. This was warranted October 25, 1749, to Jonathan Woodland and surveyed for him the following October. On February 17, 1756, he sold it to Charles McKay. The island is now owned partly by the State of Delaware and partly by the United States, and is only used for state and government purposes.

On June 22, 1676, Joseph Chew conveyed to Johannes De Haes four hundred acres of land on Appoquinimink Creek. This was the "Walnut Landing" tract and was afterwards owned by Henry and John Vaulevinig by whom it was sold to Thomas Noxon. It is now in the possession of Merri N. Willits and Horatio W. Pharo.

On August 8, 1684, there was warranted to George Geady a tract of two hundred acres on St. George's Creek between Joy and Crystal Run. This land is now owned by Mrs. L. G. Clark.

In 1684, there was patented to John Walker and Joseph More one hundred and ten acres called "Mill Neck," on which there was a mill on Drawyer's Creek. No further record of this tract has been found.

The following is a list of the taxables of St. George's Hundred in the year 1804. Those marked with a star (*) own a home and lot.

ROADS.—The earliest road in St. George's Hundred was laid out in 1660 and was known as "Herman's cart road." It extended from Bohemia Manor to the Appoquinimink Creek, near the present site of Odessa. The next roads of importance were the upper and lower "King's Roads," laid out in 1762 and still in use, the one passing through Odessa, and the other Middletown.

In 1780 a petition was made to the Levy Court for a road review from Port Penn and Augustin Landing to the county line. The road from Port Penn was to extend westward, passed the Quaker meeting-house at Hickory Grove, and at "Rockwell's House," it met the road from Augustine Landing, which passed through Macdonough, which at that time contained five houses, one of which was a hotel kept by James Macdonough. After the two roads united they extended past Mount Pleasant and crossed the Choptank road to the Maryland line. The Choptank was a very old road which formed the eastern boundary of Bohemia Manor.

Other roads have been constructed at various times, and at present it is impossible to find more convenient and excellent highways than are afforded by this hundred.

INDUSTRIES.—In 1788 John Vance purchased a tract of land, which he conveyed to his father, Samuel, September 21, 1759, and on which, at the latter date, was erected a grist-mill. On May 19, 1766, John Jones purchased the mill of Samuel Vance. On May 1, 1799, it was purchased by Ebenezer Rothwell of Sheriff Bines, who sold it as the property of John Burbage. On March 26, 1800, it was sold by Rothwell to William Vandegrift, who erected a new mill. It was next owned by John Cannon, who sold to Vandergrift and Eccles about 1845. They operated the mill until 1860, when they conveyed it to Charles F. Smith, by whom it was sold to William H. Voshall & Brother, in December, 1886. It was enlarged by them and fitted up with a complete set of rollers. It is now a three-and-a-half-story building, thirty by forty feet. It has a capacity of forty barrels in twenty-four hours. They are now prepared to do both merchant and custom work.

On May 13, 1789, Jonas Preston petitions the court for a condemnation of mill land. He says in his petition that he has a tract of land on the north side of the main branch of Drawyer's Creek and adjoining the same, whereon he doth intend to erect and build a "water grist-mill," and cannot secure sufficient water-rights without condemnation. A "condemnation of six acres on the stream, at the place desired, was granted. The mill was erected by him, and at his death devised to his wife, Ann, who afterwards married Isaac Eyre. By them it was conveyed to Robert McMurphy, August 1, 1776. On August 29, 1811, Samuel Thomas became the owner, and, after his death, it descended to his son, Samuel, and afterwards to David W. Thomas, who sold the mill to Israel Townsend. In 1824 it was operated by Cyrus Tat- nam, who also conducted it for some time afterwards. On May 26, 1868, it was sold by Sheriff Herbert as the property of Jno. B. Lewis, and purchased by James A. Barton. Barton, in October, 1873, sold the property to J. B. Deakyn, who conveyed it to J. Fletcher Deakyn, the present owner, in February, 1882. It is a two-story brick building, with basement and attic. The capacity is twenty-five barrels of flour and two hundred bushels of feed per day of twenty-four hours. A twenty-five horse-power engine is attached with which to run the mill when the water is low. The grinding is done by burr, and the products are mostly consumed in the vicinity.

In 1882 Parvis & Biggs commenced manufacturing phosphates near the depot. In the following year they erected a building, thirty-six by seventy feet, about a mile north of Middletown. In 1884 Nathaniel J. Williams purchased Biggs' share, and the business has since been conducted by Parvis & Williams. Several additions have been made and the present building is one hundred and thirty by one hundred and seventy feet. The present capacity of the manufactory is ten tons per day. Employment is given to eight men. The principal brands are "Delaware Wheat Grower," "Globe Guano," "Soluble Bone and Potato" and "Delaware Soluble Bone." They ship throughout Delaware and the adjoining States.

The brick-yard at Armstrong's Corner has been conducted for the past ten years by Benjamin Armstrong, who first opened it. Employment is given to three men for seven months per year. The average number manufactured during this time is 100,000, all of which find a home market.

CHURCHES.—Formerly there was a church on Pearce's Run, on the road leading from Odessa to St. George's, known as Asbury Methodist Episcopal Chapel. In it both white and colored people worshipped until Methodist Episcopal Churches were built in Port Penn and St. George's, when it was abandoned. The records of the church have been lost.

About 1822, Benjamin Boulden erected a building in the northwestern part of the hundred, to be used for church and school purposes. The eastern end of the building was for the school, and the remainder for the church. It was intended as a place of worship for all denominations. At his death he devised it to the trustees of the Second Baptist Church of Wilmington. The devise being void on account of its being made too short a time previous to his death, it vested in his heirs, when his sister, Mrs. Davis, knowing his wish, conveyed it to the trustees. Occasional services have been held in this building by the Baptists, and previous to the erection of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Summit Bridge regular services were held in it by the Methodists.

At the present time no religious organization worships in the building. School is held in the portion set aside for that purpose.

On April 23, 1871, a few of the active members of Forest Church opened a Sunday-school in a private room at Armstrong's Corner. The number of attendants, few at first, soon increased and gave encouragement to the work. The people in the vicinity became interested, and on July 22d of that year D. L. Dunning presented to the board of trustees the deed of Benjamin Armstrong and wife for a lot of land eighty feet square at Armstrong's Corner, for the purpose of erecting a building for a Sabbath-school. The corner-stone of the building was laid August 24th, and the house dedicated September 17, 1871. The prosperity of the Sunday-school led to the organization of a church on May 30, 1877. It was known as "Forest Second," but as it never had other than a feeble existence, it was abolished as a separate church in April, 1886. Since that time it has been conducted as a mission school of the Forest Church.

D. L. Dunning is the superintendent of the Sunday-school, with a membership of fifty-five.

SCHOOLS.—The residents of St. George's Hundred were not behind the inhabitants of the other hundreds in the establishment of schools. The advantages of a good education were as well known and highly appreciated by them as by any other class of people. Long before the public school system went into effect, private schools were held in private residences and improvised school-rooms. The names of William Jackson, James Nowland, John Dilworth, Mr. Dean and Mr. Pippin are remembered among the pioneer school-teachers of this hundred. Curtis B. Ellison is also known to have been one of the first teachers under the public-school system. Shortly after the passage of the act of 1829 new school-houses were erected, and old ones that had been used for private school purposes were converted into common schools, where whoever desired it might obtain knowledge without respect to their pecuniary condition. As a general rule, the law was received with favor by the inhabitants of this hundred. The old school-houses have in all cases been replaced with new ones, better adapted for imparting instruction. All advancements in school work have been recognized, and to-day an excellent education can be obtained in the common schools. As the necessity of the case has demanded it, the districts have been divided and extra schools created until at present there is no cause for complaint either as to the convenience of location or the advantages of the schools.
VILLAGES.—The land on which Mount Pleasant is situated was owned in 1705 by John Davids. It was owned during the Revolutionary War by William Bird, and descended to his daughters, Mrs. Buchanan and Mrs. Mary Scott. At an early date there was a hotel here kept by Zachariah Jones, but it has not been used as such for sixty years. The land on which the village is located is a water-shed, the waters west flowing into the Chesapeake, and the streams east into the Delaware. In 1845 there were four houses, all of which are now torn down. At present there is a railroad station, a post-office, two stores (kept respectively by J. F. Eliason and Mrs. Eliza Devereaux), a blacksmith and wheelwright-shop and thirteen residences. It is situated in the northwestern part of the hundred, on the line of the Delaware Railroad, from Wilmington to Middletown.

Armstrong's Corner is a small village situated between Middletown and Mount Pleasant. It contains a store kept by W. H. Science, a brick-yard, a Presbyterian Chapel, a wheelwright and blacksmith-shop and about twenty dwellings.

Macdonough, formerly called the "Trap," is a hamlet near the centre of the hundred. It occupies a portion of the "Trap" farm. It was so named in honor of Commodore Macdonough, who lived here. At one time there were three hotels here. The most famous one was kept by William and Patrick McConaughey, but has not been in existence for the past thirty years. The village now contains a post-office, a store (kept by Harrison Vandegrift), a wheelwright and blacksmith-shop, a school-house and about eight residences.

St. Augustine Piers is a famous summer resort and picnic-grounds. The hotel was first built in 1814 by Grier & Aiken, and operated for some years and then abandoned. It is a three-story brick building, forty by sixty feet. In 1863 Simeon Lord purchased the property. Since it has been in his possession a new dining-room, dancing pavilion, bar-room, wharf and one hundred bath-houses have been erected and the premises improved generally. It is conducted as a hotel, and has a good summer patronage. The steamer "Thomas Clyde" makes a daily trip between here and Philadelphia. Port Penn is three-quarters of a mile distant.

The post-office at Mount Pleasant was established about 1867. Harrison Vandegrift, the first post-master, was succeeded April 8, 1880, by J. Frank Eliason, the present incumbent. The office occupies a portion of his store-room.

PORT PENN GRANGE. No. 9. P. of H. was organized in the Hickory Grove School-house April 21, 1875, with a membership of thirty-one. The first officers of the society were: Master, Thomas F. Dilworth; Overseer, Joseph Cleaver; Lecturer, T. J. Craven; Chaplain, H. Price; Steward, A. O. Osborne; Assistant Steward, John McMullen; Treasurer, L. G. Vandegrift; Secretary, James McMullen.

The society met in the school-room for about a year, and then in a room in the house of George Cleaver, whence they moved to Port Penn in 1881. In 1884 they erected a half near the residence of James McMullen, about four miles from Port Penn. It is a two-story frame building, twenty-eight by forty feet, and cost twelve hundred dollars. The lodge is now in a flourishing condition, and numbers fifty members. It is officered at present as follows: Master, D. W. Corbit; Overseer, James McMullen; Secretary, Mrs. E. M. Dilworth; Treasurer, H. Price; Steward, D. C. Vail; Chaplain, G. W. Townsend.

MIDDLETOWN.

The land on which Middletown is situated, and the tract immediately to the north were taken up by Adam Peterson in 1679, who, on the 14th of March, 1688, also took out a warrant for two hundred acres on a neck called New Wells, between the branches of the head-waters of Drawyer's Creek. Upon his death the property appears not to have been divided, but was mainly in possession of Andrew Peterson, who died in January, 1741; and on March 29, 1742, Thomas Noxon, Jehu Curtis, John Finney, John Goodin and John McCoole were appointed to divide the property. Adam Peterson left two sons, Andrew and Adam, and a daughter, Hermansia, who married—Von Beiber and died comparatively young, leaving as children Jacob, Garrett, Andrew, Adam, Elinor and Elizabeth. In this division of 1742 these heirs of Hermansia Von Beiber received one-fifth of the estate. Andrew Peterson died in January, 1741, leaving a widow (his third wife), Hester, who subsequently became the wife of David Witherspoon, and who, in 1742, was appointed the guardian of the children of Andrew, who were Henry, Andrew, Catalina, Jacob, Ester and Mary. The remaining portion of the Adam Peterson lands was divided between Adam, the son of Adam, and the children of Andrew. Mary Peterson, the youngest daughter of Andrew, received in the division No. 7, a tract of two hundred and five acres, three acres of which were sold August 19, 1790, to Rev. Philip Reading. Henry Peterson, son of Andrew, became a physician and, June 13, 1790, sold part of his portion of his father's estate to Jesse Higgins, of Damascus Mills.

David Witherspoon, who married the widow of Andrew Peterson, settled upon the King's Road at the place now known as Middletown, where, in 1761, he built the old Middletown tavern and kept it until his death, two years later. The following petition to the court of New Castle in 1761 is interesting as coming from the people of the vicinity:

"Whereas there hath not heretofore been any publick Road from the Lower King's Road to Samuel Vance's Mill for the Inhabitants residing in the upper part of the above said hundred (St. George's) and below the said King's Road, nor from the upper King's Road to said Mill for such of the Inhabitants who reside that way; But only such by-paths as has from time to time been made use of, which is a very great Inconveniency for such of the Inhabitants as do frequent the said Mill to get their own grain ground or to transport their wheat thither for sale."

lands of William Golden and James Macdonough to the said mill and from thence to the upper Kings road near to the new meeting-house or upper part of David Witherspoon's plantation. The signers were William Whitsett, William Price, William Hannoway, Daniel McConnell, F. V. Bebber, David Witherspoon, George Van Yott, James Bryan, Charles Bryan, William Golden, Isaac Vandike, Jacob Peterson, Archibald Fowler, Thomas McGraw, James Piper, Jos. Macdonough, William Hanson, Richard Cantwell, John Hanson, Francis Thornton, Andrew Vance, Henry Van Bebber, John McCooele, Jr., Leonard King, Francis King, Samuel Smith, David Thomas, John Cruzan, David Stewart.

These names probably include all the leading landowners in the vicinity at that time. The road was allowed and laid out. It began at the "Trap" (Macdonough) and passed Vance's mill at the foot of the pond on Drawyer's Creek and to David Witherspoon's plantation at Middletown. Richard Cantwell lived at Cantwell's Bridge (Odessa), and Henry Van Bebber at Kirkwood, where was an old tannery occupied many years previous as well as later by the Van Bebbers. The mill owned by Samuel Vance in 1761 was originally the property of his son John, who built it after 1733, when he came into possession of the land. He sold it to his father September 21, 1759, who, on May 19, 1766, sold it to John Jones. About 1800 it passed to William Vandegrift and is now owned by William H. Voshall & Bro.

Middletown is mentioned in official records as early as 1771, in August of which year Jonas Preston owned the old Noxon grist-mill, on one of the branches of Appoquinimink Creek, and asked for the reopening of a road towards the place "now known by the name of Middletown," which road Benjamin Noxon had fenced up.

After the death of David Witherspoon his estate passed to his nephew, Thomas, who conducted the old Peterson tannery. Thomas married Susanna, daughter of Dr. Sluyter Bouchell, who was also a resident of Middletown. A large portion of the neighboring land became vested in Dr. Bouchell, who, November 5, 1790, sold to Jesse Higgins, of Damascus, the tract formerly belonging to Thomas Witherspoon. In 1816 there were only a few houses at the intersection of Main and Broad Streets within the present limits of the town, but the village began to grow, and in 1850 there were three hundred and sixty-eight inhabitants. Previous to the construction of the railroad the town was growing toward Odessa, principally on Main Street, but since that time it has extended to the railroad, and has spread itself on other streets than Main. One of the men most prominent in advancing local interests was Robert A. Cochran, who came to Middletown in 1837, and purchased the Middletown Hotel. This he improved and purchased other property, on which he erected buildings. The growth of the town since 1855 has been quite rapid, and in 1860 there were five hundred and twenty-three inhabitants. On February 12, 1861, Middletown was incorporated and granted municipal privileges. The board of control was vested in five commissioners who were given authority to improve the old streets and open new ones. The town as laid out by the commissioners is a rectangle, and extends half a mile each way on Main Street, east and west of Broad Street, and a quarter of a mile each way on Broad Street, north and south of Main Street. With the exception of a fire which occurred May 2, 1882, and the storm of August 29, 1873, Middletown has suffered no considerable injury. This fire began in the carriage works of J. M. Cox & Brother, and destroyed that place and ten other buildings, among which was the new St. Anne's P. E. Church. Fire companies from Wilmington came and rendered much assistance in extinguishing the flames. The storm of August 20, 1873, flooded the streets, washed away the bridges in the vicinity, and made travel dangerous and difficult, besides doing considerable damage in other ways.

Col. Joshua Clayton, a retired farmer, was the son of the Hon. Thomas Clayton, formerly a United States Senator and a chief justice of Delaware, and was born at Dover August 2, 1802. When fifteen years of age he was a pupil in the classical school of Rev. Francis Hindman, at Newark, Del., and attended that school for three years. In 1818 he entered Princeton College. In the first half of his third year here his health became so much impaired that he was obliged to leave college. But in the same year, 1821, he became a student of law in his father's office, applying himself to his studies as his health would permit. In 1822 he went to spend a year in the law-office of Judge Alex. L. Hayes, a well-known jurist of Reading, Pa. In the following year, 1823, he accompanied Hon. Cesar A. Rodney, United States minister, as private secretary, to the Argentine Republic. The journey thither was made on the old frigate "Congress," by way of Spain, the coast of Africa and Rio Janeiro, to Buenos Ayres.

Three months after arriving at their destination Minister Rodney's health failed, and Mr. Clayton was sent home with dispatches for the government. Mr. Rodney's death, soon afterwards, made it necessary to reorganize the legation, and Col. Clayton remained at home.

Col. Clayton was admitted to the bar at Dover in 1825, and practiced law there until 1830, when, yielding to the force of natural inclinations, he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, and settled at "Choptank on the Hill," in Bohemia Manor. At the beginning of his operations here he was compelled to incur liabilities to the extent of three hundred dollars, which, at the time, appeared to be a greater undertaking than it would have seemed later. He soon liquidated this debt, however, and pressed on to greater accomplishments. For fifty-seven years Mr. Clayton left forensic competitions and judicial honors to others, "while," as he expressed it, "he wrestled with the colts," and with "ploughs which,
in those days, never had a share to please him, being badly shaped and often made of wood"—very inferior to the implements of the present day. Using superior judgment in the drainage and culture of his then un promising land, by the judicious use of lime and ditches and sub-soil ploughing, the place was made both productive and healthful, and has remained so. His methods were approved and followed by neighbors and acquaintances, among whom may be mentioned his long-time friend, Gov. B. T. Biggs. The result has been the great improvement of the lands and a remarkable elision of malarial influences. Col. Clayton at one time owned over three thousand five hundred acres of land. Of this he gave two thousand four hundred acres to his ten children.

Before his death he reflected with sincere satisfaction upon the happy outcome of his unaided efforts. Four times he was commissioned colonel,—first by Gov. Hazlet, then by Gov. Thos. Stockton, again by Gov. Wm. Temple, and lastly, when war was anticipated with England on account of the dispute over the boundary of Oregon. Col. Clayton was married, in 1833, to his cousin, Miss Lydia, daughter of Richard Clayton. She died in January, 1849, and left him three children,—Thomas, Henry and Richard. On the 22d of February, 1860, he married Miss Martha E., daughter of Richard Lockwood, a well-known merchant of Middletown. She died in March, 1887, a few months before the untimely death of their youngest son, Eugene, who fell a victim to the poisonous drugs used by him in his skillful art as a taxidermist. This young man of rare taste and skill in the work to which he was passionately—too ardently—devoted, has left a large collection of birds and animals prepared with artistic excellence as proofs of his dexterity in his art, and as precious mementos of his brief life. He died in September, 1887, at the early age of twenty-seven. By his second marriage eight children were added to Col. Clayton's family. Of these six survive, viz.: Adelaide Young, McComb, Mary W., Joshua, Elizabeth and Frances. Colonel Clayton was always an adherent of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He died suddenly on February 18, 1888, at his beautiful suburban villa, close to Middletown.

Middletown has at present about sixteen hundred inhabitants. Excellent facilities for travel and transportation are afforded by the Delaware Division of the Philadelphia Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad. Although almost destitute of manufactories of any sort, the town is gradually growing and improving. Situated in the midst of an excellent farming region, employment is given to many of its citizens at tilling the soil. The business interests of the town are also affected by the sale and exchange of the abundant products of the farms in the vicinity. It has always been well lighted,—first by lamps till 1880, then by gas till 1886 and since August 17th of that year by sixty ten-candle-power electric lights. Preparations are now being made to supply the town with water from drive wells, which will doubtless prove an excellent safeguard against fires. The following have been the town Commissioners since the incorporation:

1862.—Henry D. Howell, John K. Smith, R. H. Foster, Martin W. Tatman, Jr.
1863—64.—Henry D. Howell, Samuel Penington, R. H. Foster, Martin E. Walker, Chas. Tatman, Jr.
1865.—Zachariah Jones, William L. Bucke, Samuel Penington, Chas. Tatman, Jr., James Colburn.
1866.—H. D. Howell, Samuel Penington, Chas. Tatman, Jr., Richard E. Smith, Clayton Wild.
1872.—David McCleary, Chas. Tatman, Jr., H. D. Howell, John B. Donkyne, Ninious French.
1868.—Robert A. Cochran, Zachariah Jones, J. Thomas Budd.
1869.—Martin E. Walker, John Morrison, Charles Tatman, Jr., Thos. Massey. berlain, Chas. Tatman, Jr.
1872.—R. H. Foster, Thos. E. Hurn, Chas. Tatman, Jr., Jas. B. Clark. son, Wm. H. Ginn.
1874.—Thomas E. Hurn, James H. Scowdrick, J. F. Ellison, L. G. Vandegrift, J. H. Hall.
1878.—W. E. Lockwood, two years; Thomas Massey, Jr., one year; Joseph Hanson, two years; George Eckenforho, one year; R. H. Ellis.
1879.—Thomas W. Bucke, one year; R. H. Ellison, A. W. Scott, W. E. Eckenforho, two years.
1880.—Thos. W. Bucke, Joseph Hanson.
1882.—Joseph Hanson, John C. Stuart.
1883.—Wm. P. Biggs, Chas. H. Howell, Thos. W. Bucke.
1884.—Joseph Hanson, S. S. Holton.
1887.—Geo. S. Hopkins, Harry Davis, N. J. Willmsa.

Sereck F. Shallcross, a farmer, was born March 29, 1816, in Oxford township, Philadelphia County, Pennsylvania. His parents, Jacob Shallcross and Margaret, daughter of Sereck Fox, were also born in the same township, and had a family of eight children, of which the subject of this sketch was the eldest. His brothers and sisters were Ann Eliza, Mary, Catharine, Sarah, William, Thomas and Fanny. At his father's home place during his early years he was engaged in farming and continued this occupation in his native township until 1842, when he came to Delaware and settled near Odessa, where he now resides. In 1843, Mr. Shallcross was married to Ann Fenton, of Abington township, Montgomery County, Pennsylvania. They have had five children, viz.: Jacob, James, Anna, Sereck and William. Jacob married Thirza Shallcross, daughter of William Shallcross, of Kent County, Maryland. James married Mary, daughter of Wilson E. Vandegrift, of St. George's Hundred. Anna, who died June 13, 1887, was married to Israel Williams, of Montgomery County, Pennsylvania. Sereck married Mary, daughter of Elias Moore, of Appoquinimink Hundred. William resides on his father's farm, the place where his father was born, in Philadelphia County. William is married to Miss Betty Deakyne, of Blackbird Hundred. Mr. Shallcross is still living on the same place to which he came in 1842. He has been elected five times as a county commissioner from St. George's Hundred, each term being for four years. He is now a commissioner serving his fifth term in the Levy Court. Mr. Shallcross is a man of vigorous constitution and bears his years and labors well.

Old Buildings.—Perhaps the oldest building in Middletown is the frame house owned by the Middletown Academy and occupied by Jacob Heintz as a residence. It is the first west of the Town Hall and the only hip-roofed house in town. The house occupied by J. Thomas Budd is also very old and was built by a man named Lloyd from Maryland. The dwelling-house connected with the People's Bank is an old building and was for many years used as a store-room. In 1884 a venerable structure known as the "Wren's Nest" was torn down. It stood on East Main Street, near Broad. An old log building, on the corner of Main and Church Streets, was torn down in 1887. It was owned by Mrs. Devereaux and was probably one of the first houses in the town. The Crawford farm-house on Broad Street, now owned and occupied by John A. Reynolds, dates back to the early days of Middletown.

Schools.—At the division of the State into school districts, the territory in and around Middletown was embraced in District No. 60. A small school-house was erected about 1830, on a street known as "School-House Lane," near the present residence of Josiah Blackley. At a later period the district was divided and No. 94 was formed. No school-house was erected for this district, but the school was held in private houses. In 1876 an agreement was made with the trustees of the academy for the use of the academy for public-school purposes, and by the act of Assembly of January 29, 1877, Districts 60 and 94 were consolidated under the name of the Middletown schools. Since the consolidation the board of control is vested in nine directors, six elected by the people and three appointed by the trustees of the academy. The schools are in an excellent condition, and during the winter of 1886-87 there were enrolled two hundred and sixty-eight resident and fifteen non-resident pupils. Five teachers preside over the five departments. Mr. A. S. Wright served as principal from the consolidation of the schools until June 24, 1887. The first board of directors of the consolidated districts was: Edward W. Lockwood, William Green, Alfred G. Cox, John W. Jolls, Nathaniel Williams, Samuel Penington, D. L. Dunning, John R. Hall and Merritt N. Willita. With the exceptions of Edward W. Lockwood, Merritt N. Willita and John R. Hall, the board remains unchanged at the present. Their places are filled by W. P. Biggs, Thomas Cavender and Henry Clayton.

Middletown Academy.—This institution was erected from the proceeds of a lottery authorized by an act of Assembly of January 3, 1824. The act named Richard Mansfield, Arnold Naudain, Outten Davis, William H. Crawford and Richard E. Cochran as managers and empowered them to "institute, carry on and draw a lottery, in one or more classes, for raising a sum of money not exceeding six thousand dollars clear of all expenses," and to apply this sum to "the erection of a building sufficiently large to contain rooms for an academy and elementary school, and also a room for public worship, with such other rooms as they might deem proper and necessary, the room for public worship to be free for all denominations of Churches." Richard Mansfield, Arnold Naudain, Outten Davis and William H. Crawford met at the house of Daniel Haines on December 18, 1824, and organized. John Ginn was elected to fill the vacancy in the board caused by the removal of Richard E. Cochran from the neighborhood. Richard Mansfield was elected chairman and William H. Crawford secretary. On February 9, 1825, a supplementary act was passed for raising four thousand dollars to be invested as an endowment fund. In March of the same year Outten Davis resigned and John Eddows was elected his successor. The lottery scheme was sold May 10, 1825, to John B. Yeates, of New York, Archibald McIntire, of Philadelphia, and Thomas and James Skeldig, of New York, for ten thousand dollars.

On November 19, 1825, six acres of land and a building thereon was purchased by the trustees from Outten Davis for one thousand dollars. It was that portion of Middletown fronting on Main Street from the west line of the Town Hall property to Scott Street and extending back to the present line of Lake Street at the northwest corner and to the present academy lot on the northeast corner. On January 21, 1826, an act was passed incorporating Richard Mansfield, John Eddows, John Ginn, William H. Crawford and Arnold Naudain and their successors as "the trustees of the Middletown Academy." At a meeting of the trustees in February, 1826, the chairman was instructed to advertise for proposals for "building an Academy two stories high, with two rooms on each floor, and a hall ten feet wide in the centre, with cellar underneath the whole; to be built of the best materials and in a plain but substantial manner." The contract was awarded to Henry Little for five thousand dollars.

Andrew Garretson, the tenant on the six acres purchased of Outten Davis, refused to surrender possession. In this emergency William H. Crawford donated two acres of adjoining land, and on this the building was erected. His deed bears date May 13, 1826. The corner-stone of the new building was laid August 24, 1826. In March of the following year William H. Crawford was requested to go to Philadelphia and examine the different kinds of rough-cutting. He advised the imitation of marble and his suggestion was adopted. In June, Arnold Naudain was instructed to purchase a bell not exceeding one hundred and fifty pounds in weight. At a meeting in August of that year Richard Mansfield was re-elected president and John Eddy was chosen secretary and Arnold Naudain treasurer. Chairman Crawford was appointed to contract for twenty-five desks. In September Rev. Joseph Wilson was engaged to take charge of the school and open it on October 15, 1827. Miss Isabella Anderson was engaged to open a female school in December. In 1829 the Legislature empowered the board to elect two additional trustees, and Joseph B. Ginn and Richard Lockwood were chosen on March 27th of that year. In August, 1830, Mr. Wilson resigned and Samuel G. Appleton was elected principal. He resigned in December and the school was closed until 1832 when Henry L. Davis became principal, which position he held until 1834, when Mr. Smith succeeded him. In 1838 William Harris was elected principal, and in April, 1840, he reported that there were thirty-three pupils in attendance and the tuition fees amounted to four hundred and thirty dollars. Joseph A. White succeeded Harris in 1841 and was in turn succeeded by him the following year. Rev. I. H. Tyng was principal from 1842 until 1844, when the academy was rented by Payson Williams, of Germantown. From 1844 to 1876 the principals were Thomas D. Maddin, H. G. Fries, George F. Hitchcock, Theodore E. Primrose, James B. McDowell, Rufus Sanders, Rev. I. W. Macbeth, Charles H. Halloway, J. E. Newman, ——— Hics, ——— Wood, S. B. Jones and Sumner Stevens. In 1876 an agreement was made by the school commissioners of Districts Nos. 60 and 94 and the trustees of the Academy, and the Academy leased for public school purposes for a year. Since that time public school has been held in the Academy. One of the terms of the contract was that a free school of not less than three grades and also a classical or high school should be kept open in the Academy for not less than nine months in the year. Since 1876 the academy and free school have a common history. The present trustees are John P. Cochran, Henry Davis, Nathaniel Williams, R. T. Cochran, H. A. Nowland, William Green and Samuel Penington.

The Presbyterian Church.—Previous to 1742 the inhabitants of Middletown and vicinity worshipped at Drawyer's Church. In that year occurred the great division of the Old and New Schools of the Presbyterian faith, and the adherents of the New School withdrew from Drawyer's Church and established the congregations of St. George's and Forest. The site on which the original Forest Church was erected was granted by Robert Alexander to Peter Bayard, James Bayard, Slayter Bouchell, Benjamin Slayter, William Moore, John Moody, James Shaw, Thomas Rothwell and John Vandyke, trustees of the Presbyterian congregation of Bohemia, in Maryland, and Appoquiniminy in New Castle County, under the care of the Synod of New York. The deed bears date June 6, 1750, and is for 129 perches of land surveyed and laid out for the erection of a Presbyterian Church. The churches of St. George's and Forest united under one pastorate, and were served for sixteen years by Rev. John Rodgers, who was installed March 16, 1749. Dr. Rodgers was very popular and drew largely from the other congregations. He was called to Wall Street Church, New York, in 1755. He was moderator of the First General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. During the Revolutionary War he took an active part in the struggle and was appointed chaplain of Heath's brigade. The next pastor was Rev. Elihu Spencer, who served until October, 1771, and was succeeded by Rev. Thomas Smith, during whose pastorate the two congregations separated. Mr. Smith continued with the Forest Church until his death, in 1792. Rev. Mr. Cheanya, his successor, was at first very popular, but scandals affected his character, his congregation fell away, the glebe was lost and the church verged on oblivion. It was next supplied by Rev. Messrs. Burton and Wilson, of Drawyer's. The old edifice standing in the southeast corner of the present cemetery fell into decay, and was finally sold and removed about 1840. No services had been held in it after the removal of Mr. Wilson, and the church became extinct as a separate organization. After the abandonment a number of the people worshipped at Drawyer's Church. In June, 1851, through the efforts of the Rev. Dr. Handy, the present organization was effected. A lot of land, 120 feet front and 150 in depth, on Main Street, was purchased from R. A. Cochran. The contract for erecting the present church edifice was awarded to David Maxwell. The building was dedicated on the last Sunday of October, 1851, with ceremonies conducted by Rev. Dr. Brainerd and John Patton. The newly constituted church was composed of fourteen members—Joseph West (elder), Francis West, Sarah West, Thomas Murphey, Susan Murphey, Eliza P. Cochran, Lydia R. Rothwell, Elizabeth Price, Sarah Merritt, Lydia Jones, Mary Penington, Eliza Massey, James Burnham and Elizabeth A. Burnham.

The enterprise of erecting a building was carried on by individual effort, as the church was not organized, the session was not constituted, and no board of trustees was elected till the edifice was nearly completed. The first board of trustees of this organization was elected August 24, 1851, and was composed of Dr. Martin Barr, Dr. John Merritt, Major John Jones, Major William Rothwell, Robert T. Cochran, Robert A. Cochran, Samuel Penington, James H. Burnham, Joseph West, Thomas Murphey, Andrew Eliason and William C. Parker. In August, 1857, a lot adjoining the church was purchased as a site for a parsonage, which was soon completed. During the pastorate of Rev. W. C. Alexander the church has been enlarged and beautified at an outlay of nearly eight thousand dollars. It is now in a flourishing condition and has a membership of one hundred and fifty-eight. A Sunday-school with a membership of one hundred and twenty-five, under Superintendent Edward Reynolds, is connected with the church.

The following pastors have officiated since the church was erected in the town:

Rev. Dr. Handy, from June, 1851, until October 10, 1853.
Rev. Mr. Atkinson, from September, 1853, until November, 1853.
Rev. Thomas Forster, from October 10, 1854, until October 3, 1855.
Rev. W. A. Bankits, from June 4, 1857, until 1861.
Rev. Isaac Riley, from March 5, 1862, until September 27, 1864.
Rev. John Patton, D.D., October, 1865, until April, 1881.
Rev. W. C. Alexander, from December, 1880, until the present.

The lot on which the former church stood is still in the possession of this congregation and is used as a burying-ground. The present church stands on the site of the Peterson family cemetery, and in front of the church are four tombs with the following inscriptions:

"Here lieth the Body of David Witherspoon, Born in Ireland, County of London, Derry. Departed this life April 7, 1763. Aged 68 years.

"In memory of Jacob Peterson, Esq., who died January 7, 1774. Aged 40 years. His abilities as a Physician, and his usefulness in Public and Domestic Life Render his Death a real Loss to all concerned in it.

"In memory of Andrew Peterson, Esq., who departed this life in January, 1741. Aged 58 years.

"Also of his Relict, Late Mrs. Hezir Witherspoon, who departed this life on the 18th Day of September, 1772. Aged 66 years.

"In memory of Miss Peterson, Daughter of Doctor Peterson, who departed this life June 5, 1784.

"This small Tribute paid.

"To merit unspeakable."

Bethesda Methodist Episcopal Church, Middletown, Delaware, was organized in the year 1822, by the election of Azariah Foster, Andrew Dill, Thomas Merritt, John Hays and Thomas Low as trustees to acquire and hold property in its name. During the same year a humble structure costing about nine hundred dollars was erected for the religious meetings of this people. Since it has been twice rebuilt,—in 1842 under the pastorate of the Rev. B. F. Price, and in 1880, under the pastorate of the Rev. T. E. Martindale. The present building is handsomely cushioned, carpeted and frescoed, and is more than ordinarily attractive in all of its appointments. The congregations are the largest in the community, numbering, in actual communicants, about three hundred, among whom are a number of the representative business men of the town, including the Hon. B. T. Biggs, the present Governor of the State. It has been blessed with several remarkable revivals, the largest of them occurring under the ministry of the Rev. L. C. Matlack, D.D., T. E. Martindale and the present pastor, Rev. R. H. Adams. The Sunday-school connected with the congregation is one of the most thoroughly organized and best disciplined in the State. Its superintendent, A. G. Cox, was chosen at the Conference, of 1834 as a lay delegate to that great law-making body, the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The benevolent contributions are large and annually increasing, ranking with the most prosperous churches of the Wilmington Conference. The Wilmington Conference held its annual session here in 1881, and was presided over by Bishop J. T. Hurst, D.D., LL.D. The entertainment furnished the ministry was of the most generous and cordial character. Among the ministers who have served this congregation are James Cunningham, Edwin L. Janes, Benj. F. Price, Thomas B. Tilbry, Ignatius T. Cooper, John B. Haganey, James Cunningham, John Henry, James R. Anderson, Joseph Aspil, Robert H. Patterson, John B. Maddux, James B. Merritt, George Heacock, Thomas W. Simper, Alfred T. Scott, William H. Uriel, Henry Colelazer, Vaughn Smith, Lucius C. Matlack, Thomas C. Martindale, W. L. S. Murray, Adam Stengle and R. H. Adams.

St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church.—Previous to 1875 the Catholics of Middletown and Odessa formed a part of the Bohemia congregation, and were only visited on week-days by stations in private houses. In that year Sunday services began to be held in private houses and later in the Town Hall. The inconvenience attending these meetings led to a desire to have a church property devoted exclusively to their use and service. A lot fifty by one hundred feet was purchased in 1883, of E. R. Cochran, and the corner-stone was laid November 18th, with services conducted by Rev. Father Murphy, of Washington. On October 15, 1884, the church was dedicated by Rt. Rev. Bishop Becker. The church is a neat frame structure, Gothic in style, sixty-two by thirty-two feet, with spire and bell, and has a seating capacity for three hundred persons. The cost was about three thousand five hundred dollars. Its erection was due to the efforts of Rev. Father John D. Gaffney, S. J. Regular services are held three times a month. The church is under the management of the Jesuit Fathers. At present there are about two hundred communicants. A Sunday-school of about twenty-five scholars is connected with the church. The priests now in charge are Rev. J. M. Giraud, pastor, Rev. J. B. Archambault, assistant.

Industries.—The earliest industry in Middletown of which there is any record was the old Peterson tannery. In 1761 it was owned by David Witherspoon, who had purchased it of the heirs of Adam Peterson. After the death of David Witherspoon it passed into the hands of his nephew, Thomas Witherspoon, who operated it for some years. At a later period it became the property of Philip Reading, a son of the last missionary sent by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, to St. Anne's Church. Philip Reading, Jr., married Miss Peterson, and was the last one to operate the tannery. The old brick building, now used by William Green for a barn, was the barn-house of the tannery.

There was also an old brewery in operation for a few years in the northeastern portion of the town about 1825, but all traces of its owners and affairs have entirely disappeared.

Wm. L. Bucke & Co. opened a foundry and machine-shop in March, 1856. Their first place of business was on the location now occupied by the residences of M. D. Wilson and E. B. Rice. In 1875 the building now occupied by them was erected. It is a one-story brick structure, forty by eighty feet. They moved into it January 1, 1876, and have since conducted business there.

Garrett Cox began the manufacture of wagons and carriages in Middletown about fifty years ago. Shortly afterwards he associated with himself his son, James M., and conducted business as Cox & Son. In 1857 the firm of J. M. Cox & Bro. was established and have since operated the carriage factory. On May 2, 1882, their works were destroyed by fire, and in a short time the present building was erected.

In 1882 W. P. Biggs, Henry Clayton, Charles S. Ellison and Joshua Clayton formed a co-partnership for the purpose of canning fruits and vegetables, under the name of Biggs, Clayton & Co. The necessary buildings were erected on the corner of Scott and Lake Streets, where the business was conducted for two seasons, of four months each, and then abandoned. Employment was given to about one hundred and twenty persons. The buildings have been unoccupied since 1884.

The Delmarva Manufacturing Company was incorporated March 18, 1873, with a capital stock of twenty thousand dollars. Two acres of land were purchased on the corner of Cochran and Reading Streets, and the buildings were completed in August, fitted up with four evaporators, and had a capacity of eight hundred baskets of peaches, forty-eight thousand ears of corn and three thousand five hundred baskets of berries per day. The first officers were: President, C. C. Sellers; Vice-President, James C. Jackson; Secretary, James P. Meade; Treasurer, H. N. Willits; Superintendent, J. William Cox; Directors, R. A. Cochran, Jos. Roberts, E. C. Fenimore and John Cochran.

On September 3, 1887, Mr. Sellers resigned as president and R. A. Cochran was elected. On January 10, 1874, Jos. Rogers succeeded H. N. Willits as treasurer, and on July 5th Mr. Roberts was also elected secretary to succeed James P. Meade. The factory was operated by the company until November 5, 1876, when it was discontinued. In March, 1877, the property was sold by the sheriff and purchased by R. A. Cochran. It burned down September 8, 1887, and at that time was operated by Williams & Marvel, of Wilmington.

About the year 1570, John Cochran crossed over from Paisley, in Scotland, to the North of Ireland. He was a clansman of the powerful house of Dundonald, and of kin with its noble head. For several generations his descendants were born, tilled the land, married and died in the home of their adoption. Many were of the gentry, most were yeomen, but all led sober, upright, righteous lives, feared God and kept His commandments. The family names were carefully perpetuated. James, the son of John, was succeeded by John, who, in turn, was father of another James. Then came Robert, called "honest," to distinguish him from others of the same name. His sons were James, Stephen and David, and these latter crossed the sea and settled in Pennsylvania, where unmolested they might continue to worship in the faith of their fathers.

James married his kinswoman, Isabella, the daughter of "deaf" Robert. Their children were Ann, Robert, James, John, Stephen, Jane and George. Ann mar-rried the Rev. John Roan, or Rohan, as it was indifferently spelled; Jane became the wife of Rev. Alexander Mitchell; Robert died, leaving a daughter Isabella; James died in April, 1768, preceded in his departure out of this world by his father, James, who died in the autumn of 1766.

This is the race of the Cochrans from the period when they quitted their home in Scotland to the time when their bones were first laid in the New World. James, Stephen and David settled in Chester County, Pennsylvania, and laid out their farms near the rippling currents of Octorara. As appears from the records, James first resided in Sadabury, in the same county and State. In 1742 he purchased one hundred and thirty-five acres additional in the same township, but it was not until the year 1745 that a large tract in Fallowfield, owned in common by the three brothers, was divided, and a patent issued by John, Thomas and Richard Penn to James, for three contiguous lots, aggregating four hundred and thirty acres.

This tract lay to the south of Stephen's and David's shares. Through the northern portion, and near to the northwestern boundary, dividing it from the land of Stephen, ran the New Castle road, to-day called the Gap and Newport turnpike. There the little village of Cochranville, by its name perpetuates the traditions of the clan, whose pibroch and whose slogan have long ceased to sound on Scottish hills. These facts may be found in an article contributed by Walter L. C. Biddle to the Pennsylvania Magazine of History and Biography, Vol. III., No. 3, 1879, pp. 241, 242, and also in Judge J. Smith Futhey's "History of Chester County." One of the scions of the original Cochran stock settled in New Castle County, Delaware, near Summit Bridge, and had a son James, who also lived there and had the following children, viz.: William, who still survives, (February, 1888); Francis, Robert A., and James.

Robert A. Cochran, the subject of this sketch, was born Nov. 11, 1805, on what is known as the Levels; about three miles southwest of Middletown, New Castle County, Delaware, on the farm now owned and occupied by Joseph Roberts. Soon after his birth his father, James Cochran, who was born near Summit Bridge, New Castle County, bought and removed to a farm on Bohemia Manor, Cecil County, Maryland, near what is now Murphy's Mill, about five miles. from Middletown. Up to about the time he was sixteen years of age, he worked hard on the farm for nine months in the year, and during a part of the winter months he attended a poor public school in Middletown, many times walking the five miles each way morning and night.

When about sixteen years old he went to Turner's Creek, in Kent County, Md., to clerk in a store, where he stayed about two years. He then went on horseback to Alabama with an uncle, who was a large cotton-planter, to superintend for him a portion of his business. Being very frugal, he had saved a little money during this time, and when about twenty years of age he paid his own way for tuition at a seminary for about a year, shortly after which he enlisted in General Scott's army to fight the Indians in Florida, in what is known as the Seminole War. He stayed until the war was over, and thrilling indeed it was to hear him relate the many hair-breadth escapes he made from the savages and from the dreadful fevers that prevailed in the swamps of that wild region around Tampa Bay and the Everglades. After the war he spent several years more in different parts of the South, chiefly in Alabama and Georgia, during which time he managed to save a few thousand dollars. Meanwhile he made several trips to his old home in Maryland on horseback, and finally concluded to leave the South and settle permanently near his old home. On his way back he stopped to rest at Joppa Cross-Roads, in Harford County, Md., which lies immediately on the turnpike then known as the Philadelphia and Baltimore turnpike and stage-route, and where now stands a station on the new Baltimore and Philadelphia Railroad, called Joppa. Sojourning with his friends and relatives, John Rouse and family, he there and then first met the bright and beautiful girl, Mary L. Rouse, then seventeen years of age, whom he afterwards married, in little over a year. Sarah Rouse, the mother of Mary L., whose maiden-name was Sarah Cochran, had removed from Delaware to Harford County some years before, and was a relative of Robert A. Cochran, and closely connected with the numerous Cochran family of Baltimore City and Harford County, Md.

The marriage took place at Joppa September 21, 1837. The bride and groom went very soon thereafter to Middletown, Del., and spent the following winter with ex-Governor John P. and R. T. Cochran. In the spring following they took board at the Middletown Hotel, and Mr. Cochran engaged in the lumber business. In about a year afterwards he bought the hotel and about seventy acres of land, lying contiguous thereto, on which a good part of the town now stands.

In 1844 he bought, on the levels near Middletown, a farm, lying adjacent to the one on which he was born, which he proceeded to improve in a vigorous manner. In 1849 he built a large brick house and commodious out-buildings upon it, and removed thereto in the summer of 1850, and by his untiring industry and good management in a few years converted it from a barren common to a rich and fertile farm.

In 1861 Mr. Cochran was elected on the Democratic ticket to the State Legislature, and served through the regular term. He also served in the extra session of 1862. Before the war he had acted with the old Whig party.

In 1866 he left the farm and removed to Middletown again, and devoted himself to building up the town and the management of his seven farms, all of which he had, by his industry, economy and good management, succeeded in buying and paying for in a few years entirely by his own exertion and unaided by any one to the extent of five hundred dollars. He had often been heard to say that when he started South he had just ten cents in his pocket, and he never received a cent from his father's small estate.

There never lived a more industrious and economical and honest man than Robert A. Cochran. Many people say that the town of Middletown would never have been what it is today had it not been for him, and the many buildings he erected there stand as monuments to commemorate his enterprise, quite as significant as the granite shaft that marks his tomb in the Forest Hill Presbyterian Church Cemetery.

He died November 2, 1882, being within nine days of seventy-seven years of age. His wife had died January 24, 1877. He left an estate valued at two hundred thousand dollars. The children born to Robert A. and Mary L. Cochran were as follows: Edwin R., now clerk of the peace for New Castle County, and married to Ada C., daughter of Charles Beaven, of Odessa, Del. (his home is near Middletown, in a commodious dwelling, built by his father in 1865; he has three children—Edwin R., J. H., Blanche B. and Ada L. Cochran); two sons bore the name of William H. Cochran (the first was born June 16, 1840, the second August 20, 1841; both are now dead); James F., born August 22, 1843; Sarah O., born May 17, 1845; R. Alvin, born February 24, 1849; Christopher C., born April 27, 1851; Mary L., born April 17, 1853; Florence E., born March 30, 1861; and Amanda S., born April 16, 1855, are all deceased, and, with the exception of R. Alvin, died before their father. Frances E., born May 10, 1847, is the wife of William A. Comegys, a relative of Chief Justice Comegys. He is deputy collector of Internal Revenue, and resides at Middletown. Josephine R., born November 30, 1857, is the wife of Mr. Frank Conrey, of Chesapeake City.

Mr. Cochran was an adherent and one of the founders, and from its foundation until his death one of the trustees of the Forest Presbyterian Church at Middletown.

Two children have been born to Mrs. Wm. A. Comegys, viz.: Robert A. and Joseph P. Robert A. Cochran (now deceased) left three children, viz.: Evelyn, Bertie and Louise. Mrs. J. R. Conrey has one son, Frank.
In 1874 J. B. Fenimore built a new machine works near the Delmarvia fruit factory. This was occupied for about three years by D. Woodall & Co. as a foundry and machine-shop. In 1877 it was fitted up by Wm. R. Rothwell & Co., for a basket factory, but never operated. It was next used for one season by Parvis & Biggs as a phosphate manufactury. In 1886 H. L. Arthur leased the property and fitted it up with machinery for canning tomatoes and peaches. During the season of two months per year he gives employment to seventy persons. He cans tomatoes principally and has a capacity for fifteen thousand cases per season. His principal shipments are to New York and Toledo.

In 1887 J. B. Maxwell erected a canning factory, the main building of which is two stories high and forty-eight by sixty-four feet. In the rear of this is a one-story building, thirty by eighty-eight feet. The establishment will be used during the canning season for putting up the "Lion" brand of tomatoes, and for about six months more of the year for manufacturing mince-meat and will give employment to fifty persons. The capacity for this year is one hundred and fifty thousand cans, which will be shipped principally to Philadelphia.

In 1885 G. W. Stephens opened a brick-yard within the limits of Middletown. Employment is given to ten men for seven months each year. Five grades are manufactured which aggregate six hundred thousand bricks per year. The majority of these are used in the vicinity.

Banking Institutions.—On February 25, 1859, the "Citizens Bank of the State of Delaware," at Middletown, was chartered. The capital stock was fifty thousand dollars, which was divided into one thousand shares at fifty dollars each. The bank was opened for business January 23, 1860, in a building on the corner of Broad and Main Streets, where G. W. W. Naudain's store now stands. The officers at that time were: President, George Derrickson; Cashier, James McDowell; Teller, John Z. Crouch; Directors, John Eliason, Benjamin Gibbs, Richard Lockwood, Thomas Murphy, Richard Seamans, Albert Penington, William C. Eliason, Robert A. Cochran.

In 1861 John Z. Crouch resigned the position of teller and John R. Hall was chosen his successor. At the decease of Cashier James McDowell in 1862, John R. Hall was elected to succeed him, and Joseph L. Gibson was chosen teller. In 1865 it was decided to convert the bank into a national bank, and increase the capital stock to eighty thousand dollars. It was officered then as follows: President, George Derrickson; Cashier, John R. Hall; Teller, Joseph L. Gibson; Directors, Thomas Murphy, Richard Seamans, Benjamin Gibbs, Wm. C. Eliason, C. B. Ellisom, Jas. M. Cox, Dr. J. V. Crawford, James Garman.

In 1867 Joseph L. Gibson resigned his position and accepted the cashiership of the New Castle County Bank, at Odessa. J. B. Clarkson was elected his successor and was teller till 1874, when he resigned and John S. Crouch was chosen.

In 1868 Wm. C. Eliason was succeeded as director by Jesse Lake, who, with Richard Seamans, was succeeded in the following year by William Green and William B. Thomas. Henry Clayton was elected in 1870 as the successor to Wm. B. Thomas. During this year a lot on Broad Street was purchased of Robert A. Cochran by the bank. In the fall the erection of a commodious brick building was begun. It was completed the following year at a cost of twelve thousand seven hundred dollars.

Since that time the building has been used for banking purposes. In January, 1871, George Derrickson resigned his position as president, and Dr. J. V. Crawford was elected his successor. He filled the position until 1874, when he resigned and Henry Clayton, the present president, was chosen. The officers in this year were: President, Henry Clayton; Cashier, John R. Hall; Teller, John S. Crouch; Directors, Benjamin Gibbs, Benjamin T. Biggs, John A. Reynolds, James Culbertson, Jacob B. Cazier, Edward C. Fenimore, Martin E. Walker and Joseph Biggs. There was no change in the board until 1882, when Andrew Woodall was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Benjamin Gibbs. In the following year the decease of Martin E. Walker caused a vacancy which was filled by the election of Colonel Joshua Clayton.

In June, 1884, John S. Crouch was elected to succeed John R. Hall as cashier, and Leonidas Darlington was chosen teller. On May 11, 1885, the corporate existence of the bank was extended for a period of twenty years. The bank is well managed and at the present time has a surplus of sixteen thousand dollars. The officers are: President, Henry Clayton; Cashier, John S. Crouch; Teller, Leonidas Darlington; Assistant Teller, R. T. Clayton; Directors, John A. Reynolds, B. T. Biggs, J. B. Cazier, Andrew Woodall, James Culbertson, Thomas Cavender, Joseph Biggs and Joshua Clayton, of Thomas.

The People's National Bank of Middletown was authorized to begin the business of banking on July 31, 1883. The first meeting was held May 1, 1888, and Dr. J. V. Crawford, Andrew Eliason, William Green, Samuel Mallalieau and G. W. W. Naudain reported the following persons for the Managing Committee: T. C. Cruikshank, William K. Lockwood, Andrew Eliason, John Diehl, Samuel Mallalieau, B. F. H. Cauik, Dr. J. V. Crawford, H. H. Appleton, J. A. Pool, James M. Vandegrift, William Green, Charles Derrickson, G. E. Hukill, W. R. Cochran, Thomas Cavender, G. W. W. Naudain, E. R. Cochran and James R. Hofacker. The disposition of the stock was left to this committee, with instructions to sell to no person more than thirty shares. On May 29th they reported the stock all taken, and notice was sent to each subscriber to pay in ten per cent of the amount subscribed. On June 2d a meeting of the stockholders was called and an organization effected.
It was decided to elect nine directors from Delaware and three from Maryland. The following received the highest number of votes and were declared elected: Dr. J. V. Crawford, G. W. W. Naudain, William Cochran, Z. A. Pool, G. E. Hukill, T. C. Cruikshank, Andrew Eliason, William Green, George L. Townsend, H. A. Nowland, Samuel Mallalieau and I. G. Griffith.

At a meeting of the directors held June 9th, Dr. J. V. Crawford was chosen president; William R. Cochran, vice-president; and G. W. W. Naudain, secretary. Mr. Naudain resigned his position as secretary on June 30th, and George L. Townsend was elected his successor. On the same day the corporation rented from Colonel Joshua Clayton a room on the corner of Broad and Main Streets, and proceeded to fit it up for a banking-room. George D. Kelley was elected cashier on the 21st day of July and has served in that capacity to the present time. On July 28th William A. Comegs was elected teller, which position he held until November 29, 1884, when he resigned and Sewell Green, the present teller, was chosen. The bank was opened for business on August 15, 1888. In January, 1884, Messrs. Hukill, Naudain and Eliason were appointed a committee to select a suitable bank property, and on February 16th they were instructed to purchase a house of L. P. McDowell and an adjoining lot of Miss M. A. C. Roberts, both on Main Street. The house was remodeled and fitted up as a residence for the cashier. On June 21, 1884, the contract for the erection of the present bank building was awarded to C. N. Dodd. The new building was completed and opened in December, 1884. On November 3, 1888, William Green resigned his position as director and George W. Polk was elected. In January, 1885, B. F. H. Caulk was elected the successor of Samuel Mallalieau. On April 3, 1886, I. G. Griffith resigned and G. F. Brady was elected. On May 7, 1887, George M. D. Hart was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of George W. Polk. The capital stock is eighty thousand dollars and is divided into eight hundred shares of one hundred dollars each. The surplus is two thousand three hundred and fifty dollars. The present officers are: President, J. V. Crawford, M.D.; Cashier, George D. Kelley; Teller, Sewell Green; Directors, G. W. W. Naudain, William Cochran, Z. A. Pool, G. E. Hukill, Andrew Eliason, George M. D. Hart, George L. Townsend, H. A. Nowland, B. F. H. Caulk, T. C. Cruikshank and G. F. Brady.

James V. Crawford, M.D., the president of the People's National Bank, was born in Baltimore in 1824, in which city he was educated, and where he lived until 1846, when he became a resident of Delaware.

He traces his ancestry back to James Crawford, a Scotch, or Scotch-Irish gentleman of some means and good position, who came with Sir Robert Carr, as a volunteer on the military expedition sent by the British government, in 1664, to drive out the Dutch, who had taken possession of the Delaware colony. This expedition was organized in the vicinity of Windsor, England, and was composed, as military expeditions generally were at that time, of younger sons of good families, eager for any stirring adventure in western wilds. As Windsor at that time was the country residence of the Stuart Kings, who were Scotch, many of their countrymen would naturally resort to that place as applicants for places or favors. This accounts for some of the Scotch names in the regiment. Though there was difference in military rank among them, there appears to have been little or none in their social position.

After the successful result of this expedition, James Crawford concluded to cast his lot with the hardy pioneers of the English colony, and remained at or near the New Castle settlement. Several tracts of land and a house at New Castle were bestowed upon him, as the records say, in 1667, for meritorious military service. He afterwards, in 1676 and in 1682, obtained by two separate deeds eight hundred acres of land from the English Governor Nichols, and from Edmund Andros, Deputy Governor of the New York province, before the Delaware settlement was sold to William Penn. These tracts were improved and left to his heirs at his death in 1683. His widow, Judith Crawford, married Edward Gibbes, by whom she had two children, Edward and Benjamin. John Crawford, a son of the pioneer James Crawford, became an Episcopal clergyman, and went to England. George, a great-grandson, went South about 1747, and Eleonora, a sister of George, married a Porter, the ancestor of the former Commodore Porter of the United States navy. Most of the descendants of James Crawford have resided as landed proprietors in what is now the county of New Castle. Among the living male descendants are Theodore F. Crawford, of Wilmington, and the Rev. John Crawford, formerly of Wilmington.

The particular care given to education and the advancement of family interests, which distinguishes the Scotch-Irish people, has been characteristic of the Crawfordes. Hence they have been found more attentive to the interests and duties of private life than solicitous of public honors. Many of them lie buried in the cemetery attached to Drawyer's Church, near Odessa, and their names are prominent in the annals of that old church. The grandfather of Dr. Crawford, whose name was also James, lost the bulk of a good hereditary estate by becoming surety for friends, and left his property in a tangled and critical condition, which was afterwards recovered by his grandson. His son Jacob, the father of Dr. Crawford, was of a delicate constitution, and died at the early age of thirty-eight. He had gone to Baltimore to engage in mercantile affairs, and there married Miss Duchemin, of that city, a member of the Catholic Church, and who also died at an early age. On the maternal side Dr. Crawford is connected with two notable historical events. One was the slave insurrection of St. Domingo, in 1798, on account of which his maternal grandfather, Francis A. Duchemin, was obliged to flee from that island. This he was barely successful in accomplishing, by the aid of two faithful slaves, who refused to leave him, and went with him to Baltimore. Francis A. Duchemin had emigrated from France to St. Domingo. He was a man of unusual ability, and had built up an extensive shipping business and a large fortune, the former of which was, of course, destroyed by the insurrection. Of his fortune, though his losses were heavy, he was fortunate enough to save a handsome competence, from remittances from consignees in foreign ports, for valuable cargoes previously shipped.

The expulsion of the French settlers from Acadia, or Nova Scotia, is the second event above alluded to, which was carried out by the British forces with great cruelty, and who scattered those once happy people to so many different quarters of the world. The story is told by Longfellow with great effect, in the poem of "Evangeline." The exile from St. Domingo, Mr. Duchemin, married in Baltimore the daughter of one of those Acadia exiles, and from this union the mother of Dr. Crawford was one of the offspring. Mr. Duchemin was one of the volunteer defenders of Baltimore during the last war with Great Britain, when his adopted city was in danger.

Dr. Crawford was educated at St. Mary’s College, in Baltimore, and having chosen the profession of medicine, graduated from the University of Maryland in 1845. Before proceeding to practice medicine in the city, he felt bound to devote himself to a diligent effort to recover the estate in Delaware that had belonged to his grandfather Crawford, above alluded to. After several years of wearisome delays, disappointments, risks and much expense, his efforts were successful. He was also fortunate in selling, just before the Civil War (at an advance), a tract of land which he had bought in Virginia.

Thus placed in advantageous circumstances, and finding the practice of medicine in the country too laborious for his health, which was of hereditary delicacy, he concluded to devote himself to agricultural pursuits and the improvement of his land. This occupation was not entirely congenial to him, yet circumstances seemed to bind him to its continuance for many years, and he has been successful in its prosecution. But his main predilection is for science and literature, which he has always cultivated with unfailing pleasure.

In 1864 he was chosen director in the Citizens’ National Bank of Middletown, and was afterwards elected president of the bank, serving three years in the latter capacity until he resigned this position in 1874.

In religion Dr. Crawford belongs to the Catholic Church. In politics, though raised a Whig, he has for many years acted with the Democratic party. During the latter war he followed the lead of Mr. Douglas, and was a strenuous supporter of the War for the Union. He was also in accord with the administration of Andrew Johnson in the efforts made by him to re-establish friendly relations between North and South. Dr. Crawford attended the National Union Convention of 1866, as one of the delegates from Delaware. In 1880 he accepted the Democratic nomination for the State Legislature, but the entire county ticket was defeated. In 1882 he again received the nomination of his party for the same position, and was elected. His course in the Legislature gave satisfaction to his constituents, and as “Chairman of the Judiciary Committee” of the House of Representatives he obtained the approval of both parties. Upon the establishment of the People’s National Bank of Middletown, he was chosen president of the bank at the first election, which was held in January, 1884, and he still at this date, December 29, 1887, holds the same position. He finds pleasure in the fact that though the new bank has encountered opposition, yet it has enjoyed continued prosperity, and its stock now sells at a premium.

Dr. Crawford is unmarried, but has the company of two sisters who share the comforts of his household. In person Dr. Crawford is spare and not above medium height. His features and manner indicate that he has the courage of his convictions, and that he would persevere resolutely in whatever course he believed to be right.

Societies.—Union Lodge, No. 5, A. F. A. M., was instituted at Odessa in 1765, and is the oldest lodge of Masons in the State. The original charter was granted by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, there being no Grand Lodge in Delaware previous to 1806. On January 24, 1816, the lodge was reorganized and chartered by the Grand Lodge of this State under the same name and number under which it was originally organized.

The names of the first officers under the new organization were,—W. M., Leonard Vandegrift; S. W., Thomas Belville; J. W., William Streets; Treasurer, Arnold S. Naudain; Sec. John Moody; S. D., Jonathan Allston; J. D., John Stuart; Tyler, Joshua Bowen.

The place of meeting was afterwards changed to Middletown, where the lodge now meets in the town hall on the first Tuesday night of every month.

The present membership is forty-nine, and the officers are,—W. M., J. W. Roberts; S. W., Dr. K. B. McKee; J. W., John W. Jolls; Treasurer, J. L. Gibson; Sec., W. H. Johnson; S. D., T. W. Bucke; J. D., J. B. Deskyne.

Irving Lyceum was a literary association formed in Middletown during February, 1881. Rev. W. C. Alexander was its first president, and was ably sustained by the leading citizens of the place. Its membership at one time was over a hundred. And several public entertainments were given by the members in the course of its existence. It had a good hall, well equipped, with a library and a piano; but after a little over four years of good and efficient work, it disbanded.

The Mutual Loan Association of Middletown, Del., was organized February 15, 1873. The first officers were.—Pres., James H. Scowdrick; Vice-Pres., H. A. Nowland; Sec., A. G. Cox; Treas., J. B. Clarkson; Directors, J. M. Cox, J. H. Gilpin, T. W. Bucke, John B. Roberts, G. E. Hukill, James R. Hoffecker, John Morrison, E. B. Rice, R. H. Ellisson.

Series of stock are issued yearly, and continue till each share is worth $200. Fifteen series have been issued, of which five have matured. In March, 1878, G. E. Hukill succeeded James H. Scowdrick as president. Hukill was succeeded in 1883 by H. A. Nowland, the present incumbent. In 1883 G. E. Hukill succeeded H. A. Nowland as vice-president. In March, 1876, A. G. Cox succeeded J. B. Clarkson as treasurer. The receipts for the year ending February 15, 1887, were $31,797.31. The cash in the treasury at that time was $1785.44.

The officers at the present time are.—Pres., H. A. Nowland; Vice-Pres., G. E. Hukill; Sec. and Treas., A. G. Cox; Directors, Joseph Gary, W. H. Moore, Joseph Hanson, Dr. T. H. Gilpin, J. B. Foard, John W. Jolls, James M. Cox, D. L. Dunning.

The Peninsular Agricultural and Pomological Association was organized at Middletown, January 31, 1874. At this meeting the first officers of the association were elected and were as follows: President, Charles Beasen; Treasurer, Edward Reynolds; Secretary, J. Thomas Budd.

A tract of land near the town limits was leased of William Brady and buildings erected and a race-track constructed. For the first few years the fairs were a success both financially and as to the quantity and quality of the exhibits. Gradually they became unpopular, and in 1883 it was decided to abandon them. In the following February the buildings and privileges of the association were exposed to public sale, and sold on the 21st of that month. In August, 1875, Charles Beasen was succeeded by Wm. R. Cochran, who continued to serve as president until its abandonment. J. Thos. Budd was succeeded in 1876 by J. B. Clarkson, whom J. B. Naudain succeeded the same year. In 1880 W. S. W. Way was elected to succeed Naudain. Way was secretary and Edward Reynolds treasurer until the dissolution of the association.

MIDDLETOWN TOWN HALL.—The Middletown Town Hall Company was incorporated February 25, 1867. On March 2d a meeting was called for the purpose of selecting a committee to open the books and secure subscriptions for the stock. W. H. Barr, James M. Cox, J. B. Fenimore, H. N. Willits and J. Thomas Budd were appointed as the committee. On March 16, 1868, a meeting of the subscribers was called and seven directors were elected to serve for one year. They were James M. Cox, Robert A. Cochran, Samuel Penington, W. H. Barr, J. Thomas Budd, John R. Hall and Thomas Massey. A meeting of the directors was immediately called, when James M. Cox was chosen president; J. T. Budd, secretary; and John R. Hall, treasurer. A lot of land on Main Street was purchased of Samuel Penington and the erection of a building was commenced in June. The corner-stone was laid July 27, 1868, with appropriate services conducted by the Union Lodge, No. 5, A. F. A. M. The oration was delivered by J. C. McCabe, D.D. The building was completed in January of the following year and is a three-story brick structure, sixty-eight by seventy feet, and costs thirty-six thousand dollars. The first floor is divided into three store-rooms. The second story is the auditorium and on the third floor are three lodge-rooms. The store-rooms and two of the lobby rooms are occupied. The auditorium affords a suitable place for entertainments and public assemblies. The present officers are: President, James M. Cox; Treasurer, J. B. Deakyn; Secretary, Samuel Penington; Directors, Wm. H. Moore, James Culbertson, D. L. Dunning, W. W. Wilson.

WATER-WORKS.—Fires at various times called the attention of the citizens of Middletown to the necessity of a protection of some kind. On June 3, 1871, a committee on water was instructed by the commissioners to dig a well, build a tower with a tank on it and fit it up with a pump and wind-mill. The tank was not to hold less than seven thousand gallons. The well was dug, but the supply of water was found insufficient to supply the demands and the undertaking was abandoned. In March, 1884, the question of drive wells was agitated, but without success. On February 10, 1887, an act was passed by the Legislature empowering the town commissioners to borrow fifteen thousand dollars to be expended in securing a water supply. Henry Clayton, G. W. Naudain, Martin B. Burris, John H. Parvis and Gideon E. Hukill were appointed to superintend the construction of the works, and when completed to surrender the management to the town commissioners. G. E. Hukill resigned and Nathaniel Williams was appointed in his stead. The commissioners decided to sink twenty drive wells at intervals of fifty feet and to erect a standpipe one hundred feet high and eight feet in diameter, with a capacity of thirty-seven thousand gallons. All the pumps connect with a main pipe, which flows into the standpipe. The apparatus is to be so arranged that in case of fire the main pipe can be disconnected from the standpipe and the water pumped direct from the wells. About two miles of pipe will be laid through the town, with fire-plugs at convenient places to cover the entire town. The work is being rapidly pushed to completion and will prove a decided advantage to the town.

HOTEL.—The Middletown Hotel was built in 1761 by David Witherspoon, and managed by him until his death, which occurred two years later, when it was inherited by his nephew, Thomas Witherspoon, who leased it to different parties. It afterwards vested in his son David, who was owner and proprietor for many years. While under his management, James Knight, a noted character and duelist, was killed in the bar-room by him. Knight came in drunk and being refused liquor by Witherspoon, pulled his pistol and made several attempts to kill him. The weapon missed fire both times and then, to save himself, Witherspoon reached above the bar and took down a horse-pistol, with which he shot Knight. Jesse Higgins, the next owner, by his will bearing date June 13, 1810, devised the tavern and four other tenements to his daughters, Susan and Maria. In 1836 the hotel was purchased by William H. Crawford, who sold it March 25, 1844, to Robert A. Cochran. While in its possession the house was several times remodeled and was enlarged to its present size and capacity. After his decease, in 1882, the hotel property became vested in his daughter, Mrs. W. A. Comegys. Since its erection the hotel has had many proprietors, and is now ably managed by Messrs. Armstrong & Sparkes, who took possession on September 1, 1884.

The National Hotel was built in 1862 by a joint stock company, and by them leased till 1878. John C. Lippincott was the first proprietor. In 1878, Alexander Maxwell, the present proprietor, purchased the property and has since successfully managed it.

ODESSA.—The land on which Odessa is now located was taken up by Alexander De Hintjoza, who was Vice-Director at New Amstel (New Castle), from 1659 to 1668. Upon his retirement from the position he obtained possession of a large tract of land, at Appoquinimink (Odessa), where he signified his intention to reside and engage in trading. He was settled at his plantation but a few months when a change in affairs gave the territory to the British, and his estate was confiscated and granted to Captain Edmund Cantwell in about 1676. Captain Edmund Cantwell was the first sheriff of New Castle County under the government of William Penn. He was also high sheriff under Sir Ednund Andros in 1676. He died in 1698, and his estate passed to his son Richard. In 1731 permission was granted to him to erect a toll-bridge over the Appoquinimink Creek. The place then became known as Cantwell's Bridge, and was well known as a stopping-place for persons traveling from the Delaware to the Chesapeake. In 1765 a tract of land near the Appoquinimink was purchased by William Corbit, and a tan-yard opened. The house now occupied by Daniel W. Corbit, and the adjoining one, were built, respectively, in 1773 by William Corbit and in 1772 by David Wilson. The Corbit house was built by Robert May & Co., of England. In 1804 Samuel Thomas and James Gibson were merchants in this town. In 1817, when Charles Tatman, lately deceased, came to this town, there were about thirty residences, all of which were situated on the south side of Main Street. Dr. John Smith was practicing medicine at that time. A Scotchman by the name of Osborne owned nearly all of the land extending northward from Main Street. He removed from the place and made no disposition of his property. The land escheated to the State, and, under an act passed February 2, 1821, John Merritt, Outten Davis, Jacob Vandegrift, John Reynolds and John Clark were appointed commissioners to lay out the land into lots, with streets and lanes. The services of Jonas C. Fairlamb, surveyor, were secured, and the town was plotted. The plan of the town was accepted by John Lowber, escheator of New Castle County. Lowber, by the authority given him in the act, exposed the lots for sale at public auction, and four of them were purchased by Outten Davis. In 1829 lot No. 5 was owned by John Grim, lot No. 7 by Samuel Thomas, and on lot No. 6 there was a two-story brick dwelling and store, occupied by William Thomas.

In 1825 Cantwell's Bridge was a place of considerable importance. Charles Tatman and Manlove Hayes were merchants at that time. The hotel was conducted by Ford Mansfield. David Wilson and William Polk were dealing largely in grain. At this time Cantwell's Bridge was the principal grain market for the surrounding country. Grain was conveyed here for shipment from all points within a radius of twelve or fifteen miles. Six large granaries, holding about thirty thousand bushels, standing on the bank of the Appoquinimink, were often completely filled, which delayed the purchase of grain until some of it was shipped to Philadelphia. From 1829 until 1840 there were shipped from this town four hundred thousand bushels of grain annually.

John Janvier, the undertaker, at this time owned a two-wheeled hearse, which was used whenever any one of wealth or high social standing was buried. On other occasions an ordinary wagon was used. The coffin was placed on the axle and held in position by wooden screws. This was used until 1840. John Aspin was the blacksmith and wheelwright, and the tannery was managed by Daniel Corbit.

As early as 1830 agricultural fairs were held at Cantwell's Bridge, and were largely attended by people from Delaware, Pennsylvania and Maryland.

The grain at a later time was handled principally by Charles Tatman, John Grim, John Cullin, Crouch & Davis and Polk & Beasen, who were succeeded by Beasen & Watkins. During the busiest seasons, six sloops made weekly trips to Philadelphia, and three coasting schooners went to Boston and the East, besides a large number of transient vessels.

In 1856 it was thought advisable to change the name of the village, and “Odessa” was adopted. It was named after Odessa, Russia, a large grain port on the Black Sea. The construction of the Delaware Railroad opened a new avenue for grain shipment and was a decided injury to the business interests of the village. The grain shipments were confined to the immediate vicinity, and decreased in a wonderful manner, and at present there is but one grain boat, owned by Columbus Watkins, plying between this town and Philadelphia. On July 28, 1856, there was a fire here which destroyed the cabinet-shop of Thos. Enos, a dwelling of M. Doughten, a dwelling and stable of Misses Catharine Arthur and Elizabeth.
Hart, milliners, the wheelwright and blacksmith shops of L. V. Aspil and the dwelling of John Eaton.

In 1878, Odessa was incorporated a town and endowed with corporate privileges. The town is nicely laid out and is on a slight elevation. Its nearest railroad facilities are at Middletown, which is three miles distant. The steamer "Clio," Captain W. S. Perry, makes two trips per week to Philadelphia, and carries both passengers and freight.

With the exception of the first year the town commissioners were elected for a term of two years. The following persons have served in this capacity:

On the 13th of Eleventh Month, 1708, there was warranted to Joseph England, William Horn and others, by the commissioners of property, ten acres of land "enclosing their meeting-house for a burying place." It was for the use of the people called "Quakers." On this was the "George's Creek Meeting-House." It was situated near the road leading from Port Penn to the State road, on the site of the Friends' burying-ground, now known as Hickory Grove.

Monthly Meetings were held alternately at this place and Duck Creek.

At a Monthly Meeting held at Duck Creek, 23d of Sixth Month, 1781, the meeting was informed that the "Friends of George's Creek request the indulgence of this meeting to remove their present place of meeting to Appoquinimink Bridge (Odessa), as being much more convenient to those who attend." The records of the Monthly Meeting held at Duck Creek, Sixth Month 20, 1788, states that the "Friends of George's Creek Meeting having now erected a House near Appoquinimink Bridge suitable to their situation and accommodation wherein they now meet agreeable to the indulgence of the meeting." In 1828 there was a division in the church, and the property was held by the Hicksite branch. The church never prospered from this time and was abandoned about seven years ago. The Allstons were the last family to worship here.

Methodism in Odessa.—Methodist services were first held in Odessa, (then Cantwell's Bridge) in 1831. At that time, as nearly as can be learned, there were but two Methodists, Wessel Aldrich and his sister, Mrs. Rebecca Pogue, then living in Odessa; these were both members at Union, on Smyrna Circuit.

Presbyterian services were held at old "Drayer's" and a few families met from time to time in the Friends' meeting-house, but many of the people did not attend any religious service.

In 1830, at a meeting held in Fieldsboro', several young men were converted, among them Benjamin Fields, Nelson Naudain, Elias Naudain, Thomas Scott and J. V. Moore (the last-named yet lives). These persons determined to make an effort to have Methodist services in Cantwell's Bridge. They obtained from the trustees the use of the school-house. Rev. Richard Greenbank, preacher in charge of Smyrna Circuit, was consulted, and entered at once into the plan and some time in 1831 the first services were held and Methodism planted in Odessa. Services were held in the school-house for two years, when the house was sold for the purpose of erecting a new school-house. The purchaser being unable to remove it to the place desired, it was resold and still remains near the Zoor M. E. Church. Among those converted in the meetings held in the school-house was one Joseph C. Griffith, who donated to the little society of Methodists the ground on which the present church stands. He also labored as carpenter in building the first Methodist Episcopal Church erected.

Though the preacher in charge of Smyrna Circuit, Rev. Solomon Sharp, did not view the new appointment with much favor, yet the little band of scarcely more than a dozen thought the time had come to "rise up and build," hence two committees were appointed. The committee on materials consisted of

NEW CASTLE COUNTY.

Philip D. Riley, Benjamin Fields, John Hayes and J. V. Moore; the committee to raise funds, Josse Lake, P. D. Riley, Joseph C. Griffith, Nathaniel Beauchamp and J. V. Moore.

The committee on materials purchased for one hundred dollars an old brick house standing on the farm of Abram Stata, near Fieldsboro'. Notice was given for the people to meet and tear it down, and clean the bricks. At the time appointed a crowd of people with numerous teams were on hand, and the work was quickly done. As this did not furnish bricks enough, another burnt-out brick house, standing on the farm of Samuel Rogers, near Odessa, was donated. Charles Tatum gave the shingles. The carpenter was J. C. Griffith and the mason, Samuel Floyd. The building was thirty by forty feet, one story and whitewashed. During its building, plank seats were arranged, and Rev. R. Greenbank preached standing on the carpenter's bench.

The house was finished and dedicated free of debt. Rev. Matthew Sorin, presiding elder, had charge of the services, and Rev. Solomon Sharp preached at an overflow meeting in the school-house. This was about 1838.

The present commodious and handsome church building was dedicated October 23, 1852, during the pastorate of Rev. Joseph Aspril. It is of brick, two-story, having Sunday-school and class-rooms on the lower floor, and audience-room above. It is handsomely furnished, having cushioned pews and carpet and a large and beautiful pipe-organ.

Odessa, which had thus far been connected with Middletown, became a separate station in 1859, with Rev. J. S. Willis as pastor. The pastors since 1881 have been as follows: Richard Greenbank, 1831-33; William Connelly,1 1831; James Nichols, 1832; Solomon Sharp, 1833-35; Robert Anderson and Joseph Osborn, 1835; Benjamin Benson, 1836; Eliphalet Reed, 1836-37; Z. Gaskill, 1835; William Allen, 1836; J. Cunningham, 1837-39; Edwin L. Janes, 1839-41; B. F. Price, 1841-43; T. B. Tibbles, 1843-44; J. T. Cooper, 1844-45; J. B. Hagany, 1845-47; James Cunningham, 1847-48; John Henry, 1848-50; J. R. Anderson, 1850-52; Joseph Aspril, 1852-54; R. H. Patterson, 1854-56; J. B. Maddux, 1856-57; J. B. Merritt, 1857-59; J. S. Willis, 1859-60; C. F. Turner, 1860-61; J. S. Cook, 1861-63; W. H. Elliott, 1868-65; W. E. England, 1865-67; George A. Theobus, 1867-70; W. Kenney, 1870-78; J. E. Bryan, 1878-79; J. B. Merritt, 1876-79; W. H. Hutchin, 1879-82; J. P. Otis, 1882; T. R. Creamer, 1885-88.

The present membership of the church is two hundred.

Sunday-School Superintendent, Geo. L. Townsend; Superintendent of Primary Department, Mrs. Lucretia S. Enos.

The congregations at the present time are large; the Sunday-school is first-class in all respects. The church has lost from deaths and removals from time to time, but others would take their places, and the church to-day is alive to every interest of Christian effort.

Industries.—The first industry at Odessa was the tan yard opened by William Corbit in 1766. It was situated near the Appoquinimink Creek and was operated by him until 1810. During the Revolutionary War a lieutenant and a squad of soldiers from General Washington's army came here after some leather. Mr. Corbit refused to negotiate with them, but they demanded the leather and when it was not forthcoming they proceeded to search for it. The leather was stored in the cellar of the house occupied now by Dan'l W. Corbit. The soldiers found it and took it away with them, leaving Continental currency to the amount of the supposed valuation of the leather. This is still in possession of D. W. Corbit, of Odessa. In 1810 Pennel Corbit took possession of the tannery and managed it until his death, in December, 1819. It was then purchased of his heirs by Daniel Corbit, who operated it until 1854, when the scarcity of bark led to its abandonment. All kinds of leather were manufactured quite extensively. The tannery has since been converted into dwellings still standing.

The manufacturing of fertilizers at Odessa, by Lord & Polk, was begun in 1878 in a small building rented for that purpose. The goods manufactured by this firm found ready sale and in 1880 a two-story frame building, seventy-two by fifty feet, was erected for manufacturing purposes. The demand for the fertilizers steadily increased, causing additions to be made at frequent intervals, until the building has attained its present size, two hundred and twenty-five by one hundred and forty-four feet. In April, 1887, a stock company was organized and incorporated as the "Lord & Polk Chemical Company," under which style the business has since been conducted. Twenty thousand tons of fertilizers are manufactured annually and shipped to all parts of the country. The principal brands manufactured by this company are the following: "Diamond State Super-Phosphate," "Diamond State Soluble, Bone," "Champion Fertilizer" and "Truxillo Guano."

The company has also erected a building for the manufacture of sulphuric acid, which is extensively used in manufacturing fertilizers. A part of this building is three stories high and sixty by seventy feet, and the remainder two stories high and forty by two hundred and twenty-five feet. The capacity is five thousand tons per year.

The manufacturing is under the superintendence of John Whann and gives employment to forty men.
The officers are as follows: Pres., Victor Lord; Secretary and Treasurer, Geo. W. Polk; Incorporators, William R. Polk, Victor Lord, George W. Polk, J. B. Forad, Columbus Watkins.

The Watkins Packing Company commenced the business of canning fruits and vegetables in 1881. In that year the factory was built, the main building of which is a frame structure two stories high and forty by sixty feet, and the packing-room one story, forty by one hundred and twenty-two feet. Preparations are now being made to enlarge the factory by making the main building forty by one hundred feet, and the packing-room forty by one hundred and sixty-two feet. The establishment is in operation about four months of each year. During the season there is packed here on an average 800 cases of peaches, 3500 cases of berries and 20,000 cases of tomatoes. During the peach season employment is given to sixty persons. To pack the tomatoes about seventy women and thirty men and boys are required. From the 1st of March till the 15th of August fifteen men are employed in the factory manufacturing cans. The "Owl" brand of tomatoes is packed here and shipped to cities in the North and East.

In 1867 Polk & Hyatt planted, near Odessa, a nursery covering about five acres. The enterprise proved a success and the increased demand for trees of their production required the enlargement of the nursery from year to year. The two nurseries owned by this firm now cover fifty-five acres and contain all varieties of fruit, shade and ornamental trees and shrubbery. Trees are shipped from here to all parts of this and adjoining States. The annual sales amount to about 100,000 trees. In addition to this, large quantities of fruit are gathered and shipped every year, giving employment to about seventy-five persons.

John Aspil came to Odessa in 1817 and opened a blacksmith shop near the site of the Town Hall. He moved his shop several times and in 1833 rented of Joseph C. Griffith a shop where the present carriage works stand. He was succeeded in 1842 by his son, Leonard V. Aspil, who purchased the property in 1845. The shop was burned in 1856, and in the fall of the same year the present building was erected. The main building is three stories high, thirty by fifty feet, with a one-story building, twenty-five by thirty feet, in the rear. In 1876 Leonard V. Aspil was granted an interest in the business, which has since been conducted under the firm-name of L. V. Aspil & Son. Employment is given to eight men, who, in addition to the repair work, manufacture about twenty wagons per year.

In 1892 William M. Vandegrift began to evaporate fruit in an evaporator which he erected in a stable at Odessa. In the following year he erected a two-story frame building, twenty by forty feet, near the Appoquinimink Creek, and placed in it two evaporators. By means of these three hundred baskets of fruit could be evaporated in a day. Peaches, apples and raspberries were evaporated here and shipped to Philadelphia. During the season employment was given to fifteen persons. In March, 1885, the building was burned and has never been rebuilt.

In 1878 Thomas F. Dilworth and T. D. Stewart erected temporary buildings and began to can fruits and vegetables at Port Penn. Their undertaking was successful, and enlarged and permanent buildings were erected. They have since been extended, and now cover about a quarter of an acre of land. They can tomatoes principally, and are manufacturers of the "Delaware Tomatoes," "Stirling Farm" and "Extras" brands. During the canning season employment is given to about one hundred persons. The capacity of the factory is twenty thousand cases. Philadelphia and New York are the principal markets to which these goods are shipped.

Post-Office.—When the post-office was established at Odessa has not been ascertained. In 1817 John Moody was the postmaster. The mail-stage running from Wilmington to Dover stopped here and left the mail. Since the discontinuance of that stage-route, the mail is carried by stage from Middletown. William F. Corbit was appointed postmaster in 1818. Since then the following postmasters have served: Daniel Corbit, Charles Tatman, Benjamin Field, John Whitby, Joseph W. Vandegrift, Josiah Ridgeway, Joseph A. Lord, Henry Bigger and Kate Bigger. Lawrence R. Davis, the present incumbent, took charge of the post-office August 23, 1886. The office occupies a portion of the store-room of Davis & Bro.

The earliest postmaster at Port Penn, in the memory of the inhabitants of that vicinity, was Joseph Cleaver. He was succeeded by his son, Thomas Cleaver. Samuel B. Cleaver, the present incumbent, received his appointment on November 9, 1872. The mail is carried by stage from Delaware City.

Banking.—Previous to 1854 the banking business of St. George's Hundred was done at New Castle and Smyrna. In March, 1858, the "New Castle County Bank" was incorporated as a State bank. All the preparatory arrangements having been completed, the bank was opened for business April 26, 1854, in the office of Charles Tatman, on the corner of Third and Main Streets. It was shortly afterwards removed to the building now occupied as a store by Davis & Bro. The officers elected at the organization and who served at the opening of the bank were: President, Charles Tatman; Cashier, Dr. B. F. Chatham; Teller, John Zeleffo; Directors, Charles Tatman, Cyrus Polk, Charles Beason, Henry Davis, John Appleton, Garret Cox, David J. Cummins, George W. Karsner, Richard Seaman.

A lot of land on the corner of Main and Second Streets was purchased and the erection of a building commenced. This was completed in 1865, and since that time has been used for banking purposes. John Zeleffo retained the position of teller for only a few months, and was succeeded by John Janvier. The capital stock of the bank was fifty thousand dollars, which was divided into one thousand shares. In June, 1865, it was converted into a national bank and the capital stock increased to seventy-five thousand dollars. The name of the bank was changed to the New Castle County National Bank.

The first officers of the national bank were as follows: President, Chas. Tatman; Cashier, Dr. B. F. Chatham; Teller, John Janvier; Directors, Charles Tatman, John Appleton, Horatio N. Willis, Charles Beasten, William Polk, Henry Davis, Samuel Penington, George W. Karner, David J. Cummins.

In 1866 John Janvier resigned the position of teller, and was succeeded by Eugene L. Eliason, who filled the position for a year. Joseph G. Brown, the present teller, was elected in 1867.

In January, 1867, Cashier Chatham resigned, and Joseph J. Gibson, the present cashier, was elected.

Charles Tatman served as president from the organization of the bank until his death.

With the exception of George W. Karner, David J. Cummins and Charles Beasten, the board of directors remains unchanged since 1865. Serek F. Shallowcross succeeded George W. Karner in January, 1866. David J. Cummins resigned in May, 1874, and John C. Corbit was elected his successor in October of the same year. Charles Beasten was succeeded by Columbus Watkins January 5, 1876.

Charles Tatman, John Appleton and Henry Davis served as directors from the organization as a State bank in 1854. The surplus fund of thirty-four thousand dollars attests that the bank has been skillfully managed by trustworthy and competent officers.

The officers of the bank in 1887 were: President, Charles Tatman; Vice-President, John C. Corbit; Cashier, Joseph L. Gibson; Teller, Joseph G. Brown; Directors, Charles Tatman, John Appleton, John C. Corbit, Serek F. Shallowcross, William Polk, Henry Davis, Horatio N. Willis, Samuel Penington, Columbus Watkins.

Charles Tatman, late president of the New Castle County National Bank of Odessa, was born near Greenwood Station, Sussex County, May 5, 1792. He was a son of Purnell Tatman, a farmer of superior intelligence and character, who was born July 1, 1766, on the farm on which he spent his life, and where he died September 1, 1826. The mother of Charles Tatman was Bathsheba, a daughter of John Griffith, of Sussex County. Purnell Tatman had nine children, six of whom—Cyrus, Eliza, Charles, Purnell, Bathsheba and Eunice—lived to have families of their own.

The grandfather of Charles Tatman, Mitchell Tatman, was also a farmer, and passed his days on the old homestead, which had probably been in the possession of the family from early colonial times. His wife was Mary, daughter of John Collins, of Sussex County, and cousin of Governor Collins, of Delaware. Charles Tatman at five years of age was sent to a pay-school kept in a neighboring dwelling; but the greater part of his school education was obtained in a school-house in the neighborhood which had neither floor, windows nor chimney. Mr. Tatman in later life told how the children suffered on winter days, when the ground, even in the school-house, would be soaked with water, and was often frozen solid in the morning. To protect their feet from the ice, the children brought in pieces of wood or anything convenient for a foot-rest. The fire of logs was built at one end of the room on the ground, and the smoke escaped through a hole in the roof. At fifteen he left school to work on the farm, doing what he could for the family support until he was twenty-four years old. He then became a clerk in the store of William Polk, the husband of his eldest sister, at Cantwell's Bridge. Here he made his home through three or four years of faithful service to his brother-in-law, after which he engaged in mercantile business with Mr. Manlove Hayes, of that town, under the firm-name of Tatman & Hayes. This partnership continued until 1825, when the partners separated and divided their goods. During the next five years Mr. Tatman conducted business by himself, enjoying an unusual degree of prosperity. About 1827 he enlarged his business operations and began to purchase grain, wood, staves and every kind of country produce, shipping his goods in his own vessels to Philadelphia, New York and elsewhere. In all his efforts he displayed uncommon zeal, enterprise and judgment, and in 1834 his business had attained such proportions that he found it necessary to take a partner, and was happily associated with Daniel B. McKee for nine years, after which the firm was dissolved, and Mr. Tatman retired from active business. He was then but fifty-one years of age, but had accumulated a fortune sufficient to insure him comfort and abundance for the remainder of his life. For several years following he was largely interested in real estate, and owned considerable property in Odessa, besides numerous farms in the vicinity. He long since disposed of these farms. He kept all his business affairs in perfect order.

From 1851 to 1877 Mr. Tatman was secretary of the Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company; in 1854, at the first meeting of the directors, he was elected president of the New Castle County Bank of Odessa, just incorporated. This office he held until his death.

In political life he was originally a Federalist, afterwards a Whig, and on that ticket was a candidate for the State Legislature in 1842, but was not elected. In 1861 he took strong ground for the Union, and used his means and influence freely to sustain the government throughout the war. Although never seeking political preferments, he was always an efficient and disinterested worker for the welfare of his country and State. From the time of its organization he was an active and useful member of the Republican party. For a hundred years his family has been conspicuous in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He united with it as a member in 1867, and was long a trustee. Mr. Tatman was married, March 30, 1847, to Mrs. Harriet Brinton Corbit, widow of John C. Corbit, and daughter of Joseph Trimble, late of Conoord, Pa., all of the Society of Friends. She had no children, and died March 23, 1875, aged seventy-one. Mr. Tatman retained his sight and hearing to a remarkable degree. After he had reached ninety years he appeared to be a man of much fewer years. The weight of nearly a century of life did not prevent his attendance upon his duties at the bank. He retained his interest in the young, and to such his home was always attractive. For the last forty years he resided in the simple, unostentatious dwelling in Odessa, where he died. He lived under the administration of the Presidents from Washington to Cleveland, inclusive. He died October 21, 1887, leaving behind him an unassuming name. He will always be thought of as one of the most upright and useful citizens of the county. His funeral was largely attended, and his remains lie buried in the same grave with those of his mother in the cemetery of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Odessa. In person, Mr. Tatman was considerably above the average in both height and weight. He measured about six feet in stature, and his average weight was about two hundred pounds. He was regular and temperate in his habits, and indulged in no vicious practices. To this prudence is largely due his long and healthful life.

Corbit Library.—James Corbit, M.D., by will bearing date June 18, 1856, bequeathed certain loans, amounting in all to nine hundred and fifty dollars, to the School Commissioners of School District No. 61. He directed that three hundred dollars be expended in the purchase of a library for the use of the public school, and that the interest of the remaining six hundred and fifty dollars be applied to making annual additions. By an act of incorporation passed February 27, 1857, it was made the duty of the Commissioners of School District No. 61 to take under their special charge the library said district. This library, from the name of its generous founder, was called Corbit Library. It has also been endowed by the late Daniel Corbit, of Odessa, and his son, the late Dr. Wm. B. Corbit, of Washington, D.C. The former contributed five hundred dollars, and the latter four hundred volumes of well-selected literature. He also made provisions in his will that after the death of his wife the library should receive ten thousand dollars. The library now comprises two thousand three hundred volumes of choice literature, and occupies a portion of the public school building. New books are constantly being added. The library is open for three hours every Saturday, at which time the inhabitants of the district are allowed to take out books subject to the rules adopted by the commissioners for governing the same.

The librarian is Miss Ida Rose.

Public Hall.—The Odessa Hall Company was organized in November, 1875, and incorporated in 1877. In the former year a lot of land on Main Street was purchased of Mrs. Martha George, and the erection of a building begun. This was completed in 1876, and was a two-story frame structure, thirty-six by seventy feet. Four hundred shares of stock, each valued at five dollars, were issued and found a ready sale. Much interest was manifested in the erection of the hall, and those unable to contribute money performed manual labor. The first officers were: President, Joseph L. Gibson; Secretary, G. W. Polk; Treasurer, J. G. Brown. The second floor is used as a hall, and although it has not proved a financial success, yet on account of its convenience as a place for assembling and holding public meetings, it has proved a decided advantage to the town. The officers at present are as follows: President, Joseph L. Gibson; Secretary, W. S. Van Dyke; Treasurer, J. G. Brown.

The Odessa Loan Association was incorporated February 19, 1885. The incorporators were George W. Polk, Samuel R. Warren, William Polk, James T. Shallcross, Turpin W. Rose, Victor Lord, Daniel W. Corbit, Columbus Watkins, Joseph G. Brown, Leonard V. Asplir, Eugene C. Mailly, William M. Vandegrift, and Cyrus Polk. The association was immediately organized, and the following officers elected: President, William Polk; Vice-President, Victor Lord; Secretary, Wm. M. Vandegrift; Treasurers, Cyrus Polk; Directors, Samuel R. Warren, Turpin W. Rose, Daniel W. Corbit, Columbus Watkins, James T. Shallcross, Joseph G. Brown, Leonard V. Asplir, Eugene C. Mailly, Elias N. Moore.

In July, 1887, Joseph G. Brown succeeded Cyrus Polk as treasurer. In February of the same year Henry L. Davis was elected a director, as the successor of Columbus Watkins.

Three series have already been issued, the first of which was issued February 23, 1885. The whole number of shares at any one time cannot exceed two thousand.

With the exception of the change above mentioned, the officers are the same as when the organization was effected.

The membership has increased to fifty-five. Meetings are held every Wednesday night. The post-machine contains the flag of the Red Lion Mounted Guards, probably the first company organized in Delaware, which was presented by Capt. Chas. Corbit, and the flag of the ship "Constitution," com-maded in the War of 1812 by Commodore Hull. The present officers are: F. C., M. Gremminger; S. V. C., T. W. Bucke; J. V. C., I. F. Croft; Q. M., D. W. Corbit; Adjt., Wm. A. Rhodes; Chap., Jos. A. Rhodes.

Appoquinimink Tribe, No. 24, I. O. R. M., was instituted at Odessa on the 14th of February, 1887. The charter members were Irvin Rose, John E. Jenkins, Samuel R. Rupp, Robert Pinharlow, W. F. Tucker, Wm. W. Rose, Wm. W. Thomas, John Heldmyer, Jas. A. Parker, C. W. Lloyd, Everett Rose, Geo. W. Rose, Wm. Johnson, Lewis Walker, Arthur Thomas and Wm. Ryan. Meetings are held every Tuesday night in the G. A. R. Post room. The present number of members is thirty. The first and present officers, with the exception of Samuel R. Rupp as S. S., are: Sachem, Irvin Rose; S. S., Robert Pinharlow; J. S., W. F. Tucker; C. of R., Wm. W. Thomas; K. of W., John Heldmyer; W. P., John E. Jenkins.

The Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company, of St. George's and Appoquinimink was organized at Odessa, July, 1849, by electing the following officers: President, John Janvier, Jr., Secretary, Charles Tatman; Treasurer, John Whitby; Directors, John Janvier, Jr., Joseph Cleaver, Daniel Corbit, James V. Moore, John Townsend, Wm. Wilson, Jno. P. Cochran.

John Janvier, Jr., remained president until 1851, when he was succeeded by Charles Beasen, whom Charles T. Polk followed in 1854. Daniel Corbit became president in 1863, and continued until 1871, when John C. Corbit, the present incumbent, was elected.

Charles Tatman, the first secretary, held that office until 1876, when he was succeeded by John C. Brown, the present officer, who was also elected treasurer in 1870, vice John Whitby. The changes in the board of directors have been as follows:

1865. Eli Biddle and Joseph West, vice John Janvier, Jr., and Joshua B. Fennimore.
1863. William Polk, vice C. T. Polk.
1871. Columbus Watkins and John C. Corbit, vice Eli Biddle and John Whitby.
1873. Col. Ferguson, vice Joseph West.
1876. Charles Tatman, vice Daniel Corbit.
1877. Thomas J. Craven, vice Chaas. Tatman.
1885. Nathaniel Williams, vice Henry Davis.

Hotels.—The first hotel in Odessa stood on the brink of the hill near the residence of Shoemaker. It was a one-story frame building with a hip roof, and was about forty feet square. It was last used as a hotel in 1825, and was torn down about twenty years ago. In 1797 a license for an inn in the village of Cantwell's Bridge was granted to Mary Calhoun, who had kept the hotel for some time. Some of the early proprietors were Morton Hutchinson, Capt. Wm. Brady in 1815, Wm. P. Cochran, Amelia Cooke, Daniel Hains and James Henry, the last proprietor. The house was owned by Morton Hutchinson till 1830, when he sold it to Wm. Polk.

The hotel on the corner of Main and Second Streets was built in 1822 by William Polk, and opened in 1824 by Ford Mansfield. The mechanics employed were Samuel Lloyd and George Metcalf. The building was intended for a dwelling and store, but before it was completed was changed to a hotel. It is a three-story brick building, and is owned by William Polk, the grandson of the builder. For the past two years Charles W. Lloyd has been the proprietor.

The other hotel in Odessa was built about twenty-five years ago by Caleb C. Foster for a carriage factory. Shortly afterward George Kilkopf opened a hotel in it, which he conducted until his death, when his widow became the proprietor. John Wies was the next landlord, and his license was revoked in 1876. In 1882 the hotel was reopened by Calvin Stidham, the present proprietor.

At Port Penn in 1822 there were five hotels. One was where Dr. David Stewart now resides, another where Conrad Zachris lives, and a third on lot now owned by Samuel Kershaw. The only hotel now in the place, of which Thomas Beard is proprietor, was kept in 1797 and previous to that time by Rebecca Reed.

Religious Matters.—When the congregation of Drawyer's Church was organized is not definitely known. In 1708 the Presbytery of Philadelphia was petitioned by persons residing in the vicinity of Odessa for regular ministrations of the Gospel here. Rev. John Wilson, of New Castle, was accordingly ordered to hold services in this neighborhood "once a month on a week day." In the following year he was ordered "to preach at Apoquiniminy once a month until the next meeting, and one Sabbath a quarter until the aforesaid meeting, provided always that the Sabbath day's sermon be taken from the White Clay Creek their time." On May 10, 1711, a site was located and obtained from John Peterson. The erection of a church was immediately commenced, and soon afterwards completed. Among the elders previous to 1775 are found the names of the following early settlers: 1711, Leonard Vandegrift; 1712, Isaac Piper; 1714, Hans Hanson; 1714, Segfridus Alrichs; 1717, Elias Naund; 1721, Johnnes Vandegrift; 1724, Abraham Golden, Sr.; 1725, Thomas Hyatt; 1727, Jacob King; 1731, Francis King; 1732, Moses McKinley and Charles Robinson; 1746, Garrett Dushane, David Witherspoon, James McCoomb, Garrett Rothwell, Cornelius King, Joseph Hill, James Anderson and James Vance.

In 1769, the church being "unfit to answer the purposes of a house of worship," a subscription was raised for the purpose of erecting a new edifice.

HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

Peter Alrichs, John Hanson, John Hyatt, Jr., James Moore, William Bradford, Duncan Beard, Henry Packard, Jr., and Andrew Brown were appointed a building committee. In 1778 a two-story brick church forty-four by fifty-six feet, was erected by Bobt. May & Co., of London. The bricks were burned on the farm of Robert Meldrum, afterwards owned by Samuel Penington. In 1807 there were only thirty-nine members in communion, eight of whom were colored persons. In 1811 a new roof was put on the church, and in 1838 the pulpit and seats were remodeled and the interior of the building improved. The whole sum raised by subscription for the erection of the church was £1105 and 13s., which was donated by one hundred and eighty-eight individuals. The church is still standing, although no longer used regularly for public worship. On the inside of the building, engraved on marble slabs, are the following inscriptions:

"THE CHURCH OF THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN SOCIETY IN THIS HUNDRED BUILT A.D. 1778. REV. THOMAS READ, A.M., PASTOR. THIS STONE, THE GIFT OF MRS. MARY HILL. SERVE THE LORD WITH GLADNESS. Ps. 120, 24."

"THIS SITE PURCHASED, MAY 10, 1711. THE FIRST CHURCH BUILT 1711. REV. JOHN WILSON, PASTOR. 1708. "YOUR FATHERS, WHERE ARE THEY?"

Rev. John Wilson, the first pastor, was one of the original members of the first Presbyterian organized in the United States, and died in 1712.

Rev. Robert Witherspoon, the second minister, was ordained at Drawyer's Church May 18, 1714, and continued his pastorate until his death, which occurred in May, 1718. Rev. Mr. Young next ministered here, either as a supply or as a pastor, from 1718 until his death in 1721.

Rev. Henry Hook took charge of the congregation in 1722, and remained until his death, which occurred in 1741.

Rev. John Dick was ordained November 12, 1746, and served this congregation until his death, which occurred the following year.

Rev. Hector Allison was pastor from 1758 until 1758, when he removed.

Rev. Thomas Read, the next pastor, began in 1768, as stated supply, and from 1772 until 1796 was regular pastor.

Rev. John Burton commenced his labors here in May, 1804, and continued as stated supply until 1822. He died in 1825, and is buried at St. George's.

Rev. Joseph Wilson, from Nottingham, Pennsylvania, was installed as pastor over Drawyer's, Smyrna and Forest Churches in 1822, and remained until 1880.

On July 1, 1832, Rev. Nicholas Patterson commenced preaching as stated supply, and continued until November.

The church since that time has been served by the following pastors: 1832, Rev. David De Forest; 1838-35, Rev. Warren G. Jones; 1836-39, Rev. Charles Brown; 1839, Rev. George Foot.

The Rev. Geo. Foot began his labors with this church September 8, 1839, and was installed pastor of this and the Port Penn Church November 19, 1839.

The Rev. Isaac W. K. Handy began to supply the church June 15, 1848, and continued as supply and pastor until 1858. He served this church in connection with the Port Penn Church two years, when, by Presbytery, the relation between these churches was dissolved, and Mr. Handy became pastor of the Forest Presbyterian Church of Middletown, in connection with Drawyer's. In 1859 the relation between these churches was dissolved, and reunion with the Port Penn Church was effected. This relation continued till 1864, since which time Drawyer's Church has stood alone.

The Rev. David McClure was ordained and installed pastor of the united churches of Drawyer's and Port Penn November 9, 1858, and continued pastor until October, 1854.

April 1, 1858, the Drawyer's Church called the Rev. H. J. Gaylord, who continued pastor until April, 1861.

The Rev. F. Hendricks supplied the church until 1862. The new church edifice erected at Odessa by the Drawyer's congregation was dedicated May 9, 1861. It is a large and handsome brick building, and cost eleven thousand dollars.

In 1886 the audience-room was frescoed and recarpeted, the wood-work repainted, and new pulpit furniture put in, which makes it one of the most comfortable and beautiful audience-rooms on the Peninsula.

From 1868 until 1876 the church was supplied by the Rev. Mr. Burdett, the Rev. Mr. Howard and others.

The Rev. John Crowell, D.D., was installed August 1, 1867, and continued his pastorate until 1879.

The pastorate of the Rev. W. V. Louderough extended from September 24, 1879, to February 27, 1882.

The Rev. James Conway was installed May 30, 1882, and the dissolution of the pastoral relation was effected November 27, 1882.

The Rev. H. A. McLean, the present pastor, supplied the church from May, 1883, until October 2, 1884, when he was installed.

During all these years (from 1842) the church has been served by many able and faithful elders. Notable among these were John M. Woods, A. Snow Naudain, John Aspril, Jesse Higgins, H. G. Whittuck and John Janvier. John Janvier and H. G. Whittuck were both ordained to the office of ruling elder on the same day, October 12, 1856. The former served until his removal to Oxford, Pennsylvania, in 1866, and the latter until his death, in 1884, a period of twenty-eight years.

The present elders are Dr. W. N. Hamilton, James J. Janvier and F. Theodore Perry. They were all
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

The church since that time has been served by the Rev. J. Janvier and Rev. Theodore Perry. They were all ordained and installed on Sabbath morning, March 10, 1878, and are still one in the support and spread of the Gospel.

The Sabbath-School, organized July 21, 1861, has never been large. Elder James J. Janvier has just closed his four years' superintendency, in which he has shown extraordinary fidelity in the work, and the school is now quite as prosperous as it has been for some years.

Schools.—The first school-house in Odessa was erected at an early date by the Friends and was under their control. It was a frame building and stood in the lot near the Friends' meeting-house. It was not used much for school purposes after 1817, and at a later period was removed and converted into a dwelling. It is now in the rear of the Zoar M. E. Church and is the residence of the pastor of this congregation.

Another frame school-house was erected, about 1810, near the site of the present school-house. James Latimus, a half-brother of Bishop Scott, and Joseph Stewart are remembered as teachers of this school. It was used for school purposes until 1833, when it was moved away and was converted into a dwelling and has been used as such since that time.

The free school law of 1829 was unpopular with many in this neighborhood. The frame school-house was used for public school purposes for a short time, and in 1833 a new school-house was built. This was burned in 1843, and in the following year the present two-story brick building was erected. In 1856 the school was endowed with the Corbit Library. The report of the school for 1886 shows the following state of affairs: Value of property, eighteen hundred dollars; number of pupils registered, one hundred and eighteen; number of rooms, two; number of teachers, two; average attendance, seventy; number of months school was held, ten and a half.

Elwood R. Norny was born in Montgomery County, Pa., near Norristown in 1824, on the homestead farm of his grandfather, General Andrew Norny, who was a soldier of the War of the Revolution, and one of those patriots who endured the severities of that memorable winter in the camp on the hills of Valley Forge. General Norny was the neighbor and companion of Generals Knox and St. Clair, the three soldiers owning farms within a few miles of each other. Soon after the close of the war he was appointed a brigadier-general by the Governor of Pennsylvania. Mr. E. R. Norny's father always followed the vocation of farming, and died at a comparatively early age. His mother was one of the descendants of the old Pastorias family, who, contemporaneous with William Penn, were among the first settlers and founders of Philadelphia and Germantown. At the age of twenty, Mr. Norny began to study law at Norristown with the Hon. John B. Sterigere, an ex-member of Congress. About two years later he abandoned the law for the more active pursuits of business, and, in connection with his brother, constituted a firm which carried on the largest business in the manufacturing and sale of lime in the Schuylkill Valley. In this business, which grew to large proportions and included traffic in brick, sand and hair for buildings, he continued for several years, during which the firm traded extensively in Philadelphia and New York. Large quantities of their lime were sold to customers in New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland for agricultural purposes, before the era of commercial fertilizers. In 1852 he married Cynthia J. Acuff, a daughter of David Acuff, an extensive farmer of Gwynedd, Montgomery County, Pa. In the spring of 1859, on account of the greatly impaired health of his wife, he sold out his business to Charles Earnest, of Norristown, and located on a farm on the banks of the Delaware, in St. George's Hundred, New Castle County. Here he took a deep interest in the propagation and preservation of the valuable food-fish of the Delaware, and was one of the early correspondents and aids of the United States Fish Commission, being the first to discover the food on which the shad feed while off our coast before entering the fresh water. Later he took an active interest in the protection of fish industries of the State, and was largely instrumental in the passage of our fish laws, as well as in their execution on the waters of the Delaware. This brought him to the notice of the people, who elected him a member of the General Assembly of the State in the fall of 1886. In this position he took an active part in all important legislation, and materially aided in the revision and condensation of the numerous oyster laws on the statute books of the State. Immediately after the adjournment of the General Assembly in April, 1887, he was appointed by Governor Biggs State Fish Commissioner, the office which he now holds. In politics, Mr. Norny has always been a Democrat, and took an active part, for a young man, in the election of James Buchanan to the Presidency of the United States in 1856. So active was he in that campaign that His Honor Judge Sharswood, then of the District Court of Philadelphia, and subsequently chief justice of the State, held for him alone a special court at eight o'clock A.M., on the day of the election, to enable him to bring into the city a large number of Democrats from the adjoining county of Montgomery to be naturalized in time to get back to their respective places of voting. While residing in Philadelphia, from 1852 to 1859, he was offered several positions of political preferment, among which was the nomination to Congress in the Fourth District. This honor, because of pressing business engagements, he was compelled to decline in favor of the Hon. Henry M. Phillips, who was elected by a majority over both the Old-Line Whig and Know-Nothing candidates. During the long period of his residence in New Castle County he took no active part in influencing or shaping political nominations until the summer of 1886, when he was elected, in an exciting contest, a delegate to the Democratic State Convention, in which he made the nominating speech in favor of the Hon. Benjamin T. Biggs for Governor.

PORT PENN.—According to tradition, William Penn, while on a voyage to Philadelphia, landed near the present location of Port-Penn for a supply of water.
In honor of this brief visit the village received its name. The land on which it stands was originally granted to Abraham Planck, Simon Root, Jan Andriessen and Peter Harmensen in 1646. The condition of the grant, that they settle upon the land, was not complied with and their title was forfeited. Peter Alrich was the next owner and at a later period it passed to David Stewart. Stewart came from Scottland about 1700, and at first settled at St. George's, and afterwards at Port Penn. The village was laid out in lots previous to 1735, for in that year Daniel Blaney, had a store there and also rented and sold building lots. Thomas Craven, David Wild, Robert Wild and Mary Stewart were owners of land in Port Penn at this time. In 1822 the village was a grain market, and also a port of entry. In consequence of this, it was generally thronged with sailors and was very immoral. Although at that time containing but about one hundred and fifty inhabitants, there were five inns or taverns, and these were generally filled with transient guests. A custom-house was here until about twenty years ago, and was last under the supervision of John Jones. A barracks was also located where the residence of William S. Eaton now stands. Until the erection of the landing at the Breakwater, Port Penn was the best port on the Delaware shore. There are several very old houses in the village. The one occupied by Miss Mary Stewart is a frame hip-roofed house with a fire-back in the open hearth bearing the date 1728. The residence of Dr.
Stewart is of brick and has a very old appearance.
The iron fire-back bears the date 1750, and on a pane of glass is inscribed "William Montgomery, 1756." It is said that the chimney of this house was struck by a cannon-ball fired by a ship in the War of 1812. A frame house now owned and occupied as a residence by William H. Muller was also struck by a cannonball during the same war. The house occupied by James M. Webb was built and used as a residence by Count Pulaski. Before the erection of railroads Port Penn was a centre for the grain produced in the northern part of St. George's Hundred. Joseph Cleaver was the principal grain merchant at this place.
He built a wharf near by and frequently the road for half a mile distant was crowded with teams awaiting their opportunity to unload.

Port Penn is situated in the northeastern part of St. George's Hundred, about four miles south of Delaware City. During the summer it has steamboat communication with Philadelphia. The population of the village is about three hundred. The merchants at the present time are Henry Cleaver, T. D. Stewart and Conrad Zacharias.

Schools.—On July 15, 1795, Mr. Monies began to keep a select school at Port Penn. He was also here in 1799 and, perhaps, kept at a later date. About 1810
Mrs. Rebecca Reed granted to Adam Diehl, John Diehl, William Kennedy, Dr. David Stewart and Dr.
William Carpenter a tract of land on which to erect a building for school and church purposes. The building was erected and used for subscription school till 1830, when it was opened as a district school. The old building was used till quite recently, when it was supplanted by the present neat structure. The old building stood near the present residence of Joshua Jefferson. The auditor's report for 1886 shows that the school was open for nine months and thirteen days and that there were enrolled fifty-two pupils.

The Presbyterian Church in Port Penn was organized July 16, 1837, with seventeen members, nine of whom came from Drawyer's and eight from St.
George's. Mrs. William Cleaver, Jr., Mrs. Mary C.
Cleaver, John Price, Mrs. Susan Price, Miss Ann
Price, Mrs. Martha J. Price, Mrs. Priscilla Cleaver, Mrs. Mary Alrich and Mrs. Mary Stewart were from Drawyer's; and Mrs. Mary Cox, Mrs. Honora Matthews, Mrs. Eliza F. Dilworth, Mrs. Maria J. Hewes, Mrs. Rachel Webb, Mrs. Margaret Darrach, Miss Margaret L. Kernahan and Miss Hester E. Dilworth were of the St. George's congregation. The first church was a frame building erected in 1834, on a lot on the corner of Market and Stewart Streets, conveyed February 28, 1834, to John M. Woods, John Cannon and John Price, trustees, by Mrs. Margaret Darrach. The building is now used by the Zion A.
M. E. Church. In 1856 the present two-story brick church, thirty-two by fifty feet, was built at a cost of six thousand dollars. On March 17th of that year additional land was conveyed by Mrs. Darrach to John Price, Samuel Jefferson, Joseph Cleaver, Wm.
Cleaver, Jr., Jacob A. Penington and Samuel B.
Cleaver, trustees. In 1871 a parsonage was purchased at a cost of five hundred dollars, and remodeled.
The present membership is seventy-three. Ninety scholars are enrolled in the Sunday-school, which is under the superintendency of Henry Price. The present trustees are Henry Price, Thos. F. Dilworth, Henry C. Walter, Joseph Cleaver and John B. Vandegrift.
The first elders were Wm. Cleaver, Jr., and Samuel Jefferson. John M. Woods, David Stewart, Henry Walter and John B. Vandegrift have also served in that capacity. The following ministers have served as pastors and stated supplies:

Rev. Charles Brown.............1837-39
Rev. George Foot................1839-48
Rev. Isaac W. K. Handy........1848-51
Rev. T. Balaam Smith.........1851-52
Rev. R. A. Smith.................1853-54
Rev. David McSure.........1855-56
Rev. H. J. Gaylord..............1856-57
Rev. R. K. Schofield.............1867-68

Rev. N. S. Moore..............1866
Rev. Samuel M. Gould..........1866-68
Rev. S. G. Allison.............1866-71
Rev. S. G. Boardman...........1871-74
Rev. W. K. Preston.............1884-85
Rev. Roland A. Sawyer, Jr., present pastor.

About 1850 a revival was held in a school-house in Port Penn by a portion of the Methodist congregation of Asbury Chapel. This led to the organization of a church there, and the erection of a frame church building, about twenty-eight by forty feet. The church flourished for a while and then began to decline.
NEW CASTLE COUNTY.

There were at one time about forty members. The last regular services were conducted in 1881. Since that time occasional meetings have been held.

CHAPTER LI.

APPOQUINIMINK HUNDRED.

THAT portion of New Castle County lying between Appoquinimink and Duck Creeks was formerly denominated Appoquinimink Hundred. Mention is made of this territory as a hundred in a deed bearing date January 15, 1708, from William Grant, of "Appoquinimink. Hundred to John Darmercier. Appoquinimink is an Indian term said to mean wounded duck.

By an act of the Legislature, passed March 9, 1875, this land was divided into two hundreds, the northern portion retaining the name Appoquinimink, and the southern part was termed Blackbird, after the stream which forms its northern boundary. The present Appoquinimink is bounded on the north by St. George's Creek and Hundred; on the east by the same, Blackbird Creek and Delaware River; on the south by Blackbird Creek and Hundred and on the west by Maryland. The territory is well watered and very productive. The eastern portion consists mainly of reclaimed marsh. The principal products are corn, wheat and peaches. Facilities for shipping are afforded by the Blackbird and Appoquinimink Creeks and the Delaware Division of Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad. In 1863 there were forty taxable inhabitants between Appoquinimink and Duck Creeks. The assessment list of the same territory for 1751, as returned by William Williams, contained the names of two hundred and forty-nine taxable, and a total assessment amounting to two thousand nine hundred and fifteen dollars.

The land between Appoquinimink and Duck Creeks seems to have early attracted the attention of both emigrants and residents of the northern part of the county. On July 1, 1669, William Tom sent to Governor Nichols a request that "ye Finns or others residing at or about Delaware may have an enlargement of their bounds, for y* w* they desire to take up some lands at Appoquiminy, lying and being w*in ye government." He also requested "that some families from Maryland may have liberty to come and settle upon ye kill below Apooquenni." These requests were granted August 2d of that year, upon condition "that in some convenient time a Draught be taken of ye land and a return thereof made to the Governor together with its extent, whereupon those that settle there shall have Patents."

A letter is ordered to be written to treat with some of them for a settlement."

In 1671 a patent was granted to Abraham Coffin for four hundred acres of land called "Mountain Neck." It was for some reason abandoned, and in 1686 was resurveyed for Johannes De Haes and Ephraim Herman. De Haes was a native of France and the maternal ancestor of the Janvier family; he was a prominent man, a magistrate and a member of the first Legislature of Pennsylvania, held under Penn in 1683. He subsequently became the sole owner of the above tract and also acquired other property in New Castle County. At his death he devised his estate to his son Rooef, who was a member of the first Legislative Assembly in Delaware in 1704. This farm afterwards came into the possession of Thomas Noxon, the founder of Noxontown. A portion of it was conveyed in 1742 by Henry Petersen to Abraham Gooding. In the deed it is mentioned that it is known as "Lucasen Neck," but in the original grant was called "Mountain Neck," and near it was "Thomas Noxon's new mill-pond." Brigadier-General Cesar Rodney, with his corps of Delaware militia, encamped for a season on this farm. Noxon purchased other land in this and St. George's Hundreds. He erected two grist-mills in the vicinity of this tract, and on their sites there are now several mills. According to tradition, in early times fairs were held annually at Noxontown for several days, at which were exhibited home products and imports from England. It was a season of great festivity, and the fairs were attended by many persons from a great distance. On Noxon's land, between the Appoquinimink and a branch called Sassafras Branch (Noxontown mill-pond), was a bake-house, a brew-house and a malt-house, and a landing which was used as late as 1806. An old frame building, recently torn down, was used for hotel purposes at a very early date. A brick house in good repair, now owned by William Evans, was built by Nozen, and at one time contained a stone with the inscription "Thomas Noxon, 1740." This was torn out by one of the owners, and is now in the possession of M. N. Willis. Thomas Noxon died in 1743 and devised his mills to his son Benjamin, and his other estate he divided among his children. Descendants of Thomas Noxon still reside in this hundred. The land on which he resided is now owned by W. E. Evans. The adjoining land, formerly belonging to Noxon, is now in the possession of Edward Appleton.

On June 16, 1671, Gov. Francis Lovelace patented to Robert Moreton a tract of five hundred acres and marsh on west of Delaware River, "betwixt Blackbird Creek and Appaquimime: Bounded on ye east w* appaquinyimy creek: on ye south with a branch w* extendeth it selfe westerly out of ye same creek and divideth this from ye land of John Hartop and Henry Hartop and from ye land of Seneca Brewer, w* is called Hang-mans Hooke: and on ye two opposite sides w* ye Maine Woods." On October 31, 1674, Morton conveyed one-half of this tract, "excepting..." that part of the same as is already this day cleared," to William Grant. Grant's portion was adjoining Appoquinimink Creek. Portions of this tract were owned at various times by Thomas Snelling, Gustavus Anderson, Edmund and Richard Cantwell, Abraham Martin, Joseph Hill, Alexander Crawford, John Hiorns, and finally vested solely in Samuel Thomas, who in 1820 owned large tracts in the northeastern part of the hundred. The above tract was next owned by D. W. Thomas, and is now in the possession of John C. Corbit and Samuel C. Thomas. Thomas' Landing is situated within the boundaries of this grant. Hangman's Hook, mentioned in the above recital, lay south of the Merton tract, and was bounded on the east by Blackbird Creek and on the south by the branch known as Hangman's Branch. This tract was patented in 1671 to Seneca Brewer, who was also the owner of land in Christiana Kill. It also forms a portion of the Thomas land.

On March 25, 1676, Gov. Andros warranted to Robert Tallen a tract of land containing two hundred acres, known as "Poplar Hill," situate north of Hangman's Neck and also touching Beaver Dam. This tract was later owned by Samuel Thomas.

Gov. Lovelace patented to William Warner in 1671 "Knowibush Haven," a tract of four hundred acres adjoining Robert Morton's land. This was also owned by Samuel Thomas and is now in the hands of John C. Corbit.

Capt. Edmund Cantwell, who resided at or near Odessa, was an extensive land-holder in Appoquinimink Hundred. On September 5, 1672, a tract of eight hundred acres on Appoquinimink Creek was granted to him by Gov. Lovelace. This tract was granted June 17, 1671, to William Sinclair, who for some reason forfeited his right to it. It was "nigh unto Appoquinimink Creek," being a point or neck of land between two main branches of the creek, north with Main Branch and southeast with Sassafras Branch. He also obtained by grant or purchase a large tract of land between Hangman's Branch and Blackbird Creek, and extending nearly to the present site of Fieldsboro, containing about two thousand two hundred acres. Red Clift, a tract of one thousand five hundred acres, bounded on the north by Appoquinimink Creek and on the west by Sassafras Branch, was in his possession at the time of his deceased and contained many improvements. By his will, bearing date October 28, 1679, he devised the lower plantation, which he had purchased of Thomas Snelling, to his son Richard, the middle portion of his estate to his daughter Joanna and the upper part to his daughter. At the death of Joanna her portion vested in Richard and Elizabeth, who was the wife of Henry Garretson.

The eight-hundred-acre tract was sold by the heirs of Edmund Cantwell, August 16, 1707, to William Dyre, and was afterwards owned by John Frogg, Baldwin Johnson, Thomas Hopkinson and John Allfree. On May 13, 1796, William Allfree sold three hundred acres of it to Benjamin Noxon, son of Thomas Noxon.

It is now owned by R. T. Cochran, R. L. Naudain and the heirs of A. S. Naudain. The tract between Hangman's Branch and Blackbird Creek was at a later period owned by John J. Milligan, and is now in the possession of Edward C. Fenimore, John C. Corbit, D. W. Corbit, the heirs of John J. Milligan and Mrs. Sarah Polk.

The Red Clift tract became the property of Henry Garretson May 18, 1709, and has passed through various hands and is now divided and owned by Nathaniel Williams, Manlove D. Wilson, John F. Staats, Columbus Watkins, Isaac M. Davis and Joseph C. Hutchinson.

A tract of four hundred acres adjoining Cantwell's grant was patented to Bezaleel Osbourne by William Penn, and was assigned by his heirs to John Healy, July 13, 1704. Cornelius Cooper, the next owner, conveyed this land to John Demerst, October 1, 1716. The tract next passed into the hands of Charles Robinson, who, at his death, devised his estate to his son Charles and his daughter Mary, who was the wife of Philip Hanson. Charles sold his portion to Slator Clay, an innkeeper of New Castle, February 13, 1759. This portion is now owned by John C. Corbit. Mary's portion descended to her son, William Hanson, who, in 1778, conveyed it to James Moore, by whom it was sold to Mrs. Richard C. Dale. It is now owned by James V. Moore, the oldest resident of the hundred. The entire tract, while in the possession of Charles Robinson, was known as "New England Man's Land." Robinson was also the owner of one hundred and four acres on the south side of Appoquinimink Creek and adjoining land of Richard Cantwell, which he purchased of Thomas Noxon, February 18, 1737.

The Naudains of this and adjoining hundreds are the descendants of Elias Naudain, who was the son of Elias, a Huguenot, born at Nantes, France, in 1655, and driven from there to England in 1681, on account of his religious views. He died in 1688, and his widow, whose maiden-name was Gabel Arnum, married Jacob Rattier and came to America. Elias was born in London and made a denizen in 1703. His certificate of denization, made out before Thomas Lawrence, a notary public of London, and recorded at New Castle, June 12, 1720, says that Elias Naudain, "the born beyond the seas, is made her Majesty's liege subject," and is given all the rights of subjects as well as the privilege of purchasing land in any of her dominions. He came to America and settled in Appoquinimink Hundred early in the eighteenth century. In 1711 he erected a brick house, which is still standing, and is now owned by Daniel W. Corbit. In 1715 he was an elder in Drawyer's Church. His first recorded deed bears date August 23, 1722, and is for a tract of land in St. George's Hundred, which he purchased of Moses McKinley, being one hundred acres of a tract devised by William Patterson to his daughter, Elizabeth, wife of Moses McKinley, January 17, 1699, and situated on St. Augustine Creek. He also purchased of Jacob Read a tract of three hundred acres, called "Sutton," near St. George's Creek. "Spring Garden," a tract of two hundred acres on the southwest side of Drawyer's Creek, was purchased by him, June 11, 1723, of Jonas Wright. On August 19, 1734, he purchased two hundred acres more of the William Patterson land of the son, William. It was part of the Herman grant, which William Patterson purchased March 17, 1686, and was on the south side of St. Augustine Creek, and along the King's road. He also purchased a tract on Blackbird Creek, on the north side of the mouth of the creek of Johannes Jacquet. This tract comprised two hundred and twenty-nine acres, and was called "Hartop's Pasture," which was owned in 1671 by John and Henry Hartop.

Daniel Corbit, a Scotch Quaker, settled on a tract adjoining land then in the possession of Richard Cantwell and Elias Naudain early in the eighteenth century. In 1765 William Corbit built a tan-yard near Odessa, and the family shortly afterwards moved there and have been associated with its history since. The three manor-houses and portions of the land owned by Cantwell, Naudain and Daniel Corbit were, at a later period, owned by Daniel Corbit, a great-grandson of the original Daniel. They are now owned by his heirs, John C. and Daniel W. Corbit, of Odessa, and Louisa, wife of Captain Charles Corbit, of Red Lion Hundred.

In 1683 Lord Baltimore granted to Peter Sayer a tract of one thousand acres called "Worsell Manor." The larger portion of this tract was situated in Maryland and the remainder in this hundred. It afterwards came into the possession of James Heath, who was buried on the land. The inscription on his tombstone is as follows:

"Here lies the body of Mr. James Heath, who was born at Warwick on the 27th day of July, 1658, and died the 10th day of November, 1731, in the seventy-fourth year of his age. Requiescat in Pace."

It was his desire to be buried in Maryland, but the line run between the States in 1788 places his remains on Delaware soil. The farm, at a later period, was owned by William Wilson and is now in the possession of Samuel R. Warren.

On June 9, 1708, Maurice Liston sold to Samuel Vance a tract of land containing two hundred and eighty-two acres on the east side of Heron Run and north of Blackbird Creek, being the property which was sold by Sheriff John French on a judgment obtained against Isaac Wholden, August 14, 1699. John Wright is the present owner.

Samuel Moore, of Appoquinimink Hundred, obtained a grant of one hundred and twenty-nine acres in the fork of Church Branch, near the head of Appoquinimink Creek. This was near St. Ann's Church, and was surveyed January 4, 1737. It is now owned by ex-Governor John P. Cochran and E. R. Cochran, clerk of the peace. In 1664 James Crawford, a physician, came with Sir Robert Carr from New York to New Castle, where, in 1667, he obtained a warrant for a tract of land in the town of New Castle or vicinity. He was also a sergeant in the English army which captured New Castle from the Dutch, and received the tracts of land "in consideration of good service performed by James Crawford, a soldier." In 1675 he obtained from Governor Edmund Andros a warrant for a tract of four hundred acres on St. George's Creek. He also obtained another warrant in 1683 for four hundred acres of land on Duck Creek. He died in 1688, leaving a widow,—Judith,—two sons,—John and James,—and a daughter,—Mary,—to survive him. His widow shortly afterwards married Edward Gibbs, the ancestor of the Gibbs living at the present time in St. George's Hundred. They reside on the plantation on St. George's, which they purchased from the other heirs. John, the son, sold his estate to his step-father, went to England and became an Episcopal minister. James came into possession of the property on Duck Creek, where he lived and died. Mary married Thomas Ogle and resided in White Clay Creek Hundred. James, the grandson of the original James, purchased land in Appoquinimink Hundred, on the "levels," some of which is still in the possession of the family.

John Scott and Lydia, his wife, came from Ireland, previous to 1772, and settled in Appoquinimink Hundred. In that year Rev. Thomas Scott was born. The family were early connected with the Methodists. On December 22, 1796, Thomas married Mrs. Anna Lattomus, a relict of John Lattomus, who owned a portion of the farm, which is now in the possession of George L. Townsend. There were two children of John Lattomus, John and Diana, of whom the latter died while a child. John married Mary Hopkins, and was the father of Levi W. Lattomus, who became a prominent man in Townsend. Sarah, Thomas and Levi were the children of Thomas Scott and Ann, his wife. Thomas occupied the homestead for many years after his father's death and then it passed into the hands of Levi, who became bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The house in which the bishop was born is still standing, though no longer used as a dwelling, and he referred to it as "The dear, old homestead of sawed poplar logs, with its narrow, hip shined, front and buck, running the whole length of the ground, and throwing off the falling showers from the door." It gave place in 1846, though on a different site, to a more modern and spruce-looking two-story frame house.

William Wilson, of "the Levels," was the youngest child of Edward and Lydia Rothwell Wilson. He was born at "Homestead Hall," near Middletown, September 17, 1810. His father was an extensive landowner and farmer, and well-known in his day. He died at the age of fifty-seven, when the subject of this sketch was about ten years old. William Wilson received a good English education at the district schools and the Middletown Academy. When he became of age he devoted himself to agriculture, and made it the business of his life. He had received a considerable quantity of land from his father's estate, but it had been much impaired in value by the exhausting methods of farming which then prevailed. With wise sagacity and untiring energy he devoted himself to the work of recuperating the land and enlarging his domain. He was so successful that years before his death he was the possessor of about thirty-five hundred acres of the choicest land in the Peninsula. His property extended beyond the State line into Maryland. His large estate included, at first, the "Mayfield" farm, the "Middlesex," "Homestead Hall," "Heath Mansion," "Brick Store Landing," and the "California" farms, all in Delaware; and the "Barren" tract, the "Foard" farm, "Painter's Rest" and "Oregon" farms, situated in Cecil County, Maryland. He also owned ten dwellings in Warwick, a carriage-shop, machine-shop and vacant lots, valued at $13,000. The "Brick Store" farm had come into Mr. Wilson's possession through his wife, Rachel Naudain, and had been in her family since the original patents were given to her ancestors by William Penn. Accordingly, at the death of Mr. Wilson, this farm became the property of William N. and John T., sons of Mr. Wilson's first wife, who was a daughter of Rev. Arnold S. Naudain, of New Castle. Mr. Wilson's lands were chiefly devoted to the growing of cereals, but, when the culture of fruit gave such encouraging promise as one of the profitable industries of the State, he became interested in it, and, at one time, had as many as thirty-five thousand peach trees in bearing. This interest was profitable from the first, and continued so until after the death of Mr. Wilson, when "the yellows" affected his trees as unfavorably as it had other orchards.

In politics, Mr. Wilson was an Old-Line Whig, and in early and middle life was quite active in political matters. He was several times prominently spoken of as a suitable candidate for Governor, but his desire for public office was not of a kind to make him enter the lists as a competitor. He was first married to Rachel Naudain, April 3, 1822.

She died in August, 1862, and left three children,—Lydia R., William Naudain and John Thomas. Lydia R. married James P. Rothwell, of New Castle County. She had two children, one of whom, Delaware Wilson Rothwell, is still living at Newark with his father. Mrs. Rothwell died in 1872.

In 1863 Mr. Wilson married Miss L. Annie, a daughter of Jacob V. Naudain. He died August 21, 1879, greatly regretted by the whole community. He was a man of uprightness, fidelity and kindness, and is kindly remembered as such by those who knew him.

Mrs. Wilson and her six children, Rachel R., Mollie L., Edward V., R. Alexis, Howard Groom and Bayard K.—survived Mr. Wilson, and now reside in Middletown in their pleasant home on South Broad Street. Miss Annie Jessie married Eugene Clayton, youngest son of Colonel Joshua Clayton, who fell a victim to the poisonous effects of the drugs used in his art as a taxidermist, in which he was unusually skilled. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Clayton has resided and now resides with her father-in-law. She has one child, which bears his father's name in full.

Since the death of Mr. Wilson the lands above mentioned have been sold. Two of the farms were purchased by John T. Wilson, and the proceeds of the sale of the others have been invested for the other heirs. Edward V. Wilson has recently bought the Etherington farm in Cecil County, Maryland, and expects to make it his future home. Alexis is, at present, 1887, attending school at Hackettsville, New Jersey.

Schools.—Long before the common-school system came into operation the necessity of imparting a good education to the young was felt, and for this purpose pay or subscription schools were opened in various parts of the hundred. Of the teachers of these select schools the names of John Mulholand, Irvell and James Caulder are well-remembered. In many instances then the children of the needy poor were looked after and sent to school. The introduction of the common-school system gave a new impetus to the work of education. The convenience of attending on account of the increased number of schools, together with the liberty extended to all, was universally looked upon as a great blessing. Lambert Simmons figured prominently among the pioneer teachers under the new system. The early boundaries of the districts in the hundred have been changed and new districts created as the increased population demanded more school-houses. The methods of teaching have improved, and the ability and capability of the teachers is of a much higher standard than formerly. The old and carelessly built school-houses have in most cases been replaced by new and convenient ones erected with some regard to the health of the pupils.

In 1883 the school commissioners of Townsend erected a nice two-story frame building. The upper floor is used as a public hall and for exhibitions of the school. The lower story is divided into two commodious rooms for school purposes.

Samuel Tyson serves in the capacity of principal.

St. Anne's Church was the earliest organized congregation in the southern portion of New Castle County. When the church is organized is not definitely known, but it was before 1704. The following is an extract from a grant by the commissioners of property to Richard Cantwell and William Dyre, dated 1st of Ninth Month, 1704:

"Whereas, Richard Cantwell and Wm. Dyre, with several others, Inhabitants upon and near Appoquinimink Creek in the County of New Castle, are requested that we would grant them a convenient piece of ground for erecting a chapel for the use and benefit of themselves and other members of the Church of England: These are to authorise and require them to survey and lay out, for the use aforesaid, in the place by them designed, for erecting the said chapel on the left hand of the Queen's Road, below the said Creek. The quantity of ten acres of land that is vacant and make returne unto the General Surveyor's Office, at Philadelphia."

The church was built the following year on a mound due east of the present edifice. The church was supplied till the Revolutionary War with ministers sent by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. In 1728 a disagreement arose between the pastor and congregation, and was the cause of a discontinuance of services. The following is a copy of a letter sent to him by some of the leading members, and is a matter of record:

"The unhappy differences that hath arisen between you & your Parishioners hath given us very great concern, not only for that you have declined (for some time past) giving that Attendance at our Church there to discharge your duty According to your appointment, but especially because the misunderstandings between ministers of the Church of England and their Parishioners tend greatly to theReproach of our most holy Religion and to bring us into contempt, and foresees as you have thought fit to vindicate your Reputation by a Prosecution at Law and have recovered Damages for the words spoken of you, we Request you, as a minister of the Church of England and a Christian to lay aside your Re恩ts and Return to the Care of your parish where you shall not fail to meet with all the Respect and Good usage due to a minister of the Gospel and a good man while you continue to live as much amongst us; we are in behalf of ourselves and the parishioners of Appoquinimink."

Among the rectors who ministered here previous to the Revolution were Rera, Sewell, Crawford, Jenkins, Biorck, Club, Ross (father of Geo. Ross, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence), Berry, Campbell, Hackett, Pugh and Reading. The latter died in 1778, and is buried near the church. The present edifice was erected in 1768. To this church Queen Anne presented a covering for the communion table with the initials of her name, viz.: "A.R." upon it in silk embroidery. This was the only relic saved from the fire which destroyed the church in 1822.

The old church, now only used once a year, stands about three-quarters of a mile from Middletown, on the only ridge for miles around, and which the English commissioners sent to examine the colonies described as a "huge mountain." It is a well-preserved building surrounded by a grove of gigantic oaks. The ivy around it was brought from England by Bishop Doane and planted here. During the Revolutionary War it is probable that there were no services conducted here, but in 1791 Rev. Bissell was rector. From that time services were held regularly here until 1872. In 1871 the building needed repairs, and it was decided on account of convenience to erect an edifice in Middletown. In that year a lot on the corner of Green and Church Streets was donated to the church by William Green, and the erection of a building commenced. The corner-stone was laid August 5th of the same year, by Dr. McCabe, and the consecration ceremonies were performed on the 4th of April following. This building was destroyed by fire May 2, 1882. The present handsome structure was then erected at a cost of $10,000 and opened for regular services on December 25th of the same year. The present number of communicants is about eighty. A Sunday-school under the superintendence of the rector is connected with the church. In 1883 a rectory was built at a cost of $3000. The officers of the church at present are: Senior Warden, H. N. Willits; Junior Warden, H. A. Nowland; Vestry, Wm. R. Cochran, W. A. Comesys, Joseph Hanson, John Lockwood, M. N. Willits, E. R. Cochran, Isaac Gibbs.

The first meeting that led to the erection of Emanuel M. E. Church, at Townsend, was held June 13, 1871. A ten-days' notice had been given by Archibald Finley that a meeting would be called on this date, for the purpose of selecting trustees to procure suitable grounds and erect a church. The trustees were A. Finley, Richard Townsend, Israel P. Hall, Isaac Passwaters, George M. D. Hart, William P. Forest, William Daniels, David S. Lynam and Nehemiah Davis. Of these, Townsend and Davis were appointed to select ground. On July 5, 1871, they purchased one acre, in the midst of a grove, of Samuel B. Ginn. The erection of a frame church, twenty-four feet by thirty-six feet, was immediately begun. It was dedicated on August 20th, of the same year, by Revs. J. F. Olymer, Vaughan Smith and W. G. Prettyman. The membership at this time was fifteen. The church was connected with the Appoquinimink Circuit until 1878, when it was made a separate station. Several additions have been made to the building at various times. The church has been very prosperous, and now has a membership of one hundred and twenty-five. A flourishing Sunday-school of one hundred and fifty scholars, under the superintendence of D. B. Maloney, is connected with the church. These scholars have the use of a well-selected library. On September 2, 1881, two and a half acres of land, about a mile southwest of the town, were purchased of James T. Taylor, and laid out in burying lots, and is under the control of the board of trustees of this church.

The board is at present composed of the following persons: Thomas Maloney, D. B. Maloney, George M. D. Hart, William Daniels, A. L. Quillen, James T. Taylor, H. A. Wilson and William A. Scott.

Since Emanuel Church has been a separate station it has been served by Revs. J. Hestin Willey, Theodo-found was too severe; he then went to Odessa to learn cabinet-making with John Janvier. He was converted October 16, 1821, preached as an itinerant in the spring of 1826, and in 1827 was junior preacher in the Dover District; 1828 in full connection. In 1845 he was presiding elder of South Philadelphia District. In 1848 he was assistant book agent for a Methodist book concern in New York. 1852 Methodist Episcopacy.

INDUSTRIES.—The earliest record of any industry in Appoquinimink Hundred is relative to the mills in Noxontown. When they were built is unknown, but in 1736 Thomas Noxon purchased an acre of land for the use of a new mill. The mill here referred to is the mill known now as Drummond's Mill. From this it is fair to infer that the mill now owned and operated by William E. Evans was erected at an earlier date. It is said that the old mill was used solely for merchant work, and that ships ran to it and were loaded at its door. The new mill was erected for custom work, which was no small industry at that time. After the death of Thomas Noxon, in 1743, he devised his mills to his son, Benjamin, who operated them for some time. In 1785 Benjamin Williams was the owner of these mills, and on the assessment list of 1816 they were charged to the estate of Joseph Curry. The old mill was afterwards owned respectively by Samuel Hand, Edward Silcox and now by William E. Evans. It is a four-story frame building, forty by thirty feet. The grinding is done by burr, and is entirely custom work. The new mill was later owned by J. Drummond, and is now in the possession of the New Castle County Bank. It was refitted with a complete roller system in 1887, and has a capacity of a barrel and a half per hour. It is now operated by Willis Clothier. The earliest record of the mill now owned by I. A. Harmon is found on the assessment list of 1816, when it was the property of Joseph & Whitby, who was a landowner in the vicinity of the mill. At his death the mill passed to his son, John, who operated it for some time, and then sold it to Garret Ottison. It was afterwards owned by — Hunter, who sold it to — McDaniel, by whom it was repaired and generally improved. The mill was next owned respectively by John Lewis and William Johnson, by whom it was conveyed to the present owner. It was a two-story frame building, situated a mile north of Townsend. It is fitted up with burr, and grinds custom work exclusively.

A tile-yard was operated by Matthews & Van Dyke for a few years in this hundred, about a mile south of Odessa. It has not been operated for the past twenty years. They had a capacity of three hundred thousand tiles per year.

In 1872 a brick-yard was opened a short distance south of Townsend by Samuel R. Warren. It was operated a year by him and then sold to D. B. Maloney, the present owner. Brick are manufactured here during six months of the year and employment is given for that period to five men. About one hundred and seventy-five thousand are manufactured annually for home consumption.

In 1883 Samuel R. Warren erected a saw-mill on his premises in this hundred. This he operated until 1887, when he moved it to Sudlersville. It had a capacity of two thousand five hundred feet per day and gave employment to thirteen men. Merchant and custom work were executed.

The brick-yard on the farm of Samuel R. Warren was opened by him in 1886. It gives employment to six men for six months in the year. About two hundred thousand bricks are manufactured annually.

Appleton & Hart erected a frame building, twenty-four by forty feet, on the corner of Commerce and Gray Streets, Townsend, in 1882. They fitted it up with two evaporators and commenced evaporating peaches. In 1884 Appleton sold his share to Hart, who enlarged the size and capacity of the manufactory. The present capacity is eight hundred baskets per day. The evaporating season lasts six weeks per year and during this period G. M. D. Hart gives employment to one hundred operatives. The fruit is shipped principally to New York and Philadelphia.

POST-OFFICE.—The post-office was established at Townsend September 1, 1856. Levi W. Lattomus was the first postmaster. He was succeeded by Jas. C. Wilson and John S. Wilson. William A. Scott, the present incumbent, was appointed October 1, 1885.

The post-office at Fieldsboro' was established in 1854 with Edward Silcox as its first postmaster. He was succeeded in October 1858 by William Doughton. Jos. C. Hutchinson, William W. Lynam and Frederick H. Weller have also served as postmasters here. Edward Silcox, the first postmaster and present incumbent, took charge of the office again in 1886. One mail a day north and south is received here. The stage line running from Townsend to Deakynerville carries the mail to this point.

HOTELS.—The first hotel in Townsend was erected about 1857 by Abraham Ingram. It was first occupied by Joseph T. Hill. The property was afterwards owned by William Scott and Levi W. Lattomus. Shortly after Mr. Lattomus' purchase it was converted into a dwelling, in which he resided until his death, and is now occupied by his family.

The present hotel was first opened as a restaurant about 1870 by James C. Townsend. At a later period the dwelling was annexed by the owner, Samuel Townsend. It has been operated by several proprietors and is owned and managed by J. L. Dickinson.

THE MUTUAL LOAN ASSOCIATION of Townsend, Delaware, was organized in February, 1888. The first officers of the association were: President, John F. Staats; Vice-President, William R. Martin; Secretary and Treasurer, William A. Scott. Directors: John F. Staats, William R. Martin, George M. D. Hart, D. B. Maloney, Thomas Maloney, George L. Townsend, S. R. Warren, Dr. J. W. Crawford, T. A. Enos.
NEW CASTLE COUNTY.

CHAPTER LII.

BLACKBIRD HUNDRED.

Previous to 1875, the territory included within the present limits of this hundred formed a portion of Appoquinimink Hundred. On March 9 of that year, an Act of the Legislature was passed, dividing Appoquinimink Hundred by the following line: "Beginning at the mouth of Blackbird Creek, running with said creek and main branch to a bridge in the road leading from the head of Sassafras to Smyrna, thence westerly to the centre of said road to the cross-roads known as Dexter's Corner; thence southerly with the road leading by Garman's school-house; thence to Cypress Bridge, and thence down Cypress branch to the dividing line between Maryland and Delaware." All the territory in New Castle County south of this line was declared to be Blackbird Hundred. About twenty-five years ago the land of this hundred was mostly covered with timber. At the present time, about one-half of the hundred is in a state of cultivation, producing peaches, wheat, corn and oats in large quantities. The forests are rapidly disappearing and the marshes are being reclaimed. The population according to the census of 1880 was 1778.

The earliest settlements made in this hundred were on the bank of the Delaware River previous to Penn's ownership. A tribe of Indians, of whom Meehakeet was Sachem, inhabited Thoroughfare Neck and sold the land to the settlers. At an early date, John Morgan obtained a warrant for eight hundred acres and John Denney for two hundred acres adjoining. This land was purchased by William Pierce, to whom a new warrant was granted in March, 1679. In the meantime, William Green settled upon these tracts, and to eject him, it was necessary for Pierce to resort to law. The following is a copy of the proceedings:

"Att a Cow held in the Towne of New Castle by his majesty's authority the 26th & 28th of June, 1679.

"by ye said Mr. John Moll, Mr. Peter Alibrina, Mr. Sopp Oubour, Mr. Garrett Otto, Mr. Job N'Dessa, Mr. Abram Man, Mr. William Semphil, Justices: Captain Cwt. Contwell, High Sheriff.

"William Pierce, Plt., in an action of Trespass upon the land of Green, Dft., as the case.

"The Plt. declared that this deed, without any Leave or orders from his hono: the Govern: this Court or any other Lawful Authority has seated himself upon a Piece of Land made over unto him ye Plt: by John Morgen's successor: John Denny, and same to wit in ye month of March last, anew granted and confirmed unto this Plt: by this Court as by ye Records will appear and therefore desires that this deed may be ordered forthwith to quit & Leave ye Land to ye end that hee may not blinder this Plt. sitting on ye same. "This is a true Copy taken out of ye Records wth ye same attest.

"Jno. Moll.

"Peter Alibrina.

"J. D'sessa.

"Morris Liston came to this hundred previous to 1680, and purchased twelve hundred acres of land of the Indians. In that year, Meehakeet, an Indian sachem, granted to Ephraim Herman the land between Duck Creek and Cedar Swamps—commencing at Morris Liston's corner. Liston came from England, and purchased the land above mentioned, and 24th of 9th month, 1702, he was warranted eight hundred and ninety-seven acres of land on the Delaware River, between Blackbird Creek and the run next south. In 1739, the two story hip-roofed brick house in which Robert Derrickson now resides was built by Edmund Liston. The original Liston farm is now owned by David J. Cummins, Benjamin Davids and Robert Derrickson, who is a descendant of this family. The Listons are now a prominent family in Preston County, Virginia.
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

Abraham Staats came from Holland, and was one of the earliest settlers on Manhattan Island, where he resided until it was invaded by the English, when he moved to Staten Island, which is said to have received its name from him. When the Dutch conquered the Swedish settlements in Delaware, the Staats family moved to Thoroughfare Neck and purchased land of the Indians. From this ancestor are sprung the present Staats family of this and adjoining hundreds. Abraham Staats, a descendant, served in the Revolutionary War and became a captain. On his farm was a tide-water mill, which was abandoned during that war. A stream large enough for sailing a vessel ran to the mill. Near the mill a vessel one time sunk. This is now over-run with sod and grass. The homestead is now owned by Isaac Staats, a grandson of Captain Abraham Staats.

John Wooters owned land on the south side of Blackbird Creek in 1685. In a law-suit of October 20 of that year the witnesses of Wooters, Casperus Herman, Thomas Snelling and others, testified that Wooters had settled there about twelve years before at a place he called "Wooters," had erected a dwelling-house and planted trees, and assisted by his servants had produced a crop. Shortly afterwards, his house and improvements, which were leased at the time, together with the corn and tobacco were burned.

On January 2, 1687, Peter Bayard petitioned the court for the right to take up on Duck Creek four hundred acres of land, and it was granted.

On November 25, 1681, there was surveyed and laid out for Thomas Harris two hundred acres of land, called "Exchange." A portion of this land is now owned by John C. Stockley, of Smyrna.

In 1747 a Spanish privateer landed near the house now occupied by Robert Derickson and plundered the house. The following affidavits were made before Thomas Hopkinson, of Philadelphia:

"Edmund Liston of Appoquinimink H't., in the county of New Castle, Yeoman, being one of the people called Quakers, on his solemn Affirmation, declareth and affirmeth, that on Sunday, the twelfth day of this Instant, July, about one o'clock in the afternoon, a Company of Foreigners, which this affirmant believes to be Spaniards, to the number of Nineteen, came ashore in an open Boat from a Pilot Boat riding at anchor in the River Delaware, over against this affirmant's House which is Situated about Four Miles above Bombay Hook and about half a Mile from the Banks of the said River Delaware, and as the Affirmant was afterwards told by his daughter, as soon as they landed some of them ran to the Place where his Daughter and a Negro girl happened to be getting Crabs, seized the Negro girl, tied her, and put her into the Boat. This Affirmant further Declareth that the said Foreigners came Directly to him this Affirmant arm'd with Guns, Cutlasses & Pistols, and selling him they belonged to a Spanish Privateer not far off, they demanded his Negro, Money and the Keys of his Drawers, & having got some keys from him they proceeded to rifle & plunder his House & took out of it several sorts of wearing Apparel, Bedding, Clothes, Dishes & &c. &c., &c. After they left the House, they carried three of the Allowances put them on board of the open Boat: They likewise took a Negro Woman and two little Negro children, one of a sucking child, and then clapping their Pistols to this affirmant's Breast they compelled him to go with them to the next Plantation, belonging to James Hart, at the distance of about half a mile.

"Edmund E. L. Liston, mar's.

"James Hart of Appoquinimink Ed., in the County of New Castle on Delaware, being sworn on the holy evangelists of Almighty God, did protest and declare that on Sunday the 12th Day of this Instant July, about three of the Clock in the Afternoon, several People, who this Deponent took to be Spaniards, to the number of fifteen, and one Man with a Hat, who this Deponent took to be an Englishman (being much farther than the rest) came Ashore to this Deponent's House, Situate about half a Mile from the River side, together with Edmund Liston, a neighbor of this Deponent's, who had forced along with them: That this Deponent & his Dependents being come at some distance shut up and boiled his Doors and got his Gun in Readiness lest they should prove to be Enemies: That they came directly up and surrounded this Deponent's House, and some of them pursued a Negro Girl belonging to this Deponent, which this Deponent perceived thro' a Window, that some of the said Company called out to this Deponent in good English to surrender or they would set fire to his House, and several Bullets were fired into the room, where this Deponent's Wife and Children were, that one of the Bullets wound this Deponent's Wife in the Hip & that she bled very much: Whereupon the said Deponent, thought fit to surrender, and accordingly opened the Doors of his House, whereupon the Spaniards seized this Deponent and bound his Hands and immediately plundered the House & took away the above mentioned Negro, almost all of this Deponent's wearing apparel, a pair of Gold Buttons and several other things to the value of about seventy pounds. That they had done some lousing this Deponent's House as aforesaid, they forced this Deponent away to them in his Plantation about half a Mile from this Deponent's, where they tied up their Bundles the Plunder they had got at this Deponent's House and the said E. L. & having carried it on board the Boat they went off to the Pilot Boat from whence they came.

"James Hart.

"Sworn July 27, 1747, before me Thos. Hopkinson.

On August 17, 1687, Richard Bonsall and John Wood purchased of John Donaldson nineteen hundred and ten acres of land in "Thorowfaird" Neck. This tract was adjoining land at that time owned by Christopher Elliot and John Taylor. It also touched Cedar Swamp, and part of the land was on the Northwest branch where the Northeast branch springs from it. Bonsall purchased a three-fourths interest, and on 24th of December, 1702, one thousand, three hundred and fifty-six acres of fast land and eighty of marsh were placed in trust for his children as his portion. At the same time eight hundred and sixty-four acres of adjoining land were also placed in trust for them. On May 4, 1709, Jacob Bonsall, son of Richard, entered into an agreement with Matthew Walton, George Cummins and Matthew Rue for the sale of one thousand three hundred and ten acres of his land. The sale was consummated, and in 1737 Walton's share was owned by his son Matthew. Cummins sold his portion to John Owens, who was the owner in 1737. Samuel Fitzgerald in that year was the possessor of John Wood's portion. On November 9, 1709, Jacob Bonsall also sold to Thomas Ward, of Stanton Island, a tract of land adjoining the above. This descended to his son Thomas, who, May 12, 1770, conveyed one hundred and twelve acres of it to Thomas Collins, whose descendants still own it. Pomfret, a tract of three hundred and fifteen acres, on the north side of Duck Creek, and bounded on the north and northwest by Ellet's branch (Morris's run) was surveyed by Ephraim Herman for William Grant on November 28, 1861. It was assigned by Grant to Anthony Tompkins, to whom it was patented by William Penn, July 30, 1854. It was afterward owned by William Wilson, and is now in the possession of Alexander G. Cummins. Brick Store Landing is situated on this tract. At the Landing is a phosphate manufactory operated by the owner of the land. An old brick building, bearing the date 1717, is still standing here.

Shrewsbury, a tract of eight hundred and thirty-seven acres, on the south side of Blackbird Creek, was warranted to Edmund Cantwell on the 15th of April, 1684.

On the 23d of February, 1682, there was warranted to Dr. Gerardus Wessel a tract of three hundred acres on the north side of Duck Creek. This was assigned to Joseph Moore, for whom it was surveyed September 1, 1685.

In 1683 Christopher Elliot owned a tract of land at the main branch of Duck Creek, containing five hundred acres, late in the possession of Joseph Hold- ing, deceased. Elliot died, seized of this estate and left no heirs, and on October 8, 1701, after an inquiry the farm land was selected and confirmed unto Joseph England. On May 19, 1701, there was also warranted to England eight hundred and eight acres, lying between two branches, of which one was Morris's Run. This land was owned by William Holton, who at his decease devised it to his wife, Elizabeth, who afterwards married Philip England, and to his daughter Rebecca, who became the wife of Joseph England, to whom the whole was confirmed on date above mentioned. This land is now probably owned by Gideon E. Rothwell and George W. Matford.

On April 25, 1737, there was warranted to Abram Eno, a tract of two hundred acres on the south side of the North West Branch of Duck Creek, known as Slave Getters Hall. In 1747 the land-owners in this vicinity were James Alfree, Samuel Moore, Abram Eno, Thomas Bennett, Thomas Barrett, John Barber and William Holliday.

On July 16, 1739, a warrant was granted to Thomas Stone, for one hundred acres of clear land on the road from Duck Creek to New Castle. It was called "Vulcan's Mount, including a small improvement made thereon, the first settlement thereof being about the year 1726." This is now owned by Samuel Armstrong.

"Longsacre," a tract of ninety-five acres on the road from Duck Creek to Bohemia Manor, was warranted to Samuel Cortwright on February 27, 1739.

A warrant was granted to Isaac Norris, of Philadelphia, and Isaac England, of New Castle County, on September 26, 1754, for a tract of one thousand and eight acres of land called "New Bristol," situate on the north side of Duck Creek. Nearly all of the land in the western part of the hundred was included in a grant to Walter Dulany, and known as "Dulany's Manor." This land was heavily timbered and while in the possession of Grafton L. Dulany, a wood lease was granted to — Bernard, who constructed a wooden railroad, from the woods to Brick Store Landing, to be used for conveying the timber to a shipping point. It was operated during 1849 and 1850 and then discontinued. The cars were drawn by horses over the wooden track. This land is now owned by Napoleon Walton, Samuel Beck, Barney Donelly, David Lloyd and — Harkman.

Religious. On April 20, 1782, Robert Appleton conveyed to Joseph Deakyne, Edward Martin, William Truax Marsh, Abraham Staats, Jr., John Barlow, Robert Standlay, Jacob Deakyne, Thomas Deakyne and John Collins, one acre of land in trust "to the intent and express purpose of building a preaching-house or chapel for the use of the Methodist preachers." These were the first trustees of Friendship Church, and they at once began the erection of an edifice for public worship. The building then constructed, of cedar logs and about twenty-four feet square, was used until 1866 when it was torn down. The present neat frame church was dedicated January 16, 1867, with appropriate services, conducted by Bishops Scott and Ames, assisted by Revs. Urie and England.

The building is thirty-six by fifty feet with a gallery and recess for the pulpit and cost about five thousand dollars. Until 1872, it formed a part of Smyrna circuit and was served by the pastors of that circuit, a list of which is to be found under the Asbury Church of Smyrna. It now forms part of Appoquinimink circuit and has had the following ministers.

C. W. Prettyman .................................. 1873-74
T. B. Kilkem ..................................... 1875
R. K. Stephenson ................................ 1881-83
J. C. Ballard .................................... 1876

In 1828, Friendship Church had a membership of twenty-nine. At the present time there are about one hundred on its rolls. The following are the present trustees with the dates of their election.

Isaac Staats .................................... February 21, 1844
John Jarrell ..................................... June 15, 1860

William Keyser is the superintendent of a Sunday-school of forty scholars connected with this church.

The first Methodist meetings in the southwestern part of the hundred were held in a private house, at a place called the 'lime stone.' The meetings increased in size, and in 1842 it was found necessary to erect a church. At this time there were about fifty members, prominent among whom were William Gordon, William Clayton, George Wilson, Thomas Sapp, Elizabeth McCoy and Rebecca Clark. In that year Grafton L. Delaney, of Baltimore, donated to John Eaton, Thomas Meriam, Robert Bailey, Thomas Lamb and Jesse Moffitt, trustees, a tract of land on which a log church, twenty-four by thirty feet, was erected at a very little cost, other than the labor which was given. The building is still used for divine worship, and is known as "Dulany's Chapel." The present membership is thirty. At the present time the board of trustees is composed of the following persons: Jas. R. Pryor, Eben Cloak, Charles Rhiem, Samuel Beck and George Rhiem.

It was connected with Smyrna circuit until 1862, and served by the pastors in charge of that circuit. Since that time the following pastors have ministered here:

- Rev. Samuel Welsh..............................................1852-65
- Rev. David A. Price..............................................1865-67
- Rev. John M. Clark..............................................1867
- Rev. Chaas. K. Morris...........................................1866-Sept 1, 77
- Rev. Jno. M. Clark..............................................Sept 1, 1877-79
- Rev. Chaas. K. Morris...........................................1879

The Sunday-school has twelve officers and teachers, and seventy scholars. John Rhiem is the superintendent.

Salem M. P. Church was built about 1842 through the efforts of Rev. W. Maddon and Messrs. Arnold S. Naudain, Ezekiel Wright, Gideon E. Barlow and Israel Hall. In 1845 there was a great revival of religion in the church, and Ezekiel Wright and wife moved to the church with bedding and provisions, and remained day and night. In 1857 the church was repaired, and opened May 10. The congregation were unable to raise the indebtedness incurred, and the church was closed. It was in this condition when Rev. D. F. Ewell was assigned to this charge. Through his earnest and unwavering efforts the debt was paid, and the building again dedicated to the worship of the Almighty. Rev. Ewell labored with this congregation eleven years, and was succeeded by Rev. A. S. Eversole, Rev. J. T. Lassell, Rev. J. S. Rowe, Rev. J. B. Jones, Rev. A. D. Melvin and Rev. B. F. Benson, the present pastor. The membership at the present time is seventy-five.

There are eighty members of the Sunday-school under the superintendence of George W. Thomas.

There was a Presbyterian church at an early period in this hundred, near Taylor's Bridge, concerning which no definite information has been obtained. Rev. George Foot, in a sermon delivered in Drawyer's church, May 10, 1842, thus spoke of it: "The Presbyterian Church, near Taylor's Bridge, was probably organized within this field. But when it was gathered, or who were its ministers, or what is its history, we can probably never ascertain. While Dr. Read was pastor of this (Drawyer's) people, he devoted some attention to that church. Its house of worship was standing in a decayed condition, and Mr. Burton preached in it occasionally, in 1809. No remnant of it, except a few mounds in the old cemetery, now remains." The land on which it stood, is now owned by Peter Johnson.

Schools.—Previous to the adoption of the common school system subscription or pay schools were in existence in Blackbird Hundred. Among the teachers of the latter kind are remembered William Orr, David Price, William Welden, James Welden, Isaac P. Walker, Seth King and Samuel Anderson.

The opening of the public schools, with the advantages afforded to all, caused the abandonment of private schools. John Mulholland and Leonard are remembered as pioneer teachers of the public schools. The school in Thoroughfare Neck, which was deeded for school purposes in 1816 by Peter Staats, was converted into a public school. Other private schools were converted to the same use. The subdivision of the districts, the multiplication of the schools and the increased abilities of the teachers, have placed the common schools in this hundred on a very high standard.

Roads and Bridges.—At the November session of the Levy Court of New Castle County, it was ordered that a road be laid out from the main road leading from Smyrna to Odessa, at a point near Smyrna, to Thoroughfare Neck. The road was surveyed May 7, 1780, and passed through lands at that time owned by Dr. Morris, Mary Hudson, Mrs. Diaily, William Clark, Charles Carson, Isaac Daney, Michael Offley, Thomas Goldsborough, William Jordan, Edmund Edwards, Robert Appleton, Nicholas Barlow, George Ward, William Hudson, Arthur Allston, John Conner, John Bassett, Elijah Bartlett, Joseph Deakyn and Jacob Deakyn.

In February term of the Levy Court, 1792, a petition was presented for the opening and construction of a road leading from Captain Abraham Staats' tide mill to Israel Daney's smith shop, to be nearly on line of a road that had been used for nearly eight years.

In 1827 four hundred dollars were appropriated for the construction of Long Bridge over the northwest branch of Duck Creek.

In April 1825 three thousand dollars were appropriated by the Levy Court for the erection of a new bridge over Blackbird Creek, "where old bridge (Taylor's) now stands." In March of the following year $540 more were applied to the same purpose. The bridge was constructed by James Spier, of Canwells' Bridge.

In later days new roads were opened and the old ones repaired; old bridges were replaced by new and more durable ones, and at the present time the roads and bridges are in an excellent condition.

Industries.—The earliest industries in Blackbird Hundred were several old grist-mills which have not been in use for many years. Most prominent of these were the tide-water mill of Captain Abraham Staats, on the farm now owned by Isaac Staats, and a windmill for grinding wheat and corn on the Liston farm now owned by David J. Cummins. There was also an old mill on the McMurphy farm, now owned by G. W. W. Naudain. A mill-race and dam in good condition, on the North West Branch, on farm of
NEW CASTLE COUNTY.

V. O. Hill, give evidence that a mill was once located there. As early as 1746 there was a mill pond formed by Ridley Run, now Green Spring Branch. The mill was situated on land now owned by William Nailor and has long since passed away. A mill-race was dug from the stream through a field to the mill, and is still in existence.

In 1780 Ira E. Lyons built a mill on Blackbird Creek, near the village of Blackbird. He retained possession of it for many years, and finally sold it to Auley Lore. It was subsequently owned by Jonathan Hand, William E. Evans, Jacob Richardson, and is now in possession of Samuel R. Warren. The present grist-mill is partially stone and partially frame, does both custom and merchant work, and has a capacity of twenty barrels per day. The saw-mill in connection has a capacity of fifteen hundred feet per day. The mills are operated by steam and water-power.

Alvan Allen commenced manufacturing tiles about 1863, in Appoquinimink Hundred, near Smyrna Landing. In 1868 he associated with himself William M. Bell, and the business was conducted in partnership for several years. In 1869 Allen & Bell were awarded a contract for sixty thousand drain tiles for park purposes, by the commissioners of Fairmount Park. After Mr. Allen withdrew from the firm the tile-yard was operated by Mr. Bell alone until October, 1884, when he sold to Joshua T. Jer- man and John Cosgriff, the latter of whom had served in the capacity of superintendent from the commencement. The business is now carried on under the style of Jerman & Cosgriff. The clay pit, covering ten acres, is of a superior quality, and the half million tiles produced annually are shipped to all parts of the United States. The tile-yard is in operation during eight months of the year, and eight men are constantly employed in manufacturing the various sizes and styles of tile. Steam is employed to operate the mills.

A steam saw-mill was built on land of Isaac R. Staats, in 1873, by John B. Maddox, of Maine. The mill was operated by him for a few years, and then sold to Isaac R. Staats, who operated it until March 21, 1879, when it was burned. In the same year another mill was built, which is still standing. The mill has a capacity of one thousand five hundred feet per day, and both merchant and custom work is done.

In 1882 R. C. Brockson erected a building at Blackbird Village, and placed in it an evaporator. This is in operation six weeks per year, and during that time employment is given to thirty persons. Sixteen thousand pounds of fruit are prepared each season, and shipped principally to New York and Philadelphia.

Villages.—Blackbird is a small village on a stream of the same name, about equally distant from Middletown and Smyrna. It contains a hotel, a post-office, school-house, two stores, kept respectively by R. C. Brockson and C. B. Satterfield, and about fifty inhabitants. It is an old village, as is evidenced by the ancient appearance of its residences.

Bassett Ferguson, farmer of Blackbird Hundred, died November, 1883. He was one of the first to engage in business in Blackbird, and was appointed first postmaster of the town in 1838. The post-office was conducted in the hotel which he kept at the same time. Bassett Ferguson was a man unassuming in manner, possessed of a large amount of sound common sense, and held in the highest respect by his friends and neighbors. In 1849 he was elected one of the senators to represent his county in the General Assembly. In this position he won the respect of his fellow-members by his strict attention to its duties. He was married to Miss Susan T. Weldon, and had twelve children, two of whom, Richard and Colen, have represented their county in the General Assembly.

Colen Ferguson is a son of Bassett Ferguson, and is the third in order of twelve children, seven of whom survive. He was born October 25, 1835, at Blackbird, Delaware. His mother, who is still living, January, 1888, was Susan T. Weldon, of Appoquinimink Hundred. Until he was twenty years old Mr. Fergus- son remained at his father’s house and cultivated the home farm. During this period he attended the district schools of the neighborhood at such times as his duties on the farm would permit. He enjoyed the advantages afforded by the New Jersey Conference Seminary, in 1854–1855, for one year. In 1856, in his twenty-first year, he went to Odessa as a clerk for Messrs. Crouch & Davis, general grain and dry-goods merchants, of that place. Here he cast his first ballot as a citizen for James Buchanan for President of the United States. After two years of service with the above-named firm, he returned to the farm near Blackbird, which had now become his own by purchase of the interest of the other heirs after the death of his father, in November, 1858. From that time until the present, January, 1888, with the exception of one year passed in business with Messrs. Lord & Polk, dealers in Phosphate, in Odessa, Mr. Ferguson has resided in Appoquinimink Hundred, near Blackbird. On the 3d of June, 1868, he was married to Miss Cordelia, daughter of Joseph A. Lord, of Odessa. They have had six children, of whom four survive. Mr. Ferguson occupies the residence in which his father formerly lived, and cultivates a farm of about two hundred acres. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics he has always been a Democrat. He is one of the three Senators from New Castle County, in the State Legislature, a position to which he was elected without having sought the honor. Political prefer- ment has not been with him an object of desire. In person Mr. Ferguson is a spare man, of medium height, of dark complexion and active movement. Time has dealt gently with him, and but few indications of his age are apparent. He takes an active interest in the educational agencies of his neighborhood, and shows it as one of the directors of the district school. He is an intelligent observer of the particular needs and growths of crops. He has bestowed careful attention upon his peach orchards, which contain thousands of trees, and from which he has in successive years obtained his largest pecuniary rewards.

HOTELS.—The hotel at Blackbird was erected by Benjamin Donoho at an early date. After his decease it descended to his son William, who was proprietor until his death, which occurred in 1836. In 1888 Bassett Ferguson purchased the property and while in his possession it was managed by Israel Townsend, James Fountain, Stephen Townsend, William M. Johnson and John Silcox. In 1841 the old hotel, which is now used as a residence by Benjamin Loockerman, was abandoned and the present hotel opened. In 1866 it came into the possession of V. O. Hill, who rented it for several years to Leonard Crouse and William E. Price. In 1869 Hill took charge of the house and has since been the proprietor.

In 1850 the Hygenia House was built on Collins Beach by George Collins. On account of the excellent natural facilities of the place the house and beach became extensively known. In 1878, however, the tidal wave washed away a large portion of the beach and all the buildings but the hotel. Since that time the hotel has not been opened continuously and is now closed.

POST-OFFICE.—The post-office at Blackbird was established in 1838 with Bassett Ferguson as its first postmaster. He was succeeded about 1847 by Jacob V. Naudain. Richard Ferguson followed Naudain and was succeeded by V. O. Hill and Robert A. Davis. C. B. Satterfield, the present incumbent, took charge of the office in May, 1885.

The post-office at Deakyneville was established about thirty years ago with Thomas Deakyne as postmaster. He was succeeded by George C. Deakyne, the present postmaster. The mail is carried here daily by a stage running from Townsend.

A post-office was established at Taylor’s Bridge in October, 1871, with George W. Simpler in charge. The office was discontinued in September, 1877, and re-established December 4th of the same year with Abraham Staats, the present incumbent, as its postmaster. The stage running from Townsend to Deakyneville deposits mail daily.

Greene Springs post-office was established in 1874, with George D. Collins as first postmaster. He was succeeded in 1880 by Daniel Wells. In November, 1884, B. C. Collins, the present postmaster, took charge of the office. Two mails north and two south are received daily.

Forest post-office was established at Blackbird in 1875, with William P. Reynolds as postmaster, which position he still holds.

CHAPTER LIII.

KENT COUNTY.

KENT COUNTY, Delaware, is the middle county of the State, and has an area of about five hundred square miles. It is bounded on the east by Delaware Bay, on the north by New Castle County, on the west by the State of Maryland, and on the south by Sussex County. The soil of the county is mostly fertile, the staple products being corn, wheat, oats, peaches and pork. The surface of the country is largely covered with forests. The county is intersected by the Delaware Railroad and the Delaware and Maryland Railroad, and is drained by Duck Creek, Little Creek, Old Duck Creek, Jones’s Creek, Tanner’s Creek, Murd-erkill Creek, Misspillion Creek, Marshy Hope Creek and Choptank River.

The county contains nine hundred, as follows: East Dover, West Dover, Duck Creek, Little Creek, Kenton, North Murd-erkill, South Murd-erkill, Misspillion and Milford. The town of Dover is the capital of the State.

Kent County, originally a part of the Whore-kill, became an independent territory under the name of St. Jones County 1 in 1850, and until Dover was laid out, in 1717, there was not a village of any importance in it. Prior to 1764 very little land within its borders was taken up, but subsequently settlers began to come in rapidly, principally from Maryland and located along the streams.

Whorekill (now Lewes) was the court town, and was only reached by water. The inconvenience of this intercourse and the hardships attending visits to the town resulted subsequently in the agitation for a new county.

On April 15, 1671, the Provincial Council at New York considered a report of Captain Carr, which related “of y” desire of many families to come and settle below New Castle at Appoquiniminy and Bombay’s Hook.”

On June 16, 1671, Governor Francis Lovelace granted a patent for four hundred acres to Thomas Young, called Poplar Neck, lying about two miles above St. Jones’ Creek, on the bay. Adjoining this tract was one granted about the same time to Thomas Merritt, called “Mulberry Swamp.”

In June, 1671, George Whale received a grant of land in the vicinity of Bombay Hook, but settled in Appoquiniminy Hundred, New Castle County, when his property passed to his wife, Anna, and from her to her son, George More.

On December 1, 1675, Daniel Whiteley was granted three hundred acres, called “the Grove,” lying at the head of Jones’ Creek.

1 There is no record of the change of name to Kent County, but it was probably done in 1662. In November of that year Wm. Penn summoned the magistrates of “St. Jones and Whorekill” Counties to meet him in New Castle to arrange matters for the guidance and good government of the territory. The following month he addressed a communication to the magistrates of Sussex County, and it is probable that both names were adopted at that conference.
In September, 1767, the court at Whorekill was authorized to issue land warrants, and the following tracts were granted within the limits of the present County of Kent:

On May 3, 1767, John Kiphaven and Peter Hanson, "Hopewell," a tract of four hundred and thirteen acres on north side of Murder Creek.

On March 11, 1768, Robert Hart, Jr., "Pritchard's," a tract of six hundred acres on the north side of Missipan Creek; "Orphan's Lot," a tract of six hundred acres near "Pritchard's," name of grantee not given; Cornelius Verhooft, "New Sevenhaven," a tract of one thousand two hundred and eighteen acres on the north side of Missipan Creek, by Indian Bridge and Beaver Creek.

On March 12, 1768, Jno. Briggs and Mrs. Mary Phillips, "Kingston upon Hull," a tract of four hundred and fifty acres "where they now dwell." This land was on the north side of Jones' Creek, and a portion of it was formerly taken by George Whale in June, 1767.

On September 10, 1769, Peter Groenendike, "New Sevenhaven," a tract of four hundred acres on the north side of Murderkill Creek.

On February 14, 1860, Thomas Garvin, "Garvin's," a tract of three hundred acres on St. Jones' Creek, adjoining John Brinkloe; Thomas Clifford, four hundred acres on St. Jones' Creek.

On February 4, 1860, the magistrates of New Castle County suggested to the government the expediency of the enlargement of ye county up and downwards to St. Jones we humbly conceive would for ye convenience of ye people be necessary, etc. About the same time the appended petition was sent to Governor Androsa:

On March 12, 1676, Samuel Stiles and Robert Fraley received a patent to seven hundred and forty-four acres, called "Andrew's Delight," lying on the north side of Missipan Creek.

On April 13, 1676, patents were issued to persons residing within the limits of Kent County, as follows:

On May 28, 1887, the Governor appointed Francis Whitwell, John Hilliard, Robert Edward and Edward Pack as Taxpayers. Upon the appointment, a magistrate of the Horsekill Court, and residing in what is now Duck Creek Hundred, on Little Duck Creek. On March 14, 1868, a petition of the inhabitants in the vicinity of Duck Creek, was presented to the Council at Philadelphia, asking that a way might be cut through the marsh for vessels to pass. This was referred to the County Court in which the same doth lye.

On September 2, 1775, the General Assembly defined the boundaries of the three counties as follows:

That from and after the publication of this act the line dividing the counties of New Castle and Kent continued from the main branch of Duck Creek and opposite part of Knock Jones' land, on the Kent side, and Richard Nash's land, on the New Castle side, and running from thence up the mid branch, on the several courses thereof, westward 622 perches to a white oak corner tree of Benjamin Hale and Richard Hatter's land at the head of said branch, thence continued due west 1708 perches till it intersects the tangent or divisional line between these counties and Maryland, where the same crosses the cypruss branch. The line shall be deemed taken and held the boundary between the said counties of New Castle and Kent; and that the line between the counties of Kent and Sussex continued from a fork of Millcreek Creek at the junction of the Tonnouttrough branch and Beaver Dam branch running up the Tonnouttrough branch, with the several courses thereof, 820 perches to the head thereof, thence southwesterly to a small fork of a small branch of the river Nanticoke, thence down said branch to the south end of Beaver Dam, on the west side of a Beaver pond, the original temporary division between Kent and Sussex, Maryland, and from thence due west 2584 to the north and south or tangent line aforesaid shall be deemed taken as the boundary line between the counties of Kent and Sus-

On February 3, 1786, an act of Assembly was passed, authorizing the improving of the navigation of main Duck Creek by cutting a canal across three points of marsh adjoining the creek between Eagle's Nest Landing and the head of tide-waters of Duck Creek. 4 The territory of Bombay Hook was in New Castle County. The date of the cutting of the outlet called Thoroughfare is not known, but deeds of 1740 show that it was completed at that time.

The main branch of Duck Creek originally followed the course of old Duck Creek to the west of Bombay Hook and Little Bombay Hook, and entered the bay at the mouth of Simon's or Dons Creek, and Little Duck Creek, then as the southwest branch, emptied into the main branch at the point near where it now enters the bay—the canal between Bombay Hook and Little Bombay Hook having been cut through a later day.

KENT COUNTY.

Morinas Haughey, of New Castle County, were appointed commissioners.

On January 31, 1811, the Legislature passed an act dividing Kent County into five election districts, and polling-places were located as follows:

First District, Duck Creek, at the house of David Lockwood, at Smyrna; Second District, Little Creek, at the house of William Ruth, at Fort Landing (Leipsic); Third District, St. Jones', at Sipplis's Mill; Fourth District, Murderkill, at the house of Isaac Register, in Camden; Fifth District, Misspillion, at the house of George French.

In 1812, "The Dover Canal Company," composed of Willard Hall, James Sykes, Henry M. Ridgely, James Harper, Jacob Stout, Joseph H. Raymond and Samuel White, with a capital of $30,000, was chartered to straighten St. Jones' Creek by cutting a canal from a point on the creek near Dover to the tide-waters of Delaware Bay. An unsuccessful effort was made to this end.

On February 9, 1825, the Philadelphia, Dover and Norfolk Transportation Company was chartered for the purpose of opening a shorter passenger route from Philadelphia to Norfolk, by steamboat from Philadelphia to Dona Landing, in Little Creek Hundred, thence by stage to Sea ford, through Dover, Camden,Canterbury,Guineatown (now Williamsville), Teatown (now Stayonville), the old village of St. Johnstown, and Bridgeville. From Sea ford it was designed to utilize the Nanticoke River steamers to Norfolk. The steamer "Norfolk" was first put on from Dover to Philadelphia, and was soon succeeded by the "Benjamin Franklin," both in charge of Captain Henry Manly. The "Philadelphia," that ran from Sea ford to Norick, was under Captain Daniel Crocker. After operating three or four years the company failed, and the route was abandoned until 1848, when a steamboat, the "Zephyr," was put on from Philadelphia to Dona, to connect with stages to Dover and the Peninsula line of stages that ran North and South. This continued until the railroad was completed. A line of railroad was projected over the route, and partly graded, but never completed.

CHAPTER LIV.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND CIVIL LIST.

On the formation of St. Jones, now Kent County, in 1680, the County Court was established at Towne Point, the residence of Edward Pack, one of the justices, at the mouth of Jones' Creek, where it was held until about 1689 or 1690, when it was transferred to the ordinary or tavern of James Maxwell. In 1683

1 This property was afterwards owned by William Davall, also a justice.

1 Wm. Penn ordered that a town be laid out for the Governor, to be called Dover, and that the courthouse and prison be built on the cross-street of the said town. The location of the proposed town was not, however, determined at that time. A settler named Thomas Williams had located a tract of four hundred acres called Tidbury, on the south side of Dover River, and a branch now known as Tidbury Branch, of which one hundred acres were purchased by Richard Levick, who, in 1684, with his wife, donated it to the county. The profer was made by Levick in open court and Wm. Clark, the county surveyor, was instructed to resurvey the land of Tidbury, together with that of Abraham Pratt, and whatever cleared land was vacant "for the good town of Dover." Although this site was not adopted, it was popularly regarded as the prospective county seat. For some reasons the location proved unsatisfactory, and on August 10, 1694, the Provincial Council at Philadelphia considered a communication from John Brinkloe, George Martin and Daniel Jones, Esqrs., some of the justices of the peace for the county of Kent, dated August 4, 1694, in which they signify to the Lt Go' yt att the time when their last Courts of quarr' Sessions & common pleas should have been held according to their last adjournment, the sd Geo. Martin and Daniel Jones appeared att the place appointed & wer willing to hold court, but Jn* Curtes, another of the justices, wold not sitt, & Jn* Betts, another justice, sent word by a Constable yt he wold never sitt there, meaning at James Maxwel's, att the Head of St Jones's, wherfor they look on yo' commission void; And there being several actions of moment depending, they request the Lt Go' to give new commissions. Of this letter the "Lt Gov'd desired the advice of the Council therein." The Council decided that "his Excellency's commissions are in force, notwithstanding the said Justice's neglect," and they were ordered to "hold their courts accordingly." It was also ordered that the provincial judges in their next circuit "doe Inspect and Inquire into the disorders in the County of Kent, in references to the time & places of holding their Courts, & to see what may be the most proper place in the sd Countie to hold their Courts in, for the most univerall care of the sd Countie, and make report to the Lt Gov'd and Council." The provincial judges, Wm. Clark, of Sussex, and Edward Blake and Richard Hallowell, of New Castle, after consultation with the magistrates, grand jury and others in Kent Court, it was unanimously agreed that the County Courts should be "held on some part of ye land belonging to Wm. Southerly, situate on the south side of the Head of Dover river, wch is next

In a deed executed May 2, 1688, Saritmarsh, an Indian, conveyed to Norton Claypoole a tract of land "on this side of Dover River about three miles from the place that Dover townes is Intended to be built." The part of Tidbury tract selected was in Murderkill Hundred, on the road from Dover to Frederica and on the high land between Tidbury branch and Five Points, and is said to be the highest point of land in the county. It was one and a half miles from navigable waters, and a better location in several respects than the present site.
adjoining unto david Morgan’s land. And that the absolute decree of the said Judges was accordingly & that it be as near a landing as may be, and there the same to Continue.” Richard Wilson and William Morton were delegates to purchase the ground which was done on November 23, 1694. It consisted of two hundred acres of the tract called “Brother’s Portion,” for the use of the inhabitants of Kent County, and on February 4, 1694–95, it was conveyed to the inhabitants for the sum of twenty-five pounds.

Thomas Bedwell and William Rodney were witnesses to the deed.

In May, 1697, Richard Wilson and William Morton asked to be relieved from further service as a building committee for the court and that some other persons be appointed to complete it. This was done, and in a petition of citizens May 15, 1699, reference was made to the recently purchased site, “whereon the court-house now stands.” The court-house then built occupied a portion of a lot on which the present court-house was erected, as the lot “whereon the old court-house now stands” was sold to John Lindsey, February 22, 1722, and after the sale a court-house was built on the site of the present State-House, which is mentioned in a deed to Nicholas Ridgely in trust November 15, 1754, describing the north part of the present county office building, and which is then mentioned as a jail lot.

Prior to 1/558 Samuel Dickinson, John David, John Vining, Robert Wilcocks and Benjamin Chew were appointed trustees to sell the jail lot, and to purchase a lot and erect a new jail.

On April 30, 1772, Charles Ridgely, treasurer of Kent County, charged Cesar Rodney and James Sykes with “cash allowed to build public offices and made payable to them by the Court of Appeals, the said building being under their direction.”

