HISTORY OF KENTUCKY

JOHN TODD SHELBY. Human life is like the waves of the sea; they flash a few brief moments in the sunlight, marvels of power and beauty, and then are dashed upon the remorseless shores of death and disappear forever. The passing of any human life, however humble and unknown, is sure to give rise to a pang of anguish in some heart, but when the “fell destroyer” knocks at the door of the useful and great and removes from earthly scenes the man of honor and influence and the benefactor of his kind, it means not only bereavement to kindred and friends, but a public calamity as well.

In the largest and best sense of the term the late John Todd Shelby, of Lexington, was distinctively one of the notable men of his day and generation, and as such his life record is entitled to a conspicuous place in the annals of the State of Kentucky. As a citizen, he was public spirited and enterprising to an untoiled degree; as a friend and neighbor, he combined the qualities of head and heart that won confidence and commanded respect; as an attorney who had a comprehensive grasp upon the philosophy of jurisprudence and brought honor and dignity to the profession he followed with such distinguished success, he was easily the peer of any of his brethren of the Kentucky bar.

To refer to him as a lawyer in the phrasingology which meets requirements when dealing with the average member of the legal profession would not do him justice. He was, indeed, much more than eminently successful in his legal career, as was indicated by his long, praiseworthy record at the bar. He was a master of his profession, a leader among men distinguished for the high order of their legal ability, and his eminent attainments and ripe judgment made him an authority on all matters involving a profound knowledge of jurisprudence and of vexed and intricate questions of equity practice. His life and labors were worthy because they contributed to a proper understanding of life and its problems.

John Todd Shelby, the only child of Thomas Hart Shelby and his first wife, Frances Stuart Todd, was born in Springfield, Illinois, on the 25th day of January, 1851, while his mother was on a visit to her parents, Doctor and Mrs. John Todd, of that city, where they had located in 1827, after migrating from Kentucky to Illinois ten years before, Doctor Todd having been a surgeon with the Kentucky volunteers in the War of 1812 and present at the battle and massacre of the River Raisin, where he was captured. Mr. Shelby’s mother, who was a granddaughter of Gen. Levi Todd, one of the early settlers of Fayette County, whose son, Robert S. Todd, was the father of Mary Todd, who married Abraham Lincoln, died a week after his birth and he was brought to Kentucky, where he grew to manhood at his father’s home, “Bel Air,” a beautiful country seat in the Walton Hill section of Fayette County.

His father, Thomas Hart Shelby, who at the time of his death in 1895 was collector of United States internal revenue for the Seventh District of Kentucky, was a grandson of Isaac Shelby, the first governor of Kentucky and one of the heroes of the King’s Mountain campaign and battle, often referred to as the turning point of the Revolution in the South, in the autumn of 1780. “And without venturing into any controversy respecting this important event in the War of the Revolution and the history of our country, it may be fairly said that he conceived the campaign and was one of the main spirits in its prosecution to a successful termination.” There is no figure more familiar to the reader of Kentucky history than Isaac Shelby, who, again chosen governor, after an interim of many years, upon the commencement of hostilities with Great Britain in 1812, is no less familiar for his distinguished services in that conflict than for his valor in the day of the Revolution, leading in person the dauntless Kentucky volunteers on the battlefield of the Thames, October 5, 1813, and winning for himself lasting renown by the part he played in the achievement of the sweeping victory over Proctor and Tecumseh, which resulted in the rout of the allied British and Indians by the Americans under William Henry Harrison and the death of Tecumseh, and which practically marked the close of British and Indian operations in the Northwest. Governor Shelby, who was a son of Gen. Evan Shelby, also a Revolutionary soldier of note, and his wife, Laetitia Cox, married Susanna Hart, daughter of the well-known Capt. Nathaniel Hart, one of the first settlers of Kentucky and one of the proprietors of the Colony of Transylvania. Thomas Hart Shelby, the elder, son of Governor Isaac Shelby and grandfather of Mr. Shelby, owned about 2,000 acres of the very best land in Fayette County, it being located west of the Richmond and Lexington Turnpike and near Walnut Hill Church.

Mr. Shelby’s paternal grandmother was Mary Ann Bullock, daughter of Edmund Bullock, the second speaker of the Kentucky House of Representatives, whose wife was Elizabeth Fontaine, of Jefferson County, while his maternal grandmother, Mrs. John Todd, was before her marriage, Elizabeth Fisher Blair Smith, a daughter of Rev. John Blair Smith, D. D., one of the eminent Presbyterian divines of the eighteenth century, who was the second president of Hampden-Sidney College, Virginia, and later the first president of Union College at Schenectady, New York, and who died in 1790 as pastor of the old Pine Street Church, Philadelphia. Doctor Smith married Elizabeth Fisher Nash, of Prince Edward County, Virginia. His brother, Rev. Samuel Stanhope Smith, D. D., was the first president of Hampden-Sidney and afterwards president of Princeton College.

Gen. Levi Todd, great-grandfather of Mr. Shelby, was a prominent figure in the early military and civic annals of Kentucky, and a brother of Col. John Todd and Gen. Robert Todd, both conspicuous in its early history, the former having been killed at the battle of the Blue Licks in 1782 and having theretofore been appointed colonel commandant and county lieutenant of Illinois, with the civil powers of governor, upon its erection as a county of Virginia in 1778. These three brothers were nephews of Rev. John Todd, of Louisa County, Virginia, long a leading spirit in Hanover Presbytery, who, deeply interested in the early immigration to Kentucky, was, like Col. John Todd himself, one of those most influential in obtaining from the legislature of Virginia, beginning in 1866, an endowment of Transylvania Seminary, and who was instrumental in furnishing to that institution a library that became the nucleus of the present invaluable library of Transylvania University at Lexington.

Mr. Shelby's preliminary education was obtained principally in the schools of Fayette County, where he was a student at Centre College, Danville, Kentucky, and in 1869-70, attended Kentucky (now Transylvania) University at Lexington. In the fall of 1868, he entered Princeton, from which he was graduated with high honors, though one of the youngest members of his class, in 1870, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. In 1873 Princeton conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts, and in 1904 the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Kentucky (now the University of Kentucky) conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws.

After leaving college Mr. Shelby applied himself to the reading of law under his uncle-in-law, Judge William B. Kinkead, of Fayette County, and on March 2, 1872, was admitted to the bar at Lexington, during the infancy of the Transylvania University Bar College, and was made a Judge. He entered the office of Breckinridge & Buckner, at Lexington, a firm composed of Col. William C. P. Breckinridge and Judge Benjamin F. Buckner, where he practiced alone until he formed a partnership with Judge J. Soule Smith, the style of the firm being Smith & Shelby, an association which lasted until September 1, 1875, when he entered into partnership with Colonel Breckinridge under the firm name of Breckinridge & Shelby, a relation that continued unbroken until the death of Colonel Breckinridge on November 19, 1904. Thereafter Mr. Shelby was alone in practice until December 1, 1907, when with his son, John Craig Shelby, who had that year graduated from the Harvard Law School, he formed the firm of Shelby & Shelby. On July 1, 1910, R. L. Northcutt became a member of the firm, the name of which was changed on December 1, 1913, to Shelby, Northcutt & Shelby, and as thus constituted it continued until Mr. Shelby's death. During his early practice he taught equity and pleading, and somewhat later, pleading, evidence and practice in the Law College of Kentucky (now Transylvania) University.

His extensive practice at the Fayette County bar covered a period of forty-eight years, to the day, his death occurring at his home in Lexington on March 2, 1920, after an illness of comparatively short duration. His life was to a remarkable degree intertwined with the history of Central Kentucky, and there is absolutely no question but that he ranked with the greatest who have honored and adorned the legal profession in Kentucky. During this period there were few notable cases in which his services were not engaged and few public movements in which he was not an influential factor.

Though a Presbyterian in early life, Mr. Shelby had been for nearly twenty-seven years a communicant of Christ Church Cathedral at Lexington, the oldest Protestant Episcopal parish in Kentucky, and continuously during the same period an active member of the vestry, being junior warden of the cathedral from 1903 until 1913, and senior warden from 1907 up to the time of his death. He was chairman of the Diocesan Council of Lexington from 1898 until his death.

In politics he was originally a Democrat, but during the first McKinley-Bryan campaign, in 1896, he changed his support to the Republican party, with which he was afterwards affiliated. For three years, from 1908 until 1910, during the administration of Governor Augustus E. Willson, he was the Republican member of the State Board of Election Commissioners.

On November 7, 1872, in Christ Church, Saint Louis, Missouri, Mr. Shelby married Miss Elizabeth Morris Brooking Craig, of that city, who was born in Carroll County, Kentucky, near Ghent, and who had spent much of her girlhood in the Walnut Hill neighborhood of Fayette County, near Mr. Shelby's boyhood home. She was a daughter of Robert Edward Brooking and his wife, Elizabeth Morris Craig, but was adopted in early childhood by her maternal uncle, John Anderson Craig, whose name she thereafter bore. To this union were born four children, Thomas Hart, Francis Todd, John Craig and Christine, the second of whom died in December, 1917, and the third, Thomas Hart, who married Mary Agnes Scott, of Jessamine County, John Craig and Christine, and a grandson, John Todd Shelby, who married Virginia Berenice Lindsey, of Koonoke, Virginia, and Lexington, son of their son Thomas Hart, survive, residing at Lexington. Mr. Shelby is also survived by his half-brothers, Thomas H. Shelby, of Lexington, Wallace M. Shelby, of Fayette County, and Edmund B. Shelby, of Charlotte, North Carolina, and his half-sisters, Mary C. Shelby, of Lexington, Elizabeth S. Post, of Kingston, New York, Fanny S. Matthews, of Lexington, Florence M. Shelby, of Lexington, Alice S. Riddell, of Irvine, Rosa S. Rodgers, of Lexington, Katherine S. Scott, of Lexington, and Willie L. Shelby, of Charleston, South Carolina, children of his father's second marriage, to Florence McDowell. Another half-brother, George S. Shelby, of Lexington, predeceased him.

In many ways Mr. Shelby had an important part in the development of his section of Kentucky and was financially and otherwise interested in a number of important enterprises. He was one of the group of citizens who built the Belt Line Railroad, which afterwards passed under the control of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. He also helped to organize the Belt Electric Line Company, the Central Electric Company and the Hercules Ice Company, predecessors, respectively, of the present Lexington street railway system, electric lighting system and ice plant, and was at one time president of the First National Bank of Lexington.

For a long time he was attorney for the Lexington Waterworks Company and at the time of his death had for many years been counsel for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. He was a director of the First and City National Bank of Lexington, and of the Fayette Home Telephone Company, attorney for both, and at the same time a director and attorney for the Adams Express Company and the Southern Express Company. For over thirty-five years he had been attorney for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company in Fayette and adjoining counties, and for many years attorney for the Southern Railway Company in Kentucky. In his early practice he served as city attorney and later was a member of the Board of Aldermen of the City of Lexington.

He was for many years a director of the Young Men's Christian Association at Lexington, and served for many terms as vice-president of the Kentucky Society of Sons of the Revolution, and for one term was its president. From 1890 until 1895 he was a member of the Board of Commissioners of the Eastern Kentucky Military Asylum at Lexington, and from 1910 until 1913, a member of the Board of Trustees of the Lincoln Institute of Kentucky at Simpsonville.

Probably no better review of Mr. Shelby's personal characteristics and mental qualities could be written than was embodied in the splendid tributes paid him in the press at the time of his death and also at a memorial meeting of the Lexington Bar Association by those who knew him long and intimately, as well as in resolutions adopted by various bodies of which he was a member, and from which excerpts are freely made as follows:

"No lawyer of his generation stood higher in the estimation of this bar than did the distinguished jurist whose passing we are this day called upon to lament. For nearly fifty years past he has borne an unsullied reputation as a leading exemplar of the highest civic virtues as well as of the noblest ethics and traditions of the legal profession. His abilities and his attainments were such as to excite admiration and command respect from friend and foe alike. No lawyer in any era of Kentucky's history has ever surpassed him in acuteness of intellect, in clarity of thought, or in lucidity of expression. From the beginning to the end of his busy career he met and mingled on equal terms with those whom this bar and the bar of Kentucky generally have regarded as the greatest in the profession, and we can recall no instance when he can fairly be said to have been overmatched. His knowledge of the law was varied, accurate and profound, and his powers of logical analysis in presenting any question or in advocating any cause were at all times the despair of his adversaries as they were the subject of enthusiastic and unqualified praise by his associates and colleagues.

"As a counsel, Mr. Shelby was remarkably free from any appearance or suggestion of aggressive self-assertion, and even when his advice was most eagerly solicited he seemed to invite the views of those who sought his guidance rather than to impose upon them any opinion of his own. His gracious, tactful and considerate manner toward all who are conscious of his tenderest regard, his friendship and good offices, the manner of his conversation, his jest and warning, his manner of bearing witness to the worth of another—this is the manner of his appreciation of his associates and colleagues."

"Be It Resolved, That in the death of Honorable John Todd Shelby, this bar has sustained a grievous and irreparable loss; that his long and honorable career has conferred imperishable lustre upon this bar, the consciousness of which is not confined to this city and county, but is widely recognized throughout our own State and Nation; that he has been, as a lawyer, his leadership as a citizen, and his worth as a man are most keenly appreciated by those of us who have enjoyed the privilege of daily contact and association and personal acquaintance with him; that none know better than ourselves or can better appraise his studious habits, his unflagging industry, his large experience, and his absolute fidelity to his profession, and none can more truly appreciate in true utility to his country, his character, his liberal culture, his extraordinary legal attainments, his public spirit, his unfaltering courage, his flawless courtesy, and to that rare combination of qualities, both of mind and temperament, which have stamped him as a shining example of the Christian gentleman, the erudite scholar, the upright counselor, the Christian prince, the exemplary citizen; and that, while none had a better right to boast of an illustrious ancestry, no man who has ever graced the bench or bar of Kentucky had less occasion or need to rely upon pride of birth or the blazon of lineage to justify his title to distinction."—(From resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Lexington Bar Association, held on March 4, 1920.)

"A master of equity jurisprudence (referring to his teaching in the Law College of Kentucky, now Transylvania University), neither Yale nor Harvard, nor any other great university of our country, could produce his superior.

"I believe I can say in all sincerity that of all the lawyers with whom I have been thrown in contact, Mr. Shelby was the only one to excite and to support the strongest of intellectual, and especially in splendid powers of discriminating analysis. His arguments in this court were to my mind models of legal argument. He was always courteous to the other side, though maintaining his own position with firmness and force, never letting go a proposition that he believed sound. We all know with what great success he met in his career."

"Mr. Shelby was tenacious of every opinion which he believed to be valid, and presented it with an acuteness of intellect, a power of logic, a lucidity of expression that very few in my memory or knowledge equaled. Not only that, but, above all, Mr. Shelby was a Christian. For many years he had been connected with Christ Church, was senior warden of the church, a member of the vestry for many years; and every one who knew him in his daily life, in all his conduct, saw that there ran through all his actions the faith that he had in his belief in the precepts of the Christian religion. This bar has lost a great man, modest and unpretentious as he was. I desire to present this testimony of admiration for his character and of my profound reverence for his learning and ability. To the younger members of the bar I can only say that they could have no brighter example of all that is best in our profession than the life and character of Mr. Shelby, and no young man could do better than to follow, as far as he can, his footsteps and his example."—(From remarks by Col. John R. Allen at the meeting of the Lexington Bar Association.)

"He was a man who had the tenderer and most loving sympathy and solicitude for his friends when they were in trouble or distress that I have ever known. His simple, childlike, unwavering faith in the efficacy of the redeeming blood of the crucified Christ was one of the most beautiful things ever witnessed. He talks with the most graceful dignity of his abiding hope, his confident expectation to meet and be reunited with the loved ones that had gone on before gave me stronger hope and belief in a future existence and a happier state for man than all the sermons of all the preachers I have ever heard."—(From remarks by Hon. W. C. G. Hobbs.)

"Measured by all of the standards of human excellency, he was a well-rounded and typical man. All of us, I trust, possess in some degree his great qualities of mind and heart, as exemplified in his long, active and useful life. But without intending to depreciate the ability and character of this bar, I think it can be safely said that none of its living members possesses in the same high degree all of his great qualities."—(From remarks by Hon. W. P. Kimball.)

"I cannot realize that from this stand I shall never again call from your number the name of John Todd Shelby; that I can never again ask his counsel or advice; that I can never again counsel with him concerning the things that are nearest and dearest to me. I might, indeed, say of him as Horace, the old Latin poet, said of his friend Varus, 'He was a modest, just; he is mourned by all good men, and who is there to fill his place?'

"The silver cord has indeed been loosed, the golden bowl been broken. I know, except for the memories, the sweet associations of thirty-six years, that he has gone forever out of a life into which he came at its most critical period. Without education, without experience, with nothing to recommend me to the consideration of one who possessed all the graces which endowed the lawyer and culture supply, I went into his office and introduced myself to him and his partner, Colonel Breckinridge, and asked them if they would lend me some law books. From that moment until the very last conversation I had with him, only last week, there was never a time when I did not feel that I could go to him with anything that troubled me, that I could ask from him advice upon my subject, and never did I go with a thought that I did not receive me kindly, courteously, sweetly. In all the vicissitudes through which I have passed, many of which have been purely personal, I always received just that encouragement I needed, that sympathy I craved. I might say, too, on those occasions when he knew I was perplexed, that I was bearing some undisclosed burden, he has, with gentle, sweet concern, sought me. This to me is one of the most perfect forms of true, enduring friendship."—(From remarks by Judge Charles Kerr.)

"A Christian without reproach, a gentleman without fear, a Kentuckian of Kentuckians, John T. Shelby typified the lofty traditions, exemplified the noblest aspirations of his people.

"A lawyer who met as equal the greatest of his generation, whose mind entitled him to be ranked in the first flight of the great lawyers of the State, whose erudition made him the cherished companion of the most learned, John Shelby was greater as a man than as a lawyer or scholar. With the unuttered courage of absolute honesty he abandoned the wisdom of the woman, with the transparent veracity that is the companion of perfect fearlessness, he never had thought, even, of expressing a harsh or bitter word. Only those privileged to be admitted to his intimacy could have full appreciation of the combined elements of strength and gentleness, of courage and kindliness, of duty and generosity, that made him long since aptly and justly described as the "First Gentleman of Kentucky."

"Simple of life, forgetful of self, he never sought nor desired place or power, nor would accept public position. He would have graced and have lent distinction to the Supreme Court, for which he was most eminently fitted, to which he might have been appointed had he but indicated his desire to have a position thereon tendered to him.

"From early manhood he carried with never flickering courage and ever present cheerfulness burdens that would have crushed a weaker man. Frail of body, his mind worked with unceasing and never flagging industry. But there was no labor so great, no bodily frailty so poignant that could dim his sense of humor or cloud his wit. No grief, it mattered not how desperately it wrung his heart, could make him lose mastery of himself."—(From editorial by Desha Breckinridge in the Lexington Herald of March 3, 1920.)

"Man may approach the perfect, but he cannot attain it. And yet the late John T. Shelby did not fail in any of the essentials which bring us within an appreciable nearness of the ideal. His antecedents, his rearing, his education, his innate sense of refinement and culture, all lent their influence in producing the completed whole. His ancestry carried him back to a generation that was conspicuous in laying the foundation of the State; in overcoming the vicissitudes of a frontier community; in establishing homes for their descendants, and founding a stable society. Whatever profession he might have chosen, he would have adorned; whatever pursuit might have won his endeavors, he would have lent that grace and dignity its possession was congenial to one of his inquiring mind. Reason and logic were to him the coefficients of truth, and no matter where truth led he followed it with relentless exactitude. He reduced every proposition to a syllogism. His conclusions were reached through a deductive rather than through an inductive process of reasoning. When his advice was sought he reasoned from the facts presented to a determination that was as accurate as a problem in Euclid. His was not a mind that could predetermine what a result ought to be and then construct a theory that would reach the end desired. The final determination with him came as the result of laying his premises in truth. In nothing did he seem to delight more than an a priori argument. Given the antecedent, he reached the consequent with a skill and brilliancy which must strike his adversaries. So clear was he in statement that nothing was left for argument. * * *

"Every branch of the law yielded at his approach, but in pleading and equity jurisprudence he had no superior among the lawyers of Kentucky. With him pleading was a science. As such he studied it, as such he lived it. Had he lived in the days of Chitty and Mansfield he would have been, par excellence, one of the most skillful among the English pleaders. For an ill-prepared and loosely-drawn pleading he had a repugnance that amounted almost to a contempt. He delighted to parry in this branch of the profession with one that was worthy of his own skill. Simple, quiet, unobtrusive, many an adversary was forced to suffer all the torments of that discomfiture that comes from lack of skill or preparation, when he stood before the bar with him as opponent. * * *

"With him equity was that branch of the law which supplied all the deficiencies of the common law. It was a system of common justice as well as common law. He could not accept it, or apply it, without a remedy. Any system for the adjustment of human relationship that did not accept this as a truism was inherently defective. His innate sense of justice was, therefore, naturally, and irresistibly drawn towards that branch of the profession which was founded on the spirit rather than the letter of the law. * * *

But whether he followed the letter or the spirit, it was justice, in the end, that determined his course. One of the last acts of his professional life was to refuse participation in an action which he conceived to be wrong and wholly lacking in moral substance.

"And thus it was he approached the ideal, not alone in character, not alone in being the Shakespearian possessor of all those attributes that unite in making the man, but in the ethics and practice of his profession, as well. Of him it might be said, as it was said of another distinguished member of the Kentucky bar, 'He was a man before whom temptation fled.' So high was his sense of honor, so correct the standards which he had erected for his own conduct, that he never had to combat those seductive influences to which so many of the profession have fallen victims. He was the embodiment of the best traditions of the bar. He personified a type that is passing. As Horace said of Varus, there is none to take his place. He embodied a profession that could not ennoble him. His was a nobility begotten of Nature."—(From an appreciation by Judge Charles Kerr in the Lexington Herald of March 7, 1920.)

"He was a director of this company from its organization to the date of his death, was its vice-president and general counsel, and in all those capacities he served it with that intelligence, wisdom and fidelity which characterized his performance of every duty.

"Those who knew him best loved him most, and we are grateful for the privilege of association with him for so many years. We feel that any attempt on our part to eulogize him would be—to use a phrase which he frequently employed—with reference to others, 'to sing off, lily'; and yet we cannot forbear to record our admiration for the gentleness and purity of his life, for the unfailing courtesy and consideration for others which was as much a habit with him as breathing, for the strength and elevation of his character, for the upright-ness and nobility of his conduct. The clearness of his intellect, the vigor of his reason, were not more remarkable than the directness and disinterestedness of his action. His lofty ideals were not marred by inconsistency of conduct. He had the faith of Lincoln that might makes right; he sought the truth, and, having found it, he dared to follow where it led. With the gentleness of a woman he combined the courage of a lion, and his name will be remembered as being just and fair to man or woman."

"A man of unusual mental ability, of the highest sense of honor, of keen appreciation of the service which he should render to his fellow-man, of rare Christian character, he brought to the discharge of every duty a determination to give his very best efforts. His conduct was wise, his judgment sound, and his integrity above reproach. In the death of John T. Shelby this community has lost one of its best citizens, this bank a wise and safe counselor, his church a Christian gentleman, and his friends one of their
William Fayette Owley, M. D. The profession of medicine has been notably prominent in the wonderful scientific discoveries of the past and present centuries. Through the bequests of men of large means trained medical men are concentrating their efforts in laboratories equipped with every possible adjunct for research and investigation, to the solving of the problems which so definitely concern humanity, its beginning existence and end. Not every physician is granted these opportunities, however enthused he may be with professional zeal and ardor, but the discoveries which come to him and the achievements which are his in his consideration of daily practice are, perhaps, quite as creditable, and certainly they are frequent enough to demonstrate great ability. Since 1901 Dr. William Fayette Owley has led the way among physicians and surgeons of Cumberland County, and during that period has proved his skill as a professional man and his worth as a citizen of Burkesville, where he has always made his home.

Doctor Owley belongs to one of the oldest families of Burkesville, and was born at this place July 22, 1879, a son of William Francis and Sally A. (Alexander-Owley. His paternal great-great-grandfather, William Owley, was a pioneer from Virginia to Burkesville in the early history of this community, and here was born the great-grandfather of Doctor Owley, Dr. Joel Owley, who was an early physician and surgeon and followed his profession here throughout his career. He was likewise an early believer in the Christian or Campbellite faith, and preached the doctrines of that church even before the arrival of Alexander Campbell. Dr. Joel Owley married Mary Ann Lewis, who was born and died at Burkesville.

William Francis Owley, the elder, the grandfather of Dr. William Fayette Owley, was born in 1812 at Burkesville, and was reared to mercantile pursuits, in which he was engaged until reaching his thirty-fifth year. At that time, in partnership with Fayette W. Alexander, the maternal grandfather of Doctor Owley, he established a branch house of the Louisville Bank, which was conducted until into the 70s. When he severed his connection with this institution Mr. Owley turned his attention to the brokerage business, and from that time forward concerned himself with the handling of mortgages, farms, etc. He married Mary Agnes Bledsoe, who was born in 1834 at Burkesville, and died in 1881. He survived her forty-four years, and died away on a trip to Louisville, in June, 1908.

William Francis Owley, the younger, father of Dr. William F. Owley, was born August 2, 1852, at Burkesville, and as a young man elected to make farming his life work. That he made a wise choice has been demonstrated in his subsequent career, for he has been a leading and successful agriculturist, and at the present time is the owner of a valuable property in Cumberland County. In addition to his general farming activities he was a raiser and handler of horses, having an extensive stock farm, and his horses, particularly the Red Squirrel breed, are known all over the United States. While somewhat retired from active pursuits, having reached the psalmist's three-score-and-ten years, CHILTON WALLACE ELLIOTT. The younger business element of the thriving little city of Rochester, Kentucky, has a worthy representative in Chilton Wallace Elliott, who within a short space of time has established himself thoroughly in public confidence. A product of the agricultural districts, in his former environment he came into contact with matters that gave him a knowledge of connections affecting the milling business, and during his connection with the Rochester Ice and Milling Company he has used this information to good effect in his position as secretary and manager.

Mr. Elliott was born July 21, 1852, on a farm in Ohio County, Kentucky, a son of Luther and Mary (Brown) Elliott, and a member of a family which has been well and favorably known in Ohio County for several generations, his grandfather having been a lifelong farmer in that county, although dying at Hopkinsville. Luther Elliott was born in Ohio County in 1864, and throughout a long and uniformly successful career has followed the pursuits of farming and raising stock. At this time he is the owner of an extensive property, well improved and highly cultivated, ships many cattle and hogs annually, and is accounted one of the substantial agriculturists of his community, as well as a good and dependable citizen. In politics he is a democrat, and his religious connection is with the Baptist Church, of which he is an active and generous subscriber. Mrs. Mary Elliott was born in 1866, in Arkansas, but reared in Ohio County, and five children were born to them: Otie, who died young; Hallie, the wife of Audrey Taylor, a merchant of Ohio County; Charles, a coal miner of Muhlenberg County; Nola, who died at the age of eight years; and Chilton Wallace.

The education of Chilton W. Elliott was gained in the rural schools of Ohio County, and until he was twenty-one years of age he was associated with his father in the cultivation of the home farm. At that time he went to Butler County, where he commenced farming on his own account, and this enterprise engaged his attention until 1918, when he came to Rochester and became manager and secretary of the Rochester Ice and Milling Company, a position which he has held to the present time. His associates in this venture are W. M. Brown, president, and Carl Willis, treasurer. The flour mill, an up-to-date structure, is situated just off Main Street, and its capacity is fifty barrels per day, while the ice manufacturing plant has a daily capacity of five tons. In the performance of his duties with this concern Mr. Elliott has shown a thorough understanding of the business, good judgment, foresight and acumen, and has so departed himself in his various transactions as to gain the confidence of his associates and the good will and respect of those with whom he has come into contact in a business way.

Mr. Elliott is a democrat and is rendering Rochester valuable services in the capacity of member of the Board of Town Trustees. His religious faith is that of the Christian Church. He resides in his own home on Russellville Street, one of the comfortable residences of Rochester, in which town he has formed and held many friendships. Like other loyal and public-spirited citizens, during the World War he gave freely of his time and means in supporting the various movements inaugurated for the organization of volunteer forces, and all worthy enterprises in times of peace have also met with his approval and cooperation.

Mr. Elliott married in 1912, in Ohio County, Kentucky, Miss Nannie Tanner, daughter of Will and Novella (Brown) Tanner, farming people of this county who reside at Rochester. One child has come to Mr. and Mrs. Elliott: Barbara, born April 11, 1913.
he supervises his large enterprises and takes a keen interest in business affairs, as well as in matters which affect the community life. He is a democrat in politics, but has never been an aspirant for public honors. Reared in the faith of the Christian Church, he has always been a liberal contributor to its work.

Mr. Owlsy married Miss Sallie A. Alexander, also a descendant of an old and honored family of Burkesville, who was born here in 1852, and died in March, 1904. They became the parents of the following children: Susie King, who died in 1916, aged thirty-six years, at Burkesville, the wife of Dr. John G. Talbot, a physician and surgeon who was刮ated from the medical college of whose father appears elsewhere in this volume; Dr. William Fayette, a lawyer; and Mrs. cement of this review; Mary Agnes, the wife of Dr. R. C. Richardson, a dental practitioner of Leitchfield, Kentucky; Grant A., a resident of Burkesville, who during the World War was stationed at Camp Taylor, subsequently was sent to other training camps, commissioned a first lieutenant, and was ready for active service when the armistice was signed; and Helen the wife of S. M. Young, vice president of the Bank of Cumberland, Burkesville.

William Fayette Owlsy attended the public schools and Alexander College, Burkesville, following which he entered Center College, Danville. He lacked only three months of receiving a degree of Bachelor of Arts when he decided to leave that institution, and upon his recovery entered the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville, where he spent three years. Following this he pursued a course in the medical department of the University of Kentucky at Louisville, from which he was graduated in 1901 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. In that same year he graduated from the Louisville School of Law. Having received a degree of Graduate Engineer in 1902 he took two post-graduate courses at the University of Kentucky, one in the spring and one in the fall, specializing in diseases of women and diseases of children.

Doctor Owlsy began his practice at Burkesville in 1901, and since that year has built up a splendid practice. A man of unusual ability, he has always taken a progressive stand upon matters pertaining to his profession. Always devoted to his work, he is constantly endeavoring to add to his store of knowledge and widen his field of action. Having devoted so many years to his calling he has been liberally rewarded by the bestowal of confidence and the enjoyment of praise from his patients.

An unrelenting zeal for the advancement of his profession, a desire to add to his store of knowledge and widen his field of action, have been the mainsprings of Dr. Owlsy's work. He is the owner of the modern residence and offices of the Burkesville Medical Society, the most desirable and comfortable homes in the city, an old Colonial brick structure. He is likewise the owner of a farm of 250 acres, part of which extends into the city limits, and carries on general farming and stock raising thereon.

In politics a democrat, Doctor Owlsy is a professional man rather than a politician, but has accepted the responsibilities of public office on occasion. In 1906 he was appointed a member of the Board of Town Trustees to fill out an unexpired term, and in the following year was elected to that post for a full term of four years. At the present time he is United States examining surgeon for Cumberland County, and formerly filled the same capacity. He belongs to the Cumberland County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and is a deacon of the Christian Church. During the World War he was very active in local matters, being examining surgeon for the Cumberland County Draft Board, food administrator of Cumberland County and chairman of the civilian relief committee, in addition to helping every drive he put "over the top." With Mrs. Owlsy he organized every local chapter of the American Red Cross in the county.

On October 25, 1905, Doctor Owlsy married at Lexington, Kentucky, Miss Annie Pearl Owings, a daughter of W. a. A. and Nannie (Rue) Owings, residents of Lexington, where Mr. Owings is a well known trotting horse owner, breeder and developer. Mrs. Owlsy was graduated from the public schools of Danville, Kentucky, at the age of thirteen years, and four years later graduated from Caldwell College, now the Woman's College of Danville, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. She took a postgraduate course at the Kentucky State University, and finally pursued a course at the Western College for Women, in Cincinnati, a woman of superior intellect, graces and accomplishments, and is a leader in the club and social life of Burkesville. To Dr. and Mrs. Owlsy there has come one son, William Fayette, Jr., born August 16, 1900, who is now a student in the Burkesville High School.

Frank Crim, whose death occurred on his home farm, the Haley Turnpike in Fayette County, May 30, 1888, was but forty-eight years of age at the time of his demise, but had left a distinct and worthy mark in the annals of postgraduate dentistry. He was born in Kentucky in the year 1840, and was a son of Lewis and Susan (Duvall) Crim, who were residents of Woodford County, this state, at the time of their deaths. Lewis Crim removed with his family from Woodford County to Bourbon County, where he farmed. He had been 250 years of age at the time of his death, after having spent the last years of his life in the practice of his profession. His wife, Susan, after the death of her husband, returned to Woodford County, where she resided until her death, in 1888.

Frank Crim was reared and educated in his native state and here passed his entire life with the exception of the period of three years in Texas. He was twenty-six years of age at the time of his marriage, in 1866, to Miss Mary Haley, who was at that time nineteen years of age. She was born on her father's old homestead farm in Fayette County, the same being situated on the Haley Turnpike, which was named in honor of her husband. Mrs. Crim, who now resides in the city of Lexington, is a sister of W. W. Haley of Bourbon County, in whose personal sketch, on other pages of this work, is given adequate record concerning the Haley family. After his marriage Mr. Crim established his residence upon the farm given to his wife by her father, on the Haley Turnpike. He died there; his wife, Miss Mary Haley, remained on this farm more than twenty years after the death of her husband. She finally sold the property and has since maintained her home at Lexington. While on the farm she was an active member of the Baptist Church, on David's Fork, her parents likewise having been zealous members of this church. She is now a member of the church of the City of Lexington, and the religious faith of her husband likewise was that of the Baptist Church. He was a man of strong mentality, was vigorous and resourceful in his farm activities, and commanded the high regard of all who knew him.

Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Crim the eldest is Eta, who is the wife of Thomas Hagan, a skilled mechanic residing at Winchester, Clark County, he being a brother of one of the best known lumbermen of the county. Eta is the wife of James A. Liter, a prosperous farmer in Bourbon County; William L., the next in order of birth, will be more specifically mentioned in later paragraphs; Miss Mary Ella remains with her widowed mother in their attractive home at Lexington; Stanley married Miss Ella Smithy, and is successfully engaged in farm enterprises in the county. Thomas, who married Miss Willie Mai Bruce, is engaged in the automobile business in the city of Lexington.

William L. Crim, who resides on his well improved farm nine miles east of Lexington, was born on the old homestead farm mentioned in a preceding paragraph, and the date of his nativity was August 3, 1873, and he was a lad of fourteen years at the time of his father's death. He was reared on the home farm, received the advantages of public schools and has never severed his allegiance to the basic industries of agriculture and stock-growing in connection with which he has achieved noteworthy success. In 1913 he purchased his present farm, which comprises 116 acres of the fine Blue Grass land of Fayette County, the place being a part of the old landed estate of George Daraby, and the house on the farm having been erected by a former owner, David Ware. Mr. Crim has made numerous improvements upon his farm, including the erection of much barns and a three-story home on his farm, known as one of the progressive exponents of agricultural and live-stock industry in Fayette County, with special attention given to the raising of cattle. Both he and his wife are members of the Baptist Church.

The year 1903 recorded the marriage of Mr. Crim to Miss Rose Hagan, daughter of J. F. and Anna (Talbott) Hagan, a personal sketch of her father being given in an earlier part of this work. The Hagan homestead is situated two miles east of Clintonville, Bourbon County, and the widowed mother of Mrs. Crim still resides on this place. The male representatives of the Hagan family are remarkable for mechanical ability, and of the ten sons of the late J. F. Hagan there is not one who lacks such ability, while four or more of the number are or have been identified with the farm, and in fact the Hagan farm has been the most progressive in Madison County.

William A. Ward was born in Paintsville, county seat of Johnson County, naturally shows unqualified loyalty to his home town, for he is a native son of this county and a representative of a sterling family whose name has been worthily linked with the history of this section of Kentucky since the pioneer days.

William Anderson Ward was born at River, Johnson County, on the Big Sandy River, and the date of his nativity was October 1, 1863. He is a son of John M. and Pauline (Meek) Ward, both likewise natives of this county, the father having been born in the vicinity of the little village of River and mother at Ward City, a place now known as Whitehouse. John M. Ward died in 1912, at the venerable age of eighty-one years, his wife having passed to eternal rest in 1891 and both having been earnest members of the United Baptist Church.

William A. Ward, grandfather of the postmaster of Paintsville, was born and reared in Virginia, of Col lonial ancestry, and was one of the venerable and honored pioneer citizens of Johnson County, Kentucky, at the time when the pioneer era of this state was in its prime. He was a successful farmer on one of the most productive farms of the county and in the early days gave attention each year to the trapping and hunting of the wild game, which was then plentiful in this section. John M. Ward was for years actively engaged in the navigation trade on the Big Sandy River, he having operated a push boat, by means of which he transported merchandise, produce, etc., to the various river points between its two large tributary streams. For many years this enterprise continued thirty-five years or more. He was in full sympathy with the cause of the Confederacy in the Civil War, was a democrat in politics, and both he and his wife were active in church work, he having aided in the erection of the building of the United Baptist Church at Ward City, a place named in honor of the family of which he was a member. Of their five children two died in infancy; Tranvella, who died at Whitehouse at the age of thirty-five years, and the wife of Washington Brown; Sallie, the wife of Wallace Borders, was twenty-six years of age at the time of her death, at Whitehouse; and the subject of this sketch is thus the only surviving member of the immediate family.

William A. Ward attended school at River and also the rural school at the mouth of Two Mile Creek, it having been necessary for him to walk the five miles between his home and the latter school each day. At the age of thirteen years he initiated his service as cook for his father in connection with the latter's transportation business on the Big Sandy River, and he continued his active association with the river trade for a full quarter of a century, twenty years of this period having found him in service as pilot and captain on steamboats. For fourteen years of this time he was associated with John C. C. Mayo, and among the boats with whose operation he was identified were the Sipp Bayes, the Beulah Brown, the Argyle, the Andy Hatcher and the Thelka, the last mentioned having been named in honor of Mrs. John C. C. Mayo, the owner. Mr. Ward was associated with Mr. Mayo also in all of the latter's trips through the Big Sandy Valley and the mountains when he was investigating and buying coal leases.

In 1915 Mr. Ward was appointed postmaster at Paintsville, and his administration has been signal efficiency and satisfactory. He is a staunch advocate of the principles of the democratic party, is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and both he and his wife are members of the Mayo Memorial Church, Methodist Episcopal, South, at Paintsville. From 1914 to 1916 he was county seat of Paintsville, and Mrs. Mayo died in 1914. In the year 1915 Mr. Ward was united in marriage with Miss Mittie Ellen Borders, who was born in Lawrence County, a daughter of John Borders. She was born in 1865, and her death occurred on the 9th of July, 1911. The five children of this union are: Hester is the wife of J. T. Powell, a merchant at Gralin, Carter County; John is in the employ of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company; McCunty is his assistant in the postoffice at Paintsville; Smith is in the service of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company; and Carrie B. died at the age of nineteen years. On the 8th of August, 1914, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Ward with Miss Effie Casady, a daughter of Samuel Casady, of Martin County, and she is the popular chatelaine of the pleasant home at Paintsville.

The Whitaker family of Paintsville was founded by Anthony Whitaker, the original owner of the farm on the Big Sandy River. Mr. Ward is deeply interested in the advancement of the agricultural and live-stock industries in his native county, and in his civic attitude he is essentially progressive and public-spirited.

G. E. Garth. The Garth family has contributed able and influential men to the agricultural, business and civic affairs of Todd County since pioneer times. One of the family is G. E. Garth, a well known banker at Trenton.

His grandfather, founder of the family in Todd County, was William Edward Garth, a native of Virginia, who came west when the district beyond the Alleghenies was still new, and cleared up and developed a good farm in Todd County, living on it, near Trenton, until his death. He married Betsy Saffrons, who was born in Virginia in 1810 and died at the old homestead near Trenton in 1885. Their son, G. E. Garth, Sr., was born near Trenton December 4, 1830, and died January 16, 1920, having spent all of his long and useful life in the one community. He became successful as a farmer and widely known as a breeder of Jersey cattle and saddle horses. He was a democrat in his political affiliations. G. E. Garth, Sr., married Miss Louise Ware, who was born near Trenton in 1842 and died on the homestead in 1917, at the age of seventy-five. She was the mother of five children: Nora, of Nashville, Tennessee; Thomas; Mrs. N. K. Allensworth, who was a farmer near Guthrie, Kentucky; Ella, who became the wife of S. E. Stieger, and both died at Trenton, where Mr. Steger was long known as the founder of the Bank of Trenton farmer; William Edward, an attorney by educa
October 10, 1811, was formerly Miss Elizabeth Archer, a daughter of George P. and Emma J. Archer, Mr. Archer being cashier of the Bank Josephine at Portsmouth. Mrs. Wells, who survives her husband, lives at Portsmouth with their two daughters, Emma Alice and Elizabeth Jane, is a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and a woman of many graces and accomplishments.

William Wallace Jones. It is generally accepted as a truism that no man of genius or acknowledged ability can be justly or adequately judged while still in the heyday of life, chiefly because time is necessary to ripen the estimate upon work which can only be viewed on all sides in the calm atmosphere of a more or less remote period from the completion. This desirable note inapproprate to the life accomplishments of Judge William Wallace Jones, who has long occupied a conspicuous place in the history of Adair County.

No man in the community has had warmer friends or is more generally esteemed. He is a man of refinement and culture, deeply read, a leader of the county bar, president of the Bank of Columbia, and one who has achieved success in his affairs.

Judge Jones was born January 19, 1855, in Cumberland County, Kentucky, a son of Levi and Nancy Obedience (Gearhart) Jones. His great-grandfather, Charles Jones, was born in Wales, and as a young man immigrated to America and settled in Virginia. Shortly thereafter the colonies began their fight for independence. Mr. Jones joined the Patriot Army under the leadership of Patrick Henry in his first enlistment. Later he re-enlisted and was with the forces of General Lee. He married Fannie Thorpe, a native of Virginia, and shortly thereafter came to Adair County, Kentucky, as a pioneer, here spending the remainder of his life in the pursuits of agriculture. William Thorpe Jones, the son of Charles and Fannie Jones, was born in 1848, in Adair County, Kentucky, and as a young man went to Cumberland County, where he married Mary E. Baker, a native of that county. Mr. Jones farmed in Cumberland County for a few years and then moved to Casey County, where he spent the rest of his life as a tiller of the soil and died in 1868.

Levi Jones, the father of Judge Jones, was born in 1782, in Cumberland County, where he was educated, reared and married and where he farmed for many years. About 1850 he removed to Casey County, where he continued his agricultural operations during the remainder of his life and died at the age of forty years, in 1873. He was a Union sympathizer during the war between the states, but a democrat in his political allegiance. His religious faith was that of the Baptist Church, and as a minister he belonged to the Masons. He married Nancy Obedience Gearhart, who was born in 1839, in Cumberland County, and died in Casey County in 1907. They became the parents of five children, as follows: Maude, who died in infancy; William Wallace, of this notice; Mary E., who died at the age of eight years; C. C., who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in Casey County; and Quincy R., a farmer, equivalent to graduating from Center College, Danville, Kentucky.

William Wallace Jones acquired his early education in the rural schools of Casey County, and in 1874, when not yet nineteen years of age, began teaching in the country districts of Casey County. During 1874 and 1875 he taught two free schools, following which he pursued a course at Columbia Male and Female Schools, Columbia. Next, at home, he finished a course of study equivalent to graduating from Center College, Danville, Kentucky. From that time to the present he has continued his studies and it is safe to say that Judge Jones is today one of the best-rounded scholars in the state. He reads Virgil, Tacitus and Ovid, is a thorough Latin and Greek scholar, and is well versed in both ancient and modern literature generally. In 1877 Judge Jones was admitted to the bar and at once engaged in practice, having since had a constantly increasing general civil and criminal practice at Columbia, where his offices are located in the Jones Building, a business structure owned by him on the southwest side of the Public Square. He is also the owner of a modern residence on Greensburg Street, one of the most desirable homes in the city.

In politics a republican, Judge Jones has long been before the public, but rather in an official than a political capacity. W. W. Jones was elected judge of the Twenty-ninth Judicial District of Kentucky in 1862 and re-elected without opposition in 1867, serving until January 1, 1904. He was nominated by the republican party as his candidate for judge of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky in 1895, but was defeated. His connection is with Columbia Lodge No. 96, F. and A. M. While his profession and his public duties have engrossed a large part of his attention, Judge Jones has also been a leader in financial affairs in this section for a number of years, and has been president of the Bank of Columbia since 1905. In 1900 he assisted in the organization of the Bank of Jamestown, of which he was vice president and member of the Board of Directors until 1914, at which time he was elected president. He resigned the presidency in 1918. In 1895 Judge Jones was one of the main factors in the organization of the Monticello Banking Company, of which he was vice president and a director until 1905, at which time he disposed of his quarter interest in the bank and retired from the corporation. During the World War he took an exceptionally active part in all local war activities. He was chairman of the Adair County Chapter of the American Red Cross all through the war period and retains that position at the present time. He was likewise chairman of the first two Liberty Bond drives in Adair County, and assisted in all the campaigns for all purposes, likewise buying bonds and contributing to the various organizations to the limit of his means. In addition he worked helpfully and unremittingly during the epidemic of the influenza. From the elevated plane of public service down through the fields of its usefulness to the community and into the privacy of his family circle the track of the life of Judge Jones has been characterized by a constant and consistent uprightness born of high principles.

He married at Columbia, Kentucky, in 1885, Miss Laura Wheat, a daughter of W. B. and Fannie (Garnett) Wheat both deceased, Mr. Wheat having been a merchant and farmer at Columbia. Judge and Mrs. Jones have one daughter, Fannie, the wife of George R. Reed, an insurance man residing at the Jones' home on Greensburg Street.

Marcus Alvin Dodson, for a number of years was engaged in educational work. It was congenial, and a profession where his qualifications showed to the best advantage. However, about ten years ago he accepted a call to the cashier's desk of the leading bank at Science Hill, and has found in banking a satisfactory substitute for a scholastic career.

The Dodson family of which the Science Hill banker is a representative is of Danish descent. They came from Denmark to England, one branch of them from Scotland to England, one branch of which in Scotland changed the name to Dutton and carried it to Ireland and from Ireland to America. Hence the Duttons of this country are of the original family of Dodosens but are of immediate Scotch-Irish descent. The Dodosens came from England to America, hence their immediate descent is Scotch-English. They were among the earliest settlers of Virginia at the James town Colony.

From Culpeper County, Virginia, Thomas, Leonard and Robert Dodson moved over the mountains while Kentucky was still a part of the old Virginia. The title to the lands they bought in what is now Madison County was very soon contested, and from there Robert moved to what is now Warren County, Kentucky, where he reared a large family, while Thomas and John remained in Monticello County, making settlement there while Kentucky was still an Indian battle ground. Leonard took up land in the community known as Cedar Hill. He had two sons, Eli and Stogdon, Eli moving to Missouri, while Stogdon went to Danville, Indiana, where his family became prominent.

While Eli and Rollo D. Dodson, the other of the three brothers, saw service as a minute man of the Revolutionary war. His place of settlement in Wayne County was on what is now known as Rolly Creek, a tributary to Sinkong Creek. Here he reared a large family, six sons, named George Teaman, John, Jesse, James, Rollo C. and Leonard, and five girls: Mrs. John Robinson, who settled at Danville; Mrs. Thomson, who also went to Danville; Mrs. Reuben Sloan, Mrs. I. Burnett and Mrs. Mathew Denney, all of whom remained in Wayne County. The two oldest sons, George Teaman and John, were volunteers in the War of 1812 and rifle men in the Battle of New Orleans. From Kentucky they settled at Marion, Missouri. When John left Kentucky for Missouri he had a family of ten boys. The third son, Rollo C. Dodson, was sent as a student to the Normal School of Missouri, became a Confederate colonel in a Texas Regiment in the Civil War, and was one of the framers of the Texas Constitution. George Teaman left two boys in Wayne County, James and Josiah Dodson. Josiah settling on what is known as Dry Fork of Sinkong Creek, and his sons were George Teaman, John, Jesse, James, Rollo C. and Leonard. The other son of George Teaman, married Maevia Tuttle, settled on Fall Creek, and reared a family of four boys and six girls, the boys being: Thomas, who moved to Texas; Josiah, who settled on Meadow Creek; Marshall and Teaman, who settled on Fall Creek, while the girls were: Rhoda, who married James Morrow, and settled on Land in Wayne County; Rhoda, who married James McCoin, of Edmonson County; Jane, who married Job Morrow and settled on Cumberland River in Wayne County; Anna, who never married; Nettie, who married John Dodson and settled in Beach Valley near Monticello; Neatha, who married Jones Taylor and settled on Cumberland River in Wayne County.

The third son of the Revolutionary hero, settled on Sinkong Creek. He reared two sons, Thomas and John. Thomas, who later became known as Big Tom Dodson, had two sons, Jesse and John, who settled at Wichita, Kansas. John, known as Jack Dodson, settled at Steubenville and reared three sons, Thomas, John and George.

James, fourth son of Thomas D. Dodson, settled on Sinkong Creek and reared one son, known as Miller George, who also had a son George, called little George. This brings the family account down to Rollo C., the fifth son of Thomas D. Dodson. Rollo C., who died in 1884, spent his life in Wayne County. He settled on what is known as Rolly Fork of Sinkong Creek. He married Miss Burnette, sister of Rev. Isom Burnette, a Baptist minister. He reared five sons and four daughters, the sons being Isom, George, Leonard, Jesse and James. Of the daughters the oldest was Mrs. Carl Gholson, who settled in Cincinnati, Ohio. Ruth, the second daughter, married Nimrod Morrow, and her oldest child was Joseph Morrow, who graduated from the Kentucky State University in 1899, later attended the Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville and became a Baptist minister. The third of the daughters, Mrs. Elizabeth Denney, is the mother of Jerry Denney, a Baptist preacher. Mrs. Mary Simpson, the fourth daughter, had four children, the youngest, Rhoda, being now in the Baptist Bible Institute at New Orleans training for missionary work.

Isom Dodson, oldest of the sons of Rollo C., settled on the Dry Fork of Sinkong Creek, and reared three sons, Floyd, James and William.

The second son of Rollo C. Dodson was George Dodson, who was born in Wayne County in 1834, settled in Beach Valley near Monticello, and spent his active life on that farm, where he died in 1910. He married Dorcas Young, who was born in Wayne County in 1835 and died at Monticello in 1899. They reared a family of two boys and three girls, John and William being the sons. William died in early manhood unmarried. The daughters included Rhoda, who married Floyd Dodson, son of Isom Dodson, and moved to Texas; Ann, who married Bascomb Ballou and later moved to Texas with her family; and Emma, who married Frank Smith and settled in Beach Valley.

John M. Dodson, oldest of the sons of George, and a grandson of Rollo C. Dodson, was born at Monticello in 1850, settled in Beach Valley and lived in that one county during his youth and most of his life. He is noted as one of the largest land owners and most successful farmers and stock raisers in Wayne County. He has 1700 acres and has done an extensive business with cattle and hogs. He served a term of five years as assessor of Wayne County, is a democrat, one of the leading members of the Baptist Church and is a Mason.

James Dodson, son of Rollo C. Dodson, and grandson of Rollo C. Dodson, was born at Fall Creek, above referred to. She was born near Monticello in 1850. Of the five children born to their marriage two, Martin and James T., died in infancy. The three living are: Marcus Alvin, cashier of the People's Bank of Science Hill; Walter Cleveland, cashier of the First State Bank of Beach Valley; and Elmer, a graduate of the Training School of the Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville and who went as a Baptist missionary to Canton, China, in August, 1917.

Marcus Alvin Dodson was born at Monticello October 5, 1882, and passed most of his youthful years on his father's farm, attended rural schools, graduated from the Monticello High School in 1900, and in 1904 received the A. B. degree from the Kentucky State College at Lexington. For one year he was a teacher in the graded schools of Bell County, and during part of the year 1905 was a surveyor in the oil fields of Wayne County. Beginning in 1906 he was for a year principal of the graded school of Science Hill, during 1907 was grade school principal at Greenwood, and was principal of the Union School of Science Hill, Kentucky, in 1908. During 1909 he was head of the department of mathematics at Dixon College at Dixon, Tennessee, and during 1910-11 was professor of mathematics and Latin in the Elk Creek Training School at Elk Creek, Virginia.

In the fall of 1911 Mr. Dodson entered the Peoples Bank of Science Hill as cashier, and has been steadily with that institution, serving it faithfully and promoting to the best of his ability its advancement and success for ten years. The Peoples Bank was established with a state charter in 1906, and has capital of $15,000 surplus and profits of $18,000, and deposits of $150,000. Silas G. Adams is president, Dr. G. W. Plimeti is vice president, with Mr. Dodson as cashier and in executive management.
Mr. Dodson is a democrat, a deacon in the Baptist Church, is a past master of Mount Gilead Lodge No. 255, F. and A. M., at Science Hill, a member of Somerset Chapter No. 25, R. A. M., Somerset Commandery No. 31, K. T., Pulaski Lodge No. 75, I. O. O. F., at Somerset and Crescent Lodge No. 60, K. P. During the World war he was chairman of all local committees for sale of Liberty Bonds and raising of funds for Red Cross purposes, and he deserves not a little personal credit for the successful issue of the later Liberty Loan drives in the Science Hill precinct. Mr. Dodson owns a modern home on Sandford Street. He married in Science Hill in 1907 Miss Lucy Denton, daughter of Alexander and Mary E. (Young) Denton, the latter a resident of Science Hill, where the father died in 1910. He was a retired farmer. Mrs. Dodson attended the State College at Lexington and also Georgetown College. They have one daughter, Flora Lucille Dodson, born August 4, 1918.

HON. FRANK M. WHITE, state senator representing the Sixteenth Senatorial District, is a resident of Tompkinsville and for many years has been prominent in Monroe County as a lawyer, farmer and man of affairs.

He was born on his father's homestead in Monroe County and represents one of the oldest families in this section of the state. John White, his great-grandfather, was a Virginia soldier of the Revolution, a follower of General Washington, who immediately after the war settled in Monroe County, Kentucky, where he took up farming. Recently the Government marked the grave of this Revolutionary patriot in the White Cemetery at Sulphur Lick. John White, Jr., his son, was born in Kentucky in 1801, and lived on his farm at Sulphur Lick until his death in 1871. His wife was Betsy Payne, a native of Kentucky, and they were the parents of a large family of children.

Their son, Jordan White, father of Senator White, was born at Sulphur Lick in 1829, was a member of the Home Guards during the Civil war, and soon afterward married and located at Tompkinsville, where he was elected sheriff of Monroe County. After his term in office he engaged in farming near Tompkinsville, and thus continued until his death on July 19, 1902. He was a Whig and later a Republican for many years, later became a populist, and was a faithful member of the Christian Church. He married Martha L. Monroe, who was born in Cumberland County March 8, 1834, and is still living.

Frank M. White, whose brother, Dr. James A. White, is represented on another page of this work, grew up on the old home farm, and remained there until he was twenty years of age. In acquiring his early education he walked two miles from the farm to attend school in Tompkinsville. Later he attended Liberty College at Glasgow, Kentucky, and Valparaiso University in Indiana and took his law course in the Southern University of Huntington, Kentucky, where he graduated in 1895. He was admitted to the Tennessee bar in May of that year, and soon afterwards returned to his native county and located in the center of his law offices of Judge D. R. Carr at Glasgow. He was admitted to the Kentucky bar in 1898 and thereafter until 1906 devoted his time almost exclusively to his law practice at Tompkinsville. During all those years he has likewise kept in close touch with farming, and now owns the old homestead of 230 acres two miles south of Tompkinsville.

Frank White has done his part in the educational work of the state, and taught in public schools from 1888 until 1897. He is a staunch republican in politics. He was first elected to the State Senate in 1898 from the Nineteenth District, comprising Barren, Metcalfe and Monroe counties. He served until the beginning of 1904. In 1915 he was elected a member of the Lower House of the Legislature, serving in the sessions of 1916-18. On November 8, 1921, he was elected a member of the State Senate for the Sixteenth District, comprising the counties of Monroe, Cumberland, Clinton, Russell and Wayne. At this election he had a magnificent majority of 9,000 votes. Senator White is a school teacher, a thoughtful student of public affairs, a gifted orator, and his political success is due to his deep sincerity and personal integrity. He was also a trustee of the town of Tompkinsville for six years, 1906-12, and has been a member of the Board of Education.

In 1898 he married Miss Mollie Kidwell, daughter of I. D. and Sallie A. (Williams) Kidwell. They have two children: Jordan Sam. and Eva. The former is a teacher and the latter a student in the high school at Tompkinsville. Senator White is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America, and he and his family are members of the Christian Church.

RICHARD LANDRUM HALE, cashier of the Inez Deposit Bank, and one of the men of Martin County whose names stand for reliability and sterling integrity, is a native son of the county, having been born on Wolf Creek in this county January 28, 1872, a son of George W. and Sallie (Parsley) Hale, both members of old and honored families of the county.

The birth of George W. Hale took place on John's Creek in Floyd County, Kentucky, in 1830, and he died in 1903. His wife was born in what is now Mingo County, West Virginia, and she died in 1904. George W. Hale's parents came to Floyd County, Kentucky, from Virginia, and were there engaged in farming, becoming prominent in the local Baptist Church, of which both were consistent members. After the close of the war between the states George W. Hale came to Martin County. During the war he had served in the Fourteenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry as a private, and participated in the battle of Antietam, during which engagement he was shot through the thigh, and this injury crippled him for a long period. Upon coming to Martin County he located on Wolf Creek, at Pilgrim, and began to take an active part in politics as a republican, was elected on his party ticket county clerk in 1882, and again in 1886, following which he served two terms as circuit clerk. The duties of the office necessitated removal to Inez, and there he spent the remainder of his life, which he made a useful one in spite of his serious injuries received in the defense of his country. Early united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he long served it as a trustee, and for years he was a teacher in the Sunday school. He was also a member of the Board of Stewards of the church. Made a Mason, he maintained membership with Crescent Lodge No. 672, F. and A. M., and served it as worshipful master. He also belonged to the Odd Fellows. Five sons were born to him and his wife, namely: John W., who is serving Martin County as assessor, is a farmer of Pilgrim; Richard Landrum, whose name heads this review; Wiley M., who is cashier of the Kermit State Bank at Kermit, West Virginia, was cashier of the Inez Deposit Bank from the time of its organization until he was succeeded by his brother, Richard Landrum; Julius C., who is a merchant at Pilgrim, Martin County, Kentucky; and Wallace B., who is a merchant at Blocton, West Virginia.

Richard Landrum Hale attended the public schools of Inez, and Morris-Harvey College at Barbourville, West Virginia. For the subsequent thirteen years he was engaged in teaching in those counties. He was elected principal of the Inez schools for a long time he was also deputy clerk under his father. Judge A. J. Kirk appointed him master commissioner, and as such he took an active part in the gas and oil development in this county. For a time Mr. Hale was with the lease title department of the Tripple-State National Gas & Oil Company, which later became the United States Gas Company, and still later was merged into the United Fuel Gas Company. Mr. Hale continued with this company until his death in 1904, spending nearly two years of the time being at headquarters at Huntington. In 1918 he was made cashier of the Inez Deposit Bank, where he has found congenial work and has won the appreciation of his associates and the depositors of the bank.

In 1896 Mr. Hale married Lucy Cassidy, a daughter of Philip Cassidy. She died in 1916, leaving two children, namely: Mildred Esther and Richard C. Mr. Hale subsequently married Mrs. Josephine (Newberry) Roach, a daughter of S. W. Newberry, and they have one son, Samuel N.

He is a member of the Sons of the American Revolution, the Jillson and Willard families going back to the first settlers of New England.

Willard Rogers Jillson, father of the Kentucky geologist, was born at Chenango Forks, New York, in 1867, and is a resident of Syracuse. He was reared in his native town and at Hornellsville. For twenty-five years he was connected with the Associated Press and at the same time carried on operations as a practical farmer in Onondaga County. Since then he has been director, sales manager and part owner of the Onondaga Photographic Encyclopedia, of Syracuse.

In early life he learned telegraphy, and during the World war, though over fifty years of age, he volunteered and served in the Army of the United States in the Signal Corps. He is superintendent of the Sunday School of the First Presbyterian Church of Syracuse, one of the very old churches of Central New York. He is a republican and a member of the Masonic fraternity. At Syracuse he married Anna Delle Bailey, who was born in that city in 1868. Willard Rouse is the oldest of their six children. Edward Landfield is an oil operator at Okmulgee, Oklahoma. Frederick Fellows is a lawyer at Syracuse, and the younger children, at home, are Ruth Bailey, Alma Elizabeth and Helen Ann.

Willard Rouse Jillson was born at Syracuse, May 28, 1890. The family removing a few years thereafter to the small yet historic village, Onondaga Hill, he came to spend practically all of his youth in the country on his father's farm. He attended the rural schools, and found in a rather exceptionally good library there great interest in books on natural science, geography and travel. At the same time the rich physical features of the countryside afforded him many opportunities to observe and study fields, and taught him the fundamental points of elementary geology. This he did to good account, for his record at Syracuse High School, from which he graduated in 1908, shows that he excelled in the physical sciences. While in high school he was editor of the Syracuse High School Recorder, a sixty-page monthly publication. Dependent upon his own resources for the funds for his schooling, he early learned the necessity of keeping his expenses as low as possible, and he found this the case when he went west as a reporter of the Syracuse Herald. The year following his graduation Doctor Jillson was employed in publicity work by the well known Syracuse shoe manufacturing company of A. E. Nettleton & Company, and later went to New York City as assistant advertising manager for Pathe Freres. But the old love for the great outdoors he had known as a boy caused him to resign and go to Seattle, Washington, where he took: up graduate studies which led to his life work. He became later an instructor in geology at the University of Washington, from which he received his Master of Science degree in geology in June, 1915. During the summer of 1915 Doctor Jillson was one of a party of the United States Geological Survey engaged in mapping the Mount St. Helen's quadrangle in the Cascade Mountains. In the fall of 1915 he accepted a Fellowship in Geology in the University of Chicago, where he continued his research work in geology under Professors Chamberlin, Salisbury, Williston and Weller. In the spring of 1916 he was given a traveling Fellowship to the Permnian Red Beds of Texas, where he collected vertebrate reptilian fossils. He was employed as field geologist by the Carter Oil Company and mapped the oil geology of the northern portion of the Osage Nation in Oklahoma. During 1916-17 Doctor Jillson had a graduate Fellowship in geology at Yale University, where he studied under a very notable group of American geologists, including Professors Schuchert, Barrell, Lull, Pierson and Gregory.

Doctor Jillson did his first professional geological work in Kentucky, and for his wife he moved to New York parties several gold-sulphide properties in the north Temiscaming Lake region of Ontario, Canada. He began his real work as a consulting geologist for various oil and gas corporations in Oklahoma in 1916, but his investigations also took him into Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee and Georgia. One of his engagements led him from the Mid-Continental oil field to Prestonsburg, Kentucky, and for the past five years practically all his work has been done in Kentucky and adjoining states as consulting geologist, teacher and as state geologist. During the war Doctor Jillson was assistant professor of geology in the University of Kentucky, giving instruction in geology in the Reserve Officers Training Corps. In 1918 he was also employed as a valuation geologist on oil and gas properties in Kentucky by the United States Department of Treasury.

In the fall of 1918 Doctor Jillson was made assistant state geologist of Kentucky and given charge of the oil and gas investigations of the state. In February, 1919, Governor A. O. Stanley appointed him state geologist of Kentucky in the department of geology and forestry. At the session of the Legislature in March, 1920, the state department of geology and forestry was abolished, and the (Sixth) Kentucky Geological Survey reorganized. In April, 1920, Governor Edwin F. Morrow chose Doctor Jillson for the post of director and state geologist of the new Kentucky Geological Survey. This is one of the admirable appointments under the present governor, an appointment based on the preeminent attainments of Doctor Jillson as a scientist. His headquarters are in the old Executive Building at Frankfort. Syracuse University, his alma mater, honored him with the degree of Doctor of Science at its fiftieth commencement in June, 1921.

Doctor Jillson's scientific investigations in Kentucky and elsewhere are available in a large number of books and pamphlets, the chief of which are: The Oil and Gas Resources of Kentucky, 630 pages, 1st and 2d ed., 1919, 3d ed., 1920; the Geology and Coals of Stinking Creek, Knox County, Kentucky, 103 pages, 1919; Contributions to Kentucky Geology, 204 pages, 1920; Economic Papers on Kentucky Geology, 104 pages, 1921; Production of Eastern Kentucky Crude Oils, 100 pages, 1921; Scenic Surveys of Geological Survey, 126 pages, 1921; Conservation of Natural Gas in Kentucky, 215 pages, 1922; The Coal Industry in Kentucky, 86 pages, 1922; and Oil Field Strataigraphy of Kentucky, 1922; besides about one hundred pamphlets, maps, and printed reports bearing on the geology of Kentucky and other states. Doctor Jillson is also author of a biography of the present governor of the state, entitled, "Edwin P. Morrow—Kentuckian," and a book of poems, "Songs and Satires," which has been widely read.

He is a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and the American Geographical Society, is a member of the Kentucky Academy of Sciences, of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists, the Southwestern Geological Society, the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, the American Mining Congress, the Kentucky Mining Institute, the National Drainage Congress, the Association of American State Geologists, the Kentucky Historical Society, the Filson Club, the National Geographic Society and the Frankfort Chamber of Commerce.

Doctor Jillson served three years as a member of Troop 'D' of the First Cavalry of the New York National Guard while living in Syracuse. He is a member of the Syracuse Chapter of Delta Kappa Epsilon, the Yale Chapter of Gamma Alpha, graduate scientific fraternity, and Theta Nu Epsilon. His religious views are Unitarian and in politics he is a Republican. Doctor Jillson owns and lives in a modern home at 120 East Campbell Street in Frankfort. He married at Prestonsburg in Floyd County, Kentucky, September 10, 1917, Marie Gloria and Olive A. Carpenter, daughter of Louis Henry and Marie (Smith) Gormley. On her mother's side Mrs. Jillson is a direct descendant of the gifted and affluent John Graham, the original Scotch-Irish Virginian emigrant of the upper Big Sandy Valley of Eastern Kentucky. He it was who pioneered, surveyed and settled in what is now Floyd County many years prior to statehood. Mrs. Gormley is now residing in Frankfort. Mr. Gormley having died May 4, 1911, in fronton, Ohio. A native of New Castle, Pennsylvania, he was one of the first real oil operators of this state and was successful in opening up the Beaver Creek pool in Eastern Kentucky in 1891. Doctor and Mrs. Jillson have three children, two girls and a boy. They are: Marie Gormley, born May 7, 1915; in Prestonsburg; Oriole Frederika, born September 3, 1918, in Prestonsburg; and Willard Rogers, born August 20, 1920, in Frankfort, Kentucky.

COVINGTON U. BRAMBLETT is one of the veteran business men of Nicholas County, and for a quarter of a century has been located at Carlisle in the real estate and insurance business.

Mr. Bramblett was born in Bourbon County, December 10, 1854, son of Henry and Malinda (Utterbach) Bramblett. His father was born in Nicholas County in 1832 and his mother in Bourbon County in 1831, both grew up on farms, were educated in local schools, and were married in Bourbon County. Henry Bramblett spent his active life as a farmer in Bourbon and Nicholas counties. He began voting as a whig. His wife was a member of the Christian Church. They had a family of five sons: John W., deceased; Covington U.; B. H., a retired farmer at Carlisle; Thomas S., a retired farmer at Mount Sterling; and George W., a farmer in Clarke County.

Covington U. Bramblett spent the first eighteen years of his life on his father's farm, and while there acquired a common school education. For three years he was in business as a country merchant, and in 1882, nearly forty years ago, moved to Carlisle, where he established a livery business and a horse sales stable. From 1893 for several years he was a trainer of trotting and pacing horses for the track, and among others he owned Investigator, a trotter with a record of 2:172, which for many years was the popular favorite on the tracks of Kentucky, Indiana and Texas. Mr. Bramblett sold his racing interests in 1896, and has since been engaged in his present business as a real estate and insurance operator. He also has the local agency for the Overland automobile. His home is a beautiful residence a quarter of a mile east of Carlisle on Main Street, where he has three acres of land.
He is a stockholder in the local tobacco warehouse, and for twenty-four years has served as election committeeman of Nicholas County. He was married on December 9, 1897, Mr. Bramblett married Laura B. Thomas, who was reared and educated at Carlisle. She is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

ROBERT A. ATKINSON, whose home is eight miles southeast of Carlisle and a mile and a half north of Shively, is one of the most prominent citizens of Nicholas County. He is a son of James A. and Maria (Templeman) Atkinson. His father was born in March, 1835, and his mother was born in Bath County, Kentucky, October 25, 1840. The father died April 30, 1865, four years after the birth of Robert. The mother survived until 1909, and was a very devout member of the Christian Church. There were three children, only one now living, William S., born February 28, 1858, who is married Florence E. Stephen son; Robert A., and James F., born November 30, 1863, and married Lida Sledd.

Robert A. Atkinson lived out his youth on a farm near Moorefield, where he had a common school education. On November 20, 1884, at the age of twenty-three, he married Emma Coons. They started housekeeping on the farm with what little capital was at their present place, where for several years they rented and then bought and have since paid out on a fine farm of 150 acres.

Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson have had six children: Albert, born December 22, 1886, married Pearl Coons and lives in Lexington; Ollie C., born August 30, 1889, married Blanche Daniel, and lives on the home farm; Robert A. Jr., born June 8, 1893, a graduate of the Sharpsburg High School and of Smith's College at Lexington, is married and lives in North Carolina; William H. and Jia are both deceased; and Ella, a graduate of the Sharpsburg High School, lives at home. The family are members of the Christian Church and Mr. Atkinson is an elder. He is affiliated with Ramsey Lodge No. 15, of the Masonic order. Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson is a member of the Eastern Star. Robert A., Jr, is also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. The family are democrats in politics.

THOMAS TERRY. The banking interests of any community are naturally among the most important, for financial instability is the foundation upon which are erected all great enterprises. The men who control and conserve the money of corporation, country or individual must necessarily possess many qualities not requisite in other lines of endeavor, and along these high commercial integrity, exceptional financial capacity, poise, judgment and foresight may be mentioned. The man who has a public character, and fact has been demonstrated on numerous occasions when panics that threatened even the stability of the Government have been averted by the wisdom, sagacity and foresight of men whose whole training has been along the line of finance. A citizen who has been prominently identified with the banking interests of Grayson County for a number of years and who has done much in the effective building up of his county and town along additional lines is Thomas Terry, president of the Bank of Clarkson.

Mr. Terry was born near Big Clifty, Grayson County, Kentucky, on his father's farm, May 25, 1885, a son of J. W. and Bettie (Hatfield) Terry. The family to which he belongs is of Scotch-Irish origin and was founded in America during Colonial times, when the first immigrant established his home in Virginia, in that state in 1809 was born the grandfather of Thomas Terry. John S. Terry, who became a pioneer into Grayson County, was a farming man, and for a period applied himself to agricultural pursuits. He became a well-to-do man through his industry and good management, and also wielded an influence in local public affairs, serving for some years as sheriff of the county. He died near Big Clifty in 1884. Mr. Terry married for his second wife Eliza Wooldridge, who also died near Big Clifty. One son and one daughter was J. W. Terry, the father of Thomas Terry.

J. W. Terry was born in 1855, near Big Clifty, and early in life decided to follow in his father's footsteps and devote his energies to agricultural pursuits as the work of his career. He has followed this course and in so doing has found prosperity and contentment, being at this time the owner of a valuable farm of one hundred and fifty miles east of Big Clifty, on which he now makes his home. He is a democrat in his political views, and in religion is a member and active supporter of the Christian Church. Mr. Terry married Miss Bettie Hatfield, who was born in 1857, near Big Clifty. Four children were born to this union: John, a merchant of Clarkson, who died in youth aged 17; Daniel, a mechanic in the car shops at Louisville; Thomas; and Sam, a farmer and dealer in feed and fertilizer at Big Clifty.

Thomas Terry received his primary educational training in the country district school in the vicinity of his father's farm, and was reared on the home place, where he remained until reaching the age of twelve years. At the age of 18 years he entered the normal school at Clarkson, after his graduation from which he began teaching school in the rural districts, and continued to be thus engaged for three years. He was next located at Louisville, where for one year he was a teacher in the Bryant & Stratton Business College, a position which he left in 1906 to enter the Bank of Clarkson at Big Clifty.

When he entered this institution it was as assistant cashier, from which position he was promoted to the cashiership in 1909. In 1916 he was elected president, a position which he has held to the present time. Mr. Terry is an example of the type of banker who particularly deserves success because he persistently uses his position of strength and influence to the benefit of the interests of the community. Bankers of this type are invaluable protectors of the public prosperity from sudden storms or injurious attacks. The Bank of Clarkson was founded in 1904 as a state bank, and has shown a healthful development and growth, its present capital stock being $15,000; surplus and profits, $16,000; and deposits, $42,500. The banking plant is located on High Street, and the officers are: President, Thomas Terry; vice president, W. C. Keller; cashier, E. R. Keller; and Board of Directors, J. N. Higdon, a retired farmer of Clarkson; R. L. Pulliam, a railroad agent of that city; Daniel Downs, a farmer of Millers town, and H. R. Jones, a wealthy citizen of Leitchfield.

Mr. Terry is an adherent of the principles of the democratic party, and has a retired farmer of Clarkson; R. L. Pulliam, a railroad agent of that city; Daniel Downs, a farmer of Millertown, and H. R. Jones, a wealthy citizen of Leitchfield. Mr. Terry is an adherent of the principles of the democratic party, and has a Allie (Graham) Keller, are residents of Clarkson, Mr. Keller being vice president of the Bank of Clarkson. Mr. and Mrs. Terry have one child, Nell, born September 20, 1921.

John G. Roberts. The men who faithfully and successfully discharge the onerous duties pertaining to the office of sheriff of a county are rendering their county a service the value of which is not always appreciated as it should be, for these men take their lives in their hands the day they go into office and for the remainder of their lives are not safe from attack from the men they succeed in placing within the power of the law because of serious infringement of the statutes. The criminal of today is a highly specialized worker, and when interrupted in his nefarious calling seeks to avenge himself upon the one he deems responsible for the failure of his carefully laid plans. To meet and thwart such a criminal, to capture him and place him in confinement, and to secure the evidence necessary to convict him requires qualities of no mean order, and ones not possessed by every person. There must be grit and courage; determination and perseverance; a knowledge of men, and an uncanny ability to out-guess and out-plan the man against whom the movement is inaugurated, and an unflinching honesty and an unaltering resolution to uphold the oath of office no matter what the temptation may be to deviate from the line of duty. When the citizens of Montgomery elected John G. Roberts their sheriff they felt convinced that he would live up to the highest conception of the office, and that his subsequent career has more than justified their expectations, for he is one of the best men in this office the county has ever possessed.

John G. Roberts was born in Montgomery County, March 7, 1866, a son of James H. and Sallie (Guy) Roberts, natives of Bath and Clark counties, respectively. She died in the fall of 1866, leaving four children, of whom two are now living: Nannie, Edward Mace, and John G. and Bettie, the latter of whom is a milliner of Mount Sterling. Subsequently James H. Roberts was again married, and John G., then only a little over one year old, was taken and reared by his stepmother. When he was ten years old the family moved to Mount Sterling, and for four years he attended its schools, but when only fourteen years of age he began life on his own account. For the first year he worked seven days per week, and the second year he worked five. In the second year he was paid $10 per month, and the third his remuneration was $16.67 per month. Going with Childs, Bean & Company as a salesman when he was eighteen years old, he received $25 per month for his services. After four years with this company, during which period his salary was raised, Mr. Bean sold his interests, and Mr. Roberts went with the Childs-Thompson Grocery Company, and remained with that organization for twenty-five years as a salesman. Leaving it, he spent one year with Steward Henley & Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, and then returned to Mount Sterling and ran for the office of county assessor, for which he was defeated by only thirteen votes. Four years later he again made the race, and was elected by a large majority and held the office of county assessor for a term of four years. Returning to the employ of the Childs-Thompson Grocery Company, he continued with it for about six years, and then purchased the retail department of the company, the new organization becoming Roberts, Young & Duff, and this association continued in that business until it was later known as Roberts & Ringo. Five years later Mr. Roberts sold to his partner, and went into the wholesale grocery business, and operated it alone under his own name. Too close application to business resulted in a breakdown nine months later, he was forced to seek a more bracing climate and went to Colorado and there spent seven months.

Returning with health restored, he was nominated by his party for sheriff, made a splendid campaign, and was elected by a gratifying majority.

Sheriff Roberts married in April, 1901, Miss Nora Daugherty, who was born in Fleming County, Kentucky, and educated in the public schools. There are no children. Sheriff Roberts belongs to the Christian Church, and is serving as deacon of his congregation. Furthermore, he maintains connections with the Odd Fellows. In politics he is a democrat. After assuming the duties of his office he installed Mrs. Roberts as his assistant in the office work. She is a very proficient business woman, an expert bookkeeper and a great aid to her husband not only in his office, but also in the seed business they are carrying on with such excellent results.

They both live on an old farm he bought on the old farm where Mr. Roberts was born, and their interest centered on the farm where he was born. This farm is on McBride's Run, three miles northeast of Carlisle, in Nicholas County.

Mr. and Mrs. Letton were married September 22, 1848, son of William W. and Lucy A. (Williams) Letton. His father was born in Nicholas County, November 25, 1809, and his mother in Indiana, May 1, 1809. They were married October 17, 1833, and the mother died December 19, 1863, and the father March 31, 1883. The community knew William W. Letton as a very successful farmer and as a citizen of worth in all his relationships. He is frequently honored with public office at the hands of the democrats, and was affiliated with Daugherty Lodge No. 65, F & A. M. Both he and his wife were active church members. They were the parents of seven children, of whom John W. is the only survivor. He was the youngest. The others were: Berton R., born September 26, 1834, married Eliza N. Baldwin, and of his nine children six are still living, several of them with their uncle, John W. Letton, who has never married; Martha J. Letton, born November 1, 1836, was the wife of Silas W. Willett; Mary E., born October 28, 1838, married L. C. Jones; Laura, born March 21, 1841, died in infancy; Elton K. was born January 1, 1844; Abitha, born February 3, 1846, died in girlhood.

John W. Letton acquired a public-school education and for half a century or more his activities have been taken up with the home farm of seventy acres. He is a democrat in politics. The six living children of his brother, Berton R., are: Robert E., a Bourbon County farmer; Maude E., wife of Ed Alexander; Charles G., Thomas J. and Lucy M., all at home; and Bertie, wife of Carl D. Payne.

Leon Lewis Miles is president and manager of the Louisville Taxicab & Transfer Company, one of the largest corporations of its kind in the South, operating a complete taxicab, touring, baggage and trucking system covering the city of Louisville.

Mr. Miles is a practical mechanic and learned his trade and worked at it until he took an increasing share in executive responsibilities. He was born at Eminence, in Henry County, Kentucky, September 17, 1877. His father, J. M. Miles, is also a native of Henry County and is still in business as an agricultural dealer at Eminence. The mother of L. L. Miles was Lydia Jones, daughter of Thomas Jones of Shelby County.

L. L. Miles finished his education at Eminence College and soon afterward came to Louisville and obtained employment at the Henry Vogt Machine Company. He also worked as a mechanic for the Kentucky Auto Company, and subsequently operated the Miles Auto Company until 1912. In 1913 he became president of the Southern Motors Company and continued as active head of that corporation until 1918, and from that date until August, 1921, he was one of the directors. In August, 1921, he became vice president of the Hannah Miles Company, this company being distributors for the Dodge cars. In 1918 Mr. Miles became president and manager of the Louisville Taxicab & Transfer Company. In 1916 the stock was increased to $500,000. The present extensive buildings and plant of the company were erected in 1918. The business furnishes storage for a hundred and ninety cars. The Brown and Yellow Taxi system of a hundred cars is owned by the Louisville Taxicab & Transfer Company. There are 200 employees and in 1926 the cabs covered a total of 2,000,000 miles. For the transfer department of the business the equipment comprises twenty-five vans and trucks. Among other directors of the Louisville Taxicab & Transfer Company are Judge R. W. Bingham, Otto Seelbach and the late A. T. Hert.

L. L. Miles is a member of the Rotary Club, President of the Louisville Safety Council, and is affiliated with the Masons, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Elks, and belongs to the Juniper Hunting Club, Pendennis Club, Louisville Country Club, and Audubon Country Club.

At the age of thirty Mr. Miles married Florence Long, daughter of Dennis Long and widow of Jno. D. Taggart. Dennis Long was founder of the Long Real Estate Company of Louisville. He had a son Irving Long and he has a stepdaughter Mary Catherine Taggart, who is a graduate of high school and finished her education in the Finch School in New York.

HUBERT PRENTICE MYERS, district manager of the Central Home Telephone and Telegraph Company, is one of the business men of Bowling Green who has worked his way from small beginnings to a position of independence and importance. In no period of his career has he been specially favored by fortune or circumstance, but through the ready recognition and use of ordinary opportunities he has been able to rise steadily and his life is therefore one of typical self made men.

Mr. Myers was born in Warren County, Kentucky, October 12, 1882, a son of W. H. and Helen (Kirby) Myers. He belongs to a family which is of Scotch-Irish origin and the American progenitor of which immigrated to this country some time in early colonial days, settling in Virginia. In that state, in 1822, was born the great-grandfather of Mr. Myers, a man who became a pioneer in Allen County, Kentucky, near Allen Springs, where he died in 1857 after many years passed in agricultural pursuits. He married Miss Sophia Barrick, who was born in Barren County, Kentucky, in 1823, and died near Allen Springs, in October, 1825.

Mr. Myers was born near Allen Springs, Warren County, Kentucky, where he was reared and married and became the leading citizen of his community, where he was not only an extensive and successful farmer, but a successful distiller, a sawmill owner and a general merchant. When he was elected deputy sheriff of Warren County, in 1904, he moved to Bowling Green, and served in that capacity until 1910, in which year he was elected sheriff of Warren County until 1914, when he was made deputy county assessor for four years, and in 1918 was again made deputy sheriff, for a period of four years. Mr. Myers has won the complete confidence of the people of Bowling Green, where he resides in a pleasant home at No. 741 Twelfth Street. He is a democrat in his political views and his church affiliation is with the Methodist Episcopal congregation. Fraternally he holds membership in the Masons, Bowling Green Lodge 320, B. P. O. E., and the Improved Order of Red Men. Mr. Myers married Miss Helen Kirby, who was born in 1862 at Alvaton, Warren County, and to this union there have been born four children: Hubert Prentice; Willie, who is the wife of W. C. Brownfield, a teacher of penmanship in the public schools of Cincinnati, Ohio; Essie, a teacher in the high school at Elizabethtown, Kentucky; and Rodes, professor of languages at Ogden College, who resides with his parents.

In attending the public schools of the rural community of his birth, Hubert S. Myers pursued a course in the Southern Normal and Bowling Green Business University, from which he was graduated in 1902. In the latter part of that year he began working for the Bowling Green White Stone Company, as stenographer, but March 1, 1903, resigned his position and entered the employ of the district manager of the company, where he was timekeeper and paymaster until July 1, 1903. Mr. Myers then entered the service of the Home Telephone Company, starting as collector and bookkeeper and gradually working his way upward by industry, fidelity and ability, until in January, 1908, he was made manager for the company. On January 1, 1915, he was advanced to district manager of the Central Home Telephone and Telegraph Company, a position which he holds at this time. Mr. Myers' district comprises the exchanges at Bowling Green, Russellville, Morgantown, Woodburn and Lewisburg, and toll lines from Elizabethtown to Hopkinsville and from Scottsville to Rochester, Kentucky. Under his superintendence are eighty employees, his offices and immediate exchange being located at 824 College Street, Bowling Green.

Mr. Myers is a stockholder in the Kankakee Automobile Company of Kankakee, Illinois, the Comet Automobile Company of Illinois and the O. K. Giant Battery Company, of Gary, Indiana. He owns a modern residence at No. 1217 High Street, one of the comfortable homes of Bowling Green. A citizen of public spirit and loyalty during the World war, he was a generous contributor to all movements inaugurated for the assistance of our fighting forces and assisted the various drives in Warren County. Mr. Myers is a democrat in politics, and with his family belongs to the Baptist Church. Fraternally he affiliates with Bowling Green Lodge No. 51, O. O. F., and Bowling Green Lodge No. 320, B. P. O. E., and is president of Post I of the T. P. A. at Bowling Green.

Mr. Myers was united in marriage in 1906 at Bowling Green to Miss Sarah Hendricks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hendricks of this city, the latter of whom is deceased, while the former has held the post of city assessor for many years and is one of the locally most highly respected citizens. Mr. and Mrs. Myers are the parents of one child: Sara Katherine, who was born September 24, 1920.

JOHN T. SIMS, who has passed the age of three quarters of a century, has spent most of his long and useful life in Nicholas County. He has been identified with business and industry as a merchant and also as a farmer, and the home of his later years has been an attractive country place a quarter of a mile south of Carlisle, on Plum Lick Pike.

This home is not far from his birthplace. He was born May 29, 1845, son of William A. and Anna (Campbell) Sims. His father was born about six miles north of Carlisle, Kentucky, and was of Scotch-Irish descent. He came to Kentucky from Virginia in 1793. Ambrose Sims married Rachel Adair, who died in 1871. Their children were Mary A., William A., Robert, Margaret, Willis, Rachel and Lucinda. William A. Sims grew up in Nicholas County, and after his marriage to Anna Campbell, who was born in 1818 and died in 1875, he settled on the farm where he subsequently conducted a country store there. Later he was in business as a merchant at Carlisle, then lived on a farm two years, and became an extensive dealer in livestock. At one time he had invested $10,000 in hogs, and while they were being shipped to market, but before he had received the proceeds, the entire lot was destroyed by...
Mrs. Miller is the mother of eight children: Robert H., married Gertrude Whaley and lives in Californi.a. Charles K. graduated from the Bowling Green Business College, married Cornelia Bootman and lives in Alberta, Canada. Alexander graduated from the Millersburg Military Institute and married Ethel Johnson. Joseph H. is a graduate of Miami University, Dayton, Ohio, and married Lucile Dailey. James W., who graduated from the Millersburg Military Institute and spent two years in Kentucky University, was a volunteer in the World war, serving as second lieutenant of infantry, and had seven months of service in France. He married Frances Oney, a graduate of the Lexington High School. Katharine S. Miller, is a graduate of the Millersburg Female College, where she taught music until her marriage to William A. Butler. Julia H. Miller was also a graduate of the college at Millersburg, was a special student of English at Transylvania University, took the Library course in Iowa, and was at Somerset, Kentucky, teacher in the high school, and also catalogued the Carnegie Library there. She died in 1915. Elizabeth C. Miller, the youngest of Mrs. Miller's children, is a graduate of the Millersburg College, and has the Master of Arts degree from Transylvania University. Mrs. Miller besides her own accomplished children has four grandchildren.

James M. Berry. No name stands higher in the Mooresfield community of Nicholas County than that of Berry. It is a name that has been associated with agriculture, with banking, with the important matters of the locality, and the sturdy and upright good citizenship through a long period of years.

The stalwart example and fine character of the late James W. Berry still exert an impressive influence over that community. James W. Berry was born near Mooresfield, August 5, 1859, grew up on a farm, but acquired a good education, at first in the public schools and later in the college at North Middletown, where he graduated with the A. B. degree. The following year Pattie Evans graduated from the same college with the same degree. The friendship begun in college ripened into marriage, but when they made their start they possessed a capital of only $27.50. James W. Berry with the aid of his good wife enjoyed increasing good fortune, and at the time of his death owned 400 acres of land and was president of the First National Bank of Carlisle. He was in every sense a good citizen and a liberal supporter of church and other good movements. He died December 10, 1919. His wife, who was born at North Middletown, September 12, 1865, died October 5, 1903. They were active members of the Christian Church, in which he was an elder and was a democrat in politics. The three children of these honored parents are: Evans, who is unmarried, Pansy, a graduate of Hamilton College of Lexington with the A. B. degree, who died December 10, 1919, and James Milford Berry.

James Milford Berry, who has successfully endeavored to follow in many ways the honored footsteps of his father, is a banker and farmer, living on his farm a quarter of a mile east of Mooresfield. He was born there September 8, 1889, and that has always been his home. He is a graduate of the Shapinsk High School, received his A. B. degree from the Kentucky Military Institute, and graduated in law from Transylvania University at Lexington. Mr. Berry practiced law at Carlisle one year, but then retired from his profession to take charge of his farming interests. He owns a highly improved general and stock farm of 32 acres, and is president of the Old Dominion Bank and vice president of the First National Bank of Carlisle. Mr. Berry is an active member of the Christian Church, is affiliated with B. F. Reynolds Lodge No. 443, F. and A. M., Nicholas Chapter No. 41, R. A. M., Adoniram Council, R. and S. M., Carlisle Commandery No. 18, K. T., and Oleika Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Lexington. He is a democrat in politics.

JOHN W. KNOX belongs to the prosperous farmers of the Blue Grass section of Bourbon County, has achieved prosperity through his close attention to business over a long period of years, and still enjoys the comforts and fruits of his fine farm two miles from Millersburg.

He was born near Boyd Station in Harrison County, May 14, 1855, son of Isaac N. and Louisa (Ingersoll) Knox. His mother was a native of the same locality. His father was born in Illinois, and was left an orphan at the age of one year and was then taken into the home of his uncle, Harvey McNiece, and grew up on a farm in Harrison County, Kentucky. After completing his common school education and after his marriage he settled on a farm near Boyd Station, where he lived out his life and where he was known as a good farmer and a substantial citizen. He was a democrat in politics. There were four children: Nannie, wife of Albert Colvin; John W.; James H., a farmer near Boyd Station; and Thatcher, a miller at Boyd Station.

John W. Knox lived on the farm of his father during the war, attended the common schools, and at the age of twenty-one started an independent career as a farmer, soon afterward purchasing twenty-five acres at Boyd Station. He farmed there and later at Cynthiana for six years, and in 1912 moved over the line into Bourbon County, where he still conducts his farm, comprising 140 acres.

Mr. Knox married Ada Roberts, who died leaving three children: Emma, wife of Luke Goodman, of Berry Station; Anna, wife of John Fogle, living near Boyd Station; and Miss Nannie. February 4, 1887, Mr. Knox married Miss Frances Childers. They have three children: George B., Ella G. and Esta. The family are all members of the Baptist Church, and Mr. Knox is a democrat.

Mr. Knox was born near Boyd Station, Kentucky, April 7, 1867, daughter of Archibald R. and Mahala Byrd Childers. Her father was born in Virginia, April 8, 1838, and her mother on January 6, 1837. Archibald Childers was a son of Elisha and Elizabeth (Hurst) Childers, both natives of Virginia, where they lived for several years after their marriage, and on coming to Kentucky settled in Wolfe County. Archibald Childers married in Wolfe County, and later moved with his family to the vicinity of Boyd Station in Harrison County, where he spent the rest of his days devoted to agriculture. He was a member of the Methodist Church and a republican in politics.

ALFRED BRADLEY, M. D. A physician who has found his work in a congenial country environment, and looks after a large professional clientele while living on his country place seven miles south of Carlisle, Doctor Bradley is a graduate of the University of Louisville, and has practiced in his present home community for the past ten years.

He was born at Mount Olivet in Robertson County June 21, 1875, son of J. W. and Elizabeth (Hitt) Bradley. His parents were native Kentuckians, his father born at Little Rock in Bourbon County. Both are now deceased. They spent their active lives on a farm in Robertson County. They were members of the Methodist Church, and the father was a Mason and republican. Of their eight children six are still living.

Dr. Alfred Bradley grew up on the farm in Robertson County and was educated in the common schools and Mount Olivet Academy. For several years he was a successful teacher in his native county, and he educated himself for his profession. He was graduated M. D. from the University of Louisville Medical School in 1900, and for three years practiced at Blue Lick in Nicholas County. In 1912 he moved to his country home on the Maysville Pike, on rural route No. 3 out of Carlisle. He has eight acres of land, which he uses for agriculture on a modest scale. Doctor Bradley is a member of the County Medical Association, and he and his family are members of the Christian Church. He is affiliated with Blue Lick Lodge No. 295, F. and A. M., Nicholas Chapter No. 41, R. A. M., and is a past chancellor commander of the Knights of Pythias. In politics he is a republican. Doctor Bradley in 1902 married Miss Pearl Childers, of a prominent family, who was reared and educated in Robertson County. They have two daughters, Glid and Hazel, both of whom have completed their public-school courses.

JAMES Guthrie, who was a secretary of the treasury during the administration of President Pierce and one of Kentucky’s United States senators following the close of the Civil war, was a native of Kentucky, and the state is justly honored by his many brilliant achievements.

He was born in Nelson County, Kentucky, December 5, 1792, of Scotch ancestry. His father, General Adam Guthrie, came from Virginia to Kentucky in 1782 and developed the grassy plantations of Nelson County. He participated in some of the Indian campaigns in the early history of Kentucky, and was a member of the Legislature from 1800 to 1805 and again in 1808.

His son James Guthrie was reared on his father’s farm and finished his early education in McAllister Academy at Bardstown. For several years he was in the flatboat trade on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. He studied law under Judge, later United States Senator, John Rowan of Bardstown, and began practice in that city. At the age of twenty-eight, following his appointment as commonwealth attorney by Governor John Adair, he moved to Louisville, and his subsequent career is identified with that city. He was many times honored to a seat in both Houses of the Legislature. His influence as a lawyer and citizen and also in the Legislature made him instrumental in the founding of three great institutions of the state, the University of Louisville, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad and the State Bank of Kentucky. He helped secure the charter of the bank in 1834, and for many years was one of its directors. He promoted the construction of the Louisville & Frankfort Railroad in 1833, and when the Louisville & Nashville Railroad was organized and incorporated its property he became president of the company. It was through James Guthrie that the City of Louisville voted a donation in 1837 for the University of Louisville, and for thirty-two years he was one of the trustees of the institution.

James Guthrie was elected a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1849, and was presiding officer of the convention. He became secretary of the treasury in President Pierce’s cabinet in 1853, and was the most influential member of that President’s cabinet, and many students have testified to his reputation that he was “the ablest secretary of the treasury since Alexander Hamilton.” In 1860, at the Democratic Convention in Charleston, he was Kentucky’s favorite son for the nomination for president. He was a Union democrat during the war, and as president of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad made that road an instrument of great service and value to the Federal government. It is said that President Lincoln offered him the post of secretary of war, which he declined on account of age and infirmity. He was a delegate to the Peace Convention held in the city of Washington in February, 1861, and a delegate to the Democrat National Convention at Chicago in 1864. He remains loyal to the traditions of his old party, and before the close of the war the Legislature elected him to the United States Senate, in which he took his seat March 4, 1865. He was then past seventy, and in 1868 resigned his seat and died on March 13, 1869, at his home in Louisville.

In 1821 he married Miss Eliza Prather. They were the parents of six daughters, the eldest, Mary, becoming the wife of John Caperton of Louisville, and her son is John Hays Caperton of that city. The other two daughters were Mrs. J. Lawrence Smith and Mrs. William B. Caldwell. The former was the wife of the distinguished American chemist and scientist, J. Lawrence Smith, whose achievements gave him an international reputation but whose home for a number of years was in Louisville where he died October 12, 1883.

John Caperton. Lives worthily lived and worthily ended have made in America noble records and traditions in the Caperton family, which has been one of special distinction in connection with the history of Kentucky.

The Capertons were identified with the frontier of Western Virginia prior to the Revolutionary war, and from what is now the State of West Virginia came over into Kentucky. The following account can note only briefly some of the deeds of a great importance in which the Capertons have been figured. While the history of Kentucky is in part a record of the Caperton family, the story of the family in complete detail must also be abridged.

It is said that a tradition held by the several collateral branches of the Caperton family, both in the United States and Great Britain, it had its distinctive origin in the south of France during the Middle Ages, the first emigration occurring over 200 years ago, when Capertons settled near Melrose, Scotland, and in England on the Wales border, where some are reported still to reside.

It was probably about the year 1725 that John Caperton came by the way of the north of Ireland and within a short time established his residence in Virginia, near the present dividing line between Monroe and Summers counties, West Virginia. On the voyage across the Atlantic came also a young Englishwoman, Polly Thompson, and upon arriving in America she became the wife of her fellow passenger, John Caperton. They passed the remainder of their lives in what is now West Virginia, and there they reared their family of three sons and one daughter. The sons Adam and William were the founders of the family in Kentucky. Adam served as a soldier in the war of the Revolution, as did also his brother Hugh, who remained in Virginia, and the first engagement in which they participated was the battle of Point Pleasant, October 10, 1774, both having been members of Colonel Buttleton’s command. Adam Caperton served as deputy sheriff of Greenbrier County, Virginia, in 1780. He married Elizabeth Miller, and they became the parents of three sons and one daughter—George, John, Hugh and Elizabeth. In 1782 Adam Caperton came with his family to Kentucky, and here he was killed by the Indians, in the historic battle of Little Mountain, or Estill’s Defeat on the banks of the Kentucky River of that year. Of this battle the general history of Kentucky in another volume gives ample record.

Hugh, youngest son of Adam and Elizabeth (Miller) Caperton, returned to Virginia several years after the death of his father and made his home with his uncle, Capt. Hugh Caperton, near the old homestead of his grandparents. He eventually, in 1805, was elected sheriff of McDowell County and established his official residence at Union, where he married Jane, daughter of Michael and Margaret (Paulee nee Handley) Erskine. Of Hugh Caperton the following record has been written: "Hugh Caperton of the third generation appears to have been a man of large physique, quite handsome presence, and both forceful and agreeable personality. He built 'Elmwood,' on the outskirts of Union, and after many years' service in the Virginia Assembly represented Virginia in the Thirteenth United States Congress. His second wife was Della (Alexander) Caperton, of both wives there were four children by the second marriage. Of the ten children surviving the first marriage of Hugh Caperton, with Jane Erskine, there were four daughters and six sons.”

This embraces the record of the family down to John Caperton, whose name is given at the beginning of this article. John Caperton became a widely known citizen of Louisville, where he lived for many years. He was born in Virginia, January 15, 1817, and was educated in the University of Virginia. In early life he was given to some of the adventures and undertakings which attracted young men of that time. About the close of the war with Mexico he went to Texas, was engaged in some expensive land transactions there, and about the time gold was discovered on the Pacific coast he started overland by way of El Paso for California. A most interesting record of this period of his life is found in some letters that have been preserved, written chiefly to Allen P. Caperton at Richmond. They describe the exciting adventures of his trip across the plane and the exciting life of early San Francisco. He served as a deputy sheriff at San Francisco, and had a rather prominent part in the affairs of that remarkable city.

After returning East he located in Kentucky and married Mary Guthrie, daughter of the distinguished Judge James Guthrie, whose career as an eminent Kentuckian is sketched on other pages. After his marriage John Caperton lived in Louisville, and died there July 18, 1900. Mrs. John Caperton was born January 16, 1823, and died April 23, 1901. Of the four children born to their marriage, only one, the eldest, John Hays Caperton, is still living, and the account of his life is presented in a following sketch.

John Hays Caperton has been a prominent factor in the real estate business at Louisville for forty years, and the business established and built up by him is conducted today, with offices in the Taylor Building by himself and his son Hugh.

John Hays Caperton was born at Louisville, September 12, 1858, son of John and Mary (Guthrie) Caperton. The history of his father and the Caperton family has already been told. There is also an article on the career of his maternal grandfather, James Guthrie. John H. Caperton was educated in the public schools of Louisville. As a young man he entered the real estate business, and to that profession has devoted the best years of his life. He is an acknowledged authority on property values and business interests of his native city and has been satisfied with the substantial success coming to him from his knowledge and practice and the service he has been able to render as a progressive citizen.

In 1892 John H. Caperton married Miss Virginia Standiford, daughter of E. D. Standiford, former president of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, whose life history is also contained in this publication. The only son of John H. Caperton is Hugh J. Caperton.

Hugh J. Caperton, only son of John Hays Caperton, and actively associated with his father in business at Louisville, was born in that city July 16, 1893. He attended the public schools of his native city, graduated from the Hill School of Pottstown, Pennsylvania, in 1913, and soon afterward entered his father’s business. During the World War he was in the army stationed at Camp Joseph E. Johnston at Jacksonville, Florida. After his honorable discharge he resumed his business connections at Louisville.

June 6, 1918, he married Dorothy Bonnie. They have two children: John Hays, second, born May 15, 1919; and Dorothy Bonnie, born April 12, 1921.
J. LAWRENCE SMITH. In the realm of scientific thought and discovery J. Lawrence Smith was one of the foremost Americans of the mid-century. Many publications concerned with the history of the progress of economic chemistry and medical science make record of his work. For the last thirty years of his life his home was at Louisville, and the city reaped some of the benefit of his widely extended fame. He married the daughter of one of Kentucky's foremost scientists, while his life plant-conservation and nearly forty years ago, there is still importance and significance indicating that the fame he enjoyed during his lifetime was well deserved.

J. Lawrence Smith was born at Charleston, South Carolina, December 17, 1818, and died at Louisville, October 12, 1883. As a brief sketch that contains the principal facts of a lifetime of many contributions, one published in the Cyclopaedia of American Biography a few years after his death contains the information needed to fulfill the purposes of the biographical section of this History of Kentucky.

He entered the university of Virginia in 1836, and devoted two years to the study of chemistry, natural philosophy and civil engineering, after which for a year he was assistant engineer in the construction of a railroad line between Charleston and Cincinnati. Abandoning civil engineering, he studied medicine and was graduated at the Medical College of the State of South Carolina in 1840. After studying in Paris he determined in 1841 to devote himself to chemistry, and thereafter spent his summers in Gissen with Baron Justus von Liebig and his winters in Paris while J. Pelouze. He returned to Charleston in 1841, began the practice of medicine, delivered a course of lectures on toxicology at the medical college, and in 1846 established the "Medical and Surgical Journal of South Carolina. Meanwhile he had published in the "American Journal of Science" several papers, including one on the medical effects of arsenic on the Animal Body and of Counteacting Its Effects," (1841), in which certain of the conclusions of Orfila were shown to be erroneous and one on "The Composition and Products of Distillation of Sperrmaceti" (1842) which was the most elaborate investigation on organic chemistry published by an American up to that time. Details of the process for artificial chemistry led to his appointment by the state of South Carolina to the board of trade that was charged with the bullion that came into commerce from the gold fields of Georgia and the Carolinas. About this time his attention was directed to the marl-beds in the vicinity of Charleston, and his investigations of the value of these deposits for agricultural purposes were among the earliest scientific contributions on this subject. He also investigated the meteorological conditions, soils, and modes of culture that affect the growth of cotton, and made a report on these subjects. In 1856 he was invited by the Sultan of Turkey, on the recommendation of James Buchanan, to teach Turkish agriculturists the proper method of cotton culture in Asia Minor. On reaching the East he found the proposed scheme to be impracticable and was then appointed by the Turkish Government as expert on mineral resources.

For four years he devoted his energies to this work, and the Turkish Government still derives part of its income from his discoveries. Besides the chrome ore and coal that he made known, his discovery of the emery deposits of Asia Minor was of great value, for the island of Naxos was at that time the only source of supply, and in consequence of the opening of new deposits the use of the substance was extended. The subsequent discovery and application of emery in this country is due to his publications on the subject.

In 1850 he severed his relations with the Turkish authorities, spent some time in Paris, and protected there the inverted microscope, which he completed after his return to the United States in October. Doctor Smith then made New Orleans his home and was elected to a chair in the scientific department of the university of that city. But in 1852 he succeeded Robert E. Rogers in the professorship of chemistry in the University of Virginia. While filling this chair with his assistant, George J. Brush, he undertook the "Re-examination of American Minerals," which at the time of its completion was the most important contribution to mineral chemistry by any American chemist. He resigned this appointment in 1854 and settled in Louisville, Kentucky. On June 24, 1852, in Louisville he married Sarah Julia Guthrie, daughter of James Guthrie, Secretary of the Treasury in 1853-57. Doctor Smith filled the chair of chemistry in the medical department of the University of Louisville till 1866, and was superintendent of the gas works in that city, of which he also acted as president for several years. He established a laboratory and associated with it the preparation of medicines and chemical reagents and of the rarer pharmaceutical preparations in which he associated himself with Dr. Edward R. Squibb. From the time of his settlement in Louisville he devoted attention to meteorites, and his collection, begun by the purchase of that of Dr. Gerald Troost, became the finest in the United States. It is inferior only to the glasses of the British Museum, and by Harvard. His interest in this subject led to the study of similar minerals with the separation of their constituents, and while investigating smarckite, a mineral rich in the rare earths, he announced his discovery of what he considered a new element, to which he gave the name of Mosandrum. Doctor Smith was exceedingly ingenious in his experimenting, and his "means of analysis. He was a chevalier of the Legion of Honor, and received the order of Nichan Htabar and that of the Medjidieh from the Turkish Government, and that of St. Stanislas from Russia. In 1871 he was president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and he was president of the American Chemical Society in 1877.

In addition to his many publications in the chemical and scientific bodies he was one of the original members of the National Academy of Sciences of the Institute of France to succeed Sir Charles Lyell. The Baptist Orphan Home of Louisville was founded and largely endowed by him. In 1869 he was one of the commissioners to the World's Fair in Paris, furnishing for the government, London and Paris and is mentioned in "The Progress and Condition of several Departments of Industrial Chemistry," and he represented the United States in Vienna in 1873, where his report on "Chemicals and Chemical Industries" supplements his excellent work at the earlier exhibition. At the centennial exhibition in Philadelphia in 1876 he was one of the judges in the department relating to chemical arts, and contributed a valuable report to the official reports. His published papers were about 150 in number. The more important of them were collected and published by him under the title of "Mineralogy and Chemistry, Original Researches." (Louisville, 1873: enlarged, with biographical sketches. 1884). Mrs. Smith transferred to the National Academy of Sciences in 1873 that work to Harvard University for Doctor Smith's collection of meteorites, the interest of which is to be expended in a Lawrence Smith medal value at $200 and presented not earlier than once in two years to any person that shall make satisfactory original investigations of meteoric bodies.

In the personal side of his life and character perhaps nothing more suggestive could be added than the following tribute from the editorial columns of the Courier-Journal: "No record of archives or statistics could do justice to the charming simplicity, the childlike modesty and sincerity, the flower-like aroma of his private life. Eminent in his profession, he was more than eminent in his home. He was a gentleman truly, but he was a man of affairs, a man of convictions, a man among men, who thought absorbed in scientific pursuits took a sincere and profound interest in public questions and events. Though the possessor of a large fortune, he was singularly unostentatious, dispensing his hospitality bountifully, but with reserve, and doing his charity, which was liberal and constant, in his own quiet way. He had not an enemy on earth despite the positivity and transparency of his opinions, and he goes to his last rest leaving the people with whom he was so long identified to mourn the loss of a citizen of whom all were proud and whom everybody loved and honored."

Elisha David Standiford, in a lifetime of less than sixty years, became one of the foremost men of achievement and constructive leadership in business and public affairs in Kentucky. In his early life he had earned success as a physician, and turned from his profession to other interests with even greater success. He served a term in Congress, was a banker and for several years was president of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

Doctor Standiford was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, December 28, 1831, and died at his home in Louisville, July 26, 1887. His birthplace was a farm within a few miles of the city where he spent all the active years of his life. He was a son of Elisha and Nancy (Brooks) Standiford, his father being a successful farmer. The Standifords came to Kentucky from Maryland, and the family settled in that colony from Scotland. The family were of Irish descent and were established in Kentucky early in the last century. Nancy Brooks was born in Pennsylvania and was brought by her parents to Louisville, but she grew up in what was then a frontier settlement near Shepherdsville in Bullitt County. Brooks station in that county was named for her father who had large landed interests there. Sturdiness of character, thrift and progressive was marked characteristic of both the Standiford and Brooks families and the boy who was to become in later years a power in politics and in the business and financial world, was richly endowed by nature with those qualities which wrest favors from fortunes and win success for their possessor in any field of effort. Elisha D. Standiford was educated principally in the schools of Jefferson County, completed an academic course in St. Mary's College near Lebanon, Kentucky, and began the study of medicine with Dr. J. B. Flint of Louisville. After graduating from the Kentucky School of Medicine, he began practice at Louisville, and was soon profitably engaged. Preferring, however, a more stirring and varied business, he abandoned his profession and engaged in agricultural and other enterprises of larger and more public character. One writer said of him that "he was in the broadest sense the best and most successful farmer in Kentucky," though farming as a matter of fact was largely incidental to his other activities. He invested his means somewhat heavily in manufacturing and banking, and for a number of years was president of the Red River Iron Works, which developed into one of the greatest operations of the kind in the West or South-west. Of the Erie, of the Western and Louisville and Nashville Railroads, which the latter was its president, was the largest concern of its kind in the valley of the Ohio. He was also president of the influential and strong Farmers and Drovers Bank on Market above Fourth, then the leading bank of deposit in the state.

In 1853 an election by the directors of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad added to his numerous duties that of vice president of that corporation. Two years later he was promoted to the presidency of the road, an office he held until 1879. One familiar with railroad activities wrote during his lifetime: "Under his management the commercial importance of that road has been greatly advanced, its tite working thoroughly systematized, many of its unskilled officers dispensed with, the running expenses of the road largely reduced, its actual condition greatly improved, its local business increased, its general earnings greatly augmented, and the standing of the road permanently increased in public confidence."

It is probably no exaggeration to say that the way was prepared by the presidency of Doctor Standiford for the present power and far-reaching influence of the Louisville & Nashville. He was also prominently associated with the project of the Louisville Southern Railroad, and for some dozen years before his death was president of the Louisville Bridge Company.

Doctor Standiford in a general estimate of his life and character is:

"He is a man of uncommon business and executive ability; is ready for any emergency; is remarkably clear sighted; is possessed of uncommon energy; turns almost everything he touches to advantage and is emphatically one of the most active and enterprising public-spirited, successful and valuable business men of Louisville. Doctor Standiford is attractive in manners, genial and companionable; is over six feet in height, in the very prime of life, and is a splendid specimen of physical manhood."

A man of such power and indubitable success could never look upon politics in any other light than as an opportunity for community service. He served faithfully for several years on the Louisville Board of Education, and by the suffrages of his fellow citizens was sent to the State Senate in 1868. He was re-elected in the Senate he was instrumental in securing important legislation looking to the large and permanent benefit of the state. Before the close of his second term he was chosen by the democrats of the Louisville district to represent that constituency in Congress. He was elected and entered Congress and went to Washington at the opening of the forty-third Congress. Here, says one authority, he was distinguished in debate, a debater of great ability, and was influential in the passage of the bill authorizing the Government to take possession of the Louisville and Portland canal, a measure greatly beneficial to the interests of commerce on the Ohio River, his speech on the subject exciting favorable comment throughout the country. He also appeared prominently in the debates opposing the reduction of wages for revenue agents, the re-enactment and certain portions of the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and in favor of granting a charter to the Iron Moulders' National Union, these and other activities constituting an honorable and valuable congressional record. At the close of his term he was tendered the renomination by both parties, but declined, believing that in his large business and public interests he could better serve the people. He will long be remembered as a man who helped to make much of the history of the City of Louisville and the State of Kentucky. He accumulated a vast amount of property and at his death left one of the largest estates ever probated by a citizen of Louisville.

Doctor Standiford was reared a Presbyterian, but later in life inclined to the Methodist faith, although not a formal member of any church. He was married in 1857, leaving four daughters and one son, the latter of whom died in early manhood unmarried. Daughters Florence, Mary, Nannie and Virginia became the wives respectively of George L. Danforth, Murray Keller, James G. Caldwell and John Hays Caperton, all of Louisville. In 1870 Doctor Standiford married Miss Lily Smith, who died ten years later, leaving two children. Less than three weeks before his death he married Miss Lorena Scott of Paducah, Kentucky.

Carl L. Long. One of the farms in the noted Blue Grass section of Nicholas County that has responded to the intelligent care and cultivation of one family for more than half a century is that occupied and owned by Carl L. Long. The farm is his birthplace, and it is situated eight and a half miles west of Carlisle, on the Headquarters and Hootown Pike. Mr. Long comes of a family of scholars, and his brothers and sisters have achieved distinction in the world of education and letters, while he has been sustained in the antithetical honors of service in the role of an agriculturist.

He was born September 7, 1874, son of James Riley and Armilda (Cheatham) Long. His parents were also born in Nicholas County, his father in May, 1848, and his mother November 9, 1857. They grew up in the same neighborhood, Philadelphia, the same school, and therefore the Longs began housekeeping at the place where their son Carl now lives. Here they spent their honored lives in industry and in the discharge of their duties and obligations as church members and home makers. The father was a past master of Orient Lodge No. 500, F. A. M., and stood high in democratic politics in Nicholas County, filling the office of county assessor. Of their family, the oldest is O. Floyd, who was born in 1870, graduated A. B. from the Kentucky Wesleyan College in 1890, A. M. in 1893, and received his Doctor of Philosophy degree from Johns Hopkins University in 1897. He is one of the prominent American scholars in classical languages, and since 1897 has been connected with the University of Chicago and the University of Minnesota, holding the chair of Professor of Latin since 1910. Carl L. is the second son. The third of the family, Eva, attended the Millersburg Female College and is the wife of Ora H. Callier. The fourth, Orie William, who was born at Millersburg in 1882, graduated from Center College at Danville in 1903, holds the Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy degrees from Harvard University, and has been a teacher of modern languages and is now assistant professor in Williams College at Williamstown, Massachusetts. The fifth of the family, Mamie, graduated from the Millersburg Female College, received another degree at Northwestern University, and is teacher of English at Sweetbrier, Virginia.

Carl L. Long grew up on the home farm, attended the district schools and the Kentucky Wesleyan College, took a course in telegraphy and for a time had charge of the Postal Telegraph Company's business at Cynthiana. He also had some further commercial experience as a bookkeeper at Louisville, but finally returned to the farm and has been very successful in the management of an agriculturist, making the 177 acres in the old homestead. He is a democrat and a member of Orient Lodge No. 500, F. A. M., and is an elderly in the Indian Creek Christian Church.

In October, 1867, Mr. Long married Miss Eula Snodgrass, of Cynthiana. She was born near Shady Nook in Harrison County July 17, 1874, daughter of William and Kate (Bowen) Snodgrass. She is a graduate of the Kentucky Female Orphans School and for sixteen years was a teacher.

John Breckinridge Castleman during his active years achieved a high place on the roll of eminent Kentuckians. He was a Confederate officer and loyal Southerner, and after the war inherited the estates of one of the oldest families of the Blue Grass region. After the war though he studied law his years were chiefly devoted to the insurance business at Louisville. His name is also interestingly associated with the history of Kentucky thoroughbreds. He was born at the historic family homestead of Castleton in Fayette County June 30, 1881, son of David and Virginia (Harrison) Castleman. His great-grandfather Lewis Castleman was born, reared and educated in England and on coming to America in 1720 established a home in Virginia. His son Lewis was born and reared in Virginia and came to Kentucky about 1780. On the land he acquired in the Blue Grass region he developed a home-stead known as the "Old Mansion" in Woodford County about five miles from Versailles. His son David Castleman was born at the Old Mansion in 1786 and was the father of the late Gen. John B. Castleman. He devoted himself to the management of his extensive landed estates. He was twice married. His first wife was Mary Ann Breckinridge and his second wife Virginia Harrison. They were first cousins. Virginia Harrison represented the famous old Virginia family of that name. Her father Robert C. Harrison was a son of Carter Harrison of Kentucky. Her mother, the late Miss Susannah Calhoun, was the daughter of Isham Randolph of Dungeness. Carter Harrison was a brother of Benjamin Harrison, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and father of Gen. William Henry Harrison, and they were sons of Gen. Benjamin Harrison, one of the early governors of Virginia. These Harrisons were descendants of Benjamin Harrison who was born in 1599 in Surrey, England. Robert C. Harrison was an intimate friend of the elder John Breckinridge and they married sisters, members of the famous Calhoun family of Zion Hill, Virginia. Robert C. Harrison and John Breckinridge came to Kentucky and acquired about 8,000 acres of land adjoining in Fayette County. The first brother of George Henry, Governor of Virginia, was called Calhoun's Mill, and that on the Harrisson place Elk Hill, from the name of the Virginia home of the Harrisons.

John Breckinridge Castleman was educated at Fort Hill Academy in Fayette County and was a student in Transylvania University at Lexington when the war broke out between the states. He left Lexington sooner than he hoped, it was the beginning of the war, and joined the forces of Gen. John H. Morgan as captain of Company D in what was later known as the Second Kentucky Cavalry. He was with General Morgan in many of his campaigns and commanded the regiment in several battles. He had the rank of major at the close of the war. Early in 1864 the Confederate Government gave him a commission to effect the release of Southern prisoners in the Northern states. During this hazardous venture he was captured at Sullivan, Indiana, and was held in solitary confinement in the Federal prison at Indianapolis from September, 1864, until July, 1865. He was then released on parole after giving his promise to leave the United States and never return. He remained in Europe until December, 1866. In February, 1868, President Johnson gave him authority to return. On returning to Kentucky General Castleman studied law, graduated LL. B. from the University of Louisville in 1868, but instead of embarking on the routine of his profession accepted the management of the business of the Royal Insurance Company of Liverpool for the Southern states. That was the beginning of the extensively established insurance firm of Barbee & Castleman at Louisville. After the death of Mr. Barbee the firm name was retained with General Castleman as the executive and administrative head, and largely due to him it became one of the largest insurance organizations in the South.

The death of General Castleman on May 23, 1918, closed a career of half a century of business activity. The grateful memory of this distinguished Kentuckian survives for many important services rendered in civic affairs as well. For twenty or more years he was president of the City Board of Park Commissioners of Louisville. His influence was conspicuously directed to the institution of modern street paving. The military experience of his youthful years he turned to the advantage of his state in its military establishment. In 1878 he organized the Louisville Legion, in its day undoubtedly one of the best disciplined and best known military bodies in the United States, and of which for many years he was commander.
Under appointment from Gov. J. Proctor Knott he served as adjutant general of Kentucky four years until 1886. In 1898 he promptly tendered his services and those of his regiment to the Government at the time of the Spanish-American war and was commissioned a brigadier general. For many years he was actively identified with the United Confederate Veterans Association.

General Castleman was chosen to represent Kentucky in 1888 as a delegate to the dedication of the Washington Monument in the National Capital. He was a member of the Kentucky Commission to the World's Columbian Exposition in 1893. During 1891-92 he was chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee, and in 1892 was delegate at large to the National Convention at Chicago. For his many distinguished public services General Castleman had the unique honor of having erected during his lifetime by his fellow citizens in Kentucky an equestrian statue dedicated to him. General Castleman was in command of the Kentucky troops during the troubles following the assassination of Governor Goebel.

In 1892 General Castleman organized the American Saddle Horse Breeders Association, with the object of breeding and perpetuating the highest type saddle horses in the United States. He was made president of that association and held that post many years.

On November 24, 1868, he married Miss Alice Barbee of Louisville, daughter of John Barbee. To their marriage were born five children: David, Elsie, Breckinridge, Kenneth and Alice.

Edward S. Jones, secretary and treasurer of the Hazard Insurance Agency, Incorporated, is one of the alert young business men of Hazard who is devoting his time and talents to protecting the interests of his fellow citizens against unforeseen losses by means of desirable policies in reliable companies. He is also a veteran of the World war, and together with his associates in this work, is deserving of special consideration at the hands of his community, because of the service he rendered when his country had need of him.

Mr. Jones was born on a farm near Kirksville, Madison County, Kentucky, December 4, 1888, a son of Woodson Stewart and Fanny (Lafoon) Jones, the former of whom was born in Madison County, and the latter in Jessamine County, Kentucky. He is now sixty-three and she is fifty-nine, and their home is now on a Fayette County farm near Lexington. All his life he has been an active democrat. Both are devout members of the Christian Church, and he is a Mason. The Jones and Lafoon families are both from Virginia. Edward S. Jones is one of four sons. His brothers, George and Charles are Madison County farmers, and Armer is with the First National Bank, Hazard, Kentucky.

Although he attended the Transylvania College, defective eyesight necessitated Edward S. Jones leaving school at the age of sixteen. He went to work at Lexington, Kentucky as a tobacco merchant, with the W. L. Petty Company, and was doing well when he left his affairs to go into the service, and was sent to France with the Barrow Hospital Unit. Mr. Jones entered the service in December, 1917, and went overseas in March, 1918, returning home in March, 1919, with the rank of sergeant. He was stationed at Southampton, England, and had a strenuous service.

Not long after his discharge Mr. Jones came to Hazard as manager of the Hazard Insurance Agency. His business associates are J. A. Roan, cashier of the First National Bank, and L. F. Brashear, cashier of the Perry County Bank, both gentlemen of unquestioned financial solidity and high standing in the community.

On March 8, 1921 Mr. Jones was married to Jeannette Kinzie of Bluefield, West Virginia. They are members of the Presbyterian Church and popular in the congregation. Mr. Jones is a Master Mason and belongs to Lexington Lodge No. 1, A. F. and A. M. An energetic business man and well-versed on the insurance matters, Mr. Jones has brought the affairs of his agency into prime conditions and is doing an excellent line of work. He regards his exertions with reference to writing policies as a public service as well as a plain business proposition for he realizes the prime necessity which exists for everyone to be properly protected, and has found it obligatory to do a vast amount of educational work in this line in order to create a proper appreciation of insurance in the average citizen. That he is succeeding in the volume of business he is writing distinctly proves, and while he is doing this he is also winning the place in his community to which he is justly entitled.

John P. Cozine for many years enjoyed a place of leadership among Kentucky newspaper men. He was in the newspaper business in Indiana, but his best work was done at Shelbyville, Kentucky, where for many years he was editor and publisher of the News.

He was born in Mercer County, Kentucky, May 3, 1843, son of Harvey and Mary (Snyder) Cozine, both natives of Virginia. His parents came to Kentucky, about 1820, and were pioneers in Shelby County, but later moved to Mercer County, where they spent the rest of their days.

John P. Cozine was reared in Mercer County, acquired a common school education, and as a youth at the outbreak of the Civil war moved to Indiana and enlisted in Company I of the First Indiana Heavy Artillery. He went with his regiment in active service until the close of hostilities. He then returned to Indiana, and had his first active associations with the newspaper business at Salem and later at Leavenworth in the same state. For a time he did newspaper work at Louisville and in 1873 moved to Shelbyville. Here he had several associates in the newspaper business, and eventually established the Shelby News, of which he remained editor and publisher until his death on January 27, 1897.

John P. Cozine was a republican in early life, but later a democrat, and published the News as a democratic newspaper with great and far-reaching influence. He was a member of the Methodist Church, and was affiliated with the Masonic Order, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Knights of Pythias.

At Leavenworth, Indiana, he married Miss Nannie C. Bell, a native of Kentucky and daughter of John and Mary (Weather) Bell. They became the parents of seven children, six of whom are still living.

Benjamin Bristow Cozine, son of the late John P. Cozine, has followed in the footsteps of his honored father and really acquired his early business experience. He has been the proprietor and editor of the Shelby News for the past quarter of a century.

Mr. Cozine was born in Shelbyville June 21, 1877, and while he acquired an education in schools the chief source of his knowledge was his father's printing plant. In July, 1906, he took active charge of the business, and a year later, when his father died, he succeeded to the ownership of the plant and newspaper business, and has continued it with steadily increasing success. Mr. Cozine for many years has been actively identified with the Kentucky Press Association. He is a democrat, a progressive citizen, and during the World war was local director of the Liberty Loan Sales. He is a Master Mason, Knight of Pythias and Elks and is treasurer of the Christian Church.

May 23, 1901, Mr. Cozine married Miss Mason Rice, daughter of Captain James H. and Nannie Elizabeth
HISTORY OF KENTUCKY

(mid) Rice, of Shelby County. She is a granddaughter of Anthony Middleton, whose career as a pioneer is published in the preceding sketch.

Maj. Foxhall A. Daingerfield. Some of the greatest horses that ever contributed to the sire fame of Kentucky on the turf and in the race track were bred at one time or another at Castleton near Lexington, and that famous place was under the management and direction of the late Maj. Foxhall A. Daingerfield for James R. Keene.

The late Maj. Foxhall A. Daingerfield was born in Rockingham County, Virginia, at Westwood, February 8, 1839. He was educated at Washington and Lee University in Virginia, in the class that was broken up at the beginning of the war between the states. During that war he served as captain under General Stuart in the Eleventh Virginia Cavalry, was promoted to major of the regiment and was five times wounded. Following the war he practiced law at Harrisonburg, Virginia, for a quarter of a century, and then, to get the benefit of outdoor life he took up the breeding of trotting horses at Culpeper, Virginia, remaining there three years until he accepted the invitation of his brother-in-law James R. Keene of New York, to take charge of his thoroughbred horses at Castleton near Lexington, Kentucky.

Maj. Foxhall A. Daingerfield on November 4, 1863, married Miss Nettie Gray of Harrisonburg, Virginia. She was the mother of eight children: William Parker, who died at nine years of age; Algerman, secretary of the Jockey Club of New York City; J. Keene, an attorney of Lexington; Bessie Parker, and Elizabeth Pinkney; Henderson, now Mrs. A. C. Norman of Seattle, Washington; Juliet Parker; and Mary J., wife of A. C. Van Winkle, a Louisville attorney. Mrs. Daingerfield the mother of these children died August 2, 1921, at the home in Haylands, where the family have resided since 1918.

James R. Keene established Castleton in the fall of 1863, leasing the land from A. J. Ford. When the lease expired five years later the ground was purchased and also the adjoining place of Gen. Joseph Breckinridge, giving a total of 1,000 acres. The residence at Castleton was built by David Castleton, whose first wife was a Miss Breckinridge, who inherited a part of the old Breckinridge estate called Cabels Dale.

It was under the ownership of Mr. Keene and the management of Foxhall A. Daingerfield that Castleton achieved its world wide fame for the production of thoroughbreds. All of Mr. Keene’s thoroughbreds were collected there at one time or another, and at the end of twenty years of breeding the production took first place in the world. Up to that time the greatest winners for any one year were owned by the Duke of Portland. All of Mr. Keene’s greatest winners except one were bred at Castleton. Foxhall A. Daingerfield kept his interests centered in the breeding and not in the racing end of the business. He constantly advised Mr. Keene in the purchase and selection of the horses that came to Castleton. Among the noted horses bred on this property may be mentioned: Colin, who retired unbeaten; Ultimus, Disguise, Ballot, Commando, Celt, Peter Quince, Peter Pan, Castleton, Superman, Von Tramp, Delhi, Sysonby (raised, not bred), Cap and Bells (who won the English Oaks), Maskette, Pope Joan, Noonday, Melisande, Gretna Green, Veil, Sweep, Cataract, Court Dress, Wild Mint, Restigouche, Philander, Novelty, Dazzling, and many other notable horses which were bred and raised at Castleton by Major Daingerfield.

James R. Keene died January 3, 1913, and Mr. Daingerfield followed him in death on the 5th of the same month.

Elizabeth Daingerfield acquired a thorough knowledge of Kentucky thoroughbreds under her father, the late Foxhall A. Daingerfield, and her work has been a continuation of her father’s career, and her independent achievements probably rank her as the foremost woman in the world as an authority on thoroughbred horses.

The Daingerfield family now own and reside at Hayland’s Farm, three miles northeast of Lexington, on Maysville Pike. Any horseman in the world would agree that the 1878 Miss Elizabeth recently purchased from Samuel D. Biddle of Philadelphia, owner of the “super-horse” Man o’ War, the world’s greatest racer, chose Miss Daingerfield to manage this famous horse, which has been brought to the Hinata farm, leased by Miss Daingerfield. Miss Daingerfield’s sole energies and interests are concentrated in the work of managing this magnificent thoroughbred racing woman, and has never been active in politics or society. Some of her own horses are mentioned in the “History of Churchill Downs,” published in 1920, by Dan O’Sullivan, a Louisville attorney.

Miss Daingerfield began her work at Castleton, and afterwards she succeeded her father as manager of this, the greatest stud the world has known. Castleton was owned by the late James R. Keene of New York, the millionaire mine owner and stock broker, who married Sarah Jay Daingerfield, a sister of the late Foxhall Daingerfield.

James R. Keene established Castleton in the fall of 1803, leasing the land from Mr. Ford. When the lease expired five years later the ground was purchased and also the adjoining place of Gen. Joseph Breckinridge, giving a total of 1,000 acres. The residence at Castleton was built by David Castleton, whose wife was a Miss Breckinridge, who inherited a part of the old Breckinridge estate. The present proprietor of Castleton is David Look of New York.

It was under the ownership of Mr. Keene and the management of Foxhall A. Daingerfield that Castleton achieved its world wide fame for the production of thoroughbreds. All of Keene’s thoroughbreds were collected there at one time or another, and at the end of twenty years of breeding the production took first place in the world. Up to that time the greatest winners for any one year were owned by the Duke of Portland. All of Keene’s greatest winners except one were bred at Castleton. Foxhall A. Daingerfield kept his interests centered in the breeding and not in the racing end of the business. He constantly advised Mr. Keene in the purchase and selection of the horses that came to Castleton. Among the noted horses bred on this property may be mentioned: Colin, who retired unbeaten; Ultimus, Disguise, Ballot, Commando, Celt, Peter Quince, Peter Pan, Castleton, Superman, Von Tramp, Delhi, Sysonby (raised, not bred), Caps and Bells (who won the English Oaks), Maskette, Pope Joan, Noonday, Melisande, Gretna Green, Veil, Sweep, Cataract, Court Dress, Wild Mint, Restigouche, Philander, Novelty, Dazzling, and many other notable horses were bred and raised at Castleton by Major Daingerfield.

James R. Keene died January 3, 1913, and Mr. Daingerfield followed him in death on the 5th of the same month.

Elizabeth Daingerfield then succeeded her father as manager of the farm, and the stud was kept complete at the Kingdom farm on the Russell Cave Pike, on leased land, by Miss Elizabeth Daingerfield. The stud was sold the September after Mr. Keene’s death, almost as a whole to Price McKinney and kept together by him with Miss Daingerfield as manager for four years. The final dispersal sale of the Keene horses occurred January 15, 1918.

In the spring of 1918 Miss Daingerfield moved to the Haylands Farm, where she continues her operations in the breeding of thoroughbreds, and she also leases other lands for her business, including the Hinata farm. Miss Daingerfield bred Step Lightly, the Futurity winner of 1920. During her first year’s independent operations she sold four fillies at Saratoga for $26,000, one of these being Step Lightly, whose dam, Tripping, she still keeps, together with a number of other brilliant animals. The late Foxhall A. Daingerfield was born in Rockingham County, Virginia, at Westwood, February 8, 1839. He was educated at Washington and Lee University in Virginia, in the war that was brought on by the break up of the Union, and by the war between the states. During that war he served as captain under General Stuart in the Eleventh Virginia Cavalry, was promoted to major of the regiment, and was five times wounded. Following the war he practiced law at Harrisonburg, Virginia, for a quarter of a century, and then took up the breeding of trotting horses at Culpeper. He remained there until he accepted the invitation of Governor Taney, of Missouri, to take charge of Castleton. He was largely responsible for Castleton's fame as a thoroughbred selection center, and he also made the home widely known for its hospitality, and during his life entertained many prominent people there.

Foxhall A. Daingerfield married Miss Nettie Gray, of Harrisonburg, Virginia, who still lives. She was the mother of four children: Algermon, secretary of the Jockey Club of New York City; J. Keene, an attorney at Lexington; Bessie Parker; Miss Elizabeth; Henderson; Mrs. A. C. Norman, of Seattle, Washington; Juliet Parker; and Mary J., wife of A. C. Van Winkle, a Louisville attorney.

Some interesting comments on Miss Daingerfield's work and achievements were recently made in the columns of a well-known newspaper. They occurred with the announcement of her taking charge of Man o' War: "Miss Daingerfield was the chief assistant to her father, the late Major Foxhall A. Daingerfield, when that distinguished expert in horse breeding had charge of the Castleton Stud for his brother-in-law, the late James R. Keene, in Fayette County. There was no more profound student of blood lines in the United States than Major D. Vogg, He was a man of great distinction, and when taken to France by the late William K. Vanderbilt helped found a great stud, which has recently passed to the ownership of A. K. Macomber, who is racing abroad as well as in the United States. "It is an unusual occupation for women, but Miss Daingerfield has a neighbor, Mrs. Elizabeth Kane, who has managed the Nursery Stud of August Belmont most capably since the death of her husband a few years ago, while Mrs. Herbert Wadsworth, directing the Ashantee Stud at Avon, in the Genesee Valley in this state, has been the chief ally of the Breeding Bureau of the Jockey Club in its work of general purpose horse improvement in that fruitful region.

'There are reasons why women should succeed in this line of endeavor. The motherly impulse prompts them to see that mares and foals are comfortable at all times. They are not given to absense, as are the paddocks or pastures with their charges have a picture they recall with pleasure. Mares and foals crowd about her, eager for some token of affection or recognition until her progress is actually impeded. It is the same way with the yearlings which have been reared by her; they are gentle in the extreme. One of her rules is that there shall be no blows or harsh treatment. As a result few bad tempered horses have come from her nursery. "Man o' War, the greatest horse of his day on the race track, could not be entrusted to more capable keeping. At Haylands he will have his old companion, the superannuated hunter, Major Treat, for company. His surroundings will be congenial, and if he fails to send to the races children gifted with his own marvelous speed and undaunted courage it will not be the fault of those who are to administer to his well being."
HART M. BOXLEY, M. D., a prominent physician at Millersburg, has been steadily engaged in his profession for twenty years and was formerly an esteemed member of the community of Kirksville in Madison County.

Doctor Boxley was born in Christian County, Kentucky, September 2, 1870, son of John C. and Rhoda (Hart) Boxley. His parents were native of Louisa County, Virginia, were reared and married there, and his father served in the Confederate army with the famous cavalry organization under General Stuart. In 1866 the family came to Kentucky and located in Christian County, where the parents spent the rest of their days. He is also a member of the Christian Church and the father held the post of deacon and elder. He was a stanch democrat in politics. Of five children three are now living: Howard and O. D. Boxley, both farmers in Christian County; and Hart M.

Hart M. Boxley grew up on the home farm, attended the rural schools, and spent two years in McLean County. He was also engaged in the medical department of the University of Louisville, and graduated M. D. in March, 1901. Doctor Boxley at once located at Kirksville in Madison County and had his home and practice in that locality for fifteen years. In 1915 he removed to Millersburg and is now a member of the Bourbon County Medical Society. He is also a member of the American College of Surgeons, and of the National and American Medical Association.

In 1914 Doctor Boxley married Emma Fry of Madison County. She is a graduate of the Richmond Female College. Doctor Boxley is a member of Amity Lodge No. 40, F. and A. M., and is a stockholder in the Farmers Bank at Kirksville.

DORIS BAISDEN STEPHENS. As the demand for only sound banking institutions increases and the value of such concerns to the community is being more and more appreciated, the character of the men who administer their affairs is receiving closer attention, and when these individuals have been proven efficient and worthy, confidence in their financial institutions is increased. The influence of a conservative and experienced banking house is wide and its results for the attainment of beneficial conditions is far-reaching. Without such a concern in its midst no community can hope to take its place among the progressive cities and towns, and it will lose the valuable assistance of outside capital, which is such a big factor in development. Therefore it may be truly said that the growth and development of a town or county is very largely upon the quality of its banks, which means the sagacity and integrity of the men who stand at their heads. In this connection, Allen may be said to be one of the fortunate communities of Floyd County, in that it possesses as an asset the Floyd County Bank, the president of which is a man of proved ability and integrity. Dock Baisden Stephens.

Mr. Stephens was born at Alphoretta, Floyd County, Kentucky, August 8, 1857, a son of Samuel A. and Sarah (Osborn) Stephens, both of whom were born at the forks of the Beaver in this county. Samuel A. Stephens, who was born in 1824 and died in 1887, was a son of Samuel Stephens, who came to Kentucky from Virginia in 1820, and received a patent to 5,000 acres of land, the deposit of which was covered with the finest of timber and underlaid with coal. On this farm there is also a wide acreage of bottom land, said to be the finest on the Big Sandy. Here Samuel Stephens passed his life in the pursuits of agriculture, and died in 1885, when ninety or more years of age. He was the father of thirteen children, all of whom lived to maturity.

Samuel A. Stephens, father of Dock B. Stephens, was a teacher in his younger years in the Beaver Valley, but later gave his entire time and attention to his farming operations, in which he greatly prospered. Edward Lou Osborn, the maternal grandfather of Dock B. Stephens, was born in Virginia, whence he came in young manhood to Kentucky and settled on the left side of the Big Sandy River. There was born his daughter, Sarah, who died in 1903, aged fifty-seven years. Samuel A. and Sarah Stephens had seven sons and six daughters: Susan, the wife of T. G. Allen, of Northern, Kentucky; E. L., first a school teacher, later a collier in Magoffin County; subsequently a banker at Salyersville, and now engaged in the wholesale drug business, is known as Dock, B., a merchant at Langley, Floyd County; Rhoda, the wife of S. B. Osborn, of Northern; F. C. and E. M., twins, the former a farmer at Northern, and the latter engaged in the same vocation in Greenup County, this state; Sydney, who is the wife of Logan Dungan, a merchant at Martin, Floyd County; D. C., a farmer and stock raiser for the last ten years in Company in Kentucky, is said to be a man of ability and wide reading. Returning to Kentucky, he secured a position in the bank at Salyersville, and later became assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Prestonsburg, remaining in that capacity for four years. He was also, for one year, bookkeeper in the Bank Josephine, and then became chief clerk of the bank and later president of the same; but resigned after one year. In 1912 he organized the Sandy Valley Hardware Company and became secretary-treasurer and manager, positions which he still holds, and November 8, 1920, organized the Floyd County Bank of Allen, of which he has since been president. Mr. Stephens' success has been his own and not recorded in the records of the community. He is a Democrat in his political convictions, but takes only a good citizen's interest in political affairs.

WILLIAM L. CANNON. While his home for the past thirty years has been in the county of Letcher and in Midway, William L. Cannon bears a name that suggests the history and romance of the old time river traffic. He was for years associated with his father as a river man, and his father, the late Capt. John W. Cannon, perhaps Kentucky's greatest pilot and river captain, and his exploits and his boats were known all up and down the Ohio and Arkansas rivers and its tributaries both before and after the Civil War.

William L. Cannon was born at the old Capitol Hotel in Frankfort, August 1, 1856, son of Capt. John W. and Louisa Hickman (Stout) Cannon and grandson of John H. and Ann (Coston) Cannon. John H. Cannon died in 1846, and had come to Kentucky in 1818 from Maryland. Capt. John W. Cannon was born at Hawkinsville, Kentucky and lived on a farm until he was fifteen. In 1874, he left home and at the time he went to work with his uncle, Capt. J. H. Cannon, in Vicksburg, Mississippi, where he served as United States Marshal, and through his friendship with the captain of the Mississippi steamboat, John W. Cannon secured passage on that vessel to the Southern city in 1833. He rapidly mastered the mysteries, the art and the science of river navigation and by 1838, when he was twenty years of age he was steersman for the Diana. After returning to Kentucky he cut a load of hoppoels and after making up a cargo of hoppoels and coal he made another trip to New Orleans in 1840. He was steersman on the Velocipede, and all through the '40s was a pilot and captain on the Mississippi, Red River and Ouchita River. Out of his earnings he saved $4,000, and with this sum bought four lots in the town of Jeffersonville and one of them died and he lost his $4,000 which he had ran away. The first boat owned by him was the Dallas. In 1848 he built the Louisiana at Jeffersonville. She blew up at New Orleans, killing many, including his partner, and this disaster left him $20,000 in debt. He then secured credit and built the Downs, at a cost of $17,000, which left the shipyard in the spring of 1848. Various threats to build a faster boat, but he never knew a rival individual or organization with whom he could not compete on even terms. The Bell Domina was built by him at a cost of $14,000. He made money rapidly, though he lost in many ventures. He paid $40,000 for the Rockaway, and made it all back in one season of operation. The McRae was built for $30,000 and the W. W. Farmer, for $72,000, but low water prevented navigation for eighteen months and at the end of that time he was practically bankrupt. Later he built the Vicksburg and the General Quitman. The Vicksburg successfully ran the blockade at the siege of Vicksburg where she was turned over to the Confederate government, her machinery to be used in a gunboat being built on the Yazoo River. Captain Cannon took the Quitman up the Red River and in it until after the war. Perhaps his most noted achievements are associated with the Robert E. Lee. He built the first vessel of that name, at a cost of $223,000, and was its captain for ten years. He then built the second boat of that name. The first Robert E. Lee was the fastest boat ever on the river and was a steamer of palatial accommodations. He finally built a splendid boat, which he owned personally and which bore his name, John W. Cannon. The only exception was the White, built by another party about the same time, of any of the craft that ever plied on the rivers. In the files of the Courier-Journal under June 8, 1878, may be found a description of the John W. Cannon. He also built at the Howards Shipyards at Jeffersonville, Indiana, at a cost of $153,000 The E. K. Richardson. Before the war of 1861 the river was never free to Natchez, and the record of that boat was never beaten until 1870, when the Robert E. Lee became a contender for the honor. Then ensued a race between the steamers Robert E. Lee and Natchez, long celebrated in song and story from New Orleans to Saint Louis on July 4, 1870. The Lee won the contest handily, and throughout the entire course thousands of people thronged the banks of the stream and a great multitude witnessed the finish at Saint Louis. The elk horns, one set given for the race in 1856 and the trophy for the race in 1870, being also a magnificent十二联装 twelve point set of horns are now in possession of W. L. Cannon and used for ornamental purposes in his home in Frankfort. A large number of vessel owners at a meeting in Saint Louis planned to consolidate the Mississippi River steamboat traffic, and gave the general management to Capt. John W. Cannon. However, he died at Frankfort, April 18, 1882, and never took this post of responsibility. He had two homes, one at New Orleans and one at Frankfort, but he was born in that Kentucky city.

William L. Cannon gained his first experience on the river with the first Robert E. Lee as an office man, and later was captain of the John W. Cannon on its first trip. He was also captain of the Laura Lee and the Clinton, but most of his work was in the business management. He succeeded his father as manager of his extensive affairs, and continued to make his home and business headquarters at New Orleans until 1880.

In 1881 Mr. Cannon moved to his present home on a 364 acre farm a mile north of Midway. In 1880 he married Miss Florence Berry, daughter of Hiram and Eleanor Berry. Her father was connected with W. A. Gaines & Company, makers of the Old Crow whiskey at Frankfort. Mr. Berry had bought the Vicksburg and the Missourian for Mr. Cannon's father, Captain Kidd, the famous auctioneer. He died after owning it only a few years, and it then came into the possession of Mr. and Mrs. Cannon. The residence was erected by a Mr. Buford in 1835. The brick and lime were burned on the farm, and two other similar homes in the same vicinity were built about the same time. That stately old country place was the home of the Burford's for many years. Mr. and Mrs. Cannon have a family of three sons and two daughters: Eleanor, wife of Isaac F. Starks, of Louisville; John W., connected with the Walworth Manufacturing Company of Boston, Massachusetts; Hiram B., superintendent of the perfection stove works at Sarma, Ontario; George B., salesman with the Walworth Manufacturing Company; and Miss Florence B., at home. Mr. Cannon, outside of his extensive business affairs, has been rather prominent in republican politics. He made the race for the State Legislature and also for Congress and was a delegate to the national convention at Chicago when Roosevelt was nominated for a second term. He has served as local magistrate.

HON. HILLARD HAGAN SMITH represents the fifth generation of his family in Eastern Kentucky, and is one of the strongest and ablest of the entire line of strong and resourceful men, whose power and prestige seem to have increased with each successive generation. As a family they have lived close to the soil. In a race of farmers H. H. Smith is an exception through the success he has achieved in the profession of law, though he has not divorced himself altogether from the characteristic interests of his ancestors, since he is one of the large landowners in Knott County.

His pioneer ancestor in Eastern Kentucky was his great-grandfather, Richard Smith, a native of Old Virginia. A number of years prior to 1800 he came into Eastern Kentucky and settled at Troublesome Post Office in Perry County. He became one of the largest land owners in the state, and at one time owned most of the land included in what is now Perry, Knott, Letcher and Breathitt counties. His wife was Lishia Combs, and their large family of children were: William, Alexander, Nicholas, Joshua, James, Isaac, Samuel, Anderson, usiam (Catherine), Elizabeth, Polly, John, Samuel, John and Nancy. The second generation of this Kentucky family was headed by William Smith, who was born in Perry County, and maintained the traditions of the family by his success as a farmer and stockman. His extensive property was located on Carr's Forks, above the mouth of Irishman Creek, in what is now Knott County. He died there in 1873. His wife was Millie Combs, a daughter of Jeremiah Combs. Their children were John, William, Alexander, Richard, Thomas, Jeremiah, Sarah, Matilda and Malvira.

The grandfather of the Knott County lawyer was William Smith, better known as "Med"Smith, who was born in Jackson County, now Knott County, in 1825. and owned most of the old homestead on which he engaged in farming and stock raising until his death in 1891. Perhaps the best picture of this old time citizen is presented by recalling the fact that in his day he was known as the "Bully" of this section, a term not used so much in disarray as a tribute to his remarkable physical strength and ability and his prowess in all physical sports. He was the champion wrestler, and his grandchildren used to hear from his lips many interesting stories about his meeting with other strong men, when each would strip to the waist to find out who was the best man. He was a Union soldier in the Civil war in Company L of the Fourteenth Kentucky Cavalry, enlisting December 15, 1862, and was mustered out March 22, 1864. He was once wounded, and for a number of years drew a pension.

Mr. Smith married Martha Ashley, who was born in North Carolina. Her father, Rev. Jordan Ashley, was a native pioneer preacher of the United Baptist Church and carried his religious messages all over Eastern Kentucky. He was very gifted both in intellect and in eloquence, and ranked with the best preachers of his day. The children of "Med" Smith and wife were Mary Ann, John A., Hillard, Barbara, Millie, Laura. Jane, Granville, Melvin and Lucinda.

John Ashley Smith, father of Hillard Hagan Smith, was born in Knott County in 1852, and in a business way never had any interests outside of those of the old homestead farm on which he remained. He was a successful stock man. Served a number of times as deputy sheriff and magistrate, and had a place of leadership in his community. His death occurred December 2, 1901. His wife, Elizabeth Jane Hagan, still living at Hindman, was of a family that originally spelled the name Higgins. Their children were: William, who died in infancy; Hillard H.; Martha, wife of John M. Smith, of Knott County; Barbara Alice, wife of James V. Maggard, living on part of the original homestead of her great-grandfather Smith in Knox County; John D., who has served as commonwealth's attorney of his district and lived in Prestonsburg.

Hillard Hagan Smith was born at Carr's Forks on the north branch of the Kentucky River December 31, 1875, and he learned to appreciate and to emulate the strong characteristics of his forefathers. He acquired a liberal education in the public schools of Hindman and in Buckner Academy, graduated in 1899 from the Bowling Green Normal School, and was a student in Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, during 1902-3. Mr. Smith was admitted to the bar in June, 1899, and for over twenty years has carried on a successful practice at Hindman, where he is a member of the firm Smith & Combs. Mr. Smith is attorney for a number of large corporations doing business in Eastern Kentucky. He was appointed police judge of Hindman, before Normal School, and in 1907 was elected a member of the State Senate, serving from 1908 to 1912, from the Thirty-third District, comprising ten counties. Mr. Smith is a republican, and has served several terms as master of Hindman Lodge No. 889, F. and A. M., and belongs to a number of other social and civic organizations. He is the largest stockholder and is one of the officers of the Bank of Hindman, and is chairman of its board of directors and also formerly vice president, an office now held by Mrs. Smith, his wife.

December 31, 1903, Mr. Smith married Miss Lodie Francis, daughter of Hiram H. and Sarah (Day) Francis. Her father, now deceased, was the foremost merchant and man of affairs at Hindman, and at the time of his death was the wealthiest citizen of the county. In personal influence he was one of the best known men in Knott County. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith were: Ruth, who died in infancy; Hillard H., Jr.; Leo Dale; Lois Gay; Miriam Melvira; Dorothy Day, who died at the age of two years; Carol Hope; and Major Androz. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The rugged physique of his ancestors has come down to Mr. Smith. He took an active part in sports while in college, and was the champion runner of every school and college he attended. He is liberally equipped by natural gifts and training for the place of leadership he enjoys in that county. A successful lawyer, a large land owner, he has prosecuted his affairs with exceptional credit, and has a breadth of interest and sympathy that keep him in touch with every vital movement effecting the welfare of his part of the state. Mr. Smith has been one of the very prominent men in the Hindman Settlement School, and is head of the Local Advisory Board. During the World war he served as chairman of the Draft Board and chairman of all the drives for Liberty Loans.

Ben F. Wright, M. D. A physician and surgeon with an extensive practice at Scco in Letter County, is Doctor Wright who lives today in the same environment where he was born, an environment in which the Wright family has played an interesting and historical part for generations.

The Wrights came from Virginia to Kentucky in 1800, and settled around the Gap at the head of Elk-horn Creek at the head of Big Sandy, and on Boone Fork or the head of the Kentucky River, in the same locality where the Consolidation Coal Company and its South East Coal Company are now operating.

The father of Doctor Wright was the late W. S. Wright, known as Wm. Wright. He was born in 1855 on Wright's Fork of Boone Greenbo. The family of McRoberts now stands. Without educational advantages until after his marriage, by a rigid course of self instruction he fitted himself for the performance of all the duties of his business career. He was a prosperous farmer and for some years Letter County representative for the Asher Lumber Company. The parents of the Doctor were a man of liberal sympathies, tolerant in a broad range, but when aroused to a sense of right and justice he was unyielding and active in the suppression of lawlessness. It is said that the Wrights never forgot their friend or foe. W. S. Wright like every other strong man had his enemies and in January, 1900, a band of enemies brought him death. He was a leader in the Methodist Church and every morning saw his family gathered together under his leadership to bow the head in reverent worship. Though little more than a child at the time of the Civil War he did some scout duty for the Confederate Government. During his own youth the country in which he lived was the scene of one feud after another and after his death at the head of the Fork, John William was shot from ambush while in an official capacity under John Wright. He was pursuing the men who had slain his father. William Wright, the son, was then only eighteen.

W. S. Wright at one time was democratic candidate for county judge, losing the election in a strong republican county by a few votes to John Lettie Bates, whose father James Bates was a Confederate soldier and was killed during the war while at home doing farm work. The Bates family came from Virginia about 1800 and settled at the head of Millstone and Rockhouse creeks near Knott County. Lettie was born at the head of Millstone in 1851 and now lives at her old home near Secco. Of her eleven children all are living except the son William. Nancy is the wife of James Johnson, living on Robinson Creek in Pike County; Henrietta is the wife of L. B. Towner, in Pike, and Rockyhouse Creek; Martha is the widow of William Tilden Wright, and Mrs. W. W. Craft, farmer at Millstone; Mary is the wife of W. W. Craft, a farmer at Millstone; William is the son previously mentioned; Dr. T. G. Wright is a dentist at Lynch, Kentucky, and is interested in the ownership and operation of a number of moving picture houses. That and his other financial affairs, Dr. Wright is also a dentist, practicing at Jessell near Ashland; John W. is a merchant at Seco; the next in age is Ben F.; Lettie Dallas is the wife of A. C. Seco, a farmer and real estate dealer at Thornton, Kentucky.

Ben F. Wright grew up at the old home in Letcher County and beyond the limited education he acquired in home schools his higher training was the result of his own efforts and earnings. He attended the East Kentucky State Normal at Richmond and the high school at Clintwood, Virginia. For six years he taught in Letcher County, Kentucky, and in Wise County, Virginia. In 1913 he entered the Medical Department of the University of Louisville, graduating in 1917. He stood high in his classes at the university, but the poor health of his wife at the time of graduation so impaired physically that when he volunteered his services to the Government they were rejected. Failing in his effort to get into the army he returned home, and has since built up a very extensive practice. During the influenza epidemic he treated over 3,000 cases. Doctor Wright has a large practice for the mining companies at Seco and Millstone and a large clientele outside as well. He is a very skillful surgeon.

In 1911 he married Miss Fannie Hall, daughter of L. M. Hall of Wise County, Virginia. Two children were born to their marriage the only one living being Eva Irene. The deceased son was named Edgar Allen Poe. Doctor Wright is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Richmond. In Masonry he is affiliated with the Lodge at Jenkins, the Chapter at Whitesburg, the Commandery at Winchester and the Shrine at Lexington. He is Depute Grand Chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and a member of the Improved Order of Red Men. Doctor Wright was instrumental in securing the establishment of the post-office at his old home town, known as Seco Postoffice, and has been postmaster there from the inception of the office. He is also a trustee of the local schools.

STANLEY FORMAN REED is a member of the Maysville law firm of Worthington, Browning & Reed, and in the decade since he was admitted to the bar has achieved an influential place in association with some of the most prominent men and interests in that section of Kentucky.

Mr. Reed was born in Mason County, Kentucky, December 27, 1884, son of Dr. John A. and Fannie (Forman) Reed. He is a member of the Kentucky society of the Sons of the American Revolution, and his patriotic ancestry includes some historic characters of the great west in the colonial period. He is descended from Tolliver Craig, who was born about 1705 and came to Kentucky prior to the Revolution. He was a lieutenant in the Revolutionary war. His wife, who lived to 1759, was born in Letcher County, Virginia, in 1739. She was one of the water carriers at Bryant Station. Another ancestor was Lewis Craig, a famous Baptist preacher whose life is told in G. W. Ranck's "The Traveling Church," and in Thompson's "Lewis Craig." He removed to Kentucky in 1781 and continued his labors in this western wilderness until his death in 1828. He was head of the "Traveling Church" and founder of many of the churches existing today. His wife was also a Bryant Station water carrier. Two other ancestors of the Maysville attorney were Gen. David Chiles, a brigadier-general of Kentucky Militia at the battle of Thames in the war of 1812, and Capt. Richard Soward, who was in the Third Regiment of Poage's Mounted Kentucky Volunteers in the same war.

The father of Mr. Reed, Dr. John A. Reed, graduated in medicine from the University of Pennsylvania in 1865, and spent his entire active career as a practicing physician in Mason County, Kentucky, where his name is still held in highest esteem. Stanley F. Reed graduated in that classical course from Yale College in 1906, and from 1906 to 1909 was a law student of the University of Virginia and Columbia University. The year 1909-10 was spent in travel and in following courses in law at the University of Paris, the Sorbonne. He was admitted to the bar in July, 1910, and since that date has practiced at Maysville, except for the time he was a lieutenant in the Army Service Corps, receiving his honorable discharge at Camp Upton, New York, December 11, 1918.

Mr. Reed is president of the Maysville Warehouse Company and a director of the Bank of Maysville, the Schar Brick Company and other corporations. He is regarded as one of the ablest leaders in the democratic party in Eastern Kentucky, and represented Maysville County in the House of the Legislature from 1910 to 1914. He was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention in 1920. Mr. Reed is a member of the Lexington Club at Lexington, the Pendennis Club at Louisville, Southern Society of New York, and Delta Phi Fraternity. May 11, 1908, he married Winifred Elgin of Maysville. They have two children: John A., born December 31, 1910, and Stanley F. Reed, Jr., born August 5, 1914.

MAJOR SOLOMON B. CASEBOLT, M. D. Earning the rank of major during his service in the Medical Corps of the American Army, Major Casebolt soon after his return from abroad began practice in Pike County at Virgie, where he is physician to one of the large mining companies operating here and also has an extensive general practice.

Solomon B. Casebolt was born on Shelby Creek in Pike County October 21, 1885, son of Harvey G. and Arminda (Tackett) Casebolt. His father is a prominent old time farmer and business man is Pike County, and was formerly actively engaged in the timber business on the Big Sandy and also a lumber manufacturer. He is now in business as a merchant on Robinson Creek.

Doctor Casebolt is a man who to a large extent has achieved his own opportunities and has been responsible for his own advancement. He acquired his preliminary education at Pikeville, where two of his best instructors were Philip Bevins and T. M. Riddle. For seven years he was one of the successful teachers in the schools in Pike County and he continued teaching while doing his preliminary work. In 1907 he attended the Medical School of the University of Louisville, graduating in 1911, and in 1913 returned to Louisville for post-graduate work. His first regular work in his profession was done at Elkhorn City, where he was physician and surgeon in charge of the hospital during the construction of the railroad through the breaks of the mountain. This gave him valuable knowledge in the preliminary work in medicine. At this time at Pikeville and was then physician and surgeon two years for the Rock Castle Lumber Company in Martin County, Kentucky, with office at Offutt. Early in 1917 Doctor Casebolt returned to Pikeville and in June, 1917, received a commission as first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps. After six weeks in the Medical Officers Training School at Fort Oglethorpe, he was sent to Syracuse, New York, and assigned to active duty with the Forty-ninth Infantry.
For ten months he was at one of the chief army embarkation camps, Camp Merritt, New Jersey, and spent one month also at Camp Upton, New York. He saw twelve months of service in France with the Eighty-third Division. Doctor Casebolt was promoted to captain in February, 1918, and was also a member of the district commission as major in March, 1919. He was in the service over two years, receiving his honorable discharge and returning home in July, 1919. Since then his home has been at Virgie, where in addition to an extensive general practice he is physician in charge of the Rogers Bethlehem mission.

In December, 1919, Doctor Casebolt returned to France and on the 16th of that month married Mlle. Simone Pineau, a charming and cultured French girl whom he had met while in the service. They have one daughter, Claire. Doctor Casebolt is a member of Pike County, Kentucky, State and American Medical associations, is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge at Pikeville and is a democrat in politics.

Robert C. Gatewood. The Gatewood family is one of the long-established ones in Montgomery County, and among those of the name to attain to prominence who are still living are Robert C. Gatewood, a prosperous farmer, residing on the old Magown farm, and his father-in-law, Mr. W. C. Ewing, also a resident at Mount Sterling. Both are sons of James W. and Janealla (Ewing) Gatewood. James W. Gatewood was born in Montgomery County, Kentucky, in the vicinity of Mount Sterling, May 8, 1832, and his wife was born August 28, 1847. Her parents, Andrew J. and Lydia W. (Connor) Ewing, were natives of Virginia, who came to Kentucky after their marriage, and settled on a farm in Bath County. James W. Gatewood and his wife had five children, namely: Robert C., who was born February 3, 1867; A. J., who was born September 15, 1868; Elva, who is the widow of Ben Gay; Mary, who is the wife of David C. Fox; and Colonel, married Miss Laura Gager, Chatanooga, Tennessee. Robert C. Gatewood and his wife have resided at Mount Sterling, Kentucky, since December 26, 1918. His father, Harvey T. Gatewood, married Mary Stoner, the former a native of Montgomery County and the latter of Bath County, Kentucky, both families being farming people. Following their marriage Harvey T. Gatewood and his wife settled on a farm near Mount Sterling, and they became prominent in its life and affairs, and it was on this farm that James W. Gatewood was born and he acquired his educational training in the district schools, but after his own marriage he purchased a farm near Ewington, and there he spent the remainder of his life, and there his children were born. Both he and his wife were Episcopalians in religion, and a democrat. For some years Mr. Gatewood has been interested in the Montgomery National Bank of Mount Sterling, which he helped to organize in 1902, and he is now a member of its board of directors. This is one of the solid banks of the county.

A. J. Gatewood was reared on the farm near Ewington, and attended the public schools of his district and the private school at the following four and one-half years he went to live with his grandfather, A. J. Ewing, in Bath County, and resided there until he was twenty-eight years old. At that time, December 16, 1899, he married Virginia Galthright, of Louisville, Kentucky. She is a graduate of the public schools of her native city and finished her education in the east. From the time he was fifteen years of age he has continued to reside at Mount Sterling, where he has been engaged in the milling business with his father-in-law, but then returned to Montgomery County, and, locating at Mount Sterling, for ten years was occupied with selling life insurance. He then took up farming, and has been occupied with this line of work ever since, but continues to reside at Mount Sterling. His farm is on Wayne Street, at Maysville, and his residence is within the city limits.

A. J. Gatewood and his wife have one daughter, Mildred E., who was born September 10, 1903. They belong to the Christian Church, in which both are active. Like his father and brother, Mr. Gatewood is a democrat.

Howard L. Burpo, president of the Adamson Coal Company and passenger engineer of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, is one of the substantial business men of Jenkins, and one who has a wide circle of warm, personal friends. He was born at Martinsville in Monroe County, Kentucky, on October 7, 1877, the son of John and Elizabeth (Stotts) Burpo. John Stotts was a blacksmith, who died when his grandson was four years old, and the lad lost his mother when he was eleven. He continued to live with his grandmother until he was sixteen years old, and in the meanwhile attended the public schools at Martinsville. Leaving school at the age of sixteen, he went to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he found employment with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and first worked in the roundhouse. Later he was made a fireman, and still later an engineer, his run taking him out of Cincinnati. In 1912 he had the distinction of running the first engine over the Shelby branch of the Baltimore & Ohio, this trip taking fourteen hours and twenty minutes while on his train was doing construction work. Later Mr. Burpo went into coal production, and had charge of the construction and opening of the Adamson mine, September 8, 1920, and he is now president of the company controlling and handling its produce. He is also the owner of an orange grove at Fort Pierce, Florida. In addition to his other duties Mr. Burpo is serving his district on the Shelby branch, and is one of the most reliable men in the employ of the road.

On December 25, 1914, Mr. Burpo was united in marriage with Miss Emnice, a daughter of George M. Hackney, of Fort Pierce, Florida. Mr. and Mrs. Burpo have one son, Howard L., Jr. Mr. Burpo belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, but his wife is a Baptist, and they belong to the United Church of Christ. He is one of the men in the important part of the moral standards of their community. Fraternally Mr. Burpo is a Thirty-second Degree Mason, maintaining membership with the Consistory at Covington, Kentucky. He also belongs to the Blue Lodge at Cincinnati, Ohio; the Chapter at Jenkins, and the Mystic Shrine at Ashland, Kentucky. A Republican, Mr. Burpo is deeply interested in the success of his party and takes a very active part in civic affairs. A practical man, he knows how to handle the various problems which arise, especially in community work, and his fellow citizens have come to look to him for guidance in many matters for they know that he keeps himself well informed and that his judgment is excellent.
HON. FERDINAND THOMAS HATCHER. Still a young man, with the best years of his career before him, Hon. Ferdinand Thomas Hatcher, president of the Day and Night National Bank of Pikeville, and from January, 1916, to January, 1918, a member of the national board of control, has achieved a success that might well be envied by many individuals, even after a full life of earnest effort. Mr. Hatcher, who is popularly and familiarly known as "Tom" Hatcher throughout the community, was born at Pikeville, January 31, 1880, and is a son of Ferdinand C. and Jane (Mayo) Hatcher, natives of this state and members of families long identified prominently with Kentucky affairs.

The Hatcher family was founded in Kentucky in 1800, when James G. Hatcher migrated to this state from Virginia and settled at the mouth of Mud Creek, where he spent the rest of his life as a storekeeper and farmer. His son, Ferdinand C. Hatcher, who was born in Floyd County, Kentucky, in 1848, followed in his father's footsteps and was engaged in agriculture and merchandising in Floyd County until 1879, in which year he came to Pikeville and settled at Pikeville. Here he continued his activities as a merchant and tiller of the soil, and rounded out a long and honorable career, passing away December 31, 1911. His public services included his capable discharge of the duties of deputy county clerk of Pike County, and for one term he also served in the office of county judge. He was a popular man and member of the Masonic Blue Lodge at Prestonsburg, Kentucky. He belonged to the Methodist Church, South, which is also the faith of Mrs. Hatcher, who was born in 1858, in Floyd County, and who survives him as a resident of Pikeville. They were the parents of nine children, of whom seven are living, all being residents of Pike County.

Ferdinand Thomas Hatcher received his education in the public schools of Pikeville, and even as a youth displayed a marked predilection for public affairs. He was only eighteen years of age when he was made deputy county clerk of Pike County, and from that time to the present has been known as an earnest worker and a constantly growing influence in the ranks of the democratic party. He served as deputy county clerk for six years, then as county clerk in the Springfield circuit of the Kentucky Court, under Judge Roberson. In the meantime, for years he was engaged in buying land and abstracting titles of the Northern Coal and Coke Company, and eventually became one of the organizers of the Day and Night National Bank of Pikeville, of which he is president, and in the success of which he has played a leading part. Mr. Hatcher is also president of the Pikeville Bottling Company, and has various other interests. A man of sound judgment, foresight and acumen, he possesses the ability of instantly recognizing opportunities and readily grasping them, but his transactions have ever been carried through in an honorable and straightforward manner, and his standing in the confidence of his associates and the general public is of the highest. During the four years that he served as a member of the Kentucky State Board of Control, he labored conscientiously and with effect in behalf of the interests of his fellow-citizens and his native state, thereby adding to a reputation for public-spirited and constructive citizenship.

On February 12, 1902, Mr. Hatcher was united in marriage with Miss Della L. Leslie, daughter of Jack Leslie, of Pikeville, and to this union there have been born two children: Jack L. and Julia Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Hatcher are consistent members of the Methodist Church, South, in which Mr. Hatcher is serving as a member of the board of trustees and the board of stewards. He is a Mason of high standing and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine at Ashland, Kentucky. He has friends throughout the state and well-wishers in every community in which he is known.

BURTON EGEBERT WYMAN. A native of Graves County, Burton Egbert Wyman after a number of years of business connections with Paducah has returned to his native county and is cashier of the Bank of Lowes. He is one of the active men in the management of this well-known financial institution, and is a citizen always ready to work for the welfare of his community.

Mr. Wyman was born at Lowes, February 20, 1882. He is a member of an old Kentucky family. His great-grandfather, Adam Wyman, was born in Germany and was five years old when his parents came to this country and settled in Kentucky. He lived for many years in Meade County, where Milton Wyman, grandfather of the Lowes banker, was born. Milton Wyman at an early day moved to Graves County. He combined with farming an active interest in the Baptist Church, as a circuit rider and preacher. He died in Graves County many years ago. His wife was a member of the Thorpe family of Meade County. Thomas D. Wyman, father of Burton E., was born in Graves County in 1855, and has spent his active life as a farmer. He moved to the Lowes community in 1875, and is still living there. He has been deeply interested in the church in which he was reared, the Baptist, and for many years has been clerk, treasurer, and cashier of church independently. Thomas D. Wyman married Susan Virgin, who was born in Graves County in 1855, and she and her husband reside at Lowes. They have a large family of ten children: Wilbur, a traveling salesman with home at Jonesboro, Arkansas; Ernest L., a farmer at Lowes; Edwin, a farmer at Guthrie, Kentucky; Birdie, wife of Will Ford, a traveling salesman with home at Mayfield; Burton E.; Vonie, wife of Dr. I. C. Young, a physician and farmer at Hickman, Kentucky; Elyer M., cashier of the Bank of Lovelaceville in Ballard County; Myrtle, wife of V. Allen, who is connected with a transfer company at Paducah; Leta, wife of R. L. Bishop, assistant cashier of the First National Bank at Paducah; and Ferrell, who lives with her parents at Lowes.

Burton E. Wyman acquired a public school education in his native village, and later spent a year in the Southern Normal University at Bowling Green, one term in the Hall Moody Institute at Martin, Tennessee, and was in the Southern Normal University at Huntingdon, Tennessee, until 1903.

On leaving college Mr. Wyman located at Paducah, where for three years he was clerk in the transportation department of the West Kentucky Coal Company, for three years was bookkeeper for the Reliance Burford Furniture Company, for a similar period was bookkeeper with the Paducah Brewing Company, and for two years was bookkeeper and confidential man for M. Michael & Brothers.

December 1, 1910, Mr. Wyman came to Lowes as cashier of the Bank of Lowes. The president of this institution is T. H. Barriger and the vice president, J. E. Breckinridge. The bank, located on the main street of Lowes, has a capital of $15,000, a reserve of $5,000, and profits of $10,000, and average deposits of $125,000.

Mr. Wyman is a member of the State Bankers Association. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Improved Order of Red Men. He married at Paducah in September, 1911, Miss Alma E. Adams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Adams, the latter deceased. Her father was a native of southern Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Wyman have two daughters, Dorothy, born October 4, 1912, and Susan, born October 15, 1915.

W. F. PEEBLES, M.D. Accepted by his associates and fellow citizens as one of the skilled and dependable physicians and surgeons of Hickman County, Dr. W. F. Peebles, of Clinton, holds an enviable position in his profession and community. He is a Kentuc-kian by birth, having been born near Milburn. Carlisle County, this state, September 13, 1877, a son of John S. Peebles, and grandson of John Peebles, a native of Virginia. His father, the great-grandfather of Doctor Peebles, was a soldier in the American Revolution from Virginia, in which colony his ancestors had settled when they came to this country from Scotland. John Peebles, Sr., was a soldier during the War of 1812, his close returning to Virginia and continuing to live there until 1838, when he migrated to Carlisle County, Kentucky, and there became a very successful farmer and man of affairs. He married to Mary Frazier, a native of Virginia. His death oc-urred in Carlisle County before his grandson was born.

John S. Peebles was born at Cynthiana, Kentucky, in 1834, and he is still living, making his home at Paducah, Kentucky. His parents located in what is now Carlisle County, but was then Ballard County, Kentucky, in 1838, and there he was reared, educated and married, and there he resided for many years. Later on in life, after having been eminently successful as a farmer and merchant, he went to the Pine Bluffs of that state, for six years and then moved to Paducah. In him the democratic party has a stanch supporter. A man of religious tendencies, he has always been an earnest and effective member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. During the war between the North and the South he espoused the cause of the latter section and enlisted in the Third Kentucky Infantry. Enlistment in beauty, he remained faithful to his colors, and when he was transferred to General Forrest's cavalry, with which organization he remained for two years, or until the close of the war, when he returned home and resumed the occupations of private life, and in spite of the hardships and discouragements of reconstruction days was able to achieve a more than ordinary success. He was married to Sallie Ferguson, born in Kentucky in 1830. She died at Milburn, Ken-

kansas, is a foreman of a railroad crew on the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley Railroad; Mollie, who married Jack Wilkerson, a farmer of Graves County, Kentucky, resides near Hickory Grove, that county; Thomas, who was a mechanic and woodworker, died in December, 1918, near Pin Bluffs, Kentucky; Who married John Graves, a farmer of Carlisle County, Kentucky; Samuel, who is a farmer of Graves County, Ken-

ried George Graves, a carpenter and builder, lives at Bardwell, Kentucky; and Doctor Peebles, who was the youngest born.

Doctor Peebles attended the rural schools of Graves and Carlisle counties, and was reared by his aunt, Mrs. Mary Killough, from the time he was three days old. Later on he attended Clinton College at Clinton, Kentucky, and then entered the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville, Kentucky, and was graduated therefrom in 1905, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Immediately thereafter he began the practice of his profession at Springfield, Hickman County, where he remained until January, 1918, when he went into the service of his country during its participation in the great war. He had enlisted in June, 1917, in the medical corps, but was not called until January of the following year, at which time he was commissioned a first lieutenant and sent to the training camp at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. After six weeks there he went to Garden City, Long Island, and remained there until July 15, 1918, when he went overseas and landed in England. He was first at Camp Flowerdown, near Winchester, for a few days, and then for fifteen days was at Rendcomb Aerodrome. From there he went to Northfield, near London. He was returned to the United States, December 11, 1918, and was musttered out at Camp Taylor, January 6, 1919, as first lieutenant. The duties pertaining to his private practice he is serving as county physician for Hickman County. As a member of the Hickman County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the Kentucky Medical Association he keeps abreast with the advance in public health and politics he is a democrat. He is a member and steward of the Methodistic Episcopal Church. A Mason, he belongs to Springfield Lodge No. 574, A. F. & A. M.

On May 30, 1908, Doctor Peebles was married first to Miss Effie Caldwell at Springfield, Kentucky. She was a daughter of James and Mary (Chester) Caldwell. Mrs. Peebles is deceased, but Mr. Peebles survives and lives at Springfield, where he has farming interests. Mrs. Peebles died December 18, 1910, leaving one daughter, Effie, who was born December 15, 1910. On March 20, 1912, Doctor Peebles married Miss Ada Avey at Columbus, Kentucky. She is a daughter of John Avey, a merchant of Columbus, Kentucky, who is now deceased, as is his wife, who was Miss Millie Avey. Doctor Peebles is a skilled musician in both vocal and instrumental music, and was graduated in her art from one of the leading conservatories. Doctor and Mrs. Peebles have one son, Richard, who was born March 16, 1913.

As one of the men of his profession public-spirited enough to sacrifice personal interests to a sense of public duty, his continued loyalty to the people of the county, and the confidence and support of his fellow citizens. In the stress of the days following the signing of the armistice the people of this country have to a certain extent neglected to give open expression to the gratitude which is at heart entertained for the men, who beyond the draft age and with home needs holding them back, went into the service and ministered to the soldiers, saving many thousands of young lives and healing the wounds of the stricken. When the American people are a little further away from the numbing effects of the great conflict they will awaken to their duty toward the returned service men and render to them the appreciation which they have so richly earned and to which they are certainly entitled.

Roy P. Clark. Recognizing the fact that business is the very life blood of national health and prosperity, Roy P. Clark, one of the successful business men of Hickman, is doing his part to promote the welfare of his locality as secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Hickman Milling and Feed Company, Incorporated. He was born in Fulton County, Kentucky, April 27, 1880, a son of Alonzo P. Clark, and granddaughter of Obadiah Clark. He spent his childhood in Fulton County, Kentucky, in 1882, and there his wife, Mrs. Helen (Tyler) Clark, also died. They were farming people who came to Fulton County at an early day.

Alonzo P. Clark was born in Fulton County in 1850, and died at Oakat, Hickman County, in 1886. He was reared, educated and married in his native county, and then he became a farmer and saw-mill owner and operator. In 1883 he moved to Hickman and remained there the rest of his life. In politics he was a democrat. Very religious, he found in the creed of the Missionary Baptist Church the medium for the expression of his faith and early joined it and remained one of its stanch supporters. He was a Mason, Alonzo P. Clark was married to Lizzie Gage, who was born in Fulton County, Kentucky, and died in this county in 1902. Their children were as follows: C. L., who is a merchant of Hickman; Roy P., whose name heads this review; Lizzie Gage, who married Burrus Brasfield, is now deceased, but her husband lives at Dumas, Arkansas; and L. G., who married C. M. Brasfield, a farmer of Dumas, Arkansas.

Roy P. Clark attended the rural schools of Fulton County, and added to his store of knowledge by taking a commercial course at Draughon's Business College of Nashville, Tennessee, from which he was graduated in September, 1901. For the next sixteen years he was engaged in farming in Hickman County, Kentucky, and then sold his farm and bought the flour and feed mill owned by E. E. Reeves at Hickman and organized the Hickman Milling and Feed Company, Incorporated, with the following officials: H. C. Hetha, president; H. F. Pettit, vice president; Roy D. Clark, secretary, treasurer and general manager. The capacity of the plant is fifty barrels per day. The mills are located near the Chicago, Memphis & Gulf Railroad tracks. Like his father, Mr. Clark is a democrat and a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. Fraternally he belongs to Elm Camp No. 3, W. O. W. He owns a modern residence just at the edge of the city on the south side, where he has a comfortable home and spacious grounds.

In 1907 Mr. Clark married at Hickman, Kentucky, Miss Louise Warren Rogers, a daughter of J. W. and Lou (Cowgill) Rogers, residents of Hickman, where Mr. Rogers is living in retirement, although formerly he was one of the leading merchants of the city. Mrs. Clark was educated at Hickman College, of which she is a graduate. Mr. and Mrs. Clark have remained in the city ever since. Their daughter, Mrs. Adrian Louise, was born in August, 1910; and Tansi, was born in 1917. Mr. Clark not only possesses experience and business ability, but the will and resourcefulness which bring about gratifying results. He stands well with his associates and competitors, and is recognized as being one of the men of moment not only at Hickman but throughout Fulton County.

Edward Thomas Bullock, district counsel for the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, is one of the leading corporation lawyers of Hickman County, and a representative citizen of Clinton. He was born at Hickman, Kentucky, September 13, 1847, a son of E. I. Bullock, and a member of one of the old established families of the county, the Bullocks having come to the American Continent long before the Revolution and settled in Virginia.

E. I. Bullock was born in Culpeper County, Virginia, in 1808, and died at Columbus, Kentucky, in 1883. He was graduated from William and Mary College at Lynchburg, Virginia. In 1841 he was married at Jimtown, Kentucky, where he had located in 1840, and established himself as a lawyer and surveyor of public lands, but left Jimtown for Mill's Point, as Hickman was then called, and was there engaged in the practice of his profession until 1855, when he moved to Clinton. There he remained for two years, and then, in 1857, moved to Columbus, Kentucky, where he continued in an active practice until his death. He was a democrat, and was honored by his party, serving as attorney of Fulton County for one term, being the first to hold that office, and he was circuit judge of the First District. He was a member of the committee that revised the statute laws of Kentucky, then called the general statutes, but now called the Kentucky statutes. During President Buchanan's administration he was United States attorney, and discharged every obligation laid upon him with dignified capability. All of his mature years he was a communicant of the Episcopal Church, and was a very strong churchman. He was also a Mason of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the state was the beneficiary of his benevolent spirit. In every way he measured up to the highest standards of manhood and good citizenship. E. I. Bullock was married to Maria Emerson, who was born in Cumberland County, Kentucky, in 1810, and died near Columbus, Kentucky, in 1880. Their children were as follows: Maria, who married R. W. Walker, an attorney, now deceased, resides at Clinton, Kentucky, where she is held in high respect. John M., who died at Batavia, Kentucky, was an attorney of note, although only twenty-four years old at the time of his demise. Hettie, who was married first to Col. M. B. Harris, an attorney, who died at Clinton, Kentucky, a colonel of the Twelfth Mississippi Infantry, C. S. A., wounded in 1865 and never recovered. She was subsequently married to Richard Sneed, a farmer, who died at Jackson, Tennessee, and she was then married to William Hall, a former extensive landowner, now deceased. Edward Thomas was fourth in order of birth. Pinkie, who is the widow of John G. Samuels, of Bardstown, Kentucky, a farmer, and at one time sheriff of Nelson County, Kentucky, resides at Clinton, Kentucky. Mary is the widow of Kit Rudd, a steamboat and railroad man, and resides at Greenville, Mississippi, during the winters and at New York City, New York, during the summer months.

Edward Thomas Bullock attended the rural schools of Hickman County, Kentucky, and then entering the State University of Missouri at Columbia, Missouri, was graduated therefrom in 1867. He then read law in the office of L. D. Husband at Paducah, Kentucky, and was admitted to the bar in 1868, beginning his practice at Paducah and remaining in that city for three years. He then moved to Columbus, Kentucky, and has continued in the practice of law, but in that year came to Clinton, and has continued to reside in this city ever since. His offices are located on Clay Street, in the postoffice building. Mr. Bullock is district counsel for the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, with jurisdiction all over the State of Kentucky, and is now police judge of Clinton, which office he has held for the past eight years. He is a stanch democrat in his political affiliations. The Methodist Episcopal Church holds his high esteem, and he is very active in church work, having been a delegate to the district conference held at Lone Oak, Kentucky, in 1920. He belongs to the Clinton Bar Association, and is now its president. The family residence is at 117 Washington Street, and Mr. Bullock is a property owner in Columbus, Kentucky. He took a very active part in all of the local war activities, including the crossing of the Mississippi River, and was one of the most effective of the "Four Minute Men," making speeches all over Hickman County.

In 1871 Mr. Bullock was married at Princeton, Kentucky, to Miss Bettie Pettit, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Pettit, both of whom are deceased. Mrs. Bullock died at Columbus, Kentucky, in 1873, leaving one son, E. T., Jr., who lives at Louisville, Kentucky, where he is connected with the Avery Manufacturing Company. In 1891 Mr. Bullock was married at Clinton, Kentucky, to Mrs. Della (Cobb) Reid, born at Hickman, Kentucky, and they have one daughter, Della, who married H. D. Hendren, editor of the Hickman County Gazette. Mr. and Mrs. Hendren are residents of Clinton, Kentucky.

Mr. Bullock comes of sturdy and religious stock, and exhibits from his forefathers a high character and decided ideas about the duties of a citizen. He is upright in his principles, practical in his methods, and an authority in matters of law. On the bench he is noted for his practicality, and his judgments are almost without exception sustained by the higher courts. His originality of thought, his independence of action, and his fearlessness in defending his position on any subject and in advocating the principles for which he stands is a source of the admiration and respect of both his political friends and foes. As a corporation lawyer he has few peers, and in his connections he has to the greatest of the railroads of the state he has opportunity to utilize to the utmost the knowledge of this branch of the law which he has gained through years of study and wide experience.

JAMES LUTHER MOSS. Although now retired from the strenuous requirements of former years, James Luther Moss of Clinton is still a representative citizen of Hickman County, and a man whose influence is felt and recognized. His holdings are extensive, and he retains stock in several institutions of the city. The record he made as a business man reflects credit upon his ability and integrity, and sets a standard for younger men to emulate.

James Luther Moss was born at Greensburg, Kentucky, April 15, 1817, a son of George B. Moss, and grandson of Thomas S. Moss, who was a captain in the War of 1812, and a pioneer physician of Greensburg, Kentucky, where he died in 1851. He married Julia C. Bullock, who was born in Green County, Kentucky, in 1793, and died at Clinton, Kentucky, in 1868. Four of their sons, James W., Luther C., Thomas E. and William, served in the Confederate army during the war between the North and the South. James W. Moss was colonel of the Second Kentucky Infantry, C. S. A., and was killed at Jonesboro. Luther C. Moss was a lieutenant of a company in his brother's regiment. Thomas E. was major of his own regiment, and William H. served as a private.

George B. Moss was born in Green County, Kentucky, in 1818, and died at a mineral spring resort in Tennessee in 1882, although he was a resident of Hickman County, Kentucky, his farm being located near Columbus. He was reared, educated and married in Green County, Kentucky, where he was engaged in business as a mule trader. In 1850 he came to Hickman County, settling then on the farm he bought in the vicinity of Columbus, and became one of the extensive landowners of this region, having about 600 acres in his homestead. He was a democrat. The Presbyterian Church held his membership, and he was an elder in it and very active in the church work. The Masonic fraternity also had in him a faithful member. George B. Moss was married to Elizabeth Marshall, who was born in Green County, Kentucky, in 1824, and died at Greensburg, Kentucky, in 1847. Their children were as follows: John Luther, who died in infancy in Green County; and James Luther, whose name heads this review.

Growing up in his native county, James Luther Moss attended the schools of his native county, and later St. Mary's College of Montreal, Canada. He was also a student of Bethel College at Russellville, Kentucky, but left college when he was nineteen years of age and returned to the home farm, and there spent eight years. However, he was too ambitious to be satisfied to remain a farmer, and so accepted the appointment which made him deputy clerk of Hickman County and brought him to Clinton. After serving as such for a couple of years he was elected county clerk, and held that responsible office for sixteen years. In 1836 he took over the machinery supplies and agricultural implement business in which he had been interested for the preceding ten years in partnership with his uncle, L. C. Moss, and continued it until 1840, when he sold his interest to the bank president of the Clinton Bank, of which he has been a director since its organization, and served for two years, and then resigned and retired from active participation in business life. He owns one of the finest modern residences in Clinton, which is on Washington Street, and another dwelling in the city as well as a very valuable farm near by, both in Clinton, Kentucky. At one time Mr. Moss belonged to the Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and Knights and Ladies of Honor, but of late years has withdrawn from these fraternities.

In 1883 Mr. Moss was united in marriage with Miss Love Beecher, a daughter of Dr. George and Viola (Wayne) Beecher, both of whom are now deceased. Doctor Beecher was the pioneer physician of Clinton, Kentucky, and was a most widely known and universally beloved. Mrs. Moss attended Clinton College. She died in 1892, at San Antonio, Texas, having borne her husband the following children: Blanche, who married Jerry R. Johnson, and they live with her father, Mr. Johnson being actively engaged in extensive agricultural operations in the county; and Alston, who married Ernest Cline, a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Carter reside on their farm 1 1/2 miles southeast of Clinton. During the many years he has lived at Clinton Mr. Moss has been connected with much of the constructive work of his community, and while he was county clerk he made the acquaintance of practically all the people of Hickman County, and by them all he is held in high regard, for he earned their respect and confidence for the efficient and dependable manner in which he discharged the duties of his important office.

JAMES C. PRESTON, M. D. A very competent physician and surgeon in Kentucky, who since his release from duty in the medical corps has practiced at He- ller in Pike County, and who is widely known in the medical profession a portion of Kentucky with which his family have been identified for many years.

Doctor Preston was born at Alphorotta in Floyd County, Kentucky, September 24, 1850, son of M. Lee and Amanda (Dingus) Preston, the former a native of Johnson County and the latter of Floyd County. His father is now sixty-two and his mother fifty years of age, and he is a Methodist while she is a Baptist. M. Lee Preston has been for many years a practical farmer, but is widely known in Eastern Kentucky as a musician and musical instructor and has taught many singing classes in the Big Sandy district. His address is now Smalley Postoffice, or the Town of Martin, which was built on his farm.

Doctor Preston is the only son of a family of four sons and four daughters. His brother Oscar was in the navy during the World war. Doctor Preston gained his early education in the high schools, later began his medical studies in Valparaiso University in Indiana, and in 1917 graduated from the Chicago School of Medicine and Surgery.

Almost immediately he joined the medical corps, and after Bentonville was trained at Camp Greenleaf, Chickamauga, and was in the army service until the close of the war. He then chose as the scene of his professional activities the town of Helier where he has an extensive general practice and is also physician to the Greenough Coal Mine and the Edgewood Coal Company. He is a member of the Pike County, Kentucky State and American Medical associations, is affiliated with Pikeville Lodge of Masons and El Haya Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Ashland, and is a republican in politics. In 1919 Doctor Preston married Miss Mary Douglas Porter, daughter of J. M. Porter of Prestonsburg, Floyd County.

JOHN S. CLINE. Faithful in the discharge of his community, ability to look ahead and visualize conditions as they were to be in the coming years, and patience in waiting for his dreams to materialize have been important factors in the success of John S. Cline, of Pikeville. An attorney by profession, Mr. Cline has traveled far in his chosen calling, but it has been as an investor in Pike County land that he has found the greatest measure of material prosperity.

Mr. Cline was born in Floyd County, West Virginia, near Dolomite, July 10, 1860, a son of Perry A. and Martha (Adkins) Cline, a grandson of Jacob Cline, and a great-grandson of Peter Cline. Peter Cline came from Eastern Tennessee in 1790 and settled at the mouth of Peter's Creek, named in his honor, a small stream in the western part of West Virginia. Perry A. Cline, a noted character in West Virginia and Eastern Kentucky, was born on the banks of this stream in 1845, and at one time was the owner of the home property, which he traded for a farm on the west side of the Tug River, in Kentucky. He had the advantages of only about three months of schooling, but was blessed with good common sense, and through reading, observation and the use of his inherent qualities never allowed his early educational disadvantages to discourage him. He was elected a member of the General Assembly of Pike County for two terms and served capably in that office from 1876 to 1880, was school commissioner two terms and a member of the State Legislature in 1886 and 1887. He then studied law and was admitted to the bar, but his career was cut short in 1891, when he was only forty-three years of age. His widow, a native of Pike County, survived him until March 2, 1920, and was seventy-three years of age at the time of her demise. In politics, Perry A. Cline was a Union democrat. While he was too young for service at the outbreak of the war between the states, he was an ardent Union sympathizer, and his brother served in the Federal Army. Mr. and Mrs. Cline were the parents of eight children: John S.; A. D., a minister of the Methodist Church in Pike County; Richard, who removed to Ohio; Myra, who died at the age of thirty years at Pikeville, as the wife of Watt Curnette; Ella, the wife of William A. Richards, of Columbus, Ohio; W. O. B., a farmer at Oak Hill, Ohio; Jacob P., an engineer on the C. & O. Railroad; and Maude, the wife of W. L. York, of Pikeville.

The early education of John S. Cline was secured in the public schools of Pikeville, following which he pursued his studies at the Kentucky Military Institute, a preceptorship for two terms; Mr. Cline has since practiced alone. While he is a general practitioner, much of his law business has been identified with land titles, for this is a field in which he is greatly interested personally, and has naturally made a close study of the subject. Mr. Cline belongs to the various organizations of his calling, and is held in respect by his fellow-members in the profession, who have always found him an observer of the highest ethics of the calling. He is capable, learned and shrewd, and has a great capacity for industry in his profession, his success in which has been fairly earned and is well deserved.

Years ago, even before the possibility of a railroad had been brought up, Mr. Cline began buying land in east Kentucky, for the most part coal land. During the years that he has been in this engagement, it is said that, at different times, he has owned a greater acreage of coal property than any other individual. He had the vision and patience, could see success at the end of a long period of time, and was content to wait for his award. The pioneer in this line of endeavor, he has continued therein to the present time, and as Pikeville has extended its boundaries it has spread constantly over Cline land. Mr. Cline donated the ground at the site of the Home for Deaf and Dumb, which was named in honor of his daughter Grace, who died in 1916, at the age of twenty-seven years, as the wife of William H. Vest, of Lynchburg, Virginia. In 1891 and 1892 Mr. Cline served as sheriff of Pike County and made an efficient and conscientious official in that position, as he did also in the office of county attorney, which he filled for two terms. He is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and a Mason of high standing, being a member of the County Lodge at Pikeville, as well as a noble of the Mystic Shrine. He and his family are faithful members of the Presbbyterian Church.

In 1887 Mr. Cline was united in marriage with Miss Rebecca Scott, daughter of William M. Scott, of Pikeville, and of the five children of this union, Grace is deceased, as before noted, the others being: Octavia, the wife of J. H. Smith, Jr., of Lynchburg, Virginia; Thomas, the wife of Mr. Cline; Grace, of Pikeville; Genevieve, who is unmarried and resides with her parents; and John S., Jr., also at home.

W. M. HAYS succeeded his deceased brother in the office of county superintendent of schools of Bell County, on the 1st of May, 1921, and is most effectively carrying forward the progressive scholastic and executive policies initiated by his brother, the while the excellent success of his administration is being furthered materially by the loyal co-operation of the Bell County Board of Education and the people of the county in general. Mr. Hays is a native of Bell County, where he was born September 13, 1880. His father, Samuel Hays, was born in Claiborne County, Tennessee, in 1856, and there was reared and educated.

About the year 1876 he came to Kentucky and established himself in Barbourville, Bell County, Kentucky, where he continued as one of the extensive and successful exponents of farm industry until 1909, when he removed to his present well improved farm, near Barbourville, Knox County. He is a man of progressiveness and broad views, and has brought to bear in his farming operations a large measure of energy and good judgment, with the result that substantial success has attended his well-directed activities. He is a loyal supporter of the Democratic and Republican party, is affiliated with the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, and both he and his wife are earnest members of the Baptist Church.

Mrs. Hays, whose maiden name was Alice Hendrickson, was born in Bell County, in 1861, and in this county her marriage was solemnized. Of the children W. M., of this review, is the eldest; R. B., who has been a popular teacher in the schools of Bell and Knox counties, Kentucky, and Boulder, Colorado, in 1917; Alvers died at the age of nine months; John, who died at Ashbury, North Carolina, March 16, 1920, was at the time county superintendent of schools for Bell County, Kentucky, a position to which he was elected in November, 1917, by the largest majority ever accorded a candidate for this office in the county, he having been previously a specially successful teacher in the public schools of his native county, and his administration having been notably successful, while his fine attributes of character made his untimely death a cause of deep regret in his home county; Mattie is the wife of Charles G. Cole, who is engaged in the wholesale grocery business at Barbourville, Knox County; and Marcellus J. remains at the parental home.

The rural schools of Bell County gave to W. M. Hays his preliminary education, and thereafter he continued his studies in Williamsburg Institute, now known as Cumberland College, at Williamsburg, Whitley County, until 1907, though, at the age of eighteen years, he had initiated his successful career as a teacher in the rural schools of his native county. His effective service as a teacher in the public schools of Bell County covered a period of twenty-one consecutive years, and from the second year of his work he held a first-grade certificate. When his brother John died and left a vacancy in the office of county superintendent of schools Mr. Hays was recognized as a most logical successor in this important office, to which he was appointed May 21, 1921, to fill out the unexpired term which ends in January, 1922. So well is he discharging his official duties and co-ordinating the educational work of the Bell County schools that his re-election to office will virtually be a matter of his own acceptance of renomination. On account of the illness of his brother, the rector in muum, he assumed full charge of the office in August, 1920, and thus his record had been well established when he was formally appointed as successor of his brother.

Mr. Hays is a republican in political allegiance, and he and his wife are members of the Baptist Church. He is affiliated with and is past chancellor of Mountain Lodge No. 189, Knights of Pythias, at Aboyne, Bell County, in which village he maintains his home, though his official headquarters as county superintendent of schools are in the courthouse at Pineville. At Blanche, this county, he is a member and past sachem of Delaware Tribe No. 157, Improved Order of Red Men; and in his home village he is affiliated with Evening Star Council, Daughters of America, as is also his wife, and with Arjay Council No. 233, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of which he has served as recording secretary since 1917. He is an active member of the Kentucky Educational Association, is a stockholder in the Bell National Bank at Pineville, and in addition to his official service he is engaged in business as a broker in real estate and has served on the executive committee of the members of the Bell County Board of Education for the successful and progressive work being accomplished in the schools of the county, the members of this board, in addition to himself, being as here designated: W. T. Robbins, of Wasioto; M. F. Knuckles, of Beverly; J. C. Hembree, of Tinsley; J. W. Parsons, of Calloway; and Chesley Thompson, of Calvin. In the late war he rendered great support of the nation’s war activities in connection with the great World War. Mr. Hays was active and loyal in patriotic service in the various campaigns in his home county, where he helped in all of the drives for the sale of Government war bonds and savings stamps, besides making his personal subscriptions as liberal as his available resources permitted.

In Clabane County, Tennessee, in the year 1910, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Hays to Miss Katherine Howard, daughter of F. B. and Hannah (Smith) Howard, the former of whom died on his farm near Clear Creek Springs, Bell County, Kentucky, where his widow still maintains her home. Mr. and Mrs. Hays have one son, William Curtis, who was born in 1920.

William Hays, grandfather of W. M. Hays, was born in Tennessee, in 1832, and became a pioneer farmer in Clabane County, that state. He represented Tennessee as a gallant soldier of the Union in the Civil war. In later years he was for twenty years a resident of the west, having passed a portion of the period in Kansas and California, and the closing years of his life he spent near Barbourville, Knox County, Kentucky, where he died in 1916. His wife, whose maiden name was Laura Dodson, was a native of Tennessee and died in the City of Topeka, Kansas, her ancestors having come from Ireland to America in the Colonial days, and the Hays family, of English lineage, having been founded in North Carolina in the Colonial period of our national history, representatives of later generations having been pioneers in both Tennessee and Kentucky, as previous statements in this context duly intimate.

CUMPTON I. MAHURIN is one of the prominent old residents of Webster County, long identified with the farming interests of that section and now carrying the important generational responsibilities of county sheriff.

Mr. Mahurin was born in Grayson County, Kentucky, November 22, 1872, a son of Joel H. and Mary (Edwards) Mahurin, of a prominent and well known family of Grayson County, where his father was also born. His paternal grandfather came to Kentucky from Virginia. Joel H. Mahurin spent his active life as a farmer and died in 1885. His brother, Isaac Dean Mahurin, was at one time sheriff of Grayson County. The maternal grandfather of Sheriff Mahurin was William Edwards. Sheriff Mahurin’s maternal grandmother is one of the oldest women in Kentucky at this writing, being 101 years of age.

Cumpton I. Mahurin grew up on his father’s farm and acquired a common school education. He was one of a family of seven children, five of whom reached mature years. When he was seventeen he started out to battle life alone, coming to Webster county in 1889. His first employment here was as a farm hand, and after several years he married and began farming for himself, his hard work and good management keeping him steadily in the road of progress until he had acquired a good farm of his own, and he is still interested in the practical side of farming so far as his official duties permit.

Mr. Mahurin was elected sheriff in 1917 on the democratic ticket. His qualifications for that office were well known, since for four years he had been deputy sheriff under L. B. Vaughn. Mr. Mahurin is affiliated with the Masonic Order, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Masonic Lodge of Clarksburg, Kentucky, and other educational and social organizations.

In 1892 he married Alice V. Coffman, who died in 1916, leaving five children. In 1916 Mr. Mahurin married Miss Naomi Mayne Shown, of Hartford, Kentucky. She had for several years been a popular teacher in the Dixon schools.

LESLEY L. HINDMAN. Brilliant in intellect, noble in character, great in high aims and lofty purposes, Leslie L. Hindman, county attorney of Hickman County, is one of the leading attorneys of this part of Kentucky, and a dependable citizen of Clinton, where he has other interests outside of his profession. He is logical in thought, clear in expression, and courageous in following his convictions. Responsive to the popular will, he is, nevertheless, honest with himself and true to his settled convictions of duty, and is an ideal official, loyal to his constituents, faithful to his trust, able and fearless in expressing and advocating his views, and devoted to those policies which he believes to be for the good of all.