March 29, 1775, an act was passed vesting the lot of ground on which the State-House now stands, and lots twenty-seven and thirty-three, on which the county offices and jail now stand, in Cesar Rodney, Charles Ridgely, Samuel Chew, William Killen and Jacob Stout, as trustees. These lots were described as follows: “the lot of land situate in the court-house square in the town of Dover, and described in a plot or survey thereof, recorded in the office for recording of deeds in the County of Kent, and another lot of land, divided from the same by an alley, called the Court-House alley, on the north side of the said lot first mentioned, have been and now are considered, taken and held as ground belonging to the public, and accordingly a court-house and a building for keeping the records of the said County of Kent have been erected thereon at the charge of the same county; another lot of land lying on the north side of the said lot last mentioned, and on the east side of Court-House Square aforesaid and numbered in the town plot of Dover twenty-seven, and contained within the bounds following, to wit: beginning at a corner of the office lot, numbered in the aforesaid town plot thirty-three, and running with the line of the said office lot, east by north ninety-seven feet; then south by east two perches to the court-house alley; then by the said alley, east by north six perches; then north by east three perches five and a half feet to the corner of lot No. 30; then with the said lot west by south eleven perches fourteen and a half feet to the Court-House Square aforesaid; and then therewith south by east twenty-two feet to the place of beginning; laid out for twenty-eight and a half square perches, which hath been purchased at the expense of said County of Kent, from a certain Jacob Wells and Rebecca his wife, who conveyed the same by their deed bearing date of the 30th day of March last, to a certain Jacob Stout, in trust for the inhabitants of the said County of Kent.”

On December 14, 1776, Treasurer Ridgely charged Mr. Rodney, as one of the commissioners for building the court-house, with eight hundred pounds.

On February 23, 1779, John Bullen was paid five hundred pounds for repairs to the court-house and offices.

The General Assembly met originally at New Castle, but created Dover the capital in 1777. During the interruptions incident to the War of the Revolution the legislative sessions were held either at Dover, Lewes or New Castle. The bill making Dover the capital of the State was passed May 12, 1777, and its text is as follows:

“Whereas, it is just that the seat of Government should be made as central and convenient to all the inhabitants of the State as possible; and

“Whereas, the holding of the Assembly in the town of New Castle has been long found extremely burdensome to the good people of the counties of Kent and Sussex. For remedying whereof, “SECTION 2. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Delaware, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That from and after this present session, the General Assembly of this State shall meet and hold their sessions at the town of Dover, in the County of Kent, as well at such times as they shall adjourn to, as at their Annual and Special meetings to be held on the twentieth day of October, unless that day shall happen to be on a Sunday, in which case the meeting shall be on the next day.

“SECTION 3. Provided, nevertheless, That if a foreign invasion should happen or any raging sickness should prevail in the town of Dover aforesaid, or any other cause should make it necessary for the Assembly to adjourn to any other place in this State, they shall have power to do so.

“SECTION 4. And be it further enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That so much of any and every of the Acts of Assembly of this State as requires the meeting and sitting of the Assembly at the town of New Castle, is hereby repealed and made null and void.”

1 This act was re-enacted with amendments on October 28, 1779, because the original act had "fallen into the hands of the British troops, and bitherto hath not, and probably will not, be recovered."
In 1787–88 commissioners were appointed to prepare a plan for a new county court-house, and the General Assembly requested that the projected improvement include accommodations for that body. On May 28, 1788, the commissioners agreed to the request of the General Assembly, and asked for an appropriation for the completion of the building. This memorial was referred to a committee which, on June 2, 1788, reported that "in their opinion such is the situation of the treasury, together with loud complaints of public creditors and their duty to constituents, that the prayer of the memorial cannot be complied with at this time."

On June 5, 1788, all moneys arising from marriage and tavern licenses were appropriated to completing the court-house.

On July 29, 1791, a bill introduced by Kensey Johns was passed providing for a lottery to raise one thousand pounds for furnishing the court-house, and Eleazer McComb, James McClaymont, John Clayton, James Sykes, Jr., and John Patten were appointed managers. The bill devoted the net proceeds to "fitting up and preparing chambers in the new court-house in the town of Dover for the accommodation and reception of the General Assembly of this State, and the surplusage of the said sum, if any, shall be appropriated to the furnishing and completing the said court-house," and set apart in addition the office in the southeast corner of the new building, also for legislative purposes. As the building approached completion, each of the four corners were fitted up for the public offices, which were entered from a side-door. The register's office occupied the northwest corner, the register in chancery and clerk of the Orphans' Court the northeast, the prothonotary the southwest, and the recorder the southeast corner. The courts occupied the intervening space. When the jail was built, the clerk of the peace and the sheriff had their offices there until the present jail was finished, in 1859. The legislative chambers were on the second floor of the court-house.

On January 17, 1792, the sergeant-at-arms was directed to prepare "the office at the southeast corner of the State-house" for the State auditor of accounts.

In 1792 the Constitutional Convention met at the State House, but the Legislature and the Levy Court both being in session, the convention adjourned to the Presbyterian Church.

On May 3, 1792, it is said that Sheriff John Clayton, by order of the Levy Court, entered the Assembly rooms with drawn sword, and demanded their use for the workmen. The General Assembly thereupon adjourned to the tavern of Thos. Hale, at Duck Creek Cross-Roads (now Smyrna), and continued their session.

On May 4, 1792, the lower branch of the General Assembly adopted the following resolution:

1 This action of the Levy Court is attributed to the failure of the General Assembly to contribute toward the building of the court-house.

Whereas, John Clayton, who declared he spoke the sentiments of the people of Kent County, hath, as one of the Commissioners for completing the Court-House in Dover, insulted the Legislature of this State by denying them the use of the chambers heretofore occupied by the General Assembly for holding their sessions, requiring them to be delivered up for the use of workmen employed about the building, in consequence of which both houses have adjourned the sessions to Duck Creek Cross-Roads; therefore,

Resolved unanimously, That in the opinion of this General Assembly the Legislature of the State ought not to be subject to the caprice of any individual in the State, and that it will not be proper for them to hold their sessions in the town of Dover until the Levy Court of Kent County or some other proper authority shall, by an explicit act, appropriate to their use the Chambers in the said Court-House agreeable to the intention heretofore expressed."

The Senate failed to concur in the resolution, and pending further action the difficulty was reconciled, and beginning with the next session, November, 1792, the General Assembly occupied the State-House, and have continued to the present time.

On January 23, 1794, the Levy Court petitioned the Legislature to be reimbursed for expenses incurred in fitting up the court-house for the use of the General Assembly.

On February 9, 1795, the Legislature authorized the placing of a copper roof on the court-house, the completion of the battlements, the erection of stone steps and the painting of the building, which was accomplished at a cost of $1066.67, under the supervision of special commissioners King Dougall and Robert Clark.

On January 27, 1835, Charles Marim, Thomas Davis and Wm. Herdman were appointed a legislative committee to report on the expediency of enlarging the Assembly chambers and providing a library-room, and in 1836 a two-story and basement addition, forty by fifty feet, was built at a cost of about three thousand dollars. The improvements provided an executive chamber, secretary's office, and library on the lower floor and committee rooms on the upper floor, in addition to enlarging the hall of the house to its present capacity.

The Legislature at the session of 1873 appointed a Committee on Public Buildings, who reported their conclusion that it was best for the interests of the State and of Kent County that the title of the building should be in the State, and invited the Levy Court of Kent County to inform them on what terms it could be purchased. The subject was discussed by the Levy Court commissioners, who informed them it could be obtained for fifteen thousand dollars, and the committee therefore recommended to the Legislature that it be purchased, and the Legislature passed an act, April 3, 1873, the preamble of which is as follows:

"Whereas, the public of Kent County is the owner of a lot of ground upon which the court-house stands, but the building thereon, as it was originally constructed, is the joint property of the said county and State and the addition to the building is the property of the State exclusively and whereas it is deemed advisable that the State should own the premises aforesaid, to the end that the buildings thereon which are now falling to decay may be repaired and properly remodeled if necessary, refitted and refurbished for the use of the State exclusively."

The preamble further recites that the title to the land on which the State House stands was vested, March 29, 1775, in Cesar Rodney, Charles Ridgely, Samuel Chew, William Killen and Jacob Stout, and their survivors and heirs, and that at the time of this act the survivor of them all being Jacob Stout, who died in 1855, and who was the son of Jacob, the original trustee, leaving a son, Henry, who also died, leaving three children underage, all of whom resided out of the State and jurisdiction, and as Henry Stout, the eldest son of Henry Stout, is the heir-at-law, and in whom the title is vested, it is enacted

Sec. 1. "That the Attorney-General be and is hereby directed to take the necessary steps in the Court of Chancery of Kent County ... for the appointment of a trustee in lieu of the non-resident heir-at-law of the said Henry Stout and ask the Court for a decree at the earliest period."

The Levy Court, on April 10, 1873, approved of the action of the Legislature and authorized the president, John S. Herrington, to transact the necessary business. The court also suggested the name of Edward Ridgely as trustee of the property, and on April 30, 1873, the chancellor, Daniel M. Bates, appointed Edward Ridgely trustee, in lieu of Henry Stout, non-resident heir-at-law, and on May 1st following Henry Todd, as register in Chancery, conveyed the property to Edward Ridgely as trustee, in whom it is now vested.

The act provided for the payment of the fifteen thousand dollars to the Levy Court of Kent County, the south, and the library in the rear, while the offices of the State treasurer and the auditor are on the right and left of the main entrance.

The Levy Court of Kent County, on June 3, 1873, soon after the sale of the court-house, contracted with Curtis S. Watson and Tobias R. Merritt for lots on the corner of the Main Street and the Public Square. The deed of the east lot from Mr. Merritt cost three thousand dollars, bears date October 14, 1873, and the corner lot cost one thousand dollars, from Mr. Watson, October 28, 1873, to Edward Ridgely as trustee for Kent County. On April 30, 1874, the Levy Court contracted with Fisher Bockman to build a court-house for thirty-one thousand five hundred dollars. The designs called for a brick structure, sixty by eighty feet, with the first floor for offices, second floor for court-room, grand jury and witness-rooms, and the third story for a hall for public uses. The court-room was to be ready for use by October, 1874. It was finished by that time, but was thought too dapp for use, and was not occupied until the next term, court being held in the Levy Court room meantime. Court was opened at the next term in the new court-house, by Judge Edward Gipin.

State Library. — It appears from the records that the first intimation looking toward the formation of a State library was originated by an act of the General Assembly of February 2, 1789, by which it was made the duty of the secretary of State to "cause not more than three hundred copies, nor less than one hundred and fifty of such of them (laws) as are of a public nature, to be published as soon as conveniently may be;" and "when a sufficient number of laws to form a volume of a convenient size have been enacted and printed," to have eighteen copies bound up, of which he shall deliver "three to the Senate, and three to the House of Representatives of this State." It was also made his duty, under like conditions, to transmit three copies of the journals of each House "to the Senate and House of Representatives for the use of the two Houses."

By an act of the General Assembly, passed at Dover, January 27, 1812, it was made the duty of the Governor "to transmit to the executive of each State of the United States, three copies of the laws that have heretofore been enacted; and also, three copies of all laws that shall be hereafter enacted annually, and request a like interchange from them;" and that "the secretary of State cause such further number of copies of the laws of this State to be annually printed, ... so as to enable the Governor to comply with this act."

On the 25th of January, two days previously, the subject of establishing a State library was agitated before the State Senate and a resolution offered in that body "that a committee of three members be appointed, on the part of the Senate, to confer with the like number to be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, on the expediency of establishing a library for the use of the General Assembly, Governor, secretary of State, attorney-general, treasurer and auditor of accounts," which resolution was called up on the 28th and its adoption "determined in the negative."

By a joint resolution of the General Assembly of February 14, 1816, the act of January 27, 1812, was amended, and the number of copies of the laws was increased to nine for the use of the Senate and twenty-one for the House of Representatives.

Thus the embryonic State library continued in its inchoate state until the session of 1832, presumably in charge of the secretary of State, when, on the 4th of February of that year, the General Assembly by joint resolution appointed William Johnson and Ignatius T. Cooper, Esq. (Rev. I. T. Cooper, D.D.), "commissioners to take in charge and trust the books and papers in the libraries of this Legislature; and so Samuel Brown, March 6, 1851; by S. C. Leatherbury, March 2, 1855; by Zadoc L. Butler, March 3, 1857; by Henry H. Flowers, February 24, 1859; by David Clayton, March 7, 1861; of whom the last four received a yearly compensation of fifty dollars, with the exception of David Clayton, who received forty-five dollars.

Up to this time (1863) the library was kept in a very indifferent, slip-shod manner; very little time or attention was paid to the "safe-keeping and preservation of the books thereof, by reason whereof very many, if not by far the greater proportion, of the books were either lost or appropriated to the use of private individuals, to such an extent, in fact, that a complete set of the elementary works or any of the reports could scarcely be found there; the Library failed in a great measure to answer the purposes for which it was established, and unless the missing books be soon recovered, they must be lost forever, and the Library remain in an entirely useless condition, or be restored to a creditable and useful condition, by replacing the books so missing at an enormous cost to the State." In consequence of the above-recited state of facts, the General Assembly by joint resolution, adopted March 13, 1863, appointed Charles P. Wetherby "Superintendent of the State Library," whom they "authorized and directed to search throughout the State for any and all books missing from the State Library, and to take the same wherever found, and place and deposit them in proper order on the shelves prepared for that purpose in the State Library Room." He was also further directed to catalogue and to label each book with the words "Delaware State Library," and to "keep a list of all books and papers by him received from time to time for deposit in the said Library, and to enter any and all books so received on the catalogues aforesaid, and cause the same to be labelled in the manner before provided." From that day we date a new era in the history of the formation, growth and prosperity of the "Delaware State Library." Mr. Wetherby was succeeded by Joseph G. O. Harrington, March 21, 1871; by Hugh J. Enright, April 9, 1873, who was required to catalogue and label the books as had been done ten years previously, for which he was to receive a salary of one hundred and fifty dollars per annum.

March 25, 1875, Cecil C. Fulton was appointed custodian of the State Capitol building and State librarian, and the salary increased to three hundred and fifty dollars. He was succeeded by George O. Shakespeare, March 14, 1877; by Richard R. Kenney (now adjutant-general of the State) February 13, 1879, who issued, in 1881, the first and only printed catalogue of the State Library. These two last-named received a salary of only three hundred dollars.

By an act of the General Assembly, passed at Dover, March 30, 1883, entitled "An Act to establish the State Library," the library was placed on a secure basis, and the office of the librarian made an executive instead of a legislative appointment. The librarian is required to "take the oath of office and give a bond to the State in the sum of two thousand dollars, with two sureties, to be approved by the Governor, conditionated for the faithful performance of his official duties." The salary of the office was increased to five hundred and fifty dollars per annum. The sum of seventy-five dollars was appropriated annually as a contingent fund for the necessary expenses of the State Library, and the further "sum of three hundred dollars to be expended by the librarian, under the direction of the Court of Errors and Appeals, for judiciary reports, and not for text books, preference being given to supplying the missing volumes of sets of reports in the library."

Under this act Samuel D. Truitt was appointed State librarian, April 7, 1883; he was succeeded by John C. Gooden, the present incumbent, April 5, 1887.

From the comparatively insignificant number of books in charge of the secretary of State in 1798, with the slight increase in 1816, the "Delaware State Library," by purchase, by inter-State and international exchange, has grown to magnificent proportions, now numbering over nineteen thousand volumes. The library, devoid of novels and light literature generally, is a department of legal and miscellaneous reference, comprising chiefly standard works of history, biography, science and art, Congressional publications, judiciary reports, text-books and State laws. The library was kept in the eastern wing of the Capitol, in the rear of the old court-room, but, owing to want of space, a large part of the valuable miscellaneous works are packed in boxes and stowed away in the cellar and attic of the State-House. In 1873, the State having obtained the sole title to the Capitol building, and the courts having vacated their restricted quarters for their new and more commodious building, the library-room was enlarged to three times its former capacity; yet, notwithstanding this additional facility for shelving, the State Library has outgrown its narrow, contracted shell, till now hundreds of volumes of valuable miscellaneous works are stored away in boxes and piled in tiers on the library floor. It is a duty that the General Assembly owes to the present generation and to future posterity to provide more ample room for the ever increasing voluminous works of man's intellectual achievement, and we doubt not that the next General Assembly will take proper measures to afford adequate space, and provide the necessary protection against loss by fire of invaluable works that, once lost or destroyed, could never be restored nor supplied.

The Office Building.—This lot, No. 83, was set apart for the use of the county upon the laying out, and the title has been in the county since 1894. The old rough-cast building that was formerly used for a jail and office was ordered to be torn down, and a new fire-proof building erected on its site by the Levy Court of Kent County at the March session, 1868. George W. Cummins, Wilson L. Cannon, Henry Ridgely, Joseph P. Comegys, Alex. Johnson and R. W. Reynolds were appointed a committee "to cause to be erected a new fire-proof county building."

They at once employed Alonzo H. Reynolds, an architect of Port Deposit, Md., to draw plans, which were accepted, advertised for proposals and accepted one from William Greaves, of Wilmington, with whom they made a contract for nine thousand nine hundred and seventy-five dollars. Andrew Smithers, of Dover, was chosen to superintend the work. On the 8th of February, 1859, the building was declared completed by the committee, and it was soon after occupied.

A metallic box was placed in a corner-stone in the southwest corner of the base of the second story, containing a copy of all the newspapers of the State, names of the Levy Court commissioners, names of all State and county officers, population of Dover and various other things.

Almshouse.—In 1775 an act passed the General Assembly of the three lower counties for the relief of the poor, authorizing the appointment of overseers and giving them powers to bind out children and to provide means for the support of the poor. Nothing of any importance was done in this county under this act. An act passed the General Assembly of Delaware January 29, 1791, authorizing the purchase of land and the erection of a poor-house in each county and the appointment of overseers. Overseers were appointed under this act for each county, those for Kent County being James Morris, Manlove Emerson, John Patton, James Sykes, William Kirkley, Isaac Davis and William Berry. Section twenty-eight of the act of 1791 declared that the poor of each county should wear a badge of red cloth on the left arm, which had upon it, in Roman characters, the letters P. N., P. K. or P. S., for the different counties.

The overseers above-mentioned, except James Morris and Isaac Davis, met in the town of Dover on the 3d of February, and organized by the election of James Sykes president. It was ordered at this meeting that lists of the poor of each hundred should be obtained and handed in at the next meeting. On February 8th another meeting was held, and a committee appointed to view houses near Camden to keep the poor in; and a dwelling in that place was rented on February 28th, for temporary use as a poor-house. The overseers reported the 9th of February, and advised the purchase of the Vashel house and plantation, then owned by Jonathan Hunn, Jr. The purchase of seventy-three acres was made in February, 1791, for £424 10s. This land was part of the tract taken up by John Barnes before 1700, and called "Barnes' Chance." The title was in some way not fully completed, and on January 4, 1894, Jabez Jenkins and wife, in consideration of one dollar, conveyed the property to the trustees of the poor.

On the 28th of February the trustees ordered the Vashel house fitted up for the use of the poor, and it was occupied in June of that year. On October 31st a log dwelling-house, one story high, sixteen by twenty feet, was ordered to be built on the southeast side of the main building, for the use of the overseer and his family; and in the same year a log smoke-house, sixteen feet square, was also erected.
KENT COUNTY.

On the 30th of March, 1792, twenty-six acres of the land on the west side was sold to James Mc Clemeny, and in April, 1799, a cook-house, sixteen by eighteen feet was built. On July 7, 1800, a wooden building, sixteen by twenty-two feet, two stories high, was ordered to be erected for the use of deranged persons and for the use of the poor negroes. In July, 1811, arrangements were made for the erection of the building now called the White Woman's House, built of brick, three stories high, twenty-four by fifty-two feet, which was completed in 1812. John Tucker, now (1888) living at Dover, when a lad, assisted in its erection. A few years later a frame dwelling was erected for the overseer to the west of the log hut. The Colored House was built of brick in 1853, and in 1854 the brick building, three stories in height, fifty feet front, with two wings twenty-four by thirty feet each, was erected on the opposite side of the street and is used for maids and for the confinement of the insane. In 1880 the present frame dwelling, thirty by forty feet and eighteen by twenty-eight feet, for the use of the overseer, was erected at a cost of four thousand dollars. Besides the lands purchased for the use of the poor of the county, above mentioned, one hundred acres additional, being part of the tract called Springfield, was purchased of Daniel Mifflin February 11, 1819. Since then nineteen acres were purchased May 1, 1854, of Thomas H. England, ninety acres on April 11, 1888, of Benjamin Stadley, one hundred and thirty-two acres on January 9, 1868, of William H. Wallace, and thirty acres on November 2, 1870, of James Kearsey.

The report of the directors for the year ending March 1, 1887, shows that from all sources $10,641.85 have been received, and $2874.83 have been expended for salaries and miscellaneous bills. For the expenses of the poor, outside of the almshouse, $1276.20 have been appropriated, and $902.18 for permanent improvements and repairs, $1876.18 for supplies purchased for the farm, $3704.04 for supplies for inmates, family, farm-hands, etc., making a total of $10,683.48. The produce of the farm during the year was estimated at $4688.44.

The trustees of the poor for 1887 were J. Henry Jefferson, for Duck Creek; David L. Spruance for Kenton; John W. Fenimore for Little Creek; Wm. Dyer, for East Dover; James Williams, for West Dover; John G. Graham, for North Murderkill; Abner Dill, for South Murderkill; Joseph Booth, for Missonilla; William J. Townsend, for Milford.

The officers of the board are James Williams, president; John W. Fenimore, treasurer; J. G. Graham, secretary; E. B. Downes, overseer.

KENT COUNTY JAIL.—The early deeds concerning the property of this town make repeated mention of the jail lot, and on the map made in 1740 by Thomas Noxon, it is laid down as being forty and a half feet on the public square running east and north to North Street. It is on this land on the public square that the first jail was erected. Proof of this is found in the deed from the Dover commissioners, August 12, 1739, to Charles Hillyard. His lot begins "at the northwesterly corner of the prison in the Court-House Square," thence west by north thirty feet to a corner of Thomas Tarrant's lot. Hillyard's lot was the one on which the printing-office of J. Kirk & Son now stands. At that time lot 38, ninety-seven feet deep on the square, and a part of lot No. 27 belonged to the county.

This lot was sold by the commissioners to Nicholas Ridgely, November 16, 1754, but no mention at this time is made of the jail being located upon it.

Lot 33 in the map of 1740 is marked offices, and as the old rough-cast brick building, about twenty by thirty-six feet, used for offices, stood upon the lot now occupied by the office building, and contained cells which were used for prisoners as late as 1827-28, when the jail was partially destroyed by fire, the inference is that this venerable edifice was in the first instance both the public office and the public prison. Some time between 1759 and 1763, when James Hamilton was Governor, Samuel Dickinson, John David, John Vining, Robert Willocks and Benjamin Chew were, by act of General Assembly, appointed trustees to sell the "Goal and lot in Dover and to purchase another lot for the building of a new Goal." It does not appear that they sold the goal and lot, but on the 13th of March, 1775, lot 27, occupied by the present jail, was purchased of James Wells by Jacob Stout for the use of Kent County. A brick jail, about forty by fifty feet, was erected upon this lot, partly on the site of the rear of the present stone part of the jail building. In the absence of Levy Court records it is impossible to determine the year in which it was built. Thomas Fisher was sheriff from November, 1824, to November, 1828, and on Saturday night, October 27, 1827, the jail was set on fire by William Greenely,1 an inmate of the prison.

1 Greenley was tried for arson, convicted and sentenced to be executed. A few days before the time appointed a pardon was procured. He was not told of it, but it was thought best he should be out of the county.
confined for horse-stealing. The prisoners were removed to the old prison in the rough-cast building, and there kept until the jail was rebuilt, the old walls being in good condition. It was completed and used until the present one was erected in 1872.

Agitation began for a new jail about 1870, and in the March session of the Levy Court of 1871 John Von Gaskin, Charles Hillyard and William D. Fowler were chosen a committee to mature plans. At the April session it was resolved that a sheriff's house should be built in connection with the prison, and Edmund Bailey, J. Frank Denny and James G. Waples were authorized to contract with a competent architect for plans and specifications for a sheriff's house and prison, the cost not to exceed $30,000. Plans were drawn by Mr. Sloan, an architect, and accepted on April 27th. The committee were authorized to advertise for proposals to be handed in by May 22d. The time was extended to May 27th, when five proposals were received, ranging from $34,500 to $49,467. None were accepted, but on June 6th a contract was made with Alonzo H. Reynolds and Charles Hillyard for the construction of the buildings for $34,125. The work was declared completed May 28, 1872, by the Building Committee,—John S. Harrington, J. Frank Denny and William H. Hobson. Extra work by contractors amounted to $1166.90, and other expenses were $5600, making a sum total of $40,241.90.

The counties of New Castle and Sussex established the stocks and whipping-posts soon after the organization of their courts. The loss of all early records of Kent County, except those of register and recorder, reader it difficult to determine many things that were known to exist.

The first county records concerning stocks and whipping-post is in the account of Dr. Charles Ridgely, treasurer of Kent County.

It shows that John Vining had contributed five pounds for the erection of stocks and whipping-post and had paid to Samuel Johnson three pounds and ten shillings for building the stocks. Where they were located is not known. In 1738 the Levy Court had ordered the erection of whipping-post and pillory on the public square in front of the court-house, but the General Assembly, on the 14th of June in that same year by act ordered it erected on the court-house lot, east of the court-house or in some place the prothonotary thought best.

Judge George P. Fisher, who, as a little boy, lived in the jail with his father, then sheriff, says it stood in 1826 about where the double gates are that open into the jail near the office building.

Ley Court Commissioners.—The act establishing the Ley Courts was passed in 1736 under George II. Section 3 provided that the justices of the peace of the respective counties shall meet yearly for the laying of levies together with eight grand jurymen, and the assessors or the majority of them shall meet at the court-house within the county and settle the public debts and charges of the county, and adjust the sums of money to be raised to defray the expenses of building and repairing court-houses, prisons and work-houses, for destroying wolves, crows and blackbirds, with such other uses as may be deemed to the public service and with power to make good deficiencies to and collect and enforce collections.

In 1757 a supplement to this act was passed, authorizing the Ley Court to appoint county treasurers, and on the 14th of June, 1758, the act was amended, which provided that the Ley Court and Court of Appeals should be composed of commissioners to be elected by the people. Nine were to be elected for Kent County, two from each hundred of Duck Creek and Mispillion, and one for each of the other hundreds, Little Creek and St. Jones.

An amendment February 9, 1796, provided that every freeman over twenty-one years of age shall be rated, in addition to his amount of other tax.

An amendment January 19, 1797, authorizes the court to raise money to maintain the poor and build poor-houses, for laying out and repairing, amending and erecting bridges, causeways and public roads.

The Levy Court records of Kent County are not to be found in continuous record until 1851. A few of the members are here given:

- John Martin

CHAPTER LV.

DOVER.

The town of Dover enjoys the distinction of having been projected by William Penn, the next year after his arrival in this country, although it was not laid out until 1717. The settlements in 1683 were mostly along the streams, and “Towne Point,” near the mouth of St. Jones’ Creek, was the place where the courts were held, but, as settlement in the interior was rapidly increasing, Penn conceived the idea of creating a town for a county-seat for St. Jones’ County (Kent) and on the 11th of the Sixth Month (August), 1683, he issued a warrant authorizing the surveyor to lay out, for the Governor, a town to be called “Dover,” a copy of which is here given:

> William Penn, Proprietor & Governor of ye Province of Pennsilvania & ye Territories thereunto belonging.

> “I do hereby order thee to lay out, or cause to be laid out, in ye land appointed for ye town of Dover, in ye county of Kent, one high street one hundred and fifty feet wide, and two back streets each sixty-six feet broad, to run ye water side throughout, and one cross street one hundred and fifty feet broad where ye high road crosseth ye said town land, & to lay ye Lots in ye sd Town so as each may contain one acre and a half of land, to grant to any person, upon application to thee for a Lot, one Lot in ye sd Town, they building forthw* on ye same as paying unto me as a Grant Kent yearly one bushel of good winter wheat or four shillings. Acc.”

> “I do also order & ye Court House and Prison be built in ye cross street of ye sd Town. Given at Philadelphia ye 11th of ye 6th mo. 1683.

> Wm. Penn.

> “To William Clarke,
> Surveyor of ye counties of Kent and Pennsilvania.

> Endorsed as follows—

> “The Governor want to lay out the Town Lots and Streets in the Town of Dover, Kent County.”

On the same date William Penn issued the following warrant:

> “These are to will and require thee forthwith to lay out or cause to be laid out one of ye corners of ye cross streets in ye town of Dover, in ye county of Kent, containing eight Lots for my own use, and make returns thereof into my Secretary’s office.”

In the warrants issued by Penn during the years 1683–84 he provided that the quit-rents on land in this vicinity be paid at the “town of Dover.” It was not at once laid out, probably owing to other business of moment in the province. The history of the county seat and courts of Kent County contain an account of the trouble in locating the town, but upon the decision of the justices that it be upon the land of William Southbee, all controversy ceased. The two hundred acres of land purchased in 1684, was part of a larger tract called “Brothers’ Portion,” containing eight hundred acres, which John and Richard Walker took up under a warrant in 1680. On the 20th of February, 1682-83, they purchased the Indian right of this tract of Christian, alias Petogogue, owner of all the land between the mother Kill and Duck Creek, for three match-coats, twelve bottles of drink and four handfuls of powder. On the 10th of February, 1684, John Walker, then sole owner, sold the whole tract to William Southbee, of Philadelphia. It may be well here to state that John Walker and William Southbee were both members of Penn's Council from Kent County, and after the sale of all this land by Southbee, he removed to Philadelphia and became a member of the Council from that county.

Richard Wilson and William Morton were authorized to purchase two hundred acres of William Southbee, which Wilson bought November 23, 1684, for twenty-five pounds, and on the 4th of February following, conveyed it to the county of Kent. It was a tract one hundred perches on Dover River by three hundred and twenty perches westward. The court-house was built about 1687 where the present court-house stands. At that time there was no village or settlement of considerable proportions in the limits of Kent County, and the inhabitants, realizing the necessity of making the place where the courts were held of some importance and convenience, also for the transaction of other business than the public, united in the year 1699 in a petition to the Council at Philadelphia, which was read before that body May 15th. John Curtis and Griffith Jones, residents of the county, were members of the Council, and John Walker, Thomas Bedwell, Samuel Burberry and John Bradsbaw, of the Assembly, were also residents of Kent. The petition set forth—

"...that there is a certain piece of land in ye so County of two hundred acres, on the south side of Dover river near the bridge in the King's Road, upon which the court-house now stands, which ye so Inhabitants late removed from Wm. Southbee for the public use of the said County; and yea wherein ye so Land being conveniently accommodated in all respects ye good and benefit profit, and it being necessary that a township, with all other privileges and benefits, be erected and established for the good of the said county, with fairest convenient times, &c., and the said Land being convenient situated for ye purpose; and for Requesting ye so Land may be from henceforth erected into a township and called by the name of Canterbury, & that they have a fair yrin [therein] twice a year, and that the same may be located out of Lots, a comon and market place, as the county court and Grand Jury shall order and appoint, with streets and publick Landings, & ye freeholders of the said county may have their Lots proportionable to what they have paid towards it, and that whatsoever else may be necessary for good and benefit profit may be left to the court and grand jury, from time to time, as ye same shall be needful to be done."

The petition and all its provisions were granted except the name, which was declared to be called "Dover" after the 20th of June next (1699).

The records of the court of Kent County are not to be found; therefore the action of the grand jury or the court is not known. It is evident that even with the approval of the Council, the town was not laid out for several years after. It has not beenascertain whether fairs were held. James Maxwel's tavern, where the courts were formerly held, was not very far away. John Walker, who originally owned the land on which Dover was laid out, also kept an ordinary on his other land. Certainly no title was in any of the two hundred acres bought for the county of Kent. It is evident that from the time of the answer to the petition, the place became known as Dover, for in the act of assembly passed in 1717, before it was yet laid out, the place is mentioned as being commonly called the town of Dover. Early in the term of Sir William Keith as Governor of Pennsylvania and the provinces in 1717, an act passed the Assembly of the three lower counties appointing persons to lay out the land in lots and streets adjoining to the court-house in Kent County, and to sell the lots. The preamble recites:

"Nothing being of more consequence to a country than the improvement thereof by the addition of tradesmen, and others, in such measure as may not be of great expense to the new settlers; therefore be it enacted," etc.

Section 1 provided

"that it shall and may be lawful, and it is hereby made lawful, for Benjamin Shurmer, William Brinkle, and Richard Richardson, or any two of them, to survey and lay out into lots a certain tract of land in the county of Kent, adjoining to the court-house of said county, and purchased by the people thereof and commonly called the town of Dover. In such measurement and proportions as to them shall seem meet and convenient, and the said lots so surveyed and laid out as aforesaid, to dispose of and sell to such persons as are willing to purchase and buy.

"Sec. 4. That the said survey and allotment and laying out shall be finished and completed at or before the tenth day of March next."

The commissioners laid out the town-plot one hundred perches wide, the width of the tract, and two hundred perches westward, embracing one hundred and twenty-five acres, leaving seventy-five acres on the west end of the tract. The King's Road, leading from Philadelphia southward to Lewes, passed through the plot and is the present Main Street. At right angles with this road is another road or street, which is mentioned in early deeds as Long Street, was located, extending from Dover River westward, passing in front of the residence of Hon. John A. Nicholson, the court-house, office of the Delaware and the residence of Chief Justice Comegys.

At the intersection of these two roads a square was laid out, twenty-two perches on each side, exclusive of the roads. Penn in his instructions directed that the court-house be built at the intersection of the two main streets, and the commissioners, in laying out the town, laid the Long Street in such a way that the court-house occupied that position, and it was in the southeast quarter of the Public Square, where the present court-house now stands. Two other public lots were laid out, one called "Church Square," the other "Meeting House Square."

It will be noticed that the town-plot was to be completed by March, 1718, and it evidently was at that time or soon after that the plot was made one hundred by two hundred perches, leaving about seventy-five acres to the westward not laid out. On the 13th of May, 1718, John Mifflin bought of the commissioners sixty-nine acres of this tract, which, after passing through several owners, on July, 1748, with some other land adjoining, came to Nicholas Ridgely, whose descendents still own it. It is known as the Ridgely farm.
Ephraim Emerson purchased the remaining portion of the tract outside of the town-plot as laid out. On August 7, 1718, Richard Richardson, one of the commissioners, purchased a lot "beginning at the north-west corner of a square laid out by the authority aforesaid and designed as a place for a court-house and other public services for the use of the said County of Kent, and running thence east by north eleven perches to the corner laid out for a street, and also for the King's road; thence north and by west along the western side of the same street seventeen and a half perches to a stake; thence west and by south twenty-eight and a half perches to a stake; thence south and by east twenty-eight and a half perches to a stake in the line of another space laid out for a street, proceeding from Dover Creek through the body of the said tract; thence down the side of the said street east and by north seventeen and a half perches to the western side of the said square; thence north by west eleven perches to the place of beginning."

In this description the square is mentioned as laid out "and designed as a place for a Court-House and other public services for the use of the said County of Kent," and that the land purchased by Mr. Richardson is eleven perches on the north and west sides of the square; that his south line extends to "another space laid out for a street, proceeding from Dover Creek through the body of the tract," which clearly proves that the street, as originally designed in the plot, ran from Dover Creek in front of the present court-house, through the tract westward, and on the south side of the present Public Square.

On the day of Commissioner Richardson's purchase, Absalom Cuff, of Saulsbury (now Duck Creek), bought a lot containing thirteen acres at "the southern end" of the town, and on the 16th of August the same year Samuel Greenwood purchased thirteen and eight-tenths acres of land on the southern side and western end of the town-plot. The names of John Hefflin and Ephraim Emerson are mentioned as owning lots adjoining Absalom Cuff, which were probably purchased the same day, but they are not of record.

In several deeds made to Benjamin Shurmer, May 20, 1719, by which he bought the lots of Absalom Cuff, Samuel Greenwood, Ephraim Emerson, and later the sixty-nine acres of John Mifflin, mention is made of the land as lying along Long Street, laid out from Dover Creek through the body of the town land, the land and lots all lying south of Long Street. Mention is made in several other early deeds of Long Street, having reference undisputably to the street that was abandoned about 1722 when the court-house lot was sold to John Lindsay.

No other deeds are recorded until February 12, 1722, when John Lindsay purchased of the commissioners a lot of land "whereon the old court-house now stands," and which at the time of sale was in his possession. The lot is described as "beginning at a stake at the corner of the now court-house green, and running thence east by north along the line of the said green twenty-seven perches to another corner post; thence south by east twelve perches; thence west by south twenty-seven perches in a line of the east by north side of the chief street of the town called King Street; thence north by west along the line of said street to the place of beginning" laid out for two acres of ground.

It is evident from the sale of this quarter of the square that the original idea of the public square was abandoned, as the sale of this lot and an additional perch on the south side disposed of the whole of it. The square was doubtless intended to be nearly in the middle of the town, but the change makes the block from the present square to Water Street, nearly as large again as from the square to North Street. The street mentioned in the Richardson deed is found entirely closed a few years later as far as running through the town is concerned by the sale of the lot, now owned by the State, by the commissioners south of the State-House. It was sold March 12, 1729, to Francis Richardson, of which more hereafter.

The next purchaser after John Lindsay was Thomas Wells, of Murtherkill, who on February 10, 1724, bought two lots; one on the north side of Church Square, the other on North Street, each containing one acre. On the 16th of February he purchased two more lots; one being No. 32, on which the Capital Hotel now stands, four perches on the square and extending along King Street to North Street. The other lot was on North Street eight perches, and on East Street fourteen perches.

On August 12, 1727, John Bell bought a lot on High Street, fourteen by twenty-two perches on the southeast side of Church (Meeting-House) Square containing two acres. February 12, 1729, Thomas Tarrant bought two lots, one of which was No. 31 on the north side of the Court-House Square, adjoining a lot of Charles Hillyard on the east and on the west, a lot "designed for Andrew Hamilton," seventy-seven feet by two hundred and thirty-one feet, extending to North Street. The other lot was on North and High Streets, fourteen by eighteen perches.

On November 12, 1729, Francis Richardson, of Philadelphia, who was a large land-owner in Kent County, purchased lot No. 26, fronting on the east side of the public square one hundred and ten feet, and extending three hundred and sixty-three feet eastward to East Street. This lot takes up the street laid out originally from Dover Creek westward. The south line was irregular and joined the Linsey or Lindsay lot, and on the north line was also irregular, as lot 34, ninety-seven feet in depth, on which the State-house now stands, was part of the original lot No. 26. This lot No. 34 was evidently in the second laying out of the town reserved for the court-house. Lot 33, on which the office building now stands, was originally part of lot No. 27, and was also ninety-seven feet in depth. In the map made by Thomas Noxon in 1740, No. 34 is marked as court-house, and No. 38 as office.

Francis Richardson on November 12, 1729, also bought three and one-half acres of land in the Town Plot lying on the east side of East Street, opposite the south corner of his other purchase; thence along East Street ten and one-half perches; thence east by south fifty-four perches to the back of Dover River; down the same ten and one-half perches; thence west by south to beginning.

August 12, 1729, Waitman Sipple and Joseph Booth, Jr., received a deed for two lots on the south side of Water Street, forty perches by one hundred and thirty-two perches containing, two acres, called "Elinor's Dowry."

The same day Charles Hilliard received deeds for two lots, one of which began "at the north-west-erly corner of the prison in the Court-House Square, thence thirty feet west along the square to the lot of Thomas Tarrant, No. 31; thence north to North Street, along line of said street, east by north sixty-six feet to corner betwixt North and High Streets; thence along west side of High Street, south by east forty feet to a corner of prison lot; thence along lower line, west by south thirty-six feet to corner of said lot; thence south by east by the line thereof to beginning."

The other lot began on the southeasterly corner of High Street, where it intersects the line of South Street; along the line of the street east by north twelve perches to corner on South Street; thence north by west twenty-two perches to corner; thence west by south twelve perches to corner on High Street; along the street twenty-two perches to beginning line, and for two hundred and sixty-six square perches. August 16 following he also bought a lot beginning at western side of High Street and the northern side of the Church Square (Meeting House Square); along High Street three perches; thence west by south twelve perches; south by east to corner of the square, three perches and along the square to beginning, containing twenty square perches.

On the 10th of November, 1729, David Rees bought a lot on King Street, sixty-six feet south by east of John, south of Bell's lot, formerly the Court-House lot and Linsey lot, fifty-three feet front by twelve perches deep. On April 10 the next year he bought the lot south, sixty-six by one hundred and twenty-nine feet extending to Water Street, and on the 14th of May following he bought a lot nine by fourteen perches, containing one hundred and twenty-eight square perches lying on the west side of High Street at the intersection of South Street. The house now owned and occupied by Mrs. Thomas G. Murphy stands on the lot. The house is solid, sub-

1 This discrepancy cannot be reconciled, as by all known plots High Street was on the west side of the town.
Front to East Street, and lots 15 to 20, fronting on East Street from South Street to the Church Square. The same date Thomas Noxon, then surveyor of the county, and who the year previous made the plot now preserved in the recorder's office bought lot 98 on Water Street from Queen to High Street.

Cornelius Empson, who came from New Castle at the same time, bought three lots, Nos. 87, 88, 89, on North and Queen Streets and adjoining the Meeting-House lot. On May 13th, 1742, Margaret Caton, daughter of John Caton, one of the magistrates of the court, bought a lot on the north side of South Street, and August 14th Samuel Dickinson bought lots on the north side of South Street and east side of King Street. In 1747 and prior to that time, Cornelius Empson was a merchant in Dover and kept store on the lot east of the Morris lot on the public square, which had formerly been sold to Charles Williams. This lot, as the property of Cornelius Empson, was sold by Caesar Rodney, sheriff, March 5, 1758, to John Clayton, Jr., on a mortgage to the Trustees of the Loan Office.

The Presbyterian Church was erected on Meeting-House Square before title to the land was obtained. On May 12, 1749, one acre and eighty-five perches was conveyed to Robert Jamison, minister; John Caton and Robert Bohannon, elders, of the Presbyterian congregation in and about Dover, for the use of the congregation, it being "all that lot or parcel of Ground within the town of Dover, whereon the Presbyterian meeting-house now stands." It is described as being on the west side of High Street.

Mention is made in the deed of Thomas Tarrant of the lot "designed for Andrew Hamilton," as adjoining his lot on the west. It was not taken by Hamilton, but was sold prior to 1729 to Thomas Parke, who resided there in that year. In the deed of January 30, 1790, to William Rodney, he stated that the deed from the commissioners was never recorded. Errors were made in the document, which were corrected in a deed of November 2, 1731. In the mean time, Rodney sold it, August 14, 1731, to Thomas Skidmore, innkeeper. A portion of the lot had been reserved, whereon the widow of Thomas Parke lived in 1735.

John Brinkloe, on May 3d, 1735, by an article of agreement, became owner of this lot, which was not conveyed by deed during the life-time of Skidmore. After Skidmore's death, May 14, 1760, Daniel Robinson, as administrator of the estate, gave deed to John Brinkloe for the property, who, on the 28th of August, 1760, sold it to Nicholas Locockerman, who, May 28, 1769, conveyed it to Charles Ridgely, by whose descendants it is still owned. The lot lies east of the Capital Hotel, and the old house upon it, long known as the Ridgely House, is probably the oldest in Dover. A brick in the building bears date 1728. Thomas Parke owned the lot at that time and stated in 1730 that he lived there at that time. The original house contained but two rooms, and was added to on the west end and the rear to its present size by the Ridgelys.

About the year 1739 an act was passed establishing a market at Dover, to be held upon a market-square selected by the magistrates, until a market-house should be erected. Markets were to be held on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Bakers were required to stamp every loaf of bread with some mark. Bread was to be of three kinds, white, middling or brown, and the size and weight of the loaves were to be regulated by the magistrates.

Thomas Nixon was appointed clerk of the market. No attention appears to have been paid to this act, and, between 1748 and 1754, another was passed which recites:

"Whereas, the said act hath been found insufficient so far as it concerns the town of Dover in regard that no place within the said town hath yet been laid out and called by the name of a market-square, nor any place yet allotted for building a market-house, or appointed where provisions may be bought and sold on market-days, until such house shall be built; for remedy whereof" it was enacted that Nicholas Ridgely, Esq., Andrew Caldwell and Thomas Alford, of Kent County, "lay out with all convenient speed a square plot of ground in or near the middle of that part of Dover commonly called the Court-House Square, which said plot of ground shall be called the Market Square." They "shall also allot and describe some spot of ground within the market-square for building a market-house upon," and to have the oversight of the erection of the building.

Thomas Parke was by the act appointed clerk of the market and empowered to set up stalls or booths and rent them for such an amount as three of the justices should decide upon; the clerk to have the fees for his compensation.

No account of the market or market-square has been obtained from any records, and a square probably was not laid out or house built.

In 1750 Benjamin Chew, James Gorell and Robert Willockes were appointed commissioners to sell lots in the town, and in 1764 Caesar Rodney, Charles Ridgely and Thomas Parke were appointed and made the last sale of records by Dover commissioners to Simon W. Wilson, December 23, 1783, (who was at that time recorder of the county.) The purchase was two acres "lying on the west side of town and without the bounds as laid down by Thomas Noxon in plan, but within limits as first directed to be laid off," adjoining the lots of Absalom Cuff and Samuel Greenwood.

In 1768, the people of Dover and vicinity petitioned Governor James Hamilton, asking the liberty and privilege of keeping a public fair twice a year in the town. This was granted September 12, 1763. The first fair was appointed to be held October 12th, and to continue that day and the next following, for the purpose of buying and selling horses, cattle and all kinds of goods and merchandise. The governor was to be paid yearly, and on the 1st of March forever.
one peppercorn if demanded. No account of any fairs under this permit is found.

On November 15, 1754, Nicholas Ridgely bought a lot of the commissioners that had been known as the jail lot and is laid down on the plan of 1740. It fronted on the east side of the public square, and extended north to North Street and is still owned by the Ridgely family. That portion of the lot on the square was without doubt, the location of the first jail of Kent County, as special mention is made of it in the deed to Charles Hillyard in 1729. In 1758, trustees were appointed to sell the old jail and jail lot, and this lot was sold the next year to Mr. Ridgely.

The Capital Hotel property passed August 4, 1731, from Thomas Wells to Timothy Cummings, and in 1745 James Byrne was an inn-keeper and kept tavern at the place. He also kept store, and a few years later sold to John Clayton, who May 15, 1765, conveyed it to Vincent Loopkerman, who is mentioned as a merchant. The tavern was rented to French Battell, who on March 10, 1774, became the owner of the property. He kept the tavern during the Revolution and died about 1781, bequeathing the business and real estate to his widow Elizabeth.
It was at this place of public entertainment that in June, 1792, was held the feast ordered by the General Assembly in honor of the birth of a Dauphin of France, the young prince who disappeared after the execution of Louis XVI., and whose fate is still one of the deepest mysteries of history. The tavern property remained in the hands of the Battell family until 1829, when it was sold to John Reed. In 1818, the house was kept by Joseph Buckmaster, and when the sale was made the inn-keeper was Jacob Biddle, who removed to the house where Benaiah Watson now resides and there continued his business until Reed erected a new tavern on the Battell land. Biddle then became his tenant, and was succceeded from 1840 to 1852 by Joseph McDaniels.

The hotel was kept by many hosts from that time until it was destroyed by fire, in February, 1881, when in charge of William Fountain. It was rebuilt at once and is now kept by George A. Millington.

The Andrew Hamilton lot on the northwest corner of the square was later owned by Charles Ridgely, who was a merchant in Dover, and on December 26, 1787, sold it to Nicholas Ridgely, his brother, who was an attorney-at-law and had filled important offices of the State. Charles Ridgely was one of the commissioners to build the new court-house, and was killed at the building during its erection. The property a few years later passed to Dr. William Winder Morriss and remained in possession of the family until recently and is now owned in part by Dr.
L. A. H. Bishop.

The lot of Charles Hillyard, now occupied by Kirk & Son's printing office, was owned in 1782, by Edward Tilghman, who February 11, sold it to James Sykes.
At that time Hon. William Killen owned the Tarrant's lot and next north from Mr. Bonseil's.

The property south of the state-house on which Hon. John M. Clayton resided, now owned by the State but still best known as the Clayton house, was sold by Francis Richardson, March 26, 1730, to Benjamin Shurmer who died in 1736, and left it to his son William, from whom it is thought to have passed to Samuel Chew, as tradition sometimes calls it the Chew house. About 1777, it came into possession of James Sykes, who was that year elected Prothonotary. He filled many important positions and was a member of the House of Representatives when he died in 1794. His son, James Sykes, was prominent as a physician and surgeon, and in 1812, built the residence of Hon. John A. Nicholson, with an office in the east part and a dissecting room on the second floor. His son James, also a physician, occupied the office. John M. Clayton opened his first law office in this place. The old house remained in possession of the Sykes family until November 6, 1824, when it was sold to Mr. Clayton and was his residence until his death, when it passed to Dr. Isaac Jump, and now belongs to the State. The old court-house lot that was sold to John Liney in 1722, was conveyed by him April 27, 1724, to John Curtis, who sold to John Reese, "Inholder," soon after.
November 17, 1727, Reese conveyed it to John Bell, in whose family it remained over a century. On this lot was the old-time tavern that had for a sign a portrait of George III. After the Revolution the portrait of George Washington was painted over it, and as time passed and colors faded both portraits could be indistinctly made out. James Wells was landlord in 1766, and John Bell during the Revolution. The latter's son-in-law, Jacob Furbie, was his successor, and was followed by Elizabeth Cook. In 1818, the inn-keeper was Thomas Coombs, and in 1820, Marshal Grouchy, who failed to support Napoleon at Waterloo, and was in part the cause of his defeat, was for some time a guest at the house, and spent his time hunting.
The old hostelry was headquarters for the Democratic party and also the place where for many years gubernatorial receptions were held. It was used as a hotel until destroyed by fire, Nov. 10, 1863. Captain William Mullen became the landlord in 1869 and died July 5th, preceding its destruction. His widow remained in charge and lost much by the fire.

John Banning, saddler, on the 10th of June, 1766, bought of the Dover commissioners a lot on King Street to South Street and east to East Street, where he built a dwelling, in which he also kept a store during the Revolution, and June 18th, purchased thir-ten lots south and east of Rev. Charles Inglis.
He was a member of the Council in 1791 and died in that year. His dwelling became the Dover Academy and is now the carriage-shop of W. A. Reilly.

In 1818 the hip-roofed house north of the Banning house was owned by the Loopkerman estate and occupied by John Chrisfield, a tailor. A two-story house next east was used as a wheelwright-shop by Benjamin Gould.
Rev. Charles Inglis, who was rector of Christ Church from 1758 to 1764, bought a lot of Vincent Loockerman, where he resided during his pastorate here. His wife, Mary Vining, a step-daughter of Nicholas Ridgely, and a sister of Chief Justice John Vining, died here and lies buried in the churchyard, near where she lived. The lot is on the east side of King Street and extended eastward on Water Street to the church lot. He sold it to John Pryor, a merchant in Dover, February 10, 1762. Mr. Inglis also owned thirteen lots and a messuage and tenement lying between King, South, Front and Water Streets, which he sold June 18, 1766, to John Bainig.

Hon. John Dickinson owned land in the southeast part of the town prior to 1766, which passed to Hon. William Killen, who, August 14th, 1776, sold lot No. 10, containing six acres, to Andrew and Richard Butler, and August 16th, lot 9, five acres, to James Wells, who is mentioned as an innkeeper of Dover. These lots were on Water Street between East and Front. The Butlers later owned lots 100 and 101, on the southeast part of the town plot.

A large lot fronting on the west side of King Street, and extending along the southwest side of the Public Square and through the Governor's Avenue, at an early date not known, came into possession of Richard Richardson, who, in 1718, purchased the land on the northwest of the Public Square. On May 2, 1776, it was divided into two lots, and John Richardson, son of Richard, received the north lot fronting on King Street and the Square, and Ann, the wife of James Townsend, was given the south lot, bounded south by the lot then owned by Hugh Parke. In the survey dwellings are shown on both lots as fronting on King Street.

The north lot was sold, November 28, 1788, by John Richardson to Mark Coudright, who erected the present office of the Delawarean. The land lying on the Public Square, except the corner lot, was seized in 1788 by Ezekiel Anderson, sheriff, who divided it into six lots and, February 5th, sold lot No. 1 to Stephen Allston, Nos. 2 and 3 to Purnell Lofland and No. 4 to Joshua Fisher. The remainder, through to High Street, soon after passed to Stephen Allston, who, in 1790, sold lots 5 and 6 to Joshua Fisher, who built the present residence of Chief Justice G. P. Comegy.

The lot formerly owned and occupied by James P. Wilds and now by Miss Manlove, was in the Long Street that was originally laid out to run from Dover Creek through the town plot. It was originally bought by Thomas Nixon, who owned all the land north of it to North Street in 1780. He left it to his son, Thomas Nixon, who was a physician in practice in Dover. He sold the west part of it, now belonging to the bank, August 4, 1788, to Richard Bassett, then member of the Council and later chief justice and President of the State. On November 30, 1787, Mr. Bassett bought three lots of Charles Nixon, executor of the estate of Dr. Thomas Nixon, lying west of his residence and in rear of the bank lot, then owned by Fidelio Rodger-son, to Governor's Avenue, and bounded south by the lots of Eleazer McComb. Until his departure from the town Miers Carson owned the lot on the Square south of Bassett's residence, which Mr. Bassett bought and owned in 1790.

Charles Kimmey, in 1806, opened a store in the south part of King Street, in the house now occupied as the parsonage of Christ Church. The public printing was done in the town for many years by the following persons: 1806, Wooten & Allen; 1807–12, John B. Wooten; 1813–16, Augustus H. Schoe and again in, 1855–36; 1837–52, Samuel Kimmey; 1859–60, William Sharp; 1864–75, James Kirk & Son, and at the office of the Delawarean; from 1875 to 1883 the printing was done at Wilmington, but since the latter year it has again been performed by J. Kirk & Son and the Delawarean establishment.

King Dougall, in 1797 and to 1819, was a merchant in Dover and kept a store. His day-book is in possession of Thomas O. Culbreath, and contains many curious entries, some of which are for spirits, rum and wine furnished to Assemblymen at Miller's. Samuel Miller, in 1798, kept one of the taverns. Dr. Jacob Jones, a native of Smyrna and a student under Dr. James Sykes, whose sister he married, was practicing medicine in Dover in that year, and about that time entered the navy of the United States, where he rose to the position of commodore. The State honored him by a portrait painted by Thomas Sully, which hangs in the chamber of the House of Representatives. At the same time Dr. John Horn was in practice in the town.

The Ridgely family, that for over a century and a half have resided in Dover, were first represented by Nicholas Ridgely, who was born in Anne Arundel County, Maryland, in 1694, and resided there in early manhood. He came to the town of Salisbury (now Duck Creek) about 1732, where he lived for a year or two, removing thence to Salem, N. J., where he married the widow of Benjamin Vining. In 1738 he settled in Dover and became one of the magistrates of the court, and in 1739 one of the provincial justices of the Supreme Court. July 15, 1748, he bought the farm in the original Dover tract still held by the family, and four other lots of land in the town plot as laid out. In 1754 he purchased the "jail lot," and died the next year, and was interred in Christ Church burying-ground. He left one son, Dr. Charles Ridgely, and several daughters.

Charles Ridgely, in 1769, purchased what is known as the Ridgely House, on the public square, where he died in 1786. He left sons,—Nicholas, who was member of the Council in 1788, and filled other important offices in the Government; Abraham; Charles, a Dover merchant, who was killed during the erection of the present State-House; George W., who was a midshipman in the navy and was lost at sea, on board the "Insurgent," off the coast of Peru; and Henry M., an attorney-at-law, whose sons, Dr. Henry and Edward, are still residing in Dover. The daughters of Dr. Charles Ridgely were Wilhelmina Mary (wife of Dr. William Winder Morris) and Ann.

The Loockerman family, for over a hundred years prominent in the county, were first represented by Nicholas Loockerman, who settled on the “Range,” known in later years as the Drew Farm, and was married in 1721. In 1722, Vincent Loockerman was born, and upon reaching maturity he settled in Dover, and purchased, about 1742, a lot on the north side of King Street, and built the residence where Mrs. Thomas B. Bradford now has her home. He left a son Vincent who was born in 1747, and in 1774 he married, Elizabeth, the daughter of John Pryor, a merchant in Dover, by whom he had two children, Elizabeth and Nicholas. He was at one time a member of the General Assembly of the three lower counties, and a prominent Whig during the Revolution. He died at his residence, on King Street, in Dover, August 26, 1785, aged sixty-three years, and with his wife, Susannah, is interred in the family burial-place, on the “Range.” Vincent, his eldest son, died April 5, 1790, aged forty-three years, and is also buried in the family ground.

Nicholas, son of Vincent, born in 1789, was in 1808, a member of the House of Representatives, and died unmarried in 1850. Elizabeth was born in 1779, and in 1805 married Thomas Bradford, LL.D., of Philadelphia, counselor-at-law. Her father died in 1805, and left her a large estate, which, after her death, in 1842, was divided among her five children,—Vincent L., Elizabeth L., Benjamin R., William and Thomas B. Vincent L. adopted the profession of his father, and became a noted counselor. He removed to Michigan in 1885, and in 1887 was elected to the State Senate. He returned to Philadelphia in 1848, and resumed practice. Elizabeth married Rev. William T. Dwight, D.D., of Portland, Me., son of Rev. Timothy Dwight, former president of Yale College, New Haven, Conn.

Thomas B. Bradford became a Presbyterian minister, and after the death of his mother returned to the paternal mansion in Dover, where he resided until his death, March 25, 1871. The property in and near Dover was left to his mother by will, March 9, 1874, and by lease and release came into the possession of Rev. Thomas Bradford, who, in 1852, laid out Bradford City, now the new part of Dover.

A number of lots lying just outside the town were bought by citizens of Dover as out-lots for pastureage and other purposes. The four hundred acres of the “brother’s portion,” bought of William Southbeby by Richard Wilson in 1699, were later owned by Hon. John Dickinson and passed to William Killen. A tract of land, part of the above, containing one hundred and ten acres lying south of and close to the town plot, between St. Jones’ Creek and the road that leads from Dover to Lewes, was laid out by William Killen, August 13, 1766, into lots long and narrow, each having a front on the creek and on the King’s Road. Lot No. 1, containing ten acres, next the town, was sold to John Pryor, a merchant in Dover. At the foot of it, on the creek, near where the tan-house ditch enters it, was a place called William’s Landing, now known as the ship-yard, where, in 1818-32, James Waples built two schooners and a sloop. No. 2 was taken by James Maxwell and contained five acres; No. 8, of five acres by James Morton; No. 4, of five acres by George Goforth; No. 5, of five acres by Matthew Bogg; No. 6, of ten acres by Cesar Rodney; No. 7, of twenty acres by Samuel McCall; No. 8, of ten acres by Hugh Parks; No. 9, of five acres by James Wells; No. 10, of six acres by Richard and Andrew Butler; No. 11, of twenty-eight acres by Thomas Nixon. The lands are now owned by Manlove Hayes, James M. Kerbin, George Parriss and James Slaymaker.

The first addition made to the town was by the selling of a few lots north of North Street and on the King’s Road or King Street. This land was part of a tract of four hundred acres known as “Morgan’s Calf Pasture,” and also “Lasseene,” which is given as the north boundary of the town plot in 1694. It was taken up by David Morgan in 1679 by warrant from Whorekill Court, and February 27, 1681-82, he bought the Indian right of Christian, the Indian owner of all the land between the Murther Creek and Duck Creek. Two hundred and fifty-four acres of it was sold to William Annand, who, by his will dated December 26, 1714, devised it by the name of “Bellyhill” to Andrew Hamilton, who retained it until August 28, 1775, when it passed to Vincent Loockerman. In 1777 he sold a few lots along the east side of the King’s Road leading through Dover to John Bell, who, in 1782, sold to Peter B. Fury. They passed to William K. Boyce, and, February 21, 1816, were sold to James Kirbin, in whose family they still remain.

On October 21, 1779, there was surveyed from part of the “calf pasture” three lots on the north side of North Street. The first contained one acre on the corner of North Street and the King’s Road, and was sold to John Bullin. In 1783 this lot was divided, and William Howell purchased the corner, forty-four feet on King Street, running along North Street. The next lot north, forty-four feet front, was sold to John Bullin, Jr., also fronting on King Street, and improved by a house. The rest was the estate of John Bullin, deceased. North of this property owned by John White.

The second lot was sold in 1779 to Rev. Samuel Megaw, rector of Christ Church. It was west of the Bullin lot on North Street and contained one acre. West of this lot and on North Street was four acres bought by James Cookley. The north lines of these lots is now the south line of Loockerman Street.

These lots were sold and built upon within a few years after 1780. In 1818 Thomas L. Hillyard and Martin W. Bates kept a store on the northeast corner of King and North Streets. Joseph Harper, an old Revolutionary soldier, and clerk of the peace from 18792 until after 1806, resided a short distance above.1 Miss Martha Allman, a widow, taught school several years in an old house that stood on the site of the present Methodist Church. Chief Justice J. P. Comegys and William J. Clark learned their alphabets in the old house, under the teaching of Widow Allman. Widow Eunice Biggs was her neighbor on the north, and next was a store-house, both on the site of the present post office. The Kirkin house and blacksmith-shop were next north. A school-house that had formerly been kept by Stephen Sykes was between the Kirkin house and the old Hillyard house. On the northeast corner of the lot Jacob Stout had a large tannery in 1818, and for several years later.2

Next was the residence of Myers Casson. The house, now the property of Edwin M. Stevenson, presents about the same appearance now that it did in 1820. The parlor was occupied as the office of the Secretary of State, and the rest of the house was used by a Frenchman, who taught language and drawing. A few small dwellings other than these were on King Street and upper side of North Street, and in one of them Mrs. Betty Riley had a cake and candy shop to draw the pennies from the children.

It was not until some years after the removal of the Rev. Thomas B. Bradford to Dover that the land from the new part of Dover was offered for sale. Early in 1852, Mr. Bradford laid out 2 Bradford City 3 into lots and streets, set out many trees along the streets, and offered lots for sale, since which time it has grown rapidly, and at present this new section is much larger than the original town. Mr. Bradford built the houses on State Street now occupied by Samuel W. Hall and J. A. Fulton. He also erected three cottages on Bradford Street, and moved two houses from old State Street to Loockerman Street, and made many other improvements. Samuel Culbretz soon after built the store on the corner of Loock-

1 Joseph Harper died at Dover, June 9, 1824, aged sixty-eight years. He was in nine engagements in the Revolution, among which were the battles of Trenton, Princeton, White Plains and Long Island. He was a resident of Dover forty years, and held office under the State and county from the close of the Revolution until within two years of his death.

2 Governor Stout was running the tannery while he was Governor, and at one time, when chopping over testing some liquor in a tan vat, a pet ram, noticing a favorable opportunity to exercise his propensity, butted his Excellency and landed him in the vat. The Governor, dripping with the liquor, called out to Betty, the housekeeper, to "look at the impudence of the --- ram to butt the Governor of the State of Delaware into a tan vat."

3 An incident of the War of 1812-14 is of interest, and is taken from a Wilmington paper of the date given:

"At Dover on Sunday, March 21, 1813, in consequence of the movements of the British up the Delaware, the drum beat to arms. The whole population, of all sects and persuasions, religious and political, capable of shouldnering a musket, assembled. Arrows were distributed, and in three hours three hundred and fifty men were ready for service. All the soldiers of the Revolution in the neighborhood were present. Jeremiah McKnott, an old Revolutionary, trotting on his staff, received a musket and with hearty will entered the ranks. He was a strict Methodist, and, Sunday as it was, immediately after the drill he returned home and set himself to work making ball cartridges and teaching the boys how to make them. The force mustered frequently after with him in the lines."

erman and State Street, and the dwelling north. David F. Barton and the Hon. Eli Saulsbury and Geo. B. Dickson each erected the dwellings where they now reside. In 1857 Andrew Smithers and Richard M. Jones built the houses where Andrew Smithers and Edward Ridgely now live, and N. B. Smithers the residence now owned and occupied by George V. Massey.

One of the most thrifty and energetic merchants of Dover was John Reed, a native of Mispillion Hundred. He descended from John Reed, who settled in the county about 1700. John Reed, the merchant, came to Dover in 1825, and bought the two corners of King Street facing on the north side of the public square. In 1831 he erected a large brick store, now occupied by the First National Bank, and the same year erected the Capital Hotel. He became the first merchant in the place and owned several vessels that ran from Leipsic. He was also an extensive landlord in different parts of the county. His wife was Mary, daughter of Judge Jacob Stout, and grand-daughter of Hon. William Killen. His daughters were Angelica K., wife of John A. Nicholson, and Elizabeth, wife of Daniel Cowgill.

The town4 of Dover grew but little for many years; the powers of the commissioners were extended from time to time, and on July 16, 1829, an act was passed authorizing them to cause additional wells and pumps to be put down; to provide buckets, hooks and ladders for fire purposes; to lay pavements and gutters; and to erect a market-house not to exceed the cost of four hundred dollars. All previous efforts to get a market-house failed and so did this one.

The town5 of Dover was incorporated by act of General Assembly February 16, 1829. It provided for the laying out of certain territory by metes and bounds and for the election of town commissioners and other officers. The officers were elected in March following, and the first meeting of the town commissioners was held March 24th, when Henry Todd was chosen surveyor to define the boundaries of the town. On the 28th of April in that year contract was made to lay a pavement in front of the State House. August 31st, John M. Clayton was ordered to lay a pavement of brick, twelve feet in width, in front of his property on the square (now owned by the State), and at the same time Nehemiah Clark and Samuel M. Harrington, tenants of Kent County, were ordered to lay down a pavement of brick, twelve feet wide, "in front of their offices," (or the "old jail," as they commonly called).

The beef-house of Daniel W. Duhamel being declared a nuisance, it was ordered to be removed.

On September 29, 1829, it was ordered that two pumps be settled in the town, and Abel Harris was appointed to superintend the work. The locations were not mentioned at that time, but one was for many years in front of Abel Harris' house on Main Street. On November 18, 1830, a pump was ordered put down near the corner "now occupied by Thomas Stevenson," one near the post-office and one opposite Augustus H. Schee's. On November 28, 1830, it was ordered that the pump of Dr. John Adams be repaired, and that it be no longer considered a public pump. Dr. Adams at that time resided in the old dwelling next west of Edward Ridgely's present law office.

On the 17th of June, 1830, John Reed was authorized to purchase forty good fire buckets, six ladders and four fire hooks for the use of the town in case of fire. A ladder-house was first built in the present jail lot, on the site of the dwelling part, the old jail then being on the rear of the lot.

On the 31st of March, 1834, a pair of hay scales, for the use of the town, was ordered to be set up in the rear of the State House. They remained until 1841, when they were sold to Caleb H. Sipple, who, by permission, erected them on the west side of Queen Street, now High Street, near the corner of Bank Alley. It had been moved from its original site and was for a year or two on the west side of Main Street, in the middle of the public square.

On March 21, 1835, a committee, previously appointed, presented to the board a list of the names of persons in the town whose pavements needed repairing. As this list gives the names of many of the property-owners of the town at that time, it is here reproduced:

On October 18, 1837, it was ordered that the poplar tree in front of the State House be cut down. This tree stood about thirty feet south of the large elm that still stands in front of the State House. The elm tree was planted March 1, 1801, by Joseph Hale, who was at the time prothonotary of Kent County. The elm trees on the public square were planted in the spring of 1849 by Francis B. Harper, who presented the bill for the trees and planting March 14, 1849. March 14, 1846, the public square was ordered plowed, probably for the purpose of grading and seeding, although it is not mentioned. At the same meeting arrangements were made to purchase iron posts and chains to inclose the square, which were soon after put up. In April, 1849, contract was made with Andrew Smithers for $224 to build a fence around the public square of white oak posts and rails which was to be whitewashed. The fence was built and remained until June 6, 1864, when it was taken down and sold. On December 13, 1837, it was ordered that the crossings of the principal streets be flagged. July 13, 1864, contract was made with A. B. Richardson & Co., to place lamp posts and lamps in different parts of the town.

October 7, 1867, a petition signed by one hundred and fifty persons was presented to the commissioners asking the privilege of opening a market at least once a week for carts and wagons in some suitable place, to be known as the "Farmer's Market." The petition was granted, and an ordinance was passed. No market was established at this time, but a few years later one was held for a year or two.

The following is a list of the officers of the town from its incorporation:

Town Commissioners of Dover.—Under an act passed February 16, 1829, for establishing the boundaries of the town of Dover and other purposes, it was provided that five persons be elected to serve as town commissioners. In accordance with the act an election was held on the first Monday in March, 1829, and the following persons were elected: Henry M. Ridgely, William K. Lockwood, Thomas Stevenson, Abel Harris, Caleb H. Sipple.

The commissioners met on the 24th of March and appointed Joseph Smithers clerk and Henry Todd surveyor.

The commissioners from that time to the present were as follows:

HISIOlRY OF DELAWARE.

Aldermen.—An act of the Legislature, passed February 11, 1841, authorized the town commissioners to appoint an alderman from the justices of the peace, who, ex-officio, was a member of the town committee. The reincorporation of March 6, 1877, enlarged the Council and the aldermen ceased to have a place in the Council.

The following is a list of aldermen of the town of Dover:

Thomas Stevenson, 1842
A. J. Wright, 1876
Foster L. Davis, 1853
George H. Dickson, 1877
Thomas Stevenson, 1856
Alexander Goodwin, 1878
John B. Hauman, 1860
John S. Juster, 1879
Jonathan Pratt, 1861

Treasurers of the town of Dover:

James P. Wild, 1829
Wm. J. Clarke, 1860
Samuel Wire, 1834
Samuel T. Jones, 1870
Wm. Fisher, 1859

CHRIST CHURCH.—For the early history of the church in Dover we are indebted to the archives of the "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel." The venerable society was set off from the older "Christian Knowledge Society" in 1701, and in 1703 we find the first mention of Dover. In that year there is recorded "A memorial to the Bishop of London, signed by twenty-two Inhabitants of Dover, representing the increase of sin and crime and the consequent great want of a Minister of the Gospel, and their willingness to contribute as far as they are able to his maintenance." This is followed in 1704 by a memorial stating that they have subscribed £55, 17s. for the minister's subsistence. In 1704 the glebe was given by Col. Robert French. Col. French was a Scotchman by birth, a member of the Church of England and one of the founders of Immanuel Church, New Castle. The glebe was a tract of about one hundred and ten acres lying in the east side of St. Jones' Creek, about a mile and a half below Dover. The deed of gift is indexed in the clerk's office at Dover, but not recorded, or at least cannot be found,—"Robert French, Curatoribus Ecclesiae." The town of Dover was not laid out until 1717, and it appears that the church of which Mr. Crawford speaks in his report was built on the glebe, and tradition has it at the southwestern corner, near the creek, and beside the road which then ran along the bank of the creek.

The next year, 1705, the Rev. Thomas Crawford, was sent over as missionary to Dover, and in 1708 he reports: "As to the number of my hearers, I have Contributed by Rev. L. W. Gibson.
KENT COUNTY.

sometimes more, sometimes less, according to the weather, from thirty upwards, maybe two hundred. As to communicants, ordinarily twenty or thirty, but never forty in one day. I preach in the church and two or three other places more. In my own charge I have baptised two hundred and twenty or two hundred and thirty. I say upon the word of a minister that those three years that I have been in this place I have not had £20, Pennsylvania money, per annum, which is but a small benefice, considering it is paid me not in silver, but as people are able in corn, etc."

"As for the Negroes, I have been at pains, for I sometimes at the church teach them the principles of religion, though many are very dull, and when I am not employed I catechise the children." "Our church is near finished. It is all glazed and almost full of pews. Only we want a pulpit cloth and surplice, and we are not able to buy them."

Mr. Crawford married a daughter of Arthur Medstone [Meston], and returned to England in 1711, leaving no very good name behind him, and apparently having done the church no very great good; for when, in 1711, the Rev. Mr. Henderson arrived as his successor there was no disposition to receive him. "Captain Rodney, the gentleman who promoted all manner of good in the place, was dead, and indeed all manner of good died with him,"—it is in a letter from the Governor and several gentlemen of Philadelphia,—"and Mr. Henderson could not get any place to lodge in but the public Inn of the County, noways proper or convenient for him." Moreover, the Presbyterian influence was against him. Mr. Medstone was a Presbyterian and was reputed as saying that the "land upon which the church was built was given by a Presbyterian and the deed drawn so that any orthodox minister may preach in that church, and the greatest number of the people being Presbyterians, they may as well bring in a Presbyterian Minister as him." This saying of Mr. Medstone must have been a mistake, for Col. French, though a Scotchman, was a churchman. But the disposition did not rest with getting rid of Mr. Henderson, which apparently was soon accomplished; for, in 1715, the missionary at New Castle is said at "the desolate condition of ye church of Dover Hundred, many ye church were ready to revolt because of the neglect of ye Honnable Board. Indeed, they were about settling a Presbyterian Teacher in their Church, but that design was entirely ruined by my preaching among them that very Sunday the Dissenters were to take possession of one of our pulpits." Two years later, in 1717, the representative of the clergy of the province of Pennsylvania and counties of New Castle, Kent and Sussex claims that in Kent and Sussex the church is in danger of dispersion by reason of insidious Dissenters. Two years later another complains of the long vacancy, which has given too great opportunities to the adversaries of the church to pervert and mislead many of them. Three years later still we have a petition, dated "Kent County super Delaware, in the province of Pennsylvania, October 21, 1722, and signed by Thomas French and others to the number of one hundred and twenty-five, desiring that a sound orthodox minister of God's word might be sent and settled among us, we have since 1711 been wholly destitute. A great number of our people are by this means gone over to the Presbyterians and Quakers; our house built for religious worship is empty; meeting-houses are full; enthusiasts abound; the Sabbath is profaned; the interest which the Church of England once had here is in great danger to be entirely lost, and we have no opportunity to worship God publicly in a manner agreeable to the word of God and our own Consciences."

And they add a pledge to contribute to the support of a missionary according to the best of their abilities. Similar petitions follow in the following years, but it was not until 1733, twenty-two years from the time that Mr. Crawford left them, that another missionary was sent. It was strange if, when he did come, he found any fragments remaining.

In 1733 the Rev. George Frazier reports that they have begun a subscription to build a new brick church at Dover, and have subscribed about one hundred pounds,—the former church being an old boarded house, so ruinous that it is not fit to be repaired. And in 1734 the new brick church at Dover is begun. The walls are finished, and if the undertaker had not died, would have been covered in before winter. But the people are generally very poor and the payment of any subscription is very backward, though the congregation continues to be greatly larger—always above one hundred, very often two hundred and upwards.

Then there is a break of several years, and in 1740 the Rev. Arthur Usher writes that at his first arrival there was a new brick church begun, which is now finished, and two wooden chapels begun. One of these was at Duck Creek, the other probably at Missipillion. The deed of the Duck Creek land is made from Thos. Green, of York, to Nicholas Ridgely and Thomas Tarrant, Esq., church wardens of St. Jones' Church at Dover. This is, I believe, the first time this church is publicly mentioned by any name.

The next year he gives numbers—"In my Parish there are 382 adults of the church, 109 Quakers, 330 Dissenters and 16 Papists. I have baptized this last year 104 children and 4 adults. My communicants are about 32. I preach 2 Sundays in the month at Dover, 1 Sunday in the new chapel at Musquillion, and 1 Sunday in Cedar Creek Chapel.

"In 1742 the church at Dover is not yet finished, but I hope it will not be long before it will be." The next year he gives numbers again—"At Whitsunday I had twenty communicants. Upon the justest calculation I can make, I find there are 1005 families in the county, whereof 508 are of the Church of England, 392 Presbyterians, 60 Quakers and 45 Papists." In 1746 the Rev. Mr. Morris reports the Dissenters having no teacher in either of the counties of Kent and Sussex, are obliged to come to church, and behave regularly and decently while there.

The Rev. Thomas Bluett says in 1746 "they talk of finishing their church at Dover, out of hand." In 1748 he speaks of a "sickness which proves so mortal here, and which is a sort of pleurisy which follows the measles, so that hardly a day passes but we have account of deaths, and some days we have buried, in our church-yard, two or three." The year 1748 is the date of the first death recorded on a tombstone in the church-yard. That of "Capt. Thomas Benson, from Whitehaven, died Sept. 18th, 1748, aged 25 years." Mr. Bluett died a few months after.

Two years later the Rev. Hugh Neill reports "Dover Church in a miserable condition. It looks more like a refuge for wild beasts than a house dedicated to the service of God. They have contributed to the repairing of it, which I hope will be finished in the spring." In 1751 he calculates the number of taxable or families within this county "to be one thousand three hundred and twenty. Those who profess themselves of the Church of England make almost an equal balance in number with the Dissenters of all sorts. We have two small Quaker meeting-houses, one Independent teacher that attends two other places of worship, one Presbyterian meeting-house, but no teacher, one Newlight meeting-house without any teacher, and about five or six families of Papists, who are attended once a month from Maryland with a priest. There are two churches and one small chapel within the bounds, but none of them finished. The number of communicants has increased to about forty. But what gives me the greatest concern is my poor negro flock. I have baptized within the last half year of them 36 adults. Each of them say the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments, with a good part of the catechism, although few can read."

Charles Inglis is the greatest name on our list. He was a native of Ireland, the son of a clergyman of the church, and whose father and grandfather had been clergymen before him. He had been the teacher of a school in Lancaster, Pa., and was ordained and licensed by the bishop of London for Pennsylvania in 1758. The S. P. G. immediately appointed him their missionary at Dover, at a stipend of fifty pounds per annum, and after a long and stormy passage he reached his post in the summer of 1759. "The mission includes the whole county of Kent, and I have a church at the extremity of each end, besides Dover. There are in this county several hundreds of people who inhabit the large forests which lie between us and Maryland and the vast marshes which stretch along the River Delaware, who have never heard a sermon, and do not belong to any religious denomination of Christians. The people in general are very loose, and the public meetings are nothing but scenes of drunkenness and debauchery. I must, however, do them justice in mentioning a becoming zeal which they discovered in repairing the church at Dover, which lay in a most shocking condition when I came here. But it is now finished and ornamented with a bell, pulpit cloth, etc., donations of particular gentlemen."

The next year he mentions an incident which he says "has given him the greatest pleasure," and which shows the man and fully explains why the friend of Whitefield gained the reputation of a "Methodist." "The Dissentions among our people have their source in the Annual Election of Representatives and sheriffs by the People, and the meetings held once a week for two months before election Day, to which the Candidates invited the inhabitants to treat them with Liquor, and which were scenes of the greatest debauchery and vice. I was determined, if possible, to remove this evil. As soon as I was informed where a meeting was to be held, I gave notice that I was to preach near that place and on that very day, and by this and by persuading the candidates to stay away and settling them in that horrid light they desired, these riots dwindled almost to nothing, and it has also been the means of increasing my communicants to above double what they were when I first came here."

Success and harmony attended his work, though the lukewarm continued to trouble him, and in 1761 the Duck Creek congregation began to require and to "build a new brick church of large dimensions." An "addition has also been made to the church at Mission."

The whole county at this time "contains, at a moderate computation, about 7000 souls. Of those who hold religious communion with any denomination of Christians, of that number upwards of one-third are members of the Church of England. There are three Quaker and four Presbyterian meeting-houses. Presbyterians are much more numerous than the former." In 1762 he reports a fourth church in building on the border of Maryland, which he names St. Paul's. The church at Duck Creek he named St. Peter's, that at Mission is Christ Church. But it is remarkable that he never once names the "church at Dover" by any other name. The name of Christ Church we have not found before 1767. But in 1759 a deed is recorded of land in Little Creek Hundred given by Richbell Mott to John Brinckle, of Little Creek Hundred, and Richard Mott, vestryman in the parish of St. Mary's in Kent County.

In 1764 Mr. Inglis was married "to a most amiable and excellent woman of the first family of the place," Mary Vining, daughter of Captain Benjamin Vining, of New Jersey, and Mary, his wife, who, after his death, married Nicholas Ridgely, of Dover. Her impaired health and his own sickness, brought on by the "bad air of the place and the fatigue of attending four churches, three of which are thirty miles apart, demanded a removal to a more healthy mission;" and while he was corresponding with the society on this subject, came an unexpected invitation to him to become assistant minister and catechist of Trinity Church, New York.
He had, in fact, accepted the invitation when the death of Mrs. Inglis changed the state of his affairs. The people seemed to fairly rise in rebellion against his going away, and it was, in fact, not till 1766 that he removed to New York. Nor would he probably have left the mission even then if he had not known that two young men who had gone, one to England for orders, had been appointed to this mission to take his place—Rev. Samuel Giles and Rev. Hugh Wilson. But in April, 1766, they were both lost at sea off the American coast. It was calculated that of those who went to England for ordination, two out of every five lost their lives by shipwreck or disease on the journey. Is it any wonder that Inglis and the rest begged for a bishop? Is it any wonder that the church lost ground? If it had not been God's Church, it had perished utterly.

With Mr. Inglis' departure for New York, he passes out of the immediate range of Dover, though he continued to take the greatest interest in the mission; but we may add a word of the later history of our one great man. He became "Assistant Minister of Trinity Church, New York, and Catechist to the Negroes,"—but active in every good work of the church, and especially interested in missions. He foresaw the political troubles that were coming, and he dreaded the "Independent Republic which would be set up under Independent and Presbyterian influences; they are inimical to monarchy from Principle & consider the Church of England as scarcely one remove from Popery; they are for an independent Republic, and Lord have mercy on those who live under it and dissent in religious or political principles from them. For my part, I would rather live under a French or a Turkish Government." So he writes in 1774 to his friend and relative Dr. Charles Ridgely. He saw what would be the effect on the church in America, and especially in its present headless condition, if it was once cut off from England. The appointment of bishops for this country is "a thing so equitable in itself, so essential to the interest of religion and our Church, that I am lost in astonishment at our being deprived of them so long." When the war came he sided with the mother country and the government, and suffered for his principles. In 1777, on the death of the rector of Trinity, he was elected rector and solemnly assumed the office with his hand on the ruined walls of old Trinity. In 1788 he resigned his rectorship and returned to England: and in 1787 he was sent out to Nova Scotia, the first missionary bishop ever sent out by the Church of England—the first of a long list, whose present number is some seventy-five; and of them all, there is not a nobler name than Charles Inglis.

In 1767 the Rev. Samuel Magaw, who had been associated with Mr. Inglis in the school at Lancaster, took charge of the mission. He speaks of the church at Duck Creek, which Mr. Inglis had begun and named St. Peter's, as finished and used for the first time on Trinity Sunday, 1769. In two years, he says, "I have baptized six adults and one hundred and ninety-eight children, of which five were black. The communicants are ninety-four."

The Bible which we still use in the church dates from the first year of Mr. Magaw's mission. It is "The Gift of Mr. Benjamin Wynkoop, merchant. At the City of Philadelphia, To Christ's Church, at Dover, in Kent County, Delaware. Annoque Domini, 1767." It is notable as being the first time, so far as I know, in which the name of Christ's Church is given to this church in any public document. The chalice and paten were "The Gift of Esther Wynkoop, 1766," the mother of Benjamin. They were melted in the fire at the burning of the sexton's house, many years ago, and restored in 1867, by the gift of Mrs. Mary Ridgely.

In 1775 he mentions the glebe, of which "the soil is naturally fertile, but a good deal worn, and there is not enough of it to merit any considerable improvements or to attract the notice of a good tenant. There is a small parsonage house on it which wants repairing, and it is let out at £13."

In 1776, 7th of October, Mr. Magaw writes: "Through the whole compass of America, I do not believe there can be anywhere a stronger attach- ment to the parent country, or a more warm regard for that religion which we jointly profess, than among the greater number of those among whom I have been appointed to minister. They ardently wish for peace, they look for reconciliation, safe, constitutional and permanent." But men's minds change with changing times. Mr. Magaw is described "as a man of great urbanity of manners, and apparent kindliness of spirit." Whether he was more politic or more wise, and whether he was more or less patriotic, at any rate he did not see his duty in the same light, and did not regard the Bostonians and the "Independent Republic" with the same dread as his friend Inglis, and like William White and some others of the clergy of the church, he took the American side. One of the very few incidents on record of this parish is a sermon which he "preached in Christ Church, Dover, on Monday, December 27, 1779, being the anniversary of St. John, the Evangelist, at the request and before the General Communication of Free and Accepted Masons of the Delaware State." We gather from it that he was not a Mason, though it is a very good Masonic sermon. But the interest of it to us is in the political allusions. Besides several indirect references to political affairs, the sermon is "Dedicated to his Excellency, Caesar Rodney, Esq., Governor, Captain-General and Commander-in-Chief of the Delaware State, the friend of his Country and the Lover of all Social Virtues," and in the course of it he names distinguished Masons, "from Jubal and Enoch down to Franklin," and then closes with the "illustrious Cincinnatus of our age, a Washington." Mr. Magaw was elected rector of St. Paul's Church, Philadelphia, in 1779, but did not accept until 1781.
He was rector from 1781 to 1804, and from 1782 to 1791 vice-provost of the University of Pennsylvania.

There are no records from this time till 1786, but an old record book, discovered almost accidentally in 1867, contains records of that year. At the first general convention of 1785 the name of James Sykes, Esq., heads the list of Delaware laymen, and at the convention of June, 1786, Nicholas Ridgely, Esq., is a layman from Delaware. In April, 1786, a meeting of the congregation was held, which has all the appearance of a revival and the first step of a new departure. Two wardens and twelve vestrymen were elected,—Wardens, Nicholas Ridgely, John Pryor; Vestrymen, George Truit, John Baning, Joseph Taylor, Thomas Rodney, Joshua Clayton, John Clayton, Thomas Nixon, Vincent Lookereman, John Bell, Jr., Charles Nixon, William Brown and Charles Ridgely. Benjamin Crooks was appointed sexton, at an annual allowance of five pounds, and also the sum of fifty shillings for serving occasionally as clerk to this congregation. Regulations were made with regard to burial in the church-yard; steps taken to settle with James Sykes, Esq., for the glebe, and a rule made with regard to those "travelling ministers who may desire admittance into this church to preach or teach." Soon afterwards the pewes were rated,—three pounds annually for the double pewes and one pound ten for single pewes.

After consultation with St. Peter's Church at Duck Creek Cross-Roads it was determined to request Mr. Nicholas Ridgely, when he attends the convention in Philadelphia, to inquire for "a clergyman of piety, religion, morality and sound principles, who hath been regularly ordained and can show proper testimonials of his being a strict member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and on the faith of this vestry to assure him of at least one hundred pounds, exclusive of the rent of the glebe." Such an one they found in the person of the Rev. Samuel Roe, who exhibited credentials of having been ordained by Bishop Seabury, of Connecticut. He had "joined the people called Methodists, but had adhered to them as long as they attended strictly to the doctrines and principles of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and no longer." After hearing him preach, and further consultation with Rock Creek Church, the "good opportunity" was embraced, and it was resolved to raise the sum of three hundred pounds for one year's service in the said churches—two hundred pounds by the congregation of Christ Church and one hundred pounds by the congregation of St. Peter's. There are a few more brief records of this year, but none afterwards until 1794. From other documents we gather that the conventions of 1786 and the following years were held in Dover, but I do not know that Mr. Roe's name is mentioned in them, and it is not certain that his rectorship lasted beyond the year. It would seem probable that at least he remained here, for he died in 1791, and was buried in Christ Church-yard. The inscription reads: "To the memory of the Rev. Samuel Roe, who departed this life February 8th, 1791, in the 35th year of his age. He was a faithful pastor, a fond husband and an indulgent parent."

To this period of what we suppose to have been Mr. Roe's rectorship belongs a curious document, which we could perhaps better understand if we knew more about the state of the parish. For fifty years this church had been standing and this burial-ground in use; in 1788 we gather that regular services were held here. And yet in that year Elizabeth Pryor made her will and gave in trust to her son, John Pryor, "one acre of ground, with the house thereon situate, to have and to hold in trust, that is to say as soon as sufficient funds are provided and a sufficient number of persons to form a congregation, being members of the Protestant Episcopal Church, to erect and build thereon a church and to lay off the said acre for a graveyard," and lying, by the description, on the north side of North Street, east of State, and just about where the livery stable now stands, just two short squares from this church. What does it mean?

From this period on for seventy years the records are meagre and occasional. In 1791 the Rev. George Dashiel was in charge of the congregation, in 1794 the Rev. Walter C. Gardiner. The parish is mentioned occasionally in the convention journals—in 1810, 1816, 1819.

In 1818 the Rev. Henry R. Judah is minister of the congregation, officiating every second Sunday, at a salary of $400 per year. In 1822 the convention journal reports that there are about twenty families attached to Christ Church, Dover, and the parish could support an unmarried clergyman, especially if he could support himself by teaching. In 1824 the Rev. Christian F. Cousi was rector of the parish; 1830 to 1838, the Rev. Robert Piggott; 1838, the Rev. Daniel Higbee; 1836, the Rev. H. P. McCallum. While Mr. Piggott was in charge there are nine communicants reported, in 1834 only four, and the congregation is "in a state of apathy," where it remained for twenty-five years, only partially disturbed by the efforts of the Rev. Mr. Carpenter, who, in 1850, held an afternoon service on alternate Sundays with encouraging attendance. In 1853, celebrated the Lord's Supper for the first time after many years to four communicants. The next year is obliged to reduce the services to monthly, and the next year he is gone. From his consecration, in 1841, Bishop Lee mentions and laments "the forlorn and uncomfortable condition of the time-worn Church, and the neglected state of the burial-yard, and hopes that the aspect of dilapidation and neglect may be removed," and on his occasional visits to Dover preached in the Court-House.

In 1859, through the efforts of the Rev. Samuel C. Brinckle, of Christ Church, Christians, and the Rev. Julius C. Grammer, of St. Peter's Church, Smyrna, an earnest effort was made to revive the old parish. An appeal was made in convention and liberally re-
KENT COUNTY.

The Rev. Marshall Smith was called as rector, and the church was repaired and restored. The glebe was sold and $1800 of the price was used in repairing the church. It was consecrated on Ascension Day, 1860, and in the convention of that year the rector reports that he found two communians, and that the present number was five.

The alterations made in 1859 entirely changed the internal appearance of the church, and somewhat the external also. Recent alterations have changed it still more. The original entrance was on the south side, under a gallery which extended along that side, and was lighted by a window in the east end of the church and entered, as now, from the northwest corner. The high pews were in blocks and floored, but the aisles were laid in brick. The chancel was at the east end, merely railed off; the pulpit and reading-desk and clerk's desk being high up on the north wall, while over all hung the sounding-board, suspended by a heavy iron rod. The only fire originally provided for was in the vestry-room. Long before 1859 the original bell had disappeared and left no trace of sound behind it, nor is there any record or knowledge of the place in which, in 1760, it "ornamented the church." The present bell is the bequest of Mrs. Elizabeth Worrell, who died in 1876. The chancel was added in 1887.

From 1859 to 1887 the rectors have been:

Rev. John Crocker White ......................................... 1861-62
Rev. T. Gardiner Little .......................................... 1865-67
Rev. Lucius Sweetland ............................................ 1867
Rev. Edward H. True ............................................. 1868-69
Rev. James Hoskins ................................................ 1870-71
Rev. Samuel McKean ................................................ 1871-73
Rev. Lewis W. Gibson .............................................. 1873-87

Mr. Neill built a small parsonage house on the glebe about 1745. Mr. Inglis lived in his own house on the corner opposite the present rectory. During Mr. True's rectorship a small property was purchased on South State Street, and the $1200 which remained of the glebe was sunk in it,—an $800 mortgage eating up the $1200 payment in about six years. In 1879 the present rectory was purchased.

The growth of the parish has been encouraging, though the location of the church at the southeast corner of the town, while the growth of the town is entirely to the northwest, is very much against it. The number of communicants reported is—1860, five; 1862, eight; 1866, twenty-five; 1869, fifty-eight; 1871, thirty-five; 1873, forty-two; 1837, one hundred and two. The present wardens are James Kirk and Thos. O. Calbreth; Vestrymen, Dr. Henry Ridgely, Hon. Jos. P. Coggins, A. B. Richardson, Edward Ridgely, William Denney, T. K. Jones, Dr. L. H. Bishop.

Presbyterian Church.——As early as 1711 there were in Dover a goodly number of Presbyterians. At this time Arthur Medstone, or Meston, claimed that "the greater number of the people" here were Presbyterians. The Church of England's Venera-tent with occasional supplies until in 1726. On September 13th of that year, however, the Presbytery ordered a Mr. Cook, or rather McCook, a licentiate, to "supply the people of Kent, on Delaware, for ordinary (i.e., regularly) until its next meeting." At its next meeting, in November, the same order was repeated in response to a supplication from the people; and at its next meeting, March 28, 1727, placed in Mr. McCook's hands a regularly prepared call "from the people of the Presbyterian persuasion in the county of Kent, on Delaware," for his services as pastor.

This call Mr. McCook at length accepted, and the Presbytery ordained and installed him on the 7th of June following, 1727. In his ordination services there was a feature which seems to have been common in those days, but which has so long since passed out of use as to be of sufficient interest to specially mention. When the examinations had all been completed and approved, and when the time had arrived for the solemn act of ordination, "a proclamation was made three times at the door of the meeting-house that if any person had anything to object against the ordaining of Mr. McCook they should then make it known." But no objection was made, and he was duly ordained and installed, June 8, 1727, the first regular pastor the Presbyterians of Kent County ever had.

From the Presbytery's records of this and somewhat earlier date it is found that there was a Presbyterian congregation at Duck Creek, or Smyrna, and at a place called St. Jones'. From the old deed-books in the county recorder's office we find (volume i., H, p. 225) that there was a Presbyterian meeting-house standing in Murtherkill Hundred, February 14, 1725, and the church organization there continued in existence until 1815 or later. Of these churches or congregations doubtful McCook was pastor. Dover is not mentioned as Dover in those earlier records. We find no specific documentary mention of the church until 1748. Gillett, in his "History of the Presbyterian Church," says (foot-note, volume i., p. 98): "Dover, St. Jones' and 'People of Kent' are all the same congregation—Dover;" and "this congregation is on the records in 1714." Again he says (foot-note, volume i., p. 42): "St. Jones' is now Dover,' on Jones', recently St. Jones' Creek, in St. Jones', now Kent County, Delaware."

If he is correct as to "St. Jones'" being then Dover, it is explicit written evidence of the existence of Dover Church as early as September 18, 1728, or possibly March 12, 1722. But he gives no reason for his statements; and, as far as the St. Jones' Church is concerned, we think he is mistaken, for it is mentioned in the Presbyterian records, in connection with the Murtherkill and Three Runs (or Milford) Churches, as constituting the pastoral charge of Rev. Mr. McKee in 1733—a time when Dover Church had its own individuality well established and was often mentioned in the same records. St. Jones' Church was probably located some place down the creek, where in early days there was a somewhat thickly-inhabited section of country, and it ceased to exist entirely about the close of the last century. Nevertheless, Dover had a Presbyterian congregation in Mr. McCook's days, and probably in those days when the supplies were sent by the Presbytery to meet the destitution of Kent. Arthur Medstone and his Presbyterian associates, constituting "the greatest number of the people" in 1711, would probably soon after have constituted such a church in Dover as they had in those early days. There were enough of them to do so, and he at least seems to have had interest enough to urge them to do so. But if this was not done as early as 1711, it certainly looks very much as if it had been done in 1715, when the Dissenters or Presbyterians came so very near taking possession of the Episcopal Church. Then, moreover, we have this further evidence of the probability of such an early formation of a Presbyterian Church in Dover. The town was laid out in 1717. On the plot of the town now in the recorder's office, made in 1740-41, which claims to be a copy of the earlier plot, there are marked off two squares of ground. One is called "Church Square," where the Episcopal Church now stands, and the other "Meeting-House Square," where this church now stands. Meeting-houses were the names given to the places where Presbyterians worshipped. If this plot of ground was thus set apart when the town was laid out, as seems probable, then is not the inference allowable that at that time there was a body of Presbyterians needing or using it for a house of worship? It is probable that the beginnings of the church were as far back as 1714. And this being so, it follows as a matter of course that Rev. Archibald McCook was its pastor, and, as the first pastor of the Presbyterians in Kent County, its first pastor. He had other churches in the county under his care, but he also had Dover Church. But his was not a long pastorate. In a little over two years after his installation he died, 1729. How long it was after his death until the churches had another pastor is not ascertained. After having supplies for a couple of years they called Robert Cathcart, but he declined their call. Whether they were any more successful with others for a long time is unknown, as the Presbyterian records from 1730 to 1758 have been destroyed, and but little information can now be gleaned from other sources as to most of that period.

By 1741, however, they seem to have had a minister; for in September of that year Rev. Arthur Usher, the missionary of the Venerable Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, reports the dissenting minister as being made uneasy by the attendance of his people at Mr. Usher's church, which they constantly did when their minister did not preach in town. Who that minister was it can only be conjectured; but it is not improbable that it was Rev. Robt. Jamison, who preached near Smyrna, apparently from 1734 until his death in 1744, and who is mentioned as the minister of this church in 1748. Perhaps he was the minister in Dover during the whole decade before his death. Perhaps he had charge of all the Presbyterian congregations in the county; for in the spring of the year after his death Rev. Mr. Morris, the Episcopal minister, wrote that the Dissenters had "no teacher in either Kent or Sussex counties," and were obliged to attend his church. Certainly, at all events, Dover enjoyed his ministrations part of the time mentioned; for the deed for the ground on which the church now stands, and on which a church then stood, given May 12, 1743, by the town commissioners, to obviate all difficulty as to title, was given to "Robert Jamison, minister, and John Caton and Robert Bohanan, elders of the Presbyterian congregation in and about Dover."

Robert Jamison remained pastor until his death, which occurred about 1744. During his charge the division in the church occurred, and the Old and New Side parties each had their members in most all of the churches. It is not positively known, but as the Rev. Mr. Jamison was a member of the Old Side, it is fair to presume that the greater part at least of his congregation were with him.

In about five years after Jamison's death we find the people uniting in a call to a man who became their pastor, and who served them faithfully and well for more than forty-two years. That man was the Rev. Jno. Miller, whose body lies in the church-yard.

He was a native of Boston and educated there. In May, 1748, he was licensed to preach by the Boston Congregational Association, and soon after visited Maryland and Delaware. The united congregations of Dover and Smyrna called him March 29, 1749, and on April 26th the association ordained him and sent him to Dover to become the pastor of the churches. What his salary was to be we are not told; but probably little was promised at first and really less given afterwards. Tradition says that when urgent to accept the call, he put the natural question "How am I to live?" and then Chancellor Killen, who was much pleased with Mr. Miller and very desirous of his coming, presented him with the farm four miles north of Dover, on the State road, on which he afterwards lived during all his ministry, and then added to his gift a horse, saddled and bridled. Had it not been for this he probably could not have lived and labored even as he did; for from the Presbytery's records in 1766, it appears that the churches were not supporting him at all adequately. Two years before that he had agreed with them on a yearly salary of £50 ($133.33) at Dover and £40 ($106.66) at Smyrna; but even that meagre amount was not near all paid at either place, and the balance had to be remitted. So shamefully remiss were the churches, indeed, that Presbytery had to "put them in mind not only of their injustice to Mr. Miller, but also of their disregard of the gospel and their want of generosity and public spirit." Whether the Presbytery's interference improved matters in this regard is not stated. But somehow Mr. Miller managed to eke out an existence for himself and family, and even to give to all his five sons who had reached mature age a liberal education, and to collect for himself what was in those days a large library. He was a friend of learning, an untiring student and a fine scholar. Owing to the disturbed condition of the church at large, when he came to Dover he did not identify himself with either the "Old Side" or "New Side" party, until in 1757, when he became a member of the "Old Side" Presbytery of New Castle; but after that he was a punctual attendant on church judicatories as long as he lived, and twice he was elected moderator of the old synod, then the highest judiciary of the church, thus having an honor which it is believed has been conferred in one other instance only, in the whole course of the history of the Presbyterian Church. Several times he was the moderator of his Presbytery, and in its deliberations he took an active part.

Politically he was a zealous and uncompromising Whig and an ardent defender of the cause of the American colonies. "Several days before the Declaration of Independence, he so far anticipated the spirit of that decisive measure as to address his people from that significant text, indicative enough of his own views, 'we have no part in David, nor any inheritance in the son of Jesse, to your tents, O Israel!'" His eldest son, John, was a surgeon in the American army, and one of his elders in this church. To his dying day he was interested in public affairs, and zealous for civil and religious freedom, and on account of his learning, ability and wisdom, he had great influence in church and State.

July 22, 1791, in the sixty-ninth year of his age, he rested from his labors. During those long years of his pastorate perhaps there was much in the church that would now greatly interest us, but unfortunately it has nearly all been forgotten. Doubtless the good man had much besides poverty and sickness, of which he had his full share. In a meeting of the Presbytery in his own church, in Dover, February 1, 1763, two of the members of his congregation in Smyrna made complaint against him for introducing and singing Dr. Watts' version of David's Psalms in that congregation, contrary to their opinion. But when the complaint was considered, it was not sustained, and the complainants were complained against by the Presbytery for an abusive insult to the Presbytery, which it was thought proceeded from drunkenness. But even this did not effectually silence the Smyrna accusers of Mr. Miller, for in a little over two years afterwards one of them renewed his complaint, supporting it by a petition with forged names, but of course only succeeded in giving his pastor trouble. Watts' version of the Psalms continued to be used in Smyrna. In Dover they still held on to Rouse's version as late as May 9, 1770.

But doubtless, like every other pastor, Mr. Miller found something all along his course to gratify him.
Especially gratified was he when his Dover people concluded that their old log church, which stood just south of this one, had served its day, and they would replace it with a more commodious brick one. This they did the year before his death; for August 16, 1790, he writes, saying that an express had come for him to go immediately to Dover, to lay the corner brick of the new church erecting there. Whether he had the pleasure of seeing it made ready for occupancy is not known. But certainly he could have worshipped within these walls but few times, if, indeed, at all. His death occurred the July following the laying of the corner brick.

By his death the church again became pastorless, and such was practically its condition for over fifty years. His son Samuel, who afterwards became the renowned Professor Miller, of Princeton Seminary, was at the time a student of divinity. October 12th, of that year (1791), the Presbytery of Lewes licensed him to preach, and appointed him to fill his father's pulpit on the second and third succeeding Sabbaths. The following April the church presented him a regular call, in the hope that they might at once secure him as his father's successor.

In the mean time the United Presbyterian congregations in New York had also heard and called him to become their pastor, and after six months' consideration, during part of which time he supplied Dover and Smyrna, he decided to return the Dover call and accept the one from New York. And soon after that he delivered his valedictory to the Dover congregation, commending them in it for their active and exemplary zeal in erecting a church, diligent exertions to establish the worship of God regularly, and care to revive the congregation and watch over its various interests.

Thus they were left again without a minister, and without any one in prospect. The following April (1793), however, we find them exerting themselves to secure one. Mr. Francis McMullen Gardner was sent to Presbytery by them with "an address and supplication," in response to which Presbytery gave them liberty to apply to any Presbytery "they may choose for supplies, or for a young man to preach with a view to settlement, and recommended it to any member of the Presbytery who can make it convenient to preach occasionally."

But in October following they were still without a pastor, though able with Smyrna "to maintain a minister," and they asked Presbytery for supplies, especially for Messrs. McKee and Hindman, both of whom were sent for a few days. August 14, 1794, this was still their state.

Some time between that date and March 20, 1798, however, they came across one Rev. John C. Brush, who had been a member of the Dutch Reformed Church, and they unanimously called him. But, unfortunately, he was not sound in the faith, having taken up the erroneous views of Dr. Priestly. Upon his informing the Presbytery of this, they came to the conclusion that "neither he, nor any other person holding such sentiments, should be sanctioned by them to preach in any of the churches under their care." Notwithstanding this, however, he continued to preach in these churches, and September 1st following, Presbytery, finding him still unchanged in his views and purposes, decided to inform the churches that it was their opinion that they "ought not to countenance the ministration of Mr. Brush, or allow him to preach in their churches unless he joins the Presbytery and adopt the confession of Faith and Discipline." This action was conveyed to the church and "produced the desired effect," i.e., resulted in the removal of Mr. Brush. After this but little is known about the church for at least twenty years, and probably this is so, because it was practically extinct during that period. In the Presbyterial records of April 6, 1819, it is said that "the congregation of Dover and the Three Runs (or Milford), were for some time considered extinct." And in a memoir of Mrs. Leah W. Morris, published December, 1826, and January, 1827, it is said that Brush "scattered instead of edifying the flock, and so paralyzing was his influence upon the interest of religion that many seriously disposed persons, who were formerly attached to the Presbyterian Church, observing such a want of piety among the Presbyterians of Dover, broke off their connection with them and united themselves with the Methodist society. And by the deaths and removal of the members of the church it continued to diminish, until it was finally extinguished."

October 24, 1818, Rev. Elisha P. Swift came and began to labor for the resuscitation of the church. He also included in his field Milford. April 6th following he united with the Presbytery of New Castle, and reported that he had reorganized these churches as one church with one session; and they were then taken under the care of the Presbytery. At that meeting Dover presented a call for Mr. Swift. This he held until the September meeting of the Presbytery, when he declined it, and was granted a dismissal to the Presbytery of Redstone, and very soon afterward he went to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, leaving Dover barely resuscitated. Probably it at once relapsed into its former dead state. At all events, the memoir of Mrs. Morris states that when she came to Dover, in 1823, "there was no Presbyterian Church whose privileges she could enjoy, and no preaching by ministers of her communion except once or twice a year when some missionary passed along." This state of things continued until the spring of 1825, when, principally through Mrs. Morris' importunity, personal influence and liberal benefaction, the gospel was once more preached statedly in the church. For a long time the occasional Presbyterian service had been held in the State-House, but on May 15th the church was again opened and occupied. Who the minister was at that time we have not ascertained, but it was probably Rev. Alexander Campbell. He certainly was a minister in the early part of 1827, for he is well remembered. And his term of service, which appears to have been somewhat protracted, must have been before rather than after that date. How long Campbell remained after 1827 is not known.

From November 9, 1831, until about December 2d, the convention which framed the present Constitution of Delaware held its sessions in this church. For cleaning and fitting up the building it allowed James B. McComb three hundred dollars. That the church was used for worship at all at that time seems improbable. About that time the Legislature of the State appointed Hon. John M. Clayton, Elias Naudain and Dr. W. W. Morris trustees to care for the property, insomuch as there was no congregation to do so. From December 1, 1834, to December 13, 1835, the now venerable Dr. John Patton labored as stated supply. He writes that the church was run down, and he could find only two members and no records. Dr. Morris, he says, was acting as trustee. In October, 1835, he, with Dr. E. W. Gilbert, "reorganized the church with ten members, and ordained and installed elders Elias Naudain and his brother, Dr. Andrew Naudain." This, the reorganized church, they had enrolled in the newly-formed Presbytery of Wilmington, which was composed of men who, like Dr. Gilbert and Dr. Patton, were in sympathy with the views of what in 1837 became the New School branch of the church. But soon Mr. Patton left this field, and until 1843 the church might be said to have had a merely nominal existence. In 1837 the Presbytery of Wilmington reported it to the General Assembly as one of the churches under its care, and having thirteen members, but without a pastor. The same year the Presbytery of Lewes reports it to the Assembly as one of the churches under its care. In the years following until 1840, the Presbytery of Lewes still included it in its reports to the Assembly, and occasionally sent Rev. Mr. Fries as a supply. But after 1840 it seems to have regarded Dover as a defunct church, and it no longer even carried its name on the roll.

But there were still some Presbyterians in Dover. In the spring of 1843 Dr. Morris sent up to the Presbytery of New Castle a letter which, together with a statement with respect to the destitution of Dover, was presented by a Mr. Johns. In response the Presbytery appointed monthly supplies for the ensuing half-year. At the end of that time the Presbytery requested Mr. Thomas G. Murphey, then a licentiate of the Second Presbytery of New York, to act as stated supply of the church for three months from November 1st, with the understanding that "in case it should be agreeable to the people of Dover and himself, he should continue to supply them after the three months had expired." This was agreeable, and he continued their supply. The following spring (1844) Elder Elias Naudain wrote the Presbytery informing it "that the church in Dover, which had been for a number of years nearly extinct, had been re-suscitated and requested to be taken under the care of the Presbytery;" this was done and Dover enrolled. Leave was then granted the church to procure the services of Mr. Murphey for the next six months, and it was recommended to the Board of Missions for three hundred dollars for the coming year. A month afterward, May 10, 1844, the church made out a call for Mr. Murphey, naming as his salary one hundred and seventy-five dollars a year, the year to begin with the past February 1st.

June 27th he was received into the Presbytery and the call was placed into his hands and by him accepted. On June 24th he was ordained and installed as pastor. Subsequently he became pastor of the Smyrna Church also, serving it with this until October 4, 1859. October 12, 1860, his relation as pastor to this church was dissolved. During the period of this pastorate the church was twice left entirely without an elder. Elias Naudain, who had been ordained an elder in 1835, by Rev. John Patton, died March 12, 1849; and Haddon Smith, who after that became an elder, his name appearing on record as a member of the Session September 29, 1849, died October 18, 1855. On April 19, 1857, Mr. Jones, and on October 30, 1859, Mr. Nicholson, the present members of the Session, were ordained. For a little over a year after Mr. Murphey ceased to be pastor the church was vacant. During that interval Rev. Thom. B. Bradford was the moderator of the Session. On November 27, 1861, a call was given through the Presbytery to Mr. J. J. Pomeroy, till then a licentiate of the Presbytery of Carlisle. This was by him accepted, and on the following day he was duly ordained and installed. His pastorate, however, was brief, terminating by his release October 31st. of the following year. Six months later, April 2, 1863, Rev. Cyrus Huntington was called, and on May 11th following he was formally installed as pastor, which office he held until his death, April 15, 1883. From October 4th following, the present pastor, the Rev. John F. Stonecipher, has served the congregation.

The increase in the membership of the church from those days when Mr. Murphy, in the beginning of his pastorate, could only report a grand total of sixteen —but four of whom were men—to these days, when we report one hundred and twenty-seven, deserves to be mentioned. So does the increase in the benevolent contributions from tens of dollars to hundreds. So does the acquisition of the beautiful and useful chapel in 1880.

BAPTIST CHURCH.—It is stated that in 1839, Jonathan Stites and family were the only Baptists in or near Dover. In 1832, George Parriss, a Baptist, moved with his family from New Jersey to the neighborhood. A few years later the Rev. John P. Thompson was sent to this region as a missionary of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society. He labored with the people until 1847, when he was succeeded by the Rev. John P. Walter, a missionary of the society. His salary was three hundred dollars.

To the parish of the Holy Cross are attached the congregation at Smyrna and Magnolia, and the mission-stations of Salisbury, Westover, Princess Anne, Berlin, Ocean City and Cape Charles City, which places are visited monthly by the rector of the Dover Parish. The whole congregation numbers about three hundred members.

Methodism in Dover.—The Methodist Episcopal Church in Dover was organized on September 13, 1778. The first sermon preached in the town by a Methodist minister was delivered by Rev. Freeborn Garrettson, from the steps of the old academy that stood in the southern part of the town, near where the Farmers' Bank is now situated, on September 12, 1778. Concerning the labors of Garrettson here, Stevens, in his "History of American Methodism," says:

"He began his labors in Dover amid a storm of opposition in the latter part of 1778. He had been invited thither by a gentleman who had been profited by his ministry elsewhere. Hardly had he disembarked from his horse when the mob gathered, crying out, 'He is a Tory; hang him, hang him!' While others shouted in his defense. Hundreds of clamorous voices resounded around him. 'I was in a fair way,' he says, 'to be torn in pieces.'"

He was rescued, however, by some friendly gentlemen, one of whom (Mr. Smithers), taking him by the hand, and leading him to the steps of the academy, bade him preach, and declared he would stand by him. The evangelist cried aloud to the multitude. He was heard through most of the town. The crowd wept. One person sitting in a window a quarter of a mile distant, was alarmed by the truth and afterward converted. More than twenty of his hearers were awakened. The ringleader of the mob repented and betook himself to the reading of the Bible, and "never again persecuted the children of God." Garrettson preached repeatedly in the town, formed a society (September 13, 1778), and "the Lord was with them, spreading the word and converting many souls."

The preaching was at this time established at Mr. Hilliard's, above Dover.

The first church edifice owned by this society was built by Richard Bassett, Esq., afterwards Governor of the State of Delaware, and who was himself a member of the society. The house cost about two thousand dollars, one-half of which Mr. Bassett generously donated to the society. It was located at the northwest corner of North and Queen Streets. The entire lot is now used as a cemetery. The original trustees of the property — i.e., the building — were Richard Bassett, Benoni Harris, Jno. Willbank, Jno. Lowber and Joseph Harper. The lot of ground on which the church stood was donated for that purpose by Vincent Loockerman to the following trustees, viz.: Jno.

2 Nathaniel Smithers, Esq., father of Hon. N. B. Smithers, of Delaware.
Pryer, Jr., Richard Lockwood, William Kirkley, Major Taylor and James Hull. The deed for the ground is dated June 1, 1782. The society was incorporated in 1799, and in honor of the founder of Methodism it was called Wesley Methodist Episcopal Church. In this first church edifice many of the fathers of Methodism labored, among them Dr. Thomas Coke, Freeborn Garretson, "Father Connelly" and others, and of the bishops, the following visited Dover and preached there, viz.: Bishops Asbury, Whatecoat, McKendree, George and Emory. Bishop Whatcoat died here in 1806, and his remains were buried under the altar of the old church, and when the building was afterwards torn down, a suitable monument was erected over his grave to mark the spot.

The old church building was torn down and the new one erected on the present site on State Street in 1850, most of the bricks from the old edifice being used in building the new. The lecture-room of the present building was dedicated on Sunday, February 9, 1851. The sermon on that occasion was preached by Rev. Charles J. Thompson, from Gen. 28: 16, 17. Since it was first built the house has been enlarged twice, once in 1870 and again in 1884. The seating capacity of the present audience-room is about six hundred. Present membership (1887), 559.

During the year 1887 the society undertook the work of erecting a chapel in the western part of the town for the convenience of the people living there, and Edwin M. Stevenson, Esq., a member of the church, having donated for that purpose a lot of ground situated at the corner of Governor's Avenue and Mary Street, the society built a neat chapel with a seating capacity of about two hundred, and it was dedicated on Sunday, October 2, 1887.

In addition to the property already referred to, the society owns a handsome parsonage property, conveniently located alongside of the church, and it is furnished with all the modern appliances necessary for the comfort of the ministers' family. Also the church has recently bought and laid out a handsome cemetery on the north side of the town, containing about five acres. The aggregate worth of real estate held by the church is about thirty-one thousand dollars.

The Sunday-school connected with the church is one of the strongest and most prosperous in the State. At first there was organized a union school and it met in what was at that time the town academy, at the southern terminus of State Street. This school was organized by Hon. Willard Hall (afterward Judge Hall), Dr. Martin W. Bates and a gentleman named A. Strong, about A.D. 1826. The school was undenominational, and after an existence of about four years was abandoned, Messrs. Hall and Strong having removed from Dover and Dr. Bates having given up the enterprise. During the year 1830, however, Mrs. Ann Clark Sipple collected the children together and organized the school in the Methodist Church, and

Mrs. Sipple herself was elected the first superintendent, and from that time on to the present the school has continued to increase until it now numbers sixty officers and teachers, with about six hundred scholars. In 1856 Mrs. Elizabeth Davis Burton, who was assistant superintendent of the school, suggested the organization of an infant department in the school, and the organization was effected with Mrs. Sallie Ann Ridgeley as superintendent, an office which she retained until her death, in the spring of 1887.

During the history of the church the following ministers have been stationed here as pastors in charge, viz.:

Whatcoat Methodist Church (col.)—The first meeting-house erected by the colored people in Dover was built in 1852, on the southwest corner of the old church-yard and burying-ground of the Methodists. The house was used until 1872, when a new church building (and the present one) was erected west of it on the same lot, and the old church was removed to the south side of North Street, and fitted up for a parsonage, and is still used for that purpose. The church building was neatly frescoed and painted in the summer of 1887. Before 1852 there was no separate organization of the colored people, but in that year the society was organized, taking the name of Bishop Whatcoat, who is buried in the yard on which their church is erected.1

1 Rev. Richard Whatcoat, one of the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was born in the parish of Quinton, England, February 23, 1796. He was ordained in September, 1798, by John Wesley and, accompanied by Dr. Coke, landed in America the 30th day of November following.
The first pastor was the Rev. Prince Lewis, who served for several years. In 1857, under Bishop Scott, a local Conference was organized, since which time the following pastors have served the congregation: 1857, Revs. Ebenezer Songs; 1859, Isaiah Broughton; 1861, Nathan Young; 1863, John G. Manlove; 1864 (Delaware Conference organized), J. W. Saunders; 1866, John W. Wisco; 1868, Joshua Brinkle; 1869, Harrison Rich; 1871, Solomon Cooper; 1874; J. D. Elbert; 1876, Lewis T. Cox; 1878, John H. Holland; 1880, W. M. Webb; 1883, J. E. Webb; 1886, the Rev. A. Brown, who is the present pastor.

The society has at present one hundred and fifty members.

The Bethel A. M. E. Church (colored) was established in 1873 and erected a chapel on Kirkwood Street. The society has about eighty members. The pastors who have served the church are as follows:

Calvary Baptist Church.—A number of colored people from the Methodist congregation accepted the faith of the Baptists, and in 1883 met for worship in private houses. In 1856, by the aid of the Baptist Association and the citizens of Dover, a lot was purchased at the corner of Queen and Fulton Streets, and a neat frame chapel, thirty by fifty feet, was erected, which, with furniture, cost about two thousand dollars. It was dedicated July 29, 1887. The Rev. Henry C. Jones is in charge of the congregation.

Schools in Dover.—The first schools in Dover were private, and were established by the most wealthy residents for the education of their children. It is not unreasonable to suppose that soon after the laying out of Dover, in 1717, a sufficient number of pupils were gathered together in some private house and educated. The first positive knowledge that we have of any schools in Dover is found in a sketch of the life of Dr. Nathaniel Luff, who was born in St. Jones' Neck in 1756, and attended school in Dover in 1767-68. The following is his account of his introduction to the school and town: "After this I was removed back again. Here I was no sooner set on my feet and introduced to my associates, than I was let out to battle; as children fight cocks, so did these corrupt youths of Dover entail the innocent and unguarded into a maze of error and dissipation, proportioned to each one's age and circumstances."

"A few men anxious for the promotion of their children were excessively grieved by tutors; themselves unacquainted with the learned languages and sciences, prompted by ambition and secured by wealth, they were willing to go great lengths, but for want of proper knowledge they expended their money to little purpose and established habits that were un- substantial and hard to eradicate. Thus it was that, after being two years at school to acquire a knowledge of the Latin language, I was so improperly taught that, on my going to Philadelphia, I had to begin again, and I found the mode of tuition so diverse that it would have been for my benefit had it been my first essay, and the school tuition was more than two prices in Dover to what it was in Philadelphia; so that I had to pay double prices for erroneous principles."

Thus it will be seen that the people of Dover were lavish of their means to secure an education for their children, but, through incompetent teachers, did not receive satisfactory results. The school to which Dr. Luff refers was kept in a building erected by the inhabitants of Dover, and was known as the Academy. It was located on a lot owned by Thomas Nicholson, on High Street (now Governor's Avenue), south of Bank Alley. In this house George Whitefield is said to have preached, when on one of his trips through this section. John Lednum, in his work on "The Rise of Methodism in America," says "that in 1778 the Rev. Freeborn Garretson preached the first Methodist sermon in Dover from a platform in front of the Academy." He adds "that in 1780 a plan had been made between Dr. Stephen Megaw, rector of Christ's Church, Dover, and the Rev. Francis Asbury, then working in harmony with the Episcopalians, to educate the youth in this vicinity. Mr. Asbury induced James Coleman to come from Virginia to Dover, where for a time he was engaged in teaching a school of boys."

In 1785 a bill was introduced into the General Assembly having for its object the placing of the Academy property under control of a board of trustees, but it failed to pass. This system of private schools without trustees or any board of control appears to have been spasmodic and unsatisfactory, until finally the following petition was presented to the Assembly at Dover, January 10, 1810:

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representation of the State of Delaware:

The petition of the subscribers residing in Dover and its vicinity respectfully represents that your petitioners consider that the establishing of an academy at Dover would be of great public utility, that there being no seminary of this kind in Kent County must be a subject of regret to all those who consider the importance of the general diffusion of education in a republican government and who feel for the honor and prosperity of this State; and this regret must be increased upon viewing others of the United States, and seeing the advantages they have made for this most desirable object.

That your petitioners believe that if the Legislature of the State would assist in the means of erecting a suitable building for this purpose, that an academy might be established at this place, and that such means might be obtained by a lottery authorized for the purpose.

Your petitioners therefore pray the honorable Senate and House of Representatives to incorporate certain suitable trustees by them to be nominated under the name of the Trustees of Dover Academy, and to authorize these trustees to raise a certain sum by lottery for the purpose above mentioned.

And your petitioners shall ever pray, etc.

On the adjournment of the Conference he traveled extensively through Delaware and other sections of the country administering the ordinances. His last sermon was preached at Milford, Delaware, on the 8th of April, 1846. The next day, while traveling, he was taken severely ill, but succeeded in reaching Dover, where he found a home with the Hon. Richard Bennett, and received every attention which hospitality and kindness could render. He lingered for thirteen weeks and died on July 6, 1846. His remains were deposited as stated above.
An act to incorporate Dover Academy passed the General Assembly January 23, 1810, with the following trustees: Thomas Clayton, Andrew Naudain, Cornelius P. Comegys, Richard Cooper, James Harper, John Fisher, Peter Caverly, Willard Hall, James Sykes, William McClyment, Nathaniel Smithers and Henry M. Ridgely, who were authorized to raise the sum of ten thousand dollars by lottery, to assist in the purchase of a lot and erect a suitable building for school purposes.

These trustees purchased the residence at the south end of Main Street, now occupied by William Reily as a carriage-factory, which was occupied during the Revolution by John Baniug. There are no records extant of this academy, but, from the recollections of early pupils, the following is a list of teachers from 1818: Obadiah Foote, Thomas Mann, Ezra Scovill, Mr. Meeker, Ezra Boswell, Edward Higbee, Theodore Gallaudet, Aaron Williams, Rev. Ashbel Strong, Charles Ridgely.

The public school law was adopted in 1829, but it does not appear to have been adopted in Dover until about 1832, and even after this time a classical school was maintained in the upper room of the old academy, and the lower part used for the public school. All of these school-teachers were from New England, and did not "spare the rod and spoil the child," but believed thoroughly in corporal punishment, and exercised authority over their pupils after school, even when they were at church or attending places of amusement. Mr. Foote is remembered as a severe master, who stood at the entrance door with a drawn whip after a certain hour, and woe to the truant that came late! Theodore Gallaudet is still alive and is the brother of Thomas H. Gallaudet, the celebrated teacher of the deaf and dumb. During his time Miss Elizabeth Thomas taught a school for girls in the lower part of the academy. The following are remembered as having been pupils in 1822, under Gallaudet: W. H. Jay, Joseph P. and George Comegys, George P. Fisher, William R. Morris, Andrew, Nathaniel B. and Theodore Smithers, John P. B. and school property is estimated as follows: Grounds, $3500; buildings, $20,000; furniture, $1500. Nine departments are in operation, each having a teacher, of whom J. E. Carroll is principal.

The principals since the reorganization in 1875 have been Fred A. Williams, William M. Prouse, and James E. Carroll.

In 1846 a seminary was established by Mrs. Mary N. Cowgill, in the Hillyard house on King Street, which was continued until 1849. Mrs. Cowgill was succeeded by Dr. Edward Worrell and wife, who removed the seminary to another location, but did not continue it regularly. A portion of the time it was kept in the basement of the Baptist Church. Dr. Worrell died about 1865, and his widow continued teaching until 1872.

Rev. Thomas G. Murphy, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, commenced a select school in Dover for young ladies in 1852. He taught the English branches, Latin, French, music and drawing in his school. The following autumn he erected a building about one mile out of town, where he continued his school for six or seven years. The attendance averaged about eighteen or twenty pupils.

Wilmington Conference Academy. — In 1868 the Wilmington Conference was set off from the Philadelphia Conference. At its second session a committee was appointed to arrange for a Peninsular “Methodist Convention to consider and promote our denominational interest.” The convention was held in Smyrna in November, 1870, and before its adjournment a committee was appointed “to take into consideration the question of ways and means, and receive propositions for the location of a first-class academy for boys, with instruction to report at the next session of the Wilmington Annual Conference.” The report of the committee did not assume shape, however, until the Conference of 1872, held in Laurel, when they reported that they had chosen Dover for the location of the academy, and outlined the provisions of the charter.

Under these preliminary provisions the Conference proceeded to election of ministerial trustees, and the subscribers among the laymen to the academy, to election of lay trustees. The trustees organized by electing ex-Governor Saulsbury, president; C. H. B. Day, secretary and John W. Cullen, treasurer. The Conference appointed the Rev. J. B. Quigg, agent. Already a considerable amount had been subscribed, and the active work of the agent rapidly increased the subscription during the conference year.

In Feb., 1873, a charter was obtained. Its principal features were that the control of the academy should rest in seventeen ministerial trustees elected by the Conference, and seventeen lay trustees elected by the stockholders. The means for purchasing the ground and erecting the building were to be raised by a joint stock subscription to consist of twenty thousand shares at five dollars each, making an aggregate capital of one hundred thousand dollars. The academy was taken out of the category of dividend-bearing enterprises, by the provision that the “trustees shall have power to appropriate out of the surplus so much as may be required for repairs or improvements of the buildings and for renewing or adding to the furniture and apparatus.” It was further provided that the work of building should not begin until fifty thousand dollars in reliable subscriptions had been secured. The corporation was the trustees elected at Laurel, in March, 1872, and their successors.

At the session of Conference held in Easton, in 1873, it was found that the subscription was still fifteen thousand dollars short of the amount required by the charter before building, and it looked as if the undertaking would fail through unless drastic measures were employed. The Conference was equal to the occasion. The Rev. J. B. Quigg, the agent, a clever financier, proposed a measure which, when passed, assured the completion of the building. The substance of the measure was that the Conference, as a body, subscribe fifteen thousand dollars. Ten thousand dollars of this was to be in the nature of a permanent endowment fund, on which only the interest, at six per cent., was to be paid annually from the proceeds of the educational collection. The remaining five thousand dollars were to be paid in cash out of the “Tract Fund,” conditioned on its return to the “Tract Fund” as soon as five thousand dollars above the fifteen thousand dollars required should be subscribed: the Tract Fund being the share of the Wilmington Conference of the book and tract depository of the old Philadelphia Conference.

The conditions of the charter being complied with, immediate preparations were made to build. On April 8, 1873, the trustees, with most excellent judgment, purchased of J. Alexander Fulton, Esq., for fifty-five hundred dollars, the six acres of land now forming the site of the academy. Their selection justifies especial commendation, for at that time boards of trustees, with a fatuity hard to understand, had been placing academies and colleges clear beyond the limits of towns and cities, and thus making them difficult of access.

The architect of the building was James H. Windrim, of Philadelphia. His plans called for a cruciform structure. The entire front was eighty-nine feet and the total depth of centre ninety-four feet; the width of centre forty-two feet, and of wings thirty-four feet. The building was to be of brick, and four stories high besides the cellar. There were to be fifty-four rooms, besides pantries, store-rooms, etc. It was to be heated by hot air, lighted with gas, and supplied with hot and cold water, bath-tubs and water-closets. A cupola was to surmount the building, thirty-six feet above the roof, making a total height of one hundred feet from the ground. On July 17, 1873, the bid of Fisher & Bockman to build the academy according to the architect’s specifications for forty-five thousand dollars was accepted, and immediately thereafter ground was broken and the work of building was pushed rapidly forward.

While these negotiations were in progress, efforts were making to start the school. About a fortnight after the contract with Fisher & Bockman was closed, the proposition of Rev. J. M. Williams, A.M., to assume the financial responsibility of the school for the year intervening the completion of the building was accepted, and he was elected principal of the Wilmington Conference Academy. The Rev. J. M. Williams was a native of the Peninsula, reared near Salisbury, Md., was a graduate of Dickinson College, had studied in Europe, had taught three years at Milford, and, at the time of his election to the principalship, was a member of the Wilmington Conference and stationed at Felton. The school was first opened in September, 1873, in an old building near the corner of Division Street and Governor’s Avenue, and, despite the meagre accommodations, forty-four boys and young men were catalogued during the year, a number of them being boarders.

On September 7, 1884, the school was opened in the new building with about forty boarders in attendance and thirty-five day scholars. Among the latter were ten young ladies, the trustees having decided, a short time before, to admit young ladies as day scholars. The faculty numbered six. The course of study was adapted to students preparing for college and for business—beginning with the elementary studies and ending with three years in the classics and higher mathematics. The course then was not as comprehensive as the course of the best secondary schools, and a few years later it was raised one year. The first year fully justified the faith and reasonings of the friends of the Conference Academy, for the total enrollment reached ninety-five.

The next year the faculty was increased to seven, Prof. R. H. Skinner appearing as vice-principal. The enrollment for the year was eighty-nine. On the 10th of March, 1876, the building mysteriously caught fire, and, excepting the walls, was burned to the ground. School-rooms were again secured in the town, the students went to the various boarding-houses, and the year was successfully finished. This arrangement was continued during the next year, 1876–77, but owing to the decrease in the faculty, the cramped school-rooms, and the necessity of throwing the students entirely upon their own responsibility, the attendance was small, the enrollment reaching only forty-six.

In the mean time the trustees contracted with Fisher & Bockman to restore the building for twenty thousand dollars. A good deal of the brickwork was standing, and hence the cost of restoration was much less than the original cost of building. Something, too, was gained by the fall in the prices of building materials that had in the mean time taken place. As the insurance on the first building was thirty thousand dollars, and as the loss upon furniture, furnaces, etc., was not more than fifteen hundred dollars, there was a gain by the fire of about eighty-five hundred dollars.

In September, 1878, the building was again ready for occupancy, and the school was opened in it. The year, though, for diverse reasons, was not a prosperous one, the enrollment being only seventy-seven. At the end of the year the Rev. J. M. Williams resigned, and R. H. Skinner, A.M., was elected principal. Prof. Skinner was likewise of Peninsular birth; had been for a number of years principal of Felton Seminary, and for the three years prior to his election as principal he had been vice-principal of the Conference Academy and Professor of Natural Science. He remained principal six years, 1878 to 1884, and placed the academy on a firm scholastic and business basis. The enrollment of his first year was one hundred and thirteen, and after that still larger. He took advantage of the provision admitting young ladies as day scholars to rent a building for a year for their accommodation, and then to build a large house opposite the academy for the use of ladies from a distance. He increased the income of the academy between seven hundred dollars and one thousand dollars a year, and enabled it to pay a handsome rental during his entire incumbency. Now that the charter of the Wesleyan Female College has been revoked, the Conference Academy is the educational centre of Peninsular Methodism.

It was during these years, in 1881, that the president of the board of trustees, Dr. Geo. Saulsbury, died. He was succeeded by his brother, Senator Eli Saulsbury, who is still president. Two years later, Charles M. Wharton, trustee and agent of the academy, died, and bequeathed to the academy two thousand dollars, sagaciously conditionated upon the debt of the academy being reduced to ten thousand dollars in two years. The members of the Conference, the trustees and the friends of the academy went to work, and from all parts of the Peninsula contributions poured in. Owing to the large shrinkage of the subscriptions, and to the accruing interest, the debt had been slowly heaping up until about this time it was about twenty thousand five hundred dollars. The necessary eighty-five hundred dollars were secured, however, in ample time, and the 23d of August, 1885, saw the debt of the Academy fall from twenty thousand five hundred dollars to ten thousand dollars; or, considering the interest-bearing subscription of the Conference, to nothing.

In 1884, Prof. Skinner resigned the principalship, and was succeeded by the present principal, W. L. Gooding, who had been a member of the faculty in 1874–76, and who, for the years 1884–86, had been associate principal. Prof. Convell became associate principal. The school under the present management has been successful.
The Conference Academy has graduated about one hundred young people since its foundation, and prepared hundreds of others for teaching, business, law, medicine, and home life. The smallness of the number of graduates as compared with the number of students is due to the high standard of scholarship maintained in the graduating courses. The academy has resisted all temptations to assume the functions of a college, and has prided itself upon being a secondary school. Its present need is an extension of the south wing of the building for the use of the ladies. This is now under consideration, and it is hoped that the beginning of 1890 will find it completed and the number of students thus largely increased.

Dover Library.—For several years efforts were made in Dover to establish a library, but without success. In the winter of 1884–85, however, a number of the citizens started a movement which resulted in the establishment of a library. A subscription was started in the winter of 1884–85, which resulted in a good working capital, and on the 24th of March, 1885, the “Dover Library Company” was incorporated by act of Assembly with an authorized capital of $2500, with the privilege to increase to $5000, and with right to hold real estate to the value of $25,000.

On the 31st of March, 1885, a meeting of the subscribers was held, and a committee previously appointed reported that they had secured the present room of the library. On the 6th of April the stockholders met at the library, adopted by-laws and elected nine directors: Manlove Hayes, Nathaniel B. Smithers, Walter Morris, William Denney, Enols B. Kirbin, John R. Nicholson, Thomas C. Roe, Robert H. Skinner, William E. Smith. The board elected Manlove Hayes president; N. B. Smithers, vice-president; Thomas C. Roe, secretary; and Walter Morris, treasurer.

The by-laws provided for two classes of subscribers,—life and annual; the life subscription to be $25.00, and the annual $3.00. Three hundred volumes of books were presented to the library from friends, many of them standard works (early editions), and some rare old works such are often found in possession of old families. A list of books desired was carefully selected, and two directors were sent to Philadelphia and New York to purchase them, and on the 8th of June, 1885, the library was opened to stockholders and subscribers.

The director's first report, made April 5, 1886, show upon the shelves of the library one thousand four hundred and fifty-two volumes. They said: "As before intimated, they have held from the first of paramount consideration the moral as well as the classical and high literary character of the books they have purchased. In fiction, their care has been to select from the best authors such works as have stood the test of criticism and have been commended for their literary merits. They have endeavored to guard your institution against the charge of catering to the fervid cravings often indulged by youthful minds for sensational or frivolous literature, and have supplied instead a class of books far more interesting and valuable. The vivid pictures drawn from incidents in the lives of famous men and women found in the form of biography, short histories or the more fascinating narratives of travelers, whose adventures often among strange tribes and families of men, in regions of which little has been previously known, prove that romance in real life can be wrought into narratives more entertaining and often more thrilling than the ideal and incredible creations of fictitious story-tellers."

"In pursuance of the first design, the directors have, by subscription and by the favor of kind friends of the institution, been able to lay upon their table many of the best and most popular magazines published in the United States, two of which are reprints of English publications; these, with several scientific and agricultural papers, form an attractive feature of the library. The magazines, after remaining on the table one month, are issued as books to subscribers."

The second report of the directors was made April 4, 1887, and gives receipts for the year ending in March, 1887, as $1567.05, and expenses, $1484.63, of which $669.40 was part of purchase money of lot and building on State Street, east of North Street, known as Cowgill property, which was purchased at a cost of two thousand six hundred and sixty-nine dollars, for the use of the library. On April 10, 1886, four hundred and seventy-two volumes, by purchase or presentation, were added to the library within the year, making a total of one thousand nine hundred and twenty-four volumes. William Denney, succeeded Thomas C. Roe as secretary, and J. Alexander Fulton, James Kirk, Captain Abram Nowell and Dr. J. H. Wilson succeeded respectively, as directors, Thomas C. Roe, Enols B. Kirbin, R. H. Skinner and William E. Smith. With the exception of these changes, the officers are the same as when the library was organized.

Miss Lidie B. Greene is librarian. The only source of revenue is the payment of three dollars per annum by each subscriber.

Post-Office.—It is not known when a post-office was established at Dover. The first mention of a postmaster is in 1803, when James Schee held the position and continued for many years as postmaster. He was succeeded by Patrick Connelly, Thomas Stevenson, James Stevenson, James Cowgill (1841 to 1845), Henry Cole, John B. Smith, George Stevenson, Timothy C. Killen, John H. Bateman (1861), John B. Smith (1869), Fannie A. Smith, Andrew Smithers (1877), and John C. Pennwell (1885).

For many years the post-office of Dover was kept in various quarters of the town, and in 1872 the Hon. Eli Saulsbury succeeded in securing an appropriation of forty thousand dollars for a post-office building. On August 8, 1873, a lot sixty-six by three hundred and twelve feet, lying on the east side of Main Street, was purchased of William J. Clarke for five thousand dollars, and a lot adjoining, south, seventy by three hundred and twelve feet, was purchased of Elijah Crouch. A plan was drawn by Mr. Potter, of New York, then supervising architect of the government, and the present building was erected. A further appropriation of fifteen thousand dollars was secured July 3, 1876, and on June 20, 1878, the sum of seven thousand dollars was appropriated to complete it. The lower part of the building is entirely devoted to the uses of the post-office; the upper rooms were designed for the use of the United States Court, but have not been used.

HOTELS.—The history of the Capital Hotel is in the early settlement of the town, as the site was one of the earliest in Dover, and has been used continuously to the present.

Hotel Richardson.—This elegant hotel is located at the apex of the triangle formed by State and King Streets, and is built in conformity with the ground upon which it stands, being one hundred and forty feet on State Street, one hundred and fifty feet on King Street, thirty-two feet in front and ninety feet in the rear, and four stories high. It is built of brick in Queen Anne style, and is finished below in ash and elegantly fitted up and well furnished in all of its appointments. There is a telegraph connected with the clerk's office. The hotel cost seventy-five thousand dollars, and was built under the practical eye of A. B. Richardson, the proprietor, in 1881-82. It will accommodate one hundred guests comfortably, and one hundred and fifty if necessary. It is said to be the finest hotel in the State. A. B. & H. A. Richardson are proprietors.

The Bayard House was originally a dwelling on the corner of Loockerman and Queen Streets, which, upon the opening of the railroad, was fitted up as a hotel, and called the Railroad House. It was enlarged from time to time, and in 1884 came under the management of J. M. Ford, the present proprietor. On November 27, 1877, it was purchased by Bachrach & Frankel, of Philadelphia, by whom it was remodeled and enlarged to its present capacity, and the name changed to the Bayard House.

BANKS.—Farmers' Bank of Delaware.—An act to establish a bank and to incorporate a company under the name of the Farmers' Bank of Delaware passed the General Assembly February 4, 1807. The preamble recites,—

"Whereas, the establishment of a bank for the State of Delaware, upon a foundation sufficiently extensive to answer the purposes intended thereby, will be conducive to the general interests of the State, and tend to promote the agriculture, commerce and manufacturing thereof."

The act provided that the bank should be located at Dover, and a branch at the town of New Castle and also at Georgetown. The capital was limited to five hundred thousand dollars, to be divided into ten thousand shares at fifty dollars each. Two thousand shares were to be reserved for the use of the State; the remainder were to be subscribed by the counties, viz., New Castle, 3400 shares; Kent, 3000 shares; and Sussex, 1600 shares. The act also provided for the election of twenty-seven directors, of whom the General Assembly chose nine (three from each county), and eighteen elected by the stockholders (six in each county).

The directors were to choose from their number a resident of Kent County as president of the principal bank, and a resident of New Castle County as president of the branch at New Castle, and a resident of Sussex County as president of the branch at Georgetown.

On January 30, 1810, a supplement was passed, authorizing the bank to effect insurance on houses and other buildings, stores and merchandise from loss by fire. This privilege was discontinued by the board of directors July 2, 1811.

On the 22d of January, 1818, a supplement was passed, establishing a branch at the borough of Wilmington for the purpose of discount and deposit, subject to the same conditions as the other branches, and providing for nine directors chosen from the citizens of New Castle County—six chosen by the stockholders and three by the General Assembly.

The branch at Wilmington, which was established in 1813, had no stock, but received for its capital part of the stock of the main bank at Dover and the branches of New Castle and Georgetown, and also a part of the one hundred and eighty thousand dollars subscribed by the State under the act of February 18, 1837.

The Farmers' Bank became the State depository under the act of January 16, 1823, and it was also the depository of the school fund.

An act was passed February 18, 1837, authorizing the establishment of a branch for discount and deposit at Milford. This act was not, however, carried into effect. An act passed January 10, 1866, authorized the conversion of the bank into a national bank, which was not adopted. The bank retired its currency, and from that time has been a bank of discount and deposit.

The trustees of the School Fund of the State hold in stock of the bank at Dover 1904 shares, at New Castle 296 shares, and at Georgetown 240 shares.

The amount of deposits on hand September 20, 1887, was.—

ridge, and was also elected a presidential elector during the same year.

He was appointed by the Legislature as one of the Delegates to represent Delaware in the Peace Congress which assembled in Washington in 1861. Judge Houston and he are the only surviving members of that delegation.

He was one of the original subscribers to the stock of the Delaware Railroad, and was elected a director of the road at its organization, and served as a director until he incurred the displeasure of the Philadelphians, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad Company by his manly and independent course in the famous peach suit brought against that company by the peach-growers of Delaware in 1865. He took a decided stand against the company in those suits and was an important witness against the company.

He was elected director of the Farmers' Bank of Dover in 1848, and in 1849 was elected its president. He still holds the position after a continuous service of thirty-nine years. His father and his father-in-law, Jonathan Jenkins, preceded him.

He was elected a director of the Kent County Mutual Insurance Company in 1866, and afterwards its first vice-president. On the retirement of George W. Cummins, Esq., in 1885, he was elected to the presidency of the company, and still fills the place.

He is a communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and has been a member of the Vestry of Christ's Church in Dover for nearly thirty years.

He has been a director of two building and loan associations in Dover; a president of one and vice-president of another.

He has been actively engaged in the improvement of his land in Kent County, and has been one of its most successful grain and fruit growers. He has grown as many as thirty thousand bushels of peaches, besides other fruits, in a single year. He has gathered as many as twenty-five and twenty-six baskets of peaches from three single and individual trees at one crop, all in the same year. Several of his farms have produced enough in a single crop to pay their original cost.

He married, in 1843, Virginia E. Jenkins, a daughter of Jonathan Jenkins, of Cambridge, Delaware. After a happy married life of more than forty years, they still both enjoy the blessing of good health. Of four children born to them a daughter only remains; Mrs. Ruthanna J. Harrington, widow of the late Richard Harrington.

The First National Bank of Dover.—A meeting of a number of citizens of Dover and vicinity met at the office of C. H. B. Day, July 1, 1855, to discuss the propriety of establishing a National Bank. It was resolved to establish a bank under the above name, and to solicit subscriptions. A meeting was called July 29, 1865, at which time nine directors were chosen as follows: Hunn Jenkins, Isaac Jump, Charles H. B. Day, Wilson L. Cannon, Alden B. Richardson, Thomas B. Coursey, John W. Cullen and John T. Jakes.

A certificate was granted authorizing a capital of $100,000 with the privilege of increasing it to $200,000. The board of directors elected Hunn Jenkins president, and Charles Kimmy cashier. Business was opened November 11, 1865, and the deposits upon that day were over $10,000. Hunn Jenkins was president until January 1, 1868, when he was succeeded by Dr. Isaac Jump, who continued until January 9, 1887, when Nathaniel B. Smithers the present president was elected.

Charles Kimmy, cashier, was succeeded April 28, 1868, by John H. Bateman, who still holds the position.

The office of the bank was at first on the north west corner of Main and Loockerman Streets, but on October 15, 1869, a house on Main Street above Dr. Wilson's was purchased and occupied until June 7, 1877, when the present bank building was purchased and remodelled.

Charles Kimmy, who was the first cashier of the First National Bank of Dover, was the son of Charles Kimmy, merchant and miller and Hannah Mason, and was born in Marsh Hope Neek, Northwest Fork Hundred, Sussex County, Delaware, on August 25, 1809. About 1813 his father removed to Dover, Delaware, where he lived until his death. The subject of this sketch received as good an education as was possible in a country village, which then boasted of an educator who well grounded him in English, Latin and French. Having a turn for languages he taught himself to read and write German, Spanish, Italian, Greek and Hebrew. Being a great reader, he collected during his long life, one of the finest private libraries in the state. At the age of eighteen years he entered the law office of Martin W. Bates, of Dover, and was admitted to the bar in 1831 but never practiced before the courts. Engaged in various duties he became enthusiastic with the western fever, and in 1836 started for Indiana, bearing letters from John M. Clayton and others to H. Clay, Thomas Ewing and prominent men in the then west. While in Cincinnati he met John Randell, Jr., who engaged him to go south as assistant engineer on the railroad then building from Savannah to Macon, Ga.

He remained south during 1836-37, and part of 38. Returning to Delaware he engaged in political life under John M. Clayton, and in 1842 was appointed prothonotary of Kent County, and clerk of the court of errors and appeals. This office he filled until 1846, when he resigned to enter the Farmers' Bank as teller, which position he retained until the fall of 1855, when he resigned, to take position as cashier of the First National Bank of Dover. In 1868, he was called to the position of cashier of the Farmers' Bank at New Castle, Delaware, which he resigned in 1881, and lived retired until his death May 7, 1886. Mr. Kimmy was identified with many prominent men in social and political life, and his reminiscences were very interesting. Having a very retentive memory, and living so long at the centre of Delaware's social and political life, he was often referred to settle disputes as to men and affairs.

Benjamin Bartia Comegys, fifth son of Cornelius P. Comegys, the eminent banker of Philadelphia, Pa., was born at Dover, May 9, 1819. He received his education at the public school, in St. Jones' Neck, near the place of his birth. In January, 1837, a few days after the inauguration of his father as Governor of Delaware, he left his home, and came to Philadelphia, where he spent eleven years in counting-houses on Market Street. A greater part of this period was passed with the old dry-goods house of Thomas C. Rockhill & Co. In May, 1848, he entered the Philadelphia Bank as junior clerk, becoming cashier in August, 1851, vice-president in 1867, and president in 1873, which position he still holds.

He has been manager of the American Sunday-school Union for more than twenty-five years, and Western Saving Fund Society for twelve years. He has been a director of the Philadelphia Trust, Safe Deposit and Insurance Company, since its organization, a period of nineteen years, also a director of City Trusts and of Girard College for seven years, chairman of the Clearing House committee of banks for four years. He is the only surviving member of that committee, organized in January, 1858, on which he has served continuously. He has also been a trustee of the Jefferson Medical College for twelve years, and recently elected a director in the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. These positions he still holds. He was appointed on a committee to re-adjust the debt of Tennessee, in the year 1877.

He is the author of "Talks with Boys and Girls," "Beginning Life," and "How to Get On," (books for the young,) and of "Thirteen Weeks of Prayer for the Family," "An Order of Worship with Forms of Prayer for Divine Service," and several lectures delivered to Christian Association and Girard College. Two papers, one on "Safe Banking," and the other "Paper Currency," were read before the American Banking Association. Mr. Comegys sometimes contributes an article on banking for the daily papers.

He has had four children, three daughters still living, and one son, named after him, who became assistant-cashier of the Philadelphia National Bank and superintendent of the Sunday-school of the Woodland Presbyterian Church, who died in Nov., 1884.

Mr. Comegys has been an elder in the Clinton Street Presbyterian Church, and twenty-five years ago was an elder in the Walnut Street Presbyterian Church, and is now a trustee of the latter church. He has traveled somewhat extensively, visited Europe on three occasions. In January, 1887, he visited Egypt.
BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.—The successful working of associations of this kind in other parts of the country, induced a few individuals in the town of Dover in 1869 to organize an association for the purpose of building up the town and furnishing houses to many who could not otherwise build.

Mechanics' Building and Loan Association.—Accordingly an act of incorporation was granted March 4, 1869, to the above association, which was organized by the election of the following officers: C. S. Pennewill, president; James D. Smith, vice-president; C. P. Wetherby, secretary; T. S. Harper, treasurer.

The amount of stock was six hundred and fifty shares, which was increased from that time to 1873 to one thousand and eighty-three shares, with a valuation of one hundred dollars per share. Samuel T. Jones was appointed secretary in January, 1870, and continued until the association went out of existence.

The Citizens' Building and Loan Association was incorporated March 6, 1873, with an authorized capital of $250,000. The following officers were elected: President, Dr. Henry Ridgely; Vice-President, Wilson L. Cannon; Secretary, William S. Wilson; Treasurer William Denny. The stock was represented by 2500 shares, of which 1814 were taken. The company retired October 20, 1888, with 922 shares, worth $100 per share.

Dover Building and Loan Association was incorporated March 4, 1879, with an authorized capital of $500,000. The following officers were elected: President, William Denny; Vice-President, John H. Bateman; Secretary Philip Burnett; Treasurer, John H. Jones. The association is still in operation and there was reported about March 4, 1887, 1738 shares at a valuation of $63.55 per share. The association expires about 1891.

Capital Building and Loan Association was incorporated January 20, 1883, with an authorized stock of $500,000, embraced in 3454 shares. The association was organized in March by the election of the following officers: Caleb S. Pennewill, president; Dr. Henry Ridgely, vice-president; C. C. Fulton, treasurer; John S. Collins, secretary; Richard R. Kenney, Attorney. There was held at the September meeting, 1887, 2750 shares worth $32 per share.

KENT COUNTY MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.—After several meetings of citizens of Kent County, in the winter of 1846-47, application was made to the Legislature for the incorporation of a company to effect insurance. The company was incorporated February 22, 1847, and on March 9, the persons interested met in Dover, and elected as directors Samuel M. Harrington, John West, Thomas B. Currey, Henry W. McIvaine, James L. Heverin, Joseph P. Comegys, James R. Clement, Truston L. Davis, and Peter F. Causey.

The directors elected as officers of the company, Hon. Samuel M. Harrington, president; Cornelius P. Comegys, Secretary, and James Cowgill Treasurer.

At a meeting held January 10, 1848, there was reported property insured to the amount of sixty thousand and four hundred and sixty-three dollars. January 6, 1851, Thomas B. Lockwood, was elected as General Agent. The business of the company has been confined to the Peninsula. The officers of the company from its organization have been as follows:

- President:
  - B. M. Harrington...March 9, 1847
  - Dr. B. M. Fleeder...March 7, 1851
  - Geo. W. Cummins...June 9, 1863
  - Dr. Henry Ridgely...Jan'y 20, 1886

- Treasurer:
  - James Cowgill.......March 9, 1847
  - A. J. Wright.........July 17, 1870
  - William Denny.......Jan'y 17, 1873

- General Agent:
  - Thom. B. Lockwood...Jan'y 1, 1841
  - John A. Steffen...Jan'y 17, 1870
  - George B. Dickson....Jan'y 5, 1882
  - A. J. Wright.........July 15, 1874
  - W. J. Wilson.........Jan'y 17, 1879
  - William Denny.......Jan'y 16, 1872
  - James H. Todd.......Nov. 24, 1886

The officers of the company were first located in the north end of the Capital Hotel, but in 1872, were removed to the second story of T. O. Culbrell's building. In 1874, the present building on Main Street was erected at a cost of eight thousand dollars, and the second story fitted up for the use of the company, which it has since occupied.

The average yearly amount of losses paid from 1856 to 1870, inclusive, was $1,949 and the average amount at risk was $1,756,017.

The average yearly amount of losses paid from 1871 to 1880, inclusive, was $11,261, and the average amount of risk was $4,952,754. From 1881 to 1886, inclusive, the losses paid were $14,909, and the average amount of risk $7,908,150.

WATER-WORKS.—The first report of the committee of the town council upon the water works, was made March 1, 1888, in which is contained the facts which led to the erection of the water works. It says:

"As has happened in the history of other towns, so to Dover. During the past quarter of a century, there have been made, from time to time, spasmodic efforts to furnish better protection against fire. These efforts have been made while suffering from the effects of some destructive conflagration, and moving under a sense of perfect holocaust. Generally, the excitement has passed away and nothing came of it; sometimes practical results followed. Many years ago, a hook and ladder truck was purchased, which furnished a supply of ladders and buckets ready for immediate use, and they rendered good service upon many occasions. Afterwards, a small hand engine and a short length of hose were procured, by means of which a chemical solution could be thrown upon the flames. The stream, however, was small, the hose short and its efficiency depended upon the supply of chemicals and the water which was furnished by the bucketets. Of late years several fires occurred of considerable magnitude, which might have been easily extinguished if there had been at command an abundant supply of water and the means of applying it.

"In view of the great amount of combustible material upon the principal business streets of the town, there began to arise a fearful apprehension that our town might at any moment be visited with one of those wide-spread conflagrations which have occurred in other places.

"This was the state of the public sentiment when the Capital Hotel, owned by Thomas O. Culbrell, and kept by William C. Fountain, took fire on the morning of February 4th, 1881, and was totally destroyed, with the exception of the wing on State street. The cold was intense; the mercury being near zero. Under the influence of this panic Wilmingtton was telegraphed to for aid, and promptly responded by despatching two steamers and a several hose carriages, brought to their destinations in little more than an hour after being loaded upon the train. By stretching 'their hoses from one steamer to the other, they were enabled to draw water from the branch below the town, and play upon the burning ruins, thus affording an exhibition to our citizens of what could have been done if we had possessed proper appliances.

"The Town Council acted promptly, appointed a special committee, who corresponded with various places in relation to systems of Water-Works, and called a meeting of the citizens of the town, to assemble in the Court-House Hall, to consider the subject. The meeting was presided over by His Honor, Chief Justice Comegy.

A committee was appointed, from the citizens of the town, not members of the Council, with instructions to consider and report, at a subsequent meeting, the best means of obtaining an abundant supply of pure water for fire protection and domestic use. The committee consisted of A. C. Richardson, H. C. Collison, E. M. Stewart, John Booz, and Caleb S. Pennewill, thoroughly capable, practical and conservative men, deserving the highest confidence of the town in the wisdom of their deliberations.

"They reported at a subsequent meeting well-attended, that they had two plans proposed to them, one by the Holly Company, and the other by the Gloucester Iron Company. The Holly system is an existing system, while the Gloucester is a new one, proceeding directly into the mains. The Gloucester system, however, is a standard pipe 100 feet high and ten feet in diameter with bypass connections for direct pumping into the mains in case of fire. The Holly system was finally adopted.

"In May, 1881, a special committee was appointed by Council to select a site for the well and invite proposals for the entire work and materials necessary to furnish the town with a complete system of waterworks. The committee was composed of John A. Nicholson, Joseph M. Chambers and Stephen Slaughter, which was subsequently made the standing Water Committee, and superintended the work from its commencement to its completion, except that the term of service of Mr. Chambers expired March 1, 1882, H. A. Richardson was appointed in his place on the committee.

The site selected for the new well was on a point of land owned by Mr. O. E. Eccles, just across the bridge on the east side of St. Jones' Creek, on the road leading to Smyrna. The advantages of this site were deemed to be, its location from the town being by far the best, and the small probability of the town extending in that direction, and so contaminating the water; there were abundant springs of delicious water along the west side of the creek; the earth had been examined and watered away from the building, leaving a few levels which could not be disturbed by digging, and though outside the limits of the town, it was only about 2100 feet from State Street, making a comparatively short line for the largest pipe. The lot was purchased at a cost of $200, being 1 1/4 acres, including some land on the top of the hill.

An experimental well was bored, 16 inches in diameter, at a cost of $8.40, and hard bottom was reached at a depth of 71 feet, and the water stood at 2 feet from the surface of the ground, giving a depth of water of 18 feet.

We therefore invited a proposal from the Holly Company, and on the 18th of August, 1881, made a contract with them for the following complete system of works, viz.:

- 2200 feet of 6-inch iron pipe, 460 pounds per length of 12 feet.
- 4700 feet of 6-inch iron pipe, 360 pounds per length of 12 feet.
- 6125 feet of 4-inch iron pipe, 240 pounds per length of 12 feet.
- 27 double discharge Holly fire hydrants, seven stop gates, viz.:
  - one 8-inch, four 6-inch and two 4-inch.
- Engines on bolster-house to be built of brick, 30 feet long by 20 feet wide, roof to be of slate of best quality of roofing tin. An iron smokestack 50 feet high and 2 feet in diameter; a pump well 15 feet in diameter and 21 feet deep, the walls to be 18 inches thick, of brick laid in cement; 2 high pressure steam-pumps of Gastell's patent, with capacity to deliver four 5-inch streams 30 feet high and 100 feet long; two 100 feet high; two tubular boilers of sufficient capacity; the pipes to be covered 3 feet 4 inches deep, and capable of sustaining a pressure of 100 pounds per square inch, and the whole to be completed for $13,500.

The last section of the pipe was laid on Tuesday, September 5, 1882. At a test given under direction of C. G. Hildreth, a continuous stream was thrown over the court-house. Since the works came into possession of the town, a coal shed has been built, a cover put over the well and various improvements made in and about the engine-house for the better management and working of the boilers and pumps. The suction pipe was placed at about three feet from the bottom of the well, to avoid all danger of pumping mud or mud into the mains, giving an average depth of 15 or 14 feet of water from the surface to the bottom of the suction pipe. The character of the water equals our highest expectations, being delicious to drink and so soft as to be adapted to all domestic uses.

Mr. T. F. Cooke was elected by Council, Chief Engineer, and Mr. Patrick Lyons, assistant engineer.

"Through the liberality of the citizens, the banks, Kent County Mutual Insurance Company and the Levy Court, about $1400 was collected, with which two hose-carriages and 1000 feet of hose were purchased and committed to the custody of the Robbins' hose company. In case of fire two lines of hose can be attached to any one fire hydrant, and instantaneous fire pressure can be applied, which need never exceed 800 pounds, unless it is desired to reach the most elevated part of three or four of the tallest buildings."

In 1886 a contract was made with W. D. Wells to dig a well on the west side of the road, between the works and creek twenty feet in diameter and thirty feet deep. The well to be of brick eighteen inches thick and laid in cement. After going twenty-one feet and one inch deep plenty of water being found it, was decided to sink it no deeper. With the two wells and two engines and suction line with St. Jones' Creek in case of fire, the town is amply provided with water.

The Robbins Hose Company was organized soon after the water-works were completed, and in the next year the present hose house was erected with a council chamber in the second story. The company have two hose carriages and about one thousand two hundred feet of hose.

DOVER GAS WORKS.—In 1859 Daniel Trump, of Philadelphia, came to Dover and established a gas works, buying on October 11th twelve thousand square feet of land (the present site) of John C. Pennewill, and built thereon a building for the manufacture of gas from resin, which at that time was $1.50 a barrel. Mains were laid from the works down North Street to Main, thence to the public square and to Water Street and north from North Street to Reed Street. The civil war breaking out resin advanced to sixty dollars a barrel and the manufacture by that process was abandoned, and coal oil and wood was substituted. In February 1887, the plant was purchased by Richardson and Robbins who fitted up the works for the use of resin and run it for two years when they changed to coal gas. They laid about five thousand feet of main which from time to time have been increased. About six million feet of gas is manufactured annually.

In 1881 a company was incorporated with six directors. The present officers are A. B. Richardson, president; W. S. Wilson, secretary and treasurer; George V. Massey, C. S. Pennewill, H. A. Richardson and A. B. Richardson, directors.

THE DOVER GLASS WORKS COMPANY was incorporated April 9, 1883. Five acres of land lying on Williams Street was bought of David Harrington and Thomas O. Culbreth, and in 1884 six buildings were erected to conduct an eight-pot furnace. Fifty-two men are employed, and a capital of $69,000 is invested.

The sand in use is obtained from Morris River, New Jersey. The products (window glass) are shipped to all parts of the country.

The officers of the company are John Bockman, president and manager; and William Fisher, secretary and treasurer.

DOVER NURSERY.—About 1863 Joseph W. Chambers began a nursery on twenty acres of the farm of Judge S. M. Harrington on the south border of the town. From one hundred and fifty to two hundred and fifty thousand peach trees were annually raised and sold for twelve or fifteen years, when it was abandoned. Mr. Chambers has since become interested in business in Dover.

CANNED GOODS. RICHARDSON & ROBBINS.—In 1858 A. B. Richardson and Jas. W. Robbins were conducting a tin and stove store on Loockerman Street, Dover, where Geo. Baker's agricultural warehouse now stands. In this building they began canning goods in a small way, and in 1856 put six hundred cans on the market. The results were favorable, and they moved to a larger building on Pryor Street, increasing their capacity from time to time to meet the demand. In 1862 they put out forty thousand cans, and in the next year purchased the large building known as the Reporter building, corner of State and King Streets, which they fitted up with all the improvements then known to the business. Mr. Robbins died in the summer of 1876, but the name of the firm was retained, and Harry A. Richardson, son of the senior partner, became a member of the firm and still continues. In 1876 the manufacture of plum pudding and canning of meats of all kind became a leading feature. The greatly increased business necessitated another change, and in the spring of 1881 nine acres of land were purchased on King Street, where a large and commodious brick factory was erected, fitted up with every improvement necessary to carry on a successful business.

J. M. Chambers Packing Company.—Joseph M. Chambers in 1871 erected the present works on Loockermans Street (at the depot) for the packing of hermetically sealed goods. In 1881 a charter was granted as the "J. M. Chambers Packing Company." Many specialties are manufactured, such as plum puddings, potted meats, "peaches for cream," etc. The buildings have a capacity of turning out ten thousand cans of fruit and vegetables daily during the canning season.

Hazel & Pennewill.—In 1888 William G. Hazel and Caleb S. Pennewell established a shush, blind and door factory and a planing-mill, and opened a well-stocked lumber-yard at the corner of Loockerman and Queen Streets. The firm also manufacture a large number of peach baskets.

E. H. Sellers' Evaporating Works.—The works were leased of John H. Dana in the summer of 1887, and are used in evaporating pears and peaches, and have, when in full operation, an average of seventy-five employees.

The business was begun in 1875 by the Dover Fruit and Vegetable Preserving Company, which was incorporated in 1873 and erected evaporating works on Railroad Avenue. The business was conducted in 1870–74 by Dr. Isaac Register. In 1888 the property was sold to John H. Dana, of Belpre, Ohio, who continued the business until 1886, when it ceased.

Besides the State and County Buildings, Dover contains two banks, a Government post-office building, and nine churches, an academy, a graded public school building, gas and water works, four newspaper and a job printing-office, and is liberally provided with stores, shops, manufacturing establishments and artisans for a town of its importance.

Union Lodge, No. 7, A. F. A. M.—The earliest record we have of a lodge of Free Masons existing at Dover is the meagre and scanty details that have come down to us from the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania. It appears that a warrant from that sovereign body was granted August 26, 1775, for the constituting of a lodge of "Ancient York Masons" at Dover, it being No. 18 on the roster of that body. It appears from the records that but two other lodges were constituted in Delaware prior thereto.

Who were the charter members who constituted the officers of the lodge, what names were borne upon its roster, how long it continued in existence, we have no means of knowing, owing to the destruction of the Masonic Temple in Philadelphia, in the year 1819, in which conflagration the archives pertaining to the Grand Lodge and her subordinates were totally destroyed.

The next lodge at Dover, of which we have official cognizance, is "Union Lodge, No. 7, of Ancient York Masons," whose charter, dated June 27, 1809, was warranted by the Grand Lodge of Delaware, which was organized in 1806.

This lodge continued at work down to the year 1832, when it ceased to labor. The record-book of the lodge was in possession of the lodge as late as 1888, about which time it was either lost, misplaced, or stolen. Owing to this fact, we have not the means at hand to enable us to tell who were the successive officers of the lodge, nor what was the history of its proceedings.

The names of the members during the period from 1809 to 1832, in addition to those of the charter members, are preserved and number forty-four.

Of the list, the Hon. Willard Hall, United States district judge for the district of Delaware, who died about 1888, was Grand Master in 1817–18; Joshua G. Brinkle, Grand Master in 1824; and Arnold Nandain, in 1825–26–27. The list during this period comprised the most eminent men of their day, in the various walks of life. Owing to the anti-Masonic excitement in 1827–28, the lodge membership fell off; and in 1832 ceased to work.

In 1857, James P. Wild, William Sharp, John A. Nicholson, Saxo Gotha Laws, George W. S. Nicholson, Myers C. Couwell, Henry Stout, John W. Smith, Robert B. Jump and John P. Hickory petitioned the Grand Lodge of Delaware for a revival of the charter of 1809, which was granted by the Grand Lodge at Wilmington, June 27, 1857.

Upon page one of the records of the lodge, under the caption of "by-laws," occurs this section:

"Section 2. "The warrant of this lodge is a charter granted on the 27th day of June, A.D., 1857, A.L. 5857, by the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Delaware, (by which was revived Union Lodge, No. 7, which had ceased to work A.D., 1832, A.D., 5882, and had been first constituted A.D., 1809, A.L. 5809), to whose constitutional rules and edicts the most implicit respect and obedience will ever be paid by its members."

Under the revived charter, the lodge met January 29, 1858, "according to appointment and summons of the Right Worthy Grand Master, A. P. Robinson," and was regularly constituted by the election and installation of the following officers: James P. Wild, W. M.; William Sharp, S. W.; John A. Nicholson, J. W.; Saxe Gotha Laws, Treasurer; George W. S. Nicholson, Secretary; Myers C. Connell, S. D.; Henry Stout, J. D.; John W. Smith, Tyler.

The lodge met in the Odd Fellows' lodge-room, in the old brick academy. On February 6th, "a committee was appointed to procure a suitable room for the communications of this lodge." On February 16th, committee made a report, which was accepted, and on February 19th, the committee was authorized to procure the rooms in the third story of Dunning's new building, "on a lease of ten years."

This lodge-room was in the building at the southwest corner of State and North Streets, of which the lodge took possession May 4, 1858, and where it continued to meet down to the evening of June 24, 1885 (St. John's day), at which time the W. M. John C. Gooden convened the lodge in its new lodge-room at No. 27 Loockermans Street, to receive the M. W. Grand Lodge of Delaware, which dedicated the new hall in ample form to Free Masonry, to virtue and to universal benevolence.

In the fitting up of the hall, in 1858, the lodge received material aid from W. H. Carryl, of Philadelphia, and at its first meeting in the new hall, May 4th, the lodge adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, unanimously, That the hearty thanks of the officers and members of Union Lodge, No. 7, A. Y. M., Dover, Del., be and are hereby returned to Brother W. H. Carryl, of Franklin Lodge, No. 134, Pitts., for the valuable offering he has laid upon the altar of our Lodge as a testimony of his fraternal regard; and may he receive the reward due to all those who truly appreciate and practice the principles of Free Masonry."

Upon the revival of the lodge, in 1857, the paraphernalia necessary to the proper organization of the lodge involved it in a debt of three hundred dollars, which amount Henry Stout discharged, and the lodge, at its communication of January 7, 1862, in recognition of his generosity, passed resolutions thanking him for his munificence.

In 1864 the lodge was called upon to mourn the death of Colonel David L. Stricker, brevet brigadier-general Second Delaware Regiment Volunteers, who fell fighting in the battle of the Wilderness, May 12, 1864, and was buried in the Methodist Episcopal Church burying-ground, at Dover, May 18th, with imposing Masonic honors.

On the 25th of September of this same year the lodge was called the second time to mourn the death of Brother Dr. William M. Bonwill, of Camden, Delaware, who was a noted physician in his day and was identified with almost every movement in the first half of the present century having a tendency to advance scientific knowledge and to ameliorate the condition of his fellow-men. He was buried in the Episcopal Church-yard, at Dover, with Masonic honors in due form.

On the 3d and 4th of August, 1874, the lodge was favored on both evenings by a lecture by Brother Robert Morris, P. G. M., of Kentucky, who is one of the brightest lights in the firmament of Free Masonry and an undoubted authority in Masonic jurisprudence. The first lecture was before the lodge and the second before the general public in the body of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which had been kindly tendered to the Masonic fraternity.

The only other event calling for special notice in the history of the lodge is the leasing of the new hall on Loockerman Street, and its dedication by the craft on June 24, 1885, to which reference is made in connection with the history of the old hall in 1858.

The following list contains the names of the Past Masters from the revival of the lodge in 1857 to the present time: Edward Ridgely, Thomas C. Frame, William C. Jump, Dr. Ezekiel W. Cooper, Edwin O. Shakespeare, Beniah Watson, Severn Taylor, Dr. Edwin S. Anderson and John C. Gooden. Brothers John A. Nicholson and John F. Saulsbury have served as Grand Masters of the Grand Lodge of the State of Delaware.

The lodge now numbers fifty-four members. Of the charter members there are only three now living, namely, John A. Nicholson, George W. S. Nicholson and Robert B. Jump. Brother Jump is presumably the oldest Master Mason in the State, having been a Mason in a Free Mason's Lodge at Greensboro, Caroline County, Maryland, in 1826.

PHILODEMIC LODGE, No. 7, I. O. O. F. of Dover, Del., was instituted July 5, 1845, with J. H. Stevenson, Henry Cole, James L. Smith, William Wilkinson and George Stevenson charter members, under the administration of John Fairfax Smith, G. M. The lodge was organized in the north room of the second story of the building known as the "Old Academy," situated at the southern extremity of the town, on the east side of State Street, in which room the meetings were held until some time in the year 1862, when they removed to Dr. Saulsbury's building in the northwest corner of the Public Square, where they held their meetings until December, 1870, when they removed to the third floor of Dyer's building on Loockerman Street, which room the lodge occupies at the present time.

The officers at the present time are as follows: William H. Powell, P. G.; Thomas C. Dehority, N. G.; George W. Benn, V. G.; Samuel H. Barker, F. S.; William Riggs, R. S.; William Fisher, Treasurer; Clayton Wetherby, Warden; James Coady, Conductor; James E. Wales, O. S. G.; B. Dunlap, Clove, I. S. G.; Hiram Reddy, Grand Representative to the Supreme Lodge.
There are at the present time in good standing twenty-seven members in the lodge.

CENTRAL LODGE, No. 10, K. of P.—This lodge was chartered January 27, 1869, with thirteen charter members. Meetings were held for two or three years in the old Academy until rooms were fitted up in the third story of Dyer’s building, corner of Loockerman Street and Governor’s Avenue. This lodge has at present fifty-seven members. The present officers are: Chancellor-Commander, R. D. Clow; Vice Chancellor, John McMichael; Prelate, Thomas C. Dehority; Keeper of Records and Seals, Edward T. White; Financial Secretary, William B. Hammond; Master of Exchequer, D. W. Morgan; I. G., Wm. R. Geiser; O. G., James Powell.

DIAMOND LODGE, No. 28, A. O. U. W.—This lodge was chartered December 28, 1882, with the following charter members: J. W. Anderson, W. D. Walls, E. S. Anderson, W. R. Cafoon, Jr., Wm. Swartsweiler, C. C. Handaberry, Wm. J. Adkins, Judge J. Green, D. W. Corry, B. A. Bennett, W. F. Page, T. C. Christopher, J. E. Carroll, E. P. Taylor, P. Burnett. Meetings were held in Odd Fellows’ Hall until July 1, 1887, when the place of meeting was changed to the hall of the Grand Army. The lodge has a membership of twenty-five. The present officers are: Past Master Workman, W. D. Wall; Master Workman, W. L. Pritchett; Foreman, S. H. Barker; Overseer, J. A. Forbes; Recorder, J. C. Carroll; Financial Secretary, C. B. Prettyman; Receiver, J. T. Hofbeck.

DELAWARE LODGE, No. 102, Order of Tonti, was chartered March 15, 1877. John A. Forbes, President; John A. Wright, V. G.; J. E. Carroll, Secretary; Chas. C. Prettyman, Treasurer; seventeen members.

GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.—General T. T. Torbet Post, No. 3.—This post was chartered September 9, 1880, with twelve charter members.

Meetings were held in Odd Fellows’ Hall until July, 1885, when rooms were fitted for their use in the third story of the Dunn building, on Loockerman Street.

The post has fifty-six members.

The officers are John S. Rowan, commander; A. B. Moore, adjutant; A. B. Connor, quartermaster.

CHAPTER LVI.

EAST DOVER HUNDRED.

The territory now comprising East and West Dover Hundreds, prior to January 28, 1823, was embraced in Murderkill and St. Jones’ Hundreds. The latter was one of the original hundreds, and extended along the bay and between St. Jones’ Creek and Little Creek. In 1828 the Legislature passed an act providing that Murderkill Hundred should be divided as follows:

"Beginning at the mouth of the branch, upon which the mill and mill-seat of the late Henry Holliston, deceased; the mill and mill-seat later held by Samuel Howell, deceased; the mill and mill-seat last held by William Warner, deceased; and the mill and mill-seat of William Allabrand, all of which are situated on Isaac’s branch, where said branch empties into St. Jones’ creek, and running thence upon said branch through the mill-ponds of said mills by and with the water-courses to the mouth of a prong or stream emptying into said branch, from the southeast near Allabrand’s mill-pond, and which stream crosses the state road running from the line of Maryland near the River Bridge by Thomas Chapel, through Camden to the Forest Landing, between the poor-house and the house formerly of William Kirkley; and running from the mouth of the said stream last mentioned, up the same, by and with the water-courses to the State road, and thence toward the State of Maryland, called the Stow line; and all that part of Murderkill hundred, lying northherly of said division line, beginning at the mouth of the first-mentioned branch and running as aforesaid to the line of the state of Maryland, be and the same is hereby detached and set off from the said hundred and united to St. Jones’ hundred; and that the said part of Murderkill hundred lying northerly of said division line and St. Jones’ hundred shall form and be one hundred and shall be called Dover Hundred." on September 29, 1679. Pack resided on Towne Point, and Briggs on "Kingston upon Hull," adjoining Edward Pack, who was one of the signers of the petition for a new county in 1678-80, and was chosen the following May as one of the justices of the peace for St. Jones' County.

The first court for St. Jones' County (now Kent County) was held in Edward Pack's house on "Towne Point." On March 10, 1681, Pack and Briggs sold this property to William Darvall. The conveyance locates the property as follows: "Whereas there is a certain house and land commonly called by the name of Towne Point, lying and being on the mouth of Jones' Creek to the southwest, and to Delaware Bay to the east, and to the land of John Briggs to the north and northwest, now in possession of Edward Pack, containing one hundred and fifty acres." It is further mentioned that in consideration of one thousand two hundred pounds of tobacco, "all the land, dwelling-house and tobacco-house" were conveyed to William Darvall, also a magistrate, who sold it September 23, 1686, to William Hill, from whom it passed to his son Samuel, and daughter Elizabeth, wife of Robert Jadwin. They remained in possession of the property until November 12, 1724, when it was sold to Charles Thomson, by whom it was conveyed, August 26, 1727, to Benjamin Shurmer, who, on May 6, 1730, sold it to Caleb Hunn as "Towne Point," containing one hundred and forty acres. Later, Nathaniel Hunn came into possession of the property, which he left by will to his daughter Mary, the wife of Waitman Sipple, Jr., who, August 11, 1749, conveyed it to John Hunn. Later still, Samuel Dickinson came into possession of this tract, and it is now owned by his great-grandson, Algernon Sidney Logan. It appears from the following that Wm. Darvall still continued in occupation at the Point in 1688, and kept at the place a tavern and also ran a ferry:

"Articles of Agreement, Dec. 14, 1688.

Wm. Darvall and John Barnes: "Dover River, in Prov. of Pa.

"John Barnes obliges himself to live, and keep an ordinary, on the now dwellings plantation, or the Court house where the said William Darvall shall appoint, and also to sell and dispose of all manner of trade whatsoever, and sells all liquors by retail, &c.

"For his care, trouble, and service, the sum of forty pounds, in current money of Pennsylvania.

"The said William Darvall is to have two men or boys servants, and if any men or women's servants shall be wanting, to look after horses and ferry, &c., the said Darvall is to furnish them.

A tract called "Poplar Neck," containing four hundred acres, was granted to Thomas Young, June 16, 1671, by Gov. Francis Lovelace. This was before courts were held at Whorekill (now Lewes), and is the earliest date of warrant in the county. The property is described as being about two miles above St. Jones' Creek, bounded south by a swamp running westerly from the bay side. It passed from Thomas Young to his son Benjamin, and was sold by him to Ralph Hutchinson, of New Castle.

"Mulberry Swamp," containing four hundred acres adjoining the foregoing tract on the north, was granted to Thomas Merritt July 16, 1671, and in 1680 passed to Walter Dickinson. July 5, 1679, this land was granted to Barnard Hodges, who had then occupied it for eighteen months, and it became known as "Hodges' Desert," and "Jones his Valley." Walter Dickinson began suit against Hodges for Mulberry Swamp, formerly surveyed to Thomas Merritt, and the jury found for Dickinson. This tract came into possession of Samuel Dickinson before 1725, who, September 28, 1743, sold it to Griffiths Gordon. Samuel Dickinson also came into possession of sixty acres of Young's land, a part of Poplar Neck, which he sold to John Pleasanton in 1725.

Jehu Curtis, January 5, 1738, took up a small tract of fast land and some marsh containing twenty acres, named "Kitt's Hammock," and which he very soon after assigned to John Pleasanton, who owned part of Poplar Neck adjoining. The survey gives "Kitt's Hammock" as containing thirty-one acres. "Brinkloe Range," a tract of marsh land, lay adjoining Kitt's Hammock to the southwest; one hundred acres of it also passed to John Pleasanton. These Pleasanton lands passed to David Pleasanton, and by a survey in Book B, it is shown that in 1818 Nathaniel Pleasanton's tavern was on the site or near the present Kitt's Hammock Hotel, and the Pleasanton farm-house was located west of it. The old tavern entirely disappeared long years ago.

After the tavern went down the place was used very much as a tenting-ground and for basket picnics, until about 1846, when William Hutchinson and Henry W. McIlvaine built a hotel at Kitt's Hammock, and about the same time planted oysters in Delaware Bay at an expense of one hundred and five dollars each, thinking that it would be a benefit to the hotel which is located on the beach. McIlvaine failed, the property changed hands, and no further attention was given to the oysters planted by Hutchinson and McIlvaine until about twenty years afterwards, when New York boats began to find an abundance of oysters on this ground. Mr. Hutchinson consulted counsel and found there was no law to protect his oyster-beds. Subsequently a bill was drawn up by Joseph P. Comegys, now chief justice, and a law was enacted protecting Delaware fisheries, which has resulted in great benefit to the State. While McIlvaine and Hutchinson gained nothing for themselves in their oyster-planting, they claim to have first demonstrated the feasibility of that culture in Delaware Bay. Kitt's Hammock is on the bay where it is about thirty miles wide, and consists of one hotel and about twenty summer cottages, principally owned by people in Dover, nine miles distant. The hotel and grocery are now (1887) kept by John G. Melvin.

St. Jones' Landing is at the mouth of St. Jones' Creek, three miles south from Kitt's Hammock. Vessels bound for Cape May occasionally stop here to take on passengers.

John Burton, November 24, 1679, received a warrant for six hundred acres of land, adjoining that of Walter Dickinson, which was known as "Burton's..."
KENT COUNTY.

Delight," John Brinckloe received a warrant January 21, 1681, for a tract called "Poplar Ridge," above Poplar Neck, containing two hundred and fifty-eight acres. All the tracts thus far mentioned are in St. Jones' Neck, including "Kingston upon Hull," which lay inland. "Kingston upon Hull," containing four hundred and fifty acres and lying north-west of Town Point, was taken up by John Briggs and Mary Philips March 12, 1677-78. John Briggs was a member of the Assembly from 1682 to 1685, and in 1689 sold "Kingston upon Hull" to Richard Bassett and moved to Cape May. This tract is also mentioned as having been surveyed to Elizabeth Frampton in 1687. It was sold April 27, 1700, to Stephen Nowell, who sold fifty acres of it to Robert French, July 19, 1701. The balance remained in the family and passed to George Nowell, who died about 1740, when it was divided among the heirs, and part of it now belongs to the Dickinson estate. It was upon this tract and in the house of John Briggs that Samuel Dickinson resided until he built the mansion-house known as the Dickinson farther west, and up the creek.

A tract called "Uptown," containing one thousand acres, lying east of the Pipe Elm tracts, was surveyed for John Richardson September 9, 1686. "Little Pipe Elm" tract, of two hundred and thirty-four acres, was granted to Wm. Winsmore in 1680. It lies on the northwest side of Pipe Elm Branch, and in time came into possession of Charles Marum and John Nickerson, who obtained a warrant May 10, 1738, when it was surveyed and found to contain three hundred and eighty-nine acres. "Great Pipe Elm," on the southeast side of the same branch, was granted to William Winsmore, and in 1788-93 was re-surveyed to George Robinson. In 1767 it was surveyed to the heirs of George Robinson, Charles Marum, John Marum and John Nickerson. Charles Marum resided on the northwest side of Little Pipe Elm Creek, on Little Pipe Elm tract, then called "Cherbourg." He died about 1781, and by will left this property to his daughter, Elizabeth, and sons, John and Charles. In 1802 Charles sold his interest to John, who, in 1807, conveyed one hundred and twenty acres to Ruhsamah, wife of Cornelius P. Comegys, and the same day sold Mr. Comegys two hundred and twenty-four acres of land adjoining. On this place is the old mansion-house, still standing, a well-preserved monument of the architecture of the early times, and here Joseph P. Comegys, present chief justice, Dr. George C. Comegys, a leading physician of Cincinnati, and Mrs. Henry M. Ridgely were born. Cornelius P. Comegys in 1818 removed to Dover, where he remained eleven years as cashier of the Farmers' Bank, after which he returned to the farm, which is now in possession of his son, Dr. George C. Comegys. A tract called "Shoulder of Mutton" lay south of "Little Pipe Elm," on Pipe Elm Branch, and in 1773 was in possession of Stephen Parradee.