Leslie L. Hindman was born in Hickman County, Kentucky, January 30, 1882, a son of James M. Hindman, and was one of the old families of the county. The Hindman family originated in Scotland, from whence its representatives came to America at an early day in its history. Mark Hindman was born in Hickman County, Kentucky, in 1822, and died in Mississippi County, Missouri, in 1912. He was one of the prosperous farmers of Hickman County, but when he retired he moved to Mississippi County, Missouri, and there rounded out his days in ease and comfort. During the war between the North and the South he served in the Confederate army, and although he participated in some of the most bitterly contended battles of that unhappy conflict, he was spared for many years of usefulness.

James M. Hindman was born in Hickman County, Kentucky, in 1842, and died near Water Valley, Graves County, Kentucky, although his home was over the line in Hickman County. The year of his demise was 1912, the same year of the death of his father. He was reared in his native county, and spent his entire life within its confines, and was very successfully engaged in farming. In politics a democrat, he never swerved in his allegiance to that party, and to the Episcopal Church, South, held his membership and had his active and effective support, for he was a very religious man. He was married to Susie Hicks, a native of Hickman County, Kentucky, where she was born in 1853. She died in that same county in 1880, having borne her husband the following children: M. L., who died in June, 1920, was a farmer of Graves County, Kentucky; and Edward, who lives in Dallas, Texas, is a traveling salesman. After the death of his first wife James M. Hindman married Frances Walker, who resides on the home farm in Hickman County, near Walter Valley. She was born in this county in 1856. By his second marriage James M. Hindman became the father of the following children: Leslie L., whose name heads this review; Ernest, who lives on the old farm in Hickman County with his mother, and attended the University of Kentucky; J. H. Stephens, a farmer of Clinton, Kentucky; Ella, who married B. O. Walker, a farmer of Beecherton, Hickman County, Kentucky; and Lewis, who is employed in an automobile plant at Detroit, Michigan.

Leslie L. Hindman attended the rural schools of his native county, and then became a student of the State College at Lexington, Kentucky, now known as the State University, and completed the sophomore year in the preparatory course, after which he was graduated in 1902 and for the subsequent five years was engaged in teaching school in Hickman County. Having saved the necessary money, he entered Cumberland University Law Department, at Lebanon, Tennessee, and was graduated therefrom in 1907, with the degree of Doctor of Laws. That same year he entered upon the practice of his profession at Clinton, and built a valuable and successful practice. He is a democrat, and has several times been his party's choice for local offices. For some years he was city judge of Clinton, and then, in November, 1913, was elected county attorney, taking office in January, 1914. After four years he was re-elected to succeed himself, in 1917, and is the present incumbent of the office.

He is to be found in the courthouse. Mr. Hindman owns a modern residence on Washington Street, which is recognized to be the best in the city. It was constructed in 1920 and is equipped with all conveniences and comforts, and the house is surrounded by large, beautifully kept grounds. He also owns a farm in Hickman County, and is secretary and treasurer of the Federal Land Bank of Louisville, Kentucky.

In 1912 Mr. Hindman was married at Paducah, Kentucky, to Miss Ruby Samuel, a daughter of Reuben T. and Alma Samuel, long time settlers in Hickman County. Mr. Samuel was one of the early agriculturalists of Hickman County, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Hindman have no children.

Mr. Hindman belongs to Clinton Lodge, I. O. O. F., of which he is a past grand; to Mayflower Camp, W. O. W.; and to Cameo Camp, M. W. A. Professionally he is a member of the Hickman County Bar Association, which he is now serving as secretary and treasurer. Although in the very prime of useful manhood, Mr. Hindman has traveled far on the road to success, and, judging the future by the past, other honors without doubt lie in store for him, as his constituents recognize his ability and fidelity and feel that their interests will be safeguarded if placed in his capable hands.

Michael Bohan is one of the older residents of the Town of Burlington in Hopkins County, was for many years in the railroad service, both as engineer and conductor, and has made his business grow and prosper with the passing of time until he has one of the best appointed and best patronized shops in Hopkins County.

Mr. Bohan was born in Springfield, Tennessee, August 8, 1860. His father Michael Bohan was born in Cork, Ireland, in 1811, married his first wife in Ireland and they came to this country and settled at Springfield, Tennessee. He spent many years in railroad service. He was employed in the railway station at Springfield and while there he enlisted and served in the Confederate army with a Tennessee regiment. He was all through the war. In 1871 he moved to Gallatin, Tennessee, continuing as a railroad man, and in 1878 came to Earlington, after which he lived practically retired until his death in 1893. He was a democratic and a faithful Catholic. By his first wife he had one son, Dennis, who for many years was connected with circus organizations and died at Earlington, Michael Bohan, Sr., married for his second wife Honora Shey, who was born in County Kerry, Ireland, in 1831, and died in Earlington, Tennessee, in 1908. Her children were five in number: James who died at Springfield, Tennessee, at the age of nine years; Dan, a railroad employe who died at Sebree, Kentucky, in 1883; Michael, Jr.; Cornelius, a railroad engineer living at Earlington; and John, who died at Springfield, Tennessee, in childhood.

Michael Bohan, Jr., acquired some education in private schools in Springfield, Tennessee, but the possibilities of the family were such that he early had to get out and make his own way and the best part of his education has come from reading, experience, and unceasing contact with men and affairs during a busy lifetime. He was practically earning his own living when only ten years of age as a mule driver during the construction of a railroad grade. He worked at that two years, then became a section hand at Springfield, Tennessee, and before he had been five years later had achieved the responsibilities of section foreman. Coming to Earlington in 1878 Mr. Bohan found employment in the local railroad shops, later earned a run as a locomotive fireman, and eventually became a locomotive engineer with the Louisville and Nashville Railway. For a time he had a run as an engineer for the Southern Railroad between Chattanooga and Atlanta. He finally gave up his engineering work to go up to another line of railroading, beginning as a brakeman with the Louisville and Nashville, and in the meantime returning to Earlington in 1893. After three years as brakeman he was promoted to freight conductor, and continued in the railroad service in that capacity until 1901.

In that year Mr. Bohan made his modest start as a local merchant at Earlington, and has enjoyed a steady, comfortable business. He owns both the store and the store building at Railroad and Clark streets and has much other local property including his home. Mr. Bohan, who has never married, is a democrat in politics, member of the Catholic Church, and is affiliated with Henderson Council of the Knights of Columbus. To the extent of his influence and abilities he assisted all the local committees in raising funds and prosecuting other war activities and is a citizen of stanch Americanism.

Joseph Carlyle Carter is one of the prominent lawyers of the Mayfield bar, whose work, based on sound talents and liberal education, has brought him a measure of success promising a broad career of professional and public usefulness.

Mr. Carter was born in Dukedom, Tennessee, January 1, 1863. He has Revolutionary ancestors. The Carters were Scotch-Irish and were Colonial settlers in North Carolina. His grandfather, Isaiah Carter, was a native of North Carolina, an early settler and farmer in Weakley County, Tennessee, and left his farm to volunteer in the Confederate army and died on the battlefield. He married Martha Jones, who was born in Tennessee and is still living, in Weakley County, Tennessee, at the age of eighty-three years. His father, the Mayfield attorney, was born in Weakley County in 1858, was reared and married in that section of Tennessee, was a successful merchant at Dukedom a number of years, and from 1900 continued his merchandising at Mayfield until he retired in 1910. He is a democrat in politics. M. L. Carter married Sallie Ann Williams, who was born in Graves County, Kentucky. The present children of William and Josephine are: two girls and two boys, of whom one is married, and both living with their parents on South Seventh Street. Jean is a graduate of West Kentucky College.

Joseph C. Carter attended public school at Mayfield, West Kentucky College, the Union City Training School in Tennessee, and finished his liberal and professional education in the University of Kentucky at Lexington. For six years he taught in the public schools, for three years in the law course, receiving his L.L. B. degree in 1915. He is a member of the Sigma Nu college fraternity and the Mystic Thirteen College Society.

Mr. Carter began practice in 1915 at Mayfield, in the office of Robbins & Robbins, and the following year was appointed assistant county attorney. In the fall of 1917 he was elected city attorney and has performed the duties of that responsible office since January, 1918. On November 1, 1918, he joined the Central Officers' Training School at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, to train in the Field Artillery, but was mustered out December 31, 1918. Mr. Carter is a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church, and is affiliated with Mayfield Lodge No. 134, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Mayfield Lodge No. 305 of the Elks.

JEROME B. WHITE, mayor of Williamsburg, the judicial center of Whitley County, is giving a most progressive administration of the municipal affairs of this thriving little industrial and commercial city of southeastern Kentucky and is amply justifying the popular confidence and esteem which led to his election for this office. He is a man of exceptional initiative and executive ability, and this has been shown not only in the splendid work which he has achieved during his regime as mayor of Williamsburg, in which position he is serving, in 1921, his third consecutive term, but also in the success that has attended his various business and industrial enterprises. At Williamsburg he owns and conducts the leading wholesale grocery business in Whitley County, and he established and successfully conducts a similar enterprise at Jellico, Tennessee.

Mr. White was born in Hardin County, Kentucky, September 14, 1870, and thus is in the very zenith of his strong and resourceful manhood. His father, F. H. White, was born at Tazewell, Tennessee, in 1825, was removed to manhood and there his marriage was solemnized. He was a carpenter by trade and vocation and in 1860 he came to Hardin County, Kentucky, where he became a successful contractor and builder, and where he continued his residence until 1893, when he retired from active business and established his home at Williamsburg, Whitley County, where he remained until his death, in 1910. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Perry, likewise was a native of Tazewell County, Tennessee, and she preceded him to the life eternal by about two years, her death having occurred in 1908. Jennie, the eldest of their children, died in 1916, at Joplin, Missouri, in which city her husband, Thomas Heady, is still engaged in the meat-market business; John R. resides on his farm near Ramsey, Indiana, and was formerly engaged in the mercantile business; Mollie became the wife of Charles L. Burch, who is a merchant at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and there her death occurred in 1906; James D. is superintendent of the Illinois Central Railroad terminals at East St. Louis, Illinois; Jerome B., of this review, was the next in order of birth; and Florence died at the age of eighteen years. Thus the White family has two living sons and one daughter.

The White family conducted the rural schools of Hardin County until he was fourteen years old, and he then served an apprenticeship to the trade of telegraphist. After becoming a competent operator he was employed as such for thirteen months at the station of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad at Bonneville, Hart County, and during the ensuing two years he was a telegraph operator for this railroad at Lebanon Junction, this state. In 1890 he was appointed station agent of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad at Williamsburg, and after retaining this office sixteen years, he resigned in 1907 and here engaged in the general merchandise business, in which he continued until 1913, when he established a wholesale grocery business both in Williamsburg and at Jellico, Tennessee. He is at present the owner of this concern, with characteristic ability and progressiveness and both have precedence as leading concerns of the kind in the territories covered by their operations. The dual enterprises are conducted under the corporate title of the White Grocery Company, and the founder is president of the company. The Williamsburg establishment of the company is situated on Depot Street, is well stocked and equipped and controls a large and substantial business, as does also the company's equally modern establishment on Main Street in the City of Jellico, Tennessee. Mr. White owns the buildings thus utilized, and at Williamsburg he owns and occupies one of the city's most modern and attractive residences, on Pine Street. He is the owner of 500 acres of valuable farmland and land improvements.

Both officially and in a private capacity Mayor White was foremost in the promotion of World war patriotic service in Whitley County, where he gave effective aid in the campaigns which caused the county to subscribe its quota to the Government war-bond issues, savings stamps, Red Cross service, etc., besides which his individual financial contributions were limited only by his available resources subject to such application. Further than all this, he gave his eldest son to the nations' military service in the great war, as will be more fully noted in a later paragraph. In politics he is a staunch democrat, and he has been a leader in the local councils and campaign activities of his party.

In the year 1822, at Williamsburg, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. White to Miss Florence McVey, daughter of the Rev. Mr. McVey, of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. McVey, the father having been a substantial farmer near Williamsburg for many years prior to his death. Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. White the eldest is Jerome P., who was born May 20, 1854, and who is now serving as city judge at Jellico, Tennessee. He was a gallant young soldier with the American Expeditionary Forces in France, where he participated in the great conflicts of the St. Mihiel and Argonne fields, where in the front lines he "went over the top" seventeen times, and where he thus endured the full tension of the greatest war in the world's history, his rank having been that of sergeant at the time when Logan, bookkeeper and clerk in the commissary department of the Paint Cliff Coal Company and the St. Michael Coal Company at Paint Cliff, McCreary County, he being a stockholder in each of these coal-mining companies. Maude is the wife of P. C. Llewellyn, principal of the high school at Blessington, Georgia; Hubert, who was born September 20, 1901, is, in 1921, a student in Cumberland College, at Williamsburg; Robert, born March 28, 1904, is in the employ of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, at Williamsburg; Dolores was born July 23, 1907, and is a student in the Williamsburg high school; and Lucile, born August 9, 1910, is attending the graded schools of her native city.

GEORGE W. GREER. The value in business of concentrating one’s forces upon a given line of activity, of correctly gauging its importance among the needs of the world, and keeping pace with the ever-changing conditions surrounding it, is confirmed anew in the success of George W. Greer, of Pikeville, identified with the advertising firm of Greer & Company. Mr. Greer has been studying the herd question ever since boyhood, and it is in this connection that he has won his worth-while success.

George W. Greer was born in Watauga County, North Carolina, February 8, 1866, a son of Shadrach and Louise (Winkler) Greer, natives of the same county. Shadrach Greer, a carpenter whose activities were devoted largely to the building of farm homes in the rural communities, was a member of the Home Guards during the war between the states, and was a supporter of the Confederacy. He and his wife were faithful members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the faith of which both died; the father in 1895, at the age of seventy-one years, and the mother in 1911, when eighty-five years of age.

Of their large family, only three grew to maturity; Laura, who died in 1914 as the wife of L. G. Maxwell, whose farm was on the county line separating Watauga and Ashe counties, North Carolina; and Alice, deceased, who was the wife of John Holdway.

George W. Greer attended school in Watauga and Ashe counties in his youth and began his career as a school teacher, twenty years being passed in this vocation, in Watauga, Ashe and Wilkes counties, North Carolina, during which time his salary ranged from $15 to $30 per month. When his family expenses were poor, and in order to help out the family income, he made a study of the herbs of a monetary value, which he would collect during his spare time and sell to whoever had use for them. With the knowledge thus gained, after he gave up his work as an educator, he became associated with A. D. Cowles, a dealer in herbs, and subsequently traveled over Southern and Western North Carolina, buying herbs from country merchants for J. Q. McGuire. Eventually, Mr. Greer formed a partnership with J. T. Laurence, under the firm style of Greer & Laurence, and two years later there was formed the firm of McGuire, Greer & Co., with headquarters at Marion, Virginia, in 1904. In 1905 the firm opened a place of business at Pikeville, with Mr. Greer in charge, and the firm was continued there by Mr. Greer alone until 1908, when there was organized the firm of R. T. Greer & Company, with which concern Mr. Greer has been identified ever since. During this time he has built three large warehouses, and is now paying to the people of Pike County something like $100,000 annually, the annual business of the concern being in excess of $600,000 each year. Places of business are located at Marion, Virginia; Brownwood, North Carolina; Pikeville, Kentucky; and Knoxville, Tennessee, and the herbs of this concern are shipped all over the world. The company also does a profitable side line business in hides and wool.

Mr. Greer and his family belong to the Methodist Church, in which he is a member of the board of trustees and of the board of stewards. He is a democrat in politics and is fraternally affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is truly a self-made man, climbing from the bottom round of the ladder without other aids than a kindly and patient nature and large capacity for painstaking industry. He is public-spirited and progressive, and always has advocated those worthy undertakings which were calculated to advance the community in which he lives. In the past he has served as a member of the town council and the board of public works, and was a member of the city council when the street paving was inaugurated.

In 1880 Mr. Greer married Emily Yates, daughter of Squire Yates of Ashe County, North Carolina, and to this union have been born five sons and four daughters, who are being given excellent educational advantages. Guy Greer, the eldest son, a graduate of West Virginia University, attended the First Officers Training Camp, at Fort Benjamin Harrison, and subsequently supplemented his training by six months at Fort Leavenworth, where he received a first lieutenant’s commission. Sent overseas, he was on the battle line in France, and at the end of his service was appointed to the Reparation Commission and is still in France. Marshall Raymond Greer, second son, is a graduate of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, and during the World war was assigned to duty on the United States warship "North Dakota," which, at the signing of the armistice was in dry dock. He is now a junior lieutenant on that vessel. The other children, all of whom reside with their parents at Pikeville, are attending school.

WILLIAM LINDSAY MOSBY, M. D., one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Carlisle County, is engaged in a general medical and surgical practice at Bardwell, where he is greatly beloved. He was born in Carlisle County, one mile south of Bardwell, on his father’s farm, November 30, 1861, a son of William W. Mosby, and grandson of Daniel Boone Mosby, who was born in Boone County, Kentucky, in 1792, and died near Bardwell, Kentucky, in 1857. He lived the greater part of his life in McCracken County, Kentucky, which afterward became Ballard County and later the whole County was named Bardwell in his honor. William Mosby, was born in Kentucky, and died in Carlisle County when she was fifty-five years old. The Mosbys are of Scotch ancestry, the family having been founded in America during Colonial times by its representatives from Scotland.

William W. Mosby was born in McCracken County, Kentucky, in 1825, and died at Bardwell, Kentucky, in 1908. He was reared in McCracken and Ballard counties, and was married in that portion of Ballard County which later became Carlisle County. Until 1905 he resided at Arlington, but in that year moved to Bardwell, where he lived in retirement until his death. He was a farmer upon an extensive scale and was very successful, becoming wealthy in the course of his operations. He also raised and bought and sold stock, and was well known as a stockman over a wide area. Though not a formal graduate in medicine, he was a highly skilful and supporter, although he never cared to enter the arena for public honors. His religious views made him a Methodist, and it was his duty and pleasure to donate very liberally of his time and money to the advancement of his church. An Odd Fellow, he took an active part in the work of the local lodge of that order. It is interesting to note that all of his sons and sons-in-law were also democrats, Methodists and Odd Fellows. His wife was Matilda Frances Berry, and she survives her husband and lives at Arlington, Kentucky, with her daughter, Mrs. Minnie Stanley. Mrs. Mosby was born in Ballard County, Kentucky, in 1834. She and her husband had the following children: James, who died at the age of thirty-five years, was engaged in farming near Arlington in Hickman County; Jack, who died at the age of seventeen years; Robert D., who is a prosperous farmer living near Arlington; Doctor William L. Mosby, who was the first graduate of the medical college of St. Louis, Missouri, G. Elsey, and G. A. Mosby, traveling salesman residing at Bardwell; Henry L., who died near Arlington in 1917, was a prosperous farmer; Bedford, who is a successful farmer living near Arlington; and Minnie, who married R. E. Stanley, a substantial farmer, vice president of the Arlington Bank, and a resident of Arlington. There were also three children who died in infancy.

Dr. William L. Mosby attended the rural schools of Carlisle County and Milburn Academy, where he was prepared for college. He then entered the Washington University at St. Louis, Missouri, from which he graduated March 6, 1883, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Since then he has taken postgraduate courses in the polyclinics of St. Louis, Missouri, Chicago, Illinois, and New Orleans, Louisiana. In 1883 he began the practice of his profession at Arlington, Kentucky, and remained there for a period of eighteen months, when, in 1884, he came to Bardwell, and since then has built up a fine and remunerative general practice. He owns a modern residence on Elm Street, corner of Elsey Avenue, which is one of the finest residences of the city, and has served on the county Board of Health for many years, and has long been its chairman. For ten years he was a member of the Bardwell Board of Trustees of the high school, and the greater portion of that time was chairman of the board. He took a very active part in all of the war activities, was a member of the U.S. Army, and a member of the American Red Cross. He served during the war, and assisted in putting up all of the Liberty Loan drives. Doctor Mosby is a Mason and an Odd Fellow, and belongs to the Carlisle County Medical Society, of which he has been president for three terms; the Kentucky State Medical Society, of which he is vice president; the Southern Medical Association; the American Medical Association; the American Association of Railway Surgeons; the Illinois Central and the Y. M. V. Railway Surgeons Association, being surgeon to this system, and the Southwestern Kentucky Medical Association, which he has served as president. He assisted in organizing the Southern National Life Insurance Company of Louisville, Kentucky, serving it as vice president and director. This concern was later merged with the Inter-Southern Life Insurance Company.

In February, 1885, Doctor Mosby was married at Cairo, Illinois, to Miss Mattie Pauline Petrie, a daughter of Dr. J. S. and Martha (Henderson) Petrie. The father was a physician and surgeon who died at Bardwell, Kentucky, in 1912. The mother survived him until 1918, when she passed away at Clinton, Kentucky. Mrs. Mosby was educated in the Cairo, Illinois, High School, graduating therefrom. Doctor and Mrs. Mosby became the parents of two sons: William E., who was born February 5, 1887, was graduated from the Kentucky State University, class of 1910. He is a civil engineer of the Illinois Central Railroad, and now assistant engineer of tests and resides at Chicago, Illinois.

nois. Hazel Petrie is a physician and surgeon now connected with the Rockford Clinic, Rockford, Illinois. He was graduated from the University of Louisville, medical department, class of 1910, and for the subsequent year was an intern in the Augsungsta Hospital at Chicago, Illinois. Coming to Bardwell, he was engaged in practice with his father for two years, and then for 3½ years was with Mayo Clinic at Rochester, Minnesota. He is a member of the medical society of Illinois, and is one of the younger members of his profession. Dr. H. P. Mosby entered the United States service in the Medical Corps as a lieutenant and was sent overseas. He saw service in England, Scotland and France, and after eighteen months was mustered out early in 1919, with the rank of captain, and located with the Rockford Clinic, where he is doing splendid work.

Roy M. Shelbourne, county attorney for Carlisle County, and one of the leading lawyers of this part of the state, is a forceful factor in his profession and politics, and has the support of the best element at Bardwell, where he resides, as well as throughout the county. He was born at Bardwell, November 12, 1869, a son of M. T. Shelbourne, and grandson of Moreau Thomas Shelbourne, who was born near Owensboro, Kentucky. His death occurred in Bardwell, now Carlisle County, Kentucky, before his grandson, R. M. Shelbourne, was born. He was the pioneer of the family into Bardwell County, and here developed important farming interests. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Mary Ann Janes, is a daughter of T. J. Janes of Rockford, Illinois, and is the descendant of the Shelbourne family who emigrated from England to near the American Colonies from England at a very early day in the history of this country.

M. T. Shelbourne was born in Bardwell, now Carlisle County, in 1851, and is now a resident of Bardwell. He was reared in this county and here he received his educational training. Mr. Shelbourne is an attorney, and practiced his profession in Ballard County before Carlisle was created, and, following that act, he moved in 1887 to Bardwell, where he has built up a fine civil and criminal practice. Very active as a democrat, he has been called upon to accept of office, and was the first commonwealth attorney of the First Judicial District of the counties of Ballard and Fulton, under the present constitution. He is a member of the county, state and national bar associations. Recently he has been living somewhat retired. He owns a modern residence on Clitham Street, and one farm one-half mile south of Bardwell, which comprises fifty acres, and another farm of 130 acres which is six miles east of Bardwell, both of valuable property. In addition he owns the Shelbourne-Mosby Block on Front Street, in partnership with Dr. W. Q. Mosby, and the hotel building on Front Street.

The first wife of M. T. Shelbourne was Cora Hendrix, who was born in Ballard County and died in Carlisle County. They had children as follows: Claude, who died in infancy; Arthur, who farmed and was a farmer dealer of Bardwell, died in this city when he was forty-three years of age. As his second wife Mr. Shelbourne married Jennie Lynne Dennis, who was born at Memphis, Tennessee, May 22, 1861. She died at St. Louis, Missouri, May 25, 1902, having borne her husband the following children: Lillian, who married H. A. Porter, member of the hardware firm of Harlan & Porter & Walker, of Columbus, Tennessee; and Roy M., whose name heads this review. As his third wife M. T. Shelbourne married Mrs. Sallie (Smith) Waggner, born at Blandville, Ballard County, Kentucky. There are no children by this marriage.

Roy M. Shelbourne attended the public schools of Bardwell, including the high school, and then entered Union University of Jackson, Tennessee, from which he was graduated in 1912 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He then entered Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, from which he was graduated in 1913 with the degree of Doctor of Laws. He is a member of the Greek Letter fraternity Kappa Sigma. In 1913 Mr. Shelbourne began the practice of law with his father at Bardwell. A member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he maintains membership with Bardwell Lodge No. 499, A. F. and A. M., and Rosewood Camp No. 38, W. P. W. He is a stockholder in the Bardwell Deposit Bank, owns a modern residence on Elsey Avenue, and has a half interest in the hotel building on Front Street which houses one of the best managed hotels in Western Kentucky.

On October 8, 1898, Mr. Shelbourne was united in marriage with Miss Edith Richardson at Paducah, Kentucky. She is a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Gray) Richardson. Mr. Richardson was proprietor of the Bardwell Hotel and died at Bardwell. His widow succeeded him, and is now conducting the hotel in a thoroughly efficient manner. Mrs. Shelbourne attended McLean College of Hopkinsville, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Shelbourne have two children: Mahlon, who was born September 11, 1915, and Mary Jane, who was born March 10, 1919.

A man with broad vision and a strong sense of civic responsibility, Mr. Shelbourne is giving to the duties of his office the benefit of his skill and knowledge of the law, and is safeguarding the interests of the people of the county. He is a young man of marked ability, and is likely to go far on the road of popular esteem, to judge from present conditions, for his constituents realize that in him they have an able and conscientious representative, and one in whom the utmost trust may be implicitly placed.

Thomas Juett Marshall, M. D. When the history of this century is written by those yet unborn, due credit will be given to the efforts of the physicians and surgeons of this country who labored long and faithfully. American Medicine, at one time, was vested in the hands of a few men, but to bring about a decrease in mortality, and to gain definite control of diseases formerly believed incurable. Among the men who belong to this noble profession in Southwestern Kentucky, Dr. Thomas Juett Marshall ranks in a foremost place in the phalanx of those who accomplish much. His career is one of useful and helpful endeavor, and his name is honored at Bardwell and throughout Carlisle County; in which he is engaged in both professional and civil work.

Doctor Marshall was born at Blandville, Ballard County, Kentucky, August 9, 1883, a son of Jacob Corbett Marshall, and grandson of Charles Sims Marshall, who was born at Lexington, Kentucky, in 1830, and died at Clinton, Kentucky, in 1892, after a long and useful career. The greater part of his life he lived at Paducah, and was one of the early attorneys of that city. As a man of unusual parts, he was elected judge of Ballard County and later circuit judge of the First Judicial District of Kentucky. In politics he was a republican, and consequently his election was a tribute to his personal popularity and an appreciation of his qualifications for these offices, for this region is strongly democratic. Judge Marshall was married to Emily Corbett, who was born in Ballard County, Kentucky, in 1852, and died at Clinton, Kentucky, in 1915. The Marshalls came from England to Virginia during the Colonial epoch of this country.

Jacob Corbett Marshall was born in Ballard County, Kentucky, in 1857, and died at Wickliffe, Kentucky, in 1901. A man of high character, he followed his father's example and studied law, was admitted to the bar, and was engaged in an active practice at Wickliffe for a number of years. He was also interested in farm lands in the vicinity of Wickliffe, and was active along several other lines. He, too, was a republican. The Christian Church held his membership, and to it he gave a strong support, being very generous of his time and money in its behalf. He was a Mason. Jacob Corbett Marshall was united in marriage with Addie Utterback, who was born in Ballard County, Kentucky, and she survives him and resides in her native county. Their children were: Robert D.; J. T., who was the oldest born. Charles Sims, who is a lumber dealer, lives at Meridian, Mississippi; George Utterback, who is a farmer and lives at Wickliffe; Emily, who died at the age of sixteen years; Humphrey, who is connected with the Ford Motor Company, lives at Detroit, Michigan; and Mary, who resides with her mother.

Doctor Marshall was reared at Wickliffe by careful parents, and attended his schools. Early deciding upon a medical career, he went every energy to properly prepare himself for the hard toil before him. Going from the public schools to Blandville College, he took a four years' course, and then spent a year in the State University at Lexington, Kentucky. Following this he entered the Hospital Medical College of Louisville, Kentucky, from which he was graduated in 1906, with the degree of M. D. During the fourth year he entered upon the practice of his profession at Blandville, but two years later came to Bardwell, and has here since remained. He is now associated with Dr. William L. Mosby and Dr. George William Payne, in the Bardwell Clinic. He owns his modern residence on Elm Street. He is a democrat, has been very active in party matters, and has been the successful nominee of his associates for councilman of the City of Bardwell. He has also been president of the Carlisle County Board of Health, and has been health officer of Carlisle County. Raised in the faith of the Christian Church, he has found in it his religious home and has long been a member of it, and is now serving it faithfully as a deacon. As a Mason he maintains membership in Bardwell Lodge No. 493, A. F. and A. M. Professionally he belongs to the Carlisle County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, the Medical Association of the Southwest Kentucky Medical Association.

In 1900 Doctor Marshall was married at Blandville, Kentucky, to Miss Essie Sheets, a daughter of J. C. and Eva (Wyman) Sheets, who reside at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, where Mr. Sheets is a train dispatcher. Doctor and Mrs. Marshall have three children, namely: Thomas Juett, Jr., who was born October 4, 1916; Joseph Corbett, who was born January 25, 1912; and Humphrey, who was born July 30, 1913.

A close student, Doctor Marshall has kept fully abreast of the spirit of the times not only in his profession but along many lines. A man of public spirit, he has always devoted considerable thought to civic problems, and both in a private and public capacity has effected many reforms, especially in sanitary matters. While in the capacity of rector of the Church, he emphasized the importance of installing proper equipment for a pure water supply and sewerage disposal, and has never relaxed his efforts to bring Bardwell up to the highest standards and to maintain all improvements already secured.

As a physician and surgeon Doctor Marshall is skilled and capable. His patients are his friends, and have learned to rely on his judgment, so that he enjoys a beneficent influence. During the late war, as one of the real Americans whose roots reach back into the very beginnings of this country, he took a deep and effective interest in forwarding all of the local activities, and has also been equally useful during the reconstruction period, whose problems have been even more trying than those of war times. It is such men as Doctor Marshall who raise and maintain high standards of citizenship and professional ethics and it would be difficult to find one who is held in higher esteem anywhere than he, or one who is more deserving of the confidence and support of his fellow citizens.

Urey Woodworth Patrick, secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Star Milling Company, Inc., is one of the sound and reliable business men of Clinton, and is a veteran of the great war. Although yet in the very prime of active young manhood, Mr. Patrick has traveled far on the road to success, and is accepted as one of the rising young men of Southwestern Kentucky.

Mr. Patrick was born at Madisonville, Kentucky, August 28, 1866, a son of W. H. Patrick, and grandson of E. W. Patrick, who was born in 1838, and died at Evansville, Indiana, in 1908. By profession he was a physician and surgeon, and he spent the greater part of his life at Evansville. The Patricks were originally from Ireland, but the family was founded in this country long before the American Revolution. The family still owns property in Columbia, Scott County, and is now a resident of Evansville, Indiana. He was reared at Vincennes, Indiana, but after his marriage moved to Evansville. At the time of his marriage he was a traveling salesman for a large drygoods house of St. Louis, Missouri, and while at Princeton, Kentucky, on business, he met Alva Kevil, who was born in that city in 1869, and later they were married. Mr. Patrick then became a partner for the Hercules Buggy Company. He is a member of Saint Paul’s Episcopal Church of Evansville. A Mason in good standing, he has attained to the thirty-second degree in that fraternity. The children born to W. H. Patrick and his wife are two in number: Urey W. and his sister, Caroline. She was graduated from the Evansville High School and Lennox Hall Seminary for young ladies, class of 1919, and is most accomplished and charming.

Urey Woodworth Patrick attended the public schools of Evansville, and was graduated from his high school in 1916. Immediately following that event he came to Mayfield, Kentucky, and was employed in the flour mills of R. U. Kevil & Sons, and there learned the flour milling business from start to finish, remaining there until September, 1917, when he came to Clinton and became secretary and treasurer of the Star Milling Company, Inc.

He was nicely started on his business career when, like the majority of the young men of the country, he cheerfully left it to enter the service of his country in the fall of 1917 as a cadet in the aviation branch, and in January, 1918, went overseas to France. After his arrival abroad he was stationed at Colombey Les Belles in the Nancy Toul sector, and was there until August, 1918, when he was called back to train for flying, and completed this training just before the armistice was signed. On May 10, 1919, he was honorably discharged with the rank of cadet, Aviation Corps. Mr. Patrick returned to Clinton in June, 1919 and upon his arrival he was promoted to general manager of the two offices he was already holding, and he is acting in the three capacities today. This company is incorporated, and its officers are, in addition to Mr. Patrick: J. W. Kevil, of Mayfield, Kentucky, president; and R. W. Kevil, vice president. The mills are located by the Illinois Central Railroad tracks. They have a capacity of two barrels per day.

Reared in the faith of the Episcopal Church, Mr. Patrick is one of its communicants. He belongs to Hickman Lodge No. 131, A. F. and A. M.; Calvert Chapter No. 85, R. A. M.; Fulton Commandery No. 34, K. T.; and Rizpah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Madisonville, Kentucky. He is also a member of Mayfield Lodge No. 395, B. O. E., and also of the American Legion, being vice commander of Clinton Post.

On March 18, 1920, Mr. Patrick was united in marriage with Miss Ida Scott Flegle at Clinton, Kentucky. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Flegle, residents of Memphis, Tennessee, where Mr. Flegle is distributing agent for storage batteries. Mrs. Patrick was graduated from Marvin University at Clinton, Kentucky, and she took a three years’ course in the Conservatory of Music at Cincinnati, Ohio, and is recognized as one of the most talented and skilled musicians of Hickman County, her specialty being instrumental music. Mr. and Mrs. Patrick maintain their residence on West Washington Street and are delightful entertainers, their numerous friends enjoying their hospitality upon many occasions. Mrs. Patrick is the center of a congenial circle of music lovers, and her remarkable talent is a source of great pleasure to those who have the privilege of hearing her exercise it.

Thomas Joseph Stroud, one of the skilled veterinary surgeons of Hickman County, is a valued resident of Clinton. Whether he is walking the streets of Clinton or toing and froing the roads, he makes his headquarters, his practice extending all over the county. Doctor Stroud was born in McCracken County, Kentucky, February 19, 1875, a son of Thomas Stroud, who was born in Tennessee and died in McCracken County in 1876. Thomas Stroud was reared and married in Tennessee, but while still a young man came to McCracken County, Kentucky, where he bought a farm and carried on farming in addition to working at his trade of shoe-making. In politics he was a democrat, but he never aspired to public honors. The Methodist Episcopal Church had in him one of its earnest and devout members. During the war between the North and the South he served as a soldier in the Confederate army. Thomas Stroud was married to Ann Craig, born in Tennessee, and their children were as follows: Henry, who is a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, lives in Oklahoma; Ella, who married R. H. Barclay, a farmer of Hickman County, Kentucky; Emma, who married J. W. Bone, a farmer of Hickman County; J. W., who is also a farmer of Hickman County; and Dr. Thomas Joseph, who was the youngest born. At the time of his death Mr. Stroud was married to John Kell, who survives her and lives on his farm ten miles east of Clinton, she having died in Hickman County in 1906. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Kell were as follows: J. M., who is a farmer of Hickman County; M. R., who is a traveler; O. L., who is a machinist of Detroit, Michigan; and Willie, who died at the age of three years.

Doctor Stroud attended the rural schools of Hickman County, and was reared to be a farmer by his mother, with whom he remained until he was twenty years of age. He then began farming on his own account and was occupied with agricultural matters until 1916. In the meanwhile he studied veterinary surgery and began to practice his profession in 1912, carrying it on in connection with his farming, but by 1919 he grew too heavy for him to divide his interests, and he left the farm, moved to Clinton and since then has given his undivided time to its duties, being now recognized as the leading veterinarian of Hickman County. His offices and livery barns are at 110 North Jefferson Street, and he resides on this same street. In politics he is a democrat.

For several years he has been active in the Bally Lodge No. 361, A. F. and A. M.

In 1888 Doctor Stroud was married in Fulton, Tennessee, to Miss Radie Latham, a daughter of William and Rhoda (Rambo) Latham, both of whom are deceased. For some years prior to his death Mr. Latham was a farmer of Hickman County. Doctor and Mrs. Stroud have one daughter, Vera, who married Claude A. Piller, and they reside east of Clinton, where he is engaged in farming.

Col. George Washington Bain. It is not in Kentucky alone but in practically every state of America that commemoratives and associations are kindled anew in the hearts of thousands of the old and middle-aged at mention of this name of one of Lexington's oldest residents. Colonel Bain forty years ago began traveling and appearing on the popular lecture platform, usually in the role of a pleader in the temperance cause, and he carried his thrilling messages to literally thousands of audience's from coast to coast and from the Rio Grande border to the limits of civilization in Canada.

Colonel Bain was born in the City of Lexington, Kentucky, September 24, 1830. He retired from the lecture platform only very recently, and has the distinction of being the oldest lecturer with the Redpath Company. The President of that company offered to continue Colonel Bain on the active force of lecturers as long as he lives. Colonel Bain is a son of George Washington Bain and Jane E. (West) Bain. His father was born on the eastern coast of Maryland, while his mother was a native of Lexington, Kentucky. The father from Maryland moved with his parents to Virginia, was educated in that state, and when about twenty years of age came to Lexington, Kentucky. He was a merchant tailor, and had a very successful business in Lexington. Later he moved to Moreland in Bourbon County, where he had a general store as well as a tailoring business. He died there in 1860, at the age of forty-three. He was one of the prominent Odd Fellows of Kentucky, having held all the important offices in the order, including grand warden of the Grand Lodge. He was also a leading layman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and in politics he was a democrat. His widow survived him a great many years and died at Lexington at the age of eighty-three. Of the four children, George W. is the only survivor. The oldest was Warren, while the third and fourth were Harvey W. and Frederick.

Col. George Washington Bain was educated in the public schools of Bourbon County, attending school there from 1848 to 1858. His various experiences were those of a farmer and in connection with a dry goods store at Lexington. He early became interested in the temperance movement and the organization of Good Templars, and from 1870 to 1875 served as grand councilor of the Good Templars of Kentucky, and from 1875 to 1880 as grand chief templar. He was also editor of the Good Templar Advocate, and as an organizer he went all over the State of Kentucky and instituted lodges of Good Templars and personally gave the pledge to over 40,000 people in his home state. He was a powerful force in giving strength to the movement, and the local members caused that law to be invoked in a great many Kentucky towns. Forty or fifty years ago, when his work of this nature was at its height, his was a dangerous mission. Again and again his life was threatened, especially in the mountainous district of Eastern Kentucky, and it required all the courage of the militant Christian to carry out the mission Colonel Bain set himself to perform. Beginning in 1875, his services were more and more required for the popular lecture platform, and for a number of years a Lyceum or Chautauqua course was hardly considered complete without George W. Bain being included as a speaker. For twenty-two successive years he lectured in Canada, and he delivered thirty-six lectures on the Ocean Grove platform at Ocean Grove, New Jersey.

Colonel Bain has been a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, since he was fifteen years of age. Politically he has supported parties and candidates that promise the greatest good and efficiency in government.

On August 30, 1860, Colonel Bain married Anna M. Johnson, of Bourbon County. They were happily married more than half a century. She died January 9, 1917. Her father, Jackson Johnson, was a farmer and trader in Bourbon County and widely known as a citizen in that section of the state. Mrs. Bain was fourth in a family of seven children. Five children were born to Colonel and Mrs. Bain: George A., now vice president of the Union Bank & Trust Company of Lexington; John, who is an auctioneer by profession; Edward, who died in infancy; Laura, wife of Dr. H. C. Morrison, president of Asbury College in Kentucky; and Anna, wife of Calvin T. Roszell.

Hon. Fonse Wright. The modern educator has to meet and overcome many obstacles of which those of an older day knew nothing. The enlarging of the curriculum of the public schools, with the demand for the practice of pedagogy, necessitates a long and careful training and constant subsequent study and reading on the part of those to whom is entrusted the training of the plastic mind of youth. Popular demands are often made of men who have had no superiors in history in their various fields of educational labor. Their knowledge of their work and of matters in general is extensive and profound, and at the same time they possess sound judgment and a keen insight into human nature that make it possible for them to arrange for each pupil to receive the individual attention now regarded as so necessary. Among those who have thus distinguished themselves in a broad and comprehensive way is Fonse Wright, superintendent of schools of Pike County.

Mr. Wright was born on Island Creek, near Pikeville, Kentucky, May 26, 1886, a son of Samuel H. and Nannie (Huffman) Wright. The family originated in Wales, whence it came to America at an early date. In this country's history, and was probably established first in Virginia, where was born Samuel Wright, Sr., the great-great-grandfather of Fonse Wright. He was the founder of the family in Kentucky, where he spent the rest of his life in agricultural pursuits, a vocation that was also followed here, by his son, Samuel Wright, Jr. Joel Wright, the grandfather of Fonse Wright, was born in 1858, on a farm in Pike County, Kentucky, when he was more than a school boy when he enlisted in the Thirty-ninth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, for service during the war between the states. During his service, he contracted illness, from which he never fully recovered, and his death occurred in 1888, when he was only forty years of age. During the war period, some members of the family were in the Union service and others in the Confederacy, and the political opinions have also been at variance at times, but the religious faith of the family has been principally that of the Methodist Church.

Samuel H. Wright was born in Pike County, in 1869, and has passed his life in agricultural pursuits. He has been prominent and influential in public affairs, having served six years as master commissioner of the Court Circuit, and at the present time is serving his second term as a member of the State Tax Commission. He is a republican in his political allegiance. Mr. Wright is also well known in fraternal circles, being noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has represented his local lodge in the Grand Lodge of the state, having taken the Grand Lodge degree. Mr. Wright and his wife, who was born in Pike County in 1870, are the parents of the following children: Fonse; Arthur, who is identified with the Consolidation Coal Company, at Jenkins, Kentucky; Bertie, who is the wife of Wilbur White, a railroad locomotive engineer of Fort Pierce.

Mr. Wright is an interested and active member of the Kentucky Educational Association, and a constant and tireless student. During the World war period he gave up much of his time to supporting the various movements inaugurated for the support of our fighting forces, and served as chairman for Pike County of the Committee on Publicity. He made a countless number of speeches in behalf of war work, and many other with rendered unselfish and unceasing service. He has not lost interest in the Red Cross, which continues to profit by his labors.

Mr. Wright was married July 11, 1918, to Miss Grace Hackney, daughter of Henderson Hackney, of Mouthcard, Kentucky, and they are the parents of one daughter: Marian. Mr. and Mrs. Wright are members of the Methodist Church, in which she serves as an official, and Mr. Wright is a Republican, and his fraternal connections are with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Masons, in the latter&M. Wright is the owner of the home farm upon which he was born, but makes his residence at Pikeville, where he has a comfortable and attractive dwelling.

Joe Ely, postmaster of Benton, is one of the best known men in Marshall County, and is very active in the councils of the democratic party. He comes of one of the old families of this region, and is proud of his family and the record it has made among the substantial people of the state.

Benton Ely was the father of Pete Ely, and grandson of W. B. Ely, who was born in Middle Tennessee in 1834, and died at Benton in October, 1879.

When he was a young man W. B. Ely came to the vicinity of Benton, Kentucky, and bought land, which he farmed, and he was not only successful in that calling but also as a saw-mill operator, manufacturing buggies and wagons. He was one of the pioneers in that industry in Marshall County. Taking an active part in local affairs as a democrat, he was elected on his party ticket sheriff of Marshall County, and served ably as such. He belonged to the Masonic fraternity, and in every way measured up to a fine type of manhood. His first wife, who bore the maiden name of Susan Stallings, was born near Benton, Kentucky, was a blacksmith, and Benton was born in 1863, having borne her husband the following children: Joe, who died at Benton at the age of seven years; Pete, who was second in order of birth; Ellen, who died in infancy; and another daughter who also died in infancy. As his second wife W. B. Ely married Miss Ollice Riley, who was born in Kentucky, and she died at Benton. The only one of the children living of this marriage is Mary Elizabeth, who is the widow of Henry Wilson, a mechanic, and lives at Paducah, Kentucky. As his third wife W. B. Ely married Katie Barry, who was born in Kentucky in 1850, and died at Mayfield, Kentucky, in 1915. The only child of this marriage who is living is Willie May, of Paducah, Kentucky, who married Jesse Cooley now deceased.

Pete Ely was born at Benton, Kentucky, September 1, 1855, and he still resides here, having always lived in this locality. He has been active as a stock dealer, but is now retired. As the other members of the family, Mr. Ely is a democrat, and served as jailor for two terms and as sheriff of Marshall County for two terms, being elected to the latter office on the democratic ticket. Fraternally he maintains membership with the Odd Fellows. Pete Ely was married to Mary E. Barnes, born at Benton, Kentucky, in 1862. Their children are as follows: Nina who married Clint Strow, a merchant; Will B., who is connected with the Foreman Automobile Company; and Joe, who is the youngest.

Growing up in his native city, Joe Ely attended its public schools and completed the junior year of the high school. He then took a commercial course at the Bowling Green Business University at Bowling Green, Kentucky, which he completed in 1912. From then until 1916 he was engaged in buying and selling cattle at Benton, but in the latter year was appointed postmaster of Benton and after four years was reappointed in 1920. Brought up in the doctrines of democracy, it was second nature to Joe Ely, to adopt them for his own, and his natural inclinations led him into politics. He belongs to Benton Lodge No. 701, A. F. and A. M.; Benton Chapter No. 167, R. A. M.; and Paducah Commandery No. 11, K. T. He owns a modern residence at Benton, which is one of the finest in the city, and here he and his charming wife welcome their many friends and enjoy a pleasant home life.

Joe Ely has 3 children: Laura and Lula Lovett, daughters born to Miss Lala Lovett, a daughter of John G. and Laura (Frizzell) Lovett, residents of Benton, where Mr. Lovett is in practice as an attorney. Mr. Ely was graduated from the Benton High School, and then attended a young ladies' seminary in Virginia, being a very accomplished and cultured lady. Mr. and Mrs. Ely have a son, John Lovett, who was born July 17, 1917. Under Mr. Ely's capable administration the affairs of the Benton Post Office have been well managed, the volume of business has increased very materially, and he is handling the various problems of his position with dependable efficiency.

John M. Weddle

On the basis of his two terms of efficient service as sheriff, John M. Weddle is undoubtedly one of the most widely and favorably known citizens of Pulaski County. He has a particularly loyal following in the agricultural districts, since he is himself a practical farmer, most of his years when not in public office having been devoted to the tilling of the soil.

John M. Weddle was born on a farm near Waterloo in Pulaski County, March 30, 1856, grandson of John M. Weddle, a native of Virginia and a pioneer in the agricultural districts of Pulaski County, where he lived out his life. Solomon Weddle, father of Sheriff Weddle, was born in Pulaski County in 1822, and from the time of his marriage until his death, in 1889, lived on his farm a mile south of Waterloo. He cultivated a large farm, was extensively engaged in crop raising and other agricultural enterprises; he conducted his private affairs also distinguished him as a citizen. For a number of years he served as magistrate and for eight years was deputy sheriff. In politics he was a republican.

Solomon Weddle married Patsy Tartar, who was born in Pulaski County in 1822, and died on the homestead near Waterloo in 1906. She was the mother of thirteen children: Jeannette, deceased wife of Warner, a blacksmith and farmer near Faulbush in Pulaski County; Galen, who was a Union soldier and a farmer, died in Pulaski County; Mollie, wife of John A. Jasper, a retired farmer at Somerset and also a veteran Union soldier; Elizabeth, wife of Joseph Rainwater, who fought on the Union side during the Civil war and is now a farmer in Texas; Jacob T., formerly a merchant and now a farmer at Somerset; Maggie, of Somerset, widow of Jerome T. Tartar, an attorney; Emely Estian, a farmer in the northern part of Pulaski County; Lucy, living in Russell County, widow of David Cooper, who was a merchant for some years in Pulaski County and later in Russell County; John M., ninth among these children; Helen, wife of C. C. Compton, a farmer in Casey County, Kentucky; Abraham Linson, a farmer in Mississippi; Andrew Johnson, a merchant in Lincoln County, Kentucky; and Doretta, wife of Hannibal Gossner, a farmer in Russell County.

John M. Weddle was reared on the home farm until he was nineteen, attending in the meantime the rural schools and after leaving home farmed independently until 1891. For six years he was store keeper and grocer at Somerset in the internal revenue service, then went back to his farm. In November, 1909, he was first elected sheriff and served a four-year term, beginning in January, 1910. During the next four-year period he looked after his farming interests and in November, 1917, was again a successful candidate for the office of sheriff, and his present term began in January, 1918. He lives on Monticello Street in Somerset, but still owns a well-improved farm of ninety acres, on which he raises his family. He was elected Part of Sheriff Weddle's official term coincided with the war period, and he was active as an official and also as a patriotic citizen in all war movements. He is a republican and is affiliated with the Republican lodges of Kentucky.

In 1879, in Pulaski County, he married Mary Elvira Brown, daughter of Floyd and Hannah (Pennington) Brown. Her mother is still living near Somerset, and her father is a farmer in Pulaski County. Mr. Weddle lost his wife in 1915, after they had been married more than thirty-five years. There are four children. The first two are Achilles and Cornelius, twin brothers, the former a graduate in medicine from the University of Louisville and now practicing his profession in Harland County. Cornelius is a lawyer in Pulaski County. Andrew, the third son, is a farmer at Hazen, Arkansas, and is the wife of Adam Adams, a farmer in Pulaski County.

HUGH EDWARD PRATHER, M. D. Possessing the will and energy to serve, the ability to accomplish, the perseverence to overcome obstacles, an intimate and thorough knowledge of the science and practice of medicine and surgery, there is little wonder that Dr. Hugh Edward Prather, of Hickman, has reached a commanding position among the men of his profession in Southwestern Kentucky.

Doctor Prather was born in Fulton County, Kentucky, on the Prather military grant, May 2, 1858, a son of Dr. Hugh Logan Prather, grandson of Richard Cox Prather and great-grandson of Thomas Prather.

Thomas Prather was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, March 28, 1793, a son of Basil Prather, a soldier under George Rogers Clark in the American Revolution. Thomas Prather served as a soldier in the War of 1812, serving under General Jackson in the battle of New Orleans, Louisiana. He married Elizabeth Cox, born July 19, 1794, in Pohattan County, Virginia, the ceremony taking place in Jefferson County, Kentucky, February 24, 1818. She died in Jefferson County July 21, 1864, and he had passed away in the same locality December 25, 1843.

Richard Cox Prather was born December 25, 1818, in Jefferson County, Kentucky, and died at his home in Fulton County, Kentucky, January 27, 1894. He married, October 27, 1840, at La Grange, Kentucky, Miss Martha Jane Givens, daughter of Alexander and Nancy (Logan) Givens, born January 22, 1829, in Trimble County, Kentucky, and she died in Fulton County, Kentucky, December 29, 1891. Coming to Fulton County in 1849, Richard Cox Prather located on the Prather military grant, which was given to his grandfather, Capt. Basil Prather, for service in the Revolutionary war. For many years he was engaged in farming, and he later became cashier of the old Southern Bank. From 1848 to 1854 he served as sheriff of Fulton County. Although he was otherwise interested at times, he always maintained his residence on the farm.

Dr. Hugh Logan Prather was born on the Prather military grant August 9, 1854, and died at Hickman, Kentucky, of yellow fever during the terrible epidemic, September 27, 1878. His early training was received in his native county, which he left when appointed to a cadetship at the naval academy at Annapolis, Maryland, and he later took a course in the University of Louisville, Kentucky, to secure his medical knowledge, and was graduated therefrom with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. This dissertation had been a year when he was stricken with what was then the scourge of the South, and left a young widow with their only child in Mississippi County, Missouri, where he had located.

On July 11, 1877, Dr. Hugh Logan Prather was married to Miss Mary Lavinia Morrow, who was born September 23, 1855, in Newton County, Missouri, and was graduated from the Female Normal School at Anna. She is a daughter of William Lindsey Morrow, born April 26, 1831, and died May 16, 1874, and Sarah Ann (Glen) Morrow, daughter of Daniel and Mary (Braund) Glenn, born March 20, 1836, in Sumner County, Tennessee, and died April 17, 1900, at Cedar Rapids, Nebraska. Mrs. Prather is a granddaughter of Dr. William Isaac Irvine Morrow, whose mother, Nancy (Hiscock) Doherty) Morrow, was the daughter of Gen. George Doherty of the American Revolution.

Doctor Morrow was born in Jefferson County, Tennessee, November 25, 1802, and died March 4, 1875, at Neosho, Missouri. His educational training was obtained in the Eastern Tennessee University. On June 15, 1826, Doctor Morrow was united in marriage with Lavinia Lee Jarnagin, a granddaughter of Capt. Thomas Jarnagin, who was a member of Harry Lee's celebrated Light Horse Brigade in the Revolutionary war. Doctor Morrow took a medical course at Pennsylvania University at Lexington, Kentucky, during 1829 and 1830. In 1834 he was a member of the convention which framed the constitution of Tennessee. Two years later he was surgeon for the United States army, and in 1838 he came west with the Cherokees in that capacity. During 1843 and 1844 he was a member of the General Assembly of Tennessee, and during 1849-50 he was clerk of the Senate of Tennessee. In 1851 he was appointed by President Fillmore agent for the Quapaw, Seneca, Shawnee and Osage tribes of Indians on the western borders of Missouri. Honors were accorded this distinguished man in his new home, for during 1856 and 1857 he was enrolling clerk of the House of Representatives of Missouri, and he also served for many years as clerk of the Circuit Court and County Court of Newton County, Missouri. His wife, Mrs. Morrow, was born December 30, 1805, and died on March 24, 1886. Her brother, Spencer Jar- nagn, was United States senator from Tennessee from 1844 to 1850. She was a niece of Senator Barton, the first United States senator from Missouri. Both the paternal and maternal grandfathers of Dr. William Isaac Irvine Morrow served in the Revolutionary war.

Dr. Hugh Edward Prather was graduated from the University of Louisville, Kentucky, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and was first honor man of his class. He was interne in the Louisville Hospital, and then became assistant to Dr. Ap Morgan Vance, of Louisville, but following the secession of that asso-
L. K. Hickman. Immediately on leaving school L. K. Hickman went to work acquiring experience and knowledge in mercantile affairs, by a dozen years of faithful service earned a partnership, and for several years past has been a member of the firm Baker & Hickman, whose department store in Madisonville is one of the leading concerns of its kind in Hopkins County.

Mr. Hickman was born on a farm in Hopkins County December 9, 1882. His grandfather, William Harrison Hickman, was a native of Virginia, but in early life came west to Tennessee, and for several years was a farmer and hotel proprietor. He lived at Paris and in Union City, Tennessee, and died at the latter place when thirty-eight years of age from pneumonia. He married a Miss Minnie May Murphey, who died at the home of her son, H. H. Hickman, in Hopkins County, Kentucky. H. H. Hickman was born in Paris, Tennessee, in 1858, lived there until early manhood, and about 1878 moved to Hopkins County, Kentucky, where he married and where for forty years he was a substantial member of the farming community. Since 1895 he has lived on his farm two and one-half miles south of Madisonville, and has been an active worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is a man highly esteemed in his community. He married Miss Cammie Browder, who was born in Hopkins County in 1863. They have two sons, L. K. and Herchel. The latter is an employe of the Victoria Coal Company at Madisonville.

Mr. Hickman has also had other interests, both in a business and political way. He is one of the staunch democrats of Hopkins County, served as city tax commissioner of Madisonville, and is a member of the Steering Committee of the Democratic County Central Committee. For several years he owned a farm, but sold this property in 1916. He is a member of Madisonville Lodge No. 78, of the Elks.

Mr. Hickman, whose home is on Scott Street in Madisonville, married at Mortons Gap in 1898 Miss Lula Edwards, daughter of A. J. and Lizzie (Sisk) Edwards. Her parents now reside at Sturgis, Kentucky, her father being connected with the Western Kentucky Coal Company. Mr. and Mrs. Hickman have one daughter, Helen Morton, born August 25, 1910.

Ernest Newton has been one of the chief business men and citizens of Earlington for the past twenty years, and is the present postmaster of that important business and industrial center of Hopkins County.

Mr. Newton was born in Ohio County, Kentucky, October 12, 1878, of English ancestry. His family first settled in Virginia, and came to Kentucky in pioneer days. His father, Isaac Newton, was also born in Ohio County in 1836, was reared and married in that locality, and was a graduate in medicine from the University of Louisville. He practiced his profession at Buford in Ohio County until 1884, and in that year removed to Clarksville, Arkansas, where he continued his abode work as a physician and surgeon until his death in 1900. He was a Confederate veteran, having served as a surgeon in the Southern Army. He was a very devout Christian, an active member of the Missionary Baptist Church, a democrat and a Mason. Doctor Newton married Jennie Hinchee, who was born near Hartford, Ohio County, Kentucky, in 1854, and...
is now living at Fort Smith, Arkansas. She is the mother of five children: Rosa, wife of C. H. Flynn, in the restaurant business at Fort Smith, Arkansas; Ernest; James H., a locomotive engineer living in Texas; George, a farmer near Fort Smith; and Edwin, salesman in a general store at Fort Smith.

Ernest Newton was about six years of age when taken to Northwestern Arkansas, attended the rural schools of his native county, and graduated in 1896 from the Clarksville High School. The following four years he worked at Webbers Falls in old Indian Territory, first as a ranch hand and later as clerk in a dry goods store. In 1900 Mr. Newton returned to his native state, and for about a year clerked in a store at Owensboro. He has been a resident of Earlington since the spring of 1901. The first eighteen months here he was manager of the grocery store of John M. Stewart, president of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is past chancellor commander of Victoria Lodge No. 84, Knights of Pythias at Earlington, and a member of Eureka Camp No. 25, Woodmen of the World, at Madisonville. Mr. Newton got out and worked and took the lead in securing Earlington's quota in the several campaigns for funds during the war, and spent his own personal resources and credit in the purchase of bonds and war savings stamps. Mr. Newton owns a comfortable home on West Main Street in Earlington.

Mr. Newton was appointed postmaster of Earlington after a competitive examination, and entered upon his official duties for a term of four years February 1, 1910. He also served as city judge of Earlington two years. He is a deacon, is chairman of the board of trustees of St. Bernard School; is a member of the Board of Directors of the First Farmers National Bank. He is a strong supporter of the public schools and has developed a very prosperous business in that line, still owning the shop on West Main Street.

Charles C. Wyatt. While his early life was devoted chiefly to merchandising, for the past seventeen years Charles C. Wyatt has been actively engaged in banking at Mayfield, where he is cashier of the First National Bank, one of the largest and strongest financial institutions in Western Kentucky. He is a native of Graves County, born in 1896, the son of the late J. B. Wyatt, who moved to Graves County from Texas when he was a small child. Charles C. Wyatt is a native of Graves County, born in 1896, the son of the late J. B. Wyatt, who moved to Graves County from Texas when he was a small child. He is a native of Graves County, born in 1896, the son of the late J. B. Wyatt, who moved to Graves County from Texas when he was a small child.

Mr. Wyatt, who is also an extensive farm owner, was born in Graves County March 23, 1879. He comes of a family that was identified with the early Colonial settlement of old Virginia. His grandfather, Harry Wyatt, was a native of that commonwealth, as was his father, Roll Wyatt. Roll Wyatt was born in Virginia in 1834 and came to Kentucky when a young man, as a part of the Democrat Party. He moved to Graves County, where he spent many years successfully engaged in agriculture. He died in Graves County in February, 1917, at the venerable age of ninety-three. He was a stanch democrat, and an active worker in the Christian Church. Roll Wyatt married Nancy Elizabeth Payne, who among her family was always known as 'Jack.' She was born in Christian County in 1853 and died in Graves County in 1884. They had seven children: John H., a farmer; Mary Jane, wife of A. T. Pettus, a farmer of Graves County; and the following children: Fannie, a farmer of Graves County; B. S., well known in the agricultural district of Graves County; J. D. and J. T., both prosperous farmers of this county; and James, a farmer and tobacco broker at Mayfield; and W. D., who operate extensive farms and landed interests at Troy, Texas; G. L., a farmer of Graves County; Roll, Jr., who died when seventeen years of age; and Charles C., the youngest of the family.

Charles C. Wyatt spent his early life on the farm. He attended rural schools, the high school at Sedalia and was a student in a business college at Hornbeak, Tennessee, until 1896. After teaching school in his native county for a year he became associated with his brother-in-law, J. R. Usher, in the mercantile business at Sedalia. He remained there until he sold out six years later, and at the time of the organization of the Farmers National Bank of Mayfield in 1903 accepted the post of cashier. In March, 1909, the Farmers National Bank and the First National Bank was combined, and Mr. Wyatt continued as cashier of the consolidated institution, known as the First National Bank, this bank has a capital of $150,000, surplus and profits of $200,000, while its deposits aggregate $1,000,000. Of the other officers some account is made on other pages. They are Ed Gardner, president, and N. A. Hale, vice president.

Charles C. Wyatt is almost the only member of his family who has found business dominating his agricultural interests, though he has always been associated with real estate and management, a part time is owner of five complete farms in Graves County. He is also president of the Hinkle Capsule Company of Mayfield and the Mayfield Home Telephone Company. He owns one of the three buildings on the Public Square and a modern home on South Seventh Street.

Mr. Wyatt is now serving in his second four-year term as county treasurer of Graves County. His term of office expires in May, 1922. He has long been prominent in democratic politics, serving as secretary of the Democratic County Central Committee eight years and as chairman two years. He is a deacon of the First Christian Church, treasurer of the Missionary Board, and has served as superintendent of the Sunday School. Fraternally he is affiliated with Mayfield Lodge No. 679, A. F. and A. M., and Mayfield Lodge No. 150, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is a past grand.

On December 17, 1902, in Graves County, he married Miss Mary Wilson, a member of an old and prominent agricultural family of that section. Her father, the late G. M. Wilson, gave his life to farming in Graves County. Her mother now lives with Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt: Tightsman, born October 13, 1904, in the second year of the Mayfield High School; Georgia May, born in April, 1911; and Charles, Jr., born in February, 1913.

Wallis B. Taylor. Honored by his fellow citizens in election to public office for a longer period than any other man now at the courthouse of Pike County, Hon. Wallis B. Taylor is capably discharging the duties of circuit clerk, and enjoying the full confidence of all with whom he comes in contact. He is one of the old and honored families of this region, and his relatives have been connected with much of the constructive citizenship of Pike County. He was born in a log house on the Rock House fork of Big Creek, in Pike County, August 4, 1868, a son of Kelsey and Mary (Collinsworth) Taylor, whose useful lives were spent in Pike County, where he died, January 6, 1901, when sixty-six years old in the September of his eighty-third year.

The Taylor family originated in Virginia, from whence Allen Taylor, grandfather of Wallis B. Taylor, migrated prior to the birth of his son, Kelsey. He lived to the unusual age of ninety-three years, passing away in 1900, having passed the greater part of his life in this vicinity. He and his sons were all farmers and large landowners. Kelsey Taylor became a man of large means and developed into one of the largest stockraisers of the county. He, like his father and brothers, was very law-abiding, holding the laws of his country and community in great respect and honoring them by strict observance. All of the family belonged to the Regular Baptist denomination.

Kelsey Taylor and his wife became the parents of six children, namely: James M., who is engaged in farming near Ashland in Boyd County, Kentucky; Joseph A., who is a farmer of Pike County, lives near the mouth of Coon Creek; Mina Jane, who married Allen Cassidy of Martin County, Kentucky, died at the age of fifty-three years; Wallis B., who was the youngest, and two others who died young.

Wallis B. Taylor attended the common school taught by Mr. Kendrick, of whom mention is found on other pages of this work. Completing his school days in 1889 Mr. Taylor began to be self-supporting by working in the timber woods, and, forming a partnership with W. S. Littrell and J. F. Pauley, was engaged in the lumber business for four years. These partners had saw mills, but also floated timber out on the Big Sandy, to the Ohio River to the extent of millions of feet of logs. He worked very hard and prospered, being in all in this line of endeavor for twenty years.

In 1906 Mr. Taylor received the republican nomination for county clerk, and was elected. After his first term in office he was again the successful candidate of his party for the same office, and then was placed in the office of circuit clerk, the highest of his party, which office he still holds. His long occupancy of an official position at the courthouse makes him the dean of all of the incumbents. During the late war he rendered a very efficient service as food official.

In 1892 Mr. Taylor was united in marriage with Miss Harriet Stepp, a daughter of Aaron Stepp, M. P., of Pike County. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor have one son, Kelsey, who was born in Pike County, October 20, 1894. He was graduated from Pikeville College, and is now one of his father's deputies. During the war he served for eleven months in France, and participated in some of the most important of the battles, but was fortunate enough to be uninjured after making a very creditable record as a soldier. He is a Master Mason. In politics he is a republican, and has long been one of the leaders in his party in Pike County. A man of reliable character, steadfast and honorable, he has ably discharged every obligation of life, and won the approval of all with whom he has been associated.

C. E. Graham, a native son of Green County, Kentucky, is a young man whose career has been varied in its activities, and he has developed in his native county a large and substantial real-estate and insurance business, his agency being one of the most important of the kind in this county and his office headquarters being maintained in the Wilson Building at Greensburg, the county seat. Mr. Graham is a scion of a family whose name has been worthily linked with the history of Green County since the early pioneer days, his grandfather, Joseph Graham, having been born in this county in 1820 and having here passed his entire life. Joseph Graham was here successfully associated with farm industry during his entire active career, and here he died occurred in the year 1895. His father was born in Virginia, a representative of a family, of German origin, that was founded in the Old Dominion Commonwealth in the Colonial period of American history, and he it was who became the pioneer settler in Green County, Kentucky, where he reclaimed a farm and where he continued to reside until the close of his long and useful life.

C. E. Graham was born on a farm in the Brush Creek district of Green County, July 24, 1889, and is a son of Judge Elliott Graham and Namie (Marcum) Graham, both likewise natives of the Brush Creek neighborhood of Green County, where the former was born in 1853 and the latter in 1866. After their marriage the parents established their residence on their present homestead farm twelve miles west of Greensburg, where their children were born and where they have resided continuously save for the period from 1901 to 1913, during which they maintained their home at Greensburg. Judge Graham having been county judge during this interval and his service in this important office having been for three consecutive terms, of four years each. He has one of the large and well-improved farm estates of his native county west of Greensburg.

In 1889, the eldest of their children, is one of the prosperous farmers of the Brush Creek section of his native county; Lee is proprietor of a hotel at Campbellsville, Taylor County; Minnie is the wife of R. L. Cantrell, a farmer on Brush Creek; C. E., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Grover is successfully engaged in the poultry business at Denton, Texas; Mollie is the wife of Professor Leslie Miller, who resides at the junction of Green and South Dakota; Lura is the wife of Ezra Gumm, a farmer near Summersville, Green Country; and James and Coy remain at the parental home, where their assistance is given in the operations of the extensive farm.

As a boy C. E. Graham began to lend his aid in the work of the home farm, and his early scholastic advantages were those of the rural schools of the county. He returned to the parental home until he had attained to the age of sixteen years, when he became a locomotive fireman on the Big Four Railroad. After having been thus employed one year he went to Springfield, the capital of Illinois, near which city he was employed at farm work until he had attained to his legal majority. He then returned to his native county and spent a considerable amount of time on the farm. He now resides at Greensburg. He has been associated with railroad work, as a brakeman in the service of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, but after six months he so injured his right arm when engaged in coupling cars that the amputation of the arm was imperative. This physical handicap did not discourage him, but tended to increase his resourcefulness, as shown by the fact that over E. Wilson, the republican candidate. Mr. Graham and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, as was also his first wife, and his fraternal affiliations are here briefly noted: Greensburg Lodge No. 54, Free and Accepted Masons; Greensburg Chapter No. 36, Royal Arch Masons; Marion Commandery No. 24, Knights Templars, at Lebanon; and Greensburg Camp No. 360, Woodmen of the World. His home is an attractive home property on North Cross Street. The loss of his arm made Mr. Graham ineligible for military service in the World war, but he showed his patriotism through loyal support of the various war activities in his native county, throughout which he made spirited speeches in the drives for the sale of the various issues of Government war securities, besides making personal subscriptions to the limit of his means.

In the city of Louisville, in December, 1912, Mr. Graham wedded Miss Catherine Hatcher, whose parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Hatcher, are both deceased, the father having been a successful farmer in Taylor County, Kentucky. Mrs. Graham passed to the life eternal on the 1st of June, 1916, and is survived by one son, Garrett Davis, who was born July 3, 1914.

In December, 1918, was solemnized, in the City of Louisville, the marriage of Mr. Graham to Miss Pearl Thompson, who likewise was born and reared in Green County, where her parents, Joseph B. and Mollie (O'Banion) Thompson, still reside on their fine farm on Little Byron Road. Mr. and Mrs. Graham have one son, C. E., Jr., born February 14, 1921, in whose pleasant home is known for its generous hospitality.

John W. Crenshaw, M. D. To assure authority and consistent comprehensiveness in the various family reviews appearing in this work, it has been found not only consistent but also imperative to avoid repetition of family data in all personal sketches. Thus, in connection with Dr. Crenshaw’s career reference may readily be made to the adequate family history found on other pages, in the personal sketch of his older brother, Judge Robert Crenshaw, of Cadiz.

Dr. Crenshaw, who has long been established in active practice at Cadiz, as one of the representative physicians and surgeons of Trigg County, is a scion of one of the old and honored families of this county. John Walden Crenshaw was born in the Casey Creek precinct of Trigg County, on the 24th of September, 1849, and his preliminary education was received in the rural schools, this being supplemented by his attending the Oak Hill Seminary, in Christian County, where he was a student when the late Rev. George P. Street, a clergyman of the Christian Church, was the executive head of the institution. While attending the seminary he also gave earnest attention to the study of medicine, under the preceptorship of Dr. William McReynolds, and later he entered the celebrated old Jefferson Medical College, in the City of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in the autumn of 1870, where he was graduated as a member of the Class of 1870. The doctor has been consistent in keeping at all times abreast of the advances made in medical and surgical science and has conserved this purpose materially by postgraduate courses in the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City, and in the Chicago Polyclinic, where he specialized in the study and treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. On the 1st of May, 1870, shortly after receiving his well-earned degree of Doctor of Medicine, Doctor Crenshaw engaged in practice at Hopkinsville, Christian County, but on the first of the following January he returned to his native county and established his residence and professional headquarters at Cadiz, the county seat. Here he has continued in active and successful general practice during the intervening period of nearly half a century, and his high standing as a physician and surgeon attests alike his professional ability and his unswerving war-like devotion to his profession. He is to-day, in point of years of continuous practice, the dean of the medical profession in Trigg County, and he maintains his offices in a building opposite the court house, on Main Street, this business building being owned by him. It is needless to say that Doctor Crenshaw controls a large and representative practice and that he is held in affectionate esteem in the many family homes in which he has ministered with all the care and interest that solicitude. He has been for the past twenty years chairman of the Board of Health of Trigg County, and he holds membership in the American Medical Association, the Kentucky State Medical Society, and the Trigg County Medical Society. He was a member of the Trigg County examining Board at the time when young men were here drafted for service in the World war, and he was otherwise active and influential in the support of war activities in his home county. In politics the doctor classifies himself as an independent democrat, and he has taken loyal interest in community affairs and in furthering the civic and material advancement and prosperity of his home county. He has served as president of the Municipal Board of Trustees of Cadiz, and as a citizen he has given his influence and support to enterprises that have been of marked benefit to the community.

He is the owner of valuable real estate in Cadiz, including his beautiful residence property and the building in which his office is established, as previously noted. In 1891 Doctor Crenshaw became associated with his brother-in-law, E. R. Street, in the organization of the Trigg County Farmers Bank. He served as president of this private banking institution, and Mr. Street as its cashier, until it was consolidated with the Bank of Cadiz, in 1900, the title of the Trigg County Farmers Bank being retained in the consolidation. At the time of this merger Doctor Crenshaw resigned the position of president, but he continued a member of the Board of Directors of the institution until 1910, when he sold his interest in the bank in association with his son, John S., and others, the doctor obtained the charter for the Peoples Bank of Cadiz, but this charter was later surrendered, when a consolidation was effected with a new institution, the Cadiz Bank, which took possession of the People’s Bank Building on Main Street, opposite the court house. Doctor Crenshaw and his son retain stock in the Cadiz bank.

Doctor Crenshaw and his wife are zealous and influential members of the Christian Church at Cadiz, in which he is serving as an elder. He was for seventeen years president of the South Kentucky Sunday-School and Missionary Association of the Christian Church.

September 23, 1873, recorded the marriage of Doctor Crenshaw to Miss Julia Street, daughter of the late John L. and Mary (Roberts) Street, the father having long been engaged in business as one of the leading merchants of Cadiz. Mrs. Crenshaw, a popular figure in the representative social life of Cadiz, is a graduate of the South Kentucky College, at Hopkinsville, Christian County. Doctor and Mrs. Crenshaw became the parents of eight children, two of whom died in infancy; John S., who resides at Cadiz, will be more specifically mentioned in a later paragraph; Miss Mary S. remains at the parental home and is a talented teacher of instrumental music; Berta S. is the wife of A. P. White, manager of the Cadiz Milling Company; George W. of Cadiz at the present time; the wife of Rev. George H. C. Stoney, a clergyman of the Christian Church and also a representative business man at Winston-Salem, North Carolina; and Miss Gertrude remains at the parental home.

John S. Crenshaw was for several years cashier of the Trigg County Farmers Bank and is one of the most progressive and influential citizens of that city at the present time. He is president of the Williams Coal Company, of Christian County; is national treasurer of the Farm Bureau Federation and treasurer of the Kentucky Farm Bureau Federation; and at the time of the World war he was most active and influential in the furtherance of governmental agencies in support of war activities. He is an able public speaker, and as such his services were much in demand in the campaigns for local and state district and support of the government war loans. He and his wife were, and still remain, at the head of the Red Cross Chapter in Christian County, his wife having been before her marriage Miss Goldie Rice, of Louisville. Mr. Crenshaw is an enthusiastic and potent factor in the work of the American Farm Bureau Federation, of which he is treasurer, and in a recent interview he gave voice to the following well taken sentiments: "The Kentucky Farm Bureau stands for the elimination of politics from the control of educational affairs. The farmer boy and girl of Kentucky are entitled to the best mental training it is possible to secure. The question for years past has been, how can this be accomplished? Now the solution is presented in the new educational law. This law endorses unqualifiedly the law creating the new county boards of education, and will wholeheartedly give its aid in any county asking for assistance in advising the people of the great opportunity it offers, for happier homes, for more prosperity, for the greater service, and for the bigger living. The lives of people can not be greater than their ability to live, and their ability to live is measured by their knowledge of life. If we are saved to serve, and born into the world to render ser-service, to make the world a better place because of our having lived in it, then we must look to the public schools for preparation for life; for the intellect of a people will never rise higher than its public schools."

TOMAS MELCY RADCLIFFE, M.D. Like all other sections of Kentucky, Livingston County has located in its midst a number of skilled and dependable physicians whose lives are spent in ministering to the sick and constructive working for the prevention of disease. These men of medicine are worthy citizens of their great state, and fully entitled to the prestige which they enjoy. One of them who is making a specially enviable record is Dr.
E. Radcliffe, grandson of Thomas Radcliffe, and a member of one of the old and aristocratic families of the South, the Radcliffes having come to the American Colonies from England and settled in North Carolina many generations ago.

Thomas Radcliffe was born in North Carolina in 1828, and is a native of Lola, Kentucky. He moved into Kentucky in 1857, and was engaged in farming in the vicinity of Lola. He was married to Laura Church, who also died in Livingston County.

M. E. Radcliffe was born in Lyon County, Kentucky, in 1859, and is now a resident of Lola, Kentucky. He has been a physician of Lyon County, but at that time came to Livingston County, and has been there since the remainder of his life. For many years he was very profitably engaged in farming upon an extensive scale in the vicinity of Hampton, but is now retired. In his political views he has always maintained an independent attitude. The Methodist Episcopal Church holds his membership, and has on one of his most earnest and generous supporters. He is a man who carries his religion into his everyday life. M. E. Radcliffe was married to Maggie D. Hunter, who was born at Hampton, Kentucky, in 1853, and they became the parents of the following children: Doctor Radcliffe, who is the eldest; Bertha, who married Alexander Workman, lives near Lola, where he is engaged in farming; Wilder, who was engaged in farming in the vicinity of Lola; and Orville H., who is an oil operator of Tulsa, Oklahoma.

Doctor Radcliffe attended the rural schools of Livingston County, Kentucky, and later took his medical course in the University of Louisville, from which he was graduated in 1904, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Immediately thereafter he began the practice of his profession at Lola, Kentucky, but within four months moved to Tilinie, where he has since remained, and here he has built up a very desirable connection in the general medical and surgical practice for which he is so well fitted. His offices are located on Main Street. In politics he is a democrat, and he is now serving as health officer of Livingston County. During the late war Doctor Radcliffe took an active part in all of the Knott, Kentucky, in 1834, and died in that county in 1876, having borne her husband two children, namely: R. Lee; and Burt. The latter has been a clerk in the post office at Lawton, Oklahoma since 1905.

R. Lee Stewart attended the rural schools of Floyd, Letcher and Knott counties, Kentucky, and then, during 1861 and 1862, was student of the Kentucky State University.

For six terms he was engaged in teaching school in Knott County, and then during 1866 and 1867 was enrolling clerk of the General Assembly. Mr. Stewart then attended law school at Danville, Indiana, and was graduated from the Central Normal College there in 1868, with the degree of Bachelor of Law. From January 1, 1900 until December 1 of that year he was storekeeper and gauger of Internal Revenue at the town of Hazard, Kentucky, and from the latter date until July 1, 1905, was deputy collector of Internal Revenue.

On July 1, 1905, he was again made storekeeper and gauger and so continued until the fall of 1906, when he went to Oklahoma and was in the vicinity of Lawton until the fall of 1908, having gone there on account of ill health.

Returning to Hindman, Kentucky, he was made general storekeeper and gauger, and had charge of ten counties for the Internal Revenue department during 1910 and 1911, at which time he became private secretary to Congressman John W. Langley of the Tenth Congressional District and spent some time in Washington. During 1912 and 1913 Mr. Stewart was deputy United States marshal, with headquarters at Jackson, Kentucky, although he still maintained his residence at Hindman. Resigning from office, Mr. Stewart then was a representative in the Illinois legislature, representing first Swift & Company of Chicago, then the Overbaeker Coffee Company of Louisville, and finally the Emmons-Hawkins Hardware Company of Huntington, West Virginia. He left the road when he was elected to the General Assembly in November, 1919, as a representative of the Nineteenth Legislative District comprising Knott and Magoffin counties.

While serving, he was chairman of the Redistricting Committee, and a member of the Rules, Circuits, Criminal Law, Charitable Institutions, Mining and Mining and State University committees, and was connected with some of the most important legislation of that session. On March 23, 1920, Mr. Stewart was appointed clerk in the office of the Secretary of State, and was further honored by being appointed Assistant Secretary of State May 1, 1920, and assumed the duties of the office May 17th, retaining the office until March 1, 1925. In the latter year Mr. Stewart lives at No. 612 Shelby Street, but maintains his legal residence at Hindman.

He is a republican and has been elected to office on his party ticket. In 1899 he was a candidate for the State Assembly from the Nineteenth District, but was defeated in a strongly democratic community and was again the nominee of his party for the same office from the same district, and once more met with defeat from the same cause, in 1911.

Well known in fraternal matters Mr. Stewart belongs to Hindman Lodge No. 689, A. F. & A. M., of which he is past master; Hindman Lodge No. 163, I. O. O. F., of which he is past grand; Hindman Camp No. 43, K. O. T. M., in which he has passed all of the chairs; and Rhoda May Council No. 164, Junior Order, United American Mechanics, Jackson, Kentucky. He owns a modern home in Hindman, which is a comfortable one and a farm in Knott County.

On December 23, 1901, Mr. Stewart was married at Hindman, Kentucky, to Miss Lucinda Everade, a daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Tate) Everade. Mr. Everade died at Hindman in 1890, after a life spent in agricultural activity, but his widow survives and makes her home at Hindman. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart have two children, namely: Mary, who was born November 12, 1900; and Mattie, who was born February 12, 1916.

In every office Mr. Stewart has held he has shown a conscientious conception of his duties and a willingness to exert himself which have gained added honors for him. While he considers Hindman his home city, he is deeply interested in Frankfort, as are all good Kentuckians, and having spent considerable time in the capital city, understands its needs, and recognizes its agrarian character men should be bound to travel far from the road which leads to political distinction, and his journey is in no way completed.

James D. McClintock has been a resident of Paris, the judicial center of Bourbon County, from the time of his birth, is a representative of an old and honored family of this section of the Blue Grass state, and in the varied relations of life he has well upheld the prescriptive advantages of the Old South. He was engaged in the general insurance business in his native city and his agency receives a large and substantial supporting patronage.

James Davis McClintock was born at Paris on the 29th of August, 1855, and is a son of James and Margaret G. (Todd) McClintock. The father was born in Bourbon County in the year 1812, and he was eighty-five years of age at the time of his death in 1898. The father of James McClintock was remembered among the early settlers of Bourbon County, where he developed a productive farm and where he continued to reside until his death. James McClintock was reared to the sturdy discipline of the home farm, and in early manhood he continued his active association with agricultural industry. For the long period of sixty-five years he was engaged in the general merchandise business at Paris, and for twenty years of that time he was senior member of the firm of McClintock & Davis, the junior member of the firm having been his nephew, J. T. Davis. After the death of his honored coadjutor in this representative business establishment Mr. Davis closed out the business, and from that time forward he lived virtually retired at Paris until his death, when nearly eighty-four years of age. The old store building of the firm, on Main Street, was for several years in the hands of James McClintock, and here the firm of McClintock & Davis long conducted a large and prosperous business. James McClintock was a man of fine mind and noble character, he was loyal and liberal as a citizen, with a high sense of personal stewardship, and he was generous and considerate in his association with his fellowmen. He was a zealous and devoted member of the Presbyterian Church, as was also his wife, and in the same he served in turn as deacon and elder. His life was the very model for such men as he, and he was the ideal of his home life, and he did all in his power to promote the contentment and happiness of his family, his devoted wife having been eighty-three years of age at the time of her death. Of their seven children one died in early childhood, and the other six were all present at the funeral of the father. Elizabeth, the eldest of the children, became the wife of Joseph Croxton, and is now deceased. John J., was for thirty-six years a cashier at the Agricultural Bank at Paris, a position which he retained until the consolidation of the institution with the Bourbon Bank, when he resigned and effected the organization of the Farmers & Traders Bank, of which he served as cashier until failing health compelled his retirement, about one year prior to his death, which occurred in 1919. He was for twenty years a deacon and also the treasurer of the Christian Church of Paris and was a citizen of prominence and influence in the community. His only child, Belle Palmer, died when about twenty years of age. Laura Bell, the second daughter of James and Margaret G. (Todd) McClintock, is deceased, she having been the wife of George W. Judy, an ex-deputy sheriff of Bourbon County and now a member of the police department of Paris. William L. was for many years a gauger in the internal revenue service, and was a stockholder in the Agricultural Bank of Paris, in which he served for a number of years as clerk. He became a zealous communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church and was a member of the vestry of the church at Paris for a number of years prior to his death. Margaret is the wife of Archibald Paxton, who is engaged in the mercantile business at Paris.

James D. McClintock acquired his youthful education in the schools of his native city and was a lad of fifteen years when he began to assist in the service in his father's mercantile establishment, with which he continued his active association thirty-two years—until the death of his honored father. For the major part of this long period he had the active management of the business. He now conducts a well ordered and successful retail and wholesale business, and Dr. Meshew, whose high standing in the community sets at naught any application of the scriptural aphorism that "a prophet is not without honor save in his own country." For thirty years Mr. McClintock has been the local agent for the Cincinnati Enquirer, a paper that has a substantial circulation in Bourbon County.

The year 1860 recorded the marriage of Mr. McClintock to Miss Margaret Rogers, daughter of Warren and Louise Rogers, of Scott County, where her father was a representative farmer. Mr. and Mrs. McClintock have one daughter, Rachel, who is attending the public schools of Paris at the time of this writing, in 1920. Mr. McClintock is an earnest member of the First Presbyterian Church of Paris, and he is serving as an elder in the same.

Joshua W. Meshew, M. D. Distinguished not only because he is the oldest practicing physician of Barlow, but also on account of his experience, skill and kindly sympathy, Dr. Joshua W. Meshew is one of the leading men of his profession in Ballard County. In addition to carrying on his large practice, Doctor Meshew is connected with a number of the interests of his community, and is relied upon as one of its most spiritualized citizens.

Doctor Meshew was born at Lovelaceville, Ballard County, Kentucky, September 1, 1803, a son of James N. Mesheh and grandson of Benjamin Mesheh, a native of France. Coming to the United States in young manhood, Benjamin Mesheh located in Hickman County, Kentucky where he became a prosperous farmer, and where he died in 1813. He married Martha D. Swain, and she, too, passed away in Hickman County.

James N. Mesheh was born May 15, 1844, in Hickman County, Kentucky, and he died in Marshall County, Kentucky, in 1875. Reared and educated in Hickman County, he became a physician and surgeon, and after his marriage he moved to Ballard County, Kentucky, where all of his children were born. There he continued to reside until 1874, when he went to Marshall County, Kentucky, but his death occurred a year later. In politics he was a democrat. The Baptist Church held his membership, and he lived up to its highest ideals and took an active part in the councils of his denomination. He was a Mason. During the war between the North and South he served under General Forrest, and was in the battle of Guntown, where his brother Charles was killed. Dr. J. N. Mesheh was married to Martha Elizabeth White, who survives him and lives with her son, Doctor Mesheh. She was born in October, 1845, in Ballard County, Kentucky, and she and her husband had the following children: Doctor Mesheh, who was the oldest; Francis M., who died at Fulton, Kentucky, in 1887, was a teacher in the public schools although only twenty-one years old at the time of his demise; Charles A., who lives at Barlow, is superintendent of the water plant of Barlow; Ben C., who is employed in a factory at Muncie, Indiana; Mary S., who married a Mr. Wilson, of Akron, Ohio, associated with the Goodyear Rubber Company of that city; and Jimmie Newton, who died in infancy.

Doctor Mesheh attended the rural schools of Ballard County, and for two years was engaged in teaching school in his native county, and for two years more taught in McCracken County. He then entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, Kentucky, September 23, 1866, and was graduated therefrom March 1, 1880, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Immediately thereafter he established himself in a general practice at Barlow, where he has since remained, building up a connection which is very valuable. He owns a modern residence and offices at the corner of Main and Maple streets, which is one of the finest in the city, and Dr. Mesheh owns a large farm in this city, as well as two farms north of Barlow, comprising 142 acres. He erected and owns the water plant of Barlow, which he completed in 1905, is a stockholder and director of the Bank of Barlow, which he helped to organize, and served it as president for twelve years. Like his father, he is a democrat, and he is now serving as a member of the county Board of Health. He belongs to the Ballard County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, the American Medical Association and the Southwestern Kentucky Medical Association. Well known as a Mason, he belongs to Hazelwood Lodge No. 489, A. F. and A. M., of Barlow, which he served as worshipful master from 1900 to 1901; to Hesperian Chapter No. 74, R. A. M., and to the Encampment. During the Civil War this country participated in the great war, Doctor Mesheh was very active in local war work, and served for a time as food commissioner of Ballard County.

On March 6, 1890, he was united in marriage with Miss Mattie Hinkle at the home of her parents, George and Tina (Clampet) Hinkle, who were then residing near Hinkleville, Kentucky, but who are now deceased, he passing away in 1905. Mr. Hinkle was one of the early settlers of that locality, where he engaged in farming, and Hinkleville was named in honor of his brother, Charles Hinkle. Doctor and Mrs. Mesheh became the parents of the following children: Hinkle, who was born in 1891, died at the age of four months; Opal, who was born in 1892, died at the age of one year; Stella, who was born in 1894, died in infancy; Gladys, who was born in 1896, married Clayborne Finch, principal of the Kenton High School, lives at Kenton, Tennessee; Joshua W., Jr., who was born in 1898, is in the employ of the Goodyear Rubber Company and resides at Akron, Ohio; Merle, who was born in 1900, married Dewey Girard, a saw-mill operator and lumber dealer, and lives at Lovelaceville, Kentucky; George, who was born in 1907, is the seventh in order of birth; and Frank, who was born in October, 1911, is the youngest.

Doctor Mesheh is a man who holds his friends in good account and likes to have them about him. He has great mental resourcefulness, and has accomplished surprising achievements, not only in his calling but in other lines. Always holding the good of his community at heart, he has generously worked for it, and has found at Barlow his inspiration and congenial surroundings, which have aided him in his life work. He is a man of personal charm, culture and wide intellectual interests, and his fellow citizens are very proud of him and the principles for which he has always stood.

George Washington Plimell, M. D. A Union soldier during the Civil war, a graduate in medicine at Cincinnati some years after that struggle, Doctor Plimell has been in practice in the interesting rural and mountainous section of Eastern Kentucky at Science Hill for the past thirty-five years, and both in his profession and as a citizen he ranks as one of the foremost men of influence in that locality.

Doctor Plimell was born on a farm in Madison County, Ohio, September 14, 1839. His grandfather, John Plimell, was a Virginian, born in 1761, and in 1818 moved to Madison County, Ohio, where he lived out his life as a farmer and where he died in 1845. His son, John Plimell, was born in Virginia in 1806, was a young man when he moved to Ohio, and in 1818 became a resident of Madison County for nearly sixty years. He owned a large tract of land, was successfully engaged in farming and stock raising, and was also a leader in community affairs, serving as township commissioner, was a democrat and Methodist. John Plimell, who died in Madison County in 1877, married Winnie Lewis, who was born in Virginia in 1808 and died in Madison County in 1872. His children, in order of birth, were:

- William Lewis, a farmer who died in Madison County at the age of twenty-three; James, a farmer who died in the same county when eighty-two years of age; Elizabeth, who died at the age of seventy, wife of Isaac Canada, a farmer who also died in Madison County; Martha, who died aged sixty-two, wife of John Ayle, a farmer in Madison County; Abram, who died when nine years old; John T., who became a physician and surgeon and died in California at the age of eighty-two; Winnie S., who lived to be seventy, was the wife of Carleton Gregg, a trader and farmer who died in Madison County; and George Washington Plimell, the eighth and youngest of the family.

Doctor Plimell, who has passed the age of fourscore, acquired his early education in country schools while living on his father's farm in Madison County. September 5, 1861, he enlisted and was mustered in September 10th in the Fortieth Ohio Infantry. He served three years until the fall of 1864, and in the meantime participated in the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, being with the Army of the Cumberland. At Lookout Mountain a spent ball wounded him in the right breast and the wound subsequently became infected and caused much suffering, so that after the battle of Rocky Face Gap, during the campaign of Northern Georgia, he became disabled and was mustered out October 13, 1864, at Pine Top Mountain. Returning home he taught school in Madison County three years, studied medicine privately, and in the spring of 1877 received his M. D. degree from the Eclectic Medical Institute at Cincinnati. For nine years he was county physician of Union County, Ohio. Then on account of ill health he decided to seek the advantages of the mountain regions of Kentucky, and in April, 1886, moved to Science Hill, a community that has known and esteemed him for thirty-five years. All this time he has enjoyed a very successful medical and surgical practice and he made a living from his profession at the very beginning, owing to the fact that a number of families from his section of Ohio had preceded him to this Kentucky locality. In earlier years Doctor Plimell, like most old time physicians, compounded his own medicines in the absence of a drug store or apothecary, and carried his stock of medicines about with him when he rode or drove over the country. Doctor Plimell owns his office building and a modern home at the corner of Main and Avenue E. He has taken much interest and worked himself in numerous activities that are vitally associated with the welfare of the community. He helped organize the Peoples Bank of Science Hill in 1906, and is its vice president. He has served as local health officer and for several terms was a member of the town board. He votes independently, is a trustee of the Methodist Church, is affiliated with the Mount Union Lodge No. 258, A. F. and A. M., at London, Ohio; a member of the Modern Woodmen of America; and is affiliated with the State Medical Association. He gave generously of his means and influence to all war causes.

In 1868, at Tradersville, Ohio, Doctor Plimell married Louisa E. Lee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Enoch Lee, deceased. Her father was a farmer in Madison County, Ohio. After they had been married nearly fifty years Mrs. Plimell died of heart trouble suddenly in 1916. She is survived by one daughter, at home with her father, Clara G., wife of Edward Webb, postmaster of Science Hill.

William Henry Dunbar is one of the capable county officials of Caldwell County, and a widely and well known citizen of that section of the state, where he has lived all his life and where his people have been closely identified with the most substantial affairs of the community for several generations.

He was born near Princeton, Kentucky, in 1888. His grandfather, William Dunbar, was of Irish ancestry, and gave a good account of his life as one of the practical farmers of Caldwell County. He died before the birth of William Henry Dunbar on the old Dunbar farm, ten miles north of Princeton. George W. Dunbar, his son, was born in Caldwell County in 1862 and likewise gave the devotion of his years, strength and abilities to farming and the responsibilities of private citizenship. He died on his farm in 1905. He was a republican and a very persistent worker in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He married Miss Johnnie Cash, who was born near Dunlap in Caldwell County in 1868 and is now living on the old homestead ten miles north of Princeton. William Henry is her oldest child; Miss Maggie lives at Paducah; Ola married a horse, a farmer near Liberty, Kentucky; Bessie, Nellie and Pyron all live at the home farm with their mother.

William Henry Dunbar made the best possible use of his advantages in the rural schools of Caldwell County and stayed on the farm with his mother until he was twenty-one years of age. After leaving the farm he clerked in a store at Providence, Kentucky, three years and then resumed his work on the homestead until 1916, when he came to Princeton. Here he followed the carpenter's trade until 1918. In November, 1917, he was elected county tax commissioner, and began his term of four years in January, 1918. His offices are in the Lisanby Building on West Court Square.

Mr. Dunbar owns one of the most desirable of the homes of Princeton, a modern residence surrounded with well kept grounds and made conspicuous by many handsome old shade trees. Mr. Dunbar is a republican in politics, is a deacon and active member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and is affiliated with Clinton Lodge No. 82, A. F. and A. M., is a past grand of Princeton Lodge No. 50, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, a member of Silver Leaf Camp No. 92, Woodmen of the World, Princeton Camp No. 12962, Modern Woodmen of America.

October 3, 1906, he married Miss Ella M. Boitnott, daughter of J. P. and Lou (Phelps) Boitnott. Her parents still live on their farm two miles north of Princeton. Mr. and Mrs. Dunbar have no children of their own, but have an adopted daughter, Virginia Berry, who was born June 6, 1918.

Ira Z. Barber, M. D. A physician of high standing who has practiced at Princeton for the past fifteen years, Doctor Barber is a specialist in eye, ear, nose and throat, and with his skill and abilities has been sought by a large clientele all over that section of the state.

Doctor Barber was born in Calloway County, Kentucky, September 7, 1877. His grandfather Ira Barber was born in Wilson County, Middle Tennessee, in early life moved to Calloway County, Kentucky, and lived as a farmer on the place where several years after his death his grandson, Doctor Barber was born. Alfred A. Barber, father of Doctor Barber, was born in November, 1844, in Calloway County, and is living today a mile and a half from his birthplace on what is known as "Barber Farm" five miles southwest of Murray. He has lived in that locality since early manhood and has practiced agriculture on a rather extensive scale. In politics he is a republican and early in life united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and that has been one of the strong attachments of his life. He married Margaret A. Jackson, who was born in the same vicinity of Calloway County in 1855 and died there December 5, 1917. Ira Z. is the oldest of five children and was born April 23, 1875. Paschal, a farmer near Crossland, Kentucky; Raleigh, a daughter, died at the age of three years; and Alfred Lafayette lives on and operates the old homestead.

Ira Z. Barber attended rural schools near the Barber farm, and completed his general education in the University of Tennessee at Nashville, where he spent two years. He received his Doctor of Medicine degree in 1905 from the University of Louisville. In the course of his general practice for several years he found his work more and more congenial and satisfactory in certain lines, and preparatory to exclusive devotion to his specialty he spent the year 1910 in the Chicago Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat College, and received a special diploma for his work there. He began practice at Princeton in 1905. His home and offices are in the Moore Building.

Doctor Barber is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations, and served as city health officer of Princeton from 1916 to 1919. As a private citizen he was a worker in behalf of the various causes for the promotion and successful prosecution of the war. He is a stanch republican, and is a member of the Princeton Presbyterian Church.

April 28, 1909, Doctor Barber married at Princeton Miss Anna B. Hunter, a daughter of Oscar and Alice (Wylie) Hunter both now deceased. Her father was a Caldwell County farmer.

FREDERICK O'BRIEN SEE is one of the youngest mining captains in Eastern Kentucky, an expert in everything connected with the equipment of a modern operation, and his present post of responsibility is as superintendent of No. 30 mine for the U. S. Coal & Coke Company at Lynch.

Mr. See is a native of Eastern Kentucky, born at Louisa in Lawrence County December 11, 1890. His people have lived there since pioneer times and since his grandfather, David See, came out of Virginia to Lawrence County, have been there during his entire life. He is a timber dealer. David See was of Scotch Irish ancestry and of a Colonial Virginia family. His wife was a Miss Goff, a native of Mississippi, who died in Lawrence County, Kentucky. F. M. See, father of Frederick See, was born near Roanoke, Virginia, in 1851, but lived nearly all his life in Lawrence County, where he died in 1919. He was a contractor in the building of railroads and also owned a large amount of farm land. For eight years he was sheriff of Lawrence County and one of the most influential men in the democratic party there. He gave liberally of his time and means to the Baptist Church, and was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. F. M. See married Tennie Shannon, who was born in Lawrence County in 1865 and is living at Louisa. She is the mother of six children: Andrew David, a building contractor at Louisa; Ira, connected with a large coal company at Beaver Creek, Floyd County; Frederick O'B; J. B., assistant mine foreman for the U. S. Coal & Coke Company at Lynch; Miss Madge Ray, at home; and Scott, a student in the Kentucky Normal College at Louisa.

Frederick See acquired his early education in the public schools of Louisa, graduating from high school in 1913. Following that he pursued the mechanical engineering course in the Ohio State University at Columbus, where he completed his junior year, but during the fall of 1916 remained at home assisting his father, and early in 1917 joined the Elkhorn Piny Coal & Mining Company on Beaver Creek in Floyd County, as superintendent of construction in which he handled his work there attracted attention to him from the U. S. Coal & Coke Company, and on September 1, 1918, he entered the service of this subsidiary of the U. S. Steel Corporation as assistant superintendent of construction at Lynch. He was for much of the time the man in charge of the groundwork involved in planning and building this model mining community and the equipment of the mines at Lynch, and when the construction work was completed on October 1, 1920, he remained as superintendent of No. 30 mine.

Mr. See who is unmarried, is a democrat and is affiliated with Benham Lodge No. 880, F. & A. M., at Benham, Kentucky. He is a member of the American Association of Engineers. During the World war he was a leader in his community in behalf of patriotic causes, and as foreman was largely responsible for the success achieved in the local Red Cross drive.

ORIE S. WARE, commonwealth's attorney for the Sixteenth Judicial District of Kentucky, is a lawyer by profession, in which his achievement ranks him as one of the foremost members of the Kenton County Bar, and he is also one of the most prominent Masons of the state.

Some four or five generations of the Ware family have been identified with Kentucky since pioneer times to the present. Isaac Ware, a Virginian, came to Kentucky in 1803 with his wife Elenah, or Elia, who was a native of the same county. Isaac was killed in 1810, his death being attributed to some dispute in Campbell County, where he lived out his years. His son, Daniel Ware, a native of Campbell County, became a Baptist minister, and did much for the building of that denomination over a large section of Kentucky. William Ware, a son of this Baptist minister, was the grandfather of Orie S. Ware. William Ware was born in 1818 and died in 1888, spending all his life in Campbell County, Kentucky, where he had large farming interests and was one of the influential citizens of his day. William Ware married Nancy Grizzell, who was born and reared in Kenton County and died in Campbell County, on the old homestead. Her father was Solomon Grizzell, who died in Kenton County.

The name of this Kenton County pioneer was bestowed upon his grandson, Solomon Grizzell Ware, who was born near Alexandria in Campbell County, July 4, 1855, but later became a well known business man of Covington. He died March 30, 1916. He was reared and educated in his native county, attending the celebrated seminary at Cold Spring conducted by Doctor Pettit. After his marriage in Kenton County he moved to Peach Grove in Pendleton County, where he operated a farm and also a general store. In 1886 he moved to the old homestead where he was born, near Alexandria, living there three years, and in 1889 located at Covington, where he was employed in commercial lines for five years. The next three years he lived on the home farm of his wife's people in Kenton County, but for a number of years before his death was a salesman for the Moore Oil Company at Covington. He served as city auditor of Covington two years, 1912-14. He was a democrat, for many years a deacon in the Baptist Church, and was a Royal Arch Mason.

Solomon G. Ware married Ida Petty, who is still living, at Covington. She was born near Independence in Kenton County in 1866. She became the mother of seven children: William Haden, the oldest, is a lawyer in Kenton County, and Orie S. is the second in age. Vernor Edwin has an extensive business as a contractor and builder at El Paso, Texas. His next younger brother, Howard Thomas, associated with him in business at El Paso, is a graduate of Yale University. in civil engineering, and during the World war was a first lieutenant in the Quartermaster's Construction Department. Beulah, the fifth of the children, is the wife of Norbert H. Gainey, a salesman, advertiser and commercial artist living at Lakeland, Florida. Elmer Petty Ware, a lawyer and law partner of his brother Orie S., was second lieutenant in the National Army during the World war period. Arthur Eugene the youngest, now a traveling salesman for a wholesale paint house at Dallas, Texas, was attending the naval training school at Lexington when the armistice was signed.

Orie S. Ware was born on a farm at Peach Grove in Pendleton County, Kentucky, May 11, 1882, but the great number of years has been spent in Covington, where he attended public schools. He finished his literary education in the private academy at Independence of Professor George W. Dunlap. Leaving this well known school at the age of seventeen, he clerked in a store at Covington a year and then became stenographer in the law office of W. McD. Shaw, who later was Circuit judge of Kenton County. He was then with Judge Shaw as stenographer and law student for four years, contributing substantially to the completion of a three year course in the Cincinnati Law School, where he was graduated LL. B. in June, 1903. Since that year Mr. Ware has been engaged in law practice at Covington. On January 1, 1910, he formed a partnership with Judge W. McD. Shaw, a congenial relationship that was continued until the death of the judge on November 27, 1912. After that Mr. Ware practiced alone until January 1, 1916. Elmer Petty Ware, became his partner and took over a large part of the duties of the firm, while the senior member was postmaster. Their law offices are in the First National Bank Building.

Mr. Ware was for five years clerk of the Board of Election Commissioners. He was appointed postmaster of Covington in July, 1914, beginning his official duties September 1st of that year. In July, 1918, he was reappointed for a second term of four years, resigning this office July 1, 1921, to make the race for Commonwealth's attorney of the Sixteenth Judicial District of Kentucky, which comprises Kenton County, and on November 8, 1921, by the unprecedented majority of 6,104, he was elected to this office. He assumed his duties January 2, 1922.

Mr. Ware was prominent in all war activities in Kenton County, and was the first to assume the additional burden imposed upon him as a Federal, also cooperating with local organizations for the raising of funds and other purposes. He was secretary of the Kenton County Council of Defense and was general campaign chairman of the War Savings Stamps drive. Mr. Ware is a director of the First National Bank of Lalonia, Kentucky. He owns one of the very comfortable modern residences in Covington, at the corner of Fifth and Garrard streets.

On September 19, 1900, at Covington, in the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, he and Miss Louise Calkern were united in marriage. Mrs. Ware, who is a graduate of the Covington High School, is a daughter of Louis and Kate (Huffman) Calkern. Her mother, who is still living at Covington, was born in Lincoln County, Kentucky, and is an art teacher in the Madison Avenue public school. Mr. and Mrs. Ware have three children: William Orie, born September 25, 1908; Louise, born February 8, 1911; and James Calkern, born February 3, 1913.

Mr. Ware's record in Masonry lends special distinction to his name in the state. He served two terms as worshipful master of Covington Lodge No. 290, F. and A. M., is a past high priest of Covington Chapter No. 35, R. A. M.; is past three illustrious masters of Kenton Council No. 13, R. and S. M., past commander of Covington Commandery No. 7, K. T., is a member of Kossiar Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Louisville and Indra Consistory No. 2 of the Scottish Rite bodies at Covington. He has been honored with the degree Knight Commander of the Court of Honor and in 1913 was elected grand master of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky and at present is chairman of the committee on jurisprudence in the Grand Lodge. He is also a member of Covington Lodge No. 314 of the Elks, of Myrtle Lodge, No. 5, Knights of Pythias, Old Kentucky Lodge No. 1, 350 of the Moose, and Covington Aerie No. 320, Fraternal Order of Eagles.

Mr. Ware is a deacon in the First Baptist Church of Covington and has the responsible office of president of the Kenton County Children's Home Society, an organization of 2000 members, each of whom pays five dollars annually to carry on the work of this splendid auxiliary to the Covington Protestant Children's Home. Mr. Ware is a member of the Kenton County and State Bar Associations, Kenton County Historical Society, Covington Industrial Club and the Fort Mitchell Country Club.

Breckinridge Viley. The achievements of the Viley family through several generations would represent a veritable history of Kentucky. The Vileys were thoroughbreds, racing and agricultural affairs. Mr. Viley is a noted Blue Grass family, and Breckinridge Viley lives at the old homestead that has been the center of the family life and achievements for the past seventy years, and before that time was one of the rendezvous for good Kentucky society. This homestead is the Stonewall Stock Farm, located three miles north of W. Va. through Gallipolis and in the Bordel County.

The old house which shelters him today was the birthplace of Breckinridge Viley, where he was born March 5, 1854, son of Warren and Catherine Jane (Martin) Viley. His grandfather, Captain Willa Viley, was one of the noted Kentuckians who gave special prominence to the thoroughbred racing stock, and was a contemporary of General William Buford, father of General Abe Buford. Stonewall Stock Farm lies adjacent to the old farm owned by General Abe Buford. Just one horse owned by Captain Willa Viley may be mentioned to indicate his prominence as a thoroughbred owner. This was Richard Singleton, which was a starter in fourteen four-mile-heat races, and the winner of all but two. This wonderful achievement was made in 1832 or 1833. In one noted race he ran sixteen miles, winning three heats out of five. A picture of Richard Singleton, painted in 1833, still adorns the walls of the Stonewall residence. At that time he was undoubtedly the greatest racing horse in Kentucky.

The Stonewall residence was erected in 1839-40 by Captain Shouse, who was a partner with James Coleman, owner of the farm. Coleman operated a hemp factory, making rope bagging and furnishing an important market for local hemp growers. The farm then passed to Chapmans Coleman, of Louisville, Shouse remaining here until 1852. When the place became the property of Warren Viley. It then comprised 366 acres, and the name Stonewall Stock Farm was selected by Warren Viley's wife. Captain Willa Viley had his home in Stock County, and that was also the home of Warren Viley until 1852. Warren Viley continued the interests of the family in the thoroughbred industry and was breeder of King Alphonso, a noted horse in his day, and dam of King Alphonso. He bred many other noted animals. Captain Willa Viley had helped lay out the race track at Lexington in 1826, and was a charter member of the association, his son Warren continuing in the same relation, as has also Breckinridge Viley. John R. Viley, a brother of Warren Viley, was for years president of the Lexington Racing Association, and owned a farm on Leestown Pike near Lexington. Warren Viley was a man of exceptional powers and vigor, and continued active in affairs until past four-
He finally retired from his farm to Midway and died at the age of eighty-four. He probably never appeared as a candidate for public office, but was influential in politics and wielded a great deal of power in his time. He was a great friend of Joe Blackburn, and in a barter of land the Viley farm and Blackburn property passed to the hands of William Wilson, then making his first campaign for the Legislature. He was also a friend of John C. Breckinridge, a friendship commemorated in the name of his son, though the two families were related by marriage as well. Another intimate friend of Warren Viley was Senator Beek, and the late Stodard Johnston frequently visited all the old stags and Sheeps Head Bay. The many of the barbecues, formerly an indispensable feature of politics, were held in the grove of the Viley homestead. Mrs. Warren Viley was a social leader, and the open hospitality of that generation has been modified very little by the present owner, Breckinridge Viley.

Breckinridge Viley remained with this father as a lad and young man, and attended Georgetown College until failing health compelled him to give up his studies. He returned home to take charge of the establishment, and now, as years are advancing upon him, he has the satisfaction of seeing his own sons perform a like service. Besides King Alphonso whose record is associated with the Stonewall Stock Farm, Breckinridge Viley bred other Viley farm animals, and the records swell the distinctions of Stonewall Farm, among them being Hospadar, W. Overton, Bab, winner of the Kentucky Oaks stakes, Tenpenny, also a Kentucky Oak winner, Miss Galop, Belmar, Buckvideer, winner of the Tennessee Derby, Joe Frey, who won the California Derby, Elkhorn, Crockett, a winner of the Kentucky Oak stakes. Mr. Viley has sold his yearlings at Scarbrooga and Sheeps Head Bay. Through his string of horses have followed the grand circuit from Sheeps Head Bay to New Orleans. Two of his noted sires were Belvidere and Linden, and the present head of the stud is Vandergrift, with many winners to his credit.

Mr. Viley is one of the men who have never deviated in an important degree from the thoroughbred industry in spite of the obvious handicaps and difficulties imposed by events in recent years. In politics he is strictly independent, and has voted for the man that appeals best to his judgment. He served four years as captain of a State Guards Company. At the age of twenty-six he married Flavilla Surles, of New Orleans. She died twenty years later, leaving no children. For his second wife he married Mary Phil Pemberton, and afterwards married Mrs. Harriet Warren and Breck, both students in the Versailles High School, and Philemon. Mr. Viley has been a Mason since he was twenty-one, has passed the chairs in the Chapter and Commandery and is a past grand commander of the Versailles Commandery. He enjoys all the outdoor sports, has kept a pack of hounds and hunted coyote and foxes and has gone to Mississippi for deer and other big game, and on hunting excursions has usually taken his sons along.

Walter Anderson Wilson, manager of the Kentucky Leaf & Transit Company, is one of the dependable and alert business men of Hopkinsville, who not only has built up a solid reputation for his ability, but also has gained the confidence of the people of his region. He was born in Trigg County, Kentucky, August 3, 1871, in the little village of Wallonia, where the family had been located for many years. He is the son of William A. Wilson, and a grandson of John F. Wilson, who was born in Halifax County, Virginia, in 1808. He brought the family into Trigg County, Kentucky, and was a solid farmer of that region. His death occurred at Wallonia in 1862. His wife, who was Augusta Beaud prior to her marriage, also died at Wallonia, passing away in 1875. She was born at Churchill, Christian County, Kentucky.

William A. Wilson was born eight miles west of Hopkinsville, on a farm in Christian County, Kentucky, in 1848, and he died at Wallonia, Kentucky, in February, 1875. He was only a boy when his parents located at Wallonia, and there he was reared, educated and married, and there he developed into an extensive farmer. In politics he was a stalwart democrat. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity. When only sixteen years old he enlisted in the Confederate army during the war between the states, and served until the close of that conflict. William Wilson married a woman from Wallonia, and his wife was born at Wallonia in 1852, and died there in 1873. They had two children, Walter Anderson and his sister Lucy, who died at the age of nineteen years.

Walter Anderson Wilson attended the schools of Wallonia, the private school conducted by Maj. J. O. Ferrill at Hopkinsville, and Bethel College at Russellville, but left the latter institution after a year, in 1892, and then spent four years on the home farm. In 1896 he came to Hopkinsville and dealt in tobacco until 1909, when he became a buyer for the American Smuff Company. These various activities made him a well-known figure in the tobacco business, and in the fall of 1912 the Kentucky Leaf & Transit Company made him a very flattering offer, which he accepted, and he has continued to be their manager for the past eight years. The large new tobacco building of the company is located at the corner of Fourth and Clay streets. This building is a modern brick structure and the most complete rehandling house in the city. The headquarters of the Kentucky Leaf & Transit Company are at New York City, and they have a local central office at 1107 Broadway, Paducah, Kentucky. Mr. Wilson is like his father, a devout man, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He resides on East Ninth Street.

In 1895 Mr. Wilson was married at Cadiz, Kentucky, to Miss Sadie Bacon, a daughter of Dr. T. L. Bacon, formerly a physician and surgeon of Hopkinsville, where he died in 1918. Mrs. Bacon survives and still resides at Hopkinsville. Mrs. Wilson was graduated from Logan College at Russellville, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have four children, namely: Lucy, who married Rev. D. M. Spears, a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, resides at Bowling Green, Kentucky; Thomas, who is engaged in an automobile business at Hopkinsville, lives at home; Emma, who was graduated from the Hopkinsville High School, lives at home; and Susan, who is a student in the public schools. Mr. Wilson discharges the duties pertaining to his business and community responsibilities without the aid of prejudice or narrowness that is the penalty of restricted horizons, and demonstrates in every way his broad-mindedness and ready sympathies, and at all times maintains a high standard of good citizenship and a proper conception of good government.

William Walker Barrett. Within the present generation there has not arisen in Kentucky a more able lawyer or a finer citizen than William Walker Barrett, county attorney of Pike County. Beside noteworthy powers of both a professional and public nature, Mr. Barrett is a scholar, and is recognized as a polished and eloquent orator on national and local issues. He was born in Tazewell County, Virginia, July 28, 1892, a son of Isaac C. and Harriet L. (Walker) Barrett.

Isaac C. Barrett and his wife came to Pike County in 1893, and became farming people of this locality. Her death occurred in May, 1918, but he survives and now lives at Draffin, this county. Early uniting with the Methodist Episcopal Church, Isaac C. Barrett and his wife became very devout Christians, and he has long been one of the stewards of the local congregation of his denomination. His home has always been open to the circuit riders to whom a hearty hospitality is shown. In politics Isaac C. Barrett is a strong republican. He and his wife became the parents of ten children, eight of whom are still living, and all are residents of Pike County.

William W. Barrett attended the Phelps High School and the Phelps Military Academy, Pikeville College, Transylvania University at Lexington, Kentucky, and the Jefferson School of Law at Louisisville, Kentucky, being graduated from the latter institution in 1873. During the period he was attending school, he taught school for seven years, in this way earning the funds to prosecute his educational training. In 1915 Mr. Barrett went into partnership with the present assistant attorney general of Kentucky, William P. Hughes, which association continued until Mr. Hughes became an ensign in the United States navy for service during the World war, in which he was a member of the transport service. In 1917 Mr. Barrett was elected county attorney, being opposed by Judge J. M. York and A. S. Ratliff. During the period of the war Mr. Barrett rendered a very effective service by serving on the various local committees, as a member of the draft board and as government appeal agent.

In 1912 Mr. Barrett was married to Miss Martha Thornberry, a daughter of Rev. James Thornberry, a man of much prominence in the county, and his present young family enjoys the good reputation of his line. Mr. and Mrs. Barrett have two children, namely: Ruth Darrell and William Prentice. Mr. Barrett is a thirty-second degree Mason, and he and Mrs. Barrett belong to the Baptist Church. He has always been prominent in Masonry, both as a York and Scottish-Rite, and maintains membership in the Blue Lodge and Chapter at Pikeville; the Commandery and Shrine at Ashland, and the Consistory at Covington. He also belongs to the Elks at Catlettsburg, Kentucky. In politics he is a republican. Although one of the younger lawyers of this part of the state, he has won ever-increasing distinction as a professional man, influential citizen and public official. The promptness and ability he has always displayed in both his private practice and the conduct of the affairs of the county have marked him as a lawyer of unusual parts, and convinced his fellow citizens of his wisdom and efficiency. Companiable, warm-hearted and generous, admiration of his masterful abilities is combined with the warmer recognition of the man.

The Bowman Family. Among the honored residents of Fayette County, Kentucky, living three miles west of Lexington, on the Gunn Pike, are Henry C., Jr., Anna E., and Mrs. Bowman, a family which has been held in high esteem for many years in this state. These three are children of Henry C. Bowman, Sr., and Sally (Bowman) Bowman, and grandchildren of Abram and Nancy (Trotter) Bowman. Abram Bowman was born at Elkhorn, Fayette County, Kentucky, a son of Col. Abram Bowman, an officer of the Continental line during the Revolutionary war. He married Mrs. Sarah (Hine) Trotter, and is a member of the Baptist Church, although their parents belonged to the Christian Church. Their acquaintance is extensive and their friendships are numerous and sincere.

Meredith Woodson Hyatt, M. D. The work of Doctor Hyatt as a physician and surgeon has been performed in Washington County, Kentucky, through a period of a quarter of a century. From 1904 to 1917 on entering the army Doctor Hyatt was the county health officer of Washington County.

Doctor Hyatt was born in Shelby County, Kentucky, May 21, 1867, son of Joseph Martin and Amanda Merifield (Moore) Hyatt and grandson of Meredith and Judith (Easley) Hyatt, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of North Carolina. Doctor Hyatt's father was born in Shelby County and his mother in Washington County. When he was a small child his parents moved to Anderson County and he grew up on their farm and acquired his early education in country schools. Doctor Hyatt also attended the Kentucky Normal College at Lawrenceburg, receiving a diploma in the Special Science Course in that institution in 1889, and in 1894 he received his M. D. degree from the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville. He practiced two years in Anderson County and since then his name and reputation have been favorably known in Washington County. His home has been in Springfield since 1891.

Upon his return from the army in 1919 he with Dr. J. N. Mudd, Springfield, Kentucky, founded the Lincoln Hospital, an institution with twenty-four beds. This firm was dissolved August 1, 1921, and since that date Doctor Hyatt has resumed his private practice at Springfield, Kentucky.

He is a member of the Washington County, Kentucky State and American Medical Associations. He is a democrat, a Knight Templar Mason, being affiliated with Springfield Lodge F. & A. M. and the Commandery at Lebanon. He is a member of the Christian Church. In 1899 he married Miss Margaret Moth Durrett, of Bloomfield, Kentucky. Their two children are Meredith R. and William D., twin boys.

In February, 1917, Doctor Hyatt has had much of his professional talent engaged in Government work. He was the medical officer of the Draft Board of Washington County from June until October, 1917. In May, 1917, he was commissioned a captain in the Medical Reserve Corps and he reported for active duty at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, October 6, 1917, being assigned as Regimental Surgeon of the Three Hundred and Thirty-fourth Infantry. He was with the army fifteen months. In February, 1919, he was appointed Charles Irvin Ross. While his active career covers little more than twenty years, Charles Irvin Ross is widely known over Eastern Kentucky, especially in his home county of Pulaski. He has won well deserved prominence as a leader in the republican party, and for a number of years has filled with every degree of capability the office of Circuit Court clerk of Pulaski County.

Mr. Ross was born at Mount Savage in Carter County, Kentucky, September 14, 1879. He is a son of Charles Ross, who was born at Cincinnati April 14, 1841. He grew up in Eastern Kentucky, in the vicinity of Ashland, was married in Greenup County and for a number of years was a worker in iron furnaces, and continued that employment and also did mining in Carter County. Since 1906 his home has been at Barrenfork in McCreary County, where he has charge of the stock and feed for a large mining company. He was a Union soldier in the Civil war, enlisting in 1861 and serving all through the struggle with the Twenty-second Kentucky Infantry. He was at the siege of Vicksburg. Charles Ross has been married three times. His first wife was Mary Coffey, a native of Eastern Kentucky, who died in Greenup County. They had four children: the oldest, a son, was scalded to death when three years of age; Pearl, living with her father, is the widow of W. H. Moore, a Colorado miner; Minnie, the youngest, of John Skene, who was superintendent of the Eagle Coal Company at Barrenfork and widely known as one of the most skillful mining men in that section of the state; and Ed, the youngest, who died at the age of twenty years.

The second wife of Charles Ross was Sophia Baker, who was born in Greenup County in 1859 and died at Mount Savage in 1892. Charles Irvin Ross, of Somerset, is the eldest of her three children; May is the wife of R. H. Rhonk, of Somerset, a fireman for the Southern Railway Company and also owner of a farm in West Virginia; John, the youngest, died at the age of seven years. The third wife of Charles Ross was Laura Lawson, who was born at Willard in Carter County in 1878 and died at Barrenfork in 1918. She was the mother of five children: Oliver, employed in the coal mines at Hazard, Kentucky; Christine, with her father; Temperance, who died at the age of fifteen years; Florence, who died in infancy; and Harry, also in the coal mines at Hazard.

Charles Irvin Ross acquired his early education in the public schools of Mount Savage and a grade school at Denton, but his educational advantages ended when he was fifteen, and even before that he had clerked in stores evenings and on Saturdays. When he left school he took charge of a small store at Music in Carter County for the Lexington & Carter Mining Company. He was at that work two years, and then under the same company was employed for six months managing the tipple and weighing crews at Mount Savage. For another six months he was brukke for the tipple and weighing crews; the short line railroad running through Flat Rock to the Eagle Coal Company's mines at Barrenfork. For two years he was bookkeeper for the Eagle Coal Company, and thereafter was the company's general purchasing agent until 1907, when his growing prominence and interest in politics brought him the appointment of Circuit Court clerk of Pulaski County to serve the one year of the vacancy of Pulaski Adolphus, who died and was elected clerk of the Court of Appeals. In November, 1909, Mr. Ross was elected Circuit Court clerk, beginning his six year term in January, 1910. He was re-elected in 1915, and his present term expires January 1, 1922. On November 8, 1921, he was elected sheriff of Pulaski County. When America entered the World war there was a special need for his experience in the coal mining industry, and at the request of the coal administration he turned over the duties of his office to Napier Adams, and for three years was general manager of the Eagle Coal Company. He resigned this office in December, 1919, and was then engaged in the retail coal business at Somerset until December, 1920.

Mr. Ross has won all his political battles and at the same time has been the friend and strength to the republican organization of Pulaski and adjoining counties, and was chairman of the Republican County Committee from 1912 to 1920, when he resigned.

Mr. Ross is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is affiliated with Burnside Lodge, F. and A. M., at Burnside, is a past grand of Somerset Lodge No. 238, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, a member of Somerset Lodge No. 1021 of the Elks, of Somerset Council No. 193, Junior Order United American Mechanics; Queen City Camp No. 11494, Modern Woodmen of America; and Crescent Lodge No. 60, Knights of Pythias.

He and his family have their home on Mount Vernon Street in Somerset. He married at Barrenfork April 2, 1897, Miss M. M. Crayton, daughter of John and Mary Crayton. Her father was a locomotive engineer and died at Barrenfork. Mr. and Mrs. Ross have five children. Paul, born December 24, 1902, is an apprentice machinist in the Ferguson shops of the Southern Railway Company at Somerset. John Sherman, born in October, 1904, is a high school student in Somerset and very prominent in the High School Glee Club. Laura, born 1906, is a teacher and Grace, born in 1908, both attend the graded school, and the youngest of the family is Kate Crawford, born June 4, 1917.

William Curtis Travis, D. V. M., of Kuttawa, the only veterinary surgeon of Lyon County, and a veteran of the great war, is one of the substantial men and highly-respected citizens of his locality. He was born in Marshall County, Kentucky, in the town of Birmingham, December 31, 1889, a son of Thomas Anderson Travis, and grandson of Thomas Travis, a native of Tennessee, who died at Maple Spring, Kentucky, in 1801. He was the pioneer of his family in Kentucky, locating in Marshall County and there following the calling of a farmer as well as his profession as a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and a trustee which occupied him in his old home near Cottage Grove, Tennessee. He was first married to a Miss Collie, and afterward to a Miss Howard, the latter being the grandmother of Doctor Travis. She died at Maple Spring, Kentucky. The Travis family originated in Ireland, but its representatives came to this country during its Colonial period.

Thomas Anderson Travis was born in Marshall County, near Maple Spring, Kentucky, in 1838, and was reared, educated and married. He developed into one of the prosperous and extensive farmers of his county, and still owns his farm, which is located one-fourth of a mile west of Birmingham, Kentucky, although he is now living retired at Birmingham. A democrat, he has always been interested in local affairs, and has served as city judge of Birmingham. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, holds his membership, and he is an active supporter of his local congregation. Fraternally he belongs to T. L. Jefferson Lodge No. 622, A. F. and A. M., of Birmingham; Red Oak Camp No. 71, W. O. W., and Birmingham Chapter, O. E. S. Thomas Anderson Travis was married to Mary Jane Collie, who was born near Maple Spring, Kentucky, in 1860, and died on the farm in August, 1900. Their children were as follows: Walter, who resides on his farm north of Birmingham; Lula, who married Luther Goheen, a farmer, but formerly a merchant, and resides at Birmingham; Florence, who married Tom Nunley and lives on her father's farm;
Ethel, who died in infancy; Doctor Travis, who was the fifth in order of birth; Roy, who lives on the home farm; Helen, who married Rennie Cornwell, a farmer of Birmingham; and Terrel, who is a farmer of Lyon County.

Doctor Travis attended the rural schools of Marshall County and was reared on his father's farm and remained there until he was twenty-three years old. Leaving the farm, he went to Birmingham and for two years was engaged in clerking in a store, but not being satisfied with this line of work he decided to enter a profession and became a student in the Terre Haute Veterinary College at Terre Haute, Indiana, taking the regular veterinary course and also that in pharmaceutical chemistry in this institution, in 1873 and 1878, with his degree. He began the practice of his profession at Birmingham during his vacations, and was at Morgantown, Union County, Kentucky, for two months after his graduation. On August 13, 1878, Doctor Travis enlisted in the Veteranarian Medical Reserve Corps, and was called to duty immediately and sent to Camp Greenleaf, Georgia, where he remained for four months, and then was honorably discharged December 14, 1878.

In January, 1919, Doctor Travis established himself at Kuttawa, and has built up a very large practice, and is also serving as livestock inspector of Lyon County. In politics he is a democrat. His fraternal connections are those which he maintains as a member of T. L. Jefferson Lodge No. 622, A. F. and A. M., of Birmingham, and Cumberland Camp, W. O. W., Kuttawa.

On May 28, 1919, Doctor Travis was united in marriage with Miss Faylyne Johnson at Elizabethtown, Illinois, a daughter of John and Eva (Doom) Johnson, of Kuttawa. Mr. Johnson is a retired farmer. Doctor and Mrs. Travis have one child, William Curtis, Jr., who was born April 2, 1920.

THOMAS E. KING, commonwealth's attorney for the Eighteenth Judicial District, has been a practicing lawyer at this bar for over twenty years, and success and high standing in his profession has been accompanied by many public relationships. He was born in Bourbon County, Kentucky, April 13, 1867, a son of William and Mary (Griffin) King, the former a native of Ireland and the latter of Bourbon County. His father was reared and educated in Ireland, and at the age of nineteen came to the United States, spending some time at Cynthiana and then removing to Kentucky. After his marriage he settled on a farm in Bourbon County, and the rest of his life was identified with agricultural pursuits. He died in 1914. He was a stanch democrat in politics.

Thomas E. King, one of seven living children, grew up on his father's homestead. He attended the public schools, also N. P. Smith's private school at Cynthiana, and finished his literary education in the State University. He read law in the office of W. F. Lafferty, and was admitted to the bar in 1888. Until January, 1906, he practiced with his law preceptor, the partnership being dissolved when Mr. King was elected county judge. He as such administered the fiscal affairs of the county for two terms, eight years. Resuming private practice for four years he was again called to the office he had so creditably filled. Mr. King received the democratic nomination for county attorney for the Eighteenth Judicial District for a six year term, beginning in January, 1922, and was elected to the office November 8, 1921. This district comprises the counties of Harrison, Pendleton, Nicholas and Robertson.

Mr. King is one of the directors of the Harrison Memorial Hospital. In November, 1905, he married Ruth Addams, daughter of William Addams, whose sketch is found on another page.

PAUL MARTIN BASHAM, County Judge of Breckinridge County, is a young man who is proving the advantage of acquiring a broad and liberal education, for he is an attorney as well as a highly educated man, and made a name for himself as an educator of the county before he went into politics. As one of the active republicans of this region he has received the rewards to which his partisanship entitles him, and is recognized as one of the strong elements in the political life of this part of the state.

The birth of Paul Martin Basham occurred on a farm in Breckinridge County, near Stephensport, July 25, 1891, and he is a son of Winston L. and Malissa Belle (Shellman) Basham, both of whom were born in Breckinridge County and descended from Virginian ancestors. The paternal grandfather was George Basham, who was a farmer in Loudon County, Tennessee. He was born in Virginia, in 1857, and James Shellman, was born in Breckinridge County. The parents have spent their lives on their farm. The father was reared a Presbyterian and the mother as a Methodist. In politics he is a republican. He had a brother Thomas Basham, who was a soldier in the Union army during the war of the '60s, and who was killed at the battle of Knoxville, Tennessee, while in the service. Another brother, Joseph Basham, now nearly ninety, was also a Union soldier. There were four children born to Winston L. Basham and his wife, namely: James T., who is county attorney of Grayson County; Mary Belle; Paul M.; and Eva, all of whom except Paul M. are married.

Growing to manhood on his father's homestead, Paul M. Basham attended the rural schools, and then took a course at the Western Kentucky State Normal School, Bowling Green, Kentucky, from which he graduated in 1914. For eighteen months thereafter he was engaged in teaching school, and if he had so desired might have remained indefinitely in that profession, for he showed ability and won the approval of the parents and the affection of the pupils of his schools. In 1915, however, he was elected Circuit Court clerk, which office he held till his election, on the republican ticket, without opposition, as county judge of Breckinridge County, being only twenty-nine years old at the time. He studied law under a private preceptor, and was admitted to the bar in 1916. He was assistant sergeant-at-arms of the national convention of the republican party held at Chicago in 1920, and for the past four years has been campaign chairman of his party in Breckinridge County.

Mr. Basham is a Knight Templar Mason and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. Admitted one of the most brilliant of this part of Kentucky, he has a bright future before him, and his friends expect great things of him both in politics and in his profession, and judging by his past achievements they are not liable to be disappointed.

EBENEZER B. HEMPHILL, county superintendent of schools for Knox County, has the scolastic and executive ability that have enabled him to give most loyal and effective service to the important office, in which he has done much to coordinate and advance the standard of public-school work in his native county, he having been born on his father's farm, five miles south of Barbourville, the county seat, on the 5th of November, 1866. His father, the late James L. Hemphill, was born in McMinn County, Tennessee, in the year 1834, and died at Barbourville, Kentucky, in 1882. He left five years of age at the time when his parents established their home in Knox County, where he was reared and educated and where his marriage was solemnized in his young manhood. He gave loyal service as a soldier of the Union in the Civil war, in which he was a member of Company H, Seventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry. During a period of 3½ years his military career was virtuous and unblemished, with the gallant record of his regiment, with which he took part in many engagements, including a number of the important battles of the war—Shiloh, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Stone's River and the siege of Vicksburg. In one engagement he received a bul-
Ambrose Dudley Leach. The life of Ambrose Dudley Leach is an illustration of the possible control over early limitations and of the wise utilization of ordinary opportunities. His career has been identified with Bourbon County for half a century, during which time he has accumulated a large and productive property, while at the same time attracting to himself through integrity and fair dealing the esteem and confidence of those among whom he has lived.

Mr. Leach is a native of Harrison County, born near Lee's Lick December 27, 1856, his parents being Ambrose Dudley and Elizabeth Leach. His grandfather, was born in Virginia, came as a young man to Kentucky, and spent the rest of his life in farming in Harrison County, where he died October 20, 1827. He was married February 16, 1800, to Millie Bentley, who died May 11, 1857. Ambrose Dudley Leach, the elder, was born June 3, 1818, in Harrison County. He had a common school education and started to work at an early age, and June 15, 1846, married Frances Forsythe, who was born September 7, 1826, in Harrison County, a daughter of Augustus Forsythe, who was also a native of that county, where he passed his life as an agriculturist. Ambrose D. Leach and his wife let wound in his left side. After the close of the war he served three consecutive terms, of two years each, as sheriff of Knox County, and thereafter his productive energies were given to his extensive farm enterprise, five miles south of Barbourville, during the remainder of his active career. His sterling character and fine mentality made him well equipped for leadership in community affairs, and commended him to the high esteem of all who knew him. He served thirty years as a deacon of the Baptist Church, of which his wife likewise was a devoted member, and he was allied through membership in the lodge of Masons, and with the Grand Army of the Republic, his political faith having been that of the republican party. His wife, whose maiden name was Amanda Ingram, was born in Bell County, Kentucky, in 1848, and she survived him by more than a quarter of a century, her death having occurred at Barbourville, in 1918. Of the children, Ebenezer B., of this review, is the eldest; Thomas died at the age of twenty; Dora H. is the wife of W. M. Tye, of Barbourville, who is a leading merchant in this city, a representative farmer of Knox County and now county agricultural agent; Carrie A. is the wife of Prof. W. C. Faulkner, former superintendent of the Barbourville High School and now an executive in the John A. Leach National Bank at Barbourville.

The public schools of Barbourville afforded the present county superintendent his earlier education, and in 1888 he was graduated in the high school department of Union College, this state. He thereafter continued his higher academic studies in Centre College, at Danville, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1892 and with the degree of Bachelor of Science. Ambrose D. Leach has proved an exceptionally receptive and ambitious student, and he was only fourteen years old when he initiated his successful career as a teacher in the rural schools of his native county. His active pedagogical career as a teacher in the public schools covered a period of twenty years, within which he taught in Knox, Bell and Mercer counties, and established himself as a typically high representative of his profession. He was for one year principal of the high school at Salvisa, Mercer County, and gave a similar period of service as principal of the Pineville High School in Bell County. His work as a teacher continued until 1917, in November of which year he was elected to his present office, for a term of four years. The Board of Education has appointed him to this office, and he has proved himself admirably receptive to the responsible duties of the new office, in which he has made an admirable record. Under his supervision are the ninety-four schools of the county, including the city schools of Barbourville, and he has the earnest cooperation of a corps of 110 efficient teachers, the while the enrollment of pupils in the schools of the county is 7,000, Knox being one of the most populous and important counties in Southeast Kentucky. Mr. Hemphill has been appointed county superintendent.

The republican party receives the loyal allegiance of Mr. Hemphill, and he and his wife are active members of the Baptist Church, and his fraternal relations are here briefly noted: Mountain Lodge, No. 187, Free & Accepted Masons, at Barbourville; Barbourville Chapter, No. 135, Royal Arch Masons, of Knox County; Knox County Command, No. 77, Royal & Select Masters; LaBelle Lodge, No. 159, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in his home city, he being past grand of this lodge; Waukesha Tent, No. 156, Improved Order of Red Men, of which he is past sachem; Swan Pond Council, No. 39, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of which he is past counselor. He is an active and honored member of the Kentucky Educational Association. Mr. Hemphill owns the attractive residence property which represents his home, at Barbourville, and takes deep interest in all things touching the welfare of his home city and county. During American participation in the World war he was chairman of the Knox County campaigns for the sale of war savings stamps, aided in all of the drives in support of the Government war bond issue and made his personal subscriptions as liberal as his means justified.

April 19, 1906, recorded the marriage of Mr. Hemphill to Miss Eva Parker, daughter of W. M. and Emily (Bryant) Parker, who now reside in the State of Idaho, where Mr. Parker is a successful farmer and also follows the profession of surveyor. Mr. and Mrs. Hemphill became the parents of seven children, whose names and respective years of birth are here recorded: Parker Tye, 1906; James Blaine, 1910; Alice, 1913; William, 1914; Love, 1916; Hazel, 1918; and Ebenezer B., Jr., 1920. All of the children are living except the last mentioned, who died at the age of fifteen months.

Thomas Hemphill, grandfather of Ebenezer B. Hemphill, was born in Virginia, in 1803, and died in Knox County, Kentucky, in 1870. Thomas Hemphill was a scion of a sterling family of Scotch origin, the original American progenitor having settled in Virginia in the Colonial period of our national history. Upon coming to Kentucky, when a young man, Thomas Hemphill first settled in Bell County, and there was solemnized his marriage to Miss Tinsley, a native of that county. He was appointed first Knox County slate school inspector, which office he held until he returned to Bell County until he came, many years ago, to Knox County and continued his productive activities in this same line of industry, both he and his wife having here passed the remainder of their lives.

An interesting chapter in the career of Ebenezer B. Hemphill is that which gives record of his service as a soldier in the Spanish-American war. At the inception of this conflict he enlisted, in February, 1898, in Company A, Fourth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and with his command he was in training at Lexington, Kentucky, until the regiment was sent to Anniston, Alabama, where he continued in service until he received his honorable discharge in February, 1899, his regiment not having been called to the stage of actual conflict but having been brought up to a high standard of military efficiency. He was discharged with the rank of sergeant. and children came to Bourbon County about 1870, first settling on the Clay and Keyser Tappnike, where, because of his modest fortunes, the elder Leach at first rented land. Later he purchased a property near Center-ville, on the county line of Bourbon and Scott counties, mainly in the former county, and there rounded out his career. This is the same land that is now owned and operated by his son, Ambrose D., of this review. The father was a democrat in his political allegiance, but did not care for public affairs and took only a public-spirited citizen's interest in public matters. His death, which was mourned as the loss of a good citizen, occurred November 16, 1897, his widow surviving until February 20, 1900. This worthy couple had a family of ten children: Ann Eliza, who married Joseph May, of Bourbon County; Emily Frances, who married William Sagers, and lives near the old home place; Jesse A., a leading farmer of the Centerville community; James W., who died September 14, 1894, at the age of twenty-eight years; Augustus, who was the same age when he passed away, January, 3, 1897; Ambrose Dudley; Joseph L., who is engaged in farming five and one-half miles northwest of Paris; John, who is farming in the locality of Centerville; Mollie, who died soon after her marriage to the Rev. George Thomas, who farms near his brother Joseph L.

Ambrose Dudley Leach was given the advantages of a common school education, and his boyhood and youth were passed on the home farms in Harrison and Bourbon counties. When about thirty-one years of age, March 26, 1890, he was united in marriage with Miss Sophia Sagers, who was born May 20, 1863, one of the sisters of Mr. Sagers, and daughter of James and Margaret (Jones) Sagers. James Sagers was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, and passed his life in farming, dying near Centerville in 1897, when seventy-two years of age. Mrs. Sagers was born in Kentucky, of Virginia parentage, was married in her teens, and survived to the age of eighty-three years, her last years being passed with her daughter, Mrs. Sophia Leach. In the Sagers family there were eleven children, of whom eight reached maturity: Sarah Elizabeth, who married Lee Cox and resides near Paris; Mary, who married Elza Harp, and after his death Stephen Shipley, and died while in middle life; William Henry, residing on the old home place in Bourbon County; Lucinda, who married Thad Cummings and lives on the old home place; Noah, a resident of Scott County; Margaret, the wife of Joseph L. Leach, a brother of Mr. Leach; Emma, who married the wife of George Thomas Leach, a brother of Ambrose D. Leach. The old Sagers farm is on the Hawkins and Cummings Pike.

Ambrose D. Leach secured the old Leach farm in company with his brother George Thomas, and four years later bought out his brother's interests in the home property, of which he is the still owner. After his marriage he spent six years in renting in Bourbon County, and then he came to Lexington, where he bought in Fayette County. About 1890 he bought the Reverend Gano farm of 140 acres, and to this later added the 280 acres adjoining, south of Centerville, in addition to which he has the old home farm of 104 acres in Fayette and Scott counties and another tract in the latter county. He has paid as high as $725 per acre for some of his land, all of which has been bought in recent years. Mr. Leach applies his energies to general farming and stock growing and feeding, and in all lines of agricultural work is conceded to be thorough, progressive and highly capable. He has never held office and has not sought public preferment, but always supports movements of a character beneficial to his community.

Mr. and Mrs. Leach have had two sons, both now deceased. Clifford, born September 25, 1895, died January 19, 1910. Charlie, born December 20, 1897, was killed April 20, 1916, in a premature explosion while blasting in a cistern. These were both exceptionally bright boys who gave promise of brilliant futures. They were popular with all, and their deaths were sincerely mourned in the community, where they were general favorites. Clifford played the violin, as his favorite instrument, and was a gifted musician. Charlie was a gifted mechanic and loved the profession.

ROBINSON SWAERINGEN BROWN is an electrical engineer by profession, but for many years his interests have been closely identified with his large and attractive farm and stock-breeding enterprise at Harrods Creek in Jefferson County. He represents a family that has been in Kentucky since earliest pioneer times, and the name has long been one of commercial distinction at Louisville.

Mr. Brown was born at Louisville March 30, 1886. His grandfather was J. T. S. Brown, who was born in Virginia in 1792. The first of the family to come to Kentucky were two brothers who came over the mountains in the expedition commanded by George Rogers Clark. One of these western pioneers and soldiers was James, who was killed in the battle of Tippecanoe. The other brother was William, who owned a large western wilderness. William Brown kept a diary, and that valued document is now in possession of one of the descendants of the Brown family, a distinguished Chicago physician, Dr. William A. Pusey, who is a native of Kentucky. J. T. S. Brown came to Kentucky when twelve years of age, and he spent his active life at Munfordville, where he was a merchant and farmer.

The father of Robinson S. Brown was born at Munfordville September 2, 1846, and died at Louisville February 27, 1917. He lived in Louisville from the time he was sixteen, and completed his education in the high school of that city. As a young man he entered the wholesale drug store of John Chambers, and in 1874 became a member of the company Chambers, Brown & Company, wholesale liquor dealers. This business was later Brown, Thomason & Company, and since 1886 has been a corporation, Brown, Foreman & Company. After the death of George Foreman, George G. Brown succeeded as president, and since his death his son Owsey has been president. For a number of years this company operated a distillery at St. Mary's, and manufactured the famous brand "Old Forrester." George G. Brown helped organize the Model License League, and served as its president. He was a democrat, a member of the Pendennis Club and the Cremin Club of Louisville.

George G. Brown married Amelia Owsey, who was born at Danville, Kentucky, a daughter of E. Boyle and Elizabeth Owsey. Her grandfather was the noted Kentucky governor, William Owsey. He lived at Danville, his old home being built there in 1803. The residence of Mrs. G. G. Brown at Harrods Creek contains the mantle taken from the old Governor Owsey home. Mrs. Brown was twelve years of age when her parents moved from Danville to Louisville. Her father was a member of the firm Owsey & Fraddock, pork packers, operating the O K pork packery. E. Boyle Owsey died in 1882. The children of George G. Brown and wife were: Mary Garvin, who died at Los Angeles in 1910, the wife of Hill Hastings; Owsey, president of Brown, Foreman & Company; Elizabeth, wife of Howard Hammond, a real estate dealer at Stockton, California; Robinson S.; and Amelia B., wife of Thomas H. Payne, vice president and manager of the Winnipeg Oil Company in Canada.

Robinson S. Brown finished his studies at the University of Virginia in 1910, and began his career as an electrical engineer with the Bland Electric Company at Louisville, and later did similar work at Los Angeles. In January, 1913, he took possession of his Woodland farm, comprising 280 acres of the old Barrickman and Drayton estates at Harrods Creek in Jefferson County. The attractive old country home was erected by Jack Barber about the time of the Civil war. This is a stock farm, specializing in Hereford cattle and Berkshire hogs.
Mr. Brown for the past six years has been superintendent of the swine department at the State Fair. He is also vice president and a director of Brown, Foreman & Company. Mr. Brown is a member of the Fendennis Club and the Presbyterian Church.

On June 10, 1913, he married Miss Mary Rogers Lyons, of Louisville. Her father, W. L. Lyons, was born in Indiana and was a farmer, business man, and member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have a daughter, Judith L., born in 1917.

leading business men, and from an experience be-inning as a clerk for a local coal and feed firm has developed an enterprise of his own that is one of the largest of its kind in Madison County.

Mr. Broadus was born in Madison County January 17, 1876, and bears the same name as his grandfather who was a lifelong resident and prominent farmer, and before the war a slaveholder in Madison County where he died in 1879. His father was one of the early settlers of this section of Kentucky. William W. Broadus is a native of Madison County and was born in 1832. George S. Broadus, father of the Richmond merchant and now living with his son at Richmond was born in September, 1854, and during his active years conducted an extensive farm in the eastern part of Madison County on the Speedwell pike. He was a dem-cratic party worker and lives at Nashville.

William Wilson Broadus was born in Madison County January 17, 1876, grew up on his father's farm, and attended rural schools until he was sixteen. Soon after leaving school and the home farm he came to Richmond and entered the employ of L. R. Blanton, a coal and feed dealer. He was with that concern fourteen years, familiarizing himself with every detail of the business and was well equipped in every way when he established himself independently in 1900 as a retail dealer in coal, feed and building materials. He owns his office building and yards on Orchard Street, also a warehouse and yards on Orange Street, and leases 300 acres of farm lands where he conducts farmer operations as a means of using profitably and to the best advantage the teams required by his business in the winter season.

Mr. Broadus also owns one of the most attractive homes of Richmond, a complete modern residence, built in 1921, in a fine residential section on Sunset Avenue. As a man interested in the welfare of his community he served two terms on the City Council, is a democrat, a member of the First Christian Church, and is affiliated with Madison Lodge No. 14, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Fleeting Canoe Tribe
No. 76, Improved Order of Red Men, and Richmond Lodge No. 581. B. P. O. E. He kept his time and means and influence generously at the disposal of the government throughout the period of the world war.

In 1896 at Richmond Mr. Broadus married Miss Mattie McCollum, daughter of Isaac and Sarah (Parr son) McCollum. Her father, died at Richmond and her mother is now living at Lexington.

William David Laswell, M. D. A highly competent and well trained physician and surgeon. Doctor Laswell is also a thorough business man and has combined medical practice with the ownership and operation of some extensive farming interests. Doctor Laswell has practiced in several localities, but for half dozens years his home has been at Kings Mountain.

He was born at Orlando, Rockcastle County, Kentucky, October 7, 1875. His paternal ancestors were Scotch-Irish and located in America in Colonial times.
His grandfather, Jerry Laswell, was born in Indiana in 1818 and as a young man moved to Rockcastle County, Kentucky, where he married and where he was engaged in farming. His wife was Miss Harriet.
His wife was Mrs. Elizabeth (Taylor) McClure. She was born in Green County, Kentucky, in 1860, and died at Rock-castle County in 1875.

David Laswell, father of Doctor Laswell, was born at Orlando in 1838 and died there in 1911, having spent all his life on one farm. He had the qualifications of a good farmer, and made a more than ordinary success of his business. As an Eastern Kentuckian he was a republican in politics. David Laswell married Flury Jane Clark, who was born at Johnetta, Kentucky, in 1844, and died at Orlando in 1913. Her father was Wallace Clark, who was born in Madison County, Kentucky, in 1801 and died in Rockcastle County in 1875, having lived in Rockcastle County from the time of its formation, and was prominent in his liberal way as a Democrat but in the greater part of his active life followed farming.
He was a member of the same family as Gen. George Rogers Clark. Wallace Clark married Mary Abney, who was born in Rockcastle County in 1812 and died there in 1852.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. David Laswell were:
William, farmer in Rockcastle County; Jane Eth-eph, wife of William Adams, an oil operator and farmer at Talsa, Oklahoma; Nancy Jane, wife of B. G.
Mullins, a farmer in Rockcastle County; Oliver Preston, who died at the age of twenty-one; Martilla, wife of Isaac A. Chastine, farmer and school teacher in Rockcastle County; Jerry R., of Tulsa County, Oklaahoma; Celia, wife of Wilmor Chesnut, a farmer in Rockcastle County; Dr. William David, who is the seventh in this large family; Flury Hays, wife of George Evans, a bridge carpenter in Rockcastle County; Lillie Belle, whose first husband was Dr. H.
Hundley, a physician and surgeon, and she is now the wife of Henry L. Smith, an oil field worker at Tulsa County, Oklahoma; Elize, a trained nurse living at Mount Vernon, Kentucky, wife of Bennett Ballard; and Mrs. Mary Laswell, County Farmer in Rockcastle County.

William David Laswell grew up on his father's farm in Rockcastle County, and while there attended rural schools, supplementing these advantages by attending Mount Vernon College Institute and Berea College at Berea. For seven years of his younger life he taught in rural districts of his native county. On July 2, 1902, he graduated with the M. D. degree from the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville, and for the past seventeen years has given his time and energies almost completely to his practice. For three years he practiced at Orlando, another three years at Wildie, located at Kings Mountain in 1910, remained there 1½ years, then for 2½ years practiced at Mount Vernon, and in 1915 resumed his professional interests and lived on Mount Vernon. He now lives at 3201 Stanford Street, and he is a member in good standing of the County, State and American Medical associations.

Doctor Laswell owns and with the assistance of his sons carries on productive operations on several farms, one, of 789½ acres, in the Highland section on the Stanford and Somerset Pike in Lincoln County, another, of eighty acres, near Kings Mountain, and one, of 176 acres, on Green River in Lincoln County. Doctor Las-well is a republican, a member of the Baptist Church, affiliated with Waynesburg Lodge, F. and A. M., is a Royal Arch Mason, a member of Mount Vernon Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Kings Mountain Camp, Modern Woodmen of America. His time and means were freely disposed to aid the Government during the World war.

In 1909, in Rockcastle County, he married Miss Leta Cemile Reams, daughter of George and Mrs. (Hickey) Reams, the latter deceased. Her father is now a farmer and blacksmith at Trenton, Missouri. Mrs. Laswell, who died in 1912, was the mother of five children: Edith, wife of J. C. Benson, a farmer at Arabia, Kentucky; Orville Preston, assistant to his father on the farms; Harrison Edward, William Doolin Jr., and George Sheldon, all attending public school. In 1913, at Berea, Kentucky, Doctor Laswell married Miss Enunice Parker Ball, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Haskell Ball. Her father is a farmer and cabinet maker at Honaker, Virginia, and her mother is now deceased. Dr. and Mrs. Laswell have three children: Mary Elizabeth, born October 26, 1915; Wallace Haskell, born August 29, 1917; and Margaret, born April 18, 1920.

Corydon F. Mantz. Even as he has proved his success-winning powers in connection with farm industry in Taylor County, so has Mr. Mantz demonstrated his ability in his effective administration in the office of high sheriff of the county, a position of which he is the valued incumbent at the time of this writing, in the summer of 1921.

Sheriff Mantz was born in Medina County, Ohio, on the 30th of January, 1861. His father, F. R. Mantz, was born in Lehigh County, Pennsylvania, in 1838, and was a representative of a family that was founded in the old Keystone State in the pioneer days. He was a resident of Logan County, Ohio, at the time of his death, in 1910. He was a son of Reuben Mantz, who was born and reared in Lehigh County, Pennsylvania, where his marriage was solemnized and whence he removed to Medina County, Ohio, about the year 1842, he having there become a successful farmer and having there passed the remainder of his life. The original American progenitors of the Mantz family immigrated from Switzerland and established residence in Pennsylvania in the Colonial period of our national history.

F. R. Mantz was reared to manhood in Medina County, Ohio, there his marriage occurred and he devoted his entire active life to farm enterprise. In 1886 he came to Taylor County, Kentucky, and here he continued his activities as a farmer until 1908, when he retired and established his residence in Logan County, Ohio, where his death occurred about two years later, his wife having died within the period of their residence in Taylor County, Kentucky. Mrs. Mantz, whose maiden name was Phoebe Edson, was born in Medina County, Ohio, in 1840. Of the children the present sheriff of Taylor County is the eldest; Cassius was a representative physician and surgeon in the City of Toledo, Ohio, at the time of his death; Charles, a lawyer by profession, died at Colville, Washington. The father was a staunch republican, and prior to coming to Kentucky had served six years as county recorder of Medina County, Ohio. During the last three years of the Civil War he served as a valiant soldier of the Union, he having been a member of the Forty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and the Grand Army of the Republic, and both he and his wife were zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The district schools of his native county in the Buckeye State afforded Corydon F. Mantz his early education, and he continued to be associated with the activities of his father's Ohio farm until 1885, when he came to Taylor County, Kentucky, and engaged in independent farm enterprise. He remained on his farm until 1902, and thereafter he owned and operated a flour mill at Campbellsville until 1918, when he sold the mill and business and resumed his activities on his farm, which he still owns. He continues to give a general supervision to his well improved farm, situated three miles north of Campbellsville and comprising 160 acres. The place is devoted to diversified agriculture and the raising of good types of livestock.

Always inflexible in his allegiance to the republican party, Mr. Mantz has been one of the influential representatives of the same during his residence in Taylor County, and in 1910 he was elected and assumed the office of sheriff of the county to fill an unexpired term. He became a candidate for re-election in 1921. The sheriff is a deacon of the Presbyterian Church at Campbellsville, and his wife likewise is an earnest member of the church. He is a director of the Taylor County Milling Company, and at Campbellsville is affiliated with Fitman Lodge, No. 124, Free and Accepted Masons, and both he and his wife are members of the Eastern Star. He took an active part in the furtherance of Governmental agencies working in support of the nation’s participation in the World war, and subscribed liberally to the various Government bonds and the war savings stamps.

July 28, 1883 recorded the marriage of Mr. Mantz to Miss Belle Elmer, who was born in Massachusetts.

P. V. Ellis, M. D. To speak from the intelligent standpoint of a physician, that greatest of human blessings, health, is the harmonious adaptation of the body to its environment, and no one but an experienced medical man understands how seldom is this harmony maintained. It is his beneficent office to bring it about, if within the scope of his skill, and, if this be impossible, then to ease pain and apply every remedy known to medical science to ameliorate further suffering.

In no profession is the responsibility greater than that of medicine, and in no profession are found higher types of sterling manhood and conscientious benefactors of humanity. A prominent member of this noble profession in Carroll County, Kentucky, is Dr. P. V. Ellis, physician and surgeon at Ghent, he has been established in practice for a quarter of a century.

Doctor Ellis was born in the pleasant little City of Ghent, March 16, 1862, the eldest of three sons born to Dr. P. C. and Drusilla (Tandy) Ellis. His one living brother, Gen. James Tandy Ellis, is a prominent resident of Lexington, Kentucky. He served as adjutant-general of the State of Kentucky under the administrations of Governor McCrory and Governor Stanley, retiring in 1918. Dr. P. C. Ellis, for many years a distinguished physician and surgeon at Ghent, was born in 1818, in Bourbon County, Kentucky. His parents were David and Nancy (Clarkson) Ellis, descendants of pioneers from Virginia, farming people who lived near Paris, Kentucky. Dr. P. C. Ellis was graduated from the medical department of the University of Louisville in the class of 1844, settled at Ghent when it was but a village and spent his life here, retiring from active practice in 1870 and dying in 1892. He was held in great esteem all over Carroll County, was buried in his adopted city. The party, although never an office holder, was one of the early Masons, and for years was active in the Christian Church. He married Drusilla Tandy, who was born at Ghent in 1834 and died here in 1884.

Dr. P. V. Ellis received his primary and his college education at Ghent, a feature being made of the classics, and then spent two years in college at Georgetown, Kentucky, before entering the medical department of the University of Louisville, from which he was graduated in 1886, with his medical degree. Although he immediately began practice, Doctor Ellis has never felt that he, with all his years of study and experience, has ever reached the limit of knowledge in his beloved profession. He dedicates some months every few years to post-graduate work in the different great medical centers of the country, and has taken courses in the Chicago and also in the New York Polyclinics, working under the supervision of some of the most eminent physicians and surgeons in the world.

In 1886 Doctor Ellis opened his first practice at Augusta, in Hancock County, Illinois, and remained there five years, removing then to Marshalltown, Iowa, and five years later, in 1896, came to Ghent, and has remained there. He is the present health officer of Carroll County, and his professional services are highly valued both publicly and privately. He is a valued member of the Carroll County and the Kentucky State Medical Societies, and the American Medical Association.

In 1887, at Augusta, Illinois, Doctor Ellis was married to Miss Nancy Skinner, who was born at Augusta in 1851 and died at Ghent, Kentucky, in 1901. At Ghent, in 1903, Doctor Ellis was married to Mrs. Hallie (Howard) Bailey, daughter of the late John and Mary (Scott) Howard. Doctor Ellis has three children, born to his first marriage: Lawrence, who now lives at Tucson, Arizona, enlisted for service in the World war in an artillery corps in September, 1917, spent one year in training at Camp Shelby and was then mustered out of service on account of disability; Victor, who served in the United States Navy all through the World war, in American waters, and now owns and operates the Wilson County Clinics, Kentucky; and Ruth, who resides at home. Doctor Ellis and his family belong to the Christian Church at Ghent, in which he is a trustee.

In politics Doctor Ellis has been a life-long democrat, but professional and other interests have too closely claimed his time for him to become active in the political field. During the World war he served as medical examiner for the Carroll County Draft Board, and otherwise did his full duty in all the local war activities. He has always lent encouragement to home business enterprises, is president of the Ghent Electric Light Plant, and owns and conducts in partnership with Dr. J. S. Brown, the leading drug store in this part of Carroll County. In addition to this property he owns a building, also on Main Street, a handsome modern residence and other improved realty. Doctor Ellis also has 400 acres of rich farm land in Gallatin County. He is a member of Ghent Lodge No. 344, F. and A. M., of which he has been master several times.

Andrew J. Grundy. There is much of interest attaching to the personal career and ancestral history of this now venerable and honored citizen of Marion County, where he resides upon the fine old homestead farm of 300 acres and where he is living virtually retired after many years of earnest and effective association with business and industrial enterprise.

Andrew January Grundy was born at Maysville, in the district of Hamilton, now in the State of Ohio, on the 18th of October, 1842, and is the son of Robert Caldwell Grundy and his second wife, Sarah Ann (January) Grundy. He was the only child of this union and was six years of age at the time of the death of his mother, who was born May 8, 1822, and who was but twenty-six years of age at the time of her death, in 1848. The father first married Hannah McElroy and they had one daughter, Elizabeth who is deceased. The second Mrs. Grundy was a daughter of Andrew McConnell January, of Maysville.

Rev. Robert C. Grundy was born in the year 1827 and his death occurred in 1895. He was one of the five sons of Samuel R. Grundy, who was a prominent business man and influential citizen of Washington County, Kentucky, where he owned a large tract of land. Hon. Felix Grundy, a brother of Samuel R. Grundy, was born on his father's farm in Washington County, Kentucky, and became one of the most distinguished lawyers and jurists of the Blue Grass State, with high reputation as an eloquent orator and resourceful criminal lawyer, besides which he served as a member of the United States Congress, as United States senator from Kentucky and as attorney-general of the United States.

Rev. Robert C. Grundy was a man of high intellectual attainments and became one of the representative Presbyterian clergymen of his native state, his first pastoral charge after his ordination having been at Maysville. In 1857 he became pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Memphis, Tennessee, and in the climacteric period leading up to the War he courageously and loyally opposed the secession of the southern states. He was the only Union clergyman in the City of Memphis at this time, and after the war was precipitated and the city was occupied by Confederate troops they compelled him to close his church, besides which he suffered other indignities by reason of his adherence to his convictions. When the Union forces under General Grant occupied Memphis Mr. Grundy was requested to reopen his church, and this he did—to both soldiers and citizens. His position became untenable at Memphis as the war progressed, and in 1862 he accepted a call to the pastorate of a church in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, where he continued his zealous and faithful ministrations until his death, in 1880. The causes of the War were the subject of much discussion, and Mr. Grundy was one of the most influential clergymen in the State, and he appeared principal of the high school at Maysville, he having been the first to receive this appointment, which came through the medium of the City Council. There he continued his residence until 1868, when he removed to the City of Terre Haute, Indiana, where he established a book and stationery store and developed a prosperous business. On the 26th of December, 1871, he was united in marriage to Miss Willie Josephine McElroy, daughter of the late John and Lou Ann (Skiles) McElroy, whose home was a fine farm on the Bradfordville Turnpike, nine miles from Lebanon, Marion County. Mr. and Mrs. Grundy thereafter continued their residence at Terre Haute, Indiana, about one year, and they then came to the home of Mrs. Grundy's parents in Marion County.

Under these conditions Mr. Grundy sold his business at Terre Haute and assumed the active management of the old McElroy homestead, which then comprised 700 acres of Marion county land. This was known as the old McElroy homestead. On the site of the original house has been erected a commodious and substantial modern building, which constitutes one of the most attractive and imposing structures in the county, and which has diversified property interests in addition to his valuable real estate holdings in Marion County. He is one of the principal stockholders of the Citizens National Bank of Lebanon, of which he was vice-president, and was elected president in October, 1921, upon the death of the late president Robert E. Young. Mr. Grundy is also the owner of a one-fourth interest in the Maysville Cotton Mills, which business is capitalized on a stock capital of $200,000. He is one of Marion County's most honored and influential citizens, his business career has been marked by vigor and by successful achievement, and he has so ordered his course in all the relations of life as to merit and receive the high regard of his fellow men. Both he and his wife are zealous members of the First Presbyterian Church, and though he has had no desire to enter the arena of so called practical politics he is well fortified in his convictions concerning economic and governmental affairs and is a loyal supporter of the principles of the republican party.

Of the eight children born to Mr. and Mrs. Grundy six are living. John, Andrew, born October 17, 1872, and James Caldwell, born April 28, 1890, who are bachelors and maintain a partnership alliance in the control and management of the old home farm, with secure place as representative agriculturists and stock-raisers of Marion County. Sarah January Grundy is the wife of William Russell Deemer, a prominent lawyer and bank president at Williamsport, Pennsylvania, and a son of Hon. Elias Deemer. He served three terms represented that district of Pennsylvania in the United States Congress. Bessie May Grundy is the wife of Roy Ford Clary, a successful broker and real estate operator in the City of Great Falls, Montana.
Louise, the next younger daughter, is the wife of John J. Bausch, who likewise is one of the representative business men of Great Falls, Montana. Miss Harriet Cochran Grundy, remaining daughter of the parental home, is a young woman of high attainments and gracious presence, and she was graduated at the National Park Seminary, an exclusive school for young women at Washington, D. C., and one which all of her sisters likewise attended. She completed her education in a college in the State of New York, and she is a popular figure in the leading social activities of the home community.

Charles Lingard Cecil, whose death occurred on the 2d of March, 1921, was an honored veteran of the Confederate army and spent his life except for the war period on the old Cecil estate at St. Mary's.
This is a home of many interesting associations, and has been continuously in the Cecil family, handed down from one generation to another, for more than a hundred years.

Mary was born there October 28, 1841. His grandfather, Mathew Cecil, came from Maryland to Kentucky, and as a pioneer acquired 100 acres on Hardin's Creek, adjacent to the present site of St.
Mary's. He married a Miss Howard, member of a very distinguished family of Marion County and Kentucky. Mathew Cecil and his son Mathew J. Cecil were both planters and slave owners. Mathew J. Cecil married Angeline Hagan and they had nine children.
The eldest son, Mathew, was born in infancy.
Six grew to maturity: Sallie; Charles L.; John H., who volunteered in the Confederate army in 1861 as a member of Capt. John B. Castlemain's Company in Morgan's Command, was captured during one of the raids into Ohio, and while a prisoner of war at Camp Douglas, Chicago, was shot and killed as he attempted an escape; Flagle; Mary Victoria; and Ernest.

Charles L. Cecil grew up on the old homestead and was about twenty years of age when the war broke out. He was educated in St. Mary's and in 1860 graduated in the classical course from Cecilian College in Hardin County, Kentucky. This college was established and conducted for many years by his first cousins, Henry, Thomas, Ambrose and Charles Cecil.
Charles L. Cecil and his brother John, both volunteered in 1861 in Command B of the 9th Kentucky, in what was known as the Orphan Brigade. They enlisted at Bowling Green. The brigade was composed of boys or very young men, but displayed all the qualities of great soldiers in some of the hardest fighting of the war. Mr. Cecil participated in nine big battles in the Western army, beginning at Shiloh and ending with the campaign in Northern Georgia. For three months during the Atlanta campaign he was under capture; and was wounded in front of Atlanta, on the Augusta Road, at the extreme right of the Conederate army on July 22, 1864, while participating in a charge against the Federal army. For several months he was retired on account of his wounds, and was then put in charge of the Tax in Kind Com missary Department in Northern Alabama. Subsequently leaving for the Mississippi River, he found the Confederates had surrendered, and then started home. At that time there was much hostile feeling in some districts against returning Confederate soldiers, and he did not reach home until July 12, 1865. His father had died April 7, 1865, and the farm was stripped of all its movable property, the negro slaves had gone, and there was no money to aid in reconstructing the home and property. Mr. Cecil showed the courage of a good Kentuckian, and in several field dishes under obstacles and handicaps, and in later years found ample prosperity and did much to renew the substantial reputation the Cecil family has always enjoyed in this community. The Cecils are Catholics in religion. Mr.
Cecil during the later years of his life, lived retired at St. Mary's.

On April 7, 1874, he married Miss Susan M. Mat-tour to St. Mary's. Father at that time was the largest individual distiller in Kentucky. Three children were born to their marriage. Bennet D., the oldest, born in 1886, operates the old homestead. He married Elizabeth Johnson and has three sons and three daughters. John M. Cecil, born in 1890, lives at Akron, Ohio, is conductor on an interurban electric line, and by his marriage to Florence Mills has a son, Joseph C., born in 1918. The youngest, Angela, born in January 21, was the wife of the well-known distiller Everett Wingfield, of Daviess County, Kentucky. They were married September 28, 1919, and have one daughter, Dorothy Cecil, born in July, 1920. Everett Wingfield was through the World war under General Dickens, commander of the Third Division, saw some of the heaviest fighting on the western front, and was wounded in the hip, receiving a permanent injury and partial disablement.

William Ogleby Soyars was born at Slaughtersville, Webster County, Kentucky, April 22, 1892, a son of Dr. James Thomas Soyars and Medora Ogleby Soyars. His father, Doctor Soyars, was born in Christian County, Kentucky, January 11, 1838, and died in Webster County, Kentucky, February 7, 1890. In 1847 he removed with his father to Hopkins County, Kentucky, where he was reared. In 1858 he commenced the study of Medicine at Daviess County, Kentucky, and in 1859 attended lectures at Starling Medical College, Columbus, Ohio, from which he was graduated in 1861.

When war was declared between the two sections of the country he enlisted in Company A, First Kentucky Cavalry, C. S. A., and for a time served on the staff of General Helm. Later he was transferred to the secret service of the South, in which organization he was captured and was released.

Following his release from military prison he located at Slaughtersville, Kentucky, and there built up a lucra-
until his death. A zealous Mason, he was advanced ten degrees, and served as high priest of the Slaughtersville Chapter, R. A. M. In politics he was a staunch democrat and became a leader of his party, and for many years was chairman of the Democratic Central Commitee of Webster County. He married Mary Ogleby, who was born in Daviess County, Kentucky, July 20, 1870. She survives her husband and lives at Hopkinsville, Kentucky. Their children were as follows: Mary Thomas, who married Edmund Starling, resides at Hopkinsville; Jone, who married Holland Garnett, a farmer, lives on the Clarksville Pike in Christian County; Martha Ellis, who married William C. Peterman, lives in Brooklyn, New York; and William Ogleby, the youngest, who is the subject of this sketch.

The paternal grandfather, Col. John Soyars, was born in Pittsylvania County, Virginia, in 1805, but moved to Christian County, Kentucky, in 1831. He was a son of James Soyars, also a native of Pittsylvania County, Virginia, who entered the American Revolution when only sixteen years of age and served through the war, being at Valley Forge with General Washington in the terrible winter of that campaign. He was wounded and captured, but paroled toward the close of the war, and returned to his home, where he died in 1815. He was twice married and was the father of nine sons and seven daughters, all of whom reared families. James Soyers was a magistrate, high sheriff and representative of his county for sixteen years. Having served under General Lafayette, he was one of the committee of reception during that French general's last visit to America in 1824.

Col. John Soyers was married to Elizabeth Cannon, a daughter of Enoch and Elizabeth Cannon, of Halifax County, Virginia, born in 1805, and died in 1844. Enoch Cannon was one of the first preachers of the Methodist faith in America. Their children were as follows: Edward C., Mary F., who married William A. Orten and Dr. James Thomas.

The maternal grandfather, William Onlozo Oglesby, was born in 1816 in Jefferson County, Kentucky, and died in Daviess County, Kentucky in 1886, shortly before the outbreak of the war between the states. He married Katherine Harding, daughter of Alexander and Laura Harding, of Daviess County, and she died in Webster County, Kentucky, in 1875.

William Oglesby Soyers attended the public schools of Hopkinsville, Kentucky, his mother having moved to this city in 1868, and was graduated from its high-school course in 1910. He then entered Swarthmore College, at Swarthmore, Pennsylvania, and was graduated therefrom in 1914, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Following his graduation Mr. Soyers continued his reading of law in the office of Trimble & Bell of Hopkinsville, Kentucky, and was admitted to the bar in 1915, since which date he has been engaged in a general civil and criminal practice. In 1917 he was appointed city prosecutor by the City Commissioners of Hopkinsville, Kentucky, which office he held for four years. In 1921 he was nominated without opposition by the Democratic party for the office of county attorney of Christian County, and was elected by a majority of 548 votes, overcoming the republican majority of 1518 at the election of the preceding year. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of the Greek letter college fraternity Phi Kappa Psi and Book and Key, honorary society; an officer of the Hopkinsville Lodge, No. 1, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; the Hopkinsville Academy of Political and Social Science; a charter member of the American Legion, St. Louis Convention, and has served on the State Executive Committee of the same.

During the first month of the World war Mr. Soyers entered the United States service, enlisting in the First Reserve Officers Training Corps at Fort Benjamin Harrison near Indianapolis, Indiana, May 8, 1917. He was stricken with appendicitis soon afterward, and sent home where he underwent an operation. Twice thereafter he volunteered and was rejected on account of the recentness of this operation, and for a time served as Government appeal agent for Christian County. In April, 1918, he re-enlisted in the United States Marine Corps as a private, was trained at Parris Island, South Carolina, and assigned to ship duty with the marine detachment of the U. S. S. "Cincinnati," first Atlantic Patrol Division. He was discharged March 29, 1919, holding ship warrant as a corporal, and returned home to resume his practice.

George W. Calhoun who since 1918 has represented some of the very extensive interests of his family in Kentucky, is president of the Frankfort Elevator Coal Company and a resident of the capital city. Mr. Calhoun is a great-grandson of the great southern statesman John C. Calhoun of South Carolina, whose eminent position in American history is too well assured to require any reference here. It should be stated merely to establish the lineage that John C. Calhoun was born in South Carolina in 1782 and died at Washington in 1850. He was a grandson of James Calhoun, who came from Ireland to Pennsylvania in 1723. The father of the South Carolina statesman was Patrick Calhoun, who married Martha Caldwell. The Calhouns established the Calhoun settlement in the upper part of South Carolina in 1756, and the name has been prominently identified with that state and with other southern states for more than a hundred and a half.

A son of John C. Calhoun was Andrew Pickens Calhoun, grandson of the Frankfort business man. Andrew P. Calhoun was born at Fort Hill, South Carolina, and spent his life there as a planter. He married Margaret Green, who also died at Fort Hill.

Patrick Calhoun, father of George W. Calhoun, was born at Fort Hill, South Carolina, in 1857, and is now living practically retired at Calhoun Falls in South Carolina. He grew up at the old Calhoun family seat until the death of his father, studied law in St. Louis, and at the age of twenty-eight was general counsel of the Southern Railroad. He was a member of the firm Calhoun, King & Spaulding at Atlanta, Georgia, where he lived for a number of years. Alexander King, of this firm, was succeeded in his administration by Wilson H. Caudle. Giving up law practice, Patrick Calhoun for several years was an extensive operator in Wall Street, New York, handling real estate investments and coal. He was president of the United Railroads in San Francisco, and maintained offices both in New York City and San Francisco and also at Cleveland. He gained his railroad experience by his early association in the San Francisco earthquake and fire. He also had large property interests in Cleveland. In 1916 he returned to his large plantation at Calhoun Falls in his native state, where he owned 15,000 acres, including a portion of the old Calhoun estate. He also has a large property at Port Royal, South Carolina, and is owner of some valuable coal properties at Beattyville, Kentucky. Captain Calhoun is a strong democratic. He married Sarah Williams, who was born at Charleston, South Carolina, in 1866. Of their eight children Martha, the oldest, is the wife of Wilson B. Hickox, of the firm Hamil & Hickox, steel merchants and real estate owners at Cleveland; Margaret, wife of Paul Scott Foster, who has charge of the Foster Company and lives at San Rafael, California; Patrick, Jr., vice president of the Trinity Coal Company of Kentucky; George W.; John C., in charge of the southern interests of his father's estate and a resident of Port Royal, South Carolina; Andrew Pickens, of Frankfort, secretary of the Frankfort Elevator Coal Company and treasurer of the Jett Coal and Transportation Company at Carrollton, Kentucky; Miss Mildred, who lives with her brother John at Port Royal; and Sallie W., whose home is with her brother George W. at Frankfort.

George W. Calhoun was born in New York City October 5, 1892. He was prepared for college at Pomfret, Connecticut, and attended Yale University to the middle of the junior year. He is a member of the Psi Upsilon college fraternity. Leaving Yale in 1916, Mr. Calhoun spent a few months with the great Cleveland steel and coal firm of M. A. Hanna Company, following which he took charge of his father's plantation at Port Royal one year. He took the summer agricultural course at Cornell University, and then resumed charge of the South Carolina plantation. When America entered the war with Germany his brothers enlisted for service, and George felt in duty bound to assist his father. In June, 1918, he came to Frankfort, following which he took charge of the Frankfort Elevator Coal Company, a business he is active in managing today. He and his father and his brothers Andrew and Patrick are behind a great development work in improving transportation facilities on the Kentucky River, chiefly for handling coal. They own an extensive fleet of coal vessels and are now building a shipyard at Frankfort. The Calhouns are pioneers in this development and have already done a great deal for Kentucky in that line. One of the brothers, Patrick, Jr., has charge of the mines at Beattyville, Andrew has charge of the transportation facilities, while George Calhoun is sales manager for the business, his offices being at the foot of Steele Street in Frankfort.

Mr. Calhoun, who is unmarried, lives in the Cromwell Apartments in Frankfort. He is a democrat, a member of the Masonic Order, a member of the Church of Christ, and a member of the Hebron Deposit Bank. On March 1, 1920, the Hebron Deposit Bank was established, and Mr. Rice was called to his present duties as cashier, being at that time only in his twentieth year. This bank has made a splendid record during its first year. It has capital of $20,000, an earned surplus of $1,000, and deposits of about $50,000. Joel C. Clore, postmaster of Cincinnati, is president of the bank, and the vice president is J. E. Cloud.

Wilford Monroe Rice is one of the youngest bank executives in Kentucky. He received his early training as a bank clerk, one of the metropolitan banks of Cincinnati, when he was a boy. Marion County, Kentucky, where he settled in the early pioneer days and instituted the reclamation and development of a farm. He served as a private in the War of 1812 and took part in the battle of New Orleans. His son, Elijah, grandfather of the subject of this review, passed his entire life in Marion County, where he became a substantial farmer and where he was an honored pioneer citizen at the time of his death.

James H. Glasscock was born in what is now known as the Hayesville District of Marion County, on the 16th of August, 1853, and is a son of Chaffin and Susan Glasscock, both of whom remained on their farm in this county until their deaths. The father began his indepen- dent career as a small farmer, and the daughter,-lasting experience, and its application, self-denial and economy that he and his devoted wife eventually acquired a good farm and enjoyed the prosperity and comfort that were eminently their due. Concerning their children the following brief record may consistently be entered at this juncture: Sallie was born in 1851 and died in 1894; James H., of this sketch, was the second child; Elijah was born in 1855 and died in 1913; Virginia was born in 1858 and died in infancy; George, who was born in 1861, resides on his father's old home farm near Lebanon; Winnie, who was born in 1863, is the wife of William Cangnanher, of Lebanon; Frank W. died in infancy; and Buenavista, who was born in 1871, died in 1894.

To meet exigencies and conditions, James H. Glasscock received but limited educational advantages in his youth, but through self-discipline and through his active association with the practical affairs of life he has effectively overcome this youthful handicap and is a man of business ability and mature judgment. He continued to assist in the work of his father's farm until he had attained to his legal majority. Mr. Glasscock, in 1872, found a worthy helpmate by his marriage to Miss Elizabeth Hays, who was born in Marion County on the 14th of January, 1855, a daughter of John and Augusta (Cox) Hays, the former of whom was born in Marion County, February 22, 1833, and the latter was born in Washington County, July 15, 1833. Her father was born in the old fort at Frankfort, this state, and his parents were later farmers in the same county, where he reared to manhood and proved himself worthy of his sterling pioneer ancestry. John and Augusta (Cox) Hays became the parents of five children, of whom Elizabeth, wife of the subject of this sketch, is the eldest; James A. was born March 10, 1838, and his death occurred October 1, 1874; Virginia was born July 15, 1844, and died July 11, 1865; Samuel was born August 7, 1857, and his death occurred April 28, 1888; Mary Lee was born April 25, 1870, and now resides in the southern part of the State of Kansas.

After his marriage Mr. Glasscock established his residence on a farm of sixty acres on North Rolling Fork, and to this tract he later added at intervals until he had accumulated a valuable property of 288 acres, the land on which he lived in his old age. Mr. and Mrs. Glasscock maintained their home for twenty years, and both were indefatigable in their labors, even as they conserved economy by every possible means in order to place themselves in a position of financial independence and to provide advantages for their children. In that period prices for farm products were low, and Mr. Glasscock recalls that he received for hogs raised on his place at one time only 2½ cents a pound. For the decade between 1875 and 1885 Mr. and Mrs. Glasscock considered they were doing well if they could add $100 annually to their savings. After applying himself vigorously to work all of the daylight hours Mr. Glasscock would wait till evening to make his trip to the mill for necessary flour and feed. With the passing years increasing prosperity attended his efforts, and upon leaving the farm he removed to Bradfordsville in order to afford his children the advantages of the schools of that place. He remained at Bradfordsville sixteen years, and then sold his residence property in that village, in 1910, and purchased twenty-eight acres adjoining the City of Lebanon on the north. The house on this place was destroyed by fire in 1916, and for the following month he and his wife lived in the barn until they sold the property, as they did not wish to invade the homes of the neighbors, all of whom offered them generous hospitality and urged them to accept the same. Finally Mr. Glasscock purchased an adjoining five acres from J. F. Bar- ber, and the modern house on this place has since represented the home of himself and his wife. In 1919 he became sole owner of the purchase of a valuable farm of 107 acres, facing two modern turnpike roads and constituting one of the choicest farm properties in Marion County, both by reason of fertility and on account of its excellent improvements and eligible location for placing as a subdivision of Lebanon. This farm is under the management of Joseph Glasscock and is devoted to diversified agriculture and stock-growing. Mr. Glasscock has achieved success entirely through his own efforts and the effective co-operation of his wife, who has shared in their labors and responsibilities and who with him enjoys unqualified popularity in the county which has been the stage of their productive endeavors. Both are active members of the Baptist Church at Lebanon, and in Mr. Glasscock is a staunch democrat.

In this concluding paragraph is given brief record concerning the children of Mr. and Mrs. Glasscock. James R., who was born February 6, 1876, married Miss Nellie Thornton, and they have two children: Imogene, born November 23, 1902, and Hugh, born May 17, 1905. Imogene is the wife of John Beard, of Lebanon, and they have two children: Elizabeth and John C. Benjamin T., who was born May 29, 1886, is a bachelor and resides at Birmingham, Alabama, he being a postal clerk in the railway mail service. Verna, who was born February 6, 1884, first married James E. Willis and is now the wife of Lawrence Walker. She has two children by her first marriage: Elizabeth and John C., who were born March 2, 1902, and Hall G., born January 3, 1906. Samuel H., who was born January 26, 1888, married Miss Nora Isaacs, and their one child, Leland James, was born July 28, 1917. Joseph, the youngest of the children, was born December 3, 1903, and represented the family and his native state in the nation's military service in the late World War. On the 24th of July, 1918, he entered service and at Camp McClelland, Alabama, was assigned to Battery C, Thirty-fourth Artillery. Of his company of 106 men all except thirty-four were confined to the hospital during the epidemic of influenza in 1918, but he was one of those who escaped this affliction. The epidemic caused the revoltion of the order for his command to sail for France, and when a second order was later given this, too, was revoked owing to the severity of the disease prior to the date set for sailing. Since receiving his honorable discharge Joseph Glasscock has become associated with his father in the ownership and operation of the farm mentioned in a prior paragraph.

Roy E. Rader. A number of young men of exceptional initiative and executive ability are enlisted in the directing of large and important industrial and business enterprise centered about the Village of Bond, Jackson County, and among the number is Mr. Rader, who is assistant general manager of the Bond-Foley Lumber Company and vice president of the Bond State Bank. Further interest attaches to his rise in the local business field by reason of the fact that he is a native of Jackson County and a representative of an honored and influential family of this section of the state. He was born at Annville, Jackson County, June 21, 1832, and his father, Dr. John E. Rader, who was born in Owsley County, this state, in 1838. In his native county Doctor Rader was reared to the age of twenty years, and he then established his residence at Annville, Jackson County. After his graduation in the old Hospital College of Medicine, at Louisville, he continued in the practice of his profession until 1862, when he removed to Jackson, Breathitt County, where, as a leading physician and surgeon of exceptional talent, he continued in active general practice until 1894, when he met a tragic death, at the hands of a cowardly assassin, who had consistently become known as "Bad Tom" Smith. This dastardly murderer expiated his crime through legitimate legal action, and was charged with the murder of Brethin Rader, the family lawyer, and ever thus legally executed in that county.

Doctor Rader was a man of fine character and he manifested his personal and professional stewardship in his effective service to his fellow men. He was a democrat in political adherence, was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and both he and his wife held membership in the Baptist Church. His wife, who was a member of the Armistead family, was born in Jackson County, in 1833, and this gracious woman likewise met a tragic death, in 1899, when she was murdered by her second husband, who then killed himself. Of the children, Roy E., of this sketch was the second in order of birth; the eldest, Oscar M., resides at Berea, Madison County, and is a traveling salesman for the Belknap Hardware & Manufacturing Company, of Louisville; Jessie is the wife of F. W. Kimball, a contractor on the Rockcastle River Railroad, and they reside at Bond.

Roy E. Rader, who was but six years old at the time of his father's death, was reared in Jackson County, to whose public schools he is indebted for his youthful education. Thereafter he was for four years a student in the Kentucky University, at Lexington, and in 1912 he was graduated in the Bryant & Stratton Business College in the City of Louisville. In the meanwhile, when eighteen years of age, he began teaching in the rural schools, and he followed this vocation six years, in Jackson and Rockcastle counties. In 1912 he became a teacher of bookkeeping and penmanship, as well as rapid calculation, in the Bryant & Stratton Business College at Louisville, and he continued his effective service in this capacity until 1916. For a few years after his retirement he entered the employ of the allied corporations, the Bond-Foley Lumber Company and the Rockcastle River Railway Company, and through faithful and able service he has won advancement in this connection, as attested by the fact that he is now assistant general manager of the lumber company and secretary and treasurer of the railway company, besides being vice president of the Illinois State Bank.

Mr. Rader is aligned in the ranks of the republican party. He is affiliated with Bond Lodge No. 105, Knights of Pythias, of which he is past chancellor; and with Annville Council No. 190, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of which he is a past councillor. He took a vigorous part in the local war activities during the nation's participation in the World War, and his individual subscriptions to the government bonds were well above the average.

May 14, 1913, at Bond, recorded the marriage of Mr. Rader to Miss Minerva Cornelius, daughter of Frank and Nancy (Edwards) Cornelius, the farmer being now a prosperous farmer near Amelia, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Rader have four children, whose names and respective dates of birth are here noted: Howard D., March 3, 1914; Vernon C., October 6, 1915; Lucille Helen, September 11, 1918; and Fred P., March 5, 1921.

Reverting to the ancestral history of Mr. Rader, it is to be recorded that his grandfather, William Rader, was born in Jackson County, Kentucky, in 1832, and died at Welchburg, Jackson County, Kentucky, in 1918, where he became a pioneer farmer and where he was for many years a citizen of much prominence and influence. He was a leader in the local ranks of the democratic party, served as United States marshal in his district, as well as county sheriff, and was a gallant soldier of the Union in the Civil war. He married Sarah chambers, who was born in 1833 and who passed her entire life in Kentucky, her death having occurred shortly after that of her husband, in 1918.

Clinton F. McAfee for many years was prominent in the affairs of Lebanon, was a representative and descendant of that famous McAfee family which came to Kentucky in the early part of 1773, about the same time as Daniel Boone and other noted pioneers, and made their settlement not far from Harrodsburg in Mercer County. All authorities agree in giving them a conspicuous place in early Kentucky history, not only because of their early arrival, but on account of their courage, resolution, their ability to defend and make homes in the hostile wilderness, and certain qualities in leadership that have been continued through their descendants.

Clinton F. McAfee was born in Mercer County December 10, 1845. His remote ancestor was John McAfee, Sr., of Scotland, who married Elizabeth Montgomery. Later in the seventeenth century, when James II ascended the throne of Scotland and began the persecution of Protestants, John McAfee, Sr., was one of the leaders in the emigration to the North of Ireland, accompanied by members of the Montgomery, Michael and McCown families. His son, John, Jr., went with him to Ireland and both of them enlisted in the army of the Prince of Orange and fought at the battle of the Boyne. John McAfee, Jr., at the age of thirty married Mary Rogers, and they had four sons and six daughters. The second son, James McAfee, was born in 1707 and in 1737 married Jane McMichael, who was termed the "flower of Erin." She was Irish and he was Scotch, and their children were real Scotch-Irish. This is the Jane McAfee, who is buried at Harrodsburg, from whom many of the McAfees are descended. James McAfee on coming to America brought three children, John, James and Malcolm. Malcolm was named for the highland chief. Malcolm McAfee, one time King of Scotland. Malcolm, Jr., died during the voyage. John and James arrived safely in America, and their brothers and sisters born in this country were George, Margaret, Robert, Mary, William and Samuel.

The pioneers in Kentucky in 1773 were James, George and Robert McAfee. The story of their coming and their location at McAfee Station or McAfee Sprins, in Mercer County, where much of the land is still owned by their descendants, is part of the general history of Kentucky, upon which this sketch will not encroach. Of the brothers, George McAfee was the father of William McAfee, and William was in turn the father of Clinton.

Clinton F. McAfee attended school at Selvisa, and at the age of sixteen went to work in a drug store in that village, thoroughly mastering the business. Subsequently, at Harrodsburg, he owned and operated a drug store for a number of years.

In 1875 Clinton McAfee married Miss Minnie Shuck, of Lebanon, daughter of John and Lucretia Shuck. Her father was a very talented and prominent Kentucky lawyer, born in 1808 and died in 1873, and the record of his work is of interest and 将需要的部分翻译为中文。
he established a drug business and continued one of the leading merchants of that city until his death on February 4, 1890. He was very progressive in his citizenship, seeking whenever possible to advance the interests of his community as well as his own and exemplified many of the strong characteristics of his ancestry.

His only child, Lucia, was born August 30, 1876, graduated from Potter College in Bowling Green, Kentucky, and on April 17, 1901, became the wife of Hugh Murry. Mr. Murry was also a druggist, and for many years conducted the leading business of the kind in Lebanon County, Lebanon. He died August 8, 1920. Surviving him is his widow, Mrs. Murry, and their only daughter, Margaret Coleman, who was born March 28, 1902. This daughter seems to inherit much of the beauty ascribed to her remote Irish ancestry known as the "flower of Erin." She is a graduate of Sayre College at Lexington, and on June 30, 1920, became the wife of James E. Durham. Mr. Durham was born at Lebanon June 20, 1888, son of John R. and Maggie (Mayes) Durham. Maggie Mayes Durham descended from the Forsythos, who were allied with the McAfees in early generations, and the Forsythos were also among the earliest Kentucky pioneers. James E. Durham is a successful business man of Lebanon, and is associated with his father in the management of hardware and plumbing establishment at Lebanon and extensive farming interests. James E. Durham was educated at Center College, Danville.

John Richard Barber. One of the very prominent families of Washington County has been that of Barber, represented by the late John Richard Barber, who was one of the county's wealthy citizens and who shared much of his individual prosperity with the community.

He was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, June 5, 1811, son of Phileth Swift and Cecelia (Smith) Barber. Phileth Swift Barber was a native of Buffalo, New York, and had a youth of struggle and adversity. As a young man he removed to the City of Louisville. He had an expert knowledge of the hatter's trade, and followed that occupation at Louisville for several years. Later he became a furrier, and bought and gathered furs over a wide extent of country, even in Canada. The surplus from his business he invested wisely in real estate, and in course of years was prospered, so that his fortune was estimated at more than $30,000 at the time of his death.

His wife, Cecelia Smith, was a native of Washington County, Kentucky, was of humble parentage, but possessed of strong intellect and force of character, and her keen business judgment was largely responsible for her husband's success. He was not a man of education, but was actuated by high purpose and had wonderful resources of both mind and body. His wife was of Catholic parentage, and throughout life was a devout Catholic, winning her husband ever to the same faith and, of course, her children. When they married and for several years afterward they lived near Louisville, removing then to a farm in Washington County. Their final years were spent at Bardstown, where both died at advanced age.

John Richard Barber completed his education at St. Mary's College in Washington County. In 1861 he entered the Confederate army and served in the famous Orphan Brigade. He was captured and for months was held a prisoner of war at Rock Island, Illinois. After the return of peace he identified himself with the old home in Kentucky, soon married and settled on a farm in Washington County. While farming was his life occupation, he had various extensive interests. He was a builder of a fine hotel building and an opera house at Springfield, and his time and means were always at the disposal of progressive interests.

John Richard Barber, who died at his country home near Springfield February 14, 1920, married first Miss Flety Yancy, of Clarksville, Tennessee. She was survived by four sons, Philetus S., Jr., and John L., of Springfield, and Thomas, Yancey and Kent C. of Bardstown. In 1885 John R. Barber married Miss Mary Anderson. She is the mother of three sons and two daughters, Joseph Alexander, Samuel L., Richard O., Marie Cecilia, wife of Dr. H. J. Boone, a dentist, and Mrs. Sarah Louise Dudley. The family are Catholics, and Mrs. Barber and several of her children still live at Springfield.

JAMES THOMAS PRATHER. During an active life of nearly forty years Mr. Prather has become prominently known in Washington County as a teacher, farmer, a positive influence in politics and civic affairs, and during the past four years as county clerk.

Mr. Prather was born on a farm in Washington County, March 22, 1864, a son of Isaiah and Elizabeth (Sutton) Prather, natives and life-long residents of Washington County, and a grandson of Thomas W. and Elizabeth (Colter) Prather. Isaiah Prather, who lived to the age of seventy-two, devoted his years to farming, but was also active in republican politics and for nearly twenty-five years a justice of the peace. He was a member of the Masonic Order.

His first wife, Elizabeth Sutton, was a daughter of James Sutton, who married a Miss House. Elizabeth Prather died at the age of thirty years, the mother of three children: Amanda F., deceased; James Thomas; and Preston Bramlett, one of the leading farmers of Washington County. Isaiah Prather's second wife was Fannie Hardin, and they reared two daughters, Flora and Laura.

James Thomas Prather acquired a good education in rural schools and in the high school at Perryville, and as a young man began teaching, a vocation he combined with increasing interests as a farmer. His home was in the country until he moved to Springfield to take up his duties as county clerk. Mr. Prather was elected on the republican ticket to this office in 1917. He is a member of the Baptist Church and is a Master Mason. On August 28, 1883, he married Miss Elizabeth Scruggs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Pearson Scruggs.

Sawyer A. Smith is a leading member of the bar of Knox County, is engaged in the practice of his profession at Barbourville, the county seat, with offices in the old building of Smith and Smith, and is recognized as one of the most active members of the profession.

He was born at Barbourville, Knox County, on the 9th of April, 1883. His paternal grandfather, Robert Smith, was born and reared in North Carolina, where he passed his entire life and became a prosperous farmer, and where his death occurred when his son, George W., father of Sawyer A., was a child. The founders of the Smith family in North Carolina came from England in the colonial period of American history.

George W. Smith, who now resides at Pineville, judicial center of Bell County, Kentucky, was born in North Carolina in 1831 and, as already noted, was a child at the time of his father's death. He came with his widowed mother to Knox County, Kentucky, where he was reared to manhood, where his marriage occurred, and where he developed the fine old homestead farm on which his son, Sawyer A., was born. There he continued his constructive activities as the successful agriculturists and stock-growers of Knox County until 1915, since which year he has lived virtually retired at Pineville. He is a man of strong individuality, was influential in community affairs during the long period of his residence on his Knox County farm, is a republican in politics, and is an active member of the Baptist Church, is Mr. Smith's wife. Mrs. Smith, whose maiden name was Sarah McKinney and who was better known by the personal name of Sallie, was born in Knox County in 1851, and here her death occurred on the heme farm, twelve miles north of Barbourville, in the year 1908. Elizabeth, eldest of the children, became the wife of Joseph Hammons, who now is engaged in farming five miles distant from Barbourville. The third child, Samuel, was born in Knox County when only fourteen years of age. Robert was serving as deputy sheriff of Knox County at the time of his tragic death, on the 24th of December, 1909. In pursuit of his official duties he was striving to effect the arrest of two negro thieves, one of whom shot and killed him at Artemus, this county, on the date above noted, his home having been at Barbourville. Sawyer A., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth and is the youngest of the children.

Reared under the invigorating influences of the home farm, Sawyer A. Smith initiated his educational work by attending the rural schools, and thereafter he continued his studies in the Baptist Institute at Barbourville and Cumberland College, at Williamsburg. In preparation for his chosen profession he entered the law department of Valparaiso University, at Valparaiso, Indiana, and in this institution he graduated as a member of the class of 1893. After thus receiving his degree of Bachelor of Laws he returned to Barbourville, was forthwith admitted to the bar of his native state, and he has since continued in active and successful general practice at the judicial center of his native county, the broad scope and importance of his law business bearing definite assurance of his professional ability and his unqualified personal popularity among his patient patrons. He is the leading lawyer of Barbourville and of the southeastern Kentucky region. He owns and occupies one of the modern and attractive residences of Barbourville, at 324 East Knox Street. He is a member of the Kentucky State Bar Association, is a vigorous advocate of the principles and policies for which the republican party stands sponsor, and has been active in the affairs of that political party in connection with the electoral work of the county. He has served as member of the legislature of the county.

In November, 1907, he was elected representative of the Sixty-ninth Legislative District in the Lower House of the Kentucky Legislature, his district comprising Knox and Whitley Counties. The campaign of 1908 was that in which Hon. W. O. Bradley, republican, defeated Hon. J. C. W. Beckham, democrat, in the election to the office of United States Senator, and Mr. Smith was Senator of the floor during the campaign of 1908, in which he made an effective record in the furthering of wise legislation and in advancing the interests of his constituent district. It has already been stated that he served as United States district attorney at Covington from 1900 to 1913.

Local activities in connection with the nation's participation in World War received the effective and loyal co-operation of Mr. Smith, who gave material assistance in the Knox County drives in support of the Government war loans, savings stamps, etc., as a member of the executive committees, and who was a member of the committee which directed the Red Cross campaign in Knox County. In furtherance of these war measures he made many patriotic speeches throughout his home county, and his financial contributions to the war effort were not an inconsiderable amount. Without asking any compensation he served as a member of the Knox County Exemption Board during the entire period of America's association with the war. December 29, 1913, recorded the marriage of Mr. Smith to Miss Effie Barton, daughter of the late George and Mary (Sevier) Barton, who were residents of Knox County at the time of their death. Mr. Barton having been engaged in the merchandise business at Gray, this county. Mrs. Smith was graduated in the Kentucky State Normal School at Richmond, and for four years prior to her marriage she was a successful and popular teacher in the high school at Middleboro, Bell County. Both she and her husband are active members of the Baptist Church at Barbourville. They have no children.

WILLIAM A. WATERS. The public service Judge Waters has rendered during his many years of residence in Springfield and Washington County entitles him to a high position of honor in the community and demands some representation in a volume of representative Kentuckians.

He is a native son of Washington County, born January 23, 1856, a son of Alexander and Nancy (Trowbridge) Waters. His father, a native of Lincoln County, was a son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Southerland) Waters, who came to Kentucky from Maryland and moved to Washington County when Alexander, their son, was two years old. Nancy Trowbridge was born and reared in Washington County, daughter of Alexander and Eliza (Johnson) Trowbridge. She lived to the age of seventy and her husband to seventy-five. Of the children one died in infancy and four are still living. The family are Baptists, and Alexander Waters was a staunch republican in politics. He spent his life as a farmer, and it was on a farm that William A. Waters grew to manhood.

William A. Waters acquired a country school education, and as a young man left the farm and became a drug clerk. Later for a number of years he was in business for himself as a druggist at Springfield. In 1886 he was appointed deputy sheriff, and in 1891 he became sheriff. That office he held for sixteen years, and made it an opportunity for complete and effective service to all the patrons of the office. He resigned to become superintendent of Grundy's Orphanage Home, a Presbyterian institution, and that was his post of duty for four years.

Long active in republican politics, Mr. Waters had a very unusual honor, one significant of his personal standing and popularity as well as his political affiliation when in 1917 he was elected county judge, being the first successful republican candidate for this office in twenty-five years. He is giving a well-ordered and efficient administration of county affairs.

Judge Waters is a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the Presbyterian Church. In 1881 he married Miss Lula N. Lee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thornton A., of Washington County. Their four living children are Elizabeth, William A., Jr., Robert Allen and Thornton Lee Waters.

WILLIAM CALDWELL McCHORD, of Springfield, has been a member of the Kentucky bar for practically half a century. His name ranks high among Kentucky lawyers, though doubtless he will be longest remembered on account of the leadership and the special services he has rendered in public affairs and the public life of his home county of Washington and the state at large.

His early life was one of struggle, the necessity of self-support interfering with the rapid achievement of his ambition to become a lawyer. His boyhood fell in the troublous period of the Civil war gud reconstruction, when the family fortune had been shattered, and he represents some old and distinguished names in Kentucky history.

The founder of the Kentucky branch of the family was John McChord, who came to this state from Maryland. He was of Scotch-Irish lineage and his religious faith that of the "old blue stocking" Presbyterian Church. He was one of the pioneers of Washington County. His son, Rev. James McChord, attained a distinguished name as a Presbyterian minister at Lexington. However, the line of descent to the Springfield lawyer was through his son, John McChord, Jr., who married Lydia Caldwell, Lydia Caldwell was a daughter of William T. and Mary (Wickliffe) Caldwell. Mary Wickliffe was the oldest sister of Governor Wickliffe of Kentucky. Their father, Charles Wickliffe, married a Miss Hardin, a sister of Ben Hardin, the great Kentuckian, and was an early pioneer of Kentucky. The Hardins, Wickliffes and Caldwell were all prominent in Kentucky. Mary Wickliffe and Mayor N. M. Stickler were married and the couple was identified with the beginning of history in Washington County. His place of settlement is still referred to as the Caldwell farm. On his land there in 1791 he built a brick residence, one of the finest structures of that kind in the state.

It was in this historic home that William Caldwell McChord was born July 3, 1850. He was a son of Robert Caldwell and Laura (Hynes) McChord. His father, who was born in Washington County December 24, 1824, and died in Marion County at the age of eighty-two, had inherited the old Caldwell homestead. The land of the Caldwell farm was patented to William T. Caldwell by Patrick Henry, then governor of Virginia. It remained in the hands of some members of the Caldwell family until 1863, when the raising of funds by the people in Lexington for the war effort was handled by Robert Caldwell McChord, then the owner, and he was compelled to sell and transfer his title to the property.

For a brief period Robert Caldwell McChord and his family resided in Boyle County and then removed to Marion County, where he lived out his years. His wife died in 1879, at the age of fifty. She was a woman of fashion and accomplishments, and was born and reared at Bardstown. She and her sister were small children when her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Abner Hynes died, and she grew up in the home of her uncle, Dr. Alfred Hynes.

William Caldwell McChord spent his early life in the country, and was thirteen years of age when his parents moved from Washington County to Boyle and then to Marion County, in 1865. His education in the elements of the ordinary country schools he at the age of seventeen became a clerk in the store of Mr. Phillips, and for many years the leading merchant of Lebanon. Not long afterward he arrived at the important decision to become a lawyer. His purposes were communicated to Mr. Phillips, who tried to discourage him, partly because he did not want to lose a good clerk and also because of Mr. McChord's limited education. Fortunately the young clerk was not to be turned aside from his decision, though there followed some years of struggle with adversity that might have discouraged one of less determined temper. Leaving Lebanon, he secured a clerkship in the office of the circuit clerk of Washington County, at a salary not enough to live on. While there he studied law, and in 1874, at the age of thirty-two, he was admitted to the bar. He continued to serve as deputy in the Circuit Court clerk's office in 1874 was elected county attorney and in September of the same year appointed master commissioner of the Washington County Circuit Court. He discharged the duties of commissioner six years and for eight years was county attorney during all of which time. Through these official positions he gained recognition for his abilities as a lawyer, and on leaving office had an extensive business awaiting him as a private practitioner. In 1887 he was elected from Washington County to the Lower House of the State Legislature. During the following session the Legislature provided for the calling of the Constitutional Convention of 1890-91. In that convention Mr. McChord was a delegate, and when the work of formulating the organic law was completed, Governor John Young Brown appointed Mr. McChord, John D. Carroll and James Sims as a committee of three to revise the Kentucky statutes to conform to the new constitution. That was a labor of a year.

In 1908 Mr. McChord was again returned to the Legislature. He took a conspicuous part in the deliberation of that body, particularly toward securing legislation favorable to the interests of tobacco growers. Subsequently he became counsel for the Burley tobacco growers of Kentucky, and was instrumental in securing some of the legal relief from the oppressive conditions under which the growers had labored, and also much to educate public opinion through a concise statement of economic conditions which he prepared and had circulated.

To Mr. McChord is due much credit for the improvement of Washington County's transportation service. He took the lead in building what is now known as the Louisville & Nashville branch of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. For many years he has been attorney for that railroad.

In addition to an extensive law practice Mr. McChord for many years had had important farming interests. He is a staunch democrat, and his name has been one of great prestige and influence in the party. He has been affiliated with the Masonic Order since 1872, is a Knight Templar, and in 1900 was elected grand master of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky Masons.

In 1875, while a young and struggling lawyer, Mr. McChord married Miss Nannie McElroy, and their home throughout their married life has been in Springfield. Five children were born to their marriage, one of whom died in infancy. The four living are: Charles M. McChord, a lawyer at Springfield; William C. McChord, senior, a member of the First National Bank of Springfield; Annie, wife of Rev. H. I. Burley, Baptist minister at St. Joseph, Missouri; and Jack Hynes McChord, also an attorney, now connected with the law department of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad at Louisville. Jack Hynes McCord was a volunteer for service during the World War, received his commission as a captain in the Officers Training School at Fort Benjamin Harrison, and was sent overseas to France, but had no opportunity to get into front line duty before the signing of the armistice.

LESLIE W. MORRIS is a Frankfort lawyer of many substantial business connections and interests, is a former state senator, and for a number of years his name has been one of exceptional note in the state, and he is one of Kentucky's able lawyers. He was born in Woodford County December 3, 1885. The family were settled in Woodford County in pioneer times by his grandfather, John R. Morris, a native of Virginia, who prior to the Civil War owned extensive tracts of land and many slaves in Woodford County, but lost much of his fortune as a result of the war. He died in Woodford County. He married a Miss Burley, a native of Kentucky. Mr. E. H. Morris, father of the Frankfort lawyer, was born in Woodford County in 1845, grew up and married and became a farmer in that section, and was identified with agriculture until he retired in 1904 and has since lived in Frankfort. He is a democrat and a member of the Catholic Church. His wife was Eddie V. Stephens, a native of Kentucky. He died in Frankfort in 1885 and died in Frankfort June 6, 1915. She was the mother of four sons, Leslie being the third in age. All the others followed commercial careers as traveling salesmen. William L. lives at Clarkestown, West Virginia; Ralph H. died at Frankfort in 1908 at the age of thirty-three, while Chester D. lives at Frankfort and represents the William L. Morris Company of Chicago in Alabama, Florida and Georgia. Leslie W. Morris during his youth attended the rural schools in his native county, and for six years was a

Jefferson Henry may consistently be designated as the honored dean of the bar of Green County, and during the course of his long and successful professional career he has been identified with much of the important litigation in the various courts of this section of the state. Though he is not a native of Kentucky, he is a scion of one of the old and noted families of the state, his paternal grandfather, Belfield Henry, a native of Virginia, having been comparatively a young man when he came to Kentucky and numbered himself among the pioneer settlers of Green County, where his death occurred a number of years prior to the birth of the subject of this review. He became one of the extensive landholders and farmers of the county, and prior to the Civil war owned a large number of slaves. His son, James L. Henry, born in 1816, and the latter in his extensive operations as an agriculturist and stock-grower. He continued his residence in Kentucky until 1862, when he removed with his family to Grayson County, Texas, where he became the owner of a large farm near Kentuckytown, and where he took his slaves, who remained with him until the close of the Civil war, which effected their emancipation. In 1865, shortly after the close of the war, Mr. Henry removed to Canehill, Arkansas, with the primary object of giving his children the advantages of Canehill College, and there he remained until his death, in 1871. He was an uncompromising advocate of the principles of the Democratic party, was more or less active and influential in the political affairs in Kentucky, Missouri and Texas, and served as county judge of Cade County, Missouri, from 1840 until 1860. Both he and his wife were zealous members of the Confederate Church. Of their children the eldest was C. M., who was a prominent and extensive agriculturist in the vicinity of Canehill, Arkansas, for many years prior to his death, which occurred when he was seventy-three years of age. He served as colonel of a Confederate regiment in the Civil war, near the close of which he received the brevet rank of brigadier general. Elizabeth became the wife of James T. Moore and both passed the remainder of their lives in Texas, where Mr. Moore was a prosperous farmer. He was captain of his company in a Confederate regiment in the Civil war, and was severely wounded in an engagement at Froggy Bayou, Louisiana. Martha died at Burnet, Texas, when forty years of age. Malvina became the wife of Dr. A. J. Culberson, a leading physician at Burnet, Texas, and there her death occurred. Jefferson Henry's youngest daughter, Margaret, was the next in order of birth. Malvina became the wife of William E. Culberson, and both died at Burnet, Texas, where he had been engaged in a mercantile business for a long period. William was drowned in a cloud burst in Wyoming when twenty-five years of age. T. A., who was for many years successfully identified with the banking business, died in 1910, at Red Fork, Oklahoma. The above record shows that the subject of this sketch is now the only surviving member of this family of children.

The rural schools of Missouri and Texas afforded Jefferson Henry his preliminary education, and after the removal of the family to Canehill, Arkansas, he there attended the high school two years and the Canehill College for an equal period. In the meanwhile he had applied himself also to the study of law, and on the 22d of January, 1872, he was admitted to the bar of Kentucky. In that year he established himself in practice at Greensburg, where he has since continued as one of the leading members of the Green County bar and where he has long controlled a large and representative law business, which has extended into both the civil and criminal departments of law and recorded the winning of many court victories of important order. Mr. Henry is a man who has ever been a student, and his reading and study have covered a remarkably wide range, with the result that his cultural powers are of the finest type and his intellectual horizon very wide. At his pleasant home, known for its generous and unpretentious hospitality, he has one of the best private libraries in Kentucky. His law offices are maintained in the Henry Building, of which he has been the owner since 1878, and which is situated on the west side of the courthouse square in Greensburg, his modern residence being at the corner of Main and Cross streets and being one of the finest in the city. In addition to these urban properties Mr. Henry is the owner of a well-improved farm on the rich bottom lands at the mouth of Big Russell Creek, Green County. He has always adhered to the ancestral political faith and is a leader in the ranks of the democratic party in this section of the state. He served eight years as a member of the General Assembly. Mr. Henry has never had any desire for public office, as he has preferred to give his undivided attention to his large and representative law practice. Both he and his wife are active members of the Presbyterian Church in Greensburg.

The perennial youth of Mr. Henry has been largely due to his vital interest in men and affairs, and the questions and issues of the hour receive his appreciative attention. Thus it was to be naturally assumed that he would take a prominent part in the various local war activities when the nation became involved in the great World War. He was chairman of the advisory board of Green County, served on other war committees in the county, aided in the various campaigns in the sale of war bonds and savings stamps, and was a member of the city defense committee, with which he has always been identified, and gave earnest support to Red Cross and Salvation Army service.

December 12, 1872, recorded the marriage of Mr. Henry to Miss Josephine L. Perry, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Tebbs) Perry, of Green County, where both continued to reside until their deaths, Mr. Perry having long been a resident of and a leading bank of Greensburg. Mr. and Mrs. Henry have but one child, Claudia, who is the wife of Early Vaughan, a successful farmer near Greensburg.

T. H. Hardesty, M. D. A prosperous physician and well-known citizen of the St. Mary’s community. Doctor Hardesty earned his early reputation and success in his profession by performing the arduous service of a country doctor in a district where he attended calls night and day, over bad roads, and many miles from home. He has exemplified the fine type of character, the self-sacrificing, devoted and able physician, and to an unusual degree has been able to mold life according to his own ambitions and efforts.

Doctor Hardesty was born in Meade County. Kentuckiana, lovely and lovelier, 1852, son of John S. and Sarah (Stephens) Hardesty. His father was a native of Kentucky and his mother of Indiana. The Hardestys came to Kentucky from St. Mary’s County, Maryland, and were of Irish ancestry. John S. Hardesty spent his life as a farmer in Meade County. Four of his children reached mature years: Ida L., wife of T. M. Knott, of Meade County; Priscilla, who lives at Tulsa, Oklahoma; Dorothea, married to Augustus, who married Daisy Payne, of Meade County.

Dr. T. H. Hardesty grew up on a farm and shared in the heavy toil of a country district with only common school advantages. He earned all his higher education, and put forth strenuous efforts to achieve his early ambitions. For a time he was a student in the Theraea Academy. He then worked hard to acquire the means for a professional education in his home environment, he went West, to Colorado, and became a laborer in the mines. He earned $3 a day at regular wages, and then by work after hours unloading ore wagons added substantially to his pay envelope, and by living very economically acquired the capital that enabled him to enter the School of Medicine of Louisville University, where he graduated with the M. D. degree in 1894. Doctor Hardesty began practice in his old home locality in Paynesville. It was a rugged country, with bad roads, and there are few physicians still in practice who braved the elements and did more physically exhausting labor in looking after their practice in early years than Doctor Hardesty. His sound talent and ability supplemented this profession’s zeal, and it is not strange that at one time he had the largest practice any physician ever enjoyed in that county.

In 1916 Doctor Hardesty removed to Stithton, Hardin County, where he practiced from December of that year until September, 1918. The Federal authorities located Camp Knox in that section of Kentucky, and his property with others, was appropriated for Government use. He was called upon to perform hospital duty for the army until February 10, 1919, when he removed to St. Mary’s and bought a beautiful and sightly home adjoining the town, where he has thirty acres in his estate. From here he continues his work as a physician.

Doctor Hardesty in 1881 married Mary A. Clark, who died October 26, 1894. By this union he had four children: Edith, born February 1, 1885, is the wife of Oscar Burch, a well-known farmer in Meade County, and they have four sons and three daughters; Lena is the wife of John E. Plaherty, a Meade County farmer, and has five sons and two daughters; C. Alonso, a farmer in Hardin County, who married Blanche Brown and has the family has two sons; Anna, born February 24, 1892, completed the eighth grade course of the public schools, attended Bryant and Stratton Business College, for one year was a bookkeeper and stenographer, and then joined the Sisters of the Good Shepherd and is now located at Carthage, Ohio.

October 3, 1886, Doctor Hardesty married Miss Ada Harrison, of Meade County. She died in June, 1898, leaving one daughter, Margaret, born May 20, 1890.

On January 9, 1909, Doctor Hardesty married Mrs. Dorothy (Campbell) Pollock. The three children of their union are: Louise, born October 15, 1903, a high school student; Thadeus, born December 29, 1908, now in the sixth grade; and Clarence, born in 1910. Doctor Hardesty, as this record shows, has a large family of children and grandchildren, and much of the impelling force of his early professional work was to provide proper care for his children and the thoroughly educated them and helped them to start in business. He is a public-spirited and broad-minded citizen and a faithful Catholic.

Joseph M. Mattingly, whose home is three miles from Lebanon, on St. Mary’s Pike, is member of various local clubs, financially identified with the agricultural, business and religious affairs of Marion County. Mr. Mattingly started his career as a banker, but after his father’s death became a farmer, and is one of the men who have made for progress in Marion County agriculture.

He was born in Marion County July 27, 1865, son of Edward H. and Abigail (Spalding) Mattingly. His family was born here in 1818 and died in 1891, and his mother was born in 1822 and died in 1880. Both were natives of Marion County. The grandfather was Basil Mattingly. Edward H. Mattingly and wife had eight children.

The oldest was the late Dr. W. E. Mattingly, a distinguished physician and philanthropist of Marion County. He was educated in the University of Louisville medical college, graduated from University, began practice at Lebanon, and earned the gratitude of an entire community by his courage and faithfulness during the cholera epidemic of 1873, when he remained at his post of duty and then, as always, gave his services and abilities without distinction to rich or poor or any other class. While much of his practice was among the poor and gratuosus, he amassed a fortune. He married Capitola Buckler, of a prominent family.
of Owensboro, Kentucky. Doctor Mattingly died February 1, 1910. He was devoted to the Catholic Church and at the time of his death made some generous bequests to church causes in his locality and also set aside a fund of $5,000 income which was to be devoted to the welfare of the worthy poor in Lebanon.

The second child in this family was Mary Susan, wife of Charles Beaven, of St. Mary’s. The third, Florence Elizabeth, is the widow of James J. O'Sullivan, a man of brilliant talents, a great mathematician, and he was associated editor of the Nashville Banner at Nashville, Tennessee. He died in 1875.

The second son and fourth child, Thomas Basil Mattingly, for many years was an extensive lumber dealer over the South, has always lived in Lebanon and is now retired. He married first Teresa Twiman, of Scott County, and for his second wife, Eliza Polin, Julia Mahala, the fifth child, is the wife of Edward M. Roney, of St. Mary’s, and now lives at Lebanon.

George Mattingly, the sixth in the family, was born October 14, 1852, and is a prosperous farmer on a portion of his father's estate. His first wife was Mattie Clark, and on January 28, 1898, he married Della Mills, who now lives at home. Feb. 28, 1901, George Mattingly and wife had four children. The oldest, Annie Josephine, born December 31, 1899, after a four years' course graduated with the last class of the noted Loretta Academy in 1918. The younger children are: George L., born August 8, 1902, finished his education in St. Mary’s and is a farmer; Joseph Alphonson, born July 2, 1903, who attended school at St. Mary’s and is preparing for the priesthood; and William William, born May 16, 1904.

Ben S. Mattingly, the seventh child, is a prosperous livestock commission merchant living at 920 Cherokee Road in Louisville. His first wife was Annie E. Twiman and his second marriage was to Lela Elkin.

Joseph M. Mattingly was the eighth and youngest of the family. He was educated in St. Mary’s, worked according to his increasing strength on his father’s farm, and when the farming man moved to the farm became associated with the Marion Bank at Lebanon. His father prior to his death in 1891 had requested that the old homestead remain in the family, and in order to do his part toward carrying out that request Joseph M. Mattingly left the bank and he and his two brothers bought from the other heirs the old homestead of 305 acres and then divided it. Joseph M. Mattingly lives in the comfortable old home erected by his father in 1857, and he devotes all his best energies to agriculture for the past thirty years.

On February 16, 1898, at St. Mary’s, he married Eliza Catherine Mattingly, of the same family name but not related. She was born January 10, 1870, a daughter of John A. and Teresa (O’Daniel) Mattingly. To their marriage were born seven children: Mahala, born December 15, 1888, died at the age of four years. John A., Jr., born September 10, 1900, was educated in St. Mary’s College and at Lebanon. September 10, 1918, became subject to the draft and two days later was called. He was anxious to get into the service, but the armistice was signed before his preliminary training had been completed. The third child, Mary Cecelia, born June 17, 1902, as educated in St. Catherine’s Academy, and is a finished musician, having a great deal of technical ability as a pianist. Delia C., born June 6, 1904, is a student in the St. Charles High School; Edward H., born August 4, 1905, also in the St. Charles High School; Richard F., born January 20, 1907, attends school at St. Charles; and Mary Teresa, born March 17, 1910, died in infancy.

Mrs. Joseph Mattingly had three nephews, sons of F. X. and Annie (Mattingly) Rapier, who were distinguished young soldiers in the American forces overseas. Their names are John Mattingly, H. Claude and Julian Rapier. John and Julian saw some of the heaviest fighting on the western front, were “over the top” many times, and frequently in the very storm center of warfare. Both returned to civilian life after the armistice. Their brother, Claude, who was also abroad, did not have the fortunate to get into the front lines during the war, and his ambition as a soldier not being satisfied by that experience he re-entered, waving his privilege of returning home, and spent a year with the Army of Occupation at Coblenz, Germany.

As these records show the Mattingly family have long been prominent in the Catholic Church. An aunt of Joseph M. Mattingly was the noted Sister Generose, who began her career in the Church of St. Charles, and lived to celebrate her diamond jubilee as a sister. The Loretta Sisterhood was founded at St. Charles.

Aaron G. Moss erected and equipped in 1909 the modern flour mill which he owns and operates at Greensburg, judicial center of Green County, and the enterprise is one of much importance in connection with the industrial activities and general civic life of the community. In addition to operating this mill Mr. Moss is engaged also in the lumber business, third since on 50 acres and 116 by 1905. He was born at Gradyville, Adair County, Kentucky, July 28, 1864, and in the same county his father, P. A. Moss, was born in the year 1835, and he passed his entire life in that county, in the vicinity of Gradyville, where he was long the most extensive landholder and successful farmer of the community. He was a staunch republican, and served a number of years as a magistrate in his home district. Both he and his wife are members of the American Episcopal Church, South. P. A. Moss was a son of Clark and Nancy (Read) Moss, both of whom continued their residence in Adair County until their deaths. The father of Clark Moss was a native of Virginia and became one of the pioneer settlers and substantial farmers of Adair County, Kentucky. The death of P. A. Moss occurred in the year 1902, and his widow met an untimely death in 1907, when she was drowned in Big Creek at Gradyville. Her maiden name was Mary Pickett and she was born near Gradyville in 1840. Of the children the eldest is N. H., a prosperous farmer near Gradyville; Theora is the wife of P. H. Davis, who is a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and they maintain their home in the city of Louisville; A. G., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; C. O. is cashier of the Gradyville State Bank; R. E. is the owner and operator of a large automobile garage at Greensburg; W. M., a flour-miller by vocation, died in the City of Louisville, at the age of forty-seven years; H. A. is one of the interested principals of the Louisville Cooperage Company and resides in the Kentucky metropolis; C. F. died at Gradyville when twenty-six years of age.

The public rural schools of his native county afforded A. G. Moss his early education, and he was reared on the farm of his boyhood residence, near the old home farm, with the activities of which he continued his association until he had attained to his legal majority. Thereafter he became a lumber inspector, and he continued his services in this capacity until 1891, when he engaged in the retail lumber business at Greensburg, where he still conducts this enterprise, though he has curtailed the same to a large extent since the enlargement of his flour mill, which, as previously stated, was erected by him in the year 1909, this being the most important mill in Green County and having a capacity of fifty barrels a day. The products of the mill are of high grade and command ready sale, the trade being largely of localized order. The mill is eligibly situated between Water and East Main streets, near the railway station, and on West Main Street is located the modern residence of Mr. Moss.

Mr. Moss is not only one of the leading business
Robert Boggs Lyle, of Lebanon, until his retirement was one of Kentucky's foremost farmers and stock-raisers, and helped develop and train some of the finest Kentucky horses of his time. A successful businessman, man and honored citizen, he is also held in high esteem for his prominent family relationships, the Lyles and their kin having been identified with Kentucky since almost the first settlements.

Mr. Lyle was born in Fayette County August 9, 1843. His first American ancestor was John Lyle, who came from Ireland to America and located in Rockbridge County, Virginia, where he died in 1768. Though he came from Ireland, his forefathers were Scotch, and the family is therefore what is known as Scotch-Irish. A son of John, the immigrant, was John Lyle, born in Carroll County, Virginia, in 1769. His son, Rev. John Lyle, was born in 1799 in Rockbridge County, and was a distinguished character in Kentucky religions and educational life. He was one of the first Presbyterian ministers in the West, and taught the first boarding school for girls in Kentucky, this school being located at the old Ryan House at Paris. He was also editor of the pioneer newspaper, the Paris Kentuckian. Rev. John Lyle married Margaret Irvin, widow of the noted Doctor Lapsley.

John Reed Lyle, son of Rev. John and father of Robert Boggs Lyle, was born at Winchester, Kentucky, August 8, 1800, and died in 1866. In early life he studied medicine, though he never practiced, then became a lawyer, and had many cases in the courts of Bowling Green, and was also an extensive farmer and planter. He was a man of kindly and most generous character. When the Civil War came on he was the owner of forty slaves, and when they were freed by the Act of Congress the price was estimated at about $50,000. Had he been willing to exercise his legal rights over his property he might have avoided the loss. However, he would never sell a slave or in any way break up the families, even though he had no use for forty darkies on his farm. In order to keep his slaves busy he contracted his surplus labor, some eight or ten, to the planting of food and for clothing and a hundred dollars a year, not for the sake of profit, but to insure good treatment of his blacks.

John Reed Lyle married Sarah Martin Irwin, who was born in 1800 and died in 1887, daughter of Robert Irwin, who was born in Virginia in 1768. Two other generations of American residents separated Robert in 1866 from Marion County, Kentucky, where he was buying direct from Ireland to Virginia. John Reed Lyle and wife had nine children, eight sons and one daughter, the three reaching maturity being William Joel, Robert Boggs and Edwin Reed.

Robert Boggs Lyle spent his early youth in a manner befitting the son of a prosperous planter and farm owner. He had advanced his higher education to the junior year of College at Danville when, in 1863, as a result of the emancipation of the slaves, he left his studies and assisted his father in operating the farm. After his father's death in 1866 he, with his two brothers, continued the farming operations until 1874, when he sold his interest in the estate to his brothers.

On November 26, 1873, he married Miss Mary Eliza McElroy, of Marion County. In 1874 he bought 447 acres near Bradfordsville, and that was the scene of his prosperous operations as an agriculturist for some fifteen or twenty years. While he conducted a general farm, he always specialized in blooded stock, and raised many thoroughbreds and for about fifteen years had his horses on some of the noted Kentucky courses, gaining their full share of the honors. In the spring of 1906 he sold his farm and in 1906 bought the old picturesque home of Doctor Shuck in Lebanon. There is no other home in this city with so many features of beauty and interest. The home itself is surrounded by ten acres of ground, laid out like a park, and altogether is an ideal environment in which to spend the declining years of life. Mr. Lyle has three children.

Lucy Underwood, the second child, was born December 11, 1877, was educated in the public schools of Lebanon, at the noted Thane Miller School in Cincinnati, following which she took a two-year course and graduated as a trained nurse from the Norton infirmary. Her first duties in her profession were as director of physical training and head nurse at St. Mary's College, Episcopal institution at Dallas, Texas. According to her plans and specifications the college hospital was built, and she remained in active charge for several years. On October 30, 1907, she became the wife of Judge Samuel C. Blackburn, of Lebanon. Her uncle, the late Senator Joseph C. S. Blackburn, appointed him a Federal judge in the Canal Zone, and he lived on the Isthmus of Panama and continued his duties on the bench for ten years, finally resigning in the spring of 1918, on account of ill health and returning to Lebanon. Judge and Mrs. Blackburn's two children were born in the Canal Zone, Henrietta Lyle on August 4, 1908, and Samuel E., Jr., on August 9, 1910.

Evelyn Brown Lyle, the third child, was born September 21, 1879, was educated at Lebanon, spent three years at the University of Chicago, and is a well-known Kentucky artist, excelling in crayon and water color work. Some of her work has been awarded prizes in competition with the leading artists of the country. The Lyle family are all devout Presbyterians of the old school.

Thomas P. Hamilton, whose death occurred on the 18th of June, 1868, passed his entire life in Marion County, Kentucky, where he was born in May, 1814, and where he achieved substantial success and a position of prominence and influence as a progressive exponent of agricultural and livestock industry. He was a son of Charles and Mary (Turner) Hamilton, who were honored citizens of Marion County at the time of their deaths, the father's active career having been marked by close and effective association with farm enterprise in this county. Mrs. Hamilton was a sister of Rev. Jeremiah Turner, who entered the Dominican order of the Catholic Church and subsequently spent a large portion of his life given to the establishment of the Catholic Church in the Missouri. He was the parson of the parsonage at the St. Louis, Missouri. Father Turner was self-abnegating in his arduous and saintly labors in the vineyard of the Divine Master whom he served, and was one of the revered priests of the great mother church of Christendom.

Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton were devout communicants of the Catholic Church, in the faith of which they carefully reared their children. The subject of this memoir was the second in a family of twelve children and was reared on the old home farm of his parents in Marion County. He continued to remain at the parental home until 1870, in which year he was solemnized his marriage to Miss Frances Johnson, daughter of Patrick L. and Elizabeth (Carrico) Johnson, a farmer, who lived in Kentucky and who died on the farm now representing part of the old homestead of his widowed daughter, Mrs. Thomas P. Hamilton. For six years after his marriage Mr. Hamilton conducted farm operations on rented land, and he then purchased the old homestead farm of his wife's mother, this being a part of the Carrico landed estate in Marion County. Here Mr. Hamilton devoted the remainder of his life to vigorous and successful enterprize as an agriculturist and stock-grower, and he so ordered his course as to merit and receive the unfeigned confidence and esteem of all who knew him. He was a zealous communicant of the Catholic Church, as are also his widow and children.

Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton became the parents of five children: Johnson, who was born in 1871, married Miss Allie O. Daniel, and his death occurred in 1903, no children having been born of the marriage; Virginia, who was born in 1874, is the wife of James Mudd, a prosperous farmer in Marion County, and they have ten children. Elizabeth, who was born in 1878, is the wife of James William Spalding, of Lebanon, and they have two children. Henry W., the fourth child, was born June 6, 1884, and remains with his widowed mother on the home farm, of which he has the active management. In his youth Henry W. Hamilton met with a fatal accident in the splintering of bones of his right arm, and after years of intense suffering as a result of this injury he found it necessary to submit to the amputation of the arm at the shoulder. In his activities since that time he has refused to look upon this affliction as a handicap, and has applied himself successfully to all manner of work in connection with the farm, including mechanical work that requires little manual skill and dexterity. He received excellent advantages, including those of Ellendale College, at Owensboro, the Southern Kentucky Normal School, at Bowling Green, and Dragoon's Business College, in the City of Nashville, Tennessee. Though he is an expert bookkeeper and accountant, he has preferred to give his attention to farm enterprise, and in this important industrial field his success has been uneventful. Henry W. Hamilton is known as a shot with rifle and pistol. He began shooting when a child only ten years old, and is one of the best shots known. Several times he has been written up in Field and Stream sporting magazine, in which his likeness also appeared. January 14, 1914, recorded his marriage to Miss Euzabie Blanford, daughter of Edward C. Blanford, a representative farmer of Marion County, and the marriage were the union of the children of this union are here recorded: Marie, December 27, 1914; Magdalene, February 27, 1916; Florence, December 28, 1919; and Endo, August 21, 1921. Mr. Hamilton, his wife and his mother are communicants of the parish of St. Augustine Catholic Church at Lebanon. Mary Eliza, the youngest of the five children of the subject of this memoir, is the wife of Richard Blanford, a prosperous farmer of Marion County, and they have five children. The Blanford homestead farm is situated three miles north of Lebanon and one mile west of the St. Rose Turnpike.

Richard Sowards, sheriff of Pike County, is one of the best-known men of this part of Kentucky, and one who has won the approval of his fellow citizens through his personal courage and faithful performance of the duties of his responsible office. He was born August 25, 1887, on one of the rivers in Pike County, now the home of Judge Ford. His parents, William H. and Linche (Price) Sowards were also born in Pike County, the former in 1847, a son of Capt. Lewis Sowards.

William H. Soward and three brothers served under their father in the Union army during the war between the states, and the latter survived his military service for many years, until at the age of sixty, a life of years. His farm was located at the mouth of Shelby Creek, eight miles above Pikeville. His wife was a member of the Morgan family of Virginia. Until 1902 William H. Sowards lived in Pike County, and was occupied with agricultural activities, but in that year went to Washington, and is still a resident of that city. During the administration of President Benjamin Harrison, he served as postmaster of Pikeville, and he was continued in that office by President McKinley. All of the Sowards have been republicans since the organization of that party. In religious faith he is a Presbyterian and his wife is a Methodist. They are the parents of seven sons and five daughters.

Growing up in Pike County, Sheriff Sowards attended the Pikeville public schools, having among others David Blythe as a teacher. He was a very bright pupil, and as soon as the law permitted, passed his examination and received a first grade certificate, following which he was engaged in school teaching for two years. At the close of that period he became foreman of the construction work of Johnson, Briggs & Pitts on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, holding this position for five years. For the subsequent five years he was depot agent of the States marshal for Pike County, and for three years was the Government agent for the counties of Pike, Floyd and Knott. Leaving the Government service he became a walking boss for Pitts & Burgess on the Sandy Valley & Elkton Railroad, but three years later bought the old Sowards farm on Shelby Creek, and was engaged in operating it until his election to the office of sheriff in the fall of 1909. Since that time his duties as the office he has made a fine record as one of the most firm and fearless officers Pike County has ever had, and he has made his name feared by the criminal class, although at the same time he has established a reputation for positive fairness in all of his dealings.

In July, 1889, Sheriff Sowards was united in marriage with Miss Rebecca Moore. They are consistent members of the Christian Church. Sheriff Sowards belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Improved Order of Red Men, and is very popular in all of these organizations. His long experience in the Government service, as well as in railroad work, fitted him in an unusual degree for the onerous duties of his present office, for in these connections he learned to understand human nature and the motives governing the actions of all classes of men. Broad in his views, tolerant in his beliefs, he knows how to make due allowances, while at the same time insisting upon a strict enforcement of the law and the maintenance of order. Such men as he are rare in office, and their abilities are appreciated when they are found and their services are secured.

R. A. ALEXANDER. One of the enterprising and progressive representatives of the business interests of Eddyville, R. A. Alexander, has been the architect of his own fortunes, and the large ice manufacturing plant of which he is now the sole proprietor represents the results of years of industry and close application to honorable and straightforward business policies. Like a number of other substantial business men, Mr. Alexander has a genuine love for his native counties, and is one of the leading farmers and stockraisers of Kentucky, having been born on a farm near Cadiz, in Trigg County, February 2, 1881, a son of E. F. Alexander, and is descended from an old Virginia family which located in the Old Dominion during Colonial times.

E. F. Alexander was born in 1852, on the farm on which he now makes his home, 4½ miles southwest of Cadiz, and on which he has passed his entire career. He has devoted himself uninterruptedly to the pursuits of agriculture, and industry and good management have brought him worth-while and honorable success, for, in addition to his home property, he is the owner of four other farms in Trigg County, all valuable and productive. In spite of advanced years he is still actively engaged in operating his farms; and is known as one of the leading farmers and stockraisers of his locality. He is a democrat, although not a politician, and is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Siloam. Mr. Alexander married Ada Elizabeth Hendrick, who was born in 1860, in Trigg County, and nine children have been born to them: Viola, who died at the age of thirty-two; Ada M., married to Mr. R. A. Alexander; pearl, married to Mr. J. W. Hance; Gracey, married to Mr. J. M. Hewlett; and Viola, married to Mr. R. A. Alexander.

R. A. Alexander received his early education in the district schools of the rural community of his birth, following this by a course at the high school at Cadiz. Leaving school at the age of nineteen years, he assisted his father on the home place until he was twenty-four years of age and at that time began to learn the trade of blacksmith near Rockcastle, in Trigg County, where he remained seven years. Mr. Alexander then invested his earnings in a mercantile and ice manufacturing business at Cadiz, which was carried on for one year under the style of Alexander Brothers & Company, and in 1915 disposed of his holdings at Cadiz and became the sole owner of the business at Eddyville, of which he has been the proprietor to the present time. The modern plant is located on Levy Street, corner of Main, just off Wall Street, in a building owned by Mr. Alexander, the capacity being six tons every twenty-four hours. Mr. Alexander has built up a splendid and paying business and has established a reputation among his associates and the general public as a man of sound integrity. He is the owner of one of the most attractive and modern homes at Eddyville. His political belief is that of the democratic party and his religious connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church at Siloam, Fraternally he is affiliated with Hill City Camp No. 20, Woodmen of the World, and Cadiz Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, in both of which he is very popular and has numerous friends.

On September 14, 1905, Mr. Alexander was married in Trigg County to Miss Pearl Dyer Holland, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Holland, the latter of whom is deceased, while the former still resides on his farm near Rockcastle. Mr. and Mrs. Alexander have one child: Lawrence Jackson, born May 13, 1908.

Basil M. Taylor, M. D., has not only gained distinctive prestige in his exacting profession but has also been prominent and influential in connection with public affairs in his native state, as is evidenced by the fact that he has served in both the House of Representatives and the Kentucky State Senate. He is established in the successful practice of his profession at Greensburg, judicial center of Green County, and is a representative citizen who specially merits a tribute in this history.

Dr. Basil Mitchell Taylor was born in Taylor County, Kentucky, on the 5th of November, 1869, and both his paternal great-grandfather and his maternal great-grandfather were numbered among the sterling pioneer settlers of Green County, this state. The paternal great-grandfather, John Y. Taylor, was born and reared in Virginia and, as before stated, became one of the pioneers of Green County, Kentucky, where he played a large part in early civic and industrial development and where he had the distinction of serving as circuit judge of the county. His son, Dr. Richard Ayllet Taylor, was born at Greensburg, Kentucky, in 1879, and here his death occurred in the year 1872, having passed his entire life in his native county and having long been one of its leading physicians and surgeons—a man of fine mentality, sterling character and conscientious civic and professional stewardship, so that he wielded large influence in community life as a leader in the local political organization.

Ayllet Taylor, father of Doctor Taylor of this review, was born at Greensburg in 1830, was here reared and educated, and he passed the greater part of his life in Green County, where he became extensively engaged in farm enterprise. He removed to Taylor County in 1860, and was there engaged in farming until 1882, when he returned to Green County and here remained until his death, which occurred at Greensburg, Kentucky, in 1882, at the age of sixty. His son, Dr. Richard Ayllet Taylor, the eldest of their children, is engaged in the insurance business at Campbellsville, Taylor County; Elizabeth is the wife of Rev. A. W. Crawford, a clergyman of the Presbyterian Church, and reside at Greensboro, North Carolina; and his sister, Miss Ada Mitchell, was born at Harrodsburg, Kentucky, in 1848, and her death occurred at Danville, this state, April 27, 1920. Thomas W., eldest of their children, is engaged in the insurance business at Campbellsville, Taylor County; Elizabeth is the wife of Rev. A. W. Crawford, a clergyman of the Presbyterian Church, and reside at Greensboro, North Carolina; and his sister, Miss Ada Mitchell, was born at Harrodsburg, Kentucky, in 1848, and her death occurred at Danville, this state, April 27, 1920. as a member of the class of 1892 and from which he received his degree of Doctor of Medicine. In 1898 he further fortified himself for the work of his profession by completing an effective postgraduate course in the celebrated New York Polyclinic, in the national metropolis, where he gave special attention to surgery, as did he also in his post-graduate work in the same institution in the following year. The doctor is a close student and keeps insistently in touch with the advances made in medical and surgical science, in the latter branch of which he specializes and has attained to high positions. His efforts in constructing and perfecting operations to his credit. In connection with his professional work he makes yearly observations in the leading medical schools and hospitals of Louisville, and in 1919 and 1920 did special post-graduate work in the Lankenau Hospital, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

On the 21st of March, 1892, almost immediately after his graduation from medical school, Doctor Taylor left for Louisville, and in a short time had become a member of the staff of the St. Mary's Hospital, where he has since continued to be successfully established in the general practice of his profession, with special attention given to surgery. He now maintains his well appointed offices in the building of the Greensburg Deposit Bank, and he is the owner of one of the attractive residence properties of the judicial center of the county in which his ancestors settled more than a century ago. The Doctor is retained as a member of the surgical staff of the hospitals in the county, and the confidence of the people in his professional ability is evidenced by the fact that he has been the incumbent for the past fifteen years. He maintains active affiliation with the Green County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

Doctor Taylor and his wife are zealous members of the Presbyterian Church in their home city, and he is serving as elder of the same. He has thrice been elected to the Greensburg Lodge No. 54, Free and Accepted Masons, and was elected, on November 24, 1919, to the No. 155, Masters. His affiliations include also his membership in Greensburg Chapter No. 36, Royal Arch Masons, and Marion Commandery No. 24, Knights Templars, at Lebanon.

The democratic party claimed the allegiance of Doctor Taylor until 1890, when he found the freesoil policy of the party at variance with his ideas and became the acknowledged leader of the ranks of the republican party, in which he has been almost continuously an active leader in this section of the state. In November, 1915, he was elected to represent the Thirteenth Senatorial District in the Kentucky Legislature, in which he served during the regular assemblies of 1916 and 1918, as well as in two special sessions. He proved a loyal and influential representative of his constituent district, comprising Green, Hart, and Linnue counties, and as an active and enthusiastic member of the State Senate. The Doctor introduced a bill to prohibit the transportation of intoxicating liquors into local-option districts of the state, and this bill, enacted with only minor changes, continued an effective law of Kentucky until national prohibition rendered its functioning unnecessary. He also introduced and ably championed the bill abolishing the office of county assessor and creating county tax commissions in each of the counties of the state, and this bill, as enacted, is proving of great value in making for efficiency in the fiscal affairs of the state and its counties. The Doctor was influential in the advancing of other progressive legislation, and made an admirable record as a member of the Upper House of the Kentucky Legislature.

Doctor Taylor's patriotism and loyal stewardship was manifested effectively during the period of the nation's participation in the World war, for he took a vigorous part in all war activities in Green County, assisting in the various drives for subscriptions to the Government war bonds, Savings and Thrift Stamps, etc., was liberal in his own subscriptions, and was the organizer of the Green County Chapter of the Red Cross.

On the 21st of January, 1905, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Taylor to Miss Cora Cort, daughter of Rev. A. B. and Nellie (Bartlett) Cort, who now reside at Shelbyville, Missouri, where the father is pastor of the Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Taylor was graduated in the college at Maryville, Tennessee, and her culture and gracious personality have made her a popular figure in the social activities of her home community, even as she was also in those of the Kentucky capital during the period of her husband's service in the State Senate. Doctor and Mrs. Taylor have a winsome little daughter, Adne Eugenia, born January 9, 1920.

ROMULUS SKAGGS, president of Russell Creek Academy, is one of the leading exponents of his profession in this part of Kentucky and a man whose earnestness and devotion to his art have qualified him for work of his type. In 1899, he was elected to the Louisville Medical College, where he has since continued to be successfully established in the general practice of his profession, with special attention given to surgery. He now maintains his well appointed offices in the building of the Greensburg Deposit Bank, and he is the owner of one of the attractive residence properties of the judicial center of the county in which his ancestors settled more than a century ago. tending Wake Forest College he taught in the high school, and also in the night mission school of the cotton mill while in college. Following his graduation he was elected principal of the Watauga Academy of Butler, Tennessee, and held that position for two years, when, in 1818, he was elected president of the Russell Creek Academy at Campbellsville and entered upon the discharge of his duties. This is a Baptist denominational institution, founded in 1866. There are four buildings, the administration building, the two dormitory buildings, and the president’s residence, all built in 1864 by Methodists. It is situated in the northwestern part of Campbellsville. Professor Skaggs has twelve teachers and 300 pupils under his supervision, and has placed his institution in the front ranks of its grade in this part of the state. He is a democrat. The Baptist Church holds his membership. A Mason, he belongs to Butler Lodge No. 679, F. & A. M. He also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and the Junior Order United American Mechanics. During the late war he took an active part in all of the local war work, and bought bonds and stamps and contributed generously to all of the war organizations.

On May 11, 1915, Professor Skaggs was married at Fayetteville, North Carolina, to Miss Bernece Olive, who was born in Middlesboro, Kentucky, in January 1875. She was graduated from Oxford College for Women, Oxford, North Carolina, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. Professor and Mrs. Skaggs have a son, Romulus, Jr., who was born December 6, 1919.

CARTER L. McDOWELL. In the East Bernstadt district of Laurel County coal mining represents an industrial enterprise of marked importance, and its an owner and operator of a mine in this district, Mr. McDowell has a secure place as one of the influential business men of this section of the state. He was born in Laurel County, on a farm, eight miles east of East Bernstadt, and the date of his nativity was December 2, 1882. His paternal grandfather, Dr. H. F. McDowell, was born in Lee County, Virginia, and became a pioneer farmer and physician in Kentucky. He came to this state when a young man and first settled near Booneville, Owsley County, where his marriage was solemnized and whence he and his wife later removed to Laurel County, where he continued his pioneer activities as a farmer and where he gave many years of earnest and able service as a physician and surgeon. He had been ever ready to respond to calls upon him, no matter how his age, and often on more than one occasion, in a period of the weather, so that he did a noble work in the alleviation of human suffering in his community and gained the high regard of all who knew him. He passed the closing years of his life on his farm eight miles east of East Bernstadt, and his widow survived him by many years. Her maiden name was Roberts, and she was born in Owsley County in 1833. The closing years of his life he was passed in Jackson County, where she died in 1908.

James M. McDowell, father of Carter L., of this review, was born in Owsley County, near Boonesville, in the year 1848, and was a boy at the time of the family removal to Laurel County, where he was reared to manhood on the old homestead farm which was the birthplace of his son Carter L., his educational advantages having been those of the common schools of the locality and period. In this county his marriage was solemnized, and here he continued his activities as a farmer until 1886. In that year he removed to the vicinity of Annville, Jackson County, where he continued his farm enterprise until 1891, removing then to a farm near Tyner, that county. There he was engaged in successful farm enterprise until 1901, when he became proprietor of a general store at Livingston, Rockcastle County. A year later he returned to Jackson County, where he has since given his active supervision to his well improved farm near the Village of Bond. He is a stalwart democrat, is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as was also his wife. As a young man James M. McDowell wedded Miss Mary E. Pennington, who was born in Jackson County in 1852, and whose death occurred at the family home near Annville, that county, on the 1st of June, 1890. Of the children the eldest is Syrena, the wife of A. J. Simson, a farmer and school teacher in the Moore’s Creek district of Jackson County; Lillie is the wife of C. Powell, who has a general store at Bond. Jackson County. Mr. Powell being master mechanic for the Rockcastle River Railroad; W. P. is a successful contractor and builder at Overpeck, Ohio; H. F. is a rural mail carrier at Nicholasville, Kentucky; Carter L., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; and James A. is the owner and operator of a moving-picture theater at Raveina, Estill County.

The rural schools of Jackson County gave to Carter L. McDowell his early education, which was supplemented by an effective course in the Bowling Green Business University, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1905. For eighteen months thereafter he held the position of assistant station agent for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad at Living- stock, Rockcastle County, and for the ensuing six months was station agent at Estill County.

In 1907 he established his residence at East Bernstadt, this county, where in the service of the same railroad company, he was assistant station agent three years, at the expiration of which he was advanced to the office of station agent, of which he there continued the incumbency eight years. In 1918 he engaged independently in coal-mining operations in this locality, his coal mine being situated 1 1/2 miles east of East Bern- stad, on the A. & M. division of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. Here he has developed a substantial and prosperous mining industry, and the mine produces an excellent grade of bituminous coal, an average force of fifty men being employed, and the output capacity being 125 tons a day. Mr. McDowell maintains his office in a building opposite the Louisville & Nashville Railroad station at East Bernstadt. He owns an interest also in the McCarthy Coal Company of East Bernstadt, which operates a mine with an output capacity of fifty tons a day.

Mr. McDowell is aligned in the ranks of the democratic party, he is a steward of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in his home village of East Bernstadt, and has been styled a man of deep regard for the welfare of his community. He is a charter member of the Central Eastern Kentucky Lodge No. 50, F. & A. M.; Com- mander of the No. 262, R. & O. M.; a member of the Commandery of the No. 69, K. & O. R. T.; and a member of the Masonic Home. He has been a member of the Democratic party since its organization, and has contributed regularly to all of the campaigns.

Mr. McDowell is the owner of a well improved farm of 233 1/2 acres near Paint Lick, Madison County.

The local labor activities in Laurel County gained the earnest and loyal co-operation of Mr. McDowell during the nation’s participation in the great World war, and financial contributions were in consonance with his resources.

At Mount Vernon, Rockcastle County, in 1900, Mr. McDowell wedded Miss Martha V. Daily, daughter of S. S. and Belle (Bowman) Daily, who reside on their farm near that place. Mrs. McDowell was sum- moned to the life eternal on the 25th of February, 1918, a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and she is survived by four children, whose names and respective dates of birth are here recorded: Overton, July 26, 1910; Gordon Lay, Janu-
John O. Polin. One of the leading law firms of Washington County is Polin & Polin, composed of Joseph O. and John A. Polin, both sons of John O. Polin, long and prominently known in the county, where the family was established more than seventy years ago.

The Polins are of Irish ancestry and have long been prominently identified with the Catholic Church in Washington County. One of the first of the name here was Thomas Polin, who came to America and settled in Washington County as early as 1819. He became a priest of the Dominican Order at St. Rose in Washington County. Still another member of the family, John Polin, identified himself with Washington County in the early part of the nineteenth century. His two sons Daniel O. and Francis E., took up medicine, and Francis E. Polin achieved high rank as a surgeon.

The grandparents of the Springfield lawyers were John and Margaret (O'Prey) Polin. The former was born in County Down, Ireland, in 1816 and the latter in the City of Belfast. They were married in Ireland and in 1890 immigrated to the United States, landing in New York City and coming on direct to Washington County, Kentucky, where they arrived on the 29th of April. This county was destined to be their home the rest of their lives. John Polin died in 1897, at the age of eighty-one, and his wife died in 1899, aged eighty-nine. Of their three children Enos was born in Ireland, and the other two Mrs. Rosa McAllister and John O., in Washington County.

John O. Polin was born in Washington County October 19, 1850, and his career has been that of a very successful farmer. He is a bank director at Springfield, and for sixteen years held the office of justice of the peace. He is a staunch democrat. John O. Polin married Julia Scannell. She was born in New York City, February 16, 1860, daughter of Michael and Jane (Fitzgerald) Scannell, both of whom were born in the County of Cork, Ireland, in 1818. They were married in Ireland, and they crossed the ocean in the ship George Washington, reaching New York in the early '50s. They were naturalized in New York, and after a few years came to Kentucky and settled in Washington County. Michael Scannell reached the age of eighty, while his wife was in her hundredth year when she died. She was remarkable not only for her great age but for the strength and gentleness of her character and intellect and her devotion to her chosen religion. One of her daughters became Sister Benedicta at St. Catherine's in Washington County, and the son, Patrick Joseph Scannell, a priest of the Dominican Order of St. Rose. This Dominican priest in 1878 answered the call for volunteers to care for the sick during the yellow fever scourge at Memphis, and while in the performance of duty himself fell a victim to the malady.

John O. and Julia Polin reared four children, Joseph O., John A., Emma, who was born August 20, 1891, and married P. Hubert Simms January 20, 1915, and Julia Belle, who was born December 28, 1894, and is now known as Sister Julia of the Dominican Order at St. Catherine's.

Joseph O. Polin, senior member of the law firm of Polin & Polin, was born in Washington County April 28, 1883. He holds the degree of Master of Arts from St. Mary's College, Kentucky, graduated in law from the University of Louisville in 1907, was admitted to the bar in the same year, and for fourteen years has practiced with growing success and prestige at Springfield. He was elected on the democratic ticket as county attorney in 1913 and re-elected in 1917. He is a member of the Knights of Columbus. In 1910 Joseph O. Polin married Miss Pearl E. E. Scannell, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James W. Scannell, and they are an old and prominent family in Kentucky, and the first of the name came to America from England, either in the ship Ark or Dove. That was in Colonial times Mr. and Mrs. Joseph O. Polin have six children.

John A. Polin, the junior member of Polin & Polin, was born in Washington County October 16, 1884. He holds the degree of Master of Arts from St. Mary's College, Kentucky, and graduated in law at the University of Louisville in 1909. Except when absent during the World war he has steadily practiced at Springfield. In 1912 he was elected on the democratic ticket to represent Washington County in the Lower House of the Legislature, and was re-elected in 1914, giving a highly creditable and capable service to the county and state. He volunteered early in the war, entered the Officers' Training School, and Captain Harrison, was commissioned a second lieutenant, was on duty at Camp Zachary Taylor and Camp Sherman, Ohio, until August 30, 1919, when he was sent overseas with the 8th Division. In France he and others of this division became replacement troops in the 26th Division. He received his honorable discharge at Camp Devon, Massachusetts, in 1919, at once returning home and resuming his law practice. At present he is captain of Troop A, 53 M. G. Squadron, Kentucky National Guard. He is unmarried, and, like his brother, is a Knight of Columbus and a member of the Catholic Church.

Jack E. Fisher. One of the distinguished yet unassuming members of the Kentucky bar, Jack E. Fisher, of Paducah, commonwealth attorney, has achieved his splendid success through a systematic application of his abilities to the profession of his choice, a profession that is peculiarly exacting in its demands. A native of Kentucky, he was born March 24, 1884, in Benton, Marshall County, which was likewise the birthplace of his father, the late James M. Fisher. He is of English extraction, his great-grandfather on the paternal side having immigrated from England to America in Colonial times, settling first in Virginia and later moving to Tennessee. John J. Fisher, grandfather of Jack E. Fisher, was born in 1833, in Davidson County, Tennessee, and was there trained to agricultural pursuits. Coming to Marshall as a young man, he bought land near Benton, and on the farm which he improved spent the remainder of his life, dying in 1900. He married in Benton, Susan Gathin, who was born in Marshall County, Kentucky, in 1832, and died in Benton in 1904.

Born in 1856, James M. Fisher spent his entire life in Benton, passing to the life beyond in 1907. A man of talent and ability, he entered the legal profession when young, and by means of industry and skill, built up an extensive patronage. He served as county attorney of Marshall County three terms and as county judge one term. A sound democrat in politics, he was county commissioner of Marshall County schools for some years, but he also took a keen interest in all affairs. A consistent member of the Christian Church, he was one of its active supporters. Fraternally he belonged to the Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, and to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He married Ida Eley, who spent her brief life in Benton, her birth occurring in 1866 and her death in 1880. Four children were born of their marriage, as follows: Bessie, widow of the late C. R. Holland, a former merchant of Benton, where she now resides;
Reece, who was employed as a clerk, died in Benton in 1908; Jack E., of whom we write; and Georgia, wife of R. D. Wolfe, of Owensboro, Kentucky, chief clerk of the Hodge Tobacco Company.

Dr. Robert Bosworth received his elementary education in the public schools of Benton, Jack E. Fisher continued his studies for one term at Bethel College in Russellville, Kentucky. Beginning his career at the age of nineteen years, he taught school at Sanders Ridge, Marshall County, for a year, and the following year had charge of the Canada district school near Calvert City. In the meantime, having devoted all of his leisure time to the study of the law, he was admitted to the bar in 1905, when but twenty-one years of age, and has since continued in the practice of his profession at Benton, where he stands and still has an office. Elected commonwealth attorney for a term of six years in the fall of 1915, he assumed the duties and responsibilities of the position in January, 1916, his offices being at 814 City National Bank Building, Paducah, county seat of McCracken County.

Prominently associated with various legal organizations, Mr. Fisher is vice president of the Commonwealth Attorneys' Association; and belongs to the McCracken County Bar Association; the State Bar Association; and to the National Bar Association. Religiously he is a valued member of the Baptist Church. Fraternally he is a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity; of Benton Lodge No. 401, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons; of Benton Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; of Benton Camp, Woodmen of the World; of Benton Camp, Modern Woodmen of America; and also the Sigma Nu fraternity.

Mr. Fisher married, in 1910, Evalie G. Martin, a daughter of G. W. and Sue R. (Ramsey) Martin, who reside in Birmingham, Kentucky, where Mr. Martin is engaged in business as a tobacco exporter. Mrs. Fisher received exceptionally fine educational advantages when young, having graduated from the Princeton, Kentucky, High School, Lebanon College, at Lebanon, Tennessee, and Tennessee College, at Murfreesboro, Tennessee, after which she took a post graduate course at Kalamazoo College, Michigan; and has been a declared adherent of St. Louis, Missouri, her talent and accomplishments, combined with her native good sense and congenial disposition, rendering her a most desirable companion and a general favorite in social circles. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher have one child, Emma Jean, born July 5, 1912.

Robert Yandell Shepherd, M. D. In the profession of medicine Doctor Shepherd is continuing at Taylorsville the service formerly rendered by his father in the same community. He is a talented physician and surgeon, was a captain in the Medical Corps during the World war, and is one of the valued citizens of Spencer County.

Doctor Shepherd was born at Chestnut Grove in Shelby County, Kentucky, February 14, 1879, son of Dr. William Ellis and Mary (Campbell) Shepherd. His paternal grandparents were Absalom Waller and Emelina (Clark) Shepherd. His grandfather was born in Virginia in 1812, son of John Shepherd, a native of Culpeper County, Virginia, who founded the family in Kentucky in pioneer times. Dr. William Ellis Shepherd was born in Shelby County, Kentucky, January 3, 1831, and after graduating in medicine from the University of Louisville, Kentucky, in 1859, he also spent eight years at Atchison, Kansas, practiced at Southville, Kentucky, and in 1898 moved to Taylorsville, where he continued his splendid work as a physician until his death December 30, 1911. His wife, Mary Campbell, now lives with her son, Doctor Shepherd, at Taylorsville. She was born at Nashville, Tennessee, daughter of Robert and Mary (Campbell) Alland of Scotch-Irish lineage. She is the mother of three children.

Robert Yandell Shepherd was given liberal educational advantages. He graduated Bachelor of Science from Center College at Danville in 1902, and in 1904 entered the Medical Department of the University of Louisville, from which he received his degree July 30, 1907. He at once returned to Taylorsville, and that community has been the scene of his professional work ever since except for the period of the war. He volunteered in the Medical Reserve Corps and was commissioned a captain April 11, 1918. In June of that year he reported for duty in Maryland, where he was stationed for ten months. He received his honorable discharge March 5, 1919. Doctor Shepherd organized and is commander of Spencer Post No. 51 of the American Legion; is also a member of the Masons; and, generally speaking, is a Baptist, a democrat, and belongs to the Spencer County and Kentucky State Medical associations.

Hon. Joe F. Bosworth, former state senator and speaker of the House of Representatives in 1902, has been in the public eye in Kentucky for thirty years, and perhaps no one individual has done more to prepare the way for the great industrial and commercial progress of Eastern Kentucky than this Middlesboro lawyer, coal operator and legislator.

Mr. Bosworth was born near Lexington in Fayette County October 3, 1867. His birthplace at that time bore the colloquial name of Shickaway, but is now called Fort Spring. His father, Benjamin Bosworth, was a farmer, and his mother, Mary H. (Waller) Bosworth, a school teacher. He was educated at the public schools of Middlesboro, Kentucky, where he was graduated at Philadelphia, Tennessee. Otherwise his life was spent at the Fort Spring community in Fayette County, where he owned a fine Blue Grass farm and was identified with its work and management. He died there in 1906. He was a democrat, and a very faithful Baptist by religious affiliations. His wife was Miss Mary Cloud, who was born February 14, 1848, and who died at Lexington in 1910. Several of their children have achieved distinction. Henry, a farmer living at Lexington, is former state treasurer and former state auditor of Kentucky. The second of the family, J. Cloud, is a prosperous farmer in Fayette County. Miss Hattie lives at Lexington. Hon. Joe F. is the fourth of the family. Doctor Lewis is one of the ablest men in the medical profession at Lexington. Clifford, a Lexington business man, was formerly state fire marshal of Kentucky. Powell, a farmer living at Lexington, was at one time deputy sheriff of Bell County and was elected sheriff of Fayette County, November 8, 1921. Ben, of Lexington, former assistant state fire marshal and in the timber business, is identified with a large tobacco warehouse. Miss Mary, the youngest of the family, lives with her sister at Lexington.

Joe F. Bosworth grew up on his father's farm, and the first country school he attended was taught by the distinguished Kentucky novelist, James Lane Allen. He also spent three years in Kentucky State University at Lexington, and pursued his law studies in the University of Virginia at Charlottesville and in the office of Judge Joe D. Hunt at Lexington. He was admitted to the bar in 1889, and for a brief time was located at Omaha, Nebraska. September 4, 1889, he began his practice at Middlesboro, and for ten years was busily engaged in handling a general law practice, but since then business and public affairs have taken precedence in his professional work. Mr. Bosworth is general manager and a director of the Yellow Creek Coal Company, with headquarters at Middlesboro, operating mines with a capacity of a thousand tons per day. These mines are situated near Middlesboro in Bell County. He is also vice president and director in the Mingo Coal & Coke Company, whose general offices are also at Middlesboro. The mines are in Whitley County, Tennessee, and have a capacity of 800 tons a day. Mr. Bosworth is a director and secretary of the Middlesboro Coal Land Owning & Leasing Company, a company holding 5,000 acres of coal and timber lands.
in Bell County; and he is also president of the Appalachian Indemnity Insurance Company, with headquarters at Louisville, Kentucky.

Mr. Bosworth has maintained his public record as a republican in politics. While his public record has been a source of incalculable good and benefit to the entire state, he has recognized as the first call of duty the welfare of his home town. He was a member of the first city council in 1890, and in November, 1893, was elected city judge, being re-elected in 1897. He held that office for eight years, beginning in 1894. He was city attorney in 1902-03. In 1905 he was elected to the legislature as representative of the 89th, the largest district in the state, comprising Bell, Harlan, Leslie and Perry counties. In November, 1907, he was elected to the state senate to represent the 17th Senatorial District, comprising Bell, Jackson, Knox, Laurel, Pulaski, Rockcastle and Whitley counties, and in November, 1911, was re-elected, so that he was in the senate for eight years until 1916. In November, 1910, Mr. Bosworth was again chosen to the legislature as representative of the 89th District, comprising Bell County. In the session of 1920 he was chosen speaker of the House and in 1921 became a candidate for re-election without opposition, which office he now holds. He has also been elected republican minority and floor leader in the Lower House of the Kentucky Legislature. Mr. Bosworth carried the flag of the republicans in the county and represented both sides of the House on both sides for the dignified and impartial manner in which he exercised his powers as speaker.

In protective and progressive legislation it is doubtful if any Kentuckian could point to a record surpassing in quantity and value that of Mr. Bosworth. His friends have frequently pointed out that of the various amendments made to the present state constitution by the legislature, virtually all of them have been actively in their influence. Altogether there are twenty-two measures to his credit in legislative enactment, some of them affecting in some way the interests and welfare of Bell County and Eastern Kentucky. During his first term in the Legislature following his election in 1905 he was instrumental in securing the repeal of the Roundtree Bills. Those bills had been passed by the previous legislature and had completely tied up all available and prospective revenues of Middleborough to the benefit of the municipality's creditors. By the repeal of these Roundtree Bills by Mr. Bosworth, arrangements with the bond holders were made permitting a graduated payment of the obligations and resulting in a saving of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and, more important still, permitting the town to begin the hopeful task of recreating its financial and material prosperity.

Mr. Bosworth helped secure the law by which Middlesborough became a third-class instead of a fourth-class city and thus gave it a session of the Circuit Court, and he also had passed the law giving the city and all third-class cities of the state a commission form of government. He had passed the bill creating the 34th Judicial District, composed of Bell, Harlan and White counties, and the bill creating the 34th District, composed of Bell and Harlan counties. Among other bills credited to him were those permitting property owners of Middlesborough to pay for street improvement on the ten-year installment plan; Kentucky's Pure Food and Drug Law; the appropriation bill that completed the beautiful State Capitol at Frankfort; and secured the constitutional amendment making the convicts available in competitive industries and making convicts available for labor on the public highways.

Mr. Bosworth is perhaps most widely known as author of a Kentucky Modern Good Roads movement. This was a work carried on over eight years, during which the constitution was several times amended, the first measure being what is known as "The Bosworth and Wyatt Good Roads Constitutional Amendment," permitting the state to lend its funds and credit to supplement the enterprise of counties and road districts in building of permanent highways. As a result of Mr. Bosworth's eight years unflagging effort on behalf of the cause of Good Roads in Kentucky, his first Good Roads measure putting his constitutional amendment into effect became a law, thus creating the Department of Good Roads and the office of state road commissioner at the 1912 session of the Legislature. And by his efforts these laws were further perfected and financially revised in 1914, by reason of which laws together with his efforts as a director of the House of Representatives and the efforts of other Good Roads enthusiasts, in 1918 our present road laws became a reality. In recognition of the splendid pioneer service he thus rendered Mr. Bosworth was elected in 1909 the first president of the Kentucky Good Roads Association, and was known as the "Father of Good Roads in Kentucky."

Mr. Bosworth is prominent in the Order of Elks, being past exalted ruler of Middlesborough Lodge No. 110, B. P. O. E., and was president of the Kentucky Elks Association in 1920. He is a member of the Baptist Church. During the war he was constantly active in committee works and otherwise for the Liberty Loan, Red Cross and other drives in Bell County. In August, 1893, he married Miss Elizabeth Yeal, daugher of Captain James and Eleanor (Chorn) Yeal. Her father is a retired farmer now living with Mr. and Mrs. Bosworth, and was a Confederate soldier under General John Morgan during the Civil War. Mrs. Bosworth completed her education in the Belkwood Seminary at Anchorage, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Bosworth have two children: Joe E., Jr., born in August, 1891, is bom in the original land and county of Bell, Kentucky, in Bell County. He married Miss Bernice Johnson of Bell County, and their two children are Pauline and Joe F. III. The daughter, Eleanor, born in September, 1897, is the wife of Richard Rainey of Middlesborough. Mr. Rainey is chief bookkeeper and manager of all the offices of the Yellow Creek Coal Company, the Mingo Coal & Coke Company, and the Middlesborough Coal & Coke Leasing Company. Mr. and Mrs. Rainey have two children: Frances Bosworth, born in 1917, and J. Richard, Jr., born in 1919.

Clement V. Hiestand, M. D., is a representative of the third generation of the Hiestand family in Taylor County, and here has gained secure status as one of the leading physicians and surgeons engaged in practice at Campbellsville, the county seat of his native county. The original American progenitors of the Hiestand family came from Switzerland and settled in the beautiful Shenandoah Valley of Virginia in the Colonial period of our national history, three brothers of the name having been the founders of the American branch, and later generations having been identified with civic and industrial development in various other sections. He is the son of Jacob Hiestand, who died in the death of his grandfather, Jacob Hiestand, who was born at Hillsboro, Ohio, and who came to Taylor County, Kentucky, shortly after his marriage to Miss Eva Landis, a native of Virginia. He became one of the pioneer farmers and distillers in Taylor County, and during the period of the Civil war he served as a colonel in the local organization of the Kentucky State Guards. He was one of the sterling citizens who did a notable part in the development of the building of Taylor County, and his name merits place on the roster of the honored pioneers of this section of the state. Both he and his wife continued their residence in this county until their deaths, and they became the parents of nine children, all of whom are now deceased, namely: Ferdinand, Josiah, an M. D.; Matthew; Allen, an

M. D.; Felix, Oliver P., an M. D.; Araminta; Isabelle and Demarius.

Dr. Clement V. Hiestand was born at Campbellsville, Taylor County, his present place of residence, and the date of his nativity was May 26, 1871. His father, Ferdinand J. Hiestand, was born at Campbellsville in the year 1820, passed his entire life in Taylor County, and was one of its venerable and honored citizens at the time of his death, in October, 1898. In earlier years he was a distiller, but his major work was in connection with farm industry, of which he long stood as one of the extensive and influential exponents in his native county. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party, and he was called upon to serve in various capacities. He was postmaster at Campbellsville four years, and gave an equal period of service as county sheriff, besides which he was county tax commissioner two terms, or of four years each. He was a leader in the local councils and campaign activities of the democratic party, and was a man whose character and achievement marked him as worthy of the unqualified popular esteem in which he was ever held. He served as master of Pitman Lodge No. 124, Free and Accepted Masons at Campbellsville, and was affiliated also with Taylor Chapter No. 90, Royal Arch Masons. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Rucker, was born in Taylor County in 1857, and she survived him by nearly twenty years, her death having occurred at Campbellsville in April, 1917, and both she and her husband having been early and influential participants in the commercial progress of the community. The children of this union were: Mattie, born February 12, 1886, and the eldest is Leora, who is the wife of James Crittenden, a prosperous farmer of Taylor County; Viola is the wife of Alexander Smith, likewise a farmer of this county; Sallie is the wife of W. Ramse, former clerk of Taylor County, and he is now engaged in farming enterprise in this county; Nellie is the wife of Johnnie W. Hord, another of the progressive farmers of this county; Doctor Shively, the youngest, was the next in order of birth; Daisy is the wife of D. O. McGee, a merchant in the City of Birmingham, Alabama; and S. Bruce is a successful farmer in Taylor County.

After having availed himself of the advantages of the public schools of Campbellsville Doctor Hiestand here entered Taylor Academy, in which he was graduated in 1892, and entered Taylor Normal Institute, the regular institution of the county during the school year of 1892-3, and in the autumn of the latter year entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1896 and with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. For one year thereafter he was engaged in practice at Mineola, Wood County, Texas, and then returned to his native county and established himself in practice at Merrimac, in which village he maintained his professional headquarters until January, 1918, when he returned to the county seat, his native place, where he has since controlled a large and representative general practice and has secure status as one of the successful and popular physicians and surgeons of his native county. His political allegiance is to the democratic party, which he was a member of the Campbellsville Masonic Lodge, the Scottish Rite, and the American Medical Association. He is a close student of the best standard and periodical literature of his profession and insistently keeps in touch with the advances made in modern medical and surgical science.

Doctor Hiestand is found staunchly arrayed as an advocate and supporter of the cause of the democratic party, in the faith of which he was reared, and he is one of the liberal and progressive citizens of Taylor County. He has served eight years as a member of the County Board of Education, and was its secretary during this entire period. He has given effective service also as chairman of the county democratic committee, in which capacity he had much to do with the directing of political forces in the county. The doctor is a past master of Pitman Lodge No. 124, Free and Accepted Masons, and in the time-honored fraternity of Freemasonry he is a member of Taylor Chapter No. 90, Royal Arch Masons, at Campbellsville, and Marion Commandery No. 24, Knights Templars, at Lebanon. He took active part in all local war service, helped in all of the drives in support of subscriptions to the various Government bond issues in connection with the World war, and was himself a liberal subscriber, with a loyal sense of personal stewardship. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

At Merrimac, Taylor County, on the 5th of January, 1898, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Hiestand to Miss Mattie Hogan, who likewise was born and reared in Taylor County and who is a daughter of Thomas and Lydia (Rhodes) Hogan, her father having been one of the representative and progressive farmers of this county at the time of his death and the widowed mother being now a member of the home circle of Doctor and Mrs. Hiestand. In conclusion is entered brief record concerning the children of Doctor and Mrs. Hiestand: Nydia is a graduate of the local high school, remains at the parental home and is a popular factor in the social life of her native place, while her husband, who was graduated in the Campbellsville High School, enlisted in the United States Army in January, 1921, and is at the time of this writing stationed at San Antonio, Texas; Clemmie Vera and Fannie Ema are students in the home high school; and the younger children are Regina Elizabeth, Johnnie Lucile, Zara Blanche, Harriet Emid, Grace Hogan, Thomas Ferdinand and Richard Stewart.

OMAR H. SHIVELY, M. D. The central district of Kentucky claims its full quota of able and successful physicians and surgeons, and among the number is Doctor Shively, who is established in general practice at Campbellsville, judicial center of Taylor County.

The Doctor was born in Green County, Kentucky, on the 16th of August, 1871, and is a son of Dr. Alexander Shively, who was born in Taylor County in 1809, and who now resides at Campbellsville. The greater part of his life has been passed in his native county, though he was for a time engaged in practice in Green County, and he long held a secure place as one of the leading physicians of Taylor County, where he controlled a large and representative practice for many years. Since 1917 he has lived virtually retired at Campbellsville. He was graduated in the medical department of the University of Louisville, and in his character and service has honored and dignified alike his profession and his native state. He is a staunch democrat, well fortified in his convictions concerning economic and governmental policies, has long been a zealous member of the Baptist Church, in which his first wife likewise held membership, and he was married to Mrs. W. Massee in 1881, shortly after the inception of the Civil war. Doctor Shively enlisted in a Kentucky regiment that entered the Union service, and he continued a member of this command during one year, at the expiration of which he received his honorable discharge. His wife, whose maiden name was Jennie Massee, was born in Adair County, Kentucky, and she was forty-five years of age at the time of her death, which occurred on the home farm five miles south of Campbellsville, on the Columbia-Campbellsville turnpike, Dr. Omar H., immediate subject of this review, being the only child of this union. For his second wife Dr. Alexander Shively wedded Miss Annie Miller, who was born and reared in Taylor County and whose death occurred on the old homestead farm mentioned above, no children having been born of the second marriage.

The rural schools of Taylor County afforded Dr. Omar H. Shively his preliminary education, which was completed by his attending the Greensburg county seat. Thereafter he was for two years a student in the old Kentucky University at Lexington, and in preparation for the profession of his choice he entered his father's alma mater, the medical department of the University of Louisville, in which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1863 and with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He has insistently held himself in touch with the advances made in medical and surgical science, and to thus fortify himself he completed a special post-graduate course in the Baltimore Medical College, Baltimore, Maryland, in 1894, and in 1896 a special course in surgery in the celebrated Chicago Polyclinic, in the great metropolis of the West. Upon his graduation he engaged in practice in Taylor County, but two years later removed to Greensburg, judicial center of Green County, where he continued to practice with the ensuing twenty-two years, during which he won and maintained precedence as one of the leading physicians and surgeons of that county and was prominently identified with the Green County Medical Society. In 1917 Doctor Shively returned to Taylor County and established his residence and professional headquarters at Campbellsville, and he has since developed and controlled a most substantial and representative practice, in which he and his successors have added new distinction to the professional honors attaching to the family name. The Doctor has his well appointed office in the Davis Building, on Main Street, and owns and occupies an attractive modern house on Depot Street, this being one of the best residence properties in the thriving little city. Doctor Shively is actively affiliated with the Taylor County Medical Society, the Kentucky Medical Society, and the American Medical Association. While a resident of Greensburg he served as a member of the Board of Health of Green County.

When the nation became involved in the late World war, Doctor Shively manifested his patriotism and professional loyalty by enlisting, on the 16th of September, 1918, for service in the medical corps of the United States Army. He was sent to Camp Greenleaf, Georgia, for preliminary instruction in the Officers' Training Camp, and there he received commission as captain in the medical corps. After there remaining three weeks he was transferred to Camp Mills, Long Island, New York, and December 14, 1918, was assigned to service at the Debarkation Hospital in New York City, where he continued in specially active service until July 3, 1919, when he received his honorable discharge. Since that time he has given himself earnestly to the work of general practice in his home county.

Doctor Shively is a staunch democrat, takes a lively interest in community affairs but has had neither time nor inclination for political office. While living at Greensburg he there served as a member of the Board of Education and also as a member of the Board of Pension Examining Surgeons for Green County. He and his wife are members of the Baptist Church, and he is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity.

In 1894 was recorded the marriage of Doctor Shively to Miss Mattie Smith, daughter of the late Pilson Smith, who was a prominent farmer and influential citizen of Green County, where both he and his wife died. Doctor and Mrs. Shively have but one child, Virginia, who was born January 31, 1902, and who is, in 1927 a student in Shorter College at Rome, Georgia.

Rev. Samuel Shively, grandfather of the Doctor, was born in Taylor County in the year 1800, and here he passed his entire life, having been a clergyman of the Baptist Church and having given many years of earnest service in the work of the ministry. He died on the old home farm of his son Dr. Alexander Shively, in 1883, and there also occurred the death of his wife, whose family continued to reared her entire life in Taylor County, where both the Shively and Penn families settled in the early pioneer days. The father of Rev. Samuel Shively came to this county from Virginia, and became one of the pioneer exponents of farm industry in this now favored section of the state, where he endured his full share of hardships and vicissitudes incident to the frontier and where he finally met his death at the hands of hostile Indians.

Reuben Hale Falwell has made singular good use of his time and opportunities to incorporate his energy and influence into the civic and business affairs of Murray and that section of Calloway County. He is owner of a prosperous business, and his energies are readily enlisted in every movement undertaken for the good of the city and county.

His grandfather was born at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and his name was Joseph W. Bertran. He was an infant when his parents died, and he was then placed in the care of a guardian named Caleb Scattergood. At the age of four he was stolen from his guardian, was taken West and grew up and was reared by the widow Folwell at Nashville, Tennessee, when that city was a small hamlet in the western wilderness. Later he was reared in the eastern homes of his blood which had been followed by his descendants. He became a plasterer by trade; and, lived near Nashville, Franklin, and in Memphis, and late in life came to Calloway County, Kentucky, where he died. He married a Miss Ford, a native of Tennessee, who died at Memphis.

Monroe Falwell, father of the Murray business man, was born at Franklin, Davidson County, Tennessee, in 1837, grew up in that community, and at twenty-five years old purchased Jackson's Purchase and acquired a new farm fourteen miles east of Murray, in Calloway County. Later he sold this place and bought another, seven miles east of Murray, and on that homestead reared his family of seven children. He finally retired and spent his last days at the home and farm of his son Reuben, two miles south of Murray, where he died in 1915. He was a democrat in politics and at the age of twenty-five united with the Missionary Baptist Church at Elm Grove, and was one of the staunch upholders of that church all the rest of his life. He married Sarah S. Futrell, who was born six miles east of Murray December 20, 1840, and is still living in Calloway County. Her father, Joseph Winburn Futrell, was born in North Carolina in 1812 and was one of the early residents of the farming district of Calloway County, and died on his farm seven miles east of Murray. He married Elizabeth Vinson, who was born in Tennessee in 1813, and died in Calloway County in 1890, the same year as her husband. Monroe Falwell and wife had a family of seven children: Joseph W., a farmer on the old place seven miles east of Murray; Kittie, wife of W. A. Vance, a Calloway County farmer at Blood; Bettie, wife of John Sellars, also a farmer in the Blood community; Noah H., who is a foreman in the mechanical department of the Foreman Auto-Body Company at Paducah; Mary Jane, wife of B. F. Caraway, a farmer seven miles east of Murray; Ina, wife of Herman Young, a street car motorman at Detroit, Michigan; and Reuben Hale, youngest of the family.
Mr. Falwell’s early memories are associated with the old farm east of Murray, and his first advantages were acquired in the nearby country schools. For two years he attended Fairview Academy at Centerville, Tennessee, finishing there in 1908. In the meantime he had qualified as a teacher and for six years was more or less actively identified with the teaching profession in Calloway County. He also spent one year at Duker, Kentucky.

Mr. Falwell entered politics in 1908 as candidate for the nomination for County Court clerk, was nominated, was elected in November, 1909, and began his official term in January, 1910. He was in office four years, and in 1914 engaged in the real estate business at Murray. After nine months he bought a half interest in a general fire and life insurance agency from W. F. Jordan in September, 1914, and since March 5, 1917, has been sole owner of a business, which, largely due to his sagacity and enterprise, has become the leading fire and life insurance business of the town. On February 1, 1921, he took in as a partner and associate in this business J. K. Matheny. Their offices are in the First National Bank Building. Mr. Falwell is vice president of the First National Bank of Murray and is interested in considerable real estate of the very attractive and well located homes of the town at the corner of Twelfth and Main streets.

Mr. Falwell was a speaker and otherwise active worker in all the local war campaigns, in behalf of Liberty Loans and Red Cross and other causes. He is choir leader of the Sunday school of the Masonic Building Church, is president of the Masonic Building Lodge, and is a member of the executive committee of the Odd Fellows Lodge, is a past chancellor of Murray Lodge, Knights of Pythias.

On December 23, 1908, at the Elm Grove Church in Calloway County he married Miss Frocio J. Outland, daughter of Andrew W. and Alpha C. (Parker) Outland, her parents being farmers four miles east of Murray. Mrs. Falwell was liberally educated, and before her marriage held a first class teacher’s certificate and taught in Calloway County three years. They have one son, Reuben Hale, Jr., born October 29, 1915.

James W. Sanders, who resides at Campbellsville, county seat of Taylor County, is a native son of this county and is in the full possession of his duties as deputy collector of internal revenue for the Kentucky revenue district in which he resides.

Mr. Sanders was born on a farm five miles southeast of Campbellsville, on the 21st of August, 1866, and is a representative of one of the old and well known families of this section of the state. His father, Lafayette Sanders, was born at Clay Hill, Taylor County, in 1841, and he passed his entire life in his native county, his death having occurred on his home farm in 1886. He established his residence on this farm in 1866, and gained precedence as one of the extensive and successful exponents of agricultural and livestock enterprise in Taylor County. He was a man of fine mentality and in his youth had prepared himself for the legal profession, though he never engaged in active practice. He was graduated from the College of New Hanover, Indiana. Mr. Sanders was a democrat in politics, was influential in the directing of community affairs of public order, was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and he and his wife held membership in the Presbyterian Church. During the Civil war he gave evidence of his loyalty to the cause of the Confederacy by serving in the command of Gen. John Morgan, the famed Confederate raider, for whom he acted as a scout. He was wounded by guerrillas in an engagement on Little Muldraugh Hill, Taylor County, and as the shot struck him in the forehead, the wound was a severe one and caused him trouble during the remainder of his life, which was undoubtedly shortened by this injury. Mrs. Sanders, whose maiden name was Ann Mary Patterson, was born in Green County, Kentucky, in 1816, and she passed the closing period of her life at Campbellsville, where she died in 1907. Of the children the first born, Nora, died in infancy; James R., of this review, was the next in order of birth; C. P., who died at Jonesboro, Arkansas, at the age of forty-six years, was a traveling salesman for the Georgia Hardware Company, Louisville, Kentucky, and was the organizer of the Farmers’ Bank at Campbellsville, though he sold his interest in this institution some time prior to his death; Dr. H. G. is a representative physician and surgeon at Campbellsville; Dr. R. A. is successfully established in the practice of dentistry in Campbellsville; Mary M. died in infancy; W. B. is a farmer near Glasgow, Montana; S. M. is engaged in the hardware business at Camp- bellsville; Cary, who died at the age of forty-five years, was the wife of J. D. Edwards, who still resides on his farm in Taylor County; Nellie is the wife of George Barbee, a druggist at Syracuse, Nebraska; and Bettie is the wife of Harry T. Edwards, who conducts a feed store at Campbellsville.

Mr. Sanders undoubtedly has his share of protest against the student body of Campbellsville, which attended his boyhood application in the rural school near his home, but he profited duly by the advantages there afforded and later was graduated from the high school at Campbellsville as a member of the class of 1886. By this time he was fully alive to the value of education and had so advanced himself as to prove eligible for membership in the Alpha Phi Delta Theta fraternity. It was after his graduation that he held the position of principal of the Campbellsville High School, and he had initiated his second year of effective service in this capacity when the work was interrupted by the burning of the high school building. In this emergency he accepted the position of teacher of mathematics in Pike College, Bowling Green, Missouri, where he remained thus engaged for three years and where also he studied law, under the preceptorship of the firm of Clark & Dempsey, which was then the most prominent practice in the Missourian, Hon. Champ Clark, later member of Congress from that state. Mr. Sanders was admitted to the Missouri bar at Bowling Green in 1895, and soon afterward he assumed academic and executive charge of the S. W. Buchanan Collegiate Institute at Camp- bellsville, Kentucky, which had been recently established under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church. He retained this incumbency two years and did excellent work in building up the institution. In 1897 he was made master commissioner of the Taylor Circuit Court, and in this capacity he continued his service until 1910, the while he also was engaged actively in the practice of law at Campbellsville. In 1900 he was elected county attorney, and he assumed this office in January, 1910. Re-election continued him in such capacity until July, 1914, when he resigned the office. He had served for about six months of his second term the office, in July, 1914, to assume that of deputy collector of internal revenue, in which position he had been appointed by T. Scott Mayes, the United States collector for the Fifth Revenue District of Kentucky. He continued his effective service under this jurisdiction until July, 1916, with which term the various revenue districts were consolidated into one, known as the District of Kentucky, and he then received ap- pointment as deputy collector of the state district, with headquarters in the City of Louisville.

Though his official headquarters are in the metropolis of Kentucky, as noted above, Mr. Sanders still maintains his home at Campbellsville, where his fine suburban residence occupies a tract of thirty-four acres and constitutes one of the attractive homes of his native county. In addition to this fine property he owns a one-third interest in a farm of 110 acres, four miles south of Campbellsville.

Mr. Sanders is a stalwart in the ranks of the democratic party. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Tuscumbia, where he is affiliated with the Baptist Church. In his home city he is affiliated with Pitman Lodge No. 124, Free and Accepted Masons, besides which he retains membership in Quiver Lodge No. 242, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Bowling Green, Missouri. Mr. Sanders played a loyal and vigorous part in furthering the various campaigns for subscriptions for the Government loans and Savings Stamps, in connection with the nation's participation in the World war, and he personally subscribed to the limit of his means.

In 1896 Mr. Sanders wedded Miss Minnie Graves, who likewise was born and reared in Taylor County, and in their home her father now resides, the loved wife and mother having passed to the life eternal. Mr. Graves is a retired farmer and is one of the highly esteemed citizens of Taylor County. Mr. and Mrs. Sanders have six children. Ellen was graduated from the University of Louisville with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and is, in 1921, taking a post-graduate course in that institution; Fayette, who remains at the parental home, is a student in the Russell Creek Academy at Campbellsville, and the same conditions apply to Elizabeth, the youngest of the children.

Henry Sanders, great-grandfather of the subject of this review, was born and reared in Virginia and became a pioneer farmer and distiller in Taylor County, Kentucky, where he was a prominent and influential citizen of the early days and where he and his wife continued to reside until their deaths, their son James, grandfather of James R. of this review, having been born in this county, though the same had not been organized under this name at that time. He devoted his entire active career to farm industry in his native county, and his death occurred in the Muldraugh Hill district of the county prior to the birth of his grandson, James R. He married Mary Griffin, who was born in Adair County, this state, and who survived him by several years.

William O. Wear, proprietor and publisher of the "Calloway Times," is one of the newspaper men of this region who has fairly earned the right to be called a native publisher. He is a member of much of the present, which has been made of recent years in this section of the state. He is an experienced man in his line and understands the grave responsibilities resting upon him. He was born at Murray, Kentucky, January 21, 1847, a son of A. H. Wear, and a member of one of the aristocratic Southern families. The name was originally spelled Weir, and those bearing it came to the American Colonies from Scotland, locating first in Virginia, from whence migration was later made to Alabama and thence to Kentucky.

A. H. Wear was born at Tuscumbia, Alabama, in 1817, and died at Murray, Kentucky, in November, 1903. His parents came to Calloway County, Kentucky, when he was a lad, and he was reared, educated and married. After the Town of Murray was organized A. H. Wear settled in it and continued to make it his home until his death. He was the pioneer druggist of the place, and of Calloway County, and two of his sons still conduct his original store. He was a strong democrat. The Christian Church had in him one of its earnest members and generous supporters. A Mason, he was a member of Murray Lodge No. 105, A. F. and A. M., for many years, and for fifty years served it as treasurer. He was married to Sallie Meolan, who was born at Mount Sterling, Montgomery County, Kentucky, in 1830, and died at Murray, in 1910. Their children were as follows: William O., who is the eldest; Samuel, who died at Murray when still a boy; Emily J., who died at Murray when she was seventy years of age, was the wife of Edmond Starks, a farmer, now deceased; Lucy, who died in Florida, was the wife of the late D. W. Jones, a merchant while living at Murray, but a farmer after going to Florida, where he, too, passed away; Andrew M., who is a saddler and harnessmaker, lives at Jackson, Tennessee; John M., who died at Los Angeles, California, was also a saddler and harness maker; D. M., who was a farmer, died at Murray in 1918; H. P., who is engaged in conducting his father's old drug store at Murray; Mattie E., who is unmarried, resides at Murray; J. V., who died at La Center, Kentucky, was a newspaper publisher; B. B., who is a partner of his brother, H. P., and E. W., who is the publisher of the "La Center Advance," lives at La Center, Kentucky.

William O. Wear attended the public schools of his native city and was graduated from its high school in 1867. Upon leaving school he went into his father's drug store. In 1875 he established the "Calloway Times," and has been its sole proprietor ever since. This journal circulates in Murray and Calloway and surrounding counties. Mr. Wear is a strong democrat, and has served in the Murray City Council, and was elected to succeed himself. He is a member of the Christian Church, and belongs to Murray Lodge No. 105, A. F. and A. M.; Murray Chapter No. 92, R. A. M.; and Murray Council, R. and S. M. His residence on Fifth Street, which he owns, is one of the finest in the city. During the late war Mr. Wear used his paper to promote all of the local activities, and through its columns and personally was an effective participant in all of the drives in behalf of the Liberty Loans, the Red Cross and similar organizations.

In 1869 he was married at Murray to Miss Mary Linn, a daughter of R. C. Linn and his wife Jane (Irvan) Linn, farming people, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Wear became the parents of the following children: Sallie, who married W. E. King, a machinist, resides at Baton Rouge, Louisiana; Reubie, who is unmarried, lives with her parents; and Baby, also unmarried. When they live, Calloway lives at Murray, is assisting his father in the paper. At one time he belonged to the Kentucky National Guard. Mr. Wear's grasp of public affairs is clear and comprehensive, and he knows how to present them and local topics of special interest in such a manner as to meet with the approval of his readers. He has always been fearless in his support of those measures he deemed to be for the good of the majority, and has never failed to put his shoulder to the public progress whenever there was necessity for such exertion.

F. L. Peddicord, M. D. A former superintendent of the Central State Hospital, Doctor Peddicord is a specialist and recognized authority in nervous diseases, and is now engaged in private practice at Covington. His varied experience and services have given him a high place in the medical profession. Doctor Peddicord was born in Bracken County, Kentucky, November 22, 1871. The Peddicords lived in Ireland until they came to the United States in Colonial times and settled in Maryland. Doctor Peddicord's grandfather Nelson Peddicord was a native of Maryland and married a girl of the same name and a distant relative. They came West and settled in Mason County, Kentucky, where he followed farming the rest of his life. The father of Doctor Peddicord was F.
M. Peddicord, who was born in Mason County in 1811. He was reared and married in Bracken County, where for a long period of years he conducted his operations as a farmer on a large scale. He died in Bracken County December 23, 1918. During the war between the states he was in the Home Guards, and was once captured and imprisoned at Lexington. He was a democrat and very devout and regular in his worship as a member of the Christian Church. His wife was Susan Feagan who was born in Bracken County in 1826 and died there in 1912. Doctor Peddicord was the oldest of three children. H. O. Peddicord was a teacher and died in Bracken County. There was called to the ministry. Grace died unmarried at the age of twenty-eight. Lillie the only surviving daughter is the wife of Taylor Fraysur, a farmer in Bracken County.

Doctor Peddicord spent his useful years on a farm in Bracken County, gained most of his education through his own efforts, and at his own expense, and was a successful teacher before he achieved his ambition of becoming a physician. He attended rural schools, a graded school at Johnsville in Bracken County, and for one year was a student in the Kentucky State University at Lexington. He finished his literary education in the Northern Indiana Normal College of Valparaiso, where he spent seventy-two weeks. He graduated in the commercial and pen art courses and at the close of the semester he entered the medical and classical department. Leaving college in 1893 Doctor Peddicord returned to Bracken County and for about ten years directed his talents to teaching. In 1903 he entered the University of Louisville Medical School and received his M. D. degree in 1906. Following his graduation he practiced fourteen months in Pendleton County, and for six years was a physician in Boone County. He was called to the Cincinnati General Hospital at Lakeland as first assistant physician, but after 1½ years was delegated with the full responsibilities of superintendent of this institution. He was superintendent 6½ years, and after retiring he moved to Covington in October, 1920, and has since confined his attention to his specialty in Neuro-Psychiatry. His offices and residence are at 1017 Madison Avenue.

Doctor Peddicord is a member of the American Medical Psychological Association, and is affiliated with the Campbell-Kenton Counties Medical Society, Kentucky State and American Medical Association and the Southern Medical Association. So far as his official duties permitted he lent all his personal influence and aid to the success of the various war drives in which he was called upon. Doctor Peddicord is a democrat, a member of the Christian Church, and is affiliated with the Burlington Lodge Knights of Pythias at Burlington, Kentucky, and was formerly a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen of America and Improved Order of Red Men. In Bracken County in 1868 he married Alice Moorhead. Her parents J. A. and Biddy (Poe) Moorhead are residents of Brookville, Kentucky, where her father is a merchant.

Roy C. Snyder is one of the expert and practical oil men in Eastern Kentucky, and for many years has been connected with the Wood Oil Company in Wayne County, and is now state superintendent for that company's interests in Kentucky, with headquarters at Monticello.

Mr. Snyder acquired his training in the oil fields of Pennsylvania and was born in Millerstown in that state March 26, 1874. This is an old Pennsylvania family. His father, Truman K. Snyder, was born in Bradford in 1843, was reared and married in that city, and entered the oil contracting business at an early date in the history of petroleum. In 1872 he moved to Millerstown, where he conducted a custom boot and shoe business until the store was burned in 1874. He then resumed oil contracting at Bradford, and in 1882 went to Astatula, Lake County, Florida, where for five years he was a carpenter contractor. Returning to Bradford in 1887 he followed the vocation of a farmer the rest of his life, and in 1896 moved to Limestone, New York, living on a farm there until his death in 1898. He had two children, the first three years with the noted Bucketail Regiment of Pennsylvania, and the last three years in the United States Cavalry. At the close of the Civil war his regiment was sent to the West and he was in many campaigns against the Indians, being finally mustered out in Idaho. He participated in thirty-three major engagements during the war and on the frontier. He was a steadfast republican in politics, was a member of the Presbyterian Church and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Truman K. Snyder married Agnes Tait, who was born at Moffat, Scotland, in 1830 and died at Bradford, Pennsylvania, in 1905. Her father, Thomas Tait, was born in Scotland in 1807, and in 1838 married the firm C. E. Daugherty & Company at Monticello.

Roy C. Snyder acquired his early education in the public schools of Bradford, Pennsylvania, and Astatula, Florida. While in Florida one of his teachers was Charles P. Summarill, now well known to fame as one of the major generals of the American forces during World War and one of the ablest soldiers and leaders in the Regular Army. Mr. Snyder left school at the age of seventeen and then followed an extended experience as a worker in the oil fields of Virginia and Ohio. In 1905 he located at Monticello, Kentucky, and there he had charge of the Wood Oil Company's property and has since been advanced to the company's state superintendent. He is also senior member of the firm C. E. Daugherty & Company, and he and Mr. Daugherty have been engaged in business as oil contractors since 1910. They have maintained a complete organization for drilling oil wells, and have brought in much oil production on their own account in Wayne County. Mr. Snyder is also a partner in the W. B. Heck & Company, an oil producing firm at Monticello, owning some production in Wayne County.

Mr. Snyder is the present mayor of Monticello, having been elected for an unexpired term in 1919, while in 1920 he was commissioned mayor by Governor Edwin P. Morrow and again commissioned in 1921. He is a republican, a member of Monticello Lodge No. 152, F. & A. M.; Masonic Council No. 152, R. A. M.; Somerset Commandery No. 31, K. T.; Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Louisville, is past grand of Monticello Lodge No. 361, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. During the World war he was chairman of the War Chest Fund campaign in Wayne County and otherwise helpful on other committees. In 1907 he moved to New York; Mr. Snyder married Miss Margaret McKelleb of Thompsonville, New York and Eliza (Barber) McKelleb. His father was a farmer and oil producer at Limestone, and Mrs. Snyder is a graduate of the high school of that city. To their marriage have been born three children: Emroy G., is the wife of H. A. Tate, on the engineering force of the Wood Oil Company and a resident of Monticello; Milton F. was a student in the Culver Military Academy, Carroll County, Indiana, now in business in New York City; Marcia, the eldest, was in the Monticello High School, now attending school in New York City.

R. D. Simpson. While statesmen play a prominent part in the directing of the affairs of any community or country, yet the men of paramount importance in the history of their times are those who carry on the everyday business, performing the duties resting upon them to the best of their ability and if faithful, making their part of the world a little better for having passed through it. Murray is not different from other municipalities, and is proud of the fact that it has in its midst some of the most substantial and dependable men of Western Kentucky, among whom may be mentioned R. D. Simpson, proprietor of the granite and marble works he is conducting under his own name. He is a son of Sir Ball and of Erasmus Simpson, who was born in Shelby County, Kentucky, in 1750. He died in Ballard County, Kentucky, in December, 1889, although he was reared, educated and married in Shelby County, Kentucky, from whence he went to Christian County, Kentucky, in 1846, and to Ballard County in 1853. All of his mature years he was engaged in farming. Erasmus Simpson was married to Martha Taylor, who was born at Louisisville, Kentucky, and died in Ballard County. She was a direct descendant of Zachary Taylor.

The Simpson family was founded in Kentucky by the great-grandfather of R. D. Simpson, who moved into Shelby County from Virginia. His wife was a niece of Daniel Boone, and in this connection with the great frontiersman and pioneer of Kentucky no doubt influenced Mr. Simpson in making his advent into the wilderness.

S. P. Simpson was born in Shelby County, Kentucky, October 20, 1835, and died at Murray, Kentucky, August 20, 1918. Until 1855 he continued to live in Shelby County, where he was reared, received his educational training, and was married, but in that year moved to Ballard County, and was there engaged in farming until October 18, 1892, when he moved into Calloway County, Kentucky, and engaged in lumber work, which office he held for twenty years, and then retired from active participation in business or professional life. In politics he was a democrat. The Baptist Church held his membership. He was married to Fannie Washburn, who was born in Shelby County, Kentucky, May 28, 1840. She survives her husband and makes her home at Murray. They became the parents of the following children: R. D., whose name he bears, was born in 1865, died at Murray in 1916, unmarried.

R. D. Simpson attended the public schools of Blainville, Ballard County, at the time it was the county seat of Ballard County, and there finished the high-school course. Leaving school at the age of eighteen years he began farming on his own account in Ballard County, and was thus engaged until he went to McCracken County, and continued his agricultural activity there until 1892, in which year he located at Murray. In 1894 he became manager of the Murray Milling Company, and held that position until 1903, when he bought the marble and granite business owned by Rufie Downs, taking into partnership with him Messrs. Boyce and Lassiter, he being the senior member and general manager. This is the only granite and marble concern in Calloway County, and is one of the largest of its kind in Western Kentucky. The firm owns another marble and granite yard at Paris, Tennessee. The Murray plant and offices are located on Maple Street. The work done by this firm is exceptionally artistic, and orders come to it not only from all over Calloway, but adjoining counties. Mr. Simpson is a democrat, but has not entered actively into politics, his time and attention having been absorbed by his business. He belongs to the Christian Church, the Lodge and to the Masonic Order. Fraternally he is a member of Murray Camp No. 50, W. O. W. He owns a modern residence, one of the beautiful homes of the city, which is located on one of the most desirable sites. The house is surrounded by tastefully kept grounds, in which are some fine shade trees.

Mr. Simpson was married at Paris, Tennessee, in 1908, to Miss Lula Morris, a daughter of W. L. and Anna (Brown) Morris, residents of Henry County, Tennessee, where Mr. Morris is engaged in farming. Mr. and Mrs. Simpson became the parents of two children, namely: Katherine, who was born May 2, 1910; and R. D., Jr., who was born May 9, 1912.

HENRY SCOTT ROBINSON. In noting the representative members of the bar of Taylor County it is gratifying to designate Mr. Robinson as one of the number, especially in view of the fact that he is a native son of the county and a scion of one of the old and honored families of this section of the Blue Grass State. He is engaged in the successful practice of his profession at Campbellsville, the judicial center of his native county, and has appeared in many important cases in the various courts of this section of Kentucky, with a record of many victories won in both the criminal and civil departments of law.

Mr. Robinson was born at Campbellsville on the 6th of June, 1861, and thus made his appearance shortly after the Civil war was initiated. He is a son of Capt. John R. Robinson, who was born in Taylor County February 23, 1823, and whose death here occurred on the 11th of March, 1893. His father, Robert Robinson, a native of South Carolina, was a member of a family founded in the Old Dominion State in the early Colonial period of our national history, became one of the pioneer settlers of Taylor County, Kentucky, whither he came as a young man. He here developed a productive farm, which he claimed from the virtual wilderness, and here passed the remainder of his life. His wife, whose maiden name was Nancy Rice, was born and reared in this county, eldest of eleven children reared on a farm site of their life. The names of both the Robinson and Rice families have been prominently concerned in the early development of Taylor County.

Capt. John R. Robinson was reared under the conditions and influences that marked the pioneer period of Taylor County history, and his vigorous and alert mentality enabled him to gain a liberal education and to sustain a status as one of the most distinguished members of the bar of this native county, at whose judicial center he was actively engaged in the practice of his profession many years, with specially high standing as a land lawyer, in which field of practice he specialized. In his earlier life he served as a justice of the peace at Campbellsville, and he also filled the office of county attorney one term. He was a stalwart democrat and a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity for many years prior to his death. When the Civil war was precipitated he promptly raised a company for the Union service, and became captain of Company E, Twenty-seventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry. He proceeded with his command to the front, took part in numerous engagements, including a number of major battles, and continued in active service from 1861 until 1864, when he resigned his commission as captain and returned home on account of the impaired health of his wife, whose death occurred in that year. Her maiden name was Malvina Scott, and she was born at Greensburg, Kentucky, in 1838. Of their children, Henry S., of this review, is the elder, and the other child, Malvina, died in infancy. For his second wife Captain Robinson married Miss Lydia E. Barbee, who was born in Taylor County and who here remained until her death, which occurred at Campbellsville. Of the children of this marriage the eldest is Nannette, who is the wife of W. L. Young, a successful lawyer engaged in practice at Campbellsville; Miss Bettie is principal of the high school at Lancaster, Kentucky; P. S. is a successful representative of the lumber business at La Grande, Cortez; and Joseph E., who resides at Campbellsville, is in the United States internal revenue service in the capacity of collector.

Henry S. Robinson is indebted to the public schools of Campbellsville for his early education, and after leaving school he read law under the effective and punctilious preceptorship of his father, who saw to it that he was firmly grounded in the involved science of jurisprudence. He was admitted to the bar of his native county in January, 1882, upon examination before Judge R. S. Montague and Judge Drury Hudson. During the long intervening years Mr. Robinson has been actively engaged in the practice of law in his native city, and the broad scope and importance of his law business attest alike his ability and his secure hold upon popular confidence and esteem. He maintains his offices in the building of the Taylor National Bank, and is the owner of his modern residence property on Depot Street.

While Mr. Robinson has never wavered in allegiance to the democratic party and his given effective service in behalf of its cause, he has had no desire for political preferment, though in direct line with his profession he gave 8½ years of specially efficient service as county attorney. He is an active member of the Baptist Church of Calloway and a member of the Board of Trustees. During the World war he was active and characteristically loyal in the furtherance of the local activities in support of the nation's war work, and by Governor Stanley he was appointed legal advisor or counsel of the Taylor County Draft Board. He gave valuable aid in the furtherance of the various local drives in behalf of the Government loans, Red Cross work etc., bought his full quota of war bonds and Savings Stamps, and was zealous in the promotion of all such work in his native county.

The year 1883 recorded the marriage of Mr. Robinson to Miss Hattie Taylor, daughter of the late D. G. and Lou J. (Cowherd) Taylor, Taylor, Mr. having been one of the representative farmers of Taylor County. Mrs. Robinson passed to the life eternal in 1889, and was not survived by children. In 1892 Mr. Robinson wedded Miss Minnie Sharp, a daughter of William and Sue (Prutt) Sharp, both now deceased, Mr. Sharp having been a successful farmer in Taylor County. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson have one child, Molife, who remains at the parental home and is a popular factor in the social activities of the younger generation at Campbellsville.

JOE LANCASTER. The legal profession has always attracted the young Southerner, and some of the most talented sons of Dixie have devoted their energies and talents to the practice of this most exacting calling. Many of them have attained to national reputation, and some have been known the world over because of their knowledge of the law and their flaming eloquence. Joe Lancaster, county attorney of Calloway County and a distinguished member of the bar at Murray, is one of the young men of Kentucky who finds his fame work in the practice of his profession and reaping laurels as a result of his ability and skill.

Mr. Lancaster was born in Humphreys County, Tennessee, January 9, 1851, a son of S. M. Lancaster, and grandson of Paschall Lancaster, a native of North Carolina, in william, the first American colonizer of the family in the American Colonies located when he came here from England. Paschall Lancaster was married to a Miss Holbrook, also a native of North Carolina, and with his wife journeyed into Tennessee, where he became one of the very early settlers and farmers of Hickman County, and there he died before his grandson was born.

S. M. Lancaster was born in Hickman County, Tennessee in 1813, and is now living at Murray. He grew up in Hickman County, where he became a farmer, but after his marriage moved to Humphreys County, of that same state, and there all his children were born. In 1865 he came to Murray, Kentucky, where he lived, in 1881, his wife, Mrs. Hannah Calloway, was born 1881, was recognized as one of the eminent members of his profession in Calloway County. His services have been such a valuable factor in the business of his firm as to make him cast his vote for the candidates of the democratic party. A very religious man, he has long been an earnest member of the Missionary Baptist Church and generous in its support. He is a Mason. During the war between the North and the South he served in the Confederate army, under General Bragg, and participated in the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Murfreesboro and other important engagements, and was severely wounded at the battle of Murfreesboro. S. M. Lancaster was married to Miss Minnie Sharp, who was born in Hickman County, Tennessee, in 1847, and they became the parents of the following children: Joe, who was second in order of birth.

Joe Lancaster was educated in the rural schools of Calloway County, and later attended the Southern Normal University at Huntington, Tennessee, from which he was graduated in 1907 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts and the degree of Bachelor of Laws. That same year Mr. Murray and established himself in a general practice. In 1907 he was elected clerk of the Circuit Court of Calloway County, taking office in January, 1908, and filled that office for six years. His practice is a general civil and criminal one, and he is recognized as one of the eminent members of his profession in Calloway County. Having made such an enviable record as a circuit clerk, he was elected in the democratic party, as well as those outside, recommended his appointment to the office of county attorney, and he has been filling that office since August, 1910. His offices are in the Court House.

Mr. Lancaster is a democrat. He belongs to Murray Lodge No. 105, A. F. and A. M.; Murray Chapter No. 52, R. A. M.; Paducah Commandery No. 11, K. T.; and Kosair Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. of Louisville, Kentucky. He owns a modern residence on West Poplar Street, which is one of the finest ones in the city. During the great war he took an active part in all of the local war activities, serving as food administrator of the county and assisting in putting all of the Liberty Loan and other drives "over the top." He was one of the "Four Minute Men" and one of the most effective talkers of this region, for he is an impressive speaker and commands attention through his flaming sincerity.

In 1901 Mr. Lancaster was married in Graves County, Kentucky, to Miss Clemmie Paschall, a daughter of W. H. and Victoria (Cole) Paschall, the former of whom is now a farmer of Calloway County, but the latter is deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Lancaster have no children. A man of personal charm, culture and wide intellectual attainments, Mr. Lancaster has a brilliant future before him. He has always had a broader sense of responsibility with reference to civic matters, and his connection with an important office is giving him a knowledge of men and affairs which registers the sharp, resonant impressions of the vibrating needle of experience and will prove very useful to him in the years before him.

JAMES MONROE JOHNSON. In the business and legislative history of the City of Benton and the County of Marshall the name of James Monroe Johnson appears frequently in connection with reliable transactions in commercial circles and valuable services rendered in the line of public duty. The proprietor of a prosperous coal and feed business, built up through his own industry and ability, he is also an ex-representative, having served in two regular and one special sessions of the State Legislature.

Lancaster, Missouri; and his wife, Mrs. Calloway, was born March 18, 1842, is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sharp, and is now living at Murray.
Mr. Johnson was born on a farm near Hamlet, Marshall County, November 26, 1856, a son of William H. and Hulda Jane (Hamilton) Johnson. His father, born in 1831 in this county, passed his entire life here as an industrious and prosperous agriculturist and died in 1913. He was a democrat in his political allegiance and served at one time as road supervisor of Marshall County, and was a strong churchman of the Baptist faith. He married Miss Hulda Jane Hamilton, who was born in 1850 in Marshall County and died here in 1916. Their children were as follows: B. F., who is engaged in farming in Marshall County; James Monroe; Eliza Jane, who died in 1918 as the wife of Mort Reynolds, a farmer of Marshall County; P. T., who is engaged in the granite and marble business in Independence, Missouri; Callie, who is the wife of D. A. Provine, a farmer near Gilbertsville, Marshall County, and also engaged in the tobacco buying business; Bertie, who married J. J. Chambers, a farmer, and after his death married Thomas Fezier, a farmer of Graves County, this state; Vira, the wife of Doc Imman, the proprietor of a grain elevator at Paducah; and Henry, a mill operator and owner and proprietor of a granite and marble plant in McCracken County, this state.

James Monroe Johnson was educated in the rural schools of Marshall County and was reared on his father's farm, where he resided until reaching the age of twenty-three years. At that time he embarked upon farming operations on his own account, and for ten years devoted himself industriously to the tilling of the soil. When he gave up farming temporarily he purchased a flouring mill at Wadesboro, Kentucky, which he operated two years, and then, coming to Benton, he secured a mill of like character. He had a quarter of a century's experience as a successful mill owner, but in 1919 disposed of this property and since then, for the most part, has devoted his attention and abilities to the operation of his coal and feed business, which has grown to such proportions as to make him one of the leading business men of his community. For a time he had important farming interests also, but has recently disposed of his farm. He is the owner of his modern residence on Bearden Street, which is one of the comfortable and attractive homes of Benton, with four acres of highly improved land surrounding.

Politically a democrat, Mr. Johnson has long been prominent in the ranks of his party and has been uncompromising in his support of its candidates and principles. He was elected to serve in both sessions of the legislature, in 1895 and 1903, and in 1913 was elected a member of the Lower House of the Kentucky Legislature, a position to which he was re-elected in 1915. He served in the sessions of 1914 and 1916, as well as in the special session of 1917, and his entire record in that body is one that speaks of constructive and conscientious work on behalf of his constituents, his district and his state. He was chairman of the Warehouse Committee during both sessions, and served on a number of other important committees. Mr. Johnson is a member of the Baptist Church, and as a fraternalist is affiliated with Benton Lodge No. 701, A. F. and A. M.; Elm Camp No. 717, Woodmen of the World; and the local lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He took an active part in all local war activities, helped in the various drives, and bought generously of Liberty bonds.

In Marshall County, Kentucky, Mr. Johnson was united in marriage with Miss Augusta Heath, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mart Heath, both deceased, Mr. Heath having been an attorney. Mrs. Johnson died in 1904, leaving six children: Cora, who married Clarence McGregor, a merchant of Benton, and after his death married Thomas Woods, a clerk in the Rudy Department Store, Paducah; Gillard B., engaged in the feed and grain business at Benton; William, a flour miller at Golo, Graves County, this state; May, the wife of Hayden Draffon, a farmer and rural free delivery mail carrier of Marshall County; Velda, the wife of William Ely, bookkeeper for the Ford Garage at Benton; and Bettie, who married Herbert Cole, of Detroit, Michigan, connected with the Foreman Automobile Company. In 1912 Mr. Johnson married Mrs. Bettie (Washum) Ivey, a native of Marshall County.

Milton Dilts Holton, district manager of the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company, is one of the distinguished men of Calloway County, and one who has taken a constructive part in the civic as well as business life of Murray, which he has served with diligence and efficiency as mayor. Mr. Holton was born at Mount Sterling, Montgomery County, Kentucky, October 27, 1869, a son of Henry E. Holton, grandson of Thomas Holton, and a member of one of the aristocratic families of Virginia, whose family was established during the Colonial epoch of this country by ancestors who came from England. One of his ancestors served in the American Revolution, and all of them were citizens of merit and high standing.

Thomas Holton, the paternal grandfather, was born in Kentucky, whither the family had migrated in pioneer days, and he died at Covington, this state, at a time antedating the birth of his grandson. A man of strong personality, he took an active part in local affairs wherever he was located, and at one time served as sheriff of Pendleton County, Kentucky. During a portion of his life he was a steamboat man, and he also attained to a well-merited success as proprietor of a popular hotel. During the early '50s he was a resident of Memphis, Tennessee, from which city he moved to Covington, Kentucky. Thomas Holton was married to a Miss McCarty, who died at Paducah, Kentucky, in May, 1891. Her father, a great-grandfather of Milton D. Holton, was a veteran of the War of 1812.

Henry E. Holton was born at Falmouth, Pendleton County, Kentucky, in 1878, and died at Los Angeles, California, in 1910. He reared at Covington, Kentucky, and educated at West Point Military Academy, where he remained until the outbreak of the war between the North and the South. Espousing the cause of the South, he resigned and coming back enrolled in the Confederate army, as a member of Company D, Eighth Arkansas Regiment. He was wounded and captured at the battle of Chickamauga, and with numerous months in prison on Johnson's Island. During the war he served as a commissioned officer. His cause lost, he bravely shouldered the responsibilities of the defeated, and for two years taught school in Harrison County, Kentucky, and from there went to Mount Sterling, Kentucky, where he owned and conducted a private school until 1871. In that year he moved to Ghent, Kentucky, and spent a year as principal of the school there, but the next year he spent at Milton, Kentucky, and the following year he went to Paducah, Kentucky, and going to Moscow, Ohio, was superintendent of its schools until he left that city for Germantown, Kentucky; and for a year was superintendent of its schools coming to Murray, he served as principal of its school for five years, and then went to Paducah, Kentucky, and conducted a private school from 1886 to 1902, and also owned a dairy and fruit farm in the vicinity of Paducah. In 1902 he went to Richmond, Virginia, and was there occupied with agricultural pursuits until 1900, when he went to St. Louis, Missouri, and there conducted a flourishing real estate business for six years. In 1906 he moved to Portland, Oregon, and continued his operations as a realtor until he retired and moved to Los Angeles, California. He was a strong democrat. The Christian Church had in him an active member and generous supporter, and he was for many years a lay preacher. Fraternally he was a Mason and Odd Fellow.

Henry E. Holton was married to Harriet Broadwell Diltz, a daughter of Milton L. and Naggie (Penn) Diltz, the latter being a lineal descendant of John Penn, a brother of William Penn. Her uncle, Louis Broadwell, was a Congressman from Kentucky. Mr. Holton was born in Bracken County, Kentucky, in 1842, and died at Paducah, Kentucky, in 1881, having borne her the following children: Sue, who married Judge T. P. Cook, an attorney and formerly circuit judge of the Third Judicial District of Kentucky, lives at Hopkinsville, Kentucky; Milton D., who was second in order of birth; Henry E., who is in the insurance business in Paducah, Kentucky; Clara; Susie; and Carrie, who is the widow of Rufus Ward, formerly actively engaged in an insurance business at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, where he died, and where she is still living.

Milton D. Holton attended the public schools of Mosco, Ohio; Germantown and Murray, Kentucky, and left school when he was sixteen years old and was employed on his father's farm near Paducah, Kentucky, until 1888. In the latter year he became shipping clerk for a tobacco warehouse at Paducah, Kentucky, and remained with that concern for two years, leaving it to go with a dairy and creamery house at Paducah, and then, in 1892, he went to Amarillo, Texas, when it was a cow town with less than 1,000 population, and worked in a general store for a year. The following year, he had charge of a creamery for a year. In 1894 he came to Murray, and was admitted to the bar, having been studying law during his leisure moments for some time. For a year he was engaged in the practice of his profession, but did not find in it any more than he had in his former occupations, the proper outlet for his talents, and finally, in 1903, he embarked in the insurance business, which is essentially his forte. He went to Fort Worth, Texas, and carried on a flourishing business for several years. In the meanwhile he became interested in a mining proposition at Sweetwater, Nevada, and spent several years looking after it, but in 1900 went to Chicago, Illinois, and from December of that year until March, 1910, was representative on the road out of Chicago for the Travelers Insurance Company. Returning to Murray, he resumed his insurance business here, and is now district manager for the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company, one of the sound and dependable organizations, his territory covering Calloway, Trigg and Marshall counties. His offices are conveniently located in the Ryan Building on Court Square. Mr. Holton is very active as a democrat, and was the second mayor of Murray, was city clerk for one term, and for six years was master commissioner of Calloway County. A Mason, he belongs to Murray Lodge No. 105, A. F. and A. M.; Murray Chapter No. 92, R. A. M.; Paducah Commandery No. 11, K. T.; and Kosair Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Louisville, Kentucky. He is an ex-member of Paducah Lodge No. 217, B. P. O. E., and an ex-member of the Knights of Pythias. For ten years he served as secretary of the Calloway County Fair Association and as secretary of the Murray Building & Loan Association. Mr. Holton owns a modern residence on Olive Street, which is one of the fine ones of Murray, and is surrounded by admirably kept and extensive grounds, in which are some magnificent shade trees.

On January 25, 1869, Mr. Holton was married at Murray, Kentucky, to Miss Isabel Kelly Hamlin, a daughter of Judge R. F. and Laura (Boggs) Hamlin, both of whom are now deceased. He was county judge and county clerk of Calloway County, and early in life was prominent as an educator at Murray. During the war between the North and the South he served gallantly in the Confederate army. Mrs. Holton was graduated from the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, and for a year prior to her marriage was engaged in teaching school in Calloway County. She is a lady of charming personality and fine educational talents. Mr. and Mrs. Holton became the parents of two children, namely: Hattie Laura, who was born December 2, 1890, and was educated at Murray High School, after which she attended Hamilton College at Lexington, Kentucky; Robert, who was born in November, 1903, graduated from the Murray High School and is now at Transylvania College at Lexington, Kentucky; Annie Diltz, who was born December 18, 1905. It is attending the Murray High School and; and Juliet Milton, who was born November 26, 1911.

Mr. Holton has been eminently successful in his insurance work, and is actuated by high motives in carrying out his policies. His experience prior to his entry on this present line of endeavor he feels to have been of great value to him, as it taught him much with regard to human nature and the motives which govern men. His present position not only give him an agreeable and profitable occupation, but he feels that in educating the public to the necessity of providing protection for their families and their own old age he is rendering his kind a service of great value. Possessing as he does liberal views and a public spirit, he has been able to give much to Murray and has quickened into intense activity a local pride that is having remarkable results.

Mrs. George Washington Martin, one of the highly cultured ladies of Marshall County, Kentucky, is residing at Birmingham, where her husband has extensive interests as a tobbacconist and financier. George Washington Martin was born in Muhlenberg County, Kentucky, in 1854, a son of Felix J. Martin, and grandson of Hutton Martin, who died in Muhlenberg County before the birth of his grandson.

Felix J. Martin was born in Muhlenberg County, Kentucky, in 1825, and died at Greenville, that county, in 1902, having been a farmer and tobacconist upon an extensive scale. He was married to Caroline Eaves, born in 1829, who died in Muhlenberg County in August, 1910. She was a sister of Judge Charles Eaves. Felix J. Martin was a prominent lawyer of Greenville, Kentucky, and was very conscientious in his discharge of the obligations entailed by his behviers. He and his wife had the following children: John, who was a farmer, died at Greenville, Kentucky, in 1920; George Washington, who was the second in order of birth; William S., who was a tobacconist, merchant and prominent business man and farmer of McLean County, Kentucky, where he died; Rufus, who was a tobacconist, merchant and successful business man of Greenville, died there in 1903; Jennie, who married E. J. Puryear, a tobacconist and ex-merchant of Greenville; Joseph, who is a tobacconist and farmer of South Carrollton, Kentucky; Annie, who married T. R. Smith, a farmer and flour-mill owner of Elizabethtown, Kentucky; Betty, who married William Hanna, a farmer of Hopkins County, Kentucky; a tobacconist, coal operator, banker and one of the most prominent business men of Greenville; and Dovie, who married W. H. Coffman, died at Itasca, Texas, and he died in 1910, having been a banker for years.

George Washington Martin attended the public schools of Muhlenberg County and the Cave Springs College near Russellville, Kentucky, leaving school at the age of twelve. For ten years he was engaged in a timber business, and continued to reside in Muhlenberg County, and then began to handle tobacco, buying and exporting, maintaining his headquarters at Sacramento, McLean County, Kentucky, until 1904. In that year he came to Birmingham, where he had already established a tobacco business, and for a time maintained branch houses at Sacramento and Hartford, and now conducts operations to Birmingham and Gillbertsville. He has a large warehouse of his own at Birmingham, and rents another at Gilbertsville, and is the most extensive tobacco dealer in Marshall County. Mr. Martin has many other interests and is a director of the Sacramento Deposit Bank, which he served as president, and which he assisted in organizing, but after the bank was firmly established and he became chief executive for fifteen years, he resigned. He is also a stockholder in the Itasca National Bank of Itasca, Texas, owns a modern residence on Washington Street, several other dwellings at Birmingham, a second warehouse in the city, a farm of fifty acres 3½ miles north of Birmingham, a second farm of thirty-five acres one-half mile east of Birmingham, and a third one of thirty acres one-quarter of a mile south of Birmingham, and is extremely interested in valuable farm land in other parts of the state. Mr. Martin is a democrat. He belongs to T. L. Jefferson Lodge No. 622, A. F. and A. M.

In 1890 occurred the marriage at Centerville, Mississippi, of George Washington Martin and Sue Ramsey, and they became the parents of the following children: Evalie Fisher married JACK E. Fisher, a commonwealth attorney residing at Bentonville, Kentucky, with whom he left three daughters, Bessie, Blanche and Pansy. He was lieutenant governor of Kentucky, and a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work; Joseph Ramsey, who was born July 30, 1894, is now with his parents. He attended the Tennessee National Institute Military College at Sweetwater, Tennessee, and Bethel College of Russellville, Kentucky, for two years. With the entry of this country into the great war he felt it incumbent upon him to offer his services to his Government, and enlisted in August, 1897. He was commissioned a second lieutenant and sent to the Officers Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, and was advanced to the rank of first lieutenant. He was mustered out of the service at Greenville, South Carolina, in February, 1919. The third child, Charles E., died at the age of 2½ years; and the fourth, John Hudson, who was born September 28, 1901, is a junior in Georgetown College, Kentucky.

Mrs. Martin's grandfather, Willis Ramsey, was born in Sumpter County, South Carolina, and died in that county before the birth of his granddaughter. For his times he was a very extensive planter and wealthy man. Willis Ramsey was thrice married, and his second wife, who was a Miss Odell before her marriage, was the grandmother of Mrs. Martin. She, too, was born, spent her life and died in Sumpter County, South Carolina.

Mrs. Martin was born in Sumpter County, South Carolina, a daughter of T. J. Ramsey, who was born in Sumpter County, South Carolina, in 1840, and died at Centerville, Mississippi, in 1890. He was reared in his native county, where he lived for many years and was there engaged in farming and teaching school. Later he went to Texas, and for a year was engaged in teaching schools, and then in 1875 settled in Centerville, Mississippi, where he was editor and publisher of a newspaper. A man of strong convictions, he gave a valued support to the democratic party. The Baptist Church held his membership and had his generous and effective support. During the war between the two sections of the country he served in the Confederate army for four years and was a brave and gallant soldier, under General Buell for a time and during the last year of the war was under the command of General Morgan. T. J. Ramsey was married in Richland County, South Carolina, to Janie Scott, who was born in that county in 1839. She survives her husband and makes her home at Birmingham. Mr. and Mrs. Ramsey had the following children: William, who died in Sumpter County in 1882 and was a farmer; Scott, who died young; Frank, who died at the age of twelve years; Marshall, who was fourth in order of birth; Ida, who is connected with a tobacco factory and lives at Birmingham, Kentucky; John, who is a clerk in a store at El Centro, California; Albert, who is a member of the fire department of Denver, Colorado; Pauline, who married W. H. Wright, general foreman for the Illinois Central Railroad at Haleyville, Alabama; and Miles W., who served as a member of the United States Marines, and is now stationed at Chillicothe, Massachusetts, is a veteran of the Spanish-American war and of the great war. He enlisted in the United States army in 1898, and about twelve years ago was transferred to the marine branch of the service. He has served in Cuba and in the Philippines twice, and is an experienced soldier.

Mrs. Martin is a lady who is held in the highest esteem in her community. She and her husband delight to gather their friends about them at their beautiful home, where they dispense a warm Southern hospitality. A lady who has cultivated her natural talents, Mrs. Martin is the center of many community activities of an intellectual and cultural character, and she exerts a strong influence in her circle of acquaintances. Mr. Martin is one of the leading business men of Marshall County, and his remarkable operations, especially in tobacco, have made him a well-known figure in this part of the state. It would be difficult to find a family more representative of the best elements in Kentucky than this one bearing the name of Martin.

JAMES M. MORELL. There are several reasons why James M. Morell, proprietor and owner of the well-established mercantile business at Prestonburg which bears his name, has succeeded in life, and these may be stated to be energy, system and practical knowledge. The range of his activities is now large, as his establishment is the largest of its kind in Floyd County; but from the beginning of his career Mr. Morell has sought to work steadily and well for substantial results and has never been content to labor merely for the present. Mr. Morell was born November 23, 1871, at Laynesville (now Harrold), Floyd County, Kentucky, a son of John H. and Emma (Christina) Morell, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Kentucky. Frank H. Morell came to Kentucky when about twenty-one years of age and subsequently entered the mercantile business. In addition to being prominent in business affairs, he took an active part in public life, and in 1889 served as judge of Floyd County, later being county superintendent of schools for two terms and also serving for some time as county sur

James M. Morell attended the public schools at Laynesville and spent some time at Prestburg, following which he adopted the vocation of teaching school and for about four years was an instructor in the rural districts of Floyd County. He then entered the lumber business, logging timber at the head of the Big Sandy River, a business in which he was engaged for about eight years. Coming to Prestonburg, in 1900, he established himself in the mercantile business, handling heavy hardware, furniture, rugs and all kinds of house furnishings, and has developed his business from the initial small concern it was to the flourishing enterprise that it is today. This house is now the largest in its line in Floyd County, and its financial strength is equal to the volume of its business, meeting fully the demands of the business community it is situated. A man of unusual business capacity, Mr. Morell's years of orderly and abundant work have resulted in acquired prosperity and the same enjoyment of it, and he has at the same time maintained his interest in securing and preserving the welfare of his community. He has given strict attention to his business, conducting it with a thoughtful and intelligent management which could not help but bring about satisfactory results. A well-read man, he keeps himself thoroughly posted on public events and matters of general interest, and is highly esteemed as a forceful, substantial man and an excellent citizen. His religious connection is with the Baptist Church, and fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic Blue Lodge and the Odd Fellows.

June 28, 1905, Mr. Morell was united in marriage with Miss Mattie Lee Rice, daughter of Samuel Rice, an agriculturist, and a member of families which have long been residents of Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Morell are the parents of five children. Mr. Morell was born in 1839; and William Franklin, born in 1917.

Charles H. Wilson. Tracing the lives of the prominent men of Livingston County, it is easy to see that progressive characters have never lacked for opportunity, and that opportunity has not signified so much as the man himself. In this great country of ours, where the valuable prizes of life are awarded for merit, rather than because of the accident of birth or fortune, the men of high character, courage, pluck and ambition are the successful ones. The highest places in the learned professions are filled with and the greatest commercial enterprises are conducted by just such men—men who at the outset of life placed a solid foundation upon which to build. With Wilson, for instance, for these are the qualities that insure the greatest emoluments and what are still better than any mere accumulation of riches, the confidence and respect of their fellows. With these qualities as his capital, combined with great natural ability and a carefully trained capacity, Charles H. Wilson has long been engaged very successfully in the practice of the law at Smithland, where he is recognized as one of the leading men of Livingston County, as well as one of its ablest attorneys.

Charles H. Wilson was born in Livingston County, Kentucky, August 11, 1872. His grandfather, Charles Wilson, came to the United States from Sweden in 1826, locating at Smithland, where he died in 1864. His wife, Martha Ann (Walker) Wilson, whom he married in 1856, had eleven children, of whom four are now living, namely: George Martin, who is the father of Charles H. Wilson; C. O., who is a farmer of Livingston County; Kentucky; Jane, who married J. F. Robertson, now deceased, who was a farmer of Livingston County, and after the demise of her husband she moved to Akron, Ohio, where she is now residing; and Isaac Walker, who is a mine operator living near Chicago, Illinois.

Charles Wilson became a democrat after he secured his papers of citizenship. By calling he was a farmer, and he owned a large tract of land. He and his wife identified themselves with the Baptist Church. The maternal grandfather of Charles H. Wilson was Reuben Coffer, who was born May 5, 1790, in Virginia, from whence he came to Lyon County, Kentucky, where he died June 20, 1833. On February 10, 1824, he married Elizabeth Ann Brewer, a native of Christian County, Kentucky. In politics Reuben Coffer was indentified with the whig party. By occupation he was a farmer, and was successful in his operations. Both he and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. They had seven children, all of whom are deceased.

George Martin Wilson was born in Livingston County, Kentucky, October 17, 1841 and is now in his eightieth year and resides at Smithland, Kentucky. He was educated in the public schools of Livingston County, one of his teachers having been Capt. J. W. Bush. His life work was farming and stock-raising, and he was remarkably successful in everything he undertook, but he is now retired. At one time he owned about 1,000 acres of land, but divided it among his children. In politics he is a strong democrat, and served as constable and coroner of Livingston County. When war broke out between the North and the South he espoused the Southern cause and enlisted in the Confederate army, serving bravely as a soldier. George Martin Wilson married Mattie Frances Coffer, who was born in Christian County, Kentucky, February 9, 1844, and died in Livingston County June 2, 1896. Their children were as follows: Elizabeth, who married L. H. Cothron, a farmer of Livingston County; Charles H., whose name heads this review; George M., Jr., who is a farmer of Livingston County; Thomas H., who is also a farmer of Livingston County; Hattie M., who married Mr. G. A. Rudd, a farmer and produce commission merchant of Smithland; Martha, who is living with her brother, Charles H.; Harry Winfield, who is in partnership with his brother-in-law, G. A. Rudd, at Smithland; and four others who died young. In November, 1896, George M. Wilson married Mrs. Delia Fort, and they have one son, Floyd A., who is in an insurance business and lives with his father.

Charles H. Wilson received his common school education in the public schools of Livingston County, and in 1895 was graduated from the Princeton College Institute at Princeton, Kentucky, and his wife was graduated from the same institution in the same class. Beginning the study of law in the office of Col. J. C. Hodge, of Smithland, Mr. Wilson completed it and was admitted to the bar at the December term, 1895. For five years he served as city attorney of Smithland, and then was elected attorney of Livingston County. In 1901 he was re-elected to the same office, and served as such until 1905, or eight years in all. His record as a public official marks him for a man of unusual caliber and integrity, and stands to his credit for all time. Mr. Wilson is carrying on a general civil and criminal practice, in the jail on Main Street, and is recognized as one of the ablest members of his profession in the county. In politics he is a democrat. The Baptist Church holds his membership. He belongs to Smithland Lodge No. 138, A. F. and A. M., and Smithland Tent No. 120, Knights of the Maccabees, of which he is past commander. In addition to his professional interests he is president of the Smithland National Bank, having been a director and president as a director of the Smithland Bank. He owns a modern residence on Wilson Avenue, which is one of the finest at Smithland, and several farms, aggregating in all some 465 acres, located along the banks of the Cumberland River.

On August 26, 1866, Mr. Wilson was married to Miss Sadie Eliza Polk, who was born at Louisville, Kentucky, April 21, 1873. She is the daughter of Edward Theodore Polk and his second wife, Emma Sophronia (Hooten) Polk, who was born at Louisville October 10, 1853, and died August 10, 1875. By his first wife, Elizabeth (Marshall) Polk, Doctor Polk had three children, namely: Elizabeth Marshall, who married George Fulton, a bookkeeper of Louisville, Kentucky, now deceased, was born January 4, 1843, at Alexandria, Kentucky; Mary, who married John Marshall, now deceased, was born June 22, 1845; and Bessey Marshall, who was born January 6, 1845, married Capt. Alexander Lawson, in the Government employ, but now deceased, his widow living at Louisville, Kentucky; and John R. M. Polk, who was born September 16, 1851, and died December 24, 1894, was an attorney of Louisville, Kentucky, and a member of the firm of Polk & Hulewede. He married Addie Rice, who survived him and died in 1899. After the death of his second wife Doctor Polk married her sister, Mrs. Eliza Hooten, the widow of Captain Frisbee, and by her marriage to him she has one daughter, Ella Frisbee Coleman, wife of Benjamin Tyler Coleman, of Middletown, Kentucky, where he is employed by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. Mrs. Coleman was born May 9, 1872. Mr. and Mrs. Coleman have two sons: Frisbee and Charles Tyler, both of whom are employees of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, and reside with their parents at Middletown, Kentucky.

Doctor Polk was born in Woodford County, Kentucky, June 12, 1813, and died February 27, 1891, in Jefferson County, Kentucky. His third wife was the Rev. September 23, 1843, and died October 30, 1917, at Middletown, Kentucky.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson became the parents of the following children: Ruby, who died in infancy; Ella Christine, who was born May 13, 1898, is secretary of the Red Cross Chapter of Henderson, Kentucky, was graduated from the Livingston County High School, following which she took a year's course at the Georgetown College, attended Harvard College at Lexington, Kentucky, and the Indiana State University at Bloomington, Indiana, where she specialized in Red Cross work; Mildred Kathleen, who was born December 25, 1901, was graduated from the Livingston High School, then took a course at Shorter College, Rome, Georgia, for a year, and is now teaching school in Livingston County; Sarah Pauline, who was born August 15, 1902, has been attending the University of Kentucky, is now a student at college; Emma Ayleen, who was born in February, 1905, is attending the Livingston County High School; Edward Polk and Charles Polk, twins, who were born February 11, 1909; James Polk, who died in infancy; and Theodore Martin, who was born September 18, 1913.

During the great war Mr. Wilson served as legal advisor for the Livingston County Draft Board, was chairman of the County Chapter of the Red Cross, and was food administrator of the county during 1917 and 1918. He was chairman of the United War Work campaign in 1918, which was a drive for funds for seven allied associations, namely: the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, National Catholic War Council, Jewish Welfare Board, American Library Association, War Camps Community Service and the Salvation Army. Mr. Wilson devoted his time and money to helping put over all of these drives, and during all of the period of activity was one of the speakers throughout the county. The Council of Defense of the county had in him one of its most watchful members, and, in short, he was probably one of the most active workers in behalf of the cause Livingston County produced.

John Bunyan Gardner. Agriculture today continues as essential to peace as it was to war, and consequently now more than ever must the farmer receive all possible encouragement and assistance. He must be taught the structure, composition and physiology of farm crops and their environment, that is, climate, fertilizers, soil, etc., and made to realize that the vital interest of the whole community is centered in the successful production of the crops of the land. To this end, in order to bring about these results there have been established various agencies for the promotion of agriculture, and one of great use to the agriculturist is the local one in each county. The Calloway County Agricultural Agency is one of the best in Western Kentucky, especially since its affairs have been under the capable management of John Bunyan Gardner, county agricultural agent.

John Bunyan Gardner was born at South Hill, Butler County, Kentucky, February 21, 1888, a son of George W. Gardner, and grandson of Edward Gardner, who was born near Huntsville, Kentucky, and died at South Hill, Butler County, Kentucky, in 1900. His parents were among the pioneers of South Hill, where he was reared, and after he reached manhood he taught school for a time, but later became a farmer. He married Gary Arnold, who was born near Huntsville, and died at Earlington, Kentucky, in 1916, while on a visit. They had fourteen children, and Edward Gardner was one in a family of sixteen children, all of whom reached maturity. The Gardeners came from England to Virginia during the Colonial period of this country; and the Arnolds arrived in Virginia during the same epoch from the North of Ireland.

George W. Gardner was born at South Hill, Kentucky, in 1860, and died there in 1914. His entire life was spent at South Hill, and there he developed valuable interests as a farmer. In politics he was a democrat, but never took an aggressive part in public affairs. In the Baptist Church he found his religious home, and from youth was one of its strong supporters and constituent members. Fraternally he belonged to the Independent Order of Red Men. George W. Gardner was married to Laura Jean Flewallen, who survives him and makes his home on the farm at South Hill, Kentucky. She was his junior by three years, as she was born at South Hill in 1863. Their children were as follows: Bertha Lee, who married A. L. Crab, lives at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and he is a professor of psychology in the Western Kentucky State Normal School; John Bunyan, who was the second in order of birth; George L., who was born in Illinois, is appointing salesman for the Marmon Automobile Company; Harry Joe, who is a farmer of Morgan County, Kentucky; Morgan Obie, who lives on the homestead at South Hill; and Mona Belle, who married Leland Hocker, lives at Morgantown, Kentucky, where her husband is engaged in farming. Of these children George Gratton entered the United States service on the second call during the great war, was sent overseas, and served until the close of the war, being mustered out with the rank of second lieutenant. Harry Joe served as a regular in the United States Army for four years before the war and two years during that conflict. He was along the Mexican border, serving in the commissionary department as a non-commissioned officer, and was also in the mail service for a time. Morgan Obie was the first man called to service, and the service from Butler County was great.

John Bunyan Gardner was educated in the public schools of Butler County, the Morgantown High School and the Western Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green, Kentucky, from which latter institution he was graduated in the spring of 1911. He then went to Rosedale, Louisiana, as principal of the Rosedale Agricultural and High School, and remained there one year. Rosedale is located in Webster Parish, and is an important agricultural region. The subsequent year Mr. Gardner was principal of the Lake High School of Ascension Parish, and from there went to Bernice, Clayborne Parish, Louisiana, where for one school year he was principal of the Weldon High School. For the subsequent three years he was principal of the Millerton High School of the same parish, and then went to Webster Parish, and for a year was principal of the Stoneboro High School. For two years he was county agent at Crowley, Acadia Parish, Louisiana. On April 1, 1920, he came to Murray as county agricultural agent, and is still holding that position, with offices in the Court House. During the summer months of 1916 and 1917 Mr. Gardner had supervision of the construction of the dipping vats for the Louisiana State Livestock Sanitary Board in Southwestern Louisiana, and is a man fitted for his present position through special training in his vocation and through experience and is a recognized authority on all matters pertaining to his work. Like his father, he is a democrat and a Baptist. He belongs to Millerton Lodge No. 245, A. F. and A. M.

On September 14, 1915, Mr. Gardner was united in marriage at Bernice, Louisiana, to Miss Ruby Belle Thompson, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Milton Thompson, the former of whom is a retired farmer living at Bernice, Louisiana, the latter being now de-
Mr. Gardner is a firm believer in the value of proper instruction in agricultural matters. He holds that the main reasons for American preeminence in agriculture are to be found in the fine quality of the soil and the high class of men engaged in its cultivation and he believes in keeping up the standards of both. Among the good influences accruing from a proper appreciation of the dignity and value of this important industry may be mentioned the opening up and redemption of large areas of new land and the employment of inventive genius in the production of labor-saving machinery; the development of transportation by land and water; the further establishment of government and other institutions and agencies for the promulgation of agricultural information and the co-operation among the farmers, and the adoption of such important aids as irrigation, dry farming, selective plant and animal breeding and the specialization in crops and stock. Although he has many plans for future work, Mr. Gardner is enthusiastic in the wonderful transition which has taken place from the crude beginnings to present methods and appliances, and as he demonstrates them the contrasts are remarkable.

Judge Edward Pinckney Phillips has earned a distinguished place at the bar and on the bench of Calloway County. It is forcibly illustrative of his legal solidity and versatility that he should have made a high record as a private practitioner and a learned, impartial jurist. The present county judge was born in this county, November 18, 1862, a son of A. C. and Belinda E. (Hood) Phillips.

The Phillips family is of Scotch-Irish origin and came to Virginia about the time of the arrival of Capt. John Smith, the English adventurer, in that colony. From Virginia the family removed to Tennessee, in which state was born Clayborn Phillips, the grandfather of Judge Phillips. He was the pioneer of the family in Kentucky, settling in Calloway County, where he engaged in farming until his early death, at the age of forty-five years. He married a Miss Stilley, who was born in Tennessee and died in Calloway County.

A. C. Phillips was born in 1830, in Calloway County, and was still a child when his father died. As a youth he engaged in teaching school, but after having his attention to agricultural pursuits and continued to center his activities and abilities therein until his death in 1875. He was a democrat in politics and a leader in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Phillips married Belinda F. Hood, who was born in 1832 in this county, and died here in 1880. They became the parents of six children: R. A., a prominent merchant, who died and was buried in Calloway County; in 1870, J. B., who married and has a family in this county; Edward P.; John R., postmaster and a merchant at Hardin; Marshall County; Mary A., who died in 1908 as the wife of W. W. Hood, of Calloway County, who is now engaged in agricultural operations in Arkansas; and Joseph M., a merchant and farmer of Calloway County, who died in 1867.

In his boyhood the education of Edward P. Phillips was confined to attendance at the local schools and his rearing was along agricultural lines. His father died when he was thirteen years of age, but he remained on the home farm until he reached the age of twenty, at which time he commenced teaching in the rural schools, a vocation which he followed for nine years. In the meantime Mr. Phillips had interested himself in public matters, and in 1862 was elected clerk of the Circuit Court, the duties of which office he assumed in 1893. Re-elected to that office in 1897, he served there-in eleven years in all, and established a splendid record for efficient performance of duty. While still teaching school he had commenced to read law, and after his election to the clerk's office he applied himself more assiduously to his studies, with the result that he was admitted to the bar in 1895. He began the active practice of his calling at Murray in 1903, and devoted himself diligently to his calling, with a constantly increasing practice, until 1917, when he was elected judge of the County Court of Calloway County. On January 1, 1918, he entered upon his four-year term and maintains his court with force. A careful analysis of Judge Phillips' traits of character is explanatory of his success. While keen and logical, earnest and eloquent, he is also careful in the development of his legal plans and has the faculty, strongly natural and persistently trained, of piercing to the foundation principles of any contention. Thus it is that Judge Phillips, whether as private practitioner or judge, always has his case firmly in hand and is never to be diverted to side issues.

In his political allegiance Judge Phillips is a democrat. A pillar of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he has filled every lay office therein. In Masonry he belongs to Murray Lodge No. 105, A. F. and A. M., the first lodge organized west of the Tennessee River, of which he is the present Master. He is a most ardent and energetic member of the G. A. R. Four years he owned a comfortable home on North Fourth Street, modern in every respect. He has several important business connections, and owns a one-third interest in the Murray Ice Company.

In January, 1916, Judge Phillips was united in marriage with Miss Beatrice Scarborough, daughter of John W. and Velvina (Waterfield) Scarborough, farming people who are both deceased. Mrs. Phillips, a lady of numerous charms and accomplishments, is a graduate of the Murray High School, and prior to her marriage to the Judge was a teacher in the local schools for several years.

M. W. Tucker. The bankers of the country have carried a heavy load of responsibility for some years past, and to their far-seeing sagacity and wise conservatism is due the stability of the credits of the United States. At a time when the whole world is gradually recovering from the effects of the greatest war the human race has ever known; after years of paralyzing in action in industry in Europe as a result of the conflict; with millions of workers dead or disabled; with the problems of the future so vast; the finances of their home community in their charge have seemed at times almost too great and complicated for solution. Quietly and deliberately, without any publicity, the bankers have gone about their constructive work. By exercising a little care and much thought they have been able to restrict the orgy of extravagance which during a brief period threatened the country, and to avert thereby a general conflagration. To be sure they have been met in their well-intentioned and effective actions by unjust criticism on the part of agitators and the uninformed, but the results today justify them, and in the years to come proper credit will be accorded them for their public spirit and wisdom. One of these sage and level-headed men of finance of Taylor County is M. W. Tucker, cashier of the Farmers Deposit Bank of Campbellsville, one of the best-known men in this section.

M. W. Tucker was born in Taylor County, March 1, 1871, a son of G. W. Tucker, and grandson of Barnett Tucker, a native of Virginia. Soon after reaching his majority Barnett Tucker left the Old Dominion to seek his fortune in Taylor County, Kentucky. After his arrival he met and was married to a Miss Woolsey, a native of Taylor County, and both died in this county after many years of happy wedded life. The Tucker family is one of the old ones of Virginia, having been established there during the Colonial epoch of the country by representatives of it from England. From then on until the exodus of Barnett Tucker those bearing the name were connected with the fortunes of Virginia.

G. W. Tucker was born in Taylor County in 1842, and all of his life was spent within its confines. He was reared on his father's farm, and, drifting into a life for agriculture, adopted farming almost from the beginning of his career. In the course of time through hard work and good management he became the owner of a large acreage of farm and timberland, and was a man of independent means. Although but a lad when the republican party was born, he was so impressed with the importance of the principles it supported that when he came to voting age he cast his first ballot for the republican candidates. At the age of twenty-three he entered the bank of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and others of importance. Having the misfortune to be taken prisoner in Mississippi not long before the close of the war, he was exchanged without suffering a long confinement in the enemy's prisons. G. W. Tucker was married to Miss Virginia Pruitt, who was born in Taylor County in 1845, and died in this county in 1902. The children born to them were as follows: W. T., who was a farmer of Bradfordsville, Kentucky; M. W., whose name heads this review; D. A., who was a farmer in the State of Oklahoma, is now United States marshal and lives at Hydro, Caddo County, Oklahoma, and Cassie, who married F. H. Durham. Mr. Durham is in the wholesale grocery and produce business at Columbia, Kentucky, and is also a member of the firm of F. H. Grinstead & Company of Lebanon, Kentucky.

M. W. Tucker attended the rural schools of Taylor County and the high school of Mackville, Washington County, Kentucky, where he had the good fortune to be under the able instruction of Prof. A. O. Stanley, who later became governor of Kentucky, and is one of the distinguished men of the state. Subsequently Mr. Tucker was a student of a subscription school, where he completed what was an equivalent of the modern high-school course. At the age of twenty-two years he began teaching school in Taylor County, but after one experience decided that he preferred another line of work, and so entered the commercial field and for ten years was connected with the sales force of one of the leading dry-goods stores of Campbellsville. In the meanwhile he bought and operated a farm, but the opportunity arising, he disposed of it at an excellent price in 1883. In 1884 Mr. Tucker entered the Farmers Deposit Bank of Campbellsville as cashier, and still holds that responsible position. This bank was established in 1902 as a state institution. It has a capital of $15,000, surplus and undivided profits of $20,000, and deposits of $250,000. The bank occupies appropriate banking quarters on Main Street. The present officials of the bank are: J. R. Davis, president; R. L. Hill, vice president; and M. W. Tucker. Mr. Tucker is a republican. For a number of years he has been a member of the Baptist Church, and is now serving it as a deacon. Fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias and to Green River Tent No. 45, K. O. T. M., both of Campbellsville. He owns his residence on Press Avenue, which is a comfortable modern home. During the late war Mr. Tucker took an effective part in the local activities, serving as a member of the committees on the various Liberty Loans and assisted in all of the drives. He bought bonds and saving stamps and made liberal contributions, in fact did everything to the full extent of his means to aid the administration to carry out its policies.

In 1901 Mr. Tucker was married at Campbellsville to Miss Nannie Davis, a daughter of John P. and Lue Pinkston Davis. Mrs. Davis was a merchant and prominent citizen of Campbellsville for many years. Mr. and Mrs. Tucker have no children. Mr. Tucker has always taken a public-spirited interest in the affairs of his city and county, and can be depended upon to give an earnest support to all measures having for their object the betterment of existing conditions or the furtherance of improvements. He considers they are needed and practical, for he recognizes the necessity of safeguarding the taxpayers' money.

John Kenneth Matheny, Jr. While practically a newcomer in the business life of Murray, John Kenneth Matheny, Jr., is no stranger to the interests of this community, having been identified with a number of financial concerns here and also possessing some experience in public affairs. Since December, 1909, he has been the proprietor of a general insurance business, a field of endeavor in which he has made rapid strides, and the success which he has already gained is the result of inherent ability, pushing enterprise, a clean and honorable record and a wide acquaintance.

Mr. Matheny was born February 15, 1889, on the banks of the Tennessee River in Calloway County, Kentucky, a son of John Kenneth and Telitha C. (Roberts) Matheny. The family is of Scotch-Irish origin, and its earliest American ancestor settled in Virginia during Colonial times. Abner Matheny, the grandfather of John K. Matheny, Jr., was born in 1823 in Tennessee, and as a young man became a pioneer farmer into Trigg County, Kentucky, where he married Lydia Ross. They passed the rest of their lives there, the grand father dying in 1900 and his widow surviving until 1910, when she passed away at the remarkable age of ninety-six years.

John Kenneth Matheny, the elder, was born in Trigg County, in 1859, and was there reared and educated. He was still a young man when he migrated to Calloway County, and following his marriage here embarked in the mercantile business at Highland. In 1891 he removed to Shiloh, where he followed the same line of effort for four years, and in 1895 came to Murray and established a livery business. He continued this venture for a time and also was engaged in activities as a carpenter and contractor until 1903, when he was elected clerk of the Circuit Court, assuming the duties of that office in January, 1904, and continuing their discharge for six years, with excellent ability. At the expiration of his term of office he went to Liverpool, Texas, where he has since been engaged in business as the proprietor of a leading mercantile establishment. Mr. Matheny is a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church and belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He married Miss Telitha C. Roberts, who was born in Kentucky in 1870, and nine children have been born to them: Lillie, the wife of E. E. Callahan, a farmer in the vicinity of Liverpool, Texas; John Kenneth, Jr.; Cleland, unmarried, an oil operator at Burburnett, Texas; Luna, the wife of R. R. Reamer, a farmer near Campbellsburg, Kentucky; Lura Reamer, who is a teacher in the public schools of the Lone Star State; Sanford and Catherine, who reside with their parents and are attending the Liverpool High School; and Abner and Headler, attending the graded schools of that city.

John Kenneth Matheny, the younger, attended the rural schools of Calloway County and then entered the Murray High School, which he left at the age of sixteen years to take up the duties of deputy clerk of the Circuit Court under his father, a position which he occupied during the time his father held the clerkship. In 1910 he entered the Murray Post Office, where he worked as a clerk for several months, and then went to Liverpool, Texas, where for eighteen months he was associated in the mercantile business with his father. Returning then to Murray, he again was employed in the Post Office for a few months, after which he accepted a position as bookkeeper in the Citizens Bank of Murray. In 1915 he resigned his position and became bookkeeper for Coleman & Wells, attorneys, and in January, 1918, entered the firm of H. M. Matheny & Co. In the latter year he was assistant cashier for one year. In January, 1919, he left that institution to accept a like post with the First National Bank of Murray, but in December of the same year resigned to embark in his present line. Mr. Matheny is carrying on a general insurance agency business and is a representative of a number of old, reliable and well-known companies. He maintains offices in the First National Bank Building, and since its inception his business has shown a gratifying and healthful growth.

In politics Mr. Matheny is a democrat, and in the fall of 1917 made the race for clerk of the County Court, but was defeated in a close contest. He is a member and assistant secretary of the Baptist Church, and is fraternally affiliated with the Masons, holding membership in the Lodge No. 105, A. F. and A. M., and Murray Chapter No. 92, R. A. M. He owns a comfortable modern residence on Twelfth Street. Mr. Matheny took an active part in local war work activities and served as chairman of the War Savings Stamps Committee, in addition to which he assisted materially in having his county make up its quota in Liberty Bonds and Red Cross Goods.

On December 25, 1912, Mr. Matheny married at Murray Miss Jessie Irvan, a daughter of W. R. and Matilda (Gilbert) Irvan, the former of whom, a tobbacconist, is deceased, while the mother makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Matheny. One child has come to Mr. and Mrs. Matheny: John Kenneth III, who was born March 1, 1920.

John Robert Wells. Unless the modern lawyer is a man of sound judgment, possessed of a liberal education and stern training, combined with a keen insight into human nature, there is not much chance of his meeting with what the world terms success. The reason for this lies in the spirit of the age, with all of its complexities. Modern jurisprudence has become more and more intricate because of new conditions and laws and the interpretation of them is relegated to the bar and bench. Years of experience, constant reading and natural inclination must be superinduced upon a careful training for success at the bar, and if these conditions are met, high honors oftentimes come to the members of this learned profession. An instance in question is afforded by the career of the following attorney of the county seat of Smithland, county attorney of Livingston County.

John Robert Wells was born in Livingston County, Kentucky, in the vicinity of Tilinie, March 17, 1882, a son of J. P. Wells, and grandson of Jesse Wells, a native of South Carolina, in which state was the first of the family in the New World settled upon coming to the American Colonies from England, where the family originated. He was brought the family into Kentucky and established large agricultural interests in Livingston County, where he died at a time prior to the birth of his grandson. He was a man of distinction and served as county judge for two terms. First a whig, he later became a democrat. He married Polly Caldwell, a native of North Carolina, who died in Livingston County, Kentucky. One of their sons, David Wells, served in the Confederate Army, and died while a member of it.

J. P. Wells was born in Livingston County, in 1847, and died in this same county in 1904, after a career of usefulness as a farmer, in which line he attained to a remarkable success. A man of strong convictions, he found in the principles of the democratic party the means of expressing his own political views and was a staunch supporter of them during all of his mature years. He was married to Josephine Cash, who was born in Lyon County, Kentucky. She survives her husband and makes her home at Tilinie, Kentucky. Their children were as follows: Fred, who died in Livingston County when thirty-three years old; Joe, who was a farmer, born at Glen; Mrs. J. W. Collins, who died in 1914; Mrs. J. H. Collins, who died in 1912, and their daughter, Josephine Wells, who was the oldest. After attending the rural schools of his native county and the Grand Rivers High School, at Grand Rivers, Kentucky, Mr. Wells entered the Southern Normal School at Bowling Green, Kentucky, leaving it at the age of twenty-two years; and John Robert, who was the youngest.

After attending the rural schools of his native county and the Grand Rivers High School, at Grand Rivers, Kentucky, Mr. Wells entered the Southern Normal School at Bowling Green, Kentucky, leaving it at the age of twenty-two years. When he was nineteen he had begun teaching school, and for ten years he was in the educational field, winning laurels as a teacher in Livingston and Crittenden counties, and at the same time he carried on considerable farming in Livingston County, and still owns a valuable farm of 200 acres near Tilinie. While he was engaged in teaching, Mr. Wells studied law under the Chicago Correspondence School of Law, and was admitted to the bar in 1904, and since then has carried on a general civil and criminal practice in Livingston. In December, 1915, he established his residence at Smithland, and his offices are located in the Smith Building on Court Street. Very active in the democratic party, Mr. Wells was elected on his party ticket as county attorney to fill an unexpired vacancy in November, 1916, and re-elected for a full term in the following year, and his new term began in the following January. His record is such as to win approval from his constituents and the profession, and without doubt further honors await him in the future, if he cares to accept them. It may be, however, that he will prefer to devote all of his attention to his rapidly increasing private practice, for his ability as an attorney is widely recognized.

On July 18, 1904, Mr. Wells was united in marriage at Metropolis, Illinois, to Miss Nina Bennett, a daughter of H. B. and Rola J. (Brown) Bennett, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Bennett was a farmer, merchant and tobbacconist, and a man of considerable prominence. Mrs. Wells attended St. Vincent's Academy of Union County, Kentucky, and is a finely educated lady, of great charm and self-reliance. Mr. and Mrs. Wells have two children, namely: Payton, who was born October 5, 1905; and Josie Kathleen, who was born January 4, 1914. Mr. Wells belongs to Dycusburg Lodge No. 232, A. F. and A. M., and has served as secretary of the lodge, and he also belongs to Smithland Camp, W. O. W. During the period that this country was a participant in the World war he served in the United States Army, and served in local activities, and gave generously of his time and money to bring this about. He served as Government appeal agent and organized the first Red Cross Chapter in Livingston County. A young man of unusual abilities, Mr. Wells has traveled far on the road which leads to success, and his achievements are all the more commendable in that he has risen through the ranks of effort, and by dint of his genuine sincerity and willingness to work for the good of his community. Such men uphold the standards raised by the forefathers of this country, and set an example the rising generation would do well to emulate.
served prominence among the lawyers over this part of Kentucky. He practiced for a number of years at the Ashland bar, but is now a resident of Prestonsburg.

He speaks the people of Eastern Kentucky as a birthright. He is a member of one of the oldest families in this section of the state and was born on Hoods Fork of Blaine in Johnson County, November 2, 1802. His ancestors were prominent Virginians. The founder of his family in Eastern Kentucky was his great-grandfather William Remy Wheeler, who was a son of Stephen Wheeler who came to Kentucky from Norfolk, Virginia. In the various generations the family has produced many farmers, though also some professional men. Before and during the war they were active Union sympathizers. A son of Stephen was William John Wheeler, who was born at the mouth of Buffalo and was at one time county surveyor of Johnson County. His son, John Borders Wheeler, was born in Johnson County and for many years was a prominent minister of the United Baptist Church. He lived to the venerable age of eighty-three. During the Civil war he was called out near the end of the struggle to serve as a home guard on the Union side.

His son, J. W. Wheeler, of the pioneer line was born at Laurel Fork of Blaine in Johnson County, August 29, 1850. His wife, Sarah Justice, was born on Hoods Fork of Blaine. They are still living in Johnson County. Her father was Samuel Layne Justice, who was born on Beaver in Floyd County and died in 1891 at the age of ninety-three. His father was John Justice, and Samuel was a young man when the family passed down the valley on their way to Indiana, Samuel returning to his place of birth by the way. The Justice family were also in the Union army.

Martin V. Wheeler and wife had eleven children, and all still living but one. Some of them were teachers and through teaching paid the expenses of their higher education. Their father assisted them so far as possible with financial aid, but he also encouraged their spirit of enterprise by securing them opportunities to work and earn their education. A brief record of this notable family of eleven is as follows:

Columbus Borders; C. C., a physician at Hazard; John W., a Paintsville attorney; Alice, who died at the age of eighteen, wife of D. J. Wheeler of Paintsville; W. H., a practicing physician at Ashland; W. Franklin, a farmer on the old place on Hoods Fork; J. Clinton, a physician at West Liberty in Morgan County; Julia, wife of Aid Dempsey of Wellston, Ohio; Louisa, wife of Martin O. C. Pass, merchant, Paintsville; and Samuel Lykes, a farmer now living in Detroit, Michigan.

Columbus Borders Wheeler, a boy attended rural schools, later the Blaine High School, and at the age of sixteen began teaching. After teaching for a time he entered the Law School at Louisville, where he graduated in 1891. For the first ten years he practiced at Paintsville and from 1901 to 1910 was a leading lawyer of that town. He then removed to Prestonsburg. He has practiced in all the courts of the Big Sandy Valley including the Court of Appeals and the Federal Court. While at Paintsville he was associated for a time with W. H. Vaughan and for five years was police judge of that town. In 1898 he was a member of the Legislature representing the Ninety-sixth District composed of Johnson and Martin counties. He was a member of the Legislative Judiciary Committee, and the Committee on Kentucky Statutes. Mr. Wheeler was elected county attorney in 1900. He was for three years editor of the Paintsville Post, and has to his record some able work as an editor as well as a lawyer and public leader.

March 4, 1890, Mr. Wheeler married Elizabeth Walters, daughter of W. H. Walters. She was born at what is now Ottstatt Station, and as a girl her family moved to Flat Gap. Mrs. Wheeler died in 1902, the mother of three children. Elizabeth is now employed in the Workman's Compensation office at the State House in Frankfort. The son, W. H. Wheeler, volunteered at the age of eighteen, as a private, was assigned to the hospital service, was in training at Fort Scrivens, Georgia, and went to France with the rank of second lieutenant and came home a First Lieutenant. He is now in Los Angeles, California. The youngest of the family, Madaline, is the wife of Sterling Berger of Catlettsburg. On December 11, 1918, Mr. Wheeler married Mrs. Grace (Martin) Turner, daughter of Joel C. Martin of Prestonsburg. Mr. Wheeler is a Royal Arch Mason and republican and is a member of the United Baptist Church, having received the rite of Baptism from his grandfather.

H. R. Sanders. It is a recognized fact that no man can come before the public as the candidate of his party for an office of importance without his character being thoroughly canvassed and his career subjected to the utmost criticism. Therefore when such a gamut has been run, and he is elected by a gratifying majority, the proof has been afforded that he is a man worthy of the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens. In addition to this, when he has served capably and conscientiously in such an office he is further entitled to the support of his associates in both politics and business. H. R. Sanders, owner of the high-class confectionery store at Campbellsville and an ex-state senator, illustrates the above, and is recognized as one of the best types of Kentucky manhood the state affords.

H. R. Sanders was born in Taylor County, October 23, 1855, a son of Durham Sanders, and grandson of John Sanders, a native of Virginia, who came to Kentucky in 1802 and settled in what is now Taylor County. Here he became a heavy landowner, possessed many slaves, and developed an important connection as a road contractor. Among other contracts held by him was the construction of the turnpike through Moldrow's Hill. He was married to Sollyersville, and a resident of the county at this time, was for some time a lawyer, and was a member of the county bar association. In 1880, he moved to Durham, who was born in Virginia and died in Taylor County.

Durham Sanders was born in Virginia in 1800, and died in Taylor County, Kentucky, in 1874. At the time his father came to this locality, in 1802, what is now Taylor County was included with Green County. Here Durham Sanders was reared, educated and married, and here he became a farmer and merchant of high standing in the community. A leading republican of his district, he was elected to the office of sheriff at the time Taylor County was organized, and after his term of office expired, was elected a magistrate, and continued to serve as such until his death. Connecting himself with the Baptist Church, he lived up to its creed and teachings, and gave it a hearty support. Durham Sanders married Lucy E. Smith, who was born at Culpeper Courthouse, Virginia, in 1810, and died in Taylor County, Kentucky, in 1895. Their children are:

Eliza Belle; who died at Louisville, Kentucky, at the age of seventy-two years, married Dr. Joseph Putnam, of Maine, a physician and surgeon who died in Indiana; Dr. J. M., who was a physician and surgeon, died in Arkansas at the age of seventy-five years; J. H., who was a merchant, died in Taylor County at the age of forty-seven years; Ann, who is deceased, married Joseph Wade, a merchant; and Ethelred E. L. Green, formerly circuit court clerk of Taylor County, is deceased, and so is her husband, both of them dying in Taylor County; Virginia, who married a Doctor Williamson, a physician and surgeon, is deceased, as is her husband, both of them dying in Arkansas; Pattie, who married Daniel Eastes, a physician and surgeon, is deceased, as is her husband, both of them dying in Green County, Kentucky; Nannie M., who resides at Lebanon, Kentucky, is the widow of John Walls, a carpenter; R. D., who is a fruit grower of Missouri; C. C., who died in Taylor County at the age of forty-four years, was a farmer; G. A., who was a merchant, died in Arkansas at the age of forty-two years; and H. R., who is the youngest of the family.

H. R. Sanders attended the rural schools of Taylor County, and was reared to useful manhood on his father's farm until he was sixteen years old, at which time he received the appointment of deputy county clerk of Taylor County, and held that office for four years. In 1868, he was elected coroner of the county, and held that office for one year. He then embarked in a mercantile business in Green County, and conducted it for two years. Coming back to Campbellsville, he was bookkeeper for Hoskins, Bryant & Company for two years, and then moved on the farm he had previously purchased and conducted it for two years. Once more he returned to Campbellsville, and for four years served as deputy assessor of the county. For a time he was engaged in different ventures, still owning his farm, and then for four years managed the millinery and fancy goods establishment owned by his wife. This connection resulted in his going on the road as a traveling salesman for a St. Louis hat house, and he continued with it for six years, or until 1915. In the meanwhile his health had become so impaired that he was induced by his family to retire for a time, but in 1915 was elected to the Upper House of the State Assembly and served during the sessions of 1916 and 1918. His record in the Senate shows that he worked in the interests of his constituents and endeavored to carry out their wishes. Senator Sanders served as chairman of the committee which prevented the sale of the old state capitol, and he also was on several important committees. He was appointed receiver of the Lake-land Asylum, but resigned after serving for four months. Coming back to Campbellsville, he and his sons, S. B. and P. H., established the leading confectionery and grocery business in Taylor County, opening it in October, 1918. The confectionery parlors and store, located in the Taylor National Bank Building, Senator Sanders owns his desirable and comfortable modern residence on Depot Street, and in partnership with his sons, S. B. and P. H., owns the Alhambra Theatre and Apartment Building on Main Street. He is a republican, and one of the most active members of his party in this part of Kentucky. Both by inheritance and conviction he is a Baptist, and is equally zealous in the business of his faith. Senator Sanders was one of the effective participants in all of the local war work, assisting in all of the drives and maintaining booths for the Red Cross drives in his confectionery store. He also contributed to all of the organizations to the full extent of his means.

In 1878 Senator Sanders was married at Campbellsville to Miss Maggie E. Chandler, a daughter of Dr. S. T. and Eliza J. (Hotchkiss) Chandler, both of whom are deceased. For many years Doctor Chandler was a physician and druggist of Campbellsville, and one of the best-known men of Taylor County. Mrs. Sanders was graduated from Cedar Bluff College of Warren County, Kentucky. The children of Senator and Mrs. Sanders are as follows: J. H., who was born in 1876; at Campbellsville, is president of the high school of Bullitt County, Shepherdsville; S. B., who was born November 26, 1885, is in partnership with his father in the confectionery business, and is also managing the Alhambra Theatre Apartments; Robert B., who was born in 1888, resides at Louisville, Kentucky, where he is engaged in an insurance business; Ella, who resides at Campbellsville, married George H. Wilson, a traveling salesman for the Vick Chemical Company of Greensboro, North Carolina; and Paul H., who was born July 11, 1895, is also in partnership with his father. Senator Sanders has every reason to be satisfied with what he has accomplished, for not only has he made a record for himself as a business man and public official which does him credit, but he and his wife have reared a fine family, all of the children having been successful in life, and are additions to the several communities in which they are now residing. Such men as the Senator form the great backbone of true Americanism. They live according to the standards of this country and bring up their children in pleasant, intellectual home surroundings, give them proper advantages, so that when the time comes for them to go out into the world they are fit and prepared to do their part capably and honorably. No family is held in greater regard than the one bearing the name of Sanders, and the connection of any member of it with an enterprise is a guarantee of its good faith and probable success.

EDWIN LEE GODWy, M. D. From the earliest periods of recorded history the physician has been recognized as a man worthy of regard and a most necessary and important factor in the life of his community. It is a far cry, however, from the first fain beginnings of a science as understood by the "medicine" men of the savage or semi-savage tribes to the carefully trained physician and surgeon of today, whose every action is the result of absolutely accurate science, and who does not flinch when called upon to prevent or treat the greatest symptoms of disease as he does to curing the patient from ailments already contracted. The majority of these men of medicine have not only studied their profession in one or another of the great universities of the country, but have perfected themselves in it by a practical application of what they learned in the wards of a hospital. Therefore, when the physician and surgeon of today enters upon his practice he is far better fitted for his work both by training and experience than those of an older generation were after years of visiting the sick. This rigorous and thorough training has other results, for it so develops the character and brings out the best in a man that he becomes, as a matter of course, one of the leading factors in the community in which he permanently locates, and generally has a determining influence upon the lives and affairs of his fellow citizens. Such a vital force in his profession and the life of Campbellsville is Dr. Edwin Lee Godwy, physician and surgeon and mayor of the city.

Doctor Godwy was born at Campbellsville, January 2, 1884, a son of J. E. Godwy, grandson of Alfred F. Godwy, of the Campbell estate, one of the pioneer settlers of Taylor County, Kentucky, who the Godwys were established by ancestors from Scotland during the Colonial epoch. Alfred F. Godwy was born in Virginia, and died at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1896, while on a visit to that city. Coming to Campbellsville in young manhood, he became one of the early merchants of the city, and a man well known all over Taylor County. He married Lois Hotchkiss, who died at Campbellsville in 1888.

J. E. Godwy was born at Campbellsville in 1852, and is still residing in the city, where his life has been spent. All of his mature years he has been engaged in manufacturing and handling lumber, and is one of the leading lumbermen of this region. He is a democrat and is active in his party, having served his city as alderman for a number of terms. Well-known in Washington, he is a member of the American Lumbermen's Association, of which he is president, of the American Lumber Manufacturers Association, of which he is president, of the American Lumber Manufacturers Association, of which he is president, and of a number of other organizations.

Taylor Chapter No. 90, R. A. M., both of Campbellsville; Marion Commandery No. 24, K. T., of Lebanon, Kentucky; and Kosair Temple, A. A. O. N. M., of Louisville, Kentucky. J. E. Godwy married Anna B. England, who was born at Lebanon in 1856. They have two children, Doctor Godwy and his sister, Mary Lois. The latter is married and lives at Campbellsville. Her husband, L. M. Bailey, is connected with her father's lumber yard.

Doctor Godwy attended the graded and high schools of Campbellsville, and was graduated from the latter in 1901, following which he entered Center College at Danville, Kentucky, and was graduated therefrom in 1907, with the degree of Bachelor of Science, and as a member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon Greek Letter fraternity. He then entered the Hospital College of Medicine of Louisville, and was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and as a member of the medical college fraternity Phi Mu. Doctor Gowdy then entered upon the practice of his profession at Campbellsville, and has since built up a very valuable connection in general medical and surgical practice, and has been so successful in it with Dr. J. L. Atkinson, they owning the fine office building on Main Street in which their offices are located. Doctor Gowdy also owns a comfortable modern residence on Jackson Street. Like his father, he is a democrat, and is also very prominent in party circles. From 1910 to 1918 he was a member of the City Council, and in November, 1917, was elected to the office of mayor, taking office in January of the following year for a term of four years. During his occupancy of this office he has made many improvements, and among other things has secured the erection and completion of the large new graded and high-school building on Main Street. He has improved the fire department, and it has been equipped with a new electric truck and hose operated by motor. In every particular Doctor Gowdy has looked after the best interests of Campbellville and has rendered splendid service, and businesslike administration. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, A Mason, he belongs to Pitman Lodge No. 124, F. and A. M.; Taylor Chapter No. 90, R. A. M.; Marion Commandery No. 24, K. T., of Lebanon, Kentucky; and Kosair Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Louisville, Kentucky. Professionally he belongs to the Taylor County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. Take so many of his profession, Doctor Gowdy enlisted in the medical corps of the United States Army, in September, 1918, after having given a valuable service to the administration as a member of the Local Draft Board and in buying bonds and making heavy contributions to all causes. He was sent to Camp Greenleaf, and was to sail for France on November 14, 1918, but the signing of the armistice made that unnecessary, and he was mustered out and honorably discharged at Camp Cameron, near Paris, France, in 1919, with the rank of a first lieutenant, which commission he had received in September, 1918.

On January 12, 1909, Doctor Gowdy was married to Miss Flora Finucan, a daughter of Michael and Susan (Abell) Finucan, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Finucan was a merchant at Lebanon, Kentucky. Doctor and Mrs. Gowdy have one daughter, Lena, who was born December 4, 1900. In every walk of life Doctor Gowdy has proven his worth as a man and skill as a physician, and no man in the county stands any higher in public esteem. When his country had need of him he did not hesitate, although he held an important public office and was the family physician of many, but left a good practice and civic honors at a great personal sacrifice and rendered an efficient service. He has not been terminated on foreign soil if a halt had not been made in the service of his country, but as Doctor Gowdy are rare. When they are found their soundness of heart, ready sympathy, broad vision and sterling characteristics win them warm friendships which are only terminated by death. In the very prime of vigorous manhood and professional achievement, he has a bright future ahead of him as well as a brilliant and constructive past, and may be depended upon to add further luster to the ones he already possesses and has a richly deserved.

JAMES PLEASANT BOLING, superintendent of the city schools of Campbellsville, is one of the most highly-trained and thoroughly competent educators in Taylor County, if not in this part of Kentucky. He is a man who has devoted himself to the profession of teaching, has a deep love for his work, as well as a natural aptitude for it, and under his wise and conscientious care the children of this community are developing into students that are a credit to their preceptor and their state.

Professor Boling is a native son of Kentucky, for he was born in Boyle County, February 10, 1877, a son of Evan Boling, grandson of William Boling, and a member of one of the old families of Virginia, established in that colony by ancestors who came here from Scotland long before the Revolution. William Boling was born in Virginia in 1801, and died on his homestead in Boyle County, Kentucky, in 1888. After coming to Kentucky in an early day he spent some time as a resident of Lincoln County, and then, in 1856, moved to Boyle County, where he bought his homestead, located four miles southeast of Perryville, that is now owned by Professor Boling. William Boling married Miss Laura I. Boling, daughter of a farmer.

Evan Boling was born in Lincoln County in 1836, and died near Perryville, Boyle County, in 1918. Until he was eighteen years old he lived in Lincoln County, and then accompanied his parents to Boyle County, and lived on the homestead his father there bought until his marriage, after which he resided on the adjoining farm that he had purchased. For twenty-five years he continued to resettle his farm, and made a success of operating it. Then he moved, and moved on the homestead, a portion of which he had inherited from his father's estate. The remainder he bought from the other heirs so as to keep this farm intact. It comprises 125 acres of valuable land, and this is now being operated by Professor Boling, he carrying on general farming and grazing. Evan Boling was a democrat, but although he staunchly supported both parties of his state, he was entirely a farmer, he never cared to enter public life. An earnest member of the Christian Church, he sought to live up to its teachings and carried his religion into his everyday life. He married Miss Martha Frances Tucker, who was born in 1838, near Stanford, Lincoln County, Kentucky, and died on the home farm in the fall of 1903. Their children were as follows: An infant daughter which died unnamed; Artemacie, who died unmarried at the age of six years, in 1886; John, also unmarried, who is a farmer near Parksville, Boyle County; Professor Boling, who was fourth in order of birth; Mary, who married J. W. Overseed, deputy sheriff of Boyle County and a farm owner, lives at Perryville, Kentucky; and Sarah Catherine, who lives at Perryville, married J. L. Preston, a merchant of Perryville, operating under the firm name of Debaum, Preston Company.

Professor Boling attended the rural schools of Boyle County, the Ewing Academy, and Center College Academy of Danville, Kentucky, receiving his high-school instruction in the latter institution. He then took a four-year course at Center College, from which he was graduated in 1903, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. In the meanwhile, however, he had begun, at the age of twenty-one years, to teach school in the rural districts of Boyle County, but after four years in the country schools was appointed to the Danville public schools, and taught in them for two years. By this time he had so impressed his ability upon his community that he was tendered the appointment to the position of principal of the school at Bradfordsville, Marion County, Kentucky, and, accepting, entered upon two years of constructive work there, leaving that school to become principal of the one at Arlington, Carlisle County, Kentucky, and remained there for one year. In 1917 he was principal of the school at Vanceburg, Lewis County, Kentucky, and was then elected superintendent of the city schools of Campbellsville, and has remained here ever since. Professor Boling has under his supervision twelve teachers and 450 pupils. When he came here in 1913 he found that what was most needed was a new high and graded school building, and began at once to agitate for it, and in 1919 and 1920 saw his hopes realized in the erection of the handsome, modern brick structure on Main Street, one of the best in this part of the state. Imbuing his pupil with the same pride his esteemed father, Professor Boling has embraced them as his own and votes the democratic ticket, and belongs to the Christian Church he is now serving as a deacon. A Mason, he belongs to Pitman Lodge No. 124, F. and A. M., of Campbellsville; and to Taylor Chapter No. 90, R. A. M. He is also a member of Parksville Tent No. 45, K. O. T. M., and to the Kentucky Educational Association. Fully abreast of the times, he owns his modern residence on Maple Avenue, where he maintains a comfortable home, and, as before stated, owns and operates the home farm of his family. Like all loyal Americans he exerted himself in behalf of the local activities during the late war, served on the local draft board of Taylor County, and devoted a great deal of his time to the questionnaires of the recruited men. He was also one of the legal advisors of the Draft Board, assisted in all of the drives, and bought bonds and stamps and contributed very liberally to all of the war organizations.

On November 6, 1905, Professor Boling was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Cox, a daughter of F. M. and Martha (Zachary) Cox, the latter of whom is now a resident of Junction City, Boyle County, but the former passed away in 1901. During this marriage Professor Boling was a farmer and builder in Boyle County. Mrs. Boling was graduated from the Junction City High School, and has the distinction of being the first pupil to be graduated from that school. Professor and Mrs. Boling became the parents of the following children: Martha Frances, who was born September 5, 1906, is a pupil in the Campbellsville High School; Louise Porter, who was born May 1, 1908, is attending the graded schools; Sara Catherine, who was born August 11, 1914; and James Pleasant, who was born February 4, 1917. Professor Boling is a scholar, and also a practical man of affairs. He keeps thoroughly abreast of the modern trend of thought and the new methods introduced into his calling, and also knows how to put his ideas into language in such a manner as to yield the best results for him and those under his supervision. Taking the pride that he does in his schools and pupils, he is constantly striving to stimulate all concerned, and his enthusiasm and whole-hearted efforts are inspiring. As a citizen he is equally helpful. Recognizing the need for an awakening on the part of the average citizen to his civic responsibilities, Professor Boling endeavors through precept and example to bring home to the parents, through their children's needs, the necessity for cooperation to bring about the proper regulations in the community. Such men as he are almost invaluable, and the people of Campbellsville are fortunate in being able to retain in their midst a man of his attainments and character.

JAMES ERNEST FOX, M. D. is a physician and surgeon of Smithland, who is so living that his memory deserves to be perpetuated by his contemporaries, and his usefulness in his day and generation called to mind as an inspiration to generations yet to come. He is the ideal physician, irradiating the sickroom with the light of his cheerful presence, his word and smile frequently banishing the clouds which gather around discouraged spirits. He is enthusiastic in the following of his profession, is an eager student, and possesses the well-poised understanding that enables him to weigh fairly and make a settled decision concerning new scientific discoveries.

Doctor Fox was born in Hopkins County, Kentucky, September 25, 1877, a son of Daniel F. Fox, and grandson of Crittenden Fox, a native of Hopkins County, Kentucky, who passed away in 1887, aged seventy-five years, having been a farmer all of his life. He married Ann Russell, who was born in Hopkins County, and there died. The Fox family came from England to North Carolina in Colonial times, and from there went on west into Kentucky at a very early date.

Daniel F. Fox was born in Hopkins County in 1853, and was there reared and embarked in farming on his own account. For four years after his marriage, which occurred in Caldwell County, he continued to reside in his native county, and then bought his present farm in Caldwell County, which is in the vicinity of Shade Grove in Crittenden County, where he has since been very happy and contented. From 1877 to 1880 he was a stock raising farmer.

He is a republican in his political faith. For many years he has been an earnest member and generous supporter of the Baptist Church. Daniel F. Fox was married to Victoria Davis, who was born in Caldwell County, Kentucky, in 1855, within one-half a mile of their present farm, and they became the parents of the following children: Lula, who married O. F. Towery, an extensive farmer, lives at Shade Grove, Kentucky; Doctor Fox, who was the second in order of birth; Pennie, who married Dennie Hubbard, a general merchant of Shady Grove; Lena, who married Thomas Dodds, a carpenter and contractor of West Frankfort, Illinois; Roy, who died in infancy; Bessie, who married Clarence Sipes, lives at Washington, District of Columbia; O. A. Fox, who is engaged in the civil service in the Department of the Interior, and lives in Washington, D. C.; and Daniel Fox, who is a student, and has been for the last four years at the University of Kentucky, where he graduated in 1897.

In 1871 Daniel Fox established himself at Smithland, where he has since maintained a general medical and surgical practice, and has firmly enthrilled himself in the confidence of his fellow citizens. His offices are on Court Street. He owns a modern residence on the same street, and there he has one of the most comfortable homes in the city. Doctor Fox is a progressive republican, and for two and one-half years served as health officer of Livingston County. For two years he was a member of the Smithland City Council, and he was also in the council of Marion for the same length of time. The Baptist Church holds his membership, and he is one of its officers and the local council. He belongs to the County, State and National Medical Associations. During the late war he took a keen interest in all of the local war activities. He tried to perform the service, but owing to the fact that he was serving as the physician on the local Draft Board at Smithland at that time, the war department would not accept him, and so he doubtless lost the many honors which were offered him. He is a member of the local chapter of the Red Cross, later was commissioned captain in the Medical Reserve Corps. In all of the drives in behalf of the Liberty Loans and other issues he took a dominating part, and stimulated others to follow his example in no small degree.

Doctor Fox was united in marriage in 1907, at Pinckneyville, Livingston County, to Miss Gratia Parsons, a daughter of James and Julia (Gibbs) Parsons. Mr. Parsons is deceased, but Mrs. Parsons survives... and lives at Smithland, Kentucky. During his lifetime Mr. Parsons was a farmer and tobacconist of Livingston County, and one of its representative men. Doctor and Mrs. Fox have no children. In every community in which he has lived Doctor Fox has been the moving spirit for progress along rail lines, and Smithland is to be congratulated in having in its midst a mind of Doctor Fox's intellect and courage.

WILLIAM HERBERT MASON, M. D. Those who have resided at Murray for several decades will remember vividly the year 1900 by reason of the visitation of a virulent smallpox epidemic. In this crisis the State Board of Health called upon the services of a young physician practicing at Hazel, West Kentucky, and an appointment was made placing the situation in charge of Dr. William Herbert Mason. Under his direction prompt, energetic and effective measures were taken, and the scourge was lifted from the little city. Doctor Mason then settled down to practice at this place, and with the passing of the years has become one of the most distinguished members of his profession in Calloway County and the surrounding territory, and in no small degree has he greatly appreciated services to his fellow-men by the erection and equipment of one of the finest institutions of its kind in the state, a hospital and sanitarium, built of brick and concrete, which will be found to compare favorably with institutions in any of the large cities of the country.

Doctor Mason comes of a line of skilled physicians and was born September 20, 1875, at Hazel, Calloway County, Kentucky, a son of Dr. William Mason and Amanda E. (Perry) Mason. His great-grandfather, Richard Mason, was born in England, whence in young manhood he immigrated to America, settling at Baltimore, Maryland, in which city he established a jewelry business and became a wealthy and influential citizen. He married Hannah Glenn, also a native of England, and the only one of their children to be born in the United States was William Mason.

Dr. William Morris Mason was born at Baltimore, Maryland, in 1810, and was educated for the medical profession, graduating from the University of Maryland with the degree of Doctor of Medicine and from Washington University with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He commenced practice at Baltimore, where he subsequently married Miss Mary Priscilla Hicks, a daughter of John V. Hicks, of Raleigh, North Carolina, and has since practiced the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and until his death was a member of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives from North Carolina, and an own cousin of Thomas H. Benton, former governor of Missouri. Some time after his marriage Doctor Mason went to North Carolina, where he practiced for a time, subsequently followed his profession at St. Louis, and finally settled in Henry County, Tennessee, where he carried on a large professional and business practice, and was a member of the legislature of that state. He died at Nashville, Tennessee, March 11, 1884.

William Macon Mason, son of Dr. William Morris Mason and father of Dr. William Herbert Mason, was born in 1834, at Raleigh, North Carolina, and was seven years of age when his parents located in Henry County, Tennessee, where he was reared and educated primarily. He later graduated from the University of Louisville as honor man of his class, receiving a gold medal and the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and in 1877 removed to the present site of Hazel, Kentucky, where he became a pioneer physician and where he continued in practice until his death, June 7, 1920. Doctor Mason was one of the honored men of his profession and served for thirty years as president of the County Board of Health. He was a member of the Calloway County Medical Society; the Tennessee State Medical Society, of which he was president one term; the Kentucky State Medical Society, the Southwest Kentucky Medical Society and the American Medical Association. In politics he was a republican and his religious faith was that of the Seventh Day Advent Church. Doctor Mason married Miss Amanda E. Perry, daughter of Col. William E. Perry, who commanded a regiment in the Confederate Army during the war, and between the states. Mr. Mason, who was born in 1850, in Calloway County, survives her husband and is a resident of Hazel. There were eight children in the family: Bettie, the wife of E. D. Miller, of Hazel, a traveling salesman and an ex-merchant; Dr. William Herbert; Dr. Edgar Perry, a graduate of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tennessee, degree of Doctor of Medicine, who practiced his calling at Hazel until his death in 1916; Ruby, the wife of R. Hicks of Hazel, a traveling salesman; Ruby's twin, Pearl, the wife of R. B. Chrisman, cashier of the bank at Henry, Tennessee; Bertha, residing with her mother, and the widow of C. C. Maddox, a contractor of Hazel, who died in 1916; Doctor Robert, who pursued his literary work at Union College, Lincoln, Nebraska, and is a graduate of Vanderbilt University, degree of Doctor of Medicine, who is now associated in practice with his brother, William H.; and Everard Morris, a merchant at Hazel.

William Herbert Mason secured his primary education in the rural schools of Calloway County, and at the age of thirteen years entered the Murray Male and Female Institute, where he spent one year. He then took a three-year course at Conyersville Academy, Conyersville, Tennessee, this being followed by three years of literary work at Union College, Lincoln, Nebraska, and for one year he was principal of the school at Hazel, and then for a like period taught Latin and history in the Murray Male and Female College. Entering Vanderbilt University, he had a brilliant college career, being honor man in his junior and senior years and receiving gold medals, and in 1899 was duly graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Since his graduation he has taken four post-graduate courses in medicine at the U. S. Public Polyclinic and the Chicago Post-Graduate School, Chicago, Illinois; Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Maryland; and Battle Creek Sanitarium, Battle Creek, Michigan. Fifteen years ago he visited the famous Mayo Brothers' Clinic at Rochester, Minnesota, and has returned nearly every year since that time, specializing in surgery.

Doctor Mason began practice in association with his father at Hazel in 1899, but one year after entered upon his professional duties the call came for his services during the smallpox epidemic. He responded promptly thereto, as noted before, and after stamping out the epidemic settled down to practice. He has specialized in surgery, a field in which his reputation has extended far beyond the bounds of his immediate community. Doctor Mason belongs to the Calloway County Medical Society, the Southwestern Kentucky Medical Society, the West Tennessee Medical and Surgical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, belongs to the Clinical Congress of Surgeons of North America, and is a life member of the Surgeons Club, with headquarters at Rochester, Minnesota. He is medical referee of Calloway County for the State Board of Health, served as health officer of Calloway County for ten years and as county physician for a like period, and has been honored by being named a member of the Board of Managers of the Chattanooga & St. Louis Railroad Company since 1900. During the war period he volunteered for service in the United States Army Medical Corps and was accepted, but the armistice was signed before he was called to the colors.

In 1920 Doctor Mason realized the ambition of years when he erected on Poplar Street his new brick and concrete hospital and sanitarium, which accommodates 100 patients. It has so far realized the expectations of its founder and gained its hold upon the public confidence as to suggest its future recognition among the leading institutions for healing in the state. Its facilities for the care of the sick are modern and complete, the equipment being such as is to be found in the largest and finest hospitals in the metropolises; its rooms are sunny and well ventilated, and the most scientific and experienced care is promised those who entrust themselves to its benefits. The operating room is a facsimile of Worrell Hospital, the new hospital of the Mayo Brothers at Rochester.

Doctor Mason is a republican in his political allegiance and has long been influential in the ranks of his party. He was a delegate to the Republican National Convention held at Chicago in 1916. In 1909 he was chairman of the Republican County Central Committee. He was successful in completing the republican county ticket. How much of an achievement this was may be seen when it is considered that Calloway County normally has 4,000 democratic voters to 800 republican supporters. As a fraternalist Doctor Mason is affiliated with Murray Lodge No. 105, A. F. and A. M., and the Knights of Pythias. With his family he belongs to the Seventh Day Advent Church.

On June 18, 1917, Doctor Mason was united in marriage at Washington, D. C., with Miss Ora Kress, daughter of Dr. D. H. and Dr. Loretta (Edy) Kress, the former of whom is superintendent of the Washington Sanitarium and the latter head physician of the ladies department of that institution. Mrs. Mason is a lady of numerous graces, talents and accomplishments, and is a graduate of the Woman's Medical College, Philadelphia, degree of Doctor of Medicine; the Royal College of Music, Sidney, Australia, and Sidney University. To Doctor and Mrs. Mason there has come one daughter, Patricia Grace, who was born at Murray, Kentucky, January 9, 1919.

J. W. Kerr, one of the substantial citizens of Campbellsville, is finding profitable and congenial employment for his faculties in handling real estate and selling insurance, and is recognized as one of the prominent men of his community. He was born on a farm in Taylor County, ten miles north of Campbellsville, January 5, 1860, a son of R. L. Kerr and grand-son of James Kerr. The great-grandfather, William Kerr, lived in Bell County, Kentucky, and is buried in Robinson Creek. He was one of the pioneer farmers of what is now Taylor County. James Kerr, his son, was born on his father's farm in Taylor County, and died in the county in 1880, having spent his entire life in it. All of his life he was a farmer and he became a man of independent means. He married Polly Hill, who was born in Taylor County, and here died.

R. L. Kerr was born in Taylor County when it was still a part of Green County, September 23, 1835, and he spent his entire life in this county, dying at Campbellsville, May 24, 1921. For many years he was very successfully engaged in farming, but afterward lived retired. Both as a democrat and Baptist he lived up to the highest conceptions of politics and religion, and was always a strong supporter of the church. During the war between the North and the South he served in the Union Army for three years in the same company, as a member of the Twenty-seventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and participated in the battles of Shiloh, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and the siege of Vicksburg. He was wounded in the hand, but not so as to seriously incapacitate him. R. L. Kerr was married to Malinda Mardis, who was born in Taylor County and died in the same county, in 1866. Their children were as follows: S. E., who is in partnership with his brother in the real estate and insurance business, lives at Campbellsville; Mary F., who married John R. Stearns, a farmer of Hooker, Oklahoma; Martha, who died in Taylor County in 1896, when she was twenty-seven years old, was the wife of W. R. Caulk, a farmer who died in Taylor County in 1906; J. W., who was fourth in order of birth; Robert M., who died in 1899, was a school teacher in Taylor County; Barrett O., who died in Taylor County in 1868, was a public school teacher; Virgie, who died in Taylor County in 1903, was the wife of James E. McFarland, now a resident of Louisville, Kentucky, and connected with a prominent lumber firm of that city; and Howard, who was a farmer of Taylor County, died at the age of twenty years.

J. W. Kerr attended the rural schools of his neighborhood and then for two years was a student of the Campbellsville High School, but left it when he attained his majority. In the meanwhile, when only nineteen years old, he began teaching school, and remained in the educational field for six years, teaching in the rural schools of Taylor County and in the Taylor County public school at Campbellsville, of which he was principal for two years. In 1897 he embarked in his present business at Campbellsville, and has continued to conduct it, this being by far the leading concern of his kind in the county. The business grew to such an extent that Mr. Kerr found it expedient to take his brother, S. E. Kerr, into partnership with him in 1917. The offices are located in the New Merchants Hotel on Main Street. Mr. Kerr owns a comfortable modern residence on Lebanon Street, opposite the Christian Church, and he and his brother own a business building on Main Street and three cottages in the city. A democrat, Mr. Kerr serves on a business judgeship in Campbellsville for two years. He is a consistent member of the Baptist Church. A Mason, he belongs to Pitman Lodge No. 124, F. and A. M.; Taylor Chapter No. 90, R. A. M., of which he is a past high priest, and is zealous in behalf of his fraternity. During the late war he took an active part in local war work, assisting in all of the drives, buying bonds and stamps and making generous contributions to all our patriotic causes.

On May 24, 1894, Mr. Kerr was married to Miss Ella Coffey, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Coffey, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Coffey was a harness and saddlery dealer of Campbellsville. Mr. and Mrs. Kerr have had two children, namely: Jane, who died in infancy; and William, who died at the age of ten months. Having been in the real business for so many years, he is well fitted to conduct any kind of property and render a very efficient service. He represents some of the best and most reliable insurance companies in the country, and writes an immense amount of business annually.

The Turk family of Bardwell has long been connected with the financial history of this community, and this supremacy was inaugurated by the late J. W. Turk, father of John Wesley Turk. He was born near Campbellsburg, Henry County, Kentucky, and died February 11, 1916. He came to Carlisle (then Ballard) County with his parents at an early age and was reared upon a farm, gaining his education in the country schools. In 1874 he and his brother, W. R. Turk, formed a partnership, to establish a general store at Bardwell. By honorable business methods and sagacity they prospered. In 1880 J. W. Turk sold his interest to his brother, and in a short time began a business of his own. The story of his financial success is told in a few words, from an humble beginning his fortune grew steadily until, at the time of his death, he was one of the wealthiest men in Western Kentucky. He was president of the Bardwell Deposit Bank, which he helped to organize; president of the Bardwell Hardware Company; president of the Turk-Wilson Wholesale Grocery Company of Paducah, Fulton, and Hickman, Kentucky, also interested in the McElroy Shoe Company of St. Louis, Missouri. From youth he invested his savings in lands until he was the largest landowner in his community. Mr. Turk was a mem-ther of the Christian Church, and was a member of the Barnwell Lodge No. 449, A. F. & A. M., and had attained to the thirty-second degree in that order. Barnwell Lodge No. 179, I. O. O. F., also held his membership.

In 1876 Mr. Turk was married to Alice Bodkin of Carlisle County. Mrs. Turk survives her husband and still makes her home at Barnwell. Mr. and Mrs. Turk became the parents of the following children: Nona, who died in 1904; Mary, who died at the age of four; Stella; Daniel, who died when two; Lucian; Maurice; Ruth; Edith; and John Wesley.

The grandfather of the above children was Thomas Robert Turk, who came to Ballard County as one of its early pioneers, and there developed important farming interests. He died when his son, J. W. Turk, was a small child.

The father of Mrs. Turk was Daniel Bodkin, who came to this locality when about twenty years of age from Virginia, and became an active dealer in real estate and timber, and was also the most extensive tobacco dealer in Carlisle County.

William M. Wright is one of the men much to be envied in the degree of prosperity that has attended his efforts in the famous Blue Grass region of Bourbon County. He is proprietor of the Lone Oak Farm, situated on the Millersburg and Cynthia Pike, four miles northwest of Millersburg.

Mr. Wright, it is said on reliable authority, had only $200 in capital when he came to Kentucky thirty-five years ago. He married with the aid of his good wife has been the builder and architect of his good fortune. He was born in old Virginia, February 20, 1859 but grew up in West Virginia. His parents were Joseph A. and Martha J. (Peebles) Wright, the former a native of Nelson County, Virginia and the latter of Greenbrier County, West Virginia. Joseph Wright was a graduate of the University of Virginia, and ordained Baptist minister, and for many years practically until the close of his life, he was engaged in his ministerial labors in West Virginia. Of his eleven children five are still living: D. S. Wright, of Tampa, Florida; F. A. Wright, of Norfolk, Virginia; William M.; Sarah S., wife of Charles Hanger; and Maggie, wife of Adam Lutz, of Memphis, Tennessee.

William M. Wright grew up in West Virginia, had a white school and when he came to Kentucky in 1855 he found employment as a farm laborer in Bourbon County. In September, 1888, he married Miss Hettie M. Pollock, who was born in Bourbon County in July, 1860, and was prior to her marriage a successful and popular teacher in the county, being a graduate of the Millersburg Female College. Her parents were William and Virginia C. (McConnell) Pollock.

Mr. and Mrs. Wright after their marriage rented a farm in Bourbon County and lived at several places for a dozen years or more. In 1901 they were so far advanced toward the goal of their ambition as to purchase eighty acres, and with this as a nucleus they have extended their holdings until the Lone Oak Farm now comprises 368 acres. It is a general purpose farm, but has some first class livestock, and Mr. Wright has had much success in breeding Southdown sheep. He is a deacon in the Baptist Church, and Mrs. Wright is a Presbyterian. In politics he is a democrat.

R. M. Jones, M. D. Through study and practice Dr. R. M. Jones has gained a profound knowledge of his profession and human nature, but back of all this he had the qualities which bring to men success in business, professional distinction or leadership of any kind, perseverance being the most important of them all. With his progress in his calling Doctor Jones has gained a better understanding and greater tolerance of human frailties, and gives of the best in himself to bring about a better condition of things in his community. For many years he has been engaged in the active practice of his profession at Calvert City, and has the distinction of being the oldest living physician of Marshall County now in practice. Doctor Jones was born in Bath County, Kentucky, near Owingsville, November 6, 1857.

The Jones family originated in Wales, from whence its representatives came to the American Colonies and established themselves in Pennsylvania. It was then that state that the great-grandfather of Doctor Jones moved into Kentucky, and his son, William Jones, grandfather of Doctor Jones, was born in Bath County, of the latter state in 1800, and he died in that county thirty years later, having been engaged in farming for some years. He married Elizabeth Chastaine, who also died in Bath County, Kentucky, but who was a native of Virginia. One of their children James Madison Jones was married to Martha Estill, who was born in Fleming County, Kentucky, in 1833, and died in Bath County in 1873. Their children were as follows: William, who is a farmer of Bath County; Nannie, who is the widow of W. W. Goodpastor, a farmer, and resides in Bath County; David, who resides at Hillsboro, Texas, is one of the leading demo- crats in this region; and Emily, who is now a prominent office-holder; Doctor Jones, who was fourth in order of birth; Samuel, who is a minister of the Christian Church of Sturgis, Union County, Kentucky; John T., who is an extensive farmer, stockbroker and stock-dealer of Boone County, Indiana; James, who holds a state government position, resides at Marion, Indiana; Silas, who is a minister of the Christian Church, is professor of philosophy and psychology in Eureka University, is a native of Kentucky, and the age of forty-two years in Bath County, married C. Jones, a distant relative, who survives her and is engaged in farming in Bath County.