Samuel Dickinson, a merchant of Talbot County, Md., began the purchase of lands along St. Jones Creek and its vicinity about 1715, including "Town Point," "Kingston upon Hull," "Burton's Delight," "Mulberry Swamp" and part of "Poplar Neck." On December 3, 1733, he received a deed embracing one thousand three hundred and sixty-eight acres, which he named "Dickinson Manor" and which included all of the lands mentioned above and some others, but not "Kitt's Hammock." He built a residence on the site of John Briggs' house, upon "Kingston upon Hull," as is shown by surveys, where he resided for several years after he removed to this county, about 1734. In 1738 he became one of the magistrates of the court of Kent County and continued many years. Later in life he erected a brick mansion-house, which is still used and is known as the Dickinson house, a fine example of colonial architecture. He died at his residence and is buried in a family graveyard adjacent. John Dickinson, his son, was born in Maryland and was two years of age when his father moved to the manor. It was in the mansion-house, in 1767, that he wrote the famous "Farmer's Letters," which aroused public attention at home and abroad. In a few years he was called to take a more active part in life, and moved to Wilmington and Philadelphia. He died at the latter city in 1801, aged seventy-five years. He left no male descendants, and two daughters—Sally N. and Maria. The property passed to Sally N., who died a few years ago, when it passed to her nephews and nieces. At the time of her death she was the largest land-owner in the county and was assessed on over three thousand acres of highland and marsh. Maria, the other daughter, married Albanus Logan, a descendant of James Logan, who was a man of influence under Penn's administration. They had four children,—Dr. John Dickinson Logan, Gustavus G., Mary N. and Mrs. Betton. The property was divided between them. Samuel Betton received the north part as his mother's share, Gustavus G. the home property and Dr. John D. the lower part and Mary other lands adjoining. Albanus C. Logan, son of Gustavus, now owns the old Town Point tract; Algeurnon Sydney Logan, the "Kingston upon Hull" tract and the old first residence. The only piece of land separated from the Dickinson estate since 1743 was sold by Miss Sally N. Dickinson, in 1823, to Levick Palmer and he was favored because he was a Quaker.

Joseph Barker, Cesar Knight and George Laws were adjoining neighbors. Levick Palmer married Elizabeth Clymer and had a family of six children. John, their son, died in Germantown. Gen. William Palmer, of Denver, Colorado, became a noted railroad contractor. Samuel died in Philadelphia. Hannah became the wife of William Hutchinson. Mary, wife of Chas. Cowgill, reared a family of five children. Levick P. resides in Camden, Delaware. Lizzie married Robert Nickerson. William resides in Washington. Jacob retains the homestead, and Effie resides at Duck Creek. Sarah Palmer is the wife of...

Robert Wilson, who came from Maryland, resides on a portion of the Dickinson land, called the “Cherry Tree.” J. P. Wilson, one of his sons, is a merchant in Philadelphia. Robert H. resides on the homestead. Lena is the wife of Geo. W. Collins, who resides on the farm adjoining the homestead, and Anna is the wife of J. Frank Denney, of Duck Creek.

A tract containing six hundred and fifty acres, called “Tynhead Court,” lay west of Pipe Elm Branch and “Little Pipe Elm” tract, and was taken up prior to 1680 by Griffith Jones and John Glover. The following is recorded among the early court records:

“Received then, of John Glover, the sum of two thousand pounds of tobacco, being his part and proportionable share for the joyant purchase of a certain tract of land in St. Jones's Creeks, pursuant to certain articles of agreement between us drawn and six hundred pounds of tobacco being for the purchase of his share of a certain parcel and stoke upon the said plantation, I say in full satisfaction of the premises mee.

[GRIFT JONES.”]

Griffith Jones was a member of Penn's Council from 1687 for ten years or more. Before 1780 “Tynhead Court” was owned by John Maxwell, whose widow, Ann, in 1787, sold a part of it to James Sykes, who soon afterwards moved to Dover and held office for many years. Part of the tract came to Major John Patten, son of Ann Maxwell, and to John Wethered, an heir of John Maxwell. The part the latter received was known as “Wethered Court.” John Patten was a brave soldier during the Revolution, a delegate to the Continental Congress, in 1785-86, and a member of the House of Representatives from Delaware in 1795-96. He died in 1800, aged fifty-four.

“Tynhead Court” is on Little Creek and is now a part of the Ridgely farm. Dover Landing was on the Patten land, at the head of navigation on Little Creek. About 1830 John Reed and Sipple and Fennewill built a wharf there, and Elijah McDowell built a store and dealt largely in grain, brought in from the surrounding country and shipped by vessels to Philadelphia and elsewhere. After the railroad was built the place lost its shipping trade and went down. About 1800 A. R. Sherwood built a store at Little Creek Landing, on the south side of the river, and was succeeded in business about 1824, by Joseph Kimmey, who was followed by Chas. Emory about 1828.

September 1, 1837, James L. Heverin began business there as a merchant, buying, selling and shipping grain and country produce. In 1851 when Chas. H. Heverin and W. L. Hobson succeeded him and continued until February, 1838, when C. H. Heverin died, and Jas. L. Heverin took his interest, and the business was continued at that point until 1865, when it was moved across the river. A store was continued at the old stand, however, by Peter Laughlin, J. McConigal and others. Since 1880 Wm. S. Heverin has conducted the business, which is now owned by J. L. Heverin, Joshua McConigal, Jacob Cowgill and others.

A large tract called “Aberdeen,” on the road from “Kitt's Hammock” to Dover, was taken up by John Briggs, and afterwards came into possession of Thomas Clifford, who, in 1729, sold one hundred acres to Richard Hill. Hill sold the one hundred acres to John Houseman, recorder of Kent County, who, on January 10th of that year, divided his purchase by sale to John Gravel and John Smith. Smith's portion passed to his son Morris, who devised it to his son Solomon, who sold to Jonathan Sturgeys. Robert Porter had several tracts of land in Dover Hundred, and among them “Porter's Lodge,” next west of “Aberdeen,” and adjoining the south end of “Berry's Range,” and Tynhead Court on the northeast. It was surveyed November 8, 1680, and contained four hundred acres. A portion passed to Robert French, who sold one hundred and ten acres to the Society of the Church of England, and the first house of worship of the present Christ's Church of Dover was erected on this glebe about 1708, and was used until the society built the present church in Dover about 1740. “Porter's Lodge” is now owned by Daniel Cowgill, E. P. Seimaer and J. M. Comegys.

“Lisburne” property of six hundred acres, was granted by the Whorekill County Court, in 1679-80, to John Brinkloe, who received a patent March 26, 1684. The ground-rents were to be paid every year “at the town of Dover,” which was not laid out until many years afterwards. “Lisburne” adjoins “Troy,” and the lands of Griffiths Jones and Christopher Jackson. A part of it is in possession of the heirs of Charles M. Wharton, who are descendants of John Brinkloe. Robert French purchased three hundred and seventy acres of the tract, and by will in 1712 left it to his daughter Elizabeth, who married John Finney. Their son David in 1760 sold it to Griffith Gordon. In 1800 it was owned by the Pleasontons, and May 15, 1809, was conveyed by Gilbert Coombe and Stephen Pleasonton to Manlove Hayes. “Lisburne” is now owned by Daniel Rockwell.

Many officials of the State of Delaware and county of Kent had residences in Dover during their terms of office and some of them much longer. Others preferred to live a short distance from town. Among the later was Wm. Rodney, grandfather of Caesar Rodney, the signer. He was a merchant of Bristol, England, born in 1652, and married a daughter of Sir Thomas Cesar, of London. He emigrated to America in 1682 with William Penn. He located first at Lewes and became sheriff of Sussex County. It is not known whether his first wife died before he came to this country, but within two years after his arrival he married Sarah, daughter of Daniel Jones, who, December 2, 1688, took out a warrant for seven hundred and ninety acres of land called “Denbigh,” on the west side of St. Jones’ Creek, which later passed to William Rodney, who, September 14, 1698, sold three hundred and ninety-four acres of it to William Brinckloe. William Rodney was a member of the Assembly, and was said to have been the best speaker in that body. After his retirement from the office of sheriff of Sussex County he removed to Kent County, on “Denbigh,” and was an official of the county until his death, April 8, 1708. He left several children, of whom William, the eldest, was born in 1689 and died in 1752. William married Ruth, a daughter of Jehu Curtis, of New Castle, and was sheriff of Kent County at one time. Daniel resided on a farm, went to Dover; was sheriff of Kent County in 1735, was married, but died without issue. The youngest son of William the emigrant was Caesar, born in 1707, and died in 1745. His wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Rev. Thomas Crawford, the missionary, who came to these parts in 1708. Caesar Rodney and Elizabeth had three sons—Caesar (the signer), Thomas A. and William. The former died unmarried. Thomas A. was the father of Caesar Augustus Rodney, of whom a sketch will be found in the Bench and Bar.

“Denbigh” came in possession of Caesar Rodney, who, on April 10, 1765, sold it to Benjamin Chew. It lay north of and adjoining “Morgan’s Calf Pasture,” opposite “Berry’s Range” and the Shakespeare saw-mill. It was in possession of Vincent Loockerman in 1767, and was held by his descendants until sold by Mr. Bradford, after 1852, and is now occupied by Hon. Eli Saulsbury, the Agricultural Society and other owners. “Byefield,” a tract of about twenty acres, was taken up on warrant dated January 26, 1680, by Daniel Jones, Sr., Ezekiel Jones and Daniel Jones, Jr., and was surveyed February 25, 1686, and then contained eight hundred and fifty acres. It passed to Daniel Jones’ son-in-law, William Rodney, and eventually to Caesar Rodney, the signer. A part of the tract had been sold to John Vining, and in 1791 the remaining five hundred and eighty-three acres were sold by the sheriff to Joseph Barker, after whose death they passed to his daughter, Mrs. Dr. Stevenson. “Byefield” lies between Boggtree Branch and Lewis’ Ditch.

An account of the “Brother’s Portion” will be found in the history of Dover. It contained eight hundred acres, and was patented to John Walker and sold to William Southerbee, who, in 1694, sold two hundred acres to the county for the location of a court-house. In 1699 he sold four hundred acres lying south of the town-tract to Richard Wilson. William Wilson, his son, in 1754 sold a part of this tract to Nicholas Ridgely. Daniel Rodney and John Clayton then owned lands adjoining. “Peggy’s Old Field” was also adjoining. The fine residence and well-kept grounds of Manlove Hayes adorn a portion of the Wilson tract. Edward Starkey purchased two hundred acres of the “Brother’s Portion” lying on Punchcheon’s Run, now owned by Wm. W. Morris and the heirs of Perrin Cooper. “Berry’s Range,” containing one thousand acres, lies along the east side of St. Jones’ Creek, opposite the town of Dover, and was taken up by William Berry. In 1691 he sold one hundred acres to James Maxwell, who kept an “ordinary” or inn near where the water-works of Dover now stand. The courts were held at this house in 1693–94. Prior to 1688 Maxwell resided on an estate called “New Design,” which he sold in 1688 to Arthur Meston, who, during his career, was recorder and sheriff of the county. Meston sold it to John Courtney, who sold to Simon Irons. The widow, Naomi Berry, sold two hundred and fifty acres of “Berry’s Range” to James Maxwell, July 16, 1699, and two hundred and seventy-four acres of the same tract passed to Nathaniel Luff, who, June 5, 1741, sold it to Samuel Chew. Nathaniel Luff, a physician, afterwards wrote an account of his life, which was published in 1848, and gives the following account of the Luff family:

“Hugh Luff came from England, the latter part of the seventeenth or the beginning of the eighteenth century, and took up lands on the western shores of Delaware Bay. His son Nathaniel settled in Mil piddon, and his son Caleb in St. Jones’ Hundred. Caleb was a member of the State Legislature during the Revolution, and warmly supported the cause. He had two sons, Nathaniel and John. Nathaniel, the doctor, was born in 1756, and in 1797; he commenced practicing medicine in Kent County. He spoke of attending his first patient in the lower counties, Henry Mollenton’s son, as follows: ‘The way was very intricate, through bushes and swampy grounds; the bushes whipped me in the face and almost discouraged me; however, after a short space, the distance being about four or five miles, we soon galloped there, and my mode of treatment proving successful, it established me in practice. I was provided with two good horses; they generally cantered and seldom rode any other gate.’"

Samuel Chew, who purchased the Luff lands in 1741, was the father of Benjamin Chew, and his daughter was the wife of Edward Tlgghman, who became a large land-holder in Pennsylvania. Samuel Chew was also prothonotary of Kent County. January 4, 1770, Benjamin Chew, later prominent in Germantown, came into possession of the property, sold it to Charles Hillery, reserving only the Chew family burial-ground, now on the property of Edwin O. Eccles, who also owns the old Chew-Hilliard mansion-house.

The tract long known as the Nathaniel Drew lands was originally warranted to Simon Irons, August 6, 1686, as “The Range,” and is described as lying on St. Jones’ Creek joining the northwest part of “Berry’s Range” containing six hundred acres. This land was sold to Benjamin Shurmer, who transferred it to Andrew Caldwell, who, March 12, 1723, conveyed it to Nicholas Loockerman, who made this his first purchase of land in Kent County. He built a large brick house forty by fifty feet, two stories high, with an attic. The doors and windows were capped with stone, the cornice was elaborate, the hall-way was large and ran through the centre of the house, and the interior was divided into ample and convenient rooms, while the slaves’ quarters were a short distance away. Here Mr. Loockerman lived in the easy style of the old-time Southern gentleman, and here he died and is buried. He built a dam and saw-mill at the head of St. Jones' Creek, northeast of the house, which is mentioned in the same year, 1723. The dam is still there at the head of Alexander Law's mill-pond, and the road that runs between the present farms of Walker & McDaniels and the old homestead (now the Covell farm) passes over the dam. Nicholas Locockerman bought other lands in the vicinity of his first purchase. The "Brinckloe Range," which was warranted September 6, 1688, to John Brinckloe, was purchased by Locockerman. It lay opposite "The Range" on the south side of the creek. This land passed to Vincent Emmerson, whose daughter Locockerman married. Emmerson sold three hundred and fifty acres in 1710, which afterwards came into possession of Nicholas Locockerman, and was in possession of his descendants until the new part of Dover was laid out. The descendants of Emmerson purchased land in South Murderkill about 1736, and are very numerous in the county. Nicholas Locockerman married Susan Emmerson in 1721, and in 1722 Vincent Locockerman was born. Mrs. Locockerman soon after died, and Nicholas married Esther, daughter of Benjamin Shurmer. The Locockerman burial-ground is to the rear of the old mansion-house, surrounded by an iron fence and well-shaded. The four marble slabs are dedicated to Nicholas Locockerman, who died March 6, 1769, aged seventy-three; Susannah Locockerman, wife of Vincent Locockerman, died November 7, 1778, aged sixty-three; Vincent Locockerman died August 26, 1785, aged sixty-three; and Vincent Locockerman, who died April 5, 1790, aged forty-three.

The original tract and other lands adjoining, amounting to seven hundred and fifty-two acres, were owned by Nathaniel Drew, who was proprietor so long that it became known as the Drew place. It is now divided into several farms, and is owned by Messrs. Walker & McDaniels, — Covell, H. B. Leonard, Wilson L. Cannon, Robert H. Raughley and others. Emanuel Stout, in 1756, transferred a part of "The Range" to Lewis Gano, who became quite an extensive landholder. Rev. John Miller purchased, May 10, 1750, of Hon. William Killen, a tract of land containing 104 acres, a part of "The Range," on which he resided until his death. On this estate his children were born, and from here they went forth to do good. Rev. John Miller was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Dover from 1749 to 1791. His children were John; Elizabeth, wife of Col. Samuel McLane; Mary, wife of Vincent Locockerman, Jr., who died in 1790, and in 1796 she married Major John Fatten; Joseph married Elizabeth Locockerman; Samuel (1769-1850) became famous as Professor of Theology in Princeton Seminary, where his son now is.

Samuel Everett purchased of William Walker two hundred and six acres of "The Range," and made extensive improvements on it. He recently sold a portion that borders on Shakspeare Pond to William H. Curtis, of Philadelphia. Mr. McDaniels owns on the opposite side of the pond. D. Mifflin Wilson owns east of the pond, and Joseph R. Whitaker bought in 1878 the farm on the east side of the State road. Mr. Whitaker's farm consists of two hundred and forty-five acres. He has made great improvements, and has brought the land into a high state of cultivation.

"Maidstone" tract, consisting of eight hundred and seventy-seven acres, was taken up April 19, 1681, by John Albertson and John Mumford, and was assigned to William Darvall, whose grandson, Thomas Willet, sold it to Thomas Nixon November 3, 1736. Nixon sold it to John Miller August 15, 1742. This John Miller evidently became a settler, and must not be mistaken for Rev. John Miller. After John Miller's death, about 1760, his property was divided among his sons — Henry, Killen, John, Conrad, Adam and Peter. John sold his portion September 18, 1762, to John Barrett. Adam sold one hundred and nine acres of land on the west side of Maidstone Branch to Abram Barber May 12, 1762. Peter Miller erected a little tub grist-mill, and Peter Miller, Jr., sold this tract to John Reed, of Dover, who erected a bark-mill and saw-mill thereon. After Mr. Reed's death the mill property was sold to Charles I. Du Pont, of Wilmington, and hence the name, Du Pont's Mills, for the little railroad station near the site of these old mills. W. F. McKee has resided on a portion of these Reed lands for the last twenty years.

"Canterbury" tract, consisting of two hundred and thirty-six acres, in the forks of St. Jones, was surveyed to Thomas Lucas in 1738, and passed from him to Hugh Durborrow, and to his son Daniel, in 1753, who, February 24, 1768, sold, to Thomas Keeffe, who, in 1773 sold to John Barber. This John Barber was a son of Abram Barber, who in 1729 purchased all that land called "Earls town," being a part of "Lisburne," lying on the north side of Dover River, in the bend of the creek, containing two hundred acres. He had two wives, and John Barber was the eldest of the first wife's children. John followed the bay trade a number of years, but finally married Peter Miller's daughter, and purchased the Keith tract before mentioned. He had nine children, of whom Abram, Joseph and John owned the homestead. The latter married Catharine Cornelius and had one son, James, who grew to manhood, and several daughters. James, after a business life at Dover Landing and Little Creek for forty-nine years, has returned to the homestead a bachelor of eighty years, the last of his race.

In 1763 Thomas Stratton deeded to John Miller one hundred and fifty-three acres of land near Hugh Durborrow's, which was part of a tract called "Lucas' Adventure." This land afterwards became the property of Alexander McCoy. Abram Moore moved into East Dover about 1810, and his son Joseph bought the Alexander McCoy place, then owned by John McCoy, whose daughter Joseph Moore married. Another son, Abram Moore, bought the Edward Ford place. McCoy owned upwards of three hundred acres, and made the first improvements in the neighborhood. Alexander McCoy was a carpenter, and helped build the State-House at Dover.

Jacob Bench owned three hundred acres adjoining Joseph Moore, which he purchased of Andrew Naudain, of Leipsic. It is now owned by Noble T. Jer- man. The old farm below Central Church is now owned by Charles Brown's heirs. Thomas Clayton owned it many years and rented it to a favorite negro, John Wiley. There were never many slaves held in this part of East Dover. The Gano lands, part of "The Range," were purchased by John and James Denney, who came from Talbot County, Md., about 1829. They bought some five hundred acres of land and prosecuted farming with slaves. These tracts are now principally owned by John P. M. Denney and Joseph Moore, Jr., who married Denney's daughter. Thomas Denney, a son of John, owned a farm near Dover. Robert, another son, resides at Duck Creek Mill. Charles Denney married J. L. Heverin's daughter, and resides at Little Creek. Benjamin Simpson, succeeded by his son John, owned the farm adjoining, now owned by James Emerson.

"Shoemaker Hall" tract was taken up by Isaac Webb, and lies north of Isaac's Branch, a creek that was named for him. It was owned in 1766 by Thomas Nixon. A portion of it came to John Vining, who sold to John Pennell, who built a "tumbling dam," mill-pond and saw-mill on Isaac Webb's Branch, which was in operation in 1772. At this time Cesar Rodney owned "North Smyrna," a tract of six hundred acres adjoining "Shoemaker's Hall," from Isaac's Branch to Walker's Branch or Puncoon Run. Col. John Vining owned it in 1765. "Mill Square" was a tract of two hundred and sixty acres lying west of Smyrna, now owned in part by Judge George P. Fisher.

"Long Reach," a tract of one thousand one hundred acres, was warranted February 21, 1681-82, by Thomas, Henry and Robert J. Bedwell and Adam Fisher. It lies on the north side of Isaac's Branch. About one hundred acres was sold to John Robinson, and July 29, 1774, it was surveyed to Andrew Butler. Part of it also came to William Allebnd. Adjoining "Long Reach," on the north, was a tract of one thousand acres named "Greenwich," warranted February 22, 1681-82, to Norton Claypoole, who was then a resident of Lewes. It was mentioned in the laying out of the county-seat. It was bounded northwest by Maidstone Branch of St. Jones' Creek or the Beaver dams of Dover River. May 2, 1688, Claypoole bought the Indian right to the land of Saramashe, an Indian, for three match-costs. He died in 1689, and Nehe- miah Field, his administrator, on April 7, 1698, sold it to Francis Cook, administrator of the estate of his father, James Claypoole. In 1776 the tract was owned by Matthew Manlove, Nicholas Locockerman, Cesar Rodney and Dr. Charles Ridgely.

"Rochester," a tract of five hundred acres, lies between the forks formed by the Maidstone and St. Jones' Creeks. It was granted by warrant to William Allen, August 15, 1682. "Paplar Ridge," containing three hundred and eighty acres, was taken up in 1681-82 by Jane Bartlett, wife of John Love, on the upper waters of Maidstone Branch. The "Triangle," a tract in the same vicinity, containing three hundred acres, was granted to Charles Murray, December 21, 1680, and surveyed to John Burton, March 20, 1685. "Skypton" lies adjoining "Long Reach" and "Greenwich," and was taken up by Thomas Clifford, and in 1776 it was owned by Dr. Charles Ridgely. The "Virgin's Choice," adjoining "Greenwich," was taken up April 21, 1681, by Jane Bartlett, and in 1776 it was owned by Charles Ridgely. It is also known as "Fox Hall."

OLD MILLS.—Charles Hillyard in 1787 built a grist-mill on the St. Jones' Creek, which was used many years, and was known as Sipple's Mill and Cogwill's Mill. In 1854 William M. Shakespear purchased the Dover Mills, as they were then called, and manufactured large quantities of oak lumber in the saw-mill. The present grist-mill was built by him about 1870, and is now owned by Alexander Law, and has been refitted. Three sets of rollers have been put in, giving the mill a capacity of fifty barrels of flour per day, besides a feed-store and meal-store.

William McIntire Shakespeare, Sr., born 1819, in White Clay Creek Hundred, died 1881, a resident of Dover, was the oldest son of Benjamin Shakespeare, a landed proprietor of the same hundred, and Mary McIntire, daughter of William McIntire, also of Delaware. From his father, Wm. M. Shakespeare, Sr., inherited purely English blood. His grandfather, Samuel Shakespeare, with his three brothers, Thomas, David and Stephen, emigrated from Coventry, Warwickshire, England, and settled in Pennsylvania in 1679. Against the rational inference from the fact that the armorial coats and mural monuments of other generations of his family to which these Shakespeare belonged occupy prominent positions upon the walls of churches of some of the parishes adjoining Coventry, and the fact that this Samuel Shakespeare was admitted free of the Company of Merchant Adventurers in 1705, in St. Michael (Episcopal) Church, Coventry, to a pew in the name of his uncle whose name was Stephen, it is conjectured that he may have been one of the mayors of the city and magistrates, the emigrant brothers, and the generations immediately preceding theirs, were undoubtedly Dissenters and active members of the Baptist Society of that city, and their religious affiliations in America were with the same sect. Arrived in Pennsylvania at about the beginning of the political agitation which culminated in the Declaration of Independence in 1776, and, therefore, naturally not yet fully in sympathy with them, these brothers remained loyal to the crown. Upon the evacuation of New York by the British in 1783, two of them sailed, with other Loyalists, for Nova Scotia, where they received large grants of land as indemnity in part for the losses which they had suffered during the Revolution. Soon after the declaration of peace Samuel Shakespeare came to Delaware, and settled in White Clay Creek Hundred, where he raised a numerous family, of which his son Benjamin was the youngest.

His father, Alexander McIntire, and grandfather, Samuel McAn Tier, "Scotch-Irish" Protestant immigrants from the north of Ireland, landed, purchased and settled upon extensive tracts of land in White Clay Creek Hundred in 1742. A portion of this land, following the regular course of unplaced estates, descended to the above-mentioned Mary McIntire, William McIntire's mother, Jane, the daughter of Adam Barr, of White Clay Creek Hundred, was also a of a family of Presbyterian immigrants from the north of Ireland, long established in Cecil County, Md. Becoming a widow while her son was yet a child, she married one of the most active and substantial founders of Methodist in that part of Delaware, Isaac Hersey, of Mill Creek Hundred, and of this second marriage was born the well-known late Rev. Father John Hersey. William McIntire therefore grew up surrounded by the influences and associations of the early Methodists of Delaware; when he came to be a boy, he and his brothers were taught the rudiments of the English language by them, and not infrequently his guest, as he had been also in former years the guest of his step-father, he led in the movement to found Old Salem Meth-
White Clay Creek Hundred, by his wife, Sarah Hersey. The blood of the French Huguenots, of the German zealots, of the Scotch Covenanters and of the English Dissenters flowed in the veins of the subject of our sketch, and he therefore naturally inherited something of the tendencies which characterize the sturdy stock whence he sprung. After receiving a public-school education, finished by a term or two at the Newark Academy, he married (1843) Catharine, oldest daughter of Edward Haman, a successful farmer and land-owner of White Clay Creek Hundred, by his wife, Rebecca Smith.

A little before his marriage Mr. Shakespeare had purchased a property in Pancender Hundred, consisting of a farm, grist and saw-mills, and was already prosecuting a successful and increasing business. In 1854 the water-power of these mills being no longer equal to the constantly-growing demand on the part of his purchasers for larger production, he sold this property and purchased the Dover Mills and removed to the town, where he spent the rest of his life, prosecuting his affairs with such energy and success that he soon became one of the largest and widest-known ship-timber manufacturers of the Atlantic seaboard. Besides other large customers, he constantly supplied the naval-yards of the Atlantic coast, and during the War of the Rebellion his annual output amounted to several millions of feet of the heaviest ship-timber. The profits of his business were usually invested in farms in the near vicinity of Dover; and these he took great pride in bringing up to a high standard of productiveness and attractiveness. He also now became one of the largest peach-growers of the county.

Great as they were, the activity in business and the numerous claims upon the time of Mr. Shakespeare did not prevent him from taking a prominent part in matters of religion, charity and public interests.

Before removing from New Castle County in 1854, he had united in active membership with the Old Salem Methodist Church, which his maternal grandfather had founded, and to which his parents belonged. Immediately after this removal his membership was transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church in Dover, in whose official boards he, in turn, filled the position of steward and trustee, and for many years before his death he continuously presided over the latter board. Among other important positions of trust and confidence he was called upon to fill was that of trustee of Dickinson College, at Carlisle, Pa., and of the Wilmington Conference Academy, at Dover.

It was his habit to give with a free hand to all public charities worthy of support, and his private benefactions, of which few but the recipients ever knew, were numerous, for a more tender-hearted, sympathetic man, or one who more keenly felt and responded to the promptings of human kindness, never lived.

The latter trait in Mr. Shakespeare's character, together with others equally prominent, namely, his sterling integrity, judicious fair-mindedness, the courage of strong convictions, caused him to be widely esteemed and respected, and not infrequently to be named for important public trusts. Although highly appreciative of such tokens of the regard of his fellow-citizens, he never would consent to allow his name to go before the people for their suffrages until he accepted the nomination to represent his county in the State Senate from 1873 to 1877.

His political sentiments were those of an uncompromising Jeffersonian Democrat; yet, although his convictions were strong, neither his opinions nor his course concerning matters of public policy were those of an unreasoning partizan.

He was elected, and on the organization of that body received at the last session of his term nearly a majority of the votes cast for president of the Senate. During both sessions he was chairman of the most important of the standing committees, viz., that on corporations, and after the adjournment of his last session he filled the responsible position of president of the commission appointed by the Legislature to reconstruct and furnish throughout the Capitol building. In these positions, as in others, he was conspicuous for the zeal and ability with which he watched over the interests of his constituents and of the public at large.

The paralysis of maritime interests after the war and the failure of many of the ship-builders who were the customers and heavy debtors of Mr. Shakespeare, together with the shrinkage in values of real estate, in which he was greatly interested about the same period, caused his financial failure. This misfortune did not, however, break his spirit or paralyze his energy or indomitable courage. He started again in a brave struggle to retrieve his lost fortune. But the physical frame which had stood the wear and tear of near three-score years of restless energetic life... was unequal to the strain and broke down under the heavy weight put upon it. In the death of William McIntire Shakespeare, Sr., May 1, 1881, it was felt and expressed that the Commonwealth had lost one of her most esteemed and valued citizens.

Mr. Shakespeare left, as his survivors, his widow and six sons, in the order of their birth as follows:

1. Dr. Edward Oran Shakespeare, a physician of Philadelphia, born in Pencader Hundred 1846, prepared for college at the Dover Classical Institute, entered the medical class at Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pa., in 1864, graduated A. B. 1867 and received the degree of A. M. 1870. During his last year at college he commenced the study of medicine, and later in the same year entered the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, from which celebrated medical school he received his diploma of Doctor of Medicine 1869. He at once began the successful practice of his profession at Dover. During the season of 1873 he was secretary of the Senate of Delaware. The next year he removed to Philadelphia and immediately became connected with the Eye Department of the University of Pennsylvania, and gradually drifted into the exclusive practice of Ophthalmic Surgery as a specialty. First publication was the announcement and description of a new and ingenious instrument for the accurate measurement during life of the interior and exterior radius of the eye. As an inquiry and congratulation concerning its being received from distinguished eye surgeons in London and Paris as well as from distant parts of his own country, and won for him the honor of mention in the late Professor Gross's history of the 20th Century of American Medical History, "having made the last notable contribution of the century." The early stimulation of his professional services exclusively to the specialized Ophthalmic service caused Dr. Shakespeare to spend much time for other work. He chose as a pastime and recreation the study of pathology and medical microscopy. The publication of the results of his studies in this line in 1877 secured for him the Warren Triennial Prize of four hundred dollars in a competition open to the world, the subject of his researches having been "The Nature of Reparatory Inflammation in Arteries." Among the most important of his labors in this line has been the translation and annotation of a large French work on Pathological Histology, which became the textbook of many of the medical colleges of America. His appointments in this department of science had become such that in 1865 many of the prominent physicians of the country so strongly recommended his selection by the Government to investigate the plague then ravaging Spain that in the autumn of that year he was commissioned by the President to visit Europe and India for the purpose of studying and reporting upon the causes, mode of spread and means of prevention of Asiatic cholera. This investigation occupied one year and the discharge of his duties led him to England, Germany, France, Spain, Morocco, Italy, Egypt, Arabia and Hindustan. His official report, comprising some eight hundred octavo pages, is now going through the government press at Washington. Although Dr. Shakespeare has continued to practice his specialty with profit and success, it is in the field of original research into the cause and cure of disease that he has achieved his most important work. Since his return home he has experimented on hydrophobia and tetanus (lockjaw), and has communicated the results in a paper read before the International Medical Congress of 1878, which is of the utmost importance to mechanics. His researches in America, in addition to appearing in the Parliamentary journals between London and Calcutta.

2. Benjamin Franklin Shakespeare, born in Pencader Hundred 1836, prepared for college at Dover Classical Institute, entered the elective or scientific course at Dickinson College 1864, but went into business before taking a degree. He is now engaged in the manufacture and sale of petroleum illuminating oil at Chester, Pa. He married, 1870, Emma Laws, daughter of James L. and Frisselle (Styffe) Hervert, of Dover, and has four children, viz.: 1. Catharine Hervert; 2. Frank Hervert; 3. William McIntire; 4. Anna Hervert.

3. James Haman Shakespeare, an attorney-at-law, of Philadelphia, born 1856, prepared for college at the Dover Classical Institute, entered Dickinson College 1875, took the degree of B. A. in 1879, and A. M. 1872, entered as a student at law in the office of James H. Hervert, of Philadelphia, was admitted to the bar in that city in 1875, and has been engaged in the active and successful practice of his profession, first as the assistant, afterwards as the partner, of his former preceptor. As a staunch Democrat he actively engaged in the political contest for the Presidency between Horace Greeley and General Grant, and made many effective speeches, both in Pennsylvania and Delaware; but since that time has taken no active part in politics. His constant work has been such that no member of the Philadelphia bar of his age has had more extensive in the knowledge of legal and general reading, and his general bearing and public address have gained him the regard and respect of his associates of the bench and the bar. In 1881 he married Annie Frisselle, daughter of James L. and Frisselle (Styffe) Hervert, of Dover. His wife died in 1885, wout having had issue.

4. William McIntire Shakespeare, Jr., born 1852, educated at the Dover Classical Institute, married, 1874, Illias Walker, daughter of James L. and Frisselle (Styffe) Hervert, of Dover. He resides at Dover, having no living children.

5. George Oscar Shakespeare, born 1856, prepared for college at the Dover Classical Institute, entered Dickinson College, but remained there only two years; he returned home, and entered as a student of law in the office of Hon. Joseph F. Comegay. He abandoned the study of law for more active pursuits, and is now engaged in the business of fire, life and accident insurance in Philadelphia.

7. Victor Arden Shakespeare was born 1885 and died 1889.

A saw-mill was built on Tumbling Dam on Isaac's Branch as early as 1773 by John Pennell, and subsequently a grist-mill was erected at this point. John Tucker remembers that Henry Mollleston had a grist-mill here in 1805, shingled with cedar shingles, as it is now, with two or three run of stone. Henry Mollleston was one of the signers of the Constitution of Delaware, sheriff in 1787, and quite an extensive land-owner. He was a tall, fine-looking man, and was elected Governor, but died before inauguration, in 1819. He was a descendant of Alexander Mollleston, who was one of the magistrates of the Shoreskill (now Sussex County) in 1673. Nathaniel Coombe, Mollleston's brother-in-law, administered the estate and rented the mill to Jonathan Elliott, who added a carding-machine. Sipple & Pennewill of Dover, purchased the mills, and sold them to David D. Lewis, who operated them many years. In 1859 Henry Moore, of Montgomery County, Pa., purchased the property, and immediately began to make improvements. He introduced the new process into the grist-mill, and subsequently put in rollers and steam-power. The mill now has a capacity of fifty barrels of flour per day. The saw-mill and carding-machine are no longer in operation.

There was a saw-mill many years ago on Puncheon Run, owned by Judge Richard Cooper. It was abandoned about 1820. Judge Cooper lived on that part of "Brothers' portion" purchased in 1699 by Richard Wilson from Wm. Southee. The Cooper mansion is an old brick building, now occupied by J. C. Tumbleston. Richard Cooper, the father of the judge, came from England and settled in Maryland. His children were Hon. Richard Cooper, before mentioned; Dr. Ezekiel Cooper, who lived in Camden; and Dr. Ignatius T. Cooper, whose children are Richard G., a cashier at New Castle; Dr. Ezekiel W., of Camden; Dr. William H., State Senator, of Kenton; Ignatius T., lawyer and planter in Alabama; Alexander B., lawyer at Wilmington. Rev. Ezekiel Cooper, a brother of Judge Cooper, was a celebrated Methodist preacher.

The Howell Mill is next above the Mt. Vernon Mill on Isaac's Branch, and has been owned by the Howells many years. Thomas Howell was a deaf-and-dumb man, and was succeeded in the ownership of the mill by his son Hanson, who has put in steam and the full roller process. The Camden Mill was next above, and was owned by Judge Wm. Warner, who had a grist-mill there contemporaneously with the Mt. Vernon Mill about 1800. Dr. Isaac Jump owned this mill subsequently, and it is now owned by William Lindale, who has improved the property.

The Allaband Mill was above Camden, and was fed by the stream in its upper course, where it receives the small streams and ditches from what was once known as the forest, but which has long since disappeared. December 1, 1785, Richard Mason sold part of "Long Reach" tract, lying on the north side of Isaac's Branch, to William Allaband. Wharton's mill-pond was there then. April 2, 1767, Hillary Herbert sold three hundred and seven acres more of "Long Reach" to William Allaband. A grist-mill, fulling-mill and distillery appear to have been operated by Mr. Allaband about 1800, and the grist-mill for many years thereafter. This mill property desceded to Martin Allaband, who in 1868 sold it to Henry Todd, who operated it until 1880, when a great flood swept the mill and dam away, since when it has not been re-built.

The following were the persons assessed in 1785 in St. Jones' Hundred and that part of East Dover Hundred lying east of St. Jones' River. All west of the river were assessed in Murderkill Hundred. The names marked with a star (*) are assessed from ten pounds upwards, the Hon. John Dickinson being the highest, and rated at two hundred and seventy-five pounds, out of a total of fifteen hundred and twenty-one pounds:

William S. Heverin has a store at Little Creek Landing, which was successfully conducted by James L. Heverin for a number of years, and is elsewhere noticed. William started a store on Morgan's Corners, subsequently, afterwards owned by James Barcus, on property owned by Abram Moore. Charles Wharton had a store where Charles Pardee now resides, and became wealthy through merchandising at that point.
He commenced carrying eggs in a basket, and retired worth $80,000. He had a store when it was customary with keep whiskey along with groceries, and of-times the former drew more customers than the latter.
William G. Postles married one of Wharton's daughters, and now owns the old place. Another daughter is Mrs. Evans, of Dover. Joshua, a brother of Charles Wharton, resides on the Dover Road. Samuel Wharton resides in Dover, and Elijah resides in Philadelphia.
William Hutchinson was engaged in storekeeping for ten years succeeding the war, and now his son-in-law, Jacob S. Cowgill, has charge of the business.

CAPITAL GRANGE No. 18, PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY, was organized in 1875 with H. D. Learned, Master; W. F. McKee, Overseer; Edward Young, Lecturer; John H. Berry, Steward; Henry Dager, Assistant Steward; Edward Hamin, Chaplain; Wm.
Dyer, Treasurer; Thomas Wilson, Secretary.

SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.—Dover is the central point for schools and churches in this hundred, and the history of the churches and schools of that town is to a certain extent, a part of the history of East Dover Hundred. The first schools were pay-schools, and not until the public-school system was adopted did education become thoroughly organized. In 1829 St. Jones' Neck District, No. 14, had eighty children from five to twenty-one years of age, but no school-house.
District No. 15 contained Jones' school-house, but no school in operation, and eighty children of school age.
No. 16, or Forest of Dover, was estimated to have seventy children, with no school in operation. No.
17, Forest of Dover, northwest of Dover, had eighty children of school age, with no school in operation.
District No. 18, which included the town of Dover, had two schools in operation, with twenty-five and thirty pupils respectively, out of one hundred and ten pupils of school age. District No. 19, partly in Dover and partly in Murderkill, had a school-house known as Irons', now Kersey's school-house, with twelve pupils attending in a district estimated to contain ninety-six pupils of school age. There are now ten school districts in the hundred exclusive of Dover. St. Jones' Neck school was started about 1836. Bolivar J. Howe taught here many years, and was so successful that his patrons doubled his salary without any solicitation on his part. Each district elects a clerk and two commissioners to manage the school. There are two schools for colored children in the hundred. Robert Massey taught the first school in the vicinity of Du Pont's mills about 1840. There was a log school-house near Moortown about 1830, and James Hook was the first teacher. Subsequently the school-house was removed to its present location, and is known as District No. 10. There is a colored school and church near Du Pont Station.

The Methodist Church has a house of worship near Cowgill's called the St. Jones' Neck M. E. Church. It was dedicated by Rev. Enoch Stubbins, of Milford, January 29, 1871. There has been a class and preaching point here for many years. There was a great revival under Enos B. Williams' preaching about fifty years ago, and some seventy members joined the church. Prominent members here have been Charles Wharton, George Knight, Martin Knight and Robert Wilson. James L. Heverin was the first Sunday-school superintendent about 1845. Rev. Silas W. Murray, of Smyrna Circuit, organized a class at Little Union, Du Pont Mills, about 1850, with eleven members, having Robert Kearney as class-leader. They started in a slab shanty and afterwards built a log house, and established a Sunday-school. In 1883 the present chapel was built, and there is a membership of sixty-two persons. Central Methodist Episcopal Church was started at Moore's Cross-Roads in 1860, by Joseph Moore, who began with a class-meeting in the school-house. The class began to work in earnest, assisted by some local preachers, and as a result received additions until it numbered sixty members. A Sunday-school was organized about the same time, with Joseph Moore as superintendent. He continued in that capacity for thirteen years and was class-leader many years. Central Church was built largely through the influence of Joseph Moore, who was the first leader. The house was dedicated November 18, 1863, by the Rev. Charles Cook, and the society belongs to Smyrna Circuit.

CHAPTER LVII.
WEST DOVER HUNDRED.

West Dover Hundred was erected February 7, 1877, and is bounded on the north by Gravelly Run, a branch of the Choptank River, and the head-waters of the northern branch of St. Jones' Creek, and Ken-wife of Moses Boon. By leases and releases under date of November 12, 1767, William Culbreth and his wife obtained part of the lands which are now in part owned by the family. Culbreth's marsh adjoining was drained in 1800. A tract of two hundred and twenty-four acres, called "Penelope's Advantage," was taken up February 14, 1745, by Penelope Freeman. In 1779 the wife of Martin Irons transferred one-half acre to Rev. Wm. Thomas, which is now the site of Thomas' Chapel.

Martin Irons, whose body is buried in the Presbyterian Church-yard at Dover, was a descendant of Simon Irons, who located large tracts of land in Duck Creek, and Little Creek Hundreds, and lived on or near Simon's Creek or Dona before 1700.

The original tract of Martin Irons is owned by John Jarrell, who lives on the old homestead, Edward Hubbard, E. M. Booach, Thomas Rash, Emory Scotten, Margaret Nicholls, George T. Voshall and John D. Voshall, sons of Obadiah. The latter married Elizabeth Williams, who died in February, 1887. William D. Voshall was a justice of the peace and postmaster of Hazletville.

"Proctor's Purchase" was the name of a tract taken up by John Durborough on a warrant dated December 8, 1734, adjoining "Sipple's Adventure." By his request it was transferred to Thomas Proctor, who sold it to Henry Forman August 6, 1779. Heron Point, a tract within the "Purchase," on which Hartley is situated, was surveyed for Richard Mannering.

On June 23, 1748, a tract of land was taken up on the north side of the Furness Branch (now called Powell's Branch or Culbreth's Ditch), on Choptank River, by Peter Lowber, which passed to Michael Furbee, who sold it to William Price, to whom it was surveyed May 23, 1767. Hugh Durborough on August 19, 1737, took up "Springfield," containing one hundred and forty acres on the north side of Culbreth's Ditch. Morris Freeman and Owen Cain then owned land adjoining.

"Tappahanna" was a large tract of five or six hundred acres on Tappahanna Creek, from which it took its name. In 1763 Waitman Sipple was the owner of it and from him it passed to Henry Elbert, William Brown and George Syburn respectively.

The Tappahanna Ditch Company was incorporated in 1800 and the ditch was soon after opened.

"Burrowfield" a tract of two hundred and twenty-seven acres, which was taken up at a very early day, in 1790 was granted to John Day, who bought another large tract on the north side of Tappahanna, called the "Home Tract." Burrowfield and the Home Tract adjoined each other and are adjoining the Tappahanna tract.

Burrowfield and the Home Tract were left to Matthias Day (who in 1817 was the owner of both tracts). At his death it was left to C. H. B. Day, of Dover, and Rebecca Day (later Mrs. Thomas Clements), and now (1888) belongs to Dr. Thomas O. Clements, of Dover. The Home Tract passed to the three younger children and is now owned by James Hutchins and the heirs of John Cleaver. The old Day House, built in 1775, is standing on this place, being occupied by Mrs. John Cleaver.

A tract of land called Beaver Swamp, lying on a branch of Choptank River called Tanner's Branch or Culbreth's Swamp Branch, was warranted in 1747 by Waitman Sipple and re-surveyed to Henry Wells in 1757, who also in that year took up two other tracts adjoining Tanner's Branch. These lands were a short distance southwest of Hazletville. On February 13, 1755, Wells sold the lands, then containing five hundred and fifty one acres, to Charles Lyons, Thomas Bond and William Morton, and on March 9, 1779, Lyon and Bond sold to Joseph Burchenal. The latter came from Maryland where his father, Jeremiah Burchenal, had lived for many years. The land of Joseph Burchenal remained in the family many years, but about 1817 it passed to John Slay, who still owns part of it.

A tract of land called the "Hour Glass," from its peculiar shape, years ago came into the possession of the Virdins, who still own it.

Of the tracts in the eastern part of the hundred, Canterbury and Hopewell join Proctor's Purchase, and extend a considerable distance in East Dover Hundred. The former was taken by Benjamin Shurmer, who was prominent in the county from 1700 to his death in 1736. It contained five hundred acres and passed to his children. The greater part of the "Long Reach" tract, containing one thousand acres, situated on Isaac's Branch, is in East Dover, and embraces the old Allisband property.

CHURCHES.—Thomas' Chapel.—The first church or chapel built by the people of West Dover, who later became Methodists, is known as Thomas' Chapel. Penelope Freeman (later the wife of Owen Irons) donated the land for the use of the people from the tract "Penelope's Adventure," to the Rev. William Thomas, who, on December 24th, 1779, conveyed it to Stephen Black, Thomas Seward, Daniel Wheeler, Nathan Harrington, Richard Shaw, Thomas Scotten, Nathan Bailey, Edward Callahan and Stephen Black, Jr. The first chapel was built of logs, and was known as the "Log Chapel."

It had been erected upon the half-acre of land before the title was conveyed, as in the deed mention is made of the half-acre, "together with a preaching-house or chapel erected thereon." The logs were dove-tailed together, and tradition holds that it "had not a nail in it."

In this old chapel, Francis Asbury (later Bishop), Freeborn Garretson and others preached many times. It is related in an old newspaper that on the 18th of May, 1781, after Asbury had preached in the old chapel, "Harry, a negro, preached upon the 'Barren Fig-Tree.'" Asbury says: "The circumstance was entirely new, and the white people looked on with attention." This was probably the first instance a negro had preached to whites.
KENT COUNTY.

It is held in the neighborhood, among the old citizens, that the pulpit was a large stump sawed square upon the top, and set up evenly upon its roots. The Log Chapel was removed about 1798, and a frame building erected in its place. The latter was dedicated by the Rev. Freeborn Garrettson, then traveling through this part of the country. The present chapel was built of brick, in 1825, and rebuilt in 1877. 1

The dedication sermon of the first brick church was preached by the Rev. Solomon Higgins. It is situated on the Dover road, about a half-mile west of Chapeltown (Westville). Among those who preached in this church previous to 1850 are James Bateman, Elphiea Reid, Joseph Mason, Joshua Humphries, Samuel S. Hare, Ignatius T. Cooper, William L. Gray, Enoch R. Williams, Goldsmith D. Connell and Charles S. Thompson. It has now about sixty members, and is in Marydel Circuit.

The burial-ground attached to the chapel covers three-fourths of an acre of ground. It was once open to both bond and free, and, were it not for a few recently-erected head-stones, would be almost unrecognizable.

Union M. E. Church.—There are no early records which can lead to an authentic history of this church, nor does the recollection of its members serve to throw any light on it. The first house of worship erected by its members was a frame building, which was built in 1859 by William Slay, who moved it to its present position on his farm, where it is now used as a barn. The earliest board of trustees of which there is any account was composed of seven members, viz.: George Jones, William Slay, William Lewis, John Aarons, John Seward, Nathan Jones, Powell Aarons. The present building is also frame, having been dedicated December 25, 1859, by Rev. John B. Mann. The membership numbers about fifty. The society originally belonged to the Dover Circuit, but it is now embraced in Wyoming. In the burial plot attached to the chapel is the grave of "John Seward, the first placed in this yard, and who died February 23rd, 1847."

McElwee's Chapel (Methodist), now called Asbury Chapel, was built before 1829. On the 10th of October in that year Joseph Rash sold one hundred and twenty square perches to Myers Carson, Joseph Clark, John Jones, John Townsend and Robert Hargadin, as trustees of McElwee's Chapel. It is on the Smyrna Circuit and is served by the ministers of the charge. Its name McElwee was derived from a minister of that name, who was on the circuit at the time it was built.

Bethesda Church (Methodist Protestant) was built in 1864 and rebuilt in 1883. Before the erection of the chapel the members met and worshiped in the Tappahannock Marsh School-house. The ground was given by the congregation by Mrs. Annie J. Cox, daughter of Judge Joseph J. Rowland. William Virdin, J. D. Voshell, P. D. Marvel and William Slaughter were the first trustees. Dr. Daniel Ewell preached the dedication sermon. It has now a membership of seventy.

Wesley Chapel (Parker's) was founded in 1880. This is one of the two churches supported by the colored people of this hundred, the other being the Lockwood. Joshua Parker contributed the land, with the provision that they use it also for school purposes. This was done, and the school is now taught by colored teachers.

Hawkins M. E. Church, Hartley, was founded in 1840. It is the outgrowth of a series of meetings held at the house of Thomas Landman. A rapid increase of the members necessitated more commodious quarters than were found in Jones' School-house, where they held services every Wednesday. In 1840 they built and occupied a new chapel, in which services were held until September 18, 1886, when it was sold to Frederick Mask, who now has a blacksmith and wheelwright shop in it. The present chapel stands about fifty yards east of the old one. The ground for the former was donated by Walter Clark. The society belongs to the Marydel Circuit, and has a membership numbering sixty.

Southern M. E. Church, Marydel, is embraced in Beaver Dam Circuit. The congregation at the organization, in 1868, worshipped in the Marydel School-house, with twenty-five members. The members separated and the church soon declined. The trustees at its organization were Joshua Downs, W. H. Whitely, David R. Heath and W. H. Colcott. Since its dissolution the surviving members have identified themselves with the Old-Side Church of Maryland.

Hazlettville is a promising hamlet, situated about nine miles west of Dover. It has had three names, respectively—Sewardville, Georgetown and the present, which was conferred by the Legislature in 1854 in honor of Governor Hazlett, who died in 1823. Nothing authentic concerning its first settlement can be learned, except that its site is part of a tract once owned by John Kersey. His son, who was sheriff in 1851 and 1852, is still a resident of the place. The first store was opened in 1806 by James Bedwell, being followed two years later by another, kept by John Lord, both of which were abandoned in a short time. Others were started in succession and failed in a like manner.

Dr. Thomas Hubbard in 1850 built a house and store, in which was also kept his office. He was a practicing physician in this place for thirty years, moving away in 1880, since which time William George has continued the store. Dr. John M. Towns shortly after the war opened the store in which is located the post-office. He is the present postmaster, having been appointed in 1872.

Dr. Downs is the only physician in this locality. During the war he served as surgeon in the army, and was stationed a short time at Port Deposit, Maryland.

MANUFACTURES.—In 1843, the plant of an iron foundry was erected by Thomas Lockwood and John Slay, but ceased operation a year later. Its estimated capacity was ten plowshares per week. The means of heat was furnished by a large blast-furnace, into which the air was forced by large bellows, the motive-power being supplied with the aid of horses. The thick woodland thereabouts was utilized for fuel.

A packing-house was inclosed and operated in 1835 by Isaac Lockwood, who was succeeded by Henry Scott and Joseph Green.

Kersey's wagon-works were established in 1848 by John S. Kersey, who, upon being elected sheriff in 1850, sold them to his brother Jonathan. The latter operated the works until his death in 1886, when they passed to his nephew, Powell Green. This is the largest works of its kind outside of Wilmington.

There is also a saw-mill at Hazletville which was erected in 1884 by William George. It has a manufacturing capacity of two thousand feet of lumber a day.

MARYDEL (HALLTOWN) is situated in the southwest part of the hundred. It is wholly within the jurisdiction of Queen Anne County, Md., there being but six dwellings, a school-house and a fruit and vegetable canning establishment on the Delaware side. The first settler on this site was a colored man named Williams, who built a log-house and worked out by the day. William Hall, a shoemaker, moved here about 1850, and, buying between two and three hundred acres of ground, improved it for farming purposes. After the completion of the railroad, in 1865, through the town, he disposed of his property. At that time William Clarke built a hotel, which was burnt down five years later.

The "Canning House," for the packing of fruits and vegetables, was built in 1872 by a stock company, of which Wesley Temple was president. It was operated but one season, after which it remained idle until 1879, when it was rented to William Knowles, who operated it one year. In 1881 it was occupied by F. Slemmer, who is the present proprietor.

The capacity of the establishment is fifteen thousand cans of goods per day.

Wesville and Pierson's Cross-Roads are hamlets in the hundred.

HARTLEY (ARTHURVILLE or BUTTERFAT) is located three miles north of Marydel on the Delaware & Chesapeake Railroad. The land was originally part of "Proctor's Purchase," taken up by John Durborrow December 3, 1734, and subsequently transferred by his representative to Thomas Proctor. The earliest habitation directly on the site, of which we have any knowledge, was a log-house, built by James Foraker. William Arthurs, moving here from Murderkill, took up a tract of land and erected a house, which is now in use as a stable, owned by Walter Clark. William Mallalie then built a second frame-house, in which he started a store, which is now (1888) kept by Charles Parcell. In 1882 there were but two houses in the village. Since the establishment of the railroad station, in that year, Hartley has expanded to its present proportions.

The Hartley Hotel was built in 1883. It will accommodate twenty-five guests.

The post-office was established in the same year, when Richard Grant was appointed postmaster, he being succeeded by the present incumbent, S. C. Jones. It has now a population of about one hundred and five persons.

SLAUGHTER'S STATION was established in 1866. In the fall of 1873 it was burnt down, but was replaced with the present building the same year. Since the establishment of the passenger station at Hartley it has been used exclusively for freight. The store at this place was built by William Slaughter in 1866, and is at present kept by R. A. Davis. "Dodd's Saw-mill," having a capacity of two thousand feet of lumber per day, is located to the right of the station. It originally stood on the farm of William Slaughter, by whom it was built in 1860. After its sale to the present proprietor, William A. Dodd, the latter moved it to its present site.

Post-Offices and Postmasters.—Hazletville post-office was established in 1836. The postmasters have been William Slay, Henry Pratt, William D. Voshall, Dr. J. M. Downs (fifteen years). Pierson's Cross-Roads post-office was established in 1861. The postmasters have been Jonathan Thomas, Joseph H. Thomas and John H. Lord. Slaughter's Station post-office was established in 1868, with William Slaughter, Joseph Poore, James Messick, H. C. Coffman and Robert A. Davis postmasters. Hartley post-office was established in 1883, with Richard Grant and S. C. Jones postmasters.

SCHOOLS.—William Dickey, who came from Ireland early in the eighteenth century, was undoubtedly the first teacher in this part of the State. There being no school-houses established, he taught as many as were in approachable distance of his house. His body was also the first placed in the burial-ground of Thomas' Chapel. In 1825 a log school-house was erected on the Kersey tract (embraced now in Hazletville) by Thomas Lockwood and John Stant. Sessions were held in the old log school-house until 1836, when, the districts being created, they were held in Pratt's school-house. Its next use was for lumber storage, being taken away shortly after to make room for other improvements. The names of a few teachers within the recollection of old citizens were Dr. Thomas Hubbard, John Slay, William Slay, John Lockwood and James Wolcott. The Day School was erected by Matthias Day in 1828, on the Burrowsfield tract. Shortly after the free districts were created it was moved about a quarter of a mile below its original site. Among the early teachers were Hon. Eli Saulsbury, ex-Governor Gove Saulsbury, William Rome, James Temple, John Whittaker, John Hopkins, Caleb Burchner, Dr. Cahill, John Powell, John Streets, Isaac Owens, Alexander Jackson and Martha Clarke. In 1830, under the established school system, the Tappahanna School (46) was opened. The list of teachers contains the names of Dennis Emery, P. K. Meredith, Louisa Slaughter, Lydia Sharpless, Emma Sharpless, Ellen Virdin, William Virdin, Alexander Virdin, Mary Voshall, William Johns, Thomas Johns, Powell Johns, Powell Melerson, John Hawkins, George Hawkins, Dr. T. O. Clements, Oliver Rowe, Richard Allee and James Griffith.

Rose Valley (79).—On April 14, 1859, the voters of this district met at the house of Dennis Connor and decided that “there being 36 scholars, the lawful number, in that vicinity, the establishment of a separate District is made necessary.”

In that year a school-house was erected and sessions were held there until 1880, when it was destroyed by fire. In the fall of that year the present house was built at a cost of seven hundred and ninety-five dollars. James R. Powell, the present clerk, has held the office continuously since 1859. The following is a complete list of teachers: Garrett Louis, Miss H. A. Casson, F. M. Hawkins, Martha F. Powell, Martha Janvier, George B. Reynolds, Babcock F. Sharp, Susan Jump (five years), M. A. Clarke, William T. Moore, J. H. Babbitt, A. M. Cabbage, E. Cooper, W. H. Willis, A. M. Gooden, T. K. Jones, Flora A. Taylor, Ella Putnam, E. B. Slaughter, William P. Taylor, Flora B. Cahoon, William L. Gooding and Maggie Kersey. The highest number of pupils at one session was forty.

Hawkins’ School (96).—This district is composed of parts taken from 15, 16, and 46, and was surveyed by John Slay and John M. Forsaker, who were appointed by the Levy Court in 1864. That year a school-house was erected, fifty pupils attending the sessions. This was used until 1886, when, by an act of the Legislature, an appropriation of one thousand dollars was granted for a new one. The latter was finished in July, 1887, and the sessions were held there in the following term.

CHAPTER LVIII.

DUCK CREEK HUNDRED.

The term “Hundred of Duck Creek” is found on record in 1855, and is given as embracing the land lying between Duck Creek and its south-west branch, called Little Duck Creek, and extending westward to the Maryland line; but the region was not finally settled until many years later. This division left Bombay Hook Island in New Castle County. Old Duck Creek was a very crooked stream, and made a sharp turn about a mile from the bay, and then ran thirteen miles to the point where it joined Dona Riv-
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

Labaudiere, and resided there four years after the warrant was granted. He purchased the Indian right, and the transaction is thus recorded:

"Be it known unto all men by these presents that I, Mechacket, chief sachem of Cohomsink, an old Indian owner and Proprietor of all that tract of land commonly called by the Christians Bombie Hook, and by the Indians Nowsinte, for and in consideration of one gun, four handfuls of powder, three mota coats, one anchor of liquor and one bottle before the signing. . . .

"The tract remained in the possession of the family many years."

A great part of the island was marsh land and has been reclaimed. There are now about eleven thousand acres of marsh and good land in the island. The present owners are William Reid, Jane Smith, William D. Hayes, Lucius P. Campbell and Lydia A. W. Pyle. From the earliest times the island was a pleasure resort. Parties would organize from the surrounding country and either tent out or form excursions for the day. The first hotel was built in 1848 by John R. Brick, who managed it until 1859, when it was sold to Eli Logan, who sold the property to William Reid. This hotel still stands but has not been used for ten years.

In 1868 James W. Spruance, of Smyrna, built the present hotel near Pearson's Cove. He also built a number of tents for the accommodation of families, a dance hall and a pier. In 1870 the steamer "Pilot Boy" made regular trips between the Hook and Philadelphia, the "Arielle" and "Thomas Clyde" succeeding. At present the hotel is conducted by Lucius P. Campbell and is the most popular resort on the bay. In 1870 Enoch Spruance erected a hotel and pier two miles below, and gave the place the name of Freeland. This property was destroyed by fire in 1876 and never rebuilt.

The Bombay Hook Light House, at Bombay Hook Landing, was erected in 1829 and its keeper was Duncan Stuart, an old soldier of the revolution, who died in 1859. During the war of 1812, British soldiers frequently landed on the island and robbed the farmers. In 1813 a company was organized at Smyrna to defend the island with Denney Stevenson as captain.

Francis Whitwell in 1866 was elected one of the justices of New Castle County, then embracing the territory of Kent County. He purchased several tracts of land on each side of Little Duck Creek near its mouth. The land on the north side is now known as White Hall Neck, Dutch Neck and Raymond's Neck. The tract called White Hall Neck was the first farm on the north side of Little Duck Creek up from the mouth and contained four hundred acres. It was warranted in 1675. "Whitwell's Chance," lying on Little Duck Creek adjoining White Hall on the west, was warranted August 14, 1675, and contained one thousand acres. These tracts passed to William Frampton, whose daughter Elizabeth sold five hundred acres to Joseph Crowen and five hundred acres to Griffith Jones, 10th of June, 1686. William Frampton and Francis Whitwell died in 1686 and their large properties passed to other families. White Hall Neck still bears the name given by Francis Whitwell to the place that probably was his home, for in the early days it was very desirable to be near a navigable stream.

Francis Whitwell and John Richardson (who took up large tracts in the western section of Duck Creek) on December 27, 1680, petitioned the court of St. Jones for two thousand acres of land "in some convenient place so that they could clear for the building of a mill, the foresaid promising to perform as soon as the workmen and necessaries could be provided." Land was granted and surveyed on the north side of Duck Creek in Kent County west of the King's Road in the western part of the hundred. "White Hall" came into the possession of Andrew Hamilton, who sold it to Samuel Chew, January 29, 1742. Chew died in 1744 and in the settlement of the estate in 1748 it passed to Elizabeth, his daughter, the wife of Edward Tilghman. Parts of this land are now owned by Mrs. Mary Hoffer, Samuel Harrington, Alexander G. Cummins, J. Frank Denney, James Starling and Dr. Henry Stout. On the property held by Dr. Henry Stout, Governor Jacob Stout lived in a house erected by Thomas McElroy in 1756. In one corner of the yard is an old tree used at one time as a whipping-post.

Adjoining White Hall on the north was a large tract of land called "Petty France," which in 1678 was warranted to Nicholas Bartlet, who also owned other large tracts. Jacob Allee July 7, 1741, took up a tract of land in Tadpole Neck, through which Taylor's Gut ran, containing one hundred and thirty-three acres and March 26, 1757, four hundred and fifteen acres adjoining the smaller tract. He also about 1743, by a survey, took up two hundred and forty acres in Little Creek Hundred.

"Westmoreland," a tract of two hundred acres and "Coventry," a tract of four hundred and twenty-five acres, west of the tracts mentioned, were in 1680 surveyed to John Hillyard. "The Mother Plantation" of two hundred acres was also taken up by him in 1675 and was adjoining "Petty France" and "White Hall."

Francis Whitwell purchased several other pieces of land besides those mentioned. A large tract of two thousand acres lying on the south side of the main branch of Duck Creek, warranted December 15, 1681, was assigned to William Frampton, April 22, 1686, and surveyed to his daughter Elizabeth, April 24, 1687, as the "Bear Garden." Hay Point Landing is on George Short's land west of Fleming's wharf, where the iron bridge now is. These lands were sold as the property of Isaac Short. A road built by Hon. Jacob Stout ran through Smyrna to Bombay Hook Light House. There is a brick hotel there which has been standing since 1812. This was all in the "Bear Garden," which is now owned by William C. Mitchell, Jerry Goldeborough, Joseph Bewley and others. "The Watering Point" has been a stopping place for vessels since 1760.

of Kent County, upon its organization, and a member of the Council in 1683-84, probably resided at first upon the property that he called "The Mother Plantation" adjoining "Petty France," and "White Hall." He also took up other tracts, one of which was "Hillery's Adventure," containing six hundred acres. It was surveyed to him November 26, 1677, and lay between Iron's Branch and Hillyard's Branch, west of the fast land of Bombay Hook about three miles. Hillyard sold to Simon Irons March 1, 1684; and February 12, 1705, the property was sold by Francis Irons to John Brinekle, and the greater part is now owned by John M. Voshell. A tract of five hundred acres called "Roberts Chance" situated on the south side of Duck Creek and west of the Jay land was surveyed to Robert Pamlstry November 6, 1679, by a grant from the Court of Sussex County, conditioned upon payment of one bushel of wheat for every hundred acres. This grant was confirmed by William Penn, January 26, 1684, and sixty acres are now owned by Daniel Pamlstry (a direct descendant of the original patentee); one hundred and fifty-four acres by Samuel Catta; one hundred and thirty-five acres by the heirs of Dr. William Cummins; ninety-five acres by John Hartman and fifty-six acres by the heirs of Robert Robinson; about the same time a tract called "Golden Grove" was granted to Robert Pamlstry. It next came into the possession of David Fury, who sold it to John Jay, November 16, 1778. John Jay also received several other grants of land between "Golden Grove" and Smyrna, which are now owned by Matthew Ford, William H. Ford and George W. Cummins. At the intersection of Green's Branch with Duck Creek, a short distance above Smyrna and on the southwest side of the branch, at the mouth, William Green had laid out for him a town named November 17, 1680, one thousand acres of land called "Gravesend," formerly laid out for William Shurmer, of which he sold one-half February 15, 1687, to Frances Barney. The remainder he retained, and it passed by gift March 6, 1723, to his three sons, George, John and Thomas. George inherited the old plantation and also purchased of Christopher Strouty "Belle's Endea vor," November 12, 1716. This tract lay in Little Creek Hundred on Little Duck Creek. The sons John and Thomas became possessed of large landed estates, and were leading men in the vicinity. James, the son of Thomas Green, inherited the land at the Cross Roads and sold it in small quantities to settlers who built up Smyrna. Thomas, also a son of Thomas and brother of James, owned the old landing property, which he sold August 13, 1772, to William Jordan. This old landing which was such an important point in days past, is nothing now but a few ancient houses and a store kept by Captain Alexander Scout. The population is now not over thirty persons. At one time it was a great grain centre. In 1812 grain was shipped in large quantities, and the British would chase boats up the creek. In 1857 a steamboat, the "Oscar Thompson," afterward the "Kent," ran between there and Philadelphia. About 1851 the wharves were covered with bark, wood, coal, lime, lumber, ship timber, etc. Grain was brought not only from the surrounding country but from Kent, Queen Anne's and Caroline Counties, Maryland. It was sold to Smyrna merchants, the largest buyer being John Cummins, and deposited in the granaries, of which there were seven at one time. As many as seven vessels a day loaded with grain at the wharves, sloops, schooners and packet boats were constantly plying up and down the creek carrying away the products of the surrounding country to New York, Philadelphia and Boston, and bringing back lime, stone, grain, coal and merchandise of every description. The price of grain for the surrounding country was regulated by the price here. The granaries still stand, but are rapidly going to ruin. Two ship-yards gave constant employment to a large number of working-men. Among the boats that ran to Philadelphia were the "Swan," "Star," "Wilson Small" and "H. S. Bright." The large boat owners were Robert Patterson, John Cummins and John Darrah. These boats were built by John Mustard. In 1854 Sutton & Cloud launched two vessels, the "Amanda" and "Cathy," for McCraken & Kennedy. From 1866 to 1874, nineteen boats were built by R. F. Hastings, with a tonnage of five thousand five hundred and forty-five tons, and valued at $314,100. The largest vessel ever built here was the "A. H. Howe," launched August 26, 1871. It was of six hundred tons, one hundred and twenty feet long, thirty-two and one-half feet beam, and eleven and one-half feet depth of hold. Rothwell's Landing, two miles below, is now the landing place for Smyrna. The bridge at the old landing was built in 1833, the Levy Court of New Castle County paying $250 and the court of Kent county $250. A part of Gravesend lying in the forks of Dutch Creek and Green's Branch, at the mouth of the latter, passed to Benjamin Shurmer, who in August 19, 1716, sold eight acres to William Down, who on March 23, 1767, conveyed to Thomas Woodward thirteen hundred and sixty-one square feet adjoining a burying ground belonging to the Quakers. This is recorded as being in the place laid out for a town called Salisbury. This town is now known as Duck Creek, so-called because it is near the head of Duck Creek, and was the first town in this vicinity. It was laid out by Benjamin Shurmer before 1718, as in that year Abraham Cuff, who was one of the first purchasers of lots in the then new town of Dover, is mentioned as being of the town of Salisbury, Kent County. Samuel Taylor sold a lot in Salisbury, February 19, 1776, which he had bought of Benjamin Shurmer. Shurmer sold it on August 10, 1732, to William Hammon, who on August 9, 1749, sold it to Ellison Wooten. Silas Spearman was one of the first to build a store in Salisbury. He was father of the Spearman who first planted peaches for the market in Kenton Hundred. The old Spearman store is still in existence, and is a brick building on the southwest corner of the roads. It is now occupied by W. Glanden, and is the only store there. In 1832 there were three stores in the town, kept by James Legg, John Anderson and Robert Bailey. A free negro kept a blacksmith-shop, and near by was a saw, and grist and bolting-mill, kept by Robert Holden. There are now two blacksmith-shops and sixteen dwelling-houses, with a population of eighty.

Between Smyrna and the Landing is an old place called Wapping, so named after a suburb of London. It is now chiefly occupied by negroes, but in the flourishing times of Smyrna Landing was a stopping place to water horses. A Dr. Lovegrove kept a drugstore there in 1830.

The Bristol Naval Store Company, through Benjamin Shurmer, took up twenty-five acres of land, which he, in 1720, sold to the Pennsylvania Land Company, which had obtained about five thousand acres of land in Milford Hundred. These lands were all kept under lease until July 5, 1762, and August, 1765, when they were sold at auction in Philadelphia along with one hundred and fifty acres of the manor of Freith, which had been bought of Shurmer. On August 29, 1765, Michael Osley bought four acres along Green's Branch, including the new mill house and mill property. He had purchased of Roger Pugh (Miller) ninety-five acres, Henry Troxson, October 27, 1770, three and three-quarter acres and of Samuel Morris eight acres. Denny's Mill is located on this property.

"Pearman's Choice" was granted by William Penn, March 26, 1684, to Henry Pearman. It was on the south side of the branch of Duck Creek, afterwards called Pearman's Branch, and contained six hundred acres. Two hundred acres of it was sold to Andrew Love, June 10, 1691. He died intestate and the land escheated. William Strickland petitioned for the tract November 16, 1743. He came in possession May 28, 1752, and shortly after sold to John Cook. It is now owned by Mrs. C. E. Peterson and the heirs of A. E. Mitchell. Another tract of two hundred acres Pearman conveyed in 1686 to William Edwards, from whom it passed to Philip Denny, who, on the 12th of August, 1741, by deed of gift, conveyed it to his sons, John and Christopher Denny, who divided it equally, May 8, 1765. A part of this tract is now owned by George W. Cummins, who married a granddaughter of Philip Denny. Another portion is owned by J. V. Hoffecker. Henry Pearman's daughter survived him and afterward sold to William Cahoon, who sold to John Jay. This land is also owned by George W. Cummins at present.

Belmont Hall is on the Pearman tract and is now the home of Mrs. C. E. Peterson. It was formerly owned by Governor Thomas Collins, who purchased it May 24, 1771, from John Moore. It descended, at his death, to his son, Dr. Wm. Collins, and was by him sold, January 3, 1827, to John Clark, who left it to his granddaughter, Mrs. Carrie E. Peterson, into whose possession it came in 1867. The house is one of the oldest in the county and was built in 1753.

When Governor Collins moved into it he improved it. The grounds are beautifully laid out, and it is probably the finest home in the county.

Thomas Collins was his high sheriff of Kent County in 1767, governor in 1787, '88, '89, four years a member of the council, and brigadier-general of the militia from 1776 to 1783, and Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas. He organized and maintained at his own expense a brigade during the Revolution, and died March 29, 1789. During the war a sentinel was posted on the observatory and was shot by a British scout. In the fire-place of the old house, Ebenezer Cloak's wife and the wife of Governor Collins moulded bullets for the American soldiers. Ebenezer Cloak was a great-grandfather of the present proprietor. In 1776 he fitted out a privateer, the boat was chased aground by a British Man-of-War, and Cloak captured and confined in an English prison, where he died. The story is current that during the life-time of Governor Collins the Delaware Legislature met at the hall. This is an error, for the reason that it was not until May 4, 1792, three years after the death of Governor Collins, that the Legislature met in Smyrna. It was on that date that, owing to a difficulty with the county authorities, the Legislature adjourned to meet at the house of Thomas Hale, who kept the hotel now known as the Smyrna House.

Thomas Collins, on April 1, 1767, took out a warrant for four hundred and seventy acres of land called "Gloster," where he then lived, on the south side of Dawson's Branch. The property was originally warranteed December 13, 1677, to George Morton. He also purchased "Elk Horns" and "Coventry" tracts adjoining, the latter having been originally granted to John Hillyard, March 13, 1680. Collins was sheriff at the time of the purchase of "Gloster." The old house in which he lived stood until 1881, when it was replaced by a large frame structure. In the rear of the house about two hundred yards is the cemetery of the Collins family, where the Governor is buried. These tracts are now owned by Miss Julia Ann Collins and Mrs. Dr. B. S. Goatee (great-granddaughters of Governor Collins), Mrs. Carrie Cavender, Thomas Denny and the Alexander Peterson heirs.

"Sheerness," a tract east and northeast of "Gloster," lying between Dawson's and Sheerness' branches of old Duck Creek, contained two hundred and twenty acres and was warranteed to Peter Baucom November 9, 1860, and by George Morton as his administrator, was sold to Robert French, who left it by will to his wife, Elizabeth, who married Dr. John Finney, of New Castle. Their son, David, October 18, 1760, conveyed it to Thomas Collins, and it is now owned by John Mustard, of Smyrna.

North of "Sheerness" and between Dawson's and Iron's branch, was a tract of three hundred acres called "Islington," granted to Tompaa Batha September 22, 1681, and assigned soon after to Francis Whitwell. It was sold by Wm. Berry, his adminis-for the establishing and helping up the Gospel of Truth and so monthly henceforward the 3d of fourth day of the week in each month until further order.'

No business was accomplished at the meeting except the election of Abesalom Cuff as clerk. The next meeting was on the 16th of ye 11th month (January) 1705, when it was reported that "none appeared for George's Creek, neither any from the lower parts." It was "agreed upon that the meeting-house must be floored, and the grave-yard made, but the time not prefixed, but referred to next monthly meeting."

It would appear from this action that a meeting-house had been begun but was not yet completed. Further action was deferred from time to time, and finally dropped, as far as record of it is concerned. No record of deed is made prior to 1769, but a meeting-house was built and the grave-yard used on the present site before that date, as mention is made of them in the deeds. On June 17, 1769, Thomas Woodward conveyed to Richard Holliday and Jeremiah Fisher, Trustees of the Quakers, a lot on which to build a meeting-house. They were then in possession of the site, and had been before the purchase of surrounding property by Woodward. On December 5, 1801, Robert Holliday, of Duck Creek Hundred, sold to Solomon David, David West and Charles Green, belonging to the Preparative meeting of Duck Creek, eighty perches of ground. It appears by this deed that the Friends had by mistake placed a portion of their meeting-house on property which did not belong to them, and made the second purchase in order to become owners of all the ground which it covered.

At the meeting in January, 1705, the following names were recorded; Benjamin Gumley, John Gumley, Phillip England, Robert Ashton, John Hales, Alexander Adams, John Wheel, John Ashton, Joseph England, Abesalom Cuff, Thomas Shaw, Caleb Offley, Hasadiah Offley, Ralph Prime, John Wood, Margaret Cohan. The old meeting-house went rapidly into decay after 1800, until, in 1830, nothing but its ruins stood. It was of stone and about thirty by twenty-five feet in dimensions. At present not a vestige appears except a shallow cavity in the earth to show where its foundations were laid.

A school-house was built of frame and was probably the first free school-building in the hundred. It also has disappeared. The old grave-yard is the sole remaining evidence of what was formerly the most prosperous religious denomination in this hundred. There is not a known Friend in the hundred at the present day. The grave-yard is still used by their descendants. The oldest tomb with an inscription on it is that of Sarah Joyce, who died September 20, 1787. Ebenezer Blackiston, who was a large land owner in Kenton, was buried here, December 11, 1829, and the ground contains the graves of the Holdens, an old and influential family of past days.

The Old Duck Creek Presbyterian Church, in 1773, stood in the grave-yard now used by that denomina-
KENT COUNTY.

The land was a part of "Pearman's Choice" and was granted by deed in 1740. A sketch of the church will be found in the chapter upon Smyrna. The old cemetery is one of the prettiest spots in the county. It is beautifully shaded and is kept in excellent condition. It covers about two acres of ground.

One of the oldest graves is that of David Kennedy. The inscription reads: "He was born March 17, 1741, in Antrim, Ireland, landed at New Castle, Delaware, May 8, 1760, and took an active and decisive, though humble, part with the patriots of the Revolution and died December 26, 1802. Diligent and successful in business, serving the Lord."

David Kennedy, who is buried here, was one of Smyrna's old merchants and sailed grain vessels from Smyrna Landing to Philadelphia.

Another Revolutionary officer is buried here, Captain John Matthews, who died March 3, 1854, in the eighty-first year of his age.

John Clark, at one time Governor, is buried in the northeast corner, the site of his death being August 14, 1821. At the age of sixty years and six months.

Here is also the grave of United States Senator Preseley Spruance, who died February 13, 1868, aged eighty-eight years.

Among the other old graves are those of Annie Jamison, died February 4, 1875; Anna S. Jamison, died March 81, 1876; John Caldwell, died December 28, 1878; John Clark, died February 29, 1876; James Allen McLane, died April 14, 1779 and James Peterson, died November 11, 1792.

Severson's Methodist Episcopal Church is a mile and a half from Rothwell's Landing. The deed conveying the church property and grave-yard bears date May 18, 1783, and is from James Severson to James Hull, Moses Thompson, Elijah Bartlett, John Jarrell, Benjamin Truax, John Conner and John David May. The first church was erected in 1784, and was described as one of the first frame churches in the county.

The old structure was twenty-five by twenty-eight, feet. The church was at one time called Carrollton, but upon the re-building, in 1874, the first name was revived. The new edifice is of brick, thirty-two by fifty feet and cost $2658.18. It was built through the efforts of the Rev. William B. Gregg. The church is connected with the Smyrna Circuit and a list of its ministers will be found in the article upon that church.

Raymond's Methodist Episcopal Church was built in 1825, upon ground donated by James Snow. The bricks were burnt upon the ground and most of the work was done by members of the congregation. It is a substantial and neat building and has been kept in such excellent repair that it looks like a more modern structure.

The church was annexed to Smyrna Circuit. In 1868 Leipsic Church was separated from Camden Circuit and Raymond's from Smyrna and the two churches made a separate circuit with the station at Leipsic. The names of early ministers of Raymond's will be in the article on Smyrna Circuit.

The ministers since the organization of the separate circuit have been: E. B. Newman, 1868; C. M. Pegg, 1870; C. W. Prettyman, 1871; J. A. B. Wilson, 1873; W. T. Tull, 1875; T. E. Terry, 1876; I. N. Foreman, 1878; I. N. Cockran, 1880; T. O. Ayers, 1881; E. C. Atkins, 1882; James Carroll, 1884; D. F. McFaul, 1886; James Conner, 1887.

The Methodists of Smyrna Landing, built a frame church in 1861, and it was dedicated August 25, 1861, by Rev. William H. Brisbane. It has never had a regular minister, nor is it on a circuit. It is rather an independent affair, local ministers from Smyrna and vicinity preaching there.

The old Episcopal cemetery near Duck Creek, was originally established on an acre of land granted by Thomas Green to Nicholas Ridgely, for that purpose, May 17, 1840, the time of the erection of Duck Creek Episcopal Church, the parent of St. Peter's, Smyrna. The church stood on the cemetery grounds until 1857, when it was moved into Smyrna. Now the cemetery covers two acres beautifully situated. In the centre is the lot of the Cummins' family, surrounded by a brick wall four feet high. One of the oldest inscriptions in the yard is that of Daniel Cummins, Jr., a brother of John Cummins, Esq., the Smyrna merchant, who was also buried here, July 29, 1833. The date of the inscription upon Daniel Cummins, Jr., tomb is February 3, 1788. The father, Daniel Cummins, Sr., was buried here June 10, 1797. Francis Cummins' stone bears date of his death, November 11, 1784. George Cummins, Esq., a bishop of Bishop Cummins of Kentucky, was buried September 22, 1827. Sarah, the wife of Governor Clark, was here interred December 12, 1790. Governor William Temple, who died June, 1808, is buried here, but no stone marks his resting place. Major James Chambers, an officer of the Mexican war was buried June 15, 1848, as was also Surgeon George S. Culbreth, lost on the United States ship "Huron," off the coast of North Carolina, May 24, 1877.

Between the Episcopal cemetery and Salisbury, and next to that town is an abandoned grave-yard, of which no record whatever exists. It is now used as a corn-field in the centre of which are two marble head-stones, one with the inscription "in memory of Capt. Samuel Lloyd, who departed this life the 26th day of August, 1757, in the sixty-sixth year of his age. Behold, he is dead! O! yes he is gone. Lamented Here, but welcomed home. Let us content ourselves and seek to meet him at Emanuel's Feet. There with the Heavenly Hosts to sing Eternal Praise to our King." The other inscription: "In memory of Esther, wife of Samuel Lloyd, of Duck Creek Hundred-on-Kent upon Delew, who died Oct. the 5, 1746, aged thirty years." The county has condemned the land. for a sand-pit, and large quantities of human bones have been taken out of the ground and re-interred.

On the south side of Mill Creek, just out of Smyrna is the Odd Fellows cemetery. The tract was purchased January 22, 1884, of John E. Peterson, May E. Peterson, Sarah E. Peterson, of Philadelphia, and John C. Corbit, of Odessa, by Morning Star Lodge, No. 6, I. O. O. F., and McDonald Encampment of Patriarchs No. 2, I. O. O. F., for three thousand dollars. The ground was graded, and three hundred lots, thirty by thirty-two feet laid. The site is one of the prettiest in the State, and the Odd Fellows have spared no means to improve it. A tract sixty-four by seventy-five was reserved by the grantors of the property, for the reason that it had for years been the burial ground of the Peterson family.

Schools.—District No. 4 school-house is one of the original school-houses in the hundred, and is about two miles from Smyrna. It was erected in 1827. In 1829 there were nineteen scholars. The land is part of the old Snow estate. The first building was of logs, and was replaced about 1840 by the structure which still stands. At the session of the Legislature of 1887 the school committee of the district, together with Gamaliel Garrison, William M. Boyer, John H. Short and Isaac Traux were authorized to sell the old building and erect a new one. In 1886 twenty-nine pupils attended the school.

In 1829 there was one school in District No. 6, with twenty-five scholars. The original house was in Dutch Neck, and built of logs in 1810. In 1838 it was moved to its present location near Severson's Church. The building is rather inadequate, it having been almost fifty years of service. Among the early teachers were John Dailey, Wm. Wetherby and George Bray. In 1886 there were fifty scholars in attendance.

District No. 7 is another of the old districts, and in 1810 the first building was erected near Raymond's Church upon lands belonging to Joseph Snow. When District 88 was created the school building was moved to its present location at the cross-roads, three-quarters of a mile from the church. The present building was put up at that time. In 1886 thirty-seven scholars attended. Among the early teachers were George McClement, Simon Sweatman, James Wallace, Albert Webster, John Moore and Abram Ware. District No. 88 was carried out of No. 7 in 1833, Nos. 6 and 7 in that time comprising almost the entire western end of Duck Creek Hundred. This school was built the year the district was created, and is still standing on a plot of ground donated by Jacob Raymond, about two miles from Leipsic. In 1886 there were forty-six scholars in attendance.

In 1860 District 96 was created out of No. 6, and a school-house erected, in which sessions were held until 1877, when it was destroyed by fire and never rebuilt. The district is small, and so sparsely settled that it cannot well support a school. Most of the children attend District No. 6.

In 1829 District 3, west of Smyrna, but part of the town, contained one school, with twelve scholars, and No. 5, east of it, had one school and thirty scholars. These two districts have been consolidated with Districts 77 and 107 and form Smyrna public schools.

Industries.—Denney's mill located on Green's Branch at Salisbury, is one of the oldest in the county. It is on the Gravesend tract, and as early as 1717, a piece of land called the Grassee was owned by Richard Eppson, upon which was according to the records, "a water-grist mill, bolting-mill and other improvements." These mills were located below Salisbury a short distance above the mouth of Green's Branch. In 1758, they were owned by William Hilliday, and in 1797, by A. Redgrave. About 1820, they came into possession of Richard Holden, who reconstructed the buildings and abandoned the saw-mill and the manufacture of woolens. After his death the industry was continued by his sons Abraham, Samuel and William at different times. In 1865, it came into the possession of the present owner Robert H. Denney, who has almost entirely rebuilt the old mill. It has a capacity for twenty bushels of wheat and one hundred bushels of corn a day.

In early times there were more industries in Duck Creek Hundred than at present. In old Duck Creek, a tan-yard, was operated by Peter and Daniel Lowber, and another run by Israel Peterson, near the Mill pond at Smyrna. The old ship-yards at Smyrna Landing, are mentioned in the early part of this chapter. At Rothwell's Landing, Warden and Evans had a ship-yard in 1873. Alven Allen, had a tileyard at the landing in 1865, and was succeeded by Nickerson and Jerman.

In March 1884, William M. Lewis and Lewis M. Price, formed a co-partnership and built a phosphate factory, costing seven thousand dollars, at Smyrna Landing. The firm employs twelve hands and produce four thousand pounds of fertilizer a week.

The Peninsula Bone Fertilizer Company was organized in 1888, with J. E. Tygart, H. D. Tygart, W. C. Pierce and W. F. Brown as the corporators. The works were founded by J. E. Tygart & Company, in 1878, and by them sold to the present proprietors, who organized by electing John E. Tygart, president, and W. G. Pierce secretary and treasurer. These officers have continued until the present. The works are located at Rothwell's Landing, two miles from Smyrna, and represent a capital of forty thousand dollars. Fifty hands are given constant employment, and one hundred tons of phosphate manufactured daily.

To carry the products of Duck Creek Hundred, numerous boats had been running as far back as 1800. The first regular line of steamers was put on by J. E. Tygart & Company, composed of Jno. E. Tygart and Herman S. Tygart. The first steamer owned and run in their interest was the "W. E. Pierpont," in 1875. In July 1879, the steamer "John E. Tygart," built of iron expressly for navigating these waters, was put in place of the "Pierpont." The boat was built by Neasle & Levy, of Philadelphia, and is complete in every respect having state-rooms and berths, air-tight compartments and every convenience for handling freight and passengers. In February 1883, the line was sold to a company called the Philadelphia and Smyrna Transportation Company, of which the original incorporators were John E. Tygert, Herman S. Tygert and John H. Hoffecker. This Company was incorporated April 13, 1888, with a capital stock of thirty thousand dollars. The first officers were John E. Tygert president and W. G. Pierce, secretary and treasurer. A. E. Jardine, is the secretary and treasurer now. Owing to want of proper depth of water the boat is unable to come nearer than two and one-half miles of the town of Smyrna, and all freights, passengers and some two thousand tons of coal have to be hauled this distance. A complete survey of the creek was made last spring (1887), and it is expected that an appropriation will be granted sufficient to bring the boat to the old head of navigation. The annual commerce of this body of water is over three million dollars in value.

Smyrna.—The greater part of Smyrna lies in the old tract "Gravesend," taken up by William Green in 1680. By his will bearing date 1708 he devised it to his sons—John, Thomas and George. Thomas left his portion to his sons, Thomas and James. The latter owned the land through which the King's Road passed at a point where another road, leading from the old landing on Duck Creek to Maryland, intersected it. Salisbury, a little settlement northwest on the King's Road, was laid out many years before. The old landing also had been in use many years. In 1768 James Green began the sale of lands at and near Duck Creek Cross-Roads, and sold at the dates given below. To Samuel Ball, merchant of Philadelphia, March 14, 1768, fifteen acres; and November 5th following to Samuel and William Ball, sixty acres. On August 19th of the same year to William Creighton, five acres on the southeast side of the King's Road towards Salisbury. On the same day to Molleston Curry, one acre adjoining the cross-roads. On January 5, 1769, to William Jordan, one acre adjoining lots of Ball and Creighton. On January 28th of the same year Fenwick Fisher, four acres on King's Road adjoining Curry's. On March 10, 1770, a lot to William Hazel. To William Hazel, May 15, 1770, sixteen acres near the burying-ground adjoining Holliday and Curry's land. This was above Smyrna towards Salisbury, and the burying-ground mentioned was the Friends' burial-place. On July 28th of the same year to Benjamin Dawson, thirty acres on the south side of the main road, adjoining lots of Colonel John Vining, James McMullen and James Morris. On the same date to William Rees, five and one-half acres adjoining Potter's lot. To Allen McLane (leather breeches maker), January 4, 1772, four acres on the west side of the main road and one acre on the east side. To Thomas Skillington, tavern keeper, February 7, 1772, nineteen acres on the north side of the King's Road. On February 1st of same year to Joseph Shown, twenty-eight acres.

Thomas Ross had purchased one-fourth of an acre lying near the cross-roads on the road leading to Dever, and this he sold February 21, 1779, to Robert Wilds, inn-holder.

During the Revolutionary War Capt. Allen McLane and a company of thirty men from this neighborhood formed a part of the second battalion. Hon. Thomas Collins, one of the six revolutionary Presidents of the State, lived near Smyrna, and commanded a brigade of Delaware militia against that portion of Howe's army that was in New Castle en route for Brandywine.

In 1789 George Kennard & Co. were the principal merchants in the village, and the Delaware Gazette and General Advertiser of October 28th of that year contains the following advertisement:

"'JUST IMPORTED in the ships 'Levant,' Captian Ward, from Liverpool, and 'Pigeon,' Captian Sutton, from London, a very large assortment of European goods immediately from the different manufactories, and will be sold very low by the piece or less quantity, at the store of GEORGE KENNARD & CO.

"Duck Creek, Oct. 10th.'"

The village went by the name of Duck Creek Cross-Roads till 1806. In 1792 the Legislature met here, and at that time thought of making it the capital of the State. On January 16th of that year the name was changed to Smyrna by an act of the Assembly. The village increased slowly in population, and in 1815 contained about two hundred and fifty inhabitants. On January 29, 1817, the town was incorporated, and Henry M. Ridgely, William Hall, Jacob Stout, Jonathan Jenkins and Alexander McClyment appointed commissioners to survey, lay out and regulate the streets of Smyrna. They selected Nehemiah Clark as surveyor, and proceeded with their task June 20th of the same year.

The valuation of the real estate in 1818 as returned by the assessor was one hundred and fifty-nine thousand six hundred dollars.

The growth of the town was steady, and for many years large quantities of grain were purchased by the merchants of the town and stored in the granaries at the landing for shipment. The construction of the railroad, however, reduced the grain purchases in this vicinity.

In 1851 the town limits were extended one-fourth of a mile in every direction, making Smyrna one mile square instead of a half-mile as heretofore.

In 1857 the town contained 12 dry-goods and grocery stores, 4 clothing stores, 1 china store, 2 jewelry stores, 3 foundries, 3 coach-shops, 2 machine-shops, 6 blacksmith-shops, 2 harness-shops, 4 wheelwright-shops, 4 boot and shoe-shops, 2 basket factories, 1 tannery with a capital of eighty thousand dollars, 2 hotels, 3 churches, 2 stove and tinware manufactories, 1 marble-yard, 1 gun and locksmith shop, 1 select and several district schools, 3 ale and oyster saloons, 6 physicians, a barber shop and about eighteen hundred inhabitants. On December 6, 1860, the town was first illuminated by gas, and since that time has been well lighted.

In 1861 a branch road was built to connect Smyrna with the main division of the Delaware Railroad. On Sunday morning, September 11, 1879, a fire broke out at the factory of Mitchell & Woddell, and before it was extinguished consumed five buildings, proving the most extensive fire ever in the town.

Smyrna is situated on a branch of Duck Creek, eight and a half miles from Delaware Bay and midway between Wilmington and Milford. It is surrounded by farms in a good state of cultivation and large quantities of grain are brought here for shipment. Its business interests are more extensive than those of any other town in Kent County. The population of the town, according to the census of 1880, was two thousand four hundred and twenty-three inhabitants. According to statistics carefully gathered in 1883 by E. H. Beck, the business transactions of the two banks amounted to five hundred thousand dollars. The goods, wares, etc., sold per annum amounted to $844,600, and the goods manufactured, $495,000, making the total business interests of the town $3,339,600. There were 500,000 baskets of peaches grown in the vicinity of Smyrna in 1882, and of these 275,000 were shipped by rail, 125,000 by boat and 100,000 canned.

At the present time Smyrna contains 4 churches, a graded school of 8 departments, a post-office, 2 banks, 1 foundry and machine-shop, 3 carriage factories, 10 general stores, 9 grocery stores, 2 jewelry stores, 1 dry-goods store, 3 drug stores, 4 clothing stores, 3 flour and feed stores, 2 shoe stores, 4 millinery and trimming stores, 4 stove stores, 2 hardware stores, 3 confectionery stores, 2 furniture stores, 2 paper stores, 2 tobacco stores, 2 saddlery stores, 2 newspapers, 2 insurance agents, 2 real estate agents, 7 physicians, 2 dentists, an alderman, a justice of the peace, 3 barbers, 4 butchers, 2 bakers, 2 tailors, 7 phosphate agencies, 2 plumbers, 2 hotels, 1 saloon, 3 coal yards, 2 lumber yards, 2 basket factories, 1 canning establishment, 1 evaporator, 5 shoe-shops and 3 wheelwright and blacksmith-shops.

By the act of January 29, 1817, James McDowell, Thomas Maberry and Henry Draper were appointed commissioners to hold an election at Smyrna for three commissioners, a treasurer and an assessor. They attended to their duties at the house of Mrs. Comfort Lockwood on Monday, June 2, 1817.

The following are the commissioners who have been elected at the different dates:

1817-18: James McDowell, Robert Patterson, William Kennedy.
1820: James McDowell, Abraham Pierce, George Woolls.
1820: Thomas Mayberry, Jacob Raymond, George Woolls.
1827-18: James McDowell, George Woolls, Enoch Spruance.
1829: Enoch Spruance, Piner Manfield, Benjamin Benson.
1830: Enoch Spruance, Piner Manfield, Thomas Mayberry.
1831: Benjamin Combe, Enoch Spruance, Daniel C. Lockwood.
1832-33: Benjamin Combe, Daniel C. Lockwood, Piner Manfield.
1834: Joseph Hill, Benjamin Benson, Enoch Spruance.
No record until 1842.

The following persons have served as treasurers since the incorporation of the town:

1817-26: George Walker.
1826: Ephraim Jefferson.
1827-28: Jno. F. Hails.
1829-30: George Woolls.
1831-34: Thomas Mayberry.
1835-41: N. F. Wilds.
1842: Dr. William Cummins.
An omission until 1846.
1846: P. H. Maudsley.
1847-48: Anderson Melvin.
1848: Benjamin L. Collins.

The following were the assessors of Smyrna, with the dates of service:

1850: John H. Betwistle.
1855: Joseph C. Griffith.
1856-70: Thomas E. Jefferson.
1870: Henry Beams.
1871-72: John E. Collins.
1873-78: J. Wesley Denney.
1878-79: John E. Collins.
1879-80: W. W. Tadych.
1880: James P. Freeman.
KENT COUNTY.

1617-36. Presley Spruance.
1626. Enoch Spruance.
1627-30. Timothy C. Raymond.
1630. Jacob Raymond.
1631-34. Simon Spearman.
1635. Simon Spearman.
1636. No records.
1642. John M. Deming.
1643. An addition until 1646.
1648. Thomas E. Jefferson.

RELIGIOUS MATTERS.—St. Peter’s Episcopal Church, Smyrna.—In 1704 the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, in England, sent out the Rev. Thomas Crawford, the first missionary to Kent County. Mr. Crawford was succeeded in 1711, by the Rev. Mr. Henderson, and in 1738 the Rev. George Frazer was in charge of Kent County. The first regular effort to put the Episcopal Church on a permanent basis at Old Duck Creek was made in 1740, and to aid the effort Thomas Green, May 17th in this year, conveyed to Nicholas Ridgely and Thomas Tarrant, wardens of St. Jones’ Church at Dover, “one whole and compleat square acre of land to be laid out on the most convenient part of a tract called Graves End.” A chapel was built, and the ground was used as a burying-ground. In 1744 the Rev. Arthur Usher, then the rector in charge, reports that there were “two wooden chapels begun, which I hope to see finished before spring.” One of them was at Duck Creek, and the other at Mispillion. The deed for the glebe on which the chapel was built, dated August 17, 1744, was from Abraham Jacob and Ruth James to David Marshall and William Strickland, all of Kent County, and Alexander Chance, of New Castle County, for a tract of land in Duck Creek Hundred, laid out for forty acres in consideration of twenty pounds. An extract from the deed is as follows:

“Considering the necessity of having some place appointed for the worship of Almighty God according to the Rubric of the Church of England, established by law, David Marshall, William Strickland and Alex Chance have agreed with the aforesaid Abra James, Jacob James and Ruth James for the aforesaid tract of land for the further improvement of the Established Church, and for the better entertainment of a minister of the Established Church that shall be sent for that purpose by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts.”

The Rev. Arthur Usher reported at this time that a brick church had been begun and finished at Dover, and this Duck Creek congregation came under the charge of the Dover Parish, and under the rectorate of the Rev. Hugh Neil, Charles Inglis and other ministers. In 1762, under the rectorate of Rev. Charles Inglis, a new brick church was erected. In his letter of date June 15, 1762, the Rev. Mr. Inglis says “the church at Duck Creek, in the upper end of the county, being too small also, and being old besides and decaying, the people unanimously agreed to build a new brick church of larger dimensions, and after a sermon I preached on the occasion, they subscribed very liberally, according to the circumstances. The church is now a building, and I expect to preach in it before next winter.” On November 20, 1764, he writes, “the congregation declared that they would lay aside all thoughts of finishing their church if I removed, tho’ the windows are now glazed.” Dr. Inglis removed to New York in 1765, became rector of Trinity Church, and subsequently bishop of Nova Scotia. The building committee consisted of Daniel Cummins, Thomas Collins and John Cook. The Rev. Samuel Magaw was the last minister sent over in 1767 by the Venerable Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. He ministered from 1767 to 1775.

The Rev. Mr. Magaw records the completion of Duck Creek Church and its opening on Trinity Sunday, 1764,—a large congregation present. The church had then ninety-four communicants. Rev. Mr. Magaw afterwards became rector of St. Paul’s Church, Philadelphia. From the War of the Revolution the church suffered, and we find the records silent till 1786, when, on Thursday, June 23d, the vestry of Christ Church, Dover, met and received the report of the committee appointed to meet and confer with a committee appointed by the vestry of St. Peter’s Church, at Duck Creek, on the propriety of inviting the Rev. Samuel Roe to officiate in their churches; and the committee reported that it would be greatly advantageous to the said united churches of Dover and Duck Creek, and to religion in general, that the Rev. Mr. Roe should settle among them. The committee from Dover consisted of Messrs. Rodney, Taylor and Truitt; that from Duck Creek of Thomas Collins, Daniel Cummins, John Cook and Risdon Bishop. The same joint committee was reappointed to report on the subject of salary. They agreed that the sum of three hundred pounds be raised and given to the Rev. Mr. Roe for one year’s service in said churches, and to be paid half-yearly in manner following, that is to say, the sum of two hundred pounds by the congregation of Christ Church and one hundred pounds by the congregation of St. Peter’s. “It is also further resolved that the Rev. Mr. Roe attend the said churches alternately, on festal days altogether at Dover.” Signed James Sykes, Thomas Rodney, John Baning, Joshua Clayton, Thomas Collins, John Cook, Daniel Cummins, Risdon Bishop. The Duck Creek committee also reported that St. Peter’s had a glebe, which yielded twenty pounds rental annually. The glebe now forms the cemetery of the parish. The Rev. Mr. Roe continued and died in service here February 8, 1791. From this till 1827 the parish languished and we have no records; but in 1827 the old brick church at Duck Creek was torn down and a new church was erected in Smyrna, on the lot of ground donated by John Cummins, son of the above-mentioned Daniel Cummins. The building committee consisted of John Cummins, Ebenezer Blackiston, Jacob Raymond and John and Eben Clark. In 1828 the Rev. John F. Robinson was called to the charge. of the parish, and he was succeeded in 1831 by the Rev. Robert S. Piggott, who was a learned and faithful pastor and a remarkable man in many ways. He was descended from Piggott, Baron of Boorne in Normandy, one of the knights who accompanied William the Conqueror into England. He was ordained deacon by Bishop White in 1823. He died July 24, 1887, at the advanced age of ninety-two years, and was actively engaged in the work of the ministry until compelled to retire by the infirmities of age, three or four years before his death. Through a long and faithful service to the church he occupied many positions as rector and professor in colleges with great credit and ability. He was a prominent Mason. In art he was said to be an engraver of no mean order. His engravings have been pronounced by adepts as among the very best. He left one of General Washington, one of Colonel Thomas Pickering, one of Dr. Chapman, another of A. J. Dallas, others of Patrick Henry, Bishop South, Dr. Muhlenburg and Bishop Seabury, of Connecticut. During his ministries at Smyrna he left a painted portrait of John Cummins, the chief founder of St. Peter's, which is highly prized by his family. The successors to Dr. Piggott were in order, Revs. John P. Bausman, John Woolward, Willis Peck, Daniel Higbee, Thomas D. Ozanne, James Tyng, Andrew Freeman, Samuel F. Carpenter. In 1857 the congregation enlarged and remodeled the church through a building committee consisting of George W. Cummins, Dr. William Cummins and George Henry Raymond, by the addition of twenty feet to its length and two wings, making the edifice cruciform and giving largely increased seating capacity, but with the objectionable feature of an organ-loft, back of and over the pulpit. In July, 1858, the Rev. Dr. Julius E. Grammer, now of Baltimore, was called to St. Peter’s, and remained until January, 1861. His successors were Revs. Henry S. Getz, Dr. Mornell, Jos. T. Wright, John G. Bawn, Arthur S. Johns. The lot of ground adjoining the church was bought for a chapel, and the cornerstone laid by Bishop Lee, August 21, 1872. A beautiful frame chapel in Gothic style, twenty-eight by sixty feet, was erected at the cost of four thousand dollars, the gift of Mrs. Susan H. Fisler, daughter of John and Susan H. Cummins, with stained-glass windows memorial of Dr. Fisler, her husband, and her father and mother. On August 23, 1878, the present rector, Rev. Wm. B. Gordon, took charge of the parish. In 1885 the congregation, through the building committee, consisting of Rev. Mr. Gordon, G. W. Cummins and E. A. Evans, made great improvements in the church edifice, tearing out the organ-loft and making an open chancel and putting in the large memorial window, the gift of A. G. Cummins, in memory of his father and mother, John and Susan H. Cummins. The whole inside was renovated and painted, as also the exterior, at a cost of about three thousand dollars. In 1883 a fine rectory was built, costing three thousand five hundred dollars, on lot of ground donated by Mrs. Susan H. Fisler.

Methodist Church.—The first Methodist services held in Smyrna were conducted by Rev. Philip Cox in the residence of James L. Stevenson. It was a little log building, adjoining the present church-site, and was destroyed by fire in 1850. In 1870 Rev. Francis Asbury visited this place (then known as “Duck Creek Cross-Roads”), and preached his first sermon to the “three hundred people” in an orchard between Smyrna and Duck Creek village.

In 1786 the “old frame church” was erected in the “old burying-ground,” which was land donated to the church by Allen McLane. It was a building thirty feet square, and in Asbury’s notes is mentioned as a “comfortable house.” In this building the Quarterly Conference was held for a number of years. In 1782 Dover Circuit was formed, and Asbury Church formed a portion of it until 1804, when Duck Creek Circuit was created from a part of Dover Circuit. Edward Martin, Israel Peterson, Thomas Wilds and John Lockwood were the stewards in 1790. On February 22, 1799, notice was given to the society that a meeting would be held on March 4th of that year for the purpose of electing seven trustees. At that meeting there were present John Cole, James McDowell, Israel Peterson, George Kennard, Simon VanWinkle, Peter Lowber, James Stevenson, James Henry, Messer Beaston, Philip Denny, Daniel McDowell, Benjamin Farrow, Noah Hickman, William Spearman, John Palmatary, Major Taylor, Benjamin Bassett, Robert Patterson, Thomas Hall and Mollisston Curry. They proceeded to an election with the following result:

John Cole was chosen president of the board, James Stevenson secretary, and George Kennard treasurer.

The certificate of incorporation was signed and sealed on same date, and recorded March 23, 1799. The deed for the property was executed by Allen McLane on the following 9th of May. On June 22, 1801, the trustees appointed George Kennard and John Cummins managers of the grave-yard. On March 18, 1811, Isaac Davis and Robert Peterson were elected trustees vice Kennard and Lowber.

In 1812 sixteen churches composed the Smyrna Circuit. In 1819 the “old frame church” was enlarged. Benjamin Coombs deeded more land to the church for cemetery purposes in 1828. In 1828 the churches of Smyrna Circuit had the following number of members:

In 1830 a lot on Delaware Street was purchased of Isaac Davis, and a parsonage erected. In 1843 the lot on which the present church stands, on Mt. Vernon Street, was bought of Dr. Fisher. The erection of a brick church was commenced, and the cornerstone laid May 24, 1844. This remained until 1871, when it was torn down, and on August 14th of that year work was commenced on the present edifice. The cornerstone was re-laid on October 7, 1871, and the church dedicated November 24, 1872, by Bishop Foster. The new building is a brick structure, sixty by eighty feet, forty-five feet high, with two slanted towers,—one, one hundred and thirty-five feet, and the other fifty-five feet high. The auditorium is forty-five by sixty-two feet, and has eighty pews, which, with the gallery, will seat seven hundred and fifty persons. The cost of the improvement was $22,000. The building committee was William Worden, J. H. Belewly and John H. Hoffecker, who, with James B. Clements, Joseph Smithers, John B. Cooper and William H. Baggs, composed the board of trustees for that year. In 1860 the church purchased five acres of land for cemetery purposes. It was commonly called the "Budd Lot" and lies between Smyrna and Duck Creek.

In 1845 Smyrna was formed into a separate station and assigned a pastor of its own. A dispute arose as to whether the parsonage belonged to the circuit or the Asbury Church. As a result, it was sold, and is now in possession of Mr. Mary E. Boyd. The lot on which the present parsonage was purchased is of James R. Clements. The building was erected at a cost of $6500. The church is now in an excellent condition, and has a membership of six hundred.

The Sunday-school, started in 1827, has now fifty-two teachers and officers and four hundred and three scholars under the superintendence of John H. Hoffecker. The school has access to a large and carefully selected library. The present trustees are John H. Hoffecker, Joseph Smithers, Robert D. Hoffecker, William Fairies, Alfred D. Hudson, Samuel Roberts, J. W. Denney, W. W. Tschudy and J. B. Cooper.

The Presbyterian Church of Smyrna was probably organized in 1733. In that year they built a church edifice a little south of the town limits, on a tract known as Holy Hill, and now used as a cemetery. The first pastor was Rev. Robert Jamison, who served this congregation from December 26, 1734, until his death, which occurred ten years later. The next pastor was Rev. John Miller, who was installed in 1749 as pastor of the churches of Dover and Duck Creek. In 1768 a complaint was lodged against him in the Presbytery on the grounds that he introduced and used Watts' version of the psalms in the congregation of Duck Creek. Rev. Miller continued as pastor until his death, in 1791. For many years the church was without a pastor, and dwindled away until it finally became extinct. In 1818 the old church building was repaired, and an interest awakened. The pulpit was occasionally supplied by Rev. James Wilson and Rev. Alexander Campbell. The affairs of the church moved along slowly until 1846, when a church building on Mt. Vernon Street was purchased of the Methodist Protestants, and the church was reorganized. Rev. Thomas G. Murphy became pastor and served until Oct. 6, 1859. Rev. J. C. Thompson was the next pastor, and filled the pulpit from 1860 until 1864. He was followed by Rev. John McCoy, who ministered here from January, 1865, until Feb., 1869. Rev. G. W. Kennedy was stated supply from August, 1869, until October, 1870. Rev. S. S. Sturgess preached here from June, 1871, until Dec. of the same year. Rev. Jno. Squire ministered here for about a year, and was followed by Rev. R. A. Brown, who served from Jan., 1874, until April, 1875. The present pastor, Rev. Justus T. Umsted, D.D., was installed May 15, 1877.

In 1883 it was decided to erect a new edifice, and a lot was accordingly procured on Main Street and the construction commenced. The building was completed and opened April 6, 1884. It is built of serpentine stone in the early English Gothic style. The main building is fifty-six and one-third by thirty-seven and two-thirds feet, with a tower and spire about one hundred feet high, and has a capacity for seating three hundred persons. In the rear is a chapel, forty-seven by twenty-three feet, which is used for Sunday-school purposes. The church is in a flourishing condition, and has eighty-five communicants.

A Sunday-school of seventy scholars, under the superintendence of Geo. W. Taylor, is connected with the church.

Roman Catholic Church.—The first meetings of the Roman Catholics were held in Smyrna in the residence of Michael Riley about 1863, and were conducted by Father Daily, of New Castle. After the first few meetings the place of holding the services was changed to the residence of Mr. McCoy, at Spruance City. The meetings were held once a month and were attended by six families. In 1881 Odd Fellows' Hall in Smyrna was secured and services conducted here until the purchase of the present church from the Presbyterians in 1883. The church was dedicated St. Polycarp Roman Catholic Church and dedicated June 16, 1883, by Bishop Foster and Father Bradford. During 1883 and '84 services were held twice a month, but were again reduced to once a month. The church was named in honor of St. Polycarp, a bishop of Smyrna, Asia, who was martyred in the second century. It is now a mission with ninety communicants, but will soon be converted into a parish. The following priests have ministered here: Father Daily, Father Taylor, Father Bradford, Father Flynn and Father Graff.

The first Sunday-school in Smyrna, and the one whence all the others have sprung, was organized in 1820 by eight young ladies. Their names were Margaret Kennedy, Sally Basset, Mary Patterson, Mary Davis, Rebecca McDowell, Mary Bassett, Matilda Abbott and Ann Curry. The first service was held September 10th of that year, in a house on East Commerce Street, now owned by Mrs. Thomas Davis. After the first Sunday the Sunday-school was held in the Mechanics' Academy. Miss Kennedy acted as superintendent from the organization until April, 1821, when Miss Sally Bassett served in that capacity. In 1823 there were seventy-one scholars,—thirty-seven girls and thirty-four boys,—who were instructed in divine knowledge by Misses Rebecca McDowell, Sally McDowell, Sally Patterson, Mary Ann Wool and Mr. Joseph Farrow. The Sunday-school was continued until June, 1827, when the several denominations separated and formed distinct organizations to be conducted in connection with their respective churches.

SCHOOLS.—Probably the earliest school in Smyrna, and one which attained the most celebrity, was a Friends' school, known as the Southern Boarding School. The school exercises were performed in the building on Mt. Vernon Street, now owned by Mrs. S. M. Fisler, and the students boarded in the building now the residence of John Mustard. This institution was closed before 1825, and little can be learned concerning it.

On January 29, 1817, the Mechanics' Academy of Smyrna was incorporated, with Thomas Maberry, William Kennedy, Ephraim Jefferson, James Smith, Ebenezer Blackston, Jr., Jacob Pennington and John Denning as trustees. In September, 1820, Mr. Barstow, who had been a teacher of this institution, died. The academy was open for a few years, and then discontinued. The building stood on Mt. Vernon Street, where the residence of Mrs. Clarissa Faries now is, and was afterwards moved to Cummin Street, and is now the property of the heirs of the Rev. T. J. Thompson.

Samuel Priestly also taught a private school, first in the building previously occupied as a Friends’ academy, and afterwards in the building now occupied by the Rev. Justus T. Umsted, D.D., discontinuing it in 1825.

A select school was taught by Mrs. S. P. Mason in 1837 and 1838.

In 1866, Rev. F. M. Chatham was the principal of the Smyrna English Classical Academy, which was held in the Friends’ Meeting-house. He was succeeded by Dr. J. E. Clawson, who continued the school until the building was destroyed by fire about 1874.

At other times select schools have been held in this town for short intervals.

The first free-school in the town was opened in a building on East Commerce Street, now owned by Mrs. Thomas Davis. It was started by the young ladies of the town, among whom figured prominently in this undertaking Mrs. Ann Spruance and Misses Mary and Ann Patterson. It was incorporated as Female Union Society, January 22, 1818. Its object was to educate those who were unable to pay the tuition at the private schools. The school was continued until the adoption of the public-school system.

By the first division of the county into school districts, according to the act of 1829, Smyrna formed a portion of Districts No. 3 and 5. Two frame school-houses were erected, one on North and the other on South Street. At a later date District No. 77 was created out of No. 5, and District 107 out of No. 6. No new buildings were erected in the new districts, but the schools conducted as before. In 1854 it was found necessary to provide more ample accommodations for the scholars, and the building on South Street was removed and a two-story brick structure, twenty-six by forty feet, erected. Both buildings are still standing, though no longer used for school purposes. The building in District No. 3 received several additions and alterations, and was used for school purposes until 1884. The growth of the schools and the advantages of the graded-school system led to the consolidation of the schools. In 1881 an act was passed enabling the commissioners to consolidate, and on April 4th of that year a meeting of the commissioners of Districts No. 3, 77, 5 and 107 was held, which resulted as follows: The board organized by electing George H. Raymond president; E. M. Cloak, secretary; P. Hoffecker treasurer. On July 18th of same year, George H. Raymond resigned his position as commissioner, and William M. Bell was chosen his successor.

In September 1881, L. Irving Handy was elected principal, which position he filled until 1887, when he resigned and accepted the position of superintendent of the public schools of Kent County. Pursuant to a notice given January 8, 1883, a meeting of the taxpayers was held January 19th for the purpose of considering the advisability of erecting a new school-house. At this meeting it was resolved, “That the Board of Directors of the Smyrna Public Schools be, and hereby are, authorized and requested to ask from the General Assembly at its present session, an amendment to the act entitled an ‘Act to Consolidate the Public Schools of Smyrna,’ enabling the said Board of Directors to borrow, not exceeding the sum of sixteen thousand dollars, for the purpose of erecting a school-house in said district.” The petition was granted, and on February 12th John H. Hoffecker, George W. Taylor, W. A. Faries and William M. Bell were appointed a committee to select a suitable site. A lot on the corner of Delaware and South Streets was selected and purchased of the heirs of Mr. Catts. The plan of a building, as drafted by C. E. Graham & Sons, of Wilmington, was adopted on April 8th.

The contract for the building was awarded to T. W. Farree & Bro., of Yorklyn, on the 2d of May. On May 29th William M. Bell, W. A. Faries and G. W. Taylor were appointed a building committee. The building was completed and accepted in January, 1884. It is a brick structure, cruciform in shape, having four transepts, each twenty-five by thirty-five feet, two stories high and forming eight rooms. The centre building is thirty-five feet square, three stories high, and is surmounted with a dome and belfry, making a total height of ninety-two feet. The total cost of the building was fourteen thousand nine hundred and eighty-eight dollars. The old school property was sold January 2d of that year. The land on South Street was divided into six lots, three of which were purchased by William M. Bell, two by J. C. Bailey and one by Mrs. Hannah Surgeon. The lot on North Street was purchased by W. W. Tashudy. In June, 1884, Edward B. Gordon and Harry R. Bell were graduated as the first alumni of the public schools. The first commencement exercises were held June 26, 1885, when a class of five was graduated. At the present time twenty-three have graduated. There are at the present time in the public schools eight departments.

The corps of teachers at present is W. G. Lake, principal; Miss Lizzie Parrott, Miss Emma Hough, Miss Anna Doughten, Miss Lizzie McDowell, Miss Kate L. Storm, Miss Mary Spruance and Miss Carrie C. Budd.

The following persons have served as school directors since the consolidation of the districts: 1881—Wm. M. Bell, E. M. Cloak, James P. Hoffecker, Geo. W. Taylor, Wm. H. Carr, David T. Smithson, Wm. A. Faries.
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

INDUSTRIES.—At no time have the manufactories of Smyrna been numerous or extensive. In addition to those in operation at the present time, there are several no longer in existence that deserve passing notice.

Green's Pottery on Main Street, on property now owned by William E. Hall, was in operation many years, and discontinued about 1840.

In August, 1824, John H. Pennington advertised that he had commenced the manufacture of "Piano Forte's" in Smyrna. How long he continued or where his factory was situated is unknown. Mrs. Sarah P. Mason used a piano of his manufacture for a short time.

In 1830 Benson & Catta, were extensive carriage-builders. After the decease of Samuel Catta the business was transacted under the style, Benson & Co. Cahoon & Carrow were their successors, and were in the business in 1857. The factory was on land now used as a garden by John H. Hofer.

Col. Samuel Catta, of Smyrna, was born May 10, 1800, in Camden, Kent County, and died in Smyrna, June 23, 1856. His ancestors were English, and settled in Virginia the latter part of the 17th century. His father died when he was quite young, and left him to the care and guidance of his mother, a woman of many excellent qualities. At the age of sixteen he went to Wilmington to learn a trade, carriage-making,—a most important one in the days when there were no railroads. After the usual apprenticeship he resolved to further improve himself by such an education as was within his command, and for that purpose, by means of his savings and a small legacy left him, attended for two years the Kennett Square Academy, in Chester County, Pennsylvania, an institution of learning well known at that time, where, by the exercise of that industry and perseverance which characterized him through life, he acquired what was then considered a liberal education.

In 1823 he went to Smyrna, and soon thereafter with Benjamin Benson engaged in the manufacture of carriages. At that time this was comparatively an infant industry in that section of country, but, by reason of their energy, excellent workmanship and integrity, they built up not only the most important manufacturing establishment in the county, but one of the most important in the State, their trade extending not merely throughout Delaware, but all over the Peninsula and beyond, as far north as Philadelphia, and south as Washington. They employed a large force of skilled workmen, and made every part of the vehicle, even the silver-plating, in their own factory.

In the transaction of his business he traveled much, visiting all the important towns and cities over a large section of country, and became favorably known to many people. He retired from business in 1844, having amassed a fortune. He held many positions of trust and honor. He was for many years a director of the Farmers' Bank at Dover, director of Insurance Company in New Castle County, and was a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, being one of the original members of the lodge in Smyrna. When the Delaware Railroad was projected, he subscribed liberally to its stock, and in order that Smyrna might receive the greatest benefit, earnestly advocated its construction east of the town. Surveys were made to that end, but other influences prevailed, and he died before the completion of the road.

In politics he was a liberal Whig, a great admirer of Clay, and a devoted partisan, in its higher sense, of Whig principles. He had a thorough understanding of our government and its history and the administration of its affairs, and in the politics of the State exercised a strong and beneficial influence. At one time he was mentioned with favor as United States Senator, and in the caucus of his party, then in power in the Legislature, was within one vote of the nomination. He was a Presidential elector on the Whig ticket in 1848, when General Taylor was elected; was an aide-de-camp, with the rank of colonel, on the staff of Governor Combgus, and also held local municipal office.

Colonel Catta was intellectually one of the strong men of Delaware. To a foundation of large common sense, which he used with great advantage in the discernment of men and things, he added, by study, an extended knowledge of the best English literature, of which he had accumulated a fine library; and in his discourse displayed the taste of a critic and the mind of a philosopher. He accepted no statement, argument or theory without investigation, and the final approval of his own intelligence and conscience, and, though independent in his mode of thinking, he was a Christian, and allowed the widest latitude to others. In social, as well as public, intercourse his manner was engaging and his mental strength at once apparent. To a large mind he added a large and commanding, yet companionable, presence, and, though he invited friendship, he would not tolerate familiarity.

He was married in 1829 to Sarah, daughter of John Baily. Mrs. Catta is still living at the age of eighty-one, in the possession of faculties bright and unimpaired. They had eight children, five of whom are still living, viz., Sarah Elizabeth, married to Dr. John F. Cuningham, of Philadelphia, formerly of Chester County, and now deceased; Samuel, Anna, Evelina, of Smyrna, and Charles W., lawyer, practicing in Philadelphia.

A building west of the present factory of the Smyrna Buggy Company was occupied as a foundry in 1854 by Bowman, Elliott & Co. On the second floor was a sash and door factory, established in 1859 by Mitchell & Bowman. In 1865 the building was purchased by Hoffecker & Brother, and used for manufacturing woolen yarn. It was next operated as a basket factory by Richard Mitchell, and while in his occupancy, in 1870, was burned, and has never been rebuilt.

In 1857 J. Millaway & Son were operating a foundry on the present site of the Town Hall. McMullen & Shermer commenced manufacturing wagons about 1850 and continued until 1870. The factory was on Commerce Street, where J. B. Cooper’s residence now stands.

In 1867 J. M. Denning operated a carriage factory near the present site of Hoffecker’s canning establishment.

Isaac Solomon started a soap and candle factory about 1840 on the site now occupied by L. Irving Handy’s residence. Robert Denney was the next owner, who in March, 1859, sold it to A. Holmes Stockley. It was afterwards owned by A. Elton, who sold it to C. E. Foxwell and W. V. Grieve on March 28, 1866, and soon discontinued.

Clegg & Ruth were operating a foundry in 1857 on the corner of Delaware and Commerce Streets.

Pratt & Lockwood started a foundry on the site now occupied by the Smyrna Buggy Company. James Davis succeeded Thomas Lockwood in the firm, and the business was transacted as Pratt & Davis. The factory was burned while operated by them, and was rebuilt by Thomas Lockwood. It has since been operated by Dixon & Clements, J. B. Evans & Co., and from 1882 to ’85 as a pickling factory by the Diamond State Pickling Company.

In September, 1860, Joseph H. Collins opened a fan factory on Market Street, near Commerce. The factory was a two-story building, thirty by forty feet, and gave employment to eight hands. On May 18, 1862, it was sold by the sheriff, and purchased by Robert Hill, but was never operated afterwards.

On November 13, 1751, Thomas James sold to Andrew Peterson, millwright, thirty acres of land and a grist-mill adjoining the meeting-house and burial-place (Holy Hill). The thirty acres were probably on both sides of the stream. The mill remained in the possession of the Peterson family many years, and then was purchased by William Sharp and known as Sharp’s Mills. Sharp was unable to retain the mill, and it again came into the possession of the Petersons and became the property of Mrs. John C. Corbit, to whom it now belongs. For the past ten years it has been operated by J. B. Webb. The mill is run by water-power, and the grinding is done by burrs. It has a capacity for grinding eighty bushels of grain per day.

In 1867 Joseph V. Hoffecker opened a canning establishment on Main Street. In the following year he associated with himself his brother, John H. Hoffecker. A three-story frame building, forty-two by sixty feet, on the site of the present factory, was fitted up with the requisite machinery. This building was burned August 8, 1875, and the present building erected the following year. The front part of the building is two stories high, forty-four by forty feet, and the back part one story, forty-four by sixty feet.

In 1877 John H. Hoffecker became sole owner, and has since operated it. Tomatoes, corn, pumpkins and all fruits available are canned. During the season (from August 1st till November 1st) employment is given to one hundred and twenty-five persons. The capacity of the cannery is five hundred thousand cans. The cans used are manufactured here, and for this purpose five men are employed six months each year.

In addition to the canning industry, in 1882 a building was erected and fitted up with two Williams evaporators. These have a capacity of three hundred baskets per day, and give employment to twenty-five additional hands. The fruits and vegetables prepared in this establishment are shipped to New York, Philadelphia, Boston and Chicago.

John H. Hoffecker, one of the prominent manufacturers and business men of Smyrna, is of German descent. His great-grandfather, Henry Hoffecker, many years before the Revolution, emigrated to America with his wife, four sons and four daughters, and settled on a tract of land at what is now Leatherbury’s Corner, in Kent County, near Smyrna. In his native land Henry Hoffecker learned the tailor’s trade and followed it as an occupation in this country. Late in life he returned to Germany to receive an inheritance, and died on his return passage to America.

John Hoffecker, his youngest son and grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born in Kent County, and during his life was successfully engaged in farming. He was married to Catharine Slack, and three sons were born to them, namely,—James, Joseph and Henry. Joseph, the second son and father of John H. Hoffecker, was a prosperous farmer, residing five miles east of Smyrna, in Duck Creek Hundred, until 1887, when he bought the Edward Joy farm, now owned by his son, John H. Hoffecker. He was married in 1826 to Rachel Van Gasken, by whom he had seven children. He died in 1851, at the age of sixty-seven years. His widow is now living at the age of eighty years.

John H. Hoffecker, the eldest son of John and Rachel Hoffecker, was born September 12, 1827, on the farm which he now owns, a mile and a half from Smyrna, and obtained his education in the schools of that town. At his father’s death he succeeded to the ownership of a large farm, which he cultivated from 1851 to 1868, when he moved to Smyrna and embarked in the business of canning fruits, with his brother Joseph as a partner. The partnership was dissolved in 1877, and the business has since been conducted by Mr. Hoffecker, who has greatly enlarged the establishment and increased the facilities for canning. In 1888 he added extensive evaporators and a fifty horsepower engine to his factory. He still continues to manage his farm of two hundred and twenty-five acres, which is mostly planted in fruit-trees. During many years of his life he has done a great deal of surveying in his neighborhood.

Mr. Hoffecker was one of the originators of the Fruit-Growers' National Bank of Smyrna, and has been a member of the Board of Directors since its organization in 1876. He is a director in the Kent County Mutual Insurance Company, president of the Smyrna Building and Loan Association since 1875, member of the Board of Town Commissioners since 1873 and president several years, a school director since 1882, and chairman of the Building Committee that erected the handsome public school building in 1883. He has been a member of the Board of Directors of the Philadelphia and Smyrna Transportation Line since its origin, and was greatly instrumental in securing the erection of the water-works for the town of Smyrna.

Mr. Hoffecker in politics was a Whig from 1849 to the formation of the Republican party, and in 1866 was one of the three Republican persons who voted for John C. Fremont, the first candidate of the Republican party for President. In 1876 he was a delegate to the National Republican Convention at Cincinnati, when Rutherford B. Hayes was nominated for the Presidency, and in 1884 was a delegate to the Convention at Chicago which nominated James G. Blaine for the same office. The important position he has held has given him prominence and influence not only in the town of Smyrna and his native county of Kent, but in the entire State of Delaware.

On the 19th of May, 1858, John H. Hoffecker was married to Miss Annie E. Appleton, daughter of John Appleton, of Odessa, Delaware. By this marriage were born four children, viz.: Walter O., married to Miss Beulah C. Hance, of Philadelphia,—is engaged in business with his father; John A., married to Miss Annie Waters, of Smyrna,—is chief clerk in the superintendent's office of the Delaware Division of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad at Clayton; James Edwin, married to Miss Annie Scott,—is employed as clerk in the same office; Annie, the youngest of the family, lives at home.

Mr. Hoffecker's first wife died June 20, 1881. Her father is living at the age of eighty-four years.

In March, 1883, Mr. Hoffecker was married to Mrs. Charlotte J. Hoffecker, daughter of Matthias German, of Kent County. Mrs. Hoffecker was a teacher in China from 1875 to 1878, living in the family of her sister, who was the wife of Rev. S. L. Baldwin, D.D., for twenty years a missionary of the Methodist Church in China.

Mr. and Mrs. Hoffecker are members of Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church of Smyrna. He has been a prominent supporter of this church and member of its Board of Trustees and Stewards since 1860.

In 1826 John and Alexander Peterson opened a tannery in Smyrna, near the corner of Mt. Vernon and Union Streets. In 1857 John Peterson sold his share to John Mustard, and the tannery was conducted by him and Alexander Peterson under the style of Peterson & Mustard, until the death of Peterson in 1868. It was then operated till 1875 by John and Horace R. Mustard, and then abandoned. In addition to tanning, quercitron bark was ground from 1850 until 1877. The quercitron bark is used for dyeing purposes, and is principally shipped to Europe. The capacity for grinding was one thousand tons per year. The tannery had a capacity of five thousand hides per year, and the principal tan was sole-leather. In 1883 Horace R. Mustard and A. Lee Cummins formed a co-partnership for the purpose of manufacturing baskets. The old tannery buildings were fitted up with machinery adapted to that use, and have since been operated as a basket factory. Baskets are made during four months of the year, and employment is furnished during this period to eighty persons. The majority of the baskets are used on the Peninsula, and the rest shipped to New Jersey and New York.

William Worden erected a steam saw-mill and machine-shop on Commerce Street in 1865. The building was a frame structure, forty by seventy feet. In 1867 he associated with himself J. D. Evans, and shortly afterwards the firm began to manufacture baskets in addition to the other branches of industry. Additional buildings were erected, and in the three departments employment was given to one hundred persons. In 1873 Evans withdrew from the business, and full charge was assumed by Joseph E. Worden, son of William Worden. In 1875 the Worden Manufacturing Company was organized. This company operated the works until 1878, when they were purchased by Tschudy & Catas. On December 18, 1880, the entire manufacturing was burned. In 1882 the present building, fifty-six by seventy feet, one story brick, and one story frame, was erected, and has since been operated as a basket-factory by Tschudy & Catas, with J. B. Evans as superintendent. Employment is given to seventy-five persons for four months each year. With improved machinery the capacity has increased from seventeen thousand, produced the first season, by Worden & Evans, to thirty-five thousand per week now manufactured. The principal markets are the Peninsula and New Jersey.

In 1847 James Taylor opened a general wheelwright-shop and wagon manufactory on Commerce Street. In 1855 George W. Taylor, a son, was admitted into partnership, and the place of business moved to Main Street. In the following year the foundry of James L. Bucke was purchased, and operated until 1861. In 1864 G. W. & S. Taylor formed a partnership, and in 1869 started a shop on the present site. Additions have been made at different times until at present the manufactory is one hundred and thirty-five feet front, two hundred and ten feet deep, and two stories high. In November the G. W. & S. Taylor Company was formed. In this manufactory are combined a foundry, wagon-shop and a specialty machine-shop.
share to John Mustard, and the tannery was con- shop. Basket machinery and agricultural implements are manufactured in large quantities. Employment is given to sixty persons. They manufacture annually thirty wagons, one hundred sulky cultivators, one thousand two hundred hand cultivators, and numerous other implements, and in addition a large amount of repair work.

In 1882 Joseph L. Beckett commenced to manufacture wagons on Main Street, in a two-story building, one hundred by fifty feet, erected for that purpose. He gives employment to seven men, and produces fifty wagons per year.

In 1871 Lassell & Curry began to manufacture wagons on the corner of Mt. Vernon and Market Streets. In 1882 Samuel Whitman bought the interest of Henry Curry, and the business has since been conducted under the style of J. C. Lassell & Co. In 1885 they moved into the building on Main Street, which they now occupy. Sixty-five wagons are manufactured annually, and employment is given to twelve men.

In 1865 Geo. W. Tilghman opened a factory for manufacturing wagons and agricultural implements. In 1880 a steam saw-mill was attached. He gives employment to five men.

In 1880 Voshall & Jerman erected a building on Commerce Street, in which they placed four evaporators. They evaporate nothing but peaches, and during the season give employment to seventy-five hands. The capacity is five hundred barrels every twenty-four hours. During a season fifty thousand pounds of fruit are prepared, which is shipped principally to Pittsburgh.

WATER WORKS.—The necessity of a water supply was for many years keenly felt by the citizens of Smyrna. In 1885 the Legislature was petitioned for an act authorizing the town to borrow twenty thousand dollars with which to provide a suitable supply. The act passed March 16th of that year placed the matter in the hands of the tax-payers of the town. A vote was taken July 16th of the same year, which resulted in favor of water. After examining the methods of obtaining water in use in the neighboring towns, it was decided to dig a well and erect a stand-pipe. The contract was awarded to A. H. Coon & Co., of Kingston, Pa.

The work was completed and accepted by the town on March 25, 1886. The well is eighteen feet in diameter and twenty-one feet deep, and has a capacity of six hundred thousand gallons per day. The stand-pipe is eight feet in diameter and one hundred feet high, with contents of thirty-seven thousand six hundred gallons. In the engine-room near the well was placed a forty horse-power engine and a fifty horse-power boiler, for the purpose of forcing the water throughout the town and to the stand-pipe, which is nearly a mile distant from the well, and on an elevation of thirty-four feet. In 1887 an additional thirty horse-power engine and forty horse-power boiler were placed in the engine-room. Four miles of pipe are laid through the town, to which are attached thirty-four twin hydrants for fire purposes. Water is also supplied to two hundred private consumers. Since the plant was accepted by the town, it has been under the careful superintendence of Abel Taylor.

The water commissioners appointed by the town commissioners are: 1886—E. W. Taylor, J. B. Cooper, J. Van Gassen; 1887—Samuel Taylor, J. B. Cooper, William E. Hall.

The Smyrna Coal, Coke & Gas Company was incorporated in 1857, with a capital stock of sixteen thousand dollars. The gas consumed in Smyrna was furnished by this corporation until 1870, when the plant was sold by the sheriff, and purchased by Joseph Smithers and Patrick Maguire, who have since operated it. The factory is on Main Street near the millpond, and contains a reservoir, with a capacity of five thousand feet. In 1870, when it was purchased by the present proprietors, seventeen burners were used for lighting the streets, and the total consumption amounted to two hundred thousand feet per year. Until 1875 the gas was manufactured from rosin, but since that time it is made from coal. At the present time there are forty-seven street lamps, and a consumption of two million feet per year. Three miles of pipe are laid through the town.

BANKS.—The Commercial Bank of Delaware was incorporated February 9, 1812, with a capital not to exceed two hundred thousand dollars, which was to be placed in four thousand shares at fifty dollars per share. The act provided that the main bank should be established at Smyrna and a branch at Milford. Commissioners to solicit stock were appointed as follows: Smyrna, John Cummins, Robert Patterson, Presley Spruance, Jr., Benjamin Coomb, Ebenezer Blackiston, John Clark, John Lowber and Isaac Davis; Milford, John Adams, James B. Ralston, John Mitchell, Elias Shackley, Robert Hill, John Williams, Thomas Peterkin and Louder Layton.

The first general meeting of the "Commercial Bank of Delaware," at Smyrna, was held June 4, 1812. There were present as directors of the main bank, John Cummins, Robert Patterson, Isaac Davis, John Clark, John Lowber, George Walker, William F. Corbit, Cornelius P. Comeyga and Joseph G. Rowland; and of the branch bank at Milford, John Mitchell, John Adams, Samuel Neal, Walter Douglass, Elias Shackley, Louder Layton and James B. Ralston. The directors were authorized to select suitable sites for banking-houses. On proceeding to an election the following officers were chosen: Main bank—President, John Cummins; Cashier, Ebenezer Blackiston; Clerk, James Stevenson. Branch bank—President, John Mitchell; Cashier, Jacob Biddle; Clerk, Leonard Adkins.

The bank was opened in a building on Commerce Street, recently the residence of Mrs. Ann Spruance.

John Cummins was president until 1820, when he was succeeded by John Clark, who held that position... until his death, which occurred in Aug., 1821. Robert Wilson was chosen his successor, and continued until the election in 1822, when John Cummins was again elected. In 1824 Thomas Peterken was chosen president and continued until his death, August 23, 1826, when Robert Patterson was elected his successor. He was president until 1830, when Reynear Williams was chosen. The last president was Presley Spruance, who was elected in 1832.

Ebenzer Blackiston was cashier until 1823, when Samuel H. Hodson was elected. He continued until the closing of the bank.

James Stevenson was succeeded as clerk in 1814 by Richard Simmons. Samuel H. Hodson was elected clerk in 1816.

John Mitchell was succeeded as president of the branch bank in 1819 by Mark Greer, and shortly afterwards the office of president was discontinued.

In 1816 Leonard Adkins was promoted to the position of cashier to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Jacob Biddle. Adkins was succeeded by Spencer Williams in 1828, who continued until 1830, when George S. Adkins was elected. He continued until the closing of the bank.

In 1815 James Owens was chosen clerk, which position he held until 1820, when Robert O. Pennewill was elected.

The bank was very prosperous until the Bank of Smyrna was organized and opened. After that its interest dwindled, and very little was done. On December 22, 1836, it was ordered by the directors “that the books, papers, cash and all other property whatsoever belonging to the bank be delivered over to Ayres Stockley, cashier of the Bank of Smyrna.” And on November 1, 1838, it was resolved that a final dividend of all the assets be declared.

John Cummins was a son of Daniel Cummins, who lived at the corner of Mount Vernon and Main Streets, Smyrna, in a large double brick dwelling-house, built during the early part of last century and still standing. Daniel Cummins was one of the signers from Kent County of the ratification of the Constitution of the United States, and the chief founder of the Episcopal Church, which for a century or more stood at Duck Creek.

Daniel Cummins was the son of Timothy Cummins, who was born in Scotland about 1689, was a member of the Church of England, and emigrated to America in the early part of last century, settling at Oxford, Maryland, under the Lord Baltimore patent. The Cummins family trace their origin to John Cummins, Lord of Badenoch, who was Regent of Scotland about the time of Edward I.

John Cummins, the subject of this notice, was born in Smyrna April 7, 1777, and died July 29, 1838. He was the ninth child of a family of six sons and six daughters, born to Daniel Cummins and Frances, his wife. Before he attained the age of twenty-one years, having been employed with George Kennard, the leading merchant of Smyrna, he was taken in by him as partner, and in 1801, four years from that time, he bought out the interest of Mr. Kennard, and started in the mercantile business for himself. Being possessed of great natural ability and excellent judgment, he was so successful that in a very few years he amassed a large fortune for that time. By indomitable energy he extended his business, until it included, not only his store in Smyrna, but the buying and selling of grain grown in Kent County, and a large portion of the Eastern Shore of Maryland. He thus made Smyrna the greatest grain market, except Wilmington, in the State of Delaware. He built a number of large granaries at Smyrna Landing, and owned several large vessels, by means of which he shipped his grain to Philadelphia, Wilmington, New York and Boston. These vessels, on their return, brought merchandise, and a great number of the merchants on the Peninsula were supplied with their goods from Smyrna by the wagons of John Cummins. His business interests continued to increase, and by the time he attained middle life he was the most extensive individual grain-dealer in Delaware. He purchased a large mill on the Brandywine at Wilmington, which was superintended by Samuel Shipley for many years. Corn-meal ground at this mill was shipped to the West Indies, and flour to Liverpool, England.

John Cummins, being an excellent financier, was elected president of the Commercial Bank of Smyrna, but at the expiration of the charter of that institution he declined to take an interest in the Smyrna Bank, and opened a private bank in connection with his large mercantile, milling and real estate interests and conducted it successfully until his death. He was the first in this region to practically introduce lime as a fertilizer for worn-out soils, and owned lime-kilns at Smyrna Landing.

Within twenty years from the time he began business for himself he acquired, by his tact and energy, about twenty-five farms in Kent County and the section of Maryland adjoining it, a large amount of valuable town property and bank stock, aggregating in value a quarter of a million of dollars, doubtless the wealthiest man of his time in the State.

In religion, John Cummins, like his ancestors, was an Episcopalian. He was chief founder and supporter through his life of the Protestant Episcopal Church at Smyrna, as the memorial chancel window of this church, donated by his youngest son, Alexander G. Cummins, expresses.

He was a delegate, as long as he lived, to the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States. For political preferences he had no aspirations, and with the exception of serving one term as a member of the State Senate, steadily refused to accept any office which would divert attention from his large and increasing business interests. John Cummins was a man of liberal ideas in both church and State relations. He commanded the fullest confidence of a very large part of the community in which he lived and of the Eastern Shore of Maryland, and of all with whom he dealt. Many people would leave large amounts of money in his possession without taking receipts. His honesty and integrity were never questioned. He was given to great hospitality, and his house, now occupied by his son, David J. Cummins, was open for the entertainment of the clergy of the Episcopal Church, of his own and adjoining States, and his numerous friends in Delaware, Maryland, Philadelphia and elsewhere. As a gentleman of the old school, he was punctilious, regular in his habits and of courtly bearing. In the domestic circle he was typical of the best example of the husband and father, educating and guiding his children in the path of morality, and offering them the best advantages that the schools and colleges of that day afforded. He was a generous and liberal supporter of the church and all religious objects, and foremost in all the public enterprises of town and county. He was a man of most indomitable will, energy and perseverance, an indefatigable worker and possessed great mental strength. It was said by many of those who knew him best that he was capable of filling, with eminent ability, the most exalted position of honor and trust in the gift of the people.

John Cummins married Susan Wilson, daughter of George and Susan Wilson, June 17, 1806. Their children were Susan H., married to Dr. Samuel Fieeler (deceased), of Smyrna; George W.; John H. (deceased); Alphonso, married John G. Black (deceased); Dr. William (deceased); Martha A. (deceased); Mary (deceased), married to D. B. Cummins, president of the Girard National Bank of Philadelphia; Daniel (deceased); Rachel W. (deceased); David J., president of the National Bank of Smyrna; Anna W. (deceased); Martha, married to Alfred Barratt (deceased); Robert H. and Alexander Griswold Cummins.

George Wilson Cummins, the eldest son of John Cummins and Susan H. Wilson, his wife, was born in Smyrna January 18, 1809. He obtained the rudiments of his education at the Smyrna Academy, an institution which his father founded and supported. At the age of thirteen he became a pupil of the famous scholar and mathematician, Enoch Lewis, who then conducted a school in Wilmington, remaining under his instruction for three years. At the end of this period his father assigned him to a position in his store, thus giving his son at an early age an excellent opportunity of acquiring a knowledge of the mercantile business. He was put under the charge of the chief clerk in his father's large store, instructed to implicitly obey him, and faithfully and thoroughly to perform every duty assigned. In 1830 George was taken into partnership in the extensive business which his father was then conducting at Smyrna. In March, 1834, soon after the death of his father, he assumed charge of the business, with his brother as partner, under the firm-name George W. Cummins & Brother, afterwards as Cummins & Brother. They bought large quantities of grain, which they shipped in their own vessels to Wilmington, Philadelphia, New York, Providence and Boston. They also bought and shipped bark, wood-staves, quercitrion and other products in large quantities. From 1856 to 1859, George W. Cummins was in business by himself. During the last-mentioned year he sold out to Col. Edwin W. Wilmer. Since that time he has been devoting his time and attention to his large land interests. He now owns two thousand five hundred acres of valuable farming land in Kent County, and resides at "Woodlawn," a delightful home one mile south of Smyrna. Mr. Cummins has been abundantly successful in the cultivation of peach orchards, which have yielded immense crops of that valuable fruit. He was one of the first persons in Kent County to grow the peach on a large scale, and was also one of the first to successfully use lime as a fertilizer in the region of country around Smyrna. He now has on his farms 8500 peach trees, 1500 pear trees and 100 apple trees.

In politics Mr. Cummins is a Democrat, and was elected by that party to represent Kent County in the State Legislature during the years 1856 and 1857. He served in that position to the satisfaction of his constituents, but he has never since sought or desired any political office, preferring to devote his time and attention to his business operations, which brought him a larger income and greater comfort. On account of his rare executive and administrative ability, in 1868 he was elected president of the Kent County Mutual Insurance Company, and continued to hold that office with the greatest acceptability until 1886, when he resigned. He was one of the first directors of the company when organized. He served as director in the Bank of Smyrna, and was many years a director in the Farmers' Bank of Delaware, at Dover. For forty-seven years he has been a member, and thirty years a vestryman, of the Protestant Episcopal Church of his native town.

Mr. Cummins was married June 6, 1837, to Miss Evelina M., daughter of William and Ann Denny, of Kent County. His wife's mother died in 1831, at the advanced age of one hundred and four years, retaining to her last year full possession of her mental faculties. The surviving children of George W. and Evelina Cummins are George W., of Smyrna; Walter, attorney-at-law and Municipal Court judge at Wilmington; Sarah A. and Louisa A. Cummins.

Reverend Alexander Griswold Cummins, the youngest son of John and Susan H. Cummins, was born in Smyrna, November 12, 1833. After obtaining a good preliminary education, he entered Trinity College, at Hartford, Connecticut, and graduated with the first honors of his class in 1852. He studied law for three years in the office of Henry J. Williams, then the leader of the Philadelphia bar, and immediately after his admission to practice sailed for Europe, and spent two years in study and travel. Upon returning, he began the practice of law in the office of his preceptor. At the expiration of five years, in fulfillment of the ted. He continued until his death, which occurred October 6, 1852, when Hon. Presley Spruance, an officers of the bank in the latter year were as follows: President, Ayres Stockley; Cashier, William M. Bell;
KENT COUNTY.

First Teller, E. J. Golt; Second Teller, John C. Stockley; Directors, Peter F. Causey, James R. Clements, Daniel Corbit, Daniel Cummins, George Davis, William J. Hurlock, Presley Spruance, Ayres Stockly and Henry Stout.

The charter of the bank was extended by the Legislature from time to time as it was necessary till 1878, when it was converted into a national bank. The certificate of incorporation was granted by John J. Knox, comptroller of currency, on April 4th of that year. At this time the bank was officered as follows: President, David J. Cummins; Cashier, William M. Bell; First Teller, O. B. Voshell; Second Teller——; Directors, James W. Anthony, John C. Bailey, John H. Bewley, D. J. Cummins, John E. Collins, James B. Conner, Wilson T. Cavender, Peter S. Collins, Andrew B. Roe, W. C. Satterfield, John W. E. Sudler and John M. Voshell.

The bank has always been successfully managed and has proved of great worth in the development and improvement of the surrounding country. In the selection of officers good judgment has been used and the bank has always enjoyed the confidence of the entire community. The capital stock still remains one hundred thousand dollars and the surplus is forty-five thousand dollars.

A meeting for the purpose of organizing a new bank in Smyrna was held June 17, 1876. The undertaking met with favor, and on proceeding to the election the following persons were chosen directors: Jno. B. Cooper, Henry C. Douglas, A. F. Griffith, Jno. H. Hoffecker, A. L. Hudson, Thomas James, R. C. Johnson, Samuel Roberts, George H. Raymond, Joseph Smithers, W. M. Tschudy.

The directors met June 20th, and elected George H. Raymond president and N. F. Wilds cashier.

The “Fruit-Growers’ National Bank of Smyrna” was the name selected for this banking institution. It was authorized to commence the business of banking by a certificate of incorporation granted by the comptroller of the currency on June 23, 1876. On July 18th of the same year S. G. Wilds was elected teller.

A building on Commerce Street was secured and fitted up for banking purposes. This building was purchased of Jno. H. Hoffecker in December, 1880, by the bank, and is still used as a banking-house. On July 18, 1876, the bank was opened for deposits and the payment of checks. The first discount day was August 1st of that year. The increased business of the bank made it necessary to employ a bookkeeper. On December 12, 1882, Charles E. Moore was elected to that position. He resigned April 14, 1885, and E. M. Fowler was elected his successor. The president, cashier and teller remain unchanged from the organization of the bank. In 1894 the number of directors was reduced from eleven to nine. The following changes have occurred in the board: in 1879 Samuel Hurlock succeeded A. F. Griffith and resigned in 1884, when N. P. Wilds was elected his successor; Jno. B. Cooper was succeeded by F. H. Harper in 1880; W. W. Tschudy was succeeded by William Ellison in 1885; and Henry Douglas and Joseph Smithers were not connected with the board after 1884. The prosperous condition of the bank is due to its able management by competent and trustworthy officers and the liberal patronage extended by the citizens of this vicinity. The capital stock is eighty thousand dollars and the surplus fifty thousand dollars.

SOCIETIES.—The Smyrna Building and Loan Association was organized April 9, 1887, with the following officers:

The first series was issued in April of that year, and subsequently eight more series were issued, three of which have matured. Each share matures when it has attained a value of two hundred dollars. The association has assisted very much in improving and building up the town.

The present officers are: President, Jno. H. Hoffecker; Vice-President, William E. Hall; Secretary, John B. Cooper; Treasurer, Jas. P. Hoffecker. Directors: Joseph E. Carter, Charles E. Moore, E. J. Golt, E. H. Beck, E. M. Fowler, G. M. Stevenson, W. P. Legg.

Morning Star Lodge, No. 6, I. O. O. F., was instituted June 18, 1842, with Henry Van Gasken, Timothy C. Palmatary, Edward Streets, John Mustard, and John Van Gasken as charter members. At the end of the first year there was a membership of about thirty. On December 10, 1845, the building in which the lodge met was burned and the records destroyed. The officers elected December 26th of that year were as follows: N. G., Thomas Hawkins; V. G., Benjamin Smith; Secretary, T. P. Brown; Assistant Secretary, C. F. Foulke; Treasurer, J. W. Denney.

The lodge owns a building in which meetings are held every Friday night. It also has a half interest in a cemetery, situated near Smyrna. The present membership is ninety-six.
The officers at present are: N. G., Joseph H. Wright; V. G., Charles A. Barnes; R. S., John R. Cameron; P. S., George M. Stevenson; Treasurer, Joseph Wright; Warden, John C. Manning; Conductor, E. J. Golt.

McDonald Encampment, No. 2, I. O. O. F., was instituted at Smyrna in 1847. The charter members were Isaac Solomon, Henry Van Gasken, Thomas P. Bryan, Peter Carr, John Millaway, John M. Denning and Joseph R. Megginson. The encampment was so named in honor of Robert McDonald, who died in Wilmington in July, 1887. The lodge owns a half-interest in the Odd Fellows' Cemetery, near the town. There are now forty-six members of the order, and meetings are held in the I. O. O. F. Hall on the first and fourth Tuesday evenings of each month.

The officers at the present time are as follows: C. P., Joseph H. Wright; H. P., Abel S. Fairies; S. W., John P. Patterson; J. W., Carl W. Williamson; Treas., Joseph Wright; Scribe, E. M. Fowler; O. S. S., George T. Collins; I. S. S., John R. Manning.

Harmony Lodge, No. 13, A. F. A. M., worked under dispensation of the Grand Lodge of Delaware from November 1, 1866, till June 27, 1867, when a charter was granted. The first officers were—W. M., Isaac K. Shortsman; S. W., Louis M. Bell; J. W., J. Howard Peterson; Treas., Wm. A. Clouds; Sec., J. W. Marim; Tyler, George Z. Steadley.

These, with the addition of James McCarter, comprised the charter members. The lodge increased in numbers, and at the end of a year had a membership of twenty-three. The third floor of the opera-house is nicely fitted for lodge purposes, and meetings are held on the first and third Thursdays of each month. The lodge has a membership of sixty-five, and is officered as follows: W. M., Chas. E. Moore; S. W., N. F. Wilds; J. W., Isaac H. Farin; Sec., Geo. M. Stevenson; Treas., Thos. B. Megear; S. D., James W. Anthony; J. D., John V. Spruance; Tyler, John R. Cameron, Jr.; S. S., Wm. B. Megear; J. S. D., T. T., Smithers.

The following are the present officers: Archon, John Wilkinson, Jr.; Provost, C. O. Swinney; Secretary, George M. Stevenson; Warden, Joseph H. Primrose; Sentinel, Wm. E. Hall; Financier, Wm. H. Baggs; Prelate, William Watkins.

Smyrna Lodge, No. 5, I. O. G. T., was instituted at Smyrna on March 25, 1885, with a membership of fourteen. The first officers were: P. C. T., William Wood; C. T., Herman Roe; V. T., Mrs. Wm. Wood; Chap., P. H. T. Wyatt; Dep., P. H. T. Wyatt; R. S., Miss Susie E. Wyatt; F. S., Miss Morah Colton; Treas., Edward Gilbert. The members steadily increased, and in May, 1887, there were one hundred and forty-four members. Meetings are held in Odd Fellows' Hall on Wednesday nights. The present officers are: P. C. T., T. L. Mason; C. T., Miss Sue Wright; V. T., Miss Maggie Sisco; Chap., Miss Lillie Statta; Dep., P. H. T. Wyatt; R. S., Herman Roe; F. S., Mrs. Herman Roe; Treas., Mrs. C. O. Swinney.

The American Club was organized January 1, 1884, with twenty-five members. The first officers elected were: Pres., W. Geo. Hill; V. P., N. F. Wilds; Sec., O. B. Voshell; Treas., H. S. Anthony. A room was procured in the Johnson building, and fitted up with the paraphernalia suitable for social enjoyment. In March, 1887, more commodious rooms were selected on Main Street, and are now occupied by the club. The present officers are as follows: Pres., W. George Hill; V. P., L. Irving Handy; Treas., E. H. Beck; Sec., R. H. Hill.

The Citizens' Hose Company, No. 1, was organized January 6, 1886, with twenty-seven members. B. V. Weldon was elected President; C. F. Lippincott, Vice-president, and H. S. Anthony, Secretary. Nothing further was done during the year, and on January 6, 1887, a reorganization was effected, when the following officers were chosen: President, B. F. Weldon; Vice-president, E. M. Fowler; Secretary, O. B. Voshell; Treasurer, G. A. Wick; Chief, Samuel Taylor.

In April the company purchased a new hose-carriage and hose, also thirty uniforms consisting of hats, belts and rubber overcoats and boots.

They are now in possession of two hose-carriages, one thousand feet of hose, a hook-and-ladder wagon and eighty feet of ladders.

J. R. Robinson was elected secretary June 20, 1887. With this exception the officers are as above. Meetings are held on the second Monday of each month.

There are at present thirty-two members.

Smyrna Library Association.—A meeting of the citizens of Smyrna was held in Odd Fellows' Hall on November 18, 1857, for the purpose of considering the advisability of opening a public library in that town. P Spruance was called to the chair, and E. D. Dailey selected secretary. The project met with success, and a committee on plan of organization was appointed, composed of the following gentlemen: Dr. J. E. Clawson, Rev. W. H. Brisbane, D. Lockwood, B. H. Hoffecker, Jno. M. Denning, W. R. Cahoon and ex-Gov. William Temple. On January 29, 1858, a meeting was called and an organization effected by the election of the following persons as the first officers: President, Daniel Cummins; Vice-president, Rev. William H. Brisbane; Recording Secretary, Robert D. Hoffecker; Corresponding Secretary, Dr. E. D. Dailey; Treasurer, William C. Eliason; Managers, Jno. M. Denning, Robert H. Cummins, Dr. J. E. Clawson.
The public inauguration of the association was held in Odd Fellows' Hall on March 15, 1858.

The books were selected by Rev. William H. Brisbane, assisted by Daniel Cummins and William C. Ellison, and during the first year five hundred dollars' worth were purchased.

They were catalogued and arranged in the library room in Odd Fellows' Hall by Dr. W. T. Collins. The library was in Odd Fellows' Hall until 1870, when it was moved to a room in the Town Hall, which it has since occupied. In its infancy lectures were delivered in its interest by such men as Rev. Phillips Brooks, Frank Hurn, Dr. Cook, Rev. Dr. Carrow, and the resident ministers—Dr. McCluskey, of the Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. Grammer, of the Episcopal Church, and Rev. Brisbane, of the Methodist Church.

In 1861 Edwin Wimer was elected president vice Daniel Cummins. He was succeeded in 1864 by Dr. J. E. Clawson, who continued until 1866, when John C. Stockley was elected. In 1875 N. F. Wilds succeeded Stockley and continued until 1878, when John H. Hoffecker was chosen. In 1879 H. G. Budd was elected president, which position he still holds. The library has always been in a prosperous condition, and has proved of invaluable worth in the community. At present it contains three thousand volumes of well-selected literature. They are one hundred and seventy-eight stockholders.

The officers at present are: President, H. G. Budd; Recording Secretary, Walter O. Hoffecker; Corresponding Secretary, L. I. Handy; Treasurer, W. P. Cummins; Managers, Wm. H. Bagge, Wm. A. Farise, W. H. Janney.

TOWN HALL.—At a meeting of the town commissioners, held April 27, 1869, it was resolved that for the convenience of the inhabitants a town hall should be erected without delay. George H. Raymond, John C. Bailey, G. W. Cummins, Jr., and H. C. Douglass were appointed a committee to select and purchase a suitable lot on which to build, to procure and adopt plans and to make contracts for the erection of the building, provided ten thousand dollars could be borrowed at reasonable rates. On May 11th it was decided to purchase of Dr. S. M. Fisk a lot on the corner of Main and South Streets. A plan of the hall as drafted by Richard Mitchell was adopted. On July 8, 1869, the ground was broken for a hall, which should be fifty-six feet on Main Street, forty-five feet on South Street and three stories high. The cornerstone was laid August 19th by George H. Raymond, chairman of the building committee. Addresses were made by Alderman Pennington, Colonel Raymond and Rev. Dr. Morssell. The building was completed and opened early in 1870. In 1887 the building was extended twenty feet on Main Street. The first floor is occupied by Alderman Henry G. Budd, the Smyrna Library and the meeting-room of the Citizens' Hose Company. The second floor is used as a hall for public meetings and the third story is occupied as a lodge-room for the Masons.

HOTELS.—In 1787 Joshua Fisher built a hotel in Smyrna. In 1792, when the Legislature met in Smyrna, it convened at this hotel, which was then kept by Thomas Hale. The hotel was conducted for many years by Mrs. Comfort Lockwood, and in 1827, when Thomas L. Temple became proprietor, was known as the "Indian King Hotel." The property remained in the Fisher family until purchased by Tilghman Foxwell. While in his possession it was operated for some time by his son, Charles. Jefferson & Clayton, the present owners and proprietors, have been in possession for several years.

The house on the corner of Main and Mt. Vernon Streets was erected as a double dwelling in 1817 by Robert Patterson. In 1837 it was converted into a hotel and was known as the "Upper" or "Steamboat Hotel." It was first conducted by Thomas Jackson. It was next owned by Joseph Hoffecker and November 24, 1856, was sold by his heirs to Dr. S. M. Fisler. The building was improved and remodeled by him and opened April 26, 1856, as Delaware House, with Gilbert Leonard as its first proprietor. The property is now owned by Mrs. Wilson T. Cavender. William Fell, the present proprietor, took charge of the hotel in August, 1887.

POST-OFFICE.—Previous to the construction of the railroad the mail was carried daily to Smyrna from Dover. The last mail contractor was John Van Gesel. In 1887 John S. Lambdou was postmaster and his successors were D. Lockwood, James Legg, William Ringgold, Peter Wynn, William Wilds, E. J. Golt, Marion Green, Benjamin Donoho, Jonathan Emerson, Thomas Carroll, William H. Baggs and John H. Bewley, present incumbent, who was appointed in August, 1885. There are eleven mails per day.

CHAPTER LIX.

LITTLE CREEK HUNDRED.

This hundred lies on the Delaware Bay and originally extended westward between Little Creek and Little Duck Creek to the Maryland line. Its limits were reduced to form a part of Kenton Hundred by act of Assembly, February 3, 1809, when all that part lying west of the Delaware Railroad was made a part of Kenton Hundred, thus making Little Creek the smallest hundred in the county, embracing in its limits about fifty-three square miles and a population in 1880 of one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight.

A large portion of the hundred, where it is located on the bay, is marsh land. Various efforts have been made to drain and reclaim the marsh land, but they have not been successful. The most ambitious and costly enterprise was that undertaken by Judge Jacob Stout and Chief Justice Thomas Clayton, on Feb. 2, 1818; they obtained an act from the General Assemby granting them Kent Island, upon condition that they would reclaim it. Dykes were erected and canals cut, and after five years of labor and an expenditure of 40,000 dollars the land was in excellent condition for tillage; but in 1830 a strong easterly storm swept everything before it and reduced the island to its original condition of marsh land. Back of this low district the land is exceedingly fertile and has been brought by good farming to a high state of cultivation. Wheat, corn and tomatoes are produced in large quantities. The Delaware Railroad, running down the west side of the hundred, furnishes transportation for the farm products. In former times it was contemplated to establish a railroad from Dona Landing to form a highway between the North and South. The Philadelphia and Norfolk Transportation Company was chartered on February 9, 1825, to make a thorough connection from the North to Norfolk, by running a steamboat from Philadelphia to Dona. From Dona passengers were to be taken by way of Dover to Seaford, where they would take the steamboat to Norfolk. In a few years the company failed and Dona lapsed into a sleep until 1848, when the steamboat “Zephyr” was run from Philadelphia to connect with the Peninsula line of mail-coaches. Hepburn & Benson kept a hotel at Dona from 1848 to 1852. The stage and boat lines were abandoned when the Delaware Railroad was completed and nothing remains but the marshes to show this formerly famous stopping-place of Dona.

One of the first tracts laid out in the territory now Little Creek Hundred was called “York.” It contained six hundred acres, and was warranted to William Stevens, of Maryland, April 13, 1676. It was sold by him in December, 1696, to John Richardson, for twenty thousand pounds of tobacco. It is described as being near Little Creek, and a portion of it now bears the name “York Seat.” A part of this land and an adjoining tract came into the possession of Adam and Richabel Mott, about 1750. On January 1, 1759, Richabel Mott, “out of love and good-will,” gave half an acre of land, situate on the west side of the tract called “York,” to the Society of the Church of England and to the Presbyterians, for the use of a school for the education of the youth of either of the societies. The property was vested in John Brinclieo and Richabel Mott, vestrymen of the Parish of St. Mary, and John Miller, Presbyterian minister at Dover, and their successors as trustees. Richard Mott was the oldest son of Richabel Mott, and succeeded to a part of the estate.

Manlove Hayes, on January 10, 1818, bought two hundred acres of the York tract, which in 1785 was owned by Jacob Emerson, and has held it ever since, while another portion is now owned by Dr. Emanuel Stout, who is also proprietor of the White Oak survey, originally taken up by John Richardson. A successor to Richardson in the property was Eleazer McComb, who built the mansion-house.

A tract of land called “Willing Brook,” lying a short distance west from and including “Cowgill’s Corner,” was taken up by John Richardson and surveyed April 18, 1676, containing two thousand acres. A month later he installed Thomas Crampton as his tenant, who was to have half the income and increase of the property as compensation for his services as farmer. Richardson engaged to bring to the plantation three hundred apple trees, and Crampton was to set them out and care for them for three years. Richardson bought the Indian right to the land on September 20, 1676, of the Indian chief Patocoque. The consideration was “three moth-coates, having received four yards of frize and a half yard buttons and thread to the value of two of them, and one moth-coat more to be paid to me, the said Patocoque, or to Mahoxy, my brother.” At the close of the deed and before the signature Patocoque wrote: “Forgot. I doe acknowledge to have received eight bottles of rum as part of satisfaction.”

John Stevens, of Dorchester County, Maryland, disputed the title to this land, and August 5, 1679, Richardson petitioned the commissioners of Dorchester County. He recited that John Stevens “hath by violence and force of arms turned the said Crampton out of doors, together with his wife and family, etc.” This issue was brought before the Sussex County Court in December, 1679. A letter was read from Edward Cantwell, surveyor, dated December 10, 1679, denying that he ever gave power to Thomas Phillips to grant land, nor did he give John Richardson a warrant for more than three hundred acres, and that he (Cantwell) afterwards met Phillips, who said Richardson “had threatened to beat him if he did not lay out such a quantity of land.” The tract in dispute is described as being on the south side of a branch (Muddy Branch) of Duck Creek, adjoining the land of William Stevens, who then owned “York.” The case between Stevens and Richardson was in litigation several years. At the court, held in February, 1680, at Whorekill, the jury found for Richardson, “being he is the first settler to have right to the same hee hath seat.” Stevens appealed to the Governor and Council at New York, but there is no record of their disposition of the case.

John Stevens, in 1680, had seated Samuel Stites on a tract of land, as the deed recites, “upon near Little Creek, in the Whorekill precinct,” and on July 7, 1680, Stites appeared before the court and deposed that “about April 3 last John Richardson came to his house and demanded him to give him possession; that if he did not he would send him to prison, and further that Richardson had brought men servants to take possession, and so, through fear, he gave possession and went away.”

This land was probably “Willingbrook,” as there appears no other in dispute. John Stevens owned other land, however, in the hundred, and in 1715 sold part of one of the tracts to John Marmin. In 1747 “Willingbrook” was owned, in part at least, by Peter Galloway, who, on February 11th of that year, sold one hundred and eighty acres of it to Adam Mott, and two hundred acres to Richabel Mott. In this deed it is mentioned that the land formerly belonged to John Richardson, who bought of James Sherwood, the latter having bought it from Jehosaphat Holland. At the same time Richabel Mott bought land formerly owned by Joseph Custan on Harring Branch, near the "York" tract, and one hundred acres of the latter tract, adjoining the property of William Morton and Samuel Berry. Mott sold part of this land on May 27, 1768, to Gouverneur Emerson, and on May 6, 1767, Emerson sold it to Thomas Irons.

Henry Stevens (a grandson of John Stevens) in 1776 had acquired, by purchase and inheritance, nearly all the land south of Muddy Branch to the road to Dons Landing, including "Willingbrook.

Benjamin F. Hamm, who resides on a farm called "Pleasanton Abbey" (a part of this old tract), is a grandson of Henry Stevens. On this farm Henry Stevens' old residence still stands. Mrs. J. P. Du Hamel, a granddaughter of Henry Stevens, owns a portion of the same land. Other owners of the old "Willingbrook" tract are Dr. Henry Ridgely and Daniel C. Cowgill, of Dover; Rev. J. B. Merritt and Peter E. Lowther, member of the House of Representatives in 1887, who lives in a fine old mansion built by Samuel Price in the summer of 1800.

John Stevens, who had the dispute with John Richardson, took up a tract of thirteen hundred acres, called "London," on which a part of the Little Creek Landing is now built. It adjoins "Simpson's Choice." "London" was patented to John Stevens by Governor Androsse, and was sold on September 11, 1899, by his sons, John and William W.

William Morton and William Rodney, who obtained another patent October 9, 1701, divided "London" equally the same day, and Morton named his portion "Tiverton." "London" is now mainly owned by D. Millin and Thomas W. Wilson, George Parris and Hughett Knight.

"Chipping Norton" and "Just Saved" are two properties north of "Willingbrook." The former was granted to Simon Irons in 1679, and is laid down as on Muddy Branch, and containing eight hundred acres. In 1717 it belonged to David Morgan, who left it to his son Matthew. It was then called "Chipping Norton" or "Fiddler's Neck." Thomas Green, of Duck Creek Cross-Roads, sold it August 25, 1782, to Richard Sanders. David Pleasanton owns a large part of these estates, and his farm bears the old name of "Chipping Norton." Other owners are Rev. J. B. Merritt and Rev. John P. Du Hamel.

Timothy Hanson, April 19, 1715, took up a tract adjoining and west of "London," containing three hundred and sixty-five acres, and called the "Exchange," which is now owned in part by Dr. Henry Ridgely.

John Brinckloe, a member of the Assembly in 1683, took up several tracts of land on Herring's Branch, which, in 1760, were owned by one of his descendants, also a John Brinckloe; and on which a manor-house was built. The property adjoined "Brookhay," an estate of one thousand acres, warranted January 15, 1675, to Francis Whitwell. Simon Irons became a very large proprietor in the neighborhood, owning at one time, after 1686, "Chipping Norton," "Just Saved," and "Whitwell.

His descendants inherited the property, and the name is yet known in the county. Thomas Irons, a son, in 1767, bought part of the "York" and "Willingbrook" lands. "Brinckloe's Chance" is now owned by Alexander Laws, J. B. Fennimore and Isaac Register.

The place known as "Cowgill's Corners," near Little Creek Landing, was, prior to 1760, in the possession of Joshua Clayton, who, by will January 21, 1761, devised it to his granddaughter, Eunice Osborne. He had previously conveyed to his daughter Sarah, widow of Thomas Cowgill, eighty-eight acres, a part of "Willingbrook," May 11, 1750. The other tract was known as "Higham's Ferry," on which was the mansion-house. Eunice Osborne left the property to her children,—Elizabeth, wife of Henry Cowgill; Mary, widow of Israel Asten; Eunice, wife of Peter Edmonson; and Tabitha, wife of Jabez Jenkins. The latter sold to Henry Cowgill, January 3, 1794, one undivided quarter-interest in the lands of Eunice Osborne. He settled at the Corner, which took his name. Jabez Jenkins, November 12, 1771, bought of Richard Richardson one hundred and eighty-eight acres of land, part of a large tract called "St. Andrew's," adjoining the land of John Clayton, and which was northwest of "London." This tract of "St. Andrew's" is now owned by D. Mifflin Wilson. Jabez Jenkins' land passed to his son, Timothy, and from him to his son Jabez, who, August 7, 1818, sold it to Sarah, wife of John Turner and Jonathan W. Mifflin.

"Mount Pleasant," embracing three hundred acres, between "Higham's Ferry" and "Chipping Norton," was warranted, February 28, 1691, to Francis Simons and Elizabeth Irons, who disposed of one hundred and twenty acres to David Morgan and the remainder to Joshua Clayton May 12, 1720. This tract became the property of Ralph Needham, and was divided between the heirs in 1770. William Seward owns part of it at present. "Betty's Fortune" was taken up by Isaiah Wharton, and contained between three and four hundred acres, and lay north of "Simpson's Choice" and northeast of York tract, also adjacent. April 29, 1775, two hundred acres of it was sold to Garrett Sipple. The tract is in a large part now owned by the Wards, and was formerly owned by William Walker.

In 1768 Isaiah Wharton took up three hundred and seventy-five acres, including a number of ponds between "Betty's Fortune" and the bay, and adjoining the former on the northeast and northwest of Taylor's Gut. There were nine hundred and ninety-seven acres of upland and marsh taken up on surveys of 1734 and 1748 to Waitman Sipple, and in 1768 they were surveyed to his son, Waitman, Jr. North of “Betty’s Fortune” to Herring Branch is now owned by the estate of Dr. Robert H. Clark, of Milford.

“Simpson’s Choice,” lying on Little Creek, east of “London,” was taken up by William Simpson. About 1680 it was assigned to John Brinckloe, and passed respectively by arrangement to John Edmondson and John Richardson, Sr. The latter, by deed, conveyed it to John Richardson, Jr., who, September 7, 1691, sold part to Thomas Clifford. John Richardson, Jr., also sold part to Robert and Lawrence Porter and part to Samuel Berry. John Hann, in 1784, became the owner of that portion which had belonged to John Bell. The road from Little Creek to Leipsic was the dividing line of this property and “London.” The land is now held by Captain David Montgomery, Captain William Blackson and Samuel W. Hall.

April 3, 1760, a warrant was granted to John Brinckloe for land and salt marsh, containing four thousand acres, on the north side of Herring Branch, which was part of a large tract called the “Addition,” formerly surveyed to Simon Irons, but which survey and record was lost. John Brinckloe died before the survey was made, January 10, 1768. It included several old surveys, among which was “Brookbay.” This survey has finally come into the possession of J. L. Cowgill, Dr. W. W. Parvis, J. Alexander Fulton, Alexander Laws, Hughett Knight, of Dover, and Abram and James Moore.

A tract of four acres, now owned by T. K. Taylor, near Leipsic, was sold, November 19, 1757, to Jonathan Osborne. Forty square feet of this was reserved as a grave-yard, where “Emmanuel Stout’s daughter Sally is buried.”

An old tract called “Belle’s Endeavour” was owned by Christopher Southey in 1716. This land was sold by Thomas Green (son of George Green, who owned large lots in Duck Creek Hundred), November 15, 1774, to William Barnes, who the same day passed it to Daniel Needham. It is now owned in part by A. N. Harper and J. A. Nicholson. A portion came into possession of Elias Naudain, who, in 1830, owned Naudain’s Landing, the first fast land above Leipsic. Naudain had a granary here and kept a store at the first bend of the road, above Leipsic, in front of his residence. The granary and store were abandoned in 1848, when the land came into possession of the Nicholsons. Thomas Walker conveyed to Elisha Snow one hundred acres of land February 16, 1716, on the south side of the southwest branch of Duck Creek, part of a large tract laid out for Thomas Wilson, and called “Darby Town,” which was later conveyed to Evan Jones. Portions of this tract are owned by A. N. Harper, J. T. York and J. A. Nicholson.

In 1816 the following were large landowners in Little Creek Hundred, and owned the number of acres stated:

next before the Monthly Meeting." At a Quarterly Meeting held 17th of Third Month, 1714, it was agreed that Little Creek Meeting be "henceforward as a meeting of worship distinct from Duck Creek, of which it hath hitherto been a part." A meeting-house was built on land which, on September 12, 1771, was deeded by Eleazer Badger to Samuel Hanson, Thomas Hanson, Ezekiel Cowgill, John Cowgill, Samuel Hanson, Jr., and Henry Cowgill, for that purpose. This meeting-house was presently abandoned, and on May 6, 1802, Jabez Jenkins sold one hundred and fifty-seven square perches of land to Daniel Clayton, Jonathan Cowgill and Samuel Price "in trust for the people called Quakers," on which the present meeting-house was erected. It was regularly used for religious purposes until about 1865, after which only occasional services were held. In January, 1888, it was sold, the last Quakers having disappeared from the hundred. Their old graveyard is still used for interments.

Bethel M. E. Church is a handsome brick building located on the State Road, one mile below Little Duck Creek. The first worshippers of this sect met in the house of Joseph Farrow, and a church was built in 1780. The old edifice retained the name of Farrow's until 1855, when it was rebuilt. In the original church the Farrowes, Carrisons, Smiths, Boggs and Jeffersons, all old families, were influential members. Work was commenced on the present structure in 1853, and August 6, 1854, it was completed. Rev. Beverly Waugh, senior bishop of the M. E. Church at that time, preached the dedication sermon. Bishop Waugh was a father-in-law of Charles M. Cullen, of Georgetown. The building is thirty-six by fifty feet, has a commodious lecture-room and two class-rooms in the basement, and cost four thousand dollars. James T. Parson, of Philadelphia, formerly of this locality, was the architect, and Fieson & Fenimore the contractors. A graveyard is annexed. The church has always been supplied by the ministers from the Smyrna Circuit, and a list of them will be found in the article upon that circuit. The Quarterly Conferences of the circuit have met here frequently.

Manship African M. E. Church is located at Bishop's Corner, and was built about 1880. In 1876 a very neat building was erected, and the old name of Sutton's Chapel was changed to Manship Chapel, in honor of Rev. Andrew Manship.

Bell's Chapel, near Leipsic, was built in 1847 and belongs to the African M. E. Conference. The land was given by Eliza Bell. The building is only used occasionally on account of its dilapidated condition.

Schools.—District No. 11 was the first to have a school in the hundred. An attempt was made as early as February 1, 1816, to create a school there. At that time an act passed the Legislature to raise one thousand dollars by lottery to "erect a school in Little Creek Neck and Hundred, near the village of Leipsic." Nothing came of this, however. At the business, and now each boat-owner leases from thirty to fifty acres of the beds. Fifty thousand bushels of grain and one thousand tons of marsh hay are shipped from the Landing yearly.

This hay is used in making ropes and in packing goods. At present there are about three hundred and fifty inhabitants in the town.

The Gun Swamp Methodist Episcopal Church was situated about a mile from the Landing. A school was kept in the old church in 1832, and both white and colored children attended. The building went into decay, and in February, 1875, was moved into Little Creek Landing, and May 30th of the same year was repaired and opened for worship. In 1884 a new building was erected at a cost of three thousand five hundred dollars. There are at present twenty five members. The church was in the Dover Circuit until Dover was made a station in 1835, and was then annexed to Camden Circuit, and continued there until 1852, when it was made a station. It was annexed to Leipsic Circuit. The names of the ministers will be found in the articles upon the circuits, to which the church was attached.

The Little Creek Canning Company erected a building in 1873, but for the last few years it has not been in operation.

The town of Little Creek was made a post-office in 1868, with William Hobson as postmaster. He was succeeded by Martin Collins, and the latter by J. Thomas Lowe.

LEIPSIC.—In the old records there is the conveyance of a tract of land called the "Weald" by Edward Bessell to James and George Gano and Jacob Stout, April 30, 1723. The "Weald" contained 300 acres, and had been patented originally to John Hillyard October 10, 1687. Shortly after the conveyance to Stout and Gano, Stout laid out the town of Little Landing, the name being given for the reason that it was the only fast ground above the bay. January 24, 1814, an attempt was made to name the place Vienna, and the bill had passed the Legislature, but on January 28th of the same year, the present name of Leipsic was given it, as it was a great shipping-point for flax. Hon. Jacob Stout, who lived there in a house which still stands on the bend of the road from Dover to Morton, was instrumental in giving the place its name. The town in 1836 was one of the most important on the Peninsula. The wharves were hives of industry and the boat-yards employed large numbers of men. Large quantities of lumber, grain and oysters were shipped to all parts of the world. Daniel Palmer, Charles Harper & Brother and Robert H. More kept large general stores in the town. As many as twenty-four vessels loaded at one time at the wharves. The boat-builders were James G. Waples, Wilson L. Cannon and George Parris. The latter had a saw-mill and several granaries. Mr. Cannon is still living in Dover. He began building boats in 1836. Among the vessels built by him were the "Louis," "Mary" and "Fairman" (lost on the Irish coast), and in 1854 he closed his yard, after building the last vessel launched at the town. February 2, 1839, the Leipsic Navigation Company was organized to improve the creek, with W. L. Cannon as president; Wm. Collins, secretary; and Joseph P. Palmer, treasurer. Three canals were cut, at a cost of two thousand eight hundred dollars, to shorten the distance to the bay. The Smyrna, Leipsic and Philadelphia Steamboat Company was incorporated February 3, 1839, but did not organize until 1853, when W. L. Cannon was made president, B. F. Chatam secretary and John McClary treasurer.

The company first ran the steamers "Diamond State" and "Lamokin," but the management has now passed into other hands, which placed on the route the "Maid of Kent and "David Reed." The domestic trade of the town is quite large, and a profitable business is done in the shipping of marsh hay, grain and oysters.

John W. Fenimore, merchant at Leipsic, was born in Burlington County, New Jersey, March 1, 1830. His grandfather, John W. Fenimore, was an officer in the Revolution, and after the war lived and died near Burlington. George W. Fenimore, his son, and the father of the subject of this sketch, married Eliza Scott. She died in 1837, leaving three sons and one daughter, and he married his second wife, Mary Reeves, in 1839. He soon thereafter bought a farm of two hundred and eighty acres in Little Creek Hundred, near Dover. The following year, 1841, they moved to Delaware and began the cultivation of the farm, on which there was then a small orchard of five hundred peach trees. He immediately set out another orchard of ten acres and shipped the first crops to Philadelphia by boat from Short's Landing on Smyrna Creek. He had just begun to prosper as a general farmer and fruit-grower when he died, in 1844, and the farm was sold by the administrator a few years after to R. B. Jump, of Dover.

John W. Fenimore, their son, attended school at Leipsic and Smyrna, and then learned the trade of bricklayer and plasterer and diligently followed it until 1862, when he was appointed by the Levy Court collector for Little Creek Hundred. He served in that position for three years. In 1865 he bought out the store of Samuel Hargadine at Leipsic, then kept in a building immediately south of his present store building. As a merchant Mr. Fenimore prospered and his trade increased. He added to the business the purchase and sale of grain, coal, lime, fertilizers and general produce. He has since successfully continued the mercantile business and runs a steamboat from Leipsic to Philadelphia, making three trips a week in summer and two in winter to facilitate his own business and for the general trade of the community.

Mr. Fenimore represented Little Creek Hundred in the Levy Court of Kent County four years. Since 1877 he has been a trustee of the poor, was made.
treasurer of the County Board of Trustees of the Poor the same year and has since continued in the same responsible position. He served as school commissioner for several years. He owns a farm of two hundred acres of valuable land adjoining Leipsic.

Mr. Fenimore was married October 24, 1852, to Margaret Taylor, daughter of Henry Taylor, of Kent County, a descendant of one of the oldest families in the county. The children of this marriage were Matilda, married to William Hazel, now in business at Dover; John W. Fenimore, Jr., in business with his father at Leipsic, married to Jennie Wilson, of Kent County; Arthur married to Ida Clements in the spring of 1885, both dying of typhoid fever within four weeks in the fall of the same year. The two youngest sons, Henry and George Fenimore, live with their parent. Mr. and Mrs. Fenimore are members of the Methodist Protestant Church at Leipsic.

The post-office was established in 1836 with Robert H. More postmaster, who has been followed by Gilbert Childress, George Spicer and James D. Moore.

The Leipsic Cannings Factory is the largest in the State. It was started in 1879 by Samuel W. Hall, of Dover, with a capital invested of fifty thousand dollars and a capacity of one million cans and employment for one hundred and twenty-five hands. In 1874, I. M. Lavin purchased the factory and since his death it has been conducted by his sons, under the firm-name of I. M. Lavin's Sons. Captain J. H. Fleming started his phosphate factory in 1877 and has been running since that time with a capacity of two hundred tons a year. The Hoffecker Mill, four miles from Dover, on Little Creek, is one of the oldest in the county, having been built in the early part of the present century.

Leipsic now has about four hundred inhabitants. It was incorporated as a town in 1852, and the first commissioners were Alexander Laws, George W. Spicer and Westcott Campbell. David Crockett surveyed the town limits and Thomas P. Wall was the first alderman. The town records are missing from 1852 to 1863. The following is a list of officials since the latter date:

Churches.—The Muddy Branch Methodist Episcopal Church was established about 1800, a short distance from Leipsic, and was abandoned about 1837, when the church was built in Leipsic through the efforts of Rev. John S. Fury. The old building went into decay rapidly, and in 1849 the only trace left was the grave-yard. The building of 1837 is still standing, and forms the main church of the Leipsic Circuit. Prior to 1868 the Leipsic Church was a part of the Smyrna Circuit. The ministers of the church will be found in the list of ministers of the same circuit.

The Leipsic Methodist Protestant Church was organized June 3, 1865, with W. M. Smith, John G. Scotten, W. H. Moore, John Slaughter, Matthew Hutchinson, Samuel Butler, B. F. Hamm, Isaac Slaughter, Rees Taylor, Peter Campbell, Ferris Porter, T. P. Walls, George W. Clothier and Henry Wilson as the first trustees. Two thousand dollars were immediately raised for a church, and December 31, 1865, was fixed for the dedication of the new building. There were present Rev. J. D. Valient (who preached the first sermon), Rev. Thomas Downs, Rev. D. F. Ewell (minister in charge), and Rev. J. B. Merritt. The weather was unfavorable, and the dedication was postponed until January 28, 1865. Rev. J. B. Murray preached the dedication sermon. The building is forty-six by thirty-two feet, and costs $2900. Immediately upon opening the church a revival meeting was begun, and eighty persons were enrolled as members. The church was supplied with ministers from the Kenton and Clayton churches until 1883, when a separate station was established, and the following have preached here: Rev. George Smith, J. D. Lucas, McM. Thomson and B. W. Kindley. There is a grave-yard attached to the church.

Rev. M. Marseilles attempted to form an Episcopal congregation in Leipsic May 10, 1869, and the following officials were elected for what was called Immanuel Church: Senior Warden, Andrew Speer; Junior Warden, G. W. Spicer; Vestrymen, Messrs. Clements, Eager, Wilson, Lamb, Hoffecker, Hopkins and Denney. Bishop Lee confirmed a number of persons as members; but the congregation was dissolved after a few years.

CHAPTER LX.

KENTON HUNDRED.

Kenton Hundred is in the northwestern portion of Kent County, and was carved out of Duck Creek and Little Creek Hundreds, by an act of the Legislature, passed February 3, 1869, which recited: "The said new hundred shall be called Kenton Hundred, and shall embrace all that portion of Duck Creek and Little Creek Hundreds in Kent County, as at present constituted, lying on the west side of the west line of the Delaware Railroad."

This made the bounds of the new hundred as follows: on the north by Blackbird Hundred of New Castle County and Duck Creek; on the east by the Delaware Railroad; on the south by Dover Hundred and the Fork Branch of St. Jones' Creek, and on the west by the State of Maryland.

Some of the best farming lands of the State are in the hundred, they having been highly cultivated for years. Large quantities of peaches, wheat, corn and vegetables are raised.

About 1840, Simon Spearman, who lived on the Middle Alley road, on the farm now owned by Edward Streets, shipped the first peaches for market, and the return was so profitable that a number of the farmers planted trees, until to-day three-fourths of the land is planted with peach trees. The shipments from the various railroad stations have approximated in one year as high as three hundred thousand baskets. The year 1887 was one of the poorest ever known, and fifty thousand will cover the shipment.

The Little Duck Creek runs through the centre of the hundred, and the railroad facilities are excellent,—the Delaware Railroad running down the east side, the Delaware and Maryland through the centre and about one mile of the Kent County, Smyrna and Delaware Bay Railroad in the northwestern section. In 1880 the population was two thousand eight hundred and seventeen. There has been no survey since the erection of the hundred, but the area is about thirty-five thousand acres.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS.—The hundred early attracted the attention of the English settlers, and in the earliest records mention is made of grants of land, both from the crown and the original proprietors, to English settlers. The descendants of these old families still comprise a majority of the inhabitants. Particularly is this true of the occupiers of the land comprised in what was known as the manor of "Freith."

The manor of "Freith" was one of the many manors in Pennsylvania and outlying territories laid off for William Penn, the warrant for this tract having been issued to the Surveyor-general May 3, 1683, and the land surveyed November 10th of the same year, and was returned as containing over ten thousand acres.

The Bristol Naval Store Co-partnership Company formed in Bristol, England, in 1714, and composed of William Down, Abasalom Lloyd, Charles Horford, Edward Lloyd, Caleb Lloyd, George Whitehead and Richard Cool, merchants of that town. The object of the company was to plant and cultivate hemp in the colonies, and Benjamin Shurmer, of Kent County, formerly of Bristol, was commissioned to purchase a tract of land for that purpose. He took up of this tract three thousand one hundred and twenty-five acres on a branch of Duck Creek, on a warrant granted September 22, 1714. In 1706 Walter Dulany took up a large part of this land, which was conveyed to him, and embraced old surveys lying largely in the northwest corner of Kent County and in parts of New Castle County and Maryland. "Caudley's Adventure," on a branch of the Chester River, on the New Castle and Maryland line, was a portion, and was taken up in 1727. Several tracts of this same land were warranted to Captain Richard Smith, January 18, 1696, and patented in 1710. They were called "the remains of my Lordship's Gracious Grant," "Mitchell's Park," "Mitchell's Bisque," "Jones' Adventure," "Ellinor's Delight," and "Beaver Dam."

The present holders of the Dulany land are Samuel and George Beck, Patrick Haniffe, J. L. Holt, Henry Holt, Jacob Hartman, Frank Bowers and Bernard Donnelly.

South of the Dulany land is the Blackiston tract, called the "Deer Park" tract, and containing two thousand two hundred and fifty-five acres, which was granted to Benjamin Blackiston, June 14, 1733, upon payment of forty-five pounds and two shillings to Lord Baltimore. The greater part of this land remained in the possession of the Blackiston family as late as 1850, and over four hundred acres of it is now owned by Miss Ann.
Blackiston, a great-granddaughter of the original proprietor. The remainder is held by Benjamin and Herman Hazel, and Thomas Mayberry.

Along the west side of this hundred Samuel Chew took up the Manor of Freith, about five hundred acres, and become seized of about three thousand acres of other lands in the vicinity, lying partly in Queen Anne County, Maryland, and in Kent County, Del. Chew died in 1744, leaving to survive him Benjamin Tilghman, Elizabeth Tilghman, Ann (the wife of Peter Galloway) and others. By deed of gift, bearing date May 13, 1774, he conveyed three thousand two hundred and twenty acres to his son Edward. The gift included tracts known as "Forlorn Hope," "Scotten's Folly," "Forced to it," and "Just Design." Edward conveyed all his interest to Matthew, his brother, February 4, 1786, and the land remained in the Tilghman family until April 15, 1869, when it was sold at Foxwell's Hotel, Smyrna. The deeds bear date June 1, 1869, and were as follows: Henry H. Pennell, 125 acres; William Sharp, 298 acres; Franklin Griffith, 209 acres; Edward C. Cuppage, 219 acres; William Hutchinson, 218 acres; and Francis H. Johnston and Matthew T. Goldsborough (heirs), 868 acres.

Another portion of the Manor of Freith was a grant of one thousand and twenty-five acres to William Ellinsworth, March 21, 1860, on the southwest branch of Duck Creek, now called Little Duck Creek. This tract was called Duncaster, and was part of what was called the Oxford and Cambridge tracts. They were conveyed to William Mitchell, and were taken up by Simon Irons. Oxford came to Thomas Green, who, December 14, 1749, sold portions to Jeremiah Register and William Sipple.

In addition to those named, the following persons own lands formerly a part of the old Manor of Freith: B. F. Goodey, John Golt, Robert H. Cummins, David J. Murphey, Peter Wilson, William Davis, Thomas Rees, William Stevens, Jr., William Stevens, Sr., Robert H. Hill, William Lea & Sons Company, Charles Ross, Wesley Stevens, Charles Doolan, John Meyers, Henry Pratt and John Pratt, John Farson, and Francis M. Burrows.

"Hillyard's Exchange" was taken up by John Hillyard in 1682, and contained four hundred and twenty-six acres, and is described as being on the south side of the west branch of Duck Creek and on Hillyard's Branch. It is near and southeast of the town of Kenton, and adjoining what was called "Wapping," "Williams Range," "Baliff Hill," and others. A part of this land was by deed of gift conveyed to Arthur Cook and Elizabeth, his wife, August 8, 1720, and to Hillyard's grandson, John Hillyard.

The Hillyard tract later came into the possession of Philip Lewis, who also owned other large tracts, including the land on which the town of Keaton stands.

Philip Lewis began the purchase of lands May 2, 1791, then buying three hundred and sixty acres of James Hynson and sixty of Thomas Murphey; and November 8, 1791, bought one hundred and fifty-nine acres of William Dickson, which, in 1763, was part of a tract surveyed to John Faries, who, October 20, 1773, sold to William Jones, who, in turn, February 6, 1775, sold to William Dickson, Christopher Long and Samuel Jenison. These tracts extended to the Seven Hickories, an old stopping-place for teams on the road from Dover to Kenton, so called for the reason that seven large hickories stood there. In 1825 the Lewis property was divided among the sons of Philip Lewis, Jefferson, Albert G., and Phocion P. The first named is still living. The lands of Albert G. and Phocion P. were conveyed to Frederick Staake and by him conveyed to Mason Bailey, and are now in the possession of Bailey's heirs, with the exception of a small strip of one hundred acres held by Elizabeth Jones.

A tract called Brenford came in possession of James Green; who owned a large tract in Duck Creek Hundred; who sold it, August 9, 1768, to Molloston Curry. He sold two hundred and ten acres to Thomas Collins. This land is now owned by Jacob P. Dickson, William Stevens, Samuel Hutchinson, Jr., Hester A. Knowles, William Saulsbury, the heirs of Samuel Catts and others.

West of the town of Moorton are a class of people who claim that they are original Moors. At one time they owned over a thousand acres between Seven Hickories and Moorton. They claim to have settled here about 1710. In 1755 there were several families owning quite large estates, among whom were John and Israel Durham. They have always lived apart from both white and colored neighbors, and have generally intermarried, and steadily refused to attend the neighboring colored schools. In 1877, Hon. Charles Brown, of Dover, gave them ground and wood for a building near Moore's Corner, and since that time they have maintained a school there at their own expense. There are about fifteen families remaining.

it now doe and shall hereafter meet to embrace and adhere freely to all the principles and articles that are complied in a certain confession of Faith that was agreed upon and adopted by the Baptist Association that met at Philadelphia, September 25, 1742." Upon this land the church was never built. In 1749 Rev. Griffith Jones settled here and continued to preach until his death, December 4, 1757. Rev. William Davis, in 1766, came next, and continued with this branch of the Welsh Tract Church until his death, October 3, 1788. He was succeeded by Revs. David Davis, John Sutton, John Boggs, Thomas Fleson and others. When the number of members amounted to thirty a petition to be formed into a separate church was presented to the Welsh Tract Church, and it was granted on November 24, 1781. The following persons were constituted a church: Daniel David, Rachel David, Lydia Jones, Samuel Griffin, Mary Griffin, Martha Griffin, Rachel Griffin, Mary Griffin, Jr., Elizabeth Griffin, Lydia Griffin, Lewis Williams, Ruth Williams, Rhoda Wallis, Elenor Sprance, Elizabeth Roe, Cesar Roe, Martha Meredith, Deborah Dickinson, Hugh Durborow, Martha Durborow, Mary Anderson, Rebecca McVay, Ruhumah Parkerson, Martha Owens, Mary Thompson, Elizabeth Greedy, Molenon Curry, James Darkling, Andrew Lockhart and Mary Lynch. In the first ten years of its organization it increased from thirty to forty-seven. The regular pastors of Welsh Tract who preached here are mentioned in the article on that church.

Rev. Griffith Jones was born October 8, 1896, at Altsfawr, in the parish of Llanon and county of Carmarthen. He came to America in 1749 and settled at Duck Creek. He died December 4, 1754. Rev. William Davis was born in 1698, at Castrefeth, in Glamorganshire; first came to this country in 1722, but soon returned; he came back in 1737 and settled at Vincent; thence he went to New Britain and had joint care of the church until his death; he was succeeded by the Rev. Eliphaz Dazeby from July 23, 1784, to October 25, 1787, and the Revs. James Jones, John Pattten and Gideon Ferrel were co-pastors.

Rev. Dr. Jas. Jones was born on the Welsh Tract, April 6, 1736, and died in 1829; his remains are interred in the old grave-yard. He was educated at Newark Academy and licensed to preach November 2, 1782. He had been a surgeon in the Revolutionary army, joining it at Valley Forge. On April 7, 1789, he, with the Rev. John Pattten, took charge of the church. The latter was born at Cow Marsh December 15, 1752, and licensed by the church June 14, 1788. Meetings were held generally in the dwellings of James Hyatt and Evan David Hughes. The Independents had built a church which was called Mount Zion, where they worshipped part of the time, and upon CHURCHES.—The oldest church in the hundred is the Old Duck Creek or Bryn Zion Church, about three-quarters of a mile northeast of the town of Kenton. About 1733 eight or nine families (chiefly members of Welsh Tract Church) made a settlement at Duck Creek, in Kent County, from whence the same religion spread southward to Cowmarsh and Mispillion, westward to Georgetown in Maryland and eastward to East Landing. Services were held by these settlers, and occasionally a minister from the Welsh Tract would preach to them.

In 1747 William Griffen conveyed to James Hyatt, William Rees, Jeremiah Rees, James Howells, David Enos and Enoch David, all of Kent County, trustees of the Baptist Society, one-half acre of land for a church, on condition “that its going to decay the Baptists rebuilt it of brick, thirty by twenty-five feet, in 1771, when the lot was conveyed by John and Philemon Dickinson. This house still stands, and was rebuilt in 1871 and is valued at four thousand dollars. The congregation and church were incorporated July 22, 1794. The late ministers have been: Rev. Peter Meredith, for seventeen years, and died at the ripe old age of ninety-five; Rev. Thomas Barton, for ten years, and Rev. Ephriam Rittenhouse, of Hare's Corner, who has been at the church for twenty-nine years.

In the graveyard attached to the church are buried a number of old families whose descendants still reside in the hundred, the oldest stone being that of Thomas Ringgold, who died February 21, 1790. Among the others are Jacob Anderson, August 30, 1792; Armah Wilds, October 25, 1802; the family lot of the Spruance, among whom is Presley Spruance, November 28, 1837, father of United States Senator Presley Spruance.

Blackiston Chapel was erected in 1787, the land being given by Benjamin Blackiston, and is located about two and one-half miles from the cross-roads of the same name. The old church was forty by sixty feet, and was erected from designs furnished by Bishop Asbury. It was for a number of years the largest in size on the Peninsula, exceeding Barratt's Chapel. The original trustees were Benjamin Blackiston, Abraham Parsons, Luke Howard, Richard Lockwood, William Kirkley, James Hall, Thomas Wilds, James Stephenson and Richard Shaw. The Methodists in the region, which was then a forest, held meetings on the farm of Benjamin Hazel before the church was erected. The old church was moved away in 1847, and the present building erected in its place. It is much smaller than the original church, being twenty-five by thirty feet, and valued at fifteen hundred dollars. In the old graveyard there is buried Rev. John Asay, an elder in the church, who died September 11, 1855; the early Hurlocks and a number of the Stevens family, all old settlers. Some of the ministers of the church have been, John Humphrey, Daniel Lambert, Thomas Leadman, W. C. Leibrandt, William Sumption, Thomas Hersey, J. B. Merritt, John P. Du Hamel, ———— Johns, Enoch Stubbs, Edward Newman, J. H. Adams, ———— Warner, R. J. Stevenson, T. L. Tompkinson, J. L. Houston, Samuel Thomson, Andrew Manship, T. J. Quigley and David Price.

Downs Chapel, three miles from Kenton, is the eldest Methodist Protestant church in this section, and was built upon land conveyed by James M. Downs to Lodiam E. Downs, Arwell Durborough and James E. B. Clark, trustees, December 4, 1842. The building was erected the spring of the following year. Previous to the erection of the church, Rev. William Heritage came in the neighborhood and preached to large numbers in the woods, all that country b-ing at that time a forest. After the church was built, Mr. Heritage was the first minister; he afterwards abandoned the ministry and became a manufacturer of patent medicines. During the pastorate of Rev. J. M. Yingling, the church was rebuilt. At present there are seventy-five members, with a building worth eight hundred dollars. The following ministers have since preached in the church: Rev. David J. Ewell, Rev. Dr. J. E. J. Ewell, Rev. Dr. A. T. Eversole, Rev. A. D. Dick, Rev. Wm. A. Crouse, Rev. Jas. M. Ellderdice, Rev. J. M. Yingling, Rev. W. J. D. Lucas, Rev. Charles M. Thomson, Rev. Benj. F. Brown, Rev. John Jackson, Rev. William Hamilton.

The Kenton M. E. Church is in the Smyrna Circuit, and was built in 1818 at the end of the town of Kenton, on the road leading to Downs Chapel. It was a frame building, twenty-four by sixty feet. The ground was donated and the building erected by Isaac Buckingham, Rev. John Durborough and James Scotten. Rev. John Durborough was a grandson of Bishop Cummins, of Kentucky, and the first minister of the church. Previous to the erection of the building, services were held at James Scotten's house. The old building was abandoned in 1877, and the present substantial building was erected in that year and was dedicated September 15, 1878, by Bishop Scott. The list of preachers will be found in the article upon the Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church of Smyrna.

Ewell's Methodist Protestant Church at Clayton was erected through the efforts of Rev. David J. Ewell, its present minister, and was dedicated December 30, 1860, by Rev. T. D. Valient, of Harford County, Md., assisted by Rev. John Roberts, of Centreville, Md. This is at present the only church in the growing town of Clayton and has a membership of fifty persons. The ministers who have supplied Downs Chapel have also been here.

Schools.—At the time of the passage of the school law, in 1829, Kenton Hundred had within its limits Schools Nos. 1, 2, 8, 9 and 10. Since that time there has been created Schools and Districts Nos. 49, 97, 212, 42 and 114.

District No. 1 is located between Districts No. 14 and No. 2, and in 1829 contained one school, between Blackiston's Cross-Roads and the M. E. Church, with twenty scholars between the ages of five and twenty years. The old log building was erected about 1800, and stood until 1854. The building then erected remained until 1886, when it was abandoned and a new building erected north of Blackiston's Cross-Roads, about two miles from the site of the old building. In 1886 there were fifty-five scholars.
The old log building used as a school for District No. 2, which is next to No. 1, was built in 1797, at the Alley Cross-Road. The school in 1829 contained twelve scholars and the district eighty-five children between the ages of five and twenty. In 1848 the old log building was replaced by a frame. Upon this being torn down in 1876 a neat structure valued at eight hundred dollars was erected. In 1886 there were forty-two scholars. One of the first teachers was John Palmetry, a staid old friend.

District No. 8 was south of No. 1, on the Maryland line and the western part of what was formerly Little Creek Hundred. In 1829 there were seventy-five children between the ages of five and twenty years, but no school. In 1835, Jonathan Gordon and Captain Edward Attix (father of Thomas and Samuel Attix) interested themselves in having a school. Mr. Gordon donated the ground and Mr. Attix the greater part of the material and was one of its main patrons. From this fact it received the name of Attix's schoolhouse. The building stood opposite Downs Chapel. About twenty years ago a new building was put up, which still stands one hundred yards from the old building. In 1886 there were eighty-two scholars.

Wilds' School-House was the name given to the school in District No. 9, for the reason the land upon which it was erected was given by Nathaniel Wilds, which has in its limits the town of Kenton, the building being located there. In 1829 there was a school-house a short distance below Kenton, with twenty scholars and eighty-five children between the ages of five and twenty. The old building was log and had been erected about 1800. It stood until 1839, when it was torn down and a frame building erected in its place. In 1885 the Legislature authorized the erection of a new building, the old one was abandoned and a fine brick building erected in the town of Kenton valued at three thousand dollars. In 1886 there was in it a graded school and primary with one hundred and twelve scholars.

District No. 10 is in the southeastern corner, and at the time of the passage of the school law, in 1829, was without a school building, but had seventy-five children. The land for a school building, was given by Israel Peterson, in 1835, and a building erected between Moortton and Moore's Corner. In 1860 this building was destroyed by fire, and a new one erected south of Moore's Corner, at a cost of one thousand dollars. It is still standing and in good condition. In 1886 there were thirty-five scholars.

District No. 49 is one of the new districts, and was laid out in 1846. The school building was erected in 1847, and a new building, costing six hundred dollars, erected in 1886. In this year there were forty-five scholars.

In the extreme southern part of the hundred is District 97, erected within the last twenty years. The school built at first still stands, and had fifty scholars in 1886.

District No. 114 was erected by the Legislature, in 1835, out of District No. 1. A new building was built, out of money raised by taxation, costing eight hundred dollars, at Hazel's Corner. At the time of the annual reports there were fifty-one scholars in attendance.

The Clayton District is known as 119, and was cut out of Districts Nos. 2, 84 and 49, in 1873. The building was erected the same year at a cost of nine hundred dollars, out of funds advanced by A. L. Hudson. In 1887 an addition was built, and the school grade advanced, and another teacher employed. In 1886 there were sixty-four scholars. The new building, when completed, will make accommodations for about eighty pupils, and room for additional desks has been made to meet the increasing population of Clayton.

Towns.—Clayton is the largest town in the hundred, and is situated in the extreme north eastern part, and is next in importance to Wilmington as a railroad centre. It is thirty-six miles from Wilmington on the main line of the Delaware Railroad. In 1854, the time of the surveying of the railroad, there was not a house in the town; all the land being owned by Richard Tibbitt. Previous to that time a little village existed about a quarter of a mile away, called Jimtown. It was a great stopping-place for years for teams on their way to Smyrna Landing to unload grain. There was a large grove, and an old character, "Aunt Hetty Johnson" by name, sold beer and cakes to the drivers. Tibbitt gave ground for a depot and sold land for building-lots, and, in 1859, a hotel and store were built; the store being kept by Thomas B. Lockwood in a building now occupied by Abel Sevil. Up to this time it was known as Smyrna Station, and in 1867 was named by the Legislature Smyrna Station, but the inhabitants wanted it to be called Clayton, and in 1860, Alexander McConaghy sent an application to the Post-Office Department for the establishment of a post-office. This was granted, and upon his recommendation it was called Clayton, and he was appointed postmaster, a position he held until February, 1866, when John S. Casperson was appointed. The State recognized the name of Clayton at the last Legislature.

It was generally supposed that Tibbitt held a fee-simple in the land, but after his death the land was claimed by a William Wartenby, of San Francisco, on the ground that Tibbitt, in default of heirs, had but a life interest, and the reversion in fee was in him. The case was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States,—Secretary of State Bayard appearing for Wartenby, and Reverdy Johnson, of Maryland, for the holders of the land. The case was decided in favor of Wartenby, and the tract of one hundred and seventy acres, embracing the entire town, was decreed as his property and that of his sister, Mrs. W. Harris, of Philadelphia. The holders had to make settlements with the new owners, and Wartenby disposed of his interest to Mrs. Harris, and gave Mr. Bayard one-fourth of the tract as a fee; they still own nearly all of Clayton. In 1867 Mrs. R. S. McConaghy started the Clayton Herald and ran it until her death, January, 1868, when it was sold to J. W. Spruance, and moved to Spruance City and its name changed to Font Hill News.

The town received a boom in 1883, when the Delaware Railroad's main office was moved there and with it I. N. Mills, the superintendent and a number of other officials and employees. April 15, 1887, the Legislature passed an act appointing Hon. James R. Williams, ex-Senator C. S. Pennewill, D. J. Cummins, George W. Whitaker and ex-State Treasurer Robert J. Reynolds to lay out the town, define its limits, and to hold an election for town commissioners. This duty they have performed and commissioners were elected. In 1887 there were sixty houses in the town, three general stores, kept by Abel Sevil, George Brockson and W. S. Reynolds, two millinery stores by E. O'Connor and Mrs. John Wright, three confectionery stores by John Casperson, Sarah A. Tims and W. H. Boggs, a wheelwright and blacksmith shop by Thomas Holliday, a lumber-yard by Hudson & Moore, J. Leinberger butcher, two hotels—the Bingham House, kept by William Whitlock, and the Hotel Stockle, by Michael Riley—and a drug store by Dr. Charles G. Harmonson. The population is about four hundred.

Kenton, the oldest town in the hundred, and situated near the centre, on the Delaware and Maryland Railroad, was first known as Lewis' Cross-Roads, afterwards as Grogtown, and by act of Legislature, in 1806, it was changed to Kenton. It was called Lewis' Cross-Roads, after Philip Lewis, who, in 1791, owned all the surrounding land, and laid out the roads in 1796.

The oldest house in the town is one now occupied by Mrs. Mary Green. It was built by Philip Lewis, and is of frame, and was moved to its present location about seventy years since. On the corner is an old brick house standing on the road, which was built shortly afterwards and used as the first general store in the town. The old hotel, still standing and known as the Kenton Hotel, was also built by him in 1809. It was occupied by William Arthur in 1811, and in 1812 by James Bayels, who run it for a number of years. Charles Hamm had it in 1843, and in the same year Thomas L. Temple, a brother of Governor Temple, took it and ran it for a number of years; it is now in charge of Terance Carvin.

The post-office was started in 1860, and since that time the postmasters have been W. H. Taylor, John Wilds, William C. Jump, Joseph Roop, William H. Moore and W. Denny Wilds.

The town's main growth has been since the war, and the Legislature, on April 23, 1887, passed an act incorporating it into a town.

At present there are three general stores, kept by J. M. Arthurs, W. H. Moore and W. Taylor; a millinery store, two blacksmith shops and one drug store. There are sixty houses and a population of three hundred.

Blackiston's Cross-Roads was so named from the fact that when roads were laid out in 1764, running into Maryland, the land was owned by Benjamin Blackiston, and had been in the possession of the Blackiston family since 1684. At present there are twelve houses, a blacksmith shop, and a population in 1880 of fifty.

Downs' Chapel is also a cross-roads, the first building having been a store erected there by William Downs, in 1838. The chapel was built in 1842, the school-house having already been there. At present there are nine houses, two general stores and a population in 1880 of forty-five persons.

The post-office was established in January, 1877, with James B. Messer, postmaster. There are two general stores, kept by Enoch S. Short and James T. Jacobs.

Brenford existed only as a railroad station until 1866, and was named after the Brenford farm, near there. On the 26th day of May, 1866, it was created a post-office, with J. P. Dickson as postmaster. He was succeeded, November 13, 1886, by L. H. Spruance. At present there are twelve houses and a population of sixty, one general store kept by L. H. Spruance, Boyer & Wallen, fruit and grain dealers, and J. G. & H. M. Parson, dealers in fruit packages.

Cheswold. — Shortly after the railroad was completed, in 1856, John S. Moore, who owned all the land upon which this town is located, opened a store in the building now occupied by James Brown, and was appointed postmaster, in which place he has been succeeded successively by J. Dawson, J. P. Jefferson, Thomas F. Moore and C. C. Boyer. From Mr. Moore the new town was called Moorton, and continued under this name until 1888. The town has improved rapidly the last few years, and now has thirty-five dwelling-houses, a population of two hundred, and the following places of business: general stores, W. L. Collins, James Brown and T. F. Moore; wheelwright, M. H. Palmatry; and Cooper Brothers, brick manufacturers and grain dealers.

Manufactures. — Kenton has been devoted almost exclusively to farming, and only up to within the past few years has there been any manufacturing interest outside of old grist-mills.

What is known as the Caspersion Mill is situated on Duck Creek, about one mile and a half from Smyrna. The mill-site was condemned July 19, 1748. The mill was erected in 1760 by Samuel Griffen, and a dispute arose over the line and it was surveyed to John Griffen in 1797. In 1789 the mill, in an advertisement offering it for sale, is described as “a grist-mill in very good repair for grading merchant work, and having to it a good dwelling-house suitable for merchant work.” The mill remained in the Griffen family until 1820, and was afterwards owned by John Shelton, John Wright, Sarah A. Brown, John J. Rees, Robert Burhop, and in 1858, David S. Casperson purchased it. In that year a dispute over the line, which had been standing since John Griffen’s time, arose between Casperson and a neighbor, George Buchannon, and Buchannon killed Casperson. His sons, David and James Casperson, owned it until 1882, when the present proprietor, Ezekiel Shaw, took charge. Shaw is a son-in-law of David S. Casperson.

The Murphey mill, about a mile above the Casperson mill on the same stream, was owned in 1832 by Samuel Murphey, who ran it as a grist, saw, and woolen mill, but shortly before his death changed it to a grist-mill. Samuel Murphey died in 1860, and up to 1880 the mill was run by David J. Murphey and Harry Murphey, sons of Samuel, and is still owned by David J. Murphey, and operated by Nathan Moore as a grist-mill. It has a capacity of about forty bushels a day.

The Cloak mill, situated on Little Duck Creek, about a mile and one-half from the Seven Hickories, was erected by Simon Kollow in 1790. He sold it to Ebenezer M. Cloak in 1824. Cloak died in 1867, and his son, Dr. E. M. Cloak, afterward ran the mill until his death, in 1886; since then it has been run by John Jewell.

Malcolm’s mill is situated one and a quarter miles below Cloak’s mill on Little Duck Creek, and is one of the oldest in the neighborhood, the site having been condemned by Thomas Alexander in 1806. It was a grist-mill for a long while, but was allowed to run down and was not used for some time. Samuel Keefer rebuilt it as a carding-mill in 1847, and connected with it a girt and saw-mill. He sold it to Samuel Daniels and it has been since that time owned by John Green, John Bell, John Logan and John Malcolm, the present owner, who conducts it as a grist-mill with a capacity of one hundred and sixty bushels a day.

The largest manufacturing enterprise in the hundred is the Delmarva Fertilizer Company at Clayton. It was started in 1877 by A. Lee Cummins, and was purchased from him by the company in 1883. In that year the establishment was incorporated, with John D. Burton, Thomas T. Lacey and Herman P. Hazel as incorporators. John D. Burton was elected president; Herman P. Hazel, general manager; and Thomas T. Lacey, secretary and treasurer and general superintendent. The capital stock is fifteen thousand dollars, and the capacity three thousand tons of phosphate a year.

J. B. Messick has a small phosphate factory at Kenton, which has been in operation since 1884, and has an output of one thousand tons. W. P. Wright, since 1879, has conducted a brick-kiln at Clayton, and manufactured between three hundred thousand to four hundred thousand bricks a year. John W. Graham, at Kenton, manufactures one hundred thousand bricks a year, and has been engaged in it for seven years.

Old brick-yards have existed on the farm of James Williams, near Kenton, about thirty-five years ago, but were abandoned in 1875. John T. Poor formerly had a yard in Kenton, but it has been out of use for several years. Another old yard was operated by Nathaniel Wilda, on what is now the Underwood farm, two miles from Kenton.

Being a fruit-growing country, the evaporation and canning of fruit is naturally one of the main industries. At Kenton, J. M. Arthur has a large canning establishment, built in 1882; capable of turning out two hundred and fifty thousand cans of fruit in a season. In the town John W. Graham built, in 1882, an evaporator capable of turning out three hundred baskets a day.

Smith & Carson have a cannery with an output of thirteen hundred cans a day at Clayton, opened this year. Other evaporators are Hardcastle & Jones, opened in 1881, at Clayton, with an output of three hundred baskets a day; J. G. & H. M. Carver, built in 1882, at Brenford, an output of four hundred baskets a day; and Smith & Brown, at Moortown, built in 1881, and capable of using two hundred baskets a day.

N. T. Underwood has an evaporator which is used at several of these factories, and has increased the quality of the fruit.

William B. Bowman ran a distillery from 1862 to 1872.

Societies.—Pilgrim Castle, No. 7, K. G. E., was organized at Clayton April 8, 1885, but interest failing, it ceased to exist, but was re-organized May 13, 1887, with forty-one members and the following officers: P. C., Thomas Downing; N. C., W. L. Gooding; V. C., Daniel Jones; Sir Herald, George Herne; Keeper of Exchequer, Charles Brown; M. of R., W. Colpitta; H. P., John Clifton; S. H., Hugh Fleming; C., Horace Wright; I. G., John P. Clifton.

Clayton Lodge, No. 10, J. O. G. T., was instituted March 10, 1886, with the following officers: W. C. T., Rev. C. M. Thomson; V. T., Miss Annie Webster; P. C. T., Charles Stevenson; W. Sec, John A. Wright; W. F. S., Miss Addie L. Williard; W. T., A. B. Mudge; Chaplain, Miss Cora Walker; Marshal, George M. Claydon. Lodge Deputy, C. E. Stevenson; O. G., Joseph Jones; I. G., Miss Minnie Williard; Asst. Sec., Miss Mattie C. Wright; Deputy Marshal, Frank Burns; R. H. S., William Webster; L. H. S., Benjamin Turner. At present there are thirty-two members, with the following officers: Chief Templar, Frank Burns; V. T., Miss Annie Williard; R. Sec., Miss Annie Webster; Fin. Sec., Mary Paul; Trea., William A. Webster; Chaplain, George M. Claydon; Marshal, Walter J. Webster; I. G., Miss Minnie Williard; O. G., Benj. Boggs.

Moortown Lodge, No. 10, I. O. G. T., was instituted March 15, 1865, with the following officers: W. C. T., C. Boggs; V. T., N. R. Simpson; Rec. Sec., M. H. Palmyra; Fin. Sec., L. Davis; Trea., S. A. Barcus; Marshal, Jefferson Cooper; G., Lizzie Bishop; Sentinel, D. M. Harcastle; Asst. Sec., Venie Palmyrat; R. H. S., Elva Palmyrat; L. H. S., Hattie Bishop; and Deputy Marshal, Elva Palmyrat. There are at present twenty members, with the following officers: W. C. T., Charles Trout; V. T., L. M. Davis; Rec. Sec., W. L. Davis; Fin. Sec., S. A. Barcus; Trea., P. L. Barcus, Sr.; Chaplain, F. J. Davis; Marshal, P. L. Barcus Jr.; G., Miss Laura Barcus; Sentinel, John Barcus; Asst. Sec., Archie Cudney; D. M., Miss Carrie Jones; P. C. T., Walter Leonard.

Cereal Grange, No. 36, P. of H., was organized March 12, 1886, with about fourteen members in School-house No. 8, and the following officers were elected: Master, Wm. Hutchinson; Overseer, John N. Clark; Lecturer, David S. Clark; Chaplain John Hutton; Steward, Thomas English; Asst. Steward, W. W. Taylor; Lady Asst. Steward, Alma Taylor; Secretary, R. E. Cantwell; Pomona, Sarah Clark; Ceres, Susan Hutton; Flora, Lizzie B. Cantwell. Meetings are held in a building on the farm of David S. Clark, about one mile from Down's Chapel, every two weeks. There is a present membership of nineteen. The present officers are the same, except, Steward, John Craig; Overseer, John Hutton; Chaplain, John N. Clark; Gate-Keeper, W. H. Bull.

CHAPTER LXI.

NORTH MURDERKILL HUNDRED.

An account of the original Murderkill Hundred with its divisions, will be found in the sketch of South Murderkill Hundred.

It is bounded on the north by Tanner's Branch, otherwise Culbreth's Ditch, and by Isaac's Branch, which separate it from West and East Dover Hundreds; on the northeast and east by St. Jones' Creek, or Dover River, which separates it from East Dover Hundred; on the south by South Murderkill Hundred; and on the west by the State of Maryland. It extends from St. Jones' Creek on the east to the State of Maryland on the west, a distance of nearly fifteen miles, and is from three and a half to six miles in width in the eastern part, and from two to four and a half in width in the western part.

The settlements were first made along the streams, as in other hundreds.

About one of the first tracts of land to be taken up was a lot of one thousand and fifty acres, lying on the south or southwest side of St. Jones' Creek, and between Beaver Dam Branch and Cypress Branch, under a warrant from Sir Edmund Andros to Robert Bedwell, bearing date "ye 20 day of ye 6 month, 1679." This tract was named "Folly Neck" and adjoined "Caroon Manor" on the southeast, "The Plains" on the southwest and "Cypress Neck" on the northwest. This tract is crossed by the road leading from Canterbury through Woodley Town to the White Store Landing, which, before 1730, was known as Lowber's Landing. At the landing is a brick building, eighteen by twenty-eight feet, two stories, with cellar and attic, built by Matthew Lowber, in 1772. Every alternate brick shows a glazed end, out of which has been formed the initials of Lowber and wife, and the year of building. The landing is about three hundred yards above Barker's Landing, and has three dwellings and about ten inhabitants. This tract is also crossed by the "Lower King's Road" leading from Dover by way of Frederick to Lewes. On the east side of this road and on the north side of Beaver Dam Branch, just one-fourth mile north of Magnolia, was located a Quaker Meeting-house. The land was conveyed May 12, 1760, by Wm. Jackson to John Bowers, Benjamin Warren, Samuel Duinen, Thomas Nock and Jonathan Emerson. It consists of one acre, and is described as "part of a larger tract of land called Folly Neck," and by Beaver Dam Branch, "at the going over of the King's Road." It was known as the "Motherkill Monthly Meeting," and embraced the Motherkill and Tidbury Meetings. Meeting for worship was discontinued in 1828, and the meeting was joined to "Duck Creek" in 1888, and the name changed to "Camden Monthly Meeting." The meeting-house has long since disappeared and the ancient site is now used for a cemetery. Folly Neck is now in possession of Mrs. Mary Barnett, John Lodge, Captain Thomas Draper, Peter Massey's heirs, Samuel Wharton and Daniel P. Barnard, Jr.

North-northwest of "Folly Neck," lying on St. Jones' Creek and north of Cypress Branch, is a tract of four hundred acres, surveyed to Abraham Bratt, January 24, 1679-80. This land is crossed in its western part by the Lower King's Road from Dover. to Frederica, and is now principally owned by Thos. Pickering and Cornelius Freer.

Southwest of Dover River (St. Jones' Creek), south of Tidbury Branch, and adjoining Abraham Bratt's purchase ("Cypress Neck"), is a tract of land called "Tidbury," which, under warrant of court of Kent, dated June 21, 1683, to Thomas Williams, of Nanticoke, called for four hundred acres. In 1684 Thomas Williams sold one hundred acres of "Tidbury" to Richard Levick, who the same year gave one hundred acres for the use of Kent County, upon which it was intended to lay out the town of Dover, near the present site of Rising Sun (Five Points). In a deed to William Coo from Thos. Williams, November 1, 1717, Tidbury was said to contain six hundred acres. April 18, 1746, it was resurveyed for John Houseman, and confirmed to him by letters patent under the hands of Thomas and Richard Penn, December 18, 1747, and said to contain four hundred and eighty acres. It was crossed on the west by the Lower King's Road, cutting off about twenty-five acres on the southwest, adjoining Ezekiel Nock's land. The tract "Tidbury" is now chiefly owned by Thomas Pickering, Charles C. Babbitt, Edward Burton, William Dyer, John C. Durборough and Thos. Han-on.

Lebanon, a thriving village, located on the tract "Tidbury," is situated on St. Jones' Creek and south of Tidbury Branch, near its junction with said creek. It is sometimes confounded with "Forest Landing," a small cluster of houses on the opposite side of Tidbury Branch, about four hundred yards farther up the creek. It is distant three and one-half miles southeast of Dover, and about two and one-quarter miles east of Camden, and has long been noted as a shipping point for grain, wood, lumber, ship-timber, staves, bark, canned and evaporated fruits. Large quantities of coal, lime, fertilizers, soft-wood lumber and general merchandise are imported to this point for the merchants of Lebanon, Camden and Rising Sun. These three places hold communication with the Atlantic seaboard States, the West Indies and the Gulf of Mexico, and send out large quantities of home productions. The village has long been noted for its ship-building, having turned out in recent years a three-masted schooner of eight hundred tons burden for the trade to the West Indies and the Gulf of Mexico. It is nothing unusual to see three or four schooners at anchor here at a time. In the last few years steamboats have plied regularly at stated times between here and Philadelphia. The place, also, at one time, laid claim to having the largest fruit-canning establishment in the United States, built by Collins, Geddes & Co., in 1889. It was destroyed by fire, was rebuilt on a smaller scale, and again destroyed by fire in 1894, since which time no canning or evaporating establishments have been carried on. There are at present two general stores, one wheelwright and blacksmith-shop. In March, 1870, a post-office was established and John W. Davis appointed postmaster, which he has been to the present time.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, in 1858, under the pastorate of Revs. Robert W. Todd, and J. E. Bryan, of Camden Circuit, built a frame structure, 20 by 40 feet. The building committee was Thomas Pickering, Sr., Chas. Short and Jas. Green. It was dedicated July 18th, Revs. A. A. Rees, of Baltimore, Wm. C. Robinson, of Dover, and Jonathan S. Willis, of Milford, officiating. The trustees in 1858 were J. W. Clark, E. F. Wood, T. H. Hopkins, S. C. Wells, Geo. M. Scott, Wm. E. Maloney, H. C. Deputy, J. E. Durborow, W. Saxton, W. J. Spencer, D. Townsend, Eliza Johnson and James Gordon.

Diamond Lodge, No. 73, Independent Order of Good Templars, was organized February 17, 1874, with thirty-five charter members. Since 1884 the order has done very little work.

Rising Sun.—One mile southwest of Lebanon, on "Tidbury," lying on both sides of the "Lower King's Road," is situated the village of "Rising Sun," which was formerly known as "Five Points," taking its name from three other roads crossing the King's Road at this point. It is located about three miles south of Dover, and one and a half miles southeast of Camden. Before the establishment of the "Farmers' Fruit Preserving Company," in 1872, "Rising Sun" was little more than a country cross-roads with a single farm-house removed about two hundred yards north of the present site of the village. The "Farmers' Fruit Preserving Company" was organized with a capital of eighteen thousand dollars in 1872. The company organized by electing James Green, president; Thos. Pickering, treasurer; Geo. H. Gildersleeve, secretary; and Jacob G. Brown, general superintendent. In January, 1876, the company was reorganized and Wm. H. Ridgeway was elected president, Thos. Pickering treasurer, and Geo. A. Gildersleeve secretary and general superintendent.

The company in wealth and in prosperity is one of the strongest in the State. It is now the second largest canning and evaporating establishment in the county. In 1884, by reason of the death of some of the original incorporators, it was reorganized, with the before-recited officers. The shipping points of the village are Lebanon, on St. Jones' Creek, one mile distant, and Wyoming, on the Delaware Railroad, two and a half miles distant.

There are also located at this point one wheelwright and blacksmith-shop, two general stores, and one dealer in grain, coal, lime, fertilizers, wood and lumber. In 1875 the United States government established a post-office and daily mail here, with James Anderson postmaster. In 1886 he was superseded by De Witt Freer as postmaster.

The population is about seventy-five, and the district school, which serves for both Rising Sun and Lebanon and the surrounding country, is one of the best in the county; it owes its success to the exertions of Herman Bessey, the present school superintendent of New Castle County.

North of Tidbury, lying on Wild Cat Marsh and Cripple, and on Dover River, and bounded on the north by Isaac's Branch, were two tracts, called respectively "Great Geneva" and "Reserve," surveyed to Alexander Humphreys and John Nowell, on "ye 28 day of ye 7 m., 1688," under a grant from the court of Kent County, dated the 21st and 22nd days of February, 1681-82. The tract "Great Geneva" extended up Tidbury Branch six hundred and sixty perches to Nowell's Branch above the crossing over the Kings Road from Dover to Frederica, and thence northwest to the edge of Camden, "E. N. E. 2 Ds. 4 Northerly" to Dover River, near the mouth of Isaac's Branch, and contained within these bounds six hundred acres. It adjoined "Little Geneva" on the southwest, and "Brecknock" on the west, and the "Reserve" on the north. "Great Geneva" passed in time to Thos. England, who sold it to Jonathan Hunn prior to 1765.

On St. Jones' Creek, at the place called "Forest Landing," and above Lebanon, were three pieces of land granted to Robert Wilcocks, under a survey made June 30, 1748, and sold to Jonathan Hunn, November 12, 1761. The mansion of Wilcocks is laid down on the survey as being a short distance above the mouth of Tidbury Branch, and the land lay to the east of the tract "Great Geneva," which at the time of survey was in the possession of Jonathan Hunn, who had purchased it from Col. John Vining, and at that time was called "Reserve." This land came to his sons Jonathan and Nathaniel, and to their descendants Ezekiel Hunn and others, who still own part of the original tract. Nathaniel and Jonathan Hunn, January 21, 1798, presented a petition to the General Assembly to be authorized to erect a bridge over Tidbury Branch, where the Lower Road crosses the same, and that a small quantity of crippl and low ground on the branch may be condemned to enable them to erect a mill and forge.

June 7, 1798, a bill entitled an act to enable Nathaniel and Jonathan Hunn to erect a forge and saw-mill at the Forest Landing, near the mouth of Tidbury Branch, was passed, and the land condemned June 13, 1798.

In 1818, in the division of Daniel Mifflin's real estate, this mill-seat is spoken of as "Hunn's Mill Pond gone down."

"Great Geneva" is now in possession of Ezekiel Hunn, Samuel Howell Mifflin, Webster D. Learned, Daniel L. McBride, Simeon Blood, Thos. C. Roe, Edgar H. Bancroft, John Dager and others. At the western extremity of this tract is located "The Odd Fellows' Cemetery, of Kent County, near Camden, Delaware." The land, comprising nine acres and twenty square perches, was bought September 25, 1872, and incorporated by act of that General Assembly March 29, 1873.

The tract "Reserve," touching Dover River near the mouth of Isaac's Branch, and resting upon the south side of said branch, adjoining "Brecknock" on the west, and separated from "Great Geneva" by their common boundary-line, starting at Dover River, near the mouth of Isaac's Branch, and continuing six hundred and sixteen perches southwest to the edge of the town of Camden, was taken up by John Nowell, and contained four hundred acres. The Reserve is now chiefly owned by Samuel H. Mifflin, of Camden, John Dager and by his son, Henry M. Dager.

Westward of the "Reserve" and "Great Geneva" lies the tract "Brecknock," taken up by Alexander Humphreys, by virtue of a warrant, dated the 17th day of the Ninth Month, 1680, containing six hundred acres. It lay on Isaac's Branch, and extended up it six hundred and eighty perches (a little more than two miles), to "Betty Smith's Branch," which separates Dundee and Brecknock. In 1784 John Bowers, of Bowers' Beach, bought one hundred acres of Brecknock, and at a later date four hundred and thirty-six acres came into the possession of Colonel John Vining, whose executors, January 17, 1780, sold to Warner Mifflin, who, February 18, 1783, sold one hundred and twelve acres to his brother, Daniel Mifflin. Warner Mifflin also sold to John Edmundson seventy-four acres, and to Thomas Edmundson two hundred and forty-nine acres in 1786.

CAMDEN.—Daniel Mifflin (the son of Daniel, of Accomac County, Va.), the grandfather of Samuel H. Mifflin, now of Camden, seems to have settled upon his tract of one hundred and twelve acres about the time he purchased. At that time two roads crossed on the tract, at the junction of which Daniel Mifflin built a tavern, now standing, and a storehouse. To the cross-roads he gave the name of "Piccadilly," which name it did not hold a long time, but became known as "Mifflin's Cross-Roads."

Some time between 1788 and 1857, Mifflin laid the land out in building lots. In 1873 he sold to James and Jabez Jenkins nearly eleven acres, including dwelling-houses and a large frame shop. On March 5, 1875, he sold to Nimrod Maxwell six acres. On February 8, 1878, Edwin Cole bought a lot and built a brick house in the forks of the road, which later was occupied by Samuel Williams, a hatter, and sold August 15, 1877, to Peter Lowber, tanner. In 1877 he sold the following lots: to Peter Lowber, nearly six acres, August 15th; to James Millis, nearly two acres, November 28th; to James McClyment, ten acres, November 27th; to Henry Emmals, three-fourths acre, July 23, 1878.

In one deed in 1868 one parcel is described as being "near unto the village now called Piccadilly, but more commonly called and known by the name of Mifflin's Cross-Roads."

In another deed, in 1878, a lot is described as being "at the Cross-Roads called Piccadilly, below Dover." The first mention we meet with of the name of "Camden" occurs in a deed from George Truitt and wife to Zadock Truitt, dated December 11, 1798. In that deed the property is described as being in the
KENT COUNTY.

"Village some time heretofore called Mifflin's Cross-Roads (alias Finkadilly), but now called and known by the name of Camden."

Camden, a long time previous to the opening of the Delaware Railroad in 1866, was a place of considerable mercantile and commercial importance.

In 1850, and a long time previous, vast quantities of cord-wood, staves, black oak and Spanish oak bark and grain were bought by the merchants and shipped from the "Forest Landing" and Lebanon to Philadelphia and New York.

In 1850 there were James Lord, Edward Lord, Garrett Luff, James Green and Thomas and Daniel Mifflin engaged in the mercantile business, who bought the products of the forest and the field and paid their owners in cash and goods. But with the advent of the railroad in 1856 all this changed. The people, who had before hauled their products ten, fifteen and even twenty miles to find a market, now found a market at their very doors. In those days there were two hotels. The hotels were mainly indebted to the old stage line between Lewes and New Castle, and the stage line to Dona Landing and to Short's Landing, in connection with steamboats to Philadelphia.

There is now one hotel, three general stores, four groceries, one canner, one saw-mill, one lumber-yard, one boot and shoe store, two drug stores, two butchers, two undertakers, two four and feed stores, one stove and tinware store, three physicians and one real estate conveyancer.

The first Methodist Episcopal Church at Camden was built in 1796. On July 27th of that year, Daniel Lowber deeded one-half acre of land to Elijah Barratt, Wm. Bostick, Thos. Purnell, Peter Lowber and Benjamin Brady, trustees, for the people called Methodists in and about the village of Camden, on the road from Dover to Canterbury. On April 24, 1813, Benjamin Brady, Thos. Paine, and George Temple deeded to the trustees of Whatcoat Chapel, Camden, adjoining their lot, on which a preaching-house is erected, one-half acre more. The land on which the church stood was also used for a burial-place, where many people are still interred.

The church edifice, about eighteen by thirty feet, was used for a place of worship down to 1857, when it was abandoned and pulled down, and the congregation took possession of their new and more commodious brick structure farther up town, which had been built at a cost of seven thousand dollars, and was dedicated July 26, 1857.

The Camden church was supplied with ministers from the Dover Circuit until 1835, when it was formed into a separate circuit. The ministers who served the circuit in 1835-36 were John Henry, Thomas J. Quigley, John Henry and W. O. Thomas.

In 1857 the circuit comprised Camden, Bethbrier, Canterbury, Magnolia, St. Jones, Gum Swamp and Leipiec. It has now been reduced to but two churches.

The trustees of the church at present are Frisby Clark, A. K. Boggs, J. M. Richards, Amos P. Hinsley, G. H. Gildersleeve, Dr. E. W. Cooper and E. A. Shilling.

St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church was organized July 17, 1868. Daniel P. Barnard, Jr., was elected senior warden, and Philo H. Kent, junior warden. John G. Graham, James Lord, Dr. George G. Harmon, Dr. John W. Sharp, Alanson A. Lawrence, Samuel B. Wales and John Antrim were elected vestrymen. The congregation has built a church, but hold their services in Sarde's Hall, and are attached to Christ's Church, Dover.

In 1881 the Baptists (new school) built a meeting-house under the auspices and liberality of the late George Parris, of Dover. The structure is a neat wooden building.

Camden and the surrounding country is peculiarly a Quaker settlement. Here the Mifflins, the Hunns, the Nocks, the Jenkinses, the Lowbers, the Dolbys, the Howells, and many other families, settled and took up the land, much of which is still in the possession of their descendants. Much of the religious history of the Quakers centres in and near the town of Camden, which has ultimately absorbed the other societies of the Friends in this county. The first notice we have of them is from an abstract of the minutes of their meeting at Duck Creek:

"The Tenth Month 19th, 1705. This day was held the Monthly Meeting of Friends at Duck Creek; it being the first Monthly Meeting, by approbation and order of the Quarterly Meeting of the people called Quakers, at Chester, for the establishing and keeping up the good order of Truth." The Friends of Duck Creek Monthly Meeting held a Monthly Meeting at the house of Widow Needham, at Murderkill Creek, the 18th of Sixth Month, 1712, at which time Robert Porter was appointed overseer of the Weekly Meetings of Murder Creek.

A record of Duck Creek Monthly Meeting, under date of 17th of Fourth Month, 1728, contains the following: "Friends of Murderkill request that they may have a Preparative Meeting, to be every fourth day next before the Monthly Meeting, which this meeting approves of."

The time of erection of a meeting-house on the site of the old burial-place on the road from Dover to Magnolia is not known. A deed for the land was made by William Jackson, May 12, 1760, to John Bower, Benjamin Warren, Samuel Dunnen, Thomas Nock and Jonathan Emerson, and was "part of a larger tract of land called 'Folly Neck.'" It comprised one acre "by the Branch at the going over of the King's Road." That a meeting-house was erected there, and was burned in 1760, the record fully discloses.

At a Monthly Meeting of Duck Creek, 23d of First Month, 1759, "Ezekiel Nock requests for himself and several other families about Tidbury to have liberty to hold a meeting for worship on the first and second days, during the week season at house," which was granted.

At a Monthly Meeting of Duck Creek, 26th of Fourth Month, 1760, it was reported that "the meeting-house of Murderkill was lately burned." The Friends in the vicinity of Tidbury, who had privilege of meeting the year before, at this meeting brought forward a claim "that the members being few, some of them inclined to have a house built that might accommodate them and their friends settled about Tidbury, who lye remote from any meeting, with which this meeting concur." While the action of this meeting appears in favor of Tidbury, a committee appointed to examine the matter appears to have decided in favor of the old site, a brick meeting-house was built upon it and used until about 1844.

In 1828 the Motherkill Monthly Meeting was united to Duck Creek, and in 1830 the Monthly Meetings of Duck Creek and Motherkill were united under the name of "Camden Monthly Meeting," and held alternately at Camden and Little Creek, the latter of which was organized in 1810, and but recently abandoned. Camden Monthly Meeting is the only Quaker organization now existing in the county, and at present numbers about fifty persons.

"The Union Academy," a brick structure about twenty by forty feet, was organized in 1815. On the 20th of June, of that year, Samuel Newbold deeded fifty-three square perches of land, "adjoining to the Methodist meeting-house lot," to Dr. James Fisher and Samuel Edmundson in trust for the purposes therein named. On the 13th of January, 1816, the academy was incorporated by act of General Assembly, with Samuel Edmundson, Nathaniel Coome, Henry Mollaston, James Fisher, Joseph G. Rowland, Samuel Miffin, Thomas Latchem, Thomas Courney and Cornelius Battell as trustees. This institution for a long time was one of the most successful in the State. There the young people of Camden and the adjacent hundreds received a classical and academical education at the hands of some of the best instructors in the United States. It continued in successful operation down to the year 1857. About that time the public district school-house was burned, and the commissioners rented the old academy building, which they still occupy, and now own. On the 7th of March, 1885, the trustees of "The Camden Union Academy," viz.: Edward Lord, Dr. John W. Sharp, John G. Graham, William H. Sardoe, Andrew K. Bagg, Frisby B. Clarke, William B. Clarke, Jonathan H. Lowber and Alexander Jackson, Jr., conveyed the right and title of said trustees in said academy to "United School Districts Nos. 22 and 99," and it is now the public property of the State for school purposes.

Camden, during the recent Civil War, raised a company of seventy-eight men which were mustered into service at Wilmington, May 4, 1861, with James Green captain, and Enoch J. Smithers and Samuel Simpson first and second lieutenants, respectively.
KENT COUNTY.

Amity Lodge, No. 20, I. O. O. F., was instituted at Camden, June 6, 1849. It held its meetings in a rented building on Main Street the first year. The next year, 1850, it built an elegant hall on Commerce Street, where it has since been domiciled. The lower floor is used as merchants' stores, and the upper rooms are used by the Odd Fellows and by "Fruitland Grange," of the Patrons of Husbandry. The Odd Fellows were incorporated by the General Assembly.

In connection with their order they purchased and laid out one of the most eligible and beautifully located cemeteries in the county, just east of Camden, on the road to Magnolia, which is described in the tract of land "Great Geneva."

At one time there was a flourishing lodge of Good Templars, which is now superseded by the "Woman's Christian Temperance Union," and their auxiliary societies, the Young Women's Christian Temperance Union, and by the juvenile branch, all of which are in good working order.

Fruit-canning commenced at Camden in 1856, under the auspices of George M. Steison and William Ellison. They were very extensively engaged in the business and carried a heavy stock. In 1884 their extensive buildings, which had been enlarged from year to year to meet the exigencies of their growing business, were destroyed by fire. In the conflagration Steison & Ellison lost their cannery, Ellison also his dwelling, and Charles W. Lord his hardware establishment, their several losses aggregating from twelve to fifteen thousand dollars. Steison & Ellison, nothing daunted by their loss, the next year erected a still larger and more commodious building, on a more eligible site, and entered upon their career with still greater energy and activity.

The only other serious fire occurred here July 9, 1876, in which the drug-store of Dr. George G. Harmon, the general store of John W. Stevens, the grocery of Daniel L. McBride, and the double building owned by Mrs. Richard Ward were destroyed,—the loss aggregating about $10,000. This fire was the work of incendiaries.

There is also an old church here, built about 1853 by the colored people belonging to the old side Methodist Episcopal Church. About 1883 a division took place between the colored people of this church, but the schisms being in the minority, they allied themselves with the African Methodist Episcopal Church, which has its own colored bishops, and built a meeting house near "Green's Mill," which they named the "Star of the East," and use for both church and school-house. There is also another colored school here which was instituted under the patronage of the Freedman's Bureau, and which continues in successful operation nearly the whole year. There is also another colored people's church here, built in 1883, called "St. James' Chapel," belonging to the colored Methodist Episcopal Church (South). Brecknock is now divided into many small lots. The largest divisions are those in the possession of John W. Stevens, Camden Union Camp-Meeting Association, and the heirs of Thomas H. Howell. Brecknock is the name of one of the shires of Wales, and was evidently imported by Humphreys and bestowed on this tract.

The town of Camden was incorporated by an act of Legislature passed February 16, 1752. By the act it was provided that a town-meeting should be held on the first Monday in March next, for the election of three resident freehold commissioners, and that a plot and survey of the town should be made and recorded in the recorder's office in Dover. It was again reincorporated March 4, 1869. The charter was again renewed and amended at the 1888 session of the General Assembly. The town officers since 1852 have been, viz.

Under the act of 1887 five commissioners were fixed for the town, and E., O. Raymond and I. H. Hinsley were elected for three years, W. R. Postles and D. L. McBride for two years, and E. A. Shilling for one year.

On "Brecknock" is located Hansons' grist-mill, which was decedted by James Clayton and wife to Thomas Hanson and Joshua Gregg, millers, January 31, 1761, for the purpose of building thereon a grist-mill. June 12, 1766, Gregg dedicated his title in the same to Thomas Hanson, in whose possession it continued until his death, which occurred in 1783. In his will, proven June 8, 1783, he devised to his son-in-law, Samuel Howell, his mansion, plantation, mill, etc., and the use of two hundred acres, purchased of Joseph Rogers, during his natural life. The mill property is still in the possession of his descendants, the Howells.

Upon this tract is located, on the southeast side of the public road from Camden to Dover, and lying upon Isaac's Branch. "The Camden Union Campground for the Methodist Episcopal Churches of Delaware and Philadelphia," incorporated by act of the General Assembly, February 3, 1859, and re-incorporated February 19, 1879. This camp-meeting ground consists of one of the most beautiful groves of forest trees on the Peninsula, and possesses numerous springs of purest water of unfailing flow. Here the people from different parts of the State and from Maryland assemble together for ten days in the happiest weather of summer, living in board tents and receiving their friends from abroad. On Sundays, from the influx of the surrounding country and of strangers from abroad, the numbers on the ground often reach ten thousand persons.

"Dundee" is a tract of nine hundred acres taken up by James Wells, for whom it was surveyed December 24, 1680. It adjoins Brecknock and "Little Geneva." In 1771, Richard Jackson was the owner of one hundred and fifty acres. In 1783 the greater part of this tract was in possession of the heirs of James Gardner. In 1887, two hundred and nine acres of this tract is in possession of the heirs of the Rev. Ignatius T. Cooper. Other parts are owned by Thomas Sexton, Thomas Downham, the heirs of Walker Miffin, the heirs of Thomas L. Madden, by Phil A. Kent, Abram N. Brown, Thomas Jackson and others.

WYOMING.—On this tract is located the thriving village of Wyoming, which dates its existence from the 1st of June, 1856, when the Delaware Railroad and Adams Express Company opened their respective offices for business, and appointed John T. Jakes their agent. At the time of Mr. Jakes taking possession of those offices there were two dwelling-houses which were occupied by the owner of the grist-mill located on the opposite side of the stream (Issac's Branch) in East Dover Hundred, and by his miller. In the same year Wm. P. Lindsall built a store-house, and entered upon the mercantile business, but in the year following he sold out to John T. Jakes, who has continued the business down to the present date.

John T. Jakes, merchant at Wyoming, Kent County, Delaware, was born November 28, 1833, near Pearson's Corner, Kent County. He is of French Huguenot descent, the name originally being Jacques. His first American ancestor was Henry Jacques, who emigrated from France and went to Virginia and settled. Thomas W. Jakes, his father, married Nancy, daughter of William Anderson, a farmer of Kent County. At the time of this marriage she was the widow of Robert Hargadine, who at his death left two children,—William A. now of the firm of Hargadine, McKittrick & Co., importers and wholesale dealers in dry goods in St. Louis, Mo., where he emigrated before he was of age, in the year 1842 (he has been eminently successful and amassed a large fortune, and is one of the leading men of that city); and Julia Ann, widow of Hon. Robert B. Wright, of Kent County, who served one term in the Legislature of the State. Mrs. Jakes was a noble Christian woman. She died July 17, 1863, aged sixty-nine. Thomas W. Jakes, her husband, lived to the ripe old age of eighty-six years, and died March 3, 1885. He was a man of sound judgment, sterling integrity and noted for his honor and excellent character, was never sued for debt during his life, and never sued any person on his own account. John T. Jakes, their only child, and the subject of this sketch, obtained his education at the common free schools in the vicinity of his early home; at the age of seventeen he was taken from school and entered the store of Luff & Green at Camden, Delaware, as clerk in December, 1849, and continued with the firm until they closed business, when he went into the general mercantile business in the town of Camden with Wm. S. Prouse, under the firm-name of Prouse & Jakes, and continued for two years. In 1856 he was appointed agent for the Delaware Railroad Company at then West Camden (now Wyoming), and for eleven years performed the duties of that position with great acceptability to the company and public, until he resigned in favor of N. B. Buckmaster, the present agent. In 1857 he embarked again in the mercantile business at his present stand, which is the second house built in the village of Wyoming after the railroad was laid, since which time his business has steadily increased, having now an extensive and lucrative business. He was one of the pioneers of the new town, and assisted greatly in building it up. He was the leading man to organize a Sunday-school in the village, and was the leading man in building and having the first Methodist Episcopal Church Society organized there. He was also greatly instrumental in securing the establishment of a post-office, and became its first postmaster, appointed January 6, 1866, and held the office continuously until August 10, 1885, a term of nineteen and a half years. He was appointed agent of Adams Express Company when the office was established at Wyoming in 1857, and still holds that position. Mr. Jakes was one of the founders of the First National Bank of Dover, Delaware, was chosen a member of the first board of directors in March, 1866, and has since held that position until the present, and meets with the board every Thursday. In 1869 he became connected with the Surrey Land and Lumber Association, of Surrey County, Va., was elected secretary and treasurer of the company, and spent considerable time and means during the succeeding two years in looking after his interests in that State, having opened a large store and blacksmith shop at Spring Grove, on one of the tracts.

His father accompanied him to Virginia, and while there was appointed postmaster, and served two years as president judge of the Magistrate's Court of that county, and until his return to Delaware.

In 1868, Mr. Jakes was elected Grand Secretary of the State of Delaware by the Independent Order of Good Templars, which he filled with honor to himself and the society. In 1870 he and his wife were elected Grand Representatives to represent the Grand Lodge of North America of that order at its session, held in St. Louis, Mo., of that year, and were present. He joined the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in 1864, and has filled all the offices in the subordinate lodge in which he was initiated—Amity, No. 20, located in Camden, Delaware—and has filled most of the offices in the Grand Lodge of the State, except the chair of Grand Master. In 1879 he was elected Grand Representative of the State to the Grand Lodge of the United States, and represented the State for four consecutive years—at Baltimore, first; the second year (1880) at Toronto, Canada, where he was placed upon the committee to revise the revision of the new ritual adopted at that place and the name changed to the Sovereign Grand Lodge; in 1881 at Cincinnati, and in 1882 at Baltimore. He was also present at the session held in Providence, R. I., in 1883, and at Minneapolis, in 1884, he was appointed Grand Marshal by the Grand Sire-elect Hon. Judge Garey, of Baltimore, Maryland, and at the next annual session, held in Baltimore he served in his official capacity at the cornerstone laying and unveling of the Ridley Monument in that city in 1885. He also filled his place at the annual session held in Boston in 1886, and in 1887 he was present at the session held in Denver, Colorado, and was appointed Assistant Grand Messenger to the Grand Body. In 1878 he was made a life director of the American Bible Society and has been treasurer of the Kent County Bible Society since 1872. He was elected treasurer of his lodge (F. O. O. F.) in Camden, Delaware, January 1, 1875, which position he still holds; was also elected treasurer of Dover Encampment, No. 5, located at and meeting in the same hall; was also elected receiver or treasurer of Kent Lodge, No. 8, A. O. U. W., January 1, 1884, located at Wyoming, Delaware. He connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1867, since which time he has been one of its trustees and has been continued in an official capacity since its dedication in 1865, and of which his wife is a member and a hard worker for the interests of the church, being at the head of several of the societies belonging thereto. In politics Mr. Jakes is and always has been an ardent Republican and a constant and devoted advocate of the principles of that party, as well as that of the Temperance Reform movement. He was one of the few in Kent County who voted for Abraham Lincoln for President in 1860, and earnestly favored the prosecution of the war. He is also an honorary member of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of his town, and has been since its organization. At the election of President Hayes the family represented three generations, his father, himself and his two sons all voting. On the 14th day of February, 1854, Mr. Jakes was married to Mary B. Townsend, daughter of Benjamin B. Townsend, of Camden, Delaware. Their eldest son, William Hargravine Jakes, was admitted to partnership with his father in 1879 in the general mercantile business, and doing business as Jakes & Son. He was married to Mollie E. Jackson, daughter of Thomas Jackson, a farmer near Wyoming, Delaware. They have one son, named John T., who was nursed by and knew each of his great-grandfathers before their deaths. Dr. C. Russell Jakes, the second son, is a graduate of Delaware College and the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, where he took a regular allopathic course and is practicing his profession successfully. He was married to Miss Laura Ferris, of New Castle County, in December, 1884, and in August following she died, only living eight and a half months. Maggie T. Jakes, the only daughter, is a graduate of Wyoming Institute and has since been a successful teacher until the close of school in December, 1887, when she resigned. Thomas W. Jakes, the youngest son, is at home clerking in the store of his father and brother, at Wyoming.

In 1860 the village, which had been partially laid out by Dr. Isaac Jump, of Dover, was quite a respectable village. It is located three miles southwest of Dover, and one mile west of Camden, and is bisected by the Delware railroad.

The village of Wyoming was known by the name of "West Camden" from its inception down to the year 1865, and sometimes as "Camden Station," on account of its being located for the convenience of the people of Camden and the surrounding country.

Some time in 1865 the Rev. John J. Pierce, of the Wyoming Valley, Pa., came to "West Camden" and purchased the land from Dr. Isaac Jump and others, and laid it out in building lots. Through the exertions of Messrs. Pierce, Jakes and others, the village received quite a boom in the way of building, and many persons from the Wyoming Valley, and from North Murderkill and West Dover Hundreds, flocked to West Camden, and engaged in business. During the same year a meeting of the leading and most enterprising of the citizens was called to take into consideration the propriety of severing all connection or identity with the town of Camden, and out of compliance to Mr. Pierce, they agreed that it should be called "Wyoming," after his native valley on the North Branch of the Susquehanna. During the same year, in the midst of the peach season, John T. Jakes started a subscription list for the purpose of putting up a temporary building to be used for a Sunday-school, which had not progressed far before the movement developed into a church. Out of the moneys collected was built a plank church, but before its dedication the Rev. Mr. Hamersley, of Camden Circuit, organized the board of trustees to receive the edifice in the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Upon the perfecting of this board of trustees they issued the following notice:

"DEDICATION.

"The M. E. Plank Church, of West Camden,

"Located at Camden Station, will be dedicated to the worship of Almighty God, on Sunday, the 12th inst.

"Rev. Andrew Manship, of Philadelphia; Rev. J. J. Pierce, late of Wyoming Conference; Rev. Colclough, of Philadelphia Conference; Rev. A. D. Davis, of Erie Conference, will officiate. Services to commence at 10 o'clock A.M., and continue at 3 and 7 o'clock P.M.

"All are invited to attend, by the "PASTOR & TRUSTEES.

"Nov. 3, 1866."

This plank church answered all the purposes of a church and Sunday-school for the people of Wyoming till it became dilapidated, and necessitated the building of a new one. In 1883 the new structure was begun, and dedicated in September of the same year. In 1885, a parsonage for Wyoming Circuit—comprising the Wyoming, the Willow Grove, the Union, near Hazletville, and Asbury near Pearson's Corner was finished late in the fall.

The list of pastors from the time of organization to the present is here given:

Rev. J. J. Pearce..............................for the balance of the year 1865
Rev. A. D. Davis..................................1866 and 1867
Rev. John B. Mann..............................1868
Rev. J. L. Tompkinson..........................1869 and 1870
Rev. George S. Conway..................................1871 and 1872
Rev. Joe. Dam..................................1873 and 1874
Rev. D. W. C. McIntyre..........................1875, 1876 and 1877
when he was succeeded by the Rev. Newton J. Miller in June of that year who remained until June, 1882. He was followed by S. F. Laury, who entered upon his pastorate December 1, 1882, and remained with them until March 1, 1886, since which time the pastorate has been vacant. They are supplied with religious services from time to time by visiting ministers from other congregations, principally from the State of Pennsylvania.

In 1875, James S. Marsch, of Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, and Jacob G. Brown, of “Rising Sun,” formed a partnership, and built a large evaporator for the preservation of peaches and other fruits and vegetables. In 1880 the firm of Marsh & Brown was dissolved, and the company reorganized under the name of Brown, Hanson & Co. The company claims to have the largest evaporating establishment in the State, with the capacity of evaporating seventy-five tons of peaches alone. In connection with it is also a canning establishment with a capacity of one million cans per annum.

A post-office was not established here until January 12, 1866, when John T. Jakes was appointed postmaster, which position he held until August 10, 1886.

In 1870 a new school district was formed from the present outlying districts, and a school-house built in the village, which accommodated the children until 1886, when the population had increased so rapidly that a new school building became necessary. In that year a new two-storied building was erected, and the public school organized on the graded system, with two efficient teachers and one hundred and twenty-five scholars.

There are to-day three general stores, one drugstore, one milliner, one butcher, two blacksmiths, two wheelwrights, one dealer in lumber and lime, two coaldealers, one shoe-shop, one harness-maker, one nurseryman and two physicians.

There are two secret societies—“The Ancient Order of United Workmen, Kent Lodge, No. 8,” instituted in 1888, with twenty-two members; and the Grand Army of the Republic, General Daniel Woodall Post, No. 11, instituted in March, 1884, with a membership of twenty-eight persons.

Beside the extensive canny of Brown, Hanson & Co., there are two other small evaporators, that do quite an active business in seasons when peaches are plenty and cheap.

Wyoming was incorporated as a town March 20, 1869, and again incorporated at the 1888 session of the General Assembly. George M. Fisher has been town clerk up to the present year, when he was succeeded by Carrol S. Fisher.

West of “Dundee,” and south of Isaac’s Branch, is a small tract of land containing one hundred and seventy-six acres, taken up by George Morgan under a warrant bearing date March 22, 1738, called “Morgan’s Chance,” and now in the possession of William R. Allaband.

To the west and southwest of “Morgan’s Chance” lies a tract of six hundred acres, called “Barnes’ Chance,” taken up by Lewis Johnson under a warrant issued for John Barnes April 21, 1862. It is now mainly owned by the heirs of James Kersey, by the heirs of Edgar J. Kinney and by Kent County. On this tract is located the “Alms-House” of Kent County.

On the same land is the ancient grist mill seat, called by the name of the “Allaband Mill,” which was known as a mill-seat prior to 1783. In 1791 part of this tract is described as being upon “School-House Branch,” where the Forest Landing road crosses, and is part of Mill Pond, and contained in the aggregate about two hundred and twenty acres.

On the southwest of “Dundee,” and southeast of “Morgan’s Chance” and “Barnes’ Chance,” lies the tract called “Howell’s Lott,” taken up under warrant to James Wells, dated December 21, 1861, and surveyed to John Howell November 25 and 27, 1863, containing one thousand acres, now owned in part by Daniel L. McBride, by Willard A. Gray, by Dr. James Avery Draper, by John H. Berry, by Wells, late of Aza Griffith, and ten acres in the eastern corner of the whole tract by the heirs of Rev.

I. T. Cooper.

Adjoining "Howell's Lott," and "Dundee," on the south, is located "Longacre," containing one thousand acres, taken up by Nicholas Bartlett under warrant from court of Kent County, dated the 20th of mo., 1682. In 1742 seven hundred and forty-five acres of this tract were in the possession of Andrew Caldwell. This ancient tract is now in possession of the heirs of Rev. I. T. Cooper, L. E. Nelson, John B.
Cleaver, heirs of Samuel B. Cooper, Rev. Joseph E.
Waugh, Mrs. C. I. Du Pont, land late of S. J. Everett, of Harvey Soper, of W. D. McGlohn, and of S. M.
Thomas.

Little Geneva is a tract of four hundred acres, taken up by Alexander Humphreys, and surveyed for him March 4, 1680. It adjoins "Dundee" and "Brecknock," on the south of them, and "Great Geneva" on its southwest boundary, and lies on both sides of the Upper King's Road, just outside of the town of Camden, leading toward Canterbury, and extends to the road leading from Camden to Willow Grove. In 1745 two hundred and four acres, lying between the Willow Grove and Canterbury roads, were in the possession of Andrew Purdon. This part is now owned by William K. Evans, William P. Lin-dale and Matthew Jerman. The part lying east of the Canterbury road was owned in 1783 by Warner Millin, George Truitt and others. This part is now chiefly owned by Levi S. Proud and the assignee of Samuel J. Everett.

Upon this tract is the colored people's church, called the "Star of the East," which was described in connection with "Brecknock." There is a hamlet of colored people, who have bought small parcels and built upon them.

On the southeast side of Tidbury Branch and southwest of the tract "Tidbury" lies a tract of land containing four hundred and sixty-five acres, resurveyed August 15, 1738, for Ezekiel, Daniel and Thomas Nock, the sons of Thomas, deceased. This tract remained in possession of the Nocks as late as 1783.
Some time about 1760 Ezekiel Nock built a grist-mill there, and left his property to his sons, of whom Thomas remained on the homestead.

About the year 1783, or a little later, the mill property passed into the possession of Daniel Millin, who left it to his two sons, Daniel and Samuel. The mill was known as "Nock's Mill" and "Millin's Mill."
Some time about 1852 the property passed into the possession of James Green, now deceased.
William B. Nock, druggist, of Camden, is the sole survivor bearing the name of the Nock family.

West of the Nock tract, on the opposite side of Tidbury, is a tract called "Gainsborough," comprising four hundred and forty-five acres, surveyed for John Nowell December 16, 1680.

West of "Gainsborough" and south of "Little Geneva" is a tract called "Grigg's Purchase," taken up under a warrant of December 21, 1681, containing one thousand acres. It lies on and adjoins Tidbury stream on the north, and is on both sides of the Upper King's Road. It was originally surveyed for Alexander Humphreys, but is now in possession of Henry C. Cooper, George Gibbs, John Evans, J. B.
Slaymaker and others.

South of "Grigg's Purchase," and on the south side of Tidbury, is the tract "Tiocullevier," taken up under a warrant dated August 17, 1682, by Robert Betts and John King, and contained twelve hundred acres. It is now chiefly owned by Samuel W. Derby, Thomas B. Coursey, heirs of Mrs. Powell, B. F. Abbott, heirs of Dr. I. T. Cooper and others. The land late of James L. Dyer and of William T. Maloney was also of this tract.

On this tract, on the Upper King's Road from Canterbury to Camden, is situated a grist-mill. It was bequeathed by Mary Caldwell to her son, John Cal-well, for a grist-mill seat October 15, 1786, and a mill was soon after erected. The grist-mill is now owned by Thomas B. Coursey.

South of "Longacre" and southeast of "Grigg's Purchase" and "Tiocullevier" is a large tract of land called "Rhodes' Forest," containing two thousand acres. It was taken up by John Rhodes, of Where-kill County (Sussex), on warrant from that cour November 23, 1679. It was inherited by his son, John Rhodes, who, May 8, 1725, sold it to Andrew Caldwell, of Kent County, and took in exchange therefor parts of tracts of "Bartlett's Lott" and ad-Jacent tracts, lying towards the mouths of St. Jones' and Murderkill Creeks. This tract, on account of the change effected, was called by Caldwell "The Exchange," by which name in subsequent deeds it is generally known. It is described as being on the west side of Tidbury Branch, beginning at the mouth of a small run that falls into the branch a little above an Indian path (Camden and Willow Grove road at Red House Branch) that leads from Jones' Creek to Choptank. It extended from "Indian Path," west by south nearly three miles, and southeast by south nearly two miles, and thence in a northerly direction about three miles, to the forks of Tidbury, and up Tidbury to beginning.

The Caldwells owned other large tracts. In 1746, Andrew Caldwell, Jr., owned seven hundred and forty-five acres of "Longacre," a tract of two hundred and eight-seven acres, called "Quiet Entry," situ-aled south of the eastern part of Exchange, and partly north of "Hudson's Lott," and a tract of ninety acres called "Caldwell's Range," west of the Exchange. Besides these, he owned other large tracts in different parts of the county.

The tract "Quiet Entry," three hundred and four acres, passed into the possession of Christopher Green, in 1650. In later years it passed to Robert Cathlin.

Upon this tract, one mile north of Canterbury, was located a meeting-house by the Methodists.
May 16, 1781, Christopher Green conveyed one acre to Dr. Wm. Bowness, Wm. Virdin, Joseph Purdin, And. Purdin, John Gilder, Philip Barratt, Caleb Furbee, Oliver Crawford, James Green, John Morris and John Purdin, "upon express purpose of building a Preaching-House or Chapel thereon," and "that the said Preachers Preach no other doctrine than is contained in Mr. John Wesley's Notes upon the New Testament, and four Volumes of Sermons."

This meeting-house, known by the name of "Green's Chapel," continued in existence down to 1856, in which year the congregation built a new meeting-house at Canterbury, and called it "Bethesda." It was dedicated October 26, 1856, by the Rev. John D. Onins, of Philadelphia, and the Rev. Daniel Lambden, the preacher in charge. There is on the site of each meeting-house a cemetery.

The tract called "Rhodes Forest" or "Exchange" is now chiefly owned by the Rev. Joseph Waugh, Mrs. Charles I. Du Pont, Peter Crook, Mrs. Ann Bostick, the heirs of Wm. O. Kline, Wm. S. Caulk, George H. Murray, Hon. Eli Saulsbury, Ezekiel Cowgill, John J. Conner, James Anderson, of Herman (upon whose land is the old Caldwell burying-ground), and others.

WOODSIDE.—Upon this tract, "Exchange," is located the village of "Woodside." It was founded in August, 1864, when the railroad company, through the exertions of Henry Cowgill, established a depot and station-house. Ezekiel Cowgill was appointed railroad and express agent, who was succeeded by his father, Henry Cowgill, in 1867, who held the office until his death, in 1881. He was succeeded by Samuel J. Richards, November 17th the same year, who still is agent and also postmaster. In 1864 there were two dwellings and about eight inhabitants.

At the present time there are three stores, two evaporators, two canneries, one dealer in coal, lime and grain, and one dealer in fertilizers. There are twenty-five dwellings and ninety-eight inhabitants. There is also a daily mail by post route from this place via Willow Grove to Petersburg, a distance of five and a half miles. The place is noted for being in the centre of the peach belt of this peninsula, and for the quantity of fruits, vegetables and other products shipped hence, and for the numerous truck farms in the vicinity. South of "Quiet Entry," lying almost wholly on the west side of the Upper King's Road, is a tract of one hundred and twenty-eight acres, called "The Disputed Turnip Patch," taken up under a warrant dated May 15, 1740, and surveyed for the heirs of Noah Gildersleeve, in 1766. It is now chiefly owned by Wm. Graham.

CANTERBURY.—"Hudson's Lott" is a large tract lying on the north side of Hudson's or Bannister's Branch, and upon both sides of the Upper King's Road from Lewes, by way of Canterbury, to Dover. It is bounded on the east by "Norridge," and contains eight hundred acres. It was taken up by Robert Hudson by virtue of a warrant "bearing date the 21st of the 12th month 1681."

Upon this tract is located the village of "Canterbury," lying upon both sides of the public road from Magnolia to Willow Grove and the road leading up to Camden. The land in 1759 was owned by Archibald McAllister, who also owned a mill seat south of the village called "Trippitt's Mill," which, in 1785, was called "Rickett's Mill," which has long since been abandoned and the site nearly obliterated.

The first knowledge we have of Canterbury is by the name of "Joseph Caldwell's Tavern," in the year 1782, in which year John West is spoken of as an innkeeper. On the 1st day of November, 1789, it is mentioned as "Irish Hill." On that day Ezekiel Anderson gave his alienation bond to George and John Gildersleeve to sell five acres of land, with a new two-story house thereon, adjoining the main road near "Irish Hill," formerly land of John West; also another house and lot, formerly of West, on the "road leading from Joseph Caldwell's Tavern to Peter Goforth's mill or Frederica." On the 16th of April, 1794, we first meet with the name of "Canterbury," in a deed from Gildersleeve to James Foote, in which he describes the land as "a Lott or peace of ground in the village of Canterbury, being and lying on the East side of the State road." In 1811 following, Jacob Jones, John Maiskimmens and Moses Sipple, kept tavern. In 1820, tavern was kept by Levi Wollcott, who had purchased two hundred acres of "Hudson's Lott."

In 1816 mention is made of a tan-yard owned by Jonathan Neal, opposite a store-house, formerly belonging to George Gildersleeve. In 1845 two hotels were kept in the village by Barratt B. Conner and Henry J. Anderson, respectively. There were two stores and one blacksmith-shop. The school-house was situated half a mile north of the village and the church (Green's Chapel), about one mile. In those days, Barratt P. Conner was postmaster. The stage line to Lewes passed through the village, and Canterbury was made a distributing office for the several towns and villages lying between it and the Chesapeake Bay, all of which were served with a weekly mail.

At the present time the population is about fifty. There are one general store, one blacksmith-shop, fourteen dwellings, one school-house and one church. The church was described under the title of "Quiet Entry."

"Golden Thicket" is a tract lying west of Hudson's Lott, on the north side of Hudson's Branch, taken up by Wm. Shores, by virtue of warrant dated "y* 29th day of y* 9 int., 1681," and contained four hundred acres. In 1730 the southernmost half of tract was sold to John Gordon, and the upper half to Magdalena Thistlewood. In 1827 the greater part of the whole tract was owned by Jonathan Hamilton, who left one hundred acres cleared land, on the east end of farm, with all the improvements thereon, and one half his woodland to his granddaughter, Sarah Henderson, the wife of Giddiah Beauchamp; the remainder of cleared land and one-half of the woodland he left to his granddaughter, Mary Elizabeth Henderson. The whole of the land eventually became vested in Giddiah Beauchamp.

VIOLA.—Upon this tract is situated the village of Viola, on the Delaware Railroad, ten miles south of Dover. The village was founded August 1, 1856, when the Delaware Railroad officials established a station there and appointed James B. Conner agent, who also received the agency for Adams Express Company. Until within the last eight years the village was known as Canterbury Station, being situated one mile west of Canterbury. When the village was laid out, in 1856, an old grain-car was used some time as a station house and office. There were then only three farm-houses in the vicinity, which served as a nucleus for the present village, which now contains three general stores, one lumber dealer, one planing-mill, three fruit evaporators, one husk factory, one blacksmith and wheelwright shop, one dealer in coal, lime, etc., one warehouse, fourteen dwellings and a population of sixty. There is likewise a Methodist Episcopal Church building that was long known as Magee's Chapel, built in 1858, which was located at Magee's Cross Roads, nearly two miles west of Viola. In 1884, under the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Jewell, of Felton Circuit, the building was moved to Viola and rehabilitated and now presents a modernized appearance. The present pastor is the Rev. Vaughan Smith, of Felton Circuit.

"Turkey Point" is a tract of one hundred and sixty-five acres, taken up by Thomas Blackshare, under a warrant of July 28, 1746. In 1823, in the division of the lands of Daniel Mifflin, deceased, it was assigned to Ann Mifflin, his daughter. It is now owned by Henry R. Draper, under the will of his father, Avery Draper. This tract is bounded on the east by "Longacre" and on the north by the tract "Tomahawk," which was also taken up by Thomas Blackshare, under a warrant dated June 2, 1740. Tomahawk is south and west of Howell's lot and contains one hundred and ninety-four acres. It is now owned by Martin Knight and Thomas Gooden. West of Turkey Point is a tract called the "Burkawai," taking its name from its first owners, which is now in possession of the heirs of William O. Kline, of Philadelphia, Pa.

Adjoining the tract "Burkawai" on the west is a tract of three hundred and forty-seven acres called "Steel's Ridge," which was in possession of Robert Blackshare prior to 1768. On the 12th of February, 1829, it was conveyed by William K. Lockwood, administrator of Samuel Mifflin, to John Gooden, the elder, who died in 1867. About one hundred and seventy-two acres of this tract is now owned by W. O. Kline's heirs, the remainder is in the possession of John Gooden, the younger. Steel's Ridge lies north of Willow Grove. South of Steel's Ridge is a tract of two hundred acres, taken up by William Jackson, under warrant dated April 17, 1787, and another tract taken up by Jackson under warrant dated April 18, 1757. This land, in 1788, was in possession of Francis Many. On the 16th of February, 1787, Many sold to Alexander Jackson, by whose family the land is still held. On the 2d of March, 1787, Jackson sold five acres to Thomas Lockwood, upon which he had a ten-yard. About the same time a store and a shop were opened. From the establishing of the tannery Willow Grove dates its existence.

Willow Grove is situated nine and one-half miles southwest from Dover and three and one-half miles west of Woodside, the nearest railroad point. Jackson built a house on the opposite side of the Chop-tank Road from the tannery, called the "Jackson Mansion," a gambrel-roofed building, now in a good state of preservation and in possession of John C. Gooden. The tanning business was carried on by Thomas Lockwood till his death, in 1824. In 1857 the tannery was in possession of Ambrose Broadway, who continued the business till his death, in 1879. In 1880 the tannery was closed and the buildings since converted into a dwelling. In 1844 there were two general stores, dealing in grain, bark, cord-wood, staves, etc., and general merchandise. The first merchant of which we have any account was doing business in 1798. There are now two general stores, one wheelwright and blacksmith shop, one steam saw-mill and basket factory employing seventy-five men and boys. In 1856 there was a steam grist-mill, which was discontinued about 1867. From 1844 to 1860 the carriage making business was carried on. The old gambrel-roofed building, now owned by J. C. Gooden, was used at one time for a hotel, the tavern keepers being Isaac Gruwell and Waitman Vickery,—the last one quitting the business in 1844. The bar-room was kept in a small building on one corner of the premises, separate from the inn.

The first resident physician was Dr. Gilman, who came in 1842, who was succeeded by Dr. Vincent Emerson in 1848, who remained to 1852, when he removed to Milford, Pa. He was succeeded by Dr. H. C. Comegys of Greensboro who remained till 1856, when he returned to his native town. He was followed by Dr. Thomas C. Roger, a native of Ohio, who remained till 1874, when he removed successively to Wyoming, Felton, and Harrington, at which last place he died in 1879. Since 1874 Dr. John M. Wilkinson has been the resident physician.

The first lumber mill, lying south of the village, was built by John Aaron and Alexander Jackson sometime about 1844. A little later the property came into possession of Levi Pammure of Philadelphia who built a larger and more extensive saw mill, and engaged in the ship-timber business. About 1858, the mill was burned, and on its ruins a still larger one was erected. In 1865, J. Colby Smith came from Aberdeen, Maryland, purchased the mill, and in addition to general lumber and ship-timber business, engaged in the manufacture of barrel staves and heading, and at a later date embarked in the manufacturing of peach crates. This he continued but a few years when he put in peach basket machinery, and now turns out five hundred thousand baskets annually during the peach season.

A society of the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized here at a very early date, the members of which usually met at Thomas Lockwood's house till 1824, when he died. After his death the congregation met a short while at William J. Needles, about one mile south of the village. On August 2d of the same year, Thomas Jackson for the nominal consideration of six cents, conveyed unto Absalom Dehart, John Van Burkabow, Thomas Clements, William J. Needles, Parrimus Wilkerson, Absalom Stradley, and Samuel B. Cooper, Trustees, in trust, and upon express condition that they should erect thereon a meeting-house for the use of the people called Methodists. In 1850, they enlarged the area of their grounds and built a larger and more commodious building. In 1883, this was succeeded by a still more elegant building. The first preacher of which we have any account was Ferdinand Griffith, who preach for them in 1829, and was also engaged in the mercantile business in the village.

In 1850, when the new church was dedicated, the Revs. James Flannery and Louis Petit were pastors in charge, and in 1883, the building of that day was erected through the exertions of the Rev. Sewell N. Pilchard, the pastor of the circuit, (Wyoming).

The postal facilities in 1844 consisted of a weekly mail from Canterbury, on the line of the old stage route, at which time Ambrose Broadway was postmaster. In 1857, Ezekiel L. Cooper was postmaster, who at the beginning of the late civil war was succeeded by Henry C. Carter. He was soon succeeded by John Colby Smith who retained the position till 1885, when he was succeeded by John C. Gooden, whose store-house and post-office was burnt out February 14, 1887, when he resigned and was succeeded by the present postmaster, Samuel R. Meredith. There is now a daily mail.

The first district school, No. fifty-two, was organized in 1850, with Dr. Ezekiel Dawson for teacher who kept school in a private building part of the year.

Prior to the establishing of free schools in 1829, the people sent their children to a pay or subscription school at Petersburg. The teachers between 1829-29, were William Mason Stevens, William Canner, John Pepper, and John Humphreys, an Old School Baptist Preacher. In 1858, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows instituted a lodge here which was disbanded in 1861. Thornton Russell was Noble Grand, and E. L. Cooper, V. N. Grand. The population of the village is about one hundred and fifty.

One-half mile south of Willow Grove, on the old road toward Greensboro, are two tracts of land containing in the aggregate six hundred and twenty-five acres. "Good Luck," one of these tracts, containing two hundred acres, was originally surveyed to Samuel Brooks, June 18, 1731, and later was sold to Matthew Lowber, for whom it was resurveyed June 3, 1741. "Lowber's Fancy," of two hundred and twenty acres, was granted to Matthew Lowber, December 18, 1780, where he resided. He was the son of Peter Lowber, who came from Amsterdam, Holland, to this State about 1682. His posterity comprise nearly one-half of the population in Kent County, and are scattered throughout nearly every State and Territory in the United States. On the 13th, 14th and 15th days of July, 1775, these two tracts, with additions thereto, were resurveyed to Peter Lowber. One hundred and fifty-eight acres of "Lowber's Fancy" is now owned by Alexander C. Dill, whose son resides on the site of the Matthew Lowber mansion.

"Multangulus" lies south of "Lowber's Fancy," on both sides of the Choptank Road. It was warranted to Curtis Evans, May 31, 1745, and assigned to John Meekins, for whom it was surveyed June 14, 1748, and contained two hundred and eighty-eight acres. There was also a tract called "Newell's Park," lying between "Multangulus" and Cow Marsh Ditch, containing two hundred and seventeen acres, surveyed for John Meekins, assignee of John Bowers, August 1, 1751. These two tracts, containing five hundred and five acres, were in possession of Robert Patton in 1752. This land is now owned by John H. Cook, George Cook, the heirs of Alexander Frazer and others.

"Manlove's Purchase" lay northwest of Multangulus and Newell's Park, on the opposite side of Cow Marsh Ditch, and extended up the west side thereof. A part of this tract, one hundred and fifty acres, was in the possession of Joseph Nock in 1795, who conveyed that quantity to William Morris. This tract is now owned by Ezekiel C. Frazer.

"Cooper Cemetery," lying two miles west of Willow Grove, has been used for more than a hundred years as a place of sepulture. It was incorporated by act of General Assembly, March 5, 1867, and conveyed in fee-simple by Samuel B. Cooper, Esq., late Speaker of the State Senate, to the trustees of said cemetery, who were also incorporators, viz.: John Downham, William Broadway, Thomas Gooden, John Purnell, David D. Marvel and four others.

Cateen Ridge is a tract of two hundred acres, lying north of Manlove's Purchase, and on the west side of Cow Marsh Ditch, adjoining Good Luck and Lowber's Fancy.
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

ber's Fancy. This tract is in the form of a rectangle, extending due west four hundred and twenty perches, and due south eighty perches. It is described as being "near the south side of Bear Swamp, including a certain Ridge called 'Brook's his Cabin.'" It was taken up by Peter Voshall on a warrant of June 20, 1717, and became the property of Michael Lowber, Jr., January 3, 1744, and is now chiefly owned by Thomas Cook and William Gooden.

Muncie's Mount is a tract of two hundred and twenty acres warranted to Francis Muncie, May 4, 1737, and surveyed to his son Thomas October 15, 1741. It lies one mile west of Willow Grove, and binds on the north side of Cabin Ridge. For many years it was owned by Thomas M. Cooper, but is now the property of Dr. John M. Wilkinson. On the north of Muncie's Mount is a tract of one hundred and ninety-three acres, named "Plymouth," taken under a warrant of March 8, 1748, by Hannah Thomas, trustee for Thomas Thomas. In 1797 this tract lying on Culbreth's Marsh Ditch, which with other tracts made four hundred acres, was in the possession of William Morris, from whom it descended to Edward Jay Morris, of Philadelphia. It is now owned by John Gooden.

Addition to Cabin Ridge is a tract of five hundred and twenty acres, lying west of "Manlove's Chance," "Cabin Ridge," and "Muncie's Mount," and lands of the heirs of Samuel B. Cooper. It is of a very irregular shape, extending northward nearly one and a half miles and then westward one mile. It was surveyed to Peter Lowber August 25, 1742, and with the exception of John Colby Smith, who owns one hundred and thirty-eight acres of the tract called the "Leak," on the north side of the road from Willow Grove to Henderson, Md., the land is in possession of his descendants. The remainder of the tract, south of the aforesaid road, is now owned by William Gooden, Peter L. Cooper, Peter C. Grunwell, John Bell and Nehemiah Cohee.

Petersburg is a small village of eight dwellings and about thirty persons. It is situate twelve and a half miles from Dover, and is two miles southwest of "Willow Grove" on the road to "Greensboro." It derives its name from the number of the descendants of Peter Lowber bearing his first name and residing in the neighborhood. It was, about 1840, called "Meredith's Shop," from Peter Meredith, an Old School Baptist preacher carrying on the blacksmith and wheelwright business, but about 1872, when a post-office was established there, it was changed to Petersburg. There is one general store and a wheelwright and blacksmith shop here. The postmaster is Peter C. Frazer, the village merchant, who first petitioned for the post-office, and which is served with a daily mail.

Mount Moriah is a small hamlet situated four and a half miles southwest of "Willow Grove" on the road to "Greensboro," and contains one store, two dwellings and one meeting-house, belonging to the Old School Baptists, and a cemetery in connection with the church. On the 2d day of February, 1868, a post-office was established here and Warren J. Reed appointed postmaster, and the office supplied by a tri-weekly mail. Mr. Reed was succeeded by Thomas D. Cubbage as postmaster and merchant, but the post-office was soon thereafter discontinued.

This place, years ago, was quite noted as a resort for the sporting fraternity, where they not only indulged in conviviality and general good cheer, but also engaged in horse-racing, gaming, and the sports of the chase. In later years all this has ceased.

"The Baptist Church at Cow Marsh" was the fourth Baptist church organized in Delaware, and was constituted as "The Baptist Church at Cow Marsh," July 18, 1781. In 1770, Rev. John Sutton, then pastor at Welsh Tract, held the first meeting here. After this period Revs. Isaac Steele, R. Kelsay, Wm. Worth and others, preached here. In 1772, Rev. James Sutton baptized four, vis.: John Price and his wife, Grace Reynolds and Elizabeth Reynolds. The following named persons from this territory were baptized here or at Welsh Tract: 1781, Wm. Price, John Price, John Patton, Job Meredith, Sr., Elizabeth Patton, Alice ———, Wm. Betts, Elizabeth Betts, Jacob Gruell, Susanna Robinson, Ruth Meredith, Sarah Lewis, Jacob Meredith Davis Meredith, Elizabeth Meredith, Sarah Goodwine, Elizabeth Patton, Sr., Rebekah Price, Lucretia Bostwick, Daniel Carter, Joshua Dewees, Elizabeth Dewees, Mary McGifford. In 1802 the total membership was 116.

The intention of erecting a meeting-house in 1811 was abandoned on the death of Luff Meredith, an active friend, and meetings were held at the house of Job Meredith, Sr. On March 21, 1787, Rev. Eliphael Daze took charge of the church in conjunction with the one at Duck Creek. He resigned October 26, 1788, and was succeeded by Revs. Ferrell, Dewees, and others.

At a meeting of the Church, December 10, 1791, on the second order of business, it was "Motioned whether it would be proper to give Brother Flood License to Exercise His Gifts Publicly where he may have an Invitation, & the Lord in his Providence may Call Him. answered in the affirmative, & appoint Br. Job Meredith, Jr. to write the Credentials, which was accordingly done, & signed Next Day."

"Nov. 10, 1792, The Church met after worship, agreed to Build a Meeting-House and appoint B' Flood to Draw a Deed.

2nd. Appoint James Frazier and John Growell 2nd as trustees to Receive the acknowledgement of the Deed for the Ground to Build the house on in behalf of the Church."

In pursuance of the foregoing agreement Job Meredith, September 7, 1793, conveyed to "Joseph Flood, professor of Theology, a parcel of ground formerly called the Stand (But now called Mount Moriah) containing two acres or thereabout."
KENT COUNTY.

In 1794, it seems that a house for worship had been built according to the following extract from the minutes of November 8th of that year: "B' Price, Sr., being present agreed with the Church to nominate two workmen of the Carpenters Business to Value the work done to the meeting-house by B' Price."

On the 4th of June, 1796, Joseph Flood conveyed to "Samuel Broadaway, John Price, James Frasher, William Price and John Greewell, Trustees" of the "Baptist Church at Mount Moriah," the aforesaid tract of "two acres or thereabout."

In 1872 the old building having become dilapidated and too contracted to accommodate the people, it was torn down and a new building, thirty by forty feet, at a cost of sixteen hundred dollars was erected in its place.

The preachers of late years were Elders Peter Meredith and Ephraim Rittenhouse, the latter taking the oversight of the church about 1862, which he has since kept.

In the extreme western end of the hundred is a tract of forty-three acres, abutting upon the Maryland Line and on the northeast side Choptank River at the head thereof, called "Millford," taken up under a warrant of February 22, 1776, by Joseph Furtad, who built a grist-mill and a saw-mill at the place, which was long known as "Furtad's Mill." It is now the property of Hon. Joseph P. Compegs, chief justice of Delaware State.

To the eastward and southeastward of Furtad's Mill, or the tract "Millford" is a large tract of land called "Towton's Field," and "Towton's Field's Addition," lying upon the eastern side of Choptank River, and embraced between the Cow Marsh and Culbreth Ditches. The tract "Towton Field's Addition" was surveyed under Maryland patent to William Hemey and the tract "Towton's Fields," was originally taken up by Col. Vincent Lowe. The two tracts contained about two thousand acres. In 1770, "Towton's Fields," "Denton Holme" and "Taylor's Ford," were owned by Thomas Ringgold, the elder of Chester Town, Maryland. "Towton's Fields" is now owned by Edward J. Carter, Richard C. Carter, the heirs of Peter Raughley and others. "Denton Holme" is owned by the heirs of William Smith, by Josiah Steel, Henry Steel, James E. Sapp, the heirs of Isaac Gooden, and Edward J. Carter.

CHAPTER LXII.

SOUTH MURDESKILL HUNDRED.1

Murdekskill Hundred was one of the original divisions of Kent County, and embraced all the present territory of North and South Murdekskill Hundreds, West Dover Hundred and that part of East

1 Prepared by John C. Gooden.
Dover Hundred that lies south and west of St. Jones' Creek.

By an act of the General Assembly, passed at Dover, January 28, 1823, all that part lying to the north of the present North Murderkill Hundred, except a narrow strip which was separated, January 28, 1831, was taken off to form Dover Hundred.

March 2, 1855, Murderkill Hundred was divided into two election districts, known as north and south election districts. By a further act, passed at Dover, March 20, 1857, these two election districts were, in the language of the statute, erected into two separate and independent hundreds, by the following divisional line: "Beginning at Dover River, at the White Store Landing, and running thence with the road to Locustville; thence with the road from Locustville to Canterbury until it reaches the fork of said road near town, thence by the southern road leading into said town, until it reaches the main road leading from Canterbury to Frederica, thence with said road to White Hall, thence with the road running past the schoolhouse, in district number twenty-four, to Mount Moriah to Sandtown, thence with the road leading from Sandtown to the Maryland line to said line."

The territory lying north of that line was declared to be North Murderkill Hundred, and that south as South Murderkill Hundred.

South Murderkill Hundred is about eighteen miles in length, in a westerly direction from the Delaware Bay to the Delaware and Maryland lines, and from three and a half to five miles in width.

The hundred is bounded on the north by North Murderkill Hundred; on the northeast by St. Jones' Creek, separating it from the eastern portion of East Dover Hundred; on the east by the Delaware Bay; on the southeast and south by Murderkill Creek and by the road leading from Felton to Whitleyburg, beginning in the road where it is crossed by the afore-said creek, thence with said road through Hollandsville to within about one and one-fourth mile of Whitleyburg, thence (leaving said road) in a southwesterly direction to the Delaware and Maryland line, the said creek and road separating the hundred from Milford and Mispillion Hundreds; and on the west by the State of Maryland.

The soil, in both of the Murderkilles, is of varying degrees of productiveness, being specially adapted to the growth of corn, wheat, rye, oats, buckwheat, to both the large and small fruits and to grazing. Its productiveness has been greatly increased in recent years by better methods of cultivation, the draining of marshes, the application of artificial manures and many other local improvements. The soil seems particularly adapted for the growth of timber, such as hickory, chestnut, oak, maple, poplar and sweet gum, nearly all of which, except for domestic purposes, have disappeared. In many localities, where once nature, in her timber productions, reigned in a superfluous abundance, the soil has been entirely denuded of its former luxuriant forest growths.

The surface is neither level or broken, but is gently undulating which gives it an attractive appearance inviting occupancy and profitable cultivation.

The hundred is traversed by two navigable streams, the St. Jones' Creek, on the northeast, affording passage to vessels and steamers of two hundred tons burden as far up as Dover, a distance of thirty miles; the Murderkill Creek on the southeast and south navigable for three miles above Frederica, a distance of twenty-five miles. These two streams with their numerous tributaries threading the eastern and central parts of the hundred, with the Choptank River and its branches in the western portion, afford a complete system of drainage to both North and South Murderkill Hundreds, and ample water-power for all the purposes of custom and merchant milling, and other ordinary manufactures.

EArly Settlements.—Here, as in most other new counties, the first improvements were made along the streams and water courses, which enabled the settlers to have access to the outside world, or upon which they could erect mills and find the requisite water-power.

The point of land lying on the Delaware Bay and between the mouths of the St. Jones' Creek and Murderkill Creek, now known as Bowers' Beach, was one of the first to be located, and was taken up by Francis Whitwell, who located other large tracts in Duck Creek Hundred, upon one of which he resided. This tract of land, to which he gave the name of "Whitwell's Delight," was located under a warrant dated in the spring of 1675, granted by Sir Edmond Andros, Governor of the province of New York and the territories lying upon the Delaware, and is described as beginning on the west side of Dover River at a point called "Mulberry Point," by the bay side, down the bay to the Murder Creek meadow, up the meadow, and inland to the head of a small branch, down branch to Mill Creek, down Mill Creek to Dover River, down Dover River to Delaware Bay, down the bay to the beginning, containing eight hundred and thirty-four acres of woodland and five hundred and forty acres of meadow. Francis Whitwell assigned this property in 1685 to William Frampton, who obtained a warrant of re-survey November 11, 1685, and received a patent dated January 5, 1686, in which it is stated as now being called "Dover Peere," and containing one thousand three hundred and seventy-four acres.

Frampton was a merchant of considerable means, and was doing an extensive business in this county in 1683. His bills were attested in that year before the Assembly, and show over fifty thousand pounds of tobacco, and large quantities of pork, corn and other commodities. He was licensed to keep an ordinary January 16, 1686, and presented a petition to the Assembly requesting the "removal of ye goods out of ye coves before his door, he being about building a wharf." This petition was granted, but for some reason he very shortly after moved to Philadelphia, where he soon after died. His daughter, Elizabeth Frampton, and Charles Pickering, of Philadelphia, as administrators, sold the property, January 24, 1686, to William Bassett.

At the time William Frampton was in business in this county the courts were held on "Towne Point," in St. Jones' Neck, then owned by William Darvall, and Frampton's place of business was on this tract, called Whitwell's Delight, the name of which he had changed to "Dover Peere," and where he doubtless intended to build his wharf, as the tract was across the stream from "Towne Point," now owned by Algernon Sidney Logan, of Philadelphia.

In 1750 John Booth, eldest son of Joseph Booth, was in possession of part of "Whitwell's Delight," or "Dover Peere," and on August 2d, in that year, sold it to Benjamin Chew. Nathaniel Hunn came into possession of four hundred and twenty acres of it, including some marsh land, long before Booth bought. He died and left it to his children,—Caleb and Nathaniel Hunn, and Mary, the wife of Waitman Sipple, Jr.,—who, August 16, 1734, sold three hundred acres of fast land and one hundred and twenty acres of marsh land to John Bowers, a part of "Mulberrie Point" or "Whitwell's Delight." Since the time of Bowers' purchase the place has been known as "Bowers' Beach." From John Bowers, the elder, it passed to John Bowers, the younger, and continued in the possession of the Bowers family till 1847, when it became the property of Joshua Adams, who had intermarried with Elizabeth, the youngest daughter of John Bowers, the younger, and who also had been in tenure and occupancy of the premises some years before.

The writer well recollects those times when Joshua Adams was "mine host" at Bowers'. In those days the people went down in wagons and carts, some of which were open and some covered, many of them drawn by oxen. They took the whole family along, women and children, and would, perhaps, be part of three days in going and returning, and upon the beach. They went for profit as well as pleasure. While at the beach they would lay in a store of oysters for the fall, and later in the season would return for their winter store, which they preserved by occasionally "feeding" or throwing over them salt water, and keeping them well-covered with salt hay. The writer also remembers the time he first visited Bowers', in 1844, that, from where the hotel then stood, it was fully three hundred yards to the water, and at least one-third of a mile to the mouth of Meredith Creek, but now "the tide ebbs and flows twice in every twenty-four hours" on the site of the old tavern, the mouth of the creek has advanced one-half way to the hotel, and where fields of corn then waved in the summer's breeze the land is now given up to the erosion of the waves.

With the death of Adams, in 1851, the property passed from the Bowerses and the last of their descendants. Amid the various changes and transfers of title to real estate in this county, "Bowens' Beach" has become at length vested in Mr. Joseph Wood.

The term "Big Thursday" is a name that is peculiar to Bowens' Beach, and many fanciful explanations have been given of the origin of the custom it designates, but with little show of plausibility. The custom originated with the enactment of our laws regulating the taking of oysters by our citizens from the creeks and ponds of Delaware. Prior to 1855 there was no law restricting citizens of the State from catching oysters at any time; but, on the 4th of February in that year, the General Assembly enacted:

"That hereafter no person or persons whatsoever shall be permitted to take or gather oysters within the waters of any of the creeks or ponds in this State, at any time between the fifteenth day of May and the fifteenth day of August, in this or any year hereafter," and this continued the law until 1848, when the Legislature, on the 7th of February, at the demand of the people, repealed the law. From that time until the revision and codifying of the laws, and their adoption by the Legislature at a special session held for that purpose in 1852, no restriction was placed upon the citizens of the State in relation to catching oysters at any time. In that year, however, in adopting chapter fifty-five of the Revised Code, the General Assembly saw proper to insert the clause that "It shall be unlawful for any person to catch or take oysters in any creek or pond in this State between the first of May and the tenth of August in any year;" and this continued the law till 1877, a period of twenty-five years.

The law of inhibition expiring on the 10th day of August, the people, as a matter of course, went down on the second Thursday in the month, which could not happen sooner than the eighth day, and were thus enabled to obtain their supply of oysters and be at home on Saturday.

Out of this oyster law grew the custom of keeping "Big Thursday," which has come down to our day. It was a day of recreation, of festivity, accompanied by the violin and dancing, conviviality and general good cheer. People from all parts of the county participated in the general gaiety, without respect to age or sex, quality or condition, renewing old acquaintances and forming new ones. In 1887, when the writer visited the spot, he found more than three thousand people present.

Prior to the purchase of Whitwell's Delight, in 1734, John Bowers had bought, November 7, 1727, two hundred and twenty-six acres near this place, but further inland, which was part of a tract known as "New Seven Haven," containing five hundred and forty-three acres, which was originally surveyed and laid out for John Kipshaven and Peter Hanson, but first warranted to Peter Groendendike, by the Whorekill court, September 10, 1679, and confirmed by William Penn to William Freeman by letters patent, dated August 15, 1706. From William Freeman, who died in 1713 without children, it passed into the possession of Cornelius Sullivan, who had intermarried with Freeman’s sister and his heir-in-law, from whom John Sipple bought it in 1728 and sold to John Bowers, as above noted.

Bowers also bought ninety acres, a part of “Great Genera,” of David Anderson (formerly of Alexander Farquhar), lying west of Tidbury Branch, on the St. Jones’ Creek, and February 14, 1734, purchased one hundred acres, part of tract of land called “Brecknock,” on which the village of Camden was built.

“Bowers,” recently “Bowers’ Beach,” is now a thriving village, extending over a space of half a mile on one single avenue, laid out into small lots of several acres. It contains about one hundred and fifty inhabitants, whose principal employment consists in cultivating their lots, in fishing and oystering in season and in a seafaring life. The public improvements comprise a capacious hotel, two general stores, a post-office and one resident physician with a splendid infirmary for invalids who wish to avail themselves of the invigorating effects of the sea-breezes.

Adjoining this tract (“Whitwell’s Delight,” which extended two and one-quarter miles in a direct line westward from the bay-side), and west of it, lay a tract of nine hundred and fifty acres called “Bartlett’s Lot,” which was taken up by Nicholas Bartlett, Samuel Burbury and John Nowell, March 9, 1685, and, by the survey of December 12, 1688, is described as beginning at a corner in a savanna (east of where John Saxton now resides, 1887); thence two hundred perches to a branch of Murder Creek, up said branch (Service’s Branch), with its meanderings to a white oak; thence west, north-west, and north to a branch of Mill Creek, down said branch to a white oak, southeast by east crossing another branch of Mill Creek; then down east side of said branch to the mouth of the easternmost branch, separating it from William Pant’s; then up said branch to a Spanish oak nigh head thereof east-northeast; thence south thirty-four degrees easterly to first corner. The three last lines are in line of Whitwell’s Delight. There was also surveyed unto the said Bartlett, Burbury and Nowell, the same day, another tract of two hundred acres, called the “Over Plush,” lying in the forks of Mill Creek and Skidmore’s Branch, and joining Bartlett’s Lot on the north. This tract of two hundred acres became the property of Samuel Burbury, but now is owned by Thomas James, a native of New Jersey, who came to this county about fifty years ago and engaged in the raising of sweet potatoes and peaches.

Bartlett’s Lot passed in part to Andrew Caldwell, who, October 5, 1774, devised it to his grandson, Andrew Gray, who sold part of it to Richard Cooper and part to John Huan about the year 1800. John Nowell, February 8, 1829, sold part of Bartlett’s Lot called “Second Neck,” two hundred acres, to James Maxwell, who, the same day, sold to Thomas Skidmore and to Joseph Richardson.

Bartlett’s Lot is now in possession of divers persons, the most prominent among which may be named the heirs of Henry Williams (recently deceased), John Saxton, Thomas James and Jehu M. Reed. The last-named is a lineal descendant of John Nowell, one of the original patentees, and descended from him through Henry Nowell, his son, born in 1741, who “settled on his father’s place,” and married Margaret Wilson in 1752, by whom was born a daughter Ann in 1758, who in 1786 intermarried with Elias Sipple, whose daughter Margaret married Jehu Reed in 1827, from which union was born Jehu M. Sipple, the present owner of part of Bartlett’s Lot, and James H. Reed, of Bower’s Beach. Jehu Reed, the father, was a man of considerable force of character, and obtained some notoriety in his day. He is said to have been the first person who introduced the culture of the peach in this county for profit by putting out a large orchard in 1830, and adding thereto from year to year.

Jehu M. Reed is descended on his maternal side from John Newell, who, with Nicholas Bartlett, obtained a warrant in September, 1685 from “Wm. Markham and John Goodson, two of ye Commissioners appointed to grant lands by Wm. Penn, Proprietor and Governor of Pennsylvania and Counties annexed,” for a tract of nine hundred and fifty acres near the centre of East Motherkill Hundred, adjoining “Whitwell’s Delight” on the west, and called “Bartlett’s Lot.”

John Newell seems to have prospered here as one of the earliest farmers in Kent County, for he eventually owned the most of “Bartlett’s Lot,” with much other lands, which has since been divided into several farms.

On the tract now owned by Caleb Williams he built his home of brick, with dormer windows, and roof in the style of the old Swedes’ Church that now stands in Wilmington, Del. This building which he erected is one of the original houses in old Kent, and is still standing. Here, with his wife, who was a Mary Warren, he lived and reared their children—William, John and Thomas. John Newell, Sr., died January 16, 1739, and is buried in the old Newell burial home garden, about one hundred and fifty yards south of the home building. His grave being marked with a hard boulder stone, the letters J. N. and figures 1739 are yet visible. His will left to his son John, among other lands “where he now lives, Plantation with 150 acres thereunto belonging,” one hundred and five acres of which is now part of the valuable farm of the lineal descendant in the sixth generation—Jehu M. Reed.

John Newell, 2d, settled in his father’s place, and took for his wife a maiden of Motherkill—Mary Edmons. During a prosperous life of twenty years they lived in the building erected by his eminent father, reared two sons—Henry and William Newell—and four daughters—Tabitha, Lydia, Hannah and Mariam.
John Newell (2d) by his will, November 14, 1759, after dividing his lands between his two sons, and much money and slaves to his daughters, willed the old homestead and plantation to his son, Henry Newell, "who settled in his father's place," owned and cultivated the paternal acres. At the age of twenty-two years he took for his wife a maiden of nineteen years,—Margaret Wilson, of Motherkill, daughter of George Wilson and Patience, his wife, who were married May 15, 1762.

Henry Newell, after thirty-five years of happy life in the home of his ancestors, made his will in 1797. He left no sons, but five daughters,—Patience George, born 1764; Mary Barratt, born 1766, was the wife of Judge Barratt, who gave the ground to the "Wesleyan Methodists" for the erection thereon of "Barratt's Chapel" (a spot renowned among Methodists); Ann Newell Sipple, born Third Month 17, 1768, who married Elias Sipple, son of Waistman Sipple and Mariam Townsend; Tabitha Hunn, born Eleventh Month 27, 1777; Lydia Newell, born Third Month 13, 1780. The will of Henry Newell left to his daughter, Ann Newell Sipple, one hundred and five acres of land off of the west end of the Newell homestead or "Bartlett's Lott," and which is now owned by his grandson, Jehu M. Reed.

The remainder of Henry Newell's property was equally divided among the remaining four daughters. Ann Newell and Elias Sipple were married Eleventh Month 23, 1786. Their issue were Lydia Sipple, born June 1, 1790; Elijah B. Sipple, born May 25, 1794, who settled in Denton, Md.; Ann Sipple, born May 27, 1798; Margaret Sipple was born July 4, 1800; Tabitha Sipple was born October 4, 1804.

Ann Newell Sipple died October 6, 1804. Elias Sipple died First Month 27, 1805, and left five small orphans to equally share the one hundred and five acres of Newell land or "Bartlett's Lott." These Sipple children were reared in the ancestral home. In 1824 Margaret Sipple bought out her brother, Elijah B. Sipple, and in 1827 she bought out her sister Lydia's share to the one hundred and five ancestral acres.

Margaret Sipple and Jehu Reed were married Twelfth Month, 1827. In 1828 and 1829 Jehu Reed bought the two remaining shares to the one hundred and five acres of Ann Sipple and Tabitha Grier. In 1838 Jehu Reed sold to his son, Jehu M. Reed, the ancestral one hundred and five acres, together with about two hundred and fifty acres of the "Reed Farm," for a bond of ten thousand dollars, and he is now the owner.

The land has never been out of the family since its acquisition by John Newell in 1685. Mr. Reed has since bought adjoining lands, and now owns more than four hundred acres. Margaret Sipple Reed died October 18, 1834, leaving three boys,—James H. Reed, Elias S. Reed and Jehu Margaret Reed,—so named at the last request of his mother.

Jehu M. Reed was born October 10, 1834, and was eight days old at the death of his mother. Margaret Sipple Reed was of the Quaker faith. She was in the millinery business in Philadelphia in 1826.

James Reed, the grandfather of Jehu M. Reed, was born near Snow Hill, Md. He married Miss Davis, the sister of the Rev. Benjamin Davis, who is buried at Barrett's Chapel, as tradition says, in a reverential attitude, and was the playmate of James Reed in boyhood, living on opposite sides of the road, Reed and Davis both being farmers near Snow Hill, Md.

The children of James Reed were Thomas, Jehu, James, Mary and Elizabeth. Jehu, the second son, father of Jehu M. Reed, was born May 6, 1806; died November 30, 1880. As above stated, he married Margarett Sipple, a descendant of John Newell, who came to Delaware before 1685. Jehu Reed was an enterprising merchant, agriculturist and horticulturist of Kent County. In 1829 he became possessed of what is now known as the "Reed Farm," owned by his son, Jehu M. Reed. He was the first in his county to grow the peach on budded trees. A few years later he shipped the first peaches grown on budded trees in the country round-about that were sold to markets outside of Delaware.

He had caught at Bowers' Beach and bought largely the king crab early in the thirties, and grew his first peaches from them as a fertilizer. He also taught the community to profitably use the worn-out soil, before the use of modern fertilizers, by sowing pine-seed, and lived not only to cut and ship hundreds of cords of wood grown upon it, but to see the same lands transformed into garden farms in a period of twenty years or less after the pines were removed, as his son, Jehu M. Reed, did.

His first crops of peaches, before the age of steam, were sent in fast-sailing vessels to Philadelphia, and he received his pay in gold to such an amount that it astonished some of the citizens of Motherkill Hundred of those days. The growth of the peach for the city markets a few years later became general. Jehu Reed cultivated a large nursery of the best fruit trees from 1829 to 1858, and introduced many valuable fruits. He took an active interest in the growth of the silk mulberry tree, and in 1836 received the gold medal offered by the Delaware Legislature for raising the greatest number of mulberry trees in the State. He had the silk-worm fed with mulberry leaves until they produced about one hundred bushels of their silk cocoons. He had manufactured silk into stockings out of these cocoons, enough for himself and family for years.

James H. Reed, son of Jehu and Margaret Sipple Reed, married Miss Emma Christman, of Pottsville, Pennsylvania. Elias S. Reed married Alphonsa Heyerin, daughter of James L. Heyerin. Jehu M. Reed, the youngest son, now one of the most successful farmers and fruit-growers in Kent County, acquired a knowledge of advanced modes of agriculture and horticulture from his father, and has continued in that vocation with great pleasure and profit to himself since his early boyhood, except two years, 1856 and '57, spent in travel and study through the South.

He purchased his father's lands in 1858, and had paid for them in 1866 out of its produce. In 1868 he remodeled and improved the buildings in a large degree, costing him over twelve thousand dollars, and has since purchased adjoining tracts, owning more than four hundred acres of the best improved arable lands. In 1866 he planted six acres in strawberries, and sold his first crop of that delicious fruit at the rate of fifty-five cents per quart delivered in New York City. He was among the first to raise this berry on an extensive scale in Kent County, and has since continued, having now twenty-five acres of his farm planted in strawberries. In 1870 he realized $5000 from a crop of six acres of this fruit.

In 1866 Mr. Reed set the first asparagus grown in the neighborhood for markets outside the State. This plant yielded a good income, and he soon extended its cultivation by planting twenty-five acres with it. His father on the same farm grew peaches in large quantities.

He continued to grow them and now has about ten thousand trees; he has also five thousand pear trees, about one thousand apple trees, and has raised some years two thousand bushels of wheat and four thousand bushels of corn. The value of the produce of the farm since 1858 to the present has varied from $6000 to $10,000 annually. Mr. Reed was one of the first to abandon the use of fences, there being none on his farm now, except around his residence and barn, adding much to the economy and beauty of his lands.

He has spent much time and labor in beautifying his home; improving his buildings and making his place one of the model farms in the State. In 1868 he graded and laid off into grass-plots in front of his buildings a very large mound yard. At the same time he remodeled his buildings to their present size. The house was built in 1771; the walls and floors in the north part of it are part of the original building, and are in an excellent state of preservation.

His residence and farm buildings, an engraving of which accompany this sketch, are provided with all the improvements and conveniences necessary to render his rural home a place of comfort and delightful retreat.

Mr. Reed married, July 14, 1858, Emily Buckmaster, daughter of Geo. and Mary Burchenal Buckmaster, of Milford Hundred, Kent County. Emily Buckmaster was born May 15, 1840. Their issue—Margaret E. Reed, born February 14, 1860, married E. C. Atkins, March 24, 1870; she died August 25, 1881, leaving Margaret Reverent E. R. Atkins, born 23d of August, only two days old, who has been raised so far by her maternal grandmother, Emily Reed. George B. Reed born July 20, 1862, on Sunday. Alice S. Reed, born October 8, 1864, married Clarence Prettyman, a prominent shoe merchant of Dover, October 8, 1884; their issue—C. Reed Prettyman, born November 29, 1885. Jehu M. Reed, Jr., was born May 1, 1866. These dutiful and amiable young men of good habits are in business with their father.

Nicholas Bartlett also took up other tracts, one of which, called "Bartlett's Delight," containing two hundred and ten acres, was located on the north side of Mill Creek, adjoining other land of Bartlett, and was surveyed for John Burton, March 2, 1851, from whom it passed to Win. Rodney and now forms part of the tract called "Dover Farms."

West of Bartlett's Lott, and partially embracing it on the north and on the south, lies a tract of land called "Clapoame," or Clapham, consisting of 333 acres, taken up under a warrant from the Court of Kent County, dated "y 19 day of y* 2* 1681," by John Albertyson and John Mumford. This tract is bounded 382 perch on the south by a tract called "The Downes," on the west 222 perch by "Johan's Hall," on the northwest 492 perch by "Carroone Manor," and is now owned principally by the Rev. Jonathan S. Willis and John W. Wright.

On the southwest side of St. Jones' Creek, on the north side of Mill Creek, and south of Barker's Landing, is located a tract of 840 acres, now called "Dover Farms," formerly "Gibbons' Point." This tract was originally taken up by one Hubertus Francis, who sold to John Burton, who, by a bill of sale, sold it to Edmond Gibbon in 1681, "y said warrant bearing date y* seventeenth day of y* second month, 1681-82," containing 695 acres. By a warrant for re-survey, September 20, 1698, for William Rodney, the tract was found to contain 840 acres. At the time of the last survey a mill was located on the lower side of Mill Creek, and on the upper side was a house and grounds called the "lower plantation." Farther up the stream was another house called the "upper plantation." This land, in course of time, came into the possession of Garrett Sipple, who left it to his grandson, Garrett Hardcastle, from whom it passed to John M. Ford, who, in 1856, sold it to James L. Herevin. It now belongs to Mrs. Mary Barnett, a resident of the village of Magnolia.

To the north of Dover Farms and the tract Clapoame, and joining thereto, lies a large tract of land, of two thousand acres, known by the name of "Carroone Manor." This tract is often referred to in old deeds as the "King's Manor" and the "Duke of York's Manor." This probably grew out of the fact that, in 1688, at the request of William Penn, the court of Kent County issued a warrant to the surveyor to survey and lay out ten thousand acres of land for the Duke of York, "on the rich ridge in the road to Choptank and on the heads of the branches of Murther Creek, or where they will in any clear land that no other person have any just claim unto it, being for a manor for the said Duke of York granted by a special order from the proprietor and the court for the same."

It does not appear upon the records that this land was ever laid out.

CABOONE MANOR was originally laid out for one
KENT COUNTY.

Joshua Barkstead by the approbation of the "Court of Whorekill," and consisted of two parcels, one of which, called "Crone," contained twelve hundred acres, the other, called "Caroone Mannor," contained eight hundred acres. These two tracts extended in one body from St. Jones' Creek to Double Run, a tributary of Murderkill Creek. In 1689 it appears to have been in possession of William Darvall, who, on the 7th of November of the same year, mortgaged it to Richard Draughygate and others, of London. On the 12th of December, 1694, it was sold at sheriff's sale as the property of William Darvall, and purchased by William Rodney for the use of William Penn.

On this tract of land are located the villages of "Barker's Landing" and "Magnolia." The land on which Barker's Landing, on St. Jones' Creek, is situated was, prior to 1800, owned by Thomas Barker, who built there a warehouse, which was called the "Red Granary;" later the place was known as Barker's Landing, and sometimes as Florence. The tract embraced six hundred acres and extended nearly to Magnolia. Of this quantity, "439 acres, 99 perches, statute measure, surveyed 19-20th May, 1739," was devised by Thomas Collins, Esq., president of Delaware State, to his daughter Mary, wife of Joseph Barker. It was sold by the sheriff September 20, 1819, and bought by Joseph Barker, who later sold it to William Heverin, who kept it for many years. It is now cut up into four tracts.

On one of these tracts, now owned by John J. Conner, is located a cemetery, about one mile east of Magnolia, and on the north side of the road, a short distance back in the field. It is inclosed by a brick wall, three feet high, and covered with a gable roof of cypress shingles. The inclosure is sixteen by ten feet, containing only three graves, covered with heavy marble slabs. Upon the surface of one is the following inscription:

"In Memory of Mary Barker, wife of Joseph Barker, and eldest daughter of his Excellency,
Thomas Collins, Esq., late Governor of the State of Delaware, who departed this life
the 27th December, 1795, aged 30 years, 7 months & 2 days.
Her death was occasioned by taking Peruvian bark, adulterated with litchage, which was purchased of an apothecary in Wilmington. She was an affectionate wife, a tender mother and kind mistress, beloved and regretted by all her friends & acquaintance.
She left her husband, two sons and two daughters

Barker's Landing in 1887 contained eleven dwellings and thirty-five inhabitants, and, on account of its proximity to Magnolia, might most appropriately be called "Sleepy Hollow."

The place, however, serves as an entrepôt for the merchants of Magnolia, who export grain, wood and fruits, and bring back coal, lime, lumber, fertilizers and general merchandise from Philadelphia and New York.

The village of Magnolia is located on a tract of land part of Caroone Manor, and was owned at one time by Boaz Manlove, later by John Marim, from whom the land in the vicinity passed to the Rev. James Bateman, his son-in-law, and Hannah Marim. November 19, 1818, they sold one hundred and ten acres, adjoining a tract called "Lombardy Grove," to James Millichop, which was long known as "Millichop's Woods," and is the present site of Magnolia.

This town is situated on the State Road, between Dover and Frederica, and seven miles from the former place. The place may be said to have had no existence prior to 1845. The only building then standing was the old Lowber brick mansion, now owned by Edmund Stout, Esq., which was built in the year 1774, by Matthew Lowber, grandson of Peter, the pioneer of the family, who died in 1698. The date of the building is on the southeast end of the house, near the top of the gable, the figures and the initials of the builder being formed of small pieces of glazed brick, laid in cement.

In 1845 the McLivasins came from Sussex County and built on this land. In 1847 there were five dwellings, one store-house and one building used as an Odd Fellows' Hall and for public school purposes.

For the next eighteen years there was very little progress, when, in 1865, the Methodist Episcopal Church was begun and finished and dedicated the following year, since which time the progress of its growth has been regular, and the village now numbers forty-seven dwellings, two churches, two general stores, one millinery establishment, two wheelwrights, two blacksmiths, one fruit evaporator, one lumber-yard and one well-built school-house, thirty by fifty feet, two stories, built in the spring of 1883. The school is run on the graded principle, with two departments and about one hundred pupils.

The village has also a post-office, a physician and one resident minister.

The Odd Fellows' Lodge was established and incorporated in the year 1847, but as an active body ceased to work about 1877.

The M. E. Church, in the northern limits of the town, was begun in 1865, and dedicated November 30, 1866, the Rev. Dr. Durbin preaching the dedicatory sermon in the morning and the Rev. Andrew Manship the evening sermon. This church was built in place of "Banning's Chapel," which was on the road toward Dover, and about one and a half miles from Magnolia. Upon the completion of the Magnolia church, Banning's Chapel was sold to Captain Thomas Draper, who moved it away and converted it into a barn.

The Baptist Church (New School) was finished and dedicated by the Rev. S. M. Harris, of Baltimore, February 15, 1874.

The town of Magnolia was incorporated April 3,
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

1885. The act named E. D. Benton, Charles Terry, William M. Prouse, Peter R. Hart and M. S. Van Burkalo as commissioners. M. S. Van Burkalo was elected assessor; W. M. Prouse, clerk and treasurer; and E. Stout, collector.

In 1886 the commissioners were M. S. Van Burkalo (assessor), Peter R. Hart, R. J. Blocksom, William M. Prouse (clerk, treasurer and collector), E. D. Burton.

In 1887, E. Stout, M. S. Van Burkalo (assessor), R. J. Blocksom, E. D. Burton, William M. Prouse (collector, treasurer and clerk).

The postmasters of Magnolia have been Amos C. Finstwalt, William M. Prouse, C. L. Terry, Saulsbury Williams, James K. Sapp.

In 1880 Magnolia Circuit was formed. It at that time included Magnolia, Canterbury and Saxton’s. It at present includes Barrett, Saxton’s and Magnolia. The preachers have been: 1880, W. F. Corkran; 1882, S. N. Pilchar; and, 1884 to 1887, G. L. Hardesty.

That part of “Caroon Manor” lying northeast of Magnolia has for several years been in possession of Edmund Stout and John J. Conner. The part lying southwest of the village, previous to 1860, was almost exclusively the property of John and of Samuel Chambers, but since their deaths the land has passed into other hands—principally of McLroy McIlvain, John W. Taylor, Mrs. Rasmus, D. Burton and John B. Conner, the younger.

On this tract, on the east side of “Double Run” or Island Branch,” is a mill-seat, long known as the “Montague Mill,” used in the manufacture of lumber. In 1868 it was sold by the administrator of Samuel Chambers, deceased, to John J. Connor, who, in 1884, sold it to Zadoc J. Callaway, who has since erected a grist-mill upon its site.

To the northwest of “Caroon Manor,” and adjoining the village of Magnolia, lies a tract of land called “The Plains.” It was taken up by Robert Bedwell, under a warrant granted “at a Court held for St Jones’ County the 15th of November, 1690, Present: Mr. Francis Whitwell, Mr. John Hilliard, Mr. Edward Pack, Justices.” It was surveyed December 20th, the same year, and contained eight hundred acres. In 1685 Bedwell sold it to Henry Johnson and Daniel Ruttby, who sold it off in smaller quantities. This tract lay a short distance west of the Magnolia and Dover Road, and extended to the corporate limits of the village, crossing the road from Magnolia to Canterbury, and from thence it extended in a southwest direction, at an average distance of thirty rods and parallel with said road, to “Double Run” Branch, a distance of three hundred and eighty rods; thence with “Double Run” irregularly, a distance of three hundred and twenty-eight rods, crossing the Woodleytown Road, dividing North and South Murderkill Hundreds; thence a short distance from, and parallel with, said last road, northeast three hundred and eighty perches; thence southeast three hundred and twenty-eight perches, crossing the Magnolia and Canterbury Road about thirty perches to beginning, near western edge of the village. The northern part of this tract, on the road dividing the two Murderkills, once stood the village of “Woodleytown,” in recent years known by the name of Locustville. “Woodleytown” was part of the “Plains” and was laid out in 1783, in which year Jonathan Woodley and Caleb Woodley purchased, each, a small lot of ground and the year following Gove Woodley purchased a small lot. In its day and generation it did a thriving business, but with the advent of the Delaware Railroad in 1857, and the activity manifested by the village of Magnolia, only one mile distant, it fell into decay; and to-day the stranger seeking its site would be as badly puzzled to locate it as he would the fabled “Atlantis.” The buildings have been moved away or pulled down; the village has utterly ceased to exist.

“The Plains” is now principally owned by Wm. Jackson, Philip J. Barrett, Samuel Saxton, Avery D. Marvel, Stephen M. Thomas, Mrs. Sarah Wilson and Henry Burke.

The tract owned by Burke was sold by Daniel Rutty to James and Hugh Craige, November 10, 1733, and contained fifty acres. Prior to the sale to the Craiges, Rutty, on the 14th of February, 1725, sold two acres of land in Murderkill Hundred, part of “The Plains,” lying on a small branch or sprout proceeding out of the Double Runs, “and is the same whereon the Presbyterian or Dissenting Meetinghouse now stands.”

The trustees to whom the land was conveyed were Thomas Skidmore and Robert Cumming, “for use and in trust only of and to the Dissenting Minister or Ministers of those people called Presbyterians in the County of Kent.” [Deed-Book H, vol. i. page 225.]

The Old Presbyterian Church at Murderkill was the first church of this denomination in the county of Kent of which we have any information, and was located about four hundred yards north of the present site of the “Montague Mills,” on the road from Barker’s Landing to Canterbury. The old road diverged from the direction of the present road, nearly opposite the dwelling-house of Henry Burke, and passed to the northward by the old church, about six hundred yards higher up the Double Rans, and crossed the two streams by means of a causeway and two bridges. On the site of the old meeting-house there are tombstones and the remains of an old vault now much fallen into decay, from which the remains of the dead were long ago removed. It is evident that the old church soon went to decay, for, in 1762, two acres were purchased on Hudson’s Branch, of a tract that belonged to Bedwell Maxwell, whose widow, Sarah Ann Maxwell, who died about 1844 or 1845, stated that she was the first child baptized in a church that stood on the Maxwell farm, then entirely gone. The land on which it stood now belongs to Mrs. Julia E. Hoover. This was evidently the second church, of which now no vestige remains. From the records of the Presbyterian Church and other data, it is ap-

Adjoining “The Plains” on the east, and abutting on Caroan Manor on the north, lying on St. Jones’ Creek, is another tract of land taken up by Robert Bedwell, under a patent from Edmond Andros, in 1679, which, lying almost wholly within the adjoining hundred, will be described in “North Murderkill Hundred.”

“By virtue of a warrant from the Court of Kent County, bearing date y* 21st day of y* 12th moneth, 1681,” there was surveyed for Peter Grundyce a tract of land called “Cittinbourn,” containing four hundred and twenty acres. This tract lay on the east side of the Double Runs, and was bounded on the north by the “Duke of York’s Manor” (Caroan Manor), on the east by the tract Clapham or Clap- oame and the tract called the Downs, and on the south by the Double Runs, or Island Branch, and a branch proceeding thereout to the northeastward.

“By virtue of a warrant of resurvey from the Proprietaries, dated at Philadelphia, the 22d day of Novemb’, 1736,” a part of this same tract, containing three hundred and fifty-two acres, was surveyed for Thomas Noxon by the name of “Joannus Hall.” In some of the deeds since that date it is called Joannal Hall. It is described as lying on the east side of the northwest branch of “Motherhill” Creek and bounded on the north by Caroan Manor, and on the east as before cited. This tract is now crossed by a public road, dividing it into two unequal parts. About fifty acres of the southern or smaller part was purchased by Thomas M. Vinson in 1880, and two hundred acres of the larger or northern part, abutting on Caroan Manor, by Edward Jackson the same year.

To the east of “Joannus Hall,” and south of Clapoame, lies a tract of land known as “The Downs.” It was surveyed for Bryan O’Neal under a warrant from the court of Kent County, bearing date “y* 22d day of y* 12 month, 1681.” It extended from Joannus Hall, along line of Clapoame eastward four hundred and six perches, to a corner in Servis Branch and was laid out for four hundred acres. Upon a resurvey of this tract, by virtue of the proprietaries’ warrant, dated November 21, 1739, “The Downs,” lately sold by James Logan, Esq’, to George Brown, situate on the heads of some branches of Murther Creek, hundred & Cot’ af’, according to the ancient corner trees & bounds, & the adjacent Lands as near as the same can be discovered,” was found to contain four hundred and ninety-eight acres.

parent that the church organization continued in existence until 1818 or later. The Rev. John Lednum says that the Rev. Mr. Huston (or Houston) was minister of the Presbyterians near Dover during the Revolution. It also appears that the Rev. Mr. McKee officiated as minister in 1739, and administered spiritual comfort to his congregation, so that as late as 1818 the Rev. Archibald McCooy was doubtless pastor.

Of the Rev. Mr. Huston it is related that, “One Sunday, while he was engaged at his church, a detachment of British soldiers came to his house and left his compliments by boring their bayonets through the panels of his doors, ripping up his beds and carrying off rather more of his live-stock, his cows, pigs and poultry, than they were welcome to by the feelings of his heart.”

It appears that cattle were driven from Rev. Alexander Houston’s farm, where John Saxton now dwells, and from Andrew Gray’s, on Mill Creek, both on the same day.

As to the location of the residence of Andrew Gray there seems to be some difference of opinion. Some locate it south and east of Canterbury, because John Gray had, a long time before the Revolution, bought lands in this neighborhood, and they suppose the cattle were driven from that farm in the time of the Revolution. They base this supposition on the fact that they cannot find where Andrew Gray ever bought land prior to December 27, 1804, overlooking the fact that Andrew Caldwell, his grandfather, who died October 15, 1774, bequeathed to him four hundred and sixty-five acres, a part of “Bartlett’s Lott,” to which he added, from time to time, other parts of the same tract.

There is no doubt as to the correctness of the version given by Joseph Burchenal, Esq., who says that his father, Joseph Burchenal, in 1805, married Elizabeth, the daughter of Thomas Lockwood, a tanner in Willow Grove, and in 1809 leased the Gray farm, and in 1817 bought the Crummer lands, also part of “Bartlett’s Lott.” From Mr. Burchenal’s father the tradition has come down to our day that Andrew Gray, the grandfather of George Gray, now a United States Senator from this State, owned the farm, in the time of the Revolution, from which the cattle were driven up to Canterbury, and that the house scarred with bayonet thrusts, now used as a barn, is located on the site of the residence of John Saxton. The two acres of ground where once stood the old meetinghouse of the Double Runs has, undoubtedly, since 1762, been devoted exclusively to the burial of the dead, and must have been generally used by the surrounding country down to recent times, judging by the multitude of depressions covering the entire area; but this place has long since been surrendered to the encroachment of the wilderness.

On one marble slab is this inscription:

“To the Memory of George Gray
and Isabella his Wife.
This tract is nearly triangular in its configuration and lies almost wholly west of the road leading from Frederica to Dover, a small portion only lying east of that road, whose extreme northeastern corner boundary in Servis Branch is not only a corner for this whole tract, but is also a corner for Clapoame, Bartlett's Lott and for the tract "Ausbe," next hereinafter described.

The southern extremity of the triangle is described as being a corner for Thomas Hether's land Ausbe and the tract called "Williams' Chance," and "on the southwest side Johnny cake path," a path that led to the present town of Frederica, which, previous to 1772, was known as Johnny Cake Landing. "The Downs" is now principally owned by Jehu M. Reed, whose residence is on the west side of the Frederica and Dover Road and near the northeast corner of the triangle, and by Daniel S. Ells. The tract "Ausbe," or in later surveys "Ouseby," was a large tract of land lying east of "The Downs." It was taken up by Thomas Hethers, under a warrant from the court of Kent County "bearing date y' 16th day of y' 8 month, 1682," and containing one thousand six hundred acres. It is described as beginning at the head of Servis Branch, a corner for The Downs, Clapoame, Bartlett's Lott and this tract, thence down Servis Branch to Murder Creek, up the creek to mouth of Cranberry Branch, up branch northwesterly, thence over branch west, thence northwest to corner by "Johnny cake path," a corner for this tract, for The Downs and for "Williams' Chance," thence with the four southeast boundary lines of The Downs in a general northeast direction three hundred and sixty-eight perches to Servis Branch.

This tract is now chiefly owned by the heirs of Captain James Grier, (recently Elias Russell, Dr. R. S. W. Hiron, Dr. Thomas V. Cahall, Thomas W. Emory, Hughett L. Knight and ex-Governor John W. Hall.

Upon this tract is located the school-house of District No. 80, which has from time immemorial been known as "Waren's School-House," because the Warrens, long anterior to the year 1800, came from Sussex County and purchased large tracts in this vicinity. "Williams' Chance" is a tract of land lying south of The Downs and described as binding with Thomas Hether's land up a small branch two hundred and forty-four perches, thence west one hundred and twenty perches, northwest two hundred and twenty-eight perches, in line with the corner by Johnny Cake Path, thence west-southwest to small branch, down small branch south-southwest to northwest branch of Murder Creek, down northwest branch to beginning at mouth of small branch on Murderkill Creek, and laid out for six hundred acres. It was surveyed for Thomas Williams and Peter Groenendyk, the 20th of January, 1680. A part, if not all, of "Williams' Chance," as well as a good slice of Ouseby, was in the possession of Philip Barratt, and is mentioned in his last will and testament in 1783.

One hundred and fifty acres of this land, lying on the northwest branch of Murder Creek, he devised to his son Andrew. Another part of the same tract he mentions in his will as "adjoining Johnny cake bridge, which I purchased of a certain Joseph Price." "Johnny cake bridge," here mentioned, was higher up than the present crossing into Frederica, which was built at a later date across a marsh and crannie, and was at a place called "Johnny cake crossing," on the same stream, which had fast land on both banks. This crossing was on the north side of the land now owned by Mrs. Mary Darby, and the road therefrom passed by the east end of her house and intersected the road to "Johnny Cake Landing," about half a mile west from the wharf.

"Williams' Chance" is now owned by divers persons, the largest land-owners being Elias Russell, William H. Wix, William Townsend's heirs and Hon. James R. Loftland.

Upon "Williams' Chance" is located "Barratt's Chapel," a noted landmark in the history of the Methodist Episcopal Church in this country. It is situated about one mile north of the town of Frederica, on the road leading toward Dover. The land upon which it is located was deeded by Philip Barratt, August 17, 1780, "unto Reynear Williams, David Lewis, Waitman Sipple, Samuel Smith, Caleb Furbee, Jonathan Furbee, Andrew Purdin, William Virdin and Daniel James," as trustees.

The deed of femmell, after reciting the nominal consideration of five shillings current money, continues in these words: "For divers other causes and considerations thereunto moving him, the said Philip Barratt have granted . . . All that part of a Tract or Parcel of Land Called William's Chance . . . Beginning at a Marked Hickory bush standing about three feet to the Eastward from where a Marked red oak formerly stood, being a Corner Tree of said Williams' Chance, as also a Corner of a Tract of Land Called Ousebee, and about eight perches from the Easternmost Corner of Brick building now Carrying on and intended for a Preaching-House or Chappel, then runs North West thirteen perches to a Hickory saplin marked with nine Notches, then Northwest by west thirteen perches to a Hickory bush marked as afs, then South East thirteen perches to a Red Oak saplin Marked as afs, standing in or near the line of Bowers Furbee's part of afs Williams' Chance, that with that line to the Beginning afs, Containing one acre of land, be the same more or less. . . Nevertheless, upon special Trust and Confidence and to the intent and express purpose of Building a Preaching-House or Chappel thereon, and that they, the said Trustees and the survivors of them and the Trustees for the time being, do and shall from time to time, and at all times forever thereafter, permit such persons as shall be appointed at the Yearly Conference of the People Called Methodists held in America to Preach and Expound God's Word and no others, to have and to enjoy the said premises, Provided always
KENT COUNTY.

From the records that have come down to us, it appears that the Rev. Freeborn Garrettson gave the first impetus to Methodism that eventuated in the formation of the strongest hierarchy of any Protestant denomination on this Peninsula.

In the year 1778 he preached at the house of a Mr. Lewis, who, in company with Philip Barratt, Jonathan Sipple and their families, became so much interested by his preaching in the teachings of John Wesley, that they formed themselves, with others, into a society of Methodists.

At this time it was the custom of the people to meet by appointment at each other's houses in the morning for prayers and to listen to a discourse from some passing itinerant. It often happened that more people assembled on these occasions than could be accommodated with house-room, particularly on Sundays and during revival seasons. Owing to the lack of room at private residences, the followers of John Wesley felt greatly in need of more spacious accommodations.

In March, 1780, Philip Barratt and Waitman Sipple took the initiative in erecting a meeting-house, the result of which was Barratt's Chapel. The edifice was forty-two by forty-eight feet, two stories high, and had a vestry-room connected with it. There is a tradition that the bricks of which it was built were imported from Holland, which is highly improbable, as the clay in the immediate vicinity is as good as any in the world for bricks and the art of making bricks was already well-known, as bricks had been burned at Lewes and other places in the Peninsula many years before this time. The house was furnished with a pulpit and occupied as a place of worship in the latter part of the same year.

In November, 1784, Dr. Samuel Megaw, who had been rector of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church, Third and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia, Bishop Asbury, Caleb B. Pedicord, Joseph Hartley, Rev. Cromwell and Rev. Thomas Coke, L.D.D., met at Barratt's Chapel and celebrated the first Quarterly Meeting held there, at which one thousand people were estimated to have been present. It was on this occasion, November 14th, that Dr. Coke, who preaching the sermon of the day, first met Francis Asbury and concerted those measures by which the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in America, which was effected at Baltimore, Md., a few weeks later. At that meeting Asbury was elected the first bishop in America and was consecrated by Dr. Coke, who had been ordained the first bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church by John Wesley himself.

The old fashioned high pulpit, which was reached by a flight of steps and which almast concealed the preacher from his congregation, has been remodelled to suit modern ideas; but the seat or wooden bench, upon which Bishops Coke and Asbury, and other pioneers of the church, sat, is still preserved as a memento. For the first sixty years of its existence the ground was the only flooring of the church, and the walls were left in an uncouth and primitive state. Yet, notwithstanding these inconveniences, the early fathers and mothers of the church in Israel never ceased to meet here and hold divine services.

Barratt's Chapel has enjoyed the ministrations of some of the brightest ecclesiastical luminaries in the church, but the most memorable epoch in its history was the meeting of Coke and Asbury at the chapel the year following, and their own consecration to the episcopacy for the ordination of the Rev. Ezekiel Cooper, then twenty-two years old. To this trio is to be attributed whatever of ultimate success the Methodist Episcopal Church has achieved throughout the world.

In 1799 Ezekiel Cooper became editor and general agent of the Book Concern, whose capital stock in the next six years rose from almost nothing to forty-five thousand dollars. The energy and ability which he brought to this undertaking gave to the "Book Concern" an impulse and organization that has rendered it one of the largest religious publishing establishments in the world.

After his ordination to the ministry, in 1780, he was in frequent communication with John Wesley as to the organization and details of the church. The last letter ever penned by John Wesley to the New World was written just twenty-nine days before his death, and was directed to Ezekiel Cooper. The original letter was in the possession of his nephew, the Rev. Ignatius T. Cooper, D.D., of Camden, Del., who had it framed, and treasured it as a memento of great interest. Here is given a copy of the letter:

"Dear Brother: Those that desire to write or say anything to me have no time to lose, for Time has taken me by the hand and Death is not far behind. But I have reason to be thankful for the time that is past. I feel one of the inimitable of old age for four-score and six years. It was not till a year and a half ago that my strength and my sight failed. And still I am enabled to scratch a little and to creep, though I cannot run. Probably I should not be able to do so much did not many of you assist me by your prayers. From time to time I have given a distinct account of the work of God, which has been wrought in Britain and Ireland for more than half a century. We want some of you to give us a connected relation of what our Lord has been doing in America from the time that Richard Boardman accepted the invitation and left his country to serve you. See that you give place to one thought of separating from your brethren in Europe. Lose no opportunity of declaring to all men that the Methodists are one people in all the world, and that it is their full determination so to continue,

"'Though mountains rise and oceans roll
To sever us in vain.'

"To the care of our common Lord I commit you, and am,
"Your affectionate friend and brother,
"John Wesley."

On the southwest side of the Northwest Branch of Murderkill Creek, abutting on the creek, is a large tract of land called "St. Colom," on which the village of Frederica stands. It was taken up on a warrant in 1681 by Benoni Bishop and surveyed to him December 10, 1684, for fourteen hundred acres. It extended down a small branch and Bishop's Branch until it fell into the Northwest Branch, then down In-
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

Frederica.—On the part of “St. Collom,” that Jonathan Emerson purchased, he laid out, in 1770, a town with streets and lots, each one hundred by one hundred and twenty feet. Zachariah Goforth made the first purchase that is on record, February 13, 1772, and bought two lots, Nos. 6 and 7. The other lots, soon after sold, were as follows: John Dill, August 24, 1778, lots Nos. 27 and 28; John Crompton, August 25, 1773, lot No. 2; Francis Manny, August 27, 1773, lots Nos. 25 and 26; John Fisher, September 9, 1774, lots Nos. 23 and 24; Solomon Elmonson, February 6, 1775, lots Nos. 8 and 22; John Gibson, February 15, 1775, lots Nos. 18 and 19; Levin Wainwright, November 15, 1775, lots Nos. 9 and 10; William Sipple, February 24, 1776, lots Nos. 11 and 12. Zachariah Goforth, August 10, 1774, sold twenty-five hundred and fifty square feet to John Dill, innkeeper of Johnny-Cake Landing. In 1790 William Berry was a storekeeper in the town.

The idea prevails among some people that one David Leach owned all the land around Frederica, and that there was a small cluster of wooden tenements, with here and there a respectable brick dwelling, the decimated remains of which are still to be seen. This idea so prevalent is all a mistake. David Leach did not come from Somerset County, Md., until 1729, and February 20th in that year bought one hundred acres of land in the forest of Murderkill Hundred of Jacob Simmons, called “Simmons’ Plums,” and May 14th the same year he bought fifty acres of land in the fork of Murderkill Creek of John Sipple. He did not own the land on which Frederica stands. “Johnny Cake Landing,” the site of Frederica, was east and northeast of Leach’s land, and adjacent thereto on the same side of the creek. Frederica lies on the extreme eastern end of Johnny Cake Neck. David Leach died in 1760, and was buried on Briar Bush Hill, and did not, therefore, lay out Frederica, as is amply proven by the deeds of Jonathan Emerson, dated twelve years later. The headstone and footstone, marking the site of his grave, on the brow of the hill along the cripple of Murderkill Creek, about fifty yards south from Nathaniel Lank’s large building, on his ship-yard, are in a good state of preservation, and bear this inscription:

“DAVID LEACH departed this Life
10th Day January
1760.”

Many people attempt to discredit the fact of Frederica being at one time called “Johnny Cake Landing,” but Survey Book A, in the recorder’s office of Kent County, on folios 118 and 183, will satisfy one of the identity of the two names. On folio 118 occurs this language: “A Draught of two parcels of Marsh and cripple, situate in a fork of the Murther Creek in Murther Creek Hundred, in the County of Kent on Delaware: viz. Fig 1. Containing 34 acres and allowance of six pr cent: and Fig. 2, including Johnny Cake landing and beginning at a cor. R. O.
KENT COUNTY.

of David Leech's Land, and of land late of Ebenezer Hathorn, on a point near the N. W. branch of said Creek . . . Containing about 65 square perches."

"Zachariah Goforth says that he, as representative of one Bishop, who formerly owned a considerable part of the Tract called St. Colom, is entitled to ground for a road to 'Johnny Cake Landing,' which has always been excepted in every grant made of said part by his ancestors or those he represents."

In this plot, surveyed in 1758 under a warrant granted March 28, 1757, the Northwest Branch of Murderkill Creek, on the north and northwest of the town, Murderkill Creek on the east, and Goforth's Landing about one hundred and sixty-four perches south, and the road connecting them, all prove the location of "Johnny Cake Landing," and its identity with Frederica.

One of the oldest residents of Frederica, who has lived there nearly the whole of his life, is James G. Hendrickson, born Nov. 4, 1801, and to whom we are indebted for many valuable suggestions.

 Frederica Church.—Meetings were first held in the house of Curtis Anderson, preaching every two weeks; the first building was erected in 1812, and the dedication services were held March 12th of that year by Zedekiah Davis. The building was twenty by twenty-six feet, one story. The original building was used for both a school and church until the erection of the second building in 1836. Benjamin Dill deeded the lot for the church and Benjamin Smith gave the framework. The first trustees were Curtis Anderson, Caleb Mason, Armwell Lockward and Thomas Curtis. The next building was erected in 1836. It was thirty-two by twenty-four feet, two stories high, with side and end galleries. The third and present building was erected in 1856. It is one of the finest church buildings in the State of the denomination. The dimensions are forty by sixty feet. It is of brick, with two stories and a basement, the whole being surmounted with a steeple in which there is a fine bell. The building committee were William Townsend, Caleb Smithers, J. B. Anderson. The present trustees are Hon. John W. Hall, Thomas V. Cahall, Thomas T. Lacey, James T. Postles, Joseph Burchenal and James B. Anderson.

As early as 1773 this territory was connected with Baltimore Circuit, and Barratt's and this neighborhood were looked after by ministers from that place, who were Francis Asbury, Robert Strawbridge, Abraham Whitworth and Joseph Yearby. In 1774 the old Kent County Maryland Circuit was formed, embracing this and all the territory now occupied by the Wilmington Annual Conference, and was supplied in 1774 by Philip Gatch and John Cooper; 1775, Abraham Whitworth; 1776, Nicholas Waters, William Wren, Joseph Hartley; 1777, Martin Rodda, William Glen denning, Joseph Cromwell, Robert Wooster. In 1778 Kent Circuit was divided and Caroline formed out of it. To the latter were assigned that year John Cooper, Henry Kennedy, William Duke. The next year Delaware Circuit was formed, and Caroline merged into it and Kent, and to it came Francis Asbury, Caleb P. Pedicord, Freeborn Garrettson, Lewis Alfrey, Micajah Debruler; 1780, James Cromwell and Caleb P. Pedicord.

In 1781 Delaware Circuit was divided into Kent, Delaware and Sussex Circuits, and to the former that year were sent Roy Cole and John Tunnell. This arrangement did not last long, for 1782 Kent was dropped, and its work assigned to Sussex with William Gill, Moses Park, Henry Metcalf and David Abbot. The Dover Circuit was formed the next year, and the church was in that circuit until 1835, when Camden Circuit was formed, upon which it remained until 1839, with the exception of two years, when it was again upon Dover. In the articles upon the Camden and Dover churches will be found the preachers who supplied this church. In 1839 Frederica was made a distinct charge, with Robert E. Kent as pastor. It remained so until 1841, when Frederica Circuit was formed, with William Connolly as pastor; 1842, William Connolly and Andrew Manship; 1843, Joseph Carlisle, Silas C. Palmer; 1844, Joseph Carlisle; 1845, John Bayne, John Bell; 1846, John Bell, Thomas Numbers; 1847, Levin M. Prettyman, Samuel Grace; 1849, Thomas Newman, J. Carey; 1850, James Flannery, Lewis C. Pettit; 1851, James Flannery, Samuel R. Gillingham; 1852, Daniel Lamden, Samuel Thomas; 1853, Daniel Lamden, William M. Warner; 1854, Solomon M. Cooper, Reuben Owen; 1855, James B. Merritt, George W. Fiske; 1856, James R. Merritt, George F. Hurlock. In 1857 the church was made a distinct charge; it has remained ever since. The pastors have been: 1857-58, Jonathan S. Willis; 1859-60, John Allen; 1861-62, Jacob Derrickson; 1863-64, Thomas W. Simpers; 1865, Alfred T. Scott; 1866-67, Henry S. Thompson; 1868-70, A. W. Milby; 1871-72, Edward B. Newman; 1873-75, William P. Davis; 1876-77, J. E. Bryan; 1878-80, John E. Mowbray; 1881-83, W. W. Wilson; 1884, J. E. Mowbray; 1885, J. S. Willis; 1886-87, J. H. Haynes.

The second building erected by the Methodists was built through the exertions of the Rev. Thomas J. Quigley, the preacher in charge in 1836, who also preached the dedication sermon. When the second church building was erected on the opposite side of the street from the old one, the old building was set aside for a school-house.

The third was dedicated in the spring of 1858, on which occasion the Rev. J. B. Merritt, who was the stationed preacher, delivered the dedication sermon. The old building shared the fate of its predecessor and was converted into a school-house, and also a town hall. The basement is used for school purposes, with three departments in active operation.

The first school opened at Frederica was in the year 1810, in the private house of Benjamin Dill, and was taught by William Hatfield.

The first and only Masonic lodge of the town was instituted here about 1827 or 1828. Thomas Clarke or Samuel Grace was Master. The furniture for the lodge was made by James G. Hendrixson, Esq.

Triple Link Lodge, No. 31, I. O. O. F., was instituted June 15, 1860, John W. Boone being the presiding officer.

The Sons of Temperance were instituted about 1866.

In 1887 there were no secret societies in Frederica.

In 1890 there were two resident physicians, Dr. John Mass, formerly from Cambridge, Md. and Dr. George Barratt, a native of the vicinity, both of whom died here and were buried at Barratt’s Chapel.

In 1837-28 a military company was organized, under the State militia law of 1826, with Thomas Clarke, captain, and Elijah Barratt, first lieutenant.

At the same time a volunteer militia company was organized, with Thomas B. Harrington for captain, and Mark Gregg for first lieutenant.

Prior to the opening of the Delaware Railroad for traffic in 1857, the town of Frederica was a commercial centre of importance. From here was shipped corn, wheat, rye, oats, staves, bark and wood in great abundance. The merchants of the town bought the products of the soil and the forests, shipped them in their own vessels to Philadelphia and other places, brought back general merchandise, and in the general traffic grew rich. In 1844 there were engaged in commerce and general mercantile pursuits, ex-Governor John W. Hall, William Townsend, Thomas Lockwood, Buckmaster & Smithers and Whitaker & Gooden.

There were two brick taverns at this time; the upper one at the northeast corner of Church and Main Streets was kept by Lemuel Carpenter, and the lower one, at the southeast corner of Commerce and Main Streets by Jonathan Carrow. There were at this time two physicians—Dr. Lister, who remained only a short time and then went to Philadelphia, and Dr. Albert Whitely, who is still in active practice.

In 1825, Joseph I. Lewis and Thomas Lockwood were actively engaged in the manufacture of silk and fur hats, but in 1844, Lewis alone was engaged in the business.

In 1809, Perry Boon kept tavern; in 1814 he was succeeded by Morgan Williams; and at a later date by George Harris.

Although Frederica, since 1857, has not been engaged in the lumber and bark business, yet other sources of profit and employment have been opened that are as equally beneficial to the inhabitants. In 1887 there were three canneries in active operation. The firm of Reynolds & Postles, successors to Samuel W. Hall, had the largest tomato cannery in the United States. In 1886 a new cannery was started by Hyden & McKnight, and in 1887 the third one by Carlisle & Co. The firm of Rogers & Sons, extensive manufacturers of fertilizers, has been in existence for fifteen years. There is also a factory for the casting and stocking of plows, and until recently there were two brush factories for the manufacture of mattresses, but both have been burned. In addition to all these there are ten general stores. There is also one clothing house, one coopering establishment, two butcher shops, one hotel, one variety store, one millinery store, one firm of general dealers in farm machinery and hardware, lime and building materials and fertilizers, two shoemakers, two wheelwrights and blacksmiths, one carriage builder, three drug stores, and five physicians.

One of the most important pursuits is ship-building. The time when vessels and ships were not built here and sent out to all quarters of the world is unknown to the oldest resident, of which there are several from seventy to eighty-seven years old. In 1844 the ship-building was carried on by Nathaniel and John Lank. In 1869 Thomas T. Lacey and Nathaniel Lank the younger carried on the business as partners, and in 1877 Nathaniel Lank was the ship-builder. The business is steadily carried on from year to year and furnishes employment to many persons.

The first steamboat navigating the Murderkill Creek landed at Frederica June 1, 1858, being the “Egypt Mills,” with merchandise for James S. Buckmaster, who the same year was the opposition candidate for Governor of Delaware.

The tract St. Colom passed through various hands, and was divided into several parts, and about 1760 was in possession of Zachariah Goforth, William Carpenter, Vincent and Jonathan Emerson, Robert Beauchamp and others. One portion of this tract, “Mott’s Field,” containing four hundred acres, is in possession of Mrs. Mary Darby, who inherited it by will from her father, Samuel Warren, who died about 1813. Other portions are in possession of Thomas D. Burton, Nathaniel Young, Joseph I. Lewis’ heirs, heirs of Robert John Lowber, heirs of Henry Whitaker, heirs of Joseph Smithers, Caleb Smithers and others.

The first attempt to form a corporation for the town of Frederica was made Feb. 9, 1826, when an act was passed by the General Assembly, entitled “An act Directing the Manner of choosing Commissioners to Regulate and Repair the Streets of Frederica.” This act defined the limits of the town as follows: “Section 8, Beginning at the forks of Murderkill and Spring Creeks, and running up Spring Creek to the division line of the heirs of Matthew Lowber and Thomas Lowber’s land, thence with a line dividing the lands of said Lecce, now Vincent Moore, and the heirs of Thomas Lowber, to the line of Joseph G. Bowland, and with said line to end thereof, continuing said course to Murderkill Creek, and said creek to the forks of Spring Creek and the place of beginning.”

Nothing was done under this act, and March 2, 1855, it was repealed, with the exception of the section defining the limits. March 8, 1865, an act was passed by the General Assembly again incorporating the town, defining the limits, and ordering a plot to be made. It named Hon. John W. Hall, William
THE FOLLOWING HAVE BEEN POSTMASTER AT FREDERICA:

John E. Price, James Thomas, William L. Timmons, John H. Carrow, William Whittaker and William Whittaker, Jr. The office has been in existence over sixty years.

The tract “Bishop’s Choice,” to which reference has heretofore been made, was surveyed to Benoni Bishop, March 29, 1861, and extended from Murderkill Creek and Ash Branch to Bishop’s Branch (Pratt’s Branch), “taking in a small neck called ‘Timber Neck,’” which lyeth on the N. W. syde of Bishop’s branch,” and contained one thousand and fifty acres. This tract lay immediately west of and adjoining St. Colom. Bishop sold to Robert Hudson, who lived farther up the stream (Hudson’s Branch), six hundred acres of “Bishop’s Choice.” This property passed to Daniel Hudson, the eldest son of Robert, and the deed to the tract was confirmed February 13, 1738, by Margaret, daughter of Benoni Bishop and wife of John Bowman, and Sarah (wife of John Townsend) and Elizabeth (wife of Francis Alexander), step-daughters of Benoni Bishop. In the same month and year Hudson sold the upper part of Bishop’s Choice to Mark Manlove, who gave it the name of “Manlove’s Chance.” It contained four hundred acres, and is described as beginning twenty perches above the first sprout above the King’s Road, and thence southeast by south two hundred and twenty-six perches, northeast by east one hundred perches, northwest by north forty perches, north eight degrees west to branch, up branch to beginning. This tract is now principally owned by Samuel D. Roe and others.

Hudson also sold one hundred and fifty acres, part of same tract, to Jacob Simmons, February 14, 1723, which he names “Simmons’ Plumb.”

On the 13th of May, 1747, James Taylor purchased from John Harper two hundred acres, part of Bishop’s Choice, and May 12, 1748, conveyed two and three-quarters acres to George Goforth, for a mill-seat, on the south side of Bishop’s Branch; and on the 28th of the same month it was condemned to such use. There was also purchased a piece of ground of fourteen acres, part of Bishop’s Choice and also part of mill-seat. On the 29th of November, 1792, Peter Goforth sold the mill-seat and mill called “Goforth’s Mill,” on Bishop’s Branch, to Michael Hall Bonwill, from whom it took the name of “Bonwill’s Mill.” It is now owned by John Pennel Emerson.

Adjoining the tract “St. Colom,” and resting on Murder Creek, was a tract of three hundred acres taken up by Thomas Heathard about 1888-89, called “Heathard’s Adventure.” In 1776 it was in possession of William Carpenter, and lies southwest of Frederica. It is now in possession of Thomas Brown and Cyrus P. Rogers. “Edmonds’ Chance,” containing three hundred acres, adjoining “Heatherd’s Adventures" on the west, was taken up by Robert Edmonds, from whom it passed respectively to Jacob and Vincent Emerson, and in February, 1767, was bought by Jonathan Emerson, who at the same time purchased one hundred other acres.

To the west of Edmonds' Chance, abutting on Murderkill Creek, is a tract ("Cambridge") of nearly four hundred acres. It is bounded on the north in part by Bishop's Choice and by "Elizabeth's Lot." - (tract or land consisting of five hundred and fifty-one acres, under the name of "Topham's Chance," surveyed for Christopher Topham, February 26, 1738, and intersected by the "road from Johnny Cake Neck to Choptank," and by the "upper road down to Sumers," dividing it into four nearly equal parcels, now owned by Samuel D. Roe and others)—and on the west by tract "Fromes Elsworth," sometimes written "Farina Elsworth."

CAMBRIDGE.—This tract was surveyed for Benjamin Johnson, under warrant of October 9, 1738, and contained three hundred and thirty-eight acres and an addition of fifty-four acres. It is crossed by the upper King's Road to Lewes and is now chiefly owned by Dr. John A. Mopre and Thomas B. Coursey. On the southeast of this tract, on Murderkill Creek, is located a grist-mill and saw-mill, owned by Thomas B. Coursey. This mill was mentioned in a deed to Benjamin Gibbs in 1777.

To the west of "Cambridge" and "Topham's Chance," and adjoining, is located "Fromes Elsworth," a large tract of nine hundred acres, taken up by Daniel Brown and patented to him by Wm. Penn, June 4, 1684. It lies on the north side of Murderkill Creek and is partially embraced by Spring Creek a tributary of Murderkill Creek, and is now in the possession of Caleb Smithers, ex-Governor John W. Hall, Alfred O. Clifton, Wm. Case's heirs, George W. Killen and Joseph H. Boon. On this tract, on Murderkill Creek, about one mile above "The Spring Mills" an ancient mill-seat, now owned by Joseph H. Boon, called "Boon's Mill," formerly "Jester's Mills." It was owned by Levi Jester, a Methodist preacher, in 1810.

In 1785 the land or mill-site was purchased by Jacob Broom, and at his request was condemned by Assembly for a grist-mill.

To the east of Felton, adjoining "Fromes Elsworth," lies a tract of five hundred and forty-six acres, called "Andrew's Venture." It was patented to Thomas Parke, in 1743, and conveyed by him to James Ringgold, in 1746. About 1815 it was in possession of Vincent Moore. It is now owned by ex-Governor John W. Hall and the heirs of William Creedick.

At the head of the "Double Run Branch" (which flows south southeastward about one and a half miles west of and parallel with the road leading from Magnolia to Frederica, and empties its waters into Murderkill Creek at Frederica) is located a tract of land lying partly in North Murderkill and partly in South Murderkill Hundreds, called "Amsterdam." This tract lies in the forks of Thornebyke Branch and Amsterdam Branch, and is crossed by the public road dividing the two Murderkills. It was taken up by Henry Johnson, under a warrant from the Court of the District of Kent (now Kent County), dated March 16, 1680, and contained two hundred acres.

On the 15th of February, 1682, Henry Johnson and Daniel Rutty assigned the certificate to John Courtney, from whom it passed to Peter Lower, who lived on it and died there in 1698, leaving four daughters and one son, Michael, who settled on the homestead. Peter, the pioneer of the family, came from Amsterdam, Holland; though there are but few of the name surviving, his descendants are scattered throughout the country and in some localities, the Murderkils in particular, comprise a majority of the inhabitants. The old high clock with brass works, that he brought over from Holland, is in the possession of Mrs. Letitia Gruewel, one of his descendants. The greater part of the tract is now owned by James W. Green, who resides on the site of the old mansion, in North Murderkill Hundred.

To the southwest of "Amsterdam" and resting upon Amsterdam Branch and the Double Runs, was a tract of four hundred acres, named "South Hampton," which was deeded to Michael Lower by Daniel Rutty about the year 1717. Of this tract, Lower deeded two hundred acres to Andrew Caldwell, and one hundred acres to his daughter, Susannah, the wife of Benjamin Turbee.

On the other one hundred acres he erected a mill, and on the 11th of February, 1744, under oath before a justice of the peace, when Robert Cummins attempted to dispossess him, said that he was sixty-seven years old, that "in the year 1730, he built a water Mill on the Hun's acres wher he had reserve to himself the upper part of a tract, wth hun acres of land and water-mill thereon, he peaceably and quietly possessed & enjoyed," etc.

Lower dying the same year while the mill-seat was in litigation, Cummins succeeded in gaining possession.

The site of the old mill was about a quarter of a mile farther up the stream than the "Montague Mills," and was by the road that passed by the Double Runs "Presbyterian Meeting-House" to Barker's Landing. This tract is now in possession of Lewis Jackson, Wm. H. Ridgaway, one of Lower's descendants, and of others. On the west of Double Runs, and southwest of "South Hampton" is a tract of land called "Arundale," which was warranted to Peter Baucom, by Wm. Penn, September 17, 1689, and surveyed to him May 5, 1634, containing eight hundred and eighty acres. This tract passed to Ruth Baucom, his only child and heir, who intermarried with Richard James, and from her to her son, George James, who left it to his son, Jacob James.

On the west, and adjoining this tract, is another large tract of seven hundred acres, called "Norridge," taken up under a warrant to Thomas Bannister, and assigned by him to Edmund Gibbon, Feb. 8, 1681. The tracts "Arundale" and "Norridge" lay upon the north side of Bannister's Branch (Hudson's) and seem to have been in possession of the James' in 1747, as in a deed of March 10th, of that year, Jacob James conveyed to Daniel James all his title to two parcels of land on the the north side of Hudson's Branch, so called, or Mill Creek, one called "Norridge," containing seven hundred acres and the other "Arundale," containing eight hundred and eighty acres. On the south side of Bannister's Branch, William Road in November, 1767, owned a water grist-mill, which was known as early as 1723 as Samuel Nichol's mill. In 1722, Nichol's administratrix sold "Nichol's Mill," and one hundred acres of land to Andrew Caldwell. It is now known by the name of "Virdin's Mill" and is owned by Dr. James T. Massey. In 1798, Daniel James divided his home plantation of three hundred acres, lying on the south side of the road from Canterbury to the bay, made up of two larger tracts, "Norridge" and "Arundale," to Edith Saunders, from whom it passed to Wm. Herring, and in 1855 to the Rv. John J. Pierce, who sold the three hundred acres off in smaller parcels to various persons. On the tract "Arundale," north of the Virdin Mill pond resides Charles H. Lowber, a descendent of Peter, who died in 1693. The tract "Norridge" is now principally owned by John L. Pratt, Wm. H. Ridgway, Thos. C. Kersey and John W. Bateman. Adjoining the south side of Hudson's Branch and the tract "Arundale" lies a tract of two hundred and forty-seven acres, taken up by Samuel Mann, under a warrant of February 20, 1741, called "Chance," now owned by John W. Hall, Jr., of Frederica.

"Hudson's Lott," lying upon Hudson's Branch, and almost wholly within North Murderkill Hundred, will be described in that hundred.

Hudson's or Bannister's Branch rises about two and a half miles west of Canterbury, flows eastward past Canterbury, then southeastward into Double Run Branch, about three-fourths of a mile above the junction of Bishop's or Pratt's Branch with the Double Run.

On the south side of Hudson's Branch, and lying on both sides of the "King's Highway," leading up from Sussex to Dover, is a tract of one hundred and fifty acres, called "Double Hill." It was originally purchased by William Manadue, who devised it to his daughter, who had intermarried with Richard Downham. It was re-surveyed to Richard Downham, under a warrant of May 15, 1740. It was immediately south of Canterbury, and was the seat of the Presbyterian meeting-house after the abandonment of the Double Runs church in about 1762. The meeting-house was about two hundred yards distant from the King's Road and nearly opposite the Old Maxwell Burying-Vault, which lay to the west, on the opposite side of the road. In 1845 this tract was in possession of Mrs. Sarah Maxwell, who at her death left it to her niece, Mrs. Mary G. Lofland, the widow of the late Dr. James P. Lofland, of Milford, Del. It is now chiefly owned by Dr. James T. Massey, who resides upon it. To the south of this tract lies "Burberry's Berry," consisting of six hundred acres taken up by John Courtney April 21, 1682, and assigned by him to Samuel Burberry January 28, 1683, from whom it took its name of "Burberry's Berry."

This tract of land lay upon the north side of Bishop's Branch, and adjoined another tract of four hundred acres, warranted to Christopher Moore August 17, 1682, under the name of "Snowfort." "Burberry's Berry" is now in the possession of Edmond Bailey, William S. McIlvain and the heirs of John Downham. It was the property of Thomas Berry in 1735, in which year he sold one hundred and fifty acres—part of "Burberry's Berry"—to James Anderson.

Some time prior to 1818 a large part of the tract was in the possession of Governor George Truitt, who devised it to his grandson, George Truitt Fisher. Upon the part owned by the widow of the Rev. John Downham, a Methodist preacher, is buried ex-Governor Truitt. The burial-place is west of the dwelling-house, in the wagon-yard, consisting of three graves bricked up level with the ground and covered with heavy marble slabs. Upon the slab of Governor Truitt's grave is this inscription:

"This marble covers all that was mortal of George Truitt, Esquire, formerly Governor of the State of Delaware, who departed this life on the 8th of October, 1818. Aged 62 years."

This distinguished citizen, in the various public stations to which he was called by the voice of his Country, always exerted that prudence and fidelity which belong to the soul of the genuine patriot; and his actions, as a public man, will live in the archives of Delaware, to attest to his usefulness, when this perishable marble shall have been mouldered into dust:

As a man and citizen he was happy in possessing the esteem and confidence of a wide circle of acquaintances; and while society deplores his loss, as one of the worthiest of men, his family and friends, gratefully mindful of his virtues, mourn his departure, as the knoemt dispensation of Eternal Goodness."

By his side reposes his widow (the daughter of Joseph and Mary Hodgson), who died February 6, 1822, aged sixty-five years. Mrs. Sarah Fisher, his daughter, the wife of Dr. James Fisher, who departed this life July 15, 1808, in the twenty-third year of her age, lies interred by the side of her mother.
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

On the northeast side of the Upper King's Road, and lying upon Bishop's Branch, is a tract of six hundred acres granted to Robert Parvis, by the court of Kent, on the “17th day of the 8th month, 1682,” named “Gilford.” This land is now owned by John Pennell Emerson and others. On this tract is located the old “Pratt's Branch” School-house, which for many years was the only institution of learning available to the people for miles around. It was incorporated by special act of the General Assembly January 29, 1829, with George T. Fisher, William Roe, William Satterfield, John Bailey and Joshua McGonigal as trustees. It now belongs to the common school system of the State.

Southwest of Canterbury, on the Delaware Railroad, lies what was once known as “Plymouth.” It was attempted to be founded by a set of colonists from Massachusetts, who settled in the immediate vicinity, bought lands, divided them into small parcels and engaged in trucking. In December, 1866, Rev. D. B. Purington came to Dover under the auspices of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, and in February, 1867, began preaching at Plymouth, where were several Baptist families. In the same year the Congregationalists built a church there at a cost of fifteen hundred dollars, but the ground on which it stood having been refused to be confirmed to the society, the congregation disbanded. September 24th, of the same year, the Plymouth Baptist Church was organized with a membership of thirty persons, who used the above-mentioned church for about a year. Revs. J. M. Haswell and Isaac Cole preached occasionally, but many of the members moving away and having no house of their own in which to worship, they became disheartened, and March 22, 1873, disbanded, the members uniting with the church at Magnolia. The church building in 1874 was sold to Hudson P. Haynes, who moved it away to be used as a canning-factory. Plymouth was laid out in 1866, and that or the following year the Delaware Railroad put in a side-track and established a station, which did quite a business for a few years. But the people being mostly small truck farmers and the seasons not yielding so abundantly as they had hoped, many sold out and moved away, the place went to decay, the railroad discontinued the station and Plymouth ceased to exist.

On the north side of the road leading from Frederica into Felton, south of Pratt's Branch (Bishop's or Parvis') and chiefly east of Fork Branch, slightly infringing on the northeastern corporate limits of the town of Felton, is a tract of land located by Michael Lowber and Henry Lewis, under a warrant bearing date May 29, 1715, which is now owned by Alfred O. Clifton, of Felton.

FELTON.—The town of Felton, lying on both sides of the Delaware Railroad, is ten and one-half miles from Dover and six miles west of Frederica, on the road leading through the town to Whiteleysburg. It was laid out on the 1st day of August, 1856, when the railroad and Adams' Express authorities opened their offices at this place. Robert W. Reynolds was the first agent; he was shortly followed by George C. Hering, who, after a brief period, was succeeded by James B. Conner, who has been in the employ of the two companies to the present time. The land on which Felton is built was owned by the heirs of Joseph Simpson and by Alfred O. Clifton. In 1856, when the railroad was thrown open for traffic, Robert W. Reynolds & Brother had opened a general store, and there was one blacksmith shop and one farm-house. In the fall of the same year a hotel was built and called the “Fountain House,” now “Smooth's Hotel.”

The population in 1880, according to the census returns, was three hundred and eighty-three, being fifty-four less than in 1870. To-day the population is rapidly increasing and some very fine residences are being built. There are six general stores, two groceries, one hardware and two drug stores, two hotels, two general carriage dealers, three wagon-builders and blacksmiths, one steam saw-mill, built in 1859 by John S. Kersey, which was destroyed by fire in 1876, and rebuilt by John Waldman the same year, who is extensively engaged in the manufacture of ship timber and general hard-wood lumber. There is also one florist and general nurseryman—Dr. Robert W. Hargadine, who is said to own and operate the most extensive green-house on the Peninsula.

The most important industries are the basket factories and the canning and evaporating establishments. In 1870 James H. Hubbard began the making of crates for the transportation of peaches, which he continued until 1875, when he put in basket machinery which, in a fair peach season, will turn out two hundred and fifty thousand baskets. In 1887 a second basket factory was established under the firm-name of Meredith, Conner & Waldman, which has a capacity to produce five hundred thousand baskets. There are also one canning and three fruit evaporating establishments. These basket factories and canning and evaporating establishments give employment to three or four hundred persons each season, for five months in the year, and add much to the material prosperity and well-being of the community.

There are two churches, the Methodist and the Presbyterian. The Methodist Episcopal Church is a brick structure, thirty-six by forty-five feet, surmounted by steeple and bell. It was erected at a cost of two thousand five hundred dollars, and was dedicated September 29, 1861, the Rev. Dr. ——Cook, of Philadelphia, Pa., officiating. Prior to the building of the church in town, the people of the village and the surrounding country met for worship at an old frame structure, about half a mile out of town, on the road toward Frederica. It was a plain, old-fashioned building, about eighteen by thirty feet, with the high canopied pulpit.

The following have been the ministers of Felton Church since May 1, 1865:
The Presbyterian Church is a frame building, thirty by forty feet, and was organized November 15, 1860. Rev. J. G. Hamner, of Milford, preached until 1866. From January, 1864, to January, 1866, L. P. Bowan, a licentiate of the Presbytery of Lewes, supplied the pulpit. From the spring of 1868 to the spring of 1873 the Rev. B. Murdock was the pastor in charge. During the next two years there was only occasional preaching. From December, 1875, Rev. S. S. Sturgis was the supply until his death, June 20, 1877. From October, 1877, until October, 1879, the Rev. L. A. T. Jobe was the minister in charge. Since his departure the church has been without pastor or stated supply.

Felon Lodge, No. 30, I. O. O. F., was instituted June 21, 1859, and in 1887 the lodge was in a very flourishing condition.

Felon Lodge, No. 22, A. F. A. M., was legally organized in 1869. The Masons met in the Odd Fellows' Hall until November, 1875, when they, in conjunction with the Knights of Pythias, built a hall of their own. The Masonic fraternity at Felton had many trials. They were burnt out and lost their furniture and regalia; and after their funds had been embezzled by their treasurer, they became disheartened, and surrendered their charter to the Grand Lodge. The Knights of Pythias also had a discouraging existence.

For many years the people of Felton had no other school facilities than those afforded by the old-fashioned school-house, situated half a mile east of town, on the site of the Purnell's meeting-house lot, and hence called "Purnell's School-house." In 1887 Felton had one of the finest school-houses on the Peninsula, and her educational facilities are as good as those of any town in the State.

A stock company was formed and a seminary was instituted for the education of both sexes in the languages, belles lettres and the higher mathematics. It was placed under the management of Robert H. Skinner, and was successfully conducted by him.

The town of Felton was incorporated before 1861. The records of the town in many respects are incomplete and unobtainable. The civil list is as follows:

William Morton, under a warrant bearing date the 29th of the Sixth Month, 1715. The strip south of the road is now owned by Jacob Friedel and the heirs of James Hopkins, deceased, and the quantity north of the road is now in the possession of Wilbur H. Burn- nite and — Parmalee.

Adjoining "Bear Swamp" on the north is a tract of one hundred and seventy-six acres, surveyed to John Houseman, by virtue of a warrant bearing date February 24, 1742. It was called the "Turkey's Nest," and was lately in the possession of Elias S. Reed and Nathaniel Harrington.

About two miles west-southwest, on the road to Whiteleysburg, is a small hamlet consisting of six dwellings, a steam saw-mill and a population of about thirty inhabitants, called "Burnite's Mill," formerly "Reynolds' Corners." The people are chiefly engaged in the employ of Wilbur H. Burnite, who runs a steam saw-mill in the manufacture of ship timber, etc., and an evaporating establishment in peach season. About five miles from Felton, on the same road, is a small village called "Hollandville," laid out in 1854 by Richard Holland, a surveyor and school-teacher, and named after himself. He built a dwelling and store-house, and engaged in mercantile pursuits, but in a short time the property passed into the hands of Samuel C. Dill, the present owner.

The place in 1887 contained two general stores, four dwellings and about twenty inhabitants. It also has a post-office. About one-fourth of a mile northeast of the village, in Mispillion Hundred, is located a Methodist Episcopal Church, named "Manship's," called after the Rev. Andrew Manship, who dedicated it December 2, 1855. This church took the place of "Black Swamp" Methodist Episcopal Church, located about one and a quarter miles farther up the road toward Felton. Intermediate between these two locations on the Mispillion side of the road, on the land now owned by Alexander Hughes, was located, in 1772, "St. Paul's" Protestant Episcopal Church, which was abandoned previous to 1820, and is now entirely obliterated.

About nine and a quarter miles southwest of Felton, on the road to Denton, Maryland, is the village of "Whiteleysburg," located on land formerly the property of Arthur John Whitley. About sixty years ago it was a thriving village, containing an extensive tannery, owned by the Lockwood Brothers, one general store, wheelwright and blacksmith shops, eight families and a population of about fifty. Today it contains one general store, three dwellings and a blacksmith shop.

It was located on or adjacent to a tract called "Rich's Wood-Yard," containing four hundred acres. The greater part of this tract lies north of Whiteleysburg and is principally owned by Jonathan Longfellow. This tract adjoins a tract, "Golden Grove," taken up under a Maryland patent.

On the road from Felton to Sandtown, about three miles west, is situated "Willis' Chapel." In 1868 the Rev. Joseph M. Magee, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, founded on this site a church which he called "Ebenezer." In 1880 the church building was sold and moved away, and a new structure erected in its stead, which the congregation named in honor of their pastor, the Rev. Jonathan S. Willis, an eloquent and popular preacher and lector.