Doctor Jones attended the rural schools of Bath County and the State Normal School at Ladoga, Indiana, which he left at the age of twenty-two years. When he was eighteen years old he had begun teaching school, and he remained an educator until he was twenty-eight, holding positions in Kentucky and Indiana. He then matriculated in the medical department of the University of Louisville, and was graduated therefrom in June, 1880, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Immediately following his graduation Doctor Jones established himself in general practice at Calvert City, where he has since remained. He owns his office and residence building on Railroad Street, and he also owns two dwellings in Calvert City and one of its store buildings, also a farm which is located two miles south of the corporate limits. He is a democrat. In 1908 he assisted in organizing the Calvert City Bank, and has served it as vice president ever since. Well known in Masonry, he belongs to Calvert City Lodge No. 543, A. F. and A. M., of which he is a past master; and Paducah Chapter No. 30, R. A. M. He is also a member of Oakwood Camp, W. D. W. M. of the Marshall County, Kentucky State Medical Society, the American Medical Association and the Southwest Kentucky Medical Association. During the late war he assisted in every way in his power to promote the local activities, contributing both time and money to the work, and buying bonds and war stamps and certificates up to his limit.

In 1883 Doctor Jones was united in marriage with Miss Lillie C. Jagoc, a daughter of William and Miranda (Rush) Jagoc, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Jagoc was a pioneer farmer of Muhlenberg County, Kentucky. Mrs. Jones died at Calvert City in 1912, having borne her husband the following children: Estelle Rush, who married S. V. Johnson, traveling agent for the American Railway Express Company, resides at Memphis, Tennessee; James W., who is in the employ of the United States Government at Arlington, Virginia; and Ethel Hearne, who, just returned from the Philippine Islands, where for six years he held a position under the civil service of the Government, is a graduate of the Kentucky State University, agricultural department, Lexington, Kentucky; Ruth, who is her father's housekeeper.

During the many years Doctor Jones has responded to the calls made upon his skill and experience in Marshall County he has not only won the appreciation of his patients, but he has raised a standard of service which sets the pace for the younger generation of physicians and stimulates them to do their best. His interest in the welfare of this region is unflagging, and no demand is ever made upon his time or purse without his giving it due consideration. He has borne his part in the work of the Calvert City insane asylum, tendering professional advice as to its sanitary arrangements, and many of the improvements which have been made have been carried out in response to his suggestions. Such men as Doctor Jones sustain the high reputation his honored calling has earned in the past, and it would be difficult to find a man more widely known or deeply respected and liked than this pioneer physician of Marshall County.

JAMES HORACE CHURCHILL, one of the highly trained funeral directors of Western Kentucky, is firmly established in the confidence of the people of Murray, where he is rendering a dependable service in times of greatest bereavement. Those securing his ministrations are certain of receiving a dignified and satisfactory conduct of the last rites.

Mr. Churchill was born in Henry County, Tennessee, January 9, 1860, a son of John E. Churchill, and grandson of Samuel Churchill, who was born near Elizabethown, Kentucky, and died in Calloway County, Kentucky, before the birth of his grandson. During the boyhood of his son, John E. Churchill, the methods of the pioneer farmers of this region. He married Sarah Moore, who was born near Louisville, Kentucky, a daughter of Arme- stead Moore, who became a pioneer farmer in the vicinity of Elizabethown, Kentucky. The Churchills came from England to the Massachusetts colony at a very early day, in the history of the country, from whence they later migrated to the Virginia colony.

John E. Churchill was born at Elizabethown, Kentucky, in 1833, and died at Murray in 1890. Having been brought to Calloway County when still a lad, he was reared within its confines, but went to Henry County, Tennessee, for his bride. However, practically all of his life was spent in Calloway County, and his talents found employment as a carpenter and builder, in which he did much to improve the building art in the locality. He was a member of the well-known Bluestone Masonic Lodge, No. 3, and he was a prominent member of the Colburn Methodist Episcopal Church. He was a man of leading position in the community, and his death was a material loss to the community. He married Fannie Olive, who was born in Calloway County, Kentucky, and was the daughter of James and Lena (Brown) Olive. Their children were as follows: James Horace, who was the eldest born; E. E., who is an architect and contractor, lives at Fort Worth, Texas; William S., who is also a resident of Fort Worth, Texas, is a contractor and builder; A. M., who is a house carpenter, lives in Texas; R. E., who is also a house carpenter, lives at Iowa Park, Texas; and John O., who died at Birmingham, Alabama.

After attending the public schools of Murray, James Horace Churchill began working for himself, although then only twenty years of age, and after teaching school in his native county for one term he began learning the cabinetmaking trade at Hickman, Kentucky, continuing his apprenticeship at St. Louis, Missouri. In 1880 he returned to Murray and established himself here as a funeral director and embalmer, being the leading man in his profession in Calloway County. He owns a new brick business house and residence on Third and Maple streets, which he erected in 1918, and he also owns three warehouses, which he uses in connection with his business. His equipment is the most modern, and not only does he understand embalming thoroughly, but he also possesses that sense of the fitness of things and that quiet, ready sympathy which enable him to render such service as wins him the approval of the most exacting. The principles of the democratic party are in accord with his personal ideas, and he gives its candidates his hearty support. For the past ten years he has served Calloway County as coroner. The Baptist Church holds his membership, and he is clerk of the local congregation. A Mason, he belongs to Murray Lodge, No. 105, F. and A. M.; Murray Chapter, No. 1, R. Ath. M.; and Murray Sub-Lodge, No. 25, S. M., and is secretary of all three. He is also a member of Murray Camp No. 50, W. O. W., the Golden Cross and the Columbia Woodmen.

On June 3, 1891, Mr. Churchill was married in Calloway County, Kentucky, to Miss Maud Brandon, of Hico, Kentucky, a daughter of N. C. and Elizabeth (Common) Brandon. Mr. Brandon was born in Kentucky, and was a farmer and carpenter by profession. Mr. Brandon was a merchant at Hico for many years. Mrs. Churchill died at Murray in 1914, having borne her husband the following children: Frances, who married J. W. Shelton, superintendent of the ice plant of Murray; Ronald W., who is his father's assistant; Ralph Deces and Max, who are at home. Mr. Churchill was married on August 25, 1918, in Calloway County, to Miss Maude Rogers, a daughter of James W. and Miranda (Jones) Rogers. Mr. Rogers was a farmer, but is now deceased. Mrs. Rogers survives her husband and is living with Mr. and Mrs. Churchill.

PATRICK CALHOUN IRVAN. Among the younger generation of business men whose large interests have caused a mighty expansion and growth in W., Kentucky, has been Mr. Patrick Calhoun Irvan. Mr. Irvan is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Calhoun Irvan, who transferred their residence from the large family farm, which they owned, and which was situated in the Buckhorn section of Hardin County, Kentucky, and in which they had resided for many years. Mr. Irvan was born in Hardin County, Kentucky, on December 20, 1856, and was reared on the farm of his parents. He received a good common-school education, and entered the University of Kentucky, at which he was graduated. He was a member of the class of 1879. From the University he became a lawyer and has resided in Louisville, Kentucky, ever since his graduation, and has been practicing law in that city, having entered upon the bar in 1881. He is a member of the Kentucky State Bar Association, and is known as a remarkable lawyer and a splendid citizen, and is a prominent figure in all legal and social circles in Louisville. He has received many honors, and is a close friend of many of the most prominent citizens of that city, and is also a very popular and prominent figure in lumbering circles.

Mr. Irvan was married, on November 10, 1881, at Louisville, Kentucky, to Miss Martha S. Irvan, who was born in Kentucky, on October 10, 1857. He is the father of two children, two sons, who are engaged in business, and a daughter, who is engaged in teaching. The family have resided in Louisville ever since the marriage. The children are: Mary Irvan, who is engaged in teaching; and Patrick Irvan, who is engaged in business. Mr. Irvan is a member of the Kentucky State Bar Association, and is a prominent figure in all legal and social circles in Louisville. He has received many honors, and is a close friend of many of the most prominent citizens of that city, and is also a very popular and prominent figure in lumbering circles.

where he continued his business activities until his death in 1897. In politics he was a democrat, and his religious faith was that of the Baptist Church, whose faith he lived and whose movements he conscientiously supported.

A Union veteran, he was connected with the Masons. Mr. Irvin married Rhodia Virginia Brown, who was born in 1860 at Wadesboro, and who survives him as a resident of Hardin. They became the parents of the following children: Oscar Brown, D. D. S., a dental practitioner of Murray; William Guy, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in the vicinity of Hardin; Hardin Davenport, M. D., a physician and surgeon of Tulsa, Oklahoma; Robert Ellison, D. D. S., a dental practitioner of Detroit, Michigan; Katie, the wife of Dr. E. D. Covington, a physician and surgeon of Hardin; and Patrick Calhoun, who is a twin to his sister, Katie.

Pat C. Irvin attended the public schools of Hardin, following which he spent one year at Bethel College, Russellville, Kentucky, and a like period at the academy at Castle Heights, Lebanon, Tennessee. During this time he had been engaged in supervising the work on his mother’s farm at Hardin. In September, 1913, he came to Murray and engaged in the lumber business, securing a position with the firm of Hood, Hughes & Rowlett. Subsequently Mr. Irvin bought Mr. Rowlett’s interest in the business, which at that time became Hood, Hughes & Irvin, and in 1915, when Mr. Irvin bought Mr. Hood’s interest, the style was changed to its present form of Irvin & Irvin. This is now one of the leading lumber concerns of Western Kentucky, with offices and plant on Main Street.

Mr. Irvin is justly adjudged one of the progressive, capable and enterprising young business men of Murray, and has the full confidence of his associates in the business world. He is the owner of a number of real estate properties at Murray, including his pleasant modern home on Main Street. Politically he supports democratic principles and candidates, while fraternal he is prominent in Masonry, belonging to Hardin Lodge No. 781, A. F. and A. M.; Murray Chapter No. 92, R. A. M.; Paducah Commandery No. 11, K. T.; and Kosair Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Louisville, Kentucky.

Mr. Irvin was married in 1915, at Paducah, Kentucky, to Miss Emma Rose, daughter of J. H. and Anne (Darnall) Rose, who reside at Hardin. Mr. Rose being the son of the late Honorable Joseph J. Rose, a substantial farmer of Wadesboro, Hardin County. Mr. Irvin and Mrs. Irvin have three children: Katie, born May 7, 1916; John Thomas, born September 29, 1917; and Robert Ellison, born June 22, 1920.

HERMAN T. CARTER, M. D. During the late war many of the members of the medical profession proved their sincerity, as well as their patriotism, when, living up to the letter of the oath of Hippocrates, they entered the medical department of the United States service. It made no difference to these devoted men that some of them were beyond the limit set by the draft. They knew that the soldiers would need their services more than any other citizens of their county, and, therefore, although many of them had to make heavy sacrifices to do so, they cheerfully offered their services to their Government and worked with unflagging energy both in this and foreign countries, and were frequently sick and wounded, and also rendered an equally important service in investigation work carried on at that time. One of these veterans of the mightiest conflict the world has ever known is Dr. Herman T. Carter, physician and surgeon of Gilbertsville and one of the efficient members of the Marshall County medical fraternity.

Doctor Carter was born at Spring Lick, Grayson County, Kentucky, September 13, 1877, a son of John S. Carter, and grandson of Alfred T. Carter. The birth of Alfred T. Carter occurred August 6, 1813, in Ohio County, Kentucky, and it was his father who brought the family into Kentucky, and was one of the pioneer farmers of Ohio County. Alfred T. Carter died in his native county November 10, 1842, having devoted all of his efforts to farming interests. He participated in the development of his locality during his period, and was recognized as a man of sterling worth and reliability.

John S. Carter was born in Davis County, Kentucky, July 2, 1836, and his death took place at Whitesville, Kentucky, June 26, 1910. Like his father and grandfather, he had the love of the soil in his blood, and became one of the most successful and extensive farmers of Davis County, where he continued to reside until January 1, 1870, when he moved to Spring Lick, Grayson County, and was a farmer until the latter he left and entered the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville, Kentucky, and was a student of that institution for three years. He completed his medical course at the Memphis Hospital Medical College at Memphis, Tennessee, and after a year there was graduated, April 29, 1903, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. On May 4 of that same year he entered upon the practice of his profession at Gilbertsville, where he has since maintained a general medical and surgical practice, with the exception of six months when he was at Mound Valley, Kansas, during 1909-10.

In his political faith Doctor Carter is a democrat, having been brought up in the doctrines so heartily espoused by his father, and he is also following that excellent man's example to a further degree by being a member of the Missionary Baptist Church of Gilbertsville. A Mason, Doctor Carter belongs to Gilbertsville Lodge No. 835, A. F. and A. M., of which he was worshipful master in 1917. He also belongs to Gilberts-ville Lodge No. 315, I. O. O. F.; Rosewood Camp No. 116, W. O. W.; and Robinson Crusoe Camp No. 3516, M. W. A., of Gilbertsville. Professionally he is a member of the Marshall County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, the American Medical Association and the Southwest Kentucky Medical Association. For several years he has been on the Gilberville Board of Education, and is now its treasurer. He owns an office building and a modern residence on Brien Street.

On November 4, 1903, Doctor Carter was married at Gilbertsville to Miss Beulah E. Covington, a daughter of Dan D. and Nancy E. (Ellis) Covington, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Covington was a pio-near merchant at Gilbertsville. By his first marriage Doctor Carter had two children: Claudine, who was born September 28, 1905; and Lionel C., who was born November 23, 1908. On April 14, 1912, Doctor Carter was married at Gilbertsville to Miss Eureka Beasley, a daughter of J. B. and Lucy (Stringer) Beasley. Mr.
Beasley served in the Union army during the war between the North and the South, and his health was so injured by his four years service that he needed a medical discharge. He is now deceased, but his widow survives and lives with Doctor and Mrs.
Carter. One child was born of this marriage, Delia
E., on March 13, 1914.

On January 22, 1918, Doctor Carter entered the med-cal department of the United States service and was commissioned a first lieutenant. He was sent to Fort Riley, Kansas, and was honorably discharged March 19, 1919, since Doctor Carter has a real capacity for his calling, and is a man who enjoys his work. He and his wife have many friends whom they like to have about them, and are model host and hostess. Both as a physician and a man Doctor Carter is accessible and sympathetic to those who seek his help, and he is recieving an honorable reward for the services he has rendered in both peace and war. He is a nobly gifted man, sincere and unselfish, patriotic and courageous, and is proud of the fact that he was given an opportunity to participate in the late war and of the wonderful response made by his profession to the country's call.

Hon. Leonos C. Starks. Among the leaders in business and civil life at Hardin, few have been as actively identified with the affairs of the city as Hon. Leonos C. Starks. Mayor of Hardin for the past twelve years, he is likewise owner of the telephone system and owner and publisher of the Marshall County Enterprise, one of the leading weekly newspapers of this part of the state. His large competency, his valuable property interests and his high and substantial standing as a citizen and official character, have been held by the industrial, intellectual and personal effort, founded upon the strictest honor.

Mr. Starks was born November 14, 1871, in Marshall County, Kentucky, a son of Reuben W. Starks. The founder of the family in Kentucky was the grandfather, Spencer Stokes, who was born in 1821 in Virginia and was a young man when he migrated to Marshall County, where he passed the remainder of his life as an agriculturist. He died in Hardin in 1903, at the advanced age of eighty-two years. He was married in Marshall County to Mary Skeggs, who was born in 1823 in Calloway County, Kentucky, and who survived her husband some years, being ninety-six years of age at the time of her death, which also occurred near Hardin in 1919. They were people who were greatly esteemed and respected in their community.

Reuben W. Starks was born on the home farm in Marshall County in 1848, and died at Hardin in 1897.
He was reared, educated and married in his native community, and in addition to carrying on agricultural pursuits on an extensive scale was engaged in the mercantile business, having built a pioneer merchant of Hardin. A republican in politics, he was devoted to the interests of his party, in which he also had some influence, and served as county magistrate of the First and Fifth Magisterial Districts of Marshall County for some years. A member of the Christian Church, he was active in its work, and for a number of years acted in the capacity of deacon. He belonged to Jefferson Lodge No. 19, F. and A. M., Birmingham, Kentucky, and to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Starks married Rebecca Hurt, who was born in 1855 in Marshall County, and she still survives and is a resident of Hardin. Three children were born to them: Leonos C.; Nina Pearl, who married Jesse Starks, a farmer of Hardin; and Ola Petrinilla, the wife of W. G. Irwin, a farm owner of Hardin.

Leonos C. Starks was educated in the rural schools of Marshall County and was reared on the home farm, where he began assisting his father in agricultural work when he was a lad of but sixteen years. He continued to be his father's helper until the latter died, at which time Mr. Starks took over the mercantile business, which he conducted with some success until 1901 and then disposed of it advantageously. In the meanwhile he had been practicing law in Hardin for eighteen years, having been appointed under the administration of President McKinley and serving until 1912. When he disposed of the mercantile business Mr. Starks embarked in the grocery trade, but after two years disposed of this business. He was subsequently the builder of the telephone system, lines and exchange at Hardin, and is still the owner of this system, which gives the people of Marshall County extensive telephone service.

In 1913 Mr. Starks established the Marshall County Enterprise, of which he has since been the sole proprietor and editor. This is a weekly paper which maintains an independent political policy and circulates largely through Marshall and the surrounding counties.
Among the papers of its kind in this region it is looked upon as a leader, and is a clean, reliable and trustworthy sheet, representing the news, both national and local, with common-sense editorials on timely subjects and a number of interesting features. Mr. Starks owns his own printing plant and offices, and in addition to publishing his newspaper does a large and profitable business in first-class job press work, for the consumption of which his plant is admirably equipped.

Mr. Starks was first elected mayor twelve years ago, and has occupied that office through successive re-elections to the present time. He wields much influence in his party, being an acknowledged leader in his part of the county, and has the confidence of his associates as well as that of the public. His administration of the affairs of his city in the mayoralty has been one that has resulted in a civic pride, and a business and residential comfort-ableness of the city of Hardin consisting of 100 acres. During the great struggle in Europe he took a leading part in all war activities, and used his personal influence and that of his newspaper to assist in the various drives.

Mr. Starks was married in 1892, at Benton, Kentucky, to Miss Lillie Green, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. M.
Green, the latter of whom is deceased, while the former is a farmer in the vicinity of Benton. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Starks: Pansy, who died at the age of 3½ years; and W. Loraine, born January 30, 1898, a graduate of the Hardin High School and his father's able assistant in the production of his newspaper. W. L. Starks was in the last draft during the World war, and had been examined and passed for service when the signing of the armistice put a stop to hostilities and made it unnecessary for him to be called to the colors.

JOHN W. WADE. The grocery and hardware interests of Murray are worthily and ably represented by John W. Wade, whose abilities and energies have been concentrated in building up this enterprise to one of the leaders in its line in Calloway County. His career has been one in which he has been interested in a variety of pursuits, in all of which he has displayed capability, business acumen and a high conception of ethics. As both a business man and citizen he is held in sound confidence by the people among whom he has made his home since November, 1916.

Mr. Wade belongs to a family which originated in England, whence the original progenitor immigrated to America and settled in Virginia during Colonial times. Robert Wade, the grandfather of John W., was born in Virginia in 1814, and as a young man came to Trigg County, Kentucky, where he served as an auxiliary in the War of 1812. He moved to Calloway County, where the remainder of his life was passed in agricultural pursuits, his death occurring in 1895. Mr. Wade was a most consistent church member, and worked constructively in behalf of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was a Royal Arch Mason. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Katherine Brandon, was born in Trigg County in 1818, and died in Calloway County in 1892. William Thomas Wade, the father of John W. Wade, was born in 1841 in Trigg County, Kentucky, and passed his entire life in Calloway County as an extensive and successful farmer. While he lived he was but forty-eight years of age, dying on his farm in 1889, he accumulated a large and valuable property, and at the same time won the respect and esteem of those with whom he was associated. He was a democrat in politics and a strong churchman of the Methodist Episcopal faith, while in Masonry he belonged to the Royal Arch Chapter. Mr. Wade was a veteran of the war between the states, having served in the army of the Confederacy under the intrepid Forrest, and participated in such hard-fought engagements as Shiloh, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, siege of Vicksburg, Brice's Crossroads, Corinth and Franklin, at which latter battle he was wounded. Mr. Wade married Miss Margaret C. Keys, born in 1848 in Calloway County, who survives him and makes her home with her son, John W. There were five children in the family: Nettie B., who died at the age of twenty-three years as the wife of H. P. Hicks, a merchant of Cherry, Kentucky; John W.; Eunice, who died as a child; and two children who died in infancy.

John W. Wade acquired his education in the rural schools of Calloway County and was reared on the home farm, where he remained until reaching the age of twenty years. At that time he went to Almo, Kentucky, where he was engaged in the mercantile and tobacco business for four years, following which he returned to the home farm, and remained there with his mother until 1916. In November of that year he sold the farm and came to Murray, where he founded his present grocery and hardware business and has continued and developed under his able management until it is now one of the prominent establishments in its field in Calloway County. The modern store, with its well-kept, carefully selected and popularly priced stock, is situated on Court Square. Public confidence has been won by Mr. Wade through his straightforward manner of dealing, while a courteous and obliging manner has served to make him many warm friends among his patrons. He has other interests and is a director in the First National Bank of Murray. He owns a modern residence at 714 Poplar Street, one of the fine homes of the city, with well-kept grounds and stately shade trees, and is likewise the owner of a farm of 42½ acres of valuable land 1½ miles southeast of Murray.

Politically Mr. Wade is a democrat, and for nine years served as peace officer of the district of Wadesboro. He was one of the promoters of the movement and a member of the building committee which erected the new courthouse of Calloway County, one of the very finest public edifices in the state. His name is inscribed on the corner-stone of this building as a member of the building committee. Mr. Wade is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of the work of which he is a generous supporter, and in which he has held all the lay offices. He belongs to Temple Hill Lodge No. 270, A. F. and A. M., of which he is a past master, having served as worshipful master thereof for seven years, and to Murray Chapter No. 92, R. A. M.

Mr. Wade married in 1860, at Paris, Tennessee, Miss Allie J. Gilbert, daughter of W. L. and Elizabeth (Penny) Gilbert, both now deceased. Mr. Gilbert was a farmer and tobacconist of Murray, Kentucky. Mrs. Wade died on the 19th of December, 1916, and Mr. Wade, having been the mother of the following children: John Grogan, who entered the United States Army service April 27, 1918, after intensive training was sent overseas June 8, 1918, saw active fighting at the front while with the Field Artillery in France, subsequently went with the Army of Occupation into Germany, and then returned to the United States and was honorably discharged and mustered out in May, 1919, and at present is a resident of Allisona, Tennessee, where he is identified in an official capacity with the Louisville & Nashville Railroad; Cobert G., who is a window trimmer for the big firm of Brys, Block & Company at Memphis, Tennessee; Bernice, who is unmarried and resides with her father; John Mason and Nell, who are attending the Murray High School; and Mary G. and Will H., who are attending the graded schools.

WILLIAM FRANCIS is giving a signal able administration as county judge of Taylor County, an office to which he was elected in 1918, and as one of the progressive and representative citizens and influential officials of this county and its judicial center, Campbellville, he is properly accorded definite recognition in this history.

Judge Francis was born in Russell County, Kentucky, on the 15th of August, 1872, and is a son of James and Julia (Lockhart) Francis, both natives of Fentress County, Tennessee, which borders on Kentucky. Of their children, the first born was Jane, who died in Russell County, unmarried, when twenty-five years of age; Sarah Elizabeth is the wife of J. C. Hale, a successful farmer in Russell County; Lucinda is the wife of William Pinder, who is engaged in farm enterprise in the state of Indiana; the latter, Henry Francis, of this review, is the youngest of the number.

The preliminary education of Judge Francis was obtained in the rural schools of Russell and Adair counties, and was supplemented by a course in the high school at Columbia, county seat of the latter county. He worked his way through school doing odd jobs. At the age of twenty-one years he began teaching in rural schools of Adair County, and after two years of effective service was graduated from the pedagogic profession. For four years he was teachers examiner of Adair County. In 1904 he became storekeeper and gager in the United States internal revenue service, with headquarters at Campbellsville, in the Fifth Revenue District of Kentucky. He retained this position eight years and after retiring from the same he was successfully engaged in the insurance business at Campbellsville until 1916. In November, 1917, he was elected county judge of Taylor County, and the duties of this office were assumed by him in January, 1918, for a term of four years. He has given a most careful and progressive administration and has done much to advance the civic and material welfare of his constituent district. Taylor County was over $300,000 in debt at the time Judge Francis was elected, and no county taxes had been collected for three years. Since he took office the debt has been cleared off and there is money in the treasury. His prerogatives extend beyond the powers of the board of county commissioners and thus has definite influence in ordering and directing the county government and its policies. He is a staunch advocate and supporter of the cause of the republican party. His wife and children are members of the Baptist Church. The judge owns a well improved farm of ninety acres, two miles east of the county seat, and this place is equipped with a modern house and other buildings of substantial type, the farm being devoted to diversified agriculture and the raising of good grades of live stock. At the time of the World war Judge Francis served as a member of the draft board of Taylor County, and gave a large part of his time to the work of this board and to the furtherance of other activities. He has been in support of the various government bond issues, war savings stamps, Red Cross work, etc. He loyally subscribed his maximum quota to the purchase of the bonds.

In 1898, at Cane Valley, Adair County, was solemnized the marriage of Judge Francis to Miss Laura Flowers, whose parents are now deceased, her father, James, being a substantial farmer and representative citizens of Adair County. Of the children of Judge and Mrs. Francis, the first born, George, died in infancy; James, who was born February 4, 1902, completed the work of the sophomore year in Russell Creek Academy, at Campbellsville, and is now employed in one of the county offices of Taylor County, while he remains at his paternal home; Ernest, who has been born March 29, 1903, is a student in the Russell Creek Academy, as is also Paul, who was born April 14, 1905.

Judge Francis was but sixteen years of age when his mother's death occurred. He received no financial heritage and his advancement and success in life have been won entirely through his own ability and efforts while he has so ordered his course as to hold inviolable values strong in the confidence and good will of those with whom he has come in contact in the varied relations of life.

Robert Macon Mason, M.D. Aside from any consideration which might arise from his association with one of the honored and distinguished families of Calloway County, Dr. Robert Macon Mason has erected around him a solid wall of professional and general confidence, and as a practicing physician and surgeon of Murray in less than nine years has built up a patronage of physicians and of the public in general, and as a practicing physician and surgeon of Murray in less than nine years has built up a patronage of physicians and of the public in general, and as a practicing physician and surgeon of Murray in less than nine years has built up a patronage which is not acquired in a score of years of professional practice. In addition to carrying on a private practice he is associated with his brother, Dr. William Herbert Mason, in the proprietorship of the Murray Hospital and Sanitarium, one of the leading institutions of the city, and is a member of the medical and hospital staffs of the county and the state. He is a member of the American Medical Association, the Kentucky Medical Association, the Calloway County Medical Society, and the American Medical Society, and is a member of the medical staffs of the Mason Sanitarium and Hospital; Dr. Edgar Perry, a graduate of Vanderbilt University, Doctor of Medicine, who practiced his calling at Hazel until his death in 1908; Ruby, the wife of R. E. Hicks, of Hazel, a traveling salesman; Ruby's twin, Pearl, the wife of R. B. Chrisman, cashier of the bank at Henry, Tennessee; Bertha, residing with him, and married to S. Maddox, a contractor of Hazel, who died in 1910; Dr. Robert Macon, of this notice; and Everard Morris, a merchant at Hazel.

Dr. Robert Macon Mason attended the public school at Hazel, following which he pursued a course at the Hazel Industrial School, from which he was graduated in 1903. He next entered Union College, Lincoln, Nebraska, where he pursued a literary course and was married, and then enrolled as a student at Vanderbilt University, from the medical department of which excellent institution he was graduated with the class of 1912, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He has never ceased to be a close student of his calling, and the United States was the grandfather of Doctor Mason, Dr. William Morris Mason.

Dr. William Morris Mason was born at Baltimore, Maryland, in 1810, and was educated for the medical profession, graduating from Washington (D. C.) University with the degree of Bachelor of Arts and from the University of Maryland with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He commenced the practice of his calling in the City of Baltimore, where he was subsequently joined, in the year 1840, by his twin brother, John V. Hicks, of Raleigh, North Carolina, and a niece of Hon. Nathaniel Macon, for thirty-six years a member of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives from the Old North State. She was also an own cousin of Thomas H. Benton, former governor of Missouri. Some time following his marriage Doctor Mason went to North Carolina, where he practiced for a time at Raleigh, subsequently following his profession at St. Louis, Missouri, and finally settling in Henry County, Tennessee. There he carried on a large practice until his death, which occurred at Conyersville in 1884.

William Macon Mason, son of Dr. William Morris Mason and father of Dr. Robert Macon Mason, was born at Raleigh, North Carolina, in 1817. He lived with his parents until he was ten years of age when his parents located in Henry County, Tennessee. In that community he was reared and secured his primary education, and later graduated from the University of Louisville. He was honor man of his class and received a gold medal with his degree of Doctor of Medicine. In 1857 he removed to the present site of Hazel, in Calloway County, Kentucky, where he engaged in practice. He was married a physician and surgeon, the former being in practice until his death, June 7, 1920. Doctor Mason was one of the honored men of his profession and served for thirty years as president of the County Board of Health of Calloway County. He was a member of the Calloway County Medical Society, the Tennessee State Medical Society, of which he was president for one term, the Kentucky State Medical Society, the South-west Kentucky Medical Society and the American Medical Association. In politics he was a republican, and his religious faith, which he lived, was that of the Seventh Day Advent Church. Doctor Mason married Miss Amanda E. Perry, daughter of Col. William E. Perry, who commanded a regiment in the Confederate army during the war between the North and the South. Mrs. Mason, who was born in 1850 in Calloway County, Kentucky, is living in Hazel, Kentucky, and is the only child of Dr. M. B. Macon, of the town of Hazel. There were eight children in the family: Bettie, the wife of E. D. Miller, of Hazel, a traveling salesman and former merchant; Dr. William Herbert, who pursued his literary college work at Union College, Lincoln, Nebraska, and was gold medal man during his junior and senior years at Vanderbilt University, from which he was graduated in medicine in 1895, since which time he has been engaged in practice at Murray and is one of the proprietors of the Murray Sanitarium and Hospital; Dr. Edgar Perry, a graduate of Vanderbilt University, Doctor of Medicine, who practiced his calling at Hazel until his death in 1908; Ruby, the wife of R. E. Hicks, of Hazel, a traveling salesman; Ruby's twin, Pearl, the wife of R. B. Chrisman, cashier of the bank at Henry, Tennessee; Bertha, residing with her husband, and married to S. Maddox, a contractor of Hazel, who died in 1910; Dr. Robert Macon, of this notice; and Everard Morris, a merchant at Hazel.
in 1914 took a post-graduate course at the Chicago Polyclinic, this being followed in 1919 by a post-graduate course at the clinic of Mayo Brothers at Rochester, Minnesota, where he specialized in surgery. Doctor Mason began the practice of his calling at Hazel, but after seven months removed the scene of his activities to Murray, where he has since remained, his offices being located in the Gatlin Building, on Main Street. He has built up a large and gratifying general medical and surgical practice, numbers among his patrons many of the oldest and best families, and is accounted one of the thorough, wide-awake and progressive medical practitioners of Calloway County. He belongs to the Calloway County Medical Society, the Southwestern Medical Society, the Kentucky Medical Society and the American Medical Association. Doctor Mason is one of the owners of the Murray Hospital and Sanitarium, a large, modern, brick and concrete structure located on Poplar Street, which accommodates 100 patients. The facilities of this institution for the care of the sick are modern and complete, and the equipment follows closely that of the leading hospitals of the cities of the country. During its short period of existence (it was built in 1920) it has largely realized the expectations of its founders, and has gained such a hold upon the confidence of the public that it will probably be recognized in the near future as being among the leading institutions of healing in the state. Its rooms are sunny and well ventilated, the most scientific and experienced care is promised those who entrust themselves to its benefits, and the operating room is a facsimile of the Wellorr Hospital, the new institution of the Mayo Brothers at Rochester.

Doctor Mason has a pleasing and confidence-inspiring personality, and his professional and general equipment has led him far toward a realization of a broad and exceptionally useful life. He is a republican and takes an interest in public affairs, without caring for the honors of public office. His chief interests are centered at Murray, where he has his family established in a pleasant modern home.

In December, 1915, Doctor Mason was united in marriage at Murray with Miss Mary Conner, daughter of C. T. and Ambie (Gilbert) Conner, residents of Murray, where Mr. Conner is a successful dealer in tobacco. Mrs. Mason is a lady of numerous graces and talents, and is a graduate of the Conservatory of Music, Cincinnati. The Mason children are: Homer, who is the parents of one bright and interesting son, Robert Macon, Jr., who was born October 12, 1917, at Murray.

John D. Houston. During a period of nearly eleven years John D. Houston has been almost constantly before the public of Calloway County in positions of public trust, and at all times has evidenced an ability and spirit of fidelity that have combined to gain him the confidence and support of his fellow-citizens. At the present time he is acting as sheriff of Calloway County, having entered upon the duties of that office in January, 1918, for a four-year term.

Mr. Houston was born July 21, 1883, in Calloway County, Kentucky, a son of John T. and Sallie F. (Outland) Houston. The family is of Irish origin, the original American emigrant having come from Erin to Virginia during Colonial days. The Outland State one of the early ancestors went as a pioneer to Tennessee, where, in 1815, in Montgomery County, was born Henry Houston, the sheriff's grandfather. Henry Houston was a farmer in the eastern part of Tennessee until about 1870, at which time he came to Calloway County, and here rounded out his career, dying in 1875. He married Eliza Whitworth, who was born in 1821 in Tennessee, and she survived him until 1905, when she passed away in Calloway County.

John T. Houston, the father of John D., was born in 1858, near Dover, Stewart County, Tennessee, and was about twelve years of age when brought to Kentucky by his parents. His education was completed in the district schools of Calloway County, where he was reared to manhood and married, and here has been engaged in extended farming ventures all his life. At the present time he is living on his valuable and well-cultivated property near Cherry, a four miles southwest of Murray, a community in which he is held in the highest esteem because of his business integrity, personal probity and good citizenship. Mr. Houston is a democrat and an influential man in his locality. He is an active and generous supporter of the Baptist Church. Mr. Houston was first married to Miss Sally F. Outland, who was born in 1860, near Pottertown, Calloway County, and died in 1886, having been the mother of four children: Dr. E. B., farmer; Dr. Joseph, physician of Hazel, but recently arrived at Murray, where he is engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in association with Dr. B. B. Keys; Lottie, who died at the age of nineteen years, as the wife of Samuel Downs, a progressive farmer of Calloway County; John D., of this notice; and Frankie, the wife of E. H. Thompson, a farmer near Buchanan, Henry County, Ky.

Mr. Houston was married, second, to Miss Annie Hart, who was born in Calloway County, Kentucky, in 1858, and died in this county in 1904. They became the parents of three children: Lois, the wife of J. Hardy Yarbrough, a merchant of Cherry, Kentucky; Buford, who resides on a part of the old home farm; and Hillman, who married Eula Lassiter and lives with his father. After the death of his second wife, in 1904, Mr. Houston was married, third, to Miss Fannie Johnson, of New York City. The family of Mr. Houston is represented by two children: John D., Jr., born July 21, 1883, and is engaged in the wholesale clothing business in Nashville, Tenn.; and Clara, who is attending school in New York City.

John D. Houston was given the advantages of an educational training in the public schools of the rural districts, and was reared on his father's Calloway County farm, on which he made his home until he reached the age of twenty-one years. At that time he embarked upon an agricultural career of his own, but after two years of tilling the soil disposed of his farming interests and turned his attention to mercantile affairs. For four years he was the proprietor of a general store at Penny in this county, and in 1908 came to Murray, where he secured employment in the department store of Nat Ryan. During this time Mr. Houston had interested himself to some extent in public affairs, and after he had resigned his position at the close of 1911 began to be appointed to positions of trust and importance. He has served during 1912 and 1913. In 1914 and 1915 he served as deputy assessor of Calloway County, and in 1916 was variously employed, as he was until November, 1917, when he was elected sheriff of Calloway County. He took up the duties of that office in January, 1918, for a term of four years, and has discharged his responsibilities in a highly efficient and satisfactory manner. He maintains offices in the courthouse. Sheriff Houston is a man of courage and discretion, and his maintenance of strict law and order in the county since taking over the reins of office. Since casting his first vote he has been a democrat, and has unreservedly supported the candidates and principles of his party. He is a member of the Baptist Church. Fraternally he is affiliated with Murray Lodge No. 105, A. F. and A. M.; Murray Chapter No. 92, R. A. M.; Paducah Commandery No. 11, and the Army and Navy Golf Club at Nashville, N. M. S., Louisville, Kentucky; Murray Camp No. 50, Woodmen of the World; and Murray Camp, Modern Woodmen of America. He owns a modern and comfortable residence on West Main Street. During the World war period he assisted in the success of the Liberty Loan, Red Cross and other drives, and at all times has demonstrated his loyalty and public spirit.

Mr. Houston was married in 1904, in Calloway County, to Miss Bonnie Fulton, daughter of C. B. and Mary (Boyd) Fulton, who reside at Murray, where Mr. Fulton is connected with the First National Bank. Two children have come to Mr. and Mrs. Houston: Buell, Patrick Henry Stevenson. Since the death of her husband, the late James B. Stevenson, one of the prominent farmers of Fayette County, Mrs. Nellie T. Stevenson has returned to the ancestral home, "Hurricane Hall," endeared to her by the associations of her youth and by family traditions reaching back to pioneer times in Kentucky. Mrs. Stevenson is a daughter of Patrick Henry Thomson and a great-granddaughter of Col. Roger Quarles, a prominent Kentucky pioneer who came from Virginia in 1801 and subsequently acquired a tract of land of about 1,000 acres. Col. Roger Quarles had no sons to bear his name and his only daughter was Anna Eliza, who became the wife of William Z. Thomson, and their only daughter married Dr. Thomas Warren, while the only son was Patrick Thomson.

Patrick Henry Thomson was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, August 31, 1819, and lived much of his life on the ancestral Quarles estate, where he owned the original home, in which he dispensed a liberal and typically Southern hospitality. He studied medicine in his youth but never practiced, and devoted his energies to farming and spending his life in doing good to others. He also devoted a great deal of his time to the church. He lived to be eighty-two years of age, passing away in 1901. Patrick Henry Thomson was an ardent friend of Henry Clay and one of the last survivors of a generation of Kentuckians who knew that great statesman. Mr. Thomson served for many years as clerk of the Cane Run Baptist Church, of which church he was for much of his life the treasurer and for many years the most liberal of his contributions. The land for that church and also for the Berea Christian Church was donated by Colonie Quarles. Colonel Quarles, the first clerk of Cane Run Church, was succeeded in that office by Mr. Thomson, and the latter by his daughter, Amelia, and her successor is her nephew-in-law, J. Morton Wood. Except for a temporary interval the office has continued in this family from the establishment of the historic old church congregation in 1828. Colonel Quarles also was one of the promoters of the Lexington and Georgetown turnpike, contributing $1,000 per mile for its construction of more than twelve miles long, and he and his grandson, Patrick Henry Thomson filled the office of president continuously. Patrick Henry Thomson for thirty-five years maintained a homestead in that part of his estate, bringing teachers from New England, and he showed the advantages of this excellent school to the children of his neighbors, especially those unable financially to obtain an education elsewhere. His wife, Julia Maria Farnsworth, was born July 6, 1821, at Bridgewater, Massachusetts, and they were married May 9, 1839. Her father, Benjamin Franklin Farnsworth, was founder of a college in Louisville, also of one or more seats of learning in New England and for a short time was president of Georgetown College. This noble Christian wife survived her honored husband and passed away September 8, 1916, at the age of ninety-four. They were married sixty-two years. Of their children, nine reached maturity. Anna Eliza became the wife of Squire Gaines and died at the age of sixty; Rodes was a farmer near the old home and died at the age of fifty-five; Franklin died while a member of the graduating class of Georgetown College at the age of twenty-one; William Z. is a retired farmer living at Georgetown; Sarah, who died at the age of sixty, was the wife of Dudley H. Bryant, and one of her sons, Thomson Bryant, is a member of the faculty of the State University; Roger Quarles is a traveling salesman with home at Columbia, South Carolina; Mrs. Nellie Stevenson is the next, in order of age, to the oldest child of Colonie Quarles; clerk of Cane Run Baptist Church, now lives at Orlando, Florida; Patrick Henry is secretary of the Chamber of Commerce in Fort Lauderdale, Florida.

Miss Nellie Thomson was born in the house where she now resides and where she was married March 28, 1888, to James B. Stevenson. James B. Stevenson, who died June 8, 1903, at the age of fifty, was the third in a family of six children. His father, who was one of the successful and well-to-do farmers of Fayette County, the old Stevenson home being on Newtown Pike, five miles northeast of Lexington, near Mount Hope Presbyterian Church, with which the Stevensons were actively identified as members. The father of James B. Stevenson served as county judge for some years and achieved prominence also as a horseman. One of his horses was the famous "Washington Denmark," one of the greatest saddle horses known and whose wonderful qualities as a breeder made his subsequent owner, William Vincent Cromwell, distinguished among American horsemen. James B. Stevenson's brothers and sisters were Vincent, who died unmarried at the age of sixty-five; John, a retired resident of Lexington; Richard, a physician in Fayette County; Lizzie, Mrs. William Craig, who was killed in an automobile accident October 2, 1920, at the interurban crossing while leaving the home of Mrs. Nellie T. Stevenson; and Charles, a Lexington insurance man.

Mr. and Mrs. James B. Stevenson spent their married life on their farm on Newtown Pike, eight miles from Lexington. Mrs. Stevenson, after the death of her husband and her brother, bought the old homestead, formerly owned and occupied by her ancestor, Roger Quarles. This is a place that may well inspire affection and sentimental interest, and the house contains much of the old furniture and many of the heirlooms of her ancestors.

Mrs. Stevenson has two children: John Atkins and Julia Farnsworth Stevenson. John Atkins, an attendant of State University for a short term, married Lucile Brooks, daughter of Samuel Brooks, and has one son, James Thomson Stevenson. They and his mother live at the old home place. Julia Farnsworth is the wife of James Morton Wood, and they occupy her father's farm on the Newtown Pike. Mr. and Mrs. Wood have a son, J. Morton, Jr.

Jolly Barnett Pharris. Lying nine miles east of Winchester and some ten miles from Boonesboro, is found the Village of Schollsville, a community consisting of a number of residences, two stores, a feed mill and a blacksmith shop, which was founded at an early date in the history of Kentucky by members of the Scholl family. Fairview, a home of Daniel Boone, one of the spring nearby is pointed out to visitors as marking one of the camping-places of the great American hunter, trapper, guide and frontiersman, and in addition to its historical importance the little hamlet possesses prestige as being a trading center for a large contiguous farming community.

Located at Schollsville as one of its leading citizens and business men is Jolly Barnett Pharris, a general merchant, who was born in this county June 7, 1805, a son of William Morgan and Hester Cummings (Parish) Pharris, and a grandson of John and Rachael (Brookshire) Pharris, natives of Clark County. Hester C. Parrish was a daughter of Barnett Jolly and Tacy Parrish. Mr. Parrish being a stone mason by trade. It is said that he and two of his sons, William and Meredith Parrish, laid the foundations for the present courthouse at Winchester about 1845, and for the Court Street Christian Church on the site of the present postoffice. Barnett Jolly Parrish was born in 1793, came to Kentucky about 1800 with his parents, and died in 1857, while his wife, Tacy, died in 1880, when past ninety years of age. Hester Cummings Parrish was born in 1821, near Ruckervile, where her father, Maj. Andrew Cummings, was killed in 1812, a victim of the war of 1812, and moved to Kentucky in 1813, on the home farm of William M. Pharis, near Ruckervile. William Morgan Pharis was born within one mile of Ruckervile, December 28, 1823, and died at the age of sixty-four years, in 1887. During his early life he worked as a carpenter, but subsequently turned his attention to agricultural pursuits and through industrious work and good management accumulated a valuable property, became prosperous and highly respected and was considered one of the substantial and reliable men of his community. While his land was rather hilly, it was kept in cultivation and maintained and he kept a good grade of livestock, having good breeding stock, particularly in horses and jacks. While he was a man who had no great educational advantages, he was well posted upon important topics and could speak intelligently regarding worth-while subjects. He and his wife had six children who grew to maturity: Clinton H., who spent twenty-five years in Missouri and Kansas, but now resides in the city of Winchester; Celia K., who married Robert Bush, with whom she went to Missouri, but after his death in that state returned to Kentucky and died at Winchester; Meredith Allen, who spent his active career as a farmer in Clark and Fayette counties, but is now living in retirement at Louisville; Sidney, who was first a merchant and later a farmer in Clark County, and died at the age of forty-two years in 1900; Pharis, the widow of Elder William S. Gamboe, of the Christian Church, now residing at Lexington; and Jolly Barnett, of this notice.

Jolly Barnett Pharis acquired his educational training in the public schools of Clark County, and when still a youth entered the store in company with his brother, Sidney, who was already the proprietor of an establishment at Ruckerville. This partnership continued for two years, when their brother-in-law, William S. Gamboe, took over Sidney Pharis' interest, but two or three years later this was purchased by R. B. Potter, who continued as sole proprietor until 1892. In that year he removed to Winchester, where he bought a grocery store and continued in business until 1893, and then entered the office of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad at Winchester, remaining in the service of that road until 1901. At that time Dick Ware, an old merchant at Schollsville, died, worth $500,000, and Mr. Pharis, sensing an opportunity, purchased his old location and his large stock. Four years later he bought the present store, including forty-five acres of land, and enlarged store and stock, since which time he has been successful in increasing his trade each year. He has also secured an adjacent residence, where he makes his home.

In 1908 Mr. Pharis became railroad agent at Hedges, which is the name of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad station and the post office for the old town of Hedgesville, the station of the railroad being a quarter of a mile distant from the store. He is also engaged successfully in farming and has raised a nice bunch of hogs annually for the past several years. While at Ruckerville, Mr. Pharis served as postmaster, as he has also at Hedges, the post office being located in the railroad station, but he is entirely without aspiration for public position and has merely accepted office as a means of attaining public or political prominence. In his political views he inclines toward republicanism, and for several years served as secretary of the Republican County Central Committee of Clark County.

At the age of twenty years Mr. Pharis was united in marriage with Miss Florence Fox, who was reared in the home of her grandmother, Mrs. Polly Bush, her mother having died when she was six years of age, and her father, J. D. Fox, being also deceased at this time. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Pharis: Alma, who is the wife of H. W. Stevenson, an agriculturist in the community of Kiddville, Clark County; William Dillard, a street railway employee of Detroit, Michigan, who served in the 339th Regiment and was nine months in Northern Russia during the great World War; Oscar Harding, in the employ of a wholesale house at Detroit; Anna Carlisle, who resides with her parents and assists in the conduct of the store as a stenographer; Loula, who is a stenographer of Detroit, Michigan; Jolly Brown, connected with a manufacturing concern at Detroit; and Floyd Fox, who resides with his parents.

Mr. Pharis possesses in ample degree those qualities that combine to make up the character of a successful merchant, extending accommodation readily, being ever ready to serve customers in a courteous way, and carrying a modern stock that appeals to the demands of his trade. The steady growth of his business evidences its success and indicates in its development that Mr. Pharis has chosen well in his life work.

Dr. Arthur Weir Johnstone. The Johnstone family, as represented by the late Dr. Arthur Weir Johnstone and his sisters, Mary Johnstone and Anna (Peachy) Johnstone, have for many years been identified with the social and historical life of Danville and other parts of the State of Kentucky, and before entering on the more immediate features of the life and achievements of Dr. Arthur W. Johnstone, who died on September 28, 1905, a brief sketch of the family descent will not be inappropriate.

Arthur Weir Johnstone was descended through Dr. Thomas Walker, Lieutenant Willis Green, and Joshua Fry, Jr., and was a son of Rev. Robert Alexander and Anna (Peachy) Johnstone, and was born on July 15, 1853. A grandson of Judge John Green and Sarah Adams Fry; great-grandson of Willis Green and Sarah Reed and of Joshua Fry, Jr., and Peachy Walker; great-great-grandson of Thomas Walker and Mildred Thornton Merriweather.

Thomson Walker was born in 1715 and died in 1793; he was a member of the last House of Burgesses and served on the Committee of Safety.

Joshua Fry, Jr., was born in 1750 and died in 1839. He enlisted at the age of fifteen; he was placed on the pension roll of Garrard County, Kentucky, for services in the Virginia Militia.

Willis Green was born in 1752 and died in 1813. He served as ensign in Gypsy's County Regiment; he was promoted to second lieutenant and resigned in 1788. Willis Green was born in Fauquier County, Virginia, and died in Lincoln County, Kentucky. He represented Jefferson County in the Virginia Assembly.

Dr. Arthur W. Johnstone, of this sketch, was, at the age of nineteen years, a graduate of Center College, Danville. He then took up the study of medicine and was a student of Dr. John D. Jackson, of Danville, for a year and a half, and spent a similar period in New Orleans, later going to Philadelphia. Finally, he graduated from the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons, and following his graduation he moved to Danville, where he practiced his profession for a time. In the early part of 1880, Doctor Johnstone, desiring to extend the scope of his medical research, made a trip to Birmingham, England, and there for a period of six months he studied with Dr. Lawson Tail, well known as an eminent surgeon. At this time Doctor Johnstone appeared before the British Gynaecological Society in London, where he read a valuable article on microscopical work, which was the outcome of original research on his part. Because of his work along the line indicated he was made a member of the British Gynaecological Society and also was made a member of the same society in America the same year, being only thirty-three years old. These two honors were extended to him for his efforts to advance the science of his profession.

Doctor Johnstone returned to America in July, 1886, and in the following year he built a private hospital in Danville, Kentucky. In 1890 he formed a partnership with Dr. Thaddeus Raemy, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and at the end of one year he established his own hospital at Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, and he continued to maintain and guide this establishment up to the time of his death. Under Doctor Johnstone's management, the hospital became noted over a wide area, and here he specialized in abdominal surgery with marked success, the fame of his surgical operations extending beyond the confines of the state of Ohio. With the passing of Doctor Johnstone, surgical science suffered a loss, leaving a gap to be filled by some other member of the noble profession, to the advancement of which he had given all the active years of his worthy life.

On May 27, 1897, Doctor Johnstone was united in marriage to Miss Ethel Ann Chamberlin, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and to this union two children were born: Ethel Ann, born on June 23, 1898, and Roberta Alexander born on September 27, 1899.

Here it is fitting to introduce the name of John James Hogsett, a native of Grant County, Kentucky, where he was born on June 16, 1879. He was graduated from Central College in 1872 and was a member of the Kappa Alpha fraternity, a member of the Chamberlin Literary Society, attached to the college, and was valedictorian of his class. After his graduation, Mr. Hogsett returned to his home and taught school in Crittenden, Grant County, until 1879.

In June, 1879, Mr. Hogsett was married to Mary Johnstone, eldest daughter of Dr. Arthur Weir Johnstone, whose name introduces this biographical sketch. In 1882 Mr. Hogsett and his wife moved to Harrodsburg, where he took charge of the academy at that place and there remained in the scholastic training of youths for five years. At the end of that period he opened a school at Danville, known as the Hogsett Institute, which continued as head until his death, which occurred on January 31, 1890. The school, following Mr. Hogsett's death, was continued as a military academy—continuing to bear his name—until June, 1901, when it was closed. Mr. Hogsett was an earnest member of the Presbyterian church, of which he was an elder for many years. Mr. and Mrs. Hogsett became the parents of five children, all of whom are living.

Robert Alexander Hogsett graduated from Central College in 1901, following which he entered business at St. Louis, Missouri, and is now in Cleveland, Ohio, where he manages the liability department of the Travelers Insurance Company of Hartford, Connecticut. He was married in November, 1914, to Miss Mary Jane Reid, and Roberta Alexander Hogsett was graduated privately in Danville and at Washington, D. C. On the death of her mother she returned to Danville, where she lives with her aunt and where she fills a clerical position with the Electric Light Company.

Mary Johnstone, who became the wife of John James Hogsett and mother of the children just mentioned in the preceding paragraph, was educated at Caldwell College (now Kentucky College for Women) at Danville, Kentucky, and from that institution she was graduated in 1877. In 1901 she moved to Washington, D. C., and there her last days were spent.

Miss Alice Johnstone, second child of Robert Alexander and Anna (Peachy) Johnstone, was born on August 13, 1881, and was educated at Caldwell College. She is now living in the old ancestral home at Danville, regarded and esteemed as one of Danville's most estimable citizens. Miss Johnstone is known to be a veritable storehouse of historical memories in connection with the growth and development of Kentucky from its earliest days up to the present, and she readily places at the disposal of all interested her valuable and authentic knowledge of the people and the places in which she has lived, having seen, as she did, Kentucky grow from small proportions to a state of large importance in the vast commonwealth comprised in the United States.

Abram Renick, of Clark County, Kentucky, who marked the fleeting years with large and worthy achievement in the sphere of productive industry and loyal and liberal citizenship. He became one of the foremost figures in the breeding of short-horn cattle in America, in which field he was a pioneer, the Renick herd of fine short-horn cattle being still maintained on his fine old landed estate in Clark County, and being, in point of continuity, the oldest herd of the pioneer type. He continued his activities as a breeder of short-horn cattle Mr. Renick achieved a financial success and a reputation that have not been equalled by any other breeder in this country. The same ability and sterling qualities of character that enabled him to accomplish a great work along this line marked his course in connection with all other relations of life, and gave to him prominence and influence in community affairs, as well as invaluable place in popular confidence and esteem. The fine estate which this honored citizen accumulated passed as a heritage to four brothers, his great-nephews, and the prestige of the Renick herd of short-horns is being specially well maintained by his namesake, Abram Renick, Jr., one of these four brothers, of whom specific mention is made in the sketch following.

George Renick, father of the subject of this memoir, was a scion of a sterling family that was founded in Virginia in the early colonial period of our national history, and there he was reared to manhood. In 1793 George Renick came from Greenbrier, Virginia, to Kentucky, and girded himself for the pioneer life, become essentially the portion of his American forebears. The original progenitors came from the Rhine Province of Germany fully 400 years ago and first settled in Pennsylvania, whence emigration was soon afterward made to Virginia, the original German orthograph of the family name having been Renwick. In coming to Kentucky, then on the frontier of civilization, George Renick transported his little supply of personal effects on pack-horses, and accompanied by his wife, whose maiden name was Magdalene Reid, and by their two children, John and James. George Renick thus became one of the very early settlers in Clark County, and the land which he here obtained has continued, to a large extent, in possession of the Renick family to the present day. The substantial old house which he erected on the farm now owned by Abram Renick, Jr., six miles northwest of Winchester, is still in an excellent state of preservation and is one of the interesting landmarks of this section of the state. George Renick was in middle life at the time of his death. Of his six children four were born after the removal to Kentucky. The son, John, was one of the pioneer gunsmiths in this section of Kentucky, and it may readily be understood that there was ample demand for his productions in this line, as weapons of that sort were an essential equipment in all pioneer homes, in which wild and likely a large part of the pioneer's prospective property. John Renick found satisfaction in the work of his shop and in hunting expeditions, and seems to have manifested no special desire to accumulate property. In possession of the family are still found one or more specimens of handicraft, the gun-stocks being inlaid with shells. John Renick reared a large family of children, and two of his sons, George and Felix, emigrated, in 1850, to the Kansas Territory, in which state they were born. The family are to be found that today by their descendants. James, the second son of George Renick, remained in Kentucky and became an influential figure in political and general public affairs. He was a man of strong intellectuality and broad and accurate information. He familiarized himself with the record of every member of Congress, and his counsel was frequently sought by Shalnana, who at the time represented the district of Kentucky in the United States Congress. James Renick was an effective public speaker and was at all times ready to defend his well fortified convictions relative to economic and governmental affairs, besides which he was a close and appreciative student of the Bible. He was a man of powerful physique and continued vigorous and active until he was eighty-eight years of age, even then showing his ability to cut his own wood. He volunteered for service in the War of 1812, under Captain Isaac Cunningham, of Clark County, and proceeded with his command into Michigan, where he was assigned to the guarding of the horses of the American troops on the occasion of the battle of Perry's victory on Lake Erie.

In later years he recalled his experience in this connection and related how fish were crowded out of the water by the American troops, the horses were kept from the eating water, and out of a nearby and diminutive inlet of Lake Erie. Mr. Renick endured the full tension and experience of the pioneer days and continued his vital interest in men and affairs until the close of his long and worthy life. He married Miss Elizabeth Renick, a daughter of Felix Renick, of Chillicothe, Ohio, a brother of George Renick, the founder of the family in Clark County, Kentucky. James Renick and his wife thus were the parents of but one child, William H., of whom more specific mention will be made in a later paragraph. William Renick, third son of George, the Kentucky pioneer, resided for a time in Southwestern Kentucky, but he eventually returned to Clark County, where his death occurred.

Family traditions and records mark him chiefly as an ardent devotee to the sport of hunting deer, foxes and other wild game, with the aid of his well trained hounds, Abram Renick, to whom this memoir is dedicated, was the youngest of his sons by George Renick, and was born in the year 1803, as indicated by the fact that he was eighty years of age at the time of his death, in August, 1883. Matilda, daughter of George Renick, married Robert Hume and they established their home in Bourbon County, Kentucky. Magdalene, the other daughter, became the wife of Dillard Hazelrigg, of Montgomery County, and one of their descendants is Judge Albert Hazelrigg, of that county.

Abram Renick was reared under the conditions and influences marking the pioneer period in this history of Chillicothe and Kentucky, and he had a remarkable success as a farmer and stockgrower, having a great number of stock, and excellent herds of short-horn cattle, and he left other valuable heirlooms of the family at the present time. His famous short-horn cow purchased at the sale above noted was "Tames," a descendant of the imported "Rose of Sharon." This animal became the founder of the Renick herd of the Rose of Sharon family of short-horn cattle, a herd known to cattle breeders throughout the entire world. Mr. Renick was insistent in maintaining the purity and integrity of his short-horn blood, and it was largely due to this policy that he achieved such remarkable success. In the '60s he began to win honors for his exhibits at fairs and stock shows, and in the following decade he began to appear as a competitor for world's honors, by exhibiting at state fairs and fat-stock shows in Missouri, Illinois, Ohio, Iowa, New York and other commonwealths. On each exhibit he won high premiums, and added to the reputation of his herd and incidentally of his home state. His exhibits usually included a herd of several head, together with individual exhibits, and through his well ordered efforts he lived to see his stock exported to every country where the best type of live stock is appreciated.

He was one American breeder whose stock was exported for the purpose to improve foreign herds. His fine stock farm was visited by leading livestock and other men of distinction, including members of the foreign nobility and aristocracy, including Lord Dunmore and the Earl of Bective. In 1876, his stock was exhibited at Smithfield, England, where it won the world's first honors, over Queen Victoria's champion cow.

Mr. Renick was an enthusiast in his chosen sphere of endeavor, and while he won large financial success he had no special desire for wealth, but was unassuming, generous and considerate in his association with his fellow men, loyal and liberal as a citizen, and ever ready to do all in his power for his friends, to many of whom he presented valuable breeding stock from his celebrated herd. His fine stock farm, of 2,500 acres, in Clark County, has been pronounced one of the finest bodies of land in Kentucky, and he made upon the same the best of improvements. He delighted to extend to his friends the fruit of his labor, and the gracious hospitality of his beautiful home, in which were held the Sunday dinner guests to the number of twenty or more. He sold stock simply on representation, as his reputation was such that stock-growers had implicit confidence in him. Often his bull calves would be sold before they were born, for $200. For one bull he refused a price of $20,000, and at one time he sold six yearling heifers for $40,000. Mr. Renick was a recognized authority in stock-breeding both nationally and internationally in his special line, and he was secure and independent in his judgment, with the self-confidence born of long and successful experience. He lived a sane, kindly and benignant life, and his memory is revered by those who were drawn to him in bonds of close and appreciative friendship. He continued his active interest in his fine herd to the time of his death, and had on exhibit representatives from his herd at the very time when his life came to a close.

William H. Renick, son of James and Elizabeth Renick, mentioned in a preceding division of this review, married Miss Martha A. Morris, of Scott County, and she survives him, his death having occurred in 1914. His four sons who inherited the fine estate of his bachelor uncle, the late Abram Renick, were Morris W., who is president of the First National Bank at Middleton, Ohio, where he is engaged also in manufacturing; James Scott Renick (deceased), to whom a personal memoir is dedicated on other pages of this work; Abram, Jr., whose personal sketch immediately follows this article; and Brinkley Messick Renick owner of the business conducted under the title of the Paris Milling Company, at Paris, Kentucky.

ABRAM RENICK, JR. Of the four brothers, his grandfather, and the late Abram Renick, subject of the foregoing memoir, bequeathed his large and valuable estate, his name, of this sketch, is the one upon whom has devolved the continuance of the great industrial enterprise in which Abram Renick, Sr., gained so great success, celebrity and distinction, as is adequately shown in the preceding article. Abram Renick, Jr., who was born in Bourbon County Kentucky, November 10, 1883, is a son of William H. Renick, who is mentioned in the preceding sketch. Abram, Jr., had grown up in close association with his grand-uncle, in whose honor he was named, and had learned under his direction the latter's policies in the furtherance of the short-horn cattle industry, so that there has been singular consistency in the fact that both in his name and his work he is perpetuating the fame of his honored kinsman. At the death of Abram Renick, Sr., the subject of this sketch, his son, Abram, Jr., assumed the practical management of the estate, of which adequate description is given in the preceding article, and after requisite sales had been made and the property had been apportioned in accordance with the wishes of the former owner, Mr. Renick assumed control of his heritage, which included the fine old homestead of his grand-uncle, together with 750 acres of the landed estate. Here he has continued successfully to develop the enterprise which his father started. In the breeding of the finest type of short-horn cattle from the original stock for which the estate has become world-famed, and thus his herd of short-horn cattle retains prestige as the oldest continuous herd of the kind in the United States, even as it is one of the most important. Mr. Renick has continued to make exhibits at the leading fairs and stock shows, including the great International Stock Show at Chicago, the largest and most important in the world.

Mr. Renick was president of the American Shorthorn Breeders Association in 1911 and prior to that had been a member of the board of directors and the executive committee for twenty years. He was instrumental in organizing the Pedigreed Livestock Association of America, was its first president and was unanimously elected to succeed himself in that office for a second term.

In addition to being one of the prominent figures in the industrial life of his native state Mr. Renick has been influential in political affairs, as a vigorous advocate of the principles of the Democratic party. He represented Clark County in the Kentucky Legislature in the sessions of 1900 and 1902, and there made a splendid record, especially in the promotion of legislation tending to advance agricultural and live-stock industry in the state. It was primarily through his efforts that the Legislature made its first appropriation in support of the Kentucky State Fair, and the result has been a distinct impetus to the adoption of better and more scientific methods and policies in connection with farm enterprise in all parts of the state. Mr. Renick was instrumental also in effecting the passing of several bills for the further benefit of the farmers, and he was especially vigorous in representing the interest of his constituent district.

In February, 1886, was recorded the marriage of Mr. Renick to Miss Julia Fry, of Clinton County, Missouri, and her death occurred in 1904. Of this union were born three children: Virginia remains at the paternal home; Mrs. L. Cockrell, of Winchester, judicial center of Clark County; and Felix is secretary and treasurer of the New York Petroleum Exchange. Felix Renick was but eighteen years of age when he was graduated in old Centre College, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and in the following year he received the degree of Master of Arts from Princeton University, New Jersey. Then he entered the law school of the University of Kentucky, in which he was graduated with highest honors and from which he received the degree of Bachelor of Laws, with virtually coincident admission to the bar of his native state. In 1905 was solemnized the marriage of Abram Renick, Jr., to Bessie Mc Gee Fry of Clinton County, Missouri.

SAMUEL G. ROBINSON, one of the able attorneys of Monroe County, who is engaged in a general criminal and civil practice at Tompkinsville, has had a broad and varied experience in many legal lines, involving the trying of many causes, and is a fine example of the self-made men of this region, having secured the money for prosecuting his education by teaching school. As a citizen he has displayed a broad-gauged appreciation of the responsibilities resting upon the conscientious man and has given a constructive support to all measures which have had for their object the betterment of the public service.

Mr. Robinson was born on a farm near Fountain Run, Monroe County, Kentucky, September 9, 1886, a son of James Robinson, and grandson of Theodore Lewis, who was born in Tennessee in June, 1820, and died near Fountain Run, Kentucky, March 11, 1911. He was one of the very early settlers of Fountain Run to which he came in young manhood, and there he was married to Eliza T. Newman, a native of the vicinity, who died there in 1905. Their daughter, Mrs. Alice Robinson, was the wife of James G. Robinson, and the mother of Mr. Samuel G. Robinson. Mr. Lewis was a very extensive farmer of Monroe County. During the war between the states he served in the Union army.

James G. Robinson was born in Tennessee in 1827, and died near Fountain Run, Kentucky, in 1896. He was reared in his native state which he left after he had attained his majority, and coming to Kentucky found congenial surroundings and ample opportunities near Fountain Run, and here he continued to reside, being engaged in farming and working at the carpenter trade. His vote was always cast for candidates of the republican party. Early uniting with the Baptist Church he continued a member of that denomination until his death, and was a very strong churchman.

Mrs. Lewis was born near Fountain Run in 1849, and Mrs. Newman is the daughter of Mr. Lemuel L. Newman, of Tompkinsville, April 10, 1920. Their children were as follows: Lennel, who lives at Scottsville, Kentucky, is a clergyman of the Baptist Church; Andrew Jackson, who is a farmer, resides near Flippin, Monroe County, Kentucky; W. T., who is a farmer, resides near Tompkinsville; Alice, who married George Overstreet, a farmer, lives near his home in Tompkinsville; T. J., who is a farmer, lives three miles east of Tompkinsville, and he also officiates as a clergyman of the Baptist Church; and Samuel G., who is the youngest of the family.

Growing up in his native locality Samuel G. Robinson attended its rural schools, the Fountain Run High School and the Tompkinsville High School, completing the latter when twenty-four years old. In the meanwhile he began teaching school, having charge of the one at New Design, Monroe County, and at the same time read law in the office of Edwin Lawrence at Tompkinsville. In 1915 he passed the state examinations and was admitted to the bar. Immediately thereafter he began the practice of his profession, with offices in Room 8, Deposit Bank Building.

In politics he is a republican, but confines his service in his correspondance and participation to the affairs of the Baptist Church holds his membership. He belongs to Tompkinsville Camp No. 13476, M. W. A. Mr. Robinson owns a modern residence on Cherry Street, where he maintains a comfortable home. As a loyal citizen of his country, when it was at war, he took an active part in the local war work, specializing on assisting the recruited men of Monroe County to fill out their questions and papers in their camps.

He also helped to put over all of the drives, making speeches in Monroe County in behalf of the Red Cross and Liberty Bonds, his eloquence and sincerity resulting in very gratifying returns.

In 1914 Mr. Robinson was married at Tompkinsville, to Miss Mary Woods, a daughter of Andy and Sallie (Hilliard) Woods. Mr. Woods is deceased. Mr. Woods was one of the prosperous farmers of Monroe County. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson became the parents of the following children: Mildred, who was born June 16, 1914; Amnon J., who was born December 16, 1915; Oline, who was born December 13, 1916; Theima, who was born August 3, 1918; and Lawrence Carter, who was born March 29, 1920. In his various cases Mr. Robinson has proven that he is a lawyer of broad and practical ability, thorough, determined, alert, versatile and resourceful, and these qualities have given him a substantial standing in the community where he has passed all of the years of his professional career.

Benjamin F. Denham is one of the able lawyers of Tompkinsville, and also one of its versatile, broad and strong citizens, who is recognized as one of the leading men of Monroe County. He was born in Clay County, Kentucky, January 1, 1862. He is reared in a farm country on a farm. His preliminary educational training was received in the rural schools of Monroe County, and he later attended the Summer Shade Institute at Summer Shade, Metcalfe County, Kentucky. Still later he was a student of the Monroe Normal School at Flippin, Monroe County, Kentucky, leaving it when he was twenty-six years old. In the meanwhile, when twenty-four years old he had begun teaching school in Monroe County, and for twenty-five years remained in the educational field, but the last twelve years of this period he was employed as a teachers' trainer, and went about the county visiting the various schools in order to properly instruct the teachers. A man of high ambitions while he was thus engaged, he read law, and in 1900 was admitted to the bar, and entered into another phase of his career. In 1910 he tested his reputation for careful preparation to such an extent at Tompkinsville, and has built up very valuable connections. His offices are in Room 5, Deposit Bank Building. He owns a modern residence just west of the corporate limits of Tompkinsville, where he maintains a comfortable home. He is a democrat. The Christian Church affords him an expression for his religious creed, and he is equally zealous as a Mason, maintaining membership with Flippin Lodge No. 647, F. & A. M. During the late war he was one of the active workers in behalf of the local activities, serving as chairman of the Speakers Bureau of Monroe County, and rendered very valuable aid in all of the drives. He bought bonds and contributed to all of the war organizations to the full limit of his resources.

In 1894 Mr. Denham was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Denham, a distant relative, a daughter of Thomas and Jennie (Dalton) Denham, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Denham was a farmer of Barren County, Kentucky, but Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Denham were married in Monroe County. Their children are as follows: Homer, who was born in 1896, served in the Forty-sixth Infantry, Headquarters Company during the World war, was stationed first at Indianapolis, Indiana, was then transferred to Louisville, Kentucky, then to Camp Gordon, Georgia, and thence to Camp Dix, New Jersey, and was ready to sail overseas when the Armistice was signed, and he is now at Fort Travis, Texas, having remained in the service, and Ethel, who is unmarried, lives at home. During the years that he was engaged in teaching Mr. Denham won the affection of his pupils and the appreciation of their parents, and so successful were his methods that they attracted the attention and met the approval of the school authorities, to such an extent that they decided to have him impart them to other teachers. In the latter capacity Mr. Denham rendered such valuable service that all were loath to have him resign, and so insistent were they that he continue, that he remained in the work for a year after he was qualified to enter upon the practice of the law. Since becoming an attorney, Mr. Denham has gained a well-earned reputation for careful preparation to such an extent that he has won a number of his suits. He has never lost his sense of responsibility to the younger generation which lives in the heart of every successful educator, and is always striving to work for the future of those coming after him in his home community. Personally he has many enthusiastic friends, who appreciate his many excellent qualities and are proud of the distinction he has gained.

Walter William Hillenmeyer is a member of the firm H. F. Hillenmeyer & Sons, Nurserymen at Lexington, a successful and widely patronized business that has been conducted by members of the Hillenmeyer family in Fayette County for ninety years. Mr. Hillenmeyer is a member of H. F. H. Ehillenmeyer, whose career as an honored citizen of Fayette County is sketched on other pages.

Walter W. Hillenmeyer was born on his father's farm in Fayette County, August 27, 1891. He was well educated, attending private schools in Cincinnati, St. Mary's College at Lebanon, Kentucky, and the Kentucky University. He was nineteen when in 1910 he and his mother lived in Lewisburg, Kentucky. He has fully entered the nursery business established and for many years conducted by his father. Walter Hillenmeyer is the office manager while his brother Louis is outside superintendent, and together they have worked steadily for the enlargement, the better quality of stock, and the increasing prestige of this business.

Mr. Hillenmeyer is a Catholic and in politics independent. He is a member of the Fayette County Agricultural Club and Farmers' Union, and since 1915 has been a member of the Kiwanis Club of Fayette City. He has been a Republican and a member of the Lutheran Church. Mrs. Hillenmeyer is the oldest of three children. Her brother is Henry B. and her sister Adelia is the wife of James A. Means of Louisville. Mr. and Mrs. Hillenmeyer have three sons, Walter William Jr., Herbert Francis and Henry Reiling H.

Thomas F. Cleaver, M. D., whose residence and professional headquarters are maintained at Lebanon, the judicial center of Marion County, is in every sense one of the representative physicians and surgeons of this section of his native state, and such is his ability and reputation in his profession that he is frequently called into counsel in connection with critical cases in several other counties in Central Kentucky, including Washington, Taylor, Green and Adair counties. His professional prestige and high standing as a citizen are specially pleasing to the community, in view of the fact that as a physician and surgeon he has effectively continued the humane service that engaged the attention of his honored father in this immediate section of the state for a period of more than half a century. Like his father, he has maintained a high sense of personal and professional stewardship, has never failed to respond to the call of suffering and distress, no matter how inclement the weather, poor the condition of the roads or be they traversed, often in the night hours, or how problematical his compensation for services rendered. The poor and unfortunate have received from him the same kindly and able ministrations, without question of his reception of a fee, as have those of wealth and influence. Under these conditions it is needless to say that he has invaluable place in the confidence and affectionate regard of the people in which he has maintained his home from the time of his birth to the present.

Doctor Cleaver was born at Lebanon, on the 25th of November, 1865, and is a son of Dr. William W. and Joana (Grundy) Cleaver, the former of whom likewise was a native of Marion County, and the latter was born on her father's farm near Bardstown, Nelson County. Her father was a brother of Felix B. Grundy, of Bowling Green, who gained repute as one of the foremost criminal lawyers of Kentucky, his appreciation of professional ethics being such that he would never consent to appear as counsel for the defense of any accused person until he was convinced that that person was innocent. His sole aim was to make the law the conservator of justice.

Dr. William W. Cleaver was reared on his father's farm and received the advantages of the common schools of Marion County. At the age of nineteen years he began reading medicine in the office and under the preceptorship of the late Dr. John Mike Shuck, of Lebanon, and later he entered the medical school of the Louisville University, in which institution he was graduated at the age of thirty-five in 1889. He has continuously engaged in practice at Lebanon for fifteen-seven years, save for the period of his service to the Confederacy in the Civil War. He became a surgeon in the command of General John Morgan, the celebrated raider, was captured by the enemy and was thereafter held a prisoner at Fort Delaware until the close of the war, when he was paroled. He was thus a prisoner of war at the time of the birth of his son Thomas F., subject of this review. After the war he continued in the active and successful practice of his profession at Lebanon until his death, July 4, 1911, at the venerable age of eighty-four years. No man in this section of Kentucky held more secure vantage-place in popular confidence and esteem, and his ability in his profession led to his being called into counsel at frequent intervals in several counties adjacent to or near that in which he maintained his home. He kept in close touch with the advances made in medical and surgical science, was affiliated with leading professional organizations, including the American Medical Association, and was influential in community affairs. He represented Marion County in the State Legislature for several terms and held the position of mayor of Lebanon for several years as mayor of Lebanon. His wife was seventy-nine years of age at the time of her death. He was a staunch advocate of the principles of the democratic party, was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity of Lebanon, Kentucky, and he and his wife held membership in the Presbyterian Church. Of the children the first born was James F., who became a skilled physician, and who practiced at Lebanon at the time of his death, about thirty-five years ago. George H. died in the City of New Orleans as a victim of the yellow fever epidemic of 1890, he having been the owner of a plantation in Louisiana. Esther, the eldest daughter, became the wife of Dr. Archie Rose, who thereafter engaged in practice at Lebanon about five years, at the expiration of which he established his home at Vernal, Utah, where he continued in the work of his profession until his death, in April, 1919, and where his widow still resides. Willie, the second daughter, is the wife of Rev. George A. Blair, a clergymen of the Presbyterian Church, and they now reside at Santa Barbara, California, where Rev. Blair holds a pastoral charge. Lucy J. who died within thirty-six years of age was the wife of George W. McElroy, a farmer, manufacturer, and stock-grower of Marion County, who resides at Lebanon. Mrs. McElroy showed exceptional literary talent and was the author of several novels that have had extended circulation, including “Answered,” and “Juliette and Mary.” Mr. and Mrs. McElroy became the parents of four sons and two daughters. Dr. Thomas F. Cleaver, subject of this review, was the next in order of birth. David Irvine, the youngest of the children, died at the age of six months.

After completing the curriculum of the public schools of Lebanon and having received preliminary instruction in the office of his father, Dr. Thomas F. Cleaver entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, and from this institution, his father's alma mater, he received his degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1887. He was graduated with the honors of his class, and upon him was conferred the Yandell medal. During his three years in the medical school he never missed a lecture and was never late in appearing in the lecture room. From the time of his graduation to the present he has been actively engaged in general practice at Lebanon, where he has not only upheld the paternal prestige of the family name in this exacting profession but has also added materially to the honors of the name which he bears—both as a skilled physician and surgeon and as a loyal, liberal and progressive citizen. His practice extends throughout the county, and in its scope and character attests the high esteem in which he is held as a physician and as a man. The Doctor has never deviated from the line of strict allegiance to the cause of the republican party, but has subordinated all else to the demands of his profession and has had neither time nor inclination for public office. During the late World war he did all in his power to uphold the Government in its war activities, and was a member of the medical advisory board for the counties of Marion, Washington, Adair, Taylor and Green. Many of the meetings of this important board were held in his offices and here examinations were made of those called into the nation's military or naval service from the counties of the Presbyterian Church in their home city, and he is affiliated with the American Medical Association, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the Marion County Medical Society.

The year 1898 recorded the marriage of Doctor Cleaver to Miss Mamie A. Nutting, of Indianapolis, Indiana, she being a representative of an old and influential family of the Hoosier State. Since her marriage Mrs. Cleaver has invented the Cleaver Horse Blanket, and of these remarkably superior blankets the sales had reached an aggregate of $20,000 before Mrs. Cleaver had secured her patent on the invention. She is also a chicken fancier and grower, and has devised and placed on the market a valuable poultry remedy, known as “Stopsit,” the sale of which has been large and is constantly expanding. The remedy is now sold to poultry raisers in many different states of the Union. She is the inventor, manufacturer and sole sales agent for this remedy. During the nation's part in World War, she organized and headed the Choral Club of Marion County, and was instrumental in the financial success of the Soldiers' Home, and less in her loyal service in support of the Government's war activities. She was the executive head of the Victor Loan Committee of Marion County, was zealous in Red Cross work, and by Herbert Hoover, head of food conservation service, she was made the chairman of the committee in charge of this service in Marion County. Under her vigorous direction the women of Marion County gained for the third Government war loan subscriptions considerably in advance of the assigned quota for the county. Mrs. Cleaver was also chairman of the National Defense Committee for Marion County. In church work she has been most zealous and influential, and for some time held the position of state secretary of the home-mission work of the Presbyterian Church in Kentucky. She has been a leader in movements for adult education, and also in the representative social life of her home community. She was chairman of the Woman's Republican Club of Marion County in the campaign of 1920, and in her home city she has organized two literary clubs—the Thorean Club, in 1895, and the Monday Study Club, in 1915. Dr. and Mrs. Cleaver have no children.

HON. ANDREW COMER PINCKLEY. When it is taken into consideration that the great majority of people never rise above the ordinary, but live out their lives in obscurity and, dying, are forgotten, all the more credit should be accorded those who have demonstrated the worth of individual endeavor, discharged the duties of high office with conscientious fidelity and enriched the community in which they have lived. In this connection, mention is made of the career of Hon. Andrew Comer Pinckley, County Judge of Monroe County, and an individual who, as agriculturist, citizen and guardian of a public trust, has been true to his own principles and to the faith reposed in him.

Judge Pinckley was born in Macon County, Tennessee, August 15, 1864, a son of John F. and Ann (Crawford) Pinckley, and belongs to a family which originated in England and was founded in this country in North Carolina, prior to the Revolutionary war, Judge Pinckley's great-grandfather being the immigrant. Silas Pinckley, grandfather of Judge Pinckley, was born in Tennessee, where he followed farming and served as County Clerk of Macon County for a number of years, in later life going to Denton, Texas, where he likewise was engaged in agricultural operations. He died while on a visit to Carroll County, Tennessee, in 1871. Silas Pinckley married a Miss Comer, who passed her entire life in her native state of Tennessee.

John F. Pinckley was born in 1818, in Macon County, Tennessee, where he was reared, educated and married. After being engaged in farming there, he went to Texas and followed the pursuits of the soil, but returned to Macon County, and in 1879 came to Monroe County, Kentucky, where he rounded out his industrious and honorable career as a farmer and died in 1899. He was a republican in his political allegiance and a member of the church of the Christian faith. Mr. Pinckley married Miss Crawford, who was born in 1822, near Gamaliel, Monroe County, and died in Macon County, Tennessee, in 1868, and they became the parents of the following children: Mary Jane, who died at the age of forty-six years, as the wife of W. T. J. Rhodes, now a farmer of Gamaliel; Elizabeth Ann, who died at Salt Lick, Tennessee, as the wife of Elias McDonald, now deceased, who was a farmer of that locality; Susan, who died aged forty years, as the wife of William Harlin, a farmer of Macon County, Tennessee; Sarah, the wife of John C. Pedigo, a farmer of Spivy, Macon County; Samuel, who died at the age of twenty-three years; Martha, who died as the wife of the late James S. Jones, a farmer of Flippin, Monroe County, Kentucky; Frances, who died at the age of seventeen years; Haskell, who died when twenty-five years of age, and died aged forty-seven years, as a farmer of the Flippin vicinity; James, residing on her farm near Cave City, Barren County, Kentucky, the widow of the late J. B. Johnson, a farmer of that community; Judge Andrew Comer, of this record; and Thomas A., a farmer near Sellersburg, Indiana. John F. Pinckley married for his second wife Miss Mary E. Jones, who was born at Turkeyneck Bend, Monroe County, Kentucky, and died in Macon County, Tennessee, and they had two children: David J., who is engaged in farming in California; and Maggie, who died at Flippin, Kentucky, aged thirty-five, as the wife of Robert Howard, now a farmer at Fountain Run, Monroe County.

Andrew Comer Pinckley was educated in the rural schools of Macon County, Tennessee, and Monroe County, Kentucky, and the normal academy at Flippin, and at the age of twenty years became a teacher in the Macon County schools. After several years of work as an educator he took up farming, in which he was engaged uninterruptedly until January, 1918, when he assumed the duties of County Judge of Monroe County, an office to which he had been elected the preceding November. His term continues until January, 1922. Judge Pinckley has an excellent record on the bench, and the manner in which he has discharged the duties of his office has gained him general confidence. His offices are in the Court House at Tompkinsville. Judge Pinckley still owns his valuable farm of 326 acres, situated at Flippin, but resides in his own comfortable home on Third Street, Tompkinsville. Politically he is a republican, but has never allowed his political opinions to influence his judicial decisions. He is a member of the Christian Church, and while farming in the vicinity of Gamaliel served as a elder. Judge Pinckley was active in all war movements during the recent great conflict, and was secretary of the Monroe County Chapter of the American Red Cross, in addition to which he contributed much of his time in assisting the recruited men of the county to fill out their questionnaires. He likewise was a generous contributor to all movements, and took a personal part in assisting to put over the big drives.

In 1863, Judge Pinckley married Miss Lettie Belle Denham, daughter of Isaac and Amanda (Button) Denham, farming people of Monroe County, both of whom are now deceased. To this union there have been born the following children: Jennie, unmarried, a teacher in the public schools of Monroe County, who resides with her parents; May, who died at the age of thirteen months; Bessie, the wife of C. J. Hicks, who came to America in 1894; Dora, twin of Bessie, who died at the age of six months; Fred, who served in the United States Navy from July, 1918, to February, 1919, and is now engaged in assisting his father in the operation of the home farm, married Hattie Ross of Monroe County, Kentucky; W. Henry, who volunteered for limited service during the World war, was stationed in the state of Washington, taught school in Monroe County before entering the conflict, and now assists in the operation of his father's farm, married Mae Bratton of Monroe County, Kentucky; Annie, a student of the Western Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green, and a teacher in the rural schools of Monroe County; and Guy, who was a student of the Kentucky State University, at Lexington, is now attending the Louisville Medical College.

ALEXANDER B. THOMPSON. Strength of purpose, intelligently directed, results in almost every case in material advancement. The man who fluctuates from one line of endeavor to another seldom achieves lasting or worth while success. It is the individual who, knowing well what he desires to accomplish, forges ahead, uncounted by obstacles, undismayed by the chances and changes of life, who reaches his ultimate goal. The entire career of Mr. Thompson has been devoted to the vocation of the educator. In his career he has made marked progress. While his connection with his calling does not cover many years, he has forged steadily onward, and at present is Superintendent of Schools of the City of Edmonston.

Mr. Thompson was born at Evansville, Indiana, October 23, 1875, a son of Rev. Shadrach F. and Sally (Veech) Thompson. The Thompson family originated in England, where it came to America during colonial times, the pioneers of this branch of the family locating in North Carolina. In that state at Mount Airy was born Alexander B. Thompson's grandfather, Isaac Thompson, who passed his entire career in the locality of his birth and was a large planter and slave owner. He married a Miss Cleveland, who was also born and passed her life at Mount Airy, and they were the parents of four sons and four daughters, all of whom are now deceased.

Shadrach F. Thompson was born at Mount Airy, North Carolina, in 1839, and was reared in his native community, where he made his home until reaching the age of twenty years. At that time he entered Georgetown (Kentucky) College, from which he was duly graduated in 1853, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and in 1855 was granted the degree of Master of Arts by the same institution. At that time he became pastor of the Baptist Church at Shelbyville, Kentucky, where he remained for ten years, and was then made secretary of state missions of the Baptist Church, with headquarters at Louisville, where he resided until 1874. In that year he was transferred to Evansville, Indiana, as pastor of the First Baptist Church, and continued during that and the two following years, his next charge being at Anderson, Indiana, where he remained two years. For one year thereafter he filled the pulpit at Ghent, Kentucky, and for a like period was stationed at Warsaw, this state. Going then to Louis ville, he spent two years as a student at the Baptist Seminary, and in 1883 went to Elizabethtown, Kentucky, as pastor of the Baptist Church, remaining until 1884, then two years at Palestine, Kentucky, as pastor, and then went to Shelby County, where he remained, preaching and operating his farm, until 1892. Mr. Thompson then went to the state of Missouri, where he preached for two years, after which he returned to Louis ville, and from that time until his death in 1907, lived a practically retired life. He was a democrat in his political views, but never sought office. During the Mexican war he enlisted in the United States Army, but the officers, considering him too young, would not permit of his being sent to Mexico.

Shadrach F. Thompson married for his first wife Miss Sallie Veech, who was born in Shelby County, and died there in 1884. Her grandfather, George Veech, was born at Cork, Ireland, and was the immigrant of the family. The family of Veeches came to Kentucky in 1856, and after locating at Shelby County, Kentucky, where he established the old Veech homestead near Finchville. There he held on agricultural operations during the remainder of his life, and died on his farm. He married a Miss Faulkner, also a native of Ireland, from which country they came shortly after their union. Among their children was A. B. Veech, the mover of Graham County, Kentucky.

Mr. Thompson, who was born in Shelby County and passed his entire life in the Finchville community. He was an extensive operator, being the proprietor of 1,000 acres of land, and at his death, in 1884, was accounted one of the wealthy men of his locality. He married Miss Stephens, who was born and passed her whole life in Shelby County. To Shadrach F. and Sallie Veech Thompson there were born the following children: Martha, who died at Louisville, aged forty-five years, as the wife of M. T. Sherman, a bookkeeper; Mary, who died at the age of twenty years; Inis, who died at Louisville, at the age of forty-eight years, as the wife of L. E. Maurer, a stationary engineer of Lexington, Kentucky; Elie, the wife of J. S. Harris, engaged in the insurance business at Hebron; Hattie, who died young; Frances, who is a teacher in the public schools of Louisville; and Olive, the wife of William Locke, a banker of Houston, Texas.

Shadrach F. Thompson, after the death of his first wife, married Miss Bettie Powers, who was born in Shelby County, Kentucky, in 1855, and they became the parents of three children; Walter, a veteran of the world war, who is a member of the United States Regular Army, and is stationed at Fort Snelling, Minnesota; Ruth, who is unmarried and a teacher in the public schools of Louisville; and Frankie, who died young.

Alexander B. Thompson received his early education in the public schools of Kentucky, and in 1862 graduated from the McCune High School, Louisville, Missouri. In 1897 he entered the University of Louisville, but his career was interrupted by the Spanish-American war, for service in which he enlisted in July, 1898, and was sent to Porto Rico, where he was assigned to the Quartermaster's Department. Upon his return, he was mustered out of the service in December, 1898, and again entered Georgetown College, from which he was graduated with the class of 1900, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Mr. Thompson next entered the Southern Baptist Seminary, and was graduated therefrom in 1907, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Theology, and at that time was elected principal of the Hazard Baptist Institute, a position which he still retains. He has effected many changes in the educational system here and has succeeded in elevating standards to a considerable extent. Under his supervision are five teachers and 100 pupils, and Mr. Thompson is popular with instructors and students alike. He is a member of the Kentucky Educational Association.

In politics Mr. Thompson is a democrat. His religious connection is with the Baptist Church, in which he is serving as superintendent of the Sunday school.

James Tudor. While some men achieve success along certain lines and in certain professions because of sheer industry, intense application and concentration, and a long period of training, there are those who are born to them, their natural leanings and marked talents pointing unmistakably to the career in which they subsequently attain distinction. With some, the call of commerce cannot be denied, to others the science of healing appeals, the political arena engages many, while still others early see in their visions of the future achievement in the law as the summit of their ambition. To respond to this call, to bend every energy in this direction, to broaden and deepen every possible highway of knowledge and to finally enter upon this chosen career and find its reward worth while, such has been the experience of James Tudor, County Attorney of Metcalfe County, residing at Edmonton.

Mr. Tudor was born on a farm near Knob Lick, Metcalfe County, Kentucky, January 23, 1882, a son of P. P. and Alice (Terry) Tudor, and a member of a family which originated in England and was founded in America in colonial times, the early members of this family locating in Virginia. In that state was born the great-grandfather of James Tudor, Henry Tudor, who became a citizen of the United States and a slave owner of Met calfe County, to which community he came shortly after his marriage, and died at Summer Shade. Among his children was Joseph M. Tudor, the grandfather, who was born in 1834, at Summer Shade, Kentucky, and in 1870 removed to Knob Lick, where he engaged in farming and became one of the substantial men of his community. Late in life he retired from active pursuits and went to Alvord, Texas, where his death occurred in 1915. He married Eliza Huffman, who was born in 1836 near Knob Lick, and died in the same community in 1891.

P. P. Tudor, now a resident of Knob Lick, was born March 16, 1855, at Summer Shade, and has been a lifelong agriculturist, having owned and operated his present Knob Lick farm for over 60 years. He is a Republican in his political allegiance, and is an active supporter of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Tudor married Alice Terry, who was born October 6, 1856, near Edmonton, and to this union there have been born twelve children: Dan, a carpenter and builder of Louisville; James, of this record; Kate, the wife of Ed Reynolds, a farmer and live stock trader near Elizabethtown, Kentucky; Lou Ellen, the wife of Hardin Rennick, a farmer and live stock trader of Hardyville, Hart County; Elzie, who is unmarried and resides with his parents; Leslie P., who is engaged in farming near Milford, Illinois; Willie, who is engaged in farming at Sonora, Hardin County; Lucy, the wife of Willie Lee Ball, a hardware and grocery merchant of Horse Cave, Kentucky;izzie, the wife of J. L. Steele, a merchant of Knob Lick; Mary Alma, the wife of Joe Lockett, a farmer of Park, Metcalfe County; Irene, who is unmarried and resides with her parents; and Hazel Vern, who is also unmarried and living at home.

James Tudor received his preliminary educational training in the rural schools of Metcalfe County, followed by teaching at Stump Creek High School at Summer Shade for one term. Later he spent two years at the Western Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green, which he left in 1911. In the meantime, at the age of twenty-four years, he had commenced teaching in the rural schools of Metcalfe County, and for ten years followed the work of an educator. In 1913 he began to apply himself to the study of law, and in 1915 was admitted to the bar. While engaged in his professional duties at Edmonton while still engaged in teaching school, but after a short time had built up a sufficiently remunerative practice to allow him to give all of his attention thereto, and this has now grown to large proportions. He follows a general civil and criminal practice, and is generally acknowledged as one of the reliable and forceful members of the Metcalfe County bar, his progress in his profession indicating that he has the qualities necessary for the attainment of a world-wide success. A republican in politics, Mr. Tudor was appointed Deputy County Clerk in 1912 and occupied that office until 1916. In November, 1917, he was the candidate of his party for County Attorney, and, being elected, took office in January, 1918, for a term of four years. In Nov. 8, 1921 Mr. Tudor was re-elected County Attorney. His offices are situated in the Court House, Mr. Tudor having an excellent room for conducting his business and gaining the confidence of the people of his community. He is fraternally affiliated with Bragg Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, at Edmonton, in which he has numerous friends. Reared in the faith of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, he has retained that belief all of his life. He is the owner of a farm of sixty acres, in Metcalfe County, but applies himself strictly to the duties of his office and the responsibilities of his profession. A strokes of the World war, Mr. Tudor subscribed liberally to all movements and served in the Red Cross and Liberty Loan drives in his county. He is unmarried.

Willis Staton, senior member of the law firm of Staton & Stump of Pikeville, has been for some time one of the leaders of the bar of Pike County, and is a man learned in his profession, and well-informed on general topics. Successful as he has been in his professional labors, they have not absorbed his energies to the exclusion of the general interests of the community. Being a man of scholarly attainments and broad culture, he has been especially interested in politics, and, although not belonging to the party now in the majority in this region, has received such a whole-hearted support in his candidacy for several offices for which he has come before the public, as to demonstrate his personal popularity, and to prove his standing among his fellow citizens.

Willis Staton was born on the same place as his father, at Cambridge, Pike County, Kentucky, May 29, 1875. He is a son of Joseph and Matilda (Scott) Staton, the former of whom was born November 26, 1854. The latter was born at Guinare, Pike County, January 21, 1851. Joseph Staton was a son of Richard Staton, who was born on Pond Creek, Pike County, a son of Charles Staton. Charles Staton was born in Logan County, Virginia, now Mingo County, West Virginia, and there he was married. He came to Pike County and located on Pond Creek, Pike County, and here his son, grandson and great-grandson were born, and here Joseph Staton still resides. The Statons have long been farmers as a general rule, although there have been some exceptions. Joseph Staton was for many years one of Pike County's popular educators, and his brother, J. M. Staton was county surveyor, being elected to that office just after he had attained his majority. Later he was deputy county clerk of Pike County. The members of the family have always been democrats, but have usually confined their participation in politics to giving the candidates and principles of their party an earnest support. Joseph Staton and his wife became the parents of ten children: namely; the eldest; Willard, who resides on the homestead; Ballard, who lives at Canada, Pike County; Ora, who is the wife of a Mr. Tolbert West of Canada, Pike County; Ella, who is the wife of James A. Maynard, a farmer of Canada, Kentucky; James M., Junior, who is superintendent of the mine near Warfield, Martin County, Kentucky; Roland T., who is on the homestead; Grover Cleveland, who is also a farmer; with whom is on the homestead, the latter having died at the age of nineteen years; and Malinda, who died in childhood.

Willis Staton attended the home schools, and later those of Pikeville, in the former being under his father's instruction, and in the latter had Professor Kendrick for his preceptor. Completing his courses in the Pikeville schools in 1889, he taught school for two years in Logan County, West Virginia, and in Pike County. Having determined to seek a larger field of usefulness, he saved every penny he could, and paid his own way through a law school of Louisville, Kentucky, where he spent three years, being graduated therefrom in 1894. In spite of his university training Mr. Staton feels that the best and most lasting instruction he received was that acquired by attending a debating society which met during a number of years each month, and which he believes noted all over that part of the state for its debates.

After his graduation Mr. Staton in order to gain a knowledge first hand of men and affairs, traveled out of Louisville as a salesman, but in 1896 formed a partnership with A. E. Hyde, which lasted for only a short period. Later he and George Pinson, Junior went into partnership, and continued their connection for seven years. Once more he practiced alone, and then he affiliated himself with Mr. A. Staton, and with his present partnership of Staton & Stump. They are carrying on a general practice, and are very successful. Mr. Staton's great personal popularity was evidenced when he was the candidate on the democratic ticket for the office of county attorney, when he was only defeated by sixty-four votes in a county which has a republican majority of over 1,200. In 1917 he was the democratic candidate for Congress in the Tenth Congressional District of Kentucky, which is also over-inhabited by republicans, and he cut down the majority very considerably.

On November 10, 1916, Mr. Staton was married to Josephine Newberry Crum, a daughter of Tivis Newberry of Martin County. Mr. and Mrs. Staton are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is an Odd Fellow.

Elmer D. Stephenson, member of the strong law firm of Stratton & Stephenson is at once a fine product and worthy representative of the best forces that have made Kentucky what it is. Born of one of the old and honored families of the state, he grew to manhood's estate amid ideal home conditions and has a strong hold upon the people of Pikeville. He is admired for his manly conduct, his ripened judgment, mental vigor and intimate knowledge of the law and its application to everyday life, especially in those matters which pertain to civic cases. His ability as a lawyer is unquestioned and his character as a man is unblemished. Such a man reflects credit upon his profession and community, and sets an example others will do well to follow.

Mr. Stephenson is a native son of Kentucky, born in Greenup County, December 30, 1877, but he springs from the Old Dominion, for his father, Robert J. Stephenson was born in Tazewell County, Virginia, from whence, in 1869, he moved to Greenup County, Kentucky, and there met and married Mildred Thompson, a native of the latter county. Here they have since resided, his activities being directed toward farming, which calling has been followed by the majority of his countrymen, the chief division of his time, however, was spent in the Navy and the South, his grandfather, John M. Stevenson, then past the half-century milestone, and nine brothers volunteered and served in the Confederate army and participated in many of the most important engagements of the war. After the close of the war the survivors of the Stephenson family returned home and resumed their peaceful occupations. Robert J. Stephenson has been a man of note in Greenup County, serving for many years as a justice of the peace, and from 1892 to 1895 was county commissioner. Both he and his wife are consistent members of the Christian Church. Politically he has always worked for and with the democratic party. The Thompson family came to Greenup County, Kentucky, from Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, settling opposite Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1788, but later removed to land in Old State Road where Elmer D. Stephenson was later born. There were six children in the family of Robert J. Stephenson and his wife, namely: Elmer D., who is the eldest; James C., who recently retired from the navy as a gunner after sixteen years in the service, the latter portion of that period being in the World war on a submarine chaser in the North Sea, around the Irish Coast, and in the English Channel, and also in the transport service, and he is now living at Los Angeles, California; Dr. J. W., who is a practicing physician at Ashland, Kentucky, was stationed at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, during the World war, where he did his full duty as a member of the medical branch of the service until his honorable discharge in December, 1918; Emma and Ethel, who are at home; and Pauline, who is the wife of Lorenzo Austin, lives at South Portsmouth, Greenup County, Kentucky. The two elder sons and the eldest daughter, have all taught school.

Marvin Davidson Beard. The family bearing the name of Beard has played a very important part in the development of Breckinridge County, and one of its present representatives at Hardinsburg, Marvin Davidson Beard, is sustaining the high reputation earned by his father, and operating extensively as a merchant and banker. He was born at Hardinsburg, September 25, 1876, a son of Benjamin Franklin and Martha Davidson (Hensley) Beard, the former of whom was born in Virginia and when still a very small boy was brought to Breckinridge County by his parents. They married when he was about ten years old and he was bound out to Morris Hensley, who in after years became his father-in-law.

Growing up at Hardinsburg, Benjamin Franklin Beard was brought up with Mr. Hensley, but when he reached his majority, because of ill health, decided to join in the westward rush to the coast after the discovery of gold in California, and was one of the original forty-miners. He drove with a couple of ox teams from Kentucky to California, and was one of a party that went from Breckinridge County on the long and dangerous trip across country. After some twelve or fourteen years in California he returned to his old home, and returned to Hardinsburg by way of the Isthmus of Panama and Gulf of Mexico, purposing to return to California, but marrying, he decided to settle permanently at Hardinsburg. At first he was in a drug business, but later expanded his business to include the handling of a general line of merchandise, and then began farming. In 1913, he married his second wife, Marvin Davidson Beard. This large concern is operated under the name of B. F. Beard & Company. He was the organizer of the Bank of Hardinsburg, now the Bank of Hardinsburg & Trust Company, the name being changed when a trust department was added, and continued as its president until his death. His son, Marvin Davidson Beard succeeded him in the presidency of this bank. For some years after the death of his father, Morris Hensley Beard, was cashier of the bank, but he died in October, 1913. The father died March 10, 1915, being then eighty-seven years old. In early life he was a democrat, but later on voted independently of party ties. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and served for years as superintendent of its Sunday school. Beginning his strength with the church, when a poor man, he rose through his own efforts to be one of the leading factors in the business life of his community, and when he died he left a large estate. He and his wife had the following children: Margaret, Morris Hensley, Charles L., Percy M., Gertrude, Daisy, Marvin D., and Bessie. The mother died in the spring of 1880. She was of the same church faith as her husband, and was an active worker in her church.

Growing up in his native city, Marvin Davidson Beard was given an excellent education, attending first the public schools of Hardinsburg, later in the Vanderbilt Training School at Elkton, Kentucky, and completed his studies at Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tennessee. His mercantile training was secured in his father's store, and he and his brother, P. M. Beard, succeeded to the business, but since 1905, he has been the sole proprietor. In 1913 in a disastrous fire which destroyed the entire block, the store of B. F. Beard & Company was burned, but Mr. Beard immediately rebuilt, erecting the present handsome brick structure his business occupies. This is one of the largest mercantile establishments in this part of Kentucky, and none is more reliable.

Mr. Beard was married April 5, 1900, to Annie M. De Jarnette, who died September 10, 1914, leaving two children, namely: Marvin D., Junior, and Ralph M. There were two other children who died before their mother passed away. On June 23, 1917, Mr. Beard was married second to Miss Eleanor Robertson of Louisiville, Kentucky. Mr. Beard is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In politics he is a democrat, but he is not a partisan. His value to his community is appreciated and he ranks among the leading men of Breckinridge County both from a business and personal standpoint.

Nathaniel W. Miller, who maintains his residence and business headquarters at Campbellsville, judicial center of Taylor County, one of the leading exporters of the real estate and insurance business in this county and through his operations has done much to advance civic and material progress in his home city and county.

Mr. Miller was born at Brandenberg, Meade County, Kentucky, on the 10th of December, 1850. His father, W. K. Miller, was born near Strasburg in the beautiful Shenandoah valley of Virginia, in 1836, and died at Lebanon, Kentucky, in 1900. The parents of W. K. Miller removed from Virginia to Harrison County, Indiana, about the year 1849, and he was reared to maturity in the Hoosier state, where he became a prosperous farmer and where was solemnized his marriage to Miss Rebecca Baltis, who was born in that state, in 1836, and whose death occurred at Boston, Kentucky, in 1895. In the same year 1857 W. K. Miller established his residence on a farm near Brandenberg, Kentucky, and there he continued as one of the representative agriculturists and citizens of Meade County until 1907, when he established his home at Lebanon, where his death occurred about two years later. He carried on farm enterprise on a large scale and in connection therewith achieved substantial success. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party and both he and his wife were zealous members of the Baptist Church. Of their children the eldest was Melvina, who became the wife of Bufford Watson, who was a farmer near Mauckport, Harrison County, Indiana, and there her death occurred when she was sixty years of age, her husband likewise having died in that section of Harrison County; Edward is a blacksmith and general mechanic at Brandenberg, Kentucky; Lizzie, who died at the age of fifty years, at Mauckport, Indiana, was the wife of Hugh Trotter, who there became a successful buyer and shipper of potatoes and who survived his wife by several years; William is a prosperous farmer in the state of Oklahoma; Sallie is a resident of Indianapolis, Indiana, and is the widow of Oscar Enlow, who has been a successful farmer near Jeffersonville, that state. Nathaniel W., of this review, was the next in order of birth; Emme was in the employ of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company at the time of his death, at Springfield, Tennessee, when he was forty-five years of age; Christina, who resides near Mauckport, Indiana, is the widow of Lyman Fleshman, a druggist.

Eli Miller, grandfather of Nathaniel W. of this sketch, was born and reared near Strasburg, Virginia, and became a pioneer settler in both Kentucky and Indiana. He died in the latter state near Mauckport. He was a cabinetmaker by trade and followed this vocation after his removal to Indiana. His wife, whose maiden name was Chandler, likewise was born near Strasburg, Virginia, and she died near Mauckport, Indiana. It is a matter of family record that the founder of the Miller family in America came from England with the colony founded by William Penn. This indicates that early generations of the family were identified with the Society of Friends, or Quakers.

The rural schools of his native county afforded Nathaniel W. Miller his early education, and thereafter he continued his studies one year in Georgetown College, at Georgetown, Scott County, Kentucky. He next entered the National Normal University, at Lebanon, Ohio, and in this institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1892. In the meanwhile, at the age of eighteen years, he began teaching in the district schools of his native county, and he thus continued his pedagogic activities five years. After his graduation he became assistant principal of the M. & F. High School at Columbia, Kentucky, and after serving two years he was elected principal of this school. He made an excellent record of service in this position and after holding the place three years he was elected principal thereof of the Bethel High School at Bard- fordsville, Marion County. He retained this position three years and for seven months thereafter he was in charge of a private school at Madisonville, this state. He then sold his interest in the school and engaged in the insurance business at Madisonville, where he remained until April 1, 1910, when he removed to Campbellsville and purchased an established insurance business, to which he has since added a real estate department. He has here developed one of the leading real-estate and insurance agencies of Taylor County, with offices in a building at the corner of Press and First North streets. His ability, progressiveness and personal popularity have conserved the success of his business career at Campbellsville, and his real-estate operations have been of appreciable scope and importance, while as an insurance underwriter he continues to demonstrate his instinctive business ability.

Mr. Miller has identified himself fully and loyally with his home city, and owns his attractive residence property on Depot Street. Mr. Miller is a democrat, and as such was elected a member of the City Council of Campbellsville. He retained this office three years, during which time he filled also the office of City Clerk. He and his wife are zealous members of the Baptist Church, in which he has served as deacon. Characteristic loyalty and vigor marked the course of Mr. Miller during the period of the nation's participation in the World war, and it was his to give specially effective service as registrar of the Taylor County draft board, in which connection he gave much time to the filling out of questionnaires for the recruited soldiers from the county. To the full limit of his financial resources, he subscribed as the deacon of his church, and the government bonds issued in support of war activities, and his support was earnestly given in connection with all phases of war work in his home city and county.

At Columbia, Kentucky, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Miller to Miss Minnie E. Willis, daughter of William and Catherine (Reynolds) Willis, the former of whom is deceased, he having been a prosperous farmer near Columbia, Adair County. The wife is now in good health and resides in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Miller, who have no children and who thus find her gracious presence in the home doubly grateful.

George W. Bushong, M. D. Of the men devoted to the science of healing at Tompkinsville, few bring to bear upon their calling greater gifts of scholarship and resource than Dr. George W. Bushong, president of the Monroe County Medical Society who is engaged in the practice of his chosen profession it would be difficult to name a man with a mature mind, trained by some years of work as an educator, and with a full realization of the possibilities and responsibilities which confronted him. During the quarter of a century that he has practiced at Tompkinsville, he has added to a thorough professional equipment a kindly and sympathetic manner, a genuine liking for his calling and a ready adaptability to changing conditions.

Doctor Bushong was born at Tompkinsville, July 1, 1872, a son of Jacob and Mary (Headrick) Bushong. His grandfather, George Bushong, was born in 1807, in Virginia, and as a young man came to Kentucky and located in Monroe County, founding the old home-stead upon which Bushong postoffice now stands. There he was engaged in agricultural pursuits and blacksmithing until his death, which occurred in 1892, at which time his community lost a man who was held in high esteem and one who had proven himself a worthy and useful citizen. He first married a Miss Parker, the grandmother of Doctor Bushong, who died when her son, Jacob, was a small child. He was next married to a widow, Mrs. Maxey Bushong, who died in her death took his third wife, also a widow, Mrs. Thompson.

Jacob Bushong was born in the state of Mississippi, in 1828, but when a lad was taken by his father to Monroe County, where he received his education and was reared to manhood on his father's farm. In 1861, when the country was the scene of the greatest struggle in the history of the United States, he took his place in the Fifth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, with which organization he served until the close of the struggle. He participated in numerous hard-fought engagements, including Shiloh, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and Stone River, and was promoted from private to sergeant, which rank he held during Sherman's March to the Sea. His military record was a splendid one and at the close of his service he returned to Monroe County and again engaged in farming, and also turned his attention to flour milling, in both of which vocations he achieved a success. His mill was located at the present site of Bushong, which community was named in his honor. He died there in 1905, respected and esteemed by all who knew him, as well as to the memory of a member and active supporter of the Christian Church. He was married in Monroe County to Miss Mary Headrick, who was born in 1840 at Tompkinsville and still survives him as a resident of Monroe County. They became the parents of the following children: Ella, the wife of Jarrett Dickerson, a farmer of Plano, Texas; Dr. George W., of that record; W. D., whose surgical capabilities were old farm and mill at Bushong, and who is a prominent republican of Monroe County; and Nancy, who died at Tompkinsville, in December, 1914, aged thirty-seven years, as the wife of Dr. J. F. Marrs, a physician and surgeon of Tompkinsville.

George W. Bushong acquired his early education in the rural schools of Monroe County, and when only seventeen years of age began to teach in the country districts. For five years he was thus engaged, in the meantime studying medicine during his leisure hours, and July 1, 1867, was graduated from the Hospital College of Medicine, Louisville, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He did not cease being a student at the time he left college, for he has always applied himself assiduously to his medical library, and in 1895 took a post-graduate course at the University of Louisville, in general medicine and surgery. Each year since, he has visited some institution, and in 1913 took a post-graduate course at the Cook County Hospital, Chicago, specializing in surgery. In 1921 he spent two months at post-graduate work in Illinois Post-Graduate Medical School of Chicago, taking special courses in surgery, gynecology, and operative surgery, and also ear, nose and throat.

In 1897 Doctor Bushong began practice at Tompkinsville, where his skill in diagnosis and his successful treatment of complicated cases of long standing soon created a gratifying demand for his services and laid the foundation of what has proved to be a career of exceptional breadth and usefulness. His offices are in the Baptist Hospital, on Main Street, Public Square. Doctor Bushong has been health officer of Monroe County for twenty years, and is a member of the Monroe County Medical Society, of which he is president, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. Aside from his practice, he has been prominent in republican politics, and from 1888 to 1918 was chairman of the republican County Executive Committee. For thirteen years, during the administrations of President McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft, he served capably as postmaster of Tompkinsville. He was a member of the Monroe County draft board during the World war, and did much to assist the various drives inaugurated to assist America's fighting forces during the great overseas struggle. His fraternal connections are numerous, including membership in Tompkinsville Lodge No. 753, F. and A. M.; Glasgow Chapter No. 45, R. A. M.; Glasgow Commandery No. 36, K. T.; Kossair Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Louisville; Tompkinsville Lodge No. 400, I. O. O. F.; and Tompkinsville Camp No. 13476, M. W. A. In a number of these orders he has held office, and in all he is popular with his fellow-members. During the latter part of Bushong's career he has been attended by financial success, due to his industry and to the fact that his skill has brought him, and at this time he is the owner of two farms in Monroe County, aggregating 300 acres of valuable land; and a modern residence on Jackson Street which is one of Tompkinsville's desirable homes. He is also a stockholder and member of the board of directors of the Deposit Bank of Monroe County.

In February, 1888, at Tompkinsville, Doctor Bushong was united in marriage with Miss Pearl Eagle, a daughter of Henry and Lucy (Maxey) Eagle, both of whom are now deceased, Mr. Eagle having been a leading merchant and trader of the county seat. Mrs. Bushong, who is a graduate of Bethel College, Hopkinsville, and has taken a special course in music, is a talented musician and skilled pianiste, as well as a woman of other accomplishments and graces. Six children have been born to Doctor and Mrs. Bushong: Lucille, a graduate of the Louisville Conservatory of Music, who inherits her mother's talent and is teacher of music, having charge now of the musical department of Lindsey Wilson Training School, Columbia, Kentucky; George, who was born on a farm of Washington County, in 1922, University of Louisville, where he is pursuing a medical course; Joe Ed, a member of the class of 1921, Tompkinsville High School, and a teacher in the graded school; Will Randall, born in 1906, Irving, born in 1911, and Corinne, born in 1913, all attending the graded school.

HON. JAMES M. JACKSON. The monitory which often ensues from the continuous following of a single line of activity has never been a feature of the career of Hon. James M. Jackson, ex-police judge and ex-mayor of Tompkinsville. Gifted with versatile talents, during his life he has been a school-teacher, a miner, a miller and a druggist, and at this time is accounted one of the leading men of the county. In each of his numerous personal capacities, as well as in public life, he has displayed the ability to make the most out of his opportunities and to discharge his responsibilities in a highly honorable manner that has gained him public good will and confidence.

Judge Jackson was elected County Judge of Monroe County, Nov. 8, 1921 and took his office Jan. 1, 1922. Judge Jackson was born in Washington County, Tennessee, November 11, 1852, a son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Walker) Jackson. His grandfather, James Jackson, who was a pioneer of Washington County, passed his entire life there as a tiller of the soil, and died in 1873, one of the greatly respected men of his community. He did not enter public life, but was content with the labors of his farm and the surroundings of his home, although he wielded some influence in his locality and was known as a man of public spirit and general worth.

Joseph Jackson, the father of Judge Jackson, was born in 1836, in Washington County, Tennessee, and was reared and educated in his native community, where he was married. Shortly after his union he moved to Keokuk, Iowa, where he spent one year. In 1854 went to West Point, Kentucky, where he continued until 1856. In that year he located in Monroe County, four miles west of Tompkinsville, where he was engaged in operations at the time of the outbreak of the War between the States. Mr. Jackson enlisted in the Union Army, becoming a private in the Ninth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, with which he served until after the battle of Shiloh, when he was stricken with a severe fever and was discharged because of disability. He was a brave and faithful soldier and won the friendship of his comrades and the respect of his officers. At the close of his service he returned to his Monroe County farm and after his recuperation again engaged in agricultural pursuits in which he continued until his death, in 1918. Mr. Jackson was a farmer primarily and did not the least of his considerable farm work himself. He was discharged the duties of citizenship faithfully and was a strong advocate of the principles of the republican party. He was a member of the Baptist Church, the movements of which he supported liberally. Mr. Jackson married Miss Elizabeth Walker, who was born in 1827, in Washington County, Tennessee, and died in Monroe County, Kentucky, September 20, 1898, and they became the parents of the following children: Mary, a resident of Monroe County, the widow of Sam Fox, who was a farmer and mechanic in this county; Elijah W., who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in Barren County, this state; Jasper, who is engaged in farming in Monroe County; Mahala Jane, the wife of Will Rickert, also a farmer of this county; and James M.

The eldest of his parents children, James M. Jackson was reared on the home farm and attended the rural schools of Monroe County, was educated on the farm, and at the age of twenty-three years. He was brought up as a farmer's son, but agricultural work did not appeal to him, and when he was twenty-three he adopted the vocation of teaching school, an occupation in which he was engaged for four years. He then went to Southwestern Missouri, where for 2½ years he worked in the lead and zinc mines, then returning to Monroe County, where he engaged in the drug business as a merchant at Flippin, where he conducted a drug business for three years. In the meantime, with the desire to carry on a professional career, he had applied himself to the study of law, and in June, 1898, was admitted to the Kentucky bar. Prior to this, from 1895 to 1898, he had been active in the Democratic Party and had become widely known for his fair-mindedness and judicial capacity in settling the disputes brought before him.

In 1898 Judge Jackson commenced the practice of his profession at Flippin, and in 1904 came to Tompkinsville, where he has since carried on a general civil and criminal practice, with offices situated at Room 5, Deposit Bank Building. Two years after arriving, he was elected police judge of Tompkinsville, an office in which he served for four years, and for a like period occupied the office of mayor, giving the people of his community an excellent administration. Judge Jackson has risen to a place among the leaders of his profession in Monroe County, and his success in much important litigation has caused him to have the confidence of the community, while his observance of the canons of the ethical code and his high standing in the community and regard of his fellow-practitioners. He belongs to the various organizations of his calling and is a deep and careful student of the law. Politically, he advocates the principles and supports the candidates of the republican party, and his religious connection is with the Christian faith, he being an elder in the church of that denomination at Tompkinsville. He is the owner of a modern residence at the corner of the cotton mill and the Spruce streets, one of the comfortable homes of his adopted community. Judge Jackson has always been known for his public spirit and loyalty, and these characteristics were particularly noticeable during the period of the World war, when he was a generous and active supporter of all of the measures promulgated in advancing the interests of American arms.

On August 18, 1876, in Monroe County, Judge Jackson was united in marriage with Miss Sinah C. Brandon, daughter of Artur C. and Marthie of John (Lee) Brandon, farming people of Monroe County who are both deceased. Judge and Mrs. Jackson have one daughter: Lucy May, who is the wife of W. A. Gravens, a painter and decorator of Tompkinsville.

Dixie McKinley. The agriculturists of Harrison County have won a name for themselves because of the intelligence with which they have cultivated their farms and developed the natural resources of this region, and among them one who has been unusually prosperous is Dixie McKinley, of Poindexter. He was born in Colemansville, Kentucky, December 2, 1861, a son of Calvin and Georgiana (King) McKinley, both of whom were natives of Harrison County, he having been born in 1817, and she in 1819. During the Civil war Calvin McKinley served in the Confederate Army and gave his life in defense of the cause. His widow survived him many years, having spent her entire life in Harrison County. She was the second wife, her sister Sallie having been Mr. McKinley's first wife. By the first marriage there were six children, two of whom survive, William, a retired farmer of Louisville, and James C., a farmer of Harrison County. By the second marriage there were two children, Dixie, and Sallie, who is the wife of Ira Blackborn, of Lawrenceburg, Indiana.

Dixie McKinley was reared amid strictly rural surroundings, and sent to the local schools. He remained with his mother until marriage, when he rented a farm for five years, buying the 132 acres on which he still resides. He is specializing in breeding Short Horn cattle in which he has met with a gratifying success. Besides these interests Mr. McKinley owns a half interest in a general store at Poindexter.

On March 5, 1890, he was married to Eva Dunaway, who was born in Harrison County, November 2, 1872, daughter of T. J. and Amanda (Bagby) Dunaway, natives of Kenton County. They were married in that county, but moved to Harrison County, prior to the birth of Mrs. McKinley, and here both died, being widely known and respected. They became the parents of four children, Annie Bassett, Mrs. William Wagglesworth; Virgie, wife of Henry Mullen; Eva D., wife of Ross McKinley; Joy F.; Mary, is the wife of Felix E. King; Mack S.; Helen and Frances. Mr. McKinley is a democrat, and has served as constable.

Frank H. Bassett, M. D. From the earliest period of statehood to the present the Bassett family has been a prominent one in the western counties of Kentucky. Several of the name have lived in Hopkinsville, which is the home of Dr. Frank H. Bassett, formerly a merchant of that city, in later years a practicing physician, and now the vigorous and capable mayor of the city.

Doctor Bassett was born at Stephensport, Kentucky, November 4, 1873. His paternal ancestors were Welsh and Colonial Americans. His grandfather, Jeremiah Vardeman Bassett, was born in 1797 at Cynthiana, Kentucky, this date being the fact that the family's settlement in Kentucky was some time before the close of the eighteenth century. Grandfather Bassett was a saddler by trade, spent most of his active life at Cynthiana, but finally moved out to Northwest Missouri and died at Plattsburg in 1887. His wife, Tryphena Wellesley Birch also died at Plattsburg, in 1889.

James H. Bassett, father of Doctor Bassett, was born in Cynthiana in 1826. He spent his early life in his native town, and after his marriage in Breckinridge County lived on his farm there for a number of years. He was a graduate of Transylvania College at Lexington, and on leaving college went to work in the Louisville post office and some years later, in 1877, he returned to Louisville and again resumed work in the post office. That was his business connection until 1899, when he was appointed postmaster of Parkland, now part of the City of Louisville. He held that post of responsibility four years, and then removed to a farm in Grayson County, and was active in the agricultural affairs of that vicinity until his death, which occurred near Litchfield in 1914. He was a stanch democrat of the old school. James H. Bassett, his brother, was born in Grayson County, Kentucky, people of that family. James H. Bassett and wife, a resident of Litchfield, Kentucky, and is the widow of John H. Kenny, who was a dentist practicing at Paducah for many years and who died in 1886. Julia B. Bassett, the next in the family, lives at Louisville and is the widow of Carroll C. Chick, who was owner and operator of a flour mill at Mt. Sterling, Kentucky. Georgia B. Bassett lives at Bentonville, Arkansas, and is the widow of Samuel R. Dent, who for many years was engaged in merchandising at Litchfield, Kentucky. Robert J. Bassett is president of the Grayson County State Bank at Litchfield. James H. Bassett, Jr., who was born in 1863, has only one business association in all his active life, spending thirty-three years with the Hegan Mantle Company, and while traveling representative of that house he was killed, being hit by an automobile, and he died at Lynchburg, Virginia, in 1913. Edmund Rufin Bassett, who was a retired banker when he died at Louisville in 1918, a victim of the influenza, was named for Edmund Rufin, the Confederate soldier who fired the first shot at Fort Sumter at the beginning of the Civil war. The seventh of the Bassett children is Col. Erskine B. Bassett, the oldest merchant of Hopkinsville in point of continuous service, and who was an active member of the Kentucky State Bar from 1884 until he was mustered into the National Army at the beginning of the World war, and was colonel of the One Hundred and Fiftieth Infantry in France. Florence B. Bassett, who died at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1903, was the wife of J. Y. Johnson, who now lives in St. Louis, Missouri, being a civil engineer with the St. Louis Street Railway Company.

Frank B. Bassett was the tenth and youngest of this notable family. He spent many happy years in Litchfield, attending the Sacred Heart parochial school and graduating from St. Xavier's College in Louisville in 1887. For four years he was employed in the dry goods department of Colonel Bassett's store, and from 1891 was employed for two years by J. M. Robinson & Company at Louisville. In 1893, returning to Hopkinsville, he resumed work in his brother's dry goods business. Following the sale of the house which he had occupied, he was elected a member of the hardware firm of Thompson & Bassett until 1905, when he sold out and used his means to carry out a long cherished purpose of becoming a physician. He entered the medical department of the University of Nashville, and received his M. D. degree in 1910. For one year he practiced as an intern at the Tennessee Hospital of Nashville, and then carried on his practice at Hopkinsville six years. Since then his work has been largely as assistant surgeon to the hospital, examiner and medical examiner for various insurance companies. He is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations.

Doctor Bassett has always been a stanch democrat, but his political work has been entirely confined to the government of his home city. When Hopkinsville was given a new charter under the commission form of government he was one of the first city commissioners elected in 1915, beginning his duties in 1916. In that year he announced his intention of becoming a candidate for mayor in November, 1917, two years away, and when his name was presented as candidate for that office there was no opposition and he entered upon his career as mayor in January, 1918, and during the past two years has done much to dignify the office in the eyes of citizens and has given an administration of municipal affairs efficient and competent in every respect.

Doctor Bassett is a member of the Presbyterian Church and is a member of the Masonic Lodge No. 545 of the Elks. He has been duly prospered in his business and professional career, and is owner of four business houses and several dwellings in Hopkinsville, his own home at 145 Alumni Avenue being one of the best residences in Western Kentucky.

On February 23, 1898, at Hopkinsville, Doctor Bassett married Miss Mamie Elizabeth Thompson. Her father, the late Charles A. Thompson, was one of the early hardware merchants of Hopkinsville. Mrs. Bassett finished her education in the Mary Sharp College of Winchester, Tennessee. To their union were born three children: Charles Thompson, who died at the age of sixteen; Florence Marshall, born November 1, 1902, now a student in an eastern college; and Frank H., Jr., who was born August 15, 1906.

Timotheo Brashaw Cravens. Steady application to the development of an idea has brought about the success of Timotheo Brashaw Cravens, of Tompkinsville, who conducts the largest insurance business in Monroe County. On the paternal side he is descended from Irish ancestry, and from forefathers who purchased Indian land under discouraging conditions inherits an obliging nature and a keen sense of humor which bring him in touch with the pleasures of life; while on the maternal side he inherits from Scotch forebears a rigid code of business integrity, as well as acumen and canny foresight in matters of business import. For the rest, his industry and a peculiar adaptability for his chosen calling have sufficed to win him success in material affairs and numerous friends and wellwishers.

Mr. Cravens was born at Columbus, Adair County, Kentucky, May 13, 1886, a son of Montgomery and Mary (Brashaw) Cravens. The Cravens family originated in Ireland, whence its members immigrated to the colony of Virginia, prior to the Revolutionary war. In the Old Dominion was born the grandfather of Mr. Cravens, who died in 1840 and was a prominent man who held for a legal career and on coming to Columbia became one of the leading Kentucky attorneys of his day. He was likewise prominent in public life and on one occasion served as a presidential elector. Believing firmly in state rights, he was a great Southern sympathizer and during the War between the States endangered his life by his outspoken pronouncing of his views. He died at Columbus about 1870. Mr. Cravens married Mary Waggoner, who was born in Adair County and died at Middlesboro, this state, although buried at the side of her husband at Columbia.

Montgomery Cravens was born in 1835 at Columbus, where he has made his home throughout life. He received a good education in his youth, in the public schools, and lived on a plantation; entered business affairs, eventually becoming proprietor of a drug store. This he conducted for many years, but in the evening of life disposed of his interests therein and has since lived in retirement. Mr. Cravens has long taken an active interest and prominent part in public affairs. A democrat in politics, he was the youngest man to ever occupy the position of county clerk of Adair County, an office which he held prior to his marriage. For seven years prior to the beginning of the enforcement of prohibition, he was a deputy stamp officer in the Internal Revenue Department, under President Wilson, and for eighteen years, ever since the establishment of a

Otto Earle Johnson, M. D. The medical profession includes in its membership men of marked ability, thorough training and other qualifications, who, moreover, possess a love of their calling and a desire the advancement of humanity. In this class is found Dr. Otto Earle Johnson of Denver, Johnson County, whose able services to his community have been supplemented by the service which he rendered during the World war.

Doctor Johnson was born at Lebanon, July 23, 1881, a son of the late Dr. John Elias and Drusilla Ellen (Fronman) Johnson. Hiram Johnson, the grandfather of Dr. Otto E. Johnson, was born in Scotland and as a young man immigrated to the United States and located in Hardin County, Kentucky, where he was engaged in farming during the remainder of his life and also operated a tar klin. He married Ellen Napper, who was born in Pennsylvania, of Holland ancestry and came to Kentucky with her parents when a girl. John Elias Johnson was born near Pitts Point, Hardin County, Kentucky, October 2, 1814, and was engaged on the home farm, in the meanwhile securing his early education in the public schools. He had not yet reached his seventeenth birthday when, in 1831, he enlisted in Company D, Fifteenth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and served in the Union army three years, eleven months and four days. He participated in a number of the leading engagements during the War between the States, has a splendid record for bravery and faithful performance of duty and at the close of the war was honorably discharged with the rank of corporal. Shortly after his return home, the young soldier took up the study of medicine, which he pursued at the University of Louisville and the University of New York, at the latter institution being a classmate of the late Dr. William O. Roberts, of Louisville, with whom he ever afterward maintained a close friendship. Doctor Johnson commenced his practice at Pitts Point, whence he went to Bowling Green and in 1882 came to Lebanon Junction, where he followed his profession until his death, June 12, 1912. In addition to his private practice he acted for many years as a railroad surgeon. He was not only prominent and proficient in his regular calling, but was active in other avenues of activity, being vice-president of the Lebanon Junction Bank and for many years engaged in commercial affairs as proprietor of a drug and general merchandise store. He was a republican in his political views, and as a churchman was a faithful Baptist. He took an interest in Masonic affairs and was a past master of his lodge. Doctor Johnson married first a Miss Joyce, who bore him five children, of whom one is Dr. Otto Earle of this review, and one is deceased. The third marriage of Doctor Johnson was to a Miss Wise, and they had six children, of whom one is deceased.

Otto Earle Johnson attended the common schools of Lebanon Junction, after graduation from which he pursued a course at Gethsemane College and supplemented this by attendance at Lynnland College. He pursued his medical studies at the University of Louisville, from the medical department of which institution he was graduated with his degree March 25, 1904, and immediately engaged in practice at Lebanon Junction. Here, in the community where he had been known from boyhood, he soon impressed his abilities upon his fellow-townsmen, and he acquired a good practice, and also acted as a railroad surgeon. His career, like those of so many other young men, was interrupted by the entrance of the United States into the great World war, and April 17, 1917, he gave up his practice and his railroad connection to enlist in the United States army, in which he secured a commission as first lieutenant in the Medical Corps. He was sent overseas in January, 1918, and served in England and France eleven months, returning home in May, 1919, to receive his honorable discharge at Camp Dix, New York, on the 20th of that month. He still holds a commission as captain in the Medical Reserve Corps of the United States Army.

Upon his return, Doctor Johnson resumed his interrupted practice, which is now of a size and nature and to many of the citizens of Clifton, to be the leader of a calling in his part of Johnson County. He is a member of the Johnson County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Association of Military Surgeons, and belongs also to the American Legion. He is a Past Chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, and Past Sachem of the Improved Order of Red Men. Doctor Johnson is a republican in his political allegiance, and has been a member of the Baptist church since he was nine years of age.

Doctor Johnson's marriage was the result of a wartime romance. While going overseas, in 1918, he met Miss Annie Smith Eastland, a native of Lax, Alabama, who was a Red Cross Nurse of the Vanderbilt Unit. They were married upon their return to the United States in a hasty manner. Doctor Johnson is the father of three children: James Earle, Gladys Juanita and Wallace Dillon.

John Emerson Leslie. It is not given to every man to excel in more than one line of endeavor. Every avenue of activity demands certain specific characteristics; and very few are able to adapt themselves to or are able to adopt those they possess so as to make them eminently fitting for divergent highways of progress. An exception to this general rule is found in John Emerson Leslie, a leading attorney of the Monroe county bar, the successful publisher of the Tompkinsville News and a man prominent in republican politics and public life generally. In the various fields of activity his efforts have been crowned with success of a kind that makes him a natural leader in his community.

Mr. Leslie was born at Tompkinsville, March 7, 1867, a son of Emerson and Jemima (Harlan) Leslie. His grandfather, Veechel Leslie, was born in Kentucky, and during the greater part of his life was engaged in agricultural pursuits in Clinton County. In the evening of life he went to Missouri, where he was preparing to make a new home when his death occurred. He married Mary Hopkins, who died at Tompkinsville, and they reared a family of seven sons and two daughters. Among their sons was Preston H. Leslie, who was born in 1826, in Clinton County, where he was reared, and as a young man came to Monroe County and prepared for the law. He entered the public life in the full tide of his profession, in which he made rapid strides, and became influential in public life, being elected to the State Senate. Upon the death of Governor Stephenson, he was appointed to complete the unexpired term of three years, and was then elected Governor for a term of four years, defeating John M. Harlan for the Governorship by a majority of 70 votes. His terms of office were characterized by able service and numerous advancements. Mr. Leslie was a democrat. He died at Helena, Montana, in 1907.

Emerson Leslie, the father of John Emerson Leslie, was born in 1829, in Clinton County, where he was educated and reared, and as a young man came to Tompkinsville and established himself in business as a wagon maker. During the Civil War he was employed by the United States Government in wagon fac-
William Kirkpatrick Richardson, M. D. A man devoted to the highest ideals of his humane profession, of prominence and wealth, yet unspoiled by his position and prosperity, whose life has been filled with kindly thoughts and generous deeds, a man of sterling integrity and probity, is Dr. William Kirkpatrick Richardson, of Monroe County. Reared on a farm, he early adopted medicine as the field of his activities, and so faithfully and assiduously has he labored in his chosen noble calling that he has risen to the very forefront of Monroe County's physicians, while as a citizen he is no less honored and respected.

Doctor Richardson was born on a Cumberland river farm, near Center Point, Monroe County, on October 3, 1880, the son of Margaret (Kirkpatrick) Richardson. His grandfather, John Richardson, was born in 1801, in the State of Virginia, and as a young man migrated to Fentress County, Tennessee, where he became a pioneer farmer. He was a man of good business ability and much industry and acquired a large and valuable property through legitimate business channels, and as a citizen was held in high esteem, being called by his neighbors a good, upstanding, and respected man, a useful and trusted citizen. He died in 1861, in Fentress County, where passed away also his wife, who had been a Miss Hildreth.

R. H. Richardson was born in Fentress County, Tennessee, in 1823, and was reared and educated in his native community. As a young man he came to Monroe County, settling on the banks of the Cumberland River, a community in which he spent his youth. Primarily engaged in his agricultural operations, and subsequently extended the scope of his activities, becoming a leading merchant, a live stock dealer and an extensive trader in tobacco, a field of activity in which he became widely and favorably known. Having acquired a large property, in 1900 he retired from active pursuits and moved to Tompkinsville, where his death occurred in 1904. Mr. Richard- son was a farmer of the highest business integrity, and his standing in commercial and financial circles was an excellent one. In politics he was a democrat, but political matters only had for him the interest that is shown by every good and public-spirited citizen, for he was not a seeker after public preferment. He was a strong churchman of the Christian faith, and for many years was a member of the Masonic fraternity. He married Miss Margaret Kirkpatrick, who was born in March 1825, in Knox County, and died in Tompkinsville, in 1913. They became the parents of the following children: Henry M., who was engaged in farming in Hardin County, Kentucky, until his death at the age of seventy-one years; Dr. William Kirkpatrick, of this record; John H., a banker of Munfordville, this state; Alonzo, who is engaged in farming in Barren County; Lucy, the wife of T. L. Hambly, engaged in the timber business at Glasgow; Tabitha, a resident of Glasgow, who married James H. Maxey, and after his death a Mr. Grissom, who is also deceased; Serilda, the wife of Perry Summers, a farmer of Hardin County; Basil Duke, a leading attorney of the Kentucky bar and a former member of the State Senate, residing at Glas- gow; and Gertrude, the wife of J. H. Gillingwater, a farmer of Barren County.

The early education of Dr. William Kirkpatrick Richardson was gained in the rural schools of Mon- roe County, and after his graduation from the Tompkinsville high school, in 1868, he spent one year working on a farm. In 1869 he entered the Miami Medical College at Cincinnati, from which he was graduated in 1874, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and in 1871 took a post-graduate course at Vanderbilt Uni- versity, Nashville, Tennessee. Doctor Richardson be- gan practice at Black's Ferry, Monroe County, on the Cumberland River, and remained in that community until 1904, when he came to Tompkinsville, where he has since had a large general medical and surgical practice, his office being located in his modern home on Third Street. Doctor Richardson, in addition to being a student of his calling, studies deeply upon the great questions of the day, and finds entertainment in books, travel and congenial companionship. His profes- sional service has ever been discharged with a keen sense of conscientious obligation, and his work has brought him ample recompense. He is the owner of a business building on the Public Square, of a farm of 363 acres located six miles south of Tompkinsville, and of thirty-five acres of very valuable land adjoining the city on the east. He is likewise vice-president, a director and majority stockholder of the Deposit Bank of Monroe County, and his religious connection is with the Christian Church. He has been a supporter of all worthy civic enter- prises, and during the World War was liberal in his subscriptions and donations to the various wartime movements and activities.

In 1890, in Monroe County, Doctor Richardson was united in marriage with Miss Martha E. Smith, daughter of the late William S. Smith, a farmer of Monroe County, and to this union were born five children: Tabitha, the wife of T. B. Cravens, engaged in the insurance business at Tompkinsville; Frank, who assists in the operation of his father's farm; Minnie, the wife of M. K. Stephens, a farmer of Wellington, Texas; Lovey, the wife of C. W. McPherson, a traveling salesman of St. Louis, Missouri; and Mary, who died at the age of eighteen years.

James Harlin Newman. It may be that inherent genius forms the motive power of success, but many who have studied the lives and principal traits of the men of various communities who have taken leadership believe that experience and sound judgment must be combined with natural inclination to produce the best results. In the majority of cases where a man has risen above his fellows, it will be found that the case has come gradually through persistent effort. There are many qualities which help to form the character, such as self-reliance, conscientiousness, energy and honesty, and all work together in bringing about the atta- inement of the ambitious man's goal. The above may be said to apply to James Harlin Newman, president of the Deposit Bank of Monroe County, at Tompkinsville.

Mr. Newman was born near Gamaliel, Monroe County, Kentucky, December 20, 1866, a son of John J. and Lucy A. (Harlin) Newman. The family was founded in this state by Mr. Newman's great-grandfather, a native of Virginia, who was a pioneer farmer here and spent the greater part of his life in Monroe County. In that county, in 1800, was born Josiah Newman, the grandfather of James H. Newman. He was reared and educated in his native county, where he spent some years in farming, but in middle life removed to Simpson County, this state, where he rounded out a career of industry and usefulness and died in 1801 on his farm. He married Edie Manion, who was born in Allen County, and died in the Simpson County farm.

John J. Newman was born near Akersville, Monroe County, Kentucky, in 1836, and was reared and educated on the farm where he early adopted the vocation of farming. He was engaged in farming near Gamaliel for forty years, and for five years was also engaged in merchandising at that place, where his death occurred in 1915. He was a man of industry and integrity who well merited the esteem and confidence in which he was held by his fellow-citizens. In politics he was a Republican. Mr. Newman married Miss Lucy A. Harlin, in 1849, near Salt Lick, Ten- nessee, and died near Gamaliel, in February, 1868, and they became the parents of the following children: Texie A., the wife of Dr. R. F. Crabtree, a physician and surgeon of Gamaliel; C. C., an attorney at law of

Helena, Montana; J. C., a traveling salesman with headquarters at Bowling Green; Joe, who followed farming near Glasgow until his death at the age of fifty-three years: Mary E., the wife of W. H. Reeves, a farmer near Bowling Green; James Harlin, of this review; John W., a farmer near Versailles, Kentucky; William H., who has left this part of the state and of whom nothing is known at this time; R. E., a real estate agent of Texas; and Dr. Herbert, a dental practitioner of Versailles.

James Harlin Newman attended the rural schools of Monroe County and the high school at Flippin, Kentucky, which he left at the age of seventeen years. Under his father's guidance he had worked on the home farm, then receiving his introduction to business methods as a clerk in the store of his father at Gamaile. He remained there for a little more than two years, leaving in March, 1888, when a little past his majority, to take up the duties of deputy sheriff of Monroe County, to which he had been appointed, and an office in which he served three years. In August, 1890, he was elected County Court Clerk, taking office the same month, and after serving four years and five months, was reelected to the same office and served three years more from January, 1895. In 1898 he was appointed division deputy collector of internal revenue for the Third District of the Second District of Kentucky, and acted in that capacity for three years, at the expiration of which he was appointed to the field duty in the United States Revenue service. After three years he served notice of his resignation, and in 1903 was candidate for clerk of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky, but met defeat with the rest of the republican ticket.

In 1894 Mr. Newman entered the Deposit Bank of Monroe County, in Tompkinsville, as cashier, and in the following year was elected president, a position which he has held to the present time, his fellow officials being: Dr. W. P. Richardson, vice president; A. B. Strickler, cashier; and S. C. Ray, assistant cashier. This institution was founded in 1889, as a state bank, and is now one of the strong and substantial institutions of the county, with an excellent standing in banking circles, its capital being $50,000.00, and reserves and profits, $22,000, and deposits, $500,000. Mr. Newman is known as a safe and conservative banker, able in his handling of affairs and of ripened experience and good judgment. He is a stanch republican in politics and his religious connection is with the Christian Church, in which he is an elder. He is a partner in the firm of Holocomb, Clark & Company, of Tompkinsville, the firm having several branches, in addition to which he owns property at Tompkinsville, including his comfortable cottage home on Cottage Street. Mr. Newman was selected as chairman of the bankers' organization of Monroe County for the Liberty Loan campaigns during the World war, and in that capacity led the work that put all of these over the top. Personally, he contributed liberally to all movements.

On January 22, 1890, at Tompkinsville, Mr. Newman was united in marriage with Miss Kirk Maxey, daughter of Dr. E. D. and Nancy J. (Kirkpatrick) Maxey, both of whom are now deceased. Doctor Maxey was for many years a leading physician and surgeon at Tompkinsville and a citizen who was held in high esteem. The family is widely known at Tompkinsville and the surrounding localities, and its members have numerous warm and appreciative friends.

JESSE ALEXANDER LEACH. That the pursuits of farming can be made one of the most congenial and satisfying occupations of human life, that industry, good judgment and perseverance transform one's ambitions into realities, and that integrity and straightforward dealing among the most useful of human assets are facts emphasized in the career of Jesse Alexander Leach, whose life has long been identified with Bourbon County, and who is at present the owner of a splendid farm nine miles northwest of Paris.

Mr. Leach was born at Lee's Lick, Harrison County, Kentucky, March 24, 1852, a son of Ambrose Dudley Leach and Frances, daughter of Joseph Farmer, the county judge for many years. Hezekiah Leach, was a native of Virginia, who passed his boyhood in young manhood to Kentucky and engaged in farming in Harrison County, where he passed the rest of his life and died October 20, 1827. He was married February 16, 1800, to Millie Bentley, who died May 11, 1857. Ambrose Dudley Leach was born June 3, 1818, in Harrison County, where he grew to manhood and began to make his own way early in life, due to the death of his father when he was still a lad. He was married June 15, 1846, to Frances Forsythe, who was born September 7, 1826, in Harrison County, a daughter of Augustus Forsythe, who was born also in Harrison County and passed his life there as a farmer. About 1870 Ambrose D. Leach came to Bourbon County, and farmed up a large tract near the summit of Pilot Knob. His means were limited and at the start he rented, but later purchased some land near Centreville on the Bourbon and Scott county line, the farm being mainly in Bourbon County. There Mr. Leach continued to be engaged in agricultural operations during the remainder of his life, and his son, Ambrose D., is now the owner of the land. Mr. Leach was a democrat but took only a partial interest in public affairs and never sought public office. He died, highly respected and esteemed, November 16, 1897, and was followed to the grave by Mrs. Leach, February 20, 1900. These honest, God-fearing people were the parents of ten children: Ann Eliza, who married Joseph May of Bourbon County; Emily Frances, who married Elbridge G. Hagan and lived in the old home place; Jesse A.; James, who died at the age of twenty-eight years, September 14, 1894; Augustus, who died at the age of twenty-eight years, January 3, 1897; Ambrose Dudley, on the old home farm at Centreville; Joseph L., who farms five and one-half miles north-west of Paris; John, farming in the Centreville community; Mollie, who died soon after her marriage to George Thomas, who farms near his brother Joseph L.

Jesse A. Leach grew up in a home in which the financial resources were modest during his boyhood and youth, and was compelled to be content with a common school education. He remained at home assisting his father until he was twenty-three years of age, at which time he embarked on a career of his own as a renter. One year later he married Miss Mollie Haverty, daughter of Judge Henry Haverty; John B., of Elletson; Mollie, of Schoole; and Carrie, of Reuben. Mr. and Mrs. Leach reside near the farm of Alfred Price, in the latter of whom is the son of the former. Mrs. Leach resides with her father and then went to live with her sister, with whom she remained until her marriage to Mr. Leach at the age of nineteen years. After his marriage he continued as a renter for about thirty years, working industriously and carefully saving his earnings, and in March, 1907, secured his present farm, the Joseph Hawkins property of ninety-six acres, which he has since increased to 190 acres. General farming has been his business, for while he raises a few acres of tobacco he also has large crops of corn, wheat and oats, and has met with success as a raiser of live stock. In addition, Mr. Leach operates considerable outside land, so that he may be called one of the larger farmers of his county. He is a democrat, but like his father has preferred the peaceful pursuits of the soil to the turmoil and doubtful honors of the political arena.

Ten children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Leach: Fred and Earl, who work with their father on a truck farm; Fannie, who is farming in Scott County; Stephen, farming in Harrison County; Dudley, operating a property near the home farm; John and Ora, who farm for a part of the home crops; May, who married Otis Washburn, but resides with her parents and has three children, Gladys, Thomas and Cecil; Lulu, the wife of Oliver Sharon, of Newton, Scott County; and Ada Belle, the wife of O. T. Sharon, operating a part of the Leach farm, who has two children,—Selma and Dorsie.

LLOYD ELMORE FOSTER. Though not one of the older residents of Hopkinsville, Lloyd Elmore Foster is widely known over that section of Kentucky, partly on account of his business record but especially as an educator. His name was on the state democratic ticket in 1919 as candidate for state superintendent of public instruction. For several years he has been the business manager of the Christian Advocate in the Christian County as county superintendent, and was recently made secretary of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Foster was born at Swannanoa, North Carolina, July 25, 1883, in the same locality where his father, Ben F. Foster, spent his life. The Fosters were of English ancestry and were Colonial settlers in North Carolina. His grandfather, Frank Foster, was born in that state in 1823, and for many years was a farmer near Beaver Dam, where he died in 1893. Ben F. Foster, father of the Kentucky educator, was born in 1844 and died in 1909, having spent practically all the years of his life at Swannanoa. He left that community when a youth to serve the last year of the war in the Confederate Army. He was a farmer, a democrat and a member of the Baptist Church. The maiden name of his wife was Henrietta White, who was born in 1845 and died in 1888, and Swannanoa was her life-long residence. Their children were six in number: John, a farmer at Greer, South Carolina; Nora, unmarried, living at Swannanoa; Georgia, who died unmarried at the age of twenty-two; Lloyd Elmore; Chalmers, a farmer at Swannanoa; and Jerome, a representative of the Armour Packing Company at Jacksonville, Florida.

Lloyd Elmore Foster attended the rural schools of Buncombe County, North Carolina, acquired his high school training in the "Farm School" of that county, and after a varied experience as farmer and otherwise he entered Maryville College at Maryville, Tennessee, and graduated with the A. B. degree in 1907. In 1910 the same institution conferred upon him the Master of Arts degree. While in college he made some reputation as an athlete and during the summer of 1907 played professional baseball with the team of Johnson City, Tennessee, playing the left field position and doing some of the heaviest hitting in that particular minor league that season. For one year Mr. Foster was employed by the S. A. Lynch & Company grocery house of Asheville, North Carolina, and then, in 1908, came to Hopkinsville as professor of history and Latin in McLean College. He was one of the faculty of that institution until 1913, in which year he was elected county superintendent of schools for Christian County, beginning his term of office in January of the following year. Being re-elected for a second four-year term, beginning in January 1917, his responsibilities were very heavy, involving supervision of 130 schools, a staff of 150 teachers, and an enrollment of 7,000 scholars. His offices were in the Court House at Hopkinsville. In August, 1920, he resigned his position as superintendent of schools and accepted the position of secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, which position he now holds.

Mr. Foster is a democrat, is a member of the Board of Stewards of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is active in the Christian County and State Teachers' Association, and is a member of the Travelers Protective Associations, Evergreen Lodge No. 38, Knights of Pythias, and among other business interests is vice president of the Coward-Foster Motor Company of Hopkinsville.

He owns a comfortable modern home on East Ninth Street. Mr. Foster married at Maryville, Tennessee, in 1908, Miss Minnie McGinley, daughter of Joseph and Fidelia (McConnell) McGinley, residents of Maryville, her father being a retired farmer. Mrs. Foster took her public career in the Maryville College. Their children were born two children, Fidelia Mary on September 28, 1915, and Lloyd E., Jr., September 20, 1917.

The Winchester Sun, a six- and eight-page, seven column democratic daily newspaper, edited and published by C. C. Robbins at Winchester, Kentucky, was, in its infancy, called the Smooth Coon, assuming its present name in 1879, when Mr. Robbins purchased it from Miss Belle Beckman and became its owner. Shortly thereafter John E. Garner became associated with Mr. Quisenberry, but in 1881 they sold out to Will Adams. The latter was succeeded by John L. Bosley and Major Kinsey Hampton, and upon the latter's retirement it was owned by Mr. Bosley, J. J. Adams and J. R. Broadhurst, the last-named of whom is still connected with the paper.

Judge J. Dell Mitchell owned the paper for a short time in the '90s, his successor being R. R. Perry, who consolidated it with the Sentinel, as the Sun-Sentinel, until 1908. At that time it was a Republican sheet. In 1908 it was made a daily, the Sun, with W. A. Beatty as president of the company and editor. In April, 1912, it was purchased by Capt. Lucien Beckman and C. C. Robbins and became independent, but in the same year, November 12, Mr. Robbins purchased the interest of Mr. Beckman. Mr. Robbins changed it to a democratic paper, discontinuing the Sun-Sentinel with its first issue, but carrying out the Sun-Sentinel's subscription list on the daily. It has never failed to stanchly support the principles of the democratic party, in addition to advocating all movements helpful to the community. The Sun was one of the first to espouse the commission form of city government for Winchester and circulate the petition, its support thereof being one of the main factors in its acceptance. Better roads and improved conditions of life have a great road. The roads on the Mt. Sterling and Lexington Roads have also come as a result of its persistent agitation, miles of paved streets and more miles in course of construction testifying effectively to its power for good. The main purpose of the Sun is that of a local newspaper and one that can be, and is, read in almost every home in the city, with a circulation of approximately 3,800. This is also the Sun-Sentinel's circulation. Its circulation has more than quadrupled under its present management, and this result has been obtained without the use of contests or other demoralizing influences.

C. C. Robbins was born at Little Rock, Bourbon County, Kentucky, September 9, 1835, a son of a farmer, Demillion L. Robbins, who died in 1911, at the age of fifty-four years. His father, Laban Landon Robbins, was born in Indiana. He was educated in local schools, (built in 1820), in 1829, being a son of John Robbins, the pioneer settler of the family in Kentucky. Laban L. Robbins spent his life on the farm and died at the age of seventy-seven years, in 1900.

The early education of C. C. Robbins was secured under the tuturship of Prof. E. M. Costello, a noted educator. Later he took a classical and business course at North Middletown, and this was supplemented by a course in stenography. In 1900 he became stenographer for the general yardmaster of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad at Handley, West Virginia, whence he came in 1910 to Winchester to the office of the agent of the Chesapeake & Ohio and Louisville and Nashville Railroads. The weather he encountered in that mother role was such that he spent a month or more seeking for work, his work necessitating much tramping through deep snows, and he soon gave up his position and accepted one in the business department of the Sun, with no idea or expectation of becoming a newspaper man. The life grasped him, however, and journalism has since held him fast. In it he has achieved a noteworthy success.

Mr. Robbins married Miss Mae Belle Bramblett of Bourbon County, Kentucky. Fraternally he is a Pythian and Mason, and belongs to the Knights Templar and the Mystic Shrine.

Among the achievements of the Sun under the present management was the securing of the adoption of the Commission Form of Government for Winchester, in which it took the initiative. The Commission Form was used by Shan Jones on front for that old and respected city in May of 1912, with George E. Tomlinson as Mayor. Messrs. N. A. Powell, W. B. Lindsey, J. T. Stokely and J. W. Crook, as Commissioners, the candidates who were supported and named as the Sun ticket during the election.

Roy Burgess Speck was born at Bowling Green, Kentucky, on December 8, 1895, at which place he was reared and educated, graduating from the public schools in 1910, and academic department of Ogden College in 1912, and receiving his A. B. degree from that college in 1915. Immediately thereafter he became connected with the Times Journal Publishing Company as advertising manager.

In June, 1916, he, as a private, went to the Mexican border with the Third Kentucky Infantry and was mustered out as a sergeant in March, 1917. A few days later, having been commissioned second lieutenant, he was called back into the service and was in command of a company of infantry doing railroad guard duty when war with Germany was declared. Later he went with the Kentucky troops to Camp Shelby, Mississippi, and was assigned to the One Hundred and Forty-ninth Infantry. In June, 1918, he conducted a Replacement detachment overseas. There he saw service with the American and French forces and was in the One Hundred and Sixty-first Division Français being the first of the Allied forces to reach the Rhine. He was mustered out with rank of first lieutenant in March, 1919, after discharging his part in the battles of Chateau Thierry, Saint Mihiel and the Vosges.

He was elected clerk of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky in November, 1919, at twenty-three years of age, being the youngest man ever elected to a state office. He is a member of the Methodist Church, the Pdenimus Club, and is a republican politically.

His father, William Rue Speck, is a prominent attorney at Bowling Green, Kentucky, being master commissioner at present and having previously been a publisher and postmaster at that place. He is the son of Granville Elliot Speck and Martha (Norris) Speck. Granville Elliot Speck, son of Michael Speck and Mary (Fenris) Speck, was an engager in his father’s business of cotton gins and Senator business and later was a farmer, merchant and coal operator; at present he is living in retirement upon one of his farms at Richardville, Kentucky. He is a Mason, having served as past master, a Baptist, and a republican, but was elected magistrate in a democratic district in 1871, re-elected in 1875, and again in 1882. In 1877 he was elected to the House of Representatives, being the only republican ever elected from this district, and later became a member of the State Board of Equalization. His father was a farmer and stock dealer, and politically he was an old line Whig and for many years was magistrate of his native county. At the beginning of the Civil war in 1861, he abandoned his business in Charleston, South Carolina, went North and joined the Federal Army; he was captured by the Confederate forces and died a prisoner in Castle Thunder, at Richmond, Virginia, in 1863. Granville Speck’s brother, John Norris Speck, was a Confederate Army, serving until his capture in 1864; he died of fever in a Federal prison in the same year. His grandfather, Jacob Speck, Jr., was born in North Carolina in 1775, and died in Clinton County, Kentucky, in 1862; he served in the War of 1812. His great-grandfather, a native of Germany, served in the Continental Army under General Gates and fell at the battle of Chancellorsville.

Martha (Norris) Speck is the daughter of William Norris and Mary (Jones) Norris; both her paternal and maternal grandfathers, Jerry Norris and Abram Jones, were native Virginians and Revolutionary soldiers.

Rev. James Sanderlin Chandler, deceased, was a Methodist minister, farmer and tobacco merchant, in which business he lost his fortune. He was eight times elected president of the Tennessee Conference and for a number of years was grand prelate of the Masonic lodge of Kentucky. He was the son of Rev. Jordon Chandler of South Carolina and Tennessee, who was a Confederate minister, and Elizabeth Llewellyn Avery, the daughter of George Avery of Virginia and Tennessee. George Avery was a Revolutionary soldier, a close friend of George Washington, and one of the Tennessee pioneers to whom a monument now standing in the capitol grounds at Nashville, Tennessee was erected; his wife was Elizabeth (Allen) Avery of Virginia and Tennessee, whose grandfather first founded Sugg’s Creek in Wilson County, Tennessee, and gave name to that stream. The paternal grandparents of Rev. James S. Chandler were Josiah Chandler, of English extraction, and Sarah (Eddings) Chandler, who were among the first settlers of South Carolina and later moved to Middle Tennessee. Two brothers of James S. Chandler served in the Confederate Army during the Civil war: John William, deceased, physician and Confederate minister, as a line captain and Marshall Marion, physician, who since removing to Texas has served as president of the State Board of Health, as a surgeon.

Ophelia Minerva (Hines) Chandler is a daughter of Rix Hines and Mary (Tewmey) Hines. Her grandfather, William Rixey Hines, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, a Minute Man under Capt. William Richards, and later under Capt. Hugh Megaree and Gen. George Rogers Clark. He enlisted from King and Queen’s County, Virginia, and served until sometime in 1780, being severely wounded in an engagement with Indians.

James Taylor, M. D. Metcalfe County has taken distinctive rank because of the skill, learning and high character of the men who make up its roll of medical practitioners and the profession numbers among its numbers in this county those whose attainments are far beyond the average. Undoubtedly in this class is found Dr. James Taylor, of Edmonton, who had been engaged in practice at this place only three years, but who, during this time, has fully lived up to the reputation that preceded him from his former field of practice, East Fork.

Dr. Taylor belongs to an old and honored family of Kentucky, and was born at East Fork, Metcalfe County, October 12, 1877, a son of Dr. Ben F. and Mattie J. (Pendleton) Taylor. His great-grandfather, the pioneer of the family into Kentucky, was the Rev.
George W. Taylor, a native of North Carolina and an early minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Kentucky, who preached in Adair County for more than fifty years and who for forty-six years was presiding elder of the Metcalfe Conference. The grandson of Doctor Taylor, George M. Taylor, was born in Adair County, and as a young man adopted the vocation of farming, which he followed throughout his life in the vicinity of Glenville, that county. He was a man of worth, stability and good business sense, and when he died, in 1890, his community lost one of its prosperous agriculturists and public-spirited citizens. He married Matilda Jones, who was born near Glennville, and who died in the same locality.

Dr. Benjamin Franklin Taylor, father of Dr. James Taylor, was born in 1853, in Adair County, Kentucky, where he was reared and received his early education in the public schools. He was brought up as a farmer's son, but early showed a predilection for the medical profession and accordingly was allowed to prosecute his studies at the University of Louisville, from which institution he was duly graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Doctor Taylor came to Metcalfe County from Adair County in 1871 and established himself in East Fork, where, when only nineteen years of age, he commenced the practice of his profession. At first he experienced difficulty in gaining a foothold in his profession because of his extreme youth, but gradually he gained the confidence of the people by the skill with which he performed his services. His practice grew to such an extent that for many years he was the leading physician of Metcalfe County. In the evening of his life he removed to Columbia, Kentucky, where he died August 26, 1916. He was sincerely mourned, as there were many who held him in the warmest affection and regard. Doctor Taylor was a republican in politics and a strong and faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He married Martin, who was born in 1854, at East Fork, and who survives her husband and makes her home with her son, James, at Edmonton, he being the only child of the union.

James Taylor acquired his preliminary educational training in the rural schools of Metcalfe County, and even as a lad showed that he had inherited his father's love for the medical profession. During his adolescence he studied under his father, and with this preparation eventually matriculated at the Hospital College of Medicine, at Louisville, in 1896. He was duly graduated from that institution June 30, 1898, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, after a successful college course, and in that year established himself at East Fork, where he became associated with his father, and where, like the elder man, he was able to win the esteem and confidence of the locality. For twenty years he moved among the people, ministering to their ills and acting not only as physician, but also as counselor and friend, and maintained his home in that community until 1918, when he came to Edmonton. Here he opened offices in the Peoples Bank Building, and at this time has a large and lucrative general medical and surgical practice among the best people of the county seat. In his professional labors he has shown himself familiar with not only the old methods but with the new that are constantly being discovered and tested. His professional service has ever been discharged with a conscientious sense of professional obligation, always remembering that he belongs to a body set apart, one that more than any other is helpful to humanity.

Doctor Taylor is the owner of a pleasant and comfortable residence on College Hill, just outside of Edmonton, in addition to which he had two dwellings and a business building at East Fork and two farms in Metcalfe County which aggregate 250 acres and on which he has modern improvements. These properties are rented and operated by tenants. He is a director and stockholder in the Peoples National Bank of Edmonton and has several other connections. As a man of enlightened understanding and civic pride, he takes an interest in all worthy public movements, but is no politician, satisfying himself in a political way by casting his vote for the republican candidates and upholding the principles of that party. During the World war period, he took an active part in all war activities, and assisted in all the drives for various purposes, also buying bonds and war savings stamps and contributing to the several organizations to the line interest in means of revolving commissions in the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Professionally, Doctor Taylor holds membership in the Metcalfe County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and occupies a high position in the esteem and regard of his fellow practitioners.

On December 27, 1899, at Gradyville, Adair County, Kentucky, Doctor Taylor was united in marriage with Miss Myrtle M. Kelner, who was born in Adair County, a daughter of Evan T. and Sarah C. (Finn) Kelner, both of whom are deceased, Mr. Kelner having been an agriculturist and a Union veteran of the War between the States. Doctor and Mrs. Taylor have no children.

HON. JOHN MARTIN. Broad-minded and sober of judgment, some men possess characters that create respect and invite intercourse, so that in their passage through life they win the confidence and esteem of their associates and those with whom they come into contact. When these characteristics are combined with an appreciation of constructive community interests and the power to develop their own capabilities to the highest possible degree of efficiency, success along any line is certain, and the locality in which the beneficiary practices prospers. In the person of the Hon. John Martin, Metcalfe County has been the community that has advanced because of his abilities and labors. First a school teacher and later a farmer, of more recent years he has been the incumbent of public positions, and as county judge of Metcalfe County, as in other capacities, he had contributed to the locality's development and advancement in several ways.

Judge Martin was born near Point Burnside, Pulaski County, Kentucky, December 20, 1841, a son of Benjamin and Sarah (Correll) Martin. The family was founded in Kentucky by the great-grandfather of Judge Martin, who brought his family from North Carolina at an early day. Not being familiar with land values, this pioneer passed by the rich bottom lands near Point Burnside, and cut his way with axes through the cane, settling on comparatively poor land near the present city of Pulaski, Pulaski County, where he passed the remainder of his life. His son, John Martin, the grandfather of Judge Martin, was born in North Carolina, and was but a youth when he accompanied the family to Pulaski County, where he passed the remaining years of his life as an agriculturist.

Benjamin Martin was born August 2, 1826, in Pulaski County, Kentucky, where he was reared, educated and married, and as a young man engaged in teaching school, a vocation which he followed for some years. Later he engaged in farming at Point Burnside, and served in the capacity of deputy sheriff of Pulaski County, and when the War between the States came on enlisted, in 1861, in the Union Army, becoming a private in the Twelfth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Infantry. Through bravery and faithful performance of duty he rose to the rank of first lieutenant, and in 1863 was disabled for further service and received his honorable discharge. Returning to Pulaski County, he was engaged in farming until 1866, in which year he came to Metcalfe County and settled on a farm three miles south of Edmonton, to which he subse-
James Irving Harlan, president of the Harlan Lumber Company of Barlow, is one of the leading young business men of his city, and his company is the largest concern of its kind in Ballard County. He possesses those sterling characteristics which led to his selection as the executive head of his company, and his management of its affairs prove the wisdom of the choice of his associates. Mr. Harlan was born at Scottsville, Allen County, Kentucky, December 25, 1890, a son of Rev. W. Harlan, and grandson of Rev. Judge Gayland Harlan. The Harlan family is one of the old-established ones of this country, and was founded in Virginia by representatives from England, who settled there before the Revolution. Virginia members of the family went into Kentucky at a very early day, and it was at Scottsville that Rev. Judge Gayland Harlan was born in 1842, and he died there in 1890, having spent his entire life in that community. A republican, he was elected on his party ticket county judge of Allen county. He was also a minister of the Baptist Church and preached all over Allen County, and as an attorney, jurist and clergyman he was a well known figure of his day. During the war between the North and the South he espoused the cause of the North and served as captain of a company of cavalry in the Union Army. After the close of the war he was made a United States marshal, and served in that capacity for many years with dignified capability. Judge Harlan married Missie Bridges, who was born at Scottsville, Kentucky, in 1844, and they became the parents of the following children: Rev. W. Harlan, who was the eldest; Laura, who married George Pitchford, a lumber dealer, lives at Austin, Texas; Dora, who married Patrick Huyfines, died at Monterey, Tennessee, in 1910, but her husband survives. Miss Jeffie, who married Smithie Huret; Mary, who married Mills Hughes, a farmer, now deceased, and they live at Scottsville, Kentucky; Samuel, who is foreman of a lumber yard, lives at Austin, Texas; Maggie, who married Custer Dalton, a lumber dealer, lives at Winchester, Tennessee; Fletcher, who is a painter and decorator, lives at Monterey, Tennessee; Fred, who is a painter and decorator, lives at Scottsville, Kentucky.

Rev. W. Harlan was born at Scottsville, Kentucky, in 1867, and died at Barlow, Kentucky, February 17, 1919, after a blameless and useful life. He was graduated from the Scottsville High School, the Baptist Seminary at Louisville, Kentucky, and the State Normal School of Bowling Green, Kentucky. His life was spent in the ministry of the Baptist Church, and for about ten years he was pastor of the First Baptist Church of Barlow, and then stationed at different points in Warren and Barren counties, Kentucky. In 1910 he came to Ballard County and for four years was pastor of the First Baptist Church of Barlow and then went to Southern Illinois. In 1917 he retired from the ministry and returned to Barlow. A republican, he served as county judge of Allen County for one term. He was a Mason.

Rev. W. Harlan was married to Neely McReynolds, who was born at Scottsville, Kentucky, in 1874. The ceremony took place in 1888 at Scottsville, where all of their children were born. Mrs. Harlan survives her husband and continues to reside at Barlow. She and her husband became the parents of the following children: Hubert E., who is now deceased, was a successful tobacconist of Barlow. He married Vera Rogers, and they have one child, Hubert E., born in 1917. James Irving was the second in order of birth. Roy E., who was born December 25, 1892, attended the rural schools of Allen County, the Bowling Green High School, and is now a member of the Harlan Lumber Company of Barlow. He married Ethel May Wells, a daughter of T. R. and Esa (Johnson) Wells, farming people of Ballard County, and has one child, Roy E., Jr., born October 13, 1916. Blonville E., who was born May 10, 1895, attended the Allen County rural schools and the Bowling Green High School, and is now a resident of Barlow and foreman of the Harlan Lumber Company. During the great war he enlisted in the Field Artillery branch of the United States service, April 28, 1918, and was sent to Camp Zenas Smith, Kentucky, where he became a sergeant prior to his being mustered out January 11, 1919. He is unmarried.

James Irving Harlan went to school in Allen County and then took a commercial course in the Bowling Green Business University at Bowling Green, Kentucky, from which he graduated in 1909. For the subsequent year he was a bookkeeper for a lumber company at Benoit, Mississippi, and then, in 1910, came to Barlow and was bookkeeper for the T. W. Girard Lumber Company for a year. Mr. Harlan then formed a partnership with a Mr. Girard, and on June 27, 1916, bought out the interest of his associates. This business is now operated under the name of the Harlan Lumber Company, the officers being as follows: James I. Harlan; Roy E. Harlan, vice president; and B. E. Harlan, secretary and treasurer. The yard and offices are located in the middle of the city of Barlow. In addition to lumber interests Mr. Harlan owns a modern residence on Depot Street, which is one of the finest in Barlow, and is interested in a 150-acre farm in Ballard County.

In 1914 Mr. Harlan was married at Barlow to Mrs. Carrie (Lancaster) Evans, who was a native of Tennessee, and she died in the fall of 1917, at Barlow, leaving no issue. In 1919 Mr. Harlan was married to Miss Minnie May Moore at Barlow. She is a daughter of Judge J. S. and Maude (Nichols) Moore, residents of Barlow, Mr. Moore being a retired farmer. Mr. Harlan is a Republican. He is a member of the First Baptist Church of Barlow, and is now serving it as treasurer. A Mason, he belongs to Hazelwood Lodge No. 486, A. F. and A. M., and Barlow Chapter, O. E. O. O. He is also a member of Barlow Lodge J. O. O. F., and Barlow Camp, No. 11722, M. W. A. Mr. Harlan is proud of his family and the fact that he can trace his ancestry back through a long line of honorable American citizens of the highest type. It is gratifying to him to realize the good done by both his father and grandfather, and it is his aim to so govern his own life as to add prestige to the name and be of use to his community.

John William Clark. In point of productiveness one of the best farms in Fayette County is the old Clark homestead, two miles south of Lexington. While it is a splendid dairy, stock and general farm, it also has many other associations to dignify it among the notable properties in this famous Blue Grass region. It has been the home of at least four men bearing the name of John William Clark. It is one of the very few family properties in Kentucky that has continued without change of title in a single family. Even in the settlement of the estate there has never been the formality of sale.

The first John William Clark came from Ireland direct to Kentucky and acquired land by Colonial grant. He was one of the early settlers around Lexington, developed his land and lived there until his death which occurred in 1858. John William Clark II, always lived on the old farm and died at the age of eighty-two. John William Clark II was greatly esteemed for his probity and business judgment, and was frequently called upon to settle or appraise estates. He was a democrat and a Presbyterian. John William Clark II erected the present fine old home on the farm in 1853. About the time the house was built he also caused to be set out some thirty or forty fine trees around the buildings. Most of these grew and are standing today, making a grove of evergreens that give pleasing distinction to the farm. John William Clark II married Louisa Norton, of Lexington, and she died at the age of sixty-five.

John William Clark III was born August 31, 1843, and in the same yard the old home was erected some ten years later. His entire life was devoted to the farm and he was a real leader in community affairs, though he never consented to run for office. He is reared a Presbyterian but for many years affiliated with the Christian denomination. He was the only son of his parents. He had seven sisters, five of whom reached mature years: Anna Maria, who died young; Henrietta, who died at the age of thirty-five; Mary Hamilton, who became the wife of Colonel Sanders D. Bruce, a distinguished authority on the thoroughbred industry and who compiled the American Stud Book, and lived in New York; Kittle, who died unmarried at the age of sixty-five; and Margaret, who was married to William Rogers, of Pana, Illinois, and died at the old homestead in Kentucky.

On October 3, 1878, John William Clark III married Lillian Berry, of the well known Berry family of Fayette County. She is a daughter of William and Ellen E. (Smith) Berry. To their marriage were born four children: John William Clark IV a hardware merchant at Lexington, who married Madge Reynolds, of Kirksville, Missouri, and their two children are John William V. and Anne Reynolds. The second of the children is Berry Clark. Mrs. Mary Bruce Ware is the third child and she lives on the old homestead "Auvergne" with her mother, her brother Berry Clark and her son John Clark Ware. Lawrence Hamilton Clark who was an expert mechanic for the International Harvester Company, lived at Lexington, and died July 24, 1918, at the age of twenty-nine. He married Ellen Kennedy, of Kansas, who survives him, the mother of one daughter, Lillian Berry Clark. Although the Clark men are named John, they have always been called Jack.

Barry Clark, residing during the fourth generation of the family in Fayette County, is unmarried and during the life of his father took charge of the estate and has given it much of its distinctive character as a dairy and stock farm. The farm comprises 275 acres. Barry Clark responded to the call of patriotism during the World War and left nothing undone to increase the productiveness of this farm as a source of food supplies. The family are all members of the Christian Church and Mr. Clark lives with his mother and his only sister Mrs. Mary Bruce Ware.

Frank Rives began the practice of law at Hopkinsville just twenty-five years ago. He early established his reputation and prestige as an able attorney, has handled much of the prominent litigation in the courts of his district, and has also been prominent in a political way. He is best known over the state at large because of his work as a state court judge. He holds a present, and this is the second term he has served in the State Senate.

Mr. Rives was born in Montgomery County, Tennessee, April 6, 1871. He comes of a distinguished Virginia branch of the Rives family, one of whose members was William Cabell Rives. His grandfather, Robert Rives, was born in Warren County, North Carolina, in 1800, and early in the nineteenth century came with his family and established a home in Montgomery County where he died in 1885. R. F. Rives, father of the Hopkinsville lawyer, was born in Montgomery County, Tennessee, in 1837, and lived there as a farmer until 1874, when he removed to Christian County, Kentucky. He still lives on his homestead seven miles south of Hopkinsville, and in that section of Christian County, conceded to be one of the richest agricultural districts in the state, he has what is acknowledged to be one of the largest and most valuable farms. In his eightieth year, in 1917, he retired and turned over the burdens of farming to younger shoulders. R. F. Rives has always been a democrat, has been prominent in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is one of the surviving Confederate veterans. He was all through the war, served as a cavalryman under Morgan and Forrest, was at the battles of Chickamauga and Lookout Mountain, and afterward with the armies under General Joe Johnston during the retreat. He married General Sherman, R. F. Rives married for his first wife Isabella Virginia Pollard, who was born in Amelia County, Virginia, in 1836 and died in Christian County, Kentucky, in 1875. She was the mother of four children: R. H. Rives, a farmer living six miles south of Hopkinsville; Frank; Florence N., wife of Rev. W. B. Kendall, pastor of the First Baptist Church at Paris, Texas; and George F., a farmer Bect west of Hopkinsville. His second marriage R. F. Rives married Miss Sallie A. Moore, who was born in Humphreys County, Tennessee, in 1843. To this marriage were also born four children: Mary Bell, died at San Antonio, Texas, in 1918, while her husband, Dr. J. L. Barker, was in the Army Medical Corps, his permanent home and place of practice being at Pembroke, Kentucky; Jordan M. is a farmer living five miles north of Hopkinsville; the land is the wife of John Helms, a cotton broker at Terrell, Texas; and John L. is a farmer seven miles south of Hopkinsville.

It was in that home community south of Hopkinsville that Frank Rives spent his boyhood and early youth. He attended the rural schools there, also the South Kentucky College at Hopkinsville, and completed his literary and professional education in Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee. He was a student of the literary department for a year, and in February, 1895, graduated with the L.L.B. degree. He was president of his senior class in the University and a member of the Kappa Sigma college fraternity. Mr. Rives began the practice of law at Hopkinsville in 1895, and a few years were sufficient to establish his reputation as a very capable and hard working lawyer who exercised great care in the discharge of all interests entrusted to his charge. In addition to being a successful lawyer he has become an extensive land owner, having 1,600 acres of farm lands in Christian County, also 660 acres of farming land on the Texas Gulf coast in Jim Wells and McMullen counties, and another tract of thirty acres in Volusia County, Florida.

Mr. Rives, for six years was master commissioner of the Christian County Circuit Court. He was first elected a member of the State Senate in the fall of 1915, representing Christian and Hopkins counties. He served the regular term of four years, during the sessions of 1906 and 1908, and was a member of the rules committee in both sessions, chairman of the charitable institutions committee in the session of 1908, and in that session was also on the sub-committee for the appointment of committees. In 1908 he led the fight on the County Unit Prohibition Bill. While he was not personally credited with the introduction of many bills, he was instrumental in having passed more amendments than any of his colleagues. In the fall of 1917 Mr. Rives was again returned to the Senate for the session of 1918 and 1920. He served on the rules, roads, charitable institutions and other committees and was paid high commendation by the leaders for the opposition of being the most valuable man on the floor of the Senate. During his second term his record has not been so much characterized by new legislation as by the influence he has exercised in preventing unnecessary bills, and that has been an invaluable service to the entire state.

Senator Rives was for many years president of the Library Board of Hopkinsville, and was responsible for keeping the question of an appropriate library building before the people and maintaining the progressive spirit of the library as an institution. Ever since the years of young manhood he has been a steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is a member of the State Bar Association and the American Bar Association, and is one of the prominent lawyers of Kentucky today.

In December, 1898, at Lebanon, Tennessee, Mr. Rives married Miss Emma Blanton, who was born in Ten- nessee, a daughter of W. B. and Mrs. (Peebles) Blanton. Her father was an merchant and stock raiser at Lebanon. Mrs. Rives, who died at Hopkinsville in September, 1903, was liberally educated, attended a Young Ladies' Seminary at Lebanon and was a teacher at Lebanon for three years before her marriage. In May, 1908, at Hopkinsville, Senator Rives married Mrs. Sarah (McDaniel) Richards. Her first husband was the late J. Baily Richards, a merchant who died at Hopkinsville. His children were Mr. and Mrs. Richard McDaniel, both deceased.

HARRISON LEE, the present County Tax Commissioner of Franklin County, has lived most of his life in and around Frankfort and has had a busy career as a farmer, a business man and public official.

He was born in the town of Shelbyville, Green-river County, Kentucky, on the 22nd of September, 1876. His paternal ancestors were English and colonial settlers in Virginia. His father, T. L. Lee, was born at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1852, but grew up and married near Greenville, Ten- nessee, was a farmer there and also served as deputy sheriff. In 1882 he removed to Frankfort County, Ken- tucky, and for nearly forty years has been a farmer in the vicinity of Peaks Mill in Frankfort County. He served four years as a constable of the county, was a stanch democrat, and has always given of his time and means in the support of the Christian Church. He is affiliated with the Odd Fellows fraternity. T. L. Lee married Ursula Susong, who was born near Greene-ville, Tennessee, in 1860. Harrison was the oldest of their children; Sophronia is the wife of Forest Carter, a farmer at Simpsonville, Kentucky; Mollie, wife of W. F. Rambo, a carpenter and builder at Thornhill, Alice, wife of W. E. Geogary, a farmer at Peaks Mill; Bessie, wife of H. H. Church, a farmer at Peaks Mill; Tabitha, wife of Clarence Jordan, a farmer at Wood-lake in Franklin County; Laura, wife of Wallace Gibson, a farmer at Monterey, Owen County; Birt, a farmer at Switzer in Franklin County; John, a farmer, is living with his parents; Ernest, a farmer at Peaks Mill; Miss Matt and Herbert, both at home; and Anna, the youngest and thirteenth child, wife of John Wise, a farmer at Peaks Mill.

Harrison Lee was six years of age when brought to Frankfort County, attended the rural schools in this section of Kentucky, and lived on his father's farm and shared its duties until he was nearly twenty-four. After that he took up farming on his own account and has found many interests to vary his vocational experience. Beginning in 1908 he served as county assessor four years. He also had a general store at Peaks Mill until 1912, following which he spent four years with the Globe Clothing Company and for one year covered Kentucky as a traveling salesman for a Chicago shoe house. He was then elected tax commissioner, beginning his term of four years in January, 1918. His offices are in the Court House at Frankfort. Mr. Lee and family reside at Thornhill, where he has a modern home. He has sold much of his realty property, though he still has some parcels of real estate in Frankfort. Mr. Lee is a democrat, a member of the Christian Church, is active in the Frankfort Chamber of Commerce and was an investor and active supporter of all the patriotic and war causes during the conflict with Germany. Fra- ternally he is affiliated with Franklin Lodge No. 330 of the Elks; Frankfort Lodge No. 28, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Frankfort Tribe of the Improved Order of Red Men; Junior Order United American Mechanics; Frankfort Camp Modern Woodmen of America; and is a member of the Indiana Indiana Device Traders Protective Association.

At Peaks Mill in 1902 Mr. Lee married Miss Anna Will Stafford, daughter of Suter and Bettie (Hampson) Stafford, well known farming people in that section of Franklin County. Mr. and Mrs. Lee have one daughter, Mary Saffell, born in 1903. Mr. Lee's grandfather, Richard Lee who is a graduate of Business Course at Smith College, was a native of Virginia and in early life lived at St. Marys, Maryland. In 1866 he married Louise Dempsey. He was a merchant at Spartanburg, South Carolina, until he moved to Paducah. He was a merchant at Spartanburg up to the time of the Civil War, when he enlisted in the Confederate Army and was killed at Vicksburg. Mississippi. He was in the Battle of Bull Run and other battles.

William Lillard Turk was born at Bardwell, September 26, 1893, a son of W. R. Turk, who was born in 1855, of the old Bardwell family in Kentucky, which family of partial French and Spanish bloods, and it occurred at Bardwell, December 25, 1916. He was brought to that part of Ballard County which is now Carlisle County in 1855, his parents settling here and becoming valuable citizens of this region. W. R. Turk was reared, educated and married in Ballard County, and following the latter event established himself at Bardwell, where he became the pioneer merchant of the city. His business developed and he expanded his operations to include several line of business, at the time of his death he was easily one of the most prominent men of the county. W. R. Turk was united in marriage with Olivia Emeline Mabry, who was born in what is now Carlisle County, but was then included in Ballard County, in 1866, and died July 21, 1914. Their children were as follows: Addye Katherine, who married Thomas Herbert Hobbs, a farm owner, and lives in Bardwell, Tennessee, who died November 21, 1900, unmarried; William L., who was third in order of birth; Emma Lucile, twin sister of William Lillard, married Clarence A. Harper, a real estate broker, and lives at Flint, Michigan, and Malcolm K., who is a traveling salesman and lives at Wickliffe, Kentucky.

William L. Turk attended the public schools of Bardwell, and then took up preparatory work in the Murphysboro, South Carolina, public schools, for a period of two years. Having in this way been prepared for college he entered Union University at Jackson, Tennessee, but after a year's study left school, being then only fourteen years of age. He entered his father's general mercantile business, and remained with him until the latter's death in 1916. Mr. Turk then began operating Carlisle County farm lands, and is now conducting 300 acres, carrying on a general farming and store business. He is vice-president of the Bardwell Deposit Bank, in which the other members of the Turk family are also interested, and which his father and J. W. Turk founded a number of years ago. Mr. Turk is a director and stockholder of the Wilson-Butts Wholesale Grocery Company of Paducah, Kentucky.

On October 31, 1915, Mr. Turk was married at Paducah, Kentucky, to Miss Mary Rebecca Rutherford, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Rutherford, of Bardwell, although Mr. Rutherford has extensive farming interests in Carlisle County. Mr. and Mrs. Turk have one daughter, Frances La Vanche Turk, who was born November 27, 1916.

During the great war Mr. Turk entered service as a yeoman in the United States Navy, and was sent to the Great Lakes Training School at Chicago, Illinois. He was mustered out of the service December 12, 1918, and returned to Bardwell and resumed his ordinary occupations.

William A. Hill numbered among the alert young business men of McCracken County who have forged rapidly to the front, William A. Hill has found congenial employment for his talents and a recognition of his ability as secretary and general manager of the Even Light Company of Paducah. He is a native son of the county, for he was born within its confines on August 11, 1890. The Hill family originated in Scotland, but members of it came to the American Colonies long prior to the War for Independence, and took part, through successive generations, in the great work of developing a mighty nation from a few scattered settlements along the Atlantic coast.

The grandfather of William A. Hill, also named William Hill, was born in 1833, and became one of the early settlers of Frankfort, Kentucky, where he died in 1902. During the many years he resided there he became very prominent and was connected with the administrative office of the state, and never, as long as he lived, failed to participate actively in the affairs of the democratic party. He married a Miss McGruder. The name was originally spelled McGregor, and she was a direct descendant of Robert McGregor of Scotland.

William A. Hill is a son of Henry V. Hill, who was born near Frankfort, Kentucky, in 1865, and there reared and educated. He came to McCracken County before his marriage, and has developed into one of the prosperous agriculturists of this section. The democratic party has always received his support, and during 1914, 1915, 1916 and 1917, he served as deputy sheriff which is a much more useful position and he is a consistent and earnest member of the Christian Church. In his fraternal relations he maintains membership with the Odd Fellows. For five years he served in the internal revenue department of the United States Government as a whisky gauger, and during that period resided at Louisville, Kentucky, but at the expiration of that time, returned to McCracken. His wife was Miss Kate Hughes, and she was born in McCracken, County, Kentucky, in 1871. Their children are as follows: William A., who is the eldest born; Edgar Hughes, who is on the home farm; Lonnie Steward, who is also on the home farm; Sarah Louise, who married a Mr. Worthington, a farmer of Ballard County, Kentucky; and James, who is also on the home farm.

William A. Hill attended the schools of McCracken County, and Jasper College of Jasper, Indiana, and was graduated from the latter institution of learning in 1912. For the subsequent three years he was deputy city clerk of Paducah, and for the next twelve months was with the Billings Printing Company. Desiring to have a business of his own, Mr. Hill then established himself as a grocer at Woodville, McCracken County, and remained there until he sold his store in 1917. At that time he became associated with the Even Light Company of Paducah as general manager, and when this concern was incorporated in October, 1919, as the Even Light Company, he continued with it as secretary and general manager, his associates being R. G. Fisher, president; T. C. Allen, vice president, and Hunter Martin, treasurer. The plant and offices are located at 539 South Third Street. This company manufactures lighting devices for Ford automobiles, and ships its product all over the United States. Employ- ment was given to his former associates. His political views of his forefathers are his, and he never fails to give his support to the democratic party. Mr. Hill belongs to the Roman Catholic Church.

In 1915 Mr. Hill was married at Paducah to Miss Virginia Gilbert, a daughter of Lee and Katie (Bonds) Gilbert. Mr. Gilbert is now deceased, having been first a school-teacher of McCracken County, and later a farmer, but his widow survives him and still lives in the county, on the Gilbert homestead. Mrs. Hill was graduated from the Paducah High School, and is a lady who presides over the family residence at 907 Clark Street, with capable efficiency, and there both she and Mr. Hill entertain their many friends with delightful hospitality. Mr. and Mrs. Hill have three little children, namely: Gilbert, who was born on February 22, 1916; Virgil Leander, who was born in October, 1917; and Helen Kate, who was born in May, 1920. A man who fully understands his business, Mr. Hill has been able to develop his concern until it is one of the leading ones of its kind in the state, and the volume of trade is showing a healthy and steady increase annually.

W. LOGAN WOOD. During his administration at the postoffice at Danville, the judicial center of Boyle County, Mr. Wood was eminently successful. He was born on his father's farm in Boyle County, on the 4th of October, 1870, and is a son of Thomas E. and Sarah J. (Pope) Wood, the former of whom was born in Lincoln County, Kentucky, in 1828, and the latter in Boyle County, in 1842. Thomas E. Wood devoted his active career to farm industry and to the buying and shipping of live stock, in which latter field of enterprise his dealings became of extensive order and incidentally gained to him a wide acquaintance with the Central Kentucky. For many years he shipped live stock to Cincinnati, Ohio, as well as to Lexington, Richmond and other points in Kentucky. He passed the major part of his life in Boyle County and here he and his wife were residing at the time of their decease. They became the parents of six children: W. Logan, John A., George T., Nancy E., Eugene W. and Ora P., who are deceased.

W. Logan Wood gained his early education in the public schools of Boyle and Lincoln counties. After remaining six years in Lincoln County he returned to Boyle County and in 1888 entered for two years as deputy sheriff of the former county. In Boyle County he forthwith established his home at Danville, in January, 1900, and here he held for four years the position of bookkeeper in the office of Fox & Loan, engaged in the livery business. He was then elected chief of police of the county seat, and in this office he gave a most vigorous and effective administration during the remainder of his term of office. His practical elimination of the illicit dealing in liquors in the city, and it required both courage and finances to bring about the result, as there were many clandestine dealers and not a few of the number had influential support. In the spring of 1914, largely through the influence and medium of the late and honored Senator Ollie M. James, Mr. Wood was appointed postmaster of Danville, and at the expiration of his four years' term he was reappointed for a second term of equal duration. As may readily be understood, the Danville postoffice is the most important in Boyle County, the same being an office of the second class, and its service including the operation of about ten rural mail routes. Mr. Wood resigned as postmaster, July 1, 1921, and became a candidate for sheriff of Boyle County. He has been a steady and liberal worker in his democratic party and is known as a loyal and progressive citizen.

On the 21st of October, 1903, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Wood to Miss Sara Wood Lynn, who was born in Lincoln County, on the 28th of March, 1882, and who was graduated in the Millsburg Female Institute, at Millsburg, Bourbon County. Mr. and Mrs. Wood have one child, Mary Virginia, who was born May 17, 1913.

FRANK B. CRAIG has been a factor in banking at Corinth, Kentucky, for twenty years, and at the same time has given unmistakable evidence of his public spirited attitude in every turn of public affairs and in movements affecting the welfare and patriotic dignity of the community.

Mr. Craig was born at Owenton, Kentucky, October 11, 1856. His great-grandfather was the founder of the family in Kentucky in pioneer times, coming from Virginia. The grandfather, Clement Craig, was born in Warren County, Kentucky, 1800 and spent his life as a farmer, chiefly in Scott and Gallatin counties and died in Owen County in 1882. He married Miss Twi- man, a native of southern Kentucky, who died in Gallatin County. Reuben B. Craig, father of the Corinth banker, was born in Warren County in April, 1837, grew up on a farm in Gallatin County, and in 1855 moved to Laconia, Arkansas, where for some years he was a member of the Lincoln Union. He has lived retired at Corinth since 1870 and is now at the venerable age of eighty-five. He served as postmaster of Owenton during the second administration of President Cleveland. He is a democrat, was a Confederate soldier all through the war, participating in the battle of Shiloh and other campaigns, and has been a lifelong and devoted member of the Baptist Church. Reuben B. Craig married Emma Treckel, who was born at Owenton in 1840 and died at Corinth in 1916. Frank B. Craig is the only child of his parents.

He lived at Owenton during his early life, attended school to the age of eighteen, and for the last two years of his school work he also performed the duties of assistant postmaster. He continued in that office until the end of his two terms in 1875. The following four years he was employed in a flour mill at Owenton, and acquired his first knowledge of banking in that town as a clerk in the Farmers National Bank.

The Farmers Bank of Corinth was organized in 1903 and Mr. Craig has been its first and only cashier and to a large degree has had the general executive management of this prosperous institution. The president is W. B. Dorman, and the assistant cashier is Mrs. Frank B. Craig.

Mr. Craig was secretary of all the Liberty Loan drives and local chairman of the War Savings Stamp drive and received honorable mention from the Federal Reserve Bank for the large volume of sales of certificates of indebtedness and for the record of the community in surpassing the quota in all Liberty Loan sales in the county. In 1905 he was chosen chairman of the Corinth Town Board. He is a democrat, a Baptist, is affiliated with Corinth Lodge No. 184 F. and A. M., is Past Chancellor of Corinth Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias, and a member of Hinton Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, at Hinton, Kentucky. In 1901 at Owenton he married Miss Mary Holbrook, daughter of John Wesley and Bettie (Roberts) Holbrook, the latter a resident of Owenton, where her father, who was a farmer, died.

Charles Stewart Ison and his brother Frank have been partners in enterprise for thirty years or more, both starting as poor boys, with their capital entirely in the skill of their hands and their industry. Their achievements have been noteworthy as farmers, stockmen and dealers in livestock and in a varied line of activities that make them men of distinction and esteem in Mercer County.

Charles Stewart Ison was born in Mercer County on the farm of his parents September 18, 1868, son of Z. T. and Elizabeth (Jenkins) Ison. His father was born in 1834 and his mother in 1848. They were married in 1866 and celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. The father died February 17, 1920. They reared a large family of children, Charles S. being next to the oldest. He had very few opportunities to get an education, attended country school a few months each year until he was about sixteen. He worked on the farm with his father to the age of twenty, and on leaving home went to the Shakers community and for three years was employed there at wages of $10 a mouth and board. During that time he saved on the average of $1 every month.
He gave up working for others to join his brother Frank in the partnership that has been continuous and mutually profitable and agreeable for thirty years. At first they rented land from the Shakers on the shares, the owners furnishing tools and stock. Frick brothers as they were able acquired their own equipment and livestock, and remained on one farm for fourteen years. In the meantime they bought a farm of 232 acres, two miles below Shaktown on the Lexington Pike. All the money they had, $2,000, they paid on the contract, and went in debt for the balance of $4,000 at 6 per cent. Good friends and well meaning advisers did what they could to keep them out of this rash proposition, but the brothers proved that their warnings were not the part of wisdom and in four years had paid off their debt. Through solid and substantial enterprise they have engaged in transactions that would do credit to many men who pose as financiers. Their second purchase was 100 acres adjoining the city of Harrodsburg on the Lexington Pike. The purchase price was $8,000 and they went in debt for the entire amount, but in a few years had the farm clear. They next bought 227 acres, four miles from Harrodsburg on the Lexington Pike, and when they sold it two years later it was at an advance which gave them a profit of $7,000 on the transaction. The home farm of the Ison today is 102 acres, two miles from Harrodsburg, also on the Lexington Pike. It is one of the valuable farms of Mercer County and the brothers paid $15,000 for it. The home occupies a very picturesque site, and the farm has a high reputation for its crop production and is exceptionally well improved in all other respects. The beautiful location is enhanced by the conveniences of the buildings themselves. These buildings are all modern and the equipment includes electric light, telephone and many of the advantages found only in the best mansions.

December 14, 1910, Charles S. Ison married Miss Ella McFatridge, daughter of Edgar and Fannie (Talbot) McFatridge, natives of Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Ison began housekeeping on the Lexington Pike farm, nine miles from Harrodsburg. Two children were born to their marriage: Louis Francis and his older brother Charles Stewart Ison, Jr., who was born April 8, 1912, and died September 30, 1913.

Charles S. Ison has been an intensive farmer and stockman all his life, has accumulated a great deal of valuable property and the brothers have been very successful in buying and dealing in cattle, hogs, especially dealers in horses and mules. Formerly they shipped horses and mules all over the South, but more recently have sought a complete outlet for their business in the home markets. They are conservative men and regard the home market as safer than assuming the risks of long shipments. Both these brothers had a very limited amount of formal schooling, and their success has been due to sound sense, improving, making and their opportunities, and a constant industry that has put them step by step toward the goal of prosperity.

Martin V. Dulin. The prosperity of any community is determined not by the wealth or activities of any one man, but is measured by the standard raised and maintained by the aggregate of its leading business factors. All compilations are made according to percentes of increase, and these are usually taken in proportion to the work in proportion to what is expected of him. Therefore no accurate history of Hopkinsville can be written without giving proper place to the lives of those men who through their various commercial and industrial connections afford opportunities for their fellow citizens to raise the general average by increasing their own percentage of accomplishment. One of these men of moment is Martin V. Dulin, who is not only connected as a stockholder and director to the Bank of Hopkinsville, but is also interested with a number of its other concerns of importance.

Mr. Dulin was born on a farm four miles east of Crofton, Christian County, Kentucky, April 13, 1830, a son of Rice Dulin, and grandson of Lod Dulin. The Dulin family originated in Scotland and Ireland, and immigration was made to North Carolina during the Colonial epoch of this country. From North Carolina some of the representatives of the family moved to South Carolina, and there Lod Dulin was born, but he left his native state in young manhood for Christian County, Kentucky, and was married after coming to this region. Here he became one of the prosperous farmers of early days, and died on his farm on Pond River in 1848.

Rice Dulin was born in the northern part of Christian County, in 1809, and died on this same farm in 1898, his entire life having been spent in Christian County. He gave the democratic party his earnest support, and served for some years as a magistrate. Fraternally he was a Mason, and was zealous in behalf of his order.

Rice Dulin was married to Catherine Myers, who was born in the northern part of Christian County in 1813, and died on the homestead. Their children were as follows: T. J., who died on the home farm in 1859, when twenty-two years of age; W. H., who died on the home farm; Mary W., who is the widow of O. B. Robinson, formerly a farmer of Christian County, lives with her brother, Martin V.; R. S., who was a coalmine operator, died at Springfield, Tennessee; Martin V., who was fifth in order of birth; J. M., who died on his farm near Crofton, Kentucky; Ben, who died on the home farm; and Lou R., who is the widow of W. M. West, formerly a merchant of Madisonville, Kentucky, and sheriff of Christian County for two terms, died at Hopkinsville.

Martin V. Dulin grew up on his father's farm and attended the neighborhood schools until he was nineteen years old, when he went to an advanced school held in southern Christian County by Mr. A. J. Wyatt for ten months. Returning to the farm, he was engaged in operating it until 1902, when he sold his farm, which was located four miles east of Crofton, in Christian County, and contained 300 acres. He had been successful-fully engaged in general farming and stockraising, specializing on wheat and tobacco. When he disposed of his farm he moved to Hopkinsville and resides at 115 East Sixteenth street. Mr. Dulin is a director of the Bank of Hopkinsville, in which he is a stockholder; he has been president of the Hopkinsville Milling Company, and is also on its directorate, and he is president of the Hopkinsville Warehouse Company and has other interests.

Mr. Dulin is not married. He belongs to Hopkinsville Lodge No. 545, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Politically he is a democrat. A man of earnest purpose, he has steadily forged ahead, wisely in-esting his money in enterprises which had a future. He stands in high respect by his associates as a man of good judgment, and his advice is often sought in matters of importance.

William Hereford Smith, M. D. A physician and surgeon of twenty years' experience, Doctor Smith, whose address is 441 Main Street, Danville, is regarded as one of the ablest surgeons in Boyle County and his abilities in that field were made evident during the War, either in his army or in France.

He was born at Maysville, Kentucky, February 3, 1877. His father, William S. Smith, was born in Louisiana in 1853 and spent his active life as a traveling salesman. In 1873 William S. Smith married Zilpha Taylor, a native of Winchester, Kentucky. They were the parents of four children: Hugh Thompson Smith, Ernest Thrustor Smith, William Hereford Smith and Zilpha Taylor Smith.
William H. Smith lived with his parents in Georgetown, Kentucky, to the age of ten, when the family moved to Harrodsburg. He attended the grade schools of Harrodsburg, and at the age of sixteen came to Danville, where for one year he was a student in the Hoggart Military Academy. He graduated from Center College with the Bachelor of Science degree in 1887, and in the fall of that year entered Cornell Medical College in New York City. He graduated in medicine and then served as an interne in one of the largest public hospitals of New York, Gouverneur Hospital, where he remained for intensive training at various hospital centers near the lighting lines. Doctor Smith returned to America in April, 1910, and after further post-graduate work in New York City resumed practice in July. He is intensely devoted to his profession, has never had a vacation since he graduated in medicine, all his leisure time being devoted to further study and research.

July 24, 1918, Doctor Smith married Miss Pearl Colter of Louisville, Kentucky. She is a graduate of the City Hospital Training School of Louisville, and is highly accomplished in her chosen profession.

Alvin Francis Duckworth. Among the venerable citizens of Clark County whose long and honorable careers have reflected credit upon themselves and their community and who have won and held the well-merited confidence of their fellow-men, few are held in higher esteem than is Alvin Francis Duckworth, of Thomson Postoffice, near Kiddville. Now retired in well-preserved old age, Mr. Duckworth can look back over a varied, active and honorable career, in which he won success through honest effort and without animosity on the part of his competitors.