At the junction of the road from Felton to Willow Grove and the road from Petersburg to Canterbury was located, in South Murdickill Hundred, on the line dividing the two hundreds, another Methodist Episcopal Church, founded also by the Rev. J. N. Magee. In 1857 he erected a plank church, after the manner of a camp-meeting tent, at which the Rev. J. S. Willis preached the dedication sermon. In the following year he succeeded in erecting a handsome wooden structure, which he dedicated with the usual solemn ceremonies. This church has been moved to Viola and rehabilitated within the last three years. The school-house which stood beside it has also been moved away about half a mile eastward. To-day "Magee's Chapel " Cross-Roads does not exist.

About two miles southwest of Willow Grove, on the road to Greensboro', Maryland, lying on both sides of Beaver Dam Branch, a tributary of Cow Marsh Ditch, and south of Iron Mine Branch, a prong of Beaver Dam Branch, is a tract of two hundred and seventy acres, called "Cow Neck," surveyed for William Welch, April 29, 1731. It was resurveyed for Michael Lowber, in trust for his three grandchildren, John, Michael and Susanna Reynolds, April 17, 1739. Michael Reynolds was the grandfather of Robert W. Reynolds, who died in 1863, and Susanna was the grandmother of John Gooden, who died in 1867, aged eighty-eight years. Through the Lowber blood these two families are connected with not less than half of the families in Kent County, and their affinities are scattered throughout nearly every State and Territory in the United States. "Cow Neck" is now in the possession of three of Michael Lowber's descendants. Robert J. Reynolds owns about one hundred acres west of Beaver Dam Branch his sister, Mrs. Fanny G. Clough, and Mrs. Leticia Gruwell own the remainder of the original tract. The mansion-house of "Golden Ridge," where R. W. Reynolds resided at the time of his death, is upon the tract "Cow Neck." "Golden Ridge" lies west of "Cow Neck" and is owned by R. J. Reynolds, to whom it descended from his ancestors.

About four miles southwest of Willow Grove, on the road to Greensboro', and lying on both sides of the public road, partly in North and partly in the South Murdickill Hundreds lies a tract of one thousand acres, taken up by Joshua Dine or Boyle, of St. Mary's County, under a Maryland grant, dated June 4, 1683. This tract was granted to Boyle by Charles, Lord Baltimore, February 10, 1684. In 1789 it was in possession of Benedict Brice, who deed-ed, the same year, one hundred and eighty-four acres to Edward Callahan. Part of "Timnah Serah," the above-described land was, in 1797, in possession of the heirs of Elijah Dawson.

"Timnah Serah " in 1887 is in possession of the heirs of Nathan Clarke, Samuel D. Conner, John Gruwell, Joseph Gruwell and Dr. John M. Wilkinson.

On the tract "Timnah Serah" is located a Methodist Protestant Church, which was founded in 1845, and superseded by a new and more commodious structure about 1871.
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

There was also situated on this tract a schoolhouse, which was used also as a meeting-house for the Methodists. Prior to 1829 it was known as a pay-school, and was taught by William Mason in 1828.

SANDTOWN.—Adjoining "Timnah Serah," on the west, is a tract of land taken up under a Maryland patent, of which no survey is now at hand. This tract was called "Codd's head-manor," and lay partly in Carolina County, Md., and partly in Kent County, Del. On this tract is located "Sandtown," which, ninety years ago, was called "Lewisville." The village of Sandtown was laid out May 9, 1797, on which day six building lots were sold: Edward Covington, one acre; John Lemar, one acre; John Grigg, one acre and fourteen perches; Sarah Greenbury and Benjamin Dawson, one acre; Robert Meredith, seventy-eighths of an acre; Thomas Taylor, one acre, beginning by a blacksmith's shop.

The ancient tract of "Codd's head-manor," on which Sandtown is located, between 1825-30, was in the possession of John Killen, a prominent man in his locality. In 1847 it became the property of John Cooper, where he has since resided. About 1816 a general store was kept here by Vincent Moore, who also carried on the mercantile business at Berrytown at the same time. In 1827 the mercantile business was carried on by William Bostick, and a hotel called the "Red Tavern" was conducted by Cynthia Grigg, who afterwards sold out and moved to Wilmington. The village of Lewisville at that time consisted of seven families and a population of about forty-five. The Killens and the Bennetts were the noted men of the neighborhood. At this time there is one store, kept by Samuel Faulkner, who also runs a distillery in the manufacture of apple brandy. In 1885 a post-office was established with James A. Longfellow for postmaster. The service is a tri-weekly mail. There are now three families and nine inhabitants. This place, like many others, before the advent of the Delaware Railroad, was noted for the conviviality of its inhabitants and for their hospitality towards strangers.

South of Sandtown, on the west side of the road leading toward Whiteleysburg, is a long, irregular tract, extending from north to south, called the "Crooked Billet."

It was taken up under a warrant of February 22, 1776, by Samuel Craig, and contained eighty-one acres. It is now owned by Henry L. Carter, of Frederica, and by Thomas Smith, who was born on the land.

Intermediate between Sandtown and Whiteleysburg is "Greenlee's Cross-Roads," which is formed by the intersection of the road from Felton to Greensboro, Md. At this point, and south of it, were three parcels of land, known by the name of "Brotherly Love," "Wootter's Lot," and "Bear Hill," which were in possession of George Cooper in 1787, who came to this country with his brother, Richard, from Yorkshire, England, some time previous to the year 1747. This land has continued in the uninterrupted possession of his family, and is now in possession of his great-grandson, John W. Cooper, who has since added to the three tracts two hundred and nine acres, part of "Golden Grove," a Maryland patent, which was surveyed to Robert French under warrant of December 23, 1702. This part of "Golden Grove" lies on the Delaware and Maryland line, on the north of White Marsh Branch and adjoining "Rich's Wood-Yard," which extends to Whiteleysburg.

At Greenlee's Cross-Roads, some time after his father's death, which occurred at the beginning of 1785, John Cooper, who was a local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church, built a house for worship, which was known as "Cooper's Meeting-House." This meeting-house was also used as a school-house up to the establishment of free schools in this State, which occurred in 1829. On the tract "Golden Grove" in 1844, lying about two miles north of Whiteleysburg, was founded a meeting-house and a cemetery by the Methodist Protestant Church, and called by the name of "Cedar Grove Meeting-House." Upon the building of this church the old structure at Greenlee's Corners was moved away and converted into a barn by William Greenlee. This building having become too small to accommodate the increasing membership and attendance in 1858, the narrow quarters were superseded by a new and splendid edifice, on the site of the old one.

On the east side of the road opposite, is a tract of two hundred and ninety acres made up of three other tracts, called the "Upton Farm," which recently became the property of Dr. Thomas H. Cooper, of Chestertown, Md.

Murderkill Neck is the eastern end of South Murderkill Hundred, in Kent County, bounded east by the Delaware B'y, north by Jones River, south, by Murderkill Creek and west by the north branch of its Spring Creek tributary, known as the Montague mill-stream. Near the mill-seat a slight elevation divides its waters from a branch of Jones Creek, and thus prevents the neck from being an island. The divide, with contiguous tracts, was an early acquisition of the Chambers family, whose ancient dwellings and burial vaults are pointed out to the stranger. That the Neck was once a populous abode or favorite haunt of the red man, is evident by the shell-heaps visible, and by other large deposits. Many arrow-heads have been gathered, of various shapes and origin. A heap of fragmentary arrow-head cleavings, once observed at the mouth of Murderkill Creek, suggested the idea that it may have been at one time a place for the manufacture of Indian implements. Recent collections of implements—besides arrow-heads and interesting specimens of pottery—include tree-killers, meat and skin-dressers, corn-crusher and a furibsher. Great numbers of water-fowl frequented the streams, small quadrupeds the forests, ponds and marshes; wild-turkeys were numerous; bears, deer and other animals were common in this locality. The family names of early settlers in Murderkill Neck, and especially of those who afterwards rose to a controlling influence in the affairs of the neighborhood, and who, having died, are now remembered only by what they have done, may be mentioned, in the following order: Warren, Barratt, Nowell, Sipple, Gray, Chambers, Van Natti, Neill, Walton, Darrell, Cramer, Montague, Boone, Lockwood, Edmunds, Hewston, Fisher, Cole, Lindale, Smith, Anderson, Smithers, Wilson, George, Manlove, Bowers, Reed, Grier, Clark, Harper, Melvin, Burchenal, Hiron, Vickery, Williams, West, Baker and Emory.

"Lamented dead and names of men...Who built the school-house, drained the fen."

The latest dates found on any head stones of the Van Natti's or Nowells are 1787. The private burial ground of the Warrens is doubtless one of the oldest, but that of the Barratts best denotes wealth and refinement. Inhabitants of the Necks had acquired a degree of social culture and repute before Frederica was known as a town.

The soils near the bay shore, and on the creek bottoms, are naturally stronger than the uplands, yielding more grain and of better quality. The farmers have always been able to carry more stock by reason of their marshes, and thus, making more manure, maintain fertility. Convenient landings for the shipment of forest and farm produce, and in the unloading of lime, coal, fertilizers and general merchandise, is of great advantage to the farmers in this locality.

To restore the worn-out lands, lime was applied at an early period by some who were able to obtain it. The late Joseph Burchenal, in 1836, constructed a kiln on his farm for the burning of lime-stone. The wholesale destruction of wooded preserves, before the development of coal, caused alarm among the people. To meet the demand for hedges, long before the Osage orange came into use, Jehu Reed, in 1832, having then a nursery upon his home farm, procured berries of the Virginia blackthorn. These he fermented, planting the seed in beds, and for many years grew and sold thornquicks in addition to other nursery stock.

In some instances he set out hedges by contract, notably one for his friend and patron, the Hon. John M. Clayton. About the same time he was in quest of pine-seed to sow on certain tracts of worn-out land he had acquired in Murderkill Neck, as is shown by a letter to him from the family of General Potter, of Maryland, dated October 23, 1831, which land he was then unable otherwise to improve. Failing, for some cause, to obtain the pine-seed to sow the next spring, Mr. Reed set out about thirty acres of this poor land in peach scions, from such of his nursery stock as he could not sell.

In 1834 Mr. Reed had peaches of his own growing of fine quality, from an orchard intermixed with the Damson plum. Finding the latter required different treatment from the peach, they were replaced by apple trees. It was not, however, until after he had set out his third orchard with persistent pomological endeavor, that Mr. Reed received any profitable return from his fruit from 1836 to 1840, and these were of natural varieties, as were all that had gone before. Amid difficulties that would have paralyzed any but a brave and determined spirit, the nursery business was continued by Mr. Reed, his stock including the different varieties of the peach, apple, pear, plum, grape and quince, also quicks and the Italian and Chinese mulberries. He was also early in sympathy with the silk-growers of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and set out a tract of his grown-out land as an orchard, in the Italian mulberry. Two of these trees he set near the front entrance of Barratt's Chapel, as memorial shade-trees, in honor of his deceased wife, one of which, after more than fifty-three years, is still in good condition.

The mulberry trees made rapid growth in the worn-out soil, and were, apparently, as self-sustaining and free from drawbacks as any indigenous tree of the forest. Under the inspiration of a National Society, organized in Philadelphia in 1839, with Nicholas Biddle as president, for the promotion of silk culture, Reed fitted up huddles in suitable apartments, and began the growing of silk, feeding the worms on the foliage gathered from his plantation of mulberries. Finding the first season that the silk-worm eggs were difficult to check or keep back from hatching before the mulberry leaves were sufficiently developed, he grew afterwards early lettuce in sheltered beds, on which to feed the young worms until the mulberry leaves were sufficiently grown. A few worms were fed on the lettuce exclusively, to observe the result, which was of fair growth, without the production of silk. Mr. Reed's experience confirmed the views propagated by Benjamin Franklin in 1770, and later by ex-President Adams; also by Mr. Randolph, who, in his report to Congress, as chairman of the committee appointed to investigate the subject, declared the perfect adaptability of Delaware soil and climate for the production of silk, equal to the best portions of China. He also found the work exesially adapted to women and children, and concluded that if females were encouraged to persevere in it on their own account, a lucrative business would certainly follow. Continuing a mixed husbandry on his farms, but dropping the silk business and other side issues, Mr. Reed resolved to make of the peach a specialty, and in 1841 took a new departure, as shown by advertisements printed in February, 1842. He procured the services of Champion Clark, a practical nurseryman from New Jersey, and announced that he was prepared to furnish "inculcated" and "engrafted peach trees," and any article in the "peach scion line equal, as to quality of fruit, to anything that can be furnished from any nursery in the Union." Mr. Reed sold his trees from $8 to $12.50 per hundred. His varieties were: "Early York Opening," "Early Heath Opening," "Old Mixon's Early Cling," "Red Cheek Malacatoon," "Pine Apple Peach Improved," "Columbia," "Morris White," "Late Rare Ripe," "Lemon Cling," "Late Heath" or "English Cling Improved."

Whatever remained unsold of his inoculated peach trees, instead of burning them, as practiced in New Jersey, he continued to hold and to set out on his best land. He also grew about this time large quantities of the famous Mercer potatoes. In one year he gathered about seven hundred bushels, and was awarded a silver medal for meritorious advancement in horticulture. When more peach trees were left over, Mr. Reed was compelled to plant them in soil less improved, and he resorted to the king crab as a fertilizer. In 1844-45 he had about one hundred acres in very thrifty peach orchards, all of choice budded fruit, which area was rapidly increased to two hundred acres or more a few years later. Selling the late Henry Todd trees to set out his first orchard, Mr. Reed afterwards sent his sons to inoculate a nursery of scions which Mr. Todd had raised from the seed. In 1846 he began to send his peaches to the Philadelphia market by a line of fast-sailing boats, of light draft, chartered and manned expressly for his own fruit. The peaches had to compete with those of Major Reybold, whose extra fine fruit went to market by steam, over less than half the distance. Notwithstanding every disadvantage, Mr. Reed continued this plan with abundant success for about ten years, or until the Delaware Railroad reached Wyoming. The boats discharged their cargoes bound to New York at Camden, New Jersey, where it brought more money than in Philadelphia. In 1857 the pines Mr. Reed had sown in 1834 and later presented a handsome body of well-grown timber, ready for the harvest of cord-wood, of which many vessel-loads were sent to market. After this wood was cut and marketed, Mr. Reed lived long enough to grow another crop of the same age from the same seed. About seven years before the timber was removed the land received a heavy dressing of lime, and when the ground was cleared, the once worn-out soil was new land of most excellent quality. It has been used almost continually since in gardening for the New York market. Mr. Reed's peaches and wood were shipped from Warren's alias Gray's Landing, on Jones' River, which empties into the Delaware Bay at the northwest end of a pretty beach, once covered with oak and walnut trees to the verge of an abrupt shore of gravel and tenacious yellow clay. This place, at first called Whitwell's Delight, has been known for many years as Bowers' Beach, and extends to the mouth of Murderkill Creek, about two-thirds of a mile. The bathing is good, and bath-houses with bathing-suits are at hand. A well-kept hotel with extensive stabling adds to the attractions, and though much of the shore has been washed away, it must continue to be a favorite place of resort. Its trout fisheries have always been a feature, attracting farmers and others, even from the shores of the Chesapeake Bay. The oysters of Murderkill Creek and of the shore near the mouth, are said to resemble the famous Blue Points, and have been preferred by many consumers to others for a certain delicacy of flavor. The gathering of king crabs for commerce has received a check by recent legislative enactment.

It was reserved for Bendle Blohm, of Pennagrove, New Jersey, to teach the natives the value and method of catching sturgeon. Casting his nets in the cove, in March, 1871, he took the first day seventy sturgeon, valued at six hundred dollars. Since that event, quite a number of men have engaged in the business every season. Before the sturgeon enter the Hudson or Delaware Rivers, avoiding the icy currents still descending the channels from the north, they seek the warmer waters of Bowers' Cove, and taken then are quite a prize to the fishermen. Schools of shad also, of the finest quality, bask for a while near the flat shore, before ascending the rivers and creeks. Recently and by improved methods, those engaged in taking them have made of it a lucrative calling.

A village has grown up near the beach, called Bowers', and a post-office was established there in 1830. The oysters planted off shore, by reason of the Murderkill waters, are of the finest quality. The one great drawback to the cove planting and development of kindred industries at Bowers' is the bar obstructing the mouth of Jones' River. Unable to make the nearby harbor, which Jones' would afford in stormy weather at low tide (with a jetted deep water way through this bar), the oyster boats have to depend solely on a run to Mahon's every evening, or, when in stress of weather, a round trip of more than twenty miles.

The channel through this bar permanently deepened, the Jones' River, meandering through grain, fruit and garden farms, and past numerous landings, affords a water-way for heavy and fast freights alike—an advantage which numerous and increasing business interests demand.

In the summer of 1887 an opening was made through this bar and the river dredged to Dover, and a steamboat has recently made trips from Dover to Philadelphia.

CHAPTER LXIII.
MISPILLION.

MISPILLION HUNDRED originally included in its borders all of what is now Milford Hundred, and extended from the Delaware Bay to the Maryland line, and was bounded on the north by Murderkill Hundred, and on the south by Sussex County. It was one of the original and the largest hundred in the State, and as now constituted covers more area than any one hundred in Kent County. January 28, 1830, the Legislature passed the following act dividing the hundred:

"The dividing line to be the road leading directly from the division line, between Murderkill and Mispillion Hundreds to Williamsville, being the same which was formerly used and occupied by the Philadelphia, Dover and Norfolk Steamboat and Transportation Company." All lying east of said road shall be called Milford Hundred.

In early time, nearly all of the present hundred of Mispillion was one vast forest of oak and pine, and all the early grants of land are designated as being in the "forest of Mispillion Hundred." The greater portion of this land has been cleared from time to time, and is now under cultivation. While there is still a great amount of wood land, there are very few of the older trees left standing, numerous saw-mills having from time to time devastated the forests. The land is a sandy loam, and in the central and southeastern parts has reached a high state of cultivation. The western end, which was settled later, is good land, and in a few years, under the present tillage, will reach a high state of cultivation. The cereals are grown in abundance in all sections, tomatoes are raised in large quantities for the canneries, and some attention is given to small fruits. Within the last few years a large number of peach trees have been set out, and the land being virgin soil for that kind of fruit, first-class results are expected.

The Marshy Hope Ditch and its prongs, which enter nearly every section of the hundred, and the branches of the Murderkill and Mispillion Creeks furnish excellent means of irrigation, and are carefully taken care of by incorporated ditch companies.

On Ingram's Branch of the Choptank River, which enters this hundred in the northwestern corner, large quantities of iron ore were formerly dug and shipped to the furnaces at Milford and Baltimore, Maryland. These deposits have been exhausted since about 1888.

The main line of the Delaware Railroad passes through the eastern part and furnishes quick transportation for farm products to the large cities. The Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia Railroad has its northern terminus at Harrington. The population is mainly descendants of old settlers, and in 1880 numbered, including Harrington, four thousand three hundred and thirty-four.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS.—The first settlements in this hundred were made in the northeastern part, and consisted of emigrants from the early settlers on the bay-shore and river. The southwestern part was not settled until seventy-five years later, and then upon patents granted by Lord Baltimore, who, prior to 1768, claimed all the greater part of the present hundred south of a line drawn from Whiteleysburg to Staytonville. These grants were taken up by the early Maryland settlers, some of whom had been landholders in Maryland for years before migrating to Delaware.

The first recorded grant that there is of land in this hundred was that to Luke Watson, of Lewes, Delaware, January 21, 1681, for a tract of fifteen hundred acres called "Hunting Quarter." Nearly one thousand acres of this land lays in Milford Hundred. The land lay below Harrington and towards Milford. Watson, by will, September 6, 1705, left it to his wife Sarah and daughter Mary, equally. His wife married again and died, leaving as lawful issue, John, Richard and Peter Hoffman. Mary married Peter Hoffman. Matthew Helford came into possession of a large part of this tract in 1760. The portion in Mispillion Hundred is now owned by the heirs of Dr. J. R. Mitchell.

The next grant was that of "Fairfield," a tract of one thousand acres of land lying on the south side of Brown's Branch, at the head-waters thereof. It was taken up by Wm. Durvall and Wm. Clark, on the 1st of Nov., 1684. A large portion of this tract in later years came into the possession of Chancellor Samuel M. Harrington and at his death was sold. The owners of the old tract are now Thomas H. Dorman, David Harrington, Dr. F. J. Owens, Samuel Swain, Alexander Harper, William C. Quillen, William H. Dickinson, Giles Foot, William Morris and John Richards.

"John's Purchase," a tract of five hundred acres on the south side of the main branch of Murderkill Creek, was warranted to John Townsend, December 8, 1698, and was re-surveyed August 19, 1737, to H. Durburrow, who owned large tracts in the northern part of the county. Durburrow sold the land to Solomon Wallace, who conveyed two hundred and thirty-two acres to Robert Catlin, and March 7, 1760, the latter owner sold to William Hodgson. This tract is now in the possession of Elijah Sapp, Waitman Clark and Colin Able.

"Salisbury Plains," a tract of two hundred acres on the south side of and on the heads of Murderkill Creek, was warranted October 30, 1717, to James Thistlewood, who built the mill there. A portion of this tract has remained in the Thistlewood family since the original holder, and is now owned by John Thistlewood. William and Beniah Tharp also own portions of this tract.

John Rudolph Bundelin took up by warrant, August 9, 1735, two hundred acres of land on the south side of Marshy Hope, opposite Booth's or Great Island and adjoining Cow Hand. This Booth's or Great Island was taken up by John Booth, who owned large tracts of land in other parts of the hundred. These lands are now nearly all in the possession of George Morris, William Seelers and Peter S. Harrington. Bundelin was also in possession of other lands also on "Marshy Hope," two hundred acres warranted by George Green, in 1718, and sold to Thomas Berry, who, in 1731, conveyed it to Bundelin. These lands were all sold by Bundelin, August 13, 1748, to Peter Galloway, and at the same time Galloway sold to Bundelin a tract called "Peersborough," of one thousand acres, in South Murderkill Hundred, except two hundred acres called the "Bear Garden," and Billingsgate, four hundred and sixty-three acres, which Galloway retained, parts of which are now owned by James Hopkins, Burton Townsend's heirs. These Galloway lands were all in the vicinity of lands bought of Bundelin. Peter Galloway, in 1784, took up ten tracts of land in Missipillion Forest, of which there was Wolpit Ridge, two hundred and twenty-three acres, and "Galloway's Luck," two hundred and seven acres on a branch of Murderkill Creek, and the other tracts in all embracing two thousand two hundred acres. The name of Galloway has in later years become to be known as Calloway, and descendants of the family are still numerous in the hundred, among whom are Peter N. Calloway, Henry Calloway and Eli Calloway. Peter N. Calloway is in possession of some of this original grant.

John Johnson, who came to Missipillion about 1700, purchased of James Parker, to whom it was warranted in 1709, a tract of land in this neighborhood, and adjoining tracts, including some of the Bundelin lands. He had over one thousand acres and it has been in the family possession ever since. Ex-Senator Alexander Johnson lives on that part of it called the "Coon's Den." The tract known as "Wolpit Ridge" is owned by Edward Reed, and other owners of these Bundelin and Galloway lands are John Traux, Daniel Anthony's heirs, Robert Raughley, Mrs. Lydia J. Harrington, C. A. Smith and Jacob Caudrey's heirs.

In the land office at Annapolis, Md., a grant is recorded of three hundred acres of a tract called "Turkey Point," July 9, 1724, to James Hayes, of Dorchester County. Henry Sapp received a patent for thirty acres with the signature of Benedict Leonard Calvert, Governor and commander-in-chief in and over the province of Maryland, chancellor and keeper of the great seal, May 27, 1728. This land comes into the possession of William Hewitt, and by him sold to Eben Hughes, who owns the thirty acres and a part of the three hundred acres. Hezekiah Sapp and W. C. Sutterfield also own portions of this land. It is described as located on the south fork of White Marsh Branch, on the south side of the Great Choptank River. It was here where iron deposits were formerly found.

"Merritt's Adventure," a tract of three hundred and twenty acres, was surveyed to Isaac Merritt, March 25, 1727, and lay between Marshy Hope Creek and old Marshy Hope, a branch thereof. On May 17, 1768, a resurvey was made, including the mansion-house of Isaac Merritt and granted to Daniel Benston, whose wife was a daughter of Merritt. The land was again resurveyed to John Barnes in 1808. Among the owners of parts of this tract are Samuel Thomas, Emorton and Thomas Prettyman. "Mills' Purchase" and "McKinney's Outlet," lying in the "forest of Missipillion Hundred," were granted by Maryland patent June 10, 1776, and were warranted by the proprietors at Philadelphia to John Fisher, and contained four hundred and six acres. Thomas Clifton, by a Maryland patent, obtained a large tract of land called Boyer's Adventure. An addition was made to it November 23, 1739, by a warrant from the Penns. Nathan Clifton was in possession of eight hundred acres of this tract in 1816. James Rawley in 1756 obtained two hundred and thirty-five acres called Rawley's Addition, adjoining the above-mentioned tract. A large part of these lands are owned by Elisha Booth's heirs, Mrs. E. Raughley (the modern corruption of the name), B. R. Tharp and Zebulon Hopkins.

On the heads of Marshy Hope Creek two warrants of April 21, 1735, were granted to George Manlove, containing nine hundred and twenty-eight acres. This land was resurveyed in 1766 and included an improvement where Manlove lived when he took out the warrants. It embraced an old survey of Hugh Durbarrow called Rejected Bundle. Manlove sold the land to Elijah Morris, Samuel Griffin, John Crompton, Robert Edwards and John Watts, in whose possession it was at the survey of 1766.

A tract called "Flowers Lot" was patented in 1736 to Samuel Fleming, and sold by him to Purnell Johnson, who left it to his daughter, a wife of ex-Governor William Tharp, who lived on the place. It is now in the possession of Mrs. R. J. Hill, a daughter of the Governor. The fine mansion-house on this farm was built in part by Purnell Johnson and completed by Governor Tharp. Robert Hill, a grandfather of Robert J. Hill, was a colonel in the War of 1812, and did service at Lewes.

William Fleming, who emigrated to this country from Scotland in 1739, applied to the land office and received a grant for four hundred acres called William's Choice. This land is west of and includes the present town of Farmington. This land is owned by Moses Harrington, the oldest resident of the hundred, William Tharp, James Ross and Ruth Carlisle.
the possession of William Hewitt, and by him went to Eben Hughes and descended to his son, Eben William Tharp, James Ross and Ruth Cumes.
"Ranger's Chance," a tract of six hundred and thirty-nine acres, was surveyed to Jeremiah Morris, April, 1741. It is adjoining a tract called "Godeenfield." Mrs. James Tatman lived in the old mansion-house built by Morris. John Scott owns a portion of this land.

"Windsor Forest," a tract of three hundred and fifty acres, was taken up on a warrant of October 27, 1739, and a tract of one hundred and seven acres by warrant June 2, 1746, by James McNitt, and were resurveyed to him September 27, 1766. This McNitt land remained in the possession of that family up to within a few years, when it was sold to the present owners—Eli Calloway, John Jackson, Llewellyn Tharp, Nathaniel Powell and Amos Cole.

The tracts "Liberty," "Luck by Chance," "Baynard's Regulation" and "Tanton Dean," all situated in the western part of the hundred, on the Maryland line, were taken up on Maryland patents by Thomas Baynard in 1748. These lands embraced in nearly fifteen hundred acres. "Tanton Dean" and "Baynard's Regulation" came into the possession of John Baynard, who, in 1781, built the large brick mansion-house still standing, and which remained in the possession of the Baynards until the early part of 1887, when Ferdinand Baynard sold it to a relative by marriage. This old house is one of the finest in the county, and was probably the best-built house at the time of its erection. After the long period of its existence it is in almost as good condition as when first built.

John Baynard, its builder, was one of the largest merchants in the county, and conducted several grist and saw-mills in Northwest Fork and Nanticoke Hundreds, Sussex County, and in Caroline County, Maryland. The other present owners of "Tanton Dean" and "Baynard's Regulation" are Thomas Sipple, Ferdinand Baynard and Reuben Ross. "Liberty-Luck" and "Luck by Chance" and Hog Range are owned by Zaddock Sipple, Henry Thawley and Nimrod Harrington.

A large tract of nine hundred acres was patented, in 1769, by Nathaniel Luff, and in 1794 it came into the possession of Caleb Perdue, Solomon Kinney, Stephen Lewis and Waitman Booth. There was some dispute over the title of this land, and it was perfected by an act of the Legislature. Stephen Lewis, who was a grandfather of Senator B. L. Lewis, left his share to Jacob F. and John Lewis. These lands are now owned by Alexander Simpson, Peter Calloway, Clement Harrington and Mrs. Mary Tharp.

A tract adjoining the above land was, October 30, 1750, surveyed to James Anderson. It is described on the south side of Harris' Glade, and contained one hundred and sixty-six and three-fourths acres. It was left to Major Anderson, and come into the possession after major, Mary P. Tharp, widow of Beniah Tharp.

Beniah Tharp, a prosperous farmer of Mispillion Hundred, was born January 23, 1805, and died June 2, 1872. William Tharp, his grandfather, was an influential citizen of the same hundred before the Revolution. James Tharp, his son and father of Beniah, was also a successful farmer, and acquired a large landed estate. He married Eunice Fleming, by whom he had twelve children, viz.: William, Beniah (the subject of this sketch), Ruth, Elizabeth, James Madison, Llewellyn, Reuben, Jehu, Jonathan, Jane, Sarah Ann and Hester.

William, the oldest son, was Governor of Delaware from 1847 to 1851; Llewellyn, the only one of the sons now living, owns and resides upon the homestead farm; Jane, Sarah Ann, and Hester are living.

Beniah Tharp (the second son), James and Eunice grew to manhood upon the homestead farm in Mispillion. His father died in 1829 and his mother a few years before. At his father's death Beniah, who was then twenty-four years old, inherited a farm of one hundred and eighty acres in Mispillion Hundred, near the place of his birth. He moved upon it in January, 1830, and there spent all his life. He was a man of sound common sense, good judgment and diligently attentive to his duties as a farmer. As a result of energy and enterprise he accumulated considerable wealth, and at the time of his death owned a number of farms, aggregating several hundred acres of land. When only twenty-seven years old Beniah Tharp was chosen one of the delegates from Kent County to the convention which met at Dover and framed the Amended State Constitution of 1831, and when Delaware accepted the free-school system he was one of the commissioners that laid off his native county into school districts.

In politics he was an ardent Republican, the only member of the family that advocated the principles of that party. He was an ardent Union man during the Civil War.

Beniah Tharp was married, January 21, 1831, to Mary P. Anderson, of Kent County, and who now resides in the village of Harrington. Their children are William, Samuel, Beniah, Laura, married to Peter Calloway; Sarah Pauline, married to George Collins; Louisa, married to William Anderson.

William, the eldest son, married Sarah Hopkins, and lives on the homestead farm, which he owns; Samuel, the second son, married Elizabeth Redden, and lives upon and owns the "Prospect Farm," where his mother lived in her early years, and which property she inherited at the death of her father, Ezekiel Anderson. Beniah, the youngest son, married Margaret Redden. He owns and cultivates the farm formerly the home and property of his great-grandfather, William Tharp. It is situated in Mispillion Hundred, four miles from Harrington.

The Luff and Anderson lands were originally a part of a large tract of over five thousand acres that was known as the "Goldsborough Survey." It was surveyed for Henry Goldsborough about 1730, but was afterwards granted to various parties. These subsequent grants have been the subjects of frequent contention in the Kent County Courts, the lines of the grant never having been clearly defined. Those who hold portions of the old surveys besides those mentioned are Mrs. A. T. A. Torbert (of Milford), the Emory Spencer heirs, John W. Smith, Jesse Ward, Reuben Ross, Henry Callaway, George Murphy, William D. Taylor, William H. Taylor's heirs and Jacob D. Graham. The town of Vernon is on the old grant.

"Petrekin's Chance," consisting of one thousand two hundred acres, was warranted by Charles, Lord Baltimore, to David Petrekin, June 14, 1733. It is described as commencing at Marshy Hope Bridge and running north from the bridge. The land was resurveyed to John Hopkins, March 7, 1776, and again surveyed when the line was settled between Delaware and Maryland, to Zebulon Hopkins. Two hundred and ninety-six acres of this original tract is owned by the heirs of John Hopkins; the remainder is in the possession of Zebulon Hopkins, a grandson of the original warrantee, Mrs. Dr. Lobstein, Charles M. Adams, Sr., William Layton and James Stafford. The tract "Pea Hill" was surveyed September 20, 1790, to James Anderson, and is now owned by Henry Knox, and is described as adjoining the old Bassett tract. This Bassett land is in the possession of George Collins.

"Hayfield" was granted to Zadoc Helford in 1795. It is west of the Fairfield tract, and contained six hundred acres. It had been surveyed in 1749, to Andrew Bentling, but given up by him; it is now owned by James J. Wood's heirs, William M. Willis, William Marvel and Nathaniel Johnson.

In the southwestern part of the hundred is a large tract of land taken up before 1789 by William and Eli Saulsbury, who had large landed estates in Maryland. A portion of this land descended to William Saulsbury, the father of ex-Governor Saulsbury, Senator Eli Saulsbury and Chancellor Willard Saulsbury. They were all born at the old homestead, still standing, about two miles above Marshy Hope Bridge, on the road to Burresville, Md. The old homestead is owned by the chancellor.

A tract of seven hundred acres was taken up by William and Thomas Barrack, in the western part of the hundred, on a Maryland patent, June 10, 1760. A portion of this land is owned by Robert H. Smith.

Clement Cecil Simpson, farmer of Mispillion Hundred, was a descendant of one of the earliest settlers in this locality. He was born in Milford Hundred, March 29, 1809. He was the son of Thomas Simpson, a farmer, who was esteemed for his many good qualities as a citizen and religious man. Thomas was elected a member of the Legislature on the Adams ticket, in 1829, but died November 29th, of that year. Thomas was married three times, his first wife being Mary, daughter of John and Elizabeth Cecil, of Queen Anne's County, Maryland, his wedding taking place February 28, 1805. Two children of this marriage grew to maturity,—the subject of this sketch and Ezekiel Merrick, who died August 24, 1875, in California. The wife died in 1813, and the following year he married Mary, widow of Beauchamp Walton and daughter of David and Susannah Harrington, by whom he had one child, William Walton. The second wife dying in 1817, in 1820 he married Rachael, daughter of Solomon and Elizabeth Griffith, and three children were the fruits of this last marriage,—Silas Asbury, Margaret Anna (now deceased) and Thomas Simpson. The father of Thomas Simpson was John Simpson, born December 28, 1750, and died July 14, 1819. He married Mary, daughter of Matthew and Ann Milford, who was born January 15, 1748, and died April 19, 1826. Their children were Esther, born in 1777, and died in 1840; Nancy, born in 1778, who was killed by accident when a young woman; Clement born in 1779; John, born in 1781; and Thomas, born November 26, 1783. John and Clement emigrated to Ohio in 1818, and raised large families. The family was originally of that hardy, thrifty class of people, Scotch-Irish, and were among the first to receive land-grants in the hundred, and in what is now Milford. They have always been among the progressive farmers, and have kept their land in a high state of cultivation. The subject of this sketch attended school irregularly until he was fourteen years of age. He was then apprenticed to a blacksmith, but remained but three years, abandoning it at the end of that time on account of his health, and returned to farming. In 1832 he purchased the farm in Mispillion Hundred upon which James B. Cooper, who married his granddaughter, the eldest daughter of Alexander Simpson, now resides. He purchased several other tracts after this, among them six acres in the town of Harrington, which he divided into town lots and sold. He engaged in the growth of grain to a large extent, and was a successful cultivator of fruits. Good management and strict integrity was the secret of his success. He was one of the best known men in the hundred, and one of the leading citizens of Kent County. He was a life-long Whig and Republican, and a staunch Union man during the war. He died April 3, 1883.

In January, 1832, Clement C. Simpson was married to Ann, daughter of Jeremiah and Sarah Morris, who had removed from Caroline County, Md., to Kent County, Del. As a result of this union six children have grown to maturity,—Alexander, who married a daughter of Henry and Rhoda Lewis; Mary; Ezekiel Henry, who married Louisa Calloway, and died October, 3, 1878, aged thirty-six years; Richard John, residing in Kansas; James Thomas; and Sarah Matilda, wife of Thomas A. Melvin. Alexander, who married a daughter of Henry and Rhoda Lewis, had nineteen children, fourteen of whom are living, viz.: Anne, wife of James B. Cooper; Henry R.; Mary R., wife of Evan Lewis; Clement C.; Rhoda L.; Lucy M.; Alexine; John; Sarah C.; Emma; Charles; Laura Virginia; James D. and Grace. The wife of Clement C. Simpson died February 28, 1880, at the age of seventy years.

Religious Matters—the Methodist Episcopal Church.—Mispillion Hundred, while not the birthplace of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Delaware, was the place of meeting of the First Annual Conference of the M. E. Church in the United States, which met at the house of Judge Thomas White. It was held for the convenience of the preachers in the northern stations, that they might have an opportunity to confer over the state of the church. At that time the entire separation from the Church of England had not been determined upon, and it was at this Conference decided that they should not separate either directly or indirectly; and in harmony with that sentiment, Mr. Asbury, who was well-known to be opposed to separation, it was declared, ought to act as general assistant in America on account of his age and his original appointment to America by Mr. Wesley. John H. Baynard was secretary of this Conference. The second Conference of the church was also held here April 16, 1781, but adjourned to Baltimore and concluded its sessions at the latter place. It was here, in April, 1778, that a band of Revolutionary army came to the home of Judge White, who was judge of the Court of Common Pleas of the county of Kent, seized him and carried him off to jail, under the charge of being a Methodist. It was with this same Methodist judge that Asbury had been compelled to take refuge from his enemies, who would have captured him, had he not hid in the shambles. Judge White was held a prisoner for five weeks, and upon his trial was acquitted. The ruins of the old house are still standing upon the farm of John Bullock. The churches in the hundred have always been under one circuit, except Manship Church—the first being the Caroline Circuit, then Denton, afterwards Vernon and then Harrington, and at present Farmington and Harrington. In 1814 Asbury and White’s and Todd’s Chapel were included. In 1836 there were Todd’s, Prospect and White’s. In 1851 Salem was in the circuit, and in 1859, Harrington, Salem, Asbury, Prospect, Todd’s, Masten’s, White’s and Farmington.

As early as 1777 meetings were held in the house of Judge White, and in 1780 White’s Chapel was built on his farm. At the time of its erection a vestry was attached to it, and Bishop Asbury, who preached there in 1782, declared it to be one of the newest country chapels that there was in the whole continent. The church was moved to its present location in 1859, and is a neat structure and painted white. The next building was Todd’s Chapel. About 1800, meetings were held in the house of Levin Todd, near the line in Sussex County. In 1808 Olive Jump gave land to build a church, and the building was erected the same year and continued in use until May 30, 1858, when the present building was erected, at a cost of two thousand dollars. It is the largest, next to the Harrington Church, in the hundred, being thirty-two by forty feet.

Asbury.—April 14, 1814, William Masten conveyed to Eliza Hitchens, Richard Harris, William Masten, Sr., Peter Hitchens and John Harris, trustees, seven hundred square feet of land, whereon a schoolhouse and Methodist meeting-house is now begun, for worship, and Sabbath and week-day schools. This was near the road leading from Harrington to Felton. This was the first beginning of the Asbury meeting-house, which was rebuilt a few years ago. It is located about one and one-half miles from Masten’s corners, and is a neat structure, twenty-five by thirty-five feet.

Salem, or Farmington Church.—The Farmington Methodist Episcopal Church was formerly located about one mile from the town, and was erected in 1816. A conveyance of the land is on record bearing date May 21, 1817, from Thomas Davis to Jonathan Jester, Nathan Davis, Clement Jester, Curtis Caudrey, Eli Pritchett, trustees of meeting and schoolhouse, erected on the premises which consist of thirty-five perches of land. June 1, 1873, the church was dedicated in Farmington by the Rev. Dr. R. L. Dashiell and Rev. J. S. Willis, since which time the old building has been torn down.

Manship’s Methodist Episcopal Church.—The old
Black Swamp Church was built early in the present century, and stood at "Whitaker's Gate" (now James O. Jester). It was abandoned and sold when Manship's Church was built farther down the road, about one-quarter of a mile east of Hollandsville. The building was dedicated December 2, 1855, and is of frame. It has sittings for four hundred persons. Rev. Andrew Manship preached the dedication sermon. It is supplied with ministers of the Felton circuit and the list will be found in the article upon South Murderkill Hundred.

Prospect.—Prospect Church is east of Vernon, and was built in 1834, at a cost of five hundred dollars, the ground having been donated by Isaac Graham. The present building was erected upon the site of the old chapel in 1877, and was dedicated by Bishop Scott. It is thirty by forty feet, and will seat three hundred persons.

Masten's Methodist Episcopal Church.—The church at Masten's Corners was built in 1873, and was named in honor of Joseph A. Masten, who donated the ground. It is thirty-six by twenty-four feet, and cost one thousand eight hundred dollars.

Bethel Church.—This church, situated three miles northeast of Marshy Hope Bridge, was built in 1830, and was one of the first of the Methodist Protestant Churches built in the country. Among the early members were Emory Graham, Dr. Luther Swiggott, Mary Swiggott, Samuel Anderson, Levi King, David Taylor and Elias Booth. Among the early ministers were Thomas Melvin and Richard N. Merrick. In 1871 the church was rebuilt of frame, and is thirty-two by forty feet. Since the erection of the Harrington church the ministers have been supplied from there.

Farmington Presbyterian.—This church was built about 1840, upon the land of W. H. Powell. In 1863 it was moved into Farmington, but has been out of use for some time. A select school was conducted in it for several years by Rev. J. M. Williams, formerly president of Wesleyan College, Wilmington.

Vernon Baptist Church.—Zion Church was first a congregation of Independent Methodists, and in December, 1870, Rev. D. B. Purinton began preaching, and finally baptized the congregation March 28, 1871. Rev. Richard H. Merrick was ordained to the Baptist ministry the same day, and became the pastor. A subscription was started for a church, which was dedicated November 19th of the same year. The members have mostly moved into Harrington, and services are held there.

St. Paul's Episcopal Church.—The last mention that is made of this church is in a report of 1836, where it is recommended that an effort be made to rebuild it. The old building has entirely disappeared. The original building was erected in 1765. The land was conveyed by John Read, October 31, 1765, to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, and recites "all that small parcel of land containing two acres, whereon hath been erected a house or building called St. Paul's Church, to the only proper use and behoof of the said Society for themselves, successors and assigns."

Schools.—Prior to the passage of the school law of 1829 private subscription schools were in operation in nearly all the Methodist Churches then built. In other places school-houses were built by private persons, and the teachers paid by subscription from the parents of the children.

District 33.—The school-house in this district was erected in 1834, the money being raised by subscription among the inhabitants. In 1886 there were thirty scholars in attendance.

District 34.—Before the passage of the school law, and down to 1834, a school was held in Hardesty's meeting-house, a short distance from where the present school building stands. In 1834 the present building was erected. Among those who had taught there are John Applegate, William Saulsbury, Waitman Jones, Hon. Eli Saulsbury, Thomas Saulsbury R. D. Caball and Aledaw Dawson. In 1886 there were fifty-six scholars in attendance.

District 35.—Thomas Short, in 1838, gave the land for a school-house in this district, and the same year a building was erected. The early teachers were Sydenham Lewis, Rev. Richard N. Merrick, Stephen Kane, John R. T. Masten and Nathan B. Fleming. In 1886 there were forty scholars in attendance.

District 36.—The people of District 36 in 1831, two years after the passage of the school law, built the Prospect School-house; previous to this they had maintained a school in Vernon. It was rebuilt in 1877. Among the early teachers were Jefferson L. Rich and John O. Horntz. In 1886 there were fifty-three scholars.

District 37.—What is known as the Tomahawk School-house was built on the branch that bears that name in this district in 1832. James Booth gave the land to the district, and the money to erect the building was raised by subscription. A new building was erected in 1881. Among the early teachers were John Pepper, Jefferson Rich, Waitman Jones and John Jones. In 1886 there were fifty scholars.

District 38.—The inhabitants of this district had maintained a school for twenty years before the public school building was built, in 1831. It was burned down in 1864, and a new building erected the next year. Sydenham Lewis, Robert Fulton and John R. T. Masten were among the early instructors. Thirty-six pupils attended during the year 1886.

Districts 39 and 124 compose the Farmington School District. The original school-house was a short distance out of the present town, and was erected in 1835. Jonathan Sharp and Sydenham Lewis, who taught in nearly all the districts, were among the early teachers. The building was moved into Farmington in 1880, and is a neat structure, with a graded school and two teachers, with an attendance, in 1886, of forty-two pupils.
Kent County.

District 47.—About a few hundred yards west of the site of the old Friends' Meeting-house a school was built in this district in 1844, and among those who taught there were Dr. William H. Jones, James Marine and Robert H. Smith. A new building was erected in 1862, and is still standing, forty-two scholars being in attendance in 1886.

District 48.—A school was built at Powell's Corner in 1846, and is still used, and was at one time the school-house for the Harrington District. In 1886 there were thirty-one pupils in attendance.

District 56.—The Pine Grove School-house was built in this district in 1857, and has been in continuous use since that time. Clement Harrington, Nathan B. Fleming and Frisky Hollis taught the first pupils in the old building. According to the report of 1886 there were thirty pupils in attendance.

District 55.—About one hundred yards from the present site Outen Anderson, in June, 1855, gave the land for a school-house, which was built the same year by subscription. Clark H. Adams, B. F. Foster, William E. Cahall and Robert H. Smith taught in the old building. The present structure was erected in 1844, and two years after had fifty-one pupils in attendance.

District 58.—The Masten School-house was erected in 1857, about one mile from Masten's Corners, and stood until 1874, when it was moved into Masten's Corners and a new building erected. Forty pupils were in attendance in 1886. Among the instructors in the old building were Dr. John Warren, Martha Powell, Charles Warren, James T. Jarrell and James Townsend.

District 69.—Rawley's School-house was built upon the Dawson land in 1862, and was destroyed by fire in 1884. In 1885 the school was rebuilt, and the next year had thirty-six scholars in attendance. Beniah Fleming, Nathan Anthony and John Barrett taught in the old building.

District 100.—John Porter gave the land for this building, which was erected in 1887. Susanna Ann Harrington and Sally Richardson first taught school in the building, which had thirty-five scholars in 1886.

Villages—Vernon.—The old town of Vernon, in the centre of the hundred, was for many years the only town in the hundred. About 1780 an old man named Joshua Vincent moved there and laid out a walk and opened a store. The place then took the name of Vincent's Causeway. When the name was changed to Vernon is uncertain, but as far back as 1814 it was known by that name. It assumed considerable importance about this time, and on Thursday of every week two justices of the peace would sit in the town. These justice days were great events in the little town. Lawyers from Dover and Georgetown would journey here, and large numbers of people would attend their sessions. Then there were three stores and a hotel in the town, and as many as two thousand people would be at this little settlement attending the courts.

Lewis & Graham had a store in 1880, where W. D. Taylor now lives, and did a large business, and George Waltham ran a hotel. A store was built a short distance away by Reuben Anderson, and the place was called Greenville. The post-office alternated between these two places as the politics of the country changed. Among those who have been postmasters are Reuben Anderson, George Fleming and Elias Hopkins (the last one at Greenville), Zachariah Minkin, Wesley McNitt, William Lewis, John Izenberry, William H. Taylor, William Calloway, William D. Taylor and the present one—John F. Thawley. Robert & James Smith had a store at Greenville in 1864, since which time it has passed out of existence. All Mispillion Hundred voted at Vernon up to the time of the division of the hundred, and it was not until Harrington began to assume considerable importance that it was made the voting-place. Since then the place has rapidly gone down, and only one store, kept by William D. Taylor, and a blacksmith-shop are left to mark its past prosperity.

Farmington.—This is another town that came with the railroad. In 1855 the railroad company built a station and called it Flatiron. When the post-office was established in 1858, with Shadrack D. Taylor, postmaster, the name was changed to Farmington. Jesse Keenan, L. Tharp, David Johnson and William A. Reddin have succeeded Mr. Taylor. The improvement of the town has been rapid, and it has become a place of considerable importance, the shipments of fruit last season exceeding those at Harrington. The population is over three hundred, and there are two general stores, a drug-store and several small stores and a blacksmith-shop.

The most important industry is N. R. Johnson & Co.'s canning-factory and evaporator. The firm comprise ex-Representative N. R. Johnson, E. W. Russell and W. H. Murphy. The evaporator was started in 1882 by Mr. Johnson, and the cannerie in 1884. The capacity of the evaporator is 1800 baskets of peaches, and cannerie 100,000 cans. A capital of $25,000 is invested and employment given to 125 hands.

James C. Reed, who has the cannerie at Harrington, also conducts one at this place. He employs seventy hands.

The saw-mill of J. B. Simmons was started in 1877. Seven thousand feet of lumber are cut a day, and employment given to sixteen men.

Masten's Corners.—In 1842 William Masten built a store on the road leading from Harrington to Felton, and several houses having been built shortly afterward, it acquired the name of Masten's Corners. Jonathan Loper and Foster Boone were afterwards proprietors of the store. William Kelly opened a store about 1870. At present John Masten has a store, and there are about forty inhabitants.

Brownsville is a hamlet, consisting of a store and house, about three miles from the Maryland line.

Thistlewood's Mill.—This mill was originally built by John Thistlewood about 1780. It was rebuilt in 1825 by Hicks Deliner. It has since been conducted by John Booth, Thomas Thistlewood, David Dorman and now by Beniah Tharp, who runs it as a grist-mill.

There is also in the hundred the saw-mill of McNatt & Brother, six miles from Harrington, in District 33, which has been in operation since 1880.

Harrington.—Harrington is an example of what enterprise, public spirit and energy will do. From nothing, comparatively, it has in thirty years grown to be one of the most important points on the Delaware Peninsula, and the principal railroad centre south of Wilmington. Before the advent of the railroad, in 1856, all that there was in what was then known as Clark's Corner, were one house and a store. The ground was owned mainly by the descendants of Benjamin Clark, to whom it had been patented in 1760. One hundred and eighty acres comprising his grant embraced the land lying east and west of the present town. The land on the north and south was in the possession of Benjamin Harrington. The first that is known of Clark's Corners was in 1810, when Benjamin Clark erected a hotel upon the present site of the Harrington Hotel, the old building still forming a portion of the present structure. Jehu Clark, his brother, built a store which was kept by John C. Harrington. Shortly after building the depot, Matthew J. Clark laid out a number of town lots, which he succeeded in selling rapidly, and four years later about twenty new houses had been erected. The building of the Junction and Breakwater Railroad gave the place an impetus. Burton Bennett opened another store, where Alexander Matthews now conducts a general merchandising business. The old hotel had been closed for years, and the need of one becoming apparent, Zadock Clark built the present Harrington House, which has been conducted since by Benjamin F. Fleming, James Satterfield, Edward C. Shaw, James Herserp, Frank Harmonson, Samuel Solomon, J. W. Westcott and John Herdman. The Delaware House was built as a store in 1858, by Zacharish Meriken, but shortly afterwards E. H. Macklem remodeled it, and opened the hotel, and his successors have been Thomas Fountain, John C. Garby, Amos Cole and Alexander Newman.

The post-office was established in 1857, with Matthew J. Clark as postmaster, since which time it has been in charge of John H. Van Giesl, James A. Moore, S. L. Shaw and Thomas J. Smith. Thus, with all that goes towards making a new town, the population began to increase. Mispillion Hundred, largely populated with good farmers, who had become wealthy by their long years of industry, had never had, previous to this time, any town, eligibly located, to which they could retire and at the same time attend to their lands. The main advantages of Harrington soon presented themselves, and these prosperous old farmers rented their farms and erected handsome and comfortable homes in the new town, and used their capital in adding to its improvement and progress.

In 1880 the population numbered eight hundred. About this time a number of industries were started, which attracted laboring people, and a number of fine stores were built and opened, and a careful estimate, made in 1887, placed the population at thirteen hundred.

The Legislature in 1862 changed the name of the town from Clark's Corners to Harrington, in honor of Hon. Samuel M. Harrington, at the time chancellor of the State. The population warranting it, in 1869, Harrington was incorporated, and Wm. Shaw, Thomas H. Dorman, Martin W. Harrington, James H. Vickery and Wm. T. Van Giesel were named as the first commissioners. They were to hold office until March, 1870, to hold an election for alderman, treasurer, assessor and collector, and to define the limits. Joseph Ward was selected as the surveyor. The limits of the town were fixed one-half mile from the tank-house in every direction. The election resulted in the choice of Henry C. Wolcott for alderman; J. W. Stevenson, treasurer; Eli Harrington, assessor; and C. C. Powell, collector. The new commissioners opened new streets, laid sidewalks, erected lamps and passed a number of ordinances for the town government.

Since 1879 the town officers have been:

The Public School.—The enterprise of Harrington is best shown in the handsome large school-building in the northwestern part of the town. This building is of frame, and is "T" shape, one end being thirty-five by sixty, and the other thirty by thirty-five. There are six large rooms, two stories. The building is built in the Queen Anne style of architecture, and cost six thousand dollars, and was erected in 1884. There are accommodations for six teachers and four hundred scholars. At present there are four teachers and two hundred and ninety-six scholars. The school is graded, and the higher branches are taught. The district is a consolidation of Districts Nos. 94 (which was erected in 1862), 126 and 127 of Kent County, and was incorporated by an act of the Legislature at the session of 1888. The act named Robert S. Downe, Robert H. Short, James A. Smith, Ezekiel Fleming, Alfred Raughley, William T. Sharp, Henry Dickerson, Amos Cole and James Moore as a Board of Education for the town of Harrington. They were given power to borrow five thousand dollars to erect a school building, and were to hold office until April, 1888, at which time their successors were to be elected,—three to hold one year; three, two years; and three, three years. The following persons have been elected members of the school-board:

1884.—James A. Moore, William H. Franklin and Samuel Q. Shaw, for three years; Ezekiel Fleming, for two years; Augustus Jellison, one year.

1885.—James D. West, A. Jellison and William G. Hardesty, for three years.

1886.—W. H. Anderson, G. L. Baird and Dr. B. L. Lewis for three years; N. Frank Raughley, for one year.

1887.—W. H. Franklin, N. Frank Raughley and Jehu C. Fleming, for three years.

Churches.—The Harrington Methodist Episcopal Church is a neat frame structure, and has the largest congregation in the town. For a number of years before the erection of the church the meetings were held in the school-house. Dr. F. J. Owens started the first Sunday-school in 1860 with twenty scholars. The church building was erected in 1870, and dedicated October 28, 1870—Rev. Jonathan S. Willis, of Milford, preaching in the morning, and Rev. Andrew Mansfield in the evening. The building cost twenty-eight hundred dollars, and is thirty by fifty feet. The church is the centre of the Harrington Methodist Episcopal Circuit, and a list of the ministers who have preached here will be found in the article upon the Methodist 'Episcopal Churches in Mispillion Hundred.'

The Harrington Presbyterian Church was organized by the Rev. S. Murdock in the old school-house of District 94, in the winter of 1871, with fifteen members. In 1873 the present building was erected at a cost of two thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars. The present membership is forty-four. The pastors have been Rev. S. Murdock, S. S. Sturges and W. Edwards. At present there is no minister.

The Baptist Church is the same as the one at Vernon, and was dedicated in November, 1871, at that place, the building costing two thousand five hundred dollars. The members nearly all having moved into Harrington, services for ten years past have been held in the Grange Hall. The ministers have been the Rev. O. P. Filippo, Rev. Dr. Isaac Cole, Rev. Henry Leany, Rev. George Bradford, Rev. James Hope, Rev. James Steelman and the Rev. S. H. Haskell.

The Harrington Methodist Protestant Church was organized in 1880, with a membership of fifty. The church building was dedicated August 19, 1881, by the Rev. T. H. Lewis, Rev. E. S. Rowe and John E. Nicholson, of Wilmington. The building is a neat frame structure, and cost two thousand two hundred dollars. The same ministers who have preached here have preached at Bethel Church, in the lower part of the hundred. They have been Rev. J. E. Nicholson, Rev. C. S. Arnett, Rev. G. L. Backus and Rev. C. M. Thomsen. At present there is one hundred and twenty-five members, and regular services are held.

The St. Anne's Episcopal Church was consecrated by Bishop Lee, June, 1876. The building was erected by subscription, the greater portion of the amount being contributed by the Rev. J. L. McKim, of Milford, who held services there until about 1887, when the church closed.

Industries.—The largest and by far the most important manufacturing interest in the town of Har-
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

Harrington is that of E. Fleming. In 1872 Mr. Fleming started a large saw-mill with a capacity of six thousand feet of lumber a day. Since that time he has added a spoke factory, in which he manufactures white-oak wagon-spokes, which have achieved a reputation in the large cities for their excellence. A grist-mill and wagon-works were next added. A capital of eighteen thousand dollars is invested in the business and constant employment is given to sixty men. The large canning factory and evaporator of Jas. C. Reed has contributed as much to the prosperity of Harrington as any other industry. The cannery was erected in 1877 by Sharp & Quillen, and continued under their management until 1882, when Mr. Reed purchased it. The extent of this industry is shown by the fact that as high as fifty thousand cases of canned goods in one year have been put up; employment is given to two hundred hands, and a capital of ten thousand dollars is invested. The evaporator was erected in 1880 by Sharp & Fleming, and by them sold to Frederick Arnold, who disposed of his interest to Mr. Reed. Mr. Reed last year evaporated seventy-five thousand pounds of fruit and gave employment to seventy-five hands.

Franklin Brothers, both young men, have conducted, since 1879, a successful basket factory. William H. and Omar J. Franklin constitute the firm. They have given employment to forty hands and have a capital invested of six thousand dollars.

The Harrington Chemical Works, conducted by S. S. Harrington, manufacture a high grade of fertilizers. The output of this establishment has increased from year to year until it has become one of the important industries of the town. Employment is given to fifteen persons and a capital of six thousand dollars is invested.

The Chosen Friends' Lodge, I. O. of O. F., No. 35, was organized May 4th, 1870, with the following officers: N. G., William Ward; V. G., James H. Lodge; Recording Secretary, Zadoc Fleming; Treasurer, Ezekiel Fleming. At the date of organization, there were seven members. At present, there are twenty-two. An additional story has been erected by them over Anderson's store, and this is used as a hall. The officers at the last election were: Noble Grand, Isaac N. Jester; Vice-Grand, Thomas J. Binding; Recording Secretary, L. W. Betts; Permanent Secretary, John P. Masten; Treasurer, Robert S. Downs.

Mispillion Conclave, No. 33, Improved Order of Hesiods, was organized September 22nd, 1881, with a membership of twenty-two. The officers at that time were: Archon, Robert S. Downs; Chancellor, B. L. Lewis, M.D.; Provost, Amos Cole; Secretary, Henry C. Johnson; Treasurer, Ezekiel Fleming; Inspector, Samuel L. Shaw; Warder, Jason B. Simmons; Financier, Charles Rickards. The meetings are held every Thursday evening. At the last election, in 1887, the following officers were elected: Archon, Alexander Russell; Provost, George M. Jones; Secretary, L. W. Betts; Financier, L. W. Betts; Treasurer, C. Rickards; Prelate, J. W. Blades; Inspector, George L. Baird; Warder, E. Fleming; Sentinel, W. C. Wright.

Hollywood Cemetery. — About one and one-half miles from Harrington is the Hollywood Cemetery. In 1881, a number of prominent citizens of Harrington, recognizing the necessity of a public burying-ground, purchased ten acres of ground situated on a high point of land. They were incorporated the same year, and the following officers were elected: President, Zebulon Hopkins; Treasurer, William Tharp; Superintendent, Thomas H. Dorman; Secretary, Dr. B. L. Lewis; Board of Directors: William Tharp, William H. Anderson, Samuel L. Shaw, Beniah Tharp, James A. Smith, Zebulon Hopkins, James A. Moore, Robert S. Downs and Amos Cole. These officers have been continued without change up to the present time. The cemetery has been laid out into drive-ways and shade trees planted, and the greater portion of the lots sold.

Harrington Library. — A well-conducted library is one of the best evidences of the intellectual activity of a community. Harrington is by no means behind its sister towns in this respect. A library was started November 10, 1880, with W. A. Franklin, president; Jennie P. Sheldon, vice-president; Miss Carrie D. Harrington, secretary; E. W. Waples, recording secretary; W. A. Ransom, treasurer. At present there are six hundred and eighty books, exclusive of periodicals. A membership fee of one dollar is charged and ten cents a week dues. This entitles the members to the use of one book for three weeks. The present officers are: President, Dr. B. L. Lewis; Vice-President, O. J. Franklin; Secretary, Miss Amanda L. Wolcott; Librarian, L. W. Betts; Treasurer, Frank T. White.

CHAPTER LXIV.

MILFORD HUNDRED.

Previous to 1830 the land included in Milford Hundred formed a part of Mispillion Hundred. On July 28th of that year an act of the Legislature was passed for dividing the latter. The road leading directly from the division line between Murderkill and Mispillion Hundreds to Williamsville was fixed as the dividing line. This was the same road which had formerly been used and occupied by the "Philadelphia, Dover and Norfolk Steamboat and Transportation Company." All land west of the road was called Mispillion Hundred, and all east Milford Hundred. It is bounded on the north by Murderkill Creek, on the east by Delaware Bay, on the south by Mispillion Creek and on the west by the hundred of the same name. The land is well watered by numerous small streams and produces peaches, wheat, corn and oats in large quantities. The streams on the north and south are navigable and afford a suitable means for the shipment of the products of the hundred. The Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia Railroad runs through the southwestern part of the hundred and affords additional accommodations for shipping and travel.

Early Settlers.—Possibly the first white people to land on the territory now included in Milford Hundred was a boat-load of Swedes, Finns and Lavonians, who landed on Paradise Point (Clark's Point), a short distance north of Mispillion Creek, in 1688. No settlement, however, was effected by them. The same name was applied to a point at Lewes, by the same party, but no settlement made.

An organization called "The Barbadoes Company" was brought into being in 1685 by merchants, of whom were Ralph Frettwell and Francis Gamble, of the island of Barbadoes. On October 20, 1685, they purchased of John Edmonson, a merchant of Talbot County, Md., several large tracts of land as follows: "Edmonds' Berry," one thousand acres; "Plains of Jerico," twelve hundred acres; "Long Acre" one thousand acres; and Longford, six hundred acres, all lying on or near the main branch of Murderkill Creek and mostly in Milford Hundred. The most of this land was subsequently sold by Francis Gamble to the Pennsylvania Land Company. The latter company was formed in London a few years after Penn's arrival in this country, and in 1699 purchased of him sixty thousand acres of land situated mostly in Pennsylvania and partly in New Castle County, an account of which will be found in the hundreds of Brandywine and Christiana. They continued in operation buying and selling land till about 1780, when their lands were all sold. The purchasers in Kent County were for the most part in Milford Hundred. A recital of some of the early lands is given before they came into the possession of the company.

Under a warrant granted to Hermannus Willbank for twelve hundred acres, there was surveyed December 22, 1685, for John Brinkloe, of whom much has been said in other chapters, a tract of one thousand acres on the north side of Mispillion Creek, for which he received a patent April 2, 1686, under the name "Longfield." On the 20th of the same month, Brinkloe conveyed this tract to William Clark, of Lewes. "Improvement," a tract of six hundred acres, was patented to John Manlove at the same time; this was also conveyed to William Clark, who, on July 9, 1686, sold both tracts to Francis Gamble, of the Barbadoes Company. On August 3, 1714, they were sold to Thomas Story, who, December 24, 1720, conveyed them to John Haddon and Benjamin Kiston, authorized agents of the Pennsylvania Land Company, in London. Swan Creek forms the eastern boundary of Improvement.

They also purchased "Long Acre," "Golding Mine," "Springfield," "Angleford," "Wheatfield," "Longford" and "Corbion," all in Milford Hundred, and several tracts in Duck Creek Hundred (now Kenton), amounting in all to five thousand one hundred and sixty-four acres.

The above tracts were all old surveys. "Long Acre" was taken up by Nicholas Bartlett; "Corbion," by Henry Stevens; "Longford," by John Rawlings; "Angleford" was surveyed under warrant to Robert Taylor, assigned to Renner Williams, November, 1689, and contained seven hundred and forty-four acres; "Springfield" was warranted to John Cropper, November 15, 1685, surveyed December 20, 1685, for Thomas Stratton, to whom a patent was granted April 12, 1686, and contains eight hundred acres; "Wheatfield" was taken up December 20, 1681, by William Emmett.

These lands were leased by the company for many years, and on the 5th of July, 1762, were offered for sale in Philadelphia. The majority of the land was sold at this time, and the remainder on August 20, 1765. The agents of the company in Philadelphia at the time were Jacob Cooper, Samuel Shoemaker and Joshua Howell. The names of purchasers are here given, with the dates of the deeds:

Zadoc Cooper, May 11, 1762, one hundred and thirty acres of the tract "Longfield," adjoining the New Wharf lot, No. 17, on Miller's Branch; August 17, 1763, to Josiah Bradley, lot No. 19, containing 238 acres adjoining "Saw Mill Range"; August 15, 1763, to Thomas Peterken, lots No. 11, 37 acres, and No. 16, 115 acres (Peterken passed this deed to William Frazer and Adam Mawril); August 24, 1763, to Robert Willocks, lot No. 9, containing 225 acres; same date to John Cox, 225 acres of the tract "Wheatfield"; same date to James Hunter and William Craig, lot No. 34, containing 316 acres on Miller's Run; same date to Cornelius Dewees, 305 acres of the tract,"Middletown"; same date to Thomas Home, lot No. 28, containing 125 acres, part of "Wheatfield"; same date to William Bowen, 140 acres, part of "Golding Mine"; November 28, 1768, to William Thorp, two tracts, 165 and 126 acres, part of "Golding Mine," except two acres condemned by John Manlove for a mill; December 8, 1768, to Joseph Brown, 180 acres; December 10, 1763, to Richard Reynolds, lot No. 28, containing 52 acres; September 10, 1762, to Thomas Arrowman, of Freehold, N. J., lot No. 3, containing 190 acres, part of "Middletown"; March 21, 1768, to Benjamin Resin, lot No.
4, containing 150 acres; June 23, 1763, to Mathias Davis, 325 acres of "Golding Mine"; September 4, 1762, to Levin Adams, lot No. 18, containing 81 acres of the tracts "Longfield" and "Improvement"; August 4, 1766, to Jonathan Brady, lot No. 22, containing 128 acres; March 24, 1767, to John Haselet, lot No. 20, containing 250 acres; May 10, 1768, to Levin Cropper, 141 acres of "Wheatfield"; December 15, 1758, to Cornody Candy, lot No. 8, containing 150 acres; April 21, 1767, to Edward Fitzrandolph, 10 acres of "Middletown," and 341 acres of "Angleford"; November 14, 1767, to Joshua Clark, lot No. 7, 195 acres of "Springfield"; November 13, 1768, to Richard Bartlett's widow, lot No. 6, containing 120 acres; August 22, 1769, to John Dill, lot No. 24, containing 142 acres; November 12, 1770, to Moses Clampil, 213 acres, parts of "Longford," "Long Acre," and three other ancient surveys, one of which was on Murderkill Creek; November 1, 1771, to Joseph Mason, lot No. 29, 88 acres of "Wheatfield"; December 11, 1773, to Joseph Colloway, 47 acres of "Long Acre"; June 7, 1774, to James Craig, lot No. 8, 128 acres of "Longford"; same date to Nahur Golden, 122 acres of "Cobrion," "Longford," and "Long Acre."

"Longfield" is east of "Saw Mill Range," on which Milford is situated, and is now principally owned by the estate of Benjamin Potter, Peter L. Loftland and the heirs of W. N. W. Dorsey.

"Improvement," bounded on the east by Swan Creek, on the south by Misipillion Creek and on the west by "Longfield," is now mainly owned by James Griffin and the heirs of Benjamin Henderson.

"Golding Mine," the majority of which is owned by the estate of David Riggs, is south of "Hunting Quarter," a tract of fifteen hundred acres warranted January 21, 1681, to Luke Watson. The larger portion of "Hunting Quarter" is in Milford Hundred, and the remainder in Misipillion Hundred. The part in Milford Hundred is now owned by the heirs of Charles Townsend, Isaac S. Truitt, Mrs. Curtis S. Watson, Mrs. Sarah E. Polk, David Scott, Rev. W. Richardson and John H. Johnson.

Swan Creek separates "Improvement" from Bridge town, a tract of one thousand acres, surveyed November 21, 1685, for Wm. Spencer. On the north of Bridgetown is "Springfield," on the east "Angleford," and on the south Misipillion Creek. It is now in the possession of Chas. T. Fleming and the estate of Benjamin Potter.

"Angleford," the next tract on the east of Bridge town, is bounded on the east by "Gooseberry" and Fishing Creek and on the south by Misipillion Creek. It is now owned by C. T. Fleming, the heirs of George Davis and the heirs of Dr. John Owens.

"Gooseberry," a tract of six hundred acres, was surveyed for Peter Groenendike under a warrant of Dec. 21, 1689, granted to Cornelius Verhoofe, who died before the survey was made. Groenendike as his administrator sold the property in 1697 to David James. It is bounded on the north by "Springfield," on the east by Fishing Creek, on the south by Betts' Branch of the same, and on the west by Angleford. It is now owned by Silas T. Jenkins and Eli F. Hammer.

"Springfield" lies north of Gooseberry, between Swan and Fishing Creeks, arid is now principally owned by Charles Barker and the estate of Benjamin Potter.

"Middletown," a tract of one thousand acres, lying between the branches of Misipillion and Murder kill Creeks, was taken up by John Betts on the 1st of April, 1686. On June 13th of the same year he conveyed the tract to William Clark, who sold it to the Barbadoes Company, and from them it passed to the Pennsylvania Land Company.

"Mount Pleasant," a tract of four hundred and twelve acres of "fast" land and two hundred acres of marsh, on Misipillion Creek, and bounded on the east by Beaver Dam and on the west by Fishing Creek, was surveyed January 16, 1681, for William Betts, by Ephraim Herman. In 1683 Betts sold to Mathew Manlove, who, at his decease, devised the property to his children, Mark and Mary. Mary married Curtis Brinkley, and became seised of the entire estate, and at her death it passed to their only child, Phoebe, who married John Beawick. The estate is now owned by William P. Beawick, R. J. Beawick and Angeline B. Herring, grandchildren of John Beawick and J. A. Bickel.

"Increase," a tract of six hundred acres on the north side of Misipillion Creek, and adjoining "Mt. Pleasant," was warranted to Baptist Newcome on March 15, 1681, and the patent returned April 10, 1685.

Fairfield, a tract of nineteen hundred and fifty acres, was surveyed January 18, 1681, for William Clark. Its beginning was the three runs of the Misipillion (Clark's, Main and Bowman's Branches), and extending northeast was bounded on the south by "Saw-Mill Range" and "Longfield." "Robin Hood's Range," a tract of sixty-three acres on Clarks' Branch and adjoining Fairfield, was warranted to Dr. Robert Cummins, October 24, 1757. A large portion of these tracts is owned by the estate of Benjamin Potter.

Peter Baucom, who in 1680 was recommended by Francis Whitwell, a justice of the peace, to Governor Andros as a suitable person for sheriff of Kent County, and was appointed by him and reappointed by William Penn in 1682, took up several tracts of land on the bay between Murderkill Creek and the stream that bears his name and that of John Briggs, viz.: Bau com-Briggs. He also took up land below this stream. "Arundel," a tract of eight hundred acres, was warranted December 17, 1680, and patented July 5, 1684. He also took up "Staning," containing twelve hundred acres, surveyed April 2, 1681. Six hundred acres of this tract passed to Timothy Hanson, March 17, 1717, and was on the bank of Baucom-Brigg. West of this land was "Partnership," a tract of thirteen hundred acres, located April 1, 1881, by Thomas Flowers and Thomas Davis.

John Bell located a tract of land and made improvements. It was warranted December 21, 1880–81, and patented January 29, 1884, to John Betts for one thousand acres, and was known as “Betts’ Purchase.” In 1772 it was owned by Benjamin White.

Richard Williams, who is mentioned in 1684 as an old reoter, owned a tract called “Richmore,” which before 1784 belonged to Henry Mollosten and Elijah Sipple, and was divided among the heirs in that year. He was also granted a tract “Williams’ Choice,” on December 21, 1880.

John Walker, December 20, 1680, took up a tract of three hundred acres called “Wadford,” adjoining the tract “Angleton.”

Brown’s Branch rises in Misipillion Hundred, flows through a portion of Milford Hundred, and enters into the Murderkill Creek at Fork Landing. Daniel Brown, from whom this stream took its name, obtained a tract of three hundred acres in this vicinity in 1680. There were also surveyed for him, August 28, 1684, nine hundred acres on the north side of Murderkill Creek, which, January 24, 1685, he sold to Richard Mitchell and Mary Wells.

Among the many tracts taken up by John Brinkloe was one called “Wild Goose Chase,” situated on Brown’s and Manlove’s Branches. It passed to his son John, and February 6, 1746, two acres on Brown’s Branch was condemned for the use of a mill for Richard Brinkloe. The mill and land in vicinity is now owned by J. L. Smith.

On the north side of Brown’s Branch, at the pond then called Isaac White’s mill-pond, there were surveyed, October 6, 1740, three hundred and three acres of land for the heirs of William Jacobs. The survey shows three houses on the bank of the pond above the dam. The land lying to the north was owned by Nathaniel Luff, and down the branch below the dam was a tract called “Rawling’s Lot,” and west and south was Melvin’s Adventure, 272 acres taken up by Edmund Melvin at an earlier date.

On the bay, in the bottom of Milford Hundred, between the mouth of old Strunk Creek and the old “Great Fishing Gut,” a tract of salt marsh was taken up and surveyed April 22, 1755, for George Manlove, and resurveyed October 15, 1765, for a company composed of William Mollosten, Luke Manlove, William Betts and Thomas Jester, who called the tract “Company’s Adventure.”

RELIGIOUS MATTERS.—The first mention of Friends in the present limits of Milford Hundred is found in the minutes of Duck Creek Meeting, on the 19th of Third Month (May), 1707, at which time it is reported that “Joseph Booth and Mark Manlove appeared for Mushmillon” (Misipillion). William Horn brought a note from the Quarterly Meeting, signifying their approbation of settling a meeting of worship at Mushmillon Creek, upon the first day of the week. Weekly meetings had been held at the house of Matthew Manlove, and on the 20th of Ninth Month, 1710, request was made that the place of meeting be changed to the house of Reynear Williams, which was granted. No mention is made of the Friends in this vicinity erecting a meeting-house until after 1750. On the 18th of November of that year, John Dickinson sold to the trustees of Murderkill Meeting five acres of land near Milford, for the erecting and supporting a meeting-house and school-house. The meeting-house was then erected and used for many years, but has now entirely passed away. The land on which it stood is now owned by J. J. Rosa.

In 1781 the first Baptist meetings in Milford Hundred were held by Revs. John Boggs and Thomas Fleeson. Under their ministration five persons were converted and baptized. Revs. Baker, Hughes and others also preached here shortly afterwards. On May 10, 1788, the following persons were constituted a church: Joshua Dewees, Elizabeth Dewees, Rachel Dewees, Cornelius Dewees, Cornelius Dewees, Jr., Ann Dewees, John Dewees, Mary Dewees, Isaac Dewees, Mary Purchase, Martin Purchase, Peter King, Ann King, Ruth Merony, Coelia Jester, Aver Draper, William Merony, Esther Draper and James Thistlewood. In 1791 eighteen families comprised the congregation. Meetings were held in the house of Cornelius Dewees until the meeting-house was completed, in 1797. The church was incorporated in 1796, with Peter King, Vincent Beawick and Cornelius Dewees as trustees. On August 10th of that year David Dewees was granted to the trustees one hundred and sixteen square perches of land, on the road from Dover to Milford. The erection of a church was immediately begun and the building was completed the following year.

Regular services were held in this church till about twenty years ago, when they were discontinued. The old building still stands, surrounded by the graves of its dead, at the edge of a forest, and is occupied by an old colored man and his family. The following ministers have served this church in the capacity of regular pastors: Rev. Eliphaz Dazey, Rev. Joshua Dewees, Rev. Joseph Flood, Rev. S. Sneed, Rev. Samuel Broadaway, Rev. Peter Meredith. Trustees, J. B. Coursen, Jos. Frazier, Jno. B. Jacobs, James H. Postles, Chas. C. Case.

Previous to 1850 the Methodists of the southwestern part of the hundred worshipped in the school-house in District No. 47. In that year a lot of land near Williamsville was donated by W. T. Griffith to the trustees for church purposes. The trustees were Parker Lofland, C. L. Sharp, Josiah Dickerson, J. H. Johnson and W. T. Griffith, and under their supervision a neat one-story frame building, twenty-four by thirty-six feet, was erected, and named Griffith’s Chapel in honor of the donor. Rev. Flannery was the pastor in charge when the church was built. The church originally belonged to Milford Circuit, but later formed a portion of Houston Circuit. Services were conducted here till 1854, when this church was merged into the congregation at Houston.

The Houston Methodist Episcopal Church was erected in 1885, and dedicated the same year by Rev. Davis. Under the direction of a building committee composed of Rev. McMorley, William Marvel, Henry Vineyard, George L. Counselman and Zachariah Johnson, a neat one-story frame structure, sixty by thirty feet, was built at a cost of two thousand seven hundred dollars. It forms a portion of Houston Circuit, and services are conducted once in two weeks. The church is in a flourishing condition, and numbers two hundred communicants. A Sunday-school containing one hundred and ninety scholars, under the superintendence of Zachariah Johnson and George L. Counselman, is connected with the church. The officers of the church at present are as follows: Pastor, J. T. Mitchel; Trustees, William Marvel, David Scott, Benjamin Manlove, Zachariah Johnson, Henry Vineyard, L. H. Wilson, George L. Counselman.

On April 7, 1802, Marcy Smithers conveyed to Joshua Laws, William Hughlett, Thomas Sipple, Sorden Liston and Jacob Caloway one-quarter of an acre of ground “for the express purpose of building a church or preaching-house thereon for the use of the Methodist Episcopal Church.” A frame building, twenty by fourteen feet, was erected and, in honor of Joshua Laws, was named Laws’ Chapel. The old building remained till 1856, when it was torn down and the present building erected. The trustees at this time were Thomas B. Coursey, Jas. Downs, James Postles, Joseph Frazier, Josiah Marvel and Molten Jacobs. The building is a neat frame structure, forty-two by sixty feet, and was erected at a cost of eighteen hundred dollars. The chapel first belonged to Milford Circuit, afterwards to Frederick, Vernon and Harrington Circuits, and now forms a part of Houston Circuit. Services are held once in two weeks. A flourishing Sunday-school, under the superintendence of John B. Jacobs, is connected with the church. There are present about seventy-five communicants.

The early Methodists in the northeastern part of the hundred worshipped in a building erected for church and school purposes. Meetings were continued in this building till 1840, when the name was changed from Sardis to Wesley and a new structure, twenty-six by thirty-six feet, was built. The land was donated by John Wood to Nathaniel Luff, James Hendrickson, Thomas Sipple, John Parsons, Isaac Jester, John Taylor, Thomas Smith and James Bell, and contained two and a quarter acres. The building was remodeled and enlarged in 1874 and is now twenty-six by fifty feet and two stories high. The membership present is one hundred. The church has been connected with Milford, Harrington, Frederick and Houston Circuits.

The present board of trustees is composed of Joshua Bennett, Benjamin Needles, Jehu Davis, William Abbott, John W. Hall, Matthew Mitten and George W. Thomas.

In 1880 a church was built near the “Tub Mill,” on land donated by Mrs. Mitchell. Services were held in this building by the Methodist Protestants for about a year and a half, under the leadership of Rev. Irving. It was then converted to the use of the Methodist Episcopal denomination, and dedicated by Rev. Willis. It has been used regularly for Sunday-school purposes and occasional preaching services have been held in it, but it has never been connected with any circuit. It is a neat one-story frame structure, twenty-seven by forty feet, and cost one thousand dollars. William J. Polk is the superintendent of the Sabbath-school. The present board of trustees is composed of the following persons: William P. Polk, Nathan Thomas, Luther Cubbage, Houston Cubbage, Robert McColey.

MECHANICAL INDUSTRIES. — Isaac White’s millpond is mentioned in a survey of three hundred and three acres, made October 6, 1740, for the heirs of William Jacobs. It was on Brown’s Branch, and very probably occupied the site of the mill now owned by William Wilson, as there have been only two mills on this stream, and the land for the use of the J. L. Smith mill was condemned six years later. In 1816 this mill was owned by Joseph Chesa, and contained one water-wheel and two pairs of stones. The mill was afterwards owned by John D. Smithers and by him sold to Alfred Newsome, whose administrator sold the mill to Paris D. Carlisle. William Wilson, the present owner, purchased the property of Carlisle in 1863. By him the mill was enlarged, and is a two-story frame building. William Wilson operated the mill till October, 1887, when his son, James A. Wilson, took charge. The grinding is done by burr, and consists mainly of custom work.

A condemnation for two acres of land on Swan Creek for mill purposes for Joseph Mason was returned December 7, 1771. A mill was accordingly erected and has since been known as the “Tub Mill,” at his decease the property was inherited by his son Joseph, who, March 28, 1806, conveyed the mill and land in the vicinity to James Henderson. It descended to his daughter Priscilla, who conveyed it to John Brinkley. It was afterwards owned by Dr. James P. Lofland, William Saxton and James Williams, the latter of whom sold to Silas T. Jenkins in 1875. A few years afterwards a saw-mill was built. The mills are operated by John D. Wilson and are chiefly employed on custom work. Water and steam are both employed in operating them.

The date of the erection of the first mill on the main branch of the Millipillen on the site of the mill now owned by Daniel Griffith has not been ascertained. The present mill, a three-story frame building, is the third one that has occupied this site, and was built in 1858 for William Griffith, whose wife Sarah inherited the property from her father, David Riggs. It was devised by Mrs. Griffith to her son Daniel, who is the present owner. The mill is now operated by William Edington. The grinding is done by burr and consists mainly of custom work.

On May 25, 1785, James Douglas purchased of John Clayton, sheriff, "all that lot of ground or millseat with part of a mill thereon on the south side of Brown's branch," which was offered at public sale as the land of Thomas Ogles. The land formerly belonged to John Harmenson, who sold to Thomas Muncy, for whom two acres was condemned for a grist-mill. Thomas Ogles purchased from Muncy. A very large merchant mill was erected by Douglass, which was known as "Mordington Mills." In 1816, it was in the possession of his son, Walter Douglass, and then contained two water-wheels and three pairs of stones. He operated the mill till his death, which occurred in 1827. On May 14, 1829, it was purchased by Charles Kinney, who sold to Samuel A. Short on November 12, 1832. While in his possession the mill was burned, and a new one about half the size of the former mill erected. A saw-mill was also built by him. He retained possession till January 1, 1849, when he sold the mills to Joseph O. McCollere, who February 23, 1876, conveyed them to Mrs. Eliza B. McCollere, wife of Edward B. C. McCollere. J. L. Smith, the present owner and proprietor, obtained possession May 8, 1878.

The mill on this stream nearer its head were erected by Ezekiel Rigges, and at his death descended to his son David, who owned them in 1816, when they consisted of a grist-mill, containing one water-wheel and two pairs of stones, and a new saw-mill. At the decease of David Rigges it was selected as the dower property by his widow, who afterwards inter-married with C. L. Sharp, by whom the present grist-mill was built in 1875. It next came into possession of David Rigges' daughter Sarah, who was the wife of William Griffith. By Mrs. Griffith the property was devised to her son, David R. Griffith, who owned it until 1884, when it became the property of J. B. Wilson, the present owner and operator. The present mill is a three-story building.

In 1875 Charles Barker began to evaporate fruit with one machine. In 1878 he erected a building on the present site, which, with the addition since made, constitutes the present establishment. Since 1882 four evaporators have been in operation, with a capacity of five hundred baskets per day. During the season seventy-five hands are employed and thirty tons of peaches, apples and berries are evaporated and find a ready market in Baltimore, Philadelphia, Chicago and Boston.

J. B. Counselman erected a building and fitted it up for the canning of vegetables and fruits in 1878. Additions have been made and the establishment now covers one hundred and forty-seven thousand square feet of ground, and is the principal industry of Houston. The factory is in operation for seven months each year and during this time employment is given to three hundred hands. The sixty thousand cases of goods, of which forty thousand are tomatoes, packed each year are shipped to all parts of the country. Twenty men are employed during the entire year manufacturing cans for their goods.

In 1882 Zachariah Johnson opened a canning establishment about a mile from Williamsville. During the season he employs twenty-five hands, and packs two thousand five hundred cases of canned goods, which are shipped principally to New York and Philadelphia.

J. L. Smith erected a canning establishment in the northwestern part of the hundred in 1882. In canning peaches and tomatoes employment is given to forty operatives for three months of the year. Three thousand cases are packed annually and shipped to New York and Philadelphia.

In 1884, E. C. Peck moved a steam saw-mill from Frederica to Houston. The mill was operated by him until the latter part of 1886, when it came into the possession of J. J. Nivison, who has since conducted it. The work consists solely of custom work.

Samuel W. Darby opened a brickyard in 1884, on land owned by Benjamin Hydon. He employs four men and manufactures two hundred thousand bricks per annum.

In 1894 J. L. Smith began to manufacture a fertilizer from king crabs, dried and ground. One hundred tons are manufactured per year, for which ready sale is found in the vicinity.

In 1849, George S. Grier opened a machine-shop in the town of Milford. Shortly afterwards, this was burned, and the present foundry and machine-shops, on the Mispillion Creek, about half a mile from Milford, were erected in 1851. Additional buildings have been constructed at different periods, and the establishment now covers two acres of ground. Steady employment is given to sixteen men, who are engaged in performing all kinds of work pertaining to a foundry and general machine-shop. The special features of the establishment are the manufacture of fruit evaporators and corn-shellers, and the repair of steam-engines.

VILLAGES AND LANDINGS.—Houston, the only village in Milford Hundred, is situated in the western part, on a tract of land warranted January 21, 1681, to Luke Watson, under the name of "Hunting Quarter." In 1854 the village received its name in honor of John W. Houston. A station of the Delaware, Maryland and Virginia Railroad is located here, and affords ample accommodation for travel and shipment. The village at present contains a church, a school-house, two stores, a saw-mill, a canning establishment and about sixty dwellings.

The post-office was established about twenty years ago with Rev. W. Richardson as the first postmaster. He was succeeded by David Scott, J. W. Jester and George L. Counselman, the present incumbent, who received his appointment in 1883. The several landings in Milford Hundred, on the streams, were of much greater importance, previous to the construction of the railroad, than now. They consisted principally of a suitable place for landing and loading boats, and for these purposes granaries were erected. The principal one on the Murderkill Creek was Fork Landing, where, in 1816, Levi Lister owned a wharf and granary, and another wharf and granary was jointly owned by Thomas Sipple and William Tomlinson. In 1802 there were here three granaries, two stores and several dwellings. Two vessels plied weekly between this landing and Philadelphia, carrying grain to the latter place. It is now occasionally visited by boats of light tonnage.

SCHOOLS.—The several subscription schools in operation previous to 1829 gave way to the common school system adopted in that year. The hundred was divided into school districts, and school-houses erected in suitable locations. Among the pioneer district-school teachers within the bounds of Milford Hundred, were John Quillen, John Sharp, William Hurley, Martin Harrington and —— Harvey. As the buildings became dilapidated, new and more commodious ones were erected, and when the scholars became too numerous, new school districts were created. The schools of to-day in this hundred are in an excellent condition, being supplied with many conveniences, and taught for nine months each year by skillful and competent teachers.

MILFORD TOWN.

The town of Milford is located on both sides of the Missipillion Creek. — North Milford, or the old town, being taken from Milford Hundred, Kent County, and South Milford being taken from Cedar Creek Hundred, Sussex County. The town is located on a tract called “Saw-Mill Range,” containing seventeen hundred and fifty acres of land, which was warranted to Henry Bowman, March 20, 1690, on condition that he should build a saw-mill thereon. It is probable that he complied with the conditions of the contract and built a saw-mill, but just where it was located is now impossible to tell. Saw-Mill Range passed from Henry Bowman to his son John, who, May 5, 1730, sold five hundred and ten acres of it to Joseph Booth, who gave part of it to his son John, who sold it to William Manlove, Jr.

May 17th, 1771, Joseph Oliver purchased one hundred and fifteen acres of Saw-Mill Range of Jacob Warrington, who then owned it, and April 17, 1778, he bought, adjoining, a tract of Levin Crapper, also part of Saw-Mill Range, also part of an adjoining tract called “Improvement,” of the Pennsylvania Land Company.

February 23, 1774, Nathan Adams (merchant) bought one-quarter of an acre of land lying on the creek near the place called Millstone Landing, now known as New Wharf Landing, of Joseph Oliver. In 1787 Joseph Oliver had James Johnson survey the land lying on the north side of Missipillion Creek into town lots. Some of these lots were conveyed by deed, but most of them were demised by perpetual lease, with a reservation of ground-rent, which is still paid annually. The first lot of which there is any record at Dover was taken by William Johnson, on the corner of Water and Walnut Streets, and is now occupied by C. W. Davidson, jeweler. The boundaries of the lot are here given, as a specimen of a curiously minute description:—

"Beginning at the intersection of said street, it being that point which hath north eleven degrees west, forty-four feet seven inches from the extremity of the body of a maple tree taken at the height of eighteen inches above the surface of the ground, standing to the sign of the cropper of said creek, below Milford bridge; thence running with Walnut Street north eight degrees and fifty minutes west, thirty-three feet three inches; thence leaving said street north seventy-nine degree, seven minutes and twenty-two seconds east, eighty-nine feet ten inches and seven hundred and seventy and five thousandths of an inch. Then south eight degrees and fifty minutes east, thirty-one feet and one million forty-nine thousand four hundred and seventy-five ten millionths of an inch to Water Street; thence with Water Street north seventy-seven degrees and forty-four minutes west, ninety feet from the place of beginning. Containing two thousand eight hundred and eighty and seven superficial square feet and seventy-nine square inches, of seventy million one hundred and eighty-three thousand and twenty seven hundred millionths of an inch."

According to James Johnson’s notes he began May 28, 1817, to survey and lay out the town of Milford, under the direction and superintendence of John Pettigrew, Dr. Joseph Sudler, John Wallace, Martin Dewaley and William Davis, commissioners, duly elected to lay out the town of Milford, in pursuance of a special act of the Delaware Legislature. After being sworn by James Micklechop, Esq., they proceeded to attend to the duties of their appointment.

The following are the boundaries given on a map in 1838:— "Beginning at Missipillion Creek, at Paul Knabb’s Landing; thence with a line of land formerly of Samuel Oliver, Sen. and John Draper, North 58° West up the lane leading to Paul Knabb’s; thence on a division line of lots now of Geo. S. Atkins and James T. Burleigh, Gauldett Oliver, John Waller, Peter F.
KENT COUNTY.

Causey and Mary K. Shockley, 148 perches out to the road leading from Milford to Frederica and in a line of land formerly of Wm. Bradley, dec'd, for the said Oliver and Draper land; thence with said line South 22° West across the lot of Mary R. Shockley's lot, including two and a half acres thereof in the limits of said town; . . . across the lot of Edward Collins, Sen., dec'd, including one-third thereof, with the dwelling-house in the limits of said town, across the county road six and three-tenths perches, north of a stone buried on the Northwest side of said road opposite North Street; thence across Henderson Collins' lot on the east side of the Quaker meeting-house road, including three and one-half acres thereof in the limits of said town to and across the meeting-house road and a piece of woods of Benjamin Potter's and Benjamin Henderson's line, making the whole line one hundred and ninety-two perches; thence with said Potter and Henderson's line, formerly Oliver's, west thirty-two perches to an old white oak stump near Cullin's branch; thence into and down the water-course of said Cullin's branch to Misipillion Creek; thence down said creek to the place of beginning. In 1886 the lines were changed in some places. The first line extends from the Frederica road to a branch thereof, where it corners, forming nearly a right angle, thence to Cullin's Branch, thence following the streams as before to the place of beginning.

South Milford has been laid out since by James Johnson and resurveyed by Thomas J. Davis. It lies on the south side of Misipillion Creek, and has Front and Second Streets parallel with the creek and Georgetown Road, Washington, Montgomery, Franklin and McColley Streets running from the creek. Carlisle Lane runs diagonally from the corner of Franklin and Front to Second Street; Causey Street extends from the Georgetown Road to the depot. The town contains some three thousand inhabitants. According to the Gleaner in 1886, the population of the town was two thousand inhabitants, with twenty-five stores, two hotels, twelve schooners and sloops running to Philadelphia. The expert trade at this time was said to be 250,000 bushels of corn, 30,000 bushels of wheat, 10,000 bushels of oats, 5000 bushels of rye, 2500 cords of wood, 400 cords of bark and 400 cords of quercitron, worth $351,500, and the imports were placed at $225,000. The exports and imports by shipping are not as much as formerly; but if what is transported by vessels is added to that carried by the cars, the amount would probably amount to more than in 1886.

CORPORATION HISTORY.—The town of Milford was first incorporated in 1807; the first Board of Commissioners were Dr. Joseph Sudler, John Wallace, Martin Dewaille, William Davis.

The act of incorporation passed in 1867 is the only one we have records of. Under the town charter they elected five commissioners, an alderman, an assessor and a treasurer, all for one year.

1867.—C. S. Watson, H. B. Fideman, P. W. Hall, John H. Denning, commissioner; P. S. Smoot, alderman; Dr. N. Pratt, assessor; B. S. Hemmons, collector; John H. Denning, clerk.

1869.—A. T. A. Fordert, Dr. N. Pratt, Joseph Truitt, Wm. Thomas Pretzmyan, P. W. Hall, commissioners; James Short, alderman; Jas. H. Bell, assessor; Joseph Gorby, collector; Dr. N. Pratt, clerk.

1871.—Char. T. Fleming, Wm. C. Welsh, T. F. Hammett, J. Y. Truitt, John B. Cull, commissioners; James Short, alderman; Jas. H. Bell, assessor; Geo. A. Moore, collector; J. Y. Truitt, clerk.

1874.—Char. T. Fleming, John Call, Wm. A. Lister, Samuel Simpler, A. R. Hall, T. J. Davis, commissioners; Wm. Shockley, alderman; R. A. Stewart, assessor; Geo. A. Moore, collector; Char. T. Fleming, clerk.

1875.—C. J. Hall, John W. Hallett, John Cull, H. M. Davis, Jas. Reedy, Wm. H. Davis, commissioners; Wm. Shockley, alderman; R. A. Stewart, assessor; Geo. A. Moore, collector; H. M. Davis, clerk.

1876.—C. J. Hall, John W. Hallett, John B. Cull, H. M. Davis, commissioner; Wm. H. Davis, M. H. Davis, commissioners: R. J. Bawick, alderman; R. A. Stewart, assessor; Wm. B. Truitt, collector; C. J. Hall, clerk.

1877.—P. W. Hall, Wm. Hill, John B. Cull, H. W. McColley, Wm. A. Sciffrin, A. R. Hall, commissioners; Alex Stevens, alderman; Samuel M. Simpler, assessor; B. S. Hemmons, collector; H. W. McColley, clerk.

1878.—Ethanath Smith, John B. Cull, R. J. Bawick, H. W. McColley, Wm. F. Revel, T. I. Smith, commissioners; Alex Stevens, alderman; Samuel M. Simpler, assessor; B. S. Hemmons, collector; R. J. Bawick, clerk.

1880.—Frank Richards, Thos. Townsend, James Reedy, H. W. McColley, S. M. Simpler, Charles A. Blair, commissioners; Alex Stevens, alderman; George F. Minor, assessor; William H. Twigg, collector; Thos. Townsend, clerk.

1881.—James Reedy, J. O. Brown, Thos. Townsend, James Russell, Charles A. Blair, M. H. Davis, commissioners; Alex Stevens, alderman; R. J. Bawick, assessor; S. M. Simpler, collector; Thos. Townsend, clerk.

1882—Dr. G. W. Marshall, Thos. Townsend, J. O. Brown, R. W. Gray, M. H. Davis, John B. Smith, commissioners; Alex Stevens, alderman; R. J. Bawick, assessor; S. M. Simpler, collector; Thos. Townsend, clerk.

1883.—Frank Reedy, John H. Apel, John Welch, James Abbott, John W. Ratcliff, R. H. Gillman, commissioners; Alex Stevens, alderman; John W. Hallett, assessor; R. M. Simpler, collector; R. H. Gillman, clerk.

1884.—John H. Apel, Robert C. McFarlan, Isaac S. Truitt, R. H. Davis, S. N. Gray, J. T. Belts, commissioners; Alex Stevens, alderman; H. W. McColley, assessor; J. D. Hall, collector; Isaac S. Truitt, clerk.

1885.—James H. Hall, John H. Apel, Wm. N. Dorsey, Wm. F. Causey, Geo. C. Abbott, Geo. H. Hall, commissioners; Alex Stevens, alderman; R. H. Davis, assessor; J. D. Hall, collector; Geo. H. Hall, clerk.

1886.—James H. Hall, Frank Richards, Wm. T. Watson, Wm. F. Causey, H. W. McColley, Wm. A. Humes, commissioners; R. J. Bawick, alderman; Thos. Townsend, assessor; J. D. Hall, collector; H. W. McColley, clerk.

An act of reincorporation was passed at Dover on February 28, 1887, by which the town began to work under a new charter. The government of the town now consists of a Town Council, composed of a president and six members. The president and three of said members shall be freeholders within the town limits, the assessor also to be a freeholder. Two of said councilmen shall be elected for two years, the president and four members for one year. There have been several amendments to the old charter, but none of much interest.

Those elected under the new town charter, March
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

7, 1887, were: President, H. W. McColley; William T. Watson, James Russell, Joseph M. Davis, R. C. Hall, Frank Rickards, Charles H. Tuthill; Alderman, R. J. Beawick; Assessor, William G. Herring; Collector, Thomas A. Watson; Clerk, Charles H. Tuthill.

INDUSTRIES.—Milford has always been an industrious town. The condition upon which Henry Bowman took Saw-Mill Range was that he should build a saw-mill, and from the name of the tract it is evident that saw-mills were in operation here at an early day. In connection with the saw-mills it is fitting to observe that ship-building was an early and important industry. The oak in this vicinity is good, and the reputation of Delaware-built schooners and sloops was far extended. A small vessel was built up near the dam many years ago, and a man by the name of Du Pre built one vessel at the New Wharf. In 1798 action was taken in the Legislature in relation to a wharf. Robert Russell was one of the first ship-builders where Carlisle's yard now is. David West next carried on the business, building only about one small vessel per year. M. R. Carlisle and William F. Revill carried on ship-building from about 1850 to 1860, when Revill retired and Theodore Carlisle entered into partnership with his brother. This partnership continued for about thirty years, during which time they built many three-masted schooners of one thousand tons burden. Since Manlove Carlisle died Thomas Carlisle has not built many vessels. Among other builders were Sylvester A. Deputey and his son, James H. Deputey, who built a number of ships and worked at the business for many years. William A. Scribner also had a yard where David Lank, a son of John Lank, another old ship-builder, now is. There are three ship-yards in operation now,—Abbott's, Carlisle's and Lank's. A tug-boat, the first built at Milford, was launched from David Lank's yard in 1887. There have been about six or seven vessels built per year at these yards for many years. They have been mostly sloops or two and three-masted-schooners, built for coast-wise trade, of from one hundred and fifty to one thousand tons burden.

Grist-Mills.—In 1878 an act was passed by the Delaware Legislature enabling Rev. Sydenham Thorne to erect a mill-dam across Mispillion Creek, and for the condemnation of a small piece of flat-land on the Sussex side of the said creek, for the use of a grist-mill. This petition represents that Rev. Sydenham Thorne, of Kent County, is the owner of a certain tract of land, which affords a very convenient situation for a grist-mill, being at the head of Mispillion Creek in the county of Kent. It appears that Rev. S. Thorne erected a grist-mill where the Red Mill now stands, possibly the same structure that is there now, about 1878. The mill is shingled in place of siding and has been the same as now as far back as any one now living can remember.

There was a ford here formerly, which gave the name Mill Ford or Milford. The head of navigation is said to have been farther up the stream prior to the erection of the mill dam; so that as it may, the head of navigation is now below the mill dam.

Joseph Oliver immediately began to lay out a town and lease lots, as before noticed, and the town from this time forth began to grow in population and importance. This section has been celebrated for corn, and more recently good wheat has been grown, which has rendered the milling business both necessary and profitable. Among the subsequent owners of this mill have been Mr. Dutton, John M. Darby, Peter F. Causey and his son of the same name, who is the present owner. Gov. Causey was also owner of what is known as the Haven Mills. The Red Mill has four run of stones, and recently one-half roller process has been added. A huck factory was built for Orcutt Brothers about 1850, and is now operated by R. H. Williams; it manufactures about two hundred thousand tons of hucks for mattresses. Peter F. Causey built a woolen-mill in 1868, which burned down July 27, 1872, and was rebuilt and operated by Hoffecker & Brother, who employed thirty hands and manufactured about five thousand yards of cloth per week. These mills were one hundred by fifty feet main building, with a picker-room twenty-two by fifty feet. They were destroyed by fire in 1882. R. H. Williams operated a mill for grinding black oak bark to a fine powder, called quercitron, for coloring purposes. This branch of industry has been abandoned since other processes have been discovered to produce like colors at less expense. George S. Grier, an Englishman, has operated a foundry and repair-shop here for a number of years. Allen Tolbert owned the Haven Mills; subsequently Edward Stapleford, Joseph Dutton, and John M. Clayton finally purchased them for John M. Darby. These mills at that time consisted of a grist-mill, a saw-mill and carding-machine. The tanning business was formerly quite extensively carried on by James Clayton and others.

James H. Denning started a pottery on Pear Street about 1840, and carried on business for about thirty-five years, making all kinds of earthenware, supplying all the country around. The American Banket Company was organized at Milford in 1876.

Alden first fully demonstrated the practicability of his fruit-drying process here in 1871, his establishment then employing ninety hands day and night.
during the fruit season, which lasts about six weeks, and consuming from three hundred to five hundred baskets of peaches in twenty-four hours. There are now some thirty drying factories in Milford and vicinity, which, together with Reis' Cannery, which was started in 1881, and employs about eighty or ninety hands, having a capacity of from fifteen thousand to twenty thousand cans per day, is capable of disposing of the peach and tomato crop without loss to the farmer, even if there is no pressing demand.

Nathan Davis had a small plow foundry back of Lowery's hotel, near John Dunning's pottery. In 1849, George S. Grier purchased the Haven Mills water-power of Peter F. Causey, and started a foundry. He has employed sixteen hands and manufactured implements of all kinds. Matthews, Hall & Co. have a foundry near the depot, started about 1865, where general repairing is done. Isaac Simpson has the largest phosphate factory. Clift & Ryder, King & Spearman, Peter Fruit, Taylor & Sharp have been prominent carriage-makers. John Scribner, blacksmith, years ago made the bolts, screws and nails that were used in vessel-building at Milford.

Merchants.—Nathan Adams took up land at Millstone Landing, now known as the New Wharf, in 1774, and is mentioned as a merchant. Adams' heirs sold this property to Benjamin Parker. Among the early and well-remembered merchants were Molton Rickards, Squire Samuel Ratcliffe and Walter Sipple (who were in partnership), Wm. Sorden (who owned the property now owned by Geo. S. Adkin's heirs), Jacob Biddle, John Wallace, Martin Demas, Daniel Godwin, John M. Darby, Lowder Layton, Walker Sipple, Benjamin Potter (was a merchant and tanner), Peter T. Causey and son, Gov. Peter F. Causey, Abner Dill, Benjamin Wadams, Rev. Truston P. McCollley (hatter and merchant), Peter Griffiths, Isaac Lockland, Curtis Watson, Bethuel Watson, Mitchell & Warren, George Buchanan, Andrew J. McCollley, Joseph Bennett. About 1840 there were twenty merchants doing business in Milford, every one of whom were solvent and worthy of credit.

Drug Stores.—Joseph S. Bennett, the first druggist in Milford, commenced in 1846 where Benjamin Anderson has a grocery-store. He was succeeded by Thomas Wallace, and Thomas R. Hammersley conducted the business for him. Sherwood & Foulk succeeded him; after Sherwood died Foulk sold his interest to Thomas Sherwood, a son of his former partner, and started again where Dr. Marshall now resides, in 1856, and in 1870 he removed to his present quarters in Watson's block. Thomas Sherwood sold to Thomas F. Hammersley, who now has a drug-store on Walnut Street. Dr. Marshall, Dr. Pratt and H. L. Page now sell drugs.

The house now owned by Wm. F. Causey, Esq., was built in 1750 by an Englishman by the name of Levin Crapper. Gov. Rogers resided here in the early part of the century, and is buried on this farm. Lowder Layton was an early merchant in a little store which stood where Peter F. Causey, Jr., now lives. The farm contained six hundred acres when Rogers owned it. In 1849, Governor Causey purchased and refitted it, and it is now one of the most desirable residences in town. Of Lowder Layton's sons, Caleb S. was associate judge of Sussex County, and Garret S. was a physician in Milford, and Joshua was a merchant at Georgetown.

Henry Hudson owned the land where South Milford now stands, and had James Johnson lay it off into town lots in 1819. He built the brick house now occupied by Widow Lemuel Draper. The building of this house ruined him, financially, and Walker Sipple purchased the property, from whom it passed to his daughter and John A. Hazard, who sold it to Lemuel Draper. After his failure, Henry Hudson kept the hotel where Lowery now is.

Thomas Davis resided in Cedar Creek Hundred, and was a member of the Legislature at one time. Two of his sons resided in Milford. Robert M. was Treasurer of the State of Delaware, and Thomas J. Davis is a surveyor and conveyancer, and has settled a large number of estates.

Daniel Curry started the first peach orchard in the neighborhood of Milford, and was laughed at by his neighbors for so doing. He was also a grain dealer and shipping merchant at Milford. Mary E., his only daughter, was the wife of Gen. Torbert. She came into possession of her father's real estate, and now resides at Milford.

Major-General Alfred T. A. Torbert, son of Jonathan R. Torbert, was born at Georgetown, July 1, 1838. He was educated at the home school and West Point, graduating in 1855. He was with General A. S. Johnston in his campaign against the Mormons in Utah. At the breaking out of the Rebellion he helped to organize the New Jersey troops, and was commissioned colonel of the First Regiment of New Jersey Volunteers, September 16, 1861, by Gov. Olden, and served with the regiment during the Peninsular Campaign. In April, 1864, he was appointed brigadier-general in command of the First New Jersey Brigade. May 4, 1864, he was assigned to the first division of cavalry under General Sheridan. He did gallant service at Winchester, and in many other hard fought battles; subsequently he was promoted to brevet major-general. He married in January, 1866, and resigned his command in the army, and came to Milford to live, in the home of his bride. In 1869 he was appointed minister to San Salvador, where he remained nearly two years until 1871, when he was appointed consul-general to Havana, and in 1873 consul-general to Paris. After his return home he devoted himself to his private affairs, and was on his way to Mexico on private business when he was shipwrecked, his body being washed ashore on the coast of Florida. He is buried in the Methodist cemetery.

Nelson Rickards moved from Georgetown to Milford about 1837, and started the chair-making business, which he followed for many years. Perry P. and James S. started carriage-making, which the former still continues.
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

Bethuel Watson, son of Isaac Watson, who patented land in Sussex County in 1785, lived in Cedar Creek Hundred. Jesse Watson, son of Bethuel, married Rachel Collins, and their son Beniah came to Milford, and engaged in the mercantile business. He took his son Curtis into partnership with him, and after his death, in 1844, Curtis and his brother Bethuel engaged in merchandising until the latter died. Curtis S. Watson not only engaged extensively in merchandising at home, but also in the export trade. As many as twenty ships traded from this port then, and large quantities of quercitron bark, which brought as high as ninety dollars per ton in Europe, were exported.

His life is worthy of more than passing notice. He was born December 9, 1809, in Cedar Creek Hundred, Sussex County, Delaware, three miles south of Milford. His grandfather Jesse Watson was a native of the same hundred, where he lived and died, at the advanced age of ninety years, and his grandmother at eighty-seven years. Jesse Watson had three sons, Jeremiah, David and Beniah, and one daughter, who married and moved west. Beniah, the youngest son and the father of Curtis S. Watson, early in life learned the carpenter's trade but after his marriage with Elizabeth Shockley, engaged for a time in farming in Cedar Creek Hundred, and owned a saw-mill, which he operated. The children of Beniah and Elizabeth Watson were Curtis S., Catharine, Ann, Bethuel and Beniah.

Curtis S. Watson was the eldest child. He obtained his education in the schools near his home, and at the Milford Academy, remaining on his father's farm until he was nineteen years old. He then entered a store at Milford as a clerk. When he attained the age of twenty-one years, his father and he, in 1831, engaged in the mercantile business in Milford, as the firm of B. Watson & Son. This co-partnership continued for ten years, when his father on account of increasing age, retired. Mr. Watson then took into the business, as partner, his brother Bethuel, and the firm name was changed to C. S. Watson & Co. They carried on a general business which gradually grew and developed and became very profitable. These operations included not only the buying and selling of store goods, but dealing in real estate, grain, lime, lumber, fertilizers, and other articles, by which they supplied numerous customers, residing in town and over a large extent of the surrounding country.

A number of tracts of land were purchased containing valuable timber which was cut down and much of the white oak lumber used in the construction of vessels. Within fifteen years, C. S. Watson & Co. had built at Milford, fifteen vessels ranging from sixty to two hundred tons burthen. These vessels they used in shipping the grain, bark, staves and lumber to Philadelphia and New York. All the merchandise sold in the store was billed as a return cargo. They also brought lime from the Hudson or North River on the return trip and sold it here to the farmers of the vicinity.

In 1856, C. S. Watson & Co. retired from the general merchandising business. Bethuel, the junior member of the firm died the next year. Curtis S. Watson then engaged in buying and selling grain, guano and phosphates which he continued with great success for a quarter of a century at Milford. He retired from business in 1882 to attend to his large landed interest in Kent and Sussex Counties aggregating in all two thousand five hundred acres. The farms which he now owns, he purchased at various times with means he accumulated through his rare ability as a business man. In addition he owns three store buildings and the post-office building on Walnut Street and his large residence on Front Street in Milford.

In 1876 Curtis S. Watson was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Milford and has since been a member of the board of directors of that institution. He served as a member of the board of town commissioners for ten years; and was president of the board several terms.

He was fifteen years a director in the Junction and Breakwater Railroad, from Harrington to Lewes. In politics he has always been a staunch democrat. His first presidential vote was cast for Andrew Jackson, in 1822, and he has since voted at every presidential election for the candidate of his party. He was elected a representative to the Legislature in 1859, and re-elected in 1861, serving in all, four years. From 1871 to 1875, he represented Kent County in the State Senate. For fifty years he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Milford and a trustee and steward for a long period. He is a liberal supporter of the church and devoted to its interests and to the cause of religion. He was made a Mason half a century ago, in Temple Lodge, No. 9, of Milford, and became a Royal Arch Mason, thirty years later.

In 1840 Mr. Watson, made his first visit to Saratoga, New York, then a small village. Every year since that time he has spent about sixty-five days of the hot summer months at that now famous pleasure resort, making in all forty-seven visits in forty-seven years.

Mr. Watson was married, January 5, 1833, to Sarah, daughter of Thomas Davis, of Cedar Creek Hundred, by whom he had seven children, all sons.

His wife died November 5, 1851. Their surviving children are Beniah Watson, attorney at law, practicing at Dover, Delaware, and Dr. R. Y. Watson, the present postmaster at Milford.

Curtis S. Watson was married, July 27, 1858, to Lydia A. White, daughter of George White, of Milford.

Peter F. Causey and Dr. Lofland had mills for grinding quercitron or oak bark. D. H. Holland started general merchandizing where Hume has his hardware store in 1887, thence he removed to a store which stands nearly opposite where he is now, and in 1880 he came to his present location. He took his son, Joseph E., into partnership with him, and has since done a leading business, and is now the merchant of the longest standing in the place. John Jump commenced about the same time that Holland did, and discontinued recently. Randall Williams and Henderson Collins, William C. Williams and Benjamin Potter, who left a will giving his property to the poor of Kent County, outside of the poor-house, were all merchants in Milford. Noah Lofland was one of the first hatters here, and his son, William, whom Anderson succeeded, and T. P. McColley worked at the business.

Benjamin Anderson commenced the hatter business in 1836, and was one of the last hatters in the state, when he discontinued in 1860. After he stopped making hats, he associated his son with him in the dry-goods business.

In 1875 Benjamin Anderson started the present grocery business. Alexander Pullen started the nursery business in Milford, in 1870. He has since associated James F. Anderson in the business with him, and they sell from two to three hundred thousand peach trees yearly, beside ten thousand apple and five thousand pear trees, vines and berries. Hall & Son are also doing a large business.

The railroad takes considerable business from the shippers by water. The largest importation by vessel is material for fertilizers, and coal. The out-going vessels carry pine and oak wood and piling, also oak timber for ship building. George Hall and D. H. Holland are principally engaged in shipping wood.

John Pettigrew came to Milford from Scotland, and was a soldier of the Revolution. He owned the property where James M. Hall now resides. He married Ann McNeil, and had three daughters—Ann, wife of Dr. Greer, Margaret, wife of Dr. Joseph Sudler, and Leah, wife of J. Milhecho. Of Milhecho's daughters, Sally was the wife of Ezekiel Cowgill; Margaret married Elias Naudain; Ann married Purnell Hall, a farmer and cabinet-maker; Mary G. married John Greer; Lavinia R. married Dr. Karnar, and Clara M. married James C. Wilson.

Governor William Tharp was born November 27, 1808, and died January 1, 1885. His great-grandfather was John Tharp, of Sussex County, England, who settled in Kent County, Delaware. His son, William married Ruth Clark, and their son James married Eunice Fleming. Their son, William (the Governor), had a family of daughters that married and settled in Milford and vicinity. Ruth is the mother of William Watson, and Williamina is the wife of C. J. Hall, lately Clerk of the Peace for Kent County.

Miss Harriet McNatt, who was born with the century, and is the last of her family, has a very clear recollection of events that took place in the early history of the town. Her grandfather, Richard Delaner, was one of the early settlers and owned a large tract of land on the road to Harrington, at Delaner's Cross Roads, about three and three-fourths miles from Milford. He was a large planter, and carried on store keeping and a tavern. He was an Irishman by birth, and fought for the Americans all through the Revolutionary War. He died in 1810, aged eighty-one. He had two sons—Levin H. and John, and a daughter, Mary, the wife of Major McNatt, and Harriet R., now aged eighty-seven, is the only surviving member of the family. Her mother remembered when there were only three houses in Milford—Joseph Oliver's house, which stood where Colonel Watson and Mrs. Ruth Carlisle's residence now stands, then called Oliver's Landing; William Sordons, a merchant, and Isaiah James, a tanner. Afterwards, William Brinckle lived where James Truitt lived, and carried on tanning. He was very aged when he died. His children were William, John and Mary, wife of Dr. John Adams. Thomas Collins had a large family, all of whom are dead or have moved away.

The first school Miss McNatt attended was in 1808, near her grandfather Delaner's. It was kept in a log school-house with an earthen floor, with planks around the outside for desks. The Quakers had a meeting-house where Rosa lives. Gauladett Oliver and John Thomas were Friends. The former had three sons—Joseph, Thomas and Paul, and several daughters. Ann, wife of William Godwin, Governor Rogers, Governor Tharp, Governor Burton and Governor Causey all resided here. David Walton and Colonel Hall were cabinet-makers. Samuel Ratcliffe lived in South Milford years ago, in a little red house.

HOTELS.—Daniel Godwin built the brick part of the Lowery House, it being the first three-story building in the place. He kept the hotel a number of years and was superintendent of the stage route from Wilmington to Seaford. He also engaged in the mercantile business, and built the house now owned by A. B. Cooper. He was also a local Methodist preacher. His son, William, became commission merchant in Philadelphia, and Frank was president of the Corn Exchange, in the same city. Daniel C. was in partnership with his father many years. Samuel F. founded the Franklin Reformatory Home, in Philadelphia, and is its president. Peter F. Causay purchased this property and sold it to Justus Lowery, the present proprietor. Joseph Walton first leased the Stine lot on September 18, 1786, and in 1792 he made a lease for a ground rent for $8.13. Walton and family built and occupied this lot several years. Martin Dewalle, a Frenchman, came into possession of the property, and his widow kept a hotel there. The successive owners since have been William A. Mygatt, Levi Harris, John W. Jump and Richard F. Stine, who has erected a fine brick hotel. J. C. Shockley kept this hotel for twenty years.

PHYSICIANS.—Dr. Joseph Sudler was one of the first physicians in the place; he married a daughter of John Pettigrew. Dr. James P. Lofland, Gov. Burton, M.D. and Dr. James R. Mitchell, were the three leading physicians for many years. Dr. Owen, was also an early physician. Dr. John S. Prettyman came to the village when a young man and in connection with his son is still practicing here. Dr. Nathan Pratt, Dr. Mark G. Lofland, Dr. J. O. Pierce, are among later physicians. Dr. J. D. Strong, was the first Homopathic physician in the place; he built the residence now occupied by J. B. Smith.

There are eight physicians practicing medicine in Milford, Dr. Wm. Marshall and son, Dr. G. W. Marshall, Dr. J. W. Purnell, Dr. Nathan Pratt, Dr. J. O. Pierce, John S. Prettyman and son, John Prettyman, Dr. J. G. Dawson, who has one of the finest collection of Indian relics to be found outside of the Smithsonian Institute.

Dr. James R. Mitchell was born in Caroline County, Maryland, in 1806, and moved to Milford with his parents when he was one year old. He was educated here and read medicine with Dr. Burton, of Milford, and attended the University of Maryland. He located in Milford, and had a successful practice for forty years.

Purnell Lofland, lived and died in Milford. He had two children by his first wife, Mary Robinson, Dr. James L. Lofland and Elizabeth, wife of Spencer Williams, who was cashier of the Commercial Bank of Milford. His second wife was Arcadia Burton.

Of his children by his second marriage, Purnell was a merchant, and a lieutenant in the Mexican War, Mary was the wife of Samuel Harrington, and Ann married — Austin.

Dr. John Owens, a native of Nanticoke Hundred, Sussex County, was born in 1787, at St. Johns town. He studied medicine with Dr. Jos. Sudler, and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania, in 1819. He practiced medicine in Milford and Frederica for many years in the present century. His wife was Mary, a daughter of Isaiah James, one of the first settlers, and was considered a great belle in her day. Dr. Owens was a charter member and first secretary of Temple Lodge. One of his sons, Frederick J., became a physician.

Charles T. Fleming, son of Beniah Fleming, was born in Missipillion Hundred, about seven miles from Milford, in 1805, is descended from William Fleming, who came to Missipillion Hundred, from Scotland, in 1740, and took up four hundred acres of land. Charles T. came to Milford in 1827, and in 1835 commenced surveying; having collected the old surveys of James, William and Manlove Johnson, he became the most competent surveyor in this part of the state, and he has done considerable conveyancing. He was notary public, and commissioner of deeds for New York, for many years; for forty years he was agent for the Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company. In 1837, he was a Whig member of the legislature. Originally a Presbyterian, he joined the Methodist church during the time there was no Presbyterian church in the place. In 1883, Mr. Fleming laid out in building lots, eight or nine acres belonging to Frank Risksard, situated in the northeastern part of the town, which are now (1887) largely occupied by dwellings.

Colonel Thomas Peterkin was a bachelor, a very demonstrative man, with decided convictions, true to the cause he espoused, and proverbially honest. John W. Redden was a carriage-maker here. He married Catherine, a daughter of Gulaudette Oliver. They removed to Natchez, Mississippi, in 1820. William Brinkle, Jr., son of William Brinkle, Sr., was born in Milford. John P. Brinkle was a lawyer at Georgetown, where he died quite young.

MILFORD BRIDGE.—In June, 1785, an act was passed to enable Joseph Oliver, of Kent County, to erect a bridge over Missipillon Creek. In 1791 this act was repealed and the following was enacted: "Whereas, the draw-bridge over Missipillion Creek on the public road leading from the village of Milford into the county of Sussex hath become of great utility to the inhabitants of Kent and Sussex Counties, hence it was provided that each county should pay half of the expenses of keeping and repairing the bridge and Isaac Davis and John Ralston, of Kent, Daniel Rogers and Nathaniel Hayes, of Sussex, were appointed commissioners to carry out the provisions of the act. The act further provided that the bridge between abutments should be thirty-five feet, nineteen feet of which should be a draw or platform eighteen feet wide with good and sufficient chains for raising and lowering the same, a provision that was necessary when vessels ascended the Missipillon to a point above the bridge."

STREET LIGHTING AND FIRE DEPARTMENT.—An act to regulate and light the streets of Milford was passed February 5, 1807. This act was subsequently repealed. Now the streets are being lighted by electric light. Milford Hook and Ladder Company was organized in February, 1869, with Mark G. Lofland, president; Beuben A. Steward, vice-president; P. C. Fossett, secretary; Justis Lowery, treasurer; William B. Lowery, fire marshal. The company contained about twenty members.

BANKS.—Ellis Shockley owned a controlling interest in the old Commercial Bank. He was largely engaged in merchandising and gave his name as security too freely causing his failure, and the bank went down with him. After this failure the Smyrna Bank established a branch office at Milford and did banking business here until the establishment of the present bank. The First National Bank of Milford was chartered July 27, 1876. The first board of directors were H. B. Fiddeman, C. S. Watson, M. R. Carlisle, James R. Lofland, George Russell, Robert H. Davis, James H. Deputy, C. J. Harrington, James M. Hall. The first officers were H. B. Fiddeman, president; J. B. Smith, cashier, and Isaac S. Truitt, teller. W. R. Aldred is the present teller. T. J. Davis, George S. Grier and J. B. Smith are among the directors now.
to report in 1887, the cash capital of the bank is sixty thousand eight hundred dollars; surplus, thirty-five thousand dollars; undivided profits, $11,659.58.

SCHOOLS.—William Johnson bought the lot now owned by C. W. Davidson in 1787, and lived and died there. He was a surveyor and one of the first, if not the first, school teachers in the place. Like all the schools here, up to 1882 it was a private school. In Johnson’s note-book the following notices appear: Thursday, March 25, 1788: “Notice is taken that James Train called William Russell a liar. Witness, William Pope.” “Notice is taken that Peter Robinson was absent from the school till the evening.” “Notice is taken that James Train came to an engagement in school this evening.” A system of private schools has been continued with varying success until the present time. A private school or academy was held in the Masons’ building for many years. In 1832 the first public-school in the northern part of the town was held in the house now owned by J. B. Smith, and William Dickinson was the first teacher; this building was sold to Captain James Thompson and the Masonic building was purchased for public school purposes in 1846 and was used until 1887 when it was remodeled and enlarged. There is also a public school in South Milford.

Daniel S. Ellis, superintendent of North Milford public schools, January 16, 1887, reported as follows: The value of the school property is two thousand dollars with four teachers and one hundred and twenty-three pupils. Charles W. Allen, principal of the South Milford School, reported that the school property is worth forty-five hundred dollars; amount of money raised by tax, eighteen hundred dollars; amount of money received from the State, eight hundred dollars; amount paid for teachers’ salaries, eighteen hundred and ninety dollars. The school is in operation nine months in the year with an average attendance of one hundred and forty-two pupils out of two hundred and twenty-one, the whole number on the roll.

The Milford Female Institute was conducted by Rev. Mr. Kennedy for six or seven years. Mr. Kennedy was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at the time, and desiring to educate his own family he started a school for females where the common branches, languages and music were taught, and many of the young ladies of Milford were here educated.

SOCIETIES.—Kirkwood Encampment, No. 6, was organized September 4, 1850, with the following charter members: Thomas Wallace, Joseph H. Bennett, John H. Denning, Joseph C. Gorby, Robert H. Clark, John S. Moody, William C. Welsh, Joseph L. Linderman.

Milford Grange, No. 6. —The first grange in the State was organized in West Blandywine, in 1874, by Mr. Hamilton, then residing in California. Milford Grange was organized the same year, with John G. Ross as the first master. There are from thirty to forty members in the Milford Grange at present. Mr. Ross resides where the old Friends’ meeting-house formerly stood, and is one of the most enterprising farmers in the vicinity.

Temple Lodge, No. 9, A. F. and A. M., was organized in Milford, Jan. 16, 1815. This lodge was organized by General Jesse Green, who was the first Master. The other officers were John Mitchell, Sr. W.; James Millechop, Jr. W.; Colonel Thomas Peterkin, Treasurer; Dr. John Owens, Secretary; John W. Redden, S. D.; William Brinkle, Jr., J. D. The Masters since the organization up to 1846 have been Jesse Green, James Millechop, Jr. (five times), John Mitchell, John W. Redden, Dr. James B. Loftand (thirty-eight times), Spencer Williams, Joseph G. O. Oliver, Edward Collins, Beniah Watson, William M. Godwin, Liston A. Houston, Dr. William Burton, William F. Revill, Daniel C. Godwin. They met in a building, part of which is the present public school building, until about 1846. A private school was conducted in this building for many years, and it is said that a number of poor children, some of whom have since become prominent, were educated at the expense of the Masons. This lodge was the parent lodge of a number of other lodges in the vicinity.

Crystal Fount Lodge, No. 10, I. O. of O. F., was organized February 10, 1847. The charter members were Joseph S. Bennett, Joseph C. Gorby, Samuel F. Godwin, John H. Denning, Joseph L. Linderman, all of whom are still living but Linderman. During its existence till 1887 the lodge has paid $7075 benefits to sick members; for burying the dead $650; relief of widows and children about $70; outside charities $698. Present assets $5816.23. One member, J. G. Foulk, has been Grand Master of the State. Three members—J. G. Foulk, Alexander Hall and Samuel M. Simpler, have been representatives to the Sovereign Grand Lodge. The present membership is forty-nine. In 1879 ground was purchased and the beautiful Odd Fellows’ cemetery was surveyed into burial lots. Since the organization of the lodge nearly every public celebration in the town has been managed by the order.

RELIGIOUS MATTERS.—Christ Church, 1704-1887. —The Rev. Thomas Crawford, a missionary of the English “Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts,” stationed at Dover, is believed to have held the first service of the Church of England in the lower part of Kent County, in the year 1704. The congregation then worshipped at a place three miles west of the present town of Milford, though it is not known in what year the first church building was erected, or precisely where it stood. As early as 1745 a small wooden chapel, supposed to have been the second edifice of the kind, thirty-six feet long by thirty feet wide, was built at the point known as Church Hill. This building is mentioned in the missionary reports under the name of Christ Church Mispillion, though it was popularly called “The Savannah Church,” on account of a swamp near by, or, perhaps, to distinguish it from “the Three Runs meeting-house” of the Presbyterians, situated two miles further down the creek. At this date, the English minister stationed at Dover, and officiating also at Mispillion and Duck Creek, was the Rev. Arthur Usher. He was succeeded by the Rev. Hugh Neil, who, in turn, was followed, in 1757, by the Rev. Chas. Inglis. At the end of a successful administration of six years, Mr. Inglis was called from this field to the rectory of Trinity Church, New York. The next name on the list of ministers is that of the Rev. Samuel Magaw. With his removal terminated the fostering care of the Venerable Propagation Society over the English Churches of Kent County. From this time the Mispillion Church appears to have had a separate existence and history.

In 1778-75 the Rev. Sydenham Thorne arrived and took up his residence near Church Hill. Mr. Thorne, like his predecessor in the rectoryship, was probably of English birth and education, though he came to this County from Virginia. Besides having considerable ability as a scholar and preacher, he was also distinguished for the refinement and elegance of his manner. Wealthy, benevolent and public-spirited, he was said, by one who well remembered him, to have been the most influential man of the county; and this, notwithstanding his political and religious principles of unconcealed loyalty to the King and Church of England.

In the year 1777 Mr. Thorne came into possession of the farm on the west side of Mullet Run, a little stream which empties into the creek two miles east of Church Hill. This property was subsequently owned by his nephew, Peter Caverly, then by James Clayton, and afterwards by the late Benjamin Potter, who, at his death, devised it to his grand-nephew and namesake. On this land the parson, in 1779, erected the large and imposing brick house, known as the Thorne Mansion,—almost the only relic of the last century which has been allowed to remain without alteration to the present day. Among the parishioners of the Savannah Church was Joseph Oliver, who owned the farm extending from Mullet Run, a quarter of a mile eastward, towards another land mark on the bank of the Mispillion, called the High Hill. At the instance of the parson, or mainly under his direction, it is said, Oliver about this time divided his land, or a large part of it, into town lots and streets. Of these lots two were given for the use of the parish church and graveyard; and here, in 1791, was laid the foundation of the present Christ Church, Milford. Much opposition was made in certain quarters to the removal of the house of worship to another site, and, in consequence, some of the members refused or withheld their assistance in the new enterprise. But notwithstanding this drawback, the building went on until the walls were raised and roofed in, the parson himself paying the cost of the brick, which were made of clay dug from Oliver's land, and burned in a kiln three hundred yards north of the church. The sills, rafters, beams and girders were constructed out of trees grown on Mr. Thorne's farm, cut down and hewn at his expense, and, when necessary, sawed into shape at his own mill. The death of this zealous man, February 13, 1798, interrupted the building of the church, and the work remained at a standstill for more than a quarter of a century.

As originally designed, the edifice was of two stories, having galleries on the north, west and south sides, and the Communion Table on the east. The pews were made with high and straight backs, and the pulpit was a quaint-looking affair, shaped like a chalice, and surmounted by a lofty canopy or sounding-board. It was placed in the east wall, over the holy table, so that the preacher might look into the galleries as well as upon the audience in the pews beneath. The inside of the building, designed to be finished in a semi-circle, seems never to have been carried any further than the putting in of the arched pieces intended to hold up the ceiling. It was not until the year 1835 that the original church thus begun in 1791 by parson Thorne, was entirely completed.

The next minister of the parish was the Rev. William Frye, who officiated until 1800. He then removed to Wilmington and became the rector of Trinity Church (Old Swedes), in that town. Seventeen years later the church was again under the charge of the Dover minister, the Rev. Henry R. Judah, until 1819, when the Rev. Joseph Spencer was made master of the academy in Milford, and, in connection with this position, rector of the parish. Mr. Spencer, afterwards doctor of divinity, resigned these offices in 1822-23, and was appointed principal of the University Grammar School, Philadelphia. Services were now maintained till 1830 by the Rev. Daniel Higbee; and three years later than this date, began the rectoryship of the man who was destined to complete the building of the temple whose foundation had been laid by the lamented Thorne, nearly a half century before. The Rev. Corry Chambers was an Irishman, and graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, who had been but a few years in this country, and was previously settled in Lewistown, Pennsylvania. An energetic man and a popular preacher, he soon succeeded in bringing together and adding to the flock, scattered and discouraged since the departure of Parson Higbee, until the church was filled again, on Sundays and at other religious festivals, with an interested and devout assembly.

During Mr. Chambers' ministry, a new roof was put on; the galleries and pews received their first coat of paint, and the pulpit was adorned with hangings and upholstery of crimson silk, in the most approved style of the day. It is related that, just after these extensive improvements were completed, and before ever a service had been held, the new roof in some unaccountable manner suddenly took fire. The accident, by good fortune, happened at midday, and an alarm brought swiftly to the spot a score of interested citizens, by whose willing help the flames were extinguished in a few moments, and before any considerable damage had been done.
A pertinent illustration of the old adage, "to strike while the iron is hot," was afforded, on this occasion, by Mr. Chambers, who, thinking the opportunity too good to be lost, immediately after the fire, opened on the spot a subscription paper for repairs, and with tears in his eyes, went about among the bystanders, soliciting money; until presently, he had received contributions and pledges amounting to twice as much as was required to make good the damage. The church, now entirely finished and furnished, was, in 1866, consecrated to pious uses by the Rev. Henry U. Onderdonk, provisional bishop of the diocese of Delaware.

Soon after this date, Mr. Chambers was succeeded by the Rev. John Reynolds, who remained in charge till 1843, meanwhile supplementing his slender salary by giving instruction to the young people of the town and others, at the Milford Academy.

In the following year the church fell to the pastoral care of the Rev. John Linn McKim. This gentleman, a native of Carlisle, Pennsylvania, was graduated at Dickinson College, in the class of 1830, and had been a pupil there of Doctor Joseph Spencer, sometime rector of Milford, and afterwards professor of Ancient languages in this institution. Mr. McKim was himself a thorough classical and mathematical scholar. Like his predecessor at Milford, he was master of the academy as well as rector of the church. His learning was said to be accurate, varied and extensive, and he was especially remarkable for the rare power he possessed of adapting his sermons to the character and needs of those who heard them. A man of singularly pure life, of gentle manners and cultivated taste, he deserves to be ranked with Inglis, Magaw, Thorne and other worthies whose names are destined to be held in grateful remembrance as long as the parish shall have a history to record.

By the choice of the vestry and congregation, the rectorship now descended from father to son; and, in 1865, the Rev. John Layton McKim began his ministry in the venerable church. A native of Delaware, and a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, it is a point interesting in this connection, that he received his academic degree precisely a century after his predecessor, Mr. Magaw, who had graduated at the same college in 1765. The coincidence goes further; for he also came to the parish just a hundred years later than his illustrious fellow-alumnus. Like him, too, he seems to have had a faculty for teaching, and devoted a large part of his time to this profession. The most successful teachers often prove to be also the most useful clergymen, and the two offices have been united in the case of more than one minister of this parish, who, but for the increased compensation which followed, might have been compelled to "shake the dust off their feet and depart," even though the people had been ever so willing to listen to their instruction and submit to their administration.

During the incumbency of Mr. McKim, the church was enlarged by the addition of chancel, sacristy and tower; the new work being carried on chiefly under his own direction and supervision. But while the ancient edifice was remodelled as to its roof and general outside appearance, the walls, ground-sill and floor, were allowed to remain as originally placed by Mr. Thorne.

Mr. McKim resigned in 1880, and at this date the parish is administered by the Rev. James C. Kerr. Under his judicious direction, the church has lately been decorated in the best style of ecclesiastical art, and otherwise improved until it is perhaps not surpassed in beauty and convenience by any house of worship in the state.

Milford Presbyterian Church.—The Three Runs Presbyterian Church is supposed to have been organized in the latter part of the seventeenth or the first part of the eighteenth century. It was located on the ground now occupied by an old abandoned graveyard and took its name from the Three Runs of the Mispillion Creek. It was a frame structure with a brick floor and was abandoned as a place of worship in the early part of the present century. Miss McNatt remembers that her grandfather Delamer and family worshipped here. Governor Tharp's family also were Presbyterians. The records are lost, but the following election of trustees in 1819 has been preserved. "At a meeting of the Presbyterian Congregation of Three Runs held at Milford, January 11, 1819, Joseph Hazlett, Robert P. Campbell, John Shafer, Robert King and William Satterfield were elected trustees." The Relations worshipped here also. When Rev. G. W. Kennedy came to Milford in 1849, there were only two members of this church remaining, Robert King and his sister. Mr. King was a firm Calvinist and devoted his life largely to the study of the Scriptures and theological works, and was liberal in giving for religious purposes.

In 1849, the Presbytery of Wilmington instructed Rev. G. W. Kennedy, an Evangelist, for the Presbytery to visit Milford, and, if the way be open to organize a Presbyterian Church there. He visited Milford and found only two Presbyterians. One was the wife of Governor William Tharp and the other was Miss Johnson afterwards Mrs. Primrose. In a short time other Presbyterians moved to Milford and a church was organized with seven members, viz.: Mr. and Mrs. William V. Coulter, Mrs. Governor Tharp, Mrs. Edward P. Morris, Mrs. Purnell Loveland and Mrs. S. M. Kennedy, the pastor's wife.

A move was made at once to build a church, and Governor Tharp, Colonel, afterwards Governor Caufey, Dr. James P. Loveland and John Hazzard were appointed a building committee, with Rev. George W. Kennedy as chairman and financial agent, through whose untiring exertions a neat and substantial brick church and parsonage were erected in 1850. At the organization of the church, William V. Coulter was elected and ordained a ruling elder, subsequently Rufus K. Baynum and Robert C. Hall, were elected and ordained elders. After a number of additions had been made to the church in March, 1856, Rev. Mr. Kennedy resigned his position as stated supply. The church remained vacant until November, 1857, when Rev. John W. Mears, of Philadelphia was elected pastor. During the first year of his pastorate, thirteen members were added to the church. He resigned February 15, 1860, and November 14, 1860, Rev. J. Garland Harne succeeded to the pastorate and was installed. He resigned September 20, 1863. Then the Rev. L. P. Bowen, a licentiate, was received as stated supply, and entered upon his duties January 24, 1864. At this time there were thirty-four members. He resigned January 28, 1866, and was succeeded by Rev. John F. Severance. At the same time Colonel Henry B. Fideman, Henry J. Hall and Jacob Y. Fouik, were elected ruling elders. Mr. Severance was succeeded by Rev. Richard A. Mannery, July 12, 1868, who died June 9, 1875, and after an interval of a year, Rev. A. A. Dinmore was elected pastor. Messrs. James B. Gilchrist and Edwin Hopkins were elected to the eldership. Mr. Dinmore closed his labors as pastor in November, 1875, and was succeeded by Charles F. Boynton, who began his pastorate February 1, 1876. He resigned in January, 1879, and the pulpit was supplied by Rev. S. K. Schofield until February 1880, when Rev. H. L. Bunstein became pastor and continues as such to date, September, 1887. During his pastorate, William Marshall, M.D., John B. Smith and William A. Humes were elected ruling elders. There are at present on the roll of membership two hundred and ten names.

Mr. Bunstein was born in Easton, Pennsylvania, August 18, 1844, graduated at Lafayette College in 1864 and at Union Theological Seminary in 1872. He was pastor of Clinton Street Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, from 1872 to 1876, of Beech Creek Presbyterian Church 1877-1880, and was called to Milford in November 1879.

Methodist Episcopal Church at Milford.—October 18, 1787, Francis Asbury, in his journal, says: "I had divine aid in preaching at Milford, the house was open and the day was cold." December 3, 1787, Joseph Oliver deeded to Nathaniel Smithers, Jr., Joseph Aydelott, William Ward, Elias Shockley, Thomas Ross, Reynear Williams, William Beauchamp, John Taylor and David Beauchamp, a lot containing fourteen thousand four hundred square feet "for the use and express purpose of building a preaching house or church thereon for the only proper use and benefit of the religious society of people called Methodists." Tuesday, October 22, 1789, Asbury says: "Rode to Milford; we had a great move and noble shouting." Rev. Mr. Whatcoat was presiding elder here then. Milford Circuit first appears in the minutes of the Methodist Church in 1789, Thomas Jackson and William Ratcliffe, preachers, Richard Whatcoat, Presiding Elder. The circuit must have embraced a large amount of territory, as the membership reported is eight hundred and seventy-nine whites and two hundred and thirty-six colored. The early records of Milford Church are not to be found, but from the recollection of the oldest inhabitants it appears that Samuel Draper, Julia Adkins, George S. Adkins, Henry Hudson and wife, Walker Sipple and wife, Lowder Layton and wife, John R. Draper and wife, Jabez Crocker and wife, Wesley Collins and wife, Benjamin Henderson and wife, were prominent members. Revs. James Bateman, Levi Starkes, George Taylor, John D. Onins and Charles Carner, are remembered. The latter had a great revival in 1857 which was kept up night and day, and one hundred and thirty-seven members were added to the church. Daniel Godwin, Molton Rickards, George Adkins, Wesley Collins and Samuel Draper are remembered as class leaders. In 1855, during Rev. William Anne's ministration, there was a great revival, and many joined the church. There was another great revival in 1874, during Rev. D. C. Ridgway's pastorate, and some three hundred joined the church, ninety of whom were from the Sunday-school. The first Methodist church, which stood nearly opposite where the present church stands, was sold at public sale for $49.50. In 1840 the second church was built on the site of the present church. Among the most prominent subscribers to the erection of this church were Rev. Truson P. McCollery, John M. Darby, Peter F. Causey, John Rickards, William N. W. Darsey, Samuel Draper, G. S. & W. Adkins, John Wallace and family, Daniel C. Godwin, James R. Mitchell, Charles T. Fleming, Henderson Collins, Pernell Hall, Henry May, Elias Smithers, George Primrose, Clement Clark, Jesse Sherwood, Benniah Watson, James H. Deputy. This second church and lot cost $4,428. 35. The present church was erected in 1871, at a cost of $19,000. William T. Vauls, Joseph S. Truit, James H. Deputy, William Walsh and Peter F. Causey, were committee. A party of nine gentlemen bought the old church and converted it into a public hall. The parsonage was rebuilt at a cost of $4,000, in 1883. A chapel has recently been built in South Milford through the instrumentality of Peter F. Causey, John C. Hall and Joshua Spencer, at a cost of $2,000, for Sunday-school purposes. The Baptists have recently organized a church in the town.

Reverend Jonathan Spencer Willis, son of William Barnaby Willis and Mary Spencer, was born in Talbot County, Maryland. His father served as sheriff of Talbot County, was a member of the Maryland Legislature four terms and was a very successful agriculturalist. Oxford John Willis, his grandfather, was custom-house officer at Oxford, Maryland, for a period of forty years, when that place was a leading port of entry and before Baltimore developed into a commercial town. Oxford John Willis was the grandson of John Willis, the grandson of Sir Richard Willis, who came to Virginia early in her colonial history, with the Fairfaxes and others who took up large estates in Virginia. The subject of this sketch is the eighth generation in direct line of decent from Sir Richard Willis. Mary Spencer, his Mifflord Church are not to be found in the Records of the Old Settlers to whom it is said that the church was given. The records of the church are not complete, and the exact date of its founding is unknown. However, it is believed that the church was established in the early 1800s. The first record of a congregation at Mifflord Church is from 1824, when the church was formally organized. The church was founded by a group of settlers who had come from Pennsylvania, and the first pastor was Rev. John B. Smith. The church was originally a small log building, and its congregation was made up of a small group of people who lived in the area.

The church continued to grow over the years, and by the mid-1800s, it had become a prominent part of the community. The church was located on a hill overlooking the town, and its location made it a focal point for the local population. The church was also known for its beautiful architecture, and it is said that the church was built with the finest materials available.

Over the years, the church has undergone several changes. The original log building was replaced with a larger and more ornate structure, and the church has undergone several additions and renovations. Today, Mifflord Church is a large and well-maintained building, and it continues to serve as a central part of the community.

The church has played an important role in the history of the area, and it has been a source of inspiration and strength for many generations of people. Today, Mifflord Church continues to be a vibrant and active community center, and it is a place where people can come together to worship and to celebrate life.

The church is open to all people, and it welcomes visitors from all walks of life. Whether you are a regular member of the congregation or a visitor, you are welcome to come and experience the beauty and importance of this historic church.

mother, was the eldest daughter of Jonathan Spencer, who was an officer in the War of 1812.

Rev. Jonathan Spencer Willis, the eldest of nine children, was born April 6, 1830. He grew up at Long Point, his father’s large farm near Oxford, Maryland. The district in which his parents lived was one of the first places in the county to adopt the public-school system. He attended the well-conducted school near his home and by the time he reached the age of thirteen had acquired a complete knowledge of the branches then taught in it. The succeeding year was spent as a clerk in a store at Georgetown, D. C. Returning to his home he again became a pupil in the district school for two and a half years. It was now taught by Lyman Griswold, under whose careful instruction he obtained a thorough knowledge of English grammar, studied algebra to quadratic equation, read Latin to Virgil and learned the elements of Greek. He then taught in the district schools of his native county and as principal of an academy for seven years. In the meantime he continued the study of geometry and French and in after years acquired a knowledge of the German language.

In 1864 Mr. Willis became a Methodist preacher in the Philadelphia Conference, having three years previously been married to Anne S. Valliant, by whom he had three children who died in infancy and whose death was soon followed by that of their mother. His first charge in the ministry was at Centreville, Maryland. His next appointments in order were at Camden, Dover, Frederica and Odessa, Delaware. In 1866 he was called to Tabernacle Church, Philadelphia, remaining two years and then took charge of a chapel on Mount Vernon Street, out of which grew the present Spring Garden Street Methodist Church, which he built and organized, the congregation beginning with forty-five members and closing his pastorate of two years with two hundred and eighty communicants. In 1864 he accepted a call to the Western Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, but resigned at the end of one year and then returned to the Methodists. In 1868 he accepted a call to the Seventeenth Street Methodist Episcopal Church in New York City, and served with great success for three years, spent the next three years as pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Stamford, Connecticut, and then returned to New York as pastor in charge of the Seventh Street Methodist Episcopal Church for three years. At the expiration of this time he returned to Delaware in the spring of 1878, and for five and a half years served several churches in the state. He has since devoted his time and attention to the interests of his landed estates. In 1885 he located three-quarters of a mile north of Milford where he had previously erected a large and beautiful mansion. The superintendence of the cultivation of his lands has its charms for him. He owns six hundred acres on which are twenty-five thousand peach trees.

Mr. Willis has always been a diligent student of classical literature. He has written quite extensively for the secular and religious press, some of his articles possessing great merit. During the Rebellion he wrote a series of war lyrics which appeared in the columns of the Philadelphia Press and attracted general attention. A poem of his published in New York at the opening of the centennial was highly commended by William Cullen Bryant for its rhythmic beauty and patriotic sentiment. In 1877 he was the poet for the commencement at Dickinson College at Carlisle, Pa., and he has written a number of other poems which appeared in various journals. Mr. Willis is a graceful speaker, has a musical voice and a ready command of language. He has studied the art of oratory and at times is quite eloquent when the theme upon which he discourses is one that arouses the noblest impulses of our nature. His lectures—“William the Silent,” “The First Woman” and others—are fine specimens of composition and he has frequently delivered them to large audiences. In politics he has always been an ardent and uncompromising Republican, and he has made a careful study of the great issues in our country ever since the days of his boyhood.

In 1864 Mr. Willis was married to Anne Townsend, daughter of William Townsend, of Frederica, Delaware, by whom he had two children—a son, who died an infant, and a daughter, Elizabeth Townsend Willis. On the morning of August 23, 1885, Mrs. Willis died from injuries received by the explosion of a coal-oil lamp while sitting alone in her bed-room. She was a cheerful, loving, amiable and noble woman, much admired by many intimate friends who greatly deplored her unfortunate death at the early age of forty-two years.

The family of Mr. Willis is now composed of himself and his bright and intelligent daughter, whose varied accomplishments certainly draw around their home a large circle of friends.

African Methodist Church.—The African Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in Milford in the autumn of 1867, through the instrumentality of Mrs. Lizzie Little, of Philadelphia, who had services held in the private residence of Mrs. Jane Jacobson, North Street, for more than a year. When their number had increased to twelve or thirteen and a small fund had been accumulated the Rev. Wilkhem, then laboring on the Milton circuit, took charge of them and encouraged them in the erection of their present church building. The original trustees were John W. Fountain, Stokely Jacobs, William Sorden, Robert Bailey, Nehemiah Fountain and Rev. Peter Hill. Mr. Hill was largely instrumental in building up the church. In 1887 the membership was seventy-five with a congregation of two hundred and fifty and seventy Sunday-school children.

The Colored Methodist Episcopal Church has about thirty-five members. The members of this church formerly worshipped with the whites and the colored membership is mentioned in the conference minutes in 1789. This church was re-organized and made distinctly colored at the time Bishop Scott re-organized the colored Methodist Churches throughout the United States.

Biographical.—Rev. Truston P. McColley was born March 9, 1793, and educated at the country schools. He became an apprentice to the hatter's trade; was a merchant for some time and a local preacher many years. In 1832 he was a delegate to the Constitutional Convention and made president of that body. He was a useful man in the community and the church, and died at the age of eighty-one. One of his daughters, Angelina, became the wife of Dr. William Marshall who was born in 1827. Dr. Marshall was educated at Milton and studied medicine at Jefferson Medical College. He was surgeon on the ship "Clarissa Perkins" that conveyed the first of the '49 men to California. He worked in the gold mines for a time and returned in 1851. He was surgeon in the army and wounded in a skirmish. He was captain in the Sixth Delaware Regiment. He removed to Milford in 1866, was secretary to the State Board of Health and delegate to the Ninth International Congress of Physicians. He owns a large flouring-mill and is otherwise interested in business. His son, Dr. G. W. Marshall, was born in 1854 and educated in Delaware College and Jefferson College, from which he graduated in 1876. He came home and married Mary L. Donnell and has been practicing medicine in Milford since that time. The house where Dr. Marshall resides was built by John Law in 1787. From John Law it passed to John Pleasonton, a merchant who had a store therein. Elias Shockley also had a store and a tavern. Polly Peterkin was murdered here by a man who married her for her money. It was the old Commercial Bank building, and after its failure the Smyrna branch bank was here also.

CHAPTER LXV.

SUSSEX COUNTY.

Sussex County is the southernmost county of Delaware, and has an area of about nine hundred and fifty square miles. It is bounded on the north by Kent County and Delaware Bay, on the south by Maryland, on the east by Delaware Bay and Atlantic Ocean, on the west by Maryland and Kent County. It is drained by the Mispillion Creek, Cedar Creek, Prime Hook Creek, Beaver Dam Creek, Cool Spring Creek, Love Creek, Middle Creek, Myrick Creek, Farry's Creek, Indian River, Irons' Creek, Pepper Creek, Turkey Creek, Herring Creek, Assawoman Bay, Pocomoke River, Sheals' Creek, Gray's Creek, Broad Creek, Coal Creek, Tussock Creek, Little Creek, Nanticoke River, Deep Creek, Gun Creek, Gravelly Creek, Clear Creek, St. John's Creek, Marshy Hope Creek and the Delaware Bay and the Atlantic Ocean. The surface is nearly level, and a large part of it is covered with woods. The soil is mostly fertile, the staple products being corn, wheat, cattle, pork, lumber and potatoes. The county is intersected by the Delaware Railroad and the Junction and Breakwater Railroad, and contains thirteen hundred as follows: Lewis and Rehoboth, Georgetown, Cedar Creek, Broadkill, Indian River, Northwest Fork, Broad Creek, Nanticoke, Seafood, Little Creek, Dagsboro, Baltimore and Gumborough. The town of Georgetown, in Georgetown Hundred, is the county-seat.

The territory occupied by the present county of Sussex was known in the seventeenth century as Hoorenkil, Horekill and Whorekill, and extended from Bompit's (Bomby) Hook to Cape Henlopen (Penwick Island). The first settlement was on the site of the present town of Lewes.

In 1658 Lieutenant Alexander De Hinijosa was given command of the Horekill, and was succeeded by Peter Alrichs, nephew of Vice-Director Jacob Alrichs, as commandant, in 1660. The territory was controlled by the Dutch authorities at New Amstel (New Castle), and Peter Alrichs, by reason of his official position, obtained a monopoly of the trade from Bompies Hook to Cape Henlopen, causing considerable dissatisfaction among the inhabitants, who complained to the Vice-Director William Beeckman, of Fort Altena, and he wrote to Director Stuyvesant. Two years later, 1664, the territory passed into the possession of the English.

On April 22, 1665, Captain Martin Creiger, was granted permission to trade in Delaware Bay, and on November 11, 1665, Peter Alrichs was allowed to traffic at Horekill for "skins, peltry or what other commodities those parts would afford, he to make entry with the officers at Delaware (New Castle) of the quantity and quality of goods." On March 20, 1666, all duties on household goods were discontinued on the Delaware River, and on October 22, 1670, on petition of the inhabitants, all customs were abolished.

On January 12, 1670, a grant was made to James Mills for a "neck of land" lying "to the southward of the town called Whorekill." He was also given

1 Peter Alrichs took up a tract of land at the Horekil, while he was in command under the Dutch, but a patent was not obtained, and, upon the capture of the territory by the English, in 1666, all the land in his possession, both in New Castle County and at the Whorekil, was confiscated and later granted by Governor Richard Nicolls, in 1666, to William Tom, clerk of the courts "on Delaware." A tract at the Whorekill was granted to Tom, and his name appears in a list of persons whose quit-rents are still due, as follows: "Will Tom, at ort Whorekill, 2 bushels." This tract was on the Whorekill and on the side of Paper's Creek. It contained one hundred and thirty-two acres and was resurveyed to him July 7, 1675.

2 Samuel Jennings, later Governor of New Jersey, in a letter October 17, 1680, to Penn Lewisc and Lucas, assignees of Edward Bylting, says, "In good time we came to anchor in Delaware where wee, Peter Alrichs, came aboard and brought a handsome present to our Commander and sent for mee into the round-house, where they both were, and Peter told me he had nothing to say relating to custom, he had no commission for it, nor did he know anybody that had."
the privilege of buying the Indian right. The survey accompanying the grant was as follows:

Hilimusus Fredericks Wittbank, his wife two thousand and a man servant. Alexander Moelestein, his wife, two sons and a man servant.

Otto Wolgari, his wife, one son and a man servant.

William Klarem, with two daughters and a child.

Jan Kiphaven, his wife and daughter.

James Wood, one daughter, one son and four servants.

John Spa (Rosedale), his wife, five children.

Daniel Breen, his wife and partner.

Jan Michael, Anthony Peters, Abraham Peters, Peter Smith.

Peter Grondich, Anthony Sander.

Herman Cornelissen, Herman Drooches, trader.

There are here at present on Captain Martyn Cregiers' sloop Belfast.

Also on a small boat of Peter Aldrich, from New Castle.

Hermanus F. Wittbank.

On June 14, 1671, the Council adopted an order in reference to land taken at Horekill to the effect that "what is past or granted there bee confirmed upon the same conditions as the rest of ye Land, with this Proviso, that each Planter bee obliged to settle upon the Land, & that each Person be enjoyned to settle a House in a Towne to be appointed near them."

At this time little land had been taken by the settlers, excepting in and near the town of Horekill; but the residents of Maryland showed a disposition to locate them. The southern and western boundaries were in dispute, and as Lord Baltimore and Governor Lovelace were uncertain as to the exact location of the line, considerable difficulty and uneasiness resulted. In June, 1672, Richard Perrot, of Virginia, wrote to Governor Lovelace concerning this question.

May it please your Honor—In May last my selfe, with some other gentlemen of Vergeniny came over to Delaware to see the place and liking the place we made choise of several tracts of Land for our selves and nabor and had made bold to have given your Honor a visit and not one of our companye taken ill so that was Implied Mr. Walter Wharton for to patent our Land. Now May it please your Honor about four days before I came to see the Maryland men have servd it again in the Lords name. I much fear it will distress the rest of the gentlemen from cunning up at the slate and several more of our nabor that would have come up at the slate of the leve Honest men and good Housekeepers, they desired us to take them up some land, which I am doth to you unless your Honor will bee pleased to give me permission for it. I dont but to see the place welt seatd in tow or three years at the... and a trade from London; the place is good and healthy and wanteth nothing but plyes. I was in good hopes I should have had the happiness to have got up before Your Honor left Delaware, but my hopes was in value. I hope your Honor will be pleased to honor me with a line or two whoe is yours faithfull and obedient servant unknown.

From the Horekill,

Richard Perrot.

June 21, 1672.

If your Honor will grant all the land to us Virginianes that lies between the Horekill and the Mountain hill we shall take apoyd care for the setling of it, as may be expected at so great a distance when Layed out according to mens familys; what good land there may bee found in the distance I know not; at present we have a desire toと言e over as the place will afford. I intend Vergeniny for sum occasion of bastian and send up my son.

B. P.

In July, 1673, when the Dutch again came into possession of the territory, Peter Alrichs was reappointed commandant at Horekill, from Bompis Hook to Cape Henlopen, and among other instructions...
tions was "authorized, for the promotion of Agriculture, to assign lands to the inhabitants of South River," subject to the approval of Governor Anthony Colve, and to call for confirmation and proper title deeds after the lands had been surveyed by the sworn surveyor.

After the re-occupation by the English in August, 1674, Captain Cantwell wrote to the Governor, informing him of affairs in the Horekill, to which the Governor replied that he was "glad to hear that people are generally so well satisfied with the change, and of the likelihood you tell me of newcomers to settle in those parts. In the mean time you may give to such newcomers as desire to continue there any reasonable quantity of lands not disposed of or settled in time, according to their capacity and number of hands they shall bring for clearing it; and, till my arrival or order, do further empower you to be surveyor for the whole river and bay." 1

On July 7, 1665, eighty acres of land were granted to Alexander Molestiy (Molestine), "lying upon the Whorekill, near the mouth of the kill," adjoining the land of William Tom, and one hundred and thirty-two acres were granted to Hermanus Wiltbank on the Whorekill and Pagan's Creek, also adjoining the land of William Tom.

On March 26, 1676, patents were granted as follows:
- Henry Stricker (Stretcher), 600 acres; Timothy Love (Rehoboth Creek), 411 acres; John King, 900 acres; Randall Reveill, 900 acres; Robert Windsor, 1100 acres; Daniel Hart, 500 acres; John Roade, 350 acres; Daniel Brown, 400 acres; Alexander Molesteen, 411 acres; Abraham Clennin and Otto Wogast, 600 acres; Hermanus Wiltbank, 800 acres.

On June 15, 1676, Edward Codell was granted three hundred acres, called "Edward's Choye," "alien in the woods south-southeast from the horekill town, distant three miles, near unto Green branch." On June 11, 1677, Hermanus Wiltbank wrote to Governor Andros from Horekill:

"Right Honorable:

"Whereas I am informed, very creditable, that those of Maryland have surveyed some incommodable quantity of land, the certain quantity unknown, but is supposed be several thousand acres, the which land lying within the Limits of this Government, as I can produce by an instruct in writing, made between the Christians and the Indians, in the first settlement of these places being bought and paid for, as the writing more at large may manifest, being the southward of Whorekill Creek about the distance of 15 or 20 miles. But to the northward of the supposed gap Henipene and the extended limits according to the aforesaid writing being called Alawonos Inlet, conveniently at the maine, wherefore I have already acquainted several persons that what encouragement, privileges and assistance can or may be procured from ye Honble, shall not be wanting if that any persons are willing to settle there, those parts aforesaid under the protection of his Royal Highness."

In 1677 the appended list of settlers in the Horekill were given as belonging "to the company in Delaware," and in 1678, Captain Edmund Cantwell, of New Castle, obtained land patents for them:

1 On the reoccupation of the court, in 1674, by Governor Andros, they were authorized to issue warrants for land to settlers, subject to survey to be approved by the authorities at New York.

2 Reveill's tract was surveyed August 3, 1675. It was on "Slatter's creek, near to the Whorekill."
played in by the planters. And they doe say it doth hinder others from coming to seat in this County, that had thought of coming. This I thought fit to signifie unto you; being always willing to Appear in that which may be for the prosperity and well being of that place which I eat my bread in; and leave it to thy consideration to return such answer and directions, hereunto, as in thy great wisdom shall seem discretionable. And as thou said Acceptance with thee, I shall do the more freely done hereafter as things present; and subscribe myselfe Thyne to serve thee, Sir, what I can.

"Wm. Clark."

The Governor, in a letter to the magistrates at Whorekill, dated June 6, 1679, says of this letter: "Upon a letter or address, of William Clarke, from your place to the governor, concerning the uncertainty of surveyor's fees in the s'd parts, Its his honour's order that the price of surveys bee att the Whorekill, &c., as in Virginia and Maryland, money or value." One William Taylor was acting as the "pretended surveyor," and by this letter Cornelis Verhoefse was appointed surveyor at the Whorekill.

On March 1680, John Roads was granted five hundred and fifty acres of land, "on ye beach of ye sea bounding on Rehobah Bay."

In 1682 (old style), 1683 (new style) surveyors of roads and bridges were appointed as follows:

1st District—John Hill, surveyor, from the flat lands southward and to the north side of the Green Branch of Prime Hook Creek northward.

2d District—Robert Hart, Jr., surveyor, from south side of Green Branch of Prime Hook Creek southwest, to the three runs of Mispillion Creek northward.

3d District—William Crawford, surveyor, from the flat lands northward unto the extent of the county, southward being to Cape James, formerly called Cape Henlopen.

On October 29, 1682, William Penn wrote to the magistrates of the two lower counties of St. Jones' and Whorekill, to meet him at New Castle in November following, "to arrange matters for the guidance and good government of the territory."

On December 25, 1682, the proprietary wrote to the magistrates of Sussex County as follows:

"By the Proprietary & Governor of Pennsylvania & the Territories thereunto Belonging:

"Having duly Considered the present state of your country to the end that all obstructions to the due Improvement thereof may be removed and reasonable encouragement given to invite planters to settle amongst you, I doe think fit to order and appoint as follows:

"First. That you, in open court, shall receive all petitions from time to time that may be made by such persons as design to take up Land among you and that you grant them a Warrant to the Surveyor to admesne this, provided always that you exceed not three hundred acres of land to a master of a family, nor an hundred acres to a single person, at one single penny per acre or value thereof in the produce of the country, which done, that the Surveyor make his return into Cour and that the Court make thence return into my secretary's office.

"Secondly. And because no Land shall lye waste to the prejudice of new planters, all lands formerly granted and not taken up and settled within the time limited by the methods of your own Court that granted them, Shall be accounted vacant land, and if possible upon the terms aforesaid the old clayent or pretender to have the preference if not already seated, owners of above 800 acres, unless already seated by some other person.

"Thirdly. That all persons for the future that shall have grants to take up land be also limited to seat it within one year after the date of the grant, else the said grant to be void of and no effect.

"Fourthly. That you endeavor to seat the lands that shall hereafter be taken up in the way of townships. As three thousand acres amongst Tenn family's, if single persons one thousand acres. Amongst Tenn of Skin, that is laid out in the nature of a long square five or Pen of a side and a way of two hundred foot broad Left between them for an Highway in the township. This I would have ye carefull in, for the future good and State Benfit of your country given under my hand and seal at Chester, the 25th of 10mo., 1682.

"To the Justices of the Peace for the Co. of Sussex.

"Wm. Penn."

This letter was followed immediately by the one appended:

"By Wm. Penn Proprietary & Governor of Pennsylvania & Territories thereunto Belonging:

"Do hereby order and appoint that before any land be surveyed for any other person you doe issue forth a warrant directed to the Surveyor or his Deputy to lay out for the Duke of York's in your county or precincts Threet Thousand acres of Land for a Mannor and Tenn Thousand acres of land for a Mannor for myself and I would have the Mannor lye on the north side of Assawatomke Inlet as near to Cape James as ye may be and my Mannor to be between the bounds of Cedar Creek and Mispillion Creek or in the most convenient place towards the north side of the county. Given under my hand & seal at Chester, this 25th of October, 1682.

"Wm. Penn."

"To the Justices of the Peace of Sussex Co."

On December 10, 1684, Samuel Gray presented the names of William Emmott, John Brown, Richard Gill, John Williams, John Waron, Robert Janson, Harman Cornelius for not working on the "Bye-ways," and the delinquents were ordered "to work between this and the next court what they are behind in their work, otherwise to be fined 20s. per day for what they are behind." Robert Hart, surveyor of the bye-ways, presented Luke Watton, Sr., Henry Bowam, Henry Smith, Barnwell Jackson, David Coursey, William Ffauiry, Wm. Spencer, Jr., and Bartholomew Applegate.

On February 2, 1687, the following letter, signed by Governor Markham, was sent by the Provincial Council to the Sussex authorities:

"By the President and provincial council:

"Whereas, by the 19th Law in the Law Books of the province and territories, it is enacted that no undue Deer skins be put on board any Shippe's Boaste or vessel with intent to transport ye same out of this province before they have been publicly exposed to sale within the same by affixing in writing upon some meeting-house or court-house doors, five days at least . . . . upon the penalty of ye forfeiture of ye same.

"The President and Council having duly considered the great injury and damages the Government daily receives by the officers neglect in their duty, in not putting the said law in execution, have thought fit to order and strictly command all officers concerned that they strictly put in execution the said law, and that the naval officer of this Government clear no Ships or Boastes or Vessells going out thereof with any unred Deer skins, unless certified, as aforesaid, be first introduced."

On March 6, 1694, the magistrates of Sussex County

1 Penn arrived at New Castle October 27, 1682, and the following day received the territory of Delaware from John, Moll and Ephraim Harms. He returned to Upland the same day and wrote to the magistrates of the two divisions. Whorekill was divided and St. Jones' County formed out of it by Governor Andrews in 1680.

2 Whorekill had meantine been changed to Sussex."The extent thereof shall be from the maine branch of Mispillion Creek, called the three runs northward, and southward to Assawatomke Inlet."
wrote to the authorities adjacent in Maryland concerning the boundary dispute:

"Gentlemens — Whereas we their Majesties justices of the peace in court sitting are given to understand that John Dinkall, inhabitant on the south side of the Indian River within this county and government stand bound over to your government and for the rest owning the authority of ye Government.

"Thought fit therefore to signify unto you that most of the land on ye said south side of the Indian River, and particularly the land that they live upon, was taken up and surveyed by grant when the land was reverted out of the government of New York and since taken by William Penn, Esq., absolute proprietary, and that the said above-named persons possess their said lands by the said Right, and have all along paid Bromley Dues unto the said Proprietors and Government, and for as much as some of your County have pretended to something of an order of King and Council. That the tract of land lying and being on the River and Bay of Delaware on the one side and Chesapeake Bay on the other side bee divided into two equal parts by a line from the latitude of Cape Henlopen to ye 40th degree of northern latitude, and that one-half thereof lying towards Chesapeake Bay Remain to ye Lord Baltimore, and that half part lying towards the River and Bay of Delaware unto William Penn, Esq. But if any apprehend so they are under a great mistake, for ye order of King and Council is, 'That for avoiding further difference the tract of land lying between the River and Bay of Delaware and ye eastern sea on the one side and Chesapeake Bay on the other side, bee divided into equal parts by a line from the latitude of Cape Henlopen to ye 40th degree of northern latitude, and that one-half thereof lying towards the River and Bay of Delaware and the eastern sea bee adjudged to belong unto his Majesty and that the other half remains to Lord Baltimore as comprised within his charter.' Now some of your government have also alleged that Cape Henlopen and Cape Henlopen are one and the same Cape, which like wise needs bee a great error, for if so, there had been no need for the King and Council to have mentioned the Eastern sea in the said Order. All which being doubtly deliberated more whether or not, it bee not most fitst obtain all acts of violence and breach of good neighborhood on either part until such time as ye Division be made and completed according there unto, which wee have good grounds to believe will not be long.

"These things we have agreed to offer to your prudent and judicious consideration and being properly Debated may conduz to the Relief of the said Barker and Dinkall and so wee Bid you farewell with a Real acknowledgment of being.

"Your affectionate friends to serve you,

WILLIAM CLARKES,
LUKE WATSON,
THOMAS PEMBERTON,
ROBERT CLIFTON,
THOMAS GIBRANS.

"From a County Court, held in their majesties name, at Lewes, for the County of Sussex, on the Sixth day of March, 1694.

"HERIKAH PYEFIELD, Clerk."

On September 7, 1695, overseers of highways were appointed as follows: John Miers, for town district; Richard Himon, for Rehoboth to the Inlett; John Barker, from the Inlett to the Indian River; Thomas Fisher and Mathew Osbourne, for the Broad Creek; Luke Watson, Jr., for Prime Hook, and Justice Booth for Cedar Creek.

On December 3, 1695, the Court of Sussex County ordered the constables to appear with a list of persons liable to taxation "within their respective hundreds."

On January 16, 1727, there were appointed as overseers of highways: Jacob Kollock, Esq., for Leweston Hundred; David Cordrey, Rehoboth Hundred; Robert Smith, Broadkiln Hundred; Henry Brewington, Indian River Hundred; Samuel Davis, Esq., Angola Neck; John May, Esq., Cedar Creek precinct; and William Till, Esq., Slaughter Neck precinct.

At the May term of Court, 1785, the following were appointed, and the roads defined over which they had authority: "Jacob Witbank for Lewestown streets and along ye Kings road as far as the two mile post; Anderson Parker, Esq., from ye said two mile post to Coolaspri; John Roads, from ye seaside to along Rehoboth road to ye place where a gallowa stood towards Lewestown; James Miers and Isaac Watson for Cedar Creek hundred; Samuel Carey and William Pettijohn, Samuel Carey from ye saw mill vs. Wm. Burton's to Bracey's Branch, and said Pettijohn from ye branch along ye said road to the two mile post on Southern's Run; Robert Smith from Coolaspri to Long Bridge; John Conwell, from Long Bridge to Sowbridge; Simon Kollock, Esq., from Southern's Run to Orr's mill; Thomas Warrington from ye bottom of Anglo Neck to Orr's mill; William Burton and James Pettijohn from Burton's said mill to Pembroton's bridge now road; Richard Burton, Park Neck road from ye Horseboat Landing on the King's Road to the Crab Tree. At the May sessions 1785 Thomas, Davis and William Donnelly were made overseers from the Sow Bridge to the Three Run."

In 1764 authority was granted the courts to lay out public roads.

On January 31, 1811, the law defining the election districts of Sussex was passed, and the polling places were designated as follows:

First District, "Cedar Creek," at the house of Milloway White, at head of Cedar Creek.
Second District "Broad Kill," at house of Benjamin Benaon, at Milton.
Third District, "Nanticoke," at house of widow of Boas Coverdale, at Bethel or Passawmett Cross Roads.
Fourth District, "Northwest Fork," at house of John Wilson, at Bridgeville.
Fifth District, "Broad Creek," at house of widow of John Elliot.
Sixth District, "Little Creek," at house of Thomas Skinner, at Laurel.
Seventh District, "Dagsborough," at house of Peter Hall.

In 1829 the school law was passed, and under it George R. Fisher, E. Walter, Henry Bacon and Thomas Jacobs divided the county into school districts.

COURT-HOUSES, PRISONS AND ALMSHOUSE. — More by popular consent than by official enactment, Lewes or the Horekill was recognized as the county-seat from its establishment as a trading-post in 1658 until Georgetown was, in 1791, formally made the centre of the administration of justice and transaction of county affairs. When the West India Company set

1 The territory of Sussex County was not extended southward nor westward until after 1765, and the four hundreds, Lewes and Rehoboth, Indian River, Broadkill and Cedar Creek, comprised the territory of the county for at least three quarters of a century. Among the old settlers of half a century ago it was known as "Old Sussex." In confirmation of this term, a deed made, bearing date November 6, 1764, of land in the western part of Broadkill Hundred, recites of the parties that they were John Gowes, Jr., of Sussex County, Benjamin Mifflin, of Philadelphia, and "John Jones, of Worcester County, alias New Sussex." This was a year after the first survey line was made, and the territory formerly Worcester County, Maryland, this early was recognized as really belonging to Sussex County. In 1748 an effort was made to form a new county out of Sussex and Kent, to embrace the territory between Newerkill Creek and Broadkill Creek, and the Delaware Bay and the Maryland line. Six petitions bearing three hundred and ninety-one signatures were presented to the Legislature, but without success, and the movement was never revived.
up their fort on the Horekill, the Dutch commanders held their military courts therein, followed by the English in 1664. It was not, however, until 1673 that these were followed by the exercise of a rude form of civil jurisprudence. Originally embracing all that is now Kent and Sussex Counties, the Horekill territory soon grew so populous that in 1680 Governor Andros granted the petition of the people of the Northern District by setting it apart as St. Jones County. The division was quickly followed by a reorganization of the court at Lewes, which continued to have jurisdiction over the remainder of the Horekill region. There is no evidence that up to this time any effort had been made to erect a courthouse or prison at Lewes; but when the new justices were commissioned, May 28, 1680, they entered upon a project for the establishment of a proper courtseat at that settlement, with its necessary concomitants of jail and court-house. On June 26th they united in a petition to that effect to Andros, and also asked that the name Horekill might be changed. This latter request was at once granted by the Governor, who rechristened the settlement Deal's, which name it held until it became Lewes-town in 1682. In their memorial to Andros the judges said:

"Whereas, there have heathenize been a neglect in getting a prison here, for want of which there have been, not long since a prisoner for debt whose was a stranger, made his escape, which may prove damage either to the County or Sheriff. For the preventing of the like for the futter, we have on safe hands received a petition forth with to M. Andros, to which will cost between three or four thousand pounds of Tobacco. Here is also grant an want of a Court-House, which will cost about five thousand pounds of Tobacco. Our request is that these will be pleased to impoverish us to make a Tax, to leave the same on the Inhabitants. There was some certain Land formerly laid out by Cantwell for a Townes, which was to be divided into lots of sixty foot in breadth and two hundred feet in Leinirth, and the Land and wood that Lye back was to be common for food for cattel and woodland, it being all in about one hundred and thirty acres of land. Since which time Armages (Belmonte) Warham have got the said land surveyed and have not at any time desirous to understand that he have any patent for it. He demands a bushel of Winter Wheat a year of any person that shall build upon the said Townes but if any person will have the said land he will give the same, and will. We should think one half of that rate would be unreasonable, but that we leave to thy ordering, and to whom the rent shall be paid, whether the duke of York or to Armages Warham, and be more moderate in the price of the side of the Towne which if it shall be at any time here after be taken up by any particular person it would be a great inconveniency to those to owe or shall here after live here, as also the Ope, where there is good pin trees for building—the land Lettel worth—both which we desyer may Lye in common for the use of the Townes. It hath been spoke here as if they did intend as an Ears to the Court to Impower the surveyor to grant warrants to lay out land to such persons as shall come to take it up; but we, being sensible of the Ill Consequences that will attend that, doe desire that thee would be pleased to forbear giving him any such power, for our presents is now but small, and he, for the Locker of getting the more money, will lay out such large tracts of land for a particular person that might serve many families to live comfortably upon. There have been experience of thee like, as when Joseph Cantwell had the same power he surveyed three thousand acres of pruneable land at Prince hook for Henry Smith, and others of like nature might be mentioned. And we have good cause to resolve for the time to come to grant free tracts of land to particular persons than have been formerly granted, for this County, as it is now divided, is not above half as big or large as St. Jones. nor will not hold a half so many people; neither is the Land so generally good as that is. And this being the antientest place, we think, with submission, might be a bene continued at least Equil with the others, which, if thee please, do make a complaint to the Commissioners or next Governor, which may be by dietsing by Murther Creek, and see done words."

Governor Andros' answer was to confirm the action of the justices regarding the stocks and whipping-post and authorize the prison and court-house to be built. His reply was in this fashion:

"At a councilld att New York the 12th Nov 1680 present the Governor and Council upon application made by the Magistrates and Court of the Whoookill in Delaware signifying the necessity and want of a Court house prison stocks and whipping post for the publick service desiring to be Improved to the inhabitants at the same or some other name. Having already agreed for the building of the prison stocks and whipping post which they already will cost between three or four thousand pounds Tobacco Grant for the prison stocks and whipping post with the like penalty of 500 dollars if the prisoner be not there and furnished and then to make it two story high the upper story to jut over and to be made a Court House, the charge of the charge of both not to exceed six thousand pounds of Tobacco but if the prison be not and Court room then not to exceed three thousand five hundred pounds of Tobacco which make an equitale rate According to Law."

"By order of Council
John Wnt Cik Council"

This authorization reached the Horekill officials in about six weeks from the time it was given, and they promptly proceeded to act upon it, as appears from the subjoined extract from the Sussex Court records of January 1, 1680-81.

"The Court House Stocks and whipping post which the Governor of New York ordered to be built thereon, to be at least thirty feet in length and ten feet in broad, is this day ordered to be forthwith built, sixteen square feet in the clear beam and twenty square foot in the clear the upper rooms and to be Lodg house raise sixteen foot high and to be three rooms below and the ground floor to be as low with five windows one of a thick and the Court house floors to be an Inch and half thick the doors to be made of plank of Two Inches Thick and A good strong Roofe Litle and well governed. Two good windows in the Court House of three feet square Apossem. The Loggs for the said house to be laid none Less than eight inches Thick And all the Loggs to be set in and in to the other. And a good pair of Stable to be built up plans and with Inch and half thick the stairs to be with outside of the house, the Iron work and nails to be provided for the said work at the charge of the owner, the said house made finished the first day of May next. Also a good pair of stocks of nine feet long and a whipping post at the end of them to be also forthwith made and set up.

"The said house Stocks and whipping post is taken to be done and performed by Luke Watson According to the dements above expressed for which the Commissioners doe oblige themselves to pay unto the said Luke Watson Seaven Thousand pounds of good sound Merchantable Tobacco in Oakes and Samuel Gray have taken the Contract all the said Loggs and wood work to the place where the house is to be set up of Luke Watson for which Luke Watson is to pay the said Samuel Gray Twelve hundred pounds of Tobacco good and merchantable, the stairs not Less than four foot wide with Raysil on both sides Six Thousand pounds of tobacco to be Raises by a vote on the Inhabitants of the said County and the other thousand pounds with what the Nails and Iron works shall cost to be paid out of the fines."

"The 7th day of the aforesaid mouth George Young did agree and engage with Luke Watson of the Towne of Sussex for the building of the said Court House Stocks and whipping post within mentioned within the time expressed for which the said Luke Watson doe promises to pay unto the said Samuel Young Two thousand Nine hundred and twelve pounds of Tobacco good and merchantable in Oakes or to give the said George Young two hundred and twenty four pounds of Tobacco for a receipt for the same Sum on the account of Capt. Delaville in witness whereof the said George Young have sett his band this day and yeare above written.

"Signed George Young"
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

"Baptist Newcomb hath this day agreed with the Court to bring & deliver at the Town Landing where the Ship is building Eighty Cyprian logs twenty two foot long each log to contain at least one foot in thickness at the great and besides the Bark to be delivered between this and the twentieth day of the next 8th mo, for which the Court hath obliged the said Newcomb to pay unto the said Baptist or his order the net quantity of 3000 pounds of tobacco to be paid between this & the 25 day of the next 10th month which said timber is for building of a prison & Court House."

December 9, 1684, the court awarded the contract to Baptist Newcomb, "to build ye court-house and prison as is expressed elsewhere for 10,000 pounds of tobacco;" but he was in no hurry to begin the work, and on August 10, 1685, the waried court lost patience and it was:

"Ordered this day by the Court that Baptyst Newcombe be forthwith sent for that he build the prison and court house according to his former undertakings the last winter that he build it forthwith. John Street declaring he is willing to help and sayd Babystye to build the said house and upon the refusal or neglect of his doing the said works that the Sheriffs should have an execution to serve the penalty of the obligation of Baptystye for non performance.

Not even this extreme threat spurred Newcomb up to the discharge of his duty, and on May 3d, 1687, the grand jury tried his hand at coercion by the radical process of presenting the court for not causing a court-house and prison to be made." Then the justices took up another plan of action, in which Newcomb again makes his appearance, and which is explained in the minutes of October 8, 1687:

"It is agreed by this court that whoever subscribe any logs, to be gotten for the use of the prison and court-house, shall bring said logs to the place in the town where it is to be built in forty days from the date hereof, or else forfeit double the value of the said logs. There is to be as follows:

- 94 logs at 5s, 15 foot long, 1 foot over 8 inch thick.
- 16 ditto at 6s, 23 foot long and over 8 inch thick, squared two sides.
- Every person that undertakes to get any is to take 3 short and one long.
- I do undertake to get 20 logs: Wm. Clarke.
- I do undertake 20 logs: Henry Stretchier.
- We do undertake six short and two long: Francis Cowwalt, Morivie Edwards.
- for myself and Justice Gray, 3 long and 15 short: Henry Mielset, Samwll Gray.
- I Baptyst Newcom, do engage myself to find Rafter and Clabors for a prison and cover the said prison, the court binding same, Bapt. Newcom."

After all this delay of more than six years the project was still not executed, as the record of March 10, 1688, bears testimony that court was then being held "at the house of Henry Streitcher, commonly called the court-house." Streitcher was merely the keeper of the village tavern, in one of the rooms of which the court was holding its sessions. Norton Claypoole was then clerk and recorder, and had his office in his own house. On April 30, 1688, he reported to the grand jury that an attempt had been made to burn his office, and the jurymen came to the conclusion that the intention of the incendiaries was to destroy the county records.

Although the county was yet destitute of a court-house it had managed to begin the building of a prison, which on May 3, 1688, was officially viewed by the grand jury under order of court. Samuel Jones had undertaken the construction, but never completed it, for the report of the grand jury of which Luke Wattson was foreman, was that "wee now doe find that this works is not sufficient for a prison."

At the January, August and December terms in 1689, the court was thrice presented by the grand jury "for not having a sufficient prison," and as late as 1709 a similar presentment was made indicating that neither court-house or prison had been built up to that time.

At what time Sussex County actually did obtain a court-house is not be precisely determined. Rev. George Ross wrote in the journal of his tour through Delaware, in 1717, with Governor Wm. Keith, that on August 6th he held services in the court-house at Lewestown, but it is of course possible that he officiated on the tavern premises and that they were still occupied for the sittings of the judiciary.

A building of some character was already in use as a jail and may have had court-house accommodations. Rev. John McKim, who went to Lewes in 1733, derived the tradition from one of the oldest residents of the town that the first court-house was built upon a lot which was part of the property owned by the county, extending from Water to Market or Front Street. This tradition places it opposite the tavern which, when the courts were moved to Georgetown in 1792, was kept and had been kept for many years by Phillips Kollock. The old jail still standing in the centre of Market Street occupies a site corresponding to the legend which Mr. McKim received, and as so much of the contiguous land was public property it is probable enough that the earliest court-house was in the immediate neighborhood. It is indisputable, however, that Sussex County had a court-house in 1735, for the records of that year show that Samuel Paynter was paid fifteen pounds for work upon the building, and this is really the first tangible evidence of the existence of the structure for which the judges had petitioned and planned more than half a century previously.

It did not continue in existence long after Mr. Paynter expended his workmanly skill upon it. At some time between 1740 and 1760, the second court-house was built on the northeast corner of the Episcopal church-yard. It was a frame structure, and sufficed for all the needs of Sussex, so long as Lewes remained the county seat. In 1811, Simmon Marinier occupied it as a tavern, and after he died his widow continued the business until 1817. The building must have fallen into dilapidation, as on January 18, 1833, it was sold for $210.47, and the purchasers demolished it for the sake of the material.

Whatever structure was in use as a jail in Lewes prior to 1729, it had then become inadequate to its purposes, and on November 4th of that year the court allowed £50 "for building a new prison," but evidently nothing was accomplished in that direction, as on February 3, 1735, the Grand Jury reported that "having viewed the prison of the County of Sussex, do say that we find the same insufficient, and far much out of repair."

During this year the prison caught fire but was not destroyed, and the treasurer's report of December, 1735, has the following account; "To Richard Poulteyne for liquor about putting out the fire in the prison, £0 8s. 6d.," and in November, 1736, to Cornelius Wilbank, former sheriff, "on account of the prison being a fire, putting out and watching the same, £1 2s. 6d."

At the November term of 1738, the Grand Jury again reported the insufficiency of the jail, and the court, in concurrence with the jury, ordered that "a goal be built in Lewistown for debtors." The budget of taxes was calculated by Daniel Nunez in that year, and his final entry was of £100 "to be raised for building a goal."

The minutes of the Court for the two succeeding years are missing, but in the public charges made in 1741-42, is an account for work on the prison and for laying the prison hearths.

As the old jail stands now in Market Street, it is a creation of different periods. The most reliable indications are, that the rear section, a roughcast structure only, fifteen by twenty feet in dimensions, was built in part with the appropriation made in 1738, and that within the succeeding quarter of a century the extension, twenty by twenty feet, was made out to Second Street. On November 5, 1777, the court "took into consideration the scanty allowance for prisoners, and upon consideration thereof, ordered that two shillings be allowed each prisoner per diem for subsistence." At the November term in 1780, High Sheriff Rhodes Shankland had another complaint of the same nature to present, and the court allowed for each prisoner daily ten pence in specie during the winter and eight pence during the summer, or the equivalent in the depreciated currency. Twice the county seat was removed to Georgetown. The jail building has passed through many hands and been used for divers purposes. In 1887 it was occupied as a grocery store by Thomas Poynter.

With the decision of the Maryland and Delaware boundary controversy in 1775, which added to Sussex the hundreds of Baltimore, Dagsborough, Broad Creek and Little Creek, arose the agitation for a change of the county seat. Lewes, at the extreme eastern side, was not convenient of access for the great majority of the people of the county, now that its bounds were permanently determined.

Between January 19, 1786 and July 1st of the same year, twenty petitions, signed by nine hundred and seventy-nine inhabitants of Sussex, were presented to the General Assembly, praying that some central location be made the county seat—and the movement effected the passage of the act of January 29, 1791, which provided that George Mitchell, Robert Houston, William Moore, John Collins, Nathaniel Young, William Perry, Rhoda Shankland, Woodman Stockley, Daniel Polk and Thomas Batson act as commissioners, and authorized them to purchase, in fee, for the use of Sussex County, a quantity of land not exceeding a hundred acres, near the center of the county, at the place called James Pettyjohn's old field, or within two miles of the house where Ebenezer Pettyjohn then resided, situate in Broadklin Hundred, for the purpose of building a court-house and prison thereon. The commissioners were authorized to lay out the plot and sell lots, reserving half an acre each for court-house and prison. The court-house was specified to be built of wood, the same size as the old court-house at Lewes; the prison to be built of brick or stone; and when both were completed, the old buildings at Lewes were to be sold. John Gordon, John Ralston, Andrew Barratt, Joseph Barker and Peter Lowber, of Kent County, were appointed to judge of the fitness of the buildings. Annual elections were ordered to be held at the new court-house, when finished, and until that time at the house of James Pettyjohn, in Broadklin Hundred.

The commissioners met at the home of Abraham Harris May 9, 1791, and negotiated the purchase from him of fifty acres, buying also twenty-five acres from Rowland Bevins and one acre from Joshua Pepper. Rhodes Shankland the same day surveyed the purchase, which was named Georgetown, in honor of commissioner George Mitchell, on October 26, 1791, the Legislature passed an act declaring that "all courts (of Sussex County) shall be held at the new court-house, which shall be deemed, held and taken to be the legal court-house of Sussex County, at the place now declared by the name of Georgetown." Shankland platted the town in May, 1792, and reserved the present court-house and jail lots. By act of the General Assembly of June 14, 1793, the whipping-post and pillory were removed from Lewes to the new town. A jail was erected at once, and in 1798, on the recommendation of a committee, appointed by the Levy Court, a brick addition, sixteen by eighteen feet, and two stories high, was made by Kendall Batson, superintendent and contractor. This jail stood on the site at the corner of Market Street and Cherry Alley, now occupied by Hazel's drug-store, and was demolished in 1854. It contained three cells on each of its two floors, one of the upper dungeons being specified for the imprisonment of delinquent debtors. The citizens contributed much of the money for the erection of the court-house and jail, and on February 7, 1795, the Legislature passed a bill to raise by lottery a sum not exceeding three thousand five hundred dollars to reimburse them.

In March, 1834, the Levy Court advertised for plans and proposals for a new jail, and on April 18th adopted the plan submitted by Joshua S. Layton. It called for a brick structure, forty by forty-two feet, and two stories elevation. Spencer Philips, James Redden and Benaiah Watson were appointed to supervise the work, and let the contract to Mr. Layton and Caleb B. Sipple for ten thousand dollars. The jail was completed within a year, and was burned to the ground November 10, 1865. In the next year the present jail was built on the same location.

The original court-house was completed in 1792 or 1798, as it is mentioned in an act of 1798, and in 1797 was repaired by order of the Levy Court. It stood on the corner of Market Street and the square until the summer of 1837, when it was removed to its present location on Bedford Street. In 1835 a popular demand for a more modern and commodious building made itself felt, and on February 13, the General Assembly authorized a lottery to raise not more than twenty-five thousand dollars for the erection of a court-house and fire-proof public building. Wm. D. Waples, Philip Short and Robert H. Griffith were appointed trustees of the lottery, and a supplementary act of February, 1837, named Mr. Waples, in conjunction with George R. Fisher and David Hazzard, as building commissioners. They met on March 7th, and after deciding that the new structure should be placed on the court-house lot, sold the old arm a piece of red cloth inscribed in black the letters P. s. This section was repealed by an Act of February 3, 1802. The Act of 1791, named as trustees for Sussex County, George Mitchell, Barclay Townsend, William Owens, Jacob Townsend, John Ingram, Rhodes Shankland, William Lockwood, Robert Houston, Woodman Stockley and John Hooper. Their successors were to be appointed by the Levy Court. On the 5th of December, 1793, the trustees purchased of John Stephen Hill, four hundred acres of land, a tract called "Springfield" lying on White Creek, in Baltimore Hundred, which was by Maryland, patented April 9, 1884, to William Whittington, and by numerous changes came to John S. Hill. The tradition is that a house for the poor existed in Dagsborough Hundred before one was established in Baltimore Hundred, and that the former house was burned. It is quite likely this is true, for the record of the Alms House begins June 1, 1791, and John Anderson, as overseer, makes a report from that time to June, 1792. The first house was probably rented, as there is no record of title having been acquired until 1793. This land in Baltimore Hundred was kept and used until an exchange was made December 30, 1800, with Warren Jefferson, for four hundred and one acres of land in Broadkill Hundred, (now Georgetown Hundred), which is the present almshouse property. The title was not fully perfected until November 23, 1809. This property was originally taken up on a warrant dated May 28, 1759, by Richard Jefferson, and was described as lying on the head of Kinney's Branch and Tuscok's Branch, of Indian River. Tuscok's Branch still retains the name, and Kinney's was early enlarged and called the "Poor House Ditch," and afterwards "Wall's Ditch." On this tract was a dwelling built about 1766, which was at once fitted up for the almshouse, and used as such until taken down in the spring of 1877. It stood in the open space west of the superintendent's residence, which was erected in 1874, at a cost of seven thousand dollars. An old building, formerly used for the insane, and now for the worst cases of pauperism, in 1879 was moved to where it now stands, and east of it was erected in 1878 the present building for the insane, at a cost of seven thousand dollars. The house for colored people was erected in 1856, and has since been enlarged. The buildings for men and women were erected respectively in 1884 and 1885, at a cost of five thousand dollars. The farm has been enlarged and decreased by purchase and sale at various times, and at present contains three hundred and sixty-five acres.

The superintendents as far as can be ascertained have been, John Anderson, 1791; Thomas Rodney, 1802; Job Jefferson, 1805; Darby Collins, Brikkloe Ewing, Zetub Hazzard, 1824; Jacob Morris, Dogworthy Derrickson, 1840; Joshua Burton, 1842; Abram Morrell, 1846; Edward Short, 1848; Peter Morton, 1856; Edward Short, 1865; John Steckley, 1874; David Lord, 1884; and Hiram S. Short, the incumbent in January, 1887.

SUSSEX COUNTY COURT HOUSE, GEORGETOWN, DEL.

Edifice. For the next two years court was held in Burton C. Barker's hotel on the square, and in the fall of 1839 the first term was held in the new building, which has since been continuously occupied. It is of brick, two stories high, with the public offices on the ground floor and the court-room above. It was built entirely out of the proceeds of the lottery, which realized fifteen thousand dollars, and on March 5, 1840, the Levy Court adopted resolutions complimenting the commissioners on the discharge of their duties, and congratulating the people of Sussex that the work had cost them nothing.

ALMSHOUSE.—Laws had been enacted for the relief of the poor very early in the history of the colony, but it was not until the Act of January 29, 1791, that trustees were appointed and authority given to counties to hold bonds, erect buildings, and otherwise transact business in a corporate capacity. Section 28 of that Act, provided that the paupers of Sussex County should wear upon the left

Levy Court.—The account of the organization of the Levy Court will be found in the Civil List of New Castle under the head of the Levy Court. The act of June 14, 1798, provided for the election of commissioners to compose the Levy Court as at present and designated. Ten for Sussex, one for each Hundred.

The early records, from the organization until 1798, are not found. A list of commissioners in that year, and also in 1809, are given, and from that time continuously as elected, the term extending three years.

CHAPTER LXVI.

LEWES AND REHOBOTH HUNDRED.

This hundred borders on Delaware Bay and the Atlantic Ocean, and partakes of the characteristics of this indented coast. It is irregular in shape, and is one of the smallest hundreds in the county in territory. On the south and west are Rehoboth Bay and Indian River Hundred; and on the north is Broadkill Hundred, giving it an area of about six by ten miles. The most of the surface is level and along the arms of Rehoboth Bay is of a marshy nature. In this locality the ocean's strand is high, affording a fine beach for bathing, and making it popular as a resort. Rehoboth Bay is a large, beautiful sheet of water, full of fish and visited by vast flocks of wild fowl. On some of its shores oysters were found as early as 1662. Newbold's Lake and Gordon's Pond are fresh water bodies, whose size has been decreasing on account of the draining sands, which have been slowly filling them up. The same action has been lessening the size of the streams of hundred, the largest of which is Lewes Creek. This was first known as the Hoern Kill, later the Hare Kill, and took its present name from the town located on its banks. It is about ten miles long and flows parallel with the ocean and Delaware Bay, and about one mile from it. It is subject to tidal influences and its channel into the bay has been several times shifted. Cape Henlopen lies to the northeast of this stream, and has been widening at the rate of several yards each year. Originally it was covered with a growth of pines and cedars, but is now almost destitute of trees, and in many places of vegetation, presenting the appearance of a sandy waste. In other parts, a good quality of marsh-grass grows luxuriantly, affording splendid pasturages. Beyond the cape the soil is generally an admixture of sand and clay, capable of producing a variety of products, and under good treatment yields well. The presence of clay enables the hundred to have the best roads in the county.

The country has been well cleared up, although some very fine forests of oaks remain, and most of the farms are large. Having been long under cultivation, some lands have become exhausted, but in recent years many acres have been reclaimed by systematic tillage, and some highly improved farms may be found.

Along the sea-shore, on the salt lands, shallow wells have been dug and the water gathering into them has been evaporated in rude salt-works, put up in that locality. In the War of 1812 salt was made on the flats beyond Henlopen Light-house, and was sold at $3.00 per bushel. Some of the buildings used were afterwards occupied by Thos. Norman, and were swept away in a great flood, which is still remembered as "Norman's Flood" by some of the old citizens of Lewes. Through the heroic courage of the Lewes pilots, the Norman family were rescued from their perilous position. The earliest account of titles to the lands of this section, and their settlement, outside of the trading posts established at Lewes, is given in the following report:

The directors of the City-Colony in New Netherland to Peter Stuyvesant, June 7, 1658. Since our last, of the 20th of last month, sent by the ship "De Nieuwman," of which we have a copy, the desirable Commissionerns for the management of the City-Colony in New Netherland have informed us that their noble worship, the Lords Burgomasters, were desirous of acquiring the country, situated on the bay of the South River, on its western side (where for the safety of incoming ships some buoys ought to be placed as danger-signals) and called the Hoekkill. They request us, therefore, that the aforesaid tract of land, from Cape Henlopen to the Bostwoude Hoekkill should be turned over to their orders and then be conveyed to their director, as they intend to place there a suitable fortification for the protection of those places. As we have thought that this will be of advantage to the company and their possessions, we have resolved to order and direct your Honors hereby to aforesaid country immediately and without delay, and to purchase it from the lawful owners if it should not have been done before, under properly executed deeds, and then to convey it there to the director of the said Colony. No time is to be lost herein, but speed is necessary in order to anticipate thereby other nations, especially our English neighbors, whom we suspect of having cast their eyes upon these places, for we have heard, that lately two boats with English people from Virginia have been at the Cape Henlopen; they stranded there however, and the men taken prisoners by the savages, but were released again by the said Director Achilles, as they pretended to be fugitives, perhaps to save their governor from the suspicion that he had any knowledge of it. As we understand that the said Director Achilles has consented to the coming over from there of some English families and as we cannot expect anything good from this nation, considering their unscrupulous proceedings in the past (not only their invasion of our indisputable territories and possessions at the north, but also the arrogant audacity and falsehood of those even who are under our jurisdiction and allegiance) we cannot omit to recommend hereby to our Honors most earnestly, not only to inform yourselves thoroughly of the number of English families arrived there, but also to communicate in a friendly way to the said Director Achilles, the dangerous consequences of the affair agreeably to the enclosed extract of our resolutions, and then to report to us in regard to the one, and the other, so that we may know what occurs in this direction, from time to time, and may do which we deem necessary.

This matter having been brought to the attention of Director Achilles, he communicated with Governor Stuyvesant, November 10, 1658, as follows:

On the resolution or contract made with each other and agreed to by the Lords Directors and the City, in regard to the territory on the Hoekkill, to add the same to this Colony, whereas the Lords-Principals repeatedly gave notice as well as to your Honor's company, as to the American, to purchase the aforesaid land with the other person, who was to be qualified thereto from this side (be he Mr. Hingone), I have instructed the two respective commissioners about it, to begin the journey thither and make a calculation, what they would
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

.. The latter place to be fortified doubtless had reference to the Horekill region, where a small fort was again built for the West India Company, and a trading post maintained in its interests after 1661.

One of the first tracts in the hundred for which a warrant was issued was "Tower Hill," on Pagan Creek. It was granted November 25, 1676, by Governor Andros to Derrick Brown. This is a choice location, and belonged to Harbeson Hickman in 1887.

The same authority, September 29, 1677, granted a tract of four hundred acres, called "Sun Dial," to James Weels. It was "located at a beaver dam proceeding from Lewes Creek." On the 8th of November, the same year, William Tom, by deed and assignment made to Luke Watson, for five thousand pounds of tobacco, conveyed a certain patent from Governor Andros for one hundred and thirty-two acres of land lying on the Horekill.

A warrant was issued to Arthur Clements, March 25, 1686, for fifteen hundred and twenty acres "on Pointeetner's Creek, which flows into Lewes Creek."

"West Chester," a tract of nine hundred acres, on the northeast side of Love's Creek, was deeded to John Crew by Francis Cook, September 3, 1700; and on the 4th of March, the same year, Peter Lewis deeded "Middleborough," four hundred and forty acres, near the town of Lewes, to Jacob Klockho. This tract had been deeded to Alexander Moleston, who had also deeded five hundred acres on the head of Love Creek to Thomas Fisher, son of John, on the 8th of January, 1696. In 1702 William Fitchner conveyed to "Richard Payner, inn-keeper, of Lewes, his mansion, land and plantation, three hundred and sixty-six acres, bounding on King's Creek, from ye mouth, fronzing upon ye bey, to ye head, part of a large tract called 'Peach Blossom.'"

The John Fisher above mentioned came from England in 1682, and settled on the Horekill tract. He had besides the son, Thomas, another son, named John, and from the latter has descended Judge John Fisher. The wife of the first John Fisher, after his death, married Dr. Thomas Wynne, who came to Lewes in 1685, and two years later bought the one hundred and thirty-two acres of land previously sold to Luke Watson.

Francis Wolfe obtained a patent for fifteen hundred acres on the 'Pot Hooks,' now called Wolfe's Creek, a branch of Lewes Creek, on which he built a substantial farm-house. His descendants have all been quiet, unobtrusive, but intellectual men, and the successive generations have been those of Reece, William, John, Daniel and Reece, whose descendants have become well known in this part of Sussex County.

The general settlement of the hundred is shown in the following list of taxable in 1785:

HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

branch formerly called Bundick's, on which to build a water-mill. The court granted the request, on condition that he would "build the mill within fifteen months and to attend and mind the same and grind the grain well and in due course as it is brought thither without respect of persons, at the eighth part toll for wheat and the sixth part toll for Indian corn." The only mill successfully operated in the hundred, in 1887, was the small grist-mill of Benjamin Burton, at the head of Love Creek, where a mill has been maintained for more than a century and a half; and near Midway, Benjamin Carmine was operating a steam saw-mill, which was cutting the fine pine of that section into lumber. In other parts of the hundred such mills performed useful service until the timber supply was exhausted.

The improvement of Lewes Creek was projected at an early day, the purpose being to unite its waters with those of Rehoboth Bay. To carry out such a measure the Legislature incorporated a company, January 14, 1803, with an authorized capital of ten thousand dollars, and named James P. Wilson, of Lewes; Thomas Marsh and Daniel Wolfe, of Rehoboth; William Shankland, of Indian River; and Samuel Paynter, Jr., of Broad Kila, managers. While this project was not executed, the plan has not been wholly abandoned, such a canal being deemed feasible at the present time and its construction is still urged in the interests of coast navigation.

Outside of Lewes, but few business places have been established in the hundred. In connection with the former, some trade was transacted at Quaker-town, two miles from Lewes, which was a hamlet of fifteen families as long ago as 1726. A public-house was there kept, the militia trained at that place, and the elections were also held there. Near where was built the residence of Gideon Prettyman stood the pillory and whipping post, which were used as long as the courts were held at Lewes. In later years this place became known as Prettymanville, in compliment to that family. In 1887, stores were kept by Wm. Prettyman and A. Cord, and there were also a few mechanico's shops.

Beyond this place and nearer Bundick's Branch, Dr. Joseph Marsh lived as a physician, in the early part of the present century. Dr. Erasmus Marsh succeeded as a practitioner and, in 1887, Dr. Joseph W. Marsh was there professionally engaged.

At Nassau, a station on the Junction and Breakwater Railroad, which was completed through the hundred to Lewes in 1869, are a few houses, a Methodist parsonage, a store, kept by Paynter & Marsh, and a small fruit evaporating establishment, operated since 1852 by the Reynolds Bros. The postmaster was Theodore W. Marsh, who succeeded Samuel C. Paynter. The first store was kept by James Lank.

On the highway from Lewes to Rehoboth, and at almost equal distances between those places, is the hamlet of Midway. It consists of half a dozen residences, a store, mechanic's shops and, in the immediate neighborhood, a Presbyterian Church. A post-office, with the name of Midway, was established in 1864, with E. L. Warrington as postmaster. The mercantile business he is carrying on was established by Wm. F. Thompson. As the surrounding country is rich, the hamlet has become a brisk trading centre.

REHOBOTH BEACH AND CITY.—The surroundings and natural advantages of Rehoboth Beach, for a summer resort, were recognized many years ago, but the difficulty of reaching the locality prevented extensive improvements, until within a recent period. In 1855 the Legislature incorporated the “Rehoboth Hotel Company” and granted the use of five acres of land, belonging to the State, lying between the land of Robert West and the Indian River Inlet, on condition that the hotel should be erected in five years. As this was not done, the charter was renewed, March 22, 1875, under the name of the “Sussex Hotel Co.,” of Rehoboth City. The latter plan was located in 1869, on a tract of land at the head of Rehoboth Bay, purchased of Robert West. The following year Louis Tredenick came to this projected town and opened a small place of entertainment, which, in an enlarged condition, has since been continued by him as the Rehoboth City Hotel. On the lands plotted for this “City,” another summer hotel, the Douglas House, having sixty rooms for guests, was erected in 1877, by William C. Fountain, and, in 1887, was owned by Emory Scotten. A few fine cottages have also been built on the lots plotted for city purposes.

A mile higher up the ocean strand is Rehoboth Beach, one of the finest seaside resorts on the central Atlantic coast. Under the auspices of the Rehoboth Association, incorporated March 15, 1871, a tract of land, embracing several hundred acres, lying above the Rehoboth City property, was purchased of Lorenzo D. Martin, in 1872, for the purpose of establishing a resort with religious influences, and to hold in connection a yearly camp-meeting. This location was well platted with wide avenues, streets, parks and spacious lots, and the situation being exceedingly fine, a large number of lots were readily sold at fifty dollars each. In 1873 two summer hotels—the “Bright” and the “Surf”—and several fine cottages were erected, and many guests were attracted to the beach. On the 27th of January, that year, the name of the association was changed by legislative enactment to the “Rehoboth Beach Camp-Meeting Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church.” Camp-meeting grounds were now established in the beautiful grove, half a mile from the beach, and the annual meetings there held became occasions of great interest. This feeling encouraged the association to make yet more extensive and substantial improvements on the beach, and a large number of cottages were erected by the lot-owners. On July 2, 1878, an extension of the railroad was completed to the camp-meeting grounds, which enabled many excursionists to visit the beach; and the number of permanent guests was also increased. In February, 1879, the charter of the association was again changed, the title becoming the “Rehoboth Beach Association,” and in 1881 the camp-meeting feature was discontinued, but the grounds have since been used for other gatherings. In 1884 the railroad was extended down the main avenue of the town to the beach, and a depot was established in a central location. About this time the beach was also improved, a boardwalk, eight feet wide and one and a quarter miles long, being built at a safe distance from the wash of the highest tides. The beach is about two hundred feet wide, firm and smooth, and owing to its regularity is deemed very safe. But one case of drowning is reported, that of John Frank, August 14, 1887.

For the accommodation of visitors several large hotels have been erected on the beach, and one of them, the “Surf House,” was destroyed by fire August 22, 1879, only the list of life. Near its site the “Hotel Henlopen” was erected by a company, which had among its members J. E. Hooper, George R. Johnson, George McCullough and others. It cost more than twenty thousand dollars and contains about seventy-five rooms. Dr. J. M. Thompson has charge of the “Hotel Henlopen,” and Walter Burton the “Bright House.” The “Bright House” was also enlarged and well furnished. In 1887 it contained eighty sleeping-rooms. It was the property of William Bright, who was also the president of the “Beach Association.” Additional accommodations were afforded by the “Douglas House,” several large boarding-houses and there were about forty cottages. Ten of the latter were occupied the entire year. J. R. Dick was the superintendent of the affairs of the association. Among the public improvements here projected is an iron pier into the ocean, to enable steamers of light draught to effect a landing. The Atlantic beach in this vicinity has several life-saving stations; No. 1, south of Cape Henlopen Light, having been established in 1875 and is in charge of Captain Theodore Solomon. The Indian River Inlet Station was established the same year and placed in command of Captain Washington Vickers. The station at Rehoboth City, in charge of Captain Thomas Truxton, was established in 1879.

Rehoboth Beach post-office was established in 1873 with Dr. Wm. Dawson as postmaster. He also had a drug-store, which was the first mercantile house on the beach. M. D. Lamborn had the next store, on Rehoboth Avenue. In 1887 Mrs. J. Messick owned the store and was in charge of the post-office, which had a daily mail.

Scott's Chapel is a neat Gothic structure, which was built in the spring of 1880 under the direction of James E. Hooper, assisted by the general community. It was dedicated by Bishop Scott, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was named for him. It was designed as an unsectarian place of worship and has been stately occupied by various denominations.

Religious Societies.—The early history of the oldest religious organization in the hundred has not be preserved, but from a contemporary account, it appears that the Presbyterian Church of Cool Spring was organized many years before the time usually given—1734 to 1737. It is not improbable that the congregation may have been formed as early as 1700, as a number of Presbyterian families lived in that locality at that time. To accommodate these with a place of worship, a central location was selected, situated in the forest, near a good spring of water. For this lot a warrant for a survey was issued, by the proprietaries in Pennsylvania, August 22, 1737, which directed that “four acres and one hundred and fifty-five feet, in a lot of ten acres, be surveyed for James Martin and a few other members of the Presbyterian congregation, to include the meeting-house and graveyard thereon, located on the southeast side of Cool Spring, and on the west side of the county road, being nearly seven miles distant from the town of Lewes.” This survey was made September 29, 1737, by Deputy-Surveyor, W. Shankland.

In 1734 the congregation formed a parish with Lewes, Rev. Josiah Martin being the minister, and his successors at Lewes, subsequently, also preached here. In 1738 the church became a part of the corporation of “the United Presbyterian Congregation of Lewes, Cool Spring and Indian River,” and for many years retained that connection. Prior to 1805 there were ordained as ruling elders at Cool Spring, under this arrangement: Archibald Hopkins, Manlove Russell, Robert Coulter, David Stephenson, William Virden, Josiah Martin, David Mustard, John Stephenson and William Peery.

In 1810 the congregation had a larger membership than either of the other churches, and for many years was strong in numbers and influence. In 1887, however, there were but forty members and the church had no regular pastor.

The present house of worship, a substantial frame, is the third building which was erected on this lot, and was dedicated January 14, 1856. It replaced an old church, painted red, which stood with its side towards the street, and had two doors to enter. A gallery was built at each end, and it was in other arrangements like the churches of the olden times. When the present house was occupied, the congregation had as trustees James F. Martin, David M. Richards and Peter J. Hopkins. At the same time the ruling elders were Elisha D. Cullen, David M. Richards, Benjamin White, Peter J. Hopkins, Aaron Marshall, James F. Martin and David J. Ennis.

There were eighty white and two colored members and Rev. Cornelius H. Mustard was the pastor. He acceptably served in that relation until the spring of 1869, when failing health obliged him to leave a people he loved so well, and where he had received his spiritual nurture while a youth. Other ministers

1 In his report to the Missionary Society of London, October, 11, 1738, the Rev. Wm. Beckett, of the Episcopal Church, said—"The Presbyterians have two Churches in Sussex County—one at Cool Spring and the other at Lewes," etc. There were at that time six hundred Presbyterian (old and young) in the county.

from this church were the Revs. Samuel M. Perry and David Coulter. Since Rev. Mr. Mustard's pastorat, the ministers officiating regularly at Cool Spring have been the following: 1870, Rev. G. N. Kennedy; 1874, Rev. J. Bailey Adams; 1882, Rev. E. A. Snook; 1886, Rev. Benjamin Crosby.

In 1887 the ruling elders were Benjamin White, D. J. Ennis, James M. Martin and Thomas J. Perry. The latter was also clerk of the sessions.

Among the interments noted in the cemetery at Cool Spring (which is a large yard well inclosed), were those of James McIvain, died 1754, aged sixty-one years; Robert Torbert, died 1752, aged fifty-seven years; James Hergus, died 1798, aged forty-seven years; William Perry, Esq., died 1800; Rev. Joseph Copus, died 1822, aged fifty-seven years; David M. Richards, died 1856, aged forty-seven years; Wm. V. Coulter, died 1875, aged seventy-eight years; D. Mustard, died 1858, aged sixty-five years; Josiah Martin, died 1842, aged seventy-three years; James Martin, died 1846, aged seventy-three years; Gideon Fenwick, died 1858, aged seventy-one years; Robert Hunter, died 1836, aged sixty-eight years.

Rehoboth Presbyterian Church was erected in 1855, as a chapel to be used in connection with the church at Lewes, thus serving as a preaching station. Those most instrumental in building it were Thomas Walker, Joseph Dodd, John Futter and John Hood. Since that time it has been repaired, and was, in 1887, a frame edifice of respectable appearance, about thirty by forty feet in size. It is pleasantly located, on the highway to Rehoboth Beach, near the hamlet of Midway.

The congregation occupying this church became a separate body May 17, 1876, when a number of members withdrew from the Lewes Church for that purpose, and others united with them, there being a total membership of seventy-five persons at the time of organization. Thomas Walker and John M. Futter were elected the first ruling elders. Since that time William A. Dodd and Captain Edward S. Tunnel were elected to the same office.

The congregation was first supplied with preaching by Rev. Daniel Tenney, and Rev. W. W. Reese became the first pastor. He was succeeded by Rev. E. A. Snook, who was the pastor until 1884, since which time the pulpit has again been filled by supplies.

In 1887 the church property was valued at one thousand eight hundred dollars, and the trustees were William A. Dodd, Thomas Walker, John N. Hood, John M. Futter, Hiram C. Fisher, Charles K. Warrington, William P. Thompson, Henry P. Wells and Rhoads Thompson.

Church until its decay. The present church was built in the southern part of the hundred, on half an acre of land secured from the farm of Mrs. Abbie Marsh, and was dedicated January 4, 1858. It is a frame, thirty-six by forty feet, and has a gallery which increases the sittings of the church. Repairs in 1886 have made it more comfortable and inviting. In 1887 the controlling board of trustees was composed of J. C. Collins, Joseph T. Futchor, Daniel Wolfe, E. L. Warrington, William D. Wilson, John C. Wilson and Levin A. Donovan.

Until 1880 the ministers of the church were the same as those who preached at Lewes. That year Nassau Circuit was formed to embrace this church, Connelly's and White's Chapel, in Indian River Hundred, and Zion's Church, in Broad Kiln, and the ministers have been Revs. James Carroll, John Warthman, I. N. Foreman and E. Davis. The circuit owns a parsonage at Nassau Station.

In the hundred there are also three churches, used as places of worship by people of color, namely, "Little Israel," built for mulatto people, which was burned down about 1858, rebuilt and since repaired; "Little Wesley," built for the African Methodists many years ago, and becoming unfit for further use a new house was built in 1873; and "Little's Chapel," near Rehoboth Beach, which was built in 1888. These houses are small, but have been found useful factors in promoting the moral training of those who occupy them. At most of the foregoing churches small grave-yards have been maintained.

The Town of Lewes.—This ancient town is located on an elevated tract of land on Lewes Creek, 1 overlooking the mouth of Delaware Bay, and about one mile from it. Cape Henlopen is a little more than that distance from the lower end of the town, extending into the Atlantic Ocean as a sandy waste. Above it, and northeast from Lewes Creek, are the marsh commons, forming a small peninsula. West from the creek, which was a fine, deep stream two centuries ago, is a belt of well-drained, fertile lands, whose advantages for settlement were recognized by the first voyagers on the Delaware. With the Indians this was also favorite ground, and there have been unmistakable evidences that an aboriginal village was located on the site of Lewes. East from the railway station a burial-place was discovered, while the road was being cut through the small hill in that locality, and many skeletons were exhumed. These indicated that a people of large size and wonderful power had once lived here, and had passed away in a period so remote that not even a traditionary account of them has been preserved.

The occupancy of this section by the whites dates from 1622. In that year some Dutch traders came and carried on a good business with the neighboring tribes of Indians. In 1631 De Vries settled thirty persons on the creek, which he called the "Hoorn Kill," after his native place in Holland, and for their protection built a small fort or house, surrounded by a palisade of logs, which stood on the bank of the creek, which was at that time a deep and rapidly-flowing stream, and the marshes were covered with fine forests, in which game was abundantly found. Through some offense the settlers incurred the hostility of the Indians, who wreaked summary vengeance on them by killing the entire colony and destroying every vestige of the improvements they had made. When De Vries next visited this locality, in 1638, not "a trace of the fort could be found." The next settlement was founded in 1638 by the Swedes and Finns under Peter Minuett, who landed at the high ridge of land on the then lower part of Lewes Creek, which, from its attractive appearance, he called Paradise Point. It is believed that a few settlers of that nationality here permanently located, at that time, and were soon after joined by Dutch traders, who again commenced bartering with the Indians of this region. Through their influence the Horekill section was purchased of the Indians by the West India Company in 1658. Two years later the English laid claim to the country, basing their demand on its discovery by Hudson, in 1609. To better maintain its claims, the West India Company erected a fort at Paradise Point (now the lower fort of Pilot Town), but in 1664 this fort and the contiguous country was yielded to the English, who kept up the trading post. There were only a few houses and small farms, but the place was deemed of sufficient importance to keep a "customs man" residing there. In 1673 this country again fell into the hands of the Dutch, who now established a court at Lewes. The English recaptured the place in 1674, and continued the court, trading post and customs man. Six years later the Horekill country was divided, what is now Sussex County being called Deale. In 1682 the Duke of York deeded to William Penn all the Delaware country south to Cape Henlopen, when the present names of the county and town were adopted or confirmed by Penn's official sanction. 2

The first deed for land in the lower part of the State was for a tract at Lewes, and was granted July 2, 1672, by Governor Francis Lovelace to Hermanus Frederick Wiltbank for "all that piece of land at the Horekill, signed and called 'Lewes' in Delaware Bay. Bounded on the south side with a marked Pine and the land of William Clason, on the N. W. to ye lands of the heirs of Jean Jardyne, a Frenchman, containing in breadth 114 rods (each rod being eleven English feet), stretching N. E. and S. W. into the woods to ye hindermost Kill, which piece of land is called ye 'West India fort.' " Wiltbank assigned this land to Norton Claypool and from that family it passed to Samuel Rowland November 12, 1703.

ware country, a new interest in its settlement was awakened and there seems to have been an especial purpose to make Lewes a merchant port.

The court was instructed to grant titles to lots upon certain conditions, the fulfillment of which implied the building of a house of stated dimensions thereon; on failing to pay, a fine was imposed of five pounds and the forfeiture of the lot. On this basis lots were granted at the November, 1682, term of court to Cornelius Pluckhoy, who already owned a house; to John Kiphaven, also the owner of a house, to William Durvall, who lived at Lewes at that time, to William Carter, adjoining the land of Nathaniel Walker; to William Trotter, next to Carter's; to John Hill, “the lot on the southwest of the blind man's house,” to John Bellamy, a “lot adjoining the old brick yard,” to John Beverly, “the lot on which he is building a vessel on,” to Hermanus Wiltbank, the lot adjoining his farm; to Henry Jones, adjoining Wiltbank; to Robert Williams, the one next to Henry Jones; and to Edward Warner, for three hundred acres of land “near by the town.”

In 1683, John Brown, a ship-builder, petitioned the court “for a lot at Lewes on which he might build a sloop or shallop as the one he now occupies is not fit.” The same year William Beverley was sued by Hermanus Wiltbank, “for neglect of his work in building the vessel.” The records of this year show that tobacco was largely raised and used in payment of nearly everything purchased.

In the next few years following, many titles for lots in Lewes were granted by the Court, and there was considerable accession to the population. Among these new citizens were some who established small industries in the mechanic trades. In 1685, Arthur Starr petitioned for two lots on which to erect his tannery, the Court having previously refused to grant him an acre near Block House Pond. Transfers of property are recorded as early as 1692, when Captain Thomas Pemberton, as attorney, conveyed to Peter Davis, a lot of land and a brick house. March 4, 1696, Robert Cade, conveyed two lots on Second Street, and those running back to Pagan Creek to John Paynter, and on the same day a like number of lots, in the same locality, to Richard Paynter. On the 1st of June, 1696, Peter Lewis conveyed to Jacob Kollock a lot on Second Street, on which was a brick house, which had previously been owned by William Carter, bricklayer. June 6, 1699, William Dyre, conveyed to Thomas Fenwick ninety-six acres of land, fronting on Lewes Creek and sixty feet back of the same for a street, adjoining the uppermost part of Lewes.

Among the important transfers after 1700, were in 1704, Samuel Preston to William Shankland, a tract of land called “St. Martins,” four hundred acres on Pagan Creek. Through this land was afterwards located the well-known “Shankland's Lane.” In 1707, Thomas England bought a house and lot on Front Street, which was located between the properties of Richard Williams and Cornelius Wiltbank. The same year Walton Huling, bought a house on Second Street, which adjoined the land of Jonathan Bagley. The latter also owned land on Paradise Point, which remained in his family many years. One of his daughters married Jacob Art, a pilot, who was one of a number in that vocation who settled there and from which circumstance that part of Lewes, became known as “Pilot Town.” On this tract of land is the oldest burial-ground in this part of the State, being already spoken of in 1687, as the “Ancient” ground. This street for many years, was the favorite home of pilots and in 1816, lots were owned on it by William Art, Charles M. Callen, Jacob Connell, George Hickman, David Johnson, John Maul, William Russell and Thomas Rowland.

In order that the growth of Lewes might be still more rapidly advanced, the court made that matter a subject for consideration June 25, 1689, as follows:

“The Court, considering what few inhabitants there is in the town of Lewes, and being willing to encourage people to live in the said Town, and to seat and improve the back parts of the said Town, are willing Lewes, when the lots have been actually granted, and for the clearing the said Town will be convenient and beneficial is bring a road to the front of the said Town, they do Order that whoever shall take up any back lots shall not suffer any Trees or Trees to grow thereon to the height of twenty feet, and whoever plants any fruit Trees or other Trees thereon shall not plant them nearer than forty feet asunder, and keep their Lots continually clear of brush or other weed and also to keep the streets after their Lots clear of all brush, and all the trees in the streets to be grubbed up, the said back Lots to be survey Lots, with a square of four acres in the middle of the town, for any public use or uses that the Court shall think fitting; the pond on the back side of Arthur Starrs to be drained and remain for commons to cross down the valley, the where the Ship is building into the river of Lewes, and that he that builds and cleans first shall have the first Lots next the town.”

Some improvements were now made in that part of the town, but an obstacle to its general settlement was found in the small marsh near Second Street, accordingly on the 6th of March, 1694, the court granted

“Liberty for a Ditch to be cut through the most convenient Place in the Town of Lewes into the Creek for the conveyance of Draying of the Nevarah on ye back part next the second street lots, and order that ye vacant ground that lies between the lot of Nehemiah Fland and the foremen lot of Captain Pemberton, adjoining Richard Holloway, to be reserved for a Market-place; and the vacant piece of Land next adjoining, on the southwest side of John Miles, his lot to ye Block House Road and ye Block House field, and that to be used as a common burying-ground.”

The vague manner in which some of the decrees of the court were formulated, especially as they applied to streets and public places, led to controversies at an early period in the history of Lewes, and which were brought to the attention of the court, September 5, 1694, when it decreed that

“Whereas, There hath been some differences and Disputes about Bounds of the Town of Lewes. It is ordered by the Court to present farther such like. That ye shall, and the Surveyor, with suitable assistance, doe forth with Run out ye side lines that Run along by ye Land of Abraham and Isaac Wiltbanks, and ye land of John Williams, and ye other side line that runs along ye land of William Dyre.”

The irregularity in the streets and public grounds was also the subject of much complaint, and, in 1704, a re-survey of the lots and streets was ordered, according to the plan when the town was laid out, and which plan had not been preserved. But such a survey was not made until nearly twenty years later when the court was again petitioned by the principal citizens to fix the corners of the streets so that the matter might be set at rest. The court answered this request by directing that Robert Shankland, in connection with other commissioners, namely, Rev. William Beckett, Archibald Smith, Simon Kollock, John Jacobs, Edward Dawes, Richard Herman and John Rhoades, should make a re-survey upon such information as they could obtain from old citizens and contemporary records.

A preliminary survey was made in August, 1722, concerning which Shankland made this memoranda

"of several Bounds and Stations or places of Beginning of some of the streets of Lewistown that were yet known by some of the Anceint & Primitive men of Lewistown (to wit): Mr. Jacob Kollock, Sr., Mr. Philip Russell, Mr. John Miera and Capt. Jonathan Bailey (that is), that ye old Brick chimney of Jacob Kollock's House set on the northwest side of the street, and that the head or Corner of the House of Joseph Royal, that did belong unto William Orr was set on the southeast corner of ye Market St.; also that Mr. Russell's old house was set on the southwest corner of the Back Street at the corner of Mulberry Street at ye corner—those are all boundaries of the Town that were showed me by the Persons above mentioned at my first surveying of the Town as witness my hand this—day of August, 1722.

"ROBERT SHANKLAND."

The report of the survey of Shankland was made to the court May 4, 1728, and throws some light upon the early history of Lewes.

He stated "the town was originally called Deale, in the county of Deale, on the southwest side of Lewes Creek, for many years called Hore Kill Creek."

"That the land of the town was first taken up or claimed by Dywret Peters, and adjointed the lands of Koophaven or Dyer 1 and those of Hermanus Wililamk, with the creek and the pond on the other sides, &c., &c."

The commissioners located the corners of the streets and decided that the original purpose was to have four principal streets, to be known by the names of Front, Market, Ship-carpenter and Mulberry, and as many cross-streets, which were to be numerically designated. All the streets were to be kept sixty feet wide.

With the exception of an occasional decree from the court, relating to minor affairs, there were no special orders in regard to Lewes until 1794, when the Legislature passed an act again ordering the streets to be surveyed and imposing a penalty for appropriating or obstructing them.

Like all ancient towns, Lewes had its market, and regulations were frequently made for it. A clerk was stately appointed after 1700, but seventy years later all acts pertaining to it were repealed. The market was kept in the rear of the small brick jail which was used by Sussex County until 1792, when the county-seat was removed to Georgetown. This building, as an enlarged store-house, is still standing, but the county court-house, built about 1790, which stood in the cemetery of St. Peter's Church, was taken down in 1838.

At the foot of the market-place a bridge was authorized to be erected by an act of the Legislature, November 6, 1773, which named John Rodney, Henry Fisher and Henry Neil as commissioners. They were "to build and erect a bridge and causeway over the creek at Lewistown, formerly called the Hore Kill, to begin at or near the place where the Fort in the said town stood, and thence in a straight direction to the point of fast land on the cape side of the creek nearly opposite the house now in the occupation of William Arnold; and also to erect all necessary abutments, wings, banks and other works for the use of the bridge."

Subscriptions to an amount not exceeding one thousand pounds were authorized, and those subscribing a certain amount were to be exempt from paying toll. Under the direction of the commissioners, Peter White, a carpenter, built the bridge at a cost of fifty-seven pounds fourteen shillings and nine pence, completing it August 12, 1775.

This bridge was improved under the provision of a supplementary act, passed January 29, 1791, and was fully completed soon after. In 1794 David Hall and Caleb Rodney were named as commissioners in place of John Rodney and Henry Fisher. After 1818 it passed under the control of the town authorities.

The use of the bridge over Lewes Creek has given the inhabitants of the town direct access to the Beach Marsh, which belongs to them as a common, and from which and the Great Marsh they have derived benefit ever since the settlement of the place.

One of the first recorded acts in regard to the former was after the accession of William Penn:

"Upon the petition of Edmund Warner the Court grant unto him the land of the cape commonly called Cape Tilopen, lying on the north east side of the creek commonly called the Hore Kill, to make a coney Warren on, and Liberty to build a House and set a Warriner upon the said land upon condition that the Timber and feed of the said Land and marshes thereunto belonging be and forever henceforth Lyes in common for the use of the Inhabitants of the Town of Lewes and County of Sussex; as also free Liberty for any or all the Inhabitants of the said county to fish, get and take off their oyster and cockle shells and gather plum, cranberry and huckleberry on the said land as they shall see fit, always provided that no person shall ever shall not hunt or Kill any Rabbit or Hare on the said land without the leave or consent of him the said Edmund Warner his Exeutors, Administrators or Assigns. At a Court held at Lewes for the County of Sussex and by the King's Authority and by Commissions from William Penn, proprietary and Governor of Pennsylvania and Quincy thereunto belonging the 9th, 10th & 11th day of the 11th month, 1682. Judges present, William Dormr, Luke Watson, John Roads, Edward Southern, Robert Hart and John Riphaven."

The phraseology of the foregoing decree gives the county of Sussex equal claim to the marsh with Lewes and it has in a measure served as a common for the people outside of the town. By acts of the Legislature, it was placed in charge of trustees, and later the Court of Quarter Sessions of the county was authorized to appoint trustees to care for the commons. Since 1871 the control has been vested in the commissioners of the town of Lewes, and through their sanction a number of improvements have been made and buildings erected on leased lots. A highway to the beach has also been constructed and wharves built into the bay, whereby it has been made possible to establish a considerable shipping business, since the creek has failed to afford the means of navigation.

HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

Marsh is found in a suit at court, September, 1687, in which "Jonathan Bailey was summoned to appear before the Grand Jury, for about three years the owner of two houses and dwelling and the neighbors fence, not only the King's Highway to the own use which said highway hath been made, Worne and accustomed for many years, but the neighbors any other roads or highway to ye Common, commonly called Marshe, either to fetch hay, look after their cattle or other orations, but also to the only known Ancient place of A burying ground for the town of Lewes, Anno. " He also had placed the frame of a wind-mill thereon and also hath not only confidently and impudently denied and Refused thy neighbors the use of ye said ground to bury their dead, forbidding them or any of them to come upon the said ground."

A true bill was found against Bailey, and on trial it was found that he had infringed upon the rights of the public. The highway to the marshes was restored, and one acre of the "Ancient" burying-place was ordered to be kept for the public. The latter is now known as the Rowland burial-ground, at the lower end of Pilot Town.

Forty years later the right to the use of this common was confirmed to the people of Lewes, by the proprietaries, as follows:

"Whereas a certain tract or quantity of Marsh, lying on the side of Orange between the Broad Creek and the Canary Creek, in the County of Sussex, hath been for several years past by some expectation given by our late father to the Inhabitants of the Town of Lewes derived and taken to belong to the said town as a common, or pasture for the said Inhabitants. But no regular Survey has been formerly made on the same, yet by our permission at the request of Simon Kollock, Jacob Kollock and River Holt, three of the principal Inhabitants of the town of Lewes aforesaid, the said marsh hath been lately surveyed and circumscribed, as appears by a draught thereof, now exhibited, and thereupon the said Simon Kollock, Jacob Kollock and River Holt, on behalf of themselves and the other inhabitants of the said town request that we would be pleased to grant our Warrant in order that the survey made on the said marsh may be duly returned and established. These are, therefore, to authorize and require thee to accept and receive the Survey of the said marsh and make return thereof unto our Secretaries office in order for confirmation to the said Simon Kollock, Jacob Kollock and River Holt in trust and for use in behalf of the inhabitants of the town of Lewes aforesaid and their Successors to be held of us our heirs and Successors, under the yearly quit-rent of one peynt starting, for every acre thereof, to be duly paid by the said Inhabitants for and towards the support of a school, to be kept within the said town. Given under my hand and the lesser seal at Philadelphia this 23rd day of June, Anno Domini 1733, to Benjamin Buford, Surr. Gl. 1." Two Passages.

Lewes was incorporated by an act of the Assembly, passed February 2, 1818, and Samuel Paynter, James F. Baylis, Benjamin Prettyman, David Hazard and Peter F. Wright were named as commissioners to survey the bounds, streets and lanes of the town and to have a map of the same made. An election was ordered to be held in June each year, when five persons were to be chosen, to be known as the "Trustees of the Town of Lewes," who were vested with the powers usual in such cases, and were authorized to arrange with the commissioners of Lewes Bridge to obtain and control the same. For many years the government of the town under this act was merely nominal, and more comprehensive powers were needed in order to satisfy the demands occasioned by the increase of population. Accordingly, a new act was passed March 2, 1871, which was amended March 31, 1873, and at a later period, whereby the scope of the authorities was enlarged and new bounds established, as follows:

"Commencing at the mouth of Canary creek, thence up Canary creek and Lander's Branch to the road leading from Paynter's mill to Shepherd P. Houston's; thence around said road to the road leading from Lewes to Rehoboth; thence down said road to Wolfe's lane; thence down said mile to Edward Burton's farm; thence down to Gilby's Neck road to the road leading to Restore B. Lamb's farm, including said roads; thence to a northerly course, parallel with town street, to low water mark on the Delaware Bay shore; thence in a northerly direction along said bay shore to a place northeast of the mouth of Canary creek; thence in a northwesterly direction across the beach to the mouth of the said Canary creek and the place of beginning."

The government of the town under the amended acts is vested in a board of twelve citizens, chosen and designated as a body politic and corporate in law, and their successors to be known as the "Commissioners of Lewes." One of this number is annually chosen as president of the commissioners, and is vested with the powers of a justice of the peace and the duties of an alderman; and the board is endowed with ample powers for the good of the town, including authority over Great and Beach Marshes, with power over the adjacent public lands, and to assume the same jurisdiction over the cape-lands as was exercised by the trustees under the act of 1814, and those of later periods. The income arising from these lands was ordered to be paid into the treasury of the town of Lewes instead of the county of Sussex, as under the old acts. The election of all kinds of officers was also authorized by the new charter, the exercise of which provisions has greatly benefited the town.

It appears from the assessment-roll of 1873 that there were then living within the bounds of Lewes three hundred and thirty-nine white, and fifty-four colored persons, liable to taxation, and the amounts carried into the treasury by all sources aggregated $1034.56. The expenditures the corresponding period were $126.70, in excess of the receipts. In 1886 there were five hundred white and one hundred colored taxable, and the amounts expended in carrying on the affairs of the town were $1788.04.

In December, 1887, the principal officers of the town of Lewes were:

The growth and improvement of Lewes have not been eventful. In 1721 it was reported as "a large and handsome town on the banks of the Delaware." Five years later there were fifty-eight families at this place, and fifteen at Quakertown. In 1807 the place had about eighty buildings, and that number was not much increased until after the civil war. Twelve years after that event, in which period the railroad was built, one hundred and fifty new houses had been added, and the population was estimated at eighteen hundred. In 1887 there were within the corporate limits about two thousand souls, five churches, a fine union school, a hotel, and about thirty places of business, including a telegraph office established in 1852.

Nearly all the buildings at Lewes are of wood, the walls being covered with shingles, which give greater protection against the driving and severe storms that sometimes prevail here, than when they are weather boarded in the usual way. A number of land marks in these old houses, of the last century, notably the homes of the Rodney's, remain and give evidence of the comfort they must have afforded their inmates when much of this country was still in a primeval condition. Others have been replaced by mansions of modern architecture, but only one is of stone. This is the house of Frank Burton, built in 1880, out of granite belgian-blocks recovered from a wreck near the Breakwater.

The improvements on Delaware Bay have been closely associated with the industrial history of Lewes. It is a matter of tradition that the British Government built a good light-house on Cape Henlopen, as early as 1735. The stone used in its construction were carried up Lewes Creek, whose course, at that time, was much farther to the eastward, and the walls were seven feet in thickness. The tower was octagonal in shape, and being built on level ground was raised seven stories high. A dwelling for the keeper and other buildings were attached. In the course of years the shifting sands completely covered the latter, and formed a high mound on a spot which had originally been flat. Jacob Hargis is remembered as one of the early keepers. During the Revolutionary War the inside, or the wood-work of this light-house, was burned by the British. For the benefit of this light-house, two hundred acres of land, on the cape, were ordered to be surveyed, November 37, 1763, by John Penn, and in the same month, commissioners were appointed by the provincial government of Pennsylvania to raise a fund by subscription, and by a lottery to maintain a light and buoy at the mouth of Delaware Bay. This light and its surroundings, have, with the interruption in the Revolution, since been kept up, but in a much improved condition. The light-houses on Green Hill and on the breakwaters have been erected in more recent years. The breakwater in Delaware Bay, opposite Lewes, is the most important improvement of the kind in the United States. The early history of this work is given elsewhere in the chapter on "internal improvements." It is a massive work of granite masonry, two thousand eight hundred feet long, exclusive of the Ice Breaker, above it, which is seventeen hundred feet long. The first material used, was brought from the North River, but most of the rock was afterwards obtained in New Castle County. It was more than forty years in construction, and cost nearly two and a quarter million of dollars. For the purpose of improving the channel of the Bay near the Delaware shore, it was ordered that the gap between the two pieces of masonry be filled up and that work was begun in 1883. The breakwater has been of incalculable benefit to the navigation of Delaware Bay and the coastwise trade, affording protection to thousands of vessels yearly; as many as one hundred vessels have found shelter behind its friendly walls in a single storm and the calamities to navigators on this dangerous coast, have through this means been very much diminished. In 1880, the Government established a marine signal station on the inner works, where the Maritime Exchange also maintains an office from which the passage of vessels through the bay is noted by a sub-marine telegraph.

A number of wrecks have occurred off the coast of Cape Henlopen, but one of the most important was the sinking of the brig "De Braak," May 2, 1798, with nearly all its crew and a large amount of specie on board. The "De Braak" was in command of Captain James Drew, a bold Irish seaman, who set sail in January, 1798, with letters of marque and reprisal from the English Government, against Napoleon and his allies. The vessel was equipped with a dozen brass cannon and carried a crew of thirty-eight officers and men. After cruising in southern waters several months, the "De Braak" approached the American shore laden with the fruits of its victories over the enemy and having in tow the Spanish galloon, "La Platte." Taking on a Lewes pilot by the name of Andrew Allen, she was approaching shore for the purpose of getting a supply of fresh water, at Lewes, when not heeding an approaching storm, a gust of wind struck the full sheeted vessel and capsized her, carrying down the captain, the entire crew and fifteen prisoners. The pilot and twenty-five men were picked up alive, and the body of Captain Drew was recovered three days later and was buried in the cemetery of St. Peter's Church at Lewes, where a monument yet marks the place. The prize treasures of the "De Braak" are said to have been (for those times) fabulous, consisting of gold, silver and diamonds, in coins and metals, amounting to millions of dollars. The stories of this unknown wealth have become a part of the traditions of this coast and their recital has encouraged many efforts to raise the wreck which have not yet been successful.

About 1806 Gilbert McCracken, a partner of Pilot Allen, set the bearings of the wreck which have served as guides for these operations. They indicated a spot about a mile from the breakwater, where a mound in the water at a depth of twenty-seven feet, is described. This is supposed to contain the treasure trove, and efforts to uncover them were systematically begun in the summer of 1887, by the International Sub-marine company of Philadelphia and Dr. S. Pancoast, also of that city, acting under the authority of the National Government. The favorable progress of the work before the close of the season has inspired confidence in the ultimate success of the enterprise.

Half a mile above the Cape's End a United States Life-Saving station was opened in March, 1882, and placed in charge of Captain J. A. Clampitt. It is the upper of a series of four stations on the coast from the Bay to the Indian River Inlet, the entire distance being patrolled. The appointments of the stations are first-class, and it has rendered good service to distressed vessels.

In July, 1884, the United States Marine Hospital Service established a quarantine at Lewes, having in service the steamer "Tench Coxe," with Dr. G. W. Stoner as quarantine surgeon. In October the same year a hospital was erected near the point of the Cape, which was placed in the care of Dr. W. P. Orr, as assistant-surgeon, and all foreign vessels were boarded before entering the Bay. In 1885 the hospital treated several cases of yellow fever, and since that time others, infected with epidemic diseases, have been placed in the hospital, which has accommodation for twenty patients. Dr. Orr has had as assistants in this hospital work, during quarantine season (from May until November), in 1886, Dr. Joseph M. Brockerhoof; and, in 1887, Dr. Harbeson Hickman.

A large number of pilots on the Delaware reside at Lewes, and it has been the home of many of that class of people for more than two hundred years. Minister Griffith, of the Friends' Society, who visited this section in 1765, wrote: "We made Cape Henlopen and a pilot came on board who proved to be a native Indian." Some of the white pilots carried on other occupations, and they have always been among the prominent citizens of the town.

Before the Revolution, Bailey Art, David Johnson, Henry Fisher and others were pilots at this place. Later, pilots Allen and McCracken lived here; and after 1800, the occupation appears to have been confined almost entirely to persons bearing the names of Connell, Clampitt, Rowland, Maull, Howard, West, Marshall, Wesley, Chambers and Virden. Members of the latter family have been very successful in this occupation, and through their influence a beneficial system of pilot laws for the Delaware have been secured by legislative enactment. In 1872, thirty pilots resided at Lewes, Thomas Roland, aged eighty-three years, being the oldest. In 1887 nearly double that number of pilots claimed Lewes as their home, and nearly half the business on the Delaware was controlled by them. They are an active, intelligent, enterprising class of men, and have many substantial improvements in Lewes.

In the infancy of Lewes, the Creek afforded a good channel for the navigation of sloops and schooners—and as good timber grew in the contiguous country, ship-building became an industry of considerable importance.

Some of the first English inhabitants were ship-carpenters, a fact which was recognized by naming one of the streets of the town after them. Among these early mechanics of whom any account has been preserved, were John and William Beverley and John Brown, all of whom carried on that occupation prior to 1685. Later well-known boat-builders were John and Peter Maull, who had a yard at Pilot Town, where they built the last boat in 1866, for Nathaniel Hickman. Peter and Cato Lewis, colored men, also built boats there. After the decline of that interest here a number of ship-carpenters removed to Milford. In 1879, F. C. Maull built a small schooner at the wharf below the Market Street bridge, and John Paynter built one in 1888, which were among the last of noteworthy size built at this place, as the channel of the creek has been filling up so rapidly in recent years that navigation on it has been suspended. Abraham Wiltbank had a wharf on the creek as early as 1735.

Nathaniel Hickman was one of the most enterprising vessel-owners of the town a score of years ago, and since 1879, A. L. Burton has been actively engaged in the shipping business. In 1887 he owned a fleet of four schooners, and chartered others as his business demanded. The products shipped were the general freight of the railroad, laden from the pier of the company, and employment was given to about thirty men.

The first pier into the Bay was a wooden mole built by the Government, in 1838. This stood above the railroad pier and having become worn eaten was swept away by the tide. In 1851, a new pier was built for a Company running boats from Lewes to Philadelphia. The Steamer "St. Nicholas" was purchased and placed on this line and for a time business was very brisk, as this means of travel was a decided improvement on the stage coach across the country. Lewes then became the terminus of Stage lines from Milford and Snow Hill. Many excursions were brought to Lewes, which also now came into notice as a sea-side resort. In the fall of 1855, the steamerboat was taken off, and, in the spring of 1857, a part of the pier was destroyed by the breaking away of the ice in the Bay. The railroad pier was commenced in 1869, and has been used since 1870. In the later years a line of steamers began to ply to New York, among the boats being the "Washington," "Granite State," "W. N. Coit" and others, owned by the "Old Dominion Line." For a number of years a large traffic was done, both in carrying freight and passengers, but the absorption of the railway by the Pennsylvania System caused the steamers in 1885, to be withdrawn. The railroad (Junction and Breakwater) was completed to Lewes in November, 1869, and after January 1, 1870, trains were regularly run. In the spring of 1883, this branch was consolidated with other lines, under the name of the Delaware, Maryland and Virginia Railroad. Repair shops were removed to Georgetown in 1884, and soon after transferred to Wilmington. Their location at Lewes greatly increased the population, and their removal, together with the abandonment of the lines of steamers, seriously affected the commercial prosperity of the town.

In 1870, Congress appropriated two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars for the construction of an iron pier, off the land of the Cape, into the ocean, and the following year work upon the same was commenced. Additional appropriations have since been made, and, with some interruption, the work of its construction has been continued to the present time.
SUSSEX COUNTY.

It is intended for the use of the Government in cases of emergency, or when navigation on the Delaware should become obstructed. The structure is very substantial, more than half a million dollars having been expended on it, and is about two thousand feet long. In 1884, the railroad track from Lewes to the pier was graded.

Near the iron pier factories for extracting the oil from menhaden and other fish were erected in 1863, by Luce Brothers and S. S. Brown & Co. The buildings stand on ground leased from the commissioners of Lewes and are well fitted up. Four steamers and several hundred men are employed in carrying on the business.

General Business Interests.—For many years the manufacturing interests of Lewes were limited to the ordinary trades, and it was not until the railroad-shops were here located that the industrial life of the place was quickened into greater activity. After these were in operation other enterprises were begun and some have been successfully continued. The repair-shops gave employment to about fifty men until their removal to Georgetown, in 1884.

In 1882 Wm. B. Yardley erected a fruit evaporating establishment, near the depot, in which were placed two Williams' dryers, having a capacity of two hundred and fifty baskets per day. D. W. Breerton was the superintendent, and with John H. McLolley, in 1885, became the owner. In the same locality W. H. Virden and Joseph Draper engaged in fruit evaporating and have since continued. About fifteen thousand baskets per year are prepared for the markets by these establishments.

The Henlopen Mills, near the depot, were built in 1882 by Wm. P. Jones and Spencer A. Phillips. On the death of the latter, in 1884, his interest passed to John W. Phillips, by whom and Mr. Jones the mills are still operated. The building is a three-story frame, thirty-two by sixty feet, and is supplied with seven sets of rollers for grinding wheat, and two corn burrs. The motor is steam from a fifty horse-power engine, and about fifty barrels per day are manufactured. The plant is valued at twenty-two thousand dollars.

The town has always been a good trading point, and Adam Johnson had a store as early as 1887. In 1895 William Orr was the merchant, and in 1740 Joshua Fisher traded and was also a mariner and clerk of the Market. Caleb Rodney traded before 1812 and, later, Daniel, John, Thomas and Henry F. Rodney had stores which enriched their owners and made them the most prominent people in this section.

George Parker was a contemporary of the elder Rodneys and Lewis and Robert West and George Hickman, of those of a younger generation; and for many years these three families furnished the merchants of the town. Wm. P. Orr has been in trade since 1848, and has had since that time, as principal fellow-merchants, Wm. M. Hickman, Nathaniel Hickman, Henry Wolfe, Alfred E. Burton, T. E. Record, F. C. Maull, E. J. Richardson, J. H. Dodd and E. J. Morris, the five last-named having stores in the year 1887.

The first drug-store in Lewes was opened by Dr. David H. Houston. Since 1871, Dr. David L. Mustard and Ebe W. Tunnell have carried on a drug-store, in part of the old Caleb Rodney house, on Second Street, on which the principal stores have always been located. Frank Burton opened the first store in Pilot Town, in 1877. All branches of trade were represented in 1887, there being more than thirty places of business in Lewes.

An inn was kept at Lewes, before 1700, by Richard Paynter, and Roger Corbett entertained the public in 1706. After the county abandoned the court-house, in 1792, that building was converted into a tavern and was used as such a score of years. It was in the dining-room of this house that Dr. Wilson was killed, in 1805. It was kept later by Josiah Marriner and after his death by his widow, Sarah. About the same time Philip Kolloch and Cook Clamptt also kept public houses. In 1831 Samuel Walker kept a hotel near the creek and during the severe storm, that year, the sloop "Breakwater" broke from moorings and ran her bow-sprit through the windows of the bar-room, to the great astonishment of the inmates. On that occasion the tide ran higher at Lewes than since. The "Ocean House," at the upper end of Pilot Town, was built in 1846, for the Rev. Solomon Prettyman. It was intended for summer boarders and was the first hotel with large accommodations erected in the place. After the establishment of the steamboat line, in 1851, it did a large business, but was closed in 1856. Later it was again opened to the public and during the season of 1871, while kept by Walter Burton, accommodated one thousand guests. For many years it has been used as a private residence. In May, 1870, the "Atlantic Hotel," which stood on the corner of Front and King Streets, was destroyed by fire. It was a large three-story frame, and was at that time owned by ex-Sheriff Lofland. James Belt's "Pavilion House," built in 1873, near the railroad pier, for the accommodation of visitors to the seaside, was also burned down. At this place Caleb Lynch's boarding-house was afterwards erected.

The only hotel in 1887, was the "Virden House," on Front Street, near the site of the upper fort, in the war of 1812. It was erected in 1847, by Charles Wilson and Hudson Burr, and was opened as the "United States House." In 1879 the building was enlarged by Henry Virden, when the name was also changed, and it has since been known by its present title. It was exceedingly well kept in 1887, by William M. Jefferson, and had a large patronage, ranking with the best hotels in the state.

The Lewes Building and Loan Association was organized March, 1873, and issued four series of stock before its business was closed. Each series matured in the course of nine years. Its officers were James H. Russell, president; George D. Orton and D. W. Brereton, secretaries; D. L. Mustard and E. J. Morris, treasurers. The association was highly beneficial, enabling many citizens to secure homes.

Lewes has had a long line of able and honored physicians. Dr. John Rhoads, who was also one of the judges of the court, was in practice as early as 1674. Eleven years later Dr. Thomas Wynn located here. In 1856 Dr. Thomas Bowman is mentioned. In 1702 Dr. John Stewart was here, and in 1717 Dr. Nathaniel Hall. Dr. Henry Fisher, a native of Ireland, came in 1725, and settled at Pilot Town, where he built a mansion, which was regarded as palatial in those days. This property passed into the hands of the Hickman family, and the title still stands in the name of a member. Dr. Fisher was the father of the patriotic pilot, Henry Fisher, who was prominent in Revolutionary matters, and in the business affairs of Lewes of that period.

On or about the 24th day of October, 1682, William Penn arrived in the ship "Welcome," within the capes of the Delaware Bay, and with him came quite a large number of passengers with the intention of settling in the province which had been deeded to Penn by the Duke of York. Among those passengers were John Fisher and Margaret, his wife, and his two sons, John and Thomas, the latter of whom was Penn's private secretary. John Fisher, his brother, settled near Lewes. He left three sons, the eldest of whom was John, whose son, Jabez Fisher, was the father of Thomas Fisher. The mother was Elizabeth Wright, daughter of Thomas Furnell, of Maryland, and widow of Hezekiah Wright. Jabez settled on a farm near Lewes, in Sussex County, Delaware, where his son Thomas was born on the 14th day of June, 1768.

In the severe winter of 1779-80, having just entered his seventeenth year, Thomas was seized by a press-gang, and carried on board the British frigate "Roebuck," then lying near Cape Henlopen. Word was sent to his father Jabez, from the press-gang that captured him, that his son Thomas and his negro slave Samuel, also seized by the press-gang, could be ransomed only by the delivery of one hundred bullocks on board the English frigate. These, from his own herds and contributions made by neighbors, were carried on the ice some two or three miles from the shore and delivered on board the frigate, and Thomas and the slave were liberated. On the death of Jabez Fisher, his father, in 1786, Thomas, being the eldest son, and then about twenty-two years of age, was left to care for the younger children, the youngest of whom was John Fisher, who afterwards became a distinguished lawyer at the Dover bar, and federal judge of the district of Delaware.

General Thomas Fisher received such education only as could be obtained in those troublous times, immediately preceding and during the Revolutionary War, at private schools in Sussex County. He managed to acquire, however, a fair English education. Being a man of commanding presence, affable manners and great popularity, he was appointed or elected to several public offices in Sussex County, both civil and military; among others, twice filled the office of high sheriff of the county. It is a singular coincidence that afterwards, having become a resident of Kent County, he was also twice made high sheriff of Kent.

Shortly before the massacre in San Domingo, Stephen Girard, who at that time was doing business on rather a small scale in Philadelphia, started for that island, and the vessel on which he took passage was driven by stress of weather to take refuge in Lewes Creek, which then afforded a comparatively safe harbor, the Delaware Breakwater at that time not having been dreamed of. The vessel was necessarily detained at Lewes for several days, during which interval some of the creditors of Girard in Philadelphia sent an express messenger to Lewes, then the county-seat of Sussex, and served out writs for his arrest and imprisonment, which were placed in the hands of General Fisher, who was then sheriff of that county, to be served. On repairing to the hotel and making known his business to Mr. Girard, the latter, in a sudden burst of passion, struck him with a Spanish knife, but the general parried the thrust by a counter-stroke on Girard's elbow, and with the other hand felled him to the floor, and kept him in durance vile until he succeeded in obtaining bail for his appearance at the ensuing term of court. Having been thus liberated, Girard completed his voyage to San Domingo, and whilst there a very large number of the wealthy planters and merchants of that island made arrangements with him to take back to Philadelphia and have consigned to him there large amounts of money and other valuables which must have aggregated between five hundred thousand and a million of dollars in value, and so terrible was the destruction of life by the massacre of the white inhabitants of the island, that many families were so completely extirpated as to leave no legal representatives behind them to claim the large deposits which had been entrusted to Mr. Girard for safe keeping. This forms the basis of the colonial fortune which he subsequently amassed.

During the War of 1812, General Fisher was brigadier commanding the brigade of militia of Sussex County, and was present at the bombardment of Lewes by the British. At that time he resided on his farm at Milton, but in 1815 removed to Milford, in Kent, for which county he was elected sheriff in 1824, for the term of three years, at the expiration of which term he purchased a mill property and farm, upon a part of which the present town of Wyoming has since been built. In 1830 he removed to it and there died in December, 1885, in the seventy-third year of his age, leaving but one child to survive him. Hon. George P. Fisher, a sketch of whose life is published in this work. He was by birthright a Quaker, but early in life became an Episcopalian, in which faith he died, lamented by all who knew him.

Dr. Joseph Hall, born 1748, began practicing medicine at Lewes before the Revolution, and continued until his death, 1786. His practice extended through the greater part of Lower Sussex. Dr. Wm. Robinson succeeded to the practice of Dr. Hall, which he carried on several years. Contemporary with Dr. Hall was Dr. Matthew Wilson, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, who looked after the physical as well as the spiritual interests of his members. His son, Dr. Theodore F. Wilson, was killed in 1806, after practicing a few years. Near the same time Dr. John and Jacob Wolfe were in practice. The latter was killed by lightning in the court-house at Georgetown, July 16, 1805. The former also deceased before 1812. Dr. Thomas R. Blandy was here about the same time.

Dr. John White was in practice from after 1800 until his death in 1829. A little later, Dr. Henry F. Hall became a practitioner. He was a surgeon in the war of 1812, retiring from the army in 1819. His death occurred in 1866, in the age of seventy-six years. In this period, Dr. Joseph Harris, Dr. Wm. Rickards, Dr. A. L. Wiltbank, Dr. Simeon K. Wilson and others were professionally engaged at Lewes, some remaining but a few years. The connection with the profession at Lewes of Dr. Robert Burton and Dr. Robert McIlvain dates from an earlier period, both removing to the northern part of the county.

After being in practice at Lewes a number of years, and serving with credit as a surgeon in the War for the Union, David H. Houston retired to his home in Broadkill Hundred, where he still lived in 1887. Dr. Joseph Lyons was retired at Lewes, after a number of years of practice, and Dr. Rodney H. Richardson had removed to the Pacific Coast.

The physicians resident at Lewes and in active practice in 1887 were Dr. David Hall, graduated from Pennsylvania Medical School, and a practitioner since 1852; Dr. David L. Mustard, pupil of the above, and graduated from same school, in 1858 (after ten years' practice in Blackwater he removed to Lewes, where he has since resided); Dr. Hiram Rodney Burton, graduated from University of Pennsylvania in 1868, in practice at Frankford, Delaware, until 1872, and since that year in Lewes; Dr. W. P. Orr and Dr. Harbeson Hickman, both natives of Lewes, and graduates from the University of Pennsylvania in 1884. Both are in the hospital service of the United States, on Cape Henlopen, in addition to being practitioners in town.

Of the many attorneys who resided at Lewes in the last century, Col. David Hall, who practiced law before he went to the Revolutionary War, stood prominent. James P. Wilson, a later attorney of promise, renounced that profession and became a Presbyterian clergyman after 1800. The resident attorney in 1887 was Charles W. Whiley.

Jefferson Lodge, No. 10, A. F. A. M., was instituted at New Castle January 27, 1825, with W. T. Read, master; John Belville, senior warden; Bennett Lewis, junior warden. For a number of years its meetings were statedly held at New Castle until they were discontinued. But the charter was revived June 27, 1849, and the lodge was re-established at Lewes, where the original members were John Burton, Benjamin McIlvain, Thomas Coleman, George Tunnell, Alfred P. Robinson, Hudson Burr, Joseph Lafetra, John W. Walker and John W. Dean. Since that time one hundred and fifty-six persons have been admitted to membership, and in the fall of 1887 the number in good standing was sixty-seven.

For a number of years the lodge held its meetings in the United States Hotel, but now (1888) occupies its own hall on the King's Road, in the western part of the town. The corner-stone of this building was laid December 26, 1870, and the hall was dedicated in July, 1871. The structure is a two-story frame, twenty-five by fifty feet, and was erected by a committee composed of E. J. Morris, L. L. Lyons, John A. Clampitt and William H. Orten. The hall is well furnished, and the property is valued at three thousand five hundred dollars. In 1887 it was in the care of Trustees John R. Price, Jehu Jeffers and Andrew H. Baker. C. H. Maull was the master; William P. Orr, Jr., secretary; and J. A. Clampitt, treasurer.

Atlantic Lodge, No. 15, I. O. O. F., was instituted at Lewes, December 4, 1847, with twenty-one charter members, most of whom had a former membership in the Union Lodge of Georgetown. The meetings were first held in the Long House, on Mulberry Street; but, in 1862, a hall, twenty-four by forty feet, was built, in which the lodge has since been assembled. When first used, it was regarded as very fine, and has been kept in an inviting condition. The lodge has prospered in membership and financially, having in 1887 real and personal property valued at two thousand dollars and eighty members in good standing. The principal officers in the latter half of the year were as follows: N. G., Robert R. Wilson; V. G., S. M. Warren; R. S., Edward Hudson; P. S., D. W. Bretenet; Treas., John W. West; Trustees, James Lewis, W. H. Virden and John West.

In the fall of 1887 there were twenty-five members, with Robert R. Wilson as C. P., and William H. Virden as H. P. The meetings were held in Atlantis.
HALL, where also assembled "Breakwater Lodge" of Good Templars, which was organized September 15, 1885, with thirty-five charter members. This society is also prosperous; but a division of the Sons of Temperance, formerly here, has long since passed away.

SCHOOLS.—In 1734, John Russell is spoken of as the schoolmaster of the town, serving also as deputy recorder, but there is no account of a schoolhouse in that period. Two years later Thomas Penn ordered that the income from the Great Marsh should be devoted to the support of a school in Lewes, but it is probable that no building for that especial purpose was erected until 1761. That year a frame house was erected on Second Street, near Ship Carpenter Street, in which the youth of the town were instructed more than one hundred years, and which has but lately been removed. For the lot on which it stood a deed was executed, May 4, 1762, by John Wiltbank to Ryesse Holt, Jacob Kolloch, David Hall, Jacob Kolloch, Jr., Matthew Wilson, Peter Razer, Daniel Nunez, James Thompson, Samuell Rowland, Daniel Nunez, Jr., Anderson Parker, John Rodney, Henry Fisher, Daniel Hosman and Reeco Wolfe, Jr., leading citizens of the town, in consideration of ten shillings, "as well as for the promotion and encouragement of the youth of the county, being taught and educated in the principles of religion and virtue, useful knowledge and learning."

Of the many teachers who occupied this building, Dr. William Harris was a schoolmaster, in the early part of the present century, whose worth is best remembered. In February, 1818, a board of trustees was incorporated for this school, enabling it to be better maintained.

Before 1800, schools where instruction in the classics might be imparted were taught in Lewes, the Rev. Francis Hindman having such a school as early as 1705. This led to the establishment of the Lewes Academy soon after. A large frame building was erected for school purposes, at the intersection of South and Third Streets, which was controlled in 1803 by Trustees David Hall, Daniel Rodney, Caleb Rodney, John White, James P. Wilson, George Parker, William Wolfe, James Wiltbank, Frederick Roe and Jacob Wolfe. That year Peter McLaughlin was the principal, but retired in 1805, and the Rev. James Wiltbank succeeded him. The latter was a graduate of Princeton College, and later became the provost of the University of Pennsylvania. About the same time R. S. Clarke was teaching a school for young ladies, in connection with the academy. In an announcement of his purposes he made great professions of his proficiency, assuring his patrons that he could "teach Grammar grammatically, and would also use the globes, etc." John Gibbons was a teacher of the ancient languages. The Rev. A. Strong taught in the academy for nearly twenty years, and is best remembered in connection with that old institution, which has long since been closed, and the building now forms a part of a private residence. In its best days many students from abroad were in attendance.

The schools of Lewes and vicinity are now controlled by a "Board of Public Education," which was created by an act of the Legislature, passed March 9, 1875, which also consolidated Districts Nos. 14, 15, 110 and 112 for the better promotion of the schools. The first board of this union district was composed, of Dr. David Hall, president; Lemuel W. Waples, secretary; William P. Orr, treasurer; Robert Arnell, John A. Clappitt, Harbeson Hickman, David A. Marshall, E. J. Morris, Dr. David L. Mustard, Thomas E. Record, James H. Russell and Edward Russell. It was authorized to issue bonds for six thousand dollars to build a new school-house, and to grade the course of instruction. Both were done in the fall of 1875, and a very imposing edifice, costing more than eight thousand dollars, was completed in 1876, making it the centennial building of the town. It contains seven large and well-appointed rooms, in which more than three hundred pupils are instructed in studies embracing the classics. The first class to complete the course was composed of May Hickman, Sallie Ross, Helen Marshall and Sallie Waples, and was graduated in June, 1879, under the principalship of Professor H. C. Carpenter. In 1887 the school had six departments, and the principal was Roman Tamany. The yearly expenditure was about three thousand dollars, and the property was estimated worth ten thousand dollars.

THE LEWES LIBRARY ASSOCIATION was formed January 13, 1877, with C. W. Whiley, president; C. H. Maull, secretary; Joseph Laffete, treasurer; H. R. Burton, E. W. Tunnell, H. C. Carpenter, H. S. Marshall, additional trustees. Robert H. Orr was the librarian. The association has been successfully conducted and, in 1887, the library contained six hundred volumes of standard and miscellaneous books. It was kept in Odd Fellows' Hall, and Edward Duffel was the librarian.

In 1810 a library was formed at Lewes, which was maintained a score of years and contained a number of good books.

LEWES PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.—Among the settlers at Lewes, after 1682, were a number of persons—Independents—from Scotland and Northern Ireland, who were inclined to establish worship in accordance with their belief. To this people came the Rev. Samuel Davis, about 1691, under the auspices of the "London Missionary Society" (organized in 1689, and disbanded in 1692), and if he did not immediately organize them into a congregation, at least preach to them. He took up his abode on a farm near the town, where he was visited, in 1692, by George Keith, a Friend, who speaks of the existence of a small congregation at that period. With this congregation the Rev. Davis united, in 1707, in the call for a pastor; but none being secured, he continued to preach until 1715, when he removed to Snow Hill, Md., where he died in 1729.

In 1707 the first meeting-house of the congregation was built on a lot of land which had been conveyed, May 9th of that year, by Thomas Fenwick (who had purchased the Wm. Dyre place), "for the use of the Presbyterian Professors and to build a meeting-house and a school-house for the above s' Party or Company of Presbyterians, and for a burial-place forever." "One certain tract or parcel of land, situate, Lying and being buttled, bounded at the end of Lewistown, between the County Road and the road that goes to Mr. Samuel Davis his plantation on the Hill, containing one hundred feet square." The house was of wood and does not appear to have been substantially built, so that in the course of twenty years it had become unfit for use. A better edifice of brick was accordingly begun in 1727 and partially completed that year. It had a high hip roof and end gallery, and was without a stove when first used. Repairs were made on it in 1759, and again in 1818, but after fourteen years' more service it was little used. Yet it was left standing in the same lot until November, 1871, when it was sold to Henry Wolfe, for eighty dollars, who demolished it.

The present edifice was dedicated in 1832, but had been building several years. In 1869 the windows were changed, and the old pulpit, which had thirteen steps, removed to make place for one of more modern construction. Further improvements to this building were made in 1886, when a bell, weighing a thousand pounds, was placed in the steeple, which was erected that year, and a pipe-organ was also placed in the church. In 1887 the church was thoroughly modernized, at an outlay of two thousand five hundred dollars, making it one of the best edifices in the lower part of the State. A new mansion was built on an adjoining lot in 1877, and the combined value of the church property was, in December, 1887, nearly eight thousand dollars.

In 1715 the Rev. John Thompson, a native of Ireland, supplied the pulpit and continued two years, being installed the first regular pastor of the church in April, 1717. He continued until 1729, when he removed to Pennsylvania. He was a learned man, an author of considerable reputation, "able, judicious and Evangelical."

The church seems to have been without a pastor until 1734, when the Rev. James Martin, also an Irishman, entered into that office, which he acceptably filled until his death, which occurred in May, 1743. His remains were interred in front of the pulpit in the brick church. In 1776 this grave was opened and the story of his burial was fully verified by finding his bones in the spot indicated. During his pastorate, October 3, 1739, the eminent George Whitefield visited Lewes, and preached. In his account of that event he said: "The chief inhabitants prevailed on me to preach, but they were not troubled by the tender and melting story of a Saviour's sacrifice." He preached from the steps of the new court-house, since no church in the place was large enough to hold the people assembled. Another important event in the pastorate of the Rev. Martin was the organization, November 19, 1735, of the Presbytery of Lewes, the records of which have been lost.

From 1743 until 1756 the church had no regular pastor, but the Revs. Samuel Black, Hector Allison and others occasionally preached. In the latter year the Rev. Matthew Wilson was installed the pastor and served continuously from May 6th until his death, March 31, 1791, when he was interred in the churchyard. He was a painstaking, conscientious man, and "although his ministry extended through the war, they were times of peace to the church." His parish also embraced the Cool Spring Church, and at the latter church his successor, the Rev. Francis Hindman, was ordained, October 27, 1791, and continued pastor until April 20, 1795. He was also the teacher of a school at Lewes, and was a stern disciplinarian. Dr. Harris, who subsequently taught an academy, was one of his students.

December 10, 1795, the Rev. John Burton, a licentiate from Scotland, became the next pastor. He was also a thorough scholar, but plain in manners, frank in his speech, eccentric and very absent-minded. Many amusing incidents of his forgetfulness are remembered.

The Rev. James P. Wilson, a son of the Rev. Matthew, supplied the pulpit about two years, but in 1807 the Rev. Joseph Copes became the pastor, and remained the minister until his death. He was buried at the Cool Spring Church, January 1, 1822.

From 1823 to 1826 the Rev. Benjamin Ogden was the pastor, and was succeeded by the Rev. John Mitchell. The latter lost his life in March, 1834, by the burning of the steamer "Wm. Penn." His body being recovered, it was buried in Philadelphia. The Rev. Abram De Witt was the next pastor, serving from 1834 until 1838. The following year the Rev. Cornelius H. Mustard became the minister of the church and, with some interruption, served it as pastor and stated supply until 1867. Since the latter period the ministers have been: 1867 to 1859, the Rev. William C. Handy; 1860-61, the Rev. Andrew Thomas; 1861 to 1870, the Rev. G. H. Nemo. Then followed as supplies the Revs. W. E. Gaylord, C. F. Boynton, G. L. Wolf, Daniel Tournay, W. W. Reese. In November, 1881, the Rev. Austin C. Heaton became the pastor, and served the church acceptably until his resignation was compelled by ill health, in the fall of 1887.

For nearly a hundred years Cool Spring and other congregations were served with the Lewes Church, but after 1857 the only congregation thus connected was the one in Rehoboth Hundred, and since 1873 the Lewes Church has been an exclusive charge. Its membership has thus been much diminished, but ninety two communicants belonging in November, 1887. Among these were Ruling Elders James H. Russell, Dr. David Hall, Dr. David L. Mustard, Edward Russell, Alfred L. Burton and Thomas B. Schellenger. Others in that office have been William Russell, Lewis West, David Walker, John Paynter, Thomas Rowland, Henry Wolfe, Dr. David H. Houston, William E. Bingham, Thomas Walker, Henry F. Hall, Peter Waples, John Puchter, Gov. David Hall, Peter White, John Orr and Joseph Hall, all ordained after 1790.

Good Sunday-schools have long been maintained in the church, David M. McVilain being the Superintendent of one of the first. Dr. Henry F. Hall held that position many years, until his death. James H. Russell was the superintendent in 1887, and the school had one hundred and thirty-five members.

FRIENDS’ MEETING AT LEWES.—As early as 1692 the Friends residing at Lewes held meetings after the manner of their sect, and in June, 1712, a regular Weekly Meeting was established at the house of Cornelius Wiltbank. Members of that family, the Fishers, Miers and some others constituted this meeting, which was attached to the Camden Monthly Meeting. The meeting at Lewes appears to have been “raised” about 1800, the few remaining members becoming connected with the Coal Spring Meeting in Broad Klin Hundred. The graveyard at Lewes was given up about 1840.

ST. PETER’S CHURCH, PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.—Visiting clergymen held services in accordance with the usages of the Established Church in all the larger settlements of the State, prior to 1700, but it does not appear that it was deemed advisable to organize the people of Lewes into a parish at so early a period. On the 28th of July, 1708, the Rev. William Black came to the town and remained until May 9, 1709, in which period he held meetings here and in other localities, but the interest created was not sufficient to attempt the founding of a church in Lewes; and nearly a dozen more years elapsed before that purpose was accomplished. In 1717 the Rev. George Ross was invited by Sir William Keith, at that time Governor of Pennsylvania, to accompany him in a tour through Lower Delaware to look after the wants of the people. On this mission they visited Lewes, where Mr. Ross held divine service in the court-house August 6, 1717, to the great satisfaction of those assembled. Impressed with the spiritual needs of the people of this section, he returned in 1718, and during his stay of a week baptized more than a hundred persons at L-wes, Cedar Creek Hundred, and the country along the Indian River. An effort was now made to obtain a regular minister, and through the influence of Mr. Ross, the Rev. William Beckett came as a missionary under the auspices of the “Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts,” of London, to take up this work. He selected Lewes as a central point from which to carry on his operations, locating here in September, 1721. Taking what means had already been gathered, he immediately commenced to build a church, and a year later he reported to his society: “The frame of our church was raised on a high bank in the centre of our town on the 6th October last, and we hope to finish it the next Summer. The other two churches we have raised at distant places. We intend to fit them up with all convenient speed.” The two churches here mentioned were St. Matthew’s, in Cedar Creek Hundred, and the first St. George’s Chapel, in Indian River Hundred, which also belonged to the parish created by Mr. Beckett. On the 19th of May, 1724, he wrote to his society that not one of his three churches “will contain the hearers that constantly attend Divine Services.” In 1728 he built “a fourth church in the middle of a forest, by the name of St. John Baptist,” and there is likely to be a numerous congregation there.” The interest in his preaching in all those churches continued, and in his last letter, September 26, 1742, he says “the four churches are filled on Sundays, and I am often obliged in summer to preach under the trees, since the houses are too small to hold all who come to hear.” Mr. Beckett died August 20, 1743, and was buried in the graveyard of St. Peter’s Church at Lewes.

The first church building was a frame, twenty-four by forty feet, and was fifteen feet between the plate and sill, and was not completed until 1728. That year Patrick Gordon, Esq., then Governor of Pennsylvania, gave £5 to finish the gallery, after the front of it had been wainscoted with black walnut at the expense of Joseph Pemberton. The house was covered with cypress shingles, and the entire amount expended on it was £96 6s. 5d. These moneys were contributed by the people of the parish, and a considerable portion was secured from friends outside of the State, Governor Keith being a generous donor. On the 10th of June, 1773, John Penn, Governor of Pennsylvania and the three lower counties, presented a fine communion service to the church.

The old church having been condemned as unsafe for further use, a new house was built, of the same size, about forty feet southwest of the old one. The frame was raised in June, 1808, and by September 15th, that year, the church was completed, which was deemed very quick work for those times. After the lapse of forty years an effort was made to build a larger church, but no actual work was done until the fall of 1858, when the above building was removed to the northwest corner of the cemetery, by Dr. William M. Rickard and A. S. Wiltbank, and on the 27th of May, 1854, the corner-stone of a new church was laid on the old site. In 1855 work was continued on the building, under the direction of L. L. Lyons, H. F. Rodney, William M. Hickman, John Rodney and William F. Orr, as a building committee, but the edifice was not completed for consecration until July 15, 1858. That ceremony was performed by Bishop Alfred Lee, who also conferred holy orders upon the rector, Thomas M. Martin, at the same time. It is a brick structure, forty-seven by seventy-six feet, Gothic style, with fine windows, and costsix thousand dollars. The sitting capacity is nearly seven hundred. A tower was added and other improvements have been made at a more recent period.

In 1790 St. Peter's Church was incorporated with a board of trustees composed of John Wiltbank, Recce Wolfe, John Russell, Phillip Kolloch, Hap Hazzard, George Barker and Anderson Barker. In 1797 the church-yard was enlarged by the purchase of land from Daniel Rodney and the Rev. James Wiltbank, and other property of the church was sold; the glebe, devised by Daniel Nunetz, in 1791, to Peter Robinson and the old Court-House and sundry lots west from it, June 15, 1833, to H. F. Rodney and others. The property, which was in fair order in 1887, was in charge of a vestry composed of William P. Orr and Alexander Harrison, wardens; Hiram Burton, Charles Burton, Henry Marshall, Jacob Marshall, James Marshall, Clinton Long and David R. West, vestrymen. The parish embraced forty-five families, and St. Peter's was the only church within its limits, all the other churches at first associated with it having assumed different parish relations.

THE BETHEL METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF LEWES.—Methodist ministers preached in this locality as early as 1774, the meetings being held in private houses. But on the 31st of March, 1788, a board of trustees was incorporated, with a purpose to build a church, namely, John Wiltbank, William West, William Coulter, Abraham Hargis, Sheppard Prettyman, Thomas Coulter and William Prettyman. This board purchased a lot of Rhoads Shankland May 7, 1788, on what was known as Shankland's Lane, on which was raised the frame of the old “Ebenzer Church.” Three years later “Bethel Church” was built in Lewes, on the corner of Third and Market Streets, and for many years meetings were alternately held in the two churches. Later Ebenzer Church was allowed to go down, but the burial-place is still maintained. In 1828 Bethel Church was removed from its old site to the location of the present church, and ten feet added to the length of the house, making it twenty-five by forty feet. In a repaired condition the old church was used until the present edifice was occupied. Its corner-stone was laid August 29, 1870, but the dedication did not take place until August 28, 1872. The church is a frame, forty by sixty feet, and is thirty-two feet high, giving it lecture rooms in the basement, and a large auditorium. It was erected by a building committee composed of George Chambers, E. J. Morris and T. E. Record, and cost about six thousand dollars. In 1880 a steeple was built on the church, and it was since otherwise improved.

The following year a very neat parsonage was built for the use of the minister, the church having the previous year become an independent charge. In 1887 the entire property was valued at sixteen thousand dollars, and was controlled by Trustees D. W. Breton, T. E. Record, E. J. Morris, Geo. Chambers, Wm. E. Chambers and P. B. Norman, Sr.

When old “Bethel” was removed to its new location in 1828, about twenty families worshipped in it. In 1887 the membership of the church was two hundred and seventy-three, and it was under the pastoral care of the Rev. H. S. Thompson. The church also maintains a very flourishing Sunday-school of three hundred and forty-five members, of which D. W. Breton and A. D. Mason are the superintendents.

The first Sabbath-school in Lewes was held in the old Bethel Church as a union school, in 1813, by Mrs. Sallie West, assisted by Mrs. Salfey Beece and others. In 1816 the school was conducted under a constitution written by the Rev. John Rodney, and eight ladies—three Methodists, three Presbyterians and two Episcopalians—were selected as directresses. The school was first held in the Methodist, but later in the Presbyterian Church. In 1820 a Sabbath-school was taught in the school-house on Second Street by ladies of various denominations, those from the McIlvain, Hall, West, King, White and Rodney families being especially active in this work. This school was subsequently transferred to the Presbyterian Church, and there continued until about 1890, when a separate Methodist Sunday-school was organized. Of the latter, Bailey A. West was the superintendent. In 1834, Ferdinand Schey, a young German watchmaker, became the superintendent, and for six years greatly promoted the interest in the school.

John W. White and George W. Evans were successively at the head of the school, and under the latter the first celebration was held in 1845. Assisted by Dr. H. F. Hall, he was also instrumental in forming the first Juvenile Temperance Society. The later superintendents were Wm. A. Conwell, C. M. Marshall, and, since 1858, D. W. Breton.

The church at Lewes has sustained many circuit relations, and at first had services only at long intervals. In 1788 it was a part of Dover Circuit; after 1795, of Milford Circuit; in 1803, of Lewistown Circuit; 1841, Milton Circuit; 1852, Lewes Circuit, which then had eleven appointments; in 1864, Indian River Circuit was formed, and Lewes now has five appointments; and in 1880, Lewes became a station.

The following have been the Methodist ministers who preached at Lewes, with the years of their appointment by Conference:

1 Mr. Armstrong is the rector in 1887.
In 1853, Nathan Young and Solomon Metcalf were reported as colored preachers.

W. Evans was a local preacher from 1830 until 1887; and Joseph W. Hudson from 1875.

The colored people of Lewes maintain churches: St. George's African Methodist, in Pilot Town, on a lot adjoining the burial-ground, deeded to the Episcopal Church, in 1716. The present church was built in 1888, to take the place of a house burned down in 1882. It is plain but neatly kept. The second church is known by the name of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal (colored), and was completed in June, 1883, on Fourth Street, near Ship Carpenter Street; it also has an inviting appearance. Each congregation numbers about forty members.

Cemeteries.—The history of the oldest cemeteries at Lewes is somewhat obscure, but it is probable that the one at the lower part of Pilot Town, on the present Thomas Rowland place, was first devoted to the repository of the dead. As early as 1687 it is mentioned in the court records as the “Ancient Burial-Place,” where the citizens of the Hore Kill section made interment, and one acre of land was ordered to be set aside for such an use. It appears to have fallen into disuse early in the eighteenth century, so far as the public was concerned, and to have become a private burial-ground for the dead of the Bailey, Jacobs and Art families, who owned the adjacent lands. A few plain head-stones to the memory of persons of those families may still be seen in this ground, which is much neglected and not separately inclosed. The oldest stones are marked “John Jacobs, died 1731.” “Hannah Bailey, died, 1732, aged 72 years.” “Jacob Art, died, 1769.”

On the highway along Lewes Creek, and near the upper part of Pilot Town, a new burial-ground was established as early as August 7, 1716, when Samuel Rowland set aside “one acre of land, lying near the town of Lewes, forming on a river of Lewes to build thereon a church for a religious place of worship, for the church of England and no other way of being employed, and to pay unto me, my heirs, one grain of Indian corn yearly, forever, if demanded.”

This lot is just above the African Church and has not been used for years for its intended purpose. A few graves only have been marked by low sand-stones. It is probable that when the site of the Episcopal Church was located more centrally, in Lewes, this ground was practically abandoned. The title to the acre of land, which is still reserved for interments, remains in doubt, but the property seems rightfully claimed by St. Peter's Parish, whose cemetery is at the church. The oldest known grave in that yard is marked by a stone inscribed as follows:

"Here lyeth ye body of Margaret, widow of James Huling.

It is not likely that this yard was opened as early as 1707, and the above may have been a re-interment from the lower Pilot Town burial-ground. The cemetery is enclosed by a substantial brick wall and contains many graves. Four Governors of the State lie buried in it, namely: Daniel Rodney, died 1846, aged eighty-two years. Caleb Rodeney. Samuel Paynter, died 1845, aged seventy-seven years. Dr. Joseph Mall, died 1847. The first monument of any size that was erected in this yard has the following inscription:

"Here rest the remains of Captain James Drew, who commanded his Britannic Majesty's slop-of-war, 'De Brak,' in which he lost his life when she founded at the capes of Delaware the 10th of June, 1768. He was beloved for his virtue and admired for his bravery. His affectionate relict has erected this monument to perpetuate his memory."

The monument has lately been placed in good order and in connection with the interest perpetuated in the supposed lost treasures of the ill-fated 'De Brak,' is an object which attracts much attention. In this yard is also a small memorial to a child of Captain Stotesburg, which is the work of an Italian artist.

It is a small block of Italian marble, on which is carved a mantle half drawn aside, so delicately cut that one looks involuntarily for an inscription underneath the raised folds. Other tombstones perpetuate the memory of—

As early as 1694 the court ordered that a tract of land near the Block House Pond be used as a place for burial. At this place, in 1727, a Friends' burial-ground was opened, Mary Miers setting aside an acre of land for that purpose. Here some interments were early made, but, after the custom of Friends, were not marked by Headstones. In 1813 Jane Cord, a descendant of the original grantor, conveyed the above acre and three more to the trustees of the Camden Monthly Meeting for a burial-yard. The Friends removing, the use of a burial-place was no longer required, and, in 1840, most of the ground was sold to William Russell, and has been converted to other uses. Near by is the burial-ground of the Methodist Church, which has been secured in recent years. An earlier graveyard of this church was located on Shankland's Lane some time about 1788, and is not yet wholly abandoned, though not kept with the care that such places deserve.

The situation of Lewes, at the mouth of Delaware Bay, and its naturally defenseless condition, have exposed it to the attacks of all the foreign powers with which our country has been at war. In the colonial period, in the latter part of the seventeenth century, the coast was much harassed by the French privateers, who threatened to lay waste such towns as refused to pay them tribute. Fears were early entertained that Lewes would be singled out for an attack, and on the 15th of July, 1835, the court at Lewes took action in the matter of providing a watch for the approach of the enemy as follows:

"Present at court, Justice William Clark, John Stockley, Capt. Luke Watson, Thomas Oldman, Capt. Thomas Pemberton and Joseph Booth, when these minutes were placed upon the record:"

"An order and warrant from the Governor and Council was produced and read. Relating to a suspicion of a Design of our enemies, the French, to attack this or some of our neighboring Plantations, whereof safe guard it is ordered. That two men shall be hired to Watch upon the Cape every day from five in the morning until seven at night until ye first day of October next ensuing. In obedience whereunto the Justices considering of Parsons fitting for ye said watch and trust, and did Approve and approve of Anthony Parish and John Puller, and accordingly did agree with them."

Subsequently it was deemed best that this watch should be distributed among the citizens of the town and the vicinity, and the court decreed that "Watch bee appointed to be kept at Cape Inlopen," to begin Monday, June 7, 1697, and to continue until the season was ended,—

It does not appear that the enemy made his appearance that season for the purpose of pillage, but the following year the fears of the people were realized. The French pirates landed and sacked Lewes, August 27, 1698, as will be seen by the report of the court to the Council at Philadelphia, September 3, 1698:

"The 14. Gort acquainted the Council that he had received a Letter from ye Justices of the peace of Sussex county, which he read as follows:—

"This to our sorrows, but according to our duties, is to inform, That on Friday last, in the afternoon, a small, snug ship and a Sloop came too within our Cape, not wholly undescribed, but little disguised of being an enemy or French, both which they proved, and yesterday morning landed about 50 men, well armed, and came up town and plundered almost every house yore Committing great spoil, breaking open doors and chests, and taking away all money or plate to be found, as also all manner of goods and merchises worth anything, together with rugs, blanketings and all other Bed Covering, leaving scarce anything in your place to cover or wear.

"They all went on board last night; Killed several sheep and Hogs. They continue still at anchor in ye bay as near in the Bay opposite to this town as they can find water to ride in, and its doubted they will be on shore again before night for moreannie, if not to burn ye Houses, but we shall endeavor to save them. They try ready for all mischief, inwards or outwards, by Land or Water, and Have Pilots anyhow. They are now in chase latterwards of a Brigantine with their said sloop. The brigantine outsails you, and we hope in God will escape; they are beggarly Rogues, and will piluge for a trifle, and do think they may carry long enough until ye man-of-war at New York may have speedy notice. They took about eleven of ye chief of our town prisoners, and when they had made youse heap on board their plunder disabled all except one man, Captain Watson, Carpenter. This place is very open for danger, and very naked for defence. Mr. Clark's house and goods both Hath Sufficiently shared in ye villainy. We hope wee need not give you noe more sad news hereafter, nor ye street terror yet universe; here attend all Deses and Sires; all which is submitte to your Honor most serious consideration. By sir, ye Humble Servants, Luke Watson, John Hill, Thomas Oldham and Jonathan Bailey."

The people in the surrounding country were summoned to the relief of Lewes, and on the 17th of September, 1698, the court allowed payment of bills amounting to £21 13s. 1d., money "disbursed as a debt of the whole government for ammunition and provisions for ye county people summoned in and for the relief and assistance of the town of Lewes, who, on Saturday, the 27th day of August last past, were plundered by french pirates, to their great damage, which sd. pirates Left not the bay until the Wednesday following in the morning."

Lewes contributed her share in the Revolutionary War to secure the independence of the colonies. Col. David Hall, of this place, raised a regiment in November, 1776, which was at the battles of Brandywine, Germantown, Monmouth, and did valiant service in the South. Among its members from Lewes and vicinity were John Clifton, Whittington Clifton, William Walker, Samuel Dodd, Richard Davis, Michael Dorman, Edward Robinson, Benjamin Thompson, Thomas Walker, John Norman, William Lingo, William Orton, James Marsh, Thomas Rhoades, John Cullen and Thomas Gordon.

Not all, however, were patriots. There were some pronounced Tories in Lewes, and so intense was their opposition to the war that it resulted in a riot, in the summer of 1776, of which Henry Fisher said, "That they cut the flag-staff down and sold the flag for 15d., and nearly did bodily injury to the Court."

Joshua Fisher, a rank Tory, who was at that time a merchant at Lewes, was subsequently banished to Virginia by the Committee of Safety.

Later in the Revolution, a British man-of-war, the "Roebuck," lay opposite Lewes for some time, but did not injure the town. But a party from the ship landed and burned out the interior of Cape Henlopen Light-house. They also captured some cattle feeding on the marshes, but did no damage to life. Ascending the Indian River, the crew of the "Roebuck" took captive some patriots, residing on that stream, but discharged them after they had been held prisoners a short time.

In the War of 1812 the events at Lewes were of a more stirring nature, and embraced the investment of the town by the British. A full account of these events appears elsewhere in the chapter on the "War of 1812." The enemy appeared in the bay in the month of March, 1813, and made a demand upon the people for fresh provisions. This being refused, a bombardment was threatened by the British fleet, which consisted of two seventy-four-pounder ships,—the "Pontius" and the "Belvidere,"—one frigate, two sloops-of-war and some bargers, and the demand was renewed. It was again refused by Col. Samuel B. Davis, who had now taken command of the American forces. These consisted of some regular troops and militia, numbering in all about 500 soldiers. Most of these were quartered at Block-House Pond, the regular troops being in charge of the forts or earthworks at Pilot Town, on the site of the old colonial fort, and the fort on Lewes Creek, near the present Virden House. These were hastily equipped with guns brought to Lewes from the interior of the State. An arsenal was located between the two forts, on Ship Carpenter Street, near Second.

On the 13th of March, 1813, the bombardment of the town by the British began, and was actively continued some time. But the trees on the marsh obstructed their view to such an extent that their aim was not effective. The lower edge of the store door of Caleb Rodney (now the apelles house) was struck, and the impact of the ball may still be seen. The McIlvain house, which stood on the site of the present hotel, near the upper fort, was also struck, but beyond this no damage was done. The gunners in the American forts fired at long intervals, since their ammunition was limited, and it is thought that one of the enemy's barges was rendered unseaworthy by a ball from one of the forts. The fleet remained off Lewes about six months, and was restrained to a great extent from passing up the river by the effective work done by the pilots under Captain Marshall. The British admiral greatly feared the marine contrivances placed in the channel, and preferred to remain in the open waters, while the fleet ascended the Chesapeake instead of the Delaware Bay. To this fact Philadelphia owed its safety, and the inroads of the enemy were thus greatly hindered. Among the militia at Lewes was a company raised in the place and which had as officers:

Lieutenant, John Gano.  McCracken, Gilbert.

Art.  Nichols, Moses.
Art.  Norman, Thomas.
Barker, Charles.  Norman, John.
Batson, J. W.  Norwood, J. W.
Conwell, Jacob, Sr.  Orton, George.
Conwell, Jacob, Jr.  Paynter, Richard.
Champlin, Cook.  Rowland, John.
Davis, S. P.  Rowland, Samuel.
Edwards, Simon, Jr.  Thompson, Samuel.
Hall, David.  West, Samuel.
Johnson, William.

The company remained in service until March 13, 1815. On that date Captain Marshall entered a record in his book as follows:

"This day discharged all the men, took the keys of the magazine, nailed up the Guard-house and stopped the touch-holes of the cannon."

Most of the cannon were allowed to remain at Lewes and within recent years a number have been placed in position on the creek, near the spot where they did service in 1813, and are kept as memorials of the engagement which here took place in the second struggle for American Independence.

CHAPTER LXVII.

GEORGETOWN HUNDRED

Occupies a central position in Sussex County. Its border hundreds are Broad Kilm, Indian River, Dagsboro, Nanticoke and Cedar Creek, following, in the order named, from the north. Its area is small and its origin of comparatively recent date. This hundred was first erected by an act of the Legislature, January 29, 1833, which provided that Broad Kilm Hundred, should, after the 1st day of October, 1833, be divided into two hundreds, and named George R. Fisher, George Frame and John Ponder as commissioners to establish the boundary lines. Accordingly, Broad Kilm Hundred was divided, as near as possible, at equal distance between Milton and Georgetown, beginning on the Indian River boundary line and running thence to the line of Cedar Creek Hundred. The part west and south of the line run by the commissioners was ordered to be called Georgetown Hundred, and the elections were to be held in the town of Georgetown. It was also provided that the two hundreds were to have but one trustee of the poor and but one commissioner of the Levy Court.

On the 31st of January, 1835, the foregoing act was repealed, Georgetown Hundred passing out of existence. This was the condition until March 7, 1861, when the act of 1833 was revived and declared to have the same force as before its repeal in 1835. An amendatory act of January 16, 1863, authorized Georgetown Hundred to elect trustees and commissioners, the same as other hundreds, and from that period it dates its existence as a complete political division of the county.

The surface of Georgetown Hundred is in the form of an elevated plain, whose soil is a sandy loam. Here are the head waters of Indian Run, draining into the Atlantic Ocean, and of the Nanticoke River, whose waters fall into Chesapeake Bay. Nevertheless, the surface is so level near the source of that stream, that a system of ditching has been found necessary in order to secure more perfect drainage. Heavy growths of pine and the common deciduous trees abounded, and large areas have been brought under cultivation only in recent years. The ordinary farm crops yield well, and the improved conditions appear to be especially favorable for the cultivation of fruit and vegetables. Many small farms devoted to these interests have been opened since the completion of the railroad to Georgetown in 1868.

The level nature of the country and its consequent swampiness in some localities prevented the general settlement of the hundred long after other parts of the county were well occupied. The large tracts of land owned by non-residents was another obstacle to its early development. Among the first warrants were those granted to the Pettijohn family. August 3, 1715, John Pettijohn, Sr., became the owner of five hundred and forty acres of land, a part of the twelve hundred acres known as the Bundick tract, some of which was also warranted to John Allen, in 1722. The Pettijohns have lived continuously in the hundred, but the descendants of the family are not as numerous as they were a century ago. In the old Ebenezer Pettijohn house, east from Georgetown, which was taken down in 1878, were found some rare and curious coins bearing date from 1698 to 1723, the latter being probably the time when the building was erected, as the money was securely fastened in a mortise in the frame of the house. This property has passed out of the hands of the family.

In 1714, Pennsylvania warrants for land on the head-waters of Gravelly Branch, and the Long Bridge Branch of the Broad Kilm were issued to Walter Reed, two hundred acres; William Dauten, two hundred acres; Gilbert Marriner, two hundred acres; and in 1716, Thomas Park, two hundred acres.

A number of tracts of land in the hundred were granted on warrants issued by Worcester County, Maryland, and as no distinct record was kept, they cannot be here noted. In November, 1763, Benjamin Wooten received title for a tract of two hundred acres, called "Inclosed," which had previously been granted to Edward Wooten, with another tract called "Hound's Ditch."

On the 24th of July, 1764, an agreement was made between Benjamin Mifflin, of Philadelphia, and John Jones, of Worcester County, "alias New Sussex," to purchase lands and drain the marshes. In accordance with this plan, they purchased a tract, November 6, 1764, called "Ye Great Savannah," of Samuel Pettitjohn, which had been warranted to him in 1760. They also bought him another large tract of land on both sides of the "Great Drain," and three hundred acres adjoining, of Thomas Pettitjohn. A special act for the division of the lands acquired under the above agreement was passed by the Legislature January 30, 1818, and a final report was made in 1820 by Samuel Paynter, John Stockley and Isaac Tunnell, who had been appointed commissioners. The lands were divided between the heirs of John Sparhawk and Jonathan Shoemaker, but later passed into the possession of Aaron Marshall, and are now, in part, owned by Dr. William Marshall, of Milford.

In the fall of 1833 the following list of taxables of the newly-erected hundred (including also the town of Georgetown) was prepared:

THE BUSINESS INTERESTS of the hundred are confined to the small stations on the Junction and Breakwater Railroad. Of these, the hamlet of Redden, a little more than four miles from Georgetown, is the most important, containing a steam lumber-mill, two stores and a dozen residences. The station was established in August, 1870, with the name of Carey, but was soon after changed to its present title, to harmonize with the name of the post-office, already existing in the neighborhood, and which had been established through the efforts of Col. William O. Redden. The first agent was James A. Evans, who was succeeded, in April, 1886, by the present R. C. Hill. Large quantities of wood and lumber are shipped, the saw-mills having been extensively operated since 1879 by Isaac A. Peck and others.

The first store was opened in 1872, by James A. Evans, who is still in trade. He had previously merchandised at Carey's Cross-Roads, where he also kept the post-office, which was removed to the station with the store. In 1885 he was succeeded as postmaster by A. T. Dutton, who has carried on a store since 1879.

Carey's Cross-Roads is so called for the Carey family residing at that place, half a mile from Redden Station. A store was there opened in 1867 by James A. Evans, which was continued five years.

Robbins is a station six miles from Georgetown, and contains a store and post-office, kept by Joshua A. Lynch, who is also the station agent. Large saw and grist-mills, put up at this place in 1873 by Wm. B. Tomlinson & Co., were destroyed by fire in 1876.

Bennum Station, locally called Hancock's Crossing, is four miles northeast from Georgetown. A store is there kept by W. A. Warrington, who is also in charge of the interests of the railroad company.

J. B. McConnaughey built a steam saw-mill near Georgetown, on Layton Ditch, about 1850, which was operated by him many years. The mill is still standing and is now the property of the Bank of Georgetown.

Higher up the road to Milford, on Millin Ditch, John Harding, from New Jersey, successfully operated a steam saw-mill until he was accidentally killed in the mill. The machinery was removed to Milford more than twenty years ago.

CHURCHES.—There are a few religious societies in the hundred, outside of Georgetown, belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church. The oldest of these maintains McColey's Chapel, in the neighborhood of Carey's Cross-Roads. This building—a small frame—was erected in 1857, through the efforts of Trustan P. McColey, and was named for him. It has served its purpose well, but needs repairs, and an effort to that end, or the building of a new church, is being made at this time (the fall of 1887). Previous to the building of the chapel a small house on the opposite side of the street was used as a place of worship.

The membership of the chapel is small, and is a part of the Ellendale Circuit, the Rev. J. P. Prouse being the pastor. A Union Sunday-school is kept up by the neighbors through the efforts of C. Compton, Joshua A. Lynch, Charles R. Swain and others.

Reed's Chapel is on the Milton road, three miles from Georgetown. Locally this church is called "Sand Hill Church," on account of the sand deposits in the neighborhood, which is not unlike that found on the beach of the ocean. The chapel was named for the Rev. Mr. Reed, a preacher in charge of the circuit when it was erected, about thirty years ago. It was repaired in 1885, and is now a comfortable place of worship, and also belongs to Ellendale Circuit. There are about twenty-five members, belonging to the Dutton, Donovan, Spicer, Pettigjohn, Wilson, Roach and other families. Both these churches were formerly a part of the Methodist charge at Georgetown, which was the centre of a number of appointments in this part of the country.

GEORGETOWN.

Georgetown, the county-seat of Sussex County, is eligibly located near its geographical centre, about thirty-six miles southeast from Dover. It is a station on the Junction and Breakwater Railroad, and the northern terminus of the Breakwater and Frankford Railroad, the former completed in 1866, the latter in 1874. Much of the substantial growth of the town has taken place since the latter period, the population having increased from seven hundred and ten, in 1880, to about sixteen hundred in 1887, and since the agriculture of the surrounding county has become more diversified, thus increasing its wealth, the importance of the town as a trade centre has been proportionately increased. Within recent years many fine residences have been erected. There are, also, besides the county buildings and the beautiful little public park, a branch of the State Bank, two newspapers, two society halls, an academy and a fine public school building, four churches, factories, hotels, good stores and other elements of an active, enterprising business point.

The town was located solely to afford a more convenient place to transact the affairs of the county. An act of the Legislature, January 29, 1791, authorized the removal of the county-seat from Lewes, and located a new site for the county-town in James Pettyjohn's old field, near the centre of Sussex. For this purpose fifty acres of land were conveyed, May 9, 1791, to the following commissioners appointed to carry out the provisions of the act: George Mitchell, Esq., Robert Houston, Esq., William Moore, Esq., John Collins, Esq., Nathaniel Young, Esq., William Peery, Esq., Rhoads Shankland, Esq., Thomas Batson, Esq., Daniel Polk, Esq., and Woodman Stockley. An act of October 26, 1791, declared that the name of the place where the county buildings were being erected should be Georgetown, it is said, in honor of Commissioner George Mitchell, who was active in this movement.

Georgetown was surveyed for the commissioners in May, 1792, by Rhoads Shankland, who thus explained the plot: "In or near the centre of the town is a spacious square of one hundred yards each way, for public use; on the northeast side thereof stand the court-house and public offices. The streets run as follows: Pine, Market and Laurel Streets, Strawberry and Cooper Alleys run southwest and northeast; at right angles with them are Race, Bedford and Front Streets, North, Love, Cherry and South Lanes, and North and South Alleys.

"The lots are laid off sixty feet front and one hundred and twenty feet back, each lot having the convenience of a street or an alley for an outlet. There are eighteen lots of one acre each laid out on the north end of the town. The streets are laid off sixty feet wide and the alleys twelve feet wide."

Sale of lots in the town was made by the commissioners prior to 1800, as follows:

Three of the commissioners having deceased, a supplement to the act of 1791 was passed June 23, 1801, when Benton Harris, Dr. James Robertson and William Russell were appointed in the place of Robert Houston, William Moore and George Mitchell, deceased, and the court was authorized to fill future vacancies, so that clear titles could be given.

The original plat of Georgetown has been enlarged and additions were made in 1883 by John L. McKim and D. J. Layton—eighty lots—and a third addition of one hundred lots was made by W. D. Albury. West from the original plat, a suburban village has been laid out by Thomas Pepper, in which about thirty buildings have been erected in recent years, and which are not included in the corporate limits.

Aside from the provisions contained in the act authorizing the location of the new county-seat, the Legislature passed sundry acts, at divers times, for the government of the town. An act of February 7, 1795, to restrain the running at large of swine in the streets of Georgetown, authorized the killing of the same for the use of the prisoners in the jail. This matter was again legislated upon in 1801, "as some of the inhabitants had suffered great spoil and damage by the reason of the running at large, etc." A forfeit of the animals for the benefit of the prisoners was again authorized. The school fund received the benefit of fines on unrestrained animals in 1847.

A board of commissioners to govern the town was authorized by the act of March 3, 1851, and John Richards, John B. Waples, Jonathan R. Torbert, Matthew Rencz and John West were named as the first commissioners, until their successors should be elected in 1852. The powers of these commissioners were enlarged by the act of February 24, 1859, which also authorized the inclosure of the public park, the improvement of the sidewalks, and the enactment of ordinances for the sanitary and police regulations of the town. The amount of taxes to be raised was not to exceed two hundred and fifty dollars per year.

The act of March 18, 1863, extended the limits of the town one-half a mile each way, from a central point in the public square. These limits were retained by the act of March 2, 1869, under which the town has since been governed. This act provided a corporate name,—the "Commissioners of Georgetown," to whom were delegated the powers customary in such cases,—and enabled the election of a full set of officers, which made the town independent of the surrounding hundred.

The first election, held March 6, 1869, resulted in the choice of the following:

Aldermen, James J. H. Russell.

Commissioners:

Charles M. Cullen ......................................................1797
Shepard P. Martin .....................................................1797

Charles T. Tunell ......................................................1797

Assessor, Joseph H. Marvel.

Treasurer, Charles H. Richarda.

Since that period the following have served as Aldermen and Secretaries:
SUSSEX COUNTY.

With the more general use of steam and the shipping facilities afforded by the railroad, after 1868, there was a greater diversity of the manufacturing interests. A steam saw-mill was operated many years, in the eastern part of the town, by Curtis A. Conaway, who also established a foundry near by, about 1875, bringing the material from Milford. The former industry was discontinued and the latter passed into the hands of George M. Thoroughgood, in 1883, who subsequently carried it on. At Georgetown plow-castings and repairs were principally made. In 1883 a new steam saw-mill was erected on the north-western part of the town by Benjamin Carman, which is still carried on by Frederick Kree.

The culture of small fruits, peaches and vegetables, at and near Georgetown, created a demand for canning and preserving establishments, which was first met by William H. Lingle, who opened a small cannery on Laurel Street, which he carried on a few years.

In August, 1875, an association, known as the "Fruit Preserving Company," was formed and buildings erected near the railroad depot, in which to carry on business. An Alden Evaporating Machine was secured and about forty thousand pounds of fruit preserved in the fall of that year by E. R. Sharpe, manager. By an act of the Legislature the "Fruit Preserving Company" became incorporated February 1, 1877, with corporators D. J. Layton, C. C. Stockley, H. T. Downing, Jacob Moore, E. R. Sharp W. W. Rawlings, P. S. Faussett, J. S. Adkins, J. W. Lynch and William Tam. This company carried on operations until the interests it controlled were transferred to the C. H. Treat Manufacturing Company, and the building now forms a part of that establishment.

In 1876 the "Georgetown Packing Co.," was formed, having as members E. Wilson, William A. Faussett, John West, G. C. Calhoun and G. M. Thoroughgood. In a few years Thoroughgood and Calhoun became the owners, and later D. S. Rodeney was associated with them. The company put up tomatoes and peaches until 1884, when it ceased work, and the cannery was vacated.

In 1887, George M. Thoroughgood and G. C. Calhoun built and put in operation a new cannery, on North Cedar Street, which is so arranged that it has a capacity to put up eighty-six thousand three-pound cans per season, and when fully operated forty-eight hands are employed.

The cannery of William A. Faussett & Sons, which has been operated since 1883, has a somewhat smaller capacity.

In 1884 the car-shops were removed from Lewes to Georgetown, with the purpose of carrying on repair work on an extensive scale. J. D. Billings was the master mechanic, A. A. Barrett the master machinist and there were thirty skilled employees. Before these plans could be carried out, the railway passed under control of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Company, which transferred the interests to its works at Wilmington, keeping but a small repair shop at Georgetown. The first station agent, in 1868, was John M. Rawlins. His successor has been the present agent, Charles F. Tunnell.

The interests of C. H. Treat and his associates have been the most important in the industrial history of the town, and have given a new impetus to its manufacturing life. The firm first became identified with the affairs of Delaware in 1878, when the business of manufacturing wooden-ware from veneers was established at Frankford, in Sussex County. Recognizing the superior advantages offered by Georgetown, the interests were transferred to the latter place in 1883, and absorbed the plant of the "Fruit Preserving Company" near the railway station, where, under the title of The C. H. Treat Manufacturing Company, an extensive business has since been conducted. The company was incorporated April 4, 1883, with a capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars and the following corporators: Charles H. Treat, president; Norman B. Huxford, secretary and treasurer; Andrew B. Banghart, superintendent; Henry Treat, James M. Huxford and A. H. Montague. The latter was placed in charge of the New York agency, through which many of the products of the factories are sold. The plant comprises several acres of land, on which stand a number of three-story frame buildings, aggregating seven hundred and fifty feet in length, and varying from thirty to thirty-six feet in width, which are equipped with the most improved machinery for the purpose of manufacturing wooden novelties in three-ply veneer, butter, pie and other dishes patented by Messrs. Banghart and Treat, and the canning and preserving of fruit and other vegetables. The establishment in all its appointments is very complete and the business, still in its infancy, necessitates the employment of several hundred persons.

The Sussex Manufacturing Company was incorporated April 10, 1885, and organized to begin business in 1886. Of this company C. H. Treat was elected president; N. B. Huxford, secretary; and Henry Treat, treasurer. An eligible location was secured at the intersection of the railroads, in the eastern part of the town, where a large manufactory has been erected. The main building is a two-story frame, thirty by one hundred and twenty feet, with two wings, thirty by forty feet, in which have been placed machinery for manufacturing baskets, barrels, casks, builders' lumber and scroll and jig-sawing. A large force of men is employed, not only in the factory, but in various parts of the State to furnish the material for the consumption of the establishment, whose business has already become a pronounced success.

Incidental to the foregoing is the extensive mercantile establishment of C. H. Treat & Co., the largest in the State outside of Wilmington. A two-story frame building, forty-six by one hundred and forty feet, is occupied, in which are handled almost every species of merchandise, and the transactions involve the sale of seventy-five thousand dollars' worth of goods annually.

A system of excursions from various parts of the Peninsula has extended the fame of this house beyond the limits of the county.

It is said that the first store in the place was kept by Benton Harris, in a small building, one story high, near the present bank, which was afterwards occupied by Jehu Stockley as a watch-maker's shop. Harris later had a store on the site of the Brick Hotel, then moved to the Fauccett corner, where James A. Harris afterwards traded, the former merchandising until his death, about 1830. More than sixty years ago William Bell had a small store on the site of Dr. Richards' residence. James Anderson also traded, prior to 1810, on the west side of the square. At this place Matthew Rench subsequently did a large business, and was one of the successful merchants of the town. Joshua S. Layton and Caleb B. Sipple were a contemporary firm selling goods, and also being large contractors, they erected the new court-house, jail and the Brick Hotel. Charles Tunnell, David Moore and John B. Waples were also successful merchants in their day. In recent years the trade of the place has been divided among a large number of firms, there being in 1887 three drug-stores, several clothing-stores, hardware and general stores, to the number of about one dozen. Some of the foregoing merchants were also the postmasters, but more frequently the office was kept in private houses and shops. In 1808 the postmaster was a Mr. Frederica; and James Anderson was a later appointee. Other postmasters were Philip Short, Charles Tunnell, P. S. Purnell, James W. Lynch, Levin A. Pepper, James Maull, Greenbury Rogers, James A. Wolfe, James Barker and James Butler. The business of the office has very much increased in recent years, and improved mail facilities have been afforded.

The first public-house in Georgetown stood near the present Eagle Hotel. It was put up by Art Willis, and was kept by his family. The latter hotel was partially built in 1807, and has had many keepers, among those of earlier periods being Philip Short, David R. Smith and Philip Jones. In an enlarged condition the house has preserved its old-time popularity. On the southwest side of the Park was a frame building, set aside for the public as early as 1811, where Robert D. Stout dispensed hospitality. After him John H. Ellegood was a popular landlord until 1836, when the old house was demolished and the present Brick Hotel built. Burton C. Barker was the first keeper, and later was Adolphus Ewing. During the Civil War the place was known as the Union Hotel, but the original name now again applies. The past twelve years it has been so well kept by R. A. Rosenbaum that it is one of the most popular hosteries on the Peninsula. On the site of Raynor's drug store was an old-time tavern, after 1820, for a number of years, kept by James Gaskins as the "Rising Sun," a fact which was indicated by its sign.
In 1823, William Russell kept this house, and later James Maull was the landlord. The latter also kept public-houses, on the Faustet corner, and in an old red building which stood on the site of Layton’s drug store, and which was known as the “Wilson House.”

The physicians are C. R. Richards, Joseph B. Wacles, C. R. Layton, O. D. Robinson, Alexander Laws and Joseph R. Layton; the two latter retired.

One of the old-time law-offices stood on the site of the fine residence south of the bank, and has been occupied by J. W. Houston, Willard Salisbury, Thomas Robinson, John R. McFee and John H. and Edward R. Paynter. It was torn down in 1878.

South of the Brick Hotel, in the house demolished in 1887, George Alfred Townsend, the celebrated writer, was born while his father, a Methodist minister, lived at Georgetown.

One of the customs peculiar to the people of Sussex, from time immemorial, is to hold high carnival on the day when the results of a general election are announced. On this “Return Day” the official Board of Canvassers, with the sheriff presiding, meets at Georgetown at twelve o’clock, noon. But early in the morning people from all parts of the county, and even from Maryland, may be seen coming to the county-seat, some walking, others on horseback, and still others in wagons and carts, drawn by one or more oxen, by an ox and a horse, an ox and a mule, or several oxen and a horse, the vehicle being gayly decorated with bright colors or flags. Often this crowd presents a motley appearance, some being dressed in costumes which were used in primitive times, and others purposely arraying themselves in an outlandish manner to give more zest to the spirit of the occasion. The successful candidates also come to town and are met by a great crowd of admiring friends, who extend their congratulations in an unmistakable manner. Some of these candidates are taken up bodily, and are carried around on men’s shoulders when the results are announced from the window of the court-house to the congregated mass below. Booths, stalls and stands are erected near the court-house, where all kinds of edibles, such as opossum and rabbit meat, fish and oysters, can be procured.

The women, who constitute a considerable portion of the crowd, are generously treated to cakes, candies, and the best the booths afford. The citizens of the town hold a general reception, and all are expected to help entertain the people, especially if they are friends of the successful party. Every one endeavors to make “Return Day” a hilarious one, and all seem willing to perpetuate a custom which is now peculiar to Sussex County alone, and which sometimes brings three thousand people to town.

The Georgetown Branch of the Farmers’ State Bank began business in 1807, in a frame building, a part of which now forms the residence of Benjamin Burton, on the south side of the public square. In 1857 the bank was moved to the substantial brick building now occupied, on the corner of the square and Bedford Street. The office is now furnished, and has the modern appliances to secure greater protection for the funds entrusted to the keeping of the bank. GEORGETOWN BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION was organized under the act of Incorporation granted March 12, 1885. The first officers elected in August 1885 were: president, E. R. Paynter; vice-president, B. E. Wagaman; secretary, C. R. Jones; treasurer, R. W. D. Albury; attorney, R. C. White; directors, Joseph T. Adams, John L. Thompson, W. M. Hazel, Charles L. Moore, R. C. White, James S. Maull, W. H. Boyce, H. T. Downing, Isaac N. Fooks. The association is successfully conducted.

FRANKLIN LODGE, No. 12, F. A. M.—The dispensation for this lodge was granted June 27, 1823, and on the 21st of July an organization was effected, with the following principal officers: W. M., Caleb S. Layton; S. W., Kendall Batson; J. W., Asaph Buck; Secretary, John Handy; Treasurer, Matthew Bench; Senior Deacon, George Frailm; Junior Deacon, Robert Burton; Tyler, John Gray.

This lodge became an incorporated body February 25, 1847, but owned real estate prior to that time. The corner-stone of its hall was laid August 17, 1841, forty-three members participating in the ceremonies; but the building, which was also used for an academy, was not immediately completed. In 1843 it received the benefit of a lottery authorized for the purpose, and that year was finished for occupancy. Since that time the meetings of Franklin Lodge have been steadily held in the upper story of the building, while the lower has remained under the control of the academy trustees. The membership of the lodge has been drawn on in the formation of other lodges in the neighboring towns—numbering but twenty-two in 1887. At the same time the principal officers were: W. M., Charles T. Purnell; S. W., McKendree Downham; J. W., C. Rodney Layton; Secretary, Andrew B. Banghart; Treasurer, Charles P. Purnell; S. D., George A. Jones; J. D., Alfred C. McGill; Tyler, H. H. Day.

HOPKINS, No. 3, ROYAL ARCH MASONS, was instituted at Georgetown June 19, 1826, and had among its early members John Handy, Asaph Buck, Joseph G. Oliver, Edward Collins, Winder Dashiel, Trustee P. McColl, David R. Smith and Samuel Wise.

From 1890 to 1846 no meetings of the chapter are recorded; they were then again resumed, but once more discontinued during the Civil War. The chapter was revived in the early part of 1870, being now designated as No. 3. In January of that year there were twenty-five members, and Jacob Moore was the High Priest. After a few years the meetings of the chapter at Georgetown were again discontinued—Franklin Lodge being the only Masonic body in 1887.

UNION LODGE, No. 3, I. O. O. F., was instituted at Laurel, July 4, 1883, as Bayard Lodge, No. 3. It was reinstated at Georgetown, May 19, 1846, with the present name, upon the application of Joseph Ellis, Noble Grand; Thomas I. Philips, Vice-Grand; John Stockley, Secretary; Thomas W. Records, Treasurer; Cyrus C. Windsor, Dr. Wm. B. Derrickson, James E. Ralph, Jacob Stockley and T. S. Philips. February 22, 1849, the lodge was incorporated, and an effort was made to erect a hall two years later, but this purpose was not accomplished until 1856. The meetings meantime were held in the old school building. This hall was enlarged and remodelled in the fall of 1884, being completed in September of that year. It is a three-story frame building, in the second story of which is also a public hall, twenty-eight by fifty feet. This hall is under the management of Charles H. Taylor.

The lodge has prospered financially, having property in 1887 amounting to $778,49. Its members numbered forty-two, and its principal officers were: Noble Grand, W. S. Wallis; Vice-Grand, Wm. J. Thoroughgood; Recording Secretary, Charles S. Wallis; Permanent Secretary, Samuel R. Wilson; Treasurer, George A. Jones.

SUSSEX TEMPLAR OF HONOR, No. 2, was incorporated February 21, 1861, and authorized by the Legislature to unite with Rechabite Division, No. 22, Sons of Temperance, and Union Lodge, No. 3, I. O. O. F., to form a stock company, and erect a building for the use of these societies and for seminary purposes. This object, however, was not accomplished, and the latter society is the only one which did not soon after suspend its meetings.

NANTICOKE TRIBE, No. 21, I. O. R. M., was organized at Georgetown April 24, 1884, by visiting members from other tribes, and the number of seventy, and has an enrollment of forty-five members. On the 23rd of January, 1885, it became an incorporated body and has been prosperous since its institution, having increased its membership to eighty-two. A neatly-furnished wigwam is maintained in the second story of Odd Fellows' Hall. In 1887 the trustees were McKendree Downham, John L. Thompson and C. R. Layton.

GEORGETOWN LODGE, No. 39, A. O. A. M., was instituted about 1871. Its meetings were held with considerable interest about three years, when they were
SUSSEX COUNTY.

The lodge had at one time forty members.

Midland Grange, No. 27, P. of H., holds its meetings at Georgetown, and had in March, 1887, R. J. Davidson as master, and Miss Effie L. Davidson as secretary.

Company G, National Guard of Delaware, was mustered at Georgetown March 31, 1887, with twenty-nine men and the following officers: Captain, Wm. H. Boys; First Lieutenant, Charles L. Moore; Second Lieutenant, Chas. W. Cullen; First Sergeant, Richard A. Rosenbaum. A requisition was made for fifty-eight rifles, used by a former company at this place, and military duties were at once begun. At the encampment of the State Guard at Rehoboth Beach, July 27 to August 3, 1887, the company had more members present than any other organization. It also made a creditable appearance on account of its numbers and soldierly bearing at the Constitutional Celebration at Philadelphia, September 15 to September 17, 1887.

Educational and Religious. — Schools have been maintained at Georgetown since the location of the town, the first school-house being twenty-two feet square, and standing on the site of Caleb Lynch's residence. In February, 1812, Isaac Tunnell, Benton Harris, William Russell, Robert D. Stout, Francis Brown and Peter Robinson were incorporated as the "trustees of the Georgetown school," and conducted it as a private enterprise. In 1886 a new school-building was erected on Pine Street, out of the accrued income of the school fund, and by voluntary contributions. This later became known as the "old academy," to distinguish it from the new one erected in 1843. In it public schools were taught until the present school building was occupied in 1885. It is a two-story brick, twenty-four by thirty-six feet, and remains as one of the landmarks of the town. The Rev. Mr. Kingsbury was one of the first teachers, conducting what was then known as an academy. Ten years earlier, in the winter of 1826, Dr. Davis had located at Georgetown, and announced that "by Divine permission" he would open an academy January 1, 1826.

The present academy building was erected by the joint efforts of the Masons and the citizens of the town, through a board of trustees, from 1841 to 1843. In the latter year, by the help of a fund secured through a lottery, the lower story was completed for school purposes and Loren Johnson became the first principal. Subsequently John L. McKim, Oliver Wilson and others conducted the schools, which was well patronized until the breaking out of the war in 1861. In later years McKendree Downham and Elijah Conover were then principals, the latter in 1885, when the last session was held.

Under the act of March 29, 1781, a Union District was authorized, of Districts No. 67, 96, 108 and 109, to be controlled by the "Board of Commissioners of the Public Schools of Georgetown." This act was amended March 11, 1885, when the commissioners were empowered to sell the old building, secure a new site on which to erect a building, issuing bonds to the amount of six thousand dollars to pay the same, provision for which was made by a special tax. Accordingly, a fine site was secured in the northeastern part of the town, upon which was erected, in the summer and fall of 1885, a main building, thirty-two by sixty-six feet, and a wing, thirty-two by forty-two feet, each being a frame, two stories high. Four school-rooms and a hall were thus afforded, having settings for nearly six hundred persons. The external appearance of the building is relieved by a belfry, and the whole was substantially completed at a cost of about six thousand five hundred dollars. At that time the Board of Commissioners was composed of William H. Boys; R. F. Wagamon, William J. McNatt, H. T. Downing, Levin T. Saulsbury, Charles B. Jones, Alfred P. Pepper, C. R. Layton and George W. Faucett.

The schools were opened in this building in December, 1885, Calvin Cubbage being the principal and having three assistant teachers. They had two hundred and forty pupils enrolled in 1887, and were maintained at an expense of one thousand eight hundred dollars per year. John A. Collins was the principal, B. C. White president of the commissioners, and Joseph B. Waples treasurer.

St. Paul's Church, Protestant Episcopal. — The early records of this church have been destroyed, but from contemporary accounts it appears to have been organized in 1794. On the 21st of June, that year, Rowland Bevin, Edmond Dickenson, Abram Harris, Philips Kolloch, Isaac Wilson and Warren Jefferson were elected trustees, to whom was conveyed one-third of an acre of land on Pine and Front Streets, on which to erect a church. But it seems that this site was not desired, as it was sold in 1806, to William Russell, after four other lots on Pine Street had been secured, on which was begun a frame church in 1804. Owing to the small membership, there was some difficulty in completing the building for want of funds, and on the 15th of January, 1805, the Legislature passed an act to enable the vestry to raise by lottery one thousand five hundred dollars to finish the church, and to inclose the land belonging to the burying-ground.

The church was dedicated on St. Paul's Day, 1806, by the rector, the Rev. Hamilton Bell. Up to this time the services were held in the court-house. The church was not fully completed for many years, and on the 8th of February, 1827, another lottery was authorized by the Legislature to raise a fund of ten thousand dollars, for the purpose of "building an academy and Masonic Hall, and finishing the Episcopal Church." John Stockley, Thomas Robinson, Sr., and Philip Short were named as managers, but the lottery was not held.

The frame church was thirty-six by forty-eight feet, and had galleries on three sides, with a high pulpit, canopied by a sounding-board. A clerk's desk was in front of the pulpit. This building was removed in 1843 to make place for a brick church, which was erected on its site, and which was consecrated in November, 1844. The latter edifice was rebuilt during the rectorship of the Rev. R. J. Douglass, and was again opened for service October 13, 1851. It is an attractive building, in the Gothic style, with a tower having an open vestibule and a spire. Internally the church was much beautified during the pastorate of the Rev. J. C. Kerr, 1886-87, and a good pipe-organ supplied. On the same lot is a small Sunday-school chapel, erected by the Rev. Douglass, which became the property of the parish in 1886. The entire property is valued at six thousand dollars, and was controlled, in 1887, by the following vestry: Edwin R. Paynter, Wm. H. Boyce, Charles C. Stockley, Wm. H. Rawlings, David T. Marvel, Charles L. Moore and Ed. D. Hearn.

The wardens of the parish since 1888 have been Matthew Rouch, George R. Fisher, James Anderson, Edward Wootten, Caleb S. Layton, Robert W. D. Albury, Edwin R. Paynter and Wm. H. Boyce.

From 1804 to 1888 the rectors of the parish were the Reverends Hamilton Bell, James Wilbank, J. Foreman, Daniel Higbee, N. Kingsbury, C. Pleasant.

In 1838 the Rev. J. L. McKim became the rector, and served the parish two years. Then came the Revs. C. F. H. Whitesides and Walter E. Franklin. From March, 1844, until April, 1867, the Rev. John L. McKim was again the rector, his ministry being the longest in the history of the church. The successive rectors were,—from November, 1867, Rev. Charles De L. Allen; December 3, 1871, Rev. Benjamin J. Douglass, who resigned September 1, 1884; January 1, 1885, to January, 1887, the Rev. J. C. Kerr, the last regular rector. In the spring of 1887 the Rev. Louis W. Wells preached several months; but since that time the pulpit has been vacant. The parish has fifty-three communicant members, and maintains a good Sunday-school, of which Edwin R. Paynter is the superintendent.

The Georgetown Methodist Episcopal Church was founded as Wesley Chapel in the early part of the present century. A board of trustees, composed of John Houston, James Prettyman, Jeremiah Griffith, Robert W. McCollery, Thomas Womersley, Peter Parker, Harris L. Wilson, William Dickerson, John McCollery, James M. Round and Eli McCollery, who purchased a lot in 1802, on which to build a church. This lot on Pine Street was enlarged in 1806 by an additional purchase, so as to afford room for burial purposes. A brick meeting-house was begun, which was not completed for many years, since the members were few and poor. Yet, through the efforts of several devoted women—Mrs. Martha Richards, Miss Louisa Wolfe and Mrs. Margaret Rickards—funds were collected, and the place made more comfortable. The first seats in the church were without backs, and everything was extremely plain. An increased interest in religious matters followed, which augmented the membership, and among those now active in church work were Jonathan R. Torbert, local preacher; William Russell, class-leader; David Moore, George Kollock, Wesley Wolfe and others. Later were added Charles and Sarah Tunnell, Kendall B. Wingate and David Dodd.

In 1859 it was determined to erect a new church on Race Street, which should be thirty-seven by fifty-four feet, and whose estimated cost was three thousand dollars. But, unfortunately, again the work of completion was deferred, and it was not until October 13, 1865, that the church was ready for consecration. That interesting service was performed by Bishop Simpson and the Rev. A. Cookman. The old church was then demolished; but the cemetery is still used, though in a neglected condition. The present church is a two-story frame, which was remodeled and much beautified in 1882. Its value has been placed at five thousand dollars, and the parsonage on the opposite side of the street at one thousand five hundred dollars. This property was controlled in 1887 by Trustees Charles F. Richards, Peter S. Fauciott, Charles T. Purnell, Wilbur F. Tunnell, Charles P. Tunnell, Dr. Charles H. Richards and J. T. Adams.

In 1887 the church had one hundred and seventy-five members, forming three classes, led by Charles P. Tunnell, M. J. McNatt and the pastor, the Rev. W. J. Du Hadway, who has had ministerial charge since 1885.

The Presbyterian Church of Georgetown was organized January 27, 1860, by a committee of the Presbyterian Church of Lewes. Eight persons united in membership and Elisha D. Cullen was elected ruling elder. He served until his death, February 8, 1862, and on the 13th of May, 1864, John R. McFee was elected to that office, which he has since filled. In the fall of 1887 the congregation had thirty-eight members and no regular pastor, there being occasional preaching by supplies. The only regular pastor was the Rev. J. Ballie Adams who was installed April 27, 1873, and resigned March 1, 1881. Previous to his ministry the preaching was also by supplies, and the meetings were first held in the court-house. On the 6th of October, 1871, the contract for building a chapel on West Bedford Street was awarded to Hiram T. Downing and Peter Pepper for three thousand dollars, and on the 5th of December, 1872, the church building was dedicated by the Rev. Dr. Patton. It is an attractive structure, in the Gothic style of architecture, and has been kept in good repair.

African Methodist Episcopal Church.—This church existed as an organized body as early as 1840, when its trustees were Moses Robinson, Isaac Kollock, George Radcliff and Timothy Jacobs, to whom William E. Harris conveyed a lot of land on which to build a church and open a burial-ground. A small frame building was erected, which stood until 1867, when the present house took its place. In this both meetings and schools have since been kept. The church has about forty members.

The Union Cemetery Company was incorporated by an act of the Legislature, March 24, 1881, and was organized by electing nine directors. John D. Rodney, president; and George W. Bennum, secretary and treasurer. In 1887 the directors were P. S. Faucett, George W. Bennum, Charles H. Taylor, W. S. Walls, I. N. Fooks, James H. McOltwathen, George C. Calhoun, Joseph S. Wilson and Wilbur F. Tunnell. The cemetery contains three and three-quarters acres of land, on the east side of the town, which has been neatly inclosed and tastefully improved.

In the cemetery of the Episcopal Church at Georgetown the following tomb-stones have been noted:

Died. 1827, Dr. Isaac Robertson. 1854, John B. Waples.
1843, Col. Wm. D. Waples. 1865, Matthew Ranch.
1849, Gen. David R. Smith. 1873, Dr. Philip Smith.
1840, Joshua Layton. 1875, Eli Wells.
1849, Robert Munford. 1877, Asbury C. Pepper.

Among those interred in the old Methodist cemetery were:

CEDAR CREEK HUNDRED.

CEDAR CREEK was so named on account of the abundance of cedars on its banks, and from the stream the hundred takes its name. Originally all of the land in this hundred north of the creek formed a portion of St. Jones County, but in 1638, upon the change of name of the counties St. Jones and Whorekill to Kent and Sussex, Misquillen Creek was substituted for Cedar Creek, as the line dividing the two counties. The hundred is the most northern in Sussex County, and is bounded on the north by Misquillen Creek, on the east by Delaware Bay, on the south by Prime Hook Creek and Georgetown Hundred, and on the west by Nanticoke and Misquillen Hundreds. The land is well watered by numerous small streams, and that is in a state of cultivation produces largely the usual fruits, grains and vegetables. Cedar Creek, which nearly separates the northern and southern parts of the hundred, is navigable as far as the brick granary, and affords facilities for shipping to those living in the vicinity. The mouth of this stream was often filled with sand, impeding navigation. To remedy this, an act was passed February 2, 1793, for cutting a canal to begin at or near Lewis' Ditch in Cedar Creek and to run into the Delaware Bay or Misquillen Creek. Nothing, however, was done till 1848, when George R. Fisher was instrumental in digging a canal from this point to Misquillen Creek. In 1869 the Cedar Creek Navigation Company was incorporated, and the present channel dug.

Like facilities for shipping are afforded to those in the northern part by the Misquillen Creek, which is navigable to Milford. The Delaware, Maryland and Virginia Railroad, running north and south through the central part of the hundred, affords excellent advantages for travel or shipment by rail. Well-constructed and numerous highways make travel through the different parts of the hundred easy and convenient.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS. — A tract of land one thousand by four hundred and eighty perches, containing three thousand acres, and lying between Prime Hook and Slaughter Creeks, was patented June 21, 1671, by Governor Lovelace to Richard Perrott, of Virginia, concerning whom more information will be found in a letter from him to Governor Lovelace in the "General History of Sussex County." The large tract obtained by Richard Perrott in part descended to his grandson, Richard Parrott, who conveyed his interest to Berkley Codd, who was a descendant of Perrott, on October 29, 1718. With the exception of the lands resurveyed for John and William Bellamy, conveyance were made to the owners by Codd. At his decease the property vested in his widow, who devised it to her great-grandson, Thomas Till, whose widow afterwards married George Read, of New Castle, signer of the Declaration of Independence. For George Read and Gertrude, his wife, the land was resurveyed and the following land conveyed: In 1779, to Nathan and Robert Young, five hundred and seventy-five acres of land and two hundred and sixty-seven acres of marsh, being a part of "Pleasant." This portion is now owned by Mark Davis, George H. Draper, Joseph H. Draper, Nehemiah D. Draper and Thomas E. Draper.

"Pleasant," a tract of one thousand acres, bounded on the north by Slaughter Creek and on the east by "Marsh Patent," was resurveyed for John Bellamy, May 30, 1864. "The Fancy," containing one thousand acres, situate west of "Pleasant" and also touching Slaughter Creek, was resurveyed for William Bellamy at the same time. These tracts were all situated partly within the Parrott grant. On the 14th of February, 1864-88, two thousand and ninety-four acres of marsh and upland, known as "Marsh Patent," was granted to Luke Watson, Sr. This was situate partly within and partly without the above tract. In the same year there was resurveyed for Henry Smith a tract of six hundred acres, called "Delight," adjoining "Marsh Patent," and bounded on the south by Prime Hook Creek. The next tract to the west was "Fairfield," containing six hundred acres, warranted to Luke Watson, November 16, 1863, which also touched Prime Hook Creek on the south. To John and Samuel Watson there were warranted on the same date six hundred acres of land situate west of "Fairfield."

To Charles Draper, in 1773, two hundred and thirteen acres of land and two hundred and twenty-one acres of marsh, which are now owned by the heirs of William Russell.

At the same time there was conveyed to Mark Davis four hundred and sixty-one acres of land and one hundred and ten acres of marsh of the tracts "Pleasant" and "The Fancy." This land is now in the possession of Joseph M. Davis and Thomas J. Davis.

At the same date one hundred acres of "The Fancy" was sold to John Ricketts. It is now owned by —- Yerkes. An additional five hundred and fifty-eight acres, resurveyed at the same time, is now the property of the heirs of H. B. Fiddeman and Benjamin F. Waples.

The tract "Fairfield" is now owned by the heirs of Benjamin F. Waples, who, together with Robert Roach and the two daughters of Robert H. Carey, are the possessors of the larger part of the "Marsh Patent."

"Delight" is owned by John B. Smith, of Milford, a lineal descendant of Henry Smith, the patentee.

In 1773 John Cirwithin was in the possession of sixty-seven acres of fast land and the body of Cypress Swamp, which he claimed as a part of the original survey of John and Samuel Watson. Their land is now in the possession of David Coverdale and the heirs of Benjamin F. Waples.

On November 1, 1729, Caleb Cirwithin purchased of Berkley Codd three hundred acres of the John and Samuel Watson tract. The other three hundred acres were sold August 10, 1838, to Luke Watson, Jr., by Wm. Pyle, who purchased the entire tract from the Watsons.

"Cullin's Purchase," a tract of five hundred acres on the southeast side of Misqiplion Creek, was warranted to George Cullin on May 27, 1860.

On January 5, 1861, Thomas Skidmore, a planter of St. Jones' (Kent) County, conveyed to Wm. Clark, merchant, of Deale County (Sussex), a plantation of four hundred acres on the north side of Cedar Creek, near its mouth and crossing over the land near a branch of Misqiplion Creek, as by survey of Cornelius Verhoofe, and granted to Skidmore by the Whorick Court.

Four hundred acres of land on the south side of Cedar Creek was surveyed for John Dickerson in October, 1866. It adjoined land of Henry Penington and John Outon, and descended to John Dickerson, son of the patentee.

On December 29, 1677, Governor Andros patented to Robert Hart nine hundred acres on the north side of Cedar Creek, known as "Hart's Range." Robert Hart was chief of surveyors, and on the 15th of November, 1681, there was warranted to him by the court of Kent County nine hundred acres of land, which was surveyed for James Louter, who assigned his interest to Robert Hart, Sr., from whom it descended to Robert Hart, Jr. "Hart's Delight," a tract of six hundred acres on the north side of Cedar Creek, adjoining his other lands, was warranted by the Whorick Court and surveyed April 6, 1680. The Hart land lay between the Cedar and Misqiplion Creeks and extended eastward to the bay. It is now principally owned by George R. Fisher, Henry Carter, Miles Mills, Joseph Jackson, Henry Pierce, C. S. Watson, Mrs. Dr. William Marshall and the heirs of William Pierce.

"Mount Holly," a tract of four hundred and ten acres, was also granted to Robert Hart by the court of St. Jones, by warrant bearing date November 16, 1681. It is situated on the north side of Cedar Creek and soon afterwards was conveyed to Henry Molleston, who, on the 1st of November, 1687, conveyed the tract to John Richards. On July 20, 1704, William Clark, attorney for John Richards, sold the land to Thomas Stapleford, in whose family it remained until 1825, when it was purchased by Joshua Deput. "Mount Holly" is now owned by James H. Deputy of Zachariah, R. G. Smith and Mrs. Eli Hammond.

On a warrant bearing date December 11, 1684, there were surveyed for Dennis Brown and William Townsend four hundred and fifty acres on the north side of the north branch of Cedar Creek. It remained joint property until February 19, 1716, when it was divided and resurveyed.

On August 9, 1690, there was conveyed to Henry Bowman, by special warrant from the commissioners of property, a tract of land known as "Little Graves End." It was formerly owned by Thomas Skidmore and Thomas Williams, to whom it was warranted as four hundred acres. On the re-survey made for Bowman, with the vacant land, glades and marshes then taken in, it was found to contain nine hundred and thirty-three acres. Henry Bowman also owned other lands in the hundred, and after his death a portion was inherited by his son, Henry Bowman, Jr., and the remainder was sold by his administrator, William Clark. Among the sales made by Clark, as administrator, are the following: On the 20th of November, 1694, to John Nutter, of Maryland, a tract called "Prog’s Rock;" on December 5th of same year, to Thomas Davis eight hundred acres adjoining the above and near Cedar Creek; on June 1, 1697, to the same, a tract called "Davies’ Farm," a part of a larger tract called "Bowman’s Farms," situate on the north side of Slaughtercreek adjoining Indian Branch and Alexander Draper’s land; June 14, 1698, to Thomas J. Kingston, one hundred and nineteen acres on south side of Misspillion Creek; January 24, 1699, to Comfort Goldsmith, widow of William Goldsmith, one hundred and thirty acres on the north side of Cedar Creek, known as "Goldsmith’s Hall;" January 25th of same year, to Nicholas Granger, two hundred and fifty acres in Cedar Creek Neck, and on July 25, 1704, to Dr. Charles Haynes, two hundred and fifty acres lying on a branch on the north side of Cedar Creek.

On April 4, 1702, Thomas Davis sold one hundred and twenty-seven acres of his land to Thomas Tilton, and July 26, 1704, five hundred acres adjoining Alexander Draper’s land to Mark Manlove.

On December 5, 1694, Justice Joseph Booth conveyed to Peter Goyle two hundred acres of land lying on the south side of a creek called Misspillion, and adjoining the tract known as “Little Graves End.” The two hundred acres were part of a tract containing four hundred and seventy-five, laid out for Robert Hudson in 1682, and by him sold to Henry Bowman, June 4, 1693. Booth purchased of Bowman on September 6th of the same year.

On December 5, 1694, James Booth, administrator of William Couthy, sold to Thomas May five hundred acres of land, being part of a larger tract called “Josey’s Choice,” and afterwards “Spencer Hall.” This tract adjoining land belonging to Robert Hart.

On March 4, 1700, William Fisher conveyed to John Bennett a tract of three hundred acres, binding on Cedar Creek.

"Cedar Town," a tract of six hundred acres, was laid out for William Carter, who sold the same to William Clark. Three hundred acres of it was sold to James Brown, who, June 6, 1699, sold his portion to Richard Manlove. The tract is described as being by the marshes of Misspillion Creek.

Arthur Johnson Van Kirk, of Sussex County, on June 23, 1704, conveyed to Thomas H. Lyman two hundred acres of land on the south side of Misspillion Creek.

“Strife,” a tract containing two hundred acres, on the east side of Somerset Beaver Dam and the head of Nanticoke River, was surveyed for Abraham Ingram in 1718. The tract is now owned by Isaac F. Warren, H. C. Warren and William Smith.

On a warrant of February 17, 1725, there were surveyed for Henry Bishop two hundred and five acres of land on the northwest side of Herring Branch of Misspillion Creek. This land is now in the possession of George W. Risler and the heirs of Bethul Watson.

On June 24, 1735, there were surveyed in “Mus-mellon Neck,” between Misspillion and Cedar Creeks, ten thousand two hundred and forty acres of land known as “Penn’s Manor.” The tract was west of the King’s Road, leading from Milford to Milton, and was intersected by Bowman’s and Herring Branches.

On June 17, 1717, one hundred and fifty acres of this land was assigned to Charles Polk. The principal owners of the manor at the present time are Peter Lo bandwidth, A. S. Small, Henry Austin, Wittington Williams, James B. Deputy, Houston Hudson, Samuel Hudson, Henry W. Stewart, N. Jefferson, James Stewart, Phillip Griffith, Edward Walton, B. F. Woodel, George H. Hall, Wm. F. Corsa and the heirs of Joshua Truitt.

“Spittlefield," a tract of four hundred acres north of the land taken up by Henry Bishop, was patented to Benjamin Truitt in 1741. It is situated near the present site of Lincolns, and is now owned by James Houston, Curtis Houston and the heirs of Joshua Truitt.

In 1748 three hundred acres of land on the southeast side of Cedar Creek was taken up by Jonah Webb. It is now in the possession of Curtis Watson, Clement Houston and the heirs of John Shew. In the same year William Moore took up three hundred acres of land south of Cedar Creek. This tract is now owned by James B. Shepherd, Michael Millman and Willard S. Dickerson.

West of the land taken up by Jonah Webb is a tract of three hundred and seventy-two acres granted to William Lo bandwidth in 1748. This land is now owned by S. C. Horton, Edward Betts and Mrs. William Betts.

A tract of two hundred acres lying west of the present site of Ellendale, and adjoining land of Jonah Webb, was taken up about 1750 by Edward Calloway. It is now in the possession of William Millman and Willard S. Dickerson.

John Webb, in 1747, took up a tract of four hundred acres on the northeast side of the land of Jonah Webb. It is now owned by Isaac E. Warren, Mrs. Jane Benson and the heirs of Stephen Warren. "Porter's Folly," a tract of three hundred and nine acres on the east side of Bowman's Branch of Mispillion Creek, was owned by Levin Crapper in 1788. Meeting-house to Shovel Branch; thence up said branch to the main branch of Cedar Creek, at Clement Hudson's mill; thence down said branch to David R. Smith's mills, at the head of Cedar Creek; thence down the creek to No. 1. District No. 4, in Slaughter Neck, on the bay, from Cedar Creek to Slaughter Creek and west to David R. Smith's mills. District No. 5, in Prince Hook and Slaughter Necks. District No. 6, in western part of hundred.

These districts have subsequently been sub-divided and now retain very little of their original shape. Well-built and commodious school-houses, under the supervision of competent teachers, now afford excellent advantages for pupils of all classes in this hundred.

Religious Matters.—St. Matthew's Episcopal Church.—The first church was in process of erection in 1717, and was mentioned by Rev. George Ross, when at Lewistown in that year. He wrote: "There are two houses of worship, one sixteen miles from Lewes, the other in the upper part of the county, not finished." This church was built on what was called Church Creek, a branch of Cedar Creek, which empties into it at Coulter's mill. No vestige of the old church now remains. On March 13, 1769, there was conveyed by bond from David Thornton to Isaac Watson, Stephen Townsend and Levin Crapper, a tract of land on the south side of Cedar Creek, near Draper's old mill-pond. This was "surveyed and divided off for two acres and five and a half square perches of land the tenth day of April, 1770, by Caleb Criswithen, together with a church-house thereon erected."

On June 16, 1788, Nehemiah Davis, Thomas Evans, Isaac Beauchamp, George Walton, Jacob Townsend, Bethuel Watson and Mark Davis were incorporated trustees of the church, and on October 28th of the same year, the property was conveyed to them as trustees. In 1805, the trustees were Bethuel Watson, Isaac Wattson, Basiliff Paynter, Nathaniel Paynter, William Davis, John Bennett and Lawrence Reiley. Services were last held in this church in 1864, by Rev. J. L. McKim. In 1858, the building was sold to John Ingram and the land leased to him. In 1864, the building was purchased by Hiram Barber, moved to Milford and used as a saw-mill until Dec., 1871, when it was burned. The land is still owned by the society, and in the old graveyard, surrounded by cedars, stand tombstones erected to the memories of the following persons: Sarah, wife of Samuel Draper, who departed this life in 1775; "Nelley Draper, who departed this life April 17, 1790, aged 14 years;" Reynear Williams, who died April 2, 1773, aged 26 years and 7 months; Abigail, wife of Sylvester Webb, who departed this life 17th December, 1785, aged 25 years.

Slaughter Neck Zion Methodist Episcopal Church was formerly known as Hickman's Meeting-House. The first members were William Hickman, William Shockley, Homer Smith, William Kendrick, Daniel

Schools.—There were subscription schools held in the several parts of the hundred previous to the adoption of the free-school system. A few of these pioneer teachers were Stephen B. Lofland, Solomon Truitt and Elazer Gorham. In a few places the schools were held in regular school houses and in others in improvised buildings. When the common schools came into use the buildings which were suitable were converted to that use.

The commissioners, George R. Fisher, Ebenezer Walter, Henry Bacon and Thomas Jacobs, appointed to apportion the county in 1829, separated the hundred into six districts. District No. 1 lay on the bay, between Missippion and Cedar Creeks, and extended westward to Peter F. Causey's mill-dam, on Herring Run, and to the Brick Granary. District No. 2 included South Milford and extended from No. 1 to "Shawnee bridge." District No. 3 began at "Shawnee bridge, on road leading from Milford to St. John's town; thence along public road leading to Smith's
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

Godwin, Noah Morris, John Riley, Nathan Young, Linford Truitt, Thomas Metcalf, Nehemiah Davis, Mored Draper, Selutha Lewis, Eli Shockley, Joseph Hickman, Thomas Draper, Swan Goden and William Reding. On July 26, 1810, they met and elected William Shockley, William Kendrick, Daniel Godwin, Nathan Young and Eli Shockley the first trustees. On October 7th, the trustees purchased of William Hickman, seventy square perches of land "whereon the said meeting-house is built." The first church was a frame structure twenty-five feet square, with a gallery on three sides. The church was originally connected with the Milford Circuit and for many years services were held on Wednesday. The old church remained until 1855, when an acre of land was purchased of Lemuel Draper, and a new two story building, twenty-five by thirty-five feet, near the old site, was erected at a cost of one thousand and fifty dollars. The building committee was Thomas J. Davis and John Bennett. In 1852 the church was transferred to Lewis Circuit and afterwards to Milton Circuit, and now forms a part of the Lincoln Circuit.

It is in a very prosperous condition. The present Board of Trustees is composed of the following persons: J. M. Davis, J. H. Draper, L. W. Davis, J. Calhoun, T. R. Wilson, Robt. Roeloe, J. W. Bennett, J. A. Argo, Wm. J. Hickman.

On June 29, 1821, David Smith conveyed to Joseph Hudon, Curtis Shockley, James Butler, Lowder Layton and Walter Sipple, a tract of eighty perches about six miles from Milford, on the road from Milford to Concord, known as the "Townsend Road." On this land was erected Smith's Chapel. It was a one-story frame building, twenty-six by thirty feet, and remained till 1873. In that year it was removed and the present edifice begun. The corner-stone was laid December 14, 1873, and the new building dedicated May 3, 1874, as the Union Methodist Episcopal Church by Rev. Enoch Stubbins. It is a one-story frame structure, thirty by forty feet, and was built at a cost of one thousand, three hundred and fifty dollars. The building committee was Jehu H. Oldaniel, James B. Deputty and Solomon I. Betts. There are at present thirty communicants. A Sunday-school under the superintendence of John H. Deputty is connected with the church. The church has been connected with the Ellendale Circuit since the organization of that Circuit in 1873, and has been served by the following pastors: Rev. James Conner, Rev. D. W. C. McIntyre, Rev. A. A. Fisher, Rev. Valentine Gray, Rev. A. P. Prettyman, Rev. N. McQuay, Rev. I. D. Johnson, Rev. D. F. McFall, Rev. J. M. Collins, Rev. Wmner Jaggard, Rev. J. T. Prouse.

Ellendale Methodist Episcopal Church.—On July 16, 1873, William McCutcheon granted to Alfred Heavelew, William Short, James M. Jester, Bevans Morris and Alfred Short, a tract of land for a church, parsonage and school. A school and parsonage costing five hundred dollars were soon after erected. The church was commenced in 1882, and dedicated December 31st of the same year by Rev. Jonathan S. Willis. The building committee composed of Eliza B. Reed, Alfed Short and Benjamin E. Jester, erected a neat frame edifice thirty by forty-four feet, at a cost of twelve hundred dollars. The membership now consists of twenty-five communicants. There is in connection with the church a Sunday-school, containing twenty scholars, under the superintendence of James H. Jester. The church has always been connected with the Ellendale Circuit, and the pulpit has been filled by the pastors of that circuit.

The First Methodist Church in Cedar Neck was built on land now owned by Stephen M. Ellis. It was a one-story frame building, which many years afterwards was moved to a place near the site of the present church. In 1875, Curtis C. Watson donated an acre of land to the trustees, and on it the present church was built at a cost of eleven hundred dollars. It was connected with Milford Circuit till 1872, when it became a part of Lincoln Circuit. The pastors connected with these circuits have served this church. It has a present membership of about thirty-five. The present board of trustees is composed of Miles T. Mills, J. W. Potter, Henry Pierce, Isaac Cirwain, John Tease and William Townsend.

The Methodists in the immediate vicinity of Lincoln first held meetings in a private house, and after a hall was built in the village, resorted to that. Sabbath-school was held regularly, and occasionally preaching services were conducted by the clergyman of adjoining churches. In 1869 it was decided to build a church, and J. Houston, J. B. Tracey, David Stout, A. S. Small and B. W. Truitt were appointed a building committee. The corner-stone was laid October 10, of that year, by Revs. S. L. Gracey and E. Stubbs. The building was completed and used as a house of worship till 1885, when the present structure was erected. The church is in a flourishing condition, and connected with it is a prosperous Sabbath-school, under the superintendence of B. M. Cain. The present board of trustees is composed of James Houston, B. W. Truitt, A. S. Small, A. W. Small, Elias Shockley and J. N. Lecompte.

The first Methodist Episcopal Church, at New Market, was erected at an early period. Dr. Wallace, of Ocean Grove fame, was once stationed in charge of the circuit with which this church was connected. In a recent article, he characterized its members as "shouting Methodists." The old building remained until 1881, when it was replaced by the present structure. It formerly was connected with Milton Circuit, but now forms a part of Lincoln Circuit. The church is in a good condition and is well attended. The Sunday-school is in charge of James Warren.

The present board of trustees comprises the follow-
SUSSEX COUNTY.

Through the influence of Rev. H. J. Gaylord the erection of a Presbyterian Church at Lincoln was begun in 1869, on land donated by A. S. Small. It was dedicated in January of the following year, by Rev. Richard Mallory, of Milford. The first trustees were Dr. Townsend, D. R. Stewart, G. W. Risler, Geo. L. Stevens and Erastus Arnold. Rev. Mr. Gaylord officiated as pastor of the church until 1871. Since that time the pulpit has been filled by stated supplies from Milford, among whom were Revs. R. Mallory, Chas. F. Boynton and H. L. Bunstein. At the present time no regular services are held. The present trustees are Erastus Arnold, George Morrison, G. W. Risler and Frank Shew.

In May, 1867, an effort was made to organize a Baptist Church at Lincoln, but failed. The effort was renewed however, and on April 28, 1869, a church was constituted with twenty-one members, by Revs. O. Flippo and Purinton. Rev. W. H. Spencer became the pastor, and upon his death, A. M. Webb, the former clerk of the church was licensed to preach, and continued until 1873, when the church was merged into the Milford Church.

INDUSTRIES.—The earliest and, in fact, the only industries of this hundred, consist of gist and saw-mills, some of which were erected at an early date and have not been in operation for many years. Cedar Creek afforded the best advantages for mill-seats, and consequently more mills were built on it than any other stream in the hundred. The oldest gist-mill on this stream is situated near Cedar Creek village, and is mentioned as early as 1709 as Draper’s mill. It was later inherited by Mary Draper, who married Hon. Joseph Haslett. After his decease it passed to his heirs, who conveyed the mill to David Smith, on July 12, 1825. He retained possession until December 18, 1829, when he deeded it to his son, David R. Smith, who on May 21st of the following year sold it to Jacob B. Dutton. Lemuel B. Shockley became the owner March 23, 1833, and remained in possession till Oct. 17, 1838, when he sold it to Wm. B. Coulter. In 1839 the mill was burned, and the present one immediately erected a little east of the original site. In 1852 a saw-mill was erected, but is no longer in use. The property was retained by Wm. B. Coulter and his son, Thomas J. till 1885, when it became the property of H. L. Hynson and J. H. McColley. It is now owned by Dr. J. S. Prettyman. The grinding is done by burr, and consists mainly of custom work.

The next mill above was, at an early date, owned by John and William Draper, and by them sold to Lemuel B. Shockley, by whom it was rebuilt in 1819. John C. Davis was the next owner, and after his death it was sold by his heirs to ——— Hitchcock. He retained possession a short time and then sold to Hiram Barber, by whom it was conveyed to C. M. Miles. It next came into the possession of Mr. Dubois, by whom it was sold to Mark L. Davis and Blevens Cane. Mark L. Davis & Son, the present owners and proprietors, succeeded Davis & Cane. In 1885 the roller system of grinding was adopted. The mill is run by water-power, and has a capacity of one and a half barrels per hour.

About 1780, Bethuel Watson erected a gist-mill on Cedar Creek. After his death it was inherited by his daughter Sarah, who married Lawrence Riley. After the decease of Riley, the mill came into the possession of Tristan P. McColley, by whom it was sold in 1848, to Lemuel B. Shockley, and in 1860 it came into the hands of Elias Shockley, the present owner. The old mill was burned in 1880, and in the following year the present building was erected. The grinding is done by burr, and is mostly custom work.

The next mill above was early owned by Benjamin Hudson and later passed to his son, C. H. Hudson. In 1871, he sold to Jehu H. Clendaniel, the present owner. The mill was rebuilt in 1873. It consists of a mill for grinding corn and a saw-mill. At the opposite end of the dam an old saw-mill formerly stood.

The last mill on this stream was a saw-mill, owned in 1880, by William Deputy. After his decease, it was inherited by his daughter Elizabeth, who married Isaac Betts. It next came into the possession of William Betts and Samuel Clendaniel, and was last operated about sixteen years ago.

The mill in this hundred, on Prime Hook Creek, was erected at an early period by Caleb Cirwithin. On May 29, 1759, it came into the possession of John Cirwithin, probably a grandson. In 1816 it was owned by John Smith. At a later period it became the property of Henry Smith, by whom it was sold to Benjamin F. Waples, and is now owned by his heirs. In 1869 a saw-mill was built, which has been abandoned for the past eight years, on account of the scarcity of water.

In 1884 the present gist-mill was built, and has since been operated by Charles J. Waples. The grinding is done by burr, with a patent-process attachment.

On Herring Branch are a gist-mill owned by Dr. William Marshall, and a saw-mill of Chas. Harrington.

In 1829, Peter F. Caussey was the owner of a gist and saw-mill on Herring Branch, which later came into possession of Daniel Curry. On December 10, 1851, he sold the property to Mrs. Mary E., wife of Gen. A. T. A. Torbert, who sold the mills to Delos and Caleb Griffin on May 1, 1865. They retained possession till December 9, 1871, when they sold to Dr. Wm. Marshall, the present owner. On October 5, 1884, the mills were burned. The erection of the present mill was immediately commenced, and on February 10, 1885, the first grinding was done. The mill is a three-story building thirty by fifty feet, and is fitted up with a full roller system. The capacity is two barrels per hour.
A saw-mill was built on this branch at a very early date by Beniah Watson, Sr. After his death, it passed into the hands of Beniah Watson, Jr., who operated it till his death, when it was inherited by Bethuel Watson. The mill is now owned by Charles Harrington, who married the daughter of Bethuel Watson, and thus became the owner. The mill has not been operated very much for the past few years.

In 1840 William Johnson was the owner of a grist-mill on Bowman's Branch. About the year 1848 it became the property of Nathaniel Johnson, and at his decease was inherited by his sons Richard and William. By them it was sold in 1870 to John A. Nickerson, whose heirs still own it. The grinding is done by burr. The mill has been operated for the past four years by Z. Nutter.

In 1868, T. R. Smith and F. A. Whitehead erected a steam saw and shingle mill at Lincoln. The mill was operated by them two years, and then Whitehead's interest was purchased by William Hiscock. The business was conducted by Smith and Hiscock, until 1879, when the mill was destroyed by fire. It was rebuilt by Smith who has been the sole owner and proprietor since. In addition to sawing there is a special department for manufacturing baskets and boxes for canned goods. The capacity is twelve thousand boxes and twenty thousand baskets per week. When the entire manufacturing is in full operation employment is given to fifty hands.

In 1870, B. E. Jester & Brother erected a steam saw-mill at Ellendale. It was operated by them for ten years and then sold to E. B. Reed & Son, who ran the mill till 1882, when the present firm of S. E. Reed & Brother was established. The mill has a capacity of three thousand feet per day. In 1886, a basket factory was added with a capacity of two thousand baskets per day. In both departments twenty-two hands are employed.

A. S. Small erected a steam saw-mill and planing-mill at Lincoln in 1871. Shortly afterwards a basket factory was added with a capacity of four hundred thousand baskets per season. In the basket factory employment is given to sixty-five operatives. The saw-mill does both merchant and custom work, and to operate it ten men are steadily employed. A canning establishment was also erected by him. It was operated by him till 1885, when it was burned. A new building was then erected and the canning of fruits and vegetables commenced on a larger scale. It is now operated by A. W. Small, and has a capacity of twenty-five thousand cases per season, during which time seventy-five hands are employed. A brick-yard was also opened in 1875, and in that year one hundred and fifty thousand bricks were manufactured. The yard is operated five months per year. Twelve men are employed and four hundred and fifty thousand bricks manufactured.

In 1884, Caleb Lee moved a steam saw-mill to the Brick Granary. Since its establishment there the mill has been in operation but a short time.

In 1886 Jester & Reed erected a canning establishment at Ellendale. They can tomatoes principally, and during the season pack three thousand five hundred cases, which are shipped to Philadelphia. While in operation forty hands are employed.

Considerable attention is paid to evaporating peaches in this hundred. When there is a good crop of peaches the evaporators are extensive operators. Among the persons engaged in this business are Mark H. Davis, Joseph M. Davis, Geo. H. Draper, Hammond & Wheelbank, Perryman & Short, Wm. R. Phillips, William Prentyman, Fox & Webb, Frederick Wiswell and E. B. Reed & Co.

Henry D. Macklin began to manufacture bricks at Ellendale in 1872. The yard is open three months per year, and fifty thousand bricks manufactured.

In 1881 Henry Stuart erected a steam saw and grist-mill. The grist-mill was operated one year, and the saw-mill three years.

Cedar Creek village, situated near the centre of the hundred, and containing a grist-mill, saw-mill and three residences, is but the skeleton of its former self. It was at one time the most important village in the hundred, and within its bounds were St. Mathew's Church, a store, a hotel, the mills above mentioned and about a dozen dwellings. For many years the voters of the hundred assembled here to express their views in regard to national and local affairs by their ballots. In 1812, at the call of Governor Haslett, the troops centered here for the defense of Lewes. He resided here during his gubernatorial term, and at his death was buried near by, on land now owned by Thomas J. Coulter. Over his grave is erected a monument with the following inscription:

"In Memory of Joseph Haslett. He was son of Colonel John Haslett, who fell at the battle of Princeton, January 3, 1777,—a gallant officer and gallantly seconded by Delaware troops—leaving a widow, who in a few days died of grief, & several small children. Joseph, the subject of this epitaph, was reared under the guardianship of William Killen, chief justice and afterwards chancellor of the State. After arriving at age is removed from Kent County & established himself a farmer in Cedar Creek Hundred (Sussex). He was elected Governor of the State in 1816, and with credit discharged the functions of his office, the burdens and responsilities of which were greatly enhanced by the war of 1812. In 1823 he was elected Governor the second time, the only case of a second election to that office in the State. He died during his second term June 22, 1823.

An honored name, gratefully remembered by the General Assembly of Delaware, directing by their resolution of February 21, 1861, the erection of this Monument.

Also first and second wife of Joseph Haslett—
Mary Draper & Rachel Hickman."

The village of Ellendale, is situated in the southern part of the hundred, on a tract of three hundred and twenty-two acres, known as "Bennett's Pleasure," which was taken up by Stephen Bennett, on a warrant bearing date August 5, 1740. The tract afterwards, came into the possession of William S. McCaulley, late of Wilmington, and while owned by him the village was laid out in 1867. Dr. J. S. Prettyman the authorized agent superintended the laying out and named the village in honor of his wife Ellen. The village is well located and has railroad facilities.
It has gradually grown and at present contains two churches, two stores, a school-house, a post office, a canning establishment, an evaporator, a brick-yard, two saw-mills and basket factories and one hundred inhabitants.

In 1865 A. S. Small, became the owner of six hundred and ninety-six acres, of land including the present site of Lincoln. The favorable location of the land and its proximity to the proposed railroad running through the State, suggested the founding of a town. Under the supervision of A. T. Johnson, the land was laid out in seven hundred and seventy-four building lots, and preparations made for the growth of the town. Lots were sold and buildings erected and on October 11, of that year the Lincoln Herald was started by Johnson. It was published a few months and then discontinued. The village increased quite rapidly and the construction of the railroad to this place on September 1, 1867, gave Lincoln an additional boom. Since that time the growth of the village has been steady and permanent.

At the present time Lincoln contains two churches, three stores, a school-house, a canning establishment, two saw-mills and basket factories, a brick-yard and about five hundred inhabitants.

POST OFFICE.—The first post-office in the Hundred was established at Lincoln in 1865, with Jas. J. Jackson as the first postmaster. He was succeeded by his wife, Lucy Jackson, A. W. Small and F. C. Shew, the present incumbent, who received his appointment, January 15, 1886.

The post-office at Ellendale was established in December, 1867. The office was opened in January of the following year with W. P. Short in charge. He was succeeded in 1872 by W. F. Short, who continued till 1876, when J. W. Short was appointed. Alfred Short, the present incumbent, received his appointment in 1880.

Waples' post-office was established in March, 1887. C. J. Waples, the first postmaster appointed, still continues in charge.

LIGHT-HOUSES.—At the request of Jonas Dawson for the privilege of holding a lottery, to raise three thousand dollars, for "the erection of a building for the purpose of keeping a permanent light at the mouth or entrance of Misquillen Creek, near the Delaware Bay," an act was passed January 14, 1808, for that purpose. Jonas Dawson was to build, and after the completion of the building and the establishment of the light, he was to receive from the commander of every sloop, or vessel whose draft is three feet or over, twenty-five cents; six feet and over, thirty-seven cents. He was to keep and maintain a sufficient light thirty feet above water. The lantern was to be four feet in diameter, in which was to be placed an Argand lamp, with a flame one inch in diameter, placed in the focus of a well polished, concave tin reflector, three feet in diameter. It is probable, that this light-house was never erected, as no evidence of it has been obtained. About 1829, however, a light-house was erected on the Hart Tract, on land ceded by Charles Folk and Benjamin Potter. Owing to the encroachment of the water, this site is now in the bay. Thos. Carlisle was the first commissioner, and James Hilliard the keeper. Charles Hamm succeeded them, and filled both positions. William Jacobs succeeded Hamm, and a new light-house was built near by. His successor was Geo. M. Davis, who was succeeded by James Bell. While under his supervision it was abandoned, in 1865. The building was moved to Milford, and is now used as a store-room by Geo. H. Hall. The present light-house was built about 1870, and James Bell appointed keeper. He was succeeded by Henry Spencer, the present keeper.

HOTELS.—As early as 1794 there was a hotel at Cedar Creek Village, which was then kept by Daniel Rogers. It was afterwards owned by James Ward, Jesse Wallis, Isaac Carpenter and William B. Coulter. While in the possession of the last, it was last conducted as a hotel in 1861, with Robert D. Roberts as proprietor. The building still stands and is now occupied by Thomas J. Coulter as a residence.

At an early period there were two hotels in operation in Fleetown, afterwards called Federalburg. The proprietors were Milloway White and Samuel Warren, and the hotel of the former was the scene of many a midnight revel. At the death of White the property was purchased by Warren and closed. The building has since been removed. The hotel belonging to Warren was not licensed after his death which occurred in 1843. It is now owned and occupied as a residence by Greenberry Benston.

A hotel standing at Thorn Point was destroyed by an ice freshet in 1831. In the following year a company composed of Elijah Hudson, William D. Williams, Joseph G. Oliver and William E. Jester erected another one. Thomas Carlisle was the first proprietor. The company owned the hotel for about twenty years and then sold it to Thomas Clark. It was destroyed by fire about 1872, while in the possession of W. N. W. Dorsey. The present hotel was commenced by H. J. McCollin and completed by A. S. Small of Lincoln in 1887.

A building standing at Cedar Creek Village was purchased by Joseph G. Morgan about twenty years ago and moved to Slaughter Beach, where it was opened as a hotel. Morgan sold to Charles Todd, of Indiana, who ran it a short time and then sold it to J. S. Short. It next came into the possession of Joseph Hearn the present owner and proprietor. The beach has become a summer resort and there are now there about half a dozen cottages.

CHAPTER LXIX.

BROADKILN HUNDRED.

This Hundred situated in the northeastern part of Sussex County is bounded on the north by Prime
HISTOR Y OF DELAWARE.

Hook Creek; on the east by Delaware Bay and Cool-Spring Branch; on the south by the same Branch and Georgetown Hundred; and on the west by Georgetown Hundred. Its name is derived from the creek of the same name, which flows through the central portion of the Hundred and is navigable as far as Milton. By means of this creek large quantities of grain and lumber have been and still continue to be shipped annually to the Philadelphia and New York markets. About three-fifths of the land in this Hundred is in a state of cultivation, and produces the usual cereals and small fruits in abundance. The soil is well watered by numerous small streams which rise and flow within its boundaries.

The population is equally distributed, and with the exception of Milton, no village of any size is found in this Hundred. In addition to the facilities for shipment by water, additional advantages for shipping and travel are afforded by the Delaware, Maryland and Virginia Railroad, which runs through the southern portion of Broadkill Hundred.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS.—One of the earliest persons to take up land in Broadkill Hundred was Hermanus Wiltbank, who settled at Lewes previous to 1673.
A more complete history of him will be found in the Chapter on Lewes. He and his son Cor-elius took up and purchased large tracts of land on the coast and inland before 1680, some of which are now in the possession of their lineal descendants, John and David Wiltbank of Milton. In September 1695, Cornelius Wiltbank presented a petition to the Court of Sussex County, setting forth that "hee hath designe to build a water-mill in this county on that branch or creek of the Broadkill, called Mill Creek, (Beaver Dam Branch), if y' Cm will grant him the same and land which is customary adjoining to the same." The petition was duly considered and it was agreed that "The Cm grant him the said stream provided he build the said mill thereon within fifteen months from hence forward, and attend and mind the same, and doe grind the graine well, and in due course as itt comes to mill without Respect to persons att y' eighth part Poi for wheat, and sixth ffor Indian corne." It is very probable that this mill was never built, as two years later a mill was built on this stream by Jonathan Bailey, who was an early settler at Lewes, and in 1676 owned a grist mill at Pilot-town. He was Sheriff of the county at several different times.
His descendants both of the name Bailey and Art still live in Lewes.

A warrant for six hundred acres of land in this Hundred was granted by the Whorekill Court to Thomas Hassold. The tract was surveyed July 24, 1682, and was known as Hassold's Fortune. It was described as being on the west side of Delaware Bay, and on the south side of Prime Hook Creek, and joined land of Thomas Moulsom, Philip Morris and Hermanus Wiltbank. The most of this land is now owned by William A. Hazzard, James T. Reed, David Argo and the heirs of Eli Collins.

The family represented by John H. Wiltbank traces its genealogy to a very early period in the history of this country, and for more than two hundred years has been identified with its growth and development.

The original ancestor was Halmanius Wiltbank, who emigrated from Sweden about the year 1660.
Tradition says that the vessel in which he had embarked was wrecked off Cape Henlopen and that he saved himself by swimming to the shore, carrying in his pocket a silver watch that has since been handed down from father to son in the family and is still is the possession of his descendants. Halmanius resided for the remainder of his life near Lewes, in Sussex County, where a number of the family still reside.
At his death he left three sons, Cornelius, John and Abraham. John became a man of considerable prominence and served as one of the associate judges of the court held at Lewes, in 1755. One of his sons, known as Parson Wiltbank, was a noted preacher in his day and the father of John Wiltbank, who was a prominent physician and a professor in one of the medical colleges of Philadelphia. The mother of the late Chancellor Harrington was also one of the daughters of the Parson.

Cornelius, the oldest son of Halmanius, was born about 1660 and died in 1730. He received one of the original patents from William Penn for a tract of land, comprising two hundred and fifty acres, lying on the north side and along the Broadkill River, about three miles from Delaware Bay, which has continued to be held by his male heirs to the present date, 1888. He left one son, Isaac, who was born about the year 1705 and at his death left two sons, Cornelius and Samuel. The former, Cornelius, was born in 1731 and died in 1803. He married Rachel daughter of John Hazzard, and passed his life as a farmer on the family tract on the Broadkill River.
He was known as a staunch patriot during the trying scenes of the Revolution. At his demise he left two sons, Cornelius and David, and a daughter, Elizabeth, who became the mother of Judge John W. Houton.
David was born in 1739 and died in 1805. He was a farmer by occupation and also resided on the home tract. He was an ardent Whig and served as a vol-teer in the war of 1812-15, participating in the defense of Lewes in 1813. He married Sarah G. Moris, and left two sons, John H. and David A. Wiltbank.

John H. Wiltbank was born on the homestead tract of his family, June 9th, 1823. His youth was passed as farmers' sons usually grow up, acquiring a fair education while rendering what assistance he could upon the farm. He has devoted the greater part of his life to agricultural pursuits and fruit growing, and led an honest, earnest and industrious life. He is a Republican in politics, and during the War of the Rebellion was a sincere and active Union man, and did what he could to sustain the General Government in the effort to preserve the national integrity.
He married Martha A., daughter of John T. Hudson, a prominent farmer of New Castle County, and with this truly estimable lady now resides in the town of Milton, where both are enjoying the happy fruits of a well-spent life and the merited respect, confidence and esteem of many friends.

William Clark, of whom so much has been said in the history of Colonial times, and in Lewes, was also the owner of considerable land in Broadklin. On March 6, 1694, there was granted to him, by William Penn, a tract of five hundred acres, lying between Cool Spring Branch and the main branch of Mill Creek (Beaver Dam Branch). This tract, known as “Penn’s Manor of Worminghurst,” was confirmed to him April 2, 1696, by Thomas Lloyd, James Claypoole and Robert Turner. On November 21, 1717, it came into the possession of Preserved Coggeshall. On the day of the confirmation of “Penn’s Manor of Worminghurst,” there was patented to Clark, “Mill Plantation,” a tract containing eight hundred acres. Of this he sold two hundred acres to Matthew Osborne, who also had surveyed for himself on April 25, 1722, a tract of land, warranted to Robert Lodges on December 18, 1718, and now owned by Mrs. Theodore Carey. “Mill Plantation” is now in the possession of George A. Bryan, the heirs of Nathaniel Vessey and the heirs of Mrs. Eliza A. Fisher.