Alvin Francis Duckworth was born near Pilot View, Clark County, Kentucky, May 1, 1838, a son of Thomas and Delilah (Bradley) Duckworth. His father was born in Mecklenburg County, North Carolina, and as a small boy, about 1810, came with his parents to Bath County, Kentucky, where his father was a farmer and died in old age about 1848 or 1850. He was a citizen of worth, public-spirit and standing and had the respect of the people of his community. Thomas Duckworth was married in Bath County, when about thirty years of age, to Mrs. Delilah (Bradley) Poindexter, widow of Daniel Poindexter, and a daughter of Dennis Bradley, who settled on a farm at Pilot View, Clark County, and there died at the advanced age of ninety years, his last years being passed in the home of his daughter. By her first marriage, Mrs. Duckworth had one daughter, Susan, who was born in 1840, and he bore three sons and three daughters by his marriage with Mrs. Duckworth, and married James Eton, removing to Cass County, Missouri, where she died. Thomas Duckworth added to his property, acquiring other interests, until he had from 250 to 300 acres, and remained in the same community for thirty to forty years. He was not a public man, and desired no office, but was a good citizen. Reared a Presbyterian, in his later years he belonged to the Baptist Church, and as his wife, who had been reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal denomination. After they sold the farm, they retired and moved to near Mount Olive, where they joined the Baptist Church, and there Thomas Duckworth died in 1871, at the age of sixty-nine years, while his widow passed away in 1874, at about the same age. Their family consisted of the following children: Elizabeth, who married Eli Bruce, and lived and died in Clark County, having two sons and two daughters, of whom Sarah, the widow of Pleasant Allen, still resides at Winchester; John, who went to Missouri, but returned to Kentucky and was presented by his brother Alvin with a farm, where he died at the age of sixty-nine years; James, who served in the Confederate army, under General Morgan during the war between the states, escaped capture, and later went to Missouri, where he was county clerk of Cass County at the time of his death at the age of sixty years; Alvin Francis of this notice; William, who as a lad went to Texas and enlisted in the Confederate army from that state, rose to the rank of captain, and died while at the front. He married and died at Clark county, and died at Winchester, in July, 1919, at the age of eighty years; Alfred, Richard and Benjamin, who died in childhood.

Alvin Francis Duckworth received a public school education and remained on the farm in Clark County, early adopting the vocations of farmer, trader and stockman. His operations have been centered in Clark County, where he has made his home, and is still a remarkably well-preserved man who keeps alive to all public and other questions of importance and who is well posted. He has had a varied and successful life, during which he has learned to encourage and appreciate the comradeship and fellowship of his fellow-men. In the community in which he has made his home, he has done much to promote good feeling and neighborliness among his fellow-men. He has had the touch with modern thought and action is shown in his recent purchase of an automobile for his own driving, although prior to this he had never driven a car.

At the age of twenty-six years Mr. Duckworth was united in marriage with Miss Anna Rash, daughter of Warren and Polly (Ireland) Rash. Mr. Rash’s father’s farm was three miles out of Winchester on the Lexington Pike, his parents being Rev. William Rash, a native of Virginia and a preacher of the Primitive Baptist faith, and Elizabeth (Berry) Rash, whom he married in Kentucky. The greater part of his life was passed on that farm, and for many years he served the Old Friendship Church on the site of the present cemetery at Winchester. While preaching in his own pulpit he was suddenly stricken with paralysis and died while past eighty years of age, and was buried in Montgomery County, Kentucky, to his wife and sons, settled on the Andy McClure place near Schollsville, on which farm Mrs. Duckworth was born November 2, 1847, and married November 15, 1864. Her parents both died at the home of Mrs. and Mrs. Duckworth, her father at the age of eighty-eight years and her mother when eighty-six years of age. Anna was the youngest of ten children, of whom four are living in 1920. They are Dr. R. D. Rash, a physician of St. Louis, Missouri; Thomas W., a merchant, now retired, of Winchester; John Allen, a furniture dealer of Winchester; and Mrs. Duckworth. Her youngest brother, Clay, died in Tennessee at the age of eighteen years, while serving in the ranks of the Confederate army; and another brother, James M., was an elder, preacher and noted evangelist in the Christian Church and died at Lexington. Another brother, Isaiah, passed away in Chicago, and a sister, Elizabeth M., in Kentucky, and her elder brother, William, passed away at Winchester, after an affliction lasting over a forty years. Mrs. Duckworth also had two sisters: Elizabeth, who married William Mc Kee, and died in Indiana; and Marietta, who, prior to the marriage of her sister Anna to Alvin F. Duckworth, married the latter’s brother, John Duckworth, and subsequently died of a disease in Missouri. Two sons, Thomas W., of Nicholasville, Kentucky, and Prewitt, an operator in Wall Street, New York.

Soon after his marriage, Alvin Francis Duckworth purchased his wife’s father’s old farm of 211 acres, to which he subsequently added the eighty acres adjoining. There he grew and dealt in tobacco, maintaining a large warehouse, and carried on connections with big concerns at Louisville and Cincinnati. He competed successfully with other large operators in this line and accumulated a handsome competence, following the same course of business until within seven years of his death, when he retired from active affairs. Mr. Duckworth sold his farm some twenty years ago, but continued to reside in the vicinity of Schollsville for a long time, but for several years has made his home at Thomson, near Kiddville.

Mr. and Mrs. Duckworth had two children: Maude and Mary, the latter of whom died as a child. Maude married Henry L. Quisenberry, a farmer near Schollsville, who died in 1904, at the age of forty-four years, and he dying February 19, 1917, when past sixty years of age. They left two sons: Fleming Duckworth, a farmer of Hardin County, Kentucky, who married Daily Garrett, a daughter of Green Garrett; and John Thomas, a graduate, like his brother, of Kentucky Wesleyan College, and of Harvard Law School, class of 1920, who has just entered upon the practice of his profession.

While Mr. Duckworth has been ever alive to public matters, he has had no desire for public office. He was reared in the Presbyterian faith, but later joined the Baptist Church with his parents and after his marriage joined his wife in membership in the Bethlehem Christian Church, located near his home.

JAMES N. GRADY. One of the constructive forces in the business and industrial affairs of Owensboro for many years was the late James N. Grady, who died in 1921.

He was born at Owensboro in 1854, and after his early education and training he became identified with the planing mill business, an industry that he followed the rest of his life, though with accumulating interests in other spheres. For many years he was proprietor of the old Grady Planing Mill at the corner of Ninth and Crittenden streets, and for many years was the active head of the Owensboro Planing Mill, of which he was president and the largest stockholder at the time of his death. He also was identified with the organization of the Kentucky Buggy Company, which built the plant later occupied by Rogers-Slater Company. Mr. Grady was successful in his business affairs and owned a large amount of property in and around Owensboro.

Mr. Grady was a man of fine physical type, and was noted for his hardy work habits, the result of which was a loss to the business and good citizenship of his home city. He is survived by his widow and five children named Narl J. Grady; Mrs. W. P. Edmonson of Richmond, Indiana; Mrs. J. A. Widau of Maze, Indiana; Miss Nora Grady and Mrs. Lillian Garlinghouse of Indianapolis.

WILLIAM NELSON BROWN, JR., is a business builder whose achievements have done much to promote the commercial advantage of the town of Harrodsburg. Mr. Brown is the founder and active manager of the Harrodsburg Ice and Cold Storage Plant, one of the largest institutions of its kind in Kentucky. The business has done much to make Harrodsburg an important collecting and centralized market, and market quotations at Harrodsburg are ruling figures all over the Central Kentucky district.

Mr. Brown was born November 20, 1872, in Mercer County, was well educated in grade schools and Hoggsett Academy at Harrodsburg. He finished his education, and in 1893 entered the general merchandising business and continued in that line with an increasing degree of success for ten years. On leaving his store he spent a year in practical farming and then re-entered business as a produce dealer under his individual name. He continued this business for about five years, and in 1913 organized the Harrodsburg Ice and Produce Company, a stock company of $30,000 capital. From the first he has been the mainspring, the energizer as well as the managing executive of a business which con-
George Strother was a man of large affairs in Trimble County, owned a great deal of land, and operated a flouring mill and saw mill, this being the first mill erected in the county. He served as a soldier in the War of 1812, and with other duties was a Methodist minister. He died in Trimble County in 1864.

French Strother, father of the Walton lawyer, was born in Trimble County in 1811 and spent all his life there, earning his livelihood from a farm and also giving much of his time to his work as a local Methodist minister. He died in Trimble County in 1870. He was a Democrat in politics. Father Strother married Lu- cinda Maddox, also a life-long resident of Trimble County, where she was born in 1823 and died in 1883. The oldest of their children is John C. Strother, now seventy-five years of age, an attorney by profession, and a resident of Louisville. James, the second son, was busied with the work of a practical farmer until 1918, though for seventeen years he also held a position in the internal revenue service, and he is now county judge of Trimble County. The third of the family is Charles Strother. His twin sister, Alice C., is unmarried and lives at Carrollton, Kentucky. George and Irvin, the next two children, died in infancy. Emma is the wife of W. F. Mosgrove, a prominent business man at Carrollton. Sallie is the wife of T. D. Meguire, a physi- cian and surgeon at Cincinnati. French, the youngest of the family, died at the age of twenty-two.

Charles Strother, who was born in Trimble County, August 10, 1852, had the advantages of the common schools there and studied law in his brother John's office at Owenton, where he was admitted to the bar in 1875. He remained there in practice until 1882, and gained his early reputation as a lawyer at Owenton. During 1882-83 he had an experience as a lawyer and pioneer in Dakota Territory, what is now North Dakota. With this exception his professional career has all been in Kentucky. On returning he resumed his practice at Owenton and remained there until 1911. Since the latter year he has practiced at Walton, and besides an extensive business as a corporation attorney he has handled many civil and criminal cases in the courts of Kenton, Grant, Owen and Boone counties.

Mr. Strother came to Walton primarily to act as attorney for the Cincinnati, Louisville, Lexington and Maysville Traction Company, a corporation planning the building of interurban lines from Owenton to Cov- ington, a project now temporarily in abeyance. Since 1913 Mr. Strother has been attorney for the Walton Bank & Trust Company, and has his office in the company's building. He is also attorney for the Walton Lumber Company, the Farmers Tobacco Warehouse Company, and is a stockholder in the latter and also in the Commonwealth Life Insurance Company of Louis- ville.

While at Owenton he served as judge of the Police Court four years and from 1914 to 1920 was city at-iorney of Walton. He was chairman of the Walton Committee for Liberty Loan drive, acted as "Four Minute" speaker, and was one of the leaders of the age of community who insured a patriotic record of which all can be proud. Judge Strother is a democrat, and for years has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. On September 21, 1876, at Owenton, he married Miss Sarah H. Hill, daughter of George and Matilda (Smith) Hill, now deceased. Her father was an early settler at East Eagle, Owen County, was a farmer and merchant, and died there at the age of eighty-eight years. Judge and Mrs. Strother were the parents of four children. Birdie, who is a skilled instrumentalist and vocalist, finishing her education in the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, is the wife of Charles H. Holman, a prosperous merchant at Harrods- burg, Kentucky. George, the second child, died at the age of four years, and Philip, the third, at the age of four months. The entire community of Walton shared in a general sorrow with Judge and Mrs. Strother at the death of their younger daughter, Miss Myra G., at the age of twenty-five. In church and social affairs she had made herself greatly beloved by all who knew her.

Arthur Lee Lloyd, formerly superintendent of the schools of Webster County, and now owner and operator of the flouring mill business at Providence, is one of the men of sterling character in the state who is the product of farm life. He was born on a farm in Webster County, Kentucky, September 16, 1877, a son of William and Hessie (Jennings) Lloyd, both members of old and highly respected families of the state. The paternal grandfather, when his son William was about two years of age, moved from North Carolina, where both had been born, to Tennessee, where they lived until William M. Lloyd was about eighteen years old, then moved to what is now Webster County, Ken- tucky. After a long and useful life spent in agricultural pursuits, he is now living in comfortable retirement at Providence, Kentucky. Both he and his wife were members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and they have reared their children in that faith, and one of their sons, Willie Clem Lloyd, is a minister of this denomination, now stationed at Lincoln, Illinois. They had four sons and a daughter, but the latter died when eighteen years of age, and the youngest son died before reaching the age of fifteen.

Arthur Lee Lloyd was reared on his father's farm and attended the rural schools, and the M. & F. Acad- emy of Providence, also the Southern Normal School of Bowling Green, Kentucky. When he was nineteen years of age he began teaching school, and was connected with educational work for twenty years, becom- ing one of the best known men of his profession in this part of the state. In addition to teaching in the rural schools he had charge of the schools of Lismarn, Blackford and Providence at different times, and exerted a wonderful influence for good over his pupils, many of whom have become men and women of note. In 1900 Mr. Lloyd was elected superintendent of the schools of Webster County, and filled this office very creditably for eight years, during this period introducing innova- tions of a very progressive character. During his in- cumency of this office he lived at Dixson, but after he left the office he came to Providence, and for a brief period, in the fall of 1918, was engaged in the coal busi- ness, and then erected a "midget" flouring mill, which he has since operated with a gratifying amount of suc- cess.

On March 6, 1907, Mr. Lloyd was married to Miss Mabel Young, and they have two sons, Arthur Young and Maurice Edgar. In politics Mr. Lloyd is a demo- crat. Well known in Masonry, he has been raised in it until he is now a member of the Chapter. Having been reared, as before stated, in the faith of the Cumber- land Presbyterian Church, he early connected him- self with it, and has continued one of its earnest mem- bers. Mr. Lloyd is a man who does thoroughly what- ever he undertakes, and has never rested until he has attained to gratifying results. Such a man as he is a valuable adjunct to any community, and Providence gained an excellent citizen when he moved into its confines.

Lucy Lee Mahan Spilman, a noble Kentucky and American woman whose life has been consecrated to continuous consecration to Christian duty and giving service to the poor, was born in the hill country of Eastern Kentucky, at London, Laurel County, March 25, 1878, daughter of Lee and Arabella (Cheesnut) Mahan. She was next to the youngest of a large family of nine children. Her father was a carpenter and builder by trade.

Mrs. Spilman attended the public schools of London, and also had the benefit of the advantages offered by the Sue Bennett Memorial School, a school owned and supported by the women of the Methodist Church, and an institution that has steadily grown and prospered until it now represents a financial investment of $100,000. Beginning in 1877, at the age of nineteen, Mrs. Spilman taught five years in local schools and subsequently in the Sue Bennett school. From 1902 for seven years she was a delegate to the Methodist conferences. She is a Methodist evangelist, a work for which her versatile talents well fitted her and in which she achieved a remarkable success.

On March 3, 1909, she became the wife of James Spilman, and since their marriage they have lived in Mercer County, either at Harrodsburg or at Burgin. Mr. Spilman is a very prominent farmer and man of affairs, and is still operating his holdings in Kentucky for the production of commodities for the food supply of the world. Besides his Kentucky estate he has large landed interests in Texas. Mr. and Mrs. Spilman have one son, James Bennett Spilman, born October 17, 1914.

In 1910 Mrs. Spilman was elected president of the Women's Missionary Society of the Kentucky Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. She has been busy in the duties of that office for ten years, and during the year 1919 the society, exclusive of all incidentals from affiliated churches and without any money contributing, raised $20,000 for home and foreign missions. By virtue of her office Mrs. Spilman is also a member of the Women's Missionary Council of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, an organization which in 1919 procured almost a million dollars for missions. For one year Mrs. Spilman was president of the Woman's Club of Harrodsburg, and as president she gave the dedication address at the Price Memorial Hospital of Harrodsburg. She declined the honorary reduction when she removed to her country home at Burgin. Mrs. Spilman during the war was chairman of the Women's Council of Defense for the Burgin School District, joint chairman during the Liberty Loan and Savings Stamp Campaigns, also a leader in the Armenian Relief and all other war and patriotic movements. The climax of her efforts during the war came on the 4th of July, 1918, when she participated as representative of the local Canning Club in a patriotic parade, and during the afternoon made two patriotic addresses under the title of "Kentucky Fires Burning," one in the Court House and the other in the Opera House at Stanford. In 1919, on October 17, 1919, occurred a local celebration in honor of all the sons of Mercer County who had returned from the war. After a banquet at the Graham Springs Hotel and a parade a great mass meeting was held in one of the large tobacco houses, and Mrs. Spilman made the chief address, following which the bronze medals were delivered to the soldier boys. Other speakers at this meeting were Judge Gregory and Edward T. Hines. Since the war Mrs. Spilman has confined her service and efforts to church causes. During 1920 she was requested by the women of the National Committee of the republican party to become a speaker, offering her the choice of states for this work, but she had to decline on account of illness in her home.

November 1, 1920, Mrs. Spilman left a beautiful country home, Pinehurst, at Burgin to live at Aspen Hall in Harrodsburg. Her plans as made for some years to come contemplate an exclusive devotion to church and public betterment work. Mrs. Spilman was born in the rugged mountain country where only limited advantages were obtainable in the way of education. By super-effort she has risen to be one of the foremost of Kentucky women, distinguished in her church, a force for civic righteousness, and one of the most loyal of American women.

At the District Conference of the Donnell District Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which met in Harrodsburg March 2-5, 1921, Mrs. Spilman was elected on first ballot delegate to the annual conference, which convened in Somerset, September 7-12, 1921. At this session of the annual conference she was elected alternate to the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which met in Hot Springs, Arkansas, in May, 1922. The general conference is the supreme law making body of the Methodist Church and this is the first time in the history of Methodism that women have been admitted to the body. Dr. Belle H. Bennett, of Richmond, Kentucky, was elected first lay delegate to this conference.

LYMAN D. HOLLINGSWORTH. A civil engineer of long and competent experience, Lyman D. Hollingsworth has handled with credit some important responsibilities in the state program of good highway construction, being division engineer of construction of roads with headquarters at Paducah.

Mr. Hollingsworth, who was born at Evansville, Indiana, December 5, 1861, belongs to the old Kentucky stock and still earlier American ancestry. The Hollingsworths came over at the time of Lord Baltimore, the founder of the family being Valentine Hollingsworth, who settled in the Quaker colony in Maryland. He is buried in the Brandywine burying ground near Baltimore. The grandfather of Lyman D. Hollingsworth was James Hollingsworth, who was born in Virginia in 1789, and early in the nineteenth century settled in Shelby County, Kentucky, where he followed farming and planting. He died at Simpsonville in that county in 1869. He married a Miss Russell, also a native of Virginia.

William E. Hollingsworth, father of L. D. Hollingsworth, was long prominent in the business and civic life of Evansville, Indiana. He was born at Simpsonville, Kentucky, in June, 1821, was reared and educated in his native town, and then removed to Evansville, where he engaged in the wholesale qu eens ware business. He developed an establishment widely known and patronized by retail merchants all over Southern Indiana, and in the "Jackson Purchase" of nine western counties in Kentucky. He retired from business in 1896 and died at Evansville in 1898. For twenty years he served as chief engineer of the Evansville Fire Department, and was a life long member and held practically all the lay offices in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was also a member of the official board and was treasurer of the Orphans Home at Evansville. Politically he was a republican, graduating into that party from the whigs. A thirty-second degree Mason, he was frequently a delegate to the Grand Lodge of Indiana. During the Civil war he was colonel of the One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Indiana Regiment of Home Guards, and after his death his widow received a pension from the Government. At Crab Orchard Springs, Kentucky, William E. Hollingsworth married Eugenia Belle Davenport, who was born at Danville in this state, March 4, 1833, and died at Evansville in 1905. They became the parents of a family of ten children; Leila, who died at Evansville in 1900, at the age of fifty, unmarried, and for a number of years had been secretary of the national organization of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; Edwin, a resident of California; John, whose whereabouts in later years have been unknown to his family; Henry, who died at the age of eight years; Lyman D., fifth of the family; Halle B., who is a county nurse in Indiana; Laura D., living at the old home in Evansville; forth, officially identified as the Live Oak Cemetery Association at Evansville; W. Nisbet, a resident of Evansville; Richard D., twin brother of Nisbet, who was a railroad clerk and died at St. Louis in 1903.

Lyman D. Hollingsworth grew up in his native city, attended the public schools and high school through the sophomore year, and at the age of nineteen went to work for Torian & Barbour, wholesale hatters, remaining in their employ for four years. Then for eight months he was in the United States mail service, and in 1883 went to Louisville, Kentucky, and spent two years with the Boomer-Lewis Wholesale Hat Company. He left that firm to perfect his original training and experience in civil engineering as a rodman with the engineer corps engaged in the first survey of the Ohio Valley Railroad between Henderson and Princeton, Kentucky. Following that he had a varied experience in different branches of surveying in Kentucky, Mississippi and Tennessee, and during 1886 was in charge of levels for the Government survey of the Cumberland and Kentucky counties. It was then that he was transit man in the Tennessee River survey between Knoxville and Chattanooga under Lieutenant John Biddle.

In 1891 Mr. Hollingsworth located at Louden, Tennessee, where he was associated with the wholesale grain firm of Horte & Goans until 1900. He then removed to Knoxville, and for a year was bookkeeper for the Tennessee Consolidated Tobacco Company, and subsequently, until May, 1902, was with the J. Allen Smith Milling Company at Knoxville. Again returning to Louisville, he became deputy county surveyor of Jefferson County in charge of roads and bridges, and that was his official work until 1907. For a year or so he practiced his profession as general engineer at Lardenville with offices at Frankfort. Some examples of his work in this line are to be seen on the estates of Colonel E. H. Taylor, Jr., George Berry, and Senator Johnson Camden in Woodford County.

Leaving Frankfort in 1915, Mr. Hollingsworth took up work with the State Road Department under R. C. Terrell in different parts of the state, and was state road inspector in Greenup County until March 1916, when he became road engineer and surgeon at Lancaster. Dr. W. L. Wiley, staff commissioner of roads, as division engineer of the construction of roads with headquarters at Paducah, where he relieved Mr. Walter F. Brooks, U. S. highway engineer. This has been the work in which he has been engaged for the past four years. He has the technical supervision of roadway construction over twelve counties in Western Kentucky.

Mr. Hollingsworth is a stockholder in the Giant Mineral Company of Crittenden County, Kentucky. He is a democrat, is a member of the Christian Church and was deacon of the church at Louden, Tennessee, is affiliated with Preston Lodge No. 281, A. F. and A. M., at Louisville, Frankfort Chapter, R. A. M., Frankfort Council, R. and S. M., Frankfort Commandery, K. of P., and Elizabeth Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Madisonville.

Mr. Hollingsworth resides at the Craig Hotel in Paducah. He married at Lancaster, Garrard County, Kentucky, March 27, 1889, Elizabeth May Huffman, daughter of Dr. William and Catherine (Cook) Huffman, both deceased. Her father for many years was physician and surgeon at Lancaster. Mr. and Mrs. Hollingsworth are both graduates of the Conservatory of Music at Cincinnati. To their marriage were born three children, the first, Catherine, dying in infancy. Both sons have made names for themselves and are ex-service men. Lyman D., born September 1, 1892, finished his education in the Manual Training School at Louisville, and in May, 1917, enlisted and was sent to Camp Shelby in August of that year. As a sergeant of the first class, and electrical engineer, he was assigned to the pumping plant at Camp Shelby and was on duty until mustered out in July, 1919. He is now assistant chief engineer of the pumping plant and electrical assistant for the Central Aguirre Sugar Company in Porto Rico. Robert Young Hollingsworth, the younger son, was born September 6, 1894, graduated from the Frankfort High School, and while on a visit home enlisted in October, 1917, at Camp Shelby and became private secretary in the major's headquarters with the rank of sergeant of the first class. In September, 1918, he was sent overseas, and was in the Service of Supplies at Tours, France, until mustered out in August, 1919. He is now with his brother in Porto Rico as private secretary to the general manager of the Central Aguirre Sugar Company.

HENRY LYONS. This publication consistently enters a tribute to the memory of Henry Lyons, whose nobility of character, whose prominence and influence as a business man, whose exalted stewardship, shown in generosity and helpfulness in all of the relations of life, marked him as one of the foremost and most loved and honored citizens of Danville, judge in 1899 of Boyle County, where virtually his entire adult life was passed, and where his death occurred on the 9th of December, 1912. Even the briefest review of his career must bear its lesson of incentive and inspiration, for he was a good man who thought good things and did good things—one ever mindful of the responsibilities which personal success imposes.

Henry Lyons was born in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, in the year 1849, and was a son of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Lyons, both of whom passed the closing years of their lives at Danville, Kentucky, where their sons Henry and Samuel had cared for them with earnest filial devotion in the gracious evening of their lives. They are buried in the old graveyard and both of the sons rest in the Jewish Cemetery at Cincinnati, Ohio. Their lives were closely associated in business for many years and both were numbered among the most honored and influential citizens of Danville, to whose civic and material advancement and prosperity they had contributed in generous measure.

In his youth Henry Lyons profited fully by the sound business habits and advantages that were afforded him, and he early gained full fellowship with honest toil and endeavor. In 1866 he came to Danville, Kentucky, and as a youth of seventeen years there formed a partnership with Samuel Straus, his cousin, and opened a clothing store. Within a short time thereafter he assumed full ownership of the business, which he continued individually and with marked success until 1887, when he was succeeded by his brother Samuel, who had long been associated with him in the enterprise. He then went to California for a period of rest and recuperation, as his health had become much impaired, and upon his return to Danville, about four months later, in April, 1887, his physical powers were up to good standard and he was ready enter upon once more his business. He resumed his alliance with his brother, and they soon enlarged the scope of their business by opening a second store. They conducted these two mercantile establishments with characteristic ability and attending success until 1895, when they sold their clothing store to J. L. Froliman & Company, the members of which firm carry on the business now.

The mercantile business had been conducted by the brothers under the firm name of Henry & Samuel Lyons.

On the 10th of June, 1895, a partnership was formed by Henry and Samuel Lyons and John M. Nichols, and they established the Danville Steam Laundry, with modern equipment and service. They developed this enterprise into one of the most important and successful of the kind in the state. On the 4th of October, 1902, the large and prosperous business was incorporated under the title of the Danville Steam Laundry, and since June 19, 1900 the present corporate name has been obtained—the Danville Laundry and Dry Cleaning Company. Samuel Lyons became president of the company, Henry Lyons, the secretary and treasurer, and John M.
Nichols, the general manager. Henry Lyons, as before noted, died on the 9th of December, 1912, and his namesake, Henry Lyons Nichols, succeeded him as secretary and treasurer of the company. The personnel of the earth. The corps of this corporation therefore continued unchanged until the sudden death of Samuel Lyons, the honored president, on the 25th of July, 1920, and with the necessary reorganization then entailed the present officers were chosen, as here noted: John M. Nichols, president; W. Barrett Nichols, vice-president and assistant secretary; R. Bush Nichols, manager; and Henry Lyons Nichols, secretary and treasurer.

Henry Lyons became one of the substantial capitalists and loyal and influential citizens of this section of Kentucky, and both he and his brother Samuel were foremost in the field of worthy charity and philanthropy, as well as in that of civic liberty and progressiveness. Of their varied activities and benefactions more specific mention will be found in the memoir to Samuel Lyons, which immediately follows this review. The brothers played a large part in the business and social life of Danville and honored the state of their adoption by their generous, kindly and noble lives.

SAMUEL LYONS. The foregoing review of the career of his older brother, the late Henry Lyons, should be held as an adjunct of and complementary to this memoir dedicated to Samuel Lyons, whose character and achievements lent dignity and honor to the city and county in which he was born and grew from his youth to the time of his death. With even greater vigor did he maintain the fine personal stewardship for which his older brother set a high standard, and his was inviolable vantage-ground in the confidence and affectionate regard of the people of Boyle County. The foregoing sketch offers a brief outline of the business activities of the two brothers, and in giving a proper relfection of the services of Samuel Lyons as a man and a citizen it is pleasing to per-mitt to reproduce the high estimate which appeared in a Danville newspaper at the time of his death. As minor eliminator and paraphrase are indulged in this reproduction, formal marks of quotation are omitted.
The significance of the context is the greater by reason of the fact that it represents the estimate placed upon the man in the community which was long the stage of his earnest and noble endeavors. His death occurred July 25, 1920, and the press article noting his passing is here given:

The community was profoundly shocked yesterday afternoon when the news rapidly spread that one of its foremost citizens, Samuel Lyons, had passed away.
He was on the street less than one hour before his death and his family, custom to come up to the postoffice for the mail on Saturday afternoon about three o'clock, and it was while en route to the postoffice that he began to feel ill. He was taken to his apartment by Dr. Herford Smith, and there his death occurred within less than an hour later, as the direct result of an attack of angina pectoris.

Mr. Lyons was born at Clarksville, Tennessee, on the 15th of April, 1843, and it was in the year 1868 when he came to Danville, Kentucky, where he began a business which he established himself in business in 1866.
Both he and his brother were highly successful. They made both money and friends. The latter they held, the former they distributed with a lavish hand. While it is not known at this time how Samuel Lyons disposed of his estate, it is believed by all that he has left many bequests. He had always tithed himself, but went far beyond this in later years. No worthy cause found a denial from him; he gave in myriads of dollars, little was always unstornentious about it and few knew of his bountiful deeds. He was always foremost in every progressive move in this section;
he had large and varied business experiences and was the close advisor to a great many people in Danville in connection with their business affairs. His advice was always sound and ever freely given. He lived a life to be emulated and he leaves a place that will not be filled in our city. Here he was a life-long member of the Jewish Synagogue.

In addition to his association with the mercantile and laundry enterprises noted in the preceding sketch, Samuel Lyons had been one of the prime movers in starting the Central Kentucky Building & Loan Association, and was its treasurer from its inception until his demise. He held stock in all of the Danville banks and was the largest stockholder in the Farmers National. He was one of the men who made it possible for Danville to, have its present splendid hotel, and was a large stockholder until recently, when he disposed of his stock. He took a prominent part in every worthy movement and enterprise in his home
ity. He was a leader in the various Masonic bodies with which he was affiliated, was a prominent Elk and was one of the most genial members of the Black Mariah Club, which meets every Monday evening at the Elks Club.

A public memorial was held this afternoon at the Methodist Church and was largely attended. The meeting was addressed by Dr. Horace Turner, Dr.
J. Q. A. McDowell, Hon. John W. Verkes, and Hon.
J. C. Bagby, all of whom paid high tribute to the memory of their deceased and distinguished fellow citizen—a man who was loved by his fellow men.

From a later edition of the same newspaper are taken the following statements:
The will of Samuel Lyons carries out the joint purpose of his brother, the late Henry Lyons, and himself. The will, in other words, is a re-affirmation of the will of Henry Lyons and strikingly illustrates the broad-minded and charitable impulses of these philanthropic gentlemen, who in life contributed generously to every worthy cause, regardless of creed, and were ever ready to give aid and comfort to the sick and needy, at the same time taking the forefront in all matters of public improvements and public welfare in their community, the while never forgetting the kindness of a friend. The total cash bequests of Samuel Lyons aggregate nearly $100,000, divided almost equally between personal friends and charitable institutions.
It is not possible within the compass of this brief memoir to name in detail the various bequests to which allusion is made above, but among the most prominent institutions to which such bequests were made may be mentioned the following named: Jewish Hospital, Cincinnati; Masonic Widows and Orphans Home, Louisville; Knights of Pythias Orphans Home, Lexington; Jewish Hospital for Aged and Infirm;
National Jewish Infirmary, Cincinnati; Jewish Junction Hospital, Denver; United Jewish Charities, Cin-n-cinnati; Jewish Orphans Home, New Orleans; Turo Infirmary for Aged and Infirm, New Orleans;
Charity Hospital, New Orleans; Jewish Orphan Asylum, Cleveland; Louisville Protestant Altenheim; St. James Colored Folks Old Home, Louisville; Children's Free Hospital, and Home of Innocents, Louisville; Ministerial fund, Danville Methodist Church; Danville and Boyle County Hospital, $5,000, and a substantial bequest made, previous to July 1920;
Jewish Hospital Association, Louisville; Ophthalmic Hospital, Cincinnati. Both Henry and Samuel Lyons had contributed liberally to Center College and the Kentucky College for Women. The personal bequests of Samuel Lyons were many, and indicated his deep appreciation of the bonds of friendship.

One familiar with the life of Samuel Lyons has spoken of him in the following terms: "In early youth he overcame a physical affliction that would have broken the spirit of the average youth. By patience and tremendous will power he triumphed over this affliction, with the courage and determination that so notably marked his entire course in life. Within the period of this painful experience he became a newsboy, and applied himself diligently and faithfully. With special distinctness is recalled his loyalty to and affectionate care of his aged and infirm parents and to a frail invalid brother. In his judgment of men he made no distinctions of race or creed, and his consideration and kindliness were dominating characteristics of his useful and noble life."

William Andrew Byron has practiced law at Brooksville, more than thirty years. He earned his way through college by teaching, taught school for several years after his admission to the bar, and the professional and public honors that have come to him have been the rewards of a very earnest and hard working career.

He was born in Mason County, Kentucky, March 23, 1860. His grandfather, Cornelius Byron, spent his life as a farmer in County Limerick, Ireland, as did his wife, Jane O'Connell. The father of the Brooksville attorney was Andrew Byron, who was born in County Limerick, Ireland, and emigrated to the United States in 1819. In Mason County he worked at road building, later was a farmer there, and in 1863 removed to Bracken County, where he spent the rest of his active days on a farm. He died May 13, 1887. He was a democrat in politics, served as a school trustee in Bracken County, and was a faithful member of the Catholic Church. At Maysville, Kentucky, he married Ellen Ryan, who was born on the banks of the River Shannon in County Limerick, Ireland, in 1828 and died in Bracken County, Kentucky, in 1915. They had a family of eight children: Catherine, who died in Bracken County at the age of forty-eight, wife of the late Peter Hannon, a farmer; Cornelius, who died at Brooksville at the age of fifty, was a farmer and farmer; John, who died at Bellevue, Kentucky, in 1920; William A.; Thomas, a farmer who died at Brookfield in 1893, at the age of twenty-five; Ellen, of Jacksonville, Bourbon County, widow of Thomas Fitzgerald, who was a farmer; and Miss Elizabeth, who lives at Bellevue.

William Andrew Byron has lived in Bracken County since he was three years of age, and his early life was spent on his father's farm. He attended country school and Paris High School. He then attended Amana College, and in 1885 was graduated from the Cincinnati Law School. He opened his law office in 1885. He began teaching at the age of sixteen, having a term of six months school in Bracken County. After completing his law course he continued teaching until 1890, in which year he opened his first law office. His time has been taken up with a general civil and criminal practice and also with official duties and with active participation in politics as a democrat. He served four years as county attorney and in 1901 was elected a member of the State Senate, serving throughout the sessions of 1902 and 1904 and in the special session of 1903. He was a delegate from the Ninth Congressional District to the National Convention of 1904 at St. Louis when Alton B. Parker was nominated as candidate for President. During the war Mr. Byron gave his time to the Government to the practical neglect of his professional business. He was chairman of the Bracken County Council of Defense and chairman of the school administration. He is a member of the Catholic Church and is affiliated with Arawakzana Tribe No. 91, Improved Order of Red Men, at Bladeston. His home is a modern residence on Woodward Avenue, and he also owns considerable other local real estate, including the hotel and a building on Miami Street.

In April, 1904, at Covington, Mr. Byron married Miss Carrie Jane Staton. Her grandfather, James Staton, was born in Mason County, Kentucky, in 1809, of Virginia ancestry, was a blacksmith by trade and spent his active life in Mason and Bracken counties. He died at Brooksville in 1886. His wife was Jane Calvert, a native of Maryland, who died in Bracken County.

James W. Staton, father of Mrs. Byron, was one of the most prominent Masons of Kentucky and of the M. J. A. W. E. He was born in Bracken County, May 27, 1835, and lived at Brooksville from early manhood. He served as deputy county clerk of Bracken County, was master commissioner of the Circuit Court and for thirty-two years treasurer of the sinking fund of Bracken County. He died at Brooksville, June 27, 1903. He was a democrat and a Methodist and in Masonry he received his Chapter degrees in Brooksville Lodge No. 154 in the summer and fall of 1838 and received the Royal Arch degrees between July, 1866, and January, 1867, was made a Knight Templar, November 7, 1878, received the thirty-second degree from the Grand Consistory of Kentucky, November 24, 1887, and was created a Knight Commander of the Court of Honor, October 18, 1888, and on May 25, 1891, was coroneted an honorary thirty-third degree Mason of the Supreme Council. He was grand master of the Grand Lodge, grand high priest of the Grand Chapter of Kentucky, and for years chairman of the Foreign Correspondence Committee of the Grand Lodge. Practically his whole life was an exemplification of the beauty and nobility of the Masonic ritual. He was one of the most irreplaceable of men, gentle, patient, tolerant, charitable, and had a host of admiring friends. Intellectually he was a giant and the soul of courtesy and a most magnanimous gentleman. James W. Staton married Miss Caroline West, who was born in Bracken County, March 6, 1836 and died at Brooksville, January 8, 1898.

Jesse W. Overstreet, the eldest in a family of four sons and three daughters, was but ten years of age at the time of his father's death, and thus exceptional responsibilities came to him while he was still a mere boy. Through his sturdy labors he assisted in providing for his widowed mother and the younger children, and throughout his self-reliant career has proved a forceful and active man who has proved a forceful in his later career, which has been marked by initiative, energy, determined progressiveness and substantial and worthy achievement. He is now a director and assistant manager of the People's Tobacco Warehouse Company at Danville, judicial center of Boyle County, and is a director in the Peoples Saving Bank & Trust Company at Perryville, this county.

On his father's old home farm on Rolling Fork, Boyle County, Jesse W. Overstreet was born November 5, 1878, and is the eldest of the seven children born to John C. B. and Matilda Frances (Minor) Overstreet, both representatives of old and influential Kentucky families. John C. B. Overstreet became a substantial farmer in Boyle County, but was comparatively a young man at the time of his death, his widow having survived him by many years, and both having held membership in the Christian Church. Of their children, as before noted, the subject of this review is the eldest; John C. is a prosperous farmer in Boyle County; Saluda is the wife of Howard Bower, of Winchester, Kentucky, Mr. Bower being a telegraph operator by vocation; Nannie is the wife of Walter Bower, a telegraph operator at Parkersburg, West Virginia. William Henderson Overstreet likewise is an expert telegrapher, and holds a position as operator in the railway station at Lebanon, Kentucky; Margaret is the wife of Granville Durham, and they reside in the City of Akron, Ohio, where Mr. Durham is connected with one of the extensive rubber manufacturing industries; and Addison B. Overstreet is chief train dispatcher at Inderlin, North Dakota. The Maiden name of his wife was Edna Jackson, and she was a resident of London, Kentucky, at the time of their marriage.

Owing to the death of his father, the early educational advantages of Jesse W. Overstreet were limited to the home schools. In the early part of his life, his studies had been pursued principally during the winter terms when his services were not in requisition in connection with farm work. His father's old homestead farm comprised 200 acres. At the age of eighteen years he found employment on the farm of one of his cousins, and he was thus engaged about three years, with compensation of ten dollars a month. His earnings were largely applied to helping his widowed mother, and by this time his next younger brother, John C., had become old enough to assume a goodly share of the management of the old home farm. For five or six years Mr. Overstreet was engaged in the timber business, in which his operations were attended with success, two years of this interval having been passed in Tennessee, where his two youngest brothers were residing.

On the 18th of December, 1890, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Overstreet to Miss Mary F. Bowling, of Parksville, Boyle County, she being a daughter of the late Evan and Martha Frances (Tucker) Bowling, both natives of Kentucky and both members of the Christian Church. During the first year after his marriage Mr. Overstreet conducted operations on a rented farm in his native county, and upon the death of his mother, in 1900, he was appointed executor of the estate and guardian of his younger brothers and sisters. He at this time assumed the active management of the old home farm, and as the younger children attained to maturity he and his brother John C. purchased their interests and assumed full ownership of the farm. In 1907 Mr. Overstreet rented a farm near Parksville, and there he continued successful operations until 1915. He and his brother sold the old home farm in the year 1910, and during the interval between 1907 and 1910 the two brothers were associated in the buying and selling of leaf tobacco. In the latter year Mr. Overstreet formed a connection with the People's Tobacco Warehouse Company at Danville, this company having been organized for the establishing of a loose-leaf tobacco market and warehouse at the judicial center of Boyle County. The capitalization of the enterprise was $75,000, and such has been the success of the enterprise that operations are at the present time based on a capital stock of $125,000. Mr. Overstreet has been closely and influentially identified with the development and upbuilding of this important industrial enterprise, and is now assistant manager as well as a director of the company, which handled in 1919 more than 6,000,000 pounds of leaf. Later he organized the warehouse facilities compelled the company in that season. He has won a high business standing among the leading doing business in the county. Mr. Overstreet is also an independent tobacco buyer and broker, and in this individual way he successfully handled more than 200,000 pounds of tobacco in the season of 1910. Among the leading stockholders and a director of the Peoples Savings Bank & Trust Company at Perryville, this being one of the important and well ordered financial institutions of Boyle County.

Mr. Overstreet is a staunch democrat and has given effective service as deputy sheriff of Boyle County, and while he has no ambition for political office he is a loyal and vigorous supporter of the cause of the democratic party. He assumed the office of deputy sheriff in 1917, and continues the incumbent of this position at the time of this writing in the autumn of 1920. He is affiliated with McGuire Lodge No. 209, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, in his home city of Perryville, and among other Masonic organizations with which he is actively identified are Ryon Commandery of Knights Templars at Danville, and Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Louisville.

His wife is active members of the Christian Church at Perryville. He is in the most significant sense the architect of his own fortune and is known as a reliable, progressive and successful business man and a citizen of those sterling qualities that ever beget objective confidence and esteem.

To Mr. and Mrs. Overstreet have been born six children: Macie Lee, who was born February 27, 1902, was graduated in the Perryville High School as a member of the class of 1920. Jesse W., Jr., March 23, 1913; Nancy Bowling, June 1, 1916; and Mary Catherine, June 20, 1918.

GEORGE W. CRANE. Depending entirely upon his own powers and efforts in making his way to the goal of independence and prosperity, Mr. Crane proved himself well fortified for this achievement, and he has become not only one of the prominent and successful representatives of farm industry in Boyle County but has also attained to prominence in connection with the buying and shipping of live stock and the handling of tobacco leaf as a buyer and shipper. He maintains his residence on his fine farm near Perryville, and is one of the vigorous and influential business men of Boyle County.

On his father's farm three miles west of Perryville, this county, on the Springfield Turnpike, Mr. Crane was born January 24, 1873. His boyhood was marked by his assisting in farm work and by attending school during the winter terms. Upon attaining to his legal majority he left the parental home, and shortly afterward he sold his interest in his marriage to Miss Myrtle Bottoms, of Boyle County. Thereafter he farmed about five years on rented land in the western part of this county, and he terminated his lease of this farm after the death of his wife, in 1890. Of his two children the elder is Miss Chloe, who remains at the paternal home, and the younger, Alma, is the wife of Egbert Coyle, a prosperous young farmer in Boyle County.

In the year 1890 Mr. Crane engaged in the general merchandising business, and in this connection his administrative and financial resources were severely tested. He extended credit to numerous tobacco growers; times were hard and collections slow; but by perseverance and careful management he overcame obstacles and placed himself well on the road toward financial independence. Fair and honorable in all dealings, Mr. Crane has been regarded as a vigorous and resourceful business man. After the death of his wife he purchased a farm in the western part of Boyle County, and there he continued his activities as an agriculturist and stock-grower until 1918, when he sold the property and purchased his present well improved farm of 152 acres, the same being situated on the Mitchellburg Turnpike and two miles south of Perryville. He gives special attention to the raising of tobacco in connection with other normal departments of farm enterprise, and in the control of a large and important business in the buying and shipping of live stock he is senior member of the firm of Crane & Harmon. The firm makes large shipments annually to the markets in Louisville and Cincinnati, and in addition to his alliance with this enterprise Mr. Crane is individually engaged in the buying of leaf tobacco.
Thus he is doing an admirable service in the moving of farm products and is contributing much to the industrial prosperity of the county in which his activities are centered. He is a member of the directorate of the Vandalia Savings Bank & Trust Company of Perryville, is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and is a staunch democrat in political allegiance. In 1895 Mr. Crane contracted a second marriage, when Miss Mamie Carpenter became his wife. No children have been born of this union.

The Crane family was pioneer distinction in Kentucky, as was W. Crane, father of the subject of this sketch, who was born in Boyle County in the year 1837. His wife was also born in this county.

JAMES GAYLE. Few men of Carroll County, Kentucky, are better known in business circles than James Gayle, president of the Carrollton & Worthville Railroad Company. To some men, of which class Mr. Gayle is an example, the varied responsibilities attaching to large business seem to present attractions early and even persist as paramount interests throughout life. Nature has so equipped them that they can call to their aid unlimited resources in the way of business acumen, sound judgment and commercial foresight. Entering the business field from the schoolroom, when but eighteen years old, Mr. Gayle advanced rapidly from one position to another, and for the past sixteen years has been the able and resourceful president of a very necessary transportation line operating from Carrollton to Worthville to connect with that great railroad artery, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad.

James Gayle was born May 5, 1871, at New Liberty in Owen County, Kentucky. His parents were James and Sarah (Green) Gayle, the latter of whom was born at New Liberty in 1831, and spent her life there, her death occurring February 21, 1921. James Gayle, Sr., was born in Owen County, Kentucky, in 1825, and died at New Liberty in 1897. His father, John Gayle, was born in Virginia and came to Owen County, Kentucky, shortly after his marriage. He acquired a large landed estate there, and his farm of 1,500 acres is still in the possession of the family, having been divided among his grandchildren. This large body of land was entirely surrounded by a one-panel fence, John Gayle having devoted an acre of land to this purpose. His son, James Gayle, spent almost his entire life at New Liberty, where he was active in the affairs of the democratic party and for twenty-one years conducted the leading hotel in the place. He was a charter member of the Masonic Lodge at New Liberty and also of the lodge of Odd Fellows, and was a man dependable in every relation of life. To his marriage with Sarah Green the following children were born: Lula, who died at Gainesville, Georgia, in 1918, was the wife of Rev. M. M. Riley, pastor of a Baptist Church at Gainesville; Eva, who is the widow of B. E. Garvey, for many years a prosperous tobacco dealer at New Liberty; D. H., who is a retired banker now living at Covington, Kentucky; and still a director in the Fifth Third National Bank of Cincinnati; R. H., who died at Owenton, Kentucky, when aged forty-eight years, was cashier of the Peoples Bank of Owenton; June W., who is a resident of Owenton, is a retired banker and capitalist; Walter S., who was president of the First National Bank of Richmond, Indiana, at the time of his death; Corinne, who is the wife of Rev. P. E. Burroughs, a Baptist clergyman; He became connected with the printing and publishing company at Nashville, Tennessee; A. D., who succeeded his brother Walter S., as president of the First National Bank of Richmond, Indiana. The banking business has been well represented in this family.

James Gayle attended the public schools of New Liberty, Kentucky, until eighteen years old, when he entered the Citizens Bank of New Liberty as a bookkeeper, in which capacity he continued for a year and a half. During the following year he was bookkeeper for the Main Jellico Mountain Coal Company, at Jellico, Tennessee, and then became manager of this company's City Coal Company at Knoxville, in which position of responsibility he remained for two years. In 1895 he located at Winchester, Kentucky, where for two years he was engaged in a retail coal and lumber business, but in 1897 was recalled to New Liberty and was elected cashier of the Citizens Bank and served as such until 1904, when he was elected cashier of the Third National Bank and served another year. In the fall of 1905 Mr. Gayle came to Carrollton as president of the Carrollton & Worthville Railroad, and has successfully operated it ever since, his offices being situated on the corner of Fifth and Polk streets.

At Carrollton in 1899 Mr. Gayle was married to Miss Prudence Wilson, who is a daughter of the late R. J. and Belle (Scott) Wilson, the latter of whom resides with Mr. and Mrs. Gayle. Mr. Wilson was engaged for many years in the marble and granite business in this city and was an expert stonemason. Mrs. Gayle is a graduate of the high school of Lancaster, Ohio. They have one child, Evelyn Garvey, who was born January 24, 1912.

In political life Mr. Gayle is a democrat of the standard old school. In 1909 he was elected mayor of Carrollton and continued in office until 1917, giving the city a vigorous business administration. During the World war he took an active part in all local measures of a patriotic nature and contributed generously to the different organizations that gave such timely help to the government. In addition to his other interests he leases and operates a farm in Carroll County. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and belongs also to New Liberty Lodge and Odd Fellows, of which he is a past grand, to Carrollton Lodge of the Knights of Pythias, and to the Elks. Mr. Gayle has been a member of the Baptist Church since his youth, and is Sunday School superintendent of the church at Carrollton. Personally he is of pleasant but dignified demeanor, his attitude instinctively arousing confidence and friendship.

WILLIAM ROBERT HEFFIN, M. D. A physician and surgeon whose practice has been done in Newport for over twenty years, Doctor Heffin is not only an earnest and hard working member of his profession but a public spirited citizen whose presence has been greatly appreciated by this community.

Doctor Heffin was born at Maysville, Kentucky, March 10, 1870. His grandfather was a native of Scotland and an early settler of Springfield, Illinois. James A. Heffin, father of Doctor Heffin, was born at Springfield in 1846, and was reared in that city until 1862. Then, at the age of sixteen, he ran away from home and joined the Union army, and throughout the remainder of the war was a member of the Eleventh Kentucky Cavalry. He participated in the battle of Stone's Gap in Eastern Tennessee, at Murfreesboro, and in many skirmishes and campaigns, remaining at his post of duty until the end of the war. He then elected to remain in Kentucky as a permanent home, and settled at Maysville, where he served as United States marshal during Garfield's administration and subsequently he held the office of police magistrate of Maysville. He resides in that office when he died in 1892. He was a prominent republican in his section of the state, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was a Knight Templar Mason, was affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic, and was a charter member of Limestone Lodge, Knights of Pythias, at Maysville, and served as a colonel in the Second Regiment of the Uniformed Rank of the order. James A. Heffin married Mary Crane, who resides at Maysville, where she was born in 1837. Her father, Paul Crane, who was born in Ireland in 1817, was an early farmer and business man at Maysville and long prominent in that locality, where he died in 1877. Doctor Heflin was the second in a family of seven children, the others being: Emma, wife of Christ Brown, a traveling salesman with home at Maysville; Ida, of Cleveland, Ohio, with Missouri, a teacher of music; Mollie, wife of Charles Buck, a mechanic living at Indian- nelas; James, an engineer with the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, a resident of Covington; Coleman, a mechanic at Maysville; and Catherine, wife of Dave Bierley, who is in the income tax department of the Government and lives at Louisville.

William Robert Heflin graduated from the Maysville High School in 1893. For about a year he worked and studied in a doctor's office, and in the fall of 1891 entered the medical department of the University of Cincinnati, from which he was graduated M. D. in 1894. Doctor Heflin returned to the University of Cincinnati for a general post-graduate course in 1908. His first two years of practice, beginning in 1894, was at Owensboro. He was then appointed by Governor Wadlin as a medical assistant at the Central Kentucky Hospital for Colored. Doctor Heflin was identified with that institution for five years. Since the winter of 1900 he has had his office and home at Newport, his offices being located in the Virginia Building at Third Street and Washington Avenue.

Doctor Heflin is surgeon general of the Kentucky Brigade, Uniformed Rank, Knights of Pythias, and is very active in that order, being affiliated with Eureka Lodge No. 5, Knights of Pythias at Newport, and Fewless Division No. 3 of the Uniformed Rank. He is a member of the Campbell-Kenton Medical Society, the State Medical Association and the American Medical Association. During the World war he was the medical examiner for the County Draft Board, a work which took much of his time, and in addition he contributed of his personal means to the various quotas assigned to the county.

Doctor Heflin is a republican, is a member of Grace Methodist Episcopal Church at Newport, is affiliated with Maysville Lodge No. 52, F. and A. M., Olive Branch Chapter No. 76, R. A. M., Newport Commandery No. 13, K. T., Syrian Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Cincinnati, Newport Aerie No. 280, Fraternal Order of Eagles, and Newport Lodge No. 510, Loyal Order of Moose.

His home is a residence, with all the modern improvements, on Washington Avenue. In the spring of 1896, at Maysville he married Miss Anna G. Walsh, daughter of John and Kate (Atherton) Walsh, residents of Maysville, where her father is in school work.

EUGENE HARMON. A record of admirable achievement has been that of this well known and highly esteemed young business man of Boyle County, and this record bears evidence also of his filial and fraternal loyalty and unselfishness. Mr. Harmon is now giving much of his time and attention to the buying and selling of farm, city and village property, and is associated also in the buying and shipping of live stock, his home and business headquarters being at Perryville.

Mr. Harmon was born in Boyle County, September 14, 1883, and is a son of Silas J. and Martha (Crane) Harmon, both of whom were born and reared in this section of the Blue Grass State. Of the children Eugene was the second in order of birth, the eldest being Virgil, who is now the wife of Marius Cocanougher, a successful farmer in Boyle County, and the date of whose birth was September 12, 1886. Herbert, the third child, was born September 28, 1884, and he is a civil engineer by vocation. He married Miss Salida Horn, and they maintain their residence in the City of Louisville. Myrtle, who was born November 13, 1887, is the wife of Robert Isham, a farmer in Boyle County. Omar F., who was born July 19, 1891, married Miss Mamie Mullens and is engaged in farm enterprise in Boyle County. Newton, who was born July 9, 1893, entered the nation's service in the late World war, in which he sacrificed his life in battle in the Argonne Forest conflict in France. He was a member of Company G, Thirty-eighth Infantry, Third Division of the United States Army, at Perryville, and was killed in action in France, and he died a patriot's death, on the 11th of October, 1918. Sadie, who was born July 1, 1895, is the wife of Joseph Wycoff, a prosperous farmer and stock man of Boyle County. Pearl, who was born June 16, 1900, was graduated from the Perryville High School, as a member of the class of 1918, and there- after she continued her studies for three terms in the Kentucky State Normal School at Perryville. She is a young woman of fine intellectual and musical attainments, has marked ability also as an elocutionist, and for two years was a successful and popular teacher in the public schools. She is a most devoted member of the Baptist Church at Perryville, being secretary of its Sunday school and otherwise active in church work, besides which she is a popular factor in the representa- tion of the church in its official activities. She has accor- ded earnest co-operation to her brother Eugene in the maintaining of an attractive home, and she has the high regard of all who have come within the sphere of her gracious influence. William, the youngest of the children, was born September 17, 1902, and in his vacation period of the year 1919 he rented land and raised tobacco, his crop being sold for $725. The loved and devoted mother remained in the home established and maintained by her only surviving son. Eugene Harmon was united in marriage to Silas J. Harmon was authorized November 6, 1879. She is an earnest member of the Baptist Church, in the faith of which she carefully reared her children.

Eugene Harmon found the period of his boyhood and early youth diversified by work on the farm and attending school during three months of each year. At the age of eighteen years he initiated his independent career, and he has depended entirely upon his resources in fighting the stern battle of life. At the age just noted he went to Indianapolis, Indiana, where he was employed one year in the Perry Carriage Factory. During the following year he was in the employ of a contractor at Zion City, Illinois, and the ensuing three years he was engaged in farm work in Mc- nos County. He received $25 a month during his nine months of active service, and during the intervening winter months received his board only in compensation for his service in the feeding of cattle. He carefully conserved his earnings and upon his return to Kentucky became associated with Marius Cocanougher, his brother-in-law, in the purchase and conducting of a general store in the little village of Enid, Boyle County. At the expiration of six months he purchased the firm interest of Mr. A. Holland, and in 1908 Mr. Harmon purchased a farm of 150 acres two miles north of Perryville. On this farm he established his mother and the seven younger chil- dren, all of whom at that time depended upon him for their support. Farm products then commanded low prices, and careful and economical management was demanded on the part of the energetic and determined young farmer in gaining sufficient returns to enable him to give his young family the opportunities to which he himself had been denied. With the passing years his brothers grew older and began to give effective aid in the work and management of the farm. Gradually success came to the faithful and progressive young farm-owner, and he added to his resources by doing contract work in the construction of turnpike roads. In 1910 he formed a partnership with George W. Crane, of whom mention is made on other pages, and the firm of Crane & Harmon was engaged in road building three years, at the expiration of which the enterprise of the firm was diverted to the buying and shipping of cattle and other livestock, in which field a large and prosperous business was developed. In 1916 Mr. Harmon turned the management of the farm over to his brother Newton, who two years later entered the United States Army and he—sacrificed his life in the World war, as already noted in a preceding paragraph. When his brother thus entered the army Mr. Harmon at once faced the situation and undertook to take upon himself the management of the business, and not hedges himself in with mere personal interests, but has given his influence and aid in the furtherance of measures and enterprises tending to advance the communal welfare. His name is still enrolled on the list of eligible young bachelors in Boyle County and it is scarcely necessary to say that here his circle of friends is larger than it used to be. Mr. Harmon has made many friends in his career and has manifested a fine sense of personal stewardship and looks upon his achievement as but incidental to the general trend of events in his career. He wants no praise, but it certainly "is coming to him."

CHARLEY ROSEL. The Austrian emigrant to the United States always finds an asylum and an opportunity along legitimate lines ultimately reaching a state of healthy prosperity not frequently afforded by conditions in the old world. These remarks apply with full force to Charley Rosel, a well-known citizen of Junction City, Kentucky.

Charley Rosel was born in Vienna, Austria, January 17, 1875, and in 1881, when he was about eight years of age, emigrated with his father to America. Living in this country the Rosel family came on to Kentucky and settled in Boyle County, and in the public schools of that county Charley Rosel received his early education. When he had reached the age of eighteen he started out to make his own way, and left home to work in a dairy, receiving $2.50 per week, and remained thus engaged for six months. Later he applied himself to learn the trade of a millwright, which he followed for eleven years at Silver Creek, having charge of the mechanical department for the Bernheim Distillery Company.

In June, 1911, Mr. Rosel moved to Junction City and engaged in running a restaurant, starting with a capital of $500. From this modest beginning and by careful management he has incessantly enlarged his capital, purchased ground, and built the present Hotel Rosel in 1914. The hotel is well equipped, enjoys a good business, and of the entire undertaking Mr. Rosel is sole owner and operator. The hotel is now well established and has a well-earned reputation for everything essential to a first-class hostelry.

In 1905 Mr. Rosel was united in marriage to Bregetta Nosko, a native of Bohemia, where she was born in 1880, the marriage being celebrated in Junction City. They are the parents of one child, Joseph Rosel, born in 1907, who now attends the public schools.

Alois Rosel, father of Charley Rosel, came to America in 1883 and settled in Boyle County, taking out his naturalization papers in 1888. He married Antonia Sadare. The elder Rosel acted as emigration agent for some years and colonized the settlement known as "New Austria," which covers the district styled the Knobs, southwest of Junction City. Here he located about fifty European families, who settled and improved these lands, built schools and churches, and by exercise of industry and thrift have prospered. Alois Rosel died in 1914, deservedly regretted by all who knew him, but by none more so than those people to whom he was indebted for introducing him; Charley, Joseph, Rudolph and John, the latter residing with his mother on the old home farm near Junction City, and which was purchased shortly after the Rosels settled here, Joseph Rosel is a prosperous farmer and owns a holding near the home place. Rudolph lives in Danville, a traveling salesman, representing the Ideal Manufacturing Company of Louisville, Kentucky.

Charley Rosel is an excellent example of the foreigner who makes good through energy and industry. He is satisfied with America and is a warm supporter of its ideals and institutions.

JOHN RUSSELL YEAGER. As one of the successful farmers of Boyle County, John Russell Yeager is living up to the traditions of one of the old families of this section of Kentucky. He began his career young, has been industrious and progressive, and he and his good wife have always recognized that life is an opportunity for enjoying the good things of the world as well as for doing work and accumulating wealth. Mr. Yeager, whose name is one of the attractive ones along Lancaster Pike and situated 3/4 miles east of Danville, was born in Boyle County January 13, 1878. His family came out of Culpeper, Virginia, in 1805, and in that year, more than a century ago, settled on land in the same community where John Russell Yeager now lives, and some of that land has been owned out of the family. His father, William Wesley Yeager, was born in Boyle County January 2, 1836, and died July 20, 1915. On October 11, 1866, he married Sarah Figg, who was born at Carrollton, Kentucky, April 5, 1841, and is now living at Danville.

The only child of his parents, John Russell Yeager grew up on the old homestead and finished his education in the Hogscat Academy, a military school at Danville, during the fall term of 1890, and at the University of Kentucky at Erwin, of Danville. She was born in Lincoln County October 8, 1879, and completed her education in the Kentucky College for Women at Danville and the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. Her people were also pioneer Kentuckians. Her father, Samuel Erwin, was born in Cartersville, Georgia, July 8, 1830, and died March 29, 1888. September 1, 1889, he married Elizabeth Bright Lillard, who was born September 8, 1849. Mr. and Mrs. Erwin had five children, one dying in infancy. Samuel Erwin, Jr., who was born August 24, 1881, in Lincoln County, and is now a resident of Salt Lake City, enlisted in the Canadian army before the United States declared war on Germany and saw some of the heaviest fighting in Flanders, and. Frances Elizabeth Erwin, sister of Mr. Yeager born May 22, 1888, is the wife of Herbert S. Howard, a traveling salesman living at Meriden, Mississippi. Mrs. Yeager's brother John was born April 22, 1885, and died September 13, 1893.

Mr. Yeager was eighteen and his wife sixteen when they were married, and they began at once the task of building a home and achieving a definite place for themselves. For eight years they lived at Roselville in Boyle County, and since 1907 have occupied their present home on the Lancaster Pike, where Mr. Yeager is handling a large farming proposition of 440 acres, devoted to general crops and live stock.

Mr. and Mrs. Yeager have an interesting family of four children, whose education and training they have carefully supervised. Elizabeth, the oldest, was born March 5, 1807, and on October 8, 1919, became the wife of V. P. Cannon, of Columbia, Missouri, but now in the oil business at Wilson, Oklahoma. William, the oldest son, was born January 30, 1808, completed his education at Center College in Danville, and is already in the ranks of the progressive farming farmers in Kentucky. Harry, born March 19, 1900, was a student in Center College and a member of the Students Army Training Corps, and is associated with his brother William in farming. Lewis Churchill, the youngest of the family, was born May 26, 1902, and has also had the advantages of Center College.

MARSHALL CRITTENDON CADDELL. One of the most interesting business enterprises in Central Kentucky is that represented by the name Marshall Crittendon Caddell, whose business associate and the former responsible manager of the business itself is E. W. Reeves.

Mr. Caddell was born on a small farm in Whitley County, Kentucky, in 1860. He had a common school education and when about twenty-five years old, in 1885, enrolling at the University of Louisville, he started a newspaper in service at a salary of $800 a year. He became a veteran in this service, continuing for about thirty years, his chief run being between Cincinnati and Chattanooga, though in later years between Danville and Cincinnati. His salary never exceeded $100 a month. But while one of the most efficient men in that department of the postal service, he was utilizing his opportunities to study and observe, and for nine years kept in close touch with world markets. He was also living on a strictly economical plan, and invested his savings from time to time in some of the stable stocks, especially those represented by enterprises dealing in commodities required for food and living. He never invested in a questionable stock, made only one investment in which he lost, and his rule was to buy when the market was low and only in quantities he could pay for.

About 1916 he began to close out his investments, and with the advice and co-operation of his close friend, E. W. Reeves, began turning his resources into the Blue Grass lands near Burgin, Kentucky. By 1917 his investments had accumulated about 800 acres, representing in value about $120,000. By the fall of 1917 plans had advanced to the point of execution of a project long considered between the two friends. With E. W. Reeves as general manager there was developed the development of an extensive stock and grain producing business. The war was an adverse factor, but the plans have made steady advance and the business is already productive. The primary and leading idea of the business is the production of food commodities. They look upon a farm not as an enterprise subject altogether to natural hazards and fortunes, but as a factory and system requiring all the efficiency displayed in a modern well-arranged manufacturing establishment. The farm is being developed for the production of dairy and meat products, the livestock, all thoroughbreds, consisting of Black Angus and Jersey cattle and Duroc Jersey hogs. They have also raised about thirty acres of tobacco annually, but this crop was discontinued with the 1921 season. The plans for the 1921 crop provided for 325 acres of wheat, 200 acres of corn, and 300 acres of soybeans, the remainder of the land is pasture and meadow. Besides the large herd of cattle, mules are an important side line.

Mr. Caddell finally resigned from the mail service July 1, 1917. During 1920 he was in McCracken County caring for his aged mother. He and E. W. Reeves were companions in the mail service for ten years, and Mr. Reeves resigned his post October 1, 1917, to take the entire responsibilities of managing the extensive farm. He is himself a practical farmer, for a number of years was a teacher, and entered the mail service in 1902.

Mr. Reeves was born in Lincoln County, Missouri, June 13, 1870, but was reared in Henry County, Kentucky, the native home of his parents. He had a common and normal school education. He married Miss Sarah Winkler, of Madison County, Kentucky, and their daughter, Maude E., is Mrs. John W. VanArsdale. Mr. and Mrs. Burgin, with their son, are teaching in the city schools.

Mr. Reeves is a man of broad intellectual outlook, and while in the mail service was a student of business. His ambition was to share actively in the great enterprise for increasing the world's supply of food commodities, but early in 1921, after having carried the burden of the business alone through the trying war period, his health began to fail and he resigned from the duty, and returned to his family, with the hope of his "first love," that of teaching. He expects to spend the remainder of his life training children.

E. D. Green, a progressive farmer and citizen of Burgin, has been closely associated with Mr. Reeves since the early inception of the business, and on the advice of the latter the former was selected as manager, and now the work is progressing nicely under the leadership of Mr. Green, Mr. Reeves having only an advisory part in the work.

MRS. MARY LINELLE (EUBANKS) JONES. Wholly devoted to home and domestic duties, doing through all the best years of her life the lowly but sacred work that comes within her sphere, there is not much to record concerning the life of the average woman. And yet what station so dignified, what relation so lovely and tender, and immemorial as that of home-making wifehood and motherhood. As man's equal in every qualification save the physical, and his superior in the gentle, tender and loving amenities of life, woman fully merits a much larger notice than she ordinarily receives, and the writer of these lines is optimistic enough to indulge the belief that in a no distant future she will receive due credit for the important part she plays in life's great drama and be accorded her proper place in history and biography.

Mary Linelle (Eubanks) Jones was born June 20, 1868, the daughter of Mack B. and Mary (Hubble) Eubanks. After completing the common school course she entered Hamilton College, a Christian institution at Lexington, Kentucky, where she was graduated. On March 12, 1918, she became the wife of Henry Jones, a native of Washington County, and they are the parents of a son, Guy McClellan, Jr., who was born February 20, 1919. They are now engaged in farming the well-known Eubanks farm on the Lancaster Pike, about one and a half miles east of Danville, where they are meeting with splendid success.

Mrs. Jones' paternal grandfather, Benjamin Eubanks, was born at Pulaski, Kentucky, in 1830, and was a farmer by vocation. When twenty-three years of age he was married to Sarah Surber, who was born in Pulaski on July 20, 1832. He is deceased, being survived by his widow, who is living near Stanford, Kentucky, with her daughter, Mrs. Malissa Underwood.

Mack B. Eubanks was born in Stanford, Lincoln County, Kentucky, on October 30, 1864, and died September 18, 1917. In 1892 he was married to Mary Hubble, who was born in Danville and died July 23, 1918, the day she was fifty-five years old. After their marriage they located on a farm on the Lancaster Pike, six miles from Danville, where they successively operated their land and gave special attention to the breeding and raising of mules. Mr. Eubanks was an intelligent and shrewd farmer and was acknowledged one of the best farmers in his section of the country. Suddenly, about fifteen years ago, he moved to the present Eubanks farm, which was formerly the estate of William Crow and known in early days as Crow's Station. This romantic old homestead was erected over 150 years ago, and is a two-story stone structure, being still in a splendid state of preservation. In former days it was occupied as a tavern and was a popular meeting place for the people of the early days.

Mrs. Jones had one sister, Lucile Eubanks, who was born September 10, 1884, and who graduated from Hamilton College at Lexington. She was married in 1913, and her death occurred on January 2, 1914.

Andrew E. Cole, or Jack Cole, as he is known by his business signature and his personal friends and acquaintances, has lived at Paducah since early boyhood, learned the trade of carpenter here, was associated with his father in the contracting business, and for the past eleven years has been engaged in that business on his own account. He is one of Paducah’s able business men and esteemed citizens.

He was born in Dresden, Tennessee, May 1, 1878. His paternal ancestors came from Scotland and settled in North Carolina in Colonial times. The founder of the family in Tennessee was his great-grandfather, a native of North Carolina, who did the pioneer work of developing a farm in Weakley County, Tennessee, where he died at the venerable age of ninety-six. The grandfather John Cole, was born in Weakley County in 1825, spent all his life in that county as a farmer and still Baptists, and in 1888. He married a Miss Speed, a native of Tennessee.

J. A. Cole, father of Jack Cole, was born near Dresden, Weakley County, Tennessee, in 1847, acquired his education in that rural community, and at the age of seventeen enlisted in the Confederate Army, serving the last two years of the war. After the war he became a farmer, but in 1890 moved to Paducah, Kentucky, where he remained until he retired in 1908 he was a successful contractor and builder and has to his credit many of the substantial residences and business houses of the city. He served several terms as a member of the Paducah School Board, is a democrat, a Mason and a member of the Baptist Church. He has been three times married. His first wife was Miss Durham, who died in Weakley County, Tennessee, mother of the following children: R. L., a Baptist clergyman at Lufkin, Texas; Walter, a. A. McFall, an Oklahoma farmer; and Kate, wife of Tom Tansel, a farmer in Gibson County, Tennessee. J. A. Cole married for his second wife Mrs. Mary (Travis) Case, who was born in Weakley County in 1847 and died at Union City, Tennessee, in 1882. She was the mother of three children: J. T., a railway engineer living at Little Rock, Arkansas; Jack or Andrew E., and William, who died in infancy. The third wife of J. A. Cole was Mrs. Ann (Free-

The Junior High School; and Bessie, born in 1909, a pupil in the grammar schools. The mother of these children was Miss Mary A. (Travis) Cole, who was born in Weakley County, Tennessee, and was subsequently married Miss Iva Morrison, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Morrison, substantial farming people of Livingston County, Kentucky. To this union were born three children: Frances, in 1913; Elizabeth, in 1915, and Clarence, in 1917.

Chris Hehr for many years has been a prominent figure in the community of Broadwell in Harrison County, where he is former postmaster, was proprietor of a blacksmith shop, and is still giving more or less active supervision to his extensive farming interests. His home is on the Cynthiana and Leesburg Pike, seven miles south of Cynthiana.

Mr. Hehr was born at Tell Cynthiana, July 15, 1867, a son of John and Fannie (Flad) Hehr. His parents were natives of Germany and came as young people to the United States. They were married at Cynthiana, Kentucky, later lived in Greene County, Indiana, then at Crittend Kentu, Chris Hehr has lived practically all his life in Kentucky. He grew up in Harrison County, where he had the advantages of the public schools at Cynthiana. From his father he learned the blacksmith’s trade, and he worked at it in Cynthiana and for a number of years conducted a shop of his own at Broadwell. He and his brothers, George and John, from their work paid the expenses of their sisters through school.

Mr. Hehr’s first wife was Mollie Duckworth of Carlisle, Kentucky. She left three sons, Garrett, Owen and Kenneth. Mr. Hehr then married Mary Florence, and by this marriage has a son, Frazier. Mr. and Mrs. Hehr are members of the Mount Pleasant Presbyterian Church. He is a democrat and for twenty years was postmaster at Broadwell. He lives in Broadwell Village, where he has a comfortable residence and three acres of ground, but his main farm comprises 223 acres and is one of the valuable properties in that rural community.

Thomas Clelland Coleman, sheriff of Mercer County, and long one of the prominent business men of Harrodsburg, is one of those rare individuals whose capacities and talents seem to expand and improve through adversity and misfortune. When he was about four years of age he was thrown from a horse, and the accident deprived him of the use of one arm. Men with a complete equipment of physical faculties have on the average a strenuous time in achieving success, but in spite of his physical handicap and the lack of financial resources in his early youth Mr. Coleman has achieved what most people would regard as the highest degree of good fortune and prosperity, and also those assets of honor and distinction represented in community esteem.

Mr. Coleman was born on a farm in Mercer County, May 13, 1868, and is member of an old and prominent family of this section of Kentucky. He is descended from Robert E. Coleman, an Irishman, who was a Colonial settler in Virginia. A son of Robert E. was James Coleman, who came out of Virginia and was one of the earliest settlers in Kentucky. His great-great-grandfather was the great-grandfather of Sheriff Coleman. The grandfather was also named James Cole-
James Wilson Glover has been a resident of Dry Ridge since 1901. For over forty years he has been active in business as a leaf tobacco buyer, and is one of the largest independent dealers in that Kentucky staple at Dry Ridge. However, he is perhaps most widely known over Kentucky and other states as proprietor and owner of the Kentucky Carlisle Springs Hotel. His hotel is a great health resort, widely advertised especially for the facilities contributing to the comforts and pleasure of its guests, and also for the remarkable quality of the Kentucky Carlisle water.

Mr. Glover was born in Clark County, Kentucky, August 4, 1870. His grandfather, James Glover, was a native of Virginia and a pioneer farmer of Clark County, Kentucky, where he lived out his life. Peter Glover, father of James W., was born in Clark County in 1834, and for many years followed his trade as a blacksmith at Schoolsville in Clark County. He was born in 1833 moved to Winchester, where he continued his occupation until his death in 1901. He was a democrat in politics. In Clark County he married Martha Aldridge, who was born in Madison County, Kentucky, in 1843, and is now living at Winchester. She was the mother of four children: Fannie, wife of James McEwing, a blacksmith at Winchester; James Wilson; R. E. also a blacksmith at Winchester; and Ann Elizabeth, wife of Dr. G. W. Combs, Jr., doctor of Winchester.

James Wilson Glover was reared on his father's farm, attended school to the age of eighteen, and since then has been continuously interested in some phase of the tobacco business. He was employed in the tobacco warehouse at Schoolsville and then removed to Louisville where he was a leaf tobacco dealer two years.

On coming to Dry Ridge in 1901 he was tobacco buyer for the American Tobacco Company six years and for five years for the R. Reynolds Tobacco Company. Since leaving these companies in the relation of a buyer he has done an extensive independent business as a dealer in leaf tobacco.

Mr. Glover bought the Kentucky Carlisle Springs Hotel in December, 1917, and his individual enterprise and capital have been responsible for the wonderful changes and improvements that have made it one of the most popular resorts in the state. The increasing patronage was such that in 1917-18 he made additions that doubled the capacity. In 1921 he completely remodeled all the buildings, introducing such modern improvements as mineral baths, steam vapor baths, electric lights, running water system. Mr. Glover has purchased twenty-five acres of land near the hotel. On this land is a lake of two acres and forty feet deep, fed by natural springs. He has set on to shade trees which make a veritable park of the land, and his plans contemplate the building of a new hotel as an annex and also a sanitarium. The hotel is situated on the Dixie Highway, and convenient to the facilities of the Cincinnati Southern Railroad.

One of the most valuable assets of the institution is the Kentucky Carlisle well, 1103 feet deep, the water from which has been pronounced a specific in many cases of chronic disease, and some remarkable cures are credited to the water. Its popularity is such that large quantities of the water are now shipped to all parts of the United States. A chemical analysis of the mineral element, representing grains per United States Gallon, is as follows: Calcium carbonate 9.50, magnesium carbonate 5.50, sodium sulphate, anhydrous 2831.25, sodium bicarbonate 3.92, sodium hydrosulphate 4.72, potassium sulphate 5.37, ferrous sulphide 1.67, strontium carbonate 0.67, lithium carbonate 27, sodium bromide 1.64, and sodium chloride 167.32.

Mr. Glover is a republican in politics. He was personally interested as a worker in all the patriotic drives in this section of Grant County during the World war.

Vol. V-15
September 9, 1803, at Dry Ridge, he married Miss Rowena May Steers, daughter of W. H. and Elizabeth (Conrad) Steers, now deceased. Her father was a Grant County farmer. Mrs. Glover finished her education in the Indiana Normal School at Valparaiso, and for three years before her marriage was assistant in the Farmers Bank of Equity at Dry Ridge.

William Calvin Clark, vice president and general manager of the Clark-Lack Grocer Company, Incorporated, wholesale, has long been one of the dependable business men of Paducah. He is an individual and as member of his company throughout a wide territory. Mr. Clark was born at Union City, Tennessee, on October 29, 1872, a son of T. R. Clark, still a resident of Union City. He was born in Hickman County, Kentucky, in 1848, and lived there until after his marriage, when he took his family to Union City. At that time he embarked in a transfer business and is still conducting it, and is now one of the best known men in his region. All his life he has been a strong democrat. From the day he joined the Christian Church he has been one of its most active workers, and is valued for his example as well as his more material contributions to its good works. T. R. Clark was married to Sarah Wilson, born in Hickman County, Kentucky, in 1855, and they had the following children: Charles Hinds; W. J. who is connected with the wholesale grocery house of J. R. Smith & Son of Paducah; Laura, who married Delos Paddock, a mining engineer, lives at Alberquerque, New Mexico; Flora, who married Mack Moore. Lives at Trenton, Tennessee, where Mr. Moore is in the electrical supply business; Wylie, who is in the retail grocery business at Union City, Tennessee; Lena, who married a Mr. Bernard, of the second section of the Illinois Central Railroad, lives at Little Rock, Arkansas; and George, who lives at Saint Louis, Missouri.

After he had completed his educational training in the public schools of Union City, Tennessee, William C. Clark in 1887, immediately following his graduation, went into the retail grocery business in that city, and remained in it until 1893, when he terminated his connection there and in July of that year came to Paducah and embarked in the wholesale grocery trade, being associated in the years intervening between that date and 1912 with several very large houses. In the latter year he organized his present company, with headquarters at 301-303 Jefferson Street. The officers of the company are as follows: F. E. Lack, president; W. C. Clark, vice president and general manager; W. E. Kennedy, second vice president; and F. W. Earhart, secretary and treasurer. The company does a general wholesale grocery business, and its territory embraces Western Kentucky, Illinois, Tennessee and Alabama. During the time this company has been in the field its officials have built up for it an enviable reputation for fair dealing and prompt delivery, and its business is well connected in all conditions of the market and methods of transportation. Mr. Clark is also interested in the Coleman Clark Realty Company, which he is serving as secretary and treasurer. This company, together with the Clark-Lack Grocer Company, own one-fourth of the business block in which the offices, plant and warehouses of the two concerns are located. Another enterprise with which Mr. Clark is closely identified is the Clark-Custom Company, of which he is secretary, and he owns his modern residence at 223 North Ninth Street, one of the most substantial and beautiful of the city. In his political views Mr. Clark is a democrat, but he has never shown any tendency to come before the public for honors. The Broadway Methodist Episcopal Church holds his membership, and he is serving it as one of its stewards. Believing firmly as he does in the future of Paducah, he has long been one of the active members of the Rotary Club of that city.

In 1895 Mr. Clark was married at Paducah to Miss Ruth McNett, a daughter of Monroe and Kate (Orm) McNett, both of whom are deceased. Prior to his death Mr. McNett was in an electrical supply business in Covington, District of Columbia, and Mrs. Clark have one child, Edna, who was graduated from Georgetown College and is now at home.

Doris G. Reasonover. For a number of years after coming to Covington Mr. Reasonover was associated with one of the city's leading industries, cordage manufacturing. He is now a prosperous real estate and insurance business and has a group of other commercial interests that make him well known here and in other sections of Kentucky.

Mr. Reasonover was born in Smith County, Tennessee, November 10, 1872. His grandfather, Earl J. Reasonover, lived for many years in Smith County, and was a planter and slave holder both in that state and in Mississippi. His son, Earl J. Reasonover, Jr., was born in Smith County, Tennessee, in 1813, and died there in 1886. He owned a large plantation, and before the war worked it with slaves and was one of the pioneers in the importation of fine stock from abroad. He imported blooded horses and cattle from Spain and other parts of Europe. He was a Confederate soldier throughout the struggle between the North and the South, and was a staunch democrat in politics, a member of the Baptist Church and a Mason. By his first wife, who died in Smith County, he had the following children: Joseph and William, both deceased; Sarah, wife of William Foutch, a farmer in Smith County; Bettie, Martha, Lucy and Governor, all deceased. The second wife of Earl J. Reasonover was Nancy P. Woford, who was born in Smith County, in 1833 and died at Nashville, Tennessee, May 30, 1894. She became the mother of seven children: Christina, who died at Lebanon, Tennessee, wife of Thomas Lewis, a musician, who died in Smith County; J. M. Reasonover, who was a merchant and lumber dealer at Demons, New Mexico, and died there in 1913; R. P., judge of the Civil Courts at Nashville; Bette, who died in Smith County, Tennessee, at the age of twenty-two, wife of Morgan Wbotho, a farmer, and carpenter of that county; Doris G.; Catherine, wife of Lon Foutch, a farmer, stock broker and general merchandise broker in Putnam County; Tennessee; and Hatton, a cement contractor at Bartlesville, Oklahoma.

Doris G. Reasonover grew up on his father's plantation in Smith County, attended the country schools, and in 1891 graduated from Draughon's Business College at Nashville. He then became assistant superintendent of a cordage factory at Nashville. His knowledge of this business led him to Covington in 1893, and for thirteen years he was assistant superintendent of the Argonaut Cordage Mills. During 1906-07 he was assistant superintendent for the Joseph Joseph Company, having charge of their wadding factory. On his return to Covington he embarked in his present business as deputy sheriff of Kenton County, and then turned his attention to the general real estate, insurance and bonding business, and has developed one of the best services of that kind in Covington. His offices are at 529 Madison Avenue.

Mr. Reasonover is also vice president of the Green River Oil and Gas Company of Kentucky, is president of the Kentucky D. S. Company, a company of young men closely associated with the wonderful industrial development now going on in Eastern Kentucky. He also owns real estate in Covington, and his home is at the corner of Fifth and Scott streets. Mr. Reasonover is unmarried.

He was a working member of the local organization to carry out the patriotic program of Covington and Kenton County, and in every drive for funds or other purposes served as captain in Precinct B of the First Ward. He is a democrat, and is affiliated with Myrtle Lodge No. 5, Knights of Pythias, and was chief tribune of the State of Kentucky Knights of Pythias for three years. He is also a member of Covington Aerie No. 329, Fraternal Order of Eagles.

Alfred S. Nichols, manager of the Paducah Traction Company and the Paducah Light & Power Company, is a man of long planning and experience in the management and technical operation of public utilities. His service since 1908 has been with Stone & Webster, Incorporated, of Boston, the greatest single concern in the world in extent of capital and public utility properties, and an organization of thousands of high class technical experts and managers. As construction engineers, owners and operators of all classes of public utilities through chiefly electric companies, the interests of Stone & Webster are international.

The electric light, gas and traction interests of Paducah are managed by Stone & Webster. Mr. Nichols, who has been a resident of Paducah and in his present office since 1917, was born at Cheltenham, Gloucestershire, England, September 9, 1881. His ancestors have lived in Cheltenham and that vicinity for many generations. His father, Caleb Nichols, spent his life at Cheltenham, where he was born in 1853 and died in 1907. He owned and directed an extensive furniture business. He was a conservative in politics and a member of the Church of England. His wife was Alice Jane Sayce, who was born at St. Helen’s, Lancashire, England, in 1855, and died in 1891. All of their children came to America, Alfred S. being the oldest. Herbert died at Boston, Massachusetts, at the age of twenty-three, while employed by R. T. Hewson & Company, a firm of manufacturing jewelers. Charles J. is a mechanical engineer living at Boston, Frank is a worker in bronze in New York City, and Alice Caroline is the wife of Fred Pendoley, who is manager of Hood’s Creamery Company’s plant at Dorchester, Massachusetts.

Alfred S. Nichols was educated in the British National Schools at Cheltenham, and served a five years’ apprenticeship in the British Merchant Marine. While in that service he traveled practically all over the world. For three years he was in the government war service on a British transport throughout the period of the Boer war. From 1902 until September, 1903, he was in the Mediterranean service of the White Star Fleet.

Mr. Nichols came to the United States with the Honorable Artillery Company of London, under the command of the Earl of Denbigh, as special correspondent for the Boston Herald, following which he remained in Boston as a reporter on the Record for six months. In 1904 he entered the office of the fourth vice president of the Boston & Maine Railway Company, and was employed in railway work until 1908, when he entered the Boston service of Stone & Webster.

Soon afterward he was sent to the Middle West as assistant treasurer of the Mississippi River Power Company, while the enormous dam at Keokuk, Iowa, was in course of construction, thus developing the largest hydro-electric plant in the world. He was on duty at Keokuk and in that vicinity until 1913, when he was appointed manager of the Fort Madison Electric Company of Fort Madison, Iowa, and the Dallas City Light Company of Dallas City, Illinois, these also being Stone & Webster utilities. In May, 1917, he came to his present post at Paducah as manager of the Traction Company and the Light & Power Company. As manager he has charge of the street railway system of Paducah, also the light, power, gas and steam heating utilities of Paducah and vicinity. His offices are at 406 Broadway, and he has the supervision of a force of 150 employees.

Mr. Nichols while at Fort Madison, Iowa, served as president of its Board of Trade. He is a member of the Paducah Board of Trade, Country Club, Masonic Fraternity and Paducah Lodge No. 217 Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is also a member of the Rotary Club. Mr. Nichols in February, 1921, married Bernice Lowe Edwards, of Murray, Kentucky.

Amos Goodwin McCampbell. In the death of Amos Goodwin McCampbell, which occurred July 25, 1919, the community of Harrodsburg lost a citizen whose career had been interesting and at times spectacular, and who was widely known because of his connection with large business operations, important brokerage transactions and horse racing activities, no less than because of a strong and attractive personality that served to gain and secure to him immemnurable friendships in the various communities in which he centered his operation.

Colonel McCampbell was born October 6, 1846, at Charleston, Indiana, a son of William Logan and Delilah (Goodwin) McCampbell, his father being a merchant of Louisville. His early education was acquired in the public schools of his native place, following which he pursued a course at Princeton University, where he was a college-mate and personal acquaintance of Taft, subsequently Governor of the United States. Later he became a personal friend of Gen. U. S. Grant, and on numerous occasions enjoyed a sociable game of cards with the former president and great Civil war hero. Shortly after his graduation from Princeton he was united in marriage with Miss Sallie Bryant, a member of one of the most prominent families of Louisville, who died in 1910. There were six children born to this union: Roberta, Bryant, Leavell, Georgia, Letiah and Amos. Of these, Leavell and Bryant are very wealthy cotton manufacturers of the South, where they own and operate extensive mills.

Following his first marriage Colonel McCampbell engaged in the stock and bond brokerage business with his father-in-law, James B. Bryant, and subsequently conducted a brokerage business of his own at Louisville, where for many years he was rated among the city’s most wealthy men. This connection led him to purchase the universal membership on the Chicago Board of Trade, where for a time he was very successful, and his resources were reputed to be in the neighborhood of $500,000. He became vice president of the board and filled this office with credit, but at the time of the famous Harper wheats “corner” lost heavily and returned to Louisville, although he maintained his membership for several years. On his return to Louisville he formed a partnership with Joe Burt, under the firm style of Burt & Company, but this was dissolved at the time that Colonel McCampbell located on his valuable Mercer County farm, three and a half miles from Harrodsburg, which he had purchased about 1895, and on which he passed the last ten years of his life.

At one time Colonel McCampbell was a prominent figure in turf circles, owning a large stable of race horses which won him many valuable stakes. His trainer was Press West, one of the most famous in his line at one time, under whose skill he developed the great “Jim Gore,” one of the fastest animals of its day. In later years he gradually disposed of his racers and his once famous and often-seen colors disappeared from the tracks. During the more active years of his life Colonel McCampbell was one of the most popular members of the Pendennis Club, and his noted story-telling abilities always made him the center of an interested circle. After settling on his farm, a fine Blue-Grass estate, Colonel McCampbell gradually severed the ties of his former active life and devoted himself principally to tobacco raising, in which he was progressive and successful. For several years he had been suffering from Bright’s disease, and during the last few weeks of his life had been in such a serious condition that the news of his death came as no surprise to his many friends. At the age of seventy-four years his career had been a varied and exciting one, and after having reached large figures in his financial rating several times, lapsing and retrieving his fortunes, he at last passed away a moderately wealthy man.

On December 14, 1912, Colonel McCampbell was married at the home of the bride in Mercer County to Mrs. Ida Belle Bunton. This was truly a union in which affection played the principal part, and their comparatively short married life furnished an example of domestic happiness and mutual devotion not often found. By her former marriage Mrs. McCampbell had three children: Jack Chinn Bunton, an official of the electric light and gas company, who died suddenly at Paducah May 4, 1922; Raymond Curry Bunton, who operates the McCampbell farm on the Lexington Pike; and Allie Thompson, who resides with her mother and brother.

FRANK M. FISHER. The career of Frank M. Fisher, of Paducah, has been one of steadily growing success and influence through a long period of years. Every interest committed to his charge has been served faithfully and well. For a long time he was in the employ of various business concerns, held various official responsibilities, but in recent years has become widely known over Western Kentucky through the direction and management of several financial and other organizations, the two most notable being the Ohio Valley Trust Company and the Ohio Valley Fire & Marine Insurance Company.

Mr. Fisher was born at Paducah, July 27, 1862. His father, J. G. Fisher, whose name was long one of prominence in that city, was born in Wurttemberg, Germany, in 1816, and was only twelve years of age when he came to the United States. After a brief sojourn at Philadelphia he came out to Western Kentucky in 1831 and located in the pioneer village of Paducah. He was in the bakery business, but soon afterward built a brewery and was the pioneer Kentucky brewer, a business in which he continued until 1871. At that time he was elected mayor of Paducah on the democratic ticket, being the third mayor of the city. For ten years he was kept in office, and during that time was responsible for the most substantial improvement in the business of the city. When he left the mayor's office he resumed the bakery business and after a long and successful career retired in 1891. He died at Paducah in 1896. For two terms he was a member of the school board, was tax collector, and long prominent both in party politics and in civic affairs. He was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. J. G. Fisher married Miss Mary Greif, who was born in Alsace, Germany, in 1821 and died at Paducah in 1906. Her son, George A., born in 1841, served as city marshal four years, was associated in business with his father and died at Paducah in 1876. J. William, born in 1849, was a prominent democrat and business man, a wholesale grocer, held the office of county clerk of McCracken County eight years, was circuit court four years, clerk of the City Council two years. He died in 1900. Fredericka, the third of the family, is the wife of W. F. Paxton, of Paducah, president of the Citizens Savings Bank. Lula is unmarried and lives at Paducah. J. T., who was born March 8, 1859, was for eight years assistant postmaster of Paducah, where he died April 8, 1900.

Frank M. Fisher, the youngest of the family, secured a practical education at Paducah and graduated from high school in 1876. Following that for four years he was assistant postmaster, and then was bookkeeper and confidential man for a wholesale grocery house five years, was with a wholesale hardware store eight years, and in a similar capacity served Freedman, Keiler & Company, distillers, four years.

Mr. Fisher has long been one of the prominent leaders of the republican party in Western Kentucky. He served one term on the Republican State Central Committee, was chairman of the County Central Committee one term, and was also a candidate for national committeeman from this state. He first took an active part in national politics in 1860, when he organised, during the memorable McKinley-Bryan campaign, the Paducah Evening Sun, and became president of the publishing company. Since then, and largely due to the initial impulse given by him as president of the company and as editor, the Evening Sun has become the most influential independent paper in Western Kentucky. Mr. Fisher is related to his nephew, E. J. Paxton, in 1914. The Evening Sun is published in an up-to-date newspaper plant, one of the best in Kentucky. In 1898 Mr. Fisher was appointed postmaster of Paducah by President McKinley, and the duties of his office were performed by him consecutively seventeen years and six months, probably the record term in this post office. He was on duty from January, 1898, to June, 1915.

After retiring from the post office Mr. Fisher organized the Ohio Valley Fire & Marine Insurance Company, of which he is president. While this business is only seven years old, it has grown rapidly and on a substantial basis, has capital and surplus of nearly $350,000 and total assets of over $550,000.

In September, 1916, Mr. Fisher organized the Ohio Valley Trust Company, and is now president of this institution. It commenced business September 15, 1917, with a capital of $20,000, increased in September, 1920, to $60,000. It now has surplus of $27,500, and in about three years its assets have increased from little more than $100,000 to over $350,000. This young giant among financial institutions of Paducah is located at 227 Broadway. Mr. Fisher deserves and has been given much credit for the wonderful success he has made of the bank and insurance company. He is also a director of the City Consumers Company, the largest business of its kind in the state, is president of the Citizens Savings Bank, and secretary of the Mechanicsville Loan Association.

Mr. Fisher is a member of the Paducah Board of Trade, is a member and treasurer of the Carnegie Library Board, belongs to the Catholic Church, is a third degree Knight of Columbus, being affiliated with Paducah Council No. 1055, and is a member of Lodge No. 207 of the Elks. He owns a great deal of city real estate, including his own home, one of the best and most modern residences in the western end of the city, at 901 Jefferson Street.

December 8, 1886, at Paducah, Mr. Fisher married Miss Mattie Venable, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Venable. Her parents both died at Paducah, where her father was for many years a contractor and builder. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher have three sons, who have already shown every qualification for success. Harold P., the oldest, is a graduate of Notre Dame University where he majored in Civil Engineering, served as second lieutenant in Field Artillery, being mustered out at the School of Fire at Fort Sill, Okla- homa, and the armistice was signed just after he had been ordered to France. He is now practicing as a consulting engineer at Chicago. Robert G., the second son, is a graduate of the Paducah High School and is manager and secretary of the Ohio Valley Fire & Marine Insurance Company. William J., the youngest son, is associated with the business of the City Consumers Company. He was a second lieutenant in the World war.
Benjamin J. Billings. A man of literary tastes and excellent business ability, thoroughly conversant with every detail connected with "the art preservative of arts," Benjamin J. Billings, of Paducah, head of the prosperous firm widely known as the Billings Printing Company, is a man of a trade that, as an approved historian has said, has secured the intellectual achievements of the past and furnished a sure guarantee of future progress. Born in Dyersburg, Tennessee, October 1, 1874, he was left an orphan at the early age of eight years.

Brought up in Paducah, he obtained his preliminary education in the public schools, and later took a business course in the commercial department of the State University of Kentucky, at Lexington, Kentucky, that institution in Paducah. Meanwhile, at the age of seventeen years, Mr. Billings entered the employ of the Fowler-Crumbaugh Company, steamboat owners, at Paducah, with which he remained as clerk for six years. The ensuing two and a half years he served as bookkeeper for the Paducah Daily Register, obtaining while there a practical insight into the newspaper business. Becoming manager then of the Paducah Evening News, he retained the position two and a half years, when the business was consolidated with the Paducah News-Democrat.

Emarking in the job printing business in 1903, Mr. Billings fitted up a small room at 124 Broadway, beginning operations on a very modest scale. Under his able supervision and management the business grew apace, and at the end of a year he sought more commodious quarters at 132 Broadway, moving his equipment into a much larger room. Two years later, his business having constantly increased, Mr. Billings assumed possession of the entire building located at 130 Broadway, and at the end of another two years, there being an imperative demand for still more room, he made another change, removing to the buildings quite near his establishment, fitting up the first and second floors of the buildings located at 122-124-126 Broadway.

In 1914, his business having assumed large proportions, Mr. Billings removed his plant and offices to 124-126 North Third Street, where he occupies three floors. His printing establishment was but meagerly furnished, but as his business grew new machinery and conveniences were added, including all of the latest approved modern equipment used in book printing, and he has now one of the most up-to-date printing plants to be found in Kentucky, the most expensive and complete outfit in Paducah.

Mr. Billings incorporated the firm as the Billings Printing Company, with the following named officers: Benjamin J. Billings, president; L. Billings, his daughter, vice president; and K. M. Billings, his wife, secretary and treasurer. This enterprise firm does all kinds of book and job printing, its trade extending throughout Kentucky and into Illinois, Alabama, Oklahoma, and Arkansas, and doing an especially large business in Memphis and other parts of Tennessee. Mr. Billings has other interests, also, being a stockholder in the Ohio Valley Forge & Marine Insurance Company; in the Ohio Valley Cement Company; and in the Paducah Pottery Company. He is a member of the Paducah Board of Trade and of the Rotary Club, and owns and occupies a pleasant and modernly constructed residence at 1106 Monroe Street. He is a democrat in politics, and since twenty years of age has been a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, with which he is officially connected.

Mr. Billings married, in 1867, Miss K. Maude Davis, a daughter of B. D. and Lou (Stark) Davis, who reside in Paducah, he being a well known contractor and builder. Mrs. Billings was graduated from the Paducah High School, and afterward took a special course in art and music at the Methodist Episcopal College in Memphis, Tennessee, Mr. and Mrs. Billings have two children, Lougenia, who, after her graduation from the Paducah High School, attended the Ward Belmont College, Nashville, Tennessee, and the State University of Kentucky, is now vice president of the Billings Printing Company; and Mary Anne, living at home, was graduated from the Paducah High School, and subsequently took a course of study at the Ward Belmont College in Nashville, Tennessee, and at the Woman's College in Jackson, Tennessee.

Lowell Kirk Hays was an engineer by training and profession, was with the engineers and field artillery in France, and soon after his return from abroad came to Kentucky and has since been manager of the Kentucky Utilities Company.

Mr. Hays was born at Curwensville, Pennsylvania, August 10, 1891. His ancestry is Irish, but the family has been in Pennsylvania since Colonial times. His grandfather, William Hays, was born in 1827 at Beech Creek, and in 1860 at Farrantsville, Pennsylvania, the greater part of his life being spent in Clinton County, where he owned and operated a grist mill. He married Miss Mary Homan, a native of Pennsylvania, who died at Mill Hall in that state. The father of the Harlan business man is John Hays, who was born at Mill Hall in 1837, was reared there, but for many years has owned and operated a feed mill at Curwensville. He is a Republican, a Mason, and a liberal contributing member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Crosby F. Hays married Sarah Kirk, who was born at Luthersburg, Pennsylvania, in 1890. Lowell Kirk Hays is the oldest of their three children. The other two, both of Curwensville, are Edwin M., a coal operator, and Mary, wife of Frank Whittaker, a farmer.

Lowell Kirk Hays grew up at Curwensville, graduated from high school in 1910, and then entered Pennsylvania State College, where he pursued his scientific and technical training, graduating with the degree Bachelor of Science in Engineering in 1914. While in University he was a member of the Pioneer Club. The three years following his college career he spent with the Pennsylvania Public Service Company at Clearfield as an assistant engineer. September 7, 1917, he enlisted in the Engineers Corps, was trained at Camp Lee, Virginia, four months, and January 4, 1918, embarked for overseas, landing at Brest January 17th. For two months he was at Bordeaux with the Five Hundred and Sixth Engineers, and was then enrolled in the Field Artillery School at Samur, where three and a half months later he was commissioned a second lieutenant, Field Artillery. Lieutenant Hays saw some of the very intense fighting during the great campaign in the summer and early fall of 1918. With the Seventeenth Field Artillery he was sent to the front in the sector just west of Chateau Thierry, reaching there on the 18th of July. For two weeks he was under constant fire. For another two weeks he was at Pont-a-Mouzon, and was then removed to the St. Mihiel sector, where again his command sustained the enemy's fire for ten days. He was in the Meuse-Argonne region until the latter part of the campaign, and for ten days was in the Argonne Forest. With the signing of the armistice his regiment was sent with the Army of Occupation into Germany, and he was stationed at Bendorf, not far from the historic fortress of Ehrenbreitstein. Mr. Hays was one of the American soldiers who embraced the opportunity to attend school in France, and April 4, 1918, enrolled as a student in the Sarbonne at Paris, where, for four months he was a student of electric generating plants and electric distribution systems. He returned to this country as a casual, landing at Hoboken July 18, 1918, and receiving his honorable discharge at Camp Dix, New Jersey, August 4th.

Mr. Hays shortly afterward accepted appointment as engineer for the Kentucky Utilities Company, and began his duties at Harlan October 2, 1910. He has been manager of the company at Harlan since October 1, 1920.

Mr. Hays votes as a republican, is a member of the Presbyterian Church and fraternally is affiliated with Noble Lodge No. 420, F. & A. M., at Curwensville, Clearfield Chapter No. 228, R. A. M., at Clearfield, and Bethesda Lodge No. 521, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Curwensville. At Mill Hall, Pennsylvania, August 1, 1917, shortly before he entered the army, he married Miss Pauline Bateman, daughter of Dr. A. G. and Charlotte (Stone) Bateman, now residents of Amanda, Ohio, where her father is a minister of the Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Hays is a graduate of the Lockhaven Normal School of Pennsylvania. They have one daughter, Eleanor, born July 24, 1920.

THOMAS LEWIS EDELEN has been a Kentucky lawyer forty years, and in addition to his many prominent interests in the profession has also accumulated extensive business and banking interests at Frankfort. He has been a resident of the capital city for the past thirty years.

Mr. Edelen was born at Harrodsburg, Kentucky, December 28, 1857. The Edelens were originally an English family. They came to America and settled in Carroll County, Maryland, about the time of Lord Calvert. In later generations the Edelens came to Kentucky, and many of the descendants of the pioneers are still found in Washington, Nelson, Jefferson and other counties of the state.

The father of Mr. Edelen was Leonard Edelen, who was born in Marion County, Kentucky, in 1800. He spent most of his life in Lebanon and was a hat manufacturer. He died at Lebanon in 1865. He married a Miss Bruce, a native of Kentucky. James H. Edelen, father of the Frankfort lawyer, was born in Lebanon in 1833, was reared and educated there, but was married and for several years was engaged in business at Harrodsburg. In the spring of 1858 he returned to Lebanon, and continued in business there as a druggist until a few years before his death, when he retired. He died at Lebanon in 1902. He was a democrat and a very devout Presbyterian. At Harrodsburg he married Mary Lewis, who was born in that historic town in 1835. He died at Lebanon in 1887. She was the mother of two children, Sarah, the older, and Mrs. Robert Gilkeson, a Lebanon druggist.

Thomas Lewis Edelen was reared at Lebanon and attended private schools there, receiving a college preparatory education. In 1873 he entered Center College, graduating with the A. B. degree in 1877. His alma mater conferred upon him the Master of Arts degree in 1880. He was a member of the Sigma Chi college fraternity at Center. Mr. Edelen began the study of law in 1878, in the office of William Burr Harrison at Lebanon, and was admitted to the bar in January, 1879, and for twelve years accumulated a large practice and professional reputation at Lebanon, but in 1891 removed to Frankfort, where he became a partner of the distinguished Kentuckian J. Proctor Knott. That partnership was dissolved when Governor Knott removed to Danville. Later Mr. Edelen was a partner of Senator William Lindsay, this firm being dissolved on the death of Mr. Edelen. Mr. Edelen has served in many of the important civil practice of the local and state courts. His offices are on the seventh floor of the McClure Building.

For two years he acted as state reporter of the Court of Appeals. For six years he was a member of the Board of Trustees of Kentucky State University at Lexington. He is a republican, a member of the State and American Bar Associations, and is an elder in the First Presbyterian Church at Frankfort.

Mr. Edelen helped organize and was one of the chief factors in the building of the Capital Trust Company. He was its president until 1917, and is now chairman of the Board of Directors and general counsel for the company. He has other business interests in Kentucky. His home is one of the best in the city, at 401 Ewing Street, his residence being surrounded by an acre and a half of well-kept lawns. It is one of the engineering force of The Moon Motor Car Company of St. Louis. The third living child is Mary Lewis, residing with her parents at Frankfort.

JOHN B. WEBB. That business may be built and developed with advantage to the man of energy and integrity is amply demonstrated in the brief sketch of John B. Webb, now and for years one of the most prominent and successful merchants of Perryville, Kentucky.

John B. Webb was born in Boyle County, Kentucky, July 29, 1881, a son of George L. and Laura Alice (Bradley) Webb, also natives of Kentucky, where they carried on farming during their active years. Mr. Webb received his early education in the public schools of Boyle County, and later entered Elmwood Academy, Perryville, from which he emerged equipped with the necessary educational qualifications to ensure success along life's highroad. At the close of his school course he moved to Louisville, Kentucky, where he secured a position as night clerk in a hotel. Determined, however, to advance in life, he abandoned the hotel work and served an apprenticeship to the trade of a carpenter. After he had become proficient at this trade Mr. Webb was advanced to the position of foreman carpenter and later became superintendent of construction for the firm of C. S. Hall & Company, a concrete construction company of Louisville, with whom Mr. Webb remained until 1908. In the latter year he embarked in building construction for himself, and continued in that line for a year. By this time he had done well, and he recalls that on starting for Louisville he had the munificent sum of eighty-seven cents with which to begin success.

In 1910, Mr. Webb relinquished contract work on his own account and purchased a farm, which he continued to operate with success for six years, at the end of that period selling the place at a substantial profit. In 1916 he secured a one-third interest in the firm of Harmon & Preston, conducting a general merchandise store at Perryville. Notwithstanding keen competition, the business increased by $10,000 in the year following Mr. Webb's connection with it. In 1918 he disposed of his interest in the Harmon & Preston store and immediately purchased the stock of H. C. Powell & Company, also of Perryville, here, likewise, the business being of a general mercantile character. Mr. Webb also acquired the business block in which the store is located, and of this establishment, one of the foremost of its kind in this part of the state, he is sole owner and manager. Under his guidance the trade has advanced, the stock has doubled, and all the elements of commercial prosperity are evident.

On December 22, 1909, Mr. Webb was united in marriage to Miss Mary Hiner Bryoles, of Boyle County, a daughter of William Harvey and Ann (Pope) Bryoles, old-time Kentuckians, who were raised in the Boyle County neighborhood. Mr. and Mrs. Webb are the parents of the following children: Louis Harvey Webb, born January 21, 1914; Mildred Alice, January 11, 1913; Beatrice Marie, April 3, 1916; Lenora Bradley, LINDSAY H. FUQUA.

The period following the close of the war between the North and the South was one of the most prosperous this country has known, and it is generally admitted that the reason lying back of this was the energy and efficiency displayed by the veterans of that great conflict who took into private life the effects of the discipline given them during the time they were under military rule. Judging by this, the United States is entering a wonderful era, for it has had returned to its civilian ranks thousands of soldiers whose capabilities were developed and their energies stimulated by intensive training and active service during the World war. These veterans of the greatest conflict the world has ever known are already demonstrating their ability to handle affairs of importance, and their careers will be watched with great interest and admiration the country over. One of these veterans is Lindsay H. Fuqua, proprietor of the L. H. Fuqua Tire Company of Evansville.

Lindsay H. Fuqua was born at Canton, Trigg County, Kentucky, January 2, 1860, a son of T. H. Fuqua, and grandson of Will Joe Fuqua, a native of Virginia, where the family settled upon coming to this country from France during the Colonial epoch. He died at Canton, Kentucky, in 1896. He was the pioneer of the family into Trigg County, and became one of the prosperous merchants of Canton.

T. H. Fuqua was born in Trigg County, Kentucky, in 1825, and was there reared and married. Until 1914 he resided at Canton, where he was the leading merchant, but in that year moved to Cadiz, where he is now conducting a furniture and undertaking business. He is a democrat, but aside from voting for the candidates of his party does not participate in public affairs. Being a member of the Episcopal Church and the Masonic fraternity he lives up to the highest ideals of Christian manhood, and he is also a member of the order of Elks. T. H. Fuqua was married to Anna C. Wadlington, who was born in Trigg County in 1877, and their children are as follows: Lindsay H., who is the eldest; Herman T., who is a surveyor on the state road, lives at Cadiz; Evelyn, who lives with her parents and Jack, who died at the age of four years.

After attending the public schools of Canton, Kentucky, Lindsay H. Fuqua became a student of the Vanderbilt Training School at Elkhorn, Kentucky, from which he was graduated after a four years course in 1914. He then took up an electrical and mechanical engineering course at the Kentucky State University during the school year of 1914-15. Following this he went to Shellyville, Kentucky, and worked for two years with H. Wadlington, a furniture and hardware merchant, and was his bookkeeper until the summer of 1917.

In the meanwhile this country had entered the World war, and Mr. Fuqua felt that it was his duty to enlist and, doing so, was sent to the Officers Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, Indiana, where he received his commission as second lieutenant. He was transferred to Camp Grant, Rockford, Illinois, and thence to Camp Perry, near Toledo, Ohio. From there he went to Fort Leavenworth, and was mustered out at Camp Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky, in August, 1919.

Mr. Fuqua then came to Frankfort and embarked in his present business, with offices and tire shop 227 Saint Clair Street. He has the largest business of its kind in Franklin County, and has built it up through his own efforts and in a remarkably short time. His residence is at 627 State Street. He is a democrat. The Christian Church holds his membership.

On February 10, 1919, Mr. Fuqua was married at Newcastle, Kentucky, to Mrs. Eloise (Maddox) Harding, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Maddox. Mr. Maddox is a retired farmer of Shellyville, seventy-five years old, but whose residence is deceased. Mrs. Fuqua was graduated from Hamilton College, Lexington County, and is a very accomplished and charming lady.

LEONARD C. PRICE.

One of the enterprises that gave fame to Fayette County as a livestock breeding center was the Penmoken Shetland Pony Farm, for many years owned and conducted by the late Leonard C. Price. He was an all around business man, and was also identified with many mercantile interests in Lexington for many years.

His birth occurred within the limits of Nicholasville, in Jessamine County, June 30, 1850. His parents were James and Frances A. (Cassell) Price, and his mother is still living, the widow of A. G. Karstner. James Price died when his son Leonard was four years old.

The founder of the Price family in Kentucky was Col. William Price, a Virginian and a Revolutionary officer. He was a lieutenant in the storming of Stony Point and was a captain at the battles of Brandywine, Germantown and Princeton, while at the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown October 19, 1781, he had attained the rank of major. He was born near Fredericksburg, Virginia, in 1755, and on June 12, 1777, married Mary Cunningham. Colonel Price moved with his family to Jessamine County, Kentucky, in 1787. He died at his home six miles west of Nicholasville on October 10, 1808. It is said that he was the first man to recognize and celebrate the 4th of July west of the Allegheny Mountains. It was a later member of the family, possibly his grandson, Kleber P. Price, who built the house long identified as belonging to the Price family, just outside the city of Nicholasville.

Col. William Price's son, Capt. James C. Price, commanded a company of infantry from Jessamine County in the War of 1812, and was killed and scalped by the Indians at the battle of River Raisin, January 18, 1813.

In 1881 Leonard C. Price married at Natchez, Mississippi, Mary F. Mason, then a young girl. Mr. Price was at Natchez engaged in the business of shipping horses. From 1860 until 1898, nearly thirty years, he was associated with the firm of Cassell & Price, dry goods merchants at Lexington, and eventually became sole owner of the business, which he continued under his name for ten years. The location of their store was on the present site of the Purcell store. About 1868 Leonard C. Price bought a farm two miles south of Lexington, on the Nicholasville Pike. This was the Penmoken Farm, where he developed his famous industry of breeding Shetland ponies from imported stallions. He had a 150 acres in his farm and at one time had over two hundred head of ponies. The Penmoken ponies were famous as the finest of their class, and were exhibited with honors at many State Fairs. There was one stallion never beaten in the show ring. Leonard C. Price continued in this business until his death on December 14, 1913. He was a democrat and a member of the Kentucky Christian Church. Mrs. Leonard C. Price is still living.

Leonard C. Price, Jr., only son of his parents, was born at Lexington, January 18, 1895. He was educated in the public schools and has had an active part in the management of the affairs of his father's estate.
March, 1910, Pennmoken Farm was sold and in July, 1919, he became a member of the firm Price and Norman, his associate being James D. Norman. This firm does a large business in agricultural implements and tractors. Leonard Price is also continuing his education as a student of mechanical engineering in the University of Kentucky.

On June 10, 1921, Mr. Price married Miss Eva M. Boterf, of Toronto, Kansas, daughter of Dr. Charles A. Boterf and Minnie Yates Boterf.

Ronald S. Tuttle. The rapidly increasing settlement of the United States and the threatened extinction, in consequence, of all kinds of wild game have led to the establishment in each state of game and fish commissions, which regulate the seasons for the hunters and anglers and the number of animals, birds and fish that may be destroyed or taken under the law. One of the most important positions in connection with these commissions is that of executive agent, a post in Kentucky which is held by Dr. Ronald S. Tuttle, a legal resident of Bardstown now making his home at Frankfort, where his official duties are centered. Doctor Tuttle is both a medical and dental practitioner, and until his appointment to his present position, he was engaged in the practice of dentistry at Bardstown.

Ronald S. Tuttle was born at Evansville, Indiana, November 4, 1877, a son of Lyman S. and Fannie (Tileston) Tuttle. The family originated in England, whence in 1632 came three brothers, William, Henry and John Tuttle, who settled at New Haven, Connecticut. Doctor Tuttle's direct ancestor being William Tuttle.

He married a Miss Nangle who made her way by stage to Pennsylvania, where, in 1824, was born the grandfather of Doctor Tuttle, William Wallace Tuttle. During the Civil war he enlisted in the Union Army and was attached to the Quartermaster's Department in Pennsylvania, and at the close of that struggle went to New Albany, Indiana, where he became a railroad director and made his home until his death in 1879, his residence being at the home of his son, Doctor Tuttle. In politics he is republican, his fraternal affiliation is with the Knights of Pythias and his religious faith is that of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Tuttle married Miss Fannie Tileston, who was born at Evansville, Indiana, in 1853. Lyman S. Tuttle was reared at Louisville, Kentucky, where his parents resided during his youth, and after acquiring a public school education he engaged in general contracting, a business with which he was identified until the time of his recent death. He married a Miss Nangle, and the children were Lyman S. Tuttle, who was born at New Albany, Indiana, in 1853.

He married a Miss Nangle, and the children were Lyman S. Tuttle, who was born at New Albany, Indiana, in 1853.

Ronald S. Tuttle received his early education in the public schools of Evansville, Indiana, and Paducah, Kentucky, and after leaving the Paducah High School pursued a course at the University of Tennessee, at Knoxville, from which he was graduated in 1891. He next attended the Dental and Medical School of Louisville, being graduated in 1902 with the degrees of Doctor of Medicine and Doctor of Dental Surgery, and while attending that institution joined the Psi Omega dental Greek letter fraternity. In 1902 Doctor Tuttle located at Bardstown, and he engaged in the practice of dentistry until July 1, 1920, building up a large, representative and lucrative practice, which he gave up to come to Frankfort in the discharge of his duties as executive agent of the State Game and Fish Commission of Kentucky. He still maintains his legal residence at Bardstown, however, and is the owner of a farm adjoining the town on the west, a well-cultivated and valuable tract of eighty-seven acres. His present residence at Frankfort is at 523 Ann Street.

In the discharge of his official duties Doctor Tuttle has displayed marked industry and efficiency, and has already evidenced the possession of distinctive executive capacity. He has been a member of the Kentuckiana Club, which in 1908 was organized, and also a member of the Masonic Order, and it is stated that he is very active in its affairs, and that he is a great favorite with the members.

Doctor Tuttle's present appointment will cover a period of four years, during which time he will have ample opportunity of exercising his abilities in placing the affairs of his office upon a sound basis.

On August 30, 1904, at the World's Fair held at St. Louis, Missouri, Doctor Tuttle was united in marriage with Miss Fannie A. Haviland, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Haviland, the latter of whom is deceased. Mr. Haviland, who now makes his home with his daughter and son-in-law, was born in England, whence he came as a young man to the United States and for a number of years was engaged in business at Bardstown, Kentucky, as a general merchant. Mrs. Tuttle, a lady of marked musical talent, is a leader of the Conservatory of Music, Bardstown. When only twelve years of age she won a beautiful and valuable piano in a musical contest, and her parents gave her every opportunity to develop her talents. She is now pipe organist at the Baptist Church, Bardstown, and has been a great favorite in social circles because of her musical and other gifts, and has likewise been heard in concert work. Doctor Tuttle's talents, aside from those on his profession, lie in the direction of literature. He has been a frequent contributor to various magazines of negro dialect poetry and prose, as well as outdoor sketches and nature stories, and his work has found a large and favorable public and has met with much favorable comment.

Three children have been born to Doctor and Mrs. Tuttle: William H., born in Bardstown, Kentucky, in 1906, a student at the Bardstown High School, where he has an excellent record as a student and is also showing athletic prowess as a member of the high school football team; Essie, born in 1910, attending the graded schools and Jane, born in 1912, also a graded school pupil.

Stanley Daniel Stembridge, city attorney of Hickman, and one of the forceful young attorneys of Fulton County, has established himself in the confidence of the public and the regard of the other members of his profession. He is a man who thoroughly understands the law and is rigid with reference to its enforcement, and has given special attention to those branches referring to municipal problems.

Mr. Stembridge was born at Mechemburg County, Virginia, April 6, 1887, a son of Frank J. Stembridge, who was born in a political settlement in that county and his birth occurring in 1836. He was reared, educated and married in that county, where he developed large farming and mercantile interests, including the handling of tobacco and is still one of the leading business men of Chase City, Virginia. Both as a democrat and Baptist he has lived up to his conceptions of citizenship and religion, and is a man of unusual character and standing. For a number of years he has been very active in his church, and he never neglects to do his duty in municipal affairs.

Frank J. Stembridge was married to Miss Margaret...
Morgan, who was born in Charlotte County, Virginia, and they became the parents of the following children: Stanley Daniel, whose name heads this review; Morgan Clark, who is a dental surgeon in Chase City, Virginia, was graduated from the Richmond Medical College with the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery; Hilton Dallas, who is also a dental surgeon and in partnership with his brother, Morgan C., and he, too, is a graduate of the Richmond Medical College with the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery; Gladys, who married Ben S. Adams, a commonwealth attorney, lives at Bardwell, Kentucky; and Glenna, who lives with her parents, is a graduate of the Baltimore Conservatory of Music, is a talented musician, and specializes in vocal music, although she is also a pleasing performer on several musical instruments.

Stanley Daniel Stembridge was sent to the public schools of his native county and Scottsburg Normal College, from which he was graduated in 1905, at which time he received a life state teacher's certificate. In 1905 he accepted a position as chief clerk in the Morgan Hotel at Danville, Virginia, and later held the same position in the Central Hotel at Charlotte, North Carolina. Subsequently he went to Greensboro, North Carolina, and was chief clerk in the Guilford Hotel, relieved there by his wife. He was made reading law and acquiring an intimate knowledge of human nature which is now of inestimable value to him. In December, 1916, he was admitted in the bar, after successfully passing his examinations before Circuit Judge W. M. Reed and Attorney J. L. Price in the Marshall County Circuit Courtrooms, and immediately thereafter entered upon a general civil and criminal law practice at Hickman, Kentucky, where he has since remained. In 1917 Mr. Stembridge was elected city attorney, and still holds that office. He is located on East Clinton Street in the City Hall Building. Both by inheritance and conviction Mr. Stembridge is a democrat, and he is very active in the ranks of his party. The Christian Church holds his membership, and he is serving his congregation as a deacon. A Mason, Mr. Stembridge belongs to Hickman Lodge No. 761, A. F. and A. M.; Hickman Chapter No. 49, R. A. M.; Fulton Commandery No. 34, K. T., of Fulton, Kentucky; and Rizpah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Madisonville, Kentucky. He is also an active member of Hickman Lodge No. 1294, B. P. O. E. For some time he has been a director of the Hickman Building & Loan Association, which organization is strengthened by his co-operation with it. Mr. Stembridge owns a modern residence on Moscow Avenue, where he has his home, and owns ten other dwellings at Hickman, his faith in the city inducing him to invest heavily in its real estate. During the great war he took an active part in all of the activities of local moment, being chairman of the United War Work campaign, which included all of the drives for the Red Cross, Salvation Army and Jewish War Relief Fund, and he participated in all of the Liberty Loan drives and assignments. As a part of the many so-called “Four Minute” speakers he stimulated interest and elicited contributions, delivering his pungent speeches all over the county. He was vice president of the National Council of Defense, and served it as an attorney. In short, he devoted his time, energies and money to aid the administration in carrying out its policies.

In October, 1916, Mr. Stembridge was united in marriage with Miss Josephine Nichols, a daughter of Judge Jabez F. and Cora (Washburn) Nichols of Bardwell, Kentucky, where Mr. Nichols is an attorney and police judge. Mrs. Stembridge attended Saint Mary's College of Paducah, Kentucky, and is a very accomplished lady. There are no children. With will, resourcefulness and trained ability, Mr. Stembridge has handled the problems of his office. Not only does he have these qualities, but he also possesses the power to stimulate others to whole-hearted endeavor, and is rendering his municipality a very valuable service and saving it much litigation which might otherwise arise were a man less capable in his office.

Thomas Bullitt McCoun. Readyness adaptation to opportunity, a capacity for gauging the possibilities of business prospects and the well-developed speculative instinct which places the moral imagination at the disposal of himself, and factors which have directed the business energy of Thomas Bullitt McCoun, who in something more than a year has developed a leading insurance business at Frankfort. He is a veteran of the World war, in which he saw much active overseas service in the aviation corps of both the French and American armies, and since returning to civilian life has demonstrated the same qualities of initiative and resource that won him a captaincy in the fighting forces of the allies.

Captain McCoun was born December 24, 1894, at Louisville, Kentucky, a son of Ernest and Nancy (Burbridge) McCoun. The McCoun family, as the name would suggest, originated in Scotland, whence the family immigrated to Colonial Virginia, and later came with the McAfee’s to Mercer County, where McCoun’s Ferry is named. It was thus a Whittington and Lee University, James T. McCoun, the grandfather of Thomas F. McCoun, was born in Mercer County, in 1835, and for the greater part of his life resided at Farmdale, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits, but is now retired from active labor and a resident of Frankfort. He married Emma Farmer, who was born at Farmdale in 1853, and died there in 1915.

At Frankfort, the father of Thomas B. McCoun, was born in 1871, in Franklin County, Kentucky, and was given excellent educational advantages, attending first the old Kentucky Military Institute in Franklin County, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and then pursuing a course at the Louisville Law School, where he received his degree of Bachelor of Laws. Married in Montgomery County, he subsequently located at Louisville, where he embarked in the practice of his profession and made rapid strides therein. He was just beginning to make a name for himself in his calling when his brilliant career was cut short by his early death in 1899, when he was only twenty-eight years of age. He was a democrat, although he never held office, was a prominent and enthusiastic Mason, and belonged to the Baptist Church. Mr. McCoun married Miss Nancy Burbridge, born in September, 1874, in Bath County, Kentucky, who survived him and resided at Mount Sterling, this state, and to this union there were born two children: Thomas Bullitt; and Elizabeth, who is unmarried and resides with her mother.

Thomas Bullitt McCoun was only about five years of age at the time of his father’s death, and he was taken into the home of his grandfather, by whom he was reared. He attended the public schools of Frankfort, graduating from the Frankfort High School in 1911, and then entered the University of Kentucky and received a B. A. degree in 1915, and a B. S. degree in 1916. He was a member of the University Debate Team, and was active in College Fraternity and Masonic work. In 1914, Mr. McCoun was elected to the local chapter of Phi Delta Theta, and served as its secretary for two years. In the autumn of 1916, he was elected to the University Literary Society and was elected to serve as its secretary for three years. Third Aero Squadron, having been promoted to the rank of captain, and remained with this squadron until March, 1919. He then returned to the United States, and in May, 1919, received his honorable discharge and was mustered out of the service. For six months thereafter Captain McCoun was identified with the United States Government mail service, and then gave up flying as a business and came to Frankfort, where he organized the firm of McCoun & Company, general insurance, of which concern he has since been the manager. The business is located at Third Street, in the Morris Building, and under the manager's energetic and capable supervision the business has already grown to large and important proportions.

In politics Captain McCoun is a democrat, and his religious faith is that of the Christian Church. As a fraternalist he belongs to Hiram Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., Frankfort Chapter No. 3, R. A. M.; Frankfort Commandery No. 4, K. T.; and St. Clair Lodge, A. O. O. N. S., Lexington. He is a member of the Board of Directors of the Aero Club of America, a member of the Aero Club of France and is on the Board of Governors of the American Flying Club. He is also a director in the Masonic Temple Association, Incorporated, of Frankfort.

At Lexington, Thomas B. McCoun was united in marriage with Miss Dazei Moore Porter, a graduate of Transylvania University, Lexington, and a daughter of Joseph W. and Mary (Shropshire) Porter. Mr. Porter has long been one of the leading citizens of Lexington, well and widely known in business and financial circles. For a number of years he was vice-president and cashier of the First and City National Bank of Lexington, and is now present time is treasurer of the R. W. Roundsvall Company, merchandise brokers. The mother of Mrs. McCoun is deceased. Captain and Mrs. McCoun have a pleasant home at the Cromwell Apartments, Frankfort.

CARL KAGIN - An example of sturdy enterprise, splendid business management and healthy growth founded upon sound principles is found in the leading department store of Franklin County, the business operated at Frankfort under the style of C. Kagin & Brother. The business was started in a modest way in 1866, and in its development through the years that have passed has evidenced the sterling abilities of its founder, Carl Kagin, who is not only rated among the leading merchants of the State by his trade, but is known also as a man who has contributed materially to the growth and welfare of the city of his adoption.

Mr. Kagin was born in Germany, July 14, 1874, a son of Urban and Elizabeth (Burgin) Kagin. Urban Kagin was born in 1852, in Switzerland, where he was educated and reared to the age of twenty years, at which time he went to Germany and engaged in the weaving of linen cloth. He was married in that country, whence he came with his wife and children to the United States in 1880, settling at New Bedford, Massachusetts, being there employed in manufacturing tools in a steel mill. The conditions surrounding this work soon broke down his health, and in 1884 he came with his family to Franklin County, Kentucky, and located on a farm two and one half miles out of Frankfort, on the Louisville Pike, where he remained for one year. In 1885 he took over the proprietorship of the first restaurant at Frankfort, located on Ann Street, and later founded, on Broadway, what became the leading restaurant of the city. Mr. Kagin's health failed to improve, and in 1886 he went to a hospital at Cincinnati for treatment. Everything was done possible for him, but his ailment defied the best medical care, and he died in 1886. Mr. Kagin was next in business honor and high principles, and was highly thought of in his community. He was a member of the Roman Catholic Church. He married Elizabeth Burgin, who was born near Schwartzwalder, Germany, and died at Frankfort in 1907. She was a daughter of Jacob Burgin, who was born in Germany in 1809, and came to the United States in 1810. He had been a manufacturer of wire for screenings, sieves, etc., but after coming to this country lived in retirement, making his home with his son-in-law and daughter until his death at Frankfort in 1884. Urban and Elizabeth Kagin were the parents of four children: Emma, deceased, who was the wife of the late Lambert Suppinger, who was connected with the Frankfort Leaven; Willie, a partner in the business, who was associated in business with his brother Carl; and Edwin, a missionary of the Presbyterian denomination now stationed in Korea.

Carl Kagin was educated at Frankfort, and at the age of seventeen years left high school to become a clerk in a dry goods store. After three years of experience, during which time he applied himself assiduously to learning every detail of the business, he embarked in a venture with George J. Neff as partner, establishing a mercantile establishment in Meade County, Kentucky, which they conducted from 1894 to 1896, inclusive. In November of the latter year Mr. Kagin came to Frankfort, where, on St. Clair Street, he established a modest dry goods store near the bridge, which he conducted until 1915. Since then he has been a branch store on Main Street. Both business ventures prospered, and in 1918 Mr. Kagin consolidated the two, taking more space on Main Street and adding two more sales rooms, in addition to remodeling the entire building. This has been developed into the largest department store in Franklin County, and is operated under the firm style of C. Kagin & Brother, Mr. Kagin's brother, Carl, being his associate. The store is situated at 235 to 239 West Main Street, and occupies the whole of two buildings now remodeled into one building of three floors, in which there are three salesrooms, the respective floor space of these rooms being 25 by 100 feet, 17 by 100 feet, and 16 by 100 feet. A complete line of all kinds of goods carried in a modern department store is kept on hand, and Mr. Kagin makes a careful study of the needs and wishes of his patrons, with the idea of giving them satisfying service. He has built up an excellent system of efficiency in his establishment, which points to the presence of excellent executive ability, and courtesy and obligingness are as much a part of the business as are honesty and high principles. As a good citizen he takes an active part in all movements which promise to be of benefit to his community, and his support is always given to worthy enterprises of a civic, religious or educational character. With his family he belongs to the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Kagin was one of the organizers of the Frankfort Chamber of Commerce and is a member thereof at this time. He owns a comfortable modern home at 116 East Second Street.

In 1900, at Frankfort, Mr. Kagin was united in marriage with Miss Emelia Kehr, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Kehr. Mrs. Kagin's parents were born in Germany, and upon coming to the United States settled in Franklin County, where they rounded out their lives in the pursuits of agriculture, both now being deceased. Six children have come to Mr. and Mrs. Kagin: Carl, Jr., born in August, 1900, who is a student at Centre College, Danville, Kentucky; Willie, born in November, 1902, a student at Frankfort High School, who not only has an excellent record as a student, but is also known for his athletic prowess, being a member of the high school football team; Emily, born in September, 1904; a student at the Frankfort High School; Edwin, born in September, 1906, who is a student in the graded schools; Elizabeth, born in February, 1913, who is also a student in the graded schools; and Louise, born in September, 1916. Mr. and Mrs. Kagin are well and widely known at Frankfort, where they have the esteem and respect of all, and a wide circle of warm and appreciative friends.

LOUIS LECOMPT. In the business circles of Frankfort a concern which has an established reputation for honorable dealing and an observance of elevated principles is the Louis LeCompte Company, furniture dealers and undertakers. Founded in 1813 in a modest way, this business has been developed under able management into one of the two leading enterprises of the kind in Frankfort County, and the principal factor in this work of development has been Louis LeCompte, one of Frankfort's most capable and progressive young business men.

Mr. LeCompte is a native son of Frankfort, and was born in 1859. His parents being Mitchell L. and Lucy Jean (Lewis) LeCompte. As the name would indicate, the LeCompte family originated in France, where it was brought to America during early Colonial times. The great-great-grandfather of Louis LeCompte, Major LeCompte, was born in the colony of Virginia and was the pioneer into Kentucky. William LeCompte, the grandfather of Louis LeCompte, was born in 1829, in the county he is on account a native of Henry County, Kentucky, and in early life was a millwright. Later he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, and for many years farmed in Henry and Franklin counties, also spending a few years in Grayson County. Now far advanced in years, he is retired from active affairs and makes his home with his son, J. S. LeCompte, in Franklin County. He married a Miss Mays, of the family of the name at Frankfort, Kentucky. She was born in 1832 and died in Franklin County in 1898.

Mitchell L. LeCompte was born in 1859, in Grayson County, Kentucky, but as a youth was brought to Franklin County, and was reared and educated at Frankfort, where his marriage took place. As a youth he learned the trade of cabinetmaker and this has continued to be his occupation throughout life, practically his entire career having been passed at Frankfort. He is the owner of LeCompte's Mill at Frankfort; and is held in the highest esteem by all who know him. Mr. LeCompte is a democrat in politics and a fraternal affiliate with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He belongs to the Christian Church. Mr. LeCompte married Miss Lucy Jean Lewis, who was born in 1866 in Franklin County, Kentucky, and to this union there were born two children: Ethel, who is unmarried and resides with her parents and Louise.

Louis LeCompte received his education in the rural schools of Franklin County and the public schools at Frankfort, but at the age of fifteen years left high school and became a clerk in a hardware store at Frankfort. After two years he left this employment and secured a position in a furniture store, where during the nine years of his stay he familiarized himself thoroughly with every detail of the furniture and undertaking business. On September 1, 1893, he embarked in business for himself, in dealing in furniture and undertaking establishment at 315 West Main Street, and this has since grown under his supervision to be one of the two leading enterprises in its line in Franklin County. A modern undertaking establishment is maintained, with every facility for the proper and reverent care of the dead, and a large and modern stock of furniture is offered to Frankfort's discriminating buyers. The company is now incorporated as the Louis LeCompte Company, the officers being: R. M. Lewis, president; Louis LeCompte, vice president and treasurer; and Mrs. Blanche LeCompte, wife of Louis LeCompte, secretary.

In political belief Mr. LeCompte is a democrat, in this connection following both his own inclinations and the traditions of his family. In 1913 he was elected coroner of Franklin County, taking office January 1, 1914, and after the expiration of his first term was again elected in 1917, taking office January 1, 1918, for a term of four years. His administrations have been marked by conscientious fidelity to duty and capable discharge of his responsibilities. With his family he belongs to the Christian Church, in which he serves as deacon. As a fraternalist he belongs to Blackfoot Tribe No. 67, I. O. R. M.; Frankfort Lodge No. 28, L. O. O. F.; and is prominent in Masonry, holding membership in Hiram Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M.; Frankfort Chapter No. 3, R. A. M.; Frankfort Commandery No. 4, K. T.; and Oleika Temple, A. O. O. N. S., Lexington. During the World war he was exceedingly active in committee work in assisting the various drives, and personally contributed and purchased liberally in the support of all worthy movements.

Mr. LeCompte was married in 1910, at Danville, Kentucky, to Miss Blanche Emma Wash, a graduate of the Frankfort High School and a woman of sound business ability and social graces, daughter of J. W. and Lucy Jane (Poulter) Wash, the latter of whom is deceased. Mr. Wash has been for many years chief of police at Lawrenceburg, Kentucky, and is discharging the duties of that office at this time. Mr. and Mrs. LeCompte's only child, Alice, died at birth.

POWELL TAYLOR, judge of the County Court of Anderson County, has several times been called to the duties of public office, but his life on the whole has been quietly, profitably and usefully spent as a practical farmer. It was the good judgment he used in the management of his own affairs that made him the choice of the people to administer the fiscal business of Anderson County.

He was born on a farm June 25, 1870, son of George H. and America (Cole) Taylor. His parents were natives of Anderson County. His father was a son of Grayson and Catherine Taylor, natives of Virginia, who were pioneer settlers of Anderson County, where they lived out their lives. Grayson Taylor at the time of his death was reputed to be the wealthiest man in Anderson County, most of his possessions consisting of fertile farm land.

The mother of Powell Taylor was a daughter of James Cole, and she died a month after the birth of Powell. Powell Taylor grew up in the family of his uncle Salathiel Cole on a farm, had a country school education, and since early manhood has found his duties chiefly on the farm and still lives in the country, though in 1917 he was called by election to the duties of county judge. He has conscientiously served as justice of the peace four years. Judge Taylor is a democrat, a Baptist, is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, and served with the rank of colonel on the staff of Governor James D. Black in 1919.

On September 18, 1901, he married Miss Lillie V. Young. They have two children, S. Cole and Dorothy Taylor.

EDWARD WILSON, M. D., has had the full measure of popular confidence and esteem in his native county, as is demonstrated alike by the representative character of his substantial professional practice and also by his being, in 1921, the efficient mayor of Pineville, the thriving little city which is the judicial center and metropolis of Bell County. The Doctor-Mayor was born at Lock, this county, on the 14th of July, 1879, son of W. F. M. and Jane (Eager) Wilson, the former of whom was born, presumably in the State of Tennessee, in 1830, and the latter of whom was born in Virginia and was reared at Harlan Court House, now Harlan, county seat of the Kentucky county of the same name, the year of her nativity having been 1839. Mrs. Wilson died at the family home at Lock, Bell County, in 1886, and there the death of her husband occurred in the following year. W. F. M. Wilson was a young man when he established his residence at Lock, and never followed by him had previously a long period, besides becoming one of the extensive and substantial farmers of that part of Bell County. He also was one of the pioneer school teachers of Harlan and Bell counties as a young man. He stood exponent of loyal and useful citizenship, was a republican in his political allegiance, and both he and his wife held membership in the Baptist Church. Miss Annie, eldest of their children, resides in the home of her only surviving brother, Doctor Wilson, of this sketch; Columbus became a prosperous farmer of Bell County, and here he died June 20, 1905; Doctor Wilson was the next born of the four children; and George died at the age of five years.

Doctor Wilson was doubly orphaned when but eight years of age, but proper provision was made for the three orphaned children, and he gained his preliminary education in the rural schools of his native county, after which he pursued a higher course of study in the Baptist Institute at Williamsburg, Whitley County. In preparation for the practice of his profession he entered the Hospital College of Medicine in the City of Louisville, and in this institution he was graduated in 1903, with second honors of his class. By reason of his high class record he received appointment to the position of intern in the Gray Street Presbyterian Hospital at Louisville, and he retained this position one year after receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine, the clinical and general experience thus gaining of great value in further furnishing him for the independent work of his profession. With insistent appreciation Doctor Wilson has kept in close touch with advances made in medical and surgical science, not only through his alliance with professional organizations and his recourse to the best standard and periodical literature of his profession, but also by the medium of two penman courses in the Chicago Post-Graduate Medical School, and three such courses in the New York Post-Graduate School of Medicine. In these courses he gave special attention to surgery, and in this department of practice he has gained the high reputation that invariably attends successful service.

In the autumn of 1904 Doctor Wilson engaged in active general practice at Pineville, but a year later he removed to Whitesburg, county seat of Letcher County, where he continued in practice three years. He then returned to Pineville, where he has since maintained secure vantage ground as one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Bell County, besides which his professional enthusiasm and civic loyalty led to its establishing in 1910 the Wilson Hospital, on Virginia Avenue. He has given to this institution the best modern equipment and facilities, and that its advantages are appreciated is shown by the patient care accorded, treatment having here been given to patients not only from Bell, Harlan, Laurel and Knox counties, Kentucky, but also from Virginia and Tennessee. Under the able administration of Doctor Wilson the hospital is maintained at a high standard and represents one of the valuable institutions of this section of the state. His office headquarters are at the hospital.

Doctor Wilson takes deep interest in all that concerns the civic and material well-being of his home city and county, and in 1921 he is serving his fourth consecutive year as mayor of Pineville, his administration having been marked by greater progress than any other similar period in the history of the city. He had guided the municipal government with marked discrimination and progressiveness, and the citizens of Pineville accord him due credit for the effective work he has accomplished as chief executive. He is a stalwart in the local ranks of the republican party, the Pineville Baptist Church claims him and his wife as zealous members, and he is affiliated with Bell Lodge No. 601, Free and Accepted Masons, at Pineville. The Doctor is an active member of the Bell County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Association, and American Medical Association. He is a stockholder in the Bell National Bank, is the owner of the attractive home in which he resides, on Pine Street, the Wilson Hospital Building, a business block on the Public Square and other local realty.

That Doctor Wilson should have been an influential force in the furthering of local service in the World war period was to be expected of a man of his general characteristic and civic influence, and further evidence of his patriotic spirit had previously been given in his service as a soldier in the Spanish-American war. He enlisted on the 4th of July, 1898, was sent to an army camp in Alabama, and though his command was not called to the stage of active conflict he remained in active service until Cuba had been freed from Spanish rule, his honorable discharge having been received in February, 1899. At the time of American participation in the World war Doctor Wilson was an alert and vigorous worker in forwarding the various drives in support of the war, and he added also in the Red Cross and other subsidiary campaigns, besides making his financial contributions to the various causes as liberal as his means permitted.

At Whitesburg, Letcher County, in 1907, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Wilson to Miss Ella Tyree, daughter of Rev. S. C. and Martha J. (Adams) Tyree, now residents of London, Laurel County, Kentucky. The father is engaged in the practice of law, and the mother is a native of Kentucky. Doctor and Mrs. Wilson have four children, whose names and respective years of birth are here recorded: Gypsy Vera, 1908; Edward Senn, 1910; Tyree Francis, 1913; Marion, 1915; Florence Roe, 1918; and Ella Ray, 1920.

Thomas Eugene Bland, M. D. A good doctor is always a good citizen, and the service rendered by Doctor Bland in Shelby County for thirty years has been that of an accomplished physician and surgeon and a man whose personal character has done much to supplement the good performed in a professional sphere.

Doctor Bland was born on a farm in Shelby County, July 13, 1864; son of Thomas Pope and Levicy Jane (Harris) Bland. His grandfather, Charles Bland, was a native of Virginia, and was a pioneer in the State of Missouri. When he died his son Thomas Pope Bland was twelve years of age, and the latter soon came to Kentucky and lived with an aunt in Shelby County. In that county he married Levicy Jane Harris, who was born here, daughter of Harvey Harris, who also came from Virginia. Thomas Pope Bland and wife spent their long and happy life on a farm, lived exemplary Christian lives as members of the Baptist Church, and many of their excellent characteristics are traced in the career of their son Doctor Bland. The father died in 1915, at the age of eighty-two, while the mother is still living. Of their eight children they reared six to mature years.

Doctor Bland grew up on the farm and supplemented his advantages in the local schools with work in the college at Georgetown. He graduated in medicine from the University of Louisville in 1892, and at once returned to Shelbyville, where he has done all his professional work. In 1894 he took post-graduate courses in New York, and is progressive in every line of his profession. He is a member of the Shelby County and Kentucky State Medical associations.

In former years Doctor Bland took quite an active part in local politics. He was a member of the city council of Shelbyville and for four years mayor of the city. He is a democrat and a Baptist. In 1906 he married Miss Matilda Nichols. They have two children, Anna Pope and Levicy Jane Bland.

William C. Shinick, publisher and editor of the Shelby Record, learned the publishing business under his father, the late owner of the Record, and except for the service he gave the Government as a soldier and officer in the American forces overseas his time and talents have been devoted to this splendid institution of Kentucky journalism since early life.

His father, Edward D. Shinnick, was born at Shelbyville June 1, 1834, son of William and Alice (Casey) Shinnick. William Shinnick was born at Troy, New York, of Irish ancestry, and his wife was a native of County Cork, Ireland. This family came to Shelbyville about 1820, and William Shinnick was in the carriage building business for many years. Edward D. Shinnick learned the trade of carriage making from his father, becoming expert as a carriage painter. He also acquired a liberal education in Professor Dodd’s Academy at Shelbyville, and the natural endowment of his mind well fitted him for the tasks and responsibilities of practical journalism. In 1886 he became connected with the Shelbyville Sentinel, and gave twelve years to that paper. From 1898 to 1902 he was on the road as a traveling salesman, and in 1902 he and George L. Willis bought the Shelby Record. Not long afterward Edward D. Shinnick became sole proprietor, and published and edited the Record until his death. He died at his country home near Shelbyville February 19, 1920. He was a democrat in politics, and performed considerable public service in the influence he constantly exerted on local affairs. He was also editor of the column of his paper. He was city councilman and city clerk, and in 1918 was appointed secretary of the Kentucky Board of Control of Charitable Institutions. He resigned this office January 1, 1920, on account of ill health. He was a Catholic.

Edward D. Shinnick married Miss Mary Sullivan in 1861. Mrs. Shinnick and four sons survive: William C., Frank B., Edward D., Jr., and Charles L. William C. Shinnick and Frank B. Shinnick were with the military forces during the World War, Frank being trained and doing his service in aviation camps in this country. William C. Shinnick went overseas in April, 1918, with the Fourth Infantry, Third Division, and was soon afterward exposed to the fire of the enemy on the front in several phases of the great allied campaign in 1918, including the Aisne-Marne, the Marne, the Champagne-Marne, St. Mihiel and the Meuse-Argonne campaigns. He went in as a second lieutenant and came out as first lieutenant, was with the Army of Occupation eight months, and received his honorary discharge at Camp Zachary Taylor September 15, 1919. He is a member of the American Legion.

Mr. Shinnick with much of achievement already to his credit is really at the beginning of a most promising career. He is a democrat, a member of the Catholic Church and the Knights of Columbus. He graduated from the Kentucky State University in 1917.

Edgar D. Bourne has been a banker at Taylorsville forty consecutive years. It is a record notable in length of service among active bankers of the state, and he has been the man chiefly responsible for building up and maintaining one of the soundest financial institutions in Spencer County.

Mr. Bourne was born in Montgomery County, Kentucky, on a farm, July 7, 1846. He represents an old and patriotic American family. His grandfather, James Bourne, was a native of Virginia and served as a soldier in the American Revolution. In 1802 he brought his family west to Kentucky and settled in Montgomery County. Walker Bourne, father of the Taylorsville banker, was born in Culpeper County, Virginia, in 1790, and had a record of service as a soldier in the War of 1812 in the county of Culpeper, Virginia, and he reached the advanced age of eighty-three. Walker Bourne married Willie Jameson, who was born in Montgomery County, Kentucky, daughter of Thomas Jameson, also a native of this state, and of old Virginia stock. The Jamesons who captured Major Andrus during the Revolutionary war was of the same family. Mrs. Walker Bourne died in her eightieth year. She and her husband reared seven children. Two of the sons were Confederate soldiers, James M., in the Orphans Brigade, and Butler, who was under the command of John Morgan.

Edgar D. Bourne, like the other children, grew up on the farm and acquired a very good education. In early life he pursued the profession of civil engineering, but about 1878 began his career as a banker with the firm A. J. Lee & Son at Owingsville.

December 15, 1881, Mr. Bourne came to Taylorsville and organized the Bank of Taylorsville, and has been its cashier and active executive officer ever since. This bank has a capital of $50,000, surplus of $30,000 and undivided profits of $10,000.

In 1893 Mr. Bourne married Miss Elizabeth Cheatham, daughter of Dr. W. H. Cheatham, formerly of Taylorsville and later of Louisville. Her brother is Dr. William Cheatham, who has gained distinction as an eye, ear, nose and throat specialist. Mr. and Mrs. Bourne have three children, William Cheatham, Elizabeth Jameson and Judith Ball Bourne.

Benjamin Franklin Shields, M. D. Busied with a growing practice as a physician and surgeon at Taylorville, Doctor Shields has also found time to devote to politics, is one of the democratic leaders in Spencer County, and has represented that county in the Legislature.

Doctor Shields was born near Chaplin in Nelson County, Kentucky, January 2, 1881, son of Benjamin and Elizabeth Russell (Green) Shields. On both sides he represents old and honored Kentucky families. His father was a native of Spencer County and his mother of Nelson County. His grandfather, Vincent Shields, married a Miss Anderson. The name Shields is of Scotch origin. The maternal grandparents of Doctor Shields were Levin and Henrietta (Milton) Green. Benjamin F. Shields, Sr., was a merchant at Alton, Anderson County, when he died at the age of thirty-two. He was the father of two sons and two daughters. His widow, who died at the age of sixty, subsequently married J. T. Williams, and by that union had a son and three daughters.

Dr. Benjamin Franklin Shields grew up in Spencer County in the home of his mother and stepfather. He had a farm training, attended the common schools, and completed his literary education in Transylvania University. He was graduated in medicine from the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville on July 3, 1905, and for a time practiced in Anderson and also in Mercer County, but his best professional work has been done since he moved to Taylorsville. He is a member of the Spencer County; Kentucky State and American Medical associations.

Doctor Shields was chosen representative from Spencer County and served in the session of 1920. He was a delegate to the National Convention at San Francisco the same year. He is a member of the Christian Church. In 1918 he married Miss Arda May Milligan.

James M. Morris, M. D., an accomplished physician and surgeon and an official of the United States Public Health Service, with headquarters in the Federal Building at Hopkinsville, is a veteran of two wars, and represents a pioneer family of Jackson County, Kentucky, where he was born March 24, 1873.

His paternal ancestors on coming from England settled in the colony of Pennsylvania. His grandfather, Henry Morris, was born in North Carolina in 1800. Shortly after his marriage he left North Carolina and settled in Jackson County, Kentucky. He was a civil engineer by profession and was a Union soldier during the Civil War. He died at McKee in Jackson County in 1885. His wife was Caroline Hunt, who was born in North Carolina in 1804 and died in Jackson County in 1890.

Their son, John G. Morris, still living on his farm in Jackson County, was born in Owsley County in 1847; was George Breckenridge Shindler. While his private law practice has continued in growing and gratifying volume, George Breckenridge Shindler for more than a quarter of a century has held some of the important public offices of the county for a quarter of a century. He has not withheld his talents from the public welfare, and has been ready to do his part in any movement wherein the general interests of the public were concerned.

Mr. Shindler was born in Taylorsville, Kentucky, March 23, 1866, a son of George and Virginia (Breckenridge) Shindler. His grandfather, George Shindler, was of Pennsylvania Dutch ancestry and came from Pennsylvania to Kentucky. His maternal grandfather, George Breckenridge, was at one time grand master of the Masonic Lodge of Kentucky. He lived for many years in Fayette County, but spent his last days in Washington County. George Shindler, father of the Taylorsville lawyer, was born in Shelby County, Kentucky, and his wife was born in Fayette County. They were married in Washington County, and during the greater part of his life George Shindler conducted a mill at Maud, but later moved to a farm in Spencer County, where he died at the age of sixty-nine. His wife was the daughter of George Breckenridge; he was his second wife, and she died in 1898. She was the mother of his six children, George Breckenridge being the only survivor.

Mr. Shindler grew up in his native county until he was fifteen, and after that lived in Spencer County. His determination and industry were an important factor in his gaining a liberal education. After the common schools he spent one term in an institute at Bardstown, and in 1889 graduated from the Louisville Law School and began practice as a lawyer at Taylorsville when he was twenty-three years of age. His record of official service was practically continuous for a quarter of a century. From May, 1893, to January, 1898, he was county attorney, and was judge of the Court County from January 1, 1898, for twelve years, and from January, 1910, to January, 1918, filled the office of county clerk.

Judge Shindler took an active part in organizing and has since been vice president of the Peoples Bank at Taylorsville. During the World war he was a member of the local Draft Board. He is a democrat, a member of the Methodist Church and a Royal Arch Mason. In 1892 he married Nellie Meade, of Spencer County. They have one daughter, Nellie I., wife of John B. Thomas, of Taylorsville, the present sheriff of Spencer County.

Abijah B. Gilbert. At Pineville, the judicial center and metropolis of Bell County, is a general insurance agency that has a representative clientele and controls a substantial and prosperous business, built up on fair and honorable policies and careful consideration of the requirements of its supporters. This flourishing enterprise was established by Mr. Gilbert in 1912, and by his progressive methods and vigorous policies he has developed the agency into one of the most important of its kind in Eastern Kentucky, the annual business here undertaken having now attained to an average in excess of $100,000. At Pineville Mr. Gilbert maintains his well equipped offices in 144 Avenue, on the Public Square, and at Hazard, county seat of Perry County, he maintains a branch office on Main Street, opposite the Court House.

Mr. Gilbert is a native of Clay County, Kentucky, at whose judicial center, Manchester, he was born on the 10th of November, 1882, and he is a representative of an old and honored family of that county. His grandfather, Dr. Felix J. Gilbert, passed his entire life in the district of Redbird Creek, Clay County, where he died prior to the birth of Abijah B. of this sketch, he having become one of the leading physicians and surgeons of that county and having been influential in community affairs. His wife, whose family name was Dorton, likewise died in that county. Doctor Gilbert was a son of Rev. John Gilbert, who was born in North Carolina, in 1757, a son of a sterling Colonial family of that commonwealth, and he came to Kentucky about 1780, and settled near Hyden, in the present county of Middlesboro, Kentucky. He cleared land from the state streets to large tracts of land, worth millions of dollars at the present day, and though the most of these holdings have since passed out of the possession of the family, he developed a large and productive farm from the wilderness and endured his full share of the labors and responsibilities of a pioneer. This sturdy and honored citizen lived to the remarkable age of 112 years and was recognized patriarch of the Redbird Creek section of Clay County, at the time of his death, in 1890. He had been an extensive land-owner not only in Kentucky but also in Virginia. Besides associating himself closely with civic and industrial progress in the Blue Grass state he served many years as an able and zealous clergyman of the Baptist Church. His name merits high place on the enduring roll of the honored pioneers of Kentucky.

Rev. Taylor J. Gilbert, father of him whose name is hereafter mentioned, was born on the old homestead on Redbird Creek, Clay County, in the year 1850 and died at Prentice, Oklahoma, April 30, 1902. As a clergyman of the Baptist Church he held pastoral charges in Letcher, Perry, Clay and other counties in this section of the state, and in his somewhat itinerant service he preached in communities throughout much of eastern and central Kentucky, his consecrated zeal having been fortified by his strong intellectuality and his earnest desire to aid and uplift his fellow men. He removed to Prentice, Oklahoma, in January 1902 and there his death occurred on the 30th of the following April. He was a democrat in politics and served three terms as assessor of Clay County, Kentucky, a republican stronghold. He was long and actively affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. His widow whose maiden name was Polly Maggard was born at Hyden, Kentucky in 1851 and now resides at Mangum, Oklahoma. She is a daughter of Samuel Maggard, who was born near Hyden, Kentucky and who passed away in 1874, and she is the widow of a man who there passed his entire life. He was born in 1828 and died in 1912, his wife whose family name was McIntosh having likewise passed her entire life in the vicinity of Hyden. Rev. Taylor J. and Polly (Maggard) Gilbert became the parents of nine children concerning whom the following data are available: James M. is a representative member of the bar of Bell County and is engaged in the practice of his profession at Pineville; Mittle became the wife of Emery Candlitt; while a cattle grower in Texas and her death occurred in the State of New Mexico in 1911; John died at the age of four years and Minter at the age of two years; Abijah B. of this review was the next in order of birth; Lettie is the wife of George Stone who is engaged in the insurance business at Mangum, Oklahoma and in their home abides her widowed mother; Harry has charge of the Hazard insurance office of his brother Abijah B. to whom he has proved an able assistant in the development of the substantial business there centered; Thomas J. resides at Knoxville, Tennessee, and is Southern manager of the Kentucky Fuel Company; and Mary, the widow of Benjamin Parker, who became a merchant at Wetherford, Texas, now resides at Mangum, Oklahoma.

To the rural schools of Clay County, Abijah B. Gilbert is indebted for the preliminary education that provided him for entrance into the Barberville Baptist Institute, at the judicial center of Knox County, where he continued his studies during one term. Upon the death of his father he assumed charge of the farm which the latter had acquired in the vicinity of Prentice, Oklahoma, where he continued his activities in this capacity from 1902 until 1916. In the latter years he entered the Spencerian Business College in the City of Louisville, Kentucky, and in this institution he was graduated in 1907, upon completing a thorough course in stenography, bookkeeping and banking methods. For two years thereafter he was retained as law clerk in the office of Judge M. J. Rhorer of Middleboro, Bell County, and he then received the appointment of official court stenographer for the Twenty-sixth Judicial District, whereupon he established his residence at Pineville, Bell County, in 1909, his service as court stenographer having continued from that year until 1912, in which latter year he established his present general insurance agency at Pineville, as noted in the opening paragraph of this review.

In addition to his substantial insurance business Mr. Gilbert holds an interest in 280 acres of coal land in Leslie County, this land having three veins of coal, one of which is seven feet in thickness. His fine house at Pineville was destroyed by fire on the 17th of May, 1921, but this property loss was of pitiful insignificance in view of the fact that his two youngest children, Taylor J. and Mary Helen, lost their lives in this tragic conflagration. He owns other realty at Pineville, and at the time of this writing he is in the process of buying a modern house to take the place of his former home and to be located on Walnut Street, one block distant from the Court House.

Mr. Gilbert is aligned in the ranks of the democratic party, and both he and his wife are members of the Baptist Church at Pineville, in which he is serving as a trustee. He is affiliated with Bell Lodge No. 691, Free and Accepted Masons; Pineville Chapter No. 158, Royal Arch Masons at Pineville Commandery No. 29, Knights Templars, of which he served as treasurer from 1916 to 1921; and Kosair Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, in the City of Louisville. He is treasurer of the Kiwanis Club of Pineville and a strong supporter of its progressive civic policies. He took active part in all local war service during the period of American participation in the World war, served as fuel administrator of Bell County, aided in the local drive in support of Government bond issues, and collected from his individual subscriptions to the varied war causes as liberal as possible.

At Middleboro, Bell County, November 2, 1911, Mr. Gilbert wedded Miss Lydia Pool, daughter of David and Lydia (McComas) Pool. Mr. Pool, who was born and reared in Scotland, was a young man when he came to the United States, and eventually he became a successful carriage manufacturer in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio. His widow now maintains her home at Goldsboro, North Carolina. Mrs. Lydia Gilbert was graduated in the high school at Cincinnati and also in the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. She was summoned to the life eternal in July, 1919, and of her three children only the eldest is living, Lydia Pool, who was born September 9, 1912. It has already been noted, in a preceding paragraph, that the two younger children were burned to death in the fire that destroyed the family home on the 17th of May, 1921, the tragedy glooming and sorrow over the entire community. The two children who thus sacrificed their lives were Mary Helen, born January 9, 1917; and Taylor Joseph, born November 17, 1918.

The second marriage of Mr. Gilbert was solemnized at Middleboro, Bell County, in November, 1920, when Miss Fannie Jones, daughter of the late Lewis Jones, became his wife. Mr. Jones was for many years engaged in the wholesale grocery business in the City of Louisville.

AMEBROSE HENRY WITHERSPOON, M. D., of Lawrenceburg, represents one of the oldest and most highly respected families of Anderson County. In the medical profession, banking and other affairs the name has been associated with conspicuous honors and achievements. The Witherspoons of Anderson County are direct descendants of John A. Witherspoon, a signer of the Declaration of American Independence.

About the year 1800 Lawrenceburg became the home of two brothers, Dr. Lewis and Dr. John A. Witherspoon, who removed from Franklin County, Kentucky. They remained there enjoying an extensive practice of physicians the rest of their lives. They also invested heavily in land, and through their wealth as well as their profession were men of the finest influence in the community. Each of them had a son who continued the professional interest and each also had two grandsons to become physicians. Dr. John A. Witherspoon's three sons were Oran, Allie and Lewis, his son Oran becoming the physician; while the two grandsons of John A. who adopted the profession were Ezra, son of Oran, and John T., son of Lewis. Dr. Lewis Witherspoon's five sons were John A., James, William Horace, Lister and Newton Holly. John A. was the physician, and his three sons were Clarence, Allie and Newton Holly. James Witherspoon had a son, Horace, who took up the medical profession.

Dr. Lewis Witherspoon named his oldest son in honor of his brother, and these two—uncle and nephew—were the founders in 1866 of the first banking institution at Lawrenceburg, conducted by the firm of J. and J. A. Witherspoon. Out of this pioneer institution has developed the present Anderson National Bank of Lawrenceburg.

Dr. John A. Witherspoon was for many years prominent as a banker and man of affairs as well as a physician. His probity was a byword, and during a long and active life he represented a complete integrity of action and character. Many troubles between his professional contemporaries were settled by him, his sense of justice effecting reconciliations where others means failed. He was born at Lawrenceburg and spent all his life there, and was a graduate of Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia. He was a strong Southern sympathizer, and always supported the men and measures of the democratic political party, while his church was the Baptist. Dr. John A. Witherspoon died in 1899, at his home there. His wife was Mary McKeel, of an old and highly respected family in Kentucky.

One of their three sons and three daughters is Dr. Ambrose H. Witherspoon, who was born at Lawrenceburg March 27, 1870. He was educated in the schools of his native town, the Kentucky Military Institute, Georgetown College of Kentucky, and in his father's alma mater, Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, from which he received the M. D. degree in 1894. For six years he practiced at Lexington, but soon after the death of his father returned to Lawrenceburg, in 1900, and his professional work, carried on through a period of twenty years, has given additional prestige to the family name. He is a member of the Anderson County, the Midland, the Kentucky State, the Southern and the American Medical associations.

Dr. Witherspoon is a democrat and a member of the Baptist Church, is a member of regular Mason and Odd Fellow. He married in 1894 Miss Frankie Lillard, daughter of the late Christopher Lillard, a prominent banker and citizen of Lawrenceburg. Doctor and Mrs. Witherspoon have two children, Eugene, at home, a teacher in the Lawrenceburg High School, and Emma Adelia, wife of John Dowling Stuart, son of Dr. John Stuart, and grandson of the proprietor of the Stuart House, near Frankfort, Kentucky. In the immediate Witherspoon family there have been eight doctors and eight bankers. Of the doctors there are but three living.

John Whittington Gilbert, M. D. For nearly half a century the name Gilbert has been one of most honorable distinction in Anderson County associated with the profession and practice of medicine. Dr. J. W. Gilbert took up the profession after the death of his honored father, who had achieved high rank as a practitioner.

John Whittington Gilbert was born at Lawrenceburg September 19, 1880, a son of Dr. John Webster and Alinec (Kavanaugh) Gilbert. His grandfather, James Gilbert, was a native of Kentucky, and of a Virginia family represented at the time of the Revolution by soldiers in the Continental Army. Dr. John Webster Gilbert was born and reared in Spencer County, Kentucky, graduated in medicine at the University of Louisville, and began practice at Fox Creek in Anderson County, but subsequently removed to Lawrenceburg, where his skill in his chosen calling earned him favorable distinction. He died in 1893, at the early age of forty-three, leaving three sons, and his widow continued to practice until her death. The eldest son, John W. Gilbert, was born at Lawrenceburg October 19, 1857. He was the son of Dr. John Webster and Alinec (Kavanaugh) Gilbert. He early received the name Gilbert, as one of his extensive professional work and never sought public or political honors. He voted as a democrat, and was a Baptist and a Master Mason. His widow still survives him. She was born and reared in Anderson County, representing an old established family in that part of Kentucky. Her four children are Emrin Claybourn, John Whittington, George Hubbard and James Freeman Gilbert.

Dr. John Whittington Gilbert attended the public schools of Lawrenceburg, finished his literary and classical education in the University of Kentucky at Lexington, where he graduated in 1900, and in 1904 received his medical degree from the University of Louisville. After eight months of practice in Mississippi he returned to his native town of Lawrenceburg. During the World War Doctor Gilbert was chairman of the Anderson County Draft Board. Incidentally it may be mentioned that not a single slacker is credited to the county records. He is a member of the Anderson County, Midland, Kentucky State and American Medical associations, is a democrat, and fraternally is a Royal Arch Mason and Odd Fellow. In 1913 Doctor Gilbert married Miss Agnes McKeel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John R. McKeel of Woodford County, Kentucky. Doctor and Mrs. Gilbert have five children.

LAFAYETTE WEBSTER ROSS. The Spencer County bar has one of its oldest and most valued members in Lafayette Webster Ross, who has practiced law at Taylorsville nearly thirty years. Mr. Ross has likewise been active and influential in community affairs, and is a banker as well as a lawyer.

Nearly all his life has been spent in Kentucky, though he was born in Monroe County, West Virginia, August 22, 1865. His parents, John P. and Rebecca (Johnson) Ross, were natives of the same section of West Virginia. His father was born June 16, 1818, and his mother in April, 1823. They were married December 31, 1840, and continued to live in Monroe County, West Virginia, until 1867, when they moved to a farm in Oldham County, Kentucky. In the meantime, throughout the period of the war between the states, John P. Ross and his two oldest sons were doing duty as Confederate soldiers, the oldest son being a captain in the army, John P. Ross otherwise spent his life as a substantial farmer. He voted as a democrat, and he and his wife were very devout Methodists, and were of that older generation who maintained family worship as long as they lived. These good old people spent their last days at LaGrange, where the mother died July 9, 1007, and the father November 6, 1907. Their eight children were Cornelius P., Newton B., James F., Elbert C., Festus S., Pemberton J., Lafayette W. and Emma, wife of Frank Peak, a prominent Louisville attorney.

Lafayette Webster Ross was two years of age when brought to the farm in Oldham County, where he grew up and acquired his common school advantages. In 1891 he was graduated from the Kentucky Wesleyan College, now located at Winchester, and two years later, in 1893, received his diploma from the Louisville Law School. He at once located at Taylorsville, and in that community has practiced law ever since, and has always occupied the same office. Mr. Ross served sixteen years, by election, as county burner. He finally declined to hold the office any longer, though later he was appointed to fill out an unexpired term and is the present incumbent. Altogether his service in that one county office aggregates twenty years.

Mr. Ross has for the past twelve years been president of the Bank of Taylorsville. During the war he was Government appeal agent for the local Board of Examiners. He is a democrat and a Master Mason. In 1851 he married Miss Mary Harwood. They have one daughter, Louise, wife of Robert McDowell, of Louisville.

CHARLES GARRARD DAUGHERTY, M.D., has practiced medicine at Paris for twenty years. He was born in that city, and is member of a family that has some interesting historical associations with Kentucky.

His parents were Daugherty A. and Anna Maria (Garrard) Daugherty. His mother was a daughter of Charles Todd Garrard, a granddaughter of Gen. James Garrard, and a great-granddaughter of Governor James Garrard of Kentucky. Charles A. Daugherty was a son of James and Margaret (Canon) Daugherty, of Stokes Parish, County Roscommon, Ireland. He came from Ireland direct to Kentucky with Dennis Mulligan and other early settlers of Fayette County. James Daugherty was a contractor in building the turnpike from Lexington to Georgetown, and afterwards became proprietor of an inn at Georgetown. He was killed while trying to quiet several unruly patrons, being then only forty years of age. His son Charles was six years of age when his father died, and the other two children were Mary C., who became Mrs. Johnson, and Michael Canon, who was a Confederate soldier and is now a broker in New York City.

Charles A. Daugherty learned the painter's trade, and as a young man worked with C. W. Forshee, ex-mayor of Lexington. One of the jobs on which he was employed under Mr. Forshee was the interior decorating of Ashland, the home of Henry Clay. In 1866 Charles A. Daugherty moved to Paris, where he became a painting contractor, and the business is still continued by his son. He died at Paris in 1917, survived by his wife until the time of this writing, and the parents of the following children: Charles Garrard, Jr., a contractor and the continuing painting business founded by his father; Edward, who died while a law student; Frank, a mechanical engineer and vice president of the Sceofield Engineering Company of Philadelphia; Garrard, a graduate landscape gardener of Cornell University, associated in business with his brother James; Helen, wife of Prof. J. Hazelrigg, of Shelbyville; and Miss Anna.

Charles Garrard Daugherty was married after attending the grammar and high schools of Paris entered Transylvania College, graduating A. B. in 1866, and in 1890 received his medical degree from New York University. He also had two years of training in Bellevue Hospital, and in 1901 returned to Paris and has been busily engaged in his general practice as a physician and surgeon. He is a member of the Bourbon County, Kentucky State and American medical associations, and also has other social, civic and business connections.

In 1917 Doctor Daugherty married Miss Bessie Buckner Holladay, daughter of Maj. John B. and Sally (Morgan) Holladay, of Paris.

EDGAR THOMAS McMahan, M. D. While a physician by training and by an active service of eight years or more, Doctor McMahan eventually abandoned his professional work because of impaired health, and for the past fifteen years has been an executive officer in the Peoples Bank of Taylorsville, where he formerly practiced medicine.

Doctor McMahan was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, December 5, 1871, son of Peter A. and Milch Ann (Jones) McMahan. His father was of Irish and his mother of Welsh lineage. Doctor McMahan grew up on a farm and attended country schools and the Southern Indian Normal at Mitchell. For three years his work was that of a teacher in Jefferson County, Kentucky. In 1898 he graduated from the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville, and at once moved to Spencer County, where his work as a physician and surgeon continued until 1906.

In that year he accepted the cashiership of the Peoples Bank of Taylorsville, and his service to that institution has continued without a break of his time and abilities ever since. The People's Bank was organized in 1903, opening its doors for business on the 2d of February. The original capital was $25,000, increased in 1920 to $35,000. The surplus and undivided profits of the bank in 1921 were $30,000. The bank has had remarkably few changes in the personnel of its officers. The first president was Joseph Tucker and the second president was F. G. Greenwell, who is still acting head of the institution. There have been two vice presidents, Z. A. Carithers and G. B. Shindler. J. W. Hill held the post of cashier until he was succeeded by Doctor McMahan in 1906. The assistant cashier is B. O. Wiggin.

Doctor McMahan married in 1900 Miss Mary Carithers, daughter of the late Z. A. Carithers. They have two children, Anna Elizabeth and Mary Matilda. Doctor McMahan is a democrat and is one of the leading lay members of the Baptist Church, having for several years served as moderator of the Taylorsville Baptist Association.

WILLIAM W. BOOLES, Former member of the State Senate, William W. Booles for over a quarter of a century has been actively identified with merchandising at Taylorsville, and the character he has exemplified in business and in public affairs undoubtedly makes him one of the strongest and best known citizens of Spencer County.

He was born in Monroe Parish, Louisiana, June 26, 1867. His father, Dr. James J. Booles, was a physician and surgeon of more than ordinary ability, and also a merchant and banker. Born near Griffin, Georgia, Doctor Booles married Sarah A. Edmonds, a native of the same state. Just before the Civil war they removed to Monroe Parish, Louisiana, where Doctor Booles had his home the rest of his life. He soon joined the Confederate Army as a surgeon, and with the close of the struggle resumed the private practice of his profession. In later years he was prominently identified with business and banking. His force of character, his keen intellect, pronounced integrity and congenial spirit combined to make his career one of prominence and success. He lived to the ripe old age of seventy-nine. He was a democrat, an ardent Baptist, and his widow, who survives him at the age of eighty, is of the same church faith.

William W. Booles, one of the five children of his parents, grew up in Louisiana and finished his education in Howard College Military School. Through his later life he was known as captain of a Louisiana company of militia he derived the title of "Major." He is always known among his associates and friends in Kentucky as "Major," and he acquired a thorough experience in his father's store and banking house, and to commercial affairs he has given the best years and zeal of his mature manhood.

Captain Booles in 1882 married Miss Nannie Hough, daughter of Charles Hough, a veteran merchant of Taylorsville, Kentucky. In 1884 Captain Booles prominently identified himself with Taylorsville as a member of the dry goods firm of Charles Hough & Company. With that old house he has continued his services now for over a quarter of a century.

Captain Booles is one of the leaders in the democratic party in this section of the state. He was in the State Senate two terms, and while there did much to impress the soundness of his business judgment upon the work of that body. In 1916 he was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention at St. Louis, when Mr. Wilson was re-nominated. He has been a thorough admirer of both the administration and personal character of Mr. Wilson. Captain Booles for many years has been a faithful member of the Baptist Church, and is a Knight Templar Mason.

W. W. KINGTON. In proportion to its population there is probably more industry and business at Mortons Gap than any other town in Hopkins County. The initiative and responsibility for this situation is due to W. W. Kington more than to any other man of enterprise. Mr. Kington is a past master in the art of coal mining, a business learned from every practical angle of experience. For many years he has been one of the prominent coal operators of this section of Kentucky. He has been interested in most of the large mining developments in and around Mortons Gap, and has made his personal success redound to the improvement and prosperity of the community. He is president of the leading bank of the town, and one of its largest property owners and most public spirited citizens.

His grandfather was Barney M. Kington, who was born in the Cumberland Mountains, near Chattanooga, Tennessee, in 1788. He came to Kentucky about 1810, is was a pioneer farmer here. He died in 1865, at Evansville, Indiana, while on a business trip. His death was due to cholera. George W. Kington, father of the Mortons Gap banker, was born in the Cumberland Mountains of Tennessee in February, 1839, and was about seven years of age when the family came to Hopkins County. He was reared and married here, spent several years as a farmer and later as a coal miner. In 1875 he moved west to Arkansas, and his subsequent fortunes were unknown to his family. He married Susan O'Bryan, who was born in Hopkins County in 1843 and died near Lexington, Kentucky, in 1888. W. W. Kington is the oldest of their children. Katie, the second, is the wife of C. H. Sisk, a coal mine owner and operator living at Mortons Gap. J. M. Kington is an employee of the Hart Coal Corporation, lives at Mortons Gap, and was connected with the Kington Coal Company for fourteen years, until this business was sold by his brother W. W. Kington.

W. W. Kington was born near Mortons Gap, July 14, 1861. The only advantages of school he received were at Mortons Gap, and most of his education has been acquired by subsequent reading and business experience. He was only twelve years of age when he went to work in the coal mines. His first employment was with the old South Diamond Coal Company, and his first duties consisted in greasing cars. He also was a driver of coal cars in the mines, and other experiences taught him practically every phase of the work of an underground miner. He has held practically every position in connection with the operation of a coal mine. For several years he was also in the saw mill, which enabled him to understand all his capital and abilities in mine operation. In 1901 he established the Kington & Wolf Coal Company, and operated their mines four years. On May 5, 1907, he formed the Kington Coal Company, was its president, and energetically developed its properties until the mines had a capacity of 1,500 tons per day. At the height of the season's production 350 men were working in and about the mines. Mr. Kington sold his interest in these prosperous mining organizations on July 1, 1920.

In August, 1920, he incorporated the Kington Coal Mining Company, whose properties are at Morgantown, Kentucky, with business offices at Mortons Gap. Mr. Kington is president of this company. In one respect he probably has a unique distinction as a coal mine operator in Kentucky, that he has never employed a colored man in or around his mines.

The profits of his business career as a coal mine operator have been wisely diverted to other enterprises, chiefly in his home community of Mortons Gap. He was one of the organizers in 1907 and is president of the Planters Bank of Mortons Gap. This institution, conducted under a state charter, has a capital of $145,000 and surplus and profits of $9,000. Besides Mr. Kington as president, Ben T. Robinson and W. D. Hill are vice presidents and the cashier is E. E. Henry. Mr. Kington is the only owner of the city's local National Park Bank, which was organized in January, 1917, and is said to be the only one of its kind in the state of Kentucky. The Land Bank of Hopkins County, built the local plant in 1914, but sold out his interests in May, 1920. Much of his capital has gone into the practical building program of Mortons Gap. He erected a substantial brick business block on Main and Cross streets in 1904, selling that property July 1, 1920. He is owner of a public garage on Main Street, and other real estate interests.

He formerly owned twenty-three dwellings in the town, and disposed of them all but four; he has a farm near Mortons Gap, and his own home is one of the best residences of the town, at Walnut and Railroad streets. For twenty-three years he was a member of the City Council, is a democrat in politics, has been one of the most active supporters of the Baptist Church, helping build the church edifice, and is a trustee of the society. He has participated in several campaigns during the World war and one of the principal investors in Government securities himself. Mr. Kington is a former member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1883, in Hopkins County, he married Miss Emma Lovan, who was born in that county in 1866 and died at her home in Mortons Gap, June 17, 1914. Her parents, James and Angelina (Hankins) Lovan, are now deceased. Her father was a native of Hopkins County and spent his life as a farmer. Mr. Kington had eight children. Katie, the oldest, is the wife of O. J. Oates, a coal mine owner and operator living at Madisonville. Willie G. is the wife of W. E. Davis, who is associated with O. J. Oates in the ownership and operation of the Peerless Coal Company. O. M. Kington is secretary and treasurer of the Kington Coal Mine Company, and owns a farm near Mortons Gap. Rena Mae died at Mortons Gap August 5, 1920. She was the wife of E. W. Jones, an employe of the Hart Coal Corporation at Mortons Gap. Goebel is the wife of Ries Trathen, of Mortons Gap, formerly an employe of the Kington Coal Company and since July 1, 1920, manager of the Thatten Garage. Hammond L., who finished his education at Bethel College at Russellville, is interested in the Bath coal property. The seventh child, Marie, died at the age of eleven years, and the youngest is George M., a student in the public schools.

Lewis Witherspoon MCKEE for over forty years has practiced law as a member of the Lawrenceburg bar. With the duties of an able lawyer he has combined a wholesome and public spirited devotion to the public welfare and has served in several elective offices, being notably active at various times in the Hopkins County Democratic Committee.

Mr. McKee was born December 26, 1854, at Lawrenceburg, son of Joseph H. D. and Martha (Witherspoon) McKee. He represents an old and distinguished American family. The record runs back to John McKee, who was of Scotch-Irish lineage and who removed from Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, to Rockbridge County, Virginia, the homestead in Virginia being located near, and on land owned by a descendant of the McKee family. Robert McKee, a native of Rockbridge County.

The next generation is also represented by Robert McKee, great-grandfather of Lewis Witherspoon McKee. This Robert McKee was born in Rockbridge County and was a Revolutionary soldier, participating in the battle of Mount Pleasant, said by historians to be the opening conflict in the frontier warfare that marked the revolution. He was the founder of the family in Kentucky, locating in Woodford County, where his homestead is still owned by the family. Robert McKee was the father of John McKee, a native of Rockbridge County. John McKee married Elizabeth Crockett, daughter of H. Anthony Crockett, a Revolutionary hero.

Joseph H. D. McKee was born in Franklin County, Kentucky, December 17, 1824, and died at Lawrenceburg July 8, 1880. He was one of the able lawyers of his time and generation. He represented his county in the State Legislature, and was a soldier in two wars. During the war of 1862-65, he served as first lieutenant in Captain Milan's Company of the First Kentucky Cavalry. In the war between the states he rose to the rank of major in the Confederate army. Joseph McKee married Martha Witherspoon, who was born at Lawrenceburg, daughter of Dr. Lewis Witherspoon, in whose honor her son was named.

Lewis Witherspoon McKee has always had his home in Lawrenceburg. He acquired his early education there, later attended the Kentucky Military Institute, and is a graduate of a college at LaGrange, Missouri. He studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1878, and since then continuously has had an active practice in his native town.

Mr. McKee served for several years in the National Guard, being chosen a captain in 1883 and later receiving promotion to major and finally to colonel. He was elected county judge of his native county, and in the year of 1885 he made a successful race for the State Senate. He was chosen county attorney in 1910. Colonel McKee is a staunch democrat and a Royal Arch Mason.

In 1886 he married Miss Eliza Irwin, who died in 1910. Of their six children two sons were represented in the World war. Andrew Irwin was a lieutenant in the navy and Logan McKee was a midshipman.

John Richard Paxton, present postmaster of Lawrenceburg, is a member of one of the oldest families of Anderson County, and his own career has been one of most honorable activity and relationship with that section of the state.

He was born on a farm in Anderson County January 8, 1863, son of James Edward and Mary Elizabeth (Thompson) Paxton and grandson of Richard H. and Mildred (Burns) Paxton. His great-grandfather came from Virginia and as a pioneer located in Anderson County, establishing a family that has given a splendid account of itself in all subsequent generations. Richard H. Paxton was born in Anderson County, and James Edward Paxton was born there August 30, 1834, and is still living at the age of eighty-seven, his active life having been devoted to the basic pursuit of agriculture. He is a democrat and a member of the Primitive Baptist Church.

John Richard Paxton is one of ten children, seven of whom are still living. He grew up on a farm, attended the public schools of Lawrenceburg and Georgetown College, and for several years was a successful and popular teacher. He taught school in the intervals of farming, but for the past twenty years his time has almost entirely been taken up with public duties. During the Reconstruction period, he was sheriff of Anderson County. He was master commissioner from 1906 to 1918. For about four years he was also in the grocery business at Lawrenceburg. In the fall of 1911 he was elected a member of the Legislature, serving one term. From 1912 to 1918 he was receiver for the Hoffman Distillery Company of Anderson County. Mr. Paxton was appointed acting postmaster of Lawrenceburg in April, 1918, and was regularly commissioned as the incumbent of that office in October of the same year.

He is a democrat, a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, and is a Royal Arch Mason and for nine years held the office of high priest in his chapter. In June, 1886, he married Miss Mattie Arnold, a native of Anderson County, daughter of Stephen and Amanda (Settle) Arnold, her father a native of Franklin County and her mother of Anderson County. Mr. and Mrs. Paxton have the parents of two sons and two daughters: Mary Lee, Sue J., Philip Allen, Mildred F., Katherine, Richard H., N. Arnold and Annetta Ruth. Mrs. Paxton is a member of the Baptist Church.

Alexander Dunlap Blaine, M. D. The dean of the medical profession at Dry Ridge is Dr. Alexander Dunlap Blaine, who has practiced medicine there continuously for over thirty years. His professional work, including agitation and activities he has given his program of usefulness, and he has discharged all his relations with the community to his honor and credit.

Doctor Blaine was born in Lincoln County, Kentucky, February 7, 1867. His grandfather was Robert Blaine, a cousin of James G. Blaine. The Blaine family came from Scotland and was established in Eastern Pennsylvania in Colonial times. Robert Blaine was born near summer and in 1801, there a graduate of the University of Tennessee, and for many years was a prominent lawyer at Stanford, Kentucky, where he died in 1861. He was a republican and was twice a member of the State Senate and twice sat in the House of Representatives. He was in the State Senate when he died as representative of Lincoln, Boyle and Garrard counties. The grandmother of Doctor Blaine was Fannie Thompson, a native of Lincoln County and representative of the counties of Garrard, Franklin, Union, and Rockbridge.

The second wife of Robert Blaine was Catherine (Hockins) Bell, a native of Fayette County, Kentucky, who died at Stanford.

Capt. R. C. Blaine, father of Doctor Blaine, was born in Lincoln County in 1844, and as a youth joined the Union Army and was captain of Company F of the First Kentucky Cavalry, under Col. Frank Wolford. He participated in the battles of Perryville, Chatanooga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, a number of the engagements around Atlanta, and his regiment participated in the capture of John Morgan in Ohio. Following the war he returned to Lincoln County, where he became a farmer and trader, and in 1870 moved to Grant County, and continued an extensive business as a farmer until 1911. He was one of the influential men who did much to keep up the republican party organization in the county. In the latter part of his active life, several times a candidate in the strong democratic county, for the State Legislature, and several times was chairman of the Republican Executive Committee. He was an elder for many years in the Presbyterian Church and long held the post of master of the Masonic Lodge at Stewartsville. He is also a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Captain Blaine married in Grant County Miss Annie Dunlap, who was born in that county in 1830 and died in 1873. She was the mother of ten children: Alexander Dunlap; Fannie, wife of John Flege, a farmer in Grant County; Robert, who was a soldier of the Spanish-American war, has widely and extensively traveled, and is a land owner in South Dakota; Will, a farmer with home in Dry Ridge; John, who owns a large farm and also a grain elevator at Gettsburg, South Dakota; Bettie, wife of O. M. Paynter, a millwright living at Salem, Virginia; Annie, wife of Robert Chilvers, claim attorney for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company at Cumberland, Maryland; Jennie, wife of Ernest Harkin, a representative in the State Legislature from Wood County, Kentucky; Logan, a farmer and rural mail carrier at Dry Ridge; and James, also a farmer at Dry Ridge.

Alexander Dunlap Blaine was about three years of age when his parents moved to Grant County, and he lived on his father's farm there while attending rural schools and also the high school at Williamstown. On leaving the farm he entered the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville and graduated M. D. in 1890 and in the same year began his professional work at Dry Ridge. His offices are in the Simpson Building on Main Street, and in his practice he has the advantage of over three years' experience, combined with constant study in professional lines. He is a member of the Grant County, Kentucky State and American Medical Associations, was a volunteer in the Medical Reserve Corps during the World war, served on the committee for the local chapter of the American Red Cross, and otherwise played an active part in forwarding the local success of war drives. Doctor Blaine was postmaster of Dry Ridge during McKinley's administration. He is a republican, a Presbyterian, is affiliated with Dry Lodge No. 849, F. and A. M., Grant Lodge No. 78, I. O. O. F., and was a charter member of Post No. 37, Improved Order of Red Men.

In 1896, at Dry Ridge, he married Miss Annie Mary O'Hara, daughter of Charles and Ann (Nichols) O'Hara, now deceased. The father was a manufacturer of plows at Dry Ridge. Mrs. Blaine is a graduate of the Millersburg Female College. They are the parents of three children: Robert, born October 5, 1900; a student of the Kentucky Wesleyan College at Winchester and during vacations a tobacco buyer for the Reynolds Tobacco Company; Charles A., born May 10, 1906, a high school student at Dry Ridge; and Moreland, born August 10, 1913, attending grammar school.

James Madison Bell Birdwhistell, a prominent banker and churchman of Lawrenceburg, was born and reared in Anderson County, is a member of a family that has been represented in the citizenship there for more than a century, and in his own career he has contributed to the honorable associations of the name with this community.

He was born on a farm December 6, 1835, son of William Bell and Mahulda (Scearce) Birdwhistell. The Birdwhistell family is of Scotch lineage. His grandparents were Thomas and Sallie (Scearce) Birdwhistell, the former a native of Maryland, born near Baltimore, and coming to Kentucky in 1818 and locating in Anderson County. He bought the farm which is now owned by J. M. B. Birdwhistell, William N. Birdwhistell was born, reared and spent his active life in Anderson County as a successful farmer. His wife, Mildred Smith, was born in Mercer County, Kentucky, daughter of James and Mahulda (Bell) Smith, who came to this state from Orange County, Virginia.

James Madison Bell Birdwhistell was reared on the farm and there learned the valuable lessons of industry and self reliance which have been productive of his chief success in his mature career. He attended the common schools and the Lawrenceburg Grammar School and graduated Master of Arts from Center College at Danville. For several years after leaving college he taught school, and for twelve years edited the Anderson News. Following that for a few years he was in the insurance business. Mr. Birdwhistell in 1910 became cashier of the Citizens Bank & Trust Company at Lawrenceburg. With the consolidation of that institution with the Lawrenceburg National Bank in 1912 he was chosen vice president of the latter institution.

Mr. Birdwhistell has never been active in politics, though a democrat. As a boy he united with the Christian Church, and in 1882 was elected an elder of the Lawrenceburg Church. For nearly forty years he has filled that office with ability and fidelity, and in 1921 rendered valuable service on the committee of the Finance Committee during the construction of the modern and handsome new church edifice, to which he was one of the generous individual contributors.

Mr. Birdwhistell in 1886 married Miss Mattie Bond. They had a happy marriage and an unbroken companionship of twenty-four years, until her death in 1910.

Lillard Harvey Carter. During a membership of nearly thirty years in the Lawrenceburg bar Lillard Harvey Carter has attended to unusually exacting and important duties as a lawyer, and again and again has been called from his private practice to serve the community in some important public position.

He was born during a temporary residence of his parents in Owen County, Kentucky, August 11, 1867, and grew up on a farm. His great-grandfather, John Carter, was a native of Virginia, and a representative of the distinguished King Carter family of that state. John Carter was a soldier of the Revolutionary war. After the war he removed from Norfolk, Virginia, to Woodford County, Kentucky. The grandfather of the Lawrenceburg lawyer was Josiah Carter, a native of Woodford County. Benjamin Carter, father of Lillard H., was born in Woodford County and married Elmira Linn, a native of that county and daughter of Horatio Linn, who was a native of Kentucky and of Irish lineage. The wife of Horatio Linn was a daughter of Commodore Richard Taylor, a distinguished naval officer in the Revolutionary war and also a pioneer of Woodford County, Kentucky.

Lillard Harvey Carter was six years of age when his parents returned to Woodford County, where he was reared and where he acquired his early education in the common schools. He received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Kentucky Wesleyan College in 1890, and in 1893 graduated in law from Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee. The same year he was admitted to the bar and has practiced at Lawrenceburg for nearly thirty years. The first political office he held was that of police judge. In 1896 he was democratic presidential elector for the Eighth District, and in 1897 was chosen to represent the Tenth Senatorial District in the State Senate. He was president pro temp of the Senate and acting lieutenant governor of Kentucky in 1900-02. Mr. Carter in 1904 was presidential elector at large for Kentucky, and in 1908 again yielded to the request of friends and was chosen for a term as representative in the Lower House of the Kentucky Legislature.

Mr. Carter is a Master Mason and a member of the Presbyterian Church. In 1866 he married Miss Gertrude King, of Nashville, Tennessee. They have one son, Nolan Carter.

John W. Milam, of Frankfort, is active head of the business originally established and developed by his father, the late Benjamin C. Milam. This firm, B. C. Milam & Son, are manufacturers of "The Milam," the original "Frankfort Kentucky" fishing reel, a perfected device probably known to every follower of the sport of fishing in America. These reels have been manufactured by the Milams for over eighty years. They have been awarded four international first prizes and medals: World's Fair, Chicago, Illinois, Fisheries Exposition, Bergen, Norway, World's Exposition, Paris, France, St. Louis Exposition, St. Louis, Missouri. They have been used by three presidents of the United States, Grover Cleveland, William McKinley and Theodore Roosevelt. Joseph Jefferson was also a great admirer of this reel, having four. A number of years ago a competing firm began manufacturing what they called the Frankfort Kentucky reel, and finally the Milam Company asked the courts for protection for their rights. The case was argued before Chancellor Shackelford Miller, later Chief Justice of the Kentucky Court of Appeals, who, on November 2, 1900, rendered an opinion sustaining for an injunction in favor of the Milam Company. The evidence brought out during the trial and the decision of Judge Miller constitute an interesting history of this famous reel and of the business of B. C. Milam & Son.

Before taking up the facts brought out in this trial something should be said of the Milam family in general. The Milams are of Welsh descent. Moses Milam, grandfather of Benjamin C. Milam, came from Wales to this country and married Pattie Boyd, and their son, John Milam, was born in Virginia in 1780, and at an early date settled in Franklin County, Kentucky, where he owned and operated a large farm of 400 acres. He died in Franklin County in 1843. John Milam married a Miss Bradley, who died in Franklin County.

Benjamin C. Milam was born in Franklin County, near the City of Frankfort July 1, 1821. He was a nephew of Gen. R. Milam, the Alabamian famous for having captured the fort and delivered it to Travis, Crockett and others. Mr. Milam was also connected by blood relation to Richard M. Johnson, once vice president of the United States. When about sixteen years of age Benjamin C. Milam went to Frankfort, and from the evidence adduced at the time of the trial mentioned he soon became an apprentice with Jonathan Meek, a watchmaker. After a number of years from the time B. F. Meek formed a partnership known as J. F. & B. F. Meek, with B. C. Milam associated with them. It was a watchmaker, Theodore Noel, who had made a fishing reel at Frankfort about 1830, and the manufacture of reels was an incidental part of the business of the firm of J. F. & B. F. Meek. B. C. Milam, not liking watchwork, took up the reel business and developed the multiplying reel to its present state of perfection, and spent his entire life to that business. In 1848 B. C. Milam was taken into the firm, which became J. F. & B. F. Meek & Company. Mr. Milam doing all the work of making reels. These reels were stamped "J. F. & B. F. Meek." In 1852 the firm failed and Jonathan Meek removed to Louisville, while on January 1, 1853, B. F. Meek and B. C. Milam formed a new firm as Meek & Milam, continuing the business of jewelers and reeilers at the old stand on Main Street. Mr. Milam had entire charge of and did all the reel work on the second floor above the watchmaking and jewelry establishment. Their partnership agreement was to the effect that upon dissolution the reel making outfit was to go to Milam. By mutual consent the partnership was dissolved in 1855 and Mr. Milam continued at the head of an independent business on the second floor of the old quarters. During the partnership the reels were stamped "Meek & Milam," and after the dissolution the reels had the same stamp until 1880, a period of twenty-seven years, though Meek had no interest in the business. During that time the Meek & Milam reel became famous not only throughout the United States but was known to the anglers of Europe. In 1882 B. F. Meek removed to Louisville and began making a reel, and was joined by T. B. Bryant and A. Meek among others who formed a corporation to continue the manufacturing of reels. Meek then returned to Frankfort.

The following quotation from the opinion of Judge Miller reveals the important points in the legal controversy and something further concerning the history of the business itself: "The plaintiffs, B. C. Milam & Son, now complain that the defendant corporation B. F. Meek & Son, with the design and purpose to get plaintiffs' trade and to deceive the public is now having and has since its purchase from B. F. Meek in 1868, been manufacturing reels in Louisville, which it puts on the market advertised as the original 'Frankfort, Kentucky Reel' by reason, whereof, it is claimed the public are deceived into buying defendant's reels as the reels of plaintiffs' make. No one of the Meeks are interested in or employed by the defendant corporation B. F. Meek & Sons.

"Prior to 1882 the Meek & Milam Reel made in Frankfort by B. C. Milam, had become generally known in Kentucky as the Frankfort Reel and outside of the state as the Kentucky Reel or the Frankfort, Kentucky Reel, and was so advertised by Mr. Milam in 1882 and was so stamped by him in 1886. The descriptive term or phrase Frankfort, Kentucky Reel was fixed in the public mind by B. F. Meek, as he was never engaged in the manufacture of these reels at Frankfort after 1855, while Milam had been continuously in that business at the old stand, 318 Main Street, from 1838 to the present time, a period of more than fifty years.

"The plaintiffs' reels have become famous during a period of nearly fifty years of exclusive manufacture at Frankfort, Kentucky—in fact they became so popular and generally known, and subsequently advertised as the 'Frankfort, Kentucky Reel.' To allow the defendant corporation to reap the benefit of the plaintiffs' long and honorable course in business by indirectly naming or calling its reel made in Louisville and as the Frankfort Reel or the Frankfort, Kentucky Reel—something that Ben F. Meek, its assignor, never attempted or claimed—would be in violation of the fundamental legal and equitable right of the trade laid down in the many authorities above cited."

Benjamin C. Milam died at Frankfort in 1904, several years after his controversy was decided. Besides his place as a manufacturer he was also a well known banker, having helped establish and for many years was president of the Deposit Bank of Frankfort. He was a veteran of the Mexican war, having served as captain of cavalry under Colonel Humphrey Marshall. He was also a member of the Republic, was two terms a member of the city council, president of the council and mayor pro temp, and was affiliated with Hiram Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., Frankfort Chapter No. 3, R. A. M., and Frankfort Commandery, K. T.

Benjamin C. Milam married Martha Shockley. She was born in Frankfort in 1826 and died in 1885. Her father, Thomas Shockley was born in Franklin County Kentucky, and died in Oklahoma. His mother came to Kentucky from Orange County, Virginia, and settled in the County of Franklin. He served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war, took part in a number of Indian campaigns, and his was the first house burned by the savages in Kentucky during the period of early settlement. He was one of the garrison that defended Bryant's Station near Lexington when that place was besieged by Indians.

Benjamin C. Milam had two children, Annie and John C. The daughter, Mrs. Sarah King, was married to T. B. Bryant, one of the partners who formed the corporation to continue the manufacturing of reels. Meek then returned to Frankfort.
On September 12, 1888, at Hamilton, Ohio, Mr. Milam married Miss Mary Vander Veer, daughter of Henry and Sallie (Millikin) Vander Veer, now deceased, and a granddaughter of Thomas Millikin, one of the most noted lawyers in the State of Ohio. Her father was in the real estate business at Hamilton. Mr. Milam was seven years in military service, first as a private lieutenant, and was commissioned captain in 1883 of the State Militia.

OVA B. LIVINGSTON. By the extent of his business as a livestock dealer Ova B. Livingston is known all over Hopkins and surrounding counties. His transactions aggregate an immense volume every year, and he probably consigns more carlots of livestock for the distant markets than any other dealer in his section of the state. Mr. Livingston comes from a race of sturdy farmers, and has been identified with agriculture and livestock industries from early youth.

He was born near Hanson in Hopkins County, October 24, 1877. The Livingstons are an English family, but were transplanted to Virginia in Colonial times. The founder of the family in Hopkins County was his grandfather, Wiltse Livingston, who was born in North Carolina. He made his home for a period in this state, and is one of the county’s largest land owners and most extensive farmers. He always affiliated as a democrat in politics. His death occurred in Hopkins County in 1914. He married a Miss Washington, a native of Kentucky, who died in Hopkins County. H. N. Livingston, father of Ova B., was born in Hopkins County in 1860, after his marriage took up farming, later moved to the Village of Hanson, though still operating a farm, and since 1873 has lived at Madisonville. He carried on farming on a large scale, and for many years has been a tobacco dealer, and still buys tobacco as a means of occupation for his leisure. He is owner of one farm ten miles east of Hanson, but has sold the greater part of his farming lands. He is a democrat, and a very active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. H. N. Livingston married Henrietta Wilson, who was born in Hopkins County in 1856. Ova B. is their only son. His sister is Clara, wife of J. W. Powell, city attorney of Madisonville.

Ova B. Livingston attended rural schools and the Hanson High School to the age of twenty, and has had an active business career for nearly a quarter of a century. For five years he owned and operated a farm in Hopkins County, but in 1902 moved his home and business headquarters to Madisonville, from which point he carries on an extensive operation in the buying and selling of livestock. He buys cattle, horses, mules, hogs and other livestock, and both winter and summer carries on extensive feeding operations, getting his stock ready for market. He is interested in a farm a mile north of Madisonville. He is also a stockholder in the Peoples Bank at Hanson. November 8, 1920, at the death of R. S. Hunter, Mr. Livingston was appointed sheriff by party support of his (the Republican) party, which position he now holds.

Mr. Livingston went all over Hopkins County locating the sale of War Savings Stamps, was an individual purchaser of bonds and savings stamps to the limit of his ability, and devoted his energies, heart and soul to every patriotic movement during the great war. He operates probably the most attractive bungalow residence in Madisonville, a brick structure with all the modern conveniences. It is on East Noel Avenue. Politically Mr. Livingston is a republican, is a steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and has always been ready to do his part in community enterprises.

In 1898, in Union County, Kentucky, he married Miss Mattie B. Sluyton, a daughter of James B. and Mollie (Edmonson) Sluyton, retired farmers living at Sturgis, Kentucky. Mrs. Livingston is a graduate of the Sturgis High School.

SCOTT BROWN. While a resident of Frankfort and a well known business man of that city, Scott Brown has concentrated his energies chiefly since leaving college to practical farming. His farm is four miles south of Frankfort, and is a property that has been in the Brown family for three generations, considerably more than a century.

The Browns are a Scotch-Irish family that settled in Virginia in Colonial times. The grandfather of Scott Brown was also named Scott Brown, was a native of Virginia, but in an early day came to Kentucky and settled in Franklin County, where he obtained land as a grant from the State of Virginia. He lived on the old farm four miles south of Frankfort until his death. He married Miss Munday, a native of Virginia, who died in Hopkins County.