On February 9, 1696, Clark sold to Thomas Fisher three hundred acres of land on the south side of Broadklin Creek. Thomas Fisher was the son of John Fisher, who came to this country with Penn in 1682. Thomas was also the owner of “Stratter’s Island,” containing one hundred and seventy-five acres, and surveyed January 29, 1701, by Jonas Greenbank. On April 11, 1711, he purchased one hundred and fifty acres adjoining this tract, which was granted to Robert Murdock on November 5, 1690. These two tracts are now owned by William A. Hazzard and Peter B. Jackson. Some of the land purchased by Thomas Fisher is now the property of James Fisher and the heirs of John Fisher, lineal descendants of Thomas.

Clark, as administrator of Henry Bowman, was also the owner of “Rich Farms,” containing six hundred and fifty acres, which were warranted to Thomas Tilson on August 5, 1687. Clark sold this tract to John Hill, a merchant, on December 5, 1698.

John Clowes settled in this hundred at an early date, on the “Dreams” and “Green Branch” of the Nanticoke. His son John also purchased lands in the vicinity on September 7, 1672, of William Dauters and William Boucher, which had been warranted by William Shankland December 19, 1743, as Spring Garden. Dr. Peter Clowes, brother of John Clowes, Sr., also settled in the vicinity, on land now owned by Jesse E. Dodd. On land now in the possession of David Connell, is a family vault, about eight by twelve feet, walled up with brick, which at present contains no remains. Near by are several graves, three of which are marked by headstones. One is “In memory of John Clowes, who departed this life Feb. 24, 1790, Aged 59 years 3 months & 19 days.” Another is to the memory of Sarah, wife of John Clarke, who died December 19, 1790. The third is in memory of Mrs. Aletta Clark, who died May 11, 1852. The John Clowes here referred to is, doubtless, the son of the early settler John.

On October 25, 1713, John Ponder purchased of John Howe one hundred acres of land on the north side of Broadklin Creek, which was part of an eight hundred-acre tract, formerly the property of Thomas Pemberton, from whom Pemberton’s Branch takes its name. On February 1, 1717, he purchased two hundred acres more of this tract, which was surveyed January 23d of same year, by Robert Shankland. Abram Parsley and Peter Lucas were chain-bearers and Samuel Dickerson was marker. John Ponder also obtained other land in this hundred. The house in which he lived is now occupied as a residence by a tenant of John Ponder. It is a hip-roofed structure, built of cedar logs and weather-boarded. John and James have been the names peculiar to this family. Hon. James Ponder, of Milton, ex-governor of the State, still retains much of the land originally purchased by his ancestor, John Ponder, and has added to it many acres.

On October 14, 1738, Thomas Harrison sold two hundred and fifty acres of a tract known as “Maiden Plantation,” containing nine hundred and seven acres, to James Hood. It was situated south of “Mill Plantation,” and is now owned by John Sherman, George A. Bryan, Joseph Hunter, and the heirs of Robert Hood, Jr.

The Paynters have owned land in Broadklin Hundred for nearly two centuries. Samuel, the grandson of Richard, began the purchase of lands here in 1722, on February 8th, of which year he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of Thomas Stockley. Other lands were soon afterwards purchased by him, some of which still remain in the family. On the land early acquired, Gov. Samuel Paynter was born.

On September 16, 1735, there was surveyed or resurveyed for John and Thomas Penn, by William Shankland, a tract containing one thousand acres of marsh land. This is now owned by William A. Hazzard.

“Come by Chance,” a tract of two hundred and fifty acres, was warranted to Jacob Skilman on June 8, 1737.

“Ralph’s Delight” and “Walker’s Folly,” now owned by Mrs. Theodore Carew, were resurveyed March 5, 1742.

“Reed’s white mould” was warranted to William Mollineaux on June 11, 1750, and patented for one hundred and twenty-three acres to Edmund Reed, by Governor Clayton on December 4, 1794. It was part of a larger tract originally granted to David Courney by the Court of Deal (now Sussex) on April 11, 1682, for three hundred acres.
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

"Stretcher's Hall," a tract of five hundred acres, was originally granted to Henry Stretcher, and by him sold to James Standfield and James Thomas. It was later known as the "Jersey Tract," and is situated on the south side of Cypress Branch of Prime Hook Creek, Hon. James Ponder is the present owner.

Christopher Topham was the owner of a six hundred acre tract called "White Oak Neck," previous to 1742. In that year he deeded six acres of it to the Friends. It was situated on Cool Spring Branch. He also owned four hundred acres of forest land, known as "Green Meadow."

RECOMMENDED MATERIAL.—At a Meeting held at Duck Creek (Smyrna) on the 22d of the Sixth Month, 1720, Caleb Offy reported that the Quarterly Meeting gave consent for a place of worship to be settled at Cool Springs, until further orders. It is unknown whether a meeting-house was erected previous to 1742. On February 1, of that year, Christopher Topham conveyed to the Society of Friends Murderkill Monthly Meeting, six acres of land for the use of a meeting-house and burial place. On this a one-story frame building, about eighteen by twenty-four feet, was erected and used for many years as a meeting-house. It has long since disappeared, and none but the oldest residents remember when meetings were held there. In 1839 the main portion of this six acres was purchased by Samuel Paynter. A small plat for the burial of the dead is still enclosed, and cared for by the family of James Fisher. Among the later Friends who worshiped here were members of the Ford, Robbins, Wright and Rowland families.

On March 11, 1818, Aletta Clark granted to Bevens Morris, Sr., Samuel Cade, John T. Connell, Jonathan Hevaloe and Thomas Draper, trustees, a lot of land in Broadkill Hundred containing three thousand six hundred square feet. A one-story frame building, eighteen by twenty feet, known as the Zion Methodist Episcopal Church, was erected the same year. Services were held in this structure until 1848, when it was enlarged so as to accommodate the growing congregation. In 1873 it was found necessary to erect a new building. An adjoining lot of land containing one acre was conveyed by Hevaloe Morris to the trustees, who at that time were J. T. Conwell, Robert Morris, John Morris, Sylvester H. Rust, Hevaloe Morris, Daniel R. Burton and James C. Robbins. The new one-story edifice, 98 by 50 feet, was completed and dedicated January 25, 1874. The church has a present membership of forty. It has been connected with the Lewistown, Milton and Nassau Circuits. A flourishing Sunday-school connected with the church is under the superintendence of John M. Robbins.

White’s Methodist Episcopal Chapel was erected on one-fourth of an acre of land, donated in 1888, by Samuel Paynter to David Robbins, Peter C. Lank, Robert Russell, John Lank and James Lank. The chapel received its name from Henry White, a presiding elder. The first building was a one story structure eighteen by twenty-four feet. Previous to this meetings were held in an old school-house. Services were held in the first church until 1872, when the present edifice was erected at a cost of two thousand five hundred dollars. It is a one-story frame building, thirty by forty-five feet. Services are held once in two weeks. The church has been connected with the same circuits as Zion.

A flourishing Sunday-school of seventy members is under the superintendence of Mrs. Anna Fisher.

The present board of trustees is composed of the following persons: James Lank, Myers Fisher, David
For common or free school purposes, the Hundred was divided into the following districts:

District No. 7, in Broadkill Neck, at the mouth of Primehook Creek and the Delaware Bay, thence running up said creek to Smith's Mill, thence up stream to mouth of Ingram's Branch, up the said branch to public road leading from thence through Broadkill Neck to the Delaware Bay, thence along said public road to the western end of Simpler's Lane, thence with a straight line to a point on Broadkill Creek, called Heavilion's Landing. There was one school in this District 8, including North Milton in Broadkill Hundred, beginning on Broadkill Creek, at a place called Heavilion's Landing, a corner of No. 7, thence to the western-end of Simpler's Land to a public road, thence along the public road, leading near the dwelling-house of George Conwell, a line of No. 7 to Ingram's Branch, thence up and with said branch to where the old country road, as formerly used, crosses the same, thence with a straight line to an old milldam, called the fulling mill dam below the mill, formerly owned by Isaac Clowe, now by Arthur Nulby, thence down the stream to Joseph Mall's mill-dam to the head of Broadkill Creek, there to place of beginning, store of Hazzard and Barratt, in Milton.

District 9.—Begins at the mouth of Ingram's branch where it enters Sow Bridge branch, on a line of Cedar Creek and Broadkill Hundreds, thence up and with said Sow Bridge and Hundred line to the head thereof, where it is crossed by the road leading from New Market to the Riley Road, a corner of No. 8, thence with straight line to the west of the house of Johnson Riley, where Jonathan Massey now lives, and thence to a bridge on Riley Road.

District 10.—In Coolspring Neck, in Broadkil Hundred. Begins at mouth of Coolspring Creek where it enters Broadkill Creek, to mouth of Mill Creek, thence to Elisha Holland's mill, thence with stream to old dam for saw-mill, thence with road to Coolspring branch, where the road curves the same passing near Presbyterian Meeting House, thence to mills of Samuel Paynter, Esq., at head of Coolspring Creek. One school in district.

District 11.—Cave Neck in Broadkil Hundred, up to Broadkill to mouth of stream called Roundpole branch, near Milton.

District 12.—Including South Milton to ferry where Joseph Mall's bark manufactory is situated. There was once an Academy in said district.

District 13.—Adjoining 12, 8 and 9. Suitable places for holding school were provided in each of these districts. As the number of pupils increased, subdivisions of the districts were made. Comfortable and commodious school-houses supplied with careful and competent teachers are now found throughout the Hundred.

Mills and Manufactories.—On March 1, 1694, John Haynes purchased of Jacob Waring three hundred acres of land in Broadkil Hundred. On January 20, of the following year he also obtained from William Wolfe, two hundred acres on the west side of Mill Creek. This land was sold by his attorney Nehemiah Fields to Jonathan Bailey, on February 10, 1897. On it Bailey erected a water-mill, which he conveyed with the land on June 9, of the next year to Abraham Potter, in whose family the land still remains. After the death of Potter, the property vested in his daughter who was the wife of William Stewart. The estate was next inherited by a daughter of Stewart, who married William Stevenson. Their son John was the next owner, and came into possession about 1773. He had additional land condemned for mill purposes and soon afterwards died, when the property vested in his sister who was the wife of John Holland. William Holland a son afterwards came into possession of the mill and in 1811, it vested in Elisha Holland, the present owner of the land. The mills were rebuilt several times. In 1826, Elisha Holland added a saw-mill, which was in operation until about four years ago. The grist-mill was abandoned about twelve years ago.

At an early date there was a ship-yard about three-fourths of a mile from Holland's mill, on land now owned by Herbert Reynolds.

The next mill on Beaver Dam branch above Holland's mill is a saw-mill, owned and operated by James Hunter. It stands on the site of a mill, at one time owned by William Perry. The present mill was built about 1832, as in 1851 there was an act of Assembly passed enabling Robert Hunter, to erect a mill-dam across the head waters of Mill Creek, a branch of Broadkill. After the death of Robert Hunter, the mill was inherited by his son James, the present proprietor.

On February 8, 1758, Benjamin Chipman, executor of James Chipman, sold to John Talbot, the one-half part of a grist-mill and fulling-mill on Pemberton branch together with one-half of the utensils. The mills were situated on the north side of the stream, about a mile west of Milton, on land now owned by the heirs of Noble Ellingsworth, and have long since passed away. In 1851, several excavations were made around the foundation walls by an unknown person, which led to the belief that some hidden treasure had been removed.

Grist and saw-mills and a cotton factory were erected on Pemberton Branch at an early date by John Clowes. In the vicinity he planted poplar and willow trees eight feet apart and made preparations as if to start a powder manufactury. This, however, was never effected. In 1809 the mills were owned by Isaac Clowes and soon afterwards came into the possession of Arthur Milby. They were sold by him to Gideon Waples who operated them until his death when they vested in his son Gideon B. Waples. While in his possession the mills were repaired. After his decease they were sold, September 17, 1864, by his executor, Hon. James Ponder, to J. G. Betts, the present owner. The saw and grist mill are still in operation, but the carding factory was abandoned.

In 1809 Joseph Tam was the owner of a grist and saw-mill and twenty-seven acres of land in Broadkill Hundred. The mills were on the southwest branch of the Broadkill Branch and were operated many years by Tam, and finally passed into the hands of Benjamin McIlvain. They next came into the possession of George Davis, by whom they were sold to Nathaniel Ingram. While in his possession the saw-mill was abandoned and the grist-mill was repaired and next purchased by James Coulter, who conveyed to G. P. Johnson, the present owner.

In 1809 Zadock James was the owner of a saw-mill on the same stream. It was last operated about 1888 by Aaron Marshall, whose heirs are the present owners of the site.

On Cool Spring Branch was a grist-mill owned in 1750 by Samuel Paynter. It was retained in the family many years and was known as the "Paynter or Red Mill." Near by was a carding factory built by Samuel Paynter and abandoned about fifty years ago. The Red Mill was finally sold by John Paynter to Elijah Register, by whom it was improved and enlarged. Robert Hammon, the next owner, was in possession when it was destroyed by fire in 1885.

The grist and saw-mills on Prime Hook Creek, owned in 1809, by Nathan Reed, were sold by him to William McIlvain. They next came into the possession of Roderick Reynolds, and at his decease became the property of his son, Sillas M. Reynolds. By him they were sold to Hon. James Ponder, the present owner. The mills are still in operation.

Robert Stephenson inherited from his father, James, a grist-mill, on the south side of Prime Hook Creek. This he sold in 1775, to John Ingram, and in 1816, it was in the possession of his son, Anthony Ingram, together with three hundred acres of land. On November 26, 1823, it was purchased at sheriff's sale, by Arthur Milby, by whom it was conveyed, January 26, 1827, to Hester, wife of John Ponder. While in her possession it was abandoned, about 1845.

In 1866, Jeffrey O. Bentley and Moses A. Walsh formed a co-partnership and established a chemical works on the south side of Broadkill Creek, about two miles east of Milton. The main productions are wood alcohol, granulated charcoal and tar. Employment is given to ten men.

VILLAGES AND POST-OFFICES.—Drawbridge is a small hamlet on Broadkill Creek, about three miles east of Milton. It contains a store which was conducted many years by Governor Samuel Paynter, his children and grandchildren. In 1867 it was purchased by W. V. Coulter, who ran it until 1869, when Wm. B. Tomlinson became owner. He sold to Burton & Dornan in 1866. In 1878 they dissolved partnership, Dornan retaining the store. It also contains three dwellings, four granaries and a wheelwright and blacksmith shop. There is a landing-place here, and one boat plies regularly between here and Philadelphia, and two between Drawbridge and New York. About 2,500 cords of wood, and 30,000 bushels of grain are shipped annually. The name is derived from a draw-bridge, which crosses the Broadkiln at this place. A post-office was established here about 1889, with Samuel R. Paynter as postmaster. It was changed for a time to Houston, but again moved to Drawbridge. J. B. Dorman, the present incumbent was appointed in January, 1879.

The Hon. John B. Dorman was born in Broadkiln Hundred in the County of Sussex and State of Delaware, on the 19th day of August, in the year of our Lord, one thousand, eight hundred and forty-three. His early life was passed upon his father's farm, and in the freedom of rural life he early laid the foundations of that physical vigor and ruddy health which so peculiarly distinguished him, and which experience has shown to conduce so much to success, and to be so essential to the true enjoyment of life.

He acquired the rudiments of his education in the public schools of the neighborhood, but at the age of sixteen was sent to the academy at Milton.

As the years advanced and it became necessary for him to choose a vocation, he followed a natural bent and selected a mercantile life. In order to prepare himself thoroughly for the occupation he had so wisely chosen, he completed his preparatory studies at Crittenden's Commercial College of Philadelphia, but upon the death of his fa her his entrance into commercial life was delayed and he was called upon to take charge of the ancestral farm.

In 1866 when his presence was no longer required on the farm, he formed a partnership with Captain David Burton in the mercantile business at the Drawbridge. This partnership was dissolved in 1878, and since that time Mr. Dorman has, with eminent success, conducted the business in his own name.

Mr. Dorman was married in 1873 to Miss Hetty J. White, daughter of Mr. Benjamin White, a farmer of Broadkiln Hundred.

The Drawbridge is a small hamlet, situated at a landing on Broadkiln Creek, a few miles below Milton.

It is a point of considerable mercantile and commercial activity; has always been a political centre of importance, and has furnished one Governor to the State. The importance of the hamlet has by no means diminished since Mr. Dorman has been its leading spirit. Not only has he largely extended the trade of the place and given it a wider influence in business circles, but he has also fully maintained its political prestige. In 1886 he was elected to the State Senate by the Democratic party, of which he and his ancestors have always been consistent and honored members. In his political life Mr. Dorman has displayed the same sagacity and good sense, and the same honesty of purpose which had already characterized him in his business transactions.

But perhaps Mr. Dorman's most distinguishing trait is the social bonhomnie and kindness of heart which he carries into all relations of life. With him sympathy with the poor is ever a controlling thought, and it is said of him that no indigent and worthy debtor ever suffered from him the extremity of the laws.

In the new social, intellectual and industrial life which is coming to his native county Mr. Dorman will prove to be one of the foremost and ablest leaders.

The land on which Harbeson stands was at one time owned by Barclay Wilson, but is now principally in the possession of Harbeson Hickman, from whom it received its name. The establishment of a railroad station here in 1869, was the origin of the village. T. R. Burton was appointed station-agent and post-master in that year. He filled both positions until 1886 when he was succeeded by S. A. Jarvis, the present incumbent. The village contains two stores, a church, school-house, station, blacksmith-shop, and about ten dwellings.

In 1870 a station was located near Cool Spring Branch, and named Cool Spring. W. M. McIlvain was appointed station agent. In the following year a post-office was established here, and he became post-master. He was succeeded in both these positions in 1872, by James M. Martin, the present incumbent. No village is laid out as yet. Large shipments of lumber and charcoal are made from this point.

Lodge—Harbeson Circle, No. 10, B. G. C., was instituted at Harbeson, June 10, 1887. The first and present officers are as follows: G. W., Thos. R. Burton; C. W., Paynter Frame; C. J., Joseph B. Lingo; C. E., Jos. W. Wimbrow; C. K., B. O. Vaughn; H. R., Henry Prettyman; H. T., Silas J. Warrington; W. D., Robt. S. Watson; W. M., Chas. A. Isaac. These with N. T. Boach, Wm. Walker, Walton Thompson, John T. Watson and Thomas A. Joseph composed the charter members. The present membership is thirty-five. Meetings are held every Wednesday night in the lodge-room over T. R. Burton's store.

Milton.—The tract of land on which Milton now stands is part of a thousand-acre tract patented April 29, 1686, to James Gray under the name "Milford." In 1719 Samuel Rowland was the owner of this land, and on November 3d, of that year, he sold two hundred and fifty acres of it, lying on the south side of Broadkiln Creek, to Joseph Hepburn. By sundry conveyances all that portion of Milton on the south side of Broadkiln Creek vested in George Conwell, and the land embracing North Milton came into the possession of William Perry. Major William Peery (now Perry) was in command of a company in the Revolutionary War, and owned a large tract of land near the head waters of Cool Spring Run. He lived in a large red house on this tract where he died in 1800, leaving no descendants. His brother James lived on a tract north of this and his descendants still reside in this portion of the county. George Conwell resided in Milton and members of his family are now residents of Broadkiln Hundred. Various sized lots were sold by Conwell and Perry to different persons. The village which sprung up was early known as
I R. Doornau
Osborne's Landing, Conwell's Landing, Upper Landing and Head of Broadkill. On February 3, 1897, an act of assembly was passed changing the name from Head of Broadkill to Milton. It was so named in honor of the post, Milton.

The assessment list of 1899 shows the following persons as land owners in Milton at that date: James Hood, lot, store, house and granary; Elizabeth Jones, house and lot; Burton Hall, house and lot; David Hazzard, house and three lots and granary; Mary Fergus, lot, store, house and granary; Edward Evans, house and lot; Peter Coulter, house and lot; Benjamin Benson, two lots; Richard Bloxsom, house and granary; Nehemiah Lofland, two houses and lot; Joseph Maull, house and lot; Bevans Morris, two and a half lots, store, house and three granaries; Samuel Paynter, house and lot; John Bell's heirs, house and lot; Nehemiah Riley, house and lot; Thomas W. Rogers, house and lot; David Starr, house and lot; Abel Vent, house and lot; William Vent, house and lot; Samuel Wright, house, lot, tan-yard and store.

From this it will be seen that at this early date there were already here four stores and seven granaries, indicating that Milton was then a grain shipping point. The quantity of grain shipped increased until the construction of the railroad afforded new facilities for its transportation. The annual shipments amounted to about five hundred thousand bushels.

The growth of the village was slow but steady, and on March 17, 1895, an act was passed incorporating Milton as a town. William V. Coulter, Robert L. Lacey, George W. Atkins, Samuel Martin and Hon. James Ponder were appointed commissioners and authorized to secure a survey and lay out the town. No action was taken by the commissioners until March 90, 1897, when they met to perform the duties prescribe by the incorporation act. John C. Hazzard was appointed surveyor. The limits of the town were then thus defined: North Milton—starting from the bridge eight hundred yards up the Main Street; then six hundred yards each way, east and west, from thence to creek on east side, and to the mill-pond on west side, east and west sides to run parallel with Main Street. South Milton—starting from the creek at the foot of Main Street; thence twelve hundred yards up said street; thence west to mill-pond on one side, and on the other side to Robert Carey's line, following said line to Round Pole branch and down said branch to creek.

By an amendment passed February 7, 1877, the number of commissioners was increased from five to nine, and by a re-incorporation act, passed March 3, 1881, the name was changed from commissioners to council.

Milton is pleasantly located, near the central part of Broadkill Hundred, at the head of navigation of Broadkill Creek. The nearest railway station is Harbeson, distant about five miles. Good facilities for shipment however are afforded by water. Six vessels ply regularly between Milton and Philadelphia, and five carry consignments of freight to New York. Considerable grain is still shipped from here. About ten thousand cords of wood are transported by boat from here to Haverstraw, New York, where it is used in the manufacture of bricks. The abandonment of ship-building and the lack of industries are serious drawbacks to the advancement of the town.

The town at present contains eleven general stores, three grocery stores, two clothing stores, four millinery stores, two drug stores, one hardware store, one jewelry store, three confectionery stores, four wheelwright shops, five blacksmith shops, two shoe shops and one barber shop.

The following is a list of commissioners and counclmen who have served since the incorporation of the town:

Religious Matters.—St. John Baptist Protestant Episcopal Church.—Rev. William Beckett in a letter bearing date September 25, 1729, says, that his churches are in a growing condition, and that “a fourth church, built in a forest, was opened by me about a year ago by the name of St. John Baptist, and there is likely to be a numerous congregation there.” In his last letter, September 26, 1742, he states that his four churches are filled on Sundays, and he was often obliged to preach under the trees. The church building was erected at the fording-place of Long Bridge Branch in the forest of Broadkill where the road crossed that stream, and which was at that time the main thoroughfare leading to the lower part of the County and into Maryland. It was located on the east side of the pond, between the residence of H. S. Marshall and the school-house. Ex-Gov. James Ponder has in his possession a receipt for twenty shillings, bearing date March 15, 1731, and given to John Ponder, his great-grandfather, “for his subscription to the Church St. John Baptist by me Joseph Harrison.” The church was under the charge of the St. Peter’s Episcopal Church at Lewes, and the building was used as a place of worship until a short time previous to 1800, from which time it was used as a school-house for many years. The families of Ponder, Pettyjohn and Paramore (now Palmer) were all connected with this church, and Ebenezer Pettyjohn at his death, had in his possession the Bible and other articles belonging to the church. George Calhoon, long since deceased, once related that in his early days he attended preaching in the house, and in 1800 attended school there, it having been converted to use at a short time previous.

The congregation was later revived, and services were held in the Methodist Episcopal and Methodist Protestant Churches of Milford until June 5, 1877, when the present building was consecrated by Bishop Lee. It is situated on Federal Street, on land purchased of Wm. V. Coulter. It is a one-story frame structure thirty by fifty-six feet, and cost $2500.

No regular register is stationed here and the pulpit is supplied by rectors from Milford, Georgetown and Lewes.

Thos. Douglass is superintendent of the Sunday-School.

The present officers of the church are: Wardens, Nehemiah D. Welch, Hon. James Ponder; vestry, Thomas Douglass, John Ponder, E. F. Jones.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—When the first Methodist meetings were held in Milton, or how long they were conducted in private residences, is unknown. In 1801 the society felt the need of a regular house for worship, and for the purpose of securing funds for the accomplishment of their desire the following paper was passed among the citizens of the town and vicinity: “Whereas the People called Methodists have it in contemplation to Erect a Building at the Head of Broadkill (Milton), in the county of Sussex and State of Delaware, for the public worship of Almighty God, and being conscious that it’s not only the Duty of the members of their own Society but of all who profess the Christian Name to be willing to contribute for, and to promote the Religion of Jesus; And as such Building cannot be Erected without considerable expense, they therefore Solicit the Patronage of their fellow-citizens who wish the Prosperity of Zion. By becoming Subscribers and willing by casting in their Mites to forward the work; the said Building is to be Erected on a Rising ground beautifully Situated for that purpose, lying back of a Lot of ground belonging to Eli Hall, the Dimensions of which as well as the materials to compose the same shall be under the Direction of Bevins Morris, Abel Dutton, Archibald Fleming, John Tinley and Thomas Coulter, who are appointed Managers to conduct, carry on and Complete the said Building; the Lot of ground on which it is to be Erected shall first be conveyed by a good and sufficient Deed of sale from John S. Connell and Wife to the said Bevins Morris, Abel Dutton, Archibald Fleming, John Tinley and Thomas Coulter, and to their successors in office, for ever. Trustees in trust, Agreeable to the Rules and forms laid down in the form of Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and for the Raising and Securing the payment of a sum of Money sufficient to Erect and complete the said Building: We, the subscribers oblige ourselves, our Heirs, Executors and Administrators, to pay or cause to be paid to the said Managers, or any of them, the several sums of money to our respective names annexed, to be by them applied in Erecting the Building aforesaid. In witness whereof we have hereto set our hands the 7th day of July, 1801.” On this paper three hundred and twenty-eight dollars were subscribed and one hundred and twelve on another, making a total of four hundred and forty dollars.

On January 16, 1802, the land was granted by John S. Connell and wife to John Hazzard, Bevins Morris, Isaac Coulter, John Tinley, Samuel Ratcliff, Eli Hall, Morgan Williams and Thomas Coulter. Goshen meeting-house was immediately commenced, but was not fully completed until 1820.

In 1838 a brick wall was built around the church and burying-ground. In 1873 the need of a new church was keenly felt. A lot of land on Federal Street was purchased of G. W. S. Nicholson, and preparations made for the erection of a new building. The foundation was laid in the fall, and in the spring was found to be in bad condition. This discouraged some of the members and nothing further was done.
until 1877, when the work was revived and the structure was completed the following year. On August 4th of that year the lecture-room was dedicated by Bishop Scott, and January 12, 1879, the auditorium was dedicated by Rev. J. Hough. The building is a two-story frame edifice, forty by sixty feet, and cost six thousand five hundred dollars. A parsonage on the corner of Federal and Coulter Streets was erected in 1885.

The site of the former church is used as a cemetery. The present membership is one hundred and seventy-five. The Sabbath-school, comprising one hundred and twenty-five members, is under the superintendence of L. J. As, Coverdale. The present board of trustees is composed of the following persons: William A. Hazzard, Jno. H. Davidson, Thomas L. Blank, John C. Hazzard, Henry P. Burton, Chas. H. Atkins, James A. Carey, Samuel J. Martin, Samuel L. Colesse. This church was connected with Lewistown, Georgetown and Milton Circuits, and in 1863 was made a separate charge. Since that time the pulpit has been filled by the following pastors: 1863-65, Rev. Joseph Dare; 1865-67, Rev. William B. Walton; 1867, Rev. M. W. Redman; 1868, Rev. George W. Burke; 1869-71, Rev. William Merrill; 1871-73, Rev. W. P. Davis; 1873-75, Rev. E. E. White; 1876-77, Rev. John E. Smith; 1877-79, Rev. Robert W. Todd; 1879-81, Rev. George S. Gaenser; 1881-83, Rev. A. W. Lightbourne; 1883-85, Rev. Thomas Williams; 1885, Rev. Walter Underwood; 1886, Rev. Joseph Robinson.

Presbyterian Church.—In 1833 a subscription was taken by the Presbyterians for the purpose of erecting a house of worship in Milton. The nearest church of this denomination at that time was the Cool Spring church, about seven miles distant. The effort met with approval, and in the following year a church was erected on land purchased of Thara Messick. The membership was never very large, but the congregation often numbered several hundred. Services were conducted until about 1865, when, the building being dilapidated and the membership too small to erect a new one, the church was dissolved, some going back to the old church and others joining some other denomination. During the season that the church was open services were conducted by Rev. De Witt, Mitchelmore, Fisher, Hayden and Mustard. Among the last families worshipping here were those of Aaron Marshall, Gideon Waples, Samuel Parker and Captain Parker. The building is still standing and is now used for school purposes.

Methodist Protestants.—The first meetings of the Methodist Protestants of Milton were held in the Methodist Episcopal Church. On October 22, 1867, William A. Hazzard conveyed to Thomas A. Moore, Andrew Holland, Bartlette Wilson, John M. Phillips and John D. Rodney, trustees-elect, a lot of land on Union Street, thirty by forty-three feet. On this a church building, covering almost the entire space, was immediately erected. It is a neat one-story frame structure and is still in use. In 1881, under the pastorate of Rev. D. A. Shermer, a parsonage was erected on Broad Street. The present membership of the church is one hundred and fifteen. J. H. B. Mustard is the superintendent of a flourishing Sunday-school of seventy-five members, connected with this church. The present board of trustees is as follows: J. H. B. Mustard, Andrew Holland, Wallace White, Bateman Lingo, George Warren.

The church was connected with Sussex Circuit until 1868, when the Milton Circuit was formed.

Since that time it has been served by the following pastors: 1868, Rev. Isaac Atkins; 1869-72, Rev. A. T. Melvin; 1872-74, Rev. James H. Ellegood; 1874-76, Rev. Charles M. Thompson; 1876-78, Rev. H. Bruener; 1878-80, Rev. A. A. Harriman; 1880-82, Rev. D. A. Shermer, M.D.; 1882-84, Rev. A. D. Dick; 1884-87, Rev. J. E. Malloy; 1887, Rev. J. A. Wiegand.

Schools.—Milton Academy.—By an act of assembly passed January 27, 1819, the Milton Academy was incorporated, and Hon. Joseph Maull, Arthur Milby, John D. Smith, Hon. David Hazzard, Eli Hall, Wm. Morgan and Cornelius Carey were appointed commissioners to attend to the matters pertaining to the opening of the school. At a meeting of the stockholders held January 7, 1850, it was announced that the amount necessary to erect the building had been subscribed. Each share was worth five dollars and entitled the holder to a vote. Ex-Governor David Hazzard presided at this meeting, and Peter T. Wright was chosen secretary. John Ponder, Hon. David Hazzard and Cornelius Hazzard were appointed a committee to prepare a constitution, which they accordingly did. The preamble was as follows: "We the Subscribers, in order to form a more perfect Union, ensure Tranquility, promote Learning, and secure the Blessings of Tuition to our Posterity, Do ordain and establish this Constitution for the Milton Academy."

A lot of land on the corner of Appletree (now Chestnut) and Coulter Streets was procured, and a one-story frame building, about twenty by thirty feet, was erected. In this building the subscribers met January 7, 1822, and elected the following persons trustees: Hon. David Hazzard, John Gray, Eli Hall, Cornelius Coulter, Joseph Carey, William Vent and John Ponder. Morgan Rawlins was selected as the first teacher, and school opened January 9, 1822. On April 15th of the same year the examining committee reported that "It consists of about thirty pupils, about one-third studying geography, grammar, etc., the others studying the lower branches." George Middlebrooks, the next teacher, was succeeded in September, 1828, by Shadrach Terry, who continued until September, 1827. While in his charge Mr. Terry advertised in the Wilmington papers as follows: "To those who may resort here for an education notice is given that all branches will be taught." W. Thachter was the next teacher. For a few years after the adoption of the common school system the academy was abandoned.
In May, 1842, Rev. Nathan Kingsbury took charge of the school. In the following year it was rebuilt and enlarged by an additional story. School was afterwards kept by Messrs. Crosby, Lamb, Bellis, Hicks and Wood. The building was last used for school purposes in 1880, when Frederick Thompson had charge. It is now used as a voting-place. The present trustees are Nehemiah D. Welch, George W. Atkins, Joseph C. Atkins, Robert H. Oarey and Hon. James Ponder.

In the original division of the county into school districts, the town of Milton formed a portion of two districts, that part of the town north of Broadkiln Creek being in District No. 8, and the remainder in District No. 12. In the latter, district-school was held in the academy until a school-house was erected in 1838. The building then erected continued in use with occasional repairs until 1876. In that year the district, which had been sub-divided into Districts Nos. 98 and 160, was again consolidated. By a vote of the people taken June 26, 1876, it was decided to buy the Presbyterian Church. This was accordingly done, and the building was arranged for three school-rooms. These are presided over at present by C. B. Morris, Miss Mary E. Black and Miss Mary Magoo. There are in attendance seventy-eight males and sixty-six females.

In District No. 8, a school-house was soon built after the passage of the School Law. In 1837 John Tilney had charge of the school, which comprised twenty-five pupils at that time and was open six months. In 1848 there were forty-one males and twenty-seven females in attendance. The district was divided in 1867 and No. 153 created. The two were soon consolidated and so continue. In the following year the old school-house was removed and the present one erected. It is a one-story frame building with two departments, taught respectively by E. Wise Warren and Mrs. S. J. Coverdale. At the present time there are enrolled forty-five males and forty-eight females.

Industries.—The principal industry in which the people of Milton were ever engaged was ship-building. Baptist Lay, the pioneer of this business, built his first vessel a short distance from Milton over a century ago. As early as the year 1800 Cornelius Coulter was extensively engaged in ship-building. He was succeeded about 1825 by his brother, Wm. V. Coulter. At this time Jacob White and Samuel Martin, Samuel Stephenson, John Mustard and Geo. W. Atkins were also in the business.

The amount of work gradually increased and about 1861 reached its maximum. From that year until 1880 there were generally three or four ships on the stocks. The principal builders during this time were David H. Atkins, Ponder & Russell, Cornelius C. Davidson, Wm. C. Prettyman, Wm. Lamb, Joseph L. Black & Bro., and R. F. Hastings. There were employed in the ship-yards about one hundred workmen. The industry has almost ceased and during the past year there were only two vessels built.

In 1815 an act of Assembly was passed enabling Hon. Joseph Maull, John S. Conwell and Wm. W. Conwell to erect a mill dam across Broadkiln Creek, near Fergus Bridge. The dam was completed, and soon afterwards a grist-mill was erected by them, which later became the sole property of Maull. He also purchased a saw-mill on the same stream a short distance above. This was known as the "Draper Mill," and in 1812 a one-half interest in it was conveyed to William W. Conwell by Isaac Cloewer. A bark-mill was erected on the same stream, opposite the saw-mill, by Maull, and it continued in operation until 1845. After Maull's death, his executor, Shepherd P. Houston, sold the above mills to Samuel R. Paynter, whose heirs still own them.

A tan-yard was in operation in Milton in 1816, under the proprietorship of Nathaniel Losland. It was last owned and operated by Robert Burton, about 1830.

Another tannery was opened by Hall & Hazzard about the year 1825. At a later period George Hall became sole owner, and continued operating it until his death, which occurred in 1864. Since that time it has not been in operation.

At an early date a saw-mill occupied the present site of Hon. James Ponder's ship-yard. It was built by William Martin and John Conwell, and by them operated for some time. It has long since been discontinued.

In 1863 Hon. James Ponder erected a steam saw and bark-mill in Milton. The bark-mill was used for grinding quercitron bark, and had a capacity of three tons per day. The saw-mill was operated chiefly in preparing ship-timber. The mills were destroyed by fire April 16, 1877, and never rebuilt.

The Milton Brick Manufacturing Company opened a yard a short distance from town in September, 1887. They propose to manufacture 200,000 bricks per month, and be in operation seven months per year. Employment is given to fifteen men.

A large quantity of peaches are grown in this locality, and this has occasioned the erection of evaporators. The principal owners of evaporators in Milton are Reynolds Brothers, W. H. Chandler & Co., Tomlinson & Burton, E. B. Atkins, Charles G. Waples, David Wiltbank and Pullen & Collins.

Post-Office.—Asa Haines had charge of the post-office previous to 1829. In that year John Ponder received the appointment, and continued in charge until 1849, when he was succeeded by Nehemiah D. Welch. In 1853 Hon. James Ponder became postmaster, which position he held until 1861, when Thomas Atkins was appointed. William C. Fisher was appointed in 1867, and was succeeded by John C. Polk in 1869. Polk continued until 1885, when John B. Mustard, the present incumbent received, the appointment.

Lodges.—Endeavor Lodge, No. 17, A. F. A. M., was instituted at Milton in June, 1848. The first officers were as follows: W. M., Hon. James Ponder; S. W., Theodore W. Parker; J. W., Elisha Holland; Treas-
The Milton Library Association was organized in January, 1875, and incorporated March 7, 1883. The first officers of the association were as follows: President, John C. Hazard; Vice-president, N. W. Maggee; Secretary, John Ponder; Librarian, L. B. Chandler; Assistant Librarian, John B. Welch; Treasurer, Dr. J. A. Hopkins. A suitable case for the books was placed in the store-room of John B. Welch, where it has since remained. A share of stock is worth $2.50, and entitles the holder to an unrestrained use of the library. The present membership of the association is forty-five. The following are the present officers: President, John C. Hazard; Vice-President, William D. Lank; Secretary, Miss Clara Vaughn; Treasurer, Charles H. Atkins; Librarian, John B. Welch.

Hotels.—The first hotel in Milton was on the corner of Federal and Front Streets, and is now used as a store. Benjamin Benson was the owner and proprietor, and, after his death, it was sold by his heirs to John Ponder. It was last used as a hotel in 1868, when James Cooper was the proprietor.

The Ponder House was built in 1857, by Hon. James Ponder. It was opened as a hotel the following year, with Ezra Chambers as proprietor. It is the only brick house in the town. W. C. Lofland, the present proprietor, took charge of the hotel in June, 1886.

Another hotel was opened in the town about 1880, by Peter Hart. It was managed by him several years, and then leased to W. S. Lane, the present proprietor.

CHAPTER LXX.

INDIAN RIVER HUNDRED.

This hundred is located south of the central part of Sussex County and borders on two arms of the Atlantic Ocean, called Rehoboth Bay and Indian River Bay, which have a common inlet. The upper part of the latter sheet of water bears the name of Indian River, from which the hundred takes its title. This stream is wide and shallow at low tide, and has been so much filled up that but a small part of its length remains navigable. It forms the southern boundary of the hundred, separating it from Baltimore and Dagsboro'Hundreds. On the west and north are Georgetown and Lewes and Rehoboth Hundreds. Separating it from the latter are Bundick's Branch and Love Creek, which empty their waters in Rehoboth Bay. Extending from the southern part of the latter is a large arm, into the upper part of which fall the waters of Middle and Herring Creeks. These arms or indentures of the bays give the eastern shore a very irregular appearance and form a number of necks and islands. Of the latter, Burton's Island, near the Indian River Inlet, is the largest. Above it is the Long Neck, whose main characteristic is expressed by its name. It contains some fine lands. Angola Neck, northwest of Rehoboth Bay, has also a large acreage of good lands, whose possession was much desired by the early settlers. The general surface of the hundred is level, much of the soil being of a sandy nature, and, consequently, the lands are not as fertile as those of the contiguous hundreds. Yet, with careful cultivation, they can be made fairly productive. And there are some fine farms, with good improvements, many of the latter being the results of intelligent labor in recent years. A large area remains covered with original forests and, in other sections are the growths of trees, principally pines, on lands once under cultivation, which have been abandoned or turned out as commons. In later years much of this has again been cleared up, the wood being converted into charcoal, which has become a profitable industry. This work and ordinary agriculture constitute the chief occupation of the inhabitants of the hundred, who numbered eighteen hundred and thirteen according to the census of 1880.

One of the first patents for lands in the hundred was for a tract of six hundred and eighty acres, upon Indian River and Rehoboth Bay. It was designated as "Cruder's Neck," and was granted to Captain Nathaniel Carr, October 28, 1667. "Avery's Rest," on King's Creek, out of Rehoboth Bay, was patented to John Avery July 1, 1675. A part of this tract was transferred to John Morgan in 1702.

In 1677 William Burton received a warrant from Governor Andros for the survey of one thousand acres, called the "Long Neck," of which he sold five hundred acres to Thomas Bagwell, October 9, 1679. This tract, at a later day, became the property of Bagwell Burton. William Burton had eleven sons, from whom he settled along the Indian River, principally on "Long Neck," where the family owned thousands of acres of land. From them have descended the numerous Burtons of the county, and to each generation belonged a number of John Burtons, there being at one time more than thirty persons bearing that name in the hundred. On the Indian River was built the ancestral home of one line of Burtons, which became widely known as the "White House," and for more than a century it was occupied by successive John Burtons. In 1887 it was the property of Mrs. John M. Houston, a daughter of the late John Robert Burton. The main part of the house is of brick, one and a half stories high, and was whitewashed; hence its name. It is believed that the house was built as long since as 1722. This home farm embraced two hundred and sixty acres in 1887, and was one of the best-known landmarks in the hundred.

Some of the Burtons became eminent in the affairs of the State, Dr. Wm. Burton being the Governor at the breaking out of the Civil War. Robert Burton, another well-known member of the family, was born near St. George's Chapel in 1772. He was a man of unusual sound judgment and purpose to benefit the public. Through his efforts the general act was passed by the Assembly to ditch the low lands of Baltimore Hundred. But this measure was at first so violently opposed by some of the citizens, who claimed that it would produce oppressive taxation, that they threatened to do him bodily harm, if he should appear in their midst. Yet most of them lived to see time justify his wisdom. That system of drainage has made the lands of the hundred the most productive in the county. He died at Lewes in 1849, having rounded a good and noble life.

In 1684 the "Brothers' Patent," containing six hundred acres of land, adjoining those of "Long Neck," were warranted to Thomas and John Jones, but were resurveyed to William Burton, June 16, 1735.

In 1685 the tracts called "Timber Hill," on the south side of Mill Creek, and "Spring Ford," on the south side of the Great Kill, were warranted to William Clark, eleven hundred and fifty acres in all. In 1687 "Maiden's Plantation," "Batchelor's Lott," and "Farmers' Hall," all on the "creeks proceeding out of Rehoboth Bay," were located to parties who sold them within a few years. "Bradford Hall," twelve hundred acres on the south side of Rehoboth Bay, was located in 1688, and warranted to Nathaniel Bradford. Part of this tract was sold to Roger Corbett, of Lewes, who transferred three hundred acres of the same, situate along Love Creek, to Woodman Stockley, Sr., in 1706. John Stockley had purchased five hundred acres of William Clark in 1691. Another part of the Bradford tract was conveyed to Richard Paynter and the land was divided in 1694.

John Barker became the owner of "Lancaster," a tract of one hundred and fifty acres on the north side of Indian River, in 1698, and the same year two hundred acres of "Farmers' Hall" passed to Jacob Kollock.

In 1701 "Kinney's Adventure," seven hundred and twenty acres in the bottom of Angola Neck, was resurveyed to Robert Burton. In 1702 John Gibbs purchased four hundred and seventy-four acres along Love Creek, and in 1705 James Drake became the owner of two hundred acres on what is now Herring Creek, at that time called Fishery or Goldsmith's Creek.

In 1706, Richard Hinman purchased of John Paynter three hundred and forty-four acres on Angola Neck; and the same year Anderson Parker and Matthew Spicer purchased "Good Hope," six hundred acres in all, on the south side of the Marsh Creek.

In 1715 Richard Bundick became the owner of twelve hundred acres of land at the head of Love Creek (hence the name of that part, Bundick's Branch), but soon after sold the most of it to Thomas and John Jones and John Pettitjohn. In 1816 the latter disposed of some of his purchase to John Allen and George Dodd. "Bottle & Cakes"—three hundred and forty acres at the head of Long Neck—was divided, in 1716, between William Hanzer and Thomas Geeze. A part of the former's land became the property of John Lingo, November 10, 1761, and from that date the Lingo family became identified with Indian River Hundred. Henry Lingo purchased land in Slaughter Neck as early as 1748. The descendants have become a large and influential family. E. M. Lingo, a leading farmer of Angola, is a member of this family.

The settlement of the Robinson family in the hundred was much earlier. In March, 1698, Wm. Robinson, a tanner, purchased four hundred and fifty acres of land in Angola Neck, called "Robert his fortune," which had been patented as early as 1677. Subsequently this estate was enlarged by other purchases, and remained for many years in the hands of the Robinson family. As the property of Benjamin Robinson, it was subdivided among his sons—William, Benjamin, Parker, John and Peter. The upper or William's farm of one hundred and thirty-eight acres, and the improvements thereon, became the property of Peter R. Burton, who was the owner in 1887. In 1783 Thomas and Peter Robinson, merchants, bought of Elizabeth Flemming two hundred and thirty-two acres on the north side of Herring Branch, which had been warranted to Christopher Topham in 1718. Soon after Thomas Robinson settled in the vicinity of St. George's Chapel, where he opened a store. During the Revolution he was a Tory and in 1779 his property was confiscated. He then returned to England and later to Canada, but after peace was declared again took up his abode in Indian River Hundred, where he lived until his death.

His son, Peter, born in 1776, became a lawyer and jurist of distinction, and his son Thomas was a member of the Legislature. Peter Robinson, the brother of Thomas, the merchant, lived at the head of the Angola tract, where he was well-known as a businessman. He was appointed a justice of the Supreme Court in 1793. The site of the farm of Thomas A. Joseph, of Angola, is a historical tract. He is a descendant of the old Josephs family, which was prominent in the early history of the State and large tax-payers in 1785.

On the Indian River, above the White House and below Millborough, a settlement was made by the Waples family on a farm which was once part of a large tract of land called "Warwick," consisting of three hundred acres, which was bought by Peter Waples of John How, September 3, 1693. He had bought three hundred acres of John Barker November 10, 1692, and on April 24, 1694, bought of William Clark four hundred acres. These lands were adjoining on the Indian River. It is supposed that his home was at the narrow part of the river, now known as "Ferry Landing." On the 2d of September, 1696, he petitioned court for license to keep a ferry across the river from his house, for greater convenience for travelers to and from Maryland, which was granted. The road from Lewes, which was the principal settlement at that time, came to St. George's Chapel and down to the river, and in later years was joined near that place by the road from the upper part of the State. Before 1750 a town was laid out on this tract on the river, which was called Warwick, and May 7th of that year lots in the town were sold as the property of Woolsey Burton.1

The name of "Ferry Billy" Burton is still remembered by older citizens as the ferryman at this place. For a further account of this ferry, reference is made in the article on "Internal Improvements" in the general history. Peter Waples also owned land on the south side of the river in Daggsborough Hundred in Pine Neck. He had three sons, William, Peter and Paul, from whom the family in his State have descended.

The first representative of the Frame family, who settled in the hundred, was named George, who early located a large tract of land on the upper part of Indian River. From him the property passed to his son George, whose son Robert was the next owner by right of primogeniture. Breaking through the custom, the latter divided the land with his brother Paynter, who deceased in 1812. In addition to his being a farmer, the latter carried on a store and distillery in the neighborhood of the old Presbyterian Church, which was built on the Frame tract. Near the fruit distillery was one of the largest and oldest peach orchards of this part of the State. This tract of land is yet mainly owned by Henry C. Frame, while his brother Paynter owns another part of the large estate in the northern section of the hundred.

The latter tract of four hundred acres includes "Black's Savannah," of twenty-five acres, which was originally bare of trees. Here are the head-waters of numerous streams, which attracted much game to the locality, and it was also a favorite resort of Indian hunters. Many relics and a few Indian graves have been found. Next above this land was the "White Horse" tract of Joseph Warrington, the ancestor of that numerous family in Sussex County.

Paynter Frame has given this section local celebrity by growing on his farm some of the finest melons and fruit ever produced in Delaware. He has also propagated new species of fruits and vegetables.

The first American ancestor of the old Delaware family of Frame was George Frame, who emigrated from England at an early period, and patented several thousand acres of land in what is now Daggersboro', and Indian River Hundreds. Several of his children subsequently emigrated to Ohio, where they were among the earliest settlers in Pickaway County, in that State. George Frame, son of the emigrant, married Elizabeth Paynter, aunt of Gov. John Paynter, who bore him two sons, Robert and Paynter Frame.

1 May 8, 1746, Wm. Burton, father of Woolsey Burton, sold to the latter the place called "Warwick," including the ground-rents, which implies that the town had already been laid out and some lots sold.
Robert died at the early age of thirty-four. His wife, the widow, whose maiden-name was Mary Vaughan, first married Mr. West, and bore him one child. He had three sons and a daughter by her. Geo. Va. was the eldest, and was born October 21, 1738, in the care and management of the undivided estate. He married a Mr. West, and bore him one child. Both Mr. Geo. Va. and his wife, the mother of the Hon. Mr. Geo. Va., resided in the vicinity of Bath when he died, in 1854, at the age of eighty-six.

The Hon. Mr. Geo. Va. was born in the State of New York, and was a member of Congress for the State of New York in 1834, and 1835.

His wife, Ann J. (West) Va., was the daughter of Capt. Daniel West of the town of Seaforth, and was married to Geo. Va. in 1766.

The Hon. Geo. Va. was the father of Geo. Va., the Hon. Geo. Va., and Geo. Va., who was born in the town of Seaforth, and was a member of Congress for the State of New York in 1834, and 1835.

Robert died at the early age of thirty-four. His widow, whose maiden-name was Mary Vaughan, first married Mr. West, and bore him one child, Elizabeth. After his death she married Wm. Burton, and had four children,—Dr. William Burton, late Governor of Delaware; John Hammond, a well-known surveyor; Lydia and Carolina. After the death of Mr. Burton, she became the wife of Mr. Frame, and bore him three children,—Elizabeth Paynter, who married James Anderson, of Georgetown; George, the father of the subject of this notice; and Robert Frame, who later became Attorney-General of Delaware. Mrs. Frame died soon after her husband, and the children were reared by their uncle, Paynter Frame, who had no children of his own.

George Frame, son of Robert, when he arrived at the age of fourteen years, was bound as an apprentice to Baxter & Bird, hardware merchants of Philadelphia, and remained with that firm until he attained his majority. In 1819 he made a journey to Havana, but returned soon after, and settled in his native county of Sussex, devoting himself to the improvement and development of the four hundred acres of land he had inherited from his father's estate. He manifested great energy, industry and executive ability, and added greatly to his landed estate; was a skillful surveyor, and owned about one thousand five hundred acres of fairly productive and well cultivated land at the time of his death. He was active in political affairs; was elected to the Legislature of his State in 1831; served as sheriff of Sussex County in 1834, and was a popular candidate for gubernatorial honors in 1840. He died September 13, 1846, in the forty-ninth year of his age. His wife was Elizabeth Jefferson, daughter of Joseph and Ann (Jefferson) Warrington, and a distant relative of President Thomas Jefferson. She bore him twelve children, of whom eleven grew to years of maturity, namely: Robert, Mary Vaughan (wife of Manlove Wilson) Paynter, Ann J. (wife of R. H. Davis) Henry Clay, Elizabeth West (wife of Nathaniel Williams), George W., deceased, Thomas Jefferson, Rev. Clement T., (of the Baptist denomination), Jennie W., and Thalia H. M. Frame. Mrs. Frame led an exemplary Christian life, was possessed of remarkable energy and business ability, as well as a high order of intelligence, and it is said of her that she read the Bible through thirty times in course. She died January 5, 1879, in her seventy-seventh year.

The subject of this sketch was born in the house where he now resides, in Indian River Hundred, on October 21, 1826. He attended the public schools of his neighborhood until he was fourteen years of age, and then enjoyed academic instruction in Georgetown, Seaford and Millsboro' until past the age of twenty. The last year of his attendance at school he paid his own tuition in gold, derived from the sale of rabbits which he had caught. After completing his educational career he remained with his mother, on the family homestead, at her request, and assisted her in the care and management of the undivided estate of his father. He never married, but has proved an enthusiastic farmer, paying special attention to the grafting and improvement of fruit. He owns over five thousand peach trees, also pear and apple trees in abundance, as well as numerous varieties of small fruits. He owns several tracts of land, and raises large quantities of wheat and corn—his fences being lined with the choicest varieties of grapes grafted onto the wild vines. He is widely known in connection with the growth of water-melons, having also originated several excellent varieties, such as the "Iron-Clad," and the "Prize," and frequently preserves th's luscious fruit during the winter. He has also recently developed a peach of great merit which he has named "Frame's Favorite."

In 1876 he was one of the nine commissioners appointed to represent Delaware at the Centennial Exhibition, and served effectively as a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and as chairman of the Committee on Horticulture. He was also appointed by Governor Hall a delegate to represent Sussex County in the National Agricultural Convention, which met in New York City, in December, 1878. At that session the American Agricultural Association was formed, of which organization he is a member.

He has frequently been selected to fill positions of trust and responsibility, and acted as the executor of the estate of his uncle, Peter Warrington. He is part owner of a vessel trading between Milton, Del., and Philadelphia and New York. Like his father, he has always taken a deep interest in politics, and in 1854 was the nominee of the Democratic party for the State Legislature, but was defeated. He was elected, however, in 1856, and served with credit and acceptability; and was again chosen to represent his party in 1866 and in 1874. He has, with but few exceptions, been a delegate to every convention of his party in the country for the last thirty years. He has also been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for many years, and much of the time has acted as trustee and steward. He was a delegate to the Peninsula Convention of all denominations in 1880, and has long been identified with the Sussex County Bible Society, and has served as its vice-president. He was made an Odd Fellow in 1850, a Mason in 1852, became Master of the lodge in 1854, and a member of the Royal Arch in 1858. He was a delegate to the General Grand Convocation of Royal Arch Masons in Baltimore in 1872, and is Past Deputy Grand High Priest of the Grand Chapter of the State of Delaware. He was a prominent candidate for Governor in 1870, and again in 1872. He is of an agreeable and social temperament, popular and respected, and one of the foremost farmers of his county.

many believed to be descendants of the Indians, which formerly inhabited this country. Others regard them as mulattoes and still others claim that they are of Moorish descent. From the fact that so many of them bear the name of Sockum, that term has also been applied to the entire class of people. Of their genealogy, Judge George P. Fisher said:

"About one hundred and fifty years ago a cargo of slaves from Congo River was landed at Lewes, and sold to purchasers at that place. Among them was a tall, fine-looking young man about five and twenty years. This man was called Requa, and was remarkable for his many proportions and regular features, being more Caucasian than African. Requa was purchased by a young Irish widow, having red hair, blue eyes and fair complexion. She afterwards married him. At that time the Nanticoke Indians were still quite numerous at and near Indian River. The offspring of Requa and his Irish wife were not recognized in the white society, and they would not associate with the negroes, and they did associate and intermarry with the Indians.

"This statement was made on oath of Lydia Clark, at Georgetown, in 1856, in the trial of the case of the State against Levin Sockum for selling, contrary to law, powder and shot to one Isaiah Harman, alleged to be a free mulatto. The question upon which the case turned was whether Harman really was a free mulatto, and the genealogy of that race of people was traced by Lydia Clark, then about seventy-seven years of age, who was of the same race of people.

"The court was so well convinced of the truth of Lydia's testimony that Sockum was convicted of the charge preferred against him.

"This race of people are noted as peaceable, law-abiding citizens, good farmers, and are known as Moers, but without any foundation. The name Requa or Regua is now handed down as Ridgeway."

The exclusiveness spoken of continues to the present time. This class of people maintains its separate social life (so far as it is possible to do so) seldom intermarrying with the negroes or mulattoes, and support separate churches. The number in the county is diminishing, owing to removals and natural causes but enough remain to make it a distinctive element.

The BUSINESS INTERESTS of the hundred are confined to a few small trading points and the operation of mills by the feeble water-powers of the sluggish streams, flowing into the Rehoboth and Indian River Bays. On the Middle Creek, at the head of Angola Neck, the Robinson family had one of the first mills, different members owning it until 1848, since which time Peter R. Burton has been the proprietor. The saw-mill was abandoned many years ago, but the grist-mill is still operated in a limited way. Higher up the same stream and on Herring Creek, prior to 1825, the Robinson family also had mills, suited to the demands of those times, which have passed out of existence so long since that scarcely a trace of them can be seen. In 1797 Woodman Stockley was authorized to erect a mill-dam across Rood's Creek, probably where was afterwards the Ennis mill. That site was vacated by order of the court, on account of the overflow caused by the dam. In 1806 an act was also passed to enable Joshua Jones to remove his mill and erect a dam on Swan Creek, one hundred and seventeen perches down said creek, and two acres on the west side of the creek were condemned for a mill-site. On this steam Samuel Lockwood operated a mill as early as 1816, which did quite a heavy business for those times. The channel of the stream permitted boats to be loaded below the mill so that flour was shipped from here direct to Philadelphia. Higher up the stream, Robert and Cornelius Waples had a mill, which has also gone down.

On the Deep Branch of the Indian River the Pool Mill did good service for the settlers after 1800, and as the power is constant the mills have since been continuously operated, being later known as the property of Burton Morris. Several miles below, the Frame family had a saw-mill, near which the Presbyterian meeting-house was afterwards built, and which circumstance of locality gave rise to the name "Sawmill Church." Later, Col. Wm. Waples improved a power, lower down the stream, the breast of the dam being used as a causeway for the road across the river. This became locally known as the Doe Bridge, one of these animals having been killed near this spot. The grist-mill put up became widely known as the property of Col. Waples and later of Robert Morris; but since 1884 it has been known as the property of Benjamin B. Jones. The latter was, also, in 1887, the owner of the mills at Millsboro'. That power was improved at an early day by Elisha Derrickson, and was first made to operate but a small mill; this gave place to a large mill, having two water-wheels on the outside of the building. There was a kiln for drying corn, and much grain was ground, which was loaded upon vessels coming up to the mills. The property was destroyed by fire in 1839, while owned by Col. William D. Waples and while being operated by Henry C. Waples, whose residence near the mill was burned at the same time. The present mill was built in 1840, and soon after became the property of Gardiner H. Wright. In 1852 it was remodeled and has been enlarged within more recent years as the property of Benjamin B. Jones. It has a strong and constant power. The usefulness of a large saw-mill on the Dagsborough side of the stream has been superseded by many portable steam saw-mills, located in the forests of the hundred, among the principal ones being those of J. A. Lingo, near Warwick, and R. Lingo, on the Long Neck.

Millsboro' is located in both Indian River and Dagsborough Hundreds, but had its beginning as a business point in the former. The furnace store connected with the furnace and grist-mills at this place was opened near the mills, on the Indian River side, about 1829, and as the furnace alone had about seventy employees, it had a large trade until its removal to the Dagsborough side (which was then known as Washington), about 1840. The store was supplemented by an inn, kept by Philip Short and later by Burton Waples and Thomas Hayworth, and as this place was also the headquarters of Colonel Waples' stage line across the Peninsula, there was much business activity. The inn was closed to the public many years ago, but stores have been pretty continuously kept at the old stand until the present time. In 1887 Derrick B. Morris was in the trade and there were, besides the mills and the store, half a dozen residences in the Indian River part of the village, the general business being confined to the Dagsborough side, where is also the railway station.

At Angola the Robinsons had a store prior to the Revolution, the building in which they traded being on the side of the present barn of Peter R. Burton, who was a merchant of more recent times. In a still more recent period James Maull opened another store, and for the past ten years D. D. Burton has been in trade, also being the postmaster of the office established about thirty years ago. A small hamlet has grown up at this place.

At Warwick Landing was formerly a store, which has long since been discontinued, but at the head of Long Neck a business stand was established many years ago by Levin Sockum, where afterwards traded Henry Groome and, since 1873, John A. Lingo. Lower down the Neck a store, kept by Captain Baylis, has been discontinued.

At Johnson's Cross-Roads (St. John's Church) Peter Parker had a small store as early as 1830. Here later merchants were John T. Burton and James W. Lynch. East from this place, in a locality known as Holleyville, Burton C. Prettyman opened a store, about 1842, which is still continued. The post-office is of more recent origin. It receives its mail from Harbeson station, and also supplies the Angola office.

Nearer the central part of the hundred is the new hamlet of Fairmount, which consists of the Unity Church, store, shops and a few houses, nearly all the buildings being new and presenting an attractive appearance. The business interests at this point are solely the creation of Daniel C. Townsend, who there engaged in trade in 1879. Since that time he has succeeded in making it a good business centre. A Grange Hall, in this neighborhood, is a two-story frame building, in which public meetings are also held. The membership of the Grange was small in 1887.

In the vicinity of St. George's Chapel there were, besides the mills, already mentioned, about eighty years ago, two taverns and a small store, the latter kept by the Robinson family as early as the Revolution. Nearer Lewes was a race-course and a bull path; the latter was a sort of bowling alley, only they used large bullets and rolled on a firmly-beaten path. Half a century ago that was a popular pastime in rural sections. All the foregoing have long since disappeared, leaving the chapel as the sole interest in that community.

The St. George's Chapel (Protestant Episcopal) is the representation of the earliest organized religious effort in the hundred. As early as May 8, 1706, Roger Corbett "made over to the public, for a religious place of worship or church, one acre of land situate on the south side of Love's Branch, to have and to hold the same for ye use aforesaid, with warrants from him, his heirs and assigns forever, by deed of gift." It is said that about this time a small log church was built on this tract of land, but the account appears to be purely traditionary. In a report of the missionary, the Rev. William Beckett, October 11, 1728, is an authentic statement of the chapel as follows: "In Indian River Hundred, nine miles from Lewes, was raised in December, 1719, an oak frame, twenty by twenty-five feet, and twelve feet high. The walls and roof were covered with red oak boards, and so remained until 1725, when fifteen feet were added to the length of the building, but this part was not finished. In the old part was the pulpit, gallery and floor. In 1728 it was proposed to cover the whole building with cypress shingles and otherwise improve the appearance of the chapel. About two hundred people steadily attended the services of the chapel."

In subsequent years this building was further repaired, and was used until about 1792, when it was destroyed by fire, the flames being communicated from a burning building near by. In 1794 the present edifice was erected of bricks burned near the church. It was built two stories high, having double rows of windows and galleries all around the church. The pulpit was tulip-shaped and was supplied with a sounding-board. In this condition it was a well-kept place of worship for nearly a hundred years; but the walls becoming badly cracked, it was deemed unsafe, and, in 1882, it was determined to rebuild the church. The height of the building was cut down, the galleries being removed, and the architecture was changed to Gothic style. These repairs were completed in April, 1883, at an outlay of seven hundred and fifty dollars. At this time William C. Burton was the junior warden and much of the work was done under his direction. In 1887 the building presented a plain but not unattractive appearance.

St. George's Chapel was for many years a part of the parish of Lewes, and had, consequently, the same rector as St. Peter's Church, these being, after 1820, the Revs. Daniel Higbee, Charles C. Plessants, George Hall, the latter being ordained a priest at St. Mark's, Millsboro', October 8, 1848.

The Rev. William Wright became the rector of St. George's Church and the Chapel of the Holy Comforter, December 1, 1855, and continued until September, 1860, when the Rev. J. Rambo was appointed to take charge of these churches, serving in the capacity of missionary until June, 1863. Since that time the rector, in connection with other churches, has been the following: 1867, the Rev. John A. Parsons; 1868-73, the Rev. John L. McKim. From July, 1873, until the fall of 1887 the minister of the Episcopal Churches in the hundred was the Rev. George W. Johnson. The membership is not large, many of those formerly belonging having removed. In December, 1887, the communicants at the church and its chapel did not exceed thirty. The vestry of the former was composed of D. D. Burton and William C. Burton, wardens; Alfred Joseph, B. M. Marvel, Thomas W. Turner, Thomas W. Burton and John E. Burton, vestrymen.

The Chapel of the Holy Comforter was consecrated May 25, 1847, and was erected for the convenience of members of St. George's residing in the lower part of the hundred. It is a frame building, twenty-eight by thirty-eight feet, with a chancel added, and was placed in good repair in 1880. In its ecclesiastical relation it has always been a part of St. George's Parish, the two places of worship having a common place of burial at the old church.

The cemetery at the old St. George's Chapel (now Church) has been kept in a good condition. A fine brick wall was built around it in 1857, and a neat iron fence separates it from the public highway. The location is a good one, being on a sandy knoll. There are some fine monuments in the yard, and among the headstones noted were memorials to members of the following families: Kalloch, Lingo, Robinson, Derrickson, Phillips, Baylis, Dodd, Stockley, Wilson, Prettyman, Cary, Long, Collins, Hill, Turner.

The Indian River Presbyterian Church.—This body has passed out of existence, leaving no record of its early history. The organization of a congregation near the "Head of Indian River" antedated 1750, and it may have been as early as 1730 or soon after the organization of the congregation at Cool Spring, with which some of the Presbyterians residing in the hundred would naturally have been first connected. Soon after 1750 a dissension arose in the Indian River congregation, between the "Old and New Light" members, which prevented their agreeing upon the Rev. Matthew Wilson, of the Lewes Church, as a suitable pastor, and on the 12th of October, 1754, the "peace was preserved" by electing the Rev. John Harris as the first separate pastor of whom any account has been preserved. The congregation retained him in that office until 1759, when it confessed its inability to pay his salary any longer, and the pulpit became vacant. After it was supplied a short time by the Rev. Moses Little, a union was again effected in 1767, with the churches at Lewes and Cool Spring, and the Rev. Matthew Wilson then became the pastor, serving the three congregations until his death. In 1788 these congregations were incorporated under the provisions of the act of 1787, with the name of "The United Presbyterian Congregations of Lewes, Cool Spring and Indian River." All their temporalities were thus united, and for a number of years "they called and paid their pastors in the name of the trustees of this Directory."

In 1800 the ruling elders of the congregation were Robert Houston, Benjamin Prettyman, David Richards and Jacob Burton. In 1811, Edward Hall and William Rodney were elected, and in 1836 the session was composed of Dr. S. K. Wilson, C. Waples, P. Marvel, Aaron Marvel and Peter Waples. At this time the communicants numbered sixty-eight, and the Rev. Cornelius H. Mustard was the pastor. In 1811 the membership was still stronger, there being seventy-four communicants. After the latter period the congregation appears to have declined very rapidly, and was soon so weak that no regular minister could be maintained, the Rev. Henry Fries being the last to serve in that relation. The Civil War still further disrupted the church, which has had no active existence since that time.

The place of worship of the congregation was in a meeting-house erected on the Frame farm, one and a half miles about Milleboroe, an acre of land in a fine grove having been set aside for this purpose. The first building was replaced by a better frame structure in 1794, which was well finished, the interior being of heart pine, in panel work, while the entire outside was covered with cypress shingles. In 1838 it was repaired for the last time, and after 1866 was practically abandoned. In 1887 the frame of the building was still standing, but most of the lumber entering into the construction of the building had been carried away, and the cemetery was no longer used.

The Methodist Episcopal Church has had an active, aggressive membership in the hundred for more than eighty years, and in 1887 it was stronger numerically than all the other denominations combined. An account of its work in this division embraces the history of five white and three colored churches. Of these, "Zoar" and "Unity" both appear to have been built in 1810; but the organization of the classes occupying them, as parts of old Lewes Circuit, was undoubtedly a number of years earlier.

Zoar was incorporated November 5, 1810, with fifteen families represented, among them being those of William Ennis, Asa Johnson, Jeremiah Joseph, Thomas Grice, Peter Mayer, John Sharp, Spencer Lacy and Isaac Atkins. A frame, shingle-covered meeting-house was built, on the main road, several miles north of Milleboroe. This house was a regular place of worship many years, but it now stands neglected. Its further regular use was made unnecessary by the changes in population and the building of Bethesda Church, in Dagsboro Hundred, to accommodate most of the members formerly attendants at Zoar. On the church lot is a small burial lot, and the building is yet occasionally used for funerals and other gatherings.

The Unity Church was built on sixty square perches of land deeded Sept. 22, 1810, to Trustees Selick Hazzard, David Hazzard, Perry Pool, James Lingo and Thomas Melvaine, by Arthur Milby. The original house was rebuilt in 1842, and this, in turn, gave place to a new church, in the fall of 1887. It is a frame house, thirty by forty feet, with eighteen feet posts, and was erected by a building committee composed of Daniel C. Townsends, John H. Prettyman, Robert Burton, Joshua Burton and Rev. Robert Row. It was finished plainly and cost one thousand dollars. The church has a central location at the hamlet of Fairmount.

St. John's Church is in the northwestern part of the hundred, at Johnson's Cross-Roads, and has a pleasant site in a well-kept cemetery which is inclosed by a substantial brick wall.

The church is a frame building, which was erected during the ministry of the Rev. John Hough, on the Georgetown Circuit, of which it still forms a part. Prior to its occupancy meetings were held at the houses of James Johnson, John Walls and the schoolhouse. John Walls was still living in this locality in the fall of 1887 at the age of eighty-eight years, and was one of the earliest Methodists in this part of the county.

The church was plain but not unattractive, and had these trustees—Albert J. Johnson, John Walls, Josiah Simpler, Paynter Frame, G. S. Walls, K. D. Wilson, Joseph W. Wimbrown, Peter P. Dodd and Peter W. Rust.

Connelly's Chapel is at the head of Angola Neck, and was built in 1837, largely through the efforts of the Rev. Connelly, who was a carpenter by trade, and who did much of the work himself. In recognition of his services the first chapel was named for him, and when the present house was built, in 1876, the title was retained. It is a plain frame, with pinnings for about one hundred and fifty people, and the surroundings are neatly kept by the community.

In 1887 the trustees were William Hopkins, John A. Marsh, Peter Walls, Joseph Walls, Wm. S. Robinson and Peter R. Burton. The appointment is a part of the Nassau Circuit, while the Unity Church and the Central Church belong to Milleboroe Circuit. The latter was built in the upper part of Long Neck after 1867, several years elapsing before it was completed. In 1887 it was enlarged and repaired, making it an attractive country place of worship.

The colored people of the hundred maintain churches which bear the names of "Friendship," "Harmony" and Johnson's Meeting-House. The latter was built in 1879. The former has been in use more than fifty years. The churches are plain wooden structures, having good seating capacity.
CHAPTER LXXI.

NORTHWEST FORK.

The hundred of Northwest Fork is situat or originally a part of Maryland, and at that cluded all the territory west of the Northwest the Nanticoke River. This fork is now known Marshy Hope Creek, and upon running the division between the States a small portion of the st was thrown into Delaware. From this stream hundred takes the name, by which it has been kno since 1682. It was the largest in the county befo
March 11, 1869, when the Legislature erected Seafort Hundred out of it by the following boundaries:
"Beginning in the middle of the old State Road at Walker's mill-dam, and running thence westwardly by the centre of said road between the old Frank Brown farm and the farm of the late Daniel Cannon, over and by Cannon's Crossing, to its intersection with the road leading from Fredericksburg to Bridgeville, and thence by the center of said Fredericksburg and Bridgeville road past Horsey's Cross-Roads to the eastern boundary of Maryland." This lines makes the bounds of the hundred on the north by Kent County, on the east by Nanticoke Hundred, on the south by Seafort Hundred and on the west by the State of Maryland.
It is about eight miles square and embraces about sixty-five square miles of territory.

The Nanticoke River and Marshy Hope Creek, and the ramifications of their branches, form the chief means of irrigation. They are so shallow, however, that they afford but comparatively little mill facilities.

The soil is a stiff clay and sandy loam, and of a nature entirely different from its near neighbor, Nanticoke, and taken as a whole, is the largest and best body of farming land in the county. Large crops of wheat and corn are grown. Small fruits grow in abundance and large quantities are shipped to Northern markets. In the latter part of the last century large quantities of tobacco were grown and in the northern part sugar-cane was raised and sent North to sugar-mills. For over sixty years the cultivation of both of these products has ceased. Northwest Fork was formerly a large slave-holding hundred, as early as 1796, the assessment roll of that date showing two hundred and ninety-seven slaves, and twenty years later the number had increased to five hundred and ten. At the time of the emancipation amendment to the Constitution, there were very few slaves in the hundred, and they were mostly engaged in domestic occupations.

The Delaware Railroad, which reached Bridgeville in 1858, passes through the eastern end of the hundred.
Its advent was the signal for renewed energy among the people, and the country has developed rapidly since that time. Being without navigable streams, the farmers before that time had no convenient methods of shipping their products.
HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

methods of shipping their products.
Adjoining this, on February 20, 1776, he also took up "Rogers' Puzzle." This tract began at a corner from Curtis Otwell's land, and starting between Adams' fence and the road that leads to Marshy Hope Bridge-Nutter Adams, a son of the elder Roger, took a tract called "Bright's," in 1776. The Adamses also took up two large tracts adjoining these lands, among which was a tract, granted February 18, 1824, called "Calf Pasture," described as being on the east side of a branch of the Northwest Fork of the Nanticoke. On December 10, 1740, Richard Adams received a grant for one hundred acres, called "Adams' Delight," and adjoining this tract Joshua Morgan received a warrant on July 1, 1723, for "Hogs' Quarter," which was re-warranted to William Adams December 12, 1753. The lands are all situated in the northwest corner, and are now owned by J. T. Noble, Roger Adams, M. L. Blanchard, Henry A. Blanchard, Joseph Davis, Marim Davis, Frank Davis, George Spence and Francis Spence, W. Adams and Charles M. Adams.

"Woodgate's Fortune," a tract of land situated on the main road that leads from Bridge Branch to Clear Brook Branch, and adjoining a tract called "Batchelor's Ramble," was granted March 18, 1710, to Francis Woodgate for three hundred and thirty-three acres. This land is located a short distance below Bridgeville, and a part of it is now called "Freeland," and is in the possession of Mrs. M. C. Jacobs. Mrs. M. C. Jacobs, well known in the lower part of the State as a successful woman in agriculture, or more properly horticulture, and also as a frequent contributor to publications devoted to those industries, has exhibited in her career what pluck and industry may accomplish, even when the most unfavorable conditions interpose. What may be difficult for a man to accomplish is simply almost impossible for a woman, and her achievement should therefore be awarded a larger meed of praise. Mrs. Jacobs was the daughter of John Goslin and Hester Cannon, his wife, and was born in 1828 at Cannon's Ferry, amid the sands and pines of Lower Sussex. That is about the time and place of Patty Cannon's remarkable deeds and death, which caused excitement to run high through the whole southern half of the Peninsula. During her early childhood she walked six miles a day for the privilege of attending one of the commonest of common schools, but when twelve years of age her father purchased a large farm four miles west of Bridgeville, where school and church privileges were a little better, though still very far from what they should be. In 1843 she went one term to a good grammar school at Georgetown. She was married at the age of eighteen to Alanson Dickerson, who resided near where is now the village of Ellendale. At twenty-three she was left a widow with two small children, the eldest of whom is now the wife of F. H. Dyer, of Detroit, Mich., and the second, Willard S. Dickerson. Three years after she became a widow our subject married Nathaniel R. Jacobs, who lived near Bridgeville. Two children were the offspring of this union,—Gertrude, now the wife of W. C. Rust, and Miss Lily R. Jacobs. After seventeen years of happy married life Mrs. Jacobs was again a widow. Her husband having been a remarkably kind-hearted man, had indorsed considerable property for friends, and after his death it was discovered that he was almost insolvent, and his property was sold for the benefit of his creditors, with the exception of one-third of the lands reserved for the widow, who also, under the then laws of the State, was allowed provisions to the value of thirty dollars. Mrs. Jacobs went heavily into debt, and at the administrators' sale bought back a fraction of what had formerly been hers, and was then, according to equity, if not to law. She now began to show that ability for which she has since been famous. In ten years, single-handed and working against odds, she not only paid off all indebtedness, but improved fields, fences and outbuildings, made and furnished anew a pretty cottage out of the old farm house, and gave good support to her children, and an education to the younger ones. She became a successful peach grower, was the first shipper of dressed poultry to the city market, and owned the first and finest herd of Alderneys in the neighborhood. She sold more grain to the acre and to the number of hands hired than did her neighbors; grew in her garden thirteen varieties of strawberries, (long before they were considered a marketable crop in this region), and raised ten varieties of grapes, for table use only. Nor was this all, for with an eye to the beautiful, costly roses and rare flowers were made to grace that house of simplicity, which was almost one of hospitality. In 1881, at the age of fifty-three, she married Hon. T. K. Jacobs, of Lima, Ohio, but he died after they had been joined but four years, and she then returned to her old home where she lives now at the age of sixty, still industrious, still extending hospitality, still dispensing charity. Her farm has upon it some of the finest bloomed stock and poultry to be found in this region, and her gardening is unsurpassed. Her only companion is her young daughter. Both contribute to the press, especially upon those topics with which their lives have made them particularly familiar. They are known, not only as industrious practical agriculturalists, but as well read, well informed people, both poets of no mean degree, and generally respected alike for their works and character. What a woman can do in this life of toil, and against many obstacles has certainly few better illustrations, than in the achievements of Mrs. Jacobs.

Doublin was granted to John Rider in 1729, and originally contained five hundred and forty-three acres. The name of Rider was afterwards corrupted to Prider, and in 1776, this land was resurveyed to James Prider.

Daniel Polk, a son of Robert Polk, had resurveyed to him seven hundred and fifty acres of land he had come into possession of from time to time, and eight hundred and ninety-four acres of vacant land. This embraced "Tauney's Wandoke," already mentioned; "Polk's Out-Lot" granted May 10, 1745, to Robert Polk for one hundred and eighteen acres; "Double Purchase" granted October 16, 1750, to Robert Polk for three hundred and thirty-four acres; "Good Will," granted January 11, 1727, to William Smith for one hundred acres; "Polk's Fancy," granted March 24, 1747 to Robert Polk for one hundred and twenty-one acres; "Ross's Hazzard," granted October 21, 1730, to James Ross for fifty acres; "Banchalas Chances," granted to John Higgins, October 28, 1823, for one hundred acres; and "Neglect," granted to Robert Polk, October 10, 1752, for one hundred and sixty-two and three-quarter acres. This entire tract was named "Polk's Regulation" and is described as commencing near the Clear Brook Branch on the path that leads from Daniel to William Polk's house, and extending to a point on the south side of Bridge Branch and to Curtis Brown's tract, "Brown's Regulation," also near Isaac Williams land. Daniel Polk also had surveyed to him, June 17, 1776, a tract called "Daniel's Regulation" near the head of Muddy Branch. John Polk had a tract called "Doublin Advantage" surveyed to him December 20, 1741, and containing one hundred and eighty-four acres. On August 1, 1752, he had warrants granted him for "John's Venture," two hundred acres; "Polk's Chance," fifty acres; "Salem," eight hundred acres; and four hundred acres of vacant land. This land is described as situated on the east side of the Northwest Fork of the Nanticoke, and adjoining Robert Polk's land, and extending across the hundred from the Nanticoke to the Maryland line. Robert and John Polk were brothers. The Polks that settled in this locality and in Maryland are the original ancestors of that family in America. They are now scattered all over the United States; President James K. Polk being a descendant of this family.

Among those who now run portions of the Polk lands are H. P. Cannon, Dr. - Dodd, Benton Jacobs, Benjamin S. Melson, Joshua Brown's heirs, J. F. Campbell's heirs, - Friedel, Phillip Cannon, Layton and Brother, William Gray, W. J. Ridgaway, George V. Massey, John D. Burton, the heirs of Dr. Joseph R. Sudler, O. Hill, J. B. N. Layton and Wm. E. Corbin.

James Ross, who received the warrant for "Ross's Hazzard" of "Polk's Regulation," was the first of that family in this part of Delaware. William Ross, his brother, on March 24, 1750, was granted a warrant for "Ross's Fancy," which was located between Iron Mine and Muddy Branches. James Ross, in 1748, was granted a warrant for two hundred acres called "Ross's Venture," which is described as being at the mouth of the first arm that makes out of Bridge Branch. This James Ross was the ancestor of Governor William Ross, of Delaware. These lands are held in part by Edward Wright, M. A. G. Coates and D. S. Myre. The Layton family came from Virginia about 1730, and settled mainly two miles north from Bridgeville, and about a mile west of the headwaters of Nanticoke port. The original tract is now owned by S. J. Raughley, Robert, Thomas and Lowder Layton who settled in this neighborhood were brothers.

Lowder Layton and Tabitha his wife, lived in the vicinity of Bridgeville where their son Lowder was born August 21, 1770. He married Sarah Sipple, and lived in Northwest Fork Hundred, during early manhood and later at Milford where he died in 1849. He retained part of the homestead which passed to his children. James Layton was granted a warrant of survey in 1776, of a tract of fifty acres called "Young Man's Venture," originally patented by Maryland, November 26, 1751, to his father. When resurveyed it contained forty-eight acres, to which was added two hundred and thirty-six acres of vacant land, and the whole renamed "Layton's Just Division." It was adjoining "Turkey Point," "Merri's Discovery," Rogers Adams' surveys of "Puzzel," and "Triangle," and "Saffords Venture." Robert Layton had a warrant of survey granted on "Layton's Partnership" in 1776, and Thomas Layton, "Neighbors Agreement" in 1777. Robert Layton also purchased of David Williams, February 24, 1776, a tract called "Young's Addition," originally granted to Nathan Young, September 29, 1756, for seventy-five acres. It is located on Bridge Branch, about one-half mile above the Bridge. Among those who now own parts of the Layton lands are W. J. Coates, M. A. G. Coates, G. Bissell and G. Trout.

The Richards family took up a number of early grants, the most important of which is that of "Poplar Levil" surveyed to John Richards on the 15th of April 1760, for nine hundred and sixty acres of land. The patent recites that it began "near an old school-house on the road from John to James Richards." James Richards had resurveyed to him in the western part of the hundred, one hundred and ten acres called "First Purchase." It was adjoining lands granted to Isaac Brown and Clement Polk, situated on the east side of land that had been previously granted him. This was also adjoining "John's Venture." The land is now (1888) owned by J. T. Noble. Henry Richards had resurveyed "Bachelor's Ramble" containing one hundred and sixty-five acres, February 20, 1776, adjoining lands granted to John Richards and Nutter Adams. This is the same land that is now owned by William A. Corbin, Amos K. Corbin and J. T. Noble. Other owners of the Richards' tracts are J. K. Wright, ex-speaker of the State Senate C. F. Rust and Dr. Hugh Martin. In the extreme northwest of the hundred a tract was surveyed to Henry Fisher, March 8, 1776, called "Timothy's Venture." It had been originally surveyed to James Johnson in 1757, who died intestate. It is now located on the road.
from Marshy Hope Bridge to Hunting Creek, Md., and part of it is now owned by J. R. Whaley.

Peter Rust, the pioneer of the Rust family in this section, was granted on the 18th of March, 1776, a resurvey, for a tract called "Hard Fortune," containing one hundred and forty-eight acres. It was originally called "Luck by Chance" and was warranted April 1, 1757, to George Smith. It is located on the road from Northwest Fork Bridge to the Chapel in Md. James Fassett on a warrant of re-survey dated March 12, 1776, took up two hundred and fifty acres of land on the Marshy Hope Creek adjoining "Hog Quarter."

Bridges.—The bridge crossing the stream in Bridgeville, from which the town and branch takes its name, is one of the oldest in the county. The earliest mention of the bridge is found in an old record of 1730, but there is reason to believe that it was there as early as 1700, for in 1730 it was referred to as "ye old bridge over the branch and near John Nutter's place." The stream at that time was probably much wider than at present. The first bridge remained until 1802, when, on account of its unsafe condition, the Legislature passed an act authorizing a new bridge to be built. A few years ago the present structure was erected. The Marshy Hope Bridge is also one of the original bridges in the hundred. It was built at an early period by the authorities of Maryland. On June 14, 1793, the General Assembly of Delaware passed an act "for supporting in good repair the bridge over the northwest fork of the Nanticoke River, commonly called the Marshy Hope Bridge." Under this act the old bridge was torn down and a new one erected. In 1887 the Levy Court of Sussex County ordered this bridge to be repaired. From this bridge Marshy Hope village, now Adavalia, took its name.

Trinity M. E. Church.—Unlike its northern neighbor, Mispillion, Northwest Fork had no churches outside of Bridgeville, before 1843, the pious-inclined portion of the community being compelled to drive either to Bridgeville, St. Johnston, or to the eastern shore Maryland churches. In 1848 Trinity Church was erected on a lot located on the road running from Horsey's Cross Roads to Marshy Hope Bridge, at the point where the road from Bridgeville intersects. The first structure was twenty-five by forty feet and built of frame. In 1885 it was destroyed by fire, and the present neat and attractive building on the same site was erected. It is thirty by forty-five feet, one story high and faces the road. The church has been supplied with ministers mainly from the Bridgeville circuit down to 1883, when it was placed on the Greenwood circuit. The board of trustees are: I. K. Wright, Samuel H. Melson, Samuel W. Kinder, Lewis Kinder, C. P. Swain, Benjamin S. Melson and J. T. Noble.

Schools.—Before the passage of the public free school law of the State, there were two schools maintained by subscription in this hundred. One of these, located one-half mile north of Bridge Branch, was the first in Western Sussex, having been in operation as early as 1765. In a deed of that date it is mentioned as one of the outbounds of a tract of land. This building was of stone, and stood as late as 1890. The oldest inhabitants say that it stood on the same site where District No. 72 School-house now stands. The other school was located in what is District 73.
In both of the old schools the education was limited, and when the "simple rule of three" was reached, the scholar generally knew as much as the master. The schools were open three months in the year.

School-House.—In 1867 the school-house of district ninety-one was erected in the town at a cost of one thousand dollars. This continued in use until 1887, when the present building was erected. It is a graded school with two teachers.

The commissioners in 1829 divided the hundred into four districts, numbering 72, 73, 74 and 75, and in 1830 and 1831, school buildings were erected in Districts 74 and 75, respectively. Since that time school Districts 73, 97, 90, 139 and 143 have been erected out of the four original districts. All these schools are open ten months in the year.

BRIDGEVILLE.—Bridgeville is the oldest town in Western Sussex, it being the first town in what was formerly known as "New Su-sex." On October 23, 1747, James Haile obtained a warrant for ninety-three acres of land, called "Haile's Chance." West of this tract and adjacent, was one granted to Charles Nutter, November 3, 1729.

The present town is located upon these two tracts. The history of the town dates back to the erection of the bridge over the branch, in 1730. The name of Bridgebranch was given to a few hamlets scattered along the State-road, on what is now Main Street. This name was retained until January 30, 1810, when the General Assembly passed "an act to establish the name of a village in Northwesxfork Hundred, heretofore called Bridgebranch, as Bridgeville." In 1812 the tavern of John Wilson, now the Parvis House, was selected as a voting place for the citizens of the hundred. The old tavern was built by Thomas Wilson, the father of John Wilson, mentioned above, and has been owned by John Wilson, Jr., William Morris, John Cannon, Daniel Wilson, Manlove Adams, Thomas White, George Willin, Furnell Short, James Prettyman, Samuel Laws, William Cannon and James Parvis.

Across the bridge, Charles Polk, in 1812, kept the "Knife and Fork" tavern for several years. The building was located at the intersection of the road to St. Johnstown and the first as the bridge is crossed.

From 1812 to 1816 the growth of the town was rapid, being far in advance of either Seaford or Laurel, and was the business place for all of western Sus-sex. Three stores were in operation, the principal being kept by Josiah Cannon. This was probably the first store opened in the village, and is still standing opposite the store now occupied by Mitchell Layton. Josiah Cannon kept this store until 1830, when he was succeeded by Henry and William Cannon (afterwards Governor). In 1857 a new store was built opposite, which, after Governor Cannon's death, was conducted by his sons, H. P. & P. L. Cannon. The old building is still used as a warehouse.

Huett Ross had a store where Governor Cannon's flower-garden is now situated, and Ross & Smith conducted business on Market Street, opposite R. W. Cannon's present store.

Adjoining the bridge, William Hudson had an extensive tan yard, formerly owned by Daniel Laws. It was afterwards run by George Grier, Isaac Lockwood and Robert A. Houston, who closed it in 1849.

In addition to the stores and tan-yard in the town in 1816, Robert Ross lived on the property now owned by E. M. Layton. Rev. Jeremiah Jeffers resided where Mrs. Elizabeth A. Cahall now owns, which is said to be the oldest house in town. Joshua Bradley, who married Dr. John Carey's widow, lived where Robert Hughes owned; and Dr. John Carey where William Layton owns. John H. Van Berg owns the house where Zacariah Hatfield lived. John Sorden's heirs owned a house and lot. Stephen Redden was a tailor and owned a house and lot. John Wilson was the early town carpenter; William Smith, Elijah Victor and John Wilson were also residents.

The town during the period from 1816 until about 1865 remained in a comatose condition. The railroad which was constructed through the town in 1856 gave the place a little boom, which has continued to the present time. On March 29, 1871, the town was incorporated. Its limits were defined and a large number of houses were built in the next few years. At present there are six general stores, one hardware store, two drug stores and two confectionery stores, and about six hundred inhabitants.

The town records are incomplete or lost. The following persons have filled the offices named since the incorporation:

BRIDGEVILLE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—This church is the third in age in Sussex County, and was built in 1805. March 11th of that year Thomas Sorden sold three-quarters of an acre of land for ten dollars to Thomas Laws, William Mason, John Carey, Charles Brown, Elijah Adams, Stephen Reddin and William Allen, the first trustees. The old building was of frame twenty by thirty-one feet, and the church membership was twenty-two.

This building remained until December 10, 1871, when the present fine structure was dedicated by Rev. Enoch Stubbs. It is thirty by fifty feet, and is surmounted by a cupola. The membership is rapidly increasing, and at present amounts to over one hundred.

In 1883 Bridgeville was made a station, and the church has been supplied by L. J. Mutchmore, I. D. Johnson and J. H. Howard. The present trustees are P. W. Short, Mitchell Layton, Thomas Layton, Gilly Moore, H. P. Cannon and Thomas Willey.

First Presbyterian Church of Bridgeville.—
This church is prettily located on Market Street in a grove of trees, and is forty by sixty feet. It was organized December 20, 1865, and dedicated March, 1866, by Rev. Alexander Gulic, of Ohio. The building cost one thousand dollars. The ground embraces a half acre, and was donated by A. G. R. Hale, one of the descendants of the original patentees.

Previous to the erection of the church, services were held in the store-house near the bridge. The trustees are Simeon Pennewill, John Dale, James Hessey and D. S. Meyer. Among those who have ministers are Alexander Gulic, Messers. White, Todd, E. P. Elcock, Schoefield, Edwards, William Barnes, J. H. Rizor, B. D. Sinclair and Charles Bailey. There is no minister at present.

The African U. M. P. Church was erected in 1877, and is located north of the Branch. It is a neat, substantial structure, costing $800. Rev. George Townsend and Elijah Green have been among the ministers that have supplied the church.

Schools.— The school north of the town, in District 72, furnished primary education for the children of the vicinity up to 1861, when District No. 90 was erected by the Legislature out of Districts 143 and 72. April 5, 1883, the Legislature passed an act incorporating the public schools of Bridgeville, and naming R. W. Cannon, W. C. Rust, P. L. Cannon, S. B. Hazard and Dr. D. D. Palmer, as a board of education to serve until April, 1884. Alexander Ball became subsequently a member in place of Dr. Palmer. The board was authorized to borrow $2000 to erect a schoolhouse. R. W. Cannon, A. Ball and Mitchell Layton were selected as a building committee. The edifice was completed and opened in December, 1883. It is two stories high, and cost $2500. April, 1884, R. W. Cannon and P. L. Cannon were elected to serve one year as members of the board; M. Layton and S. B. Hazard, two years; and W. C. Rust and William Gray, three years. The following members have been elected since that time: 1885—T. W. Willin and H. P. Cannon; 1886—John T. Jacobs and Mitchell Layton; 1887—R. W. Cannon and B. G. Moore.

INDUSTRIES.— Wellington Pattin, merchant and manufacturer of Bridgeville, is of that class of men who came from the North to Delaware after the war, and by their enterprise and thrift have done so much to develop the country. He is also of that type of men which our free institutions make possible,—an essentially self-made man. Born near Fort Plain, Montgomery County, N. Y., April 14, 1843, he was the youngest child of Erastus and Nancy (Philips) Pattin. At the early age of ten he started out upon the sea of life to earn his own living, working upon a farm until his nineteenth year, during which time he had not been able to secure over three months' schooling. The first two years he worked for no pay whatever; but after that time by industry and thrift he managed to accumulate over three hundred dollars, and with this he decided to secure an education. He entered school; but after nine months, the Civil War having opened, his patriotic impulses would not allow him to remain, and he enlisted in the service of his country in Company F, Second New York Heavy Artillery, being at the time of his enlistment but twenty years of age. He served until after the end of the war, returning in October, 1865, after participating in fifteen engagements. The company went out with one hundred and fifty men on the 15th of May, and after the battle of Ream's Station, Va., Aug. 25th, all the company could stack was fifteen arms. Mr. Pattin was wounded at Tolotapomy Creek May 31, 1864. The war being over, Mr. Pattin returned home October, 1865, and having by strict economy succeeded in accumulating one thousand dollars, he decided to engage in business for himself. He came to Delaware at the age of twenty-three, and purchased a farm five miles from Bridgeville, which he still owns. Having a natural taste for a business life, shortly after 1868 he engaged in the manufacture of square berry baskets, being the first to take up that industry upon the peninsula. This business he conducted for two years. In 1873 he purchased a portable saw-mill, and established it upon his farm, and still operates it. This mill has been conducted with profit to Mr. Pattin, notwithstanding the fact that it was blown up in 1879 and destroyed by fire in 1878. and 1880. It has a capacity of sawing five thousand feet of oak timber per day, and gives employment to fifteen hands. In 1881 Mr. Pattin opened his present large general merchandising warehouse in Bridgeville, associating with him in 1886 Burton G. Moore. Determining to enlarge his business, he in 1884 purchased the grist and saw-mills of Alexander Ball, and removed to his present beautiful mansion, located to the east of the railroad, the grounds embracing seventeen acres tastefully laid out.

Mr. Pattin immediately took an interest in the improvement of the town, and his removal there was the commencement of an era of prosperity. His enterprise and energy made itself felt, and being at the head of the progressive element, he was elected president of the Board of Town Commissioners in 1885, serving two years. During his term of office the town underwent a great many improvements, and to his efforts in the main are these due. His business continued to extend, and in 1885 he started a basket factory, which gives employment during the season to fifty hands, and has a capacity of four thousand baskets. The grist-mill has a capacity of grinding fifty bushels of wheat and fifty of corn per day. In addition, he is in the charcoal business, and has a large coal-yard.

In all Mr. Pattin's branches of industry he employs in busy season about ninety men, and has a capital stock invested of forty thousand dollars. In accumulating this he has been beset by what would have seemed to most men insurmountable difficulties. Coming to a strange country at the end of the war, he was met on all sides by difficulties and prejudices, and these he has succeeded in surmounting until he has now the largest business in his section of the country, and which is secured upon a firm foundation.

February 7, 1867, he was married to Ellen Frances Hancock, the daughter of Timothy Edwin Hancock and Harriet P. (Gilmore) Hancock of North Attleborough, Massachusetts. The Hancock family descended from one Anthony Hancock, one of the founders of the town of Wrentham, Mass., the adjoining town to North Attleborough. Mrs. Pattin was one of those patriotic and noble women, who went South at the conclusion of the war, to educate the freedmen, remaining but a short time. On her way home, stopping near Bridgeville, she was married to Mr. Pattin. As a result of this union there have been eight children: Edwin Erastus, Henry M., Horace Greeley, Wellington F., Florence E., Charles Hancock, Walter and Nancy.

D. S. Myer and Son have a large nursery on the North of the Branch. The firm give employment to ten hands and ship as high as one hundred thousand trees, principally peach and apple, a year to all parts of the United States. The business was first started twenty-three years ago by D. S. Myer and Lukens Pierce. Mr. Pierce retired in 1867, and Mr. Myer continued the business until 1887, when his son was admitted, and the present firm formed.

H. P. and P. L. Cannon conduct a canning factory employing fifty hands in the busy season and putting up six thousand cans of tomatoes a day.

John W. Keller's evaporator was built in 1882. During the season employment is given to sixty hands a day.

Bridgeville Cemetery.—This embraces a neatly laid out plot of five acres on the north of the town. The Company was incorporated February 16, 1875.

The corporators were Daniel F. Ball, David S. Myer, Simeon Pennewill, John Ray, Isaac B. Cotterell, Mark A. G. Coates, Dr. William T. Sudler, R. W. Cannon and H. P. Cannon. A board of managers and officers were elected with President, Daniel F. Ball; Secretary, H. P. Cannon; Treasurer, R. W. Cannon; Managers, J. B. Cotterell, P. L. Cannon, R. W. Cannon, I. K. Wright, J. Ray, D. S. Myer and Jacob Kinder. Mr. Ball has been succeeded by Isaac B. Cotterell as president.

Bridgeville Agricultural and Mechanical Society.—This organization is a thing of the past. It was incorporated March 9, 1876, with John L. Richards, M. L. Blanchard, Henry Q. Nicholson, Henry F. Cannon, W. J. Coates, S. P. Raughley, David Lord, H. Clarkson and Dr. William T. Sudler as corporators. Albert Curry was elected president; H. Q. Nicholson, secretary; and W. J. Coates, treasurer. Three fairs were held on grounds north of the branch in the town. The venture proved unprofitable and was abandoned in 1877.

Societies.—The Bridgeville Conclave, I. O. H., was incorporated April 1, 1886. The first officers were P. A., W. C. Rust; Archon, R. C. Jones; Provost, W. B. Hallowell; Secretary, S. P. Short; Financier, C. H. Rawlin; Treasurer, Dr. D. D. Palmer; Prelate, A. P. Prettyman; Inspector, J. W. Hessey. The present officers are: P. A., J. A. Carn; Archon, J. A. House; Provost, G. B. Graef; Prelate, Rev. J. H. Howard; Secretary, Wilbert Layton; Financier, J. B. Carn; Treasurer, R. W. Cannon; Inspector, J. E. Harris; Warden, Jacob Pattin; Sentinel, R. P. Swain. There is a membership of fifty-four.

A branch of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized December 4, 1884. The officers are: President, Mrs. W. T. Sudler; Treasurer, Mrs. R. W. Cannon; Recording Secretary, Mrs. James Raughley; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Wellington Pattin. There is a membership of eighteen.

The Grange, at Bridgeville, was organized April 1874.

Greenwood.—The town of Greenwood is an outgrowth of St. Johnstown, as the Delaware Railroad Company named the station which it established at this point in 1858. Simeon Pennewill, who owned all the land upon which Greenwood is situated, engaged William Atkinson to lay out a town plot. The main street, running east and west, was called Market Street; the one north of it, Minor Street, and three cross streets, Beaver, Church and Maple. Mr. Pennewill named the new town Greenwood, because of the great number of holly trees and other evergreens in the neighborhood. He also built the first store, in 1859, on the corner, where J. R. Ricards & Sons now are—and it was opened by Thomas Coates. C. W. Jones opened another store the same year, on the west side of the street, opposite Mr. Pennenwill, building on the same ground where Owens & Radcliff now are. The hotel building was erected in 1865 by Ezekiel Jones, and is now kept by J. H. Gorby. Within the past few years the town has grown very rapidly and has become one of the leading business places in upper Sussex. At present there are four general stores, a drug store, confectionery store, harness shop, two millinery stores and two blacksmith and wheelwright shops. The population, according to a census taken in 1887, was two hundred and fifty persons.

Greenwood M. P. Church was erected in 1880, upon ground donated by Simeon Pennenwill. The dedication took place August 5th of that year, and Revs. J. M. McFadden, J. E. Nicholson and Thomas Moore participated in the exercises. The society was organized in 1878 and held meetings until the erection of the church building in the old school-house. The building is thirty by forty feet, and was erected at a cost of twelve hundred dollars. At present there is a membership of thirty-five, and a Sunday-school attached, with W. J. Andrew superintendent. The first trustees were N. J. Barwick, Robert H. Willey and W. J. Andrew. The present trustees are N. J. Barwick, W. J. Andrew, J. C. Barwick, E. P. Willey, John W. Morris, Joel Larmor and William H. Richardson. Rev. J. E. Nicholson was the first minister, serving until 1882. Rev. C. S. Arnett followed until 1884; Rev. G. L. Backus until 1886, and then the present pastor. Rev. C. M. Thomson.

Greenwood M. E. Church is an offshoot of the St. Johnstown Church, and was dedicated June 28, 1880, when the sermon was preached by Rev. R. W. Todd, presiding elder of the district. The building is thirty-six by twenty-four feet, and was erected at a cost of one thousand dollars. The trustees at that time were James H. Willey, S. P. Raughley, Abel Spence, N. M. Stayton and J. M. Hollis. The membership at present has reached forty-five, with a Sunday-school of thirty scholars, with J. M. Hollis as superintendent. The trustees are N. M. Stayton, Abel Spence, S. P. Raughley, J. M. Hollis, Samuel Kinnaman, Charles W. Ammerman and Charles C. Ricards. Up to the year 1886 the Bridgeville Circuit supplied the church with ministers, but in that year Greenwood Circuit was formed, with Rev. J. E. Carroll as pastor, and Chaplain's, Trinity, St. Johnstown and Greenwood as the charges.

Industries—Two large tracts of land were surveyed for Joseph Shankland, Sept. 17, 1764, upon which he soon after erected a forge. On May 7, 1771, he sold the property to Joseph Earle, attorney of Kent County, Maryland, and Dr. John Boyd and William Buchanan, merchants, both of Baltimore. In the war rants for this property, it is described as being in the forests of Cedar Creek Hundred, in the great neck twenty miles distant from Lewistown, and on waters that flow into the Nanticoke. The deed alludes to one tract of eight hundred and eleven acres called "Shankland's Discovery," on which "is lately erected a double forge and other improvements." The other tract was called "Iron Valley" of two hundred acres, it "being that part of whole survey which is intended to be kept for ye use of the forge aforesaid to supply ye same with iron ore." The property evidently did not remain in possession of this firm long, as in November 1774 suit was brought against Samuel Shankland, as owner of five-sixths of the Unity Forge lands by Daniel Kelley, who owned the lands adjoining. The property remained idle for several years, and for some reason a part at least reverted to the Penns, and after an intermediate tenancy escheated to the State. On October 25, 1798, a part of it, twenty-six acres called "Company's Privilege" was warranteed to Charles Polk and Rhodes Shankland, the warrant recited "wherein is erected a forge called Unity Forge." On April 1, 1794, Rhodes Shankland assigned his right to William Shankland, who was operating the forge in 1796, and soon after assigned to John Elliott. Polk and Elliott on the 16th of July, 1811, assigned the forge and property to John Bradley, who ran it for several years. It does not appear on the assessment rolls after 1816.

The tract "Shankland's Discovery" lay on the west side of the branch, and passed with other lands to John Elliott, who died in 1807, and left this property to his four sons, Shadrack, Meshack, Abednego and John. Shadrack, March 19, 1814, sold a part of the tract below Bradley's Forge to Jonas Walker, who January 2, 1815, bought of William Maloney, other lands adjoining his own, formerly owned by Walter Douglas, and which were once the property of the Deep Creek Furnace Company.

Iron Valley, the other tract of the Unity Forge lands, and from which most of the ore was obtained, laid along Gum Branch in Nanticoke Hundred. A portion, amounting to three hundred and fifty-six acres, passed November 18, 1823, to Samuel Richards and Edward Smith. Large quantities of ore were taken from these lands in later years and shipped to New Jersey. Thomas S. Judge also became a purchaser of ore lands in the vicinity, and shipped direct from here. There is no sign of the old forge property now.

Priscilla Ange, November 4, 1761, bought a tract of land on the south side of what was known as Sow Bridge Branch, being a part of a larger tract granted to Jacob Stafford adjoining Griffith Jones. John Ange lived near there and had a mill. October 6, 1775, Richard Tull, John Ange, Jr., and Thomas Ange entered into partnership to build a saw, grist mill and dam where John Ange, Sr., lived. Tull was to build the mills and Ange the dam, which was to have a cartway on top of it. Thomas sold his share to John March 11, 1780. John sold his interest to John Lasley March 18, 1794, and on July 20, 1821, the land was sold by Elizabeth Inslay, executrix of John Inslay, to James L. Wallace. The deed recited that it was of the tract "Courtesy," the site of the old mill which went down while owned by John Inslay, Esq.

Eliott's mill is situated one mile from Bridgeville, and was built by Abednego Eliott. The grist mill was built in 1800 and the saw mill in 1818. The latter was rebuilt in 1839, when it came into the possession of John Hendrick, by whose heirs it was sold to E. H. Orton. The mill was afterwards in the possession of Governor William Cannon. The saw mill was abandoned twelve years ago. The grist mill is still running with a capacity of sixty bushels a day.

J. E. Short & Co., (G. Short), conduct a canning factory with a capacity of three hundred thousand cans a year, giving employment to fifty hands. J. C. Barwick and Frank Cole conduct a saw mill which cuts five thousand feet of lumber a day.

CHAPTER LXXII.

BROAD CREEK HUNDRED.

The Hundred of Broad Creek is located in the southern-central part of Sussex County, and takes its name from a branch of the Nanticoke, Broad Creek, that divides it from Little Creek Hundred. It originally extended to the southern dividing line from Maryland. The legislature by an act passed April 4, 1873, erected Gumboro Hundred out of it, and a small part of Dagsboro Hundred. The boundaries as at present constituted, are on the north by Nanticoke Hundred, on the west by Dagsboro and Gumboro Hundred, on the south by Little Creek Hundred and on the west by the Northwest Fork of the Nanticoke River, which divides it from Seaford Hundred, embracing within these bounds about fifty square miles of territory, the greater portion of which is good farming land, the best land being in the central and eastern sections, the western portion being very sandy. The land is particularly adapted to the cultivation of corn, and large crops of this staple are grown yearly. The cultivation of strawberies and blackberries is more extensively engaged in here than in any other section of the state, some of the strawberry patches covering a large number of acres. Early in the eighteenth century large quantities of tobacco were grown in the southeastern section, on the banks of the Nanticoke and Broad Creeks. After the year 1780, no mention of its cultivation can be found. Sorghum was also formerly grown; peaches were early cultivated here but mostly for home consumption and the manufacture of peach brandy. It has only been of late years that this fruit has been cultivated to any extent for shipment. The farmers of the hundred are of a thrifty, intelligent class, and have brought the land to a high state of cultivation and accumulated considerable wealth.

The Nanticoke and Broad Creeks, and their numerous branches, form the chief means of irrigation, in addition to furnishing most excellent mill power. The branches extend into every section of the hundred. The Nanticoke is navigable its entire length along the west side, there being a varying depth from eleven to thirty feet. Broad Creek is navigable for small vessels to Laurel, and those of larger draught to Bethel. The creeks furnish excellent means for the shipment of farm products and manufactured articles to Baltimore and the south. Numerous vessels sail from Laurel and Seaford to Baltimore. The Delaware railroad which reached here in 1859, and runs down the western side, brings northern points within a few hours distance.

Early Settlements.—The Penns never exercised their authority in this hundred prior to the settlement of the division line, and there does not appear of record any mention of any land granted by them prior to 1776. There were very few settlements made in the hundred prior to 1730, and those mainly on the streams in the southwestern section. Large portions of the land remained vacant for years, and it was not until the year 1838 that the last piece of vacant land in the hundred was granted. The early settlers came from Maryland and Virginia, and in the year 1776 large numbers emigrated from the upper part of the State and from Pennsylvania. The first tract of which there is record is one to William Green for two thousand five hundred acres, granted in the year 1680, and located west of the road from Laurel to Seaford and running to within a few hundred yards of Bethel.

The Nanticoke Indians were numerous in this vicinity, and in order to aid immigration and furnish the Indians a permanent home, the General Assembly of Maryland, in the year 1717, passed an act directing George Gale, Samuel Worthington and Charles Ballard to lay out tracts for a reservation for the Nanticoke. The commissioners selected as a site this tract and one of five hundred acres on the south side, upon which the town of Laurel now stands. The land passed on the 4th day of December, 1717, the consideration paid Green being fifty thousand pounds of tobacco. The Indians occupied the land for many years and built a harbor on the farm now owned by Levin Hitch. They cultivated the land to some extent. The Indians were moved further west, and by act of May 24, 1768, William Allen, Levin Gale and Henry Steele were authorized by the State of Maryland to sell the land. John Mitchell purchased two thousand two hundred and thirty-six acres, and Joseph Foreman the remainder, said to contain five hundred and eighteen acres. A portion of the land came into the possession of Dr. James Derrickson, and among the owners of the original tract are Eggleston Moore's heirs, S. J. Wheatley, Levin Hitch, Mrs. David Moore, W. S. Hitch, Mrs. M. A. Collins, William S. Moore, John T. Moore and Henry Clay Lewis. On the farm occupied by Henry Clay Lewis is the house built by Caleb Ross, Esq., the father of Governor William Ross.

"Snow Hill," a tract of one hundred acres, was granted, November 6, 1728, to John O'Neal, and is described as being on the east side of the Nanticoke River, and about two miles from Broad Creek. This land is located near the Conoway farm. John Caldwell was one of the earliest settlers in this hundred, and took up two large tracts of land—one of one thousand acres, April 1, 1739, and another of four hundred acres, called "Puzzle," August 8, 1732. These tracts are situated on the south side of the easternmost branch of Broad Creek, in what was then called Wimblescom Neck, which is the neck which the Bull and Melson mill-ponds nearly surround. A portion of the one thousand acre tract passed to John Cannon, June 10, 1734, and on the same day Philip King came into the possession of the tract "Puzzle." This John Cannon was the first of the large family of that name that came to the hundred, if not the first that came into the State. The owners of parts of these old tracts are R. M. Rodney, J. Gibson Cannon, T. L. Cannon.

In the same neighborhood John Walters received a grant, December 15, 1738, for one hundred acres, and November 4, 1738, Joseph Paiximore received a grant of the tract "Venture." William L. Burton owns portions of these tracts.

William Philips, July 3, 1741, was granted one hundred and fifty acres, at the head of Wimblescom Branch, called "Third Choice." This land was re-warranted to John Philips, April 8, 1752, and the greater portion of it is owned at present by Nancy Philips. On the east of the above-mentioned tract of "Puzzle," Thomas Sherman was granted "Collins' Good Will," on December 20, 1741, and containing one hundred acres. This is the same land that is now owned by Jacob W. Cannon and George W. McGee. The Wingates were among the early settlers near here, and at different times took up large tracts, but they have long since disappeared from among the land-owners. The tract granted to Robert King, May 14, 1749, containing two hundred and four acres, was re-warranted to Philip Wingate, October 19th, of the same year, and is situated at the head of what was known as the Windsor Branch, near an old county road, and is the same land that is owned now by the Hopkins Brothers and Edmund Hitchens.

The Matthews were early here. The tract "Teague's Promise," containing seven hundred and eighty-five acres, originally granted to Jacob Downs, December 15, 1760, and then known as "Jacob's Inheritance," was adjoining lands of Timmons, Stockley and others. A prior tract had been granted to Matthews, March 10, 1748, and was "standing in a neck called Wimblescom Neck, in a lot, plat, piece of land about one-quarter of a mile from where John Wingate then lived." Teague Matthews also received a Maryland patent four hundred and sixty-five acres, which were resurveyed to Philip Matthews April 10, 1785, and the greater portion of this Matthews land is owned by Stanbury J. Matthews, George Callin, George W. McGee and Henry Clay Matthews; the latter also owns a part of the land granted to the Bettues, who were early settlers in this locality.

George Gwars took up, on the 18th of March, 1746, three hundred and eighty-four acres of land on the Gray's Branch, the same land that is now owned by Jacob Whaley, George Messick and George Matthews.

Northwest of these grants and on the Assacatom Branch and on the Georgetown Road, Samuel Hopkins, one of the progenitors of that numerous family, took up a tract of seven hundred acres on February 25, 1747. This is the same land that is now owned by J. H. Messick, Mrs. Robert Lunden, William Spicer, Nelly Spicer, Burton West and George Cannon. The Messicks, from whom J. H. Messick, of this hundred, and Miles Messick, of Nanticoke Hundred, are descended, were early settlers. The first of the family to settle here was Isaac Messick, who took up six hundred acres of land December 17, 1723. He had two sons, John and Covington Messick. This Messick land is now owned by G. Philip Hitch, Washington Ricketts, Dr. Robert Ellegood and others in that vicinity.

"Wolf Pitt Ridge" was surveyed to Peter Gaudy March 21st, 1758, and was adjoining "Peter's Choice."

Collins' Industry, including what was styled the mill property, was warranted to Joseph Collins August 20, 1760. It is described as being on the north-west side of a branch issuing out of Broad Creek, called the Great Branch, and about twenty perches from the mill-dam and containing twelve hundred and sixteen acres. It was adjoining another tract, granted prior to Jacob Addition and called "Branch Side." Of this land, in the year of 1783, Mansen Bull purchased four hundred and eighty-five acres, Josiah Truitt, two hundred acres; and Joseph John-son one hundred acres. This is a portion of the same land where J. H. Boyce and W. Whaley located, on the north side of the road leading from Laurel to Lowe's Cross-Roads.

The Ellegoods, from which Dr. R. G. Ellegood, of Concord, is descended, were also among the early settlers, and were prominent personages. William Ellegood obtained a patent for 1104 acres March 3, 1762. The land was named "Isabella's Choice," and is described as being on the east side of the Nanticoke River, and above a creek. Of this land William sold to his son, Robert, two hundred acres March 30, 1776, and two hundred acres March 30, 1776, to his son John. Dr. R. G. Ellegood, of Concord, holds a portion of this land, as also does Tilghman Spicer, S. J. Wheatley, Wm O'Neil, Elijah Hitch and Mrs. J. T. Wright. Among those who came in 1776 were Peter Dolbee, who, May 20, 1776, took out a warrant for a tract called "Addition to Right's Choice," and is described as being on the north side of the third branch of Broad Creek, and extending from Matthews...
Hayes' to the run of said branch, and adjoining his home place.

Henry Clay Lewis and William H. Moore own a large part of this tract. Jonathan Dalbee took up several tracts on the 8th of March, among which were "Second Thought," "Rathbone" and "Fortune." This was adjoining lands formerly taken up by Chas. Minas.

Joseph Melson came in 1776 and took up the tract "Melson's Safety," "Conclusion, the same date, and "Gibraltar." He also acquired large quantities of land both by purchase and warrant, estimated at five thousand acres. Among those who now own the Melson lands are Elias Carmean, Burton West, J. C. Rodary, John Rodery of "D," J. Gibson Cannon, John Hudson, William H. Rodeny, George W. Magee, Thomas Scott, Joshua Phillips, Elisa Cannon, George Cannon, William Carey, Hamilton Philips and Henry C. Matthews.

Levin Bacon patented in 1797 a tract of four hundred and fifty-four acres, and in 1801 sold it to Levin Hitch, from whom two hundred and sixty-one acres has descended to the present owner, Levin S. Hitch. The other owners are W. W. Daishie, James H. Wright and Thomas S. Ladden.

CHURCHES.—Broad Creek Baptist Church—This church was organized May 31, 1781, by the Rev. Philip Hughes and Elijah Baker and was the third of the denomination in the State. At the start there were forty seven members, who were Edward Blades, Mary Blades, Joshua Gibbins, Anna Gibbins, John...
Gibbins, Sarah Gibbins, Samuel Gibbins, Joshua Gibbins, Jr., William Duck, Leah Duckey, Edmund Hitchen, Tabitha Hitchen, John Benson, Loven Buçon, Adare Bacon, William Mattocks, Alexander Mattocks, Sarah Mattocks, William Loyd, Sarah Loyd, Edward Nole, Thomas Nole, Emanuel Walker, Philip Walker, Thomas Grace, Sarah Grace, Thomas Oglesby, Sarah Oglesby, Rachel Callaway, Jane Smith, Elizabeth Baker, Moses Gory, Eunice Gory, Rebecca Corwin, Sophia Shahevan, Comfort Boyce, Sarah Philips, James Perdue, Ann Perdue, William Oliffin, Elizabeth Oliphant, Rhoda Pointer, Delilah Perdue, George Davis, Mary Davis and two negroes Neal and Rachael. In ten years the church decreased from forty-seven to twenty-three by reason of the removal of several families to Georgia and North Carolina, and the detachment of a large number to form Gravelly Branch in 1785. Rev. John Gibbins succeeded Messrs. Hughes and Baker, taking charge of the church in 1784. He was born in the neighborhood in 1739, and died November 6, 1786. He was succeeded by Rev. John Benson, who previous to his ordination and during a vacancy in the pulpit had read sermons to the people. He was born in Sussex County, July 22, 1758, and was ordained a minister June 14, 1790, and took charge of this church and the one at Gravelly Branch. Rev. Joseph Flood filled the pulpit from August 11, 1792. Flood was a native of the Welsh Tract. No church building was erected until about 1800, the meetings prior to that time having been held in private houses. The lot for the church was purchased of John Benston. In 1856 the building was remodeled and completed. It never had been plastered up to that time. The church is connected with the Old School Baptist Church. Among the ministers who have officiated there are Rev. Warren Slayton, Rev. George Slayton, Rev. Thomas Waters, Rev. John A. Rodgers, Rev. Jesse Green, Rev. Ephraim Rittenhouse, — Timons, Thomas Waters and Hosea Boyce.

Mt. Zion M. E. Church is a continuation of what was first known as Elzy Moore's meeting-house, and afterwards, in 1825, Wesley, and the present name in 1852, when the present church was formed. The old church stood on the road towards Bethel, and near S. J. Wheatley's present house. The original church was organized in 1809. May 19th of that year Matthias Moore and Charles Moore conveyed eighty-one square perches of land, part of a tract called "Manlove's Grove," to Elzy Moore, Henry Smith, Charles Beaupum, Gilly Moore, Rubin Martino, Charles Moore and Cornelius Morris. About 1852 the old building was torn down, a part of the congregation going to form Bethel, at town of Bethel, and the greater number to form Mt. Zion. The old building was of frame and twenty-five by thirty-five feet. The meetings were held for a short time in the Washington School-house, and in 1858 the present building was erected on the road from Seaford to Laurel, at a cost of eight hundred dollars. In 1872 the church was repaired at a cost of one thousand dollars. The trustees of the church at present are T. L. Spicer, John H. Spicer, J. A. Marivel, Luther T. Moore, William O'Neal and H. W. Phillips. There are eighteen members. The church up to 1868 was in various circuits, and the ministers will be found in those circuits. In the year 1868 the Lewistown, (now Bethel) Circuit was formed, with Bethel, Mt. Zion and Wallace (an old appointment that was shortly afterwards dropped). Ashbury and St. Thomas' were in for a short time and at present Bladesville, Mt. Zion and Bethel. The ministers since the creation of the circuit, have been Rev. E. H. Millen, Rev. Samuel Webb, Rev. A. A. Fisher, Rev. G. W. Wilson, Rev. Robert Roe, Rev. W. M. Green, Rev. W. P. Bowen, Rev. A. T. Melvin and the present pastor, W. B. Gregg.

Sailor's Bethel M. E. Church. — In the year 1856 those members of the old Wesley who lived is the vicinity of Lewistown decided to erect a church. Captain William Wheatley, Elijah Coumbourn, Jeremiah Eskridge, William H. Hearn and Alexander W. Hopkins were elected trustees. A neat building was erected at a cost of eleven hundred dollars which was used until the year 1884, when the present structure, one of the handsomest in Sussex County, was erected at a cost of four thousand one hundred and twenty-five dollars. A. T. Melvin was the preacher in charge at the time the erection of the church and it was due to his efforts in a great measure that the building was erected. The dedication sermon was preached by the Rev. J. B. Quigg. The church is in a flourishing condition and has one hundred and twenty members. The present trustees are William T. Moore, John B. Quillen, George K. Phillips, George F. Phillips, George S. Lloyd, H. W. Bell, John P. Owens, John H. Connelly and William T. Hopkins.

St. John's M. P. Church. — The town of Bethel is also provided with a fine church in the St. John's Methodist Protestant. It was built in 1885 at a cost of two thousand two hundred dollars. The land was given by Jonathan Moore, who was one of the prime movers in the erection and formation. The trustees at present are S. J. Wheatley and Jonathan Moore. There is a membership of twenty. Among the ministers who have occupied the pulpit are Rev. G. P. Winner, Rev. J. L. Mills, Rev. John Benston, Rev. J. E. Nicholas, Rev. John Straughan, Rev. J. T. Valient, Rev. J. T.Eversole, Rev. Dr. J. T. Ewell, Rev. J. B. Jones, Rev. H. C. Cushen and the present pastor, G. L. Backus.

Trinity M. P. Church. — This church is situated in the western end of the hundred, near Rodney's store, and was erected in the year 1873. The church was formed in 1866 and meetings were held in the schoolhouse. In the year 1873, George W. McGee gave land upon which to build a church. The building was erected at a cost of one thousand dollars. The Building Committee were William H. Roden, George W. McGee and William Mitchell. William H. Roden, George W. McGee, William Mitchell, William S. Warrington and Hamilton B. Truitt were elected a board of trustees. The trustees in 1887 are William H. Rodney, George W. McGee, William J. West, H. D. Powell, George A. Betts and Josiah C. Johnson. At the formation of the church there were forty members; the number has been increased to seventy-five the present year. The church has been supplied with ministers from a circuit composed of Shiloh, Trinity, St. Paul's and Providence Churches. The list of ministers is as follows: 1866, Rev. Thomas H. Burgess; 1868, Rev. Jeremiah Clay; 1869, Rev. I. T. Adkins; 1871, Rev. William D. Littinger; 1874, Rev. J. H. Ellegood; 1877, Rev. William A. Crousse; 1880, Rev. L. J. Leich (during this gentleman's time a fine parsonage was erected); 1882, J. M. Elderdice; and 1884 to '87, J. E. Nicholson.

Shiloh M. P. Church.—This church was erected at a cost of one thousand dollars in the year 1879 upon land donated by W. W. Dashiel, of Laurel, and is situated on the Laurel Road, near the farm of the late Robert Lambdin. Levin S. Hitch and Reuben James were the trustees at the time of the erection of the church. At present there are sixty members. The ministers are given in the article upon Trinity.

Schools.—There were very few schools of any kind in the hundred prior to the year 1829, when the county was laid out into districts. In Elzy Moore's meeting-house a free school was conducted for several years, and two or three subscription schools were run in the hundred, one being near Concord and the other the predecessor of what is now known as the Washington School-house. These schools were rarely open more than three months in the year. The districts laid out in 1829 were Nos. 43, 44, 45, 56, 57, 58, 59 and 60. Schools were erected in all these districts in the years 1831 and 1832. At present there are eleven. They are open from five to eleven months a year; the average in most districts, however, is not over six and one-half months. The schools are improving and every year finds them open for a longer period. In the year 1886 there were four hundred and eighty-eight scholars in attendance.

Concord.—The town of Concord was laid out in 1796 on a tract of land called "Partnership," on which Pine Grove Furnace was erected. The company established a settlement here thirty years before the town was laid out and made it for a time a busy hive of industry.

In 1783, soon after the establishment of Deep Creek Furnace about three miles above the present town of Concord, a company was organized for the purpose of making iron at the place now Concord, on Deep Creek. A tract of land (three hundred and ninety acres), called "Partnership," was taken up and a furnace erected called "Pine Grove Furnace." The company was composed of Abraham Mitchell, hatter; Thomas and William Lightfoot, merchants of Philadelphia, and Walter and Samuel Franklin, merchants of New York. On the 9th of November, 1768, Walter and Samuel Franklin bought two-fifths interest in the property of the others. This deed recites that the "company had purchased several tracts of land and procured sundry warrants for others and located some parcels thereon in ye counties of Worcester, Dorset and Summerset, in Maryland, now likely to belong under ye government of New Castle, Kent and Sussex, on Delaware, in ye county of Sussex, all which tracts of land and warrants have been procured for ye use and promotion of Pine Grove Furnace, now erected on Deep Creek." It is also recited that on the tract was "ye furnace, saw-mill, grist-mill, dozo houses and buildings." A tract of two acres, called "Adam's Folly," embracing the mill pond, was near the tract. "New Ireland; five hundred acres lay west of the Furnace Tract or "Partnership." "Cook's Chance," two hundred acres, was in Broadkill Forest and eight hundred and fifty acres in Care's Neck, on Gravelly Branch, in Nanticoke Hundred, on which, in later years, Collins' Forge was built; also the interest of all ye iron ore and mines" in a tract called "Mile's End," of three hundred acres, and one hundred acres, part of a tract called "Pilson's Lot," both on Barren Creek, in what is now Wicomico County, Maryland, with privilege to dig and carry away all ores obtained thereon. The company also had rights in several warrants from the Penna not then located, one dated August 29, 1764, which called for two thousand acres near Deep Creek; one for five thousand acres between Deep Creek, Broad Creek, Nanticoke River and Stony Branch; and five other warrants granted by the proprietors of Maryland for different quantities of land. But little is known concerning the operation of the company, except that business was vigorously conducted until the blockading of the Chesapeake Bay during the Revolution, when work was suspended, as were all the furnaces and forges in the vicinity. The company built a road from the furnace to the landing at the point in later years known as Outton's Landing, to which place the iron was drawn and loaded in vessels and shipped to Scotland and England.

The landing was directly opposite "Old Meadow," the landing-place of the Deep Creek Furnace Company, this being the highest point to which vessels could come up the Nanticoke. It was still later called "Calloway's Harbor." On the 8th of March, 1778, Walter Franklin purchased the remaining fifth interest of the furnace, and became the sole proprietor with all houses, edifices, mills, mill-seats and furnaces." The employees of the furnace joined the army, the same as those of other furnaces, and the business was abandoned. Walter Franklin died in 1778, and his executor, Samuel Franklin, November 12, 1791, sold the rights of the heirs to the property to Ebenezer Gracey, of Darby, Connecticut, and Theophilus Brower, of New York, both merchants. On the 8th of August, 1793, "all those certain iron works called Pine Grove Furnace," with the lands belonging there- to, were sold to Seth Griffith and William Elgate.
Hitch. The mills were still in operation, a distillery was added, in 1796 the town of Concord was laid out around the little settlement, the name of "Fine Grove Furnace" was entirely abandoned, and the thriving village took its place. The interest of William E. Hitch passed to Thomas Laws in September, 1796, who in the same year, with Seth Griffith, laid out the town. The road crossed over the dam, and when it passed through the town was named Washington Street; the mill and distillery was on the west side of the road. A street on the east side, parallel with Washington, was named Green, on which was one house, and between Washington and Green Streets was a large mansion-house. Parallel with Washington Street west was Liberty Alley, between which was a block extending to Market Street, on which were two houses, and one house still west to Shippen Street, which was the last street west and joined William Anderson and Elzy Spicer's lands, which were sold to them by Griffith and Hitch, August 15, 1796, and upon them their respective houses stood. The old landing-place, about two miles below and known in later years as Otten Landing, also Cherry Tree Landing, was sold by Griffith and Laws to John Otten, January 11, 1797. The streets running at right angles with Washington were First, Second and Third. There were in all one hundred and fifty-nine lots laid out, mostly sixty by one hundred and ninety-eight feet. On the 17th of June, 1808, Griffith and Laws sold to Robert Boyce fifty-two lots in the town. Thomas Laws sold the tan-yard and store and lots to John Houston, son of Robert, who continued the tan-yard and store at the place now owned and occupied by Dr. Robert G. Ellegood. John Houston also built schooners, one of one hundred and fifty tons burthen, at or near the Fine Grove Furnace. They were lightered down to Cherry Tree or Otten's Landing. In this house Judge John W. Houston and Dr. David Houston were born. John Houston continued in business until his death, in 1829. Seth Griffith married a daughter of Robert Houston, and a sister of John. Joshua Ellegood married Ann Griffith, daughter of Seth Griffith. Dr. Robert G. Ellegood is their son.

Thomas Laws removed to Philadelphia and was engaged in the leather business in that city, and Houston shipped his hides to him.

Seth Griffith had a tavern on the corner of Main and Washington Streets, where he lived and died in 1814. The tavern had been in operation before 1800. The first store was opened soon after 1800 by Seth Griffith and John Bell, and was on the corner of Washington and Main Streets, and the store-house is still standing in the rear of the present store-house of G. A. Phillips & Brother. M. Stewart and John Jefferson had an interest in the mill and store later. On Water and Market Streets was a store (still standing) which was later kept by Boyce & Phillips and L. H. Smith. A store was kept in 1851 by Alfred Cottingham on Washington and Main Streets; it was burned down in 1844. Lewis Spicer's store was on the south side of Main Street as early as 1830. It was later owned by Joseph Neal, George W. Collins and Samuel Jefferson in 1844, and last by Phillips & Morgan. It is now a dwelling.

The Mill and Distillery (the latter of which was suspended about 1820), and the mill passing to Alexander White and Edward Dougherty before 1818. One-half interest was owned by Robert Boyce, and an interest was owned by Michael Stewart. In 1832 it passed to Joseph Chipman, who continued it until his death, in 1840. It was then sold to George W. Green, who kept a store and run the mill. Green sold to George Vincent, who continued it until September, 1872, when it was sold to Isaac and James W. Cannon, the present owners; the store of Jesse Green was run from 1810 until his death in 1884. John Houston, Esq., also had a store before 1810 and many years later in the house already mentioned as occupied by him.

In 1809 the following persons were lot-owners in Concord: John Fletcher, one house and lot; heirs of James George, one house and two lots; Jesse Green, Seth Griffith, Robert Boyce, Levin Stuart, Michael Stuart and John Jefferson.

The Jesse Green mentioned was born January 12, 1766. He descended from Thomas Green and was a lineal descendant of George Calvert, the first Lord Baltimore and married his daughter, Lady Winifred. Jesse Green came to this country with Lord Baltimore and married his daughter, Lady Winifred. Jesse Green came to this country from Alexander, July, 1790, and married a Mrs. Buchanan, who soon after died, leaving one son, Willia m, who died many years ago. He later married Elizabeth, the granddaughter of Col. John Gunby, of the Revolution, and who lived at Snow Hill. His son James lived between Millsboro' and Concord. Green settled first at Seaford. After the death of his first wife he returned to Alexandria, and was engaged in merchandising. He remained but a short time, however, and returned and settled at Concord, and engaged in merchandising and shipping. He amassed considerable wealth, owning over three thousand two hundred acres of land in the vicinity. He was adjutant-general of the State militia for a number of years and served thirty-one years in the General Assembly, the longest term ever known. He was Speaker. He died in 1834, and is buried in Concord. The old mansion house is still standing.

A post-office has been established here for years. Among those who have been postmasters are George Grimes, Joseph Neal, Isaac Adams, George W. Collins, Isaac P. Jefferson, John S. Smith, Jacob W. Morgan, James H. Radcliff, James Butler, J. M. Out ten and James T. Smith.

Concord Methodist Episcopal Church.—This church was formed in the year 1804. August 24th of that year Robert Boyce conveyed to John Jefferson, Elijah Morgan, Arabell Philips, Adam Short, Covington Mussick, John Lord, John Culbrey, Charles Brown and Thomas Truitt two lots, seventy-eight by seventy-nine feet, "in village of Concord, on Deep Creek," which was nearly fronting the school-house. It embraced three-eighths of an acre. The church was then standing and in use. The old church was unfinished for many years, and in the year 1841 was torn down and rebuilt with the entrance changed from the east side to the north. In 1870 this church was torn down and October 9, 1870, the present building was dedicated. Services were held by the Rev. J. B. Merritt, R. Todd and J. O. Sypherd. The church has been supplied with pastors from Dover, Milford, Seaford, Bridgeville and Cannon's. The ministers will be found in articles upon those circuits.

There are two schools in the town. The one on the north side, in District 58, was erected in 1804 and is still standing. The one on the south side was erected in 1864. There are now three general stores, blacksmith and wheelwright shop, and grist and saw-mill and a population of three hundred persons.

Physicians.—Dr. Thomas Adams, member of the Convention of 1821, came to Concord about 1829, and died here in 1846. Dr. Waitman Jones succeeded him, and prior to his practicing medicine Dr. Jones taught in schools all over the country. Dr. James Fischer was here in 1848, and died in 1860.

Robert Griffith Ellegood was born March 15, 1828. He is a descendant of William Ellegood, a native of Wales, who emigrated from Wales to the eastern shore of Virginia in 1750, but removed, shortly afterwards, near Concord and took up a number of tracts of land and died in 1790. Four sons, Thomas, John, William and Robert, and one daughter, Mrs. Sally Hitch, survive him.

Robert Ellegood was the grandfather of the subject of this sketch. He married Mary B. Adkinson, of St. Mary's County, Maryland. Four children were born of this union, viz.: William, Joshua A., Thomas and Sarah. The father of Dr. Robert G. was Joshua A., born on the old homestead in 1789. He died in 1845, and was a man of influence, having held the office of justice of the peace for fourteen years. He married Miss Ann Griffith, daughter of Col. Seth and Nancy (Houston) Griffith.

Dr. Ellegood attended the district schools until fourteen years of age, after which he spent three years at the Laurel Academy. The death of his father prevented his completing his educational plans until he had reached his twenty-first year, when he began the study of medicine with Dr. James H. Fisher. He graduated from the Pennsylvania Medical College in 1822 and opened an office in the home of his birth where his ability has won for him a position of prominence in the medical profession of the State and country. His medical brethren have elected him president of the County and State Medical Association and he is a member of the American Medical Associations. In public affairs he has held an honored position in the councils of the Democratic party. He has represented his hundred in the Legislature and has held the position of Auditor of Accounts for three terms, conducting the business with signal ability. In State and County Conventions he has been a prominent figure. He is now a member of the State Board of Health. The Doctor is also extensively engaged in farming. He was married July 28, 1858, to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Nutter and Margaret Cannon. The doctor has two sons in practice, Robert, at home in Concord, and Joshua A., who has acquired a large practice in Laurel.

Bethel.—The town of Bethel up to January 7, 1880, was known as Lewisville, when it was made a post-office and William T. Moore appointed postmaster. Kendall Lewis, a sailor, was probably the founder of the town. In the early part of the present century he built a wharf at this point, which was known for years as Lewis' Wharf and afterwards as Lewisville. It was a great shipping point to Baltimore for all the section for miles about, as many as fifteen vessels plying between here and Baltimore. William Whiteley had a small store for a short time. Byard Moore opened a store about 1841 and was succeeded by Thomas Knowles, who is now succeeded by J. B. Quillen & Company. The little town is a thriving place and the most important of its size on the Peninsula. There are four general stores. The building of boats has been carried on to some extent since 1866, when John Windsor built several boats. Jonathan Cathell built boats after him. The present enterprise, George K. Phillips & Company (George K. Phillips, John M. C. Moore and William T. Moore) is the most important south of Wilmington. They have the only marine railway south of Wilmington. It was put in in 1859 and will hold vessels of three hundred and twenty-five tons burthen. They have built ten boats. Their work, however, is mostly repairing. The firm have also a planing and saw-mill annexed, with a capacity for sawing five thousand feet and dressing five thousand feet a day. The saw-mill was put in in 1885. They employ twenty hands and have a capital of eight thousand dollars. The town has a fine school building, erected in 1886, with an attendance of fifty scholars.

The Indian Hill Tribe, Improved Order of Red Men, was organized October 8, 1888, and incorporated at the Legislature of 1887. The first officers were: Prophet, William T. Moore; Sachem, James H. Wright; Senior Sagamore, James B. Conoway; Chief of Records, John M. C. Moore; Keeper of Wampum, J. B. Quillen. The officers for the term ending April 4, 1888, are: Prophet, Isaac T. Hearn; Sachem, F. S. Burford; Senior Sagamore, S. J. Wheatley; Junior Sagamore, H. W. Phillips; Chief of Records, James B. Conoway; and Keeper of Wampum, John B. Quillen. There is a membership of twenty.

Sycamore Store was established in 1887 by Philip Short, and has since been kept by Henry Hudson, Robert Frame, Dr. William S. Hitch, Noah Jones, Smith Hitchens, Jr., Thomas Dukes, George W. Bryan, who was made a postmaster in June, 1887.
The excellent mill facilities afforded by the streams in the hundred were early taken advantage of, and mills sprang up on most all the streams almost as soon as the settlements were made; indeed, a great many of the early settlements were made in the vicinity of Bull’s Mills, as it has been known for several years back. These are probably the oldest of any mills in the hundred. These mills are situated near the head of Broad Creek and Gray’s Branch. Joseph Collins built the mills prior to 1760, and they continued in his possession until about 1780. The mill seat had originally been granted to John Philips, and afterwards to Ezekiel Timmons. August 12, 1786, John Collins, the son of Joseph, conveyed in all four hundred and twenty acres, including the mill-lot, grist and two saw-mills, these including what was afterwards known as the Melson Mills, to his son, Joseph S. Collins; the latter owner was the father of Betty Scroggin, the wife of Samuel Scroggin, who sold the mill to Mansan Bull, September 22, 1794. Nathaniel Mitchell had an interest in the property for a short time, but it was of short duration. John Hopkins owned the mills after Bull, and then James Hopkins owned a two-thirds interest, and Spicer White one-third interest, and then the next owners were Isaac Hopkins and Henry R. Pepper. The present owners are William M. Boyce, James Rawlins and William Whaley. The saw-mill went down about five years ago. The capacity of the grist-mill is about fifty bushels a day.

The Melson Mills are situated above the Bull Mill, and were built about the same time by Collins. They came into possession of James and William Melson, after Joseph and John Melson; they have always been saw-mills, with the exception that John Melson built a grist-mill, which was only operated during his lifetime. Joseph Melson held one-half interest and four hundred and fifty acres of land, and John Melson the other half and five hundred and fifty acres. James Conoway and Ebe Walters were owners for a time. About twenty-five years ago the “Little Mill” was owned by John Rodney, of David, and then Robert Rodney. The “Big Mill” came to William J. Warington and Robert Lamden. The small mill stopped in 1882. George W. Megee is now running the large mill.

Chipman’s Mills is situated about two miles from Laurel, near the Episcopal Church, and was built by John Chipman about the beginning of the present century. They include a saw-mill, grist-mill and carding-machine. John Chipman transferred his interest to his son, Joseph Chipman, in 1832. The mills are now owned by John H. and William Chipman, great-grandchildren of John Chipman. The carding-machine was built by Joseph Chipman, who also ran a grist-mill. The present grist-mill was built by the present proprietors in 1884, and has a capacity of fifty bushels per day, the carding-machine seventy-five pounds, and the saw-mill eight hundred feet.

Warren’s or Hitch’s Mill was situated on Broad Creek, about one mile below the forge. It came into the possession of Caleb Ross, father of Governor Ross, who purchased of Nelly Warren, and in 1804 it was sold to William Hitch. The mill has been out of use since 1880. Among the other old mills in the hundred that are now out of use are Short’s Mill, which went down in 1860, and is situated a short distance from Concord; John Grace’s mill, that went down seventy years ago; the Elliot Mill which was owned by Meshack Elliot, and which included a saw and grist-mill and carding-machine, and was situated on the same stream as Chipman’s mill, went down over forty years ago; the Nathan Saunders saw-mill, situated down the stream below the Hudson and Matthews mill, was in existence in 1800; and Vinson’s mill, which in 1816 was owned by Mary Vinson, and which was built as early as 1739, is entirely gone. It included a saw and grist-mill.

White Oak Steam Saw-Mill.—This mill is located one mile from Sycamore, and seven from Laurel, and was started by B. H. Elliott. It was afterwards owned by John Thomson and Thomas Burton. In 1880 G. F. Elliott and B. H. Elliott came into possession as Elliott & Son, and have been running it since that time about six months in the year, sawing eight thousand feet of lumber a day.

CHAPTER LXXIII.
NANTICOKE HUNDRED.

The Hundred of Nanticoke is situated in the northwestern part of Sussex County, and is bounded on the north by Kent County, Cedar Creek and Georgetown Hundreds; on the east by Cedar Creek, Georgetown and Dagoborough Hundreds; on the south by Broad Creek Hundred, and on the west by the Nanticoke River, which divides it from Northwest Fork and Seafood Hundreds. Its greatest length is fifteen miles, and width, eight miles, embracing an area of about ninety-seven square miles, and a population, in 1880, of two thousand two hundred and forty-eight.

The hundred takes its name from the Nanticoke River, the source of which is here. In old grants of land, bearing date of 1760, the land on the Deep Creek is referred to as being in Deep Creek Hundred, and land on Maryland grants, Nanticoke Hundred. The hundred being the dividing line of the disputed territory of the Penns and Lord Baltimore, grants were made indiscriminately by both of these proprietors, and in many instances were for the same land. When the line was finally confirmed, the Maryland name was given to the land embraced in both the old hundreds.

The soil is sandy loam, and in the northern part there is a good clay sub-soil. The Nanticoke and its branches, the principal of which are St. John’s, Ona, Gravelly, Deep Creek and Tuskas, traverse every section of the hundred, and furnish excellent irrigation. A peculiarity of these streams is that their north and west banks are hard clay or a stiff soil of clay and sand, while the south and east banks are very loose and sandy. The small fruits are cultivated and raised in abundance. The corn yield is very large. Large quantities of iron ore exist, but there being fifty per cent. of foreign matter, its mining is unprofitable. The settlement is sparse, and, as a result, there was a number of large farms, a great deal of which have not been cultivated to any extent. The division of these lands into smaller tracts has already shown good results. All the land west of Deep Creek was for many years a vast forest of pine and oak. Much valuable timber has been taken out and shipped, a great amount of land has been cleared and is under cultivation, but large quantities of pine still remain.

The cultivation of peaches and apples is not engaged in to the same extent as other near localities. In 1796 there were several large apple-orchards. John Sharp, with three hundred trees; Peter Jackson, one hundred, and William Jones, Elias Evans, and Isaac Fisher were among the growers. From these apples large quantities of apple brandy were manufactured, several of the growers named having distilleries, and shipping North. Tobacco and sugar-cane were produced quite extensively, but their cultivation has been discontinued since the early part of the present century.

Nanticoke was one of the principal slave-holding localities from an early date. The assessment roll of 1796 shows two hundred and ninety-seven males of age, and that of 1816, over four hundred. At the time of the breaking out of the late war the number was small, most of whom were engaged in domestic occupations. The hundred is without railway and water communication. The line of the proposed Sussex Midland Railroad passes through it.

Early Settlements.—It is with considerable difficulty that the early settlers and their locations in this hundred can be ascertained. Being disputed territory, grants were made both by Lord Baltimore and Penn; and its boundaries being uncertain, grants about the beginning of the eighteenth century were made as being in Cedar Creek and Broadkill Hundred, which evidently, by bounds extended westward, embraced this territory. Prior to 1705 there were very few settlers, if any, in the hundred. The first grant of land of which there is any record is one on a warrant from Lord Baltimore, July 15, 1696, to George Layfield. It was for five hundred and forty acres of land "on the main branch of the Nanticoke, in a neck called Great Neck, formerly Smith's Neck, and adjoining Francis Newbold's Unity Forge Tract. The land was called 'Truthful Plain,' " and March 19, 1777, Charles Polk purchased it of Isaac Layfield. He also purchased one hundred and seventy acres of it from Sarah Newbold, January 26, 1793. This land is near what was known as Polk's Bridge, which crossed Gum Branch near the farm now owned by Sewall C. Biggs. A few years ago a large portion of this tract came in possession of Mrs. S. M. Layton. On this Layton land is the old brick mansion built by Charles Polk, who bought of Layfield, and who was the father of Governor Charles Polk, and himself a lieutenant in Col. David Hall's regiment of the Revolutionary Army. Following this warrant were two from William Penn, one dated May 30, 1705, to John Lokey, for two hundred acres of land "lying on ye head of ye beaver dam, which proceedeth out of Nanticoke," and another of September 10 of the same year to John Bennett, for 200 acres, described as being "in forest, and lying between ye heads of Sowbridge Swamps and ye Swamps of ye Bever dam of Nanticoke." This land was formerly owned by James Carlisle. Both Bennett and Lokey were from the eastern part of the State; and many who settled in this hundred were early settlers in the older and better known parts of the State. But those who settled under Penn warrants only occupied small tracts near the lines of Broadkill and Cedar Creek Hundred. The western part, or nearly three-quarters of the area of the present territory embraced, was settled by old families from Maryland and Virginia on Lord Baltimore's patents. The Polks, Laytons, Adameses, Nutterts, Ricords, Richards and Jacobs, whose names appear so often in grants of land in this and Northwest Fork Hundreds, and who are still numerous in the State, are of this class. Of the Polks, who were the largest holders, an account will be found in the chapter on Northwest Fork Hundred. The Polks, Laytons and Adameses had settled in Virginia as early as 1660, and about 1725 they immigrated here, and an old family tradition says that the reason of their migration was that a number of Indians in that section of the country had been in Virginia and furnished glowing accounts of the fertility of the soil and told wonderful stories of the great timber and its rapid growth. The settlers purchased some of their lands from these Indians, and then secured patents from Lord Baltimore. When the line between the States was definitely settled, in 1775, it became necessary for all these old settlers to have warrants of resurvey granted by the Penns, and when doing this they took up large tracts of vacant land, which, at the time, embraced one-half of the hundred. The settlement of the line also brought a large number of new settlers from the North, the bay shore and from England, and families which are now well-known and numerous first appeared about this time.

On November 10, 1722, Charles Nutter, the pioneer of that family, obtained a warrant from Lord Baltimore for two hundred and forty-three acres of land called "Noble Quarter," situated on the Bee Branch that issues out of the northwest side of the northeast fork of the Nanticoke. This land was resurveyed to Tilghman Layton in 1796, and renamed Tilghman's Regulation. This land is still in the possession of the Layton family.
"John’s Venture" was surveyed March 31, 1727, for John Caldwell, who came from Somerset County, Maryland. There were five hundred and eighty-six acres in the tract, and it is described as being "on the south side of Tusky Branch, that is southeasterly out of the northeast fork of the Nanticoke River." Eighty-six acres of this tract came into the possession of John Richards in 1827. This tract is the same that was later owned by N. Ratcliff and Mrs. J. A. Hall. "Double Purchase," adjoining "John’s Venture," was surveyed for Philip Richards, October 15, 1781, on the north of the "Tusky Branch," and "Conclusion" also to him, and adjoining "Double Purchase," May 9, 1744.

Joseph Shankland, in 1734, was granted two hundred acres on the east side of Green Branch, one of the branches that lead out of Deep Creek, and is known by custom as Indian Cabin Branch, and was adjoining the lands of John Davis, Jacob Stockley and Daniel Prentice, and extended to a branch called Little Neck Branch. These lands came into the possession of Charles Polk, and were sold by him to Samuel Richards and Edward Smith, November 18, 1828, who procured them with a view of taking out the bog ore. Adjoining "Double Purchase," May 9, 1744. David Polk had the tract Limbrick, containing three hundred acres, surveyed to him March, 1790. This land is on the site of the Walker Mill Pond, and is now in large part owned by A. B., S. C. and W. D. Fisher.

February 27, 1767, Jonathan Vaughan & Co., the iron masters (a full account of whom is given), took out their patents for the following tracts: Indian Cabin Branch, one hundred and twenty-six acres; Stony Branch, one hundred and thirty-seven acres; Iron Works, five hundred and sixty acres. John Caldwell must have had an interest in these lands at one time prior, for the patent recites "that John Caldwell did, on the 2d of April, 1728, assign to Levin Yates, Major Robert King, of Somerset County, Maryland, Archibald Smith and Alexander Draper, of Sussex County, interests in all these tracts. The company brought large numbers of laborers with them, who settled about here, the land still being in their hands, at the time of the division of lands, January 28, 1802, when the company lands passed to the following persons: Ezekiel's Chance," ninety-seven acres, to Jordel Lane; "Ingram's Lot," fifty acres, to Jacob Ingram; "Smith's Lot," one hundred acres, to David Smith; "Chance," one hundred and fifty acres, to Thomas Jones; "Brown's Inheritance," fifty acres, to Charles Banister; Banister's Addition, forty-six acres, also to Banister; Forked Neck, three hundred acres, to I. Jenkins; "Iron Works," five hundred and sixty acres, to John Caldwell; "Indian Cabin Branch," one hundred and twenty-six acres, and "Willen's Adventure," fifty acres, to Charles Willen. These lands were originally taken out on Maryland warrants that had become escheated, and are the same as those now owned by William Fleetwood, Edward Heard, Elijah Oliphant, S. A. Lammens, Mrs. John M. Rawlins, of Georgetown, Mrs. Sally Jones, Thomas A. Allen, J. C. Short and B. H. Tindall.

A tract described as in the extreme southwest corner of Cedar Creek, called "Gum Neck," was warranted March 19, 1747, to John Collins. This land is on the Gum Branch of the Nanticoke, and contains one hundred and fifty-three acres, parts of which are owned by Isaac C. Webb's heirs and Samuel Clendaniel.

Robert Moody, on a patent bearing date September 4, 1754, took up the tract of "Lynn," located near Knowles' Cross-Roads. This land passed into the hands of Philip Marvel, who, with several other members of his family, had come from Indian River and Lewes and Rehoboth Hundreds about 1760. This tract is now owned by Josiah P. Marvel. Several small tracts adjoining this were taken up by the Marvels between the years 1760 and 1790.

The family represented by Josiah P. Marvel is of English extraction, and has been identified with the settlement and development of Lower Delaware for over two hundred years, owning large tracts of land in Sussex County, and being among its leading, most intelligent and enterprising citizens.

Josiah P. Marvel, to whom this sketch is chiefly devoted, is the grandson of Philip Marvel, and son of Josiah Marvel and Soye, daughter of Charles Tindal. He was born on the ancient family tract where he now resides, in Nanticoke Hundred, on August 24, 1835. His early experiences were those of the customary farmer's son, his time being divided each season in laboring upon the farm and in attendance upon the local schools of the neighborhood. Upon attaining his majority he went to New Orleans, where he passed four years of his life. He then returned home on a visit to his mother, and finding her in poor health, deferred to her wishes and was induced to remain in Delaware, locating upon his present farm in Nanticoke Hundred in 1850, and being continuously engaged there since in farming and fruit-growing. He now owns about one thousand acres of land, and has erected a handsome residence upon the old place, and surrounded himself with those evidences of comfort, convenience and thrift which betoken the progressive, successful and enterprising agriculturist. He married, on August 1, 1850, Harriet Ann, daughter of David and Naomi Pepper, of Sussex County, and has had thirteen children, of whom ten are now living, to whom he has furnished the opportunity of obtaining liberal educations, either by sending them to colleges or academies of high order. His own limited opportunities for receiving an education in early life have been supplemented by an extensive course of reading and study, so that he is now recognized as one of the best informed men in the county. He has always manifested a deep interest in the public schools, and served as school commissioner in his district for about thirty-five years, most of the time, by careful supervision, giving to his school the highest place for general excellece among those in the county. His friendly counsel and aid have been of great benefit to many who were seeking a higher education, and who are now standing high in their professions, and give the credit of their success to him.

With religious affairs Mr. Marvel has ever been in earnest and active sympathy, and although not a member of any church, he has contributed liberally to the construction of several houses of worship, and gives yearly to the support of the Methodist, Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches. His integrity and uprightness as a man have never been called into question, and he enjoys the respect and esteem of many people throughout the State. He has always been interested in politics, and worked earnestly and efficiently for the success of the Democratic party, with which he has long been identified. He has been a delegate to nearly every Democratic County and State Convention for forty years, and often served as a member of the County and State Central Committees.

He was elected treasurer of Sussex County, and later, in 1870, sheriff of the county by the largest maajority of any man on the ticket. He filled both of those responsible offices with fidelity and ability, and to the satisfaction of all the citizens of the county.

Mr. Marvel is possessed of a genial and happy temperament, which makes him universally liked, and with a certain plainness and quietness of manner and speech combines an amount of energy, industry and executive ability which few would suspect. He deserves the highest credit for the manner in which he has overcome the disadvantages of his early life, and succeeded in rearing and educating as he has so large a family of promising children.

Daniel Boyce was granted, October 16, 1760, a tract called "Boyce's Luck," afterwards resurveyed as Long Ridge. It was adjoining a tract called "Fancy," and contained three hundred and eighty-three acres. This land is now partly owned by J. B.
Swain. On the 16th of July, 1760, Nehemiah Stayton received a grant for three hundred and eightyine acres of land in the northern part of the hun-dered. This land remained in the Stayton family until a few years ago, when it was sold to Isabella Hayes, John M. Collison, Frank Hayes and George Cordry.

In 1776 Hazzard's Addition, "Goodwill," part of "Stayton's Folly" and "Clifton's Lot," were all resurveyed to Nehemiah Stayton, and were described as a short distance below Stayton's Causeway, afterwards Teatown and now-Staytonville. T. C. Stayton, Amos Stayton, J. W. Clifton and Moses Harrington own portions of these tracts. Thomas Evans had a warrant for four hundred and fifty acres granted him August 16, 1765, on the road that then led from "his saw-mill to Andrew Collins'" saw-mill. His brother Elisha five years before had obtained the mill-site on a grant of a tract called Buckingham, containing fifty-nine acres. These lands are owned, in whole or in part, by J. B. Swain, J. C. Short and S. M. Morgan.

Ezekiel Conoway received a grant of ninety acres February 20, 1776, on John's Branch, and adjoining the plantation where he then lived. This land is now in the possession of William Sulzer. "Hunting Ground" was granted March 4, 1776, to William Carlisle for one hundred and fifty acres, and was between the line of Alexander Law's and John Polk's land, and joining Josiah Hunt's land in Cedar Creek.
This land remained in the Carlisle family until a few years ago, when it was sold to John Stevens.

Richard Jefferson, December 20, 1741, received a grant of two hundred and fifty-three acres, called Poplar Ridge, and located on the Tuska Branch.
This land is now the home place of Miles Messick, and is called "Pleasant Plain."

Miles Messick, farmer, of Nanticoke Hundred, was born in Broad Creek Hundred, September 14, 1815. He is the oldest son of Samuel Messick, who was also a farmer, being possessed of an estate of nine hundred acres, and was one of the leading men of his day, and was born October 28, 1791, and died April 16, 1841.
He married Elizabeth, the daughter of Phillip and Luranah (Wingate)Matthews, who died March 1, 1871, aged seventy-seven years. They had ten children, eight of whom grew to maturity—Miles, John, James, Luranah (who married Robert P. Barr, both now deceseed), Samuel T., Sarah Elizabeth (wife of Rev.
William W. Morgan), Julia A. (widow of John C.
Cannon), and Eliza Jane (who died in August, 1852, having previously married Rev. J. Pastorfield, of the M. E. Church).

Samuel Messick was the son of Covington Messick. also a farmer, who occupied the old homestead, which has been in the possession of the family for over one hundred years. Covington was born in 1755, and died December 17, 1828. He married Hannah Tind-dal, and by that marriage had nine children, all of whom grew to maturity, their names being Minos T., Loyey (third wife of Adam Short), Covington, Jr., Miles, Samuel, Leah (whose first husband was Jacob Bounds; second, John Matthews), Nancy (who mar-rried Thomas Knowles, and moved to the West), Betsy (who was burned to death in early womanhood), and Holland (who married Matthias Penton, and removed near Winchester, Illinois).

Isaak Messick was the father of Covington, and the first of the family to reside in Delaware, moving there from Wicomico County, Maryland. He died in April, 1779. By his first wife he had two children, Luke and George; by his second wife, Ann Windsor, he had eleven—John, Nehemiah, Joseph, Covington, Isaac, Sarah, Alice, Ann, Constant, Priscilla and Bethany.
The subject of this sketch attended the district schools of the neighborhood in the winter, and worked on his father's farm in the summer, until he was twenty-one, and to complete his education he attended one session of the Laurel Academy when twenty-three.
For three years after this he had charge of the farm of his uncle, Kendall M. Lewis, near Laurel. At the end of this time he was married, December 3, 1840, to Miss Sarah Eliza, daughter of Wm. and Lavinia Bell, of Broad Creek Hundred, Sussex County. Immediately after his marriage he purchased a farm, in the lower part of Nanticoke Hundred, from his father. This tract was a portion of the estate of his great-grandfather, Samuel Tindal. For this farm he gave his obligation for its full value, paying for it the same price his father paid for it five years before. His father died intestate two months after this transaction, and this obligation he paid the estate, with courage rarely equaled under the circumstances. He made a deed of gift for his interest in an estate of six hundred acres of his father's other lands, and his share of the personal property to his brothers and sisters. Upon this farm Mr. Messick lived twenty-seven prosperous years, and in 1858 he purchased the farm "Pleasant Plain," to which he removed December 24, 1867. It consisted at first of three hundred and twenty-three acres, but he has increased it until it now numbers thirteen hundred and seventy acres, divided into seven farms. Much of this land, by industry and skillful farming, he has brought to a high state of cultivation, and obtained a reputation of being one of the leading agriculturists of the State.

In politics both Mr. Messick's father and grandfather were Federalists and he trained in the same line, remaining a Whig until 1860, since which time he has acted with the Democratic party. He was appointed constable when quite a young man, without application.

In 1864 he was elected a member of the State House of Representatives, by a vote larger than that given to the electors on the same ticket. In 1870 he was appointed a trustee of the poor for Sussex County, and in 1875 was elected treasurer of that body, receiving eight votes out of thirteen, with three other candidates opposing him. In 1877 he served a second term in the Legislature, and in 1880 he was United States supervisor of election and registration. In 1875, Gov. Cochran appointed him one of his aids, with the rank of colonel. He was in 1884 nominated as State Senator, upon the Temperance Reform ticket. Mr. Messick has never sought office, but his fellow-citizens felt called upon to recognize his ability. As an example of his character he willingly freed a colored woman he held, under her simple request, and paid her full wages.

He has always been a temperance man, having been one of the pioneers of the cause, engaging in the work in 1833. He has always been a faithful worker in the interest of temperance, and is now president of the Sussex County Temperance Alliance, and also of the Sussex County Bible Society, both of which offices were unsought by him. Mr. Messick's ancestors were all Methodists, and he united with that denomination in 1841, and was for many years a trustee of Asbury Church, and also steward at that appointment until his removal from the neighborhood, and was for eighteen years superintendent of the Sabbath-school, and is at this time a trustee of Chaplin Chapel, in New Castle Hundred. Mr. Messick is the father of six children, the first of whom died in infancy: second, Miles Edwin, born September 15, 1848, died June 23, 1863; and William Kindal, born March 22, 1847, died October 4, 1852; Willard Irvin, born January 14, 1855, died August 22, 1876. Two are now living,—Samuel Harrington, born March 23, 1852 who graduated from Delaware College in 1881, delivering the salutatory; and Albert Messick, born April 30, 1860.

John Laws received a grant for a large tract of land on John's Branch, February 19, 1776. This land was described as located on the main branch of the Nanticoke, and adjoining land of Joshua Polk, John Jessup and Alexander Laws in said county. This land is now in the possession of Albert Curry, John Robert Ricords and William Carlisle. On the Carlisle tract is the Old Law's burying-ground.

Adjoining this land Joshua Polk, May 18, 1776, on a survey, took up a large tract called Tyrone. The greater part of this land is owned by Mrs. Margaret Ricords and William Sulzer.

Ephraim Polk, as early as February 5, 1747, had taken up a tract of two hundred and twenty-nine acres near this, and on the east side of the Gun Branch, and now owned by David R. Smith. "Prospect Hill," now owned by William Sulzer, was taken up April 6, 1776, by, Jeremiah Wright. Thereafter the two persons owning two hundred acres or over in Nanticoke Hundred in 1776:

Religious.—Methodism.—The Methodist churches here have been supplied from circuits in other hundreds. They were all originally, with the exception of Johnstown, in the Milton and Laurel Circuits, which included Asbury, 'in Bethel, and Shortly and Cokesberry, in Bridgeville; Georgetown, Lincoln, Ellendale, Shortly and St. Johnstown, in Felton. Asbury and Cokesberry now form a separate circuit. The list of ministers will be found in the hundreds where the circuits are located.

Cokesberry.—The oldest Methodist Episcopal Church is Cokesberry, located near the old Evans mill-pond, and on the road from Bridgeville to Georgetown. The first building was erected in 1808. December 17 of that year William Swain conveyed to Dennard Short, Purnel McCanley, John McCauley, Jonathan Allison, John Duncan, Moses McDonel, James M. Round, Jesse Tindal and William Smith, trustees, a "lot of land on Petrikin's Branch, near Evans Mill, embracing sixty nine feet front," to superintend and furnish and keep up a school-house and Methodist Episcopal Meeting-House. The school was the first free school in the neighborhood, and was maintained out of the funds of the church. The old building was partly of logs and was described as a "very neat and attractive building" by the early divines who visited it. The old building had gone pretty nearly to decay, when, in 1869, the present structure was erected. It is about twenty-five feet by forty feet and of native pine and oak, one story in height, and cost thirteen hundred dollars to erect it. The present trustees are John C. Short, Baptist Conwell, Noah Isaacs, Joseph Wilson and John B. Swain. There is a large and flourishing Sunday-school.

Asbury.—This church is near the old Tindal Mill and on the road from Georgetown to Laurel, and about seven miles from Georgetown. Since it has been on a separate circuit it has had Wilmer Jaggard, J. W. Gray and J. R. Anderson as ministers. The first building was erected in 1812. March 12 of that year Covington Messick, John Cullen, Purnel Tindall, Levin Conoway, Robert Barr, Minos T. Messick, Southy Culling, John Tom and William Morgan were elected trustees and incorporated as such by the General Assembly. On May 16 of the same year the first step toward the erection of a house of worship was taken by the purchase of eighty-four square perches of land of Minos Tindall.

By fall a pretty frame building twenty-four by twenty-six was erected and occupied. This building was in use until 1857, when the present edifice was erected at a cost of fifteen hundred dollars. The building is a one-story frame structure, about thirty by forty feet, and is on the site of the old house. A large cemetery on both sides of the road contains the remains of many old members. The Sunday-school has twenty scholars with Joshua Rawley as superintendent. There are fifty-five members in the church, the present trustees being William Tindall, Benton H. Tindall, Theodora Carey and Edward Salmons.

St. Johnstown is located less than a quarter of a mile below the old town of St. Johnstown on the road to Bridgeville. Previous to the erection of the church meetings were held in the woods on the spot where the church now stands, by John Marim, an old local preacher. The first steps toward the formation of a church were taken by the Legislature incorporating March 5, 1832, John Fowler, David Pennewill, William Griffith, Joel Carlisle, William Fowler, Thomas Curry and Eli Coverdale as trustees of the St. Johnstown meeting-house. March 15, of the same year, they bought of Samuel Stephens seventy-two perches of land "on which the Methodist meeting-house now stands" as the deed relates. The old building was replaced September 28, 1872, by the present structure, the largest and handsomest in the hundred. The building is of frame, and cost $3500. It is thirty by sixty feet, and finished first-class throughout. Since the creation of the Circuit the ministers have been William Connolley, Elam J. Ware, James Carroll, W. S. Robinson and R. C. Jones. There are about one hundred members. The present trustees are Albert Curry, George W. Elliott, Amos J. Stayton, Robert D. Owens and William J. Carlisle.

Chaplain's Chapel.—Prior to the erection of this church there was built a church known as Onins, in Gully Swamp about two miles east. This building only stood for twelve years when it was abandoned on account of its out-of-the-way location, and the present building built in 1859. The land was deeded by Charles Macklin and Fisher Willis, and the church took its name from John Chaplain, the minister at the time of its erection. The trustees then were W. W. Sharp, Joshua Sharp, Charles Macklin, Charles A. Rawlins, Bayard Sharp, Benton Sharp and L. B. Brown. The building is of frame and one story in height and thirty by forty feet and cost $1600. There is a membership of fifty. The Sunday-school has forty scholars, E. F. Johnson, superintendent. The present trustees are W. W. Sharp, Miles Messick, S. H. Messick, G. M. Macklin, J. T. Macklin, E. F. Johnson, Benton Sharp and Josiah Prettyman.

Gravelly Branch Baptist Church has long since gone down. It was located near Coverdale's Cross Roads and was organized July 30, 1785, through the efforts of Revs. Philip Hughes and Elijah Baker and was the seventh church organized by them. The church building was erected in 1801. The land comprising one-half acre, conveyed September 16th of that year, by Samuel Lafferty to Philip Hughes, Isaac Fisher and John Willis, Sen. The constituent members were Edward C. Dingle, Comfort Boyce, Marjery Hira, Priscilla Carter, Isaac Fisher, Elizabeth Fisher, Milber Dukes, Rachel Dukes, John Willis, Ann Willis, Matthew Marine, John Hinson, Richard Crockett, Elizabeth Crockett, Anna Crockett, John Graham, Ann Graham and the negroes, Rachel, Francis, Mariam, Bonny and Jenny. In 1788 there was a revival and thirty-five persons were added to the church. In six years the membership increased from twenty-three to sixty-nine. The Revs. Baker and Hughes labored there for several years and were succeeded by Rev. Jonathan Gibbins, who was followed by the Rev. John Benson. For many years they worshipped in the house of John Willis, but later built a church which has long since disappeared and the congregation dispersed.

Pergamos Chapel.—On the farm of William Carlisle, less than a quarter of a mile from St. Johnstown there was formerly a brick Prote-tant Episcopal Church. The building was erected prior to 1786, at that time William Laws devised by will three-fourths of an acre of land near St. Johnstown to the "Society of the Church of England for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts." The will recited that the church stood on the lot and if the church was discontinued the lot was to revert. In 1810, Samuel Griffith, Thilghman Layton, William Carlisle, Pemberton Clifton and William Fowler were incorporated as the trustees of the church. The building is described as being one story, twenty-five by thirty feet and a high ceiling. Services were discontinued about the year 1800 and for over fifty years the only vestige of the old church or its congregation is a hollow where the building formerly stood.

SCHOOLS.—At the division of the county into districts in 1829, the original districts in this hundred were Nos. 53, 54, 55, 56, 61, 62, 65, 76 and 77. In all these districts school-houses were erected in 1830 and 1831. Prior to this time there were three or four subscription schools, which were run three months in the year. At present there are fourteen schools in the hundred, employing fourteen teachers, and an attendance of three hundred and twenty scholars.

VILLAGES.—St. Johnstown.—This hundred has never had any town in its borders of any size. The oldest settlement is St. Johnstown, which ranks as one of the oldest in the northern part of the county. It is situated about one mile from Greenwood, and five from Bridgeville. The earliest mention made of the town is an old record of 1776, when, in the description of a tract of land, it is described as being near the old school-house at St. Johnstown. In 1810, Pemberton Purnell opened a store there and was succeeded about 1890 by Philip Jones. John Spence also had a general store. John Sorden had a store about 1840, and was the only postmaster the village ever had. About the year 1812, there was considerable business done in the town, being on the route of the stage lines of the day. Two hotels were in operation, one kept by Samuel Stevens and the other by Parker Robinson. It was the place then for large political gatherings, and several of Delaware's public men made their first speeches here. The Robinson House did not continue for very many years. But the other was conducted by Philip C. Jones, Edward Morris, Benjamin Hearne and Stockley Elliott, and others. About ten years ago, after Mr. Elliott left, the hotel was closed, The town of Greenwood, since the building of the railroad, has taken all the business away, and now there is no business interest whatever. The schoolhouse of District 76, or the Johnstown school, was built in 1880, on land given by William Carlisle. The old building is still in use. Among the early teachers were Joseph Russell, John R. T. Masten, Jonathan Tharp, Dr. James Fisher and James Carlisle.

Coverdale's Cross Roads.—This place, consisting of five houses and a store, has had many names. It was originally known about the year 1800 as Bethel Cross Roads, it was then changed to Passwater's, and successively Collins', Coverdale's, Lafferty's, and now its original name Coverdale. At the establishment of the polling-places in the year 1811, "the house of Boaz Coverdale, in Passwater's or Bethel Cross Roads," was designated as the voting-place of Nanticoke Hundred. This gave the place its first importance. Priscilla Coverdale opened a tavern, and continued to keep it until 1818. In 1816 there were two taverns, Samuel Stevens opening one that year. In the year 1838, Nathaniel Short had a store there. In 1858, Isaac M. Fisher and C. A. Rawlings, who kept in the old store building from 1852, had the place made a post-office, January, 1857, and it continued one until 1862, when he retired from business. In 1869 the old Coverdale tavern was closed. Among its proprietors were Joseph Salmons, Jacob Carpenter and Miles Tindall, Jonathan Hill was the last proprietor.

Knowles' Cross Road.—This little hamlet is on the old tract of Lynn that was originally granted to Philip Marvel. It was known by the name of Marvel's Cross Roads for years until Daniel Knowles opened a store there in 1856, and ran it for a long while in the building now occupied by William F. Jones. Opposite this store, on the northeast corner, Thomas Marvel about 1811 had a tavern; he was succeeded by his son Philip. The building was burned about 1848. A short distance above the cross roads, William Jones and later his son William had a tavern. This was closed about 1847. The old building is still standing and was known as the Greentree.

INDUSTRIES.—Bog iron abounds in Nanticoke Hundred and many tons have in late years been shipped to New Jersey to mix with magnetic ore. Before the Revolution the presence of ore at the heads of the streams in the vicinity attracted capitalists from abroad, who established companies, purchased large tracts of land, built furnaces and forges, mined ore and conducted large businesses. The names of various works were Deep Creek Iron Works, embracing Deep Creek Furnace, in Nanticoke Hundred and Nanticoke Forge at Middleford, Pine Grove Furnace, on the present site of Concord, Unity Forge in Northwest Fork Hundred, Collins, Polk and Gravely Delight Forges and the furnace and forge at Millaboo.
coke River, a distance of four miles, at which place a stone wharf was built, a few of the stones still remaining. The land at the junction, was a tract of land called "Old Meadow," which name the company gave to the iron which they brought to this place and shipped direct to England. The breaking out of the Revolutionary War, and the blockading of the Chesapeake Bay, caused a suspension of business at all the furnaces and forges in the vicinity, and upon the call for troops, three forces of unemployed men enlisted in the army under Colonel Mitchell Kershaw and Lieutenant-Colonel Joseph Vaughan, and served during the Revolution. The iron business was so much demoralized, that it was not again resumed. The mills, however, were continued, as being of constant local use. The Iron Works property remained in the hands of the company until an act of the Legislature was passed, January 28, 1802, for its partition. At that time William Wishart was the only one living of the original members of the company under the articles of agreement of May 18, 1764. The property was divided into six parts, of which William Wishart, heirs of Richard Edwards, heirs of Jonathan Vaughan, heirs of William Douglas, heirs of Benjamin Christofer and Charles Marshall (their father, Christopher Marshall, having conveyed his interest to them Nov. 12, 1772) and the heirs of Joseph Pennell, each received their interest. Nanticoke Forge and other lands in the division came to the heirs of Jos. Pennell who, January 11, 1805, sold it to William Hufington, Jr., and Thomas Townsend. The furnace tract and other lands on Deep Creek, to Walter and William Douglass, grandsons of William Douglass, who sold it August 10, 1810, to Gen. Jesse Green, when the mills were refitted and operated by him for several years and he was succeeded by William Green, his eldest son. In 1838, George Green, also a son, took charge and conducted the mills and store for several years, and was succeeded by Isaac Fooks, who bought the property and operated the mills for ten or fifteen years, and sold to Isaac Conaway, and a few years since they were sold to Hearne. The saw-mill is still operated but the grist-mill very little, and the whole is now offered for sale.

The foundation and piles of cinders, about the site of the old Nanticoke Forge, were to be seen as late as 1825. The mills and distillery were on the northwest side of the main stream, and three races led from the pond to the stream below. Maps show by dots the old abandoned roads that led to the ore beds.

The other lands, in a few years after the division, passed to other parties, and so ended the first effort to establish iron works on the lower peninsula.

Gravelly Delight Forge.—A large tract of land called Brown's Manor was taken up about 1775, by William Brown, on the east side of the Nanticoke River, above the Nanticoke Forge lands, and at the mouth of Gravelly Branch. Early in the year 1808, Shadrach Elliott bought two hundred and six acres of land of Eggleston Brown, son of Humphrey Brown, and grandson of William, it being parts of several tracts, which were "Delight," taken up on a Maryland Patent; "Brown's Manor," a Delaware Patent; "Pine Marsh Addition," a Maryland Patent, and all of a Maryland patent originally granted to Winder Crockett. These lands lay at the mouth of Gravelly Branch.

On the tract called "Delight," on the north side of the branch near the head of the Middleford mill-pond, Shadrach Elliott built in the year 1808 a forge, as in a survey of October 22d is shown as "new forge," mill and dwelling-house. In 1816 it was operated by John and Shadrach Elliott. About the year 1820, they were abandoned, and nearly all evidence of the old forge is obliterated. Shadrach Elliott sold part of the lands above the forge August 4, 1812, to Clement Carroll.

Collins Forge.—This forge was in operation within the memory of many citizens. The land on Gravelly Branch, on which it was located, was a tract of six hundred acres, which was taken up on a warrant by Samuel Pettryjohn, December 16, 1757, and assigned to William Douglass, and in 1764 was purchased by the Pine Grove Furnace Company, whose furnace was located on the site of Concord. After various changes it passed to Seth Griffith and William E. Hitch. Captain John Collins, on April 17, 1794, purchased it of them. He soon after erected a mill and built a forge near Coverdale's Cross Roads and purchased other lands adjoining, and in 1798 was in possession of fourteen hundred and sixty-five acres of good land and eleven hundred and eighty acres of swamp, and fourteen slaves. He died in 1804, and the property was divided—three hundred and fifty acres of land and two hundred and fifty acres of swamp, mill-pond and branch and one-third of mill to John Collins, Esq., afterwards Governor Collins; six hundred and ninety-six acres of land and one-third of mills to Sarah Collins, his widow; and three hundred acres of upland and one hundred and sixty-seven acres of swamp and one-third of the mills to his son, Robert Collins; and one hundred and thirty-seven acres of land and one hundred acres of swamp to the heirs of Nancy Polk, his daughter. John Collins, Esq., about 1812, erected upon the Gravelly Branch, about three-quarters of a mile above Coverdale's Cross Roads, a charcoal forge, the one for which was obtained from a tract lying east about three miles, and a mile from the road leading from Georgetown to the forge. Mr. Collins was elected Governor in 1821, and died in April, 1822. The forge passed to his son, Theophilus, who continued it until about 1850, and then abandoned the forge and continued the grist-mill until his death. This was sold a few years ago by John Collins, son of Theophilus, to William Downing, of Delmar, and is still running.

Mills.—There are very few mills in the hundred at present compared with those in operation in the early part of the present century. The men working at the various forges made the demand for flour greater, and there was much more timber to cut than at present.
Among the old mills that have gone down are those of Daniel Baker, formerly located on Tindall’s branch of Deep Creek; Conaway mill, on the same branch; the Bell flower grist-mill, condemned about ten years ago and operated by a company; Evans’ mill, which was one of the oldest, having first been built in 1760, and continued in the family for years, the last owner being —— Millmann; and Luke Hufington’s saw-mill, which went down seventy-five years ago.

_Crockett Mill._—This mill was built about 1776, by Joseph Crockett. It is located on Tindal’s Branch, near where it enters the Deep Creek. Among its early owners were Lewis Spicer, Isaac N. Fooks and H. Tindall. Since 1869 it has been operated by the firm of Fleetwood, Jones & Tindall. Charles Fleetwood, Thomas Jones and H. Tindall compose the firm. The capacity is about forty-five bushels of corn a day. The saw-mill is not worked continuously.

The _Dobby Mill_ was erected about 1833, and is above the Crockett mill on the same stream. Isaac Dobby was the first owner. It came into the possession of Hiram and William James about 1837. In 1850 it was owned by B. D. James and J. H. Messick, and was run by them until 1883 as a saw-mill, when it was condemned. Among the other mills in the hundred are the Russell mill, owned by the J. Russell heirs, which was built by William Russell, in 1820, and the Cannon mill and Owen Mill, both built in the early part of the present century.

CHAPTER LXXIV.

SEAFORD HUNDRED.

This hundred was created by an act of the Legislature passed March 11, 1869, which provided that Northwest Fork Hundred should be divided into two hundreds, and that all that part in the lower Northwest Fork Election District should receive the name of Seaford Hundred. In the division the bounds established for the election districts, by the act of February 12, 1761, were to be followed. These were:

"Beginning in the middle of the old State road, at Walker’s mill-dam, and running thence westerly, by the centre of said road, between the old Frank Brown farm and the farm of the late Daniel Cannon, over and by Cannon’s Crossing, to its intersection with the road leading from Federalburg to Bridgeville; thence by the centre of said Federalburg and Bridgeville road, past Horesy’s Cross Roads, to the eastern boundary of Maryland. All that part below the said line was to be known as the Lower North West Fork District, and its elections were to be held at the academy in the town of Seaford."

The bounds of the hundred, thus being determined by streams and by highways laid out for the convenience of the early settlers, are irregular, excepting the Maryland line. The surface has a level aspect, but is in most localities undulating enough to afford natural drainage. The greater part of the original forest growth has been cleared away, and some fine farms have been made. In other localities, abandoned plantations, overgrown with scrubby timber, give the country a dreary appearance. The soil is generally a fertile sandy loam and appears to be especially adapted for fruit culture, to which large areas have lately been devoted. The streams are small, but have been made useful factors in the communities where their mill sites have been improved.

Being for many years after its settlement claimed as a part of Maryland, no warrants or surveys were granted by the Penns. After the title was decided and confirmed in 1775 re-surveys were made by Pennsylvania. Among the principal tracts described were the following:

The “Nanticoke Manor” of the Penns was laid out February 26, 1776, to extend four miles down the river from Brown’s Bridge and half a mile from the river-side. John Lukens, surveyor-general, was ordered to make this survey and to report all who had titles to lands within these limits. On the same day, “Hubbard’s Regulation” of five hundred and seven acres was resurveyed to Peter Hubbard, on the north-west side of the Nanticoke river, near to Hubbard’s store-house and adjoined a tract called “Cannon’s Regulation,” near Mulberry Landing, where Lewis or Turtle Creek falls into the Nanticoke.

These lands were warranted on Maryland Patents, one tract “Spring Hill, July 1, 1729, to James Cannon; “Luck,” to James Brown, March 19, 1740; “Clarkson’s Lot” and “Clarkson’s Meadow,” to William Clarkson, April 10, 1750. On March 18, 1776, a warrant for a resurvey was granted to John Cannon for the following tracts before granted and surveyed by the authorities of Maryland.

When resurveyed, they were found to contain six hundred and ninety-nine acres, all northwest of the Nanticoke. Hudson Cannon’s land, called “Cannon’s Conclusion,” embraced the whole of the above. He owned it in 1797, at which time there was a grist and saw-mill on it.

The site of the town of Seaford was known as “Martin’s Hundred,” or “Hooper’s Forest,” and was owned by Henry Hooper as early as 1720. A part of this tract, above Seaford passed into the hands of John Tennant, who married into the Hooper family, and this subsequently became the property of Governor William H. Ross. A part of the land and other tracts in that locality, including the mansion of Governor Ross are now in the farms of James J. Ross, his son. They aggregate more than eight hundred acres, and form one of the finest estates in the State. On these farms many thousands of peach trees are growing. East of these places are the fine farms formerly owned by W. H. Cannon and Curtis J. Ross, which have passed into the hands of James H. Brown and William H. Ross.

Nearer Seaford is the old farm of Captain Charles Wright, which has a distinguishing landmark in several rows of stately cedar-trees along the highway.
Jacob Kinder, a native of South Holland, where he was born in 1736, became a resident of the Hundred after 1770, living first on the farm of Isaac Brady, near Cannon's Station. Here he took up a tract of land called "Jacob's Choice," walking to Philadelphia to buy it. In 1777 he moved to his "Kinder's Effort," near the Bethel Church, where he died in 1790. His descendants became useful and well-known citizens. West of this place Joshua Noble settled, coming from Maryland and buying the old Kirk farm, near Bethel Church. Twelve of his children reached mature years, and many of their descendants attained prominent positions in this State and in new homes to which they removed. Lemuel Davis lived in Maryland, near Bethel Methodist Episcopal Church. He was married to Mary Ann Noble and reared a large family, whose descendants are very numerous. Several members of the family became ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

For many years the Kinder, Noble and Davis families constituted the principal part of the population of the northwestern part of the Hundred. In the same locality White Brown built a good brick house as early as 1781, but the family has become extinct in Seaford Hundred.

Below the town of Seaford Dr. Julius Augustus Jackson was settled, on the Nanticoke River, before 1776, as in that year, March 18th, he took warrants under Governor Penn for lands which were resurveyed by him. One tract, of two acres, was "on Hudson's Island, at a place where the said Jackson hath built a wharf and a house." Another was of forty acres, lying at the lower end of the island, on the north side of the Nanticoke and between the river and Turtle Creek Branch; also thirty acres on the north side of the Nanticoke; also two acres on the south side of the Nanticoke, from a place called "Shadpoint," up the river to the "Brig Landing;" also a large tract called "Long Lot," lying between the branches of Turtle Creek and Twin Pen, which had been granted on a Maryland warrant to Abraham Covington. This last tract he conveyed, November 5, 1788, to his son, Jeremiah Rust Jackson, also a physician.

April 22, 1792, Dr. J. A. Jackson bought of Thomas Loockerman two tracts called "Gibraltar" and "Straight," lying on Nanticoke River, adjoining his other lands. In 1793 he took up, on warrant, two hundred acres; in 1794, four hundred acres; in 1796, thirty acres, called "Jackson's Discovery," and one and three-quarters acres called "Jackson's Wharf." In 1796, twenty acres, an addition to "Gibraltar," and in 1801, the year of his death, twenty-nine acres, called "Little Help." His will was probated October 8, 1801, in which he left to his son, Jeremiah Rust Jackson, and to his son, Peter, both physicians, his medicines, instruments and medical books, and to his widow, Sally, his dwelling-house during her widowhood or single life, and to his son, Thaddeus, the other lands and also the dwelling upon deceased of his mother. The lands that came to Thaddeus were sold by him, in 1810, to Sally Obier and John Rust.