The father of Scott Brown of Frankfort was Judge Reuben Brown, who was born on the old homestead in 1822. He lived there and farmed for several years, then moved to Bridgeport, Kentucky, where he married, and from that location conducted farming on an extensive scale, also studied law and practiced his profession, serving one term as county judge of Franklin County. He was a loyal democrat and an active member of the Presbyterian Church. His death occurred in Bridgeport May 7, 1895. Judge Brown married Edna Mahall, born in Bridgeport in 1855 and now living in Frankfort. She is the mother of six children: John M., a truck farmer at Clearwater, Florida; Lucy Ann, wife of Dr. J. O. Robinson, a physician living at Spokane, Washington; Scott; Ray, a farmer and livestock dealer in Franklin County; and a daughter, whose home is in Frankfort; and Bessie, wife of Rev. Robert Cowan, a minister of the Southern Presbyterian Church and located at Lexington, Missouri.

Scott Brown was born at Bridgeport March 7, 1880, attended the rural schools of Franklin County, and in 1900 received his high school education at the State Normal School of Richmond. Immediately on leaving college he began farming, and owns 260 acres of the fine old estate originally acquired by his grandfather four miles south of Frankfort. He raises the staple crops of Central Kentucky and goes in for stock raising on a considerable scale. His Frankfort home is at 122 Todd Street. Mr. Brown is manager of the Burley Tobacco Warehouse Company of Frankfort, one of the largest tobacco warehouses in Franklin County, and is a director of the State National Bank of Frankfort.

He is a democrat, a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Frankfort, is affiliated with Hiram Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., Frankfort Chapter No. 3, R. A. M., Frankfort Commandery No. 4, K. T., Oleicka Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Lexington and Frankfort Lodge No. 530 of the Elks.

In 1907, at Louisville, he married Miss Lillian Thompson, who died in February, 1908. Her parents were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Thompson, her father a farmer in Woodford County. Mr. Brown married Miss Eva Moorman at Mentone, Alabama, June 4, 1916. Her parents are Charles and Luella Moorman, of Mentone, her father being identified with the Southern Mennonite Church at that place. Mrs. Brown finished her education in a Young Ladies Seminary in Alabama. They have one daughter, Luella, born December 23, 1919.

JAMES ROWLEY. For almost three quarters of a century James Rowley has been known all up and down the Ohio River for his Rowleys, for a long period of years they had their home at Vancouer, Kentucky, though Captain James, Sr., and Captain James, Jr., spent a large part of their time devoted to their duties as pilots and captains of steamboats. Captain James, Jr., is still in the service, one of the veterans of the Ohio River traffic, and is now a resident of Dayton, Kentucky.

His grandfather, Charles Rowley, was born in Connecticut in 1789, lived in Virginia for a short time, and as a young married man came West and settled at Vanceburg, Kentucky, where he followed farming until his death in 1874. He was eighty-five when he died, and several of his sons lived to be almost equally old. He married Amelia Tuttle, who was born in Connecticut in 1790 and died at Vanceburg, Kentucky, in 1875. Of their six children the oldest was George, who left Vanceburg early in life, for many years was a steamboat owner and captain on the Ohio River, and died at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, at the age of eighty-four. Hiram, the second son, was a merchant at Vanceburg, where he died at the age of eighty-five. Benjamin, the third of the family, was also a merchant at Vanceburg, and died at the age of eighty-four. The fourth was Captain James, Sr. Miss Charlotte died at Vanceburg, and Eliza, the youngest of the family, became the wife of George Thompson, a merchant and speculator, and both died at Chillicothe, Ohio.
HISTORY OF KENTUCKY

Captain James Rowley, Sr., was born in Virginia in 1828 and was a child when the family moved to Vanceburg, Kentucky, where he grew up and married. He early became identified with the river traffic, and for many years was a skilled pilot and steamboat captain on the Ohio and Mississippi, and was in that work when these were the principal arteries of transportation in the Middle West. He died at Vanceburg in June, 1904. He was a democrat in politics, a member of the Presbyterian Church, and a Knight Templar Mason. Capt. James Rowley, Sr., married Austa Ingram, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1835 and died at Vanceburg in 1918. Of their four children Frank and Mary died at Vanceburg when children. Captain James, Jr., is the only surviving son. Jane, living at Vanceburg, is the widow of James S. Gardiner, who was a flour mill owner and operator and also a steamboat owner at Vanceburg.

James Rowley, Jr., was born at Vanceburg in Lewis County, Kentucky, December 8, 1860, and his early education was gained from public schools, private schools and an academy at Vanceburg. On leaving school at the age of eighteen he readily followed his father's footsteps into steamboating on the Ohio, and was quite young when he was given his pilot's license and later promoted to captain. For many years Captain Rowley has commanded boats up and down the Ohio, and still has a run between Pittsburg and Louisville. His home was at Vanceburg until 1919, when he moved to Dayton.

Captain Rowley is a member of Harbor No. 26 of the Association of Pilot Mates and Masters at Point Pleasant, West Virginia. He is a democrat, is affiliated with Polar Star Lodge No. 363, F. and A. M., at Vanceburg, Burns Chapter No. 74, R. A. M., at Vanceburg, and Marysville Lodge No. 704, B. P. O. E. He did the part of an American citizen, using his time and means and influence to promote all war causes, in the conflict with Germany. Captain Rowley owns a modern brick home at 114 Sixth Avenue in Dayton.

He married at Vanceburg in February, 1887, Miss Annie Carter, daughter of Thomas H. and Cynthia A. (Trenary) Carter, now deceased. Her father for many years conducted hotels at Vanceburg and Concord. Mrs. Rowley for many years has made the Presbyterian Church and its related activities one of her primary interests in life. During the war she gave a large part of her time and labors to the program of the Vanceburg Chapter of the Red Cross.

Frank R. McGrath. The largest planing mill and lumber concern in Franklin County is the Frankfort Lumber & Manufacturing Company, of which Frank R. McGrath is president and general manager. Mr McGrath has been a carpenter, contractor, lumber dealer and manufacturer ever since early youth, and his career has been a record of steady progress toward success. He is one of the leading business men and citizens of the capital.

He was born in Rix Mills, Ohio, May 3, 1883. His grandfather, Horatio McGrath, was a native of the State of Maine, but spent most of his life in Morgan County, Ohio. He was a carriage builder by trade and died in Morgan County in 1880. He married Margaret Keller, a native and life-long resident of Ohio.

George K. McGrath, father of the Frankfort manufacturer, was born in Morgan County, Ohio, April 13, 1846, was reared in his native county, was married in Guernsey County, and subsequently for seventeen years was a carriage manufacturer at Rix Mills. He then removed to Zanesville, Ohio, where he had a Government post, in charge of the local office of the census, and subsequently was employed in a carriage shop for four years, until he lost his right hand. After this accident he lived at the Soldiers' Home at Sandusky, but has recently removed to Frankfort, Kentucky. He was all through the Civil war, joining Company E of the Second West Virginia Cavalry, this company later being consolidated with Company D of the same regiment. He was in the Shenandoah campaign, under Sheridan, and the capture of Rix's Mill, and was at Petersburg in the battle of Five Forks, and continued in service until Lee's surrender. He is a democrat in politics, is a Royal Arch Mason, being affiliated with Gauge and Gavel Lodge No. 448, A. F. and A. M., at Chandleer, Ohio. George K. McGrath married Sarah A. Hinton, who was born at Claysville in Guernsey County, Ohio.

Frank R. McGrath spent most of his youth at Zanesville, Ohio, though he also attended the rural schools of Muskingum County. He graduated from the County High School in 1900, and then as an apprentice learned the carpenter's trade. He worked at his trade six months at Barnesville, Ohio, and for twelve years was at Zanesville, his one employer throughout that period being C. O. Vincel. For three years he was in the planing mill of the Herdman Sash & Door Company at Zanesville, and on leaving there he came to Kentucky in 1912 and for a year had charge of the planing mill of the McCormick Lumber Company at Winchester. In 1913 he removed to Frankfort and was superintendent of construction for the Capital Lumber Company, two years later became vice president of the company, and had supervision of both the planing mill and construction department of the business.

He resigned in 1917 from the Capital Lumber Company to give his time to army construction work in the capacity of division superintendent for the Mason & Hanger Construction Company. He helped build Camp Taylor at Louisville and subsequently was assistant to the general superintendent in the construction of the Gerster Aviation Field at Lake Charles, Louisiana. On returning to Frankfort in February, 1919, Mr. McGrath engaged in contracting and building on his own account, but in April, 1919, bought out the Capital Lumber & Manufacturing Company and changed the name to the Frankfort Lumber & Manufacturing Company. He is president and general manager of the corporation, Mrs. McGrath, his wife, is secretary and treasurer, and the vice president is Lambert U. Suppinger. The offices, planing mill and lumber yard are at the intersection of South Grand Avenue and the old mill work for the governor's mansion at Frankfort was manufactured by this plant, and it has facilities to meet practically every requirement for mill work and general lumber supplies.

Mr. McGrath is an active member and deacon of the First Presbyterian Church at Frankfort. He is a democrat and is affiliated with Hiram Lodge No. 4, F. and A. M., and has attained the Royal Arch degree.
in Masonry. His modern home is at 219 Third Street. On March 3, 1904, at Zanesville, Ohio, he married Miss Lura Frazier, daughter of W. S. and Sarah (Neeland) Frazier. Her mother is still living at Zanesville, where her father, now deceased, was a general contractor. Mr. McGrath lost his wife at Frankfort in 1913. She was the mother of his four children: Elma, born in July, 1908; Gladys, born in September, 1910, Harold and Hester, twins born in February, 1913. Mr. McGrath married Miss Elizabeth Supping, of Frankfort, in 1917. She is a native of Frankfort and daughter of Lambert and Emma (Kagan) Supping, now deceased. She was an ice manufacturer in Frankfort. To this union one daughter was born, Elizabeth, on February 1, 1921.

Winston Bowen Henry, a well known business man of Frankfort, has a worthy career to his individual credit, and the interest attaching to his name is the greater because of his membership in a family that was established in Kentucky immediately after the Revolutionary war. He also belongs to the distinguished Henry family of Old Virginia.

Lewis Henry family in America begins with his ancestor Rev. Robert Henry, who immigrated to America from Scotland in 1740, located in New York. He was a licentiate of the Synod of New York and was ordained by the Presbytery of that Province in 1753. The New York Presbytery subsequently sent him as a missionary to Virginia, and he located in Charlotte County, Virginia. He was the first named Henry born in the county, his maiden name being Jean Johnson. She was born on the Atlantic Ocean while her parents were on their way from Ireland to America.

The next generation was represented by their son Gen. William Henry, who was born in Charlotte County, Virginia, April 12, 1761. At the age of seventeen he enlisted with the American forces for service in the Revolution, under the command of the gallant Col. Harry Lee of Virginia and afterward with General Greene at the battle of Guilford Court House March 15, 1781. In the autumn of 1781, about the time hostilities ceased between the Colonies and Great Britain, he left Virginia and came across the mountain to Kentucky, accompanying his older brother, Samuel. His place of destination was Lincoln County, Kentucky, where he employed his skill as a surveyor and also located extensive tracts of land. He himself became the owner of a large body of land, and subsequently he removed to the banks of the Elkhorn in Scott County. In October, 1786, General Henry married Elizabeth Julia Flournoy. After their marriage they settled on a tract of land about ten miles from Lexington, on the North Elkhorn, and in that locality General Henry established what was long known as Henry's Mills.

One of the sons of Gen. William Henry was Mattheus Winston Henry, who was born January 11, 1790. He carried on extensive operations as a farmer, was interested in other lines of business, and at one time was United States mail contract bearer between Louisville and Nashville. He was called to the War of 1812, and served under Colonel Campbell in the finest troop of cavalry ever up to that time raised in Kentucky. He took part in the northwestern campaign and fought in the noted battle against the British and Indians on the Mississinewa River in northeastern Indiana, and for his efficiency was several times commended by his superior officers. He died July 31, 1838, of congestive fever at old Washington Hall in Bowling Green, Kentucky. March 17, 1813, he married Juliette Pitts, who died February 3, 1845.

This account brings the family record to the grandfather of Winston Bowen Henry. His name was also Matthews Winston Henry and he was born in Bowling Green in 1818. He was a pioneer steamboat man, owning a fleet of steamships plying between Louisville and New Orleans. He was a captain and pilot of his own boat, and he died on a boat on the Mississippi River in December, 1849, a victim of cholera. His home was at Bowling Green. In 1838 Captain Henry married Sarah C. Macey, of Frankfort.

Their son, A. C. Henry, late of Louisville, was born in Louisville in November, 1847, and died in that city September 12, 1910. He spent his early youth and was married in Franklin County, where he owned and operated a farm. He lived his last years retired in Louisville. At the age of fifteen he volunteered his services to the Union Army and was employed as a messenger or courier. He was a democrat and a member of the Christian Church. A. C. Henry married on May 5, 1868, Miss Julia Mills, who was born in Franklin County in 1847, and is now living in Louisville. Winston Bowen is the oldest of their children and was born in a farm in Franklin County August 1, 1868. The second, John Richard, born June 10, 1875, died at Cincinnati, April 14, 1896, but his home was at Frankfort and he was clerk and bookkeeper in the office of the Henry Oil Company of Sistersville, West Virginia. The third and youngest child, Corinne, born March 7, 1883, has never married, lives at Louisville, and is connected with the wholesale coffee and sugar house of C. D. Kenney Company.

Winston Bowen Henry lived until twenty years old on his father's farm in Franklin County. He attended the rural schools and also the public schools of Frankfort. He became a member of a lumber yard, and for a number of years was in the office of his uncle, R. L. Henry, one of the greatest lumber merchants of Chicago. He then took charge of one of his uncle's yards located at Hiawatha, Kansas, where he remained until 1897, and then returned to Frankfort and for nearly a century has been extensively engaged in farming, buying and shipping livestock. Frankfort owns a farm of 465 acres in Scott County, and for his operation has leased extensive tracts of land. Mr. Henry is a stockholder in the Bain Moore Tobacco Warehouse Company, and he and his son Lewis are engaged in the transfer business. He spent much of his time promoting war causes, and was chairman of the follow-up committee on all the four campaigns for which Frankfort has raised money.

His home is a modern brick residence at 400 West Second Street. On August 8, 1903, at Hiawatha, Kansas, he married Miss Lula Knickerbocker, daughter of Lewis and Imogene (Jenkins) Knickerbocker. Her parents reside at Verdun, Nebraska, where in 1919, with all of their eight children present, they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. Lewis Knickerbocker has been a merchant for many years, and is still in partnership with his sons, though practically retired. Mr. and Mrs. Henry are the parents of two children: Winston Acme, the older, is a partner with his father in a hardware store at Owenton, Kentucky, and was enrolled in the draft though not called for active service. Lewis Alexander Henry, who was born February 26, 1897, born at Hiawatha, Kansas, is engaged in the transfer business at Frankfort. He is a graduate of the Frankfort High School and the Louisville Training School, and also the Spencian Commercial School of Louisville. On August 15, 1918, he enlisted and was sent to the I C of C at Indianapolis, and was mustered out December 20, 1918. On June 11, 1919, at Madison, Indiana, he married Miss Viola Scruggs, daughter of R. F. and Lula (Poindexter) Scruggs, who live in Frankfort County, Kentucky, where her father is a farmer. Lewis A. Henry and wife have one child, Ann Winston, born April 30, 1920.
SHERMAN GOODPASTER, secretary and treasurer of the Kentucky Jockey Club, and ex-treasurer of the State of Kentucky, is one of the best-known and most popular men of the commonwealth, and a highly respected and influential citizen of Frankfort. His efforts in behalf of the race of horses which are not only satisfactory to all lovers of horse flesh, but to other elements in the community which, were matters conducted in another manner, might offer serious objections.

The birth of Sherman Goodpaster occurred at Owingsville, Bath County, Kentucky, November 16, 1880, and he is a son of C. W. Goodpaster, a grandson of Levi Goodpaster, and a member of one of the first families of Virginia, where the Goodpaster family located upon coming to the American Colonies from England. Levi Goodpaster was born in Bath County, Kentucky, to which region the family had migrated in very early days, and he died at Owingsville, that county, before the birth of his grandson. For many years he was a banker and a very prominent citizen. Levi Goodpaster married Jane Allen, who was born in Bourbon County, Kentucky, and died at Owingsville, Kentucky.

C. W. Goodpaster was born at Owingsville, Kentucky, in 1856, and has spent his entire life here, being now one of the prominent attorneys of the city. He was graduated from Transylvania University at Lexington, Kentucky. In politics a democrat, he was elected one of the thirty-first judge of Bath County, and was re-elected at the close of his first term, serving in all eight years. He is a member of the Christian Church, and an active supporter of the local congregation of that denomination. Fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias. In 1879 C. W. Goodpaster was married to Miss Clara McAllister, who was born in Bath County, Kentucky, in 1861. Their only child is Sherman Goodpaster.

Growing up at Owingsville, Sherman Goodpaster was given a liberal education, first attending the schools of his native place and then becoming a student of the University of Kentucky, now the Transylvania University at Lexington, Kentucky. In 1900, at the close of his sophomore year he left the university and read law in his father's office, and was admitted to the bar in 1901, beginning the practice of his profession almost immediately the following term, and residing there until 1912, when he was appointed state inspector and examiner by Gov. James B. McCreary, and filled this office for four years, during which period he lived at Frankfort. He purchased a modern residence at 191 Third Street, corner of Capitol Avenue, but maintains his legal home at Owingsville. In 1915 Mr. Goodpaster was elected state treasurer, and assumed the duties of the office January 1, to serve a term of four years. About the same time he was made secretary and treasurer of the Kentucky Jockey Club, with headquarters at Louisville, Kentucky. Mr. Goodpaster is a member of the Presbyterian Church. For some years he has been an active member of Mount Sterling Lodge No. 723, B. P. O. E.

On June 8, 1909, Mr. Goodpaster was married at Mount Sterling, Kentucky, to Miss Amy A., a daughter of Col. Thomas and Elizabeth (Peters) Johnson. Colonel Johnson was an extensive farmer and prominent business man, but is now deceased. During the war between the North and the South he commanded a regiment in the Confederate Army, and also served in the Confederate Congress. Mrs. Johnson survives her husband and still resides at Mount Sterling. Mrs. Goodpaster received a collegiate education. Mr. and Mrs. Goodpaster have two children, Sherman, Jr., who was born October 18, 1913; and Clara, who was born April 2, 1917. A man of high standing in the state, Mr. Goodpaster has made his influence felt in numerous ways, and can always be depended upon to live up to high ideals and do what he believes to be his full duty no matter what personal sacrifice may be entailed in so acting.

ROBERT RODES SETTLE, treasurer of the Capital Trust Company of Frankfort, has been in the banking business practically ever since he left college, and came to his present position after four years as a state bank examiner.

Mr. Settle is a member of a very distinguished Kentucky family, and is a son of Warner E. Settle, a judge of the Kentucky State Court of Appeals. The home of Judge Settle and the record of the family are the subject of a special article on other pages of this publication.

The home of Judge Settle for many years has been at Bowling Green, and in that city Robert Rodes Settle was born November 15, 1877. He attended public schools in his native city and in 1897 received the A. B. degree from Ogden College of Bowling Green. He served a thorough apprenticeship at Banking for four years in Potter's Bank in Bowling Green, filling nearly every detailed office in that institution. Following that for three years he was assistant cashier of the Kentucky Title Savings Bank at Louisville. The next three years he was with the Government Indian Bureau on duty in old Indian Territory, while the Government was allotting the lands to the Indians of the civilized tribes. In his native city of Kentucky Mr. Settle was connected with the Fidelity & Columbia Trust Company of Louisville from 1911 to 1913, and as his service as state bank examiner was during the years 1913 to 1917. He resigned this state office to become treasurer of the Capital Trust Company of Frankfort.

Mr. Settle was one of the active citizens of Frankfort working to promote the success of every war campaign, and served as treasurer of the French Orphan Fund. He is a democrat, a Presbyterian and affiliated with Frankfort Lodge No. 530, B. P. O. E.

Mr. Settle and family reside at 510 Shelly Street. He married at Greensburg, Kentucky, June 11, 1914, Miss Elizabeth Vaughn, daughter of W. W. and Emma (Buckner) Vaughn, now residents of Frankfort. Her father was a farmer and merchant at Greensburg, Green County, for a number of years, and Mrs. Settle is a member of the First Baptist Church of Greensburg. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Settle are Emily Vaughn, born March 27, 1915, and Shelley Rodes, born November 26, 1917.

J. BASIL RAMSEY has the honor of being one of the youngest bank presidents of the State of Kentucky. He was not twenty-seven years of age when he became president of the Hopkins County Bank of Madisonville. His banking experience began when he was just out of high school, and he has employed his talents and opportunities to remarkably effective ends.

Mr. Ramsey was born in Hopkins County, on a farm two miles east of Slaughters, February 15, 1893. His paternal ancestors came from Ireland and settled in North Carolina in Colonial times. His father, W. W. Ramsey, was born in Whitesville, Arkansas, in 1858, and in 1889 the family came to Hopkins County, Kentucky, where he was reared and married and where he spent the rest of his life as a substantial farmer. He died on his farm seven miles west of Madisonville in 1905. He was a democrat and a very sincere member and active worker in the Baptist Church. His wife was Miss Ella Gilmore, who was born at Ashbyburg, Kentucky, in 1860 and died on the home farm in 1897. Lacy, the eldest of their children, is a Hopkins County farmer; Thomas S. is a business man at Mishawaka, Indiana; W. W. Ramsey is an attorney at law at Vicksburg, Mississippi; Jennie is the wife of Jesse Cobb, a farmer at Slaughters, Kentucky; Basil is the fifth in age; Charles S. is a lawyer at Akron, Ohio; and E. H.

J. Basil Ramsey attended the rural schools of Hopkins County, and was graduated from the Madisonville High School in 1912. Then, at the age of nineteen, he began learning banking with the Farmers National Bank of Madisonville. There was no salary attached to his studies. In the second month he received twenty dollars as his first month's earnings. He had an ambition to become a good banker, and used every opportunity to acquire knowledge and in three or four years was assistant cashier. In 1916 he left Madisonville to become cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Slaughters, and was connected with that institution until 1917, after the beginning of the World War. His father's first cousin was the late F. D. Ramsey, who left a large estate, known as the Ramsey estate. While some of the heirs of this estate were in the army, J. Basil Ramsey was called to take charge of the management of the property, and he therefore resigned from the bank and handled the business effectively until January 1, 1920, the date he was chosen and began his service as president of the Hopkins County Bank.

This is one of the strong banks of Hopkins County, with resources well upwards of $1,000,000. It has capital of $50,000, surplus and profits of $25,000, and aggregate deposits of $750,000. The bank was established in 1890, with M. K. Cotton as the first president.

The executive officials at this time are: J. Basil Ramsey, president; Ernest Nisbet, vice president; O. W. Ward, cashier; and A. R. Cummings, assistant cashier.

Mr. Ramsey is also president of the Clifton Coal Company, owner of a farm of 220 acres two miles west of Earlington, and has financial interests in about 500 acres of coal lands. While he had many exacting business cares during the war he gave all the time possible to assisting in war work, promoting bond sales and auxiliary war work campaigns, and the records of Hopkins County during the war show that his name was on the lists for all the quotas. He is a democrat in politics, and is now representing the Fourth Ward in the City Council of Madisonville. He is mostly a Baptist church, is affiliated with Madisonville Lodge No. 113, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Madisonville Chapter No. 123, Royal Arch Masons; Madisonville Commandery No. 27, Knights Templar; Ritual Temple No. 136, the Mystic Shrine, and Madisonville Lodge No. 738 of the Elks. Ramsey and family live in one of the most attractive homes of the city, at 516 North Main Street. He married in 1916, at Louisville, Kentucky, Miss Julia Sisk. Her parents, both now deceased, were F. B. and Mary (Day) Sisk. Her father was an extensive farmer and at one time manager of the farming properties of the St. Bernard Mining Companies. Mrs. Ramsey finished her education at Georgetown College and in the West Kentucky Normal College at Bowling Green. They have one daughter, Julia Gilmore, born November 21, 1918.

William Horace Posey, vice president and general manager of the Capital Trust Company of Frankfort, is a lawyer by profession and has been an honored member of the bar of Anderson County for over thirty years. He represents an old and prominent family of Anderson County, where the name was established in early pioneer times. The Poseys came from England and settled in Virginia, but Mr. Posey's great-grandfather, James Posey, came to Anderson County, Kentucky, from Westmoreland County, Virginia, and was a Kentucky planter and farmer. The grandfather of the Frankfort physician and lawyer was Jeremiah Buckley Posey, who was born in Anderson County, where he spent his active life as a farmer. He died in Clay County, Missouri, in 1835, but was brought back to Kentucky and buried near Clifton in Anderson County. He married Lucretia Walker, a native of Anderson County, who also died in Clay County, Missouri.

The father of William H. Posey was Judge James M. Posey, who was born in Anderson County in 1832 and died at Lawrenceburg in 1897. He lived practically all of his life at Lawrenceburg and was a man of great prominence both as a lawyer and public official. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and was the first president of the Wesleyan University at Delaware, and immediately after the Civil War served for eight years as County Court clerk, was for sixteen years, four terms, county judge of Anderson County, was for four years deputy collector of internal revenue of the Eighth Internal Revenue District, and enjoyed many other distinctions and honors in his profession. He was a lifelong Baptist and a member of the Masonic fraternity, and married Miss Lorinda Montfort, who was born in Anderson County in 1835 and died at Lawrenceburg in 1892. Judge and Mrs. Posey had a family of nine children, their names being as follows: Mary W., who died at Fresno, California, in 1914, was the wife of W. D. Reiss, of Fresno; William Horace, the second; Owen T. Posey, who died in infancy; Lucretia, wife of Stephen Ross, of Fresno; Goldie; James Albert, a dentist at Frankfort; Eloise, wife of F. H. Connelly, a real estate broker at Fresno; Edward M., in the stock and bond business at Chicago; Charles Rowland, who has distinguished himself by his extraordinary business energies, is manager at Baltimore, Maryland, of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York; and Thomas H. is a dentist at Lawrenceburg.

William Horace Posey was born in Anderson County June 17, 1858, was educated in the public schools of Lawrenceburg and at Central University, Richmond, Kentucky, and studied law at Frankfort under Gen. D. E. Lindsey. He was admitted to the bar in June, 1881, and began the practice of law in Frankfort, and his time to this well known financial institution for the past fifteen years. He was closely associated with the group of Frankfort citizens who insured the success in their locality of all the war drives and campaigns. He is a democrat, a member and trustee of the First Baptist Church of Frankfort, is affiliated with Frankfort Lodge No. 530 of the Elks, and a member of Frankfort Chamber of Commerce. His home is at 124 West Todd Street.

Mr. Posey married at Versailles, Kentucky, June 21, 1883, Miss Annie Berryman, daughter of James T. and Theresa (Willis) Berryman, now deceased. Her father was a merchant at Clifton, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Posey have two daughters: Genevieve, wife of George M. Gayle, a Frankfort druggist; and Louisa, wife of James W. Montgomery, manager of Frankfort's leading industry, the Hoge-Montgomery Company.

Joseph F. Le Bus, a brother of Kentucky's great apostle of advanced agriculture Lewis Le Bus, was also successfully identified with farming though the greater part of his life he devoted to educational affairs, and was one of the constructive forces in Kentucky schools for many years.

Joseph F. Le Bus, who died at his home in Harrison County in 1916, was born October 26, 1838, six miles west of Lisbon, Columbiana County, Ohio, a son of Seraphin and Anna Maria (Hipscheering) Le Bus. The father was born in Alsace, France, in 1800, and died in Columbiana County, Ohio, at the age of sixty-eight years. The mother was born in Switzerland, at the foot of Jura Mountains, in 1803, and she died in 1838. They were married in 1824 and came to the United States in 1836, spent a short time in Buffalo, New York, and Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and then located in Columbiana County, Ohio, in 1828. Their four sons were: Andrew, Anthony, Lewis and Joseph F.

The house in which Joseph Le Bus was born was built by his father in the woods and consisted of logs covered originally with clapboards and consisted of four rooms, but before the son Joseph was born a fire burned the house. The farm consisted of eighty acres, every foot covered with forest trees at the time he purchased it. Adjacent to the house his father built a large barn of logs, which was covered with straw, and about a hundred yards from the house flowed a large spring of soft water. When Joseph F. Le Bus was twelve years old his father sold the farm for $2000, after having cleared, fenced and cultivated sixty of the eighty acres.

When young Joseph was six years old his father sent him to the district school, where he obtained the rudiments of a common school education. Though very reluctant to go to school when he was first sent out from home, the lady who taught the school was kind and considerate to him and presented him a picture of a bird which she had drawn on a piece of paper, and afterward gave him a little paper with a bird's egg on it.
The next week he formed an attachment for his teacher, became reconciled to the duties and confinement of the schoolroom and ever after, during the six sessions that he attended the school, he learned and recited his lessons with pleasure. At the age of fourteen his father sent him to St. Vincent's College, forty miles east of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, near the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Town of Latrobe, of some 500 people, being the nearest college in Western Pennsylvania. Mr. Le Bus graduated five years later at the head of a class of nine pupils. After leaving college, having been informed by his brother Lewis Le Bus, then engaged in teaching in Harrison County, Kentucky, that there was an opening in Kentucky for teachers, he went early in September, 1857, on a visit to his brother, then at Oddville, and on the first of October of that same year made application as a teacher in an adjoining district and commenced his first school.

Mr. Le Bus taught two consecutive sessions in this district, and when vacation came on he procured employment in a country store in Harrison County. In the following September he went to Covington, Kentucky, where he was called to teach in a private school where the higher branches were being taught. This school, however, proved unsuccessful on account, principally, of the excitement and agitation that was occurring throughout the land owing to the general apprehension that the country was verging into an abyss of a civil war. While teaching this school his brother Lewis informed him that he intended to marry and go to housekeeping, and invited him to make his home with him until the excitement spreading throughout the country should subside. A short time after going to his brother, he decided to move to the district where he taught his first school to undertake a private school for the benefit of the advanced pupils in the district whose education had been neglected owing to the general agitation which permeated society everywhere. After the close of the session, when the excitement had somewhat abated, the patrons of the district unanimously solicited him to continue school for the benefit of all the children in the district and so successful had the school grown that Mr. Le Bus continued it until 1862. On the 17th of July of this year

General Morgan made his appearance in Cynthiana, Kentucky, accompanied by several thousand troopers, and the uproar and general chaos that ensued so demoralized the population that the schools of Harrison County became disorganized and very little attention was paid to educational matters until the close of the war. Not finding employment in his chosen vocation, he decided to move to the county of his birth in the autumn of 1862, with a view to securing a situation in one of the schools of the county. The bridges and great portions of the Kentucky Central Railroad having been demolished by the forces of General Kirby Smith of the Confederate Army on his march to Cincinnati, Mr. Le Bus was compelled to ride on horseback to Augusta, Kentucky, from where he could take a boat to Cincinnati. On his way to Augusta, about three miles north of Claysville, the boat capsized and he was captured by the federal force and held as a prisoner of war. After abgan, then under the command of Gen. Basil Duke, on its way from Augusta to Cynthiana. General Duke informed him that he had had a severe engagement with the federal troops stationed in and around Augusta, the greater portion of Augusta had been burned to the ground.

General Duke took along with him about 500 prisoners whom he had captured during the battle, and on being informed that a large federal force was concentrating in Cynthiana for the purpose of marching against him, he told the prisoners to remain in Claysville, where they were paroled.

Mr. Le Bus remained in Cynthiana about one month, and started on his way to Columbiana County, Ohio, to the home of a brother, and remained with him until he prepared a situation on the schools of the county.
After completing his sessions near the 1st of April, 1865, he visited his father, who was then living in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, near the college he had left five years before. He remained with his father until August of that year, when, having heard that Kentucky was no longer the battleground of the contending armies, and having been invited to resume his school in the district of his first work, he returned to the school. He continued teaching in the same district until 1869.

He was then called to take charge of a private school at Newport, Kentucky, where he taught until July 1, and during vacation, from July 1 to September 1, he was engaged as an agent and clerk for a wholesale book store in Cincinnati, Ohio. On September 1 he returned Newport to resume school, but after one week was invited to teach in Indianapolis, where he continued his school for the two months. In the meantime Mr. Le Bus requested a friend of his, who was out of a situation, take the school which he was compelled to give up.
On 23d August he was able to leave the hospital and upon the invitation of his brother he went to Odd-ville, and remained with him until he regained his strength, when he was again called upon by the wholesale firm in Cincinnati for which he had worked during the summer to canvass the cities of Cincinnati, Covington and Newport and Indianapolis, Indiana. Mr.

Le Bus remained in this business until April, 1865, and returned to Cincinnati the morning before the assassination of President Lincoln. Mr. Le Bus wittnessed during the war many strange scenes and passed through many periods of excitement, but the state of public feeling in Cincinnati when the news of President Lincoln's assassination for the city surpassed all he ever witnessed before or after.

Having heard that the residence of Doctor Fries of Cincinnati had been visited and demolished by a mob because he was a southern sympathizer, during the evening of the next day after his arrival he walked around to call upon Doctor Fries, whom he had known as a boy in his native state, but a policeman who was on guard protected the family would not permit him to enter the building. After remaining a week in Cincinnati Mr. Le Bus again went to his brother Lewis, living on his farm near Oddville, and about the 1st of May visited some friends in Nicholas County, and while there prevailed upon to open a private school, which he did, teaching until the close of the autumn session in 1865, and then returned to Oddville, where he was but a few days when he was prevailed upon to teach the district school of that place, which had just been reorganized. At the close of that session he was called upon by the leading citizens of the neighborhood, about four miles east of Cynthiana, who had erected a new school house, to take charge of the school there.

Mr. Le Bus was engaged from year to year in the duties of teaching at this place until the fall of 1869, when he was requested to take charge of the general school interests of Harrison County, and for this purpose was elected county superintendant. At the time when he took charge very few of the schools had been reorganized, and he was compelled to visit every part of the county for the purpose of laying out districts, defining their boundaries and seeking teachers to take charge of the various schools. In this work he was re-elected superintendant four terms, serving eight years in all.

While in this office, on September 14, 1871, Mr. Le Bus was married at Lexington, Kentucky, to Miss Nannie Klinbrough. Shortly after their marriage she was engaged to teach in the district in which Oddville was situated, and she was assisted by Mr. Le Bus, as it was a large school with the older pupils. At the close of the school year Mr. Le Bus purchased the farm, known as "Gray's Run," along with a miles of land in Cynthiana, and gave his attention to farming, while at the same time he superintended the schools of Harrison County. At the close of his last term he concluded to give his whole time to farming, and purchased from time to time tracts of land, aggregating 500 acres.

Mr. Le Bus was one of the best educated men in Harrison County. He was a deep reader and a student all his life, a man of fine personality, and his wife was a lady of the old school. She was born May 18, 1850, in Harrison County, on the Leesburg Pike, a daughter of John M. and Susan (Jones) Klinbrough. The father was born in Harrison County, and died on January 21, 1860, at the age of sixty-three years, and the mother, born in Nicholas County, died in 1881, aged seventy years. They were of old and prominent families and became the parents of ten children. Mr. and Mrs. Le Bus had thirteen children: Mary Lawrence, born May 25, 1872, and died at the age of twelve years; Samuel Klinbrough, born August 13, 1873, married and has one son, Joseph F.; Joseph S., born January 4, 1875; Lewis S., born May 5, 1876; Susan Elizabeth, born March 13, 1878; John R., born January 22, 1879, died January 22, 1910; Charles B., born September 8, 1880; Francis H., born in January, 1882; Anna P., born January 10, 1884; Gertrude, born November 2, 1885, wife of T. S. Terry; Edward L., born March 10, 1887; Lena W., born April 3, 1888; and Linus L., born in February, 1891.

FRANK LE BUS, farmer and farm owner of Harrison County, has through his personal abilities contributed something of the great reputation long enjoyed by the name Le Bus in Kentucky agriculture and affairs. The life story of his honored father, the late Joseph F. Le Bus, is given in preceding pages. He is a cousin of Clarence Le Bus, of Lexington, under whose name will be found other facts that establish the identity of the family as one of prominence in Kentucky affairs.

Frank Le Bus was born in Harrison County January 22, 1882, and grew up on his father's old homestead two miles west of Cynthiana. He was given every encouragement to acquire a good education in country schools and also attended Professor Smith's High School at Cynthiana. After leaving school he spent a year as a farmer in the home locality, and then became associated with his cousin, Clarence Le Bus, of Lexington, as manager of his business, and for fifteen years was engaged in superintending the extensive properties of Clarence Le Bus. In the meantime he acquired land of his own, and owns good farming properties both in Harrison and in Bourbon counties. He is secretary-treasurer of the Cynthiana Tobacco Warehouse Company and is a director of the Farmers National Bank of Cynthiana.

In December, 1900, Mr. Le Bus married Bettie Belle Goodwin, who was born in Fayette County and is a graduate of Hamilton College at Lexington. Mr. and Mrs. Le Bus have one son, William Frank, born April 17, 1914. They are members of the Presbyterian Church, and he is a democrat and has served as a local magistrate.

WILLIAM H. HOGÉ is one of several men who have given well earned distinction to that name in the business affairs of Frankfort. Mr. Hoge has been a resident of Frankfort for upwards of forty years, was formerly in the coal business, but for several years past has been an extensive oil operator in the Eastern Kentucky fields.

Mr. Hoge was born at Staunton, Virginia, November 8, 1863. He is of Scotch ancestry and his grandfather, Peter Charles Hoge, was born in Albemarle County, Virginia, in 1809, was a Baptist minister and spent the greater part of his life in Scottsville, Virginia, where he died July 17, 1876. He married Sarah Kerr in 1829. She was born in Virginia, died December 14, 1885, and died September 10, 1872. The sixth among their thirteen children was John B. Hoge, born at Scottsville November 30, 1838. For many years he was a merchant at Staunton, Virginia, a leading member of the Baptist Church, and died while visiting in Frankfort, Kentucky, April 17, 1919. He married Fannie Jordan; their daughter was born in Rockbridge County, Virginia, in 1844, and is now living at Frankfort. Of her children William H. is the oldest, and the others are: Charles K., assistant cashier of the National Valley Bank at Staunton; Walter D., secretary to the superintendent of the Deaf, Dumb and Blind Institute of Virginia at Staunton; Eugene E., president of the State National Bank at Frankfort; John M., of Staunton; Emma Elizabeth, wife of Stewart Webb, of Baltimore; H. Jordan, secretary of the Hoge-Montgomery Company at Frankfort; George T., of Detroit, Michigan; M. Gunther, of Staunton; and Ernest C., connected with the Hoge-Montgomery Company at Frankfort.

William H. Hoge was educated in the public schools of Staunton, Virginia, and finished his sophomore year at Richmond College at Richmond, Virginia. Leaving school in 1881, he came to Frankfort, Kentucky, and for a time was associated with the C. R. Mason Company, the first lessers of the Kentucky Penitentiary. He then became identified with the great contracting firm of Mason-Hoge Company and helped construct the Kentucky Union Railroad, now the Louisville & Nashville, between Clay City, Kentucky, and Jackson in Breathitt County. While with this firm he helped construct the big twin tunnel in Breathitt County. After 1890 for two years Mr. Hoge had a large contract for improvement of streets in the City of Staunton. Returning to Kentucky, he operated a farm in Clark County, near Winchester, for three years, and then engaged in the coal business at Frankfort as a partner with S. Black. After three years he bought his partner's interest and continued under the name of the Hoge Coal and Feed Company for eighteen years, finally selling out to the Frankfort Ice Company in 1917. Mr. Hoge was in the coal business for twenty-one years.

Since 1917 he has directed his enterprise and capital largely to oil operations, which is interested in extensive and valuable holdings in Allen and Warren counties. He is president of the Hoge Oil and Gas Company of Frankfort and is president of the McKinney Electric Company of Frankfort.

Mr. Hoge was honored with election as the first president of the Frankfort Chamber of Commerce. He is a member of the present City Council, and for sixteen years was a member of the city school board. Some of his property interests include five residences in Frankfort, a business block on Bridge Street, a farm 1 1/2 miles west of Frankfort, besides his own modern home, one of the most substantial in the city, at Main and Wilkins streets. Mr. Hoge is a democrat, a deacon in the Baptist Church, and is affiliated with Hiram Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., Frankfort Chapter No. 3, R. A. M., and Frankfort Lodge No. 530 of the Order of Elks.

He married at Winchester, Kentucky, in 1890, Miss Calloway Timberlake, daughter of William and Betty (French) Timberlake, now deceased. He father owned a large farm in Kenton County, but spent his last years in retirement at Winchester. Mr. and Mrs. Hoge have two children: Mary T., at home, finished her education at Fairmount Seminary in Washington, D. C. James F., the son, is a graduate of the Kavanaugh High School at Laurencetown, Kentucky, with the class of 1910, and is associated with the McKinney Electric Company.

Edwin Claiborne Walton was about fifteen years of age when his father died, and from that time to the present, forty years, he has been almost continuously in the newspapering business. He has written and edited papers in other states, but his name is best known in Kentucky journalism. He is proprietor and editor of the Kentucky Journal at Stanford and is also master commissioner for Lincoln County.

Mr. Walton was born in Hanover County, Virginia, September 23, 1866. His father, Thomas R. Walton, was born in Louisa County of the same state in 1823, was reared and married there, and then moved to Hanover County, where he spent the rest of his life as a farmer. He was all through the war between the states as a Confederate soldier, voted as a democrat both before and after the war, and gave his loyal support to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He died in Hanover County in 1881. His wife was Isabella Turner, who was born at New Orleans, Louisiana, in 1827, and died in Hanover County, Virginia, in 1877. Of their children W. P. Walton also became a well-known newspaper man in Kentucky, was for many years editor of the Kentucky Journal at Stanford and for seven years was editor of the Lexington Democrat and was connected with other Kentucky papers. He died at Lexington February 20, 1920, at the age of sixty-nine. Emma Lee, the second child, lives at Ashland, Virginia, widow of I. N. Vaughan, who was a tobacco factor at Richmond. T. R. Walton was in the grocery business at Atlanta, Georgia, and died March 16, 1920.

Edwin Claiborne Walton was reared on his father's farm in Hanover County. His early boyhood coincided with the depressing economic period following the Civil war, and as soon as old enough he had to work in the fields and his opportunities to attend rural schools were aggregating. Only seven years all told. After his father's death in 1881 he returned to Kentucky and lived with his brother, W. P. Walton. He went to work in the office of the Interior Journal and learned typesetting and all the other duties of a country newspaper. A newspaper office has been abundantly proved a university in opportunity for acquiring an education, and while he diligently made use of these advantages he carried on other studies alone and for about six months attended the public school at Stanford. He became a proficient journeyman printer, for several years was business manager of the Interior Journal, and in October, 1900, became proprietor of the paper. Selling it in 1910, Mr. Walton was a merchant at Atlanta, Georgia, for six months, and then bought and for two years edited the Daily Reporter-Star at Orlando, Florida. Mrs. Walton died while in Florida, and he then sold his interests there and, returning to Kentucky, bought the Somerset Times in February, 1912. Then followed a number of rapid changes in his newspaper career. He sold the Times in August of the same year, bought an interest in the Climax at Richmond, Kentucky, edited it for a year, and then, returning to Florida, bought a half interest in the Reporter-Star at Orlando, remaining for eighteen months, when he returned to Stanford in November, 1916. He then bought both half interests in the Interior Journal, but a year later sold and bought the Harrodsburg Leader. After getting out two editions of the Leader he sold, acquired the Jessamine News at Nicholasville, and after one issue was made under his proprietorship he sold out and bought the Richmond Register, which he published for the interval of three issues. Following these rapid changes in his career as an editor and publisher he returned to Stanford in September, 1916, and after two months in the grocery business bought the Interior Journal, and for the past five years has been owner and editor of that veteran journalistic institution. The Interior Journal has a consecutive history of over fifty years. Dan Parker established it as the Stanford Banner in 1869. It is a democratic paper, with an extensive circulation through Lincoln and surrounding counties, there being 2000 subscribers in Lincoln County alone, and its mailing list goes to all parts of the United States and to other countries. Under Mr. Walton the Interior Journal has survived the competition of six other papers in the county, and it is one of the newspapers of real influence in Central Kentucky. The plant and offices at 109 Main Street are equipped with modern facilities, and this was one of the first papers in Central Kentucky to install a linotype.

During the World war Mr. Walton placed his newspaper at the disposal of the Government and every patriotic movement for such influence and service as it could render, and he also personally worked with the committees for the various drives. He is a director in the Lincoln County National Bank, and much of his time is also taken up with his official duties as master commissioner of Lincoln County. Mr. Walton is a democrat, is a past chancellor of Diadem Lodge No. 81, Knights of Pythias, at Stanford, and a member of Stanford Camp, Knights of the Maccabees. While he owns a dwelling on Logan Avenue, his home is in the Hotel Acre.

In 1891, at Hustonville, Lincoln County, Mr. Walton married Miss Belle Cook, daughter of J. M. and Lucy (Bailey) Cook, now deceased. Her father was a merchant at Hustonville. Mrs. Walton died in 1911, after they had been married twenty years. She is survived by two children. Lucy Lee is the wife of Carl A. Carter, a merchant at Stanford. Claiborne, now a stock and bond salesman in Florida, had a notable military career, having enlisted with the United States Marines in 1916. He served four years, and during the World war crossed the Atlantic twenty-six times on the battleship Wyoming, escorting transports.

James A. Sullivan, district manager for the Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Company, has been with that company continuously for over thirty years, and in that time has by practical experience become familiar with living in the new advance and improvement in the modern science of telephonic communication, since the telephone was almost in its experimental stage when he began his connection with this company. He has the special honor of a man long identified with one essential service, with promotions based on his efficiency and faithfulness.

O. P. Nuckols, M. D. Among the native sons of Kentucky who have here achieved success and prestige in the exacting profession of medicine and surgery stands Doctor Nuckols, who has gained distinction not only in the active practice of his profession but also in its educational work, as he was for two years adjunct professor of surgery in the Kentucky School of Medicine, now the medical department of the University of Louisville. Since 1910 he has been established in successful general practice in the City of Pineville, judicial and administrative center of Wood County, with offices in the legal building, formerly the residence of Governor Hays, and now the Franklin Building.

Doctor Nuckols was born near Glasgow, Barren County, Kentucky, September 27, 1861, and is a scion of one of the old and honored pioneer families of that county, where his paternal great-grandfather, Andrew Nuckols, settled in an early day, upon coming from his native State of Virginia, in which the family was founded. Patrick Nuckols, father of Andrew, was born in Virginia in 1803, and was a boy at the time of the family migration to Kentucky. Like his father, he became a successful exponent of farm industry in Barren County, and there he continued to reside until his death, in 1877, his wife, whose family name was Saunders, likewise having died in that county. Their son John Andrew was born in Barren County in the year 1834, and his death occurred on his farm near Glasgow, that county, in 1916. This homestead had formerly been owned by the father of his wife and is one of the well improved and valuable estates of Barren County, its location being six miles north of Glasgow, the county seat. John Andrew Nuckols was not only one of the progressive and successful representatives of farm industry in his native county, but was also an honored and influential figure in community affairs. He became a native son, in the sense of the Democratic party, and both he and his wife were earnest members of the Primitive Baptist Church. Mrs. Nuckols, whose maiden name was Louvina Baird, died on the old home farm April 20, 1920, that place having, as previously noted, been formerly owned by her father and her birth having there occurred in the year 1834. Her father, Obediah Baird, was born in Virginia, in 1805, was a pioneer settler in Barren County, Kentucky, where he reclaimed and developed the farm of which mention has been made and where his death occurred in 1890. John A. and Louvina (Baird) Nuckols became the parents of five children who attained years of maturity: Cora is the wife of O. P. Owns, a prosperous farmer near Glasgow, Barren County; Mollie is the wife of G. W. Ellis, who is engaged in the tobacco business at Glasgow; there also he is interested in the general store enterprise; Doctor Nuckols, of this review, was the next in order of birth; James R. is associated with his younger sister, Miss Lelia E., in the ownership of the old home farm, upon which both reside and of which he has the active management.

After making good use of the advantages afforded in the rural schools of his native county Doctor Nuckols there entered the Glasgow Normal College, in which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1885. He early formulated definite plans for his future career, and in consonance therewith he finally entered the medical department of the University of Tennessee, at Nashville, in which he applied himself with characteristic energy and receptiveness and in which he was graduated in 1891. After thus receiving his well earned degree of Doctor of Medicine he was for seven years engaged in active general practice at Cammer, Hart County, and for the ensuing eleven years was engaged in practice in the City of Louisville, this metropolitan experience being of much value to him, as was also his effective service, during two years of the period, as adjunct professor of surgery in the Kentucky School of Medicine. As previously noted in this context, he has been established in practice at Pineville since 1891 and is the present editor of the Kentucky Medical Journal. His office is maintained in the Foley Building on Virginia Avenue, and on the same avenue he owns and occupies one of the attractive and modern residences of the city. He has served as president of the Bell County Medical Society, of which he is secretary at the time of this writing, in 1921, and is identified also with the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. His civic loyalty and progressiveness are indicated by his helpful alliance with the Pineville Chamber of Commerce; he is a democrat in politics, is a charter member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which his wife likewise is a zealous member, and he is affiliated with Bell Lodge No. 691, Free and Accepted Masons.

To the nation's military service in the great World War Doctor Nuckols gave one of his sons, and he personally was most loyal and active in advancing the various patriotic, civic, and military undertakings in his home county. He was a member of the committee of the Fourth Congressional District, comprising six counties, aided in all the local campaigns in support of the Government war-bond issues, savings stamps, etc., to which he made his personal contributions most liberal, and his activities in connection with such patriotic work in Bell County continued until the close of the war.

At Cammer, Hart County, in 1887, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Nuckols to Miss Kathleen Mathis, daughter of Professor C. W. and Jenima (Stuart) Mathis, who now reside at Pineville, where the father is living retired after many years of distinguished service in connection with educational work in Kentucky. Professor Mathis not only played an important part in raising the standard of the public schools of Kentucky, but is fondly remembered on the campus of Berea College, as an influential and scholastic head of Gilead Institute in Hart County. His birth occurred at Cecilia, Hardin County, this state in 1834. Doctor and Mrs. Nuckols have four children: J. Leon is engaged in the drug business at Pineville; Lalla Rookh is the wife of C. Hays Foster, cashier of the Lincoln National Bank at Stanford, Lincoln County. Paul Eve is bookkeeper and traffic manager for an important coal mining company at Pineville. He entered the national military service in December, 1917, was sent to Fort Thomas, near the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, whence he was later transferred to Washington, D. C., and in March, 1918, he sailed for France. He was thereafter assigned to service with the Forester Division on the Swiss border, with the rank of sergeant, and his service on the stage of active military operations in the World War covered a period of fifteen months. Upon his return to the Pineville Coal Company, Fort Thomas, he was mustered out at Louisville, Kentucky, July 8, 1919, and duly received his honorable discharge. James Norwood, the youngest son, is assistant manager of the plant and business of the great Chicago packing house of Armour & Company at Middlesboro, Bell County, Kentucky.

CLARENCE T. COLEMAN, M. D. Choosing the profession of medicine early in life, Doctor Coleman has worked steadily for the best proficiency and skill, and by successive stages has reached a high place in his profession in the capital city of Frankfort, where he has been located for the last eight years.

Doctor Coleman represents the fourth generation of his family in Kenton County, Kentucky, where he was born May 23, 1882. It was his great-grandfather who came from Virginia and settled as a pioneer in Kenton County. His grandfather, Lucien B. Coleman, was born in 1825 and died in 1911, spending all his life as a farmer in Kenton County. He married Sarah McComum, who was born in the same county in 1831, and died there in 1915. Three of their children are still living: Joseph B., a retired farmer at Latonia; Mrs. Augusta White; and Samuel, a Kenton County farmer.

Clarence E. Coleman, father of Dr. Coleman, is also still living in Kenton County, where he was born in 1856 and where he has spent his years as a very successful and up-to-date farmer. He is a democrat and represented his county in the State Legislature.
in 1888. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Charles E. Coleman married Ada Hunt, who was born near Calhoun, Illinois, in 1860. They have three sons, Doctor Coleman being the second. Harry R., the oldest, is an expert steam engineer connected with the Illinois Steel Works at Chicago. Clifford, the youngest, lives at home and helps his father run the farm.

Mr. Coleman attended the public schools of Kenton County, the high school at Independence, and in 1903 entered the Medical Department of the University of Louisville, from which he received his M. D. degree in 1907. From that year he practiced in Delaplaine and in Scott County for two years, for another two years he was at Woodlake in Franklin County, and then removed to the City of Frankfort and has been busily engaged in that field of endeavor ever since. Dr. Coleman was at Franklin Lodge No. 530 of the Elks, Frankfort Aerie No. 923 of the Eagles, and the Loyal Order of Moose.

His home is at 418 Logan Street. In November, 1905, at Louisville, Doctor Coleman married Miss Mary C. King, daughter of A. J. C. and Elizabeth (Chandler) King, the latter now deceased. Her father is a farmer in Fleming County, Kentucky. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Coleman are Elizabeth, born October 7, 1907, and Robert Mason, born December 25, 1916.

RALPH R. WILSON on leaving college took up the life insurance business, which he followed for about ten years, and since then his time and energies have been largely devoted to the production of copper in the great copper regions of Arizona, though his home and business headquarters are still at Frankfort. Mr. Wilson is vice president of the Johnson Copper Development Company.

He was born in Cynthiana, Kentucky, July 26, 1874. The Wilsons came from England to Virginia in Colonial times. His grandfather, James M. Wilson, was born in Virginia in 1801, followed the profession of medicine, and was one of the pioneer doctors of Northern Kentucky, frequently riding as far as twenty-five miles from his home to attend patients. He died at Falmouth in December, 1824, and his wife, Elizabeth, was a native Kentuckian and died at Falmouth. Capt. James M. Wilson, father of Ralph R., was born at Falmouth in 1838, and was the oldest native of that village when he died there November 22, 1918. He grew up at Falmouth and in 1861 enlisted in the Union Army as a private, subsequently through merit and efficiency being promoted to captain. He participated in the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, and was with Sherman on the march to the sea. After the war, in 1865, he returned to Grant County, was a merchant there a few years, then returned to Falmouth, and for a number of years was in the revenue service and for twelve years a retail merchant. He was honored with election as the first mayor of Falmouth, and was postmaster of the village seventeen years, finally resigning in the middle of a term to retire from business. He was one of the most widely known and influential citizens in this section of the state, was a stanch republican, and an official member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Captain Wilson married Ella Rachel Kerr, who was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, in 1843, daughter of John Kerr, a native of Virginia, who died in Fayette County. John Kerr was owner of Cedar Grove Farm, located halfway between Lexington and Paris, Kentucky. Mrs. Wilson is still living at Falmouth. She is the mother of five children: Dr. J. E., a physician and surgeon at Falmouth; J. T. Wilson, publisher of the Log Cabin at Cynthiana; Ralph R.; 'Miss Ella K., a very capable business woman who was assistant postmistress under her father and has continued in the same post at Falmouth during the democratic administration; and Miss Mary C., who lives with her mother.

Ralph R. Wilson, educated in the public schools of Falmouth, also attended a private school there for his preparatory training, and completed the junior year at Center College at Danville, where he was a member of the Phi Delta Theta college fraternity. On leaving college in 1894 he took up the life insurance business at Falmouth, remaining there seven years, and in 1902 moved to Frankfort.

Mr. Wilson began the development of copper mines in Arizona in 1906. The scene of his operations is Cochise County, the greatest copper region in the world. Mr. Wilson has spent much time in the Southwest, though his business headquarters are in the McClure Building at Frankfort.

He is a republican, a member of the Board of Stewards of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Frankfort, belongs to the Frankfort Chamber of Commerce and is a member of both Orison Lodge No. 74 of the Odd Fellows and the Loyal Order of Moose. His home is at 566 Shelby Street. Mr. Wilson was deeply interested in every war cause, serving as captain in several of the drives at Frankfort, and gave to the extent of his ability as a buyer of Government securities.

On June 5, 1901, at Falmouth he married Miss Hallie Belle Taliaferro, daughter of Rev. T. F. and Mary (Tutchers) Taliaferro, the latter now deceased. Her father, living with Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, is a retired minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, though still preaching occasionally, and gave fifty years of devoted work to the Kentucky Conference. Mrs. Wilson attended Millsburg College during the junior year. To their marriage were born three children: Thomas T., on July 13, 1902; James Edwin, on June 6, 1906; and Hallie Miller, on March 25, 1913.

DAVID DURHAM SMITH has been a resident of Franklin County over twenty years. He began his independent business career in the general insurance line, starting on a modest scale, but has since built up one of the largest general agencies in Franklin County. For his business headquarters he now uses the entire half of the second floor of the McClure Building.

Mr. Smith was born in Jeffersonville, Indiana, September 5, 1870. His father, John Franklin Smith, was born in New York City in 1828, and the family was early established in that city from England. John Franklin Smith from the age of eighteen to twenty-one served in the United States Navy. Soon after leaving the navy, about 1849, he came West and settled at Aurora, Indiana, and helped build the Ohio & Mississippi Railway, now a part of the Baltimore & Ohio system, from Cincinnati to Seymour, Indiana. Subsequently he removed to Jeffersonville and had charge of the terminals for the Ohio & Mississippi Railway, and was still performing those duties at the time of his death in 1892. He was a republican, a member of the Masonic fraternity, and a Methodist. He was married at Aurora, Indiana, to Almira Durham, who was born at Wilmington, a suburb of that Indiana town, in 1829. Their children were: Louise, who died at Jeffersonville, wife of I. F. Whiteside, now deceased, Mr. Whiteside having been proprietor of the Whiteside Bakery, manufacturers of the well known brand of "Mother's Bread;" Katherine, wife of James N. Samburn, secretary of the Cattle Breeders Association of El Paso, Texas; and David D.

David D. Smith attended the public schools of his native city, and after graduating in 1897 from Bryant &
Stratton’s Business College at Louisville was employed for two years in the engineering department of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Louisville, and in May, 1899, came to Frankfort, where for two years he was stenographer in the offices of the Kentucky Distilleries and Warehouse Company, and for three years stenographer for the Frankfort Chair Company. It was during this time that he began handling general insurance as a regular business. It was exclusively a one-man organization for a time, but he has kept the business growing and now supplies an insurance service covering practically all of Franklin County and requiring a large office force to handle the technical details.

Mr. Sanders was a member of the Independent City Council of Frankfort. He is a democrat, a member of the Episcopalian Church, and is affiliated with Hiram Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., Frankfort Commandery No. 4, K. T., and Frankfort Lodge No. 530 of the Elks.

His modern home is at Third Street and Capital Avenue. He married at Frankfort in November, 1900, Miss Cora Ann Carter, daughter of Dallas C. and Bettie Crutcher, now deceased. Her father was a member of the firm of Crutcher & Starks, dealers in men’s furnishings goods, with stores both at Frankfort and Louisville. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have three children: Katherine, born August 16, 1910; Myra, born December 12, 1912; and Bettye, born August 4, 1919.

ELLIS SANDERS ALLEN, M. D. A Louisville surgeon whose abilities have brought him more than local reputation in his chosen field. Doctor Allen was graduated in medicine twenty years ago, and with a widening range of experience his name has come to suggest some of the finest skill of his great profession.

Doctor Allen was born at Newbern, Alabama, June 24, 1872, son of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Sanders, is a cotton planter, and Ella (Sanders) Allen, who died in 1883. His parents were born at Scott Station, Alabama. Ellis Sanders Allen acquired a thorough literary education preceding his medical studies, graduating from the Southern University at Greensboro, Alabama, in 1896. He received his M. D. degree from the University of Louisville in 1901 and after a year as intern in the City Hospital in Frankfort, his practice was largely limited to surgery. In 1905 he did work at the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia and at Johns Hopkins Hospital at Baltimore, Maryland.

He is a past president of the Jefferson County Medical Society, a member of the Kentucky State Medical Association and the American Medical Association. Doctor Allen is an elder in the Second Presbyterian Church of Louisville and in politics is a democrat. He is a member of Crescent Hill Lodge, F. & A. M., and a member of the Consistory, thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason. On June 6, 1907, he married Nancy F. Armstead, who was born at Clarksville, Tennessee. They have one son, Ellis Sanders, Jr.

JOSEPH RUPERT has been a wholesale merchant at Frankfort for twenty years, was mayor of the city four years, and is widely known for his substantial business qualifications and his ardent public spirit.

Mr. Rupert has spent most of his life in Kentucky, but was born at Chillicothe, Ohio, September 13, 1867. His grandfather, Joseph Rupert, was born in Baden, Germany, in 1821, learned the trade of stationary engineer, and soon after his marriage came to America and settled near Chillicothe, Ohio. For a number of years he was an engineer for an iron furnace, and finally came to Kentucky and settled on a farm at Grayson, where he lived until his death in 1894. His son, John Rupert, was born in Ohio January 1, 1834, was reared and married in that state and at Chillicothe followed the business of contractor in ore mining. In 1875 he moved to the vicinity of Grayson, Kentucky, and was identified with farming in that vicinity the rest of his life. He died December 17, 1917. He was a democrat, and long identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church in his community. He was also affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. When only a boy in years he enlisted in the Union Army as a member of the First Ohio Heavy Artillery, and served all through the struggle, coming out with the rank of sergeant.

John Rupert married Minnie Chester, who was born in Germany in 1817 and was brought to America at the age of four years. Her father, Fred Chester, Sr., was a farmer, and died near Chillicothe, Ohio, where his daughter Minnie grew up. She died at Grayson, Kentucky, in 1881. She was the mother of two children, Joseph and Emma. The latter, born at Crawford, a farmer at Grayson, Kentucky. John Rupert married for his second wife Miss Carrie Botts, a life-long resident of Grayson. She became the mother of six children: Bettie, wife of Owen Stewart, a farmer at Grayson, Kentucky; Ottie, who died in 1920, was the wife of John Hubbard, Jr., a farmer at Grayson; Luther and Chester, both farmers in the Grayson community; Jennie, wife of Strother Womack, a farmer at Grayson; and Miss May, who lives near Ashland, Kentucky.

Joseph Rupert was about eight years old when his parents came to Kentucky. He finished the education begun in the rural schools of Carter County in a seminary at Irondale in Southern Ohio, but left his books at the close of five years of school. In the eighteen years learned business and made progress toward an independent career as an employee of his father’s general store near Grayson. With this experience and with such capital as he had been able to accumulate he came to Frankfort in 1900, and established what is today the oldest wholesale grocery business in Franklin County. In 1901 the Rupert Grocery Company was incorporated, and Mr. Rupert is president of the firm. He bought a house and offices at 317-319 Main Street and does business all over Central Kentucky. Mr. Rupert is president of the company, H. C. Rupert is vice-president and the secretary and treasurer is W. J. Lang.

Mr. Rupert’s service as mayor of Frankfort was from 1913 to 1917. He is now treasurer of the City Sinking Fund, and for four years was a member of the Board of Education. He is a democrat, a member of the Frankfort Chamber of Commerce, is active in the Methodist Episcopal Church and fraternally is affiliated with Temple Lodge No. 115, A. F. and A. M., was for two terms master of his lodge at Grayson, is a member of Greenup Chapter, R. A. M., in Greenup County, of Ashland Commandery No. 28, K. T., at Ashland, and Frankfort Commandery No. 730 of the Elks. He is associated with Frankfort’s patriotic citizens in molding sentiment, raising funds and promoting the cause of the Government during the World war. He owns one of the very fine residences of the city, at Third and Shelby streets, and owns other improved real estate as well.

On June 9, 1903, at Frankfort, Mr. Rupert married Miss Frederika Weisenburg, daughter of L. B. and Frederika (Kaltenbrun) Weisenburg, residents of Frankfort, her father being a retired business man.

B. R. BACON. The record of successful business men needs no introductory preface among the citizens of their native community, and B. R. Bacon, manager of the B. R. Bacon Hardware Company of Frankfort, is undoubtedly a member of the class referred to. By his strict personal integrity and honorable dealings, combined with brilliant business qualifications, he has become not only one of the leading merchants but also one of the most highly respected members of his community.

Mr. Bacon was born at Frankfort, March 17, 1867, a son of William Robinson and Judith A. (Bacon) Bacon. The Bacon family, originating in England, came to America during Colonial times and settled in Vir-
Virginia, where was born Lydell Bacon, the grandfather of B. R. Lydell Bacon became a pioneer farmer into Franklin County, Kentucky, where he passed the remainder of his life and died in 1889. Mr. Bacon, devoted himself assiduously to agricultural pursuits and died many years before the birth of his grandson. William Robinson Bacon was born in 1873, in Franklin County, Kentucky, and was educated in the rural schools, residing on his father's farm until reaching the age of eighteen years. At that time he came into Frankfort, where he became a carpenter and builder and where he resided until his death in 1889. Mr. Bacon was one of the early members of the Baptist church, and his residence in the city stand as monuments to his mechanical skill and sound workmanship. Among other structures he built the old city wooden bridge over the Kentucky River. A man of sterling integrity and sound principles, he had the respect and esteem of his associates and the general confidence of the public. First a whig, he later became an independent democrat, but never sought nor cared for public office. During the Civil war he was a sympathizer of the North and did much to aid its fighting forces. He was a strong churchman and a member of the Baptist faith, and his fraternal affiliation was with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Bacon married Judith A. Bacon, who was born in 1822, in Hopkins County, Kentucky, and died at Frankfort in 1904, and they had five children: Carrie, of Frankfort, the widow of Joseph H. Cox, a former saddler of this city; Sallie, who died at the age of thirty-five years, the wife of John D. Griffin, superintendent of the Frankfort Water Company; Belle, who died unmarried at the age of twenty years; Harry C., formerly a carpenter and builder of Frankfort, who died at the age of fifty-five years; and B. R.

B. R. Bacon attended the schools of Frankfort for six years and later went to work under Prof. J. B. Tharp, thus receiving a high school education. When he was fifteen years of age he put aside his literary studies and started to learn the carpenter trade, which he followed until he was twenty-two years old, then entering the hardware store of Frank G. Stagg. After one year as a clerk he was admitted to partnership, the firm at that time becoming Stagg & Bacon, but the business in the early years was necessarily small, and the business assumed the style of Frank G. Stagg, and Mr. Bacon, as clerk, in the store until 1912. In that year, with Henry F. Lindsey and William J. Pruet, Mr. Bacon embarked upon a venture of his own, purchasing Mr. Stagg's business, which has been conducted since as the B. R. Bacon Hardware Company. Under Mr. Bacon's supervision and management, this has grown to be one of the leading hardware establishments of Louisville and Lexington, and the large, attractive and well-equipped store at 110-112 North Street carries a complete line of modern shelf and heavy hardware, stoves, paints, oils, etc., comparing favorably with the establishments of any of the larger cities. The business has a splendid patronage, and much of its success is due to Mr. Bacon's energetic management, modern ideas and unfailing courtesy.

Mr. Bacon is a democrat, but has never taken an active part in political affairs, although he is a good citizen who gives his aid to the beneficent causes of his country. During the World war he exemplified his patriotism and public spirit by his unqualified support of war movements. With his family he belongs to the Baptist Church, and his fraternal affiliations are with the Knights of Pythias, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Masons.

Mr. Bacon married in 1900, at Lexington, Miss Mary Frances Lilard, a graduate of the public schools of Lawrenceburg, Kentucky, where her parents, Chris and Sallie (Hawkins) Lilard, reside, and where her father is identified with a mercantile enterprise. Mr. and Mrs. Bacon are the parents of one child, Sarah Lilard, born at Frankfort November 22, 1913. The Bacon home is the one in which Mr. Bacon was born and which is now owned by him, a comfortable residence built by his father on Third Street.

HON. JOEL EDISON CHILDERS. A long and honorable record in his profession, as well as in public service, has made the name of Hon. Joel Edison Childers well and favorably known to the people of Pike County, where his life has been passed. The present mayor of Pikeville and ex-judge of the Circuit Court has been a leader in the life of his community practically since attaining his majority, and his brilliant gifts and high-minded principles have served to establish him thoroughly in public confidence and esteem.

Judge Childers was born May 10, 1877, at the mouth of Elkhorn Creek, near the present site of Elkhorn City, Pike County, a son of Lovel and Rebecca (Ratliff) Childers, the former a native of North Carolina and the latter of Virginia, and both were children when brought by their parents to Kentucky. Lovel Childers was reared and educated in Pike County, and when a young man joined the Confederate Army, taking part in the war between the states as a member of General Walker's command and at one time being a war prisoner at Camp Chase. At the close of the war he took up farming in Pike County, and continued to be engaged therein during the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1907, when he was seventy years of age. He was a democrat in politics, and he and his wife were faithful members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mrs. Childers died in 1900, at the age of fifty-seven years. They were the parents of four sons and four daughters, and of the seven children who now survive two are residents of Pike County, Joel Edison; and William, foreman at the Kentucky solvay plant at Hellier, this state.

Joel Edison Childers is practically self-educated. He attended the country schools of Pike County and a subscription school at Doron, and prior to reaching his eighteenth birthday began teaching school in the rural districts of his native county. When he was twenty-one years of age he was elected justice of the peace, and at that time began the study of law, being admitted to the bar in 1907. A brilliant speaker and possessed of inherent qualifications for his profession, he rose rapidly in his calling, and in 1919 was appointed judge of the Circuit Court to complete an unexpired term. He remained in this office for one year, or until the election of Judge Vanover, and in 1920 was elected mayor of Pikeville, an office which he now holds. His administration has been one of much benefit to the city, and numerous civic improvements have come as a result of his labors in behalf of the community. In November, 1921, he was elected circuit judge of Pike and Lechert counties by a vote of 4,600 majority in a strong republican district that usually goes republican by 4,000 majority. Judge Childers, as before noted, is possessed of marked oratorical powers, and these have been used in his campaign for the first candidacy of William Jennings Bryan in behalf of the democratic aspirants for the presidency. As a fraternalist he holds membership in the Masons and Odd Fellows.

In 1903 Judge Childers married Miss Kate M. Leslie, daughter of William Leslie, of Pikeville, and to this union there have been born the following children: Elmo, Madaline, Edison, Leslie, Rebecca, Donald and Houston. Mrs. Childers is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

ROBERT L. BRADLEY. Understanding thoroughly the fundamentals of commercial life, and finding in Hickman the inspiration for the development of important interests which connect him to the mercantile and financial operations of Fulton County, Robert L. Bradley is easily one of the leading men of his generation and neighborhood. He has always had the good of the community at heart and has been very generous to it of his time, money and influence, and his life is an inspiration to others.

Robert L. Bradley was born in Fulton County, Kentucky, on a farm five miles east of Hickman, October 6, 1852, a son of Mark Bradley and grandson of Theodore Bradley. The latter was born on his father's farm, and became, himself, a farmer, buying the homestead in Fulton County that was inherited by his son, Mark Bradley, and the one on which Robert L. Bradley was born, and here he died before the birth of his grandson. This homestead was acquired from the Government, and he developed it into a valuable farm. He was married to Mary Elizabeth Bradley, and died at the homestead in Fulton County at the age of ninety-nine years.

The birth of Mark Bradley took place on the homestead in Fulton County, Kentucky, in 1841, and he died on this farm January 6, 1863. A man of quiet disposition, he never cared for a public life, confining his civic duties to the casting of his vote for the candidates of the democratic party. He was married to Susan A. Duffey, born near Maysville, Kentucky, in 1843. She died near State Line, Fulton County, Kentucky, on her farm, in February, 1917. She and her husband had but the one child. After the death of her first husband Mrs. Bradley was married to Hardin Maddox, born in Owen County, Kentucky, and he died near State Line, Fulton County, Kentucky, having been a farmer all of his life. He had one child, a daughter. Mrs. Bradley then married the following children: Leonard, who is a farmer residing near State Line, Kentucky; Sallie, who married Isaac Shuff, a farmer near State Line, Kentucky; W. H., who is also a farmer residing near State Line, Kentucky; Effie, who married W. N. Brassfield, lives near State Line, Kentucky, where he is engaged in farming; Lida, who married Albert Jones, a farmer, died near State Line, Kentucky; and Bessie, who married L. H. Bacon, a farmer, and both died near State Line, Kentucky.

Growing up in his native county Robert L. Bradley lived on his mother's farm until he was eighteen years of age, and during that period attended the rural schools.

In 1880 he came to Hickman and became a clerk for C. A. Holcombe, a druggist, holding the position for a year, after which he was engaged in the dry goods business with J. Amberg's Sons, and for twenty years carried on a large and successful trade, but then severed those connections and for the subsequent three years was engaged with several mercantile firms. Then, on January 1, 1906, he established his present undertaking, which has been developed into the leading shoe store of southwestern Kentucky. It is located on East Clinton Street. Some years ago Mr. Bradley became a stockholder of the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Hickman, and is now on its Board of Directors. He owns a modern residence on Obion Street, which is a very comfortable and attractive house, one of the finest of the bungalow type in Hickman. Mr. Bradley also owns a farm eight miles west of Hickman, along the Chicago, Memphis & Gulf Railroad, at Bonduel, Kentucky, which contains 170 acres of very valuable land, and he also owns twenty-five acres of land near State Line, Kentucky.

A democrat in his political convictions, Mr. Bradley has served as a member of the City Council for several years, and was on the school board for four years. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias and the Hickman Commercial Club.

Mr. Bradley was married to Miss Catherine M. Costello, born and reared in County Kerry, Ireland, and they have one son, Mark C., who was born December 6, 1905. In every relation of life Mr. Bradley has been willing to extend a strong and friendly hand, and his uprightness, steadfast devotion to his duty as he has seen it and the needs of his community have made him one of the really worthwhile citizens of his part of the state.

Fred A. Jones, M. D., one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Paducah, has won his place in his profession through natural ability and skilled experience. He comes of an old and honored family of this country, although his ancestors originated in Wales, from which representatives immigrated to the American Colonies at a date long before the war for independence. The grandfather of Doctor Jones, John Jones, was born in Virginia, but left the Old Dominion for Livingston County, Kentucky, and he died at Grand Rivers, Kentucky, after a long and distinguished life. For a number of years he owned and operated a large farming property in Livingston County, Kentucky, was very active in the democratic party and held the office of county judge of Livingston County for a long period. During the war between the two sections of the country he espoused the "Lost Cause," and as a soldier in the Confederate Army fought for his ideals until the close of that fraternal conflict.

Doctor Jones was born near Grand Rivers, Kentucky, on February 15, 1880, a son of G. A. Jones, who was also born in the vicinity of Grand Rivers, the date of his birth being 1845. He has lived in the house in which he was born all of his life, and it was erected by his father. G. A. Jones has been a farmer and stock-raiser all of his life, and is still active in agricultural matters. By inheritance and conviction he is a democrat. The Baptist Church affords him a medium for the expression of his religious beliefs.

G. A. Jones was married to Emily Ross, born in Livingston County in 1854, and they became the parents of the following children: Dr. Fred A.; Charles M., who is superintendent of the city schools of Lakeland, Florida, was graduated from the State Normal University at Bowling Green, Kentucky, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts; and Harry, a post-graduate candidate for the University of Chicago, was graduated therefrom with the degree of Bachelor of Science; Laura, who married Frank Bennett, a farmer in the vicinity of Grand Rivers, Kentucky, died there in 1912, but her husband survives; Bertha married Shans Watson, a very prosperous farmer in the vicinity of Grand Rivers; Dudley is a farmer residing near Grand Rivers; Oliver is also a farmer of the Grand Rivers neighborhood; and Willis is living with his parents and attending the high school of Smithland, Kentucky.

Doctor Jones attended the public schools of Livingston County, and was graduated from the Smithland High School in 1900. For the subsequent three years he was engaged in teaching school in his native county, and then for four years was a bookkeeper for a Memphis, Tennessee, firm. During his professional career, he entered Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, and took its four-year medical course, from which he was graduated in 1914 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. For the year following his graduation Doctor Jones served as interne at the Illinois Central Hospital at Paducah, in that connection gaining a very wide and valuable knowledge of clinical practice. After the Civil War, he was at Rosiclare, Illinois, and was there for three years, during which period he engaged in the active practice of his profession. In 1918 he located permanently at Paducah, and since then has carried on a general medical and surgical practice, with offices at Fourth and Broad Streets. During 1917 and 1918 Doctor Jones took some post-graduate work in the Chicago Polyclinic and in general medicine, and has been engaging in the study and practice of general and general medicine. Like his father and grandfather, he is a democrat, and while living at Rosiclare was its health officer. During the late war he served the Draft Board as examining physician for Hardin County. He is a Mason and belongs to Plain City Lodge No. 449, A. F. and A. M., and Paducah Chapter No. 55, R. A. M. Doctor Jones also belongs to the Paducah Board of Trade, the McCracken County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, as well as to the Southwestern Medical Association. He owns his office and residence, both of which are located at Fourth and Broad streets.

In 1914 Doctor Jones was united in marriage at Grand Rivers, Kentucky, with Miss Elva Sexton, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Sexton, of Grand Rivers, where Mr. Sexton is engaged in merchandising and farming. Mrs. Jones was graduated from the Cumberland City Academy in Cumberland, Tennessee, and from the Huntington Seminary of Huntington, Tennessee, and is the center of a congenial literary and social circle at Paducah. Doctor and Mrs. Jones have one child, Maxine, who was born September 4, 1915. Doctor Jones is a man who produces a favorable impression aside from his professional skill, which is unquestioned, for there is something in the grip and essence of the man which is pleasing. While his practice is a large and growing one, he is never too busy to give a good twenty-four hour attention to public matters, especially in those branches of municipal affairs relating to the health and sanitation of the city, and he is recognized as one of the most valuable additions to Paducah during the past few years.

Garland Singleton is now in the twenty-four consecutive year of his administration of the office of county counselor. The record of his service, is a record interesting for length and also for the splendid service he has rendered the general educational program of the county, not only as superintendent but as a teacher for many years prior to his present responsibilities.

Mr. Singleton was born on a farm seventeen miles south of Stanford in Lincoln County, May 4, 1864. His grandfather, Christopher Singleton, was born in 1810 and died in 1873, having spent all his life as a farmer in Pulaski County, Kentucky, where his father settled in pioneer days. Nathaniel Singleton, father of Superintendent Singleton, was born in Lincoln County in 1840, and lived practically all his life on the farm seventeen miles south of Stanford. He cleared away much of the woods and brush with his own labor, and long enjoyed a successful station as a farmer. He was a minister of the Baptist Church and a democrat in politics. He died at his home in the county in 1911. His wife was Julia Gooch, a native and life-long resident of Lincoln County. Of their children, Mack, the oldest, died at the age of twenty-one; Martha is the wife of James Gooch, farmer and timberman in Pulaski County; Garland Singleton is the third; Melissa died in Lincoln County, wife of Thomas Cress, a trader who died in Wayne County; E. O. Singleton is in the railroad service in Colorado; A. C. Singleton is an electrician and has for twenty-five years been in the Regular Army, was for some months with the Expeditionary Forces in France, and now has charge of the electric plant at Fortress Monroe, Virginia; T. H. Singleton is a practicing physician and surgeon at Bowling Green, Kentucky; and L. G. Singleton is a dentist at Bowling Green. The second wife of Nathaniel Singleton was Mary E., a native of Pulaski County, who owns a home in Pulaski County, and is the mother of two children: Alice, at home, and Clay, a machinist in Ohio, who was for ten months with the American armies in France.

Garland Singleton acquired his early education in the rural schools of Lincoln County, and through all the years of his teaching he has been a student, pursuing courses through his own initiative and also in other schools. He began teaching at the age of twenty-four, and has eight years of commendable work to his credit in the county district. He was first elected county superintendent in November, 1897, beginning his official duties at the Court House in Frankfort in January of the following year. He was re-elected in 1901, 1905, 1909, 1913 and 1917, and is now rounding out his sixth consecutive term. Fifty white and fourteen rural schools are under the supervision of his office, and these are staffed by a hundred teachers, the total enrollment of scholars being five thousand and ninety-six.

Mr. Singleton is also treasurer of the County Board of Education and is custodian of the school fund, amounting to approximately fifty thousand dollars a year. He is a member of the Kentucky Educational Association. He is also an ordained minister of the Baptist Church, still preaches occasionally, and filled his capacity as Layman regularly before his election as county superintendent. He has served as a deacon and clerk of the Baptist Church of Stanford. He is a democrat, and is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of the Macabees. During the World war he made many speeches over Lincoln County, and was otherwise helpful in all patriotic movements.

In 1869, in Linn County, Mr. Singleton married Miss Thelma Hubble, daughter of J. M. and Mary Hubble, the latter still living in Lincoln County and her father, now deceased, was a farmer in that county. Mr. and Mrs. Singleton have four children: Walter is a railroad mail clerk living at Stanford; Wallace, a farmer at Crowley, Florida, was a sergeant in the National Army and had eight months of service in France; Miss Mamie lives at home; and Clarence, who is principally interested in advanced and improved methods in his work. For the past nine years his home has been at Stanford, and his professional reputation extends all over Lincoln County.

His grandfather, John Southard, came to Kentucky from North Carolina when a young man and spent the rest of his life as a farmer in Rockcastle County, where he died when past eighty years of age. He was also a blacksmith by trade, and for many years operated a store in his farm. He married a Miss McClure, also a native of North Carolina. Their son, Richard Southard, was born in Rockcastle County in 1833, and died near Mount Vernon in 1902. All his active years were devoted to the interests of his farm and the welfare of his community. He voted as a republican and was a very attentive member of the Baptist Church. Richard Southard married Mary Pitman, who was born near Mount Vernon in May, 1841, and is now living, at the age of eighty, at the old homestead in Rockcastle County.

Daniel Boone Southard is the only child of his parents. He was born on the farm near Mount Vernon November 17, 1874, and lived in that rural community until he was eighteen years of age. In the meantime he attended country schools, spent two years in the Williamsburg Academy, and subsequently entered the Cincinnati College of Medicine, from which he received his M. D. degree in June, 1898. Doctor Southard has kept in close touch with his professional organizations, including the County, State and American Medical associations, and during 1911 he took post graduate courses in general medicine and diagnosis at Philadelphia. From the time of his graduation until 1906 he practiced at Beechick in Pulaski County, and in another six years he was at Mount Vernon, and since 1912 has attended a general practice at Stanford, being associated with Dr. E. J. Brown. Their offices are on Main Street, opposite the Court House.

Doctor Southard is a republican, a member of the Christian Church, and of Ashland Lodge No. 640, F. and A. M., at Mount Vernon, Mount Vernon Chapter
Robert Bruce Waddle, county attorney of Pulaski County, and one of the leading members of the Somerset bar, comes of a family of lawyers and business and professional men widely known over Eastern Kentucky. In that section of the state the name has been prominent for considerably more than a century. Mr. Waddle’s great-grandfather, William Waddle, was a native of Virginia and as a young man removed to Pulaski County and spent the rest of his life as a farmer there. In 1813 he married Sallie Waddle, of another family of the same name. She was born in Garrard County and died in Pulaski County. The grandfather of Robert Bruce Waddle was also named William. He was born in Pulaski County in 1823 and spent his life there, his homestead farm being turned over to his son-south six by six acres. In many years he held the office of magistrate of the Somerset District. His death occurred in 1893. William Waddle married Maria Ham, who was born in Pulaski County in 1839, and was fourteen years of age when she married. She died in 1915.

Her oldest child was the late O. H. Waddle, who was born in Pulaski County in 1851. He grew up on his father’s farm, was educated at home and was a school teacher for a time. At Somerset he read law under Judge Thomas Z. Morrow, father of the present Gov. Edwin P. Morrow, whose wife is a sister of Robert Bruce Waddle. After his admission to the bar O. H. Waddle continued at Somerset and rose to high rank in his profession. He was a participant in many political battles, though only once was he a candidate for an important office, making the race on the democratic ticket for commonwealth attorney. He gave much strength to that party for years, but after 1896 was affiliated as a republican. He was a Mason and Odd Fellow. O. H. Waddle died in a hospital at Cincinnati in December, 1918. He married Miss Mary A. Hall, who was born in Pulaski County in 1851 and is now living in Cincinnati. They have a large family of nine children: Edwin Morrow, assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Somerset; Robert Bruce; Katherine, wife of Gov. Edwin P. Morrow; Lucille, who died at Somerset in 1902, wife of John D. Storms, now connected with a bank at Cincinnati; Grace, wife of Claude Weddle, traveling salesman for the Bryan Hunt Company, wholesale grocers; Mrs. John R. Hoffs; and Mrs. William, attorney at Somerset, division counsel for the Southern Railway Company and general counsel for the Stearns Coal & Lumber Company; Andrew B., a dentist at Somerset, who served with the rank of first lieutenant in the army during the World war; Benjamin L., associated with his brother William in law practice, also an ex-service man, second lieutenant in the army during the World war; and William, representative at Somerset for the Deleo Lighting Company, was a first lieutenant and had a six months service record in France.

Robert Bruce Waddle, who was born at Somerset March 30, 1877, attended the public schools there, spent three years in Center College at Danville, and in 1890 graduated LL. B. from the Louisville Law School. During 1900 he took the summer law course at the University of Virginia. For over twenty years he has had an extensive law practice, and for the first two years was a partner with his father at Somerset. He then opened his office at Monticello, and for two years practiced and also looked after interests in oil development. After resuming his connection with the Somerset bar he was for three years claim agent for the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railroad Company. He was elected county attorney of Pulaski County in 1909, serving four years. He then resumed private practice for four years, and in 1917 was again elected county attorney, beginning his four year term in January, 1918.

Mr. Waddle has some important business interests, being secretary of the Pu John Oil Company, and is interested in his father’s estate which comprises 20,000 acres of coal land in Eastern Kentucky and a business block on Main Street. He is a republican in politics, a member of the Presbyterian Church, is affiliated with Somerset Lodge No. 238, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, is past exalted ruler and a charter member of Somerset Lodge No. 1021, B. P. O. E.; belongs to Crescent Lodge No. 60, Knights of Pythias, Somerset Aerie No. 1996, Fraternal Order of Eagles and is a member of the Somerset Bar Association. During the World war he was active to the limit of his means in patriotic causes, and was chairman of the Pulaski County Chapter of the Red Cross. Mr. Waddle owns a modern home on Oak Street in Somerset. He married Miss Lucille Hoffs, of Lexington, Kentuck, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. I. C. Ramsey, the latter now deceased. Her father is in the hotel business at Monticello. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Waddle are Mary Austin, born September 5, 1907, and Robert Bruce, Jr., born September 27, 1908.
he attended Elmwood Academy at Perryville, graduating in 1803. He at once began his business and professional career as a newspaper man, establishing and editing for one year the Perryville People. He then consolidated the People with the Marion Falcon at Lebanon, and was editor of that journal at Lebanon for eighteen months. For a year he was managing editor of the Harrodsburg Sentinel, and after that he was managing editor of the Harrodsburg Democrat.

While in the newspaper business Mr. May took an influential part in the affairs of the Kentucky Press Association, has held every important executive position, including president and vice president and member of the executive committee, and is one of the three men whom the association has honored during the thirty-three years of its existence with a life membership.

When in March, 1903, Mr. May removed to Somerset, he engaged in the real estate and insurance business, but retired from the latter field in 1910. His real estate connections are widely and substantially established and he has the oldest business from point of continuous service in Pulaski County. He is manager of the May Realty Company, his business offices being in the Masonic Building at Somerset. In 1903 he also entered the collection field, and the May Collection Agency is regarded as an indispensable mercantile service and has made an enviable record of efficiency, promptness and reliability, and as such is known in commercial circles all over the country.

Mr. May, whose home is on Maple Street in Somerset, owns a farm in Desota County, Florida. For many years he was prominent in democratic state politics, serving eight years, from 1907 to 1915, on the State Central Committee, representing the Eleventh Congressional District, which during the first years of his service was the largest congressional district in the United States. For three years he was assistant state fire marshal, under C. C. Bosworth, and for two years district forester under the State Forest Department. He was appointed by Governor A. O. Stanley as a member of the Kentucky Literacy Commission, and served as secretary-treasurer of that commission. He was one of the first men to be appointed by Gov. James B. McCreary as Aide de Camp, with title of colonel, on his personal staff.

Mr. May was actively associated with the various local committees in raising war funds and in other patriotic purposes. He is a member of the First Meth- odist Episcopal Church of Somerset and fraternity is affiliated with the Elks.

At London, Kentucky, November 15, 1906, he married Miss Lucy McKeen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John C. McKeen, her mother now deceased. Her father is proprietor of the London Manufacturing Company, a plant manufacturing a complete and varied line of building materials. Mrs. May is a graduate of the St. Bernardett Memorial College. To their marriage was born Robert Clifton May on October 13, 1907.

WILLIAM FRED GRIGSBY began the practice of law twenty years ago, and his work in his profession and in public affairs has all been done in his home county of Washington and the county seat of Springfield.

He was born on a farm in Washington County, November 19, 1833, son of William and Margaret (Weathers) Grigsby, also natives of Washington County. His father who was born September 9, 1809, is a son of William and Annie (Williams) Grigsby. William Grigsby was born in Westmoreland County, Virginia, and was twelve years of age when his parents moved to Kentucky in 1841 and settled in Washington County. Since that time his family name has been identified with the county, a period of more than a century. Margaret (Weathers) Grigsby was born December 22, 1845, daughter of James and Mary (Moore) Weathers, and died in 1881. Four of her sons died in early life and the three to survive her were Charles E., Albert Marshall, now deceased, and William Fred. William Grigsby married for his second wife Annie H. Smothers, now deceased. She was the mother of seven daughters and the five to reach mature years were Elizabeth, Margaret, Mary, Bertha, and Dollar. William Grigsby has given his entire active life to agricultural pursuits. He made his home in Washington County until ten years ago when he moved to Nelson County. He is a republican and a member of the Methodist Church.

William Fred Grigsby had the farm as his early environment and his opportunities were those of the rural schools. Later he graduated from the Central Normal College at Waddy, Kentucky, and for three years was a country teacher. While teaching he studied law and on June 1, 1900, was admitted to the bar, and began his career as a lawyer at Springfield, January 1, 1901. Since 1906 Mr. Grigsby has been city attorney and is one of the able professional men and influential leaders in the public life of his home community. He is a republican, a member of the Methodist Church and a member of the Elks.

Grigsby was born in Green County, Kentucky, March 4, 1828, and died in February, 1910. His grandfather, William Barnett, was a native of Ireland and a Colonial settler of North Carolina. He was a civil engineer by profession and came to Kentucky to represent and manage land holdings of Andrews Jackson in this state. The father of Judge Barnett was William Barnett of Greensburg, a farmer and trader.

Andrew Barnett was liberally educated, attending Georgetown College in Kentucky, Harvard University, and graduated from the Louisville Law School with the class of 1848. Among his school associates were John Logan and former Governor Oglesby of Illinois. He then practiced at Greensburg, later at Lebanon, was elected commonwealth attorney and subsequently removed to Louisville, where he engaged in a successful and extensive practice up to the time of his death. He was a loyal Fifty-five democrat in politics. He was at one time a witness in a celebrated "will case," the Mary Howard Preston will, a litigation involving a dispute between the widow and Protestant Church.

As a witness inquiry was made of him if he were a church member. He said no, that he had read the Bible many times, but when it came to denominations and creeds he had no special allegiance, and in all his confusion in the various beliefs he took to the Big Woods.

Andrew Barnett married Kate Frances Tyler, who was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, March 4, 1833, and died June 12, 1912. Her parents were Presley and Jane (Marmaduke) Tyler, and her grandfather was Moses Tyler, descended from Edward Tyler, who came from Wales. The children of Andrew Barnett and wife were two in number, Tyler, and Faunie, who died in 1916, the wife of R. M. Cunningham.

Tyler Barnett was born near Jeffersonville in Jefferson County, Kentucky, September 23, 1857, and was educated in the public schools of Louisville and the Louisiville Law School with the class of 1879. He learned the routine of his profession in his father's office, and was actively associated with the elder Barnett until the latter's death. Another member of the firm for ten years was Judge Shackleford Miller. Mr. Barnett was selected by the bar to discharge the duties of the First Chancery District Court during the illness of Judge Miller. Judge Barnett is a democrat in politics. During the World war he was chairman of the Louisville Draft Board.

On October 10, 1883, he married Miss Anna L. Schwartz, who died January 16, 1909. Of their three children, Captain T. T. of the United States Regular Army, an electrical engineer by profession joined the Quartermaster's Corps and was in service at Bordeaux, France, was promoted to lieutenant and captain and served abroad until the close of the war. The second son, Andrew, is a business man. Catherine is the wife of Dr. Lee D. Parsons, who was with the American Forces on the Mexican border, later a major in the United States Medical Corps overseas. Dr. and Mrs. Parsons have one son, Albro F. III.

EUGENE F. BEARD, M. D. A physician and surgeon whose talents and abilities are particularly well known in the field of surgery, Dr. Beard has an extensive private practice and is also proprietor of an infirmary at Somerset. His father is still engaged in the private practice of medicine at Bradfordsville, and his grandfather was an early-day physician of Adair County, so that the name has been familiarly associated with the profession of medicine in Eastern Kentucky for a great many years.

Dr. Beard's great-grandfather was the founder of the family in Adair County, coming from Virginia. His grandfather, Dr. John Beard, was born in Kentucky and spent the greater part of his active life as a practitioner in Adair County. He died at Columbus in 1885. Dr. John Beard married Mary McWhorter, who was born in Kentucky in 1828 and died in Marion County in 1918.

Dr. J. C. Beard, of Bradfordsville, was born in that town in 1859, and his entire life has been passed in that community, in a service productive of good and of professional honor. He attended the State College Military School at Lexington, and has been in practice since the close of the war. He is one of the Medical Examiners of the University of Louisville. He has always been very attentive to his duties as a member of the Christian Church, is a democrat, and is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. Dr. J. C. Beard married Miss Lou Gay, who was born in Bradfordsville in 1866.

Their only son and child is Dr. Eugene F. Beard, who was born in Marion County, Kentucky, December 31, 1881. He attended public school there, spent two years in the University of Kentucky at Lexington, and in 1912 graduated M. D. from the University of Louisville. After one year as an interne in Columbus Hospital of Chicago he located at Somerset, and from a general practice his abilities have been more and more concentrated on surgery. In the fall of 1917 he enlisted for service in the Medical Corps, assuming his commission as second lieutenant, his first service was on duty at Fort Riley, Kansas, and thereafter was at the Cantonment at Battle Creek, Michigan, until the signing of the armistice.

Dr. Beard in January, 1921, established his infirmary, located in a fine brick structure on College Street. Its present accommodations are for twenty-three patients, and plans have been made for an additional ten rooms. It is a high class modern establishment, and has accommodated patients from all over Kentucky and also from Tennessee. Dr. Beard is a member of the County, State and American Medical Associations. He is a democrat, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is affiliated with Marion Lodge No. 106, F. and A. M., at Bradfordsville, Detroit Consistory of the Scottish Rite at Detroit, Michigan, and Queen City Camp No. 1149, Modern Woodmen of America.

In May, 1920, at Somerset, Dr. Beard married Miss Velera Smith, daughter of Beecher and Mary (Elliott) Smith, residents of Somerset, where her father is a well-known wholesale grocer. Mrs. Beard is a graduate of the Somerset High School.

DUDEY E. DENTON, president of the Citizens National Bank of Somerset, has been in the real estate and insurance business and has been a practical farmer in that community all his adult life. He represents one of the very prominent families of this section of Kentucky, a family that has stood high in professional and official affairs for several generations.

Judge James H. Denton, who was born in Garrard County, Kentucky, in 1814. He studied law, practiced for many years and earned enviable distinction throughout his district. In 1850 he moved from Garrard to Pulaski County, and was engaged in practice until within a few years of his death. He died on his farm three miles north of Somerset in 1901. He was a whig and later a republican in politics, and filled the office of county attorney and the important position of captain in the Federal Army during the early months of the Civil war, resigning because of physical disability due to his advanced age. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church and master in his Masonic Lodge.

Dudley H. Denton married Nancy W. McKee, who was born in Garrard County in 1824 and died at Somerset in 1882. Dudley H. Denton was a son of Harri- son Denton. The children of Dudley H. Denton and wife were: Alexander, a farmer who died at Science Hill at the age of seventy-one; Henry, father of Dudley Denton, the Somerset banker; Robert, a farmer living at Science Hill; Gertrude, who died in Indiana at the age of forty; Judge James Denton; and Lincoln, a lumber dealer at Somerset.

Judge James Denton, who is an uncle of Dudley E. Denton, has been a practicing lawyer forty years. He was born at Somerset July 6, 1860, was educated in public schools, in the Masonic College at Somerset, and, beginning at the age of eighteen, taught for three years in Pulaski County. He read law in his father's office, was admitted to the bar in 1881, and since that year has practiced steadily with offices at Somerset, though his clientele has extended to the county and to the state. He has been in many capacities. He was county judge from 1888 to 1895, for five years was referee in bankruptcy, and from February, 1901, to July, 1905, was collector of internal revenue for the Eighth District of Kentucky, with headquarters at Danville. He is a republican, a member of the Presbyterian Church, is affiliated with Somerset Lodge No. 111, F. and A. M., is a past grand of Pulaski Lodge No. 75, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is president of the Odd Fellows Orphans Home at Lexington.

He is a stockholder and attorney for the Citizens National Bank of Somerset, and is president of the Somerset Board of Education. He was chairman of the Legal Advisory Board of Pulaski County and made speeches throughout the county in behalf of patriotic movements during the war. Dudley H. Denton married Miss Anna F. Goggan, daughter of William F. and Catherine (Higgins) Goggan, now deceased. Her father was a farmer and at one time clerk of the County Court of Pulaski County. Judge James Denton has three children: Annie, teacher in a private school in North Carolina; Esther, wife of F. V. McChesney, superintendent of schools at Midway, Kentucky; and James, Jr., an electrician.

Henry Denton, another son of Dudley H. Denton, was born in Garrard County in 1839, but from early infancy has lived in Pulaski County. His life has been devoted to farming and stock raising. He lives on a large farm a mile north of Somerset. He served for a brief time in the Civil war, and is a republican and Methodist. Henry Denton married Miss Sallie Elliott, who was born near Somerset in 1859. Of their five children Dudley E. is the oldest. Joseph, the second in age, died at the age of twenty-one. Alexander T. is a railway mail clerk living at Caldwell, Kansas. Jesse is the wife of D. P. Rankin, a farmer and stock dealer near Danville, and Ed is a mechanic.

Dudley E. Denton was born on his father's farm near Somerset July 19, 1877, and, like most of the Dentons, is a man of liberal education. He attended the rural schools, Georgetown College at Georgetown, Kentucky, and graduated in a business course from Kentucky University at Lexington. Beginning at the age of twenty-one, he taught for three years in Pulaski and Jefferson counties in Kentucky. He was elected sheriff, clerked for a year in a store at Somerset, and since then his chief activities have been directed to the real estate and insurance business. His home is a mile north of Somerset, on a valuable farm of 185 acres which he owns, and which he supervises in addition to his other responsibilities.

Mr. Denton was one of the founders of the Citizens National Bank of Pulaski County, which was opened for business in February, 1920, and he has been president from the beginning. It is a highly prosperous and substantial institution, with capital of $100,000, surplus and profits of $15,000 and deposits of $300,000. The officers besides Mr. Denton are C. D. Stigall, vice president; A. A. Basham, cashier; and J. Ernest Sears, assistant cashier. Mr. Denton is a republican, has been treasurer of the First Baptist Church of Somerset for the past fifteen years, is a past grand of Pulaski Lodge No. 75, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and has sat in the Grand Lodge several times, and is a member of Queen City Camp No. 11404, Modern Woodmen of America, Somerset Council No. 193, Junior Order United American Mechanics. His time and means were completely at the disposal of the Government during the World war, and he did much to contribute to the general welfare results of the various campaigns in Pulaski County.

On November 30, 1905, at Somerset, Mr. Denton married Miss Lena Smith, daughter of H. H. and Parralee (Smith) Smith, residents of Pulaski County. Her father is former county superintendent of schools and is still engaged in educational work. Mrs. Denton acquired a thorough education. They are the parents of five children: H. William, born December 1, 1906, engaged in the first year's study in high school; Frank Elliott, born March 30, 1908; Edna May, born May 20, 1909; Edith Josephine, born September 27, 1910, and Ethel, born November 19, 1912, all students in the public schools of Somerset.

R. M. Feese is a widely known newspaper man in Eastern Kentucky, now proprietor and publisher of The Commonwealth at Somerset. He acquired his early knowledge of the newspaper business as an apprentice printer, and has demonstrated the unusual ability to handle the commercial and technical side of the publishing business.

Mr. Feese was born at Columbia, Adair County, Kentucky, July 14, 1885. His grandfather, Sam Feese, was a native of Ireland and as a young man settled in Adair County, where for many years he was one of the leading educators and school officials. He built Feese's water mill near Columbia on Russell's Creek. H. C. Feese, father of the Somerset publisher, was born in Adair County in 1834, and has lived at Columbia all his life. For many years he has been a carpenter and contractor there. He is a republican, a member of the Christian Church, and is affiliated with the Knights of the Maccabees. H. C. Feese married Kate W. Montgomery, who was born near Columbus in 1858. A brief record of their family is as follows: Nona E., wife of Mark Wilson, a blacksmith at Cave Valley, Adair County; Elzie R., a carpenter and contractor at Louisville; R. M. Feese; Elizabeth, wife of Will Wilson, owner and operator of the Campbellsville Cigar Company in Taylor County; Mary B., wife of Arthur Bishop, a real estate man at Louisville; William S., a printer at Dayton, Ohio; Callie, wife of William Harwood, a printer at Wilmington, Ohio; Cary L., wife of Stanley Epperson, in the automobile business at Columbus.

R. M. Feese attended the public schools of Columbia, spending two years in high school. From the age of fifteen he was self supporting, worked on a farm two years, spent two years learning the carpenter's trade, and in 1904 apprenticed himself to learn the printing business and worked in the offices of the Secretary and the News at Columbus until 1909. He acquired a thorough knowledge of the printing business in all its technical aspects. For a short time in 1909 he was with the Kentucky Advocate at Danville, and in the spring of 1910 removed to Somerset and served as foreman in the office of the Somerset Times until 1913, then in a similar capacity for the Somerset Herald until 1915, after which he bought the Somerset Times and the Journal. During the period after nine months, he remained for a short time with the semi-weekly News of Somerset, then was business manager of the Somerset Journal until 1917, when he leased the plant and continued in full charge of the business until 1918. In that year he bought the Semi-Weekly News, consolidating it with the Somerset Journal, and the Journal was conducted by his partner, Mr. M. C. Martin, until August 1922, when Mr. Feese then bought The Commonwealth, and has since been its editor and proprietor. The Commonwealth was established in 1916, is a republican paper, with a circulation that is practically state wide, though the main strength of its support is in the Twenty-Eighth Judicial District, comprising Pulaski, Rockcastle, Wayne and Clinton counties. It is the chief republican paper in this district. Mr. Feese has all the mechanical facilities for a complete and modern printing plant, including Linotype and power presses.

Both as an individual and as a newspaper editor and publisher Mr. Feese was loyal behind every movement to support the government during the World war. He is a republican, an elder in the Christian Church, is affiliated with Somerset Lodge No. 111, F. and A. M., Somerset Chapter No. 25, R. A. M., is a past grand of Pulaski Lodge No. 75, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, a member of Crescent Lodge No. 60, Knights of Pythias, and a past consul of Queen City Camp No. 11404, Modern Woodmen of America.

Mr. Feese, who has one of the modern homes of Somerset, married at Columbia, Kentucky, in 1906, Miss Elia M. Flowers, daughter of J. D. and Elizabeth (Hindman) Flowers, now deceased. Her father was an Adair County farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Feese have two children: Katherine, born October 16, 1907, attending the Somerset High School; and Rollin M., born September 6, 1913, also attending the Somerset school.

Milton E. Wheeldon has found a diversity of interests to command his time and energies from the time he was a boy. He was entrusted with the responsibility of teaching at college school when only fourteen years of age. For many years he was one of the leading educators of Pulaski and Lincoln counties. He also followed farming, and for a number of years past has been the responsible executive officer and cashier of the Waynesburg Deposit Bank.

Mr. Wheeldon was born in Pulaski County November 9, 1872. The family was established in that county in pioneer days by his great-grandfather, who came from Virginia. His grandfather, Cornelius Wheeldon, was a life-long resident of Pulaski County and was one of the highly respected farmer citizens of that locality. He married a Miss Singleton, who was born in Lincoln County and died in Pulaski County. George H. Wheeldon, father of the Waynesburg banker, likewise was a life-long resident of Pulaski County, born in 1847 and died in April, 1914. His energies were expended on his farm and on the institutions in his home community. He was a member of the Church of Christ and voted as a democrat. His wife was Sarah Frances Barron, who was born in Indiana in 1850 and died in Pulaski County in 1910. Mary Elizabeth, the oldest of their children, died in Pulaski County at the age of forty years, wife of James P. Gooch, a farmer in that county; A. T. Wheeldon is a prosperous farmer of Pulaski County; W. E. Wheeldon, a farmer, is his third child; W. F. Wheeldon owns a large farm in Pulaski County; and Arthur E. for the past fifteen years has been foreman in the construction department for the Stearns Coal & Lumber Company at Stearns in McCreary County.

Milton E. Wheeldon attended rural schools and also a select school for teachers training at Somerset, and while teaching in country districts in Pulaski County he also pursued his higher education, attending the Kentucky University, now Transylvania University, at Lexington, and Smith's Business College, then affiliated with Kentucky University. He also took special work in the Eastern Kentucky State Normal School at Richmond, specializing in educational administration. Mr. Wheeldon began his work as an attorney in the State of Kentucky early in 1913. He taught largely in rural districts, and also conducted many special departments for the training of teachers. For one term he was principal of the Euhank graded school. While teaching he lived on, and conducted a farm in Pulaski County, and remained there until 1916, when he accepted the post of cashier of the Wayne Bank at Barnesville. He had previously been a director and vice president of the bank. The Wayne Deposit Bank was opened for business in May, 1907, Mr. Wheeldon having helped organize it. It is a very prosperous institution, with a capital of $15,000, surplus and profits of $10,250, and deposits of $120,000. L. G. Gooch is president, R. Curtis, vice president, while Mr. Wheeldon is both executive officer and cashier of the bank. Mr. Wheeldon was also assistant cashier till June, 1921. He is now the wife of Ivan Reynolds, of Fowler, Kansas. Mr. Wheeldon has a commission as a notary public. He is a democrat and an elder in the Church of Christ. Until recently he owned four farms, and still has extensive real estate interests at Waynesburg, including his modern residence on Straight Street. During the war he furnished his State with a banker and his popular position in the community as a means of promoting all the drives for funds, particularly the sale of Liberty Bonds, and received special commendation from the Secretary of the Treasury for his work in this direction.

In 1897, in Pulaski County, Mr. Wheeldon married Miss Matilda Smith, a native of that county. They have four children; Ben, Roy, who has been cashier of the Waynesburg Deposit Bank; C. G. Wheeldon, attending the Fugazzi Business College of Lexington; Annie Elizabeth and Edith, both pupils in the graded schools at Waynesburg.

Moses Goldberg is a clothing merchant of Cynthiana, a business man who receives credit upon his cirth, character and ability, and as a citizen whom the people of Cynthiana has long learned to esteem and value.

Mr. Goldberg was born in Poland in July, 1870, son of Jacob and Mary Goldberg, both of whom spent all their lives in Poland, where his father was a clothing merchant. Of their children two of the sons are merchants of Cynthiana, A. Goldberg and Moses. His other son, Benjamin, is a resident of Boston, while the two daughters are Goldie and Esther.

Moses Goldberg grew up in Poland, attended the Jewish schools, and from boyhood was actively associated with his father's store and after his father's death looked after the business until he came to the United States in 1900. His family followed him later. At Cynthiana he began as a tailor and peddler, gradually developed his clothing business, and from that came his present large and handsomely equipped and stocked clothing store.

Mr. Goldberg has five children: Ben; Abe, who attended the Cynthiana High School and is with his father in business; Haskell, attending a private school at Cynthiana; Nellie, wife of Jack Brand, of Cincinnati; and Miss Mary. The family are members of the American Synagogue in Lexington, a farmer; Goldberg is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and his sons Ben and Abe are Elks.

Francis Marion Baker. There were many fundamental causes for the high esteem paid Francis Marion Baker during his life in Webster County, where he was preeminent as a lawyer, carried many responsibilities in business and constantly exercised that influence due to a man of the highest personal character and integrity.

Mr. Baker was born at Lismann in Webster County, December 15, 1853, and died at his home in Dixon, August 3, 1917. He was reared on the farm of his father, James Miles Baker, and he enjoyed a wholesome boyhood, acquiring respect for the worthiness of labor by his duties in the fields, though that work did not interfere with his rapid and continuous progress in schools. After his admission to the bar, he spent many years in the local schools he went to school at Princeton, Kentucky, and later attended the University of Kentucky at Lexington. His special talents enabled him to complete his law studies by the time he was nineteen, and by a special act of the Legislature he was admitted to the bar.

He began his professional career in Dixon, where he practiced forty-five years, and at the time of his death was the oldest member in the continuous service of the Webster County bar. He had just passed his twenty-first birthday when he began his official duties as county attorney, having been elected before reaching his majority, and he held the office nearly three terms. He resigned to give his time to his accumulating law business and never afterward was a candidate for political office. He handled a large and varied practice, and as an attorney he was justly respected. His relationship was identified with various lines of business in his home county. He was one of the influential spirits and furnished much of the capital required for the primary development of the coal industry in Webster County. He was also one of the organizers and stockholders and at the time of his death was president of the Dixon Bank & Trust Company, and his large fortune also comprised several valuable and well improved farms. At every point at which he touched the affairs of the county and its people he was essentially public spirited and generous, and deservedly honored the strong friendships he formed. He was an active member of the Christian Church, and in politics was affiliated with the democratic party.

In 1876 Mr. Baker married Annie Jones, who survives his wife and is still living at Dixon. Her father was Elijah Jones, of the village of Webster County. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Baker were born five children: Roy Milton, the oldest, born at Dixon, July 7, 1877, was educated at Centre College in Danville, studied law under his father, and they became associated in practice. His abilities gave promise of a career of at least equal distinction as that of his honored father. He died of the influenza at Chicago, December 22, 1907. His such position as was offered in the Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias, and was a member of the Methodist Church. Roy Milton Baker married Mary Smith in 1903, and she and three children survive him. The second child of Mr. Baker is Mrs. Blanch Maxine Frazee. Ora Viola, now deceased, was the wife of M. L. Blackwell, James Marion Baker, living with his mother at Dixon, married Ruth Smith, of that city. Emma Lou, the youngest, is the wife of Roy Henson Brooks and lives at Dixon.

COLUMBUS MARION THOMPSON, M. D. For thirty years Columbus Marion Thompson has practiced medicine at Kings Mountain. The community has been fortunate in having among its physicians a highly competent physician and surgeon available, and his own life has been fortunate in the wide scope of its activities, its usefulness, and the accumulations of property and esteem.

Doctor Thompson was born on a farm nine miles east of Eubank in Pulaski County, Kentucky, February 19, 1865. Four generations of the family have been in Kentucky. His great-grandfather, Joseph Thompson, was a native of England, settled in Virginia, later lived for some years in Rockcastle County, Kentucky, and then returned to Virginia, where he died. James Thompson, grandfather of Doctor Thompson, was born in Rockcastle County, Kentucky, in 1817, and nearly all his life was spent there and in Pulaski County, engaged in the vocation of farming. He died in Pulaski County in 1862. His wife was a Miss Wilson, a native of Lincoln County, Kentucky, who died in Pulaski. Their son, Jasper N. Thompson, was born in Pulaski County in November, 1838, and for over seventy years he has lived in that section and is still a resident on his farm near Eubank. He is a democrat, has filled the offices of magistrate and constable, and always took a keen interest and public spirited part in local politics. He is a Baptist and his life has been one of exemplary habits and remarkable freedom from vice; one characteristic being that he has never played a game of cards in his life. Jasper N. Thompson married Elizabeth Reynolds, who was born in Pulaski County in 1843. Of their family Columbus Marion is the oldest; Charles F. is a farmer at Moscow, Ohio; Mary C. is the wife of W. G. Lee, a farmer at Honey Grove, Texas; James W. is a merchant at Kings Mountain; George W. is a farmer at Kellogg, Iowa; and Amanda E. is unmarried and her father’s housekeeper.

Columbus Marion Thompson grew up on his father’s farm in Pulaski County and supplemented his education in the rural schools there by attending the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, for two years. In June, 1891, he was graduated M. D. from the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati, and in 1917 he was entitled to the postgraduate diploma from that school.

He first year after graduating he practiced in Pulaski County, but in 1892 moved to Kings Mountain, where his work has brought him steadily increasing honors and responsibilities in a professional way. Since 1894 he has been local surgeon for the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railroad. In point of continuous service he is now the pioneer physician of Kings Mountain. Many other interests may be noted in his life, but the spendthrift of the great commercial assets of Kings Mountain. His home on Church Street is the most attractive residence in the town. He has a farm of 200 acres in Lincoln County, and owns a half interest in 122 acres of valuable land in Clermont County, Ohio. He has been active in every possible way to patriotic movements during the World War. He is a member of the Southern Railway Surgeons Association, the Lincoln County Medical Society, is a past commander of Kings Mountain Tent No. 111, Knights of the Maccabees, a member of Woodstock Lodge No. 639, F. A. M., and is a democrat and Baptist.

In November, 1894, at Woodstock in Pulaski County, he married Miss Emma Thompson, a distant relative, daughter of Squire and Amanda (Aker) Thompson, now deceased. Her father was a Pulaski County farmer. Doctor and Mrs. Thompson have three children: Bertha, wife of T. F. Dunaway, train dispatcher for the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railroad at Kings Mountain; Grace, wife of Emery Hill, a resident of Gerthertown, Kentucky; and Jasper Russell, who is a farmer and school teacher at Kings Mountain.

George C. Martin. For one of the oldest families of the Cynthia local and one of the most ancient landmarks of Harrison County, the residents of this region turn to the family now represented by George C. Martin and the Cincinnati connections which were located four and a half miles northwest of Cynthia. Mr. Martin, a progressive and highly respected agriculturist, was born at the old homestead in which he lives February 27, 1874, a son of Hon. C. B. and Sarah J. (Stump) Martin and a grandson of James Harvey Martin.

His father, the late Hon. C. B. Martin, was also a native of Harrison County, born in October, 1837. The Martin homestead was two and a half miles west of Cynthia. He grew up there, acquired his early education in the public schools, and later attended a private school. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, to which he devoted his activities throughout life, and how industriously and capably he labored may be seen in the fact that at the time of his death he was the owner of 400 acres of valuable and well improved property. He was not less strong and influential a part of the democratic party, was chosen a magistrate and later sheriff of Harrison County, and subsequently was sent to represent the county in the Lower House of the Kentucky Legislature. When his term was completed in that body he was elected to the Kentucky Senate, in which he represented the districts of Harrison, Nicholas and Robertson counties. His public record was an excellent one, and at all times had the full respect and confidence of his associates and constituents. Fraternally he held membership in St. Andrew Lodge No. 18, F. and A. M., Cynthia Chapter No. 17, R. A. M., Cynthia Commandery No. 16, K. T., and was also a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He was active and prominent in the work of the Christian Church, of which he was a life-long member and in the faith in which he died June 8, 1912. His memory will ever be held in respect and affection. His wife, Amanda Elizabeth, daughter of Martin and Amanda (Ward) Huffman, officious. She and their home were a center of hospitality and heart and a faithful helpermate and mother was his good wife, who was born at Oddville, north of Cynthia, in 1854, and died in 1911. They were the parents of four children: Sidney J., a farmer three miles west of Cynthia; Leslie, living across the road from the old homestead; George C.; and Daisy, wife of Ward W. Huffman, of Berry Station.

George C. Martin acquired his education in the public schools of Harrison County and was reared to agricultural pursuits, to which he has always applied himself. For many years he was associated with his father in his farming operations, and at his death began activities on his own account. On his present farm he carries on general operations as a farmer and stock grower, and has 103 acres of well improved land, with modern improvements and conveniences. The old home in which he lives was built in 1807, but numerous improvements have been made thereto which have transformed it into a modern structure. Mr. Martin is accounted an able agriculturist, and as a citizen has been a helpful supporter of worthy movements of a civic, educational and religious character. In his political allegiance he inclines to the principles of the democratic party, being its precinct committee man. In 1912 Mr. Martin was united in marriage with Miss Flossie Roberts, who was born in Harrison County and educated in the public schools, and to this union there have come two children: Stanley and Sarah Belle. Mrs. Martin is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Cleo Thomas is a banker at McKinney. While he has given his chief time for the past half dozen years to banking, his business experience has been a widely varied one, and in his relations as a banker he is able to bring to his aid a knowledge and experience as a farmer. Mr. Thomas was born in Russell County, Kentucky, October 17, 1879. His grandfather was an early settler in Casey County, coming from Virginia. His father, Isaiah Thomas, was born in Casey County in 1848, and spent nearly all his life in that section of the state. Shortly after his marriage he clerked in the Irvin store in Russell County, but in 1881 removed to Danville, and after 1884 lived at Phil, where he conducted a prosperous business as a merchant and as a farmer until his death in 1902. He was one of the principal members of the Christian Church in his community, was also affiliated with the Masonic Order and was a democrat. Isaiah Thomas married Susan L. Toms, who resides at Phil, where she was born in 1855. Their children were five in number: Miss Mollie, who died at the age of twenty-three; Cleo, Lula, wife of Chester Russell, a merchant at Phil; Alma, wife of Leslie Bottom, who is in the grocery and poultry business at Mackville in Washington County, Kentucky; and Miss Stella, who died at the age of twenty.

Cleo Thomas was five years of age when his father took up his residence at Phil, and he attended the public schools there. His life was spent on his father's farm until he was twenty-two. Following that for three years he was employed in a store at Phil, and then operated a farm in Casey County until 1906. The first year he spent at McKinney was connected with one of the local mercantile firms. He also clerked for a time at Fonthill in Russell County, and then for two years was with the Fonthill plant of the Columbia Singletree Company as a spoker manufacturer. He returned to McKinney in 1909 as manager for the branch plant of the same company, and remained with that manufacturing concern until 1916, when he was elected cashier of the McKinney Deposit Bank. This bank was chartered by the state in 1905, and is one of the sound and well managed country banks of Lincoln County. It has a capital of $15,000; surplus and profits of $5,000, and deposits averaging $150,000. E. J. Tanner is president, F. M. Ware, vice president and Cleo Thomas, cashier.

Mr. Thomas was interested in all war causes in his part of the state, and gave much of his time to handling and promoting the Liberty Bond sales. He is owner of a modern residence on Stanford Street in McKinney, and has a farm in Lincoln County. Mr. Thomas votes as a democrat, is a member of the Christian Church, and is a past master of McKinney Lodge No. 631, F. and A. M., a member of Franklin Chapter No. 22, R. A. M. at Danville, Ryan Commandery No. 24, K. T., at Danville; McKinney Camp No. 164, Modern Woodmen of America; and Lee Tent No. 16, Knights of the Maccabees.

In the City of Lexington in 1911 Mr. Thomas married Miss Minnie McWhorter, daughter of Robert and Martha (Godberry) McWhorter. Her mother resides at a residence in Casey County. Her father, now deceased, was a member of the Methodist Church. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas have one daughter, Martha Elizabeth, born in June, 1918.

Richard B. Young. The Farmers Deposit Bank of Middleburg was not two years old when Richard B. Young became its cashier. His service has been continuous for fifteen years, and his knowledge of banking and the spirit of personal service he exemplifies have been important factors in making this one of the stronger banks of Casey County. The Farmers Deposit Bank was opened for business January 1, 1905. Ephraim Goddard was its first president and D. A. Thomas, its first cashier. James K. Coffey is now president, W. H. McClure, vice president, R. B. Young, cashier, and the latter's brother, L. F. Young, assistant cashier. The capital of $15,000 has been retained from the beginning, but it has a large earned surplus, and deposits now range around the $300,000 mark.

Richard B. Young was born on a farm eight miles north of Liberty, in Casey County, September 14, 1872, a grandson of Richard and Janie Young, natives of Virginia. His grandfather was a tailor by trade and died in Lincoln County in 1872. William T. Young, father of the Middleburg banker, was born at Lexington in 1831 and died at Liberty, Kentucky, in 1877, filling the office of Circuit Court clerk. He was a farmer in Lincoln and Casey counties and served from 1861 until the close of the war as a Union soldier. He was a democrat and a member of the Baptist Church.

His wife was Anna Prewitt, who was born in Casey County in 1849 and now lives at Middleburg. All her three sons, Ambrose P., Richard B. and Lucien F., are bankers, Ambrose being cashier of the Commercial Bank of Liberty.

Richard B. Young grew up on his father's farm, living in the country until he was twenty-two years of age, and he acquired a rural school education. Among other early experiences he was with the Government Concessions Department at the St. Louis World's Fair in 1904. During 1905-06 he was in the drug business at Liberty, and in the fall of 1906 was elected cashier of the Farmers Deposit Bank of Middleburg.

Mr. Young was chairman of all local committees for the sale of Liberty Bonds, raising of funds for the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A. and other purposes during the World war. He was in Class A of the draft and was ready for the call to the colors when the armistice was signed. He is a democrat; a member of the Baptist Church and affiliated with Middleburg Lodge No. 594, F. and A. M. He and his family live in a bungalow home in Middleburg. In October, 1908, he married in his home town Miss Lynn Hansford, daughter of William and Sallie Hansford, now deceased. Her father was a farmer near Liberty.

James B. Smith, M. D. A member of an old Georgia family, where he grew up, where he did a service as an educator for a number of years and where he also practiced medicine. Doctor Smith for some years past has been a busy country doctor at McKinney, and has practiced in all sections of Lincoln County steadily except for the time he spent as an officer of the Medical Corps during the World war.

Doctor Smith was born at Fairburn, Georgia, July 20, 1867. He is of English ancestry. His grandfather, Lewis Smith, spent all his life in Fayette County, Georgia, where he was born in 1800 and died in 1874. He owned a large plantation, worked it with many slaves before the war, and was a man of wealth and influence in the community. He married a Miss Post, also a native and life-long resident of Fayette County. Their son, James M. Smith, has lived all his life in the vicinity of Fairburn, Fayette County, where he was born in 1846. His mature activities have been given to farming and merchandising, and he is still a merchant at Fairburn. As a youth he enlisted and served with the Fayette County Blues in the Confederate army and participated in some of the great battles of the war, continuing until the close of the struggle. He is a democrat and a member of the Baptist Church.

James M. Smith married Martha West, who was born in Fayette County in 1848, and died there March 14, 1920. Doctor Smith is the oldest of their children: Mattie E. lives at Atlanta, Georgia, widow of Rev. W. H. Cox, a Baptist clergyman; John W. is an automo-lice mechanic at Atlanta; Mary F. is the wife of Charles Eason, a carpenter at Atlanta; Mrs. Eliza E. Long died at Jonesboro in 1887, and Sallie A. Upchurch is the wife of a farmer in Clayton County, Georgia; William E. and Edward L. are both identified with farming in Fayette County, Georgia.

James B. Smith spent his early life on his father's Georgia farm, attended rural schools, graduated from the high school at Jonesboro in 1885 and in 1889 received his A. B. degree from Harvard University, also at Jonesboro, Georgia. Doctor Smith followed the profession of an educator for two years. In 1902 he began his first year in medical studies at Georgetown University in Washington, District of Columbia, then for two years attended the National Medical School of Washington, and in 1906 received his M. D. degree from the Medical Department of Howard University at Washington. During his senior year he was an interne in the University Hospital, and after graduating remained a year at the capital, to engage in private practice. For one year he practiced at his native town of Fairburn, and for five years was in Morrow, Georgia. Coming to Kentucky, Doctor Smith was in practice at Kings Mountain in Lincoln County from 1913 to April 1, 1915, and since the latter date his home and professional work have been at McKinney. He has the entire field, being the only physician and surgeon in the town, and owns a modern residence and offices at the corner of Main and Stanford streets. He is a member of the Lincoln County, Kentucky State American and the South Medical associations.

May 12, 1918, Doctor Smith began his duties with the Medical Corps, being trained at Camp Greenleaf, Chickamauga Park, Georgia, was commissioned a captain, and on July 10, 1918, was sent to Camp Gordon at Atlanta, where he was battalion surgeon of the First Training Battalion. September 8, 1918, he was ordered to Camp McClellan, Aniston, Alabama, where he continued his duties as a battalion surgeon to the Third Receiving Battalion until mustered out December 6, 1918.

Doctor Smith votes as a democrat, is a member of the Baptist Church, and is affiliated with McKinney Lodge No. 631, F. and A. M., with Franklin Chapter No. 22, R. A. M., and Ryan Commandery No. 17, K. T., at Danville, Kentucky.

Doctor Smith married at Stanford, Kentucky, October 19, 1908, Miss Gertrude Gooch, daughter of Tom W. and Docia Belle (Horton) Gooch, who live on a farm near Hustonville. Doctor and Mrs. Smith have one daughter, Alice Marie, born February 27, 1910.

Charles Francis Montgomery has been an active member of the bar at Liberty for twenty years, is a former state senator, has put his time and means at the disposal of numerous patriotic and civic movements, has been very successful in his business career, and is now president of the Commercial Bank of Liberty.

Mr. Montgomery was born in Lincoln County July 11, 1877. He represents a pioneer Kentucky family. Its founder was his great-great-grandfather, a native of Albemarle County, Virginia, who moved to Adair County, Kentucky, at the beginning of the nineteenth century. For several generations the family had extensive interests as farmers and slave holding planters in Adair County. A son of the pioneer was with Smith Montgomery, third son of the family, was mayor of Adair County and a farmer and slave holder there. Zachariah Francis Montgomery, grandfather of the Liberty banker, was born in Adair County in 1818, and likewise spent his life there, with accumulating responsibilities as a farmer and had slaves until they were freed by the war. He was a soldier in the Mexican war, going through that struggle with the troops under Gen. Joel Quitman, and he named one of his sons for his favorite commander. He died in Adair County in 1887. His wife was Miss Rachel Powell who was born in Adair County in 1836 and died at Liberty, Kentucky, in 1916. Their son, Joel Montgomery, is now living at Liberty. He was born July 30, 1852, in Adair County, where he was reared and married, and for many years has been a prominent minister of the Christian Church. From Adair County he removed to Lincoln County, and about 1893 went to Middleburg in Casey County, and since 1894 his home has been at Liberty, where he is pastor of the Christian Church. He also owns a farm in Laidley, and is a Knight of Templar Mason and a democrat in politics. He married Nannie McFerran Epperson, who was born in Adair County in 1855 and died at Liberty in 1895. Charles Francis is the oldest of their children. Claude, the second in age, died when fourteen years of age. George Carter has also achieved success in business affairs, is a mechanical engineer, and is now Chicago representative of the LONG-BELL Lumber Company of Kansas City. The fourth child, Pearl, died when twenty years of age. Miss Ruby is a teacher in the public schools at New Liberty, Owen County, Kentucky, while Miss Bessie, the youngest, remains at home with her father.

Charles Francis Montgomery spent his boyhood largely in rural districts of Lincoln and Casey counties and attended the common schools there. In 1898 he graduated A. B. from Transylvania University at Lexington and in 1900 received the Master of Arts degree from alma mater. Later he was a student of law in Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, and was admitted to the bar in August, 1901. His admission to the bar was followed immediately by the opening of his office at Liberty, and since then a general clientele in both the civil and criminal branches of the law has rewarded his talents and efforts. Mr. Montgomery was elected and served as county attorney from 1908 to 1910. In November, 1913, he was elected to the State Senate from the Eighteenth Senatorial District, comprising Boyle, Lincoln, Garrard and Casey counties. In the 1914 session he was chairman of the committee on courts and legal procedure, in the session of 1916 was chairman of the committee on penal and reformatory institutions, serving on other important committees as well. He was also a member of the special session of 1917.

Mr. Montgomery has been president of the Commercial Bank of Liberty since September, 1920. This is one of the older banks of Casey County, having been established in 1895, and its cashier, A. P. Young, has been identified with the bank from the beginning. Its capital is $30,000, surplus and profits, $35,000, and deposits, $300,000. Mr. Montgomery is also a director of the Peoples Bank of Hustonville, and is secretary and treasurer of the Black Lake Lumber Company of Louisiana, the company's headquarters being in Mr. Montgomery's office at Liberty. He is also a partner in the firm of Wallen & Montgomery, stove manufacturers.

During the World War he was chairman of all the Liberty Loan campaigns of Casey County, was a county fuel administrator and a member of the Legal Advisory Board of the county. For months the duties of these positions required his time to the practical exclusion of his business and profession.

Mr. Montgomery owns his office building on the Court House Square, a modern home on Middleburg Street and two farms in Casey County. He is a democrat, a deacon of the Christian Church and superintendent of its Sunday School, and is affiliated with Craftsman Lodge No. 722, F. and A. M., at Liberty, Liberty Chapter No. 84, R. A. M., and Liberty Tent No. 51, Knights of the Maccabees.

On September 28, 1904, at Hustonville, he married Miss Mary Allen Carpenter, daughter of T. L. and Abbie (Riffe) Carpenter, the latter now deceased. Her father for many years was a farmer in the Hustonville community and is now living retired at Newcastle, Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery have two children, Morris and Carpenter, born April 1, 1907, and Albie Rife, born May 18, 1911.

HON. THOMAS J. ASHER. Kentucky is an old state and a great state. Millions have contributed to its life and affairs during the past 150 years. But among many individuals whose lives have had something more than ordinary significance and distinction, one is Hon. Thomas J. Asher, of Bell County, whose life has been extended to nearly fourscore years and whose activities have constituted an undoubted asset of great value to all of Eastern Kentucky and in fact to the state in general. He was one of the pioneer lumbermen, has been a potent influence in developing the natural resources of Eastern Kentucky and aside from the importance of his material achievements, has endeared him to the people of this state.

Thomas J. Asher was born at the old homestead of his father at the head of Redbird Creek in Clay County, Kentucky, May 21, 1848. His grandfather was born in North Carolina, October 5, 1777, and moved to Clay County, Kentucky, when a young man, about 1795, when even the nation west of the Alleghenies was included in the unexplored wilderness. He had all the qualities of the pioneer, being a good woodsman, a great hunter, and had many experiences with the Indians, frequently exposed to danger. He died in Clay County, May 8, 1841.

Andrew Jackson Asher, father of Thomas J. Asher, was born in Clay County, July 11, 1817, and he was likewise a skilled hunter, though his chief vocation during his life was farming. He developed a good farm on Redbird Creek in Clay County, but spent his last years in Bell County, where he died August 1, 1888, at the age of seventy-one. He married Margaret Hendrickson, who was born in 1821 in Knox County, Kentucky, where her parents were early settlers. She survived her husband a number of years, passing away in Bell County in 1904. She was a devout Baptist.

Thomas J. Asher was reared and educated in Clay County. He has always been known among his associates as a man of sound intelligence and learning, with a broad vision, but he probably owes little of this to his early contact with schools which in Clay County sixty years ago offered very meager advantages. As a young man he removed to Callaway, Bell County, did farming but also took up the logging business, the industry in which his enterprise has chiefly centered ever since. The first logs he got out he sold to the Southern Pump Company at Burnsise, in Pulaski County. He was a resident of Callaway from 1870 to 1881 and then removed to Wasioto in the same county. After that he continued his timber operations on a larger scale and in 1880 established a sawmill in which was utilized the first circular saw ever employed in the lumber industry in Callaway County. He made another advance to the efficiency of his mill by introducing a hand saw and steel frame mill capable of producing from fifty to seventy-five thousand feet of lumber daily. Judge Asher continued the successful operation of this mill until 1910.

During the past twenty years much of his enterprise and capital have gone into the coal mining operations of Thomas J. Asher. Aside from his business interests he was instrumental in building a railroad twelve miles in those counties with a two-mile branch up Todd Creek. Judge Asher is president of the Asher Coal Mining Company, operating mines at Colmar, Varilla, and Tejay in Bell County and at Cooten Wood and Chemorevet in Harlan County. These mines have an aggregate output capacity of 4,000 tons daily. The name of the village Tejay is made up of the initials of Judge Asher's name. Judge Asher is president of the Bailey Construction Company, a firm of extensive road contractors with headquarters in Cincinnati.

March 3, 1870, Judge Asher married Varilla Howard, who was born at Callaway, Bell County, May 7, 1848. The Village of Varilla in Bell County was named in her honor.

A brief record of the children of Judge and Mrs. Asher is as follows: Hugh, whose sketch follows; Robert, associated with a large retail furniture business at Cincinnati; George, married; Andrew J., a farmer near Pineville; Varilla Ray, wife of Dr. M. Brandenburg, who since giving up the medical profession has been in the hardware and coal business at Pineville and owns extensive farm interests in Oklahoma.

Judge Asher is now in his seventy-third year, but still hale and hearty and attends the business of his thriving plant every day. Aside from the conspicuous part he has played in the industrial development and progress of his section of the state, he served four years from 1914 to 1918 as County Judge of Bell County. He is a Republican and he and Mrs. Asher are members of the Baptist Church of Wasioto.

Tom Wallace in the Courier Journal in 1916 gave a vivid picture of Judge Asher in the role of a road builder. A few paragraphs from that article have been inserted at the request of some of his admiring fellow citizens:

"The most prominent figure in Pineville, and one of the most interesting in the Kentucky mountains, is County Judge T. J. Asher, who is building the Dixie Highway in Bell County. He was born on Redbird Creek in Clay County, under the usual handicaps of the section. He educated himself after he was a grown man. He is now reputed to be more than once a millionaire. He lives in a cottage by the roadside at Wasioto, a station a mile or so outside of Pineville, where he had a lumber camp when he was interested chiefly in lumber. His residence and surroundings are such as might content a $2,500 a year man in Louisville or one of the Bluegrass towns. There is an automobile in the family, but the juniors use it more than Judge Asher. It is a modest one although not the 'make' you have in mind.

"Judge Asher is not conspicuous—in Pineville—as a well-dressed or an ill-dressed man. He is utterly unpretentious without betraying any evidence of parsimony. The typical mountaineer—in fiction especially, but the type is common in real life—is a tall, slender man who looks like the trees which grow up of in the green yards of the mountain. Judge Asher strikes you as a rather broad man and not very tall. He is a son of his soil in his manner of speaking rather than in any other particular. I do not mean that he speaks the dialect which you read in novels by John Fox or Charles Neville Buck. It is his habit of speaking in a low voice that is characteristic. If you fail to catch what he says and ask him to repeat it repeats in exactly the same key. You prick up your ears or you may miss the point.

"Judge Asher is of a nervous temperament. He knows everyone and talks to everyone, but he rarely stands still for five minutes at a time. If he is interested he paces about in the vicinity of the person who is talking to him. If the conversation lags or proves dull to him he sees somebody across the street with whom he has urgent business and with surprising alacrity, but perfect courtesy, he gets away from the point of boredom and falls into conversation with a friend or acquaintance only to pass on to someone else after a few moments. Possibly that peculiarity is a reflection of the restlessness which removed him from Redbird and made him a millionaire.

"Judge Asher is no longer young. His fortune is made. It may grow greater—or may be growing greater—with the development of mineral lands in his possession, but he has reached the age and the financial situation, at which he feels able to take life more easily than he did when he was young. He has time for public service.

"Judge Asher has a vision of the day when Bell County will have a comprehensive system of first-class roads. His idea is to connect the county seats by a subgrade which would hold a railroad track and trains and satisfy both a civil engineer and a locomotive engineer. Judge Asher is a Roman-general in his belief that good roads are a necessity; the sise qua non of conquest.

"If they come high they should nevertheless, come and come to stay. They should be so graded that they will last and so metalized that the log wagon and the automobile alike can roll over them at the minimum expenditure of power. It is the profound conviction of the county judge—a business man, not a lawyer—that Bell County can afford roads of that kind. With from $10,000,000 to $16,000,000 of taxable wealth, upon a conservative basis of valuation, Bell can afford, thinks Judge Asher, to 'dig out' in every direction, no matter whether it is over a river or so here and there, or over such an obstruction as Pine Mountain which casts its shadow over the county seat. That is why Bell County spent the proceeds of the first bond issue before completing the roads already planned and had to submit to the voters the question of a second bond issue. The county was with Judge Asher. Disappointment was widespread when the work was halted by the county's inability to get the money for which the voters were willing to assume bonded indebtedness.

"Of the $250,000 that was voted for roads—the judgments of the first bond issue was 6 per cent for the purchase of road machinery. Motor trucks and two steam shovels were part of the purchase. Steam shovels are not commonly bought by counties for road building. Unless I am mistaken Bell County is the only county in Kentucky which has used them. The purchase of motor trucks is uncommon save in the counties which have the taxable wealth of cities to draw upon. But not every county has in hand such undertakings as cutting grade and the shoulder of mountains. It seems altogether reasonable to believe that where such work is to be done a steam shovel will save enough man and team labor to pay for itself. That is what Judge Asher says the steam shovels have done already in Bell County.

"Bell County did not give the contractors the work of building her roads. Judge Asher and Engineer Bryan say that the grade between Pineville and Middlesboro cost about $24,500 a mile. That looks like the most economical road-making upon record in Kentucky. The new road goes over the mountain. The grade is 3 per cent. It barely is perceptible in an automobile. You realize that you are climbing Pine Mountain when you look down in the valley and see the tree tops. The mountain side is heavily forested. The right of way was cleared and the steam shovel was set to biting into the mountain deeply enough to put the road on solid ground.

"There are two ways of making a subgrade on a mountainside. The wrong way—is to throw out the loose dirt in the form of a fill and build the road partly on the made ground. The other way is to cut back far enough into the earth to put the road on a shelf of solid ground which will not shift with freezes and thaws. Judge Asher built the Dixie Highway the right way, and left plenty of room for a ditch on the inside of the road. It was a modest road to carry off storm water. I went over the road after heavy rains. It showed no signs of damage. The metal surface, which then ran about half way to Middlesboro was as smooth as a road built by French military engineers. The ditches had cleaned themselves under the rush of waters, in accordance with expectations where right principles of engineering are followed. The concrete or stone culverts at the 'swag' had carried off the accumulations of water.

"The bridge building problem is a large one in Bell County, where every stream is a mountain torrent subject to the whims of the weather. Asher built a large number of second-hand railroad bridges rather than put in new bridges of lighter build. He and his friends say that the bridges were bought at figures which made them cheaper than the type of iron bridges commonly used on carriage roads, and cheaper than concrete bridges. They are in keeping with the 'railroad grades.' When the roads are finished the bridges will be strong enough to hold anything that will pass over them. They were designed to bear freight trains."

Hugh H. Asher. President of the Bell National Bank of Pineville, is a son of Judge Thomas J. Asher, and while he has been actively associated with many of the extensive industrial and business interests of his father, is also recognized as a man of achievement on his own account.

Hugh Howard Asher was born at Caloway, Bell County, August 7, 1871. He was educated in the public schools, and was a student during 1887-89 in the University of Kentucky, and since leaving college he has had thirty years in which to work out his individual destiny as a business man. He was associated with his father in the lumber industry until 1898, and then for ten years lived at Chicago, Illinois, and was in the mercantile business. Returning in 1908 to his old home in Wasioto in Bell County, Mr. Asher became superintendent of construction for the building of the Wasioto & Black Mountain Railroad, extending from Wasioto to Tejay. This work employed him three years, and for two years he had charge of construction work on the coal mining plant at Tejay. Then for three years he had general executive supervision of the various coal mining properties comprising the Asher Coal Company. Mr. Asher is secretary of the Asher Coal Mining Company, of which his father is president, and is president of the Asher-Creech Lumber Company of Pineville.

The Asher Coal Company controls 23,000 acres of coal lands in Bell and adjoining counties. Besides the mine operated by the Company directly, a large part of these holdings is leased to other operating companies.

In matters of politics Mr. Asher is a stanch republican. He is prominent in fraternal circles, being affiliated with Bell Lodge No. 691, F. and A. M., at Pineville; Pineville Chapter No. 158, R. A. M.; Pineville Commandery No. 38, Knights Templars; Kossair Temple of the Masonic Shrine at Louisville; Pineville Lodge No. 127, Knights of Pythias; B. P. O. E.; Fraternal Order of Owls; the Lumberman's fraternity, the Hoo-Hoos, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Mr. Asher has proved himself one of the most aggressive advocates of good road building in his native state. He is serving as one of the four State Road Commissioners of Kentucky. During the World war he was chairman of the Bell County Chapter of the Red Cross, under his direction the county raised more than its quota in support of the Red Cross service. He was a working member in the various other drives for the sale of bonds and the raising of funds. As a citizen, whether in times of peace or war he is the type that represents progressiveness and sound public spirit.

At Chicago January 21, 1907, Mr. Asher married Miss
Ada May Thompson. Her father, the late John Thompson, was for many years in the railroad service. Both her parents are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Asher have two children: Robert, born January 5, 1904, now a student in the Staunton Military Academy at Staunton, Virginia, and Thomas Edward, born December 8, 1908, attending public school at Wasio. T.

George M. Asher, is contributing materially to the industrial and commercial prestige of his native county through his successful activities as a leading dairyman and coal operator in Bell County, where he maintains his home and business headquarters in the thriving city of Pineville, the county seat. In the personal sketch of his father Hon. Thomas J., on other pages of this volume, are given adequate data concerning the parents and the family history.

George M. Asher was born at Callaway, Bell County, August 11, 1875 and as a boy and youth was afforded the advantages of public schools of Pineville. From 1891 to 1895 he was a student in the Kentucky State College, at Lexington, an institution which is now the University of Kentucky. From 1895 until 1908 he had active supervision of his father's saw mill and lumber yard, and since that time he has given vigorous executive service in connection with the important affairs of the Asher Coal Company, Virginia. He is president and of which he himself is secretary, this company controlling a large area of valuable coal land in this section of the state. Mr. Asher has maintained his home at Pineville since 1909, and his handsome and modern residence, a brick structure of three stories, is one of the finest in the city, this attractive home being situated on Kentucky Avenue. Mr. Asher has since 1914 owned and conducted the Beechwood Dairy, at Wasio, and this is conceded to represent the leading enterprise of its kind in Bell County, its modern facilities giving effective service of milk and cream to the city of Pineville. Mr. Asher took loyal part in the various local war activities at the time of American participation in the World war, and made his financial contributions to the cause of most liberal order. He is a resident in politics, is loyal and progressive as a citizen, but is essentially a business man and has had neither time nor inclination for public office.

In 1897, at Barbourville, Knox County, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Asher to Miss Barbara Amis, daughter of the late Wilkerson and Mary Jane (Hopper) Amis, the father having been a representative farmer in the Flat Lick district of Knox County. Mrs. Asher received excellent educational advantages, including those of Lovett Seminary. In conclusion is given brief record concerning the children of Mr. and Mrs. Asher. Miss Mary remains at the parental home and is a popular factor in the social activities of Pineville. T. J., Jr., named in honor of his paternal grandfather, was graduated in the University of Kentucky as a member of the class of 1921, and received the degree of Mining Engineer. He is now actively associated with the American Coal Company, Virginia. He is a member of the students army training corps of the University of Kentucky in September, 1918, and continued his service at the barracks in Lexington until after the signing of the historic armistice had brought the World war to a virtual termination. Agnes is, in 1921, a student in Georgetown College, at Georgetown, Kentucky; Verda was graduated in the Pineville high school as a member of the class of 1919, and Charles, a student in the same school. George M., Jr., who was born November 26, 1906, is a student in the Pineville high school. Louise, born December 4, 1908; Wilkerson Amis, born August 29, 1911; and Charles Henry, born July 6, 1913, are attending the public schools of Pineville. Barbara was born December 27, 1913, and Jean, January 29, 1918, and theirs is undisputed juvenile reign in the beautiful family home, which is a center of much of the representative social life of the community.

Ambrose P. Young is a veteran banker, with more than a quarter of a century's service and experience to his credit with the Commercial Bank of Liberty, of which he is cashier. Mr. Young was also active in the politics of Casey County for some years before settling down into the routine of banking. Both his grandfathers, Virginia, who was born in 1832, and Janie Young, natives of Virginia. His grandfather was a tanner by trade, and for many years lived in Lincoln County, where he died in 1872. His son, William T. Young, was born at Lexington, Kentucky, in 1811, was reared in that city and in 1861 enlisted and as a soldier did his part as a staunch defender of the Union throughout the Civil war. After the war he became a farmer in Lincoln and Casey counties, and died at Liberty in 1877. At that time he was Circuit Court clerk. He was a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church, and though he died at the age of thirty-six his life was one of unusual worth and prominence. He married Anna Prewitt, who now lives at Middleburg in Casey County, and was born in that county in 1849. The three sons are Ambrose P., Richard B. and Lucien P., the two younger sons being in the banking business at Middleburg.

Ambrose P. Young was born in Lincoln County April 1, 1870, but has spent practically all his life in Casey County. He grew up on his father's farm there until he was nineteen years of age, being about seven years old when his father died. He had a rural school education and in 1889 became deputy county Court clerk and deputy Circuit Court clerk, filling those positions for three years. For another two years he was deputy sheriff.

In August, 1895, the Commercial Bank of Liberty was opened for business, and at that time Mr. Young became associated with the institution as assistant cashier. He has helped make the splendid record of this bank during subsequent years. The bank has a capital of $30,000, surplus and profits of $35,000 and deposits averaging $80,000. The officers are: Charles F. Montgomery, president; James R. Carson, vice president; A. P. Young, who has been cashier since 1918; and M. J. Humphrey, assistant cashier. To his duties as a banker Mr. Young has given his time and energies with utmost faithfulness. He was interested in the success of all the patriotic drives in Liberty and Casey counties during the World war, and was chairman of several of the campaigns. He is a democratic churchman in the Christian Church, past master of Craftsman Lodge No. 722, F. and A. M., a member of Liberty Chapter No. 81, R. A. M., and of Liberty Camp. Modern Woodmen of America. He and his family have one of the very desirable homes of Liberty, located on Middleburg Street. He is also interested in a farm and ranch of 720 acres in Casey County. On March 17, 1904, at Lexington, Kentucky, Mr. Young married Miss Lillian Phillips. Her father, Mr. Henry L. Phillips, was a merchant at Monticello, Kentucky, where her mother, Alice (Christman) Phillips, is still living. Mrs. Young is a graduate of the Monticello High School. They have three children: George, born in 1906, and Alice, born in 1909, both attending the Liberty High School; and Henry, born in 1913, who has begun his studies in the grade schools.

Thomas B. Prather, representing the third or fourth generation of the family that has been identified with Pulaski County since pioneer times, has for a number of years enjoyed an enviable station in the business and civic affairs of Someret, where he is employed as active vice president of the Farmers National Bank, and secretary of the Farmers Trust Co. He has also been engaged in the real estate and insurance business for the past twelve years, in addition to the banking business.

Mr. Prather was born on a farm five miles southwest of Somerset May 21, 1857. The Prather family is of Irish origin, but has been in America since Colonial days. His grandfather, Wm. Prather, bought the land and built the log house in which he lived in the limits of the Pulaski County, a farmer there, and died in 1801. G. C. Prather, father of Thomas B., was born in the same county in 1832 and for thirty-five years has been engaged in the general mercantile business at Somerset, though he did not move his home from his farm into town until 1866. He is still active as a general merchant. He votes as a democrat and is one of the leading supporters of the Methodist Church at Somerset. His wife was Victoria Gosssett, who was born in Pulaski County in 1855. They are the parents of seven children: J. F. Prather, a merchant in Somerset; Samuel, who died at the age of eleven years; Thomas B.; Hattie, who died in Pulaski County, her husband Dr. R. F. Jasper being a physician at Harlan; Annie is a teacher at Parker School in Somerset; Virginia and Harry, who are at home, the latter assisting his father in the store.

Thomas B. Prather has lived in Somerset since he was within five years of age, and completed his education in the public schools in that city. Leaving school at the age of seventeen, he spent five years with his father and since then has been in the banking, real estate and insurance business. He has other important interests, and for two years was vice president of the Somerset Fair Association and was secretary of Local Building & Loan Association. He owns much local real estate, and besides his modern home has other real estate in this city and Pulaski County. Mr. Prather served as a member of the Somerset School Board five years and was president of the board in 1918, is a democrat, a Baptist, and is affiliated with Somerset Lodge No. 111, A. F. & A. M., Somerset Chapter No. 25, R. A. M., Somerset Commandery No. 31, K. T., and Oleika Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Lexington and the Louisville Consistory of the Scottish Rite. He is a Past Grand of Somerset Lodge No. 238, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Palm, and is a member of Somerset Lodge No. 1921 Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He did much committee work during the World war in behalf of Red Cross and Liberty Loan drives.

In 1908 at Somerset Mr. Prather married Miss Myrtle Freeman, daughter of J. W. and Pamela (Parris) Freeman, residents of Somerset. Her father is foreman of the Car Department of the Southern Railway Company at Fergusgon near Somerset. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Prather are Thomas Alton, born in 1912, and Virginia Maxine, born in 1914.

ISAIAH STEWART WESLEY, M. D. No name stands higher in the medical profession of Casey County than Wesley. The late Dr. Joshua T. Wesley was for many years the county's foremost physician and surgeon, and a man whose abilities put him high in the profession throughout the state. His son, Dr. Isaiah S. Wesley, is likewise a graduate of the University of Kentucky and has been for many years as Liberty, is an able physician and surgeon, and has made his career one broad opportunity for doing good.

This family has been in Pulaski and Casey counties practically from the time that region of Kentucky was settled by white men. Doctor Wesley's great-grandfather, Jack J. Wesley, was of English descent and old Virginia Colonial stock, and was born in Virginia in 1773, two years before the outbreak of the Revolution. As a young man he removed to Kentucky, and he spent the greater part of his active life as a farmer in Casey County, where he died in 1872, at the age of ninety-nine. His son, John J. Wesley, was born in Pulaski County in 1810, lived in that and in Casey County and followed farming as his occupation. He died at Middleburg in 1887. His wife was Bettie Taylor, who was born in Casey County in 1812 and died at Middleburg in 1897.

The late Dr. Joshua T. Wesley was born in Pulaski County in March, 1839, but spent the greater part of his life as well with his family in Casey County. He was a graduate in medicine from the University of Louisville, and until 1876 practiced at Mintonville in Casey County. For one year he was vice president of the Kentucky State Medical Society and for a number of years a councillor of the society. He also was county health officer for a long period of time. In politics he was a republican, was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and for a number of years was a member of the board of trustees of the Protective Lodge at Middleburg. Dr. Joshua Wesley, who died at Middleburg March 24, 1900, married Delila Wesley, who was born in Casey County in 1839 and died at Liberty in 1914. Her father was John Wesley, who was born in Pulaski County, Kentucky, and died in Casey County in 1811, having lived most of his life in Casey County, where he was a farmer. He married a Miss Dick, a native of Pulaski County, of Irish stock. The children of Dr. Joseph Wesley were: Mary Eliza and Myrtie, both of whom died in infancy; Emma, who died at Middleburg in the age of forty-five, wife of George W. Drye, a farmer living near Middleburg; Isaiah Stewart; Theophilus, a druggist who died at Stanford in Lincoln County at the age of thirty; Jason J., of Danville, Kentucky, bookkeeper and general manager for the extensive business interests of Mitchell Taylor; and Florence, wife of Joseph Williams, in the farm implement business at Richmond, Kentucky.

Isaiah Stewart Wesley was born at Mintonville in Casey County November 7, 1867, and during his youth attended school at Mintonville and Middleburg, graduating from the high school at Middleburg in 1883. In 1887 he received the Bachelor of Science degree from Augusta College while that school was under the presidency of Doctor Stephenson. In 1889 he graduated in medicine from the University of Louisville, and has now been in the active practice of his profession over thirty years. During the World War Doctor Wesley attended the Physicians Poly Clinic and also the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia, specializing in general surgery. He was a member of the Board of Censors of the latter college for a number of years. Doctor Wesley practiced at Middleburg from 1889 until 1897, was then at Lancaster five years, and since 1902 has had an extensive general medical and surgical practice at Liberty. Since 1903 he has been county health officer, and it is a unique distinction that he and his father have been the only county health officers Casey County has ever had. He is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations, and during the World war performed heavy and exacting duties as examining physician for the County Draft Board. Doctor Wesley has his offices in the Allen Building. He is a republican in politics, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with Lancaster Lodge F. & A. M., the Knights of the Maccabees, the Improved Order of Red Men, and the Modern Woodmen of America.

On September 20, 1890, in Tennessee, he married Miss Annie Clyde Durham, daughter of Matt and Mollie (Jeter) Durham. Her father was a merchant at Middleburg, Kentucky, where he died, and her mother now lives at Mount Vernon, Kentucky. Mrs. Wesley is a graduate of the high school at Campbellsville, Kentucky. Four children were born to Doctor and Mrs. Wesley. Cora, the oldest, is the wife of Jesse Bell, a mechanic, and they live with Dr. and Mrs. Wesley; and Myrtle, who was better known as Rod, an electrical engineer at Muncie, Indiana, volunteered his services at the beginning of the World war, spent eleven months in France, and at first was with a machine gun battalion, later transferred to service in a field hospital and was on front line duty.
Eli G. Wesley, county attorney of Casey County, is a man of versatile gifts and attainments, and has expressed them in varied service and forms of usefulness. For a number of years he was an active minister of the Gospel, but for the past six years has enjoyed a high place at the Casey County bar.

He was born in Casey County, at Bethel Ridge, April 11, 1875. The family has been in this section of Kentucky for a long period of years. His father, Lee Wesley, was born in Casey County in 1834, and his active career was one of successful devotion to farming. Since 1915 he has lived retired at Liberty. He is an active republican, has served as magistrate of the Jenkins District of Casey County, and is a loyal member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Lee Wesley married Iby Godfrey, who was born in Pulaski County in 1854. Of their large family of children Eli G. is the oldest, and the others are: Mary Frances, wife of James H. McAninch, a Casey County farmer; Adolphus, a farmer and teacher in Casey County; Noble, formerly a merchant and now a teacher and farmer at Yosemite in Casey County; Richard, a farmer; P. P. Wesley, also a farmer; Jennie, who died at Dunville, Casey County, at the age of twenty-eight, wife of George Cundiff, Jr., a farmer in that vicinity; Bettie, who died at the age of twenty-one, wife of Ad Cohey, a Casey County farmer; Thomas, who died in infancy; Joshua, a teacher and farmer; Charles, a farmer in Union County; Ruth, wife of Nace Gridle, a farmer in Casey County; and Miss Bula, who graduated from the Liberty High School in 1912.

Eli G. Wesley grew up on a farm, attended rural schools, spent three years in Union College at Barbourville, and for one year pursued the medical course and another year was a student of theology in Grant University at Chattanooga, Tennessee. He left university in 1900.

In 1900, at Somerset, Kentucky, when twenty-five years of age Mr. Wesley was enrolled as a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church. For a year he preached at Gradyville in Adair County, for two years was at West Bend, Powell County, another two years at Foster, Kentucky, and during 1907 filled the pulpit at the Spivy Memorial Church near Chattanooga. He was pastor at Bethel Ridge two years, spent two years at Outon in Webster County and four years at Hartford in Ohio County.

Mr. Wesley was admitted to the Kentucky bar in 1912, and since September, 1915, has been making his name and abilities known and respected as a lawyer engaged in a general civil practice at Liberty. He is now serving his fourth year as county attorney and is carrying on a large and successful practice. As a civic leader he has been a prominent member of the Republican State Committee of Kentucky. His political activities have been extensive, and he has been a member of the Republican State Committee of Kentucky, a delegate to the state convention in 1906 and 1912, and is now serving as a delegate to the state convention of 1918. He is a member of the Liberty Lodge No. 722, F. and A. M., Liberty Tent No. 51, Knights of the Maccabees. He owns considerable real estate in Liberty, including his own home on Hustonville Street.

In 1890, in Casey County, he married Miss Flora McAninch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George W. McAninch now deceased. Her father was a Union soldier in the Civil War. Of their eight children seven have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wesley: Jane, who died at the age of six months; Osa D. and Lula, both students in the high school at Liberty; Malcolm, in the eighth grade of the grammar school; Emmer Gene, a high school girl; Rathmell, Georgia Lee, Cranston, Iby Faith, who are pupils in the grade school; and Paulmer and Carl.
Otis A. Benton
Silas Ashley had a progressive career of changing and improving circumstances leading up to his present responsible duties as sheriff of Casey County. He has lived in the county all his life, and is well known for the prompt and energetic manner in which he has discharged every duty in every position.

Sheriff Ashley was born on a farm twelve miles east of the village of Liberty, the county seat of Pulaski County. His grandfather was Robert Ashley, a native of Virginia and one of the early day farmers of Casey County, where he died in 1896. His wife was Delila Wesley, who also died in Casey County. The father of Sheriff Ashley is S. N. Ashley, who was born in Casey County in 1860, was reared and married here, for a number of years was engaged in the timber business as well as a farmer, and since 1913 has lived on a farm at Eubanks in Pulaski County. He is a republican and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. S. N. Ashley married Sarah Wall, who was born in Casey County. They became the parents of eleven children: Rhoda, wife of William Wesley, a farmer in Pulaski County; Silas; J. H., a merchant at Eubank; Ambrose; Ezra P., who died at the age of seventeen; Collette, wife of H. C. Barber, a farmer in Pulaski County; Ruth, wife of J. F. Barber, a Pulaski County farmer; Mont, Millie, Gladys, and Orena.

Silas Ashley attended some of the rural schools of Casey County and the Normal School at Barbourville, Kentucky. His life to the age of nineteen was spent on his father’s farm, following which he had a variety of experiences as a practical farmer, clerked in stores, was in the timber business and in other occupations. Mr. Ashley has had a practical knowledge of the routine duties of the sheriff’s office of Casey County since 1913. From 1913 to 1917 he was deputy sheriff and in November 13, 1917, December 7, 1918, and June 16, 1916, he was elected sheriff and began his four year term in January, 1918. His home has been at Liberty for a number of years, and he owns one of the choice residences of the city, on Middleburg Street. Both officially and as a private citizen he was a leader in patriotic movements in the county during the World war, Mr. Ashley is a republican, a member of Craftsman Lodge No. 722, F. & A. M., Louisville Consistory of the Scottish Rite, Kosair Temple, A. O. O. S., Bethel Ridge Camp No. 1406, Modern Woodmen of America, and Liberty Tent No. 51, Knights of the Maccabees.

At Huntsville, Tennessee, in 1905, Mr. Ashley married Miss Grace Wesley, daughter of J. B. and Mary (Lyn) Wesley, the latter now deceased. Her father is a farmer and surveyor living at Bethel Ridge in Casey County, and is a former county surveyor. Mr. and Mrs. Ashley have four children, Ina, born in 1899; Mildred, born in 1902; Iona, born in 1914; and Orena, born in 1917.

Otis Allen Benton. The present efficient sheriff of Henderson County, Otis Allen Benton, was formerly the clerk of the county, having been given that office in 1913, and during the period of his incumbency rendered the people of his section of the state the kind of service that brings forth commendatory remarks and serves to renew public confidence. Prior to entering upon his official career he had been engaged in several lines of activity in which he had made numerous friends and established himself firmly in the esteem of the general public, and the faith which the voters placed in his integrity and ability has been vindicated by the manner in which he has discharged the responsibilities of his important offices.

Mr. Benton was born March 10, 1882, in Henderson County, Kentucky, the eldest in a family of seven children born to William Tell and Lura (Walden) Benton. His father was born at Sullivan, Indiana, a son of William and Minerva (Walls) Benton, the former of whom was born in North Carolina, of English and Welsh lineage, while the latter on the paternal side came of Scotch ancestry and on the maternal side was of one-quarter Indian blood. William Tell Benton came to Henderson County during the Civil war, when about ten years of age, and here met and married Lura Walden, a native of Henderson County and a daughter of Harry and Sally (Smith) Walden. For a number of years he was engaged in the homestead and following a thriving measure of success, but is now retired from active pursuits and makes his residence at Henderson, where he has a comfortable home.

Otis Allen Benton passed his boyhood on the home farm and received his early education in the country schools, following which he pursued a course at the Agricultural and Mechanical College, Lexington, Kentucky, and further prepared himself by a business course at Evansville, Indiana. He began his career as a traveling representative for a wholesale house, and after pursuing this vocation for six years settled at Henderson and for four years was engaged in the livery and live stock business. In these connections, as before noted, he became well and favorably known to the people as a young man of energy, enterprise, intelligence and integrity, qualities which made him peculiarly fitted for the office of county clerk, to which he was first elected in 1913. During the first four years of his occupancy of that post he discharged his duties in such a capable manner that he again became the nominee in 1917 and was duly elected by a handsome majority. Mr. Benton was nominated for county sheriff of Henderson County, at the Democratic Primary August 6, 1921, and won the election by a large majority. He has always been a staunch democrat. He is widely known in fraternal circles, being a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine, also a member of the Eastern Star, Knights of Pythias, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Loyal Order of Moose, Woodmen of the World and Modern Woodmen of America. His religious faith is that of the Baptist Church.

On April 30, 1907, Mr. Benton was united in marriage with Miss Nancy America Robertson, daughter of Leonard A. Robertson, of Henderson County, and two children have been born to them: Otis Allen, Jr., and Lura May.

Harry Hicks is a prosperous and enterprising young farmer of Harrison County, and is giving a capable management to his place of large acreage and complete equipment six miles south of Cynthia.

The house in which he lives today is close to his birthplace, where he was born May 5, 1884, a son of James J. and Susan (Patton) Hicks. His parents were also born in Harrison County, his father in 1850 and his mother in January, 1852. They were reared and educated here, and after their marriage settled on the old homestead, where the mother is still living. The father died in 1891, at the age of forty-one. There were nine children: Arthur, of Cynthia; Miss Ida; Edwin L., of Cynthia; Calvin, whose home is in California; Anna, deceased; Preston, a Harrison County farmer; Harry; Bessie, who lives with her brother Harry; and Florence, wife of Augustus Price of Lexington.

Harry Hicks while growing up on the old farm attended the common schools, and since school days his work has been entirely identified with the Hicks farm of 296 acres. He and his sister Ida also own another farm of sixty-seven acres. Mr. Hicks is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Mount Pleasant and is a democrat.

J. Boyle Stone. Attorneys who have been engaged in the steady practice of law for half a century are not numerous in Kentucky. One of them is J. Boyle Stone of Liberty, who has been a member of the bar of Casey
Mr. McClure is a native of Lincoln County, born on a farm four miles west of Moreland June 14, 1894. He represents the fourth generation of the family in Kentucky. His great-grandfather lived for many years on a farm in Casey County, where he died. The grandfather, Matt McClure, was born in 1830 and also followed farming, and died in Casey County in 1920. Carroll Kendrick McClure, father of the Moreland branch, was born in 1860, and died in 1910, there on a farm, taught school in early life and in the early '90s moved to a farm where his son was born four miles west of Moreland, and later to a farm near Hustonville. He moved his home to Moreland in 1907 and from 1910 to 1917, a period of sixteen years, he did daily duty as a rural mail carrier. Since 1917 his home has been at Somerset, where he is teacher of a rural school. Politically he is a republican and an active member of the Christian Church. He is a charter member of Moreland Camp No. 11663, Modern Woodmen of America. Carroll K. McClure married Martha Hale, who was born in Pulaski County in 1877. They have four children: Mabel, wife of John Back, a farmer at Danville, Kentucky; John E.; Catharine, in the offices of the Western Union Telegraph Company at Danville; and Mary. John Emmons McClure attended the rural schools of Lincoln County and as a pupil entered the senior year of the Hustonville High School. Leaving school in 1910, he was for several years a telegraph operator and railroad agent for the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railroad Company. He also did some farming on his own account. In March, 1918, he became connected with the Bank of Moreland as a clerk, and rapidly mastered additional responsibilities and acquired a knowledge of banking, so that he was chosen cashier in June, 1918. He was active through the bank and as a private citizen in behalf of the financial drives for patriotic purposes in the World war. He is one of the public spirited citizens of Moreland. Politically he votes as a republican, as a member of the Christian Church, and is clerk of Moreland Camp No. 11663, Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. McClure owns a modern home on Main Street. He married in January, 1916, at Oneida, Tennessee, Miss Fannie Myers, daughter of Z. L. and Flora Myers, residents for a number of years at Georgetown, Kentucky, where her father is local agent for the Southern Railroad Company and police judge. Mrs. McClure completed her education in the high school at Georgetown. They have one daughter, Evelyn, born December 6, 1916.

William Thomas Murphy, M. D. A physician and banker at Hustonville, Doctor Murphy has had a busy professional career in that section of Kentucky for almost thirty years. His people have lived in Casey County for considerably more than a century, and it was in that county that Doctor Murphy grew up and handled an extensive country practice before moving to Hustonville. He was born on a farm ten miles west of Hustonville, in Casey County, January 16, 1866. The founder of the family in Casey County was his great-grandfather, a native of Virginia. His grandfather, Elkins Murphy, was born in Casey County in 1805. He lived there and developed some extensive interests as a farmer. He was a strong Union sympathizer, and about the close of the Civil war a band of southern guerrillas captured him on his farm and, taking him to Cumberland Gap, hanged him. Elkins Murphy married Fannie Spragens, a life-long resident of Casey County, where she was born in 1810 and died in 1881.

The father of Doctor Murphy was the late H. T. Murphy, a well remembered citizen of Casey County, where he spent many years diligently occupied with his farm and community interests. He served in the Home Guards during the Civil war, always voted as a republican, and was one of the leading members of the Baptist Church. He was born in 1835 and died in 1906. His wife died in 1892. He was the father of seven children, all born in Marion County in 1845 and died in Casey County in 1910. They had two sons, William T. and George Fletcher. Both became physicians, the younger graduating from the Louisville Medical School and died in Casey County six months after receiving his diploma, when only twenty-two years of age.

William Thomas Murphy acquired a good public school education in Casey County, attending the grade school at Rocky Ford. He studied medicine in the Louisville Medical School and practiced in a remote part of the county, where he had to travel in the winter. He was the first physician to practice in the region, and his patients included the families of the settlers in the area. He was known for his skill in treating infectious diseases, and his patients were grateful for the care he provided.

Doctor Murphy has for several years been a director and is vice president of the Peoples Bank of Hustonville. He was associated with all the local war work, and has received much material prosperity, represented by his ownership of one of the modern homes of Hustonville, two store buildings on Main Street, and other interests. He is a Republican, a member of the Baptist Church, and is affiliated with the Republican party.

In Casey County in 1884 Doctor Murphy married Miss Fannie Ellis. Her father, George D. Ellis, was a farmer, and her mother, Helen (Cunningham) Ellis, is still living. Doctor Murphy lost his wife in 1900. Three children survive her: Georgia, wife of Melvin Campbell, an insurance agent in Hustonville; Lydia, wife of Cleaver Brown, a Casey County farmer; and Ira, who owns and operates a public garage at Hustonville. In 1902, at Wilmore, Kentucky, Doctor Murphy married Mrs. Lilie (Sams) Flanagan, who died November 7, 1920. Her parents, J. M. and Elizabeth (Dobbs) Sams, reside at Danville, Kentucky. By his second marriage Doctor Murphy has three children, all in school at Hustonville, the oldest in high school; Lydia, born in 1904, Margaret, born in 1906, and Lucile, born in 1908.

In 1884 Doctor Murphy married Mary Eleanor Peavyhouse, who was a teacher in the public schools of Hustonville.

B. B. King With a life record of more than four score years to his credit, B. B. King has played many parts and has played them all well, from service to the Union during the Civil war, through growing business interests in different sections of Kentucky, and for many years as a factor in agriculture and livestock and other affairs in Lincoln County. Mr. King is president of the Bank of Moreland, where he resides.

He was born in Madison County, Kentucky, January 29, 1839. His grandfather, John Louis King, came from Ireland and spent the rest of his life as a Virginia planter. He married Nancy Jane Pence, a native of Holland. Their son, William King, was born in Virginia in 1783, soon after the close of the Revolutionary war. He was a farmer in his native state until he was twenty-six, and in 1800 identified himself with the pioneer district of Kentucky in Madison County, where he married and where he followed his trade as a cooper and also farmed. For four years he had his home and work at Indianapolis, Indiana, then returned to Madison County, also lived in Garrard County, and from 1847 until his death in 1863 lived on and operated a farm in Lincoln County. He was an old-line Whig in politics.

William King married Annie Baker, who was born in Madison County, Kentucky, in 1790, and died at Stanford, Lincoln County. They became the parents of fifteen children. The oldest, John, was the husband of Rhoda Hilton, a farmer, and both died in Lincoln County; Rhoda Ellen had two husbands, Richard Whittaker and John Gray, the first a shoemaker and the latter a farmer, and all are now deceased; Charles Alfred was a Lincoln County farmer; Mary, living at Stanford, is the widow of Peter Straub, a cooper, and B. B. King is the fifth in the family; George Washington died while a Union soldier in the Civil war; and William Riley died after her husband had retired, first a farmer and cooper, and living at Moreland.

B. B. King was about eight years of age when his father moved to a farm in Lincoln County, and most of his education was acquired in common schools there. From the age of eighteen until the beginning of the Civil war he engaged in the freighting business. During the war he was in the quartermaster's department and had charge of Government wagon trains. For thirty-five years he had his principal business headquarters at Parksville in Boyle County, where he operated a small country store and was a timber dealer on an extensive scale. During the early '80s he acquired a farm and other interests in Lincoln County and built up a large business as a dealer in livestock, specializing in the handling of jacks and mules. He sold his farm in 1910, but still keeps in touch with rural affairs, since his home is at the edge of Moreland, within a stone's throw of a modern town home with sixteen acres of land adjoining.

The Bank of Moreland was established and opened for business June 2, 1909, under a state charter. Mr. King, the late Charles Wilhoit and other local citizens were primarily interested in starting the institution, which has performed many creditable services as a financial bulwark of the community. Mr. King has been president from the beginning, while R. F. Steele is vice president and J. C. McClure, cashier. The bank has a capital of $15,000, surplus and profits of $4,500, and deposits of about $100,000.

Mr. King served as marshal of the Town of Parksville for several years. In November, 1893, he was elected to the Legislature from Lincoln County, and during the session of 1894 and the special session of 1895 carefully looked after the interests of his constituency. He is a Republican, an elder in the Christian Church, and a member of Hustonville Lodge No. 117, Knights of the Maccabees, in Casey County, and Hustonville Lodge No. 184, F. and A. M.

In 1884, Mr. King married Miss Lizzie Berry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Berry. Her father was an old time cabinet maker and undertaker. Of the nine children born to Mr. and Mrs. King, the oldest was W. B. King, who died at Pineville, Kentucky, at the age of forty-five. He was postmaster, coal operator, timber dealer and a man of extensive affairs in his section of the state. The second of the family, Addie, living at Paris, Kentucky, is the widow of Elliott Fishback, who was a railroad man. Mary Jane is the wife of George Pruitt, an undertaker, furniture dealer and farmer at Moreland. Rhoda Ellen is the wife of J. O. McAllister, a well known physician of Moreland. Mr. and Mrs. King married a daughter of Zach Alkin, who is in the electrical supply business at Mobile, Alabama. Dora Pearl is the wife of Joseph Cox, a coal operator at Bowling Green. Margaret, living with her father, is the widow of the late Charles W. Wilhoit, one of the founders of the Bank of Moreland. Ida is the wife of W. G. Montgomery, pastor of the Christian Church at Somerset, Kentucky. The youngest child of Mr. King was John Edward King, a dentist by profession. He joined the Dental
C. W. Ransler is one of the active business leaders at Walton, is secretary of the Walton Bank & Trust Company, for several years has been an executive officer in local tobacco warehouse companies, and has much civic work to his credit, his chief interest being in the public schools.

Mr. Ransler was born at Walton April 21, 1885. His grandfather, George Ransler, born in Germany in 1810, spent his active life as an American, and after some years of farming in Hamilton County, Ohio, moved to Walton in 1860, and remained identified with the agricultural business of that community until his death in 1902. His son, William Ransler, was born in Cincinnati October 15, 1853, and since 1860 has lived at Walton. For many years he was prominent in the tobacco business and also as a general contractor, but since 1910 has lived retired. He is a former member of the Walton School Board, is an elder in the Christian Church, and a Democrat in politics. He married Mary Kraus, who was born at Covington in 1858.

C. W. Ransler, only child of his parents, was reared and educated at Walton, graduating from high school in 1904, and since then has been identified with an increasing scale of importance in retail and wholesale business and interests. For four years after leaving high school he was assistant cashier of the Walton Bank & Trust Company. For about two years he traveled, selling stock for a tobacco company. He then entered the tobacco business, assisting in organizing the Farmers' Loose Leaf Tobacco Warehouse of Walton and served as its cashier and assistant manager until January, 1921, since which time he has been cashier of the Walton Loose Leaf Tobacco Warehouse Company. He owns one of the tobacco warehouses of Walton. Besides his interest in the tobacco business he gives much of his time to his duties as a director and secretary of the Walton Bank & Trust Company. Mr. Ransler was chairman of all Walton committees for the sale of bonds, stamps and the raising of funds for other patriotic purposes during the war. He is a Democrat in politics. He has been a member of the Walton Board of Education for ten years and for the past two years has been chairman of the board and has sought in every possible way to improve the school facilities of the locality. In April, 1921, he engaged in the real estate business in Cincinnati, Ohio, but still resides at Walton.

December 16, 1909, at Covington, he married Miss Katherine Bentz, daughter of Frank and Kate (Baker) Bentz, residents of Walton. Her father was for many years connected with the J. D. Mayhing Manufacturing Company, but is now retired. Mrs. Ransler is a graduate of the Walton High School with the class of 1905.

Benjamin F. Kelly is one of the foremost business men of Evarts, whose grandfather, Judge Jonathan Kelly, founded the family in this section of Kentucky. Judge Kelly was of far back Irish ancestry and was born in Virginia. He came early to Harlan County and became the father of ten children. Wright Kelly has been a distinguished citizen of the State of Kentucky for many years. He was born in Harlan County March 13, 1837, and prior to 1893 was engaged in agricultural pursuits near Shields in this county. He was a great bear hunter as a young man. In the above year he removed to Garrard County, where he was interested in stock trading until 1901, when he retired from business and moved to Madison County, but in 1918 returned to Harlan County and now resides with his son at Evarts. For many years he was very active in republican political circles, and served as a member of the State Legislature during the sessions of 1885 and 1886, representing the Ninety-eighth Legislative District of Kentucky, which comprises Harlan, Bell, Perry and Leslie counties. So ably did he acquitted himself that in 1894 he was again elected to fill the unexpired term of the deceased representative of Garrard County, and again made his influence felt in much important legislation. In 1921 he received the nomination on the republican ticket to represent Harlan and Leslie counties in the Legislature, without opposition, which is so equivalent to his election last November. He is now past eighty-three years of age bright and active as most men at sixty years. He has always led a temperate life, never drinking liquor or tobacco. From youth he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and since then has built several churches and been the generous supporter of others. During the war between the states he served as a member of the State Militia.

Wright Kelly was married in Harlan County to Hannah Lewis, who was born at Poor Fork, Harlan County, in 1835, and was of English and Scotch blood.

In addition to B. F., they had the following children: John W., who died at Xlendan, Kansas June 20, 1918, was a farmer and cattle trader and owned and operated a grain elevator; Mary E., who is the wife of David Creech, of Evarts, a farmer and owner of large tracts of coal land; Nancy, who died in 1889, in Harlan County, Kentucky, was the wife of Isaiah Metcalfe, a farmer in Garrard County; Martha, who died in Harlan County in 1893, was the wife of Lemuel Ball, a carpenter at Ages; A. Z., who died from an attack of influenza at Shields, Harlan County, October 26, 1918, was a widely known cattle trader and farmer; J. S., who was interested in gold and silver mining in Utah some thirty years ago; B. M., who is a farmer near Logan, Oklahoma; Araminta, who is the wife of William West, a farmer in Garrard County; and Laura, who has been the wife of Rev. C. A. Van Winkle, pastor of a Christian Church in Garrard County.

B. F. Kelly attended the country schools in boyhood, later Williamsburg Academy and still later the Kentucky State University, where he took a commercial course and was graduated in 1890. Long before that, however, he had taught school in Harlan County, spending five years in all in the schoolroom, but after leaving the university he took up the mercantile business near Evarts.

In 1891 he first entered in the mercantile business, and still owns the leading general store at Evarts and owns also the principal department store at Black Mountain, Kentucky, which he established in 1909. From the beginning of his business career he has been a successful trader in coal and timber lands, and is vice president, a director and heavy stockholder in the Myers-Sargent Lumber & Supply Company of Evarts. Mr. Kelly is the owner of a large amount of valuable real estate. In addition to his 800 acres of coal and timber lands in Harlan County, and a farm in Beaver County, Oklahoma, he owns both of his store buildings, a dwelling at Black Mountain and other realty there, and a half section of land just outside of and contiguous to his old farm, situated one half mile east of Evarts. His ability as a business man has long been recognized, and his judgment is often consulted by his fellow citizens in matters concerning their own investments and in regard to measures of civic importance.

In 1891, near Evarts, Kentucky, Mr. Kelly married Miss Bettie Farley, a daughter of John G. and Jane (Sergent) Farley, the former of whom died on his farm near Black Mountain, where Mrs. Farley still resides. Mrs. Kelly died at Evarts, February 18, 1910, leaving five children and also a wide circle of friends to mourn her loss. She was an estimable lady, widely known in social and church circles and universally beloved. The children are as follows: Olifie, who lives with her father; Cora E., who is the wife of Dr. Millard Myers, a veterinary surgeon and president of the Myers-Sargent Lumber & Supply Company; Lillie M., who is the wife of John E. Atkins, an attorney and the manager of a chain of stores, residing at Knoxville, Tennessee; Roy M., born September 11, 1890, who was graduated from the Maryville Preparatory School, volunteered for service in the World war and was assigned to the S. A. T. C. at Evarts, is a member of the senior class in Emory and Henry College at Emory, Virginia; and Ray, who was born January 27, 1906, is a student in the Barbourville High School.

In politics Mr. Kelly is a decided republican and a hearty supporter of his party and its principles and policies.

J. W. Hoskins has been cashier of the Peoples Bank of Hustonville since it was founded, and has taken a very influential part in other business and civic activities of that community. Mr. Hoskins for many years was a leader in the educational affairs of Casey County, and has also been a farmer. His has been a busy life record and represents a usefulness and service in every capacity.

He was born on a farm in Casey County, ten miles west of Hustonville, November 21, 1850. His grandfather, John Hoskins, spent nearly all his life in Marion County, was active in democratic politics and for several years was county jailor. He died at Lebanon. His wife was a Miss Green, a life-long resident of Marion County. Robert Able Hoskins, father of the Hustonville cashier, was born in Marion County in 1810, was a blacksmith and then a farmer and at that time he was loaded with land and a comfortable fortune. Mary Gerhart, who was born near Bradfordsville in 1830 and is now living, at the age of eighty-two, in Hustonville. She became the mother of two children, J. W. Hoskins and Robert, but the latter died in infancy.

J. W. Hoskins grew up at Bradfordsville, where he had a grammar and high school education. He began teaching when only seventeen, and for eighteen years managed to combine farm work and teaching. His work was in the rural schools of Casey County. He remained in that county operating a farm until 1906, in which year he helped establish the Peoples Bank of Hustonville, and has since been at his post of duty as its cashier. This bank, housed in a modern brick structure on Main Street, is a highly prosperous institution with a capital of $25,000, surplus and profits of $9,000, and deposits averaging $150,000. The officers of the bank are W. O. Speed, president, and Dr. W. T. Murphy, vice president.

Mr. Hoskins closed his career as an educator in the office of superintendent of schools of Casey County, holding that position from 1890 to 1894. He is president of the Hustonville Light and Power Company, is a deacon and treasurer of the Baptist Church, votes as a democrat, is a member of Hustonville Lodge No. 184, P. and A. M., Danville Chapter, R. A. M., and Danville Commandry, K. of P. He has helped manage the entire county for the sale of Liberty Bonds and assisted in other patriotic drives. He is one of the very attractive homes of Hustonville. On April 6, 1881, in Casey County, he married Miss Bettie Prewitt, daughter of Prior and Nancy (Cunningham) Prewitt. Her parents were farming people. Mr. and Mrs. Hoskins have an adopted daughter, Mattie, now attending the grade schools of Hustonville.

Edward Alcorn, M. D. Fifty-four years of continuous and faithful service in the profession of medicine and surgery at Hustonville give Doctor Alcorn the distinction of being the oldest active member of the medical fraternity in Lincoln County. While his profession has been the main work of his life, Doctor Alcorn has found many other interests, particularly as a banker, and for thirty-five years has been president of the National Bank of Hustonville.

The Alcorns have been in Lincoln County for considerably more than a century. As a family they were Scotch-Irish people, coming from the North of Ireland to Virginia in Colonial times. Doctor Alcorn's grandfather, James Lusk Alcorn, moved from Virginia to Lincoln County, Kentucky, when a young man, was married there to Amelia Johnson, a native of the county, and lived out his life in that section of Eastern Kentucky as a planter, farmer and slave holder. For more than eighty years Lincoln County has been represented in the medical profession by the Alcorn family. Doctor Alcorn's father was Dr. David J. Alcorn, who was born in Lincoln County in 1815 and graduated in 1838 from the Medical School of the University of Kentucky. Practically his entire life was spent on the farm and homestead east of Hustonville, where his son Edward Alcorn was born. He owned 500 acres there, and while he practiced medicine for thirty years or more he also supervised his country estate and prior to the war was a slave labor owner and operator. Nevertheless he has been a firm and active proponent of the Union, and was a Union sympathizer during the Civil war. In politics he was a follower of George D. Prentice, an old-line Whig and later a democrat. Dr. David Alcorn died at the old homestead in 1866. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity. His wife was Lucy Jane Masterson, who was born in Lincoln County, within a mile of the home where she spent her married life. She was the mother of five children, all now deceased except Dr. Edward Alcorn and his sister Chloe. Mary, the oldest, became the wife of J. W. Givens, a Lincoln is the wife of Alex Hubbell, an official of the Ford Motor Company living at Bay City, Michigan. The only son is John G. Carlisle Alcorn, who was in training in the National Army for a year, being in camp at Houston, Texas, and later at Camp Taylor, Louisville. He was a non-commissioned officer. He is now a resident of Lexington, Missouri, being superintendent for the American Crosscutting Company.

WILLIAM JEFFERSON CHILDRESS, M.D. The work of Doctor Childress as a physician and surgeon has been carried on for over twenty years, half of that time at Hustonville in Lincoln County. He is one of the able representatives of the profession in Eastern Kentucky and belongs to one of the old and solid families of that section of the state.

He was born in Rockcastle County, February 26, 1874. His paternal ancestors were Scotch-Irish people who settled in Virginia in Colonial times. His grand father was a native of North Carolina and subsequently took his family to Scott County in Western Virginia, where he lived on a plantation until his death. His wife was a Miss Campbell, a native of North Carolina, who also died in Scott County. John C. Childress, father of Doctor Childress, was born in North Carolina in 1838, began up his home in Virginia, where he married and where he farmed until 1870, when he moved to Rockcastle County, Kentucky. He had a farm under cultivation and a modern home in Rockcastle County the rest of his life, where he died in January, 1908. During the war between the states he was in the Confederate Army, was captured during the campaign in Tennessee, and for eighteen months was in the Federal prison at Rock Island, Illinois, being released after the surrender of Lee. One of the strongest ties of his life was his membership in the Baptist Church. He voted as a democrat and was a member of the Masonic fraternity. John C. Childress married Sarah Lovell, who was born in Lee County, Virginia, in 1847, was reared and married in Scott County and died in Rockcastle County, Kentucky, in 1901. They had a large family of children, a brief record being as follows: Charles P., a farmer near Meeker, Oklahoma; Dona, wife of J. S. Langford, high sheriff of Rockcastle County, living at Mount Vernon; Cordelia, who died at the age of thirteen; Lucretia, who died in Rockcastle County in 1905, wife of James McHargue, a farmer in that county; William Jefferson, fifth in age; Miss Ida, who died in 1933; Minnie, of Mount Vernon, widow of Bud Chester, a Rockcastle County farmer; Elizabeth, a bridge carpenter and was accidentally killed while building a bridge in 1906 in Rockcastle County; Rosa is the wife of Joseph Woods, an Oklahoma farmer; George W. has been with the American Cuming factory for fourteen years, is head of its clerical department, and lives at Hamilton, Ohio; Joseph is train dispatcher for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad at Louisville; Robert is locomotive fireman with home at Richmond, Kentucky; and Margie, the thirteenth and youngest of the family, is unmarried and lives with her brother Charles.

William Jefferson Childress spent his boyhood on his father's farm in Rockcastle County. He attended country schools there, spent two years at the College Institute at Mount Vernon, and in 1900 received his medical diploma from the Hospital College of Medicine at Charleston, West Virginia. He continued his general practice, and during 1908 he pursued post-graduate work in operative surgery in the Chicago Polyclinic. For the first ten years after his graduation he practiced at Livingston in Rockcastle County, and since 1910 has had a general practice in medicine and surgery at Hustonville. He is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations. He did his work with the various local organizations during the World War. Other noteworthy interests of his life include his member in the City Council of Hustonville, his affiliation as a democrat in politics, with the Baptist Church, with Hustonville Lodge No. 184, F. & A. M., Danville Chapter, R. A. M., Danville Commandery, K. T. His modern home and offices are on Danville Avenue.

In March, 1901, in his native county, he married Miss Fannie McFerron. Her parents, A. H. and Susan (Thompson) McFerron, are retired farmers now living at Fort Myer, Florida. Mrs. Childress attended school at Williamsburg and Mount Vernon. To their marriage have been born four children: Vernon B., born January 24, 1902; Norine, born October 28, 1903, and Harold, born August 12, 1905, both students in the Hustonville High School; and Rosalind, born March 31, 1909, attending the grammar school.

L. IRVIN FARMER, M. D., has practiced medicine at Somerset over ten years, and his activities have brought him professional distinction in the county where he was born and where practically all his life has been passed. The Farmer family came out of Ireland and settled in North Carolina about the time of the Revolutionary war. In that state was born his grandfather, John Farmer, in 1809. On moving to Kentucky he settled in Pulaski County, and lived there on a farm until his death in 1862. His son, William Farmer, was born in Pulaski County in 1843, and though now nearly four-score years of age is still concerned with his interests as a farmer. He is a veteran Union soldier, having been in the Forty-ninth Kentucky Infantry during the last eighteen months of the war. He has steadily voted as a republican from the time of the rebellion, and is a member of the Christian Church. William Farmer married Martha C. Haynes, who was born in Pulaski County in 1853. They are the parents of a large family of twelve children: Neal, a timber dealer and farmer in Arkansas; Thomas, a merchant at Somerset, Kentucky; Dr. L. Irvin; Lee B., a merchant at Somerset; Mannie, wife of Sam Stewart, a Pulaski County farmer; Lizzie and Lula, both at home; Andrew, a farmer in Pulaski County; Will, a merchant at Somerset; Bill, of Pulaski County; William C., Charles and Sherman, the two latter twin brothers, and all farmers in Pulaski County.

L. Irvin Farmer was born in Pulaski County December 14, 1875. He acquired a rural school education and lived on his father's farm until he was twenty-one, and then for about a year was associated with some of the lumber manufacturing interests in Pulaski and adjoining counties. From his connection with this business he paid his way through college and university. In September, 1904, he began his studies in the Southwestern Homeopathic College at Louisville, graduated in 1908, and in 1908-09 was an intern in the City Hospital of Louisville. He pursued a post graduate course at Herring Medical College in Chicago during 1911-12. All of his active work and practice as a physician has been done at Somerset, and his offices are in the Farmers National Bank Building. Doctor Farmer is a member of the Odd Fellows, Elks and American Medical associations, is a director of the Farmers National Bank and has his offices in the Bank Building. He has been prospered in all his affairs and owns considerable local real estate, including a modern home on Jasper Street and other property at Ferguson. Doctor Farmer is a republican, is affiliated with Somerset Lodge No. 111, F. and A. M., Somerset Lodge No. 238, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Crescent Lodge No. 69, Knights of Pythias, Somerset Council No. 193, Junior Order United American Mechanics.
On March 16, 1911, at Somerset, Doctor Farmer married Miss Lizzie Barnes, daughter of James and Polie (Baker) Barnes, the latter now deceased. Her father is a Pulaski County farmer.

Charles Luther Gragg represents a family that has been in Pulaski County for several generations, and his own career has been such as to make him well known throughout the county. He was formerly a teacher, has for many years been a practical farmer, and in Somerset he has one of the leading offices and organizations devoted to real estate and insurance.

Mr. Gragg was born near Somerset, December 27, 1855. The family was established in South Central Kentucky by his great-grandfather, who came from Virginia. His grandfather, James Gragg, began farming and spent most of his life as a farmer in Pulaski County. He also served as sheriff, was a republican in politics and died at his home near Somerset when thirty-five years of age. Henry P. Gragg, father of Charles L., was born near Somerset in Pulaski County in 1854, and lived in that locality all his life. He carried on a prosperous and extensive business as a farmer. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Henry P. Gragg, who died at his home near Somerset in 1915, married Ida K. Gragg, of another family of the same name. She is living at Somerset and was born near the county seat of Pulaski County in 1862. Of her three children Ruth, the oldest, died in infancy, and the other two are Charles L. and Arthur, the latter a merchant at Ruth in Pulaski County.

Charles L. Gragg was educated in the rural schools of his native county, attended Berea College at Berea for one year and for two years was a student in the Eastern State Normal School at Richmond. While still acquiring his higher education in college he began teaching in the country districts of Pulaski County, and continued that work altogether for eight years. During four years of that time he also conducted a profitable enterprise on his farm in ginseng culture. Since 1915 his chief time and energies have been devoted to real estate and insurance, with offices in the Citizens National Bank Building at Somerset. He also owns a farm of 156 acres three miles east of Somerset, and lives there and gives active supervision to crops and livestock. The entire farm is modernly equipped, and there are two tenant houses.

Mr. Gragg was one of the leaders in Pulaski County in carrying on patriotic work during the war. He was secretary and treasurer of the County Council of Defense, one of the “Four Minute” speakers, and worked and contributed to the success of every campaign. He is a republican, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and superintendent of the Sunday School. In 1917, at Somerset, he married Miss Nora Nunnelley, daughter of W. G. and Pelina (Gragg) Nunnelley. Her mother died at Somerset in September, 1920, and her father is owner of one of the large farms near that city, a farm widely known for its herd of thoroughbred cattle. Mrs. Gragg is a graduate of the Somerset High School.

Joseph G. Hermann, present mayor of the City of Newport, is a civil engineer by profession, was for two terms commissioner of public works at Newport, and the dominating emphasis in his administration as mayor has been laid upon constructive improvements, with results of which the entire community are justly proud.

Joseph Hermann, his father, was born in Germany in 1840, and in 1858, as a youth of eighteen, came to the United States and lived several years, then came to New York City and was connected with the leather manufacturing business. At the beginning of the Civil war he joined the Union Army in a New York regiment of infantry, and not only fought all through that struggle between the states, but served an additional year with the regular army in the West, fighting Indians. Joseph Hermann in 1867 located at Newport, Kentucky, and for many years was successfully engaged in the hotel business in that city. He was republican and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Joseph Hermann, who died at Newport in 1910, married in that city Caroline Blesch, who was born at Newport in 1846 and died in 1910. They were the parents of seven children: Dr. George Joseph, a Newport physician; Caroline, wife of Sam Wright, a carpenter contractor living at Newport; Dr. Edward, also a Newport physician; B. F. Hermann, a druggist at Newport; Ida, wife of John Barr, a commission merchant at Cincinnati but a resident of Newport; Joseph G., Newport mayor; and Mrs. Lillian Kruse, who lives at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where her husband is connected with an addressograph firm.

Joseph G. Hermann was born at Newport April 13, 1886, and began his business and professional career after a thorough and liberal education. He graduated from the Newport High School in 1903, and pursued his studies at the University of Louisville and the University of Cincinnati. In 1917 he was superintendent of the water works department of Newport. In 1911 he received the Master of Civil Engineers degree from the Kentucky State University. From 1912 to 1915, with headquarters at Newport, he was extensively engaged in road contracting and road building.

Mr. Hermann in November, 1915, was elected commissioner of public works of Newport and was re-elected in November, 1917. He served four years, from January 1, 1916, and in November, 1919, was elected mayor, beginning his four year term in January, 1920. He has devoted his time and energies wholeheartedly and with a disinterested public purpose to his duties, and has the satisfaction of seeing Newport the best paved city in Kentucky. Both as a public official and as a private citizen he was active in all war causes in Campbell County, doing committee work for all the various drives. He also trained with the Engineers Reserve and was in readiness for duty but was not called to active service.

Mr. Hermann is a democrat, is a member of Newport Lodge No. 273, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, William Tell Lodge No. 146, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Newport Council No. 21, Junior Order United American Mechanics, Monitor Lodge No. 179, Knights of Pythias, Newport Lodge No. 516, Loyal Order of Moose, and Newport Aerie No. 280, Fraternal Order of Eagles.

Mr. Hermann and family live in a modern home at 642 Nelson Street. He married at Bellevue, Kentucky, in 1915, Miss Beatrice Beyland, daughter of Ferdinand and Clara (Smith) Beyland. Her father was a real estate broker at Bellevue and is now deceased, and her mother resides at Apopka, Florida. Her father was a Union soldier during the Civil war and was afterward prominent in G. A. R. circles in Kentucky, being honored with the office of commander of the state G. A. R. and was an officer in the national organization. Mrs. Hermann is a graduate of the Bellevue High School and finished her education in a college at Maryville, Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Hermann have two children: Betty Joe, born January 23, 1917, and Edward Roberts, born October 17, 1920.

Edward Hermann, M. D. One of Newport’s prominent physicians, Dr. Edward Hermann is a brother of Mayor Hermann of Newport and was born in that city June 10, 1879. He graduated from the Newport
High School in 1897 and from the Miami Medical College, now the Ohio Medical College of Cincinnati, in 1903. Since that year he has been engaged in a general medical and surgical practice at Newport, his home and offices being at 17 East Sixth Street. Doctor Hermann devotes most of his time to his duties as a member of the Medical Advisory Board of the Sixth District, comprising six counties, during the World war. He is now in the eighth year and the third term of his service as a member of the Newport School Board. Doctor Hermann is a Republican, a member of Robert Burns Lodge No. 163, F. and A. M., Newport Camp No. 11435, Modern Woodmen of America, and Newport Lodge No. 273, Benevolent and Protective Order Elks.

In 1905 he married Miss Ottilla Schaefer, daughter of Joseph and Eva (Schilling) Schaefer, both deceased.

Charles B. Candler completed his education between the age of eighteen and nineteen, and almost immediately started in a modest way as a merchant at Somerset. His career is interesting and his success is noteworthy because he has permitted no important deviation from his original plan and object, and for one quarter of a century he has continued in business at Somerset with greatly growing facilities and enlarging scope.

He was born at Greenwood in Pulaski County February 8, 1878. His grandfather, Zachariah T. Candler, was born in Virginia in 1813 but spent practically all of his life at Sandy Bottom, North Carolina, where he cultivated his farm and where he died at the remarkable age of ninety-eight in 1911. He married Miss Susan Adair, of the Daniel Boone family. He was born at Sandy Bottom, Virginia in 1812 and died at Sandy Bottom in 1897. Of their eight children four are still living: Charles B., for whom his nephew, the Somerset merchant, was named, is an extensive rancher at Lewiston, Idaho; Zachariah T., Jr., a retired business man at Corbin, Kentucky; and the two living daughters are Martha and Sarah, both married and both living in North Carolina.

Thomas Jefferson Candler, father of the merchant at Somerset, was born at Sandy Bottom, North Carolina, in 1850 and came to Wayne County, Kentucky, in 1866, when a youth of sixteen. He had already spent two years in the Union Army with the Fourth Kentucky Infantry. He participated in the siege of Knoxville, where he was wounded. Immediately after his marriage he moved to Somerset and helped build the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railroad, and subsequently was proprietor of a hotel there until his death in 1896. He cast his vote as a Republican, was very active in the Methodist Church and a member of Crescent Lodge No. 60, Knights of Pythias. Thomas J. Candler married Margaret Craig, who was born in Wayne County, Kentucky, in 1858, and was only thirteen years of age when she married. She now lives at Versailles, Kentucky. Her father, Marion Craig, was a native of Wayne County, a farmer there, and was ambushed by an unknown party and killed in 1876 at Greenwood. Her mother was Celia Edwards, a native of Wayne County, who died in New York City. Mr. Candler is buried at Somerset. The children of Thomas J. Candler and wife are: Mollie, of Knoxville, Tennessee, widow of Talbert Martin, a lawyer by profession; Charles B.; and Magnolia, wife of George Forth, a prominent lawyer and jurist at Huntington, West Virginia.

Charles B. Candler acquired his early education in the grammar and high schools of Somerset, and during 1897 and 1898 was a student at Kenyon College at Wakefield College at Winchester. After this education he embarked on a very modest capital and practically no experience in a general stock of goods at Somerset, and from year to year has been able to expand and increase the business until it is now the largest wholesale and retail grocery, meat and commission house between Danville, Kentucky, and Knoxville, Tennessee. Mr. Candler besides handling a great volume of trade owns practically all the facilities involved in his business, including a large store building on Mount Vernon Street in Cincinnati which produces and commission house at 35 Walnut Street in Cincinnati and a fruit and vegetable house at 233 East Pearl Street in Cincinnati has invested in much real estate at Somerset, including the modern hotel on Main Street and four two-story dwellings on West Mount Vernon.