Dr. Jeremiah R. Jackson bought of his father, in 1788, "Long Lot," as mentioned; and in 1792 warranted two hundred acres, and in 1794 "Venture" of twenty acres; in 1795 one hundred and seventy acres of "Jackson's Regulation;" and December 11, 1796, he took out a patent for fifty-five acres between John Cannon's mill and Turtle Creek, originally surveyed for Levi Safford on Maryland warrant; in 1776, to John Baptist, called "Baptist Projection." Many subdivisions of these surveys and changes of ownership have taken place, some of the above families being no longer represented among the inhabitants of the Hundred. In 1840 the taxables of the whole of Northwest Fork Hundred, which then included Seaford, were as follows:—

Harris had a saw-mill which was later owned by Thomas H. Brown, and is now the property of William F. Hastings. Though of small capacity, the mill has done good service, and when the store near by was carried on, this was an important business point. Besides some of the mill owners, Robert Frame, Jacob Bounds and Thomas Short were also here in trade. Near Woodlands, on Mud Brook, W. W. Wright and others operated small mills for brief periods.

In the southwestern part of the hundred, the old Wallace saw-mill passed into the hands of Gillis S. and William Ellis, about 1850, and has since been owned by the Ellis family. In 1887 it was the property of William and E. J. Ellis. The latter was also a vessel owner.

In the main, agriculture has formed the principal pursuit of the people, and many fruit farms have been opened within a dozen years. Those of Col. E. L. Martin, J. J. Ross and W. H. Boyce are among the largest of the State, each containing many thousands of peach trees. Charles Wright, T. B. Giles, T. H. Brown, J. W. Wiley, Jacob Bounds, M. J. Dickerson, J. F. Oday and George H. Houston are also extensive fruit growers and orchardists.

MIDDLEFORD.—The lands in this vicinity were taken up on a warrant in 1764, as "Brothers' Agreement," "Venture" and "Company's Lot," by Jonathan Vaughan and Co., who built the "Nanticoke Forge," on the west side of Northwest Fork of the Nanticoke, at the head of tide water. A store, grist and saw-mills were also built at this place and were in active operation before 1770. The forge was abandoned early in the Revolutionary War, and, being a part of the Nanticoke Furnace property, the lands were divided by act of the Assembly, passed in 1802 and sold in 1805 to William Huffman, Thomas Townsend and James Huffman. The place was at that time already known as Middleford, the mill, store and other interests having been carried on after the first forge had been abandoned. A new dam was built three hundred yards below the old one, by the above firm, and a forge for making blooms was again placed in operation and worked on until 1826. Before this time the property had passed to Thomas Townsend, and in 1825 he rebuilt the mills so that they could be operated on a very extensive scale. From him these improvements passed to his son, Barclay, and were next owned by Robert Houston, William and Michael Stewart. Soon after Townsend built the new mill at Middleford, in 1825, he invented a process of kiln-drying corn meal so that it could be sent abroad, and ground and dried large quantities. He shipped it to the West Indies from the mill, and had a very large trade. Eight cooperers were employed making puncheons and barrels. A distillery was also at this place before 1825, but it was abandoned after the extensive milling business was established.

About 1840 the property came into possession of Lott Rawlins, and the mill was destroyed by fire in 1846. It was not rebuilt by him, but the property passed to his sons, John M. and James Rawlins, who, in 1857, built the present grist and saw-mill. In 1859 a carding-mill was built, and since 1864 a small planing mill has been operated, these interests remaining the property of the Rawlins Bros.

Stores have been carried on at Middleford since the place was opened for settlement, usually by the mill owners. But after 1880 this was one of the most active trading places in the county. At one time there were stores kept by William and Michael Stewart, Lott Rawlins, William Twiford, George Hall, John Windsor and James and Joseph Copes. All did a good business. After the large mill was burned down the place began to decline, but William and John M. Rawlins and the Stewarts remained in trade a few years longer. In 1887 there was but one small store, which was kept by Edward Owens, the postmaster.

The village being off from the main lines of travel has steadily dwindled since the building of the railroad, and the dozen or more buildings remaining show signs of decay—a number being unoccupied. At this place were located as physicians, Dr. Edward Huffington and Dr. Joseph Copes, in 1832, and a few years later, Dr. William Stewart was located a short time after 1840, and was the last practitioner residing at Middleford.

WOODLAND.—The hamlet of Woodland, formerly called Cannon's Ferry, is on the Nanticoke River, half a dozen miles below Seaford. Although still a place of importance in the hundred, its commercial position is not as great as sixty years ago, when it was one of the most widely-known points in the southern part of the State. The ferry across the river has been maintained more than a hundred years. In 1798 the right to operate a ferry was granted to Isaac and Betty Cannon for fourteen years, which right was renewed upon the expiration of that term, so that the name of the Cannon family was widely associated, not only with the ferry, which was on the principal highway to the lower peninsula, but also with the place where the sons of Betty Cannon—Isaac and Jacob—amassed large wealth. In 1816 these sons, as a firm, owned four thousand five hundred and seventy-three acres of land, stores, warehouses, and a large number of slaves. In later years their business became even more extensive, embracing a system of banking or money-lending, which was characterized by its exacting methods. The partners were of opposite dispositions, yet the complement of each other in a business sense, and in this small counting-house, attached to their store, many abrewed transactions were recorded. Their uncompromising ways made them many enemies, and caused the death of one of the members in a tragic manner. This was quickly followed by the natural death of the surviving brother, which also brought about the close of their extensive business. As the result of a dispute about some trivial business matters Jacob Cannon was killed by Owen O'Day on April 10, 1848, on the wharf of the ferry just as he was returning home from a visit to the Governor of the State, whom he had seen with a view of asking his protection against the assaults with which he had been threatened by those whom he had helped to distress. Young O'Day, having the sympathy of most of the community, succeeded in effecting his escape, fleeing first to Baltimore and thence to the West. The death of Isaac Cannon followed May 6, 1848, at the age of seventy-three years. Jacob was but sixty-two years old when he was killed. Betty Cannon, the mother, had died in 1828, aged eighty-six years. For many years these three persons owned the only residences on the street parallel with the river. The lower, or ferry-house, with its brick ends and wooden sides, was erected in the last century. The ferry having become the property of the county, this house passed with it, and remains the home of the ferryman, who has been William B. Ellis since 1883. He reported that ten thousand persons availed themselves of the use of the ferry in the year ending December, 1886.

The house of Jacob Cannon, a large frame, in a spacious yard, was the next up the river. After being completed and furnished it stood more than a score of years without an occupant, and was never inhabited by him for whom it was built. That house also remains, and is occupied by heirs of the Cannon family. The House of Isaac Cannon was destroyed by fire, and the store next above that has been somewhat changed. Most of the warehouses have been removed. In 1824, H. B. Fiddeman, at that time seventeen years of age, entered the store of Cannon Brothers, where he remained four years, and then became a member of the firm of Powell & Fiddeman, which traded in a small red store building, in the upper part of the hamlet, and for seventeen years transacted a heavy business in merchandising and shipping, having a wharf near their store. Here were located later Joseph Neal, Charles J. Smith and Samuel Muesick, but the building has long since been unused for business purposes. Another store near the wharf, owned by William W. Wright, was removed, and subsequently burned down. In the old Cannon stand, William Jones, of Baltimore, traded about 1845, and in later years. Charles J. Smith and Wm. T. Moore followed, and W. C. Hearn was the merchant in 1887. Another store was carried on by W. C. Carpenter, in trade since 1870, at a stand which was discontinued about 1882, when, also, was discontinued the Cannon's Ferry post-office. The place was without mail privileges until 1882, when an office was established with the name of "Woodland," which has been continued with six mails per week. W. E. Carpenter is the postmaster. The hamlet has had, since 1882, the same name as the post-office, and although its business has been somewhat revived, there was, in 1887, but little of the activity of the times when a large scope of country, north and south, was tributary to this point as its shipping and trading centre. The Nanticoke here affords a channel fourteen feet deep, and there is a good wharf, but shipments are light, the more active railroad towns having absorbed that branch of business.

In the place are a neat Methodist church, a schoolhouse and about twenty residences, occupied by a conservative class of citizens, and the moral tone of the community is spoken of as being an improvement on that which pervaded the place before the Civil War.

RELIANCE.—This is the name of a post-office established at Johnson's Cross-roads, on the Maryland line in March 1882. Charles M. Phillips was appointed post-master, and still holds that position. The hamlet which is also officially known as Reliance, is pleasantly located in a rich farming country, and consists of two stores, a church, masonic lodge, shops and a few residences. About one-half of these interests are located in the State of Maryland. This locality came into prominence sixty years ago as the headquarters of persons engaged in the unlawful slave trade, the victims of which were here rendezvoused preparatory to their shipment to southern markets.
The principal actors in this species of crime were Joe Johnson (for whom the cross-roads were named) and his mother-in-law, Patty Cannon. The latter was the moving spirit, if not the originator of the schemes which made both of them notorious, attached a stigma to this neighborhood, and caused untold suf-ferring to many captives, as well as death to some who conspired with them to carry the poor unfortunates into involuntary servitude. This wicked woman appears to have been fated to live a life of crime, which justly ended in a felon's death.

Her ancestry is somewhat obscure, as she came to Delaware an alien. It is believed that her maiden name was Lucretia P. Hanley, and that she was the daughter of an Englishman of good birth, but whose dissolute habits led him to marry a scheming woman of ill-repute. For this offense he was ostracized by his family, whose honor he still respected, and for whose sake he emigrated to Canada. A purpose to reform and lead an honorable life in the new world, was soon overcome by his unscrupulous wife, who was dissatisfied with the means he could acquire by honest toil, and she urged him to abandon his occupation and ally himself with a band of smugglers, whose acquaintance she had formed. This he did, and was under the tutelage of his wife, soon recognized as a leader among those daring spirits. His offenses culmolated in the crime of murder, whose penalty was paid by his death on the gallows.

Mrs. Hanley, being left with a family of daughters, some already following her in the paths of an impure life, appears to have had one good purpose; to marry off her daughters to sons of respectable, well-to-do families. With this view she was constantly on the look-out for such an alliance, and, when Lucretia P. was but sixteen years of age, succeeded in marrying her to Alonzo Cannon, of Sussex County, who had become a guest of her house while travelling through the St. John's country, where she then lived and kept an inn, and who had been well-nursed by the family, through a long illness. When fully able to travel he returned to Delaware with his young wife, whose career in this State now began. At this time she is spoken of as a handsome, vivacious young person, brilliant in conversation and fond of gay society.
The tame life she was obliged to lead in her husband's quiet home soon became distasteful to her, and against his wishes and to his great sorrow she formed associations with some lawless characters, who soon resorted to her home with such frequency that the life of her husband became a burden to him. In the course of a few years he died, it was supposed of grief, occaisioned by his unfortunate marriage, but, as it was later believed, of poison administered by his wife.
She now took her daughter to a home on a small tract of land, about six miles from Seaford, on the Maryland line, when she became more dissolute than ever. She plied her arts to win the allegiance of her companions in crime, and seemed to exercise complete control over them. Keeping a sort of a public-house, numerous opportunities for robbery were offered her and many a traveler was relieved of his valuables after he had left her place, pleased with the winsome hostess, and the hospitable entertainment he had received at her hands. If suspicions were aroused, which traced these crimes to her door, she cajoled or threatened, as the case demanded, until no further attention was paid to them. To belong to her gang was to secure immunity from punishment, and hence she has always found willing tools to do her bidding since they could thus, also, with more freedom follow their own crimes.

One of her followers was Ebenezer Johnson, who was apprehended and punished for a crime instigated by her. His son Joe subsequently married Patty's daughter and built a house at the cross-roads, in Maryland, and about seventy-five yards from the Delaware line.
Her own house was above this nearly a fourth of a mile, and about one hundred yards from the Maryland line, thus giving the family the advantage of practically living in both States, or in one or the other, as circumstances might demand. This condition was found very useful in her criminal career, when she and her son-in-law became the head of a band of kidnappers.

The Johnson house was a large frame building with a steep roof, which, contrary to the fashion of that day, had no dormer windows. This was the most celebrated kidnapper's tavern along the whole border and contained a prison whose miseries rivaled those of the Black Hole in Calcutta. In the centre of the attic a dungeon about twelve feet square was constructed, the walls being made of plank firmly spiked together and containing staples to which the kidnapped negroes were sometimes shackled. Often as many as ten persons, of either sex, were crowded into this small space, where they were kept days at a time without a sufficient allowance of food and barely enough air to sustain life. Then they would be taken, usually, to Galestown, Maryland, and placed in the hold of a small vessel to be borne to a plantation in the South. So artfully was this dungeon concealed from the uninstructed that its existence, although suspected, was not revealed for many years, and not until almost every species of crime had been committed by this gang. If a charge was lodged against any of the members, by the authorities of one State, they took refuge in the other, thus evading arrest.

At length the operations of the desperados became so bold that, in spite of the influence they commanded, a purpose was formed to break the band up. Joe Johnson, having already placed his family in a new home in the South, sought safety in flight, and Patsy Cannon became the hostess of the kidnapper’s house. She also remained the owner of the farmhouse in Delaware, living there part of the time, if she could better carry out the deception by so doing. It was also believed that she buried her ill-gotten wealth in the orchard of this farm. Her career ended in 1829, when she was arrested, convicted and confined in the jail at Georgetown, where she died before the date for her execution.

The kidnapper’s house was subsequently occupied by Michael Millburn, whose business was cut short by his arrest as an illegal slave dealer and conviction as a kidnapper. Later a respectable old couple by the name of Moore lived in this house, keeping a country inn, but it was long ago changed to a private residence. In 1886 this structure was entirely rebuilt by C. M. Phillips, who owned the property, and its attractive appearance gives but little evidence of the fact that it stands on the site of the infamous old prison pen. The entire community seems also to have been changed, being one of the most orderly in the Peninsula, progressive in all things tending to its enlightenment.

Prior to 1854, Batson Adams here opened the first store in a building which stood in Maryland. In 1868, M. H. C. Wilson put up a new store in which C. M. Phillips has traded since 1879. The year previous William B. Houston erected a store building on the Delaware side, where several firms traded, but which has not been occupied since 1885.

Gethsemane Lodge, No. 28, A. F. and A. M., was organized at Reliance under a charter granted October 6, 1875. A neat lodge-room has been provided in the second story of the Gethsemane Church building. In 1887 there were seventeen Master Masons and the following principal officers: Master, Isaac S. Warren; S. Warden, M. H. Hackett; J. Warden, S. M. Gerdy; Treasurer, J. N. Wright; Secretary, L. H. Le Cates; S. Deacon, J. F. Wheatley; J. Deacon, W. L. D. Tull.

OAK GROVE.—Not quite six miles northwest from Seaford is Oak Grove Station, on the Cambridge Branch Railroad, where a small store was opened in 1869, and a post-office established. Here have been, as business men, John Dulaney, Isaac Warren and L. H. Le Cates, the latter in 1887.

Horsey’s Cross-Roads (name authorized by the Legislature in February, 1878, to be changed to Atlanta) was established as a business point by Nathaniel Horsey. It is on the Northwest Fork line, on the Federalsburg Road, and was formerly a brisk country trading place. After the removal of Horsey it became less important, but a store has been kept up by different parties. The post-office was not long continued.

Cannon’s Station, on the main line of the railway, in the northern part of the hundred, has been an active shipping point since 1879. The railroad company has a wood-yard at this point. J. W. Ward is the agent and merchant and H. C. Adams the postmaster of an office established in recent years. There are, also, a few residences, including a Methodist Episcopal parsonage. The surrounding country has been much improved within the past six years, a number of fine buildings having been erected on the farms in this neighborhood.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.—The aggressive ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church early labored among the people of Seaford Hundred, whom they found willing hearers and ready to accept the faith they proclaimed. The seed sown found permanent lodging, the churches established more than a hundred years ago having been continuously maintained, and in 1887 all the societies in the hundred belonging to some branch of the Methodist Church. The eldest of these is Bethel Church, near the Maryland line, in the northwestern section. It was built in 1781, under the direction of White Brown; hence also became known as Brown’s Chapel. In that work he had the assistance of Lemuel Davis, a local preacher; and Jacob Kinder; and their descendants have ever since been among the leading members of the church. Rev. Mr. Davis’ grandson, William Davis, was also a local preacher of recognized popularity in his neighborhood, marrying more than two hundred couples during his ministry. A grandson, Rev. Samuel Davis, was in 1886 the pastor of a Methodist Church. Later the Noble family also furnished many members of the church at this place, and the official positions have been held chiefly by these families.

The church building, erected in 1781, was a large frame, whose seating capacity was increased by having three galleries, so that six hundred people could be accommodated. It was so substantially constructed that up to August, 1881, when its first centennial anniversary was celebrated, not more than seven hundred dollars had been spent in repairs. Its location is in a pleasant grove, and the grounds have been enlarged to embrace three acres, a portion of which is devoted to the burial of the dead. Many interments have here been made.

was not fully completed until 1806. On the 5th of March, the following year, it was incorporated as Bethel Church, with Trustees Tilight Davis, George Graham, Caleb Davis, Lemuel Davis, Curtis Jacobs, William Wheatley and Isaac Kinder. It has sustained many circuit relations, and, in connection with other churches, has had a long line of ministers. In 1885 it was a part of Cannon Circuit. Freeborn Garrettson, Bishop Asbury and other pioneers of Methodism preached at this place, which was one of the focal points from which missionary effort was put forth almost a century ago.

In the southern part of the hundred an Episcopal chapel was erected prior to the Revolution, which seemed to interrupt the services held there. This chapel was later wholly abandoned, and only a traditional account of it remains. From its existence in that section the brook took its name. Here, in 1804, John Cannon and Jeremiah Rust Jackson deeded one acre of land for a Methodist Church. This lot was on "the main road that leads from Seaford over Chapple Branch and to the westerly end of the old Chapple, between that and a mill pond of Jeremiah R. Jackson." The trustees named were John Handy, Captain Thomas Prettyman, Jeremiah Brown, Augustus Brown, Matthew Cannon, Jeremiah R. Jackson and William Davis. After the church at Seaford was built, under the direction of this board of trustees, the old "Beacham Meeting-house" on this lot, was not so frequently used, and afterwards passed into the hands of the Methodist Protestants, who moved the building to Seaford.

In 1843 Mrs. Buling and her son, Jacob G. Nicholson, exerted themselves to build a small house of worship for the Methodist Episcopal persuasion at Cannon's Ferry. A lot was deeded, adjoining the Cannon burial-ground, on which this building stood about forty years, when it gave place to the present church. This is a frame building, thirty-eight by forty-five feet, which cost one thousand three hundred dollars, and was dedicated in August, 1888. The committee charged with its erection was composed of W. E. Carpenter, E. J. Ellis, Josephus Collins, W. H. Allen and Thomas Houston. There are here about fifty members, and the church forms a part of the Galestown (Md.) Circuit.

At Middleford, Thomas Townsend donated a lot upon which a house of worship might be built by the community, about 1830. Meetings by Methodists and Presbyterians were then statedly held in it, but after 1846 the former denomination only occupied it with any degree of regularity, the appointment being a part of Concord Circuit. The house is in poor repair and has been but little used since the completion of Brown's Church, one and a half miles northwest from this place. This is a frame structure, thirty by forty feet, with a vestibule and recessed pulpit, and cost one thousand five hundred and fifty dollars. The ground on which it stands was donated by Mrs. Catherine Cannon. The church was erected by a committee composed of George Burton, James Wood, Samuel B. Pusey, Marcellus Hearne and Robert Brown, and was dedicated in October, 1888. Eighty members worship at this place. The church is a part of Cannon Circuit, which was formed in 1886 out of the old Concord and Bridgeville Circuits, and which had Rev. Edward Davis as the first preacher in charge. Rev. William Vaillant was appointed in 1887, the charge including the churches at Concord, Brown, Bethel and Wesley.

The latter was built in 1882, on a main road three miles northwest from Seaford. It is very much the same kind of a building as Brown's Church, and was erected under the supervision of John Kinder, W. J. Cannon, Jesse Allen, James Ward and Robert L. Brown. Previous to its dedication, in the fall of 1882, meetings were regularly held in the school-house, in this locality, which was sometimes called Little's Chapel. It was built in 1861 with a view of accommodating both schools and religious meetings. In 1887 there were seventy members at the Wesley Church. Rev. B. Wheatley was reported as a local preacher at Cannon, where also was the parsonage of the circuit, built in 1887.

Gethsemane Methodist Protestant Church is at Reliance, on Johnson's Cross-Roads. It is the lower part of a two-story building, the upper part being a Masonic lodge-room. This house was erected in 1872, by a committee which had as members William Ellis, Jacob Nicholson, John N. Wright, James Harris and Daniel Field. James Gordy and others were also active to secure a new church in place of the small, old building which had been in use since 1850, and which was removed to make place for this house. The church has had the same ministry as the appointment at Seaford, with which it has always been connected in its relation to Conference.

SEAFORD.—This flourishing town of two thousand inhabitants is beautifully located at the junction of the Herring Creek with the Nanticoke River, near the head of navigation. The latter stream is an important tributary of the Chesapeake Bay, sixty miles distant, and its waters at this point will float vessels having a draught of sixteen feet. It is also an important station on the Delaware Railroad, one hundred and ten miles from Philadelphia, and is the terminus of the Dorchester Branch, connecting with Cambridge, on the Chesapeake Bay, thirty-three miles away. The surroundings are healthy, the country fertile, and as it has been largely devoted to peach culture, Seaford has become an important shipping point. The town has churches, schools, banks, numerous stores, and all the attributes of a progressive rural community.

Seaford was laid out October 29, 1799, by John Hooper, Thomas Hooper and John Tennant, as the heirs of Henry Hooper. At that time the place was called "Hooper's Landing," and the plat shows the dwelling-house of John Hooper, near which was a spring and a wharf.

Higher up and above the spring, Market and Front

Streets made a triangular intersection, the apex being set aside for a market space.

Front Street ran due north and south, and was parallel with Herring Creek. The streets between it and the creek, and running parallel with it, were named North and South.

The transverse streets, running parallel with Nanticoke River and having a due east and west course, all sixty feet wide, received the names of Water, East and West. Most of the lots were sixty by sixty feet, and ninety-two lots were laid out.

August 2, 1818, Captain Solomon Boston platted an addition of ten lots, extending along Front and North Streets.

The “second addition” was platted by James Conwell, May 16, 1814, and consisted of twenty lots. The “third addition,” of twenty-five lots, on the river and below Market Street, at the old wharf of Henry Hooper, was platted by James Conwell, January 28, 1815.

A number of lots at Seaford were sold soon after the town was laid out and, in 1809, they were owned by Solomon Boston, Daniel Baker & William Morgan, L. & J. Cannon, James Collins, John Collins, John Cade, James Conwell, Ann Cottingham, John Green, Seth Griffith, Alex. P. Kellin, John Hooper, Thomas Hooper, William Hazzard, Bannard Liddy, Henry Little, James Polk, John Rust, Job Stockley, Solomon Tunnell, Tennant & Hazzard, Nathan Vickers.

Twenty-seven years later, in 1836, a list of property owners in Seaford embraced the names of the following:

From this time on until the railroad was projected there was but little change in the material development of the town. It remained for twenty years or more a quiet, conservative place, and its principal business outlet was the Nanticoke River, the shipments being grain and other ordinary farm products. With a new era in prospect, when the town was selected as one of the stations of the railroad, at that time building, new additions were made, Nanticoke City being platted December 13, 1856, on the lower borders of Seaford. One hundred and seventy-nine lots were thus laid out by John Dale for Rev. Thomas B. Bradford, and here was located, in 1857, the southern terminus of the Delaware Railroad. Although not included within the corporate limits of the town, it is essentially a part of Seaford, with which place its interests are inseparably connected.

The rapid growth of the town after the completion of the railroad made it desirable that it should possess a better and more independent form of government than could be had while subordinate to the hundred. Accordingly it was incorporated by an act of the Legislature, passed March 16, 1865, which named Benjamin Stockley, John E. Darbee, Isaac Willia, Henry L. Hopkins and Michael Coulbourn as the first commissioners, and directed that a re-survey and plat of the town be made. This was done in May ensuing, by James Stuart, and the following limits were placed on record June 7, 1865:

“Line to start near the centre of Jacob Williams’ mill dam; thence N. W. with said mill dam and the road until a line north 3° east will strike the eastmost corner of Benjamin Stockley’s lot, which adjoins a lot of Jacob Williams, on the east side of said Stokley’s lot, through the lands of Charles K. Cannon to the county road leading from Bridgetville to Johnson’s Cross-Roads, Md.; thence running in the centre of said county road to the Delaware R. R.; thence with the said R. R. to the Nanticoke River; thence up the said Nanticoke River to Herring Run or Clear Brook Branch; thence up the branch with the several meanderings to said Jacob Williams’ mill dam, the place of beginning.”

Amendatory acts were passed February 21, 1867, and April 4, 1869; and on the 19th of February, 1883, an act was passed re-incorporating the town, by repealing the conflicting legislation, but not changing the limits. By this act the corporate name became the Town of Seaford, and full power was vested in the commissioners to enact all the ordinances the welfare of the town might require.

Under the act of 1865 the first election held at Odd Fellows’ Hall, in April, that year, resulted in the choice of

Among the most noteworthy acts of the commissioners were the ordinances adopted April 22, 1865; beginning to pave streets with shells in 1887; the building of a town hall in 1875; the purchasing of fire apparatus, at an expense of four hundred dollars, in 1885; and the more perfect draining of the streets in 1886. In the latter year the expenses of the corporation were $1506.13, and the tax rate was fifteen cents on every hundred dollars.

BUSINESS INTERESTS.—In the early history of Seaford the Nanticoke River was the means of communicating with Norfolk and Baltimore, and in 1825 a regular line of boats was maintained to Norfolk. This line extended to Philadelphia by means of stages to Dona Landing, in Kent County, and boats on the Delaware. About this period from eight to ten stages per day arrived and departed from Seaford. Later a line was established to Baltimore, and, after 1850, among the boats plying between Seaford and that port were the "Hugh Jenkins," "Wilson Small," "Osias" and the "Kent," the latter before 1860. The railroad destroyed this traffic, and the boats were taken off the river soon after it was completed; but, in later years, small steamers were again run between these two points, among them being the "Artisan" and the "Nanticoke," the latter making three trips per week in the season of 1887. A number of sloops and small schooners make irregular trips to meet the demands of the business offered them.

The river at Seaford was first crossed by means of a ferry, which was long operated by the Martin family. In 1832 the Legislature authorized the formation of the Seaford Bridge Company, with the following as managers: Samuel Law, Turpin Wright, Jacob Wright, Henry Cannon, Henry Little, John Gibbons and Curtis J. Ross. The draw-bridge which this company built was sold, in 1843, to Capt. Hugh Martin, but under the act of March 17, 1865, it became public property, after having been rebuilt by Dr. Hugh Martin. In 1884 the wooden structure gave place to a fine iron bridge, erected by the Cleveland Bridge Company. It is on the site of the old ferry, at the foot of Market Street, and more than half a mile above the railroad bridge, which is also provided with a draw span to permit the passage of vessels. The main line of the railroad was completed to Seaford in 1857, and this bridge was built several years later. The Dorchester Railroad was completed in the fall of 1868. Major W. Allen was the first station agent, and in 1887 Henry E. Cannon served in that capacity.

For many years vessel-building was a profitable occupation at Seaford, and an extensive yard was carried on by the Wrights from 1850 until 1888. Several sea-going vessels were also built at this place, but usually the tonnage of their craft did not exceed five hundred tons to each, and the boats were intended for use on the inland waters. Other ship-builders were Captain Hugh Martin, Captains Isaac Bradley and Captain Solomon Boston. William Lamb had a yard at the foot of Market St. several years, in which employment was given to more than twenty ship-carpenters; and Michael Coulbourn also had several vessels built and was one of the most extensive ship-owners of the place. In 1884 William R. Adams opened a small yard and built a marine railway to accommodate his business. It has a good location, at the foot of Cannon Street. There are several good wharves at Seaford, owned by private parties, and the one for public use has been controlled by the Town Council since 1865.

On the mill site on Herring Creek, at Seaford, Solomon Boston put up saw and grist-mills, which he operated until his death, when they passed into the hands of the Williams family. In 1862 the saw-mill was burned, but was rebuilt by Jacob Williams. In 1882 the grist-mill was supplied with roller machinery, but was destroyed by fire soon after. In 1883 steam-power was added by Lott & Seibert, who owned the property at that time. The present mill was built in 1884, by Oliver Obier, who has since operated the mills.

In 1888 a planing-mill, sash and door factory was established in the Nanticoke part of the town by Manners, Fisher & Co., who carried on a heavy business until 1877, when it was discontinued, and the machinery was removed from town. They were also extensive builders, and employed from fifty to sixty hands.

The basket factory and planing-mill of W. H. Coulbourn, above Market Street, near the river, was established in the spring of 1887. It has capacity for the employment of fifty hands, the motor being steam from a forty horse-power engine.

In 1887 E. R. Sharp was the proprietor of marble works of established reputation; William J. Stewart was an iron founder; and J. H. Cashion and George W. Emery operated a brick manufactory established in 1884. An earlier brick-yard, on an extensive scale, was discontinued in 1890, after having operated a number of years by Knowles & Rawlins.

The Seaford Shell Lime Company was incorporated March 26, 1885, with corporators William H. Stevens, C. H. Rawlins, E. J. Rawlins and S. E. Rawlins. The company succeeded M. Coulbourn & Co., and extended the business which that firm had established. The works are near the railroad depot, and about six hundred bushels are burned daily.
The manufacture of phosphates and the packing of oysters and fruit constituted the principal industries in 1887, giving employment to a large number of persons and the town a reputation which extended far beyond the limits of the State. The Seaford Phosphate Works were established in 1873 by Ball & Ross, who were succeeded in 1875 by W. M., W. H. and E. C. Ross, under the firm-name of W. M. Ross & Co. The works were enlarged to embrace buildings sixty by one hundred feet, and a storage room, having ten thousand eight hundred square feet, was provided. The works had two sets of acid chambers, which were in a building, forty-seven by one hundred and thirteen feet, and the motive-power was furnished by a sixty-five horse-power engine. The works are well located, having an exclusive wharf and railroad track, giving excellent shipping privileges. Since the fall of 1887 the firm has had the use of a schooner of six hundred tons burden and a steam tug employed in its transportation business, which has greatly increased. In 1873 the product was about thirty tons; in 1879 about four thousand tons; and in 1887 six thousand tons of high grade acid phosphates. Since February, 1887, W. M. Ross has been the sole proprietor, continuing business under the old firm-name.

A. S. Woolley's phosphate factory was established in 1884. It is located on the Nanticoke River, at the foot of Pine Street, and has a capacity of eight hundred tons per year. The dry mixing process is used, and a fine quality of super-phosphate produced.

The business of packing oysters at Seaford was begun soon after the completion of the railroad, which thus afforded the means of rapid shipment to Northern markets. In 1862, among the firms here located, were Platt & Mallory, Hemingway & Chase and some others, who removed their establishments on account of the State tax imposed by the act of March 16, 1865. Most of the interests were transferred to Baltimore, notwithstanding that here are all the essentials for carrying on a successful packery,—an abundance of pure water, communication by boat and rail, nearness to the oyster-beds and the markets. After this illiberal policy of the State had been modified, other oyster-packers located at Seaford, and among the firms formerly engaged in that business were Horsey & Stockley, McNeilley & Co., J. E. Parks & Co., William Williams & Co., William Dashiell and Conaway & Co. A cannery was also carried on, a few years, by I. H. D. Knowles.

In 1887 the packing of oysters exceeded every other industry at Seaford, constituting an active, growing business, which benefited at least half the inhabitants of the town. From forty to sixty boats, having an average carrying capacity of five hundred bushels each, were employed to make weekly trips between Seaford and the oyster-beds along the Chesapeake. The packing-houses were well located on wharves below and near the railroad depot, and the products were widely and most favorably known as being among the largest and best bulk-oysters in the markets. The principal packers were those: W. W. Stevens & Co., established in 1840, and giving occupation to about eighty hands, who packed sixty thousand gallons per year. Donaho & Co. succeeded to a business established in 1871 by C. C. Donaho, who carried it on until his death, in 1887, since which time it has been in the hands of his sons; sixty hands are here employed, and about fifty thousand gallons of oysters are shipped annually.

Emery & Co., carry on a packing-house which was established in 1870, and which has been under the control of the present firm the past fifteen years, George W. Emery being the senior partner, and C. H. Rawlins the associate; about forty thousand gallons are prepared for the markets each year. J. B. Morrow and J. E. Dutton, as Morrow & Dutton, established in 1873, and carrying on a business established in 1875, by Morrow & Brown; from fifty to seventy-five hands are here employed, and fifty thousand gallons per year have been shipped. The firm of Grenadaum Brothers, established a packing-house in 1882, in which there is working-room for forty-five hands, and in which about thirty thousand gallons per year are put up. This firm also carries on the fruit canning, established in 1881, by Miller Bros. & Co., of Baltimore, at the foot of Market Street.

In 1886 the present firm purchased that interest and transferred it to a new site near their oyster-packing house in the Nanticoke part of Seaford. The products of the fruit cannery are berries, tomatoes and peas, and the standard "Nanticoke brand" of the firm has a fine reputation.

Henry Adams had one of the first large stores in the town, trading at the foot of Market Street near the old wharf, and continued in business many years. Other merchants, in a period reaching up to 1830, were William W. Green, George Hazzard, Levin Cannon and Isaac Bradley. At this time Seaford had a population of four hundred and forty souls. In the next two decades, among the merchants, were Robert Hopkins, Henry Little, Solomon and Asbury Prettyman, Alfred Cottingham, Major W. Allen, John Rust, William B. Horsey, Benjamin Stockley and John Martin. Some of these own their own boats and were largely engaged in the shipping business. Turpin, Jacob and Charles Wright shipped all kinds of farm produce from their warehouse on Water Street. Among the principal merchants of a still later period, and some of them continuing to the present, were John E. Darbee, Henry Lee Phillips, Thomas C. Cottingham, George H. Baker, J. Webster Cox and William C. Tull. In the drug trade stores were kept by William I. Shipley, who sold to W. T. Haines, and Walter E. Martin, succeeded by Frank Shipley. In 1887 there were more than two dozen stores, in all branches of trade, and the aggregate business was increasing yearly.

The Seaford post-office was established in 1826, and the postmasters have been Robert Hopkins, Jeremiah McNeilley, James Scott, James E. Darbee, William...
F. Robinson, John W. Phillips, J. P. Obier, John K. Brown, Lewis E. Wallace, Charles Horsey and Henry Lee Phillips. Among the physicians who practiced at Seaford there have been Jonathan Cottingham, who located here in 1802 and remained until his death, several years later; John Gibbons, who came before 1815 and died in 1838; William Morgan, who was also a local preacher, from about 1820 until his death, in 1857; John Tennant and Washington Goldboro, both of whom removed after a few years' practice; Joseph Flint and Henry Taylor, who remained but a short time; Joseph Priestly Hall Shipley from 1846 for twenty-five years; Daniel Fisher from 1854 for twenty-seven years; Hugh Martin, born in Seaford in 1830 and a practitioner here since 1853; William Shipley, born at Seaford in 1848 and in practice since 1873; and Dr. J. N. Johns, born in Kent County in 1843 and professionally engaged at Seaford since 1875, having first practiced five years at Bridgeville.

Colonel Edward Livingston Martin is an attorney at Seaford, although not in active practice. He is an ex-member of Congress from Delaware and one of the most prominent peach-growers of the region. He was the youngest son in the family of ten children, of whom Captain Hugh and Sophia (Willis) Martin were the parents, and was born at Seaford, Sussex County, March 29, 1837. His first education, beyond that obtained in the schools of the neighborhood, was received at the Newark Academy, where he spent the year 1850. He then attended Delaware College and the academy of Anthony Bolmar in West Chester, Pa., after which, with thorough preparation, he entered the University of Virginia, from the Law Department of which he graduated in 1859. He continued his legal studies with Hon. Daniel M. Bates, in Wilmington.

In 1863 he was elected clerk of the State Senate, and retained that position during the term of two years. In 1866 he returned to the University of Virginia, and, after refreshing himself in the law, was admitted to practice in Dover in the fall of the same year. He opened an office in the State capital, but was soon summoned home by the illness of his father, who died in June, 1867, cared for and comforted to the last by our subject and his brother, Luther Martin. Upon these two members of the family devolved the care of their widowed mother and the management of the estate, of which they were made executors. Their mothers survived only until November, 1869.

The estate, known as "Woodburn," upon which Mr. Martin now resides, fell to him and his brother, and the care of the property made it necessary for him to relinquish all professional aspirations, and he has ever since devoted himself to agriculture and horticulture.

The home estate, which consists of several hundred acres, is devoted chiefly to peach-growing, and, in addition to this, Mr. Martin owns several other farms. He has been a very successful peach-grower, and few, if any, in the region have carried on the industry more extensively or successfully. He has made a study of his calling theoretically and practically, and enjoys the confidence of all interested in this branch of horticulture, as was evinced by his being called upon in the summer of 1887 to preside over the convention of Delaware, Maryland and New Jersey peach-growers, the largest assemblage of the kind ever held in the State or Peninsula. He is also a member of the State Board of Agriculture, and very influential in its councils.

Mr. Martin has been a life-long Democrat, and one of the leaders of his party in the State. He was a member of the National Democratic Convention which assembled in Chicago in 1864, of the Baltimore Convention of 1872, the 3d. Louis Convention of 1876, the Cincinnati Convention of 1880 and the Chicago Convention of 1884. The important matter of the State boundary between Delaware and New Jersey, involving valuable fishing rights, received his attention in 1873, 1874 and 1875, he being appointed by the Legislature, in the year first mentioned, as one of the commissioners for Delaware, the others being Chief Justice Comegys and Judge William G. Whitley and the New Jersey board consisting of Cortlandt Parker, Abraham Browning and Albert Slade. Another important appointment he received from the Legislature was that of commissioner from Sussex County, to encourage the introduction of the sugar beet industry.

In 1875 in recognition of his fitness for the position and his valuable political services, he was nominated by the Democratic party for Congress, and duly elected by a heavy majority. In the Forty-sixth Congress he served on the Committee of Accounts, the Committee on the District of Columbia, and on the special committee appointed to provide for the centennial celebration of the surrender of Yorktown. His course in Congressional affairs was creditable to himself and highly satisfactory to his constituents, and so it came about very naturally that he was renominated by his party, and sat in the Forty-seventh Congress, being elected in 1880, defeating Superior Court Judge John Houston. He has since received the complimentary vote of his party in the Legislature for the United States Senate. He still maintains an unabated interest and activity in politics, although his business and social duties are alone sufficient to make him an exceedingly busy man, and would overtax the energies of a less healthful and vigorous constitution. His religious affiliation is with the Protestant Episcopal Church; he has been a member of the vestry of St. Luke's Church, Seaford, for more than twenty years, and many times a delegate to the Diocesan Convention.

Mr. Martin was married, March 17, 1869, to Miss Clara, daughter of William W. Dulany, of Sussex County. Five children were the offspring of this union, viz.: Woodburn, William Dulany, Rosalie, Mabel Bayard and Edward Livingston, Jr.
E. L. Martin
As notaries and justices of the peace at Seaford, there have been Dr. William Morgan, William Hazard, Jesse W. Robinson, Alfred Cottingham and Major W. Allen. The latter and J. W. Robinson served in 1887. N. H. Brown had an insurance agency, and John Dunning was a real-estate broker.

Near the old wharf an inn was opened soon after the town was laid out. Seth Wingate, Aaron Swiggert and Jerry Collins were among the keepers of this house, which for more than forty years past has been a residence. Nancy Martin also kept a public-house in that part of the town about 1815. Since about 1842 the site of the present Coulbourn House has been used for tavern purposes. George Frame was one of the first owners. Later this place became known as the Union Hotel, and had many successive landlords. In 1879 it was rebuilt by Michael Coulburn, who enlarged it in 1888. It is one of the most spacious buildings of the kind in the lower part of the State, and under the management of H. C. Pennington, landlord since 1879, has also become one of the most popular.

The Nanticoke House, at the railroad depot, was built in 1869 by W. J. Marschbank, who was also the keeper for a few years, when he was accidentally killed on the railroad. It is a roomy three-story brick building, the lower part of which is now used as a station for the railroads, the upper part remaining a public-house.

Morrow’s Public Hall, built on High Street, by Joseph Messick, was one of the first halls of the kind in the town. Bell’s Hall, built in 1873, is a more spacious room, and Coulbourn Hall, erected by Michael Coulbourn, oposite his hotel, on the corner of Market and High Streets, has a seating capacity for eight hundred persons. It has been a popular place for amusements since its opening, in 1889.

The first monetary institution at Seaford was a private bank, which did business a short time at the beginning of the Civil War. On March 6, 1861, an act was passed by the Legislature incorporating the Seaford Bank; but no organization under its provisions was effected, and the act was repealed February 6, 1862.

The First National Bank of Seaford was organized February 18, 1865, with a capital stock of $55,000. This was reduced to $50,000 in 1873, and has since so remained. Gov. William Cannon was the first president, and after his death, which occurred soon after the bank was opened, was succeeded by Lewis M. Wright. The latter gave place, in 1880, to the present president, Daniel Hearn, of Laurel.

Isaac M. Fisher was the first cashier, who served until 1873, when M. J. Morgan was elected and was cashier until January, 1887, when H. W. Baker succeeded him. At the same time George H. Shipley was the teller.

The bank was opened for business on the corner of Pine and King Streets; but, in 1886, it was removed to a building erected for it on Pine Street, where it has since had commodious and well-arranged offices, and is doing a safe and profitable business.

The Sussex National Bank of Seaford, with a capital stock of fifty thousand dollars, was organized April 6, 1887. Its first board of directors was composed of Thomas McComb, Jerry Long, J. B. Morrow, Dr. Hugh Martin, W. H. Stevenson, James J. Ross, of Seaford; Harrington Messick and W. A. Corbin, of Bridgeville; Dr. W. E. Wolfs, of Laurel; John H. Stack, of Federalsburg, Maryland; and Gov. E. E. Jackson, of Salisbury, Maryland. The latter was elected president; Dr. H. Martin, vice-president; M. J. Morgan, cashier; and H. M. Wright, teller. The first business was done in the town hall, May 18, 1887, but on the 23d of September, the same year, the new banking-house on the corner of High and Conwell Streets, was occupied. It is a very neat and substantial structure, and has good safety-vaults, and well-furnished offices.

The Nanticoke Loan Association, of Seaford, was organized under the act of March 17, 1865, and the amended act of February 18, 1873, with Dr. H. Martin, as president; and J. Nicholson, as secretary. These officers served through the life of the association, whose stock matured in 1884. Michael Coulbourn and Jerry Long served as treasurers. This society encouraged a number of persons to build their own homes in Seaford, and materially aided in the development of the town.

Secret Societies.—Hiram Lodge, No. 21, A. F. & A. M., was instituted at Seaford, under a charter granted June 27, 1866. Since 1878 its meetings have been held in its own hall, on High Street, which was erected at a cost of one thousand dollars, and which has been well furnished. In 1887 the lodge had a membership of fifty-three Master Masons, and was reported in a flourishing condition.

Seaford Lodge, No. 7, A. O. U. W., was formed March 6, 1882, with seventeen charter members, assembled in Odd Fellows’ Hall. J. W. Phillips was elected master-workman; T. E. Cottingham, foreman; and H. C. Pennington, overseas. In the fall of 1887 the lodge had thirty members, who sustained an active relation, Dr. H. F. Porter being the master-workman.

Tuscarora Tribe, No. 22, I. O. R. M., was instituted January 18, 1885, with seventeen members. In December, 1887, eighty-two persons were enrolled and the aggregate number which had joined was ninety-two. The tribe assembled statutorily in Odd Fellows’ Hall, and its affairs were in a very healthy condition. Its property was in charge of Trustees H. C. Pennington, J. A. Barnes and Joseph F. Willey.

Hebron Lodge, No. 14, I. O. O. F., was instituted September 28, 1847, and became an incorporated body January 12, 1849. It has since its organization been very prosperous, and had in the fall of 1887 assets amounting to more than seven thousand dollars, exclusive of the cemetery lot. Since its organization the lodge has paid in sick benefits nearly five thousand dollars. There were in December, 1887, sixty members and the following trustees: H. W. Baker, J. H. Cottingham and N. H. Brown. The first meetings were held in a hall on Second Street, which was used until 1871, after which a lodge-room in Darbee's building was occupied until December, 1887, when the lodge took up its home in its own hall, on High Street. This was erected in the summer and fall of 1887, by a committee composed of L. E. Wallace, J. H. Cottingham, N. H. Brown, L. W. Hurley, W. H. Coulbourn, T. M. Elliott and W. W. Byrd, at a cost of nearly three thousand dollars.

The Odd Fellows' Cemetery was incorporated in 1886, and placed in the hands of Committeemen H. W. Baker, John H. Cottingham, N. H. Brown, J. E. Nicholson and L. E. Wallace. The grounds are well located and consist of seven acres, in the northeastern part of the town. A portion has been improved and five hundred and sixty-five burial-plots laid out. It was opened for the purpose of interment in April, 1886, and since that time a number of persons have selected this peaceful spot as a quiet resting-place for their dead kindred.

Schools of the Town.—The Seaford Academy was incorporated January 29, 1819, with Trustees John Rust, John Tennant, Nathaniel Rose, Henry Little and Nathan Vickers. This body united with the Masons of Hope Lodge (which at that time held its meetings at this place, but which was subsequently moved to Laurel) to erect a school building and hall opposite the present St. Luke's Church. Here an academy was maintained many years, the teachers being men of ability, who attracted students from abroad in addition to the liberal home patronage. Rev. Leonidas Polk, later a bishop of the Episcopal Church and major-general of the Confederate States army, was for a time a student at this school. Before the Civil War the academy was closed, but good select schools were afterwards held in the town, and, in 1865, an effort was made to place one, called the Seaford Seminary, upon a permanent basis. An act of incorporation was secured, but no organization was effected. By legislative authority the old academy building was sold and the proceeds passed to the general school fund.

An act of the Legislature passed March 17, 1875, consolidated Districts Nos. 70, 70i, 102 and 102i, and placed them under the control of the "School Board of Seaford."

This board organized by electing Dr. Hugh Martin, president; J. E. Nicholson, clerk; H. W. Baker, treasurer; H. L. Hopkins, assessor; T. R. Harper, collector. M. Coulbourn and N. H. Brown were the remaining members. Soon after steps were taken to erect a new school edifice, on a lot purchased on Cannon Street, and, in August, 1875, the contract for building was awarded to Manners, Fisher & Co. It is a large frame structure, and in it four schoolrooms were fitted up, which were first occupied in the fall of 1875. At the same time the schools were graded into four departments and placed in charge of Principal T. N. Williams. His successors in that position have been McKendree Downham, John T. Stephens, John A. Collins and, since 1886, Prof. Thomas H. Breerwood. The schools are ably conducted and are maintained at a yearly expense of about one thousand eight hundred dollars. In 1887 the president of the board was Dr. Hugh Martin, and J. T. Sharp was the secretary.

In the town are also several schools for colored children, which have proven very beneficial to those attending them.

Churches.—St. John's Methodist Episcopal Church was founded by the trustees of the Beacham meeting-house in Seaford Hundred, who, on April 27, 1818, secured title for a lot in Seaford, on which was soon after built a small, plain, frame meeting-house for the use of the Methodist Church. In this there worshipped statedly, about 1820, Rhoads Hazzard, Levins Cannon, Hugh Brown, Alfred Cottingham, Robert Hopkins, Henry Little, Aaron Swiggett and members of their families. The building was repaired and was in use until 1860, when it was removed to make place for the present edifice, and was converted into a church for colored people.

St. John's Church is a two-story frame structure, which was completed under the direction of J. E. Darbee, Rhoads Hazzard and William B. Horsey, as a building committee.

It was thoroughly renovated in 1886, becoming more attractive and comfortable. The cost of the church was four thousand dollars, and its trustees in 1887 were H. E. Cannon, H. Hopkins, W. B. Morrow, Jesse Sharp, Jacob Cramer and Isane N. Kinder.

Seaford has sustained the relation of a station since 1884, and since 1876 the following have been the ministers appointed by Conference to preach on this charge:

The church has two hundred members and maintains a Sabbath-school of one hundred and seventy-five members, which has H. E. Cannon as its superintendent.

Not long after the Methodist Protestants began preaching in this part of the country, about 1831, a small frame church, standing on Chapel Branch, became the property of Dr. William Morgan, a prominent member of this denomination, who removed it to Seaford. It was placed on a fine site, on a lot adjoining the old Hooper burial-ground, where it stood until the present edifice took its place. On the 15th of February, 1847, the church was incorporated with a board of trustees composed of Dr. William Morgan, P. M. Rust, Samuel Lacy, Thomas J. Phillips, Henry Wallace, Tiras S. Phillips and Isaiah Neal, and their successors have since controlled it. In 1862 a new church—a frame building, thirty-two by forty-eight feet—was erected, which was placed in good repair in 1887. Its value is given at four thousand dollars.

The Seafood and the Gethsemane Methodist Protestant Church at Reliance have for many years constituted an appointment, and the ministers preaching here have been the following:

The earliest traces of the present Protestant Episcopal worship in Seafood are found in St. Mary's Chapel, which, in the colonial days, was established on the property now owned by J. H. Boyce, on Chapel Branch, a few miles from the town. It was a small building, erected for those adhering to the Established Church of England, and appears to have been abandoned during the Revolution. Within the recollection of the oldest inhabitants of this part of the county no traces of it were visible excepting a pile of brick. After that time there was here no consecrated place for Episcopal worship, until St. Luke's Church was established.

In 1834, Rev. Joseph Glover began a promising ministry at Seafood, laboring as a missionary, but before he could form a church he was called to a higher life. He died August 19, 1834. The following year Rev. Cory Chambers began to preach and the parish was organized. The first vestry had as members Charles Wright, Jacob Wright, Elijah Cannon, Thos. Jacobs, Edward Ross and Dr. John Gibbons. Its incorporation by the Legislature took place February 20, 1837, and measures were soon after set on foot to build a church at Seafood.

In 1838 work on a brick edifice was begun, but it was not completed for consecration until May 28, 1843. On the same day Rev. John Long was called by the vestry to take charge of the parish as a deacon, and sustained that relation until March 22, 1846.

The church building has been thoroughly remodeled, and was enlarged by the addition of a vestry-room. In 1873 the parish secured a rectory, and in 1887 the entire property was valued at $4000. At that time the members of the vestry were Dr. Hugh Martin, senior warden; James J. Ross, junior warden; Wm. H. Stevens, Jerry Long, H. T. Porter, William Donaho, Wm. H. Coulbourn and John P. Dulaney. The membership of the parish was small, there being only about twenty communicants. A Sabbath-school was conducted under the superintendency of Dr. H. F. Porter.

After the ministry of the Rev. John Long the parish was under the spiritual instruction of the following:

In the fall of 1887 the parish was without a rector, having the ministry of visiting clergymen.

The colored people of Seafood own and maintain two good churches—the "Macedonia," built in 1879 and repaired more recently; and the "John Wesley," built in 1883. The latter is an offshoot of the former, both belonging to branches of the Methodist Church. A laudable spirit of emulation has incited the members of these churches to keep their temporalities in very good condition, and both are in a prosperous state.

Seafood Branch, Woman's Christian Temperance Union, had, in the fall of 1887, seventeen members. The annual meeting of the State Association was held at this place in October, 1887, and was an occasion of much interest and large attendance from all parts of the State.

A Young Ladies' Christian Temperance Union, organized in 1887, had, at this time, twenty-six members; and a vigorous Band of Hope, organized in the summer of 1887, by Mrs. Hester M. Rawlinson, had, in November, 1887, one hundred and sixty members.

CHAPTER LXXV.

LITTLE CREEK HUNDRED.

This hundred, situated in the southeastern part of the State, is bounded on the east by Gumboor's Hundred and West by the State of Maryland. Before the establishment of the State lines all of the territory embraced in this hundred formed a part of Somerset County, Md. The excellent facilities for manufacturing afforded by the streams in this vicinity were an incentive to the early erection of numerous mills, some of which are still in operation. The surface is level and unbroken by any elevations of any considerable height. The soil is light and easily tilled, and is especially adapted to the growing of small fruits. It is also favorable to the cultivation of the cereals. Shipping facilities by boat are afforded by Broad Creek on the north. The Delaware Division of the P. W. and B. Railroad, which runs north and south through the centre of the hundred, offers another outlet to market. The numerous roads afford safe and convenient routes for traveling through the various portions of the hundred.

1 Died November 9, 1857, near Laurel, and is buried at St. Luke's.

The supposition that the land in Little Creek Hundred belonged to Maryland led to its settlement under warrants and patents granted by the proprietaries of that State.

One of the earliest to take up land in this vicinity was Caldwell, who, on April 5, 1680, received a grant for a tract of five hundred acres called "The Desart," situated on Tussey Branch. A portion of it in 1780, was owned by Wm. Polk. John Caldwell was a son of Robert Caldwell, and obtained warrants for several large tracts in this and adjoining hundreds, from Charles Calvert, Proprietor of Maryland and Avalon and Lord Baron of Baltimore. One of these tracts called "Vinson's Choice," containing one hundred and twenty-five acres, situate on the west side of Tussey Branch, was patented to James Vinson on June 15, 1737. On May 4th of that year, he received a grant of twelve hundred acres on Tussey Branch. Of this he assigned five hundred acres to George Oliphant, to whom they were patented on September 10th of the same year, under the name of "George's Chance." John Caldwell also assigned to John Moore one hundred acres on Little Creek, for which he had received a warrant on February 23, 1728. This tract was patented to Moore on June 10, 1734, under the name "Pick and Cull." It was situate on the north side of an eastern branch of Little Creek. In 1776 it was resurveyed for William Polk, and three hundred and seventy acres of vacant land added. The name "Nonsense" was assigned to the entire tract. It is now owned by Thomas Bacon, John Game and W. W. Dashiel. On April 1, 1730, Caldwell was granted another thousand acres of which he assigned one hundred acres to John Cannon, to whom it was patented June 4, 1734, as "Cannon's Discovery."

On April 15, 1746, there was granted to Day Scott five hundred and fifty acres of land on the west side of Little Creek. Of this he assigned fifty acres to John Calloway, to whom it was patented as "Calloway's Venture."

"Stephen's Addition," a tract containing two hundred and ninety-nine acres, was granted to Joseph Forman March 7, 1776. It also included an improvement purchased of Joseph Day, "on which there is a small log-house with a brick chimney." The tract adjoined "Ricket's Delight," and was to the southward of Tussey Branch bridge, and to the eastward of a road leading from Broad Creek to Gillis Ferry on Wicomico River. It is now owned by Martin Ellis, and the heirs of Isaac Giles.

Isaac Giles, the son of William and Ganard (Williams) Giles, was born the 29th day of February, 1804. Blackwater in Wicomico County, at that time included in Somerset County, Maryland, near the dividing line of the two States. He was baptized in Spring Hill Church, a venerable structure built by the English during the reign of Queen Anne. His parentage was English. His father died leaving him at an early age to the guardianship of his mother. He was unable to attend school, not receiving in his entire life over fifteen days schooling. At the age of fifteen he removed to Millsboro, Delaware. Here he apprenticed himself to a blacksmith, and followed this trade until his twenty-fourth year. He then engaged in merchandizing at Bull's Mill in Broad Creek Hundred, six miles from Laurel, for two years. He removed to Hitch's Mill at the end of this time and entered into partnership with the late William Hitch, and continued here for six years. At the age of thirty-two, August 20, 1836, he was married to Miss Sarah Stone Hosea, of Philadelphia, but a native of Laurel, the daughter of Rhoda and Matthew Hosea. Rhoda Hosea was the daughter of Shadrick Short. Matthew Hosea was the son of Arthur Hosea, who was born in England. During his entire life, he was sober, honest and upright in his dealings with men, creating for himself a name which followed him through life; ever a friend to the friendless, and a counsellor for all in need of advice. After one year of married life, the partnership with Hitch was dissolved, Mr. Giles purchasing a farm of Isaac and Perry Moore, five miles below Laurel, and which ever afterwards was known as Maple Grove and Giles' Store. He removed to this farm and continued in the mercantile business, besides building vessels and cultivating land, until he lost his sight at the advanced age of seventy years. Mr. Giles was a busy, stirring man, and the fruits of his labors were well defined in the rapid growth and improvement of his lands in which he took great pride. In the early days of his married life he and his wife labored unceasingly with a great desire to accumulate something for their children. There were eleven born, but only seven, five girls and two boys arrived at age of maturity, all of whom are married except the youngest. Thomas B., the oldest son, was for four years State Treasurer, and now lives on a large farm near Sea- ford, Delaware, engaged extensively in fruit-growing. The two daughters live in Laurel, one near that place, one in Alabama and another in Baltimore. Isaac, the youngest son, lives near Seaford, and is engaged in milling and agriculture. The subject of this sketch, was an active politician, serving unswervingly the Democratic party, always in the battle's front in the fiercest of the fray, giving liberally, both mentally and financially, that his party might win the laurels. He labored unceasingly, and even when his great affliction was on him and the sight of the world denoted him, he was carried to Laurel on election day, and cast his vote to help make his party victorious. He was Levy Court commissioner of Isaac Giles, the son of William and Granard victorious. He was Levy Court Commissioner.
Sussex County, and was appointed prothonotary by Governor Ross, filling the office with great ability.

He and Governor Ross were always on the most intimate terms with each other, and the families spent much time together.

Mr. Giles was a slaveholder up to the emancipation proclamation of President Lincoln, but relinquished this part of the estate without a murmur. He was in sympathy with the South, and made many a Southern soldier's heart glad by his liberal donations to them in their gloomy prison cells. He was ever ready to lend a helping hand to the needy, and could truly be called the widow's friend. The old store that had so long been the business place was burned, the work of an incendiary, and he built a more commodious one in the yard, which was afterwards occupied by his youngest son, from the time of his father's blindness, until the latter's death. The younger man being in many respects similar to his father, Mr. Giles, lost his eyesight in 1875, and he was forced in a great measure to give up his business. He bore his great affliction without a murmur, submitting with meek resignation to his Master's divine will. He was quite feeble during the last years of his life, rarely leaving the old homestead which had become dear to him by years of association.

He died March 17, 1888, and was buried in the Episcopal Church-yard in Laurel, Rev. Mr. Fitzpatrick performing the last burial rites. A fitting monument marks the spot where he is buried.

No words can express an appropriate eulogy upon the life, character and work of so estimable a man. He was missed everywhere, but his memory is engraven upon the mind of his friends.

Another tract of land in Little Creek Hundred known as "Liberty Plain," and containing two hundred and ninety-three acres, was granted to Forman on the same date. It was situated on the west side of Tussey Branch, and included a saw-mill and other improvements. The mill was on the site of a mill last operated about twenty years ago by James Ellis, and stood on land now owned by Mrs. Zedekiah Goode.

On May 25, 1776, Charles Morris assigned to Forman, "Gorden's Choice," a tract of three hundred acres, on the east side of Little Creek, on Holly Branch. Two days later it was surveyed for him. It is now in the possession of A. J. Horsey.

"Horsey's Inclosure." One hundred and fifty-five acres were granted to Isaac and William Horsey on March 8, 1776. It was on the south side of Broad Creek, and northeast of a tract called "Lodgmate Hall," also the property of the Horseys.

On the same date there was patented to Isaac Cooper a tract of four hundred and ninety-nine acres, known as "Nutter's Anglim." The former name of this tract was "Intention," under which name it was originally granted to John Kilpatrick, April 18, 1754. It was on the south side of Broad Creek, near a tract called "Providenee," surveyed for Joseph Marshall.

Also on March 8, 1776, "Puzzlewit," a property of four hundred and fifty-four acres, was granted to Joshua Moore, to whom it previously belonged, under the name of "Advantage." It was on the east side of Tussey Branch, near the land of Jacob Vinson.

"Lost Conclusion," a tract of three hundred and ten acres, formerly known as "Dublin," was granted to John Polk, Sr., on March 14, 1776. Another tract, called "Bee Island," containing seventy-five acres, was granted to him on the same date.

On November 4, 1795, Dr. John Polk owned one hundred and sixteen acres of land on the east side of the county road, leading from Broad Creek to Salisbury. It was known as "Polk's part of King's Venture," being a part of a re-survey granted to Robert King in 1771.

John Freney received a grant of fifty-eight acres, known as "White Oak Swamp," on April 18, 1776. It lay "between where said Freney now lives and John Gordy's land," near the western line of Little Creek Hundred.

"Coxe's Discovery," a large tract now owned by W. W. Dashiell, J. Turpin Moore, Nathaniel Horsey and Thomas Bacon, was taken up at a very early date. The representatives of the early settlers are found in the assessment list of the taxables of this hundred for the year 1780, which is annexed. On it will be found the names of many whose descendants to-day constitute the principal part of the inhabitants of the hundred.

HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

Industries.—On the assessment list of the taxables of Little Creek Hundred for the year 1809 are found the following mill-owners: Henry Bacon, grist and saw-mill and five hundred and sixty acres of land; Lear Bivins, grist-mill; John Bennett, grist and saw-mill and eight hundred acres of land; Samuel Elliott, one-half of a grist and saw-mill and two hundred and one acre; Samuel Hearne, two-thirds of a grist-mill and seven hundred and thirteen acres; Charles Marine, one-half of a saw and grist-mill and three hundred acres; William Polk, one-half of a saw and grist-mill and eight hundred acres; Ebenezer Vinson, saw and grist-mill; Charles Walton, one-half of a grist and saw-mill and three hundred and twenty-six acres; Thomas Ward, one-third of a grist and saw-mill and three hundred and twenty-five acres; and John Ward, one-third of a grist and saw-mill and two hundred and ninety acres. In addition to these, the assessment list of 1816 contained the following names: Stephen Bennett, saw-mill and one hundred and ninety acres of land; George Bennett, saw-mill and two hundred and fifty acres; Levin Collins, saw and grist-mill and nine hundred acres; George and Joseph Hearne, saw-mill and five hundred and twenty-two acres; and Levin Thomson, grist and saw-mill and four hundred and twenty-eight acres of land. On the main stream of Broad Creek were the mills of John Mitchell, Josiah Polk, William Hitch and Ebenezer Vinson, and the ship-yard of Barkley Townsend.

Some time previous to 1800, Hon. John Mitchell built a dam across Broad Creek, near the present site of Laurel. On the south side of the stream he built a grist-mill, and on the north side a saw-mill. After his decease the property passed to his nephew, John, who devised it to his son Theodore. In 1832, Theodore sold a half-interest in the mills to Meashack Elliott, and shortly afterwards the remaining one-half part to John Polk and Jeremiah Kinney, who in turn conveyed to Solomon Short and Elias Taylor. In 1847 Levin W. Dulaney purchased the interest of Taylor and Short, and soon sold to Meashack Elliott, thus vesting in him the entire title. David W. Moore and James Shipman purchased the mills of Elliott, and operated them a short time, when Shipman sold his portion to Thomas Giles. In 1866 Moore and Giles sold to John B. Lewis, who operated the mills two years, when they returned to Moore and Giles. A one-third interest was purchased of them by William S. Moore. The mills remained in their possession till 1871, when they were purchased by Isaac J. W. Adams and T. H. Ridson, and have since been operated under the name of Adams & Co. The firm took possession on December 10, 1871, and soon afterwards tore down the saw-mill and built a new one, which they also fitted up with machinery for making kegsats and heads and peach and berry crates. In this department they employed from thirty to fifty hands, and manufactured about seventy-five thousand crates per season. They now manufacture but very few crates and employ the full force on staves and heads.

In 1873 E. W. Twilley became a partner. In October, of that year, they removed the grist-mill and erected a four-story frame building, thirty-six by fifty feet, which was burned March 28, 1878. The erection of the present building was immediately begun, and it was completed in August of the same year. It is a four-story frame building, thirty-six by sixty feet, to which an elevator, thirty-six by twenty feet, was added, in 1883. It was run by six turbine wheels till the latter year, when a roller-system was introduced, and three of the wheels removed and one larger one substituted. It is a first-class mill in every respect, and has a capacity of manufacturing one hundred barrels of flour and two hundred bushels of grain per twenty-four hours.

In 1807, Josiah Polk, son of Dr. John Polk, was the owner of a forge, grist-mill and saw-mill, which were built many years before. The forge was operated until Polk's death, when it was abandoned. The mills passed to John Polk, brother of Josiah, and were by him sold to Joseph Chipman, by whom they were operated some years. They next became the property of his son, Isaac Chipman, by whom they were sold to Elias Taylor, Edmund Hitchens and Elias Taylor, Jr. The half-interest of Hitchens was sold to Robert Lamden, Thomas Bacon, John M. C. Hearn, P. C. Matthews, James H. Boyce and John S. Bacon. Elias Taylor, Jr., inherited the one-fourth part which belonged to his uncle, Elias Taylor, thus vesting in him a one-half interest. He conveyed one-half of his interest to the other owners, on account of repairs and improvements made by them. After his decease, the remainder of his portion was sold to J. P. Ward and Alfred Adams. The interest of James H. Boyce was conveyed to William Whaley, who sold to S. B. West. The grist-mill is still operated, but no sawing has been done in the past four years. Robert Lamden's interest is now owned by his heirs.

The next mills on this stream above the forge were at an early date owned by a Mr. Warren. They consisted of a grist and saw-mill, and were next owned by William Hitch. They were operated by him till about fifteen years ago, when they were abandoned. The land on which they stood is now owned by Levin Hitch.

The Trap Mills were early owned by Ebenezer Vinsen, by whom they were conveyed to Joseph Betts. He operated them for some time and then sold to William and Anderson Truitt. The saw-mill is no longer used, but the grist-mill is still operated by M. G. Truitt, the present owner.

In 1799 Barkley Townsend was the owner of a shipyard situated near Portsville. The yard was earlier owned and operated by Caleb Baldwin. Thomas Townsend operated it until about 1825, when it was discontinued. Since then vessels have been built here occasionally, the last of which was constructed in 1850 by Thomas Bacon.

On Cod Creek, in the northwestern part of the hundred, were the grist and saw-mills of John Bennett, the saw-mill of William Knowles, the saw-mill of Stephen Bennett and the saw-mill of George Bennett.

The grist and saw-mill owned in 1809 by John Bennett became the property of John Cooper about 1840. James Elsey, the next owner, conveyed the mills to Noah Phillips, who devised them to his son, Samuel. About ten years ago the saw-mill was discontinued. At the death of Samuel Phillips, in 1888, the grist-mill passed to his grandchildren, who are the children of E. M. Lowe. It is still operated.

The saw-mill of William Knowles was operated by him in the year 1840. Joseph Ellis and William Owens were the next and present owners. The mill is still operated by them.

The saw-mill owned by Stephen Bennett in 1816 afterwards came into the possession of James W. Bradley, who operated it until his decease. It then descended to his son, John C. Bradley, by whom it was sold, in 1871, to William T. Records. He conveyed the mill to Samuel S. Walker, and while in his possession, in 1874, it was burned and has never been rebuilt. The land on which it stood now belongs to W. J. Henderson.

The mills of George Bennett, on Cod Creek, later came into the possession of Aaron Owens, by whom they were operated many years. The grist-mill has been abandoned for about twenty-five years. The saw-mill is still in use, and is owned and operated by the heirs of Aaron Owens.

Tuskey Branch is a small stream emptying into Broad Creek at Portsville. On this stream were the saw and grist-mill of Levin Collins, the grist and saw-mill of Joseph Forman, the grist and saw-mill of Charles Walston, the grist and saw-mill of Charles and Jacob Marine, and the saw-mill of William Moore.
The mills owned by Levin Collins in 1816 came into the possession of James Phillips and Jacob Adams about 1825. Phillips later became sole owner, and devised the mills to his sons, Isaac G. and Thomas J. Phillips, by whom they were operated for some time. The interest of Thomas J. Phillips was sold to Hon. James Ponder, and by him sold to Thomas W. Ralph, about 1873. After the decease of Isaac G. Phillips, his interest was sold to William J. Ralph, in 1880. The saw-mill has been abandoned for the past fifteen years. In 1882 a new two-story frame grist-mill was erected by the owners. The mill is chiefly employed on custom work, and both corn and wheat are ground by burr. The mill is situated at Portsville, and is the first on the branch.

The next mills above Portsville were owned in 1776 by Joseph Forman. At a later period they became the property of Thomas Rider, and while in his possession the saw-mill was abandoned about 1880. Caleb Ross and John Phillips became the next owners of the grist-mill. Ross sold his portion to Robert Elsey, and later the entire property vested in James Ellis, by whom it was operated until twenty years ago, and then abandoned. The site is now owned by Mrs. Zedekiah Gooslee.

The next mills higher up the stream were owned in 1809 by Charles Walston, and in 1816 by Thomas Rider. They then became the property of Charles Rider, by whom they were sold to Stephen Bailey. In 1830 they belonged to Levi Collins, and were inherited by his son, Jacob, who still operates the saw-mill. The grist-mill has been abandoned.

In 1816 Charles and Jacob Marine were the owners of a saw and grist-mill above the Walston Mill, which was inherited by Griffith and Solomon Marine, and while in their possession the grist-mill was abandoned. The saw-mill was sold to David H. Walston and later became the property of Jacob Marine and John B. Collins. The mill was last operated eight years ago while in the possession of John Henry.

The last mill on this stream was a saw-mill built by William Moore. In 1840 it was inherited by his sons, Perry and Isaac Moore, who sold it to William Moore. Elijah Hitch and George A. Moore were the next owners, and they conveyed to T. W. Records and Joseph Ellis, who operated it for a time and then sold to Isaac Giles. Frazer Dickerson, the next owner, operated the mill until 1884, when it was abandoned.

In the southwestern part of the hundred, on Plum Creek, were two saw-mills owned by Elijah Phillips and Joseph Hardie.

The saw-mill known as the “Bloomery Mill,” was built previous to 1800 by Elijah Phillips. It was subsequently owned by Rodger Phillips and William Cooper, and next came into the possession of Samuel Phillips and William Cooper, Jr., and while in their possession was abandoned, about ten years ago. The land on which it stood is now owned by Samuel Phillips.

The mill owned by Joseph Hardie previous to 1800 was later purchased by Isaac Phillips, and after his death became the property of Joseph Phillips, Rodger Phillips, Jr., and Levin Cooper. It is now owned and operated by William W. Cooper and Rodger Phillips.

On Little Creek were the mills of Barkley Townsend, Caleb Baldwin, Henry Bacon, John Bacon and William Polk.

Big Mills were erected by Barkley Townsend on a tract of land known as “Fishing Island.” They consisted of a grist and saw-mill and were operated by Townsend until his death, when they were inherited by his son, Thomas, who sold to Caleb Ross. The mills passed to his son, Hon. William H. Ross, by whom a tannery was added in 1843. They were sold by him to John Moore and Rev. Mr. Hoskins, by whom they were conveyed to William Dulaney. On September 16, 1867, A. J. Horsey purchased the property and works of Dulaney and has since owned them. The grist-mill and tannery have not been operated for the past three years. A basket factory was connected with the saw-mill from 1881 to 1884. The saw-mill has a capacity of five thousand feet per day.

The first mills on the stream above the “Big Mills” were at an early date owned by Caleb Baldwin, and afterwards came into the possession of Judge Robbins, by whom they were sold to Nathaniel Horsey. Horsey sold a one-half interest to James Wooten, who conveyed it to Robert Elsey. It was purchased of him by Nathaniel Horsey, thus vesting in him again the entire title. The grist-mill was rebuilt by him about forty years ago. The mills are now owned by G. W. Horsey, a son of Nathaniel. In 1882 he built a steam saw-mill, and has connected with it a factory for manufacturing peach and berry baskets and crates.

The mills owned in 1809 by Henry Bacon were sold by him to the Kinney Bros., and by them operated until 1845, when they again came into possession of Bacon. The grist-mill has never been operated since that time. After the death of Henry Bacon the property vested in his two sons, Samuel and Thomas, by whom it is still owned. In 1870 the saw-mill was rebuilt and enlarged, is now operated ten months per year and has a capacity of fifteen hundred feet per day.

At the head of the mill-pond belonging to the Bacon Mill the stream forks, and on each of these forks was, many many years ago, a saw-mill. One was owned by John Bacon, father of Henry, and went down previous to 1830. It stood on land now owned by W. W. Dashiel. The other mill was owned by William Polk, and was abandoned about the same time. The land is now owned by John G. Game and Jonathan T. Records.

On Rossakaturn Branch were the “Little Mills” of Barkley Townsend, mentioned as the beginning of the limits of the village of Laurel. They consisted of a grist-mill, bark-mill and carding factory. At the death of Townsend they became the property of his son-in-law, John Skinner. In 1822 they belonged to Wm. B. Cooper, who also opened a tan-yard at this place. J. A. Hearn, the next owner, operated the works until 1856, when they were abandoned. A saw-mill was erected by him the same year, which later came into the possession of H. Clay Lewis, and is now the property of John W. Windsor, by whom it is still operated.

On a tributary of Broad Creek commonly called Tresham Branch were the grist and saw-mill of Levin Thompson, grist-mill of Lear Bivens, grist and saw-mill of Thomas and John Ward, grist and saw-mill of Barkley Townsend, saw-mill of Jeremiah Morris and saw-mill of Francis White.

Levin Thompson was a colored man, who, in 1816, owned the mills on this stream nearest its mouth. After his death the property vested in his heirs. Clement Thompson sold his interest to William Wootten. Charles B. Greene, a son-in-law of Thompson, and John Hoses were also part owners of the mills. The grist-mill was abandoned about forty years ago. Selby M. Lowe now owns and operates the saw-mill.

The next mill up this stream in 1809 was the property of Lear Bivens, who sold to Joseph Hearn. The grist-mill came into the possession of Joseph Ellis, who sold a one-half interest to Joshua Cannon. Cannon next became the sole owner and at his death it passed to his widow, who still owns it. The mill has not been operated in three years. Bivens sold the saw-mill to George and Joseph Hearn, who operated it until 1845. It is now owned by Joseph Elliott, Harvey Elliott, Walter Anderson, William Baker, John Walker and John Hearn. The mill has not been operated for the past two years.

In 1809 Thomas and John Ward were the owners of a grist and saw-mill on a branch of this stream, emptying into the Bivens mill-pond. The entire title later vested in John, and at his death passed to his son Benjamin. The grist-mill was abandoned about forty years ago. The saw-mill was burned ten years ago, while in the possession of Benjamin Ward, and has never been rebuilt. The land is now principally owned by John W. Ward.

On a tract of land called "Turkey Trap," containing one hundred and seven acres, patented June 25, 1776, to George Smith, was a grist and saw-mill, which, on February 6, 1800, Barkley Townsend sold to Gilliss Smith and Samuel Elliott. The latter, on November 2, 1803, purchased of Gilliss and William Smith a fourth interest. William Wootten of I., married the widow of Gilliss Smith and purchased from the other owners their interests in the mills. He died in 1829 and devised the mills to his sons, Philip H. and Nutter G. Wootten. At the death of Philip H. Wootten, in 1841, his interest passed to his heirs who, in 1861, sold to Lewis A. Pollitt. The grist-mill was abandoned in 1845. The saw-mill is now owned by Nutter G. Wootten and Lewis A. Pollitt.

The next mill above was a saw-mill, owned in 1822 by Jeremiah Morris. After his death it passed to his son, John, who operated it until 1882, when it was abandoned.

The last mill on this stream was a saw-mill, owned at an early date by Francis White, and while in his possession was abandoned at least sixty years ago. The land is now the property of Andrew Hearn.

On the most eastern branch of Broad Creek, in Little Creek Hundred, were the saw-mills of — Vinson, Joseph and Levi Cannon and George and Joseph Hearn.

The mill of — Vinson was in the possession of Jacob Wootten in 1828, and was operated by him until his death; then it was devised to his daughter Kate, who married Rev. Otho Strayer. The mill next became the property of Philip Cannon and H. Clay Mathews, who ran it until about ten years ago, when it was abandoned.

In 1810 Joseph and Levi Cannon were the owners of a mill above the Vinson mill. It passed to Jeremiah Cannon, and was operated by him until his death, when it became vested in his heirs, and while in their possession was abandoned about thirty years ago.

The mill on this stream owned by George and Joseph Hearn passed to G. W. C. Hearn. While in his possession, about thirty-five years ago, it was abandoned and the dam removed.

In 1848 Ward & Hearn erected a steam saw-mill within the present limits of Whitesville. The mill changed owners very often, and finally became the property of J. G. White, by whom it was operated until 1881, when it was moved to Gumboro' Hundred.

In 1868 Sirmon & Carter erected a steam saw-mill at Delmar. In 1872 William L. Sirmon became sole owner, and operated it thus until November, 1886, when he associated with himself William Downing. In 1883 the mill was moved from the west side of the railroad to its present location. It has a capacity of five thousand feet per day, is operated eleven months per year, and gives employment to ten men.

In 1880 M. M. Ellis built a steam saw-mill in the southern part of the hundred. It has a capacity of four thousand feet per day, and is operated three months each year.

In 1882 Walston & Ellis erected a steam saw-mill in this hundred. It is operated nine months per year, and gives employment to five men. The capacity is three thousand feet per day.

In 1884 L. W. Ellis & Brother built a steam saw-mill, which is operated six months per year, and has a capacity of four thousand feet per day.

W. L. Sirmon, Elijah Freeny and M. H. Fooks operated a brick-yard near Delmar from 1864 to 1866, when it was discontinued.

M. H. Gorman and W. B. Elliott opened a brick-yard near Delmar about 1880, and have since operated it. Bricks are manufactured for seven months each year. Ten men are employed in the yard. The capacity is 1,500,000 per year.
VILLAGES AND POST-OFFICES.—The first building within the present site of Whitesville consists of a dwelling and steam saw-mill erected in 1848 by Ward & Hearn. A store was opened soon afterwards and managed by Jos. J. Hearn. The village received its name from Jos. G. White, who went there and opened a store on November 21, 1856. The land was formerly owned by Freeborn G. Wells. The village is situated in the southeastern part of the hundred, near the Maryland line, and contains a store and a dozen dwellings. In close proximity is the Line Methodist Episcopal Church. A post-office was established here June 9, 1881. J. G. White received the appointment of postmaster, and has since held that position. The mails are carried tri-weekly to and from Delmar.

Delmar is situated on the line that separates Southern Delaware from the northeastern part of Maryland, and is almost midway between the Chesapeake Bay and the Atlantic Ocean. The name is formed by combining the first three letters of the words Delaware and Maryland. It is the terminus of the Delaware Division of the Philadelphia, Wilmington & Baltimore Railroad, and when the track was laid to this point, in 1859, the present site of Delmar was a wilderness. The first house was built by Elijah Freeny, who owned most of the land in this vicinity. It stands on the Maryland side, and is now occupied by Charles Vincent. The next house was built by Kendall B. Hearn for hotel purposes. It was run as a hotel by him until his death, and then by his widow as a boarding-house. It was purchased by Mrs. Margaret Twiford, the present owner, about 1869, and re-opened as a hotel with William Elliott as proprietor. It has changed proprietors several times, and is now in charge of T. A. Vasey. The first stores were kept by Elijah Freeny and E. E. Jackson, now Governor of Maryland. The town was laid out in 1859 by Elijah Freeny and Wilder Hastings, who owned the land on which it stands. The first school-house was a one-story frame building erected in 1865. It remained until 1885, when it was burned and a new two-story building was erected, and still stands. There are about sixty-five pupils who are graded for the two departments. The present commissioners are W. L. Sirmon, Jos. J. Ellis and W. S. Hitchens. The village has grown rapidly and still enjoys an average increase of twenty residences per year. The present population is about six hundred and sixty. William L. Sirmon is the oldest resident of the village, and has been identified with its interest since 1862. The wants of the people are supplied by six general stores, two drug-stores, one millinery store, two mills, two butcher shops and two wheelwright and blacksmith shops. A new station was erected in 1886. A post-office was established there in 1880, and E. E. Jackson appointed postmaster. It was soon discontinued, but was re-established November 31, 1883, with J. L. Sirmon as postmaster. He has held the office ever since except for a few months in 1873, when it was filled in quick succession by James M. Carver, James D. Phillips and M. Barker.

Portsville is a small hamlet situated in the northern part of the hundred, about three miles from Laurel. It is quite an old village whose growth has been very slow. A ship-yard was at one time in operation here, but has been abandoned for some time. It now contains two stores, a grist-mill, a church and about twenty dwellings.

SCHOOLS.—Several subscription schools were in existence in the hundred previous to the establishment of the common-school system. In the original division of Sussex County into school-districts, Little Creek Hundred was apportioned into Districts 46-51.

District 46 included Laurel and vicinity. It began at Little Creek and extended thence to Nathaniel Horsey's mill; thence in a straight line including Horsey's and Mathias Ralph's dwellings to Tussey Branch; thence to a drain of water at North End of Nancy Windsor's plantation; thence to a dwelling of Wm. B. Cooper and including the same on to Mitchell's mill-dam; thence along the road from the mill-dam to Cannon's Ferry to a small bridge over Broad Creek, where the road from Laurel to Georgetown crosses the ferry-road; thence due West to Broad Creek; thence down the creek to the place of beginning.

District 47 commenced at Nathaniel Horsey's mill; thence with line of 46 to Mitchell's pond; thence to Polk's forge; thence to Trussum's mill; thence up the stream to George & Joseph Hearn's mills; thence to Jackson Cordry's lane; thence to a bridge between the dwellings of Josiah Cordry and Job Hastings over a ditch leading into the eastern branch of Little Creek; thence down said ditch and creek to the beginning.

District 48 began at the Maryland line at the north end of Jacob Elliott's land, on the State road leading to Georgetown; thence with said road to the north end of Jackson Cordry's lane; thence with the line of 47 to the east prong of Little Creek; thence to the fork of Kinney's mill-pond; thence up the south or southwest prong of said mill-pond to the place of an old mill called Polk's mill, near a farm belonging to Josiah Callaway; thence with straight line including the dwelling of Robert Hitch to a ditch leading into Tussey Branch; thence up said ditch between dwellings of William Hearn and Wm. Ellis to the Maryland line, near the southwest corner of William & Moses Hastings' farm; thence with said line to the beginning.

District 49 commenced at the southwest corner of the State of Delaware; thence north with State line to the fourth mile-stone; thence due east to the run of Tussey Branch; thence up said branch to a ditch emptying therein; thence up said ditch to the head thereof between dwellings of Wm. Hearn and Wm. Ellis; thence to the Maryland line at corner of 48; thence with said line to the place of beginning.

District 50 began at the mouth of Tussey Branch; thence down said creek to Nanticoke River; thence down said river to Maryland line; thence with said line south to a stone near Priscilla Walker's dwelling; thence due east to the run of Tusseky Branch; thence down said branch to the beginning.

District 51 commenced at the mouth of Tusseky Branch; thence up said branch to a bridge on the public road from Laurel to Springfield, Md., near the dwelling of William Moore; thence up said stream and with line of 48 to Polk's old mill; thence down the south or southwest prong of Little Creek to said Little Creek; thence down the same to Broad Creek; thence down said Broad Creek to the place of beginning.

Each of these districts was supplied with a school, where instruction was imparted free of charge. The increase in the number of pupils caused the sub-division of the original districts, and at the present time none retains its original form. New and more commodious buildings have replaced the old ones. The schools are now in a good condition, and are supplied with excellent teachers.

CHURCHES.—The First Methodist Episcopal Church in Little Creek Hundred, was situated in the northwestern part of the hundred about five miles from Laurel. The first building was begun in 1780, and completed the following year. It was a frame structure thirty by thirty-six feet, and was built entirely of heart pine. The original name given to the church was Mount Pleasant, doubtless on account of its position on the edge of an oak grove, extending north and west, while a pond lay on the south. It was soon afterwards called Moore's Chapel on account of the many families of that name in the neighborhood connected with the church. The first board of trustees consisted of George Moore, William Moore, Isaac Moore, Charles Marine, John Cordry, George Adams and Isaac Vincent. In 1769 a Quarterly Meeting was held at Moore's Chapel. The people came from all the country round about, and on Saturday night there were so many at George Moore's, that a large hall was spread with bed-clothes for them to sleep in. This was continued for many years during Quarterly Meetings. In 1801, during a love feast, the colored people gave such a shout in the gallery as to cause it to fall on the white people below, who were so densely packed that they escaped uninjured. In 1805, a camp-meeting was held at Moore's, which was doubtless the first in Sussex County. In 1824, a second-hand stove was purchased at Salisbury and placed in the church. Previous to this, with the exception of one or two persons who owned a foot-stove, the people worshipped here without stove or fire. In 1830 while Rev. Mr. Benson was engaged in the first prayer at Moore's Chapel, a blind horse owned by Elijah R. Moore, ran at full speed against the end of the church opposite the pulpit, forcing his head through the inch weather boarding. The building was shaken and the people rushed for the door. Order was restored when the cause was learned, and the preacher continued his prayer from the place where he had left off. The horse was young and spirited and was frightened by William Kinikin, who blew in its ear. In 1830, there were eighty-five members at Moore's. In 1842 the building was repaired and backs for the first time put on the benches. The old church remained until 1863, when the present building was erected. The dedicatory services were conducted in the fall of that year by Rev. Dr. Roberts, of Baltimore. The new church was named Mount Pleasant.

The building committee were Rev. Elijah Hitch, William B. Records and Charles M. Walston, and the builder, Rev. Lewis Chambers. The church has experienced several wonderful revivals of religion, and at present has one hundred and fifteen communicants. The following compose the present board of trustees: C. M. Walston, J. A. Collins, E. P. Ellis, C. H. Hastings, L. A. Walston, J. E. Ellis and J. H. Henry. A flourishing Sunday-school of one hundred and ten scholars, under the superintendence of C. A. Hastings, is connected with the church.

Moore's Chapel was first connected with Somerset Circuit, and later formed a part of Salisbury Circuit until 1840 when Laurel Circuit was created and Moore's assigned to it. It was thus connected until 1853, when it was placed in Quantico Circuit, and remained there until 1863, when it formed part of Shartpound Circuit. In 1871 Shartpound Circuit was divided and Mt. Pleasant (Moore's), Hepburn, Union and Delmar set off by themselves as Delmar Circuit. Through its various changes it has been served by the following pastors:

HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

Matthews, Joseph Betts, John Wootton, Wingate Calaway, Newbold Vinson and Isaac Betts, trustees, a tract of land on which in 1823 a one-story frame church, twenty by thirty feet was erected, at a cost of five hundred dollars. This was known as the Bethesda Methodist Episcopal Church, which name it still retains. Services were held in this building until 1879, when it was removed, and the present frame structure, twenty-nine by thirty-six feet, was erected at a cost of one thousand three hundred dollars.

The present membership is thirty-seven. Samuel H. Dobson is the superintendent of the Sunday-school, containing forty-eight members.

The present officers of the church are: Pastor, John F. Anderson; Trustees, Henry C. Matthews, Joseph M. Carmon, Elijah Hud-on.

In 1842 a society of Methodists was formed by Rev. James Hargis, in an old dwelling-house belonging to William C. King, situated on the opposite side of the road, from the present residence of Wm. F. King and about half a mile south of King's Church. The members of the first class held in the old house, were John and Amelia Wootton, Elijah and Mary Williams, William and Elizabeth Gordy, Alaphere Williams, Sarah King, Sarah I. Wootton, Thomas and Elizabeth Adams, Susan Elliott and several children of Elijah Williams. Money and materials were contributed for the erection of a church which was completed the same year, and named Hepburn, after a Philadelphian man of that name, who promised twenty dollars towards paying for the church, provided it was so called. It stood in the woods twelve or fifteen feet from the county road, and was not plastered on the inside until 1848. Services were held in this building until 1885. In 1881 an effort was made to erect a new church, but nothing was accomplished until 1884, when a building committee was appointed. They decided to build a church thirty by forty feet with a recess pulpit. It was finished early in the winter, and was to have been dedicated on December 21, but the rain prevented the people from coming. The dedicatory services were conducted by Revs. E. L. Hubbard and I. T. Fostnoch, of the Wilmington Conference, on January 26, 1885. The people objected to the name Hepburn, and by a vote of the congregation taken the day before the dedication, it was decided to call the new church King's. The first religious service in the church was the marriage of Miss Elia E. Beach and Mr. George H. Waller, on December 24, 1884. The church since its organization, except from 1858 to 1888, has been connected with the same circuits as Mt. Pleasant, and has been served by the same pastors. The pastors from 1858 to 1868 were:

In connection with the church is a flourishing Sunday-school of one hundred scholars, under the superintendence of J. W. Magee. The following compose the present board of trustees of King's Church: L. W. James, J. W. Magee, S. M. Lowe, George E. King, M. F. James.

The first divine services in the immediate vicinity of St. George's Church were held in private houses by Rev. Elijah Hitch in 1842. After several meetings, the privilege of holding services in Beach's school-house was tendered Rev. Mr. Hitch and accepted. Fourteen persons professed religion at his meetings there. He informed Rev. James Hargis, pastor of the circuit, that he thought a good work could be done there. In July of that year, it was decided to hold a camp-meeting in this neighborhood. A suitable piece of ground was procured of Samuel Kenney and prepared for camp. At this meeting more than two hundred were converted, one hundred and fourteen of whom joined St. George's. It was decided to build a church and the contract was awarded to Shelly Kenney. The Church lot was donated by Samuel Kenney Sr., William S. Kenney and James Kenney. The weather boarding was given by Hon. William H. Ross, afterwards Governor, and the shingles by William L. Hearne. The church was dedicated by the preacher in charge, but was not plastered until 1844. In 1873, it was repaired and a recess pulpit built at a cost of two hundred and thirty dollars. Since its organization the church has been connected with the same circuits as Mt. Pleasant (Moore's) and has been ministered to by the same pastors. It is present has sixty members.

A prosperous Sunday School of seventy-five members under the superintendence of Joseph W. Beach is connected with it.

The present board of trustees is composed of Samuel Bacon, James Hill, Job Sirmon, M. M. Ellis and Jos. W. Beach.

Through the efforts of T. A. Melson, the first religious services in Delmar were held on September 4, 1867. Rev. Joseph Cook, then preacher in charge of Salisbury Circuit, officiated. The place of meeting was the yard in front of the residence of M. M. Hill. The next sermon was preached October 6th in Mr. Hill's house, and regular services were held there until January 26, 1868. The congregation had become too large for the dwelling, and a plank house was promptly erected on the land of Elijah Freney. The building, nineteen by thirty feet, called after John Wesley, was dedicated February 16, 1868, by Rev. Joseph Cook. The first class was formed November 3, 1867, at the residence of J. T. Hearne, and was composed of Nathan West and wife, T. A. Melson and wife, Richard Stevens, wife and daughter Amanda, Leah Ann Hearne and James T. Hearne, a probationer. Nathan West was appointed leader. In 1871 the plank house was abandoned, and services held in the school-house. In 1872, through the labors of Rev. Joseph Dare, a church was commenced, which was completed and dedicated on November 30th by Rev. Enoch Stubbs, assisted by Rev. W. E. England. The building cost two thousand two hundred dollars. In 1884 a tower and steeple were added, and a parsonage erected for the circuit. Since its organization the church has been connected with the same circuits as Mt. Pleasant, and the same pastors have officiated. A flourishing Sunday-school, containing two hundred scholars, is connected with the church. L. W. Perdue is the superintendent. The church at present has a membership of eighty. The board of trustees are,—M. M. Hill, J. W. Melson, F. P. Elliott, T. A. Melson, W. B. Elliott, H. B. Sirmon, and B. W. Parker.

On April 30, 1882, James W. Phillips granted one-fourth of an acre of land at Portsville to John Allen, Thomas J. Phillips, Levi Collins, James M. Rider, Cyrus Collins, William Adams and Obadiah Marvel, trustees. On this land they were to erect a house to be denominated "The Portsville Academy and Chapel," to be used for religious worship and school purposes. The building was erected, and was used until 1888 by the Methodist Protestants for church purposes. In that year the present one-story frame edifice, thirty by thirty-six feet, with recess pulpit was erected, and has since been used. The land on which it stands was conveyed by Isaac G. Phillips to Doughty Collins, William G. Hearne, Isaac G. Phillips, William S. Phillips and James H. Jackson, trustees, February 24, 1869. The church was called Mount Lebanon, and now has a membership of about fifty. Services are conducted every other Sabbath by Rev. George R. McCready. There is connected with the church a Sunday-school of sixty members, under the superintendence of F. S. Burford. The present board of trustees are James H. Smith, James H. Lowe, D. W. Ralph and Jacob M. Gootee.

In 1835 the Methodist Protestants, to the number of about twenty, organized and erected a church, known as "Mt. Moriah," on a lot granted by Robert Elzey to Joseph Ellis, George A. Moore, E. C. Cooper and Joseph Phillips. The building was a one-story frame structure, about twenty-four by twenty-eight feet, and cost three hundred dollars. It was used for divine worship until 1875, when it became very dilapidated. It was decided to erect a new church on another location. A lot of land was donated by E. M. Lowe, and on it was built a one-story frame edifice, thirty-two by thirty-eight feet, which is now known as the Providence Methodist Protestant Church. There are at present fifty-seven members. Ebenezer M. Lowe is the superintendent of the Sabbath-school, and the trustees are Charles B. Elzey, George W. Ellis, William Kinney and E. M. Lowe.

The following is a list of the pastors who have ministered to this congregation:

HISTORY OF DELAWARE.

St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal Church, situated near the central part of the hundred, was begun in 1857 and completed the following year. Its erection was due to the labors of the Rev. Richard F. Cadle. The building was consecrated May 28, 1858, by Bishop Lee. Services were held previous to this for several years at the house of Stephen Ellis. The one-story frame structure, twenty-two by thirty-five feet, then erected on land purchased of Samuel Ralph, still stands and is used for worship. The first officers of the church were: Wardens, Samuel Kinney and Charles N. Moore; Vestry, C. W. Dickerson, Stephen Ellis, Jonathan Bailey, Isaac Giles and William J. Ralph.

There are at present about thirty communicants of this church. A Sunday-school of seventy members is held under the superintendence of Jackson L. Ralph.

The present officers of the church are: Wardens, Wm. J. Ralph and Wm. J. Knowles; Vestry, Geo. W. C. Ellis, Jonathan W. Ellis, Benj. B. Freeny, Levin W. Ellis, Jackson L. Ralph, Mathias R. Ellis, Stephen T. Ralph.

St. Andrew's Protestant Episcopal Chapel at Ellis Grove was erected in 1880, on land donated by Joseph Ellis. It is a one-story frame structure, twenty-eight by forty-four feet, and was first opened for services in June of that year. The valuation of the building is about twelve hundred dollars. Rev. George W. Johnson, its first rector, still officiates once in every two weeks. It is a mission chapel, and numbers about eight communicants. A flourishing Sunday-school, with sixty scholars, is connected with the chapel. Jacob H. Adams is the superintendent of the school.

Previous to 1802 the Baptists of Little Creek Hundred and vicinity worshipped in a house situated north of Delmar, on a farm now belonging to Wm. Hastings. In that year Gillis Smith conveyed to Charles Wilby and Levin Hitch, trustees, one acre of land north of Marshall Smith's grist-mill. On it in the same year, was erected a one-story frame edifice, twenty-eight by thirty feet, at a cost of five hundred dollars. This was known as the Smith Mills Baptist Church until a meeting-house of the same faith was erected in Broad Creek Hundred, when the name was changed to Little Creek. In the following year the church was constituted, with thirty-nine members. The church then built still remains, but the congregation have in contemplation the erection of a new building in 1888. It is connected with the Salisbury Association and services are held the third Saturday and Sunday of every month. The number of communicants at present is fifty-four. In 1888 a lot of land in Delmar was purchased, and a neat one-story frame building, twenty-eight by thirty-six feet, was erected at the cost of one thousand dollars. This has never been constituted a church and is not in the association. It is used as a place of worship for the convenience of those living at a distance from the other churches. This congregation retains the doctrines of the Old Testament.
School or Primitive Baptist Church. Both properties are under the same board of trustees, composed of B. B. Hastings, W. S. Marvil, Handy Culver, Levin Hastings and C. J. Morris. The clerk of the church is John H. Ellis.

The following pastors have ministered to this congregation: Revs. David Green, J. C. Windsor, James Rounds, Warren Stanton, Leonard Hastings, Thomas Waters, George W. Stanton, Thomas M. Poulsen and E. Rittenhouse.

The First Baptist Church of Delmar was organized through the missionary labors of John T. Craig. In 1883 the church edifice was built, at a cost of $2,000. The first trustees were E. M. Sprague, James R. Venables, E. M. Dunn, Dr. A. B. Slemons and William L. Sirmon. Rev. Mr. Craig was succeeded by James M. Hope, who was the last pastor of this church. The present Sabbath-school has a membership of forty-five, under the superintendence of S. K. Slemons. No regular church services are now held, but the organization is retained under these trustees:

SECRET SOCIETIES.—Wicomico Tribe, No. 13, I. O. R. M., was instituted at Delmar June 24, 1874.

The first officers were: Prophet, Samuel H. Ker; S., W. A. C. Williams; S. S., Nehemiah B. Lecatte; J. S., William S. Hearn; C. of R., William N. Hastings; K. of W., W. S. Hitchens.

The additional charter members were Benjamin W. Parker, Joseph K. Waller, Caldwell J. Morris, Samuel T. Hearn, William N. Hearn, E. M. Lowe, William S. Hastings, Phillip A. Hearn and G. Lecatte. The tribe increased rapidly in numbers, and at one time numbered eighty. The present membership is forty-five. Meetings are held every Wednesday night in Red Men's Hall, in W. S. Hitchens' building. The present officers are:

Sinneupzenta Tribe, No. 16, I. O. R. M., was instituted at Whitesville, February 12, 1879, with these officers: Prophet, Jesse T. Wells; S., Joseph G. White; S. S., M. H. Brittingham; J. S., William P. Parsons; C. of R., Eli N. White; K. of W., Benjamin S. White. These, with Garretson H. White, Solomon G. Truitt, Samuel M. White, James B. Foskey, Elijah J. Workman, James H. Calloway, Isaac T. Hearn, John H. Phillips, W. H. Smith and Joseph M. Cannon, were the charter members. In 1884 a two-story frame building was erected by the order at a cost of three hundred and thirty dollars. The first floor is used as a storage-room by J. G. White & Sons, and the second story is used for lodge purposes. The lodge meets every Thursday night. The present membership is twenty-five, and the officers are: Prophet, M. H. Brittingham; S., J. J. Cordry; S. S., W. W. Ennis; J. S., W. T. Short; C. of R., E. N. White; K. of W., S. J. Truitt.

Little Creek Grange, No. 23, Patrons of Husbandry, was founded in Little Creek Hundred on October 22, 1875. The first officers were as follows: M., W. B. Ryder; Over., W. G. Hearn; L., J. H. Adams; S., G. W. Watson; Asst.'s, S. D. W. Ralph; Chap., Joseph Ellis; Treas., Nathaniel Horsey; Sec'y., Geo. S. Records; G. K., E. P. Ellis; Ceres, Mrs. S. E. Horsey; Pomona, Mrs. Julia J. Collins; Flora, Miss Lizzie E. Records; Lady Assistant Steward, Miss M. E. Ellis. There were in all twenty-three charter members, and at the end of the first year there were thirty-four members. The present membership is thirteen. Meetings are held the second Thursday in every month in a hall on W. B. Henry's farm, about four miles from Laurel. The present officers are: M., Nathaniel Horsey; Over., D. W. Ralph; L., J. H. Adams; S., T. C. Fritchard; Asst.'s, W. B. Henry; Chap., E. P. Ellis; Treas., S. E. Horsey; Sec'y., W. R. Horsey; G. K., J. H. Henry; Ceres, Mrs. H. Workman; Pomona, M. P. Ralph; Flora, Mrs. S. E. Horsey; Stewardess, M. E. Adams.

Laurel.—A portion of the land on which the town of Laurel now stands was originally warranted to James Wyth and Marmaduke Master. It was surveyed and laid out for them June 18, 1688, for one hundred and fifty acres under the name "Batchelor's Delight." No permanent improvements, however, were made by them.

On October 23, 1711, an act of Assembly was passed at Annapolis empowering George Gale, Samuel Worthington and Charles Ballard to lay out three thousand acres of land on Broad Creek for the use of the Nanticoke Indians. They met on December 14th of that year, and, in company with William Whittington, a surveyor, they selected two thousand five hundred acres on the north side of the stream and five hundred acres on the south side. The land on the south side embraced the present site of Laurel, and included one hundred and thirty-three acres of "Batchelor's Delight.”

The five-hundred-acre tract began a little above the "wading place" (Laurel), and extended down Broad Creek 438 poles, to Little Creek, thence up said Little Creek to an oak at its head, thence in a south-easterly direction one hundred and two poles and thence in a straight line to the place of beginning. The jury appointed to appraise the value of the land was composed of John McQuest, James Gowan, Robert Gowan, John Winder, James Hardy, John Goslee, John Richards, William Watts, Robert Caldwell, James Irairn, John Caldwell and Thomas Gordan. The value of the one hundred and thirty-three acres of "Batchelor’s Delight" was estimated at 2666 pounds of tobacco, and the remaining 587 acres of land at 7334 pounds of tobacco, making a total value for the 500 acres of land 10,000 pounds of tobacco.

This land was occupied by the Indians until about 1768, when Levin Gale, M. M. Allen and Henry Steele were appointed commissioners to make compensation to the Indians for the land. It was exposed for sale at public vendue, and was then or soon afterwards purchased by Barkley Townsend.

"Batchelor’s Delight," however, was granted to Benoni Barnard on November 26, 1769, it being declared vacant for non-payment of quit-rent by the original proprietors. He either forfeited his title or sold to Townsend, as it was soon afterwards in his possession.

The farm-house of Townsend is an old frame, half hip-roofed building, which is still standing, and is now owned by Daniel Hearn. In an act to prevent swine in the village of Laurel, passed January 11, 1799, the limits of the village are thus described: "Beginning at Barkley Townsend’s ship-yard, formerly called Baldwin’s ship-yard, thence on a straight line to said Townsend’s little mill, thence with the run of said mill branch till it intersects the water of Broad Creek, thence down the said creek to the place of beginning."

The mill and ship-yard here referred to are now outside of the town limits, and will be found in the article on Little Creek Hundred under the head industries.

In 1802 a plot of the village was made, which shows that the village was laid out in thirty-two lots. Lots No. 4–10 lay between Front Street and Broad Creek. The owners of lots in Laurel, as shown by the assessment list of 1801, are as follows: Manaen Bull, 1 improved lot; Isaac Cooper, 1 ditto; Martin Crays, 1 ditto; Wm. Chetom, 1 ditto; Benjamin Fooks, 14 ditto; Jesse Green, 1 ditto; Levin Haymons, 1 ditto; William Hobbs, 1 ditto; David Howard, 1 ditto; Joseph Kings, 1 ditto; William Moore, 1 ditto; Thies Moore, 1 ditto; James Mastina, 1 ditto; Isaac Morris, 1 ditto; Wm. Moore, 1 ditto; Joseph Nelson, 1 ditto; Wm. Pollock, 4 ditto; Henry Perle, 4 ditto; Benjamin Riggin, 1 ditto; Thomas Townsend, 2 ditto; Samuel Williams, 1 ditto; Matthias Williams, 1 ditto; Jesse Walless, 1 ditto; John Townsend, 1 ditto; Thomas Skinner, 1 unimproved lot; Thomas Townsend, 3 ditto; Samuel Williams, 1 ditto.

The first store in the town was opened by Manass Bull on the site of the present residence of George P. Phillips.

In 1825 the village contained seven general stores, two hotels and about two hundred and fifty inhabitants. Large quantities of grain and lumber were purchased by Benjamin Fooks, William Sirmon and Nehemiah Redden.

On January 31, 1827, there was an act passed, empowering Kendall M. Lewis, John Tennant, Wm. W. Green, Philip Matthews and Henry Bacon to establish the bound of Laurel. Nothing further, however, was done at this time towards the incorporation of the town.

A dispute arose as to the title to some vacant land in Laurel, and on February 20, 1847, an act was passed by the Legislature, vesting the title of the State of Delaware to land within the limits of Laurel to those persons who at the passing of the act had such land enclosed, or had heretofore held and used the same as private property. The town steadily increased in wealth and population, and in 1859 was the largest town in Sussex County, with a population of one thousand two hundred. It contained four churches and sixteen well-conducted dry-goods and grocery-stores. Five million feet of lumber were shipped annually, and of this amount two million feet were shipped by John S. Bacon. Within a radius of eight miles were thirty-six mills of various kinds. On March 22, 1881, an act was passed for the improvement of the streets by the use of oyster shells, which have proved a decided benefit to the town.

Laurel was incorporated as a town by an act of Assembly passed at Dover on April 13, 1883. John R. Wilson, Thos. C. Horsey, Daniel J. Fooks, Joseph F. T. Smith and Wm. E. Wolfe were appointed commissioners, and empowered to secure the services of a skilful surveyor, and survey and lay out the town and return a plot of the town to Georgetown. All of these things were accordingly done, and Laurel now enjoys the advantages of a municipal government.

The town is nicely located on Broad Creek, and is considered the wealthiest town in the State. It is situated on the main line of the Delaware Division, and is thus afforded excellent facilities for shipment. Broad Creek, which has heretofore only been navigable as far as Bethel for ships of heavy burden, is now being dredged and having its channel enlarged, so as to admit vessels to Laurel.

The town abounds with numerous fine dwellings. The people are courteous, affable and hospitable. It is steadily increasing in population, and now has about two thousand five hundred inhabitants. The business interests of the town are represented by 11 general, 7 grocery, 5 millinery, 3 clothing, 3 drug, 2 furniture, 2 hardware, 1 shoe, 1 jewelry and 1 notion stores; 2 crate, 1 stove, and 1 carriage factories; 1 saw-mill, 2 blacksmith and wheelwright shops, 2 butcher, 3 shoe and 3 barber-shops and two hotels. There are five physicians and one dentist.
Sussex County.

Here. Three churches are also located in the town.

The following is a list of the commissioners who have served since the incorporation of the town:

Schools.—Laurel was at a very early date noted for the excellence of its schools and pupils from the neighboring villages and country came here to complete their education. Of the teachers prominent in those days were Thomas Martin and John Bacon, of J. A building with two rooms in which subscription school was taught, was converted to the use of free schools when the system of free education was introduced into the State. This building was used until 1873 when it was destroyed by fire, and the present two story school-house was erected. In 1866 an academy was built and soon opened by Samuel J. Wetherby. Subscription school has been taught in this building for the greater part of the time since its erection, the present teacher being Miss Mary Wetherby. The school building erected in 1873 is inadequate to the wants of the town and an extra free school is taught in Masonic Hall. Several attempts have been made to erect a new structure but without avail. The schools are well conducted but have not the advantages of the schools in many smaller places. The present school commissioners are E. B. Riggins, Dr. William J. Hitch and John H. Elliott.

Religious.—Christ Church, Broad Creek.1—Stands about two miles to the east of Laurel, and occupies a frame building of large dimensions, built of heart pine and still in excellent preservation, an ancient landmark which carried us back to colonial times. With the exception of the roofing, which from time to time has been renewed as occasion required, this venerable relic remains both as to its interior and exterior, the same as it was when it was built more than a hundred years ago. It is without a particle of paint, and on entering you find the high-backed pews, the chancel at one end, the servants’ gallery at the opposite, while midway on the east side is the lofty pulpit, while immediately below are the reading desk and clerk’s desk. It accommodates about six hundred persons, and on the visitations of the bishop is generally filled with the people, who come often from a long distance on such occasions. St. Philip’s church, Laurel, is in fact the chapel of this, the mother church, and both are under the control of the same vestry. The inhabitants of the lower part of what is now Sussex County, Delaware, were until the year 1765, identified with Stepney Parish, Maryland, at which date by a decree in chancery the lines were then run between the province of Maryland and the adjoining colony. Before this date the ground on which the church now stands belonged to Maryland, and the history of Stepney Parish, with which this church was connected, dates back to 1685, a period of two hundred years, big with stirring events both in the history of England and that of our own country. The Rev. John Hewitt was the first rector of Stepney Parish at this date (1685).

He died in 1698. The next name upon the list is that of the Rev. George Trotter, who had charge of the parish until the year 1708, when he closed his earthly labors. The third on the list is the name of that venerable servant of God, the Rev. Samuel Adams, who was the rector of Christ church, Broad Creek from 1704 to 1764, when he became rector of St. James’ Parish, Anne Arundel County, Maryland. The Rev. John Scott served the parish from November 22, 1770, to the year 1775 when trouble broke out on account of the impending struggle of the colonies with Great Britain. As a consequence the church was without a pastor until the year 1780. Rev. William Skelley took charge of the parish in 1780 and continued his rectorship until 1794.

A very vivid tradition remains of one who labored in this field from 1808 to 1811, and whose ministrations in this ancient sanctuary were attended by crowded congregations, and who was described a few years past as “Old Parson Bell,” though in reality he died at the early age of twenty-nine. It was thus that he was spoken of by aged men and women who have but recently passed away, and who remembered him in their youth. His tomb-stone is in the lot in the rear of the church where his remains repose until the archangel’s trump at the last day. Bishop Lee states in his Historical Discourse delivered before the Diocesan Convention of Delaware at Milford in 1882, “St. John’s Church at Little Hill or Greenville, an off-shoot from Christ Church, Broad Creek, was founded by the Rev. Hamilton Bell, an earnest, faithful laborer who died in 1811 at an early age.”

This congregation enjoyed, from 1829 to 1829, the ministrations of Rev. Wm. Murray Stone, D.D., subsequently the bishop of Maryland, and who was at this time rector of Stepney Parish. His labors throughout this region were crowned, by God’s blessing, with remarkable success, for at this time he reports as having under his charge five hundred communicants, thus showing that the church was not that dead and sleepless thing at this date as some suppose. From 1830 to 1894 the church was supplied with services by the Rev. Daniel Higbee, father of the late Dr. Higbee, of Trinity Church, New York. He resided at Georgetown and gave to the neighboring churches the benefit of his ministrations. Rev. Joseph Glover, missionary of the Society for the Advancement of Christianity in Pennsylvania, and appointed by the authority of that diocese (for Delaware was not a complete diocese until the year 1841), ministered here in 1834. He was a clergyman of the Church of England, duly transferred, and labored also in the parishes of Seaford and Laurel. His devotion to his work was cut short by an attack of bilious fever and he died in 1835. He lies buried in Seaford Church-yard. From 1835 to 1838 the Rev. Curry Chambers, a man of remarkable gifts and great earnestness, was minister in charge. He labored incessantly, preaching at Seaford, Milford, Cedar Creek, Laurel and other places in the lower part of the State. A student of his, Mr. Callahan, who subsequently received orders and went West, read service in Christ Church during the years 1838 and 1839. Rev. John Long, an active and indefatigable missionary, preached here from 1848 to 1846. During his ministry in these parts St. Luke's Church, Seaford, was finished and consecrated May 28, 1843. Rev. J. Brinton Smith labored here from 1846 to 1848. The Rev. John W. Hoskins had charge from 1848 to 1852. In 1850 St. Philip's Church, Laurel, was consecrated, after which, as the village of Laurel was more convenient for most of the worshippers, services were held only occasionally at the old church.

This building remained until 1874, when, to accommodate the continually increasing congregation, the present neat one-story frame building was erected. The corner-stone was laid June 5, 1874, by Bishop Lee.

That saintly man, the Rev. Richard T. Cadle, whose name still lives as a precious heritage, labored here from 1853 to 1857. In 1857, owing to his exertions, St. Mark's Church, Little Creek, was erected. From 1858 to 1869 the congregation was in charge of the Rev. Samuel B. Slack. The Rev. L. Gay officiated here from 1860 to 1861. From 1862 to 1869 the Rev. George Hall had charge. From 1870 to 1873 the Rev. John C. Tennent, rector at Laurel and Seaford, held occasional services. During the summer of 1872 services were held by the Rev. Mr. Tennent and also by the Rev. Benj. J. Douglas, rector at Georgetown, alternately. On July 3, 1873, a most interesting service was held in this ancient sanctuary. The Right Rev. Alfred Lee, bishop of the diocese, presided; clergymen from all parts of the diocese were in attendance. The church was crowded, though the weather was intensely hot. A generous collation was provided by the hospitable people under the shade of the adjoining trees and in the afternoon an historical sermon was delivered by the Rev. Benj. J. Douglass from Psalm 72: 5.

This was the centennial celebration of the erection of the present structure. It is at least one hundred years old. It is very difficult to get at the exact date, many of the old records having been destroyed or lost. But from an item of the records of Stepney Parish, kindly furnished the writer by the Rev. William Fulton, it is ascertained on the credit side of an account, the debtor side of which is wanting. "I find," writes he (the entry September 25, 1772), "by building a chapel at Broad Creek, £510." It had been intended to hold the celebration the previous fall, approximating as it would then do more closely to the date, but the bishop and clergy found it impracticable. We are inclined to believe that this was not the first building erected on this spot. Tradition points to a prior structure, of which none now can give us any exact information. Possibly light will be thrown upon this and other points of interest in the future.

The following rectors have served since 1873:

James H. B. Brooks, 1873 to 1878; Charles H. Mead, 1878 to 1879; David Howard, 1880 to 1882; George S. Fitzhugh, 1883 to 1884; Edward Wootten, 1886 to 1887. The present Senior Warden is J. W. Adams; Junior Warden, Edward Fowler, M.D.; Vestry: M. H. Tilghman, A. W. Parker, George W. Horsey, R. G. Ellegood, M.D., Benjamin J. Moore, Isaac J. Wootten.

In concluding this sketch of the history of Christ Church, Broad Creek, it would be unjust to omit the names of Rev. Meares. Simon Wilmer, James Wiltbank, Kensey J. Stewart, and the rectors onward from 1872 of Laurel and Seaford: J. H. B. Brooks, Charles H. Meach, David Howard, George S. Fitzhugh, Edward Wootten, all of whom, at different times, have done what they could to keep up the services in this ancient temple of God's worship. Their labor is not in vain.

Presbyterian Church.—The first Presbyterian society in this section of the country was organized by Revs. G. Tennent and G. Whitefield. The first settled minister was the Rev. Mr. Henry, who first preached in private houses, and afterwards in the Presbyterian Church erected on the north branch of Broad Creek, about 1760. The elders in this year were Jacob Bounds, Levin Vaughan and John Nawi. The next pastor was Rev. Moses Tuttle, who was succeeded by Rev. Charles Tennent. The latter filled the pulpit until a short time previous to the breaking out of the Revolutionary War, during which time the church was entirely abandoned, and in 1778 was wantonly or maliciously burned. Occasional services were conducted by Reva. Wilson and Kerr until about 1787, when, through the exertions of Robert Houston and Meares. Mitchell, Bratton and Boyce, a lot of ground near Laurel was procured of John and Cyrus Mitchell, and subscriptions opened for building a church. The death of Mr. Mitchell and other causes delayed the work, so that the building was not completed till 1791. In 1790 the elders were Robert Houston, Jonathan Boyce, Samuel Scroggins, Smith Wingate and Henry Edgen; and the trustees were Robert Houston, James Bratton, Jonathan Boyce and John Mitchell. Occasional sermons were preached in 1789. '90 and '91 by Francis Hindman, a licentiate under the care of the Presbytery of Lewes. In June, 1791, Rev. Isaac Tull became stated pastor of this congregation.

in connection with the congregations of Vienna and Fishing Creek, Md. He served the church until the fall of 1796, when, with two elders, Samuel Scroggins and Fleming Edgen, he moved to Kentucky. The year previous, Smith Wingate, another elder, had removed. The death of Alexander Smith occurred the same year, and in the following year Robert Houston and Jonathan Boyce died. The loss of so many elders seemed to threaten a dissolution of the church. During 1796-97 and 98, the Rev. John Burton, of Lewis Presbytery, preached here occasionally. From 1799 till 1817 there was no stated supply, but occasional services were conducted by Revs. McMaster, Burton, Sherman and Johnson, and Messrs. Williamson and Walles, licentiates under the care of the New Castle Presbytery. Levin Vaughan, an elder since the organization of the society, died in 1804. In 1808 ten were received into full membership. Rev. Charles Walles preached here every fourth Sunday during the year 1817. After that year the church was in a manner vacant until 1834. In 1832 Joseph Smith, William Vaughan, M. Stuart, Barkley Townsend, Luther T. Moore, William Hobbs and John S. Vaughan were elected and incorporated as trustees, and the name of the church, which heretofore was the Broad Creek Church was changed to the Presbyterian Church of Laurel.

In July, 1834, Rev. George W. Kennedy became stated supply, and preached once in three weeks until April, 1836. The next pastor was Rev. Isaac W. K. Handy, who supplied the congregation every fourth week. He was succeeded by Henry C. Frise, who filled the pulpit from July 13, 1840, until April 22, 1849. Rev. C. H. Mustard became pastor January 27, 1850, and continued until May 16, 1852. During his time there were only thirteen members. There was no minister from 1852 until 1866, when Rev. Frise again officiated for a short time. In 1857 the church withdrew from the Wilmington Presbytery and joined the one at New Castle. In 1868 the building was taken apart and moved into Laurel on a lot of land granted to them by Dr. Stephen M. Green, so long as it should be used for religious purposes, with reversion to his heirs. On December 12th of the following year the building was dedicated by Rev. J. B. Spotswood, D.D. Rev. Frise again took charge of the church and conducted services until 1870, when it was finally abandoned. The building was destroyed by fire August 19, 1886. The last trustees were: Jacob Adams, Joseph Vaughan, John W. Windsor, Eben Collins and William S. Colloway.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—In 1801 there was a great revival of religion among the inhabitants of Little Creek Hundred and vicinity. From the converts was formed a class which met at the house of George Adams, about a mile from Laurel and on the site of the residence of George W. Horsey. This house was known for years as "Daddy Adams' house of glory." In the following year a single story frame church building about thirty-six by forty feet, with a gallery on three sides, was erected in Laurel. It was built on a lot ninety-nine by one hundred and five feet on the corner of Back and Corn Streets, and was known as lot No. 31. This land was granted by Thomas Skinner to Samuel Williams, Jr., George Armstrong, William Polk, Henry Bacon, Thomas Townsend, Samuel Jacobs and Joshua Magee, trustees, on September 9, 1809. This building was used for divine worship until 1848, when it was removed and used by the colored people for church purposes. A new two-story frame building was framed on land now owned by Isaac W. Sirmon, and then moved to the site of the former church. It was a little larger than the old church, and its dimensions were about forty by fifty feet. Services were held in this building until 1866, when it was removed and also fitted up for a church by the colored people. The erection of the present edifice was immediately commenced and completed the following year. The dedication services were conducted on February 24th by Rev. A. Cookman. It is a neat two-story frame building, forty-eight by seventy feet, with tower and steeple, and cost nearly ten thousand dollars.

The church at present has a membership of two hundred and five.

The Sunday-school with a membership of two hundred and forty, is under the superintendence of Daniel J. Fooks.

From its organization the church was connected with the same circuits and served by the same pastors as Mt. Pleasant until 1863 when it was made a separate charge. The following pastors have ministered here since that time:

Rev. Elijah Miller..............1806-70
Rev. T. S. Williams..............1877-79

Methodist Protestant Church.—In November, 1881, the doctrines of the Methodist Protestant Church were introduced in Laurel by Rev. Thomas Pearson. The first services were held in a school-house on the site of the present school building, near the Methodist Episcopal Church. The project of erecting a church was soon inaugurated by Messrs. Geo. Phillips, Dr. S. Greene and C. C. Windsor. In 1832 a class was formed composed of the following persons: Nathaniel Horsey, Eliza Horsey, C. C. Windsor and wife, Levi A. Collins and Josiah Penwell. In the same year the church was opened for services although not yet completed. The dedicatory services were conducted by Rev. Samuel Rawleigh. In this condition it was used until 1841, when it was plastered and whitewashed. Soon afterwards the benches witout backs were replaced by comfortable seats. This church was used until 1867 when it was sold to the colored people, by whom it was used for religious purposes until 1884. In the summer of 1867 Rev. A. D. Dick advised the erection of a new church edifice. A building committee composed of Martin L. Hearns, Nathaniel Thomison, Rev. Thomas H. Burgess, Edward L. Wolf, William W. Dashiell, John T. Moore, J. A. McFerran, M.D., and George W. Horsey. The contract for erecting the building was awarded to Joshua H. Marvil for six thousand four hundred dollars. A more desirable lot on Central Avenue was purchased of George D. Phillips on May 14, 1866. The church was completed and dedicated November 10, 1867, by Revs. J. J. Murray, D.D., R. Semple Rowe and L. W. Bates, D.D., and has since been used for religious services. It is a neat two-story frame edifice forty by fifty-five feet, with a Gothic front and tower and steeple.

In this year a revival of religious pervaded the town and more than one hundred were converted, fifty of whom joined this church. On April 10, 1884, a parsonage on the corner of Central Avenue and Sixth Street, was purchased. This was improved and enlarged in 1887, and has a present valuation of two thousand dollars.

The little class formed in 1832 increased steadily, in numbers until at present there is a membership of one hundred and sixty-five, and from this congregation have gone forth seven ministers of the gospel.

J. H. Elliott, is the superintendent of a Sunday-school, numbering one hundred and forty members, connected with this church.

The church was supplied by Revs. Thomas Pearson, Samuel L. Rawleigh and Stephen Taylor until 1834, when it was added to the Dorchester and Sussex Circuit. In 1839, the circuit was divided and the Laurel Church assigned to the Sussex Circuit. It was thus connected until 1844, when this circuit was divided and Union Circuit created, to which it was joined until 1865, when Laurel Circuit was formed. Three years later it was made a station. The church has been ministered to by the following pastors:

Industries.—In 1871 Joshua H. Marvil fitted up a building, formerly used as a cabinet-shop, with the requisite machinery, and began the manufacture of peach and berry baskets and crates. The factory at first had a capacity of sixty thousand berry baskets and one thousand crates per week. Employment was given to about fifty persons, and the factory was in operation about ten months per year. In 1873 this building was enlarged and afterwards several additions were made, until 1883, when it was deemed advisable to erect a new factory. The present structure, one hundred and thirty-three by fifty feet, was then erected and has since been operated by him. The turning of iron and wood, scroll-sawing and ornamental work was then added. The present factory has a capacity of one hundred and twenty-five thousand berry baskets and three hundred crates per week; about double the capacity of the first factory. It gives employment to one hundred persons and is operated during eleven months of the year. The product of the factory is shipped to all parts of the United States. The development of the town west of the railroad is solely due to this factory, as previous to its existence there were no houses in this neighborhood.

In 1885 J. R. Wilson, J. H. Marvil, Isaac E. Hearne and Newton Ward erected a building and commenced manufacturing wooden-pails under the style of J. B. Wilson & Co. The factory was in operation for a year and then abandoned on account of the scarcity of juniper timber. The interests of Wilson and Hearne were purchased by J. H. Marvil, who sold a one-fourth part interest to Lorenzo W. Marvil. It was opened in 1886 for the manufacture of fruit packages, under the firm name of N. Ward & Co. It is under the superintendence of Lorenzo W. Marvil, and has about the same capacity as J. H. Marvil’s factory. The product is also shipped to all parts of the country.

In 1865 E. B. Riggen opened a blacksmith and repair shop in Laurel. This he operated until 1877, when he associated himself with W. C. Knowles, under the style of E. B. Riggen & Co. The firm began the manufacture of wagons, which they have since continued. In 1879 they built the factory which they now occupy. They employ six men and manufacture about thirty-five wagons annually.

S. H. Bacon & Co. built a steam planing-mill near the depot in 1884. It is operated nine months per year, and gives employment to five men. The capacity is ten thousand feet per day.

A saw and planing-mill was built in 1886 by Albert Bacon. It has a capacity of six thousand feet per day, and employs eight men.

Bank.—By an act of Assembly passed February 7, 1812, the "Accommodation Bank of Delaware" was established at Laurel. The capital stock was not to exceed seventy-five thousand dollars, which was to be divided into fifteen hundred shares. The stock was to be subscribed for under the direction of Jesse Green, Nathan Vickers, Solomon Moore, Curtis Jacobs, John Collins, John Dashiel, Mancen Bull, Wm. B. Cooper and James Derrickson or any two of them. By a supplementary act passed February 12th of the same year, the name was changed to the "Farmers' and Mechanic's Bank of Delaware." The stock was subscribed for, and the bank opened in the building now occupied by Benjamin Hitch. The bank did an extensive business but finally failed. The exact date is unknown, but it was at some period subsequent to 1820, for on February 11th of that year an act was passed extending the charter five years from September 1, 1822. William Polk is remembered as cashier, and Isaac Williams and Wittington Tull as directors. Benjamin Hitch remembers the people speaking of the money establishment as being very pretty.

Post-Office.—The date of the settlement of the post-office at Laurel has not been ascertained. The first postmaster, remembered by any of the citizens of the town, was Isaac Copes, who had charge of the office in 1826. Since that time the office has been held by Ezekiel Richardson, Benjamin Hitch, Joseph Smith, Isaac Siron, John Ellegood, Peter Collier, Benjamin Moore, Thomas Riggan, Isaac Siron, George E. Smith and Isaac J. Wooten, the present incumbent.

Hope Lodge, No. 4, A. F. A. M. held its first meeting in Laurel on February 9, 1847. The lodge was originally instituted at Lewis by the Grand Lodge of Maryland in February, 1793, as Hope Lodge, No. 10. Among some of the names appended to the by-laws adopted in 1794, are the following: John W. Warrington, John Tennent, John Clark, Francis Brown, Robert Lacy, Thomas Fisher, Jesse Green, Phillip Kollock, James Elliott, Seth Mitchell, William Polk, John Evans, Thomas Laws and Seth Griffith. The first charter was revoked by the Grand Lodge of Maryland and a new one granted in June, 1800. At the formation of the Grand Lodge of Delaware, in 1806, this charter was surrendered and the society was chartered under its present name by the Grand Lodge of this State. After the institution of the lodge and before its establishment here, the society was stationed for short periods at Georgetown and Seaford. Meetings were originally held quarterly in March, June, September and December. The hour of meeting was four P.M., with instructions not to remain in session after ten P.M., unless there was urgent business on hand, as late hours had a tendency to bring the order into disrepute.

Meetings are now held on the first and third Tuesdays of every month in the third story of a building erected by the order in 1847, at a cost of one thousand dollars.

The present membership is twenty-seven.

The officers at the present time are as follows: W. M., D. J. Fookes; S. W., Samuel T. Smith; J. W., Dr. Joshua A. Ellegood; Treas., J. F. P. Smith; Sec'y., J. Turpin Wright; S. D., Dr. Edward Fowler; J. D., J. Dallas Marvil.

Charity Lodge, No. 27, I. O. O. F., was instituted at Laurel, July 10, 1857. The first officers as well as the charter members were: N. G., Joseph A. McFerren; V. G., John M. Phillips; Recording Secretary, Joseph Willey; F. Secretary, Thomas H. Burgess; Treasurer, Joseph Ellis.

At the end of the first year the lodge had a membership of twenty-seven, and at the present time numbers eighty-nine members.

Meetings are held every Thursday night in Odd Fellows' Hall, which is on the third floor of Smith & Bros.' hardware building. The officers at the present time are as follows: N. G., Wm. S. Burton; V. G., Joseph T. Osborn; Recording Secretary, E. B. Rigg; P. Secretary, Samuel T. Smith; Treasurer, Levin J. Marvil.

Sussex Encampment No. 4, I. O. of O. F., was instituted at Georgetown, Del., August 2, 1840. The charter members were David H. Houston, James Stuart, Charles Wilson, John D. Rodney, Jacob W. Morgan, John Stokely, Robert A. Houston and William H. Swygett.

Meetings were held there until 1875, when the Encampment was moved to Seaford and there held until 1883. Since that time the society has met at Laurel. Regular meetings are held on the second and fourth Tuesday nights of every month, in Odd Fellows' Hall. The present membership is thirty-five.

The officers at the present time are as follows: C. P., Levin J. Marvil; H. P., William S. Hitchens; S. W., Thomas Hastings; J. W., James H. Williams; Scribe, Edward L. Wolfe; Treasurer, Isaac J. Wooten.

Rosakatum Tribe, No. 15, I. O. R. M., was instituted at Laurel on June 23, 1875. The first officers of the society were: Prophet, Daniel H. Foskey; S., Joseph L. Osborn; S. S., Levin J. Marvil; J. S., E. J. Richardson; C. of R., Isaac J. Wooten; K. of W., George E. Smith. In addition to these the charter members were Emory B. Riggan, William J. Windor, Isaac H. Williams, Samuel B. Pensey, Joseph P. Smith, John W. Wiley, Samuel J. Thompson, Samuel T. Smith, Vandroth S. Marvil, William T. Hastings, James A. Adams and William F. Wainwright. At the end of the first year there were thirty-nine members, and subsequent admissions have increased the number to seventy-six. The tribe meets every Friday night, in Red Men's Wigwam, in Dr. William E. Wolfe's building on Cedar Street.

The lodge is officered at present as follows: Prophet, Joseph J. Collins; S., Isaac W. T. Hastings; S. S., Jonathan E. White; J. S., Clarence W. Hastings; C. of R., Emory B. Riggin; K. of W., Ezekiel J. Richardson.

Laurel Grange, No. 24, P. of H., was organized at Laurel in December, 1875, with thirty-two charter members. In 1879 a store was opened, which was conducted a few years and then abandoned. The grange has decreased in numbers and now has a membership of thirteen, who, however, are warm advocates of its advantages. Meetings are held every Tuesday afternoon.

The present officers are as follows: W. M., G. W. Horsley; Overseer, H. B. Lewis; Lecturer, Thomas Bacon; Steward, J. W. Anderson; Treasurer, J. B. Wheatley; Chaplain, Sarah Horsley; Secretary, T. H. Riggin; G. K., Amelia Bacon; Ceres, Phoebe J. Riggin; Pomona, Mary Anderson; Flora, Ellen Hitch; L. A. S., Kate Wheatley.

The Laurel Peninsula Agricultural and Mechanical Society was incorporated February 16, 1875. The society organized and leased land of Wm. S. Moore, and on it erected suitable buildings for fair purposes. Three fairs were held, and then the project was abandoned.

Hotels.—The oldest hotel remembered in the town of Laurel was kept as early as 1823 by Pugh Fusey, and stood on the present site of the Cannon House. It was soon afterwards sold at sheriff's sale and purchased by Caleb Ross, who leased it to George Hobs. Hobs had built a hotel on Front Street, on land now owned by W. W. Dashiell, which he managed a few years previous to 1824, when it was burned, and has never been rebuilt. Ross sold the property to James Lynch, and it later came into the possession of Wm. Sherman, who devised it to Isaac James. George M. Wooten became the next owner, and, by him the present hotel was built in 1866. He was proprietor for some time and then sold to Thomas L. Cannon, the present owner. James M. Gunby has been the proprietor for the past year.

The hotel on the site of the present Laurel House was built by Peter Wooten about the year 1820. After his death the property passed to his daughter Lavina, and after her decease to her brother, Hon. Edward Wooten, by whom it was sold to the present owner, Louis Frankel, of Philadelphia. The old hotel was moved away about eight years ago, and is now owned by Joshua H. Marvil. A new hotel was erected, which was destroyed by fire August 19, 1886. Work was immediately commenced on the present building, which was completed and opened in January, 1887. The hotel is well-furnished and the service excellent. James S. Melvin has been the proprietor for the past seven years.

In 1824 George Bridges erected a hotel on Central Avenue, on the site of the present residence of Dr. Edward Fowler. In 1827 Nancy Martin was the proprietor of this hotel. The property was next owned by Thomas Rider, who devised it to his son James. It was sold by him to Benjamin Fooks, by whom it was devised to Kendall Fooks. Daniel J. Fooks, the next owner, sold part of the land to Dr. Edward Fowler and Merril Tighman. It was last kept as a hotel about six years ago by James H. Boyce. It was soon afterwards moved from its original site, and was destroyed by fire August 19, 1886.

The building now occupied as a residence by Benjamin Hitch, and at one time used for banking purposes, has since several occasions been conducted as a hotel. The first time was shortly after the bank closed, when Jeremiah Kinney became the proprietor. It was last run as a hotel about 1858 by William Bickerts, while owned by George W. Hearn.

CHAPTER LXXXVI.

DAWESBOROUGH HUNDRED.

The greater part of this hundred was in the territory claimed by Maryland, and under the jurisdiction of that state until 1783. In that year the first survey line was defined between Maryland and Delaware, and confirmed by Mason and Dixon, in 1765, receiving official confirmation from Penn and Baltimore in 1770. It is not known that any of the lands in the middle and northern part (except along the Indian River in Pine Neck and above) were granted by Penn. Several tracts in that locality were taken up previous to 1770, from which year until 1765, warrants were granted by the Proprietary of Maryland.

The southern portion of the hundred is covered with pine, cedar and oak forests, which have for many years given to the people employment in the burning of charcoal, and the manufacture of lumber and shingles. The cypress swamps, of which there are many acres, contain trunks of buried cypress, which are being raised from the beds and made into shingles.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS.—The territory of Dawesborough Hundred was within the limits of Penn's purchase from the Duke of York, in August, 1681, which extended south to Cape Henlopen, now the eastern terminus of division line between Delaware and Maryland and from thence extending due west.
This was disputed by Lord Baltimore, who claimed north as far as Indian River. But few tracts were granted by Penn in the limits of this hundred and those along Indian River. One of which was to Peter Waples, who in 1692, bought several tracts of land at Warwick, in Indian River Hundred, and a tract opposite in Dagsborough. In September of 1692, he asked permission of the Whorekill Court, to establish a ferry across the Indian River from his house "for mutual commodious correspondence of the Inhabitants of the county with those of the province of Maryland," and desired that he alone might keep the same, which was granted. Lewes at that time was the principal settlement and Lord Baltimore had been so strenuous in his demands, that the territory claimed by him was given under his jurisdiction until a final settlement was made and which was not fully concluded until 1775. Lands within the territory in dispute were granted by him, and on the 22d of July, 1718, a large quantity was granted "to certain Indians and their heirs as long as they should think fit to reside thereon." In spite of this condition the Indians by Weeconiconus the Queen, Tonquaton, Knuconum and Robin the interpreter on the 18th of November, 1738, sold two hundred acres of the land to William Burton, and in May 22, 1741, sold two hundred more to Joshua Burton. This land with others purchased was on Pine Neck, along Indian River to Fishing Creek above Millsboro. William Burton, was a purchaser of large tracts of land in Long Neck, Indian River Hundred, in 1677, and about 1700 purchased lands in this territory, and about 1710 his son, Woolsey Burton, removed to the place where he died in 1750. He was buried on the John M. Houston farm where a slab marks his resting place. He left a son, Woolsey, from whom Benjamin Burton of Georgetown, and many others descended.

Many tracts of land were granted in small quantities by the Proprietors of Maryland to settlers who in most cases did not long remain. John Dagworthy, from whom the hundred takes its name, was distinguished in French and Indian Wars and the Revolution, and by reason of his services for Maryland, was granted a large tract of land in Maryland, but which in the final settlement was decided to be in Delaware. Gen. John Dagworthy was a native of New Jersey, and came into prominence in his native state before coming to Maryland.

A memorandum sent to the Duke of New Castle June 2, 1732, in relation to separate government in New Jersey, contains the following: "John Dagworthy, he is an honest, bold man, well affected to the government; is of the church of England; a thriving man and at present high sheriff of the county in which he resides." On February 2, 1747, he was again recommended to the Duke of New Castle and was mentioned as Captain John Dagworthy having in command a company of eighty-five active men; his services were engaged, for a short period, in Canada, from whence he returned to New Jersey. About 1754 he went to Maryland and served in the French and Indian War under Braaddock, sharing in the latter's defeat; for his services he was given a large tract of land in Worcester County, Maryland, lying at the head of Pepper's Creek, which, later, was declared to be Sussex County, Delaware. A tract called "Cypress Swamp," containing three hundred and eighty acres, which had been warranted to John Hance was assigned to him. The following tracts were also granted to him in 1755: "Archibald's Discovery," two hundred and seventy acres; June 27, 1760, "Pleasant Grove," sixteen hundred acres; "Wilderness," eight thousand three hundred and eighty acres; "Mill Land," ten hundred and thirty-three acres; "Saw Mill Supply," one hundred and twenty-five acres; and in 1760 "Timber Land Enlarged," containing one thousand seven hundred and sixty acres. In 1774 all of these tracts were re-surveyed to him under Penn and called "Dagworthy's Conquest," containing in the aggregate twenty thousand three hundred and ninety-three acres and reaching to Broad Creek Hundred. General Dagworthy, about this time, built a capacious one story house upon an eminence at the east end of the town near Frankford. The approach was a broad avenue lined with trees. There surrounded by his family and a retinue of slaves he dispensed a liberal hospitality. The house was destroyed by fire a number of years ago. The following extract from the Sussex Journal serves to record his services in the Revolutionary War:

"In 1776, in the month of May, 211 quarter-barrels of powder belonging to Maryland, arrived in Indian river, and were taken in charge by Colonel John Dagworthy, to be sent to Chestertown, Maryland, by land. There were also two brass blunderbusses, 12 swords, and 70 pounds of musket balls.

"In July, 1776, John Dagworthy, magistrate of Sussex, received depositions regarding hostile acts of the Delaware tribes who communicated with Lord Dunmore's fleet at the mouth of the Nanticoke river. 'We look upon them as a more dangerous enemy than the Europeans,' said the report; 'they know our country and are able to carry the vessels to the heads of our rivers.' The patriots add, 'There are at heart disaffected here to one firm man for America.'"

"In 1777, Thomas McClean wrote to George Read, saying: 'We made a connection in the militia, by making Mr. Rodney Major-General and Messrs. Dagworthy, Dickinson and Patterson brigadiers. . . By latter I spirited up General Dagworthy.' William Kellen wrote about this time: 'There have been about forty persons, men and women, apprehended in the head of Sussex, Etc., on suspicion of trading with the British men-of-war.'"

"Samuel Patterson wrote from Perth Amboy to George Read, Oct. 9th, 1778: 'George Parke, our acting quarter-master, was adjutant in Sussex to General Dagworthy's battalion.'"

He resided in Dagsborough until his death, and was buried under the chancel of Prince George's chapel, where his remains now lie. His daughter, Rachel, married William Hill Wells, an attorney, who spent part of his time at the Dagworthy mansion, and who came into the possession of the estate. He died in 1829, leaving four sons and a daughter: Dagworthy, Henry, Edward, Alfred and Rachel, who became the wife of William D. Waples. The latter bought the estate, and resided there. The sons of William Hill Wells all studied law, and were admitted to practice, but, with the exception of Alfred, the youngest, did not follow the profession any length of time. He went to Ithaca, N. Y., where he fol-owed his profession until his death, serving as judge of the county and as a member of Congress for the Twenty-sixth District. Henry Dagworthy was Secretary of State under Governor Hazlett, but at his death resided in Philadelphia. Edward Lloyd Wells was register of the Court of Chancery for several years, resided in Georgetown, and finally settled in Washington, where he died.

The Houston family, so long residents of this hundred, were first represented by Robert Houston, who in September, 1754, took up two hundred acres called "Houston's Folly," which lay on the south side of Indian Town Branch (now Yellow Branch). In addition to this, he purchased one hundred acres, adjoining which had been a tract surveyed to Ezekiel Walton. These lands, after the settlement of the division line of Delaware and Maryland, were re-surveyed to Robert Houston, Sr. They afterwards passed to R. Houston, Jr., and from him to his son, Robert B. Houston, who is now living in his eighty-fifth year, and who is the father of John M. Houston, ex-State Treasurer and ex-Senator.

Joseph Houston, a brother of Robert Houston, Jr., purchased of David Moore, February 5, 1785, one hundred acres, part of "Lane's Adventure," which was a Maryland warrant granted to Hinman Wharton, whose sons in 1772 sold to David Moore. Two days later, February 7, 1786, Joseph Houston purchased two hundred acres of land adjoining, also on the south side of Indian River, within a half mile of Dagborough Town. This land was bought of Nehemiah Tunnell, who received it by will from his father, William Tunnell.

The original homestead of the Houstons has been in possession of the family from its purchase in 1754. The Burtons who were early residents in Dagborough Hundred, will be found mentioned in Indian River where they first settled.

It is impossible to follow the numerous families who were early settlers in the hundred, but the following list of taxables made in the year 1785, shows clearly who were residents of the hundred at that time, but it should be borne in mind that the Cypress Swamps, in the south part of the hundred, now in Gumborough, were part of the territory but were very sparsely settled.

The extensive cypress swamps of this hundred have been from the earliest settlements a source of profit to the settlers; the Indian River, which is on its northern border, and is navigable, furnishes a means of transportation. Many saw-mills have been erected upon the Indian River and its tributaries, which have been in almost constant operation. There are also many acres of buried cypressers whose trunks have been raised and manufactured into shingles, which were used to cover not only the roofs but the sides of the houses in this section of the country.

Many fires have raged through the swamps, extending in some cases to the depth of two and three feet beneath the surface.

The earliest fire within the memory of any living was in 1817, when an area of about ten thousand acres was burned over in Worcester County, Baltimore, Dagsborough and Gumborough Hundreds.

The roads through these swamps are built of cypress, cedar and pine branches, which are laid cross-wise at a depth of two or three feet, and make a foundation for good roads.

Saw and Grist-Mills.—In 1778 Benjamin Burton, Sr., had two acres of land condemned on both sides of Fishing Creek (the first stream above Millsboro') for the use of a grist-mill. In 1848 it was owned by Benjamin Burton, of Georgetown, and Miens Burton, The latter dying shortly after, his interests passed to his son. The property is now owned by Burton & Betts.

A grist-mill was operated in 1798 by John Engle. It was sold to James Anderson, and abandoned by him in 1847.

General Dagworthy owned a grist-mill in 1800, which was in operation until 1847. It was situated at Dagsborough Bridge, near the State road.

In 1804 an act was passed enabling Benjamin Burton and Isaiah Wharton to erect a dam on Duck Creek (now Wharton's Creek), for use of a grist-mill, which has entirely disappeared.

In 1800 Colonel W. D. Waples owned a girt and saw-mill, located on “Bell Flower Stream.” It is yet in operation, having been rebuilt in 1850 by Benjamin Jones.

Joseph Marvel operated a saw-mill in 1816, located on Sabrey Branch, about a half-mile from Stockley. It was rebuilt in 1840 by John P. Marvel, and abandoned in 1892.

About the same time Simon Kollock owned a grist-mill, which he sold to Dr. Simon Wilson, who rebuilt it about 1800. It stands on Kollock's mill-dam, and is in use in operation.

In 1816 Samuel Lockwood operated a girt mill on Lockwood's mill-dam. It passed to William Lockwood, who ran it until 1837.

In 1817 Aaron Marvel established a tannery on the road from Millsboro to Pine Grove, which was abandoned in 1897, and is now called Marvel's Old Tan-yard. In 1875 Notten Marvel established a tan-yard near Pine Grove, which he still runs.

On the road laid out in 1812 from Georgetown to Pool's Mill are the nurseries of Ransford S. Johnson, which were established in 1869. In that year he came from Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania, and purchased a tract of land, the area of which was subsequently increased to four hundred acres. Much of this has been brought under a high state of cultivation, and the portion set aside for nursery purposes embraced thirty acres in 1887. Although making a specialty of peach culture, many valuable species of pears, quinces and small fruits are propagated and find ready sale at home and abroad. The stock is shipped to many remote points in the South and the West, and has given the nursery an excellent reputation.

Churches—Prince George's Chapel, Protestant Episcopal.—The exact date of the erection of this chapel cannot be determined, there being no record extant of its organization. It was built under the charge of St. Martin's Parish, at Snow Hill, Maryland. The Rev. Mr. Ross mentions, in his journal dated Lewes, August 6, 1717, that “there were two houses of worship in the vicinity, one sixteen miles from Lewes, and one in the upper part of the country not yet finished.” The last mentioned was St. Matthew's in Cedar Creek Hundred. The former was probably Prince George's, as it approximates that distance, St. George's Chapel, in Indian River Hundred, being but eight miles from Lewes, and always considered as under the charge of St. Peter's Church of that place, and was not at that time built.

The history of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts mentions the visit of Rev. George Ross to this section of country in August, 1717, and says he set out from Lewes “to a place of worship about sixteen miles from Lewes. It is a small frame building erected by a few well-disposed persons in order to meet together to worship God;” and further that Mr. Ross baptized twenty-five children and several grown persons.

The building was originally a frame structure and has been added to and repaired as occasion required. Samuel Derrickson, a member of this chapel, represented the diocese in the Episcopal Convention which met at Dover in 1771. General John Dagworthy enlarged the chapel by the addition of a transept. The Bible used in the early days of the chapel is in possession of Mrs. Hickman, who lives with her son Peter, at Baltimore Mills. It was published in London by Thomas Baskett in 1750, and is covered with tapestry which is almost worn off with use. The chapel is now only treasured as a relic to mark the efforts of those pioneers who associated the Christian cause with their own fortunes. The congregations for several years have worshipped in a neat sanctuary which now stands near Lamb's Woods.

Dagsborough Chapel (Methodist Episcopal) was erected in 1822, when the following were the trustees, viz., Elisha W. Carran, Benjamin Wingate, Wilson Campbell, Benjamin Warrington and F. B. Biggins. It has fifty members.

Pine Grove Chapel (Methodist Protestant) was built in 1886, on land donated by Harrison Rogers, and dedicated by Jacob Nicholson. The trustees were Harrison Rogers, John P. Ennis and William Rodney.

Houston Mission, at Hickory Hill, was erected in 1897, with thirty members, including the trustees—John M. Houston, Sheppard Kollock and James Williams. It is on the Frankford Circuit, and has sixty members.

On the 10th of April, 1819, Joshua Robinson sold to Arthur Williams, David Hazzard, Stephen Ellis, John Hazzard and Perry Pool seventy-eight square perches of land on which to erect a Methodist meeting-house. The locality of this house was not ascertained.

Schools.—About 1780 a Mr. Rollins taught school in the hundred. In 1778 Major Benson, a surveyor, taught in an old log house which stood on the farm of Shadrach Short. Between 1800 and 1813 there were three teachers who held school in old houses, the sessions lasting in the short days of the season, from sunrise to sunset. Their names were Job Runnels, Henry Runnels and Thomas Marvel. The names of a few who have since taught are James Dickerson, David Vance, Joseph Kollock, Houston Hall, Henry Brill, Edward Denny, John Jones, Samuel Vaughn, Dr. James Hudson, James Johnson, William Casque, Geo. Hilderbrand, Daniel Drain (a Revolutionary soldier, who is said to have taught sixty years).

The Lamb School-House, as it is called, was built about 1885, and is now used both as school-house and chapel for the members of Prince George Chapel.

The hundred at present contains fourteen districts and parts of districts which have accommodations for four hundred scholars.

Millsborough lies partly in this hundred and partly in Indian River Hundred. The original name in the latter place was Rock Hole, which, by an act of the Legislature, passed January 30, 1809, was changed to Millsborough. That part in Dagsborough was called Washington. After the removal of the post-office from Indian River to the latter place in 1837 both sides received the name of Millsborough.

Its site is a portion of the land originally purchased of the Indians by William Burton. In 1792 an act was passed enabling Elisha Dickinson "to erect a mill-dam across the head-waters of Indian River near the place called Rock Hole in Indian River Hundred, and for the condemnation of a small piece of land on the south side of the river for use of grist-mill and log-yard." The mill in 1816 was operated by Charles M. Cullin, who married the widow of Elisha Dickinson. It had several owners, but is now abandoned.

Millsborough Furnace.—Several large furnaces were in operation in Sussex County before the Revolution, and had gone down, and several forged were in operation in the western part of the county before the War of 1812. About 1816 a stock company was organized at Millsborough, consisting of Col. William D. Waples, Robinson Waples and others, for the purpose of manufacturing iron. They erected a small charcoal furnace near Indian River, at Millsborough, and put it in blast. It was under their management until 1822, when Samuel G. Wright, an iron master of Monmouth County, New Jersey, purchased the plant and also bought land and ore rights on the Nanticoke and its tributaries, which formerly belonged to the Deep Creek and Pine Grove Furnaces. The furnace was placed in charge of Derrick Barnard.

About 1825 Wright erected, near the furnace, a foundry. In the years 1828–30 there was produced at the furnace and foundry 450 tons of pig iron and 350 tons of castings. In 1852 Gardner H. Wright, son of Samuel G., became interested in the property and managed it until 1856, when the furnace was abandoned. The foundry was continued until 1879, being used in later years mostly for the manufacture of plows. In that year the moulds and patterns were sold, and taken to Georgetown, where they are still used in a foundry. When the furnace and foundry were both in operation the water-pipes for the Croton Water Works, New York, the railings formerly around Independence Square and castings for the Eastern Penitentiary, Philadelphia, were cast at this place. Millsborough, in the days of the furnace, was of more importance than Georgetown. It was the head of navigation and was the terminus of a stage-route in charge of Col. Waples, who had there stables accommodating between fifty and sixty horses. In 1816 he owned a tan-yard, granary, store-house and other buildings. Col. Waples erected the tannery previous to that year, and, having continued the business until 1845, sold it to Daniel and David Burton. About 1855 Benjamin Burton operated it, being succeeded by John Burton, who, in 1865, abandoned the place.

The first store was established here by John Lacy in 1811. The original house is now occupied by Jeannette Burton. He was followed by James West. Benjamin Whadems kept store for a number of years at "Whadems' Wharf," which is now gone down. The storekeepers during the years 1834–47 were Noble T. Jerman, Hitch & Giles and others.

Millsborough Box Factory was established by Perry, Houston & Co. in 1882. Ten thousand feet of lumber is sawed daily and used in the box-factory.

A drug-store was opened in 1886 by Dr. John W. Fooks.
The post-office was moved from the other side of the river in 1837. The postmasters since that time have been Gardner H. Wright, John West, Anthony Hastings, Purnell Pettijohn, John Benson, John Cardrey, Dr. George Burton, William H. Betts, Ashbur Burton and Edward Burton, the present incumbent.

St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal Church at Millborough, built in 1849, on land donated by M. S. Burton, is a branch of the church at Dagsborough. The trustees at the time of its erection were M. E. Burton, Benjamin Burton, Gardner H. Wright, Woolsey Burton, Asahel Dodd and Joseph Kellow. The following pastors have occupied the pulpit: Revs. William Wright, Geo. Hall, Samuel Rambo and W. R. Ellis. The latter having preached for twenty years, died in March, 1887.

Millborough Methodist Episcopal Church was built in 1874, and dedicated August 18th the same year by Rev. Anthony Atwood. The trustees were Richard F. Hastings. Noble Jerman, James Baker, Anthony G. Hastings. Services previous to the erection of the present chapel were held in the old school-house, which now stands back of Millborough.

Frankford Village (formerly Gum's store) is located at the edge of the hundred, on part of "Dagworthy's Conquest." The first business place was a store opened in 1808 by Isaiah Long, who was succeeded by Manasse Gum. The latter occupied it for thirty-three years, and was followed by George Long. It was torn down in 1848 and replaced the same year.

The post-office was established in 1848, and has been kept since by Manasse Gum, John Long, Edward Kirkpatrick, John Layton and Edward Collins.

A hotel was established about 1860 by William Halloway. The present one is kept by L. W. Cannon.

The Methodist Church was built in 1852, and the Presbyterian Church in 1881; the former is on Frankford circuit and the latter is in charge of the ministers of Blackwater Church.

The most extensive business ever conducted in Frankford was established by Charles H. Treat, who in 1877 leased the old Gum Mill, and began the manufacture of patent barrels, which he continued for eighteen months. After numerous experiments with native woods for veneering purposes, he decided to embark largely in that direction, and with James M. and Norman B. Huxford, under the name of Huxford & Company, built extensive works, well fitted with steam and machinery for making veneers, plaques and boxes. The works were continued until 1883, when they were removed to Georgetown.

Frankford has at present five stores, kept by John T. Long, Everett Hieckman, John Steel, Edward Collins and Layton & Bro.; one hotel kept by L. W. Cannon; one physician, Dr. Francis M. Gum.

DAGSBOROUGH Village is located on that part of "Dagworthy's Conquest" taken up by General John Dagworthy, from whom it derived its name. In deeds recorded previous to 1780, it is mentioned "as the place formerly called Blackfoot town, but now Dagsbury."

One of the first industries established in Dagsborough was the tannery, which was built by James Clayton, prior to 1796. It was at this place (the old house is torn down) that the Hon. John M. Clayton was born and passed the early years of his life. The tannery was conducted by Mr. Clayton several years. John Richards and William Dunning learned the trade of a tanner at this place. The latter, about 1809, became the owner of the property and continued it until 1847, when he was elected register of the county, and removed to Georgetown, and the tannery was abandoned.

General Dagworthy erected a saw-mill near the place, which was operated several years.

Dagsborough is noted as being the residence of Dr. Edward Dingle, William Dunning and Colonel William D. Waples, who were all chosen as delegates to form the Constitution of 1832.

The Hon. William Hill Wells resided in the old Dagworthy mansion part of the time when he entertained the officers of the court, after sessions at Georgetown, and many other people of note. He succeeded Joshua Clayton, January 18, 1799, as United States Senator, and continued until 1894, and was again elected in 1818, and died in 1829. He and his wife are buried in Prince George Chapel churchyard.

Dagsborough at present has four stores and one physician, Dr. Thomas Hitch.

CHAPTER LXXVII.

BALTIMORE HUNDRED.

The right to the possession of Baltimore Hundred for nearly a century previous to 1775 was in dispute between Maryland and Delaware. In that year the boundary line was officially determined in favor of Delaware so far as this hundred was concerned. The land warrants issued before the settlement of the dispute were claimed to be in Worcester County, Maryland. The hundred is bounded on the north by Indian River Bay, south by Maryland, east by the Atlantic Ocean and west by Dagsborough Hundred. Early in the present century great quantities of salt were found along the coast. It was sold throughout the county and also shipped to Philadelphia, New York and other markets. About the same time shipbuilding was followed to a considerable extent on the southern banks of the Indian River for several years.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.—Prior to the occupation, in 1682, by Penn, of the territory embraced in this hundred, a number of patents were issued by the Duke of York. The lower line of Penn's purchase was Fenwick's Island, then named Cape Henlopen. (The present cape bearing that name was then called Cape "Cornellis," later "Henlopen.""") A dispute arose between Penn and Lord Baltimore as to which cape was meant, in defining the boundaries of their provinces. William Penn ordered a surveyor to lay out a tract of ten thousand acres for a manor for the Duke of York, the location suggested being a "rich ridge" at the head of Murderkill Creek, near the "Cheptank Road." The manor, for some reason, was located on what is now Fenwick's Island, some miles from the situation originally designated. The warrant of survey bears date of March 4, 1688. The tract was not then an island, but many years ago a ditch was dug on its landward side which, through the action of the tide, has become a channel, fifty yards wide and fifteen feet deep, completely isolating it from the mainland. Fenwick's Island light-house was built in 1857, with a tower eighty feet high, and a revolving light, visible twenty miles at sea. The keepers have been John Smith, 1857; W. R. Hall, 1881; David M. Warrington, 1869; John Gum, 1878; the present keeper, John Bennett, was appointed in 1877.

In 1688, Matthew Scarborough was granted a tract of five hundred acres called "Middlesex," in the name of Charles, absolute Lord and Proprietor of the Provinces of Maryland and Avalon, Lord Baron of Baltimore. By the same authority in 1718 he took up another tract, "David's Lot," containing sixty-six acres, adjoining "Middlesex." The latter was surveyed in 1739 for David Hazzard. It afterwards came into possession of Adam Hall, at whose death it passed to John Hall, his son. Selby Evans and Elizabeth, his wife, the daughter of Hall, now live on the original tract.

William Hazzard, brother of David, took up a tract of fifty acres in 1747 called "Hap-hazard." "Middlesex," "David's Lot" and "Hap-hazard," include all the land lying south of Indian River Bay, north of the road leading to the beach. The village of Ocean View is located on one of these tracts. The Evans family, so numerous in this locality, are descendants of David Evans, a Presbyterian preacher, and a native of Wales, who came to this country with a colony of Welsh in 1704, and settled upon a tract of land in Pencader Hundred, New Castle County, known as the "Welsh Tract." He was one of the founders of the Presbyterian Church in that hundred in 1738. Later he moved to Pedee, North Carolina, where a colony had located. Some of his sons came to Baltimore Hundred, where they assisted in founding Blackwater Church.

Lemuel Evans, a native of Muddy Neck, represented the State of Texas in Congress about 1859. He afterwards became a judge of that State.

"Stockley's Adventure," containing three hundred and sixty acres, was taken up in 1738 by Avery Morgan. This parcel lies on the south side of Indian River. It passed successively to William Massey, John Roberts and Thomas Robinson. The latter bequeathed it to Miers B. and Thomas Steel. Their father, John Steel, now owns and lives on it.

"Pearson's Choice," one hundred and ninety-three acres, was taken up in 1754 by Thomas Pearson, and re-surveyed in 1760 for Thomas Wildgoose. The latter had three sons—Joseph, Robert and Jacob. Joseph took up a tract of two hundred acres, called "Summerfield," at the head of Assawoman Bay, on which he lived and died. Robert was born in 1757, on the original homestead. He married Leigh Taylor, to whom were born four sons and five daughters—John, Samuel, Robert and Jacob; Tabitha, Elizabeth, Sarah, Gracie and Mary. Each of the sons reached his seventy-fifth year. Robert and Samuel are now deceased; John emigrated to Logan County, Ohio, where he now resides, aged ninety-one years. Jacob was born at the old homestead in 1786; he now lives in Roxannah, engaged in business with his son, Robert Wilgus.

"Addition," a tract of two hundred and ninety-eight acres, was surveyed for Moses Dasey on a Maryland warrant, dated September 11, 1759. It embraced land taken up by him in 1719, situated in the backwoods from Indian River, west of Thomas Dasey's "Plantation." Moses also took up a tract called "Crooked Lott," on a warrant issued by John Penn, July 15, 1778, on the road leading from Cedar Branch to Cedar Neck. Thomas Dasey, Sr., also had property on the east side of Assawoman Bay, called "Fowl's Delight," which adjoined the tract "Cherry Bark." He had surveyed to him in 1725 a tract called "Little Worth," which contained forty-two acres, together with forty-one acres of vacant land. This was resurveyed in 1777 for Thomas Aydelott.

"Jacob's Struggle" containing two hundred and eight acres, taken up by Jacob Gray, was resurveyed to John Aydelott, February 13, 1750. It was "on the west side of a creek issuing from the Indian River, and adjoining the former residence of Edward Clark" and "Evans' Venture." Joshua Gibbons, July 7, 1776, had resurveyed a purchase of three hundred acres originally taken up by Philip Wingate. The same year he took up a tract of sixty acres called "Bald Eagle's Roost," and another called "Elbow Room Retreat," comprising one hundred and forty-six acres. This family were among the constituent members of the Old Sound Baptist Church.

A tract called "Young Man's Adventure," was surveyed to James Layton in 1776, which has since passed from the family.

All the lands taken up in Maryland patents were resurveyed by the surveyors of Penn's government in 1776. The following names are from the assessment roll of Baltimore Hundred in 1785, and show the land-owners at that time:

1 The ancestor of this family, now called Wilgus, was Otto Wilgus, who was a settler in the vicinity of Lewes in 1675, and one of the magistrates of the county.

INDUSTRIES.—January 24th an act was passed by the Legislature to enable William Darrickson, Richard Clark, Ebe Walter and James Fassett to erect a mill dam across Assawoman Creek, near "Sleep Point," at the head of the creek. For this purpose two acres on the north side and two on the south side were condemned. They erected a grist and saw-mill, which passed from them to William Darrickson and was operated by the latter until 1847, when it was abandoned. A steam saw-mill is now operated by Jacob Wilgus, who built it in 1855. The daily capacity is nine thousand feet.

The tracts first taken up by settlers are situated on the highest plane in the hundred. Outside of these choice parcels the land was low and swampy, and enterprises were consequently projected to drain this partially submerged territory. So well have they succeeded that the bottom-lands have become the most fertile corn-growing section of the hundred. Robert Burton was one of the first to undertake the work of reclamation, and from this beginning grew the organization of companies to carry on the enterprise with larger means. The Beaver Dam Ditch Company was incorporated February 28, 1865, with the following members: Nathaniel Tunnell, John Bennett, Kendall Rickards, David Godwin, William D. Layton, Thomas E. Hall, Ann M. West, Charles D. Bennett, James H. Godwin, Sarah Derrickson, John Bennett, John M. Taylor, Henry B. Murry, Isaac C. West and others. The work of this company in drainage has been extensive and beneficial.

The General Assembly has granted authority for the construction of a canal of seventy-two feet width and six feet deep from Jefferson Creek, the head of Little Assawoman Bay, to White's Creek, a branch of Indian River Bay. The proposed canal will lie entirely within Baltimore Hundred, and if constructed, will add thirteen miles of inland navigation to the water-courses between Chincoteague Inlet, Va., and Jefferson Creek.

CHURCHES.—Blackwater Presbyterian Church was built in 1767. In that year Charles Tennent, its first pastor, began his pastoral labors. He came of the family of that name which is celebrated in the annals of early Presbyterianism on this continent. His father was a pastor and teacher at the “Old Log College,” which has since become the renowned and revered Princeton, and his brothers were among the organizers of the church at New Castle and of the Buckingham in Maryland. The elders of Blackwater Church with Mr. Tennent were Joseph Miller, Ebenezer Evans, John Evans, Wm. Tunnell, John Aydelott, Thomas Harnig and Thomas Wingate. Mr. Tennent was succeeded by James Wilson, son of Matthew Wilson, of Philadelphia. He, among others, supplied the pulpit until 1771, in which year Rev. Josiah Lewis was installed pastor. In 1774 Rev. John Rankin became pastor and preached for twenty consecutive years, until his death, in 1794. During Mr. Rankin’s pastorate the following elders comprised the session: Jonathan Harvey, Enoch Scudder, William Evans, Josah Collins, Philip White, William S. Hall, Elihu Bredell and James Miller.

Rev. Chas. Wallace succeeded Mr. Rankin in 1794, and occupied the pulpit until 1808, when Rev. Stuart Williamson became pastor and continued six years. John Burton and others preached until 1812, when Charles Wallace returned and remained five years, being followed by Joseph Copeland and others. In 1821 Blackwater Church had become almost extinct. After a three years’ pastorate, which was ended by death, Thomas Kennedy was succeeded in 1825 by Alexander Campbell. In 1831 the first session of elders had passed away. In 1839, Rev. I. H. K. Handy became pastor of what was called the United Churches of Buckingham, Blackwater and Laurel. The union was formed to insure a salary for a permanent pastor. Later the union was dissolved by the Buckingham congregation, which requested the exclusive services of Mr. Handy. H. C. Freis accepted the pastorate in 1841, and was succeeded in 1849 by C. H. Mustard, who, about 1851, withdrew to Lewes and Cool Spring Churches. The pulpit remained vacant until 1858. In that year I. W. K. Handy again occupied it, and having preached, two years, responded to a call from the First Presbyterian Church of Portsmouth, Virginia. William Graham in 1855 accepted the call to Blackwater. A year later the Ocean View Presbyterian Church was organized by the congregation of Blackwater, Mr. Graham preaching the dedicatory sermon in the newly-built church.

In 1857 Mr. Graham was succeeded by C. H. Mustard, who, from old age, retired in 1865. Until 1871 there was no preacher in Blackwater or Ocean View Churches. From that year until 1878 Rev. H. J. Gaylord (now in Kansas) preached, being succeeded by Rev. J. B. Adams, after whom came John T. Fouk. Ocean View and Frankford Presbyterian Churches are branches of Blackwater Church.

The Sounds Baptist Church was the second Baptist Church in the State of Delaware, and one of the constituent churches of the Salisbury Association, formed in 1782, which the same year was united with the Philadelphia Association. In the fall of 1778, Rev. Elijah Baker came to the State from Virginia and began preaching. He was soon followed by Rev. Philip Hughes. Meetings were held at Broad Creek, Gravely Branch, the head of the Sound and other places. The result of these meetings was many conversions, and several churches were formed. The first was at the Sounds, and was organized August 12, 1779, with twenty-one members, viz.: John Gibbons, John Gibbins Jr., Jonathan Gibbins, Samuel Gibbins, Sarah Gibbins, Jaen Gibbins, Elizabeth Gibbins, Eliphas Dazezy, Thomas Wildgoose, Isaac Duncan, Sarah Duncan, Sarah Duncan, Jr., Mary Bull, John Tull, Hannah Tull, Mary Clark, Mary Ake, Rhoda Hickman, Rachel Emon and Rose, a negro.

The meetings were held in the dwellings of John Tull and Thomas Wildgoose, and no house of worship was ever erected. By reason of emigration the church lost its members gradually and long since was abandoned. During the first thirteen years of its organization six persons were here schooled for the ministry. Their names were John, Samuel and Jonathan Gibbins, Eliphas Dazezy, Gideon Farrel and Edward C. Dingle.

The first ministers of this church were its founders, Revs. Baker and Hughes, who, in Virginia, Maryland and Delaware, planted twenty-one churches.

On April 16, 1787, Rev. Jonathan Gibbins was ordained a pastor, and appointed to take charge of the Sounds Church. He also had the care of Broad Creek Church until they obtained a minister of their own. He was born in Broad Creek Hundred, Dec. 16, 1751.
The Old Sound M. E. Church is one of the oldest of that denomination in Sussex County. Freeborn Garretson preached in this section for several years, holding services under the branches of a white oak which yet stands about a mile north of the present church, and at the head of Assawoman Bay. Speaking of the meetings held there, he says, in his diary: "The work of the Lord broke out there, the people wept on every side, and after a sermon of three hours seemed fixed to the spot." It is a tradition that he felled the first tree that was used in the erection of the chapel which, with the aid of thirty converts, he built in 1784.

It was of hewed frame, and shingled on sides as well as roof. One acre of ground was purchased, for which twenty shillings were paid. The deed, bearing date of April, 1784, was granted to Trustees James Laws, John Aydelott, Solomon Evans, Arthur Williams, Andrew Williams, Ezekiel William, John Dier, William Powell and John Coe. William Powell was elected clerk. The deed contains the proviso "that the ministers preach no other doctrine than is contained in Rev. John Wesley's notes on the New Testament, and his four volumes of sermons." From the year of its erection until 1806, services were held without interruption. In that year a meeting of the trustees was held, at which it was decided to adjourn sine die. This action was taken on account of the lack of money necessary to repair the chapel, which had become wholly unfit for use. In 1807, after ten days' notice, the congregation again convened, when the name was changed to Williams' Chapel. The trustees elected were Arthur Williams, Ezekiel Williams, William Rickarde, William Powell, Thomas Evans, Robert Wildgoose and Isaac Rogers. The old church was repaired and again occupied. In 1825 it was again in need of repairs, and an appeal for subscriptions was made to "all charitable and well-meaning persons, friendly to the religion of Christ." A year later it was rebuilt, and services were held until 1876. At that time it was abandoned, and a new church erected about a mile southeast of the original site. It is yet occupied, and services are being held regularly.

Long's Chapel, M. E. (colored), was built in 1883. The land was donated by James Bishop to Trustees James Williams, George Bingle, Handy Selby, Arnold Purnell and John Hutchins. The chapel has now a membership of thirty persons.

Selbyville.—This thriving little town lies near the line dividing Delaware from Maryland. While its territory was still under Maryland jurisdiction, one Matthew McCabe was a resident in the vicinity and a blacksmith. His principal business was the forging of plow-shares. He served as a soldier through the Revolution, and died of the small-pox in after years. He lived upon a tract of thirty acres called "Long Lot," which, in 1818, was resurveyed to Arthur McCabe. A year previous to that time Joseph Jens and Isaiah Long erected a saw-mill upon the Run at the place now known as Selby's Mill-pond, which they conducted for many years and sold to Samuel Selby, who, in 1842, moved a store to the place from over in Maryland. Selby sold his store to William S. McCabe, the present owner, who, in 1850, built another store, which ranks third in the commercial interest of Sussex County.

Other stores were opened from time to time and have been kept respectively by Stephen Long, Jos. Layton, William G. Davis, John D. McCabe, George W. Ivins and John Poole. In 1873 a saw-mill was moved to Selbyville by Messrs. Parker and Garmon from Wicomico County, Maryland, and three years later removed to Williamsville, where it is now operated. The Selbyville "Steam Saw and Planing Mill," with a daily capacity of eight thousand feet, was erected in 1881, by E. J. Long, J. McNell and H. Campbell.

W. S. McCabe & Son have erected a steam flour-mill, with a capacity of thirty barrels a day. In connection with this there is an elevator to facilitate the shipment of the surplus grain.

The post-office was established in 1845, with Josiah Selby as postmaster. He was succeeded by the following persons: Isaac McCabe, W. S. McCabe, E. M. McCabe, W. G. Davis, John W. Poole and the present official, Miss Annie Dukes.

Salem M. E. Church, at Selbyville, was organized by a congregation which first worshipped in the residence of David Murray. The first church building was erected about 1812 in a pine thicket near Sandy Branch, and was also used as a school-house. It was occupied until 1847, when the second church was built. This gave way in 1884 to the present building, in the corner-stone of which are sealed the histories of its predecessors.

There are two public burial-grounds at the town, in which interments still take place. The oldest is the "Joseph Long," the first interment having taken place over a hundred years ago. The "Hickory Tree Graveyard" derives its name from the fact that the remains of Mary Campbell, oldest daughter of Benjamin, and the first person interred, lie under a hickory tree, which is still standing.

Roxanna.—This hamlet is situated about four miles northwest of Selbyville. It has had three names, "Dog's Ear Corner," "Centreville" and the present. At the head of the Sound, Joseph Wilgus opened a store in 1794, which he continued until 1801. He also operated a brandy still, to which the fruits of the surrounding country were taken for distillation, and his books show that the spirit was sold by him in small quantities. His successors in this store were John P. Burton and Nathaniel Tunnell. It long since disappeared.

The first store in the immediate vicinity was established by Jacob Wilgus in 1846. This he abandoned, and, in 1853, opened a new establishment, which is conducted under the firm-name of Jacob Wilgus & Son (Robert). The original house now stands opposite, and is used for storage. A store at Bayard (near Roxanna) is kept by Harbison H. Hickman. John Tingle, a mulatto, had a blacksmith-shop here about 1770, which he operated until 1779. His successor in the place was John P. Burton, who kept it for several years. The post-office was established in 1868, with Jacob E. Lynch postmaster, who served seventeen years. Jasper Dawson is the present incumbent.

Ocean View, originally called Hall's Store, is located on the tract known as "Middlesex." A post-office was established there in 1822, with W. S. Hall as postmaster, who also kept a store at the place. James W. Davis now keeps the store and is postmaster.

The Presbyterian Church was established in 1856 as a branch of the Blackwater Presbyterian Church, and is served by the minister in charge of the latter.

There are several hamlets in the hundred which contain a store and post-office. The place called Tunnell's Store has been known as such for many years. A post-office was established there in 1857. A post-office was established at Bayard in 1886, with H. H. Hickman postmaster. Blackwater was made a postal station in 1821. Williamsville post-office was established in 1879. The postmasters have been Thomas Taylor, Rufus Atkins and Samuel Bradford. Millville post-office was established in 1886, with J. C. Dukes postmaster, who also has at the place a store.

On the road from Blackwater to Indian River a store was built by Zadoc Aydelott in 1828, who sold goods there a few years, when his son, John, succeeded him, and continued until 1838, when he sold to Ebe Tunnell. In 1842 his son, Nathaniel Tunnell, purchased the property and kept the store until 1864, when his son, Ebe W. Tunnell, became proprietor. In 1866 Stephen C. Aydelott became associated with him, under the firm-name of Aydelot & Tunnell, which firm still continues. At Townsend's Landing, on Indian River, has long been a store-house and store, kept by the Townsends, and at the mouth of Blackwater Creek ship-yards formerly existed.

Schools.—As early as 1799, Stephen Ellis, a farmer, teacher and preacher, taught school in Baltimore Hundred. The sessions were held in his own house, which stood near Roxana. His fees was fifty cents a quarter for each pupil. From that year until 1826 empty cottages, at intervals, were occupied for school purposes. Previous to 1826, Captain James Tunnell master of the vessel "American Trader," taught some scholars, the sessions being held, in turns, at the houses of the pupils.

Captain Tunnell donated the site upon which, in 1824, was erected the first school-house known as "Black Water." It is now used as a barn on the farm of Absalom Murry. After the erection of Salem Methodist Episcopal Church, in 1812, sessions were held there for several years, but, about 1825, a school-house was built at Roxanna by subscriptions of labor and material by each citizen. In 1835 a school-house was erected by subscription in District No. 31, then very large and now embracing Roxanna.

Among the early schoolmasters of the hundred were Stephen Ellis, Captain James Tunnell, Daniel Drain, John Daze, James Turner, James Johnson, Feleg Hellem, Jacob Hellem, Jesse Jefferson, Ezekiel W. Dickerson, John Dewberry, James Lofland, Clem Lofland, James Murry, John Wilgus, James Coffin, William Huff, Robert Long.

In 1829, when the county was divided into school districts, Baltimore was made into districts from No. 26 to 51 inclusive. Since that time they have been divided many times—and there are at present twenty-one districts and parts of districts.

CHAPTER LXXVIII.

GUMBOROUGH HUNDRED.

This is the smallest hundred in the State, and was the last erected. It is watered by the Pocomoke River, which, having its source in Broad Creek, flows nearly centrally through it. The numerous tributaries of that river furnish a convenient outlet for the surplus waters of that section. The inhabitants of the southern section of Broad Creek and Dagsborough Hundreds petitioned the Legislature to erect a new hundred, to be called Gumborough, out of the southern portions thereof, and the petition being presented to the Legislature in 1872-73, an act was passed April 4, 1873, erecting Gumborough Hundred and defining its boundaries as follows:

"That all those parts of Broad Creek and Dagsborough Hundreds in Sussex County included within the following limits be and are hereby erected into and established into a new Hundred, to be called Gumborough, to wit: Beginning at a stone on the Delaware and Maryland State line, near the line E. R. Church; thence along the middle of the public road passing by Parsons' store, Whitesville, Tucker hill school-house, to the line dividing Broad Creek and Little Creek Hundred; thence along the said line to a public road near Bethesda M. R. Church; thence along the middle of said road across Terrapin Mill-dam, taking the middle of the right hand public road at that point; thence along the middle of the said road by Eliah Hudson's, the Widow West's to the Bacon or English steam saw-mill; thence leaving said saw-mill and to and with the line dividing school districts number 43 and 53 until it intersects with the line dividing Broad Creek and Dagsborough Hundreds; thence with the said line to the public road leading from Lowe's Crossroads to the high house on the land of Tilibrium S. Johnson; thence with a straight line to the long bridge in the cedar swamp; thence with the high bridge till it intersects the Delaware and Maryland line, and thence along the said line to the place of beginning."
The history of Gumborough in general is contained in that of Dagsborough and Broad Creek Hundreds, and what follows here relates particularly to its present territorial limits. The land constituting the hundred was originally part of "Dagworthy's Conquest," which, containing in the whole twenty thousand three hundred and ninety-three acres, was resurveyed for General John Dagworthy in 1776.\(^1\)

A list of the residents of Dagsborough and Broad Creek Hundreds in 1755, embracing the territory of the present hundred, will be found in the history of those hundreds.

Early Settlements.—A large part of this hundred was embraced in the tract of land that in 1776 was resurveyed to John Dagworthy as "Dagworthy's Conquest," and which in smaller lots was granted to him on Maryland patents in 1768. A part of the tract had been taken up earlier, and came to his possession at that time. On the border of Maryland, and also partly in that State, in a neck of land called "Wimbosocum," Thomas Paramore took up a tract of land called "Friendship," seventy-nine acres of which, on the 18th of December, 1792, he sold to Jonathan Betts, adjoining land of Peter Dolbee's. Another tract called "Mount Pleasant" was warranted on Maryland patent in 1748 to George Parker, who soon after made an assignment to Robert Ginkins Henry. This tract passed to Planner Shores, who, September 25, 1795, sold one hundred acres to Jonathan Betts, who, by purchase before this time and after, acquired considerable land in the vicinity. Planner Shores owned a large tract of land, and sold to trustees of Line Church the land on which the church stands.

Several hundred acres of the Dagsborough land lying in this hundred came to George Frame, ex-sheriff, about 1815, but he never settled upon it. Samuel Short, prior to 1812, settled upon a tract called "Oldfield," lying in the territory formerly belonging to Broad Creek. In his diary of 1815 he mentions a peach orchard, and that corn was quoted at $167 per bushel. Isaac Short was a resident at the same time.

Joshua Jones took up several hundred acres of land embracing the land on which the old Bevans Mill stood. It passed to Hezekiah W. Phillips and John Morris and in 1821 it became the property of George Hearne and was inherited by Lowther Hearne, who also purchased of his father, May 17, 1836, three hundred acres in the vicinity. The property is now owned by his widow and their sons, one of whom, Joseph, was a member of the House of Representatives.

About 1833 Joseph Barnard began the purchase of land in what is now Gumborough and Dagsborough, and in a few years was in possession of several thousand acres of forest land. He made an extensive clearing, which was called "Newfoundland." After his death the land passed to Isaac Short and Ebenezer Gray, both of whom were old residents. The land of Isaac Short is now owned by his sons, Shadrach and Isaac. Gray's tract is owned by his widow.

\(^1\) See Dagsborough.

Old Line Methodist Episcopal Church.—On January 31, 1785, Planner Shores granted to Solomon Viisen, Benjamin Viisen, Thomas Wells, Jacob Jones, John Farlow, William Farlow, Hezekiah Maddox, Jacob Evans and Thomas McCliah, trustees, one acre of a tract, "Pleasant Grove," lying partly in Maryland and partly in Delaware. It was conveyed to them for religious uses and soon afterwards a one-story frame, building, eighteen by twenty-four feet, was erected. Divine services were conducted in this edifice until about 1838, when it was replaced by a larger frame structure, about twenty-four by thirty-six feet. Both of these churches stood on the line separating Maryland and Delaware and from this fact arose the name "Line Church."

In 1874 it was found necessary to erect a more commodious building, and the present frame structure, thirty-four by forty-six feet, with recess pulpit, was built at a cost of sixteen hundred dollars. One hundred and twenty-five communicants comprise the present membership. The financial interests of the church are managed by a board of trustees composed of J. G. White, I. N. Hearn, I. T. Hearn, John W. Smith, James P. McFadden, Wm. S. White and Geo. W. White.

In connection with the church is a Sunday-school of one hundred and fifty members, under the superintendence of Eli N. White.

The church was connected with the same circuits and served by the same pastors as the Laurel Church until 1860, when it was annexed to Berlin Circuit. It thus remained until 1866, when it was assigned to Gumboro' Circuit. Since 1860 the following pastors have officiated:

- Rev. T. W. Hammersley...1860-62
- Rev. Geo. D. Conaway.....1872-75
- T. S. Williams...........1864-66
- Jos. Lewis (local preacher) 1866-67
- Rev. Geo. D. Conaway.....1867-68
- J. A. D. Williams......1867-71
- Rev. Geo. D. Conaway.....1872-73
- Adam Stengle..........1871-72
- B. C. Jones.....1872-73

St. John's Episcopal Church at Little Hill or Greenville is an offshoot from Christ Church in Broad Creek Hundred, and was founded by the Rev. Hamilton Bell, then rector of Stepney Parish, Md., which embraced Christ Church in its bounds. The Rev. Mr. Bell died in 1811, and in the course of the frame building became much decayed, and in 1841 the parish was abandoned; but upon a visit to the place by Bishop Lee in 1842, an interest was manifested by the congregation to revive the church and the old building was repaired and remodeled. It was consecrated November 5, 1843, and continued until about 1876, when services were discontinued.

GUMBOROUGH CHAPEL (Methodist Episcopal) was built in 1865, on land donated by Ebenezer Gray. The trustees were Ebenezer Gray, Joshua Hudson, Jacob Gumby and John M. Dale. It originally belonged to the Methodist Protestants, who, having held services there for ten years, sold it to the Methodist Episcopal congregation. The latter moved it to Gumborough, where it now stands. There are now forty-five members enrolled.

SCHOOLS.—Probably one of the oldest school-houses in the hundred is the one known as Battle Hill, about one mile and a half from Gum Hill, which was built before 1813, as in that year it was mentioned as an old house. In that year Thomas Neal Martin was a teacher in the house, and was followed by David Peterkin and other teachers who are mentioned in Dagsborough and Baltimore Hundreds. Thomas Neal Martin taught school in 1816 in St. John's Church. In 1829, when Sussex County was divided into school districts, the territory now Gumborough was made into Districts 36, 37 and part of 43. Since that time the districts have been divided, and it now has eight other districts and parts of districts, and which contain accommodation for four hundred and fifty pupils, who are reported as in attendance in 1886.

INDUSTRIES.—The people of the hundred are mostly devoted to agricultural pursuits, and but little other improvements have been made. On the 22d of March, 1867, the Pocomoke River Improvement Company was incorporated, and was composed of William P. Jones, Eliasha W. Cannon and Joseph Ellis. The marshy lands along the river were drained by many miles of ditches, which were dug for the purpose, making the land available for agriculture, and which is now largely used for the cultivation of corn. A blacksmith-shop was kept by Ebenezer Hearn from 1814 to 1839. A brandy distillery was operated by Samuel Short in 1816, and the next year a steam saw-mill was built on the land of George Hearn by a Mr. Young, of Philadelphia. It was in operation until 1867, when an explosion occurred at the place, and it was abandoned. Four persons were killed. The mill was afterwards moved to the present site.

Gumborough post-office was established in 1849. Previous to that year there was no mail within fourteen miles. The postmasters were E. H. Hearn, W. H. Betts, Samuel J. Gray, John T. Waples, Jacob E. Wootten and Ebenezer Wootten, the present incumbent. An office was established at Lowe's Cross-Roads in 1867, with Joseph B. Cannon as postmaster. Lorenzo Cannon is the present official.

GUMBOROUGH VILLAGE.—In 1840 this place was described as being a dense pine thicket. William and Joseph Riley late in that year, erected a saw-mill and a dwelling-house for the workmen. The mill was operated seventeen years after which it was run by Nehemiah Short for several years, and then abandoned. Lowther M. Hearn opened the first store, and was followed by W. H. Betts. The place of the former is yet in existence. Ebenezer Gray kept store in 1841. The village now contains a church, school-house, four stores, twenty dwellings and a population of one hundred and forty-six.