Mr. Candler in every way has measured up to the duties of a public spirited and generous citizen, and was particularly helpful in advancing every cause demanding the moral and financial participation and funds in the World war. He is a Republican and a leading supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church and a teacher in its Sunday School. He is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America. In 1908, at Somerset, he married Miss Martha Farmer, daughter of M. L. and Eliza (Jenkins) Farmer. Her parents live on a large plantation and country home twelve miles east of Somerset. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Candler are Margaret Edna, born December 25, 1908, and Celia Jefferson, born August 27, 1913.

Eugene English Hoge is one of those fortunate men who find the sphere for which they are best fitted very early in life, and all his substantial talents and capabilities have been directed in one line, banking. He came to Frankfort a little more than thirty years ago, and at that time began his service in a minor capacity with the State National Bank of Frankfort, when that institution was organized, and is now its president.

Mr. Hoge is of Scotch ancestry. In Scotland the family name was spelled Hogg, and one of the kinsmen was James Hogg, who was born in 1770 and was the distinguished Scotch poet known as the "Ettrick Shepherd." The Frankfort banker's great-grandfather was named James Hoge, and he lived in Virginia. He married Emma Grove. The grandfather, Peter Charles Hoge, was born in Albemarle County, Virginia, in 1809, but spent the greater part of his life at Scottsville, Virginia, where he died July 17, 1876. He was an Elder minister. On March 5, 1829, Rev. Peter C. Hoge married Sarah Kerr, who was born in Virginia October 30, 1810, and died at Scottsville September 10, 1872. They had a large family of thirteen children, whose names and dates of birth are as follows: James William, April 9, 1830; Thomas Preston, July 23, 1831; Sarah Ann, August 24, 1832; Peter Byron, November 14, 1835; Maria Antoinette, June 28, 1837; John Blair, November 13, 1838; Algeron Sidney, August 15, 1840; Mary Jane, June 12, 1843; Charles Eugene, May 5, 1845; Arista, April 5, 1847; Gregory Taylor, August 18, 1849; Ida Irwin, July 23, 1853; and Howard Doddridge, May 8, 1856.

The sixth in this large family was John B. Hoge, who was born in Scottsville, Albemarle County, November 13, 1836, was reared and married at Staunton, Virginia, and for many years was a well-to-do and prosperous retail mercantile merchant at that city. He died during a visit to Frankfort, Kentucky, April 17, 1910. For over thirty years he served as a deacon in the Baptist Church, and was a stanch democrat in politics. John B. Hoge married Fannie Jordan on January 8, 1863. She was born in Rockbridge County, Virginia, in 1844, and is now living with her son Eugene at Frankfort. She is the mother of ten children, all living, and all well established in life, as follows: William H., an hosiery merchant at Staunton; Charles W., mayor of Staunton; John Manley, an electrician at Staunton; Emma Elizabeth, wife of Stuart Webb, who is in the advertising business at Baltimore, Maryland; H. Jordan, secre
High School in 1897 and from the Miami Medical College, now the Ohio Medical College of Cincinnati, in 1903. Since that year he has been engaged in a general medical and surgical practice at Newport, his home and offices being at 17 East Sixth Street. Doctor Hermann devoted much of his time to his duties as a member of the Medicine Examining Board of the Sixth District, comprising six counties, during the World War. He is now in the eighth year and the third term of his service as a member of the Newport School Board. Doctor Hermann is a republican, a member of Robert Burns Lodge No. 163, F. and A. M., Newport Camp No. 11435, Modern Woodmen of America, and Newport Lodge No. 273, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In 1905 he married Miss Otilia Schaefer, daughter of Joseph and Eva (Schilling) Schaefer, both deceased.

His career is interesting and his success is noteworthy because he has permitted no important deviation from his original plan and object, and for a quarter of a century he has continued in business at Somerset with greatly growing facilities and enlarging scope.

He was born at Greenwood in Pulaski County February 8, 1878. His grandfather, Zachariah T. Candler, was born in Virginia in 1813, but spent practically all his life at Sandy Bottom, North Carolina, where he cultivated his farm and where he died at the remarkable age of ninety-eight, in 1911. He married a Miss Boone, of the Daniel Boone family. She was born in Virginia in 1821 and died at Sandy Bottom in 1867. Of their eight children four are still living: Charles B., for whom his nephew, the Somerset merchant, is named, is an extensive rancher at Lewiston, Idaho; Zachariah T., Jr., a retired business man at Corbin, Kentucky; and the two living daughters are Martha and Sarah, both married and both living in North Carolina.

Thomas Jefferson Candler, father of the merchant at Somerset, was born at Sandy Bottom, North Carolina, in 1830, and came to Wayne County before he was one year old. He had already spent two years in the Union Army with the Fourth Kentucky Infantry. He participated in the siege of Knoxville, where he was wounded. Immediately after his marriage he moved to Somerset and helped build the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railroad, and subsequently was proprietor of a hotel there until his death in 1906. He cast his vote as a republican, was very active in the Methodist Church and a member of Crescent Lodge No. 60, Knights of Pythias. Thomas J. Candler married Margaret Craig, who was born in Wayne County, Kentucky, in 1858, and was only thirteen years of age when she married. She now lives at Versailles, Kentucky. Her father, Marion Craig, was a native of Wayne County, a farmer there, and was ambushed by an unknown party and killed in 1876 at Greenwood. Her mother was Celia Edwards, a native of Wayne County, who died in New York City and is buried in the Trailer Church. The Candler and wife are: Mollie, of Knoxville, Tennessee, widow of Talbert Martin, a lawyerman at Somerset; Charles B.; and Magnolia, wife of George Forth, a prominent lawyer and jurist at Huntington, West Virginia.

Charles B. Candler acquired his early education in the grammar and high schools of Somerset, and during 1869-70 took a business course in the Kentucky Wesleyan College. During the following year he embarked a very modest capital and practically no experience in a general stock of goods at Somerset, and from year to year has been able to expand and increase the business until it is now the largest wholesale and retail grocery, meat and commission house between Danville, Kentucky, and Knoxville, Tennessee. Mr. Candler besides handling a great volume of trade owns practically all the facilities involved in his business, including a large store building on Mount Vernon Street, a produce and commission house at 35 Walnut Street, Cincinnati, and a fruit and vegetable house at 233 East Pearl Street, Cincinnati. He has invested in much real estate at Somerset, including the modern hotel on Main Street and four two-story dwellings on West Mount Vernon.

Mr. Candler in every way has measured up to the duties of a public spirited and generous citizen, and was particularly helpful in advancing every cause demanding his personal participation and funds in the World War. He is a republican, is a leading supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a Sunday school teacher in its Sunday School. He is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America. In 1908, at Somerset, he married Miss Martha Farmer, daughter of M. L. and Eliza (Jenkins) Farmer. Her parents live on a large plantation and country home twelve miles east of Somerset. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Candler are Margaret Edna, born December 25, 1908, and Celia Jefferson, born August 27, 1913.

Eugene English Hoge is one of those fortunate men who find the sphere for which they are best fitted very early in life, and all his substantial talents and capabilities have been directed in one line, banking. He came to Frankfort a little more than thirty years ago, and at that time began his service in a minor capacity with the State National Bank of Frankfort, when that institution was organized, and is now its president. Mr. Hoge is of Scotch ancestry. In Scotland the family name was spelled Hogg, and one of the kinsmen was James Hogg, who was born in 1770 and was the distinguished Scotch poet known as the "Ettrick Shepherd." The Frankfort banker's great-grandfather was named James Hoge, and he lived in Virginia. He married Emma Grove. The grandfather, Peter Charles Hoge, was born in Albemarle County, Virginia, in 1809, but spent the greater part of his life at Scottsville, Virginia, where he died September 17, 1876. He was a Baptist minister. On March 5, 1829, Rev. Peter Hoge married Sarah Kerr, who was born in Virginia October 30, 1810, and died at Scottsville September 10, 1872. They had a large family of thirteen children, whose names and dates of birth are as follows: James Williams, April 9, 1830; Thomas Preston, July 23, 1831; Sarah Ann, August 24, 1832; Peter Byron, November 14, 1835; Maria Antoine, June 28, 1837; John Blair, November 13, 1838; Algerion Sidney, August 15, 1840; Mary Jane, June 12, 1843; Charles Eugene, May 5, 1845; Arista, April 5, 1847; Gregory Taylor, August 5, 1849; Ida Irwin, July 23, 1853; and Howard Doddridge, May 8, 1856.

The sixth in this large family was John B. Hoge, who was born in Scottsville, Albemarle County, November 13, 1838, was reared and married at Staunton, Virginia, and for many years was a well-to-do and prosperous grocery merchant at that city. He died during a visit to Frankfort, Kentucky, April 17, 1919. For over thirty years he served as a deacon in the Baptist Church, and was a staunch democrat in politics. John B. Hoge married Fannie Jordan on January 8, 1863. She was born in Rockbridge County, Virginia, in 1844, and is now living with her son Eugene at Frankfort. She is the mother of ten children, all living, and all well established in life, as follows: William H., an oil operator living at Frankfort; Charles K., assistant cashier of the National Bank at Saintou, Virginia; Walter D., secretary to the superintendent of the Deaf, Dumb and Blind Institute of Virginia, at Staunton; John Manley, an electrician at Staunton; Emma Elizabeth, wife of Stuart Webb, who is in the advertising business at Baltimore, Maryland; H. Jordan, secretary of the shoe manufacturing firm of Hoge-Montgomery Company at Franklin; George Taylor, in the photo engraving business at Detroit, Michigan; M. Gunther, a traveling salesman living at Staunton; and Ernst C., bookkeeper for the Hoge-Montgomery Company at Franklin.

Eugene E. Hoge was born at Staunton, Virginia, January 24, 1870, was educated in the public schools there, graduated from the Staunton Military Academy in 1888, and almost immediately following graduation came to Franklin. In 1886 the State National Bank of Franklin was organized under a national charter, and Mr. Hoge joined the institution as an extra clerk. He has performed practically every duty connected with the practical details and administration of a large bank, and in April, 1910, succeeded to the presidency. A short time later he took possession of its new modern home, a building of white terra cotta, one of the handsomest bank structures in the state. It is at the corner of Main and Ann streets. This bank has a capital of $150,000, surplus and profits of $75,000, and deposits averaging $1,250,000. The other executive officers besides Mr. Hoge are: William F. Dandridge and Sam A. Mason, vice presidents; L. D. Cashier, cashier; and R. P. Moore, asst. cashier. Mr. Hoge is a member of the American Bankers Association and on its executive council. He is a republican, a Presbyterian, and his citizenship both as a banker and in private relationships has been of the sturdiest character.

During the World war Mr. Hoge served as chairman of the Liberty Loan drives, chairman of the War Savings campaign and chairman of the Four-Minute Men in Franklin. An editorial published in a local paper at the time is a well-earned tribute to the man and the unselfish work he has always played in Franklin, and accordingly deserves quotation: "A man's fitness for a place can best be measured by results. In the light of results in three Liberty Loan campaigns and the recent extraordinary campaign for pledges for War Savings Stamps in Franklin County the selection of Eugene E. Hoge for county chairman was a master stroke on the part of someone who recognized the qualities the test has proven. Generalship is a rare quality. Mr. Hoge might have conducted one campaign successfully, or even two without meriting the description; but four successful campaigns, each excelling the preceding one, cannot be ascribed to luck. Mr. Hoge, undoubtedly, would give the credit to the splendid citizens who composed the organizations, and to them the credit is due; but therein he proves his possession of the quality of generalship. He picked his organizations with discriminating judgment. In every department he had a man who would work with mind and heart, and while seeing to it that co-ordinated effort was constantly directed toward the common goal, he depended upon their judgment and initiative within their own provinces. It is a rare faculty in leadership, that of not confusing things by unwarranted interference, as rare as the gift of selection and executive ability. Mr. Hoge possesses these qualities in a high degree, and after four war loans campaigns he had the organization in better shape than when the 'Official Go-getters' undertook the first one with some misgivings."

Mr. Hoge is also a member of the Franklin Chamber of Commerce. He and his family reside in a modern home at 510 Wapping Street. He married at Covington, Kentucky, June 18, 1898, Miss Mary T. Morris, daughter of Richard and Alice T. (Gray) Morris. Her father is still living, one of the extensive farmers in Franklin County. Mrs. Hoge finished her education in the Hollins Institute at Roanoke, Virginia. To their marriage were born two children: Mary Morris, now the wife of R. H. Clemmer, manager of the Loh Stove Works at Waynesboro, Virginia; and Eugene Morris, a student at Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Virginia.

John Edwin Wilson, M. D. For a third of a century the name of John Edwin Wilson has ranked as one of the highest in the medical profession of Falmouth. Doctor Wilson began his practice there a short time after the death of his grandfather, one of the honored pioneer physicians, and there has been not a time in the past seventy years when this name has not stood for the best attainments in the field of medicine.

The Wilsons have been in Falmouth for more than one and a quarter centuries. They are among the first families not only in point of time but in prominence and usefulness as citizens.

The founder of the family was the great-grandfather of Doctor Wilson, James Wilson, a native of Hillsper County, Virginia, who came down the Licking River in 1792 and established his home at Falmouth. He acquired some extensive tracts of new land in that vicinity, and remained there the rest of his life, engaged in agricultural pursuits. A son, also named James Wilson, was born at Falmouth in 1812 and early turned his attention to a medical career. He began his practice at Falmouth in 1839, and kept up his duties and the regular rounds of his profession until advancing age and infirmities prevented. He died at Falmouth in 1879. James Wilson married Xerelda Thomas, a native of Virginia, who died at Falmouth.

The father of John Edwin Wilson was the late Capt. James M. Wilson, and to his name are attached many worthy distinctions. He was born at Falmouth in 1838, and died there in October, 1917. He enlisted at the first call for troops to put down the rebellion, was with the Eighteenth Kentucky Infantry, served with the rank of captain and brevet major, was in the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and many others in the Atlanta campaign and on the March to the Sea, and was with the first company of troops that entered Savannah. After the war Captain Wilson was for many years a grocery merchant at Falmouth, was for seventeen years postmaster during the administrations of McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft, and was also mayor of Falmouth eight years. He stood high in the republican party in his section of the state, and was also a deeply interested member and worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Capt. James M. Wilson married Ella Rachel Kerr, who was born in Fayette County in 1843, and is still living at Falmouth. The present Rev. E. E. Wilson is pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church. Mr. Thomas, is editor of the Log Cabin at Cynthiana, Kentucky. Ralph R., who is in the life insurance business at Franklin, has some important copper mining interests in Arizona. Miss Ella and Miss Mary reside with their mother at Falmouth.

John Edwin Wilson was born at Williamsport, February 11, 1867, graduated from the Pendleton Academy at Falmouth in 1884, began the study of medicine under Dr. J. H. Barbour of Falmouth, and in 1888 received his M. D. degree from the Medical College of Ohio at Cincinnati. He has since attended that college several times for post-graduate work, and has been in many clinics at Cincinnati hospitals. His professional duties have had first call upon his time and energies. He began practice at Falmouth in 1888. Recently, the location of his office stands next to Dr. H. C. Clark as the oldest physician and surgeon at Falmouth. Doctor Wilson owns his offices and residence on South Main Street, has served as county health officer twelve years, was organizer and first chairman of the Pendleton Chapter of the American Red Cross during the World war, and was one of the very prominent and influential leaders in the prohibition movement in Pendleton County. He and his colleagues took up that cause when prohibition even as a state issue seemed far distant, and much of the credit for the education and change of public sentiment in the county is due him.

Doctor Wilson is a republican and has served as chairman of the Republican County Central Committee for twelve years. Altogether he has been a member of the legislature for fifteen years, and for six years was acting mayor. He is an elder in the Presbyterian Church, a member of the Knights of Pythias and of the Falmouth Industrial Club.

Jan. 12, 1898, at Falmouth, he married Miss Fannie S. Lee, daughter of Judge C. H. and Julia (Ball) Lee, now deceased. Her father was a well known attorney and at one time county judge of Pendleton County. Mrs. Wilson is a graduate of Mount Holyoke Seminary at Mount Holyoke, Massachusetts.

Charles Hobart Lee was a youthful Confederate soldier under Morgan, and almost all the years since the war have been spent in a round of successive business duties and responsibilities at Falmouth. He has been a banker for over thirty years and is president of the Pendleton Bank of Falmouth.

post of magistrate for a long period. He was a consistent and active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which his benefactions were liberal. His only fraternal affiliation, was with the Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Hammond married Josephine Cunningham, who was born in 1849, at Canton, Trigg County, Kentucky.

William Cunningham, the great-grandfather of William R. Hammond on the maternal side, was born in Ireland and when a youth became a bound boy and as such was sent to Virginia. There he succeeded in working out his obligation, and subsequently became a pioneer in the vicinity of Canton, Kentucky, where he engaged in farming and attained some success. His son, Andrew Cunningham, the grandfather of William R. Hammond, was born at Canton and passed his entire life in that locality, becoming a successful and extensive farmer and dying before his grandson was born. He married Nancy Pool, who was born and died near Canton.

The children born to Thomas J. and Josephine (Cunningham) Hammond were as follows: William R.; Walter H., a loose leaf tobacco dealer of Hopkinsville, Kentucky; and Hugh, who is employed as a clerk in a store at this place.

William R. Hammond was sent to the public schools of Caledonia, which he attended until he was seventeen, then he took a position as clerk in a store at that place. He was in his father's employ until 1902, when he embarked in a business venture of his own, and until 1916 conducted buffets and cafes at Hopkinsville and Gracey. In the year mentioned he turned his attention to the automobile industry, as related to the garage business, and formed a partnership with A. B. McDonald, under the firm style of Hammond & McDonald. This garage, located at Twelfth and Virginia streets, has become the leading enterprise of its kind at Hopkinsville. A completely equipped repair department is maintained, and in addition the firm acts as sales agents for standard automobiles, all leading brands of tires and a full line of accessories. The garage and offices are included in a modern brick structure in the business district and attract a large and representative patronage.

In political matters Mr. Hammond is a Republican. During his residence at Gracey he was appointed postmaster by President McKinley, but after serving in that position for eighteen months resigned. He belongs to Hopkinsville Lodge No. 545, B. P. O. E., and was formerly a member of the Woodmen of the World. He is the owner of a modern suburban home on South Main Street, just outside of the city limits, a little estate of nine acres, with well-kept lawn and numerous shade trees. This residence, which Mr. Hammond bought July 30, 1920, is one of the best in Christian County, while the property is considered the prettiest at Hopkinsville. Mr. Hammond took an active part in all local war activities, assisting in the various drives and spending time and money in assisting all the worthy movements which contributed to the success of American Arms.

In 1868, at Caledonia, Mr. Hammond was united in marriage with Miss Nannie Alexander, daughter of Zenas and Elizabeth (Jones) Alexander, the latter of whom is deceased, while the former is a well-known agriculturist of the vicinity of Caledonia, where he was a pioneer. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hammond: Jefferson, residing at home, a graduate of the Hopkinsville High School, and stockkeeper and manager of the parts department of the Hammond & McDonald Garage; Huel, a graduate of Hopkinsville High School, who married Garham Cowherd, a farmer one mile east of Hopkinsville; Deword, who resides at home and is attending public school; and Elizabeth, also at home and a public school pupil.

William Arrelius Page, M. D. When the history of this century is written by generations yet unborn due credit will then be accorded to the efforts of the physicians of this period, who labored long and faithfully not only to cure the ailments of mankind, but to bring about a decrease in mortality and to gain definite control of diseases formerly believed incurable. Among the men of Ballard County who belongs to this honored profession, Dr. William Arrelius Page ranks in the foremost phalanx of those who have accomplished much. His career is one of useful and helpful endeavor, and his name is held in high regard by all who are acquainted with him and his work.

Doctor Page was born at Woodland Mills, Tennessee, August 25, 1875, a son of William A. Page, and grandson of Thomas Page, Esquire, who was born in Middle Tennessee in 1815, and died at Woodland Mills, Tennessee in 1889, having been the pioneer of his family into Obion County, Tennessee, where he was engaged in farming for many years.

William A. Page was born in Middle Tennessee in 1838, and his death occurred near Bandana, Ballard County, Kentucky. He grew up in Obion County, Tennessee, and was there married. For some years following his marriage he continued to reside in Obion County, being extensively interested in flour milling, dealing in grain and farming, but in 1893 came to Kentucky, where he engaged in farming on the farm he purchased, and continued to live on this property until his death. A stalwart democrat, he was very active in the political affairs of Obion County, and at one time served as deputy sheriff. For many years he was one of the strong supporters of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which he early joined, and he never lost his interest in it nor ceased to be included in the councils of his local congregation. During the war between the North and the South he espoused the cause of the latter section and entered the Confederate Army. He had charge of an ammunition train at Lookout Mountain, and was driving it to the front when, the brakes giving way, it ran down the mountain, but did not jump the track, and he was fortunately uninjured. Mr. Page also was at the campaign of Island Number Ten and in other important events of the conflict. The war completed, he returned home and manfully shouldered his share of the burdens of the reconstruction period and was spared long enough to realize a fair measure of prosperity. William A. Page was married to Ellen Isbell, who was born in Obion County, Tennessee, in 1843, and died in the same county in September, 1875. Their children were as follows: Jennie, who died of typhoid fever when young; Bascum, who died of the same disease and only a few days after his sisters; Annie, who married John Wright, died at Barlow, Kentucky, in 1910, but her husband survives and lives near Bandana, where he is engaged in farming; Paul, who is conducting a grain business at Barlow, is also an extensive farmer and livestock dealer, and president of the Barlow Bank; James M., who is living on the homestead near Kevil, Kentucky, is treasurer of Ballard County; and Doctor Page, who was the youngest born.

After he had attended the local schools of Obion County, Tennessee, and Ballard County, Kentucky, Doctor Page became a student of the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, and took a two-year course in its medical department, leaving this institution in 1901 and entering the Saint Louis College of Physicians and Surgeons at Saint Louis, Missouri, from which he took grad settled in the vicinity of Bandana on a farm. Doctor Page came to Barlow and established himself in a general medical and surgical practice, which he has since continued with very gratifying results. He owns his office building, a modern brick structure on Main Street, and a modern residence on the same street, where he maintains a comfortable home. Doctor Page also owns a farm on Humphreys' Creek, Ballard County, Kentucky.

Both by inheritance and conviction Doctor Page is a democrat, and has served as county farmer, being on the Ballard County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, the American Medical Association and the Southwestern Kentucky Medical Association. A Mason, he is a member of Hazelwood Lodge No. 489, A. F. and A. M. He also belongs to Barlow Camp No. 11722, M. W. A. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, holds his membership, and he is one of the stewards of the local congregation. Born in Kentucky, he was reared and spent his early life on the Illinois Central Railroad. During the period this county was in the great war Doctor Page was an active participant in all of the local war work, assisting in every way and contributing generously of his time and money so as to enable the administration to carry out its policies.

Doctor Page was united in marriage in 1906, at Barlow, Kentucky, to Miss Myrtle Wilford, a daughter of Harvey and Elizabeth (Morgan) Wilford, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Wilford was a livestock dealer and farmer. Mrs. Page was graduated from the Paducah Business College. Doctor and Mrs. Page became the parents of three children, namely: Waldo, who was born February 16, 1907; William Arrelious, who was born in November, 1908; and Myrtle, who was born July 29, 1910.

Enoch Robinson Bush, M. D. The modern physician shares in the progress of the age. For medical science has reached a degree bordering upon perfection in matters pertaining to the profession. In spite of twentieth century humanity's complicated activities and unnatural mode of living, the physicians are achieving results that seem beyond the comprehension of the layman, however much he may benefit from their application to his individual case. One of the men who has attained to a high position among his contemporaries in the medical profession in Clark County is Enoch Robinson Bush, M. D., of Winchester.

Doctor Bush was born at Ruckerville, Clark County, Kentucky, January 11, 1881, a son of Jonas R. and Sally (Webber) Bush. His father, who was born in the same vicinity December 7, 1839, and died June 26, 1910, was a son of Allen N. and Polly (Robinson) Bush, the grandfather having also been born in the same locality, where he died at the age of fifty-four years. The father of Allen N. Bush was Nelson Bush, of Orange, Clay County, Virginia, who was born at the age of five years to Clark County, Kentucky, by his parents, the family settling near the old fort at Boonesboro, although on the north side of the river, the fort being on the south side of the stream, in Madison County. Allen N. Bush served as sheriff of Clark County in early life, and later became a noted auctioneer of his day and locality. He was large in physique and personality, weighing some 300 pounds and being possessed of a great voice, which would attract and hold audiences from long distances. His son, Jonas R. Bush, also became an auctioneer, having inherited his father's great voice, and in 1901 came to Winchester, being at that time well known both as an auctioneer and a farmer. He was later elected clerk of the Circuit Court of Clark County, but died six months later. He was the father of five children William Allen, M. D., of Winchester, a practicing physician, whose biography appears elsewhere in this book. His grandson, Jonas R., who died at the age of twenty-eight years, as the wife of J. B. Conkright, leaving one daughter, Bessie, who is society editor of the Lexington Leader; Elton, who died at the age of nineteen years; Wheeler, who died in childhood; and Enoch R.

Enoch R. Bush, Sr., is the owner of a part of the old farm near Ruckerville which was located by Nelson Bush, and lived on successively by him, his son, Allen N., his grandson, Jonas R., and his great-grandson, Enoch R. It was on this property that the last-named spent his boyhood and youth, acquiring his primary education in the county schools, following which he took a course in the Kentucky Wesleyan College, afterwards working for a few years thereafter he taught in the country schools of Clark County, then entering upon his medical studies in the medical department of the Kentucky State University, from which he was graduated with the class of 1906, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He entered upon the practice of his calling at Winchester, where for five years he was in partnership with his brother, and since that time has been engaged in a general practice. He holds membership in the various organizations of his profession and is active in the ranks of the Clark County Medical Society. While his time is largely occupied by his profession, Doctor Bush is interested in those measures which tend toward a better education of the masses and an awakening of the people to the necessity for more sanitary regulations and hygienic conditions. He is not bound by his professional knowledge, but is able to take a broad, humanitarian view of the matter, and to work towards effecting improvements that will raise the average man and woman and develop the best quality of citizenship.

On April 27, 1917, Doctor Bush enlisted in the United States Army Medical Corps, was made battalion surgeon, and went overseas with the Eighty-fourth Division, subsequently seeing service in France and Germany. On reaching France he was sent to the Toul sector at the front and placed in charge of a first aid station, following which he went to Vaucuire, France, and was connected with the Mount Sinai Unit Base Hospital No. 3 at Monport. Later still he was identified with Evacuation Hospital No. 9 at Coblenz, Germany, and was finally sent back to the United States, receiving his honorable discharge from the service July 7, 1919. His army experience was a wonderfully helpful one, and one which is assisting him materially in his civilian practice.

Doctor Bush was married December 21, 1898, to Miss Callie Berryman, of Clark County, daughter of Dillard and Sally B. Berryman, formerly of Ruckerville, but now residents of Indiana. They are the parents of one son, Enoch Robinson, Jr., who was born in 1917.

James F. Drake for more than forty years has been an active figure in the educational affairs and the business of Pendleton County. He is most widely known as an educator and is the present county superintendent of schools.

Mr. Drake, whose home is at Butler, was born on a farm six miles east of that town, in Pendleton County, October 21, 1858. His father, Richard Drake, was born at Felicity, Ohio, in 1820, was reared there, but when a young man moved to Pendleton County, Kentucky. He was a wagon maker, a maker of grain cranes, and one of the mechanical pioneers in the operation of a large farm. He held the office of magistrate for sixteen years, was a republican, a Mason, and one of the leading members of the Twelve Mile Baptist Church in his community. He died at Peach Grove in Pendleton County, in 1894. Richard Drake married in this county Nancy Dicken, who was born in Campbell County in 1821 and died in Pendleton County in May, 1881. They were the parents of nine children two of whom died in infancy, a brief record of the others being; Laura, who died in Pendleton County at the age of twenty-five, wife of William Norris, a carpenter now living at Newport; Mary, who died at the age of thirty; Charles R. a teacher and later a farmer who died in Campbell County aged forty-five; Millard F., a merchant, who died in Pendleton County when twenty-three years of age; John E.; Elizabeth, who died at Covington in 1918, wife of John Garvey, a teacher at Covington; Maggie, who died at Peach Grove aged twenty-two, wife of William Rusk, now a farmer and dairyman in Kenton County.

John E. Drake lived with his parents on the home farm until he was twenty-eight years of age. He attended rural schools, graduated from the Peach Grove Academy in 1873, and taught his first term of school at the age of twenty-two. For two years he was connected with the rural schools and in 1886 engaged in the mercantile business in partnership with his brother-in-law, William Rusk. This firm continued for eight years, and in 1891 Mr. Drake resumed teaching and for twenty-four years had charge of a number of schools in Pendleton and Campbell counties. In November, 1917, he was elected county superintendent of Pendleton County and held this position for a four year term in January, 1918. His offices are in the Court House at Falmouth. The supervision of his office extends to fifty-seven white and one colored rural schools and five graded schools in Pendleton County. The staff of teachers numbers eighty-six and the scholarship enrollment is 2,765.

Mr. Drake is a member of the Kentucky Educational Association. He is a repudiert member of the Baptist Church at Butler; is a past master of Aspen Grove Lodge No. 397, F. and A. M., at Peach Grove. During the World war he gave much of his time to his committee work in behalf of the Liberty Loan and Red Cross drives.

In November, 1886, he married Miss Sallie Tarvin, who was born near Peach Grove in Pendleton County, and was educated in the rural schools there and the public schools at Butler. She is an active member of the Baptist Church and the Daughters of America. Her father, William C. Tarvin, is now living with Mr. and Mrs. Drake at Butler. He was born in Campbell County in 1841, spent his early life as a farmer, and in 1878 moved to Butler, where he conducted a meat market until he retired in 1911. William Tarvin married in Pendleton County Melinda Yelton, who was born in that county in 1842 and died at Butler in August, 1912.

Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Drake: Miss Jessie, who died at Peach Grove at the age of Twenty-four; Ethel, who died at the age of four years; Charles Verner, now living in Western Texas; Florence, who died at the age of two years; and Elizabeth, born September 15, 1903, a sophomore in high school.

Ben Lomond Trevathan, cashier of the Bank of Marshall County, is one of the sound and reliable business men and financiers of Benton, and one who holds the full confidence of his fellow citizens. He was born at Almo, Calloway County, Kentucky, October 8, 1894, a son of L. E. Trevathan, and grandson of John Rob Trevathan. The Trevathans came from England to the American colonies and settled in Virginia from whence members of the family went into Kentucky. John Rob Trevathan was born in Calloway County, Kentucky, and died in that county prior to the birth of his grandson, having spent his entire life there and given his attention to farming. He married Rosa Jane Martin, a native of Calloway County, Kentucky, and who lives in Nashville, Tennessee.

L. E. Trevathan was born at Almo, Kentucky, in 1863, and near by was his birthplace. There he continued to live until 1905, when he moved to Hardin, Kentucky, his present place of residence. He learned the carpenter trade, became a builder and is now interested in a saw and flour mill. A man of strong convictions, he is not afraid to stand up for them and casts his vote independent of party affiliations, although he prefers the principles of the democratic platform. The Christian Church has in him one of its most earnest and generous supporters and members. Fra-ternally he belongs to Hardin Camp No. 11880, M. W. A. L. E. Trevathan was married to Ida May Manning, who was born near Almo, Kentucky, in 1866, a daughter of J. M. J. Manning, who was born in Stewart County, Tennessee, in 1817, and died at Hardin, Kentucky, in 1912. The greater part of his life was spent in Callo- way County, Kentucky, where for fifty years he was in active practice as a physician. Upon his retirement from practice he took his seat in the General Assembly of the North and the South and he commanded a company of General Forrest's cavalry in the Confederate service, and served all through the war, participating in the battles of Shiloh, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Corinth and other important engagements. He married Kate Penny, who was born in Montgomery County, Tennessee, in 1842, and died at Hardin, Kentucky, in 1921. The Mannings came to the American Colonies from England and settled in Virginia. The children born to L. E. Trevathan and his wife were as follows: Jessie, who married Walter Cleaver, owner and operator of the Mayfield Transfer Company of Mayfield, Ken- tucky; Lois, who married G. F. Gardner, a carpenter and builder of Mayfield, Kentucky; Ben Lomond, who was third in order of birth; and Norman E. who is employed in the office of the Kentucky State Highway Board.

Ben Lomond Trevathan attended the public schools of Hardin, Kentucky, including two years in his high school, which he left in 1912. In the meanwhile, between 1905 and 1912, he had worked in the general store of Ryan-Miller Company of Hardin, and thus learned the value of making his time yield him an income. In 1913 he entered the Hardin Bank as assistant cashier, and held that position until December, 1917, when he went to Dawson Springs, Kentucky, as assistant cashier of the Commercial Bank of that place, and remained there as such until February, 1920, when he came to Benton to be cashier of the Bank of Marshall County. This bank was established in 1903 and is located in a two-story brick building on the Court Square, and has all modern facilities and equipment necessary for the conduct of a modern banking business, and compares favorably to any similar institution in the country. It has a capital of $20,000; surplus and profits of $14,500; and deposits of $275,000. The officials of the bank are as follows: Judge Joe L. Price, circuit judge of the Second Judicial District of Kentucky, president; Tullus Black, vice president; B. L. Trevathan, cashier; and E. W. Pace, assistant cashier. Mr. Trevathan is a democrat, and served as city clerk of Dawson Springs, Kentucky, for two terms. He belongs to Hardin Lodge No. 265, F. and A. M.; Benton Chapter No. 167, R. A. M.; Queen Ann Chapter No. 133, O. E. S.; Hardin Lodge No. 73, I. O. O. F.; and Hardin Lodge No. 11880, M. W. A. Mr. Trevathan owns a modern residence in Benton, where he has a comfortable home, and he is a stockholder and director in the Bank of Marshall County. During the great war he took an active part in the local work, and contributed liberally of time and means among the ranks of the drives. He is a member of the Christian Church, and served as treasurer of these denominations at Dawson Springs and Hardin, Kentucky, and was superintendent of the Sunday School at Hardin.

In 1916 Mr. Trevathan was married at Hardin, Ken- tucky, to Miss Vally Irene Combs, a daughter of G. A. and Alice (Kennedy) Combs, residents of Hardin. Mr. Combs is an exterminator of Fayetteville, Ken- tucky. Mrs. Trevathan's grandfather Combs founded the family in this country, coming here from England. Mrs. Trevathan attended the Hardin High School into the senior year. Mr. and Mrs. Trevathan have two daughters, Margaret Revele, who was born September 21, 1917, and Ardath Genella, born October 10, 1921. Although he has been at Benton but a short time, Mr. Trevathan has already firmly established himself in the confidence of the people, and they recognize his ability as a banker and worth as a man and are glad to accord to him the full meed of their praise.

MILO SMITH MILLS. A native of Pendleton County and now county judge and resident of Falmouth, Milo Smith Mills has lived a busy and useful career, primarily identified with farming, but he also has a record of public spirited service in various capacities.

Mr. Mills was born in the northeastern corner of Pendleton County April 24, 1862. His grandfather, James Mills, was a native of County Tippecanoe, Indiana, where he married at the age of eighteen, and he and his young wife worked their way over in the steerage and for several years in Western Pennsylvania, and then moved to Lordstown, Trumbull County, Ohio, where he reared his family on a farm. Late in life he retired and spent his last days at the home of his son, John W. Mills, in Pendleton County, Kentucky, where he died in 1867. John W. Mills was born in Erie County, Pennsylvania, in 1824, but grew up at Lordstown in Trumbull County, Ohio, and as a young man came to Kentucky, where he helped build the Old Kentucky Central Railroad. He married at Independence in Kenton County and after his marriage became a farmer in that county, and about 1852 moved to Pendleton County and bought what is now known as the old Mills homestead near Gardnersville. He was one of the highly respected residents of that community until his death in 1894. He always voted as a Republican. He was a prominent member of the Baptist Church, and during the Civil War served as a member of the Home Guard. John W. Mills married Satira Stephens, who was born near Independence, Kentucky, in 1825, and died in Pendleton County in 1894, the same year as her husband. They had a family of eight children: Mary Ann, who died in Grant County at the age of forty, wife of D. L. Simpson, who still lives on his farm in Grant County; Joseph P., owner of the old Mills home farm; Amos F., a wagon maker and woodworker who died in Pendleton County at the age of fifty-four; Hattie, who married John W. Cram, a farmer and trader, and both died in Pendleton County, she at the age of thirty-six; Milo Smith, the fifth among the children; John, a farmer who died in Pendleton County at the age of thirty, while his twin brother, Will, died at the age of twenty-nine; Fannie, of Gardnersville, widow of J. R. Ervin, who was a merchant there.

Milo Smith, the son of Milo and Mary Ann Mills, was an independent farmer, and attended rural schools, received a normal education in Valparaiso University in Indiana for two terms, and at the age of nineteen began teaching. He taught five terms of five months each in the rural schools of Pendleton County. From 1886 until 1919, a period of a third of a century, Judge Mills devoted all his energies and judgment to the operation of his farm, finally selling his well-improved place of 220 acres.

In November, 1917, he was elected county judge, and began his official term of four years on January 1, 1918. His home is on Liberty Street in Falmouth. Among other essentially public services rendered by Judge Mills should be mentioned his membership of five years on the Pendleton County School Board, a term of six years on the Farmers Fire Insurance Board of the county, the splendid work he did as a member of the Pendleton County Draft Board and his effective leadership in every patriotic movement for the World war.

Judge Mills is a republican, a member of the Christian Church, is affiliated with DeMoss Lodge No. 220, F. and A. M., at DeMossville, and is a past noble grand of Gardnersville Lodge No. 172, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1896, at Gardnersville, he married Miss Elizabeth Daugherty, daughter of James and Nancy (Daugherty) Daugherty, now deceased. Her father was a farmer. Judge Mills had the misfortune to lose his wife in 1911.

Two children survive her. The younger is Alma O., now her father's housekeeper. The son, James Wesley, has had a life of varied action and developed into a mechanical and electrical engineer, a wireless operator, and enlisted in January, 1918, in the navy and was stationed at Boston Bay, Hampton Roads, Key West and Pensacola. He was an able aviator, rated as a gunner and pilot, and was mustered out of service in March, 1921. He is able to speak six languages.

L. H. RANDOLPH, president of the Peoples Bank of Bandana and owner of the dependable hardware and implement business he is conducting under his own name, is one of the substantial men and public-spirited citizens of Pendana, and one who is well known all over Ballard County. He was born in Hocking County, Ohio, June 11, 1863, a son of David Owen Randolph. The Randolph family was established in the American Colonies by Paton Randolph, a sea captain of English nativity, who became a property owner in that portion of Virginia which later became West Virginia. John Randolph, the great-grandfather of L. H. Randolph, was surveyor for the Ohio Company which purchased the Northwest Territory, and he died in Hocking County, Ohio, in 1809. His son, James Randolph, was born in 1800 in Hampshire County, in what is now West Virginia, the same county which gave his father birth, and he died in Hocking County, Ohio, in 1874. He was a farmer and school-teacher. James Randolph married Susannah Russell, and was the father of L. H. Randolph.

L. H. Randolph also traces his ancestry back to the prominent Colonial family of Owens of Virginia. David Owen Randolph was born in Ohio in 1824, and died in Hocking County, Ohio, in 1881. Marrying in Morgan County, Ohio, he settled in Hocking County, Ohio, and divided his time between farming, school-teaching and working for the municipality. In politics he was a republican, but did not hold office. The Church of Christ had in him an earnest member and generous supporter. During the war between the North and the South he served in one of the 100 day regiments from Ohio, and for five years was a member of the Ohio Home Guards. David Owen Randolph was married to Susannah Morris, who was born in Morgan County, Ohio, in 1826, and died in Hocking County, Ohio, January 22, 1880. Their children were as follows: Alpha May, who married Roland K. Russell, and settled near Galion, Ohio; between them a general contractor in Columbus, Ohio; L. H., whose name heads this review; Harrison Tell, who is a farmer, owner and electrician for mining companies, lives near Monongahela, Pennsylvania; and Dorsey Scott, who is also a farm owner and electrician for mining companies, lives in the vicinity of Monongahela, Pennsylvania.

L. H. Randolph was reared in Hocking County, Ohio, where he attended the rural schools, and then took a teachers training course and one in bookkeeping at the Ohio Central Normal College at Pleasantville, Ohio. During 1892 and 1893 he was a student of the Kentucky Transylvania University at Lexington, Kentucky. For the subsequent year Mr. Randolph was engaged in selling school supplies, and then, beginning in the fall of 1894, was engaged in teaching in the rural schools of Ballard County, Kentucky, for four years. In the meanwhile he taught a session public school in Sumner County, Tennessee, and did some farming. On September 22, 1899, he opened a hardware and implement store in Bandana and Kentucky, beginning his business career in a very modest way, but as in it he found his life work he steadily advanced, enlarging his stock to meet the demands of the trade he was able to build up and today has the largest establishment of its kind in Ballard County. In addition to his store he has many other interests, and owns his large store building on the corner of Ohio and Mississippi streets, the four mills on Mississippi Street, which have a capacity of twenty-five barrels per day and which in 1910 ground 15,000 bushels of wheat in a month. Hazelwood, a modern mill on Mississippi Street, is equipped with electric light plant and water works, as are his store and mills, the Deleo system of lighting having been installed. He is president of the Peoples Bank of Bandana, which was organized June 21, 1918, he being one of the men who established it. The officers of the bank are: L. H. Randolph, president; John Holt, vice president; W. L. Randolph, cashier, and Mr. Walter L. Roland, assistant cashier. The bank has a capital of $15,000; surplus and undivided profits of $12,000, and deposits of $75,000.

In February, 1896, Mr. Randolph was united in marriage with Miss Mary Elizabeth Dorris in Sumner County, Tennessee. Her parents, Ira and Martha (Furr) Dorris, are both deceased, but during his lifetime Mr. Dorris was a prominent farmer of Sumner County, Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Randolph became the parents of the following children: Harrison Calhoun, who was born in February, 1897, is assisting his father and has been so employed since boyhood, was educated in the Bandana public schools, and was in the draft during the great war, but the armistice was signed before he was called into the service; Paul Dorris, who was born in November, 1899, is operating his father's flour mill and lives at home; Alma May, who was born in March, 1902, is in the last year of the Bandana High School; Lewis Homer, who died at the age of twenty-two months; and Lawson Homer, who was born June 6, 1908. Mr. Randolph has served as a school trustee. He belongs to the Church of Christ, and is now an elder of it. A man of unusual capabilities, he has conserved his talents and turned them to good account. Under his wise and conservative management his bank has taken a leading place among similar financial institutions of the county, and his connection with it gives it added solidity, for his business acumen is unquestioned. His pride in Bandana is deep and sincere and he is anxious to see it advance, but he is too level-headed to countenance any movements which in his opinion will not work out for a sane and economic expenditure of the taxpayers' money.

WALTER L. ROLAND. Until he has occasion to ask assistance of a bank the average citizen does not appreciate the value to him and his community of a sound, reliable and dependable financial institution, officered by experienced men and backed by men of ample means. Without such institutions industry would be at a standstill; no building could be carried on; crops could not be moved, and even the Government, both state and national, would feel the effects rapidly and in a disastrous manner. All business today is practically dependent upon the banks, and no large transaction is carried on without some assistance from a bank. Because of the great importance of these institutions much care is exercised in the selection of the men for the responsible positions, for no bank can be stronger than its officers, and even the Government, both state and national, would feel the effects rapidly and in a disastrous manner. All business today is practically dependent upon the banks, and no large transaction is carried on without some assistance from a bank. In the case of the important and influential people in the county, the example is followed, and the career and position of the man may be held out as an exception to the rule. In Walter L. Roland, cashier, and his associates in the bank the community is favored, for these gentlemen stand very high in financial circles in Southwestern Kentucky and with their fellow citizens as men of the highest probity and uprightness, as well as of unusual capability for their several offices.

Walter L. Roland was born in Robertson County, Tennessee, on November 21, 1870, the son of John W. Roland and grandson of John Roland, a native of Tennessee. The Rolands are of North Carolina descent, and when W. L. Roland was still a boy his father took his family to Ashley, Illinois, being one of the pioneer farmers of that locality. John Roland also became a farmer, and he died at Ashley, Illinois, in 1885. He married a Miss Williams, also a native of Tennessee. The family is of Scotch-Irish stock, but has been established in America since Colonial times. Walter L. Roland was born in Davidson County, Tennessee, in 1830, and was reared in Davidson, Montgomery and Robertson counties, Tennessee, but went to Ashley, Washington County, Illinois, in 1883, at that time being a married man and a farmer of some experience. He continued his farming operations there and at Slater, Ballard County, Kentucky, where he located in 1887. In 1915 he retired, and is now living with his son, John W. Roland, a farmer in Hazelwood, Kentucky, but has never been very active. Early uniting with the Methodist Episcopal Church, he has given that denomination an earnest and heartfelt service, and is one of its active supporters today. He is a Mason. During the war between the North and the South he was one of the first to enlist in Company F, Eleventh Tennessee Infantry, C. S. A., and served until he was severely wounded in the campaign against Atlanta, Georgia, and because of it was incapacitated from further service. During his period of service he saw some hard fighting and was in the battles of Gettysburg, Franklin, Missionary Ridge, Lookout Mountain, and those in the vicinity of Savannah and Atlanta, Georgia, being under the command of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston. With his recovery from his injury came the realization that the cause for which he had suffered was lost, but he did not permit himself to despair, but bravely went to work to make the best of what was left and has succeeded admirably. He married Patia Ann Barnes, who was born in Robertson County, Tennessee, in 1851, and died in Ballard County, Kentucky, in 1910. Their children were as follows: Lee, who married Charles Brame, a farmer now deceased, lives at Duluth, Minnesota; William H., who is a justice of the peace and a farmer, lives at Barlow, Kentucky; and Walter L., who is the youngest.

Walter L. Roland attended the rural schools of Ballard County, and remained on his father's farm until he was eighteen years old, when he began teaching school, and continued in that line of endeavor for three years. For the subsequent ten years he was occupied with conducting a prosperous mercantile business at Barlow, Kentucky, and then, selling, he went on the road for a year. In 1911 he was appointed rural mail carrier out of Barlow, and held that position until 1918. He then entered the Bank of Barlow as assistant cashier, and familiarized himself with the banking business, and then, on March 10, 1910, came to Bandana as cashier of the Peoples Bank of Bandana. This bank was established June 21, 1918, as a state bank, and its officers are as follows: W. L. Roland, president; A. C. Morris, vice president; W. L. Roland, cashier; and O. E. More, assistant cashier. The bank has a capital of $15,000; surplus and undivided profits of $12,000; and deposits of $75,000. Like his honored father, Mr. Roland is a democrat. He belongs to the Christian Church. A Mason, he belongs to Hazelwood Lodge No. 489, A. F. and A. M., of Barlow, Kentucky. He is a member of Barber Lodge No. 182, I. O. O. F., and the State Bankers Association. He owns a comfortable residence at Bandana, and a substantial dwelling at Barlow.

During the late war Mr. Roland took an active part in all of the local war work, giving generously of his time and money to raise the quotas for the various drives and assist the administration to carry out its policies.

In 1908 Mr. Roland was married to Metropolis, Illinois, to Miss Oran Walley, born near Barlow, Ballard County, Kentucky, hers being one of the pioneer families of that vicinity. Mr. and Mrs. Roland became the parents of two children, namely: Oskey, who was born June 11, 1910; and Dorothy, who was born September 11, 1913.
HON. W. W. WILLIAMS entered upon his duties as Judge of the Thirty-first Judicial District including Floyd and Knott counties in February, 1922. Seldom does a judge or any other public officer carry with him into his office such unbounded confidence and admiration of a constituency as Judge Williams. This is based not only on his undoubted qualifications as a lawyer and public leader, but to a singular degree upon the strength of character that enabled him to rise above illiteracy and achieve rank and position among the ablest men of his day.

Judge Williams was born on Beaver Creek, Floyd County, Kentucky, November 17, 1877, son of Dr. John G. and Rebecca (Conley) Williams, the former a native of North Carolina and the latter of Kentucky. Dr. John G. Williams for a number of years has practiced medicine at Mound City, Illinois.

When he was seven his father and mother separated, and Mrs. Williams then returned to Floyd County on Beaver Creek with her two children, W. W. and Fred. Providing for these children she was handicapped by financial poverty and a frail constitution. Practically from that time W. W. Williams had to be the bread winner for his mother and younger brother. When Judge Williams was about fourteen his mother married again. W. W. Williams worked on farms and at various enterprises that would earn him an honest dollar. Under such circumstances it is hardly to be remarked that at the age of seventeen he had no acquaintance with the alphabet. While he had made no progress in a literary education he had gained the discipline of physical labor, had educated his will, and had established the reliability of his promised word. About that time a district school teacher took an interest in this sturdy youth and taught him his letters. With his beginning to studied nights and at odd times, kept his mental exercises going in intervals of other labor, and also attended a district school. In 1901 at the age of twenty-four he had qualified himself to teach, and for five winter terms he taught in district schools and worked during the summer to supplement his own education. After his public school training he took a business course in John B. Thomas Commercial College at Lexington during 1902, later entering the Normal College at Bowling Green, where he completed his 3 years in law and graduated in 1908 with the degree LL. B. In that year he was admitted to the bar, and for the next two years was associated in practice with Judge Goble at Prestonsburg until the death of Judge Goble. To every client he has taken an industry and thorough knowledge qualifying him for expert handling of the case, and he is recognized as one of the able lawyers of the state. He has always been a leader in community affairs, and is a prominent Democrat. He was his party's candidate for county attorney in 1917, and in 1921 became candidate for circuit judge of the Second District. Since 1918 he has been associated in law practice with B. M. James, his brother-in-law, and the firm of Williams & James is one of the strongest in the Prestonsburg bar. Mr. Williams is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Judge Williams is called justly by his friends as one man in a thousand. He has never married. As a lawyer he has made money, but has spent it all for the benefit of deserving young boys, assisting them to get an education. Fifteen individuals have received their education through his help, and are now justifying his confidence in their work as educators, lawyers and in other fields. These young men constituted the nucleus of his unique campaign committee and in no small measure accounted for the remarkable majority of 4,200 votes which elected him Judge of the Thirty-first District. Judge Williams himself is not the kind of man to spend his practical helpfulness, but his friends have not permitted that part of his character to go unnoticed. A poor boy with an ambition to get an education is certain to attract his interest and attention, and there have been cases where Judge Williams was willing to spend his own last dollar and even borrow money for that purpose. From such a ministry in behalf of worthy and aspiring youth Judge Williams has doubtless derived a satisfaction greater than any derived from the most important law case he has handled.

B. M. JAMES, junior member of the law firm of W. W. Williams & B. M. James at Prestonsburg, is a prominent young lawyer, just past thirty, but has been active in his profession for over a year.

He was born on his father's farm near Thomas Post Office, Floyd County, February 22, 1890, son of Thomas J. and Nancy (Jackson) James. His parents were natives of Kentucky, born in 1847 and 1851 respectively. He was a Republican, quite influential in local political circles, and for two terms was justice of the peace.

B. M. James attended public school near his home, also the high school at Prestonsburg, and for two years was a teacher. He then took a commercial course and for two years was in business at Prestonsburg, and at the same time was quietly gaining a knowledge of law through private reading. In 1912 he entered the Kentucky State University at Lexington and on account of the thorough previous preparation completed his law course in nine months. On his admission to the bar Mr. James began practice at Prestonsburg and was alone in his profession until 1918 when he formed his partnership with his brother-in-law, Judge W. W. Williams, who recently went on the bench as Judge of the Thirty-first Judicial Circuit.

At Mound City, Illinois, in 1913 Mr. James married Miss Gineva Williams, a daughter of Dr. John G. and Amanda (Clawson) Williams, a descendant of North Carolina and the latter of Pennsylvania.

Mr. James has been actively engaged in politics for eight years. He is the present Democratic chairman of the executive committee of Floyd County. He is affiliated with the Masonic and Odd Fellows orders, believing that in living up to the obligations of these old fraternities the worthy things of life assume greater value. In church matters he is of the Baptist faith, was married James, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and very closely associated with church work at Prestonsburg.

NOAH B. CHIPMAN, M. D. Falmouth has been the home and center of Doctor Chipman's professional activities for over forty-five years. He graduated in medicine at Cincinnati in the Centennial year, and his entire career as a physician and surgeon has been spent in Pendleton County.

He was born in Grant County July 22, 1832, and the Chipmans were one of the pioneer families in that section of Kentucky. His grandfather, James Chipman, was a descendant of Scotch ancestors who settled in Colonial times in Virginia, where he was born. After his marriage he moved to Kentucky and settled in Grant County, and lived there the rest of his life on a farm. He reared three children: James, a farmer who died in Grant County at the age of eighty-four; Nancy, who became the wife of John Faulkner, a Grant County farmer and who died at the age of eighty-six.

The third child was William Chipman, who was born in Grant County in 1818 and died there in 1875, having spent all his years in close association with the farm and interests of the country. He was a Democrat and one of the leading members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in his community. William Chipman married Reley Ann Juett, also a life long resident of Grant County, born in 1821 and died in 1888. The family consisted of the following children: Joseph, a farmer who died at Hazelwood, Ohio, at the age of seventy-five; John W., a retired farmer living at Williamsport, Kentucky; Melle, a widow of James Berguss, a farmer; William, who followed farming until his death in Iowa, at the age of thirty-six; Dr. Noah B.; A. J., a retired farmer at Williams- town; Jesse, a Grant County farmer who was accidently killed in a runaway when fifty-four years of age; Dr. J. C., who has achieved success and prominence as a physician and surgeon at Sterling, Colorado, is a member of the State Board of Medical Examiners and the State Board of Health and local surgeon for three railroads; and Louis M., a mechanic living at Cincin-

Noah B. Chipman was reared on his father's farm in Grant County but early looked beyond the horizon of a farm to the achievements of a professional career. He attended rural schools, high schools at Lebanon, Ohio, graduated from the high school of Harrodsburg, Kentucky, in 1873, and for several years taught school and read medicine in Grant County. In 1876 he received his M. D. degree from the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery, and in the same year began his practice in Pendleton County. He lived in the country, and his practice was altogether a country practice for fourteen years. Since 1890 his home and offices have been in Falmouth, the county seat, his headquarters being in the Mill Building, Chipman Block, headquarters of the Pendleton County and the Kentucky State Medical societies, and has participated in many local affairs and organizations besides doing the heavy work of his profession. He is a director in the Citizens Bank of Falmouth, and for many years was president of the Tub Fowler Distillery Company of Falmouth and still owns the distillery buildings on Water Street. He has one of the very best homes in the city, at 901 West Beverly Avenue.

He has been a leader in democratic politics, was elected to represent Pendleton County in the Lower House in 1906 and from 1910 to 1912 was senator from Pendleton, Grant and Bracken counties. While in the Senate he was father of the Bee Bill, putting the authority of the state behind the movement designated to destroy diseased colonies of bees, a measure that has proved of great practical benefit to the honey interests of the state. He also served on the committee on educational bills, the committee on medical affairs, and other Senate committees.

Doctor Chipman is affiliated with Orion Lodge No. 222, F. and A. M., at Falmouth, and was formerly identified with the Independent Order of Red Men. He is a member of the Industrial Club of Falmouth and his purse and influence were at the disposal of all local organizations promoting war purposes. In 1883, at Cincinnati, Doctor Chipman married Nannie E. Wadsworth, daughter of J. S. and Elizabeth (Thompson) Wadsworth, now deceased. Her father was a Pendelton County farmer. Doctor and Mrs. Chipman are the parents of five children. The oldest is Clene N., who graduated in medicine from the George Washington University at Washington, District of Columbia, and is married to Harry W. Wadsworth, the second son, is a graduate of West Point Military Academy, a major in the Regular Army, now stationed at Fort Riley, Kansas, and during the World war was employed in training recruits at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, for eleven months and then in training machine gun crews at Columbus, Georgia, until the close of the war. The third child is Perd Taylor, now an operator of a farm garage at Falmouth. J. Franklin is a veterinary surgeon at Falmouth. Nellie Wadsworth, the only daughter, is a student in the Falmouth High School.

HOWARD E. DUCKER. An active business man of Pendleton County for many years, Howard E. Ducker has a number of interests that require his active supervision at Butler, chief among them being his partnership in the leading lumber, coal and feed establishment of the city.

Mr. Ducker was born at Butler September 22, 1877. His grandfather, Jackson Ducker, was a life-long resident of Pendleton County, a farmer and distiller, born at Boston Station in 1827, and died at Butler in 1911. He married Sallie Ellis, who was born in 1830 and died in 1891, also a life-long resident of Butler. They had three children: Perry, the oldest, a farmer still living at Butler; William; and Nora, who died as a young woman.

William Ducker was born near Butler in 1854, and practically his entire life has been spent in that vicinity. His interests and vocation have been those of a farmer, and in 1893-4 he was county sheriff. He is a staunch democrat. William Ducker married Mary J. Caldwell, who was born at Butler in 1855. Howard E. is the oldest of their four children; Thomas and Clara both died when young; and Charles W. is a farmer at Butler.

Howard E. Ducker lived on his father's farm until he was twenty-three years of age. In the meantime he attended rural schools and also the public schools at Falmouth. From 1906 until 1916 he was in the distillery business at Butler, and since then has been a member of the firm Owen & Ducker in the lumber, coal and feed business. His partner is H. M. Owen. Their yards and offices are on Mill Street, and they own all the grounds and buildings and have a very prosperous trade. Mr. Ducker since 1916 has been secretary and treasurer of the Butler Creamery Company, an organization dating from 1908, and conducting a creamery half a mile east of Butler. Mr. Ducker is a director in the Butler Deposit Bank. His home is in the country, two miles east of Butler, where he has a thoroughly equipped and valuable farm of 250 acres. He gave loyal aid in all the war campaigns in the Butler community. He is a democrat, a member of the Christian Church, and is affiliated with Osage Tribe of Improved Order of Red Men at Lenoxburg.

In 1903, at Portsmouth, Ohio, he married Miss Florence Ryder, daughter of F. M. and Elizabeth (Manning) Ryder, now residents of Butler. Her father is a painter and decorator. Mr. and Mrs. Ducker have three children: Aril, born February 26, 1904; Clifford, born October 5, 1906, and Mary, born August 19, 1910. The oldest is in the Butler High School and the other two are attending grammar school.

JOHN ELMER WILSON, M. D. The honor of the longest service as a physician and surgeon in the Butler community of Pendleton County belongs to Dr. John Elmer Wilson, who has practiced there almost a quarter of a century. He is one of the highly esteemed citizens, though his complete energies and talents have been absorbed in his profession, and through that work alone he has satisfied the normal ambitions for usefulness to his fellow men.

Doctor Wilson represents an old family of Scotch origin in Huntingdon County, Pennsylvania. He was born there at Warriors Mark August 17, 1865. His grandfather, Thomas Wilson, was born in the same county in 1812, and died at Warriors Mark in 1882. He was prominent in the coal industry and was a master collier. He married a Miss Hoover, also a native and life-long resident of Huntingdon County. Their son, Christopher Wilson, was born in 1836 and died in 1911, spending all his life near Warriors Mark and near Butler. He was a deacon, an active member of the Lutheran Church, and during the Civil war served in the Home Guards. Christopher Wilson married Miss Mary Martha Wheeling, who is still living at Warriors Mark, where she was born in 1846. Of her five children all three sons have earned creditable distinction in the medical profession. The oldest, Thomas L., is a graduate of the Baltimore Medical College and is practicing at Bellwood, Pennsylvania. The second son is Dr. John E., of Butler, Kentucky. The third child, Elizabeth, is the wife of William Wolf, a resident of Altoona, Pennsylvania, and for many years assistant health officer there. The fourth is Luella, wife of Edward Rumberger, a farmer near Warriors Mark. The third son, Harry, is a graduate of the Baltimore Medical College and is a physician and surgeon at Warriors Mark.

John Elmer Wilson spent his life to the age of nineteen on his father’s farm, and acquired a rural school education in Huntingdon County. To pay his way through college he was employed on public work, and for two years, 1887-8, was a student in Juniata College in Pennsylvania and completed a course in the Central State Normal at Lockhaven, receiving the degree Master of English in 1890. During two years of this student period he taught in Huntingdon County and for six years was identified with school work in Clinton County, Pennsylvania. He taught there while attending the Medical Department of the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, from which he received his M. D. degree in 1896. In 1897 he graduated in medicine from the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery, and in the same year began his practice at Butler. He is a member of the Pendleton County Medical Society, and is a member in good standing of the Kentucky State and American Medical Association. For a number of years Doctor Wilson performed the duties of city health officer, and served a number of terms on the School Board and for fifteen years was president of the City Council. He is independent in politics. During the World war he received a lieutenant’s commission in the Medical Reserve Corps, but was unable to enter active service. He owns a modern and comfortable home on Peoples Avenue.

In 1895, near Butler, he married Miss Laura Bradford, daughter of Henry and Hannah (Brown) Bradford, both deceased. Her father was a farmer of Pendleton County. Doctor and Mrs. Wilson have one son, Henry Christopher, born January 4, 1903, who graduated from the Butler High School in 1920 and from Nelson’s Business College of Cincinnati in 1921, and is now a teacher in the public schools.

Louis P. Fryer, of Butler, is rounding out eighteen years of consecutive service as judge of the Eighteenth Judicial District. He has practiced law in Pendleton County for nineteen years, and his ability as a lawyer and his worth as a citizen have brought him repeated honors in public affairs, so that his official service has been almost continuous with his law practice.

Judge Fryer was born near Butler January 10, 1864, and four generations of the family have lived in that community. His great-grandfather was a native of Scotland and was the founder of the family in Pendleton County, where he lived the life of a farmer. William Fryer, grandfather of Judge Fryer, spent all his life in the vicinity of Butler, and was likewise identified with agricultural pursuits. John H. Fryer, father of Judge Fryer, was born near Butler in 1832, and after his marriage for twenty years lived at Falmouth, where he earned a high reputation as a lawyer. He was a graduate of the law department of the University of Michigan. From Falmouth he returned to Butler, and lived on his farm there until his death in 1904. Originally he was a democrat, but in later years affiliated with the republican party. He was a very active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. John H. Fryer married Frances Norris, who lived all her life in Pendleton County and was born and died near Butler. Of their children Calvin, the oldest, is a farmer near Butler; Laura, living on her farm near Butler, is the widow of Lafayette McClung, a printer for many years and later a farmer; Louis P. was the third among

Louis P. Fryer attended the public schools of Falmouth and Butler, graduated from the Falmouth Academy in 1883, and pursued his law studies in his father’s office until his admission to the bar in 1885. Judge Fryer kept his offices as an attorney at Falmouth from his admission to the bar until January, 1904. He was admitted to the bar when twenty-one years of age, and about that time was chosen police judge of Falmouth, serving three terms. He was county attorney one term and commonwealth attorney from 1897 to 1903. The valuable services he rendered in these offices was an important factor in his elevation to the bench. Judge Fryer began his first six year term as judge of the Eighteenth Judicial District in January, 1904. He was re-elected in 1909 and again in 1915. This judicial district comprises the counties of Pendleton, Harrison, Nicholas and Robertson. Judge Fryer has his offices and home in a very beautiful residence just out of the corporate limits of Butler. The house stands on an elevation and is surrounded by large and well kept grounds.

Judge Fryer is a democrat in politics, a member of the Christian Church, and is affiliated with the Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, and a member of the Kentucky State Bar Association. He gave an active and helpful influence to the promotion of the success of all war drives in Pendleton County. In July, 1918, at Lexington, Judge Fryer married Miss Eva Bradford, a native of Cincinnati.

Bob C. Overbey, M. D. Distinguished as a physician and surgeon, Dr. Bob C. Overbey occupies a pre-eminent place among the professional men of Ballard County, where for a number of years he has devoted his high attainments to accomplishing what has brought him recognitions and honors of an enviable nature. Doctor Overbey’s achievements are based upon an intimate knowledge of the intricate subjects of human anatomy and scientific therapeutics. Like many another capable and successful man, he did not set out in life with the intention of accomplishing something phenomenal, but at the outset of his career he placed a just valuation on honor, integrity and determination, and with those qualities as capital has won for himself a well deserved place in the Kentucky field of medicine and surgery. His practice is in and about La Center, but during the close of the war he lived in a camp near Warrensburg, where he served the government as a medic, and in camp received the benefit of his skill and experience.

Doctor Overbey belongs to that noble band of physicians and surgeons who, placing their personal interests second to their love for their kind, went into the service of their country to minister to its sick and wounded soldiers during the time of war.

Doctor Overbey was born in Graves County, Kentucky, October 5, 1877, a son of Frank H. Overbey, and grandson of Peter William Overbey, a native of Virginia. The Overbeys came originally from England, but from Colonial times have been established in this country, settlement being first made by them in Virginia. Peter William Overbey was one of the pioneers of Graves County, Kentucky, where he practiced medicine and was engaged in farming. His death occurred in Graves County before the birth of his grandson, Doctor Overbey. He was married to Elizabeth Overbey, a distant relative, who was also born in Virginia, and died in Graves County.

Frank H. Overbey was born in Graves County, Kentucky, in 1850, and he now lives at Lone Oak, McCracken County, Kentucky. Reared in his native county, he developed into one of its agriculturalists, and lived there until 1884, when he moved to Marshall County and for two years was engaged in operating a saw-mill. Returning to Graves County in 1886, he resumed his farming, and lived there until 1894, when he went to Murray, Kentucky, and for some years was profitably engaged in merchandising. In 1904 he went back to Marshall County and was there engaged in farming until he retired in 1919, when he returned to Paducah and, since 1920, he has been a resident of Paducah, Kentucky, and is now living there and is occupied with civil engineering. In politics he is a democrat. A man of intensely religious views, he finds in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church the expression of his belief and an outlet for his desire to raise the standards of morality and Christian living. He married Mary E. Hargrove, who was born in Stuart County, Tennessee, in 1820, and they became the parents of the following children: Doctor Overbey, who was the eldest; Ruby, who died at the age of eighteen years; Guy, who died at the age of seventeen years; Laura, who is living with her parents; Clyde, who is an educator connected with a school at Richmond, Virginia; Kelley, a commercial instructor who lives at Bowling Green, Kentucky; Roscoe, who is in an insurance and real-estate business at Paducah, Kentucky; Harry, who is an automobile tire salesman of Paducah, Kentucky; and two who died in infancy.

Doctor Overbey first attended the rural schools of Graves County, and then the high school of Murray, Kentucky, from which he was graduated in 1860. He then entered the Hospital College of Medicine of Louisville, Kentucky, and was graduated therefrom in 1863, at which time he married Sarah Swindford, a native of Harrison County, Kentucky, who founded the family in Madison County, Kentucky, where he acquired extensive tracts of land and developed much of it to farmland purposes. He lived out his life in Madison County. One of his sons, James De Jarnette, was a major in Colonel Dudley's Regiment during the War of 1812, and for many years was prominent in county and state affairs while a resident of Madison County. Another son, John D. Tyrrengood, who died while with the army in the War of 1812, being in charge of a transportation train. Still another son of Daniel De Jarnette was Abijah De Jarnette, grandfather of the Williams-town banker. He was born in Madison County, Kentucky, in 1788, and for many years was identified with farming in Madison County, but in 1846 moved to a frontier district, Andrew County, in Northwest Mississippi, where he died in 1890. He married Sarah Swindford, a native of Harrison County, who died in Grant County. Their son, J. W. De Jarnette, was born in Harrison County in 1830, was reared there and in 1871 removed to Grant County, where he married and where he had extensive interests as a farmer. He served as sheriff of Grant County, was an active democrat, a member of the Christian Church, and spent his last years residing in New York, New York. His wife was Margaret Ann Williams, a life-long resident of Grant County, where she was born in 1820 and died in 1888. A. G. De Jarnette is the oldest of her children. Sarah Elizabeth became the wife of G. W. Osborne, a farmer, and both died in Grant County. John M. was a farmer and died in Ohio, Monira, of Labelle, Missouri, is the widow of Dr. A. M. Thompson. Miss Romania died in Grant County at the age of thirty-two. Charles A. was a farmer and died in Grant County aged twenty-six. A. G. De Jarnette has been practically a life-long resident of Grant County. He attended rural schools, spent two years in the literary department of the State University at Lexington, and another two years as a student of law at the University, graduating LL.B. in February, 1869. In the same year he began his practice at Williamstown, and in his devotion to the interests of his profession has been one of marked regularity and attended with exceptional success. He still keeps his law offices in the Odd Fellows Building. For the past six years he has been president of the Bank of Williamstown and has been a director for twenty years. He owns considerable real estate in Williamstown, including a modern home on Cincinnati and Washington streets, and during the last four years commonwealth attorney and since 1885 he has been local council for the C. N. O. & T. P. and the L. & N. Railroad companies. He has served on the City Council and on the School Board, is an active democrat and a member of the Baptist Church. In December, 1869, in Grant County, he married Miss circle of friends. Doctor and Mrs. Overbey have one daughter, Emmalee, who was born April 1, 1916. Doctor Overbey is a man noted for his clearness of speech and breadth of view, and his advice is sought and followed in civic affairs. At the beginning of his career he learned to work for knowledge and to retain what he learned, and is recognized as one of the most skilled and experienced men of his profession in the county.
Alice Elliston, who died nearly forty-seven years later, in June, 1916. Her parents were J. T. and Maria (Merrell) Elliston, her father a farmer. Mr. De Jarnette has four children: Robert E., a druggist at Dry Ridge, Grant County; J. B., unmarried, for many years a farmer and now an inspector and trustee of the Jury Fund of Grant County; Alice, living with her father, wife of W. E. Sullivan; and Marie, wife of Dr. J. J. Marshall, a physician and surgeon at Crittenden, Kentucky.

JAMES WILLIAM WEBB, cashier and active manager of the Bank of Williamstown, has been identified with that institution for twenty years and prior to that time a merchant and otherwise active in the business affairs of Williamstown.

The Bank of Williamstown was established with a state charter in 1884, and has a capital of $50,000, surplus and profits of $50,000, and deposits aggregating $500,000. The bank home is a modern brick structure on Main Street. Its officers are A. G. De Jarnette, president; J. T. Scott, vice president; and J. W. Webb, cashier.

James William Webb was born in Grant County, February 24, 1859. He is of Welsh ancestry, though the Webbs have been in America since Colonial times. They first settled in North Carolina where Mr. Webb's grandfather, William Webb, was born in Stokes County in 1790. He followed farming and planting in his native state, and in 1844 settled in Grant County, Kentucky, and was living at Cordova when he died in 1865. He was a staunch democrat in politics. His wife was Elizabeth Gray, who was born in Stokes County, North Carolina, in 1793, and died in Grant County, Kentucky, in 1864. Of their eight children two are still living: Joseph, a farmer at Corinth in Grant County; and James P., a retired farmer at Williamstown.

William Floyd Webb, father of James W. Webb, was born in Stokes County, North Carolina, in 1829, and was about fifteen years of age when the family came to Grant County, Kentucky. Here his active career was spent in agricultural pursuits, and he was one of the leading farmers and highly esteemed citizens of the county. He died at Williamstown in 1897. He was a democrat and an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In Harrison County, Kentucky, he married Elizabeth B. Redd, who was born there and died at Williamstown in 1903. Their family consisted of nine children: John A., who for many years was a miner, died in New York City at the age of sixty; Miss Elizabeth, who died at Williamstown at the age of fifty-eight; James William; Mary, wife of H. C. Conrad, a farmer at Hamilton, Missouri; Joseph F., a farmer who died at Houston, Texas, at the age of fifty-seven; G. S. Webb, a stock dealer and tobaccoist at Williamstown; S. R. Webb, who is a well known and leading dry goods merchant of Williamstown; Charles T., who for many years has been a Pullman conductor and lives at Houston, Texas; and Holly, a farmer at Woodford, Kentucky.

James William Webb attended the public schools of Williamstown, graduating from high school in 1877, and since then, for a period of forty-five years, has been giving his vigor and energies to business affairs at Williamstown. He entered the dry goods business and built up a flourishing trade and was active in its management until 1901, when he became identified with the Bank of Williamstown as cashier and is also a director.

During the World war Mr. Webb had the satisfaction of seeing several of his sons enrolled in the Government's service. At home he was chairman of the Liberty Loan drives for the county and accepted every opportunity to be useful in some capacity to the community. Mr. Webb is a democrat in politics. He owns a modern home on North Main Street.

In 1888, at Williamstown, he married Miss Minnie Barbour, daughter of John Q. and Maggie (Ricketts) Barbour, the latter a resident of Covington. Her father was a photographer by profession and died at Williamstown. Mrs. Webb is a graduate of the Williams- ton High School. They are the parents of five children: Edward D., the oldest, trained as a soldier at Camp Lewis, Washington, and is now a merchant at Snohomish, Washington; Viola, living at home, is the wife of Otto Halla, now engaged in mining in California. Floyd G., also a merchant at Snohomish, Washington, was in the arsenal branch of the army service during the World war and was stationed at a number of posts, but has now been ordered out as a top sergeant at Indianapolis. John Hal, now in his sixties as a merchant at Lexington, was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Officers Training Camp at Louisville, and was mustered out at Louisville. Marguerite, the youngest of the children, is the wife of F. A. Harrison, a Williamstown attorney.

LEWIS MANNING. Among the great industries that provide for the most urgent needs of humanity the mining of coal must be given a high place. For this mineral, despite the discoveries of scientists along the line of substitutes, still continues in the twentieth century a vital necessity for domestic comfort and commercial expansion. The wide distribution of coal in the United States has brought a large measure of prosperity to many sections here, where men of experience and foresight have not hesitated to invest vast capital for the development of the coal fields. The State of Kentucky is rich in large areas of workable coal land, and mining in Harlan County, has proved one of the most profitable industries of this part of the state. One of the leading coal men of the county is Lewis Manning of Evarts, who is vice president, general manager and a large stockholder of the Harlan-Liberty Coal Company, which has extensive coal interests here. Mr. Manning is a practical miner and has been continuously identified with his industry since his boyhood.

Lewis Manning was born August 3, 1886, in Claiborne County, Tennessee, and is a son of Andrew and Martha (Cook) Manning, the former of whom still resides in Claiborne County, where he was born in 1851. His father was John Manning, who was born in Ohio in 1834. In early manhood he settled in Claiborne County, Tennessee, and died there in 1916, a farmer all his life. Andrew Manning spent a few years in Texas, but otherwise he has always lived on his farm here in this county. He married Martha Cook, who was born in 1867 in Rockcastle County, Kentucky, and died in 1905 in Claiborne County, Tennessee. They had the following children: Lewis; John, who is a mine operator at Artemus, Knox County, Kentucky; George, who is a miner, lives at Artemus; Cora, who resides in Tennessee with her father; Retheca, who is the wife of Albert Llewellyn, a coal miner at Artemus; Tennessee, who resides in the old home with her husband; and Ella, who is the wife of John Helton, a farmer in Claiborne County, Tennessee.

Lewis Manning remained on the home farm assisting his father until sixteen years old, in the meanwhile attending the country schools, and then decided to try mining for awhile. He worked five years at La Follette in Campbell County and two years on Clear Fork in Clay County. In 1913 he came to Knox County, Kentucky, where he continued with the Carter Coal Company and the R. C. Twy Coal Company until he began coal operating for himself in 1916, and three years later came to Evarts. Here he opened a coal mine for the Harlan-Liberty Coal Company, which he still operates. It is situated on Bailey's Creek, and is a profitable property, producing 200 tons of coal daily.
In November, 1920, the Harlan-Liberty Coal Company bought a mine from the Rye Hollow Coal Company, which is located near the other mine, and a still better proposition, as its capacity it 500 tons daily. In addition to his large coal interests he is concerned in other substantial enterprises, a stockholder in the Black Mountain Bank at Evarts.

At Barbourville, Kentucky, in 1900, Mr. Manning married Miss Lillie Maidan, a daughter of Shult and Clementine (Hatfield) Maidan, farming people near Jellico, Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Manning have five children, namely: Edker, born in 1911; Stella, born in 1913; James, born in 1915; Porter, born in 1917, and Maude, born in 1920.

Mr. Manning is a member of Yocum Creek Lodge No. 897, F. and A. M. In his political views he is a republican, differing from his father, who has always been a democrat, but despite this difference both have been notably good citizens. During the World war Mr. Manning was identified with all the local war activities as a patriotic citizen, and was generous with his time and money in all the various organizations. Personally he impresses one as an able and efficient business man, and his honorable business methods have gained him the respect and confidence of the good people of the city in which he has chosen to make his home.

Edward W. Wear. In no avenue of business do men become so widely known as journalist, not always as personalities, but as influences, their printed thoughts reaching thousands who would be heard by perhaps a score. Hence the responsibility of a journalist is of exceeding weight, and there have been times when a newspaper has forced reformatory legislation and been instrumental in changing public policies. An honest and undismayed press has brought about, upon many occasions, unbelievable improvements, and to the credit of the men who direct the destinies of the journals of the country is said that the majority of them are guided by high ideals, and support freedom, courage and justice. Edward W. Wear, editor and manager of the "La Center Advance," is one of the newspaper men of Ballard County who are earnestly endeavoring to abolish the sensational and uphold the safe and sane in their work.

Edward W. Wear was born at Murray, Kentucky, December 5, 1863, a son of A. H. Wear, and comes of an old and honored American family, of Scotch-Irish stock, representatives of which have been in this country since its Colonial epoch, when settlement was made in Virginia, from whence men of ability have gone into other parts of the county.

A. H. Wear was born in Alabama in 1818, and his death occurred at Murray, Kentucky, in 1866. He was brought to Kentucky by his parents when a boy, and they settled in Calloway county, where he was reared, educated and married. For many years he was a druggist of Murray, being the first to engage in that line of business at that point. Both as a democrat and member of the Christian Church he took an active part in local affairs, and was held in the highest esteem. For nearly forty years he served the Masonic Lodge as a loyal and honored treasurer. A. H. Wear was married to Sallie Meloon, who was born at Murray, Kentucky, in 1826, and died there in 1910. Their children were as follows: W. O., who is the editor and proprietor of the "Calloway Times," lives at Murray, Kentucky: Emily, who died at Murray, Kentucky, aged sixty-nine years, was the widow of Edward Starks, a farm owner, and is buried in the Democrat cemetery in in Nashville, Tennessee; J. M., who was a carpenter and builder, died at Los Angeles, California; D. M., who was a farmer in the vicinity of Murray, is deceased; Lucy, who married Daniel Jones, a phosphate mine operator, died in Florida, as did her husband; H. P., who succeeded to his father's drug business at Murray; Mattie E., who is unmarried, resides at Murray; J. V., who was editor and proprietor of the "La Center Advance for twelve years," died April 30, 1920; B. E., who lives at Murray; and Fred, assisting his brother, H. P.; and Edward W., who was the youngest.

After attending the public schools of Murray Mr Wear took a course at the Murray Institute, from which he was graduated in 1891. He then began learning the printer's trade with the "Murray News," remaining there for two years, and later worked as a journeyman printer at Benton and Paducah, Kentucky, and Erin and Galena, Illinois. Mr. Wear then edited and published the "Ballard Yoeman" at Wickliffe, from November 10, 1911, until November, 1917, at that time going to Eddyville, Kentucky, where he was employed on the "Lyon County Herald." His connection with that journal continued until July 1, 1920, when he came to La Center to become editor and manager of his present newspaper. It was established in 1905 and is a strong democratic organ and the official paper of Ballard County. Its circulation is in Ballard and surrounding counties, and it is the leading journal of its size in Western Kentucky. The plant and offices are located on Broadway, La Center. Mr. Wear has long been active as a democrat and served in the City Council of Wickliffe for two years, and on the school board of the same city for five years. Brought up in the faith of the Christian Church, he early took a traveling self with that denomination and has continued one of its members. He is a member of the Printers' Union.

In 1894 Mr. Wear was united in marriage with Miss Lena Aaron, at Benton, Kentucky. She is a daughter of John and Sarah (Little) Aaron, both of whom are deceased. He was a railroad engineer out of Paducah, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Wear became the parents of the following children: Joe L. Wear is now a traveling salesman for the Miles Medical Company out of Elk hart, Indiana, and a veteran of the great war; Archibald H., who is a drug clerk residing at Cairo, Illinois; Meattilean, who assists her father, is in her last year at the La Center High School and a young lady of great promise; and Ione, who is also attending the La Center High School.

Joe L. Wear entered the United States service in September, 1917, and was sent to Camp Taylor and then to the Officers' Training Camp School at Petersburg, Virginia, where he received his commission as second lieutenant. The armistice was signed before he was sent abroad, and he was honorably discharged at Camp Devens, Massachusetts, in November, 1918.

Mr. Wear has brought with him to La Center a wide newspaper experience and conspicuous native ability, and is giving to his present paper a high moral and editorial tone, and at the same time is producing an organ which gives to his readers the local news and happenings, as well as that of the world in general.

Nicholas Henry Ellis, M. D. During the past seventeen years Doctor Ellis has had a busy life as a physician and surgeon in several counties. Born at Williamstown, and is one of the highly esteemed citizens of Grant County both for his professional work and his public spirit. Doctor Ellis, who was thoroughly well educated for his chosen career, was born near Butler in Pendleton County October 25, 1867. His grandfather, John Ellis, was a native of Virginia and when a young man moved to Pendleton County, where his career and that of his family has been events in the vicinity of Butler. L. H. Ellis, father of Doctor Ellis, spent all his life near Butler, where he was born in 1830 and died in 1893. During his active life he conducted a large farm. He was a democrat and was a pillar in the Baptist Church of his community. His wife was Missouri M. Dicken, who was born in 1828, near Butler, and died in 1900. They were the parents of ten children, but three of the older ones died in childhood. The other seven were: James J., for many years a railroad agent in the Louisville & Nashville, who died at Butler at the age of sixty-eight; Melcena, wife of W. N. Carmes, a farmer near Butler; Rev. C. S. Ellis, pastor of the Baptist Church at Dry Ridge in Grant County; E. O. Ellis, a farmer at Montpelier, Indiana; Rev. A. H. Ellis, pastor of the South Side Baptist Church at Covington; Nicholas Henry; and Nora, wife of C. E. Rouse, a farmer near Butler.

Mr. Henry Ellis acquired a high school education in Pendleton County, spent one term in the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, and after the four-year academic course graduated Bachelor of Science from Kentucky State College at Lexington in 1901. He soon afterward entered the Louisville Medical College, graduating M. D. in 1904. For three years he practiced at Finer in Kenton County, and then looked after the interests of a large country practice, with home at Goforth in Pendleton County, for ten years. Since 1917 Doctor Ellis has had his home at Williamstown, with offices over Theobald's drug store on Main Street, and he lives in one of the thoroughly modern and comfortable residences of the city, on North Main Street.

Doctor Ellis is the type of physician who finds time for his responsibilities and interests even in the World War, he twice applied for admission to the army, but was rejected on account of overweight. Failing in that ambition, he did all he could at home, especially through his work as examining physician for the Grant County Draft Board and by use of his financial means. During the past three years he has been county health officer of Grant County and is also designated examiner for war risk insurance in the county. Doctor Ellis has a farm of 135 acres seven miles east of Williamstown, and is specializing in the production of pure milk, operating a dairy of sixteen cows.

He is a democrat in politics. For eleven years he has been moderator of the Crittenden Baptist Association and was again elected to that office in the past year. In 1907, at Covington, Doctor Ellis married Miss Mary B. Rich, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Rich, of Williamsburg, Kentucky. His father is a farmer and rural mail carrier. Doctor and Mrs. Ellis have one daughter, Virginia, born March 6, 1910.

George Thomas Fuller, M. D. For nearly forty years Doctor Fuller has performed every service in the scope of an able physician and surgeon in Graves County, and for the greater part of that time has been an honored physician and surgeon of his neighborhood. He is now a member of the Kentucky Board of Health.

Doctor Fuller descends from New England ancestors who came from England at the time of the Mayflower. His grandfather, William Fuller, was born at Charlestown, Massachusetts, went south to Charleston, South Carolina, and in 1830 established his family in Ballard County, Kentucky. He was a hunter by trade, and served in the Confederate army during the Civil War. His wife was Mary Fosdick, who was born at Charlestown, Massachusetts, in 1780 and died in Ballard County, Kentucky, in 1860. Charles Henry Fuller, father of Doctor Fuller, was born on Kings Street in Charleston, South Carolina, in 1813, and lived in his native city to the age of sixteen. Then, after a year of residence in Greenville, South Carolina, his parents came West, in 1830, to Hickman County, Kentucky. Hickman was then a large county from which subsequently both Ballard and Carlisle counties were separated. Charles Henry Fuller was married in Ballard County and spent his life there as a successful farmer. He died in 1883. He was a democrat, a very active member of the Christian Church, and was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. His wife was Jane Bernice Lamm, who was born on a North Carolina plantation in 1815 and died in Ballard County January 18, 1880. She was the mother of eight children: William David, a farmer who died in Ballard County in 1862; James Henry, likewise a farmer, who died in Texas in 1860; John Andrew, who while serving as a captain in the Confederate Army was killed at Harrisburg, Mississippi, July 14, 1864; Robert and Charles W., both of whom died in infancy; Mary A., who died in Carlisle County, Kentucky, in 1865; George Thomas; and Furman, who died at the age of four years. The father of these children was Henry, son of Mr. and Mrs. Susan (Hite) Farmer, who died in Ballard County in 1894, the mother of two children: Mada, wife of Albert Blevell, a Hickman County planter; and Ethan Allen, a farmer in Carlisle County.

George Thomas Fuller was born in Ballard County April 9, 1854, and spent his early youth in a country district which did not altogether escape the destructive influences of the Civil war. He attended the rural schools, and in 1871 graduated from Milburn Academy in Carlisle County. After teaching in Ballard and Carlisle counties during 1874-5 he attended the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati, from which he received his M. B. degree in 1877. Doctor Fuller began practice in Ballard County, but in 1881 removed to Lowes, Graves County, and performed all the duties of a busy country practitioner until the war which year he has been a resident of Mayfield, with a continuing prestige as a physician and surgeon. His offices are at the corner of Eighth Street and Broadway. In 1890 Doctor Fuller took special work in eye, ear, nose and throat diseases at the Cincinnati Eclectic Medical College. He is a member of the County and State Medical Societies, the National Eclectic Medical Association, and is one of the valued members of the State Board of Health. Politically he is a democrat, and is a member of the Christian Church.

Doctor Fuller owns a comfortable home at 109 North Seventh Street in Mayfield. He married in Graves County in 1887, at Lowes, Miss Lizzie L. Lowe, daughter of Rev. W. F. and Mrs. (Samuels) Lowe, both now deceased. Her father for many years was an esteemed Baptist clergyman of Graves County. To Doctor and Mrs. Fuller were born seven children: Terrell Lowe, the oldest, was a graduate of the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati, served one year as intern in the Bethesda Hospital at Cincinnati and a similar time in Flower Hospital at New York City, and died in South America at the age of twenty-seven while serving as surgeon of a railroad company in Peru. Bernice, the second child, died when one year old. George T., also a graduate of the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati, was enlisted and on duty as a member of the Medical Reserve Corps at Cincinnati during the war and is now practicing medicine at Benson, Arizona. The fourth child, Eva Rubel, was a graduate of Georgetown College in Kentucky and died at the age of eighteen. William Howe, who was also with a Medical Unit in the army at Cincinnati during the war, is still a student in the Medical School of the University of Kentucky. John D. Fuller died at the age of thirteen years. James Walker Tufts Fuller, the youngest of the family, is a student in the University of Virginia, taking a course preparatory to entering medical school.

George H. Shaber, superintendent of the city schools of Williamstown, has been teaching and attending school for more than thirty years, except for nearly two years while enlisted as a soldier and officer of the National Army during the World War. Captain Shaber, who came out of the army with that rank, was born at Alexandria, Campbell County, December 25, 1892. His grandfather was a native of Germany, settled at Alexandria when a young man and spent the rest of his life there as a farmer. He married in Campbell County. Fred Shaber, father of Captain Shaber, has spent all his life at Alexandria, where he was born in 1851, and at the age of seventy is still active cultivating a large farm and growing fruit on a large scale. He is a republican and a member of the Evangelical Church. He married Anna Yost, who was born at Alexandria in 1864. Their family of children consists of the following: Harry, a farmer at Boone Grove, Indiana; John, an electrical engineer at Fort Madison, Iowa; E. H., a farmer, is connected with Proctor & Gamble Company at Cincinnati; Paul, assisting his father on the farm; and Edward, a high school student at Alexandria.

George H. Shaber graduated from the Alexandria High School in 1912 and the following two years taught in Campbell County. In 1917 he graduated A. B. from the Kentucky State University at Lexington, and in April of that year, at the very beginning of the war with Germany, entered the First Officers Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, and after four months was commissioned a second lieutenant. He was on duty at Camp Taylor, Louisville, until August, 1918, then spent two months at Camp Jackson, South Carolina, and was at the School of Instruction at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, June 23, 1918, mustered out December 13, 1918. He was commissioned a first lieutenant at Camp Jackson and at Fort Sill was promoted to the rank of captain in the Field Artillery.

After his war service Captain Shaber was for one year principal of the high school at Morgantown, Kentucky, and in September, 1920, entered upon his duties as superintendent of the city schools at Williamstown. He is the oldest living superintendent there are at present. As a result of a three months' campaign, the scholarship enrollment is 260. Captain Shaber is Commander of Robert P. McClachlan Post No. 137, American Legion, in Grant County. He is a member of the Kentucky Educational Association, is a republican, affiliated with the Evangelical Church, and is a member of Morganfield Lodge No. 66, F. and A. M., of which he is present master. He married Miss Irene Houston, daughter of Dr. J. F. and Nettie (Wheelor) Houston, her father a well known physician of Alexandria. Mrs. Shaber is a graduate of the Alexandria High School and of Oxford College for Women at Wooster, Ohio, where she received the A. B. degree. Captain and Mrs. Shaber have one son, John Frederick, born March 20, 1921.

Fred Ambrose Harrison. A busy young lawyer at Williamstown, Fred Ambrose Harrison grew up in Grant County, where his people have lived for three generations, and since entering practice he has proved not only an able lawyer but a progressive leader in all community affairs.

His great-grandfather was William Harrison, a native of Virginia, who settled in pioneer days at Mason in Grant County, where he lived out his life as a farmer. The grandfather of the Williamstown attorney was R. E. Harrison, a life-long resident in the Mason community and a farmer. He married Mary Hill, a native of Pennsylvania, who died at Mason. J. M. Harrison was born at Mason March 3, 1822, and died in December of that year. He is remembered by those identified with the management of a large farm in that community. He still owns his farm but his home since 1912 has been in the City of Lexington. He was a member of the Fiscal Court of Grant County from 1897 to 1901, and is a democrat in politics. J. M. Harrison married Katie Ruholl, who was born at Mason in April, 1805. Fred A. is the oldest of their four children. He is a merchant at Williamstown. Paul is a farmer and stock dealer at Mason; and Mary Catherine, born in 1910, is a student in the Lexington public schools.

Fred Ambrose Harrison was born at Mason on his father's farm July 17, 1893, and as a boy attended rural schools there and in 1911 graduated from the Williams- town High School. He taught school a year before entering the University of Kentucky at Lexington, where he was graduated L.L.B. in 1916. He is a member of the honorary oratorical fraternity Tau Kappa Alpha. Mr. Harrison began practice at Williamstown in 1916, and has since been associated with A. G. De Jarnette, a Williamstown lawyer, for half a century. The firm's offices are in the Old Fellows Building. Mr. Harrison is a member of the Grant County Bar Association and served as President of the Bar from 1917-19 was city attorney of Williamstown.

In the early stages of the World war he was secretary of the Grant County Chapter of the Red Cross, chairman of the Speakers' Bureau of the county, and local chairman of Liberty Loan drives. He also served as chief of the American Protective League in the county. In June, 1918, he enlisted and spent six months at Camp Taylor, Louisville, where he received a commission as second lieutenant in the Field Artillery. He was honorably discharged December 23, 1918.

December 26, 1916, at Lexington, Mr. Harrison married Miss Marguerite Webb. She is a daughter of James W. and Minnie (Barbour) Webb, a prominent family at Williamstown, where her father for many years was postmaster and her mother is a native of Williamstown. Mrs. Harrison is a graduate of the Williamstown High School.

Robert Lee Webb, county judge of Grant County, has practiced law at Williamstown more than thirty-five years and represents a family that has been in Grant County since the early fifties.

Fred Ambrose Harrison was the late John H. Webb, whose career was distinguished by extra-ordinary achievements in business affairs and prominence as a citizen. He was born in North Carolina in 1827. He was reared and educated in his native state, and in 1847, at the age of twenty, came to Kentucky with his parents, William and Elizabeth (Gray) Webb, who located at Camp Sill, Louisville, Kentucky. In 1851 moved to Cordova, Grant County. William Webb was a native of North Carolina and was a farmer by occupation, living in Grant County from 1851 until his death in 1865. His wife was a native of Virginia. Their children were: John H.; Mary Clark, who died at Williamstown at the age of ninety-three; W. F. Webb, a stock trader who died at Williamstown aged 66: Joseph, a merchant who died at Cordova; George, a merchant who died at Williamstown when eighty-four years of age; James P. Webb, a farmer near Williamstown; and Martha, who became the wife of Dr. J. W. Johnson, and both died at Winchester, Kentucky.

John H. Webb entered merchandising at Cordova, but in 1861 moved to Williamstown. He served four years as deputy under Sheriff John W. De Jarnette, and was then elected chief sheriff. After four years in that office he resumed farming for three years and then established a drygoods store at Williamstown. He built up a good business, one of the largest in Grant County, and his name and character were identified with that enterprise for more than half a century. In 1872, Mr. Webb married Cornelia A. Stroud, who was born at Williamstown in 1833 and died there in 1905. Of their family the oldest is Dr. A. D. Webb, a graduate of the Ohio Medical College of Cincinnati and a practicing physician at Williamstown; Robert Lee is the second in age; Mary E. is the wife of Clay-rad, a farmer in Williamstown; Henrietta S., of Williamstown, widow of R. T. Dickerson, who was a leaf tobacco dealer and died at Williamstown December 30, 1920; Laura, wife of James W. Chipman, a farmer and leaf tobacco dealer at Williamstown; Frank, a traveling salesman living at Cincinnati.

Robert Lee Webb, who was born at Williamstown April 13, 1864, had a thorough preparation for his chosen career as a lawyer. He attended the grammar and high schools of Williamstown, completed the sophomore year in the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, and after two years' course graduated in 1885 with the LL. B. degree from the Cincinnati Law School. The high reputation which he has sustained as an able lawyer, as a judge, and as the leading criminal practice in Grant County. He began to take an interest in politics only after his success in private practice was assured. He served as county treasurer from 1900 to 1917, and in November, 1917, was elected county judge, and has been engaged in the duties of his four-year term since the first Monday of January, 1918. His offices are in the court house annex. Judge Webb is a stockholder and director in the Bank of Williamstown. He served on the W. S. Savings Stamp drive and otherwise participated in every patriotic movement. He is a democrat and is a member of Williamstown Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics.

December 5, 1916, at Lexington, Judge Webb married Mrs. Katherine (Walden) Harrison, daughter of J. A. and Mary (Davis) Walden, residents on a farm at Crestwood, Oldham County, Kentucky.

Arthur Blankenship Cornett. One of the greatest factors contributing to the prosperity of any section of the country is the well balanced, energetic business man of sound judgment and sterling integrity who brings with him into commercial life high ideals of both business and civic responsibility. His influence is to give solidity to the enterprises in which he engages, and true prosperity must rest on such a foundation. Harlan County has not had to go far afield in search for such citizens, for she has produced them, and of these perhaps few are better known than Judge A. B. Cornett, who is vice president of the First State Bank of Harlan and for many years identified with leading financial and industrial interests in this section of Kentucky.

Judge Cornett was born on his father's farm in Harlan County, Kentucky, November 11, 1853. His parents were John L. and Precious A. (Ely) Cornett, both life long residents of Harlan County. The Cornett ancestry leads back to France, where the great-grandfather, Roger Cornett, was born. He was a young man when he came to America and found a home in Scott County, Virginia, where he became a planter and slaveholder. Next in line or descent was William Cornett, who was born in Scott County, Virginia, in 1798. He came early to Harlan County, Kentucky, establishing himself on the bank of the Cumberland River as a farmer and blacksmith. He married Nancy Lewis, who was born in Knox County, Kentucky in 1807, and died on the Cumberland River plantation where Judge Cornett was reared. She was a daughter of Judge John Lewis, who was one of the first judges of Harlan County. William Cornett died on his Cumberland River estate in 1868.

John L. Cornett was born in Harlan County, Kentucky, in 1828, and died in 1910, having spent his entire life along the Cumberland River. He was an extensive and successful farmer, and owned thousands of acres of valuable coal and timber land. In his political views he was a faithful Republican, and from youth had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Precious A. Ely, born in 1827, in Lee County, Virginia, who died in Harlan County in 1908. They had the following children: William W., who is a merchant and farmer, lives on the Poor Fork of the Cumberland River in Harlan County; Arthur B.; Jonathan, who is a farmer on the Cumberland River; George, who died when seven years of age; Nancy Jane, who married Israel Blair and resides near Barbourville, Kentucky; Robert N., who is a coal operator at Barbourville; and Bethia, who is a farmer near Paint Lick, Garrard County, Kentucky.

Arthur B. Cornett grew up on his father's farm and obtained his education in the country schools. When twenty-five years old he embarked in the mercantile business at Poor Fork, where he continued for four years. In November, 1883, he was elected county superintendent of schools to fill out an unexpired term, and after serving one year re-entered the mercantile business. He continued in the Cornett-Lewis Coal Company, in which he was largely interested, until he retired in order to assume the duties of clerk of the County Court to which office he had been elected in August, 1889. In November, 1893, he was re-elected for another term of four years, and in November, 1897, was elected county judge, the responsibilities of which position he assumed in January, 1908, and served for four years. Judge Cornett is a republican in politics, but since retiring from the bench has never accepted any political office and has devoted all his time to his numerous business interests, which are largely concerned with coal and lumber. He owns 4,000 acres of coal lands in Harlan, Letcher, Perry and Leslie counties, Kentucky; is a director in the Cornett-Lewis Coal Company, the mines of which are situated on Clover Fork of the Cumberland River at Fugate Creek; formerly was president of the Harlan Gas Company, of which he is still a stockholder; until 1915, when he sold his interest, he was president of the Harlan Home Coal Company; and since its organization he has been vice president of the First State Bank of Harlan, Kentucky, and one of its founders.

The First State Bank of Harlan was organized October 1, 1902, and the operating officers are: A. B. Cornett, vice president; W. W. Lewis, cashier; Fred C. Lewis, assistant cashier; O. M. Hoskins, assistant cashier; E. T. Boggess, assistant cashier, with capital and surplus: $105,000; undivided profits, $42,500; deposits, $2,000,000.

At Harlan, Kentucky, in 1880, Mr. Cornett married Miss Amanda E. Hurst, who died in March, 1900. She was a daughter of C. E. and Mary (Rice) Hurst, both deceased. Mr. Hurst was a soldier in the Union Army during the war between the states, and at the time of his death was clerk of the court of Harlan County. To Mr. and Mrs. Cornett the following children were born: Ollie, who is the wife of J. W. Lewis, cashier of the First State Bank of Harlan; Denver B., who is a coal operator and president of the Cornett-Lewis Coal Company, resides at Louisville, Kentucky; Carrie E., who died at Harlan in 1915, was the wife of Dr. William Martin, of this place, who married for his second wife a Miss Hull, and together they operate the Shady Lawn Hospital at Harlan; Ora, who is the wife of C. B. Cawood, a coal operator at Harlan, who is interested in the Cornett-Lewis Coal Company and also owns a one-half interest in the Hamon Hardware Company; Clara E., who died at the age of eighteen years; Herbert, who died when six years old; John Frederick, who died when one year old; Mary, who is the wife of Robert Scott, a stockholder and bookkeeper for the Wilson-Burger Coal Company; and Ella, who is the wife of Homer Highbaugh, who is in the insurance business at Harlan. In 1917, at Cincinnati, Ohio, Mr. Cornett married Miss Dollie E. Brown, who is a native of Kansas. She graduated from Berea College, and is at present a teacher in the Harlan High School. She is also active in church work and especially the home mission work of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Cornett's private residence, at 128 Main Street, is one of the most pretentious in the city, and he also has an interest in the Shady Lawn Hospital buildings.
James Walton Bennett is one of the progressive young business men of Williamstown, a lumber and hardware dealer, having established himself in business a few years before the war and left it for nearly a year to serve the Government.

Mr. Bennett was born at Pelahatchee, Mississippi, December 18, 1852. His paternal ancestors came from Wales. His grandfather, Lewis Bennett, was a native of Alabama and in 1820 moved to a farm and plantation in Scott County, Mississippi, where he lived out his life. His son, John William Bennett, was born in Alabama in 1842, but was reared and married in Scott County, Mississippi, and in early life was a dentist. In 1880 he moved to Pelahatchee, Rankin County, and for a number of years was engaged in the lumber business. He is now living retired at Yazoo City. He is a democrat and for four years wore the uniform of a Confederate soldier. He was captured and part of the time was a prisoner of war at Camp Douglas, Chicago. He is a very loyal member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. John W. Bennett married Martha E. Patterson, who was born in Scott County in 1852. A brief record of their children is as follows: John P., a cashier of a bank at Yazoo City; Ola, wife of Carl Stingly, an attorney at Sumner, Mississippi; Katherine, wife of T. B. Thames, a wholesale lumber merchant living at Fort Mitchell, Kentucky; Donna, wife of Henry Clark, who is Sunday school field secretary of the Mississippi Conference; C. S. Bennett, a resident of Yazoo City and traveling salesman for the American Steel and Wire Company; also of the same city and a traveling representative for the Wade Hardware Company of Greenwood, that state; James W.; F. G. Bennett, manager of the branch house of the Wade Hardware Company at Clarksdale, Mississippi; Miss Ellie, at home; and Ethel, wife of P. L. Clements, connected with the Yazoo Grocery Company, wholesale.

James Walton Bennett acquired a public school education in Rankin County and Yazoo City, Mississippi, and attended through the sophomore year the University of Mississippi at Oxford. Leaving college in 1911, he was for three years assistant postmaster of Yazoo City, and in 1915 came to Williamstown, Kentucky, and with R. C. McNay of Crittenden acquired the present hardware and lumber business. They own a large modern store and yards on South Main Street and have one of the leading concerns of the kind in Crittenden County. During the early months of America's participation in the World war Mr. Bennett was actively associated with all the local committees in raising funds and prosecuting patriotic movements. February 24, 1918, he enlisted for the Signal Corps, was sent to Vancouver Barracks, Washington, and transferred to the Spruce Production Division, serving in that capacity until mustered out December 14, 1918, as a corporal. He is a Democrat in politics, is a member and superintendent of the Sunday School of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is the present worshipful master of Grant Lodge No. 85, F. and A. M.

On January 20, 1919, at Williamstown, he married Miss Cornelia Webb Conrad, daughter of Clay and Mary (Webb) Conrad, retired residents of Williamsport. Her father has held at different times the offices of county judge, sheriff and county court clerk. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett have one daughter, Ruth, born December 8, 1919.

William J. Schneider. Fortunately for the continued welfare of the country there are sensible and public-spirited men in its various sections who, while often bearing other business responsibilities of importance, still feel inclined to personally look carefully after their farming interests, and believe that aside from individual preference such a course contributes to neither social nor solidarity government. The United States today is profiting from America's agricultural abundance, and the ships that are carrying across the seas the products of American farms not only will give succor to the starving but go far to dispel the desperate claims of war and anarchy. One of the prominent men of Grant County, Kentucky, who from choice and public spirit as well as devoted to agricultural pursuits, is W. J. Schneider, bank director and postmaster at Crittenden.

William J. Schneider was born at Crittenden, Grant County, Kentucky, June 23, 1881. He is a son of J. and Mary K. (Brittenholm) Schneider, the former of whom died May 25, 1912, and from 1915 he lived retired at Crittenden. He was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, and was reared in Crittenden. He was educated in the public schools of Crittenden, and later went on a farm in Boone County, Kentucky, in the vicinity of Florence. While there he carried on farming until his marriage, then removed to Cynthia, Kentucky, where he embarked in the hotel business and remained until 1875, when he came to Crittenden, where he continued in the hotel business and also engaged in farming for many years afterward. He was a democrat and was widely known in political circles, and for a long period was identified with the order of Odd Fellows.

John Schneider was married in Boone County to Mary K. Brittenholm, who was born in Covington, Kentucky, in 1852, and died in 1912, while on a visit at Walton, Kentucky. They were the parents of the following children: Gertrude, who resided with her mother and was an instructor in the local schools; John A., who was a farmer; also of A. G. Reed, residing near Crittenden, a successful Grant County farmer; John C., who is a farmer near Crittenden; William J.; Henry, George and Benjamin, all of whom reside at the old home, the second older assisting in the operation of the home farm and the last named being a rural mail carrier; and Theresia, who also lived with her father until his death.

William J. Schneider with his brothers and sisters attended the public schools in the home neighborhood. He left school when nineteen years old, and since then has assisted in the operation of the homestead. It is a fine property situated just north of Crittenden, and Mr. Schneider has always maintained his home here. From early manhood active in the democratic party, he has many personal friends in this section of the state, and as postmaster of Crittenden, in which office he has served since April 22, 1914, has universal approval. He is one of the solid, substantial men of the county and is a member of the Board of Directors of the Tobacco Growers Deposit Bank of Crittenden. During the World war he was exceedingly active in all patriotic activities and assisted in the various defense services, served on local committees, and by example and precept exerted influence and gave encouragement to movements and organizations to the full extent of his means. He is a member and a past grand of Crittenden Lodge No. 169, Odd Fellows. Mr. Schneider is unmarried.

F. Mann, physician and surgeon, whose high personal character and professional ability are universally recognized. He came of a distinguished family, after many years of military service during the great war, during which period his professional experiences exceeded far those which come within the field of ordinary practice. He has been a close student all his life, and has had some exceptional opportunities to perfect his knowledge of medical science.

Harry Fiske Mann comes of old Virginia stock, his great-grandfather, Milton Mann, a native of Virginia, being a member of the family in Kenton County, Kentucky. He was accompanied by his family, including his son William, who became a substantial farmer in Kenton County and in later years conducted a hotel at Covington, between 1890 and 1894. Dr. Mann was born in Kenton County, Kentucky, April 4, 1890. He is a son of Eugene L. and Cornelia (Rouse) Mann, the former of whom still resides in Kenton County, where he was born in 1858, a son of Willam and a grandson of Milton Mann. Eugene L. Mann is widely known in Kenton County, where he is extensively engaged in agriculture and for many years has been active in republican politics. He owns 288 acres of some of the most valuable farm land in the southern part of the county, and has been interested in agricultural pursuits all his life. On many occasions he has been elected to positions of responsibility in his township and precinct, serving for many years as chairman of the Republican Precinct Committee, four years as road commissioner of his township, and for twelve years has been a magistrate. He is a member and liberal supporter of the Christian Church and an ardent advocate of law and order in every direction. For many years he has been a member of the order of Odd Fellows and belongs also to the Junior Order United American Mechanics.

Eugene L. Mann married first Cornelia Rouse, who was born January 1, 1862, near Independence, Kenton County, and died on the farm in Kenton County December 4, 1903. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Mann: Nettie, who died at the age of eight years; Flora, who married James Allen, lives at Walton, Kentucky; Foster W., who has been in the flourishing business at Kansas City, Missouri, for the past fifteen years; Eugene, who died when five years old; Harry Fiske; Clara Minnie, twin sister of Dr. Mann, born April 4, 1890, is the wife of Frank D. Cook, a farmer in Kenton County; Edna Jane is the wife of Shirley F. Rich, who is in the grocery business at Covington; John Edward, twin brother of Edna Jane, is connected with a garage at Covington; and Robert F. died in 1913, at the age of seventeen years; and Ruth is the wife of Harry Powers, a traveling salesman with his home at Walton, Kentucky. Eugene L. Mann married for his second wife Mrs. Louise (Mileham) Stephen- son, who was born in October, 1874, in Pendleton County, Kentucky.

Harry F. Mann attended the local schools in boyhood, after which through his sophomore year he was a student in the high school at Pany, Kentucky, after which he entered the Kentucky State Normal school at Richmond, Kentucky. At intervals during this time he taught five winter terms of school in his native county. In 1913 he entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, from which he has graduated with his degree June 7, 1917, and from July 1, 1917, until July 5, 1918, he served as a member of the medical staff in Christ Hospital, Cincinnati. While there he was the major of the medical service, and on August 8, 1918, Dr. Mann responded by enlisting, was commissioned a first lieutenant, and was sent to the training camp at Chickamauga Park, Georgia, where he rendered professional service until honorably discharged and was mustered out December 15, 1918. He practiced three months in the coal mining sections of Harlan County, Kentucky, and in March, 1919, responded to a call from Ludlow, where the influenza was epidemic, and rendered valuable and unselfish service during a month of great distress. He then returned to his home and on April 14, 1919, established his home and office on Main Street in this city.

Mr. Mann was married at Covington, Covington County, Kentucky, September 12, 1917, to Miss Frederica Vallandingham, daughter of George and Louise (Mileham) Vallandingham, the latter of whom resides in Kenton County. The father of Mrs. Mann died in March, 1897, within two months of his graduation from the medical department of the University of Cincinnati. Mrs. Mann was educated in the Eastern Kentucky State Normal School.

Believing it a citizen's duty to be watchful and interested in public matters, Dr. Mann has maintained himself with political life at Covington to some extent and is serving as a member of the Republican Precinct Committee. He belongs to Wilmington Lodge No. 362, F. and A. M., to Adams Lodge No. 188, Odd Fellows, and to Fiskburg Council No. 125, Junior Order United American Mechanics, all of Kenton County. He is well known in professional bodies also, being a member of the Grant County and the Kentucky State Medical Societies, and of the American Medical Association.

He was reared in the Christian Church and belongs to that religious organization at Covington.

Otis Conyers is the popular and efficient postmaster at Dry Ridge. He is one of the energetic young citizens of that community, where he has spent his life, and where his people have been identified in many honorable capacities through several generations.

He is a descendant of Christopher Conyers, who built the castle Horden Hall in County Durham, England. This castle was the seat and home of the Conyers family for two hundred and twenty-five years. During the past century several large wings have been removed from the castle, the stone being used to build tenant houses and barns. It was a truly mediéval fortress. Evidences of a moat are plainly seen. An underground passage connected the castle with the parish house to the west, while another led to the North Sea, half a mile on the east, these offering a way of escape in troubled times.

The first American ancestor of Mr. Conyers was Maj. Dennis Conyers, his great-great-grandfather. A native of County Durham, born near the village of Easington, he came to America and lived and died in Bath County, Kentucky. His son, John Conyers, was born in Bath County in 1794. He was the founder of the family in Dry Ridge community, where he spent most of his life as a farmer. William Dennis Conyers, grandfather of Otis Conyers, was born near Dry Ridge in 1818, was a farmer there all his life and died at his home near the town in 1893. His wife was a Miss Simpson, also a life-long resident of that community.

J. W. Conyers, father of Otis Conyers, was born near Dry Ridge August 16, 1855, and has lived all his life in that vicinity. He is now a retired farmer and a democrat in politics.

The mother of Otis Conyers was Belle Vance, who was born in Grant County January 25, 1858. Mr. Conyers has in his possession some tea spoons that were brought over about 1620 by the original ancestor of his family's lineage in America. His great-great-great-grandfather, Robert Vance, was the founder of the family in Central Kentucky. The great-grandfather, Robert Conyers was born in Fayette County, was a pioneer farmer near Dry Ridge, and was murdered and robbed on the Lexington Pike, near his home, in 1830. His son, Robert Conyers, third in succession to bear the name, was born in Fayette County in 1828, and spent most of his life on a farm at Dry Ridge, where he died on February 19, 1899. He married America Gaugh, who was born near Williamstown, Kentucky, and died near Dry Ridge. They were the parents of Belle (Vance) Con-
y resi-whois the nature of his native community for twenty years, and his name is mentioned as one of the most influential citizens in that section of Grant County. The history of the FarmersEquity Bank dates back nearly three decades. The Dry Ridge Deposit Bank was established in 1892. About the beginning of 1907 the Dry Ridge Deposit Bank and the Peoples Bank were consolidated as the Farmers Equity Bank. This bank, with a modern brick home on the Dixie Highway, has a capital of forty-five thousand dollars, surplus and profits of twenty thousand dollars and deposits of four hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The officers are R. L. Conrad, president; A. C. Webb, vice president; John W. McCoy, cashier; and Clara B. McCoy and R. D. Hogan, assistant cashiers.

William McCoy was born at Dry Ridge February 20, 1881. The McCovs came from Ireland to Virginia in Colonial times. Mr. McCoy’s great-grandfather was a native of Virginia and established himself in Eastern Kentucky as a pioneer. The grandfather, William McCoy, was a native of Eastern Kentucky, and lived out his active life as a farmer in the Dry Ridge community. He married a Miss Lowe, a native of Williamstown, Grant County, who died at Dry Ridge. William McCoy, father of the Dry Ridge banker and a resident of that community, was born there in 1819, and is now practically retired after a long and successful identification with farming. He is a democrat and an active member of the Missionary Baptist Church. William McCoy married Julia Ann Conrad, who lived all her life in Dry Ridge. John William is the oldest of their four children; Clara Belle is assistant cashier of the Farmers Equity Bank; Stanley Lowe is a farmer at Dry Ridge, and the death of her mother has been his father’s housekeeper.

John W. McCoy attended school at Dry Ridge, acquired a high school education in a private academy at Verona, Kentucky, and when he left school at the age of eighteen he took up the work to which his serious attention has been given ever since. He began as a clerk in the Peoples Bank of Dry Ridge, and in 1903 was made cashier of the bank, and then for seven years was assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Dry Ridge. Since January 1916, he has been cashier of the Farmers Equity Bank.

Mr. McCoy is also master commissioner of the Circuit Court of the Sixth Judicial District. He is a demo- crash the two banks, about four years later, and then for seven years was assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Dry Ridge. Since January 1916, he has been cashier of the Farmers Equity Bank.
James M. Gilbert has shown in his successful activities in his profession that he made an excellent choice of vocation, and he has won secure place as a representative member of the bar of Kentucky, whose judicial center the City of Pineville, is the most natural stage of his substantial and important law business.

Mr. Gilbert was born in Clay County, Kentucky, December 4, 1822, and is a son of Rev. Taylor J. Gilbert, whose father was Dr. Felix Gilbert, the latter having been a son of Rev. John Gilbert, who was born in North Carolina in 1757, a member of a prominent old Colonial family of that Commonwealth. Rev. John Gilbert became the founder of the Kentucky branch of the family, he having come to this state about 1787 and died near Hyden, in the present county of Leslie. He became the owner of extensive tracts of land in this part of Kentucky, and acquired also valuable land in Virginia. He labored earnestly and with much of intellectual ability in the ministry of the Baptist Church, of which he was one of the pioneer clergymen of Southeastern Kentucky, and did much also to advance the general industrial and civil progress of this part of the state. This sturdy and noble pioneer attained to the ripe old age of 112 years and was the recognized patriarch of the Red Bird Creek district of Clay County at the time of his death, in 1890. He served in the Revolutionary army.

In that section of Clay County, Dr. Felix Gilbert passed his entire life, and his ability and service marked him as one of the leading physicians and surgeons of his native county. His wife, whose family name was Dorton, likewise died in Clay County.

Rev. Taylor J. Gilbert was born on the old home-stead of Red Bird Creek, Clay County, in the year 1840, and died near Elk City, Oklahoma, in 1902. As a clergyman of the Baptist Church he gave many years of able and consecrated service in Eastern and Central Kentucky and he impressed his strong and noble personality definitely upon the communities in which he thus lived and wrought for the uplifting of his fellow men.

He removed to Oklahoma in January, 1902 and there his death occurred on the 6th of the following April. The democratic party received his loyal support, and he served three terms as assessor of Clay County, though that county has long given large republican majorities. His widow, whose maiden name was Polly Maggard, was born at Hyden, Kentucky, in 1851, and now resides at Mangum, Oklahoma. She is a daughter of the late Samuel Maggard, who passed his entire life in what is now Leslie County, Kentucky, where he was born in 1828 and where his death occurred in 1915, his wife, whose family name was McIntosh, having likewise been a native of that county, where she maintained her home to the close of her life. Rev. Taylor J. and Polly (Maggard) Gilbert became the parents of nine children: James M., to whom this review is dedicated, is the eldest of the number; Mittie, who died in New Mexico in 1911, was the wife of Emery Caudill, who is now identified with the cattle industry in Texas; John died at the age of four and Minter, at the age of two years; Abijah B., and A. H. are individually represented on other pages of this work; Lettie is the wife of George Stone, who is engaged in the insurance business at Mangum, Oklahoma; Harry is associated with the insurance business conducted by his brother Abijah B. and has charge of the agency at Hazard, Perry County; Thomas J. resides at Manchester, Clay County, and is general manager of the Furnace Gap Coal Company; and Mary, who now resides at Mangum, Oklahoma, is the widow of Benjamin Parker, who was a merchant at Weatherford, Texas, at the time of his death.

After having profited by the advantages offered in the rural schools of his native county James M. Gilbert continued his studies one year in the Kentucky State College, now the University of Kentucky, at Lexington, and in preparation for his chosen profession he was then matriculated in the law department of the University of Louisville, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1864 and with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, his recognition was forthwith attended by his admission to the bar of the state. As a youth of sixteen years he had made successful appearances as a teacher in the public schools of Clay County, and he continued teaching at intervals for a period of seven years. Upon his graduation in the law school he engaged in the practice of his profession at Barbourville, the county seat of Knox County, where he remained from 1894 until 1912, when he removed to Pineville, judicial center of Bell County, in which city he has since built up and controlled a large and progressive law business, which has involved his appearance in connection with many important cases, both criminal and civil, in the courts of this section of the state. His offices are established in the Euster Building on Kentucky Avenue. While a resident of Barbourville he served two years as municipal judge, but he has had no desire for public office. He is a staunch adherent of the Democratic party, he and his wife are leading members of the Presbyterian Church in their home city, in which he is serving as an elder, and he is affiliated with Bell Lodge No. 691, Free and Accepted Masons; Pineville Chapter No. 158, Royal Arch Masons; Bell Lodge No. 300, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and Pineville Lodge No. 127, Knights of Pythias. Mr. Gilbert is an active member of the Kentucky State Bar Association, is a stockholder of the Bell National Bank, is president of the Furnace Gap Coal Company, which has its headquarters at Pineville, and he is the owner of 225 acres of valuable coal land in Bell County. In addition to his attractive home property on Kentucky Avenue he is the owner of three other valuable properties at Pineville. In the climatic period of the World war all supporting activities and service in his home county and state received the earnest and loyal co-operation of Mr. Gilbert, who served on committees in charge of the Government loan drives, sale of War Saving Stamps, advancing of Red Cross service, etc. The while he made his financial contribution to the cause as liberal as his resources justified. In the year 1890, recorded the marriage of Mr. Gilbert to Miss Laura Jones, daughter of Thomas F. and Mary (Black) Jones, the latter of whom is deceased, Mr. Jones being a substantial farmer in Knox County. Mrs. Gilbert passed to the life eternal in 1903, a devout member of the Baptist Church, and she is survived by two daughters; Mary, who was born in November, 1890, is a graduate of the Pineville High School and now holds the position of bookkeeper in the Bell National Bank of this city; Sarah, who was born in July, 1892, was graduated from the Pineville High School and is, in 1924, a student in Cumberland College at Williamsburg, Kentucky.

In 1905, at Pineville, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Gilbert to Miss Amanda Davis, daughter of Murphy and Sarah (Peavler) Davis, the father having been a prosperous farmer near Pineville at the time of his death, and the widowed mother being now a loved member of the family. Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert, who have two children: Sophia, born June 10, 1908; and James M. Jr., born in August, 1910.

JOHN D. DAVIS for many years has been one of the leading business men and citizens of Corinth, and is now sole proprietor of a highly efficient undertaking service in that section of Grant County.

Mr. Davis was born in Owen County, Kentucky, March 1, 1867. His grandfather, John Davis, was a native of Maryland and when a young man moved to Owen County, Kentucky, where he married and where he spent his active life as a farmer. He died during the sickness. His wife was Drusilla True, a native of Kentucky, who died in Owen County. They reared ten children, all now deceased. One of these was Frederick True Davis, who was born in Owen County in 1840, was reared and married and there spent his active life as a farmer. December 25, 1881, he removed to Scott County, where he lived on a farm until his death in 1896. He was reared a democrat, but in 1896 became a convert to the republican sound money doctrine. He was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. His first wife was Susan E. True, who was born in Henry County in 1841 and died in Owen County in June, 1872. Her only child was John D. Davis. The second wife of Frederick W. Davis was Mrs. Lucinda (Robinson) Cavender, born in Scott County in 1851, and still living in that locality. She became the mother of five children: Justin, a rural mail carrier at Corinth; Ernest, a farmer and stock raiser on the Kite farm; and three daughters. Mr. Davis married Mathew Lynn and lives with her mother; Pearl, wife of Dr. W. P. Foreman, a physician and surgeon in Henry County; and Bessie, wife of C. M. Lee, a farmer at Georgetown, Kentucky.

John D. Davis acquired a country school education in Owen and Scott Counties, being about fourteen years of age when his father moved to the latter county. His father, who was a farmer, spent the greater part of his life with his father's farm, after which for a year he farmed independently in Scott County and then bought a farm in Harrison County, and was identified with its management until 1902. In August of that year he acquired an interest in an undertaking business at Corinth, with B. W. Redding as partner until 1905, when he acquired Mr. Redding's interest and sold it to Y. B. Wright. Since January 14, 1914, Mr. Davis has been sole proprietor, and has the only undertaking service south of Williamsport in Grant County.

Mr. Davis is also a director and stockholder in the Farmers Bank of Corinth. For six years he was a member of the Town Council, and in every community relationship has sought to do his share. During the World war he was on committees in carrying out the program of every drive for every purpose. He is a member of the county board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is a past chancellor of the United Order of Odd Fellows, past grand master of the Scottish Rite in the city limits. He is a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church, is a past master of Dry Ridge Lodge No. 84, F. and A. M., a past noble grand of Grant Lodge No. 78, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, past grand master of the Improved Order of Red Men, and was formerly a member of the Junior Order United

JOHN GANO RENAKER, M. D. A popular and accomplished physician and surgeon at Dry Ridge, Doctor Renaker has been engaged in practice there over twenty years and has taken a commendable part in the civic and social life of the town.

Doctor Renaker was born in Grant County, Kentucky, November 19, 1877. His family has been in Kentucky for about a century. His great-great-grandfather, with four brothers, emigrated from Germany and he made his pioneer home in Maryland. The great-grandfather was a native of Maryland, and was the pioneer who established the family in Harrison County. The great-grandfather was a native of Virginia, and was a farmer. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. His wife was Jane Levesque, who was born in Harrison County in 1836 and died in Grant County in August, 1882. They had a large family of children, namely: Ida, wife of Ben Lemon, a carpenter and contractor living at Cincinnati; R. L. and E. B. Renaker, farmers at Dry Ridge; K. S. and E. L. Renaker, a cattle dealer and a country lawyer; and a daughter, Mrs. Laura Jones, who married Mrs. Henry A. Bauer, a physician of Grant County, in the age of twenty-eight, wife of W. H. Northcutt, for several years a stock trader and farmer in Grant County, later in the insurance business at Covington, where he died; Minnie P., of Williamsport, widow of Ben Thomas, a farmer who died in Grant County in 1903; John Gano; and R. S. Renaker, a farmer at Dry Ridge.

John Gano Renaker spent his early life on his father's farm, attended country schools, also a high school at Covington, and on March 25, 1898; received his M. D. degree from the Louisville Medical College. His entire active career in his profession has been spent at Dry Ridge, where he has long enjoyed a successful general practice. He is a member of the Grant County Health Board, a deeply interested member of the United States pension examiner for Grant County, is a member of the County, State and American Medical Associations, and during the World war was the medical examiner of the Grant County Draft Board, having been appointed by President Wilson, and a great deal of his professional time was spent in these duties. He also rendered a valuable essential and patriotic service during the war.

Doctor Renaker owns a modern home on the Dixie Highway and has an acre of valuable land within the city limits. He is a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church, is a past master of Dry Ridge Lodge No. 84, F. and A. M., a past noble grand of Grant Lodge No. 78, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, past grand master of the Improved Order of Red Men, and was formerly a member of the Junior Order United American Mechanics and the Modern Woodmen of America.

In 1902, in Grant County, he married Miss Zadah A. Littell, daughter of I. A. and Barbara (Gouge) Littell. Her father is a retired distiller, formerly of Williamstown, but now living at Dry Ridge, where her mother died in 1905. Mrs. Renaker completed her high school education at Williamstown. Mr. and Mrs. Renaker have one daughter, Ada Barbara, born October 25, 1906, and now a student in the Dry Ridge High School.

C. A. Ecker, M. D. A physician and surgeon at Dry Ridge, where he has practiced almost twenty years, Doctor Ecker enjoys an esteem in that community not confined to his professional following alone. He is a high-minded and scholarly gentleman and has shown a deep and sincere interest in every matter affecting the welfare of the community.

Dr. Eckler represents an old Kentucky family and was born in Grant County June 26, 1877. The founder of the family was his great-grandfather, who came from Pennsylvania and settled in Grant County when all that section was a wilderness. The grandfather of Dr. Eckler was Jacob Eckler, a native Kentuckian who cleared a farm from the woods in Grant County, and on this farm, east of Dry Ridge, he spent his life. John E. Eckler, his son, a boy when his father died, was born in Grant County, October 22, 1845, and was still living at the old homestead where he was born, three and a half miles east of Dry Ridge. His life has been that of a prosperous farmer, and he is still active at the age of seventy-six. He is a Republican in politics, was a member of the Kentucky Home Guards during the Civil war, and is a member of the Baptist Church. John E. Eckler married Eunice F. Oder, who was born in Covington, Kentucky, in 1856, and died in the old farm in 1901. Her two children are C. A. and Nellie E., the latter forelady at Ferman's wholesale millinery establishment at Cincinnati.

Dr. C. A. Eckler spent his early life on his father's farm, and from there attended rural schools. He graduated from the Covington High School in 1896, and for three years was a teacher in his home county. He then entered the Miami Medical College of Cincinnati, graduating from D. in 1902, and since that time has maintained, and in this connection it is gratifying to note that Mr. Moore, who is established in the successful practice of law, is one of the able members of the bar of his native county. He was born in Jackson County, on the 14th of September, 1871, a son of Harvey Moore and a grandson of Cornelius Moore, whose birth occurred in Owosley County, Kentucky, in 1812, and who continued his residence in that county until about 1850, when he removed to Jackson County, where he became a prominent real estate and agricultural agent. He spent many years of earnest service as a clergyman of the Baptist Church, the while his fine personality and marked ability gave him much of leadership in community sentiment and action. He continued to reside in Jackson County until his death, and here also occurred the death of his wife, whose family name was Evans and who was born and reared in Owosley County. Rev. Cornelia Moore was reared at a time when she was born and reared in Virginia and who came as a young man to Kentucky and became a pioneer farmer in Owosley County. There he passed the remainder of his life, his marriage having been solemnized after he came to Owosley County.

Harvey Moore was born in Owosley County in the year 1837, was a child of about three years at the time of his parents' removal to Jackson County, where he was reared to manhood and where he has been continuously identified with farm industry from the time of his youth. As a young man he became the owner of the present farm near Welchburg, where during the long intervening years he has made his influence felt not only in productive agriculture but also as a loyal and public-spirited citizen. Prosperity has attended his well-directed activities and he is one of the highly respected citizens of the county in which he may consistently claim a mede of pioneer honors. He is a stanch Republican, and has long been an active member of the Reformed Church, of which his wife likewise was a devoted adherent. Mrs. Moore, whose maiden name was Jane Powell, was born in Harlan County, Kentucky, in 1850, and her death occurred on the old home farm near Welchburg in 1914, having been a child at the time of the family removal to Jackson County. Of the children of Harvey and Jane (Powell) Moore, the eldest is Martha, who is the wife of L. W. Minter, a farmer near Lawson, Missouri; Carter P., of this sketch, was the second in order of birth; Henry is a representative business man at Lancaster, Garrard County, Kentucky, where he owns and operates a modern flour mill under the title of the Garrard Milling Company; Frances, who resides at Welchburg, is the widow of S. C. Goodman, who was a prosperous Jackson County farmer and the father of James; Nancy is the wife of Wilson Settle, a farmer at Big Hill, Madison County; George C. is a lawyer and real-estate broker in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio; Rosa became the wife of T. S. Brannaman, who is a farmer near Wildie, Rockcastle County, and there her death occurred when she was thirty-six years of age; Dora is the wife of G. W. Davidson, a farmer near Welchburg, Jackson County, and Bertha is the wife of the late Dr. John Gruelle, at Welchburg, Jackson County. Carter P. Moore, the subject of this sketch, was born near the town of Welchburg, Jackson County, Kentucky, December 14, 1878, and was therefore one of the boyhood exchange at Lancaster, Garrard County; and Bertha remains with her father on the old homestead, where she has had charge of the domestic economies of the paternal home since the death of her mother.

From the foregoing brief record it will be seen that Carter P. Moore is in the most significant degree a scion of sterling pioneer stock in Kentucky. He gained his earlier education in the rural schools of Jackson County and also attended the high school at Stanford, Lincoln County, and he continued to attend school at intervals until he was twenty-one years old. In the meanwhile, at the age of eighteen years, he initiated his career as a teacher in the rural schools of his native county, and there stands to his credit twenty years of effective service as a teacher in the public schools.
While thus engaged in the work of the pedagogic profession he busied himself also in preparing himself for the legal profession, and the year 1863 recorded his admission to the bar of his native state. In that year he began the practice of law at McKee, judicial center of Jackson County, where within the intervening period of somewhat more than twenty years he had built up a substantial and representative law business, involving his appearance in connection with much important litigation, both civil and criminal, in the courts of this section of the state. He owns a modern office building on the site of his attractive home property on the same street. His real-estate holdings include also an excellent farm of seventy-five acres eight miles southeast of McKee.

Mr. Moore is one of Jackson County's loyal adherents of and workers in the republican party, and while he has had no desire for purely political office he served effectively as county attorney. In 1903, the year of his marriage, the young lawyer was reared in the home of his wife, where he and his family reside. His real-estate holdings include also an excellent farm of seventy-five acres eight miles southeast of McKee.

Thomas W. Balsly studied his first lessons in what was known as the Balsly School in Boone County. In 1893 he graduated in a business course from the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, after which he taught five terms in school in Boone County and was also for a time engaged in educational work in Hamilton County, Ohio. From 1898 until June, 1906, was the principal in which Mr. Balsly engaged in the railway mail service.

He assisted in organizing the Farmers and Mechanics Bank of Ludlow in 1906, and has been at his post of duty as cashier of the institution ever since. The bank has the largest capital of any at Ludlow, $30,000, besides surplus and profits of 7,000 and deposits aggregating $230,000. Amos Teed is president of the bank.

Mr. Balsly is also treasurer of the Kenton Building Association, secretary and treasurer of the Ludlow Coal Company, and among other property owns the old home farm in Boone County, an apartment house in Cincinnati, and a modern home at 143 Elm Street, Ludlow. He placed his means, his energies and his influence at the disposal of the Government during the World war, was chairman of nearly all the Ludlow committees for the raising of funds for Red Cross, Liberty Bonds and other purposes, and a large part of his time for nearly two years was bestowed upon patriotic effort.

Mr. Balsly was elected mayor of Ludlow in November, 1917, and has filled that office since January, 1918. He is a democrat, is a member of the Ludlow Lodge No. 759, A. F. and A. M., Indra Consistory No. 2, of the Scottish Rite at Covington, and Syrian Temple of the Mystic Shrine in Cincinnati.

In 1899, at Cleves, Ohio, he married Emma Wamsley. Her mother is deceased. Her father is Morgan Wamsley, whose home is at Sailor Park, Cincinnati, and who is president of the Hamilton National Bank of Cleves and conducts a leading real estate business in Cincinnati. Mrs. Balsly is a graduate of the Cincinnati High School.

THOMAS RAPHAEL JONES. In public affairs of Calloway County, and particularly of the community of Murray, a name that has been long and favorably known, although it be now is still a young man, is that of Thomas Raphael Jones. Formerly a member of the State Legislature, Mr. Jones now occupies the position at Murray of assistant to the state tax commissioner, a capacity in which he is ably discharging the duties incumbent upon him.

Mr. Jones was born in Obion County, Tennessee, August 2, 1887, a son of Hilliard Monroe and Theora (Gant) Jones. The Jones family is of Irish origin and was founded in America during Colonial days, when the original emigrant settled in North Carolina. In that state was born James Jones, the great-grandfather of Thomas R. and the pioneer of the family into Kentucky. He married a Miss Jackson, who was born in North Carolina, and they migrated to Kentucky at an early date, settling in Calloway County, where they passed the rest of their lives and made the county.

Mr. Jones, the grandfather of Thomas R., was born in North Carolina and was a child when taken by his parents to Calloway County. There he was engaged in farming until the war between the states, when he enlisted in the Confederate Army and died of wounds received in battle. He married Miss Martha Smith, who was born in North Carolina, and who survived him some years, passing away at Mobile, Alabama.

Hilliard Monroe Jones was born in 1855 in Calloway County, where he was reared, educated and married, and where he carried on agricultural pursuits until 1883, in which year he went to Obion County, Tennessee, there spending sixteen years on a farm. Returning to Caloway County in 1899, he purchased his present home place, a well-cultivated and valuable tract lying in the eastern part of the county, in the operation of which he has shown intelligence, progressiveness and industry. He is a democrat and a member of the Christian Church. He married Miss Theora Gant, who was born in 1865 in Calloway County, and seven children have been born to them: Thomas Raphael; Alvin, who resides in the eastern part of Calloway County and is engaged in farming; Henry Lee, who is an agriculturist of Calloway County; Eva May, the wife of Euna McDaniel, a farmer of Calloway County; Elsa, who is unmarried and resides with her parents; Ruth, who attends the high school at Murray; and Lowell, attending the public schools.

The primary education of Thomas Raphael Jones was acquired in the rural community in which he was reared, and subsequently he was sent to Fairview Academy, Centerville, Tennessee, for two years, this being supplemented by two years at the Western Kentucky State Normal School, Bowling Green, Kentucky. Leaving the latter school in 1914, he resumed teaching, in which he had been engaged for some years. Mr. Jones had commenced his educational labors in 1907 in Calloway County, and for ten years was an instructor of the youth of the locality, eight years in Calloway County and two years in Fulton County, for two years being principal of the high school at Hazel. When still a young man he had become interested in democratic politics, and from 1906 to 1912 was a member of the Democratic County Central Committee. In the fall of 1913 he was elected the representative of Calloway County to the State Legislature, and served in the session of 1914, and in 1915 was re-elected, serving in the regular session of 1916 and the special session of 1917. During 1916 and 1917 he was a member of the important committee on revenue and taxation, and also served on other committees, working constantly and effectively in behalf of the interests of his constituents. On June 1, 1917, he was appointed assistant to the state tax commissioner by Governor Stanley, and is the incumbent of this office at the present time.

Mr. Jones is a member of the Christian Church. Fraternity he is affiliated with Murray Lodge No. 105, A. F. and A. M.; Murray Chapter No. 119, R. A. M., and the Woodmen of the World. He owns a modern residence on Main Street, one of the handsome homes of the city, and formerly had two farms, of which he has recently disposed. He took an active part in all war movements, making speeches throughout the county and assisting in every way to put the Liberty Loan, Red Cross and other drives "over the top."

In 1915 Mr. Jones was united in marriage with Miss Bertha May Denham, a daughter of J. Wheeler and Julia (Todd) Denham, the latter of whom died in the winter of 1919. Mr. Denham is a well-known and highly esteemed merchant at Hazel, Kentucky. Mrs. Jones is a graduate of the Calloway County High School and a lady of many graces and accomplishments. She and her husband have two children: Ethel Rowena, born December 26, 1916; and Thomas Raphael, Jr., born December 8, 1918.

PAUL E. KERKOW, M. D. After completing his professional education at Cincinnati Doctor Kerkow established himself in practice at Covington, and for a dozen years or more has been a physician and surgeon whose talents and abilities command respect and a large and extensive practice in that city.

Doctor Kerkow was about one year of age when brought to America from Hamburg, Germany, where he was born September 5, 1884. His father, L. O. Kerkow, was born in Koenigsberg, Germany, in 1858, was reared and married in that country, and by profession was a marine engineer. This occupation exempted him from military duty in the German Army. In June, 1885, he brought his family to the United States and located at Cincinnati, and in 1888 moved to Covington, where he had his home the rest of his life. He followed his trade and that of a stationary engineer, and lost his life in 1906 while visiting at Newport, Virginia, being drowned in the James River. L. O. Kerkow was born in Denmark in 1850, and died at Covington June 16, 1920. They were the parents of three children: Dorothy, who died at the age of one year; Paul E.; and L. O. Kerkow, Jr., who is a traveling salesman with home at Cleveland, Ohio.

Doctor Kerkow was four years of age when brought to Covington, and attended the public schools of that city, graduating from high school in 1895. He then entered the Pulte Medical College of Cincinnati, and was graduated in 1907. He is a member of the Epsilon Chapter of the Alpha Sigma college fraternity. The year following his graduation he was interne in charge of clinics at the Cincinnati Union Bethel Settlement House. In July, 1908, he began his private practice at Covington, his offices being in the Coppin Building. He was a member of the Campbell-Kenton Medical Society, Kentucky State Medical Association, Cincinnati Homeopathic Lyceum, Kentucky Homeopathic Society, and American Institute of Homeopathy. Doctor Kerkow sought every opportunity to make use of his talents and means to further the cause of the Government in the World war. He was the medical member of the Local Draft Board No. 2, and he also applied for a commission in the U. S. Army Corps but was not examined until September, 1918, and the armistice was signed before he was called to duty.

Doctor Kerkow is independent in politics and fraternity is affiliated with Colonel Clay Lodge No. 159, F. and A. M., Covington Chapter No. 35, R. A. M., Covington Commandery No. 7, K. T., Indra Consistory No. 2, of the Scottish Rite at Covington, Oleka Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Lexington, and is a member of the Masonic Star Lodge No. 7, Knights of Pythias, at West Covington.

In November, 1910, at Kansas City, Missouri, Doctor Kerkow married Miss Ruby C. Spence, Her parents R. T. and Ida (Brambleau) Spence, live in Kansas City, her father being a contractor for road and sewer construction. Mrs. Kerkow is a graduate of the high school of Kansas City, Missouri. They have one child, Spence, born May 14, 1917.

ALBERT K. ANDREWS. The largest group of industries in Newport and among the largest steel and iron manufacturing concerns south of the Ohio River are those in which members of the Andrews family exercise a controlling interest and direction. These are the Newport Rolling Mill Company, the Andrews Steel Company and the Globe Iron Roofing Company. The president of the Newport Rolling Mill Company is Albert K. Andrews, and he is vice president of the Andrews Steel Company. Much of the credit for the building up of these industries belong to Mr. A. L. Andrews, now living retired at Newport. He was born at Cincinnati in 1812, son of Joseph Addison Andrews, a native of Connecticut and an early settler at Cincinnati, where he did a trading business for many years. A. L. Andrews was reared and married in Cincinnati, and as a young man was a traveling salesman and also studied law. During the Civil war he was in the Quartermasters’ Department of the Union Army under Col. C. W. Moulton, and served all through the struggle. Following the war he conducted a pension claim agency for a few years. He and his brother, the late Joseph A. Andrews, then became associated in the tobacco business, and for a number of years they conducted one of the leading firms of the kind in Cincinnati as tobacco dealers and manufacturers.

In 1885 these brothers began the manufacture of iron roofing at Cincinnati. Shortly afterward they bought in Newport the small plant of the Swift Iron & Steel Company at Ninth and Lowell streets. Under their energetic supervision this business grew and flourished and became the original of the several notable industries now directed by the Andrews family. A. L. Andrews and his brother built in 1906 the large plant of the Andrews Steel Company at Newport, Kentucky. This business is in operation and furnishes employment in normal times to twelve hundred hands.

The immediate successor of the old Swift Iron & Steel Company’s plant is the Newport Rolling Mills at Ninth and Lowell streets. The plant was practically rebuilt in 1910. It furnishes employment to two thousand hands. The manufactory is a plant of black and galvanized sheet steel, and the product is shipped all over the United States and to foreign countries.

The fourth industry established by this family is the Newport Culvert Company, which has been in existence since 1912. The executive officers are at the Newport Rolling Mill and the plant is at Tenth and Lowell streets in Newport. This company manufactures metal road culverts, employes fifty hands, and many cars loaded with these culverts go from the plant to all parts of the United States.

A. L. Andrews and his brother Joseph continued to be actively identified with these industries until the death of Joseph Andrews in 1908. A. L. Andrews in 1919 turned over his interests to his sons, having then passed the age of thirty score and ten and having seen the work of his hands and brain greatly prospered. He is still living at Newport, is a very active member of the Presbyterian Church, is a republican, a charter member of Lafayette Lodge No. 81, F. and A. M., and a member of Cincinnati Chapter No. 2, R. A. M., and Cincinnati Commandery No. 1.

A. L. Andrews married Agnes L. Gaff. She was born in Lawrenceburg, Indiana, in 1850 and died at Newport November 13, 1918. They became the parents of five children, the two oldest being Joseph Gaff and Albert K. Andrews. The third child, Margaret Landrum, is the wife of Rudolph Tietig, an architect, with home on Observatory Road in Cincinnati. The fourth child, Grace Virginia, is the wife of T. Oliver Dunlap, a stock and bond broker at Cincinnati, with home at Vista Place, East Walnut Hills. The fifth and youngest of the family is Frank M., a resident of Fort Thomas, Kentucky.

Joseph Gaff Andrews was born at Cumminsville, Cincinnati, November 26, 1876, was educated in the public schools of Cincinnati. He attended the Kentucky Military Academy at Gambier, Ohio, and the Cincinnati Theological School, and in 1894 graduated from Nelson’s Business College in Cincinnati. Since leaving college for a period of nearly thirty years he has been actively associated with the business founded and built up by his father, and for a number of years has had an important share in the executive responsibilities in the three companies briefly described above. Mr. Andrews is a republican, junior warden of the Episcopal Church at Fort Thomas, was affiliated with Fort Thomas Lodge No. 868, F. and A. M., Cincinnati Chapter No. 2, R. A. M., Cincinnati Commandery No. 3, K. T., Indra Consistory No. 2 of the Scottish Rite at Covington, El Hasa Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Ashland, Kentucky, is a member of the Highland Country Club at Fort Thomas and the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce.

In 1805, at Cincinnati, Joseph G. Andrews married Miss Stella Kaual, daughter of Michael and Carrie Kaual, the latter deceased. Her father, a resident of Toledo, was for twenty-five years flour inspector of Cincinnati. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph G. Andrews have one daughter, Cora Louise, born January 2, 1907.

Albert K. Andrews was born at Cincinnati February 2, 1839, and was also literate educated, attending the public schools and a private school in his native city, and the Cincinnati Technical School. At the age of twenty-one he entered his father's mills, and has been identified with these industries ever since. He is a Republican, a Presbyterian, a member of Lafayette Lodge No. 81, F. & A. M., Cincinnati Chapter No. 2, R. A. M., Cincinnati Commandery No. 3, K. T., a life member of the Ohio Commandery, the Ohio Rite, at Cincinnati, and a member of Syrian Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, the Hamilton County Country Club, the Cincinnati Riding Club, and has one of the fine homes of Cincinnati, on Grandin Road.

In 1903, at Cincinnati, he married Miss Carrie May Sullivan, daughter of J. J. and Sophia Sullivan, the latter living on Wadsworth Avenue in Cincinnati. Her father, who was a Cincinnati Democrat and publisher of the Sullivan Printing Company. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Andrews: John Albert, on November 2, 1903; Mary Margaret, on April 30, 1907; and Jane, on May 1, 1914.

Frank M. Andrews was born June 14, 1855, was educated in the public schools and graduated in 1879 from Pennsylvania College in a meteorologist course. He was employed for two years with the steel mill in the Phoenix, Pennsylvania, and then took a position with the Andrews Steel Mill in the open hearth department. He married in June, 1913, Jean Meader, daughter of Henry C. and Jennie Meader, and who was a resident of Cincinnati, Ohio. They have children as follows: Frank, Jr., Nancy Norld and Richard Avery. Frank M. Andrews is a member of several social clubs, is a Presbyterian, a Mason and a republican. He resides at Fort Thomas, where he has a beautiful home, it being one of the show places there.

Theodore B. Forbes. For many years the name of Forbes has been associated with banking and with extensive agricultural interests in Carroll County, Kentucky, and in these and other directions few citizens of Carrollton are better known than Theodore B. Forbes, cashier of the First National Bank of Carrollton. He was born in this city in 1873, son of Theodore B. Forbes, the surviving child of John I. and Hala (Bates) Forbes. John I. Forbes was born in 1836, in Greene County, Ohio. His parents were Alexander and Mary (Ireland) Forbes, natives of Virginia, in which state the Forbes family was founded back in Colonial days by colonists from Scotland. Alexander was a slaveholder and large planter. John I. Forbes came to Kentucky in 1857, and, near the end of the Civil War, he removed to Carroll County and was a very active and progressive citizen of Carrollton. He helped to organize the First National Bank of Carrollton, and served as its first vice president. In politics a strong democrat all his life, he took much interest in civic matters, although no aspirant for political honors. For many years he was an elder in the Presbyterian Church. He was twice married, first to Miss Mary Driscoll, who was born and died at Springfield, Ohio. They had two children, both of whom died in infancy. Mr. Forbes' second marriage was to Miss Hala Bates, who was born in 1845, near Worthville, Carroll County, Kentucky, and died at Carrollton in 1900. They had two sons and one daughter: Alexander, who died when only ten years old; Theodore B., and Mary Ireland, who died in infancy. John I. Forbes survived many of his contemporaries, living to the age of seventy-nine years and dying at Carrollton in 1915.

Theodore B. Forbes had excellent educational advantages afforded him, attending through the high school course at Carrollton, then entering Hanover College at Hanover, Indiana, where he continued until 1897. Upon his return home he entered First National Bank as bookkeeper, then became assistant cashier and since 1911 has been cashier, in which relation to the bank and to the public he is held in the highest possible esteem.

The First National Bank of Carrollton, Kentucky, was established as a national bank in 1881. Its officers are: J. A. Donaldson, president; F. H. Swetholz, vice president; Theodore B. Forbes, cashier. This bank is capitalized at $100,000; surplus and profits, $60,000; deposits, $1,000,000. An immense amount of business is handled by this bank. Its facilities and safeguards are unequaled in the county, and the handsome modern brick building on Main Street is a credit to the city.

At Lexington, Kentucky, in 1918, Mr. Forbes was married to Miss Wink Stringfellow, a daughter of the late J. T. and Margaret Stringfellow, formerly farming people in this county. Mr. and Mrs. Forbes have one son, Theodore B., born November 26, 1910. They are members of the Presbyterian Church. In addition to his comfortable residence at Carrollton, one of the beautiful homes on Seminary Street, Mr. Forbes owns three valuable farms in Carroll County, together with a fourth farm in Owen County, the aggregate being 1,200 acres of productive Kentucky land.

A life-long democrat in his political views, Mr. Forbes has been an important factor in county and city affairs. He has worked with great usefulness on the City Council, where his practical business ideas proved very helpful, and for the past ten years has been treasurer of Carroll County. During the World War men of his business ability and trustworthy character were absolutely necessary to make effective the patriotic movements that supported the Government, and in every way possible he proved worthy of the trust and responsibilities he was called on to share. He is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, a member of Carrollton Lodge No. 134, F. and A. M., of which he is a past master; Carroll Chapter No. 55, R. A. M., of which he is a past high priest; de Molay Commandery No. 12, K. T., Louisville; and Kosair Temple, Mystic Shrine, Louisville.

Rev. Borgia Lehr, is pastor of St. John's Catholic Church at Carrollton. St. John's is a church community with a recorded history of nearly seventy years. Carrollton is one of the oldest towns of Kentucky, and for half a century its population was almost entirely Protestant. Several German Catholics settled there from Cincinnati at the beginning of the decade of the fifties, and these were the nucleus of the little Catholic congregation who secured the ground and set about the establishment of a church. The cornerstone was laid with great ceremony July 31, 1873, Bishop Mackin of Louisville officiating. The first resident priest was Rev. Charles Scharfroth, who also provided a little brick schoolhouse. Among successive priests especially honored for their service to the parish were Rev. Father Stephany, who was pastor from 1865 to 1870, his successor, Rev. Father Schiff, Rev. Paul Kolopp, who came in 1866, and the learned Father Richartz, who was succeeded by Rev. Alphonse Ahmann, who was pastor from 1894 to 1899, during which time the number of Catholics had increased greatly. It was during the pastorate of Father Ahmann that plans were made for the new and modern church of St. John's, the cornerstone of which was laid October 5, 1902.

Rev. Borgia Lehr, the present pastor, was born in the Austrian Tyrol September 14, 1884. His father, Joseph Lehr, was born there in 1833 and came to the United States in 1859. He was a blacksmith by trade, and followed that occupation in Cincinnati until 1883, when he moved to Carrollton where he was engaged in mercantile business until 1897 when he became a farmer in Madison County. He was married in 1856 to Miss Bridget J. O'Malley and they have five children. He is a practical farmer and a well respected citizen of Madison County, and his residence is one of the so-called 'big houses' of Madison County. He has been a member of the Democratic party all his life and was one of the first men to support Abraham Lincoln. He is a member of the Catholic Church and a man of great piety.
During the American Civil war he was a blacksmith in the employ of the Union Government. He returned to Austria in 1880 to claim the estate of his father and prevent it reverting to the state. He has since remained in Tyrol, and is now retired. While an American citizen he voted as a republican. Joseph Lehr married Johanne, whom he met while he was born in the Devon inn, Padua, Italy, in 1851. Of their seven children three are still living: Mary, with her parents; Father Borgias; and Joseph, a resident of Cincinnati.

Father Borgias Lehr attended the common schools of Tyrol, pursued his classical studies in the Jesuit College at Innsbruck, Austria, and in 1902 came to America. He received his citizenship papers in 1918. For thirty years he followed a study of philosophy and theology in Mount St. Mary's Seminary, and was ordained June 29, 1908, by Bishop Maes at Covington. His first duties were as assistant pastor of the Sacred Heart Church at Bellevue until 1915. When he entered upon the arduous though interesting duties of the mountain missionary in the Eastern Kentucky counties of Nicholas, Lewis, Fleming, Robertson, Carter, Rowan and Bath, with headquarters at Carlisle. After three years he was pastor of St. James' Church at Brooksville one year, and in June, 1919, entered upon his present duties as pastor of St. John's Church at Carrollton.

WILLIAM F. O'DONNELL. A prominent and experienced educator has declared his opinion in regard to the public school system in these words: "It is the superintendent and his work and standard that determine most the worth of the schools and the system under him." Citizens of Carrollton, Kentucky, undoubtedly would agree with him, as they consider how much substantial progress has been made since 1913, when William F. O'Donnell became city superintendent of the Carrollton schools. Mr. O'Donnell is a young man, with the flavor of college training yet about him. He is thoroughly imbued with the importance of his work, to which he has dedicated his life, and in every way is exceptionally qualified for it.

William F. O'Donnell was born May 1, 1890, in Burnet County, Texas. His parents were W. F. and Angeline (Beasley) O'Donnell, the latter of whom still survives and resides in her home in Innsbruck, Ry. W. F. O'Donnell was born in 1820, in County Cork, Ireland, and died in Burnet County, Texas, in 1916. He was about twenty years old when he came to the United States, and soon afterward found a home in Burnet County, Texas, to which section he was loyally devoted during his subsequent life. In the course of time he became a man of large means, owning an extensive ranch and raising sheep and cattle. During the Civil war he served with the Texas Rangers. He was a man of strong character, kind and hospitable and had many friends. He was faithful to his family, friends and church obligations, a strict Roman Catholic, and in political life was a republican. He married Miss Angeline Beasley, and in their family of seven children William F. was the third in order of birth, the others being as follows: James, who is an oil operator, lives at Fort Worth, Texas; John, who is a ranchman in Burnet County, Texas; Tom, who is also engaged in ranching in Burnet County; Marie, who is the wife of Edison Fowler, a ranchman in Burnet County; Jane, who is the wife of Virgil Dorbandt, a ranchman in Blanco County, Texas; and Anna, who lives with her mother.

William F. O'Donnell attended the country schools in his childhood, completed the high school course at Burnet in the class of 1908, after which he became a student in Transylvania University, Lexington, Kentucky, from which institution he was graduated in 1912 with honors and the degree of A. B. To college men the fact that he belonged to the fraternities of Book & Bones and the Lamps Club is significant of high personal character, scholarship and agreeable social gifts. In the fall of 1912 he came to Carrollton as principal of the high school, and made so favorable an impression that he was elected superintendent of the city schools in 1913 and so continues. He has fourteen teachers and 500 pupils under his charge. In 1909, Mr. O'Donnell was married to Miss Medeline Riley, who was born in Burnet County and is a graduate of the high school at Bertram, Texas. They have three children: Loraine, born in 1910; Margaret, born in 1916; and William F. Jr., born in 1918. Mr. and Mrs. O'Donnell are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Carrollton, and are members of the chapter of the DeMolay organization.

Like many other thoughtful young men of the day, Mr. O'Donnell has definite political convictions and is identified with the democratic party. During the World war he was usefully active in all patriotic matters, giving time and effort and investing in bonds to the extent of his means and using his influence for the cause wherever he believed it was needed. He is a Knight Templar Mason and belongs to Carrollton Lodge No. 134, F. & A. M., of which he is a past master. Carroll Chapter No. 55, R. A. M., of which he is a past high priest; and De Molay Commandery, K. T., Louisville. He is well known over the state in professional bodies, and is a member of such representative organizations as the Kentucky Educational Association and the National Educational Association.

JOHN JUNIOR HOWE. For over sixty years the name Howe has been one of the most conspicuous in the commercial life of Carrollton. The Howes are a family of business men, merchants and bankers, and John Junior Howe, representing the third generation, is one of the leading lawyers and is the present commonwealth attorney for his judicial district.

The family was founded here in Carrollton by John Howe, a native of County Fermanagh, Ireland. He learned the trade of merchant tailor, and in the late '40s brought his family to the United States. After a few years in Fleming County, Kentucky, he spent two years in pioneer farming on the Illinois prairies, returning then to Kentucky and locating in Carrollton in 1859. He was a merchant tailor the rest of his life, and also established and built up the town of Juneau, now known and beautifully situated by Howe Brothers, Incorporated. He was a staunch democrat in politics. John Howe died at Carrollton in 1860.

His son, the late William F. Howe, was born at Five Mile Town in County Tyrone in 1846, and was a small boy when brought to America and about thirteen years of age when his life became identified with the community of Carrollton. He attended school in Fleming County, Kentucky, and also in Illinois one year, was married at Carrollton, and for a number of years was a banker, associated with John and W. F. Howe and Sons, bankers. He also operated the Carrollton Woolen Mills, and later was associated with the firm of Howe Brothers, clothing and dry goods. He was at one time county treasurer of Carroll County, and for a number of years was a member of the Carrollton City Council. William F. Howe was a democrat, an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church; South, and was a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason. He died at Carrollton in 1916. His wife was Lou Winslow, member of the prominent Winslow family of Carrollton, one of whom is George B. Winslow, president of the Carrollton National Bank. William F. Howe and wife have five children living. Miss Lillie, who is instructor in Spanish in the Western College of Cincinnati, and at Oxford, Ohio, lives at Carrollton, where she organized the Woman's Club and is a prominent worker in the Federated Women's Club. John Junior Howe is the second in age. Miss Jennie W., of Carrollton, is interested in the Federated Women's Club work and has been president of the local Woman's Club. Beverly W. is an attorney at Chicago, and the youngest of the family is Ruth Louise, wife of Henry B. Schuerman, secretary of the Carrollton Furniture Manufacturing Company.

John Junior Howe was born at Carrollton November 5, 1879, graduated from the Carrolton High School in 1906, and in 1900 received the A. B. degree from the Kentucky Wesleyan College of Winchester. From his brother he received the Master of Arts degree in 1903. In the meantime he had been in the offices of Winslow & Winslow, was admitted to the bar in 1902, and for twenty years he has sustained a prominent part at the bar of Carroll County. He is a junior member of the firm Winslow & Howe, attorneys. After beginning practice he entered the law department of the University of Michigan, and was graduated LL.B. in 1909. He is a member of the Kappa Sigma college fraternity.

Mr. Schultz was married in 1870, to Eliza J. Johnson, who was born in Tazewell, Tennessee, in 1850, and died at Tazewell in 1901. Their children were as follows: Lula, who died of scarlet fever at the age of six years; Wade, who traveled as a traveling salesman, died at Middleboro when thirty-eight years old; and the late Doctor Schultz, who was the third in order of birth; Thomas J., who was a physician and surgeon, died at Middleboro at the age of thirty-one years; Elizabeth, who married S. R. Robinson, a merchant of Tazewell, Tennessee; William B., who is a pharmacist, owns and operates the leading drug store of Middleboro; and Josie, who lives at Middleboro, is married and her husband is a pharmacist.

Doctor Schultz attended the local schools of Tazewell, Tazewell Academy, and began to teach school in Claiborne County at the age of twenty-two years, and continued so engaged for two years. He then entered the Tennessee Medical College at Knoxville, Tennessee, and spent two years in that institution, leaving it to become a student in the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville, Kentucky, and after two years there was graduated June 30, 1906, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He took post-graduate courses at the New York Polyclinic in 1913 and 1916, and also at the New York Post-Graduate School of Medicine in 1918, specializing in surgery. In 1906 he began the practice of his profession at Logmont, Bell County, Kentucky, and remained there until 1928, when he came to Middleboro, and has remained here ever since, but still retains his mining practice at Logmont. His offices are in the Schultz Building, on the north side of Cumberland Avenue, which is owned by him. He also owns a comfortable and desirable residence on West Cumberland Avenue, and a business building on the south side of Cumberland Avenue; three brick business houses on Lothberry Avenue; a three-fifth interest in the building occupied by W. B. Schultz & Company, druggists, which is on Lothberry Avenue at Nineteenth Street; and three dwellings at Middleboro.

Doctor Schultz is a Republican and is a justice of the peace for the Fourth Magisterial District of Bell County, which office he has held for the past eight years. He belongs to the Presbyterian Church. Well known in Masonry, he is a member of Pinnacle Lodge No. 661, F. and A. M.; Middleboro Chapter No. 45, R. A. M.; Pinnacle Lodge No. 136, K. T.; and Kosair Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. of Louisville, Kentucky. He also belongs to Middleboro Lodge, I. O. O. F.; Shenandoah Tribe, I. O. O. F., of Shamrock, Kentucky; the Kiwanis Club; the Bell County Medical Society; the Kentucky State Medical Society; the American Medical Association and the Southern Medical Association. Doctor Schultz is a man of many interests and is now serving as president of the Cumberland Hotel Corporation that is erecting a new hotel at Middleboro; is president of the W. B. Schultz Drug Company, recently organized the Dixie Hardware Company, which will conduct a retail and wholesale business and is always ready to give encouragement to local enterprises.

During the late war Doctor Schultz was one of the effective workers and belonged to the Coal Mining Production Committee, appointed by the Government through the United States Fuel Administrator. He also was a member of the Medical Reserve Corps andrendered the Government's services, and was expecting to be called where the armistice was signed. As a member of the various committees having charge of the different drives Doctor Schultz rendered a service which was valuable and appreciated, and he made speeches all over Bell County in behalf of patriotic movements. He bought bonds and War Savings Stamps and contributed to all of the organizations to the full extent of his means.

In 1905 Doctor Schultz was married at Rogersville, Tennessee, to Miss Sue McKinney Nice, a daughter of W. G. and Sue (McKinney) Nice, residents of Rogersville. Mr. Nice is a retired farmer and merchant, and a man of prominence in his community. Mrs. Schultz was graduated from the Rogersville Synodical College. Doctor and Mrs. Schultz have no children.

Wherever he has lived Doctor Schultz has been a forceful person, and people look to him for action and advice. A man of great energy, he has known how to make the best of things and never doubted his faith, and he has always understood that he owed his community a duty, nor to discharge such obligations. As a physician and surgeon he has few equals, and his skill, patience and ability are recognized by all. His public service during the war was a distinguished one, and he never spared himself, but worked almost without ceasing. His professional duties were of course increased by reason of the departure of so many of the medical men for the front, and yet he attended to everything, and to his public work in a manner so effective and thorough as to win the approval of the Government, and the admiration of his fellow citizens.

GEORGE B. WINSLOW. In the general prosperity of a community may be seen reflected the quality of its citizenship, and when its business, civic and social conditions are sound and satisfactory it may generally be assumed that the citizens of affairs have brought this about. The City of Carrollton, Kentucky, peaceful, progressive and prosperous, numbers among its citizens men of professional ability, business sagacity and public spirit. Well known among these and throughout Carroll County is George B. Winslow, an able member of the Carrollton bar and president of the Carrollton National Bank.

Mr. Winslow was born at Carrollton, June 6, 1868, and is a son of William Beverly and Martha Jane (Woolfolk) Winslow, the latter of whom was born in Henry County, Kentucky. January 26, 1826, and died at Carrollton December 3, 1905. The father of Mr. Winslow was born June 10, 1814, at Carrollton, fourteen years after his father, William Winslow a native of Virginia, had settled in the Village of Carrollton, where he died before the birth of his grandson, George B. Winslow. Thus for over a hundred years the Winslow family has been identified with the development and best interests of this city. William Beverly Winslow spent his entire life here, his death occurring March 16, 1883, after a long and successful career in the law. Although a democrat in political sentiment, he served his party only as a private citizen, but he filled many offices in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was a sincere Christian. To his marriage with Miss Martha Jane Woolfolk the following children were born: Henry M., who lives at Harriman, Tennessee, is a capitalist and a lawyer by profession; Lou, who resides at Carrollton, is the widow of William F. Howe, formerly a merchant and manufacturer at Carrollton; James T., who spent his life at Carrollton, died at the age of sixty years; Mariam, who died at Concord, North Carolina, aged fifty-nine years, is survived by her husband, Daniel B. Coltrane, a banker and manufacturer at Concord; Jennie W., who married W. W. Martin; William Beverly, who is an attorney at law in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio; and Martha W. (Mrs. Henry) D. Schultz, of the Liberty Tower Building; Ruth, who died at Carrollton July 1, 1899, was the wife of Henry Schuerman, who is president and general manager of the Carrollton Furniture Manufacturing Company; George B. and Pierce G.

George B. Winslow attended the public schools of his native city and also Dodd's Classical High School, a famous private institution of Cincinnati, Ohio. Subsequently he became a student in the Louisville Law School, where he completed the course of study that qualified him for a professional career.

Mr. Winslow has an interest in the business affairs of William A. Johnson of the Johnson & Gump Building Company, and in the Johnson Banking Company; he is also a director in the Naval National Bank of Cincinnati.

In the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, and in the City of Doylestown, Pennsylvania, Mr. Winslow has been connected with the Cincinnati and Empire Refrigerator Company, and in 1892 he purchased the Harrisburg Refractor Company; in 1897 he purchased the Daubon Chemical Company; and in 1905 he purchased the American Refractor Company.

O. N. M. S., at Louisville. In 1914 and 1915 he was grand master of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, F. and A. M., and in 1916 and 1917, was grand high priest of the Grand Chapter of Kentucky, R. A. M. He is a director in the Masonic Widows and Orphans Home at Louisville, Kentucky.

RALPH MALCOLM BARKER. In tobacco circles over Kentucky and along the Ohio River there has perhaps been on better known name during the past half century than that of Barker. For years the largest dealer in tobacco at Cincinnati was the late M. I. Barker. He was also in business at Carrollton, where his son Ralph Malcolm Barker is head of the chief organization for the buying, handling and storage of leaf tobacco.

The late M. I. Barker was born at Penn Yan, New York, in 1841, but when he was nine years old, was removed to Missouri, was married in St. Louis, and lived in that city for a few years. He was in the tobacco business all his life. After leaving St. Louis he was for six months in Indianapolis, and about 1865 moved to Covington, Kentucky, where he had his home until 1876. In the meantime, however, his business headquarters were in Cincinnati, where for several years he handled and dealt in more leaf tobacco than all the other dealers put together. In 1876 he moved to Carrollton, Kentucky, and in 1902 to Carrollton, Kentucky, which was his home the rest of his life. He died while visiting in the East, at Booth Bay Harbor, Maine, in 1910. In 1879 M. I. Barker established the first tobacco smerrymy or tobacco rehandling plant at Carrollton. His interests as a tobacconist extended all over Northern Kentucky.

M. I. Barker gave regular attention to his duties as a member of the Episcopalian Church, was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and was a democrat. He married Miss Virginia Clark, who was born at Philadelphia in 1830 and is now living at Cincinnati. They had a family of five children. Ada is the wife of William E. Fisher, of Carrollton, who for many years was a leading clothing merchant at Cincinnati and is now retired. Bertha, who makes her home at Cincinnati with her mother, is the widow of J. D. Matthews, who for a number of years was private secretary to Howard Gould and later a farmer at Chula, Virginia, where he died in 1921. Clifford I. Barker was drowned at the Ross Basin, Cincinnati, at the age of fifteen. Ralph M. is the fourth of the family. Charles A. owns and operates a public garage at El Paso, Texas.

Ralph Malcolm Barker was born at Covington November 22, 1855, was educated in the public schools of Avondale, Cincinnati, and the High School at Covington. During 1881 he attended Nelson’s Business College of that city, and on October 25, 1891, came to Carrollton, where for thirty years he has been active in the tobacco industry. He looked after his father’s interests at Carrollton until their business was sold to the Continental Tobacco Company in 1909. After being retired from the business for several years he established the R. M. Barker Tobacco Company, which has become one of the largest firms of dealers of tobacco in Carroll County, and its redrying plant at Eleventh and Polk streets is the largest concern of its kind in the state. The company also does a general brokerage and commission business in leaf tobacco. R. M. Barker is president, and the secretary and treasurer of the company is B. E. Salt.

Mr. Barker has a number of interests in a business way and is an owner of real estate in Carrollton and elsewhere. He is a director in the Wood Tobacco Warehouse Company of Carrollton, a director in the new Burley Tobacco Warehouse Company of Carrollton, is owner of a warehouse building on Polk Street now occupied by the American Tobacco Company and the R. J. Reynolds Company, owns the building occupied by the Vogel Bakery Shop and owns the property originally known as the Darling Distillery. His home is on a fine farm on the Glenn Pike, a mile and a half east of Carrollton, where he has two hundred and fifty-nine acres. He is much interested in agricultural affairs, a member of the Farmers Union and the Carroll County Farm Bureau.

Mr. Barker built and installed the first telephone system at Carrollton, a system that was gradually extended over the adjoining rural district. He is an active member and was one of the originators of the Commercial Club of Carrollton. He served two years on the school board, was mayor of Carrollton four years, is independent in politics and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. During the World war Mr. Barker besides doing his part in the home drives visited every camp in the United States where there was a recruit from Carroll County and bountifully supplied them with tobacco and cigarettes. He is treasurer of a building which is planning to build a hospital, largely from funds supplied by the tobacco men of Carrollton.

Mr. Barker married Miss Margaret Evans, daughter of T. D. and Ida (Gullion) Evans, residents of Carrollton, her father being general manager of the Wood Tobacco Warehouse Company. Mr. Barker has one son, Myron Irving, now a student in Cornell University at Ithaca, New York.

E. MORRIS MANSFIELD. The sterling business qualities that serve to make a man successful in one important line of effort may be depended upon to be helpful in others. One of the clear-headed business men of Carrollton, Kentucky, is E. Morris Mansfield, editor and manager of the Carrollton Democrat. He is a man of versatile gifts, and for years before coming to this city had been identified with large enterprises elsewhere. He is one of the forward-looking, capable men who are never satisfied to travel in narrow channels, who have the courage to assume business responsibilities in different directions, and possess the mentality and determination to bear them with credit.

E. Morris Mansfield was born January 19, 1881, in Monroe County, Kentucky. His parents were James Thomas and Ida (Williams) Mansfield, the latter of whom was born in 1855, in Barren County, Kentucky, and now resides at Fresno, California. Their two other sons, Milton and Joseph, both reside at Fresno, the former owning a public garage and the latter being a clothing merchant.

James Thomas Mansfield was born in Virginia in 1827, obtained his education there and was in early manhood when he started out in life for himself and came to Kentucky. He remained in Barren County until 1888, when Mrs. Mansfield came to Carroll County and the acreage of timber land and for some years operated a sawmill. Afterward for more than a decade he was in the drug business, conducting the leading drug store at Fountain Run, at which place his death occurred in 1894. Although always a business man rather than a politician, he was interested in public affairs and gave his support to the candidates of the democratic party as a matter of principle. He was one of the leading Masons of Monroe County, and was a faithful and liberal member of the Baptist Church at Fountain Run.

E. Morris Mansfield attended the local schools through boyhood and then entered the high school at Glasgow, Kentucky, from which he was graduated in the class of 1898. The succeeding four years he spent in Texas as an employe of the F. W. & D. C. Railroad Company, at the expiration of that time returning to Glasgow, Kentucky, where he was engaged in the drug business for six years, and afterward for three years conducted a drug business in the City of Louisville. In 1898 Mr. Mansfield came to Carroll County and after following farming for four years, scientific agriculture always having much interest for him, and at the present time he is secretary of the Carroll County Farm Bureau.
In 1919 Mr. Mansfield accepted the position of manager and editor of the Carrollton Democrat, one of the oldest and leading newspapers of Northern Kentucky. The paper was established in 1857, and plant and offices are situated on South Street, Carrollton. It is owned by a stock company and its officials are all men of substantial standing. The president of the company is C. M. Dean; vice president, F. Vories; secretary, M. Walton; treasurer, L. O. Harris; editor and general manager, E. M. Mansfield. It is liberally supported and has a wide circulation in Carroll and adjoining counties. Its political policy is independent, but Mr. Mansfield individually is a democrat. He is, however, a vigorous writer on general as well as political questions, and maintains a high literary standard for his journal. He has additional important business interests, being senior partner of the firm of Mansfield & Collins, liverymen at Carrollton, who own and conduct the largest and best equipped livery barns with all modern accessories, in Carroll County. He has long been identified with the tobacco growing industry and is secretary of the National Tobacco Growers Association of the states of Kentucky, Tennessee, Ohio and Indiana. His numerous business responsibilities are handled with business acumen and efficiency, and his name is well known in both commercial and newspaper circles.

At Louisville, Kentucky, in 1908, Mr. Mansfield was married to Miss May Bond, who was born and reared in Carrollton and was graduated from the high school there. She is a daughter of Frank and Fannie (Barrett) Bond, the latter of whom survives and lives at Carrollton. Her father was widely known over the state as a raiser of fine horses on his farm in Carroll County, and became a member of that famous family-Hamlet, which broke many former records for speed.

Mr. and Mrs. Mansfield have four children, three sons and one daughter: Lloyd, born in 1910; Anna Laura, born in 1912; Robert Barrett, born in 1915; and John Morris, born in 1918. Mr. Mansfield and wife were members of the Baptist Church and take an active part in the various charitable and welfare agencies. During the World war he steadily pursued the path of duty, assisting in every possible way in the furtherance of the various patriotic undertakings in the county and investing liberally, to the extent of his means, in stamps and bonds.

GEORGE MONTGOMERY. The active and successful pursuit of business affairs, for nearly 70 years, has been the business of George Montgomery, to most men a wealth of useful experience and a soundness of judgment that contribute materially to their worth to their fellow men, in recognition of which they are frequently and wisely selected for public offices of responsibility. In this connection may be mentioned one of the substantial and representative men of Carroll County, George Montgomery, who has been postmaster at Ghent, and is at the head of the extensive hardware business conducted here under the style of George Montgomery & Son.

George Montgomery was born in Gallatin County, Kentucky, February 25, 1828, the youngest in a family of seven children born to William and Elizabeth (Hoggins) Montgomery. William Montgomery was born in 1820, in Gallatin County, on a farm adjoining the one on which his son was reared. His family was John and Mary (Bohannon) Montgomery, the former of whom was born in Virginia, in 1792, came to Gallatin County early, served in the Mexican war and died on his farm in the above county in 1824. William Montgomery lived on his farm in Gallatin County, situated four miles from Ghent, from the time of his marriage until his death. He was an extensive and prosperous farmer, a most worthy citizen and was held in high regard by all who knew him. He was one of the early members of the Masonic fraternity in this section, and was a member and liberal supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He married Elizabeth Hoggins, who was born in Gallatin County in 1824, and at the time of her death, in April, 1912, was a member of her son George's family. The latter's brothers and sisters were: Ella, who resides at Louisville, Kentucky, is the widow of Bennett Sanders; Mary Jane, who resides near Brookville, Indiana, is the widow of W. H. Bohannon, formerly a farmer in Gallatin County; Amanda, who married Hiram Bohannon, died, as did her husband, on their farm near Bagdad, Shelby County, Kentucky; Letha, who was the wife of George N. Montgomery, died in Iowa; John J., who died on the home farm at the age of twenty-two years; and William, who was a farmer in Carroll County, two miles west of Ghent, was accidentally drowned in the Ohio River at the age of forty-four years.

George Montgomery attended the country schools and also a seminary in Gallatin County, remaining with his father on the home farm until he was twenty-three years old. In 1882 he came to Ghent, and was engaged in a general mercantile business here for three years, then returned to the farm, which, off and on, he conducted for thirty years, and subsequently inherited a part of this property. This he sold in October, 1900, when he returned to Ghent and became a factor in the hardware business. He has been a successful broker in life and fire insurance. After five years he removed to Huntington, West Virginia, where for one year he was bookkeeper and timekeeper for Harrison & Dean, street paving contractors, and for the following three years was cashier for the Natural Gas Company, now known as the United Fuel & Gas Company, of that city.

In 1914 Mr. Montgomery returned to Ghent and followed farming until 1914, in which year he was appointed postmaster and purchased his hardware store of Scott Brothers. He has built up an extensive business connection in the hardware line and does the largest business in Carroll County. Since 1920 his son, R. O. Montgomery, has been his equal partner, and the firm name of George Montgomery & Son has high standing in commercial circles.

At Ghent, Kentucky, May 5, 1890, Mr. Montgomery was married to Miss Mamie Orr, a daughter of Richard and Lucy (Ellis) Orr, both deceased, Mr. Orr having been a tobacco dealer. Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery have had two children: R. O., who was born February 14, 1885, is his father's business partner; and Bessie, who died at 12 years of age, March 24, 1901.

In 1900 Mr. Montgomery bought the substantial hotel building which stands on the corner of Main-Cross and Liberty streets, which has been under Mrs. Montgomery's able management practically ever since and is acknowledged to be the best conducted hotel in Northern Kentucky. Mr. Montgomery has been a lifelong democrat and a Mason since 1879. During the World war he was active in every patriotic movement and did his full duty.

BENJAMIN F. EGELSTON. Like many other representative families of Kentucky, that of Egelston was founded here by pioneers from Virginia, and for generations members of it have been prominent and useful in various vocations, particularly in Kenton and Gallatin counties. The present representative of this family is Hon. Benjamin F. Egelston, postmaster at Glencoe and an ex-member of the Kentucky State Legislature, in which he served with notable efficiency, faithfully conserving the interests of his constituents.

Benjamin F. Egelston was born March 18, 1860, at Brashear, Gallatin County, Kentucky, second son of James A. and Agnes (Shires) Egelston. His father was born in 1826, at Covington, Kentucky, a son of Benjamin Egelston, who was born in 1702, in Kenton County, and died at Covington in 1867, in which city he spent almost all his life, although extensively interested in agricultural pursuits in his native county. His father was a native of Virginia and had come to Kenton County in early manhood. James A. Egelston made his home in the City of Covington until 1838, when he removed to Gallatin County, in 1861 returning to Covington, where his death followed in 1868. During all his active business life he held a reliable position as salesperson for a wholesale hardware house of Cincinnati, Ohio. He was a life-long democrat, and during the war he was a member of the Confederate, and for a long period was a member of the Masonic fraternity, being a Knight Templar. He married Miss Agnes Shires, who was born February 28, 1821, in the old City of Strassburg, Germany, and was brought to the United States by her parents in 1826. They settled in Cincinnati, Ohio, where she was reared and educated. Six children were born to James A. Egelston and his wife, namely:

- Maud, who died at Louisville, Kentucky, at the age of thirty-two years, was the wife of John Harp; James, who is a resident of Frankfort, Kentucky, is cashier for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company; Benjamin F.; Susie, who died when twelve years old; Clara, who resides at Covington, is the widow of Alva M. Slaughter, formerly a farmer and a director of the Tobacco Equity Society of Kentucky; and Nellie, who is the wife of J. W. Laws, extraordinarily active in the life of the Gal- burg, Ohio. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Egelston returned to Gallatin County and later was married to the late G. W. Noel, a merchant at Glencoe, where he died. They had one child, Mary, who survived but one year. Mrs. Noel still resides at Glencoe.

Benjamin F. Egelston attended school at Glencoe until sixteen years old, and after that had practical business training as a clerk in his stepfather's store for three years. From 1881 to 1886 he was engaged with a Cincinnati clothing house as a traveling salesman, afterward being interested along other lines until 1893, when he was appointed postmaster at Glencoe by President Cleveland and served four years in this office. In 1897 Mr. Egelston embarked in a general mercantile business at Glencoe, which he continued until 1912, when he sold out, in the fall of 1911 having been a member of the board of directors of the Cincinnati and Carroll counties to the State Legislature. As chairman of the committee on public warehouses and granaries and as a member of the public education and other important committees, he honestly did his part to bring about legislation in the public interest. In 1911 he started the hardware business at Glencoe, which he continued to oversee until 1918, when he turned it over to his son, J. C., in order to give all his attention to public duties, as in 1914 he had been appointed postmaster by President Wilson, an office he held ever since.

Mr. Egelston was married in 1886, at Owenton, Kentucky, to Miss Kitty Kenney, daughter of James and Mary (Brown) Kenney, both now deceased, Mr. Kenney formerly being a farmer in Owen County. Mr. and Mrs. Egelston have two sons: C. Y., who is in mercantile business; and J. C., who is a sales-

- man for the Caloric Furnace Company of Cincinnati.

J. C. Egelston enlisted in the United States Navy for service in the World war, in June, 1918, was a yeoman at Great Lakes, Chicago, and was mustered out in December, 1918.

All his political life a loyal democrat, Mr. Egelston has served his party and country to the best of his ability. He was once publicly demonstrating the continuance of the World war in patriotic effort, and no other citizen according to his means more conscientiously or energetically supported the various movements. Although interested in many movements outside of Glencoe, the everyday needs of his city are given first attention, and as a member of the Board of School Trustees he has worked faithfully in the cause of education, and as a member of the town board the general welfare has been carefully looked after.

Mr. Egelston is prominent in fraternal organizations. He is a thirty-second degree Mason, and belongs to Indra Consistory No. 2, Covington, and to Glencoe Lodge No. 498, F. and A. M., of which he is a past master. He is a past grand of Eagle Valley Lodge of Odd Fellows at Glencoe.

Although farming has never been his main occupation, Mr. Egelston has maintained a wide and deep interest in agricultural pursuits, and his farm of fifty acres, situated northeast of Glencoe, is valuable property and a profitable investment. He has other real estate, including a modern residence on Railroad Street, and another dwelling and two store buildings at Glencoe. Mr. Egelston and family belong to the Baptist Church.

ROBERT PIERCE THOMAS, M. D. If there is one man more worthy of sincere respect and profound esteem than another in the field of life's activities it is the faithful and conscientious physician who, turning aside from many other more profitable vocations, has devoted himself for years to the amelioration of the physical ills of mankind. He occupies the unique position in a community of being its most important citizen, whatever may be his financial or social standing. Power, wealth and high estate are as nothing when weighed by the sick or injured as a result of his professional knowledge and skill. To have adequately and modestly filled this position for almost a half century is the record of achievement that belongs to Dr. Robert Pierce Thomas, who has spent over twenty-two years of his active professional life at Glencoe, Kentucky.

Doctor Thomas was born February 7, 1837, on a farm three-quarters of a mile west of Glencoe, in Gallatin County, Kentucky. His parents were J. C. and Frances Ann (Lewis) Thomas, and his paternal grandfather was Capt. John Thomas, a descendant of an English Thomas who settled in Maryland in Colonial times. Captain Thomas was born in Maryland in 1807, and from there accompanied his parents to Boone County, Kentucky, in 1833 removed to Owen County and prior to his death, in 1857, to Shelby County. In 1837 the son was married to Elizabeth Castileman, a daughter of John Castileman, a farmer and stockman in Boone County, her death occurring in Owen County.

J. C. Thomas was born August 17, 1837, on his father's farm situated three miles north of Burlington, Boone County, and he died in October, 1906, in Gallatin County, Kentucky. In childhood he accompanied his father to Owen County, where he lived until 1849, during some years being a merchant at Poplar Grove, but in the main spending his life as a farmer. In 1849 he came to a farm situated three-quarters of a mile west of Glencoe in Gallatin County, on which he resided until 1855, when he removed to Knox County, Missouri, where he engaged in farming for ten years. In 1865 he returned to Gallatin County, locating on his former farm, and continued there until the end of his life. It is a sterling character and marked intelligence, and for many years was an important factor in local democratic circles, serving as a magistrate in Gallatin County for eight years and in the same capacity in Knox County, Missouri. At the age of twenty-two he united with the Baptist Church, and was a faithful member all the rest of his life, and for fifty years he belonged to the Masonic fraternity.

J. C. Thomas was married in Owen County to Frances Ann Lewis, who was born in Woodford County, Kentucky, April 22, 1832, and died at Glencoe, Kentucky, April 16, 1918. They had a family of eleven children, as follows: J. E., who is a farmer in Owen County; lives at New Liberty; Robert Pierce; Annie Eliza, who died unmarried on the home farm when aged fifty-one years; L. E., who is a retired farmer living at Glencoe; William G., who now follows carpentering at Louisville, Kentucky, was formerly a farmer and later a railroad man; Alfred M., who was a carpenter by trade, was accidentally killed in the Roth Packing Company’s plant, Cincinnati, Ohio; Vir- gin, who is a resident of Louisville, was a hardware merchant at Versailles, Kentucky, until 1910; Gertrude, who is the wife of Luther Wilson, of Indianapolis, Indiana, mill owner and manufacturer of tin and sheet metal products; John, who was employed at the home of twenty-eight years old; Mrs. Stella Frye, who lives at Louisville; and Nellie, who is the wife of Norton Grubbs, a banker and successful business man of Argyle, Wisconsin.

Robert Pierce Thomas attended the Gallatin County school and graduated from the high school at Glencoe in 1873. He then entered the medical department of Transy-ylvania University at Lexington, Kentucky. Immediately afterward he entered into medical practice in Owen County, two years later moving to Grant County where he remained for twenty-two years, and then settled down in the practice of his profession.

He is a member of the Gallatin County and the Kentucky State Medical Societies, and of the American Medical Association.

Doctor Thomas married April 11, 1878, in Grant County, Kentucky, Miss Aggie Collins, who died in 1897. She was a daughter of John A. and Julia (Clark) Collins, the former of whom was a farmer and the latter of whom was a school teacher, and was instrumental in the building of a part of the Covington and Lexington Turnpike road. Doctor Thomas married at Covington, Kentucky, October 12, 1898, Miss Marguerite Maude Price, a daughter of Nicholas and Elizabeth (Jones) Price, natives of Wales and both deceased. Mr. Price passed his life as a rolling mill man. Doctor and Mrs. Thomas have one son, Robert L. (born August 12, 1900). He is now a resident of Covington, where he is superintendent of a cigar factory. During the World war, because of his knowledge of chemistry, he was employed in a nitro-glycerine plant in Virginia.

In politics Doctor Thomas has been a life-long demo- crat. He has never desired a public office, and the duties of his profession have mainly absorbed his time. He is a member of several lodges; he is member of the Masonic Lodge No. 498, F. and A. M., and of the Chapter, Commandery and Consistory at Covington. He belongs also to El Hasa Temple, Mys- tic Shrine, at Ashland, Kentucky. Additionally he be- longs to Gueneo Chapter, O. E. S.; to Williamsburg Lodge No. 74, Knights of Pythias, of which he is a past chancellor commander; and to Gueneo Council, J. O. U. A. M. He is a member of the Christian Church, in which he has served as elder for a number of years. In addition to a modern residence and office on South Main Street, Glencoe, Doctor Thomas owns a valuable farm situated just south of the corporate limits of Glencoe, on which he raises tobacco, cattle and horses. During his long and benefi- cent professional life Doctor Thomas has had occa- sion to rejoice over marvelous advances made in his beloved science, and has guardedly kept abreast with new methods and modern theories.

Jesse Benjamin Manor, M. D. There is nothing remarkable in the fact that usually the physicians of any community are numbered among its leading cit- izens, for the rigid training necessary in order that a man enter the most exacting calling of medicine, so develops his mentality that he is fitted to assume other responsibilities in a capable manner, and his associates soon recognize this and ask his assistance in their enter- prises. Placing a true value upon civic development, the conscientious physician is naturally anxious to secure for his home town the advantages coming from a proper sanitary protection, and so exerts himself in public affairs. Dr. Jesse Benjamin Manor of La Center, belongs to this class of enterprising men, and in addition to carrying on his practice is president of the Bank of La Center, and is extensively engaged in farming and stockraising on his valuable farm one mile west of La Center.

Doctor Manor was born in Todd County, Kentucky, March 22, 1855, a son of William Clark Manor, and grandson of David Manor. The Manors came from England to Virginia during the Colonial period of this country’s history. David Manor was born in the Shenandoah Valley in 1776, and died there in 1862. He was a planter, and large landowner. His maternal grandfather, Rev. Mr. Clark, was killed in the American Revolution. The Clarks were originally from Scot- land. David Manor married a Miss Clark.

William Clark Manor was born in the Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, May 22, 1816, on the large plantation owned by his father, and died near La Center, Ken- tucky, April 24, 1908. He was reared in Virginia, and married at Baltimore, Maryland, following which, in 1847, he moved to Todd County, Kentucky, and was one of the early farmers of that region. He owned the farm which is now occupied by Rev. G. W. H. Sharpe, of whom he was descendant. He was engaged in cotton farming, and settled on a farm midway between Barlow and La Center, where he was successfully engaged in farming for many years. Subsequently he bought a second farm near his original one, and owned at the time of his death 107 acres of land. He was a democ- rat, and served as a magistrate for many years. The Christian Church had in him one of its most earnest members and effective workers, and his eulogy on his death was spoken of by his many and Fraternally he main- tained membership with the Masons. William Clark Manor was married to Mary E. Ferguson, born in Vir- ginia in 1821, and she died on the home farm in January, 1881. Their children were as follows: Robert Ferguson, who was a merchant, died at Dallas, Texas, in 1912, when about sixty-five years old, as he was born in 1847; John William, who was born in 1849, lives at Barlow, Kentucky, having retired from farming and merchandising in 1882; John Albert, who was married to G. A. Newton, and married at Hazelwood, Ballard County, Ken- tucky, as did her husband, he having been a merchant and toboconist and operator of 1,500 acres of land, the main portion of it being in the vicinity of La Center; Jesse Benjamin, whose name heads this review; Mary Elizabeth, who married Rev. J. B. Cook, now on the superannuated list of the Methodist Episcopal Church, lives at Warsaw, Indiana; and Albert Branan, a real estate broker, who lives in Arkansas.

Doctor Manor attended the rural schools of Ballard County, and for several years was engaged in teaching school. He then entered Washington University at St. Louis, Missouri, and was graduated from its med- ical department in 1882 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Immediately after receiving his degree Doctor Manor began practicing at Hazelwood, and re- mained there until 1887, when he moved to his present home, one mile west of La Center. He owns the modern residence, which is located on a farm of 45 acres, and he also owns 200 acres addition in the river bottom. He carries on a general farming and stockraising busi- ness, specializing on a standard breed of horses, and pure Ohio Improved Chester hogs. While he is deeply interested in his agricultural activities, he carries on a large practice, and is recognized as one of the leading members of the medical fraternity in Ballard County. Professionally he maintains membership in the Ballard County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, the American Medical Association and the Southwest Medical Association. Doctor Manor was president of the Bank of La Center which he helped to organize, succeeding the first president, J. M. Skinner, who held the office during the first two years of the bank's history. This bank was established in November, 1903, as a state bank, and its officers, in addition to Dr. Manor, were J. D. Rollings, vice president, and F. C. Lovelace, cashier. This bank has a capital of $15,000; surplus and undivided profits of $30,000; and deposits of $225,000. In politics Doctor Manor is a democrat.

On July 26, 1903, Doctor Manor was united in marriage with Miss Minnie Tanner at Barlow, Kentucky. She was a daughter of James M. and Sarah (Viets) Tannor. Mr. Tanner was one of the early farmers of the Barlow region, but is now deceased. His widow survives him and makes her home at Barlow. Doctor and Mrs. Manor became the parents of the following children: Benjamin Franklin, who died when he lacked but two days of being three months old; Robert Ferguson, who was born January 22, 1906; William G., who was born April 3, 1907; Mary Frances, who died at the age of two and one-half months; and Jessie Eleanor, who died at the age of three months.

JOE K. NESBIT. To attain success in life through individual effort is something to be proud of, and in America it is a badge of honor to be called a self-made man. Such a term may be justly applied to Joe K. Nesbit, County and Circuit Court clerk of Gallatin County, Kentucky, and owner and proprietor of a large and important business enterprise at Warsaw. Mr. Nesbit was born at Tuscola, Douglas County, Illinois, January 24, 1865. His parents were F. F. and Kate (Kirby) Nesbit.

F. F. Nesbit was born in Harrison County, Kentucky, in 1820, a son of Samuel Nesbit, who settled in Harrison County at a very early day and died there when F. F. Nesbit was a boy. The latter moved to Grant County, Kentucky, in early manhood and engaged in merchandising until 1864, in that year locating at Tuscola, Illinois, where for four years, in partnership with a Mr. Chambers, he owned and operated a general store. In 1868 he came to Warsaw, and was the leading merchant here until his retirement in 1880, his death following in 1903. In his early political life he was a democrat but in later years became affiliated with the republican party. He served four years as constable of the Warsaw district. He was a man of true Christian principles, a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and for twenty years was secretary of the Sunday School at Warsaw. He belonged to Tadmore Lodge No. 108, F. and A. M., of which he was a past master, and to Kentucky Lodge No. 39, Odd Fellows, of which he was a past grand master.

F. F. Nesbit was married in Grant County, Kentucky, to Miss Byers, who died in that county, the mother of two children: Clarence C., who died at the age of fifty years in St. Louis, Missouri, where he was in business as a real estate broker; and Lizzie, who was the wife of a Mr. Roberts and died in Florida. Mr. Nesbit married for his second wife Kate Kirby, who was born in 1825, in Bourbon County, Kentucky, and died at Warsaw in May, 1900. There were four children born to this marriage: A daughter who died in infancy; Joe K.; Walter F., who is a contractor and decorator residing at San Diego, California; and Sallie R., who resides with her brother Joe K. and looks after his home comforts, neither having married.

Joe K. Nesbit was three years old when the family came to Warsaw, which place, like others, was in a process of adjustment after the close of the Civil War. When twenty years old he began to be self-supporting, finding work on the farm of J. H. McDaniel, near Warsaw, where he remained for six years and going then to the farm of S. D. Godman in the southern part of Gallatin County, where he remained three years. In the meanwhile, determined to obtain a good education, he applied himself to study and reading under the superintendence for a time of Reverend Speers, and while many youths of his age were spending their evenings in pursuance of pleasurable avocations, he was busily studying his books.

Mr. Nesbit was about twenty-one years old when he went to work for David Carr, tobacco man, at Warsaw, with whom he remained for ten years, going then to the firm of William Taffe & Son, undertakers, and when Mr. Taffe died in 1897 he bought the business from Mrs. Taffe and has conducted it ever since. He has modernized the business, has introduced special features of service, owns a fine undertaking parlor on Main Street, and prides himself on making every funeral directing in the county. He is a licensed embalmer and was appointed by Governor McCratey to fill out the unexpired term of Stanley Milward on the State Board of Embalmers, serving one year.

In political life Mr. Nesbit has always been a democrat. Under appointment he served as deputy county court clerk and deputy Circuit Court clerk of Gallatin County from January, 1906, until January, 1910. In November, 1910, he was elected county and Circuit Court clerk, and assumed the duties of his office January 1, 1911, and his efficiency may be judged by the fact that he was re-elected in 1913 and 1917, the terms covering four years. Mr. Nesbit's offices are in the court house at Warsaw, where his fellow citizens always meet with intelligent attention and courteous treatment.

Mr. Nesbit is a member of Tadmore Lodge No. 108, F. and A. M., Warsaw, of which he is a past master; Warsaw Chapter No. 97, R. A. M., of which he is a past master; Commandery No. 3, R. T. M.; and El Husa Temple, Mystic Shrine, Ashland, Kentucky. He belongs also to Gallatin Lodge No. 95, Odd Fellows, Napoleon, Kentucky, of which is a past grand; and Warsaw Council No. 147, J. O. U. A. M. Mr. Nesbit is the owner of several valuable properties, these including his place of business, his comfortable modern residence on Pearl Street, and one-third of the Odd Fellows Cemetery plot at Warsaw. During the World War he was active in organizing the patriotic movements that had so much to do with its fortunate termination, being one of the willing and unselfish workers for the great cause. He served as chairman of the Gallatin County Draft Board and also was chairman of the Gallatin County Council of Defense. Mr. Nesbit attends the Methodist Episcopal Church.

WILL BARTON, secretary and manager of the Pure Ice & Coal Company of Russellville, is one of the sound business men of Logan County, and one whose career is connected with some of the most constructive developments of this region. He was born in Kentucky, August 12, 1870, while his father was assisting in constructing the Louisville & Nashville Railroad between New Orleans, Louisiana, and Russellville, Kentucky. He is a son of James Barton, and a grandson of Robin Wallace who was born in England, and died near Kentucky County, Cavan, Ireland, where he was engaged in farming. He married Jane Ann Graham, who was of English descent, and died in County Cavan, Ireland. The paternal grandmother, Mrs. Susan Ann Barton, also died in County Cavan, Ireland, where she was a practicing physician.

James Barton was born in Scotland in 1827, and died near Russellville, Kentucky, in 1872. He was reared in Scotland and Ireland, and was married at Liverpool, England, when only nineteen years of age, and immediately thereafter came to the United States. Entering into business with the Louisville & Nashville Railroad as a railroad contractor, he continued with this corporation the remainder of his life. In all of his dealings he was rigorously honest, and throughout his life showed... the effects of the excellent training he had received in a military school in Scotland. After being naturalized he espoused the principles of the democratic party, and thereafter supported them. A Church of England man, he transferred his membership to the Episcopal Church and, in 1873, became a member of the United States.
He was married to Isabella Wallace, who was born in County Cavan, Ireland, in 1829, and died at Russellville, in 1905. She was always a strong supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Their children were as follows: Margaret, who is unmarried, keeps house for her brother;
Will; John, who owns a job-printing business at Macon, Georgia; Mary Ann, who died unmarried at Russellville, Kentucky, aged forty-two years; Will, who was the fifth in order of birth; James, who was a printer, died at New Orleans, Louisiana; and four others who died when very young.

Beginning his educational training in a private school,
Mr. Barton completed it in the public schools of Russellville, but left school when only fourteen years old, and entered the printing office of the village. Not liking the trade, he only remained there a short time, but tried the telegraph business. He then opened the telephone office in 1898, and assisted in putting in the first telephone system in Russellville. He owned it in partnership with Judge W. Clark and others. In 1900 he sold his interests and for fifteen months conducted a livery business, under the firm name of Hutchings & Barton.
Mr. Barton then entered the service of the Pure Ice & Coal Company, representing the Sinclair interests, as secretary and treasurer. He later sold his interest in the business and bought the half interest in the plant owned by G. Cooksey, who, with his wife and Edward Sinclair, established the plant in 1901. At present Mr. Barton is half owner, secretary and manager of this company, which is incorporated, with R. F. McCuddy as president, Dr. Walter Byrne, Senior, as treasurer, and Mr. Barton in full control of the business. The plant and offices are on West Second Street, Russellville, and it has a capacity of fifteen tons every twenty-four hours. In addition to marketing the output of the plant, the company handles coal at retail, and the business in both lines has been developed to large proportions. Mr. Barton is a democrat, and was elected on his party ticket to the city council in 1910, but immediately resigned. He affiliates with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is an active supporter of it.
Fraternally he belongs to the First Lodge, No. 213,
F. & A. M.; Russellville Chapter No. 8, R. A. M.;
Owensboro Commandery No. 15, K. T.; Kosair Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S.; Louisville Consistory, in which he has been raised to the thirty-second degree; Amelia Lodge No. 56, K. of P., of which he is past chancellor, and he is a Pythian veteran, having been a member in good standing for over twenty-five years; and Bowling Green Lodge No. 320, B. P. O. E. He owns a modern residence on West Second Street, where he and his sister maintain a comfortable home. During the late war he took an active part in the Logan County war work, buying bonds and war savings stamps and contributing to all of the organizations to the limit of his means.

For three years he served as a member of the Kentucky State Guards, and while serving in this regiment, he was at the inauguration of Governor Beckham. Mr. Barton is not married.

H. M. BLACKBURN, Known all over Warren County as a general merchant and as vice president of the Peoples State Bank of Woodburn, H. M. Blackburn is entitled to the position he holds in his community of being one of its most successful citizens. His capabilities are such that he has not found sufficient outlet for his talents in private life, and has been able to discharge in an eminently acceptable manner the duties pertaining to several public offices.

H. M. Blackburn was born in Allen County, Kenucky, January 5, 1826, a son of William Blackburn and grandson of Robert Blackburn, who was born in North Carolina, and died in Allen County prior to the birth of his grandson, having been a very early farmer of that region. The Blackburn family originated in Scotland, from which country they emigrated to the American Colony at an early date.

William Blackburn was born in Allen County, December 4, 1808, and died in Allen County, January 3, 1870, having spent his life in that county, where he was extensively engaged in farming. First a whig, he later became a democrat. During the war between the two sections of the country he was a Union sympathizer, and was never a legal register of his district. He married first Cynthia Cockrill, who died in 1839; then Sarah Emerson, of Scotland, having borne her husband children as follows:
Emily, who died in Kansas; Lemuel, who died in Texas;
and Robert Bruce, who lives at Mayfield, Kentucky, where he is working as a carpenter. William Blackburn married for his second wife Mrs. Jane (Billingsley) Goodnight, widow of Henry Goodnight, a farmer of Allen County. She was born in Tennessee, January 23, 1829, and died in Allen County, January 3, 1898.
From this marriage William Blackburn had the following children:
John, who died at Woodburn, in February, 1912, was manager of the Nave-Spillers Company, wholesale produce dealers; Cynthia, who married Ira Wrenn, a farmer, died in Warren County, as did her husband; an unnamed infant son; H. M., who was fourth in order of birth; William Loving, who was a school teacher, died at Woodburn in 1885; and Pinis, who died in childhood. By her first marriage Mrs. Blackburn had two children, namely: James Paris Goodnight, who died in Texas, was a farmer; and Mary Elizabeth Goodnight, who married John H. Collins, a farmer, constable and county court clerk of Allen County at different periods; before he retired to Bowling Green, Kentucky, where both he and his wife died.

H. M. Blackburn attended the rural schools of Allen Warren and Simpson counties and a private school at Bowling Green, and at the age of nineteen years, began acquiring a practical knowledge of the world as a clerk in a general store at Woodburn, where he remained for six months. For four months he was in Simpson County, and then entered the general store owned by his brother, John B., and continued with him until 1869. For the subsequent year he was engaged in farming, but returned to the Woodburn store for two years before his marriage, and was thus occupi-ded in Warren County for a period of five years.
Then, March 30, 1878, he embarked in a mercantile business with J. M. Wilkerson of Woodburn, which association continued for nearly five years. On March 8, 1883, Mr. Blackburn formed a partnership with E. B. Stuart in the same line of business, but in September, 1886, Mr. Blackburn acquired his partner's interest by purchase, and since then has been sole proprietor of the store, which he has built up into being the leading one of its kind in Warren County. He owns his large store building on the southwest corner of the Public Square. In addition to his mercantile pursuits, Mr.
Blackburn has other interests and is vice president and a director of the Peoples State Bank of Woodburn, and is a stockholder of the American National Bank of Bowling Green. Mr. Blackburn also owns his comfortable residence at Woodburn. Prominent as a democrat he served as town trustee of Woodburn, and as postmaster during the second administration of President Cleveland. For many years he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is treasurer of the congregation at Woodburn. A Mason he belongs to Harney Lodge No. 343, A. A. O. N. M., and is a member of Bowman Lodge No. 42, O. E. S., of which he is past worthy patron; and Warren Lodge No. 31, Knights of Pythias, of which he is past chancellor.
During the late war he was one of the zealous workers.
in behalf of the Warren County war activities, and assisted in raising funds in all of the drives. He bought bonds and war savings stamps, and contributed to the various organizations to the full extent of his means.

Mr. Blackburn was married first in 1850, in Warren County, to Miss Amanda Deupree, a daughter of James R. and Lucinda (Edmondson) Deupree, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Deupree was a merchant and postmaster of Woodburn at one time. The first Mrs. Blackburn died June 19, 1884, having borne her husband two children, namely: James W., who is a dentist of Bowling Green; and John Henry, a physician and surgeon of Bowling Green. He is a veteran of the great war, having served overseas in France for five months, and was mustered out with the rank of major. On October 20, 1891, Mr. Blackburn was married, at Woodburn, to Miss Mollie Robinson, a daughter of C. M. and Elizabeth (Whitesides) Robinson, both of whom are deceased. During his lifetime Mr. Robinson was a farmer, but he was retired at the time of his death.

There are no children of the second marriage.

Mr. Blackburn is a man who has always been able to carry out his ideas with success, although actuated at all times by common fairness and conducting his operations with common sense. Possessing the mental capacity to swing important deals, he has always been a forceful factor in his community. No matter how long he has had to wait to see the fruition of his projects, he has had the perseverance to continue, and not only has attained a material prosperity, but that which is infinitely of more importance than the mere accumulation of money, the esteem and confidence of those with whom he has been associated in both business and politics. His various undertakings have given him a better understanding and greater tolerance and these have but added to his prestige and enabled him to secure the co-operation for definite and well-ordered purposes from the best men in this part of the state.

F. M. Ashby. Not every man is fitted to discharge the onerous duties pertaining to the office of sheriff for the responsibilities are heavy and call for many qualities not possessed by the common run. During courage, unflinching integrity, utter fearlessness and a profound respect for the laws and an unalterable determination to enforce them and bring to justice those who infringe against them, are some of the characteristics an efficient and dependable sheriff must possess if he is to do a perfect job. F. M. Ashby, sheriff of Ballard County is a man who measures up to the above standards in a marked degree and is handling the affairs of his office in such a manner as to win the approval of his fellow citizens, and to reflect great credit upon his administration.

Sheriff Ashby was born in Hopkins County, Kentucky, November 6, 1863, a son of T. E. Ashby, a grandson of Willoughby Ashby, and great-grandson of the founder of the family. Willoughby Ashby settled in Kentucky from Virginia about 1790. Joseph Ashby, Worthington Ashby, Thomas Ashby and others of the same name, were early settlers in the region which later was made Webster County, and he died there in 1871. All of his life was spent in that region, and he developed extensive agricultural interests, and in antebellum days was a large slaveholder. At one time he was the largest landowner and slaveowner of Webster County, and paid into the county coffers the largest amount of taxes. He married Miss Sallie Morris, born at Frankfort, Kentucky, who survives her husband, and makes her home near Slaughtersville, Webster County, Kentucky.

Thomas Minor Ellis. Thirty years of the active life of Thomas Minor Ellis have been devoted to the flour milling industry. He is one of the owners of the leading mills of Logan County at Russellville, has been a miller of that city for seventeen years, and in later years has taken an active part financially and in the management of several other business organizations.
He is a citizen of the highest standing and widely known over this part of Southern Kentucky.

Mr. Ellis was born near New Roe, Allen County, Kentucky, September 26, 1857. His family has been in Kentucky from early 1834, as his father-in-law, R. S. Katterjohn, was born. Ellis's paternal ancestors were Scotch-Irish, and settled in Culpeper County, Virginia, where his grandfather Samuel Ellis was born in 1790. Samuel Ellis served as a soldier in the War of 1812. Coming west he lived in Sumner County, Tennessee, for a number of years, and afterwards located in Simpson County, Kentucky, where he followed farming until his death near Temperance in 1868. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity. He married Martha Anthony, who was born near New Roe in Allen County in 1841 and died near Temperance in October, 1920. Thomas Minor is the oldest of their nine children. Mrs. Ellis was the wife of James M. Wright, a merchant, at a later time. He settled near the old homestead at Temperance. John is a farmer in that community. Herbert is a farmer near Gold City, Simpson County. Mittie is the wife of E. M. Holloway, a general merchant at Temperance. Deborah lives at Albuquerque, N. M., widow of J. M. Dodson who was a farmer. Carrie is the wife of Rev. H. L. Gillette, a Methodist minister living at Hawkinsville, Kentucky. Miss Pearl's, a private school, lives on the home farm and is housekeeper for her brother Robert.

Thomas Minor Ellis lived until his majority on his father's farm and acquired his education in the rural schools of Simpson County. On leaving home he spent four years as clerk for J. J. Chapman & Bros. at Middleton in Simpson County, for another two years worked in the wholesale drygoods and notions house of J. E. Norton & Company at Louisville, this being followed by four years at his father's flour store at Bowling Green, and in 1888 he entered business for himself as a merchant at Middleton. He was there three years until he sold out and since then his energies have been chiefly devoted to flour milling. He entered that industry with his father-in-law R. W. Neely at Franklin, Kentucky, and in 1903 removed to Russellville and bought the Knob City Flour Mills. This is the leading flour mill on the Memphis Division of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad between Bowling Green and Hopkinsville, has a capacity of 120 barrels per day and the produce is of a quality that commands for it a large demand and distribution all over this section of the state. The business is conducted under the firm name of T. M. Ellis & Company, Mr. Ellis being the owner of the mills being E. L. Katterjohn.

Mr. Ellis was the promoter of the Farmers Loose Leaf Tobacco Warehouse Company of Russellville, is a stockholder in the company, this being one of the two leading tobacco companies in Logan County. He and Mr. Katterjohn are also leaders in promoting the oil industry in Logan County. Mr. Ellis has prospered in his business affairs and is owner of considerable improved real estate in Russellville, including his own home, one of the desirable residences of the city located on Main Street. He has served as a member of the city council, is a democrat, and on the official board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The record of war activities in Logan County shows that he was constant in purpose and influence and the use of his means to promote every patriotic object.

Mr. Ellis married at Franklin, Kentucky, in 1879, Miss Lillie Neely, daughter of R. W. and Susie (Jones) Neely, now deceased. Her father was a farmer, miller, real estate operator and one of Logan County's most prominent business men. Mrs. Ellis is a graduate of the Simpson Female College. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Ellis is Sue, wife of Dr. William A. Duncan. Doctor and Mrs. Duncan reside with her parents at Russellville. Doctor Duncan is a physician and surgeon and for fifteen years was surgeon in the United States Navy, continuing until the closing of Logan County's most recent war. Duncan was a late surgeon in the Walter Reed Hospital at Washington and was mustered out on account of ill health.

RUNEY NEAL BEAUCHAMP, County Superintendent of Schools of Logan County, is one of the vital factors in the progressiveness of this county, and under his fostering care the schools of this region are advancing in excellence and the pupils are taking front place in matters of scholarship. He is also extensively interested in farming, and has been as successful in that industry as he has been in the educational field. Mr. Beauchamp was born in Logan County, January 8, 1870, a son of Dr. Richard Neal Beauchamp, and a member of one of the old and aristocratic families of Virginia. They emigrated in the days of the American Colonies. They originated in France, from whence they went to England, before emigrating to this country. Mr. Beauchamp's great-grandfather came from Virginia to Kentucky and was a pioneer of Warren County, and there the grandfather of Mr. Beauchamp was born. His death occurred at Bowling Green, Kentucky, before the close of the Civil War.

Dr. Richard Neal Beauchamp was born in Warren County, July 24, 1824, and he died in Logan County, October 16, 1910. In about 1838 his parents moved from Warren to Logan County, and he was reared and educated in the latter during his youth, but went elsewhere for his medical training. For many years he was one of the most distinguished physicians and leaders of Logan County, and was held in great reverence by those who knew him. For many years he practiced under difficulties as did all of the old-time country physicians when roads were almost impassable during certain seasons of the year, patients lived far apart, and many could not or did not properly reimburse him for his services. However the medical men of those times appear to have been actuated by a high sense of the responsibility of their calling and endured the hardships of their lot as part of the day's work. Certain it is that they won and held the warm affection of their patients and took high positions in their communities. Doctor Beauchamp also owned and operated his farm which was located eight miles east of Russellville on the Franklin Road. A democrat, he was elected to the State Assembly as a representative from Logan County in 1890. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held his membership, and he was a strong churchman. Fraternally he belonged to the Odd Fellows. Doctor Beauchamp married Mary Herndon, who was born in Logan County in 1834, and died in Logan County in 1876. Their children were as follows: Joe, who died in Logan County, at the age of sixty years, having been a farmer all his life; W. P., who was a druggist of Bowling Green, where he died at the age of forty-two years; Isaac, who is a farmer of Logan County; Betty K, who married J. V. Pottinger, a real-estate broker of Amarillo, Texas; Belle who married John A. Neely, a farmer of Simpson County; R. N., whose name heads this review, and Hester, who died in Logan County, aged eighteen years.

Runey Neal Beauchamp attended the rural schools.
of Logan County during his boyhood and youth, and graduated at Ogden College of Bowling Green at the age of twenty years. Then attended State Agricultural and Mechanical College at Lexington, Kentucky, taking a general educational course, entered the school at Highland Falls, New York, and was admitted to West Point Military Academy. Owing to physical disability he retired from that institution and entered the educational field and has since then taught, having various principalships until he was made County Principal of Schools. He settled on the home farm where he was reared in farming for many years, and now owns 200 acres of very valuable land. Active as a democrat he was elected county superintendent of schools in November, 1917, and took office in January, 1918, for a term of four years. His offices are in the courthouse. Mr. Beauchamp has had a practical experience as an educator, having taught for twelve winter terms in the Oak Tree district, Logan County. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is a steward of the local congregation. Fraternally he belongs to Ragsdale Lodge No. 870, A. F. and A. M., of which he is past master; Russellville Chapter No. 8, R. A. M., and he is a member of the Knights of Pythias. Professionally he belongs to the Kentucky Educational Association. His residence is on his farm. During the late war Mr. Beauchamp took an active part in local patriotism, assisting in all of the drives, and bought bonds, war savings stamps, and contributed to all of the funds to the full extent of his means.

On July 15, 1866, Mr. Beauchamp was married at Owensboro, Kentucky, to Miss Tina Stowers, a daughter of James and Mary (Proctor) Stowers, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Stowers was a druggist of Middleton, Simpson County, Kentucky. Mr. Beauchamp attended Law College at Russellville into the junior year, and is a cultured lady. Mr. and Mrs. Beauchamp became the parents of the following children: Katherine, who married E. G. Ryan, a farmer of Waynesboro, Mississippi; Isabelle, who married Frank Daniel, proprietor of the Liberty Cafe, resides at Russellville, and Coston S., who graduated from high school at Middleton at the age of seventeen, and is living in his native city. Mr. Beauchamp is a man who has broadened his vision with reading and association with men of parts. He recognizes the fact that a sound education is the best foundation for future greatness, and is striving to give each child in Logan County the finest opportunities for acquiring one that can be had. Discharging the duties of his office with an enthusiasm that inspires others, Mr. Beauchamp has already effected a number of important changes, and is proving his worth to his community.

Judge William E. Arthur, who was admitted to the Kentucky bar in 1850 and became one of the foremost members of his profession at Covington, was born at Cincinnati, March 3, 1825. He was nine years old when his father died and he was educated by private tutors and in private schools at Covington, at the old Woodward College in Cincinnati and at his mother's former home in Hartford County, Maryland. He studied law under John W. Stevenson and James T. Morehead, eminent Kentucky lawyers. John W. Stevenson was at one time Governor of Kentucky and United States senator.

Admitted to the bar in 1850 William E. Arthur for nearly half a century continued the duties of practice, along with the responsibilities of public position. He was forceful as an advocate, a thorough student of the law, widely read, possessing knowledge of men and affairs, and while his heart was in the practice of law he ably filled several public offices.

He was elected Commonwealth's Attorney for the Ninth Judicial District in 1856 and filled that office six years. He was an elector on the Breckinridge and Lane ticket in 1860. In 1866, after the war, he was chosen Judge of the Ninth Judicial Circuit, but resigned after two years in office to become a candidate for Congress. He was elected in 1870 to represent the Sixth Kentucky District, and was re-elected in 1872. He was one of the ablest members of the Kentucky delegation in Congress during the early seventies and made a favorable impression by his ability as a debater and by the work he performed in committees.

On returning from Washington, Judge Arthur diversified himself with his private practice until 1886, when he was chosen Judge of the Twelfth Judicial District, and for six years he presided on the Circuit Bench, finally retiring January 1, 1893. He then resumed his private practice to some extent, but his death occurred at Covington four years later on May 18, 1897. He was one of the ablest of his contemporaries in the Kentucky bar and is also entitled to lasting memory for the dignity and high character he exemplified as a judge.

In 1855 Judge Arthur married Miss Ada Southgate, daughter of Hon. William W. Southgate of Covington. She died in 1858, leaving no children. December, 1866, Judge Arthur married the youngest sister of his first wife, Miss Etha Southgate. They had been married thirty-seven years before his death and she survived until April 27, 1906. She was the mother of three children. The daughter, Ada, died at the age of nine years. The other daughter, Mary, who was professionally educated at the Board of English and Classical Schools in Cincinnati, Madame Frein's French and English School at Eden Park, is now the wife of George Littleford, a wholesale lumber merchant, their home being at Fort Thomas, Kentucky.

The only son of the late Judge Arthur and continuing the prestige of the name in the bar of Northern Kentucky is Sidney Arthur, who began practice thirty years ago while his distinguished father was on the Circuit Bench.

Sidney Arthur was born at Covington, August 26, 1855. He was educated in the public schools of his native city, in the preparatory school of the Chickering Institute at Cincinnati, spent one year in Kenyon College at Gambier, Ohio, after which he went east to Dartmouth College, from which he received his A. B. degree in 1887. He is a member of the Delta Kappa Epsilon college fraternity. Mr. Arthur is one of the best educated lawyers at Covington, and is a man who has kept up a variety of intellectual interests. He has the love of books and literature that is a most valuable and attractive trait of the Arthur family. His is one of the finest private libraries in the city. Mr. Arthur took his law course in the Cincinnati Law School, from which he was graduated with the LL.B. degree in 1890. The same year he began practice at Covington.

In 1904 Mr. Arthur built the Marzella Apartments on Greenup Street in Covington. This building, containing thirty-six apartments, is one of the largest and finest apartment houses in the city, and he has his own residence there. Mr. Arthur is a democrat, a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is affiliated with Golden Rule Lodge No. 245 F. & A. M., Covington Chapter No. 13 R. A. M., and Kenton Council No. 13 R. & S. M. June 16, 1920, at Covington, Mr. Arthur married Mrs. Mary E. (O'Hara) Morrallee. Mrs Arthur is a native of Leeds, England, and was reared and educated in England.

The Arthur family has been prominently identified with the City of Covington for nearly ninety years, and for seventy years the name has been an eminent one in the bench and bar of the state. Four generations of the family have lived in this country, and they have been primarily devoted to the scholarly professions, though not without achievements in practical business.

The founder of the family was Rev. William Arthur, a native of Scotland, a graduate of the University of Glasgow, and whose career was that of a Presbyterian minister. He married in Scotland, Agnes Gammel, and in 1793 came to America. He was one of the first Presbyterian Missionaries and ministers in the states of Pennsylvania, Maryland, New York and Ohio. His last years were spent at Zanesville, Ohio.

His son, William Arthur, was born in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, in 1798, and while he grew up in some of the sparsely settled localities where duty called his father he had the advantage of his cultured parents to guide him through the stages of his early education. He finally took up the study of law and prepared for the bar, but most of his life was spent as a successful merchant. He moved to Covington in 1832 and died there three years later. He married Eliza Parsons a native of Maryland, daughter of William and Sarah Parsons.

Thomas Dudley Evans became president of the Citizens National Bank of Russellville on its organization, and has been instrumental in making that one of the most substantial institutions of Southern Kentucky. While best known as a banker he was in former years a merchant, and his character and influence have been intimately identified with the progress and development of Logan County for many years.

Mr. Evans is of Welsh ancestry. The family lived in Virginia for a generation or two. Mr. Evans' grandfather, John Evans, was a native of Virginia and a century or more ago came over to Kentucky and opened up a pioneer farm in Monroe County. He died near Tompkinsville. Thomas Evans, father of the Russellville banker, was born on a farm near Tompkinsville, Kentucky, in 1826. He lived there until after his marriage, began merchandising in Tompkinsville, and in the spring of 1851 moved to Russellville and before his death, which occurred in 1884, built up the largest dry goods and general store in Logan County. He was a very able business man and gave his life to merchandising. He was a deacon for many years in the Baptist Church and a democrat in politics. Thomas Evans married Miss Sallie Wooten. She was born in Barren County, Kentucky, between Glasgow and Tompkinsville in 1834 and died at Russellville in 1882. Miss Wooten was the daughter of Colonel Henry Wooten, a large planter of Barren County. A brief record of the children of Thomas Evans and wife is as follows: Bettie of Russellville, widow of Vernon Price, who was a traveling salesman; John W., who became a merchant and died at Russellville in 1894; Thomas Dudley; William G., now in the offices of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad at Russellville; Mary who died at Russellville, wife of W. P. Sandidge, an attorney at Owensboro; Leslie S. cashier of the First National Bank of Adairville in Logan County.

Thomas Dudley Evans was born at Tompkinsville in Monroe County, Kentucky, August 20, 1864, but has spent practically all his life in Russellville. He attended private schools here, graduated from Bethel College in June, 1884, and has had an active business career covering a period of thirty-five years. He was at first identified with the business his father had established and built up, but in 1885 he and his brother John W. bought the business after the death of their father in Russellville. At the death of John Evans in 1894 his interests were acquired by his brother, W. G., and the two brothers continued the business until 1902.

The Citizens National Bank of Russellville was organized in 1902. Mr. Evans being the leading spirit in the enterprise and has been continuously president since that date. W. C. Nourse is vice president and H. L. Trimble cashier. This bank has a capital of $25,000, surplus and profits of $45,000, and its deposits in 1920 averaged $75,000. In September, 1920, the bank entered its splendid new home, one of the finest bank buildings in the state, built of stone and brick, with inside furnishings of marble and mahogany, and with every equipment and arrangement for protection and utmost efficiency of banking service.

Both as a banker and private citizen Mr. Evans was completely devoted to the successful prosecution of the World War. Three of his sons were in the army or navy. He has been treasurer and member of the executive board of the Logan County Chapter of the Red Cross from its organization in 1918, and he was chairman of two Liberty Loan campaigns. Mr. Evans is a democrat and a member of the Baptist Church. He owns one of the principal homes of the city at 234 Nashville Street.

In 1889 at Russellville Mr. Evans married Miss Annie Briggs, daughter of Joseph B. and Annie L. (Long) Briggs. Her father served as a captain in the Confederate Army and subsequently was an influential factor in the financial affairs of Russellville until his death. Her mother is still living at Russellville and is a daughter of Nimrod Long, one of the conspicuous figures in Southern Kentucky for many years who died at Russellville. Mr. Evans has been president of the old Bank of Kentucky at Russellville, and his constructive business interests extended into several counties in this section of the state. Mrs. Evans who is a graduate of the Logan Female College of Russellville is the mother of nine children. Bertie May, the oldest, now lives at Los Angeles, California. Annie B. is the wife of J. A. B. Price, Jr., manager of the C. & O. Railroad Station at Russellville. The third, Bettie, is at home. The oldest son, Thomas Dudley, Jr., Russellville representative of the Ford Motor Company, married Miss Virginia Farrar. He was one of the three Evans sons who volunteered without waiting for the draft and he was commissioned a captain of infantry and spent six months in France. William L., the second son, now connected with a steel company at Birmingham, Alabama, married Miss Myrtle Scooggins. He was a chief gunner of a machine gun corps in the United States Marines and was in France three months. The third son Richard Briggs Evans, joined the navy and since the war has received an appointment to the United States Military Academy at West Point, where he is continuing his studies. The seventh child is Janette. Evans employed by a photographic tool company in Birmingham, Alabama. The eighth child is Gordon, a student of Bethel College at Russellville, while the youngest, Wesley H., is still in public school.

H. Lee Kelley, County Court Clerk of Warren County and one of the most representative of the sterling men and dependable citizens of Bowling Green, has won popular approval by the exercise of native talents and acquired knowledge and is one of the best officials his office has possessed. He was born in Warren County, September 20, 1878, a son of George T. Kelley, and grandson of Henry Kelley, who was born in 1796, in Virginia, where the Kelleys had settled upon coming to the American Colonies from Ireland. He was the pioneer of this sectional community at Bowling Green and locating in Warren County, was engaged here in farming for many years. His death occurred at Planot, Kentucky, in 1890. His wife who bore the maiden name of Elizabeth Stephens, was also born in Virginia, and died in Warren County.

George T. Kelley was born on a farm near Planot, Warren County, in 1818, and he is now residing at Woodburn, Warren County. He was reared and married in his native county, and during his active years was a successful and extensive farmer, but is now living in comfortable retirement. Always a democrat, he still adheres to his convictions with reference to public matters. Many years ago he united with the Baptist Church and during all of the intervening years he has been a strong churchman. George T. Kelley married Belle Parker, who was born in Warren County, Kentucky, in 1899, and died near Plano, in 1901. Their children were as follows: Lora, who married Dr. G. H. Freeman, a physician and surgeon of Plano; Leslie L., who is a member of the police force of Bowling Green; Lottie, who married Jess Kirby, a merchant of Massey's Mill, Warren County; and H. Lee, who was the eldest.

H. Lee Kelley attended the rural schools of his native county, and Bethel College of Russellville during 1896 and 1897, returning home during the latter year. For two years he occupied on the homestead, and then bought a farm of his own and operated it until in November, 1917, he was elected Court Clerk of Warren County, and took office in January, 1918, for a term of four years. In November, 1921, he was elected again for a four-year term without opposition from either party. His offices are in the courthouse. He owns a modern residence at No. 627 Eleventh Street, where he maintains a comfortable home, and a dwelling at the corner of Fourteenth and Indiana streets. He is a democrat, and was elected on his party ticket road and bridge supervisor of Warren County, and has also served for three terms as a member of the Board of Equalization of his county. The Baptist Church holds his membership. Fraternally he belongs to Bowling Green Lodge No. 51, I. O. O. F. and Bowling Green Masonic Lodge No. 299, B. P. O. E. During the late war he took a zealous part in all of the local activities, and for two years devoted a great deal of his time to filling out questionnaires, and rendered valuable assistance in all of the drives. He bought bonds and savings stamps to the full extent of his means, and in every way possible assisted the Government in carrying out its policies.

On December 6, 1899, Mr. Kelley was united in marriage with Miss Sallie Potter at Plano, Kentucky. She is a daughter of the late M. C. Potter, formerly a farmer who died at Plano, and his widow Mrs. Maggie (Skiles) Potter, died in 1921 at Plano. Mr. and Mrs. Kelley have one living child, Roy Skiles, who was born on October 23, 1915. Their elder child, Meldin, died at the age of five years.

Mr. Kelley is a very competent and painstaking man, and in the performance of his duties he gives his attention to the affairs of his office are in first class order. Having had experience in public office, he has known how to enter upon his duties expeditiously and to so arrange his work as to render a service not always given by those holding a similar position. He takes the deepest and most sincere interest in his county, is proud of its past, and anxious to have it keep abreast of all modern ideas in the present and future.

COLEMAN TAYLOR. A lawyer splendidly equipped for his work, Coleman Taylor gained prestige throughout Logan County by reason of his natural talent and acquired ability in his profession. He is present county attorney and in a few years has won the appreciation of older members of the bar and a satisfying private practice.

Mr. Taylor was born at Greenville in Muhlenberg County, Kentucky, January 13, 1862. This branch of the Taylor family were Colonial settlers in Virginia from Scotland. His grandfather, John Taylor, was born in Culpeper County, Virginia, in 1811, and at an early date settled in Western Kentucky in Daviess County, where at one time he owned twenty-five hundred acres of land, cultivated by numerous slaves. He died in Daviess County in 1851. His grandson, E. W. Taylor, father of Coleman Taylor, was born in Owensboro, Kentucky, in 1855, was reared in that city, married at Hartford in Ohio County, lived there for a year as a stock dealer, after which he returned to Owensboro. For two years his home was at Greenville in Muhlenberg County, and while there he did an extensive business as a stock dealer, buying and selling horses for the East St. Louis market. For many years until 1917 he was connected with the wholesale business of P. R. Lancaster at Owensboro, and then retired to his farm two miles south of Russellville, where he lives today. Besides operating his own place of a hundred fifty acres he manages the three hundred-acre farm of his son Coleman. He has had a successful business career and is still practically in his prime. E. W. Taylor is a democrat. He married Sallie M. Daniel, who was born at Carrollton, Kentucky, in 1861. He was the father of E. S. Daniel, who for fifty-two years was an active minister in the Methodist Episcopal Conference of the Louisville District. Coleman Taylor is the oldest of three children. His sister Eva lives with her parents. Samuel died in Logan County in 1917 while a student of law in his brother's office.

Coleman Taylor was educated in the public schools of Russellville and attended Bethel College until 1910. He entered the profession only after a period of self-supporting work and experience that in itself constituted a splendid education. For a year after leaving college he drove an express wagon in Russellville. He then became a railway express messenger for several months with a run from Russellville to Owensboro and from Bowling Green to Memphis. Another year he spent in the Russellville office of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad. He is a stenographer and law student in the office of S. R. Crewson, who was admitted to the bar in 1915, and since that date has been steadily gaining favor for his abilities in civil and criminal practice. His office are in the Edwards Building on Main Street. Mr. Taylor served as official court reporter for the Seventh Judicial District comprising Logan, Todd, Muhlenberg and Simpson counties in 1915 and 1916. In 1917 he was elected county attorney and began his official term of four years in January, 1918. He is a member of the Kentucky State Bar Association, an attorney for the Southern Deposit Bank at Russellville and the Lewisburg Banking Company at Lewisburg, Kentucky. During the World war he was government appeal agent for the local draft board, and to this and other war work he gave freely of his time and means.

Mr. Taylor is a democrat, is treasurer of the Russellville Baptist Church, senior warden of Russellville Lodge No. 17, A. F. and A. M., member of Russellville Chapter No. 8, R. A. M., Owensboro Commandery No. 15, K. T., Louisville Consistory of the Scottish Rite, and Rizpah Temple of the Mystic Shrine a Madisonville. He is also Past Chancellor Commander of Amelia Lodge No. 56, Knights of Pythias. Reference has already been made to the fact that he is a farm owner, his place of three hundred acres being four miles south of Russellville. He also has one of the most desirable and attractive modern homes in the county seat.

February 24, 1916, at Clarksville, Tennessee, Mr. Taylor married Miss Clara B. Manning, daughter of W. J. and Agnes (Dugan) Manning, residents of Clarksville, where her father is a retired road building contractor. Mrs. Taylor is a graduate of seminary in Georgia and also of the noted finishing school, Wool, Belmont College of Nashville. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor have one son, Manning, born September 6, 1920.

FRANK ALEXANDER MORTON. The banking interests of a community are necessarily among the most important ones, for financial stability must be the foundation stone upon which all great enterprises are erected. The men who control and conserve the money of corporations or country must possess many qualities not necessary in the ordinary work of the average citizen, and among these may be mentioned high commer-

Arnal standing, exceptional financial ability, poise, judgment and foresight. Public confidence must be with these men so that, in case of panic their coolness and conservatism can be depended upon, as it is in ordinary transactions. One of the men who measures up to the highest standards of banking requirements is Frank Alexander Morton, cashier of the Bank of Russellville.

Frank Alexander Morton was born in Logan County, March 14, 1872, a son of M. B. Morton, and grandson of Capt. Henry Morton, who was born in Washington County, Virginia, and died at Russellville before his grandson was born. He was the pioneer of his family at Russellville where he was first engaged in the practice of law, but later became a minister of the Baptist Church.

M. B. Morton was born in Logan County; in August, 1839, and died at Russellville, February 20, 1914. Reared and married in Logan County, he became a traveling salesman out of Auburn, Kentucky, and remained on the road for twenty years, but settled permanently at Russellville in 1895 and for three terms served as County Court Clerk of Logan County, to which office he was elected on the democratic ticket. In him the Baptist Church has one of its earnest members and long was a strong member of the congregation until his death. M. B. Morton married Virginia Morton, a cousin, who was born April 13, 1841, near Auburn, Kentucky. She survives her husband and is living at Russellville. Their children were as follows: H. P., who is a clerk in a clothing store at Owensboro, Kentucky; Overton, who died young; J. H., who died at Weatherford, Texas, at the age of twenty years; Frank Alexander, who was fourth in order of birth; William L., who resides at Louisville, Kentucky, is traveling for a leading cartridge manufacturing company of the United States; Virginia, who married O. R. McLean, a jeweler of Russellville; and James, who died at Russellville, at the age of twenty-two years.

Frank Alexander Morton was educated in the public schools of his county, which he attended until he was twenty years old, at which time he went on his father’s farm and spent two years. For two years more he served as Deputy County Court Clerk under his father, and then, in April, 1887, he entered the Bank of Russellville, beginning his career in the banking business as a bookkeeper. In 1910 his faithful service was rewarded by his promotion to the position of assistant cashier, and in 1915 he was promoted to the position of cashier, which important position he still holds.

A strong democrat he served in the City Council for two terms, and has always been active in party matters. He belongs to the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Morton owns a modern residence on Second street. During the late war Mr. Morton was an active participant in the local war work, serving all of the drives, and he bought bonds and war savings stamps and contributed to all of the organizations, to the full extent of his means. Mr. Morton is unmarried. Sound and dependable, he has steadily risen, not only in his bank but also in the esteem of the people of Russellville and Logan County, and rightly deserves the confidence he always inspires.

Rev. Carl James Merkle, pastor of St. Francis de Sales Catholic Church at Newport, has given all his time and service to the Catholic Church, especially in Kentucky, since his ordination as a priest.

He was born at Dayton, Ohio, June 16, 1891, and acquired his elementary education in the Emmanuel parochial school. He attended studies at Assumption College, Sandwich, Ontario, and five years as a student of philosophy and theology in St. Mary Seminary, at Baltimore, Maryland. He was ordained in the Catholic University at Washington, D. C., by the Apostolic Delegate, Archbishop Bonzano, June 23, 1915.

Father Merkle was for five months assistant pastor of the Sacred Heart Church at Bellevue, Kentucky; for two and a half years assistant pastor of the Immaculate Conception Church in Newport; then for two and a half years pastor of St. John Church at Carlisle; and in November of 1920, returned to the scene of his earlier labors at Newport, as pastor of St. Francis de Sales Church.

This parish was established in 1911 by Rev. Stephan Schmidt, the new brick church and school was dedicated in October of the following year with Rev. Ed. G. Klosterman as pastor. He erected the handsome brick rectory in 1916, at 10 Chesapeake Avenue, in Ingalls Park, and later purchased a residence for the teachers. In 1921 a necessary addition was made to the school and to the Sisters’ house.

Father Merkle is the third and fourth child of Michael Merkle, who was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1851, of Nicholas Dauben-Merkle and Magdalene Zeitler. In 1863 he accompanied his widowed mother to America, locating at Erie, Pennsylvania, where he learned the shoemaker’s trade. As a young man he went to Dayton, Ohio, and was a retail shoe merchant there until 1901, after which he developed an industry in the shoemaking trade. Besides being an expert in coats and similar garments, continuing active in business almost until his death in 1906. He was a very sincere Catholic and loyal citizen. His first wife, whom he married at Dayton, was Caroline Worman, a native of that city. She died with her third child, leaving two others: George, a traveling salesman, who died at Charleston, West Virginia, at the age of twenty-five; and Max, a merchant, a member of the congregation of the Sisters of Divine Providence, now Directress of Mount Saint Martin Young Women’s Institute at Newport, Kentucky.

The second wife of Michael Merkle was Catherine B. Loges, who was born of Joseph Loges and Philomena Hortsman at Dayton in 1862, and is still living in that city. She is the mother of eight children: Robert, the merchant; Rev. Carl James, now Mr. Wagner; Raymond and Victor, draftsmen; Irene and Florence, stenographers—all living in Dayton; Joseph and a younger brother died in infancy.

Jesse W. Bibb. Few business men of Logan County have devoted more years and more of their energies in the line of business than Jesse W. Bibb. Mr. Bibb has been a successful merchant, a citizen who has taken a quiet and effective part in community affairs, and he might properly count the esteem in which he is held by his fellow citizens as one of the best rewards of his career.

Mr. Bibb was born at Elkton in Todd County, Kentucky, October 27, 1857. His family have been in Kentucky for more than a century. His grandfather, Henry Bibb, was born in Albemarle County, Virginia, in 1791, and on coming to Kentucky first settled in Logan County, later moved to Elkton, though most of his career was spent in Russellville. However, he was a pioneer saddler. He died at Elkton in 1866. Henry G. Bibb, father of the Russellville merchant, was born in that city in 1820. He served as a clerk and as president of the county bar. He was the eldest of the family of the eldest of the Bibbs in the Elkton bar. He was in the Lower House of the Legislature from Todd County two terms, and for two terms represented the Ninth Senatorial District in the Senate. During the sessions of 1853-54 he was elected by a joint ballot of both houses to fill the unexpired term of Lieutenant Governor and was the first president of the Senate during 1853-54. He was a democrat in politics. Senator Bibb was married at Elkton, Kentucky, to Miss Emily Wells, a native of Mayfield, Kentucky, who died at Elkton.

Jesse W. Bibb, only child of his parents, was educated in the public schools of Elkton to the age of eighteen and since then his life has been spent at Russellville. For seven years he clerked in a shoe store and not only paid his way but used his opportunities to acquire a fundamental knowledge of merchandising. He was president of In the fall of 1894, he bought both a factory business, starting with a modest capital, and has made his enterprise one of the most important men's furnishing goods stores between Bowling Green and Hopkinsville.

Mr. Bibb has devoted himself to this line of merchandising now for over thirty-five years. He is also a director of the Bank of Russellville and while the World war was in progress he gave heartily of his means and personal influence to support every drill company for further purposes in Logan County. He owns one of the comfortable homes of the city at 317 South Main Street.

Mr. Bibb is a democrat and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In 1886 at Russellville he married Miss Attala Rizer, daughter of E. R. and Mary B. (Harrison) Rizer, now deceased. Her father was for many years a shoe dealer at Russellville. Mrs. Bibb is a graduate of Logan College.

JOHN BRECKENRIDGE HILES, a banker at Foster in Bracken County, has forty years of business activity to his credit, and through several sessions was one of the most prominent and constructive leaders in the State Legislature.

He represents one of Kentucky's oldest families. The founder of the name in America was John Jacob Hiles, who came from Germany in the early part of the eighteenth century and lived out his life in Eastern New Jersey. One of his three sons was Christofel Hiles, who was born in New Jersey and was one of the earliest settlers near Dover, Mason County, Kentucky.

One of his brothers settled in Scott County, Kentucky. Christofel Hiles married a Mrs. Hoffman, whose maiden name was Mills. This was the family from which the late Senator Roger Q. Mills was descended.

One of the children of Christofel Hiles was Christian Hiles, who was born near Dover, Kentucky, in 1794. He was a soldier in the War of 1812, participating in the Ohio campaign. He was a tailor by trade, but operated a large farm on the present site of Wellsburg and finally retired to Johnsville, Kentucky, where he died April 17, 1876.

Christian Hiles married Judith Sullivan, whose father came from Ireland and was a flat boat builder on the western rivers. Two sisters of Christian Hiles married Austin and Randolph Sullivan, brothers of Judith.

Asa Anderson Hiles, a son of Christian Hiles, was born at Dover, Kentucky, May 10, 1833, was reared there and educated in the public schools, and in 1855 moved to Rock Spring, Bracken County, in 1863 to a farm at Bradford and in 1866 to Johnsville, where he became probably the most prominent business man in western Bracken County, operating extensive farms, doing a large business as a tobacco dealer, and also as a merchant. He was not less prominent in civic affairs, was an influential Democrat, a loyal member of the Confederate Army, and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Asa A. Hiles died at Johnsville, June 2, 1917.

His wife was Elizabeth McCormick Wooster, who was born near Augusta in Bracken County, Kentucky, July 7, 1839, and is now living at the old homestead at Johnsville. Her father, William Jefferson Wooster, was a son of Daniel Wooster, one of the pioneers of Kentucky. William J. Wooster, who died in March, 1893, in the eighty-fifth year, married Mary J. Woods, who was born April 16, 1818, and died October 3, 1888.

John Breckenridge Hiles is the oldest of a family of ten children. William A. the second in age is an Indiana farmer and an employee of the Indiana State Fair Company with home at Indianapolis. Robert H. has for many years been identified with Crane & Company, hardware and machinery manufacturers at Indianapolis. Harry C. died June 14, 1920, in Lexington at the age of 56, having spent his active life as a farmer. Samuel McCormick was a farmer, stock dealer and breeder of different breeds of cattle and hogs, and his farm in 1905. Miss Alberta C. lives with her mother. Trinna B. is the wife of Edward K. Miller, traveling salesman, and resides at Ambridge, Pennsylvania. Asa A., Jr., is a farmer, and leader in the democratic party living near Johnsville. Julia May is the wife of William H. Stevenson, cashier of the Farmers Equity Bank of Brooksville. Marguerite B. is the wife of Herman K. Stairs, a prominent civil engineer with home at Beckley, West Virginia.

John Breckenridge Hiles was born while his parents lived at Rock Spring in Bracken County, January 15, 1859. He was reared on his father's farm attended rural schools, was a student in the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1879, and the following year attended high school at Ripley, Ohio, where he acquired a fluent command of the German language. In 1890 he returned to the University at Lebanon for a review course. After completing his education he was associated with his father in the mercantile and tobacco business, and subsequently became his partner in the tobacco house of A. A. Hiles & Son. When his father retired in 1893 he continued the business until about 1900, when he abandoned this at the time of a general disorganization in the tobacco industry of Kentucky.

Mr. Hiles has been prominent as a banker at Foster for the past ten years. The bank was established at Foster in 1895. After the deposits had reached a total of about $43,000, the institution was wrecked by its cashier. The memory of this was still fresh in the minds of the community when Mr. Hiles undertook the organization of the Foster Banking Company, which was opened for business September 10, 1910. With his personal integrity behind the institution and with the confidence inspired by his business ability and judgment, he has as cashier and leading stockholder made one of the firmly established financial institutions of Bracken County. Its deposits have reached the gratifying total of $200,000, and it is operating on a capital of $15,000, with surplus and profits of $12,500.

The officers of the bank are: John D. Meyer, president; John Jarman, vice president; John B. Hiles, cashier; and Orris Utter, assistant cashier.

The record of Mr. Hiles' public service has come at various intervals in his business career. In 1885 he was elected County Assessor of Bracken County, serving from January until October, 1886. He was then appointed by United States Senator Beck to the railway mail service, and was transferred from the road to the division office at Cincinnati, and assigned one of the three important desks in the office of the superintendent, that with jurisdiction over trip reports and grievances made of failures on the part of clerks and railroads. He handled the reports covering the four states of Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana and Tennessee, and served in that division until the close of the war.

In November, 1893, Mr. Hiles was a member of the Legislature and reelected in 1895, serving through the sessions of 1894 and 1896. Perhaps the primary object of his legislative efforts and the field in which his work bore greatest fruit was in behalf of improved educational facilities. He was author of Kentucky's first Compulsory School Law, also of important amendments to the graded school laws. He originated and directed the campaign for the statute increasing the compensation of the State Superintendent, which was passed in the session of March 13, 1894, providing for free turnpikes in the state. He also made a determined effort to repeal the Hewitt Banking Act, which later was declared unconstitutional by the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. Hiles was a candidate for Congress in 1896, and in the Ninth District Convention at Maysville controlled the convention for two days, finally withdrawing his name on the 8th ballot. In November, 1913, Mr. Hiles was elected to represent the 26th Senatorial District of Bracken, Pendleton and Grant counties in the State Senate, serving from 1914 to 1918 in the regular sessions of 1914 and 1916, and the high court of impeachment session of 1916, and a special revenue session of 1917. While in the Senate he was author of the State Warrants Act, afterwards declared unconstitutional by the Court of Appeals. His chief work in the Senate was his work in safeguarding the interests of his conistituents and for his vigilance he was called the "watchdog of the treasury. It was his suggestion at a meeting of bankers held at the governor's mansion in 1865 that led the Legislature to enact the law raising the appraised value of property permitting of sufficient revenue to pay the state debt, Senator Hiles warning the dem-cratic caucus that failure to do this would result in the republicans securing credit for this much needed achievement. While in the Senate Mr. Hiles was second in rank on the committee on education and spent two entire days in drafting a substitute for the Consolidated School Bill, which was approved and passed both houses, though Senator Hiles was essentially the author of the law now on the statute books providing for the consolidation of schools he gracioulsy permitted a senator who had been author of the original bill to have the credit for its passage. He was also chairman of the committee on banking in the session of 1916.
Senator Hiles is a member of the number 274, of the Methodist Church South, is affiliated with Foster Lodge No. 274, F. & A. M., and was the first member initiated in 1881 in Fairview Lodge No. 276 Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was the active leader in all but two of the campaigns for funds in the Foster vicinity of Bracken County during the World war and when two of these drives failed to net sufficient funds to go over the top the bank made up the deficiency.

GEORGE T. CLARK. The man who has the ability, energy and industry to build up sound business connections through his own initiative, is deserving of as much credit as one who commands in battle, or leads his forces to victory in the halls of legislative bodies.
The commercial development of any locality is largely dependent upon the character and energy of its sus-cessful business men, and Russellville is no exception to this rule. One of the enterprising and progressive men of the county seat of Logan County is George T.
Clark, a retail dealer in coal and interested in a number of the local concerns.

Mr. Clark was born at Russellville, March 27, 1858, a son of Thomas Clark, and a member of one of the old families of Virginia where the Clarks settled upon coming to the American Colonies from Scotland.
Thomas Clark was born in Culpeper County, Virginia, in 1836, and died at Russellville in 1904. His parents moved to Logan County in 1832, settling near Auburn, and there he was reared and married, but in 1848 he came to Russellville and established what became the leading hardware business in the county. Mr. Clark, and the store was operated under the name of Clark Brothers. Later the firm engaged in handling these implements at retail, and Thomas Clark was so engaged until 1904. He was a democrat, but aside from exercising his right of suffrage did not participate in public affairs. A strong churchman, he was an active member of the historic church, and held the office of deacon in the local congregation. Thomas Clark married Miss Debbie McCarty, a daughter of George Mccarty, who was born in Virginia in 1876, and died at Russellville in 1896, having been one of the early farmers of Logan County. Mrs. Clark survives her husband and makes her home at Russellville. She was born in Logan County in 1844. The children born to Thomas Clark and his wife were as follows: James W., who was a lawyer, died at Muskogee, Oklahoma, aged fifty-seven years; Roland, who died at Russellville, aged sixty-one years, was a retail grocer; Hattie, who died in infancy; and George T., who was the youngest in the family.

After completing his courses in the public schools of Russellville George T. Clark became a student at Bethel College, Russellville, and later went to twenty-three years old. For five years he acquired practical experience as a clerk in a dry goods store at Russellville, and then began handling books and stationery, and remained in that line of business until 1913. In that year he opened his retail coal business, which is the leading one in Logan County, with offices in a public school. Publicly and privately Mr. Clark's coal yards are near the freight depot along the Louisville & Nashville Railroad tracks. In addition to his coal business
Mr. Clark has other interests and is secretary and treasurer of the Central City, Kentucky, Ice & Cold Storage Company. He owns his comfortable modern residence on High Street. Like his father he is a democrat and a Baptist, and he, too, is a deacon. When there was need for him to exert himself in behalf of his country, Mr.
Clark was found in the foremost line of local war workers in every drive for all purposes, and was very generous in buying bonds, war savings stamps and contributing for the various organizations.

In 1890 Mr. Clark was married at Bowling Green to Mrs. Mabel McElroy, who was born at Bowling Green.
Mrs. Clark was born in the same county, and married George Green, from which she was graduated at the completion of her course. Mr. and Mrs. Clark have three children, namely: George T., who is a teacher in the public schools of Franklin, Kentucky; William Franklin, who is a student in Bethel College, Russellville; and Sarah, who is attending the public schools of Russellville. While he has never cared to enter the arena of politics to contest elections, Mr. Clark has always taken an intelligent interest in civic matters and supported the men he believed would best serve the majority of the people. His standing commercially is unquestioned, while socially he and his wife occupy a very enviable position in the community in which they have many congenial friends.

ALBERT G. RHEA, president of the Bank of Russellville, has devoted his serious purposes and energies to that institution since the early years of its existence, beginning when his father was president of the bank.
There is no more honored name in Southern Kentucky than that of Rhea, which has been held by editors, judges, congressmen and bankers for considerably more than a century.

The Rheas came from the north of Ireland to Virginia, moved to North Carolina, and thence over the Cumberland Mountains to Tennessee. Charles Rhea, grandfather of the Russellville banker, was born at Knoxville, Tennessee, in 1790. Early in life he moved to Russellville, Kentucky, and became a pioneer editor and newspaper publisher. The constitution of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church ordained, and Mr. Rhea was the Synod of Cumberland held at Sugg's Creek, Tennessee, April 5, 1814, was printed and published at his printing house in a book form of a hundred and thirty-seven pages in 1821. Charles Rhea died at Russellville in 1835. He married Clarissa Roberts, who was born at Frankfort, Kentucky, in April, 1800, and died at Russellville in 1825.

Their son, Judge Albert G. Rhea, was born at Russellville in February, 1822. He early rose to prominence as a lawyer and his later career made him one of the distinguished citizens of Kentucky. Following the close of the Civil war he was Circuit Judge of the Seventh Judicial District. For three terms he was a member of the State Senate and was associated with the foundings of the bank in Russellville, and served as president for many years. For a quarter of a century he was local attorney for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. Judge Rhea was a democrat and a member of the Episcopal Church and was affiliated with Russellville Lodge No. 17, A. F. and A. M., and Russellville Chapter No. 8, R. A. M. The death of this honored citizen occurred at Russellville in November, 1884. Judge Rhea married Miss Jane Stockdale, who was born at Russellville in May, 1828, and died there in May, 1890. They became the parents of eight children: Elizabeth, who died at Russellville at the age of thirty-eight, was the wife of the late A. C. Brizendine, who was a traveling salesman; Martha J. died in infancy; John S. Rhea took up the profession of his father, served as county attorney of Logan County eight years, was for eight years Representative of the Third Congressional District of Kentucky, and for the past seven years has been judge of the Seventh Judicial District. The fourth child, Jennie, died at the age of forty-six in Russellville. Albert G. Rhea is the fifth in age in this prominent family. His brother Charles became a lawyer and died at Russellville at the age of forty-eight. Merrie is unmarried and lives at Russellville. Thomas S., the youngest, is president of the Southern Deposit Bank at Russellville, is also a farmer, and at one time was sheriff of the county and state treasurer of Kentucky. Albert G. Rhea, who was born at Russellville February 9, 1861, was educated in the public schools and attended Normal College and the University of Kentucky. On leaving college he entered the Bank of Russellville as an errand boy. The Bank of Russellville was established in 1873 under a state charter, and has had a prosperous existence of almost half a century. Its capital is $25,000, surplus and profits $30,000, and deposits average $350,000. The executive officers are A. G. Rhea, president, Thomas S. Rhea, vice president, and F. A. Morton, cashier. Mr. A. G. Rhea has served the bank with exceptional fidelity for forty years, has filled all the executive offices and since 1919 has been president.

For many years Mr. Rhea has been a prominent leader of the democratic party and has served consecutively for thirty-five years on the Democratic County Committee. He was for several years city clerk and for four years from 1909 to 1913 was sheriff of Logan County. In 1895 he was elected a member of the board of county commissioners; in 1913 he was elected as chairman of the Red Cross Chapter of Logan County, and he was actively associated with every drive for raising funds and prosecuting other objects included in the World war program. Mr. Rhea is a member of the Episcopal Church and is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and Knights of Pythias. He is unmarried.

Hon. Whitsett Hall. The modern agriculturist is an individual who comprehends the purpose of existing agitation for the betterment of the condition of the farmer, and is anxious to promote proper legislation looking toward an amelioration of present abuses. Many of the most progressive men of the country are those who own and operate farming lands, and a number of them have been called upon to bring their practical ideas into public affairs. This has resulted in the securing for numerous offices of clean, businesslike administration. If it is true that the strongest character that might have existed in the past. One of the men whom his fellow-citizens delight to claim as a farmer, but who has proven himself a man capable in the handling of public affairs as well, is Hon. Whitsett Hall, of Auburn, state senator from the Ninth District of Kentucky, comprising Logan, Simpson and Todd counties.

Senator Hall was born on a farm near Auburn, Logan County, Kentucky, December 5, 1867; a son of James Monroe and Mary Ellen (Blakey) Hall, a descendant of Revolutionary ancestors on both sides of the family. His paternal great-grandfather, John Hall, was born near Petersburg, Virginia, and was a pioneer to Washington County, Kentucky, where he farmed for many years, in his old age coming to Logan County, where his death occurred at Auburn. He married a Miss Hayes. Winkfield Hall, the grandfather of Senator Hall, was born in 1807, in Washington County, Kentucky, but for the greater part of his life lived in Logan County, where he was engaged in extensive agricultural operations until his death near Auburn, in 1898. He married Betsy Weathers, who was born, spent her life and died near Auburn. Senator Hall's great-grandfather Whitsett came from Virginia to Logan County and passed the rest of his life as a tiller of the soil.

James Monroe Hall was born in 1836, near Auburn, Kentucky, and has passed his entire life in this community, where he still makes his home in hale old age. After many years passed in extensive operation as a farmer and grower of live stock he is now living in comfortable retirement, and his career has been characterized by honorable dealing and straightforward citizenship, so that he possesses in the fullest degree the esteem and respect of those among whom his life has been passed. He is a democrat in politics, and was a member of the Board of Sinking Fund Commissioners for a number of years and chairman of that body on several occasions. A strong churchman of the Baptist faith, he acted as deacon for many years. Mr. Hall married Mary Ellen Blakey, who was born near Auburn, in 1842, and died on the farm in 1913. Her grandfather, C. H. Blakey, was a prominent officer during the War of the Revolution, and was with General Washington when he crossed the Delaware. A native of Virginia, some time after the winning of American independence he came to Logan County, where he spent the rest of his life as a farmer. He married Marquerette Whitsett, also a native of Virginia, who died in Logan County. Dr. T. W. Blakey, the maternal grandfather of Senator Hall, was born near Russellville, Kentucky, and became a well-known and distinguished physician of the early days, likewise engaging in agricultural pursuits. He was likewise prominent in public affairs, serving as magistrate for many years and as high sheriff of Logan County. In politics he was a democrat. He married Ann Whitsett, a native of Logan County, who died near Auburn, as did Doctor Blakey. Three children were born to James M. and Mary Ellen (Blakey) Hall: Whitsett; W. S., Jr., who resides near Auburn and is a well-known and successful used car dealer; and Paul, a successful traveling salesman on the staff of the Brown Shoe Company, of St. Louis, who died at Winne, Arkansas, at the age of forty-four years.

Whitsett Hall secured his early education in the rural schools of Logan County, following which he pursued a course in the then celebrated Auburn High School, from which he graduated in 1884. He then began working on the home farm, where he remained until 1887, and in that year entered the University of Virginia, at Charlottesville, where he spent three years. In 1890 he returned to Logan County, and engaged in farming on his own account, and at this time is the owner of a tract of 900 acres of valuable land, three-quarters of a mile east of Auburn. He carries on extensive operations as a general farmer and also has met with much success in raising thoroughbred cattle and horses. Mr. Hall has various other interests and is also a stockholder in the Bank of Auburn, of which he was one of the founders and for several years a member of the board of directors.

A democrat in politics, for a number of years Senator Hall has been one of the influential men of his party in this part of the state and has been called upon to fill several important offices. He served four years as magistrate of the Auburn Magisterial District, and in November, 1919, was elected to the Kentucky State Senate from the Ninth Senatorial District, comprising Logan, Simpson and Todd counties. During the session of 1920 he was chairman of the committees on Public Ways and Internal Improvements, and Common Carriers and Commerce, and a member of the Military Affairs and Kentucky University and Normal Schools committees. He has worked faithfully in behalf of the interests of his constituents and is considered one of the progressive members of the Senate. Mr. Hall is a member of the Baptist Church at Auburn, and assistant superintendent of the Sunday school.

His fraternal affiliation is with the Knights of Pythias and the Chi Phi Greek letter fraternity. During the World War he gave serious thought to its soldier work before taking part in the various activities in Logan County, being a "Four- Minute Man" and chairman in his district of all the Liberty Loan drives, and also assisted in Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. activities.

On November 23, 1892, Mr. Hall was married in Simpson County, Kentucky, to Miss Ella Motherel Sloss, daughter of A. M. and Jennie (Motherel) Sloss, farming people of Simpson County, who are now deceased. Mrs. Hall attended Cedar Cliff College, in Warren County, and later became a graduate of Bethel College, Russellville, and is now a student at the Kentucky State University; and Currie C., who attended Bethel College, Russellville, enlisted in April, 1917, in the United States Army, and after service in the United States, being honorably discharged with the rank of sergeant, at Camp Zachary Taylor, in July, 1919, in which time he has assisted his father on the home farm.

Mr. Patterson was born near Rockfield, Warren County, Kentucky, January 28, 1866, a son of Frank Y. and Margaret (Shaw) Patterson, a grandson of Loss Patterson, and a great-grandson of an emigrant from Ireland who settled in colonial Virginia. Frank Y. Patterson, Sr., was born in 1830, at Gallatin, Sumner County, Tennessee, and was reared in his native community, whence as a young man he went to California as a "forty-niner" and spent nearly five years in the gold fields of that state. About 1854 he returned to this region and settled in Warren County, Kentucky, where he married and applied himself to farming and stockraising, a field of endeavor in which he won marked success, becoming one of the substantial and reliable men of his community. He died in December, 1890.

Mr. Patterson was a charter member of Bowling Green Lodge No. 51, I. O. O. F., of which he was past grand, and was a zealous Odd Fellow who took much interest in the work of the order. Mr. Patterson married Miss Margaret Shaw, who was born in 1840, near Rockfield, Kentucky, and died at Bowling Green, in 1912, and they became the parents of the following children: Addie, who is the wife of C. C. Moore, who has charge of a factory at Indianapolis, Indiana; John S., who is engaged in farming near Rockfield; Frank Y., Jr., a farmer and broker of Bowling Green, formerly a stock salesman and for a time, under Governor Stanley, deputy state fire marshal; Emma, who is the wife of J. C. Ray, of Oakland, Warren County, Kentucky, a farmer and ex-sheriff of the county; and Anna, the wife of W. F. Taylor, a contractor of Bowling Green.

Frank Y. Patterson, Jr., educated in the rural schools of Warren County, primarily, after which he attended Gallatin Academy, at Gallatin, Tennessee. Leaving that institution in 1888, he farmed in Warren County until 1893, at which time he came to Bowling Green and began selling live stock, being likewise interested in the livery business until 1904. In that year he was appointed deputy under Sheriff Robert Rodes, a position which he held for four years and next was elected sheriff of Warren County and served as such for four years, or from 1908 until 1912, giving the people an excellent administration. Mr. Patterson was next elected city engineer of the city of Bowling Green and acted in that capacity satisfactorily for two years, then returning to the business of trading live stock, including horses and mules, and contractor under the firm of Lazarus & Patterson. At the time of the inauguration of Governor Stanley, January 17, 1914, Mr. Patterson was appointed deputy state fire marshal, a position which he held until December, 1917, when he was made Division Deputy Collector for his district, comprising twelve counties, with headquarters in the Federal Building, Bowling Green, a position which he holds today and in which he is discharging the duties in a highly efficient manner.

Since December, 1919, Mr. Patterson has come to the front rapidly as a dealer in oil securities and a producer of this product. He is a stockholder, treasurer and a director in the Patterson Oil and Gas Syndicate and the G. E. Townsend Oil and Gas Syndicate and secretary and treasurer in the firm of Garrison & Company, oil contractors. He is likewise a director and stockholder in the Liberty National Bank, and is the owner of a farm of 210 acres, twelve miles west of Bowling Green and another farm of ninety acres in the same neighborhood. On these properties he does general farming and stock raising, and is engaged extensively in buying and selling all kinds of high grade live stock. Politically, Mr. Patterson is a staunch democrat and his religious faith is that of the Baptist Church. He belongs to the Bowling Green Chamber of Commerce and to various other civic and social bodies and can always be counted upon to give his support to worthy movements. This was found to be true during the World War period, when he was a generous contributor to all causes and a willing participant in such enterprises as would benefit through his cooperation.

On January 27, 1888, Mr. Patterson was married near Rockfield, Kentucky, to Miss Margaret Lively, a graduate of the public school of Bowling Green, and a daughter of James M. and Drew (Coleman) Lively, the latter of whom is deceased, while the former, a retired farmer, makes his home at Bowling Green. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Patterson: Maggie D., a graduate of Potcher College, Bowling Green, who is an assistant secretary in the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C.; Lottie M., a graduate of the University of Kentucky; and Jeanette, who resides with her parents; and J. V., now engaged in the oil business with his father at Bowling Green, who volunteered for service when the United States entered the World War, was accepted and trained at Lexington, went overseas to France, where he spent a year, and was at the front when the armistice was signed, following which he returned to this country and received his honorable discharge with the rank of corporal.
Ernest J. Felts. In the thirteen years since he began the practice of law at Russellville Ernest J. Felts has made a name for himself as a lawyer, public official, army officer during the World war, and in every way has shown himself a man of action and is one of the real public leaders in his section of the state.

Mr. Felts was born in Logan County, Kentucky, November 2, 1883. In the paternal line his ancestry goes back to Henry Felts, who came to Virginia in colonial times and Mr. Felts' grandfather Joshua Felts was born in that commonwealth in 1816. He came at an early day to Kentucky and was a farmer and slave holder in Logan County until his death in 1891. He married a Miss Rankin in Virginia and she also died in Logan County. J. H. Felts, father of the Russellville attorney, spent all his life in Logan County where he was born January 5, 1836, and died January 10, 1917. His profession was that of a traveling salesman for a wholesale lumber company. He was a democrat and an official member of the Baptist Church. His wife was Emma Vick who was born October 16, 1861, and is still living at Russellville. She was the mother of three children: Ernest J. being the second. Ella Gray died at the age of five years. The other survivor is H. Carr, a cotton planter at Courtland, Mississippi.

Ernest J. Felts spent his boyhood in a country district of Logan County, attended the rural schools, and completed his literary training in Bethel College at Russellville. He left college during his senior year in 1903 to enter the law office of S. R. Crewdson. He also read law under W. F. and J. C. Browder. On being admitted to the bar in November, 1907, he began building up a general civil and criminal practice, and has since been one of the busy members of the Russellville bar. In 1909 he was elected county attorney of Logan County, and handled all the business of the office with admirable efficiency for a period of eight years. He was elected for a third term but resigned in 1917 and was instrumental in securing the appointment of his successor, E. C. Taylor.

Mr. Felts enlisted in the National Guard organization as a private in 1916 to go to the Mexican border. He was subsequently advanced to the rank of lieutenant and later to captain, and as such served in the National Army during the war. Following the war he was then made assistant senior United States mustering officer. He resigned in 1918 and at that time was working to invent a mechanical pilot for aeroplanes for war purposes only. The government now has possession of his plans and specifications, the details of which obviously are not for publication. Captain Felts returned to Russellville in April, 1918, and resumed his law practice. His offices are in the Bank of Russellville Building. He is a democrat in politics and a deacon of the Disciples Church, and a teacher in its Bible class. He is affiliated with Bowling Green Lodge No. 320, of the Elks, is past chancellor commander of Amelion Lodge No. 56, Knights of Pythias, and a member of Russellville Lodge of Odd Fellows. His home is on West Sixth Street in Russellville.

In December, 1917, at Russellville Captain Felts married Miss Louise Bass, daughter of Judge S. A. and Amanda (Cartwell) Bass, residents of Russellville. His father is a well known lawyer but has been retired from practice since 1895. Mrs. Felts' mother is a daughter of John R. Carter, long prominent as a dry goods merchant at Louisville. Mrs. Felts is a graduate of Logan College in Russellville.

William C. Morris is one of the best known men of Bowling Green for he is the postmaster of this city, and is connected in an official position with one of its leading financial institutions. He is a man well worthy the confidence which has been reposed in him, and his prosperity is but the just reward for his life of endeavor.

Mr. Morris was born in Simpson County, Kentucky, April 21, 1869, a son of John E. Morris, and a grandson of Clayborne Morris, who was born in North Carolina in 1792, and died in Warren County, Kentucky, in 1885. He was the pioneer of his family into Warren County, to which he came in 1846, and where he became a prosperous farmer. During the War of 1812 he served his country as a soldier. He married as his second wife a lady whose first name was Ruth, born in Warren County, where she later died, and she became the grandmother of William C. Morris.

John E. Morris was born in Sumner County, Tennessee, in 1844, and is now a resident of Bristow, Warren County, Kentucky. Only two years old at the time his parents came to Warren County, he has spent the remainder of his life here, and during all of his active life he was a farmer, but a thoroughbred in politics he is a democrat. The Baptist Church affords him an expression of his religious belief, and he is a strong churchman. He is equally zealous as a Mason, and is a man of the highest character. John E. Morris was married to Joann Barnett, who was born in Warren County in 1853, and died at Bowling Green, in 1904. Their children were as follows: William C., who was the eldest born; Clarence E., who is a merchant of Petersburg, Florida; John Virgil, who is also a merchant of Plant City; Joseph, who with the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, lives at Louisville, Kentucky; and Russellville, Kentucky; Lassie Ann, who married Will Link, a farmer of Simpson County; E. Hugh, who resides at Louisville, Kentucky, travels for the Peter Neal Richardson Drug Company.

After completing his courses in the rural schools of Warren County, William C. Morris spent two years at the University of Virginia at Charlottesville and was graduated therefrom in 1896 with the degree of Graduated Pharmacist. Returning to Bowling Green, he engaged in a drug business, in which he continued from 1898 until 1914, being during that period one of the leading druggists of the city. In the latter year he received his appointment as postmaster of Bowling Green, and took charge of the office March 16, 1914. He was re-appointed to the same office in October, 1918. He is a prominent democrat, and served in the city council as alderman in 1909. He is a member of the board of education. Interested at all times in the growth and development of Bowling Green, he has long been a member of its Chamber of Commerce. He is a director of and stockholder in the Citizens National Bank of Bowling Green. Not only does he own his modern residence at 1109 State Street, which is a fine, comfortable home, but he also has his private garage.

During the late war Mr. Morris was one of the effective workers of Warren County, and took a particularly active part in all of the drives to secure funds for the various organizations and for the sale of bonds. Personally he bought bonds and savings stamps to his limit, and subscribed in response to every appeal made for the cause during the progress of the war. In his religious faith, Mr. Morris is a Methodist, and he gives to the local congregation of that denomination an earnest and sincere support.

On September 26, 1899, Mr. Morris was united in marriage with Miss Emma L. McGinnis of Warren County, a daughter of John W. and Norris (Tarrants) McGinnis. Mr. McGinnis, who was a farmer, died in Warren County, but Mrs. McGinnis survives him and lives with her son-in-law, Mr. Morris. Mr. and Mrs. Morris have two children, namely: Lucille, who was born September 14, 1901, is a student in Wesleyan College, Mason, Georgia, and William C. Junior, who was born January 10, 1915. During the time he has been postmaster Mr. Morris has given the people of Bowling Green a very effective service, and the business of his office has been expanded considerably. He is a man who believes in progress and is able and willing to aid in advancing the interests of the city in every way possible.

Gabriel H. Hughes, D.D.S., was born and reared in Pike County and for a number of years has been a leading dental surgeon at Pikeville.

He was born on Shelby Creek, May 22, 1860, son of James and Frankie (Tackett) Hughes. His father was born in Letcher County in 1845 and his mother on Long Fork of Shelby Creek in 1870. James Hughes has spent his active life as a farmer, and also for a number of years was in the timber business, running a railroad that was a branch line of a Big and Little saw mills on Shelby Creek. He owns a fine farm on that Creek just below Yeager. In past years he has been active in the Republican party in behalf of those qualified for office. He and his wife are members of the Regular Baptist Church at Little Creek and have been liberal in their donations to church causes.

Gabriel H. Hughes is the second among ten living children. He finished his early education at Pikeville College and for three years was a teacher. Combining the savings from this work with some borrowed capital he entered the Central University Dental School at Louisville, and graduated D.D.S. May 1, 1913. He returned to Pikeville and he has practiced in the same office in that city for eight years. During the World war he was examining dentist for the local draft board while two of his brothers were in active service in the navy, Wilburn P. and Abel M. Wilburn, who is now practicing law at Pikeville, was commissioned a first lieutenant in the proposed division that the late Theodore Roosevelt was to take to France, and when that project failed to materialize he joined the navy, became an ensign, and during his transport service crossed the ocean many times.

Doctor Hughes in 1912 married Ora Canterbury, daughter of Asa Canterbury of Boone County, West Virginia. They are members of the First Baptist Church at Pikeville and takes an active interest in Sunday School work. Doctor Hughes is a member of the Masonic Lodge and Chapter at Pikeville and the Knight Templar Commandery and Shrine at Ashland. Politically he is a republican.

Thomas Oliver Helm, senior. The most important man in any community is naturally he who holds in his capable hands the health and lives of his fellow citizens, and very often because of the rigid training he has received and the knowledge he has acquired through his years of contact with the world, he is called upon to hold offices of responsibility, either in the municipal government, or some financial institution of high standing. Dr. Thomas Oliver Helm, senior, one of the leading medical men of Bowling Green, is no exception to this rule for he is accepted as one of the experienced and astute financiers of Warren County, and is widely known all over this part of Kentucky.

Doctor Helm was born in Butler County, Kentucky, May 5, 1859, a son of John B. Helm, and grandson of Moses Helm, who was born near Peaks of Otter, Virginia, and died in Butler County, Kentucky, on a date antedating the birth of Doctor Helm. He was one of the pioneer farmers of Butler County, and became one of its prominent men. Moses Helm married a Miss Owens, who was born in Hart County, Kentucky, but her family was of Virginian origin. She, too, died in Butler County. The Helms emigrated from London, England, to Virginia during the Colonial epoch in this country’s history.

John B. Helm was born in Butler County, Kentucky, in 1815, and died at Sugar Grove, Butler County, in 1866, having spent his entire life in that county. He developed into one of the most extensive farmers of that region, at one time owning 3,000 acres of land.

The democratic party held his allegiance. Both as a member of and elder in the Presbyterian Church Mr. Helm for many years lived up to the highest conceptions of Christian manhood, and he was equally zealous as a Mason. He married Nancy Carson, who was born in Butler County, Kentucky, in 1826, and died in Butler County, in 1861. Their children were as follows: Bettie, who died in 1883; James W., who was a farmer, died at Auburn, Logan County, Kentucky, when sixty-three years old; John C., who is a retired farmer of Bowling Green; and Doctor Helm, who was the youngest born.

After attending the country schools of Butler County, Doctor Helm entered Lincoln University at Lincoln, Illinois, and was graduated therefrom in 1883 with the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy. He then attended the medical department of the University of Louisville, and was graduated in 1885 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Since then he has taken up post-graduate work in the New York Polyclinic in 1891, specializing on diseases of women and children; and a special course in Chicago in 1904, specializing in electrical therapeutical treatment, following which he purchased an X-ray outfit for use in his practice.

In 1885 Doctor Helm established himself at Auburn, Logan County, Kentucky, and was there for twenty-five years, or until 1910, but in that year came to Bowling Green, and established a hospital on Twelfth Street, which he superintended for a number of years, after which he left it on account of his general practice. He is still one of the leading physicians of the county. His offices are in the Morehead Hotel Building, which he owns. The Morehead Hotel is one of the best in Warren County, and is located at the corner of Main and State streets, and Doctor Helm’s modern brick residence, one of the best in Bowling Green, is next door. While Doctor Helm owns this hotel, he has not been the manager, but has a partner. He also owns the Proctor Flats on State Street, adjoining the Morehead Hotel on the other side from his residence; the building on Twelfth Street formerly known as St. Joseph’s Hospital, and sixty acres of land, four miles south of Bowling Green.

Like his honored father, Doctor Helm is a democrat and served as pension examiner for the United States Government for four years. For one term he was a member of the city council of Bowling Green. Doctor Helm was one of the organizers of the Bank of Auburn, and was elected its first president in 1905, and held that office for six years and for two years was president of the Warren National Bank of Bowling Green, holding that office until his bank was consolidated with the American National Bank of Bowling Green, since which time he has been on the board of directors of the Citizens National Bank.

At the time this country entered the World war, Doctor Helm was serving as local surgeon of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, but resigned in order to enter the United States Medical Corps, in October, 1917. He was sent to Fort Benjamin Harrison at Indianapolis, where he was commissioned a first lieutenant. At the time of the signing of the armistice he was daily expecting orders to go to Panama. Following his honorable discharge he returned to Bowling Green and resumed his practice.

Doctor Helm belongs to the Westminster Presbyterian Church of Bowling Green, in which he is an elder. The Bowling Green Chamber of Commerce benefits by his sage counsel as one of its members, and he also belongs to the Warren County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

On December 4, 1888, Doctor Helm was married at Auburn, Kentucky, to Miss Nellie Blakey, a daughter of C. H. and Mary (Becker) Blakey, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Blakey was one of the leading farmers of Logan County, and for two terms served in the lower house of the State Assembly as a representative from Logan County. Mrs. Helm was graduated from a young ladies' seminary at Hopkinsville, Kentucky. She died October 9, 1920. Their children were as follows: John B., who is an attorney of Louisville, Kentucky; Milburn, who was graduated from Princeton University, New Jersey, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and from the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, and is one of the veterans of the Great War, having volunteered, been commissioned a first lieutenant and served overseas in France for one year; Margie, who is at home, was graduated from Columbia University, New York; Stanley, who served at Lynchburg, Virginia; Thomas Oliver, Junior, who is with the Wire-Bound Box Manufacturing Company of Morristown, New Jersey, was graduated from Princeton University, with the degree of Civil Engineer, served in the United States Navy for two years during the late war, was an ensign and received still further promotion, and crossed the ocean fourteen times in the U. S. S. Powhatan convoying troops, which ship was formerly a Ganges; and Harold, who was graduated from the University of Virginia; Harold Holmes, who is with the Chemical National Bank as one of the force of the credit department, in New York City, New York, was graduated from Princeton University, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He also enlisted for service during the late war and was assigned to the S. A. T. C. at Princeton University, and the armistice was signed before he saw actual service. The record of the Helm family is a very remarkable one, the mother's husband and three sons all being volunteers, and all in the service of their country during the time it was at war. All of these gentlemen made heavy personal sacrifices in leaving their affairs, they did not hesitate, but proffered themselves and were accepted without question. All of them are men of the highest character, and since returning to civil life, have rendered valuable service in the several callings in which they are engaged. Reviewing their efforts, and realizing that there were many more of like caliber the country, it is not difficult to understand why "America Won the War," or why this country is today the leading one in the world.

REDFORD ELLIS STANLEY, who serves in an official position in the Bank of Arlington, one of the sound banking institutions of Carlisle County, like his associate Mr. Mosby, was graduated from the University of Kentucky, where he did considerable study in farming, and is the owner of a large amount of valuable land. He was born at New Madrid, Missouri, December 13, 1855, a son of T. L. Stanley, and a member of one of the old-established families of this country, the Stanleys coming here from England and settling in Virginia during the Colonial period.

T. L. Stanley was born in Virginia in 1829 and died at Milburn, Kentucky, in 1905. While he was a boy his parents moved to the west, where they resided at Charleston, Missouri, and there he was reared and received a common school education. After his marriage he moved to Wolf Island, Missouri, where he carried on farming for a number of years, and then came to Kentucky and lived in retirement at Milburn for the remainder of his life, although he retained his extensive farm holdings on Wolf Island. As a Mason and a Baptist he lived up to high ideals of Christian manhood and was a very active supporter of both organizations. In politics he was a democrat. T. L. Stanley was married to Sarah Dyson, who was born in Kentucky in 1841, died at Milburn, Kentucky, in 1881. Their children were as follows: Lucy, who married Wiley Mahan, lives at Clinton, Kentucky; T. A., who was a farmer and merchant, died at Arlington, aged sixty-three years, as a result of a boiler explosion; Redford Ellis, who was third in order of birth; Joseph, who died when young; Amanda, who married Ed Peebles, a farmer, lives at Milburn; Albany, who married Otis Peebles, a merchant now living at Columbus, Kentucky, was killed in an automobile accident in the fall of 1910; Robert, who is a merchant of Paducah, Kentucky; Kate, who married Robert Wright, a contractor and builder of Mayfield, Kentucky; and Ora, who married Hardy Sanford, now deceased, formerly a merchant of Milburn, Kentucky, lives at St. Louis, Missouri. By a former marriage with a Miss James, T. L. Stanley had a son, Henry, who is a farmer of Oklahoma. He married for his third wife Sallie Thomas, and they had two children, namely: William, who was a farmer of Milburn, where he died at the age of twenty-eight years; and Ed, who is a clerk in a store at Portageville, Missouri.

Redford Ellis Stanley went to school until he reached his majority and received the equivalent of a high school education. He grew up under his father's watchful supervision and remained at home until he was twenty-six years old, when he engaged in a merchandising business at Forest City, Arkansas. Returning to the farm after a brief period, he was engaged in farming for five years, and then, in August, 1896, came to Milburn, Kentucky, to engage in another mercantile business which he conducted very successfully for fifteen years, and during that time was also engaged in farming, but since he sold his business he has devoted himself to his farm interests. His present farm of 300 acres is located three-quarters of a mile north of Berkeley, Kentucky, and he formerly owned another farm of 120 acres which is in the neighborhood but sold it a few years ago. His residence, which he owns, is located at Milburn, and is a comfortable house surrounded with well-kept grounds. Assisting in the organization of the Bank of Arlington, Mr. Stanley has continued one of its directors, and is now its vice president. A democrat, he is a member of the City Council, and is acting as its chairman or mayor. The Methodist Episcopal Church has in him an earnest worker, member and steward. In his fraternal affiliations he maintains membership with Sycamore Camp, W. O. W., of Arlington.

On December 25, 1884, Mr. Stanley was united in marriage with Miss Minnie Mosby, at Arlington. She is a daughter of W. W. and Matilda (Berry) Mosby. Mr. Mosby, who was a farmer is deceased, but Mrs. Mosby survives and lives with Mr. and Mrs. Stanley. Mrs. Stanley was graduated from the Clinton High School and is a refined and cultured lady. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Stanley are as follows: Edwin, who resides on his father's farm near Berkley, Kentucky; Fannie Bess, who married Avery Ganong, a farmer of Arlington; and Mosby, who was graduated from the Arlington High School in 1919, is assisting with the farm work. In every line of endeavor which he has entered Mr. Stanley has achieved success because he possesses those qualities which enable him to intelligently carry out his ideas and inspire others to whole-hearted endeavor. As a citizen he is rendering his community valuable service, and is in every way a fine and representative man of the highest type.

JACK STUBBLEFIELD JOHNSON is a Kentucky educator, with a record of a quarter of a century of work in school and educational affairs. He was selected recently to become superintendent of the school system of the important town and center of Lynch in Harlan County, where under his supervision one of the most complete and adequate school buildings in the State has been provided.

Mr. Johnson was born at Winchester, Kentucky, July 1, 1898. Winchester is the old home of his mother. The Johnsons are a pioneer family of Fayette County, where his great-grandfather and his grandfather, natives of Virginia, established a home when the grant father was twelve years of age. They lived out their lives as farmers, and William Sidney Johnson, father of the Lynch school superintendent, is still living on his farm near Lexington, but now retired from long continued and successful operations as a farmer. He was born in Fayette County in 1833. He is a democrat and a Baptist. William S. Johnson married Clara Wisdom, who was born at Winchester in 1836. Jack Stubblefield is the eldest of their six children. Frank is a farmer and rural mail carrier in Fayette County;
Leva is a teacher in the Lexington public schools;
Betsy is the wife of Ben Hisle, a business man in Fayette County; Mary and Sarah are still at home.

Jack Stubblefield Johnson was reared on his father's farm, attended rural schools in Fayette County, and completed his classical education when he graduated A.
D. in 1868 from the Kentucky State University at Lexington. During four years he was a teacher in the rural schools of his home county. He was elected and served eleven years as principal of the high school at Paris, Kentucky. He then gave up teaching and school administration to enter the service of the well known school book publishers Lyons & Carnahan, and represented that firm for seven years over the central states.

Mr. Johnson was elected superintendent of the schools of Lynch in the fall of 1920. This mining community depends upon the activities of the United States Coal and Coke Company, a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation. The company provided all the funds for the magnificent graded and high school building, completed in the fall of 1921, at a cost without equipment of $125,000. Superintendent Johnson has under supervision a staff of twenty-five teachers and a scholarship enrollment of approximately a thousand.

Mr. Johnson is a member of the Kentucky Educational Association. He had the honorable distinction of being superintendent of the Sunday School of the Bryant Stake, a branch of the United Order of the United Mercantile Order of Odd Fellows.

Green Henry Champlin. Probably every resident of Kentucky's rich and populous county of Crittenden knows Green Henry Champlin in his official capacity as county judge. He has been one of the able business men of Hopkinsville for many years and some of the older residents of the county recall with special affection and gratitude the services of his father, who has deservedly been regarded as the founder of the public school system of Crittenden County.

This branch of the Champlin family is directly de-scented from that distinguished French family of Champlain, which furnished to the era of exploration in America one of its most distinguished leaders, Samuel de Champlain, in whose honor Lake Champlain was named. For several generations members of the Champlin family have been prominent in their respective states.

Judge Champlin's grandfather, Silas N. Champlin, was born in Chautauqua County, New York, and a few years later in 1841 took his family west to Northern Indiana, locating at Plymouth in Marshall County, where he spent the rest of his days as a farmer. He died there in 1873. His wife was Amy Palmer, also a native of New York, and she died at Plymouth.

Judge Champlin, father of Judge Champlin, was born in Chautauqua County, New York, September 9, ERNST D. IRESON, a capable young banker of Pike County, has had for a man of his years a very wide experience in the essential industries and business affairs of Eastern Kentucky.

He was born at Pound, Virginia, April 10, 1895, and grew up in the valley where his business activities are today. His parents are Henry and Sarah Virginia (Alley) Ireson. His father is a farmer at Pound in Wise County, Virginia, is active in the Methodist Church, being an official and superintendent of the Sunday School. There are three children in the family: Eugene, with the Consolidation Coal Company at Jenkins, Kentucky; Miss Thelma, a student, and Ernest D.

Ernest D. Ireson made good use of his educational advantages, which ended when he was about fourteen years of age. He attended common schools in Wise County, Virginia, and this was followed by a course of instruction in the Clinch Valley Institute at Wittens Mill, Tazewell County, Virginia. On leaving school Mr. Ireson was for three years clerk in the company store of the Consolidation Coal Company at McRoberts, and for two years was assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Jenkins. Mr. Ireson helped organize the Bank of Hellier in Pike County, Kentucky, and is its active cashier and executive officer.

On February 10, 1918, he married Miss Jim Erwin Johnson, daughter of Lawrence Johnson, a prominent merchant of Jenkins, Kentucky. Mrs. Ireson capably assists him in the bank. Mr. Ireson, while living at Jenkins was secretary of the Baptist Church, and is a member of the Masonic Lodge, Royal Arch Chapter, Eastern Star at Jenkins, the Ashland Commandery, Knights Templar, and E. L. Hasa Temple A. A. O. N. M. S. of Ashland. He is a republican in politics and Mrs. Ireson is a member of the Methodist Church.

JOE BROWDER. A man of undoubted energy who has prosecuted his private interests successfully and has achieved a definite place of influence and prominence in his community, Joe Browder is one of the proprietors of the Browder Milling Company of Fulton, is an extensive property owner in the city and county, and at the present time is ably directing the affairs of the municipality as Mayor.

Mr. Browder was born in Fulton County December 17, 1864, and his family have been identified with this section of the state for upwards of a century. His grandfather, Austin Browder, was born in Hopkins County, Kentucky, in 1805, and at an early day moved to Fulton County, where he developed a valuable farm and where he spent the rest of his life. He died in 1884. He married Arena Jackson of Hopkins County whom she was born, and she also died in Fulton County.

John Browder, father of Joe, was born in Fulton County in 1837 and spent many years as a successful farmer here, but in 1880 removed to Obion County, Tennessee, where he continued his career as a farmer until his death in 1895. During the war he was in the Confederate Army in 1864-65, participated in several campaigns and battles and was twice slightly wounded. He was a democrat and active in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was a member of the Masonic fraternity. John Browder married Matilda Baker, who was born at Gardner Station in Weakly County, Tennessee, in 1842, and is now living at Fulton. Her oldest child, William, a carpenter and builder, died at Fulton in 1904; the second son died in childhood; the third son, Joe; Enoch is a partner in the Browder Milling Company. Matilda who lives on her farm near Fulton is the widow of Will Thompson;
HISTORY OF KENTUCKY

Dr. William Frederick Pennebaker, though now retired from practice, has been a physician and friend of exceptional service to a large community of Mercer County, and for many years was a valued adviser to that historic community known as Shakertown, where he still resides.

Doctor Pennebaker was born on a farm near Shepardsville in Bullitt County, Kentucky, August 2, 1811. When five years of age he was brought by John Shain to the Shaker settlement in Mercer County. Outside of Mercer County this unique settlement is seldom heard of by Kentuckians, though at one time it was a thriving and prosperous community. Fifty years ago a Kentucky historian described it as follows:

"Pleasant Hill is a small village of rare beauty and neatness situated on a commanding eminence about one mile from the Kentucky River, on the turnpike road from Lexington to Harrodsburg and seven miles from the latter place. It belongs exclusively to that orderly and industrious society called 'Shakers' and contained in 1879 a population of 302, divided into families from sixty to eighty each. Their main edifice is a large, handsome and costly structure built of Kentucky marble, the others, generally, are built of brick and all admirably arranged for comfort and convenience. The external and internal arrangement and neatness of their dwellings, the beauty and luxuriance of their gardens and fields, the method and economy displayed in their manufacturing and mechanical establishments, their orderly and flourishing schools, their sleek and well fed stock are all characteristic of this singular people and evidence a high degree of comfort and prosperity."

The first house was built in this settlement in 1805. The community supported its own flour, flax and saw mills and was the first in the world. It was a community undertaking, and all the lands were owned and operated in common, and the products from the mills and looms were of a fine quality of wool, linen and cotton cloth. Today only a few of the old seer remain, the mills and shops having long gone to decay, though the houses of the village were built so substantially that they stand as firm as 100 years ago.

Doctor Pennebaker even as a boy evinced remarkable intellectual powers and at the age of twelve was employed to keep all the books and accounts of the Shaker community. He also studied medicine and for many years took time to study in distant cities to perfect his knowledge, attending Louisville College of Medicine, colleges in Brooklyn and Cincinnati. He graduated as late as April 16, 1867, graduated from the National College of Electro-Therapeutics of Indianapolis. He was attending physician for members of the Society and also had a general practice outside for miles around. He introduced many of the distinctive features of electro-therapy, and some of the appliances and devices widely used by this school are of his design.

Doctor Pennebaker's home is capably looked after by his cousin, Miss Letcher Mathews, who handles also many of his outside business interests, including the farm.

At the time of the battle of Perryville in 1862 Doctor Pennebaker, then a young man, attended and rendered service paid to the wounded at the Shaker Hospital. There he remained at the Home at Graham's Springs. The road to the ferry was built by the Shakers, and is a wonderful scenic highway. The cost of its construction in cash was only $1,000, since the men donated the labor. For many years Doctor Pennebaker was manager for the Shaker Society, and had the supervision of its program of road-building, manufacturing and farming. He was instrumental in placing the first telephone in service in Mercer County, making connections with the line from High Bridge to Cincinnati. While a very practical man, with a wide knowledge of technical arts, he has also been a student of literature. He was a friend and admirer of the late President Roosevelt, and several times was a guest of that distinguished American at Washington. Doctor Pennebaker's home is quaintly furnished, and has many beautiful examples of the hand-woven rugs and hand-made walnut and mahogany furniture in which the Shakers excelled.

Jetha J. Haggard, who for several years past has had his home and business activities on a fine farm 5½ miles south of Paris in Bourbon County, represents the old and prominent Haggard family of Clark County, where Mr. Haggard himself lived many years and where a number of his relatives have been people of distinction.

Mr. Haggard was born at Pinchem in Clark County August 15, 1850, and is a son of James and Mary E. J. Haggard. About 1860 the family moved to the farm five miles from Winchester where Clay Haggard, son of James, is still living. Jetha J. Haggard was reared and educated in Clark County, and was a resident of Winchester until three years ago, when he brought his present farm, the old Joseph Penn place of 193 acres in Bourbon County.

At the age of twenty-five Mr. Haggard married Mary Gay, of North Middlesex, daughter of Watt and Nancy (Owen) Gay. She was the mother of four children: Nannie May, who died when twelve years old; Harvey Gay, who died at the age of twenty-one; W. S. Haggard, who lives at Paris, married Maime Davis and has a son, John Davis Haggard; and Nona, wife of D. C. Demingan, of Winchester, mother of three children, Mary, Ethel Ray, and Nancy Gay.

In February, 1890, Mr. Haggard married Ida Bird (Deatherage) Norris, widow of Grant Norris. By her first husband, William Allen Powell, she has a daughter, Elizabeth, now Mrs. Harry Collins, of Paris. Ida Bird Deatherage was born near Richmond, Kentucky, daughter of Achilles and Elizabeth (Willoughby) Deatherage. Her grandfather, Amos Deatherage, married Susan Lipscomb, of Clark County. Amos was a son of Bird and Sally (Phillips) Deatherage, who lived on the old homestead near Richmond still retained in the Deatherage family, its present owner being N. Bird Deatherage, a brother of Achilles, though his home is in Richmond. Achilles Deatherage died at the age of fifty-six and his wife, Elizabeth, at forty-five. Mrs. Haggard has two brothers, Elmer and James, and a sister, Mrs. C. E. Douglass, all of Madison County. William Allen Powell, of Paris, was a cousin of Mrs. Haggard, was in the clothing business at Richmond, in partnership with Doctor Evans, was a member of the city council, resigning that office to become postmaster of Richmond under the Harrison administration, and he died soon after leaving office, at the age of fifty. Mrs. Haggard's second husband, Grant Norris, was a farmer and stockman of Madison County and died two years after his marriage. Mrs. Haggard has been prominent in church and women's organizations and is a woman of exceptional capacities and talents.

William Nelson Du Vall, M. D. Reared and educated in the Illinois corn belt, Doctor Du Vall graduated from medical college twenty years ago, and his active career as a physician and surgeon has been spent in Kentucky. He is one of the leading men of his profession in Webster County, and for many years has carried on his business as a citizens' doctor at Sebree.

Doctor Du Vall was born at Monticello in Piatt County, Illinois, August 3, 1873, a son of Jeremiah E. and Rosalitha Hepzibah (Johnson) Du Vall, the latter of Irish ancestry, while his father was of French stock. The great-grandfather of Doctor Du Vall came to this country from France. Both parents were natives of Ohio, Jeremiah Du Vall of Piqua County, but they were married in Illinois, and were substantial farming people of Piatt County. Jeremiah Du Vall died February 18, 1920, at the age of eighty years, eight months and nine days, and the widowed mother is now living with her son Dr. Du Vall at the age of seventy-five.

William N. Du Vall is the youngest of four sons, and there were also four daughters in the family. He spent his life to the age of twenty-three on his father's Illinois farm, was then prepared for his profession with a three years' course in the Georgia Medical College at Atlanta, graduating April 4, 1900. Six days later he located at Beech Grove, Kentucky, but after gaining some recognition as a promising young physician he left in the fall of that year and going to Chicago took a postgraduate course in the Bennett Medical College and pursued post-graduate studies in Rush Medical College. Doctor Du Vall returned to Kentucky and resumed his practice at Beech Grove until June 22, 1907. Then, on October 26, 1907, he located at Sebree and in that community has found many opportunities for professional service, and is a man of the highest standing not only as a physician but as a citizen. He is a member of the Webster County and Kentucky State Medical Associations, and is active in both organizations.

Doctor Du Vall is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, an Odd Fellow, a republican voter and a member of the Christian Church. On June 15, 1905, he married Daley Tilford. Her father was Dr. F. P. Tilford of Nebo, Kentucky. Doctor Du Vall lost his wife on May 27, 1910. She was the mother of two children, a daughter, Ora, and a son, William Maurice Du Vall.

H. D. Fitch, vice president of the Kentucky Public Service Company, vice president of the Hopkinsville Water Company, and an extensive property owner, is one of the leading business men of Bowling Green, and one whose influence in his community has always been of a constructive character. He was born at Louisville, Kentucky, October 28, 1874, a son of H. D. Fitch, and grandson of H. D. Fitch, who was born in France, of English-French stock. When still a young man he emigrated to the United States and located in Daviess County, Kentucky, where he died not long thereafter. H. D. Fitch, father of the gentleman whose name heads this review, was born at Owensboro, Kentucky, in 1852, and died at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1900. Through his boyhood he lived at Owensboro, but then moved to Louisville, where he was married. There he was engaged in business for a number of years under the name of Fitch, Lindsey & Company, and in the manufacture of showcases. This firm handled paintings and all art goods, and built up a valuable connection. Later on in life he was general manager of the Chess-Carley Company, which was to the South what the Standard Oil Company was to the North. This company was afterwards consolidated with the Standard Oil Company. In every way the elder Mr. Fitch was a distinguished citizen and fine man, and lived up to the highest ideals of the Episcopal Church and the Masonic fraternity, in both of which he was a zealous member, and by the latter was raised to the thirty-second degree. In politics he was a democrat, and was equally consistent in his support of the principles of the democratic party. He married Mary Belle Lindsey, who was born at Frankfort, Kentucky, in 1817. She survives her husband and resides at Jacksonville, Florida. Their children are as follows: T. Lindsey, who resides at Jacksonville is connected with an engine manufacturing company which produces power engines for ships; H. D., who was the second in order of birth; Katherine, who married Edward Allan of Jacksonville, Florida, who is in the same company as his brother-in-law, T. Lindsay Fitch.

The younger H. D. Fitch was educated in the public schools of Louisville, and was graduated from the high-
DAVID HENRY HATTER is one of the conspicuous citizens of Franklin County, known for his extensive business and public interests. He is present county judge, is president of the Simpson County Bank, owns and operates several large farms in the county, and while these facts stand as evidence of his usual success some of his older friends know that he began life as a farm hand and depended entirely upon what he could earn by his individual exertions.

Judge Hatter was born in Madison County, Kentucky, November 1, 1850. He is descended from Scotch ancestors who settled at an early day in North Carolina. His father John Hatter was born near Irvine, Kentucky, in 1830, grew up there, was married in Madison County where he became a merchant, spent two years farming in Missouri, then resumed merchandising in his own county, and in 1855 moved to a farm in Simpson County where he lived until his death in 1905. He was an independent democrat in politics, and served in the Civil war from 1861 to 1863. His wife was Minerva Biggerstaff, who was born in Madison County in 1830 and died in Simpson County in 1898. They were the parents of seven children: Samuel is a farmer in Madison County; William O. is a farmer in Simpson County at the age of sixty-seven; Ann, living at Paducah, Kentucky, is the widow of James Thompson, a farmer; David Henry is the fourth in age; John W., a farmer, died in Franklin County at the age of fifty-six; Dudley is a Simpson County farmer; and Jennie is the wife of Thomas Forgy, living on a farm in Simpson County.

Judge Hatter had the advantages of the rural schools as a boy, at the age of fifteen began working out as a farm hand, and in that way provided for himself and managed to save a few dollars capital until he was twenty-one. He then went to farming on his own account and for twenty years until 1900 gave his energies with almost complete concentration to his farming interests. He still owns and supervises several farms that produce large quantities of tobacco, general crops, hogs and other stock. One of his farms contains 150 acres and is seven miles west of Franklin, another in the same vicinity comprise 215 acres, and a third of 180 acres is nine miles west of Franklin.

From 1900 to 1912 Judge Hatter was a Franklin merchant. A number of years ago he became interested as a stockholder in the Simpson County Bank, which was established by a number of substantial citizens and business men of Franklin and the surrounding district in February, 1890. It has always been operated under a state charter and in thirty years it has acquired a strong financial position in Southern Kentucky. It has capital of $50,000, surplus of $33,000, and its average deposits in 1920 were $600,000. The officers of the bank are: D. H. Hatter, president; R. G. Moore, vice president; and T. L. Neely, cashier. Judge Hatter is also interested in the Farmers Loose Leaf Warehouse Company and the Simpson County Loose Leaf Warehouse Company. He owns one of the modern homes at the county seat on Liberty Street. For four years from 1909 to 1913 he was mayor of Franklin. In the fall of 1913 he was elected county judge, was re-elected in 1917, and has presided over the sessions of the County Court since January, 1914. Judge Hatter is a democrat, a deacon in the Baptist Church, and is affiliated with Comet Lodge No. 42 Knights of Pythias. From his official position as well as under the impetus of strong patriotism he wielded much influence in promoting Simpson County's quota in the various phases of the World War. Two of his sons were represented in the army.

Judge Hatter married Miss Ella Nora Cushmanberry in Sumner County, Tennessee, in 1882. Her parents were Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Cushmanberry now deceased, her father for many years having been a farmer in Simpson County, Kentucky. Judge and Mrs. Hatter have four chittern: Ewing lives in New Orleans and is a traveling salesman; William Lawrence, now employed in the Simpson County Bank at Franklin, enlisted in July, 1862, was captured at the Battle of Shiloh and later at Camp McClellan at Amiston, Alabama, and was mustered out as a corporal in December, 1868. The only daughter, Mary, is the wife of Jesse Mallory, a jeweler at Franklin.

Emmett P., the youngest son, is now finishing his education in the University of Kentucky at Lexington, preparing for the law. He enlisted in April, 1918, spent three months in training at Fort Benjamin Harrison at Indianapolis, then went to camp and later at a camp in Ohio, from which he was sent overseas and spent a year in France. He was promoted to first lieutenant, and was in the army until mustered out in April, 1919.

Tobias J. Kendrick. No class of men contributes more to the constructive force of the community than that of the educators, for to them is due the credit for forming the plastic minds of the rising generation and shaping the trend of mental progress of their own associates. Acknowledged to be better informed than the majority, their advice is sought and followed with reference to matters, not only of local interest, but upon the broader ones of humanitarianism and national import.

One of these really important men of his day and locality, deserving of special mention in this connection is Tobias J. Kendrick, superintendent of the Pikeville schools, and a man of scholarly attainments and fine executive administrative abilities.

Tobias J. Kendrick was born in Russell County, Virginia, September 5, 1863, a son of Evan A. and Catherine Eliza (Lockhart) Kendrick. The Kendrick family is of Welsh origin, while the Lockharts came from Scotland. Evan A. Kendrick was born in Russell County, Virginia, and died December 31, 1877, aged forty-nine years. His wife, also a native of Russell County, passed away April 13, 1910, when she was seventy-six years old. He was a family manufacturer, on a small scale, of carding machinery, with a plant at Hanaker. Both he and his wife were devout members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, taking an active part in religious work, and being the center of the intellectual circle of their community. Seven children were born to them, Tobias J. and his twin brother, John T., now a lumber dealer, being the eldest.

The mother of this family was a finely educated lady, and took pride and pleasure in directing the primary studies of her children. Later Tobias J. Kendrick attended the public schools of his neighborhood, and a private school in Russell County, Virginia. His academic training was obtained at the New Garden Academy, from which he was graduated in 1883.

Since then he has taken up special work in West Virginia, and Chautauqua courses at Reading, Pennsylvania, and Jamestown, New York, during 1885, 1886 and 1887.

In 1886 Mr. Kendrick came to Pikeville, although with no intention at that time of entering the educational field. However finding a favorable opening, he took the examinations, secured a first grade certificate, and took charge of the Pikeville School, at that time housed in a two-room building. Here he remained until 1898 when he went to Richlands, Virginia, as a teacher of his Alma Mater, and for some time maintained this connection. Desiring a change, he went into a six months' state of retirement, and taking up a family of pupils and admirers at Pikeville, having never forgotten his work among them, succeeded in inducing him to return to them in 1910, and once more take charge of the educational affairs. He found things somewhat demoralized, the pupils being scattered all over the city. For the subsequent five years he bent every energy to co-ordinate and concentrate, and in 1915 had the satisfaction of seeing the erection of the present fine new school building, which is a credit to the community and its people, and is a better one than is usually to be found in a town of much smaller population. In 1912 he organized the Pikeville High School, and from the time on has developed this branch of the public school system. During the time he has been in charge of Pikeville's schools he has prepared many of the Pike County teachers for their work, and a number of the leading business men of Pikeville are numbered among his former pupils, and all of them hold him in affectionate respect.

In 1886 Mr. Kendrick was united in marriage with Minnehaha Adams, a daughter of Capt. A. E. Adams, and granddaughter of Col. John Dike of Pikeville. Mrs. Kendrick died July 7, 1896, when twenty-nine years old. They had two sons, namely: Erwin A., who is now in college, served for one year in the accounting department at Baltimore, Maryland, during the Great war; and John D., who was working in the Bethlehem Steel Plant during the war, and there died when twenty-nine years old. In 1898 Mr. Kendrick was married to Miss Elizabeth Hammel, a daughter of Rev. James H. Hammel, a Presbyterian minister who was in charge of the Pikeville Academy. Mrs. Kendrick is a Presbyterian, but Mr. Kendrick is a Methodist, and for many years has been a teacher of the Bible class in the Sunday school. Well known in Masonry he is now high priest of Pikeville Chapter, R. A. M., and he also belongs to the Commandery and Mystic Shrine of Ashland, Kentucky. In politics he is a democrat.

Jesse B. Downey, one of the most energetic young merchants of Woodburn, is utilizing his commercial talents in the hardware field, and has made his store one of the leading ones in this region. He brings to his work the enthusiasm of youth, and is equally vital in the performance of his civic responsibilities. Mr. Downey is a product of Woodburn, having been born here, November 21, 1885. Of the Downey families of Warren County, his grandfather, Carter Downey, who was born in Kentucky, in 1830, having one of the early farmers of the county, owning and operating a farm in the vicinity of Woodburn, and he died at Woodburn in 1905. His wife, who was Miss Mary Jane Mason before her marriage to him, was born in Warren County, in 1836, and died at Woodburn in 1914. The great-grandfather was the pioneer of the Downey family in Warren County.

J. M. Downey, son of Carter Downey, and father of Jesse B. Downey, is one of the highly respected men of Woodburn. He was born in Warren County, in 1855, and until his retirement, was engaged in farming in his native county, upon an extensive scale. He is a democrat. Early uniting with the Baptist Church, he is one of its strong supporters. His fraternal connections are those which he maintains as a member of Magnolia Camp No. 66, W. O. W., of Franklin, Kentucky. J. M. Downey married Levanda Young, who was born in Warren County in 1859, and died at Woodburn, July 10, 1910. They became the parents of the following children: James Lee, who is a partner of his brother J. B., in the hardware business, lives at Woodburn; Ben, who is engaged in farming in the vicinity of Woodburn; Velma, who is unmarried, lives with her father; Jesse B., who is the fourth in order of birth; Kashie, who is residing with her father; and Laura, who marries E. Lewis, a clerk in the store of Downey Brothers.

After attending the rural schools of Warren County, and the Business University of Bowling Green, in 1911, Jesse B. Downey worked for a year in West Virginia for the United States Coal Company, and then he and his brother bought their present hardware business which they operate under the name of The Woodburn Hardware Company, it being the leading hardware store outside of Bowling Green. Mr. Downey is a democrat, and active in his party, at present serving as town treasurer. He belongs to Warren Lodge No. 31, K. of P. He owns a comfortable modern residence at Woodburn.

In 1915 Mr. Downey was married at Mitchellville, Tennessee, to Miss Ila Wilson, a daughter of Ben Meade and Fletcher (Harris) Wilson who are residing on their farm near Woodburn. Mr. and Mrs. Downey have one son, Jesse Wilson, who was born November 12, 1917. Through his definite and decided stand with reference to public improvements and the raising of the standards of living, Mr. Downey draws the attention of his friends and earns the gratitude of the community. He takes pleasure in contributing to good causes, in being in the forefront of civic and moral movements, and young as he is, his advice is sought and acted upon by others less progressive than he. Because of his undoubted abilities he stands high among his fellow citizens as one of the responsible men of the county, and one who will go far on the road which leads to honorable success. As a public official he is winning laurels because of his wise administration of the affairs of his office, and his future looms large with political possibilities.

Jacob H. Keeney. The coal interests of Bell County are of such importance as to command the attention and engage the energies of some of the leading men of the state who find in this line of business profitable investments. Jacob H. Keeney of Middleboro is one of the men who have been connected with the development of the natural resources of this region. He is a man of unusual business acumen, and his name and influence have been sought by other organizations, and he is vice president of the National Bank of Middleboro.

Jacob H. Keeney was born in Switzerland County, Indiana, October 5, 1863, a son of Hiram B. Keeney, and grandson of John Keeney, who was born in New York State. He was drowned in the Ohio River in Switzerland County, Indiana, when he was in middle life. By trade he was a millwright, and he spent the greater part of his life in New York State, coming to Switzerland County at the same time as his son, Hiram B. Keeney. He was married to a Miss Harris, a native of New York State, who died in Switzerland County.

The birth of Hiram B. Keeney occurred in New York State in 1821, and his death, in Switzerland County, Indiana, in 1882. When a young man he came to Switzerland County, Indiana, was there reared, and there he became a prominent farmer and civil engineer. He married Delilah Humphrey, who was born in Switzerland County, Indiana, in 1830, and died in that county in 1884. Their children were as follows: Laura K., who married P. W. North, a farmer of Rising Sun, Indiana; George H., who was a civil engineer, died at Rising Sun, Indiana, in March, 1920; Hosier, who was a retired wholesale druggist, died at Seattle, Washington, in 1919; and Jacob H., who was the youngest in the family.

Jacob H. Keeney was reared on his father's farm and attended the schools of his native county, remaining at home until he was twenty-two years of age. From 1887 to 1888 he was engaged in railroad construction on the Santa Fe Railroad, and then in December, 1889, he came to Middleboro. His first employment after coming to this city was secured with the fire department, and he remained in it for three years, leaving it to enter upon his present line of endeavor. At present he is general manager and a stockholder of the Bryson Mountain Coal & Coke Company, whose mines are located in Ersson and Tennessee, and have a capacity of 200,000 tons of bituminous coal annually. Mr. Keeney is also vice president of the National Bank of Middleboro, and is also interested in 15,000 acres of coal and timber land near Stearns, Kentucky. He is a republican. In religious belief he is a Christian Scientist. A Mason, he belongs to Pinnacle Lodge No. 661, F. and A. M.; and Middleboro Chapter, R. A. M. Mr. Keeney owns a modern residence on Arthur Heights which is one of the very finest and most desirable homes in the city. During the late war he took an active part in all local work, was chairman of the committees of all the drives for the Liberty Bonds in Bell County, and was particularly zealous in behalf of the Red Cross. He bought bonds and war savings stamps, and contributed to all of the war organizations to the full extent of his means.

In 1888 Mr. Keeney was married in Switzerland County, Indiana, to Miss Mary E. Moore, who was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, and educated in the public schools of that city. She is a very active worker in the Christian Science Church, and she also belongs to the Masonic and Music Study Club. Mrs. Keeney is a daughter of William Moore, who was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1831, and died in that city in 1867, having passed his entire life there. For many years he was a member of the city fire department, and was also a City Commissioner. In politics he was a republican, while in fraternal matters he was a Mason. William J. Moore married Mary Belknap, who was born in New York State, and died in Ohio, in 1868. Mr. and Mrs. Keeney have had the following children born to them: Arden Belknap, who resides at Bryson, Tennessee, is superintendent of the Bryson Mountain Coal & Coke Company; Helen, who married C. B. Finley, a coal operator, lives with her parents; Philip H., who is a mechanical engineer and professor living at Middleboro, enlisted in the chemical warfare service during the war, and served overseas for seven months; William J., who is a student of the College of Music of Cincinnati, Ohio, where he is developing his remarkable talent as a violinist; and Delilah, who lives at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, married Oliver P. Hoyt, an employee of the Central Leather Company of Philadelphia. Mr. Keeney has been connected with some of the most constructive developments of Middleboro, and is recognized as one of the leading men of the city and county.

Oris W. Jackson, postmaster of Clinton, is one of the enterprising men of Hickman County, and comes of one of the most influential families in this part of the state. He was born on January 29, 1839, and died on March 2, 1882, a son of W. J. Jackson, grandson of William Jackson and great-grandson of Ephraim Jackson.

Ephraim Jackson was born in Halifax County, North Carolina, where his ancestors had settled when they came to that colony from Ireland, long before the American Revolution. He died in this same county at a date prior to the birth of his grandson, W. J. Jackson, in 1818, and it is claimed that he had reached the remarkable age of 100 years. All of his life a blacksmith, he was working as such during the Revolutionary war, and shod many horses for the soldiers. His wife, who was Rachel Poe before her marriage, was also born in North Carolina. He was married during May, 1789, in North Carolina, and died in Graves County, Kentucky, in July, 1874. He was reared on the banks of the New River in Halifax County, North Carolina, but went to South Carolina and was there married, and for the subsequent four years was one of the farmers of that state. He then came to Kentucky and after a time spent in Simpson County, located in Hickman County in October, 1822. In 1830 he moved to Graves County, Kentucky, where he spent the remainder of his life. In politics he was a Jacksonian democrat. The Methodist Episcopal Church held his membership, and he gave a great deal of thought and time to the church.
During the War of 1812 he served as a soldier under the command of Gen. Andrew Jackson.

William Jackson was married to Jennie Bratcher, who was born in South Carolina in 1798. She died in Graves County, Kentucky, April 2, 1858, having borne her husband the following children: Ephraim, who was born in 1818, was a farmer and died in Carlisle County, Kentucky, November 5, 1865, aged twenty-eight years. She was born in 1825, a farmer, and died in 1865. The late Holcomb Jackson, a farmer; Martha J., who was born in 1831, died at Columbus, Kentucky, aged sixty-eight years, married John W. Buckley, a general workman, now deceased; Lucy, who was born in October, 1836, died in Hickman County, Kentucky, in November, 1916, aged eighty years, having married first T. L. Thompson, a farmer, and after his death, was married second to Dr. John W. Eldred, who was born in 1810, died in Hickman County in 1875, married Jesse Burgess, a farmer, killed in 1918 by a cyclone; and W. J., who was the youngest born.

W. J. Jackson, father of Otis W. Jackson, was born eight miles east of Clinton, in Hickman County, Kentucky, April 10, 1814. He was reared on his father's farm, and attended the rural schools, remaining at home until he was twenty-one years of age, when he enlisted in 1831, in the Confederate Army under General Forrest, for service during the war between the North and the South. He was a cavalry regiment and he participated in the movements of his organization at Shiloh, Guntown and during the campaign in and about Vicksburg. On February 22, 1864, he was wounded at Starkville, Mississippi, and lost his left eye, which incapacitated him for further service. After the close of the war, he located at Tiptonville, Tennessee, and was there occupied with agricultural activities from 1865 to 1870, when he returned to Hickman County, and since then has been interested in farming operations, up to the present, although on October 10, 1862, he moved to Clinton, Kentucky, where he owns his modern residence at No. 327 West Clay Street. He still owns his farm of 160 acres six miles west of Clinton, and owns 200 acres two miles east of Clinton, which had been in his possession for twenty years, but in that year he sold it. A democrat, he served as a member of the Clinton City Council for two terms or a period of four years. A leader in his party, he was chosen as its candidate for the State Assembly in 1906 and was elected by a gratifying majority, was re-elected in 1908 and 1912, sociedad for his term of office. While in the legislature, he was a member of the lower House, he served as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, as chairman of the Charitable Institutions Committee and was on a number of other important committees, so that he was connected with the securing of some very constructive legislation for the state. At one time he served as deputy sheriff of Hickman County. In re-living for this term of office. During the six years he was a member of the lower House, he served as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and Morris Chapter No. 176, R. A. M. At one time he also belonged to the Knights of Honor. Mr. Jackson is a member of the Confederate Veterans, and has attended many reunions of his old comrades, and served on the staff of Col. Bennett Young, with the rank of colonel.

On July 11, 1865, W. J. Jackson was married to Miss Louisa Reaves at Tiptonville, Tennessee. She was born in Lake County, Tennessee, in 1840, and died in Hickman County, Kentucky, May 8, 1874, having borne her husband the following children: Lou Rivers, who died at the age of eight years; Laura Belle, who died at the age of six years; Jennie Bett, who died at the age of two and one-half years; and Mollie M., who died at the age of six months. Mr. Jackson was married December 30, 1875, at Clinton, Kentucky, to Miss Mary M. Stone, who was born at Clinton, Kentucky, in 1854. She died at Clinton, January 8, 1901, and she bore her husband five children, namely: Fred, who died at the age of one month; Edward W., who is in the employ of the Goodyear Rubber Company, lives at Akron, Ohio; James W., who is a farmer of Hickman County, Kentucky; Otis W., his name was revived; Rev. W., who was married to George W. Turney, accidentally drowned at Newbern, Tennessee, who was a son of a physician and surgeon. Mrs. Turney now lives with her father.

Otis W. Jackson attended the local schools and then completed his educational training at Marvin College, Clinton, Kentucky. Leaving college when he was twenty years of age, Mr. Jackson was connected with the sales forces of several mercantile establishments, but not engaged in any business. He was appointed postmaster of Clinton in October, 1914, and he was reappointed in August, 1919, for a term of four years more. The post office is located on East Clay Street. Mr. Jackson's residence is located at No. 327 West Clay Street. He is unmarried. He has followed in his father's footsteps in his choice of a church and lodge, for he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Hickman Masonic Lodge No. 131, A. F. and A. M. His convictions are also his by inheritance, and he is recognized as being among the leaders in local affairs. Under his capable administration the affairs of the post office are in prime condition, and he is rendering the people of the city and vicinity a service which is eminently satisfactory.

Doctor Puryear was mustered out March 15, 1919, and at once resumed his duties at home.

He is a democrat, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and is affiliated with Landrum Lodge of Masons at Wingo, Kentucky. His home is on South Ninth Street, Mayfield. At Wingo in 1904 he married Miss Lela Waggoner, daughter of William and Jane Waggoner, the former now deceased, having been a farmer, and the mother is still living at Wingo. Doctor and Mrs. Puryear have two children: Fern, born June 20, 1905; and Linda, born May 3, 1908.

WALTER F. STIVERS is the owner of a fine farm estate of 400 acres near Athens, Fayette County, but in their attractive and well appointed house on this place he and his wife maintain but intermittent residence, as they pass a goodly portion of each year in the city of Lexington and also are frequently to be found for more or less prolonged periods in the home of Mrs. Stivers' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edwine Barker, of whom special mention will be given elsewhere in this publication.

Mr. Stivers was born in Fayette County, on the north of February, 1893, and is the only child of Luther and Lula (Flannagan) Stivers, a personal sketch of the father being incorporated elsewhere in this work, so that further review of the family history is not here demanded. The early education of Walter Forrest Stivers was acquired in the public schools and was supplemented by a course in the Smith Business College at Lexington. After leaving school he took the position of calculator in a large tobacco warehouse in the City of Lexington, where he is now serving as calculator of sales, the while he holds also the position of deputy sheriff of Fayette County. During the winter seasons Mr. Stivers gives the major part of his time and attention to his official duties at the tobacco warehouse, and he devotes a large share of his leisure time to outdoor work near the Village of Athens, this being the old John Burroughs farm, on the Cleveland Turnpike. The farm is operated by desirable tenants and is given over largely to the raising of tobacco, wheat and corn.

Mr. Stivers is an enthusiast in outdoor sports, including hunting, and he is endowed with marked "fan" properties in connection with football, many games of which he has witnessed, including that between Harvard and Danville in the City of Boston. As a loyal Kentuckian he also has a due appreciation of and interest in horse racing, and follows closely the record of turf events. In a fraternal way he is affiliated with the Lexington Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and he is one of the well known and distinctly popular young men of Fayette County, where he and his wife are associated with representative social activities.

On the 20th of June, 1913, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Stivers to Miss Edith K. Barker, and they have two children—Forrest and Luminta.

MARIAN EDGAR JOHNSON has lived in Simpson County practically all his life, was for several years officially identified with the old woolen mills at Franklin, but is best known as the district manager of the chief public utility at Franklin, The Kentucky Utilities Company, which supplies light and power to the city.

Mr. Johnson, who is an able business man and one of the public spirited citizens of Franklin, was born in Simpson County January 11, 1879. His ancestors came from England and settled in North Carolina in Colonial times. His grandfather, Berry Johnson was born in North Carolina in 1807 and long before the building of railroads he crossed the mountains with his family in an ox cart to Tennessee and became a pioneer farmer in Wilson County that state, where he died in 1860 at the venerable age of ninety-three. His son, being a farmer, moved from Tennessee to Tennessee in 1845, grew up there with a farmer's training and when he first married moved to Simpson County, Kentucky. Here for many years he has enjoyed success on a liberal scale as a farmer and stock man, and has one of the model farms of the county located five miles northeast of Franklin. He is a democrat and a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. His second wife died with children. Later he married Miss Martha Roark, who was born in Simpson County in 1855. Five children were born to her: Henry Floyd, a civil engineer in the United States Army, a veteran of the World war and now on duty in the Philippines; Marion Edgar, second in age; Annie, wife of Sanford Reeder, a farmer a mile east of Franklin; Nellie, whose husband Herschel Sloan has a farm four miles east of Franklin; and Zoebia, wife of Sam Granger, a farmer four miles west of Franklin.

Marion Edgar Johnson acquired a good education in preparation for his business career. He first attended the rural schools, later the Franklin High School, also the Western State Normal College at Bowling Green, and completed his course in the Bowling Green Business University. Leaving school in 1900 he began office work for the Franklin Electric and Ice Company, shortly afterwards this became a part of the Kentucky Utilities Company, an organization whose headquarters are in Louisville, the chief executive officers being Harry Reid, president, L. B. Harrington, vice president, and A. A. Tuttle, secretary and treasurer, all Louisville men. This company manufactures all the electric power for domestic and public purposes in Franklin and vicinity, and also manufactures ice. The plant and offices are at the corner of Depot and Water streets.

Mr. Johnson was associated earnestly with local war work in Simpson County, being a volunteer to help in the registration under the draft law, and assisted both by his personal means and his influence in raising the county's quota in the various financial campaigns. He is a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church and is affiliated with Simpson Benevolent Lodge No. 177. A. F. and A. M.

Mr. Johnson married Miss Lula Carr, of Macon County, Tennessee, December 24, 1902. Her parents were Houston and Angeline (White) Carr, now deceased. Her father was a Confederate soldier in the Civil war and for many years a farmer in Macon County, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have one son, Charles Edgar, born December 11, 1909.

CARL NOR FleET, M. D. After graduating in medicine in 1905 Doctor Norfleet spent several years gaining valuable experience as a physician and surgeon in one of the coal mining towns of Eastern Kentucky, and since then has enjoyed a successful general practice at Somerset in his native county.

Doctor Norfleet was born at Faulksh in Pulaski County April 13, 1881. His grandfather, Jesse Norfleet, was born in Kentucky in 1803, son of a pioneer settler in Wayne County and member of the First Congregational Church. He died in 1889. Jesse Norfleet, Jr., father of Doctor Norfleet, was born in Wayne County in 1847, and shortly after his marriage moved to Pulaski County and for a number of years was engaged in business as a merchant at Faulksh, where he died in March, 1892. He was a member of the Mountain Grove Baptist Church, South, a democrat, and a Mason. He was accepted for duty in the Medical Corps August 5, 1917, was commissioned captain and after eleven weeks in the Medical Officers Training Camp at Camp Greenleaf Georgia was transferred to Embarkation Camp, Camp Stuart, at Newport News, Virginia. He was there 4½ months, and was then sent to Namson Ordinance Depot, where he organized the camp hospital and was on duty 3½ months as camp surgeon. For seven months he had command of the camp hospital at Camp Hill, Virginia, and then was an in- briary nurse at Newport News until honorably discharged March 24, 1919. During his period he was absent from his regular practice at Somerset. Doctor Norfleet is a democrat, is a steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is affiliated with Somerset Lodge No. 111, F. and A. M.; Somerset Chapter No. 25, R. A. M.; Somerset Commandery No. 31, K. T.; Somerset Lodge No. 1021, B. P. O. E.

In 1908, at Somerset, he married Miss Lena V. Girdler, daughter of Everett and Sophia (Gilmore) Girdler, residents of Somerset, where her father is a funeral director. Mrs. Norfleet finished her education in the Somerset High School. Her husband is a prominent county Doctor and Mrs. Norfleet have two children: E. Girdler, born December 22, 1908, and Mildred Elizabeth, born April 2, 1914.

HON. ABBE W. BARKLEY. Among the moulders of thought and leaders in action in Western Kentucky, Hon. Alben W. Barkley easily takes a prominent position, and is ably representing his district in the Lower House of Congress. His family is one of the old and distinguished ones of America, in which it was founded during the Colonial epoch of the country's history, by sturdy and determined men and women, who, coming here from Ireland, first located in Pennsylvania, and from thence went on south into North Carolina.

It was in the latter state that A. G. Barkley, the grandfather of Congressman Barkley was born in 1810, but he died in Graves County, Kentucky, in 1884, being the pioneer of the name to migrate from North Carolina to Kentucky, although he spent a brief period in Henry County, Tennessee. His arrival in Graves County, Kentucky, occurred in 1866, and he continued his calling as a farmer, that line of industry having been his life work. He was married to Amanda Girand of Christian County, Kentucky, who was a first cousin of James A. MacKinzie, former member of Congress from the Second Congregational District of Kentucky, and also a counsel of Ex-vice President Adlai E. Stevenson. The latter was also a native of Christian County, Kentucky. Mrs. Barkley also died in Graves County, Kentucky.

Congressman Barkley was born at Lowes, Graves County, Kentucky, on November 24, 1877, a son of John W. Barkley, who is now a resident of Paducah. He was born in Henry County, Tennessee, in 1834, and he was brought to Graves County, Kentucky, by his parents in 1866, and was there reared, educated and married, developing into a very successful farmer and prominent citizen. In 1891 he moved to Hickman County, Kentucky, leaving that locality in 1899, for Paducah, where for some years he was engaged in the insurance business, but has returned to his former calling, and is now engaged in farming. In politics he is a democrat. For many years he has been a member of the Presbyterian Church and is now favoring it with his support of the local body of that denomination. John W. Barkley was married to Miss Eliza Electra Smith, born at Bowling Green, Kentucky, in 1859, and they became the parents of the following children: Congressman Barkley, who is the eldest; Clarence, who died in 1900, when he was twenty years old; George F., who is a conductor on the Illinois Central Railroad, lives at Memphis, Tennessee; Harry S., who was killed in 1920 when he was eighteen years old, was a clerk in a mercantile establishment at Paducah; Ima, who married Oscar Denker, of Paducah, where he has large mercantile interests; Ada, who died when twenty-five years of age, married John Allen, now manager for the American Express Company at Ashland, Kentucky; John, who is a traveling salesman, resides at Paducah; and Bernice, who married William Thelma, a clerk in a hardware store at Paducah.

Beginning up in Graves County, Congressman Barkley attended its schools, and later Marvin College at Clinton, Kentucky, from which he was graduated in 1897 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. During 1897 and 1898 he was a student of Emory College at Oxford, Georgia, and during that time Bishop Warren A.
Camberly was its president. Both of these institutions are Methodist Episcopal colleges. Mr. Barkley securred his legal training at the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, Virginia, which he left in 1902. While at Emory College he became a member of Delta Tau Delta, a Greek Letter fraternity.

In 1901 Mr. Barkley had been admitted to the bar of the State of Kentucky, having read law under Hon. Charles K. Wheeler, ex-Congressman, and Judge W. S. Bishop, Circuit Judge of McCracken County for many years. After he had completed and gained his practice of his profession in 1901. That same year he was appointed official reporter of the Circuit Court of McCracken County, and while holding that position attended the University of Virginia. He held this position for four years and resigned it to become candidate for the office of prosecuting attorney of McCracken County, to which he was elected in the fall of 1905, by a large majority, and took office in January, 1906, for a term of four years. The record he made in this office for fearlessness and unflinching uprightness, gained him the nomination, without opposition, in the fall of 1909, for the office of county judge, to which he was elected, and he entered upon its duties in January, 1910, for a term of four years. After serving with dignified capability until February, 1913, he was re-elected and has been elected a representative from the First Congressional District of Kentucky. Elected to the office in November, he assumed the responsibilities, and discharged them so satisfactorily, that he has since been returned to Congress, by increased majorities. It has been the privilege of Congressman Barkley to serve his county during all of the war period, and he has continued a steadfast supporter of all the measures recommended by President Wilson during his administrations, including the Federal Reserve Act, the Farm Loan Act, Anti-Trust laws, and the laws proposed or enacted generally for the benefit of labor and agriculture, as well as those for the encouragement of commercial interests of the country. He is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, following in his religion, as he does in his politics, the example set him by his father, in earnestness in both.

Congressman Barkley is a well-known figure in many of the fraternal, social and commercial organizations of Paducah, and belongs to Mangum Lodge No. 21, I. O. O. F.; Jersey Camp No. 10; W. O. W. of which he is past high consul of the State of Kentucky; Paducah Lodge No. 217, B. P. O. E., the Paducah Board of Managers of the First National Bank, the Masonic Benevolent and Provident and Fraternal Association. Professionally he belongs to the County and State Bar associations.

On June 23, 1903, Congressman Barkley was united in marriage at Tiptonville, Tennessee, to Miss Dorothy Brower, a daughter of Charles and Laura (Thomas) Brower, residents of Paducah. Mr. Brower is a traveling salesman. Mrs. Barkley was graduated from the Paducah High School, and is a charming lady of great refinement and culture, who has been a valued adjunct to Washington society. The children of Congressman and Mrs. Barkley are as follows: David Murrell, who was born on February 11, 1906; Marian Frances, who was born June 14, 1909; and Laura Louise, who was born October 28, 1910.

Congressman Barkley entered the halls of Congress from a judicial atmosphere, and, although his duties were of an entirely different character, he found that the very qualities which had gained him such distinction on the bench, enabled him to weigh carefully each measure and to serve well and acceptably his constituents. In fact ever since he was first honored with public office it has been the paramount purpose, the highest ambition of this distinguished son of Kentucky to be a real representative of the people who sent him to Washington, and not the advocate of a few. His ability, natural and acquired, sound judgment and forcefulness, his originality of thought, his independence of action, and his fearlessness in defending his position and advocating the principles for which he has stood, have won alike the confidence, the admiration, and the respect of both his political friends and foes.

Benjamin Franklin Briggs is a veteran printer, who has spent many years "at the case" as proprietor of an establishment of his own, as publisher of newspapers, and for a half a century of service is still active as proprietor of a commercial printing establishment at Mayfield.

Mr. Briggs, who is of Scotch-Irish descent, and of a colonial family in Virginia, was born at Gallatin, Sumner County, Tennessee, August 27, 1848. His father William M. Briggs was born at Bardstown, Kentucky, in 1814, and as a youth moved to Gallatin, Tennessee, where he was married. He spent some years as a farmer in Sumner County, was a dry goods merchant at Nashville, Tennessee, but on January 1, 1891, removed to Anna, Illinois, where he continued his career as a merchant until his death in 1876. He cast his first vote as a Whig and later was a democrat. William M. Briggs married Mrs. Julia (Watwood) Jackson who was born in Tennessee in 1819 and died at Gallatin in 1854. By his first marriage he had three sons, Charles and James, both now deceased. By her second marriage she was the mother of seven children: William F., a photographer who died in Illinois; George W., who enlisted in the Confederate Army and was killed at Marietta, Georgia; Margaret and Martha, neither of whom married, the former dying at the age of thirty and the latter at twenty-five; Sarah who never married and died at the age of seventeen. Anna who died when twenty-three years of age; and Benjamin Franklin, the youngest, who prophetically was given the name of America's famous printer-statesman. William M. Briggs married his second wife Sarah S. Reeves, who was born in Todd County, Kentucky, in 1825 and died at Dongola, Illinois, in 1895. She became the mother of two children, Herbert and Susie. Susie died at Dongola, in 1900, the wife of W. S. Meisenheimer, who was a miller by trade.

Benjamin Franklin Briggs acquired his early education in the public schools of Nashville, but from the age of fifteen has made his own way in the world. He worked as a clerk in a store at Jonesboro, Illinois, until 1866, in which year he came to Mayfield. In 1873 he established the Banner of Temperance and in 1875 merged that paper and its plant with the Mayfield Monitor and continued the publication of the paper and the management of the general office until 1904. Since that year he has given all his time to printing exclusively and has an office with all the modern facilities and with equipment that makes it a perfect medium of printing service. He does a large amount of business not only for Graves County but all the surrounding counties. His business is at 103 West Broadway.

Mr. Briggs served several years as secretary of the Democratic County Central Committee, was city clerk of Mayfield, and has readily joined in every public spirited movement in that community during the past half century. He is an active member, secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Church and secretary of the Sunday School and is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Knights of Honor.

He and his family reside on West Water Street. He married at Mayfield in 1883 Miss Mary Rives, daughter of John W. and Elizabeth (Coats) Rives, now deceased. Her father was a tobacco dealer. Mr. Briggs has one daughter, Nell, wife of Walter F. Wright, a tobacco merchant of Mayfield.

George Alfred Jett. A career in which have been included the working out of well-merited success and the expression of sound and constructive citizenship is that of George Alfred Jett, who has resided on his present farm at Newman, Daviess County, for more than a quarter of a century. Mr. Jett was born in Daviess County, in May 14, 1866, a son of Richard L. and Margaret (Carter) Jett.

Willa Jett, the great-grandfather of George Alfred Jett, was born in Virginia, and was a soldier of the Revolutionary War. He married Rebecca Jett, who was a daughter of John Newfield, a prominent citizen of Yorktown. He married Rachael Cole, and their two sons Richard Cole and Thomas Jett, came to Kentucky, the latter locating at Frankfort. Richard Cole Jett was born in Virginia, September 7, 1785, and on coming to Kentucky located in Daviess County, where at one time he was sheriff, and where his death occurred March 9, 1862. He married Susan A. Miller, and among their children was Richard L. Jett, who was born in Kentucky, November 15, 1826, and died January 25, 1907. For some years Richard L. Jett followed merchandising at Owensboro, but in later years turned his attention to farming, on a property nine miles east of Owensboro, where his industry and good management gained him substantial and well-merited success. He and his wife, Margaret (Carter) Jett, were the parents of three children: Nina, who is deceased; George Alfred, better known as "Babe," and Alfred, born at Owensboro.

George A. Jett was a child when taken by his parents to the farm nine miles east of Owensboro, and while being reared in that community secured his early education in the rural schools. Later he pursued a course at the West Kentucky College, South Carrollton, and on leaving that institution embarked in farming on his own account. This vocation he has always followed, and since 1894 has resided on his present property at Newman, a highly developed tract of land on which he has modern buildings, including a comfortable and attractive residence and substantial buildings for the housing of his stock, grain and implements. Fraternally Mr. Jett is a Master Mason and a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. His political tendencies make him a democrat. His career has been one in which he has dealt fairly with all who have had transactions with him, and in which he has fully discharged the duties of good citizenship, and as a result he is held in high esteem in his community.

On August 18, 1886, Mr. Jett married Artie Schenck, a daughter of John W. and Mary (Williams) Schenck, her father having been a prominent farmer of Daviess County where Mrs. Jett was born. Her mother came of an old and prominent family of Jefferson County, Kentucky, and was a daughter of Abram R. and Huldah (Jennex) Williams, who came from the Mexican war from Jefferson County. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Jett: Tanner Winston, a lawyer by profession, at present city prosecutor at Owensboro; Margaret; Catherine, who died at the age of nineteen years; and Nina John. The daughters Margaret and Nina John went to Washington, District of Columbia, during the World War period, the latter serving as a private in the United States Army. The former is a son of Richard and Elizabeth (Swindler) Schenck, both of whom were natives of Culpeper County, Virginia, of German lineage. Mr. and Mrs. Jett are Baptists, and their children were reared in that faith.

DONALD L. COULTER. Among the representative coal operators in Kentucky as elsewhere, with large interests at stake and immense capital invested, there is constant rivalry to secure the services of reliable, experienced coal men, great preference being shown for those who have grown up in the business. On every side, perhaps, are those who have worked in coal all their lives, but these do not always measure up to the excellence demanded by such big business enterprises as the Elkhorn Coal Corporation, whose able superintendent at Wheelwright, Kentucky, is Donald L. Coulter, a practical mining engineer, who has been in the coal industry ever since leaving college.

Donald L. Coulter was born in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, December 16, 1882, and is a son of James Mifflin and Nina (Douglas) Coulter, natives of Georgia, the latter being a daughter of Judge John Douglas of the Supreme Court of Georgia. The father of Mr. Coulter was connected with the Cumberland Coal Company, with offices at Baltimore, for a protracted period.

James Mifflin Coulter was a direct descendant of John Mifflin who held a high commission during the Revolutionary War and whose picture hangs in the Capitol with others in the capital at Annapolis, Maryland. Two nephews of James M. Coulter were Col. Stewart Syming of Baltimore, prominent in circles of business and wealth, and Maj. John Mifflin Hood for many years president of the Western Maryland Railroad and one of its heaviest stockholders. On the maternal side Mr. Coulter's mother was for several years president of the Daughters of the American Confederacy and her brother, Capt. Robert (Bob) Douglas, also of Atlanta, was a veteran of the Civil war.

Mr. Coulter's educational training was received in the public schools of Baltimore, and after completing the high school course, he became a student in the Baltimore City College, where he continued his studies for two years. Mr. Coulter then took the important step between boyhood and manhood, leaving home to make his own way in the world and carve out a career for himself. As an employee of the Cumberland Coal Company, he went to Douglas, West Virginia, where he filled the position of shipping clerk for two years, then was promoted to the engineering department of the same company, and by the time he had spent two more years there, he had become so interested that he determined to begin at the bottom and learn the entire mining business thoroughly, both practically and technically. After five years of experience, he was made assistant mine foreman and served as such for two years, for five years following being mine foreman, during all this time being with the Cumberland Coal Company.

In the meanwhile Mr. Coulter's reputation has spread through the different coal fields and many offers of substantial positions were tendered him. He finally accepted the offer of the Berwin-White Coal Company at Berwin, West Virginia, and remained with that company for three years as assistant superintendent, and for four years as superintendent, when he became general manager of the Elk Horn Coal Company, the corporation of all their properties at Fleming, Wayland and Wheelwright, Kentucky. Six months later he accepted his present position as superintendent of the Elkhorn mines at Wheelwright. In his special line of work he has established a reputation of practical knowledge and trustworthiness that is something to be proud of. He has a wide acquaintance both among miners and mangers and his judgment is often consulted in reference to matters pertaining to the great coal industry.

At Parsons, Tucker County, West Virginia, June 6, 1904, Mr. Coulter was married to Miss Blanch May Jenkins, who is a daughter of George and Sarah Jenkins, natives of England. Mr. Jenkins was a coal man all his life, first in England and after coming to the United States, he was with the Davis Coal & Coke Company, in West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Coulter have two sons: James Jenkins and John Park, aged respectively, three teen and eleven years. Mrs. Coulter is a member of the Episcopal Church, but Mr. Coulter was reared in the Presbyterian faith. He has always been interested in wholesome athletic sports such as baseball and football, and while in college gained some local notoriety playing first base on the Baltimore City College team. He has never been unfeeling in politics and has never accepted any political office, but he has always been a faithful citizen, wherever he has lived, and has lent his influence to the support of law and order. During the World's war, his work in seeing that the country's coal output in his section, was just as important as if he had been fighting in a foreign trench, and additionally he devoted time, effort and means to further every local patriotic movement. Mr. Coulter is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

HON. JOHN W. SWOPE, representative from the Seventy-fourth District, Clark County, in the Kentucky State Legislature, and one of the leading and influential stock raisers and farmers of the Winchester community, has been identified long with the agricultural interests of his section, and more recently connected with public affairs, in which he has contributed and lent his influence. Mr. Swope is a native of this region, born in the eastern part of Clark County, at Abbott's old mill, July 24, 1850, his parents being Marcus D. and Nancy (Abbott) Swope.

Marcus D. Swope was born in Estill (now Powell) County, Kentucky, in 1828, a son of William and Nancy (Boswell) Swope, who located in Montgomery County, Virginia. On coming to this state, Joseph Swope settled in Montgomery County, but in later life went to Indiana, where he died at the home of a daughter, at the remarkable age of 104 years. He had three sons: William, who settled in Estill County and died at the age of eighty-eight years within the memory of his grandson, John W.; Henry, who settled at Stanton; and Joseph, who located in Fort Kentucky County. Thomas Swope, the wealthy Kansas Citian, whose poisoning by Dr. B. Clark Hyde was a recent remarkable criminal incident, belonged to the same family.

Marcus D. Swope spent his life in Clark County, where he operated the old Abbott mill for many years and died at the age of eighty-five, being laid to rest in the old Catholic burying ground in the town of Winchester. Mr. Swope married two times. His first marriage was to Nancy Abbott, who died at the age of forty-two years. She was a daughter of Boswell D. and Eveline (Rankin) Abbott, the latter being a daughter of John Rankin, a pioneer of the eastern part of Clark County, whose large family were typical mountaineer people of that locality. Boswell D. Abbott was born in Woodford County, Kentucky, but was a pioneer into Clark County, where he built Abbott's mill, one of the primitive wooden cog-wheel mills of the early days. The flour buhrs were imported, but the corn buhrs were worked out by Mr. Abbott on his property, and this mill was operated up to within the last twenty years. He also had a large still house, dating previous to 1850 and probably built about the time of the birth of his daughter Nancy, 1839. He was operated most of the time after he was about twenty-five years of age, and in it were used the products of Mr. Abbott's large farm, upon which he raised principally flax and corn. He died at the age of forty-seven years, but the business was continued by the family and a brother of John W. Swope, Charles Swope, still owns the homestead. Marcus D. and Nancy (Abbott) Swope were the parents of seven children: John W.; Joseph, who attended the State University, Lebanon, then attended school, took a law course, was admitted to practice at Winchester, and died three months later of typhoid fever; Thomas, who is engaged in farming at Pueblo, Colorado; Robert B., a horseman of Winchester; James, a mechanic, who died at the age of twenty-eight years; Charley, who owns the old home but is living in retirement at Winchester; and Mary, who married W. F. Barnett, a mechanic, and died at Winchester. For his second wife, Marcus D. Swope married a widow, Mrs. Sally Vivian Stewart, who died before his demise, at an advanced age.

John W. Swope lived just across the Powell County line, the old home being located practically on that line, and received his education in the public school after leaving which he took up farming. He was married at the age of twenty-four years to Mollie B. Tuttle, of the same precinct, Good, and died twenty years later. Following his marriage, Mr. Swope resided on his farm in the eastern part of the county, being extensively engaged in operations as a farmer and live stock grower. After the death of his wife, he married her younger sister, Talitha M. Tuttle, and they continued to reside on the farm until recently when they moved to Winchester, although Mr. Swope still owns his farm.

Mr. Swope has served as a member of the Fiscal Court, made up of seven members representing seventeen precincts, to equalize assessments, and in 1917 was elected as a dry democrat to the Kentucky State legislature, talking faith and fighting sin as they are known. He was married about 1898 as chairman of the Soldiers' Home Committee, he was instrumental in securing the passage of a bill increasing the allowances of all old veterans from $10 to $15, it being set at $12 by the Senate and thus passed. During that session statewide prohibition became effective. Thirty-five years before, Mr. Swope's first vote had been cast in favor of prohibiting whiskey from being sold in the precinct. His first term in the Legislature was one which gave much satisfaction to his constituents, and he was elected again to office for the session of 1919. His party was in the minority and he received no chairmanships, but served efficiently in the capacity of member of a number of committees and was active in good roads legislation. Disgusted at seeing the ignorant and colored women of all races, but having intelligent and educated women were denied the right of franchise, he became a warm supporter of women's suffrage. He secured the passage of three of his five bills in the House, but all were held up in the Senate. One of these was to extend the time to pay taxes from the 1st to the 31st, to accommodate the common school, especially the tobacco tenants. Another was to regulate the trading of transitory peddler in the highways; and a third was that indigent pupils be supplied with text-books free in the public schools, the teachers and trustees to determine who was worthy of such help.

Mr. Swope is the father of six children: Zora C., the wife of K. P. Hadden, on the old home farm near Indian Fields; James C., residing near the old home place; Thomas, Mark, proprietor of an automobile garage at Winchester; John Clark, twin of the foregoing, proprietor of a garage at Mount Sterling, this state; Nancy, a traveling saleswoman with headquarters at Pueblo, Colorado; and Roger H., interested in the garage business at Winchester.

Representative Swope was a delegate to the Peace Conference at Philadelphia appointed by Governor McCreary and became enthusiastic therefor, being a great admirer of the Peace League and of former President Taft. He was reared in the old Baptist faith and belongs to the Missionary Baptist Church, in which he has been a deacon for thirty years. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being a charter member of the lodge at Shol deville. For a period of twelve years Mr. Swope was superintendent of the Baptist Sunday School. He is the owner of the block known as the Swope Garage, a brick structure which he built at Winchester.

Jesse Robson Johnson. No class of men are more independent than the agriculturalists, especially in these days when telephones and automobiles connect with centers of industry and culture, farms of outlying districts and afford opportunities for development and social intercourse as well as methods of speedily transacting business. One of the men of Daviess County who has won his place among the successful farmers of Kentucky, is Jesse Robson Johnson.

He was born in Ohio County, Kentucky, March 7, 1862, a son of Thomas L. and Margaret (Murray) Johnson. Thomas L. Johnson was born in Ohio County, Kentucky, July 25, 1834, a son of James and Lucinda (Taylor) Johnson, who were also natives of Ohio County. On January 19, 1858, Thomas L. Johnson, and Margaret Murray were married. She was born near Bloomfield, Nelson County, Kentucky, September 30, 1836, and died at Owensboro, April 11, 1911. Mrs. Johnson was a daughter of James Murray, who lived and died in Nelson County, Kentucky. Both Mr. and Mrs. Johnson were earnest in the work of the local Church. They had the following children born to them: Alverta, Lizzie, Jesse Robson, James Murray, Allen, Blanche Lou, and Clarence B., the last three deceased, and Nina.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Johnson settled on a farm in Ohio County, Kentucky, near the Daviess County line. Here Mr. Johnson was engaged in farming, and prospered. Later he became a tobacco miller at Whitesville. In time he moved his business to Owensboro, but subsequently went back to Ohio County. Once more he became a resident of Owensboro, and there he died March 9, 1903.

Jesse Robson Johnson was reared on his father's farm and with the exception of fifteen years when he was in business at Owensboro, he has been entirely occupied with agricultural matters. About 1905 he bought his present valuable farm, near Owensboro, and he has made many improvements upon it, and filled his leisure days with the home duties of his wife. He has a large residence and business. The improvements which he has made show the owner takes a pride in having everything in fine order. Since buying this farm he has made many improvements upon it, and it would be difficult to find one in a more highly developed state. Both Mr. and Miss Johnson are held in high esteem in the neighborhood where they have lived for so many years. Their interests are all centered here, and they take pleasure in supporting local movements, and enterprises, and are rightly numbered among the leading people of their township.

PERRY PARRIGIN, M. D. A few months after his return from abroad as an army surgeon Doctor Parrigin located for practice at Monticello, Kentucky, and his early work here has been attended with results that might be expected of a highly trained physician and surgeon, who spent two years in the great post-graduate university of the Army Medical Corps both at home and abroad.

Doctor Parrigin is a native of this section of Kentucky, grandson of Joseph Parrigin and son of A. B. Parrigin, who lives at Mill Springs in Wayne County. A. B. Parrigin was born in Wallace, Virginia, February 8, 1852, and was eleven years of age when his parents moved to Clinton County, Kentucky, where he was reared and married. In early life he taught school, was a farmer, a number of years a leading merchant at Albany, Kentucky, and since 1904 has lived at Mill Springs, where he was a farmer, merchant, and also held the office of postmaster until he retired in 1919. For two terms he was sheriff of Clinton County.

He is a republican and a member of the Christian Church and the Masonic fraternity. The mother of Doctor Parrigin was Vie Isabelle Snow, who was born at Albany, Kentucky, September 3, 1864. They became the parents of five children: Laura B., who died at Asheville, North Carolina; Lavinia J., married Dr. H. R. Hacker, wife of John Gibbons, now a building contractor at Fort Lauderdale, Florida; Lyman J., an oil contractor and oil producer at Paintsville, Kentucky; Frank S., a civil engineer at Lexington, Kentucky; Ethel Glee, wife of Dr. W. Hudleston, a physician and surgeon at Liberal, Kansas; Lennie Ann, wife of Oliver Jenkins, an oil contractor and producer at Paintsville; Perry; Homer Parks, who is a mechanical engineer connected with the great oil company known as the Texas Company, with home at Port Arthur, Texas, and Anita B., who was educated at Mount Holyoke in Massachusetts.

Dr. Perry Parrigin was born at Albany in Clinton County, Kentucky, January 3, 1890, and attended public schools there until he was fourteen. He spent three years in public school at Mill Springs, and completed the eighth and ninth grades at Monticello. He had a thorough literary education preparatory to his medical course, spending four years in Georgetown College, from which he graduated in 1916, with the degree Associate in Arts. This was followed by a four years' course in medicine at the University of Louisville, where he graduated M. D. in 1916. He is a member of the Phi Chi college fraternity. For fourteen months he was an interne in the Good Samaritan Hospital at Lexington, and then took the examination for the Medical Corps and on August 2, 1917, was commissioned first lieutenant. His first assignment of duty was at Port Oglethorpe, Georgia, where he remained five months, then moved to Vicksburg, Mississippi, July 5, 1918, embarked for overseas, landing at Glasgow, Scotland. From July, 1918, until February, 1919, his work was with Base Hospital No. 40 at Salisbury Court, Hants, England. During August and September he was assigned to the British in London, England, and while there assisted the king's surgeon with three operations. Early in 1919 he was sent to France, spending three weeks at Savenay, two weeks at Meves, and then had the interesting good fortune of being assigned as one of the Medical Corps to the inter-allied commission at Berlin, but remained in the capital city of Germany only three days and three nights. For 1/2 months following he was on duty at a Russian prison camp at Ulm, Germany, and was then ordered to report to Brest for return. He was discharged at Camp Taylor, August 22, 1919, having been commissioned a captain while in France.

Dr. Parrigin opened his offices at Monticello in December, 1919, and has since been busily working in a general medical and surgical practice. He owns his modern residence and offices on Michigan Avenue, and is a member in good standing of the County, State, Southern and American Medical Associations. He is a republican and belongs to the Christian Church. April 7, 1920, at Sonora, Kentucky, Doctor Parrigin married Miss Mary Henrietta Akers, daughter of Robert Lee and Nannie (Stamp) Akers, residents of Sonora, where her father is a farmer. Mrs. Parrigin is a graduate of the arts and expression course at Georgetown College in Kentucky.

JOHN R. PRYOR, M. D. One of the ablest members of the medical fraternity of Mayfield Doctor Pryor was in the army service over a year, part of the time in France, and his growing experience and abilities are rapidly distinguishing him as a fine surgeon.

Doctor Pryor was born in Graves County November 16, 1889. He represents the old and prominent family of that name in Western Kentucky and is of English descent, his paternal ancestors having settled in Virginia in colonial times. His great-grandfather James Pryor was a native of Virginia but came to Western Kentucky as a pioneer and acquired several sections of land in Graves County. The Town of Pryorsburg in Graves County was named for his brother, Jonathan. Doctor Pryor died at a very early age.

The great-grandfather of Doctor Pryor was Richard Pryor, born in Graves County in 1822, and died here in 1915. He was one of the leading farmers of the county for many years and politically a staunch democrat. He married Elizabeth W. Janes, who was born in 1825 and died in 1898, being a lifelong resident of Graves County.

A. J. Pryor, father of Doctor Pryor, was born in Graves County in 1832, and also spent his life in practically one community, his chief business being farming and stock raising. In 1910 he retired to Mayfield where he died in 1916. He was a democrat, and for many years identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife was Mattie Drake, who was born in Graves County in 1839 and is still living at Mayfield. She was the mother of two sons, Frank and John R., the former a tobacco rehandler with the firm of J. L. Sherrell & Company of Mayfield.

Doctor Pryor grew up on a farm, attended rural schools, graduated from the West Kentucky College at Mayfield in 1908, and took his medical work in the University of Louisville, where he was graduated M. D. in 1912. He did not begin active practice until he had qualified himself by an unusual range of experience in this country and abroad. For two years he was an intern in the New York Polyclinic Hospital, and then went to Europe and attended clinics in Paris, London, Brussels and Amsterdam, this period of his preparation being interrupted by the outbreak of the World War, which interfered with his work in the United States. In September, 1914, he began practice at Mayfield, and from 1917 to 1919 he was engaged in the Medical Reserve Corps, being first sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, and later transferred on duty to various camps in the United States. In July 6, 1918, he embarked for overseas, and for seven months was stationed at Base Hospital No. 22 near Bordeaux. He held the rank of lieutenant in the Medical Corps, and was honorably discharged March 8, 1919.

James T. DeBord, while his ancestors for several generations lived in Kentucky James T. S. DeBord was born in Mayfield, Kentucky, July 30, 1872. He is of French ancestry, the family having come from France to North Carolina in colonial times. His great-grandfather was Gideon DeBord and his grandfather Simpson DeBord was born at West Liberty, Kentucky, and spent all his life in that community as a farmer. Simpson DeBord married a sister of John P. Salyers, a noted Kentucky lawyer and democrat, who served as a delegate to the National Convention of the party when Grover Cleveland was first nominated for the presidency. Mr. Salyers was killed in the Civil War by Federal raiders during the Civil War. The Federals had made two raids on his farm in Morgan County and the third time he determined to withstand them, and killed as many as possible before he fell a victim himself.

Stephen DeBord, father of the Mayfield lawyer, was born in West Liberty in Morgan County in 1828 and in 1861 at the age of fifteen enlisted as a Confederate soldier in a regiment of Kentucky infantry under Gen. Humphrey Marshall. He and others of the regiment were captured and imprisoned at Rock Island, Illinois.

There they were offered freedom if they would serve on the Federal side, but to a man they refused. Then on being offered freedom if they would enlist to fight the Indians on the western frontier they did so, and after the close of the Indian campaign Stephen DeBord returned to West Liberty and was married. Soon afterward he removed to Gentryville, Missouri, and became a farmer and stock raiser in that noted livestock district. Since 1893 he has lived at Albany, Missouri, engaged in the general insurance business. He held two terms as a member of the Board of Police for that city and in his earlier years was deputy sheriff. He is a very active member of the Missionary Baptist Church and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Stephen DeBord married Rebecca Fugett, who was born at West Liberty, Kentucky, in 1846. They had four children; W. R., in the Government mail service at St. Joseph, Missouri; James T. S.; Stephen, Jr., who was an electrician and was killed by electric current at Rock Island, Illinois, at the age of thirty-four; and Francis M., who died in infancy.

James T. S. DeBord spent his early life on his father's farm in Gentry County, Missouri, attended country schools, is a graduate of the Albany High School with the class of 1895, and for two and a half years was a student in the Northwest Missouri College, now University of Northwest Missouri. After his early experiences he was a teacher in the rural schools for three years and at the same time was diligently pursuing a course in law. Mr. DeBord was admitted to the bar in 1899, and was soon enjoying a good practice. He was nominated for the office of probate judge of Gentry County on the democratic ticket and at election he received the largest vote any candidate for a county office had ever received up to that time. He gave a highly efficient service as probate judge for four years, his term expiring January 1, 1906. In 1907 Judge DeBord removed to Webb City, in Southwestern Missouri, and was engaged in practice until the panic of that year. He then went on South to Beaumont, Texas, where that city was the center of the Texas oil industry. He and himself was interested in oil at Beaumont and at Shreveport, Louisiana, until 1913.

In June, 1913, he came to Mayfield and opened a set of abstract of title books. With the exception of the year 1914-15 which he spent in Missouri and Oklahoma. He has been at Mayfield ever since, and has an extensive business as a general lawyer and as an examiner of abstracts of titles. His offices are on South Seventh Street on the west side of the public square.

Mr. DeBord was connected for many years with the Mayfield including a modern home on East Broadway.

He continues his stanch allegiance with the democratic party and is affiliated with Albany Lodge No. 175, of the Odd Fellows in his former Missouri home town. He also belongs to Albany Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America. In 1905 at Bedford, Iowa, he married Miss Myrtle E. Van Reenen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Van Reenen of Van Buren, Iowa, and their home is in Bedford, where her father is a retired farmer and coal merchant.

Charlton A. Clay. Probably the finest equipped and most beautiful country place between Paris and Winchester is the Marchmont Stock Farm, whose proprietor is Charlton A. Clay. Marchmont was for many years the home of his father the late James E. Clay who was the son of Samuel and Nancy T. (Wornall) Clay and this brief statement is perhaps all that is necessary to indicate the connection of this branch with the great Clay family of Kentucky.

James E. Clay was born in Bourbon County September 25, 1850, and died July 15, 1910. He was a splendid type of the Kentucky gentleman, a thorough business executive who devoted his time and energies to the development of an extensive landed property, at one time comprising about six thousand acres. For forty years he lived at Marchmont, two miles southeast of Paris, and from his

Their children were: Belle, widow of J. B. Haldy of Torch City; Samuel who was born February 15, 1875, lives at Cane Ridge and is a present county commissioner; Nancy, wife of Arthur B. Hancock and Charlton Alexander.

Charlton A. Clay was born November 15, 1809, and has always lived at the old home and exhibits all the talents of his family for agriculture and stock raising. The Marchmont Stock Farm comprises about a thousand acres of land. It is said that it was originally to be a breeding center for thoroughbred horses, and he has also been a very successful stock feeder. About sixty acres annually are devoted to the tobacco crop. The fine old home at Marchmont was completed in 1865 by Samuel Clay, grandfather of the present proprietor. Charlton A. Clay, who has never married, was educated in the Paris Academy, the Millersburg Military Institute, and the Phillips-Exeter Academy of New Hampshire.

Joseph L. Brown. Because of the extent and quality of his usefulness, his commercial soundness and acumen, his public spirit, integrity and nearness to the fundamental principles of citizenship, Joseph L. Brown affords an encouraging example of success gained through honorable methods. During a long, diversified and always successful career, he has followed farming and banking, and is still the owner of a large and profitable property in Clark County, while discharging capably the duties of president of the Peoples State Bank and Trust Company, at Winchester.

Mr. Brown was born four miles southwest of Winchester, Clark County, Kentucky, October 12, 1843, a son of Francis G. and Frances J. (Goodwin) Brown. His father was born near Culpeper Court House, Virginia, in 1804, and when a young man had started with his family to Green County, Kentucky, afterwards settled in Clark County. His wife was Elizabeth (Graves) Goodwin, she being about eighteen years of age at the time of their marriage. Lloyd K. Goodwin owned 2,400 acres, of which 800 acres were in the home farm, and at his death left his widow $75,000, after having assisted each of ten children to the acquirement of a nice property. But one of his children, Mrs. Lucinda Victoria Hildreth, is living, she being the widow of Thomas Hildreth, the manager of the farm when Mr. Goodwin died. His widow died eighty-six years of age and his wife at about the same age although ten years later. Mrs. Brown inherited from her father a part of the old Goodwin estate, which later passed to her children. Soon after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Brown settled in Clark County on the property on which their son Joseph L. was born and there the remaining years of their lives, the father dying at the age of fifty-four years, in 1883, and the mother some twenty years later. Francis G. Brown had owned about 600 acres, from which his widow later paid off the indebtedness, and had added to his original home, which was a log-boarded structure. The farm is still in the family, being owned by the widow of Mr. Brown's son Russell. There were seven children in the family: A. Alexander; Lucinda, Mrs. Russell Dewitt, wife of Mr. Dewitt; Miss L.; Mary Hardena, the widow of Lewis Holliday, still residing at her home near the old Brown place; James Thomas, a farmer of near Clay, who died in 1918, leaving a widow who is now residing with a daughter, Mrs. Frances Proctor, of Clark County; Benjamin, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in Madison County; Mr. Russell, who was with Joseph L. Brown in the ownership of the old home place for fifteen years, engaged in general farming, and with his brother owned some 400 acres, which was finally divided, Russell taking the old homestead, upon which he died, and which is now owned by his widow, a resident of Winchester; and Nancy Frances, who married Lloyd Thompson and at this time is a resident of Saline County, Missouri.

Joseph L. Brown was educated in the public schools of Clark County and secured his present farm on the Lexington pike, four miles north of Winchester, along with his wife's other property. He was united in marriage in 1886 with Mary B. Proctor, a daughter of George Washington Proctor, who at that time was living two miles from Winchester on the Lexington pike, the old home being at Thompson Station, Clark County, the Asa Barrer home. This was formerly the old Home of Van Meter, only a mile distance. He has bought several old Weathers tracts, bought by Colby Quisenberry, who had started the erection of the present residence in 1859 and had burned the brick for the dwelling on the farm. He had inherited 600 acres and the house was erected in a way suitable to an estate of that size, but the expense of building during the midst of war conditions incurred such an expenditure and consequent indebtedness that Quisenberry lost the entire property. The old home is an example of Kentucky Blue Grass country homes. When Joseph L. Brown acquired this farm it consisted of 680 acres, to which he subsequently added 150 acres on the opposite side of the Lexington pike, making 830 acres there. He also has 470 acres near the old Brown home. The present farm was all bought by his wife's interest in the estate. A general farmer, Mr. Brown was also a thoroughbred horseman. When he has bred trotting horses, he has had them trained, and has followed the race courses for forty years. One of his animals sold for $6,500, which, with his year's earnings, brought in over $60,000. Mr. Brown has appreciated horses all of his life and has produced several noted animals. When he was only fourteen years of age he purchased for his mother a well-bred mare, which he accepted on a debt, and, breeding it to a particular trotting stallion, pronounced Russell, who was one-year-old won a stake for colts and was sold for $1,000. Later this animal became the property of General Custer and won the $20,000 stakes, standing in the same class as the noted 'Dexter' and 'Goldsmith Maid.'

At the time of its organization, Mr. Brown was made president of the Peoples State Bank and Trust Company of Winchester, a position which he has retained to the present time and in which capacity he has directed the policy of the bank. He has been the principal in company with his brother-in-law, G. M. Proctor, he built in 1904 the Brown-Proctoria Hotel at Winchester, which they still own, but in the conduct of which they have always depended upon the services of a manager. Mr. Brown was a staunch democrat up to the time of the candidacy of William Jennings Bryan. He has always favored the democratic party in his support, but is not himself an office seeker.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown are the parents of two children: Alice, the wife of J. O. Critcher, who is an agriculturalist in Clark County; and Margaret, the wife of Bronson McCord, of Winchester, manager of the home farm, who has two children, Joseph Brown and Mary Alice.

Louise I. Igleheart. To his chosen profession as a lawyer, Mr. Igleheart has devoted his time and abilities to the cultivating of those many other interests that naturally intrude upon a legal career and has utilized, for a gratifying degree his ambition to be known as a successful and able lawyer.

Mr. Igleheart, who has been identified with the Owensboro bar since he began practice, is a native of Kentucky, and was born June 8, 1829, on the same farm where his father was born in Daviess County. He is of the direct line of both natives of Daviess County. The Burnes family is an old and prominent one in Daviess County. William D. Igleheart, grandfather of the Owensboro lawyer, was born and reared in Maryland, of Holland Dutch descent, his first ancestor coming from Holland and settling at Baltimore. William D. Igleheart was one of four brothers who crossed the Alleghenies, two settling in Kentucky and two in Indiana. William D. Igleheart acquired land in Daviess County, Kentucky, in 1800, and spent the rest of his life on that farm, which descended to his son John, who cultivated its acres and reared his children in this environment.

Louise I. Igleheart has always been grateful for the fact that his early environment was in the country. On the home farm he learned the lessons of earnest endewa Collier. Since then he has given all his time and energies to his profession and has formed no permanent alliance with business or politics.

He is a democrat voter, interested in public questions and issues. He is a Royal Arch Mason, a Knight of Pythias and an Elk. In 1907 he married Miss Susan Barnhill of Daviess County, daughter of Dr. J. W. Barnhill.

Cassius M. Clay, who died November 27, 1873, was distinguished both in politics and the agricultural affairs of Bourbon County and of the state, and was a son of Brutus J. Clay of Bourbon County and a grandson of Gen. Green Clay of Madison County, Kentucky, who married Sally Lewis.

Gen. Green Clay figured extensively in both military and political affairs in Kentucky in his day. Kentucky, which had not then become a state, chose him a delegate to the Virginia convention which ratified the Federal Constitution. He took an active part in the War of 1812 and commanded 2000 Kentucky troops sent to raise the siege of Fort Meigs. He was father of three sons and four daughters, and these children by that marriage lent additional distinction to the reputation of one of the oldest and most prominent families of Kentucky.

Concerning Brutus J. Clay much is said elsewhere. He achieved a national reputation as a farmer, a breeder of blooded short-horn cattle and other stock, was for many years president of the Agricultural Fair of Bourbon County, and represented his home district in Congress. He is honored by the city of Frankfort in a praise-worthy manner not only as a physician and surgeon but in varied lines of civic effort calculated to advance the welfare of the community. Doctor Gamblin is a physician of very high standing, and after many years of work his practice is now largely as a consulting physician and surgeon.

Doctor Gamblin was born in Cumberland County, Kentucky, May 7, 1827. He is of Scotch ancestry. His grandparents were Lorenzo and Polly (Smith) Gamblin, both natives of Scotland. His grandfather was born in 1800 and his grandmother in 1809. On coming to America they first settled in New York State and later moved to Ohio, where the grandfather died in 1860. The grandmother died at the home of her son, Joshua P., in Clinton County, Kentucky, in 1888. Lorenzo Gamblin was a shoemaker by trade. Joshua Perry
Gamblin was born in New York State in 1841, but grew up in Ohio, and from that state enlisted in the Union Army. He was all through the war from 1861 to 1865, and from his Ohio regiment was transferred to the Fifth Kentucky Cavalry. He participated in the battles of Shiloh, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and Murfreesboro, where he was shot through the hip, and later was shot through the breast, both bullets passing clear through his body. He has suffered all his life from the wounds received at Murfreesboro. He was with Sherman on the March to the Sea. Following the war this veteran soldier located in Cumberland County, Kentucky, where he married and where he was in business as a tanner and as a lumberman. In 1801 he bought a farm near Albany in Clinton County, and is living there in comfortable retirement at the age of eighty. He is a Republican and a Presbyterian. Joshua P. Gamblin married Rachel Grider, who was born in Clinton County, Kentucky, in 1847. A large family of children were born to their marriage: Dr. T. H., a physician and surgeon at Bowling Green, Kentucky; Dr. Theodore L.; Docia, wife of Cornelius Scott, a machinist at Somerset; Maggie, who died at Canton, Ohio, aged forty-four, wife of Nathaniel Ballenger, a contractor and builder now living in Florida; Addie, wife of Doc Stinson, a farmer at Cameron, Missouri; Alice, wife of William McWhorter, an oil operator in Oklahoma; Miss Mary, at home; Maude, also at home, widow of Greenberry Coger, a farmer who died in 1920; Lula, wife of Charles Cannon, a flour miller near Albany. Alice, who married George Ferguson, is a farmer near Albany; and Wayland, the eleventh and youngest child, was in the Medical Corps, attached to a base hospital during the World war, spent seventeen months in France and is now a partner with his brother, Dr. Theodore, in the management of a public garage at Burnside.

Dr. Theodore L. Gamblin acquired a liberal education. During his early boyhood he attended school in his rural district at Burksville in Cumberland County, graduating from the high school at Albany, spent two years in the Southern Normal School at Bowling Green, and in 1898 graduated M. D. from the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville. Two years later he pursued post graduate work at the University of Louisville. Doctor Gamblin began practice at Burnside in 1898, and while for a number of years he performed the arduous duties of a country physician over a wide scope of territory, his professional work is now entirely in his office and in consultation. He has a modern home, offices and a well-equipped dispensary. For fifteen years he has served as both county and city health officer for a number of years, and is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations.

He was the first man to receive an appointment from Edward M. Hurley when the latter was made chairman of the shipbuilding corporation during the World war. He was commissioned a captain, but on account of the influenza epidemic his services were considered more valuable at home, and not only did he share in combating that plague, but was active in all other war movements, and visited every part of Pulaski County in promoting the various drives.

Doctor Gamblin is the present mayor of Burnside. He owns considerable property in the town and country, including the public garage of which his brother Wayland is manager, and also owns an interest in a farm. He is a Republican, a member of the Baptist Church, and is affiliated with Somerset Lodge No. 1021, B. P. O. E.; Albany Lodge of Masons, and Somerset Chapter No. 25, R. A. M. In 1910, at Burnside, he married Miss Lucy Gover, daughter of James B. and Nancy (Rankin) Gover. Her mother died in 1920, at Burnside, while her father is a farmer. Mrs. Gamblin spent six years in her studies at Georgetown College, Kentucky.

Marvin Bertrrie Holifield. Member of the Mayfield bar for a quarter of a century, Mr. Holifield is a former county attorney of Graves County, is senior member of the law firm of Holifield & McDonald, and has long been regarded as one of the leaders of the West Kentucky bar.

His ancestors were among the first settlers of Western Kentucky. His great-great-grandfather Oliver Holifield spent his life as a planter in Chatham County, North Carolina. The great-grandfather of the Mayfield lawyer was William Holifield, who came from Chatham County, North Carolina, to Graves County, Kentucky, about the beginning of the nineteenth century. He was the first Methodist preacher in Graves and Hickman counties. During the War of 1812 he was with General Jackson at the battle of New Orleans in 1815. Politically he was a stanch supporter of some of the first candidates of the democratic party. He married Elizabeth Copeland, who died in Graves County, the mother of nineteen children, five of whom became ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Her father Abel Copeland also came to Western Kentucky from Chatham County, North Carolina, was a farmer and served as a member of the first grand jury in Graves County.

George Washington Holifield, grandfather of Marvin B. Holifield, was born in Henderson County, Kentucky, and at the age of 15 removed to Kentucky, where he spent his life, and died at the age of eighty-two. Among the pioneers he was distinguished as a real frontiersman, a valiant hunter, and a skillful rifle shot. Once in a contest with an Indian chief held at Iron Banks, where the City of Columbus, Kentucky, now stands, he won the purse of $40 put up as the prize for marksmanship. At a later date he helped remove the Indians from Graves County. For many years he was active as a farmer and tobacco dealer. His first wife and the grandmother of the Mayfield lawyer was Dorcas Roden, who was born in Alabama and in early life removed to Graves County, and died during the Civil war while her house was surrounded by Federal troops. Her last words were: "Hurrah for Jeff Davis and the Southern Confederacy." At that time three of her sons were fighting in the Confederate ranks, Dr. John R., William and Newton Jackson.

Dr. John R. Holifield was born in Graves County in 1841, and at the age of twenty-one in 1862 enlisted in the Confederate Cavalry under General Forrest. He was in the service the rest of the war being at Shiloh, Brice's Cross Roads, Corinth, in a skirmish just before the battle of Harrisburg had a bone shot out of his right arm, though he did not lose the use of his member. He was in a hospital until the closing of the war. It was not until after he came out of the army that he learned his A. B. C's and though he began his education thus late he made remarkable progress and not only acquired a substantial literary education but graduated from the University of Louisville with the well earned M. D. degree in 1870 and during the rest of his life was a highly competent physician, surgeon and surgeon. Marvin Bertrrie is the oldest of her children; Crawford Gertrie is a real estate broker at New Orleans; Thomas Jewell and George Washington, twins, the former dying in infancy and the latter a farmer three miles south of Mayfield; Noah Ezra died at the age of three years; Ersie V. is a merchant tailor at Springdale, Arkansas; and Uva Boyd is in the shoe manufacturing business at East St. Louis, Illinois.

Marvin Bertric Holfield was born at Pryorburg in Graves County, Kentucky, February 7, 1852, attended an early education in the schools of his native village, and attended West Kentucky College at Mayfield into the senior year. For one term he was a student in Bethel College at McKinzie, Tennessee, and took his law course at Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, where he graduated in 1860. The following year he began practice at Mayfield, and has pursued his legal career with few interruptions since then. He has fulfilled all the duties of the office and has served in every capacity of the office. He is a member of the Board of Directors of the Bank of Mayfield, member of the State Bar Association, and a member of the Presbyterian Church. He is a member of the Board of Directors of the Bank of Mayfield, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church. He is a member of the Board of Directors of the Bank of Mayfield, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Holfield is a Democrat and outside of his profession has probably given as much time to the Missionary Baptist Church at Mayfield as any other one institution or cause. He is chairman of the Board of Deacons, teacher of the Men's Bible Class, and otherwise active in church work. He is a member of the Board of Directors of the Bank of Mayfield, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church. He is a member of the Board of Directors of the Bank of Mayfield, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

The residence of the Holfield family is on East Broadway. In October, 1896, at Mayfield Mr. Holfield married Miss Jennie Drake, daughter of Berry and Susie (Watts) Drake, the latter still living in Mayfield. Her father was a tobacco dealer for many years.

William S. Foy. For more than two decades William S. Foy has appeared regularly as an attorney on one side or the other in many of the important cases of litigation before the courts of the Western Kentucky District. He has been a successful lawyer and has interested himself in many business, social and civic enterprises of Graves County.

Mr. Foy was born in the south part of Graves County January 14, 1870, and his people have been identified with this section of Kentucky for fully a century. His great-grandfather was John S'mon Foy, who was born in France. His brother General Foy was one of the trusted officers of the great Napoleon and his nephew, the late Major General Foy, was a distinguished officer. Mr. Foy accepted banishment along with many others of the imperial regime. At the same time John Simon Foy left France, and first settled near Mobile, Alabama, but in 1820 moved to what was then known as Jackson's Purchase, in Western Kentucky, becoming a farmer in what is now Graves County. He died in Graves County in 1833. The grandfather of the Mayfield lawyer was William Foy, who was born in Graves County in 1821, and spent his life as a farmer and planter and died near Fulton in 1902. He married Nancy Murrell, who was a lifelong resident of Graves County. Richard S. Foy, father of William S., was born in the southern part of Graves County in 1850, and lived all his life on the old homestead there. He died in 1917. The Point Lookout, Maryland, joined in the Pirtle's Company of the Seventh Kentucky Regiment, and performed all the duties as a faithful soldier of the Confederacy until the end of the war. He was in the battles of Shiloh, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge, and was captured at Baker's Creek and for the last eighteen months until Lee's surrender was in Northern prisons, first at Camp Chase, Ohio, and then at Point Lookout, Maryland. He and forty of his companions refusing to take the oath of allegiance, were not given the privilege of transportation home and walked all the way from Maryland to Kentucky. He was a faithful democrat and very active in the Christian Church. He married Sinie E. Payne, who is still living on the old homestead and was born within a mile of her present residence in March, 1852. William S. Foy is the oldest of five children; Lillie is the wife of J. B. Brady, a merchant and jeweler at Cottage Grove, Tennessee; James Lewis is a farmer near Fulton, Kentucky; John Leonard was killed when thrown from a mule at the age of eighteen; and Charles C. is a merchant in Graves County at the Tennessee line.

William S. Foy spent his early life on his father's farm, and was only ten years of age when his father died. He acquired a rural school education and for four years was a student at Sedalia College at Sedalia, Missouri. After completing his liberal education he engaged in school work for ten years. He taught four terms at Clinton in Hickman County and was one of the leading educators of Mayfield and vicinity for six years or more. Last four years before being principal of the West Ward School. While teaching he was also making preparation for a legal career, and took the law course at Lebanon University, Lebanon, Tennessee, where he graduated with the L.L. B. degree in 1898. He was admitted to the bar November 27, 1898, and at once entered upon his practice at Mayfield, where for twenty-two years he has been one of the leading members of the firm of Foy & Foy. He is a member of the First National Bank Building. He is attorney for the First National Bank and attorney for the Merritt Manufacturing Company.

Mr. Foy is a Democrat and is one of the leading members of the Christian Church at Mayfield, and all his family are members of the same church. For a number of years he has been one of the members of the Sunday School. Mr. Foy served four years as secretary of the Ancient Order of United Workmen at Mayfield and is affiliated with Mayfield Lodge No. 679, A. F. and A. M., Mayfield Chapter No. 69, R. A. M., Mayfield Lodge No. 151, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Wilson Lodge Knights of Pythias at Mayfield.

The residence of the Holfield family is on East Broadway. In October, 1896, at Mayfield Mr. Holfield married Miss Jennie Drake, daughter of Berry and Susie (Watts) Drake, the latter still living in Mayfield. Her father was a tobacco dealer for many years.
Catholic Parish At Henderson. The Catholic residents of Henderson and vicinity have been gathered together in a community of worship since about the middle of the last century. The first church was built on the corner of what is now known as Third and Ingram Streets. This parish is in the diocese of Louisville and the present church edifice is said to be one of the most beautiful in that diocese. It was erected by Rev. Thomas A. Tierney in 1886. The present school, parsonage and convent were built during the pastorate of Rev. J. Lynch, who died during the influenza epidemic in 1918.

For upwards of half a century this has been one of the strong and prosperous parishes of the Catholic Church in the state. The congregation today numbers about 400 families and boasts one of the best school organizations in the state. The present pastor is Rev. B. J. Boland, who was appointed permanent rector August 1, 1920. Father Boland has been a pastor and missionary in Kentucky for twenty years. Former pastors of this parish were: Rev. William J. Dunn, Rev. Thomas J. Jenkins, Rev. Dominic C. Crane, Rev. Thomas A. Tierney, and Rev. Edward J. Lynch.

J. M. Culver started his independent career when a boy in years and has had working circumstances into operation. During the few years he has lived at Fulton, Kentucky, he has developed a manufacturing and wholesale ice cream industry that is one of the largest of its kind in the state.

Mr. Culver was born at Sheffield, Alabama, August 20, 1880. He is of Scotch and English ancestry and is descended from one of three Culver brothers who were born in Alabama and settled in Virginia. His father, J. W. Culver, was born in Alabama in 1862, and after his marriage moved to Clarkdale, Mississippi. He became a railway man, serving the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley Railroad until 1901, when he joined another railroad company in Texas. He is now living at Stuttgart, Arkansas. In politics he votes as a democrat. J. W. Culver married Euphemia Moore, of Scotch ancestry. She was born in Alabama in 1879. There were three children: Frank M., a railroad man at Fullerton, Louisiana; J. M. Culver; and Katie, who died at the age of two and a half years.

J. M. Culver acquired his early education in the public schools of Clarkdale, Mississippi, but left school at the age of fourteen to go to work in a dry goods store. Later he was in an electrical and plumbing industry at Clarkdale, and on coming to Fulton, Kentucky, in November, 1910, became bookkeeper for the Fulton Commercial Club. He remained with that business two years and on May 1, 1913, used his capital to establish his present ice cream industry. He has seen this rapidly expand and his facilities increase both in the manufacturing and distributing lines until his product is now shipped over a wide extent of country for 125 miles around Fulton. Besides his complete plant at 406 Main Street in Fulton, where the products are sold by the cooler and satisfactorily, he maintains a branch plant at Dyersburg, Tennessee. Mr. Culver is also half owner of the Depot Restaurant at Fourth and Depot streets, has other business interests, being a stockholder in the Fulton Building and Loan Association. He was elected to the Fulton City Council in November, 1921. He is an active member of the Fulton Commercial Club, and is a member of the executive committee of the Fulton Gun Club and is affiliated with Fulton Lodge No. 1142, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and with lodges at Reelfoot Lake, Tennessee. He is a Baptist and in politics a democrat.

The Culver family resides at 215 Third Street. On November 15, 1911, at Union City, Tennessee, he married Miss Katy Mayes Chowning, daughter of R. M. and Emma (Mayes) Chowning, now deceased. Her father was for many years a prominent resident of Fulton, Kentucky, being president of the First National Bank, mayor of the city for several terms, and otherwise active in business and civic affairs. Mrs. Culver is prominent in social affairs at Fulton, and has all the advantages of a liberal education. She attended the Ward-Belmont College for Women at Nashville, Tennessee, and later the William Woods College at Fulton, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Culver have two children: Robert Morris, born September 2, 1913; and George Macomber, born, May 23, 1915.

John Howard Payne has been engaged in educational work since he was nineteen years of age. His experience ranges from a rural school district to the principalship and superintendency of some of the larger city schools, and he is now active head of the city school system of Richmond.

John Howard Payne has been an active humanitarian. He is a leader in social and civic affairs, and for years was the business manager of a daily newspaper. He is a prominent railroad man and in politics a democrat.

John Howard Payne was born on May 23, 1859, west of the Tennessee River, in a part of the Blount County, Tennessee, which was a part of the county in which he was born. His grandfather, Mr. Payne, was a planter and a colonel in the Confederate army. He and his wife were members of the old Cane Ridge meeting house, the first church of the Christian Disciples denomination in Kentucky. His wife was Mary Jane Wilson, the daughter of Hamilton Wilson and a native of Bourbon County, where he died in Campbell County, Kentucky. They were the grandparents of John Howard Payne. The father, E. D. Payne, was born near Independence, Missouri, February 3, 1837, and spent part of his early boyhood in that frontier community, not far from the present Kansas City. About 1850 his mother returned to Bourbon County, where he was reared and completed his education, and as a young man he moved to Campbell County, where he married. He was in the coal business in Dayton in Campbell County, and in 1853 bought an extensive tract of timber land, 800 acres, in Casey County, and for several years was engaged in logging and lumbering there. In 1860 he moved to Lincoln County, where he was a merchant two years, then he returned to Campbell County and lived on and operated his farm at Cold Spring until his death, May 19, 1921. He was always a democrat in politics and was almost a life long member of the Christian Church. He's only fraternity was the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His first wife, Matilda Singleton, a native of Kentucky, died at Newport in 1876, her only child dying in infancy. He married his second wife, Mrs. M. Miles, who is still living at Cold Spring, where she was born in 1858. She became the mother of four children: Elmer, who died at the age of nineteen months; John Howard; E. D., who died at the age of ten months; and Henry Clay, who is a chemist with the Procter & Gamble Company at Cincinnati.

John Howard Payne was born while his parents lived at Dayton in Campbell County, April 27, 1886. His early education was acquired largely in the rural schools of Casey and Lincoln counties. He was graduated from the University of Kentucky in 1914 with the A. B. degree. The first school he taught at the age of nineteen was in a rural district of Campbell County. His subsequent experience as a teacher and school administrator has been marked by two years as principal of the Butler County High School at Morgantown, two years as principal of the Trumble County High School at Bedford, three years as superintendent of the Trumble County schools, and in 1919 he was elected superintendent of the city school system of Richmond. Richmond has some of the best schools in the state. There are three school organizations, a staff of thirty teachers, and the school enrollment approximates about 1,000.

Mr. Payne is a member of the Kentucky Educational Association. He did much committee work for the Liberty Loan and other drives during the war and was one of the "four minute" speakers of his community. He is a democrat, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is affiliated with Lodge No. 138 of Masons at Bedford. He is a member of the Tau Kappa Alpha fraternity.

In 1913, at Lincoln, Nebraska, he married Miss Hazel June Grinstead, a daughter of Pool and Cora (Cottrell) Grinstead, now deceased. Her father was a newspaper publisher. Mrs. Payne finished her education in Bethany College at Lincoln, Nebraska. To their marriage were born two children: Agnes, on November 4, 1916, and Philip DeVall, born April 10, 1921.

E. J. Tanner. For more than forty years the name of Tanner has been conspicuous in the business life of the town of McKinney. E. J. Tanner grew up at McKinney, as a youth shared in the business affairs of his father, and for a number of years past has been a leading merchant, banker and property owner.

Mr. Tanner was born at Liberty in Casey County, August 24, 1865. His father was the late W. V. Tanner, who died at McKinney August 8, 1912. He was born near Franklin, Williamson County, Tennessee, in 1828, and lived there until he was about sixteen years of age. He and his brother Sam then started out in the world to make their fortunes. Sam eventually went to California, K. L. Tanner sought his opportunities nearer home. For fourteen years he worked in a tobacco factory at Creelsboro, Kentucky. He then bought a store there, and continued as a merchant and tobacco buyer in that vicinity until shortly after his marriage, when he moved to Liberty and was identified with that town as a merchant and hotel proprietor until 1885. Having acquired a farm near Liberty, he operated it and also a country store until 1870, in which year he entered the mercantile business. Mr. Tanner continued to own his farming interests near Liberty, had a farm at McKinney, and owned several other farms in Lincoln County, being one of the producers of the staple agricultural crops of this section, particularly tobacco. At McKinney, on Railroad Street, he built a store and a flouring mill, and operated the mills fifteen years before he sold them. He retired from the mercantile business in 1902. He was a democrat in politics, very liberal as a member of the Christian Church, and for twenty years was treasurer of McKinney Lodge No. 631, F. and A. M., holding that post at the time of his death. K. L. Tanner married Elizabeth Vauldiever, who was born near Liberty in 1857 and is still living at McKinney. She became the mother of ten children, all of whom died at the age of twenty-three, wife of the late Alexander Stephenson, a Casey County farmer; John L., a farmer at Albany, Georgia; Louis, who was accidentally killed by a falling log at the age of three years; William, who died at McKinney at the age of twenty-one; E. J. Tanner; V. M. Tanner, a farmer and stock trader at McKinney; K. L. Tanner, Jr., a farmer at Spokan, Washington; Litton, wife of W. K. Shugas, a farmer at Liberty; Florence, whose husband is Dr. H. C. Nunnally, a physician and farmer at Albany, Georgia; and M. C. Tanner, department foreman in the large lace factory operated by Marshall Field & Company of Chicago at Zion City, Illinois.

E. J. Tanner was about fourteen years of age when his father moved to McKinney. His early life was spent largely on farms and his education came from rural schools of Lincoln County. He became self-supporting at the age of sixteen, and for two years was assistant agent for the Queen & Crescent Railroad Company at McKinney, then farmed three years, and entering his father's flour mill, managed the industry for ten years. In 1890 he and his brother V. M. Tanner took over the family business, and continued the partnership three years, and since then E. J. Tanner has been individual manager and proprietor and conducts one of the largest drug and general mercantile stores in the county. His store is on Railroad Street. Mr. Tanner was also engaged in the tanning business for twenty years, and for six years owned the tannery. Mr. Tanner has been president of the McKinney Deposit Bank since it was established in 1895, a period of more than a quarter of a century of banking service. Mr. Tanner has much valuable property, including his store building, eight dwelling houses in McKinney, his own modern home on Railroad Street, and a farm of 465 acres sixteen miles southwest of McKinney. He was one of the organizers of the mercantile bank, and gave much financial and moral support to every patriotic movement during the World war. Mr. Tanner is a democrat, is secretary of the McKinney Christian Church, has ten years of service to his credit as master of McKinney Lodge No. 631, F. and A. M., is affiliated with Franklin Chapter No. 22, R. A. M., and Ryan Commandery No. 11, K. T. In 1919 E. J. Tanner was a member of the Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Louisville, of Lee Tent No. 16, Knights of the Maccabees, and is state record keeper of the Maccabees and is also a member of McKinney Camp No. 11619, Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Tanner is a member of the Kentucky Pharmaceutical Association.

At Chattanooga, Tennessee, in 1889, he married Miss Laura Owens, daughter of M. V. and Mary E. (Patterson) Owens, the latter a resident of Junction City, Kentucky, where her father died. He was for many years in the timber business and a merchant. Mrs. and Mrs. Tanner have four children, Ruth, the oldest, has charge of the music department in the high school at Liberty, Kentucky. Ray C., the second in age, now in the service of the Missouri-Iowa & Railroad Company at Birmingham, Alabama, is an ex-service man, having volunteered in 1917. He spent fourteen months overseas in France as supply sergeant with the Thirty-seventh Engineers, Electrical Division. He was at the front during the Argonne Forest drive, and when the armistice was signed was sent in advance of the American Army of Occupation to France to inspect railroads in Germany. The two younger children of Mr. and Mrs. Tanner are Edward and J. Patterson, both students in Center College at Danville.

Dee Louis McNeill. Along with those qualities indispensable to the lawyer, a keen, logical, rapid mind, plus the business sense, and a ready capacity for hard work, the man who succeeds in the most exacting of professions must bring to it gifts of eloquence of language, strong personality, excellent presence, an earnest, dignified manner, a thorough grasp of the law and the ability accurately to apply its principles. Kentucky has many men who can qualify under the above, especially in Fulton County, and one who is a notable example is Dee Louis McNeill, of Hickman, who is at present ably discharging the duties of county attorney.

Mr. McNeill is a native son of the county, in which he was born April 10, 1891, a son of T. H. McNeill and a member of one of the old American families established in this county during its Colonial epoch. Representatives of the family went from Scotland to Ireland
The Hickman Courier, gave a concise estimate of the qualities that arouse so much confidence in his abilities, and from an article published at that time the following paragraph is taken:

"Mr. McNeill is a home boy—and by this we mean he was born, reared and received his common and high school education in Fulton County. With an ambition to prepare himself for the profession of an attorney at law he attended the University of Kentucky at Lexington, where he graduated with high honors, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Law, and was honored with the presidency of the Henry Clay Law Society and won many honors in oratorical contests. He is in the strictest sense a self-made man. Without funds, and being unable to borrow, he determined to make his own way—and did. His success and perseverance is another proof of the old maxim, 'where there's a will there's a way.' He courageously stands for civic righteousness, honesty in public affairs, progress and uplift of mankind—for the spirit of true helpfulness that tends to increase all the Christian virtues that make good American citizenship."

The Christian Church holds his membership. A Mason, Mr. McNeill belongs to Hickman Lodge No. 761, A. F. and A. M.; Hickman Chapter No. 49; Fulton Commandery No. 34, K. T.; and Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Louisville, Kentucky. He is also a member of Elm Camp No. 3, W. O. W., and Hickman Lodge No. 1294, B. P. O. E. He owns some valuable real estate.

Mr. McNeill is one of the veterans of the great war, and was mustered into the service August 2, 1918, after he volunteered. He was sent to Louisville, Kentucky, and shortly thereafter was transferred to the Great Lakes Naval Training Station at Chicago, Illinois. When he volunteered he received from Washington a rating as a third class yeoman, and was advanced to chief yeoman and stationed in the commandant's office, having charge of investigations of the records of enlistments, and also the handling of allotments. The department made it compulsory to give these allotments to soldiers who had dependents. In addition to these duties Mr. McNeill had a number of others, and rendered a valuable and efficient service. He was honorably discharged and returned home December 8, 1918.

On April 7, 1919, Mr. McNeill was united in marriage with Miss Helen Gould Rice, a daughter of E. C. and Ada (Clark) Rice, of Hickman, Kentucky, where Mr. McNeill is one of the leading merchants.

Enthusiastic and well versed in the law Mr. McNeill has brought back from his experience in the service an appreciation of the responsibilities of good citizenship, and is giving to the duties of his office a pains-taking attention which is the outgrowth of his period of personal sacrifice. The coming years are going to prove the value to the country of the lessons learned by its gallant young men who laid their ambitions on the altar of their patriotism, and freely offered their lives to preserve the integrity and supremacy of their native land.

Hylan Hale Woodson, M. D. A physician and surgeon who has been in active practice for the past ten years, Doctor Woodson since his return from France and Germany, where he was with the Expeditionary Forces and Army of Occupation about the movements has enjoyed the practice and reputation in his professional field at Eddyville.

Doctor Woodson was born at Slaughters in Webster County, Kentucky, September 11, 1889. His paternal ancestors were Virginia colonists from England. His grandfather William Woodson was born in Virginia in 1834, and as a young man came west and settled in Muhlenberg County, Kentucky, and for many years lived at Greenville where he died in advanced age in 1917. He was a Baptist minister and as such became widely known over his section of Kentucky. His wife was Miss Ramsay, a native of Webster County, Ken- tucky, who died at Greenville. The father of Doctor Woodson is also a prominent Baptist minister, Rev. J. D. Woodson, now living at Kuttawa, Kentucky. He was born in Webster County in 1861, was reared and married there, and for upwards of forty years has been one of the hard working Baptist clergymen of the state. His first work as a minister was done in Webster County, and for eighteen years he was well known in Eddyville where he was chaplain of the Kentucky Penitentiary. On leaving that post of duty he became pastor of the First Baptist Church of Kentucky, where he is still officiating. A number of years ago he also served a term as a representative of the State Legislature. Rev. Mr. Woodson, is a democrat, and is a Knight Templar Mason, being affiliated with Rizpah Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Madisonville, and is now worshipful master of his Lodge at Kuttawa. The mother of Doctor Woodson was Paralee Crowlee, who was born in Webster County in 1862 and died at Slaughters in 1890. Her children were: William, a farmer at Central City, Kentucky; Tinnie, wife of Will Martin, foreman of the Louis- ville Broom Company living at Eddyville; Robert, a mining and civil engineer living at Greenville, Ken- tucky; Hylan Hale; James, a coal mine superintendant at Frosthurg, Maryland. Rev. J. D. Woodson married for his first marriage Mary A. M. Lyons in Calhoun County. They have one daughter, Lucille.

Hylan Hale Woodson first attended school in his native town of Slaughters, graduated from the Eddy- ville High School in 1907, and immediately began preparation for the medical profession, attending the medical school of the University of Louisville. He received his degree Doctor of Medicine in 1911, and the first years in practice in Paducah, Kentucky; Hylan Hale; James, a coal mine superintendant at Frosthurg, Maryland. Rev. J. D. Woodson married for his first marriage Mary A. M. Lyons in Calhoun County. They have one daughter, Lucille.

In December, 1917, with a commission as First Lieu- tenant in the Medical Reserve Corps, Doctor Woodson was ordered to the Medical Officers Training Camp at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, spending two months there, for eight months was a regimental surgeon at Camp Wadsworth, South Carolina, and was then ordered to Camp Merritt, New Jersey, and on August 1, 1918, sailed overseas. He reached France in time to be detailed for active duty during the St. Mihiel campaign, and when the armistice was signed he was appointed to duty with the First Division in the Army of Occupation, and so served from November 16, 1918, until May 8, 1919. Doctor Woodson returning reached the United States June 8, 1918, and at that date was mustered out with the rank of first lieutenant. He immediately located at Eddyville, and has been engaged in a general medical and surgical practice, with offices on Water Street.

Doctor Woodson is a member of the County and State Medical Associations, is a democrat, and is affiliated with Kirkmansville Lodge No. 613, A. F. and A. M., Lyon Chapter No. 61, R. A. M. at Eddyville.

Doctor Woodson left a family at home when he went overseas with the army. He married at Paducah, Kentucky, in 1912, Miss Nannie Glenn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Glenn, the latter now deceased. Her father is with a coal company at Depoy, Kentucky. Mrs. Woodson is a graduate of the Eddyville High School and the University of Kentucky; two twins attended the Kentucky State University at Lexington. Doctor and Mrs. Woodson lost three of their children in infancy, and the youngest is Hylan Hale, Jr., born June 12, 1920.

Charles Keene Lillard It is a long distance, perhaps125 years, to look back over to find the provenance of the Lillard family in Gallatin County, and his name has been lost to history. His birthplace was Virginia, and being a farmer, it is reasonable to assume that the rich soil and pleasant aspect of this section attracted him and here he founded a family that has been prominent in many ways in the development of this part of the state. A widely known representative of this old family is found in Charles Keene Lillard, sheriff of Gallatin County and a substantial farmer near Warsaw.

Charles Keene Lillard was born on his father's farm situated five miles southwest of Warsaw, Kentucky, January 10, 1892, the only child of Joseph S. and Margaret S. (Keene) Lillard. Joseph S. Lillard was born near Napoleon, Gallatin County, Kentucky, in 1813; his parents were Rev. David and Mary (Spen- cer) Lillard, both natives of Gallatin County. Rev. David Lillard followed the vocation of farming, but as a labor of love and piety, he gave his services to the Ten Mile Baptist Church, which he served as pastor for forty-six years. Joseph S. Lillard spent his life in Gallatin County, where he was an extensive farmer and a leading merchant of Napoleon, in which city his death occurred in 1861. He was active in the democratic party and during the Mexican war served his country with distinction, being commissioned a captain. While in Mexico he almost lost his life from an attack of malarial fever. He belonged to the Masonic fraternity and was a faithful member of the Baptist Church.

Joseph S. Lillard was thrice married, his first wife being a member of the Campbell family well known in Indiana. To this marriage the following children were born: Will Campbell, who was a farmer, was accident- ally drowned in the Ohio River; America, who is deceased, married Judge Thomas, also deceased; Per- melius, who is deceased, was a farmer in Gallatin County; John, who died a veteran Confederate soldier; and William, a veteran, who died during the war at Owenton, Kentucky; Josephus, who served in the Confederate Army during the war between the states; and Tom Marshall, who was also a Confederate soldier. Joseph S. Lillard's second marriage was to Miss Georgia Ann Hughes, who was born in Boone County, Kentucky, and died on the farm near Napoleon. Three children were born to this marriage: George Hughes, who died in the war as a private in the Confederate Army and in 1862, a resident of Chicago, Illinois, where he is an insurance adjuster; and Mike H., who died in Texas but was buried in Gallatin County. He had been a farmer and tobacco buyer. The third wife of Joseph S. Lillard was Margaret S. Keene, who was born in 1818, in Gallatin County and died in her native county in 1890. Their only child, Charles Keene Lillard, was a posthumous child, born after his father's death.

Charles K. Lillard attended school in Southern Gallat- in County, near his mother's farm, until nine years old and then spent the next eight years at Warsaw. Inheriting the home farm, he then returned to it and has continued to operate it ever since. It comprises 100 acres of valuable land. Sheriff Lillard has proved an excellent farmer, devoting himself profitably to general farming and stockraising.

In 1881 Sheriff Lillard was married to Miss Delia Gardner, daughter of Shelton and Mary (Gilbert) Gardner, both now deceased. Mr. Gardner was former- ly a prominent farmer in Gallatin County. Sheriff and Mrs. Lillard have had six children: Margaret Keene Lillard, born 1882; and Edward Charles Lillard, who died in infancy; Napoleon Lillard, who died in 1919; James Michael Lillard, who lives in Gallatin County; Frank Gardner Lillard, who lives on his farm in Gallatin County; Spencer Hartwig, who was a young farmer of twenty-six years in Gallatin County met death from a stroke of lightning in 1913; Mary Gardner, who is the wife of Scottie Smith, a farmer in Carroll County, Kentucky; Emma Jane, who is the wife of Howard Lucas, a farmer in Gallatin County; Charles Keene, Jr., who is now at home with his parents, is an overseas wounded soldier of the World war, going to France in September, 1917, and being one of the heroic Americans who turned the tide in Argonne Forest almost at the cost of his life, in October, 1918; and Helen Virginia, who lives with her part

A life long democrat and active in party councils for many years, Mr. Lillard is well known in every part of the county. From 1914 to 1918 he served in the office of county assessor, and in November, 1917, was elected sheriff for a term of four years. He assumed the duties of his office in January, 1918, his offices being in the Courthouse at Warsaw. During the next five years of the World war, it was largely through the united efforts of such solid, dependable men as Sheriff Lillard that the country was properly aroused and organized, that patriotic movements went so rapidly forward and that such wonderful results obtained. He devoted time and money to the cause and freely served as a member of the Draft Board of Gallatin County, and in other positions where he believed he could be useful and influential.

FRANCIS M. ADDIS. When the world calls men successful in life, the meaning of the phrase may be interpreted in different ways. To those who, by birth and comfortable early environment have educational and social advantages, have ready opportunity and influential friends, the path to worldly success may be one of easy rise, and that they achieve certain prominence, in many cases, in an almost entirely a matter of good fortune. They, however, with the best will in the world, who can be deemed successful, and the history of America devotes many interesting pages to tell the story of the upward struggles of her handicapped youths who have afterward become a nation's pride and bulwark, self-made men. To this later class belongs Francis M. Addis, who is superintendent of the Elkhorn Piney Coal Company's mines at Weeksburg, Kentucky. Mr. Addis was born in Lawrence County, Ohio, June 2, 1873. His parents were Nathaniel and Margaret (Davis) Addis.

Francis M. Addis was only twelve years old when his father died. The latter was a native of Ohio and spent his life in that state, an honest, hard-working man, whose early death prevented his providing very well for his surviving family. He was a maker of charcoal, for which there were many uses in his day and age, and was an expert in the matter of kindling, one of the very few who understood the science of charcoal burning in pits or kilns. He burned the charcoal for all the charcoal blast furnaces in his section of Ohio. The loss of a good father in childhood is a great misfortune to a boy, but fortunately for little Francis, he had a careful mother who, with all the family responsibilities resting on her, did not neglect her son's schooling, and thus he had several years in the country schools in the mining district where his home was situated.
